The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

WALKING WITH GOD.

A SERMON BY J. C. PHILPOT, OF STAMFORD, LINCOLNSHIRE, PREACHED AT NORTH-STREET CHAPEL, STAMFORD, ON LORD'S DAY MORNING, JAN. 23rd, 1859.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"
Amos 3 : 3.

The Lord here, under the form of a question, enunciates a very important and pregnant truth. "Can two walk together," he asks, "except they be agreed?" What must be the inevitable reply? Surely not. Unless agreed in heart, how can they walk together in person? But do we see this agreement as a substantial fact, or as a general case? Look at man and his brother man. Take men as they exist in this present world. Can we say that they are agreed, or, that being agreed, they walk together? The very physical features of the world, in its original formation as well as its present constitution, widely separate man from man. What lofty mountains, deep rivers, wide seas, and barren tracts, naturally, physically sever men asunder! But these natural barriers of division are as nothing compared with the way in which man is separated morally from man. What differences there are of languages, habits, manners, customs, religion, modes of thought, so that, were earth a level plain and communication as free as in this island, separation and division would still exist. Politically, too, how man is dissevered from man. What wars and rumors of wars are now convulsing the continent of Europe: and though we in our sea-girt isle seem in some way removed from present danger, who knows how soon a volcano may burst forth abroad that may throw its burning ashes and boiling lava on our own shores. Socially, too, how man is separated from his brother man! Rich and poor; the educated and the uneducated: the peer and the peasant; Dives clothed in purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, and Lazarus at his gate, full of sores and picking up the crumbs which fall from the groaning table—are the poles wider asunder than luxury and poverty, fashion and rags, the square and the alley, "the changeable suits of apparel, the mantles, the wimples, and the crisping pins" of youth, rank, and beauty, and the squalid dirt, filth, and starvation of the outcasts of society? But even without taking in these vast extremes, merely viewing men as brought more nearly together in the different relationships of life, what wide differences every where exist! What little agreement there is betwixt the employer and the employed, the master and the servant, the mistress and the maid. What an unceasing strife between capital and labor—capital demanding more work; labor claiming more wages. Families, too, how often are they divided: father against son, mother against daughter, brother against brother, sister against sister, and what is worse, man against wife, wife against husband. Religiously, what sects, parties, and divisions there are in the professing church; so that in religion itself, as generally professed, there seems to be neither peace, nor union, nor harmony. Our churches, also that profess the distinguishing doctrine of the gospel, how often are they split and riven asunder by contention and strife! What little real union there is in the very best churches; and even where there is the appearance of peace without, what secret jealousies, heart-burnings, suspicions, and surmises mar all peace within. Nay, among the very saints of God themselves, what little brotherly feeling, sacred union, or christian fellowship are felt, or at least manifested. How soon the best men take offence, and how unforgiving when offended! How warmly the most unintentional slights are resented; and how those who believe they shall spend an eternity of happiness together are offended for months by an averted look, a hasty word, or a cold shake of the hand.

Wherever, then, there is this want of agreement the words of our text will apply. Thus we see what a wide scope the text embraces—how it enters into a vast number of different relationships, when under the pithy and pointed form of a searching question, it looks out as it were from a high tower upon the face of the world and the church, and asks, as in a voice of thunder, “Can two walk together, except they be agreed?”

But this is the least of the matter.—It would not be of such deep or lasting importance were man only dissociated from his brother man. Let that pass. That would not amount to much. It would only be for time: eternity, we might hope, would bury all these divisions, and reunite in a better and brighter world those who have almost fought to their last breath over the grave's mouth. But we come to a much more important breach, a much wider and more fatal separation, than any at which we have hitherto hinted. There is the fearful, fatal breach between God and man, which is not for time but for eternity; not a matter of earth but of heaven; not a momentary strife or passing quarrel, bounded by a few days or years, and limited to the narrow sphere of this transitory life, but stretching forward into revolving ages. Well then may God, from heaven his dwelling place, look down upon earth, and addressing man, sound the startling appeal in his ears—“Can two walk together, except they be agreed?” Can I and you then walk together in friendship and amity—I so holy, thou so unholy; I so pure, thou so impure; I so enshrined in all the glory of my infinite perfections, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, and thou a child of sin and darkness, loathsome and vile as wrapped up in all the pollutions of thy sinful nature and actual crimes?

But is there not a way whereby God and man can walk together? Do we not read in the word of truth that “Enoch walked with God?” (Gen. v. 24;) and have we not recorded of him that “before his translation he had this testimony that he pleased God?” (Heb. xi. 5.) Have not holy men in various ages followed Enoch's footsteps? Did not Noah “walk with God?” and why? because “he found grace [or favor] in the eyes of the Lord.” (Gen. vi. 8, 9.) Was not Abraham the friend of God? (2 Chron. xx. 7; James ii. 23.) Did not Moses see God face to face? and did not the Lord “speak unto him as a man speaketh unto his friend? [Exodus xxx. 11.] Of Levi, too, we read that “he walked with God in peace and equity.” [Mal. ii. 6, 7.] We see, then, that there have been men who have walked with God; and if they did walk with God, it was by virtue of being agreed with him. But is there no way whereby others also may now walk with God as these walked of old? Were they the only favored children of the human race, and are none but they admitted to any communion with the Lord God Almighty? Why need we assemble ourselves this morning in the name of the Lord if there were no way whereby we could walk with him—if there were no reconciliation whereby we might come to an agreement with the Majesty of Heaven? I shall, therefore, with God's blessing—

I.—First, endeavor to show what was the original cause, and what have been the subsequent effects of the breach that formally took place between man and his Maker: for a breach implies previous friendship.

II.—Secondly, how the breach has been healed, that thus God and man might be agreed.

III.—And thirdly, what are the blessed fruits and effects of the breach having been healed,—that now being agreed, God and man may walk together.

I.—At the first, in the original creation of man, there was no breach between man and his Maker. "God created man in his own image, after his own likeness;" and as "God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good" [Gen. i. 31], he could not but be pleased with man as the creature of his hands. Man then could render to God a pure obedience, acceptable to him as the spontaneous, grateful offering of an innocent heart and spotless hands. I have thought sometimes what must have been Adam's feelings when he awoke out of his first sleep, as Milton beautifully describes him, lying upon a bank of flowers:

"As new awake from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flowery herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat."

How as he gazed upwards and saw the majestic heavens, or looked around and viewed the glorious earth, he must have wondered who he was, whence he came and what power had brought him forth? For Adam was not created a babe but a man—a full-grown man with every bodily power and every mental faculty alike complete. Thought, reason and speech did not come to him by slow degrees as with us, but were given him at the moment of his creation: or how could he have been made "in the likeness of God?" A babe that neither sees, nor thinks, nor speaks, is not the likeness of Him "who seeth under the whole heaven" [Job xxviii. 24]; "the thoughts of whose heart are to all generations" [Ps. xxxiii. 11]; and whose voice is powerful and full of majesty.

[Ps. xxix. 4.] Nor did God leave him in ignorance of his origin and of that great and glorious Being who had given him breath. We have reason to believe, from what we read in the book of Genesis, that God his Maker often communed with man his creature; for we read of his walking in the garden in the cool of the day, as if it had been the habit of God to come down and talk with Adam face to face, as the day declined from the heat of noon, and the calm evening drew on in that happy garden in which he was placed to dress and keep it. There was no breach, then, no separation, no division between God and man. But Satan envied man's happiness, and secretly and successfully plotted his overthrow. Fearing to succeed with man, he attacked with subtle craft and infernal policy, the woman, man's partner, but from natural constitution a weaker and easier prey. In the depths of his inscrutable wisdom, God permitted Satan to succeed. The woman was tempted and fell, and in her fall tempted and drew in the man. Both fell wilfully and voluntarily, openly rebelled against the express command of God, and deliberately preferred to sin rather than to obey. This made the breach, set God and man at strife, and severed and separated, as with a deadly blow, the creature from the Creator. Thus "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that ["in whom," margin] all have sinned." [Rom. v. 12.] Ever since then there has been a strife between God and man—between the Creator and the creature of his hands.—Now this strife or breach exists in the very nature of things. It might indeed have been prevented if God had so willed; but having once taken place, no power could avert the effects. It would not be consistent with the purity and perfection of God's character that man should have sinned against him without a breach being effected.—There is a natural, instinctive repugnance between what is holy and what is unholy; what is righteous and what is unrighteous; what is pure and what is impure. See how the chaste, modest female passes with an instinctive shudder of pity and horror by the street-passing harlot. Look how a person neat and cleanly in person and apparel shrinks from the dirt and filth of the streets; and how his very sense is offended by the unutterable abominations of a London alley! How a man sober and temperate loathes the brawling revel of drunkards! And how the honest tradesman, who strains every nerve to meet his engagements, and to whom honor and honesty are as his life-breath, would shrink from any association with a fraudulent and worthless bankrupt! Thus you see that in the very nature of things there is and necessarily must be a breach between good and evil—between what is pure and what is impure. If there were no such breach, purity would become impurity, sin would become confounded with holiness, and God himself cease to be God. Therefore, whilst the great and glorious Jehovah is what he is, so holy, pure and righteous, there must necessarily be a breach between God and man. Now this breach, so far from becoming narrower, goes on increasing wider and wider. The more pure that God is, and the more impure man makes or manifests himself to be, the wider the breach becomes. This was shown at the deluge, at the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, and at the destruction of Jerusalem. The greater the sin the wider the breach; and as the very nature of sin is to go on increasing, burning like a fire in proportion to every fresh accession of fuel, there is no hope that this gulf can ever of itself close up. Nor can all the skill, wisdom, or invention of men or angels combined do anything to heal the breach. Men think, in the darkness of their mind, that sin is but a little thing—a matter of very small moment; and they have therefore invented a number of words to palliate and soften it, so as to diminish its aggravated character. Satan has led them to reduce sin to a minimum, and thus persuades them that it is not that evil and dreadful thing which the word of God has declared it to be; at any rate, that they need not make themselves very uneasy about the consequences, as God is very merciful and will always accept a sincere repentance.—Man may so flatter himself, and, being thus blinded and deceived, may go on heaping iniquity upon iniquity; but he will find at last to his confusion and dismay that words have not altered things; that the wrath of God burns against sin to the lowest hell; that the justice of God is arrayed against the criminal, and that every “transgression and disobedience will receive a just recompense of reward.”

As an evidence of this, see how society has armed itself against violence and wickedness. If a robbery, and especially if a murder, take place in any locality however solitary or remote, how society arms itself against the offender. Every policeman that we meet stands before our eyes as a witness and an instrument of the uplifted hand of the law, and says by his very garb, “Here am I prompt to act, eager to detect the crime and arrest the criminal.” If it were not so, how could we sleep in our beds? Thieves may say—“How hard it is we cannot rob and plunder with impunity! Why should we not be allowed to break into houses, murder people asleep, take away their property, and set their dwellings on fire?—At least, what harm can there be in getting a little of their abundance?—And yet if we take a trifle of what they can so well spare, and if denied use a little gentle violence, the police give us no rest, seize us in our very beds, and carry us off to jail. Why are we not allowed to do what we like in this land of liberty?” “No,” says society, “we cannot exist if you do: we must either put you down, or you will put us down.” You see, then, there is an instinctive feeling in society that justice must have its sway, and that thieves’ language may excuse crime among thieves, but that the law nevertheless holds on its stern course; for as the earthly vicegerent of God, it “beareth not the sword in vain.” [Rom. xiii. 4.] So it is with the law of God. A company of sinners may argue like a company of thieves—"Why cannot we get drunk, if we like, or indulge in those passions which spring from, and are imbedded in our very nature? Is a cheerful glass a crime? Is love a sin? I own I am rather unsteady, but am I to be sent to hell for a little unsteadiness?" "Why should I be hanged?"—may the murderer with similar justice say. "In my passion I struck him rather hard, or grasped his throat too tight; but I never meant to kill him.—How cruel to hang me for a mere fit of passion!" You see the folly of such excuses in a moment, and know that the law is deaf to all such futile pleas. And yet we see on every side a company of sinners arraying themselves against the justice of God, as a company of thieves may inveigh against the justice of man. Now which is to prevail? You say the law must. God says the same:—"I cannot live unless the law prevail. I must live as the great and glorious God, of purer eyes than to behold evil, and that cannot look on iniquity, or I cease to be."—Thus we see the eternal justice of God, the holiness of his righteous character, the intrinsic purity of his very being, all arrayed against sin and the sinner. And we know who must come down in this warfare. We need no voice from heaven to tell us who is the stronger.—The thief may escape immediate arrest, and spend in profligacy the gains of violence and crime; and the murderer may die in his bed; but not so with the sinner. There is an eye that tracks him through all the shady covert; there is a hand that can and will in due time arrest and bring him to justice.—However the long-suffering of God may wait, if he die without faith and repentance, the thunderbolt of divine wrath will one day light upon his head and strike him down into a justly deserved hell.

We are all without exception sinners before God. However we may seek to justify ourselves or palliate the case, it still remains a fearful fact—a terrible noose out of which we cannot by any art or craft, plan or policy, draw our head. We are thus like a man who has committed a dreadful crime: he may try to juggle with his own conscience, to evade the fact, to palliate the deed, to extenuate the circumstances, or harken himself against the consequence. Still there is the dreadful fact: the deed of blood has been committed; the deed of blood has been done; under yonder hedge, in that dark pool, the murdered victim lies; and every gaping wound cries out against the murderer. So it is in a spiritual sense with every one of us. We have all sinned against God; we have in innumerable instances broken his holy law; we have brought ourselves under its righteous sentence; we are, by original and actual transgressions, exposed to its awful curse. Like the murderer, we may seek to palliate the case, but the fact still remains a dreadful reality. As then the commission of a crime makes a breach between society and the criminal, so the commission of sin has made a breach between God and us; and unless that breach be healed, God and we can never walk together. And what will be the consequence? Is it a matter of little moment? Hear the certain consequence. If God and we are never brought to walk together, God and we must be eternally asunder; and if eternally asunder, where is God? In the highest heaven. And where shall we be? In the lowest hell. If you had not been a sinner, you might get from under this dreadful conclusion, this killing, crushing fact. But conscience in your bosom will tell you, far more plainly and more forcibly than I, that sinner you have been, that sinner you are, and being such, that there is a breach between you and God, which breach must be healed, or you and God can never walk together, either in this life or the next, on earth or in heaven, in time or eternity.

II.—But now let me advance a step further in this field of heavenly truth, and show how this breach is healed; how a reconciliation has been effected, and thus an agreement has been made whereby ruined, guilty man may once more walk together with God. And to a sinner deeply convinced of his sins; to a guilty criminal under the law's dread sentence; to a miserable wretch stricken through and through by a sense of inward condemnation, what tidings can be so suitable or so acceptable as a message of mercy from the very mouth of the Lord himself; a treaty of reconciliation held out to rebels and enemies; a means devised that his banished be not fully and finally expelled from him [2 Sam. xiv. 14.]; and terms of agreement propounded whereby God and man may walk together in friendship and unity? You may have heard the gospel so often that this message of mercy may sound in your ears as an idle tale. You may be even worse than that; you may be gospel-hardened, so as to have no conviction of your personal need of it, or be built up in a vain, presumptuous confidence in the mere letter of truth, without any vital experience of its power. Still, the tidings are not robbed of their intrinsic blessedness by your carelessness or your presumption, still it is my place to proclaim them in your ears whether they be to you a savour of life unto life, or a savour of death unto death.—It is still my office to sound the gospel trumpet, and that with no uncertain sound; to preach the truth boldly and faithfully: and then leave it in the hands of the Lord to apply it as he may see fit.

What a wondrous way, then, has God devised in his own eternal mind, that the breach might be healed; that agreement might be made; that sinning man might be reconciled to his justly offended Maker, and yet that none of his glorious perfections should be tarnished or impaired! And what plan was this? Hear it, O heaven and earth! That the Son of God—his Son by nature and essence—his co-equal and co-eternal Son—should take into union with his divine Person a pure, sinless, and spotless humanity; for “as the children were partakers of flesh and blood,” it was necessary that “he himself likewise should take part of the same.” [Heb. ii. 14.] This was the will of God which Christ came to do, as we read—“Then said I, lo I come; in the volume of the book”—that is, the book of God's eternal decrees—“it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart.” [Psal. xl. 7, 8.] God prepared for his dear Son a body, as the apostle says, quoting Psal. xl. 6:—“Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not; but a body hast thou prepared [“fitted,” margin] me.” [Heb. x. 5.] This was a pure, holy, and incorruptible humanity—the body taken in the womb of the Virgin, offered as a bleeding sacrifice on the cross, but now at the right hand of God, in heaven. Man had sinned, offended, gone astray, become involved in transgression. Before, then, there could be any healing of the breach, any reconciliation of man unto God, flesh and blood must be assumed, that in that nature an atonement might be made for sin, justice be fully satisfied, the law righteously obeyed, its penalty removed, and its curse taken away.—This mighty work none but the Son of God could accomplish, nor he except by becoming man. As God, Christ could not suffer, bleed, or die. As God, he could not endure the wrath due to transgression, sustain the curse of the law, or work out an obedience such as it demanded. Deity can no more obey than it can suffer, bleed, or die. Yet there must be obedience, or the law cannot be fulfilled; there must be suffering, or the wrath of God cannot be appeased; there must be bloodshedding, or a sacrifice cannot be offered; there must be death, for to die is a main part of the sacrifice. If the surety take the place of the debtor, he must endure the penalty of the debt; if the substitute stand in the room of the criminal, he must suffer the punishment of the crime. O wondrous scheme, that the Son of God should take our nature into union with his own divine Person, and in that nature render an obedience perfectly acceptable to God; an obedience which must be rendered, but one that we could not render; an obedience exactly such as the law demanded: perfect in thought, word, and deed. Outraged Justice else might say—“where is my victim? I demand a victim: it must either be the criminal or some one in his stead. I cannot waive my rightful claim. I must have it satisfied, or else I should cease to be Justice." The blessed Lord comes forward and says—"Justice, take thy claim. Here is my innocent head: let thy thunderbolt fall upon it. Law, what dost thou demand? Perfect obedience. I render it. What dost thou inflict upon the criminal as the penalty of disobedience? The curse. I endure it. Holiness of God, what dost thou require? A spotless purity of soul and body, of heart, lip, and life; perfect love to God and man. Here I am: I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law in its length, breadth, and spiritually, in its holiness, purity, and power, is in my heart." Thus by the suretyship of the Son of God as rendering an obedience in our nature, all the perfections of God were glorified; all his attributes harmonized; justice was satisfied, the law magnified, and the holiness of God well pleased.—Complete satisfaction being thus made to all the requisitions of Justice, room was given for mercy and love, pity and compassion to fallen man to come into full play, through the channel of a Redeemer's meritorious sufferings and death. There was no other way whereby the breach could be healed; but by this divinely contrived plan it has been healed, and that most effectually.—Many, perhaps I might say most, men are sensible that they are sinners against God. Their conscience, when not hardened, pricks them in their bosom, and they cannot deny the truth of that verdict which is so powerfully registered in that court of courts against them. But what course do they take to heal the breach? They feel that they and God are not friends; they dread him therefore as an enemy. As, then, age, illness, or death draw near, the judgment bar stands before them; and as they know they must appear there to answer for their sins, they are often filled with alarm and apprehension. How shall they heal the breach? How shall they satisfy the justice of God? How shall they obtain mercy? They know not? What then do they? They resort to many self-righteous devices, contrived for the express purpose of appeasing the cry of natural conscience, and of supplying a dim hope that when they die they shall go to heaven. But ah! it is a garment too short—it is a bed too narrow. They will find to their confusion that these works of creature righteousness have not healed the breach; have not atoned for their sins; have not satisfied the justice of God; have not fulfilled the law; have not opened a way whereby love and mercy, pardon, peace, and salvation, can reach their breast, and at death open the gates of heavenly glory.

III.—But we will now consider what are the fruits and effects of this healing of the breach, of this agreement made, and how, by virtue of this reconciliation, the child of grace is brought to walk together with God. He, like others, was once dead in trespasses and sins; for he was by nature a child of wrath even as others (Eph. ii. 1, 3); and he, like them, would have perished in transgression and disobedience, or in a vain attempt to establish his own righteousness, had the Lord not interposed in his behalf. But the Lord had purposes of mercy and love towards him, and therefore would not suffer him to ruin his own soul by sin or self-righteousness. What course, then, does he take to bring about that personal, inward, experimental reconciliation without which he cannot walk with God in sacred fellowship and holy communion? He shows him his state and condition by nature and practice. A divine light, and with a divine light a new and heavenly life comes into his heart, whereby he is quickened out of his state of death in trespasses and sins. He awakes, as it were, from a long and deep sleep; he lifts his eyes upward, and what does he behold? The offended Majesty of heaven. He finds what he never before found; he feels what he never before felt—that he has an immortal soul in his body—a soul whose fixed state at death must be eternal joy or woe. He finds and feels that he is a sinner before the eyes and in the hands of the holy God. Aroused by these new and conflicting feelings, he begins to look around and within him, and turns his eyes, which were before fixed upon others upon himself—from the world without to the world within. Light breaking in more clearly, he begins to see the state into which he has brought himself by transgression. The Holy Ghost who has thus begun, carries on and deepens the work, lays eternal realities with greater weight upon his conscience, convinces him more and more acutely of his sins, and terrifies him by a dread of the future consequences: stops his mouth from all self-righteous pleas, brings him in guilty before God (Rom. 3, 19,) and opens up the breadth, spirituality, and curse of that righteous law which condemns him as a transgressor. In this school of divine teaching he learns, it may be slowly and gradually but always effectually, what a breach sin has made between him and God. He sees and feels that there is a wide and deep gulf between him and God, and that gulf remains impassable until some mode be found whereby either God can pass over to him or he can pass over to God. But how shall he pass over to God? How shall he get over this mighty gulf, in which at times he may see boiling up the sulphurous flames of hell? How shall he bridge it over? If doings and duties could bear him across the gaping chasm, would he not still have to encounter on the other side the terrible Majesty of heaven, which might hurl him trembling back? To drop the figure what means shall he take to reconcile himself to God? He knows not, but he will often attempt many. He will often break off his old habits; give up his old companions; renounce his beloved lusts; go to church or chapel; repeat prayers, read his bible, and do anything to get out of his conscience the stings of guilt that he feels to be there. He yearns for pardon, peace, and reconciliation; but how to obtain them he knows not. Thus he may go on, exercised in conscience, harassed in soul and depressed in mind—it may be through ignorance of the way of salvation; it may be through unbelief, though salvation is set before him; it may be through the temptations of Satan assailing him and preventing him from receiving the gospel in the love and power of it. But sooner or later the Lord the spirit is pleased to take his veil from off his eyes and heart and to show unto him the way of salvation through the atoning blood and justifying righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ. I do not say that every saint of God has so clear and powerful a revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ to his soul that he sees him, as it were, with the eyes of faith, bleeding upon the cross for his sins; or that every one who is blessed with living faith has such a full manifestation of his Person, blood, and righteousness as to leave no doubt behind of his interest therein. Some of the Lord's people are so blest and favoured, but by no means all. Yet all of them have the eyes of their understanding spiritually enlightened, and a spirit of wisdom and revelation given them in the knowledge of Christ, so as to know what is the hope of his calling them from darkness into light. (Eph. 1 17, 18) All have, in God's own time and way, sufficient faith raised up in their heart to take hold of this way of salvation through the atoning sacrifice of the Son of God; and they have all sufficient strength given to them to repent of their sins, to renounce their own righteousness, and to cast their weary, guilty, and naked souls upon the finished work of Christ. Or else where is the agreement spoken of in our text.

But many who truly fear God are in this state. They desire most earnestly to walk together with God. They feel they have walked long enough with a sinful world; long enough with Pharisees and legalists; long enough with the devices and follies of their own hearts, and now they would walk with God. They desire to have communion with the God of all grace. They long to have reconciliation, pardon, and peace spoken to their conscience. They would be friends of God instead of enemies; and would do anything to remove the burden of sin off their conscience, to get its stings and pangs out of their soul, and to have a testimony that the Lord is their God. These yearnings after reconciliation; these desires for pardon and peace; these breathings and breakings forth of your soul, it may be in the midnight hour, that the Lord would have mercy on, and bless you with some discoveries of his pardoning love,—whence spring they? From the Spirit of God. And whence come your sighs, cries, prayers, groans, entreaties? From the interceding breath of the Holy Ghost, who intercedeth for us and with us, "with groans which cannot be uttered." Your very desires for reconciliation, pardon, peace, and salvation, bespeak the work of the Spirit; are evidences of divine light; are signs and marks of the life of God within. After a time the Lord will be pleased to show you more plainly and clearly how you are to be reconciled. It may be that you have been looking too much to the law; depending too much upon your own righteousness; turning your eyes too much away from the only Object of a sinner's faith; and looking askance at something to be done by yourselves.—Will God sanction this by his Spirit and grace? He will not. Therefore you are far from rest and peace. But it may be in some moment of deep distress, when all hope even of salvation seems taken away, that the Lord himself will break in upon your soul with a sweet and gracious promise, with the application of his atoning blood, and the revelation of his love. Then you will see the way of salvation and your interest therein; then behold the Son of God as your bleeding Surety; and then pardon and peace and salvation will be distilled into your soul as from the very mouth of God. Now you are agreed with God; and what are the points of your agreement? You could not agree with God whilst you were loving sin and living in sin; or whilst trusting to your own righteousness. God would not sanction such double dealing—would not smile upon such hypocritical conduct. But now that you esteem the Lord Jesus Christ, "the chiefest among ten thousand and the altogether lovely," you and God are agreed together in the high opinion you put upon his dear Son, and you and he upon that point are one. Now you agree. God smiles upon the agreement, and you begin to walk together with him, because upon that point he and you are of one heart and of one mind. As long as you were looking to yourself, you were secretly disregarding, slighting, and despising the atoning blood of the Lord, the Lamb. You did not see the virtue and efficacy of that most precious blood.—There was a secret leaning half upon that and half upon something of your own. But you are brought by the teaching of the Spirit of God in your soul to look to the atoning blood of Christ and no other; to his precious sacrifice and no other; and to hang upon his perfect obedience and no other. God and you are now agreed. You both see with the same eyes, feel with the same heart, and love with the same affection. He loves Christ: you love him. He honors Christ: you honor him. He has highly exalted Christ: you do the same by setting him upon the throne of your affections. You and God are now agreed.

So also with respect to the special teaching of the Holy Spirit in the heart. While you were looking to be made wise by your own exertions, you and God were at variance; but when you were brought to this point—"Let the Holy Ghost be my teacher; let me have what I have by his heavenly communication, and be what I am by his divine operation; let me be wholly the work of his hands,"—then you and God were agreed.

So, again, as to thoughts and affections about eternal things. There was a time when the world held in your heart the chief place. It was not so in God's heart. You and God were therefore at variance. But now, through grace, you are brought to make eternity your chief concern. You and God are agreed there; for in the mind of God, eternity as much outweighs time as the stars in the midnight sky outweigh a grain of dust. There was a time when you loved the world and the things of time and sense; and earth and earthly things were your element and home. You and God disagreed upon that matter; because the Lord saw that the world was full of evil, whilst you saw it full of good. The Lord saw the world under his curse, and you loved its favor and its blessing—seeking madly and wickedly to enjoy that which God had denounced: therefore you could not agree. Thus you see that in order to be agreed with God, we must have God's thoughts in our heart, God's ways in our soul, and God's love in our affections. ⁴ For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." But they must become such: and when once God's thoughts become our thoughts, and God's ways our ways; when once we have the mind of Christ and see with the eyes of God, then God and we become agreed, and being agreed, we can walk together.—What is it to walk together? Why it is to enjoy union, communion, fellowship, and friendship. You see two persons walking together in the street; they are talking to each other. They agree, else they would not walk together. But walking together, it may be arm in arm, you see that there is an intercourse, a fellowship, a communion established between the two. God adopts the figure: "Enoch walked with God;" that is, if I may use the expression, he walked arm in arm with Jehovah. God spoke to him. God poured his love into his ear and heart; and Enoch, like a little child, stammered out his love and affection to God. So they walked together as Father and child for three hundred years. Now as we are brought to agree with God, we walk with God. He has set up a mercy seat on high, and when they thus agree, God and man may meet at the mercy-seat of the Redeemer. As the eyes are enlightened to see the truth of God; as the heart is touched to feel the power of God; and as the affections are drawn forth to love the things of God, we meet at the mercy-seat. It is sprinkled with blood; it contains and hides from view the broken tables of the Law. There God meets man in gracious amity, and enables him to pour out his soul before him and tell to him his troubles, trials, and temptations. And every now and then he sweetly relieves by dropping in a gracious promise, applying some portion of his sacred truth, encouraging him to believe in his dear Son and still to hope in his mercy.

But the chief way whereby we walk with God is by faith, and not by sight. Abraham walked in this way. Unbelief severs the soul from God. There is no communion between God and an infidel. An unbelieving heart has no fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ; but a believing heart has communion with him. It is by faith that we have fellowship with God and his dear Son; and you will find that just in proportion to the strength or weakness of your faith is your walking with God. If you have faith in blessed exercise, as you look to the atoning blood, you find that you can walk with God; you can pour out your heart before him, tell him all your concerns, spread before him the inmost movements of your mind, and look to him for peace and consolation. But when your faith is weak—when it gives way under trial and cannot take hold of the promises, then communion is interrupted; there is no longer a walking with God. But in proportion as faith is strong, so there is a walking with God in sweet agreement; for faith keeps eyeing the atonement; faith looks not so much at sin, as to salvation from sin—at the way whereby sin is pardoned, overcome, and subdued. So it is by faith, and in proportion to our faith, that we walk together with God.

But there is no keeping up faith except by prayer and watchfulness. As prayer declines in the bosom, so does the strength of faith. You may go on neglecting prayer and supplication until every grain of faith seems lost out of your bosom, and may come at last to think you never knew anything of a work of God upon your heart, and have been deceived in believing there was any grace there. By watchfulness also is the love of God maintained. Unless you watch against your besetting sins, against the snares spread for your feet, against the temptations that daily and hourly beset your path, against being overcome by the strength or subtlety of your unwearied foe, you are sure to fall; and if you fall, you will bring guilt and bondage, darkness and distress into your mind, and cut off for a time all friendly intercourse with God. Therefore you must pray and watch; for without watchfulness, prayer is of little efficacy.

Then there is reading the word. It is in the Scriptures that the mind of God is revealed. There are the promises; there is the revelation of mercy; there is God's blessed truth discovered and made known. If we neglect the Scriptures, have no heart to read them, or read them carelessly, unbelieveingly, they will do us little good. They must be read with believing eyes and heart, received as the revelation of God, and must be mixed with faith, or assuredly they will not profit us. (Heb. iv. 2.)—The life of God is a very deep, secret, and sacred thing in the soul. God, it is true, will maintain it; he will not leave his work unaccomplished. But still, unless we read and pray, watch and meditate, wage war against besetting sins, and seek the Lord's face continually, we shall find the strength and power of faith very sensibly decline; and if so, there is no comfortable walking with God.

Is it your earnest desire to walk with God; to have a scriptural evidence that you are one of his beloved family; that he is your Father and heavenly Friend, and that when you die, death will only be an introduction to his eternal presence? Are you sensible that sin has made an awful breach between you and God? Has that breach ever been a matter of deep and anxious concern to your soul how it is to be healed? Has it ever caused you a sleepless night or mournful day? Has it ever given rise to deep searching of heart? Have you ever seen by the eye of faith that there is a way whereby the breach may be healed?—that there is a Mediator between God and man, an Advocate at the right hand of the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous?—Have your eyes been enlightened by divine light to see; has your heart been touched by a divine finger to feel these solemn verities, so as to see the beauty and blessedness of them? Has that drawn up your faith and hope and love towards God? Is it no concern to you whether you are God's friend or God's enemy—whether heaven is to be your blissful home, or hell your dread abode? Every day is shortening the span of life, and some of you already have the snows scattered upon your head—snows which indicate the approaching winter—when you will have to stand before your great Judge. What then? Are there no anxious enquires in your bosom, how the matter stands between you and God—whether you are reconciled, brought near, accepted, pardoned, and saved; or whether you are still in your sins, under their awful weight and dismal load, exposed to the wrath of God and the curse of a righteous law? You say, "I am concerned; the things of eternity press very heavily and deeply upon me." Let us see the certain fruits and effects. If you are hungry, you do anything to get food; if thirsty, you do anything to get water; if you are poor, you take any employment to procure the necessities of life. Then are you thus exercised? Is your mind thus uneasy? What! no sighs nor cries for mercy? No supplications to the throne? But you have had something communicated; you have had some views of Jesus; mercy has in some way visited your soul, and peace and salvation have been in some measure imparted. But you have backslidden; you have got into a cold, careless frame of mind; your heart has wandered from God; you have brought death and darkness into your soul.—What then? Must all be given up?—Must your profession be tied like a millstone round your neck, to sink you into a double hell? Not so. There is the fountain still open for all sin and uncleanness; there is the interceding High Priest, the ever living Mediator;

there is the blood ever crying from the ground. There you must come to that altar at which you once stood and there found atoning blood revealed; to that fountain which washed you once you must resort again, that the breach may be healed, pardon once more spoken, and your soul be enabled again to walk with God. And you will walk more carefully, watchfully, prayerfully for the future. As a burnt child dreads the fire, so your very backslidings may work for your spiritual good; and you may learn thereby to walk more humbly with God, and more tenderly and cautiously as regards yourself.

In this congregation we can have but two classes: those who are agreed with God, and those who are not agreed.—Those who are not agreed must come to some terms of manifested reconciliation before death appears, or they will sink to rise no more. But there are those here who are agreed with God, through the Son of his love. The Lord will perfect his work; what he has begun, he will carry on and complete.—And as salvation is all of his grace, it opens a way of escape for every sinner sensibly in his own conscience condemned by the law, and reveals a mode whereby God can not only save him, but be eternally glorified thereby in the Son of his love.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

I thought for some time that I would write a sort of historical sketch of my life, not for any gratification to myself, but feeling that it might be some satisfaction to my friends when I am gone. I was born in Sampson County, N. C., on the 8th, of September, 1807, according to my father's record. When in my 13th year, my father moved to Cumberland Co., N. C., I was born in sin and raised up in the love of sin; but when very young, from my surroundings I learned that I, with all of Adam's race, had to die and leave this world, and that there were two places that would contain all of the human family, one was called heaven, a place of rest and peace, the other was called hell, a place of misery and woe. I resolved in my mind that, sometime in the future, I would change my course so as to be prepared to go to heaven when I died; not once dreaming but what it was in my reach. About the time I was 13 years old I had a severe spell of fever.

For about four weeks I was not able to raise my head from the pillow. I thought I should die; and I suppose all that saw me thought so too. I remember saying that if I was prepared to die, I would be willing to die, but I did not feel prepared. I made promises that if the Lord would spare me and raise me up I would do better than I had done. But to my shame when I got well I was the same bad boy yet; but the promises I had made often bore heavily upon my mind. I tried to reform my life. I betook myself to saying prayers until I got to be better in my own eyes than some professors of religion. But in the month of July 1826, one night in my father's house I was brought to see the justice of God in my condemnation. I could not see how God could be just and save me, and at the same time I believed that he was just. As such I sank into despair, and exclaimed, "I am gone to hell." Of all the dark scenes I ever passed through this was the darkest, but a light came from above that removed all that darkness and gloom, and I was made to hope in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus. There was no certain passage of scripture applied to my case at that time, but, after reading and meditating for some time, this passage was presented to my mind, "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." I felt that I did freely yield, or give up to be the servant of God, if so, his servant ye are to whom ye obey. I felt then and have felt since, until the present time, that my chief concern has been to live in the service of God. The first opportunity I had I offered myself to what I then believed to be the church of God. The church I joined was in Moore County, N. C., called Muddy Spring. That Church, after I left there, joined the Missionaries, but I was established in the same doctrine before I left there that I have been trying to preach ever since—salvation by grace and by grace alone.

I have had the pastoral care of the church at Seven Miles, Sampson Co., Reedy Prong, Juniper, Hannah's Creek and Sandy Grove, in Johnston County; Middle Creek, Willow Spring, Cedar Grove and Old Bethel in Wake County; and Eno in Orange, now Durham Co.,

My service has been poor, but so far as I know it has been acceptable with the brethren composing those churches. I have been identified with the Little River Primitive Baptist Association since 1838, have attended every session since that time, and two sessions before. There has never been an allegation brought against me in a church that I recollect, and yet I am a poor unprofitable servant, if one at all,

JAMES WILSON.

Remarks.

't has been a joy to me to know Elder James Wilson. Perhaps there is not a Primitive Baptist anywhere that knows him but is glad there is just such a man.

I heard him say a few weeks ago that he had been preaching the same doctrine (perhaps 60 years) that he preached from the first and was more confirmed in it than ever, if possible.—While he is a remarkably conscientious, truthful, careful and particular man, he said if he is damned God is just and holy, and that his own nature is vile.

All the churches of his Association wash feet, yet he feels that it should not be made a test of fellowship with any other church or Association that does not wash feet.

How beautifully his well ordered life (now he is more than 80 years old) sets forth the power of the grace of God to keep and preserve his people to old age, and to cause them still to yield fruit, even in old age.

VOLUME TWENTY ONE.

This issue opens a new volume of ZION'S LANDMARK. What the year yet before us may develop is altogether unknown to us. No prophet's eye is given us to foresee the future. God does not show that to men,

But the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. Every gospel sermon foretells the good news of the triumphant reign of Jesus who is King in the holy hill of Zion.

We may be sure that nothing will transpire that is not foreseen of God, nor will any wicked event defeat his will, nor fail to subserve his purpose. While many things that men do are meant for evil, yet the Lord God means them for good; nor does he ever fail to turn them to good for those that love him.

What a blessed truth to us, and how encouraging to feel that all our failures are healed in his perfect work, all our sins hid and blotted out in his glorious righteousness. We may then be encouraged to labor and serve in the Kingdom of our Lord, knowing that our labor in the Lord is not in vain.

We feel assured that the doctrine expressed and set forth in the column

the LANDMARK is the doctrine of the bible. Indeed we have no doubt of that, and it is therefore a work of faith and a labor of love to thus write and publish the writings of others.

There is nothing of this world so precious to us as the doctrine of God our Saviour. We hope that while we live we may be favored thus to labor, and trust the blessing of the Lord may rest upon us, and the lovers of truth among whom we number the dear readers of this paper.

GRAFTING.

Mr, G. R. Turner of Ky., desires my view of the cutting off of the Jews, and grafting in of the Gentiles, as spoken of in Roman 9. Paul is here describing to the Gentiles how the Jews were cut off, and how the Gentiles are put into the good olive tree and made partakers of the fatness thereof. The olive tree to my mind is used to represent the church in Christ, and the fatness or oil of the tree the riches of grace that Jesus distills in the church.

Under the law dispensation the Jews were the specially favored people of the Lord both legally and spiritually. And it seems when the legal dispensation was closed that blindness, or hardness in part happened unto Israel until the fulness of the Gentile be come in. In what part they are blind I do not know unless it be to the real character of Jesus as the true Messiah. The Jews to some extent keep their legal worship looking for the promised hope of Israel unto this day, but they have been dispersed from their beloved City and country, and though the Rothchilds have often tried to purchase what is called the Holy Land, they have hitherto failed, and Jerusalem and Palestine as compared with the days of Israel's prosperity and legal glory, are but the habitations of owls, bats, briars and thorns. And with all the efforts of both Jews and Protestant Gentiles it seems to remain a land of darkness, a region of death, a land forsaken and cursed.

My opinion is that the gentle and life-giving rays of the Sun of righteousness will never again fall upon that land, the great efforts of men to the contrary notwithstanding? Though it is the opinion of many that the Jews will be again gathered at Jerusalem, but I do not so understand the Scriptures. I do not mean that God may not grant them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, but it will not be at Jerusalem nor in the mountains round about; but in spirit and in truth.

It seems that with the ending of the Jewish economy ended the fulness of the Jews, and blindness happened into them in-so-much that they rejected better things in a legal sense, and therefore they were cut off. But did they stumble that they should fall? God forbid; but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, to provoke them unto jealousy. Legally the blessings belonged to the Jews, but they could not see the power of God in Christ crucified and they were cut off from any lot or part in the matter, and Paul says lo I turn to the Gentiles.

Legally the Gentiles were not beloved, nor were they the people of God, but the Lord says; "I will call them my people which were not my people, and her beloved which was not beloved". The Jews naturally were a type of the spiritual Jews, who are such inwardly by faith, as Jesus dwells in them by faith.

In the type the children of Abraham were the favored ones naturally, but Jesus having broken down the middle wall of partition between the Jew and the Greek hath made of the twain one new man, so making peace. Now we have literally neither Jew nor Greek, but the child of God is a new man, by faith which is in Christ. Paul argues that the children of the flesh are not the children of God. The children of God are not a fleshly seed. Neither as Gentiles nor as the fleshly descendents of Abraham, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed; for in Isaac shall thy seed be called, Now Isaac typifie. Christ who is the fulness of the spiritual seed, for whom the whole family both in heaven and in earth is named,

The choice or election of grace is not of the flesh nor in the flesh, but is of God in Christ Jesus. We are chosen in Christ, therefore this grafting in of the Gentiles is not of the flesh, but is of the spirit by faith. Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, and we are what we are by the in-dwelling of Christ the hope of glory.

Paul says this grafting is contrary to nature, for in nature the graft bears fruit after its own kind, but in this case the graft produces fruit after the Stock into which it is grafted, or implanted. He says, "thou bearest not the stock, but the stock thee."

This grafting is in the spirit. We are, as the elect vessels of mercy implanted in Christ experimentally, which no doubt this grafting refers to, when the spirit of Christ is sent into our hearts. We are in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwell in us, and if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. Upon receiving the spirit of Christ we cry Abba-Father and by this spirit and in this spirit we worship God, for we are the circumcision that worship God in the spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus and have no confidence in the flesh. God's people are a spiritual people; they are not spirits, but spiritual. Paul says "ye are not carnal but spiritual." But when these same ones lived after the flesh he said, "are ye not carnal, and walk as men? The child of God is of such a composition as to render it susceptible to the leadings of both the flesh and the spirit. "If ye sow to the flesh, ye shall of the flesh reap corruption, but if ye sow to the Spirit, ye shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live, for to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

This is a great mystery, but every child of God knows it to be true in his or her experience. This grafting is simply bringing in the Gentiles; that is bringing them to a knowledge of the truth, which the Apostle says is a mystery, and he would not have them to be ignorant of the fate of the blindness of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulness of the Gentiles.

While the Jews and Gentiles are both brought by Jesus, yet the circumstances connected with their being brought makes a difference in the manner of their bringing. To be born again seems to have been shadowed forth in the law which was only given to the Jews, and we have no instance where the phrase is used in addressing the Gentiles. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" All must be born of God, or from above. The necessity of the new birth is alike unto all, whether it be termed born again, born from above, or of God, or of the spirit, or from the dead, it is absolutely indispensable to the enjoyment of gospel blessings.

Man is no more made an heir of heaven by being born again than he forfeited heaven by transgression in Adam. Adam was not in heaven when he transgressed, neither is man in the world when he is born again. Birth is not a prerequisite to heirsihp, but to the enjoyment of the inheritance. The father may die before the child is born, but it is an heir just the same, but upon what principle? That the child is begotten of him. Peter speaks of being begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to an inheritance. And where he says being born again, it means "to beget anew." While this is to the Jews, yet it is true that as Christ died for the elect Gentiles, as well as those of the Jews, that they were as Paul says quickened together with him and raised up together with him, therefore the spirit of the regeneration is sent into their hearts whereby they are by faith experimentally begotten from the dead or quickened according to the indwelling of him who is the quickening spirit, whereby they are engrafted or implanted into Christ as he is now in them. And this is according to the purpose of God and grace, which was given them in Christ before the world began. It is by virtue of this grace, that any are begotten to the inheritance of eternal life.

NO NEED.

There is no need of selling food or drink at Associations. There is usually the greatest supply of food furnished by the kindness of neighbors and friends who attend the meetings—enough for all visitors. Hence there is no necessity to sell anything,

Some that wish to sell lemonade, cakes, apples, etc., will obtain the consent of some individual member of the church, or sometimes of the deacons, or the owners of land near by, to allow them to sell these articles, and they will erect tents near-by and sell during the meetings, much to the annoyance of the people who come there to worship God.

We hope and desire that such things will be discontinued—not allowed—at any of our Associations under any circumstances.

The law protects people from disturbance while worshipping. But the trouble is to enforce the law.

Again, some well-dressed young ladies and young men, whose appearance would indicate that they ought to know better, will talk and laugh near the place of preaching during the time of meetings; Perhaps these same people ridicule us for our rustic and old-fashioned manners, and our oddities, yet show a shameful and wilful neglect of good behavior themselves.

They are not the children of Old Baptists. Sunday school people fail to show the good of their institutions by behaving so wantonly themselves at our meetings.

P. D. G.

EARTHEN VESSELS.

We have this treasure in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us. So distinct is the gift from the vessel that it is in that there is no affinity between them. The gift of preaching is not of man, nor of the flesh, any more than pure milk is the same as the vessel that holds it. The strength of the gift is not of the flesh, nor does the flesh contribute to it at all.

If milk or some other valuable article of food, or some treasure that we desired to preserve a long while were placed in a vessel of metal that corrodes it would soon damage the milk or treasure, but if it were placed in an earthen vessel it would keep without being injured by the vessel, for earthen vessels do not rust as metallic ones do.

The gift or treasure of preaching, as well as of salvation, is in earthen vessels, and this is that the power may be shown to be of God, or manifested to be of God, and not of man. A metallic vessel would rust and corrupt the milk in it, or treasure hid in it, but earthen vessels do not this way. For they will endure much longer than vessels of metal.

When Jeremiah bought land of his uncle, and put the title of it in an earthen vessel, it was to be preserved many days, even during the captivity, and this was to show the return of Israel and resurrection of the dead.

The works of men are in iron, steel, gold, silver, or other metals that would rust or mar and damage the gift of God. It shines the brightest and is preserved the best in earthen vessels.—The excellency of the power is of God, and not of man. If man could add to this gift, or enhance it, he would be puffed up. If it were in a vessel of man's works it would puff man up, but when God puts it in an earthen vessel it may be kept there during the entire lifetime of a man, and not be corrupted; but the vessel still remains an earthen vessel, and nothing but an earthen vessel; and the man in whom the gift is deposited knows that he is nothing but a vile sinner, and that the excellency of the power is of God and not of man.

A MORE SURE WORD.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts."—2nd Pet. 1: 19.

Peter does not say that we have a more sure word than prophecy—but a more sure word of prophecy. Nothing can be surer than prophecy. For every word of prophecy came from God, and is of no private interpretation, and never becomes antiquated or obsolete.—The apostles and Jesus proved what they said by quoting the prophets.

Some seem to consider that experience is something more sure than prophecy. True it is, that by experience we know of the meaning of prophecy, and true it is; that we know nothing of the scriptures truly except by experience; but experience is no more sure than prophecy is, nor can anything be surer than prophecy.

One may have what he supposes to be experience, or revelation, or impressions; yea, even dreams and all sorts of imaginations of men's foolish minds might be claimed as something more than prophecy, if an open door were given to the wild fancies of the deceitful heart of man.

All our views, thoughts, feelings, impressions and views must be carefully compared with scripture which is prophecy, and anything and everything contrary to scripture of the prophets must be rejected and cast away as spurious and worthless; yea, as lies and abominable stuff.

What does Peter mean by the expression, "We have a more sure word of prophecy?" He speaks of not following cunningly devised fables in making known to you the power and coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. But we were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory on the mount of transfiguration when there came such an excellent voice from heaven that Peter heard.—Besides which he says, we have also a more sure word of prophecy—the scriptures—more sure than any cunningly devised fable, or than man's word.

How wonderfully sure and precious does that word become to us when sealed to us by the Holy Spirit. We do well to take heed unto this more sure word until the day dawn in our hearts, and the day-star arise, or until the full revelation of Jesus Christ in his second coming. Nothing in this dark night of error can be of greater value to us than the scriptures, or the more sure word of prophecy.

P. D. G.

HELP YOUR PASTORS.

A fault of the brethren and churches in our country is in not helping their pastors. Deacons were of old appointed to the business of serving tables when all things were common; that is, when no man called anything his own, and distribution was made to every man as he had need; and it was not meet or proper for the apostles to quit preaching and attend to the distribution of food.

Now churches need pastors. Elders or bishops or pastors are to be in every city; that is, every church needs a pastor. The examples of the scriptures are to this effect. Many references to the scriptures could be made to show that every church had its pastor, bishop, elder, angel or messengers, and that these are to feed the flock of God which is among them.

While gifted preachers that travel are of use to churches, and I do not say a word against them, yet it is far more important for churches to have able, faithful pastors. They should be abler men than traveling preachers, because they are to be with the churches regularly, and must be apt to teach. If a preacher that cannot teach much or profit comes along only now and then, it is not like one coming every month or every week that cannot teach or profit the people.

The disposition of the brethren is to consider their pastor as one they are under no obligations to help, and that he so belongs to them that they can treat him almost any how; (that is, not minister to him of their worldly goods because he comes to them regularly) but if a traveling preacher comes along they must help him just because he does not visit them often. Now it is all right to help your traveling preachers that come to you in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.— But now consider and see if you are not under far greater obligations to help the man you have called to be your pastor, and who has agreed to serve you regularly all the time.

I ask you to consider this matter, and the Lord give you understanding in all things.

P. D. G.

LAYING ON OF HANDS

Among the points of difference as to opinion and practice, that of laying on of hands on all newly baptized persons is not an exception among our people. As like causes produce like effects, and the same causes produce the same effects, it must follow therefore that, if we are required to observe the laying on of hands as did the Apostles, the result must be the same with us as with them. When Peter and John laid their hands on those of Samaria they received the Holy Ghost. Act. 8—17. We claim no such thing as that now. So then if laying our hands upon one is not attended with the reception of the Holy Ghost, what does it accomplish? We do not claim such power. Then what have we the right to claim it does do? If it does not result like the case referred to, then we have no right to refer to that as proof for the performance now. Nor can we claim any other instance where like results attended the act in the case of Paul or others. If Hebrews 6; 1—2 authorizes us to lay on hands, then it also authorizes us to administer baptisms, whereas Paul says we have but one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. We must also in some way do the work of repentance for ourselves and for others in a manner in harmony with the laying on of hands. And must we not act faith or produce it toward God? Again must we not in the same line have something to do with the resurrection of the dead, and with eternal judgment?

The Apostle is not talking about these things, so much as he is the foundation thereof. Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ let us go on unto perfection: not laying again the foundation of repentance etc. and this will we do if God permit. What will we do? We will go on unto perfection. We will go on unto the very thing itself Christ, as seen in his perfect or perfected doctrine, and will not lay again the foundation, as was laid in the principles, but leaving the principles of the doctrine we will go on unto and stand upon the doctrine. And if God permit we will do what he has told us to do, as was commanded the apostles and perpetuated by the disciples, and will leave off all things else, and rest in the finished and perfect work of Jesus.

The Apostles in perfecting the foundation and doctrine of salvation in Christ, and ordinances in the church, in their full exposition approbated the work of the disciples in baptizing in the name of the Lord according to his command; but nowhere did they command them to lay on hands upon such as were baptized; neither do I remember now of an instance where the disciples practiced it, and the same was authorized or approved by the disciples.

From personal observation there are comparatively but few of our people who observe this practice, none of which claim Apostolic succession to the work, nor similar consequences. It was practiced by the fathers in this part of the country (south-west Virginia) for a long time, and is yet claimed and practiced by some as a right in the church, but is being left off gradually without much opposition. May the Lord unite his people in doctrine, word and practice.

I find sometimes we are inclined to cling more tenaciously, if possible, to the tradition of the fathers than to the plain teachings of the scriptures.

While we should esteem the fathers for the work's sake, yet we should not regard their opinions as right and infallible except we find the same sustained by the word of God. The fathers pass away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever. In my opinion, we have a sounder ministry to-day than has been in any other age since the decline which closely followed the apostolic day. The various doctrines of men and devils in this day have had a tendency to drive our people to search the Scriptures more carefully and to weigh, measure, and compare with greater scrutiny, everything claimed to be of the truth, with the infallible word. When one shall have preferred the plain "Thus saith the Lord" to that of theory, and be satisfied with it, we shall surely dwell together in unity.

PASTORS ARE SHEEP-FEEDERS.

The pastor of a church is a feeder of sheep and lambs. He is to take the oversight of the flock, not for filthy lucre, not for money, nor for position, but of a ready mind to feed the flock of God. He is to be faithful and watch as those that must give account.

We have no fellowship nor sympathy with a preacher who is prompted by money or gain in preaching to a church. He should seek the good of the flock, and pray for the peace of Jerusalem.

If a church prayerfully or truly considers the case about whom she is to call as her pastor, and the minds of all the brethren are united on a certain brother as their pastor, and they make choice of him, what right has he to refuse to go and serve them if he can do so? None at all. Hence I have never refused to serve a church that called me, if I could go and do so.

To leave one church therefore and go to another because of the prospect of gain is altogether unworthy of this high and holy calling.

The mind of the Lord is with a true church. What therefore she does is valid, if she have the mind of Christ.— Though I believe that churches may err and do things that are not according to the will of God.

Are you ever weighted with the importance of serving churches? It is certainly a highly serious and important matter.

P. D. G.

WHO ARE CAUGHT?

When the wolf cometh does he catch sheep or hirelings? A good brother preacher said he caught hirelings. A dear old father in Israel then said to him, Do not any more blame nor rebuke wolves then, but let them come and get the last hireling, for it will be a benefit to the sheep to be rid of hirelings.

Another good brother preacher wanted to know if a wolf ever caught sheep. In reply this father said to him: "I think they had you for so many years." He had been a member of another denomination quite a number of years, and thought he had a hope all that time.

But does not the wolf kill and destroy the sheep? The good shepherd lays down his life for them, and therefore the wolf cannot destroy them.— He may rob and bruise, tear and smite them. How does Jeremiah speak of the sheep? "Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: first this king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadnezzar hath broken his bones." Therefore the Lord takes and delivers his sheep, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand.

The hireling is doing the devil's work too well for Satan to desire to disturb him in that business. The hireling fleeth when danger comes because he is a hireling, or cares not for the sheep, but merely wants the money or his reward and hire.

P. D. G.

MISSIONARIES.

This word of late has become a very common one, though it is not in the bible. If the idea is there, or the truth justifies the idea of missionary, we do not object to the name.

It means one sent. Jesus was sent from heaven. The Holy Ghost is sent in his name. Every apostle, every prophet, and every gospel preacher is sent by the Lord God to teach and preach in the name of the Lord. No man did ever send one of these, nor can he do so.

If the Lord sends them they will profit the people. When the Lord sent them of old as they went they preached, and they went every where preaching the word. Do we this enough? Do our preachers go to other places than to churches and preach at them enough? We should seek to go in parts beyond, or where there are no churches, when we have opportunity, and preach the gospel there also.

P. D. G.

end. However, in the year 1826 something got wrong with me, and I knew not what was the matter. I felt that the Lord was angry with me. I began to view myself a wretched and lost sinner, and the Lord just and holy. Yet how could I keep from imploring God's mercy upon me? Time after time have I wandered in the groves and forests, musing over my wretched condition, and imploring, as best I could, God's mercy upon my poor soul. At last, as I hope, the favored time came. I arose from my bed in the stillness of the night (the darkest night, I think, I ever saw) and went out about twenty paces from the house and fell, almost unconscious of what I was doing, and before I arose from that place I viewed the Savior as my Savior. I returned to the house with the praises of God in my soul. Soon the subject of baptism burdened my mind, which gave me much trouble, and at length, in the year 1827, I united with Jones Creek Church, Liberty county, Ga., and was baptized by father. I now felt so good that I thought my work was done, and that father's prediction concerning me was a mistake.—But the year 1830 brought trouble for me; I began to feel myself weighted with some duty, I knew not what. I could not think of the responsibilities of a gospel minister without shuddering, and I began to fear father was right. O! my soul! At length, in 1832, I was forced to try or die, which I did with much timidity and fear. I was liberated soon after this to exercise my gift wherever my lot should be cast. In 1834 I was ordained to this sacred work, Elder James McDonald and my father acting as presbyters."

Elder Westberry was soon called to the care of Jones Creek and Goose Creek Churches, which he served faithfully until January, 1838, when he moved to Lowndes county, Ga. Immediately upon his arrival in Lowndes he was called to the pastorate of four churches, viz.: Forest Grove, Pleasant Grove, Antioch and Columbia, and was the only pastor of Forest Grove Church for forty nine years. Elder Westberry was a man of medium stature, with high forehead, and eyes which were the very picture of intellect. As has already been said, he arrived at manhood with little educational advantages, but his mind was a searching one, and by continual study, he acquired the control of such language as to thoroughly equip him for his holy calling. He was naturally an orator in the full sense of the word. Throughout his entire life he was never summoned before any court of justice nor to his conference to give account of any evil conduct. What an example for his children! What an example for his brethren! Though young and tender he evinced great argumentative powers in the great conflict between the church and the Mission Baptists. He was among the first to lift a voice of warning against this heresy. He was not the man to use rough, unwholesome words, but was so mild and gentle in his manner of address that even his enemies could but admire him. Albeit, he came out of this great battle without being evil spoken of, for it was said by the Missionaries of this country that as soon as Elders Westberry, Albritton, Thigpen and Milton were gone, the old "Antis" would be done; which declaration was taken up by their historian, who gave utterance to the following: "For ere the stereotyped edition of this work shall have met the public's gaze, the old Antis will be no more." Elder Westberry outlived the historian and saw the end of his prophecy. He witnessed its death and saw the inscription (falsehood) engraved upon its tombstone. He could but take special notice of the similarity that existed between the historian and the historian's father, of whom it was said, ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do; he was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own for he is a liar, and the father of it: John 8: 44. He lived to see the church number altogether, nearly 100,000 in the United States, all in peace and correspondence with each other, especially so in his own country, where his own labors were; all in peace and prospering, and in some localities prospering almost beyond precedent. He lived to see Albritton, Milton and Thigpen dead (for he was the last to die,) and when his time had come to go home, he could look around him and see churches constituted, ministers ordained, until now I suppose there is one ordained minister to every two churches throughout the entire state of Florida and Southern Georgia. In the year 1874 there was another heart-rending conflict among the Primitive Baptists of Southern Georgia. Some of our most distinguished ministers began to dispute the immortality of the soul, deny the resurrection of the body, and a train of other innovations and heresies too tedious to mention here. Elder Westberry was physically broken down, and could preach but little; but how could he stay at home when the peace of the church was threatened? Filled with a zeal not excelled by the Apostle Paul, he met again in battle array the enemy, and nothing but the service of the church, to which his whole life has been devoted prompted him to do this. His labors were abundantly blessed, and old Columbia Church to-day owes her very name to the untiring zeal of this departed Elder. Peace to his ashes! The last few years of his life, he preached but little, having the care only of Forest Grove Church. He preached his last sermon at this church on the second Sunday in March, 1886, from the text: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him." Deut 32: 11. In May, 1886, he went to bed, never to rise again. He and his brethren saw he was soon to be no more on earth, but did not know he was to last another year, but he did. During his protracted illness he was never heard to murmur at his affliction, but bore it with that patience and fortitude that becometh the children of God. To the writer he expressed his willingness to go. At last, on the evening of the 12th of April, 1887, he died without a struggle, and looked as if he was only going to sleep. Thus ended the life of one who had stood as witness for Christ fifty-five years,

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels constive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, ect.

WILSON, N. C.:
ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

NO REST HERE.

On earth there is no resting-place,
But in Thy dear and fond embrace.
O may this love be my retreat,
As coming from Thy mercy seat.

While here I roam from place to place,
Sustained alone by Thy rich grace,
O may my hope in Jesus rest,
And I in him be ever blest.

When called to speak in Thy great name,
Of Him who was for sinners slain,
O may Thy Spirit lead the way,
And I Thy great command obey.

When sinners saved by grace draw near,
The wonders of thy love to hear,
O may they in Thy Spirit dwell,
While I the power of Jesus tell.

When all my labors here are done,
And they their mortal race have run,
O may Thy voice bid us arise,
To dwell with Thee in Paradise.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:
For the first time in my life I feel impressed to write my experience and some of my trials and feelings.

In early childhood, though an uncommonly rude child, I had serious thoughts about death and damnation. Often would I try to pray to God to make me a christian. I remember once for several months, when I would drive the cattle away to a lot prepared to keep them at night, I would kneel, and with all the sincerity I could command, ask the Lord to be merciful to me, and forgive my sins, and make me a christian. Strange to say, during the day I could sin without remorse of conscience, and during my years of childhood there were months of my time perhaps that I never once thought of trying to pray,— At other times my attempts were frequent. Yet I was often chastised by my parents for my bad conduct. I would fight my brothers and sisters and playmates, and delight in almost everything mischievous and sinful. When quite a youth, about fourteen years of age, being healthy and well grown to my age, I fell partially into all the vices of what are called fast young men.— Sometimes I drank too much, some times fought my fellow-creatures, used abundance of profane language, &c., though all this was kept as secret from my parents as possible.

My father was a moral man, my mother a strict Baptist before I was born. At about the age of sixteen years I attended a Methodist meeting, one of the most exciting kind. Their preacher alarmed me very much by telling exciting stories, such as death-bed and grave-yard scenes. He begat in me a slavish fear of hell and future punishment, yet I thought it hard to have to deny myself of the pleasure of vice and folly in order to escape the horrors of the damned. I loved sin better than all things else, and had a greater dread of the torments of hell than I had of all things else. I had no love of holiness, and only desired to escape punishment, and in order to escape punishment thought that I must from that time forth strictly continue in all things written in the book of the law to do them. It is no use to try to tell how badly I failed. I soon lost my fear of punishment, and had nothing else to lose. From this time I became a leader in sin, revelry and debauchery. I now thought nothing of God or godliness. At twenty I was married to a good woman, I think. I will not attempt to tell of the misfortunes and trials through which we have passed. During the first four years of our married life our two children died, and I and my wife both of us had a hard spell of sickness and were given up by friends to die. I suffered so much pain that I felt willing to die, and oh! if I had died then without grace what would have become of my soul? On getting well I became more sinful, if possible, than ever.

About the time I was twenty-two years of age preaching became frequent in our vicinity, and religion a very common topic. I contended for the doctrine of the Primitives, though I now know that I knew nothing about it.—I was now so blind as to secretly believe that I was good enough to be saved on account of a few simple acts of kindness to friends. About this time I dreamed a dream that caused me a little trouble for a while. In my dream it seemed that my father came to me and told me to go with him. I very naturally obeyed and followed him, not knowing whither he was going. I had not followed him far before I discovered he had no lower limbs. He seemed to be body from his head to the ground, and seemed to be slipping instead of walking. I felt a little alarmed, believing the individual to be Satan; yet I was curious enough to follow him to see where he would go. We came to a wall which was high, and seemed to enclose a large field, out of which issued a dense black smoke. A flight of steps went up the outside of the wall, up which my leader seemed to bound from step to step. I was curious enough to decide to follow him high enough to look over the wall. But before I got high enough to look over I became so much afraid I stopped. My hideous leader ordered me to come on, and I positively refused, on which he began to stretch himself, and became the most enormous serpent I ever saw, and made as though he would attack me, when I seized a limb of brushwood lying near, and fought him with desperation and drove him over the wall. I now endeavored to flee, and awoke, and behold it was a dream. What caused me trouble for awhile was my taking Satan to be my father. I feared it was so. But one thing gave me cheer: I defeated him in combat. This dream troubled me but a little while, yet I never expect to forget the dream.

About the time I was twenty-four years of age an Elder, who was a favorite preacher with me, made an appointment in my neighborhood, and I went to hear him. In his discourse he spoke of those who thought they were good enough to be saved, thinking their good deeds would outweigh their evil, which was my case. He then called our attention to Job, who was a perfect and an upright man that feared God and eschewed evil, who, when God spake to him, confessed he was vile, and abhorred himself, and repented in dust and ashes. It seemed that these words were spoken to me, for surely they set me to thinking that if the best of men were vile, even the perfect and upright were vile, what was my condition before God when measured by my righteousness. I now thought I must and would be a christian. I thought I would be, if possible, be more prayerful than Job, and a great deal more perfect than he. But instead of becoming better or more perfect, it seemed to me I became more vile, more loathsome, often surprising myself by committing sins that I did not think I would have committed. I often was praying, sometimes crying, continually sinning, and often feeling myself to be so vile, so loathsome, that I had not a friend in heaven or on earth. Thus I went on for two years, sometimes taking some little encouragement, at other times almost in despair.

At about the end of two years I strangely gave way to passion on a certain provocation, and used some horribly profane language. For the next five days tongue nor pen can describe my misery. I believed the Lord was going to kill me soon, and was going to send my soul to hell for my sins. I believed my condemnation was just and right, but I was not willing to it. I thought of praying constantly, but dare not call on the name of the Lord. I dare not open his book now to read his written word, for I felt like I had presumptuously violated every precept therein, and if I should now presume to look upon it the penalty would be sudden death and eternal ruin. But on the fifth day of my great agony, after my awful sin, it seemed I forgot myself, as a crazy or drunken man does, so as to take up the New Testament and open it, not knowing what I did, thinking only of my awful condition as a condemned sinner. The first words my eyes fell on were: "He spake a parable unto them unto this end, that men ought always to pray and not to faint." Luke 18:1. This gave me some encouragement, so I laid down the Book, and walked across the floor and knelt down. I could not think of anything to do or say. I had already worked out of tools and timber. Then such thoughts as these came to me, for me to presume to pray, sinful me, treacherous me, unworthy me. When the thought entered my mind, I believe it was spoken into my heart, though I heard no audible voice. This is the sentence that was spoken into my mind: "Christ is worthy, and for sinners he died." My heart was now filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. I did not cry out or shout for joy, but walked the floor and shed tears of joy. I could now see Jesus, not only as the Savior, but my Savior. I viewed him as God and man, as priest and sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God. The blood of the new covenant was his; all power was his; all mercies were his; all righteousness was his; all glory was his, and I a happy recipient of his goodness.

It was not twenty-four hours before the tempter was persuading me that I was deceived, yet he could not drown my joy entirely for a good many days, yet he did so harrass me that I dared not tell what I had felt, thinking perhaps I might be deceived. I now had impressions that there was something for me to do. Sometimes I thought it was only to be baptized, though I could not consent to that. I felt too sinful. I thought I must get better, so as not to disgrace the cause. So I decided to keep my secret to myself, and thus went on for about twelve months, too tender to kill a hornet. Sometimes I was in sweet communion with my Savior, if not mistaken, and sometimes in great darkness and doubts; sometimes tying myself in the following manner: When the tempter would say, "You are deceived," I would say no, I have witnessed his glory and peace. He would reply: "So did Korah, Abiram, and Dathan; so did the prophets of Baal, though it made them none the better."—Num. 16:19:1st Kings 18; 38, 39. I would reply: but I have had answers to prayer. Tempter: "So did Ishmael, (Gen. 21:17.) yet he was a castaway. God also gave Israel flesh when they murmured, and plague and fury with it. (Num. 11.)—So your answers are not sure evidence." I answered: But I have a change of heart, I think. I know I have a change. Tempter: "So did Saul of Kish, (1 Sam. 10:6—9, 10.) though he was a bad man. God gave him in his anger, and took him away in his wrath." Hos. 13:11. These thoughts beset me still so I cannot know what I am.

I still kept my secret, though sometimes interrogated by good people who pressed to see a remarkable change in me.

One night when alone at home I slept up stairs to keep from having to make a bed down stairs. When asleep, or almost asleep, I know not which, I heard my name called. Oh——! I awoke and raised up in bed, though I did not answer. I thought I was only dreaming and lay down again. When almost or quite asleep again I was again awakened by the same call. I listened again for some moments and lay down again, thinking that I was disturbed by dreaming. When I dozed again the same voice said: "You shall bear a message of love and instruction." I was now awake for some time wondering if I must preach, and how could one so ignorant as I instruct others. No, I cannot, thought I, I will not attempt such a thing. I soon began to have frightful dreams, or rather the same dream often repeated. I was chased by angry flames of fire, and would run toward a certain beautiful building, thinking if I could only reach that I should be safe from the fire.

But finally, on nearing my 28th year, in one of my dreams, I reached the building and went in and left my fear behind me. I never saw such a spacious building. I seemed to be at one side of it, and could not see across it, nor to the top of it. When I awoke my impressions to join the church were so strong I could not get rid of them any more until I obeyed. So on the 4th Saturday in August, 1881, I went to the church and told them a part of what I have here written, and was received and baptized next day by the Elder whose words first alarmed me.—On my way to the water to be baptized I became fearful that I was doing wrong. Oh! how I wanted some christian to pray for me. On meeting at the water Elder——prayed before going down into it, and in his prayer he uttered such good words of petition for me I felt it would have been a relief to me to cry out, glory to God, with my whole strength. My cup was running over, though I kept it hid. After my baptism my feelings were very peaceable for a while, but soon the duty of family worship came upon me so heavy I could not rest for it. After much rebellion and much suffering I obeyed, and found in doing so a blessing to my tempest-tossed soul. Soon after this my mind was called to the following scripture: "Warn the unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, and be patient to all men." These commandments were on my mind the greater part of the day. They were the last things at night and the first things in the morning. I tried to believe it did not mean for me to preach, as this command was given to all the brethren at Thessalonica, and of course they were not all called to preach; but still the words followed me.

I soon moved some considerable distance from where I then lived, and several told me not to move my membership, saying to me: "You need not try to run from your impressions." Such words seemed strange to me, as I had told no one of my feelings. However, I moved myself and membership to other parts, and soon found strife in the churches, and my mind led me to take a very active part in trying to purge out corruption and settle differences. When matters were once apparently settled, and strife at an end, my impressions to preach came upon me with such force that I knew not what to do. I thought I should die for my disobedience if I did not obey, and being very poor, and having to rent both land and horse in order to make a very limited support for family, and knowing the brethren to be poor, and very few of them, and in hard circumstances like myself, I was afraid I would be a disgrace.

I began to try to pray, conditionally, that if the Lord would save my soul I might die out of my trouble. This trouble lasted me for some time; I cannot tell exactly how long. But during this time my wife, who had been rather opposed to my preaching, broke the silence at our fireside by saying: "You had better preach if you want to; I do not care." This relieved me but very little, if any, for I was not willing myself. So I continued to pray that I might be removed and saved.

One day while in the woods prostrate on the ground, begging the Lord to do something for me, something seemed to fall very close to me, as though some one had thrown a stone at me, which startled me and caused me to raise my head, and almost within reach of my hand, right before me, and looking apparently right at me, sat a robin—to my eyes the prettiest bird I ever saw.—

We all know it is no uncommon thing for a robin to alight in the woods. But my trouble was gone, my desire for death was gone, and I felt willing to live, and have ever since. But soon, soon, the question presented itself:—"Are you willing to preach now?" I was not.

Not many months after this another trouble began to bud in my church and in neighboring churches, which I hoped to have nothing to do with. It finally grew into a formidable trouble, and circumstances forced me to take a very active part, or grossly neglect my duty. So I worked with a will until the scormer was cast out, &c., and strife ceased. This trouble was on hand for six months or more, during which time my impressions to preach did not trouble me but little, if any.

But after matters were settled, and I had moved into another State, I moved my membership again, hoping my work was now done. But soon there were words haunting me day and night which are the following: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall Judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom, preach the word: be instant in season; out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine."

I had often promised the Lord that if he would remove my besetting sin of idle talk and foolish jesting, then I would try to preach. But when I was not mourning I was jesting, and vice versa. But still this solemn charge followed me day by day, until I became so burdened with it that I fell prostrate on the ground and promised the Lord that I would try just as I was, knowing it was the mind of the brethren for me to do so. Since that time my sin has not beset me half so often. Accordingly, at our next regular meeting, on being invited by Elder—— to go forward in the services and preach to the people, I told him I would try, if it was the mind of the church unanimously. So he put it to a vote, and I was voted into service. After singing and prayer I took the solemn charge that had been so long on my mind for a text, and gave the brethren a short talk in my weak way. This was the first time I had ever taken the yoke willingly. I had been urged to try two or three times before, but now I had been made willing.

A few days after this a member whom I will not call male or female, as I do not wish to personate, for I trust I have christian love for the individual, accused me to my face of that which God knows I was clear of. I was about to remonstrate, when my mind said to me, "That individual is friendly; bear, bear with the infirmities of the weak;" and as the individual professed not to have anything against me, I remained mute. About three months after this I was publicly slighted by the same member, which wounded my feelings for a few moments, but felt the same mind I had before, to bear, though I reasoned with myself that this command was to the strong, and not to me. Yet knowing the circumstances connected with the case, I had good reasons for believing it was a physical weakness. In a little while my mind was easy and my feelings as kind toward the individual as ever before. I write this as a part of the dealings of the Lord with me.

Brother Gold, with other troubles, I have had many serious misfortunes in my temporal affairs, but will not state them, lest I appear to complain. I have left out many incidents and yet this letter is too long. I have been asked to write my experience for publication and for some cause or other have just now become willing to do so without being asked, and as I have said I never write an anonymous letter, I send you my name and address. Please do not publish my name and post office, if you should think proper to publish this letter, unless some brother or brethren should ask for it; then you may give it privately or publish it as you will.

Yours in bonds of affliction,

G. A. E.

He that loveth is born of God.

ED'S. ZION'S LANDMARK, DEAR BRETHREN—The Apostle says "But I certify you brethren that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man, for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Gal. 1: 11, 12.

The language here employed by the Apostle is rather peculiar, and perhaps is not the language which the learned theologians of this day would have used. I refer to the theologians who are educated in the schools. They perhaps would have used the word declared instead of the word certify. The reasons for that conclusion are that they hold that the gospel which they preach, which they declare is for the purpose and does call the sinner dead in trespasses and in sins to a knowledge of himself, and to know "Jesus whom to know is life eternal. Thus by their gospel they repudiate the idea that life must precede action, and they declare that their preaching possesses a life giving power. A moment's reflection ought to satisfy them of the fearful error into which either of those positions involves them. Life cannot be imparted by any except by him who hath creative power. He who created the vast universe and formed man of the dust of the earth, breathed into him the breath of life and he became a living soul. No instrumentality, no other power but the power of that God who alone possesses this (to finite mortals) incomprehensible attribute called Omnipotence, was employed to give to that lifeless mass of dust that life, which was the life not only of Adam but of all his undeveloped posterity who should people the earth in all coming time. Hence the assumption that the preaching of the gospel operates either directly or indirectly to call them who are dead in trespasses and in sin to spiritual life, in which they have the power to repent (turn away from their sinful course) and exercise that faith without which it is impossible to please God is false. If natural life could only be given by him who possesses creative power, certainly spiritual, eternal and immortal life could not be given by any one who possessed less power than the great God of the vast universe, much less by the power either directly or indirectly of poor finite sin-polluted mortals. To do so would be to divide his power with mortals, and the glory of the great plan of salvation, and its never-failing execution with man. "The tenant of an hour: enslaved by passion, and corrupted by power." Yes, and would deny the language of that God who said, "I am the Lord, that is my name, and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images." Is. xlii 8. We often hear of men denouncing Bob. Ingersoll for his fearful infidelity. But how much better are they who claim to exercise the power of God in giving life to the dead sinner, and thus attempt to make themselves equal with God, than that God-dishonoring infidel who repudiates all the wonderful revelations God has given us in his sacred volume. Surely there is but little difference between him who makes himself equal with God and him who denies the existence of God. Then is it not a fearful thing for any to claim to be exercising a power which alone belongs to Jehovah. Our Lord said, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." And the Apostle said, "You hath He quickened (that same Lord) who were dead in trespasses and sins." That power to give spiritual, eternal and immortal life to his redeemed, belongs as much to God without the agency of man as does the power to breathe into man the breath of life when he became a living soul. To deny this is to declare untrue that language of our Lord when he said, "I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish." To deny the power of God alone to give eternal life to his people is to take away from the revelations which God has made to man, and incur that fearful punishment received by John in these words. "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city and from the things written in this book." Rev. 22: 19.

But the apostle says, "I certify you brethren." A certificate is testimony and when made before a proper officer must stand unless its contents are negatived by other proof. But the truth to which the apostle certifies is that the gospel which was preached of him is not after man. But to settle the truth in the minds of his Galatian brethren that the gospel which he preached is not after man beyond a doubt he certifies still further saying I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. This question arises. What was that gospel which was preached by that apostle? He answers saying, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Rom. 1: 16. If it is the power of God surely then that power was not after man, nor did he receive it of man. Then by what authority do men go forth proclaiming that they by their preaching are converting sinners who are dead in trespasses and sins, to a state of spiritual, eternal and immortal life in Christ. That life is the gift of God. In that dark and doleful night in which our Lord was betrayed, he lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, "Father the hour is come, glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee. As thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." In preaching his own everlasting gospel our Lord said, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father, and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Math. xi—27. When the apostle said, I am determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." He proclaimed a wonderful truth to which those who are claiming to be preaching the gospel would do well to take heed. That ancient inspired apostle and preacher of the everlasting gospel upon whom the Spirit of the Lord was resting (for he was inspired) could and did say, "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." He could not know Jesus Christ and him crucified except by the revelation of God, hence the gospel which he preached was not after man who in this corrupt period in the history of the world is claiming to be possessed of great worldly wisdom all of which belongs to, and is attained by, the natural man to whom the things of the Spirit are foolishness and by whom these things cannot be discerned. The reason they cannot be discerned is that the world by wisdom knoweth not God. The world knoweth him not because no man knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Then surely the apostle was not taught that gospel which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth except by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Remember dear saint, that the prophet hath said to you, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, the government shall be upon his shoulder: his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace." It is that mighty God, that Prince of peace who is revealed in you and to you in your experience, and is proclaimed to you by the true ministers of the gospel. He is the Alpha and Omega of the gospel and cannot be preached except by those blessed followers of the cross to whom he is revealed, and in that glorious revelation he is made unto them wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. Then they surely are prepared, not by the schools of men, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ to preach that gospel which is not after man. It not being after man, and not being received of man, is not tainted by the foul slush that has been taught in those schools since the days that Gamaliel taught Saul of Tarsus, from whose feet he went forth a vile persecutor. The carnal mind is enmity against God and it was that mind in Saul of Tarsus that received that culture at the feet of Gamaliel. That enmity was made clearly manifest by Saul in his persecutions to prison and death of the dear saints who then were the light or the salt of the earth. Then surely the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.

How wonderfully foolish did that wisdom appear when the scribes, pharisees, chief priests and rulers crucified our Lord. In their vain wisdom which was the wisdom of this world, they believed that his crucifixion would put an end to his power over the hearts and minds of men. While they were glorying in their wisdom they were so ignorant as not to know him. To him was given all power both in heaven and in earth. They did not know that in the exercise of that power he was able to lay down his life and able to take it again.

They had not learned that "The wages of sin is death;" they did not know that he was the great head of the church, and that he by one offering, which was laying down his life for the sheep, could perfect forever all them that are sanctified—all them who were chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began. They were, although in possession of the wisdom of this world, ignorant of that great truth that they were carnal, sold under sin, and that the fearful consequences of their enmity against God could never be removed but by the power of him who, in his infinite love for his people, redeemed them from all iniquity. Being ignorant of these great and glorious truths, the preaching of the gospel was to them foolishness for the reason that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit. This ignorance was in perfect accord with their condition which they had by reason of their relation with their father the first Adam who was of the earth earthy.

It will be remembered that the Almighty said to Adam: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life: in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The curse upon the earth rested as fully upon the dust of which the body of Adam was composed as it did upon that opaque body on which he stood when the Almighty pronounced that fearful curse upon him: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Mark you, here the Almighty speaks and declares the final destiny of that earthly body: it must return to the dust. It is nowhere declared that that earthly body is changed by regenerating grace and made part spiritual. It is all of the earth earthy, and over it the grave has the victory. But glory to the name of him who is the resurrection and the life, by his power that victory will be changed into defeat; for this mortal shall put on immortality. Here is presented the only change that is made in these corruptible bodies, and that is after death. But perhaps some will say, "The elder shall serve the younger." That is true, but in that service he is not made like the younger. He is natural, and the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, but is held in obedience by the younger by the spirit, but he is restive while he is thus held, hence the warfare. The flesh lusts against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh. These are two and the one is contrary to the other.

The gospel which Paul preached was not after the fleshly corruptible man. Neither did he receive it from that corruptible source. Neither was he taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—The contrast between the gospel which was taught him by the revelation of Jesus Christ, and that learned in the schools of men, is as great as the difference in the sources from which they emanate. The gospel which the apostles preached comes by the revelation of Jesus Christ in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, all the divine perfections of the great God of the vast universe, all of which are united in sweet and glorious harmony in the great plan of life and salvation in which all his people were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, redeemed by him when he offered himself without spot unto God, born again by his Spirit, not of corruptible seed, but of an incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever. Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last times; and then brought off in holy triumph in glorious immortality with Him who is proclaimed by every true minister of the everlasting gospel as the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending of all things that pertain to the redemption and final glorification of

The gospel, so called, which is taught in the schools of men, emanates from that source on which the curse of God rests on account of its corruption and sin. Infidelity pervades the minds and hearts of all natural men. None are relieved of that infidelity but those who are born of God. Even those who are thus blessed in their natural minds receive not the things of the Spirit; hence infidelity stands out in bold relief in all their natural thoughts and meditations. Schools are earthly organizations, and in them is taught natural things. Spiritual knowledge never has been nor never will be taught in the schools of men, for the reason that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit. Every effort to impart spiritual knowledge to the natural man must prove abortive. All admit that the gospel is a spiritual system and cannot be taught by man. Hence the apostle says: "The gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Then the contrast between the preaching of the gospel by Paul and the preaching done by men who have been prepared for that work in the schools, consists in this: The former preaches Christ and him crucified, in all his glorious and wonderful fulness as the Redeemer and Savior of his people, while the latter preach what they have received of men, which is the wisdom of the world, and it is declared: "The world by wisdom knoweth not God." It is evident, then, that they do not preach God.—They cannot preach him in his great, glorious and wonderful character, because they know him not. Not knowing him whom to know is life eternal, they preach another gospel, which, the apostle says, is not another; but there be some that would trouble you and pervert the gospel of Christ.

In that early period in the history of the gospel church there were some that would pervert the gospel of Christ.—Then need we to wonder if in these degenerate times in spiritual things men should arise and declare that the Almighty demands that money must be contributed to enable him to have the work of preaching his gospel carried on both here at home and in foreign lands. That the Lord has a treasury that must be kept full to enable him to have his preachers educated and thus qualified to preach the gospel. Oh! what infidelity. But surely the dear little ones who trust in the Lord rejoice to know that there is none like unto the God of Jeshurun who rideth upon the heavens in thy help and in his excellency on the sky. The faith of the dear saints takes hold of that God who rideth upon the heaven in the help of his people, and they rejoice to know that the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear, and that his eyes are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their cries, saying, "Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Here surely is presented what they need and all they desire.

The dear saints are continually saying: "This one thing do I desire, and that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life to behold the beauty of the Lord and enquire in his temple. And oh! may this be the lot of all the dear saints in these days of strife, confusion and contentions for the mastery in the house of the Lord, is the sincere prayer of this little one.

IS HE DEAD?

DEAR ELDER GOLD:—

I have headed my article as above named in order to the obtaining of information respecting a Mr. Baily who once lived in Raleigh, N. C., and was said to be the Editor of a Missionary paper, known by the name of the "Biblical Recorder."

I never knew much of Mr. Baily, but had supposed, when I learned that he had taken charge of the Biblical Recorder, that if he were not a good man he ought to be. But I am not after entering into an investigation of the merits of the paper, or its worthy Editor, just now, but just simply wish you, through the LANDMARK, to let Mr. Baily know that I am home again, got through safely, was blessed of the Lord to meet all my appointments, and hope that He did enable me on every occasion to preach that same old sermon.

Now the reason I am so much interested in Mr. Bailey is, because he seems to be so much interested in me, and I do love to make amends for kindnesses shown me. He said in a number of his paper not long since :

"Rev. D. N. Gore, now of the Anti-Mission Baptists, has a list of 62 appointments in ZION'S LANDMARK of Sept 1st. At the end of the list the Editor remarks, 'He will need conveyance.' Bro. Gore has found his place at last, and doubtless his favorite refrain now is :

'This is the way I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not.'"

Now I must say in truth that I am not at all provoked with Mr. Bailey for so noticing me, and I am sure that if God should spare his life for yet many more years, and he should continue to improve in his profession, even as rapidly with every issue of his paper as he has for the last number or two, that he can never write a truer piece. It is true, every word of it, but he ought to have done well, for he had a poor Hard-Shell preacher, ZION'S LANDMARK and a good old poet to get his subject matter out of; but that is not like toiling and digging to bring up something instructive and edifying for his readers. However, he is smart to get the thing up like he did, and if he has survived the effort necessary to the bringing forth of such a prodigious production, and you think that his tender sensibilities would duly appreciate a line of this sort tell him, please, that I am on hand, and do not like to say hard things of him, but must conclude, from his frequent allusions to money, that if the same poet from which he quotes be changed a little, we could sing a line or two to his memory, viz. :

"His grief and burthen long has been,
How he might get the money in!"

Affectionately your brother,

D. N. GORE.

WHAT YE HEAR IN SECRET LET IT BE KNOWN ON THE HOUSE-TOP.

DEAR BRETHERN GOLD AND LESTER :

I have thought that I would write no more for the LANDMARK, but the subject above occurs so forcibly to my mind, that if not deceived, I feel impressed to once more make the attempt.

I have been afflicted for the last two weeks, and in my afflictions I feel to write of some things which I hope I learned in secret, or by revelation; that is, one point of church discipline.— This point has given me much trouble. A brother going to law with brother, and it was not looked upon as being a fault by some brethren, because the brother was old and weak-minded, while others looked upon it as being a fault. Now the scriptures strictly forbid this, and we are commanded to take them for the man of our counsel. We are to know no man after the flesh.

If a brother or sister should be weak-minded, we are commanded to bear with them, try to gain them from their error, and if we should be successful in gaining them we hide a multitude of sins; but if we should be unsuccessful after we have been very lenient, and they continue contrary to the teachings of the scriptures, I can see but one thing to resort to, and that is, use the pruning knife. Christ says: "I am the vine, ye are the branches; every branch therefore that bringeth forth not fruit shall be cut off." Again the scriptures say that if any man is guilty of anything the scriptures forbid with such an one not to eat. Again Christ says, if ye are not willing to sacrifice father and mother, wife and children, houses and land for my sake, ye are not fit for the kingdom. I understand this scripture means in their carnal way. Again, if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off; if thy right eye offend thee pluck it out, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not thy whole body should be cast into hell. This scripture has reference to any brother or sister, if it should be father, mother, brothers, or sisters in the flesh. While my mind was being exercised on the weak-minded brothers and sisters, there were two natural figures presented. The first—I "My little finger is badly mashed," That was to show me that finger was badly disordered, and I know it. Now there is something to be done, I must go to work, do all I can, to restore that finger to it's natural health. After trying every remedy thought of, and my finger instead of improving, grew worse, what then—for the benefit of the body I find amputation alone, the best and last remedy. The second figure. "A natural family." Suppose a member of that family should lose his or her mind, they should be kindly treated, every means tried to restore their right mind; then all efforts proving fruitless, instead of getting better, grow worse, become violent, there remains but one more step, remove them from their midst, for the comfort of the family. These two figures show me that we have no right to make provisions in the scriptures to screen one when in disorder. If we annex provisions we are adding to the scriptures. We should bear in mind the latter part of the last chapter of Revelation. He that adds to the scriptures, shall be partaker of the plagues of this prophecy.

Brother Gold, I can say as Paul, that I neither learned this of man, neither was I taught it of man, but, I hope, by the revelation of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I write you this, as I hope, to relieve my mind. You can do with it as you think best.

Your brother, I hope, in Christ,

JOHN B. HARDEE.

THE SINNER'S GUEST.

"And they all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner"— Luke 19:7.

And the Pharisees still murmur that Jesus is gone to be guest with a sinner. This shows that they did not consider themselves sinners, and that sinners were not worthy of Jesus' presence, much less theirs. They would not go, even as accompanying Jesus, to be guest with such. Nor could they condescend nor compromise their religious character and dignity by recognizing Jesus as Messiah in such company and amid such surroundings. No, they had no respect for sinners, nor for Jesus, if he must be guest with such.

And thus to murmur at Jesus was to murmur at his doctrine, as at this day. And thus to separate from his company was to separate from his people, as at this day.

But did you ever know one poor, helpless, perishing sinner saved by grace, that did not feel for all such?—Did you ever know one that did not rejoice to know that Jesus was gone to be guest with a sinner? Did you ever know one but what wanted to tell and to persuade just such poor, helpless, lost sinners that Jesus was their friend that was able and willing to save them? Never! but rather rejoice and give glory to God that Jesus is guest with such. They rejoice because they have the Spirit of Jesus—the spirit of the gospel—that rejoices to go. And the self-righteous murmur because they have an opposing spirit, or spirit of error.

I suppose the Pharisees hated the disciples of Jesus—professed sinners—just about as they do the Primitive Baptists—professed sinners—of this day. For the Primitive Baptists alone, of all denominations, profess to be sinners still. And Pharisees of that day and this, and of all times, can say, in common with the one praying in the temple, Lord, behold the many wonderful works done in thy name; we build and maintain Missions and Sunday-schools, and other good institutions to help thee; we are rich in righteousness and by good works have sanctified us, body, soul and spirit: we have overcome all sin, and many of us cannot even be tempted: we thank thee that we are not as other men, even as these publicans and Primitive Baptists who, instead of saving others, profess themselves sinners still, and unprofitable.

Yes, Jesus, as they saw him in his works, and as they see him now in the meek and lowly works of his people, they scorn to recognize and acknowledge the Savior. And they like to make the contrast, and have the world know they separate themselves from such, especially from being a religious guest. They know they are born of God: they know they have attained to a state of holiness: they know they are worthy, and that therefore Jesus should be seen only going to them, and should abide only with them, as their honored guest, nor their holy character be compromised by his being guest in common with professed sinners. Indeed they feel that Jesus should be under obligation to them, they have done so much for his cause, even to the extent of obeying them, notwithstanding his written law. Why, one in Butler, not many months ago, prayed (?) the Lord to remove the heads of families who forbid their children from going to Sunday-school, that they might fall into the hands of such as would send and save them. Oh yes, they murmured.— And they murmur now that we claim to have Jesus to feast in fellowship with us, even while professing and sensibly feeling ourselves to be poor, helpless, blind sinners that must perish but for the grace of God given in Christ Jesus. It would sorely wound their righteous soul to be seen and counted one with us at a baptism. It would offend their holy pride and self respect to attend our feet-washings.

But dear brethren and sisters whose wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption is Jesus Christ as made of God by grace, and not our works, what an unspeakably precious truth to us, that Jesus will be guest with a sinner? Else Jesus could never be guest of mine. To none but the poor empty handed, hungry, and thirsty sinner does Jesus come in unto with the bread and water of life to sup with. The holy-hearted, full-souled Pharisee would loathe the honey comb of salvation that Jesus brings us with love, election, calling, redemption, justification and glorification in the cells, and all completely capped with grace, more precious to us sinners than ten thousand worlds, and to be appropriated and eaten with the divinely given hand of faith. No, they would not eat of this, if they could, because they hate the food—it is food for sinners, and they are holy. Yet, if they would, they could not eat, because devoid of the only hand (faith) that can open and partake. And this is just as they would have it. Although they murmur that we speak of a definite number appointed to salvation, yet when Jesus says "if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink," he does not limit the water to a definite number, but the thirst does. Then you that have plenty of money to buy water, and more, hence never thirsty, why do you murmur at Jesus when not his invitation but your own full-handed, abounding condition excludes you?— And since you do not need it, have rejected it, why do you murmur that Jesus goes to the poor and needy with the waters of life? And why do you murmur and call it a partial doctrine, because brought to the poor needy sinner, when all but such reject it?

But you who are poor, and miserable, and naked, and blind, and lost—who are killed to the love of sin and legal food, and who must perish but for Jesus and the life-food he brings without money and price, how acceptable and how deliciously and heavenly sweet, how soul-reviving, and how timely is his coming and food? And how doubly, unspeakably blessed by the presence of the Author and Giver as guest. Jesus, the Lord of life and glory, guest with us! Our Father, hallowed be thy name! Never did a full-handed, full-souled Pharisee know the "joy unspeakable and full of glory" that pours out in glad vent from the heart of a sinner to a Savior. And Jesus calls us not servants but friends.— Comes to be guest as a familiar friend. And ye blessed partakers of and with Jesus, think of what manner of love prepared and spread the feast and brought Jesus as guest. Like Mary, let us sit at his lovely feet lowly down and eat, and live, and adore.

What heart-thrilling consolation that the whole mission of Jesus into this world was to seek and to save sinners. And that Jesus, apparently but a guest at first, will take up his abode in our hearts in this vale of sorrow and tears till the Father is ready to accept us in the Beloved in his home in glory—our home eternal in the heavens. Then what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and walk to honor and glorify him, and by faith and love purify the heart where Jesus dwells. Oh let the fact that sinning dishonors and grieves your divine guest, prevent you from it. Always remember Jesus is your guest of heart.

CAIN—HIS WIFE—LAND OF NOD.

EDITOR OF THE LANDMARK, DEAR SIR:

Will you accept of help to do a thing I see you seem to have no fondness for, viz;— to write about Cain and his wife.

Your readers continue to ask, "where Cain got his wife?" Since no-body asks this question and supposing all know it, I usually answer the question, "where did Cain get his wife," by asking another, viz; "where did Seth get his wife?" It will be remembered, that after the death of Abel and banishment of Cain, that the next son born unto Adam and Eve was Seth. He is the father of the line through which Noah came.

I suppose you are now ready to say, Seth of course, married one of his sisters. Even Abraham married one of his sisters—Sarah, and explains by saying, Gen. xx; 12. And yet indeed she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother; and she became my wife. It was God's plan of multiplying and replenishing the earth as he had commanded. Such marriages then were not improper, as now, because there was then no law against it, and where there is no law there is no condemnation. The question about Cain's wife, in part, grows out of want of full faith in God's word. Acts 17; 26, "In connection with part of verse 24 "God then made the world, * * And hath made of one blood all nations of men &c. Many people nevertheless contend that there must have been other human beings in the world, who did not descend from Adam and Eve, either through the line of Cain, or that of Seth. Some attempt to prove it by saying; "The Bible says, Cain went to the land of Nod and there found him a wife." That is false and proven by false statement. You will always find that to be the case—falschhood is not proven by truth, neither is truth proven by falschhood; but falschhood by falschhood, and truth by truth. The fact is, it nowhere says, Cain went to the land of Nod, and there found a wife. The Bible says—see Gen. 4, 16, 17. And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land of Nod on the east of Eden. And Cain knew his wife and she conceived, and bear Enoch." "Knew his wife" makes it a plain case that Cain already had a wife.

The answer then is that Cain and Seth both married their sisters. In fact for many years after the creation, there were no other persons to marry except brothers, cousins, sisters, or very near relations. A few thoughts concerning Nod. Nod means, vagabond, fugitive. Cain went eastward, not to a country or place already known, as Nod, but to a place or country afterwards called Nod, because the fugitive Cain did go there and take up his abode. The land of Nod therefore means the same as the land of the vagabond or the land of the fugitive. Anywhere else, wherever fugitive Cain might have gone, would also have been the land of Nod.

The origin of many names dates back to those days, and nearly all of them have special meanings and originated under special circumstances. Cain named the city he built after his first son Enoch. The third son of Noah was named Ham (which means brown) after it was seen that his complexion was a few shades too dark for him to escape the kitchen, Ethiopia, applied to him, which means blackness, so named after the black descendants of Ham who settled in that country. The inhabitants of Ethiopia were afterwards called Ethiopians, meaning blackness or black people. Ham's first son was black, therefore he was named Cush, which word means blackness. Niger also means black. Some of the black descendants of Ham first settled on a certain river in Africa: for the reason that black people settled on its banks it was called Niger (black): after awhile the river gave name to the settlers and they were called Nig-ers more recently, and more respectfully, I suppose, Negroes. History, is of course written after events transpire. But perhaps I am digressing and lest I do digress, that it be thought I prefer darkness rather than light, I close with well wishes. BOX 39 WILSON N. C.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER;—

I feel that I ought to feel very thankful to the God of mercy and love for such wonderful gifts in Zion as you both are. I have been reading the dear LANDMARK ever since 1882, and I have never failed to receive crumbs from its able editorials, but I cannot give any of the glory to you, for notwithstanding your great ability to expound the deep mysteries of God, when you are destitute of the spirit of God to direct, you can do nothing and are as helpless as the feeblest one.

I was reading a brotherly reply of yours to a brother in Texas not long since, which afforded me great comfort. He wanted to know if he should fellowship certain acts or not among brethren. If all the brethren would give the advice that you did, I think we would have better times among us, and have unity of spirit like it is here in south Alabama. The conversation of the Lord's people here is, about what he has done for them, and how poor and unworthy they feel, and it seems that they are bound together in one bundle of love—no big I's and little you's. They realize the fact,—

“When I turn my eyes within,
All unholy, all unclean.
Of all the foes I meet,
None so oft' mislead our feet ;
None betray us into sin
Like the foes that dwell within.”

Our Baptists here are generally poor people both financially and feel so spiritually. As long as we can feel that we are in the lowest depths of poverty in spirit there is no danger of our bringing confusion.

Then I would admonish God's children everywhere to heed the counsel of our dear brethren, and let us endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. I do not admonish to heed their good counsel because it is from them, but because it is in the truth and in accordance with God's word.

Brethren should not be falling out over frivolous matters like little children in their play. We ought to honor our hope in Christ more than that. What amazing grace and mercy we have given us in Christ, to be an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ! What is earth with all its glittering toys, compared with the celestial joys of the redeemed by grace.

I sometimes feel that I can mount on Pisgah's top and view by an eye of faith that celestial city whose maker and builder is God. While I feel thus the sorrows of earth are banished and all envy is gone from my poor, treacherous heart, and I have a forgiving and loving spirit, and see no more faults in God's children. I used to see many faults in God's children and was made to mourn over it, but when I began to examine myself I found that very nearly all the fault was in my poor sinful heart. I used to enjoy a conversation of fault-finding very well. But my enjoyment now is with God's humble poor, talking about Jesus and what he has done for us. All foolish jestings are a terror to me; but I suffered almost death before I could feel as I now feel. I love all of God's people, I hope, though they may be in error. I do not love the error; but I love God's children who are thus captivated. I hope I have been killed to earth and earthly things and my whole desire day and night is to be with God's dear children. I feel sometimes that I will be compelled to devote my life to travel among the poor little ones in Zion, for I feel sensibly that my stay is but short here. Then dear brethren work for peace, love will hide a multitude of faults.

Dear Brother Gold, I dreamed not long since that God had called you home to enjoy His blissful presence throughout eternity. Oh! how I was troubled to think that I would be deprived of the happy privilege of reading your precious writings any more. But I could rejoice then to think it was a dream, and I have been impressed to write you ever since.

I have baptized eight into the fellowship of the churches around here since September last, four of whom are exercising to the comfort of the dear saints. I started to write a word of admonition to the precious sisters to help their husbands and give them words of encouragement in the duties of family prayer, &c., but I cannot now. Brethren, live in peace; comfort the weak; let brotherly love continue; do not back-bite; keep yourselves unspotted from the world; follow Jesus—pray for poor me: yours in love.

LEE HANCKS.

Ozark, Dale Co., Ala. Feb. 25th, 1887.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:

As I promised several brethren and sisters to send you a sketch of my visit to the saints in N. C., I will in a brief way try to do so, leaving it with you to give space in the LANDMARK, or as it seems to you proper.

I left home on Sept. 22 and took the cars in Wayne Co., Ga., reaching Dudley which was my first appointment, had a very pleasant meeting; thence on filling appointments in our humble way during the remainder of the week, and the next 'till we struck the Keliukee Association. This I think is the largest congregation I have ever witnessed congregated for religious worship, and to say nothing of the writer, the preaching was through the meeting glorious and very comforting. This Association we learn is the oldest Primitive body of its kind in the United States.

From this meeting Elder A. Patterson and I traveled together filling appointments the next week. I was truly pleased with him as a companion in labor and travel, for he was well able to bear the greater part of the burden. We at the close of this week reached the session of the Contentnea Association. A large concourse of Baptists and friends here also assembled. Several Elders also that were at the Kehukee, being present. Seemingly to us, this was a sweeter meeting than at the Kehukee, though we greatly enjoyed them both. From thence Elder I. J. Taylor and I traveled filling meetings the next week; also was blessed part of this week with the company of Elders L. H. Hardy and J. E. Adams, who took part in the labors. Our dear brother I. J. Taylor furnished me with conveyance for the week.

We then came to the session of the White Oak Association. Here we met not so many Elders or hearers, but met again with our old Georgia companion, Elder A. W. Patterson who called this (White Oak) the Sea Association. This he did because it was near the ocean. I feel inclined to state that at this meeting we witnessed the best order we ever beheld for the size of the congregation, and seemingly to us the sweetness of this surpassed any meeting we were at on our tour.

From this meeting I started for home leaving some appointments still, but our dear brother J. E. Adams agreed to fill them for us. We were not well, but worse than that we had failed to get a hearing as we desired from home, and knowing the timidity of our loved ones at home, feared that all was not well, and yet she held somewhat in reserve; consequently reached home about the time I expected and found the family not very well, but better now.

We wish to submit our humble thanks to the God of all grace for his abundant mercy in sparing and enabling us to visit the dear brethren and sisters of North Carolina, we have so long desired to visit. We trust our visit was to the comfort of some of the saints at least, and more we trust it was for the glory of our God. True we seemed to really stagger and stumble under the sense of our imperfection. Some of the time, however, the dear saints seemed to spread the mantle of charity over this, and their kindness was more than we felt worthy to receive.

We thank the dear brethren, sisters and kind friends for the hospitable treatment generally received on the tour. I should note names in this perhaps, but for lack of having at hand some special ones, will forbid. Several we met with seemed to desire a home in the church of God. Oh how my poor soul still prays our God to increase their fortitude, enabling them to bid farewell to this sin-smitten world, and live in humble submission to the commandments of the dear Lamb of God. Several dear brethren seemed much concerned as to our expenses to N— asking if there was sufficient donation handed me to make expenses good, and for the relief of all concerned I will here say all was refunded and more. Thanks to all concerned.

Now may grace, mercy and peace be multiplied to all dear lovers of Jesus. Finally, dear brethren, farewell, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of peace and love will be with you in your deepest distress and sorest trials. The Lord is a stronghold in the day of trouble.

WHAT ARE THE LORD'S PEOPLE REDEEMED FROM?

It has been intimated by some that the people of God are redeemed from Satan. What right has he to them? He never bought them. Was any price paid to Satan for them by Jesus?

It is true they are by nature children of wrath, even as others, and by nature did the very things that the children of disobedience now do; and Satan had bound them and held them captive.

But what did Jesus redeem his people from? He redeemed them from all iniquity. He destroyed the devil who had the power of death, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

But to redeem them from Satan would be to pay him a price for them, and it would also admit that he had a rightful ownership to them, and that his rights must be respected.

But Jesus did not offer himself to Satan, but he offered himself to God without spot. It was an offering most holy, and made to justice and holiness.

The part that sin, Satan, and death perform in reference to God's people is a profoundly deep and mysterious one. No eye can pierce the mystery that veils the deep places of sin and death, nor can any mind comprehend the purpose of God in the administration of the affairs of this earth even; much less then could poor, blind man fathom the mysteries of sin, or the glories of redemption.

But we are taught in the precious word of God that by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin. So by one man, the man Christ Jesus, life and righteousness, grace and truth came. What a wonderful contrast there is between the two Adams, and yet one is the figure of the other.

In the transgression of Adam he fell into the condemnation of the devil, and fell under the reign of sin and death, and sin is the strength of the law. That is the law has no power where there is no sin.

God hates sin with a perfect hatred, and evil cannot dwell in his sight. Therefore a sinner cannot approach unto God.

But the law of holiness, or the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, is above the law of sin and death, and grace reigns above sin. The life of Christ is eternal and therefore could never be imperiled by sin and death. The love of God in Christ Jesus is stronger than death, and many waters cannot quench it. The promise of God in Christ Jesus could not be forfeited, nor fail of accomplishment because of sin. All that are given to Christ Jesus therefore shall come to him. He as their head, life, and surety is made sin for them.—For the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all—the all that are chosen in him before the world began, and to whom in Christ Jesus grace is given. Jesus is made a curse for his people, in order to remove the iniquity of that land, and to make an end of sin.

Man must be cleansed from his guilt; he must be righteous before God; he must be holy and without blame.—How can man be just with God, is a deep question asked in Job's day, and answered no where but in Jesus, but there it is fully answered and shown.

Man appears in his natural birth in Adam as a sinner, and without any righteousness at all; but in Christ Jesus he is a new creature. For when one is born of God, or found in Jesus, the second Adam, the quickening Spirit, he is without sin in Jesus. For Jesus is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

Who then shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? Christ died for them to put away sin, or was delivered for their offences, and rose again for their justification. God justifies them by imputing to them the righteousness of Jesus his dear Son. Jesus offered himself then to God, and not to satan, and redeemed his people from all iniquity. God is well pleased with the sacrifice of Jesus. But it is not pleasure to satan; but it is his destruction.—The obedience, death and resurrection of Jesus bruises the head of satan, and destroys him and his dominion as to the people of God.

The subjects of grace while under conviction are brought to see and feel the bitterness of sin and death. They know what a grievous thing sin is.—They know that it has no mercy, but is full of wrath, bitterness and death, woe and misery; and they know what it is to be polluted, and to feel that they are justly condemned to die, and they feel and know that God is holy, and that his righteous law approves their banishment. For in the eye and conscience of a convicted sinner God appears to be holy and righteous, and the avenger of sin. But when faith comes and receives the Lord Jesus as the end of the law then mercy and truth are met, and righteousness and peace kiss in the soul of the sinner; and love leads the glorious train and sweetly enters into the banqueting house of grace and glory.

How brightly and gloriously does the Lord then ride forth on the white horse of the gospel conquering and to conquer. How glorious is the law of God, and how wonderful are all his works, and how do the dark and corrupt works of satan flee away. Jesus appears as the chief among ten thousands and the one altogether lovely.—We then see that he loved us and gave himself for us, that he bore our sins in his own body that we being dead to sin might live unto God, by whose stripes ye were healed. You then can say that Jesus has done all things well.

As Jesus was once offered to bear the sins of many, the just judgment of God shall be manifest in the appearing of this same Jesus again without sin in the eternal salvation of all them that love his appearing; for God has promised him that he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

P. D. G.

ELDER P. G. LESTER, DEAR BROTHER:

Seeing a piece written by you in ZION'S LANDMARK of Oct. 1st, entitled "Thoughts upon Church Order," makes me ask you a question, viz.: If brother A. puts out a wrong report on brother B., and brother B. hears of the report and goes to brother A. and asks him about it, and he says yes, I told it, and brother B. says please give me your author, and he says brother C. told me; then brother B. goes to brother C. and

C. says he did not tell it (A. and C. are ordained ministers), and B. then writes to A. and tells him that brother C. says he did not tell him, and to please reconcile the matter, and he fails to do it, what must brother B. do? Please answer this question through the LANDMARK and oblige a brother in Christ, I hope.

Answer.

B. should go to A. in person alone and ask him to correct the report, or sustain it. As the burden of proof is upon A. he will have to establish the fact by two or three witnesses that C. did tell him. If he does this then it devolves upon C. to make good the report. If A. fails to prove that C. did tell him, then to all appearances he (A.) stands as the author of the report and should confess his fault. If he refuse to do so, then B. should take one or two others with him, and if A. still refuses to set himself right, then tell it to the church. But if A. proves that C. did tell him, then C. must sustain the report either to be true, or produce by proof his author, or stand as the guilty party, subject to the rule applied to A. as above.

In a case of this kind, should A. fail to prove that C. did tell him, the result might be, as to A's guilt, either real or apparent, from the fact C. may have told him, but before he could accomplish his design was overtaken, and to save himself he denies telling A. such a thing, and thereby makes A. responsible for the report. While A. will have, in the absence of necessary proof, to suffer, yet the general features in the case, and the character of the two men as to firmness and strictness of mind and veracity might give A. the benefit of the doubt.

It is not a good idea for one to tell every thing he hears, especially if it is calculated to stir up strife and contention. The truth untold has better results sometimes than when told.

When one is reviled, persecuted, and evil spoken of, falsely, it is better, I have found, to endure it patiently than to endeavor to trace it up to punish the guilty party. Hunting up false reporters is generally a very unprofitable business. One enemy can sow more tares than many friends can gather up.

In all matters of difficulty it should be remembered that we are in the flesh, and we should endeavor to bear each other's burdens, and endure hardness as good soldiers for Christ. If all wrongs are fully avenged here as I might demand I would have nothing of hardness to endure in that respect.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

The committee appointed by the Mayo Association met at Riding's church, Tuesday, Nov. 15th, composed of Wm. Spough, C. T. Snider, I. P. Robins and N. P. Holleman.

The committee invited visiting brethren to act with them. Elders J. M. Harris, Calvin Blackburn and brother Thos. Ring, of Saints' Delight church, complied with their request. Then elected Elder J. M. Harris Moderator, and brother Thos. Ring, Clerk. Inquiry was then made for the members belonging to Riding's church. Sister Sarah Ketner said she was the only member, but preferred opening the door of the church for the reception of members to the taking of a letter, and said her name had been taken to Graham church, but, learning that Graham church was not in fellowship with the Association, she desired to remain where she was, and her request was granted. Then the door of the church was opened. Sister Zigler came forward and stated that she was a member of Graham's church, but she was not satisfied. She desired to be in fellowship with the Baptists, and was received by relationship into Riding's church. Then received four others by experience and baptism.

We find them with a very good log house, but no deed to the land. They appointed Saturday before the 3rd Sunday for their monthly meetings, and request the ministering brethren who are in order and fellowship with their Association to preach for them as often as they can. They can send appointments to Thos. Ring, Winston, N. C.

We find the people desire the church to be kept up and are willing to lend a helping hand.

Done by the order of the committee.

J. M. HARRIS, Moderator,
THOS. RING, Clerk.

BELOVED ELDER GOLD:

I wish to say through the LANDMARK that I was blessed to return home from your state and find my family all well. My trip was both pleasant and comforting to me. I feel a kind and grateful remembrance of the fervency, general hospitalities, and brotherly kindness I received while in your midst. In deep solicitude and much christian love, I am,

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Elder Joseph E. Adams has changed his place of residence. Hereafter his post office address is Barclaysville, Harriet county, N. C.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive: and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.—Psalms xli. 1, 2.

Obituary.

JAMES HENRY WIGGS.

There are three important periods in the life of man, birth, marriage, death. It is upon these periods connected with the subject of this sketch, that I wish to write.

James Henry Wiggs, son of William Wiggs and Martha, who was a Timberlake before her marriage, was born on the 22nd of June, 1838, in Wake county N. C. In 1861, after he had grown to manhood, he was thrown from a buggy by a horse that was running away. He fell on a pile of rocks and sustained serious injury. It was for two months he was unable to walk, and for twelve months he could not walk without a stick. Going out to the farm to plow he could be seen hobbling on a stick till he got hold of the plow handles. He would then lay his stick aside till he was ready to go to the house. After he had recovered from his injuries so as to be able to walk without a stick he was still a sufferer, and continued to be a sufferer as long as he lived.

On Dec. 5th, 1866, Mr. Wiggs was married to Miss Lucy T. C. Powell, daughter of the late Wiley Powell and Ailcy who was a Miss Peebles before she was married. When Miss Powell became Mrs. Wiggs both Mr. and Mrs. Wiggs entered into a state of enjoyment not often, if ever, excelled by that entered into by any couple. Through health and sickness, through adversity and prosperity, they remained true to each other. If one suffered the other suffered, if one rejoiced the other rejoiced. Two hearts beating in one unison, troubles were not so heavy and joys were brighter.

About fourteen years ago Mr. Wiggs made a profession of faith in Christ, but never offered himself to the church till the first Sunday in September 1886. On that beautiful morning, at the water's edge, Mr. Wiggs and his beloved wife Lucy offered themselves as candidates for baptism. They were received and were baptized into the fellowship of Cedar Grove Primitive Baptist church by Elder J. C. Hudgins. In the way of parenthesis I will relate here that on the evening after Mr. Wiggs was baptized I met him at his home, his face all radiant with smiles. I asked him how he felt. He said "Mrs. Simpson, I feel that I have this day performed a duty that has long borne upon my mind to perform." I shall never forget how he looked while he was speaking these words. Although not a Primitive Baptist myself, I believe I could see christianity in his countenance. The wonder was, how could any one look in his face and doubt the certainty of religion.

Soon after it was known that the Little River Association had been appointed to be held with the Church at Cedar Grove, in Sept. 1887, Mr Wiggs began to plan, hoping that when his plans were executed he should be better prepared to extend a liberal hospitality to the messengers and visitors to the Association. But "Man proposes, and God disposes." Just before the meeting of the Association, he was stricken with bilious fever which, developing into typhoid, rendered the entertaining of company, during the sitting of the Association, a chance against his recovery. The family were grieved to know that after having made preparation to entertain company they could not do so: but they were willing to make almost any sacrifice for the benefit of one they so much loved.

The Association closed—messengers and visitors all went home—Mr. Wiggs grew worse; symptoms of Pneumonia appeared, and the Doctor said he was suffering from both Pneumonia and Typhoid. Both diseases were too much for a constitution so weak. On Oct. 11th, he grew suddenly worse. It was known that the end was near. Gradually he became weaker, and I believe his hope of heaven grew brighter. I think he believed his days on earth were nearly spent and the dawning of a perpetual day near at hand. The darkest and the brightest hours of his life were about to come—the hour when the shadows of death should gather about him and the hour when the Son of Righteousness should dispel the mists and lift his soul into realms of endless joy. He said he loved Jesus, and on being asked if he loved every body he said; "yes, but not everybody alike." His pulse now became hardly perceptible; his breathing was more difficult. At half past nine in the evening his spirit took its flight to the God who gave it. His dear wife Lucy, and Mary and Kate his only children sustain an irreparable loss in the death of an affectionate husband and a kind and loving father. But the consolation is, that their loss is his eternal gain. But weep not. Tho' one of your tenderest ties is severed; tho' the community has lost one of its best citizens and the church one of its faithful members, you are consoled in believing that a husband, a father, a citizen and a member of the church is not lost, but gone before.

A. FRIEND.

WILLIAM R. JOHNSON.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—By request I send you for publication the obituary of brother William R. Johnson, who departed this life June 28th, 1887. He was born Jan. 1815, and was always a very quiet and moral boy, and one of whom every one spoke well, and he remained so to the close of his pilgrimage on earth. He was married to Maniza Powell, in Oct. 1848, by whom he had 12 children, six boys, and six girls, two of each yet survive. The Lord brought him to see that he was a great sinner, which gave him much trouble and grief of heart, until he poured therein the oil and unction of his grace, and caused him to hope in his blessed Savior. He remained out of the church then for 14 years, when he came to the Church at Spring Green and was received and baptized by Elder C. B. Hassell, on the fourth Sunday in July, 1873. I have known him almost ever since and he has been one to make manifest his love for God, the church and the truth by ever filling his seat at meeting, if not providentially hindered. Whenever I was at Spring Green, and he was not there, I knew that there was something the matter. He was a man who was firm and well established in doctrine, and loved to hear the truth as it is in Christ proclaimed, and adorned that doctrine by a lovely and pleasant life toward his brethren. He has been afflicted with rheumatism for the last ten years, and suffered much, though getting about most of the time, until he was stricken with paralysis, which occurred on the third Saturday night in June, and never spoke but two words, and lay in that condition only to grow worse, until he quietly fell asleep, we believe, to awake in the righteousness of Christ in a better life. The neighbors and friends did all they could for him, for which the family feel grateful to them. May the good and gracious Lord remember the bereaved family and comfort them, and give them reconciliation to his will. I tried to speak to the people on the occasion of his death from these words, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of men most miserable," and also tried to show the important value and strength of the christian hope. Yours to serve.

M. T. LAWRENCE.

MARK B. MOORE

ELDER P. D. GOLD; By request I send you for publication the obituary notice of Mark B. Moore, the son of Moses and Esther Moore, who was born in this world of sin and sorrow, in Nash County, Sept. 25th, 1861, and passed from earth to a blissful abode of perfect and everlasting peace and happiness March 8th, 1887, leaving besides his grief-stricken parents and three brothers, a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

Mark was a young man of many sterling qualities of mind and character. Upright and honorable in all his dealings with his fellowman, truthful and honest in character, he possessed many friends. While at school, from his earliest school-days, he was the favorite of all his teachers. His mind was of a brighter intellectual mould than ordinary, which, with his close application to his studies, his strict obedience to all school duties, and honorable conduct, gained for him the highest regard and respect from his teachers. His strictly honest principles, noble traits of mind, and amiable disposition, gained the love and respect and esteem of all his school fellows, which did not end with school life, but ripened into a true friendship as the fleeting years sped by.

He was dutiful and obedient to his parents, a great comfort to them in their declining years, especially to his feeble mother. He was an affectionate and friendly person, thereby gaining the good-will of all.

He attained manhood with every prospect of a bright and useful career upon life's sphere of action. Alas; it was soon discovered that that fell destroyer, consumption, had marked him for its prey. Though every remedy that could be suggested or procured through medical aid was applied, yet all was powerless to arrest the rapid progress of the fatal disease. Then he drooped though without murmur or complaint, even in his extreme agonies of pain, striving with his waning strength to conceal his real condition from his parents knowing the grief it would cause them.

Mark was confined to his bed a little over five weeks previous to his departure. And it was during this period of extreme suffering that it pleased the Lord to visit him in mercy and prove that his afflictions, though severe, were in mercy sent, to work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. He told his parents that his sins had been pardoned and he was prepared to die, though he hated to leave them, because they would miss him so much, yet he would be better off. He was sure he would meet them in heaven. He expressed a desire to see all his friends, and said he loved everybody, and if he had an enemy in the world he wished to see him and ask forgiveness, expressing a fear that he should die and leave some one possessing an ill-will towards him. He exhorted his friends and relatives to a better life for he wished to meet them in heaven.

It was the privilege of the unworthy writer of this, to be much with him during the last weeks of his illness. I can truthfully say that I never saw so much suffering borne with such meekness, patience and consideration for the comfort of those around him. He often remarked that he had more attention paid him and better nursing than he deserved, it was so hard that he gave his friends so much trouble and could not do one thing in return, but pray to the Lord.

A. FRIEND.

BETTIE BARNES.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

By request of the parents, I forward to you for publication a notice of the death of little Bettie Barnes, daughter of brother Jesse and sister Eliza Barnes, members of Matrimony church, Rockingham county, N. C.

Little Bettie was born July 28th,

1883, and died July the 10th, 1887, making her short stay on earth four years, lacking 18 days.

She was taken sick about the 2nd day of July. Every thing that kind friends and medical aid could do for her was brought to bear, but she continued to grow worse until death did its work. She was very patient during her sickness. When asked if she wanted any thing she would say, nothing.— She was a bright, intelligent and promising child, kind and obedient to her parents, lovely and gentle to all her playmates. She was like a tender flower plucked from the bunch that withered away before the summer came. She asked her mother to put her little sister on the bed that she might kiss her. I thought she was the most lovely corpse that I ever saw.— A thought struck me on looking at her lovely face, that the good Lord so loved her that he was not willing that earth should hold her any longer, therefore he thought it best to take her to himself.

The blow was very severe to the bereaved parents. I hope the good Lord will give them strength and enable them to look through falling tears and say, "O Lord, thy will be done." May they be enabled to lean upon the arm of Jesus in this and every trial, feeling that the Lord doeth all things well.

The writer of this tried to speak a few words of comfort to the parents and sorrowing friends, using the words of Jesus when he said: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Little Bettie has gone to rest,
To reign with God forever blest.
Her little tongue will always praise
Her Savior for redeeming grace.

Could we but hear her happy tongue,
So sweetly sing the heavenly song,
Could we but see her smiling face,
Delighted with the happy place,

We could not wish her back again,
But say, dear child, with God remain.
We hope to gain that peaceful shore,
Where those who meet shall part no more.

F. J. STONE.

Elder Wm. H. McKinney, of McDowell county, N. C., was born in the year 1798, united with the Baptists in 1813, when there were but one kind, long before the division in that section. He was married in 1817, and died the 3rd of July 1887, in his ninetieth year. His widow survives him and she is also in her ninetieth year.

When I was a lad I heard a discussion between him and the temperance lecturer Phillip S. White, who ridiculed the old brother for his antiquated notions, as he called them. Yet the old Elder remained a temperate man till his death, while White long ago died a drunkard.

I have known the old brother since I was a boy, and he was a remarkable man in his unswerving, unyielding devotion to what he believed was right. He was a Baptist almost eighty years.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE.

COMMUNICATED.

BEING BORN AGAIN.

I now take my pen in hand to tell the readers of ZION'S LANDMARK that I have been a reader of the same for quite a number of years, and that I am now and have been for many years settled in my religious belief in what has been published in that paper from the Editors and correspondents, believing it to be bible doctrine.

I will now try to give you some of my belief of what it is to be born again. Christ said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3. Then a man must be born the second birth before he can see the kingdom of God. I will speak of them in their order; for that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.—Then as there are two births that a man must experience before he can see the kingdom of God, so there are two lives for him to live, one natural and the other spiritual. And there is but one way that he can live in either of them, and that is to be begotten and born in them. All the natural family of man were created in Adam, but not one of them could see in the light of this natural world, or have any experience in it before he is born in the life of his father and mother. And it is evident that the child did not have any will in his birth, but the will to be born was in the father and mother. Then the child being born in the life of the father and mother, he then partakes of their nature, and that gives him love for them, and a will to seek and obtain the blessings of the life that he is born in. Then his natural birth fits him for all his natural experience and no more; for the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.—1 Cor. 2: 14. Now as this natural birth is a figure of the spiritual birth, Christ said except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Then all the ways that men have invented for a man to see the kingdom of God, without being begotten and born in the life of God, never have nor ever will accomplish it.

Now if I should say that man in his natural birth had that in him that did teach him the way to see the kingdom of God, and by adhering to that, and following on in that way he could see the kingdom of God, it would in substance be saying, you need not be born again in order to see the kingdom of God; for you have that in you by your natural birth, if cultivated, to see the kingdom of God. Again, if I should say that man with only his natural birth could seek and live in God's life, and obtain it in that way, there would not be the shadow of a birth in that.—Then if man could obtain God's life by cultivating that which he had in him by his natural birth, or by seeking, he could then live in it without being begotten or born in it, and in that way would live in it without father or mother, and in that life he would be self-existent. But such a thing cannot be; for there cannot be a child without a father and mother, and there cannot be father and mother without a child. Then as the children of God are begotten and born of God, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God (John 1: 13), they then partake of the nature of God so that they love him because he is their Father.. They also love all of the begotten and born children of God, so that this second birth fits them for all their experience in the kingdom of God, and to live in love eternally in that life with God and all of his children.—The heaven-born children of God are the ones that are commanded or called upon to repent and be baptized: for the promise is to them and to their children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Again, if ye love me keep my commandments. But not one command in the bible to be born again.

I will now say that I am now in my seventy-fifth year, and have had a hope in Christ about fifty-six years, and have been trying to preach the gospel about forty-four years, and have been pastor of the Old School Baptist church here in North Berwick, Me., about thirty-eight years, and have baptized about one hundred and twenty-five, and have preached at five hundred and sixty funerals, all of which reminds me that my work is almost done, and that I shall soon go the way that I shall not return.

Since writing the above I have read brother Lester's remarks on infant salvation, and he has expressed my belief in full; for if God has purposed to fit all that he takes from this world in their infancy for heaven, which I believe he has, that is election to all intents and purposes. Also your remarks about some of the brethren differing about the predestination of all things. It brought to my mind the conversation that I had with a preacher some years ago. He wanted me to say whether I believed that all things were predestinated or not. I told him that I believed that God foreknew all things, and he said that he did. I then said that I believed that all things were certain to take place just as God knew they would, and he said yes to that.—I then asked him if predestination could make it any more certain. He then said he had admitted too much; for he doubted about God foreknowing all things.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I have had a desire to write for the LANDMARK for sometime, but have procrastinated. I was born April the 11th 1854. In my sixteenth year I saw a northern light which caused my first troubles. I thought the end of time had come, and I must be lost, for I had no hope. One day after this all went off and left me alone at home.—That was indeed a gloomy day to me. I prayed and begged the Lord to cause it to cloud up that day, for I thought that if I saw another light that day it would be the end of time. I went with my head bowed down afraid I would see something of that kind.

Shortly after this I dreamed that I saw the sun or moon one on the ground. It started to rise to go to its element. I started to follow it, but did not go far until I came back. Then I dreamed of flying. I thought I told them I had started to fly once before, but this time I had started to fly to heaven, and as I went I sang:

"Amazing grace how sweet the sound
To save a wretch like me;
I once was lost but now am found
Was blind, but now I see."

Then the thought came to me, none can go to heaven who have no hope. I had no hope, therefore, my trouble was increased. I went praying and begging the Lord for mercy. When I would go to preaching all the preaching seemed to be to me, I was such a sinner. After I was married all the preaching I heard seemed to condemn me. I would go to the field to pick beans, but be afraid something would come and take me off. I was afraid to go off from the house to pray, and therefore, while I was alone at the house, I would lie down on the floor and beg for mercy.

I went to Laurel Fork to hear preaching, thinking I would not let any one know how bad I felt. Elder R. M. Mabry preached that day. The first word he spoke condemned me, and I would not have felt any worse had he called me by name and told me what a miserable sinner I was.

I heard that my brother's wife was going to join the church. I wanted to go and see her and hear her talk, hoping that it would relieve my feelings. I went to see her, but she did not talk any. So, instead of finding relief, my troubles were made worse than ever.—All I could do was to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor condemned sinner. I believed that I would soon die and that my soul would go to hell, a reward for my sins. These words were continually in my mind:

Afflictions, though they seem severe,

That night, while asleep, if indeed I was asleep, I saw a light which shined into the house. I was afraid to look to see what the light was, I was in such an awful condition. I thought when I saw the light that it was the end of time. Next morning when I got up all my troubles seemed to be gone, and everything looked different from what it had before. I commenced fixing to wash that morning, and instead of going grieving and mourning, as I had gone before, I went singing and rejoicing. My brother's wife came that day and told me her experience. It was the first time I heard her. I did not tell her much, I was afraid to take what I had seen and felt for a hope. I went on in doubts and fears for four or five years, when I dreamed I was in my father's house with mother and one of my brothers. I thought we had started to go where my brother Caleb was, who was then dead, and I told them I was going across the hill, and they said they would go around the bottom.—The path I traveled, around the hill side, was a very narrow path, and was as white as snow. My feet mired in it like clay. I did not go far until I came to some beautiful timber. I heard a noise and looked and saw Caleb, my brother that had died sometime before. He was among the most beautiful timber I ever saw. I thought he looked around and smiled, and asked me what I was coming there for? I am coming to see you, I said, for I have not seen you in a long time. I thought he was clothed with a beautiful robe which reached from his head to his feet. The robe had the prettiest edging around it I ever saw. When he started to leave me he went up, looking like an angel. He went off smiling.

This seemed to satisfy me very much. I staid out of the church as long as I could. Fourth Saturday in January 1886, I went to Laurel Fork church and gave a reason of my hope and was received for baptism. I was baptized the fourth Sunday in Feb. 1886, by Elder Allen Thomas. About two weeks after I joined the church, I dreamed that I was at a neighbor's house and had started home. I asked my daughter who was with me, if she would go home by herself and let me go to preaching. I started on my way to preaching travelling a turn pike road; it became a road I had never seen, and I was walking along a beautiful level place.—There I saw a beautiful stream of water which ran by the road side. Here I thought I was lost. I then started up the steepest place I ever saw, but I went up it with the greatest of ease. I found some beautiful stones which were three by two inches square, with the corners rounded. I thought they were very beautiful; but I cannot describe their color.

I thought I would take some of them with me to show to the people where I was going, I thought they would not believe me when I told them where I had been, unless I showed them what I had found by the way. This road was so strange, I thought no one had ever travelled it before. I thought if I could hear a call I would think some one had gone on before me, I heard the call.—Then I came to the place I was climbing to. There was a large crowd of people there, and I asked them what kind of people was there, they said, they were called the meanest people in the world, all except one whom I thought to be the Saviour. I told them to bring to me the meanest one for I thought that one would be the greatest. Here they are now, said they; they gave me something, as they gave all who came there, they placed it in my right hand and it came all to pieces and bloomed out, it looked like gold.

Then they began to arrange for all the people who were there to eat. That which they were fixing for them to eat was in square pieces. It looked like gold. I told them they need not fix anything for us, as there was such a large crowd. They said they could not fix enough for those who enjoyed it as well as we all did. I saw my husband and many others whom I knew there. Then I saw Elder Allen Thomas talking to my father, (my father had been dead for sometime) I thought my father said he did not enjoy one child any more than another; but where I was he enjoyed me the most. I thought it was because I had joined the church. He said he had been to meeting a few days before and had enjoyed the preaching. Then I thought there was a person to be baptized. Then we started out and we were coming out of a building, the steps glistened like ice, and rounded off. The earth, as far as I could see, was as white as snow; and the path we traveled in was so beautiful and smoothe it fairly glistened.— Then I saw brother Allen Thomas and the person that was to be baptized standing in the water to be baptized.

Somebody spoke and said to me, are they not the most rejoiced of any people you have ever seen where we have been. I thought the person who thus spoke was Wm. J. Marshall. He was behind, and Elizabeth Cox just in front of me going on in the same path. Brother Thomas said to Elizabeth Cox, you must bring me that pin. It was square and of the color of silver. The edges of the pin were rounded. I thought she was sickly and could not carry it, though she carried it beyond him and turned around and gave it to him and laughed. The water did not wet her shoes nor dressing. Then I thought their dressing turned white.

Then we were all on the bank. He said there is something you must take. He told some young people they could not take it; but I could, and when I had taken it, he said, there is something you must say. I said I'll be like this person, I'll be baptized in a few days. A little distance off I saw the awful place the wicked were getting into and some one spoke and said there was no danger of us getting into that place for we have been where they have not. Here I awoke rejoicing.

Your sister in hope,

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, BELOVED IN THE LORD:—I have thought for sometime I would write to you, but a deep felt sense of unworthiness and my utter darkness has caused me to desist.

I have been (I believe) in a school which has taught me more than all the schools in the world could teach. I feel that I have been in the very belly of hell of late, and of all the darkness it seems that mine has been the greatest of late. I began to conclude last winter that I was going to have enjoyment all the time, but I have been brought to see that I am poor, worthless, and dependent and can do nothing unless guided by the unerring Spirit of God. I am a poor vessel and I am dependent every time to be filled, yea we learn by experience that man may devise his way, but the Lord must direct his steps. The first liberty I had, I was brought to see that I was a poor atom in the air and could not move myself. I could only turn as I was turned.

The greater the conflict we have the more established we are in the firm decrees of God. What a blessed thought that we are not our own keeper! We are kept by the power of God. God does not take us in on six months probation, and if we hold out faithful, we are an heir of God and joint heir with Christ, but if we fail God is not our father and hence we will not be an heir to that eternal inheritance.

Does the son have to perform a certain amount of deeds in order to be born and have a father and become an inheritor of the father's estate? Such is absurd! The child has no part to perform in bringing about his birth, he is passive in the matter. If one of your sons is obedient and another disobedient will the disobedient one cease to be your son? by no means. God loved his people with an everlasting love therefore with loving kindness he draws them. God loves them though they are dead in sin and totally depraved, if they were in hell God would love them there, and his mercy, grace, and love is sufficient to bring them to him at his own time. Our salvation is already complete, yes the salvation of the people of God is already wrought out but God makes that salvation manifest to his people at his own time. I feel that he has brought many to a knowledge of the truth in this country: they are coming from the tents of wickedness (babylon) and from every direction and telling of the wonderful dealings of God with them. I have had the pleasure of baptizing 65 of the dear saints in the last 13 months.

I am now trying in my weakness to serve five churches which keeps me busy. I often think of you dear brethren and sisters in Va., W. Va., and N. C. I do want to see you again so much. I hope that my life may be spared to visit you again, but I cannot tell now. I am quite feeble all the time and feel that my stay here is short. I am troubled with the dyspepsia, heart trouble, kidneys and lungs badly affected. My lower limbs are almost paralyzed, cold nearly all the time. But that is all right. I want to be resigned to the will of the Lord in all things feeling that all things will work for my good if I am a child of God.

I feel that I have learned, "while in the world ye shall have tribulation."—The Lord has been good to me in giving me a hope in him and blessing me with a devoted Primitive Baptist companion who is always ready to help me on my way.

Bless the Lord O my soul for his goodness and loving kindness towards me. Remember me and mine at a throne of grace.

Brother Lester, we look for you to visit us this winter, come to Ozark by Christmas, I hope Elder Taylor will be with us then.

Yours affectionately,

LEE HANKS.

Ozark, Dale Co., Ala., Oct. 7th, 1887.

TIMELY AND WISE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

It has been quite a long time since I have written any thing to you, and now if I should write to you, or make a visit to to the brethren of your country, it would not be because I had no longer any place in these parts, but rather because I desired to hear of your affairs and impart unto you some spiritual gift.

A paper of the character of the LAND-MARK, designed for general circulation among all the brethren throughout the country, will quite naturally and almost necessarily be drawn out into a great variety of subjects. There is evidently a needs be for this. There are hundreds of people to whom your little messenger comes that have no preaching within reach, and no brethren near, with whom companionship and fellowship can be enjoyed. It finds many afflicted in body or subject to trials and afflictions in their worldly circumstances, while many are inquiring the way, with no one to instruct them.—Many are harrassed with temptations from the adversary, and opposed and persecuted by relatives and professed friends. Above all are the errors, delusions and false systems of the times.—The old landmarks should be faithfully pointed out, and the way of truth so clearly set forth that those who read might run.

Correspondents from different quarters have in a measure the same to encounter, and a taste of the same experience as the readers, so that their communications will very naturally adapt themselves to the various needs of those for whose sake they write. I speak now only in reference to a single paper. But when we come to contemplate a number of papers, all devoted to the same object, viz., the instruction and edification of the saints, and these located in different sections, remote from each other, and their surroundings differing widely so as to afford them every advantage of a thorough knowledge of the condition and needs of the people whom they aim to serve, we might very reasonably expect that the ground would all be occupied, and nothing that would tend to profit and comfort would be neglected or left unsaid.

I find by comparing different communications that the Baptists of different sections differ on some points of church order and church discipline, and that there is more diversity in these matters than on doctrinal sentiment.—There can be but one right way in church matters, and it should be our aim to find that one way, and then endeavor to secure harmony throughout our borders.

I do not propose now to name or deal with the points wherein the practice of the church has widely diverged. Perhaps most of the churches have each maintained their own peculiar methods from their organization. Long established customs become fixed in our minds and affections, and they are not readily abandoned. Still, if honest inquiry for gospel rule prevailed for a time among us, greater harmony and uniformity in our practice might be expected to result. While I do not pretend to question the design for good of all the papers that have been started among us, I may question whether all needful good has yet been accomplished. Considerable diversity of doctrinal sentiment must have prevailed years ago, and the circulation of the papers has brought it out to the light, but it will be confessed that entire uniformity on all points of doctrinal sentiment has not yet been reached. What people perfectly understand they are quite apt to agree about, and if this is so, much of the disagreement that exists is in regard to subjects imperfectly understood or else there has been a failure so far to fully and satisfactorily expound them.

Unless more could be accomplished in the way of producing harmony on many points of doctrine it would seem to be better to devote a larger share of attention to the fruits, as things that most of the readers would understand, and all of them might be profited. In this respect I have thought that the generality of the preaching that we have among us was much less devoted to discussion of sentiment, and more to experience and the fruits of the Spirit than the communications that we get through the papers. Religious papers open a door and opportunity for debates and disputations. If, when used for this purpose, there was always a desire to be enlightened good might result. If, however, our aim is to establish our own position, and maintain even the phraseology with which we have advocated it, division and estrangement will be the result.

We might suppose that general harmony, uniform order and fellowship in the Spirit and in the truth is the grand object and aim in all our papers. Why not suppose then that the same general objects would be sought and labored for by all the writers? There are sheep and lambs scattered about to be gathered into the fold, and there is also much to be done for the health and comfort of those already gathered in. Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there?

Yours in the gospel,

E. RITTENHOUSE.

State Road, Del.

TARRYING AT HOME.

DEAR ELDER GOLD:—

As I wish to send in my subscription money I feel like saying a little to you. Not having had an opportunity to hear much preaching since our Association,

I begin to get very hungry; for of all things in this life I do enjoy the company and fellowship of the brethren the most. How a people can enjoy each other's society when they cannot fellowship them I do not know; but we are held up to ridicule because we show that love and fellowship to each other. Why they come to my house and tell me we are a selfish, bigoted people, and that we ought to be more liberal. I just do not believe they know what liberality is. I have to take some hard speeches, and they say I get angry.— Now I can't say it pleases me very much to hear some things said that are said, but if I get angry my conscience does not accuse me. I am sure I do not begin with them, and I do not abuse them as some of them do us. I know as the matter stands we cannot agree.

I cannot go to the meeting at Malmaison this year to hear you all preach, but I hope the Lord will give me a feast at home. Neither can I go to Cane Creek to hear brother Greenwood, but pray that I may yet see him and hear him preach; for I have longed to see him for many days. I can't talk or write to my satisfaction, and brother Greenwood seems to be so gifted, that with great longing have I desired to see and hear him. But God's will be done.

Brother Gold, perhaps you will think me more simple than ever. I am very weak and somewhat nervous, not being well at all.

May God always bless you and yours.

EMMA HUDSON.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

For the first time, by the request of the brethren, I undertook to write a short sketch of my hope of a blessed state after death.

When about the thirty-fifth year of my age I became alarmed from a fear of death and a final judgment which aroused my poor and helpless soul.— This caused my poor alarmed soul to weep and to vent forth cries to God for mercy. In this sad state I betook myself to trying to pray. I could say nothing only to beg God to have mercy on me a poor lost and undone sinner.

Dear brethren, so heavy was the burden and guilt of my sins that weighed upon my feeble head and guilty soul that for several days I never cast my eyes toward heaven, though I knew it was God's throne. In this sad condition one day I traveled along a canal, and the birds were making melody with their notes. It seemed to me that everything was praising God but me.— Could I have changed stations with the beasts or something that had no soul I would have made the exchange. In this extremity of soul I went on from day to day, and would smite upon my breast and beg God to be merciful to me a poor undone sinner. I would travel the dark road for miles and beg God for mercy. I could take no rest day nor night. I remember going home one Saturday night to see my family. I was at work about ten miles from home, and took leave of them on Sunday morning for the last time, as I thought. I started on my way, and spent that day in mourning over my awful condition. I would travel awhile until my grief would become so great that I would lay down on the side of the road and vent forth my fruitless cries to God for mercy. In this mournful state I spent that day until late in the evening. As I was traveling I believe God sent those blessed words which brought peace to my poor, troubled soul, expressing these words: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, for they shall rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Here I felt that I was a new creature, that the Lord had made me so. Under this frame of joy I went on for about a month, thinking that all my troubles were gone, and peace and pleasure would be my lot the remainder of my days. But oh my dear brethren, when first the tempter met me he tried to persuade me that I was deceived. After a short meditation I was made to say my Savior has done all things well, and so continued on. Sometimes my evidence and hope of a pardon seemed to grow brighter, and then I would be left to travel in the dark for some days. But I kept on about the space of three years, thinking that I never would offer myself to the church, until at length one night I lay down upon a pallet to rest myself. There appeared unto me a small image about the size of an infant, the fairest object that I ever saw, and spoke these words in so sharp and shrill a voice that caused my ears to ring with the voice. It said, "The Shepherd has conquered the stranger."—From that time I could not rest until I went and offered myself to the church, which I did, and was cordially received and baptized a member of the church at Concord, Washington county, N. C., near Scopppernong river. I remain in the same until this present day. I am about seventy-seven years of age.

We had no minister, and I would sometimes try to pray in the church, and though weak my effort I thought to be; until at length one night I had a dream, and thought I was conveyed to a large building, where I saw a line of happy souls, all of the same dress, and of the same height, and I sat down in a low place where a lamp was brought upon a stand, and set at my knees. I looked through the light and saw one like the rest of the sons of men, but his garments far excelled the light—the fairests of all the fair. At this I awoke under such impressions of heart that I could not rest day nor night, so impressed that I could not sleep but little, until at length one Saturday evening I was on the road driving. I sat on the cart trying to pray to God for relief when it seemed that the world to my view broke into an open light, so that the forest seemed to outshine all brightness I ever saw, and, while I sat and looked upon the wonder, my eyes were turned away into a shade about the size of a large table, with a book opened in the middle. When my eyes fell upon that, it seemed that it was unfolded to my view. Here I commenced preaching to the trees, and every word gave ease to my breast. After this I was liberated by the church and continued trying to speak in public for some time, until at length I heard an old servant of God preach, and his gift so far excelled the weakness of such a poor creature as I felt myself to be, that I fell back determined never to try again to preach. No sooner had I this done, I was shrouded in darkness for the space of three months. I would leave the house every night and resort to the field to try to pray to God to remove this darkness and reveal the light that I once enjoyed, until at length one night I was on my poor bended knees, when I saw a light break forth in the sky, about the size of the moon when on her quarter. It rolled down before my face and went off in streams of light, and I beheld it so far as my sight would extend. I stood on my trembling knees begging God to unfold the mystery. I rose up and went in and lay down, but could not sleep I was so alarmed. The night after, I traveled along a pasture fence, and fell upon my knees, and my eyes were directed to the same place where I saw the same wonder in greater light than before. "O Lord," I said, "what doth this mean?" I returned to the house and lay down and slept soundly all night, and awoke repeating these words: "The sun shall no more go down, the moon shall not withdraw its light, but the Lord shall be thy everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Here the light of the gospel shone clear, and the sun shone brighter and more lovely than before.

Here I will lay my pen aside and cease to write, and leave the matter to your consideration. What I have written I am ready to testify to before any council on earth. If you think this worth a place in your paper you may insert it; if not, lay it aside.

I assign myself as ever yours in the bonds of love.

Remarks.

We could wish our dear aged brother had written much more. How precious these old brethren are that have borne the heat and burden of the day, and who shine so sweetly in the end of their days. When one with such an experience as brother Biggs comes up as a witness there is no uncertain sound, no sound of ax, hammer, nor any other tool or work of man.

EXCUSES, OR STONES.

"And they said among themselves, who shall roll us away the stone?"

Doubtless you all know these were the words of those blessed women—May Magdalene and others—that loved, followed and ministered to Jesus while in the flesh, and that had so lovingly and truthfully bewailed him in death, and that had waited and watched where and how they laid his dead body in burial; and then returning home, had prepared sweet spices to anoint his body.

And now, just so soon as the sabbath was gone, and they might do any work, even as the first day of the week began to dawn, they started out with their precious ointment to find his body.—And, although they had seen his dear body lain in the sepulchre hewn out of a rock, and a very great stone rolled against the entrance, and this sealed with the king's seal, which to break without leave was death, and a watch, a guard of men, placed to protect all from any interference, not once did they seem to falter, or linger, or doubt the fulfillment of their devotional work. And more remarkable still, not once did they question, "will the stone be rolled away for us?" but "who will roll us away the stone?" Ah what a faith! what beautiful, heavenly faith! Just think what difficulties were in their way! what, humanly speaking, immovable impediments were between them and that loved body. How they had loved Jesus. Was it their love or their faith that started them out at the first dawn of day so strong and exultant and so well assured of success as to wonder only who should roll the stone away, when such great and dangerous obstacles lay in their way? One only equalled the other. And one must go with the other, as that "faith works by love," and these are proportioned to the sense or amount of sins forgiven. So a Mary Magdalene, the once so great sinner, has a faith helped by love that overcomes the combined power and authority of Pontius Pilate; yes, overcomes the world.

Blessed women! bowed and burdened with deep mourning grief for their beloved Lord and Master crucified!—the savor of a sweet smell as of sweet burning incense, unseen ascending heavenward from the altar of their devotion, while the odor of their sweet spices trailed behind them as they went wondering "who should roll us away the stone."

Perhaps they had asked John^m or Peter or James to go with them; and they perhaps had reasoned about the propriety of such an errand under the circumstances, and had said "no, it is no use. Reason should teach you it will be in vain with that stone and seal and watch." But the law of faith was never understood by, or made to accord with, human reason. And so men, naturally, and in all things else necessarily, given to ratiocinate, falter and fail in spiritual obedience and devotion, when women are strong and advance far beyond. For love comes first, and love gives law to a woman.—And divine love adapts to the law of faith. Therefore let a woman love Christ and this passion becomes a law so fully adapting to the rule of faith that she will go out not knowing whither or understanding why, save that her beloved Lord said so, without a thought of reason or a question of propriety. It is enough that Jesus said do so and so. And when there is no special command, she acts from impulse born of love, and love is a law divine.

So these went forth with their sweet spices proving their love and faith by the great things virtually surmounted. These poor, frail unknown women representing a faith stronger than the Roman nation! Greater than Cæsar!—Representing a faith to which nothing was impossible. How strong? do you ask. Strong enough to act upon.—Thus it was strong enough to roll the stone away.

An lo! angels sat upon the stone as rolled away! Angels to meet and greet them instead of the three great immovable hindrances that reason said would.

And dear sisters that love would serve

Jesus, and the Lord will always send angels to roll away the stone for you. Remember there could be no greater or apparently more immovable or dangerous obstacle in the way than these three combined. They represented the power and strength of the nation.—And yet how many sisters and brethren let little stones, even little excuses, keep them from seeing the body of Jesus. You may think these women had more devotional faith and strength because Jesus did more for them than for you. Not so; but because they did more for Jesus than you do. Jesus has done just as much for you.

Doubtless many of you are impressed to do deeds of charity, and otherwise do your duty in the matter of giving, but there is the stone of covetousness in the way, sealed with the fear of future want, and your pride set as a watch to guard the whole. Yes, you know a dear afflicted sister in need of clothing that you would gladly visit and help—the dear Savior knows you would—were it not the duty of those living nearer, or of her rich kin folks.—But Jesus brought you the garment of salvation independent of those nearer or of your rich kin. You know of a bed-ridden brother whose family are in want that you would delight to visit and minister to were not the family so low down socially. But can you ever stoop so low in reaching any mortal as Jesus did to stoop to you? You know another afflicted and unfortunate brother whose little ones want bread, that you would cheerfully give, but that brother has had to acknowledge two or three times to wrong-doing, and you fear he is not quite right. Do you realize how many daily and heart-hid sins Jesus has to bear in you, and all, and still love you and give you bread from heaven? You would give to the preachers, and without grudging, the Father above knows, but one is too rich to need it, and another so poor it might puff him. Does the Lord withhold his mercies from you because so rich in the like you don't need them? or else so poor it might ruin you? Besides, the Lord commands you to give according to what you have, and not according to what they have or have not. You would give toward church expenses, but widows, and sisters whose husbands are not members, rarely give, and you don't propose to make up this lack. But Jesus made up your lack and paid all that he had for your redemption. Another sister would give to preachers and church, but thinks brethren should attend to such matters. But equals in receiving should be equals in giving. Another would give, but has so little, is so poor herself.—But Jesus counts your dime from a dollar, as much as my ten dollars from a hundred, or a hundred from a thousand, or a thousand from ten thousand.—Just think of it, your dime equal to a thousand dollars. And your obligation to give it is just as strong and binding as that of the richest brother to give in proportion to what he has. Oh these stones of covetousness and pride! Go out with sweet spices and let the angels roll them away.

Then there are many dear children of God dissatisfied as living among other denominations. I know several with the Missionary Baptists who want to come to the Primitive Baptists, and would but for some great stone in the way. These object to the mode and manner of missions and such institutions. To some the stone is the disapproval of husband or wife or children or friends, sealed with public opinion. To others, the stone is re-baptism, sealed with the idea of instability or a turncoat. To others—generally brethren—it is the low social and worldly status of Primitive Baptists, sealed by their lack of social and business power and position.

But oh! if these should come forth how many of these stones would be made to cry out in praises and would be made to greet you as angels of God instead of frowning stumbling-stones.—A man once said he would shoot the Primitive Baptist preacher that dared baptize his wife, at the same time forbidding her to join them. But her faith, strong enough to act upon, was strong enough to roll the stone away, and the day she was baptized God sent the arrow of conviction to the heart of her husband, and tears and trembling were instead of the shooting. So an angel moved and rested upon the stone meant to hinder her. Indeed the heart of stone was turned to a heart of flesh where God imprinted his law that day. And so he will roll away every stone in the way of obedience to Jesus Christ, or else make it for your good and his glory. The Lord commands his every child to arise and be baptized. And the true or gospel baptism can only be administered by the authority of the one church of Christ. To hold back and hesitate because some great stone is in the way barring the entrance is not only to forget how the great stone was rolled away for these poor, frail, unknown women, but also it is to deny Jesus. If you thus deny him before men, he will deny you before his Father's throne. And what will you do when, for instance, death hovers low over your darling, and all arms of flesh fail you, and in your utter helplessness and agony you irresistibly turn to Jesus in prayer and no answer. Jesus denies you because you have denied him. Will one half hour of such agony before the throne veiled prove preferable to the transient displeasure of friends or the world?

O sisters, go forth with your sweet spices, whether to observe the gospel ordinances, or to minister to the members of the body of Jesus, and angels shall serve you, whether to roll you away stones, or minister to you in the dark hour of sorrow and distress.

R. ANNA PHILLIPS.

THE ROCK HILL CHURCH.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

I take the liberty to write a letter in regard to receiving the members and the constitution of Rock Hill church, in the bounds of the Abbott's Creek Primitive Baptist Association, which I want you to publish in the LANDMARK, as there appears to be a misunderstanding with some of the brethren in regard to receiving the brethren and sisters composing the Rock Hill church, also in constituting them into a church.

Part first. Wm. Lawrence gave the Primitive Baptists a house to preach in, and, accordingly, Elders I. Jones and R. W. Snider gave an appointment to preach there, which they did at the time appointed. After preaching the door of the Baptist church was opened for the reception of members, when four came forward and were received in the presence of I. Jones and R. W. Snider and brother George Aderton, a private member. After they had received the brethren and sisters, they concluded that there could be a church established there, and, accordingly, brother Jones left an appointment to preach there on the 18th and 19th of Nov., 1886, for the purpose of constituting a church of the Primitive Baptist faith, if found orthodox and sound in the faith. Accordingly, Eld. R. W. Snider applied for an arm from Mt. Tabor church to meet brother Jones and himself there at the place above stated. This church responded to brother Snider's request, and appointed an arm consisting of four brethren, viz.: Jas. H. Boroughs, Wm. King, Isham Bean, and, in case of failure, Wm. Cox. Three of us met Elds. I. Jones, R. W. Snider and J. B. Hill from Tom's Creek church. Also brother Noah Skeen from Tom's Creek church, and J. W. Hinson from Sugg's Creek church; and all the rest of the brethren that were present were invited to take part with us in constituting the church.

After duly examining them on the principles of faith and doctrine we found them orthodox, as we believe, and we constituted them into a church of the Primitive Baptist faith and doctrine.—After the church was constituted the door of the church was opened for the reception of members. Wm. Trogden came forward and told a good experience of grace and was received into the fellowship of the church, and appointed to meet at the water next morning at 10 o'clock, a. m., for baptism. Accordingly we met at the hour appointed and opened the door of the church for the reception of members, when three others came forward and were received into the fellowship of the church, and Elder Jone, led them down into the water and baptized them. This was a pretty sight in a desert land, and my soul was made to rejoice in God my Savior for his wonderful works to the children of men. Although they met with a great deal of opposition in that desert land, the work of the Lord went on regardless of all the opposition that they met with.

We believe where God begins a work he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

And now a word to our leaders.—Take care that you do not cause the children of God to err; for I see very plainly that some have. My prayer is that God will keep us humbly at the feet of Jesus.

Your brother, as I hope, in Christ,
J. H. BOROUGHS.

EXPERIENCE.

MR. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—I have been impressed by some means, to write a few lines for publication in the LANDMARK, if you think proper.

I was born blind in sin. I have had a great trouble of mind ever since I was about twelve years old, of death and judgment. I have had several dreams that gave me great trouble. A few weeks ago I dreamed I was standing in the yard one night, and I thought I heard a loud noise something like a blast, and I turned and looked and a great smoke, and loud clap of something like blast would shoot forth smoke and light like the light of fire, and I thought that the judgment day had come, and I fell on my knees and tried to pray, for I thought I was a great sinner. But still I went on with my load of guilt trying to ask the Lord to forgive me. One night I lay down on my bed with a heavy heart, and I thought I was off from home, and I was trying to get home, and thought it was night, and my little sister appeared before me with a light and I got home, and just then I awoke in the worst condition I ever have experienced. There was something that seized my whole body, and I could not lie nor sit, and I arose from my bed, and my mother was awake, and she asked me what was the matter, and I said, I believed I was going to die, and I wanted her and papa to pray for me, for I was a great sinner, and without mercy from a higher power than man I was forever and ever lost. It seemed to me that I was surrounded with a black wall of darkness which I saw no way to get out of, and that was my sins, and without mercy from an all-wise God that I was bound to sink into everlasting destruction. I went on in that condition, and I would try to pray, and all I could say was, Lord have mercy on me, a poor sinner, for about one month. One night I was lying on my bed thinking I could not stand it but a few more days, and something seemed to say, your sins which are many are all freely forgiven. Then it seemed that there was a great burden gone, and I did know where it was gone, and I thought the Lord had done great things for my poor soul.

But doubts and fears soon began to come in my mind, but I thought I wanted to join the Old School Baptist church and be baptized, but was afraid I was not fit to be among what I do believe is God's people, for I think if I am one I am the least of all, for I just have escaped that awful doom, and if it is the will of the Lord that I should join the church I hope he will give me a spirit to go forward and tell what the Lord has done for my poor soul.

I will say no more this time, hoping you will remember me in your prayer.

MIXTURES.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have just returned home and have concluded to drop you a few lines to let you know something about our joys and sorrows,

I visited the South Carolina, Prince Williams and Mill Branch Associations while I was gone, enjoyed good health the most of the time, and enjoyed most of the meetings, reached home yesterday at 3 P. M., found my family all living, but found some of them sick, and found them all in much trouble in consequence of the great calamity which has come upon us, as well as upon many others: It seem to be one of the most distressing times along Neuse river that we have ever known. The water came down the river in such quantities, and with such rapidity, that the people living in the lower portions were unable to get out with their families and stock before it got so deep that a great many families had to escape in canoes, leaving their effects packed in the upper stories of their dwellings, the water sweeping across and over the farms, through houses, barns and stock lots, destroying stock, poultry, corn, fodder, cotton, peas, and fences and giving but little time to secure anything.

It is impossible to give any correct statement of the damage. The water came up into our horse lot, but did not destroy any of our stock. The damage on my place by rain and freshet must be about three hundred dollars, my own at least two hundred and fifty dollars. But oh how thankful I ought to be, that the dear Lord has spared me my dear family.

While I am unable to see my way out, brother Gold, still I do believe there is a way, beside it is a good way too, because the Lord hath said, all things work together for good to them that love God, and I believe it is so, although I am unable to see how it is going to work. Our apostle hath told us that our God shall supply all of the needs of his children, according to the riches of his glory by Jesus Christ, and he will too, and that will be far better than to supply our needs according to our carnal view.

But you know, dear brother that we often forget the promises of our dear Father, and go down into Egypt for help.

Brother Gold, I will close for the present, as I wish to give you a sketch of my tour some time. I should be glad to see you, think you could comfort us in our great trouble. May our dear Lord give you and sister Gold a mind to pray for us, that we may obtain mercy, and grace to help in time of need. Remember my love to all the brethren and sisters with whom you speak about us.

Affectionately yours,

JOHN R. ROBERTS.

Goldsboro, N. C.

FROM A FRIEND OF MANY YEARS.

BROTHER GOLD:—I send you two dollars to pay for the LANDMARK which I have read with pleasure, and many times in my low state have been comforted and encouraged when I read the many trials and temptations that christians pass through here in time. I am somewhat encouraged and try to press on, although I have had many dark days since I saw you last, and feel today like if I could see you and tell you all my ups and downs it would relieve my mind. I feel that I would like to talk with you on the 12th chapter of Matt. Our Saviour spoke not without meaning, and in that chapter he rebukes the Pharisees who endeavor to make the outside clean, but inwardly they are corrupt; and then when the unclean spirit is gone out of a man he walketh through dry places seeking rest, and findeth none: when he hears the gospel preached it is no food to him: when he meets with christians, and hears tell of their trials and temptations, and how the Lord has delivered them out of all, it is dry and idle talk, and no rest to him.

Then he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out, and when he is come he findeth it empty, swept and garnished. To all human appearance that house is now clean: the man becomes a moral man, and very often becomes very religious, as the Pharisees were at that time, and are yet. They thank God that they are not as other men, not as this poor Publican who can claim nothing but being a sinner. Then goeth he and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there, and the last state of that man is worse than the first. This first state was bad for he was justly condemned before God, and he took seven other spirits which may be called false accusers which is common at this day; high-mindedness, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, lovers of their own selves, covetous, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

All these spirits are the children of Satan, and are his favorite brats at this day when he expects to accomplish so much in his white dress. When these spirits all unite we would think they would quiet the conscience and the man settle down that he is as good or a little better than any one else, and some arrive at or very near a state of perfection which is a worse state than the first. For if we say we have not sinned we make him (God) a liar and his word is not in us.

Brother Gold, when I commenced writing I did not expect to write more than to tell you that myself and family are well, and to inform you that we are still destitute of a preacher, and I think in a cold state. May the Lord send laborers in this part of his vineyard. May true and undefiled religion spring up. May Zion once more prosper in this part of the land is my prayer.

I do not know whether to send this scribble or not, so if it comes to hand look over it and excuse bad spelling.

Brother Gold, I write this letter because I have thought of you a great deal of late, and as I am personally acquainted with you, you will look over my weakness.

J. W. BEAM.

Memory, Rutherford Co., N. C.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I feel impressed to write you, for I never wanted to talk to any one so much in my life. Your preaching at the Association found me. The dark cloud had gathered over me, and thundered so hard and lightened so sharp that I was made to fear and quake. But there was an anchor that held me, and that was Jesus—blessed Jesus. Things had got so dark I could not understand. I could not eat, nor sleep, nor pray. I could utter words but with no feeling. I was in this condition almost two months.—One morning when I rose up it seemed to me my soul in me was praising. The fear of man was taken away. They could only kill us and then they are left powerless. They had no power over my soul. I was ready to offer my soul a living sacrifice at the feet of Jesus, if it was required. I felt I had no one on earth but Jesus, and no one in heaven but Jesus, and I had no desire to live. I wanted to go to him. I was tired of life. Every thing was against me.

The remark was made that I left the Missionary church with a lie in my mouth. Let me explain to my Missionary friends. I would have been with them to-day if I could. I fought against the doctrine as long as I could. I tried to believe what I pleased and stay where I was, and thought I would, and had made up my mind I would never leave them. But God changed my mind. I was not my own keeper. The things I thought I would not do were the things I did. I did not mean to lie willfully, but the bible says, "Let God be true and every man a liar." I am willing to own my faults. I do hope I am clothed in Christ's righteousness.

I am ready to answer to every charge you can bring. I know the power of God represents the stone, and the breast-plate Christ's righteousness, and the shoes of the gospel will stand the test. Everything else has failed I know, but thank God my faith has not failed. I feel I can trust Jesus though he slay me.

Your sister in much trouble, if one at all.

WONDERS IN HEAVEN—SIGNS IN THE EARTH.

Sister Mary C. Stewart requests my view of Acts 1 : 19—27.

Perhaps few scriptures contain more of heavenly mystery and divine glory— if there is any difference in scripture.— The difference lies in the subjects considered. This one relates to the fulfillment of some of the most wonderful prophecies, namely, those directly bearing on the end of the Jewish dispensation, or legal world, and the beginning of the creation of new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The apostles were inspired to declare the glorious meaning of the scriptures. For the Spirit of God was poured out upon them, and they did speak with tongues. Jesus is the substance, center and theme of all their preaching.

The gospel heaven was opened unto them, and Jesus appeared enthroned in glory. Stephen beheld Jesus on the right hand of God. John saw the heaven opened and the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting on Jesus. Peter, James and John saw Moses and Elias in glory, and Jesus was transfigured before them in surpassing brightness of glory.

The coming of Messias in the flesh was itself the most wonderful mystery. Heaven came down to earth, for the heavens bowed when the Holy One came from Mount Paran. What signs when Jesus came down from heaven!— The legal heavens of the former or old dispensation were shaken and rolled together as a scroll fully written and filled up, and fulfilled, and then laid away.— The lights of that legal or Jewish world were blown out and removed. We know that literally the Jewish world with its lights was darkened or went out, and that signs and wonders, such as had never been known before, were performed by Jesus in the Jewish world or legal heavens, as well as on earth.

When Jesus arose from the dead what a display of power, and what mighty signs and wonders were done by him. Who is this that cometh up from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah? Jesus who is mighty to save comes up from Edom or earth. "Blood and fire and vapor of smoke."

The blood of Jesus is shed that cleanses from all sin. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is as fire in consuming all the sins of his people. The vapor of smoke is the darkness settled over the Jewish nation, or a representation of the darkness that envelops the minds of the Jews. We know that to this day their foolish heart is darkened, for their sun is gone out, and they are in the night and stumble.

The worship under the old testament was by the moon, and hence it reflected the sun, as the natural moon proves there is a sun. The moon or law worship is turned into blood, for Jesus is the end of the law, and his blood was foreshadowed in the sacrifices under the law.

The great and notable day of the Lord is the day of Pentecost, and that day is yet in the sense that this is the last time, or these are the last days.—The sacrifice of Jesus, or the offering up of Jesus according to the law and the prophets, must be fulfilled in order to the pouring out of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

When Jesus paid the debt and made an end of sin the foundation was laid in Zion, the iniquity of that land is removed, and hence it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Then Peter in the following verses proves or shows that all this prophecy of Joel had direct reference to Jesus, and that it was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and in what preceded that day in the life and death of Jesus.

David also is brought in by Peter as a witness to prove that Jesus is the mighty one that is brought up from the dead, and lives forever in heaven and in his people here on earth; and that therefore mighty signs in heaven above and in the earth beneath are displayed; and that by him all that believe are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Among the precious truths of the gospel how full and perfect is the truth that all that truly call on the name of Jesus shall be saved.

P. D. G.

IN THAT DAY.

For in that day every man shall cast away his idols of silver, and his idols of gold which your hands have made unto you a sin. Isa. 31:7.

"In that day," refers to the gospel day most generally in this book. In the 4th chapter Isaiah says: And in that day seven women shall take hold of one man, saying: "We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name to take away our reproach." In this day we find all sects and orders, which make up the number of the name of the beast, while they are Arminian, believing works to be adequate for food and raiment, consolation and righteousness, yet they claim to be christians, and call upon Christ to let his name be called upon them.

It would be very reproachful for one to claim to worship God and not have Christ connected with it in some way; and as they do not need him in the work, they wish his name to take away the reproach incident to such work and profession. In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah—land of praise: "We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks."—Isa. 26: 1. "On this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Could we not sing salvation by grace through the power of a sovereign God, would we not faint by the way, and despair of entering into rest? But he has said: "Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in?"

But you may say: "Do I keep the truth?" Do you trust in your own strength, or in the Lord? Do you not feel that if the Lord does not save you you will not be saved? Do you not sometimes feel that your trust in him is not in vain, and that he will come and save you? Then trust ye in the Lord forever; for in him is everlasting strength.

This is the day in which ungodliness was to be taken away from Jacob, and a pure language turned unto the people, and the Spirit of the Lord poured out upon all flesh. In the preceding verse he says: "Turn ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have deeply revolted." This turning was for Israel to do under the law; for in the coming day every man was to cast away his idols, not only of the Jews but also of the Gentiles, even as many as the Lord should call from darkness unto his marvelous light.

Israel in the days of Isaiah had made themselves idols of gold and of silver, and worshipped the works of men's hands, which the Lord had commanded them not to do, and therefore it was a sin unto them. They were to have no other gods before them. His glory he will not give to another, nor his praise to graven images. When Israel refused and rebelled they were devoured with the sword or punished for their disobedience, but the Lord took not his loving-kindness from them nor suffered his faithfulness to fail, and therefore turned them back again and again unto the enjoyments of the good of the land which they always eat when obedient. And finally when he sent his Son into the world he set him as a refiner's fire, whose fire is in Zion and whose furnace is in Jerusalem, and he purges the sons of Levi, fights for Zion and the hill thereof, and defends Jerusalem, passes over it and preserves it, and sets up an ensign for the people, even holiness to the Lord.

As Israel was the type of the church in this day, and was an idolatrous people, and was made by the coming of the Lord to cast away their idols, I will see if we are the people that answer to the type. If we are the people typified by ancient national Israel, we must in some sense answer to them, not only in our doctrine, practice and devotion to him, but in our idolatry as well. Not that we must necessarily practice it in order to prove our identity, but we must know we have the principle in our nature. To believe ourselves free of a disposing tendency to idolatry would be worse than Arminianism and a sure evidence against the genuineness of our religion. Just as sure as Israel was prone to the worship of images or idols made of silver and gold, so sure are we disposed to that which was typified by those idols. And as they were turned away from them and delivered from the consequences by the coming of the Lord Jesus, so must we be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.—Then, and not until then, shall we be made to fully and finally forever cast away every thing but Christ and the worship of his great and wonderful name.

I will now see if we are in any way subject to idolatry and do worship idols. We need not conclude that we do not worship idols because we do not set up graven images in our house and on every high hill and under every green tree as did Israel. But we must look for the antitype in us. An idol is any thing that comes between us and our God so as to turn our consideration from him that is due him, whether it be lands, houses, wife, children, self or life. And idolatry is a love for these things and a devotion to them that are excessive.

Was not Israel in her first calling made to cast away her idols? and did she not return to them again? Were we not killed to the world and all that in it is? Jesus says: "Except ye forsake houses and lands, husbands and wives, father and mother, and hate your own life for mine and the kingdom of heaven's sake ye can not be my disciples." Did we not do all these ere we took up the cross and followed him? To be his disciple is to follow him. Are we thus unreservedly following him yet day by day? Or do we not sometimes forsake or depart from our first love and leave off doing the first works? Then the Lord graciously chides us and commands us to return to our first love and do the first works. Just as the Lord commanded Israel to return unto him from whom she had deeply revolted, and we are made to cast away these things that were sin unto us and grieved the Holy Spirit wherewith we are sealed unto the day of redemption. And then for a time we with deep humility serve him with reverence and godly fear, and promise him to never forsake his paths again.— But alas! how soon we find that we are out of the way and are mourning his absence, and are made to chide ourselves because of our slothfulness in not heeding his gracious admonitions. Finally we arise from a state of slumbering and unbelief, and open the door and call for him: but he is not there.— He has withdrawn himself and we go about the streets—the paths wherein we once found peace, and we find him not. We call for him and he answers not. The watchmen that go about the streets find us and they smite us.— They take away our veil. Oh! with what power the preached gospel comes to us from the servants of God. We are reprov'd, rebuked and exhorted.— Our covering or excuses are removed and we must acknowledge the justice of the sure chastening. Finally we go to the daughters of Jerusalem—the saints who are in the way—and they finding we seek our Beloved, and are sick of love, join us in the search, and soon we find him in his garden, the church, feeding among the lilies, and oh! what a glorious finding is this; and we sit down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit is sweet to our taste. Oh! that we might ever thus be found in his gracious presence, hearing fall from his sacred lips his glorious, soul-cheering and life-giving gospel.

Do we not remember with what joy and peace we sat down among the saints of God when we first had the privilege of the fullness of their fellowship? and did we not then feel to say that one day in the house of the Lord is worth a thousand? Yes, we had a feast of fat things, wine well refined upon the lees. Then we let nothing come in the way that could possibly be avoided to prevent our meeting with the saints to worship our God. Then we were diligent in and careful to maintain every good work. We were ready to minister to the necessity of the poor saints, and to relieve our pastor of the labor to some extent of supporting himself and family while he so faithfully served us in word and in doctrine.— These were surely happy days

When I go to a church that is fully alive to these things, and is in the enjoyment of fellowship, fear and love, and they are all there to greet me with a cheerful smile and a warm, hearty shake of the hand, and bid me a soul-cheering welcome to their hearts, and sometimes before I get there my ears are greeted with harmonious and melodious strains of the songs of Zion, my soul joins in the glad refrain, and the cares incident to my labors are driven away, and with joy I enter the assembly of the saints, and with renewed vigor and the ability that is given me proclaim to them the gospel of the son of God.

The most prominent species of idolatry in this day is covetousness. Paul says, the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. Instead of our seeking every opportunity to go to meeting and do our duty in every particular, we are often too ready to find excuses. For one to stay at home and attend to his secular affairs on meeting days is with perhaps some exception the poorest excuse possible. If any member of the church has the right thus to do, it would be far more so as a general thing with the pastor. If one cannot lose one day in each month and make a living, how in all reason can the pastor lose at least half of his time and live. Why is it our people do not do more for their pastors, and attend more strictly to their duties as members of the church? Is it not because they think more of their own individual temporal comfort than they do for those whom the gospel requires them to care for? Is not this idolatry, and should we not put these idols from us? After having once put them away, when we were crucified unto the world, and the world unto us by what law do we presume to turn to them again?

It is right and commendable that each individual should seek an honest living, but not lay up riches against the day of wrath, and to neglect the plain and positive commands and exhortations in the scriptures of truth. As we have opportunity let us do good unto all men. Anything short of a simple confiding trust in God, for the sufficiency of his grace for life and salvation in Jesus, and a strict observance of the laws in Zion is idolatry as typified in the text and must be removed or taken away ere we can enjoy fully—to the extent designed—either the blessings of the kingdom as set up here, or as it is triumphant in the life or realm beyond the realities of natural life. The things of this life if properly used are a blessing, but if not they are a sin and curse to the user. I might itemize many other things, but will let this suffice for this time, hoping it will be sufficient.

END OF YEAR.

The last days of another year are near at hand. While we do not esteem one day as any more than another, we yet note the flight of time by this method of measurement.

The number of my months is with the Lord. My times are in his hand. Because we know not what the morrow will be we should say, if the Lord will we will do so and so. Even in the matter of ordinary worldly business, such as buying and selling, or trading, we should say, if the Lord will we will do so and so.

Does time ever pause one moment to serve us, or at all slacken his march at man's behest. Imperceptibly age creeps on as we can bear its approach. Gradually the limber limbs of youth stiffen as time lays his stern grip upon us, and the once nimble youth toughens into the stiff old man. But this is done so gradually that we cannot tell when nor how; but by comparison we see the difference that intervening years make.

So in the life of the child of God.—We are not conscious of any sudden nor great change, but, looking back for years, we see that from well established principle we do many things, while there are many hopeful changes from what we once were.

Time will soon finish with us all the work assigned him to do, and then we shall go, no more to return.

In the political and natural world there have been the usual commotion and agitation. Corruption is bold and boastful. Seldom are criminals brought to justice. This is an age of making money an idol. It is very successfully done too. Mankind prove by their works and deeds too that there is no sign of improvement in the morals of mankind.

In what is called the religious world we see the love of money rampant.—The great cry of all is money—money—to pay preachers—money to educate men to preach—money to convert the heathen. While pride and vanity display themselves in costly houses of worship, and they suppose that gain is godliness. From such we are to withdraw or turn away.

Having obtained mercy of the Lord we continue to this present day, testifying the same old doctrine of God our Savior.

P. D. G.

The mother of our dear brother P. G. Lester peacefully passed out of time, and was released from this bondage of mortality at her home in Va., on Dec. the 11th.

Like a wise and loving son he has nourished and comforted her during her long continued suffering. May the peace of God rest upon him and all the bereaved ones.

Obituary.

JOHN ALLEN WHITE.

Brother John Allen White, son of B. R. and Calistia White, was born April the 11th 1867, in Carroll county, Va. He was an obedient child to his parents all his life, and was kind to all his play-mates, while he was a boy, and was greatly beloved by all his friends, neighbors and acquaintances. He never was heard to swear or use any profane language, or to be intoxicated with spirituous liquors, neither did he visit places of worldly amusements, such as parties, balls and the like places. On the 19 of June 1886 he was married by Elder J. M. Allen to Polly Ann Surratt, a respectable girl, daughter of Isum Surratt.

On the 3rd Sunday in January 1887 he came before the church at Little Vine and related his experience and was received; and on the 27th of February 1887 he was taken sick with Pneumonia fever. He bore his sickness with great patience.

On the 5th of March following his mother went to give him a dose of his medicine and he told her to hold. He wished to talk to his papa and commenced telling his experience, that on his way to George Jenning's Store, when about 14 years old, he stopped in the road where a path went through a near way, and there a wagon passed him, and it seemed to him that a dark mist passed him, and he felt lost and strange. He did not know which way to go. It looked to him like the sun was in the North, and there was a mountain on either side, although it was a level road. He went the wrong way.—When he met some persons, they told him he was going the wrong way to the store, and they went with him to the store and when he came back to the place that these strange feelings came on him he came to his right mind, but he said that he felt a burden in his breast, but he did not know what was the matter with him. He carried that burden four years before he was delivered. Sometime before he was delivered he would walk from their store house to the Mill and back, and try to pray for himself and his little brothers and sisters. His mind was so engaged in regard to his condition that he would forget his business, and one night he had a remarkable vision that he died, and that he died to sin, and that he was made alive to everlasting life, and that he went to heaven, and that he met James M. Allen there, and he gave him his hand, and they went on hand in hand singing and praising God in heaven among the angels, and when he awoke he was singing, and felt happy, and thought if he had ten-thousand tongues they should all be engaged in praising God.

He said he wanted to tell them of his little hope to remember him when he was gone, and on the 7th of March he departed this life at the age of 19 years, 10 months and 27 days.

He leaves his wife, and his father and mother, and brothers and sisters, numerous friends and relatives to mourn for him, but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we believe he is gone to that rest prepared for the people of God.

JAMES M. ALLEN.

SPENCER MARCOM.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—By request, I send you the obituary of Spencer Marcom who was born October the 18th 1798, in Orange county, North Carolina, and departed this life March the 10th, 1886, being 88 years, 7 months and 8 days old. He was blessed with a hope in the Lord Jesus in 1822 and joined the Primitive Baptists the 2nd Sunday in January 1822, was married in March 1827, to Miss Rany Freeman. Unto him were born 8 children, 5 sons and 3 daughters, of which 6 survive him. He had 28 grand-children, and 6 great-grand-children.

He moved from N. C., to Tenn., Haywood county in 1836, united with Bruce's Creek church in 1841, was ordained deacon of said church in 1844, afterwards united with Brown's Creek church, was a member of said church at his death. Brother Marcom was a most remarkable man. He was a shining light in the church, and to the world. He was so humble, so trustworthy, so devoted, so faithful in all things, so firm in the doctrine of God our Saviour whom he delighted to honor.

He seemed to live above the world, and longed to go to be with his God and Saviour. All things in nature had lost their charms to him. I feel to thank God that he blessed the world with such a man as he was. Like Abel of old in a sense, though dead he yet speaketh. If there was a christian grace in which he was deficient I am not aware of it.

He leaves his companion to linger a while longer in feeble health, who is his equal in her devotions in the divine life, in adorning the doctrine of God her Savior. May heaven's richest blessing rest upon her and all the dear children, and grand-children. At his death 9 of his children by birth and by marriage were members of the Primitive Baptist church. One son-in-law has died since his death, and all of them are an honor to their profession.

In conclusion we would say to sister Marcom, and all the children, sorrow not after the deceased as others which have no hope. I humbly trust we do believe that Jesus rose from the dead, and all that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.— This we say to you by the word of the Lord. The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and the voice of the Arch-Angel, and the trump of God, and we which live and remain shall not prevent them which are asleep. We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of eye, and shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. So shall we ever be with the Lord. Comfort one another with these words.

W. W. SAMMONS.

FLORIDA J. SNEED.

Florida J. Sneed was born in Floyd county, Virginia, Oct. 6th. 1864, and died Oct. 4th, 1887.

She was the daughter of Francis V. and Lucretia C. Sneed. She died of consumption after 18 months suffering. She never complained of her suffering, but was patient and willing to die, and said she felt like she would be with Jesus. Her only dread seemed to be the sting of death.

She never made a public profession of religion, but had a hope and desire to join the church, but was not able to be baptized.

About three weeks before she died, Elder P. G. Lester came to see her, by her request, and sang and prayed for her, which she very much enjoyed. She walked to the door that day for the last time smiling and said, he talks so pretty.

A few minutes before she died she clasped hands as many as three times and said, "I am going home."

By her request her funeral was preached by Elders J. G. Lester and Amos Dickerson. She was a dear sister to me, but she is gone home where I hope to go some day.

LOUISA T. LESTER.

ELDER ROBERT W. HILL.

Elder Robert W. Hill was born in Stokes county, N. C., Sept. 13th, 1813. He married Miss Arena Agnes Stoveall in 1840. She died June 14th, 1843—leaving him two sons, Gideon and Willie. He never married again, but lived with his relatives.

He professed a hope in Christ the last of April, 1837, connected himself with the Primitive Baptist church at Clear Spring, April 20th, 1839, and was baptized the following day by Elder John L. Wilson, and was set apart to the ministry by Elders G. W. McNeely and Henry Tatum, July 26th, 1845.—He was pastor of the church at Clear Spring, Snow Creek and Buffalo churches, which he served as long as he was able. He was clerk of the Mayo Association a number of years, and he died June 28th, 1886, and was buried by his friends in Burke county in an enclosed grave-yard.

The last several years of his life he gradually quit preaching, and his mind seemed to give way by degrees until he had but little. He left the unworthy writer's house and took the train to his son Gideon, who lived at Morganton, N. C. After reaching there he grew worse, and in the absence of his son he was carried by a friend to his house, where he was cared for and died there.

I feel to say the Association erred in selecting me in my feeble and declining life to write to the living of the dead, but for the love, I hope, for Christ and his bride, I cheerfully yield to their request.

It was not my privilege to be intimately acquainted with him in early life. The last several years I lived nearer him, and mingled with him more. He was sound in faith and the doctrine of the bible. In his preaching he would often admonish the brethren and sisters to stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. He seemed to be impressed with a mind that it was his duty to warn the church from giving heed to every wind of doctrine. I feel to say he did it for the great love he had for the cause. We may not often think of death until we are called to give up a dear one, and then in those trying moments we will think of it, and the resurrection, and what a comfort to feel that those that are passing away are heirs in the first resurrection.

May we all feel submissive to the will of God, and may his grace sustain the bereaved sons, and brothers, and sisters, that they may be prepared by grace to meet him where parting will be no more. Paul said to Timothy before his departure: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

A. REED.

Remarks.

Elder R. W. Hill was a true man to his friends, and loved his kindred in the flesh, and loved his kindred in Christ.—He loved his own family very much.—So great was his devotion to the memory of his deceased wife that he never married another, but was true to her memory as long as he lived. That is no ignoble trait.

DELNORA M. WAINWRIGHT.

Delnora M. Wainwright was born Feb. 1st 1871, and died Nov. 14th 1887. She was a bright young lady and possessed an amiable disposition. She made no profession of religion, but was an anxious inquirer for sometime before she was taken sick, and during her sickness prayed day and night for forgiveness of her sins: which I trust she obtained. She died of hemorrhage.

Her funeral was preached by Elder Amos Dickerson and myself.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels constive, have legs bursted, etc. Remedy, &c.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to REDEMPTION.

Jesus descended from above,
The token of eternal love;
To bleed and die for sinful men,
And then return to God again.

His loving-kindness brought him down
Beneath the law, beneath the ground;
Mercy and truth his bosom swelled,
While justice hurled him down to hell.

But God who dwells above the skies,
In triumph bade his Son arise;
And lead from death and hell the prey,
Who all their life in bondage lay.

The sting of death—the strength of sin
Were slain and satisfied in him;
And justice, mercy, truth and love
Received the glorious King above.

Thus was the glorious victory won
By God's eternal, only Son;
That sinners of a sinful race
Might find in him their resting place.

O may this rest be ever mine,
Then never more will I repine;
But in this heavenly hiding-place
Will sing the song—redeeming grace.

NIGHT THOUGHTS.

Night is sublime, it is beautiful,
When the stars like embers glow;
And the air is cool and refreshing,
And the dreamy breezes blow.

How unlike night is my heart;
Night is the emblem of rest and peace.
It ends day's strife, while my heart's
Yearnings and strivings will never cease,

Until my frame of clay has crumbled,
'Til my soul has gained its goal:
For until eternity open,
Satan shall beset my soul.

The glories of night force me,
To remember I am but a clod;
For in the air about me
Are whisperings of Almighty God.

As I gaze reverently upward,
Far into the star-lit dome,
A pang of fear rushes over me,
I sigh: have I there a home?

I gaze longingly in the heavens,
Bitter tears fall from my eyes,
And I long for the wings untiring,
To bear me up to the skies.

For I'm sick and my heart aches,
I am very tired of this sinful place;
I long for a glorious redemption;
To be saved by Thy great grace.

COMMUNICATED.

SHALL COME—A GRACIOUS PROMISE.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:

It is raining this morning, and has been almost incessantly since yesterday morning, so that I am confined to the house. From some cause there is a constant impression on my mind to write. Why this constant impression I can not tell. For there is nothing presented for me to write. So I am in a strait, not able to tell whether the impression is of the Lord, or whether it is of the flesh. If of the Lord it is well: if of the flesh it will prove a failure.

The following text is on my mind:—
“All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.—John 6 : 37. These words of the Savior are true beyond a doubt. That being the case, there can be no doubt about the eternal salvation of the all given. For it is plainly to be seen that many do not come to Christ, while it is equally plain that there are those that do come. In this we see that the words of Jesus are true, and that he hath saved his that have been given to him, or they never would have come to him. It is manifestly clear and plain that every sinner who hath eternal life dwelling in him is the gift of God to Christ. And it is equally plain that every sinner who never has eternal life dwelling in him is not the gift of God to Christ. For "all that the Father giveth me shall come to me." There can be no mistake about that. It is as plain as A B C. Then the glorious truth of election is established by these few words of Jesus.

There is a sense in which the whole Adamic family is given to Christ; for he tasted death for every man. And by thus doing all the common blessing of life are given to the children of men. Yet he is the special Savior of them that believe. This certainly shows that he is only the common Savior of the unbeliever. Hence the saying, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." The unbelievers never come to Christ; for they do not believe in him as a Savior. "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep."—John 10 : 26. God gave the sheep to Christ, and all the sheep come to him. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."—John 10 : 27. None but the sheep desire to follow him, and none but the sheep are invited to come into the sheep-fold. They come because they, the sheep, hear his voice. He promises not to cast any out that come. "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." The sheep come not to be made sheep, but being sheep he calleth them and they hear his voice.

He laid down his life for them.—"And I lay down my life for the sheep."—John 10 : 15. He certainly would not have laid down his life for nought. Neither would he have done so if he had not have had knowledge of them. Hence the established fact that they, the sheep, are elect or given to him and are known of him and redeemed by him, and none of them lost. Jesus saith: "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John 6 : 38. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."—39th verse. Surely this is conclusive; for it is evident that Christ did his Father's will. Then it must necessarily follow that all that were given him of the Father were secure in him; for his life was given, as shown above, for them. The will of the Father being done by him they could never be lost or taken from him, for they were of right his, and as no day can possibly succeed the last day, it is a fact established that all of them shall be raised up again at the last day. What grace is here given or vouchsafed to the saints. Certainly there can be no doubt as to the gift: therefore there can be none as to the keeping. Therefore there can be none as to the raising up again. And so there can be none as to the eternal saving.

Hence the truth of election, calling, justification and glorifying taught by the apostle looms up as a soul-comforting truth by which the dear saints of God are so often cheered and made to take courage under the many sore trials and cruel mockings through which they are called to undergo while in this world of sin. While thousands of our fellow-mortals are abusing and vilifying the poor afflicted saints for cleaving to the glorious promises of their dear Savior, how comforting to them it is to turn to such passages of holy writ as this: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."—John 16 : 33.

Then, dear children of God, be not discouraged, neither be afraid, our Captain hath overcome the world. ()

world, thou art conquered. Jesus, the dear Son of God our Father, hath gained a complete victory over thee, and having thus done triumphantly declares in the most positive terms that "all that the Father giveth me shall come to me." All the hindering powers of the world are overcome. Therefore the conditional chance system taught and believed by the world is an overcome doctrine. And saving grace is surely sung by such as Christ by the eternal Spirit calls unto himself.

The apostle having the faith of God's elect in time, and reigning grace given him, positively declares that "for whom he did foreknow he did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, (Jesus said 'all that the Father giveth me shall come to me,' and what is plainer) that he might be the first born among many brethren."—Rom. 8 : 29. If all the predestinated do not come, or are not conformed to his image, Jesus certainly could not be the first born among many brethren: for they were predestinated that he might be. It follows of course that if one link in the chain is broken that the whole chain is broken, and there can be no salvation; for Jesus dieth but once. But hear the apostle in the next verse: "Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called, and whom he called them he also justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified." This settles the matter. We may have as many revised additions to the New Testament as the world may print, and yet the glorious truth of justification by the grace of God can never be erased from the fleshly tables of the heart of God's called and justified saints. For "He hath saved them, and called them, not according to their works, but according to his mercy and grace which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began."—2nd Tim. 1 : 9. If any thing is wanting to prove ownership or knowledge of them this would be enough. Certainly if grace was given in him for his people, and it cannot be denied or reasoned away, there must have been a people given him to partake of this grace. So the fact stands out in bold colors that they shall come, and whether they be Jews or Gentiles, he will not cast them out. So then the servants of God should boldly preach a finished redemption, and an effectual and holy calling, and complete awakening of such as are thus called.

Let the world say or do what they may, grace does and will reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ, to all that the Father giveth him, let them be many or few, far or near, learned or unlearned, rich or poor, bond or free, black or white; for he calleth unto him whom he will, or rather as Mark puts it; "And he called unto him whom he would, and they came unto him."—3rd chap. 13th verse. The apostle Peter writes to them as the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father." And every child of God outside of Babylon will subscribe to it with a hearty amen. John says of them: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God," 1st John 3 : 1, and declares that it was for that reason the world knoweth us not. Therefore says he: "The world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." Surely all that know him come to him, and all that the Father giveth him shall come, so he saith.

It seems strange to me that one who is a christian would be willing to affirm that all men are called from darkness to light, but they will not come to Christ: and yet I have it in black and white from a professed christian that all are called from darkness to light.—But to return. Jude says of those whom God gave to his Son, as I suppose: "Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ and called." How strange that they should not come to him if they are preserved in him, and how strange that the preserved should be lost. In fact it cannot be. The evidence is all on the side of Christ. The devil is a liar. He need not deny that Jesus will get all that he died to eternally save. Jesus says; "They shall come to me." And thus God's ministers are bound to teach; for God calls them thus to do, although they will have it to do through much persecution; for it is his will that thus it must be. Jesus says, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."—Rev. 22: 12. All the works of the world are dead works, and as such will be rewarded. But the called of God will have righteousness wrought in them by the effectual working of the Holy Ghost, and will therefore work righteousness, and will be rewarded accordingly.

The Spirit and the bride hail the coming of him who saith, "Behold I come quickly," with a hearty response, Come; and the Spirit and the bride say, Come. All the saints, when under the sweet influence of the Spirit are ready to say, Come. Let him that heareth say, Come. Where there is no life there is no hearing; therefore it is only the living in Zion or Jerusalem that say, Come. Let him that is athirst come, not say, come, but come. Glorious invitation to God's thirsty ones to come. He tells them to come, not say come, but come, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely. Only the living have a will to drink. So it is clear and plain that the promises are all to those that God gave to his Son. So there can be no failure. I know some went back and walked no more with him when they heard him say: "Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto me except it were given unto him of my Father."—John 6: 65. But they were unbelievers. Unbelievers cry out against the doctrine yet. But God's chosen receive the testimony with joy, and if asked if they will also go away, their cry is, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." He speaks comfortingly to them at the close of the volume of the book saying, "He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly," and the sai shout, "Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus."—Rev. 22: 20.

The foregoing is at your disposal, brother Gold. When you read it if you think it fit for the readers of the LANDMARK to look at, after correcting mistakes, publish it; if not, consign it to the waste-basket and all will be well with me.

With love and fellowship I remain yours in the bonds of the gospel,

J. C. HALL.

Gogginsville, Va.

J. C. PHILPOT AND J. WARBURTON.

EDITORS ZION'S LANDMARK, DEAR BRETHREN:—In your No. dated Oct. 15th, 1887, just received, you have another splendid sermon, by "that wonderful preacher, Philpot," entitled, "Waters which do not drown, and Flames which do not Burn." On seeing this in the LANDMARK, it brought to mind some of my experience while traveling in England during the summer of 1886.

It was my privilege to visit a number of the churches where that man of God, J. C. Philpot used to frequently preach. In Oxford, my friend, Mr. Pembrey, publisher of the Gospel Banner, kindly entertained me while I was in that city, conducting me to the different places of interest, and among the rest, took me to that ancient seat of learning, Worcester College, to the identical room our friend Philpot studied in to prepare himself for preaching.—Little did he then think what the great head of the church had in view by thus instructing him in worldly knowledge. I have often thought and sometimes said, when the Lord wants a learned man for his service he knows just where to find him, as he did Saul of Tarsus, whom he had brought up at the feet of Gamaliel: so he took our friend Philpot to Worcester College, and then to finish his education under Prof. Warburton, and thus he prepared him for the work he assigned him to do. How much our beloved Philpot thought of his collegiate education.

after the Lord called him by grace, may be gathered from the following written by himself in his preface to the dying testimony of John Warburton, he wrote in that work.

"I shall never forget my first interview with him (Warburton), which was in the year 1833 or 1834. I was at that time a minister in the church of England, and a fellow of a college at Oxford. Mr. Warburton came to Abingdon to preach at the chapel of my dear friend Mr. Tiptaff, whom I had intimately known for some years previously as a brother clergyman, and whose secession a year or two before from the establishment had not broken or impaired our union in mind and heart in the great things of God. I went over therefore to Abingdon, eight miles distant, to see and hear Mr. Warburton. I was then, and had been for sometime, a good deal exercised in my mind about eternal things, and went with many fears, and under much bondage, both on account of my position in the church of England, which I was then beginning to feel, and the state of my own soul, which was then passing through many trials. Though reared in the lap of learning, and instructed almost from childhood to consider mental attainments as the grand means of winning a position in the world, I had some six or seven years before been taught, by the weight of eternal realities laid on my conscience, to value grace as the one thing needful; and the trials and temptations I was passing through in a lonely village, separated from all society but that of a few people who feared God, had deepened the feelings in my breast. Under these circumstances I went to Abingdon, feeling my own want of grace and therefore with more fears than hopes, as about to see and hear a servant of God so eminently possessed of it, and anticipating rather a frown than a smile both in the pulpit and the parlor. I afterwards learned that the poor, dear man, having heard I was a man of great learning, was almost as much afraid of meeting the Oxford scholar as the Oxford scholar was of meeting him. But how much better grounded were my fears than his; and how much his grace outshone my learning!

He received me, however, with much kindness, and talked pleasantly and profitably on the weighty matters of the kingdom of God. I heard him very comfortably in the evening; and next morning after breakfast he would have me engage in prayer, which I did with a trembling heart, but seemed helped to express simply what I knew and felt. We afterwards went inside the coach together to Dorchester, about seven miles off, conversing the chief part of the way, and there we parted very affectionately. * * * *

We have for many years met annually at the Calne Anniversary, a well known and remarkable gathering of the saints of God, where we have been in the habit of preaching together, and I hope ever met and parted with renewed affection."

Thus a poor weaver and a ripe scholar were brought on a level in the kingdom of grace by the invincible power of the Spirit of the ever-living God.

It was my privilege to hear Mr. Philpot preach many years ago when I was in England. After my return, some of the friends of the truth in New York concluded to venture to invite him to make a visit to the United States and preach as the Lord should enable him. Having heard him in England myself, I was the one who wrote to him, and from his letter in reply, which now lies before me, I make the following extract. His letter is dated—

"Stamford, Dec. 1st, 1850.

DEAR SIR:—

I am obliged to the friends of truth in New York who have expressed a wish that I should pay a visit to them and to the United States. But were there no other hindrance, the state of my health would prevent my accepting their kind invitation. I have suffered for some years from a weak chest, and this much limits my labors. I cannot, therefore, promise myself the pleasure of visiting the churches across the Atlantic.

"From the accounts that have reached me, I should fear that vital godliness was at a low ebb in the United States. But there is, doubtless, a remnant according to the election of grace, who are made to differ from the professing multitude. It is a mercy, in this dark and cloudy day, to have any life and feeling in the soul. My path is for the most part one of conflict and exercise. Sin, horrid sin, is continually entangling or harassing, and this makes me lie very low, as well as cuts out continual work for confession and prayer.

"It is not likely we shall ever meet on this side eternity, but it will be our mercy if we shall then be found at the right hand of the great Shepherd when he divideth the sheep from the goats.

"Yours, I trust, in the best bonds,
J. C. PHILPOT."

To Mr. Axford, New York."

In reference further to Mr. Warburton, permit me to say—I remember him when I was a boy in Trowbridge, Eng. I have seen him baptize a number of times in a mill-pond near that town. The sight is in my mind's eye now, as he would come to the water-side. Nearly every time there would be crowds of people waiting around the pond to witness the blessed ordinance of believers' baptism. The dear man would remain for a short time before commencing, when, seeing the multitudes, and hearing their loud talking, he would raise his strong voice and say, "Silence!" Almost in one moment quietness would follow, and the large audience would pay the strictest attention, while the man of God administered the sacred rite in the most scriptural manner.

It was my privilege, also, in the summers of 1885 and 1886, to be again in Zion Chapel, Trowbridge, where Mr. Warburton labored and preached the gospel of Christ for forty and two years as the loved and successful pastor of that church.

There is still a flourishing church and congregation in that place, and I am sorry to learn that the pastor I heard there has been obliged to resign the pastorate in consequence of ill health. It is a favored spot to me, and I have none but the most pleasant recollections of it. May the Lord, if it be his blessed will, speedily send them another of his own servants to break unto them ministerially the Bread of Life.

JOHN AXFORD.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHEREN AND SISTERS:—

I hope it is a pure desire to obtain the prayers of all God's people, and to help myself and others, that has prompted me to write on this subject. If it is not with this desire, may this not be permitted to enter the press.

With the help of the Lord I will try to give a sketch of what I hope the good Lord has done for my poor sinful self. When I was growing up my mother was a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and I thought little or nothing about my condition until about 1873. I then attended a protracted meeting with the intention of having a good time, but I became convicted of my sins, and I felt that I would have to die and be parted from all that was near and dear to me, and would have to take my portion in torment. Oh! what dreadful feelings I had. It seemed that there was no pardon for me. I would try to get rid of these feelings, but could not. I would not go to the mourner's bench, nor take any hand in the meeting. When this burden left me I had such a sweet, calm feeling I could not tell any one how I felt, only I wanted to praise God. Every thing appeared new and lovely, and I had a new love for every body.— I did not want any body to notice any change in me. When I would be with any of my companions I would engage in any worldly amusement, such as dancing and jesting, and when I was alone would be sorry that I did so.

The first week after my burden left me gave me the pleasantest days that I have ever spent. I felt so light-hearted and happy, and I thought that I was prepared to meet death, for I felt that I had been forgiven. I felt that if I had ever done any body a wrong I wanted to go and ask forgiveness for it. Jesus all the day long was my joy and my song, but I could not account for all this, it was so new and unexpected to me. Not long after this, as I was coming up the path to the house in time of a storm, there was a severe clap of thunder, and I believe I was made to feel that it was God that ruled in heaven and earth and in his creatures. Previous to this I was so afraid when it thundered and lightened that I would hide and go to sleep if I could to keep from hearing it. But since then I have felt that I was as safe awake as asleep, and that God can take me or spare me in any place or at any time. I hope that I have had a desire to do right ever since, but have not been able to come up to my desires.

I lived in this way, trying to do good and making promises only to be broken, for some time. It seemed to me the more I tried to do good the more wicked I became. I never even thought of joining a church and being baptized, much, until about 1876, when at times I would be impressed that it was my duty to be baptized. At times it would wear off, and when it would present itself to me I would get rid of it by thinking if it was my duty that God would show it to me plainly, or by thinking that I was not worthy to join any church. Indeed I feel unworthy yet.

I believe it was shown to me plainer in Oct. and Nov., 1886, when my two little children were taken from me. I was made to feel the need of help from a great High Priest; for creature help all failed. Oh! what trying times they were, and how hard to say, "O Father, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Then my whole desire and thought were to do my duty if I could know what it was. I wanted the rest of my days to be spent in God's praise. I felt as the poet:

"Perhaps he may admit my plea,
Perhaps will hear my prayer;
But if I perish I will pray,
And perish only there."

I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away I know
I must forever die."

I would go to Moon's Creek to ask brother Chandler to pray for me, and ask God to lead me in the way that I should go, but would come back and not do it. On one occasion he said in his discourse that people sometimes depend on people too much; that they ought to trust in God. When I would go to church and not offer, I would come home afraid that I would die before I would have another opportunity.

I offered to the church in April of 1887, and was received and baptized in July by Elder Chandler. I beg the prayers of all that chance to see this, as I feel to be one of the least of the sisters, if one at all.

Your sister, I hope,

SALLIE A. TRAVIS.

EPISTOLARY.

DEAR ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER:—

As my time for the subscription of the LANDMARK is up, I conclude to write you a few lines, and will also enclose two dollars for next payment or renewal. During the summer I have had the pleasure of attending a few meetings, some have not been so enjoyable as others. Was at White Water and Lebanon Associations. There met with two esteemed brethren Elders Bundy and Vail of N. Y.

Formed some acquaintance with Elder Bundy and enjoyed his preaching much, also that of the other brother was good. But we are not always in the spirit to hear, as I often find myself in a forlorn or destitute condition. Yet the pleasure afforded us is much to meet with brethren from afar off, if they have come with a spirit of meekness, forbearing one another in love, standing ready to proclaim those truths which are so firmly fixed in the Scriptures. Then we have the Bible for reproof of instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works.—

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Then what a comfort to have this instructor. One that is Holy and undefiled, that fades not away, but is the same to day as yesterday. Oh! the tempest tossed soul, on its weary Pilgrimage, either upon the hill top, or down low in the valley. "Better to go to the house of mourning, than the house of feasting," for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better." Even at a most unexpected moment the Lord visits his poor and afflicted children; and with loving kindness shows his mercy toward them. It is not in places of splendor, but among the true and blessed where we find sweet hours of prayer. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.

Though many of the dear ones may be cast down, and upon beds of affliction, may the Lord be to them as a shield and hiding place, and may they be strengthened by the grace which is sufficient for them.

Through a kind providence I have been permitted to resume my home again, and have been much encouraged by the strength I have gained since, but am not yet feeling entirely well.

My love to you and sister Gold.

Your sister in hope,

M. E. KEMPER.

THE MINISTER NOT AN INSTRUMENT IN THE HANDS OF GOD, BUT A MESSENGER.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:

I see in your Oct. issue that you have explained why you do not publish all the pieces that are written by the brethren. Any of us know that your paper is too small to print them all, and I for one am glad that you have on hand matter that is more suitable to print than what I am able to present; but till I get in such a fix that I think I must write, and when I have done so my mind is then easy for a while.

Now as to the title of this epistle, it has been an impression of mind to say something on this subject, since I read something in reference to it in some of the LANDMARKS or MESSENGERS. I have failed to find any thing in scripture to authorize such an idea, but still I hear some of the brethren holding forth the idea from the stand. I do not want any brother to think I am trying to pick up an argument with him, but I only want to offer a few thoughts on the subject.

We notice in Malichi 3: 1: "Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."

Now here are two messengers spoken of. The omnipotent God sends forth John the Baptist to prepare the way of the Lord, bringing glad tidings to his beloved, his bride, the Lamb's wife, declaring unto her that the time is at hand, and for her to repent of her sins and be baptized, every one of them.—But notice, he did not bid the Pharisees to be baptized, but said unto them, "Who hath warned you to flee the wrath to come?" Then he said—"Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance." "And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees," and those that do not bring forth good fruit, (that is, the fruit of the Spirit) shall be hewn down. Now where is the true minister or messenger to-day that would like to baptize one that did not bring forth some of the fruits of the Lord's dealings with him?

We notice there is another messenger spoken of in this verse who shall suddenly come into his temple, that is, to the temple of the heart, which is our earthly tabernacle, our bodies. Jesus is spoken of as the messenger of the covenant, declaring to his people, "I will write my laws in their hearts, and imprint them in their minds, and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people."

We notice again in Matt. 11: 2 two other messengers or disciples of John. He (John) sent them to ask of this messenger of the covenant, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Notice the answer the Savior gave them: John was in prison at the time: "Jesus answered and said unto them, go and shew John again these things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." Then he asked them what they went out for to see. "A reed shaken with the wind?" Then he calls John a prophet, yes, more than a prophet. What was written aforetime was written for our learning.—"That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been: and God requireth that which is past."—Eccl. 3: 15. If the poor had the gospel preached to them then, they have it preached to them now. I see no place where we are to send out the gospel to the heathen or any where else. John did not tell his messengers to go to the Savior and preach, but ask him, "Is this he, or shall we look for another?" When the church or brethren set apart one to go in and out before them as their pastor, they say to him, "Ask of the Lord for the glad tidings for us."—Luke 7: 24.

All the people heard him, and the publicans justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him. This shows very plainly that these publicans had believed and justified God in the spirit. The Pharisees and lawyers heard and rejected his counsel in the natural sense, just as they do to-day. They can sit under the sound of the voice, and wonder how it is that some can love and enjoy such as they hate. They do not know that their mind is enmity to the truth. We can't make them believe it; for that is the work of God.

As to the minister being an instrument, we know that an instrument is a tool to work with. When the carpenter gets through with the building he throws his tools in the tool-box to rust. Just so with those that are tools in the hands of the Lord. When he comes along in the final day, gathering up his material to put into his building, he will not be apt to put in the tools into the building. I for one do not want to be a tool. I want to be part of the building. We read where the minister is compared to the eye. The eye is not an instrument, it is part of the body, and the foot and hand all are part of the building not made with the hands, eternal in the heavens.

Dear brother Gold, I submit these few thoughts to you to do with them just as you think proper. If you think it will be any benefit to your readers why lay it before them; if not, throw it in the waste basket. I have not written this for any special one, and through no ill feeling to any one; for we do not all agree, only on the salvation by grace. Then we should not fall out on these minor points.

We would be glad if you would come out to see us in the Cane Creek Association.

With love to you and brethren,
D. W. SAWYER.

CHRIST'S GRACIOUS CALL.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11: 28.

As a stream of living water to a thirsty, perishing traveler, as a reprieve to a condemned criminal, so is the voice of mercy to the self condemned sinner. These blessed words to the weary and heavy laden soul are rest indeed when experimentally realized in the heart. These are words replete with mercy and interest that never lose their charm with age to the weary. They are as food to the hungry. We may eat a thousand times, yet the food is still relished by the hungry. So the precious promises of God bring the same refreshment to the soul, however often they may have been received before.—All fulness and riches are included in the divine word, if we only possess the key of faith to unlock the ark in which it is contained. How great and excellent are the scriptures: they never lose their power and sweetness. After the long lapse of ages, God's promises to believers are as firm and consoling to his people now as at the beginning. Christ's words to the weary and heavy laden sinner are as full and free to those who have ears to hear the gospel now as when first uttered. O how thankful we ought to be for them. Let us lift up our hearts to the Father of lights to open our eyes and prepare our hearts to understand and appreciate the grace exhibited in these divine words of our redeemer.

But who are the persons here addressed by the Saviour? We answer in short, convicted sinners who are laboring under a sense of guilt and sinking under a burden almost too grievous to be borne. Surely Jesus had reference to these, or such as are weary and heavy laden. Are all men weary and heavy laden? Do all men feel so. Our Saviour came not "to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." He called those who are weary, "those who are condemned in their feelings, those who feel and realize their sinfulness to come unto him for rest. These are the ones embraced in our text, yes dear weary, heavy laden soul, Jesus speaks to you. He speaks to you especially. Do not think therefore that you are not addressed here because of your sins being grievous or many, because you are burdened with a deep sense of your defilements and continual imperfections. No, let none of these things deter you from coming to Jesus. His words are to all such as you are, yes dear soul, the great Shepherd of the sheep has a special regard for you, hence the merciful words of the text. "He carries the lambs in his bosom, and gently leads those that are with young." The kind condescension of Jesus to the humble penitent is set forth in the scripture in many remarkable words, such as he will "comfort all that mourn," and he will give unto them that "mourn, in Zion, beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Then let those who are walking in darkness and troubled in spirit, let all who are harassed and cast down with manifold temptations and sore inward conflicts, which cause them to express their feeling in groanings that cannot be uttered in words, come unto Jesus. He will give you rest.

Unworthy and wretched as you may feel yourself to be, he passes you not by in reproach and condemnation, but addresses you in tender affection and says: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Having noticed the subjects of this address, let us now contemplate the character of him from whom it proceeded. His name is Immanuel, God with us. The angel to Joseph says: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins" and when our Savior asked his disciples who he was, Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And Christ himself, because he was born of woman, often called himself the Son of man. Wonderful being, God and man united in the person of Jesus. The prophet says, the child born, the son given, shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father and the Prince of peace." He is elsewhere called "Faithful and True," His name is also called the Word of God." He is styled "King of kings, and Lord of lords"—He is the Redeemer, the Savior, the one Mediator between God and man, the great High Priest, the Advocate, the great Shepherd of the sheep, the Judge of quick and dead. Just before he uttered our text he declared his divine power and knowledge. He says, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father, and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." He who was in the "form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God." While he claims to be God our all," yet he is not ashamed to call his people, his brethren. He took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed or nature of Abraham, and the reason why we may come boldly to the throne of grace is because we have an High Priest that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and the reason given why we should come unto him is because he is meek and lowly in heart.

One other question and then we are done for the present. How must we come? Not by a bodily approach—This is impossible. Coming unto Jesus is surely a spiritual approach, in which he is apprehended by the enlightened mind in his true character. It is to realize that he is indeed the Son of God, the Savior of sinners. In this coming the soul is operated on by an Almighty power, yet the soul is conscious of no restraint except the irresistible drawing towards Christ, produced by the love of God shed in the heart, and the greater the manifestation of this love of Christ the more freely the soul seems to come, under the sweet influence of this grace. The affections spontaneously go forth to him who now appears altogether lovely. Here the weary soul experiences a sweet, joyful rest. Here the soul may rest secure upon this firm foundation. Well may the name of Jesus sound sweet in a believer's ear. Here he may read his titles clear to mansions in the skies, where ere long we hope to be transported, there to enjoy rest, sweet rest that remains to the people of God.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

Inclosed you will find a letter to me written by brother P. H. James, of Clarksville, Ark. If you believe as I do that it breathes the spirit of the first converts to christianity I would be glad that you would give it a place in your paper. It may cause the Primitive Baptists to consider that it is a duty enjoined upon them throughout the Bible to look after the poor and needy. "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

I could quote passage after passage of scripture to prove that this is a christian duty, and where the grace of God has been shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost it will prompt those in whom it dwells to bear each other's burdens. Those who have relieved one of Christ's afflicted ones will have a better evidence that he belongs to Christ in that great day when the sheep are divided from the goats, than if he had cast out devils and done many wonderful works.

Brother Gold, I hope you will use your influence in trying to raise sufficient funds to build us a house to meet in, where we can worship God in spirit and in truth—where the gospel can be preached to the poor without money and without price.

I have felt for the last twenty years that I should live to see a revival among the Primitive Baptists—a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, when the gospel will be preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven—when many shall run to and fro, and knowledge be increased, till it covers the earth as the waters do the great deep. The Lord's set time to visit Zion is near at hand. The kingdoms of this world will soon become the kingdom of the Lord and his Christ. "At evening-time it shall be light."

I have not written this for publication, but have just written a few thoughts as they have come to my mind.

May the Lord bless you, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

WM. GREAVES.

Elizabeth City, N. C.

MR. WM. GREAVES—DEAR AND AFFLICTED BROTHER:—

Yours of 24th ult., acknowledging the receipt of the little sum we sent you, is to-hand, and I was proud to learn it had gone to you safely. I am now sorry we did not have more to send you, but hope you may be sustained by the God of Israel; for he is a present help in time of need, and if he sorely afflicts you it may be for your good; "For all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

If we are brought low by the ills he sees fit to bring on us, if possible, let us try to be reconciled to his providential dealings with us. "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord," and, "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him." There is a certain amount of trouble, trials and afflictions allotted to each of God's children while traveling through this thorny maze. Of late I have been made to see that all is "vanity and vexation of spirit." This old world nor any thing in it has any charms for me. There is nothing I have any pleasure in but communion with my Lord, my brethren and my little family. I can always say with Job: "I am made to possess months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed unto me."

If I did not have my blessed Savior to lead and guide me through this vale of tears, knowing what I do about man, I fear I would be as a maniac, knowing that at his very best estate he is altogether vanity, and all his works are vain. But, my brother, Jesus has promised that he never would leave nor forsake us. What a precious promise!—Now as we have promise of his guidance and protection, and are all one in Christ, and partakers together of his heavenly calling, let us love one another. How are we to show our love for them? By esteeming them better than ourselves, laying down our lives for them, and enduring all things for them. And if any be poor in this world's goods, or rather if any are helpless and are in need of food and raiment, administer to their necessities. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." "Do good unto all men, and especially those of the household of faith." While here in the flesh is the time to do good unto our brethren.—We will not live but one life in the flesh. As I said to you before, it is the duty of Primitive Baptists to see after and help the poor of the flock.

Now I will tell you what I think would be right and sustained by every church of our order, which is the only church, in the United States and elsewhere, to have a church fund, kept up by voluntary contribution. Let each member that is able contribute what he is willing to, then authorize the Deacons to give to such as have need.

I have been told by those who are acquainted with church history, that at the split and previous to that, Primitive Baptists had what was called the Bible Board, and that Mission Boards killed the Bible Boards.

Now my brethren, because the Missionaries have gone to one extreme, and they too to satisfy their lust for filthy lucre, we need not go to the other. We may, for fear of doing what we think wrong, not do right. Now I believe the Deacon's hands are tied in a great many churches, and if their hands are tied what use have we for them?—Just merely waiting on the communion table is not all they ought to do. Here in our country, and it may be the case in other places, the majority of us have but little or no money only once a year, and brethren that would be perfectly willing to give to any in distress are probably destitute themselves. Deacons then cannot have the heart to call on those in such condition. Of course if we have no funds on hand we ought to divide our living. If we have a church fund any embarrassment is avoided and the church is not burdened at a time when she is less able to bear it. Then another thing. Our Associations convene generally at a time when money is scarcest, and very often poor brethren are chosen as messengers and probably fail to go when it may be that they desire very much to do so but cannot because they have no money to bear their expenses. Then the church ought to bear their expenses in part at least, and if the means are ready for them they have no excuse in that respect. We have in our church, New Providence, such a fund, and it is for our convenience, and not to pay any body to preach or any thing else, but is for those that have need.

Now, my dear brother, as you requested me to tell you how many we are, and the state of our churches, I will say we are few in number, but are at peace. There are no dissensions among us that I know of, and we are endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and my desire is that the God of peace may guide and ever keep us as the apple of his eye, and preserve all his children until Jesus comes the second time, without sin unto salvation.

Yours, in hope of eternal life,

P. H. JAMES.

TOUR.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD, AND LESTER:—It was my pleasure to spend the latter part of August, and the month of September, among churches of your State, filling appointments almost daily, commencing at the Country Line Association, and closing at the Little River Association.

My appointments were mostly in Rockingham, Randolph, Chatham, Johnston and Wake counties. On this trip I met many preachers, and numerous kind brethren, who showed me much favor, for which I desire to be thankful. The trip was very pleasant to me, and I was favored to preach the word I hope.

The brethren in North Carolina love the truth and rejoice in the hope of eternal life.

While on my trip there my wife informed me of the loss of a valuable horse. Since my return home thieves have robbed my smoke house of nearly all my pork. The times look dark to me. May the Lord have mercy on us all.

On my return home I found my family all well, for which I desire to be thankful to the giver of all blessings.

TO BROTHER GRAY.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—ESTEEMED BROTHER IN THE LORD,—Vol. 21: December 1st, 1887, No. 2 of ZION'S LANDMARK has just come to hand, and this moment I have finished reading it through once, and as usual I have been highly interested in the reading matter contained on its pages, if I know myself. But the piece headed experience, on the 25th page of the LANDMARK, and closing on the 29th page, signed, G. A. E, which leaves a vacuum in my mind, and it appears that he has given you the liberty to give his name and address to any brother or brethren, either privately or to publish it as you will. Now Brother Gold, if not asking too much of you, will you please give the name of the Elder who baptized G. A. E. and his favorite Elder spoken of on page 26, second column and about one third the distance down from the top, also please give G. A. E's full name and Post Office address, either privately or in the LANDMARK, as you may choose, and oblige an unworthy brother if one at all.

WM. J. TYNER.

Will Brother Gray please give the desired information. Baptists like to know each others' names.

NOTICE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

The church at Pleasant Hill, Iredell Co, N. C., received David T. Liles and Susan A. Liles into their fellowship from the church at Watson's.

David T. Liles was acting as clerk at Pleasant Hill, which withdrew fellowship from them, and is not responsible for their conduct; for they are no longer members of the Primitive Baptists.

Done by order of conference on Saturday before 2nd. Sunday in dec. 1887.

ANOTHER YEAR—1888.

Time has rolled us into the beginning of another year. The events wrapped up in its folds are unknown to mortal man. We must wait for the unfolding of these things, nor can man's impatience hasten such developements.

Restless and curious as man is, and full of invention as he professes to be, he yet has never gone one second in advance of the motions of time to foretell or foreknow a single event. But the Lord foretells new things before they spring up: Isaiah; 42: 9. This is what no man can do. No false god, nor devil, nor deceiver can foresee or foretell a new thing, or a thing that never occurred. The works of God are displayed in wonders that proclaim his eternal power and wisdom. God is absolutely illimitable in all things, and does all his pleasure every where and always. There is not a creature on earth that does his pleasure in a single thing, in the full sense that God does his pleasure in everything. God also declares the end from the beginning, saying from ancient times he will do all his pleasure, and his counsel shall stand.

What event then ever occurs that can defeat his purpose, or fail in its place and office to serve in the accomplishment of his will? Nothing. The predestination of God is deep and profound as eternity. We show our folly by striving as the pot-sherds of the valley about a matter that we creatures of a day or moment know nothing of.

But we desire to bow with reverence before the majesty of God, whose wisdom, mercy, and power I desire shall determine and control my life in every step and also my eternal destiny.

In the future, as in the past, we hope to correspond with the saints, and in our humble and imperfect way serve them in proclaiming the sovereignty of God, and the blessed estate of Zion. May the greetings of peace and love from God embalm your souls, and the spirit of truth guide us in the remnant of our days. And may they be devoted to his praise.

P. D. G.

WHAT IS SAID.

A few nights ago, while waiting for a train, I met a man of the world of varied and large experience, and of shrewd observation. The conversation between us turned on the Primitive Baptists. He said, the original panel of them, meaning the old time ones, the old fashioned ones, were thoroughly faithful and honest, that they would always pay their debts: but he said, there are some rascals among those that have come in of late.

He said if his stock got into the fields of other people they would dog, beat, or otherwise injure the stock, and not let the owner know it, but that if one's stock gets into the field of a Primitive Baptist that Baptist would walk three miles to let the owner of the stock know that his hogs or other stock was in his crop, and would not injure it.

If Baptists do not show by their conduct that he that is in them is greater than he that is in the world, or that a purer spirit than any that is in the world is in them, then let them forever hold their peace against all other denominations. While we depend in no sense on good works for salvation, yet if our works are not better than those that do depend on their works to save them, what evidence have we that we are saved?

P. D. G.

HOW ABOUT THIS?

Suppose one comes to the church who is a Missionary Baptist, and relates a satisfactory experience, desiring to become a member with us, but he claims that his baptism into the faith of the Missionary Baptists is sufficient, because it was performed by a man who was himself baptized by a Primitive Baptist, though at the time of the baptism of the applicant the administrator was a Missionary Baptist. Is this baptism good? If so why not remain among the Missionary or New School Baptists? If they have the right baptism have they not all else? Is the doctrine of Christ divided? Can a denomination have part of the ordinances and not have all?

If a baptism performed by a Missionary who was himself baptized by a man who was once a Primitive Baptist is better on that account, would it not be still better to be baptized by a Primitive Baptist himself into the fellowship of the Primitive Baptists? The two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper are an index to the true church.—They must correspond with and fully answer to the doctrine of the bible.—There must be no broken link. We see that a baptism performed by a disciple of John the Baptist even would not answer, but the baptism must be unto Jesus—not unto John; Acts 19: 1-6. We consider the above authority sufficient to require all that come to us to be baptized, unless they were baptized before the division among the Baptists. When the separation was made it was upon principle. The Missionaries held to doctrines and ways that we do not hold, and we hold to the doctrine and way that they do not believe. We cannot therefore walk together because we are not agreed. If they are right we are wrong. If we are right they cannot be. If any love them and what they hold then we say they should go to them, and be identified with them. If any love us and believe what we hold then let them come to us freely, and come as we come, by the door. There should be no foolish wrangling between us and other denominations. Let them believe as it seems good to them. We also desire the same liberty. But as much as possible we should live peaceably with all men, whether they believe as we do or not; though to eat or worship with them and be joined to them is quite another matter.

If we should depart from our position on this matter and admit those into our churches who bring not the doctrine of Christ, and who contend not for the faith once delivered to the saints, we would be false to what we believe and what we profess. Any among us that desire an affiliation with those that do not believe as we do are not of us, and the sooner they go to those that they believe with the more consistent for them, and the better for .

P. D. G.

THEIR RULE OF MEASURE

A few days ago I heard a Missionary Baptist say, that the Convention that met recently at Durham was a wonderfully spiritual meeting.

What do you suppose was his guide or proof to determine that it was so wonderful a meeting? It was that a large amount of money was paid in to save souls with: yet he said no effort was made, nor any striving, nor calling for money.

But the very object of the meeting was to collect money. The committees and boards made their reports, and the many willing speakers all made their speeches, and the preachers all delivered their sermons, with the view of obtaining money: and all the conversations of their people are seasoned and dressed with this clear-cut feature in their style, namely, that they desire money, and must have it, to accomplish their purposes.

They labor and toil for money, and they succeed. They have their reward. How different from the Baptists of olden times.

What strange teaching would it be to find anything at all like that in the Bible. Yet they call their course progress and ridicule us because we contend for the good old way of the Bible.

P. D. G.

WHY IS IT SO?

"For the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Luke: 16:8.

The children of this world know how to employ the means within their reach in order to make things favor themselves. They are alive to the interests of their race or generation. It does not require any special or extra training to make men quick to perceive the advantages there are in having money, homes possessions, etc; or to flatter, or to deceive others in order to gain something for themselves' How they toil and labor to gain a little money. Through what rains, cold, or heat will they go, and what exposures and risks will they make to secure to themselves the fleeting joys of this fading world.

It is in their Generation—or in the corrupt race, or stock of Adam, or earth that the children of this world are so wise. All that there is of them, soul, body, spirit, or whatever there is of man by nature is all comprehended in this generation, and is therefore most fully in its native element, or life, and therefore it is natural and easy for it thus to act. There is no opposing force within its nature, nor is there anything, power or influence outside of its nature that opposes such a course. Most fully therefore are all the forces and powers of the children of this world directed and occupied in the affairs of this generation.

Then too the objects and things of this generation, that enlist the attention of the people of this race, are within full view, and they think within their reach. They are objects of sense and sight, and not objects of faith. It requires no denial of self to follow or seek them. It is perfectly consistent with natural reason to seek and pursue them and is considered a mark of wisdom by all this world.

But the children of light are to seek what they cannot see, and to seek in a way that is a cross to nature, and are to deny themselves of the things nature craves, and do not see or know by human wisdom, or reason, that they will finally succeed in this matter.

Besides they are opposed by foes right in their own nature, and must endure the opposition of outside pressure as well as foes within that appear as no foes, for they are deceitful.

How many hindrances rise up and exert themselves within the child of God that would decoy him from the way of truth. How a cold day, or the cost of some money, or the glare and charm of worldly ease, or the fear of failure, or the dread of being deceived, may swerve the child of God from the straight and narrow way.

While it is the obedient that eat the good of the land, how we are inclined to bring an evil report as the ten spies did, and say we cannot take the land, our hearts faint by the way.

Those children of the resurrection who make friends of the mammon of this world by a wise and proper use of worldly goods and matters, find an enduring habitation in the fellowship of the household of faith. For the faithful do receive in the heartiest fellowship all those that are righteous in the unrighteous mammon. Besides this, those that are wise and righteous in all matters of a worldly sort have the answer of a good conscience.

To fail in the sense that we find all our righteousness as filthy rags, and all our conduct as falling short of faithfulness, is the experience of every child of God. How blessed though to feel that an everlasting habitation welcomes all the children of light who walk in the light.

SEED-GROWING.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, HIGHLY ESTEEMED FRIEND:—Will you please give your views through the LANDMARK from Mark 4: 26, 27, 28, 29 particularly from the last verse, and you will very much oblige one who loves the truth of our blessed Lord and Master, and longs to know more and more of his glorious teachings.

Truly,

A FRIEND.

“And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.”

In this chapter Jesus uses many parables to set forth the nature of the kingdom of God. The different parables are all needed to illustrate the man-ifold nature of that kingdom. Hence no two parables are just the same. If you were to describe the eye you would not use the same words and ideas that are proper to be employed in describing the ear, yet the words would be of the same language, and would describe what is as much a member of the same body as the eye is.

The kingdom of heaven is manifold both in its nature and its operations.— One parable represents the act of sowing seed, and the way Satan picks up seed that do not fall into good ground, and also how seed that fall into good ground always yield a good harvest.

Another shows that in the beginning this kingdom is smaller than all others, as a grain of mustard seed: but when grown it is greater than all others.

In this parable he shows that the kingdom of God is as if a man should cast seed into the ground, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

To the man who casts seed in the earth there is a mystery about how the seed grows. He cannot tell how it does grow. He knows that it grows in the night as well as in the day, and whether he is watching it or not. There is a power in the earth that yields strength to the seed, for the earth brought forth fruit of herself. First the blade, or first shooting forth of life, as the blossom or promise of a crop. Then next comes the ear, or the first form of the fruit.— Then comes the full corn in the ear. So is the manifestation of the kingdom of God. Now Jesus is the vine, and God the Father is the husbandman. So Jesus is the seed of corn planted in the earth.

When Jesus was born of Mary, or manifest in the flesh, he was as a child, and as such he must increase or grow up in wisdom and stature. Did he as an infant, as a child, as born of woman, know or comprehend the mystery of God? This seed wholly a right one, incorruptible, planted in the earth grew both day and night, whether in darkness or the light, and increased in wisdom and stature. In his first appearance was the blade—soon after the ear—then the full corn. When he is ripe he is at once gathered by the husbandman into the garner.

Now there is in the experience of the child of God an illustration of this. The kingdom of God is within you, and it cometh not with observation.—You cannot comprehend it. There is a mystery. First there is the blade or some token or promise. Then the ear or shape and form, the manifestation of life. Then follows the full corn in the ear, the filling up of the man, the perfection or ripeness of fruit, the growth in grace and the growing up into Christ in all things.

The strength is all in Jesus. We know that seed brings forth of its own kind. Sow it in what soil you may it yields its own kind. The strength of the soil puts it forth after its own kind. So in Jesus is our fruit found to his praise. While manifest here in earth the growing is in the Lord, and after his own order.

We do not understand how it grows. What a power too there is in a little grain of corn to burst up through the clods and grow. The power of God causes the seed to grow and yield its increase.

But how does the old stalk appear as the corn ripens? Why it loses its beauty and sap and life. The christian, as he grows and ripens, often complains of his dullness, and oh how lifeless and barren he feels, how unfeeling, how hard-hearted. He has not the good lively frames and feelings he had in the spring and summer, or years ago. But so it is with the stalk of corn as it hardens into fruit. The strength is all gone into the grain, the growing is done, and the corn is ripe.

What a mystery is there even in Jesus in the flesh. He learned obedience by the things he suffered. As a man he was compassed with infirmity. Why should he pray to his Father if he was not compassed with weakness? It was as God that he knew all things, and not as man. Jesus as a man was verily a man. But he was holy, yet he was made sin for his people. Then in him is the kingdom of God, and he is the kingdom sown in the earth, or manifest in the flesh. He knew the kingdom of God as it appeared and grew and ripened. He was shown all things of God in the revelation of the will of God in him.

Now there is in us a manifestation of this mystery of grace in the measure of faith that Christ Jesus hath dealt to every one of us, or there is a revelation of Christ Jesus in us first in the blade, or manifestation of spiritual life, then in the clearer manifestation of the ear or life of Jesus, as a new man in fulness of stature, and then finally in the full corn in the ear ripe and mature. Then the husbandman gathers us into his garner. We know that when the husbandman sees his fruit ripe he gathers it.

There is many an one that says, I see no use for me on earth.—Why does the Lord keep me here? I see no reason why. But you are not yet ripe to be gathered. Your work of faith and labor of love is not done. The ripening process is not complete. When the fruit is brought forth imme- diately he puts in the sickle, because the harvest is come. He is the judge of that. God does nothing before the proper time, nor does he delay his coming.

I feel that this is a deep subject, and that I have scarcely hinted at it. May my friend be favored to grow up into Jesus in all things who is the head of all principality and power.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Bible, the book of all books, gives instruction as to the ways of honest upright living here in this world. No one can expect to live righteously who does not observe its laws.

In the present day we note great distress in the land because of the inability of many to pay their debts. This is much to be deplored. For what is more needful in the earthly, ordinary business sense of that word to enable a man to pass along easily than to be free from debt?

What are some of the reasons that so many are in debt? One is a violation of the bible order that a man is to labor working with his own hands. The bible says six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. Do you observe that many people do not labor on Saturday? Many do not labor well any day of the week. But if you wish to see a waste of time and labor go to town on Saturday, and you will see nearly every laborer there doing nothing or worse.

Some are drinking, others are buying what they do not need often. Some of our members hardly go to their meetings on Saturday, either because they go to town, or because they are busy selling or trading on that day. Think of people losing one-sixth of their time in loitering, and often in doing worse, buying what they do need, or drinking liquor.

Few men labor hard as people did before the war.

Again, people buy perhaps one hundred times as much as they did before the war. Many farmers now buy their meat, flour, butter, and almost every thing else they eat, and about all they wear, and almost all their fertilizers. Many of them too give mortgages, and are therefore bound to buy from certain merchants. For when ones gives a mortgage his credit is much impaired, and he pays much more for his goods often, because he is limited to buy from the man to whom he has given his mortgage; and because often sellers put a heavier per. cent. on time prices of their goods, although the debts may be well secured.

Let farmers produce their own supplies of food for man and beast. Then let them put the balance of their labor in a money crop. Let them buy less fertilizers so-called, gather more manure from their own lots and farms, cultivate fewer acres, but make the land richer, and cultivate better. Let part of your land rest every year, and it will yield its strength more willingly. In Israel land rested.

When Israel obeyed God they had nothing to borrow, but sold to others, and were the lenders. When we observe the laws of industry and economy—saving everything and applying it to a good purpose—we may expect to prosper.

Of course I do not mean that we are not to go in debt at all. For a business man cannot well avoid making some debts. But Baptists have the name of paying their debts when they are due.

P. D. G.

WHO DID IT ?

Who crucified Christ? Both the Jews and Gentiles did. Here Herod and Pilate agreed. All the enemies of the truth united and conspired to do this, and were gathered together or agreed to do what God's hand had determined beforehand to be done.

"The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together.

For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done."—Acts 4:26-28. With wicked hands they crucified Jesus, yet did what God determined beforehand to be done. They meant it for evil, but God meant it for good. There is not a man on earth that can harmonize the ways of the just God with carnal reason.

It was not lawful for the Jews to put a man to death. John 18:31. Pilate who condemned Jesus was not a Jew.—John 18:35. Roman soldiers crucified Jesus. John 19:23. We are told by Jesus himself that he should be delivered into the hands of Gentiles, and be crucified by them. Matt. 20:18,19.

This fully shows that both Jews and Gentiles, from the rulers to the soldiers, all conspired and acted together in putting Christ to death.

So he died for both Jews and Gentiles. For if our sins did not help to put Christ to death, or if he did not bear our sins in his own body on the tree, we have no part nor lot in the matter.

Strange, deep and gracious, profound, soul-melting, and precious mystery that I should live by him whom I slew, or that my sins should be washed away in that blood which my sins caused to flow. As in putting Christ to death all enemies agreed, so in that blood all enemies are destroyed. P. D. G.

TO THE YOUTH.

I feel that it would be a good thing for our children and other young people to give more attention to singing than many of them have been doing. It would be a good thing if grown people, parents, and others devoted some time to that good exercise.

To do this let parents, encourage their children to sing by singing with them, and by sending them to singing schools, when they can, and by neighbors meeting and singing.

We have books published that contain good tunes and good words.

We should use the gifts and opportunities granted us in this matter as in other callings. In youth too is the choice time to learn to sing.

P. D. G.

FEET-WASHING.

"If I then your Lord and master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one anothers' feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

How the people of God should love one another, and should seek the peace and comfort of each other by being at each others' feet, not only in the literal act of washing each others' feet, as occasion serves, but in all their conduct towards each other, and their dealings one with another they should follow the meek and humble example of Jesus in serving one another. There are so many ways of doing this. But people may perform the literal act of feet-washing, and yet not at all serve the Lord in it, unless they know what Jesus did.

Obituary.

NANCY TEMPLE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Please give space in ZION'S LANDMARK for the obituary of my dear mother, Nancy Temple.—She was born in Johnston county, N. C., August 19th, A. D. 1815. Her parents, William and Rachel Allen, were Primitive Baptists. She was married to R. H. Temple, on Sunday, November 5th, 1837. She was the mother of seven children, three sons and four daughters; all of them are Primitive Baptists except the oldest daughter. Mother professed a hope in Christ soon after she was married, and united with the church at Hannah's Creek, Johnston county, N. C. Was baptized by Elder Barbour, together with his wife and one of mother's sisters, but the date is unknown to me.

In the fall of the year A. D. 1853, father moved from Johnston county, to Wake, county, N. C., into the vicinity of Willow Spring church. Therefore mother obtained a letter of dismissal from the church at Hannah's Creek and united with the church at Willow Spring on Saturday before the 4th Sunday in February, 1856. She remained an orderly and faithful member thereof, until her death, which occurred at 12 o'clock, Wednesday, July 20th, 1887, at the age of 72 years, wanting 29 days.

I do not feel that I can speak too highly of her noble character, her christian walk, generous spirit, and excellent virtues. She was honest, assiduous, careful, veracious, and opposed to all immoral conduct. Her advice to me would generally be for my good, which I would remember during temptations, and have therefore escaped much trouble.

Mother lived with the Baptists over 40 years, and lived in peace too. She was faithful to attend her church meetings unless providentially hindered. I remember when I was a boy, father (like many others) seemed to care more for making bread than for church meeting days; consequently mother would have to walk three miles to the church, being mindful of the injunction, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Matt. 4:4. She was not delicately constituted though she suffered at times with a "nervous affection" and "dyspepsia." She lived to see her children all married but myself; they married in Primitive Baptist families.

I was speaking to her a few months before she died about the great contrast between the happiness of the Angelic host, and the awful state of those that will be rejected of God; that her children were greatly blessed (if not deceived,) six of them Primitive Baptists, two of their companions also; and the other three being the same in sentiment: we meet together and all agree. She said, "she used to think before each of us was born, that she would be willing to suffer for our sake, (as a mother has to do,) if she knew we would live respectably, and at last be saved." She was taken down with Chronic Gastritis about nine years ago, was in a very depressed state nearly twelve months, but finally recovered. She thus remained until a few weeks before her death, she was attacked again with Chronic Gastritis. We called to our assistance Dr. J. J. L. McCullers, he gave her momentary relief, but she gradually passed away. She was confined to her bed but a few days, though she suffered greatly over four weeks with high fever, sick stomach, nervousness &c.

I believe she was impressed with the idea that the time of her departure was nigh, for about two weeks before she died, soon after noon, she came into an adjoining room to me and laid down. While lying there I heard her praying. As soon as practicable I went to her and she said she wanted some body to assist her and keep the flies from her face while she lived, for it would not be long. She afterwards expressed a willingness to die, if her time had come; and two days before her death she said she wanted to die. She died from failure of the heart's action, doubtless caused by the condition of her stomach.

Her relict was taken the next evening and conveyed to the old grave-yard and in the presence of her husband, children, grand-children and many sympathizing friends, was deposited in the silent tomb. (About eighty yards from were I was when I hope I was first arrested by the divine Spirit). I believe I received a token of her death about a month prior to the time; I therefore had no hope of her recovery; and while she was crossing the cold portals of death, I could but pray to God to receive her spirit, which I believe he did. I believe she found death the great king terrors, as an enemy disarmed of his power, and only a medium of a glorious retreat from a world of sin and sorrow, and a happy entrance into a land of peace among the glorified throng of redeemed spirits.

For about fifteen years ago, while in a doze of sleep I saw the kingdom of Christ, set up far above the earth and inclosed by a tremendous wall. There was a door in the front of the wall and was the only entrance into the kingdom for the inhabitants of the earth. There was a narrow path from the face of the earth to the wall of the kingdom; and I saw many trying to travel that path. I began to ascend it too, having a desire to enter the kingdom of Christ. But I had not gotten far when I saw a flexuous place of the path. On the left side of the flexure was the pit of eternal destruction, and on the right side was a wall so near the path that it seemed almost impossible for me to pass the flexure, after I saw that all but a few fell into the pit. But my strength was renewed and I passed over the brink of the pit, and heard the lamentations, groans and cries of the lost forever. I saw that their guilty consciences would forever annoy them, as a "worm that will never die." Isaiah 66: 24. Mark 9: 44-46. (Oh! how I desire, like Paul—"to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and man." Acts 24: 16.) I ascended the path to the wall of the kingdom, but was about six feet from the door, on the right side; and could not get in. The porter was standing in the door, but he would not take any in but those for whom Christ entered, and as he called them by name. The porter looked at me but did not at first take me in. I was then afraid I would be rejected and thought, shall I go back and risk myself over that dreadful pit again to enjoy the pleasures of earth? No; I cannot go back, but will stay here and wait while I have strength; and if I perish, I will perish near the door of the kingdom of Christ, desiring to get in. At that moment the porter put me in at the door, and I saw mother, Miss E. B. Fish and brother Alfred Smith standing inside the wall, near the door. While we were there together, Miss Fish and mother received a discharge and passed out through the dark portal of death. I heard Miss Fish groaning and struggling as she passed through, but mother passed through quietly. I then awoke.

No long afterwards Miss Fish united with the church at Willow Spring, and afterwards married Dr. W. Williams, who also was a Primitive Baptist. I was present at her death and she groaned and struggled like I heard her in my vision; and I felt confident she was passing from the church militant, to enter more gloriously into the church triumphant. Mother quietly passed away, as I saw her quietly pass from that kingdom. Then

"Why do we mourn departing friends, Or shake at death's alarm?"

'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,
To call them to his arms.

The graves of all the saints he blest,
And softened every bed:
Where should the dying members rest,
But with the dying head?"

I believe they have both left the church militant to rest with the blessed Jesus. Freed from the cares of this life, freed from all pain and trouble, and cheered with a glorious immortality, sweetly basking in the beautiful rays of the sublime brilliancy of the glorious son of God in the land of glory and peace.

While I know my loss is great and will never hear mother's strong voice on earth any more, singing hymns as she use to do, I feel cheered with the thought that, "to die was gain" to her, and that she is now united with the glorious choir, hymning more perfectly the triumphant songs of the redeemed.

Brother Gold, circumstances and a want of an impression of mind, have kept me from writing this until now; and I have already extended it beyond the common style of obituaries, but I shall not attempt to apologize for the extension.

Yours affectionately,

R. G. TEMPLE.

Myatt's Mills, Wake Co., N. C., Nov. 5th. 1887.

JOHN SIMMONS.

Died in Caswell County, May the 20, 1887, John Simmons, the youngest son of the widow Fancis Simmons. He was in his 25th, year.

His disease was Typhoid fever, and only lived six days after he was taken sick, and has left a broken-hearted mother, three dear sisters, and four brothers, and many dear friends to mourn the loss of such a noble young man. I do not feel capable of describing all the good qualities he possessed.

He never made any open profession of religion, but led a life of honesty and uprightness all his days, and was always very strict to attend preaching, and, if I must judge from his walk through life, I believe he loved the truth.

He believed fully in the Baptist doctrine, and was as punctual in his attendance at church as any other member. His example through life was worthy for all young men to follow. He never had the advantage of the teaching of a father, as he was left fatherless when but a babe. His dear mother strove to raise him in honesty and truthfulness which she did.

His death has cast a gloom over all who knew him. Those who have seen the objects of their affections withered and swept away by the blast of mortality, generally cherish a deep feeling of melancholy under the severe blow. In such circumstances grief is perfectly natural. It cannot be sinful when a mother is called to mourn the loss of a dear child who had not long begun to feel the stormy billows of life, ere the voyage was finished.

When the dark angel of death smote his form, he looked a last farewell to mourning friends, and then his spirit took its flight we trust for heaven. In vain did his mother and friends try to keep him back, to snatch him from the cold embrace of death. God had called him: he was only lent for a season of 25 years. Mother why would you have him back? It is true your son was a great source of pleasure to you and your family, yet faithful and trusting to the end. You resolved to be resigned in all things to your master's will, feeling that the time will soon come when you shall hear the blessed summons, Servant of God, well done, rest from thy beloved employ.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

DESIRE FOR PRAISE.

Lord, let thyself within us shine,
And show our feet the way ;
Let revelation's work divine
Thy law of love obey.

May faith divine possess our souls,
And give the light of truth.
The Holy Spirit be our guide ;
In grace our constant growth.

May glory through this work begin
To crown our faith and love,
And may the light that shines within Return to that above.

In thy light may we see the light
That shines unto that day,
When brightness shall succeed the night,
And grace have perfect sway.

Thus may the graces sweetly blend
In setting forth thy praise,
And all the powers within us tend
To celebrate thy grace.

Then shall thy glory fill the earth,
Thy presence fill the sea,
The children of a heavenly birth
Praise Father, Son and Thee.

REMEMBER JESUS.

The Lord of life his table spread,
With his own flesh and dying blood ;
We on the rich provision feed,
And taste the wine, and bless our God !

May sinful sweets be all forgot,
And earth grow less in our esteem ;
Christ and his love fill every thought,
And Faith and hope be fixed on him.

WARFARE.

"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh ; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. Gal. 5.

This is spoken of the one who is now a son of God, a follower of Christ, a christian, and clearly shows, what is taught throughout the new Testament, that one who has been born again cannot truly be said to be flesh exclusively, nor to be spirit, but possesses, or is composed of both flesh and spirit. The children are partakers of flesh and blood, and are also partakers of the divine nature ; and these two natures or elements in the christian are contrary the one to the other. The flesh is derived from the earthly Adam, and the spirit from the second Adam which is the Lord from heaven.

The dear Savior said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of heaven." That word "again" in this place clearly implies a first birth in the one who is now the subject of a second or spiritual birth. In each of these two births a distinct nature or life is manifested which is exactly like that of its progenitor. The second birth does not change the nature that was manifested in and by the first birth. If it did then the flesh of a christian would not be contrary to the spirit. It appears to me that this distinction is declared by our Savior in the words, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." He does not say "He that was born again is spirit," nor is the word "that" in this place used to designate a man, but clearly expresses the product of the birth in each case, both of which, that which is born of the flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit, being in the children of God. If that which is born of the flesh is not in them, but if they who have been born again are called by our Savior spirit, then how is it possible for one of them to live after the flesh and so die? How then is it possible for such an one with his flesh to serve the law of sin? (Rom. 7: 25.) How is it then that the flesh and spirit being contrary the one to the other is given as the reason why the children of God cannot do the things that they would?

The divine nature or eternal life which we receive in and by the new birth has no more changed the nature of the flesh, including mind and heart, and all that is born of the flesh, than light entering a pit changes one vile and obnoxious thing that is found there. But a great change is produced in the feelings and desires of the man in whom this life has entered. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." John 1. "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light." Eph. 5: 13. Hence both peace and security and comfort can never be felt while these vile things of our depraved nature are in our view, only as the blessed light of life and truth brings us the sweet assurance that our dear Jesus has overcome the flesh, and will, in his own time give us the full experience of the victory. The faith which brings us this assurance is the victory which overcometh the world. 1st John 5: 4.

The difference between the child of God and the carnal professor is, that the former cannot do the things that he would, while the latter can. Since we can never do the things that we would, how precious to us is the glorious truth, that Jesus has fulfilled all righteousness, has provided abundance of good works which it was before ordained that those who are created in Christ Jesus should walk in, and they acknowledge in thankful song in the land of Judah, "Thou wilt ordain peace for us, for thou also hast wrought all our works in us."

That which is born of the flesh will be the cause of sorrow and groaning in the Christian until the day of redemption, when this vile body shall be changed that it may be fashioned like unto the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue even all things unto himself.

Your brother in hope of a blessed immortality,

SILAS H. DURAND.

TRY THE SPIRITS.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER:—

In the Providence of the only wise and true God I am yet a spared object of his amazing mercy for what purpose though is known only to himself, who works all things after the counsel of his own will.

I feel to be of so little account anyway that it does seem a wonder that I am left at all. But I sometimes humbly hope that I am spared to be a follower of his amazing mercy and unbounded goodness to poor, lost and undone sinners. For if saved at all I know it is alone through the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ, and if so it seems to me that I am so vile, polluted, and sinful, and fall so far short of living as one should, who is a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, who though having all power both in heaven and in earth given into his hands, yet when reviled he reviled not again. I feel that I surely have more reason to be thankful, and yet fall farther short of doing so than anybody else on earth.

For I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwells no good thing. Therefore I have no hope only that I know he is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him." As it is written "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth and be ye saved." Not the ends of the literal earth, but those who have tried every refuge of lies and find it avails them nothing. Yet for all this sense of weakness and ignorance, knowing at the same time that the Lord hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty, and hoping that he may be my strength, I feel an inclination, if it be his will, to offer a few thoughts on 1st, John, 4th. chap. and 2nd, verse. Like the children of God in the present day each inspired penman seems to have a natural trait of character peculiar to himself, which stands out prominently in their several epistles. Thus we may see plainly the bold impetuosity and fiery zeal of Peter, the unyielding firmness of Paul, not to speak of the other inspired writers.

John seems to have been more of a loving and affectionate disposition perhaps than any other of the disciples. And as he was loving, so was he beloved—“That disciple whom Jesus loved.” Therefore it seems to me that we find in his writings as much or more of the evidence which is of so much comfort and consolation to the Lord’s little ones. The verse referred to reads as follows, “Hereby we know the spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God.” It seems plain enough that in these words is given a rule or guide whereby those addressed may arrive at a knowledge of the spirit of God. But as to what, or in what way this knowledge has special reference there may be, and no doubt is, a variety of opinions. Now to put in the fewest words, and the plainest way that I know how, to my understanding there is given in this one verse an infallible rule by which the people may know each other. There is much said in the world about the old Hardshell Baptists having secret signs, &c., by which they know each other. They do true enough have a secret by which they know each other, but it is a secret which the world does not, nor can know. It is the secret of the Lord, and is with them that fear him. And as before intimated, I think we may find some clue to this secret in this verse. “For though there are many who are saying, Lord, Lord, (in other words.)

many who claim to be Old School Baptists, yea, even some who have a standing with them that when tried under this test will begin to squirm, like a worm in hot ashes.

Perhaps there is no person professing christianity, professing to believe the Bible to be the book of God’s truth, but what if asked the question, do you believe that Jesus Christ came in the flesh, but will answer in the affirmative. Why of course, everybody believes that pretends to believe the scriptures at all. That is too plainly taught to think of denying it. Prophets foretold his coming. Evangelists and even angels testified to it, and apostles wrote of him afterward. Certainly we all believe that.

Well that is all good enough so far as it goes; but is there not a deeper meaning in the words which we have under consideration. That there is we might say more than one kind of Spirit or more spirits than the Spirit of God, is evident from the reading of the preceding or first verse of the chapter.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God because many false prophets are gone out into the world. In this as in other places in the epistolary writings, the saints are cautioned to be careful as to whom they receive into their fellowship and confidence. While John admonishes to believe not every spirit, because many false prophets are gone out into the world, Peter tells us that there were false prophets among the people, and that there shall be false teachers coming after, bringing in damnable heresies &c. and Paul said he knew that after his departure grievous wolves should enter in, not sparing the flock, &c., Many parallel quotations might be cited, but we deem these enough to show how careful the inspired writers, guided by the Holy Spirit, have been to warn the saints that there was danger ahead.

And it does seem to me that there certainly never was a time when it more behooved the Lord’s people to be on their guard than now. The land is full of lo heres and lo theres; full of Sam Jones’ Talmages; boy preachers, and weeping Joes. But all such as they are so palpably ridiculous that it is no trouble for one born of God to detect and class them where they belong with the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. But the danger is in these Gibeonites, with their old red shoes, ragged clothes and mouldy bread. Who when they wish to make a league with some unsuspecting child, or draw away disciples after them, can preach as hard against means and instrumentalities as anybody, but when they dare do so can shift their position and talk about means of grace with the fluency of a Demosthenes or Cicero. But now beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God. Ask such fellows if they believe that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. For this is the test by which to try the spirits. 'Hereby know ye the Spirit of God.' Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; not only did come 1800 years ago in Bethlehem of Judea.

With every one born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever, it is a present time Jesus Christ (to them) comes in the flesh. Paul to Rom. 8—9 says, "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Again in first Corinthians 3—16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you." Once more, 1st. Cor. 2 ; 10, 11, "But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him, even so the things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God." Now from all this testimony I understand that is the character in whom dwells the Spirit of God that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his, and if he have not the Spirit of Christ, of course he cannot of a truth confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh."

And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of anti-christ, whereof ye have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world.

Does it not then, as before said, behoove us to be careful, see who does, and who does not, make this important confession that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, and when one begins to squirm round it by philosophizing and theorizing to explain it away in a manner, watch him. For while it is to finite minds inexplicable mystery how he is come in the flesh, it is at the same time an incontrovertible truth. But I have already written more than I intended, and yet have hardly hinted at the essence of the subject.

In conclusion I say again, be on the lookout; for every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. Therefore if any man, no matter how well you may have thought of him before, if he begins to try to weave in a thread of means, watch him. You know it was unlawful for the Jews to wear mixed garments.

Yours in tribulation, yet in hope,

M. M. JACKSON.

ARE THE CHILDREN OF GOD COMPLEX?

Scripture testimony alone will furnish the true answer to this proposition and this testimony is witnessed to and confirmed in the experience of the children of God. For the Scriptures are the testimony of the Holy Spirit; and "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our Spirit that we are the children of God:" Rom. 8; 16. "Beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." This makes a distinction between our spirit, and our body or flesh; for the children of God, the brethren to whom Paul thus wrote, were people, or men in the flesh, like himself, whom God had quickened, and "called to be saints, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles."

"And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God; Rom. 9; 26." These were the heathen or Gentiles, who were not God's people with the Jews under the law; but they are both his people and his children under the gospel. To them Paul says, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus:" Gal. 3; 26. Not only was their faith in Christ, but they were also in him; and in his life was their sonship as the children of God. Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God, says John, and is therefore a child of God.

"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself took part of the same. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people;" Heb. 2. Here the names children, brethren, and people apply to the same subjects, beings, and persons, who are partakers of flesh and blood, whose High Priest Christ is, and for whom he was put to death in the flesh, to "save his people from their sins." And so, the children of God are identified with flesh and blood, and are people who have sins, and must die in the flesh. For them, therefore, the Son of God came in the flesh, for the suffering of death; "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage;" Heb. 2. This deliverance of the children whom God gave his Son is from both sin and death, and it embraces and regards them as his people, and as partakers of flesh and blood.

Therefore Paul says, "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death, for what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit:" Rom. 8. How plainly this shows the unity, or joint relationship of the Son of God and his brethren in the flesh! insomuch that "he is not ashamed to call them brethren." Therefore Jesus the blessed Saviour is the true model or perfect pattern of the children of God; for he was made in all things like unto his brethren; and they were predestinated to be conformed to his image, and shall be like him." Sec. Rom. 8; 1st, John 3. So that, both in the flesh and spirit, the Son of God and his brethren are related and identified together inseparably and forever; and as he was, so are they in the world; for they are his, and he is theirs. "My Beloved is mine, and I am his;" Song. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren;" Heb. 2. Jesus, the risen Son of God, said to Mary, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God;" Jno. xx, 17. This expresses their brotherhood with Jesus God-ward, or as God is their Father, and their God. Yet those with whom "the man Christ claims this close and endearing relationship and calls, "My brethren," were lowly men in the flesh, and dying men too; and therefore he had, as a man in the flesh, died, been buried, and come out of the grave for them, to deliver them from death and the grave.

So let us view the Son of God and his brethren as partakers of flesh and blood, and as men and people; for then we shall see and know that both he and they are complex in their being, possessing both divinity and humanity, partakers of the flesh and of the Spirit: as born after the flesh and after the Spirit, and as the sons of men and the sons of God; for all this is true of Jesus and his people and brethren. Jesus Christ our Lord was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead:" Rom. 1; 3, 4. "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead;" 2 Tim. 2; 8. "Knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him," (David,) "that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption;" Acts 2. So says Peter. And Paul says that Jesus "took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross;" Phil. 2. For this reason Jesus most frequently called himself "The Son of man;" for on the side of his honored mother Mary, he was the son of King David, and was most truly a man. Yet God was his Father; and therefore both the dying flesh and the Spirit of life and holiness entered into his being and person, making him truly the Son of man and the Son of God, yet one man. For in his two-fold son-ship, as the son of David according to the flesh, and as the Son of God according to the Spirit, Jesus was not two separate and distinct sons; for he was but one complete person and man, and he himself "The man Christ Jesus" was the Son of God. Therefore his son-ship to his Father and God regarded him and embraced him in his manhood, and in the body of his flesh, as Mary's son, the Son of Man. For the Scriptures do not teach the idea that the Son of God dwells in the body of Jesus, or in the Son of man, yet distinct from his body of flesh; but they clearly testify that Mary's son, "the man Christ," himself was the Son of God. Yet he was as truly the Son of man, as he was the Son of God, according to the Scriptures; for woman was as really his mother, as God was his Father. Therefore Jesus the Son of God, the man of sorrows, must die in the body of his flesh, and be raised up from the dead by the power and glory of the Father, before he could enter into his glory, as MAN, by whom came the resurrection of the dead.

Now as he was, so are we in this world: for he was made in all things like unto his brethren. As born of woman, we are the sons of men: but as born of God, we are the sons of God; therefore we are partakers of the sinful and dying flesh, and of the righteous and living Spirit; and thus we are related to the mortal Adam, and to the immortal Jesus. As in Adam we die; but as in Christ we shall be made alive by his life. This will be the resurrection of the dead in Christ, and the manifestation of the sons of God; for which his dear children now earnestly wait.

Jesus the holy Son of God was, as a man, thus closely related to his people in the flesh: so that he righteously bore their sins in his own body on the cross, died for their sins in the flesh, and thereby redeemed them from the curse of the law, and will save them from sin and death. And his redeemed people, as born again, and as the children of God, are so closely related to the righteous Son of God in his life, which he gives them, that they are truly one with him in the Spirit, as he was one with them in the flesh, and are his brethren, and his Father is their Father.

Therefore the children of God are complex; for they are related to two heads, namely, Adam the creature of God and Jesus the Son of God; consequently they are dual, or two fold in their being, or in themselves. They are truly the children of men in the flesh, and the children of God in the Spirit; for as born of the flesh woman is their mother, and as born of the Spirit God is their father. And so Paul speaks to the brethren in Christ of the outward man, and of the inward man; but these two belong to every child of God, and are so essential to the children of God that without them no son or child of God has ever been manifested on the earth. For the beloved Son of God himself was manifested in the flesh, and the children whom God gave him, whom he is not ashamed to call brethren, are partakers of flesh and blood, and also partakers of the Holy Spirit.

Yet the Lord Jesus has but one brotherhood, and the holy Father has but one set of children, only one family; and every son or child of God is but one son, as was Jesus. To his brethren in the flesh John says, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." And of the young man Jesus, the son of Mary, when he was baptized in Jordan, God the Father said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." But as Jesus the holy man was put to death in the flesh, for the sins of his people and brethren, but quickened by the Spirit; so likewise must all his brethren, the children of God, die in the flesh, because of their sins; but be quickened and raised up from the dead by the Spirit of him that raised up the body of Jesus from the dead. Then they shall perfectly bear the image of the risen and glorified Son of God, as his brethren and joint heirs, and enter into his heavenly bliss and glory.

In the days of his flesh, the Son of God was acquainted with grief, afflicted, reproached, and persecuted; yea, he also suffered in the flesh for sins, the sins of his people: and his righteous life was in antagonism against sin and all the powers of darkness. In a measure this is true also of all the children of God, while they are here in the flesh: for the holy life of Jesus is made manifest in their mortal flesh, as those who are born again, and have passed from death unto life. For their sinful and dying flesh has not yet been quickened, born from the dead, and changed, as their now mortal bodies shall be in the resurrection of the dead; therefore there is now a warfare, affliction, and suffering to every child of God in the flesh, and they all are made to know the fellowship of Christ's sufferings. His cup of suffering, and his baptism of death are theirs according to the measure given to each one; and this is to them a mournful way, and a sorrowful experience. For it is sowing in tears, that they may reap in joy; and dying that they may enter into life. In all this they follow Jesus, their fore-runner into glory; and when his sufferings unto death are fulfilled in their flesh, then his resurrection unto life shall be fulfilled in their mortal bodies, in quickening and raising them up out of death unto immortality, eternal life, and heavenly glory. They shall be no longer complex, as now, as bearing the image of Adam after the outward man, and the image of Jesus after the inward man; for mortality in them shall be swallowed up of life, and they shall bear altogether the perfect and lovely image of the heavenly, and shall be holy and without blame before God their Father in perfect love. "Neither can they die anymore: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," said Jesus. In this hope I am yours,

DAVID BARTLEY.

SONG IN THE NIGHT.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, BELOVED BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I feel unworthy thus to address you, yet I feel my heart thus drawn in the fellowship of the gospel toward you, and in my lonely solitude I feel to drop you a few lines.

I am now in the home of my grandson, Henry E. Biggs, sitting in the room that my late afflicted daughter occupied, all alone, and here she breathed her last. I somehow realize a sweet influence pervading all around, yet the stillness of death and the absence of the loved one tells the sad tale that she is gone; yes, gone to her long eternal home, her body sweetly resting in the grave till the resurrection morning, and her glorified spirit now ranging the fields of immortal bliss in that holy city where the Savior is the light thereof; a land of perfect peace and sinless purity, where all but love is done away. Who can paint the scene of glory, where the ransomed dwell. Dark clouds now cover the sky so that we can hardly see to guide our pen, and the rain is profusely falling, yet the sun is shining under all these dark clouds and it will again appear in all of its glory. It is a dark and a gloomy time for the people and many are discouraged, and even the spirits of some of God's dear children are sad, knowing the want and dis-press that many will realize from the failure in their crops. But we must remember that God reigns and he holds the destinies of nations in his own hands, and the breath of every living creature. He works all things after the counsel of his own will. He will do all of his pleasure. Men cannot make one drop of rain, nor cause one to cease to fall. Our God is a wonder working God. All power is in his hands, and all things are under his control. He is merciful and gracious, and slow to anger. His power is unbounded. He is a God of purpose, and there is no mistake in what he does. O, that mortal man would fear before him. I desire to praise, adore, and love this mighty God, whose watchful eye and special providence has ever been over me, encircling my pathway, in prosperity and in adversity; he has shown me his tender care when the waves of affliction have rolled about me, His blessed arm has held me up and kept me from sinking. He rules in all events both small and great, whether afflictive or adverse, they work together for the good of his chosen. Then great is our God, for even the hairs of our head are numbered and a sparrow does not fall to the ground without his notice; and he hears the ravens when they cry and gives them food to eat.

Great is the Lord, and he is greatly to be praised. Man, by his searching cannot find out the great I AM, altho' he may aim to search into his secret will, but it is hid in the archives of his eternal counsel from the ancient settlements of eternity.

All that finite mortals can know is what he is pleased to reveal to them by the teachings of the Holy Spirit. Eternity with all its awful and solemn realities will unceasingly unfold the mystery of godliness, and the wonders of that salvation that has been revealed by the suffering Son of God, who has been made manifest to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself. O that God's dear redeemed children could dwell more on the wondrous love of Jesus and realize more of that blessed unity of the spirit which flows from love to him, and leads into all the doctrine of Christ. All of which is gloriously combined in the experience of the saints in all ages. It is predestination, election, adoption, justification by faith, sanctification and redemption, and the final glorification of both soul and body in glory, being made like Christ and forever shine in his image. The doctrine of God our Saviour is in one golden chain, and cannot be broken. Repentance and faith are all his gifts. All the train of heavenly truth flows from him and to him is all glory due.

God's dear people are much troubled with their own sins, follies and shortcomings. They cannot see where to complain with their brother and sister, but there are many dark and trying times to the church of God. Those who love the gates of Zion would often faint by the way, did they not realize that Jesus is king in Zion, and he reigns in her behalf; and he has declared that the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. He will conquer all her foes. May the blessed Lord give unto his ministering servants wisdom, love, long suffering and patience to endure when they see the waves of discord and strife arising. May they have clear sight given, and love for the truth which will strengthen them to endure all things. May they remember how blessed are the peacemakers, for theirs is the kingdom of God. May all of his dear people realize this, and may love abound.

I trust I do rejoice in a God of all power, wisdom and knowledge. My feeble, finite mind does not take in the greatness of the eternal Jehovah. I desire with all the powers of my soul to adore him. But I am vile and far from him, but precious truth, Jesus brings us nigh to God through his precious blood and perfect work.

All fullness dwells in him, and there is nothing precarious in his works. All is fixed and sure. He is glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, a God doing wonders. Great is the mystery of godliness. Eternity will unfold its pages to the enraptured wonder of all the ransomed host. Great also is declared the mystery of iniquity, and that will be filled up to its full measure, and the justice and power of God will be declared to an astonished universe, in the just judgment and fiery indignation against sin. God is over all blessed forevermore, and to him every knee shall bow and confess to the glory of God the Father. Every mouth will then be stopped. No replying against God. O my dear brother, may we be found at last with this immeasurable multitude who shall be seen coming up out of great tribulation, having their robes washed and made white by the blood of the Lamb.

Then can we with all the redeemed sing and shout our sufferings over. I feel that you my precious brother, will be there. But will such a worthless worm as I, who am sometimes afraid to die be found at God's right hand. Pray for me, when you have access before the throne. My love to Sister Gold and all the family, and to the faithful with you. Please excuse my poor, wandering, crooked thoughts. I feel my loneliness. I wanted to talk a little with you. In the fellowship of the precious Savior, I am your afflicted Sister.

M. M. Hassell.

EXHORTATION.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER,—DEAR BRETHREN. As my time has expired for the LANDMARK, I enclose the am't for another year, and a few words to the many readers of the same, and hope I may be guided by the spirit of truth in doing so.

I often think I will write something for publication to the dear saints in Christ, but when I think of my own unworthiness I fear that I may write something that would be wrong and hurt the feelings of my brethren; but when I read so many of the precious pieces that are written in the LANDMARK, my heart goes out in love for writers of such pieces, although they are scattered in various parts of the earth; I feel they tell of the travail of my soul from the dark valley of sin and pollution to the time when it pleased the Lord to reveal himself to me as the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. He has put a new song in my mouth, even praise to God.

Once I did not care for religion and mingling with those I now believe are the children of God, but now my chief delight is in assembling with them, and doing anything for them that may strengthen them in his most holy faith; for I delight in the Law of God after the inward man, the hidden man of the heart. The apostle delighted in the law of God, but when he would do things by the spirit of God he saw another law working against the spirit of his mind, so that he could not do the things that he would. This I am taught by experience is the case with all the children of God. For when they would do good evil is present with them; so that they cannot do the things that they would. But the followers of the evil one will do wicked continually, for Jesus said unto them, ye are of your father the devil, and his works ye will do. I presume he was here speaking to those who do not see themselves as sinners, or believe that they commit any acts that are wicked in the sight of God.

They have ears and hear not, eyes and see not, neither do they wish to come in the light, lest their deeds be reproved. But those that have the spirit of the inward man, or those that delight in the law of God, after the inward man, do put off the deeds of the old man by this spirit that dwells within them, which is Christ in you the hope of glory. For they, or as many as are led by the spirit of God, are the sons of God.

It was not my intention in writing this to dwell upon any one subject; for I believe that Jesus has done great things for me, whereof I am glad; and I am willing to give him all the glory from first to last in the salvation of a poor worm of the dust like me. For it is written of him, He shall save his people from their sins (not in their sins.) Therefore his name shall be called Jesus, which means Savior, and he had made a covenant to that effect. This shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws in their mind, and write them in their hearts, and I will be to them a God and they shall be my people; and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother saying, know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: (for this is the reason,) I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more. It should be the aim of every child of God to follow Jesus as near as he possibly could in his walk as a pilgrim and stranger while here upon earth. Let your walk be meek and lowly as the Master's was, ever endeavor to show forth the praise of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light, redeemed us by the precious blood of Christ from the condemnation of guilt and sin, for it is declared that the blood of Christ, his son, cleanseth from all sin. Then dear brethren and sisters, Jesus has washed our robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Surely he has paid all the debt we owe. Then let us ever look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith: for he was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and by his stripes we are healed.

Surely we can say, "Praise the Lord for his mercy endureth forever. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord and whose hope the Lord is. Oh may he ever give me faith to trust in him in all I say or do, and my hope is that at the end of this life I may hear the plaudit, "well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Your brother in hope of a life beyond the grave of immortality.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, BELOVED BRETHREN:—Many of the dear brethren and sisters requested me, while on my tour in North Carolina, to write them when I arrived home, and as it would require much writing to address them individually, I hope a sketch of my trip, given through the LANDMARK, will suffice.

I left Augusta, Ga., early on Friday morning before the third Sunday in August, and arrived in Reidsville, N. C., about midnight, where I was met by Elder J. M. Harris, and conducted to his house, and kindly cared for the remainder of the night. Saturday morning I was carried to the Country Line Association by brother Ruffin Harris, where, I trust, I united in the worship of God with a multitude of brethren and sisters, many of whom I never met before. The preaching was a source of comfort indeed to me. On Monday evening I returned to Reidsville, and spent the night with Mr. Robert Harris and family, who is a warm friend to the Baptists. Tuesday morning Elder J. M. Harris took his horse and buggy and carried me three days to my appointments in the country. It was a pleasure indeed for me to meet and be with Elder F. J. Stone two days. I heard him speak once, much to my comfort. I also met with Elder Bodenhammer, who is an able minister of the gospel. On Thursday night I spoke to a large congregation in Reidsville. Early Friday morning I left for Thomasville, and was met by a dear brother Orrell, and conveyed to the Abbott's Creek Association. Here I met and parted with many of the saints of God that I will never meet any more in time. This was a pleasant Association to me. I was conveyed to the Railroad by a dear brother Buckner, and arrived in Durham in the afternoon; spent the night with old brother Farthing, who is a very active man for his age, and, I think, a firm Baptist. Sunday at eleven o'clock I spoke at the Baptist house, and again at night. I feel that the Lord blessed me in speaking at this place. The door of the church was opened, and dear brother Lee came forward and related the dealings of the Lord with him, was received, met at the water early Monday morning, and the unworthy writer administered the solemn ordinance of baptism. At one o'clock in the afternoon I took my leave of the good people of Durham, arrived in Raleigh, at two o'clock, was met at the depot by brother Temple, and conveyed to his house; spoke at night at the Baptist house. Elder I. J. Taylor met me at this appointment, and accompanied me about eight days. He is indeed a pleasant companion. On Saturday and second Sunday in September I attended a yearly meeting at Clement. Here I met Elders J. B. Parker, and L. P. Adams, the latter is the pastor of the church. Sunday night I arrived in the town of Smithfield, met and heard Elder D. N. Gore preach, a dear brother whom I had long desired to meet. I spoke here on Monday night to an attentive congregation. There is a precious body of Baptists in this town. From here I filled appointments through the country to the Seven Mile Association, where I again met a goodly number of the dear people of God, and several ministers and heard them preach the glad tidings of great joy from a far country. From here, accompanied by Elders Gold and Scott, I filled appointments to the Little River Association. From this point I took my leave for my home in Georgia; arrived safe on Tuesday evening after the fourth Sunday in September, found my family all well, and felt that my heart went out to the Lord in thankfulness. Since my arrival I have attended the sessions of the Upper and Lower Canoochee Associations, which were very harmonious meetings. Dear brethren and sisters, while in your State I sustained the great loss of a very valuable horse, which has left me almost a foot, unable to get another without making a debt over my already indebtedness. I have been quite sick since my return, with cold in the head. During my sickness my smokehouse was robbed, and all of our meat stolen. On last Sunday night while away attending my appointment a part of my cotton was stolen. Financially I am traveling under a dark and dreary cloud, pregnant with threats of my destruction. I hope, dear brethren and sisters, when you read this article, that you all may pour out your hearts unto God in prayer for me, that I may bear all of my troubles with meekness in this world of afflictions.

I remain as ever, your brother and servant, in hope of the gospel.

DEFILING THE TEMPLE.

"It is written, my house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves."—Matt. 21:13.

It appears that the volume of sacred writ from Genesis to Revelation produces some of the most striking and lamentable testimonies and facts showing the effects of original sin, and the total depravity of the posterity of Adam. Even in the early dawn of creation our federal head violated the demands of a just law and thus incurred the sad effect of the penalty annexed to the violation upon themselves and fraternity. Wicked Cain rose in opposition to his brother and slew him, simply because Abel was more righteous than he was. The iniquity of the antediluvians became so intensely great that the declaration of the Lord was, "My spirit shall not always strive with man." There was a great deluge brought upon them for their wickedness, and with the exception of eight souls they were extirpated from the face of the earth. After the deluge wickedness made its appearance again. Depraved mortals decided they would build them a tower that would reach to heaven so they could ascend and descend at pleasure, but they were defeated in their vain imaginations. The Lord confounded their language, and thus blasted their high expectations. The population or inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah were so desperately evil they were totally destroyed by the consuming flames from heaven. The Israelites, whom God had chosen for the lot of his inheritance, after they were so miraculously delivered from the rigid servitude and bondage of the Egyptians, disobeyed the divine precepts of their deliverer, and murmured against their governor, and seemed to have a craving appetite for onions, garlic and flesh pots in Egypt. The entire history of the Hebrews seems to present a people of rebellion and disobedience. What an example is here vividly brought to bear in the history of revolting Israel. Ah, should it not be a solemn warning to us at present. The consequences of obedience and the consequences of disobedience are here plainly taught. When Israel was reduced to a state of abject poverty and want, the production was obedience; but when elevated to a state of worldly prosperity and promoted to honor and aggrandizement, the productions would be vice versa. They would become self-dependent and almost bury that precious name, to wit: their Redeemer, in the great sea of oblivion. These were the characters addressed by the Savior in the most reproving and upbraiding manner, as is presented in the text. Oh, revolting Israel, what hast thou done that the Lord, the holy one of Israel, refuses to visit thee either by prophecy or by Urim? Oh, thou highly favored people of the Lord, why hast thou thus strayed from thy great Redeemer's statues? Why hast thou sat down by the flowing rivers of Babylon? Where is the tuneless harp where delicious notes once sounded the praise of Jehovah? Oh, they are hung upon the weeping willows near Babel's flowing streams. Thou polluted priest, what hast thou done that God refuses to accept thy oblations and sacrifices and gives thee the degraded and shameful title thieves and robbers. Hark, in his humiliation he weeps over thee, O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee. How often would he have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not; no, you have refused the prophets. You have rejected the warning voice of God. You have forsaken his covenant, you have thrown down his altars, you have bowed the knee to Baal. An avaricious disposition and wickedness have led you to pollute the once holy temple, which was dedicated to the solemn worship of God. You have converted it from a house of prayer to a den of thieves and robbers. Now you are ready to reject the Savior, and set him at naught in the face of all his wonderful miracles which he performs in attestation of his doctrine. O, you wicked and unbelieving Jews, your house is left unto you desolate. Your magnificent city, your beautified temple, with all of its costly furniture, its precious gold and silver, shall be taken away by your enemies, and your city totally demolished. You have the form of worship, but the reality is not there. It is written by Isaiah, the prophet, "Mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." Once it was the delight of the ancient worthies to worship God in his holy temple, once the smoke of the morning and evening sacrifices would ascend to heaven as sweet incense, but alas, alas, what a change, a den of thieves and robbers. Jesus rides into Jerusalem amidst the shouts and loud acclamations of hosannas to the king of Israel. He lifts his weeping eyes and beholds Jerusalem, knowing the idolatrous worship of the temple, and the innocent blood that had been shed there, knowing he himself would be set at naught by those wicked priests and must there suffer and die the ignominious death of the cross, knowing that the day would come when not one stone of the temple should be left upon another which should not be thrown down, he weeps, saying, "If thou hadst known; even thou, at least in this thy day the things which belong to thy peace but now they are hid from thine eyes."—Luke 19:42. The succeeding verse contains a prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, which according to Josephus was evidently fulfilled, in the most appalling and lamentable manner. But Jesus proceeds to the temple in fulfilment of that prophecy of Malachi, "And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple." But who may abide his coming; for he is like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap. Those bigoted priests were not able to abide his coming. For he drove them out of his temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, and said, "It is written, my house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves and robbers." Ah, what chagrin, surprise, and excitement all blended together must have been aroused at this remarkable event. But that precious voice continues to echo and re-echo over the marble walls and aisles of the temple. "It is written, my house shall be called the house of prayer," not idolatry, a den of thieves. What a contrast between a house of prayer and that of a den of thieves. O prayer, thou priceless queen, thou hast departed from the glorious temple. Is not this Jewish temple and the worshippers therein a type of the church in the gospel day? If so should we not examine ourselves and the worship of our sanctuaries and ascertain whether we are regulated according to what is written or not. The love of money was the great cause of their irregularities in the temple; and if there are no money changers in the church I am sure there are plenty who desire to be, or rather many gainers. The love of money is causing Zion to mourn. I fear that money is an idol, and is worshipped even among the Baptists. I fear our temples are polluted analagous to the Jewish temple. There are some professed Baptists whose minds are so monopolized in worldly business that they can scarcely sacrifice one day in a month to attend their meetings, and when they do attend their conversation is almost entirely on worldly matters, such as the art of farming, some great enterprise, or some decision made by the Legislature or Congress, &c. Something that is of no utility, nor even in connection with the worship of God.

If our sanctuaries were originally designed or dedicated for such business as this, I, for one, am under a false impression. It is not thus written, for Jesus warns us against worldly cares. Suppose Jesus should visit some of our temples, as he did the Jewish temples, while we were engaged in these evil conversations? I imagine that if the curse of Jehovah, and the thunders of Horeb were staring us in the face, we would not shudder, quake, tremble and dodge any worse. It is written that we should meet together often. What for? To converse about worldly matters? Nay indeed, but to confess our faults, to pray with and for each other. But these admonitions are regarded about as much as the contents of some almanac, or hardly so much, by these negligent church members. Some of the uninterested members are very religious in the presence of their favorite minister, but nowhere else. Just such religion as this is worth nothing. God's all scrutinizing eye beholds us at all times. Yes, we should think of that. Our temples are defiled, our ministers love to live at ease, the deacons neglect their duties, the members have drifted off into Babylon, their harps are hung upon the willows. Go the church, where the singing of birds and the voice of the turtle should be heard, but alas, what do we hear? The busy voice of money changers conversing on worldly matters, the poor minister cast down, heavy-hearted, his wife and little ones left behind, fatigued from riding over the lonely roads, must face their vain conversation on some great boom of real estate, or something of the sort, his heart almost begins to bleed, to think almost everything is on a boom but the church. Alas, alas, poor Zion calls aloud for grief and lamentation, but who, O who, will lament her case? Adieu, ye gay, ye proud-hearted. I will seek the broken hearted who weep when they say of Zion, her glory is departed. Some, like old Elijah, firmly stand, while many have revolted. O Lord, thou alone canst move us. Help us, O God, to remember from whence we are fallen, and to again return to thee. J. D. McELROY.

A RETROSPECTION.

BELOVED BROTHER GOLD:—As the year draws to a close we feel inclined to retro-spect. Many things have occurred during the past year which made us feel very sad and sorrowful, but interspersed along the line we had seasons of great joy and comfort, under which we were emboldened to continue the war against flesh and blood, and the innovations of his Satanic power, who is ever walking up and down in the earth, seeking whom he may devour. His work and operations have been manifested among us, to the extent that the elect would have been deceived by him, were it possible that such things could be done. But thanks be to God, Satan with all his emissaries cannot deceive the chosen and precious. Some of them may for a time under darkness and disappointment, apparently be following in their wake. Yet when it pleases him who wills to disperse the dark clouds which intervene, they see the error of their way, and return to the Lord their God with lamentation and weeping, loathing themselves in his sight; and the result is, instead of being deceived, they are taught more and more the deceitfulness and corruption of carnal nature, and of the infinite purity of our Holy Lord. Often we feel that our feet had well-nigh slipped; but the good Lord in his providential dealing, coupled with love and mercy, reclaimed us, and we are saved by a great deliverance. How thankful and dutiful ought we to be; we who are unworthy of the least favor to be reckoned in that generation which shall ere long live in unsullied bliss and glory forever and ever.

We can but boast in the obedience and righteousness of Jesus, who took on himself our infirmities and sickness, bore all our sin, being smitten and afflicted for us, dying the sinner's death and saving us by his life. He was made to be sin for us, taking on himself the seed of Abraham; made of a woman, and made under the law, to redeem us from its awful consequences, and not only so but taking a part of our flesh and blood that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who thro' fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Hence our final deliverance from death, when he shall come to gather his people from every clime and fashion their bodies like his own glorious body. These things having been applied to the heart of a sinner enable him to rejoice with exceeding great joy, and although through the force of circumstances as operated by Satan he may live in the slime pits of Sodom (Arminianism with its various appendages) yet he is not deceived, his experimental knowledge of the truth condemns him in every hypocritical movement he makes, and often with his harp upon the willow he sits down by the river or Babylon and weeps until a Babylonian comes to him with another square meal composed of the dainties of that whore which sits upon many waters, and then he tries it a little longer, "But also, woe is me, I am undone," he has lived upon husks until he is too weak, too unworthy to go to his Father's house. But another tho't enters the mind of the starving child; "I will arise and go to the Father, I am not worthy of a son-ship, I will take a servant's place, a very low seat. If I could only be admitted to the most humble corner it would be too good for me, yet I desire it above all things." So from "Babylon to Zion" he goes lamenting and begging, and to his astonishment he receives a hearty welcome. "For there is more rejoicing with the angels over one sinner that repenteth, than over the ninety and nine which went not astray." Now dear brethren in the ministry, another year in the cycle of time is clean gone forever. Are we retrospecting our past? Do we feel that we have done our duty in saying, "Come out of her my people." Have we been faithful to our trust? Let us examine ourselves, and put on the whole armor and do battle against the armies of the alien. Our Captain who was made perfect through suffering will lead to victory, in the salvation of his own and the destruction of his enemies, and to the praise, honor and glory of him who sits enthroned in the heavens doing all his pleasure. Lord save us from hypocrisy and guide us by thy Spirit,

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Having had an introduction to you through Bro, F. A. Chick, and feeling a special nearness to you in the spirit of your editorials and remarks, I take this opportunity to drop you a line and with it a little money which you will no doubt be glad to receive, and as readily pardon my delinquency in not sending before.

I have read the LANDMARK with interest and I hope with profit a little more than one year, and now I feel as though I cannot do without the same. It always comes richly laden with the most choice fruit or good wine. The LANDMARK like the dove brings the olive leaf to cheer the elect or Ark-covered souls. It usually disseminates the pure principles of the King in Zion, feeding the sheep of the flock, and bearing the tender leaf to the feeblest lamb. While its pages abound in the deeper mysteries of redemption which the finite mind can never solve, and is good news from a far country, it cheers my soul, and serves to strengthen my faith (or rather stir up my mind by way of remembrance.)

It is a consoling thought that the Lord Jesus Christ has raised up and qualified able ministers of the New Testament who do not hold their peace day nor night, or shun to declare the whole counsel of God. It is a blessing that the children of God can have a medium through which they express their views, and their joys and sorrows. I love to read as well as hear the christian's experience of my brethren and sisters, because there is a sameness in every heaven born soul. I will will close by wishing you and Bro. Lester a happy new year, a year of the right hand of the Most High with the best of Heaven's blessings, Grace, Mercy, and Peace. Yours Very Truly,

WHOSE WAYS ARE UNEQUAL?

Brother Richard Gurley requests my view of Ezekiel 18th chap. naming several verses. I will not quote the verses. Those desiring to do so can read the chapter.

Let us use as a text the question the Lord propounds to Israel; "Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal?"

The Israelites were using this proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." This proverb was not a good one. It was misleading. It is important that proverbs should be full of truth, because they are current and circulate as coin among the people.

The gist of this proverb was that the children had to suffer for the sins of their fathers, and the inference from it was that it was unjust. It was as much as to say that the Lord's ways are unequal. Man is prone to blame the Lord even and to charge God foolishly. When the truth of it is that the Lord's ways are always equal and just, and man's ways are unequal and unjust.

God is not the author of confusion, but of peace. All his ways are pleas antness, and all his paths are peace. A just God is he, whose nature or character is just and holy. He does not work in man to do wrong, nor cause sin. His word condemns sin from Genesis to Revelation, or from the beginning to the end. Nor shall his people fellowship wickedness.

All souls belong to the Lord, hence both the father and the son are his. If the father does wrong the father must suffer; if the son does wrong the son suffers. This dealing relates to the land of Israel. Let us bear in mind then that it applies to the church of God, or to the kingdom of God, of which ancient Israel was the type, and therefore it applies to the people born of God. If among these one sins he must bear the judgment of it. If a father sins the son is not to suffer for it, but the father himself; or every one is judged according to his own works. Is not that way equal?

Suppose one is a member of the church, and has for years been a faithful member, but should after this good faithful living commit deeds worthy of death, will his former righteousness be remembered in the day of his transgression? No, but he must die. The soul that sins must die. Hence the church withdraws fellowship from him.

On the other hand, suppose a child of God has in the past been a transgressor, and in the past was cut off, but should afterwards repent and turn to God; now in the day of his repentance shall his former sin be remembered? No, not at all. Is not this way equal?

God has no pleasure in transgression or death of the sinner or wicked. There is nothing in all God's work to cause one to say or think that God has any pleasure in wickedness. His ways are all equal.

P. D. G.

WHAT BECAME OF JUDAS.

Friend J. R. Bailey requests my view of the above question.

What is there in the character or conduct of Judas to cause one to think he is saved. He fell by transgression, that he might go to his own place. Could one by transgression go to heaven? Surely not, the thought is abhorrent.

Again he was a devil. Jesus said have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas, the son of a murderer, who should betray him, Where do we suppose is the place for a devil? Could it be in heaven? Then he was a thief, and therefore he bare the bag. Where is the place of a thief? Satan entered into Judas, and then he betrayed Jesus, therefore this work was a satanical act. Jesus said of Judas, it had been better if he had never been born. You would not say that of a man saved. Words applied to him in the Psalms are descriptive of as wicked a character as is named in the bible, and the imprecations poured out on him are scarcely equaled in any other case in the book. Eternal desolation follows this act of betraying the innocent blood. He was one of the twelve, and had eaten bread with Jesus, and this makes the betrayal the more malignant. In all generations one that betrays a sacred trust is branded as perfidious, and unworthy of any respect.

Never was there one so holy as Jesus, and Judas had seen his meek and lovely conduct, his holy life, his heavenly, miraculous, undoubted display of divinity. But what avails all this when the lust of filthy lucre reigns in the heart. For thirty pieces of silver he covenanted to sell Jesus, the son of man and knowing where Jesus retired to rest, he guides the blood-thirsty rabble to that sacred retreat at night, and points out Jesus to them.

But was there not a redeeming trait in Judas? Did he not think that Jesus would work a miracle in making his escape from his enemies, and furnish Judas an opportunity of making thirty pieces of silver, and at the same time not imperil the life of Christ? I know not what he thought. But if he did think this it is no apology for the betrayal of innocent blood. It only shows that Judas was a robber and traitor of the vilest type.

But was it not appointed for Judas thus to go, and should he not have some commiseration from that view of the case? No; for the Lord never chooses a godly man to commit a wicked deed. The wicked are God's sword. The wicked are made for the evil day. There is a corrupt Shimei bidden by the Lord to curse David, in the day of David's calamity. There are Philistines to make sport of Samson when he is in prison.

There is a Jeroboam to draw off ten tribes in the way of revolt. You would not send a good, gentle sheep to run hogs out of your field that are destroying your crops. But you unchain your fierce dog, and let him loose from the back yard. King Solomon would not have rebelled against David, and gone in unto his wives before Israel; but wicked Absalom would. David knew what a bitter thing it was to fall into the hands of wicked men. God has commanded the enemies of Jacob to be around about him.

It is their nature and disposition to afflict Joseph. Are they to be pitied because it is their nature to do wrong? No indeed. Nor could Judas say that because such good came out of the death of Christ that therefore he was at least excusable. Shall we commit sin that grace may abound.

But did not Judas repent? When he saw the result of his perfidy he repented himself: repented himself, that is, it did not come from a right source. It came from self. It was not a godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto life, but the sorrow of the world that worketh death. He killed himself. His natural guilty conscience so gnawed him that he sought relief in death.

Men make manifest by their deeds what their true nature or principle is. Those who are of God love the truth, and make it manifest by their works that they love Jesus. While those who are of Satan will do his lusts, and are the servants of sin. If they repent it is of themselves or of their own corrupt nature, and not unto God.

But the goodness of God leads sinners to repentance. They are thus blessed with repentance towards God, and have faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ.

P. D. G.

TO D. M. R.

A brother asks me whether the race of mankind sprang from Adam and Eve or Noah.

Answer: From Adam and Eve through Noah, who was himself a descendant of Adam and Eve, for Eve is the mother of all living.

God preserved the race through Noah, and made a covenant with Noah, and with every living creature—even to all fowls of the air, and all the beasts of the earth that he would never again destroy the earth with a flood of water.

Surely Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, and is a figure of the Lord Jesus as giving rest to the people. In our experience as children of God we find rest with Noah in the ark; but in the flesh we know that the earth is cursed for man's sake, and that—we by nature are of the earth earthy, and are Adam multiplied.

ELECTION.

ELDER P. G. LESTER, DEAR BROTHER;—I have an issue of ZION'S LANDMARK of October, the only one I ever saw. I see you writing on the subject of the infant born again, and you treat considerably on election. Please give your views through the LANDMARK and send me a copy stating what it takes to constitute election. I have given it considerable thought myself, and would be glad to hear your views on that subject. I have never seen any one's views on the subject. Election means choice, and I don't see how election can work where characters do not differ.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JOHN VICKERS.

REPLA.

I am always ready to give any light I may have on any subject, when requested to do so, but from the brother's question and remarks, I am of the opinion that Jesus has not answered the question as he wishes it answered.

We only "know in part, and prophecy in part. Secret things belong to God, and revealed things to us, and to our children." What does it take to constitute election? First there must be an elector. And in this case the eternal God answers for all that is requisite upon that part. God himself is the very foundation of election. And all the attributes of his eternal being are gloriously and harmoniously brought to view in the exhibition of this precious principle of doctrine in the salvation of his people. The first attribute is that of his sovereignty.

Had the Lord the right to frame the world by his eternal and omnipotent word? As he is the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God who spake, and it was done, who commanded, and it stood fast, and who challenges the best of his earthly creation to answer against the execution of his divine will, without a response; he certainly had the right to do all that he has without giving a reason why. Devils readily admitted the sovereignty of Jesus, and men dare not say otherwise, but endeavor to show that he does not do all that would be his right to do, especially in saving whom he will without giving others what they term a chance to be saved? If he has the right to do what he will, then what he wills to do is right. But men say he wills the salvation of all mankind. Then will not all mankind be saved? "He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and whatsoever his soul desireth that he doeth." Are all men saved? The testimony of Jesus is that some are to be cast down to hell, and into hell. Did God desire the salvation of those who are thus cast into hell with all the nations that forget him? If so, did he do the work necessary to save them? Then why are they in hell? If Jesus travailed for them in God's work of redemption can he see the travail of his soul, and be satisfied with part of it in hell? If God after the counsel of his own will worketh the salvation of one, and that one is in hell, what did either his will, or his counsel, or his work amount to?

Some say Christ came into the world and died to give all men a chance to be saved. And now men elect themselves by complying with something they call the "terms of the gospel." If God designed that all men should have a chance to be saved, he will not damn any without first giving that chance. And if Christ came to give that chance, all those who died before he came, had no chance and will be saved, simply because they had no chance to be saved; for God will not condemn them without first giving them a chance to be saved. So if Christ had not come into the world all would have been saved. This is strange doctrine.

There are some who grant the will of God in electing his people; but they hinge it upon man's will and choice. That is, God knew who would accept his salvation and therefore he elected all such, and the reason he did not elect all was because he saw all would not accept salvation. This idea makes election a secondary consideration. In fact I fail to see any need of election in such a case. In this case the salvation of those who are saved is not predicated upon their election to salvation, but their election is predicated upon their salvation, or will to be saved, or the fact that they would be saved. This kind of election, in honor to God, is worse than no election at all. One of the most damaging features about this theory is, that it is no-where taught in the scriptures. Where does it say that God saw that any, even one, would be saved? But what did he see? He saw there was none that did good; no, not one. "They have all gone out of the way, and become together unprofitable; they are all children of wrath," dead in trespasses and sins, enemies to God by wicked works, and very darkness itself, therefore how could one be supposed to act and another not? All mankind are made of one blood, they all have one life and all their hearts are fashioned alike; they are all led captive by the devil at his will, and therefore there is no reason for claiming that one may choose good, and another evil, even if the Lord had so ordained the way of salvation. All men now in their life, nature and character are just what Adam was when the sentence of death was passed upon him. The same breath of life that was breathed into the nostrils of Adam whereby he became a living soul, is that, though in a contaminated, sinful state, which permeates the entirety of sinful, depraved man to-day. The nature of the natural man is the same in all men, and receiveth not, nor knoweth the things of the Spirit of God.

Is there a single thing in or about man that constitutes a mere shadow of a condition upon his part, in the premises of salvation, either in character, will, word, or deed? If so then salvation is conditional, and election is a misnomer.

If we can find in the scripture where one sinner has been unconditionally elected to eternal salvation, then it must follow that all who are saved are thus elected to salvation, for I am the Lord, and change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." "Before the children were born, neither having done good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, as it is written: "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated."

The unconditional, discriminating, personal choice of some sinners of Adam's fallen race to the obtaining of an inheritance by the God of all grace, according to his eternal purpose, which he pur in Christ Jesus before the world began, and the good pleasure of his will, where in he has made them acceptable in his beloved Son is what I understand constitutes election.

Those who are elected are not in their nature or works better than other men, neither are the non-elect worse in any respect than other men. "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." Two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken and the other left" These are both designated as definite ones by the article 'the,' but Jesus gives no reason for this discrimination, but simply declares that thus it shall be.

Elder Vickers says "he does not see how election can work—where creatures do not differ." If the choice were in Adam the first, we could not see how any could upon any premises whatever, but they are not elected in the earthly Adam; but the choice is in Christ the second and last Adam. The elect all die in Adam, but they are made alive in Christ. "Blessed be the God and father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. 1:3-4. "They were chosen to salvation from the beginning through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth."—2nd Thess. 2:15. They are saved and called with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began."—2d Tim. 1-9.

They are saved according to the election of Grace. We see that the election is by grace in Jesus Christ, which grace was given them in him before the world began, and not in Adam after time began.

The fullness of election is in Jesus. "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption." The elect were chosen in him, redeemed in him, saved in him, and are called, and made alive in him, and finally before the Father shall they be presented in him without spot, wrinkle, or any such thing.

It was according to the good pleasure of the Father's will to choose some and withhold the mystery and riches of his grace from others, and the only reason for so doing Jesus says is, "even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Being fully satisfied that God's people are of him elected to salvation, the great matter with me is, am I one who was thus elected?

It is according to his foreknowledge through sanctification of the spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ that some are elected to the inheritance of eternal life. "For whom he did foreknow, them he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his son." "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father."

As Jesus is the elder brother and the first born among many brethren, and yet was as one ever brought up with the Father his sonship must be of an eternal extraction, and so also must be that of his younger brethren. In their sonship in Christ they were begotten of the Father before the world began, and in time are begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an eternal inheritance. "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth into your hearts the Spirit of his son."

These sons were set apart in the Spirit by the Father before time began, and are preserved in Jesus Christ, and called.

For the subjects of this election it is clearly seen that nothing but sinners of Adam's fallen race, or their state or condition constitutes such extreme necessity for a salvation founded and sustained upon the principles of the election of grace.

A remnant is saved according to the election of grace. As there were in the days of Esaias seven thousand men saved, by the grace of God, from bowing the knee to the image of Baal, even so also there were a few men, a remnant, restrained and kept according to grace, and not that they deserved to be thus kept from the evils of the world and eternal condemnation in the days of Paul. Election is of, or by grace, as "by grace," or of grace are ye saved, and "not of works," or by works. Grace means favor unmerited. It is according to the grace, goodness and mercy of God that any are elected, and not according to any worth or merit in them whatever, and thereby is boasting excluded, because their election came to them through grace. Election humbles its subjects because they did not deserve it, and yet are elected.

We believe that sinners of Adam's fallen race are the subjects of the election of grace, that it was the pleasure of God to choose whom he would of these fallen, sinful, depraved, undeserving sinners in his son Christ Jesus before the world began, and to give them grace in him, who was and is made of God unto them wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. Christ is, and was from all eternity, the eternal life of his people. In the covenant of grace, ordered in all things and sure, is clearly seen the eternal life unity, or oneness of Christ and his people; "And when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, then shall they also appear with him in glory." The great fundamental principle in which and upon which sinners of Adam's race were elected or chosen in Christ is eternal life. "This is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his son."—1st John, 5-11. God, who cannot lie, promised this life before the world began, and by the death of Christ it is brought to light, or our knowledge by revelation through the gospel.

As we cannot distinguish between Christ and the eternal life of his bride, and as she is only known in this eternal life, therefore in this life we cannot distinguish between him and her, hence the eternal unity of Christ and his church or people. While the election is eternal, actual and vital in Christ, yet it pertaineth to sinners, dead in trespasses and sin, who are made the recipients thereof in time, and because of their unworthiness—because of their sin—it is to them an election of grace, or a gracious election.

Paul says, "By the grace of God I am what I am." The grace of God having always been what it is now, and Paul being what he is now by it, therefore he was always in and by this grace what he is now thereby; and so shall we be until mortality is swallowed up of life.

Election is a subject of great mystery, and will only be fully understood in eternity. The difficulty with us sometimes is, we want to know too much, and we want to fully explain what we do know to those who know not the Lord, and hence do not believe the doctrine of election as taught by him. To know but little, and be able to impart that little to those who are born again, who will receive it, and rejoice in it, is far better than to pretend to a great deal which no one believes nor understands.

All lovers of truth are requested to write for the LANDMARK if they feel so inclined; therefore if Elder Vickers has views in harmony with the ancient landmark, which our fathers have set, and feels inclined to give them to our readers, we hope he will feel free to do so. We hold that an impression to write, if of the Lord, is the greatest inducement possible for one to do so, hence the character of our request. If any feel to write to the comfort of our readers, let them do so. Contributions and subscriptions are always in order by those inclined to write or subscribe for the LANDMARK. P. G. L.

Obituary.

MARY MANDA LESTER

As the golden rays of the setting sun hallowed the western horizon the King eternal, invisible, immortal—the only wise God and the Savior of his people, made a triumphant passage from the earthly house of the tabernacle of my dear mother, taking her from our humble abode, and midst, bearing her to full realities and enjoyments of an eternal existence.

Mother was born Feb. 20th, 1824, and died Dec. 11 th, 1887, aged 63 years 9 months and 21 days. She was the daughter of Thomas W. and Delilah Simmons.
She leaves three brothers and two sisters to mourn the loss of a good sister. At the age of 16 years she was married to my father, William T. Lester, by whom she bore 14 children, five of whom died in infancy, and 9 survive her, six sons and three daughters.

Mother was blessed with such genial qualities and unblemished character as to gather about her many warm and appreciative friends. However varied her surroundings, which often ran to far reaching extremes, there was always an abundance of social and domestic sunshine shedding its gentle rays upon those about her. Her skill and readiness to minister to the sick was of no little importance and benefit to those, and they were many who sought the worth of her knowledge in the more simple remedies ordained for suffering humanity.

From my earliest recollection it was my blessed privilege—so far as I was capacitated—to know her in the walk of a christian mother.

She professed a hope in the righteousness of Christ in 1851, and joined the church at White Oak Grove, Floyd county, Va., Saturday before the second Sunday in May, 1866, and was baptized by Elder Jacob Correll. The exemplification of her christian life was far more in deed than in word, yet her conversation upon that subject was by no means without comfort in it. Though her words were few, yet they were fitly spoken, and truly indexed the abundance of a good and honest heart.

She died of a tumor, from which she suffered greatly for more than two years.
She was blessed with much patience during her sickness, and was fully sustained by the grace of him in whom she trusted. She was often comforted in visions of the dealings of God, and his great goodness. The finality of her sufferings was succeeded by a calm manifestation of peace of mind, and ease of body, in which she "Leaned her head on Jesus' breast, and breathed her life out sweetly there."--

"Mother, thou art gone to rest,
We will not weep for thee ;
For thou art now where oft on earth
Thy spirit longed to be.

"Mother, thou art gone to rest,
Thine is a heavenly home ;
For thou art now where Jesus is,
Thy Saviour bade thee come.

"Mother, thou art gone to rest,
Thy toils and cares are o'er ;
And sorrow, pain, and sufferings now
Shall ne'er distress thee more.

"Mother, thou art gone to rest,
The rest that God hath given ;
The Saviour now hath welcomed thee
To share the joys of heaven."—

P. G. LESTER.

GRATEFUL REMEMBRANCE.

I wish to say to the many brethren, sisters and friends who so kindly remembered me with words full of sympathy and comfort during the sickness of my dear mother, that, though the Lord in his goodness has taken her unto himself, which is far better, yet he has not forgotten her unworthy son ;
but has spared him as a father spareth his only son, and given him the spirit of reconciliation to the execution of his divine will.

I trust I possess a grateful heart to you for your earnest solicitude for my welfare, and that of my glorified mother, and to the God of all comfort and the father of all mercies, for putting it into your hearts to so fully and graciously pour into my troubled soul that balm of friendship, that does not fail in the hour of trial and grief.
Mother was greatly comforted by your words of condolence to her and myself, and often gave expressions of thankfulness for the same.

The kindness shown to her wandering boy during his extensive ramblings was always held by her in appreciative remembrance.

May the God of all grace comfort your hearts with his love, sustain you by his grace, uphold you by his free spirit, and finally, when our appointed time has come to pass, wherein we must bow to him, and yield to his irrevocable decree, may we be divested of morality and with glorified bodies be ushered into his eternal fullness, and so to ever be with him, and his name have the praise.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, its bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF GOD

FROM THE

Creation to A. D. 1885.

BY

C. B. & S. HASSELL.

1034 OCTAVO PAGES.

The most important facts in the religious history of the human race, whether Jews, Pagans, Mohammedans, Catholics, or Protestants—of the deepest interest, not only to every serious, but also to every intelligent mind, "The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," essentially presented, without fear or favor.

In this day of abounding error and delusion,

WHO WISHES — WHO DARES — TO KNOW THE TRUTH?

Every honest inquirer after religious and eternal truth, as exhibited in the light of the Scriptures and of the sixty centuries of human history, should procure and read this book. What are all the vain and fleeting shows and shadows of this world, compared with our attitude towards God and our condition in eternity? "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Read what learned and devout men say of Hassell's Church History:

Prof. Kemp P. Battle, President of the State University of North Carolina, writes the junior author: "In the name of your Alma Mater I thank you very much for the gift of the Church History, and will take pleasure in reading it as soon as possible."

Prof. Henry E. Shepherd, President of Charleston College, S. C., and author of several learned works, writes: "I have just received your Church History—the perusal of which is a rare pleasure in reserve for me. It is easy to see at a glance its scholarly character."

Mr. T. B. Kingsbury, editor of the Wilmington, (N. C.,) Morning Star, and one of the most cultured literary men in the South, writes, in his paper of March 6th, 1887: "The Church History of Rev. C. B. Hassell and Rev. S. Hassell, father and son, is a large volume of 1008 [1034] pages, and is well gotten up mechanically. It is a handsome volume. The work was begun by the father some eleven years ago, and completed by the son after the death of the elder Hassell in 1880. It has taken ten years of labor to complete it, the son giving six years to the work. It has cost him $5,000 to carry out the plan. The book is the production of two religious men of intelligence and capacity. Rev. S. Hassell is a scholarly man with studious habits, an alumnus of the University, where he stood high, and has been a very successful teacher. He is a conscientious, sincere man who believes all he writes."

Elder E. Rittenhouse, of Delaware, writes: "So far as I am able to judge, the book will come fully up to expectations, and give the highest satisfaction to all honest inquirers after truth."

Elder E. S. Dudley, of Kentucky, writes: "I have never before seen in any history so much good, old-fashioned Gospel doctrine. For truths so plainly told you would in former times have been led to the dungeon, the block, or the stake."

Elder A. J. Moore, of North Carolina, writes: "The more I read the History the more am I made to rejoice and thank God for you. It is the ablest, fullest, and most truthful History I have ever seen. I intend to leave a copy as a legacy to each of my children. The book will be strengthening and invaluable to all Christians."

Elder S. H. Durand, of Pennsylvania, author of "The Trial of Job," and editor of a "Hymn and Tune Book," writes: "The Church History is a very valuable work, and full of intense interest." He says, "I am willing to subscribe my name to Elder Chick's review of the History."

Elder P. D. Gold, editor of Zion's Landmark, Wilson, N. C., writes, in his paper of April 1st, 1887: "No one can object to the main features of the Church history without also objecting to the Bible. It occurs to me that the writers of this history, both father and son, have sought for the truth, and endeavored honestly to present the same to their readers. Elder C. B. Hassell was widely known as an upright, faithful, pains-taking, laborious man of much ability and candor. He was a sound Baptist, and well instructed in the Scripture. His son, Elder S. Hassell, is a man of much greater literary attainment than his father, but no more favored in Bible knowledge, nor any more deeply taught in Christian experience. But there is not within my knowledge a man that in my judgement is so well qualified to complete this work which his father commenced as is brother Sylvester Hassell. His modesty, yet fearlessness, his quietness, yet thoroughness, his humility coupled with the sincerest faithfulness and devotion to truth, and his pains-taking, scholarly habits fit him well for the work. Those that read this work will be surprised to find the vast amount of valuable knowledge of the Bible—a most fervid love of truth—a clear, zealous vindication of the holy sovereignty of God—a constant condemnation of sin—some very wonderful and exalted views of the doctrine of Scripture—a surprising freedom from the extremes of cranks and fanatics—a clear and truthful exposition of man's guilt and corruption—a glorious setting forth of the righteousness of Jesus Christ, which is the righteousness of saints."

Elder J. R. Respass, editor of the Gospel Messenger, Butler, Ga., writes, in his paper of May and of August, 1887: "Believing, as we do, that in many respects Elder Hassell's History is the most valuable addition to Primitive Baptist literature made during this century, and that it is destined for great good to the Baptist family, we feel it our duty and privilege to aid, to the utmost of our ability, in its wide circulation. We do not mean to intimate that it is perfect, or that it is without fault; but, whatever faults and imperfections there may be in it, we are sure that, as far as we have read it, it is the best church history that has ever fallen into our hands. We believe that it is a timely or providential work, and will tend to check and rid the church of any tendency to captivity by tradition and unscriptural customs, and materialism and rationalism. It leads us back to the doctrine of our fathers from the days of the apostles. It shows us that, though the church has veered at times from the right way, yet God has always brought her back to the truth, so that the fire has never expired upon the altar, and the light never become, in any age, wholly extinct; that the gates of hell have never prevailed against the truth so as to banish it from the earth; but that it is yet shining in the world as the light of God after nineteen centuries of sore trial and fierce opposition; and that in this day the church is perhaps purer than she has been in five hundred years. Thanks be unto to God. We wish this history could be in the hands of Primitive Baptist ministers everywhere. We wish we could have had it twenty years ago to study in our early ministry. Primitive Baptist need no better Sunday school than in reading this history to their children, and putting it into their hands to read. It is true there are parts of it too scholarly for the general reader, and it is a fault, but one, perhaps, that could not be avoided. Such parts can be easily skipped by the general reader without any detriment to the general sense. There is sufficient upon all subjects that is plainly written and easily understood." "The History is a work of great labor, conscientiously done, as we believe, for the cause of Christ, and at great pecuniary loss to brother Hassell. We trust the brotherhood will come to his rescue, and make some sacrifice on their part for his good and the good of the cause; and do try to get that little idea out of the head of any that every thing of that sort is done for money."

Mr. John Gadsby, of London, England, the publisher of three English monthly magazines, the Gospel Standard, the Christian's Monthly Record, and the Friendly Companion, and the author of several instructive and widely circulated volumes of travels in Europe, Asia, and America, writes, in the Christian's Monthly Record for July, 1887: "To say that the book before us [Hassell's Church History] is a large one would not give any idea of its magnitude; neither would it were we to say it contains upwards of a thousand pages, but when we add that the Table of Contents consists of nearly 14 pages, that there is an Index of about 130 columns, and notes and tables, making about twenty pages more,—all, Contents, Notes, and Tables in Nonpareil type too small for us to read without the aid of an eyeglass, and when we add that, taking it all in all, the book is one of the most interesting, of human production, we ever held in our hands, then our readers may agree with us in saying that the book is one of no ordinary character. We have read a good deal of the book, as long, from time to time, as we could hold it up to our eyes, and have then laid it down and then tried again; and we certainly have not to complain that any of the time was lost. The account given of events in the 19th century is a wonderful one, occupying upwards of 80 pages and every page readable. We will make a few extracts, taken at random, &c."

Elder Wm. L. Beebe, editor of the Signs of the Times, Middletown, New York, writes the junior author: "It affords us pleasure to be able to commend your History as the best which has ever been written since the apostolic age. I certainly hope the work may yet afford you some compensation for the extensive labors bestowed upon it; but, if you are never repaid in money, you yet have the priceless reward of conscious faithfulness in the performance of your arduous task."

Elder F. A. Chick, of Maryland, writes the junior author: "Out of their own mouth you have condemned the opponents of truth. I am glad that you have not been afraid to quote facts and statements from all sources. We should not be afraid to acknowledge the truth, let it fall from whose lips it may. I think the History calculated to do great good among us. And every Primitive Baptist ought to have it and read it. I wish it could be read by all who want to know the truth in every denomination in the land. May God reward you abundantly for your work of faith and labor of love done in the interests of truth and righteousness."

Elder Chick writes the following detailed review of the Church History:—

"I have been reading, carefully and as thoughtfully as I could, the Church History, by C. B. Hassell and Sylvester Hassell, and have felt for some time like speaking to the brotherhood generally of some things that have been to me of much interest in it."

"I looked for its appearance eagerly, and with high anticipations of profit and enjoyment in its perusal; and these anticipations have not been disappointed. It was my happy privilege to be acquainted with the senior writer while he yet labored in the ministry, and it is my privilege to know the son, the junior author of the history. Thus being acquainted with both, I felt sure that no pains would be spared to make it truthful and reliable; and I believe that it is so to a greater extent than any history of the kind that I have read."

"What we want is truth—truth above all things. I should be glad to find that those whom we recognize as our brethren in each century of the past believed in all things just what we as Old School Baptists now believe; but if they did not I want to know it. It will not shake the truth if in anything I find that they held error, for the Bible, after all, is our standard; but if we find that spiritual men, our brethren in the past, were not free from error, it may serve to make us more careful lest we also in some way be entangled in its meshes. Futhermore, the business of a historian is to free himself from opinions and prejudices as far as the weakness of the flesh will allow, and write down not what he wants to find, but what he does find, to be the facts. In reading the history, I find that our brethren in the past centuries believed some things and practiced some things that seem to me to be unscriptural, and for this I am sorry; yet at the same time I am glad that in the main I find them humbly serving God, and in the midst of flames bearing clear testimony to his grace."

"As to the utility of the history, it seems to me that God himself has stamped the seal of approval upon the innate desire possessed by every one for a knowledge of the past, by giving us plain history in a large share of the Old Testament, and in the Gospels and Acts of the New Testament; and he by his prophets and apostles and disciples caused the bad of his people as well as the good to be recorded for our instruction, our warning and reproof, and for our comfort. But if any still feel to object to a history being written, upon the ground that history now cannot be absolutely correct, because not inspired of God, I would reply that our God still reigns; reigns in the hearts of men, reigns graciously and providentially, and can cause men to write truth as well as preach truth. Futhermore, our best brethren have thought it right to use history in their expositions of the prophecies of the Old and New Testaments; and our churches are writing history to-day in all their church books and in all their associational minutes."

"Now the argument that would question the utility of this history, would question the utility of any church record of any kind. To sum it all up, is ignorance of the facts of the past more to be desired than knowledge? Surely there can be but one answer to this. If God, the God of grace, whom we worship, is also the God of providence, then it is good for us to try to trace his wisdom and power and beneficence in the record of his providence; and history is that record."

"The introduction to the history is itself a mine of suggestive thought. Its words are weighty and solemn. It is a fitting opening to the book. It must be read to be appreciated. I cannot stop here to even give a synopsis of it. It is a most clear and convincing argument for the divine authorship of the Scriptures against the attacks of infidels of every name."

"The first six chapters down to page one hundred and eighty, are a synopsis of the history of God's chosen people from the creation down to the coming of Christ. Of course the authors have drawn the matter of these chapters mostly from the Old Testament, the Apocrypha, and Josephus's Antiquities of the Jews; but as I read what is written I find myself carried away at the clearness of the picture presented. I am continually wondering how so much could be condensed into so small a space, and yet no salient point be lost. I read it most carefully through, feeling benefited and protected all the way, and hardly willing to lay it down. I obtained a more definite idea of Old Testament history than I ever had before. The providence of God, as well as his gracious purposes, are lovingly and clearly set forth by a pen guided evidently by a reverent spirit. The opening chapter, on the creation, and the close of the sixth chapter, on the relation of the Old to the New Testament, I would point out as being specially striking and important; but all the way through are scattered rich thoughts and pertinent suggestions, showing how our God reigns, and will bring his purposes to pass. Every page of it is calculated to confirm the faith of the child of God, and to give him renewed confidence in his God."

"The seventh chapter is an exceedingly interesting though rapid sketch of the ministry of Christ and the apostles, with some account of the gospels and epistles, when written, to whom, etc. In the limits which the historian assigned himself it could not be more than a mere synopsis or outline sketch; yet it will be found full of valuable information to all who will read it. The author has kept fully in view in this chapter the dignity and honor of the Son of God and Son of man, and has carefully traced with a master hand the first beginnings of the manifestation of that spirit which afterward shed the blood of Jesus, and in coming centuries deluged the earth with the blood of saints. This chapter concludes with a presentation of the general design of each of the epistles and a statement of the leading thoughts in each.

"Chapter eight is occupied with a narration of the destruction of Jerusalem, the three periods of the apostolic age, in which first Peter, then Paul, and lastly John, were brought into special prominence, and an extended discussion of the book of Revelation. The intensely interesting subjects of the first and second beasts, Mystery Babylon, and the false prophet, the number 666, the millennium, the final apostasy, the second coming of Christ, the general resurrection and final judgment, the everlasting punishment of the wicked, and the everlasting salvation of the righteous, are treated here. I would urge for it a careful reading.

"In the ninth chapter we have what seems to me a well-nigh exhaustive review of the characteristics of the apostolic church. In it the twelve prominent marks of that church are set forth. I finished reading this chapter with the feeling that no body of people on earth to-day bore these twelve marks but the Old School or Primitive Baptists. I would be glad to see this chapter copied entire into all our papers; or what would be better still, that every Old School Baptist should purchase the book and read it for themselves.

"Chapter ten is occupied with a statement of the New Testament doctrine of grace, and with an exhibition of the unscripturalness of the modern mission system and of the scripturalness of the Old School Baptist ground. The historian has clearly shown that the church of Christ is not antimission, but anti-society; and the result of the modern mission system has only been to prostrate graceless men, who in the main are still graceless. Nothing in this chapter is more striking than the showing up of the practical unbelief of so-called advocates of missions in their own sentiments, or else of a horrible indifference on their part to the fate of perishing sinners.—See pages 344 and 345.

"Chapters eleven to fifteen inclusive contain a record of the history of a time of almost total darkness in the main body of the professedly Christian world, following the close of the apostolic age, at the beginning of the second century down to the end of the fifteenth century. They show a gradual falling away even during the bitter persecutions of the second and third centuries, followed by a flood of ungodliness and corruption and superstition when the church and Roman government were united together. One turns sick at heart while reading the dark record, and is ready to cry out, 'Heavenly Lord, holy and true, dost thou allow such things to be? But still there appears light: of what? ready to die, it is God shows his clesiastical organizations by the rarity of godly men among those who carry on such organized politico-religious bodies. The record of all these centuries stamps the seal of heaven upon the truth that the wisdom of men is foolishness with God, and that the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

"The sixteenth chapter narrates the wonderful events of the sixteenth century, in which every believer in the divine sovereignty must believe that our God turned and overturned nations, rulers, systems and church organizations, to the furtherance of his own glory and the good of his people. The Bible doctrine of justification by faith, which in all these past centuries of darkness had been buried out of sight and out of mind by the popish doctrine of works, once more was raised up, and began to stand upon its feet. A noble work was done when this truth began once more to be preached, and grace was magnified instead of human merit. The narration of this chapter is most interesting; and yet in this very sixteenth century we find the beginning of persecution among those who were even then protesting against the oppressions of Rome. What a contradiction is poor human nature to itself! It seems wonderful that the persecuted should in their turn become persecutors; but what will man not do if grace does not prevent him?

"Chapters seventeen, eighteen, and nineteen take up each century, from the sixteenth to the present time. The rise of various sects and various theories is noticed, with their unscriptural dogmas and societies, while the church of God is seen coming up out of her obscurity and darkness, leaning upon her Beloved. One thing especially is clearly presented, viz., that while the vast Catholic and Protestant world is found trusting in machinery, human authority, the sword, forms and ceremonies, learned societies, &c., &c., the people of New-England never feared to trust these things, but have been well content to be rebuked by Christ, and to trust him to be reconciled to their low estate. I warn and reprove these three chapters. But if any st ters without being convinced of this.

"Chapters twenty, twenty-one and twenty-three contain a record of the Kehukee Baptist Association, with its churches and annual meetings from its organization down to 1885. In chapter twenty are given the full text of the old London Baptist Confession of Faith of 1689, with all the Scripture references; the Kehukee Baptist Articles of Faith, adopted in 1777, and still maintained; a form of Church Covenant and Rules of Decorum; and of the license and ordination of a gospel minister; and of the constitution of Union Meetings.

"Chapter twenty-four contains queries which from time to time have been sent by various churches to the Association, with the reply of the Association; a most interesting chapter altogether.

"Chapter twenty-five gives the position of the Kehukee Association upon what constitutes a church, education, what is called itinerancy, Romanizing of Protestants, that is, by Protestants adopting Romanizing methods, secret societies, Sunday Schools, persecution, and feet-washing. Of it I can only say that it is a most valuable chapter.

"I would, however, call especial attention to chapter twenty-two. I could wish that everybody in America who wants to know the truth would read it. It deals with modern religious inventions, and with the difference between the condition of things among Baptists at the beginning of this century and now. The confessions of Benedict (I can call them nothing else), a Baptist historian of the "New" order, show conclusively that they have forsaken the old ground, and that we occupy it. I consider this chapter alone worth the price of the book to any Old School Baptist. No; its value cannot be stated in money. If this shall induce any one to read it, or, having read it, to read it again, I shall be glad.

"Chapter twenty-six deals with the churches of the Kehukee Association, and of course is more especially interesting to them, but still will be found to contain much that will interest the general reader.

"Chapter twenty-seven is the last of

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

SONG IN THE NIGHT.

Oh, thou whose matchless mercy more
Than matchless, let the heavens adore.
The Lord has looked on sinful me,
Too vile for his pure eyes to see.

I scorned, despised his matchless grace,
And thought it would be a stoop to taste,
Because I heard it was beggars' food,
For criminals and those devoid of good.

The gospel call did I oppose,
At gospel guests turned up my nose;
The Gadarene and Thief, thought I,
Are viler a thousand times than I.

To hang my head in guilt and shame
And deep remorse, was not my aim;
Nor did I dream of such a way,
As lead to that eternal day.

I had not felt inclined to be
A christian, it never suited me;
Nor did I such a work intend,
Until I long indulged in sin.

Religion had no savory taste,
His words of pity did not solace,
Because I had no wounds to heal,
But a heart not broken, as hard as steel.

Those invitations I declare
To the sinful, guilty, mean and bare,
To me were destitute of taste,
For mine, thought I, was no such case.

In such a state was I arrested,
And made to crave that I detested;
Before his majesty was brought,
Weighed in balance, found less than naught.

Myself a very wretch I saw,
Held sentenced by his holy law;
In rags and sores I trembling sank,
And to my very self I stank.

My helpers failed and hopes all fled,
Despair seized on; alas, I said,
I have no friend in heaven or earth;
I wish I'd been a dog by birth.

But soon the scales fell from my eyes,
The curtains dropped, oh, what surprise;
I stood amazed, and wondering said,
Cleansed, made whole, raised from the dead.

I'm pardoned, free and justified,
For guilty me the guiltless died;
I'm born of God, with Christ made one,
A worthy bride for a worthy son.

And since he loved me in my sin,
Unclean without and worse within,
I cannot think he'll quit me now,
For if he can I see not how.

COMMUNICATED.

DO YOU THINK SO TOO?

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:
Our little Association (Mill Branch) has just closed, and I am home, and while I think of the love, unity and harmony manifested at this good meeting, as well also as the joy and comfort I received in listening to the proclamation of the gospel, so ably and faithfully set forth by our dear visiting Elders, John R.
Roberts, L. H. Hardy, J. B. Parker, J.
D. Scott and J. E. Adams, all of whom seemed to have been wonderfully blessed while with us, I say while I am separated from them, perhaps never to be blessed to meet them again in time, yet
I am feasting upon the truth, as I hope

Our meeting was an Association indeed; the churches all in peace and love, the meeting was well entertained, the brethren Gores, Ward, Longs, Bentons, Anderson, &c., all doing their full duty. This is my fourth Association, which, in the providence of my great Redeemer, I have been able to attend this fall. I visited the dear little Seven Mile, the old Landmark body, known as Little River, the Bear Creek also which, notwithstanding its rugged location, seated as it is among the rocky hills, is in my humble opinion as good a body of warm-hearted christian brethren and sisters as I have ever traveled amongst; in fact, all the meetings I attended were good. I had the pleasure of meeting with many dear brethren and sisters all the way around, and all that I have to regret is my own poor unworthiness. Oh, how very much wanting in ability I am! How weak, sinful, and utterly incompetent to feed, comfort and strengthen such dear lambs of Jesus! But this much I wish to say to all among whom I have traveled and of whose hospitality I have been a partake. Dear brethren and sisters, please pray for poor me. I love you all, I hope. I verily believe with all the mind and heart I have, that you are God's children, you are those whom God has chosen unto sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth. Don't allow yourselves to become discouraged at the smallness of your numbers, or at the many hard sayings of the gay and worldly wise. Be sure not to render evil for evil; don't abuse your opponents, excepting to expose error and to hold up the truth; always remember this one thing, viz: That it is but ignorance on the part of our enemies that causes them to reproach us. A truly sensible, well-meaning, high-minded man, especially if he is well read in the scriptures, seldom has much to say of us that is harsh. It is only upstarts and mullheads that, having no way to honor or fame, seek a way by reproaching us. Some men are so deficient in inventive genius that they can see no way on earth to cross over difficulties except to seek to make pontoons of those who are striving by honest effort to fulfill their task. For my part I am not mad, nor do I hold any hard feelings toward any man on earth. I wish all men well. Of course I do hate wrong doing and sinful acts; I detest cheats and false representations, no matter where found or by whom made or propagated. I love the Primitive Baptist Church for reasons which I think are good. First, We are, as I think, clearly and undeniably, the church, as set up by our blessed Jesus Christ and his ancient apostles, the doctrine of salvation by grace and grace alone, which embraces all the ordinances and duties inculcated in the sacred scriptures; for Christ said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Now grace, even the grace by which God saves sinners, grants all these. Paul tells us in speaking of Christ, "Him hath God highly exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance unto Israel and the forgiveness of sins." "Being freely justified by his grace, we shall be saved from wrath." Oh, what a sweet, what a consoling thought that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ which bringeth life and immortality to light by the gospel, has appeared to us, teaching us that denying ourselves of worldly and ungodly lusts we are to live godly and upright, &c. Now it is clear to my mind that if God grants repentance, (and genuine repentance is not obtained in any other way) that repentance will surely manifest itself in works of humility, contrition, obedience, faith and love. What else, or what more do we need to make us happy? Imagine how happily all men would live here in this world if all the human race now living in it were truly upright. Think of it. The humble christian would not hurt or offend in anything. The contrite soul, absorbed in grief in view of its own unworthiness and sinfulness, could not call in question the little shortcomings of others. The truly obedient soul, intent upon doing the whole will of its dear Redeemer, could find no time to spend in annoying others. The faithful saint, seeing, as he does, the glory of God in all things no matter how contrary to the notions of the creature, would stand gazing into eternity, and so much enamored with the charms of God as displayed in the salvation of sinners, that he would rejoice in suffering affliction with the people of God. The soul that with Paul could say "For the love of Christ constraineth us," being filled with charity, believes, hopes, bears, endures all things. Do you think such characters as these would kill, steal, lie, get drunk, commit adultery, extortion, or lead men astray for worldly gain or self-aggrandizement? No, no! Now, this is what Primitive Baptists are contending for, and to this end they both labor and suffer and toil, both day and night. I know that the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, as such Baptists are reproached by the fashionable world of professors. Why? Because we refuse to use their weapons in fighting satan. Well, then, why not repudiate David because he refused Saul's coat of mail and armour, and chose rather to go against God's enemy with the simple sling and smooth stones? If I had been using a remedy, recommended by even all my neighbors to be good for the cure of toothache, and after having tried it on one aching tooth had found out that it not only failed to cure the aching tooth, but set all my other teeth to aching, and also that all my neighbors I met with were tied up and suffering, should I not as a sensible man, dispense with the nostrum as a useless and even a hurtful cheat? Now, let me ask the priest-ridden thousands of American christians of to-day, coolly and lovingly, what have your departures from the old Landmark principles of Baptist faith and practice done for you and the sin-cursed world? Are your members who have gone from the ranks of the Sunday school to college, and from college to the meeting of days, and then on into your churches any brighter lights in the world than those who lived and died without these advantages, or (as I should say) disadvantages? If so why is crime, confusion, discord and disorder of every conceivable shape rife in all our suffering country? Surely all these evil things cannot grow out of the old Baptist influence—the smallest, least influential and most persecuted of all denominations. No, I have a love for education, wish I had more of it. I love truly wise men, but hate pretenders. I love good morals and that which will moralize, but I am sufficiently amused, I am, with the old cry lo here, and lo there, as proclaimed by men of pretended learning and assumed piety, while the world around me is getting worse instead of better. Dear brethren, I hold that the religion of Jesus Christ is a principle, and its object is to make men better, yea, even to make them godly, and I say it does do it. Christ says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." I am not so much interested in the quantity as I am in the quality of religion. True, I would be glad to see all men faithful children of God, but I know such will never be the case while I live, but that which I more desire is, that all persons claiming to be christians would act worthy of the noble name. But I'll close my scattered scribbles for this time. I am feeble in health, jaded and dejected, and feel to say, "Oh wretched man that I am!"

Dear brethren and sisters, farewell; may God bless you, is the desire of a poor sinner, for Christ's sake.

Affectionately yours,

D. N. GORE.

TO SISTER LUCY LUNDY.

DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Though I can't write, I feel like I wanted to mark down a few hints of my experience, though feeling my weakness and unworthiness.

At about eight years old it appeared to me like a stream of something reached from heaven to my heart. It appeared like I saw an allwise God. I saw he was a spirit. Then I thought he was the good one I had heard talked about. I then thought about being a good girl, so the good man would save me. Then it was some time before I thought anything more about it. So I went on in this condition till about 14 years of age when I thought I would work for the Lord, get religion, do better. I would try to pray and when I would be out from the house after dark the first thing I knew I would find myself running for fear the devil would get me. I would give my hand to be prayed for, then again do something I ought not to do. So I viewed myself a dead sinner, then began to look to the Lord for help. Sometimes I would think I was as good as anybody—Pharisee like—then I would feel like I was a sinner, and always had been. I began to seek the Lord and ask him for mercy instead of working for him. The trouble and burden of sin had commenced. I went on in this way until one of my sisters joined the church. Then I thought I had sinned away my day of grace. Then my prayer was continually, Lord save, I perish. One man killed another about that time. I thought if my chance was only half as good as his I would give anything. Here my trouble increased. I could not see how God could be just and save such a sinner as I was. My thoughts and feelings were, Lord, if thou savest me it is mercy, and if thou sendst me to hell it is just. I wished I had died while I was small, or had no soul to be lost. For five weeks my whole desire was for mercy. When my sister was baptized I came home. I thought I could not live much longer. It appeared to me like I had not a friend on earth or in heaven. Then I thought God was angry with. It appeared like these words were spoken to me: "Daughter, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven." Then I could say, glory to God. I wanted to praise him aloud. I went out in the orchard rejoicing. I thought I would go back and tell grandmother, but before I got there something seemed to say, you may be deceived. My desire then was, Lord, if I am deceived undeceive me. But I loved Jesus for he took my burden of sin away, and made my heart clean. I thought it was my duty to be baptized. I did not offer myself the first church meeting, then I thought I would not live till the next; but I did and offered myself to the church. They received me and I was baptized the next day. I thought I would see no more trouble, for all was peace and love. I felt like I could sit together with the saints of God in Heavenly places in Christ Jesus, but then and there the warfare commenced that has lasted until now. The world, the flesh, and the devil are my enemies, and if a saint at all the least of all, depending on grace alone. When it goes well with you remember me and mine. May God bless you, if his will.

EVE YADON.

London, Ky.

ELDER P. G. LESTER, DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD;—Your highly appreciated letter of love came duly to hand. We were all glad to hear from you, and of your welfare.

I have just returned home from Falls Creek in Bosque County, where I attended the filling of some appointments by our esteemed Elder N. B. Little, of Clinton, Ky., He has been in our state since the third Sunday in Nov-85 traveling and preaching among the churches of our Association, Harmony and and corresponding. We feel the Lord has greatly blessed us, during the past year in sending among us his servants from the East. First your coming in the bleak Spring months cheered our drooping spirits, and we felt glad and were made to look up from our sorrows and praise the Lord for his benefits. Although we had never seen your face in the flesh before, your stay was one of comfort to us, and yet, as I go on from day to day, my poor spirit goes back to the 4th, Sunday in March, though a cold wave from the North blew that day, yet I felt that refreshing gentle breeze come into the garden of God. I felt it was good to be there. Next came Eld John Rowe of Ga., in the fullness of the gospel of Christ. This dear old father I had heard preach in my boy days, under the paternal roof; but not in the sweetness to me, as it fell from his lips in this western land. I now feel the cause was in me, or in my poor blind heart, for then I was in the gall of bitterness, and the bond of iniquity. I was without God and hope in the world, a poor sinner, void of any joy or comfort in God's presence. I had hope, but it was the hope of the world that must pass away; I then heard with nature's best powers, but not in faith. Oh, how good is our God, for I was spared in my sins to see and hear his voice, and enter while there's room.

Next came Elder Little of Ky., in the sultry month of July, being blessed of the Lord, he continued confirming the saints, and going from house to house breaking bread and in prayers. Next came Elder Dalton of Henderson, Tenn. in the genial month of September, visiting churches and Associations publishing peace on earth, and good will to man.

I will mention one more, though the last mentioned, not the least of our joys was the meeting of Elder B. Greenwood at the Little Flock Association in August. He like a star, under the hand of his Creator God, passed about one hundred miles south of us manifesting the grace of God.

Now while I turn to review the way the Lord has led us through the past year, should we not praise and adore his blessed name. Shall we be so ungrateful as to say that we merited the coming of these servants of the Most High God, or do we consider for what purpose they came: did they come by chance, or is it God's remembrance of us poor sinful poor.

We feel this morning while writing the current of our thoughts, to cry in the language of one of old, Lord help me. I feel so vile, I can but weep. For many days I have been so lean, notwithstanding I have been surrounded with all I could ask. I have been low in spirit; when will the shadows flee; when will the day dawn to my soul? Now my wife sings that sweet song filling my poor soul with a thrill of joy,

Grace, 'tis a charming sound
Harmonious to the ear.
Heaven with the echo shall resound,
And all the earth shall hear. &c

Pardon the digression from the subject under consideration, though not wishing to be tedious, yet I intended to give a few thoughts relative to our brethren who are now in the field traveling, who labor from day to day for the glory of God, and the good of his people. I do not feel competent, but will give my opinion, as I noticed not long since criticisms on the object of brethren thus engaged, which I am inclined to believe, will have a tendency to discourage the servants of God who feel this burden in their hearts, and to some extent give place to that element not possessed with an evangelical gift. To deny we have such a gift is to my mind a denial of the Faith, for God has set the members, or gifts in the body as it has pleased him, that there be no schism, or conflict in the body (church) for God is not the author of this confusion, but he has given these gifts and set them in the church for his glory; no more nor less than is necessary, but a sufficiency, and to try to fill this office when one is not called to it, is for the churches to judge; and to take this gift and press it down in the compass of 3 or 4 churches in my opinion is to do despite to the Spirit of Grace. But to say that all have this gift is doing despite, for let every man abide in the calling as he is called of God. Let no man stretch himself beyond his measure. You will not understand me to mean that I would not have our brethren possess a spirit of christian correspondence everywhere all over this world, where God in his providence may put it into our hearts to go; for none are so wise as to know of a certainty what is his special gift, for all he possesses is by hope, for we are thus saved. When a brother feels it his duty to go, let him go, nothing doubting, don't stay at home and be burdened to death, and say he'd go if the brethren would turn him loose: generally such soon turn back to Egypt when once in a condition to go. Let us be kind to such as are now in the field, and help them on, God will reward such with joy. Not only help them on in a financial way but in word. If you can't help them in deed, do not withhold your words and prayers. Paul felt the need of the prayers of God's children, as well as their temporal support. Sometimes the churches withhold both my dear Brother, much to their own hurt. While I hold that God's people have been often imposed upon in all ages, and many times by those they counted worthy, this does not justify us in sin, or a neglect of God's holy commandments. No subject in my humble judgment has been so much abused as the one now reached, the temporal relations of God's servants to the churches. So much has been written and said, it seems, that a chasm has been formed between the saints and poor servants, so much so they fear to embrace each other as brethren, with one common Lord in the practical relations of life. While this remains can we hope for a full manifestation of God's presence among his people. While this is a bird-eye's view at Mt. Zion, I do not mean that none of God's children are in duty's way; nay, God forbid, for be it far from me to say that there are none who have kept their garments white; for I find dear brethren here and there that are ready and willing to do their duty faithfully in all things. Were it not for these faithful ones, what would become of our beloved Zion. God help them, for it is for their sakes thy grace abounds to us-ward.

Now dear Brother, I have followed the impulse from within, and penned some of my thoughts. As I yet have a little space will turn the subject, as I have come to the last page of my letter, and take a slight view of those who claim the honor of God's servants, at the same time viewing my poverty and weakness.

While we find by their fruits a faithful number in the camps of Israel or churches, what can we say for those claiming to be called as was Aaron and have come under the hands of a presbytery; are they all following the commandments of the Lord. While we find a faithful few we have many contented (seemingly) with an occasional service. Is it true God has called some of his servants to hold their peace, and to ease in Zion. I have not overdrawn the picture, my dear brother, but must close. May God's abundant grace be your guide and [reward] through life's tempestuous sea, and guide you to us again, is our prayer.

Our Association, Harmony, is to convene with our church New Hope this year embracing the 2nd Sunday in July and Friday before. We want you to come. My wife joins me in much love and christian regard. I am yours in the gospel of Christ,

A. V. ATKINS.

THE DARK AND BRIGHT SIDES.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I read Philpot's sermon over and over. I think I shall feast on it while I live. I feel that I know something about those waters. Often have I been almost sunk, and feel like, I cannot, O I cannot, live in this condition. I shall surely lose my reason: but bless the Lord Oh my soul, just at that moment he enables me to believe all these afflictions are but for a moment, and are working for me, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Then I can feel that he is with me, and beg him to enable me to be resigned to his will in all things. But soon they burst forth again, and I find myself crying, wherefore came I forth to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame. Then I think of the old Baptist and Apostles and what they did suffer, and yet the Lord did love them. Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out. Did not King Solomon, the most wise man of all, say, when I applied mine heart to know wisdom, &c, then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the Sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it, yea shall he not be able to find it. So if the wise know but little, what can I expect to know. I would like to know that I am a child of God, but I often fear that I am deceived. I feel that his riches, wisdom and knowledge, are so deep that man could never reach it if left to himself. David said his judgments are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, sweeter also than honey &c. I do not believe every sin we get into, and every trouble we meet, are judgments of the Lord. By no means do I believe that. I believe satan goeth to and fro, as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, and he devours the mind and reason of many of the Lord's Children, even the intelligent, as well as the weak; but there is one stronger than he that takes them from his power. Oh blessed thought, even our Savior was tempted by him.

What is sweeter than to read of his beginning to preach, when he opened the book and read, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted," &c. I believe he is still healing them, for with him all things are possible. I feel like I can bear any trouble when I can believe he is with me, but so far from God I seem to lie, it makes me often weep and cry. Often did I look upon my babe that was holding its hands to me, and screaming for every breath, when I had done all for it that was necessary, and leave it to do my work, while my hot tears were pleading for the presence of my Lord, feeling like he was clean gone forever, and wondering if I am a cross child, or not one at all. His love in time past forbids me to think he will leave me at last in troubles to sink. Then I could believe at his own time he will take me up.

STILL PRAISING CHRIST.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER,—BELOVED BRETHREN:—This morning I received the precious LANDMARK of Jan. 1st, and I am reminded afresh of your kindness, and of my obligations to you in favoring the poor, unworthy sinner with its constant visits to my post office. But one number has failed to reach me since the paper was started, and each number has come laden with good, wholesome and soul-cheering doctrine.

The brief and pointed editorials by the senior editor, breathing a spirit of love and humility, have greatly endeared him to me, and the able articles from the pen of the junior editor have also much enriched the columns of the LANDMARK. I make these remarks without flattery, for these brethren could do nothing without grace. Your patrons also seem generally to write in the spirit of forbearance and love; and may the Lord grant to continue such a spirit among us all who deserve the name of the Primitive Baptists.

We should not fall out about the mysteries that neither finite men nor angels can fathom. The strong should bear with the infirmities of the weak.

Brother Gold, I write this brief article for the readers of the LANDMARK, if published, that they, or any of them who may wish to hear from the poor sinner, may know my condition, and what I am doing, and also how I feel. This brief letter is evidence that I yet remain on the shores of time, a monument of mercy, and a living witness of the never-failing goodness of God. I was 72 last June, and have been afflicted for over 26 years with a painful hernia, and for several years have suffered in both shoulders from injuries received by upsetting of sleds going to meetings in the winter, and also suffer much at times from rheumatism; and yet I have abundant reason to thank the Lord that I am still able to attend about all my weekly appointments, through all kinds of weather, and one of the three churches I attend monthly being ninety miles from me, I am away from my family (wife and 3 daughters,) much of my time. With the Psalmist I feel to say: "I am a wonder unto many," and also to myself. I wonder that I with my age, pains and afflictions, have yet been able to go so much, to generally eat so heartily, and to endure so much fatigue and exposure.

But the goodness of God to me is a greater wonder! That he still enables me to hope in his mercy, and I so sinful and unworthy, is certainly a bright display of sovereign grace! Another wonder to me is the long-suffering and forbearance of the people of God with my weakness and imperfections. One church has sat under my ministry over thirty years, another one twenty nine, another twenty five, another twenty, &c., and if there is a want of fellowship between me and any member of any of these churches I am not aware of it. I state these things, brother Gold, and brethren, not boastingly, but rather to show how the goodness of God has been displayed in my support, and how kind and forbearing his people have been to one so undeserving. Although I have tried to declare all the counsel of God as he has given me the ability, yet, in trying to do so, I have often felt to come so far short of reaching the sublime glories of the gospel, that I have felt a deep sense of weakness and humiliation. I hope I sensibly feel the importance of the admonition of the apostle to "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine."—1 Tim. 4 : 16; Acts 20 : 28. Perhaps the church of Christ was never surrounded with such false theories of religious doctrine and practice as she is at this time, and it should be impressed solemnly upon those who labor in word and doctrine, to earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints to stand fast, to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine. We need nothing new, the old is better, and we dare not add to, or take from the words of inspiration. See Prov. 30 : 6; Rev. 22 : 18, 19.

We should all cultivate a spirit of love and fellowship among ourselves, and stand together, having enough opposition from without. We should be kindly affectioned one to another, and bear with and forgive one another.

May the Lord direct you, brethren editors, and all your correspondents, so that the LANDMARK may continue to be a medium of sweet peace and love among the saints. I remain, I hope, your brother in Christ,

I. N. VANMETER.

LIVING WATERS.

TO ELDER W. R. WELBORN:—Dear brother, I would be glad to have your views on the 14th chapter and 8th verse of Zechariah through ZION'S LANDMARK.

MOZELLE L. GILBERT.

REPLY.

The scripture to which brother Gilbert calls our attention reads as follows: "And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be." What day does the prophet here have reference to? I think that he has reference to the day of Jesus Christ, the time that Christ was on earth, the day of Christ's advent into this world, the time from his birth to his death on the cross, burial and resurrection from the dead. And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem. This is the day that all the ancient saints saw by an eye of faith; and by faith they all looked to that day as the day when their salvation should be completed actually; though it was already complete in the wisdom of God. And the hope of the forgiveness of their (ancient saints') sins through the merits of Christ (in his great work of salvation while he was on earth) was continually being confirmed unto those saints by the renewing of the promise unto them through the Spirit. And though those old saints had the promise of this living fountain many years before Zechariah's day, yet when they heard the message renewed unto them by the Holy Spirit, through the mouth of the prophet Zechariah, "And it shall be in that day, &c.," no doubt in my mind they were filled with joy. Though the prophet prophesied unto them concerning the destruction of their literal Jerusalem, yet when the prophet began to speak of the work of their (ancient saints') eternal salvation in the person of Christ all their natural sorrow was overwhelmed by that spiritual and everlasting joy. They could feel and realize the flowing of those living waters; for they (the waters) could flow back from the far future to the days of Zechariah. And no doubt but what the prophet Zechariah felt the powerful efficacy of the flowing of this fountain of living waters, which was to flow out of Jerusalem. Now the day mentioned in our text is the day of Christ's sojourn on earth. And the waters are the merits of Christ's work while he was on earth. And the half of them that flowed toward the former sea is the efficacious power of his merits in completely saving all those of his chosen who lived before his coming. For it (Christ's merit) had the same power to wash away all of Abel's sins, and to cleanse him from all iniquity, as it has today to wash away our sins, and to cleanse us from all iniquity. And the half that flowed toward the hinder sea is the all sufficiency of Christ's blood in cleansing all his people that live subsequent to his being on earth from all their iniquities, and in washing away all their sins. And the summer and winter, as mentioned in our text, is the all seasons (spiritually) that the saints have to pass through. The saints having a warm or summer season time, does not stop the flowing of the Christ's blood, as a mighty river, clear as a crystal, over them, around them, and through them. And the saints having a dark, cold and wintry season does not lessen God's love to them. Neither does it stop the daily, hourly and momentary application of Christ's blood to the needs of the poor little saints. So the foundation of eternal life is just as large and just as strong in the saint at one time as at another. Hence it shall be in summer and in winter a fountain of living waters to God's people. And in all ages of the world Christ's blood has been the fountain of eternal life to God's dear people. And it has been in all ages of the world the only source of eternal life. So we get the inference that Jerusalem is the hill of time, and that the spring of eternal life bursted up on the top of this hill and ran a mighty river down either side of the hill, and the foot of the former side of the hill is the foundation of the world, or at the consummation of all things. Then it is that Christ stood as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Rev. 13; 8. in the mind of God. For all things stand before God as one eternal now. There is nothing old or new with God, no time with God; and this is how it is that he comprehends the end from the beginning. Then the death and suffering of Christ (the atonement and work of salvation) was just as much present with God in Abel's day as any other time since Abel's time. Then Jesus has ever lived a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec. And abides a Priest continually, ie he has ever been the Mediator of his people, and ever will be, for it was through him as the mediator of his people that Adam was not sunk into hell with all his posterity. But Jesus was his Mediator and his (Adam's) daysman, and could lay his hand of reconciliation upon God and upon Adam, and make reconciliation between the offending man and the offended God. So it was through the mediation of this wonderful High Priest that man received the promise. And it was and is confirmed, even by God himself. For he swore by himself, having not a greater to swear by. And God is not slack concerning his promise; for he has given eternal life in Christ for all his chosen people from before the foundation of the world and has promised to reveal it to them at his own appointed time. And not willing that any of us (those whom he hath chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world) should perish; therefore is not slack concerning this promise but is long-suffering toward us, and therefore it being his pleasure, and according to his promise, he will bring us all (every one to whom this promise is) to repentance, to see our deplorable condition that we are in by reason of sin, a repentance that needs not to be repented of. Though the world makes fun of such a repentance, and is ashamed to have relatives that have such a repentance. The world likes a kind of repentance that they can use at their own will, time and pleasure. But there is a sorrow that works death; but that godly sorrow that God gives, works after the power of an endless life, and works a repentance that needs not to be repented of. Why? because it is a repentance that gives a sure sign that the penitent has life eternal abiding in him, or her, as the case may be. The question may be asked, how does this godly sorrow come? I answer that God gives it; for when he sends his spirit into our hearts crying, Abba, Father, or quickens us into divine life, Christ then takes up his abode in us. He is formed in us the hope of glory. And he being life and light, we are then made alive unto God, and being made alive, and the light shining in us and around us, we then, for the first time in our lives, see the great deformity of human nature and the great enormity of our sins. O yes, we then can see for the first time in our natural life that there is no good thing dwelling in man. We see our awful condition that we are in by reason of sin and transgression. We see our lost condition before God. And then repentance flows like a river, and it is impossible for our sorrowing to stop until God reveals himself unto us as our Savior; yes until Christ is revealed unto us our Salvation. Then we can see how poor lost sinners of Adam's apostate race can be saved. O how plain the plan of salvation is made to us. Then it's no wonder that Jesus is unto us the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely; for we then see where God's justice is satisfied; we see God's enduring mercy treasured in Christ; we see how God saves sinners and yet maintains his justice. O how wonderful the display of God's grace. O how wonderful his favour, which he bestowed so richly upon us poor fallen sinners of Adam's race, that he should give us eternal life in Christ. Then what mercy we do here find. O how merciful God was to us in giving his only begotten son to die for us, that we might live. And in this wonderful display of God's mercy he also satisfied his justice. Then by taking the right view of Christ, that is, when we view him from a bible standpoint we can see every attribute of God sustained in Christ. But when we view him (Christ) from an Arminian standpoint we lose sight of the attributes of God's perfections. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that we are delivered from the deception of Arminian eyes. For we no longer look out of Arminian eyes, but look out of the spirit of Christ which is truth.

So Christ is made all things unto us, and we view him as an Almighty Savior. And we look at ourselves as being the chief of sinners, and on Christ as being the chief of Saviors. We regard him as being our only and all sufficient Savior, and our only Redeemer. The (Christ) is that living water that God said shall go out of Jerusalem, toward the former and hinder seas, and that should continue to flow at all seasons. And this is the very same fountain that the Prophet Joel speaks of, as coming forth from the house of the Lord, Joel 3:18. Jesus is both the fountain of living waters, and the house of the Lord; and he also testifies of the same fact by the mouth of his prophet saying, and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, &c, (Mal. 3:1). And again we read of the same fountain (Christ) in Zechariah 13: and 1st verse. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness. We notice that there is no may-be's or think-so's about this fountain being opened. For God said it shall be opened for sin and for uncleanness. Hence we find the purpose for which it was to be opened specified, that is for sin and for uncleanness. And these waters that were to flow out of Jerusalem flow out of the fountain that was to be opened for sin and uncleanness. For it not only washed away the sins of God's people that lived in the days that it was opened, but it flowed back and washed away all the sins of God's people that lived before Christ came. And it also flowed forward to the end of the world, and washed away all of God's people's sins who were to live after Christ's ascension up into heaven.

This (Christ) is that river the Psalmist speaks of, that the streams of which make glad the city of God. O, what a glorious fountain this well of living waters is.

It is the river of life which John in Revelation speaks of. And notwithstanding it has washed away all the sins of all God's people, and all of their uncleanness, and of their filth, and cleansed them from all their iniquities, it is as clear as crystal, and as pure as eternal perfections can be.

This is the waters, which is the blood of the lamb, in which that innumerable company (the whole church of the first born) washed their robes and made them white.

Our sheet is about full and I must close, though the subject is inexhaustible; but I hope I have said enough to convey my views to Brother Gilbert, and the dear readers of ZION'S LANDMARK. I am as ever your poor, little, unworthy Brother in a precious hope.

MY LIGHT AFFLICTIONS.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN ;—I wish this communication republished. I have had a desire for years to write to the sisters ; and especially to the preachers' wives of my present condition, and some trials and sorrows that I have passed through. My severe and protracted afflictions which have been now nearly seventeen years, I have been requested time and again to write, but owing to my weakness and inability every way I tremble at the thought. But as the Lord is our strength in weakness, I hope he will strengthen me and give me steadiness of mind.

I can only hint at a few things, and if I could write them all it would be so unreasonable you could not believe. I can only sit up about fifteen minutes two or three times a day when I am at my best. Many are the days that I cannot get out of bed at all. So you can only imagine the lonely days and sleepless nights that I have passed thro'. How often has it appeared to me that I would have to die and leave my children as orphans, their father being a preacher and nearly always away from home.

On one occasion I fainted away : they all thought I was gone. My weeping children and neighbors crowded around my bed. After I revived a little I commenced talking to the children, and told them if I had to go not to grieve for me, for I was only going out of affliction. If it is God's will to take me what is his will should be ours. I wanted them to meet me in heaven. There were three grown daughters. I told them to conduct themselves so they would be respected, and to remember my counsel. I then told them what to tell their papa, as that is what he had them to call him. I was then resting a minute when a dear sainted mother presented herself to me holding to the bedstead, almost ready to sink under her trouble and affliction. She was then about eighty years old, I being her only child living. She has always made her home with me. She said Lucy what do you want me to do. I told her I wanted her to stay with the children, for them to wait on her, and take good care of her as long as she lived, and so they did. I then turned my attention to the little ones, Alice and Robert, who were standing side by side by me leaning against my bed with their heads dropped on the bed, as close to me as they could get, crying like their hearts would break. I put my arm around Robert's neck, he being the baby, and asked him what was the matter. He said he wanted papa to come home. I told him not to cry, his papa would come. Yes, said he, but I want him here now. When he does come he will not stay, and how can I live without a mother. I told him Mickey Ann would be a mother to him when I was gone. I also told him his Grandma would live with him; but I could not console the child, only by telling him that his father would come, and Mickey Ann would be a mother to him. She was the oldest sister with us then, and being a Primitive Baptist ever since she was fifteen years old, and a mother she has been to the two little ones while she stayed with us, which was about twenty two years.

But to return. About that time their Papa came home and it appeared to relieve everything. It appeared to take a load from off me, though I was sinking very fast, as they all thought. He told them all to go to bed, as they had been losing sleep, and were wearied—that he would sit by me and wait on me; I lay as quiet as possible 'till about midnight when I felt a very sudden change. I told him in a low voice that I believed I was dying. He said must I wake mother and the children? I told him no, not yet, to give me some drops that the Doctor had left that evening for me: after taking the drops I revived a little. He then asked me if I was afraid to die, I told him that I was not, that I was glad that I was born to die; for that was the only way that I could meet with all my children again. My two oldest sons were then living in the West. My oldest daughter married and left me; and four little children are in heaven. My dear brethren and sisters, I would like to describe my feelings through that night. I never slept any, but language fails to tell what I felt. If I only could know that when my time does come to die, that I would feel as much resigned to God's will as I did that night, I would never fear to die. I could say with the Spirit, Lord, thy will be done, not mine. My mind appeared to be stayed, and my thoughts as though they were balanced. It seemed that I could not say Lord, let me live, nor Lord let me die, I wanted nothing, I was perfectly willing for his will to be done. While my dear companion was sitting alone by my bed-side holding my wrist in his hand and weeping over me, he had his troubles to bear single-handed, and I could not help him then; though we had often mourned together and rejoiced together. My mourning was gone and I did not feel like rejoicing. I wanted nothing. But the Lord saw proper to let me live for some cause best known to himself. The Lord has a purpose in afflicting his people.

How often since then have I had to refer to that still small voice that I have often heard whispering to me, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. I might ask the question, why are our afflictions called light? Because our blessed Saviour bought them. Spiritually they are light, but temporally they would seem tedious for one who has been afflicted seventeen years, though I am not murmuring; it is God's will and I am satisfied and I am trying to live every day as though I knew it to be my last; and if it were to save my life to keep my mind on heavenly things I could not do it. I feel it my duty to put my whole trust in the Lord both for spiritual and temporal things. I feel to commit myself and family into the hands of the Lord.

My baby now is twenty three years old. He was the object of our heart. How long ago it did appear, that I and he would have to part. Although my prayer has been that I might live to see him grown, and now his body is prone to sin, O! may he live to sing God's praise.

My dear afflicted sisters, has the Lord made you willing to give up your husband to go and preach the gospel? If we are willing to give them up the Lord is in the work, for within ourselves we could not do it, and bear the heavy burden brought upon us. I have seen my companion start time and again to be gone from one to four weeks when I could not raise my head off of my pillow, nor scarcely reach my feeble hand out to bid him farewell, and had no idea that I would live to see him return: but, believing as I do and feeling that the burden partly rested upon me, and the scriptures bearing on my mind, woe is me if I preach not the gospel, I could not under any circumstances whatever say stay ; though it is so hard for us to give them up ; yet there is a consoling thought that they are called to such great work. Therefore let us bear our afflictions with patience and our heavy burdens with christian fortitude, looking forward to the time when we shall share with them in their reward. There is nothing on this earth that consoles a poor lonely sister, when there is serious sickness or distress in the family, so much as to see her companion coming home, especially if he brings us a comforting word.

When my poor old mother died, I would have given anything reasonable for him to be here. He was gone to North Carolina to an Association. Tho' my children were here and I had plenty of good friends, but the head was gone.

Your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life beyond the chilly stream or gate of death.

An interest in your prayers I crave,
That we may meet beyond the grave,
On Canaan's peaceful, happy shore.
Where parting will be known no more.

LUCY LUNDY.

[The following lines were written by Phillip Snider in Dec. 1886. He recently died, but was long an able preacher among our people.]

O may I all to thee resign,
Be still and know that thou art God.
But then, like Jonah, I complained,
And said 'twas best to die.
But grace will keep us through the worst,
And lead us safely home.
Though cisterns be broken, and creatures all fail,
The word he has spoken will surely prevail.
Amid temptations sharp and strong
Rejoice, the victory will soon be won.
Who can describe the pain
That faithful preachers feel,
Constrained to speak in vain,
To hearts as hard as steel!
What is then here to court my stay ?
Or keep me back from home ?
When angels beckon me away,
And Jesus bids me come.
Shall I regret to leave my friends,
Here in this vale confined?
My soul to Christ the Lord shall ascend.
Fare-well to all left behind.
Deacons awake, your work fulfill,
The work to you assigned.
Discharge your sacred duties well,

With pure and upright mind.
Blest are the men whose hearts are set
To find the way to Zion gate.
God is their strength, and through the road
They lean upon their helper God.

PHILLIP SNIDER.

Remarks:

He wrote me the church had cut him off for his disobedience, and that he had suffered much, and was a Baptist he hoped in heart, and should die one, and would rather be in the church than to have every thing in this world.

Elders J. M. Harriss and J. A. Burch are expected to preach the funeral of Phillip Snider at the New Tom's Creek M. H. on the 1st Sunday in April, if the Lord will.

EXPLANATION.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER: I wish you to make it known through the LANDMARK why I have not been out trying to preach this Fall.

I was taken sick a week before our Association, and was confined about a week. Then I somewhat improved, so that I attended my meeting at Prospect Hill, in September, but was very feeble. I returned home and was then worse than ever. I have been confined four weeks, and for one week did not know whether I would live or not. I expect to be able to travel very little this winter. If any of the brethren or friends feel like visiting me, I would be glad to see them, for I feel as much like talking as ever I did.

Brother Gold, I would like to see such a union among the Baptists as there was when you joined. Do you not remember the union meeting at Sparta? It seemed to be a time of love among the people of God. That was the greatest union meeting I ever saw, or ever expect to see on this earth. Many of those saints that were there have gone home to heaven, where I hope to go when my sufferings and work are done. Pray for us and come to see us when you can. My love to all the dear brethren, sisters and enquiring friends.

NOW COMMANDS ALL MEN EVERYWHERE TO REPENT.

Friend L. H. Kennedy requests my view of Acts 17; 30; "And the times of this ignorance] God winked at: but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

Paul delivered this address to the most scholarly men of the world at Athens, the seat and center of worldly learning. For it was here that the learned gathered from all countries to enquire of each other, and spent their whole time in hearing or telling some new thing.

When they saw Paul, some said, what will this babler say. Others said, he seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods, because he preached Jesus and the resurrection. So they brought Paul before the learned council, and gave him opportunity to speak for himself. Paul accuses them of being too superstitious, or of worshipping too many gods or idols, and also of worshipping the unknown God. For he beheld in their devotions an inscription "To the unknown God." Then the most learned were superstitious in that they worshipped they knew not what He declares to them that they did not know the God that made the sea and the dry land, the heavens and the earth, the only true and living God. The true God hath made all nations too of one blood, though in times past he winked at their ignorance, and regarded only the Jews; but that time is past, and now God regards all people—all nations—as the work of his hands, and now he commands all men everywhere to repent, or he grants repentance to them everywhere. As Jesus said in substance after his resurrection, All power is delivered into my hand. Go ye therefore and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.

The proof of this is given in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. This is even an assurance unto all men, or a most wonderful pledge or proof of God's mercy. What good news is this to all men, that is, to all nations, not to Jews merely, but to Gentiles as well as Jews; and in that sense everywhere God commands all men to repent, or grants mercy to men everywhere.

There is a day appointed in the which God will judge the world in righteousness by Jesus whom he hath appointed. He will judge us in Christ Jesus or in righteousness. How blessed to be considered in the righteousness of Jesus who says, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." When God judges us in the righteousness of Jesus then we are justified, and shall glory in him.

God is nigh unto every one of us, for we live, move, and have our being in him, and he is our hope. He is not far from every one of us. God comes near to us all. His word is nigh thee, even the word of faith which we preach

That is, if thou shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised up Christ from the dead, and with thy mouth make confession unto salvation, thou shalt be saved.

God commandeth repentance. It is not a mere offer to give men repentance, nor a mere entreaty or request that men should repent. To command is not merely to request or beseech. God who said, "let there be light, and there was light, is the same God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, and hath shined in our hearts. We love the power of the gospel and its glorious fulness.

It is the goodness of God that leads to repentance; not the goodness of man. Repentance is as much the gift of God, as is faith, hope, or charity, or any other spiritual gift. For every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is neither variableness or shadow of turning.

Now the certainty of the repentance of all here named, or as many as were ordained to eternal life believed, is assured.

Did all believe what Paul preached at Athens? That is, did each and every individual of this race, or these races that heard Paul, believe what he said? In the days of the Apostle was there a single instance wherein all individuals believed? We see that election is manifest all along as the truth, and that God has a special, chosen people whom he grants repentance unto and the forgiveness of sins.

Again, God that made the heavens and earth, should be feared by all men, and worshipped every where. Men should not worship idols of gold, or silver, or of man's device, nor worship money, nor any creature of earth, having no life, nor breath, nor can they deliver any one at all.

Perhaps there is no word as little understood as repentance. Mankind at large consider it as requiring something of man that he hates to render a duty that he ought to perform, yet is unwilling to do so. Whereas it is a gift bestowed through the resurrection of Jesus, and flows out of the goodness of God to sinners. No more gracious gift is ever bestowed than that of repentance granted by God to sinners. When Peter preached it on the day of Pentecost those who heard this salutation of love and favor gladly received the good word of God. Now we love this covenant blessing which Jesus is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to give. What a blessing too that God commands it everywhere, and has given us such proof of it in the resurrection of Jesus.

DEAD BONES EXPOSED.

Sister May A. Nelson requests my view of Jer. 8: 1—2.

"At that time saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves;

And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped; they shall not be gathered nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

Such was the greatness of the wickedness of the Israelitee in the days of Jeremiah, that all his prophecies were heavy tidings to them. Perhaps he felt the grief far more than they did; for the guilty do not lament wrong-doing, nor feel grief as the meek do.

God said of them, will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense with Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not And come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, we are delivered to do all these abominations. Jer. 7: 9—10 Is it not strange that those who love sin most, are the ones that justify themselves by saying we are as God made us. We are delivered to do all these abominations. We are predestinated to do these evil things. The children of Israel built the high places of Tophet to burn their sons and daughters in the fire, which the Lord commanded them not, neither came such a thing in his heart. Jer. 7 : 31.

Man is without excuse or cloak in his transgression. But in consequence of the sins of Israel they were to go into captivity. The glory that God would bring out of this is another matter. Nor can Israel say, because this does not defeat God's purpose we therefore are justified. Shall we commit sin that grace may abound? God forbid.

The Israelites then living were to go into shameful and suffering captivity, and into great distress; and even the bones of the dead kings and princes, and priests and prophets that had worshipped the sun, moon, and all the hosts of heaven should be exhumed, and spread out, and exposed before the hosts of heaven, and put to shame before that which is no god. The searching Judgment of God should reach to all these corrupt idolaters, and search out all their iniquity. How deep the wrath of God burns against sin.

What is taught in the experience of the child of God in this matter? Is it not true that all our sins and abominations, that we committed while we were dead in sins, are brought up out of our graves of death in trespasses and in sins, and all are spread out in the sight of heaven, and every secret thing is brought into judgement? For there is nothing hid that shall not be made known. What shame belongs to us in the day that all our bones, or dust and corruption are spread out, all our dead corrupt works exposed. This is as true of the king as the beggar, of the priest as the profane; for there is no respect of persons with God.

God is a jealous God, and he alone shall be exalted, and he will destroy all false gods and all dead works.

Jesus is glorified in the resurrection, and the Lord alone is exalted and man is abased.

It is said that God purged the worship of idols out of his people in Babylon, and that when they returned to their own land they praised the true and living God. This captivity and return of Israel to their own country is typical of the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgement, or the everlasting justification of the Lord's people in Jesus who is the resurrection and the life.

TO TREAT ANOTHER RIGHT.

When we love another we are more apt to treat him right. If I hate one how can I act properly towards him. My thoughts are the prompter to my actions, or they indicate the character of my conduct, Let my thoughts of one be good, let me love him, then I act towards him in a better manner. Know this, that as long as you do not love one you cannot treat him as you ought to do.

Nor can you knowingly harm one whom you love.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—Dear Sir, please give your views on the 4th chapt. of Matthew and 17th verse, where it says, Jesus began to preach and say, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Also on Mark 2nd chapt. and 17th verse, where Jesus says, "I come not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." It seems to me like the Methodists and Missionaries preach to sinners, and warn them to repent, but that the Primitive Baptists preach to none but the members of the church that have already repented.

TOMMIE.

REPLY.

Jesus preached repentance to the Israelites, who were his people, the ones he came to save. It was good news to them too. Our people preach, or should preach, repentance to all that are looking for the consolation of Israel. It is the nature of man to rely on his own efforts and works to save himself. Nor does he ever look higher than to that source for salvation while under the influence of the powers of his own nature. Hence to one or all that see and feel their vileness and inability to do any good thing the repentance preached in the name of Jesus, who is exalted a prince and a Saviour to grant repentance unto Israel and the forgiveness of sins, is greeted and received as the most welcome tidings to a heavy heart. To those cut in the heart on the day of Pentecost, Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, &c." What good news it is to the quickened soul that sees his lost condition to be told to repent, because mercy is at the door, the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

We do not limit that preaching, nor our preaching to church members. God applies the word or sends it where it pleases him. We have no right to preach good tidings to any but the meek, nor the recovering of sight to any but the blind.

What class of men did Jesus mean when he said he came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance? Did he mean those who were esteemed by men as righteous, or as sinners? What does the context say of it? When the scribes and pharisees saw that Jesus ate with sinners they objected to him because he did this thing. Now who are scribes and pharisees? They are men righteous in their own eyes, and that do not consider themselves as sinners. Now Jesus answered them that according to their view of things they did not need him, for they were not sinners, and therefore needed no repentance. The whole need not a physician but they that are sick.

All that are Primitives, and that feel and believe as they do, regard themselves as sinners, and are considered by the scribes and pharisees to be sinners. All other denominations regard us as sinners, and we know that we are sinners.

The doctrine that Primitive Baptists preach is for none but sinners, and no other kinds of people but sinners love it; yea all that feel they are sinners love the doctrine of salvation by grace, or the doctrine of repentance preached to sinners. We preach repentance to sinners, whether they are in the church or out of it. God's people feel the need of repentance as long as they stay on earth.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

This interesting book, by Elder D. Bartley, contains 342 pages, printed from large new type, well bound in cloth with red edges, and a large and finely executed lithographic portrait of the author. Price, single copy, post-free .75c; per dozen, transportation prepaid, $7.50. Address all orders to Eld. D. Bartley, New Castle, Henry county, Ind.

WHY STRIVE YE ONE WITH ANOTHER.

All the works of God praise him, and all his saints shall bless him.

Men are inclined to ascribe evil to God or charge God foolishly.

He turns the hearts of men as the rivers of water are turned. When he turned the hearts of the Egyptians to hate Israel he did not change the hearts of these Egyptians. To turn the water of a stream does not change the quality of the water. Under different circumstances men make displays of character that vary, yet the principle may be the same.

God does not work in wicked men to do wickedness. Still the wicked are under his power, and instead of defeating his purpose they, in their sphere and place, serve in accomplishing his will, altho' they mean it for evil. All true Baptists know that God cannot do wrong, and that he hates sin, and loves holiness. His word condemns sin, and his word is holy. While we cannot comprehend the deep things of God, only as they are shown to us, should we not love one another; and do we not as we see the spirit of Jesus manifested in others. Do we strive against sin? Do we hate every false way? Do we love what the word of God approves, and hate what his word condemns? Do we love those that love the truth, and that love righteousness? The devil would as soon get Baptists to quarrel on predestination as on free-will, or any thing else. What poor mortals we are, and how much we need forbearance towards each other, and that charity that thinketh no evil.

VISITORS.

Elders A. J. Taylor and I. D. Draughn, from the mountain section of N. C., paid us a visit recently in this section. Elder Taylor has been preaching more than 40 years, and is a solid, well-tried, faithful Baptist, and a good preacher.

Elder Draughn is a much younger man in years, but he is a close Scriptural reasoner, and is a charming preacher, and is worthy of being encouraged by the brethren and friends of truth.

A GOOD SCHOOL.

Prof. Warren of Wilson N. C., occupies the school building that Elder Hassell taught in.

He is a first-class teacher, and has a good school. By the way, much money is sent off to boarding schools from Wilson that ought to be kept at home. Much help to a town is in a school that draws patronage to it from afar.

Build up choice schools at home, keep your children with you and keep your money here too, if you want to build up your town, and make your own homes pleasant.

Obituary.

SAMPSON I DAVIS.

DEAR BRETHREN,—I feel impressed to give you a short sketch of the death of my father and mother: although they have been dead for some years. At the time of their death, I felt to be in bondage, and did not feel that I could write, but now I feel to hope my master has set me at liberty. But O how I do feel my unworthiness and weakness. I hope you all will remember me at a throne of grace.

Sampson I Davis was born Nov. 28th, 1812. At what age he was awakened is unknown to the writer, but I have heard him tell of his lost and helpless condition, and of the beautiful light that shone around him when his great deliverance came. It was not long before he went to the Old School Baptist Church at Town Creek, and told what great things the Lord had done for him. He was received and baptized by Elder A. Walker Nov. 6. 1852. I think it may be truthfully said he adorned the profession he made by a well-ordered walk and godly conversation.

As Deacon he filled his office well. He was ever ready to labor for the peace and prosperity of the church, and his ear was open to the cry of the needy as far as he was able. As a countryman, a neighbor, husband, father, and church member, his good example was worthy of imitation. His seat was never vacant at church unless he was hindered by affliction. He never allowed his worldly affairs to keep him away. He was a great sufferer from rheumatism from my earliest recollection. In his last suffering (March 9th, 1880, age 67 years, 3 months, and 11 days) he suffered severely. He bore it patiently. I believe it was his desire to be submissive to his Heavenly Father's will.

He wanted to go and be with Jesus and enjoy that land of rest he used to sing about. He said he dreaded the sting of death, but had no other fears. Just before he breathed his last he gave my mother, his sister and others around his hand, and said to my mother, don't grieve for me, we won't be parted long; and so it turned out. He said to my mother before he died, when she found he was dying he wanted her to have this hymn sung,

O, sing to me of heaven,
When I am called to die,
Sing songs of holy ecstasy.
To waft my soul on high.

BATHSHEBA TURNER.

Bathsheba Turner, the wife of S. I. Davis was a resident of Franklin County, Va. born Oct 18th, 1810, and died Sept. 21, '85 aged 74 years, 11 months, and three days. At an early age she became restless and uneasy, and found that all was not well within; so she became a beggar, and thought she was going to die. But when she hoped she found Jesus precious to her soul she was enabled to sing and rejoice.

She soon went to the Old School Baptist Church, at Town Creek, to tell the good news; was received and baptized by Eld. E. Turner, Oct. 25th, 1835, and was a pious, orderly member up to her death. She was the mother of 11 children, 8 of them lived to be grown. She lost a son in the war, and when she lost her companion her bereavement was so great she would say, I feel I am not long for this world, and I don't desire it. In her last affliction, which was Paralysis, she suffered severely; she would often call on the Lord in whom she trusted.

A few days before she died she sung plainly this hymn.

O land of rest, for thee I sigh,
When will the moments come?
When I shall lay my armor by,
And dwell with Christ at home.

She said to me the day before she died, I feel like there is a place of rest for me. I said to her, it ought to be a great comfort. My heart was so touched I could not talk with her. She was a kind and tender mother, and a good neighbour. O, how we do miss them in the church.

Some say they have lost a father and mother in Israel. But we do not mourn as those that have no hope, for I hope and believe they fell asleep in Jesus, and will sing God's praise, and enjoy that land of rest through endless ages of eternity. May God in his tender mercy bless and prepare their offspring to meet them where sickness, sorrow, pain death and parting will be felt and feared no more, is the prayer of the unworthy writer.

L. A. NUNN.

MRS. E. C. BENNETT.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—I write you this evening in much sorrow and distress of mind. My wife, E. C. Bennett, was stricken with paralysis while sitting in her arm chair

(I was then in the same room writing) about five o'clock, on the evening of the 24th of February, 1887, and lingered in an unconscious state till ten o'clock, on the evening of the 25th. She neither spoke nor opened her eyes after the stroke. She had reached the age of sixty-five years, and was the mother of ten children, and we raised them to be grown and married off, (one excepted) eight of whom are now living. She is the grandmother of forty-six children, forty-two of whom are now living; the great grandmother of one that she never saw. All of her children now living, eight in number, were at her bedside when the last breath came.

I am seventy years old and this is the worst cyclone that I have ever experienced. She was born in Guinnett Co., Ga., the 6th day of May, 1821. We married the 24th of Nov., 1839, in Cobb City, Ga. She was baptized by Wm. Mosley, who was then pastor of the Primitive church at Hebron, Fayette county, Nov. 1852, and remained in the church to her death at Ramah, two miles south of this place.

C. E. BENNETT.

MARY A. JOYNER.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—By request I send you, for publication in ZION'S LANDMARK, the obituary of sister Mary A. Joyner, of Pitt county, N. C.

She was born October, 1821, of Nancy Ballard, whose maiden name was Outterbridge, in Martin county, N. C.

Sister Joyner, my cousin, first married Bennett Briley, of Pitt county, N. C. Her last husband, Calvin Joyner, was of the same county, at whose residence she died a widow, the 30th of July, 1887. She had been a member of the Primitive Baptist church about sixteen years, at Tyson's M. H. She always attended her church meetings when not providentially hindered. She was faithful, firmly trusting in her Lord her strong tower to the last. She had been in bad health for five years, but latterly for several months she seemed better. Monday night she was taken worse again but sat up until Friday morning, after which she sank rapidly, but said she was not in pain. Saturday evening at sunset she calmly passed away, leaving a sadly bereaved family of children and many dear friends to mourn their irreparable loss. In leaving this mortal tenement we believe she has realized a happy exchange of worlds; entered into the joys of her Lord; received her crown, and is clothed with immortal raiment. Let us ask for resignation and bow in humble submission to the will of heaven and say as Job, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord." May he be a father to her children granting them his sustaining grace according to their day.

A. J. HOWARD.

Brother A. J. Howard departed this life December 21st, 1886, aged 72 years. Brother Howard lived in Montgomery county, Va. He was a prominent citizen, much esteemed by his neighbors, always called upon to arbitrate disputes, or matters of difficulty between his neighbors, was truthful and upright in every respect. He was kind to all and especially to the poor; his house was a home for the ministers of God, indeed a place of welcome for all. He was received by experience into the fellowship of the church at Meadow Creek, May 24th, 1884, and was baptized the fourth Sunday in June, by Elder W. R. Cummins. The church of which he was a member asked for his ordination to the office of deacon, but before the time appointed rolled around God took him from a world of care and sorrow, to that world where the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick. The cause of his death was pneumonia. He was sick only twelve days, during which time he was visited by numerous friends and acquaintances. His suffering was intense, yet without murmuring he patiently endured it all, said he was ready, and resigned to the will of God. Brother Howard leaves a wife and two children with many friends and relatives to mourn their loss; but we have reason to believe that their loss is his eternal gain.

ELD. GEORGE YOUNG STIPP.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."—Psalms cxvi : 15.

DEAR ELD. GOLD:— You and the readers of the LANDMARK will bear me witness that my pen, as to the LANDMARK, has lain silent for a long time. This no doubt is as it should be. I would greatly prefer unbroken silence to that which might in any way darken counsel and multiply words without knowledge. Nor would I now break that silence were it not for this fact that so far as I have observed, no obituary of the death of the late Eld. George Young Stipp has, up to the issue of the LANDMARK of Nov. 15th, appeared in its columns. Why this is so I am unable even to conjecture, unless it be simple negligence on the part of his ministering brethren. For I believe I state an admitted fact that few ministers stood higher in the esteem and love of his brethren among whom he mingled than he. Hence the painful duty of attempting to write a brief history of the life and death of my lamented brother according to the flesh, devolves upon the unworthy writer. True a brief sketch of his life was published in the Signs of the Times of Oct. 1st, but it was so meager and incorrect, in some respects, that it was regarded as unsatisfactory to his brethren and friends.

Elder George Young Stipp, the subject of this sketch, was born in Warren county, Ohio, on the 13th, day of April, 1826. He died Oct. 23rd, 1886, in Vermilion county, Illinois, where he lived continuously from the time he was about seven years old until his death. Thus making his sojourn on earth sixty years, six months and ten days. He was the fourth son of George and Mary Stipp, who emigrated from Berkeley county, Va., (now West Virginia) first to Ohio and thence to Illinois. Eld. Stipp's parents were both strict and uncompromising regular, predestinarian Baptists, who not only stood firm against the devil's flood-gates of declension and disaffection as touching Andrew Fullers, Missionary agitation, but also, the strange and fascinating doctrine introduced and agitated in that country by Alexander Campbell, with whom they were personally and intimately acquainted, and who was regarded by Baptists of that day as a very able and sound expounder of the word of God. But they were kept from these and all kindred heresies by the power of God ready to be revealed in the last time, and died in the triumph of a living faith.

Elder Stipp united with the Hope-well Predestinarian Baptist church, of Warren county, Ind., either in September or October, 1870, preaching his first sermon at the following monthly meeting. The church being so well satisfied that God had separated him unto the ministry, he was, without hesitation, liberated to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. Applying the apostle's charge to Timothy to himself, he devoted the remainder of his precious life to the service of his Lord and Master. I believe I hazard nothing and do no violence to truth in the declaration that he enjoyed a zeal for God according to knowledge, and was instant in season and out of season in the service of Christ. To this end he traveled thousands of miles raising his earnest voice in defence of the truth. From Illinois to Virginia and West Virginia, thence to Washington City. Again, from Illinois to Southwestern Texas, preaching wherever he could find a Baptist, devoting years to the ministry in the State of his adoption and its neighboring States. His correspondence with distant brethren was enormous. Only when the truth was assailed, as he understood it, was he a controversialist. In such emergency he stood fearlessly in vindication of the doctrine of God against erroneous constructions within or without the church. But captiousness and vindictiveness were utter and foreign strangers to his regenerate heart. He was as tender, forgiving and harmless as a little child, and his warm heart overflowed in sympathy for those whose hearts were heavy laden and in distress in or out of the church. But in defense of what he considered the truth he was earnest and uncompromising. He firmly and consistently believed in and defended the doctrine of the Predestination of all things. And when the resurrection of the dead was called in question by some of his brethren, whom he loved for Christ's sake, he did not hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God, touching that soul-comforting promise. With the great Apostle, his hope rested in the power of God to raise his mortal body and fashion it like unto Christ's glorious body when he shall come the second time—not first time—without sin unto salvation.

Elder Stipp held fourteen or more public discussions with various Arminian denominations, among whom were Universalists, Christians, so-called Soul-Sleepers and others, in all of which the truth suffered nothing, and proved entirely satisfactory to his brethren. It is no vain flattery to say he took front rank with the ablest expounders of the oracles of God. He wrote a great deal for several of the Baptist periodicals, among which was the LANDMARK, whose editor he greatly loved for the truth's sake. In addition to this he was the author of a pamphlet in defence of his views touching the doctrine, called "Two Seeds," which is considered by a majority of his brethren as a masterly, clear, logical and scriptural production. He was a devoted friend, a sympathetic brother in and out of the church, a loving husband and father. The following is the closing portion of the obituary as published in the Signs of the Times above referred to:

"He was married three times. His last wife survives to mourn his departure; also five sons and two daughters. Brother Stipp was a man much beloved by his Baptist brethren and friends, very retiring and unassuming, esteeming others better than himself. He was rathersmall in stature, somewhat stooping, and a stranger would not select him from a mixed company of men as one of the ablest ministers in the whole Baptist connection. But when he took his stand in the pulpit his voice, his manner and his burning eloquence commanded the attention and held spell-bound every auditor. I think I am not assuming too much when I say he was one of the ablest advocates the Lord has ever raised up in the west to stand for a defence of the gospel. But he is not, for the good Lord has taken him to himself. May we all be resigned to his will."

Thus has passed away one who was a faithful ambassador for Christ; one who shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God; one ever ready to cheer the domestic hearth-stone; to shed by his genial department a halo of love and good cheer round the family circle, making all happy and contented. He was generous and kind to a fault. His heart and hand was open to the unfortunate. He has laid his armor by. He has found rest in the shadow of the great rock in a weary land. Though his loved form now moulders back to dust, his spirit has returned to God who gave it. His life is hid with God in Christ, while his voice is sweeping the heavenly harps in the song of Moses and of the Lamb. And, O, glorious and inspiring thought! At the first resurrection our loved brother will rise with the voice of the Arch-Angel and the trump of God, blooming all radiant in immortal youth and beauty.

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last.

"Of all thy heart's desire
Triumphantly possessed,
Lodged by the ministerial choir
In thy Redeemer's breast.

"In condescending love,
Thy ceaseless prayer he heard,
And bade thee suddenly remove
To thy complete reward."

In sorrow and bereavement, I remain as ever,

Yours in bonds of affliction,
HENRY S. STIPP.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs burst, etc. Remember.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts etc., should be sent to

BINDING AND LOOSING.

"And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

That is, he will give the keys to Peter as still in personal spiritual life or faith, representing that of the one body or church as builded. For Peter in his own person represents the church as a one body or individuality; yet Peter in personal faith includes all saints, even as the one body or church includes all her members. And he in personal body representing or answering to that of the one visible body of the church includes the bodies of all baptized believers; even as the one body of the church includes all her members, or visible churches.

But the keys are given unto Peter as representing the rock, or spiritual life, or faith of the church, therefore to give him the keys is synonymous with saying I give them to the church in spirit or faith, and therefore to be used by that hand or power.

A key is to lock and unlock—to open and to shut; and the same key that unlocks and virtually opens, will lock and virtually shut. The church has but one door; yet here is more than one key—"I will give the keys of the kingdom of heaven." This indicates the official departments of the kingdom. The keys are the divine authority from Jesus Christ to execute the laws of the gospel kingdom of heaven on earth. And this gift constitutes her—the one gospel church so founded and built—the sole executor of the law of Jesus Christ governing and regulating the kingdom of heaven on earth.

But you have always heard that the keys were the scriptures of the new Testament? So have I, but other so-called churches and other people have the new Testament literally and in letter; or by the same right we have; and are alike commanded to execute them in a moral sense. Yet, only to the church of Christ was given the divine authority to execute them in a spiritual sense, essential to the observance of all the gospel ordinances, and all things pertaining to the government and advancement of the church, as such therefore "unto thee—unto Peter in person as answering to the one spirit or faith of the church were the keys given or this divine authority to execute. In accordance with which, an apostle said "whatsoever is not of faith is sin; that is, to presume to execute any official law of Christ by other than this authority, is to commit a sin against Christ, even as for a person to be baptized, or eat the Lord's supper, without faith, or as not born of the spirit, is a sin. Hence, we do not recognize the official work, so-called, of other sects. And even for a member of the church to do any work in obedience to the law of Christ as to form, yet done in other than the name of this faith, or as unto the Lord in spirit, is to say the least ineffectual. Therefore it is written "If any brother be overtaken in a fault let him that is spiritual restore him."

This shows that these keys must be used in every department of this Building; otherwise violence is done to it. It is more decent and orderly to take a key and unlock a door than to break it down ; to say nothing of the legality of such a course. And such violence to a house would soon badly deface it and dishonor the occupants.

Therefore, having the keys, it is his imperative duty to use them, and that with great fear and trembling as vested with the official affairs of the kingdom of heaven. And this official power and authority to execute and administer the laws is that alone that makes them gospelly valid.

But, as now left without the Apostles' gift of the Holy Ghost, and discerning of spirit, and that to interpret, as well as execute, the laws of Christ, everything must be established by two or three witnesses."

And now, whatsoever, by this rule and authority, the church binds on earth shall be bound in heaven ; nor will there ever be a conflict, as that the spirit and word of Christ always find harmony and agreement. Then to illustrate this binding and loosing, we will suppose a person applies for membership. You will remember that the apostles as personally commissioned by Jesus, and as aided by their extraordinary gifts for the special purpose, baptized persons without church authority, as that there were no visible churches till they had builded them. These were first builded, and then the keys were given them as that the Apostolic work ceased. Therefore if one now applies, two or three members, at least, must be present—no matter how many more—to establish the work in righteousness. The key to the door of the church is used now as by the authority of Jesus Christ given the church to baptize a believer.—Hence if the applicant gives evidence of faith as born of God, the church by an Elder as her servant baptizes him. (And thus, by the way, to baptize a person in body upon confession of this faith, is to build the same material upon the same one foundation rock) And thus to baptize him is to loose him in earth or body ; and so shall he be loosed in heaven or spirit ; not only within, but also to all the joys, benefits and blessings of all the kingdom of heaven. Yesterday as bound in earth or body, he was bound in the Spirit: not only within, but from all the internal privileges of the church. But to day, as loosed in body, he finds freedom to all the amenities of the heaven of the kingdom. And as there is but the one spirit and heaven or the kingdom below, he is loosed or authorized to all the things of the kingdom of heaven, that is has liberty alike in all the churches. And all the churches recognize the official act of loosing, as also the freedom of the member.

As the church only could "loose;" so she alone can "bind." If that person commits a sin unto death, or yet persists in a sin so much so that he must be excluded ; why no person or power on earth has the right to bind him, but that which loosed him : in the mouth of two or three witnesses his binding shall be established. Not the identical persons, but two or three, no matter how many more, of the same faith and order, must bind or exclude him. And thus binding him on earth or in body by visible act, he is bound in heaven or spirit to all the kingdom.

Upon the same principle an Elder is ordained or "loosed" to the functions of the gospel ministry. But the authority of two or three churches must be represented as vested in two or three Elders who must bear combined witness to the fact that the applicant for the office has been called of God, as was Aaron. Then in the name as by the authority of Jesus Christ given them, (as symbolized by the given keys) they proceed to lay hands on his personal body and thus ordaining, "loose" him to all the functions of the gospel ministry. And thus by visible act loosing him in earth, or body, he shall be, and is "loosed in heaven, or spirit. Yesterday, as bound in earth or body ; though as much called and, aside from official authority, qualified of God as to-day, he was bound in heaven or spirit ; not only within, but also throughout the militant kingdom of heaven, or church of Christ on earth :—the spirit within and without would have forbidden him to touch as attempting to perform an official act, and which would have been sin. But, to-day as loosed in earth, he is loosed in all the kingdom of heaven. The official act, loosing him in body is recognized by all the churches; and hence they feel a freedom to receive him in official character and work throughout all the militant heaven.

And now so long as that Elder retains that official authority, his official work will be valid according to the gospel. For the gospel validity of his official work rests in, and is derived entirely from that authority from the church vested in him.

And should he, by a departure from the faith or practice, or persistency in any sin, or otherwise forfeit his right to office, why then the churches, by the same hands that loosed him, must bind him, that is, depose him—making null and void the official authority once vested in him. 1 Tim. 5; 19. "And as thus bound in body, he shall be bound in all the heavens of the kingdom. Then the church of his membership should exclude, or bind him as a private member. And thus, as such, bound in body; he shall be in spirit. In which case his sins as "retained" by a church; shall be retained throughout the militant kingdom. While he should have confessed and renounced his sins, the church should have "remitted" them in visible act; and so they should have been "remitted" in heaven, or spirit, in all the kingdom.

And just so as to churches. I have said the Apostles' built or established churches in visible organization by the gift of the Holy Ghost. And after them no person, or persons had the right to build or constitute a church, as such. But two or three churches, by representation, or otherwise orderly, may. And as so constituted and authorized to exercise all the rights and functions of the church of Jesus Christ, she is thereby "loosed in earth," or body and so is "loosed in heaven" or spirit as before described. And now no power on earth has the right to destroy her identity, as such, or "bind or unchurch" her so to speak, but the very same that did "loose" her. Indeed what human hand not holding a key given by Jesus Christ to his church, or as not entrusted with the divine authority from churches of Jesus Christ would dare touch, even to impair her identity and prerogative as a church? Yet, I have known an "Association," for whose official loosing I have found no key among those given by Jesus to the church—to indirectly cause the destruction of churches; or rather, I have known of those, who by the "reconstruction" of a certain church, for certain assigned reason, have thereby recognized the power and prerogative of associations to destroy churches. There is no reconstruction clause in any commission of Jesus to his builders. Neither is there any key given by him for any official department of reconstruction. Hence my own humble opinion is that to reconstruct a church of Jesus Christ once 'loosed' by, and according to his given authority, is to do violence to the laws and to the kingdom of heaven.

But they fell into gross disorder, and how could we as churches recognize them as such? I answer, Paul placed churches and personal members of the same, in the same relative position to law: as by the same figures he made them members of the body of Christ. 1 Cor. 12. Therefore the law of doctrine and the rule of discipline that applies to one, as such applies alike to the other. Hence, to say that disorder, however gross, unchurches or destroys a church, as such: is to say it destroys a personal member in which case there would be neither church nor member. I never knew, nor heard of a church being in such gross disorder as one in the Apostles' day. Paul did extremely otherwise than reconstruct, or destroy it. There is no key to warrant destruction for disorder, but for persisting in it after gospel efforts to reclaim; after the "labor of love in the patience of hope" in that spirit of meekness and fear; and then according to law. How according to law? Why proceed just like you would against an individual member for disorder, according to the rule of Matt. 18th. Only, since the party that loosed a member, whether a church or person, is that only that combined : and therefore becomes its judge and tribunal, since two or three churches loosed these now in disorder a church must first proceed. If one church becomes aggrieved with another ; let that alone by messenger or otherwise, go, and go in the spirit, as only the spiritual can restore ; and the keys were given to the church as in spirit , and the spiritual only can handle them officially, and labor in faith, love and meekness and gentleness to reclaim and restore to order that erring church. If she fail to hear thee, then take, by messengers, two or three other churches ; and all together try to reclaim her. And if you then fail : why then you, answering to any other two, three or four churches, by the same power and authority that you had to build or constitute or "loose" that church, as such, have the very same to "bind her ; declare her abolished, and identity as a visible body destroyed. And thus binding her in earth or body, she shall be bound in heaven, as heretofore declared. For thus done in the spirit, and established by the mouth of two or three witnesses or more in the faith ; the one spirit permeating the kingdom of heaven will confirm. And then, and not 'till then are her official work : invalid. For order nor disorder affects the gospel validity of official work, whether in church or state. Baptism, as other official acts, is not impaired or even affected by the goodness or badness of the administrator, as made valid solely by the authority vested in him, and until that authority is recalled, and he deposed or "bound" will his official work remain valid.

Then to bind that church was not to kill or bind her members : members were not made by her constitution, or "loosing" ; therefore are not destroyed by her binding. Hence they, as renouncing all error and disorder, upon confession of faith, may be received by other churches ; understand, always provided they were baptized before the church and ministers baptizing were bound.

I have referred to the above churches solely to illustrate. I will add, that orderly spiritual churches knowing of long persisted in error and disorder of another, become responsible and partaker of the same, by not dealing ; and, if necessary, "binding" them as above ; just as members of the church would, to condone or neglect the gross disorder persisted in by a private member.

R. ANNA PHILLIPS.

DEAR SISTER HAM :—I received your kind and interesting letter, and you may be sure it was highly appreciated, but unexpected. I copied what you wrote to me, and sent the letter on to Elder L. H. Hardy. I think he will comply with your request in writing to you and sister Eliza Nelson. If I could write you as interesting a letter as you did me I would think I was well paid for my trouble. But I am a poor writer, a poor speller, and a poor composer. All the qualifications for writing a good letter are lacking in me. But I hope the Lord will guide me that I may say a few words to your comfort. You said something about feet washing : "Is there any reason that can be found in the Bible why we should not wash feet?" I don't know that there is, if it is done in the right spirit. But this is a question the church of Christ is not fully established in, and I don't want to stir up any confusion whatever, but want every one to be fully persuaded in his own mind. The last chapter of Matthew and the three last verses, tell about Jesus sending out his disciples, and what they were commanded to do, and what they have to teach. "And Jesus came and spoke unto them, saying, all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Now as he has all power he certainly is the proper one to command and send out, and for this very cause he says, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Now here are two things they are commanded to do. First to teach. This is very important. And they went and preached as they were bidden, that Jesus is the Christ, the Saviour of sinners, and that we should repent and believe. And as many as gladly received the word were baptized. They were just as much commanded to baptize as they were to teach. Well, they taught them and baptized them. What now? Must they turn them loose and have nothing more to do with them? No, they must continue to teach them, the same ones. What must they teach? Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. If washing one anothers feet is not one of the all things they were commanded to teach and observe I think it is near of kin to them. For he said, "Ye also ought to wash one anothers feet." If they teach and do all that he commanded them to do he is with them; not as some say he has promised to be with them, but he is with them, for he says, "And lo I am with you, alway, even unto the end of the world." This is the affirmative, and the negative is if they do not teach and do all that he has commanded, he is not with them; that is, he is not with them in what they do not do. They don't have the joy in not obeying they have in obeying.

I will notice one more sentence in your letter. "Then let none strive to be the greatest." We know, or believe that God is the greatest. It seems to me that when christians get to striving to be great, or the greatest, or to be as God, they are getting into the doctrine that the serpent preached to our mother Eve; for he told her she should be as gods. When he preached to her his sweet doctrine of lies that she should be great, her eyes should be opened, and she should be as gods, she was deceived by him, and she believed what he said, or conceived in her mind of the serpent a strong desire to be great, or to be as gods. Here was the first sorrow and the first conception, and the Lord God said unto her, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." We know to multiply figures we must have some to start with, so in everything else. And she "gave also unto her husband and he did eat." How did she give to him? In a condition that he had never seen her in before and in a condition that troubled him to the very heart. She was weeping, lamenting, sorrowing and mourning over her sad condition which she had gotten into by disobeying God and obeying the serpent. She knew that she had transgressed the law of God, and had lost that happy state which she was in before; no more to enjoy the happy garden of Eden, nor her husband. Oh, what sorrow, what trouble, no tongue can tell. And Adam was no less troubled than she was when he saw her trouble—her sorrow was his sorrow. No doubt but she hated for Adam to see her in that condition, she felt so guilty and condemned. But she must see him. Adam wants to know what ails her. Perhaps he did know for he was not deceived. She musters up courage enough to tell him what conversation she and the serpent had, and how he had deceived her, and that is the reason I am in all this trouble. Eve, you ought not have listened to him. Don't you know that God said that in the day you eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you should die. I know that; but Adam, if he had talked to you like he did to me you would have believed him too. You see what trouble I am in and you know he must have used very strong, flattering words to make me disbelieve what God said and believe what he said. Adam believed what she said, believing is eating, and that is the way she gave to him, and that is the way he eat, and their sons and daughters have been eating of that same tree ever since. A man that is a husband in deed will step between his wife and all manner of evil that he can, but here was an evil that he could not cure; she was gone beyond his power to save; he could not redeem and bring her back with him, but the love he had for her brought him to her. He was not deceived, but was in the transgression. Here the door was opened for all the sin and wickedness, pain, sorrow and death that has ever come into this world, and the serpent is the father of it all. Look at the striving that is going on in the world and among the so-called churches, in the way of preaching, and for more members, and for more money. Why every false sermon and every form of religion (except the true form which Christ set up) is of the serpent, and the more falsehoods he can get the more meat he has to eat, that is the works of the flesh, which is the dust of the ground, and that is the dust he eats; for the Lord God said unto him, "Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life." To go upon his belly represents him to be going in a very low, degraded, deceitful and cunning manner, in a proper way to deceive men; but the Lord God comforted them by giving them the promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head.

And by making coats of skin and clothing them. They had gotten into the greatest trouble they ever experienced in this world notwithstanding the trouble they saw when Cain killed Abel. We can draw some idea of their trouble by referring to our experience in the depth of conviction.

When our poor naked souls were exposed to the wrath of a sin-avenging God, without any hope, I could freely give myself to the Lord provided that he would save me. But I could see no way for him to save me. For I felt condemned and justly too. I could say I am guilty but thou art clear. I felt like all that was lacking was for him to cut me off and banish me from his peaceful presence was just to give myself to him. And that I could not do until my troubles got so great I was made willing somehow. One morning I was made willing, my trouble was an inside trouble, these words passed thro' my mind, 'Here Lord, I give myself to thee, it is all that I can do; if I am saved it is an act of mercy, if I am damned it is just. Right then, in the twinkling of an eye my trouble was gone. And love, joy and praise were in the place of the trouble. There were two extremes which I have never been able to describe only to those who have felt them; an extreme of trouble and joy. I am persuaded that you have not forgotten that time of trouble and joy you had when Christ bruised the serpent's head for you. You have not finished thanking and praising the Lord for what he did for you that day, nor ever will. For I am persuaded that you will sing redeeming love to God through endless eternity. You said you love to think about old times, old people, and old customs. Perhaps those I have written about are old enough for you to think of.

I have written more than I expected to. If what I have written agrees with the teaching of the Bible and your experience receive it and thank the Lord, otherwise throw it away. May the Lord bless you in your declining years, and as your outward man perishes may the inward man be renewed day by day by the grace of God, and may you pass through the valley and shadow of death in peace and love and joy, is the prayer of your poor unworthy brother, in Christ, as I hope,

JOSHUA MEWBORN.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I this morning take my pen in hand to write what I hope the blessed Lord has done for my soul. When I was about twenty two years old I had a dream that I was traveling a very broad road, and I came to a wall of rock, and I saw no way to go but the way I had to go, and it seemed that a man was with me, and said, yonder is a gate, and I looked to my left hand and I saw it but I told him that I could not go there: so he left me, and I looked before me and I saw a hole through the wall. I called him and told him here was where we could get through, but he did not come, and I went through, and when I got in the land was all burned down about two feet, except a little streak about one foot wide, and I was on that; so I went on, and I came to another wall, and I looked to my left hand, and I saw a great smoke, and heard a great screaming, and thought that it was hell, and I knew it was hell: but I looked before me and I saw another hole that I thought I could go through, and I came out. When I came out I saw a great sea of water, and I stood and looked, and I saw a man come out of the water in his shirt sleeves, and he was singing the sweetest song I ever heard. I looked upon a hill just where the Falls meeting house is now. I saw three men, but there was no house there then; for it was burnt down. When I awoke I seemed to be troubled a little while. I went on for about two months, and I was taken sick, and I was very sick, but I thought I was getting better, and I was lying on my bed, and I saw three rolls of cloth coming from above, and I thought that they would go over me, but when they got to me I felt them go under me, and a man before me said, here are your clothes to bury you away dead: and where is your soul? Dear Brother Gold, all I could say was, Lord, have mercy upon my poor soul: and he reached behind him and took my soul by the right hand and said to me, here is your soul and I knew my face just as well as if I was to go and look in a glass. I promised him, if he would spare me I would do better, and he said pray, and you shall live.

I began to see all my sins and all my troubles come, and I thought that I was going to die, and I felt like that if I did die I would go to hell: but I felt like if I did die it would be just.

I lived this life for eight years thinking every time I saw the sun set I would not see it rise again; I thought that I would be gone before morning. This was in the year 1874. My troubles seemed to leave me. I went on until 1882, and went to hear the Missionaries preach, and I thought that I would join them, for they told me all I had to do was to give my heart to God and be saved. I tried to believe what they said, but I found no relief from what they told me. So my trouble got worse. I left and started home and a voice appeared to me on the road and said to me, what did you promise me the night that you were sinking down and I raised you up? O if I ever had any love for God's people I had it then. I was made to believe that the Primitive Baptists are the people that I had to serve with. So I promised the Lord if he spared me until next day I would go and tell the church what I hope the blessed Lord has done for my soul.

The next day came, and I went to church, but I did not go before the church, and felt like that I was going to lose some of my family for my disobedience. I promised that I would the next meeting. So the time came and I went, and when the door was opened for the reception of members I went before the church and was received in the church and baptized on Sunday, and if I am one among you I am the least among you, for I feel like I need the prayers of all you.

I hope that you all will pray for me. Brother Gold, if you publish this in the LANDMARK please tell me whether what I have written is an experience of grace or not: for I feel so little in my hope, I fear that I am deceived, and I do not want to deceive the church. Yours in hope of eternal life.
G. N. Melton.

Remarks.

How deep and mysterious are God's ways. In slumbers of the night, when deep sleep falleth on man, God speaks once, yea twice, and man perceiveth it not.

He does not wake us up to speak to us, and to seal instruction, or to so fasten it in the soul that it is never forgotten or removed, but remains fixed in memory as a comfort and reason of hope in the dark day of trial and storm.

How do we know whether God speaks to us in visions or dreams in these last days? Is what is told us in the vision or dream in accord with the truth of God? Does it hide pride from man, and abase and humble him? Does it change the course of ones conduct ever after? Does repentance flow out after? When one is awake after this does it appear that the Lord is with the man, and does he walk with God? For what God does in secret shall be told on the housetop, or when the Lord teaches it is to profit, and will show itself in a godly life afterward.

We consider brother Melton as a child of God, and blessed with a experience of grace, and esteem him as a dear, humble brother, and a companion in tribulation. P. D. G.

TROUBLE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, VERY DEAR BROTHER:—I am in much trouble. My family are all very ill, except my little daughter, and they have been for fifteen days, or I would tell you how we love you.

Your paper comes fresh and full of good things all the time, and, while some of our learned ministers are often going into deep and unrevealed matters, you seem to pass it by, and all the while you feed the sheep and lambs of God, which are scattered over this broad land of ours, with such good and wholesome food, that the sheep have no cause to go way down in a strange land to get good feeding ground, or to wander back to Eden where Adam died: but to come only where you live, even at Bethel, in the land of Judah, where the green olive tree is always beautiful and fresh, and the glorious city may be remembered in a fair day, where a stream of that clear river makes our hearts glad, and where God's covenant is set up, and the sins and iniquities of his people are remembered no more forever, and to the general assembly of the saints of his first born son.

Oh may I be permitted to sit where you, brother Gold, and all his humble followers sit, and adore and praise him for his great salvation; and then as Jacob can say, I could say, enough brother Gold. Pray for me and mine in this our distress. Your unworthy, but sincere brother. THOMAS BELL.

EVEN—ONENESS.

"And the Lord shall be King over all the earth in that day there shall be one Lord and his name one." Zech. 14-9

My mind of late has been exercised to some extent on the one Lord and also the oneness of his people, and if I accomplish what I now design my prayer is, that the Lord may be glorified and his people edified. The scripture at the head of this article, has to my mind, direct reference to our gospel day, but we are not to infer that he has not always been Lord, and "king over all the earth" at the commencement of time, and therefore created man, beasts, and all things.

He sat alone as supreme ruler. He demonstrated his power by signs, wonders, and miracles, wrought by his mighty hand in "ancient times". Then he had "power over all flesh," over the wicked, and righteous, as well as now, then his power, and special protection is over Israel, the "apple of his eye," the people he "chose for his own name-sake."

The command was they "should have no other god before me," but many of them set up strange gods and were destroyed, but there were no strange gods with Jacob. "So the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him. Deut. 32:12. As Jacob represents the "new man", or the "inner man" in spiritual Israel, so he certainly did represent a choice, peculiar people then.

It is evident from scriptural proof that the Lord is God and rules in the heavens above and in the earth beneath, and "His dominion is from sea to sea, from the rivers to the ends of the earth." He governs and controls both men and devils, "Works all things after the counsel of his own will." He is from everlasting to everlasting, the same, yesterday, today, and forevermore; and, says "there is no God beside me, a just God and a Savior, there is none beside me," again "Remember the former things of old, for I am God and there is none else, I am God and there is none like me."

Have we ever indeed felt the full force of the language "I am God and there is none else." Have we felt and realized that he is our God? If so "happy is the people whose God is the Lord."

All sane persons believe there is a God, but ah what a contrast between a spiritual belief and natural or historical belief. The apostle James says "the devils believe and tremble." Little children are taught the existence of a God, and are catechised and made to answer "there is a God" but alas their answers are undoubtedly without faith. He that cometh to God must believe that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him, believe that he is God and that he does really exist, and this belief or faith comes only by revelation. Jesus said, "no man knoweth the son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the son and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." And again; "no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost" When a sinner is quickened and made alive by God's divine spirit, and the light of his countenance shines in his benighted soul he is made to cry out like Thomas, "My Lord, and my God." He is made "to know him the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." He is the believer's shield and hiding place, fortress and high-tower. He is their hiding place from the wind, and covert from the tempest, as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Ah, what a precious promise to those that truly believe in the one Lord," "He is their comfort by day, and their joy by night, they have assuredly found him whom their souls love. Jesus all the day long is their joy and their song. They suck honey out of the rock and oil out of the flinty rock, and drink of the water of life freely. This is the God whom we adore, who hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel and given our poor, weary, heavy-laden souls rest, the rest that remaineth to the people of God." And now as we have thus experienced this happy change we desire to ascribe all power, praise, honor and glory to his matchless name. He is a perfect God, perfect in all his divine essence, perfect in power, perfect in knowledge, perfect in wisdom, perfect in judgment, perfect in mercy and perfect in love. This is the God the Primitive Baptists profess to worship and serve. The Arminians profess to worship the same God, but it is evident from our observations and honest scrutiny as "discerners of spirits" that they "ignorantly worship him." They try to elevate man to the position of God and by their argument God has no more, nor as much power as they have. He is by their argument only able to accomplish his purpose in part, and he is unconcerned as to the salvation of his people, and the sinner who is destitute of will power, and is dead in trespasses and sins must commence to work himself into God's favor and when he has gotten half-way God will meet him. This is absolutely denying God's power. We believe he is a whole and complete Savior. And to believe that God is deficient in any of his attributes destroys the very idea of a God.

Now as there is but "one Lord" and he alone is arrayed in all his glory and perfection, there is certainly only one people chosen of him and this people can say "unto us there is but one God," and as there is but one God there is but one way of saving poor sinners. There was nothing good he foresaw in them that caused him to save, call, pity and redeem them, but "in his love and pity he redeemed them, and for the great love wherewith he loved them even when they were dead in trespasses and in sins." God did not look from eternity into times and see his people in their depraved state and conclude they were able to save themselves eternally. There would have been no need of Jesus coming into the world to suffer and die for their sins if they could have saved themselves. Something has been done for them they could not possibly do themselves, and for this they will extol and ever glorify his matchless name. God's people are all taught in grace's school, and are constrained to say, "Salvation is of the Lord;" not part works, and part grace, but are saved by grace and by grace alone. They are all saved by the "one Lord" and saved one way, and all have the same experience, have felt the same effectual working of his mighty power, "for by one spirit are we all into one body." 1 Cor. 12—13. And all (in the second birth) are born into the kingdom and thereby constituted heirs of the mystical body "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, heirs of the inheritance of the saints in light."

As his name is one his people are partakers of his name. Simeon hath declared how God at first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called." Acts 15; 14—17. "And all the people shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord." Deut. 28—10. As national Israel was a chosen, separate and peculiar people, so is spiritual Israel. God was pleased to separate them from other nations, and they had no intercourse with them, so we believe he has separated us from the world, therefore from a deep sense of our obligations we cannot conscientiously have any fellowship or intercourse with them. Old Balaam was made to cry out from the top of the rock, "I see him from the hills, I behold him, lo, the people shall dwell alone and shall not be reckoned among the nations." So the Primitive Baptists are not reckoned among the churches of anti-christ. The command to us is "to come out from among them, and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." 2Cor. 6—17. Knowing what we do we are bound to draw a line of distinction when contending for the existence of one people, one church. We are persecuted, called selfish, old fogies, opposed to progress and enterprises, but God has made the distinction, therefore, "We cannot but speak the things which we have heard." Jesus said "upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." There are no multitudes, or plurality of churches, except the "six hundred three score and six," churches of anti-christ. Neither is there a plurality of faiths, of baptisms, "One Lord, one faith and one baptism." The Arminians contend that it takes all the different sects or denominations to constitute the church, and every one is a branch of the church, Jesus says, speaking to the Apostles, I am the vine, and ye are the branches" which has no reference to the church. We know, "There are three-score queens, and four-score concubines, and virgins without number," also know "my dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother; she is the choice one of her that bear her," I firmly and conscientiously with an unbiased mind, believe that the Primitive or Old School Baptists are the only true church or people. Some will ask how do you know that; well the scriptures assure us that our experience accords with its teachings, and our faith is in perfect harmony with the same; we learn from the Church Hist'ry which dates as far back as Hist'ry can reach that the Primitive Baptists "have kept the faith" and have seen eye to eye, and have spoken the same things. And my dear brethren, I believe it possible that we could have known the true church, the true doctrine, without either the Bible or History. God is able to reveal these things to us. I speak from experience, because God by his spirit evidently showed me his church. Yet there is a people that affirm they are the true church, which are Catholics and Mission Baptists. I don't know much about either, but know more of the latter than the former. They, the Mission Baptists, say they are the true church, and the Primitives left them and departed from the faith, and assert with great boldness that Jesus and the apostles were Missionaries. If they were such where is our hope. They actually deny the plain teachings of the scriptures—deny the power of God to the saving of the soul, and believe in creature obedience as a procuring cause of remission of sins, and say they believe in election, but the creature must elect himself. Whoever heard of a man electing him self. "O consistency thou art a jewel." They have certainly gone square back on their "Articles of Faith" because the last minute I saw containing their articles were as ours. We see them attaching themselves to every institution of man, affiliating with all orders in worship, in protracted meetings; you cannot distinguish them from Methodists or any other order.

My friends, please reflect, please consider. Have you obeyed the injunction, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." I am persuaded you have not, you cannot be separate, and joined to all sorts of men-made institutions. Is the above Primitive faith and practice? if it is we are wrong. After it is all summed up there is no perceptible difference in the so-called churches; they differ a little in practice, but are essentially the same in doctrine. All the Arminians from the Catholics down, so far as I have learned, believe in the effort of the creature, free agency or free will, and of their own natural ability to extricate themselves from sin. Strictly speaking, there are only two denominations or orders. The church of Christ and the church of anti-Christ, the Kingdom of Light and the kingdom of darkness, one right way and one wrong way. Everything has its opposing element. All the Arminian world combined compose the church of anti-christ. While they believe the multitude right and speak boastingly of their members, there is a poor little sect everywhere spoken against that are contending earnestly for salvation by grace and by grace alone.

Even at this present time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. Now who is right. My honest convictions are, we are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets' Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. And now as we have the assurance by faith that we are his followers who "worship God in Spirit, let us walk worthy of the vocation wherein we are called with all lowliness, and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. This people have I formed for myself and they shall shew forth my praise."

In conclusion, permit me to admonish you to discontinue controversies and words to no profit; especially deep and hidden things avoid, because they certainly gender strife. Preach and write more of the plan of salvation and God's love for us poor creatures. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and his wonderful works to the children of men. Let us speak of the glory of his kingdom and talk of his power. Let us pray that God may fill our poor souls unutterably full of his grace, and if consistent with his will, that he may bring into his fold those that are wandering about in a waste howling wilderness of sin; and may 18-88 be a year of revival among Primitive Baptists.

Brother Gold, I submit these few lines to your disposal, do with them as you think best. May the Lord bless you in your labors, and enable you as he has heretofore to contend for the true principles of the doctrine of Christ.

"Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor, and glory forever and ever, Amen."
Yours in tribulation, P. H. JAMES.

ENCOURAGING.

DEAR BROTHER LESTER:—I was made to look back along the way, on last Saturday and Sunday, I hope prayerfully and profitably. Just one year ago, on Saturday, Emma and myself offered our poor selves before the church, tremblingly, with our little hope, told in broken and stammering words, few in number, and were, to our surprise, received; and that was a stone by the way never to be forgotten. The church, by putting me at her work, planted another for me to look back upon. Yesterday, one year ago, we were baptized and admitted into all the privileges and blessings of the church; and to me they have been many and full of comfort. That was a day of remembrance; and on yesterday the church set up another by accepting, in so feelingly and heartfelt manner, my poor attempts to do for them a duty, which is more than I am fit for or anywise worthy to receive. I am made to wonder what they see about me, a poor worm of the dust, to be worthy of such confidence. All along the way of this twelve months of sojourn on the earth and with the church I have been blundering, stumbling and hobbling along much to my sorrow, but at times; when no note of time, or timely things were before me. I have been in my place in church when I did not have before me a single body or thing in this worldly sense, then I was made to feel I was keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, and to me brother Lester, this is the only way to fully enjoy it.

I have had moments of rich experience when rushing about over my fields among my stock, trying to manage my earthly affairs for the good of my dear little family, which God has given me, and blessed with bright minds; and to me they have been rapturous moments, when I have wished for you, or some other dear brother or sister, that I might empty out of my full soul into theirs of what the Lord had been pouring into mine.

Dear brother, I had such a beautiful thought the other day. I had thought on and witnessed the natural beauty before me many times, but it rushed over me in that higher, grander and spiritual beauty at this time as never before. I was out early in the morning of one of our delightful autumnal days just gone by, looking at my young wheat, one field on either side of me toward the east and toward the west, as the oncoming lord of day was rolling back the curtains of the night, and the earth sowed with orient beauties lay before me; each little spear of wheat had its head covered with a dew drop, born of the dark night that had passed, that brilliantly shined out as so many solitaires. Mind you, I was looking toward the sun. I thought of my dear brethren in the Lord. When I am looking at them, with the sun of righteousness in brightness before me, they are all lovely and beautiful to look upon—crowned with more than diamond loveliness. I might elaborate that little spikelet of wheat growing up, being crowned with its full head of ripened grain; so too with my brethren growing in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and finally filling the measure of their days on earth and falling into the garden of eternal rest, to see Jesus as he is and to bask in the sunlight of his eternal glory. Now turn with me and look away from the sun at my field of wheat in the west, and we do not behold its diamond like beauty; it has a kind of sombre, commonplace appearance. So too, when I am seeing my brethren without my spiritual sight, without the full work and glory of my dear master; not having him as my head full in view; not looking with spiritual eyes, not talking of his goodness and mercy, and speaking of his glorious power. They do not then look to me as though they could grow in grace or truth, do not look as though they were prepared, or ever could enter into eternal rest, of if they should, do not hardly feel as though we should like to be there. I am glad we all do not feel so at all times, or long at a time. If we do, I think the Lord will take away from us that which we have, or seem to have. I think we are made to see this in our churches at times. Some brother or sister has for long years occupied a very near place among the brethren of his own church, and grown up also in a larger sense among the brethren over a wider extent of country until his or her influence is close and wonderful; yea, too much for poor humanity and it gets heady. Then the good Lord begins to take away that power or influence—to take away that which he seemeth to have. Doubtless he felt rich, felt he had stock enough to stand a war, to issue a proclamation, throw out videttes and make ready suppers; but the Lord rules in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth: glorious thought to the poor, trembling little ones. I am glad Daniel's God carries the keys of the kingdom on his own shoulder; I am glad the angel stood by Paul in the night; I am glad Joshua found the Lord's host when by Jericho; but he lifted up his eyes first. Perhaps he may have felt himself the real captain. Every good and perfect gift comes from above—above natural man—beyond our ken, from God, out of Heaven. The spies were let down by a cord. Paul was let down in a basket. His blood cleanseth from all sin, enough for poor sinners. The scarlet line saved the harlot alive, the same line the spies were let down by, the same blood that saves you will save me, save all the dear family of our God, all for whom he died. But I am anxious, tremblingly enquiring, am I his or am I not? How is it with you my brother? When I can with full soul cry out, God be thanked, I am wonderfully blessed; I have been fed on the bread of life, a table in the wilderness. Who can do better preaching? Measure this if you can. The Psalmist said he put my feet in a room. Think of its height, length and breadth: I will not try to tell you of its extent, only trust in the Lord. But oh, my frailty; keep me, deliver me O Lord, I have to continually cry out. David was such a man. Paul too was made to cry out on account of his wretchedness, oppressed with his body of death. Who shall deliver me was his cry, our cry, the cry of all the little helpless children of God. I love to hear it, like the song in the night time. I am ever cheered on by it. I have companions by the way that I can walk with, that I can freely give the secret of my soul, that I can lie down with in the darkness of our spiritual journey here on earth: tell them of my trials, tribulations and sorrows; yea even of my persecutions; for these are they who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Many such have crossed over the stream. Many more are crossing now, but a glorious thought ever comes up to me in this. The same glorious gospel they unfolded, and were enabled to comfort the children of God with-in their day and trial is left behind for you and for me. The same spiritual songs they were permitted to sing, are for us poor travelers of to-day, and will be to the end of all things. I am glad it is so. These glorious things are for all the smallest ones, until the last one has been taken home to God.

A Dudley, a Johnson, a Beebe can only fill his place, the full work his master laid out for him in eternity, ere time was, and pass on to his eternal rest. I am in one sense as old as they, rich as they, wisdom as great, born to an inheritance, incorruptible and full of glory. If I am only Christ's, then in that sense I was always His. Can any be older? Can any be richer? Can any have more wisdom? In this sense I never forget anything, for Christ is my memory. As he desires some new views of himself are brought out, and I am enabled to be comforted by them, and to tell them to some little one who tabernacles with me. This is wonderful: I am ever learning; all my brethren are thus learning; but never getting perfect, never exhausting in the smallest sense the source of all knowledge. My trouble is to be willing to learn, to be humble, to be sitting at the feet of Jesus, to choose the good part. I am so often being worried and troubled about many things. I will not trouble you more at present with my poor thoughts. Your brother in hope of eternal life.

A NOBLE UTTERANCE.

When the angry English monarch demanded of the speaker of the famous long Parliament, Lentell, to point out the defiant members, the speaker fell on his knees saying. "Sire: I have neither eyes to see or lips to speak, except as this house shall direct, whose servant I am." If one so felt that submission to an earthly master, how much more should we feel to serve him who is Lord of lords and King of kings. If his eyes are our light, and his tongue is our speech, and his life is our life, and we are hid in him, how blessed the servitude.

THE PLAGUE.

The disease of leprosy or sin that so often breaks out in Israel hides and lies within the sinner or man. In the days of old when Israel was journeying in the wilderness or dwelling in Canaan suddenly this plague would burst out. When Miriam rebelled against God suddenly she appeared leprous, and was shut up as a vile one. When King Uzziah thrust himself into the priesthood instantly the plague of leprosy broke out of him, and himself hastened to flee out of the temple, and was a leper until his death.

One did not have to go off into some other section, or come in contact with some one having this foul disease, but when he sinned presumptuously it would break out of him, because it was already in him. Leprosy is a raging evil within the people of God. The disease is within and remains there. When Moses was commanded to put his hand into his bosom and draw it out, behold it was leprous: for the leprosy was in his heart, as it were. When told to return it there, and again withdraw it from his bosom, the hand was whole as the other, but the leprosy was still in his bosom. This abiding sense of Moses' vileness caused him to bear with sinners and make intercession for them.

The plague is within. It may burst out any moment. Nothing but the mighty and gracious power of God can restrain and keep back sin. How often too the Lord stays it, and keeps it back. He keeps back his people from presumptuous sins, and from their ruin.

Jesus cleansed lepers. He bore our sins in his own body. King Uzziah was a leper till his death. It was the year that King Uzziah died that one saw the Lord in glory, and his train filled the temple. Nothing is said concerning the priesthood of the tribe of Judah. He thrusts himself in the priesthood, and leprosy broke out upon him. Then he bore it till he died. He was really a transgressor. The leprosy was truly in him, and therefore it comes out. In some deep sense he is a figure of Jesus who, though he knew no sin, yet bore our sins in his own body, and is made a curse for us. He must therefore die to enter into glory. When he dies then his train fills the temple. In the year that king Uzziah died Isaiah saw the Lord, and his glory filled the temple. Through death Jesus stays the plague and sin is not imputed, but glory is revealed in his resurrection.

MEANS AND INSTRUMENTS.

This question has for many years caused much agitation among our brethren, and in some sections of the country divisions have been the result, which in most, if not every case has not been simply a division between means and anti-means, but good brethren have been torn asunder—fellow-laborers have been arrayed against each other—family against family even, and flesh against flesh, and family for family and flesh for flesh, apparently regardless of the peace of Zion.

It is needful that offences come, but woe to that man by whom they come. It is necessary that there be a sifting it seems ; and it is also necessary that we know who is appointed to that work. In the days of Christ in the flesh, the devil was the one who served in that capacity, and I am not so sure but that he is equally subservient to the will of his master in this age, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that he should have all such jobs.

Jesus sits as a refiner, and is himself like refiner's fire. He will refine and purify his people, and if he wishes a servant to do his bidding in scourging and afflicting his people, that they may know whence cometh their help, he bids satan take away the hedge that is round about them, and to touch their bones if necessary. But when he wishes to comfort them he sends Elihu, or one whom he has called to the gospel of peace, love and joy in the Holy Ghost, and his preaching tends to cementing the members to-gether in love and not to their separation. It is the promise and duty of the servants of God in the gospel ministry to labor to-gether, and not to strive, but to be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient in meekness, instructing those that oppose themselves, if peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will. 2 Tim. 2—24.

The servant of God is supposed to be able to teach, and therefore he should endeavor to instruct the little ones in meekness, and not to set forth what he calls deep doctrine in great swelling words, and then if the children cannot readily take what has been thus handed out, say to them, "you are not sound," and brand them with various things, which almost drown them in sorrow, and despondency, whereas they should be fed on milk, and thereby nourished and strengthened in that part wherein they are weak.

If the preachers or teachers do not agree, or are quarreling, disputing, and debating upon technicalities and words to no profit, what may be expected of the little ones but confusion, division, and destruction as churches here in this pilgrimage.

It is necessary, and proper to discuss questions of vital importance to the people of God, and, if they be properly discussed, great benefits are derived therefrom ; but if the flesh enters into the discussion, and any motive is in view, except the special comfort and peace of Zion, the result will surely prove more or less disastrous to the church.

I am confident in my own mind that in some instances there have been divisions growing out of what wastermed means doctrine, or the discussion of the subject which was a forced one—merely a pretext in order to a division, that some men might thereby become champions who would otherwise have been compelled to have acknowledged other men of superior talents in numbers, if not in quality. And not only has this been the case in this question, but also on others that have also produced divisions.

It is rarely the case, if ever, that divisions are made strictly upon the point at issue, therefore many of the people of God are led away by a fleshly feeling after men of corrupt minds, on the one hand, and driven by those on the other who frequently allow their zeal to run away with their better judgments.

How careful then should we be in the discussion of all matters of controversy, that the subject be clearly defined, and strictly adhered to.

In many discussions the parties discussing keep very well balanced. They are like two little boys contending for the possession of a string, one pulls from one end against the other who holds the other end, and in most cases the string breaks and each party, with so much as happened to fall to him, tumbles back to the injury frequently of his head, and to the confusion of the upright position which he should occupy. Or they are like a mule on a bridge, which shies from one side and runs off on the other side.

In some sections the means question is being agitated now, and I fear will produce trouble. And will eventually cause disunion, unless the subject is properly treated.

From what I have gathered in my ramblings, there never has been a division of much extent that has shown the subject of means to have been a vital one, or even a vital factor in the matter causing division.

In the division, when the Missionary Baptists went off from us, means and instrumentalities were only vital factors as being the legitimate companions of a general atonement, which they have set up together with all manner of auxiliaries; which was not the case with those known as means Baptists, when they went off, nor is it the case now, though in some cases they have eventually become loose in their order and practices, and receive alien baptism; and in some places where they have become more alienated, and somewhat proselyted, they are altogether corrupted in their way, but these things came on gradually from contact and association, and were not so at first, I learn. I do not mean to favor the course, nor conduct of any who may be connected with the mean's Baptists, but I wish to show that the grounds of division in many, if not all instances, where the subject of means was involved, were not well defined nor properly and fully delineated by those who may have, and do now contend for the doctrine.

I have read several articles from different ones, and some of them from able men, in advocacy of means, and have so far failed to see that any of them touched the real principle at issue in their arguments, nor in the proof texts quoted. The question involving the point of differences is; Is the preaching of the gospel an ordained means to the quickening of sinners dead in trespasses and sins. But when a proof text is presented to prove the affirmative, it is only proof of conviction or conversion, or the establishing of the believer in the belief of the truth.

It must be remembered that the possession of life precedes all else in the manifestation of salvation, or any principle of it, and that how, or by what process, or through what medium this life comes unto the individual is the point of investigation.

Our people teach the perfect work of Jesus, and that this perfect work has wrought a finished salvation, and that all there is to be done now is the manifestation of this salvation.

We read that God hath given unto us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son. Now this life being in his son, and I conclude is only, and always in him, we must have him before it can be said that we have eternal life. The matter hinges upon our having the Son as to whether we have life; for he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life." 1John. 5—12.

Jesus says, "I give unto them eternal life. Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his son into your hearts, crying, Abba-Father."

I am not able to separate between the Son of God, and his Spirit, nor between him and eternal life. God gives us Christ, and with him he freely gives us all things. He does not give us all things, and with them give us Christ, but with Christ all things are given. So then we see that we have but to simply ascertain how Christ is given, and we have the way all things are given, as they are in him.

Does the Father give us his son thro' the preaching of the gospel, or does he not thereby testify unto us that he has already given him to us? "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness." Now a witness does not bring things to pass, but testifies that they have come to pass.

There is quite a difference between the preaching of a thing, and the thing itself. When Jesus is preached, he is seen in the preaching by faith in them who see and hear, but the preaching is not Jesus.

The preacher must have Jesus or he cannot preach him, and the hearer must have him, or he cannot hear of him.

We preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and we believe by the workings of the same; therefore preaching, and the effects of preaching are by the same operation, so we had just as well claim that, by one believing Christ another would receive him, as to preach that by ones preaching Christ another receives him. Things equal to each other are equal to the same thing. I believe this is true of both preacher and hearer, in the legitimate course of the preached word. I do not believe that one ever preaches the gospel but that some one hears it, and rejoices with him, in the spirit; but I do believe that oft'times the children of God when all alone are made to rejoice in God their Savior.

A correct understanding of what one does really believe depends very much upon the terms and words used to set it forth. Quickening does not mean conviction, neither is conviction the same as conversion, nor conversion as believing. Dead people are never convicted, or converted, neither do they believe anything, but if they have life they are subject to either when properly wrought upon.

I might not do well to claim the ability or right to define these terms without due deference to the understanding of my brethren, but I may with propriety call their attention to the importance of a careful examination of the meaning of each term, and the proper bearing of each to the other, and how their order of succession comes, and to what extent each qualifies and authorizes the legitimate following of the other.

In all questions involving technicalities—out of which grow differences of opinion, we can not be too careful in employing such words and terms as will most clearly indicate what we do most certainly believe. I have already stated that to quicken means to make alive—to transmit to, and bestow life upon one who is dead whereby he is made alive. While the elect of God are yet dead in sin, he sends forth the Spirit of his son into their hearts and quickens them, gives them life, makes them alive. "It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and in sins." If the flesh profiteth nothing and man is flesh, what part could poor, simple, deprived man accomplish as an instrument in this great work, but nothing? But when the Lord designs to thrash the mountains with a worm, then that worm is equal to the requirements in the case. In whatever work the Lord may design to use his servants, they, through his design and grace, become important and indispensable factors in the work, but where man is not required, he cannot enter the work, either for or against the Lord, but is simply nothing in God's account. It seems that conviction follows next in order after quickening. Convict means "to prove guilty." It is not possible, I dare say, for an unquickened sinner to see, or be made to see his wretched, guilty condition in the sight of God. He has a kind of common-place idea that he is a sinner, but you cannot convince him that he is so bad as you represent him to be, or that he is already condemned, nor can you interest him in the promises and salvation of our God. Is there a preacher in all this country who has not experienced at least one futile attempt in this direction.

Is there a single promise of good things in all the Bible to the unquickened sinner? If not, what have we upon which to found an argument before him that could possibly enlist his attention, or interest? The things of the spirit are foolishness to him, therefore no amount of foolishness however ably forced upon him could induce him for one moment to entertain the idea that there is wisdom in them. It requires no great amount of reasoning to convince a quickened and convicted sinner that he is interested in salvation, but even then we fail to convince him that this interest is an evidence of life, and a positive guarantee of a blessed immortality beyond this life. But when he is converted, which work follows conviction, then he believes fully with all his heart, not so much because we told him, but because it has been revealed to him by the Spirit, yet he now believes we told him the truth concerning his condition and that which would follow in a good hope through grace.

All quickened sinners are interested in salvation, and want to be saved from wrath, and all such are subjects of gospel address to the extent of the leadings of God's Spirit, and when led fully thereby into the belief of the truth, they are made to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Individuals are often, during preaching, convicted, or converted, or confirmed in hope, and date these incidents accordingly, which is correct, but does the preacher feel that he has whereof to glory, or does he go to work therefore to devise means in himself, or otherwise, whereby others may be made to thus realize, or be quickened into life? Or should he not go on and preach the gospel, and leave the preparation for and application of his preaching with the Lord? What comfort is there to either saint or sinner, in the thought that man is an instrument, and preaching is a means for the quickening of sinners? And how much real comforting gospel is there in a sermon devoted to prove that such is the case? Why should it differ with us whether this or that, or any thing is accomplished by our preaching? Since we are not called to preach on probation, we are not required to prove from the scriptures that any thing whatever is accomplished through or by our preaching or ourselves, but our gift is passed upon by the church, according to the comfort and edification accruing to them thereby. All confusion arising from the agitation of the subject of means must lie at the door of those who advocate it, in the greater part, for I am certain the subject would not be referred to by those opposing it, but for their advocating it, except in cases where those who oppose the idea have made it an everlasting hobby, which may be the case with some. Why should a question that can only tend to the dividing asunder of good brethren, and the destruction of the peace, to a great extent, of those who are one in faith and hope, be now introduced where it has not been, and persistently advocated, when those who contend for it must know the consequences? Why not contend for the things which make for peace whereby one may edify another? Has this question ever brought peace? No, but confusion, and diversion. Let us have grace, whereby one may edify another.

WHAT A WONDER.

A friend requests my view of 2nd Kings. 13:21.

"And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived and stood up on his feet."

REMARKS.

The grave is not the last, final, unending resting-place of the dead. The hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.

In the Old Testament, figures and symbols setting forth the resurrection appear to foreshadow that glorious truth. Here is one in the hasty burial of this man in the sepulchre of the wonderful prophet Elisha. In their trouble and haste the people put this man's bones with the prophet's bones for fear of the bands of Syrians who were depredating the land, when suddenly the man rises up and lives.

What mighty signs did appear in these prophets in the olden times? Elisha places himself on a corpse, and the dead rises up. Here, even after the prophet is dead, mere contact with his bones causes the dead man to spring to life, the dead with the dead, and one is quickened. Does not this show an unseen, eternal power, proclaiming the resurrection of the dead?

The oneness or unity of Christ and his people, even embracing the coming of Jesus in the flesh, who took part of the same because the children are partakers of flesh and blood, or who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and thus took not on him the nature of angels, but took the seed of Abraham, and was found in fashion as a man, to come to, reach, and be fully one with his people, far more fully than Elisha did by putting his body on the body of the dead man; in order that by means of death he might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Hence it was prophesied, thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise; and the earth shall cast out her dead.

None bound up with Jesus can ever be lost, none chosen in him can ever be cast off forever. None for whom he died shall ever be driven away;

"This I do find, we two are so joined,
He'll not dwell in glory, and leave me behind."

A touch of the blessed Jesus expels death, heals disease, makes whole the soul, and quickens the dead into spiritual life, and raises them up to eternal life.

Enemies are for good when they press us to the great prophet, and lead us to cast our lot with him. No better shelter, none so good, as to be found with Jesus in this city of refuge. Because he lives we shall live also. In the death of Jesus is our death, in his resurrection is our resurrection. He put away our sins by the sacrifice of himself.

P. D. G.

SATURDAY WORSHIP.

A friend desires to know why Baptists have worship on Saturdays.

What reason can Baptists give for having worship on Saturday? To worship God is so good a thing that no day could be better employed than in this way. If we do not feel like worshipping him every day we feel wrong. Like some men who say they are excused from praying because they do not feel like it. But if they were right they would feel like praying.

Saturday has become such a day of worldly business that most people go to town on that day, and hence they cannot go to preaching. Some go to trade, some to drink, some to do nothing or worse, and some to collect money. Some other denominations formerly had preaching on Saturday, but they all have pretty much quit it because they have all gone to their merchandise or worldly business, so that they are not now able to gather any congregations on that day, and they have abandoned Saturday meetings, so far as I know.

The Old Baptists are the only ones now that adhere to the custom of having Saturday preachings, and now and then one of them gets into such a spell of trading that he will not leave his business long enough on Saturday to go to preaching, which is wrong and a violation of the promise he made when he joined the church. For it is our custom to have preaching on Saturday, and conference meetings on that day, and every member should attend every meeting, if he possibly can do so.

But why do our people hold meetings on Saturdays? It is a custom they have observed from time immemorial.

Saturday is the seventh day or Jewish Sabbath, the day on which they rested from their labor and worshipped God. Jesus went on the Sabbath into the Synagogues and taught, and so did the apostles. This is enough authority for Baptists to meet and serve God on Saturday.

We also find the apostles meeting on Sunday, the first day of the week, on which Jesus arose from the dead. This is the beginning of days in the gospel; so we worship on the Sabbath or Saturday, which is the last day, and also on Sunday the first day. As the law is fulfilled in the gospel, and meets and ends in it, so we observe both and worship God in both; yet we do not observe days in a legal sense as carnal worshippers. One day is no more than another day, so far as 24 hours is concerned. The Sabbath is the shadow of good things to come. We have both the shadow and the substance, and one is swallowed up and completed in the other. We say worship God on both days.

Obituary.

FLOYD ORVILLE WELBORN.

The subject of this notice was born August 2nd, 1885, in Surry county, N. C., and died June 14th, 1887, aged 1 year, 10 months and 12 days. He lived in the affections of his father, Wm. R. Welborn, who loved him dearly; for he was the darling of my natural life, and it seemed that my life was wrapped up in the life of the child, for he was the pride of my life. Floyd was the finest child to his age I ever saw, and the most sensible, and was admired and loved by all who knew him. His mental and physical powers were so very extraordinary that all who knew him wondered. He was a child possessed with extraordinary traits of love. He never was known to fight; for if he was in possession of anything his little sister or any other child wanted he would always freely give it up with a smile on his face and in the most loving manner. He was never sick a day in his life, as we knew of, until Thursday before he died. On arising on Thursday morning we found that he was sick with Cholera Infantum, but we did not know what his disease was. Notwithstanding his suffering he did not give up as long as he could go. He made a loving little visit with his mother to the woods on the morning he was taken sick; talking with her, and gathered some green sourwood sticks and brought them in the house and played with them as long as he could, and this was the last work he ever did, for he soon commenced to get worse and continued so until he died. No one knows the sorrow of my poor heart; for I thought that I could not give him up. O, it was like taking my heart strings, and I would go and ask the Lord to take me and leave my darling; for I thought that when my sweet little darling son died that I would die also. The doctor and my dear wife would try to comfort me by telling me that they thought he would get well, but just before he died the Lord enabled me to give him up. Just a few minutes before he died he tried to raise his little arms to put them around my neck and kiss me, as he was accustomed to do, then soon passed sweetly away. He endured his sufferings with the greatest patience, and was in his right mind to the very last. I believe from his heavenly appearance that Jesus was with him.

My little boy has gone to rest;
With Jesus he's forever blest;
He reigns forever in the skies,
And in immortal glory shines.

OLA STONE.

On Sunday, July 3rd, 1887, Ola, the youngest daughter of W. O. and Sarah H. Stone, died at its home, near Durham, N. C.

Going to the grave is our loved one,
Going with its bloom of youth:
Gone to its resting place,
Gone where parting is no more.

The baby of its parents the fourth one is gone;
The loved one of us all
Is asleep in Jesus' love,
Who reigns in Heaven above.

Oh! may the God of Heaven and earth,
Who suffered, bled and died for us,
Comfort and caress its grieved ones here,
Who are yet to suffer pain and death.

Oh! I am its mother who is much grieved,
But may my heavenly Father comfort me;
Make me willing to suffer death for him,
Who suffered, bled and died for me.

Though it's heart-rendering to give my loved one up,
May I but think it all for best;
For God my heavenly Father
Can heal my wounded, broken heart.

The little infant is now at its grand parents',
To be left until the resurrection day,
And we are all to be judged
According to our deeds here on earth.

Oh, Lord! can I go and leave my darling one,
behind,
To that old home where it breathed its last breath,
To view its image and cause me to grieve,
To see my darling baby never more?

Oh, Lord! give me the heart to bear while from it,
And cause me never to wish it back to this world
Of sorrow, of grief, of trouble and distress;
But prepare me to meet it in that better land, far, far away.

Little Ola Hawkins is my baby's name,
She only lived with us eight months and five days,
When the good Lord saw fit to take it
To its resting place where parting is no more.

Little Ola leaves mother, father and three sisters,
To mourn their loss, besides relatives and friends.

I had four children, all girls, which I named,
Lula Estell, Maud Fidelia, Nora Gertrude, and Ola Hawkins.

I will close, and pray I may meet in Heaven,
Where all is joy, comfort, peace and love.
Lord may I be submissive for it to leave me,
Till I am called to meet it above, where all is love.

WILLIE A. TRAVIS.

Died, October 16th, 1886, Willie A., son, of J. R. and S. A. Travis, aged 2 years, 5 months and 17 days.

Farewell our darling child,
On earth we'll meet no more;
I hope to meet thy pleasant smile,
On Canaan's happy shore.

I hope to see thy beauteous face,
Among the ransomed found,
And hear thee sing redeeming grace,
On King Emmanuel's ground.

The sweet young child to rest has gone,
Mourners withhold the tear;
Light is the sod above his breast,
Angels are hovering near.

Knowing that he who rules above,
Decreed a better way,
And took him to himself, ere sin
Could lead his steps astray.

He's on the Saviour's bosom laid,
And feels no sorrow there;
He by a heavenly parent fed,
And needs no more our care.

LEDORA E. TRAVIS,

Little daughter of J. R. and S. A. Travis, died at her parents' home, near Danville, on the 13th of November, 1886. She was born September 2nd, 1879, her stay on earth being 7 years, 2 months and 11 days.
Doctors Robinson, Nelson, Page and Townes pronounced her disease diphtheria.
They put a tube in her throat on the 10th, which lengthened her stay until the 13th, but all in vain. It was the Father's good will to take her home.

Sweetly sleeping, silent keeping,
In her little flowery bed,
And our hearts are full of weeping,
For our loved one only dead.

Dead? Ah no, her soul is living.
Basking in a Saviour's love;
Her angel tongue praise is giving,
In her Father's home above.

Though her form is changing,
Underneath the flowery sod;
Her spirit full and free is ranging Mid the glories of our God.

Then in hope our soul will sorrow,
Sorrowing for our Ledora dear,
Yet a beam of brightness borrow,
That our waiting hearts shall cheer.

Ah, yes, waiting for the greeting
That shall never, never end;
With our precious Ledora's meeting,
Where all life and peace do blend.

Then, bereaved ones, cease your grieving,
For your bud now blooms sublime,
In the blissful dews relieving
From the blighting breath of time.

Mother's love was care enduring,
But from sin she could not free,
So the only hand securing Sealed her pure eternally.

Oh, submission, full, enduring,
Fill the mother's aching heart;
Sweet pervading peace securing,
Be the Father's healing part.

It grieves us here to see him go,
But only think of this:
He's taken from a world of woe,
To reign with Christ in bliss.

By the severing, chastening rod,
The Lord hath taken away;
The Lord doth give, the Lord doth take,
Blessed be the name of God.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

This interesting book, by Elder D. Bartley, contains 342 pages, printed from large new type, well bound in cloth with red edges, and a large and finely executed lithographic portrait of the author. Price, single copy, post-free .75c; per dozen, transportation prepaid, $7.50. Address all orders Elder D. Bartley, New Castle, Henry county, Ind.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him state what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews state the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noting the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

COMMUNICATED.

WHITE AS SNOW.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:— The ground here is covered with a very pure, white robe. It is not likely that this is the case in all the parts of the country where the LANDMARK is read. There are some of your readers probably who very seldom, if ever, see such a glorious, lovely sight. But the snow is occasionally used to set forth to the faith of the Lord's people some of his wonderful ways and gracious dealings with them, and I have it in my mind to write some of my reflections upon the three principal uses that are thus made of this purest and whitest of all objects which our eyes ever behold.

1st. In Isaiah 55: 10 the manner of coming down of the snow upon the earth, and the absolutely certain effect of it, in watering the earth, and causing it to bring forth and bud, and the words "may give seed to the sower, and may give to the eater," are used to illustrate the coming of the word of the Lord to his people, and the absolute certainty that "it shall accomplish that which he pleases, and shall prosper in all that he sendeth thence." The rain is mentioned first here and then the snow is added, showing the word does not always drop upon the people of God "like the rain, and distil as the dew," causing them to be at once refreshed and comforted; but it often comes like the snow, in rebukes and chastisements, and dire afflictions, almost seeming to prevent any hope that we shall ever feel the warmth and comfort of the word of God's grace any more.

It is especially so when we have been wandering in wrong and forbidden ways, walking in error, spending money for that which is not bread, and our labor for that which satisfieth not, like those mentioned in the first of this chapter, who are afterwards commanded to seek the Lord while he may be found, and to forsake their own wicked ways and unrighteous thoughts, and return unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon them, and abundantly pardon.

But the snow has the same effect as the rain, effectually preparing the ground to receive the seed. So the rebukes and chastisements of God, and the afflictions he sends upon his people, as well as the words of promise sweetly applied to their souls, soften and break up the hard heart, and prepare it to receive the word as good seed into soil, which sinks down into its well pulverized depths, and "takes root downward and bears fruit upward to the honor and glory of God." The same word falling upon the ear of one who has not received the rain and snow from heaven, will roll around in his mind, as a grain of wheat will that falls upon the hard road or on a rock. In the natural mind it will be turned over, examined, and compared with various theories of religion, but will never sink down into the heart and bear fruit. The object of this watering and softening the earth is "that it may bring forth and bud," that the sower may have seed and the eater bread. The preacher can only preach or sow that word that has thus been made to sink into his own heart, and spring up again, and no one can have the bread of life to eat except the word which brought it to him has taken root in his own heart.

Thus the absolute certainty of the word and its effect is presented, and also the object of it. Even in so plain a figure the natural man cannot see the absolute sovereignty of God, and the certainty that all his will and pleasure will be accomplished. Let us be thankful that it is made so plain to us, and let us rejoice in the assurance that when the Lord commands the wicked to forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, that command will be obeyed without one single exception in any age or in any part of the world.

Second. In Isaiah 1: 18, the whiteness and purity of the snow are made to represent the perfect purity of those whose sins are as scarlet, and red like crimson, when the word of God's salvation shall come to them. Those who see themselves such vile sinners cannot find any reason to hope they can ever be cleansed: they can more easily see how the Ethiopian can change his skin or the leopard his spots. All their reasoning can only lead them to the conclusion that they must receive the just reward of their sins, which is death. But when the Lord calls them to reason together with him, they find a new and living way, they had never thought of before. He simply declares his will and purpose that their sins shall be white as snow. They shall be utterly removed and done away, and never found again. This is his way of reasoning with his dear people under the new covenant. I will, and they shall.

His word is forever settled in heaven, and now they are given to know its blessed and eternal realities and taste its sweetness. The dear savior appears and bears their sins in his own body on the tree, and thus removes them. His robe when he appeared to his three amazed disciples on the Mount transfigured before them, shows how his people shall appear in the glory of his salvation when he shall put his robe of righteousness and garments of salvation upon them; "for his raiment became shining, exceedingly white as snow: so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. So shall the raiment of his people be when they shall be arrayed in the fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints," Rev. 19: 8.

In Psalms 147: 16 the beneficial effects of the afflictions which the dear Lord sends upon his people are declared in this remarkable expression, "he giveth snow like wool." The snow upon the ground acts like wool, keeps the ground warm, and greatly benefits it. When the ground is frozen hard and deep, a good depth of snow falling and remaining some time upon it will draw the frost out. So afflictions when sanctified by the Lord, draw out the frost from our cold and hard hearts, break up the hardness and make them soft. The Psalmist says, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." A good covering of the snow of trouble and sorrow, though so cold and chilling to our touch, protects the heart from the chilling effects of the atmosphere of this world, and warms it toward the Lord. It is thro' great tribulation that we must enter into the kingdom of God. It is only through trouble and affliction that we can enter into any of the blessed truths of the word, and into any of the blessed realities of that kingdom that is not of this world. Sometimes we can see and feel the uses of adversity and trial so plainly that we can say with the apostle, "For our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Your brother in the afflictions and hope of the gospel.

SILAS H. DURAND,

Southampton, Penn.

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow: for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." The scriptures always tell us that which is true, and that which is for the best.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have thought for sometime that I would write out my experience of what I hope the good Lord has done for my soul. I have often been asked why I did not write for the LANDMARK. The reason why I have not is because I have never felt worthy, for there are others that are more competent to write than I. I have been much comforted in reading the many experiences of the dear saints of God, and I hope that the good Lord may enable me to write the truth. I was born in the county of Pitt, in the state of N. C. in the year 1846, where I was raised up to manhood. I was the youngest son of my father's house. My father was a Primitive Baptist, and he tried to bring up his children very moral indeed. I was quite young when I first began to have serious thoughts concerning my soul's welfare after death, but the thought would banish from my mind, and then it would come again and again. Sometimes it would come with much force, and would make me feel very sad at times; and I began to think that I was a sinner, and not only to think that I was a sinner but to feel so. In the year of 1863 I began to feel like that I was a miserable sinner. Then I began to try to pray to the Lord to have mercy upon me, for if it was the will of God to take my life, I felt like where God and his Christ is I could not appear. So these thoughts gave me much trouble. I began to promise the Lord I would try and do better, and the first thing I knew I was doing just as bad as ever. When I would be alone, and begin to think what I had done it would give me much trouble at heart, and I would promise the Lord if he would forgive me I would do so no more. Sometimes I would meet some of my playmates. I didn't want to be so sad, and I would engage in sinning again. I didn't want them to know what was the matter with me. I felt like I was a sinner and a great one. Sometimes the Baptists would come to my father's house, and I would sit around and hear them talk to see if I could gain any information relative to my case, for I thought they were good people; for they seemed to love each other very much.

Sometimes I could learn something from them that would seem to encourage me a little, and I would feel better for awhile; and the first thing I knew I would find myself sinning again. I would promise the Lord if he would have mercy upon me, and spare my life, I would be a better boy; but it was not so. I would sometimes go to some lonely place and try to pray, and when I would kneel down I would feel like somebody was looking at me, and would laugh at me; and when I tried to pray it seemed to me that my prayers did not ascend higher than my head.

All I could say was Lord have mercy upon me a poor sinner. I felt like I was condemned to die. Sometimes I would go to meeting, and I thought every body saw what was the matter with me. When I would go in the house I felt like I wanted to hide, and when the minister was preaching it seemed to me that sometimes he would preach to me all the while. Sometimes my heart would be so full that I could not help shedding tears, and then again it seemed to me that every word he said would condemn me. And then I would go home worse off than ever.

At times the very heart-cry of my soul was Lord, have mercy upon me a poor sinner. I now began to feel that the day of grace had passed for me, and all of the promises I found in the bible were to some one else, and not to me. When I would go to the table and look on the food that the Lord had blessed me with I felt too unworthy to partake of it; everything seemed better than I. Oh! my brothers and sisters in the Lord, it seemed to me that I could not live in this condition long.

When I would retire at night to my bed of repose I would try to pray to the Lord to have mercy upon me, a poor sinner, not expecting to live to see the dawn of day. Oh! my burden, my burden, it seemed to be so heavy in my breast, by day and by night. Oh! that I could exchange with the beasts of the forest, or the birds of the air that had no future.

Hearing my appearance was such, my poor old father saw what was the matter with me, and he told me to pray to the Lord, for where he had commenced a good work he would perform it, even until the day of Jesus Christ.

I told him that I was a sinner, and he burst into tears. I walked out of his presence, and tried to pray to the Lord to have mercy upon me, a poor sinner. Oh! my God, what shall I do to be saved; I thought that everybody else was better than I.

Oh! what sorrow of heart, what groans and sighs are felt when a poor sinner feels condemned before God. All of my promises were broken, and nothing could I do but cry for mercy. I was made to feel that if I was saved it was the mercy of God, and if I was damned God was just, and in this condition I wondered many days, but at last I hope my burden of sin began to leave me, if I am not deceived. My feelings began to change, and I began to feel like a new person. I was only about sixteen years old.

Brethren, my evidence of my pardon of sins, if ever pardoned, is not so bright as some that I have heard, and sometimes I am made to feel doubtful of the whole matter; but here is one thing that I can say, I began to view things in a different light altogether. I could now view Jesus as my Savior, and how he died for my sins, as I hope. And Oh! my brethren and sisters in the Lord, this stammering tongue of mine will never be able to express the joy I felt at times which was full joy. I could now look upon the world with all its beauties with a new delight, for all things seemed to be praising God. My heart was filled with love and joy, and it seemed to me that I could not help praising the Lord for his mercy. I now thought that all my trouble was over, and that I would have no more sorrow and grief; but oh! brethren, it was not long before I had more trouble. Doubts began to arise in my mind as to the reality of my religion. It seemed to me at that time to be a wonder in my mind what to do. I had thought that all was well with me, but now and then I would receive some comfort by the way.

So at last the church was brought to view. As I walked by a river I saw them on the other side walking up and down the river bank singing praises to the Lord. I felt like I wanted to be with them, and oh; how my soul was filled with love. And I tell you my brethren, I have not forgotten my feelings yet. I felt and believed that those that I saw in my view were the people of God, and from that time I began to feel that it was my duty to join the church and be baptized, and this thought gave me trouble, that if I joined the church all of my young friends would forsake me; so I thought I would remain out of the church. I felt ashamed to go to the church, and tell the brethren what I hoped the Lord had done for my poor soul, and I had fears that the brethren would not receive me, and I felt like that I was not worthy to be with them of whom I had spoken evil so often.

So one day while I was with my father, after he had perceived such a change in me, he spoke to me something about my feelings. I told him that I felt better than I had in sometime past. I said to him that my burden of sin seemed to be gone, and I knew not where; but one thing I knew, that now I loved to hear preaching, and I had a love for the brethren and sisters. I would then go to preaching, and I could hear with a new delight, and it was so that I could understand the preaching better than I ever did in all my life. I could feed on it, and sometimes my cup would almost run over. Then I was able to see how Christ died for poor sinners. I felt like I wanted to be with them, but I was afraid they would not receive me, but feeling it my duty to be baptized, I at last resolved in my mind that I would go and talk with brother Josiah Nelson on the subject. I went at last and in the evening before I left for my home we walked down in the field, and coming back to the house we raised the subject of religion, and I began to tell him of my feelings, and of my impression to join the church. He advised me to go the next meeting day, and offer to the church, for he thought the brethren would receive me. So on the 3rd Saturday in May in 1864 I offered to the church, at Hancock, Pitt county, in my 17th year.

After trying to tell the brethren what I hope the good Lord has done for my poor soul, I was received, and on the next day I was baptized by Elder Noah Adams in the presence of a goodly number of brethren, sisters and friends. And oh! my brethren it seemed to be a happy day with me, a morning without clouds.

I went up to the house of God with a new delight. Brethren, I have something else to tell you. After I had received a hope, if ever I have, I felt impressions to preach, and during this time, after I had received a hope as I trust in Christ Jesus, my impression was so that sometimes, when at my daily labor, some sweet, comforting text of Scripture would present itself to my mind, and it seemed to me that I could not help from talking aloud. I would often go to the woods in some secret place, and try to preach to the trees.

Brethren, this may seem strange to you, but nevertheless, it is true. If ever I had any impressions to exercise my gift in the way of preaching it was then.

So the morning that I was baptized, when the brethren went into the house and brethren Nelson and Adams went into the stand to commence preaching, I asked the brethren if they would let me have something to say. They granted me the liberty to exercise my gift, and from that day until now I have been trying to preach, and trying to quit.

Many sorrows and troubles have assailed me, feeling so unworthy that I am often made to wonder why it is thus with me. but I can say to-day that most assuredly it is the mercy of God that has sustained me and that it must be his everlasting arm underneath that has borne me up in all of my persecutions, trials, and afflictions here on earth. So I remain your brother as I hope in Christ. C. C. BLAND.

BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER, AND THOSE OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH SCATTERED ABROAD, WHO WILL LIKE TO HEAR SOMETHING IN REGARD TO OUR DEAR BROTHER ELDER PETER M. WRIGHT, NOW CONFINED AT HOME BY SERIOUS SICKNESS.

In company with a friend your correspondent had the pleasure of a visit to his home on the 17th inst. Much to our surprise, he met us at the gate, looking feeble and reduced in flesh, but cheerful and patient under affliction. For many years he has been a sufferer from rheumatism, culminating in obstinate liver and stomach trouble developing lump or tumor in one of the organs, and accompanied by very severe pains, and sometimes vomiting. Although over fifty years, brother Wright is a young minister in the vineyard of the Lord, and so zealous and faithful has he been, that neither sickness nor ill health, kept him from meeting his appointments until recently.

Oh that it is the pleasure of the Lord to heal his sickness, and restore him to his work speedily; but brethren, as much and as anxiously as we may pray for this, the indications are that the master has need of him in a higher and happier realm.

Last spring his fellow citizens, although differing with him religiously, having great confidence in his integrity and honesty, elected him to the responsible position of supervisor of the county from his district. Becoming more feeble since the election, he has not been permitted to meet very often with the other members of the board. Should the church militant not have this earnest faithful brother any more to feed the flock of his charge, in the green pastures, beside the still waters, where the blessed master leads, and tho' we sorrow at the thought, yet, even joys mingle with tears in the anxious hope that in the bright world with all the saints in glory, we will meet him, in the presence of the King of Zion, the great captain of our Salvation. Oh happy thought! Then will the church be triumphant, the great train which filled the temple in the prophet's vision, all will be then in boasting joy and peace in the Lord.

What enraptured vision of this whole world of ours, in all of its honors and emoluments can compare for an instant with that delightful view by faith of the promise land? All the gold of California, and ledge on ledge of the $100,000 to the ton, in the gold bearing rocks of Arizona, piled up, until if it were possible, to fill the world with its golden treasure, and enjoyed to the extreme limit of man's life, would not weigh as much as a feather in the balance, with one moment's joy in the presence of Christ, and his ransomed church: not to mention eternity of happiness, the reward of the inheritance of the saints in glory.

As we commenced with brother Wright, he showed a beautiful example of hope, patience and truth, so resigned and undisturbed is he, knowing as he does, the gravity of his situation. As he knows the one in whom he trusts,

His kind and hospitable wife bears testimony to his un murmuring fidelity to the Lord, even in the severe pain he is called on to endure. Brethren, let us be patient too, and faint not, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, remembering who it is that delivered that faith, and by what power.—“Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation”—What a glorious thought—If your faith was not given by God, or you were kept through faith, by any less power than that of the great God, you might tremble and doubt for the result—For through the weakness of the flesh, and the great enmity of a lying devil, you might despair, if your God-given faith was not promised to lead to perfect and eternal salvation through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

A. J. ALMOND.

MY DEAR BROTHER GOLD.—Please state through the LANDMARK that I have as yet not had the time to write at length about the tours I have had this passing fall and winter in Ark., La. and N. C. our own state. Let this suffice for this time, beloved kindred in the Lord, that the gracious God has been pleased to endear many among you to me, who are not much thought of by the world or worldly religionists, but are rather like the poor of God's kingdom, rejected of men, but precious of God! Oh amazing grace.

Many of the kindred of Christ have contributed to my necessities and have made my heart glad with their appreciation of my coming among them. My prayers are for your welfare, dearly beloved.

Remember your poor servant always, even as many of you as have become acquainted with me, in the Lord Jesus. May grace, mercy and peace be multiplied to you all is my prayer. Farewell.

B. GREENWOOD.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I am in receipt of a letter from Brother Lee Hancks of Ozark, Alabama, asking me to write for publication in the LANDMARK some thoughts on the 8th and 9th verses of the 8th Chapter of the Song of Solomon.

“We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts, what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for. If she be a wall we will build upon her a palace of silver, and if she be a door we will enclose her with boards of cedar.”

Evidently Solomon had a prophetic view of the setting up of the gospel kingdom when he penned that language. Viewing the church of the Lord Jesus Christ afar off, he calls her a little sister. The servants in the legal dispensation had the offerings made in the temple service, and the wonderful things foretold by the prophets in which they beheld by faith the setting up of the gospel kingdom. But they saw as through a glass darkly, hence he used the words “A little sister,” as a figure to represent the church of the Lord Jesus at the time she was set up upon the earth. To Solomon she looked little because she had no breasts. At the time he was gazing upon her, her wonderful and glorious character had not been developed. No, the glorious Son of righteousness had not then risen in the gospel heavens. He had not made that great offering for sin prefigured by the offerings under the law. The sword of divine justice was still slumbering and awaiting the appointed time, when it should awake against the shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts. Consequently he describes the church at the period when she would be set up by the use of this figurative language, "A little sister."

The prophet Isaiah beautifully describes the closing scenes of that shadowy dispensation and the unfolding of the gospel heaven when he says, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench, he shall bring forth judgment unto truth." The prophet in prophetic wisdom then beholding the closing days of that dispensation declares to spiritual Israel that all things should be accomplished that pertain to that dispensation before it was brought to a close, before it shall bring forth judgment unto truth. But when our Lord said in deep agony 'It is finished' and went down into the darkness of the tomb, and came forth a mighty conqueror, that great and glorious period had fully come when that "little sister" would be spoken for. Yea when she would appear no longer as that little sister which had no breasts. But now her glorious Lord having accomplished the great and wonderful work of her redemption his servants could feed all her children upon the blood and body of the glorious Son of God. Of which he speaks saying, "This is that bread which came down from heaven, not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead, he that eateth of this bread shall live forever."

The great and wonderful work accomplished by our Lord in his flesh, yea by his suffering in the flesh and shedding his blood became the spiritual food of all the children of that little sister. When that wonderful work was completed she could no longer be said to have no breasts. From the breasts of the mother the child draws its nourishment. At that glorious period which followed the closing scenes of that glorious dispensation, her breasts were manifested and all her children could draw a rich and never failing supply, for her ever to be adored Redeemer had by the offering of himself forever removed the fearful curse that rested upon all her children by reason of sin. It is with this spiritual food that all her children are fed and enabled to run with patience the race that is set before them, ever looking unto Jesus the Author and finisher of our faith.

When you Brother Hancks are preaching the everlasting gospel you are feeding the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood. In doing so you have no other food that will satisfy the cravings of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness but Jesus and they feed upon him, because he of God is made unto them wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. Surely my brother you do not manufacture that spiritual food that you, when you are preaching the everlasting gospel, are handing out to the poor and hungry, that bread of life which is Jesus. You can then say to them in the language of the prophet, "Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not, hearken diligently unto me and eat that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." Then how precious, how delightful are the glorious things proclaimed in the everlasting gospel to all the children of her who by king Solomon was called "the little sister." They delight themselves in fatness when Jesus in all his glorious fulness is preached to them. But the enquiry is what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for? and the answer comes, "If she be a wall we will build upon her a palace of silver, and if she be a door we will enclose her with boards of cedar." Having spoken of the time when she would be spoken for, now let us, Brother Hancks, turn our meditations to the sublime beauties of the wonderful things pre-figured by the palace of silver and the boards of cedar. Let us regard the language, "If she be a wall, and if she be a door," as an affirmation; for she in her indissoluble union with her Lord is both a wall and a door. Destroy that union, and her glory departs. The word "wall" clearly represents the foundation. The prophet says, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone and a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste." And the Apostle said, "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God. And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth into a holy temple in the Lord." Here by divine authority we have presented to us the foundation which is Christ, for he is the chief corner stone and all the building fitly framed in him. He is alive forever more and they, all the children of that little sister, are lively stones and they all, being fitly framed together, grow into a holy temple in the Lord. "If she be a wall we will build upon her a palace of silver." When silver is fully burnished nothing excels it in reflecting light. Then what a wonderful light must be reflected by a palace of silver in the full and unbounded glare of the mid-day sun.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ "which is fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army of banners, receives and reflects the light of the glorious Sun of Righteousness, consequently that church is declared by our Lord to be the light of the world, a city set on a hill that cannot be hid. Of her the prophet speaks saying, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people, but the Lord shall arise upon thee; and the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy coming." A palace of silver would be a dark body, if no light was permitted to shine upon it. But when a noonday sun shines upon it with all his glorious effulgence it goes forth a reflected light almost equal to the light of that body which it is reflecting. The glory of the Lord being seen on his church, she goes forth that glorious light which makes her the light of the world. Then what a strikingly illustrative figure Solomon used when he said, "We will build upon her a palace of silver." A figure which represents the imputed righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ. That righteousness of which John speaks when he says, And to her, the bride, was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints. The bride here mentioned is none other than the 'little sister,' whom the wise king of Israel, who was a figure of Christ saw in infinite wisdom away back in that legal dispensation when she appeared as one who had no breasts. But now when the Sun of Righteousness has arisen in the gospel heavens and by his light driven back all the darkness and shadows of the legal dispensation, that little sister stands forth in all her glory and beauty, for she has given to her that light which was to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of Israel. Yes, she has that light given to her because she is reflecting the light of the great Luminary of the gospel heavens. But that wise king said, "If she be a door we will enclose her with boards of cedar. Our Lord said, I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved." And he says by the mouth of his servant the apostle, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's. Then in her glorious union with her Lord she is the door. The door is a part of that building of which we have been speaking which is fitly framed together, and which groweth into a holy temple in the Lord. He being the door, none can enter that glorious city, the church of the true and living God, but by him and his regenerated sons and daughters being one with him are with him the door and none can enter that church but by him, and they cannot enter there without being born of God. Consequently our Lord and his dear people are in their glorious unity the door. That door which is to be enclosed with boards of cedar. The door is the entrance thro' which admission is had unto the building. But the door to this holy temple must be enclosed with boards of cedar. He says, "I am the door." In him who is the door dwells all the fullness of the God-head bodily, and in that God-head are all the divine perfections of Deity. Evidently those superlatively glorious affections are pre-figured by the boards of cedar, by which that door to that great temple is enclosed. His omnipotence is there to protect the entrance to that great temple. The uncircumcised and the unclean shall not enter there. His omnipresence is there, for the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous and his ears are open to their cries. His omniscience is there, for he of God is made unto them all that enter by that door into that great temple 'wisdom.' His holiness is there, for none can enter that spiritual temple but those who are born of God, and he that is born of God cannot sin, because he is born of God. It is said to all that enter that spiritual temple, "Be ye holy even as I am holy." His immutability is there, for he that is that door is God, and he says, "I am God, and change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." His justice is there, for justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne. His love is there, for he hath loved all who are brought into that glorious temple, that banqueting house, with an everlasting love and with loving kindness he draws them there. He leads them there in paths they have not known, and their chief desire is to give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name. Then how wonderfully glorious is that church which in the dark and shadowy dispensation appeared to king Solomon under the figure of a 'littler sister.' The setting up of that church was foretold by the prophet when he said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." When our Lord appeared upon the earth he said, "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. All the powers of darkness could not prevail against it, because the door, the entrance unto it, was enclosed with boards of cedar. But perhaps some will say that the kingdom and the church are different organizations, that in the kingdom our Lord reigns in the hearts of all his subjects, all who are in that kingdom, while many of the uncircumcised and the unclean enter into the church. Let it be remembered that many aliens come into this country, but that does not make them citizens of the United States. They are dead to all the privileges of citizens and all unregenerate men and women who have their names recorded in church books are aliens to God and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel and are dead while they have a name to live, dead to all things spiritual. They are carnal, sold under sin, yea they are the children of the bond woman and their delight is to persecute the children, the children of the free woman. God has a purpose in allowing the unregenerate to mingle with the dear saints in their church relations. It is written that, "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." None live godly but those who enter that great temple by Christ Jesus in his glorious unity with his people and they suffer persecution from the Ishmaelitic crew who are permitted to associate with them. But the dear saints should rejoice, knowing that these persecutions are part of their inheritance while in their earthly pilgrimage. For they work together for their good, and they should remember that these light afflictions which are but for a moment, work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. But our Lord pronounced a fearful curse upon those who engage in persecuting the dear saints, when he says, "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a mill stone were hanged about his neck and that he was drowned in the depth of the sea."

Then Brother Hancks, the prayers of all the dear saints should be for grace to enable them to bear without murmuring all the persecutions that are sent upon them, and like good soldiers of Jesus press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Your and their fervent prayers should be for those that persecute them, knowing that their glorious Lord hath said unto them, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you." Ah my dear Brother, it is infinitely better for the dear saints to be persecuted than to persecute others. O that our Lord may give his dearsaints in this day of confusion and strife that grace which would enable them to bear persecutions and look alone to Jesus daily for that spiritual bread of which if a man eat he shall never die, is the sincere prayer of this little one.

HISTORICAL.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I have been requested by our brethren to write a brief History of the Primitive Baptist church at Pine, in Davidson Co. N. C., and the same be published in ZION'S LANDMARK, showing when organized, and the persecutions and attacks made on them by the Missionary Baptists, who have a meeting house near the same place, within less than one hundred yards. From the best information I have there was a Primitive Baptist Church organized at Pine about 85 years ago or longer.

I am in possession of a deed made to the Regular Baptists at Pine, bearing date November 8th, 1803, the site on which our church house stands at this time. It appears to me that the church had gone down. At least some of the Regular Baptists petitioned for certain Brethren of the Primitive Baptist faith and order, previous to August 1st, 1834, at which time, according to our old church book, the following Elders met at Pine; to-wit, Elders Peter Potts, Lewis Snider, Solomon Snider, who since that time went with the Missionaries, and Brethren Thomas Wyatt, Henry Workman and David Snider and constituted our church. After which the church made some effort to get possession of their old church book that was made out previous to the above named time, but failed. This church when organized, chose Elder Lewis Snider, my father, to take charge of the church, who attended them up to the time of his death in 1848; at which time the church numbered 44 members. After the death of my father, his brother, Elder Philip Snider, and Elder Asahel Peacock, both living at a distance, attended this church time about until 1863, then John Snider attended the church until Dec. 1865. After which time Elder Philip Snider took charge of the church again and remained their Pastor 'til Nov. 1881, when having become old and infirm he quit coming as our Pastor, after which Elder James A. Burch, of Alamance County, N. C., who lived a distance of 65 or 70 miles, visited our church and took the pastoral care of the same, and still continues up to the present time, whose labors have been much blessed. Since he became our pastor, there have been twenty additions by experience and baptism. Our church now numbers 63 members, and if not deceived the prospect is good for several more.

Elder James A. Burch we look upon as being sound in the faith and doctrine of Jesus Christ, and one among the most persevering, both naturally and spiritually, in our acquaintance. When he first began to visit us our old house was in a bad condition, several windows without sash or lights, shutters not good and no stove. Elder Burch told us we ought to fix up better. We told him we were too poor. He said he thought we could do better if we would only try. We went to work, and soon had sash and glass in our windows and a good warming stove in our house. After a few years some of us began to talk about building a new church house, large and commodious, as the old one would not as a general thing hold near all the people assembled at our meetings. The conclusion was as usual among Primitive Baptists, not able. Elder Burch said it would be one of the greatest legacies we could leave our children. At length we agreed and went to work. During last year, which was one of the hardest years in our country, and notwithstanding the hard times, we have completed one of the best Primitive Baptist church houses I ever saw, with good comfortable seats, and a good stove sufficient to warm the whole house. The dimensions are, 56 feet long, 36 feet wide, 14 1-2 high, and well finished inside and out, well ventilated with a number of large windows, covered with the best shingles, self-supporting roof, all in workmanlike style, house worth at least one thousand dollars, we owe less than $100. I cannot see but what we have made just as good crops the last year, and are in as good condition to live as our neighbors who lent us no aid. I do not make the above statement in any way of boasting, but to show our brethren for their encouragement how we have been blessed and favored in our attempt, for which blessings we ought to be thankful, we being poor as to the things of this world, as is generally the case with Primitive Baptists.

When we commenced proceedings towards making a new Church House our enemies, more especially the new School Baptists, went on to say they had the house, we might make something would do for the cook kitchen. When they saw that we would complete it and a better house than theirs, it will not do to let the old anties go on, they must be put down. Some boasted they had the man to do it, alluding to their preacher. Mr. Henry Sheets was the Pastor of the Missionary denomination at Pine at that time. He appointed the 4th Sunday in May at which time he would deliver a lecture concerning the split among the Baptists. At the appointed time many people attended. I was not permitted to be present. I have been informed by some of our members that some of their members and others claiming that they were the Primitive Baptists, and that Biggs' History of Kehukee Association, from 1803 to 1833 proved it, saying that they were of the same faith and order, and at the same time called the church that composed the Abbott's Creek Union Association Anti Missionaries, and further when the split took place they held four-fifths of the number then or at that time composing the Abbott's Creek Association, and called their Association; therefore they were the block and we the anties were the splinter, which had been Free-Willers, Cambelites, Iron Sides, Hard Shells, etc, but he would not call them by any of those hard names, but he would call them anti-Missionaries. Some few years ago the Liberty Association appointed Mr. Sheets to write a History of their Association, which he did; the Association approved the same, and had it printed. After the above named lecture was delivered we wrote to Elder J. A. Burch, giving him the particulars, at the same time asking him to reply to Mr. Sheets. Eld. Burch sent an appointment that on the 2nd Sunday in July, at 10 O'clock, a. m. he would deliver a reply as requested, which was made known. Our meetings are at stated times, on the 2nd, Sunday and theirs on the 4th, Sunday in each month. Before Eld. Burch's time had arrived, Mr. Sheets concluded he would hold church on the fourth Sunday and second Sunday likewise of each month, that would be on the same time of ours, the houses being about 100 yards distant. When the time came, Eld. J. A. Burch attended well supplied with Histories, one of which Mr. Sheets had written, also some letters they had passed concerning the same. Eld. Burch had a large attendance of people of many religious persuasions, together with Mr. Sheets present to hear his reply. Eld. J. A. Burch commenced by reading their letters of correspondence concerning the attack, and Elder Sylvester Hassell's letter who is the Moderator of the Kehukee Primitive Association, showing that the Abbott's Creek Union had been in correspondence with the Kehukee since 1839, up to this time, and that the Liberty Association had never had any correspondence with the Kehukee, then read a portion of the Liberty Association History, which history was written by Mr. Shee's, which reads as follows, or in substance. 'During the summer of 1832, there was considerable strife and disagreement in the churches that belonged to the Abbott's Creek Union Association. Prior to the meeting of the same in the County of Randolph, State of N. C. on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September, 1832, he says, all was confusion. Some favored institutions, namely Theological Schools, Secret organizations, State conventions &c. and others opposing. At length one Isaiah Spurgeon moved, and declared non-fellowship towards all who advocated those men-made institutions. He further writes, a vote was then taken, when a majority voted down those institutions. He says the minority then withdrew from the house, assembled in a large tent, and by making one William Burch Moderator, and one Peter Owen Clerk, organized themselves into an associated capacity on the 24th, of September, 1832. with less than 23 in number. He further writes they met again, Nov. 17th. 1832, at James Town, in Guilford County, N. C., making Wm. Burch, Moderator, and Peter Owen Clerk, and remained in session three days. All of the above statement Elder Burch read, at the same time commenting and making all necessary statements. Showing that they who would be called Primitive Baptist took their origin in this portion of N. C, the 24th day of Sept, 1832, and further stated if they were the Primitive, or Old School why did they not hold Real Estate deeded to the Baptists prior to 1832, further showed in all courts where suits had been brought in this portion of the state the decision of the courts in every instance was in favor of the Primitive Baptists, not New School, and then asked them why they did not hold our church lot, after surveying, and appointing trustees who objected. No-body answered. After which Elder Burch brought his reply to a close, by showing the people when and where the New School Baptists took their origin, and by whom, &c., I have heard many replies to former lectures or speeches, but have never witnessed any man as completely confuted as Mr. Sheets and his party were on that occasion. His own members of note gave it up on the ground. I your unworthy writer, when first I heard that Mr. Sheets was going to make the attack, felt that I had rather he would let it alone. I have no doubt but that it was intended for evil, but think now that it has terminated in that which is good for our section, many people no doubt did believe they were the Primitive Baptists, until that day. Since that day we have received by experience and baptism 13 members, some of which were members of the Missionary Church previous to that time, and further, I know more of their members who have not sat with their in conference since that day, and others that have not been in their house since, but attend our meetings regularly. In conclusion, as we are now and ever have been, since the death of my Father, Eld. Lewis Snider, who died in 1848, depending on foreign ministers to preach for us, we feel it our duty to return our most sincere thanks to all who have visited us, asking them to still continue their visits, and further we earnestly invite those of our faith and order who have never visited us to come and see us. You will be heartily received. Yours in hope of eternal life.

JOHN L. SNIDER, Church Clerk.

Jubilee, Davidson Co., N. C.,

P. S. I will make a request through ZION'S LANDMARK that Elders Beebe, Hassell, Gold, and Lester confer among themselves, and write us, the Primitive Baptists, a history of all the religious denominations that are common in our age, their origin, by whom and at what time they arose, showing those that hold to the Predestinarian creed or faith and those that hold the Arminian creeds believing election to be conditional, and not absolute, and that the atonement of Christ was sufficient for all, and was intended for all the Adamic race unto eternal life, if the creature would begin the good work, and that the grace of God may be resisted by the stubborn will of the creature. We wish a History taken from the most reliable histories that will correspond with the teaching of the Bible, showing the first settlement of all denominations, together with our "Articles of Faith" printed in our age for the comfort of the wise virgins and for warning of the foolish. Hope you all will consider the above request from one who desires the prosperity of Zion.

Remarks.

We think Elder J. A. Burch did well to encourage the brethren at Pine to build a comfortable Meeting House and contend for the truth. He is a faithful, dear, useful brother.

Baptists should not withhold their money or labor from that which is needful. Some of them seem to think that they should not give any money or labor for Meeting Houses, or give anything to their preachers, lest they will be doing like other denominations. Well, other denominations eat, sleep, wear clothes, and do a good many other things that we cannot get along without doing.

If they give their labor and money for such doctrines as they hold to be sure our people ought to give their money and labor to the cause that to us is so dear and glorious. Is my time or money too good to be given to the glorious cause we hold and love. Our people should give more willingly. Keep your meeting houses comfortable, encourage people to go to meeting, go yourself, take your families, give aid to your pastors, help them with your money and influence, and do not be ashamed of the noble cause, nor feel that anything you own is too good to be given to that blessed cause. Consider it a pleasure that you are counted worthy to be called to labor in this precious kingdom.

The Elders Hassell have already written just such a History as the brother requests. It contains all that information, and is the best History men have ever written of the Church of Christ.

"FUTURES"

I heard one of our business men, of general knowledge concerning the financial condition of the Southern people, say recently that more is lost in the South by futures, as they are called, than by failures of crops and all other such calamities.

It has always appeared to me to be a very strange thing that good business men, as they are called, should risk money on what are called futures. There is enough risk of losing in ordinary business.

This gentleman said that it is the rarest instance for any buyer to make money by this business.

It is mere lottery, or gambling, with nearly all the chances against the buyer. Northern men have gotten rich often on Southern folly.

Honest labor and moderate gains are safer always. Even if I loved money more than anything else, (which is very wicked,) I hope prudence would dictate to me to let this risky, hazardous business of cotton futures, or other futures, alone always Editorial.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—I would be pleased to hear your views, through the LANDMARK, (if you have no objections) on some scripture. First, Genesis 6:6. "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart."

Second, Genesis 18:21 "I will go down now: and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not I will know."

According to the foreknowledge of God, do you believe it was his will, or was not his will, to know these things before the creation of man? Yours truly,

Berry, N. C.

W. T. Summers.

Remarks.

The doubt in men's minds namely, did the Lord foreknow what man would do, inasmuch as it grieved the Lord at his heart because he had made man, gathers some seeming strength from such expressions as the above. It appears to men that if it grieved the Lord at his heart that he had made man on the earth, and therefore he determined to destroy man whom he had made, that if the Lord had foreknown that man would do wickedly that he would not have made man. Hence they think the Lord made a blunder in making man, and was disappointed in what they did, and that if he had known in the beginning what he afterward knew he would have acted differently.

For when men are disappointed and deceived in what they undertake they regret what they have done, and say, if they had only known beforehand what they afterward knew they would have acted otherwise.

They think too that because the Lord came down from heaven to see whether the Sodomites were acting as ungodly as he had heard that they were doing, that therefore the Lord needed some information about the matter, and hence that he not only does not foreknow things, but that he does not know them even after they transpire, unless he sees them doing the things, or unless some one tells him, and that the one telling him might not tell the truth, and in that way might deceive the Lord, hence that he will not fully believe the cry that comes up, but must go down and see for himself whether these things are as bad as they are reported to him.

That is the way men are forced to do themselves, because of their limited knowledge, and it is easy and natural for them to judge that the Lord is altogether such an one as themselves.

But there are so many scriptures that declare the Lord's foreknowledge, even to declaring the end from the beginning, and so many instances of his foretelling what will come to pass, long before the day of their accomplishment, that, in order to escape the conclusion that God foreknows things, they say that God will not allow himself to foreknow certain things; but that he determines that he will not foreknow them—that they are too bad for him to foreknow, and therefore he remains willingly ignorant of them; so that no one may blame him because he can say he did not know such things would be: and that if he had known it he would have acted otherwise. This is so especially concerning the creation of man, and therefore he was grieved at his heart that he made man, and hence he would destroy man whom he had made.

Reader, this is the simple, inevitable conclusion of Arminianism. What do you think of it? Does it suit you? How much reverence have you for such a god as this?

But they admit that he does foreknow good things; that is he foresaw who would do good and he elected them to salvation.

It is true there is a sense in which God foresaw his people, for he owns them as his from the beginning, and predestinates them to be conformed to the image of his son.

The Lord purposed beforehand to do all that he has ever done, or ever will do; for known unto God are all his works from the beginning.

God made man upright, and man sought out many inventions. By man came sin, which is the transgression of God's law.

But did God's foreknowledge comprehend this? Did God know beforehand that man would sin? If not, why were the people of God chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, and why was grace, the remedy, and a sure one against sin and death, given to them in Christ Jesus before the world began? Why was Adam the figure of him that was to come, if it was not certain that Adam would sin and die when he was created? Why were Adam and Eve a figure of Christ and the Church, if it was not certain that Jesus should come? It it was not certain beforehand that Adam would sin and die, and redemption be sent by and in Jesus, how is it that all the purpose of God is so fulfilled in Jesus? If there was any chance or uncertainty about this matter from the beginning, how is it that anything so fits, and every type so sets forth the substance, and all the substance so fully fills up the measure of each type? Could infinite wisdom and infinite foreknowledge have more completely measured and mastered this matter than it is done? Could ignorance of the future ever have guessed even one in a million of times just right to a moment of time, or to a hair's breadth of space, concerning everything that is done: so that it is truly said, there is no new thing under the sun; but everything as it comes to pass is of old, or hath already been?

If you ask me whether God works in men to do wickedness, or is the cause of sin, I tell you that God's word tells us he cannot do wrong, and that word is the truth, and is our guide. His word condemns sin from the first to the last, and man is without excuse in his sin.

Why then did it grieve the Lord at his heart that he had made man, and that he should destroy him? Because God is good, and is merciful, and has no pleasure in the death of the sinner.

In the gift of Jesus in the flesh to suffer and to die, foreknowledge saw what he must suffer, yet that did not change or alter the will of God. Still he comes in the flesh. The eternal good that enures from sufferings of Jesus so overreach and transcend the sorrow, that it is as travail followed by such glory that the sorrow is gone—that death is swallowed up in victory. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Where sin abounded grace did much more abound.

A figure of Jesus in the flesh appears in heart-grief of the Lord God that he had made man. Even on the cross Jesus prays, if possible, let this cup pass from me. Jesus must bear all the griefs of all his people, and be made a curse for them. So we see his pity toward man even before the flood, and that he was with man then in the figure, and was there bearing his sorrows.

It did not repent the Lord that he had made man in the sense that one repents of what is wrong: "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent." Num. 24:19. He can never be mistaken so as to blunder, nor ever do wrong so as to thus need repentance.

How then does it repent the Lord? He changes his dispensation or method of controlling man, but this change is not an after thought growing out of something the Lord did not foresee, but it is the outgrowth of what was comprehended from the beginning, and also a more gracious revelation of God's true character and power, goodness and truth, revealing a mercy, or trait, or attribute in God hitherto unknown, but when revealed showing more of his glory. Here his hatred of sin, and his mercy to the sinner are brought out more fully. What a rich mine of precious gems of goodness is revealed in the flood? The Ark itself a figure of Jesus, the covenant that God made with Noah showing grace, the rainbow, an unailing token of God's faithfulness. All these things show the mercy of God to sinners, and that the Lord is one with his people.

So in coming down from heaven to see about the wickedness of Sodom God shows that he is long-suffering, slow to anger. There is nothing in God of the hasty, angry man taking up hearsay reports, but all his judgments are truth and righteousness. In our use of language, and in our ideas God addresses his people, and condescends to our weakness. He comes down to earth, and waits until the proper time. He does nothing before the time. Hence he shows Abraham what he will do, and communicates to man his purpose. To our poor, weak minds does God stoop to teach, and to show us his compassion, and to save one righteous Lot in this wicked city. All this too is in accord with his foreknowledge; for he works all things after the counsel of his own will, and in righteousness he judges the nations, and governs the world; while he works in his people both to will and to do, and his predestination has special reference to the salvation of his elect. Though every event of earth is enough embraced in his purpose to prevent any wickedness of men from defeating his will, and enough to cause all things to work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

P. D. G.

WHO IS BORN AGAIN?

When I first began to speak in a public way of the things of the kingdom of our God I never thought of the "new birth" having reference to any thing in a beneficiary way, but a sinner of Adam's fallen race. And not until a few years ago, did I know that any claiming to be Old School or Primitive Baptists denied the fact. Therefore I never deemed it necessary to impress the idea as to who is born again. I have been, and am of the opinion that the expressions "whosoever, and whatsoever," in connection with this subject, have their special signification in the connection wherein they are used, and I have endeavored so to define them.

I regard the new birth in the light of a figure of the resurrection. There was undoubtedly a difference between Christ who was raised from the dead, and the Spirit whereby he was raised up.

Was it not that same man, Christ Jesus, who was put to death in the flesh that was raised from the dead by the Spirit? Did the Spirit of God die? and was it raised up, born—from the dead? No, it was Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again. The spirit and power of the resurrection is from above, but the man Christ Jesus was raised from the dead. The Spirit and power of the new birth is from above, from and of God, but it is a man that is born again. The production of this birth is spirit, and the development is a man—a sinner therefore, for a man—a sinner, to be born again is to have the Spirit of the Son of God sent into his heart, having the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto him, having Christ in him the hope of glory.

This man, soul, body, and spirit, as born of the flesh, is flesh, as having his natural standing in a fleshly, earthly head, but as born of the Spirit, born again, he is spiritual, as having his standing in a spiritual head. "Ye who were sometimes darkness, now are ye light in the Lord." "Ye are not carnal, but spiritual."

The same sinner that was once under the law is now under grace. "Ye are no longer under the law but under grace." The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me, a sinner, free from the law of sin. How could it be possible for an eternal spirit to be subject to that bondage incident to sin, and the law made strong thereby, so as to need eternal redemption?

Surely those who are born again are chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and they are the children of God, and are born again not to bring them into bondage, but to show them their deliverance from bondage. A birth implies the idea of a deliverance from one state to another. The children of God are delivered by birth from a bondage of death into a state of liberty. None can know they are chosen in Christ Jesus until they are born again. Did God choose sinners in Christ or spirits? Choice implies a discrimination between things whereby one is taken and another left. If one comes to me to buy a horse and I show him a herd of horses and tell him to choose for himself, I certainly do not mean for him to take them all, and if he takes neither one of them he has made no choice at all. Should he wish to buy a herd, and choose mine, the idea of choice could only be entertained upon the fact of the existence of other herds of horses. If God chose or elected his children from among a number of children, all of whom were alike in Christ before the world began, were not some rejected, and if so, will there not be after time eternal spirits in hell that were in Christ before time began? Again, if God chose the entirety of a family of spirits or children that were in Christ before the world began, does not this force the conclusion that there was one at least other family of spirits or children existing before time began, and therefore eternal, that were not in Christ, or that God rejected? If so, whence this latter family? (As nothing eternal is of men or earth, they must either be of heaven or hell, and as God could not be supposed to be their father, they must have come up from the infernal regions, which would constitute the devil an eternal progenitor—equal with God, and make the doctrine of two-seedism a certainty.)

The Primitive, or Old School Baptists believe that sinners of Adam's race are the subjects of the election of grace, and consequently are born again. Some good brethren denominate that which is born of the Spirit, or the Divine nature, or the Spirit of the Son of God, that is sent into the heart the child of God, and still believe it is the sinner that is born again, while others deny the latter. I call that individual who has two natures as a result of two births the child of God.

When Jesus said that which is born of the flesh is flesh, surely he meant that which makes up natural man in his nature, and not so much the physical, tangible, corporal man. Nicodemus thought he meant a man when even he is old must be born of his mother as he was at first, which would not constitute being born again, but being born over again. Jesus to disabuse his mind on that point says, "Except a man be born of the water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh: and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

Marvel not that I said unto thee—Nicodemus, ye, Nicodemus, must be born again."

As "that which is born of the flesh" refers to the nature of the natural man, so "that which is born of the Spirit," refers to the nature of the spiritual man, or the "Divine nature." Instead of the child of God, in his development here, being composed of two distinct men—one flesh and the other spirit, he is composed of two distinct natures, one earthly, the other Divine, one carnal, the other spiritual, one flesh, the other spirit, and the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other, so that he cannot do the things that he would.

The child of God having two distinct natures is the result of two distinct births, the one of the flesh, whence his carnal nature, wherein he sins day by day, the other of the Spirit, whence his divine nature, wherein he does not sin being born of God. Therefore Paul could say of a truth, that he was less than the least of all saints, and he was at the same time chief of sinners. The natural man of the child of God is just like that of other men in its nature and inclinations, and the divine nature is like that of Jesus in its nature and inclinations. Therefore, I do not understand that the sinner who is born again is thereby changed in his nature, inherited of his mother, but he is wonderfully changed in his state or condition—by being made partaker of the divine nature. He has new realizations, new aspirations, and entertains a good hope thro' grace and faith in Christ Jesus that when the warfare of this pilgrimage is over his vile body shall be changed and fashioned like unto the glorious body of the Son of God. I now feel to dismiss this mysterious subject from further discussion at present, believing that, if I am not understood, I shall not be able to so present my thoughts as to make them plain.

If any understand me and believe otherwise, that must rest between them and their God.

P. G. L.

He, that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

SO NICE.

I was at the home of Elder A. J. Moore recently, and heard his small children, one son named Owen about 14, and four daughters, Minnie, Lula, Mattie and Ruth, the oldest twelve, and the youngest, six years of age, sing and play some charming pieces of music. It is so nice for children to be taught to sing, and read the Bible, instead of trashy novels; and be brought up to labor, and to respect their parents, and the religion of their parents; and to treat politely those that believe as their parents do, and to go and hear the preaching that their parents believe and love.

It is very hurtful to children to indulge in novel reading. No pure-minded people can afford to waste their time in such folly.

Elder Moore has an excellent school at Whitakers N. C. and parents would do well to send their children to him, if they wish to send them off to a school where their conduct and morals are carefully watched after.

P. D. G.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—This leaves us all well, hope you all the same. I would be pleased to see you and family and all our Baptist brethren and sisters of your section, but do not yet see any opening for me to visit them, and I do not know of any other chance to see them all. I hope I can wish you all well, if I can do no more.

I am very much confined at home and the churches, and I find myself very changeable; sometimes very hungry, sometimes filled, sometimes in the field, sometimes driving a team of mules sometimes at home, sometimes abroad, sometimes in the pulpit, sometimes feel the power of the Spirit of love for God and his people, sometimes so destitute, that I fear I know nothing about it, sometimes I look back to see where I have been, and see no chance to ever reach there again—and we only can say, the Lord save us all for Christ's sake, as there is no merit in us. As ever your brother,

JAS. A. BURCH

Remarks.

Hungry and solitary, he led them forth by the right way. You know a sheep will not follow the feeder unless it is hungry. If you want a sheep to follow you well, keep it hungry, yet give it a good morsel now and then. The sweeter the handful dropped of purpose for it, the better it will follow. So the Lord, the good Shepherd, keeps brother Burch hungry, yet tasting that the Lord is gracious; so that he goes in and out and finds pasture, and always has a good appetite.

He led them forth by a solitary way. Each Israelite is ready to conclude surely no one is like me. I am alone, there never was such a case as mine. So each one feels solitary, yet that is the way the Lord leads.

The more each one feels that he is alone by reason of fear in the night will he seek to come near to the shepherd, and cleave close to the Lord.

It is in the broad road, and with the multitude, that we see the gay ones whose hearts are full, and they have no fears, and no changes, and no bands in their death.

While the child of God is like the sparrow on the house-top, or a mourning dove without its mate. P. D. G.

P. S. Come and see us when you can.

REQUEST.

RAILROADS.

Eastern N. C. is being well supplied with Railroads. The Atlantic Coast Line which is very enterprising in building branch lines in Eastern Carolina, is doing much to bring markets to the doors of its people.

The famous vestibule train, said to be the finest in the world, is run on the Coast Line. There is no other road in the South that has this train, and only one other in the world runs it. Besides this train passing down three times a week from New York to Jacksonville, they run fine trains of other cars for the accomodation of the public. They also have pleasant conductors, and an excellent organization from the President down. If you wish a pleasant ride take one of its well equipped trains. The Richmond and Danville system is doing much to open up and improve the Middle and Western sections of the State, and is a very strong and efficient system of Railroads. Col. Andrews has proven great capacity in this business.

The Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Road is a new one, opening up a good section of the state, and bids fair to be quite a help to the people. I remember the time when there was scarcely a Railroad in the United States, and what a task it was to travel a distance, and how slowly the mails were transported from place to place. Perhaps there is no business so much improved in this country, as that which falls within the domain of Railroads.

Obituary.

J. B. BATTS.

Brother J. B. BATTS, of Toisnot church, was the son of John and Polly Batts. He was born Sept. 2nd, 1820, and died Dec. 8th, 1887. When about twenty years old he joined the Methodist church, and was a class-leader in that church for a long time. After staying with them some twenty-five or thirty years he became dissatisfied and left them, and joined the Primitive Baptist church at Union meeting house, Wilson county, N. C., Saturday before the third Sunday in August, 1868.—The church soon gave him liberty to exercise his gift, which he did at times as long as he was able. He was married three times. His first wife was a Miss Sarah Glover. They lived together 24 years. She died and left him with six children—three boys and three girls. He then was married to the widow Cousin.—She only lived about eight months. He then married Miss Mahala Bynum, whom he leaves a widow with no children. He leaves five children, all by his first wife, two of them are members of the Primitive Baptist church. He was known as an honest, hard-working man by all who knew him. He was one of the greatest mysteries to the natural mind, for he never did have a sound mind on natural things, but a sound mind in spiritual things. He was sound in the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and was always ready to give a reason of his hope in Christ, and never tired in talking about the goodness and mercy of God.—He was in declining health for six months before his death, and he seemed to be full of the spirit of Jesus, so much so that all the lovers of truth were melted down, comforted and edified under his exhortation and prayers. After he had to take his bed, which he did three months before he died, he was then more edifying, if possible, than before. When the brethren and sisters would visit him he exhibited great love and strong faith in the doctrine of God our Savior. Elder A. J. Moore preached for him the day before he died. He seemed delighted, and afterwards expressed much love to God and his people, and showed that his only hope and trust was in the blessed Saviour of sinners. We feel we have lost a faithful and loving member, but our loss is his eternal gain.

May the God of all grace comfort the hearts of his wife and children with his love, sustain them by his grace, uphold them by his free spirit, and finally, when their appointed time has come, when they too must go as he has gone, that the God of heaven will give them a gentle dismission from earth to heaven, is the prayer of the unworthy writer.

LEVI WALSTON.

SERAPHNA UNDERWOOD.

For sometime I have felt impressed to write a notice of the death of my dear companion, SERAPHNA UNDERWOOD.—Although feeling entirely incompetent for the task, I make the attempt. She was born in the county of Caswell, was the daughter of Isaac and Ruth Cantrill, was married to the unworthy writer Dec. 26th, 1839, in the nineteenth year of her age, and was the mother of twelve children.—She was a very industrious woman, laboring hard for the maintenance of her children. She was a kind mother, a good neighbor, and a loving companion, and is greatly missed by us all.

She made a profession of religion years ago, joined the Missionaries at Kerr's Chapel in Caswell county, but soon she became dissatisfied, withdrew from them and never visited them again. She was a dear lover of the Primitive Baptists, believing that salvation is of the Lord, and by grace alone. She had been made to learn the vileness of the human heart, having no confidence in the flesh. She said to me a few days before her departure, she did wish that some one would come that would talk about spiritual things. The bible and ZION'S LANDMARK were her principal study. She was a dear lover of the doctrine advocated in the LANDMARK. She had been a great sufferer for three years, much of her time unable to attend to her household duties.—She was not confined to her bed more than one week. She had a large tumor in her left side which was thought to be the cause of her death. On the 19th of September, 1886, in the 66th year of her age she passed away and is gone, I hope and believe, to that bright world where pains and troubles are unknown..

S. UNDERWOOD.

AMANDA S. BOSWELL,

My dear daughter, and wife of Lee G. Boswell, departed this life May 8th, 1887, in the 33rd year of her age. She leaves a kind and loving husband and four dear little children to mourn their great loss.—She had been a great sufferer for four years, finally going into consumption, which finally carried her away from this world.—She made a profession of religion at an early age and joined the Missionary Baptist church, but after searching the scriptures for truth, and reading the LANDMARK carefully, she became well satisfied that the Primitive Baptists are the true church, was a dear lover of the truth and the doctrine they preach. A short time before her death she sent for Y. I. Chandler to talk with her, sent me word next day, saying: "Papa, I had a feast yesterday." A few days before her departure, when she was so weak she could scarcely speak, she sang the following lines.

"Pass me not, O gentle Saviour,
Hear my humble cry.
While on others thou art calling,
Do not pass me by.

S. UNDERWOOD.

JOHN C. EDWARDS.

John C. Edwards was born Jan. 30th, 1832. He was the son of Arnett and Fannie Edwards, who were members of the Primitive Baptist Church. They lived at South River, the latter part of their days, in Carteret county, N. C.

The subject of this notice volunteered in the Confederate service at the beginning of the war between the States. He served during the war in the Thirteenth N. C. Artillery, known as the Branch Battery. The writer has heard his fellow-soldiers say of him: "As a soldier he had few equals, and no superiors as a private soldier." He returned home about the close of the war to his wife and little son, almost penniless, but being of an industrious disposition, he bought a little farm and soon paid for it, and made a comfortable living. He soon commenced visiting Cedar Island, at the time of the Primitive Baptist Quarterly Meeting. He soon made known his desires by his example. The door of the church being opened in August, 1883, he came forward and was received, and was baptised with four others, by Elder J. R. Rowe.

Brother Edwards was a faithful member, a good soldier of the cross of Christ, and a loving husband. He was afflicted with dropsy and confined to his bed the last ten months of his life. For the last four months his sufferings were so intense that he wished to die. He was attended by the best physicians that could be obtained, and also the kind attention of a loving wife and many friends; but the time of his departure had come. I visited him several times during his sickness, and can say, I believe he bore his afflictions with christian fortitude. He said to the writer while sitting by his bedside: "If it was not for the little hope I have I should be most miserable." He said a few days before his death, "I only dread the sting of death."

He died September 13th, 1887, surrounded by many dear friends, who mourn not as those who have no hope, for they have the consolation to believe he has fought a good fight, has finished his course, and has gone where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

May the Lord bless his loving wife and son, and all that were near and dear unto him.

J. L. GOODWIN.

FANNIE PARTIN

Fannie Partin, daughter of Drury and Martha A. Partin, of Wake County, N. C. was born July, 25th, 1882, and departed this life, Aug. 31st 1887, making her stay on earth, 5 years, one month and six days. Her disease was diphtheria. Fannie was a bright little girl, and much admired by all who knew her; but our heavenly Father hath called her from the evil to come. While the spirit is dwelling in peace with him who gave it, the body lies sleeping, awaiting the trump of God, when this corruptible shall put on incorruption. Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. Oh death where is thy sting, Oh grave where is thy victory, &c. Then it (the body) also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. May our heaven y Father continue to bless our dear parents with his grace, to feel that all things work together, for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose, is the prayer of the unworthy writer. J. R. ROBERTS.

BEREAVED.

Our sympathies are with our dear brother Seth Woodall, whose wife departed this life on the 15th of February.

She was a kind, affectionate wife, a good neighbor, and deservedly popular among her many friends. She was a member of the Methodist denomination, and active and conscientious in doing what she considered right, and was kind to people of all persuasions.

Her children were very much devoted to her, and sadly and deeply feel their loss. Ah, what a loss is a dear mother, and a good wife. P. D. G.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:— Could you get some of your preachers to come down this way and preach some? We have any amount of preaching here, but very seldom have any of your preachers. We now have a Railroad to this place, and if some would come they can leave the W. C. and A. Road at Chadbourn's, and come to this place. I know there are some here that love to hear them preach.

Yours very truly, J. H. JOLLIE.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

COMMUNICATED.

BINDING, LOOSING.

(This communication of sister Phillips should have preceded the one recently published, as it is on the same subject, and introduces it.—ED.)

"And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 16: 18, 19.

By request I give my views of the above.

Peter here represents all the apostles, as always when spokesman on questions applicable to all: and as such Jesus generally addressed him.

You remember Jesus had just asked them whom do men say that I, the Son of Man; am? Peter replied for all.—That some said one, and some another. Then Jesus asked, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter again replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus answered, "Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build," &c. That is, thou art Peter, or thou shalt be called Cephas, which by interpretation is a stone, as representing a foundation principle; in that Peter as a pure Jew in every sense, and as first called and chosen to preach to "none but the Jews only," first therefore and in a natural or national sense, and as representing those first believing Jews—for the Jew first, and then the Gentile—answered to Abraham as "the father of circumcision,"—the father of a multitude—the father and founder of that seed in whom all nations should be blest—for salvation is of the Jews—therefore might be aptly symbolized by a rock, as the foundation of a kingdom that should have no end;—the founder of a seed that should endure forever.

For not only Abraham, but also Isaac and Jacob, by representation, should be seen in the gospel kingdom of God.

But in the more direct and spiritual sense, Peter is the rock as embodying that spiritual revelation from the Father, and therein representing those first believing Jews, whom the Father like unto himself had revealed the Christ, the Son of the living God, which faith—and as a one faith—answered not only to that of Abraham, but to that stone that should be "cut out of the mountain" without hands; (Dan. 2: 34) in that they dissenting from the legal mountain, or Jerusalem, believed in Christ by the invisible "operation of faith, as the direct power of God; or as it were—were cut out of the mountain of God's righteousness (Ps. 36: 6) by faith in Jesus Christ, without hands, or any flesh and blood appliances, or visibly made systems to shape the belief. And as that little stone, answering to the kingdom of heaven, that was to be set up in the days of these kings—the then reigning Cæsars—was the nucleus for "a great mountain;" (Dan. 2: 35.) So this regenerating faith became—as it were—a nucleus to which all gospel faith gathered—to which the Gentiles flowed" or rather the foundation rock on which the visible gospel structure was built. For the rock—the foundation, first; and then the building upon it, and thus the kingdom of God cometh not with observation.

As confirming the foregoing ide., see the incidents recorded that distinguish Peter from the other Apostles. Not only was he the first one called, and the first one chosen, Mat. 4: 18 & 10: 2, but of the band commissioned to go and preach: Luke 9: and as yet "to none but the Jews only"—Acts 11: 19, his feet were the first washed—John 13. He was the first Apostle to whom Jesus appeared as risen—Mark 24: 34; the angel told those women "go tell his disciples and Peter he is risen"—Mark 16: 7, &c., &c. Peter answered to that rock as under commission to preach "to none but the Jews only," and as representing the faith before Jesus was slain. Upon Peter's revelation of the Father as representing the one faith of the first believing Jews, 'I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.'

Then hear again the last commission of Jesus to the Apostles, to go forth and build. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel, and he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, and lo I am with you always, even to the end." Peter personally represented only the rock: all the Apostles are included in the work of building the visible church. And so they—Paul taking the place of Judas—were endowed with extraordinary spiritual gifts, mostly for the special purpose of laying this foundation and building thereupon. And thus as "workers with God" or through these special gifts, Christ working in them, they went forth preaching the gospel, baptising believers, and constituting them into bodily visible organizations. And how well adapted? as that by the gift of discerning spirits, they were enabled to discern the spirit of an applicant for baptism, whether as born of God, or yet still in "the bonds of iniquity."

And thus as wise master-builders, this personal revelation of the Father to Peter, that answered to the circumcision of Abraham: or this "circumcision of heart in spirit, to which regenerating faith springs in answer; and in which that circumcision by hands is fulfilled in gospel, they laid for a foundation.—While the according principles of their own baptism in body—set by the example and precept of Jesus Christ—they set and established as an ordinance admitting into the visible church. And thus builded their body together, fitly framing to Jesus Christ, the chief corner-stone, for "a habitation of God through the Spirit."

For "know ye not," says Paul, "your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's."—1 Cor. 6: 19, 20. Also "know ye not ye are the temple of God, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—1 Cor. 3: 6. Again referring to this "Household of God," "Ye are built upon the foundation of the Apostle, and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord."—Eph. 2: 20. Peter also says, "to whom coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God"—that is Jesus as this corner-stone, "ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house."—1st Peter 2: *

And when they had thus fitly framed them together, or constituted them into visible churches, and had set the ordinances "and established them in the faith," even in the one faith, and one Lord, and one baptism, according to Isa. 2: 5; and Mic. 4: 1; and Acts 9: 5; and Col. 2: 1; and had regulated them for order and government, and had ordained Elders and Deacons &c., &c., they passed away together with their especial spiritual gifts that were given for this especial purpose. Nor can apostolic works succeed without apostolic gifts.

So, never again can the foundation of the gospel church be laid. All works in the way of advancing and upbuilding must be thereupon; for says Paul, "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." And most solemnly warns, "let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." And all material shaped by flesh and blood, or admitting human might and power, cannot be "thereupon." For this gospel building goes up from foundation "to headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, grace, grace unto it."

And what does this say for the claims of all those who have laid their foundation since, and whose shoutings is "work, work unto it?" Simply, but surely, that they are not of this Building.

And never again is any man authorized to constitute a church. And never again is any man authorized to go forth, and finding a believing applicant and "much water," to baptise a person—as Phillip did the Eunuch—without the sanction and as duly authorized by the church.

But, who but the Primitives, can trace their foundation to the Apostles? who but them, by the cry of "grace, grace unto it," can prove they are builded thereupon? Who but them, so few, and poor, and despised, always, yet as surviving near two thousand years, as almost constantly assailed by floods of persecution. Many claim they are of this Building, and on this foundation in that the gates of hell have not prevailed against them?

"And unto thee will I give the keys," &c.

R. ANNA PHILLIPS,

LOVE.

"Above all things have fervent charity (love) among yourselves." Peter; 1st Epistle, 4:8.

"Now abideth faith, hope, charity (love), these three; but the greatest of these is charity (love) Paul; 1 Cor. 13:13.

"Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." John; 1st Epistle, 4, 7—8.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Jesus Christ; John 13, 34—35.

Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing: knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing." Peter. 1st Epistle, 3, 8—9.

"If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfill ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves." "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." "Charity (love) suffereth long, and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, and never faileth." Paul. Philip. 2:1—3; 1 Cor. 1—10; Eph. 4:1—6; 1 Cor. 13:4—8.

"Hereby perceive we the love of God because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." John; 1st Epistle, 3—16.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one: as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." Jesus Christ; John 17; 20--21.

May all the spiritual-minded readers of this article be divinely enabled, in the outset, to give solemn and profound attention to the above cited most important Scriptures. No matter what may be our faith, or knowledge, or eloquence, or alms-giving, or bodily sacrifice, says the Holy Ghost, all our professions of religion, without the possession of unfeigned and perfect love of our brethren, is but empty, useless and hypocritical formalism — sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. 1 Cor. 3. Without the Spirit of Christ, which is a Spirit of love and humility and peace, we are not at all qualified to discuss any religious subject, either publicly or privately. But a discussion under the influence of that Spirit can produce nothing but good results. We are commanded by the Apostle John "not to believe every Spirit but to try the spirits whether they are of God." 1 John 4; 1. The weakest of spiritually minded brethren can easily decide whether a disputant shows a good or a bad Spirit, and which disputant shows the most of the one or the other spirit. If love fills the heart, it will flow out through the tongue or pen; and so will hatred, if the heart is filled with bitterness. Love is shown in forbearance and forgiveness; in meek and tender admonition and reproof; and in a brotherly desire to build up one another in our most Holy faith, and to receive instruction from any who can impart it. Sincere love of the truth will cause us to desire, not so much to be consistent as to be scriptural; and, indeed, unless we are infallible, or receive no new light, our present views may not always be consistent with our former views. The scriptures are the only perfect and infallible standard of truth. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20. It does not matter whether our finite, sin-weakened, and sin-darkened minds can thoroughly understand the consistency of the scriptures or not; the scriptures are true, and also consistent, if properly understood; and the truly humble child of God will accept every one of their declarations as entirely and eternally true. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—1st Tim, 3: 16, 17. Observe that "all scripture is profitable for doctrine;" and, therefore, every scripture bearing on any doctrine must be taken into consideration in order to obtain a scriptural view of that doctrine. Many scriptures plainly teach the doctrine of the predestination of all things (Gen. 1: 1; John 1: 3; Colos. 1: 16, 17; Acts 15: 18; Isa 46: 9, 10; Eph. 1: 2; Acts 17: 26; Matt. 10: 29, 30; Prov. 16: 33; Eph. 1: 11; Isa. 26: 12; Philip 2: 13; Gal. 5, 22, 23; Eph. 1: 3, 6; Rom. 8: 28, 31; Acts 4; 28; First Cor. 2: 27; Luke 22: 22; Acts 2: 23; Gen. 37: 28; 45: 7, 8; 50: 20; Exod. 9: 12; Psalm 17: 13, 14; Isa 10: 5, 7, 12; Job 1: 12, 21; 2 Sam. 16: 10; 24: 1; 1 Chron. 21: 1; 2 Cor. 12: 7;) while other scriptures teach, with equal plainness, that the creature is voluntary in the commission of sin, and responsible for his sins, and that God's predestination of sin was not of an originating and compulsive, but of a permissive, directive, restrictive, and overruling character — the almighty power of God limiting and overruling sin for the good of his people and the glory of his name (Mal. 4: 2; 1 John 1: 5; Psalm 145: 17; Isa 6: 3; Rev. 4: 8; 1 Peter 1: 16; Heb. 6: 18; 2 Tim. 2: 13; Gen. 1: 31; 2 Peter 2: 4; Jude 6; John 8: 44; James 1: 13, 14; 1 John 2: 16; Gen. 2: 16, 17; Gen. 3: 50; 20; Exod. 8: 15; Zech. 7: 9, 12; Hosea 13: 9; Deut. 5: 28, 29; 32: 29; Psalm 81: 13; Isa. 48: 18; 65: 12; John 5: 40; Matt 23: 37, 38; 2 Chron. 32: 31; Job 1: 12; 2: 6; Psalm 81: 12; Mark 1: 34; 5: 13; Luke 8: 32; 22: 22; Acts 2: 23; 7: 42; 13: 18; 14: 16; Rom. 1: 26, 28; Rom. 9: 22; Psalm 76: 10;

Rom. 9. 33.) If we are under the influence of the Spirit of God, we will neither deny or ignore, nor desire to deny or ignore any of these or any other scriptures; but we will desire heartily to receive and clearly to understand all the words of divine inspiration; nor will we construct or explain a scripture doctrine in such a way as plainly to contradict the teachings of other scriptures. The fact that the Ark of the Covenant and the Brazen Serpent were made in accordance with the command of God (Exod. 25. 10, 22; Numb. 21. 8, 9,) did not make ancient Israel's adoration of these things any less idolatrous and offensive to the Most High (1 Sam. 4; 2 Kings 18. 4;) neither will the worship which the people of God in the present century pay to the bible or any doctrine or commandment of the bible or any ordinance of God be any less idolatrous and offensive to the only truly Adorable One, the Holy and Merciful Sovereign of the Universe.— We are to worship and serve the Lord our God only (Matt. 4: 10; Exod. 20. 3: Rev. 22. 8, 9,) and not to adore and sacrifice all else to anything below the Creator, whether it be the work of God or the work of man, or the language of inspired or the language of uninspired men, divine words of human invention. Nothing must be substituted for God. By the power of the indwelling Spirit of God, we are to flee idolatry (1 Cor. 10. 14,) keep ourselves from idols, (1 John 5. 21;) all of us being merely brethren, to acknowledge Christ as our only Master, our only Prophet, Priest and King (Matt. 23. 8, 12; Deut. 18. 15; Acts 3. 22; Psalm 110. 4; Heb. 3. 1; Psalm 2. 6; John 1. 49;) and to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not be entangled with the yoke of bondage even to the divine ceremonial law, much less to human authorities (Gal. 5. 1.) We are not to engage in unwholesome, unprofitable, and subverting logomachies, or wars of words, with our brethren (1 Tim. 6. 4; 2 Tim. 2. 14;) and we are not even at all to desire to disobey our Lord's commands for us not to be called masters

(Matt 23. 8, 10; James 3. 1;) not to be lords over God's heritage (1 Peter 5. 3,) not to exercise dominion over the faith of our brethren (2 Cor. 1. 24;) remembering that even the Apostles were only ministers by whom we believed, even as the Lord gave to every man (1 Cor. 3. 5, 6,) and that whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted," (Matt. 23. 12.)

So shall we walk in the light, as Christ is in the light, and have fellowship one with another (1 John 1. 7;) so shall we walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness and meekness, forbearing one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace (Eph. 4. 1, 3;) so shall brotherly love continue (Heb. 13. 1; Rom. 12. 10;) so shall we realize how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity (Psalm 133.)

A GREAT SUFFERER.

The greatest sufferer in the whole circle of my acquaintance, and the one most sorely in need of pecuniary assistance, is brother Bartley Perkins, of Wilson County, North Carolina. He has begged me to appeal to the brethren, through the LANDMARK, in his behalf. He is a Primitive Baptist and in good standing. For 13 years he has been grievously afflicted with rheumatism and able to do no work and for eight years has not stood on his feet. His body is dreadfully distorted; his head permanently bent at a right angle to his body; his arms and legs swollen, misshaped and useless. Except when under the influence of opiates, he is never free from pain. All his scanty means have been exhausted in supporting him and paying his doctor's bills. He is, therefore, penniless. Under his terrible sufferings, he seems to me to show a meek spirit of christian patience and resignation.

The Lord said to his ancient people

"The poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, thou shalt open wide thine hand unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land." Deut. 15:11. And again: "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and a poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." Zeph. 3:12, the Lord Jesus Christ says: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will ye may do them good." Mark 14: 7. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Math. 7:12. Inasmuch as ye have ministered unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Math. 25: 40. Paul says: "Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do." Gal. 2:10, James says: Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world"; and again, "Faith without works is dead." James 1: 27; 2: 20. And John says; "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." 1 John 3:17,18.

Luke relates: "Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren who dwelt in Judah; which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." Acts 2: 29,30.

I heartily commend our poor and afflicted brother Bartley Perkins to the charitable remembrance of all our brethren. Any money sent for him to Elder P. D. Gold, Wilson N. C., will reach him.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

DEAR BROTHER HASSELL:—I have availed myself of this pleasant opportunity of writing to you. So as you may see that I am yet in existence. Yes I am yet living, but can't say that I am better. Not in one particular Brother Hassell; I am greatly in need of money. I write to you for advice about the matter. Will you try to raise me some money or do you think it would be best for you to write a letter to the LANDMARK and state my case as you well know my conditions every way, as to bodily afflictions and as to my pecuniary circumstances.

I have been down thirteen years since I have been able to do any work, it has been eight years since I stood on my feet. I had a little farm and when I was taken down I was doing well, making my own supplies. My wife died and necessity drove me to sell my farm, and the proceeds have all been spent in taking care of me and paying doctor's bills.

I have nothing now only as I beg it. I ask you please not think hard of me for begging you. Now abideth faith, hope, and charity, of these three abideth charity. You can do as you please, you may send this letter to the LANDMARK and also write one yourself do as you think best, I remain your dear brother.

BARTLEY PERKINS.

P. S. Let me hear from you soon.

Moyton, Wilson Co. N. C.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have a desire to write to those who feel the need of a Savior, who is able to save his people from their sins.

Just such a Savior is found in Jesus, The angel of the Lord said, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. 1:21. The word "Jesus" means a Savior. "There is no name given under heaven, among men whereby we must be saved." The prophet in speaking of Jesus says, "In his love and in his pity he (Jesus) redeemed them." Then it was not because his people had, or that he saw that they would do good that he redeemed them; but in his love and in his pity he redeemed them.

"And I looked, and there was none to help: and I wondered that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me."—Isa. 63: 5.

He did not say my arm and your arm brought; but mine own arm. The word "arm" as used here signifies power. Then it was by the power of his own everlasting arm he brought salvation unto his people.

He bowed and the Lord laid upon him the iniquity of us all.

We were found guilty and the penalty was death. Justice demanded full payment; but as we had sold ourselves for aught we had nothing wherewith to pay. Therefore, it was in his love and in his pity he redeemed him.

But Jesus died for our sins. This was all that divine Justice required; and, therefore, Jesus shows his wounded side and hands and says, "Father, I have died for them,—forgive!" Justice folds her arms and says, "I demand no more. This is salvation by grace! Now Jesus can say with authority to poor trembling sinners, "Thy sins which are many are all forgiven thee."

And when a poor trembling one hears the joyful sound, "Thy sins which are many are all forgiven thee," the name of Jesus is made sweet and precious to them, and they can sing with the Spirit and with the understanding also.

Then our song may be.

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds,
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fears."

But we cannot always enjoy his peaceful presence, and when he hides his smiling face from us for a little season we are filled with doubts and fears. Then we cry unto God, "Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name."

"Oh, could I but believe!
Then all would easy be.
I would, but cannot; Lord, relieve;
My help must come from thee."

He humbles his little ones that he may teach them to know that he is God and causes them to feel their dependence upon him, when they have exhausted all their human skill and failed; then they feel they are poor helpless creatures. Then they cry unto the Lord, "Give us help from trouble! for vain is the help of man." They call upon the Lord for mercy and he delivers them. Why do they call upon him? Why, it is because they have nowhere else to go. "All that call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But says Jesus, not every one that saith unto me, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." There is a difference between saying Lord, Lord, and in calling upon his name. But dear reader, are you hungering and thirsting after righteousness? If so; you "shall be filled." Do you feel to be a poor lost sinner? If so, Jesus is your Savior, Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost; and not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. If you have never felt that you were a sinner; you have no right to claim Jesus as your Savior.

F. P. BRANSCOME.

DEAR BRETHERN GOLD AND LESTER — I have been feeling impressed for some time to write to your precious paper which comes heavily laden, with good news from a far off country; but I have neglected, owing to weakness, both of body and mind. I will endeavor to do so though, with the help of my heavenly Father, provided he will extend his power and mercy.

Though I have nothing as a standpoint, except the precious blood of our Redeemer, which was shed on the tree of the cross after he had borne it up.—Mount Calvary, in agonizing pain. Just think of it poor pilgrims, who have traveled, and are traveling from Babylon to Zion, laboring under a load of sin and tears. Was he not an amazing sight? Just think of his hands and feet all torn with nails, received by those cruel ruffians. His bleeding side, his crown of thorns. Amazing love! What wondrous love is this that caused the Lord of bliss to bear that dreadful curse for my soul? Oh! why should I ever get in such dark, gloomy places? Is it for sin and disobedience of me which causes the Lord to turn his pleasant smiles and sunshine to frowns and dark clouds, which cause the whole universe to be darkened? Surely the candle has been put under the bushel, but is it possible that it must not be removed, that the light may not shine on the road that leads me to the Tomb.—Oh! that it may be removed, and that my darkness may be turned to light, my sorrowing to rejoicing, and my cursing to praising and glorifying the Lord God Almighty who rules in the heavens and the earth. It seems as if my talent (if I ever had one) has been taken from me, and given to one who had ten, and that I am left destitute of anything to work with. Sometimes I feel so vile, so prone to sin, that I fear I am not born again. If I am born again, why can I not live holy? Because nothing pure and holy can dwell in this sin-defiled world where skillfully satan sets traps in my way. If I am so often caught in his snare, will I not after a while become so forgetful of him who died for the sin of all his people, that I will not even thank him for the greatest blessings which he causes to be spread among his people. Will the Bride ever get weary and fall away?—No, never; and he set up an ensign, which will point you to the gate which stands open, awaiting the happy pilgrim.

Young Brethren and Sisters, does the devil ever try to persuade you that you are too young, and that you will be weary before your warfare is ended, and wish that you had not so early begun? If he does, say: "Get thee behind me, satan," and he will flee from you. Let not satan, in his enticing ways, draw you from the paths of peace and draw you from your steadfastness, but keep him under your feet, and let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify God in heaven.

I would be extremely obliged if Bro. Joel Marshall would send me a copy of the song he composed, either publicly or privately.

WHY?

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER:—Dear Brethren—I desire to ask the traveling ministers one or two questions: Why is it that none of them come to Pleasant Hill, Edgecombe county, N. C., in their appointments? We are down in the valley, it seems to me, and none cares for us. Brethren, is it because we have been in confusion so long? If so, we are weak you know. Come and see us and see how we do. It may be because you are treated coolly when you come, but remember we are all poor people, and no money to spare, but what little we give is given in the name of the Lord, I hope. May God put it in the minds of the brethren to visit old Pleasant Hill, again, and bring the good news or glad tidings from a far country, that our hearts may be made glad and be refreshed unto a lively hope through the gospel. Oh brethren, pray for us that our faith fail not, but that we may press on to the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Oh Lord, bless us with the wisdom and understanding to set righteous judgments in thy courts and let not the minister have respect of persons, but rightly divide the word of truth, giving each his portion in due season.

Dear Brethren Gold and Lester, we would be more than glad to see your faces at our place of worship. Brother Lester, come and see us, for in my mind there are not many in the Baptist ranks that are more profitable than you. Why? Because the Baptists are not putting their trust enough in David to smite Goliath. They are looking too much to Saul, but Saul cannot conquer him. He is a giant, a man of war from his youth. Trust in Daniel, tho' he be a stripling boy, and comely, or of a fair countenance. Trust him, for Goliath is out to-day defying the armies of the living God. And he (David) is your Captain and King. Look not to Saul for deliverance, for the flesh profiteth nothing, but the Spirit giveth life. Here are the two set forth—Saul and David. I am not able to rightly divide them, but a hint to the wise is sufficient.

I look over the appointments in every LANDMARK I get to see if any of the brethren are coming to Pleasant Hill, but I see none, no not one. May God send one to that place for good, is my desire, for Christ's sake. There has been a time when everything was revived up here, and some coming telling what great things the Lord had done; but there is a cold time now. I hope the winter will pass over soon, and the spring may open with fruits of glory to God, and the birds be heard to sing, and the voice of the turtle be heard in our land. Oh, that I could see the people coming home and telling their friends what great things the Lord has done. How I could rejoice in it but the Lord works all things after the counsel of his own will, and it may be that the Lord holds us in a cold state to try our faith. The Lord is not weak that he could not gather them, but it is to try them, and thus far shalt thou go, and no further.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER;

I have had a desire to write out my little experience, but feeling my incompetency, and unworthiness I have never done it, but if it is the will of the Lord I will in my weak and feeble way try to tell you something about the Lord's dealings with my poor soul, if I am not deceived. In the year 1870 my father was going to the Country Line Association and wanted me to go with him for company, and I, like all other young people was willing and ready to go, not thinking anything was going to take place to keep me from enjoying myself, but to my great surprise, on Monday while Elder Bodenhammer was preaching I was made to feel myself a sinner, justly condemned before God. I sat there and cried and could not help it to save my life, for I felt like my poor heart would break, but I did not know what was the matter with me. On my way home I felt lonesome and desolate.

I would try to keep from it but I could not help it. I could see Brother Bodenhammer and hear his voice for more than a month after I heard him preach. His sermon rang in my ears, and oh how bad I wanted to see him and hear him preach again, for I wanted to know if he could tell me what was the matter with me, for I did not know, but I passed it off the best I could. I would try not to think about how bad my mind was troubled, and I could not tell why it was for I was blind and could not see. But in April 1872 while sitting under the sound of old brother Wilson's preaching I found out what was the matter with poor me. He went on to tell his feelings when he was under conviction. He described my feelings so near that I knew in my mind it was conviction for sin was what was the matter with me. I went mourning and grieving all the time on the account of the awful condition that I was in. I would go off and fall down on my face and try to pray, but the more I tried the worse I got. I would sometimes think that I was so wicked that God would not hear me.

Brother Gold, my mind became so distressed that I would often say, oh, that I had not been born, and then again I would think that I was here for some purpose unknown to me, and it would make me cry and say, Lord have mercy on me, a poor lost and ruined sinner. I would read my bible for comfort and consolation, but not one bit of comfort could I find. It seems I could find comfort for everybody besides poor me. I could find comfort nowhere till I became most miserable, for I thought that I had a heart disease and that it would kill me soon if it did not get better, and instead of its getting better it got worse fast. I recollect one day I was weaving, and went in where my mother was, after some water to drink, I was feeling so bad that day I lay down on a bench by the table and said to my mother, mamma I am not going to live long, for I have got a disease of the heart and it would kill me.—Her answer to me was, get up from there and go to work. I rose up immediately and went back to my work, but I did not stay long; was so heart-broken that I left and went off to pray, and beg the Lord for mercy. But all I could say was Lord have mercy on me a poor sinner. I went with my head bowed down and tears of sorrow streaming from my eyes. It seems to me that I was the most heart-broken creature on earth. I would read the LANDMARK, to see if anybody else had ever had such feelings as mine, and I found out that they did, though it seems like mine was an outside case. I could see a chance for everybody else but poor unworthy me, and there was no chance; as I could see for me to escape the punishment of hell, and oh, how I did dread that awful place, and these words would often come to me, without a change you cannot be saved, you must be born again. This made me feel awful. I tried to do everything that lay in my power to do, and what was that? It was all nothing in the sight of God. I would go to preaching and try to look as bright and cheerful as I could, lay oh me; I would hear something that would cut me to the heart so bad that I could only say, Lord be merciful to me a poor sinner, for I felt like I was a miserable sinner. All I wanted to do was to hear the members talk and tell what they hoped the Lord had done for their poor souls. I did not want anybody to know my condition, so I kept it concealed as close as I could. I would often do things that would tempt me to keep young folks from thinking that something was the matter with me. In January 1874 I was invited to a party by one of my school mates. I told him I did not want to go, for I did not believe in such doing anyway, but he insisted so hard on my going that I went, and early in the night something seemed to say to me, what do you mean by being here in the condition you are now in. I did not know what to think to hear anything talk that. I wanted to be at home so bad and away from their party, and I thought then, if God would forgive me for going, that I would never go to another, and I never have been since.

From 1872 to 1874 I was taken down with the measles. I did not go to school, and the thought of being confined to the house bothered me. I wanted to be sick and go all to some lonely place, to beg the Lord for mercy, but I could not go on it would send me to go to an insane asylum. I was dappered, though I was confined to my bed from Tuesday until Friday I began to get a little better, and late Friday evening I sat up a little while and became weak, and felt like I was going to faint, and got up and got to my bed and fell down across it and lay there a while. It does not seem like I was asleep, but I must have been. It seemed like the house was full of people, and among them, brother Bolefulamer. He said that he was going to pray, and I begged him to be prayed for anybody, to pray for poor wretches, for there was anybody on earth that needed praying for, I said. He got down and laid his hands across my breast and laid his head on his knee, and he had his side knelt a young man, and I put my left hand on the man's forehead, and with my right hand over the man's forehead, and I seemed to see my own soul, to all my sins, but it was a dream, but it was a vision, a vision of my soul.

Brother Bolefulamer, a poor mortal on earth, he did pray for me, surely did. The best thing of my soul was, how love bothered me a poor sinner, but I kept on getting worse and worse. I could get up and by my heavy burden of sin and sin. It seemed to be pressing me down so low that I could not stand, but I went on the best I could, please me, God's great mercy.

In April 1874 I lost my speech, and it was for three months that I could not speak above a whisper.

I was healthy, this caused my trouble to increase, but I thought it was a judgment sent upon me for my wickedness, and I did not ever expect to get any better, for I felt myself sinking down in a gulf of dark despair. I became so diseased both in body and mind that I was not able to do scarcely anything. I went on grieving over my lost and ruined condition, every day getting worse, and on the 15th of June my father carried me off the distance of twelve miles to stay awhile with a doctor. I stayed awhile and he did the best for me he could, but by the help of God I did gain my speech. During that three months I don't think I slept an hour during the time. Of a night my troubles were so great I was afraid to go to sleep, for it seemed to me if I but shut my eyes the devil would have me.

Dear brother, if any poor heart-broken soul ever tried to pray, I did, but the more I tried the worse I got. The family with whom I was staying would say, what is the matter with you, you are not like you used to be. I would shake my head as if to say, nothing, when oh, the trouble I was in I can tell nobody. I was sure with the bible and set down to read what I would get up without seeing a minister. I felt too mean, too forgettable, and too sinful and unworthy to put anything in my mouth, and for one who has not these feelings, knows anything about it. I got to a place where I felt like I had no friend on earth or in heaven, and every body was an enemy to me. It seemed to me that my parents were the worst enemies that I had. But now I know that it is all imagination on my part, but I grieved over it and thought because I was sick everybody hated me. I went off one day, I believe it was the 15th of July, and when I left I did not know where I would ever see the house again. I went off to a langsome solitary place, to try to pour out my feeble prayer to God once more. I got there and fell on my face and tried to pray to the Lord once more while I lived. All that I could say was, Lord have mercy on me a poor sinner. It seemed to me that my prayers would sink in the ground and never rise as high as my head. I got up and thought I had better go to the house lest finding me absent they would be angry. So I returned to the house again, picked up my bible to read and see if I could find one precious promise for poor me, but no, I found none, for me in that blessed and holy book, so I put it down and went and lay down to rest, as I was very weak. And while I was lying there, in deep distress, meditating over my awful condition, my pillow was wet with tears, for it came to me just as plain that I had only two more weeks to live. My time to die was the 28th of July, 1874, and oh! what a trying time was this to poor sinful me, when I was without hope, and without God in this world, and to think that I must make my bed in hell was more than I felt I could bear, and I away from home. The first week I rather knew how times went, but I was miserable. The last week I had to live, the most distressing one to me I ever saw in all my life, to think of death and afterwards that awful punishment that was due poor me, and I could see no way for poor me to escape. I was so troubled I did not know the days of the week correctly. Every day grew worse until I thought I could never stand the punishment due for me. Now comes the last day, it being the 28th of July, 1874. Half past twelve was my time to die, and oh, brother Gold, that day I never shall forget, nor will I ever be able to describe my feelings, for it is out of my power to do it. That day I don't think I breathed without saying, Lord, have mercy on me a sinner. I craved to see Elder Bodenhamer above everybody else. In my whole troubles that was one thing I did crave, and now my last day on earth is almost gone. I stood and watched the sun go down behind the western hills, never expecting to see the sun rise and set anymore. I was listening and looking, I heard a dove mourning. It sounded as lone-ome to me as anything I ever heard. I turned my back to it and went in the house and on up stairs with tears streaming from my eyes. My prayers, it seemed to me, did not rise above my head. I then retired and folded my hands across my breast, and soon was as helpless as an infant, for it was impossible for me to move either hand or foot, and if there had been ten thousand pounds on me I could not have felt more tightly pressed down.

And now, brother Gold, it is eleven o'clock, and there is only one hour and a half for me to live. What do you suppose my feelings were at that time, when I had no hope at all? I was just as confident of going to torment as I could be. I lay, and the tears flowed from my eyes, and I could not move my hands to wipe them away, and the time now came for me to die, and these words were spoken to me, "Oh daughter, be of good cheer, thy sins which are many are forgiven thee." Then it seemed to me that if I had ten thousand tongues I would have used them all in praising my God for the great and wonderful work he wrought in me in a few moments. I wanted to see my father and mother and tell them what great things the Lord had done for my poor soul. But something seemed to say to me, Don't you tell it, you are deceived, and you will deceive them and cause them to see trouble.— That was a cross to me, but I would not have told it for pay. A few nights after this I went to sleep and dreamed of seeing two companies of people.— One was a small company and the other was the largest company I ever saw, and between them was a pit that was so deep that I could not see the bottom of it. It was about twenty steps across. On the east side of it was the small company, and the large company was on the west side. The small company represented the true church of Christ, and the other was the Arminian world. They were the worst confused people I ever saw. I was commanded to cross over the pit, but knew that if I attempted to cross the pit I would fall and go to the bottom, to that place called hell. I was commanded again to cross over. Then I crossed over without any trouble, and when within about two steps of this awful place there stood two ministers with their right-hands extended to me. They were Elders Wilson and Bodenhamer. They took me by my hands and soon led me out of danger. My love for these two ministers, it seemed to me, was greater than I had for any others. If there was any people on earth that I did love it was the Primitive Baptists, and if there is any people in this world to day that I love it is this poor, despised people. Though I am a poor despised worm of the dust I love the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Then I felt that I could live no longer outside of the church, so in June, 1877 I went to preaching with the intention of offering to the church, but there was no preaching. Then I thought I would wait until the fourth Sunday in July, as then it would be quarterly meeting, and I would see brother Wilson or brother Bodenhamer to be present when I offered to the church, and wanted one of them to baptize me, but as Elder Bodenhamer lived so far from me I did not know whether I would ever see him again. So the week before the second Sunday in July my mind was so much distressed I took my paper, pen and ink, and sat down and wrote a short note to Elder Wilson requesting him to come to our July meeting, and the third Sunday in the same month I heard that Elder Bodenhamer was to be at Sandy Grove. I went, for I wanted to see him and Elder Wilson together—I saw them both. I asked brother Wilson if he would come to our July meeting; he said that he could not come, but that Elder Bodenhamer would do as well. So on Monday he preached at New Hope, and after preaching the door of the church was opened for the reception of members. The first thing I knew I was up there, and after a while I told what I hoped the Lord had done for my poor soul, and to my great surprise I was received without being asked a question, and it did not seem to me that I had told anything that was worth hearing.

Brother Gold, I told you of a dream I had. I will now tell you the interpretation. The two ministers that extended their hands to me, it was in joining the church, and in being baptized. I believe that it was the will of our blessed Lord to send him when he did, and when I joined the church he had the blessed privilege (to me) of extending the right-hand of fellowship. I think that was a token of his taking me by the right-hand with his right-hand ; and when I was baptized, brother Wilson did it, and he took me by my left hand with his right-hand. When he led me into the water I was willing to follow my Lord and Saviour down into the liquid grave, and after I had done it I felt perfectly easy, and that heavy burden that I had carried in my bosom for six long years and eleven months was gone, and I felt perfectly light and happy for three weeks, and I thought that I would never have any more trouble, but I soon began to have doubts and fears. I felt like I had done wrong in everything, for it seemed to me that I could not do anything right.

The truth is what I love and feast upon, whether I am a child of God or not. That is one thing I don't know, but I have a little hope sometimes that I am, for he says, "come unto me all that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." I feel that he has given it to me.

I am truly your unworthy sister, if a sister at all,

" FOLLOW THOU ME."

The words, " Follow thou me " were spoken by our blessed Saviour ; by one who spoke as never man spake, and guile was never found in his mouth.—All of his words are words of wisdom, and they are full of meaning. He had no idle words to give account of in the day of judgment ; and in every word that he spoke was he justified. Yea, he taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

Now my prayer is that I may be led by the Holy Spirit of God to write according to his word, and according to the experience of his dear children ; and if I write according to the word of God, I shall write according to the experience of his people. For it is said in his word, " All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." If we were not the children of God, and were not taught by him the great and glorious truths of the gospel, we could not speak the same language. We could not be rejoicing in the same great and glorious truth, and with joy proclaiming,

" To sinners all around
What a dear Saviour we have found."

The words, " FOLLOW THOU ME " were spoken by our Lord to Peter in his last appearance to his disciples of which John speaks. The Saviour had just said unto Peter thrice, " Lovest thou me ? " had thrice said, " Feed my lambs, feed my sheep." Now the work which our Lord had assigned to Peter was to feed his little flock. Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give unto you the kingdom."

And when he had given him his charge, he said unto him, " Follow me." In verse 18th, our Lord declares unto Peter under what difficulties he should perform this work ; that imprisonment, bonds, and a fearful death awaited him ; is I think, the substance of the verse.

Now Peter seemed to believe that his lot was harder than that of the other disciples ; for we hear him saying, " And what shall this man do! " Now this was evidently a carnal question, for Jesus saith unto him, " If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?— FOLLOW THOU ME." Now to be a follower of the meek and lovely Lamb of God, includes self-denial ; and oh how bitter it is to the flesh to deny self ! But Christ says, " If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and FOLLOW ME."—Matt. 16 : 24.

I hope I am one of the followers of the Lamb of God ; but I often feel that I am following him afar off. Yet I do desire to follow him whithersoever he leadeth me.

Now why do the people of God desire to follow him ? It is because God has led them to see the beauties in holiness. He has made them willing in the day of his power in the beauties of holiness—Ps. 110: 3.

Now we cannot even desire to follow one whom we have not known, or heard. For, once we knew not Jesus, and then he seemed, "a root out of dry ground, without form or comeliness."—Isa. 5: 3 2. "And we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not." But now to us, he is the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely. Yes to know Jesus is to love him, and his ways better than all earthly things and earthly ways. And as his wisdom, power, majesty, and grace break upon our minds, admiration, wonder, and awe must fill our souls. Old things have passed away, and behold to us, all things have been made new. Yes the things we once loved we now hate, the things we once hated we now love. We have been made sick of sin; and made to love Jesus and his dear children. We love Jesus because he first loved us, and gave himself for us. We love his people because they love Jesus, and love to talk of the glory of his kingdom, and to tell of his great power.

WHY SUCH A CHANGE? The reason is very plain, for the eyes of our understanding are enlightened, and are fixed by the glorious Son of God upon him who is all fair to behold. Yes dear child of God, if you are cast down, and feel to be the least in your Father's house, I can say to you in the language of one of our old, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." If you are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, the promise is unto you, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." If you are mourning because you feel that you are a great sinner, the promise is unto you, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."—Christ says, "Fear not, I am he that is alive, and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore." My Father's children, have you ever thought how much Jesus loves you? "Yea I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with love and kindness have I drawn thee." "Greater love hath no man than this that a man should lay down his life for his friends." Yes Jesus died that we might live: "he became poor that ye through his poverty might be rich." Yes he has done all things well." "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed"—Isa. 53: 4, 5.

O, how rich are the blessings that flow through the channel of his everlasting love to poor perishing sinners. O, sinner! sinner! hear him crying in the last agonies of his suffering: "It is finished, it is finished." Redemption's work is done. Yes the law is satisfied. The heirs of promise are redeemed, and their sins all cancelled in his precious blood, to be remembered no more for ever. Yes Jesus has obtained salvation for all of his people. Dear brethren when by an eye of faith we can look to Calvary's bloody brow, and hope that our sins were remembered there.—When such rich grace is so freely bestowed on such poor sinners as we are. O how humble and thankful we should feel.

Yours in hope and unworthiness—

A LOVELY ENHORTATION.

ELD. P. D. GOLD DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your paper is of inestimable value to me. The communications and experiences of God's children, with your sound editorials, are a great solace and comfort to me in my lonely hours. Situated as I am, I rarely hear a sermon preached, and if it were not for my bible and LANDMARK, I would often hunger for the food of the gospel. I read the experiences often with tear-bedimmed eyes, when they speak so plainly of my own feelings; many whose faces I have never seen, yet I feel that I know them well, and that they are my true friends.

I have so often wished that I was a ready writer, that I might comfort some feeble saint, as I have been comforted, but when I see so many abler pens engaged in the service, I naturally shrink from the task.

My imperfections rise so forcibly, I am at times compelled to forbear. Like Martha I am cumbered with the cares of life, and I can readily find many excuses; but when I attempt to excuse myself with weakness, my conscience reasons with me, are we not covenanted to bear with the infirmities of the weak? Perhaps a few words from one, though frail and imperfect, might profit some sister of like feelings, and as I yield to my impressions to do so, if only one is benefitted, I shall feel a sweet relief, and well compensated for the task.

I miss the communion of christian conversations much, which affords me so much pleasure. We have our joys, sorrows and temptations, and it is a joy to speak of them to each other. I am surrounded with what the world calls religion, but hear very little religious conversation, and when by chance it is alluded to, I express myself freely, and often refer to my own experience, and it seems to be foolishness to them, and their ideas are so inconsistent, pertaining only to the flesh, so that it does not encourage me to speak of it; but of their good works and institutions, they can converse with fluency. It is lamentable to know the errors, delusions and false systems that abound, and so many following their pernicious ways, so much of it directly under my observation, and "My soul is often vexed with their unlawful deeds," and again I pity them from the depths of my heart. It is deplorable indeed to see so many professing to follow the meek and lowly Jesus, and yielding none of the peaceable fruits of righteousness. "There are wells without water, clouds that are carried with the tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever." I believe that many nets are being spread for the people of God, and if they were not kept by divine power, would be enticed into many hurtful things, now existing in the world: but "He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth His saints.

We are hated and ridiculed because we can have no fellowship with the unprofitable works of darkness," but we need not marvel though trying to the flesh. Christ and His followers have forsook all these things, and left us examples of their suffering and endurance.

He calls us "blessed and happy" if we suffer for His namesake. He was hated without cause, and likewise the true servants of God, give the world no cause for hating them. I am satisfied that I would be highly esteemed if I belonged to a popular church. I have had intimations of my influence in another, but choose rather to suffer afflictions with the people of God." I think I have to see that, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit," and have fully realized that in this world ye shall have tribulations, but have reached the point of feeling very little concern for the world, or what the world should say of me, if I can keep a conscience void of offense toward God and man; very unlike I used to be, but I believe the greater the conflict, the better we are established in the firm decrees of the Almighty.

I have been sorely tried by the enemies of truth, and was reminded very much of Elijah's condition; "I alone am left, and they seek to take my life." I have tried to bear it all patiently, having the happy conscience of knowing it was without cause, but ready to cry out like old Jacob, "All these things are against me;" but thanks be to God, I have been made to feel that it was for my good, and brought nearer the Lord, and enabled me to rejoice that I was counted worthy to suffer for His cause. My chief desire is to dwell at my Redeemers feet, to adore and exalt him the rest of my life. O that God would build up Zion, and cause even the wrath of man to praise Him in her gates.

Dear children of God, who are yet out of the pale of his sanctuary, I feel like I want to say something to you. Why are you hungering? Do you not desire to dwell with the people of God?

Christ says "come and partake of the water of life freely." You will never feel free until you take up your cross and follow Jesus, through evil as well as good report. Methinks, I hear you say, Oh, I am so unworthy. Remember Christ is our worthiness, our sufficiency, our all. "If you tarry till you are better you will never come at all." We will welcome your unworthiness to our hearts. It is such that we love, and you will find rest to your souls,—a rest that the world knows nothing of, and can neither give nor take away. Such has been the experience of the unworthy writer.

Ah! too well do I remember how I resisted the pleadings of my own heart, to go with the people of God, and have gone often from his worship sorrowfully condemned. When I look back at my past rebellion, it seems wonderful indeed that the Lord should bless me as he does. Long I strove to shun the way that was first revealed to me, and by yielding to fleshly lusts I was made to drink of the bitter cup of sorrow. "He that knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes; "and by these stripes I was healed. The rod of sore chastisements, brought me back to the narrow road that leads to eternal life: and doubly precious, because it was wrought, through suffering.

And can I forget the goodness? I know that my Redeemer liveth, and "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." O the glorious plan of redemption, that excludes all our own righteousness: "For in me, that is in my flesh, no good thing dwells," and if my salvation depended on my good works, I would be justly and eternally lost.

Christ has left us so many precious promises, and dearest of all, he will never leave nor forsake us. Soul cheering words. Though satan and his host are arrayed against us, and pierce us with his poisonous arrows and persecutions: yet if we trust Jesus, he will lead us on to victory.

Dear brethren and sisters, I can't help feeling that these are the "latter days" spoken of by the Prophets and Apostles, and it becomes us to be vigilant and watchful. Our lights seem to be burning dimly. Let us as a little flock, "strive together for good, in unity and love, acknowledging God in all our ways, casting all our care on him, for he careth for us, that when we are bid to the marriage supper of the Lamb, we may be clothed with the garments of grace.

Long live the dear editor, and may God bless his noble work of love, and as ambassador for Christ, proclaim loudly the glad tidings of the gospel, and when the Father calls him home, receive the reward of "well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord: Remember me at a throne of grace and pray that I may be faithful to the end. Yours in hope of eternal life. S. TERRELL.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

Sister P. T. Lewis requests my views of Rev. 4-5. "And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices; and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God." I do not know that I have any thoughts upon this wonderful vision which bear directly upon the substance of the verse quoted; but will merely give some points of truth which I think are in harmony with it.

The book of Revelation seems in its very name to direct our minds to the judgments and ways of God in his dealings with man in time. Secret things belong to God, and revealed things to us or to men. John was shown things in this vision which must be hereafter, that is after John saw them. They were things which 'must shortly come to pass.' Things which come to pass are such as were before determined of God, and are brought forth in time. John saw a door opened in heaven and he was commanded to come up hither to be shown the things which must be, or come to pass. And immediately he was in the Spirit and beheld a throne set up in heaven. Now we must first decide whether this heaven in which a door was opened, and a throne was set, is eternity, the abode of the great I AM or whether it is a kingdom set up here in the world. All the works of God as actually wrought so as to be seen and known of men are in time, but to see these works as designed in the spirit one must be in the spirit, and then he is in the beginning and looks forward, and as he, in the spirit beholds them being wrought, they are in heaven, but the place where they are really—actually—experimentally developed is in the hearts of his people, who are men and women, sinners saved by grace. The church here in the world is made up of believers in Jesus Christ and is called the kingdom of heaven. And what is found in the church collectively is in each member individually—and each member therefore has this kingdom set up in his heart, and the throne, the seat of Christ, set up therein.

Now each child of God has two natures, the one carnal, the other divine, and these natures answer to the two covenants, one from Mt. Sinai, and the other from Mt. Zion, or the lightnings and thunderings and voices are those from Sinai—the vigorous and fiery denunciation of that law which discovers, manifest and condemns sin in our mortal or carnal nature. And the seven lamps of fire are the perfections of God as revealed in and by Jesus Christ from Mt. Zion, and made manifest in the divine nature.

This vision is the experience of every one of God's people. They are continually being delivered unto death, and die daily, and still they ever live unto God. Like the burning bush they furnish so to speak, continual food for the fire and still are not in the least consumed. They are dead to the law by the body of Christ, and live unto God by Christ living in them through faith, and they see Jesus in the throne of his glory, and the Patriarchs and Apostles sitting on four and twenty seats, and before the throne is the sea of glass, the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets. Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. And from the beginning, or in the Spirit they enter the opened door, into the kingdom in the blessed experience and fellowship of the saints, and feast upon the promises and fatness of the gospel kingdom of our God. It seems to me that this vision is brought to pass now in this—the gospel day in the church. Day by day we feel ourselves to be sinners, and at times feel our sins forgiven. The love of God which I think is represented by fire, has in it all the attributes of God, and covers, or consumes our sins. Our God is a consuming fire.

P. G. L.

Brother F. E. Kelsey of Kansas. requests my view of 1st John 3 : 6—11.

Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not ; whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

Little children, let no man deceive you : he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

He that committeth sin is of the devil ; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin for his seed remaineth in him ; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil ; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

This is a very important question to one who feels that he is a sinner, and to whom it appears that there is nothing good in his flesh. For this scripture says that whosoever sinneth hath not seen Jesus, but is of the devil ; and that whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin. Here then is the widest separation between two classes ; one is of the devil and commits sin, the other is of God and does not commit any sin, neither can sin because he is born of God.

No wonder that the child of God is perplexed in his own case, for he believes that whatsoever is born of God does not commit sin, nor can commit sin, because he is born of incorruptible seed. But seeing so much sin in himself and in his own conduct, he trembles : fearing that he is not born of God and often feels that it would be presumption in him to even claim to be a christian. Hence there is such a need of the encouraging and gracious promises of the word of God to these trembling ones.

The child of God knows that in Jesus there is no sin, nor any death, because Jesus is from heaven, and was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin. But while the self-righteous man is ready to say he is no sinner, and keeps the commands of Jesus, the child of God dares not of himself say that he himself is not a sinner.

Sin is the transgression of the law. Jesus is the end of the law, and in Jesus the people of God are dead to the law by the body of Christ—his death or obedience unto death. So that in him we are free from sin. As Jesus is free from sin so his people in him are free from sin. He therefore that abideth in Jesus sinneth not. He that doeth righteousness is righteous even as Jesus is righteous.

Whoever doeth righteousness is born of God. Then there is no righteousness but in Jesus, and nothing but sin when one is not in him.

How do we know that we are in him, or born of him? He that loveth his brother, or that loveth is born, of God, for God is love. We love those that are of God, if we ourselves are of God. This is an infallible sign. We love those that love the doctrine of Christ. They are dear to us. Love is the fulfilling of the law. The freedom of the child of God in Christ Jesus is seen only by faith. As we see Jesus and abide in him we know there is now no condemnation. We walk by faith not by sight. It is an easy matter to go along in the flesh, or in man's righteousness if one is not born of God. There is then no death or burden; but who can of himself walk by faith? This involves a great fight, but a good fight. Hence Paul says, "Fight the good fight of faith. All our sin and sorrow, corruption and death is in the flesh. No wonder then that the child of God should groan within himself being burdened: still he knows that whatsoever is born of God doth not commit sin. Yet there is not a man that liveth and signeth not. By that is meant that there is not one born of Adam, or of the flesh, but what sins. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, but that which is born of the spirit is Spirit."

The devil sinneth from the beginning; he never was anything else but a devil or is a liar and the father of it. So those who are of him sin from the beginning. Jesus was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and in him is no sin. He destroys the works of the devil in his people, and hence those that abide in him sin not.

P. D. G.

"He that despiseth his neighbor sinneth: but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he."

ELDER P. D. GOLD,—I see in the LANDMARK of June, '87, No. 14, Page 332, the following language, "It is by revelation that the scriptures are understood." I wish more light as to the sense in which the term 'revelation,' is used. Am I to understand by the term a direct communication from the Holy Spirit to the heart of the creature independent of the written word; and all other human agency whatever? Is the written word a factor in the matter of understanding the Scriptures, or not? Any information upon the subject will be acceptable to one who desires to know and follow the truth only.

A. BAPTIST.

Remarks.

Old holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost: 2nd Peter, 1 : 21 ; for prophecy came not in old time by the will of man.

"Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures;" Luke, 24 : 45. The above is sufficient to teach that man's natural, carnal mind does not understand the scriptures, as it does men's productions. For the Scriptures were not given, or were not written, as the natural productions of men. Also because even the disciples could not understand the scriptures, until their understanding was opened.

The natural productions of man may be understood by man because one man is the equal of another, or because both are men. But can the natural, carnal mind of man understand Deity?

It is by the Holy Ghost that we say Jesus is Lord. Jesus sent the comforter in his name, which should guide the people of God into all truth; and no man can say that Jesus is Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

When the Holy Ghost comes in the name of Jesus he brings what Jesus has said to remembrance. He is not to teach a new doctrine, or what Jesus did not teach : but that he is to bring to remembrance what Jesus has already said. We have the written world in the bible. People may memorize that word, or hear it expounded by others, yet it is not understood and felt in its glorious power unless sealed there by the Spirit of God, or unless the mind or understanding of man is opened to attend to the things spoken. It is the man that needs teaching.

Understandest thou what thou readest? Why did Philip ask this question? Because he knew that natural men could not understand the scriptures. When the Eunuch said, how can I except some man guide me, he gave to Philip good evidence that he was a subject of grace, and was then being taught of God. For one of the results of quickening is to slow a man that he cannot of himself understand the scriptures.

"Is the written word a factor in the matter of understanding scriptures or not? The written word or scripture is the matter to be understood. When understanding is given to one, it is to understand this written word. The written word then cannot be that which enables a man to understand itself. We need a spiritual mind to understand spiritual things.

It is not said that the scriptures or written word quickens dead sinners. It is the spirit that quickens. Nor is it said that the spirit quickens sinners by the written word. But when one is quickened it is according to the word, or it brings him into harmony with the word, or to know that it is true, and to desire to keep the word of God.

Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus has come in the flesh is of God. Every one that is quickened by the Spirit of God will acknowledge the truth of the scriptures. We do not believe there is any new revelation made to one to whom salvation is given, but that it is God's way of showing them his salvation. They have a new understanding—a first view—and to them a new view of the Lord Jesus. Old things are passed away to them, and behold all things are become new. God hath hid these things from the wise and prudent, but hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God. These things are freely given unto us by his Spirit. Revelation is not giving new Scripture, or other scripture that was not given before, nor changing any scripture; but it opens the eyes of our understanding so that we see the scriptures in their true meaning. The man is enlightened, or the light shines in us so that we see the scriptures as we never saw them before.

A child of God knows by experience that this is true. We know that when a scripture is opened and its rich and precious contents flow out, there is a glory unfolded or revealed we knew not of before. Further we know that we must be in the spirit, or under the control of a spiritual mind, to perceive these divine things.

DYSPEPSIA.

Brother Wesley Walker, of Springfield, Ala. writes for the benefit of Elder Lee Hanks and others, who are suffering with Dyspepsia.

He says it seldom fails.

Take the leaves of Featherfew dried, Yellow Poplar bark, Star or Grub root. (It has a little green, slick leaf, lies flat on the ground in winter. The root is about 3-4 of one inch long, and it resembles a grub-worm and is very bitter.)

Also Anvil dust.

Dry it in the shade, Pulverize all to a dust. Let it all make 4 table-spoonful. Mix well with honey. Dose, 1 teaspoonful before each meal well stirred from the bottom. If the patient is very weak lessen the dose for awhile.

Brother Walker says his days are nearly over, and he wishes to publish this for the benefit of suffering humanity.

Obituary.

MRS. ELIZA A. MEWBORN.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I send you for publication in the LANDMARK the obituary of Mrs. Eliza A. wife of Walter D. Mewborn. She was the daughter of Thos. and Eliza Dawson; was born in Lenoir county, N. C., Sept. 6, 1862; married November 16th, 1881, and died at her home in Green county, North Carolina, November 7, 1887. She was the mother of three children—two of whom having preceded her to the grave. She left a loving husband, one child, and numerous relations and friends to mourn her death; but while we mourn over her absence from this world, we should bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well, and say, sleep on loved one, believing that she is released from toil and pain, while we are left to mourn and grieve at the departure of our loved one, as well as at our own sinful and depraved natures.

The deceased was not a member of any denomination at the time of her death.—She had been a member of the Free-will Baptist church, but feeling her unworthiness, she requested her name to be erased.

I think, from the many conversations that I have had with her on the subject of religion, that she believed in salvation by grace. Although she did not understand the doctrine advocated by the Primitive Baptists, I have a reason to hope that she had been renewed by grace, but of this she had never made any acknowledgment that I know of.

I also send you a vision that I had of the subject of the preceding memoir:

On the night of the 11th, after she had died on the 7th, about the same time of night (she died about 11 o'clock,) I was lying awake meditating, when I seemed to be dreaming, and at the graveyard in which she was buried. Standing over the right-hand side of the coffin I saw her youngest brother, Mr. J. T. Dawson, step up to the foot of the coffin and go around on the opposite side, stopping in front of me, when the foot end of the side piece dropped to the ground, the pieces of the head end remaining in their places. I saw the inside of the coffin which looked very dark, and what should have been her body looked more like a dark log. Just then I heard a voice at the head of the coffin saying: My spirit, my spirit is ascending to a world of bliss. I said: Lord, Lord, show me Lidie's spirit (she was called Lidie), and I saw something like white smoke or steam ascending above the coffin and a shadow ascending in it. I commenced crying and turned to leave when I said, why is it I could not cry when she died, nor while she was a corpse, nor at the burial, and am crying now? I heard a voice saying: You are rejoicing in the pleasing view of meeting her on high. Here I came to myself and was really crying, and did rejoice and do still rejoice over it at times.

PATTY PARISH.

ELDER GOLD:—Please publish in the LANDMARK the death of my beloved grand mother, Patty Parish. She was born March 16th, 1796, and died September 14th, 1887, making her stay on earth ninety one years, five months and twenty-eight days. She had been a sufferer at times, for many years, with her heart. A few weeks before she died she was confined to her bed, and was visited every day by her relatives and friends.

She had a stoppage in her speech which gave her much trouble at times, until about one month before she died when she was blessed to speak and talk without a stammering tongue. My grand-mother gave birth to fourteen children, nine of whom lived to be grown—three girls and six boys. At her death she had seventy-two grand children. Her husband had been dead for many years, but she always loved to live at home and keep louse by herself. She was a lively and hard-working old woman, although she could have lived without it, but her motto was to work, and to bring her children up to do the same.

A few years before she died her children persuaded her to stop keeping house and live with them. She did so and was living with her son, James Parish, when she died. She had never made any profession of religion at all, but in belief she was a Primitive Baptist. She loved to hear the Elders and brethren talk and tell their experience in grace, and sing good songs. A few weeks before she died she chanced to be in a conversation with Elder J. A. T. Jones, which gave her much relief.

She was a kind-hearted, peace-making woman, which makes us think that she has gone where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. Just before she died she said to all around her that she had made peace with her Saviour. She was loved by all who knew her. Her funeral was preached by Elder J. A. T. Jones at Fellowship, on the fifth Sunday in January, 1888, and was attended by a large congregation. We believe that our friend calmly, without a struggle, fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, who will lead her into living fountains of water, and God himself has wiped all tears from her eyes. "Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, but thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Leachburg, Johnston Co., N. C.,

NANCY BRANSCOME.

Mrs. Nancy Branscome was born 1811 and died Feb. 6th, 1888, aged 77 years. She was married in early life to Mr. Herbert Branscome, with whom she lived until they were separated by death. They raised thirteen children—six boys and seven girls. They have one hundred and nine grand-children and fifty-nine great-grand children, and some of the great-grand children have gone from time to eternity.

Grand-mother was taken sick January 6th, 1888. Medical aid was summoned, but human skill and wisdom all failed—death had come for her and none could stay his hand. How much she suffered for thirty-one long days and nights, tongue nor pen can ever tell; but just as the rising sun, on the 6th of Feb. 1888, began to dispel the darkness of night, God, in his tender mercy released her from her pain. And then she went away, yes away from sorrow, sickness, and pain and death.

I visited her in a short time after she was first taken sick. She was praising the blessed name of Jesus.

Tuesday before she died she called her husband and told him where she wished to be buried. Then she asked them all to try to meet her in heaven. She asked her youngest son to be a good boy and try to meet her above. Her daughter then asked her if she was willing to go. She answered: "Yes, I don't want to live any longer in this troublesome world." She seemed desirous to be released from her sufferings, and instead of wanting to stay here she desired to go to that promised rest, and would say: "O, that I could go." Just as she was passing from time to eternity she said, with uplifted hands, "Lord, take me, take me up on high, take me up yonder!" These words brought to our mind the language of Paul: "O death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory." We submit to the will of God.

T. P. BRANSCOME.

H Y M N AND T U N E B O O K. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels constive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, &c.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

Poetry.

IN THE LORD HAVE I RIGHTEOUS-NESS.

By acts of righteousness
Wrought in eternal love,
We stand and testify, this grace
Is sent down from above.

It is by righteousness
We're owned the sons of God.
Not of our own, we must confess
'Tis wrought in Jesus' blood.

Jesus, the gift of God,
The Lord our righteousness ;
Wherein we stand through fire and flood ;
Nor fall for want of grace.

The Lord our righteousness,
Our Advocate on high,
Thy name our every thoughts surpass,
We know, we cannot die.

In every state secure,
Kept by Jehovah's eye.
Soon we shall reach the all things pure.
Eternal joys on high.

There ever from the skies.
This song shall be our theme,
Jesus, our Advocate to bless,
Thy righteousness is mine.

COMMUNICATED.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD :-Sister E. Irene Freeman of Onslow County, requests me to write for the LANDMARK on Proverbs 9 : 1, "Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars," and I will try to comply and may continue the subject a few verses.

The scripture quoted above perfectly explodes the idea that we can do anything to assist the Lord in the bringing in of his children. The work is already done in the wisdom of God. Wisdom hath decreed the size and shape of her house and has chosen the material necessary to build it; and in wisdom's eye it stands ready completed, just as it will be when all the saints are gathered home and glorified. In the first place she hath laid the foundation here represented as "seven pillars," representing to my mind the seven divine spirits or perfection of God. See Zach. 3:9 and 4:10, Rev. 1:4, 3:1, 4:5 and 5:6. It pleased the Lord God to lay a sure foundation for his church. The foundation must be good or all the work will come to naught. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." Isa. 29:16.

See also Gen. 49:24, and Ps. 118:22, and Matthew 21:42, Acts. 4:11, Rom. 9:33, 1 Peter 2:6, 7, 8. The church is not built on the apostles and prophets but upon their foundation. "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." The Lord Jesus is this foundation and he was tried and found able to stand. All the powers of hell and earth were brought to bear on him at one time and that in the time of his greatest weakness and when he was forsaken by all men, even His disciples and the God head: he was left to tread the wine-press alone, and of men there was none with him and in this hour of darkness and desertion he slew the mighty foe, bruising the head of satan and conquering every foe of the church, he yielded up his life for the sheep and then took it up again and remains the tried and sure foundation of the church in spite of all the host of hell with all their equipments for war. Where else could a child of God stand? nowhere, for he only has conquered all their foes. All the powers of God were in him. Here are the "seven pillars" that wisdom hath hewn out, upon which the church stands a wonderful monument of his mercy.

The house which wisdom has builded is of chosen, precious material. Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priest-hood, &c. 1 Peter 2: 5. Every piece of timber is a lively stone, receiving its life directly from the foundation upon which it stands. The house of the Lord, which Solomon built in Jerusafem, is a fit emblem or figure of this spiritual house. The timbers were all chosen and prepared in the wilderness and the workmanship was so perfect that when the house was to be raised up there was not the sound of an iron tool heard. Even so the work of wisdom, in preparing the timbers of this spiritual house is so perfect that our sins and everything that opposeth God, every knot and crooked place that is not fit for this holy temple of the most high God is taken away here in this wilderness. Our sins are open beforehand and go before to judgment and are consumed and therefore cannot rise against us in the final end. The timbers will so completely fit that it shall be a city compacted together and will therefore be entirely impenetrable. Oh what a glorious work the Lord in his wisdom has done for his simple poor. The rich in worldly righteousness can never enter there.

In this house a glorious feast is prepared and all the children shall eat of it for it is their inheritance. Verse 2, "She hath killed her beast: she hath mingled her wine. she hath also furnished her table." What a glorious preparation wisdom hath made for her children: not one of them shall perish. There is food enough for them all, and it is of that nature that it never diminishes. There is just as much now as there was the first time that Able was brought to the table. The Lord's children all eat at the same table and of the same food. What is food for one is food for the whole family, so that they all grow up in the same strength. This beast that wisdom has killed is the Lord Jesus Christ who was slain for us; his body was broken for us for our sins. He said my flesh is the bread that I will give and except you eat my flesh and drink my blood you have no life in you. He was slain by wicked hands, yet they only did what God had before determined to be done. He said I lay down my life of myself and of myself I take it up again. Therefore it was of his own accord that he died and lives again. He was high priest and sacrifice, and offered himself, through the eternal Spirit, a sacrifice for sin and his sacrifice was acceptable to God, for it was without spot. His whole life was spotless and pure and it was a perfect sacrifice for those whom he loved, and now they eat his flesh (the beast which wisdom has killed) and drink his blood (the wine which she has mingled) and have life thereby and shall never die. In this way the eternal life which he has given to them is maintained so that they shall never perish. But what class is it that shall eat and live? Verse 4. "Whoso is simple let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him, (Verse 5) Come eat of my bread and drink of the wine which I have mingled.

This is not the voice of man but the voice of Wisdom, the same that built the house, and killed the beast, and mingled the wine; she now crieth inviting the simple and he that wanteth understanding to come. A house is prepared for them, not only built but thoroughly furnished with everything necessary for their support. The wise and selfrighteous are not invited and there is no place prepared for them in this house; only the simple, those who are entirely dependant on grace for salvation and who need to be guided by the Holy Spirit to keep them in the way to heaven and happiness, these are invited to come, and eat, and drink, and live. Wisdom makes no mistakes, she invites no one else but the simple and will not leave one of them out. What a glorious gospel is this, making full provision for the poor and sending the rich empty away. There is perfect equality in this house. Job had to be shown his depravity and Manassah turned from his wickedness and Paul of Tarsus converted from his selfrighteous phariseism and all brought down on a perfect equality, that is, to feel their entire dependance on the Lord and to cry to him for his mercy before they could enter in as guests, yea, heirs to this blessed feast. Another beautiful feature of this bread is that it is never given to dogs. Jesus says it is not meat to give to the dogs. Why! because it is the children's bread. Therefore if any have eaten of this bread, even though it be ever so small a crumb, it is evident that he is a child and that the whole inheritance is his also, for if children the heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. All the gospel promises are given to this same class therefore if we have found one gospel promise suitable to our case it is evident that we are the children of God and that all this wonderful preparation is for us, and that the voice of wisdom is speaking to us and bidding us to come and eat and drink and live forever, Brother Gold I have hastily and scatteringly sketched over the subject and now I submit it to your judgment and if published I hope that sister Freeman may be able to receive some comfort from it and may all the praise be unto him who hath called us. Your brother in hope.

EXPERIENCE.

ELD. GOLD, DEAR FRIEND:—I have been impressed for some time to write a sketch of the dealings of the Lord with me. As it gives me so much pleasure to read the experience of others, some might be interested in what I might write. I trust I obtained a hope in Christ in 1873. I joined the Missionaries in 1876, enjoyed untold happiness for awhile, thinking I had at last had grace sufficient to join the people of God. But I was not to remain so. In about a year or so I began to compare my experience with free-will doctrine, and it did not at all compare with my feeling. So I concluded, it must be wrong, as I could not be interested in their institutions. Oh how hard I tried to be reconciled to their doctrines, and the more I read the bible the farther I was from them. The 9th chapter of Romans perplexed me most of all. So I invited our Pastor home with us from church. He came, I asked him to please explain it to me. It was not my object to gain the mystery, but thought he might give me consolation. He very readily agreed, and I tried to be satisfied with his explanation, but it did not satisfy me as well as the illustration he made. He compared me to a little boy, that his father gave an ax, and told him to go and cut a small sapling and bring it to him. He was gone sometime and his father went to see about him, and he had undertaken a large oak, consequently could not do anything with it. So I must read what I could understand and not bother with what was too deep for me. I was not entirely satisfied but determined in my own mind to take his advice.

Not long after this I visited one of my neighbors. She had a copy of the LANDMARK that had Mr. Bird Jennings experience in it. She asked me to read it for her. This was the first copy of your paper I ever saw: (and let me say here up to this time I don't remember that I had ever heard a Primitive Baptist preach, though at that time I was 27 years old.) I read your paper and was perfectly delighted with the doctrine it sets forth. I made it convenient to go often and see her and read the paper. She just borrowed it, and I had not been long moved to the neighborhood, and was not acquainted with the people that took the paper. But the next fall (1879) I went to the house of the family that took the paper. I borrowed several copies, and the life of R. Anna Philips. I read a little and then sent them all home, thinking I ought not to be led about by what I read, but be zealous in the church which I belonged to. That same fall we moved to where we now live.

I attended regular to my church meetings, but the more I went the worse I felt. Oh that aching void this world can never fill. After living here a year, a family, Mr. Henry Dodson moved near us that took your paper, I can't help thinking, your paper was thrown in my way. I had decided not to have anything more to do with your paper, but I just ventured to borrow one to look over: next I would get two, and so on until I got to be a regular reader of it, and finally I concluded it was the greatest source of comfort I had, and in 1883 I subscribed for it myself. But my flesh held on to the Missionaries until last April, and it seemed to me I was compelled to leave them, and have ever since remained out of any church, but oh how I do wish I was good enough to join the dear old Primitive Baptists. Since I left the Missionaries I have enjoyed religion as much as it is possible for one in a state of constant sin. I feel to be the chief of sinners, though I don't feel that burden of condemnation like I used to. Oh how prone to sin I am. I feel like if I was not kept by the power of God there is no telling how far in sin I might go. The most pleasure I have is in reading the LANDMARK. How I do love the doctrine it declares, and I do wish that every child of God could read it and enjoy it as I do. I was speaking to a Missionary preacher, not long before I left them, on the subject of doctrine. He told me of some having religion in the head than in the heart. Oh how it struck me as it had been so long since I enjoyed religion as I wanted to, but I now have seasons of rejoicing, thanks be to his holy name. I hardly pass a day without his holy presence, but I never had any real pleasure until I left the Missionaries, but after all my enjoyment I sometimes feel tired of this sinful life and feel to say,

I would not live always, thus fettered by sin, Temptations without and corruptions within.
Even the rapture of pardon is mingle with fears,
And the cup of thanksgiving, with penitent tears.

Mr. Gold after reading and correcting misspelled words, publish if you think it fit: if not throw it away. I feel that I was actuated by a spirit of good-will in writing it. I hope the preachers will visit us in the fullness of the blessing. Nothing would afford me more pleasure. I live near Elvin Creek church. I can't close without asking you all as often as you can, to remember me in your prayers. Your Friend in the body of christian love. M. H. Wilson.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER
—It is with much fear, weakness and trembling, that I take my pen in hand to attempt to write a few lines for publication in your paper, and while I endeavor to write, I humbly hope and trust to be guided by the spirit of Almighty God. If not deceived, I feel much impressed to write, and in the language of the Psalmist David will say, "Come all ye that love and fear the Lord, and I will tell you what (I hope) He has done for my soul. Brother Gold I have never felt impressed to write my experience, until recently, although my name has been with the Baptists nearly five years. Feeling no impression, I never thought I would have this to do; besides when comparing my little experience with the brethren and sisters whom I had heard express themselves, I was oftentimes made to feel that I had none at all. Mine seemed to be different from all others. I never felt that the hand of the Lord was laid as heavy on me as I deserved. About two years ago, I was reading a sisters' experience in the LANDMARK, which gave me more comfort than any I had ever read; her travel, trouble, and deliverance being more like mine, than any I had ever heard expressed, or had the pleasure of reading, my first thought was, surely she is a christian. I greatly rejoiced, and felt that the little way of glimmering hope that had for some time seemed so nearly extinguished, was revived, and for a short while burned with brilliant lustre. Soon after reading that piece, these thoughts came to my mind. You have found an experience which very much coincides with yours; you have been comforted; you have rejoiced; why not write yours? Perhaps it would comfort at least one of God's dear children. No, no, I said, the authoress of that piece is, I believe, a christian, I fear I am not. No, I cannot give a reason of my little hope thro' the LANDMARK, I do not feel that I am required to do this; but let me suggest as I would, these thoughts have followed me at intervals ever since, and the present week, if not deceived, have been heavily burdened with it. I have heard the dear children of God while journeying through this vale of tears, often speak of their impression to write, what a bitter trial and cross it was, and what a burden they labored under. Now not having a burden of that nature, I could not experimentally sympathize, yet I believed with my whole heart they were burdened, but saw no reason why they should be, believing as I did that it was the will and purpose of the Lord, and they ought and should without hesitation obey. None were more ready than I to obey the impressions sent upon me. I then felt if I were impressed to write, I would readily comply. See how the blessed Lord deals with his children; they are continually being brought in ways they knew not. Surely our ways are not his ways, for now while being brought to to the test, none are more ready to shrink from the task than I, fearing it is not of him who hath said—my people shall be willing in the day of my power.

Brother Gold I feel that I have widely digressed from the subject in view, but could not feel satisfied without first telling you why I was made willing to attempt to write especially when I had considered it such a small matter for others. Now when I realize, as I hope I do, the force of that burden, it seems a great mountain, whose precipitous height I feel too weak to essay to climb. It was in the Spring of '82, when it pleased the Lord in his goodness and mercy to open the blind eyes of my dear husband, and I, although a poor sinner, dead in trespasses and sins, rejoiced. I fully believed it was the effectual working of the Spirit of Almighty God, leading him from nature's night of darkness, and bringing him into the glorious light of the gospel.

I had never read the bible very much but well remembered this passage of scripture. When the Lord began a good work he would perform it. Now I believe he had begun the work, and in his own appointed time he would perfect it; so when my dear husband (with many doubts and fears concerning his acceptance in the well-beloved Son of God) entered the water for baptism, I thought surely he is a christian, a true child of God. Brother Gold I have often been made to wonder why I at that time felt thus, knowing that I was an alien from God and a stranger to grace, and would oftentimes say, had I never believed in the Baptists, I should now have to say there is a reality in their religion. I never in my life believed as the Arminians; that one could get religion when they chose. I believed a person had to be convicted of sin by the Spirit of God, but thought by trying to pray, doing the best they could in every way, that the Lord would be under some obligations to save them. It is useless for me to tell you how, during the eight months of my husband's conviction, I labored to obtain religion. Suffice it to say at the expiration of that time I was as far from accomplishing the desired end, as at first I believed that without conviction and conversion there was no true religion, and as I could not convince myself of sin, my pharisaical prayers, and good works had availed me nothing. On Monday after the second Sunday in August '82, a crowd assembled at the water to witness the baptism of a sister. The door was opened for the reception of members, when my dear husband with two others offered, and was received. In relating his experience he spoke of a dream in which he had been commanded to give up home, family and everything that he possessed to follow the Saviour. Brother John A. Williams who performed the ceremony of baptism spoke and said, You have left your family, brother, if they are not with you.

Brother Gold, that was a great sermon to me, it seemed to bring trouble to my heart; and I cried, as I hope with earnestness of soul, Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner. I realized with full force the separation. He was not of the world, while I, a poor sinful worm of the dust did not feel worthy to call him my husband. Here, if not deceived by it all, my trouble began. I went from day to day with a troubled, restless, discontented feeling, but with a heart begging for mercy. All through the day, yes through the darksome hours of night (when awake) my cry was: Lord have mercy on me, Lord be merciful to me, a sinner. I still had a faint hope that by my continual pleading the Lord would surely have compassion on me, but was in this way made to give up that. I was in feeble health, and was lying on my bed, when this command seemed to come with force: Open thou thy heart, and let the Saviour come in. Oh my helplessness, my inability to do. I said: Lord, I cannot, open it thou for me. Here I gave up all hope of self in the case, but still continued to plead for mercy. I had no thought that it was conviction—(am afraid until yet it was not)—and would often say: Lord, what is the matter with me? I was afflicted, troubled, distressed, and knew not the cause. This song would often come to to my mind: "Afflictions though they seem severe, in mercy of't are sent."

Thus I continued until February '83, when I hope the Saviour was revealed to me; the chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. It was on Monday following the usual meeting time at Red Banks. It was a dark and gloomy day to me. I was sitting by my window when a little bird alighted on a tree near by. I thought, Oh if I were as this little bird that had no future being. I commenced again to try to pray unto the Lord. All I said I know not, but well remember feeling to cast myself on his mercy, and could say with the poet:

"That if my soul is sent to hell,
Thy righteous law approves it well!"

I arose and threw myself across the bed, covering my head to prevent my husband and daughter (who were present) from noticing me. As I lay down these words came to my mind: "Trust in God, trust in him for that love and faith which he has given you. Lord, I cried, Couldst thou have been so merciful?—Again, the words: Trust in God and question not the power and will of the Almighty, for 'he that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out,' "blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." I felt that I could call this promise mine. Surely, surely I had been made to hunger and thirst after righteousness. I was made to praise the Lord and exclaim: Praise the Lord all ye nations, praise him all ye people. The next lines that came to my mind were:

"Then will I tell to sinners round
What a dear Saviour I have found."

O! brother Gold, I felt that I had found him. It seemed to me I could feel my soul leap to him. I cannot express what I then felt, for tongue cannot express the sweet comfort and peace of a soul in its earliest love. I arose from my bed and felt that I wanted to sing. I opened the book at this hymn:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
My spirit doth rejoice."

I sang it through once, then turned and sang it again. It seemed that every verse fitted my feelings. I felt that I wanted to extend my voice to the very heavens. I remained in this state until the next day, not doubting my deliverance; but soon these thoughts arose in my mind: You are deceived, you have imagined it all.—Lord, I cried, I am deceived, how could I dare hope in thy mercy? If I am deceived I pray thee in the name of thy dear Son, undeceive me. O Lord, be pleased to show me more plainly. I was comforted by these words. What more can he say than to you he hath said? I would receive comfort from these words: Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. This would greatly build me up for a short time, but doubts and fears would soon arise and bring me low; yes, bringing me in a state in which I believe it is good for the children of God to remain most of their time, and one in which I find myself in more than any other.

I fear too be to hasty in offering to the church, baptism being impressed on my mind soon after my deliverance, (if I have been delivered at all) I offered to the church on Saturday before the second Sunday in May; related a portion of what have here written, and received and baptized by brother John A. Williams on Sunday. I sometimes feel that I have never regreted it, then again I greatly fear I am deceived, and have also deceived those whom I believe to be the saints of God, and think perhaps it would have been better had I remained as I was. Then again I think, it would be better for me to take my name from among them; but the words of Peter—Lord to whom shall we go, Thou hast the words of eternal life, come with joy to any doubting and troubled heart, and I can then say as did Ruth to Naomi, here let me stay; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Brother Gold, I must soon close my imperfect scribble, for I feel that I have already wearied your patience, should you think enough of it to give it a perusal. I remain your unworthy sister (I hope) in Christ.

JANE E. HARDEE.

ences of others I feel impressed to write you something in that line. I have often been tempest tossed, have had doubts and fears, and many distresses and afflictions of one kind or another, and these things themselves yield me some evidences on the way that enables me to feel that I am one of the afflicted and poor who should trust in the name of the Lord.

I often feel: Has any one sorrow like my sorrow? does any one ever feel as despondent and ready to give up? do any have any such misgivings as I have? have any ever been troubled with evil thoughts and yet profess to be one of the Lord's people? It seems that it is too great a profession for such a one as I.

Not long since I was upon my bed at night, and I had been called to the care of a church, and I began to meditate upon it when I saw my nothingness so plain that it seemed it would be presumption on my part to accept the call. I could only be reconciled on the ground that the Lord not only took care of his people as a church but also took care of his ministers and would give grace for our day, and that as our day was, so should our strength be.

I had similar feelings last summer when I had authorized brethren to arrange appointments for me for 60 days. I declined going and wished them called in, and was about to countermand them when I was upheld to realize that I was but a worm and was nothing, but the Lord is mighty and could thresh a mountain with a worm. And I was revived and so encouraged that I was then made willing to go, and I went. I tried to preach eighty times. I visited many precious brethren and sisters in Christ. I traveled over 1200 miles, and felt that it was a blessing to me to be able to go and meet with the saints. I felt then I would never be distrustful but would rely on the Lord from henceforth. But alas! the Spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. I have passed through some fiery ordeals and have had some seasons of barrenness that seemed at the time

ELDER P. D. GOLD,—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—The LANDMARK comes to me as usual with comfort and instruction which I hail as a welcome messenger of truth. I notice that you ask all who feel impressed, to write for the paper. I have felt an impression to write you for some time but have neglected it until now, having been so often comforted by the written experi-almost incurable, but thank the Lord at this writing I can still trust. The darkness now is so great I truly can say: mixtures of joy and sorrow I daily do pass through. The Lord only can deliver us from our sorrows and distresses and bring us out of straits where we can say: I have "a goodly heritage."— I can truly realize what the poet says:

"Grace taught my soul to pray,
And made mine eyes overflow ;
'Twas grace that kept me to this day
And will not let me go.

I am fully satisfied that it is all of grace. "By grace are ye saved through faith and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Grace saves and preserves. We can truly say:

Nothing in my hands I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling.

How strange that any should think otherwise. Alas! poor blind mortals see not the way of the Lord.

At times I have had sweet seasons of unmingled joy, but they would pass away and the soul would be wrapt in dreary, barren winter time, and then it would seem that we were mistaken in it all. We could not relish a promise, but all would seem to have been but a dream. Winter is needful for us, for it is then we grow to the rock of our hope, into which we are more firmly grounded for the next storm of adversity. How often do the saints go to meeting feeling these great fears and troubles rise upon them, and God in his mercy has a message for them in his word; and the servant Elder arises and announces his text "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God," and ere he is through, the heart springs forth in rapturous praise to him who has fought the battle, won the victory and ascended far above all principality at the right-hand, as a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel. They exclaim in joy: "He hath done all things well." Here indeed he makes the blind see, the lame walk, and the dead live.

How often, yea we may safely say, that God always prepares the messenger and the hearer, and they both have every reason to praise his name for his wonderful works to the children of men. "The Lord is good, his mercy endureth forever."

Sometime ago the thought came to me about glorifying Christ our Lord.— They were precious moments to me, and I dared not say I would glorify him, but I really desired that the Lord would so use me to his own glory, whether it would be by life or death.— The Lord has formed a people for himself, and he says they shall show forth his praise. They are said to be a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation that they should show forth his praise, who has called them from darkness to light.

Again, Paul says: He (Christ) gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." How many precious promises there are in the word of God to his children who are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. We live so far below the blessed privileges given us by the Great Head of the church. He has exalted his people above the world and given them peculiar blessings that the world knoweth not, because it knew him not. The fact that his church is the only secret society in the world is a clear truth to all his children for they as members, have a white stone and a name written within which none can read save he that hath it.

The church of God is hidden from the world. They do not understand its foundation, nor its internal work, nor the secrets of its joints nor bands.

When Christ was on earth he said he opened his mouth to them in parables that seeing they might see and not perceive, and hearing they might hear and not understand lest at any time they should be converted, and he would heal them; but to them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom. This glorious kingdom is grand and sublimely mysterious; this is the kingdom which should come; this is the kingdom which Jesus preached, the kingdom of God; this is the kingdom which the Psalmist said his people should talk of his kingdom and tell of his power. Who has a king like us? Who has such promises as us? Why then should we not rejoice in him all the day, and make our boast in the Lord and say he is our Lord and our strength, and our righteousness?—The King and the Lord of Lords, praise him. Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

AN OLD CIRCU! AR LETTER ON DISCIPLINE.

THE REEDY RIVER ASSOCIATION TO THE CHURCHES WHICH THEY REP-RESENT:—

DEAR BRETHREN,—The subject which we have to present to your view the present year, is, we think, of vital importance to the prosperity of the churches—Church Discipline. The institution of a church was wisely designed by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ for the increase of evangelical piety and the spread of the gospel. Believers need cultivation to strengthen and improve their graces, and prevent the growth of sinful and noxious propensities. In order to enjoy this cultivation, they must like plants be set out together in a field prepared for the purpose. The church is the field. It is the Lord's vineyard, plantation or garden. But to present this field or garden to the view, an object so interesting, as to reflect honor upon the possessor, it must not be neglected and suffered to be overcome with weeds and noxious plants. This however is the case when discipline is neglected. The fence or wall is thrown down, the plants are trampled under foot and the weeds take possession. How unsightly; but such it is feared is the appearance that too many churches present. Discipline is neglected. The members have ceased to watch over each other for good; practices are tolerated, which even mere moralists would be ashamed of, and when the church meets to transact its business, instead of the harmony and peace of the gospel, there is strife, "confusion and very evil work. No wonder the cause of God is not advancing, when such is the state of things. No wonder that gain-sayers and opposers laugh at the church and turn religion into ridicule.

In discussing the subject now presented to your view dear brethren, we shall first notice some prevalent mistakes into which we think some have fallen in relation to church discipline.

1st. It is a mistake to suppose an individual should not be excluded from the church, if his conduct deserves it, because his brethren esteem him a christian. Paul says (1st Cor. 5: 11), "If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one, no not to eat." Admitting the possibility of a child of God falling into gross and open sin as did David and Peter, yet who can tell, until such an one be reclaimed, that he may not be an apostate? But even if we could know to the contrary, yet it is evident, while unreclaimed, he is neither fit for heaven nor the fellowship of the church. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God, Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetors, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God.—When the children of God forsake his law and walk not in his judgments he will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes, and thus sooner or later reclaim them as sheep wandering from the fold.—Should not the church enter into this gracious design, and by taking their fellowship from the wandering brother endeavor the sooner to reclaim him? This is certainly a duty they owe both to him and the cause of God. By conniving at his sin, and retaining him in their fellowship, they contribute to lull his conscience to sleep and delay the needful work of repentance, as well as bringing disrepute upon the cause of God.

The individual mentioned, (1 Cor. 5 :

1) was probably a converted man, yet Paul requires his immediate exclusion. This act of the church had the desired effect, for we read in (2 Cor. 2:7). Paul's direction for his restoration.

2nd. Another mistake we shall notice is, that so long as an individual confesses his sin, the church is required to forgive him and continue their fellowship, however gross and frequent his crimes may have been. This mistaken notion has arisen from a misapplication of the Saviour's direction contained in Luke 17:4, "Take heed to yourselves; if thy brother trespass against thee rebuke him, and if he repent forgive him, and if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn and say, I repent, thou shalt forgive him." This is evidently a direction. Not for a church collectively in their dealings with their members, but for an individual christian in his conduct toward another who has offended him personally. No matter how often such offense is repeated, yet if the offender expresses his sorrow for it, he must be forgiven. The case however is very different when an individual is guilty of an act of gross immorality. In such a case we have a very plain direction what to do, in 1 Cor. 5:11. This perversion of scripture has been productive of sad effects in some of our churches. Individuals are retained in fellowship who are habitual drunkards. They come forward from time to time, confess their faults, and are forgiven. They go away, repeat the same fault, and still are forgiven. This confession too, not unfrequently, is not voluntary, but forced. They will not come to the church to confess, until called upon, and then probably endeavor to extenuate the offence as much as possible, laying the blame not so much upon themselves as the circumstances of the case. The day was cold or wet, they met with a friend who invited them to drink, they took only one or two drinks at most, and the effect was greater than was expected; but they were not so drunk as represented. Yet when even this lame confession is at length extorted, he must be forgiven according to this mistaken notion, however much his conduct is injuring the cause, and in direct opposition to the scriptural injunction—with drunkards, "no, not to eat." If this principle be received as correct, it will be impossible for any man to be excluded from the church however bad his conduct. Since such an one can always bring forward repentance, in arrest of judgment, when the church is about to proceed to extremities. Having noticed these mistakes we shall now proceed to lay down some scriptural rules that should govern us, dear brethren, in maintaining the good order and discipline of the church. Let the members of the church watch over each other for good, and admonish one another in private. This certainly is an important part of church discipline and if attended to in a proper spirit and at a suitable time, might save many a brother from going astray, and save the church much disagreeable and troublesome business.

Brethren, says James, if any of you do err, from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins. What an encouragement is here given to labor with an erring brother, when the very first step is taken aside from the path of virtue or of truth. Now is the time by affectionate admonition, to save him. Let him advance a few more steps and it may then be too late. This, then, is an important part of the discipline, devolving upon church members in their private and individual capacity. Some cases, however, require public reproof and admonition from the pastor of the church. Them that sin rebuke before all, that others may also fear, is the direction given by Paul to Timothy.— This may refer to cold and presumptuous mis-conduct, which at the same time may not amount to immorality of such a grade as to require exclusion from the church. Some, however, attempt to perform this duty of private admonition in such a spirit as to make it manifest that they are watching over the brother not for good, but evil, a spirit which says: Let me pull the mote out of thine eye, while a beam is in his own eye. Such admonition is calculated to do more harm than good. It is the same spirit which actuates some individuals who appear to be ever searching for the faults of their brethren and bringing them before the church, however trivial and unworthy of notice.—Churches are frequently more perplexed with such cases than any other. Let the individual who is actuated by such a spirit as this, receive no countenance from the church in his improper course. Let him rather be rebuked for his temper and conduct, and if this will not do let him be excluded, that the peace of the church may no longer be disturbed by one whose element is strife. Whatever may be the wealth, talent or influence of such an individual, the true character of his wisdom is given by James 3: 15. Where an offence is committed against an individual alone, which is merely of a private nature, it should never be brought to public view or submitted to the church until the course prescribed by the Saviour in Matthew 18: 15-22, has been faithfully pursued and failed of success. This rule is at once so plain and simple that the most ignorant may understand and practice it, and so wise and good that if it were universally followed out, according to its spirit we would have little difficulty, either in the church or in the world. "Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. If he shall hear thee thou hast gained thy brother." You are not to tell it first to your most intimate friend, for every friend has another friend to whom he may tell it in confidence, and thus it may spread and do much mischief. The wisdom of this course is obvious. By going to the offending brother immediately you will the sooner relieve your mind of unpleasant feelings, and give him an opportunity of explaining his conduct or confessing his fault. It may be there was no real ground of offence, a mere suspicion on your part. Some men are open and unguarded in their expressions; others are jealous and suspicious and often take offence when none is intended. Or it may be he has repented and is ready to acknowledge his fault. If he does so, thou hast gained thy brother. How much better this than by telling it to others, to run the hazard of ruining the character and alienate the affections, perhaps, forever, of one for whom the Saviour died.—The pride of the human heart however, often strongly opposed itself to this course. It suggests that the individual is not worthy of notice, perhaps not entitled to the character of a christian, and therefore not to be treated as such. It would be too great a condescension to go to him. If, however, the individual should happen to be of a superior rank, pride suggests that he should come to me. If I should go to him it will only make my inferiority appear more evident. But we should call to mind how the Saviour humbled himself—even stooped so low as to wash his disciple's feet. With such pride of heart we can never get to heaven.

If we have not the spirit of Christ, we are none of his. So long as an individual is retained in the church, whatever his rank, or unworthy soever his conduct, he is to be treated as a brother, and even if he were no christian, the course prescribed by the Saviour is the proper one to be pursued.

Let us glance at the consequences of pursuing an opposite course. A brother or sister takes an offence, perhaps at a mere trifle, treats another with coldness and contempt, and that even publicly; the individual who is thus treated being, all the while in total ignorance of the cause. What spirit is this? You are too haughty and high-minded to go to the individual, you wish him to humble himself to you, that you may gain the triumph. Is this the spirit of Christ? Take another case. An individual is offended. Instead of going directly to the offending brother or sister, he goes to every one else to make his complaint until the thing, with various additions, is spread through the whole community. The person accused is the last one that is informed of it, and now his feelings are greatly excited. The whole community is at length in an uproar, and the church is compelled to interfere in order to settle the difficulty, but now it is like putting out a fire that has spread through a thicket, that might have been extinguished in the first instance by a single foot now requires many hands, hard fighting; and it extinguished at all, before its work of desolation is completed, it is with difficulty and danger. Such are the consequences, dear brethren of not adhering to this excellent rule. We would further admonish you however, that it should not be complied with as a mere form, and only as a necessary step to get the matter introduced into the church. It should be with a sincere desire to 'gain your brother,' and prevent the difficulty from going any farther. If this work is attempted in any other spirit, it will only tend to make matters worse. The same desire should accompany the second step when the first has failed. But if he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more; that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. The individuals thus selected should be persons of prudence and judgment, and possess the confidence of both parties. They should hear all the circumstances, and use their influence to bring the offender to a sense of his fault. If however, they should fail in their efforts, the whole affair must then be reported to the church and these individuals act as witnesses, of what they know and have seen. This last step, however should be resorted to with reluctance, and not until every effort has failed, and all hope of reconciliation ceased. The offence then becomes of a public nature, and is to be treated as other public offences.

3rd. We shall next proceed to give some directions relative to the treatment of such offences as are of a public and scandalous nature. The most of these are enumerated by the Apostle in 1st. Cor. 5: 11. As a general rule they require immediate exclusion from the church, though in some instances there may be such extenuating circumstances as to justify the church in the exercise of forbearance and clemency.

A distinction must be made between bold and presumptuous sinning, and being "overtaken in a fault." A regard should be had also to the former character of the individual as uniformly orderly and correct, or otherwise. Experience also proves that an individual scarcely ever falls into open and gross immorality without first having secretly indulged in sin and slighted many warnings and admonitions from God. In regard to such offences, we remark it is unnecessary to treat them, after the same manner as private and personal offences; though in some cases it may be expedient to do so. In general, they should be brought before the church without delay. We are of the opinion that great injury is done to the cause of God by the dilatory course pursued by some churches in their dealings with such offences; The case must first be reported to the church at one monthly meeting; a committee must be appointed to cite the accused to attend the next monthly meeting, and so much unnecessary delay takes place, while in the meantime the cause of God is suffering from the conduct of the offender; It should be the duty of every transgressor to attend the very next meeting of the church; and his failing to do so should be considered an aggravation of his offence. If however, it be necessary for him to attend, as is sometimes the case where false reports have obtained or his conduct has been mis-represented, let the officers of the church as a standing committee, for this purpose cite him to attend at the first meeting that ensues. Cases may arise, however, where the offender should be proceeded against, whether he attends or not, where the offence committed has been public and notorious, and the facts of the case are too evident to be denied, it is only necessary for the church to be fully informed in relation to them, in order to exclude the offending individual the first opportunity. Such was the case which the Corinthian church was directed to pursue. In regard to the incestuous person referred to in 1. Cor: 5—1. We see no directions there for any citing or unnecessary delay; but on the Brother S. F Stone of Mo. requests my view of Absolute Predestination, and eternal vital Union.

There is no predestination that is conditional, no does the bible teach any conditional predestination; hence there is no need of the word absolute in defining predestination, nor does the bible use that word. As good brethren, as any use it in order to express better their meaning. Let them do this if they prefer, but I see no need of it.—The bible uses the best words, and we do well to hold fast a faithful form of some words.

While the predestination of God directly concerns the church of Jesus Christ, still it so much embraces and comprehends all events—whether righteous or wicked—that all things work together for good to them that love God, and who are the called according to his purpose: still the wickedness of man is condemned, and when men do wrong they are manifested to be guilty.

Our experience as well as the word of God teaches us that God abhors sin, and cannot do wrong.

But how could there be a conditional predestination? How could some contrary, a positive command for immediate exclusion. This command, as an inspired Apostle, he had a right to give; and the same is binding on us, in similar cases, in such instances, repentance should neither be called for, nor regarded so as to stay the proceedings of the church. There may be some public offences of a less aggravated nature, that admit of a more mild and conciliatory course; the design of which should be rather to reclaim than to exclude the individual. The individual is set aside from church privileges for a time, until by his conduct or repentance, he may regain the full confidence of his brethren which has been somewhat impaired. at the end of that time he must either be restored or finally expelled, as the circumstance of the case may require, an example of this sort is given in Second Thess. 3rd. Chapter, where the brother that walked disorderly; not walking at all, "was to be withdrawn from, but at the same time not counted as an enemy, but admonished as a brother." Other cases may arise, requiring similar treatment. We have thus, dear brethren, given you some general views; deduced, as we think from the word of God, in reference to this important subject. For more perfect information and directions we refer you to the scriptures, which are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness. We believe, if these are properly regarded, and the aid of the Holy Spirit carefully sought, you will be directed, in every case of difficulty that may arise. Thus will the church arise and shine, according to its original destination, and appear fair as the moon, clear as the sun and terrible as an army with banners. Consider these things dear brethren, and the Lord give you understanding in all things.

JOSEPH BABB, Mod.

THOMAS ROE, Clerk.

A wise son heareth his father's instruction: but a scorner heareth not rebuke.

things be fixed beforehand, and others not be fixed? Here we say it is certain that this thing will be, or that that event will transpire, but it is connected with other events, and it is not certain at all that those other events will occur. It is certain that Christ will be betrayed, but it is not certain that any one will betray him. It is certain that Israel will go into captivity, but it is not predestinated or it is not certain that Nebuchadnezzar will capture them. It is certain that Israel shall be afflicted in Egypt, but it is not certain that Pharaoh's heart will be hardened so that he shall oppress Israel. Now how could that be? Some brethren have said that I am non-committal, or silent on the subject of predestination. I admit that it is a precious doctrine, too deep and high for me to sound or fathom, and therefore little feeble ones like myself behave better to be silent than to be prating about what we cannot explain. God works all things according to the counsel of his will, and all things do not exclude any thing; but for me to tell how he does all this is a task I am not equal to. My counsel to all is to remember that all true Baptists are predestinarians, as the bible teaches that truth. Let us not strive about it.

It is very common for us to say of others that do not believe as we do, that they are not sound in the faith or are weak in the faith. That is as much as to say that we are sound in the faith, or strong in the faith. Whereas it occurs to me that these that are strong in the faith are the very ones that do bear, and should bear, with those that are weak in the faith. Perhaps it is not those that consider themselves strong in the faith that are so strong after all. Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

As to the other question of eternal vital Union. I have this to say, that such terms and words are not used in the bible, but that the doctrine meant to be taught by them namely, the Unity or oneness of Christ and his church, in the sense that he is their life and righteousness is true, and is taught in the scriptures, and that it is not a dead unity, but a vital unity in the sense that he is our life, and certainly it is vital or very important to us; and this unity existed before we were created in Adam, or before the foundation of the world, and therefore it is eternal. It is not a union, but unity.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

MR. P. D. GOLD.—Please give your views on Luke 12: 51—53 and oblige a friend who reads ZION'S LANDMARK. It contains about all the preaching I can hear that I understand, for I don't understand the Bible to say as vile a sinner as I am can commence to serve God within himself.

I feel that I can do nothing but say Lord, be merciful to me a sinner. Yours respectfully.
A FRIEND.

Remarks.

Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, nay; but rather division:

For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against the daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

The effect of the coming of Jesus in the flesh is to set one at variance with another, or to give division.

Since the days of the manifestation of Jesus there has been a division concerning him everywhere. Look around you and see if there is anything on earth about which men differ so much and so long.

People are either his friends cleaving fast unto him, or they are his enemies persecuting him and his followers. No man can serve two masters, and he that is not for Christ is against him.

Especially would I remark that every individual or subject of grace in whom Jesus dwells finds foes in his own house, or in himself, for with the mind he himself serves the law of God, but with the flesh he serves the law of sin in his numbers, and here is a warfare. As in the same house the father would be against the son, and the son against the father: and the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother: and the mother-in-law against the daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; or those the nearest tied together by blood kin would be riven asunder; so in the gospel where you thought you would find peace and love, there you found contention and war.

When you would do good evil is present. The good you would you do not: the evil you would not you do.— Oh you say, how can such an one as you be a christian? You do not see how you can be a child of God. Surely you thought christians were good people, free from sin, doubts, fear and trouble.

Jesus says, without me ye can do nothing: It is God's own people who are abased here in the flesh. Then you cannot of yourself commence to serve God. It is God that begun the good work in his people, both to will and to do.

The ungodly do not think as you do about that. Did you not once think that you were able of yourself to begin this work? Now you know—you cannot. There is no discharge in this war but it will continue through life. But the safest place is in the fight, or in the field following Jesus the Captain. For Paul says, I thank God through Jesus Christ my Lord. So take unto you the whole armor of God. Put on the shield of faith. Be baptized and deny your salvation.

P. D. G.

ELD P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:— I am almost confined to the house still with my lame leg. I think I wrote to you about my falling off the fence and spraining my knee and ankle. I have thought a great many times about you getting your arm broken, and suffering as you did, and sympathized with you in your affliction; but you could favor the arm and move about without using it; but the leg is different. I cannot get about without using it more or less, and it is painful more or less, all of the time. I expect I shall be a cripple the rest of the time, the blessed Lord shall see fit to keep me in the flesh. I remember Jacob was a lame man from the time he was blessed of the Lord, so my natural lameness brings to mind my lameness in my walk and conversation; yea in all things that are pertaining to life and godliness.

What a poor wretched creature I am, which makes me feel to appreciate the word of the apostle Paul, "O wretched man that I am who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord; so then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with flesh the law of sin."

So I conclude that he did not consider that the old sinner or flesh is born of the spirit, but that it must remain a poor wretched one until it returns to its mother earth, there to wait until the change shall come when mortality shall be swallowed up of life. Then we shall say, O death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory.

The sting of death is sin, the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. So we are sub-ected in hope of eternal life which God that cannot lie, promised before the world began.

The brethren here are in peace one with another and the old soldier is at his post, though he is lame, and he hopes here to be found when he gets his discharge.

Wearv of wandering round and round,
This veil of sin and gloom,
I long to leave the unhallowed ground
And dwell with Christ at home.

Yours in sweet fellowship.

JOHN H. BIGGS.

LeonardsLurg Ohio.

Remarks.

Yes, Brother Biggs, I well remember the painful days, and restless suffering nights I passed with that arm and shoulder, it is not well yet though it is so much better than it was, that I seldom speak of it. But I could walk about better than you.

I hope that dear brother Biggs, may know that it is the lame that take the prey, and that the battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift.

In the blessed rule of Jesus who is King in Zion no weapon that is formed against a child of God can prosper. All that Jacob looked upon as against him, and as bringing down his gray hairs with sorrow to the grave, was a needful part of the chain of events that must transpire, to bring about the accomplishment of the will and purpose of God, to the complete comfort and deliverance of Jacob into the hands of his beloved son Joseph as governor of Egypt, as governor of the land of Jacob's enemies: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

I once was favored with the joy of a visit to brother Biggs home and was at an association near there, and was much comforted with the brethren there, and found Elder Biggs a charming brother.

May he be sustained and nourished by the God of Jacob in his afflictions.

LET US REASON TOGETHER.

ELDER P. G. LESTER:—As you have been so kind to send me a copy of ZION'S LANDMARK, and also to give your views as requested in regard to Election, I feel it my duty to give you an answer in my weak way, and also ask for further information. I have been a Primitive Baptist, if one at all, ever since the year 1860, and if there is any people that I love spiritually, it is the Primitive Baptists; although there has been trouble among us in this country.

As my education is very limited, I desire to cite you to certain passages of scripture, and meaning of words that is causing trouble among us as Primitive Baptists. Do not understand me to say that education can explain the Spirit.—But I think we, as Primitive Baptists, should reason together and see whether we are taking the word of God as the man of our counsel, or the word of man, in these differences. "That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Information: "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die, saith the Lord God; and not that he should turn from his ways and live." Information: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Was Paul addressing the church or the world? Information: If a natural man in a natural condition is dead in trespasses and sins, does the scriptures clash? The Apostle applies quickening to that character. John 6: 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth.—The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." Information: He quickeneth whom he will. Now if quickening (the Spirit) cannot be applied to the natural man what character does it belong to. Information.

If it is the good pleasure of the Father to choose some of the fallen race of Adam in a natural condition, and withhold the mystery and riches of his grace from the other portion, would that make it saved by a decree, or by grace? Information.

To apply the spirit to the natural man in a natural condition the first thing, will that make the commands of God of none effect, or not? Information. To hold forth that man must obey the teachings of God to enable him to see his lost and ruined condition, to enable him to see there is nothing that sinful man can do to save himself: but that the last resort is to fall at the feet of Jesus and beg God to have mercy upon him, will that conflict with the true plan of salvation? Information. Now if any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. To hold forth that the repenting soul is the one that has the spirit of Christ, as the Savior did when he submitted himself to the will of God upon the cross, if God is disposed to spurn him away from his peaceful presence, the repenting soul, he must say amen to his condemnation. Will this conflict with the word of God? To hold forth that the repenting soul is the elect of God, the one that is saved by grace, through faith in Christ, the one that represents his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus. Will this conflict with the word of God? Does man go to the law or Christ for justification after he sees by trying the law that there is no life in it, but death? Information. We are taught by the scriptures that those who are saved are saved according to mercy. Can mercy be applied only upon the objects of mercy? Information. Are the objects of mercy the people that he fore-knew and pre-destinated, that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes? Information. Does the birth of Jacob and Esau represent a natural figure, or a spiritual figure, a natural birth or a spiritual birth? Information. I desire all the information I can obtain that accords with the word of God.

Your Brother, I hope in Christ.

JOHN VICKERS.

Much distress has been produced among our people through differences of opinion as to the meaning of words.

If we could adopt only the use of such words in common use as are defined as meaning just what we wish to present, it seems to me we would not have such a variety of thoughts with only an apparent difference growing out of the use of different words. The meaning of a word in scripture is often defined by the position it occupies in the subject immediately under consideration.

It is abundantly taught in the scriptures that salvation is by grace, see Rom. 3: 24; 4: 16—Eph. 2: 8—2nd Tim. 1: 9, and that the subjects of salvation were chosen or elected to salvation by the Father through his Son Jesus Christ, Eph. 1: 4; 2nd Thes. 2: 10; Zech. 2: 5; 1st Pet. 1: 2, and that sinners are the subjects of this salvation—Mat. 9: 13—Rom. 5: 8: 1st Tim. 1: 15. Therefore in order to bring these sinners, who are sons as chosen in the elder brother, unto glory, it was befitting the God of all grace to make the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering, and he therefore must by the same grace whereby they are saved, taste or experience death for every one of them, not only those of the Jews but also of the Gentiles as well. The Angel said: "He shall save his people from their sins." And the Apostle says, he did it by tasting death for them. Will not the same cause by which one sinner is saved save every other such sinner, who is likewise affected by the same cause? Do the scriptures teach any where that there will ever be, or ever has been one sinner saved for whom Christ did not die, or that there is, or ever will be one lost for whom he did die? see Acts 4: 12; Isa. 53: 11; John 6: 37—44. If Christ did die for all mankind so as that all mankind shall not be surely saved, what good did his death accomplish for those who shall be lost? and if those who are saved can in the least attribute their salvation to anything they did, then how could it be said, by grace ye are saved, and not of works, lest any man should boast? If I accept Christ and am therefore saved, does not my salvation rest upon my act of accepting Christ? If so, where does the salvation by grace come in?

In Ezekiel 18: 28, the Lord is expressly speaking to his people Israel. He says he has no pleasure in the wickedness of his people, that they should thus do and die. The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not die for the wickedness of his father—he shall die—that is shall be cut off from the enjoyments of the land for his own sins, and if he turn from his wicked way he shall live. Is that not the law now in the church? If the son who is a brother sins, do we exclude his father who is also a brother. No! We exclude the son. But do we rejoice in the fact that he has sinned, and we had to cut him off? No! We weep for him, for we would rather he would turn and live, and when he does return properly we receive him with joy. So it was with the Lord under the typical dispensation, and so it is with him now. God is here talking to his people who do wickedly, and not to the world at large.

If the world was made up of saints, then Paul was addressing the world, for he begins his epistle to the Ephesians thus: Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus,

The members of this and all others of the churches addressed in the various epistles had been in common with other men children of wrath, and had been quickened or given life whereby they were made sensible of their condition as condemned sinners. Their address was most certainly made to the church.

The scriptures do not clash in the idea that it is the natural man—the sinner—who is dead in sins, that is quickened, nor again in the idea that this same natural man receiveth not nor knoweth the things of the spirit of God.

Nothing but a man, and we know of no other that is termed a sinner but the natural man—needs to be quickened—It is the spirit that quickneth, but it is a man, a sinner, that is quickened. It is nowhere said that the spirit is quickened, but that it is a quickening spirit. I speak of this quickening as it refers specially to the work of the spirit in the manifestation of salvation unto the vessels of mercy.

The natural man does not as such receive the things of the spirit of God. These things are not obtained by natural powers of conception of thought, neither do they enter into and amalgamate with the things of the natural mind, or man, nevertheless the natural man is so affected by the spirit as to be made sensible of its power and salvation, and of his need of them, he being a sinner without God and without hope in the world.

The predestination of elect sinners unto the adoption of children, by Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of the will of God, is salvation by grace.

The commands of God can be of no effect where the spirit is not applied before, or with the command. God makes no requirements of any but such as are able to comply. He spoke and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast. His word has in it the power of obedience. He applies his spirit and works our works in us. Phil. 2: 13. The knowledge of ones lost and condemned condition by reason of sin can not be obtained by obedience to any thing. We should preach the necessity of repentance, but not the ability to do so. Jesus is exalted a Prince and a Savior to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel, therefore they must be preached in his name.

It is true the last thing a convicted sinner does is to beg alone for mercy, but nothing we might say can bring one to that point, especially an unconvicted one. It does not conflict with the truth to preach Jesus as a whole Savior but should we bring in any condition to be performed by the sinner in order to his salvation, or before God will undertake his case, then we are conflicting against the truth.

The repentant sinner must realize that he is already condemned, and that so far as any thing in him could merit he is justly condemned.

However it would not be just that one should be lost who has the spirit of Christ, and all repenting souls must first have it in order to see themselves as they really are. None ever go to heaven without first feeling the need of mercy, and none go down to hell begging for it.

The repenting one is most assuredly an elect one, and repentance is an evidence of the revelation of the creation in Christ to that one.

The quickened sinner first goes to the law and learns its true character, then he turns to Christ who is the end of or the satisfaction of the law, and finds deliverance and rest.

Merely can only be applied beneficially to the vessels of mercy.

The objects of mercy are the chosen of God. He has promised to be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities he will remember no more. They are the ones he foreknew and predestinated and did everything else for that is called salvation. Jacob represents, it seems, elect, and Esau the non elect; or two nations of people, one a holy nation, and the other a crooked and perverse nation.

I have endeavored to answer all your questions in a brief way, and to give what I understand. I may not have so understood some questions as you desired I should, if so, I am willing to answer again, and at all times when I have anything to give, when information is truly desired. Such as I have I received and therefore freely give.

Some of your questions should not be allowed to give foundation for difference of opinion among Primitive Baptists. They have always been questions between them and other denominations. Primitive Baptists believe that Jesus Christ came into the world and died for his people, and that his death guarantees absolute and eternal salvation to them and to them only. They do not believe the atonement to be universal, and the application limited, which limit depends upon how many accept the terms of the gospel. They find no conditions or terms in salvation nor the gospel.

They believe that sinners of Adam's fallen race are the subjects of salvation in every sense of the term—that the hearts of all men naturally are fashioned alike, that God saves whom he will because he will do so. They do not believe that salvation restores one to heaven, nor that damnation returns one to hell. They acknowledge no eternal being apart from the fulness of the God's head.

May we know only the truth as it is in Jesus, and his name have the praise.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—

As I desire to continue my subscription to the LANDMARK, I think it my duty to pay for it, as it probably will be more comforting to me when I read to know that the publishers have the benefit of their labors, so far as I am concerned. I therefore enclose two dollars, please place the same to my credit, and continue to send me the paper to Gogginsville, Franklin County, Va., When I feel mean enough to read it without paying what I agree to pay for it, then I will write you that I do not intend to pay for it, but expect you to regard me as a good brother and send me the paper on as though I had paid my dues. I hope to be able to send you some new subscribers when the weather opens so I can get around, and if not, I will try to get some of the old ones to pay up and renew their subscriptions. I do think that Baptists should remember that you cannot afford to publish the paper and run their subscription for years, and then quit reading and order the paper stopped, and yet not pay for it. So far as I know, my health is perfect. Oh; that I could be thankful as I ought for the great blessing. My family are well. Hope you and yours are enjoying a like blessing.

Can you give us an editorial on Eccl. 3rd. Chap. and 15th, verse. I have written a communication upon the text, but it is so poor that I have no mind to send it. Please comply, if the Lord will. May God abundantly bless you for Christ's sake. Please remember me sometimes when at a throne of grace.

J. C. Hall.

"That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past."—Eccl. 3: 15

Remarks.

The book of Ecclesiastes is surely a work of wonderful wisdom. There is no treatise of man's philosophy that even faintly approaches to its depths in the exposition of man's character, and God's divine and incomprehensible operations over his creatures. Settled and enduring is the teaching that God's works are perfect and therefore unchangeable and irreversible. Man cannot measure them. He can only behold and wonder. God hath set the world in men's hearts so that they cannot find out the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end. They are so full of the world they cannot see even beyond the present—neither in the past nor the future.

Solomon affirms that that which God doeth is forever. Nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it. This is so unlike men. They cannot do any thing to endure forever, so that nothing can be put to it, and nothing taken from it. There is nothing then in man, or in his works, in his corrupt state on which an argument may be found, nor from which a conclusion can be deduced that will acquaint him with God: for by searching God cannot be found out. It is only by revelation that God is known. It is in his light that we see light. His works, and not man's works, declare the glory of God.

If all things continue as they were of old, and nothing can be changed, if every principle now operating existed from the beginning, if every creature moving, was then created, if God works all things after the counsel of his own will, and all God's works praise him, then the carnal reason of man will say, it does not matter what we do; for who hath resisted his will? He will do his will, let us do what we may; and they say they will not serve, nor fear such a God as that; but that they will take their fill of sin.

But what does the wise man say is the effect and intent of God's sovereignty in this respect? It is this, that men should fear before him. The very fact that what God doeth is perfect affords the greatest incentive to fear before him, for in his hand is our breath and our destiny.

Solomon tells us that that which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been, and God requireth that which is past. Then there is no new thing under the sun, and nature repeats herself, and our life is a treadmill in the sense that the same things are repeating themselves. Men are born as they were thousands of years ago, and die as they did then, and pass their days in vanity as they did then. Rivers rise as of yore; winds blow as of old; the same sun rises and sets as in ancient times; the same heavens are spread out, and the same earth brings forth as of old. Then it does not matter at what period of time you are born, nor in what country; for what was of old is where you are now; and what is yet to be is now with you; and hence equality abounds. Nothing in nature is ever lost nor destroyed. There is as much now as there ever was, or ever will be. The ocean is as full now as of old, the sun as bright, the earth as large. God is bringing back that which is past, and nature yields up at his demand and faithfully returns all trusts and treasures committed to her bosom.

Is this so in the experience of saints, and in the word of God? Is it true that what God does in and by Jesus Christ is not eternal, if in nature what he doeth is forever? Is it true that if one is now a child of God he was of old one and will be so forever? Is it true that God who called us is faithful, and that all his promises in Christ Jesus are yea and amen to the glory of God. Is it true that you have as much of the root of the matter in you in the cold, bleak wintry night of deep distress, as you have in the bright summer day of great rejoicing? Is it true that you are as much a child of God when you cannot, in your feelings, embrace a single promise, as you are when the volume of the book is open to you as a field which the Lord has blessed, yea even as the garden of the Lord when blooming.

Is it true that what you are to be you are now—that if you are to be saved you are now saved? We do not mean that you or I know all that we will ever know, or enjoy all that we will ever enjoy. If only that is true that we know, and nothing except what we know, then how little is true? Indeed, if what we know was not true before we knew it, then we create things by knowing them, and our cognition is the cause of the existence of things. We know nothing which was not true before we knew it, nor does our ignorance at all prevent, affect, or cause the existence of anything; but our knowledge of things affects us.

It is in this sense as good for us to live now, as if we had lived hundreds of years ago, or that we should live hundreds of years to come: since what was then is now, and what will yet be now is. When the heavens are opened to us we are with Abraham, and all the prophets, and we are also in the clouds of glory in the resurrection. When in the spirit time is gone, and space is blotted out, and all things are present, and we set down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God. When Jesus is mine and I am his, I am come to the general assembly and church of the first-born whose names are written in heaven. When the Holy Ghost brings the things of Jesus to me, all things are mine, and all things work together for my good and the spirit of prophecy is with me assuring me of things to come. In moments of darkness, I see nothing but darkness: the past is shut out; there is no brightness in the future; but when the light shines all my past experience is gathered up, and nothing is lost. Everything then is sweet, and faith says all the future is mine, and is present while I am beholding things unseen: for as unseen things never change, when you see them it is as they ever will be.

When I am feeling guilty God requires the past of my corrupt life, and my soul remembers the wormwood and the gall, and is humbled within me: and I know that God brings everything in judgment; and I know that what has been now is, and that God requires the past.

When the visions of God are given ten thousands of his saints come with Jesus, and their experience is all mine, and in unity we dwell together, and the little one becomes a thousand, and faith says every promise of the bible shall be fulfilled, and counts those things which be not as though they were.

In the requiring of that which is past is the resurrection assured, for all is to be gathered up that nothing be lost. With God one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. So that in requiring or calling up that which is past there shall be the full gathering into one the whole body or church together with all the experience of all God's people, and so all Israel shall be saved.

Brother Hall, the subject is too wonderful for me. Write on this subject if you feel so impressed.

DEAR BROTHER, —I am not in good health at this time, but I hope to be able to fill these appointments, for it is a destitute section of the country. The yoke is laid on me, and I can't help going to try in my weak way to declare his name—Christ, the power of God unto salvation.

I have tried to persuade and have begged other ministers to go up there and see these brethren, so I could feel some relief. But they are not called by the power of God and therefore they can say, I pray thee have me excused, and they go not. Oh, that God would send laborers in that part of his vineyard. The church at Cool Spring is near four hundred miles from my home the way I go, and brethren going to and from Georgia, could go without any additional expense, if they travel on the Air Line R. R. Can't you, brother Gold, stir up some of the dear brethren to visit that section. I know some who beg for preaching, that are very choice about their preachers, but I am not, just so they preach Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God, and not the power of man and the wisdom of man.

I remain, your weak and unworthy brother in tribulation.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth. $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to Poetry.

NEW YEAR'S INVOCATION.

Father of light I be pleased to take my hand in Thine this day ;

And lead me, O my Father, each step of the unseen way.

Abide within my heart, each day--and every hour.

That I, may all the while, be guided by Thy power.

Let not my feet, or hands, or tongue this year,

Do, or say aught, but what is done in fear
Of giving grief to Thy great love for me.--
To cause thy saints to turn away from Thee.

I love to have Thee as my guest, dear One,
To have Thee stamp the image of Thy Son
Upon my life, and make me ever prove
The boundlessness of thy undying love.

Then, when my feet shall reach the swelling tide

I shall be safe--within the crucified.
The mystic change, will have no dread for me
If thou but lead me, I'll rest at last with Thee.

And too, dear Father, in Thy Beulah land
I have so many dear ones ;--quite a band Whose homes are there :--and whose dear faces gleam

With holy light upon me, in my dream

Of the eternal home,--where not a change shall mar

The joy, and peace and love by faith, I see afar,--

O lead me Father, to sweetest boon yet given Of meeting Thee, and Christ, and them in heaven.

COMMUNICATED.

SETTLED.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, MY DEAR BROTHER
IN CHRIST:--My mind has been yearning to-wards you and many of God's dear ministers, and his dear people to-day, and my meditation of his dear precious name has been sweet.

This has been a very dark rainy day.
I can now hardly see how to guide my pen ; but behind these dark clouds of storm the bright luminous of day shines in all his glory. So behind all the dark clouds of adversity and afflictions, terrific waves of temptations and swelling floods of tribulation ; yet behind all these dark scenes of stormy wind and tempest, the christian's God shines in all his refulgent glory and power, and with a smiling face he looks upon his tempest-tossed children with divine complacency and love. He is glorious to contemplate a God of all wisdom and power. He who sits upon the circuit of the heavens and looks upon the nations of the earth a sparrow, yet a sparrow cannot fall from the ground without his knowledge, and the very hairs of our head are numbered. He looks upon him who is in a "broken heart and a contrite spirit, and who trembles at his word."

How wonderful and glorious is the work of our God, as it has been revealed and made manifest through the Son of his love. It should be the ab-orbing theme of all those who have tasted of his love and felt his power to save. How wonderful is his work, how it knits and cements to-gether all whom his regenerating power by the baptism of the Holy Ghost ; it is a work of hatred but love in all its feelings and living influence. He it works bro-therly love, and every gentleness, long-suffering, and humbly causing each to esteem one another better than himself. How Christ-like will be all those who truly bear his image.

We have entered upon a new year as time is reckoned, and I wish dear brother it may be a happy new year to you in all the rich stores of grace that our God may see fit to grant unto you, and this will strengthen you for all coming trials and conflicts with the world, flesh and satan. All the events that are to transpire are folded between the leaves of God's secret will. Known unto him is the end from the beginning and all things are done according to the counsel of his holy will.

I hope I can humbly and truly say that I rejoice more and more daily in this God of our salvation, there is not any thing precarious with him, all things are certain. I cannot tell how it looks to me, my mind is too small to grasp it in all its length, height and depth. We are caged in a tenement of clay; but "when this earthly house of our tabernacle shall be dissolved," and we enter into eternity, and launch into the ocean of eternal love and behold the King in his beauty, then will our unfettered souls burst forth in songs of praise to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God our Savior and Redeemer. No praise can be given to any other God in time or eternity. My great and earnest prayer to God is, to know that the God of Jacob is my God. Am I his or am I not? this is the great and momentous question with me.

How firm is the foundation laid in Zion for the hope of the godly. A safe place for all those whose feet have been placed upon this "Rock of Ages." The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. May the eternal Jehovah strengthen you, dear brother in this day of trial. The religious world think things are going on most gloriously, but those who have eyes to see the 'signs of the times,' are fully satisfied that the man of sin is coming to perfection. There is a mystery of iniquity as well as a mystery of godliness. All the scriptures must be of godliness and fulfilled before the end. Solemn and awful events await mortals—eternal realities. Eternity is of awful moment,

Although the outlook for Zion is dark, Jesus lives, and sets as a King on his holy hill. Painful and trying as it may be to his faithful ministers to see coldness and lack of zeal in the church of God, when the love of the world and the love of money and a conformity to this vain world bring coldness and leanness into the souls of God's geor people. Is not this the case? But notwithstanding all the darkness and coldness that may be seen and felt, Jesus reigns in Zion, and "he shall sit as a refiner and a purifier of silver; he shall purge the sons of Levi, and purify them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." Affliction and tribulation are the sure heritage of his chosen and they will come off victorious through the blood of the Lamb, their victorious conqueror.

Excuse me my dear brother. I always write long and rambling, but pardon.

Your unworthy sister in affliction,

M. M. HASSELL.

THE SINNER.

DEAR BROTHERN AND SISTERS OF GOD'S ELECT:—It is through the abounding mercy of an all-wise God that we can again address you through the columns of the LANDMARK by the permission of our beloved brother Gold. I have been requested by quite a number to write often for its columns, but I fear brother Gold will become perfectly disgusted with my poor sinful scribbles.

I have taken as a subject "the sinner." First we shall notice who it takes to constitute a sinner. We are taught that sin is the transgression of the law. Now if we can find who transgressed the law, then we shall know who the sinner is. We will go back to creation and we see that Adam was made of the dust of the ground, and that same man which he made he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. That same man that a law was given to, was the same man that violated the law, hence man sinned and became a sinner. The whole posterity standing in him, and he being the head and they the body, when he sinned we all sinned and when the head dies the body dies. So by the disobedience of one man, Adam sin entered the world, and death by sin, so death passed upon all men for all have sinned. We all sinned in Adam for we are only Adam multiplied. Hence we are all sinners, sinners of Adam's race. The death sentence which is upon the human family is eternal or endless. Suppose I were tried for murder in the court at Ozark, and a sentence was passed upon me that on the 25th day of June 1888, I shall be hanged by the neck until dead. In the eye of the law I am dead until I am executed. Suppose I send my petitions to the governor of the state it's all of no avail. I may pay all my debts and live extremely moral in every sense and the penalty is death still. If I were to kill a hundred more men it is still death, morality, or immorality doesn't release me under that sentence or make it any worse. The law demands my death and nothing but death will satisfy. On the same hypothesis when men transgressed there was an endless death sentence resting upon him, and his morality or immorality or prayers all fail to extricate the poor sinner from under the law of sin and death. But a portion was chosen in Christ to salvation ere time began, grace was given them in Christ, and the chosen were given to Christ. "Thine they were and thou gavest them to me. All the Father gave to me shall come to me." It is evidently Adamic sinners who were given to him and he loved them with an everlasting love, and help was laid upon one who is mighty and able to save, therefore his arm brought salvation.

He laid down his life for his bride or chosen, hence he was executed instead of his bride. Jesus redeemed his people from under the law and its curse. The angel said, "He shall save his people from their sins." Paul says "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save "sinners" of whom I am chief." What kind of sinners? Adam sinners of course, for we see no scriptural account of any other sinners. This same sinner or man must be born again. Jesus says to Nicodemus, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Again, signifying that he, the man, had been born once when he was born of the flesh, but he, the same identical man must be born again. The sinner is born into the natural world and when he is born again he is born into the spiritual kingdom.

When Jesus gives the poor, dead sinner eternal life he brings him from under the law of sin and death; hence the law is under his feet and he is clothed with the righteousness of Christ; hence he is made free from sin, the law of sin and death, and becomes a servant to God and has his fruit unto holiness and the end thereof everlasting life. When he is made free from the law of sin and death he is born again. The law is over him and holding him bound, hence he is in prison. As for thee also by the blood of thy covenant thou hast sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit where in was no water. There was no water under that awful sentence while in that awful prison, but God sets the whole man free from that prison. The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me, Paul, a sinner of Adam's race free, born again, from the law of sin and death. It was the children of Israel, sinners of Adam's race, that crossed the Red Sea. A part did not cross and leave part of the sinner in Egypt. The whole man crossed. It was the man that rejoiced and sung the song of Moses; it was the man that hungered and thirsted, it was the man that drank, and the man that did wrong. When one is delivered from under the death sentence he is born again and never can sin or go back under the sentence any more.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin because his seed remaineth in him." It does not say that seed cannot sin as many construe it, but the man that is born of God never can go back under that sentence any more, for Christ is in him the hope of glory and keeps him from going back, hence he will never go back under the law of sin and death anymore. Egyptians that ye see to-day ye shall see them no more forever. When one is thus delivered he receives a manifestation of what Christ has done for him and then old things are passed away, and all things are become new. He has new desires, a new love and feels like a new man, but he begins to examine himself, he sees that he yet possesseth a body of death and a carnal mind which is not subject to the law of God neither indeed can be. He has two lives, a natural life, and a spiritual life, all the evil is prompted by the natural life, and all the good by the spiritual life.

This man's brother now has a view of the sweet enjoyment in Boaz's field (the gospel field or church) and he is made to sell all for the good (enjoyment) in the church. The church is wholly composed of sinners, they are born again. We are the ones who are to see our lost condition.

If Christ do nothing for Adamic sinners, then we have no right to enter life into our fellowship. I saw Paul the light shone around. It was you that was convicted by sin, and you sought secret places to pray. You were delivered, you rejected, you joined the church, you were baptized, you have a hope, you will die, be buried, raised in an immortal body. Yea it is the sinner that is benefited. I am aware of the fact that good brethren differ from me on this subject, but I speak of it as I understand it, I brethren can see further than I can, it is all right. I am willing for each one to have his own peculiar notions about the sinner, but I cannot advocate a thing that will lose sight of the sinner. I count him embraced as the bible teaches. I do not like to hear a person preach so much about the sinning of the sinner then wind up by saying the sinner has no part in it.

If man did not sin and die he had no Saviour for he could not be saved from sin because he was not a sinner, nor saved from death because he was not dead. Hence, salvation embraced sinners, not eternal spirits, and if sinners, they are Adam sinners, yes sinners of Adam's race. When one is brought to a knowledge of his acceptance in the beloved, call him a child of God.

If I have a hope in Christ, I, Lee Hancks, am a child of God and am led by his Holy Spirit and am dependent upon him to guide my erring feet aright. But ah, when left as Peter, and the carnal mind controls, I am denying Jesus.

There is a thorn given to each child of God in the flesh, the messenger of satan to buffet him, and he desires that the thorn depart from him, but he, tho' poor and sinful, receives the blessed assurance that the grace of God is sufficient for him. The same child of God possesses the flesh and the spirit, and there is a continued warfare, the flesh lusting against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

Sometimes it seems that the christian is wholly under the influence of the flesh, again he seems to be under the influence of the spirit, and all is joy and peace when he is controlled by the spirit. These things are very deep and we ought to exercise a spirit of forbearance with each other. I once almost thought that the child of God when changed was very nearly immortalized, and hence could not sin, consequently I look for perfection in Primitive Baptists, and would talk about them being thus and so, but experience has taught me that there is a great sin in my own eye, and I have no fellowship for Lee Hancks than a yearling, there is no confidence in him, he will make promises but they amount to nothing, but he is dependent at all times upon Jesus to keep him in the right way. If he could walk orderly, like the rest, he would be satisfied, but the longer he lives the more sinful he feels. We should pray the Lord to keep him and let the brethren to bear with him. I was much pleased with Elder Lester's edification, "Who is born again;" The brethren here fully endorse that kind of message.

Brother Gold, your editorials are all ways rich and full of sweetness, but the glory belongs to the Lord.

Your poor little brother, if one at all.
LEE HANCKS.

STRENGTHENING.

DEAR BRO. GOLD:—David affords much comforting and solid food for the poor, sin-tossed soul, in his Psalms.—How much had he to bless the Lord for? Truly "He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." We are weak and sinful, but he is all-powerful and eternal. He pities us far more than an earthly parent does his dear child, and "he will not always chide." "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities." "He hath given meat unto them, that fear him, he will ever be mindful of his covenant. He sent redemption unto his people; he hath commanded his covenant forever; holy and reverent is his name." He forgiveth our iniquities and removeth our sins as far as the east is from the west. The kings and great ones of the earth counsel in vain against the Lord and his anointed. They are safe under the shadow of his wing, and in the hollow of his hand. Whatever may be their wandering they are ever under his watchful eye. Indeed may he cry, "The Lord is my rock and my fortress, and my deliverer, my God, my strength in whom I will trust." He has nowhere else to trust, and is ready to cry, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." "For who is God save the Lord? and who is a rock save our God?" "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." "God is my light and my salvation." "He who has known and felt the "sure mercies of David," may always say, "Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation." Of such it is said, "They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they have no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty their souls fainted in them. Then they cried to the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses." Yea, he remembers for them his covenant, his ear is ever open to their cry. David knew the exceeding sinfulness of sin, but he had faith given him to trust in a covenant keeping God, and he breaks out and sings, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever."

May all God's children feel that their help is in the Lord, who made heaven and earth, and who does all things according to the counsel of his will.—"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, the mountain of his holiness." O fear God all ye his saints: there is no want to them that fear him." "For this God is our God, and shall be our Guide, even unto death.

Yours in hope,

C. S. MCDANIEL.

DISCIPLINE.

MY DEAR BROTHERS, GOLD AND LES-TER, AND BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST,—I feel entirely too unworthy, and sinful to thus address you, whom I feel and believe to be a part of the redeemed family of God, but if I am not deceived I am made to hope in the same salvation. My dear brethren and sisters, I believe, if I have a hope of eternal life, it is based on the principle of love, and if you take from me the love I have for those that I believe are christians you would have my hope and my all. Brother Gold I want to write some of my feelings and experience for the past year, and if when you read it you think it not beneficial to the people of God, or if would crowd out something more profitable to them, throw it aside, and all will be well with me, and my mind perhaps at ease.

One year and one week ago today I went trembling as I then hoped, in obedience to my Lord and Master, into the watery grave, feeling impressed as I hoped, and still believe by the Lord's Christ to take up my cross and follow him through evil as well as good report

My dear brethren and sisters, I felt then like if I could only live in peace with the people of God without bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ it would be all that I would ever want to do. But my dear fellow travellers I find it is not so. I may be deceived in the whole matter, but one thing I do know, if I am saved at all I am saved by grace alone, and if that is not God's way of saving sinners, then I am lost forever, for I am but a poor helpless sinner still.

My Father's children, if I am not deceived, I believe that Jesus Christ is the son of God. I believe that all power in heaven and on earth is given him. I believe he was in the beginning with God, yea was even God himself. I believe he is a God of love and mercy. I believe there was a people given him before the world was. I believe he had a certain mission into the world, and did nothing else while here but fulfill the same, not even so much as to have one foolish thought. I believe that his mission here was to do the will of his Father, and I believe that his Father's will was, that of all he had given him he shall lose none but shall raise them up at the last day, and will present them to his Father without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. What a glorious plan of salvation, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

My dear brethren and sisters, don't you sometimes feel like it will take all the eternal day in that happy land beyond this vale of tears, to give the praise due to the great I AM for such an unmerited blessing. Oh my soul, I feel like I had rather risk my soul's salvation in the hands of Jesus, than with all the money and means besides. And yet they say, people professing to be christians too, that he has done all that he could to save the world, and now salvation depends upon money and means. I know they don't use those words, but don't they act it out so. If I am not deceived with the poor child of God, if I ask whom do you say that I am, they would answer; I believe thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God, the answer would again come, blessed art thou for flesh and blood has not revealed it unto thee, but my Father in Heaven.

My dear friends in Zion, I believe that the blessed Lord and Saviour has a people on this earth even now, and while I feel to be the least in my Father's house, if I am not deceived, they are the people that I feel to have an interest in. I often think of the words of Isaiah the prophet, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people saith your God, cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that iniquity is pardoned, and that she has received at the Lord's hands double for all her sins. Yea my Christian friends it is a complete salvation and all of the Lord. Thou art all fair my love, there is no spot in thee. I understand there is no spot so far as our eternal salvation is concerned, for that is all complete in Jesus. But my dear brethren and sisters, I fear that we get out of the path of duty here sometimes. I know that I do. Then let us strive to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. Brother Gold, I have felt for several months, (if I am not deceived) a special interest in the welfare of the Primitive Baptists Church, and that is what I want to write some about.

Now I am perhaps as much in favor of strict discipline as anyone, but I think we ought to be very careful how it is enforced. You know it is said in the scriptures concerning the Lord's people, that they have divers gifts but all of the same spirit. Now I understand that these gifts are not for the men that have them, but for the benefit of the church. We understand further that while sheep is used to represent God's people, and there are lambs also among them; the lambs are used to represent part of it to denote that some of them are young, feeble and not hardly able to take care of themselves. Then you my dear brother, who have been enlightened by the Holy Spirit to see your way clear, do not use the gift for your own benefit alone, but when you see a poor lamb of God wandering from the fold, go to him and tenderly lead him back, talk to him of the love of the master, tell him how expedient it is for him to remain in the fold that he may get his portion when the good shepherd comes to feed. I believe it has ever been the purpose of our Lord and Savior to reveal more of his love, purpose and plan of salvation to some of his people than to others, and I believe this revelation has ever been intended for the benefit of his little ones. As he said to Peter, feed my lambs, yes the lambs are his as well as the sheep, all bought with the same price, all redeemed by the same blood, all children of the same Parents, all bound with the same everlasting love, by the same everlasting Father and Prince of peace. Then little children love one another, bear one another's burdens, for a few more days will bring to an end all the troubles, trials, and tribulations of the people of God now on earth. My dear brethren and sisters fight on, for the time will soon come (if we are not deceived) when we will be clothed with robes washed and made white in the blood of the I AM, yes we will then see our Savior and be like him. My dear Christian friends, let us try to live for each other, and all for Christ, and may the God of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the union and communion of the Holy Spirit rest and abide with each one of us until the time comes when we can lay our armor by and go home, is the prayer of a poor sinner in hope of eternal life.

If this letter should be published, I know a great many will be surprised to hear from me through the LANDMARK, so I will tell you perhaps the cause of it.

I am now situated at Lake Waccamaw, nearly 140 miles away from home, and the same distance away from Christian friends so far as I am benefitted. So I have no one to talk to, and the only way to relieve my mind is to write. Now my dear Christian friends, don't conclude by this letter that I have a public work to perform in the service of our God. I could not tell you if you were to ask me, I am lost in wonder. I want beyond all things else to know the Lord's will concerning me and then be made able to perform it.

It seems to me that mine is an outside case. I may deceive you all yet, I can't promise you that I will not, for I am a stranger to myself. When it goes well with you my dear brethren and sisters, pray for me and mine and all that is near and dear to me. Yours in hope.

EXPERIENCE.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER—I have for some time had an impression of some kind to write you and tell you as near as I can some of my feelings. I have made several attempts and failing to write anything I thought worthy of sending, have tried to wear out the impression, feeling afraid it was some fleshy notion gotten in me; but be it from what ever source it may be it has grown stronger until it is now upon my mind day and night when I am awake, and for the last few weeks have felt that if I did not do the best I could and send it to you, that I would be punished by some judgment sent upon me for disobedience. Therefore hoping that you will look over my many mistakes and blunders in expressing myself, I will tell as near as I can what reasons I have for my little hope.

A good many years ago I began to have serious thoughts about what was to become of me after death, or in other words about dying, and that without religion.

At first these feelings would not last long, my mind would run off on something else. After awhile they would last longer, and come on more frequently. I did not feel then that I was condemned, and that there was no chance for me; but thought that when I had done the right thing at the right time and in the right place, that I could obtain religion. I then began to set resolutions, and made promises to my Maker to do better, but soon found that do as I could my case seemed to grow worse, and the more I tried to do better the worse I seemed to get.

In 1885 I went to an Association at Black Creek. There I heard an old man preach, that I have never seen before nor since. It seemed to me he could tell every thought I had ever had concerning the matter, and although his appearance did not please me when he first got up, before I knew it my attention was drawn to him, and before he was through I was shedding tears, and could not help it.

Brother A. J. Moore followed him, using the 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st verse of the 107 Psalm for his text. It seem to me they showed me just where I stood and what my condition was. I felt that of all persons, I was the most wretched. I could not find any rest anywhere, and for several days I could not sleep, eat, nor do anything in any peace. Then it seemed to wear off for a while—then it would return seemingly with double force. I went on in this condition until the next summer when I began to feel that all hope was gone. I got so that I felt that I was the worst being upon earth, and that no one was ever just like I was. I felt that I had not a friend upon earth, and what was worse, I had no friend in heaven. It seemed that everything was better off than I. I felt that I was a perfect burden to myself and to others; and I quit going anywhere, that I could avoid, without giving any reason. I was fearful lest I would lose my mind, or something I could not tell what. I could look back over my past life, and although I had not committed such crimes as some, yet I felt that I had sinned against a just God. And if I had been guilty in one point I was as much lost as far as heaven was concerned as if I had been guilty of all. I would try to pray, but it seemed to me that I was making a mock. I then tried to read the bible but every word seemed to condemn me.

I had by this time lost all confidence in every denomination but the Primitive Baptists, as they were all that I could find that claimed that salvation was of the Lord, all that did not tell me to do this and that good deed and give my heart to God. I felt that I had tried everything and was no better than at first, but felt that I was getting worse every day.

I felt that I could witness with the Baptists until they would begin to tell how they found rest; but I felt that there was no rest or joy for me, for I felt that I was beyond the mercy of God and although they could tell some of my feelings so well I thought my case must be worse than theirs.

One evening in August 1886, I became so wretched that I could not stay with the family, but would go from place to place seeking rest, but finding none. By supper time, I was in so much trouble that I was crying nearly all the time. I would try to hold back my tears when I was where any one could see me, and as soon as I could get out of sight I would burst in tears for this was all the relief I could get, it giving me but little ease. When the family went to supper, I went out on the porch and took a seat. When they finished supper I went to bed, but my trouble seemed more than I could bear. I grew worse and worse until I felt that, live or die, destruction would be my doom. I felt that if I was lost (I could see no other chance,) that God was just, and if saved it would be by mercy—for justice I felt would send me to torment. I had tried so often to pray that I felt that it was a sin for me to try any more, or take the name of One so holy in my sinful lips. So I decided to pray no more.

With this resolution I clinched my lips, but I soon found that though I did not move my tongue nor lips, that my tears would still flow, and the very breathing of my soul was, Lord have mercy upon me. I found that though I could stop uttering words, I could not stop breathing a prayer to God for mercy. I felt I wanted to fall at the feet of Jesus and there breathe one more prayer. I remember dropping my head upon my knees, and it seems that I felt that I was sinking in despair, when these words passed through my mind,

"Prostrate I'll lie before thy throne,
And all my guilt confess."

I felt truly I was a wretch undone without his sovereign grace. I felt that my whole frame was giving away under this great load of guilt and condemnation which was upon me, and for a moment it seemed to me I was almost or quite unconscious. When sudden as a flash it was all gone, and the first thing I knew I was sitting erect, my eyes lifted Heavenward, and was singing, "Jesus lover of my soul, Let me to thy bosom fly." Dear brethren and sisters, here was a happy time with me. I felt that he loved my soul, and that I was resting in the bosom of his love, and now instead of feeling that my heart would burst, and that I was dying with grief, I felt that I had a friend in heaven, and that my trouble was gone, and that I wanted to shout aloud the praise of my redeeming Lord. It seemed that the moon and stars looked brighter, and the trees looked gay, and that the whole earth was praising him, the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. After enjoying this heaven for awhile, I discovered that the family had all retired, so I got up and went to my room feeling that all my trouble was gone, and after going to bed I think it was the sweetest night's rest and sleep that I ever passed through. After this, for several days, I felt light and cheerful, then I began to feel that I was afraid it was all imagination, and that I was deceived, and soon I was tossed to and fro by doubts and fears. I remained in this condition 'till the last night in August, when the earthquake came, which woke me in a fright, which increased for some moments. I then felt that I wanted to pray, and dropped upon my knees, but my lips were sealed, I could not utter a word. This added to my distress. I raised up, and as I received power to speak again, I said, Lord have mercy upon me, what shall I do? Something seemed to answer me "nothing, but stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." This gave me peace, and again I felt calm. I went on for some time, at times rejoicing in Christ as my Saviour, then I would feel that I was mistaken in the whole matter and it was all imagination. One day while I was feeling so poor, and seeing my vileness and feeling plainly how near nothing I was, I felt that I could not see how God, wise and holy as he was, could condescend to save a wretch so vile as I and beyond everything else I craved that if it was the Lord's work with me, that he would give me an evidence. While sitting thinking over this, something came before me, not my natural eyes, but I could see it in my view. I thought I could see myself in my natural condition, and could look into the principles of my heart, and all was blackness and darkness. Then I thought I saw my body dipped in the blood of Christ. It seemed that as the blood ran upon the body, I could see that it left it white and pure. The first time I saw this I felt strange that I could not understand it, and I tried to pray to God that if it was for an evidence I might see it again, and twice more it came before me the same as at first. Then it seemed that I could see how I could be saved. I thought that he was able to blot out my sins, and by the blood which he gave for our sins we were made to appear before him holy, and as he died for our sins they were all forgiven, hence we were made white by the blood of the Lamb. This may seem strange to you, but it is as near what I saw as I can express it. There are times when it is a great comfort to me, and there are times I feel afraid to say anything to any one about it, as it seems to me that I am afraid that it will seem so strange no one will believe it, but as my impression is to tell all as near as I can I have tried to make it as plain as I could.

After this, I went on 'till Oct. 1886, sometimes feeling that I hoped I had evidence that I was one for whom Christ died, and yet I was afraid to claim it. On my way to the Association Friday night before the fourth Sunday in Oct. I stopped at a Brother Pittman's, where I met a good many brethren and sisters, among them were Elders Cavanaugh and Isaac Jones. Brother Jones preached for us, and it seemed to me that he preached the truth and my feelings were such that I felt bound to talk with him in regard to my feelings. So next morning I got an opportunity by going with him to church, and after telling him a portion of what I have written here, he gave me a good deal of comfort, and advised me to join the church. I greatly enjoyed the preaching, and talked with several who told me to tell my feelings to the church; but I felt that I was too unworthy to try to live with a people that looked to me like they did. I thought I had never before seen what kind of people they were, and that I would give anything if I was only fit to live with them, but felt I was not. After I came home I felt that I had done worse than all, for now I was not only deceived but had also deceived the people of God, which I felt was worse. I wished that I had not said a word to anyone about my feelings. These feelings lasted a few days and then wore off to some extent, leaving me feeling that there was a duty resting upon me; but I knew not what. One day something seemed to impress it upon me to pray for it to be revealed to me what my duty was. After trying a time or two the same seemed to say, go where you were once delivered. It seemed to me that I went as one drawn to the place where I first received rest, and tried to pray, and my prayer was, Lord what wilt thou have me to do, and it seemed that the answer came, go, unite with the church. I felt then if I was spared until I got an opportunity I would offer, so the next meeting I went, and tried to tell them what I hoped the Lord had done for my soul, was received and baptized on Monday following, by Elder Isaac Jones, and whether I am what I hope I am or not, I here received a peace and rest that I could not elsewhere. I feel to-day that if I am one of God's children's I am one of the least; but one thing I know, there has been a change. I can't say that it is the right kind, but the parties; worldly amusements, gay company I once enjoyed beyond everything else I can't enjoy at all now—but they seem foolish to me. Therefore I try to shun all such. The company of those that I believe that have been called from nature's night are the only people I can find joy among. The members of the church I love, and enjoy meeting and preaching, and these things have once seemed as foolish to me as the things I then enjoyed seem to me now. What I have written here I have not written because I felt that I had so much to write, not because I could tell so much, but because I felt (as I have said before) impressed from some source to do so. I have had to put in so many words to try to express my feelings, I will close for fear of being in the way of some one more worthy, but hope and believe if my impression to write is of the Lord, it will be blessed to some good, in some way, to some one, not because I had as much to tell. Now I would say, that I believe if I am saved it will be by the mercy of God, not by anything I have ever done, or ever can do.

All who may read this please pray for me.

Your unworthy sister, if one at all.

Walter, N. C., March, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—There is continually passing through the minds of us poor mortals thoughts as we travel down the path of time, and I have concluded to pen you a few thoughts on a picture of the heavenly kingdom I had lately. There is near the top of one of the tallest Alps a valley or belt of land that completely surrounds the Alp. This Alp, with all the country surrounding it, is in possession of one individual. The country around is used for grazing purposes until a certain season of the year, then the owner of the possession takes his sheep up to the valley near the top of the Alp there to graze. This Alp I have described is Zion, the City of God.

When we are feasting on the heavenly Manna, as we pass down the stream of time, and how seldom it seems it pleases the Giver of all blessings to break the bread of life to us, we are then in the valley of the Master's spiritual blessings near the top of the Alp (Zion).

but when it pleases the Holy One to hide his face from us for a season and leave us to grope our way in the dark we are then in the valley and broad possession at the foot of the Alp of sin and degradation, and as this is large it looks to us we are mostly in the valley of sin and many there be that will ever travel this way until the end of time, for it is said, "broad is the road and wide is the gate that leadeth unto death, and many go in thereat." And again, "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Doubtless you are ready to ask: How are we going to get upon this Alp?—"Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life. I am the door. By me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture."—St. John 10: 9.

Vain are the endeavors of man to be the possessor of his spiritual kingdom. "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold but climbeth some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—St. John 10: 1.

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow me."—1st John, 10: 27. All that the Father giveth me come unto me, and he that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out. Our kind and heavenly Father sits upon the pinnacle of this Alp (Zion) and beholds the inhabitants of the earth and says, "I am God and besides me there is none other. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end." He sees all our situations in life, even in the valley of sin or upon the Mount. He gave to his Son a people, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. And surely they are a peculiar people, they trust alone in Jesus for life and salvation.

Another thought of this Alp: There is no water upon it. Jesus said unto the woman at the well, "The water that I shall give unto thee to drink shall be in thee a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Again, "I give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely." Who then are the thirsty ones but us poor, tempest-tossed ones, continually looking up to the haven of desired rest, who feel our sins like mountains rise? Glad would be our hearts if we knew the master had said, "surely thy sins which are many are all forgiven thee." This is my only hope, trusting in the King of Zion for life and salvation. And again, of this Alp it is said, "There shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light and they shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 22: 15.

When the Lord is pleased to manifest himself to us by his Spirit's power all seems bright. We look away from earth and earthly things. Then can we sing:

"There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign.
Where infinite day excludes the night
And pleasures banish pain."

But in this sinful state, continually we desire to climb where Moses stood and view the landscape o'er.

This I think was the case with Moses. He was permitted to see the Promise Land from an adjoining Alp, and the beauties of it, by an eye of faith—but not to be carried away in sin to be the glad recipient of it. Salvation's wall surrounded this Alp, and underneath are his everlasting arms. Then we are saved with an everlasting salvation. Jesus is our Rock, our Defense. Then ever lead me blessed Saviour to the rock that is higher than I.

Is this not grand, dear brethren, that we have a strong city, and that glorious things of thee are spoken, Zion City of our God. All that the Father giveth Jesus shall come to this Alp (Zion), for the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion, they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Then shall we bask in the sunlight of his countenance forever and ever.

May this hope brighten and cheer your pathway as you descend the steps of time. Then shall we be free from the cares and trials of this life. Here we feel we have no continuing city. Often we are made to exclaim: O!

wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I am so vile, so prone to sin, I fear I am not born again. May it be our happy lot after the trials of this life are over to meet in the City of God.

Hoping the Lord may yet spare you many years to comfort the saints, thro' your pens, I am as ever, your brother in christian love.

SALUTATION.

DEAR SISTER BILLUPS, :—As I have been with you but very little since I was quite young, you would be surprised to know how often I think of you. My mind often goes back to those happy days when my mother's eyes would sparkle with joy, at the voice of the rejoicing children saying, "Mrs. Billups is coming." We never failed to have a good time. I then felt that you all were the happiest people on earth. Often would the members come to see my parents and sing many, many pretty hymns, and talk of the Lord, and gladness my heart because of their joy. I have witnessed much bitter trouble since then, and I guess you have too; but I hope you do not feel lonely and forsaken. I hope the members do visit you. There is one I know who would rejoice to wash your feet, but cannot get to see you. But if you can feel that the Lord is with you at all times, that is enough. The fire cannot burn you, the lion cannot hurt you, and the raven will feed you. I guess you do not feel His presence at all times, for I think satan is going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down on it, as he was in the days of Job, to destroy the pleasure of the Lord's children. I think he has worked many ways to take my very reason from me, but God is faithful; 1st Cor. 10: 13, and I trust only in him. I would lay aside every weight, and run with patience the race set before us, but the things I would I do not. I would be quiet, but I sink in deep mire where there is no standing. Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

I cannot learn to glory in tribulation, but I think I have learned that hope maketh not ashamed. I would not murmur, I would rejoice, and give thanks always to the Lord, for he hath blessed me indeed. Paul says, I would not have you to be ignorant brethren concerning them which are asleep, that you sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. I do agree with him. Often when my tears of sorrow are falling for my loved ones that are gone, my heart does rejoice that they are free from this world of sin and sorrow, toil and pain. I suppose you heard that father's baby Gacy A. Barnhill died with consumption Feb. 5th 1887. Just before she died she called me to her bedside, and said there was a carbuncle under her arm that must be cut, but the next moment she said, death, death, and raised her eyes Heavenward with a calm sweet look all over her face, that never left it while she remained out of earth, and said, oh Lord I have suffered, let it be quick and easy. Then she asked me where was her husband, I called him. He came in haste, but she had passed away without a struggle. I thought in health she was the most devoted mother I ever knew, but she seemed to give up all care for her children, and said she believed the Lord would provide for them. One week before she died she said to me, Bett, you know you asked me to show you the last letter I got from brother. I said yes, but forgot it. She said no, I was ashamed for you to see how I had been writing to him. I was not so ashamed of him, because he could not see me, and I am ashamed of you now. Then she told me that which was worth more to me than all the wealth this world contains, and gave me the letter.

I will copy the letter, as your son and brother were in the war together, and now in the church together.

DEAR SISTER :—I am more than glad you have been led to see yourself a poor sinner. I do thank God and take courage, for none can see their sin until their eyes are opened by the spirit. Now dear sister the promise is, Come unto me, all ye weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. That is the language of our Redeemer while he was here in the flesh, and Paul says, I am persuaded that the good work that God has begun in you he will perform till the day of Jesus Christ, which is his second coming to us in death, for He will be with his people, and lead them through the trying scenes of death, and waft their spirits to glory, clothed in his righteousness, without spot or blemish, singing praise to God for the gift of his Son to bear in his own body the sins of his people, who were given to him before the world began. We have no glory to claim, for he hath redeemed us when we were sinners, and alienated from God, and by nature the children of wrath even as others; but in the fullness of his time God sends the spirit of his Son—in our hearts crying, Abba, Father. Then let us thank God for his gift of his only Son, who has purchased us with his own blood, on the tree of the cross, that all who believe on him shall have life. After they have been led by the spirit through the fiery trials of affliction, and tempted by satan to almost curse God and die, then like the murmuring children of Israel on the banks of the Red Sea, they are sure to hear the welcome word stand still and see the salvation of God, for these Egyptians you have seen to day you shall see them no more forever, Blessed language. Well I remember as I stood there desiring to return to the world of sin and pleasure, after I had been under the law and found no rest there, but condemnation, and could fully see the justice of God in cutting me off from time, and appointing my portion with the unbelievers, but God be praised I was brought through the floods dry shod, yes rejoicing in my blessed Jesus who is the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believeth. Now I can look back on the sins that pursued me to the end, and see them dead, our sins washed away by the blood of Jesus.

Now I hope I have a robe of righteousness wrought by my Lord and Savior, unmerited on my part. Yes, flesh and blood have not revealed these things to me, neither have men brought them to me.

Dear sister, if you are hungering and thirsting for righteousness, the promise is, come unto me, and you shall be filled. If you are needy come and buy without money. You asked me to pray for you. My dear sister, my soul has gone out in prayer for all of my dear sisters and their families' spiritual welfare, ever since I have had a hope. I also ask your prayers, and feel the need of the prayers of all christians every where. Now I will close. Yours truly,
J. W. PITTMAN.

He was nearly killed by his mules running away while hauling cotton to the gin last fall. His wife wrote me it was 18 nights they had to set up with him, but did not lack for company, nor attention, and their good neighbors went into the field and picked out 2 bales of cotton for him; and did not charge at all. They will never know how much I thank them, because I cannot reward them, but I believe the Lord will reward them.

If it were not that I do believe we must share a portion of these unsearchable judgments to inherit the riches that are so deep that we could never get to them with all this world's wisdom and knowledge, I feel that I should long since have been a wreck of despair. Paul says, Now, no chastising for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby; and yet I cannot be patient. I desire your prayers. I will close. Yours in hope of eternal life.
BETTIE A. LEGGETT.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I was much surprised to see the piece I wrote when I sent on my remittance. You know I wrote that it was not for publication, but if you thought it worthy a place in your valuable paper I ought to rejoice instead of weep about it.

If you think this worthy give it space when convenient. Please remember me at the throne of grace.

Editorial.

WHAT IS GOOD,
(To J. H. H. C.)

A brother signing his name as above states that he is exercised very much in his mind about preaching or publishing the name of Jesus, but that he feels too unworthy, and has suffered long in consequence of holding his peace. Like others in trouble, he desires to know what to do.

What is better than to tell the church of your trouble and impression, and let them hear you, and they will decide faithfully, if they have the mind of Christ.

If after hearing you, the church gives you encouragement, and bids you go on, and your feelings are relieved in so doing, then you can do so with the approbation of your brethren. But, if after the brethren hear you, they decide that you should cease speaking, and hold your peace then you had better hearken to your brethren, and bear the burden alone rather than burden others with that which profits no one.

One trouble is found in stopping some people from talking that have no gift. Such people are sometimes hard to hold back.

These remarks are not made to hint that I suppose this brother has no gift, or would be troublesome to catch again, if once loosed, like a horse or mule who slips the bit and is very hard to catch after that. I do not so mean, for from what he writes he appears to feel the matter properly and view it right.

It is a great cross to one called of God to preach, and it would be a relief to him if the church could stop him and ease him of this business. P. D. G.

FELLOWSHIP.

One of the most essential elements necessary to the full enjoyments of church privileges is mutual fellowship. When two or more are alike exercised by the mutual faith of each, their fellowship for each other is mutual, and their communion is replete and complete, and their christian enjoyments attain to the highest degree possible in this life.

In order to a full appreciation of christian fellowship, the evidences of christianity must be fully manifested by each to the other. Fellowship for one grows out of what we see in that one that is desirable and worthy in our estimation of appreciation. But if while we behold and admire the riches of grace in that one, which must also be in us, or we could not appreciate them in him, we fail to properly exhibit the same in ourselves, we cannot have for us the same degree of fellowship that we have for him. If we are enabled to see the kingdom of God in one of his children as a result of having been born again, fellowship in its sweetness is conceived in our hearts for that child, by virtue of the constituent elements of that kingdom, in its spiritual character.

granting that the church is the kingdom referred to. I do not know that to be born again necessarily reveals the kingdom, but it does qualify the one thus born to see the kingdom, without which he could not see it. The one in whose heart this fellowship has been begotten may feel to have full fellowship for the church, and yet the church nor he may have mutual fellowship unless he has entered the kingdom or church, which he has the right to do, having been qualified for it by being born of water and of the spirit, for full fellowship cannot be had and enjoyed except the parties have been taught of God and are walking in his precepts and following his example. For one to fully appreciate the church, he must admire its doctrine, experience and practice, and likewise the admiration of the church rests upon him when these things are fully exemplified by him. Real, gospel, spiritual communion is the legitimate fruit of genuine fellowship. And the two are so blended in the unity of the spirit and in the bond of peace that there is really no difference between them in their power and sweetness.

Fellowship is to communion as is faith to belief, in affecting communion. One cannot believe without faith, neither can one commune without mutual fellowship. There is a difference between that fellowship we may have for one in his experience of the leadings of God's Spirit to the obtaining of a good hope through grace, and that necessary to a practical participation in partaking of the bread and wine as emblems of that inner fellowship and communion in the spirit by the death and resurrection of Christ. There are many in whom I see satisfactory evidences of their acceptance with Christ manifestly, and yet I cannot commune with them. If they have never taken up their cross and are not following Jesus as he has commanded, to commune with them would be to admit that all that are called, the church together with its laws and ordinances, amount to nothing, and therefore without any advantage whatever.

Communion is the crowning of all gospel and church privileges, therefore if one can attain unto it without first observing the commands of Jesus, then I see no reason whatever for the observance of anything but the ordinance of communion, and if we ignore baptism we may not even commune. But suppose one has been baptised by another denomination, can we then commune with him or he with us? No, because he does not fellowship us together with our doctrine and practice. But says one "I have fellowship for all denominations." So much the worse. Suppose one should espouse and preach all manner of doctrines that are now being promulgated by the various sects and orders in every city, from Zion, the city of the living God, to Mecca, what would be the result. He would soon be considered by all denominations as nothing. It is absolutely impossible for one to have fellowship for all denominations claiming to be worshippers of God, so as to commune with them in spirit and in truth. If the difference between Primitive Baptists and other denominations demands a separation it amounts to a bar of fellowship, and gospel communion is out of the question.

There were those on the day of Pentecost who gladly received the words of Peter, and were baptised; and they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And all that believed were together, and had all things in common. Where there is fellowship all spiritual things are in common, and whatever is considered indispensable is alike received, believed, and enjoyed by all. Says one, "I do not believe and hold to all that is preached and do not believe and hold to all that is done in my church." And yet you commune with it; "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial, or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."—2 Cor. 6: 14 to 18.

God's people are most fitly compared to sheep, and in this particular the characteristic of a sheep is very strikingly portrayed. The natural tendency of sheep is to flock together, but now and then we see one with a flock of goats, or with the cattle, and most strangely they have been known in the absence of other sheep to take up with their common enemy—the dog—and join him in the chase, apparently with as much energy as the dog, but should the sheep come up with the hare or fox it would not know what to do with him. So we see individuals sometimes hard at work with their comrades, in full chase of something they know not what, and could not tell why they are going that way, only that the largest crowd seems to go this way, and that which so many seek after must be good, but when the things sought for are obtained, if ever, they can no more feed upon it than a sheep can, or will eat a fox. All of God's people are taught of him, and they therefore have in effect the same experience, and in it is seen the same doctrine, and the leadings of the Spirit are to the same practice, and to rest in the one hope which is Christ in them the hope of glory. When these people—wherever they be and whatever may be their denominational name—join in conversation strictly confined to those things which they hold as reasons of their hope, there is perfect agreement. Their experience in substance is one, their faith is one, and their hope is one, and then they readily agree that their salvation is of the Lord, and a mutual fellowship for each other in a blessed experience of Grace binds them together in a bundle of love. But when they would let their lights shine before men there seems to be a flickering about the light and different shades of color, as it were, seem to be exhibited, which are intended as signals to others to avoid this or that, and follows this or that way. And consequently confusion and strife, as to the proper light to follow, springs up, and that sweet fellowship is disturbed. What is the cause of this? God shines in the heart of his people, and gives them the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Jesus Christ, and from this flows all true spiritual fellowship, but the devil sometimes unawares sets a kind of light-house in the head, and some are inclined to follow his light in doctrine and practice, while at the same time they admit that their salvation and hope of heaven is not in harmony with that light in the heart, and salvation by grace. But still many follow in action the head light, and therefore those who in action as well as hope follow the heart light can not fellowship their walk, and he hence cannot commune with them. We do not necessarily mean that others have no hope, where we refuse to commune with them, or to allow them so to do with us, but while they may have an experience and hope for which we have fellowship yet they advocate theories gotten up by men, and their practice is not such as we think constitutes that authorized by the word. "How can two walk together except they be agreed."

It is right God's people should be together in word and deed, therefore we endeavor to maintain the consistency of divine truth in everything.

There is a class of believers who have not entered the form of fellowship with others nor the warmth of it with the church, who themselves have individual fellowship for the church, but do not enjoy mutual fellowship with it, from the fact they have not done as Jesus told one once, to go home to his friends and tell them how the Lord had had mercy upon him—

No one can know of the true and full sweetness of christian fellowship until they have received from the church the full tokens of fellowship for them, and this cannot be done until they relate to the church the dealings of God with them together with a desire to be with it.

The mystic power which holds the church so gloriously passive while a gospel experience is being related by the least of the saints is most wonderful to contemplate! It is not possible for the church when in order to refuse its fellowship to one who thus comes.

Sometimes a dear child of God says: I love the people of God and would love to be with them, but I fear they would not have such a poor sinful creature as I am. Dear child, if you love those people and desire to be with them, you need not fear to go: they desire you to come as much as you desire to come—or in other words they desire all of like precious faith and fellowship to be with them, for they want to be with such, and therefore they want to be with you,

If you have Jesus for your hope they will not—cannot reject you, and if they think you have not such a hope, they will deal faithfully with you, and will be your friends and true sympathizers.

All the principles virtue and power of Gospel fellowship are in the divine nature, in which the fellowship of the Father, the Son, the apostles and the disciples—followers of Jesus—to day is the same.

If any enjoy that fellowship let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Jesus.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER—When it suits you please give your views on Psalms, 37 : 25. "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." also, Isaiah 33 : 20—21. "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities, thine eyes shall see Jerusalem, a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby," and oblige one of the least,

WM. F. SLOAN.

"I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Psalm 37 : 25.

Remarks.

Under the old Testament dispensation there were temporal rewards to the obedient Jew, and temporal punishments to the disobedient Jew. In that sense it was walking by sight. The man that kept the law and was righteous in his conduct reaped a temporal, present reward. One could tell therefore from the prosperity or adversity, the fortune, or misfortune of a man whether he was a righteous man or not. When the kings of Israel walked in God's commandments, their enemies fled from them. When they were wicked they fled before their enemies. So when the nations of Israel served God the blessings of heaven rested upon them in their basket and store. Then there was no famine, no lack of any good thing, no sickness. But when Israel as a nation sinned, famine, plague and war, with other evils sprang up everywhere, or overtook them, and they fled and fell down before their enemies. This was also true of individuals to such an extent that the Lord God was a sun and a shield to them that walked uprightly, even withholding no good thing. These blessings also extended to temporal favors and mercies to such a degree that the writer of the 37th, Psalm, even when an old man, could say, I have been young, but now I am old, yet have I never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

The blessing of God upon national Israel, or its individual members, when obedient, extended also to their seed or children. For the blessing of God descended from father to son, even to many generations. For David's sake God blessed his seed for generations. Your life is more than bread and meat, or raiment. The obedient christian here in this present life finds his bread sure and his waters do not fail.

Is there no higher truth taught? certainly. In the gospel we see that the obedient, humble christian finds favor that is better than daily bread.

See how the Lord hears him when he cries unto him, and he makes a way for him, and makes even his enemies to be at peace with him. That is his body is kept under and his walk is upright. He has favor in the eyes of his brethren in the church. He does not perish, but the blessing of the Lord is upon him.

In the best of all senses Jesus is the righteous man here named who is never forsaken. He is the only righteous man thus, and the upright one whose end is peace. In perfect obedience Jesus lived and was obedient unto death. His righteousness is as the great deep that covers all the monsters of our sins, and buries forever our iniquities. For he is the Lord our righteousness. His righteousness is as the great mountains rising above all our guilt, and standing forever impregnable and immovable. Above the brightness of the sun he shines as our righteousness, and he is the righteous one that is never forsaken.

His seed are his people counted to him for a generation, a holy seed, a royal family, and they never beg their bread. That is they shall never perish. In a sense they hunger, and often they beg at the throne of grace where their needs are all surely supplied. Their Father grants their desire even to the half of the kingdom, as it were. But they never shall perish, and in that sense the seed of Christ never beg their bread. Even down to old age all his people shall prove his sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love.

P. D. G.

Also Isaiah 33: 20, 21, "Look upon Zion," &c.

The Lord has filled Zion with judgment and righteousness, therefore wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of her times. Zion is exalted above the hills, and is the munition of rocks. Walk about Zion, behold her towers, mark well ye her bulwarks. This is the habitation of the God of Jacob, more blessed than all the other dwelling places. For while distress and confusion of face cover all other places, Zion is beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth.

None can dwell in this holy mount save those that have clean hands. Those that walk righteously and speak uprightly dwell there.

The people that dwell in Zion are not a fierce and warlike people, but a peaceable people, even lovers of peace. Nor do they speak a strange language, ever giving all the glory of salvation unto God. The babel of a mixed language and confused noises is never heard in Zion. The tongue of the stammerer is not heard in her palaces.— With great plainness of speech, and with one tongue they all do speak giving glory to God.

The eyes of them that see shall not be dim. But thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty. Blessed are your eyes for they see. Then look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities, the place of our glorious worship, where the King is held in his galleries, and is the King among ten thousand.

God's people have a quiet habitation and safe resting place. They love to know that the warfare is accomplished, that the work is finished, that salvation is completed. Hence they rest in this glorious Mount Zion. They are children of peace. The great King David who has conquered all his enemies dwells in Jerusalem. Hence we say peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

Here is a tabernacle that shall not be taken down. How unlike the tabernacle in the wilderness which must be taken down whenever Israel moved.— Jesus is the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. Jesus died once unto sin but now he dieth no more, but ever liveth unto God.

Not one of the stakes thereof shall be removed. This ancient landmark should stand forever. No pillar, nor brace, girdle nor stay in this temple shall ever be loosed or removed. The doctrine of God our Saviour is one. The foreknowledge, the beginning corner, runs to the predestination of God, from thence it runs to the justification of God, and from thence to the glorification of God. Nor can any one of these stakes ever be moved. Here is an enduring building resting on the chief corner-stone, elect and precious.

Nor shall any one of the cords ever be loosed. The cord of God's everlasting love binds all these stakes together in one building. When the tabernacle in the wilderness was set up the curtains as cords held the posts or stakes together. So the repentance, the faith, the hope, the patience, the joy, the meekness, the true trials of the children of God, cement and bind them together and not one of these cords of love shall ever be loosed. A threefold cord is not easily broken, nor is faith, hope and charity.

The glorious Lord shall be unto the church a place of broad waters and streams. Nor shall any galley with oars go there. They that row galleys work and look a different way from the one they go. They look one way and go the opposite way. They have to work their way too. But no such warlike galleys shall be there, nor any such strange work as this shall be seen there. The people of God have their faces towards Zion, the city of our solemnities, nor must they look back. But they that row boats do not look the way they are going. Besides they depend on their own labor and toil to go along.— They also have war in their hearts against Zion, and were they permitted to enter into the broad haven of peace and joy where false doctrines (strong winds of the deep) do not blow, they would soon mar the peace of Zion.

Nor do any gallant or proud warlike ships ever pass that way, nor can they enter these peaceable, broad waters, or the abounding grace of God, for there the Lord reigns forever and rules his people in blessed and perfect peace.

How beautiful and true are the figures used by the Holy Ghost to show the glory of God in Zion, the perfection of beauty. How peaceful too is the haven of rest in the bosom of God's everlasting love. For none shall hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain.

Brother Sloane, I feel that what is written above is very feebly done. But it may be that the Lord may bless it to some little one. P. D. G.

PINE VIEW.

The brethren and friends around Spring Hope, Nash county, N. C., desire to build a meeting house for the worship of Almighty God at that place. It is a new place opening up, and we feel that when the people have the mind to do such things it is a good sign, and that we should use the opportunity.

They will be glad of help from abroad too.

Any one feeling disposed to help them will hand their gifts, or send them, to Elder Thomas Felton, Saratoga, N. C., or to myself.

I hope this will stir up the brethren around Nashville, N. C., to do likewise; for the friends of Baptists around that town are waiting to help build a house there. P. D. G.

BROTHER GOLD:—Enclosed I send 5 dollars to you for that poor, afflicted brother Bartley Perkins, of Wilson County.

I do feel that such cases should be helped by those that can spare something, and I feel glad to be able to cast in my mite for the temporal relief of one that I trust to meet where poverty will not be known, and they that have shall be as those that have not. I am glad that brother Perkin's case is known to the public, and I do hope that every one that can will help a little. He will be as well off as those that have, when we are gone from time.

Remarks.

Brother Perkins is very much afflicted, as brother Hassell well states. His church renders him some help. But there are not many members in his church that can do much in that way. But they are not neglectful of him. Besides that there are friends that help him. All this fails to relieve his sufferings, though it is some relief in some sense.

He lives with his brother and wife, who is a Free Will preacher, and they care for him. Besides he receives $12 per month from Wilson Co. each month, in cash.

I feel it due to his church and the County to make these statements which have been brought to my knowledge more fully since Brother Hassell published an appeal in behalf of him.

These statements are not made to discourage any from giving him. He is indeed a most pitiable object, and it is right and proper to help him.

Already brethren and friends have been sending help to him very liberally which I will send to him as soon as I have an opportunity. P. D. G.

UNION MEETINGS.

The Skewarkey Union is appointed to meet with the church at Bare Grass, and to commence on Friday before the 5th Sunday in April.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

The spring session of the Mayo association will be held with the church at Spoon Creek, in Patrick Co., Va., commencing on Saturday before the 3rd Sunday in May next. Visiting brethren coming by R. R. can get off at Critz Depot, on the Danville and New River R. R. two miles from the church. Visiting brethren are invited to attend.

F. J. STONE.

The Baltimore Association will be held with the church at Black Rock, commencing on Wednesday May 16th 1888, and continue three days. Those attending must be in Baltimore in time to take the train at Calvert station, on Tuesday, May 15th at 2:30 P. M. for Cockeyville, on the Northern Central R. R., where they will be met and cared for.

All who can come are cordially invited. F. A. CHICK.

Obituary.

SARAH ANNIE GOLD SUMMERS.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please publish the death of our dear little daughter, Sarah Annie Gold Summers, who departed this life January 13th, 1888; aged 12 years, 7 months and 13 days. She was the daughter of William and Nannie L. Summers.

Annie Gold died of diphtheria. She was taken with a violent fever. We called in our family physician who did all in his power to relieve her. She had every attention that a heart-stricken mother, together with the family and friends, could give her; but all could not stay the hand death. Annie was a kind, obedient and affectionate child. None knew her but to love her. The loss of this dear child to me is really shocking. It seems sometime almost more than I can bear, for she was indeed a precious child to me. Her love and affection was so great for me that she never wanted to stay away from me. Anything she could do for my comfort was her greatest pleasure, and such was my love and devotion for her that it was heartrending and a most bitter trial to me to part with her. I feel like I can say with old Job that the thing I greatly feared has come upon me, for she has often said to me, "Ma, what could you do without me? and how could I do without you?" I often felt fearful that she would be taken from me, for I thought she was too good a child for me in this world of sin and sorrow. She was so gentle, loving and kind to her brothers and sisters who did all they could for her comfort, and although I feel sad and lonely, and am forced with solemnity to say, that the death of little Annie has caused a vacancy in our house that cannot be filled; but we have one consolation, for we hope and believe she has gone to rest. She bore her affliction with so much patience. She only lived eleven days from the time she was taken sick, and although her suffering was very great she could get up without help till the last day she lived; and on the last evening that she lived the doctor said to her: "Annie, you ought to take some toddy, for you are now almost ready to give up life, your little hands are now getting cold." Although I knew it myself, it seemed like it would almost break my heart to hear these solemn words about one so dear to me. Though it did not seem to shock her in the least. And while I bent over her in sorrow I tried to ask the Lord to give me some evidence of her future happiness; and in the midst of my grief a beautiful hymn rolled through my mind as though I was singing it, which gave me great consolation; awhile before she died she put her precious little arm, weak and feeble as it was, around my neck and tried to draw me nearer to her; then afterwards raised her right hand and arm nearly straight up, and although she could not speak above a low whisper, I believe she wanted to show me where she was going. She was entirely in her right mind to the last. The next morning after she died, while thinking of my sad and lonely condition, and though I wanted to be submissive to the hand of Providence, it seemed I could not be reconciled to the death of my dear little Annie. This same hymn that rolled through my mind before she died was presented to my mind again, as though some one was singing it, which, together with other evidences give a good hope of her future happiness.

And although we are deprived of her company here below, we cannot grieve as though we had no hope.

My dearest little Annie Gold,
The object of my love,
Thy body now lies faint and cold,
Thy spirit 's gone to Christ above.

Annie, thou art gone to rest
With Jesus Christ our King,
By him to be forever blest,
And with the angels sing.

Little Annie was to me so dear
It grieves me much to see her go,
But she has gone and left me here
In this wilderness of woe.

But when the righteous Judge shall come
To summon me away,
I hope, with Annie, to go home
To the bright world of endless day.

Dear editor, I hope you will remember one who earnestly desires an interest in the prayers of all God's people. I subscribe myself as ever, a friend and well-wisher of the cause of Christ.

NANNIE L. SUMMERS.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its ehords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

BORN AGAIN.

When first my sinful self I saw,
Condemned by God's most Holy law,
I saw that sin to death must reign,
And that I must be born again.

I saw the law had no relief
But only added to my grief !
Its just demands but gave me pain.
I saw I must be born again.

A sinner vile, I turned away,
While in my heart a burden lay,
All hope of Heaven in me was slain.
I saw I must be born again.

I plead with Jesus for his love,
That I might with him dwell above,
And thus he spoke in substance plain,
I say, you must be born again.

Lord, how can I, a sinner vile ?
Be born when I am not a child ?
The way is clear, the way is plain,
I said you must be born again.

I prayed that I, this thing might see,
And be from sin and bondage free,
But still the needful thing remained—
The sinner must be born again.

At last when all my powers had failed,
And sin my soul had sore assailed !
The power of God within me reigned Whereby a man was born again.

This man who, once a child of wrath,
Had roamed in sin's destructive path,
Is made this truth to see quite plain—
A sinner still, yet born again.

Two natures now doth in him dwell,
One leads to heaven, one leads to hell !
Which warfare does the truth maintain,
This sinner has been born again.

One nature does to flesh pertain,
The other doth divine remain,
And yet the truth is still sustained
This sinner has been born again.

O may I not this truth proclaim,
By power divine in Jesus' name ?

A hope in Christ is not in vain—
The man who hopes is born again.

As born of God he doth not sin,
The seed of him remains within !
The flesh from sin cannot refrain,
A man must hope though born again.

O happy thought that saints shall meet
Around the throne at Jesus' feet,
To join in one loud, long refrain—
The sinner man was born again

Born from beneath, born from above,
Born once in sin, again in love,
Born from the dead, with Christ to reign,
All born of God, yes born again.

PREDESTINATION

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Allow me to say some things about predestination wherein I would correct a mistake, and define my position. For judging from the writings of those who contend for God's "Absolute predestination of all things," it seems they conclude that all who differ with them in any point, must necessarily believe in a "chance system."

I know that most people do believe in a chance system of universal government, as of salvation too: but if any Primitive Baptists do, I do not wish to be condemned with them. For with all my heart and mind, I do believe in God's eternal power and god-head, his fore-knowledge, sovereignty, and royal prerogative to decree and control all things and events; and no language is too strong for me in declaring and defending the truth that he works all things after the counsel of his own will; and that his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure.

As to the fact that God predestinated and works all things after the counsel of his will, I agree with those referred to; while as to the nature and design, and hence, manner and means of fulfilling that counsel and will, in time, I suppose we differ.

Yet my dear brethren, with whom I thus differ, as in the flesh, we are subject to error and to differences on some points. And how can we better search and serve truth and one another, than by an exchange of ideas? It is not this I so much deplore and object to, but a striving, partisan spirit of controversy. And feeling to realize that I write with fear and trembling toward God, and in a lowly, loving spirit toward you with whom I may differ, I venture to write freely, without the fear of offending, for the meek and lowly spirit of Christ pervading, is discerned and as much respected in an honest difference, as in a full agreement.

Then dear brethren, you that to-day contend for God's absolute predestination of all things, I differ with you, nor yet believe in a chance system in whole or in part. Not therefore in the fact that God predestinated all things in a sense; but in declaring that God immediately works all things in fulfillment thereof; and that as embracing all things that exist or transpire, and just as they exist or transpire in time, whether good or bad—right or wrong, as regarded by us, is wherein we differ.

To illustrate: you would, if I correctly understand you, make the world a vast, complicated machine; the machinist (God) has not only made the whole, as such, but also each one of the ten thousand wheels, whether big or little, to honor or dishonor, he has formed as it pleased him, and set in its own appointed place to perform its own particular part, which it must do, nor can do else, and so with every other part of the whole. Then the machinist, as alone having the right and control, sets the whole in motion; and so continues to hold and exercise the entire control, working as he pleases in all things.

As thus operated by the direct, im- mediate, unaided, unhindered hand of the Maker and Machinist, you would exemplify the immediate hand of God in fulfilling in time his decrees predestinated in eternity.

To which I object; first, in that the whole must necessarily move in the one certain way as acted upon by a foreign, superior, and compelling power, as much as to say man fell as acted upon by the ruling and over-mastering hand of God, and this principle of motion, as referring all motive power and action back to the causing, moving hand, carries all moral responsibility with it, leaving the machine in all its parts passive and irresponsible.

Another objection in this point, God as thus immediately working the pleasure of his will, insures that will in the sense of personal desire, or as independent of other things and attributes. And the deduction is, that since God thus works all things according to his own will, and that will is infinitely good and since he does all his pleasure, and that pleasure is to satisfy the counsel of his own desire; and since, according to your theory, all things that exist, and all events that transpire in time, are thus worked out by his direct, unerring, unhindered hand; then I say, there is no defect, no wrong, and all results, whether termed sinful or otherwise, are all good and proper, and all alike good and proper.

According to which, how can God find any fault with any man or thing? How can you complain at any existing fact, or deplore any event? Nor should you, among other things, deplore this difference of opinion—since, as alike passive, we alike, and irresistibly, receive different impressions as acted upon by forces beyond our control? Indeed it seems to me that you should regard all things, all wheels and vessels whether to honor or dishonor; all events whether fortunate or unfortunate, all deeds and actions of men, whether sinful or otherwise as considered by us; as all good and right, "because precisely what God intended or predestinated them to be." For had you, or I or any event, been otherwise, had the serpent been straight, or the dove crooked, or anything different from what it is, there would have been a defect in the workmanship.

Then my objections are simply to the mode and manner in which you say God works his decrees in time ; and whereby you ascribe without distinction, all things, whether good, bad or indifferent, that exist or transpire in time to the direct, immediate hand of God as thoroughly fulfilling his own predestinated will, and that will in the sense in which it is done in heaven.

But dear brethren, this does not affect my love and fellowship for you ; nor do I thus write to condemn you ; but to show you wherein and why I differ with you, in that I would have error eradicated, whether in you or myself. Nor would I be condemned for believing in a chance system, as I will try to show you. For though differing as shown, I repeat, I believe God has the sovereign prerogative to, and does control all things, and that his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure.

But now as to the nature of that will and the design of that counsel ? and to come to the point at once—as to the existence of a sinner, and as to sin and death daily transpiring ? You have said that whatever exists, and whatever transpires in time, all are in fulfillment of God's predestination in eternity, and all harmonize with his will and desire, as in the sense of pleasing satisfaction and acceptance ; that is, I infer this last from the first.

I say, in a sense, God predestinated all things whether good or evil. And that his word, law and works of hand direct, or indirect, as at the beginning, prove in what sense the one, and in what manner the other.

We will say a sinner exists. Do you say therefore God immediately predestinated a sinner should exist ? Why not have made one ? For I say the immediate hand of God as directly performing any work, insures his immediate predestination thereof in eternity, and otherwise precludes that idea of predestination. As an instance, the Lord, fore-seeing he must directly do all the work in the salvation of his church, predestinated all things accordingly in connection.

But God made, not a sinner, but a man good and upright, without sin ; and thereby proved that he had predestinated man thus made. God directly gave him a law ; proving he had predestinated that man should be a legal subject and morally accountable. And God annexed a penalty, and directly named a certain violation sin ; and the result death ; thereby proving he had predestinated in eternity, that a violation of law should be counted sin ; and the disobedience involved should constitute a sinner ; and the result should be death. God gave the man choice between good and evil, and thus proved that he had predestinated that man should have free volition of will. And when man sinned, God directly condemned him and named his forfeiture and punishment ; and thereby proved that he had predestinated to establish and leave intact the moral responsibility and legal accountability of man.

And thus, I understand that not immediately did God predestinate a sinner ; but that a violation of law should make one. Not immediately did God predestinate evil, but that disobedience should establish it. Not immediately did God predestinate sin, but that transgression should cause it. Not immediately did God predestinate death, but that transgression should cause it. Hence an Apostle said, not whereas by God's predestination, but "whereas by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin ; so that death hath passed upon all, for that all have sinned."

And thus mediately, or in a secondary sense, God predestinated sin and death, and all evil existing or transpiring. Thus he predestinated or made the wicked for the day of evil ; sent Joseph in bonds to Egypt ; hardened Pharaoh's heart, and all such things as are ascribed to him in the scriptures. And thus he decrees or creates darkness and disaster to the disobedient and rebellious ; as also creates light, love, joy and a peaceful and quiet life to the obedient.

But does not this free volition of will to man let a chance plank or principle into the system of universal government? And may not this outlet to evil and rebellion frustrate the designs of God at times? No indeed! These forces, as straws before the wind storm, to the almighty, eternal, sovereign, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent God only and true, like Pharaoh's evil and rebellious designs, do but open and clear the way, as nothing else could, wherein he may, manifestly to all earth, display the surpassing strength and glorious beauty of his out-stretched arm in overruling these wicked designs to the accomplishment of some great good to his elect, always involved, and then in prescribing their limit with a "thus far, and no further shalt thou go." And his children involved, may thus measure the deeper well of his saving, providing grace, and avenging love, calling forth higher and sweeter strains of praise to his name. And thus making their wrath to praise him, while the remainder he restrains, his great name and power are glorified in the earth.

Indeed, this is the only opening I can see in all the system, whereby God can fulfill his word to restrict the bounds of wicked men and deeds, and thus overrule and restrain evil without, to say the least, the appearance of overruling and restraining his own predestinating hand.

But to return, and illustrate—a wise and just father in his fatherly right and prerogative to rule his own, decrees a code of laws for the mutual good, honor, order and regulation of his household; one clause of which says, if one brother shall stone another, he shall be banished." And now we will say, one son does stone his brother. And now I ask did that father's law necessitate a stoning or a banishment to any? Did that father predestinate that son to stone that brother? No indeed. To say yes to this is to say the father's will shall not be done? Far from it, for while he willed not stoning or banishment, nor evil to any, he still does will as predestinated, that his authority, as ruler and law giver of his house, should be sustained, and his counsel stand as honored by a just and full execution of his laws, no item of which said "stone your brother." Then that son stoned his brother, not because his father predestinated he should, but because of evil in his heart. He is guilty, not because of predestination, but because of violation of law. Else how could his father punish him, or rather, how could his law banish him?

And his banishment that now transpires? is it because his father had predestinated it prior and personally? Is it because precisely what the father intended? Would there be a defect in the system of government without the stoning or banishment? No item in that law said banish that particular son, or made any personal provisions, or reference. But the very same clause that banished him as guilty; would have retained and honored him, as innocent. Then the father's law is not responsible as not predestinating particular and personal evil. And that son, not by predestination, but by disobedience is brought under the power of a general law. Predestination must be personal, to become responsible for personal deeds. That law condemned a supposed violator and not a person.

And the father's will involved and that is thus fulfilled in the banishment of that son, is not in the will personal desire toward him; for whom we may say he grieved; but was that higher paramount will as of a ruler, to which personal will is subject, and which is synonymous with his counsel as embracing all his attributes; and which to honor is to uphold the word of his power, as it were his throne by a just execution of his laws. In the phrase, "God's counsel shall stand," the word counsel, as embracing implies all of God's attributes and which to stand as honored is to do all his pleasure.

According with which will and principle of predestination that son was banished. And that banishment declared the son's volition of will and moral accountability. And, yet there is a sense—a secondary sense—in which that father predestinated that stoning and banishment, as that where there is no law there is no sin. Had the father made no law; or making it, had named no violation or penalty banishment: there could have been none. But in his sovereign right to rule his own, it was his pleasure and unquestionable prerogative to make a law, and annex such penalties as seemed good. And as naming banishment the penalty of stoning, he did thereby indirectly or mediately predestinate the sin, and its evil results. Not, however to any particular person, but to the transgressor. And thus sin and guilt are imputed, not because of immediate, or special—personal—predestination to that intent; and which it must be to become responsible, but because of disobedience that brought under the power of a general law.

And thus we see how God predestinated evil; and how he condemns and punishes the violator of law, and also how he accepts the expiatory work of Jesus in appeasing his wrath or justice in man's behalf.

And when we see his consuming wrath poured out upon the personally innocent head of his beloved son, we may see, not only the nature of that will being thus fulfilled, but also by it measure, to some extent, the lack, the defect of man as pertaining to his law. Nor would I dare ascribe that defect or lack to the predestination of God; which it seems to me, you, according to your views, must do. But yet you have said there is no defect in his workmanship. You see I cannot reconcile your ideas. Yet Jesus said, "I come to do thy will O God. I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

You that contend so strenuously for God's absolute, immediate predestination of all things that exist, or transpire, in time, whether according to, or contrary to his law, whether cause or effect, and that so absolutely and unhindered, so fully and entirely, so directly and irresistibly, as not to allow the word permit to any thing existing or transpiring, how can you allow me to call the work of Christ a remedy?—a remedy for a defect, without ascribing that defect to God's predestinating hand? I ask simply because I want to know. I want to reconcile these things.

Than my view of God's predestination there can be none more honoring, or ascribing more power and glory and sovereign right to decree and control all things according to his good pleasure, and according to which his counsel shall stand and he will do all his pleasure. And yet after all, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory forever. Your unworthy sister.

R. ANNA. PHILLIPS.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, :—It is with a feeling of much unworthiness that I attempt to so address you, and for this cause my mind has been impressed to try to write something about my little experience and hope in Christ.

In my younger days I would think many times that I would turn from my sinful ways and try to do better, but soon I would find myself doing as bad as ever or perhaps a little worse, then I would think it was no use for me to try to do better for I could not. I thought the Lord would save me when it pleased him to do so. At times my husband would rebuke me for my sinful ways. I told him it was no use for me to try to do any better for if I was to be saved I would be saved anyhow, and if not I could not do anything to save myself. He would tell me that I would never be saved anyhow, if I was saved it would be through the mercies of God. I thought that that was just what I believed so that it didn't give me anything to do. I would read the LANDMARK and other religious papers, and find many experiences in them, and I liked very much to read them, but they would all seem to say about the same thing. They would say they thought they were going to die or were going to lose their minds or something of that kind.

Then I would think if this was ever my case I would surely know what was the trouble with me ; but oh what a mistake did I find it to be.

One day I was sitting in my house all alone thinking over some of my good times, as I called them, thinking how good it was to enjoy the follies of this world ; when all at once a feeling of sadness came over me, my heart seemed to sink in me with shame and fear. I began to think how hard it was for one to die in his sins. I thought I did wish with all my heart that the Lord would send some punishment upon me in this world for my sins. I felt that I was willing to bear any punishment that it pleased him to put on me for the sake of a happy home after death. I went on in this way for sometime thinking it would pass off after awhile, but no, it didn't pass off, it would come worse upon me. Sometimes I would think it was for the wish I had made upon myself, but didn't think it was for any good to me. One day I wished that I didn't have any soul, but the Lord had made me that way and I didn't dare say it was wrong. I thought if I should go into the wilderness the Lord would see me and it would be all the same with him for I could not hide from his presence, so I did not know what to do or where to go. I thought I was going to lose my mind, and should have to die in this way, but thought I would keep it all to myself for I did not want anyone to know how bad I did feel. One night I was sitting by my fireside trying to work, but my burden was so heavy I could not work, so I laid it all aside and said, I know the work ought to be done, but I cannot work until I feel better than I do now. My husband asked me what was the matter with me ? I told him I did not know, but I guessed that I was going to lose my mind or something I didn't know what ; but he said I would soon get better he thought, but, I thought, oh dear, you do not know anything about my case. if you did you would not say there was anything better for me. I was afraid to retire to my bed for fear that I should go to sleep and die before morning. I dreaded night so bad that I did almost wish that the sun would not go down. I didn't know why I dreaded night so bad, for I knew that I could die while on my feet as easily as when I was on my bed.

It was late that night when I went to sleep. I awoke in the morning with my burden on me. I looked around me and said, how can I sleep under such a burden ? But the most of all was to think that I had told my husband of it. I went on for a few days in this way trying to find any relief from my burden but could find none at all, so I thought there was nothing for me but to perish. My husband would tell me that I must put my faith in God. I would tell him that I had no faith and therefore I could not put faith in him for I could not so much as say Lord be merciful to me a sinner, for I thought that it would do no good to ask the Lord to do a thing that He didn't intend to do. I could not pray unto him for I thought it would be an abomination for one so sinful as I to attempt to pray unto the Lord.

So I go mourning all the day,
No peace and comfort find ;
Desiring the Lord to guide my way,
And calm my troubled mind.

I am now as one in the wilderness,
Or in a desert land ;
Desiring to find the path of peace,
And run at his command.

None but the Lord can lead me out,
Or move this dismal hill ;
His power and strength I cannot doubt
But how I doubt his will.

So I went on in this way for two or three days desiring to find some words of comfort, but seemed to find none until one day these words came into my mind.

"Tis a pain I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought.
Do I love the Lord or no ?
Am I his, or am I not ?" &c

These words seemed to give me so much consolation that I began to try to pray to the Lord to relieve me of my burden and show me what my duty was. After this I was sitting down trying to think in my mind what such things could be; for I did not think the Lord would bring one down in this way, when all at once the burden left me. I felt so light, I could look around me and say behold all things have become new, for the things I once loved I now hate and the things I once hated I now love. But I soon began to fear that I was mistaken, for I thought if it was the Lord's work in me I ought to feel good, but I did not, for I felt so bad and so unworthy that I did not feel that I was fit to be among those whom I looked upon to be the Lord's people, yet my mind would lead me to them. For I felt that they were my people. I loved them and desired to be among them. About two weeks after this I went to meeting one day, after preaching the door of the church was opened for the reception of members. I went forward, I could tell them but very little that day, but I was received and the next day I was baptized by brother L. H. Hardy. This was the 3rd Sunday in December 1879.

So I have been following along ever since. I have only written a sketch of my experience for I feel that it will take up too much space and will be in the way of better matter. If I should try to tell every way in which I hope the Lord has brought me along I should fail in the attempt. So do with this as you think best, if you do not think it worth a place in your paper throw it aside and you will not offend me. I desire an interest in your prayers. Your unworthy sister, if one at all, in hope of a better life.

MARY J. OGLESBY.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST,—If I say anything with a spiritual understanding the brethren will know the sound, if we are one. For we are witnesses of the truth. We are not Baptists from free will, but by the power of God, not of our own works nor according to them, but by the power of God. For Christ said to the Jews, ye are of your father, the devil, and the teaching of the devil is that the Primitive Baptists are the most hard-hearted people ever known, and they abuse all other denominations; but almost every body makes sport of them, and they say Baptists preach infants to hell. But the servants of God must serve him. We are not surprised that they say such things of us.

Why am I a Baptist? They preach the same doctrine that John the Baptist preached, who baptized Jesus who thus endorsed what John preached, and fully vouched for the truth of what John preached. Furthermore Jesus himself preached the same doctrine.

But this holy doctrine is too good for me. I am vile, sold under sin. But Jesus is my hope. It appears to me that I get worse and worse.

Sometimes I feel that I cannot say anything; then again I feel a desire to speak in his name.

Dear Brother Gold, if I ever heard the gospel preached it was the 19th, of May 1887. I did not know that any one was near me. I know of no one in sight. This verse was spoken to me, "For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive," and I think if ever I was made alive to the gospel it was on that day.

JAS. C. HILL.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—Having seen in the LANDMARK two letters written by Eld. Vickers claiming to be a Primitive Baptist, lest some of your readers should think that his Arminian doctrine is troubling the Baptists in this portion of Ga. I send you a minute of his church, Hebron, by which you will see that he and his church are not recognized by any other, nor do they recognize any other, claiming themselves to be the only true church, and Elder John Vickers the only gospel preacher. Thus as he cannot alone ordain another, nor constitute an other church when he dies the gospel ministry ends. About fifteen years ago his church was dropped from its Association for his Arminian doctrine. Hebron numbers 72 members and some good brethren who have been blinded by him. He claims the doctrine of pre-destination and election to deceive them and ignores every principle of election. But the minute I send you will explain them, and I think in justice to Baptists in Georgia these things should be published in order that it may be seen that Vickerism is confined to Hebron church, and I see 13 withdrawals by letter in one year. He claims to see visions, and have direct revelations. He denies that persons are elected; but characters or a character. "All men are called alike to repentance which is a voluntary work and when a man repents, then he is quickened into life and becomes the character elected; and God fore-seeing who would voluntarily do this chose them unto salvation from the beginning. I am personally acquainted with him and have my hat full of letters from him, trying to convince me that he stands on original Primitive Baptist ground. He is not hunting information, but seeking to convince others. On the cover leaf of the pamphlet is his name and address written with his own hand carrying the Rev. prefix: did you ever see a Primitive Baptist do that? Nothing you may say or any explanation you can make will weigh a feather, he will still shoot from the same standpoint. All the Baptists in this country believe the doctrine as you explained to him. Yours affectionate'y, UNITY.

They wandered in the wilderness, in a solitary way. They found no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty their soul fainted in them. God's people must be a poor despised people. I have seen many evidences of this which causes me to say so. Christ our redeemer I understand was poor also, "The foxes had holes, and the birds of the air had nests, but the Son of man had not where to lay his head." And we, if we have a change from nature to grace, feel poor and are the poorest on earth in our feelings. What is a brother, or what does the word brethren mean in the bible? I earnestly do believe that it means the same as to say brethren in the Lord, all as one, one in Christ wherever they be, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free, they are one in the spirit, one in opinion, one in the truth, one in love, one in care and sympathy, one in mercy. They love one another for Jesus' sake who suffered for them, having one faith, one Lord, and one baptism, one God and one father of us all, full of grace and truth. Christ is not divided, He seeketh such to worship him as worship him in spirit and in truth. We cannot serve two masters. We cannot do to suit the world in their Adamic nature, and serve God. "The first Adam was of the earth earthy; and the second man is the Lord from heaven, a quickening spirit." A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. So it is if the tree is made good the fruit will be good, it is with us, if Christ has begun a good work in us, he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. So if we are a part of that number, our fruit will be unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. We know that there is nothing good that we can do: for it does not lie in man to direct his steps; but salvation is by grace, and grace produces good works, which it was before ordained that we should walk in. Good works is to believe the word of God to obey Jesus, read the scriptures and see what it says, and be guided by it. Do not let the Bible lie in your houses and pass it unnoticed, for I tell you all, God's word will surely stand, when we have all passed away, all the glory of man is as a fading flower.

Come out of Babylon, my people, and be ye not partakers of her sins. Come away from the city of confusion and love of pride. That great city Babylon is the substance of the first Adam, that part that is after the course of this world. Put on the new man which is to be renewed day by day. The new principle is to love, love one another, and the brotherhood, to love and serve the Lord, to love and care for everyone that is poor and needy and humble. The o'd Adamic nature has no power nor lot in the matter. The people in nature's darkness are bribed together by a spirit of false love and deceit, and when the time of trouble comes, one will not be able to help the other. So then we being as sheep scattered, we should comfort one another. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. O how kind we should be to each other, how pure and truthful we should be, and honest toward all men.

It is not God's will that any should perish, but that all should come to the knowledge of the truth.

I consider that we perish from the enjoyment of obedient christians by disobeying the command of the Lord, very often.

The soul that sins shall die. Die how! Die to the enjoyments of christian obedience.

A POINT IN PAUL'S CONVERSION.

A dear brother in Georgia writes me for information in regard to the original Greek of Acts 9:7 and 22:9, where there is an apparent contradiction in the English translation of the King James Version.

The first passage reads, "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." The second passage reads, "And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me."

In the Church History, page 197, I have said, "The whole company saw the light, and were prostrated to the ground; and all heard an awful sound, but Saul alone understood the words, because they were especially intended for him." I have to-day carefully re-investigated the subject, and I am satisfied that this is the correct explanation.

The Greek word translated "heard" in both Acts 9:7 and 22:9 is "akouo"; and the Greek word translated "voice" in both these passages is "phone." The only difference between the two expressions in the Greek is that "phone" in Acts 9:7 is in the Genitive case, while in Acts 22:9 it is in the Accusative case. The "Speaker's Commentary", a very critical and scholarly and unusually accurate work says, "The word voice here [in Acts 9:7] is in the genitive case, implying that they did not understand what was spoken, which was intelligible to Saul, in reference to whom the accusative is used [in Acts 22:9], as previously in verse 4 [chapter 9] indicating understanding as well as hearing." But in Acts 22:7 Paul uses the genitive of phone to express what he himself heard; therefore the distinction made by the Speaker's Commentary between the Genitive and the Accusative cases of phone used with akouo is incorrect—a fact further shown by the article on akouo in the seventh Edition of Liddell and Scott's Greek—English Lexicon.

The verb akouo occurs about 200 times in the New Testament, and, though generally translated hear, is in 1 Cor. 14:2 translated understand; and that this translation is correct is manifest from the meaning of the verse, and also from first Cor. 14:16, where the verb "oida" (to know) is also translated "understand". The verb "akouo" also evidently means understand in Mark 4:33, and John 6:60.

The noun phone occurs about 130 times in the New Testament, and, though generally translated "voice" is translated "sound" seven times, in Matt. 24:31; John 3:8; 1 Cor. 14:7, 8; Rev. 1:15; 9:9; and 18:22. In the various renderings of Eyre and Spottiswood's "Variorum Bible for Bible Teachers," and also in the margin of the revised New Testament, sound is given as the meaning of phone in Acts 9:7. In adding "of him that spake to me," in Acts 22:9, Paul seems to imply that he meant the sense, and not the mere sound.

The harmony of Acts 9:7 and 22:9 appears to me to be shown by the use of phone and akouo in John 12:28, 29. "Then came there a voice [phone] from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorified it again. The people therefore that stood by, and heard akouo, it said that it thundered: others said, an angel spake to him." All who were present with Jesus heard the sound; of these, some did not understand the words, and said that it thundered; others, understanding the words, said that an angel spake to Christ.

While in Paul's conversion there was an outward, literal miracle both of sight and of sound, open to the natural perception of all who were present; there was a corresponding inward, spiritual miracle, wrought in the soul of none but Paul, who alone saw the Lord Jesus in glory, and understood His words that were addressed to none but him.

And the word that went forth out of the mouth of the Lord, as of old (Psalm 33: 9; Isa. 55: 2), and as ever accomplished His holy pleasure, and made Paul not disobedient to the heavenly vision, and changed, at once and forever, "the haughty, self-righteous, intolerant, raging Pharisee into a humble, penitent, grateful loving servant of Jesus. Throwing away self-righteous, learning, influence, power and prospects, Paul cast in his lot with a small, despised sect at the risk of his life. If there ever was an honest, unselfish, radical and effective change of conviction and conduct, it was that of Saul of Tarsus. He became, by a creative act of the Holy Spirit, a new creature in Christ Jesus. 1 Cor. 15: 8-10; 2 Cor. 4: 6; 5: 17, 18; Gal. 1: 15, 16; Philip. 1: 6; 2, 12-13; Ephes. 2: 1-10; Rom. 11: 6.

WHAT IS SAVED.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have been reflecting of late over the faith that distinguishes us, as Old School or Primitive Baptists, from all other professed religionists, and to-day I feel like writing down a few of my thoughts for the LANDMARK. There are some points of faith in which some one or other denominations may agree with us. All alike claim to take the Bible as a transcript of the will of God both as regards what we are to believe and to practice. It is well when we say we take the Bible as our only guide, or that our faith is founded upon its teachings. This is well, but it is not sufficient to distinguish us as a people, for there is not a denomination anywhere about us but what will claim the same.

Because of this fact there has arisen a necessity for what are called "Articles of Faith," wherein a church defines what she understands the Bible to teach and enjoin. This necessity has been recognized in all ages, and in a more or less formal and solemn manner have the churches of Christ in all times and lands defined their faith in this way. And it is a mark of the sure and constant and all pervading guidance of the Holy Spirit that we find substantial unanimity in all these various professions of faith that the people of God have put forward.

Some of these "Articles of Faith," other professed churches have also held, as all counterfeits must be mingled with some true metal in order to give consistency and seeming merit to the base metal. It is also true that the very people of God have, and no doubt do now hold to some things that are unscriptural and contrary to things of the truth to which they really hold allegiance. The keynote of difference between the false and the true faith is the praise of God and the praise of men. One saying, "salvation is all of God;" the other "it is either in whole or in part of man, either working for himself, or for the salvation of others."

Whatever is consistent with the truth salvation is of the Lord, is true of itself also. And whatever is not consistent with this first great truth is not true of itself. Judged by this rule the doctrine of human merit, either original or acquired, of human effort either for ones own self or others, of means and instrumentalities in saving man, of conditional salvation offered to all men, is all false from beginning to end. While on the other hand the doctrine of the predestination of all things that come to pass, of personal unconditional election of fallen sinners to life, of the effectual work of the Holy Ghost in calling men and women to life who were dead, of the final preservation of the saints to glory, is in perfect harmony with this primal and foundation truth.

Among the many questions that of late years have been debated by the people of God who hold this one truth fast, "salvation is of the Lord," perhaps there are none that need have been in question for a moment if the full force that belongs to it had been given to the one truth "SINNERS ARE saved by the LORD." By the grace of God the church has been kept free for fifty years past from any direct denial that "salvation is of the Lord." But on the other hand the enemy has crept in bringing the damnable heresy that it is NOT THE SINNER that the Lord saves. By some there has been a complete denial that sinners of Adam's fallen race are the subjects of salvation either here or hereafter. While some have not gone quite so far, but while admitting that the fallen sinner will be saved after the resurrection, yet deny that he is the subject of the work of salvation here and now. Arminians deny that salvation is of the Lord, while the above named theory denies that salvation is for sinners. Campbellism, one form of Arminianism, denies that the Holy Spirit works upon and in sinners, while the theory just named denies that sinners are wrought upon by the Holy Spirit. Starting from two opposite points these two theories thus meet and agree in denying that GOD SAVES SINNERS.

One vital principle of doctrine held by Old School or Primitive Baptists has been the doctrine of election. So vital has this truth been that if any man denied it he could not be considered an Old School Baptist. We could defend this truth from all outward assault of the enemy as coming from an enemy, but we could not admit the doctrine to be a subject of question among ourselves at all. If any one arose among us, and assailed or even doubted this doctrine, by so doing he cut himself off from the fellowship of the church. By so doing he declared himself an opponent of the truth and of those who held it. This doctrine has been considered one of the matters settled among us and not a subject for discussion as to its truth or falsity any more. He who denies this doctrine is not and cannot be an Old School Baptist. Arminians have always hurled their bitterest darts against this doctrine and against its divine "Author and Revealer" that God did before time began, before any man or angel, or world was created, choose in his infinite mind and according to his eternal purpose a portion of the sons and daughters of a fallen Adam to be the subjects of redemption and salvation; at the same time ordaining to pass by the rest of the same fallen race is clearly revealed in the Bible. It would seem to be the place of ignorance and guilt to be silent and not question the Almighty; but in nothing has the depravity of the human heart revealed itself more clearly than in this that man finds fault with God and presumes to arraign him at the bar of finite reason and to accuse him of injustice if the doctrine of election be true. Such bolts of human anger and malice against the truth, the people of God have met in all ages. From such attacks we need fear nothing.

Of late years this glorious truth of personal election of sinners has been covertly assailed from another quarter. But though the assault has come from another quarter, the plea has been the same, "The justice of God." It has been contended that, NOT MEN AND WOMEN, SINNERS OF ADAM'S race, are the subjects of election. But that a family of spiritual children, who always existed even as their head always existed, in heaven, who were and are distinct from the order of beings called men, were the subjects of God's choice in distinction from all other beings heavenly or earthly. Those who have held this doctrine profess to be the very strongest opponents of Arminianism, and yet stand here upon one side of a platform of which Arminianism is the other. Both say that God did not choose sinners, for the Arminian denies that God chose anybody. In neither case can there be any salvation for a sinner. And the one is no more an Old School Baptist than is the other.

But I wish now to write to my brethren ren who lovingly believe that God from all eternity did choose here and there sinners from among sinners, and purpose to make them his own sheep by the renewing power of his Spirit. And I do this not because that I suppose that in any way you question or deny this truth, but because it is both pleasant and profitable to review the reasons of the faith that is in us. And to this end I want simply to call up what the scriptures testify in regard to this matter.

And first the scriptures declare that this election is not an act of the will of God which is now going on, but an act of choice which took place once, and which like every work of the Almighty is done forever.

God does not choose men to day, but he chose men before the world was. This is sustained by such scriptures as the following, "Who hath from the beginning chosen us to salvation." Of which I will remark that the time is past who hath, and that past time is in the beginning, and the character chosen is us, you and me, if we believe indeed, and the end is to salvation. And where shall we find the beginning. The expression puts the election of God's people away back before anything else, at the very beginning. If any thing was before this choice then that thing would have been the beginning and not the choice. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God." Of this text, I will remark that as knowledge of a past or present event exists, simply upon the existence of that event now brought to our knowledge, so foreknowledge of any event or thing rests upon the entire certainty of that thing. There can be no foreknowledge of anything except that thing is under necessity to take place arising from some purpose of some being. If God foreknows anything, then either he or some other power has surely fore-ordained that thing. And so in harmony with this evident truth we read "that whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his son." He foreknew them as his in the sense of choosing them and in that choice was included the purpose of conforming them to the image of Christ. It seems to me better of itself to believe, as a necessity exists that all foreseen things must take place, that God has predestinated them to be than that there is another being who has thus fore-ordained them. Some have gone so far in their opposition to predestination as to deny his foreknowledge also.

"According as he hath chosen us in him (Christ) before the foundation of the world." Here again, election is spoken of as a past thing "hath chosen," and the place of the choice before the laying of the foundation of the earth itself. Again the doctrine of election was taught in the type and shadow by the sovereign choice of Israel out from all other nations, by the choice of families and men for special places in Israel and in the world. There was no reason for this except the sovereign will of God. Even these national or family elections were in the eternal purpose of God. But were there no direct scriptures like the above bearing upon and teaching election, still when we learn from the scriptures of the foreknowledge of God, of his unchangeability, which takes in his knowledge, his purpose, and his every attribute, of his omniscience and omnipresence, of his eternal purpose, we, from a proper consideration of these things, I say, should be driven to conclude that election must be true. Because to deny his election would be to deny all these truths concerning Jehovah. And to deny all these things is to deny God himself. Thus it is clear from scripture teaching both direct and indirect that the choice was before the world was.

And second, the election is one of persons, not of nations, tribes, races, families, but of men, women and children, and not of spirits or pre-existent beings of any sort or kind. And when I say men and women I mean just the same men and women that I call brother or sister and grasp by the hand while I do so. I do not say my "new man" or my "old man," or my spirit is brother to the new man, or the old man, or the spirit of Elder Gold, but he himself, is brother to me myself. And so my brethren,

"you and I" were chosen individually to be saved. Now the scriptures teach this personal election to life and salvation in all three of the texts already quoted and commented upon. Let us recur to them again. "According as he hath chosen us in him," etc., Eph. 1st, chapter. Turning to the first and second verses of this chapter, we learn that by the pronoun 'us' the Apostle means 'himself,' 'the saints at Ephesus,' and the faithful in Christ Jesus.' Surely this is personal. "Whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his son. Rom. 8. Surely this is personal if language ever is. And it embraces not holy spirits, but beings needy of being conformed to the image of his son. So when we read "elect according to the foreknowledge of God, who hath from the beginning chosen us unto salvation." This is not indefinite language at all, but as personal as any thing can be. In Psalm. 65th, we read "Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth," etc. Here is personal election even of a man. Again, Jesus said to his disciples as men "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit, &c., John 15th and 16th. Here again is personal choice.

Surely the truth that this election is personal is proved by these scriptures if language can prove any thing. One or two reflections follows from this truth. It humbles all the pride of man. It abolishes all distinctions in the kingdom of heaven. One cannot say God has taken more notice of me than of my brother. He has just as personally chosen the beggar who believes, as the king who once was called the sweet singer in Israel. He has singled out by personal choice and favor the infant or the unlearned man or woman as much as he did apostles and prophets in former days, or his ministers in this day. God sees one as much as another. All are equal in his sight.

Another reflection is that as God before the world has chose for instance the Pharisee, Paul, to be saved in heaven and to be his minister to the Gentiles here on earth, it follows that every event necessary to and leading up to Paul's natural birth was predestinated of God. And so of every other believer as well as of Paul. If God has predestinated any man to eternal life, he must of necessity predestinate that man to natural life. Some of his elect ones are the children of non-elect persons, and some of his elect ones are born as the result of the sin of their parents or of sin of their ancestry somewhere. And so the life of these wicked parents must also have been predestinated of God. If God knew who should be his, he also just as surely knew who were not his. And a predestination as broad as this is a predestination broad enough for me. If any event or person can be shown to be needless or purposeless in the world, and to have no connection with other events or persons, then I will not argue that that person or event is included in God's predestination. Personal election involves the broadest predestination.

Lastly, this election is not because of foreseen good works. But even if it were in order for any good works to be foreseen, they must have been fore-ordained. And if God fore-ordained good works in one and did not in another, that would be election itself. If God fore-saw good works in me it was because he fore-ordained those good works to be in me. And if he fore-saw no good works in my neighbor it was because he did not fore-ordain such good works in him. So that the doctrine of choice would still remain, for if God fore-ordained good works in one and not in another it was because he chose so to do. This is election. But the scriptures which teach election without exception also teach that men are elected, not because of good in them or done by them, but in order that they may be holy and also perform good works. Let us refer to some of the scriptures already quoted again. But first God said of his typical people, natural Israel, that he had not chosen THEM because they were better than other people, but on the contrary, more stiff-necked and rebellious than all people. In Psalm 65th, verse 4th,, it is not said that God has chosen man because man has first approached unto him, but that man thus chosen may approach unto him.

Jesus does not say "ye have chosen me and therefore I have chosen you, but "I have chosen you and ye have not chosen me." Again in Eph. 1st, it does not say "he has chosen us in Christ because we were holy, &c, but that we should be holy." In Peter, it is not said that we are elect because of obedience, but "elect unto obedience." God has chosen the disobedient to make them obedient. Again Paul in 2nd, Thess. 2nd, chapter, does not say we are chosen because we are sanctified and believe the truth, but that we are chosen to salvation through these things. Not only does he say we are chosen to this end, but chosen to all the means that lead to that end. How complete is the wisdom of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out! But not, thank God, past his power to reveal. His judgments that we cannot search into, (for no man by searching can find him out) and his ways that we cannot find out, he has been graciously pleased to reveal to us. We know by revelation only any truth that is hidden in the wisdom of God. And all truth is thus hidden. It is true that we know but little, but yet we do know a little since God has revealed it. And one of the things revealed is this precious doctrine of election. This doctrine is "also unsearchable and past finding out." and no man could know it by any means but revelation.

In conclusion, I feel like saying, as I once heard a brother express himself "If God had not chosen me before the world was, I am sure he never would never have chosen me afterward."

What was there in me that could merit esteem
Or give to the Creator delight.

'Twas even so Father, we ever must say,
Because it seemed good in thy sight.

In fellowship and love I remain, your Brother,

F. A. CHICK.

DEAR MR. GOLD:—I attended a church in our town several Sundays since, and heard its pastor preach upon the subject of transfiguration. He dwelt especially upon his belief, that there is recognition in heaven—we would know our fathers, mothers, brothers, friends and &c. He believed that there is not only recogniton, but cognition,—knowing those whom we never knew before. I am not particularly sectarian, but having been raised by Primitive Baptist parents, I naturally love these people and incline to them. I could not accept as true this recognition in heaven. I take it that heaven is a place of perfect happiness, no sorrow, no trouble there. Would I be happy, however, if after I had entered this celestial abode I did not find there my father, mother, and friends who had preceded me?

I wish you would give your opinion of this recognition in heaven through the columns of the LANDMARK, thereby favoring one who loves you and all the good old Baptists. Yours truly,

A. L. H.

Remarks.

John says. It doth not yet appear what we shall be: 1 John 3: 2. This he says of the sons of God. He tells us that now are we the sons of God, but what we shall be doth not yet appear. To look on a son of God now, as he appears in the flesh, gives no hint even or shadow of what he shall be. He now bears the image of the earthly Adam.

But flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

The body of death and of corruption gives no presage of what the child of God will be in the resurrection. For John says, though we now are the sons of God, it doth not yet appear what we shall be. Then if we do not know—if the apostle John did not know what he would be, or what other sons of God would be, how is it possible that they could tell whether they will know each other there. It is never even once stated or hinted that God's children will, or will not know each other in the resurrection.

That question is never asked by anyone of them, nor ever answered by anyone of them. If the prophets and apostles have not told us whether this is so or not, how shall we decide it! Why do preachers preach that which is not revealed.

Just here I will state what I have felt should be stated.

We read in many obituaries, statements made by friends of the deceased that they will know each other in heaven, and it is to them, and to our own flesh, a pleasing thought to contemplate. But shall God's people in the resurrection be possessed of the same fleshly feelings that they have here on earth? If so, of course they will be there as they are here, and will want there what they desire here, and mourn there as they mourn here.

Is that to be the state of the children of the resurrection? Shall they desire to marry and have husbands and wives &c! That is an exceedingly carnal and low, Sadduceeic notion which Jesus utterly condemned by saying to such, ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God.

The resurrection is so much beyond any conception of man that we know nothing about it, except by revelation. Because it doth not yet appear what we shall be. Those who spend their time in describing heaven are beating the air. It is so glorious that we cannot have one true conception of it.

God's people know it will be glorious. Their trouble is not that heaven is not all right, or that those found like Jesus will not be happy and blest forever; but their trouble and fear is that they themselves will not be counted worthy of the resurrection. They desire to give diligence to make their calling and election sure, that so an entrance may be ministered to them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of God.

P. D. G.

Will you explain through the LAND-MARK, Matt. 16: 26, 27? I do not believe an elect one can be lost, nor that they are justified by works.

S. M. CALHOUN.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul; or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels: and then shall he reward every man according to his works."

Jesus must be crucified and rise from the dead to enter into his kingdom. Of course his people then must die before they can enter into life, or follow and be with Jesus.

When Jesus told Peter he must be killed and raised again the third day then Peter took him and began to rebuke him, saying, this be far from thee

Lord : this shall not be unto thee. Peter called Jesus Lord then. But could one feel that Jesus is the Lord, and yet attempt to rebuke him, or tell him what to do, or what should not be done ? Ah, how much of that spirit of Satan is in men. That spirit that dictates what the Lord ought to do, and if such things are true, the Lord is unjust—a spirit that demands things to be as men want them, and to be right in the sight of men. Let it forever be remembered that he that savors of man, or holds things according to man's view of them, or that judges according to the spirit of man, is an enemy of God and a servant of Satan. If Satan does not operate through men how does he operate ? The natural, carnal or fleshy notions of men are Satan's views, notions and plans.

Jesus said to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." Why ? because Peter loved or savored of the things that be of men, and not those that be of God.

The doctrine of men is to establish human righteousness, or to exalt self. Men hold that by their good works they can be saved, and that this is left in the hands of men to determine themselves. Jesus says, a man must deny himself, which is just the opposite of what men aim to do, and what they hold and love.

To deny self is to be crucified—dead to the world. If there is no good thing in me I must be dead to self, or deny self. Why was Jesus crucified, if righteousness come by the law, or works ? why does the bible say, not by works of righteousness which we have done ?

If a man will save his life, that is depend on his works for life and righteousness, he will lose it. Yet that is the way that seems right unto a man. For there is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death. All the labor and strivings of those that have the spirit of men or savor of men thus work.

Well, what should it profit one to gain the whole world, and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul ?

The labor of men, or those controlled by the things and spirit of men, is to save self, to please self, to establish self-righteousness, to walk according to man's reason. What it gains is of the world. Now suppose it could gain the whole world, what would it profit, if one should lose his own soul, or what can he give in exchange for his soul ?

Those that follow Jesus must deny self, or this spirit, and in that sense lose their life, and lay it down by denying self. Hence such do not please themselves, nor seek to please men. They are hated of all men for the sake of Jesus. The doctrine they hold is hated by the world, for it is not of this world.

The world ridicules this doctrine. Alas, so the fleshly nature of a christian hates it, and cries out against it. Something says to him often, how can you be a christian ? You are not doing what you ought. You are a sinner. How dare you to claim such a thing ? Do you not know that christian people are a good people, without sin ? But you are a vile sinner.

The christian dies daily. He has many afflictions. In this world he has tribulation. He has his evil things here, and no good things. He has the sentence of death within himself. If in this life only he has hope he is of all men most miserable. This is not his home. He lays down his life, or denies self, and follows Jesus, or loses his life. He is crucified with Christ.

Where will he receive his reward and when? It is when Jesus comes in the glory of his Father with the angels.—For then shall Jesus reward every man according to his work. It is not in this world that the followers of Jesus receive their reward. Jesus himself is the exceeding great reward of his people. He will reward them when he comes.—They will then, who have followed him through death, receive a kingdom and glory with Jesus, and receive according to their works. For the Lord will ordain peace for his people, because he has wrought all their works in them.

P. D. G.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—By the goodness and mercy of God I am spared and permitted to let you hear from me again. Doubtless you have been needing the money I am due you. I have been thinking for sometime of sending it to you, and am glad I can now send it. I wish to continue taking the LANDMARK as long as I can pay for it. I do not wish you to lose anything by me. Your paper is worth the money that I pay for it, and I would not be without it for twice the amount. It is good preaching, nearly all of it—I seldom hear any other preaching.

I must tell you about the Union Meeting at Wetherford, in Jan. I attended it two days. The weather was very cold indeed. There were very few out the first day, but a large congregation was out Saturday.

I went prepared to carry you home with us, but was sadly disappointed. There was only one preacher and that was brother Handy, but I do not think that he was alone, for I think that God was with him, and that to bless. I do believe that he preached the gospel in its purity, and that is what I delight to hear, though I often fear and doubt whether I know anything of the gospel or not. I am so vile, so prone to do evil that I cannot think at all times, that I know anything about true religion. I am almost in despair, and if the Lord does not relieve and save me by his grace I know that I am lost.

I know that God is able to save the worst of sinners, of whom I am chief,

I have a great desire to see you and converse with you face to face, so I could tell you some of my doubts and fears, and if you think that one that was once changed from nature to grace could have such trials and troubles as I have had for some time. I know that God is able, if he is only willing, that is my trouble. Do tell me is it thus with you? I hear some people say that they never had a doubt, but that they are christians. I know I cannot say that in truth. I feel so unworthy that I am not worthy to take the name of the Lord in my sinful lips. I sincerely ask your prayer, for it is said that the prayer of the righteous availeth much, and I assuredly look upon you as one of God's righteous ones. I know that God has said that he would be with us in the sixth trouble, and would not forsake us in the seventh.

Again he said that we should not be tempted above what we are able to bear. Again Jesus said fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. I would as soon believe that a sinful man could make a world as I would believe he could change one sinner's heart, and put the love of Christ Jesus in his heart. When God sees cause in his wise arrangements to quicken or change a lost and ruined sinner and give him grace in his heart, I do not believe that all the world could change what God had done.

Brother Gold, I wish you would explain a portion of scripture that you can find in the chapter where Jesus was speaking of the signs of the end of time. It reads as follows, but woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days; for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon the people. I wrote you before this to explain this to me.

I remain a true believer in the power and goodness of God. I know I have no power, salvation is of the Lord and him alone. SUSAN C MITCHELL.

Remarks.

The literal, historical fulfillment of the above scripture (Matt. 24:19) was on the flight of the Lord's people out of Jerusalem, at the time of its destruction by the Roman army. Jesus tells his disciples not to take anything out of their houses at that time, because they must flee for their lives, and hence should not be cumbered or burdened with a load of baggage or plunder. He also tells them to pray, that their flight be not in winter, nor on the Sabbath day. Of course it would be more difficult to travel in winter, and they would then be more exposed. It was not lawful for a Jew to travel many miles on a Sabbath day. Hence that would be an unreasonable time to travel and flee.

Of course too there would be much pain and trouble attending the flight of women that were with child, as such are in no condition for long, heavy marches. The woe here means the difficulty, danger, pain and labor necessary for one to endure that must flee for his life in such a condition.

Jesus has pity, love and care for his people in all conditions of life, temporally as well as spiritually, hence his teachings are good for them in every sense.

In a deeper spiritual sense or meaning of this scripture one hampered with worldly cares, money, property, lusts, carnal affections, or anything else of the earth earthy, would be burdened, and could not so well fly to the city of refuge, or escape the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Happy is that servant found watching when his Lord cometh: or that as one of the wise virgins has his vessel filled with oil, and enters with joy into the Kingdom, or escapes the pollution of earth. How different was it from Lot's wife who lingered in the plain and looked back.

Those embarrassed with notions of self-righteousness, and depending on their own works, however righteous they may appear to others, would be as those fleeing on the Sabbath day wherein they could not make progress.

Those burdened with child would be as those guilty of fornication or identity with false worship which is as fornication, and which defiles all thus joined in such unscriptural alliance.

We should serve the Lord alone, having our fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Such have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God, by being fully delivered from this present evil world, the Jerusalem below which is in bondage with her children.

P. D. G.

Obituary.

DR. ALONZO HASSELL.

After indisposition for a year, and serious illness for three months, my half-brother, Dr. Alonzo Hassell, died of capillary bronchitis, 4. A. M., Sunday April, the 8th, 1888, at his residence in Williamston, N. C. He was the son of Elder C. B. and Mrs. Martha M. Hassell, and was born Sept. 23rd, 1851. He graduated, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, from the college of physicians and surgeons, Baltimore, Md., Feb. 23rd, 1872. On Feb. 5th, 1873, he married Miss Ida, the daughter of Mr. John R. and Mrs. Mary Lanier; and she and five children, the three eldest being boys, Theodore, Alonzo, and John, and the two youngest girls, Della and Ida, all less than 14 years of age, survive him. An infant daughter, named Mary, aged 53 days, died Dec. 25th, 1885.

Brother Alonzo has been divinely enabled to lead an honorable and useful life. He was a plain, straight-forward, honest, truthful, candid, temperate, quiet, resolute, industrious, kind-hearted, and forgiving man. For sixteen years he practised medicine in his native town and county with the most indefatigable zeal, and with increasing skill and reputation, meeting for many years with great opposition, but, instead of fighting it openly or secretly, living it down. No matter how hot or cold or stormy the weather, how dark the night, how distant the journey, how lonely or bad or wild the road, how poor and unable to pay him was the patient, and how unwell he himself was, if he could only get up into his buggy and ride, he delighted to hasten to alleviate the pains of suffering humanity; if the patient had been a bitter enemy, he would go so much the more eagerly, and minister to him the more tenderly. Two-thirds of his practice was probably of the poor feel, like his family, to be irreparably bereaved, and anxiously ask, "What shall we poor people do now for a doctor?" He spared his family, his servants and his horses, but he would not spare himself, and, like his father, he literally worked himself to death. He had rheumatism occasionally for fourteen years, and the attacks increased in duration and severity. After suffering with the cramp every night about eight months, and then dreadfully with the rheumatism about two months, he went out too soon, in inclement weather, to visit a patient, and contracted the bronchial trouble that ended his life.

For many years he has shown uncommon interest in spiritual and eternal things, and has been a frequent attendant on preaching. He admitted to his mother years ago that his deepest concern—that which met him first in the morning and remained with him last at night—was the matter of his sins and his salvation. Others, as well as myself, have been satisfied for years that he had a hope in Christ; and this he plainly confessed to me the last day of his life, and said that he wished to live in order to perform his long-neglected duty, and unite with the church. I told him that the one thing needful was eternal salvation, not the baptism of water, but that of the Holy Ghost.

His remains were buried about 4 P. M. Monday, April, the 9th, in the town cemetery at Williamston. All the places of business in town were closed; all the large bells were tolled; and the most numerous attended funeral procession that ever passed through the streets of Williamston, solemnly and tenderly accompanied the body of "the beloved physician" to its last resting-place. I believe that no person in Martin County will be more sadly missed than he. A large number of families feel to be deeply and personally bereaved.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

JESSE L. BENNETT

Jesse L. Bennett was born April 27 1801, and died of Paralysis, March 21, 1887.

He was married to Nancy G. Lyon in November 1827. They raised fourteen children, ten of whom survive them. There are also forty four grand children, and seventeen great grand children.

Bro. Bennett had been a professor for about 30 years, and was firm in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and loved to hear it preached, and often gave free expression of his belief in it.

His house was, and is yet, a home for Primitive Baptists. In fact none could go from his door without entertaining the most kindly feelings for the entire household. Genuine old Virginia hospitality gladdened the hearts of all who were privileged to know, and be entertained by this good man.

He was afflicted but seven days with that disease that ended his mortal career, during which time he was, with a few exceptional moments, deprived of his right mind. His last words touching his faith were, "What a sure foundation for the followers of the Lord." No doubt he rests in peace. P. G. L.

NANCY G. BENNETT.

Nancy G. Bennett, wife of Jesse L. Bennett, was born Dec. 12, 1810, and died June 12th, 1887, only surviving her husband two months and 21 days. She too had a stroke of paralysis some two years before, but her death was not altogether from that, but seemed to be simply the dissolving of the earthly house of this tabernacle, as of old age.

She joined the church at Cane Creek, Pennsylvania County, Va., and remained there until the church at Malmaison near her, in the same county, was constituted, when she removed her membership to that church where she remained 'til her death. She joined the church in her 16th, year, which was before the division of the Baptists, and held with the Old School. She lived an exemplary life, and was a mother both in the church and in her family.

I have spent many pleasant hours with these dear old people, in conversation upon the great work of salvation in which I trust we were alike interested.

P. G. L.

SALLIE LEWIS.

Sallie Lewis was born Dec. 26, 1798, and died Nov. 22, 1887.

She joined the Baptist church in her 17th, year, also before the division, and held her membership at Malmaison when she died, having removed it from Cane Creek. She was conscious of the approach of death and was willing to go when the Master called.

Elder J. M. Harris, the pastor, was present and attended the funerals of each with appropriate remarks, and proclaiming the gospel of a risen Saviour.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." P. G. L.

SISTER MARY ANN MAY.

This beloved sister was born on the 2nd day of February 1822, her parents' names Robert Williams and Phrenettie Williams.

She was married to Benjamin May on the 13th day of September 1838 and this union was blessed of the Lord. She was the mother of eleven living children, five of whom survive her. She first united with the church called Disciples, but after receiving instructions as she hoped, from the Lord, through the operations of his Spirit in her heart, she left them, and on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in January 1855 she united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Meadow and was baptized the next day by Eld. J. H. Daniel. She remained a consistent member of that church until her death which occurred on the 28th of Dec. 1887.

She was faithful in filling her seat in her own church and also in visiting the neighboring churches and delighted much in the company of the brethren and in singing praise to the Lord.

She had several severe mental shocks during her life which caused a partial loss of her mind in her last days, yet her faith remained firm and did not seem to undergo the least change. We do not mourn as those who have no hope. Write blessed are the dead for they die in the Lord, they rest from their labor and their works do follow them.

D. A. MEWBORN.

MATTIE H. MILES.

Died in Caswell Co. N. C. April 12th 1887, Mattie H Miles, the youngest daughter of William and Hasseltine Miles, being three years and seven months old. She was taken away by that dread disease called Diphtheria, by which the parents have lost several others. Mattie was a very bright and sprightly child, which was often remarked by all that saw her. She was much loved by her friends and the idol of the family.

After she was taken sick she asked her mother if somebody could make her well. Her mother told her God could make her well, and she seemed perfectly satisfied.

The evening she died she asked those present to sing a couple of songs that she much loved to sing, which was done by her sister. The writer called in to see her a few hours before death had done its dreadful work. She seemed to be composed and in her right mind, though lying as it were in the jaws of death. After praying with the family and friends present, I went to her and said, will the little child tell me good bye. She reached out her little hand quickly. I bade her good bye saying, God bless the child, and I believe she is blest.

Just before the silver cord was loosed she reached out her little hand and told her sister good bye.

She leaves a grief-stricken father and weeping mother; two devoted sisters and a little brother, to mourn their loss which is her eternal gain.

May the Lord bless the bereaved family, and be better and more precious unto them than sons and daughters. Her funeral was preached by Eld. A. N. Hall and the unworthy writer.

Cease, fond mother, cease repining,
For your little one so bright.
Think that she is now in heaven,
Basking in that glorious light.

There is where the angels gather,
Giving praises to her God.
Would you have her back here mother?
Treading paths that we have trod.

She was too pure to wander,
In the paths that meet us here.
So God has taken her to his bosom,
He will shield her from each snare.

He has clothed your little darling,
In long robes of purest white.
She will join to make sweet music,
She is now a star so bright.

V. I. CHANDLER.

MRS. MARY I. PAGE.

The subject of this notice was the daughter of Joseph and Lucy Penson, of Caswell Co., N. C. She was always a very dutiful child.

She was married to Zachariah Page October 10th, 1867, with whom she lived happily until her death. She was the subject of serious impressions for many years, and cherished a secret hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave but through fear and feeling of unworthiness she never united with the church. She remarked to her husband on returning from meeting on one occasion, that she would like to join the church, but did not feel like she had enough to tell. She possessed the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and was noted for her kindness to the poor and needy, being always ready to administer to their necessities.

For several years she suffered with dyspepsia and other ailments, but bore her sufferings with a good degree of patience and fortitude. Her death was somewhat sudden and unexpected. The day before she died she seemed to be more hearty than usual, and after retiring soon aroused her husband saying, she was taken to die: and after they were up threw her arms around his neck and said, all I mind is leaving you, I want you to meet me in heaven. After suffering severely for a few hours she became unconscious and died the next day soon after one o'clock, Jan. 20th 1888, being about 51 years of age. It was supposed to be a stroke of apoplexy. She leaves a kind and afflicted husband, mother and four sisters, with many friends to mourn their loss, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

May God bless and sustain our bereaved friends and prepare them all to meet their loved ones in heaven.

V. I. CHANDLER.

A REQUEST.

Brother James H. Boroughs requests travelling preachers to visit Richmond Co., NC He has three children there. One is near Gibson's Mills. He says there are people in that county that desire to hear the truth, but that the true gospel is not preached there. Please note this. P. D. G.

[From the Gospel Messenger]

DEAR READERS:—Our faithful and beloved brother, Elder Sylvester Hassell, gave the Primitive Baptists near ten years of his time in writing the Church History. And more than that, he involved himself, to say nothing of his arduous labors, in a debt of $2,000, upon which he pays an interest of 8 per cent. This labor and expense was all to give us and our children the benefits of his great and valuable church history. He has to teach school for his support. Now, beloved brethren and sisters, what I want to say is this: should we not, as many of us as feel to do so, come to brother Hassell's rescue and see that he does not suffer loss in his labor for us and our children? I for one am not willing that he should suffer loss in serving me, and therefore I make this proposition to the readers and friends of the Messenger and of the brotherhood everywhere: that I will be one of 2,000 to give him, gratis, $1; or one of 1,000 to give him $2.00. I feel almost confident that there are two thousand readers of the Messenger, who could and would cheerfully make this small donation to brother Hassell: and 1,000 who would cheerfully give him $2. Then dear friends, send me that sum, more or less, as you may feel able to do, and I will faithfully report the sum and name of the sender to brother Hassell, who will no doubt publish the list of names in due time. Please friends, do not let this matter pass out of your minds. In conclusion, I will say that Elder Hassell made no suggestion of this to me, but it is on my sole responsibility that I make it.

As indicated on the 813th and 814th pages of the Church History, the Kehukee Association desired to furnish the book to subscribers at the mere cost of publication, and to have the expenses of the author paid by voluntary contributions, the last column on each subscription being intended to contain the amounts of such contributions. Less than one-twentieth of even the junior author's expenses have been paid in this way, and he has received nothing from the sale of the book.

When it was expected that the work would contain only 600 pages in long primer type, the Association thought that the price should be $2 (see page 814;) and, though the book contains 1,034 pages in brevier and nonpareil type—about three times as much matter as originally anticipated—the price has been but $2 for the cloth binding; the additional charge for the better binding goes to the binder. It would be hard to find anywhere a cheaper book.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not cost a cent to realize the merits of the treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs
 made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored,
 the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs burst, etc. Remember.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.
 A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been received please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

COMMUNICATED.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—
For some time I have had a strong desire to write you something of what I claim as a hope of a blissful immortality beyond “these narrow scenes of earth,” but fearing you might deem me intruding on your time, which I know must be almost completely taken up with your high calling and noble work of teaching, comforting and establishing in the truth the trembling saints throughout the circulation of your much appreciated paper, I have delayed. But as I am alone to-night, my wife and little Joe being with relations in Edgecombe, I thought to relieve myself of loneliness and the desire by writing to you.

The first time I felt my dependence upon a stronger arm than that of mine, was when a merc boy in my ‘teens.’ The Lord then laid his afflicting rod upon me, in the removal from earth to eternity first my dear mother, and then my father, leaving six children all minors to battle in life without the assistance of any one. True there were two older brothers than myself, but they were educated for the professions of a doctor and a lawyer. I had been to school but very little, consequently I was qualified for nothing but manual labor, and being so young knew little how to manage. Life’s trials were gathering thick and fast, and I had to begin at something. I could not remain on the farm, my age would not admit of that, so I obtained a position as clerk in a dry good’s store, saved a little money and went to school to professor Gillespie who was then teaching in Williamston. Soon my money was gone and I of course felt that my education would never be completed, so gloomy were the prospects. How miserable and wretched I felt, without a mortal to advise me what steps to take toward making a living. My mother had often told me “that God would help those that tried to help themselves,” which thought gave me a little encouragement.

Finally my oldest brother and myself concluded to try our fortunes in another state, and took our departure not knowing where we should find a home, traveling most of the time on foot, lodging frequently in the woods, encountering the perils of wild beasts and savage Indians, until we finally reached the state of Texas where my brother was recognized by a mason, who took us to his comfortable home, and cared for us until we could find employment.

My brother obtained the situation of school-teacher there, while I did manual labor of various kinds. I soon became disgusted and determined to come back to my old home, which I did as soon as I had saved a little money. My brother put me on a wagon with an old man who took me as far as Fayetteville, Arkansas; while traveling so many miles camping out at night in a strange and perilous country, I felt the need of a protector, and tried to ask the Lord to shield me from all harm and lead me safely home, which I believe he did, and how thankful I felt when my eyes beheld the scene of my childhood! I then sat down to farming in good earnest, building wonderful prosperity in my imagination, and as I was now twenty-one thought I must get married and be a man.

So in 1876 I was married to Miss Ida Mosely who was a very weakly constituted woman and was sick a greater portion of the time, which made life harder for me than I had imagined; and as domestic trials and the responsibility of a family grew upon me more than ever did I feel my dependence upon the Lord, and tried to acknowledge him in all my ways, while utterly blind of my own sinful heart.

My wife and her mother who lived with us were both strong Methodists, and often laid their afflictions to my not being a church member, saying it was my duty to join the church if I wished God's blessing upon me: though my feelings were that I was unfit to join any church: but as I had always been a sober, moral boy, I finally thought perhaps I was as good as a great many that were church members, and consented to be baptized, thinking in doing that God would bless me more than ever.

When the appointed time for me to join arrived the minister was sick, so that the ordinance could not be performed, and I must confess that I was sadly disappointed. The minister got well, came to see me, expressed regrets that he was sick, and said that I must go the next time and he would baptize me. When that day came my wife was seriously ill so that I could not leave her, and oh! how it grieved her to think of being disappointed again, but I told her that I was not fit to join the church, and God had thus restrained me. No, she said, do not look at it in that light. You must try another time, don't give it up.

I believe she was a christian, but could not think it my duty to be baptized. And Mr. Gold, up to that time I had never felt myself a lost and ruined sinner, though I believe there was a God who would judge all men. I read the scriptures, repeated a form of prayer night and morning, relying alone upon good works to carry me to heaven, though when I heard the Primitive Baptists preach they denied such, and preached salvation by grace.

I must confess that I thought them the most selfish people in the world, and hated everyone of them. I have often said the last one ought to be carried to a lunatic asylum. In 1882 my wife was taken from me, leaving two little boys for me to care for, which perplexed me much. Finally I agreed to bind them with my mother's relations who were then living in Virginia.

After I was left alone in my melancholy condition, the Lord I hope was pleased to open my eyes to see the corruption of my heart. What a vile helpless sinner I was, and how utterly incapable of doing one good deed.

It is needless to say that my prayer was changed, for God be merciful to me a sinner was irrefragable. Day and night did I cry unto the Lord for salvation, seeking often my lonely chamber to read the sacred word, hoping to obtain some comfort, yet God's time to deliver me from this horrible pit had not yet come, and my head was to go bowed down and heart enduring the bitterness of God's wrath until his appointed time had come; for he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," and no man can stay his hand.

After experiencing the awful pangs of conviction's arrow (as I hope it was) and giving up all hope of receiving forgiveness of my many sins, one evening as I entered my lonely home, suddenly this scripture came forcibly to my mind, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell from whence it comes, nor whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." I could not understand what this meant, and looked out of the window to see if any one was near. I could see no one, I began to feel light and good, and sweet scriptures flowed through my mind, such as these, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." The Lord is made unto me wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, then I was filled with praise to Israel's God, and my soul was exceedingly happy.

"T'was a heaven below, the Redeemer to know." All nature seemed to be changed from gloom to brightness, and everything looked happy, seeming to join me in praise to the giver of every good and perfect gift. Though I was alone at night, yet not alone, for the Lord was with me, and Jesus was exceedingly precious. This was in December 1883. On the fourth Sunday of that month I went to hear Elder Roberson preach at Spring Green, his text was, "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation that Christ Jesus came to save sinners of whom I am chief." I must say that that was the first sermon that I ever heard with the understanding, and at once I saw that he had been lead in the same way I had, and I was made to love these dear old Baptists that I had once hated so much, and to this day love them, though there are some whose light seems to be hid and are so much conformed to the amusement of this world that I cannot love them as well as those who seem to be adorned with a meek and quiet spirit. I have written a great deal more than I intended, but hope you will forgive me, and bear with me until I relate one dream that I had three years ago.

It was on Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in Jan. 1884. I dreamed of being in a large crowd where preaching was going on, after which bread was carried to certain ones, soon after they had finished eating a young lady came and handed me a white napkin with a roll of bread. It so astonished me I asked her what must I do with it, she said, "My Father told me to bring it to you, and you must eat it," then turned away. I bit it, so sweet was the taste that I ate the entire roll, and awoke chewing. How strange I felt. I could not comprehend the dream, but the next day I went to church; soon a strange young lady came in, at once I recognized her as the one that appeared to me in my dream. After she had spoken to some of the members she raised a song and sang it through almost by herself. The hymn was, "Convinced as a sinner to Jesus I come." How sweet the music of her voice, and how my soul was filled with praise. I obtained an introduction to the young lady whose name was Miss Ruth Cobb, and in December we were married.

Mr Gold, I have lived to realize my dream, for often does my wife feed me with spiritual food such as the Father gives her, and in my seasons of gloom and hours of trial, how much do her smiles and kind words lighten my feelings. But she has never asked me to join the church. I suppose she wants me to be fully persuaded in my own mind. Knowing that I was once so strong in the Methodist faith, she often tells me to go and hear them preach, and she will go with me: but I have no love for a doctrine that robs Christ of his power as a Savior.

If I could feel worthy to join any church it would certainly be that which ascribes all honor and power to God, which is the Primitive Baptist, but so fearful I am that I might be a reproach to the cause, I fear to ask admittance, though I love the brethren, if I know anything of my own heart's affection, and feel that my wife and self would be more united, in a sense, if I was only worthy of becoming a member with her. Our joy would be full. Satan so often tempts me to sin, and so often am I engulfed in doubts and fears, that it may be, no spiritual life dwells within, and I am just where I belong.

I hope you will see my wife in Tarboro. She is very thin in flesh though she has improved very much. For five weeks I thought the Lord would take her from me. Day and night did I eagerly watch by her side, expecting at any time the Angel of death, but thank the Lord he has withheld his afflicting rod so far, and I hope that she will soon be well again. We hope to be at Tarboro February meeting, if the Lord will. Your well wisher,

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

[His obituary will appear in this issue of the LANDMARK.] P. D. G.

The Lord is far from the wicked: but he heareth the prayer of the righteous.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER—Some months ago I requested the views of Elder Wm. R. Welborn upon the language of Zech. 14 : 8, which have been given through the LANDMARK ; and have noted in the meantime an exegesis upon the same scripture from the pen of F. A. Chick.

I seem to be as one drawing the pen at a venture, when I take thought that the brethren from whom these views have been elicited are far superior to me in knowledge and understanding of the Holy Scriptures. But there is an aching void in my heart that their writings have not filled, and a yearning desire I have, to give my understanding of the same text.

"And it shall be in that day." What day does the prophet behold? Most certainly he is looking forward through prophetic wisdom and sees the kingdom of heaven at hand, the setting up of the gospel church in which none shall enter by the spirits that are unclean ; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life ; in fine, the gospel day with all its blessings.

"That living waters shall go out from Jerusalem." What are these waters? The blood of Jesus? Not so ; for it is said that when the spear was thrust into his side, forthwith there came out blood and water, but neither one of which, could be the living water. To my understanding, these 'living waters' are the blessings or graces of the gospel which will be preached in all the world according to the command of him who was given all power both in heaven and in earth." "And that repentance and the remission of sins should be preached in his name among all the nations, beginning at Jerusalem, and "lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Here at Jerusalem, was when "these waters" were first to go out, and thence to all nations ; but only the thirsting among the nations receive the preaching of the gospel with a joy sweeter than honey and the honeycomb.

"Half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea. I cannot understand that either half of these waters flowed back or in the past, as some view, but that both halves went forward, onward, yet to objects which had names prior to the going out of these waters. The words "former and hinder," mean that which is past or gone over ; but neither one as used in the text refers to the redeemed of the Lord who had passed away before the gospel dispensation, else the blessings are not ours to know. But the definitive 'hinder and former' point to the names of the two distinct nations of today, of which all nations are a counterpart without reference to the individuals composing said nations. Thus 'former sea,' I view as the Jewish nation, and the 'hinder sea,' as the Gentile nation. Peter was shown in a vision that God is no respecter of persons, nations, in this gospel day.

John said that he saw a new heaven and a new earth (gospel dispensation ;) for the first heaven (law covenant as delivered unto the Jews) and the first earth (without covenant or so much as a kid to make merry as applied to Gentiles) were past away ; and there was no more sea." Jew or Gentile as the peculiarly honored of God, "the middle wall of partition having been broken down, both have through Christ access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now, Christ is preached unto one, a stumbling-block, unto the other, foolishness ; but to them who are called, of both nations, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. Thus I view "the former sea" as indicative of the Jews who were nationally the people of God, possessors of Canaan, and receivers of the promises of the conditional covenant, while the 'hinder sea,' Gentiles which is the older nation, as there were no Jews until Abraham's day, were to all human appearances, castaways. So the law covenant has been removed, and the gospel covenant, ordered and sure to all the heirs of God and equal heirs with Christ is established upon the foundation of God (Christ) by the which, as the fruit of the spirit, these living waters shall go wherever the gospel is preached.

"In summer and in winter shall it be." From this expression it is clear that "these waters" shall continue thro' the gospel era as a witness unto all nations; and then shall come the end. Thus the glad tidings of salvation must be heralded to all nations, "in summer and in winter," literally and spiritually according to the command, not of boards and the conventions of men, but of him who hath said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Neither does the Lord wait for these institutions to qualify his servants to preach, for flesh and blood cannot reveal these "living waters" so that they might proclaim them to the thirsting ones. The Lord giveth the increase of every spiritual blessing. But none need expect for the "in summer" with all its warmth, growth and fruit, spiritually considered any more than literally, to abide continually with him as he did when first raised to the mount of God's love and glorying in that living faith and hope in a crucified and risen Redeemer, as long as he is tabernacling here in the clay; for the christian's life may well be compared to a land of valleys and hills, yea summer and winter. And in winter the old man has been the one with which the new man has long had to contend. How truly does the figure describe that cold, barren, despondent life one feels, when sore and deep chastenings of the Lord have brought him to the very ends of the earth, a guilty distance from God, and when he has cried as he surely will "lead me to the rock that is higher than I," the Sun of righteousness will arise with healing in his wings, and he drinks the living waters, so to speak, as beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

As all things work together for good to them that love the Lord it surely is a great mercy that the bride has to pass through the chilling blasts of winter when love is cold, faith weak, and hope has well-nigh lost its anchorage; for such is the Spirit's work that she may the more grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Thus the elect of God are refined as silver and tried as gold and, as the church, the combined efforts of men and devils can never, can never utterly destroy them, neither can they keep the glad tidings, as living waters, from being preached to the sheep of the Lord's pasture. Yours in hope of eternal life.

MOZELLE L. GILBERT.

THE EXPERIENCE OF SISTER LOUISA E. COOKE.

BELOVED BRETHERN:—I have a hope of being called of God through his dear Son, unto the fellowship of those whom I dearly love and hope to meet in Christ's kingdom, where we will part no more.

I will now try to tell you something of that calling which is from God. About three years ago I became oppressed with a heavy burden, and thought I should die and be forever lost. I thought I had no friends to look to for consolation and being a deaf mute I could not converse with christians. I tried to pray to the Lord to open my ears so that I could hear preaching, but the more I tried to pray the worse I got and the more I thought I was forever lost within this dreadful pit.

Satan appeared to me holding a great banquet of music and dancing, and a table spread with choice dainties, and tried to entice me to sit down at his table and partake of his feast and join in his music and dancing, although he appeared to me as a little child, he could not deceive me, for I knew that he was a deceiver, and all his banquet appeared hateful to me, and after trying many ways to deceive me and could not, he vanished away and I saw Satan no more. After that my dear mother appeared to me dressed in a beautiful white robe, and she looked lovelier than anything I had ever seen; she held a beautiful cup of red wine in her hand, which I begged her to let me drink, but she would not let me drink, telling me that I must not touch that wine until I was baptized, telling me that I must be baptized in Sherrod's mill pond; and after conversing with me sometime she left me, and I saw her going up to heaven in a beautiful robe. Oh, how anxious I then was to go with her, and how willingly I would have left all in this world to follow her, but I could not go.

I still continued oppressed with a he'vy burden almost beyond my stren'th. Sometimes I had a hope of being saved but soon my troubles would return, and I thought there was no chance for me, and I would be forever lost. While in this dreadful state of trouble Christ appeared to me, and oh how beautiful he was; he had a beautiful cross in his hands, and showed me three different churches, the Methodist, the Roman Catholic, and others I did not know their names, all of them I rejected, telling him I did not love any of those churches. He then showed me the the mother church, that was the Baptist church. I told him that was the church I loved. He then told me that was the true church, and left me. Oh, how happy I did feel, I felt that I could almost fly in the air, I felt so light, and that my burden had left me and my troubles were ended. I felt as if I loved all my enemies and every person in this world, my husband and little children better than I ever loved them before, and how anxious I was to converse with christians and tell them how well I loved them.

I was then living in Northampton Co. and since have removed to Martin Co., near Conoho church, and being a deaf mute, I was at a loss what to do, as I knew they could not understand me, nor could converse with any of the members, which gave me much trouble, and when I saw them together, how anxious I was to be with them. Thus I passed several months, after my removal to Martin County, until Saturday before the third Sunday in April last I offered to the church at Conoho by the aid of an interpreter, was received and baptized the Sunday following by Eld-John W. Purvis, and how happy I felt when I came up out of the water. And now my beloved brethren I must bid you farewell, and those that I never meet in this world I hope I may meet in a world far better, where pleasure never ends; and trouble comes no more.

LOUISA E COOKE.

Conoho, Martin Co., N. C.

[Remarks from John W. Purvis]

DEAR BROTHER BODENHAMMER :— I have been exercised in mind a long time in regard to Sister Louisa E. Cooke a mute, whom I baptized on the seventh day of last April. She has been induced to write out her experience which I send you for publication. This experience of a poor sinner is evidence that sinners are saved by grace, and that God does reveal himself unto them by his spirit, without the aid of any human that is moving him there to. I too had a dream, and I thought I baptized a woman who never spoke to me, and when I raised her out of the water her countenance was more beautiful than any I ever beheld. I was troubled exceedingly, and I thought I had done a great wrong. I thought I had done that, for which I would never obtain forgiveness from God. The next day Mrs. Louisa E. Cooke came forward in conference at Conoho, and through her interpreter related her experience and was received; of course she said nothing audibly in conference or at the water, but when I lifted her out of the water, I beheld that beautiful countenance that I saw in my dream which shows a soul truly reconciled to God.

Yours in love, JOHN W. PURVIS.

EDITORIAL REMARKS ON SISTER LOUISA E. COOKE'S EXPERIENCE

How rich and wonderful is the doctrine of election of grace, unconditional on the sinner's part, set forth in the foregoing experience, of this vessel of mercy unto whom God through his dear Son, communicated by the riches of his grace, that she should be a living monument, reared by divine power above every hill and mountain of human reason and self dependence, to testify of the power of God's grace to a deaf mute, that naturally present themselves to our minds and contrasting doctrines, with doctrines up-rooted and over-turned, as with the whirlwind of God's spirit, every system of free or moral agency, and at once consigns to oblivion, the legions of home and foreign trumpet brothers from the corner of every street in cities of destruction to earth's remotest bounds. Yes she established the doctrine of unconditional election. We will now ask some questions of the advocates of the conditional system of salvation so called. First, can any one of you read the experience of Sister Cooke and then say that all, or any part of knowledge of sin and of the source of pardon was communicated to her by man : if it was not by man by whom was it ? Could all the singing, preaching, praying, shouting, telling of tales, disfiguring of face, dry or wet eyed, crying and stamping in pulpits, threatening her with the judgment day, with the sound of the last trumpet of Gabriel, with the flight of the Holy Spirit, with the separation of husbands and wives, and parents and children ; with depicting in her ears the winding sheet, the gnawing grave worm, the second coming of Christ, the raining of fire and brimstone, with the entire force of the remainder of your explosive zeal, to produce repentance and give knowledge of salvation ? Again, if all the world of mankind were such subjects as Sister Cooke, who then would be agents or means ? But say you they are not so, but why are they not so ? who maketh thee to differ from another, what hast thou that thou did'st not receive ? Your natural advantages of hearing and talking that Sister Cooke never had, from whence did you receive them, of merit or mercy ; if of merit what did you do for the Lord that enlightened you to hearing and talking ? If of mercy why boast and abuse ? If your natural abilities give a spiritual advantage over Sister Cooke, and merited that advantage by free or moral agency, pray tell her what you did so that she may do like-wise, and be your equal in the scale of chance, of the difference in your condition, and her owing to distinguishing mercy in creation, and that mercy gives you an external advantage over her : why, how do you object to the doctrine of discrimination ? Do you condemn God for doing more for you and less for her ? If you do either is it not saying to him that formed you, why hast thou made me thus ? If you complain, or think hard of God for discriminating either in creation, providence or grace, would it not be Prima facie evidence of your being of yourself, but not to God ? Then you have hope. It is built upon, and consists in your universal charity to men, and your universal opposition and hatred to God instead of "So Father, for so it seems good in thy sight," hence there is little difference between your hope, and the hope of hypocrites, whose hope is to perish.

Sister Cooke in her distress prayed to the Lord to open her ears so she could hear preaching. How did she know what preaching was for ? Is not her prayer Missionism backwards. Missionism is to preach to the deaf mute heathen, until you make him want to hear preaching, or to prepare himself to hear it. Is not such a course inconsistent ? How long would it have taken a Missionary or any one else, preaching to Sister Cooke, to set her to praying to the Lord, that she might hear preaching ? If Missionary preaching were to open the ears of the deaf, so they could hear the thunder of Mt. Sinai and feel their lost condition, would they not pray to the Missionaries for everything they need instead of praying to God as Sister Cooke did ? Surely if their preaching opens the ears and eyes of the deaf and blind, to them would be the first and strongest confidence, and if they to them acknowledge sin, they would naturally look to them to deliver them from the power and dominion of sin ; and the power and grace of God would be considered, as is the case by them, as effect instead of cause, hence it is that there is so much hue and cry in the land about men, money and means, these three are regarded as the cause or principle of salvation, and the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are regarded as mere effects or accessories to salvation in interest, just according to the means and efforts used by the free-will and universal charity of the mock worshippers who rejoice in human glory, and it is as easy to find witnesses now to condemn the gospel of the grace of God, as it was to find witnesses to condemn Christ before Pontius Pilate, and they are the identical men to a hair's breadth.

The banquet of Satan and his beautiful table spoken of by Sister Cooke is none other than that which Solomon calls the Banquet of fools—that is their profession who make a nice show of worldly wisdom, popularity and wealth to entice the way-faring man to turn in to drink of the wine of the fornication of her golden cup, that sits a queen boasting that she is no widow and shall not mourn the loss of her children &c. Satan appearing as a child is his religious manner of traveling. But God revealed to sister Cooke three denominations all of which she refused, then the Lord, as is his way, caused David last to pass before her and she loved that people—the Primitive Baptists—thus

The Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform ;

He plants his footsteps in the sea, and rides upon the storm.

Then may this display of God's grace with a poor deaf mute, be as cool water to the thirsty soul of all who read and feel their guilt. May you ever go to hear of God in time of trouble and the hour of temptation. May we all shelter in his side; lean upon his bosom; eat at his table; sit down under his shadow; to lean of him to be meek and lowly of heart; trust in his finished salvation; rejoice in his righteousness; contend for his doctrine; walk in his statutes; long for his coming; and oh! that all poor heavy laden, sin burdened, life weary, cross bearing pilgrims with our self, may have a safe and speedy dismissal from this world of strife, sin and pain, to glory and to God.—amen.

COMMENDATORY.

We are so well pleased with the two Epistles written by David Bartley and J. D. McElroy, and found in LANDMARK of Jan. 15th, that we want to esteem and give thanks for the coming forth of these special and clearly defined doctrinal points, and that God has blessed us with spiritual gleaners able to gather and combine the sweets of the gospel to please, nourish and comfort our souls in the way: and we feel to join the brother in prayer to God that he would raise up a princely spirit to demolish our idols, dig down our vain altars, give us time and space to repent, and draw us to him with a single, humble and true heart, Truly,

B. W. JENKINS.

CHURCH CONSTITUTED.

The following Elders; to-wit L. I. Bodenhamer, F. J. Stone and A. L. Moore met at Axton, Va., at 11 o'clock in compliance with the request of certain Brethren and sisters of the Predestinarian Baptist faith who live in this section, for the purpose of constituting themselves into a regular Predestinarian Baptist Church, if found sound in faith and in gospel order.

Elder F. J. Stone delivered a discourse to an attentive congregation, after which the Presbytery was organized by choosing Eld. L. I. Bodenhamer Moderator, and F. J. Stone, Clerk.

The church letters as held by the following brethren and sisters were then handed in and read by the clerk, and enrolled as follows; Brethren A. R. Beck, C. D. Bray and Martin Clayton, and Sisters Martha Eanes, Lucy S. Davis, Rilda Hawarton, Tabitha Lewis, S. E. Hodges, Elizabeth O. Jones, Mary J. Chatten. The "Articles of Faith," as adopted by the above named members, are the same that are held by the Baptists of the Mayo Association were found entirely satisfactory to the counsel being in accord with the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ

The moderator proceeded to give the hand of fellowship and in behalf of the counsel pronounced them a church in gospel order. The work of the counsel now being done after prayer by the Moderator adjourned in order.

The church proceeded at once to organize by choosing Elder A. L. Moore as their pastor and A. R. Beck church clerk, and selecting Brother C. D. Bray for deacon. The counsel proceeded at once to ordain him to that office by laying on of hands ; prayer by Elder L. I. Bodenhamer and charge by Elder A. L. Moore.

The church fixed the days of church meetings on Saturday before the third Sunday in each month. Adopted the name of Axton Predestinarian Baptist Church.

L. I. BODENHAMER, Mod.
F. J. Stone, Clerk.

ELD. P. D. GOLD,—DEAR BROTHER, When you write or see Mr. G. C. Farthing, of Durham, please thank him in my behalf for the $5. that he handed you for me. The entire amount thus far sent you and Elder Respass and Elder Beebe and myself, up to date, to help me pay the $2,000 Church History debt is $58 (fifty eight dollars) of which $32.50 has been sent Elder Respass. He has not yet sent me the amount in money. I deposite immediately, all that I receive, with Brother Wm. Slade and when I get as much as $100, I expect to send it to Alvin Clark to pay on the note that I owe Brother Wm. Barnes.

The debt of $2,000 was incurred, not for my own special benefit, but for the general benefit of the Primitive Baptist cause : and I feel that it is nothing but right for my brethren help me bear the burden. It is exceedingly heavy for me to have to bear it alone : but with one or two thousand to help me, it would be exceedingly light for us all—both for myself and for those that help me.

I sold myself and family out of house and home, mainly to pay this debt, and yet have not been thus far able even to pay all the interest ; and I have no prospect of ever getting a home, while this debt hangs over me. All the land that I inherited from both my mother's and father's estates is mortgaged to secure the payment of this debt ; and a part of this land I expected to use this year to get me a home, but I cannot do so now. If the History had been only as large as promised in the prospectus, the brethren Beebe were to have paid me $1,000, out of the first edition of 3,000 copies, but the additional matter absorbed this entire amount and so I received nothing. With this amount I could have paid half the debt.

MARRIAGE FOR HIS SON.

Friend J. A. Jackson requests my view of Math, 22 : 1—15

"And Jesus answered, and spake unto them again by parables, and said,

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son. &c.,

In all the teachings of Jesus the kingdom of heaven is presented, whether it be in parables or precepts, and in all that Jesus did his Father's will is accomplished ; for none on earth spake the truth as fully as Jesus did, and none on earth ever served a father as Jesus served his Father.

He is the heir of all things. Abraham has a son given him who inherits all his estates. Abraham seeks a wife for Isaac, a type of Jesus.

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king which made a marriage for his son." This is no uncertain king. Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled. Did you ever think what a type of Christ and the church true marriage is ? In the beginning God made them male and female. The man should forsake father and mother and should cleave unto his wife, and they two are one flesh. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it. How careful Baptists should be to guard the marriage vow and bed, and live as becometh the gospel. We cannot be too careful in opposition to divorces and the marriage of parties who are divorced. It always brings trouble because it is a reflection, a b'urring of the type, a marring of the figure of Christ and the church.

God himself chooses the bride for his son. Does he not then love her? Why should not a father, who chooses a bride for his son, the son loving the very one the father chooses, love that bride as he loves his own son? Why should not Abraham love Rebecca as he loved Isaac? No one but a father could answer that question. God does love the church of Jesus as he loves Jesus, John 17; 23—26.

Is every body the bride of Christ? Does every one wish to be? How is the teaching of Jesus in the parable? He sent forth servants to all them that were bidden to the marriage. But they would not come. This is the doctrine we preach. We tell the people that natural men will not come to Jesus, he himself says, ye will not come to me because your deeds are evil. The world says man could come if he would. But Jesus said, "ye will not come." He said, "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not." Now if a man will not do a thing he is bidden to do that shows he has no mind to do that thing, but he has a mind to do the opposite. If one is bidden to do good, but will not do it, because his mind is to do evil, or because he loves darkness rather than light, does it not show enmity against the one bidding him? What avails the bidding so long as those bidden have no mind to do this? One says I have bought a yoke of oxen and must go and see them, I pray thee have me excused. Another had bought a piece of land and must needs prove that. He therefore wishes to be excused.

Another has married a wife and therefore he cannot come. So none have a mind to come. They would not come. Where does your free will lead you? You call it free will. What is it? A will not to come, a will to go your own way. If one does what he wants to do, that is as much freedom of will as he desires, and it is right in his own eyes.

He will say he ought to do so and so, he ought to seek heaven, and he expects to do so, but not now. He wants to do something the opposite. Jesus says no man can come to me, except my Father which sent me draw him. That is true. No man can do a thing which he will not do. He will not do good because he is accustomed to do evil.

But says one, could he not seek the Lord if he would. But he will not. They would not come.

Again, the king sends other servants, saying to them which are bidden, "Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage. But they made light of it, and went one to his farm, and another to his merchandise. They ridiculed it or made light of it. How could people with that spirit go to the marriage? What was there in them to draw them to it? Just the opposite of this pleased them.

Others or the remnant did even worse, for they entreated his servants despitefully, and slew them.

This referred especially to the Jews, who thus hated the prophets the Lord sent unto them. Last of all he sends Jesus, the heir. They say this is the heir, come, let us slay him, and the inheritance will be ours. It is man's nature to want a religion that he can merit or earn and pay for. He wants the inheritance. He wants to enter in his own name.

But when the king heard of this he was wroth, and sent forth his servants and burned up their city. This represents the Jews and Jerusalem. The Jewish nation is this class of people God sent prophets to them and even Jesus himself. They shamefully entreated them, and slew him, and he destroyed them as a nation. Jerusalem was burned, and the nation wasted. The gospel was first preached to the Jews. They rejected it, then God sent his servants to the Gentiles. They preach that all things are ready. The fatlings are killed, the wine is mingled, Jesus is crucified and risen, all things are now ready. Jesus finished the work that God gave him to do. The gospel is preached that all things are ready. Come ye to the marriage supper of the lamb.

The apostles and others sent went forth and preached Jesus and the resurrection. They went to the highways: the highways represent Gentiles, or such as are not Jews by nature. In another place it says into the hedges, streets etc., representing such as are needy and destitute, or Gentiles that are not by nature provided for as the Jews were. Especially such as are poor, needy, halt, lame, maimed and blind are represented. When they went they gathered all sorts—both good and bad. How often in the preaching of the gospel this is done. Many united with the church in its early days, but some were not true believers in the Lord. Like it is when the fisherman casts in the net and drags to shore, he finds good and bad. But there is a division. The good are gathered, the bad are cast away. While the preacher may not judge the heart, and may be imposed upon, yet God makes manifest. He searches his people, Jerusalem, as with candles. He makes manifest the thoughts of the heart.

He furnishes the wedding garment. In olden times the father of the bridegroom furnished a wedding garment for each invited guest. If any therefore had not on a wedding garment they were cast out as unbidden. The Father of our Lord Jesus himself supplies and grants the righteousness, the wedding garment, of all the guests of the marriage supper of the Lamb. He chooses them and bids them come, sending his servants to bring them in. Does not then each one thus bidden appear well in the eye of the Father? The king will not object, yea has himself bid the guest and clothed him with a wedding garment. His poverty disappears here. His filth is hid and gone. One is equal to another. God searches them. How important it is to me that I be found with the wedding garment on. Jesus is the righteousness of his people. They are complete in him. How good it is for the poor, halt, lame, vile, and prodigal to be thus clothed by the Father and seated at the king's table; and appear in needle work of wrought gold.

How awful though to be found there not having on a wedding garment. When such is asked about it he is speechless. God searches, he knows his own. Many are called in the general preaching, but few are chosen. See how it at last depends on the choice of God. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you.

To be cast into outer darkness is to be cast out where there is everything vile and unclean.

Outer darkness is in the world. The church has the light of Zion. There is peace, there is the marriage of the Lamb. God walks among his people and is the light of the holy city. But none except those with the wedding garment are welcome and at home there. How important to every one, to appear in the wedding garment.

By nature we are fond of going to feasts, and especially are we fond of attending marriages. Even old people appear almost young on such occasions. But how different is man's treatment of this wedding. How poor we must become to hunger for this bread and wine—how naked must one feel before he is clothed with this robe of righteousness. It shows the vanity of our mind—that we put bitter for sweet, and choose death rather than life because our ways are evil.

There is a peculiar sense in which the last is first, and the first last. He that is first in his own cause, or righteous in his own eyes, is first in his own opinion, and thinks he is preferred; but he is rejected at last. While the one who considers himself last or farthest off, and most unfit, to him mercy is first shown, and thus the last is first. So many are called, but few chosen. Here is one appearing at the wedding feast in his own garment. He is not in harmony with the king, nor his son, nor the bride, nor the true guests. He does not love this marriage or honor it. He does not love this house or this company. But he is there in his own interest, in his own name, in his own merit. He is not a chosen one. This is not his place. God chose such as he loves, and puts his spirit in, and they come in the king's name and strength, They love Jesus, the bridegroom, and hate themselves, and therefore they appear in the garment of the king. They are in harmony with the king. They love his ways and come to the solemn feast.

READ.

The following appeared in a paper published in Raleigh, by some leaders among the New School or Missionary Baptists, giving their authority for state and foreign missions. Compare the scriptures well, or you may fail to see what they claim. It will do no harm to compare this with the Bible. If you fail to see any resemblance at all between this and the bible it will be at the risk of being called very dull and stupid by them.

Let them speak for themselves, tho' they are hardly old enough to speak for themselves, yet like many other youths they think they are.

(Read as follows.)

"Paul—To the Jew first (State Missions) and also to the Greek.—Foreign Missions.—Rom. 1 16."

"Paul—'When they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision (Foreign Missions) was committed unto me (Paul as the traveling missionary Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board then located in the city of Antioch) as the gospel of the circumcision, (State Missions) was unto Peter (as the Corresponding Missionary Secretary of the State Mission Board, then located in Jerusalem.)'"

"For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship (Corresponding Secretaryslip) of the circumcision (State Mission) the same was mighty in me towards the Gentiles (Foreign Missions.) And when James, Cephas and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me (the call to be a foreign Missionary) they gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, (become Foreign Missionaries) and they unto the circumcision (State Missions)." Gal. 2 : 7-9.

"The author of State and Foreign Missions alike is God. He makes the division, and in men. The work is one, and alike important, and the workers are alike acceptable and honorable in God's sight. Foreign Missions grow out of, and are sustained and enlarged by the successful prosecution of State missions. "The hope of the heathen world is in well organized and well trained churches at home." M. T. YATES.

"Jesus—Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, (Raleigh) and all Judea (all North Carolina—State Missions) and in Samaria, (the States around, Home missions) and unto the uttermost part of the earth (Foreign missions.)" Acts 1:8.

"The scriptures might be extended, but it is not necessary. Please study them, call the attention of others to them, talk of what you ought to do for missions, when you ought to do it, and then do whatever you can do. Life is short. Whatever we do must be done soon. Now is the accepted time."

What think you of their authority? You know that they have much of it from the cases produced. It is their best. Men can institute resemblances where they want them.

Let me tell you reader, that money is what they want. Give them that, as much as they want, and they will convert all, save the elect of God, to their notions.

BEST LAST.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have for a long time been thinking of writing to you, to try to get information about the Scriptural meaning of the water being turned to wine. What does the wine that man puts forth mean?

Man puts forth (it seems) the best wine he has at first, but the wine the Savior puts forth is decided to be the best.

Now I believe that the miracle of the water being turned to wine is not only a natural miracle that could be seen by men; but it was emblematical of spiritual things. How does man know when, or how does it make itself manifested in an individual, when he has tasted the good wine the Lord has put before him to partake of.

What causes me to write is because I fear I never have tasted it. Yours in hope.

W. J. WESTBROOK.

P. S. Please come down to the Old Seven Mile to see us. We are poor people, and we feel low, and we desire to be thankful when the Lord's servants come to visit us.

Come to our June meeting, the third Saturday and Sunday. If you will and can, we will meet you at Dunn, N. C. May God bless you. W. J. W.

Remarks.

[John 2:1-11.]

And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Gallilee.

Jesus said I do cures to-day, and to-morrow, and the third day I am perfected.

This third day represents the death and resurrection of Jesus, or the turning of water into wine.

I will notice specially the question that brother Westbrook presents.

"What does the wine that man puts forth mean?"

Water here represents the law, six water pots after the manner of the purifying of the Jews. Six water pots represent the six days work or labor that the law required before one could rest on the seventh day. The water is not wine naturally. At the marriage they have no wine.

It is customary to have wine at marriages. Man too bring his best wine first. That represents the law. The law never gives anyone any righteousness. It has none to give. It requires righteousness. It discovers or shows where there is no righteousness. By the law is the knowledge of sin, and where there is no law there is no transgression. There is always sin where there is law. The strength of sin is the law. Sin then would be dead or have no strength where there is no law.

Now man's first work under the law is his best work. That is, the longer a man works under the law the worse he is manifested to be, as he waxes worse and worse. Man puts forth the best appearance first. When he is an infant he appears more innocent than he does when he is developed.

He started well in the garden of Eden, but how soon he is corrupted.

He promises better than he performs. His outside appearance is better than his heart. Without he makes a good appearance, while within is abominable idolatry. While he appears outwardly to men to be good, he walks in a vain show. He puts forth the best wine first.

When man begins to make a profession of false religion, which is his wine, or such wine as he makes, it is his best first; but when a man is drunken, or properly under the influence of false religion, then that which is worse is brought forth, and men wax worse and worse. For wine is a figure of religion, true or false.

We know that when men are well drunken, they are poor judges of good wine, and their thirst for it increases so that they will take almost any sort. A successful way to deceive a man is to bring wine that is nice in appearance, or the best to him at first. But after he is inflamed with it, and well drunken, then he can be imposed upon by poor stuff and will drink almost anything. Satan has a sugar coated pill at first, or wine of false doctrines, that sparkles in the cup; but in the end it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder, whose bite or sting is fatal bringing death. The wages of sin is death.

What a good thing at that marriage that they had no wine. What a good thing is it for a man to know he has no righteousness of his own. At this marriage the mother of Jesus is present, and her advice is, do what Jesus tells you to do. Is not this always the advice of the true mother, the Jerusalem above?

This marriage represents the marriage of the bride, the lamb's wife, to the true bridegroom.

Jesus himself supplies the wine at the marriage. This is the wine of the grace of God that maketh glad the heart of God and man.

Jesus turns the water into wine. He fulfills the law. He obeyed the law and magnified it. Paul says to Timothy, Drink no longer water, but take a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine oft infirmities. Timothy was a Jew, and inclined as we are to rely on the law. This was no cure for his oft infirmity. But wine is for him that hath a heavy heart. The Gospel is for those that are poor and frail. We are not to look to the law for righteousness nor comfort, but grace is to cheer us. Jesus shows in this first miracle the mystery of his life, death and resurrection, or he manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him. This miracle was a prophecy of what he would do.

The law is first, and by it is the knowledge of sin. But the gospel or best wine is last. Convictions come first. There is no cheer, nor comfort in them, no joy, no enriching, but misery, woe and death. But when Jesus sends the wine of the kingdom of grace into the heart then the best wine is brought forth, and men drink and forget their poverty, and remember their misery no more.

How wretched and miserable the effect of sin in the heart of a quickened sinner. The first or beginning work is to show his vileness, but when Jesus sends the servant with the good wine how refreshing and sweet the going down of this wine of the best beloved, causing the lips of them that are asleep to speak, or that as the governor of the feast have toiled not, to make the wine, nor know as such where it comes from. For surely they that drink wine when they are asleep do not labor or toil in that drinking, nor drink it by human strength or wisdom.

It is always a matter of surprise and joy to a child of God to find things better than he expected. When he was brought down to death, to be lifted up to the throne of glory is a wonderful surprise. It is reserving the good wine until now. The end of a thing is better than the beginning thereof.

Brother Westbrook desires to know how it is made manifest in an individual when he drinks this wine of the kingdom new and old. For it is both new and old. It is old wine, the best, but new to him, or a new thing in the carth.

One way it is known is that the man becomes poor and needy, and feels he is ready to perish, or has a heavy heart, and is poor and needy. He is not among those who are well drunken, and have need of nothing.

They had no wine here at this marriage. We have none of this wine. It is those that have plenty of their own that are not choice what they drink. Almost any sort of false doctrine will suit those that are rich or drunken. But the poorer one is in this kingdom the more choice and particular he is as to what he drinks. The viler any one is the better the remedy he needs.

Brother Westbrook feels poor and needy. That shows he is not drunk with false religion, for that makes one think he is good and righteous. But does not one get better and better himself as he grows in grace. No, he gets worse himself in the sense that he sees and feels more of his own vileness and therefore he needs the best wine.

When one has a taste of this best wine he cannot drink any other sort, and he is always hungering for that. And this comes last, therefore we must wait for it.

Those that are drunk with their own works know that they are christians. Like a drunken man they are the richest men, the strongest, know more than any one else, their tongues are in everything, while those who have tasted that the Lord is gracious are humble and poor and needy in their own sight, and fear much of the time.

But they believe that Jesus is the Son of God. They believe he has all the power. They believe he is at this marriage, and that there is no putting away in this marriage.

Brother Westbrook, I am endeavoring to serve four churches and that takes up every Sunday in the month except the fifth Sunday. So that I cannot be with you at the time you name. I hope some of our brethren will visit you. P. D. G.

RAHAB.

Brother Lee Hanks wishes to know what Rahab the harlot represents.

This incident like many others is rather obscure to my mind, as to whether there is any thing more designed than the immediate result. It is very evident that this woman, though she was a harlot, was a vessel of mercy, one of those who were chosen in Christ Jesus unto salvation.

And again, she was not an Israelite according to the flesh, but was an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger to the covenant of promise, and yet was exercised by faith to do that which was right in the eyes of the hosts of Israel, and their God.

As she was a Gentile, she might be used to illustrate the existence of, and bringing in of those other sheep which are not of the Jewish fold. Or in a still greater sense the entire church might be prefigured by her, as it was and is in a state of alienation, bondage and death, as men and women here in the flesh, who are led by the spirit, walk by faith and not by sight.

The same spirit that turned the spies into this house also moved Rahab to receive them, and taught her of the character of the men, and of the God who had delivered them, of which deliverance she had heard, and of the necessity of salvation for herself.

And there was found in the same place, and the same thing salvation for both them and her. The very same scarlet thread or cord by which they were let down, she was told to bind in the window through which they were let down. Sinners are saved by the power and the virtue of the life and blood of Jesus through the promise of God, and the gift of God by grace, thro' faith.

It seems the same idea is represented in and by the scarlet cord in the window that is in and by the blood upon the door posts in Egypt. Or at least the result is the same. The Jews partook of the passover, discerning the blood upon the door post. While we the Gentiles partake of the bread and wine discerning the Lord's body—the breaking of his body—the shedding of his blood, and the salvation of the church, which is his body—the fullness of him that filleth all in all.

Again, she might be used to illustrate the church and the reception of those of like precious faith into the visible church. In the land of Canaan a type of the church or the dwelling place in our experience in the church is seen.

The spies as two witnesses go before and behind and spy out and make room for the reception of the coming one. It is by faith that the church here, composed of men and women, receive the evidences of salvation; and the ones thus hearing the evidence produced by the witnesses, in which every word is established.

In this incident is seen the wonder workings of our God, which are however no more wonderful than the salvation of a sinner to-day, and the direction of that sinner, by faith, to his friend and a place of safety.

I may be merely guessing at what this woman might represent, and if so, Brother Hancks better write his own guessing; so if he feels to write on the subject we hope to hear from him.

P. G. L.

WHY IS IT.

I have often questioned in my own mind why it is that some so soon take up their cross and follow Jesus, while others whose evidences of a hope are equally as good linger a long time, and others again never do it.

It cannot be that they are only half alive as a result of the quickening that is by the Spirit, for they that hear the voice of the Son of God shall and most certainly live in the eternal life which he gives, and by the faith which is born of God and overcome the world. While the body is dead because of sin, yet the spirit is life because of righteousness. He that was dead is alive again, and he says, behold I am alive forevermore. And the life which we now live in the flesh we live by the faith of the Son of God.

There can therefore be nothing wrong or deficient about the life of those who have been quickened, or given life to see themselves as poor lost sinners, and Christ as the Savior of such. In the Spirit, by faith, they are thoroughly alive, and day by day are more or less made sensible of their own vileness and the purity of Jesus, and their depravity, and his power.

Could it be said that they are unbelievers? Surely not. They will remember when their greatest desire was to believe that Jesus was their Savior. But their fate seemed to be sealed. They could not believe that which they had no evidence to even presume was so. What would they then have given to be a believer in Jesus? What would they not have given to be able thus to believe. They could not say, "I can, I will, I do believe." But—

O Lord I would I could believe
That thou did'st die for me,
Then would my soul have sweet relief
And rest in peace in thee.

Has the Lord ever given them an answer to this prayer? Yes. They have been made to believe with such power as was never before felt in their hearts, when they could sing with power in the spirit and with understanding in the way of the salvation of sinners—

My Lord, my Master and my God,
Thy side and hands I see,
And from them flowed that precious blood,
That thou did'st shed for me.

They were ushered then into rest, having ceased from their labors, and with unbounded love flowing out to God, and to his people. They felt the drawings of love toward the assembly of the saints, with a longing desire to be among them, but on approaching the threshold of the sanctuary of holiness to the Lord, there arose within them a great conflict in which there was clearly manifested a desire to press forward attended with a sense of fear and trembling, and a knowledge of unfitness in the flesh, and from this flesh came the suggestion, wait awhile, perhaps you are deceived, and no doubt are, for saints are good people, whereas you are full of evil, and the resolution was, I had better wait. I am not worthy or fit to be with God's people, still I love them above any other people upon earth. And so they are to this day wanting to do right, but feel they cannot do good because when they would evil is present, and strange to say, these people thus more or less exercised, have worked up the matter, and so shaped it that they are ready to claim in substance that it is as much because of the love they have for the church, and desire for its prosperity that they do not offer to join in with the saints in the service of God, as anything else. They feel to be so sinful that for them to be with God's people would mar the peace and tarnish the beauty of Zion.

How strange it is that one should prefer his own conclusions to those of Christ and his apostles. There is no scripture admonishing those who wish to follow Jesus to wait 'till they feel fit, or worthy to come, or can not possibly stay away any longer. I know many stay from the church as long as they think they can, but I find no precept nor example in the scriptures that would warrant the giving of such disobedient ones credit for serving the devil as long as they could.

It is the devil that prompts God's people to disobey him, and as long as one heeds a sense of unfitness rather than what Jesus has said, he is giving preference to the devil.

Jesus says, if any man would come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me.

There is no precept in the book of disobedience, as from the master nor his apostles. Paul tells of his conflicts, but he is at the same time a member of the church and a preacher of the gospel. Then we cannot take similar difficulties to those of his and assign them as a reason for our disobedience.

If one loves the brethren and desires to follow Christ, these are evidences that he should follow him, and he is left without an excuse for not doing it. "If ye love me keep my commandments." One cannot consistently say he loves the Lord, when he does not keep his word.

We may not escape all trials and persecutions by keeping the commandments of Jesus, but this is no reason why we should not keep them. Because we cannot live a perfect life, free from troubles and tribulations in this world, is no reason why we should be derelict in those things we can do. And we certainly can do what Jesus says do. If we think we want to come after Jesus, and yet can not do it, even after denying ourselves we may be certain we do not in sincerity want to follow him. His commandments are not grievous, and his yoke is easy and his burden is light.

May each of us examine ourselves whether we be in the faith, and whether there is any reality in our anxieties about the salvation of our souls.

May we love one another with a pure heart fervently, considering one another to provoke unto love and good works.

P. G. L.

WE DO NOT.

Primitive Baptists do not join any sort of secret societies, it matters not what they are.

The reasons are that Jesus taught nothing in secret, that no Apostle ever joined a secret society, and that we are to put our light on a bushel and not under it, for it is to shine before men.

We are to be separate from the world, and therefore we are to keep out of all worldly societies.

P. D. G.

NOT TRUE.

It has been reported that my life is insured in a life insurance company. There is no truth in that statement. I never have been insured, and never expect or want to be.

If the Lord is my portion that is enough for me.

Obituary.

SISTER DOROTHY TRENT.

Sister Dorothy Trent, aged 69 years, became a victim of typhoid pneumonia, the seventh day of March, and was clasped in the arms of Death, the 10th of the same month.

Though her illness was brief, her sufferings were great, and she often expressed a desire to go to the land of rest. She seemed perfectly resigned to the will of her merciful Creator, and said "Though my body is weak my soul is bright." She spoke of a brilliant light o'er her, and said: she was only waiting to pass through the gate-way of Death, to be healed by the Great Physician. From her expression and language I think she saw through the mist of Death, the bright face of her Holy Savior. And his kind and loving hands, soothed all her pains and she fell asleep in His gentle arms saying: "I am going home to die no more."

Her remains were quietly laid in the family graveyard, near Ridgeway Va., on the 12th of March. The burial services being conducted by our beloved and faithful Elder A. L. Moore.

Thus passed away a true christian and kind neighbor. She was the wife of James W. Trent and the mother of 13 children—seven of whom, with their father survive her.

Though the household is saddened,
By a mother's voice being stilled,
Yet I hope the bereaved ones will be comforted,

And enabled to say, Lord thy will be done.

BETTIE WALKER.

Little Bettie, the infant daughter of John H. and Dora Walker, of Reidsville N. C., was born January 25th 1886, and died, of membrane croup, December 9th 1887.

She was the second child born unto them, and was, no doubt, a bright star in the firmament overreaching the little world composing this happy family. But he who gave her to merely bud in this world, took her to blossom in the Paradise of God.

No doubt it is a great trial to the fond parents, when the darling infant, which was yesterday delighting the household with its joyous prattlings is today still and cold in death. But thus it must be even with the infant of days, as well as a man of an hundred years, ere its mortal body can receive that glorious change and fashion like unto that of the body of Jesus.

These are the Lord's doings and are marvelous in our eyes. While it was a sweet star in the crown of the parents joy, it was to the Lord a pearl of great price hence he took it unto himself, to be with its little cousin who, though younger, was made in the hour of death to proclaim, in strains of heavenly eloquence, praise to God for salvation in Jesus. Weep not for the babe, for it is now by the power of omnipotency, vying with Paul and John in eternal anthems of everlasting praise to the Savior of sinners.

Your infant dear is far away
Amidst the saints in bright array,
By grace divine has joined the throng
To sing of love—the Savior's song

GARRY PITTMAN AND HIS WIFE MARTHA PITTMAN.

The aged brother Garry Pittman was born November 2nd, 1790, and died December 18th, 1871, making his age 81 years, 11 months and 16 days.

Sister Martha Pittman his wife was born September 10th 1800, and died March 30th 1887, age 87 years, 2 months, and 20 days.

They leave behind them a goodly number of children, grand children, and great grand children, living and dead 128.

We do not mourn as those that have no hope, for they exchanged this world of sorrow, trouble and death for a state of joy and peace.

They were received in the church at Beulah N. C. Sept 5th 1832. As far as the writer knows they lived godly lives, and from my first recollection of them they enjoyed the love and esteem of the brethren.

It was my pleasure to visit and try to preach for sister Pittman awhile before her death, and she appeared to be strong in the faith of salvation by grace. I was also called on to preach her funeral which I attempted in the presence of a goodly number of relatives and friends, from Isa. 40: 7.

Then her body was committed to earth to await the blessed resurrection of the dead.

Brother pray for me that I may be counted worthy to attain unto that blessed resurrection.

JOSEPH EDWARDS.

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

"Man that is born of a women is of few days and full of trouble," and fleeting time is ever bearing us on from one trial to another cross of woe, and from one cross to another scene of misery; so that after all, our brief pleasure like a dazzling meteor vanishes ere we are conscious of its going. But I know there is no continuing city here in this vale of tears, and vain are the efforts of man to frustrate the Lord's plans, for in wisdom does he afflict, and in amazing love lay the chastening rod whenever and wherever he sees the necessity of it. And all the afflictions and trials I've endured for the last ten months, none were so severe as the great blow that fell upon me on the 20th, of Jan. 1888, when my dear, devoted husband, Franklin Taylor, was summoned from the tumultuous scenes of earth to the blissful realities of immortal glory. With joy did he hail the messenger as the dispatcher of all his sufferings, when he should stand in the presence of his God "as one having come up out of great tribulation," and triumphantly did he pass through the cold waters of death with the goodly land in view, relying alone upon the blood of Christ to procure for him a crown of glory. Oh that I could be reconciled to this heavy dispensation of providence, and meekly bow in submission to his will; saying, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." But I must admit that my nature is too weak, and enough of the spirit has not yet been given me to utter these words from the depths of my heart, for so strong is the battle of life, without his strong arm to lean upon, and noble heart to comfort and sympathize, that were it not for the precious little boy entrusted to my guardianship, I feel that I should faint under the prospect of the rod, for apparently life would court my stay no longer. God's ways are indeed mysterious. Like the wells of Lychor they are deep, and we have nothing to draw with. So that after all attempts to pry into and comprehend them we may admit God's justice in all things. His gifts are not man's gifts. "He gave and he hath taken away, though he slay me yet will I trust him." For he is a present help in time of need, and to him alone do I look for life, joy and happiness beyond these rough billows of time.

On the night of the 17th, of January, after a cheerful conversation with myself on christian exercises, Mr. Taylor was taken with a violent pain in his left ear. I applied external remedies which gave temporary relief, but could not get him to retire until after midnight. He said that he thought his life was nearing its close, and he wanted to tell me all about his business, and how to manage for the welfare of myself and little ones, which he did with perfect composure, and said he was not afraid to die, for Christ was his hope, and for me not to think of him as being dead; but to think of him as being happy in the Saviour's love, which he said was heaven where'er it be. After talking for some time he finally agreed to retire and slept some during the night, arose next morning feeling better, went out and fed his stock as usual, returned to the house and said he was growing worse rapidly. I insisted on having a physician, but he would not consent. He said his brain was the cause of his suffering, and it was beyond the reach of medical skill. I continued doing everything imagination would suggest to allay pain, but all in vain, and he grew worse until I finally prevailed on him to have a physician who he said would do him no good, but perhaps would relieve me of bitter regrets when he was no more. When the physician came he examined him, and pronounced it a case of Meningitis, but as we washed out the affected ear, to our surprise and my sorrow, we found a small black spider had by some means gotten into it and diffused its poison over the brain. Then for the first time did I apprehend the result, and intensely did my bosom friend suffer, surrounded with every comfort, attention and care that could be given. On the night previous to his death he told me that he was feeling better, and thought that he could sleep some, if I would lie down by him and rest, which I did, and we both fell asleep and slept well for about two hours, when I was aroused by his groans, and asked him if he felt worse, "yes he said, never was I so sick before, but O righteous Father it will not be long before I shall be out of it all." I asked him to be hopeful, for I could not bear to give him up, to which he said, "Yes I am, for soon I shall be in heaven and oh, so sweet will be my rest." I could not suppress my feelings, which he discovered, and drew me to his affectionate bosom, embraced me in his loving arms, and imprinted a kiss that spoke more than thousands of words and said, "Ruth, our brief time together has been happily spent, you have done all in your power to relieve life's burden, and God has blessed your noble efforts: your untiring attention during my illness proves your faithfulness, and 'tis sad to part, but soon it must come. God will provide for you, if you trust him, and 'tis far better for me to depart and be with Christ." He talked for some time about how graciously the Lord had blessed him, and said, tho' his sufferings were intense, yet no more so than he deserved, for amid all his trials and hardships, he never knew what sickness was, and now it would soon end in perfect freedom and happiness. Looking up into my face he said, "Is't it a good hope through grace, instead of works? He grew worse rapidly, and soon I discovered his speech was growing imperfect, and asked him what he wanted. He replied 'water' and asked me not to leave him, but stay by and give it to him as long as he lived, which I tried to do, but O how hard to witness the suffering one when it was beyond my power to administer one comfort or soothe one pain. But God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will sent his reaper to gather the sufferer home, on the night of the 20th, and with a smile beaming upon his countenance, my dear husband raised his eyes to heaven and breathed his spirit into the hands of his maker.

"Asleep in Jesus ! oh how sweet !
To be for such a slumber meet !
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes."

Mr. Taylor was not a member of any church, but was a strong believer in salvation by grace alone, was free to admit his love for the Primitive Baptists, and attended their meetings regularly, when not providentially prevented : and many of them will sadly miss his presence when they assemble at old Spring Green to worship. Often have I heard him say that he would rather be a good Primitive Baptist than anything else, fearing he could not live as a bright light set upon a hill, he refused to seek admittance into the fold.

Being honest, industrious, ambitious to do well, and possessed of excellent moral character, he merited the goodwill of all with whom he dealt, and by his good walk and prudent conversation won the confidence and esteem of all who knew him, and his neighbors now mourn the loss of a good conscientious and kind neighbor, and the community the loss of a quiet peaceful citizen, and his children the loss of a devoted indulgent father, while my irreparable loss is that of an affectionate and devoted husband, whose noble heart was ever ready to comfort, forgive, and hand ever ready to administer to my wants and relieve me of whatever domestic trial came in my way. How tenderly and willingly he nursed me during my illness of three months, never seeming to tire of administering to my wants and comforts, always near when I called for him. What a comforter he was to me, not only in sickness but in health also, for he was a man that loved home and spent his leisure moments with me and the children. Even now as the sun gathers around him his mantle light of to lie down in his Western couch, and the noisy world is being hushed, I seem to listen for his gentle footsteps coming in from his work, but ah ! how vain is imagination ; Never more will his gentle voice greet me again, nor his cheerful smile welcome me, and cheer my fireside. Surely a good husband is one of God's best gifts to woman, and how little do we know how to appreciate their kindness, devotion and sacrifices until we are bereft. Then we can look back and see many painful things to grieve us, but if we received their approbation and affection as a token of faithfulness, surely that is a comfort, to know "I pleased him who always tried to make me happy."

Mr. Taylor was born in Martin Co. N. C., June 21st 1853, and died at the same place Jan. 20th 1888, making his brief stay here 34 years, 6 months and 29 days.

He was twice married, first to Miss Ida Mosely of Virginia, who died in April 1882, leaving two little boys who are still living, and with their relatives in Virginia. In December 1884 he was married to the unworthy writer, for I never felt worthy of such a noble, generous companion. He was the father of six children, only three living, and only one brother and sister is left to mourn the loss of a dear good brother. May God sanctify this dispensation of his providence to the good of his bereaved ones, be a father to the fatherless, and enable me to bow in humble submission to his righteous will, and trust him alone for sustaining grace. Remember a poor afflicted worm of the dust, at a throne of grace.

RUTH TAYLOR.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsond in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth. $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing any thing about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten-days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, ect.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST.

BROTHER GOLD :—Having been led by one whom you know to esteem you very highly in love for the “manner of spirit you are of,” I feel the greater freedom in offering you for publication some thoughts on which I submit with profound reverence, hoping to gladden the hearts of many brethren and sisters in the Beloved, with the views of Him that strengthens me.

The question, “What think ye of Christ?” has been transmitted to us by himself, that the thoughts of many hearts might be revealed.” Forty eight generations of christians in the four quarters of the globe have revolved the glorious subject in their minds, some in their hearts, and their conclusions have been preached and talked over in conversation and meditated in silence age after age, and still the question agitates the nations, shapes their destinies and gives tone to history. For his words die not but abide forever. “What think ye of Christ?” equally interests the “innumerable company of angels” whose Lord he became after his ascension to the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens.

At the outset it occurs that the prophecy of Isaiah—his name shall be called Wonderful—is still true. It is too wonderful for me; I cannot attain unto the full knowledge of all that that Name covers. Paul himself, who had seen him and from him received direct the gospel which he preached and the things which he handed to the churches as ‘traditions’ to be delivered to succeeding generations of christians for their observance, admitted that even to him beyond controversy, “great is the mystery of godliness” in each of its six elements, every one of them concerning Christ, 1 Tim. 3; 15, 16.

Nor does the wonder diminish, but rather grows upon us when we reflect on the startling truth that by him were all things created, and for him and for his pleasure. He has therefore been the principal factor in universal history, angelic and human. If this thought be too large for us, let us go back only to “the beginning of the creation,” we shall learn that the earth itself was built for him, his kingdom and his people; a consummation to be reached when the King shall say to his chosen ones, “Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.” How far back soever in our imaginations we push the time of that foundation. So that it is true, as the author of ‘experience’ concluded, “God never thought of man but with reference to Christ.” It is clear then, all things arise in proof, that the most important question that can occupy us is—“What think ye of Christ?” The Samaritans who believed on him after seeing and hearing him for themselves, thought of him in no speculative way, but only as “the Savior of the world.” And Paul seems to me to have wearied himself upon the subject at large, and finally said to himself anyway “He loved me and gave himself for me.” And we are happy in the proportion of faith, when each can say with weak or strong assurance, "Christ loved me and gave himself for me." Any religion with that personal application left out, is "a tinkling cymbal or sounding brass." Life itself is an intolerable burden, a torture and a martyrdom, to every soul concerned about death, judgment and eternity, who cannot through streaming eyes and grateful heart look up to heaven and say, Christ loved me and gave himself for me," even me. It is this feeling that gives, or that grows out of, "the peace of God that passeth all understanding."

Of the Manhood of Christ both himself and his Apostles took great pains that there should be no doubt among his people. "The Lord was made flesh," made of the substance and born of a woman, made under the law, that he might die in order to redeem them that were under the law, the man Christ Jesus: born of the seed of David according to the flesh; who in the days of his flesh with strong crying and tears; son of David, son of Abraham; the son of man, and many similar expressions, which the reader will do well to collect and memorize, settle the fact as a part of the one faith, that Christ came in the flesh like unto the children but without sin. Probably this is enough for us to know; still the human appearance of our Lord, to this day an open question, has more or less interested every child of God, and doubtless the Apostles were often questioned by brethren and sisters in their social hours as to his height, his make, the color of his hair and eyes, the expression of his countenance, his manners, his tone of voice, and the like; and the early christian writers have transmitted the traditions that had reached them, especially with a view to the right understanding of Isaiah 53, where it is said He had "no comeliness" or dignity of form, his visage was so marred, "there is no beauty in him that we should desire him, and we hid, as it were our faces from him." Matt. 13: 54, has been quoted as the words of persons despising his appearance. The apocryphal book of Esdras on the contrary, represents him as a young man taller than other men by his head and shoulders. In the 45th Psalm he is said to be above the sons of men." His own saying, "For I am meek and lowly in heart," might imply that he was not low in stature. That Zaccheus climbed into a tree to see him, only proves that he himself was low in stature, a crowd being about Jesus. That his countenance must have had a commanding dignity of expression, and his eyes a heavenly brightness and benignity, it seems evident from the readiness with which his apostles followed him when he first called them, and from the soldiers going backward and falling on the ground when he turned and looked upon them the night of his arrest. And to this opinion I strongly incline, for Isaiah's words are more properly interpreted of the effect of his sufferings as "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," which must necessarily mar his outward comeliness and beauty of presence. It pleased God to send his Son among men in lowliness of outward form which could have nothing attractive except for those whose eyes were purified to see the hidden Majesty. It is certain the Jews had not the eyes to which Christ would appear lovely. Some have thought, with apparent good reason, that the Lord appeared in a lowly form unattractive to the mere carnal eye lest the minds of those taught should be distracted from the things said. It became the head of the church to pass his life in the flesh in the humble form of a servant, in a body of humiliation, that men might thereby learn to look for excellency not to the outward but to the inward and invisible. He himself again and again taught his disciples and the Pharisees that the true comeliness and beauty of man was in the inward not in the outward dignity. There are not wanting brethren and sisters who insist that they have seen the Lord in dreams or visions of the night, as I myself have, and they all believe they shall know him when they see him and their unanimous testimony is that he appeared to them not small, abject and deformed; but of typical manly beauty and dignity as is rightly applied in the words, "The Son of man" with which he uniformly spoke of himself. These visions, however accounted for, since that christians now think of him very properly as truly a representative man as perfect in man as was Adam, for the Apostle speaks of him as the second Adam of whom the first Adam was the figure.

But when the children of God recall to mind the sufferings of their Lord from his infancy to his horrid death on the cross, they are at no loss to account for the strong words of the prophet that "his visage was more marred than the sons of men." It is matter of wonder to me that preachers do not dwell more minutely and elaborately upon "the sufferings of Christ." His agony, his vigils, his shameful reception by his own, the injustice of his trial and condemnation, the publicity of his crucifixion, his sympathy with an unhappy world, his bearing the dreadful curse for his people. What mind can grasp, what tongue can tell, what heart can hear unmoved, the unparalleled sufferings of the Son of God? It is the one chief topic of thought and wonder among the whole family of God, both in heaven and earth, and vast eternity will be filled with the recital of them. What must have been Paul's emotion when in contemplating those sufferings which it behooved Christ to endure, by virtue of the terms of the everlasting covenant, he saw himself embraced within the scope of the plan of redemption and said, "He loved me and gave himself for me!"

"When I was sinking down
Beneath God's righteous frown,
Christ laid aside his crown
For my soul!"

There was a tradition down to late in the second century that there were not only two forms in Him, one according to which all saw him, another according to which he was transfigured in the Mount, when his countenance shone as the sun (doubtless to give the three disciples who saw it some idea of his true and proper divinity, but that he appeared to each according as he was worthy, and being the same he did not appear the same to all, and it is not unlikely that such a tradition might have been framed from the many thoughts of the many men who saw him through eyes discolored by the intense excitement of the times, and the prejudices of their several stand points. There is nothing now outside the New Testament record on which we can certainly rely, and we must be content to wait 'til that day when "we shall see him as he is." There will be plenty there to satisfy us as to how he looked when they saw him as he was.

Meantime we easily admit that at times there must have shone through his human countenance the brightness and Majesty of the Divine Life veiled by his flesh, and hence that by a look and a word he could draw to himself whom he would. And this leads me to consider

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

As human as his mother, he was as Divine as his Father. But of this hereafter.

WM. S. SPEER.

A BONE OF HIM SHALL NOT BE BROKEN.

(John 19 : 36.)

DEAR KINDRED IN CHRIST,—I feel to have a desire, as I shall never see all your faces in the flesh, to communicate some of my thoughts through the LANDMARK concerning the mystical unity between Christ and his church, endeavoring, if not deceived, to give such poor views as I have for the comfort of the dear children of God, and for the praise of him. From the subject I have under consideration while writing, I gather the thoughts that the church of Christ are all of the same parentage, and very closely connected by the ties of grace and gratitude, and for the confirmation of their hope of eternal life, God in his divine wisdom has given them exceeding great and precious promises, that all the combined powers can never separate them from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus their Lord. In the beginning when God created the world we see that he created man also, and he created him from the dust of the earth, but said it was not good for man to be alone, and caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, and while he slept the Lord took out one of his ribs, and the rib which the Lord had taken from man made her a woman, and brought her unto the man, and Adam said, this is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh. Now my understanding is, that the woman is part of the body of man before God in his divine arrangement had taken her from his side, for she was created in man, but after she had been wrought upon by the finger of God, changed so much from the former appearance, his plastic hand had completed the work, and she was presented to Adam to my mind the most beautiful object his eyes ever beheld, and he was willing to take her for a helpmate, and say for this cause, yes because she is bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh, for this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh, then there is a unity, a oneness between a man and his wife that to my mind was never to be severed, notwithstanding under the law, Moses suffered a writing of divorcement to be given, but from the beginning it was not so, and Paul in speaking in regard to the union between a man and his wife, said, behold I show you a mystery, but I speak concerning Christ and his church, and to my mind the mystery is this, that the church, the bride of Christ, bears the same relationship to him, that Eve bore to Adam. Paul says, for we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. And I verily believe that every child of God was chosen in Christ even before the foundation of the world, and they will all be wrought upon by the finger, or power of God, drawn or presented to Christ by the operation of the Holy Spirit, owned and accepted of him as his bride, acknowledged to be bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, and for this cause, for the love he had for his bride, he was willing to leave his Father, to leave the courts of glory, to leave the presence of angels, come down to a world of sin and sorrow, to cleave to his wife or bride, that they might be one, then the oneness is the same, a bone of him shall not be broken, because there is no power able to do so.

The Roman soldier was not permitted to break a bone of the dear Savior while hanging on the tree, although it was their custom, and may have been their desire to do so.

But it was not so ordained of God, for he declares the end from the beginning, declaring his counsel should stand and that he would do all his pleasure. Then a bone of him shall not be broken. Oh dear kindred in Christ, how we feel to rejoice in Christ the great head of the church for our eternal salvation, feeling to have an humble hope that we are bone of his bones and members of his body, and having the word of truth, that if we are, that death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The great captain of our salvation is Lord of lords and King of kings, has conquered all our enemies, has purchased our redemption upon the cross, has ascended up to glory to make intercession for us. Oh was ever love like this, what consoling words fell from his lips, as I live ye shall live also. Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory.

He prays for them, having loved his own he loved them to the end. Yes even your life is hid with Christ in God, so then a bone of him shall not be broken, afflictions, persecutions, trials and troubles may come, the adversary with all his legions shall assail you, yet your eternal life is in Christ, for he says, I in the Father and the Father in me, I in you and you in me, the unity is complete, no man, no power on earth, or under the earth can separate Christ and his church whom God hath joined together. But that is not all, oh no, if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable, but glory, honor majesty and power to him who has given us a hope that reaches beyond this world of sin and death, to that bright world of peace and joy.

Oh dear kindred in Christ, when I think of the joy that awaits the dear children of God, which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, I can sometimes look forward with bright anticipation to that great day, when all the blood washed throng, when all the body of Christ, without the loss of one of the members will be admitted through the pearly gate, to walk the golden streets, to wear a crown of glory, to sing praises forever to him who has loved them and gave himself for them.

Oh dear brethren and sisters, may love and peace abound, and may we live as becometh the saints of God, may our walk be upright, our conversation Godly, may we be as the wise Virgins with oil in our vessels with our lamps, waiting for the coming of the Bridegroom, is the prayer of your unworthy brother, if one at all.

AID SOLICITED.

ELD. L. H. HARDY, DEAR BROTHER—We, the members of the Primitive Baptist Church, five in number, living in Morehead City, have agreed to solicit the aid of the brethren and friends of the Primitive Baptist cause to assist us in erecting a small meeting house in this place for the purpose of our ministering brethren to preach in. It is seldom that we hear any gospel preaching, owing mostly to our not having a house of our own in which we can with freedom invite our ministering brethren to preach.

We the Primitives of this place are old and feeble, (with one exception) we have not the health and strength sufficient to travel on foot ten miles to Newport, our nearest Primitive Baptist church, and the hand of misfortune is bearing so heavily upon us that we very seldom have means sufficient to pay our traveling expenses.

There are several in our section who have left the churches, to which they previously belonged, who seem to be seeking after the truth as it is in the Lord Jesus Christ. We believe that if we had a Primitive Baptist church in this place and our brethren would visit and preach for us occasionally there would soon be some ingathering in the church. Should any of our brethren and friends feel willing, of a ready mind, to contribute to the above named cause, they will please place their donations in the hands of Eld. L. H. Hardy, of Newport N. C. and they will be joyfully received by us. We believe we can get a little help in this section if the house is once started. A small house say 24 by 36, sufficient to shield us from the sun and wind is what we desire.

If the little mole hill which we are attempting to erect should be accomplished, we feel to pray it may eventually rise to be as it were a spiritual mountain full of grace and truth where our rising generation may seek refuge from the raging blast of error which is now sweeping over our country. We are not a people to despise a day of small things. We desire the prayers of the household of faith for our temporal as well as spiritual welfare. Yours in christian ties. Signed, Hezekiah Wade, Martin R. Willis, Sidney Mason, Alice Wade, Sibil Piner.

To all who may read the above, I would say that I truly believe it to be a call of charity. Now we either have to preach in a private house, the rooms of which will not conveniently entertain the congregation, or we have to borrow the use of the Arminian houses, then have remarks made about us for preaching in them and not going to hear their preachers in return, and these things are unpleasant.

I believe that anybody donating to the above call will be heeding a call of charity. Affectionately.

L. H. HARDY.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—If you will not consider that I am trespassing upon you, I will trouble you with a few thoughts this dreary day. Another new year has rolled around, and I feel like I wanted to greet you and all the household of faith. Your many kind admonitions and instructions given in the LANDMARK to the believer in Christ, and the manner in which we should know them who are called from darkness into his marvelous light, has caused an impression I hope on me to drop you these scattering thoughts by way of remembrance to you and all the household of Faith.

Although we may feed and feast upon your wise and deliberate counsel, which is comforting and consoling to a wayfaring Pilgrim, while he is hobbling along through this dreary land, yet the thought arose, will all your good counsel relieve of the discharge of our duty towards God and our fellow man? I trow not. Should we not lay aside the things that do so easily beset us, and look to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, to enlighten us and teach us in spiritual wisdom that we may grow and thrive thereby, and let our orderly walk and godly conversation show to the world that we are not of the world. This leads my mind back to early life when I hope the Lord opened my understanding to see myself a sinner of the deepest die, and unless something was done I should soon be banished into an awful eternity where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. O my soul, although it has been a good while ago, while memory lasts I shall not forget the many lonely nights and days, and the many tears and cries for mercy I passed in trying to search out wisdom, but with all my toil and striving I failed, and had to fall as a babe at the feet of Jesus, and there lay for a long time waiting for the troubling of the water. Finally a good Samaritan passed by I hope and said, wilt thou be made whole. Now there was no more sorrow for joy, all creation seemed to be in obedience and bespoke the praises of God. Jesus all the day long was my joy and my song. O that every body would praise him. The heavens declare the glory of God.

Brother Gold, do you not like to cultivate these goneby days &c. My mind seems to be relieved, and I have written this hastily. I shall be much pleased to see you here.

A. REED

Winston, N. C.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, —I have concluded to write you a few lines in my old age.

I was 82 years old the third of this month. I have been a Baptist over 53 years. I want to write to you and the dear brethren and sisters, how I understand eternal life. Paul in writing to the Ephesian Brethren that you who were dead in trespasses and sins hath he quickened. I understand that we have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, hearts and understand not spiritual things. Eternal life was given us before the world was in Christ Jesus.

The children that the Father gave him are partakers of flesh and blood. The first Adam was of the earth earthy, and the second Adam is the Lord from Heaven, a quickening Spirit. Now I understand there are five graces treasured up in Jesus, the first is eternal life, by the quickening of the dead faculties of the soul, which gives eternal life. The second is eternal light, the third is true repentance, the fourth is true faith, the fifth is everlasting love. Now right here true repentance begins with true faith.

The poor creature sees that holy law staring him in the face, saying pay what thou owest. The poor child offers up all that he has, but God does not accept it: for all his works are mixed with sin. God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and this cuts him off. He sees no chance for him. Here is true repentance toward God. He cries to God to be merciful to a poor sinner. Lord save, I perish, and he cannot get any further.

Like the Children of Israel when Moses was leading them out of the land of Egypt, when they came to the Red Sea they could not see how they could escape.

the Red Sea before them, the mountains on either side, and their enemy behind them.

Moses told them to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord, and Moses was told to stretch his rod over the sea and it became congealed. Here we see the power of God. Then they made their escape from their enemies, and the women with their timbrels and instruments played and danced for joy. Here is an earthly deliverance. The poor soul that is crying to the Lord for mercy cannot go forward, neither to the right nor the left, neither can he go back for his enemy is there: for he has to wait for the power of God to open the way. Here sin, darkness, and condemnation are banished.

Here light, love and liberty spring up. Now the poor soul comes in full possession of the true faith, and for the first time sees Jesus who is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth, and gives all the glory to God, and takes none to himself.

Brother Gold, there was never a child born without a father and mother.

God is our Father and new Jerusalem above which is free the mother of us all. I understand that all the children that the Father gave to the Son are born in the spiritual kingdom, for ye are a chosen generation, a royal priest-hood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

MEDITATIONS

"The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and give his life a ransom for many." Matt. 20: 28.

This text and many others of like import have lately impressed me with a deep sense of the great and unfathomable sacrifice made for sin. The child of God who contemplates the privations, sufferings, betrayal, death and triumphant resurrection of the lowly Nazarene, he who was a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" is lost in profound wonder and admiration and is ready to exclaim

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound,
That saved a wretch like me."

By your kind permission I will try to pen some meditations surrounding the last sorrowful days of the Saviour's mortal existence while a sojourner in this vale of tears. It is notable in his discourse how often he refers to himself as the Son of man. This is in harmony with the plan "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." Jesus had spoken of himself in this sense to his disciples. They were in Perca east of the Jordan, and his discourses began to take a deeper tinge of sorrow as they slowly journeyed towards the city of Jerusalem, where he knew was soon to be enacted a scene at which earth and heaven would be veiled in darkness. The hour of his betrayal, arrest, mock-trial and cruel crucifixion was approaching apace. The year was A. D. 30. The shadows of impenetrable gloom were gathering around this mysterious being whom these chosen men had been called to follow. Jesus, as if desirous to be alone with his own thoughts, walked apart, ahead of them. Uncertainty, a sense of dread and amazement took possession of these faithful and sincere followers, and yet all but one clung to him with a faith only inspired by the spirit of their devoted Master. Judas with sinister look and covetous heart, and conflicting thoughts has given up all hope of earthly preferment, wealth and exaltation through the Christ whom he now regards with sullen chagrin and ill-disguised disappointment and despondency. Sad and mysterious thoughts and forebodings come to all of them. Jesus was leading the way—they followed with trembling steps. At last he took the twelve aside to themselves and explained to them more fully and plainly the prophecies concerning himself. His words were most pathetic and touching, and yet to these simple and confiding men they were, in part at least, incomprehensible and mysterious. He said: "Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, scourge and to crucify him; and the third day he shall rise again." They must, though appalled bewildered, have understood the literal import of these sorrowful words. And yet they could not bring themselves to a full realization of the dreadful fact. But when the awful hour revealed the heart-rending scene they remembered his words and rightly applied them. We cannot contemplate Judas in this group without shuddering at the sight. He is numbered with the twelve disciples; yet treason, betrayal and murder lurk in his heart. But we remember these were in the plan, for he was raised up for this purpose. But can he not yet profit by his apostleship? Nay, verily, dark and ominous clouds hang over the company. One passively harbors the ungodly suggestion and passions of the father of lies. Even James and John, faithful and true, were for the time overcome by carnal desires and over-reaching ambition. Think of these sons of Zebedee and of Salome, from being fiery zealots, sons of thunder, come to be sycophants and plotters that they may reach a lofty niche in the temple of fame. Salome with the consent of James and John makes the selfish request for the promotion of her sons. She came humbly, "worshipping him" and made this strange request;—"Grant that these, my two sons, may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom." O, the depths of a mother's love! Doubtless it was this with too great worldly ambition which prompted this otherwise prudent woman to seek this preferment for her sons. For be it remembered, that at that time the followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene believed his mission was to restore the kingdom to Israel over which he was to wield the sceptre; while he and they were to rule the Gentiles with a rod of iron. But Jesus does not rebuke the mis-guided woman, but addresses her thus, "Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him we are able. And he saith unto them. "Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with, but to sit on my right hand and on my left is not mine (as the Son of man) to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. It had been an hour of temptation to all of his followers. Even Peter perhaps was beginning to be tempted with doubts. Jesus at this dark hour looks upon Salome and her two sons with a pitying tenderness and love that brings out his divine nature in all its transcendent glory and beauty. Inexpressible sadness, mingled with love and pity flow from the heart of the Son of man as these words are spoken. Jesus is overwhelmed with the burden upon him. He is weighed down with the sin of those for whom he is soon to be a ransom. Behold the Lamb of God bearing the sins of many. His heart is full of divine love, tenderness and pity, but the request of the mother at the suggestion of the sons only the more clearly serves to show the priceless sacrifice soon to be suspended between earth and heaven. The way he is going is towards the valley of the shadow of death. His agony is upon him. His baptism of blood hastens apace. Can James and John indeed drink the cup he must soon drink and be baptized with the baptism with which he is to be baptized? Oh, weak and self-confident human nature, thy name is indeed frailty. They shall indeed suffer and die, but it is not appointed unto them to sit, the one upon his right hand, the other upon his left, where he sits King of kings and Lord of lords, on the throne of his glory. It is hard to recount these sorrowful scenes and not weep over them. For Jesus wept. James and John asked without knowledge. In this they erred. But it was the weakness of the flesh. How often is the child of God made to feel the application of Jesus' response to Salome, "Ye know not what ye ask." Do not his saints often pray for impossible things? things which God in mercy withholds from them for their good. These three, Salome, James and John, had gone to Jesus when he was communing alone. The other disciples soon learned the facts and were indignant at the two brethren. This was natural. Envy and jealousy are ever ready to enter when whetted up by the serpent. But Jesus turns away the anger of the others by the gentlest lesson of forbearance and love. The glory and consciousness of his great mission never forsook him in the shadows of the deepest gloom. He came to offer himself as a sacrifice for as many as the Father had given him in the covenant of grace entered into before the world was. For the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. To these the acclaim is given, "Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation that keepeth the truth may enter in."

ELDER P. D. GOLD :—DEAR EDITOR—I feel a desire to tell you what the Lord has done for my soul, though it is with much fear of doing wrong that I make the attempt.

Serious impressions about my sinful condition began at an early age. When mother would speak of that awful day of judgment, where all the wicked people would be burned and the righteous people saved, I asked her if I would be burned. She answered those that died in their sins would be lost. I asked her what I had done to be punished for. She said, 'you were born in sin, and unless you are born again you can never enter the kingdom of heaven.' How could that be? Every time I would think of what she said, I would feel miserable, but such feelings would wear off, thinking that I would do better as years advanced.

In a few years a protracted Methodist meeting came off. It was my desire to go, thinking then was my time to do better. My attention was given to what the preacher said. He invited all the sinners that wanted the prayers of the christian people to come forward and kneel down at the front seat. Thinking I needed the prayers worse than any one else, I went up and knelt down and tried to pray to God to forgive my sins. I went to the altar several days and nights, and was in great trouble and distress, my weeping was such I was told by the one that was talking to me that my sins were pardoned, and to go and tell my friends. So I got off my knees and sat on the bench, but did not feel like going to my friends. After I got through weeping I felt better. The meeting soon closed, the preacher called for all the converts to come forward and join the church. I hesitated awhile. The preacher said it was wrong to live out of the church. So I went up and joined, and was sprinkled. My mind soon became dissatisfied, but did not tell any one. I thought if all christian people felt like me they were miserable. My marriage was a short time afterward. There was no peace for me only when asleep. I kept thinking I would try to pray to God to relieve me, but kept putting it off feeling I was the greatest sinner there was. Oh such a miserable creature, feeling like if I died in that condition I would be lost. Nothing was any pleasure to me. I kept putting off praying until the fall of 1879 when I could not stand it any longer. My praying was to Jesus to relieve me of the heavy burden. My prayers were to him night and day. After my family would go to bed, I would go out and kneel down by the side of a tree, and raise my eyes to heaven begging Jesus to have mercy on me. It seemed like I was such a great sinner Jesus would not hear me. I would get up and go back in the house and go to bed with an aching heart. It would be so long before sleep would come. Thinking about my lost condition, my tongue cannot express my feelings. My burden was so heavy sometimes it would almost choke me. It appeared to me every one felt easy, while I was loaded down under such a great heavy burden of sin. It seemed my heart could not stand it much longer. Oh, so miserable, it seemed my prayers did not reach the top of my head.

—One day while in the house with my little babe sitting on the floor my heart was calling on Jesus to have mercy on me. I dropped on my knees, and if ever I prayed in my life it was then, begging Jesus to relieve me of that heavy burden, and renew me with a new heart, willing to forsake everything for him. I said here, Lord, I give myself to thee, 'tis all that I can do. I was soon lifted up from my knees with my voice sounding to heaven in praise to my blessed Saviour. I walked the floor slapping my hands and praising him at the top of my voice, wishing every one felt as happy as I did, so they could help me praise him. It seemed I could not praise him enough by myself. When I got through praising Jesus, that heavy burden was gone, my heart felt so light it did not appear to beat. Dear Editor, I cannot express the pleasant feeling in my breast. My love went out to everybody.

The next morning I walked out in the yard rejoicing in my heart and felt that my desire was to get nearer to Jesus. I walked a distance from the house and sat down on the ground lifting my eyes to heaven and said, Oh blessed Jesus I never can praise thee enough for what thou hast done for me. I commenced laughing and could not stop. I told Jesus he was smiling on me. I said, oh, the angels are smiling on me too. I laughed and laughed, never enjoyed a laugh so much in my life. I felt like I was willing to give up everything right then and go to Jesus. It seemed I never could content myself away from him and did not want to live in this sinful world any longer. My way had been buried in sin and sorrow so long. As soon as relief from my heavy load of sin came my desire was above everything to see a Primitive Baptist preacher. I have never joined any church since I professed faith in Christ. It is my earnest desire to live with God's people. Can one like myself ever be satisfied away from them?

My heart is full of love to all of God's people. I felt like I must write this letter, and I hope it will prove a blessing to me. If I am doing wrong, may the Lord forgive me; if deceived, may he undeceive me before it is too late.

Remarks.

Our friend has been once beguiled to join a denomination when she was unprepared, and suffered much from that step. One of the troubles of this false zeal of denominations to get numbers sometimes does harm by entangling a vessel of mercy that afterwards suffers so much in being deceived in that way.

But our friend, I feel assured, would do well to live with the Primitive Baptists. She will find rest to her soul by taking the yoke of Jesus, and a home in uniting with the people she loves.

IN THE FURNACE.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I love to compare my faith with those who drink at the fountain head. One sentence in brother Lester's editorial (Sept. number) served as a hearty repast. It was this, surely to be a christian is a mysterious realization—a glorious vision. When I compare the troubles of earth to the hope for joys of heaven, my spirit grows weary for the realities. How sweet to have the witness within. My call was so sure, my deliverance so sweet, my many visitations from the comforter, make me hope I number with the favored few. Called by a voice low and sweet, perfectly audible, "Thou art consecrated to follow Christ," I tried to follow him by all the good works I could do more than a year, but found no relief for past offences. I prayed with all the earnestness of my heart for forgiveness. At last I lost all hope, I saw the earth open beneath me, I saw the darkness below, the very entrance into torment, felt that I was hanging over the abyss, and nothing but the mercy of God to save me. In a moment I was carried on wings of love to regions of light. I was clothed in spotless white, surrounded by a light not like anything I ever beheld, though in the night, my burden gone I knew no sorrow then, I was just as happy as I wished to be. "Saved by grace alone." Never 'till that moment could I appreciate the sweetness of the song.

How lost was my condition,
Till Jesus made me whole ;
There is but one physician :
Can cure the sin sick soul.

Next to follow him was in the watery Grave. After baptism I thought my troubles over, that my soul would be wafted on wings of love to my eternal home, but alas, how different. I found three enemies to oppose, the world, the flesh and Satan, the world to fear, the flesh to deny, Satan at every turn to tempt and decoy, sometimes tempting me to curse and swear, a thing I never did in my life. Ere long he had me in doubts as to my fitness for the church. I was in darkness and trouble several days, but a ray of light shone which dispersed the gloom, with words of comfort, "We know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren."

At one time on awakening from a quiet slumber, the tempter said, I had sinned against the Holy Ghost. The suggestion was so sudden, and with such power I believed it. I raised up on the bed to awake my friends, and tell them I should die soon. It really seemed I was smothering for breath, the thought was so terrible. At that moment something whispered, pray first.

When I found myself clothed in humility at the feet of Jesus my terror left me. I have always found him a help in the time of need. He does not at all times answer my petitions at my request, but if he gives me a will to be resigned to his will has he not heard me? On one occasion when struggling almost, it seemed to me, between life and death to be resigned to his will, it was in giving up in death a devoted husband, the comforter appeared in a most striking and mysterious manner with words of comfort, "That this was the fiery trial through which my soul was to pass, to fit and qualify it for heaven," I felt amen to his will. Since he in such a trying moment had reassured me of his love, and strengthened my hopes, I could kiss the chastening rod, I could bear poverty, trials and afflictions with patience. When trials come and the clouds of adversity are in view, I remember the refiner is at work, and feel that it is consuming the dross of nature, out of which I hope to come forth as gold tried in the fire. If so I believe I shall wear the same spotless white I wore the night I was taken from the door of everlasting woe—to bask in the smiles of a Savior's love. He is my all, I feel the need of him every moment I live.

May the Lord bless you in scattering words of comfort to the depressed in spirit, the hungry and thirsty. To me the LANDMARK serves as a looking-glass to the soul. I see myself on various pages.

I have been a member of the Baptist church 28 years, and the mother of eight children, a widow of six years. Will you not feel under obligation to remember me at a throne of grace.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD,—I send you for publication a vision, which sister Susan A. Harrell had some time ago. She told it to me and others, and I asked her to write it out and send it to you for publication, thinking it would be comforting to the household of faith. Your Brother in hope.

VISION.

There appeared before me a little narrow path with white sand in it, and the track of a man who had walked there barefooted. I said "his track I see, and I'll pursue this narrow way

'till him I view." On my left side was a walling, and on the other side of it was a broad path that looked dark and gloomy. A great many people were going up the path laughing and talking. I looked to see where they were going; and I saw an old tree all bent over with an old framed church full of people leaning against it. They were both trembling ready to fall, and over the door I saw these words written in black letters. "Here is the way of false religion." I felt sorry to see what their end would be. So I turned from the walling and said, Lord how glad I am I hav'nt got to go there, I will seek him whom my soul loveth, and looked for the track I had been following.

The sand had turned to a bright, shining gold, and on each side of me was a high stone wall, so high I could not see over it, Then I changed. As it seemed this old body of flesh and bones was taken away, but still it was I. Then I had on a long white robe with a crown on my head, and gold slippers on my feet. I said, this is the golden street, but his tracks like his ways are all paved in gold.

In front of me was a large rock, on my right hand planted in this rock was a large green tree with broad leaves on it, and there by it stood a white stone building, and this narrow pavement I was in led to the door which was open and over it was written in letters of gold, Here is eternal life and you shall never die. I said, here is the tree of life, and here is heaven my happy home.

Then just above this building I saw some pure white doves flying round and round in a circle. I thought they were angels, for I said, come little angels and shelter me with your wings. One of them flew to me and lit on my right shoulder, then it raised its left wing so it sheltered one half of my head.

I wanted to talk to him and said, Brother Lawrence baptized me and I wish he could see what a happy home the Lord has prepared for me. I thought I will call him and said, "Brother Lawrence." The little dove said, here I am. I turned my eyes to the dove, and there on my shoulder was brother Lawrence, a pure white angel. I raised my hand and said to him, see what a happy home the Lord has prepared for me. He said who prepared it; I said, Jesus Christ the Son of the living God. He said, didn't Christ say, that my life and your life were in him life everlasting. I said yes, and why can't we go in and enjoy it now. He said we must wait for the coming of Christ. When he comes he will carry us in.

I laid my head on the dove's breast and said, Lord, may I be ready when you come. Then he raised his right wing and I for one happy moment sheltered beneath his wings. I felt prepared to enter in that lovely place, but Christ hadn't come, and it all went away.

BROTHER LAWRENCE, :—I have tried to write the vision just as I saw it, with every word I said, and what was said to me. You are welcome to do as you please with it, for you were the only one I thought about while looking on this lovely scene, and you were the only one that came to me.

I am too poor or unworthy to have my name with yours at home or abroad. I thought the day I was baptized was the humblest day of my life, but it seems nothing compared with now.

SUSAN A. HARRELL.

ELDER P. D. GOLD,—DEAR BROTHER—You will find enclosed one dollar for Brother Hassell. I do not feel right to keep the History for the small sum I paid for it, and know he has lost so much to get the History up. I feel that if all the Baptists would throw in and pay the debt they would not do any more than pay their own debt, for it is nothing more than the debt of all Baptists that have the History.

Is not the Kehukee Association responsible in one sense for this debt? I do not mean they should pay the whole debt, but should be first to see that it is paid, and relieve Brother Hassell. I hope one will not wait for another in this work. Yours etc. L. WALSTON.

A PICTURE.

The following is copied from the Biblical Recorder, which that paper selected. When Editors select pieces it is because they please them well.

Yet when we state that the Missionaries depend on money to save souls with, and state that they claim that many heathen are perishing because the people will not give them money that they may send the gospel to the heathen, they reply that we misrepresent them, and lie on them, and do them great injustice.

The church of God is not redeemed with gold, or silver, or any such corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ.

The preachers whom the Lord sends out are supplied with needed blessings according to the power of God in Jesus. Freely ye have received freely give.

But the Missionaries have heaped to themselves many teachers or preachers by their schools, money &c. Now these preachers want a job, hence they are ready to go and save the heathen, and so anxious to go if they just had the money.

What a pity the Missionary Baptist denomination, who say they believe these things, yet are so covetous that they have got hold of the Lord's money, and will not let him have it so that he then might be able to save the heathen. Truly a bad, covetous set of robbers they are. P. D. G.

THE LORD'S MONEY—WHERE IS IT?

"The conversion of the world waits on the generosity of God's people. There was a time when it waited, or seemed to wait, on the opening of the doors into the heathen world. But all the doors are now open. There was a time when it waited, or seemed to wait, on the consecration of men and women for the foreign field; this era is also about finished. Men and women are knocking at the doors of our Missionary societies, and asking to be sent to India, China, Corea, Africa—anywhere—to preach and teach the gospel of love. Some go out at their own charges; some are waiting for opportunity to go out, and hundreds are preparing for the work.

Golden opportunities offer in Japan and China and Burmah and elsewhere; the societies are anxious to seize upon them; candidates are ready to accept commission. What hinders? Simply lack of God's money.

Who has the Lord's money? The Lord's people. It is they who withhold it. He has given them in a bundance. He has supplied their every want. He has bestowed so liberally that the limits of necessity are passed and comfort is insured; and comfort broadens into ease, ease into luxury, luxury into great wealth. Where is the Lord's portion? Withheld through ignorance or avarice: Wot ye not, O christian people that the Lord hath need of his money? Look around you! The harvests are ripe, the reapers are ready; all waits for you! The Lord of the harvest waits for the reapers, the reapers wait for you.

The world never lay beneath the Cross as it now lies. There never was such an opportunity to lift up the Cross for the healing of the nations. There never was such a desire to look upon it. There never were so many willing hands to hold it up. The fullness of the time has come. To wait now is to trifle with God and with the great work he has opened before us. The conversion of the world will be sadly delayed unless the good Christian people of this land seize the opportunity of the moment and pour their offerings into our Missionary treasuries.

It is idle to pray for open doors, for the increase of the Missionary force, for the speedy conversion of the world, and keep the Lord's money locked up.—SELECTED."

ELD. P. D. GOLD: DEAR BROTHER,—If it is not asking too much of you, and you have any light on the scripture in Revelation 20 chapter, 4, 5, 6, verses, you will please give your views in the LANDMARK. Your brother in Christ I hope,

LEVI WALSTON.

"And I saw thrones and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." &c.—Rev. 20 : 4, 5, 6.

How much do we know of an unfulfilled prophecy? Nothing. We must wait until a prophecy is fulfilled in us before we can know its meaning. We know that satan still deceives the nations, and that therefore he is not bound, for during the time he is bound he will not deceive them. One consolation is that he does not deceive the church of Christ, or the believer in Jesus, but it is the world that he deceives.

We know also that the Lord God binds satan, when it so pleases him, and that satan has no power of resistance against the Lord. When Jesus was on earth he would not suffer unclean spirits to bear witness in his favor. He suffers satan to bear witness against him. This satan is allowed at all times to do. But when unclean spirits cried out in the days that Jesus was on earth saying, we know thee who thou art, for thou art the Son of the Most High God, Jesus rebuked them and bade them hold their peace. Jesus is not in need of the testimony of devils to strengthen his cause. Nor is it any good sign now to see or hear one advocating the cause of Jesus whose life is not a good one. I have known men to talk in favor of salvation by grace whose walk is bad, who are corrupt in their talk and walk. It would perhaps be better if such men would hold their peace.

The souls of those that suffered or had been beheaded for the word of Jesus, and those that were witnesses of the truth of Jesus, and that had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, nor received his mark in their foreheads, or in their hands, occupied thrones, and lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.

This is the first resurrection, and blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.

The rest of the dead know nothing of this, nor do any know what this is, save as it is shown unto them. We know nothing of a resurrection life by nature. John saw this by revelation, and only in that way can it be known. There is now in the spirit or understanding of the child of God a reigning with Christ on his throne. For he that overcomes the world reigns with Jesus on his throne. Set your affection on things above, and not on things on the earth, for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory. But here is a special resurrection, or the first resurrection. John sees the souls of them that are beheaded. In the resurrection there will be no ignorance, no corruption, no darkness. Each one beheaded for the witness of Jesus had special pre-eminence, in the sense that they reigned with Christ a thousand years.

What time that thousand years means none of us know. With the Lord it is as one day.

After these shall reign a thousand years with Christ, satan shall be loosed a little season, and shall go out to deceive the nations that are in the four quarters of the earth. Satan cannot go out to deceive the nations, nor to distress a child of God, only as the Lord offers it. He could not even enter into a herd of swine except as it was suffered him to do so. Satan cannot go beyond the word of the Lord, or beyond what God purposes. It is the nations of the earth he goes out to deceive.

This is his work. He is a deceiver, a liar, and the father of it. He gathers up the enemies of truth to fight against the God of heaven, and to oppress the people of God. For they gathered and encompassed the camp of the saints and the beloved city. The efforts of false religion are against the true religion.

Immense numbers of nations or Gog and Magog, which includes all the nations of the earth, even from the four quarters of the earth, are gathered together. For all the world shall wonder after the beast, and the image made unto the beast. For there is a worship among mankind everywhere that is of the earth and corrupt after its kind.

Satan gave his power to a form of religion, that is, he has his angels or ministers and his worship. His doctrines are the exaltation of the creature, and accusing God of injustice. He said to Eve, 'ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil, and saying, God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof ye shall not surely die. He still preaches such things. His preachers therefore preach the goodness and power of man, and hence they oppose, and make war upon the servants of God. The master piece of satan's work is to get up a form of religion or worship called the synagogue of satan, in which he has a grand display of wealth and worldly learning, and an image or a representative of power and glory which all the world wonders after and worships.

The false prophet is the spirit of lies found in his worship. For he is an imitator, and hence a deceiver. He knows what will please and deceive mankind and thus decoys the whole world.

Fire comes down from God out of heaven and devoured them all. He that setteth on the circle of the heavens shall laugh when their fear cometh. Fire comes down from heaven. How fully God has all the power, for he is above all. Fire is the element to destroy and consume. In the olden time water destroyed the world that then existed. But in the gospel fire consumes all that are not of God. It burns up the chaff. It tries men's work, the wicked—satan, the beast and false prophet. The sea, or water, shall give up its dead, and all whose names are not found written in the book of life are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. They are first judged out of the things written in the books concerning their works.

The judgment is just. Men will receive according to their works, whether good or evil. When the books are opened then they shall be judged according to their works. Men's works are brought up and judged according to the things written in the books which cannot forget or wrongly record their deeds. All things are naked and open before him who sits upon the great white throne of judgment.

By the deeds of the law shall no flesh living be justified, for by the law is the knowledge of sin. The works of men in the flesh is what is condemned in the books, and when these books, all the books, are opened, then the judgment shall be executed, and all false worshippers shall be cast into a lake of fire. This is the second death that hath no power over those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. The book of life contains all the names of those saved in Christ Jesus, and by his blood. These satan could not deceive, for they overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of his testimony.

FORM AND SIZE.

There is not one word in all the New Testament descriptive of the shape, size, form, or appearance of Jesus, as a man, nor that of a single apostle, or of any other man.

P. D. G.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—You will greatly oblige a reader of the LANDMARK by giving your views of Heb. 6 : 4—6. Respectfully.

R. E. LONG.

Remarks.

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost,

And have tasted the good word of God, and the power of the world to come."

If they shall fall away to renew them unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. — Heb. 6 : 4, 5, 6.

The Epistle to the Hebrews, or holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, sets forth the sublime glories of the everlasting priesthood of Christ, who is the spiritual Melchisedec before giving the Old Testament and the glorious Son of God of the New Testament.

The Old Testament or law made nothing perfect, and was given to show that nothing man could do, nor what all men could do, could in no sense perfect man in the flesh, but Jesus coming by a new and better Testament and in a tabernacle not of this building, or a body not of the earth earthy, but of good things to come, nor by the blood of bulls and goats, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

But the writer to the Hebrews says they are dull of hearing, and have need of milk, and not of strong meat, for every one that useth milk is a babe and unskillful in the word of righteousness. But strong meat (Christ crucified and risen in his glorious true character,) belongeth to them who are grown, and of full age to discern both good and evil, because their senses are exercised thus. What is strong meat if it is not this, to know know Jesus Christ in his true character crucified and risen? There never can be any knowledge beyond this, or better than this. There is nothing, can be nothing, any better nor stronger than this, and no growth can ever put one beyond Jesus or above him. The tenderest babe is saved in him, the strongest giant never can go beyond him.

Perfection therefore is in Jesus, and nowhere else. The law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which hope we draw nigh unto God.

How foolish to turn away from Christ to the weak and beggarly elements of the world for perfection. The law is done away, ended, fulfilled in Christ, satisfied in him.

Until Jesus came in the flesh the law was our school-master. In the night we use lamps, candles, or such lights as men supply us with; but when the sun rises in the day all such lights are obscured and disappear.

The law reflected the coming of Jesus as the stars and the moon of the night, but when Jesus, the true sun, rises with healing in his wings, and God shines in our hearts in the face of Christ the true light, then the darkness is passed and the true light shines.

Leaving the first principles (types, shadows, figures) of the law or first testament, which foreshadowed the coming of Jesus, (such as the doctrine of washings—baptisms—such as the Jews used in their sacrifices under the law; and of laying on of hands, as when the priest or worshipper laid his hands on the sacrifice offered under the law, and confessed his sins; and of resurrection of the dead, which was typified in the incense going up from the sacrifices towards God; and of eternal judgement, or that constant or eternal judgement symbolized under the worship of the law, wherein the children of Israel were continually being brought into judgement and a confession of their sins day by day, and year by year,) let us go on unto perfection which is alone in Christ Jesus the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

And this will we do if God permit. The word permit here means more than merely to suffer or allow one to do what he desires to do, but could not unless liberty were granted to him; but it means that God working this in us, or working in us that which is well pleasing through Jesus Christ, making us perfect in every good work to do his will.

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

He means this, that if, after one has become a child of God in manifestation, he should fall away it is impossible to renew him again unto repentance. Because Jesus is crucified afresh to him and put to an open shame. None but Jesus can save a soul; if therefore Jesus cannot save one who can do so?

He does not mean to say that such an one can fall away and be lost, but that if it were possible for such a thing to be done that it would then be impossible to renew him again unto repentance seeing that it would crucify Jesus afresh and put him to an open shame. It would be saying and showing that the one sacrifice of Jesus was not enough, that Jesus is a failure, that his blood does not cleanse from all sin nor is his obedience perfect. It would put him to an open shame. What could be worse or farther from the truth.

Paul was persuaded better things of his brethren, and things that accompany salvation, (Heb 6: 9) though he thus wrote. What blessed consolation in the truth that Jesus is the eternal High Priest of God, able to save unto the uttermost them that come unto God by him. Ye are complete in Christ who is the head of all principality and power. Perfection is alone in Jesus.

P. D. G.

STRIVE NOT.

“The servant of the Lord must not strive.” 2 Tim. 2: 24.

In the scriptures the people of God are thoroughly furnished both as to what they should do and what they should not do. In the text above quoted we have an injunction from Paul to Timothy, which I conclude was given for the benefit of all those who serve in the ministry of the true gospel in succeeding generations, as well as to Timothy himself. One of the most beautiful features of the scriptures, is that of oneness, or individuality in addressing themselves to the subject embraced in the address. We only know the truth in all of its characteristics as it is presented to us, wherein we are taught personally or individually. The word comes first to the individual, and teaches him how he is situated in every way, and how he should live in this present world. In addition to this God calls and sends forth men to take the oversight of the flock, who are authorized to feed the flock, and to reprove, rebuke and exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. I do not purpose here to say how others professing to be servants of the Lord should do particularly, but how I should do, and why I do as I do, in that wherein I feel to exercise myself freely.

In speaking of what we should do, or must do, I do not understand that those thus admonished always do as they should. I do not now remember an instance where a command or exhortation was ever given to the subjects of gospel address in a church capacity requiring obedience of them, but that the idea of a liability to go to the contrary was implied as being probable with the creature before and after the address or admonition. But while we are liable to and do, do that which we ought not to do, yet this does not lessen the obligation to do that which we are told we ought to do. To do just right is to do all that we are commanded to do, and do nothing else, and the nearest we come to that, not to do it, is the next best. Some one perhaps will say: "tell me how to do just right." That is something that one cannot tell another. Paul says, "to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." He desired to do right, and he knew what was right, and he tells us what it is, but how to do it he does not tell us. He says I can do all things by Christ who strengthens me; but the mystery of this doing was so great that he only knew it in the doing of it, in the spirit by grace. If there were no precepts nor examples given us we would not know from that source what is right, and if there were no restrictions made to our course of conduct, we would not thereby know what we ought not to do. God knew that the law added nothing, or did not make his people better, nor could they, because of the weakness of the flesh, comply with its demands perfectly, and yet they were required to keep it. This was to show them what they were, and to impress upon them the perfection and fulness of the work of Jesus, who only could and did fulfil the law. When we realize what Jesus has done for us, then we are made strong in him, and we do what he has done, as the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit. Whatever we do that is right is walking after the spirit, and is the result of the law being fulfilled in us. That is the reason why one cannot tell another how to do this or that. Each one must follow the leadings of the spirit as wrought in his own mind, and when this is in harmony with what the scriptures declare should be done, then may he know that he is doing right.

We are admonished to endure hardness as good soldiers for Christ, so we may expect to meet with much that is called hardness, or trial, or conflict. None can entirely escape this, and he is required to endure it. They that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But when these things come upon me, if I am worthy to claim to any degree to be a subject of persecution, I do not always remember that word 'endure' and I find myself possessed of a spirit that would seek revenge, and is ready to strive or fight for the victory. So warlike is this spirit at times, that I have a few times been led to prepare for battle, feeling that I had been much abused, or that the master's cause was being reproached by some false teacher, and that his people were being imposed upon and led into error, and the doctrine or gospel needed defending, but in the midst of the battle I have each time been fighting the air with fleshly weapons. I barely escape with my life, as it were, and with shamefacedness was I made to confess my folly to him who has said "vengeance is mine, I will repay," and who has furnished and does furnish his servants with weapons of warfare that are not carnal, but mighty through him to the pulling down of strong-holds.

How justly did he chide me, and remind me that I must not strive, or fight in this way, but must fight the good fight of faith, with meekness and godly fear. I remember preaching once, and I believe I preached the truth, and a man who belonged to one of the recently established denominations of our day, remarked to a friend of mine that the preaching was good enough for him. Whereupon my friend came to me and said, "you must be a little more pointed and plain in your preaching, other denominations are claiming you." Well I thought I must do everything that I could reasonably to satisfy the brethren and friends of my soundness, so I readily resolved what I would do. I will take a few clubs with me next time, and if that fellow is there, I will give him the benefit of them. He was there and so was I, and when I thought the time had come to club him a little I got ready, but somehow or other the club became entangled in an old clumsy ill-fitting armor which I happened to have on, having neglected to leave it behind, and it came down with great power upon my own head, which happened to be at that time defenceless, I having left my helmet where I should have left the armor which I then had on, and for a few moments the confusion was so great that I thought the meeting would be broken up, but the Lord I believe came to my rescue, and so armored me, that to his praise I believe I again preached the truth. And ever since that time I have had a mind that if any one wanted any clubs thrown they must do it themselves, and if they want the truth preached more pointed they are at liberty so far as I am concerned to try their own skill in the matter. It is a matter of great concern with me as to how I preach as well as to what I preach. What I say may be true, and yet if it is said under fleshly influences in an ambitious spirit, it is of the flesh and of the devil, and there is striving or fighting for some end that is purely personal.

The most disastrous striving is when the servants of the Lord get to striving against each other, or one tries to gain superiority over another, and has to pull his fellow down to accomplish his designs. God's servants are admonished to each abide in his own calling, for he has placed the gifts in the building or church, as it hath pleased him, and they are all to profit withal. I cannot preach what God has bidden some one else here to preach. It is enough if each one preaches the truth as far as he goes. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" If each is what he is by the grace of God, why should there be striving among the servants? Let us not strive, but be gentle unto all men.

P. G. I.

COMPLAINT.

Some complaint is made of late about the slackness of some Baptists in attending preaching. There are some members that are so engrossed in their business, so hard at work, so much tied up in their home affairs and money making, or the cares of the world, that they neglect the assembling of themselves together with God's people to worship God, and commune with each other. It appears to have been the manner of some in the olden time to do this way.

We would think it strange if one of the family was always too busy to eat, and never would stop his work and come to the table at meal time, nor show any love to the family; and also if we should learn that this member was not laboring for the peace and good of the family, but for some selfish matter not in harmony with the peace and prosperity of the family.

When a Baptist gets too busy at work at home to go to preaching, and habitually absents himself from preaching, he is not serving the Lord nor acting for the good of the church.

When it is time to labor, do your work with energy, and when time comes to go to preaching, leave your work and go to preaching.

When you do not go to your meetings, it says you do not care for your brethren, nor the church, nor your pastor, and it makes them feel that something is wrong. Besides, it is disobedience to God, and a failure to do what you have promised to do.

Churches need pastors who will attend their appointments properly, and be faithful. It is very important for churches to have pastors.

Those brethren that fail to serve churches, or neglect them and travel much, while churches need their services and desire them, should remember their duty to churches.

Paul said to Timothy, whom he besought to abide at Ephesus, to do the work of an evangelist. What is that work? If it is to travel all over the country, going from place to place, and from church to church all the time, then all preachers should do this thing, for all gospel preachers should do the work of an evangelist.

Yet Timothy was to abide still at Ephesus. The work of an evangelist is therefore not to go from church to church preaching all over the country, and neglecting the pastoral care of churches.

If those preachers that travel so much would visit places and sections where there are no churches or pastors, and labor among the destitute, sick, poor and needy, then they would come nearer doing the work of an evangelist.

Pastors of churches should seek to preach in destitute places around about the churches they serve, and near their own homes, and should visit the sick, feeble, halt, maimed &c, or labor in word and doctrine among the destitute and rebuke the slack ones.

Such labor as this will encourage such to attend the preaching. Pastors should study to show themselves approved unto God, and should feed the flock. One way to encourage sheep to be at their feeding places is to feed them well. When sheep come several times and find nothing to eat they get scattered and neglect coming.

Feed them then by preaching the whole truth and by declaring the whole counsel of God.

Churches should also help their pastors by administering to them of their carnal substance or worldly goods A Pastor of a church is a man and needs food and raiment for himself and family. The church should remember this and minister to him also.

Obituary.

SALLIE LOU HUBBARD.

On April 13th 1888, after an illness of about 11 days, Sallie Lou, the only daughter and youngest child of Mr. S. W. and Mrs. M. W. Hubbard, died at their home in Reidsville N. C.

She was born Sept. 11th 1883, which made her stay on earth four years seven months and two days. She was rational till the end, though her suffering for a week previous to her death was very severe. A while before she died she called her mother and in her wonted affectionate manner hugged and kissed her. As the parents of this child have heretofore lost three other children, the parting now with their darling and pet, seems to be a stroke peculiarly heavy. But I trust that, though they may feel like the "grave is cruel," they can look through their tears to Him whose loving hand will not afflict his people above that they are able to bear.

A. Friend.

MAHALAH ORRELL.

Mahalah Orrell was born July 22nd 1806. She was the daughter of Jesse and Polly Garrison. and on the 3rd day of September 1829, was married to Daniel B. Orrell. She was the mother of two children which survive her, and the grand-mother of 12 children, and the great-grandmother of 8 children.

She was a good mother and a quiet neighbor. In early life she professed a hope and united with the Methodist friends, and after a few years became dissatisfied with the church that she then belonged to, and changed to believe in the doctrine of salvation by grace and had no confidence in the flesh; and at an advanced age, in the year 1881 at the October meeting she was received into fellowship of the Primitive Baptists at Abbott's Creek, Davidson Co. N.C. and was baptized on the following Sunday.

She lived a consistent member until the 3rd of December 1887 when she was summoned from time.

She passed away without a struggle, and was consigned to the tomb on Monday the 5th, after services by Elder J. A. Burch and P. W. Williard, where she remains to await the second coming of her Savior.

The opening service, hymn used on the occasion, was the 653 No. of Benjamin Floyd's selections, closing hymn was No. 665 of the same book. Her age was 81 years, 4 months and 11 days.

SISTER WILLIAM A. ODOM.

By request I write for publication in the LANDMARK the obituary of sister W. A. Odom, who died of consumption on the 16th of April last about four o'clock in the morning at her home, age 65 years and 11 days.

Sister Odom was married to brother Wm A. Odom March 1st, 1849 with whom she lived 46 years and by whom she had nine children only two of whom survive her. She joined the church at the Falls of Tar River 2nd Saturday in June 1856 and was baptized by Elder Rodert D. Hart.

She was confined to the house and most of the time to the bed, and at times her sufferings were great for several months before she died, which she bore with christian resignation. She believed she saw in the beginning of her afflictions that the end would be death, though at times she expressed the wish if it was the Lord's will to be able to attend to her business, but if not his will, she was resigned to go, fearing only the sting of death. During her afflictions she thought several times she was dying, then she would feel better. Friday before she died she said there were two on the bed; when asked by her husband who it was, said she reckoned it was the wicked spirit trying to persuade her that her religion was like her thoughts about dying, said tell God she would never die.

This caused her to go over her experience and her answer was, I will trust God though he slay me, then he left having been with her about 18 days. An hour before dying (she was the first to discover it) she had the family called up but was too weak to speak or shake hands, merely offering to do so, and thus passed from life to eternity in the presence of an afflicted and sorrowing husband and children and a few precious friends, to be and to remain with Jesus and all the departed saints in Paradise, 'till the last great resurrection day "when all who are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

To them who knew her it seems almost useless to say, she was an affectionate and obedient wife, a kind and an indulgent mother, and a good neighbor, careful to visit the sick and relieve their sufferings as much as she could, prompt to fill her seat at church, and admonished her husband to be prompt and faithful in all his church duties.

Her home was always open to traveling brethren, and it was a work of love to care for them while under her roof and bid them God speed. She was a model christian worthy our memory and imitation. The writer in compliance with her request, read after she was lain in her coffin, 425 hymn, Lloyd's selection, after which she was carried and gently deposited in the grave in presence of sorrowing friends.

Sincerely and fraternally yours in hope of eternal life. N. W. BODDIE.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures ease pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been received please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

COMMUNICATED.

BINDING, LOOSING.

"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were drowned in the depths of the sea." Matt. 18 : 6.

These are not little in a natural sense but spiritually : and are such as have been converted from all self-trust, righteousness ; and strength, so utterly as to cease from their own works and cling to Jesus Christ as feeling so helpless and dependent for life and salvation, as a little babe is upon his parent for natural life and salvation.

Therefore they are so helpless as to feel to be the least of all ; and so little as to be the humblest of all ; and so humble as to be the meekest, loving servant of all. Indeed, the reigning spirit in them is Christ, as Christ is God, and God is love ; and love is the fulfillment of the royal law, dispelling every cloud, so "their angels do always behold the face of their father in heaven."

Yet, not only as having a greater measure of the renewing, enlightening, transforming spirit of Christ—making them the wisest of all—but also in the estimation of the spiritual brotherhood, are they the greatest of all.

Little children may break, but they never presume to make laws—they may violate a rule, but never with "malice aforethought." They may hurt a brother, but never with the fist of wickedness. They are very susceptible and tender hearted, especially toward whom they dearly love ; so much so that while they can well bear abuse from a stranger, a mad look from a brother or sister will almost break their heart.

Yet none working according to "sound doctrine can offend them, so wise are they to discern and love the truth. None walking in the spirit can wound them, so perfectly are they in agreement with Christ. Hence, for the same reason, none in agreement with Christ can find occasion of offence, or stumbling, or weakening in them.

For offences are not confined to a wounding of heart and spirit, but also embrace anything whereby a brother is made weak, as to faith personal, or otherwise ; and to stumble at the word, &c.

I will first notice a class that may prevail unnoticed from the very fact they may be termed "little things," yet that, nevertheless may be very painful and weakening. I refer to all such things as are directly personal, as implicating personal integrity, fidelity, veracity, etc. And which, so far from involving litigation, or the law regulating faith and fellowship, do but fret the discipline in defining, asserting, and consigning ; and much of which at last must appeal to the code of conscience.

For instance, we are commanded to be kindly affectioned, and courteous to each other. Yet you listen to a tale of supposed wrong-doing in another ; or yourself surmise evil, or place an evil construction on some ambiguous word or act ; and then without personal investigation, you treat that brother with marked shunning and cruel indifference. Can you imagine the heart-sinking, heart-searching question of that aggrieved brother as he searches in vain for a tangible cause? and then concludes "it is he believes me a hypocrite, I must be deceived in myself, I am no christian." There is offense, weakening and stumbling.

And then in the matter of mere courtesy, when you find you were altogether mistaken, you fail to explain and ask pardon for your cold cruel indifference. Does not this add another stone of stumbling in the shape of a conclusion like this "though he finds me not guilty in this respect, yet failing to find a proof of Christ in me, he violates a law of Christ to prove it." Love "thinketh no evil," but love must acknowledge the forces of evil. And an unjust accusation, coupled with failure to palliate, or seek peace and pardon, from one beloved, are the compelling forces to wound and weaken, despite—yea, as strengthened by the presence of love.

And why such a failure? Was it because you knew he would bear it uncomplainingly for love's sake or for Christ's sake? Then you either drew on the love you had wounded, or else on the credit of Christ whom you had dishonored. But maybe the failure was for his good—for fear it might puff up, or make bigoted. Then you became a judge, and not a doer of the law.

Then, dear brethren and sisters, we should be careful and punctual about little things. We should be sure of the truth of an accusation, sure of its need of a tender hand in dealing in a gospel way. Otherwise we not only run the risk of offending, but of the more committing, than reproving, sin.

There are many grades and shades to this class, too numerous to instance. I merely call your attention to them as hoping to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. Not as condemning the guilty, but as preventing the innocent.

These are little things, yet if too little to be required, then too little to be withheld. We must be faithful in little things before entrusted with greater. Besides seeing the doom of such as shall offend one of these little ones, in even little things.

Even things lawful are to be tried before the tribunal of expediency with regard to, and for the conscience sake of others; so that the weaker conscience of the weaker brother shall decide upon the liberty of the stronger in all matter of meats—or works embraced in that figure of speech. Why is your liberty judged of another man's conscience? "Lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling to the weak. Therefore, be careful of conscience, not thine own, but the other." Phil. 2 : 4 : and 1 Cor. 10 : 29. This, I know, applies to the weak, and not these 'little ones'; but in offending them, you offend these little ones. I am not worthy to be classed with these little ones. I am a big one, if one at all; but if in these little things, these little ones are so sorely offended as I have been, then it is well to consider them.

The truth is, the gospel law like Christ is a law of love and service to others. As this law fulfilled in us spiritually is to love others, so as fulfilled in us practically, it is to serve others. Hence the oft' repeated admonition, in substance, "Look not every man on his own things but every man also on the things of others." Indeed none walking in the spirit can take a step, whether gospel or otherwise, without considering its propriety or expediency with regard to others. And thus—as said—it is impossible to offend one of these little ones, who as agreeing with Christ, are in perfect agreement with a gospel walk and work. Therefore one must be at discord with Christ, and walk contrary to sound doctrine, to offend one of these.

Therefore the fearful declaration that it were better for a millstone to be hanged about his neck and he cast into the sea, than to offend one of these, was not so much to make prominent God's care for them, or yet to condemn the single act, as the utterly depraved condition of heart and mind that rendered him capable of such an act, as that it must be done, not only like Judas betraying Jesus without a cause, but unto whom there was every cause to the contrary.

For as it is morally impossible for a natural brother unless drunken or devoid by other means of all human feeling, to wilfully beat, bruise and mangle

the body of his baby brother. So it is for a spiritual one, unless drunken or by other means devoid of the spirit, to wilfully wound or offend one of these little ones. In either case he must become a "natural brute beast snared to be taken;" to whom a death by grossest violence, and body cast to the wild beasts, or fishes of the sea, and name forgotten had been far better for him, than living to become capable of such a fearful deed. For what is life as continually tortured by the overwhelming wrath of God?

Oh what an unspeakable fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God? What a fearful thing to offend one of these little ones? What a fearful thing the rod as avenging the cry of one of these? How closer than all things these little ones lie to his heart! What unsearchable depths of loving kindness sensitive vital feeling and care is implied for them in the phrase "He that toucheth one of these, toucheth the apple of his eye." Zech. 2; 8. Take a needle and ever so lightly prick the ball or apple of your eye; and the better understand their vital oneness, and the fearfulness of offending one. Is it not well to consider, and examine ourselves and the possibility of having offended one whose angels do always behold the face of their Father.

And more especially you who are causing divisions and offenses to any. Have you considered the probability of giving offense to these little ones which believe in Jesus? If these little personal things already alluded to, as offending one of these, shall receive so fearful a recompense, what shall be to you who, in works affecting all, are offending all? Who knows but their combined cry, as of one, has gone up to their Father against you? And what shall it profit a man to gain the whole world and yet as offending one of these lose his own peace of soul? What shall it profit you to gain the mastery, establish all your pet theories, and lose the love and peace of God; overcome all opposition, and then be subdued and overcome by the avenging rod and wrath of God?

The different questions now despoiling the peace and fellowship of the Primitive Baptists, here and elsewhere, and that offend these little ones are mostly such as we are positively commanded to avoid as 'unlearned and of endless genealogies.' These are the prolific fountains sending forth the bitter streams of strife and dissension, to the sore hurt of "these little ones"

"Offenses must needs come, but woe to him by whom they come! Big ones are heady and fearless. Little ones tremble at God's word. Offenses manifest the faithful and thereby the unfaithful.

Do I know the little ones are offended? I certainly do, as to this section. But a few days back a dear, faithful aged brother—one of these little ones—in speaking of a question now generating strife and confusion among us, and as referring to the probable declaration of non-fellowship for his church by another, and of some brethren of that church whom he had so long known and dearly loved, said with a voice tremulous, more with the pathos of a grieved heart, than of age, "I don't see how I can bear to be separated from those brethren around the Lord's communion table," then with rising emphasis—"Sister Phillips, I don't—I WILL TELL YOU I DON'T SEE HOW I CAN BEAR IT, AND LIVE." Oh Lord, I mentally exclaimed, "let me die before living to wring such a cry of anguish from the heart of one of thine." I hear many like expressions that imply offense, they are offended at the shame and confusion of face thus given to the Primitive Baptist character,—that the name of Jesus is dishonored, that the feeble are made weary and to falter; that the weak are made to stumble in the way as following men they trusted; that the manifestly true and faithful servants of Christ have to bear double burdens. And their cry has been lifted up to the Father, and soon will fall the avenging rod on—whom? In watching and waiting.

R. ANNA PHILLIPS.

Whom God foreknew he predestinated to be conformed to the image of Jesus.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

John the Baptist was the beginning of the church in organization in the gospel day, and he was the messenger of God sent before Christ to prepare his way before him. His baptism was from heaven, being by the authority of God himself. This was certainly valid baptism, and as I believe the origin of all valid baptism since. Jesus himself submitted to baptism at the hands of John, and thus became a member of his own church in organization in the world. John baptized the disciples of Jesus, so they were legally baptized, and the disciples baptized others, and thus the succession began.

After the resurrection and ascension of Jesus, after he had gone away from his disciples, in accordance with his promise he sent forth the Comforter. According to the instruction of Jesus his disciples tarried in Jerusalem until the promise was fulfilled, which was done on the day of Pentecost. Ever since the day of Pentecost I understand that the church in a collective sense have had the Comforter with them, so that when they meet together according to the command of Christ they are blessed with the happy privilege of "sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," all feeling in their hearts at the same moment the power and comfort of the Holy Ghost, as they hear the glorious gospel preached to them by men gifted of God for that very purpose, or as they are engaged in prayer or singing the praise of God for his unspeakable gift of salvation through Christ.

The church also have this Comforter to guide them in things pertaining to the order of the house of God, so that they have the mind of Christ. Oh what a glorious preparation is this church, with the gospel of peace, together with all of its pleasant service.

Such was the church as set up by God himself, and such was it at the closing of the Apostolic age as accounted for by the record in the holy scriptures. But Paul spoke of the day when after his time the man of sin should be revealed, and there should come a falling away; and declared that the mystery of iniquity was already working in his day. See Thes. 2:2. From Church History we learn that it was not very long after the Apostolic age before this falling away began, and the man of sin was revealed. This falling away came on gradually, through the ambition of ministers and the looseness of discipline, so that worldly gain and honor were sought after, instead of the glory of God and the welfare of the Saints. Carnal professors crowded in the church, and designing men under cover of religion sought their own aggrandizement. Thus a fungous growth increased upon the church, and threatened to suck away its very life.

The leaven of iniquity seemed, finally, to almost leaven the whole church. But God who hath not left himself without a witness at any time since the day of Abel, had reserved unto himself at that time some who had not bowed the knee to Baal.

There were some who loved the Lord more than worldly pleasure, and who loved the gospel of Christ and gospel order more than the traditions and innovations of men. So now there were two parties in the church; one for Christ, and the other for satan. And there being no agreement between these parties, how could they walk together? There is no fellowship between Christ and Satan; and evidently none between their followers. Thus it was a question of time as to a division. The opportunity and manner would not be wanting when the fulness of time should come. And so it was. About the middle of the third Century the separation took place. Those who loved the Lord and who desired to obey him rather than man, having failed to get the church as a body to return to gospel order, and being now in the minority and unable to purge themselves of the corrupt majority in any other way, withdrew themselves from their company and fellowship in church relationship, according to the divine injunction to withdraw from the disorderly. Thus the church withdrew, the church proper, and the old corrupt hull or shell was left devoid of life so far as pure religion is concerned. It matters but little what name the church assumed or received; but they were at this particular time after the separation called Novatians, after Novatian, an upright Elder in the church at Rome, who earnestly opposed the corruptions that had crept in, and who earnestly contended for the faith which was once delivered to the saints at the setting up of the gospel church in the world. And the church of Christ in organization were known by the name of Novatians for two or three hundred years after this separation. This separation took place among the churches throughout the Roman Empire, as a similar separation, for similar reasons, took place among the Baptists in the United States of America in the nineteenth century.

If I properly understand the matter the majority, the corrupt party, from which the church of Christ withdrew in the third century, was the party now known as the Roman Catholic Church which, being the first and oldest false denomination claiming to be the church of Christ in the gospel day, is appropriately called the "Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth." This is the woman drunken by the blood of saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. This is she with her hands red with the blood of the saints, that comes up now in the nineteenth century brazenly claiming to be the church of Christ on earth.

This is she claiming to be the church with Apostolic succession. This is she that is recognized and honored by all her Protestant daughters. This is she that receives honors through her head, the Pope, from the rulers of the great nations of the earth, in the nineteenth century, in this day of boasted enlightenment. And the ruler of our own country, the United States, must needs join in this business. Oh Lord, if it be possible, according to thy will, for the sake of thy elect, the few that really love and serve thee, save us from the consequences of such on the part of our rulers!

The church of Christ essentially the same in doctrine and practice in all ages of the Christian era, have never-the-less been known by different names at different times, according to circumstances. But the church is not to be known merely by a name, but by her doctrine and practice being the same in substance as that of the Apostolic church as set forth in the holy scriptures, and by her having the Holy Ghost, the blessed comforter, with her.

It is vain for any of us to be talking about tracing ourselves, or our origin back to the Apostles. The pages of history are too dim for that. There is a gap between the Apostolic age, and the beginning of any authentic history since; and then there are the Dark Ages, covering even centuries that we have very little account of in the way of authentic history. Besides, history, at best, is unreliable, as a guide exclusively in religious matters, from the fact that many events, important events, have never been accounted for or recorded at all, and no doubt many events recorded are not faithfully told because of the bias of some historians upon whom subsequent ones depend in a great measure for certain events that they record. But history, in connection with the scriptures, is useful, and may be in a measure sifted, in the mind of an honest child of God who has the spirit of truth to guide him in his researches.

The church is rather known by her characteristics at all times; by her doctrine, practice, government, ministry, &c, being according to the pattern of the gospel church given in the holy scriptures, and, as already remarked, by her power in a spiritual sense.

Happily, the head of the church has not made it necessary for the humble christian to read and search intricate historians in order to find the church before he joins. He is not competent to do this while young, even if he could successfully do so at a riper age. The power of the preached gospel, together with the light emanating from the church, with the holy scriptures in hand, lead the child of God to the Mount of God in organization in this world. Using a figure, the young man with but little observation because of his age, would not be competent to select a suitable woman for his wife if he had to depend upon his knowledge of the temperament and other things possessed by her, and whether such and such a temperament would suit his own, &c. But if he will be guided by love he will generally make the proper selection.

The great trouble, in many instances is, the humble child of hampered with human traditions or untoward surroundings, that tend to keep him from his duty.

While we cannot prove by history that the baptism of John the Baptist has been handed down to the present time in its validity, by succession, yet we have reason to believe that it has been done. We believe that He who has never left himself without a witness hath done this. Any other baptism would not be from heaven. Our faith and confidence is in God in this thing.

The ordinance of baptism is part of the faith which was once delivered to the saints, for which the saints are to earnestly contend. We have no account of the faith, including the doctrine and practice, being delivered to the saints but the one time. According to authentic history, one characteristic of the church has been from time to time her dwelling alone, refusing to affiliate with others, and refusing to recognize others, and hence baptizing all that come to her from other denominations, though they may have been immersed by those from whom they come. This characteristic has caused them to be called Anabaptists, that is rebaptizers. For the reflection of the reader I will here ask, Who, what denomination, has this characteristic today? I believe there can be but one answer, and that is the Primitive or Old School Baptists. And here I will ask another question. Who is it that contends exclusively for the doctrine of grace, and discards the doctrine of justification by words altogether, so far as eternal salvation is concerned? The answer is the same, the Primitive

Baptists and they alone. All others mix in works more or less, and thus manifest that none of them contend for the faith in this particular, as none of them contend for the faith in practice, so far as baptism and other things are concerned, that is valid baptism, &c.

And in observing the Lord's supper the Church of Christ are as particular as they are in regard to baptism, refusing to eat it with any other of the various denominations around, claiming themselves to be the Church of Christ. In this they are consistent, for they have no fellowship for them, no church fellowship, and of course they should not commune with them. This is being separate as the Lord commands.

Claiming to be the Spouse of Christ the church cannot consistently recognize in any way, any other religious organization, for in so doing she would be violating the holy scriptures. There are threescore queens and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number. My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her. Song 6:8, 9. So Christ has but one church in organization, though many of the spiritual church, the redeemed, do not belong to this organization.

When we consider the temptations, the pressure and the sore trials, and persecutions, to which this church has been subjected in all ages, is it not wonderful that she has stood steadfast in the truth, both in doctrine and practice? Surely this people has been guided by the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night in all their journeyings through this world's wilderness. The Lord has preserved them, and reserved them to himself.

But like Israel the type, the church has been disobedient and more or less idolaters. Errors both in doctrine and practice have crept in from time to time and have been purged out, and been succeeded by other errors.

The churches of Galatia got into what is now called Arminianism, and "fell from grace." They were bewitched by Judaizing teachers and took up with the idea that they must needs be circumcised, and must keep the law of Moses, or they could not be saved. The apostle Paul reprov'd them, reasoned with them, and exhorted them, with long suffering and doctrine, and thus dealt with them, instead of forsaking them.

The church at Corinth got into disorder in practice, and Paul admonished them to put away their disorder.

From history we learn that the church has gotten into errors more or less, from time to time, since the Christian era began, but has never-the-less been so led to repentance and kept by the Head of the Church that she has ever retained her peculiar characteristics as the church. From this we are reminded that the church in this world is in an imperfect state, and in a militant or contending state. But we should carefully note that the church has purged herself of errors and disorders, one way or another, sooner or later, and thus though in an imperfect state, yet tending to perfection.

We are also reminded that we are not to worship the church nor any of her ordinances, but are to worship God. And we are also reminded that we are not to glory in our correctness, but glory alone in the cross of Christ. We are not to worship the sanctuary, but the God in the sanctuary. We are not to be satisfied either with the forms, though correct, without the power of our religion. What sweetness is there in honeycomb, though it may be new and white if it has no honey in it? David says "I will eat my honey with my honeycomb." It is necessary to be right both in the letter and in the spirit.

Oh how sweet is the truth as it is in Jesus, when we can feel the power of it in our souls.

The saints in some parts are now passing through peculiar trials, some seeming to be struggling for their very existence as to church organization. Let us all remember that God is no respecter of persons, and that whatever we sow that shall we reap. And we need not think for a moment that because our people, the Primitive Baptists, are correct in the main, that they are proof against what has befallen the church in the past. As a people we should study the scriptures carefully and prayerfully, and should obey the word of the Lord therein recorded, regarding nothing contained in them as nonessential to our learning, comfort or well-being.

GOOD WORK.

BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:— While on a visit recently among the brethren and sisters in Shelby County, Ky. a sister asked me to write for publication some thoughts upon the language of the Apostle, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Phil. 2 chap. part of the 12th and 13th verses. To arrive at a correct conclusion of the meaning of the language it perhaps will be well to enquire as to whom it was addressed. The Apostle introduces the epistle with the words "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ to all the saints in Christ Jesus who are at Philippi with the bishops and deacons." In the 12th verse of the 11th chapter he uses this language, "Therefore my beloved, as ye have always obeyed not as in my presence only but now much more in my absence." The Apostle was then addressing the saints at Philippi of whom he speaks as being his beloved, and whom he commends for their truthfulness in obeying both in his presence and absence.

Those saints obeyed both in his presence and absence, hence it was appropriate for him to exhort them to work out their own salvation. They were saints and they were beloved and hence were the children of the regeneration. Being born again not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, which liveth and abideth forever. That incorruptible seed was Christ in them the hope of glory. John says, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot commit sin, because he is born of God. That seed as we have said is Christ, and he is the way, the truth and the life. He is the life of his people. He says I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish. Then that spiritual, eternal and immortal life which he gives to his people in regeneration fits and prepares them to obey this exhortation, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." They fear to disobey their glorious Lord, hence the Apostle commends them on account of their obeying. But their obedience was the fruit of the spirit which was the product of that good seed which was sown in them in regeneration. But there is a great contrast between that spirit which enables them to work out their own salvation and the spirit of disobedience which dwells in the Adamic nature of all the saints and causes them to say in deep sorrow, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" They must remain tenants of that body till the earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved. But while they so remain, the exhortation of the Apostle is suited to them, "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." They being prepared by regenerating grace could with joy and rejoicing go forward in obedience to all the commands of their Lord. Knowing and realizing that his yoke is easy and his burden is light. But perhaps some will enquire, what salvation is that of which the apostle speaks. The answer to that enquiry is that it is that salvation which the saints are capable of working out. Being born again they have the good seed sown in them and that seed yields the unperishable fruits of righteousness and true holiness. Having those fruits they are enabled as they journey through life to take unto themselves the whole armor of God. Knowing that they wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. O, how important that they should have that armor. Without it they could not obey this exhortation. Without that armor they could not wrestle against the rulers of the darkness of this world.

Those rulers are they who compass sea and land to make one proselyte and when he is made, they make him two-fold more the child of hell than themselves. Our Lord calls them scribes, pharisees, hypocrites. The reader will please pardon a short digression from the subject. We learn that when our Lord appeared on earth the Jews were divided into three classes. The scribes, the pharisees, the sadducees. But the scribes were legitimately a class within and among the pharisees. They took the name of Scribes because they were more highly educated than the great mass of the pharisees. And by reason they claimed that they had a higher knowledge of the law than others, than those who were not educated at the feet of Gamaliel, as was Saul of Tarsus. In expounding the law they made additions to it, and called upon all others to accept those additions. Those additions are what our Lord referred to when he said, "They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers."

The Pharisees held strictly to the law, hence when they saw our Lord perform great and wonderful miracles on the Sabbath day, they attempted to reproach him. They regarded themselves as better than the sinless Son of God, and like some of their modern brethren claimed no doubt that they did not sin in word, thought or deed. But while the Pharisees were Jews, they differed widely from the other two classes. Of them the historians of those days say "The Sadducees were few but haughty and powerful—held the highest posts in the Jewish state, and represented the law. Their name was perhaps derived from the ancient family of Zadoc of whom Ezekiel speaks as having charge of the altar.

The contrast between the spirit of the two, the Pharisees and the Sadducees, says the historian, showed itself permanently in the harsh temerity with which the temple aristocracy held to the Mosaic law in its penalties as opposed to the milder spirit in which the Pharisees interpreted them in accordance with the spirit of the times, the Pharisees, for example, explaining the Mosaic demand—an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth—metaphorically and allowed recompense to be made in money. But the Sadducees required exact compliance. We have thus mentioned these people to show the contrast between those Jews at the time our Lord appeared on the earth, and those in whom he worked both to will and to do of his good pleasure. They were proud and self-reliant, and the Sadducees denied the very things taught in the Old Testament scriptures.

They denied the doctrine of immortality, and hence ignored the doctrine of the resurrection. Therefore our Lord called them hypocrites and surely they were. They were Jews, descendants of Abraham, claiming to be living under the law, but denied its great and wonderful teachings. How different they were from old Simeon to whom it was revealed by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord Jesus Christ. When he beheld the babe he took him up in his arms and blessed God and said: "Lord now let thy servant depart in peace according to thy word. For mine eyes have seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all people. A light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people, Israel." Simeon was a Jew, but his Lord had worked in him to will and to do of his good pleasure, for it had been revealed to him that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ. That revelation was made to him by the Holy Ghost, and by it he was made a witness to declare to the saints in all coming time that his eyes had seen the glorious Son of God. This was a great and wonderful revelation. By that revelation he was enabled to declare him to be the light to enlighten the Gentiles and the glory of his people Israel. God had worked in him to will and to do of his good pleasure, and it was his pleasure that Simeon should be made a witness to testify to the saints that the long looked for Messiah had come, and to testify to the mission of our Lord on earth. The Gentiles had lain in heathenish darkness, superstition and idolatry for ages and centuries, but now the day was about to dawn upon them. The time was at hand when the Son of righteousness would come and dispel the darkness of that long night and open to the Gentiles that glorious truth announced by our Lord when he said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also must I bring, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." But this question appropriately suggests itself to us. How does he bring them into that fold, the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. The prophet answers this question when the Lord by him says, "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not, I will lead them in paths they have not known. I will make darkness light before them. These things will I do for them, and not forsake them." They were blind, in nature's darkness; they had eyes and could not see. They had never known the paths of holiness and peace which are in Christ. They had never been able to say with the Psalmist, "He restoreth my soul, He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." But when he works in them to will and to do of his good pleasure, he leads them in the paths of righteousness. He keeps them, yea they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed at the last time.

When so kept by the power of their glorious Lord they are prepared to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. Being kept through that faith which works by love, it is and was the delight of all the dear saints that ever have lived, now live or ever will live on the earth to work out their own salvation by obedience to all things commanded by our Lord. In doing so they by the spirit are enabled to realize the truth of this language of the wise king of Israel, "Every word of God is pure, he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him." Knowing that he hath declared that "The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants and none of them that trust him shall be desolate." Oh no, they will never be desolate because this glorious Lord is to them a present help in every time of need. Their times of need are every day and every hour. They need to be strengthened in the inner man, so that they can avoid every false way and walk in the paths of righteousness and true holiness. When walking in these paths they are saved from the wiles of the wicked one, and enabled to rejoice in this power and goodness of their Lord manifested in keeping them through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last times. That is a true salvation. A salvation which all the dear saints need and must have while clothed with mortality, if they enjoy the sweets and comforts of the religion of our dear Redeemer. Then how appropriate the exhortation of the old Apostle, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." They have seen a time when they rejoice greatly in the power of God's regenerating grace. When by faith they saw him whom their soul loveth. Saw him, who to them was the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. When thus basking in the sunlight of redeeming love and regenerating grace, they like these Philippian saints obey as well in the absence as in the presence of the dear ministering servants who minister to them in holy things, and in that obedience they work out their salvation. But they do it with fear and trembling. With trembling voices they often sing.

"Tis a point I long to know
 Oft it causes anxious thought,
 Do I love the Lord, or no,
 Am I his or am I not?"

They love their Lord because he first loved them, and manifested that love by redeeming them with his own precious blood, and working in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure, which gave them an earnest desire to work out their salvation by a life of obedience to all his commands. In that obedience they like Israel of old ate the fat of the land, which prefigured the joys of spiritual Israel while in the church, the spiritual Canaan here below. But that is only a foretaste of the joys of the redeemed from all iniquity. But in the salvation which they work out their constant prayers are, "lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." It is the evil of this vain and sinful world from which they desire and pray to be delivered, to be saved while they travel the barren plains of the earth. No longer will that exhortation of the Apostle be needed when they come to lay their armor by, to dwell with Christ at home. Their death will have hushed the groanings of the dear saints on account of sin forever. When looking into the dark caverns of the tomb they remember that death is one of the gifts of their Lord to them. Yes one of the glorious gifts secured to them for they know that without death there could be no resurrection. Without death they must be forever struggling in that warfare. The flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh. In that warfare they fear and tremble and their cry is, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But by faith they see the great Deliverer, and in joy and rejoicing they cry out, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." Then it is evident that the salvation that the saints are exhorted to work out is a salvation from the law of sin that reigns in their mortal bodies. But the wages of sin being death these mortal bodies must go down in death. None can doubt the reigning power of death, and we all tremble when contemplating the power of death over us. When our Lord was about to enter that baptism of death through which he must pass to meet all the demands of the law against his people, He prayed saying, O my Father, If this cup may not pass away from me except I drink, thy will be done. He being partaker of the same flesh and blood of which the children are parta-kers—in using that prayer speaks as they do. But without his taking that cross there could have been no redemption, and no glorious and triumphant resurrection.

Now dear saint, your salvation from the curse of a violated law was secured to you by his death and your redemption from the grave was secured to you by his resurrection, and your salvation from the powers of sin and death which reign in these mortal bodies is secured to you by the working of his spirit, for he works in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. By that work you are made to hope and trust that you are heirs to the ineffable glories of the fairer world on high, and your being joint heirs with your Lord have the same things secured to you that were his when he took that body that was prepared him. In that body he was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and was so poor that he said, "the foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." By his servant he leaves on record a description of his saints when he says, "I will leave in the midst of thee a poor and afflicted people and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." He was afflicted and so are his saints. He was poor and so are they.

He had a kingdom and said, "my Kingdom is not of this world, and he also said to them, "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted." He mourned in Gethsemane and in death suffered the tortures of Calvary. He was laid in the tomb and arose from the tomb a mighty conqueror. So you dear saints are mourners while sojourning here below, and you must suffer death and lie in the dark confines of the tomb, but his resurrection secured your triumphant and glorious resurrection, for he is your life and your resurrection. He was mortal while here below, so are you. But in his resurrection he triumphed over mortality—so will you for this mortal shall put on immortality. He said, "I once was dead but behold I am alive forever more." He gives to his dear people eternal life, in regeneration and in the resurrection they will all have secured to them spiritual, eternal and immortal life. Then they will see their glorious Lord and be like him. Then they will enter into the everlasting joy of their inheritance which fadeth not away. Their triumph will be thro' him and not by works of righteousness which they have done. It will be by the humiliation and exaltation of their dear Redeemer.

They being joint heirs with him in sorrow and mourning while working out their salvation here below, will be joint heirs with him in his glorious and eternal exaltation beyond these scenes of sorrow, pain, disease and death, and while in their earthly pilgrimage, their chief desire is to ascribe all honor, glory and dominion to him, but in their blessed and eternal home they will sing his praises throughout a never ending eternity.

A TOUR.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I left home the 16th of March, met the brethren at Bethel Church at the water side, baptized two that were in their fellowship, was then conveyed to New Bern Ferry, by Mr. Potter, here I took the train for Newport, where I met many dear brethren and friends.

Elder J. R. Roberts was there, and we believe all the children of God present enjoyed his preaching. Sunday evening Brother S. C. Garner sent me to Sister Bell's, Widow of the late Stanisl Bell, a brother and deacon of the church at Hadnott's Creek. I can say he is greatly missed by brethren traveling in this section. May God bless the bereaved family. Sister Bell then took me to Hadnotts Creek, where I met a goodly number of brethren and friends, enjoyed myself with them, and after meeting Mr. Thomas conveyed me to Whiteoak River. The bridge being impassible, he left his horse and traveled with me some distance, trying to get conveyance for me but he could not. He then turned for home and I started to walk. It was then almost night, and 6 or 7 miles to the place where I hoped to stop for the night. I then looking back wished myself at home, but did not travel far before I met a man with a horse and cart, and told him my condition. He unloaded his cart, took me where I wanted to go, and would not have pay for his trouble.

The next morning I walked to North-East, met nine ladies and one man, he not a member of the church. From here I went to Mr. Gillets, and spent the night with him and family.

From here I was conveyed through rain and sunshine, by different brethren and friends to my appointments. I met many kind brethren and friends whose company I enjoyed, among others was brother John Heath 88 years old. He is blind and very feeble. He complains that the brethren do not go to see him.

Brother John Thomson, who is 85, was sick when I saw him, but seemed perfectly resigned to the will of God. May the Lord grant us more of his spirit so we may with brother Thomson say, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

From Sandy Bottom Brother Jesse Brown took me to Kinston, the water being so high we could not cross the river elsewhere. It seemed to me a leap in the dark as I was not acquainted, but he carried me to Mr. Temple's, son of Rufus Temple of Wake County, and I was cared for in real Baptist style. May God bless them and bring them to his fold.

From here I went to Bear Creek, where I spent two days with the church, thence to Mewborns, where my appointments ended. Writing is such a great task to me that I omit a great deal that I would like to speak of. I hope the brethren will continue to exercise the patience towards me they have in the past.

Let it suffice to say that I met all my appointments, feel that the Lord was with me, and I reached home the 3rd day of April and found all well: for which I feel thankful to the Lord. I can say with David, surely the goodness and mercy of the Lord have followed me all the days of my life.

ORDINATION.

The following Elders, being called on to attend at Cascade, Va., for the purpose of enquiring into the call and qualification for the gospel Ministry of R. W. Dix, met on Saturday before the second Sunday in March 1888, organized by electing Elder F. J. Stone Moderator, and Elder A. L. Moore Clerk, and after a thorough examination by the Presbytery, he was found orthodox and orderly and ordained to the full work of the Ministry, by prayer and laying on of hands. Charge by Elder A. L. Moore.

Deacons T. J. Dunn and L. Hanks were requested to act with them, after which the Presbytery adjourned. Elder F. J. Stone Moderator, and Elder A. L. Moore, Clerk.

ASSISTANCE ASKED.

DEAR BRETHREN OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH:—We desire to build a meeting house for the Old Baptists exclusively, in or near the town of Arlington, Tarrant Co., Texas.

There are very few Primitive Baptist meeting houses in or near this part of Texas, and around about here the condition of the brethren is such that we have very little prospect of having a house separate from the "nations" unless we can get help from the brotherhood in other parts of the country. If we have favor in your sight brethren any contribution however small will be gratefully recieved. "For the ways of Zion do mourn," being desolate in this particular.

A correct account of all money received will be kept for further reference.

Send by Post Office Order, Postal Note, Registered Letter or by Express.

TONGUES—PROPHESYING.

Brother J. J. Ellison, of W. Va., requests my view of 1st, Cor. 14 : 22.

"Wherefore tongues are a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not : but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe."

The apostle Paul spoke with tongues more than any other one did ; yet he said he would rather speak (in the churches) five words with his understanding, that he might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. Why is this ? Because tongues are for a sign to unbelievers, or that which is not spoken from the heart or understanding to the heart or understanding, not only communicates nothing—fails to feed—but it is a sign against those to whom it is spoken. But prophesying, which is spoken from the heart, or is experienced, is understood by the speaker and also speaks to the understanding or experience of the hearer, and is a good sign to the believer.

The deep mysteries uttered by Paul are, as all his other writings, as well also as the other scriptures, wrested or perverted by the unlearned (in experience) to their own destruction. For all tongues are to unbelievers, and in that sense outside the church, signs that they are not partakers of the gospel. When one understands not what is spoken he is that far an unbeliever. He that speaks is as a barbarian to him that believes not, for he speaks in an unknown tongue. If I speak or preach in the mystery of truth, and one is present who understands nothing of what I preach, though every word I say is precious truth, the fact that this one does not understand anything I say is proof or a sign to me that he is an unbeliever, and it is such a sign to him that believes not. But how is it with those present who hear and understand what I preach? It is a sign to me that I prophesy to them and that they are believers. I would prefer by far to speak a few words in a known tongue, or by prophecy, which is to speak in the church or to the spiritual, feeding the flock and is for believers. For when one is thus prophesying, or speaking in a known tongue, that is to the understanding, it is speaking in the church, and ministering to or serving believers, which is undoubted evidence that both they and myself have fellowship in the mystery of the gospel.

That is one good reason why Primitive Baptist preachers had rather preach to the church or believers, than to unbelievers, and why Primitive Baptists generally rather talk with believers than with unbelievers. P. D. G.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLES.

By request I will present a few thoughts upon Heb. 6 : 1.

By a careful reading of the book of Hebrews it will be seen that the writer, who is supposed to have been Paul, is contrasting the personal work of Jesus with that of the fathers, for the purpose of showing the Jews, who are his kindred after the flesh, the fulfillment of all things under the law, and how that in these last times God has spoken unto us by his son whom he hath ordained heir of all things, by whom he made the worlds. The law and the ordinances under it constituted the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. The law had a shadow of good things to come, but was not the very image of the things, whereas in Jesus we see the very things themselves, and in the church the image thereof. Moses was to make all things according to the pattern, which was shown him in the Mount, and the things which he made were the patterns of those things in the gospel heavens. These patterns were purified with the blood of calves and of goats, with scarlet wool and hyssop, but the heavenly things are purified with the precious blood of Christ. One could not properly worship God under the law dispensation unless he understood to what these things pointed, and then his faith was toward God and not towards the pattern or principle, and now our faith is in God and not in those things in the law, hence we leave them.

This is illustrated in the conversation between Christ and Nicodemus—concerning the new birth. Christ says, art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things? If I tell you of earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things? No doubt this again birth is pointed to in the law, wherein it is called an earthly thing, as pointing to sinners, men earthly who must be born again in order to see the heavenly things. Abraham, the father of the faithful, received Isaac from the dead in a figure, and everyone of like precious faith when born again receives Christ from the dead in the figure of the new birth, and receives by faith the efficacy of the blood of the Lamb slain, and forgetting the things which are behind, the principles, and reaching unto those things which are before—the perfections of Christ—they press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

There were some that were babes, which had need to be taught again what be the first principles. They had been taught them, and instead of going on and resting in the finished work, and upon the foundation of Jesus, they turned the other way and began to lay again the foundation of those things which Jesus had brought to an end by the sacrifice of himself.

God's people are called unto liberty, that they be not entangled with the yoke of bondage, but might enter into rest, and the service of the living God. What is the doctrine of Christ concerning dead works and living works? "The blood of Christ, who through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God, purges our consciences from dead works to serve the living God. Heb. 9: 14.

We now should serve God in newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter, for the letter killeth—hence the dead works—but the spirit giveth life and produces living works. The law is the foundation of dead works, but Jesus is the foundation from them, and other foundation can no man lay than that is laid—which is Christ.

Being dead to the law by the body of Christ, we turn unto him as our law-giver and authority, and we hear him saying; Arise my love, my fair one, and come away, come away from the law and the shadowy dispensation to Jesus our rest and our salvation. Our works are those of faith which is in Jesus, and we have his command to follow him and keep his sayings. He was baptized and commands us to be baptized, and the Apostles set the ordinances. Also we have the doctrine of the laying on of hands upon those who are called of God to preach the gospel, and as the hand represents power and fellowship, so they preach the power of Jesus and the fellowship of his sufferings.

Jesus was raised from the dead, and we are taught that we too shall be raised having our vile body changed and fashioned like unto the glorious body of Christ.

Peter speaks of the judgment which is eternal, whatever may be its character whether of condemnation unto death, or of justification unto life. Judgment does not necessarily imply condemnation, but may and does imply justification as referring to the house of God. "Judgment must first begin at the house of God and if it begin at us what shall the end be of those who obey not the gospel."

It seems to me that to us the order of the resurrection and judgment is reversed in the text. Jesus was judged, and having obtained eternal redemption for us, whereby we were in God's account justified, and for that cause Jesus was raised from the dead. He was for, or because of our justification.

If we were by virtue of the obedience and death of Christ justified freely by his blood when he arose from the dead, that is an eternal judgment, and it only remains for us to be brought into that blessed state to which we look, and for which we hope. Therefore we are judged with eternal judgment, and are raised to the resurrection of life. But for having received this judgment we could not expect to be raised up.

In our experience we were first condemned as sinners under the law and buried by baptism unto death, then followed repentance from dead works, then faith toward God through Christ, then in this faith we were raised up, and baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire, or had the love of God shed abroad in our hearts. These are all found in the foundation of our hope, and now we should walk in newness of life by the leadings of the spirit. Paul says, this only would I learn of you, received ye the spirit by the deeds of the law or by the hearing which is always of faith? If ye have begun in the spirit how can you be made perfect in the flesh? Why should a living child turn back to the law? Should he not rather go on unto perfection—that is to the fullness of the gospel blessings in the church, and rest from his labors as Jesus did from his? If christians must keep the law, what is the assumption? Does it not indicate that Christ did not keep it for them, and therefore did not fulfill it? Is he not the end, of the law? Then for one to turn back, and go to work to keep the law, and thereby lay the foundation for his hope, is to crucify to himself afresh the Son of God, and put him to open shame.

Suppose the wife of the husbandman should go out on the farm after he has given orders and issue new orders, or even the same, would that not reflect upon him and put him to shame? Would it not declare that he was not competent to arrange and control his affairs.

Her province is to enjoy the fruits of his labor. And so with christians, they are to occupy and enjoy the fruits of the land, but they should not turn back nor assume to themselves their own salvation. If one should thus fall away, or turn back he must suffer the consequences, he must be saved so as by fire.

The life of the christian being a continuous warfare, some are inclined, like young eagles, to remain a long time in the first elements—or principles—or at the beginning of their pilgrimage, whereas they should leave them and serve one another, and be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

The Lord has to stir them up and burn them out and chasten them often to teach them his statutes and judgments.

But Paul had good persuasions of the brethren and may it be so today, that the Lord would grant us grace to know his will and all his sayings keep.

Whenever we are not trusting in Jesus, and looking, we are receding—falling away, and must be restored day by day.

Lord keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid on thee. P. G. L.

WHAT THINK YOU ?

Look at the long tail spread out after one of these agents of the Missionary board. What would you think if Paul had appended to his name Traveling Missionary Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board located at Antioch. What a kite it makes. Then the prefix Rev. Doctor is to be carried.

Paul called himself the Apostle of Jesus Christ, the prisoner of the Lord, the chief of sinners, less than the least of all Saints &c. He told the Elders (preachers) he had coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel, and that his own hands had labored to support himself and those with him, and that he had shown them that example that they might do the same.

Peter speaks of Paul. What does he call him? Is it Rev. Doc. Paul? nothing of that sort: but it is beloved brother Paul. P. D. G.

ONE FOR ALL.

Friend W. H. Howe, of Mo. requests my views of Rom. 5 : 13, 14.

"For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

Never-the-less death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come."

Sin entered into the world by one man, Adam, and death by sin; and in this way death passed upon all men, because all men have sinned.

Notice that death passed upon all men in Adam, or by the one offence of Adam, because all have sinned.

Sin was in the world then from the days of Adam's transgression. It was hundreds of years from then until the giving of the law that came by Moses. But sin is not imputed when there is no law.

Sin is dead without the law, or has no strength. In that sense when there is no law there is no transgression.

However death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression.

For no one ever sinned as Adam did, that is no other individual man was ever put in the garden of Eden and sinned as Adam did, and he never sinned but once, for he was driven out of the garden, and never returned there. So that no man ever sinned as Adam did, except as we all sinned in him, or as his sin is our sin.

Still death reigned from Adam to Moses, or to the giving of the law, even over those that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. What is the conclusion? It irresistably follows that all sinned in Adam and therefore death passed upon all in Adam, and that if no law had ever been given after Adam's transgression all born of him would die, because all sinned in him, and they are of him, and as he is such are they in the world. Death then reigned from Adam to Moses, or before the law came.

By the one offence of one then all of Adam's offspring are made sinners. That is the reasoning here that cannot be resisted or gainsaid.

But where sin abounded grace did much more abound, that as sin hath reigned unto death even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

For Adam is the figure of him (Jesus) who then (at Adam's transgression) was to come, and he is set over against Jesus and is the figure of Jesus. As Adam was the only man ever in the garden of Eden, so Jesus is the only one born without sin. As Adam is the head of his offspring, so Jesus is the everlasting Father. As by the one offence of Adam many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous. Sin is imputed in Adam: grace reigns in Christ. In Adam all die: in Christ all are made alive. That is as all that are in Adam die, so all that are in Christ shall be made alive.

As much as we are made sinners in Adam, so much are we made righteous in Christ. But we are sinners entirely in Adam, so we are righteous completely in Jesus. As in Adam we have nothing but sin and no righteousness; so in Jesus we have complete righteousness and no sin.

While all our sinning is in Adam, and as the result of Adam's transgression, because we are of Adam: so all our righteousness is because we are of Christ. It is in Christ and only in him that we live righteously, and walk in the truth; or it is by the faith of Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption, that we are the righteousness of God, and manifest it in our walk and conversation. P. D. G.

MISSIONARIES.

It is objected to us that we have no Missionaries—that we do not send out any of them—that we do not educate any men or women for this purpose—that we have no schools for the purpose of fitting men for this—that we have no agents collecting money to support foreign missionaries—that we have no board of men appointed to direct men to go and preach to the heathen, and supply them with money

We admit that we have no foreign missionaries that we qualify or send out to preach, nor do we have any at home that we qualify or send out to preach—nor do we direct any where to go.

But we hold that the Lord prepares his preachers, to preach here or in any other heathen land, and that he sends them out and directs them and enables them to preach.

We hold that we should minister to and kindly treat those that the Lord sends. P. D. G.

COMMUNION.

Why do we not invite all professing denominations to partake with us of the Lord's supper? Answer. We have no right to invite any one, for it is the Lord's table, and not ours.

If it were our own table we might invite whom we please. But this is the table of the Lord.

We therefore cannot make any terms about it. We see in the law, governing this matter in the New Testament, an illustration in the way the followers of Jesus observed it, that only those who abide stedfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship partake of the Lord's table.

None but such as believed or profess to believe the doctrine of our Lord Jesus and were baptized in his name, partake of that table. They were all agreed. How shall people eat together in the bible sense of that word who do not believe the same thing.

I have no desire in the world to eat with, nor to worship with those that do not believe as I do.

Let them eat with each other: Let those that believe alike eat together. They can do so with consistency. But I do not believe any more what other denominations preach than they believe what I preach: so we are not agreed and honesty and faithfulness will not hide that two cannot eat together or commune unless they be agreed.

P. D. G.

PREDESTINATION.

One of the good and lovely words of the bible is predestination. It is never used except as descriptive of God's gracious purpose respecting the people whom he foreknew:

The people whom he foreknew were in their nature and natural standing without any holiness or hope. If they had been foreknown as right and righteous, there would have been no need of any change in them. But they were not in themselves what God purposed they should be; hence he predestinated them to be such as his son, and holy and without blame before him in love, and to the adoption of children. Then without this predestination they were not like Jesus, nor ever could be, they were not holy and without blame, and were not the children of God, or had not and never would have had the adoption of sons.

All the Primitive or Old School Baptists are then necessarily predestinarians, and could not be any thing else. And every one that is a true predestinarian is such a Baptist.

This purpose embraces in its scope and operations such an unlimited control over all things, and such a handling and controlling all things, that all things do work together for good to them that love God, and that are called according to his purpose.

What unspeakable comfort to the saint to feel assured that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, and that he works all things after the counsel of his own will, and predestinates afore the salvation of his chosen people. But says some one, there is nothing predestinated except what concerns the salvation of the church! Who will arraign the purpose and providence of the Almighty God by saying that such and such things, for instance the killing of Abel, the selling of Joseph, the cursing of David by Shimci, the rebellion of Absalom, the affliction of Job, the betrayer of Jesus and his crucifiers by wicked hands, the stoning of Steven, the stripes and imprisonment of Barnabas and Paul, and innumerable events, evil as in and of men, were not overruled of the Lord for good, and needful in the salvation of the people of God.

What man would dare say that this or that event is not needful? We who know so little about the purpose of God, and can see so little should not attempt to say what is not needful.

We know this that God teaches his people to hate evil: and we know that the Lord is just and true; and we know that all things work together for good to them that love him, and are the called according to his purpose.

Baptists know too little about this deep subject to quarrel about it. But it is things that people do not understand that they wrangle about.

You show more of the spirit of a holy calling by love and forbearance toward your brethren, for you need those things yourself, and so do I.

P. D. G.

WHY DO I NOT INSURE MY LIFE.

Why take ye thought for the morrow? The way to provide for ones needs is by labor and economy.

Parents should lay up themselves for their children, and not put it in the hands of others to do it for them. To insure ones life tends to make him feel that he cannot manage his own business himself. I have never known a Baptist benefited by it. It is not according to the word of the Lord, but is a distrust of the Lord, and contrary to the principles that the Primitive Baptists have always held.

FROM FLORIDA.

Elder Z. H. Bennett writes that he baptized ten persons in May at Mt. Carmel church, in St. John's Co. near St. Augustine.

This is a newly constituted church—last Sept. with 7 members, and now it numbers 30 members. Elder Jesse Tyre is their beloved pastor.

Obituary.

MARGARET ROSAAN NORMAN.

Mrs. Margaret Rosaan Norman was born August 3rd 1842, married to Jackson Norman on the 17th day of January 1864, the result of this union was 5 children, 2 boys and three girls. She embraced the Christian faith and connected herself with the Primitive Baptist church at Franklin, Surry County, N. C., of which she was an upright, consistent member for a number of years. Her death was the result of a wound upon the third finger of the right hand received on the 16th day of Oct. 1887. The cut was slight, and caused no uneasiness for a day or two when unfavorable symptoms developed. In the absence of her family physician another was called in, and for several days she suffered the most excruciating agony, and gradually became worse. Upon the arrival of the family physician he found gangrene rapidly developing, and deeming the case a very grave one a consultation of physicians was called in the hope that an operation would prove successful; but the hope was vain, the seeds of death were sown, and all the skill of physicians or devoted attention of loved ones could avail nothing, and she gradually became worse until the evening of the 30th when she was informed that she had a few hours to live. It was then that her christian faith sustained her and enabled her to look down into the dark valley of the shadow of death without fear or trembling and nerved her to pass thro' the trying ordeal of bidding her husband, children and friends farewell and giving them her parting advice with serene composure. So sad a scene it is not often the lot of mortals to pass through, and no one of the many there assembled will ever forget the impression made, as she while the murmur of the rippling stream of death was falling faintly on her ear called her husband to her side and into his care and keeping committed the future welfare of her children and aged mother, rejoiced that as they had climbed the hill of life together there were many bright and lovely spots in memory to cheer her, she then from the portal of the grave looked back upon their pilgrimage of life with pleasure and joy. Often from his diseased condition she had expected for him to be taken and her left, but the mysterious working of Providence decreed otherwise, and calmly she reviewed the past and talked of joys and sorrows they had passed thro' and bid him remember that the same hand that led them in the past would still support and sustain; and to be calm and resigned to the inevitable decree, and with patience await their union on the banks of sweet deliverance. She then called her eldest, a wild and wayward boy just entering upon the stage of manhood, and told him that there were but few spots around the home of his youth that had not been pressed by her knees as she humbly bent in supplication to her God imploring his aid in behalf of her erring child and urged him to forsake evil companions and associates and to refrain from whatever was wrong; to guard and protect those loved ones that were dependent upon others for help and seek eternal salvation while young. To her eldest daughter, her pride and joy, she committed the care and keeping of the other children bidding her ever to keep them together and train them up to fear God and become useful men and women and to sustain and comfort the father in his afflictions, to give her heart to God and live an upright christian life, to shun the approach of evil and follow the examples and heed the advice she had always given her. To the other children she gave much advice, urged them to look up to their elder sister for advice and counsel, to honor their father, to love each other and always cling together during life, told them of the beauties of young children serving God and leading christian lives, and urged them to early embrace the christian religion and so live that their last would be their best and happiest days. To the old mother whose four score years showed that the sands of life were nearly run and she was halting feebly on the verge of the tomb, she bid go on and be faithful to the end, that it would be but a few more burning suns of summer or chilling blasts of winter at most until they would meet on the other shore of the river of life to part no more while the ages of eternity rolled along.

She said all was bright and her soul was at peace, though she dreaded the final struggle she had no fear for the future, and hoped her Savior would let that cup pass without much suffering, and at one o'clock on the 31st God sent his messenger to bear her spirit to a brighter and better world. Thus passed away a good woman, a zealous christian, one whose ear was never deaf to the cry of distress, whose hand was ever ready to bestow charity when deserved. One who was first at the bedside of a suffering fellow being. No night so dark, no day so cold or damp that she would not fly to the relief of the sick, and in the hearts of her many friends her memory is enshrined and will remain green for many a long, long day.

TAEWELL T. GRAHAM.

Departed this life, April 23rd, 1888, at his residence near Turtle Rock, Floyd Co. Va., Mr Tazewell T. Graham, in the 56th year of his age. He was the son of the late Alvin Graham and was born Jan. 19th 1833.

Mr. Graham was a private in Co. "A" 24th Va. volunteers, and during the war lost his right leg. He was a faithful, true, honest and brave soldier. Few men live who in their circle were more universally beloved and respected. As a neighbor, he was clever, kind and obliging. As a citizen, prompt, honest and straight-forward in the discharge of his obligations. He suffered great pain in his last illness, but bore it with unflinching fortitude. He descended to the grave in full assurance of having made his peace with God. He told me the last time I saw him, that when he left this world he "he would be at rest." He had only one child that lived to any age—Walter Lee Graham—who preceded ed him to the other life a few days over six months. Young Walter died in the prime of his youth, on the 16th of Oct. 18-87 of Phthisis Pulmonalis.

He was the pride of his parents, and poor "Taz," as his father was familiarly called was never himself again after Walter was taken away.

A FELLOW COMRADE.

MRS. E. C. BENNETT.

"There's grief on earth, but joy in heaven,
Tears here below, but smiles above,
Sad partings here, glad meetings there,
The master claims one whom we love."

Our mother Mrs. E. C. Bennett was born in Gwinnett Co., Ga. May 6, 1821.

Married Mr. C. E. Bennett, our father, Nov. 14, 1839 in Cobb Co. Ga. United with the Primitive Baptist church in Nov. 1852, and died Feb. 25, 1887, at Fayetteville Ga.

With bleeding heart and sad memories we pen the word dead! Sad, indeed, to write this word in connection with the name of any one, under any circumstances, but more especially of a true and tender mother. Yet to our believing hearts she is not dead but sleepeth! How true are the words of the bible, "The memory of the just is blessed." Yes how sweet the savor of their names. It little matters at what hour of the day the righteous fall asleep. Death comes to all alike, no age or sex is exempt from passing this ordeal; only one short sentence closes the biography of all, and only a few short years do we journey here, ere we come to that bridge which transports us over into the Beyond. But to christian hearts, the loss of this brief pilgrimage is the joy of heaven. To them death is nothing less than the dispatcher of all trials, troubles, temptations and sorrows—a haven of perfect rest and happiness!

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Well do we remember her many deeds of kindness to the poor around her, reminding us that whoso shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward. She seemed ever more an angel of Mercy, so willing and ready to lend a helping hand—never too tired to visit the sick, and do all in her power to alleviate their sufferings—and administer to the sorrowful words of cheer and comfort—the destitute any where, at all times, found in her a sympathizing friend. In the performance of her own household duties she was always busy and careful. The life of our precious mother was adorned with many excellencies of character. She was noted for her cheerful disposition and generous nature. The community in which she lived has lost a true and faithful woman, and kind neighbor, ever battling for the right and hating the wrong. There is a great difference in the conduct of dying christians—some give so much testimony in life, there is none needed in death; for theirs is a living testimony of faith in Christ, and such we believe our mother.

We can remember many beautiful little incidents in her life portraying her strong faith, and deep humility. She was suddenly stricken with paralysis and never opened her eyes, or spoke to us after she was taken sick, yet, we cannot say too much in her praise. She loved her church above all things.

We remember well the day she joined the church. She was baptized by uncle Billie Mosely (as we called him.) She was raised by Methodist Parents, yet the Primitive church was her choice. Whenever there was to be preaching at dear old Ramah church she was never absent, unless providentially hindered—always so punctual in attendance upon the sanctuary. Therefore the church has lost a member who was ever faithful and true—consecrated to the cause of the master. She came near dying in summer of '85; no one thought she would ever recover, but God in his great kindness saw cause to spare her to us, nearly two years longer. Often times afterwards we talked to her about her extreme sickness. One day we said to her, "suppose you had died then Ma"? She replied, "I was ready,—I was not afraid." Sometimes in speaking of it, she would say; "O children, why didn't you let me go then?" Seemed really anxious to go. She had forty two living grand-children, and from the oldest to the very youngest loved her devotedly—always glad to go to grandma's, or to have her visit them. No grandmother was ever loved better. Indeed none knew her but to love her.

Oh, how changed and dreary seems every thing to us since the day of her death—her resting day, because she is resting from all cares and troubles, also her coronation day—the beginning of her eternal perfect bliss with Christ! How we miss her kindly admonition and advice.

O Holy Spirit, the Comforter of God's people, comfort our hearts; and may the blessed Savior, whom she loved and served while with us, send His spirit to comfort also the heart of our dear aged father, and lead him to trust her Savior more and more; that when his summons may come, he may together with all of us be prepared to meet our dear mother in that blessed abode where are no sorrows and partings, for we feel that her weary soul hath found the dawn of Life Eternal in the bright forever and the long rest which breathes in Paradise!

"He thinks the angels opened wide,
The gates of heavenly bliss,
To greet her humble spirit there,
Released from such a world as this."

One less at home!
The loved circle broken, a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place,
But cleansed, and saved, and perfected by grace,
One more in heaven!

ELDER HASSELL.

If pastors of churches would encourage their churches in conference meetings, or if deacons, or any willing to do so would present that matter, quite a number of churches would aid in raising and sending money to Brother Hassell to relieve him of his great embarrassment in the debt contracted in writing the History that gives so much satisfaction to its numerous readers.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without trying any thing about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remedy.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days elicits a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been received please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CAUSE

COMMUNICATED.

SATAN'S WORKS DESTROYED.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—Our dear brother, Elder Chick, asked me to write for the LAND-MARK on these words, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3:8.

Words could not more definitely, plainly express the purpose of God in manifesting or sending forth his only begotten Son. When about to make him manifest, God sent his angel, who said, "And thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins,"—Matt. 1:22. Paul testifies that God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons,—Gal. 4:4, 5. And so the son of Mary, Jesus, is also the Son of God. Yea, declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead,—Romans, 1:4.

Jesus is not only the Son of man, and a man, but he is also "the mighty God, the everlasting Father;" and Paul says of him, God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory,—1 Tim. 3:16. "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us,—1 John 1:2. "And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." This Word was Jesus. The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world! This is he of whom I said, after me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me. And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water,—John 1. "And Jesus when he was baptized went up straightway out of the water: and lo the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him, and lo a voice from heaven saying: This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased,"—Matt. 3:16, 17. Therefore it was not by his birth only that Jesus was manifested as the Son of God, but also by his baptism, and by his resurrection from the dead. And this was declared at his glorious transfiguration on the holy mount, "when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

So then, the Son of God was not only manifested on the earth, among men, but in the flesh, and as a man. This was embraced in God's eternal purpose; and it was therefore necessary that Jesus should come in the flesh, that he might destroy the works of the devil, make atonement and reconciliation for the sins of his people, committed by them in their flesh, and save them from their sins.

All this is clearly revealed in the Scriptures. "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings,"—Heb. 2:9, 10. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit,—1 Pet. 3:18.

As thus manifested in the flesh, as the Son of David, and king in Zion, Jesus was the Christ, the anointed of the Father, as God's ordained and consecrated High Priest, Prophet and King, who shall reign in righteousness; in his everlasting Kingdom, as the only begotten son of God the Father, the first born from the dead among the many brethren, and the heir of all things. It was of Jesus, the Son of David, that God said, I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him; with whom my hand shall be established; mine arm shall strengthen him,—Psalm, 89:20, 21. Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips, therefore God has blessed thee forever. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things,—Ps. 45:2, 4.

"That he might destroy the works of the devil." The devil, who sinneth from the beginning, had compassed the sin and fall of man, and so brought destruction and death upon the children of men, and filled them with unrighteousness and works of wickedness. Now the works of flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witch-craft hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like,—Gal. 5:19, 21. Paul here presents a long and fearful array of sinful and destructive works, all of which are found in this corrupted flesh of the children of men, and of the chosen people of God.

For it is a Bible truth that the children, whom God gave his Son, to be his brethren and joint heirs in the Father's kingdom, are partakers of flesh and blood, and as such they were by nature the children of wrath, even as others, and were the slaves of sin and the subjects of the devil. Therefore Paul testifies to his brethren in Christ, that in the past time they were dead in sins, and walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind,—Ephesians, 2:2, 3.

Now therefore, all those works of the devil, which are manifested in their sinful flesh, must be destroyed, and they themselves, as the people whom God formed for himself and gave his Son, must be purified, made spotless and white, and saved from the hand of the enemy and from their sins. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage,—Heb. 2:14, 15. This presents a terrible conflict, between the Son of God in the flesh, and the prince of darkness; and this warfare is accomplished in the mortal flesh of every child of God and heir of salvation. For it is in them, in the people of his love, for whom he suffered and died in the flesh, in his brethren, and in their flesh, that the Son of God destroys the works of the devil, and makes them free. "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the devil, and Satan, which deceived the whole world, he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night, and they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death,"—Revelation, 12: 7—11.

The foregoing testimony shows the conquest of the holy Son of God over the devil and his works, as accomplished in the militant heaven, the kingdom of God, and in his children, the subjects of the kingdom. They are called to endure a great fight of afflictions, to wrestle against the rulers of the darkness of this world, to resist the devil, to put off the old man with his deeds, and to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul. May brethren be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against wiles of the Devil,—Ephesians, 6; 10, 11.

The works of the devil are as a troop or host in battle array against the people of God's choice, whom he hath appointed to obtain salvation; and the devil would thus defeat the purpose of God, and overcome and defeat the heirs of salvation, through the deceitful lusts and sinful works of the flesh. Dust is the serpent's meat; and he has sowed the seeds of all evil in our flesh, our earthly nature, which spring up as an abundant crop of thorns and thistles, and vile and noxious weeds, such as envy, pride, jealousy, deceit, malice, and all the other warring works of the flesh, the works of the devil; so that the children of God have to endure hardness, fight a good warfare, and strive against sin.

The sins of the Lord's new covenant people shall be destroyed, yet they themselves shall be saved from their sins, and delivered from the devil and his works, and purified unto the the Lord, that they may offer unto him an offering in righteousness, and worship him in the beauty of holiness. Therefore sinners shall be saved, and saved, too, from all sin and sinful works, and from death, the wages of sin. "For he," (the Son of God) "must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death,"—1 Cor. 15; 15, 26. Sin not only produces an immense and frightful fruitage, as the works of the devil, but sin also ends in death, and the devil had the power of death. It is in their bodies of flesh that the children of God sin, commit sinful works, and die; therefore it is in their flesh or bodies that the Son of God shall destroy the works of the devil, and present them in their purified bodies unto God, holy and without blame before him in love. "And they shall call them the holy people; the redeemed of the Lord,"—Isa. 52; 12. They are not only holy but they are people; and not only are they people, but they are redeemed, the redeemed of the Lord; and redeemed unto God and the Lamb.

"Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away,"—Isa. 35; 10. Sinners, dying sinners only, can be redeemed; and redemption is from the law, and its curse, and from sin and death. "Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," says faithful Paul.

The new man of the children of God, the divine nature, of which they are made partakers by the Holy Spirit, was not forfeited, and needed not to be redeemed; neither could the eternal life of the lost sheep of the good Shepherd be quickened, or made alive from the dead; nor did the Son of God come into the world to save any other beings than sinners. "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever,"—Rev. 1; 5, 6. "We are more than conquerors through him that loved us,"; and God giveth us the victory over death and the grave through our Lord Jesus Christ, who was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil.

The Son of God came down from heaven, went down into death and the grave in the body of his flesh; he arose victorious, having blotted out sin, abolished death, spoiled the principalities and powers of darkness, and ascended up on high and sat down on his Father's throne. Henceforth his arm rules for him, and his enemies shall be made his footstool; for the Father of glory hath put every thing under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church.

There is also an end determined, when the works of the devil shall be destroyed, not only in all the redeemed people, whom God gave his Son, but in all places of his dominion; then shall the wickedness of the wicked come to an end. For though the wicked shall be revealed, yet the Lord shall consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming,—2 The s. 2:8.

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ,"—2 Cor. 10; 4, 5. As thus armed with the invincible power of God's victorious Son, Paul would say, "Being confident of this every thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ,"—Phil. 1:6. "I ord. thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works in us,"—Isa. 26; 12. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation,"—John, 5; 28, 29. "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power." "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all,"—1 Cor. 15; 24-28. We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned,"—Rev. 11; 17.

Brother Chick could have better expounded the text, to which his mind was drawn; but I hope this may minister some comfort to him and the followers of the Lamb who may read it.

Hoping to triumph in Christ, yours to serve,
D. BARTLEY.
New Castle, Ind.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have just come here from an extensive tour thro' Indiana. I have had a pleasant time indeed and met many precious children of God. I had the pleasure of meeting Elders Thompson, Tharp, Bartley, Parr, Sawin, Zion, Richards, Wright & Weaver who are all indeed precious brethren to me whom I highly esteem for the truth's sake.

Elder Thompson has been the editor of the Monitor, and is indeed a precious brother to me, for the more I know of him the better I love him for his meekness, humility and fatherly kindness to me, but above all his firmness against all the doctrines and institutions of men. That precious and well known brother Elder Bartley is yet earnestly contending for the glorious truth of God, our Savior, and is indeed a beloved preacher among the saints of God. Elder Thorp is a precious brother and contends for the simplicity of the gospel which makes God's children rejoice and is food to the poor, meek and humble ones.

Elder Richards is a man of great ability and greatly beloved by his brethren. In fact all the brethren are contending for the old paths, "Where is the good old way." It seemed that there was a great deal of love existing among them.

I went through northern Indiana and met many precious ones who know the truth and rejoice in hearing the same proclaimed.

I was kindly received by them all. There are some in their connection who are somewhat unsound and believe in means and instrumentalities, and there are a few alien baptisms among them and some Masons in places. But they are ridding themselves of all these inconsistencies, and I believe will soon be one people all through, but I will just say here that while they are accused of being means, etc., I never was received more heartily at any place. All the preachers and members seemed to endorse me fully. I was very plain against those inconsistencies and they all joined me in my position.

I went to many churches that had never been contaminated with any of the new theories, and others that had, and had put them away.

I long to see the time when all will be one throughout. Not that I want to fellowship means, etc., but I do want Primitive Baptists to put all these things away, and I believe they will. The present prospect looks bright for Zion there. My last appointment in Indiana was at Elders T. J. Jones and W. P. Jones's church, at Antioch. There I met a lovely band of precious brethren. That is a home for all the good old-fashioned Baptists.

Those dear Brethren Jones are men of wonderful ability and very highly esteemed by all good, sound Baptists. I was considerably in the dark at their church, but they seemed to be prepared to make allowance for my weakness. I shall never forget those precious brethren. I had very good liberty for poor me nearly all the time.

I have suffered considerably of late with dyspepsia, but I am getting along tolerably well now. I shall write more when I get home if the Lord will.

Remember me at a throne of grace.
Yours in love, LEE HANCKS.

MEDITATIONS

No. 2.

At the conclusion of my last writing, Jesus was slowly, wearily and sorrowfully making his way towards Jerusalem, and the sadness, if possible, had been deepened by the carnal weakness of James and John and their mother, Salome. Jesus with his disciples was then on the west side of the Jordan, near Jericho. Two blind men were healed, and Zaccheus had met him in a very remarkable way, and had opened his house to the master and his faithful followers. In this, as well as in all his intercourse with individuals and with the multitudes, Jesus teaches, by example, how his people are to be approached. The poor and distressed are to be met, encouraged, and if need be, succored, and the rich are to be courteously received. Zaccheus was a Jew, but also a Roman officer, a tax collector, a publican, and hence ostracized and unpopular among his countrymen, who availed themselves of the occasion to murmur at Christ's association with a publican and sinner, as they stigmatized Zaccheus. Jesus intended to be a guest of Zaccheus, who made a most humble and truthful statement of the way he lived, and no doubt intended it to be a confession. He had faith in the Messiah whom he was entertaining, and evidently was the subject of pardon and salvation; for Jesus said, "This day has salvation come to this house, forasmuch as this man is also a son of Abraham." "For the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost." Imagine that eventful night at the house of Zaccheus. Who can tell the joyful emotions that thrilled through the soul of Zaccheus at the thought which must have electrified him, that under his roof reposed the Son of God? He was rich in all that the earth could bestow, but now he had been led to realize the riches of the grace of God made manifest by and through his son. What a glorious charge, what a priceless boon!

The next day Jesus and his disciples departed and went forward to Bethany, where the devoted family, Mary, Martha and Lazarus lived. This was six days before the Passover, and on Friday. The next day was the sabbath, and Jesus was at supper, a sabbath meal, at which he was the guest of Simon, the leper whom he had miraculously healed. At this sabbath meal were also Mary, Martha and Lazarus. Mary who, thro' that love born of the spirit, and with deep and fond reverence for her adorable Lord and Master, brought her alabaster box of ointment and anointed him, as the Savior declared, for his burial. This loving offering called forth loud and emphatic protests from his disciples, especially from Judas. But Mary's undying faith and love in and for her Saviour made the offering still more precious. It was worth three hundred denars, or about 45 dollars. Judas regarded the offering as a prodigal waste but the house was filled with the odor of the incense. In this group Judas stands out in hideous contrast to the "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." The dark and terrible secrets of his wicked heart flare out in lurid glare every now and then. The key to his inner nature was covetousness, and the devil held the key. His coming desertion, treason and cruel betrayal were doubtless at that moment festering in his wicked soul. Possibly he was mentally figuring up the price he would set upon the delivery of the Son of man to the Jewish Sanhedrim. He deeply coveted the value of Mary's precious ointment. Oh the natural heart, how deceitful, and how desperately wicked it is. The next day, the day after the Sabbath, which answers to our Sunday or first day of the week, which was spent in Bethany, Jesus entered Jerusalem as a King. The day is called Palm Sunday. It was April 2nd. His entry into Jerusalem as a King is in harmony with and in fulfillment of prophecy. It was the assumption of Royal authority and power, and a deliberate challenge to all the then existing earthly potentates that the time had come when his true standing was to be triumphantly established. The kingdom of light was dawning and he was its King. He is King of kings and Lord of lords. Soon he is to be crowned with the Royal Diadem, and take his seat upon the throne of his power on the right hand of his Father. The event is not an exhibition of pride nor ambition. No, no, the procession passed from Bethany along the road to Jerusalem. Bethpage was the name of one of the suburbs of Jerusalem. The "House of figs" as it signifies; it may have been so called from a fig orchard, or a place for drying figs. As they journeyed to a place just outside the city, Jesus stopped and sent two of his disciples forward saying unto them, "go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied and a colt with her, loose them and bring unto me. And if any man say aught unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them, and straightway he will send them. All this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet saying, "Tell ye the daughter of Zion, behold thy King cometh unto thee, meek and sitting upon an ass, and the colt the foal of an ass. And the disciples went and did as Jesus commanded them, and brought the ass and the colt and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way. Others cut down branches from the trees and spread them in the way. And the multitudes that went before and followed, cried saying, Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest! And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? And the multitude said, this is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth and of Galilee." The multitude seemed to have been moved upon and gathered involuntarily while the two disciples were absent bringing the ass and the colt. They were suddenly and overwhelmingly impressed and awed by the power and majesty of Son of God. The procession seemed to have formed itself without a pre-concerted arrangement. The throngs of people going out of the city without notice met the multitude marching in. A strange and mysterious enthusiasm takes possession of all at once, and the multitude are made to cry out as with one voice. Travelers, pilgrims, strangers and citizens are in the procession, and it was no doubt to the rulers—Scribes, Pharisees and Hypocrites—a wonderful and startling demonstration. The loud shouts and plaudits from such a great multitude so strangely excited over the entrance to the city of the meek and humble Nazarene, surrounded by his disciples, made an exciting scene. The shouts were well known words and sentences from the Psalms, "Hosanna," was repeated as a sort of response. Its meaning is, "Save now." So they marched and cried. The city was moved. No wonder for the Master and the judge had come! Jesus would no longer restrain his followers nor give way before his enemies. The time had come for them to do that for which they were ordained. He is King and is now ready to establish his kingdom. "And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrowed the table of the money changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, and said unto them, "It is written, my house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves. And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple and he healed them." What a triumphant victory! He put to shame and confusion the hosts of mammon worshippers. His authority was undisputed. The mercenary vendors were scourged from the 'house of prayer,' and the distressed and sick received, healed and blessed. The children in the temple shouted aloud, Hosanna, save now. The chief priests were aroused and angry.

"Envy thou not the oppressor, and choose none of his ways."—Prov. 3: 31.

The clouds gather in blackness again. The children acknowledging the Messiah, kindles afresh the hatred and spirit of murder in the breast of the rulers, and they and Judas will soon consummate the dreadful conspiracy and the King will soon hang on Calvary's rugged cross. The crisis was at hand and his death was in their cruel hearts. The chief priests and rulers—members of the great Sanhedrim, will see to it that he shall be crucified. But bless the Lord O my soul for his great mercy, Jesus reigns King, Eternal Immortal, the only blessed potentate!

Tomorrow there will be a reaction. The Romans in possession of the government of the city will not tamely submit to the kingly authority of the new one—the despised Nazarene. The Jews will rally and instigate hatred and malevolence against the Christ whom they have neglected and reviled. He is doomed to the cross, but he is still King of kings, and Lord of lords. We have said that he was thirty years of age.

Eighteen hundred and fifty seven years have passed into the mysterious realms of eternity since he suffered the ignominy of the cross, but he who rode in triumph into Jerusalem that April morning amid the Hosannas of the multitudes, rules today over the destinies of five hundred millions of his creation, and in his unerring hands lies the certain preservation or destruction of the ruling nations of this earth, while the ransomed of the Lord when he comes to Zion can sing the joyful anthem;—

"Jesus reigns and heaven rejoices,
Jesus reigns the God of love!
See, he sits on yonder throne,
Jesus rules the world alone!
Hallelujah, hallelujah, Amen.

AN EARNEST INQUIRY.

MY DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—As a earnest enquirer of the truth, as revealed in the scriptures, and having a high regard for your views, I would ask is every one who is called, qualified, and sent of God to preach as an evangelist, or traveling preacher, also at the same time required to have the pastoral care of churches? This question of great concern to me and perhaps to others, was sprung and answered in the affirmative in your editoria' headed "Complaint" in the LANDMARK of June 1st. Are you scripturally correct. In regard to Timothy and Titus too, does not a careful perusal of Paul's letters to them rather show that, while they were traveling and preaching as evangelists, they did not have the pastoral care of a single church? When Paul wrote Timothy to abide still at Ephesus it was not to live there as the pastor of that church but to tarry there as an evangelist long enough to fulfill a special end named by the Apostle to-wit: to "charge some that they teach no other doctrine" etc. 1st Tim. 1 : 3, 4 How long he tarried there that time we know not, but it seems that it was the Apostle's desire for him to remain until he could make his round from Macedonia to Ephesus again, for he said, "Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." &c., 4th, chapter, verse 13. Then to further the idea that Timothy as an evangelist did not at that time have the pastoral care of the church at Ephesus the Apostle wrote: "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." Again, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." 2 Tim. 2 : 2-4 Then as traveling among the churches, not only to commit to faithful men able to teach others also what he had heard and learned from the Apostle Paul, but was also to confirm and establish the churches in doctrine and practice against the tide of error that would flow in upon them as we learn in the 4th, chapter of 2nd Timothy down to the 5th verse, and then the Apostle tells him to "do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." After this, and perhaps after the death of the apostle Paul, he settled down as the pastor of the church at Ephesus, being chosen by that church as her pastor. The same it seems to me, may be said of Titus, who is said to have been ordained the first Bishop of the church of the Cretians that is the church of the Cretians chose or elected Titus as their first pastor. Titus and Timothy were both doubtless set apart to the work of the ministry long before they had the pastoral care of a church, and labored as evangelists first after coming under the hands of a presbytery.

When the Lord commanded that Paul and Barnabas should go forth from Antioch to the Gentiles he did not say "Ordain me Barnabas and Paul for the work whereunto I have called," but 'separate me Barnabas and Saul,' etc. As proof that Titus was an evangelist or traveling preacher, see Titus 1 : 5, and as Timothy was commanded wholly to the work, and his work at that time was that of an evangelist, or the things connected with such work, the conclusion seems irresistible to me that while Timothy and Titus were engaged in such work that they did not at that time have the pastoral care of a church. Paul and Barnabas, Silas and Phillip, and doubtless many others spent their time in traveling and preaching principally among the churches that had been established by them, not forgetting however to go into the regions beyond and never had the pastoral care of churches. I have stated the matter strictly in a Scriptural light as it occurs to me, but as I am a fallible and erring mortal I may be wrong. The way in which I have stated it agrees also with my experience that led, or rather forced me to give up the care of churches and all secular pursuits in order that my whole time should be devoted to traveling and preaching. It was entirely against my will and choice that I ever tried to preach at all, but when it came to give up churches and home; giving up my business upon which I had depended so long for the support of myself and family, it was so repugnant to my nature and judgment, that I stoutly and stubbornly resisted the impressions of mind that were leading me in that direction, and I really thought I would suffer death before I would submit, and the struggle of mind was so terrible, the agony so great, that I wished to die, and prayed to die, and my prayer was so nearly answered that I was brought to the very door of death by a serious accident that befel me right in the time of my greatest resistance and rebellion; and thus necessity was laid upon me to give up all to travel and preach or live under the dread of being thrown upon my family a helpless paralytic invalid which I felt and believed at the time was the correcting and convincing rod of the Almighty for my stubbornness and resistance.

I have been afraid ever to try to quit preaching on account of a keenly felt sense of a woe presented to me after the second attempt to preach, about thirteen years ago, that would fall upon my family if I did quit even for awhile, for the second time I tried to preach my mind was completely shut up so that I made a miserable failure, and I determined after a hard struggle of mind for a night and a part of a day never to attempt to preach again unless compelled to do so by a power that I could not overcome. Then the woe was presented to me as forcibly, and I was made to feel and believe it as surely and as strongly as if a voice from heaven had declared it to me audibly. I was made to believe and feel that it was the voice of God's spirit in my heart, and I so fully believed it that I have never from that day to this tried to quit. I have wanted to quit often enough, but the necessity from the presentation of that terrible woe is ever before me.

So it is in regard to traveling and preaching. I was driven to it by the presentation of a heavy woe also and I am kept at it in the same way. Now if this feeling of necessity that is upon me and in my heart is not of the Lord, my impressions to preach in the first instance to churches, and then in the second instance to give up churches, business and home to travel and preach in the South and West, the field presented to me with my impressions, is not of the Lord, and in that case I am after all nothing but a poor deluded wretch laboring under an overpowering delusion of mind that has caused me to throw away thirteen of the best years of my life. Can it be that my time, my business, and the comforts of home have all been sacrificed to a delusion of mind? When cast down and sorely troubled in the midnight darkness of doubts and fears about this very thing, I feel for the time being that it is a delusion, and then inexpressible torture of the soul follows. But sometimes I feel to believe and hope that the Lord has called me, and that it is he who has required me to give up all for him, and while it occurs to me that way I am contented and happy. All the leadings of my mind to preach at home or abroad have been and are still entirely contrary to nature, at least to my nature. So when I read the editorial alluded to above, I felt distressed, and felt too that if that part of it which has been suggested and caused me to write this article be scripturally true then I am surely wrong. If so then that will account for the endless distresses I see as described in hymn 382 of Lloyd's hymn book.

Instead of my life growing brighter and happier it seems and feels to me that it is growing darker every day, and I am made to think that my whole life is a failure and that my time has been so unprofitable to the church, to my family and myself. And now that I am alone in years, and almost helpless physically, though I look strong and hearty, the bare thought that I am deceived and have deceived the people of God in reference to myself as a child of God or as a preacher, gives me untold distress of mind and I cannot help it, though I have often tried. I would greatly prefer serving churches, even at my own expense, if I could than to be constantly traveling and preaching, but I know from experience in both that a man cannot do both and be of much service to churches as pastor. It is like trying to serve two masters, which Jesus said could not be done, a truth that I learned by sad experience. Churches need pastors who can be in regular attendance at their meetings. Affectionately,
J. H. PURIFOY.

BROTHER GOLD :— In justice to myself I ask you to give the following a place in the LANDMARK.

About the middle of April last Brother F. J Stone wrote me to make appointments for Elder D. N. Gore, from the Pig River Association on to the Mayo Association. I did so and wrote Elder Stone to that effect. But by some means the letter failed to reach him. So all the appointments were not filled, and much disappointment ensued thereby. Of course under the circumstances Elder Gore was not to blame. Early in May following Elder I. J. Taylor wrote me to make a long row of appointments for him. So I went to the expense of writing to quite a number of brethren and had his appointments made and arrangements made for his conveyance. Had some of them published in the LANDMARK. He then wrote me to write him at Haw River N. C. and tell him when and where his first appointment was. I complied, when lo and behold just before the time of his first appointment I received a note saying he felt impressed to do otherwise, and for me to call in the appointments. Much disappointment is bound to ensue. Now I do not like to make appointments for brethren unless they are going to fill them. People are talking about these things and it is hurting the Baptist cause. It is injuring me. People will pay no attention to appointments that I make if things go on in this way. I certainly am anxious to have the brethren come to see us. But I do want them to make up their minds before they write me to make appointments for them. I am poor and have no money to spend in publishing disappointments. Respectfully yours

EXHORTATION.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER :—We read in the book of Joshua that after the children of Israel passed over Jordan and took Jericho that they committed a trespass in the accursed thing which the Lord had forbidden them, and took and hid them, but the Lord knew where the guilty one was, and also where the accursed things were. Then the next time Israel went out to battle she was high-minded and valiant in her own estimation, wanted to take only a few, two or three thousand, as their enemy were few and small, and they could easily take the city, but the Lord knew where the accursed things were, and he knew Israel had transgressed his command, and that she should not prosper. So only about three thousand went to the battle, and they went in their own strength. The Lord did not command and tell them to go, and that he would deliver the city into their hands as he had before done, for he knew he would not because she had disobeyed his command, and what did they do? Why their hearts melted and they could not stand before the enemy, tho' they be few (as they had said,) but fled, and thirty and six were smitten. Just as it was then so it is to-day, for God is the same and changes not. If spiritual Israel, or any one of them does a wrong it matters not in what way, and keeps it hid, let the crime be ever so small, and the trespasser may be ever so successful in keeping it hid from the rest of Israel, the church, as Achan did from Joshua and the rest of the Israelites, God knows, and it will come forth in some way, for Israel, spiritually, cannot prosper until the accursed thing be removed.

It very often requires much mourning and sighing, and being clothed in sackcloth and ashes, humility before God by the whole church for it to be revealed to them as it did with Joshua and the priest, and they made to cry unto the Lord, wherefore have ye bro't us thus to be evil treated and spoken against by our enemies? Would to God we had been content to dwell in peace on the other side of Jordan. But you see God was in the matter and they had to cross, and now they had disobeyed and were in the enemies' land, and their only help was to ask God, as it is to all his children, who must cry unto him, for they cannot cry unto any one else; for they are hedged in by their enemy, and God has withdrawn his face from them for their disobedience ; and when they humble themselves and cry unto God in the right spirit then he hears them and reveals unto them who is it that transgressed against him and has the accursed thing hid, and though the church may look upon him as a very bright, forward, upright member and hate ever so much to deal with him, as probably Achan was, as he was of the tribe of Judah, he must be taken without the camp and stoned by all Israel (the church) lest some might say I did not say or agree to it ; and thus bring another curse upon it. Then Israel, the church, will prosper as did national Israel, then she can go to battle, but should go only in the whole strength of the church of God if she expects to gain the victory.

Now I think there are many ways she may take the accursed or wrong thing that God has forbidden, besides the way Achan took his. They can partake of them by disobeying him in leaving things undone which ought to be done, and are commanded. Obeying and doing part of a thing and leaving the other part undone, as our going to preaching and setting at ease and feasting upon the good things sent us from the Master's bountiful table through his poor humble servant who probably is very weary, and has not had an hour to sit down to refresh his tired limbs for a week having to labor hard for the support of himself and family, while we do not think for one time that the same one who spreads the bountiful table that we have so pleasantly been feasting from has commanded us not to muzzle the ox (the servant) that treads out the corn, but has commanded us, if we have received of his spiritual things, to minister unto him our carnal things, that he has so bountifully blest us with, but we withhold these carnal things. There are none of us so poor but that we could be made poorer ; so in communion in taking the bread and wine and leaving off washing the saints' feet, as if the last example set by our Lord and master was not as much binding and carried as much force with it as the first one, or any other one of his great examples did, but if we fail to feast upon the good food sent, see how quick we are to say such a one preached the poorest sermon to-day that I ever heard him, but are never ready to say why it was that I could not partake and feast to-day upon the good things sent. What have I done that I should be deprived of eating ? Surely the master has been good, and has sent his servant, and I know that he was not sent in vain. He brought food and good food, for others seemed to be partaking and feasting.

Surely something is wrong with me that I cannot feast, something within, and he begins to examine and enquire where is the wrong (the accursed thing hid) and probably he will examine every one of the members to see if he can find the wrong, but the cap doesn't fit anyone 'till he turns to self and commences to examine and finds it fits to every inquiry such as these. Have I ministered unto the poor ?—No. Have I ministered unto our pastor who has so faithfully served us ? No. Have I ministered unto the minister who attended and preached for us nearly every meeting ? No ; Have I ministered unto his servants who devote all their time to the service of the cause ? No. Do I attend my meetings on Saturday and week days ? No, I have to attend to some other man's business, or mine is so I cannot leave it. Do I attend on Sunday ? Not all the time. I am tired and don't feel like going every time. We might turn from the laity and cite some instances when the bishops fail to point out all of their duties to the flock, for probably they cannot all read, and if they could they cannot understand. We see Moses cited, and he commanded Joshua that he should read the whole law continually in the ears of all the Israelites. They were not to read a part and leave a part unread, but were to read it all. So God commands his servants to-day. Let others read and pervert it as they may, his servants are to read it all every time. Be faithful then when you go to battle and you will gain the victory ; for you will go in the name of the Lord, and none of Israel will be smitten, no not one, for they will go at the command of the Lord, and he has promised to deliver the city and what he has promised he will do.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN, GOLD AND LESTER,—As I hope that I have been impressed by the divine Spirit of God to write, as I hope, a part of my experience, I trust I may be led by the same Spirit.

I was brought up by Primitive Baptists, and I trust that they tried to bring me up with proper behavior, but I was in gross darkness until I was about 18 years of age. When my mother had fallen to the mother earth, from whence she came, I had a very strange dream. I thought I was standing in my father's yard, near the gate, when I saw my mother, as I thought at that time, which had been dead three years, ascending from the north-west, dressed in a long white robe, alight on the ground in 75 yards of me, and draw me up to her and said, follow me, and arose and went back in the same direction, and when I awoke I saw myself a great sinner, for the first time I saw all the bad things that I had done from a child up, and no good ones. I saw myself a vile mass of corruption from the sole of my feet even unto the head. I went with this load of guilt for about six months, which was a great burden upon my breast, and at times I would make vows to God that I would do better, and break them. Then I would feel worse, and I would go to the grog-shop, and to the ball-room to try to drive that load of guilt and misery away. I then would try to mend my condition by making promises and would brake them again, and I would go to the so-called mourners' bench, to be prayed for, and try to pray, and I could do nothing only say, Lord, have mercy on me a sinner.

There was a protracted meeting going on near me, about the year 1856, which was carried on by the Methodists, and I attended it one night, and after they had called mourners, and there were a great many that had gone up I also went, and after a bit some one professed, and it struck me that if I would get up and shout that I would get religion, as they call it. So I went and I heard some one say that Frank had got religion. Now brethren let me say right here, condemnation struck me heavier than before. I knew that I had not only tried to deceive man, but God also. Meeting soon dismissed and I went home thinking that I surely would die, and sink down to that horrible pit forever and ever.

So next morning came, and it was the darkest morning I ever saw. I took my gun and went to a little field I had planted in late corn to try to find some secluded place where no one would see me, for I didn't want any one to know my condition, for I really thought that every body was better than I was, yea the beasts of the field. I came to a large tree, and bowed my head between my knees, and said, Lord have mercy on me, a poor sinner. Now brethren, I will have to say to you that there is a time I know nothing of, for I do't know how long I was in that way, but when I came to a knowledge of the truth, I was lying flat on my back praising the Lord, and broke forth singing a new song that I had never sung before, with the Angels of God singing, that there is more joy in heaven over one that repents, than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance, and as I heard others singing those sweet sounds across a creek bottom the joyful sound filled my soul with love to God, and then the tempter came and said to me, that singing you heard was your brother, and some other boys going along down the road. But the tempter never has decoyed one away from that rock, but as the Psalmist David said my feet had well-nigh slipped, but thanks be to his Holy name, his strong arm is underneath to hold up the poor little child of God.

So brethren every thing was made new, the leaves on the trees appeared lovely, and the noon-day Sun shone forth with a brightness that I never had seen before. Every thing seemed to be praising the Lord. So I went along for a while rejoicing, and sometimes in doubts and fears that I never had been born again.

I passed on in this way until about 1868 when I had a second dream or vision. When this same mother came again in like manner, and alighted on the ground near by me, and said to me, when I come again I will call for you, and went back to the North-West, and in the year 1878, while I was lying on my bed, whether awake or asleep I know not, the Son of God said unto me, who has called you, and said, look in John 11th chapter and 14th verse. I arose and opened the New Testament, and it read thus, Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

Now brethren I went on in doubts and fears until the tempter had got me to thinking that there is a possibility of falling from grace. I had another vision or dream. I saw a man standing, and a serpent winding around his legs, until the man fell to the ground and the serpent tried to crawl upon the breast of the man. It would fall off, and I saw as I understood the Son of God alight on the ground, and took the serpent by the head in his left hand, and the tail in his right hand, and tied it in a knot over the left hand, and never let go of either end, and laid it across the man's breast, and the serpent appeared to be helpless, and the man got to his feet and gave God the praise.

That left an impression on me that I never have forgotten, and this came with such force that I have no fears of falling from grace, but the fear arises often in my mind, am I what I profess to be? I know there has been a great change with me, but is it of the Lord? If it is all right, for he does his work all right.

I remain your unworthy brother in gospel bonds. T. E. JOHNSON.

EVANGELISTS.

It is not my province to say what any brother shall do, nor where he shall go. Nor do I mean to object to preachers traveling. When led of the Spirit of God to travel and preach let them do so.

Elder Purifoy relates his exercises of mind on this matter as published in this issue of the LANDMARK. To God his servants give account, and not to man.

In my remarks which Elder Purifoy refers to concerning the work of an evangelist I intended to show that part of the business of a bishop or pastor is to do the work of an evangelist, as illustrated in the case of Timothy who was directed by Paul to abide still at Ephesus, as he had before sought him to do. For when Paul before that time went to Macedonia he besought Timothy to abide at Ephesus, and now by letter he again besought him to abide there still. While he was to tarry there with full instructions how he was to deport himself in the house of God, and what he was to teach and preach, he is told amongst other things to do the work of an evangelist. Then the work of an evangelist can be done while one is not traveling from place to place, but where ever he is living.

The instruction to Titus who was left in Crete was to set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain Elders in every city.

The precise duties of both Timothy and Titus are very interesting to consider. Neither one of them was an apostle. Neither one of them worked miracles at all, so far as we know. Neither one of them has left any left instructions such as the apostles left on record. The things they were to teach were told them by Paul. How they were to act and behave themselves were told them. The qualifications of both bishops or pastors are laid down, and they were told to commit the same things that were committed to them unto faithful men who should also teach others likewise.

Timothy it is said was the first pastor at Ephesus, and Titus at Crete. It is not probable that those churches waited a long time to call pastors. What these two men are instructed to do is so much like the duties of pastors of churches that if it was not as such they were to act, I scarcely know what is the office of a pastor. You could not call Timothy an evangelist in the modern sense of that word, for Timothy was still to tarry at Ephesus till Paul came, but traveling preachers in these modern times do not tarry at all in a certain place, but they are going from day to day.

Timothy was to give his utmost personal attention to the matters of the churches, and in all things do the work of an evangelist, and Titus was to set in order whatever was wanting in Crete. But one must abide in a church and with its members to know the condition of that church. This cannot be done by passing through it in one day, and going on to some other place.

There was much rebuking to be done, not scolding, much teaching, much watching, and he must be a pattern in all good works. The discipline of the church must also be enforced, and the destitute and needy must be cared for. In short all the work of a pastor showing himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, but rightly dividing the word of truth is to be done by Timothy. What more is required of a pastor?

All that we insist upon is that churches need pastors or bishops, and that they that desire this office, or are exercised to do this thing, desire a good work, and while a pastor of a church may of course now and then leave home, he cannot all the time be gone away traveling. If a brother cannot content himself serving churches, let him do as Elder Purifoy, resign the care of churches and travel altogether. But if he serves churches he cannot give much time to traveling to distant or other churches.

It does good no doubt for traveling preachers to visit churches. I am not objecting to this, but the elders, bishops or pastors that feed the flock of God which is among them must remain at home the far greater part of their time and serve these churches.

If you cannot serve a church that has called you to be her pastor, resign and get out of the way, and tell the church to get some one else who will serve them.

But he that is blessed with a mind or desire, a willingness, to serve churches desires a good work. To be a bishop or pastor in a true sense is doing a good work, and one that is much more laborious than it is to travel from place to place.

But certainly the office of an evangelist is a good one, and is named in the New Testament with apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers, See Eph. 4: 11.

In the Acts of the Apostles Philip, one of the seven, is called the Evangelist. We notice he preached, wrought miracles and baptized. He went to Samaria it seems before any other preacher went and preached there, then he was sent into the desert and preached to the Eunuch. He is mentioned afterwards as living at Cesarea, and the apostle Paul and others tarried with him many days, Acts, 21: 8—11. This is the only instance that I remember where one is expressly called an evangelist.

It is certainly not said that Philip ordained, and had the oversight of churches as Timothy and Titus were charged to do.

It still occurs to me that one who is a pastor has the work of an evangelist to do, which is to visit among the destitute in his reach and preach there. Also it appears to me that Philip the evangelist went in destitute places and preached chiefly there, and not so much among churches of believers already established.

Neither Timothy nor Titus is called an evangelist, but Timothy is told to make full proof of his ministry which of course includes the work of an evangelist, as that is part of the work of a full minister. For a pastor needs all the gifts, such as discipline, prayer, faith, teaching, rebuking, expounding, exhorting, and must keep his own body under, and rule well his own house, and be a lover of good men, and not given to the love of money, &c. P. D. G.

SONS OF GOD.

“Now are we the sons of God.”

There is to my mind a necessary division of the word of truth presented in this and other similar expressions of scripture, showing the difference between that which is eternally true with God in Christ Jesus, and the same thing as true with us in Christ.

According to the election of grace in Christ before the world began, we were, if we are now, as much the sons of God as chosen in Christ, as we will ever be; but as manifested sons of God we are not sons until the spirit of the Son of God is sent into our hearts crying Abba-Father. It cannot be consistently said of any of the sons of men that he is a son of God, until the love of God is bestowed upon him, being shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto him. Then, and not until then, can he be called a son of God. “Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God.” When Saul was holding the raiment of those who slew Stephen, no man could have said behold a son of God, neither had God said he is my son, but after he had been made a praying character, having received the spirit of the son of God, the Lord said he is a chosen vessel unto me, and when the old servant went to where Saul was he did not find the young lion of whom he had heard and of whom he was afraid, but he finds one of the most humble and dependent characters possible, manifestly a Son of God, a man chosen of God before the world was, but is now called of God to the obtaining of mercy and grace, and apostleship, and old Ananias calls him brother Saul.

No man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost, neither can one say that this man or that man is a son of God but by the same spirit that must be both in the one speaking and in the one spoken of.

It is not proper to speak of the sons of God, as we can only know them as eternal sons or children. The election having taken place in eternity it is evident that it is an eternal election: but the election being eternal does not authorise us to say that the subjects of this election are also eternal, as individual personal characters actually then and there existing. But it is proper to say that that whereby they are called and manifested as the sons of God and the subjects of election is eternal and is therefore as old as the everlasting Father. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." The only sense in which the sons of God could have an eternal personal existence is in that whereby they are here, in time, denominated the sons of God. Christ is their life and therefore they have an eternal life oneness or unity with him, and in this they are vitally or in life one with him, and in this sense they had what is sometimes termed sonship with and in him, and in this is, and from this proceeds the election of the sons and daughters of men to that sonship, and when this is revealed in them they are called the sons of God.

Apart from this they are not the sons of God. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. Again I will call them my people which were not my people, and her beloved which was not beloved." The Gentiles were not the people of God, but now they are called his people. Were not these Gentiles the same people that were called dogs and sinners?

Peter says of those whom he declares the elect of God according to his foreknowledge, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God, which had not obtained mercy, but have now obtained mercy. 1st Peter 2: 9—10. In the election, these that were not, in a certain-time, the people or sons of God were present in the sight of God as chosen in his son and as having life and grace given them in him, but in no other way.

That grace which was given them in Christ before the world began, and that life which God who cannot lie promised them, cannot be called the son or child of God complete in themselves apart from the man to whom they were given and promised, neither can the man be called a son or child of God apart from them; but when this grace and life have been revealed in the man, then a new creature is developed, having two natures, one divine, the other carnal, and these natures each has its life, the one eternal, or spiritual, the other carnal or natural; and these taken together constitute the characters to whom John was speaking, "Now are we the sons of God."

"Sons we are through God's election,
Who in Jesus Christ believe;
By eternal destination,
Sovereign grace we here receive."

If we were eternal sons we should have no need of election, for we would have been from all eternity equal to any other eternal being. That which is eternal is, relatively speaking, equal with eternity. God is the only being which in himself is eternal. His sons in their life existence were ever in him as Christ who is our life is hid in God. "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God, when Christ our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 3—4. Therefore John continues the text. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

In their Adamic nature and character they need to be changed and fashioned like-unto the glorious body of Christ. Then they will be like him. These sons of God were not elected because they were sons, but to make them sons. If they had been sons and as such elected, then their election was conditional, the condition being because they were sons; whereas the scripture teaches us that the sovereignty of God and the good pleasure of his will according to the fullness of his eternal being and God-head constitute the only grounds of their election. Their manifestation as the sons of God is upon the condition that they are already sons by election. Because ye are sons God hath sent forth the spirit of his son into your hearts crying Abba Father, and whereby we cry Abba-Father. Rom. 8: 15, Gal. 4: 6. They had their eternal spiritual entity, and identity in this spirit, when they themselves as the subjects of salvation, were yet in an imperfect state as God saw their substance, when as yet there were none of them. The spiritual existence and identity is again brought forth to our instruction and comfort when referring to the subjects of salvation, the sons of God, the heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, as "ministering spirits, sent to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." And again, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones: for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

We, as the sons of God, are of the spirit or of God, and we are led by the spirit and worship God in the spirit, and thro' the spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith.

Jesus declares himself to be the root and the off-spring of David. To be just what he was he must be neither one as apart from the other, but must be both to be Jesus; so likewise must the sons of God, the Joint heirs with Jesus, be of the two natures to be truly and properly the sons of God, to be thus demonstrated by him and comprehended as such by us. As having two representative heads and two natures therefrom, they can be contemplated in their respective standing in either, but they cannot be found and known as the sons or children of God and the heirs of salvation only as the two natures are found implanted in the same man and that man is always found to be one of the fallen race of Adam, a sinner saved by grace. Then, and not until then, and to him and only to him, can the terms old man, new man, outer man, inner man and hidden man of the heart be applied. He is now known as one of those sinners Christ came to save, and that must have been and is born again, and manifested a son of God by being led by the spirit and kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. P. G. L.

UNITING.

The different denominations are holding meetings in many sections to gether. A lady told me a few days ago that in the town of her residence the Missionary preacher, at 11 o'clock on that Sunday morning, would tell the people what doctrines the Missionaries held, and at night the Methodist preacher would tell what doctrine their people held, so that the converts might take choice which they would join.

I asked her if they did not preach their views all the week. She said no, for they were preaching the gospel all the week. According to her view they were not preaching the gospel when each one was stating what their people believed.

If they were truly preaching the gospel all the week should they not have continued it on Sunday?

Question. When one indeed preaches the gospel is he not at the same time preaching the very doctrine held by the church of Jesus Christ? Every gospel sermon sets forth the doctrine of Christ as held by the true church of Jesus our Lord.

When these ambitious denominations are united into one they will assume and exercise far more power than they can now. Mischief comes of false religion. How silly appears the plea for different denominations that each convert may have his choice. Free-agency sure enough.

Suppose when Paul preached at Corinth, that part of those that professed to believe what he said had joined the Pharisees, and a part joined the Sadducees, and part clave unto Paul, and believed with him, what would you think.

Suppose Paul had said, it does not matter which you join so you unite with one. It is strange to me that a preacher would as soon his people would believe something different from what he preaches as to believe what he preaches.

P. D. G.

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.

NO LORD LIKE OUR LORD.

Believers in Jesus have more cause to praise God than any or all others. There is no God like the God of Jeshurun. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth.

Sometimes Primitive Baptists talk like it is a great misfortune to be a christian, and may leave an impression on their children that the lot of a christian is a hard one, and it would be better for their children to go and join some other sect or institution of men. I do not think any one claiming to be a Primitive Baptist and talking or acting in that way deserves to be considered as being a true Primitive or Old School Baptist at all. Let such go off themselves and herd with some other denomination where they will not be in jail.

But the true church of Jesus Christ is no jail to any true christian, nor is his service a burden to any meek and humble child of God. The yoke of Jesus is easy and his burden is light. The Lord Jesus is above all gods, and his service is the purest of all service, and his name is above every name, and his people are the best people that ever lived.

Parents should so talk, walk and act before their children as to make them feel that they are not ashamed of Jesus, and that his service is good enough for them, their children, or any body else, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

P. D. G.

SIGN.

If all the world were believers in Jesus it would show that the word is wrong: for the bible does not teach that all the world will follow Jesus. If we could write so as to undeceive the deceived it would show that the bible is wrong; for it says that there shall be deceivers and deceived, and that there shall be false christ's that shall deceive many.

If in the last days there shall be no perilous times, then the bible is not true; for it says that in the last days perilous times shall come.

It matters not how plainly the truth is set forth, none but those taught of God understand these things; "for none of the wicked shall understand."

It is true that the family of God are redeemed out of every kindred, land, tongue, and nation under heaven, by the same blood or life, namely by the blood of Christ; and they are all brethren, and should love one another and they do love each other..

The true disciples of Christ have love one to another. There is no sweeter labor than the labor of love which is in Christ Jesus.

In the New Covenant God is merciful to our unrighteousness, and remembers our sins and iniquities no more forever. All sin is ended and blotted out in Jesus. In him there is no sin. There is not, never has been, nor ever will be a single sin, of any one of his people, that Jesus did not bear. The Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all, and he bore our sins in his own body. When Jesus died he made an end of sin, or put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and in him there is therefore no sin; and we are in him.

Hence he that believe in Jesus shall never die for where no sin is there's no death. Jesus swallowed up death, and abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

In the New Covenant the Lord God puts his laws into our minds, and writes them in our hearts. Now this is sure and wonderful work. If the Lord puts his laws into our minds surely this will stand. These laws put thus into the mind will controll the mind and character, and will guide the heart if written in the heart. This the Lord does himself in the New Covenant. He thus shows the superiority of the New Covenant over the law or old covenant of works.

There he quote his laws on tables of stone, and their stony hearts did not love nor recieve these spiritual laws, for their hearts were carnal.

But in the New Covenant the Lord makes all things new, or puts new wine in new bottles and both are preserved. He creates a new heart, and renews in his people a right spirit, or makes them new by putting a right spirit in them.

He is their Father and they are his children. They are taught of God to love oneanother. Hence this family of God do love each other, and rejoice in this love, for he that loveth is born of God, and he that dwells in love dwells in God, for God is love.

Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

Brother J. H. Pippen, a most useful member of the Kekuake Association, an excellent citizen, and an affectionate husband and father, was called away from earth on June 9th.

Also brother Eldridge Stewart, a lovely member of the Little River Association, was called away from this suffering world recently. He was truly a faithful, humble and worthy man. He was the first brother whose feet I ever washed in connection with the communion.

May the Lord bless the bereaved ones of both these families.

Obituary.

MRS. MINNIE E. KEEL.

"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

How important it is that we should ever keep this injunction before us, with our lamps trimmed and burning brightly, knowing that death will surely visit us all, at a time we know not.

In perfect health, high spirits and when life was so sweet, the future so bright, suddenly the summons to bid adieu to this life came to my dear niece—Minnie E. Keel, and her gentle spirit was borne from our hearts and home, to that 'bourne from whence no traveler returns,' and where God's care-worn children find a safe retreat and a peaceful rest. She was the oldest daughter of William R. and J. Ella Cobb, both deceased, and was just in her 19th, year Jan. 12th, 1887, she was married to W. G. Keel, but only a few fleeting months was she permitted to gladden the heart of her devoted young husband whom she loved almost to idolatry, by her loveliness, her faithfulness and her many winning ways.

The evening previous to her death she was suddenly taken with violent convulsions from which she never recovered consciousness. Though it was evident that her body was suffering the most excruciating pain, that could not be relieved by kind loving hands, nor the best of medical skill, she was to bear it 'till the gate was opened for her to pass through to the great hereafter. I was sent for, but when I entered her home found that death had done its work and Minnie was no more to greet me with her bright cheerful smiles. What a sad, yet sweet picture as I beheld the young mother with her babe on her bosom lying in their narrow bed, as if in peaceful slumbers! How sad to give up one so young, and how heart-rending to her husband to have the prospect of his happy life so soon blighted. We must admit God's justice, wisdom and love, even in our sorest trials, for he will not impose any cross that his grace is not sufficient for, nor give us one bitter cup more than we deserve.

Minnie possessed such a happy disposition, was always bright and cheerful, and by her sweet temper made friends wherever she went, endearing herself to all her associates by the strongest ties of friendship. But the golden chain that linked her so strongly to loved ones is severed, and while we have no dying testimony of hers to brighten our hopes, yet we find comfort in knowing that the Lord receives every vessel of his mercy and gives every heir of promise an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. We hope she was embraced in the everlasting covenant of love, if so all is well with her.

She leaves two sisters, many dear relatives, and a large circle of friends who sadly miss her; but O, the sting rests more upon her husband who feels his loss irreparable, and his comfort as forever gone. May the Lord sustain him in his day of bereavement and lead him by ways he has not known to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, and may he who alone has power to heal the wounded heart, comfort all the bereaved and save us at last for Christ's sake,

JONATHAN WILLIAMS.

Jonathan Williams was born Jan. 11th 1796, and died July 5th 1845, making his stay on earth 49 yrs., 5 months, and 24 days. He was received by experience and baptism into the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church at Pine, in Davidson Co., N. C., August 1835, and lived a consistent member of the same untill his death. He served the church as deacon nearly all the time he remained after he joined the church.

He married Susan Young on the 10th of Feb. 1825, who joined the same time. His wife Susan Williams is still alive, her age is 83 years, 8 months and 10 days. They had born unto them 12 children, 11 of which are living. The youngest was quite small when her husband died.

She worked hard and raised her children honorable. Susan Williams has 75 grandchildren, 64 of which are living, and 85 great grandchildren, 75 of which are living.

Mrs. Williams is very fleshy and nearly helpless but she remains strong in the faith once delivered.

ELNATHAN DAVIS.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, :—Please publish the death of my father Elnathan Davis. He was born July 1st 1810, and died March 1st 1888, making his stay on earth 77 years, and 8 months.

He has been paralyzed for thirty years, and has not been able to walk a step for that length of time. He has been a consistent member of the Primitive Baptist Church for thirty years. He was the son of Elder William Davis, of Henry Co, Va. His membership was at Sugar Tree, Pittsylvania Co., Va. where he first joined and has never moved his membership. While he was on his death bed he requested me to write his experience and have it published in the LANDMARK.

The following is what I often heard him say, My spirit seems to leave my body, and went into the air like a mote until I came to a house and went in, and there was a parcel of old gray headed men singing. I saw the Savior standing before me with a pen sticking behind his ear. He told me to sing and I tried to sing but could not. Then the Savior went to a large book, that was open and wrote my name therein, and then turned to me and said, now you can sing, and I joined them in singing, and I could sing so easy and it was the prettiest singing I ever heard. He said to me go in and out and find pasture. I seemed to stay all night in this place, and in the morning my soul seemed to return to my body. The Sun appeared to rise the most beautiful I ever saw it, and everythiny looked the most lovely.

I hope you will publish it. Yours in hope.

SAMUEL DAVIS.

Byrdville, Pittsylvania Co., Va.

P. S. It was my fathers request that the brethren should know how well he loved them.

NOTE.

About two hundred and fifty dollars have now been kindly contributed by our brethren, sisters and friends, to aid me in paying the debt of $2,000 incurred by the preparation and publication of the Church History. These donations are from a people who are stigmatized by their enemies as the most selfish and uncharitable in the world.

I expect, with the permission of Providence, to start on Tuesday, July 3rd, for Milledgeville, Ga., and to try to fill appointments from the 6th to the 31st of July in Georgia and Alabama, visiting several of the churches attended by Elders A. W. Patterson, J. R. Respass,

J. G. Eubanks and William Mitchell. Having never before undertaken an extended preaching tour, I feel the especial need, both physically and spiritually, of Divine support. The strength of the God of Israel is made perfect in our weakness.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS

Poetry.

SORROWFUL AND JOYFUL.

Long I've been in dark distress,
While traveling through this wilderness,
And dangers thick surround my path,
While all things seem gloomy as death.

On in this dark and gloomy road
I wandered far from heaven and God,
Downward in the broad way,
Where night meets night without a glimpse of day.

Far, far in this wilderness alone.
This broad way leads but to gloom,
Where anguish and sighing alone,
Mixed with horror brings a solemn moan.

For I ventured beyond all hope of bliss,
On the verge of a most awful abyss,
Even farther than I can describe or reach,
Without one glimpse of light or happiness.

While here I was made to turn and look,
And by some sound I scarce could hear,
Seemed to fall upon my ear,
And say, return, a Savior is here.

O wonderful that a Savior for sinful me,
I so blind, so far away, I could not see ;
Yet the voice again I heard,
While I in silence stood and uttered not a word.

And yet sometimes still followed up by sound,
Seemed to go with me far and near,
While all looked gloomy around,
Yet something joyful I could hear.

I still lingering round this dark abyss,
Hope began to dawn and thoughts of future
bliss.

I began to weep and wanted to return,
But feared the Savior would me spurn.

And here in doubts and fears I stood,
For I was sure I had sinned against God,
Here I sighed and made many a moan,
Not knowing how I should return.

Thus between doubts and fears,
I stumbled on for many years :
But at last I was made to look with faith to see,
Who it was first spoke to me.

But alas, how faithless I did find,
Tossed to and fro as with the wind,
Still no peace could I find,
For my sinful troubled mind.

And oft I heard with weeping eyes,
Shun death and look at Christ alone,
Who did for thy sins atone ;
To him tell thy wants and make thy moans .

What ! Will Christ now make me shun,
That awful death which seemed begun ;
Then this sound again I heard,
Return to me, believe my word.

Faint and weak, and filled with dismay,
I stepped forward clogged with mire and clay,
Strove hard myself to justify ;
This I could not do, so set me down to cry.

While yet so near the gulf of woe,
And could not see what I should do,
Here so faint, weak and sore,
I was made a Savior's aid to implore.

When soon there came a light,
That shines beautiful and bright ;
It seemed to lead to a golden gate,
To a land of most blessed estate.

To this land of rest I wanted to go,
But still unfit with this clog of sin and woe.
I sighed and groaned night and day,
And wished to get in the straight and narrow way.

While here I thought in God's book of truth
I had seen and read, while in youth,
Take my yoke upon you, my burden's light,
Christ will take away all thy gloomy night.

Here some comfort I did gain,
But how sinful I still remain.
I still this light and path can see,
But so often think it is not for me.

So lost and ruined by the fall,
Often think my faith and hope too small :
Then again by faith I am made bold,
I could not give my fith for a world of gold.

How precious Jesus then does appear,
To them who by faith he draws near,
Them who his word are made to believe,
He never, never will deceive.

May I with all the ransomed be led on high,
Where we will know no sin and never die;
And those in that land of bliss,
Enjoy eternal happiness

COMMUNICATED.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

BROTHER GOLD:—Resuming the unfinished essay on the "Manhood and Divinity of Christ," it does not appear to me that the saying of the Apostle, "Though we have known Christ after the flesh yet now henceforth we know Him so no more," is to be understood as discouraging our thinking of Him as He was in the days of His Tabernacled among men in the form of a servant; for that view of Him is ever present in the Christian consciousness. We sing of Him as the crucified and also as the now forever glorified Redeemer; and rejoice since His sufferings He has "entered into His glory." It is wonderful that He who made man should become man that He might restore (to man) that which He took not away." I know nothing so dear to Old Baptist preachers as "The Word was made flesh," and so as I said, as human as His mother, "without sin."

That He is as Divine as His Father is an easy thought, for any son is equal to his father as to nature. The son of man is a man; the Son of God is Divine, of the same substance, essence, and nature with God, but we must be careful to note the distinction between "The Only Begotten Son of God," and the sons of God by adoption. When the Son of God taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father," he confessed that they too are sons of God, and so His brethren; but only by adoption through grace by being "born of the spirit." But He is God's Son by nature and as "The Only Begotten" without any brother or sister. He is therefore God: not His own Father: perish the thought! but one with the Father. "I and my Father are (not am) One.

In "the Spiritual Gospel," as John's has been aptly styled, it is said, "In the Beginning the Word was, and was with God and was God." Push back that "beginning" how far soever in our thoughts, there the Lord "was". And this word "was" implies that He was before any beginning; or as Paul has it, "He is before all things." In a word the Apostle teaches that whatever is or ever was that was made in heaven or earth, was made by Him, and that by Him all things consist and are controlled. This is familiar to the whole church and in this article I shall content myself by giving an illustration of the Sonship of Christ in the difference and oneness of sunshine and sun. The sunshine proceeds and comes forth from the Sun. The sunshine is born of the Sun. No Sun, no sunshine; no sunshine, no Sun visible or known to us. If we may personify each we may say, no one knows the sunshine but the Sun; neither knoweth any one the Sun but the sunshine and he to whomsoever the sunshine will reveal him. For the sunshine manifests the Sun; it is the Sun in manifestation. The Sun so loves this planet that he sends forth his offspring (Sun) to enlighten and make it fruitful and beautiful; nor does the Sun do any thing for this earth but by means of the sunshine. In the sunshine is life; the life of vegetables, animals, man.

If we ask what is the sunshine? what its nature? what its origin? the answer is plain and easy; In the beginning was the sunshine, and the sunshine was with the sun, and the sunshine was the Sun." It is absolutely impossible to think of a time when the sun was without the sunshine, or the sunshine without the sun. It was in the very beginning with the sun. The sunshine has all the properties of the sun, light, heat, &c. &c. So that it has the same nature as the sun. He that is in the sunshine is in the sun, in common parlance, as any mother has said over and over again, come in out of the sun, hang the clothes out in the sun. Seest thou how we think of the sun and sunshine as one? For whatever the one does on the earth the other does the same. Thus by a figure from one of His creatures my soul tries to grasp the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh. As the sunshine is as old as the sun, so we cannot separate in idea the Son from the Father in such sort as to think of a time when the Father was, and the Son was not. And this led the schoolmen of old time to talk of the "eternal generation of the Son" which has given so much offence to many who refuse to see in such expressions the feeble efforts of earnest souls to formulate in words an idea too big for any created mind.

A whale may as well attempt to swallow up the sea he swims in, as man to comprehend the Divine nature. But as it has pleased God to speak of Himself to us in terms of human relations and in terms which we use in speaking of the things He hath made, methinks it is well pleasing to Him that we study to know Him by searching out the significance of the symbols and analogies given us.

God is Spirit: the Only Begotten Son of God is Spirit; Spirit is uncreated, self-subsistent and eternal. Spirit is everywhere present forever. Hence in Him we live and move and have our being. Spirit is the life of whatever lives. And there is one Spirit, and yet many spirits.

Of the pre-existence of Christ Paul speaks in many places. But Jesus was also careful to make the same fact known to His disciples and to the Jews as they were able to bear it. To the latter he saith, "Before Abraham was I am, and unless ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins," thus naming Himself by the very name which God proclaimed to Moses and would have Moses to carry to the children of Israel. "Go say to Israel I am hath sent me unto you."

I could wish our pulpits and magazines would dwell more elaborately on the essential divine nature of our Lord that we might have clearer and more refreshing views of the greatness of our Redeemer "in whom it pleased God that all the fullness should dwell," and how we are complete in Him, which we could not be if He were not God. Only be careful to rightly divide the word of truth; for Jesus often spake as a man; often as the Only Begotten. We must discern in his words the natures so mingled as to make one whole Christ; and yet the one subject to temptation, sorrow, tears, weariness, and death; the other deathless, eternal and divine.

And yet after all that has been written and preached these 18 centuries, we worship the Father through the Son by the Holy Spirit. And until "that which is perfect is come," must be content that we have attained even to that great height.

W. S. SPEER.

CAUTION

BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—Feeling a desire to write something appertaining to the doctrine of Christ, our Savior I take my pen in hand, yet this is a task. It seems to me any one else can say and write more to the point than I can, but it do'n't relieve my mind. With your permission I will try to relieve my mind. The subject that is bearing on my mind is one of great importance, Paul to Timothy. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine. Continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt save thyself and them that hear thee. It seems to me if there ever was a time that the doctrine, that this eminent apostle had reference to, was set at naught this is the time. We see that the latter times have come, that those who profess to be disciples of Jesus have left the faith that once was delivered to the saints, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. But these are crept in unaware, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation.

We find by reading the word of God that all scripture was given by inspiration of God. If it was not that men of old spoke as they were moved by the Spirit, we would be at a loss to see how some are so ready to speak against the doctrine of God, our Savior. There is nothing in the sacred word any plain-er taught, than the doctrine of the predestination of God for Jehovah has declared saying my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. There is nothing new nor old to Him. He knew his people, the church, would sin, therefore his redemption price was fixed, and when the innocent child was born in the world there came wise men from the East. They had seen his star, and they wanted to worship their Savior. It had been predestinated or foretold, as you may have it, that He would be rejected of men. So here was King Herod to commence the work that had been predicted should be done. Joseph fled into Egypt, by the doctrine of the foreknowledge or predestination of God, which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying out of Egypt have I called my Son, and if we will trace this blessed doctrine of predestination that which Jeremiah prophesied came to pass in Rama. There was a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning. So this glorious doctrine of predestination stands firm, as the throne of God. He shall be called a Nazarene. I claim that the servants of the most high are to take heed to this doctrine of predestination, as well as any other point of doctrine that is set forth in holy writ: for if an Elder that has a great influence takes up some erroneous ideas of his own, there is no doubt but he will lead some of God's lambs astray. We should stand firm upon the doctrine of the bible, and have a thus saith the Lord.

There are only two points of doctrine in the world that divide the religious world. These points are salvation by grace. This is the Bible doctrine; and the other is salvation by works. The bible doctrine is eternal election of a definite number of the human family to grace and glory, without any worth or merit on the part of the creature. There are only a few, comparatively speaking, who are holding to this doctrine, while on the other side of the question nine-tenths of the religionists of to-day are holding to the works system, that Christ tasted death for all alike; and in doing this men and women are free agents to choose or to reject, that God wills the salvation of all and that He has done all He can for the redemption of mankind.

Now the true servant of God is to give attendance to reading, so he may set forth the true doctrine. Suppose we examine something on this subject, as we feel it to be an important one. Now if Christ by his death did more than he can do by his resurrection, where does his power stand? It is set at naught by man being the more powerful. All arminians claim salvation on conditions of the creature, that the Spirit is wooing and beseeching all sinners to repent and be saved.

We are to take heed to the doctrine. Such doctrine as arminians are teaching places the power all in man's hands. The doctrine of the bible is, She shall have a son and his name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people.

This was spoken before our Savior was crucified. Yet arminians will teach a conditional doctrine. Jesus says, he came down from heaven not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, and this is the will of my Father, that of all which he giveth me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. This is the doctrine of God our Savior, if we give heed to it we save ourselves and them that hear us, from going astray after this arminian doctrine, which originated from satan, for he taught that God doth know that in the day our mother Eve ate of the fruit she would not die. Jesus taught that no man can come to him, except the Father draw him. Arminians say they all can come. They say all may know him. Our Savior says, no man knoweth the Son, but the Father, and no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the son will reveal him. If our eternal salvation depends on conditions of our own, the doctrine Paul taught was not true, for he says we are not saved by works that we have done, but of his own mercy hath he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of works, for if by works it is no more of grace, other-wise work is no more work. But if it be of grace then it is no more work, otherwise grace is no more grace.

What do Arminians say about the choice of God? They say he loves all alike. The good old book, the Bible, says, the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth. Arminians say, unjust God, if he shou'd love one better than another. The true servants that are giving heed to the true doctrine say, what shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. Arminians say, that all are invited to come. Can they show where the Savior made a failure in any thing he attempted while here on earth? If they can, I for one will admit it is possible that some he died for will be lost. I have never heard a christian while on his knees, claim that he was saved on account of any thing he had done, but he will acknowledge God as a sovereign, and will claim while on his knees that it is mercy shown to him, that he is allowed to live, and if God had dealt with him as justice demands, he would long ago have been cut off.

I firmly believe that there are many children of our heavenly Father who are like the Galatians, who have been led astray by false teachers, and some that have had a dispensation of the gospel committed unto them, and those that fail to take heed to the doctrine, are after some earthly motive. Some are for filthy lucre. How about any that feel, woe be unto them if they do not preach the gospel?

Thanks be to our God, we are not depending on silver and gold to save his people, for the price has been paid, for we are not our own, we are bought with a price, therefore we are to glorify God in our spirits which are his. If we give heed to the doctrine of God our Savior, we will be saved from the cunning craftiness of men, and those that hear, those that take heed, will be saved from doctrines and commandments of men, and will be able to say with Paul when they come to lay their armor by, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith. Then they will be found in God, not having their own righteousness which is of the law, but the righteousness of God our Savior who is all and in all. Amen.

B. F. WILKINSON.

REASON OF HOPE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, AND BRETHERN AND SISTERS, :—My Father and mother, and also other friends that do not live near us, desires me to write a reason of my hope of having passed from death unto life.

My father and mother are both Primitive Baptists. I was born August 20th 1871. When I was about eight years old, I felt unwell, I went and lay down on the bed, and went to sleep in the day time, and saw a man riding up and down on some boards at the chimney, and behind a little tree that stood near the house was the devil or serpent, and as the man rode up and down on the boards, the old enemy would move towards me. He soon came to the bed with his black cold looking hands, and was in the motion of taking hold of me when I jumped up in my sleep, and ran to the kitchen, and mother awoke me. I told her the cause of my alarm. When I was going in my ninth year, I dreamed that the enemy came to the bed talking to me and said, why are you not following your father and mother. I said I can't. He said they were going to heaven. He said which one of your brothers had you rather I would have? I told him. He said I must have you too, at the same time reaching towards me. I jumped out of the bed in my sleep, and when I awoke father was holding me and talking to me. I began to see that I was causing my father and mother some trouble, and was in much trouble myself, for I was sometimes afraid to go to sleep. I dreamed again.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

There came a man to me and asked me if I did not want him to pray for me? I said, yes sir. He knelt down and prayed. While he was praying the serpent came in the form of a butterfly and he changed to a hawk and went away. After this I was often trying to pray. I found that I was burdened. I wanted this burden of fear to leave me. I would sometimes scream out and father and mother would come to the bed and talk to me. I loved to hear preaching. When Elder Isaac Jones came to Union and preached, I could not have borne it had I not cried all the while, or nearly all the time that he was preaching.

I must have been altogether born in sins, and therefore must be born again. Some times I would dream of going to meeting. I dreamed that there was to be preaching at Brother Jas. P. Crech's, and started and met a man, and he told me that I need not go any further. If you go there you will be killed. I thought I fainted and came to, had got as near as to the garden, and was praying, when S. H. Braddy came up and said, you are gone up. Sometimes in my troubles I would walk about in the garden, and look at the little plants and herbs, and would think that the Lord watered them, and made them grow. They all grew seemingly together. While I felt so forsaken of my playmates, I would sometimes feel to be friendless and helpless before God. I dreamed again a short time before I was delivered that I was walking in the garden, and I was surrounded by fire, and had no way to escape. I thought on the other side of the ditch was a little company of people with their hands open holding them above their heads, and as the fire drew near I put my hands on my face and fell down. The fire burned over me, and I was not hurt, then I came in the house and father and mother were crying. I asked them what was the matter? They said the judgment is coming. I then sang,

"A few more days on earth to spend,
And all my toils and cares shall end,
And I shall see my God and friend,
And praise his name on high," &c.

I dreamed again that the serpent came to me again, and that I struck him with a little stick like a chair-round, and he went away bleeding.

In this dream I saw a ladder that stood straight up, and I ascended on the ladder a certain distance, and all the rounds below me broke, and I did not know how to come down, when a man I thought was the Lord fastened a whip to the ladder, and told me to come down by it, I did so, then He asked me to go home with him, I said I wanted to go and get mother; He said, your mother is gone on. I went with him until we came to a large bank of something like snow, when a place opened and we went in. It proved to be a beautiful house, and I saw the angels, and they were walking round a table, singing,

"Children of the Heavenly King,
As ye journey sweetly sing," &c.

The Lord asked me to tell him some of the dreams that I had been dreaming. I told him I could not. He said you can. I told him two of them. He said it is enough, so being wearied I thought I went to sleep, and had gotten to a place where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest: and when I awoke behold they were dreams, but my burden was gone, and I can sleep on now and take my rest, hoping that Jesus died for my sins and rose for my justification. I feel that I love Jesus and His people.

My father takes the LANDMARK, and I love to read it and hear my father read it, because it advocates the wonderful works of the Lord. With an impression to do so I offered myself to the conference, at Union Church, on Saturday before the second Sunday in February 1888, and was received and baptized Sunday morning, by S. H. Braddy, and I feel blessed.

Pray for me brethren and sisters that I may be faithful unto death, and that we may receive our crown which the righteous Judge shall give us. I have not written all, but I will stop for fear of being weary. Your little sister I hope in Christ.

EXPERIENCE.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I feel some impression to write what I believe the good Lord has done for me. I was convicted on account of sin in the year 1856. Here I was made to try to pray, and the more I tried the worse I felt. I went on in this condition for some time and at length dreamed that I was between two mountains and they were closing together. Just before they closed up a dove snatched me out, this did not relieve me of that burden though that I was laboring under on account of sin. I went on in this condition until 1862, sometime in September; at which time I was in the army near Orange Court House, Va., I cannot express my condition at that time. My troubles were so great here it appeared to me that I could not stand it longer.

It appeared to me that I was sinking down beneath God's righteous power. Here it appears that there was no chance for me. I thought that God had withdrawn from me and left me a wretched undone sinner forever. O friends I cannot relate my doleful condition at that time. I was marching along with the command. It appeared every step I made would be the last one, to me it was getting dark; everything looked doleful and gloomy. I was made to give up all things for loss. This was a trying hour for a poor sinner as I viewed myself to be and was made to give up everything in the world, house, land, wife and children; that was my poor condition at that time.

I was still marching with the command when the good Lord made the sun shine with all its glittering rays upon poor unworthy me. This was the brightest day I ever witnessed; everything appeared the most loving to me. I was made to rejoice and praise my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. No tongue can express the sweet comforts I then enjoyed. Dear Brethren, I do not feel that burden of guilt any more, although it appears to me that I lacked understanding to honor my dear Savior as I ought for the great favor I then viewed he had shown me. At that time it appeared I had not an enemy in the world. How precious did the Lord appear, all I could say was, "Blessed be the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ for evermore. "It was grace that taught my heart to fear, and grace my fears relieved." And grace still leads me on to God. I could then say farewell vain world, I am going home. I could give God the glory for ever. He put a new song in my mouth, even the praises of God and the Lamb. Since that time I have had doubts and fears, for when I would do good evil is present. "The good I would do I do not, and the evil I would not do that I do.

I returned home from the army in the fall of 1865, found my wife and children all alive after an absence of about 3 years. After I had been with my family a short time I felt impressions to join a christian church, my wife holding to the Methodist persuasion, I concluded to join them and tried to become reconciled to that conclusion, but the more I tried the further away my mind seemed to get. I went on in this condition for several years, my children during this time began to grow up, and as they grew up joined the Missionaries, so I concluded I would join the Missionary Baptists, as there was a church of that persuasion near where we lived. I went and heard them preach but could not receive their doctrine, as it did not agree with what I believed I had experienced, for I was compelled to believe in an all-wise God, having all power in heaven and upon earth, and who worketh all things according to his will, and none can hinder to will and to do his pleasure at his own appointed time. I went on in this condition for several years. I still had impressions to join some church. I prayed the Lord to show me the true church of Christ in a dream. After a considerable length of time I commenced going more attentively to hear the Primitive Baptists preach, as there was a church not very far from where I lived; it was not long before I commenced loving the Old School Baptist members, and the doctrine their preachers preached appeared to suit what I felt I had experienced. If not deceived I soon began to have strong impressions to lay my case before them. It seemed as if I could not stay away from their meetings for the more I went the more I wanted to go. At length on church days when they would open the doors for the reception of members, I could not stay away, though my heart would fail me and I would go away grieved. My love grew stronger and stronger so much so that I could not rest day or night. The tempter would tell me you have nothing to tell them that they will receive, they will reject you, etc. At length I made up my mind that I would go to one of their meetings to be held at Pine Church on Monday the 14th of November past, and I went. The door of the church was opened for the reception of members as usual, at which time there were three persons received. My heart failed me as usual. They appointed to meet at Sowers Ferry, on Yadkin River the next morning it being Tuesday, the 15th of Nov. I could stand it no longer, so next morning I procured a change of clothing and went to the river. Elder J. A. Burch with a good number of the church met together there. They organized by singing and prayer by Elder Burch, then opened the door for the reception of members. I went up and told them what I hoped the Lord had done for my soul. They received me and I was baptized with the others. O what joy I then felt for I was quite relieved and could rejoice with the brethren. I then felt that I had neglected my duty for more than twenty years for which I must confess I received many stripes. Your unworthy brother,

DAVID A. SNIDER.

MEDITATIONS.

(Concluded)

At the close of our last meditations we witnessed the earthly coronation of Jesus as King. They now lead us up to, and amidst the last struggling scenes and sufferings of his mortal existence. After Jesus had eaten the passover with his disciples and pointed out the one who was to betray him; after he had instituted, for the first time the Lord's supper and presented and administered to them the sacred emblems of his shed blood and broken body, saying, "Verily I say unto I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God," and after having washed the feet of his disciples and admonished them to follow his example and do to each other as he had done to them, he arose and departed. It is night, the night before his crucifixion! We are in Gethsemane. Oh dreadful hour. This is his baptism and the agony of his soul is beyond human imagination. He is now bearing the sins of many in his own body. Heaven and earth are veiled in solemn gloom. He said to his disciples sit ye here, while I shall pray. His agony was intense. To Peter, James and John who had accompanied him, he said in deep and heart-rending pathos, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death," and going forward a few paces he fell on the ground and prayed that if it were possible, the hour might pass from him saying, "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless not what I will but what thou wilt. And there appeared an angel unto him strengthening him." On his return he found these disciples asleep and saith unto Peter, Simon sleepest thou? Could you not watch with me one hour? Why sleep ye, rise and pray lest ye enter into temptation." And still being in agony "he prayed more earnestly and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground." He was without guile himself and voluntarily left the glory which he had with the Father, to be clothed in mortal flesh, to bear privations, buffetings, and at last though just himself to suffer for the unjust. Though without sin yet he was numbered among the transgressors. In that sublime prayer, which for surpassing beauty and touching pathos, never before or since fell from mortal lips, he thus implores, "And now oh Father, glorify me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." To his troubled disciples he had just said, "Behold the hour cometh, yea is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own and shall leave me alone : and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer ; I have overcome the world." After speaking these words he lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, Father the hour is come; glorify thy Son that thy Son may glorify thee, as thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. I pray for them ; I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me ; for they are thine, And all mine are thine and thine are mine, and I am glorified in them. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name ; those that thou gavest me I have kept and none of them is lost but the son of perdition, that the scriptures might be fulfilled." At the close of this wonderful and sorrowful prayer, Jesus the friend of sinners again entered the garden when Judas, who had received a band of men and officers from the Chief Priests and Pharisees, approached him with the kiss of betrayal. On their approach Jesus demanded : "Whom seek ye?" And they said 'Jesus of Nazareth.' Jesus answered, 'I have told you that I am he. If therefore ye seek me, let these go their way, that the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, of them which thou gavest me I have lost none.' Then they led him before the High Priest. Peter had declared when Jesus had told the disciples that all would forsake him, that though all men should forsake him yet he would not. Jesus had reminded him that before the cock crew he should deny him thrice, and when the damsel accused him of being a follower of Jesus, he swore he knew not the man, this being his third denial, the cock immediately crew. Here is another sad and most striking, though only one among the thousand, illustration on what a slender thread hangs all human strength when dependent alone upon the frail arm of flesh. When Jesus withdrew his spirit from Peter he very soon succumbed to fear and the impulse of self-preservation, and thus as too many sadly and too often deny by their conduct, if not in word, the Lord of glory, so Peter declared he knew not the man. Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas the High Priest unto the hall of judgment and it was early. Pilate, though a Roman and the worshipper of the Dragon, could find no fault in him, and told the Jews to judge him by their own law. They answered him and said "If he were not a malefactor we would not have delivered him up unto thee." Pilate again asks Jesus, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" Jesus answered, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me? Pilate's reply was, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me; What hast thou done? To this Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews, but now is my kingdom not from hence." Over and over again Pilate appeared before the Jews declaring he found no fault in the man. At last he appeared before them with Jesus and said, "Behold your King!" "But they cried out, away with him : crucify him." "Then he delivered him, therefore to be crucified." Bearing the cross and the sins of his people, and wearing a crown of thorns he wearily ascended Golgotha's rugged side, and Pilate wrote a title and put it on the cross, and the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS. Between two malefactors Jesus as King hung on Calvary's Cross.

It is morning. The sun rises on a solemn scene. All nature is draped in the habiliments of gloom and sorrow.

Angels veil their faces before the impending crisis. Pilate has scourged Jesus and delivered him to the relentless mob (who are thirsting for his precious blood,) to be crucified. The soldiers stripped him and put on him a scarlet robe, they put a crown of thorns upon his sacred head and placed a reed in his hand and then bowed the knee before him, and mocked him saying, "Hail the King of the Jews." They also spit upon him and took the reed and smote him on the head. But as a lamb before its shearers he opened not his mouth. It is the third hour and he is now nailed to the rugged tree, and they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads and saying, "Ah, thou that destroyedst the temple and buildest it in three days, save thyself and come down from the cross." The Chief Priests also said, "He saved others, himself he cannot save. Let Christ, the King of Israel, descend now from the cross that we may see and believe." And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

It is the sixth hour, and there is darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. "Jesus the friend of sinners dies! Lo, Salem's daughters weep around. While on the cross Jesus offered a prayer for those who were exulting over him and taunting him, as follows: "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." What soul-searching emotions must have overwhelmed his devoted followers as they stood afar off and beheld the loved form of their blessed Lord and Master hanging suspended between earth and heaven! All their fondest hopes and anticipations are now crumbling at their feet as dead ashes. The devoted women were there also who followed him when he was in Galilee and ministered unto him. And now the awful moment approaches apace! It is the ninth hour, and with a loud voice Jesus cried, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? Which is being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And the sun was darkened and the vail of the temple was rent in twain, and when Jesus had cried again with a loud voice he said, Father into thy hands I commend my spirit; and having said this he gave up the ghost. On witnessing this momentous and awe-inspiring scene the centurion glorified God saying, "certainly this was a righteous man." At this moment the earth quaked and the rocks were rent, and the graves were opened and many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of their graves and appeared unto many.

And now Jesus, the friend of sinners is laid in Joseph's new tomb. His crucifiers part his raiment and for his vesture they draw lots. But now another scene opens to the view more grand and awfully sublime, if possible, than those of the crucifixion; a scene of surpassing glory and beauty; a scene of triumph over death and the grave. The powers of darkness are scattered in shame and confusion. The Lord of glory is risen indeed.

In the end of the Sabbath (which corresponds to our Saturday) came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary and Salome, to see the sepulchre, bringing sweet spices to anoint the body of their precious Lord. And woman-like, 'they said among themselves who will roll us away the stone.' Oh, who can fathom the depths of woman's faith and love! But with what emotions of astonishment and fear thrilled their devoted hearts as they beheld the great stone at the door of his tomb rolled away. It was Mary Magdalene, out of whom Jesus had cast seven devils, who stood weeping without the sepulchre, and stepping down looked into the sepulchre and beheld two angels in white sitting, the one at the head and the other at the feet where the body of Jesus had lain. They ask; "woman why weepest thou?" The heart quickens its pulsations and the unbidden tear steals silently down the cheek over her pathetic and sorrowful answer:—"Because they (Jesus' betrayers and crucifiers) have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him." Could love, loyalty and true devotion go farther? Imagination utterly fails to measure the profound depths of agonizing grief and woe which had taken possession of that heart! But he is faithful and true for in the darkest hour of despondency Jesus hears the cry of his sorrowing ones and comes to their relief. And when she had thus addressed the angels she turned herself around and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was he. Jesus saith unto her, "woman why weepest thou? But supposing the person addressing her to be the gardener, she imploringly said: "Sir, if thou hast borne him hence tell me where thou hast laid him and I will take him away." O deeply afflicted and sorely perplexed daughter, little do you know to whom you are addressing the pathetic appeals. Jesus saith unto her: 'Mary,' she now knows that loved voice. "My sheep hear and know my voice," How the heart leaps with joy at the voice of Jesus in every believers' ear!" She turned herself at that joyful sound and exclaimed—"Rabboni, which is to say Master!" She approaches again to clasp the warm hand of her Lord, but Jesus saith unto her "Touch me not for I am not yet ascended to my Father. But go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." The same day at evening when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, Jesus stood in their midst and said, "Peace be unto you," and when he had so said he showed them his hands and his side. Again Jesus said unto them, "Peace be unto you. As my Father has sent me so I send you;" And when he had said this he breathed on them and saith unto them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Here I feel constrained to diverge a moment from the main purpose of these meditations to say that many preachers and writers will and do not hesitate at all to declare in the face of Jesus' own testimony that the disciples were not endowed with the Holy Ghost until the day of Pentecost.

And now for the present I close these rambling meditations. If one single crumb of comfort has dropped from my wandering pen may be picked up by one of God's hungry children, the unworthy writer will feel amply rewarded for the time and labor of their preparation. And some time if God will, and agreeable with the dear Editors, I may resume the thread where it is now broken. Until then, if ever, I bid my kind and patient readers an affectionate farewell.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD,—I feel it my duty to write a few lines for publication, though I sincerely feel my weakness and imperfections. I have at last had grace sufficient to join the Old Baptist church at Cain Creek.

I offered and was received on the 16th day of October 1886, couldn't tell anything scarcely, but somehow they received me. Oh the inward peace I have experienced since then the wor'd knows nothing of. I was born July the 4th 1851, and from my earliest recollections I had a strong desire to be a christian, thought there was great beauty in religion, and after I got large enough would be a mourner at all big meetings, and try to get religion, but would fail, tho' I sincerely desired to be a christian. I attended a meeting at Kentuck in 1866, went up to the altar as usual, stayed there several days without getting any better or worse. Indeed I felt to be just as good as anybody as I had always been very careful not to sin but very little as I thought. Still I knew I was not what I thought it took to make a christian.

At last one night the preacher said all who desired to be christians to arise and give their hands while they sang a hymn. I certainly wanted to be one, and was willing to trust to Christ. So I arose, gave the preacher my hand, was pronounced a new convert, when indeed I had never been under conviction. But I tried to think I was a christian, and kept from dancing all that christmas, but by the next I gave up my hope, and again joined the dance which I earnestly felt was about all the sin I had ever done.

In the spring of '68 I was married, thought but very little of my religion; indeed I began to think after all religion was a humbug, as I had tried so often and didn't get it. In 1870 my little child died, and it was then I found out what a sinner I was. I even hated the very name of God because he took my babe. She died in August and in Nov. of the same year my dear old sainted grand-mother died. I went to see her when she was nearly speechless, but when she told me farewell, she said in a faint whisper, God bless you. Oh how these words struck me to my heart as I had borne so much hatred to God. But it seemed my hatred for him was gone. As soon as I went in the room to see her I earnestly desired to send an apology by her. I believe I was convicted from that very time as I never got any rest only for a short time after that until the date of 1872, when my burden got so great I was certain I would die. Oh the agony of my poor soul for months, no one but such as have been in my condition can have the faintest idea. In 1873 my mother, my own mother, died. My health gave way under my burden of sin. My brothers and sisters scattered, some with one relation, some with another, some well-treated, while I feared others were not. One night while lying on my bed grieving about their condition, I had concluded there was no hope for poor me, but death and torment was my lot, I had not seen a sun set that I thought I would ever see rise, for O so long, Christ appeared to me suspended on a cross so plain I rose up in bed to see if I was dreaming. Oh no, all my load of sin was gone. Oh I was so happy I never slept but little more that night, but that was such sweet sleep. The next morning my pillow was wet with tears of thanksgiving. What a beautiful scene, the old trees that I had so often looked at seemed new. I did not tell any one, all I could do was to sing praises which I did with a loud voice. In a few days I concluded perhaps after all it was just a sudden change in my health that made me feel so good. Not long afterwards I visited one of my dear old grand mother's sisters. The subject of trouble came up, and I said, somehow or other when I was in deep trouble it was then my heart was happiest. She told me that was the way my Grandma used to talk. O, how happy that made me feel. It came to me that may be I was a christian like her. I did not remain long as I wanted to get to myself so I could sing praises to God, though I couldn't think I was a christian. That was in 1873. In '76 there was a protracted meeting near us. The preacher came to see us and I told him a part of my feelings. He said I ought to join the church which I thought I would do, and joined the Kentuck Missionary Church in August 1876, and remained with them until 1884, when I could stay no longer. The day I joined I hoped at some time for all of them to know some of my feelings, and I want my children to know that there is a reality in religion, and that no one is ever converted without first being convicted. God alone has the power.

WHAT IS TRUE ?

Predestination is a bible doctrine. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate, &c. We see, in Rom. and Eph., that the predestinated are limited to the beloved and the called. Now let us consider the condition and standing of the elect or called, prior to their being quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in times past ye walked according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. &c' Eph. 2: 1-21.

As all the Primitive Baptists believe the total depravity of man, we will omit any further proof of the doctrine. We see, then, the creatures appointed heirs of the kingdom. It is not only necessary for God to appoint, but to prepare them, to bring to pass his appointments.

In order to do this there must be a radical change, a creation. For we, (the people of God) are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them, Eph. 2: 10. It is God that works in us, both to will and to do of His good pleasure. We believe that predestination is in accordance with and consistent with God's holiness, justice, mercy and goodness. Because it is written be ye holy, for I am holy, 1 Pet. 1: 16. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

This is the view we have of predestination in a bible sense, that God not only appoints, but gives all the graces to bring to pass his appointments. He has called them, quickened them to life, converts them, is the author and finisher of their faith, gives them repentance and all the graces for their well being, even to the end, eternal life.

Now let us consider the creation of man. And God said, let us make man in our own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them, Gen. 1; 26, 27. And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good, (v. 31). We are also taught, that God commanded the man saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayst eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it. We see from 3 chap. 6 verse that the man did eat of the forbidden fruit, thus breaking the command of God.

If predestination be predestination, then he predestinated the elect to be conformed to the image of his Son, by working in them to will and to do of His good pleasure. Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us; for Thou also hast wrought all our works in us. Isa. 26; 12. Now it is said, he is the author and finisher of our faith. He must be by working in us all the graces to produce it.

I the Lord speak in righteousness. I declare the things that are right. Isa. 45; 19. For the leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led by them are destroyed, 8 chap. 16 verse. We see the cause of their erring is not of the Lord. He hath shewed thee O man what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justice and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God, Micah 6; 8. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world, 1 John 2; 16.

Let no man say when he is tempted,

I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man; but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed, James 1; 13, 14. O Israel thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thine help, Hosea 13; 6. Read Deut. 5; 27, 29; and 32; 29; Ps. 81; 13; Isa. 48; 18.

Do not these scriptures teach us, that God is holy in his will and law, and that sin was not of a compulsive, but of a permissive character? From the teachings of the scriptures, God cannot be the first cause, or producer of sin. If He is not the creature must be. Again, And He suffered, Luke 8; 20. Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, Acts 14; 16, 31. At the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commands all men everywhere to repent. Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness. In no other way can we understand these and many other passages of scriptures, only by a permissive and not a compulsive will. Notwithstanding, the ordering and appointing certain events for the punishment of the wicked, in fulfilling His designs and purposes; and to the convincing of nations and wicked men of His omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience, his justice, goodness and mercy, which are plainly taught in the scriptures. Thus, could the king Nebuchadnezzar declare, when the Most High convinced him of his power.

His dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation and all the inhabitants of the earth are imputed as nothing, and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, what dost thou! Dan 4; 34, 35. So could the prophet Isaiah declare, Isa. 46; 9, 10, to convince Israel, that He was God, that there was none other, saying, my counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure. Not that this proves that all men do God's will. Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.

Eph. 1; 11. Yes, His works are after the counsel of his will; for man's works are to be judged whether they be good or evil; Eccl. 12; 14. But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgement. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned: Matth. 12; 36, 37; Acts. 17; 30, 31. Read Rom. (chap. 2) Now, let's see about all men doing His will. Not every one that saith unto me 'Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven - Matth. 7; 21. Do all do his will? If so, then, all shall enter into the kingdom. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: Thes. 4; 3. We do'n't believe the christian does his will in all his works. And be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God: Rom. 12; 2.

Ye did run well, who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth. This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you: Gal. 5; 7, 8. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heartheth us: John 5; 14.

The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to us-ward, and not willing that any should perish but all should come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3; 8. Does he not forbear with his people? That he permits their wrong doings, and does not bring it about by compulsion? This leaves man without excuse. Read Rom. (2 chap.). He having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, He having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself. Eph. 1; 5, 9, does not prove that He directs, causes and brings to pass all the steps of his people in their disobedience to his commands. He hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bound of their habitation, Acts. 16, 26.

This teaching has reference to the dividing of nations, or separating the sons of Adam. He set the bound for his people according to the number of the children of Israel, Deut. 32; 8

Again, pray tell us in what sense has a nation a right to bring to justice or to an account, the robbers and murderers, for the crimes they are committing daily in our government if they are not guilty? Is not the moral law based upon justice? Is it not in accordance with God's revealed will?

Editorial.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—MY DEAR FRIEND,—It has been impressed, I hope from God, on my mind for a long time to write to you for your views on a dream that I had several years ago when I was a boy about fifteen years of age. About two years before I had that dream, I was over-persuaded by the Missionaries to go up to the mourner's bench and I went up at their request, and while I was at the mourner's bench the minister came to me and patted me on the head and asked me if I didn't love the Lord? I told him I did as I thought, and he asked me again was I willing to serve God and the church? I told him I would; he told me to get up and then told the church what I said, that I loved the Lord and was willing to serve him and the church. So I was received and baptized by Mr. John Haggard. I remained in the church for about twelve months. I then became dissatisfied about being in the church. I joined the church in ignorance. I was eating and drinking of the bread and wine which I did not feel worthy of. I thought it an unpardonable sin. I thought that God was angry with me, and I became troubled about it, and left the church; told them to take my name off the books. Then I commenced to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me. I prayed to the Lord on going to bed, and prayed to him under an old oak tree that had a beautiful foliage. I made it my daily work to go to that oak to pray.

I always had a desire to be a christian from my youth up and about twelve months after I left the church one night I prayed as usual on going to bed, and about midnight I think I had a dream. I dreamed that I went to a town and I wanted to go through and I couldn't see how I could for there was a war in the streets. They were shouting and fighting with swords all mingled together and in a great smoke from their guns their swords seemed to glitter and ring, while all were screaming and yelling. I never heard the like before. It seemed that I had to go through that dreadful battle, and no way to go through. All at once it seemed that I passed over on the side through that dreadful battle without being hurt.

I then saw a large, beautiful white house in a large beautiful oak grove I went into the house and I saw the Savior on a bed and the bed was standing East and West. The Saviour was wrapt in a fine white robe and a bright blaze of light was over his head against the head-board. I went to him and he said to me 'I am Christ.' I knelt down at the bedside and looked around the room at several white women sitting in chairs around the plastered wall. They never spoke a word to me nor I to them. The Savior then showed me his hands where he was nailed to the cross, and showed me his side where he was pierced to his heart, and opened the wounds which looked very bloody; also showed me his feet where he was nailed to the cross. I thought he was more beautiful than anything I ever beheld. I then commenced to pray to him to have mercy on me a poor sinner. He seemed to pay good attention to my prayer to him, but shook his head as if to say no, when I had finished. Oh that did hurt me so bad. I thought it would kill me. I begged him to pardon my sins and was crying very grievously and he continued to shake his head as if he could not. I began to think I was lost forever. Oh how I was hurt, I was almost completely exhausted but still prayed to him but he still continued to shake his head. I finally was bound to give up as forever lost, and he then said to me your sins are forgiven you, go and sin no more. My burden seemed to have left me. I felt light as a feather. I left him and went out shouting and clapping my hands feeling like I could fly to heaven. The war was all gone and I saw the beautiful stars all among the trees. I then waked up and felt as happy as I could be. But it wore off after a long time. I stopt praying and went on in worldly ways, though I have prayed to the Lord again to show me whether it was a true dream or not. But he has never shown me yet. I feel like all the wrongdoing I do God is angry with me for it, and I hope the Lord will forgive me and save me from an everlasting ruin.

Yours truly,
R. E. COOKE.

Remarks.

We know enough of the Missionary system to be assured that its nature and effect is to deceive people with the notion they have true religion when they have not. To beguile unstable souls and induce them to join their church by getting them to take a step towards getting religion, as they call it, is one of the things they study. I do not mean that it is their intention to beguile them. For when I was with them I thought I was doing God's service to act in this way; and it was part of my duty, as it appeared to me, to oppose the doctrine held by Primitive Baptists. They think if one just makes up his natural mind to profess the name of the Lord that is a good beginning, and he should be baptized on that and become a church member, and the more one can get to do this the more souls he saves.

Our friend soon found that this would not do. As the excitement of such a course wears off one finds himself in a jail, taking no pleasure in these things; or if he does it is merely that prompted by natural pride and self-respect. Sho'd the Lord show one the the vanity of his heart and of all such heartless worship then most wretched does he become.

We cannot deny that God teaches his people yet in visions and in dreams. Be cause the word of God says that in the last days he will pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh and that as a consequence the young men should see visions and the old men should dream dreams. These be those last days or the gospel days; for while on the day of Pentecost, which was at the end of the Jewish dispensation, this was fulfilled, and that was at the end of the Jewish world; yet the church abides as it was then. 'Jesus is Christ, the same, yesterday, to-day and forevermore.

The dream of our friend is a good one—good in itself, and according to truth, and it produced a good effect on his conduct and remained with him. By their fruits ye shall know them. There is nothing so humbling to a man as that sense of his lost condition that is felt as one is brought to the end of the law and dies to all hope of salvation.

Then how precious is Jesus to such a soul as he appears the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely.

No one that ever truly prays to Jesus can be lost. He is the One that hears and answers the prayers of his people. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.
P. D. G.

WHY IS IT?

Of late I have been somewhat exercised in mind as to why it is that our people do not more generally take their children to meeting with them. And to satisfy my mind as to an impression to write upon the subject I will present a few serious thoughts and conclusions.

The exercises of my mind are often such that I fear to write lest I be charged with fault-finding. But I trust it is not for that but for the good of the people that I love, that I write of things which seem to me to be wanting. It is the privilege of God's people to know the whole truth to the extent of its revelation, and to exercise themselves therein that they may have a conscience void of offence toward all men, and most especially towards Him with whom they have to do.

There are but two ways known to man, one of which is right, the other is wrong. And we are so-jourmers here in this world and are either in one or the other at all times, and as it is right to be in the right way, it is right to search for that way—which is the good way—and walk therein.

Is it right for parents to take their children to meeting with them? If so then they ought to take them and thus do right in that particular. Is it right that they should take them to meeting? If so, then they do wrong when they do not take them. Of course this is only considered in a moral sense, for the word does not warrant us in claiming that either commission or prohibition can possibly be of any worth in obtaining eternal salvation, but in time, and for timely purposes and enjoyment the wages are according to the character of the work, whether it be spiritual or moral, good or bad. If a christian lives after the flesh he shall die, but if he through the spirit mortifies the deeds of the body, he shall live. Also if one lives right morally, he enjoys the liberty of his country, but if he does wrong he is incarcerated until the penalty is paid. Under our government we are bound, for our good, religiously, morally and financially, to have some shadow of religious form to qualify our conduct. If I give you my bond for so much, in order to make it binding, I must put upon its face how long it has been since our Lord was born, and in money matters all accept that form. Is a man's money better than his children, or is their financial interest of more importance than their moral interest? If the above form secures their money, may not the form of going to meeting secure their morals, and the consequent moral good? All laws of right, either religiously, morally, or politically are deduced from those principles of law enacted in the scriptures, and as we are the only people that preach the law and the gospel according to the spirit of each, rightly dividing the word of truth, it certainly is beneficial to both saint and sinner to attend our meetings and would certainly result beneficially to the children. The mere letter of the doctrine is preferable to Arminianism of whatever form. It is evident to my mind that our people should take their children with them and encourage them to attend our meetings generally. Is it not better and more consistent to encourage them to attend our meetings than turn them loose to the winds to attend upon whatever meeting and when they will? This certainly is a matter worthy our attention.

Who are interested more in the welfare of Primitive Baptists children than Primitive Baptists?

If they are not the true friends of their own children, who are? If the fathers and mothers who are professed christians, are not the best earthly friends of their children, to whom shall they look for friendship? Will the parents allow strangers the pre-eminence in this matter?

When strangers fail to show us kindness then may we turn to our friends, and when they fail we may turn to our father and mother ; but when they forsake us to whom shall we go ? David says, "When my father and my mother forsake me then the Lord will take me up." But is it said that they did forsake him ? As touching salvation the parent must leave the child in the hands of the Lord. But does that warrant the idea that the children may be allowed to roam at will, to the utter disregard of the ties that should bind them to their parents and the duties they owe, and of the reality of religion and the honest purpose of their parents in their devotions ? The religion we profess to have is worthy the respect of men and devils, and while parents cannot teach their children to be christians, yet they sho'd so train them that they may respect christianity. If ones child should go so far, turn from the instructions given, as to scorn them and the religion of its parents, and go in with others, surely those parents would feel much better if they have an acquitted conscience that they have done the best they could in bringing them up, than to the contrary.

(Concluded in next issue.)

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I had hoped to hear from some of the older and more influential brethren of our Association in relation to the relief of Elder Sylvester Hassell our Church Historian.

Elder Hassell has written and published the Church History after having been called by the Kehukee Association to succeed his father in its completion. Besides his time and labor, also an outlay of $500 worth of books to that end, the suspension of his school upon which was his dependance for the support of his family, and finally the loss of his home possession, yet his indebtedness is about $2000. Now, virtually whose indebtedness is it ? Unquestionably, the Baptists of the Kehukee Association. Elder Hassell was appointed by the Association to complete the publication of said history and he has done it regardless of labor, and it stands preeminent to any work of the kind yet published in America.

I deem it a book second only to the bible, and is of inestimable value to the Old School Baptist cause. The publication of this history was through the advocacy and influence of the oldest leading members, ministry and laity, of the said Association, nearly all of whom have passed away from time. Then let not us, their successors, be unmindful of the obligation resting on us in the matter, and not delay coming to his rescue and at once release Eldcr Hassell ; besides, we ought to remunerate him for his time, labor and money actually employed in writing and preparing this history.

Let the pure mind be stired up by way of remembrance and dispense cheerfully according as the Lord has blessed us, and honor the cause of our heavenly master. Can any pure concience refuse to respond to so just a claim ? I believe we shall be blessed in the deed, but contrawise have the displeasure of heaven with the reproaches of the world.

Now, the question arises, how shall we manage to raise the money for the purposes aforesaid ? I would suggest this : Let the 37 churches, averaging 47 members each, make up $100 to each church in proportion to number and means, as early as practicable, and send to Elder Hassell with which to cancel the $2000 debt and have the balance, $1700 to purchase him another home. Let every church in the Association take action in their first Conference and require every member, both male and female, to do their part as to their means. There has already been too much delay. Let us not postpone the matter. We are commanded, "not to be slothful in business."

Financially and morally this is a matter of vital importance. None can feel it like him that is pressed beneath its weight. Yea, he has thus far borne it for us himself, for really it is our debt, then is it not right and needful for the Baptists of the Kehukee Association, over 1700 members, to take it off his shoulders? Doubtless many have been waiting for the opening of a medium through which to give the needed aid, to bear each his burden and honor the royal law of our Lord and King.

S. W. OUTERBRIDGE.

Remarks.

We feel like brother Outterbridge that this debt falls on the Kehukee Association as principal, and the balance of us as security. We hope that it will be paid. We outside of the Kehukee Association are also benefitted by it, and therefore we should be willing to help them bear it.

I was present at the Kehukee Association in the sessions when this matter was proposed and discussed. Many of the leading brethren who discussed and matured the business of having it written are gone home.

THE RIGHTEOUS SMOTE ME.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, :— I notice in the last issue of the LANDMARK that I am personally rebuked by Elder J. C. Hall because I did not fill some appointments published for myself in his county. It is wrong to make appointments and intentionally not fill them, and I acknowledge I have not been as true to fill appointments as I wish to be. I hope to do better in this respect in the future. Over two weeks ago if not mistaken, before I was to commence filling these appointments I wrote to brother Hall to call them in. I thought I notified him in time so that the brethren and friends would not be looking for me. I had before I wrote to him requested brother Gold by dropping him a postal not to publish the appointments, but in the next issue of the LANDMARK I saw they were published and regretted it, as I feared it might confuse the brethren; but as I had requested brother Hall to call them in I concluded he would do so, and rested somewhat easy about it.

So I don't think I am so very much to blame after all. Brother Hall says he dislikes to be run to the expense of publishing disappointments. In sending appointments into a neighborhood I usually use postal cards, and I guess he did the same: if so it did not cost him I suppose more than thirty cents to buy them, probably not more than twentyfive cents, but if the brother will write me what it did cost I will refund the money; besides I will go to much greater expense if necessary, to publish appointments in our country for him and charge him nothing for it. I hope to profit by the brother's rebuke.

The brother did not break any bones,
Although he hit with mountain stones.

In love to brother Hall and the brethren elsewhere, I am theirs to serve.

I. J. TAYLOR.

Remarks.

The appointments brother Taylor refers to were printed before I received his note, so that it was too late for me to withhold them, or to publish a notice of their withdrawal.

I wrote to him promptly asking if I should recall them in next paper, but he never received my note.

Obituary.

JOSEPH HENRY PIPPEN

Please publish this tribute of respect to the memory of our departed brother and friend Joseph H. Phippen, who was called by the Lord from the sorrows of earth to the joys of heaven at his earthly home in Edgecombe Co., N. C., at 18 minutes past 3 O'clock, A. M. on June, 9th, 1888. His disease was obstruction of the bowels, tho't to have been caused by malignant disordered pancreas.

He was born June 19th, 1832, a son of Joseph John, and Tabitha Phippen, both of whom were Primitive Baptists and his father a deacon. Never did the memory of these dear ones and their christian walk and conversation pass from his mind, especially of his mother, whom he adored, has the unworthy writer often heard him speak with so much love, and talk of her pure life and virtues upon earth, then gladly say I know that she is in heaven and I hope one day to meet her there. He was united in holy wedlock to Sarah E. Cherry October 25th, 1854. To them were four children given, Frank, Joseph, Mary and Sarah. He united with the church at Williams, Edgecombe Co., N. C., in July 1872, was baptized by Elder P. D. Gold, was soon ordained a deacon which office he filled faithfully and well until his death and purchased to himself a good degree and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus. In 1879 he with wife and others obtained letters of the church at Williams for the purpose of constituting a Church at Whitakers, which was done in order on the 4th of April following. He was taken sick on the 23rd of May with something like colic, and though he did not get entirely clear of pain, he did not think it serious, was worse on Sunday, and the family physician being called pronounced it a slight bowel trouble, made three or four visits and discharged him. On the second of June was taken worse again and had medical aid and the very best nursing; but no human help or prayer could stay the ravages of the destroying angel. Could the most loving, affectionate, and never tiring attention, the prayers of a noble and pure christian wife and loving and devoted daughter, who kept constant vigil at his side, have arrested the blow, he would now be here cheering us by his Christ-like walk and pure and noble life ; but in his own language which he frequently used while under so painful and excruciating pain ; "The Lord is taking me away." Yes the decree of God had gone forth and he must obey. He desired patience at the first and surely it was given. Many times to his friends he had said that he would soon be called on to leave them, and then he did not think that he would live to see the close of 1888, and that he did not dread death ; but did dread the suffering and sting. When given water on or near his end, he said there is nothing like pure water and pure grace.

He told his family that God would take care of them. The unworthy writer was by his bedside on several occasions before he left us and talked with him of things both temporal and spiritual. We are witness to the fact that he seemed to comprehend fully his condition and was looking to Jesus as his hope of life and immortal glory. Oh how he hated sin and felt that when it was finished he should enter out of death into eternal life. How sad it is to me as while I write past recollections crowd my mind. O how often has he and dear wife cared for me and the brethren generally. Their home has been our home and their God our God. Often in going to associations and other meetings, have we sung praises to God and talked and shed tears while speaking of his goodness and tender mercy to poor unworthy worms such as we. We believe God joined us together in love, and oh how pleasant the moments that can now only live in memory.

How often when ready to give up under trials and worldly care and at the same time as burdened with the care of the churches and conflicts which sorely press the poor laborer in the ministry, has this God-given brother's words to us as apples of gold in pictures of silver. Not only in word did he love and serve his God ; but so self-sacrificing and devoted to the truth that nothing he possessed was too good for the cause. "Search through all the memories of mankind and find me such a friend." Solomon says the memory of the just is blest; Prov. 10-7.

Elder P. D. Gold who was invited to preach on the occasion on looking on the calm and tranquil remains, was impressed with the words, "the sting of death is sin, the strength of sin is the law, 1st Cor. 15: 56," after which the remains were borne out into the field about three hundred y'ds

N. W. of his late residence, and gently and quietly will the mortal remains of the dear one repose, free from care beneath the hill. He was a full grown ear in the sheath and the time of the harvest had come and God has taken his spirit home. It is at rest in Jesus, and when the last jewel of God's mercy is brought into the fold and our glorious Redeemer shall descend from heaven with a shout and with the voice of an Archangel and the trump of God, then incorruptible and in the likeness of the Saviour shall this body arise from the grave and throughout eternity bask in the glories of heaven and sing the praises of the Lamb. May God dry up the tears of the bereaved wife and children, relatives and friends who mourn their loss, and may they think of him as having passed from the sorrows and pains of earth to all the joys of heaven. May his life, with its virtues, be stamped deep in the hearts of his children, and may all bow in submission to God's decree and say, "The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. A devoted husband, kind and indulgent father, a faithful, pure and consecrated christian, he now is at rest in the home of God. I close this too lengthy piece with 3 verses of a favorite hymn of his.

O may I be prepared for that day,
When Christ shall descend from above
Be filled with his presence, go shouting away,
To the arms of his infinite love.

The spirit to glory conveyed,
My body laid low in the ground,
I wish not a tear on my grave to be shed,
But all join in praising around.

No sorrow be vented that day,
When Jesus has called me home.
But singing and shouting let each brother say,
He's gone from the evil to come.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling gone—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bristled, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

H YMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

STRANGE, YET OLD.

There never was, nor is, no ever will be,
One of Adam's race so unlike me,
As to love the gospel, or even desire
To be a christian, or from sin retire,
Until his heart is broken and his conscience torn,
And that he cannot wish, hence cannot mourn.

As a healing balm to a throbbing sore,
As bread of pity to the starving poor,
So the gospel is a sweet repose,
To beggars; others turn up their nose.
None but filthy wretches banquet here,
While they who trust in works scoff and sneer.

A poor, self-loathing, cripple worm am I.
I would not be myself, I long to fly.
Nor did I use to think I'd feel this way,
But thought I'd get to heaven as others say,
Through praying, doing, getting good, but oh,
To trust in such is death, its end is woe.

When hungry hogs refuse to eat their swill,
Or waters change their course and run up hill,
Then will I believe and not before,
That hearts unchanged their wiffulness deplore
Though outwardly from sin mankind may turn,
But if within in hell we'll burn.

But if my heart is turned, if sin I hate,
Or waters change their course and run up rate.
I know the scriptures say, 'the pure in heart'
'Shall not be saddened by that word depart.'
Better be pure within, in sight vile,
Than walk like angels, still be Satan's child.
I. J. TAYLOR.

COMMUNICATED.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—I am not a subscriber to your valuable paper, ZION'S LANDMARK, but the pleasure and profit of reading it has been made available by the kindness of neighbors who are able to pay for luxuries. Circumstances confine my purchases, in the main, to absolute necessities. I have been an interested reader of your articles and those of many of your contributors, for more than two years. I was particularly interested in a discussion between you and Mr. Miller of Red Springs, Ga., on the subject of Sunday Schools. The Question was ably debated, but after drifting into Predestination, was discontinued. I would have been glad for the debate to continue with Predestination the issue, for there is where my greater interest lay.

Since then one enquirer proposed some questions calculated to draw out your views fully on Predestination. Your remarks in reply to 'enquirer' were somewhat profuse, but not without a degree of obscurity. My attention was particularly called to them by an esteemed friend who was of the opinion that they would entirely satisfy me on the doctrine of election.

But after reading and re-reading, I am forced to acknowledge your reasoning unsatisfactory, and your biblical proofs inadequate, according to my humble understanding, to establish election, in an absolute sense as the doctrine of the Bible, and with your permission will notice the positions you have so nobly contrasted, adduce some arguments in favor of enquirers position, and then sift, at least, some of the arguments used in support of yours.

But it will be well perhaps to state in the beginning, that I am a member of no church. But like 'enquirer' claim to love christians, and also have claimed for several years to love the Primitive Baptists especially; and am prepared to state why I love them.

First, because they believe in a revealed, experimental religion. And again, because they are not, in my humble opinion, so tightly fettered by fashion and formality, as are most other sects.

But I am unable to believe in the doctrine of irrevocable decrees. And unless I can be convinced that it is a doctrine of the Bible, or the Primitive Baptists be convinced that it is not of God, I can never be accounted worthy to walk shoulder to shoulder through life with the good old Baptists, which I would so much love to be.

But returning to the subject, I will say that I know not 'enquirer' either; but freely espouse the position you have given him, viz, first, that the Spirit of God visits or awakens all men. Second, that God does not always finish the work of salvation begun in man. Thirdly that Christ died for all those who will be finally lost, as well as for those who will be saved. But afterward you say that he holds, God does not always see the end from the beginning. If so I am not with him all the way, for emphatically God does see the end of all things from the beginning, otherwise he is not an all-wise God; and if not an all-wise God he is not a perfect God; and if not a perfect God he is no God at all. The object of Almighty God in creating man is beyond the province of our investigations. But we may be assured that he is destined to contribute in some way to the glory of his creator. We also know that God foresaw the fall of man, and made restoration before man was created. "Christ was a lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Neither was this provision a partial one. It was the world that God so loved as to give his son to die; "the just for the unjust," and not the church, the elect, or any part of the world. And in regard to individuals, God verily begins in each head and in each heart the work of salvation, but whether or not the work is ever completed, i. e. whether or not the individual be saved finally, depends upon himself. For "he (Jesus) was the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Jno. 1:9. "Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come into him and sup with him and he with me." Rev. 3:20." Showing plainly that man must be a co-worker with God in working out his salvation. "For he that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man who himself built his house upon a rock, and not a man for whom the Lord built a house upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings and doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man who himself built his house upon the sand, etc.," Matt. 7: 24—27. Showing that man is, in a very important sense, the architect of his hopes of immortality as much as he is of his fame or fortune. Notice also the young man who came to the Master enquiring what he must do to inherit eternal life. "What did Jesus say to him? Did he tell him not to concern himself about that which was altogether beyond his power? Did he say if you are one of the sheep I will save you? Or if my Father gives you to me I will save you. No. He remembered what his mission here on earth was, 'to seek and to save that which was lost, to do the will of his Father who sent him,' and that his Father had said, 'I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth,' &c. Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, one thing thou lackest, go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, take up the cross and follow me. We see that Jesus commenced the work of salvation in this young man by giving him the needed instruction how to obtain treasure in heaven, and promising to be his leader to glory, if he would take up his cross and follow him. But did he finish the work ie did he save the young man? No, the young man went away sorrowful; he had great possessions and the inference is that he loved them too well to relinquish them, even for the hope of eternal life! How sad, and how awful, yet how many there are who cling to their idols, whatever they may be, refusing to sacrifice them at the command of God, though to retain them incurs his displeasure and excludes all reasonable hope of a glorious immor-

We see again from the foregoing notionally that man may have a good work begun in him and the work not completed on account of his refusing to be a co-worker with God. But we see a proof that of the third division of the position," that those may be lost for whom Christ died ! For we must confess that if Christ promised the young man salvation on the conditions named, that he was able to save him : and if able to save him, it was through himself. "For there is no name under heaven whereby men can be saved but by the name of Jesus ; and if saved by himself, then he died for him ; "for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins.

Indeed does not the whole tenor of the Bible, as well as the following texts in particular, offer salvation to every one ? "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden &c. Matt. 11 : 23." "And the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely" Rev. 22 : 17." For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Rom. 10 : 12—13. We consider the foregoing scriptures conclusive, but to adduce other arguments, you allow that the right to reason and argument is inalienable, we would say that it being proven that any who have been lost had a chance to be saved, and any who have been saved had a chance to be lost, it will clearly appear that men are lost not on account of any defect in the atonement made for the sins of the world, but because some condition of that atonement is not complied with. Let us first notice Lot's wife. Did she not have the same chance to escape as her husband and her daughters ? Was not the command flee, tarry not, neither look ye behind you, given to her as well as to them ? Then surely the reason she was not benefited by the warning and the means devised for her escape, was because she failed to comply with the conditions proposed. Also let us notice again all those who were bidden to the feast. Luke 14 : 16—26. 'Enquirer' says they were all bidden. You say not one came, but both of you say well. But is not the simple fact that they were all bidden sufficient proof that all of them might have gone ? Cou'd any of those who were bidden and would not go ascribe aught of their sufferings to the master of the feast, though they should afterward find themselves starving ? Assuredly not, for he had given them a chance to go. They were bidden with the intent that they should go. If not, why were they bidden at all ? If the Master invited them knowing that they could not come, then after receiving intelligence of their inability, to exhibit indignation and say not one of them should come, would have been an example of mockery and wicked insincerity of which we have no right to accuse any man who might invite guests to a supper, and of which we dare not accuse the great master of the gospel feast, who is shadowed forth or represented by this man who made a feast and invited guests. Then to make the application. If they have a chance to be saved, then as we have seen, Christ surely died for them. Let us again notice Christ weeping over Jerusalem, and saying, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathers her brood under her wings and ye would not !" Now if they would, but he would not, then how blasphemous the conclusion to which we are driven. Viz, that Christ was acting deceitfully toward them, and the tears he wept were but the overflow of hypocrisy ! From the foregoing reasons, and many others I cannot mention for want of space, I firmly believe that men are lost, not on account of any defect or short coming in the atonement of Christ, but because they will not comply with the terms of the gospel, but because they will not repent but sin on against light and knowledge, until the cup of their iniquity is full, and they are prepared to say, "yea and amen to their own condemnation." Yes, I am fully persuaded that Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man; for as I live saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye, from your evil way for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ezekiel 33—2.

So much for 'enquirers' position. I promised also to examine your position, which as gathered from your remark is, that God's Spirit has nothing to do with those who are lost. That when God commences the work of salvation in a sinner, he will assuredly complete it independently of the will or work of the sinner. That God, the Father hath chosen a part of mankind, whom he will save in Christ, and the remainder of mankind are vessels of wrath whom he has fitted to destruction. That God does not offer salvation to the whole human race, and if he did they could not receive it &c. The examination of your argument would now be in order, but my remarks are already more lengthy than a new correspondent should have made them, and furthermore, it may be that I have not your true position exhibited; for as before stated your remarks are somewhat obscure, and like you by 'enquirer,' I wish to misrepresent no man. Am a lover of the truth and am seeking the truth. If convinced of an error will acknowledge it tho' it be grievous to flesh and blood to do so. Yours very Respectfully,

W. H. JEWEL.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—With the help of the Lord I will try to comply with your request to tell you as I hope, my travail from nature to grace. It seems quite a task for me, as weak and sinful as I see myself to be, though the Lord is able to bring strength out of weakness.

I must confess I have felt impressed to write you my little experience for sometime, but for fear of doing wrong

I have omitted it, knowing my imperfection and weakness so well. I shall have to go back to my childhood.

I would at times have very curious thoughts about death and eternity. I went on in this way until 12 years old, when the angel of death came and bore away on his snowy wings my sweet little sister Mollie. While her dear little body was in the house, the night after her death, I dreamed that I saw her in heaven. When I awoke I began to think what I should do to meet her in heaven, so I concluded to try to be a better girl than I ever had been before, but still did not feel my condemnation before God. I knew I was a sinner but thought there were worse sinners than I was, because I had seen and heard others do that I would'n't do: so I tried to brace myself against those serious thoughts, but notwithstanding all my reasonings they would return, and then I would say or do something to try to keep it hid. Then something would seem to say "this is doing better, isn't it."

I went on in this way until about my 18th year, which was 1879. I had been sick and was feeling very feeble. Sister Jennie and I went upstairs to retire, and suddenly it seemed that I heard something say: "You are dead in trespasses and sins, you are too wicked to live." I sank to the floor. Jennie asked me what was the matter. I told her I just felt bad, she asked me what could she do for me. I told her nothing, she would not do me any good for I should not live long any way. She then said, why what makes you think so? I said, I'am no pleasure to myself, nor anyone else. I then went to bed with a heavy burden. It seemed more than I could bear. My very breathing, it seemed was, Lord have mercy on me, a poor lost and ruined sinner. I was in so much trouble I could not rest nor sleep until after midnight. I got into a kind of doze and dreamed I saw a deep pit, and it was hell, and the devil and his angels were in there, and I was hanging over this horrible pit, and a chord was wound around me and tied at my heart, and extended up into the heaven, and the Lord had hold of the end of the chord, but there seemed to be a misty cloud or veil between me and heaven. About this time I awoke crying, Lord have mercy, which woke my sister, who was sleeping with me. She put her hand on me and said, What in the world is the matter with you, are you sick? I told her nothing, only I had dreamed a frightful dream. She tried to quiet me by saying, Well do'n't study about it if you can help it: you need rest and sleep. But all this did me no good. Oh, I felt to be the meanest thing in this world, but could not help crying for mercy.

The chord above spoken of, I then believed or thought to be the thread of life; but since I have a reason for a little hope I look at in another way. I believe it was the blessed Lord drawing me with the sweet chords of his love, but I could not see it so then, though I saw my life was in his hands, and verily thought this chord was the thread of my life, and all I lacked of being in hell, was for the Lord to clip this thread, and I was 'lost. I felt like I wanted to hear some good preacher tell how the Lord dealt with his people. I had often heard them tell it before, but had not experienced it.

This was but a few days before the Association at Fellowship, Johnson Co., N. C., the last of September 1879. I went and paid good attention to the preaching. They told my feelings so much better than I could, I could witness through their distressing feelings, but when they came to the point where they felt that their sins were forgiven, I could not witness that. I felt too sinful to ever enjoy anything like that. I could not see how God could be just and save such a sinner as I was, but could not help crying for mercy. I was in a flood of tears nearly all the time. I thought if I could only feel half as good as I believed they were, how good I would feel, but instead of feeling better I felt worse. I wanted to ask some good person to pray for me, but felt too wretched. I would often try to pray, but could not say any thing but Lord have mercy on me, a poor lost sinner.

It seemed like my prayer would not go higher than my head.

I went on in this way having many sad dreams, which are too tedious to mention, until August, 18th 1880, when I hope the Lord pardoned my sins. There was a protracted meeting going on in the neighborhood. I attended. Some of my comrades saw there was something the matter with me. They came to me and asked me to go up to the mourner's seat to be prayed for. I told them I wanted every body to pray for me that could pray, but felt that my case was an outside one. I thought there was a better chance for anyone else than for me. An Aunt of mine who was a Primitive Baptist was sitting by me. I asked her what must I do, for I felt to be the worst sinner in the world. Her reply was, I am glad you feel so, do as you like about going to the mourner's bench. The Lord is able to pardon your sins anywhere. If you feel impressed to go, go. The Lord is the one to go to for advice. I was willing to go anywhere to find relief. A lady friend took me by the hand and said, come on I'll go with you. I went with her to the anxious seat. I tried to ask the Lord to be merciful to me, but the more I tried to pray the worse I felt.

I came home that night in so much trouble I did'n't know what to do. I thought I had committed more sin than ever. That night was another miserable night to me. Next morning this hymn was presented to me.

Awaked by Sinai's awful sound,
My soul in guilt and thrall I found,
And knew not what to do;
O'erwhelmed with guilt, with anguish slain,
I saw I must be born again,
Or sink in endless woe.

Amazed I stood, but could not tell,
Which way to shun a moving hell,
For death and hell drew near;
I strove indeed, but strove in vain,
The sinner must be born again,
Still sounded in my ear.

When to the law I trembling fled,
It cursed me and pronounced me dead,
I fell beneath its weight;
This perfect truth renewed my pain,
The sinner must be born again.
My woe I can't relate.

I decided to go to meeting again that day, but thought I would not go to the mourner's bench any more, but I went in with a heavy load on my heart, and went up to the seat again and staid there until intermission. I got up and went out and thought I would'nt go back to that place any more, but I concluded to go in and take a back seat where I would not be so apt to be seen. I tried to be cheerful but it was not long before I was sinking down with a flood of tears again, so I ventured up to the seat for the last time I ever expected to try to pray. I felt like I never should see the Sun rise or set again. I fell down and asked the Lord, if it was consistent with his will, to pardon my sins, Lord save, I perish. "Thy will Oh Lord be done, not mine."

But while in anguish thus I lay,
Jesus of Nazareth passed that way,
On me his pity moved;
Although I might be justly slain,
He spake and I was born again,
By grace redeemed and loved.

While at that point something seemed to say, Thy sins are forgiven thee, thy iniquities I will remember against thee no more. Arise and let your joys be known. I could not express my joy. I felt like I should never see any more trouble. Every thing looked more beautiful than ever before, but alas! This did not last long before I began to have doubts and fears. I feared that I was deceived and had deceived others. If I am saved at all, it is by grace and grace alone. Nothing good that I have done, and thanks to God for it. I struggled along through doubts and fears nearly four years, before I united with the church.

I have worn many stripes of affliction for disobedience. So many times I wanted to tell the people of God what I hope the Lord had done for me, and would shrink back on account of feeling my unworthiness, and for fear I would be a stumbling block. I would try to ask the Lord to show me my duty. He would answer my feeble petition by some passage of scripture. Then I would promise if my life would be spared I would obey time and again.

I would resist the spirit and have to wear the chastening rod. Sometimes I would feel like it was the wicked spirit prompting me instead of the good one. The last call I had was this. If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them. This was on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. I was made willing to tell the church what good things I hoped the Lord had done for me, a poor helpless sinner, but I could not tell but a few words. I was received and baptized the next day by Elder T. Y. Monk. I feel so thankful for that privilege as unworthy as I am. I cannot tell the sweet comfort and peace I have in obedience. Sometimes my hope seems so little I think I'll throw it by. Sometime it seems sufficient if I were called to die. Sister Annie I have tried to give you a reason for my little hope, and have failed to express myself plainly as I wish to.

I fear I have wearied you. I will close with love and fellowship to you. Your little sister in Christ I hope.

LAURA Y. HINES.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—It is through much weakness I address you, but if I say anything amiss I hope you will pardon me. I do desire from my heart to do what is right, but I find myself often out of the way.

Now my cause for writing to you is this, I would be glad for you to publish sister Laura Hines' experience. It was so much comfort to me I thought it might be a comfort to many more if it was published. I have asked her if she would object to it. She said she did not feel like it was fit, though she would not object, but if I did send it, tell you to examine it carefully and see if you thought it would do. I know that there are some Baptists who oppose sisters' writing, but if we feel impressed, and if our impressions are of the Lord, they will be blessed. The trouble with me is, is it of the Lord.

The Lord is not slack concerning his promise. It is in duty we are blessed. May we not fear man, but fear God who is everywhere, and has all power, and man is nothing, can do nothing to merit salvation.

I think I have been shown that. I will close. Much love to sister Gold. Remember us in your prayers. Your unworthy little sister, if one at all.

ELDER P. D. GOLD : DEAR BROTHER,—Will you please answer a question or two that I shall ask according to your understanding. If a brother gets a letter from a church and moves to another state, and there joins a church that is in disorder, or has been dropped from the Association, and he stays there three or four years, and decides he has been in disorder, and makes acknowledgment of his wrong and gives satisfaction, and the church receives him as that church departed from Primitive Baptist usage, or does the scripture condemn such an act?

Please answer as soon as practicable, and oblige an un worthy brother in Christ as I hope,

L. C. DESHONG.

Seffner, Fla.,

Remarks.

According to the strict letter it would be better for him to return to the church that gave him a letter of dismissal, and give them satisfaction : but it occurs to me that his going to a true church in the vicinity where he committed the trespass, and acknowledging his wrong and giving that church satisfaction, and being received into that church might give quietness to all parties and settle the trouble, though for the sake of peace I should prefer to go to the church that gave me a letter and be forgiven and restored there.

Often a thoughtless step commits one to trouble and many times it involves others.

P. D. G.

MRS. R. ANNA PHILLIPS, MY DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST :—It has been a long time since we have interchanged letters by private correspondence, but I have been reading your letters in the papers very often with deep interest and profit. I have often left like writing to you and saying so, but many cares have hindered me often, and sometimes the matter was just put off without any good reason.

I was particularly drawn out to write to you at this time by the kind Christian like tone of your article on Predestination in the last LANDMARK. Many things in it drew me near to you. And even a difference in one thing did not put you any further away from me. I trust that I may have a measure of the same humble enquiring spirit that was manifest in your letter in the LANDMARK. It is true that we are but learners yet in the school of Christ. And there our childish reasonings must be laid aside for what our teacher "Christ" is pleased to say to us. Oh that all the school could just be content to hear what "God the Lord will speak."

I suppose that you have learned that my faith is and has been that our God predestinates all things that come to pass. Every event from the fall of a sparrow to the present position of each mote that floats in the sunbeam, I believe were all settled before that sparrow or that mote were created. And so each act, word, and thought of all men were settled before time was. I understand that all our brethren believe that all good things were predestinated, but some cannot think that evil things were predestinated.

While it is not what I wanted personally to say, yet allow me to suggest that I can see no difference in principle, between the predestination of one wicked act, and the predestination of all wicked acts. And if the predestination of a wicked act destroys the guilt of that act so that the doers of it cannot be condemned, it seems to me also that by the same reasoning, the predestination of a good act destroys the right to commend the doer of it. And yet God does commend men for doing the good which he has predestinated; why then not condemn the evil act which yet he has predestinated.

But my sister, you have asked questions of us who believe in predestination which I frankly confess I cannot answer, and so, if I denied predestination you could also ask me questions which I could not solve. If I go to reasoning either for or against predestination, I soon find myself against a wall of difficulty which I cannot surmount. And so I frankly confess that I cannot answer your questions. But we are not required to solve all the difficulties of our faith in anything? The question is simply this. Does the bible teach that God did predestinate any one wicked act that has ever taken place? And surely the answer to this is plain. Some wicked acts God did predestinate. See Acts 2; 23, Acts 4: 26, 27, 28, and Romans 8th chap.

Now my dear sister, I have not written this for controversy, but as a brief response to your appeal to us to solve your doubts if possible. We cannot solve all the questions even of our own minds, but we can appeal to the word of God, in which every separate prophecy proves that God did predestinate the things prophesied, or else they must be from necessity of some other kind.

I thought at first of writing this through the LANDMARK, but felt more like writing to you directly. And I trust that you will believe that a brother's love goes with it. If you see fit to send this to the LANDMARK with any words of your own that you may feel to write I shall be glad.

Let me hear from you in any event. I remain as ever your Brother in the hope of Christ.

F. A. CHICK.

DEAR ELDER CHICK, :—Unless you had said you would 'be glad' for me, if I saw fit to add any word, to send them, together with your letter to the LANDMARK, I should not do so, thinking perhaps enough was said. But considering this together with the fact that you mistake me on one point; and have made a point or two to which

I want to reply I conclude to do so. More especially since letters and assurances from brethren, declare that my late letter was most acceptable and profitable; and for me to continue the subject further. Besides, our writings on the subject seem rather to strengthen, than loosen the bonds of christian love.

Wherein you mistake me is found in the following from yours—"I understand all our brethren believe that all good things were predestinated; but some cannot think evil things were predestinated." Then in connection "I can see no difference in principle between the predestination of one wicked act and the predestination of all wicked acts. And if the predestination of wicked acts destroys the guilt of that act, so that the doer of it cannot be condemned; it seems to me that by the same reasoning, the predestination of a good act destroys the right to commend the doer of it. And yet God does commend men for doing the good which he predestinated. Why not condemn the evil which he has yet predestinated?"

As to the first I answer, I do not know the general belief of brethren. I never read Gill or Calvin or any author on the subject of predestiation, in my life, and only know of the general and personal faith of brethren by what I have gathered from our late periodicals. But I know I do not believe, nor did I intend to convey the idea, that God directly predestinated either good or evil acts, no more the one than the other, but that he did predestinate to place good and evil, obedience and disobedience—before man: and then (as to commending and condemning) that the law should commend the good, and condemn the evil acts of man. And that hence, these are timely, contingent, law-measures, that must await the action of law subjects. And that therefore with man, and not God's predestination, rests the issue. And the result, as declared by the word, has shown us that, even as "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin," so "by one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation." Rom. 5 : 18.

And thus, the wages of sin is death ; and the sting of death is sin ; and the strength of sin is the law. And what the law could not do, as to redemption, "God sending his own son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin (for sin, mind you, and he avers that from God's predestination?) condemned sin in the flesh. that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." And thus Jesus Christ made free "from the law of sin and death." Rom. 8 ; 1. And thus it is the law that commends or condemns, and that according to the innocence, or guilt of man.

But in connection let me ask you if God's predestination caused this sin, why charge it to the flesh altogether, to be condemned in it by God's law ? And again "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law : " but is it possible that God's predestination makes this curse from which God's Son by death redeems ?

If you tell me that God's predestination is synonymous with God's written law, I tell you that the one is cause eternal and immutable ; (as answering to God's will) and the other is effect, timely and contingent. If you tell me God's law does condemn the evil act of God's predestination, I will tell you, you make the less and weaker to adjudge and condemn the greater and stronger,—the created, written on the sands of time, to subordinate and overrule the pure and eternal : and that accordingly God himself sends his Son to fulfill, support and sustain his law in condemning and destroying the fruits of his predestination. My beloved brother, don't think I use lightness, but that I would really and truly—and in the fear of God—show you my difficulties in accepting your arguments ; and also, what seems to me your own dilemma, either horn of which appears to me to be in a tangle.

But in conclusion you say, This is the only question. Does the bible teach that God did predestinate any wicked act that has ever occurred ? And if one, then all, you say in substance : and you add, some wicked acts God did predestinate:

and refer to Acts 2 : 23 ; and 4 : 26, 28 ; and Rom. 9th chap. And of course you refer to these as your strongest, and main proofs of your assertions. I am willing for these to decide the issue between us forever. For as you say, if God predestinated one wicked act, then all. But if not in this you refer to ; then, nowhere.

Your first reference reads Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. Surely you do not think from this reading that this "determinate counsel" of God applies to the vile, malicious intent of the heart of these people of "wicked hands." If so notice again "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." Do you not see that he is delivered by determinate counsel &c. Thus being already delivered, then, ye have taken, &c. "Him being delivered," that is the divine power that has heretofore protected the Son of man, preventing and restraining these wicked hands when and while his hour was not come, is now withdrawn, delivering, or leaving subject to the passions and power of those who hate and would destroy him, now his hour and the "power of darkness" that is come.

And now by referring to your second reference, we will find for what he is thus delivered. This reads "The Kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done," Acts 4 : 21, 28. Now, I ask, what was determined before to be done? What was determined before in covenant before the world, should be accomplished in Jesus as made partaker of flesh and blood with his people, but condemnation and death in their behalf? Yes condemnation and death in order to their redemption and justification to eternal life. And we find that condemnation and death—yet not as fulfilling the covenant, or honoring the law; but as gratifying their intense personal hate and malice, was the intent and design of this people, as of one heart and mind, gathered together; for it was not only against Christ, but also against the Lord they gathered and acted.

And here comes in the foreknowledge of God, who foreseeing this people, representing all the earthly "powers that be" and in their cruel hate and rebellion against the Lord, answering to the sinful state of his people in nature—would condemn and crucify Jesus, determined to deliver him to them; and in thus withdrawing his divine arm and leaving them unrestrained, permit them, in gratifying their own personal murderous malice, to unwittingly accomplish, mechanically, that determined or predestinated in covenant before they were created.

And this is not to say God predestinated or pre-determined this evil intent of their heart. Hence it was not a wicked, but a righteous act, forasmuch as the Son of God had agreed in Covenant thus to make a sacrifice of himself,—thus to suffer and to die as made one in flesh with his people. Yes, it was good and honorable,—it was well and just,—it was right and righteous to deliver him to die as fulfilling the stipulations of that Holy Covenant; as well as honoring the law of God concerning every sinful body of flesh, for he was not only partaker of flesh and blood, but was also "made to be sin", as imputed from his Bride, and therefore must die. Jesus himself as affirming, asked "Ought not Christ to have suffered? for thus it is written, and that it behooved Christ to suffer." John 16 chap.

Then that God predestinated to deliver Jesus to be crucified and slain I repeat, was not a wicked, but a righteous act.

Now make the line of distinction separating between the high and holy design of God, that to sustain his holy counsel, word and throne, and being in everlasting salvation to Jesus this Bride in delivering him to be crucified: and the low vile design of those, that as solely gratifying their hate and malice, revilingly murdered a known innocent and friendless man. And by so much you may see how God's determinate counsel applied to the one without touching the other.

I have written much more than I intended; but hoping you will receive in the same spirit in which written, I freely send it. May the Lord make us lowly, loving and as little children. Unworthily.

R. ANNA PHILIPS.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—

I desire to write a few things that I have experienced in Missouri. I came to Marshfield three years ago, and found an old Baptist church near here by the name of Wolf Creek. Their preachers were Elders Johnson & Brazil. Elder Johnson came here from Ky. He has been preaching for fifty years, and an old fashioned Baptist, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to saints. He has spent all his living in organizing churches and Associations in South West Mo. He says he has had pistols and knives drawn on him, and said if he did not quit preaching his doctrine they would kill him. Another one of our Elders went to Kansas and administered the Lord's supper and was indicted in their court for using wine. But they still preach salvation by grace. Other preach how Jesus came and tried to save poor lost sinners. Baptists preach how he did save them, and are willing to ascribe all praise, honor and glory unto him, and not by any works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy has he saved us. Since I have been here I have lost a lovely child, and a kind and affectionate father. In Va., I dreamed that I had pawned my child for fifteen dollars, and if I didn't redeem it it would have to go. I thought I got a subscription and tried to beg the money, but could not get one dollar. In a week after this, death took its victim over all our efforts to save the child. I never knew what trials and troubles were before, but hope to be resigned to the will of him who doeth all things well. Here it is consuming fevers and exhausting pain, broken arms and legs. My child died in the agonies of group. I hear his voice now ringing in the anthem. My father that went bowed down with the infirmities of age. I see him walk now with the step of an immortal athlete forever young again.

I remark further, that we cannot get any idea on earth of the unions in Heaven. After we have been away from our friends a long time, and met them how our blood thrills, and how glad we are to see them. What will be our joys after we have crossed the seas of death to meet in the bright city of the sun those from whom we have long been separated? We hear people say, how you have changed, your hair is turned, wrinkles have come in your face, you are getting old, but oh when we stand before the throne, eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the change that will be there. In this world we only meet to part. It is good-bye, good-bye.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

W. H. DICKERSON.

Mansfield, Wright Co., Mo.

DRAR BRETHERN GOLD AND LESTER,
—Will you be so kind as to allow me the privilege of trying to write my travels and troubles of mind, if the Lord will enable me so to do, as I have been requested, though feeling unworthy and sinful.

May the kind hand of the Lord direct my pen while I make the attempt to write. About nine or ten years ago on Sunday, while going to my sassafras still this hymn came in my mind, "Am I a soldier of the cross, a follower of the Lamb? These words were repeated and I could not pass on for thinking of the meaning of them. When I reached the next verse, it seemed to give me an understanding that I never had before that I was not a soldier of the cross, a follower of the Lamb. I saw it would not be right for me to go up to heaven in my way, while others fought to win the prize and sailed through bloody seas.

These words sank in my heart and I don't believe that I ever had any understanding of any hymn before, though thought I had been singing for years. There was something strange to me. After the hymn came I thought that I would do right, but failed. I was a man with a very great temper, and would get mad, scold and go out to my work, and would promise if the Lord would spare me I would forsake my faults, but would fail. I quit some things, and thought I was as good as any one, but O my dear brethren, I found so great a mistake. In about a year after the hymn was impressed upon me as I do believe, was when I was condemned to death, that death Paul died. I was at home and went out about the edge of my yard when I saw myself, as I do believe, all lost, cut down. I went back and told my wife I wished to call for Mr. Barnes, a neighbor who lived near by.

But I did not tell her then what for. No one but those who have had the experience can tell what I came thro', no rest day nor night, but expecting to die and go down to an awful hell and felt it just. I could not say it was not me, but here am I Lord, and if he had said go down to destruction I would not have been surprised, but could have said nothing but justice. O Lord, but have mercy on me, but I could see no chance for me. It didn't look like it could be just to save such a sinner. I could see a better chance for any one else than for me, and would often find myself pleading for mercy, and would take my Bible and go to the old fields and the most lonesome places to try to read, but it gave me no rest; it condemned me. I would read and it seemed to me there was in every line a sentence of death and would shut my book to keep from seeing it, for it seemed like it came so near killing me it would to see it there. I went on so 'till one day I came to a mud hole, and Oh how glad I would have been to get in there if I could believe it would do me any good. I would have been glad to change my condition with the hog or dog, or anything else that had no soul to appear before the great God of heaven, but no relief, my troubles would be greater sometimes than others, then would come again and at one time I was in my wagon in my yard, and my wife, or her sister, was in it, and the other one by the wagon, and it appeared that the time had come for me to die. Brethren, I do believe I was made honest. So I told them I had to die and go to hell and it would be shortly, and that there was no other to blame for it. You know it is common for us to have some one to blame for what we do, but it is not so in judgment: if I am not deceived, I have been brought there. I had nothing against any one only myself, but oh my condition was my cry, no peace, no rest. I thought I would go crazy and others thought so too. My father and mother were then living about thirteen miles off, so I went over there and saw them and felt a little better for a short time, then worse. Oh I did not think I could stand it. Then it was that about the last effort was made by me that I could make, and all was in vain. I would look at the trees: they looked dark and lonesome, and if I had seen the devil coming out of the dark places to seize on me I would not have been surprised, so I did not stay long but started home, and when I started I felt a little better, but had not gone far before I began to grow worse, but I would keep all back from my wife, but could not for she was always good to me, and I did hate to trouble her with my condition: but the further I went the worse I got, 'till I could not keep from telling her, and how can I ever go back to that old dark home. I never saw such a place before, so dark and gloomy, and my neighbors all looking sad. I do believe my home was shown to me as the outer darkness that we read of in the Bible, and I knew that I had gone to all the dark places that had been on my mind, and tried to pray every way, and did all I could but it was all in vain, and I was going to that dark place and asked my wife how can I bear to go to that dark place? and she said William, it is as light there as anywhere. Then I saw the power of the Lord. I saw he had the power to do anything and even to save me, and the aching in my bosom ceased and my burden was gone, and my heart in praise. So I went on rejoicing in heart but kept it hid 'till we went about a half mile, and I said to my family that was with me, a change has taken place with me without a doubt, so I went on and met with some of my neighbors, who seemed to be in fine spirits, so I reached home. Dear Brother Gold, I do believe I died there. I know I could not do anything more, but I have a hope that the great God of Heaven did, pardon my sins and transgression. After this I remained out of my church for seven years, and found no comfort, until Aug. 26th, 86, and on that day Elder Jones and Elder R. W. Snider both preached. Elder Jones' text was, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. How he did feed and comfort me. It seemed that my soul gushed full of love for them. They both spoke about their troubles, and I felt that they were worthy of all grace and I was not worthy even to be among them, but yet it seemed that I would have given the whole world if I could, to have been with them in fellowship. After preaching they opened the doors of the church, and four came forward and told what the Lord had done for them, and found that I could witness their trouble, if I was not deceived, and these were received, and three of them were baptized that evening, and when they went in the water, I thought I would be compelled to go in there too. The preachers thought it would be well to constitute a church there, as it was about fifteen miles to the nearest church. They left an appointment to come back in November 1886. Then I was anxious to go, and I hope they preached that I believed, and when they opened the door of the church, the first thing I knew I was up among them, and I felt then that I had nothing to say, but hope I told my travels, and they received me, and I was baptized on the 19th day of November 1886, at ten o'clock, and at the water three others were received, my wife and her sister and my son, and I can't tell any of you how I felt.

Dear Brother Gold, remember us all in your prayers when it goes well with you. This is from your unworthy brother, if one at all.

IS EDUCATION REVELATION?

DEAR BRETHREN, GOLD AND LESTER:—I take hope by the power of the Almighty God to write a few words through the LANDMARK for the relief of my mind, and the benefit of your consideration.

It seems there are some that are inclined to believe that Paul was the greatest apostle, the most useful, and in fact a better apostle than any of the others, seemingly they say because he was educated.

Some brother inspeaking of himself and J. C. Philpot seems to think that God had done by them as he did by Paul! God knew just where to find a man that was able to do his business, and preach the gospel. What sort of business was it that Peter and John were doing, as told in the Acts, 3:7, also 4:13.

It seems some want to understand that God is dependant on education or those that have it, and they want to apply to the case of Paul for proof. Please see what Paul says to the Corinthians (2 chap.) Paul is not dependant on education, but on God. I am not opposed to education, any further than any other natural blessing.

So if education helps, so does natural food, so does clothing, money, land, riches, or anything that is deemed good for help naturally. But the important thing is the education that comes as the wind blows, the revelation of Jesus Christ and that alone. Yours in desire of truth.

WHY IS IT?

(Concluded.)

When children are turned loose to the winds, Arminians of every class do not hesitate to approach them: but when the proper oversight has been taken of them by their parents, they are not likely to be molested by any respectable arminian, while under parental care. I know some children of Primitive Baptist parents, to whom no honorable Arminian dare approach to influence them to fall in with him, especially when he knows whose children they are. Why is this difference? It is in a great measure because the parents take charge of their own children, and in showing interest in their children that they should they demand respect and all respectable people grant it.

Some parents console themselves in something like this; "Well, let them go, the Lord will bring them back if it is his will." That is true, but the Lord never preached such doctrine as that. The devil once preached a little sermon on that text to our Savior, but he did not put it in practice, neither has he commanded his people to do so, nor to tell any one else to do so. If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down, the angels will catch you. The son or daughter comes to father and says, "Father, may I join such a church? Well I rather you would not, but if you want to go and join, if you are a christian the Lord will bring you out of there." Does not that sound very much like what the devil said to Christ? Parents should no more consent to their children going contrary to that which they believe to be right than did Jesus to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple. We have no right to thus indulge upon the doctrine that God will finally save his people with an everlasting salvation.

I believe that God will ultimately save all his elect, let them go where they will, or do what they may, yet I do not believe this authorizes me to follow in ways, nor participate in things which he has not commanded or has forbidden.

The thought upon the doctrine of absolute salvation whence I draw comfort is' let come what may, let men deride, and devils assail, and bring to bear against me whatever they may, I cannot be over thrown, because greater is he that is for me than he that is against me. And when I can realize this precious truth I am humbled and made to rejoice in the God of my salvation and glory in the Lord. I do not wish to become reckless and vain-boasting because I feel that my salvation is of the Lord, and is therefore certain, while others trust in themselves in a great measure for salvation.

Parents should not fail to manifest the greatest consistent concern for their children, because others claim to be helpers with the Lord to the salvation of them. Because one man believes he can and should bring his children to Christ, is no reason why another man, who does not believe such doctrine, should turn his children over to that man to be proselyted.

While we cannot teach anyone our religion, it is very evident that Arminians in their schools do teach them their religion.

Where is the propriety, or consistency of Primitive Baptists allowing their children to attend the Sunday Schools of the various denominations, when they claim these schools to be nurseries to the church? Everything that they have instituted, even to their organization which they call the church, is for the conversion of sinners, which conversion is the same as proselyting in the days of Christ. And we have his word as to the result of that work. We believe conversion is necessary, but conversion without previous quickening and conviction is only a conversion from bad to worse. Besides it is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. I know some children of Primitive Baptists who have fallen into the meshes of Arminianism, who cannot treat the brethren of their parents with enough respect to show themselves respectable. A religion that causes the children to ignore even the common respect due to their parents can surely be of no benefit to either parents or children. I have noticed that wherever one has become identified with another denomination, who gives evidences of a work of grace in the heart, that one never loses due respect for his or her parents and for their religion in a friendly way. These children are not ashamed of their parents, nor the Primitive Baptists, but those proselyted ones are ashamed of their parents, their parents' brethren and their religion.

These thoughts will likely find some difference of opinion as to the position taken, which will be about as follows those who give their children good advice, and set before them good examples, and provide for them to go, and take them to meeting will have no fault to find to these thoughts and suggestions, but those who pay but little or no attention to their children, but turn them loose, or send them to the Sunday Schools and exciting meetings so common in the land, will no doubt find some objections. It is always the man who is to be hung who finds fault with the law and its executors.

P. G. L.

LOOK AT IT.

We publish the communication of Mr. Jewel that our readers may now and then see and read for themselves what the other side (the Arminian side) think of the bible.

It might be said that our people are prejudiced against others, and will not read their views, nor hear their preachers. The communication published is a fair expression of what other denominations hold and believe.

One side is true or the other. Which is it? If they are right then we cannot be. If we are right then they are not. For there is a great difference in the views.

1st. They hold that there is no election of grace or by grace taught in the bible, but an election of works only. That is that God elected only those to salvation that he foresaw would do good works and for doing these good works he elected them to salvation, or because they would persevere, and not that they might persevere and endure That is God foresaw who would persevere to the end, and he elected them, and therefore saved them and called them according to their works, and for or because of their good works. This is a fairly stated view of their position.

2nd. They hold that Christ died as much for those that are eternally lost, and will be damned, as he did for any of those that are saved—that he died as much for Judas as he did for Paul, or John. Hence that the death of Christ is not the cause of the salvation of any one at all, but that which determines or causes the salvation of any or all that are saved is something that they do or neglect to do, and could do if they would, or that it is of him that willeth and runneth, but not of God who showeth mercy.

3rd. They hold that God quickens all men, and thus commences the work of salvation in all alike, one as much as another, and leaves it to the chance of the creature's will whether he will finish it or not; or that God has formed a partnership with all mankind, and it is left to chance therefore whether any are saved or not.

4th. That it makes no difference even if the scriptural promises are addressed to the poor and needy, such as "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." For they say that all want to be saved, that every body hungers and thirsts after righteousness, for that there is no difference at all among men.

5th. That although God works in all men both to will and to do of his good pleasure, yet it is left wholly to the creature to carry on this work, and that he may neglect it and be lost. For although God wants to save every body yet he will not do anything in that direction until the sinner first encourages him by showing a willing mind. Or they wholly deny the power and purpose of God in the matter of salvation.

Perhaps if these people held a more God honoring doctrine than they do our people would go and hear them oftener.

What does Mr. Jewell mean by irrevocable decrees, or what does he report that I believe? I do not use such a term that I remember, for bible terms are preferable.

If he means by irrevocable decrees that God declared the end from the beginning, and whatsoever his soul desireth even that he doeth, then I confess I believe that. If the bible says the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand, (Dan. 12:10,) then I believe it. How could prophets foretell events even for one day if every thing hinges and turns on the will of man?

Could a prophet foretell even for one month what will come to pass, if nothing is certain to be accomplished until it is done. This would exclude all the realm of foreknowledge. Let us take up the case of Jezebel, that most people consider as a wicked woman. Elijah declared the word of the Lord concerning her, "The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel," Now this was spoken sometime before her death. How strange that a king's wife, proud and imperious as Jezebel was, should be eaten by dogs, and should be eaten too by the wall Jezreel. If nothing is certain to be accomplished until it is done, and all depends, or any part of it, on the will of man as the supreme determiner of events, how could one as well as hundreds of other events be known before hand?

Jezebel must be in a certain house. She paints her face and tied her head, perhaps to disguise her real character. She looks out of the window and said,

"Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?" Jehu who had to be anointed king in a strange way, had ascended the throne, and commanded to throw her down, and there looked down two or three eunuchs, and they threw her down, and she was trodden under foot, and dogs ate her by the wall of Jezreel, even though Jehu ordered her to be buried.

Or could Ahab have gone otherwise than he did? It was said to him that he should go up to Ramoth Gilbead and fall. For the Lord had shown the prophet that a lying spirit decoyed Ahab's false prophets to lie to him and entice him to go out and be slain.

Ahab goes into the battle and disguises himself, and enters the battle as a common soldier, thinking thereby to elude the prophet's word. But a man drew a bow at a venture. He knew not at all what he should do. Yet his arrow pierces the harness of Ahab, and Ahab is wounded and is taken away to die. So he died as it was said before that he would die.

There are hundreds of cases of events, in themselves improbable or out of the usual course of nature, or that no human ken could foresee, and all dependent on many other equally strange things that must also transpire before hand, that prophets have long before hand told should occur, and they have said so not with a peradventure or guess or probability, but with certainty, and every one of these things has been fulfilled without a single exception, whether they be good things or evil, and they have been all fulfilled just as foretold. Now call these decrees irrevocable or what you please, I say they are not dependant on the whimsical will of man, but an all-wise, infinite, will declares them before hand.

Mr Jewel espouses the weakest Arminianism that could ever be hatched up, namely 1st, that the Spirit of God quickens all men. 2nd. That God does not finish the work of salvation he begins in man.

3rd. That Christ as much died for all those that are finally lost as he did for any that are saved. No free willer could ask for any thing more frothy and vain than this. The devils even hold a better idea of the power of Jesus than that, for they believe and tremble, and they said to Jesus, "We know who thou art." They admitted his power. What is the value of quickening the dead if they do not live afterward? The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.

What does it amount to if God begins a good work and yet does not finish it? Paul certainly was confident of this very thing that God, who had begun a good work in them, would perform it until the day of Jesus Christ, Phil. 1:6.

Did Christ die as much for Judas as he did for Paul? Then in what sense does Christ save a sinner? If he died as much for the lost as for the saved what has he done for the saved, that he has not done for the lost? and how can they ascribe the glory of their salvation to Jesus saying, Thou art worthy, for thou hast redeemed us out of every nation &c under heaven, and hast made us kings and priests unto God.

Jesus says he has power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him, John 17:2. If Jesus has all power in heaven and earth, then what power can prevent him from doing the will of his Father in the salvation of his people?

The rich young man who came to Jesus that Jesus loved, and that went away sorrowful, gives good evidence of being a vessel of mercy in the fact that Jesus loved him; and that he went away sorrowful is proof that he was a subject of grace. If Jesus loved him is not that good evidence that he will save him? His sorrow shows an interest in the matter. He makes the inquiry that all quickened sinners, all distressed souls make. What must I do? What good thing shall I do to inherit eternal life? Jesus tells his disciples that it is possible with God to save the rich, and that all things are possible with him. How is that harmonized with the notion that there are millions of things that God begins and is not able to finish: for Arminianism says he tries to save every body, and tries as hard to save one as he does to save another, or tries as hard to save those who save themselves as he does to save those who will not let God save them, and therefore are lost. A wise man builds on a rock, a fool builds on the sand. But one is a wise man and the other is a fool. Then are they both alike? The wise man uses his wisdom in building on a rock, and the fool shows his folly in building on the sand.

The scriptures Mr. Jewel refers to explain themselves. His quotation, "Behold I stand at the door and knock" &c, is addressed to his own people, a church—The one addressed to the weary and heavy laden is addressed to subjects of redemption and of grace. The one that declares that Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost declares that he will save them. He never fails to do this. The text in Rev. 22, where the spirit and the bride say come &c—shows that this is not to those that are without, or on the out side, for they are lovers of lies and corruption.

The great issue he makes is that many are called while few are chosen. Hence he infers that all are called, and therefore all might, if they would, be saved, and therefore Christ died for all.

One thing to be remembered is that all do not want to be saved. Jesus says, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." We state the truth when we say that no man can come to Jesus, except the Father which sent Jesus draw him, and that all that the Father gave to Jesus shall come to him.

If men have the will to come to Jesus they do come. None that have the will to come to Christ ever fail to come.

The Jews were under the law or the covenant of works. As such they are addressed in the bible which states that they should obey and serve God, as all men should do. But no man that is carnal has the mind to keep the law, nor the ability. But men are held under that law in nature, and called upon to keep it. Its penalty is death. For whatsoever the law saith it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopt, and all the world become guilty before God.

The gospel is confirmed of God in Christ Jesus to every heir of promise, and sure to all the seed, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. For Jesus is the surety of his people, and all the promises of God are yea and amen to the glory of God the Father in him.

So we must notice both covenants in the bible, and give to each what belongs to it, rightly dividing the word of truth.

P. D. G.

"They rewarded me evil for good to the spoiling of my soul."

KINGDOM OF GOD.

When Jesus was born of a woman he did not enter into the Kingdom of heaven. As born of a woman he was under the law to redeem them that were under the law. Like David who gathered the material for the temple, but was not to build it himself, Jesus laid down his life for his people, and gathered the outcasts from the ends of the earth: but not as born of woman, or while in the likeness of sinful flesh did he enter into his kingdom. He was to purify the vessels of mercy by the washing of regeneration and after his resurrection by the renewing of the Holy Ghost.

It was through death and the resurrection, or as born, not of woman, but begotten of God, that Jesus was to enter into his Kingdom.

The thief on the cross saw the glory of Jesus as King of Saints whose Kingdom is not of this world, nor did any other seem to know this at the crucifixion. Only one witness confessed Jesus on the cross, and he was a thief being crucified with him. Surely then this was a matter of revelation. The thief said to Jesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy Kingdom. The thief here confessed that Jesus had not entered into his kingdom. Then the thief saw that the Kingdom of Jesus was not of this world: yet he was born a king, but he tarried and patiently waited. David was anointed a king long before he came to the throne, and was much persecuted before he was publicly crowned king. But he learned in his sufferings the lessons needed to fit him as a great and wise king to rule Israel. So Jesus learned obedience by the things which he suffered, and in the flesh passed through that ordeal of perfect suffering and obedience even unto death that freely and forever liberates all the redeemed from corruption; for by the one offering of himself he perfects forever them that are sanctified.

Jesus often tells his disciples that he must be put to death and rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and the remission of sins must be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. This was hid from his disciples until after his resurrection, and then it was opened or revealed to them. After his resurrection Jesus said, ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory? The apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost baptized them, preached that Jesus the Son of God was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, and was exalted at the right hand of God to rule and reign until his foes were made his footstool. Also in the second Psalm it is said, the Father speaking unto Jesus his son, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion: I will declare the decree; the Lord hath said unto me, thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee." In Acts 13:33 we are told that Jesus was born of God or begotten in the resurrection, and that the quotation from the 2nd Psalm was fulfilled in the resurrection. In Heb. he says, "And again, when he bringeth in his first begotten into the world he saith, and let all the angels of God worship him," Heb. 1:6. When God raised Jesus from the dead he ascended up on high, and led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men even to the rebellious. Then flew wide open the gates of glory, and the King of glory Jesus came in.

Thus Jesus was born of the flesh and took a body of death, and was partake of flesh and blood, and was put to death in the flesh, and made an end of sin by the sacrifice of himself; and when he was raised up from the dead he was begotten from the dead as born of God, and declared, manifested, to be the Son of God with power and great glory. He thus is the first born of God, the first begotten of God. His people are also begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to an inheritance incorruptible undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last times.

Jesus appears then as born of woman and as the first begotten of the dead and first born of God in the resurrection from the dead.

So his people are born of the flesh and then born again or born of God.

Now on the day of Pentecost Jesus entered into his glorious Kingdom, not of this world. He is the head of the church and must reign until the last enemy is destroyed which is death. All power therefore is in Jesus, who is the life and head of the church. One must of course be born again before he can see the kingdom of God which is not of this world. When one is brought into this spiritual kingdom, he is brought under the reign and power of Jesus who is king of saints. What a blessed dominion is this. It is a kingdom of righteousness and peace. All the subjects of this kingdom reign with Jesus, for they die no more being children of the resurrection, for over such the second death hath no power. It is by the resurrection of Jesus they are begotten again unto a lively hope, the hope of the resurrection. The quickening is always with Jesus who is the resurrection and the life. P. D. G.

Obituary.

JULIA A. FARRIS.

Died near Mt. Cross, Pittsylvania Co. Virginia, Oct. 31, 1886, Mrs. Julia A. Farris, wife of Deacon C. Farris. She never joined the church but she always manifested a due regard for worship and acknowledged that she had a good hope in Christ. Joining the church is a duty which all the children of God should perform, but a failure to comply with that duty will not exclude any of them from heaven. The new birth is the essential qualification for entering everlasting happiness.

I visited the family a great deal during the life of Brother Farris, and Mrs. Farris always seemed glad to see me and treated me with christian respect. She seemed to be devoted to her family and she showed the marks of a christian.

The family have my sympathy in their bereavement. Doubtless their loss is her eternal gain.

A. FRIEND.

MARY E. EDWARDS.

Sister Mary E. Edwards, daughter of Deacon Coleman Farris, was born May 17th 1845; was married to Mr. D. C. Edwards, Nov. 17th, 1861; joined the church in 1873 and died of consumption, May 1st, 1888. No doubt death was the door to endless joy with her, but her husband and children who survive her are deprived of her cheerful presence and good counsel.

Even in the early stage of her sickness she was aware of her approaching departure, yet it did not seem to alarm her. The faith which she had in life sustained her in death. As the flesh grew weaker, she became the more steadfast in the doctrine of salvation by grace. From my first acquaintance with her she seemed to be in bad health, nevertheless she was prompt to fill her seat in church meetings, thus leaving us an example after which we should follow. Would that all our members manifested a similar zeal.

Truly a good sister has fallen asleep in Jesus. In her death the community has lost a good neighbor; her children have lost a kind mother; her husband has lost an affectionate wife and the church has lost an excellent member. The bereaved ones have my sympathy and may their bereavement work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

A. BROTHER.

JOSEPH J. PORTER.

This brother was born June 1813, in the town of Tarboro N. C., and died in May 1888, making his age about seventy five years.

His father Ely Porter was a solid, old fashioned Baptist who lived in the troublous days of strife for the wells of water. He was a companion of Elder Joshua Lawrence, and they resided within a few miles of each other.

Brother Joseph Porter did not unite with the church until late in life. He was a member at the church at Tarboro for about fifteen years, and a faithful one he was. He loved a true Baptist because he loved the truth. He was very faithful to his church; and was its clerk and treasurer until his death.

It was my pleasure to stop often with him on my monthly visits to Tarboro. His character was worth studying and loving. He was noted for his candor, truthfulness, fearlessness of man and for his economy, his hatred of show and low things. He was the most gifted man in saving and taking care of every thing, without being ungenerally, I perhaps have known.

I was with him at the time he was attacked with his fatal sickness. He said he should die, and said he was ready, not afraid to die.

He owed no money, kept his matters correct and straight with his fellow man. He had everything as he wished it, so far as he could arrange his worldly matters. Being of a ripe old age, full of years, and feeble in health, he had nothing to keep him here. Though married twice and raising two sets of children, nice people too and well to do, yet even these, nor his wife a model house manager, could give him no attraction to stay.

He often spoke of the decay of morals and corruption of the times in which he lived, and said that people are much more corrupt than they were before the war.

He desired not to live, but was willing to fall asleep, being weary with the labors and infirmities of life.

What a blessing to be ready to depart and be with Jesus which is far better.

P. D. G.

ALICE TAYLOR.

Died in Monroe township on the 12th of June 1888 of measles Alice Taylor aged 7 years; also on the 5th of July with the same disease Lula Taylor, daughters of J. D. and M. A. Taylor. God has seen fit to remove these little jewels from earth to heaven for some wise purpose, we know not what, but may it be the means of drawing the parents nearer to God. It is hard to give up these dear ones, but while it wrings our hearts we must submit to the will of God and acknowledge his ways are the best.

We early see the black pall and the shroud,
We only see the sad sorrowing crowd,
We only see the dark side of the cloud:
God seeth the rest.

We only know of life's sorrow and tears,
We only know of its hopes and its fears,
• We only know of earth's sorrowing years.
God knoweth the rest.

The ways of our Father are right,
Tho' he sends us much sorrow and pain:
He giveth, He taketh, the dear ones back.
Oh blessed be his name.

These dear little sisters were not parted but a few days, they are now reunited in heaven where parting is no more. May God help the bereaved ones to bear up under their afflictions and may they strive to meet their loved ones in that better land where death and parting is known no more.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

The Silver Creek Association will convene at Philadelphia church, six miles South of Lenoir, Caldwell Co., N. C., on Friday before the 2nd Sunday in Sept.

The Elk River Primitive Baptist Association will convene with the Friendship church, Roane Co., W. Va., Sept. 14, 15, and 16th, 1888.

HENDERSON GROSS, c'lk.

The next session of the Mayo Baptist Association will be held with the Church at Axton Depot, on the Danville and New River Railroad, in Henry Co., Va. Commencing on Saturday before 1st Sunday in Sep. Visiting brethren are cordially invited to attend who will find good homes with friends near the church.

F. J. STONE.

The 6th annual session of the New Hope Association of Primitive Baptists convenes with the church at Antioch, Logan Co., Arkansas, on Saturday before the 4th Sunday in September, 1888. Brethren from the East or elsewhere are cordially invited to attend, especially ministers. If any should feel impressed to come this way, they must get off at Clarksville, on the Little Rock and Fort Smith R. R. Notify me or Eld. L. F. Griffin before hand, and we will be prepared to convey you to the Association.

P. H. JAMES.

Clarksville, Ark.

Point Remove Association, of Primitive Baptists, convenes with the church at Point Remove, Pope Co., Arkansas on Friday before the 3rd Sunday in September 1888. Ministers especially from the East or elsewhere are cordially invited to attend. If any should come they must stop at Morrilton, Arkansas on Little Rock and Fort Smith R. R. Notify brother Anderson Gordon, and he will meet you and convey you to the Association.

Brother Gordon's P. O. is Lewisburg, Arkansas. I will also state that our Association (New Hope) is in the North Western portion of the state. I locate it because I learn there is another of the same name in the central portion of this state.

Brother Gold, could not you, Elder Lester and Elder Greenwood come to see us? Could not some of our Georgia ministers come out this way? We are few in number, but have had several accessions this year to the church of which I am a member; and some growth in other churches. It cheers our poor souls to see them come and hear them tell the wonderful working of God's Holy Spirit with them, not what they have accomplished by their efforts, "This is the Lord's doings and it is marvelous in our eyes." What can we render unto the Lord for His manifold blessings? But I am reminded that I am so prone to forget His mercies. All praise and adoration is due unto His great and good name, "for His mercy endureth forever." May the Lord bless His Zion every where is the prayer of one of the least,

P. H. JAMES.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Elder John W. Gardner's post office is changed from Saulston N. C. to Goldsboro N. C.

Brother P. H. Wilson's post office is changed from Raleigh N. C. to Apex, Wake Co., N. C.

He desires preachers to visit them at Oak Grove.

Visitors coming to the Country Line Association by rail will be met at Durham and conveyed to and from Association ground. They should reach Durham on Friday. A general invitation is extended.

So many preachers are having lists of appointments that we cannot publish them in more than one issue; but that is enough. Keep your back numbers and refer to them to see when the appointments are to be filled.

For one insertion as much assures you they will be filled, as several would.

H Y M N AND T U N E B O O K. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soft-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs burst, etc. Remember.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

•The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

COMMUNICATED.

MR. GOLD, DEAR FRIEND:—I have thought a great many times I would write what I hope the Lord has done for my soul. Sometimes I feel that it is so little I am afraid it will not do, and then I think there has been a change in me in some way. I will tell some of my troubles, and I want you to tell me whether you think it is of the Lord or not.

The first time I took any notice of preaching was under Mr. Bodenhamer's preaching. I thought I never heard such preaching. His text was; The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. It seemed to me he preached to me and nobody else. It affected me so I could not help from crying to save my life. I tried to hide my tears but I could not. I thought he told me that I was a sinner. I felt that I was one, and tried to pray, but it appeared like it was a sin for me to pray.

Sometime after that Mr. Oakley staid all night with us, and he asked me some questions about my condition. It was strange how he knew anything about my trouble, but I thought if I was as good as he was I would never see any more trouble. Sometimes I would be in so much trouble I could not sleep at night. I would study about my condition, and think there is nobody like me. Sometimes my trouble would wear off for awhile, but I could not enjoy myself with other young people. Sometimes I would rather be by myself than to be in company.

I went on in this way for several years, thinking the Old School Baptists could tell my feelings better than any body else. I thought they could tell my feelings up to the time they were delivered and then they would leave me, and I was afraid I never would get there. In the summer of '83 I was in so much trouble I could not work to do any good.

I thought I would attend a protracted meeting and see if that would do any good, but all their talking and praying did not do me any good. I felt that there was nothing that I could do. Sometimes I would wish I had never been born. I could not enjoy anything. Sometimes I could not read the bible without shedding tears. It seemed there was a chance for others but none for me. I never told any body about my trouble for a long time. I was in company with Mr. Jones coming from an association one time, and told him more than I ever did before, and after that I wished I had not told him any thing, for I thought I had made him believe that the Lord was dealing with me when he was not. O such a miserable being as I was. I did love to read the LANDMARK, but it seemed like I was different from any one else. I tried to pray one night that if I was one of the Lord's that he would show me in a dream, and I dreamed that I was on a log house, and it caught on fire and it fell in a pit, and I thought there were some men standing at one side, and they took me by the hand and helped me out, and there was no scorch or burn on me. I woke up and could not help from thinking about my dream. A few nights after that I dreamed that I was at meeting and Mr Jones was preaching, and I never heard such preaching in my life, and when I woke up I was speaking these words, O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men. I did not know that I ever had seen that verse in the bible. I went to looking for it and found it. I felt better. I felt the Lord had answered my prayer. My burden left me, but I did not know whether to claim it or not, but I believe that there had been a change some way. I felt like I loved every body.

I cannot help but love the Old Baptists better than any other denomination, but I never get to hear them often. I read the LANDMARK, and enjoy that.

I often think of Mr. Isaac Jones and Mr. Oakley, I wish I could hear them preach again. I have told some of my troubles. I want you to pray for me. A friend.

AMANDA S. EDWARDS.

Remarks.

A good experience this is that the Lord has wrought in our friend, if I know what the dealings of the Lord with his people are.

There is no better evidence of a work of grace than is found in ones hearing of the gospel preached in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. This always causes one to see himself a sinner; and feel his own vileness, which leads such to prayer, repentance and hope, or to the godly exercises of soul that accompany salvation.

Then the love of brethren is good evidence of the Lord's gracious dealings with his people. The fear of the Lord, wherein he appears glorious, gracious and merciful to poor sinners, is conclusive evidence of salvation. Christ crucified and risen is the glory of believers. My friend has so much to thank God for and take courage. May she be enabled to follow Jesus in baptism, and thus confess his name and rejoice with me little flock whom Jesus feeds.

P. D. G.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN AND CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:—I have claimed a hope in Christ nearly sixty years. I from a child loved to hear christians talk about religion.

I lived my single life a poor blind sinner. Soon after I married I saw myself a justly condemned sinner. I was weeping day and night and could not sleep nor eat. My husband was convicted. He was praying and seeking. He professed religion and joined the church, and left me without a hope. Oh I felt that I was left behind almost heart-broken.

Soon after that I went to see my brother-in-law baptized. I was a poor distressed sinner begging for mercy. I felt that my prayer was nothing. I was so wretched and undone. Myself and husband went to the Ebenezer church, and brother William Brown preached. His text was, The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek: he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted. He asked if there was any person that wished to be prayed for to come up to the pulpit. I started but fell on my way helpless. It seemed there I got relief until I got home. I then became distressed for fear I was deceived. I went off again to pray the Lord to show me my condition. These words came to me, Do not be discouraged for Jesus is your friend. I could not take it for religion. I then went to the spring praying, and it seemed that a flow of love to God burst in my breast. I felt that I never should see any more trouble, but I had doubts soon and fears. I would go to the church and think I wanted to be with them, but I felt so unworthy for six or seven months.

I never shall forget the day I joined the church. Cousin John Yarborough sang, "How happy are they who their Savior obey;" I went up but could not express my feelings, my heart was so full. I told part of my experience and was received at Ebenezer church, Person N. C., with my husband Samuel Satterfield.

Myself and he remained until his death. Since his death I moved my membership to Stories Creek with my children. He has left me here a poor afflicted sufferer. I believe he is now in heaven. I have been on my bed going on three years. What I have suffered tongue cannot express, but Jesus has been a precious Savior in all my afflictions and bereavements. He has come to my relief. I believe salvation is of the Lord, and he will save his people. I have many doubts, but the good Lord shows his smiling face and all his right.

Brethren and christian friends pray for me. May God bless and save you all is my prayer forever.

JOANNA SATTERFIELD.

EXPERIENCE.

BROTHER GOLD:—I believe I have an impression to write my experience, if I have one. Sometimes I am afraid it may all be imagination with me, I am yet in the gall of bitterness. Though I can say in the language of Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee, for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

I am so sinful it may be wrong for me to write these words. So what am I to do? I have had this desire to write for several years, so now if the Lord is with me I will try to do so. If I am one of his chosen ones I know he will never leave me. I do not doubt Him, nor His promises, but myself. I am so prone to do wrong, feel so unworthy to receive such merciful blessings as He is daily bestowing upon me, how can it be that my name is written in the Lamb's book of life? Surely nothing but the mercy of God, and the blood of the precious Savior could save such a sinner as I am.

When a little girl I believed the Primitive Baptist to be the true church. My parents believed so too. They were not members. I would go to meeting to hear the gospel preached in its purity, but could not understand as I hope I do now, yet I could not help from crying. I felt so guilty, but I tried very hard to keep any one from knowing it.

As I grew older I grew harder, and enjoyed gay company, and dancing as much as any one, for a season. After I was married my thoughts were turned on my sinful condition. What a helpless being I was. I went to hear the truth preached every time I well could but did not get much consolation, for I felt more condemned every time, yet I would go back, for a lost sheep will keep bleating around the fold. The Baptists looked lovely to me. I did wish I was one, but I never dared to talk with them. It took me all the time to keep them from knowing I felt concerned. After awhile my dear mother went to the church. I was very glad indeed for her to go, but I knew myself to be so sinful I could not bear to see her baptized, though I wanted to do so. In vain I tried to frame an excuse for not going. I wanted a cloak for my sin. But before the day for her to be baptized my husband had a large boil on his back, so I had an excuse. Then I was so unhappy. I felt like I was lost and ruined. I then read the bible more but could get no relief. One night I retired feeling miserable on account of sin. I could not rest. I heard something so powerful and solemn, as the rush of mighty waters. I did not understand what it was for several minutes. Then I felt these words with power, "It is the voice of God." I could not see why such a sinner as I knew myself to be, could be allowed to hear His voice. I did not feel any better but more condemned, still I felt that I must search the scriptures. "For in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Soon after this one night I read some as usual, then went to bed, but I do not think I slept. I was so miserable. I thought I was without God and without hope in the world, and death and everlasting punishment was my doom. I knew it was just. I could not ^{o'} mur, for who can lay anything to ^{o'} God's charge? Oh I felt to be a woman who needed a whole Savior, a Savior whose power is not limited, a Savior who had saved his people in the eternal mind of God before the world was. I knew if I could but touch the hem of His garment it would be enough, but of myself I could do nothing, without He saved me I should perish, not even a good thought, not one good act could I offer to God. I knew the flames of everlasting punishment must consume me if He did not extend His mercy.

I was entirely cut off from human aid, higher grew the flames and more awful my condition, for it seems to me I was almost surrounded by the flames of Satan's rage. My desire then was Jesus, just to touch the hem of His garment but could not reach high enough for that. So on my knees I must try to pray. My prayer was, Lord be merciful to me. I believe my whole mind, heart, and soul went to God in the prayer, for just as my soul uttered the words Jesus appeared to me. He was between me and the fiery darts of Satan. I was on his right side. In a still small voice, but distinct and sweet He spoke these words of Life to me, "Your faith has saved you." Instantly every care and trouble was gone. He was altogether lovely, so pure and holy. He had heard my prayer. He had caused me to touch His garment, it had the desired effect, is it not a happy thought to look and believe on Jesus?

Tongue can never express the sweet comfort and peace,

Of a soul in its earliest love.

For awhile all was joy. Then I wanted to go to the church to be baptized, still I had, as I have yet, doubts and fears, afraid to go and afraid to stay away. I would think, can it be possible I am saved. I know there is nothing impossible with God. Will they receive me, for with the dear old Baptists is where I did and do want to be. Now I could get sweet comfort from reading the scriptures, for I hoped the promises were to me. My hope was too sacred to tell to any but old Baptists. I felt too unworthy and weak to go to them. So I would remain where I was. But my troubles began to be many on account of my disobedience. I thought it my duty to be baptized, but kept waiting, until I became so wretched I was afraid God would visit me with some heavy judgment before another opportunity. So I promised, if I live until next 4th Saturday I will go.

I can but perish if I go, I am resolved to try,
For if I stay away I know, I must forever die.

The church received me. Brother Jesse Baker baptized me. I told them I wanted to go then to the water. I could not wait, till 3, o'clock. I was afraid to wait but did not tell them so. I may be deceiving the church, but I am glad I followed the dear Savior into the liquid grave. If I am deceived, my prayer is yet the same, Lord be merciful to me a sinner, for I have no goodness to plead yet. I have less confidence in the flesh, "For all flesh is as grass." I feel less than the least, if one at all.

Sometimes my fears are almost overwhelming, but I am not left without a sweet hope, for I know I am changed, if not from nature to grace, there is a change some way.

Not long ago I heard a dear and gifted brother preach the truth as it is in Jesus, it was manna to my hungry soul, but I was afraid I did not belong to the ransomed throng. When he spoke to me, I felt so little I could only give him my hand, could not converse with him any, the next day I told him I felt something like the poor publican, I could not so much as raise my eyes. His answer was very comforting to me: he said, I felt so too this morning, I could hardly hold up my head. If such able ministers feel so, how can I escape. So I want to be thankful for every thing just as it is, for "without controversy great is the mystery of godliness."

I united with the church Saturday before the 4th Sunday in August 1878. Please pray for me when God so directs your mind. Yours in hope.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

We the presbytery viz, Elders Warren Graves, Ellis Faucett and W. E. Slade met with the church at Durham, and messengers from sister churches who wished to be constituted into an Associational Capacity, and after prayer by Bro. W. E. Slade, conference convened.

Five churches were represented by messengers, viz: Durham church by Bro. Robert Justice and Bro. O. B. Amey; White Lend church by Andrew Leath and Bro. Alex. Fuller, White Oak church by Bro. Squire Smith; New Center by Bro Warren Graves; Mill Grove by Bro. Columbus Holman.

The letters of the above churches were received upon being found orthodox and in order. Mill Grove was not received, as she was not in order.

The Association resolved to adopt the following plan or constitution for the future government of the Association.

PREAMBLE.—From a long series of experiences we, the churches of Jesus Christ, being regularly baptized upon a profession of our faith in Christ, are convinced of the necessity of a union of churches in order to perpetuate harmony and communion among us, and to preserve a correspondence with each other in our union. We therefore propose to maintain and keep the orders and rules of our Association according to the following plan, or government. (See Church History, pages 708 and 709, articles 1—15) which we adopted and hold as our sacred rule and government.

They agreed to hold their first Association with the church at Durham, in Durham Co. N. C., commencing on Saturday before the 1st Sunday in October, A. D. 1889, and that Bro W. E. Slade preach the introductory sermon. After which we pronounced them an organized body in an Associational capacity. This day and date above written.

ROUGH PREACHING.

We have often heard the remark that the Primitive Baptists preachers are too rough on other denominations. That is a common or almost universal objection to Old Baptists, especially by other denominations; and we sometimes hear it from our own ranks, and knowing it to be the case, it has raised in my mind an earnest enquiry of this kind, how far ought we to go in that direction? Should we come out in plain terms, or should we expose errors in a round about way? Ought we to be open, honest and bold, or ought we to be hidden and afraid to speak our sentiments? Doubtless this question is fully answered in the Holy Scriptures, for they thoroughly furnish the man of God unto all good works. So to that Holy Book let us go, and humbly submit to its teachings. The first scripture I will notice is 2nd, Tim. 2: 24. "And the servant of the Lord must not strive, but must be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves etc. To strive means to struggle in opposition; therefore the servant of the Lord should not strive in opposition. In opposition to what shall he not strive or labour hard? In opposition to sin? Christ did, for in his resisting sin he resisted even unto blood. In other words he shed his blood in the deadly struggle against sin.

We are told that Paul disputed daily in the school of one Tyrannus. I suppose he labored hard to prove both by scripture, reason and argumentation that his doctrine was right, and theirs wrong, and that he was a worshipper of the true God, while their worship was false. He reasoned also before Felix on faith, righteousness, and a judgment. The word may be used in a bad sense, or in a good sense, or we may strive in a bad spirit, or in a good spirit. Paul and Barnabas on one occasion contended, and the contention became sharp as to whether it was proper to take Mark with them on their preaching tour, and as they could not agree they parted asunder, one going one way, the other another. They simply differed on this one point, not a point of doctrine so as to cause a division in the church. They could not avoid this contention because each thought he was right, so they must talk the matter over in order to ascertain who was right and who was wrong. Paul could not conscientiously yield his honest convictions, simply because Barnabas thought different'y, and remain faithful; neither could Barnabas; but certainly there ought to be much caution in contending against a brother's opinions, lest we use bone-breaking expressions, and we be found striving for the mastery instead of striving for the Master.

Paul once withstood Peter to the face, and he never blamed himself for it either, because, said he, Peter was to be blamed: Gal. 2; 11. The scriptures require of preachers to be gentle unto all men, therefore when Paul disputed in the school of Tyrannus he must have done it in a gentle and meek spirit, else Tyrannus would not allow him such privilege, but certainly he did not yield a single gospel point, neither did he act the coward, for although he showed the meekness of an ox, he also showed the boldness of a lion; not that he was like an ox in one debate, and like a lion in another, but he was humble and bold in every speech, and he was like a man also. In 1st, Tim 3: 3 Paul instructs Timothy to guard against ordaining men to the ministry who are strikers and brawlers. A striker, as it reads in the margin is one who is ready to quarrel or offer wrong. We may be ready to strike with the fist or with words, and a striker in the sense of the text be one who is quick to resent a small wrong, especially to resent it in a carnal or fleshly spirit. When the Savior was reviled he reviled not again. A brawler is a quarreler, especially an angry quarreler. Well I guess every one is angry when he quarrels. Any one who exposes and opposes error in a brawling or quarrelsome spirit will not fail to displease God, injure the cause, and also himself. Now while this is true, still it is true also that a faithful minister will as pointedly as he can declare all the counsel of God as the scriptures abundantly show. In Matt. 3: 7, we are told that John, the Baptist, when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, said, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come." A viper is a poisonous serpent, and Pharisees and Sadducees, if united with believers in Christ in a church capacity, would be as the bite of a serpent to our natural bodies; therefore we ought to be as watchful, or do the best we can to keep out heretics as to take in believers. Pharisees were conditionalists, and in that respect all who believe in salvation to be obtained on conditions performed by the creature are Pharisees, still they are not called Pharisees, but Arminians, from James Arminius, a noted conditionalist of the sixteenth century.

The Sadducees disputed the resurrection of the bodies of saints and sinners, and that there are neither angels or spirits. What poisonous doctrine that would be to the church, splitting and rending it asunder. But John did not make it the one theme of his preaching to call them vipers, that of course was true and right in its place, but there are other things especially true. We could not fatten sheep by chunking wolves, neither would the sheep be safe if we did not point out or keep off the wolves. John was not too rough, neither was he too soft. Either would have been extreme, and extremes are dangerous and should be avoided. Suppose John had spoken to them in an angry or sarcastic voice with an angry countenance? They could justly have said to John's brethren your preacher was mad to day; he ought to be a better man than that; or if John had said to those Pharisees and Sadducees. I know you are all honest and your intentions are good, and I am sorry for you, would he not have been unsound and too soft? It is not right to rail against devils, neither is it right to pity them, lest we try to show ourselves more pitiful than God is. It is true all mankind belong to one common brotherhood, as natural men and women, and should be treated as such in that sense:

hence the expression in the scripture, 'peace and good will to men;' but as religionists, others are not to be countenanced at all, for they are called wolves, greedy dogs, tares, children of the devil; and we had about as well brother the devil as to brother his children; and to bow down to their gods, or their sinner-saving machines or institutions, as they claim them to be, is nothing short of spiritual adultery and the worst kind. Of course it is quite a punishment to me to see a brother or sister paternizing the abominations of Arminianism, prominently among which are the Sunday Schools. Should we do as John did when modern religionists offered to be one with us in religious union or compact? We would treat them as we would vipers. The 23rd, chapter of Matthew is exactly in point on this subject. Christ begins by warning both his disciples and the multitude against their religious enemies, to-wit; the Scribes and Pharisees. Should we not also in as plain language as he used warn the non-professing world, and the saints against what we know to be false religion? How can we declare all the counsel of God if we don't do it? It is not only right but a daily binding on every gospel minister. In that same chapter he says, "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; for ye devour widow's houses, and for a pretence make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. I suppose what is meant by their devouring widow's houses is that they begged or otherwise obtained from poor people, widows, &c., their hard earned living, and used it themselves for their own support, while proselyting or converting. Of course they required no change of heart, but only a desire to flee from the wrath to come. Their zeal was commendable, had it been in a right direction. Modern religionists would do the same now perhaps, and Arminianize the heathen, and our own people. Well ought not such to be exposed, both publicly and privately? Should we not, if we have any love for God and man, warn the people against these purse-plunderers? Greedy dogs

Isaiah calls them. Their great love for God and the souls of men, and their prayers for the salvation of the heathen is mere pretence and hypocrisy; so says the Savior, Matt. 23:14.

Another charge against them, and to their own faces in the presence of the multitude and the disciples, was that they shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; they neither went in themselves, nor suffered them that were entering to go in. The kingdom of heaven in this place seems to mean, not only the following of Christ by openly confessing him, but the privileges and comforts that accrue to one in so following him. By teaching it was necessary to be circumcised and to keep the law etc., in order that, or as a means of salvation, they bewitched many as Paul said the Galatians had been, or rather were, and thus keep even some who were born again in bondage so far as their understanding was concerned. Another way they were kept from professing Christ was by being so popular themselves, whereas the religion of Christ was so unpopular that his own children would not confess him lest they be put out of the Synagogues. He would gather Jerusalem's children as a hen doth her brood under her wings, but they, that is Jerusalem, would not; they were afraid of popular opinion. Like the nine lepers seemed to be whom he cleansed of their leprosy; but only one with a loud voice, or in a public way, gave glory to God. I guess the others were afraid they would be called hardshells, and, for aught I know, tried to conceal their cowardice by saying, "I am afraid I am not worthy." These Pharisees said if they had lived in the days of the prophets they would not have helped to kill them, but even then they were hating the doctrine of the prophets as set forth by Christ, and in their hearts murdering him, even so now, Arminians are torturing the doctrine of the apostles, and putting it to an open shame as their persecutors did them, and in their hearts hating Primitive Baptists. This may seem to be very strong language, but I could put it stronger, and would not be unscriptural.

I know they are ignorant of the fact that we are right but they are willingly ignorant. Just as mankind at first were not willing to retain the natural privilege of God, for they had a natural knowledge of him, but they wilfully turned from him, Rom. 1st. Hence we often hear the Savior reasoning with the Pharisees in language like this, if you believe not me, believe for the works sake. The works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me, and if satan cast out satan how can his king stand. They ought to have known better than to accuse him of casting out devils by Beelzebub, the chief of devils. So theirs was wilful blasphemy for which they should never be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come; but ever in danger of eternal damnation, Mark 4: 28. Of course the saints have never committed that sin, for they are not in danger of eternal damnation. If they could not have believed him why did he rebuke them for their unbelief? Even devils believed and trembled. Ought not they to have believed him to be the Christ when he would affirm he was, and in connection with the claim that he was the Christ: raise the dead? Would God in that way have sustained him had he not been telling the truth? Was it not wilful obstinacy not to believe he was the Messiah when he raised a putrid, rotten corpse as Lazarus, who had been dead four days? I mean ought they not to have assented to his claim of being the Christ? For their wilful rejection of him he sent that awful destruction of Jerusalem wherein hundreds of thousands perished, and over whom he as a man wept when he prophetically told them of it.

Paul said to one who endeavored to turn the deputy from hearing the word. "O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the dead, thou enemy of all righteousness wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord. Would it be wrong to address the perverters of the word now of days as Paul did in his day, or shall we say, well, poor things, they don't know any better you are all honest so we are sorry for you. But even Michael, the Archangel, when contending with the devil, did not bring a railing accusation against him, but said, "The Lord rebuke thee." Jude 9th. Then surely we ought not to rail, when exposing and contending with the emissaries of the devil. Paul in declaring salvation is of grace in the very next verse affirmed it was not of works, so we see he showed both sides of the question. He not only affirmed what was right, but he repudiated the wrong, just as the putting of white linen by the side of filthy rags makes the linen look more desirable, and the rags less. Just as the exposing of error at the same time we preach the truth makes the truth shine more glorious, and error look the more hateful. David says in Psalms 139th, 21, do not I hate them, oh Lord that hate thee, and am I not grieved with them that rise up against thee. I hate them with perfect hatred, I count them mine enemies.

But in my speaking of false doctrines I have generally put it this way. I don't hate Arminians, but I hate Arminianism. But was I bold enough? Was not I rather soft? I ought to have said I hate Arminians. That is what David would have said, and did say in substance. Of course I don't hate men and women, as such, but as religionists I am not authorized to love them, and if God doesn't hate them the scriptures read very strangely to me, for therein they are called dogs, wolves, greedy dogs, tares, hypocrites, pretenders, devourers of widows houses, children of evil, children of wrath, children of the devil, liars, blasphemers, murderers, etc. We ought to adhere to the form of sound words and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and do so, not in words which man's wisdom teaches, but which the Holy Ghost teaches, 1 Cor. 2. 13. So we see that it is our duty to use these very words which the Holy Ghost uses in denouncing God's enemies, and not to soften down to please men, nor to rail or strike with fleshly weapons. A Presbyterian lady one sad in my presence 'that she disliked to hear one denomination run down another.' I answered her that I knew why she disliked such preaching, because, said I, you take it that all denominations were Christ's churches, and if I thought so I would be as you are, but I don't think such is the case.

There are no branches of the church, but the individual members. There are no denominational branches, and there is but one true church; all others are harlots. "Come out of Babylon, my people," says the Scripture. Again "he that is joined to an harlot is of one flesh." By staying with them, ye are bidding them God-speed; hence ye are partakers of their evil deeds. How can you stay among a people whose doctrine gives your experience the lie, and whose prayers and sermons are but little if any, better than blasphemy? How can you stay among those who are neither experimentally, doctrinally, organically, nor practically the church of Christ? The Lord help you, Amen.

SMITING.

"Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil which shall not break my head; for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities," Ps. 41: 5.

David, the sweet singer in Israel, seems to have been a man full of love for his brethren and for his God. And amid all his afflictions he seemed never to lose sight of the fact that he was responsible to God for all his acts. He prayed to the Lord to deliver him from his enemies, from the ungodly, and such as sought after his life, and would have had them cut off and destroyed. But his whole soul seemed to be drawn out in love to those whom he esteemed to be righteous. When he was overtaken in a fault he owned up like one that feared God, and acknowledged that he had sinned; prayed unto the Lord not to enter into judgment with him, and acknowledged that no man in God's sight was justified, or rather said, "For in thy sight shall no man be justified."

Ps. 143: 2. "For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; for he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead. Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me, and my heart within me is desolate." 3 and 4th verses. Under the smiting of the enemy David seems to quake and cry. In like manner, all of God's dear people often are led to mourn and sigh in bitterness of soul. But this wonderful man when smitten by his enemies, turns to the God whom he loved and plaintively cries unto him. "Deliver me O Lord, from mine enemies; I flee unto thee to hide me." 9th verse. Oh what a glorious hiding-place. For here they are sure of protection. But how different are the smitings. The wicked smite with the fist of wickedness, smite to kill and to destroy, to disgrace and to belittle. Consequently the child of God strives to keep out of the way of such smiters, flees to the Lord, to hide from them. But not so when the righteous smite. There is no deadly weapon in the hands of the righteous. But it is esteemed by the man after God's own heart, as a kindness. "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness." I have no fears from it, their smiting is full of love; no sting follows it, no ghastly wound is made by it, no scar is left by it. No pain or hurt followeth it. But to the contrary I am benefited by it, a kindness has been done me, for it proveth to me that he is watching for my good, his gentle smiting causeth me to look to the path for my feet, to examine my surroundings. Had the righteous no love for me, they could have no heart-felt desire for my safety. So I may be assured when I am smitten by him that is because his or her love in the spirit, that it has been in love to me that the smiting has taken place. Had he not have been full of love to me, he would have smote with the fist of wickedness. But not so. The smiting has been with no murderous intent, but only to cause me to be more on my guard, lest I be unmindful of my duty. Therefore it is a kindness, not a bruising, but a healing of what might be a sore.

"Let the righteous smite me." Why should I complain should the righteous smite me. Is not the hand of God in it? Surely the Lord directed the hand of the righteous when they smite, or it certainly could not be regarded by the Psalmist as being a kindness. But in smiting it is to be feared that the flesh prompts even the child of God sometimes to smite, when this is the case, it cannot really be said to be the smiting of the righteous. But is the fleshly man for the time getting the ascendancy, and there is no kindness in it, but it is damaging in a degree to the one who is smote, yet in truth the smiter is generally the worst injured, because he has given way to the flesh and thereby dishonored God and did despite to the spirit. Let the righteous smite me and not the fleshly man.

"And let him reprove me." I would not be understood that David was derisive to have the righteous smite or reprove him. But he would say, if it must be that I am smitten or reprov'd, let it be done by the righteous. It is not a desirable thing to be reprov'd. But if needs be that I am reprov'd let it be done by the righteous. For there can be no exposure, no desire to disgrace, or humiliate me before men, But should the righteous reprove me, it is an evidence that he is fearful that some evil is likely to befall me, or that he sees the signs of approaching disease, and being desirous for my welfare he administers his reproof, which is so seasoned with grace that it acts like an excellent oil. "Let him reprove me it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head." Oil has a soothing effect. Then it must be that my sorrows are soothed. If I have erred in any sense, this excellent oil will have a happy effect, it will drive me to self-examination, yea it will cause me to "look to the hole of the pit from whence I have been digged." This excellent oil will smooth my head, not break it; will cause no aches. But rather heal. It will not throw me into feverish excitement, or raise my passion, or produce anger. But to the contrary will produce a desire in my heart to be humble and forgiving to all. The Psalmist said, "Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over." Ps. 23; 5. Probably when the righteous reprov's, it may be as an anointing, if so it will not be damaging in the least. I need not fear or grumble because of it but rather rejoice that it is the righteous into whose hands I have fallen. Oil will make the face to shine, so that the image of the blessed Saviour may be depicted in my countenance. Therefore I fear not the reproofs of the righteous. For it is the kind of treasure that bringeth oil into the house of the righteous; God giveth the "oil of joy for mourning." Isa. 61: 3. Then if I feel to believe that the righteous has smote me I am not hurt. If he has reprov'd me he hath given me an excellent (not a common) oil that shall not break my head.

But the Psalmist, although willing to bear the smiting and reproofs of the righteous, could not endure the thought that the wicked should prevail. Therefore his prayer was in their calamities. He would ask for their overthrow, and their complete destruction, which I think is the prayer of the saints to-day, not the eternal damnation of wicked men, but that their wickedness be completely brought to naught. May the Lord bless Zion, and keep her in peace, and may her watchmen look well to their going, preach Christ and him crucified with power to the discomfoting of the hosts of Anti-christ is my humble prayer. May the Lord make us faithful.

APPOINTMENTS CALLED IN.

Brother Gore's appointments are called in. The following letter will be sad news to many.

P. D. G.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, MY VERY DEAR BROTHER:—Allow me through the LANDMARK to announce the fact that I am utterly unable to travel, as my able physician, Dr. McGougan M. D. can better testify, I being under his treatment, in consequence of which I am forced to stay at home. I think it doubtful as to my recovery sufficiently, to enable me to resume traveling again at an early day; so with much love, and as I hope, christian sympathy to and for the many dear brethren and sisters who have so persistently urged on me to visit them, and to whom I so much delighted to preach what I verily believed to be the truth, and that which, even now, amidst my almost constant and indescribable suffering cheers and comforts me, and which I do hope will comfort me in death, the sweet doctrine of salvation by grace and grace alone.

Please pray for me while my harp hangs on the willow, and if I should never meet you on earth any more, Oh, that we may meet in heaven. Your afflicted brother,

Clarendon, N. C.,

MORTALITY—LIFE.

One of Paul's wonderful sayings is, "That mortality might be swallowed up of life."—2 Cor. 5 : 4. Let us consider its precious meaning. The Bible teaches the mortality of MAN; and none can dispute that man is mortal, that is, subject to death. "Thou shalt die" is the sentence of the Supreme Law-giver upon man, the sinning creature, who was made under the divine law. The sinless angels in heaven are not mortal and shall not die. Therefore those words, "Mortality swallowed up of life," cannot apply to them, because they have no mortality, but are already full of life. Of his people as lost sheep, "sick and ready to die," the good Shepherd said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish." Therefore, if it were not for his coming, and his gift to them, they should die and perish. This is the meaning of mortality: and we who hope for life and immortality are such mortal beings, "Because of sin." For we may trace our mortality, and all our misery to our sins. And man sinned willingly, and so he brought corruption and mortality upon himself. "God made man upright.

The Bible applies mortality to the body of man. To his brethren, Paul says, "Your mortal bodies."—Rom. 8 : 2. "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15 : 53. "For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal life."—2 Cor. 4 : 2. Christ shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. 3 : 21, Paul uses all these terms, "your mortal bodies, this corruptible, this mortal, our mortal flesh, our vile body," as applying to ourselves, and to our dying bodies. It would be trifling with words to say that, "your mortal bodies" are different from our vile body, or that 'this mortal and our mortal flesh' are not the same; for a man has only one body, and all those qualities belong to it. For it is a body of flesh, and a corruptible, vile body; a sinful, decaying suffering, dying body. Mortality is stamped upon it. Therefore man himself is called mortal: for man is identical with his body and is a bodily creature. He is not a spirit or an angel; for "God formed man of the dust of the ground;" and though he was made a living soul, yet he is of the earth earthy, as Paul affirms, So much is man mortal,

But the text speaks of mortality being swallowed up of something greater and mightier than itself. Is it death that shall swallow up mortality? Oh no! for mortality is death, and the same thing cannot swallow up itself. Death may swallow up all the living, indeed, and shall; but here it is not the living or life that shall be swallowed up, but the dying or mortality. "That mortality might be swallowed up of LIFE." This is marvelous and glorious. "Death is swallowed up of victory." This written saying shall be brought to pass said bold Paul. But when shall this be? "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then.—When the last trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed, then shall it be said that "Death is swallowed up in victory." Yea, then shall mortality be swallowed up of life! "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8: 21. How certainly this embraces this corruptible body! Language could not be stronger or plainer to express a fact. Paul did not play on words, for he was in great earnest. And while he was no more a Pharisee, neither did he go to the other extreme and become a Sadducee, and deny the resurrection of our mortal bodies in life and immortality.

"For we that are in this tabernacle do groan being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Paul thus clearly and definitely tells why we that are in this earthly house or tabernacle, our mortal body, do groan, and how we desire release from our burdened state, our bondage of corruption. It is because our body is dead or mortal on account of sin, so that Paul, and each heir of salvation, is made to exclaim, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Sin lurks in our mortal flesh, and its end is death. Therefore we are in a state of captivity, of unwilling subjection to vanity and affliction, suffering and evil; yet in hope of a happy deliverance from it all.

And how do we desire and expect to be made free from our burden and groaning in this tabernacle? Is it by putting off this mortal body forever? So said the Sadducees, and so say the infidel, and the non-resurrection Baptist. But not so did Paul say, hear him: "Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon." That we who are in this earthly house or body of mortality may be clothed upon and not unclothed, nor found naked. But how Paul shall we be clothed upon? He answers: "That mortality might be swallowed up." Wonderful. This means that mortality shall be subdued and overpowered, by a greater power than itself, that is, than death. "Swallowed up of life," says blessed Paul. O this is most wonderful! Death swallowed up!

Mortality made immortal! The victory given us over the last enemy! Yea over the boasting grave! Sin and groaning, corruption and bondage, pain and death gone forever! Our corruptible and mortal bodies quickened, changed, and made incorruptible, immortal and living bodies! Yea, alive for evermore! Even this, "That mortality might be swallowed up of life."

And shall this be, Paul? Oh shall we who are in this mortal tabernacle, and must descend into the chamber of death, the last and strong enemy, be made alive from the dead, and have the everlasting victory over these enslaving and destructive powers? Yes he assures us of this; for he says, "Now that he hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God." What is this self-same thing, that God hath wrought us for? Why, that our mortal bodies, our dying bodies, shall be made immortal, shall be swallowed up of life and die no more. God has wrought, or made us for this, appointed us to obtain salvation, and ordained us to eternal life. "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise," the Lord says, "Who also hath given unto us the earnest of the spirit says Paul, This earnest, already given, is God's pledge to us, that mortality in us shall be swallowed up of life, and that we shall obtain salvation with eternal glory. "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8: 2. Thus quickened our bodies shall be spiritual, holy and immortal, and we shall be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, which we earnestly desire. Then we shall bear the image of the heavenly MAN, the resurrected and glorified Son of God, being perfectly conformed to his glorious image in the resurrection of our bodies; and we shall enter into heaven with him, the eternal and sweet home of his and our Father. In this glorious hope your brother.

A TRIP SOUTH.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:

In accordance with the request of several of our members, I will give you an account of my recent tour in central Georgia and Eastern Alabama.

I had for several years been contemplating a visit to some of our churches in the States South of North Carolina, but my school duties and work on the Church History had prevented. Last Summer, the History having been published, I employed my vacation in attending the meetings of many churches in my own state; this Summer, my mind was more deeply impressed with a visit to Georgia and Alabama, and Divine Providence opened the way for me to follow that impression. I was not sent out by any Missionary Board, nor supplied with funds by any religious society; neither were the Apostles sent out or supplied in any such manner. Only the Lord knows where he has prepared the ground, for the sowing of the heavenly seed, and he impresses the minds of his ministers now; as he did in the Apostolic age, in regard to where and when they shall go to preach his word, and all the silver and gold and everything else are his, and he can use them as he pleases. I had not the means with which to pay my travelling expenses; but a gentlemen, not connected with any religious denomination, offered, of his own accord, without my having said anything to him on the subject, to lend me whatever amount of money I wished. I left Wilson July 3rd, and returned August 1st. I was gone 29 days, and tried to preach 29 times. Everywhere I found the hearts of the people open to receive what I had to say, their homes open to entertain me, and their purses open to help me on my way. I did not ask any one for money, and yet twice as much was freely given me as was needed to pay my traveling expenses, and half as much more was handed me to help me pay the Church History debt and to pay for copies of the History, although the great majority of the people that I visited were poor, many of them living in log houses, and although money is, during the Summer, very scarce in the South.

My appointments were from Millidgeville to Macon Ga., then from Butler, Ga., to Opelika Ala., and from Opelika to Ronoake, in Randolph Co., Ala. I found on my journey, as firm, true, solid, gentle, humble and loving Baptists as I ever met elsewhere; and, though there exists in some sections transient disciplinary troubles, for which the caution of the Apostle Paul in Acts 20:30; Rom. 16:17; and 1 Cor. 1:10-13, seems to me a plain and sufficient remedy for every spiritual mind, yet, in general, peace and union and life and love abound. I was glad to find no doctrinal divisions among the brethren whom I met, whether on the subjects of predestination, or regeneration, or the resurrection, or anything else; and I can see no just occasion for division on these subjects anywhere among the truly humble and spiritual children of God, especially when the entire contention is nothing whatever but an unwholesome, unprofitable, and subverting war of words, against which Paul repeatedly warns, 1 Tim. 6:4; 2 Tim. 2:14. Such contentions are particularly to be deplored when the writers are animated by a harsh bitter and unchristian spirit.

Every Saturday and Sunday, and sometimes also on Friday, I was at the regular meeting of the churches; and thus I had the pleasure of delightful and edifying interviews with twelve of our ordained ministers and three licentiates. Elder John H. Gresham accompanied me in love from Mt. Zion to my appointments in Macon. Elder Murray, of Butler distinguished me from other passengers while we were riding on the train. Elder F. M. Casey, of Adairsville, Ga., was with me at both Butler and Opelika, and became very dear to me by his gentle and lovely christian virtues. Elder Bennett Stuart greatly interested me by the relation, at Elder Respass's of a part of his religious experience; and he and Elder Casey and I made some public remarks together at Sister R. Anna Phillips, who lives four miles from Butler. Elder H: Bussey, of Columbus, though feeble from two weeks illness, walked with me from his residence to my night appointment in Brownville Ala. Elder A. J. Harrison, of Hampton, S. C., and Elder J. S. Barley, of Notowilga, Ala., met me at Opelika. Elder J. T. Satterwhite, of Stroud, Ala., the youthful and lovely pastor of three of our largest churches, was with me at five of my appointments and I had the pleasure of spending a night at his house, and of endeavoring to speak words of christian consolation to his greatly afflicted but still highly favored wife, who seven years ago was baptized in her chair. Elder W. R. Avers, of Stroud, was with me at three of my appointments; he is an intelligent and faithful minister, has a large family farms and teaches school, and serves three churches. Elder J. W. H. Cliett is the Moderator of Beulah Association; and tries to call out all the gifts in his churches; I staid with him one night, and he conducted the General or District meeting of three days which I attended at Zion's Rest, where my appointments closed.

Generally speaking, our congregations were large, and everywhere they were remarkably quiet, orderly, and attentive. A considerable proportion of some of the audiences was composed of persons who were not Primitive Baptists; and I spoke in some places where a Primitive Baptist sermon had never been heard. In all the sections that I visited I found to my great joy that the Church of Christ was letting her light shine; so that members of other denominations, both Catholic and Protestant, did not hesitate to say that they had more confidence in Primitive Baptists than in their own professors. Such remarks as these were common:—"No locks are needed where Primitive Baptists live;" "Primitive Baptists are not required to sign cut-throat notes, waiving homesteads and all other legal exemptions;" "A Primitive Baptist, who is in good standing in his church, may have on credit, anything in my store from cellar to attic;" "Primitive Baptists who do not pay their debts are turned out of their churches;" Primitive Baptists are the most reliable people in our community," etc. Let all our members so live as to deserve such and still stronger commendations from others: thus they glorify the Lord who has purchased them with his own blood.

I regarded it as among the greatest privileges of my life to be with dear Elder J. R. Respass of Butler, Ga, and W. U. Mitchell of Opelika, Ala., at their own homes and churches: and, solely for the general welfare of the household of faith, I must be permitted to give a few of the most impressive remarks that I heard from these highly esteemed brethren. Elder R., who was very feeble in body, said in his bed-room, to me and others:—"Love is the soul of christianity; and, just as the body is dead without the soul, so christianity is dead without love."—"The recent controversies among some of our brethren remind me of a sermon said to have been delivered by an old minister. '1st', said he, 'I shall speak of what I know something about, and you know nothing about; 2d, I shall speak of what I know nothing about, and you know something about; and 3rd, and most of all, I shall speak of what neither you nor I know anything about.'"—"Several years ago I removed with my family, to a very poor section of the country, in order that my children might be brought up in familiar knowledge of and real sympathy with the poor."—"I never sent a poor person away empty from my door."—"The most precious seasons that I have ever realized were in this room, while engaged in praying with my family."—I said to one of my sons as he was about to go to live in a large city—"My dear boy, you will be surrounded by great temptations, but never do anything you would be unwilling for me and your mother to know; and I received a letter from him not long ago in which he says he has never done what he would not be willing for us to know."—"I wish all the preachers in the world were bigger preachers than myself."

Said Elder M.—to me and others at his home; "I have always been poor, and have raised a family of ten children on a little farm. I have suffered many severe misfortunes, both physically and pecuniarily, and am never without pain. But I have always lived within my income; sometimes my entire store-account has amounted to only ten dollars a year."—"Parents, in this wise age of the world, endeavor to shift the divinely constituted and inalienable responsibility of rightly bringing up their children upon the Sunday School, an institution that has no soul."—"I had tho't for about fifty years, as much as I tho't anything, that I believed in the Bible doctrine of predestination; but some recent communications, both public and private, seem to say that I do not. During all my ministry of about forty years I never received such bitter attacks from brethren as since the appearance a few months ago, in the Gospel Messenger, of my short article entitled "Time to call a Halt." Brethren do us injustice in substituting their extreme and what seem to me unscriptural views of predestination for predestination itself, and then declaring that, if we do not accept their views, we deny the doctrine of predestination."—"And in a house of worship Elder M. said, "The church is not a prison to the true people of God. Her door stands open all the time, either to come in or go out by. If the retention of a name on the Church-book is the only bond that connects one with the church, the sooner that bond is severed the better. And if any one loves a worldly institution better than the Church of Christ, he should not be a member of the Church."—"Feet-washing, as observed and commanded by the Lord Jesus, seems to me to teach three important lessons—humility, equality, and purity. I never aspired to any higher position than to be accounted worthy to wash the feet of the disciples of Jesus." The solemnity and tenderness of this last remark of our aged and venerable brother, adorned with flowing locks and beard of snowy whiteness, as he was down upon the floor, with basin and towel, at the feet of Brother Casey, deeply touched my heart, and filled my eyes with tears. What a different world would this be, thought I, if such were the highest aspirations of all its inhabitants! How divine is the religion of Jesus!

After consenting to have appointments made for me in Ga., and Alabama, I very deeply felt it to be the height of presumption and folly in me to undertake to instruct or comfort people served by some of our most gifted and esteemed ministers; but then I also felt that the Lord had called me to visit them and their congregations in meekness and love, and add my own feeble testimony to the glorious and eternal truths for which they had so long contended. And, as I went, the Lord seemed pleased to revive his precious work of grace in my own soul, and to strengthen my little faith and hope and love, and to make my mind unusually fruitful in spiritual things, and to supply me with a new subject almost every day, and to give me a message to his dear people, and to prepare them to receive the message. Notwithstanding the very warm weather, and my traveling by private conveyance and speaking almost every day and sometimes at night, and my constant change of water and diet, my bodily health was also well preserved by the Divine goodness; and I was spared to find my family in tolerable health on my return.

Before starting on my Southern trip, in order to try to benefit at least physically, if not spiritually, the people that I should meet, I had printed at the office of ZION'S LANDMARK, 200 copies for gratuitous distribution, of one of the most valuable of all medical receipts, with the excellent effects of which I am myself well acquainted. It is called, "The Sun Cholera Mixture," having been first published by the New York Sun in 1851; and it is the best known remedy for Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus and Cholera. The receipt can be filled at almost every Drug Store, and is as follows:—"Take equal parts of tincture of Rhubarb, tincture of opium, tincture of Cayenne Pepper, essence of peppermint, and spirits of Camphor, and mix well." The dose for an adult is 15 to 30 drops in about two tablespoonfuls of water, either with or without sugar, every 20 or 30 minutes until relieved. One or two are generally sufficient. Even infants may take a few drops without harm.—Our Lord and his Apostles delighted to relieve bodily as well as spiritual troubles. The body is one of the best channels through which to reach the soul,

Desirous of feeling especially thankful to the Lord for his goodness to me during my trip, and of invoking his blessing upon all with whom I met, I remain as ever, yours in love.

ELD. D. BARTLEY ON THE RESURRECTION.

The subject of the resurrection is to the understudied full of comfort, when I am enabled to view it as the effect of our dear Lord's being raised again from the tomb, after his crucifixion. It is a source of great, yea, of unspeakable delight to know that as the king of terrors could not hold him, neither shall he be able to hold his sleeping members. The enemy tried all he possibly could to keep him under his control, by sealing the stone at the door of the sepulchre, and setting soldiers to watch; but O how vain the attempt! The adorable God-man, having satisfied divine Justice for all the iniquity, transgression and sin of all the elect, at the appointed time a special messenger from the eternal Throne is sent to roll the stone from the sepulchre; so that the Almighty Conqueror had nothing to do but to rise, and go forth to make himself known to his sorrowing disciples.

I have read with much pleasure and satisfaction Elder Bartley's Treatise on the Resurrection. In a long time I have not read any work of human production with more gratification, and less to object to than the one now under consideration. I trust it will have a good circulation, and be carefully and prayerfully read, and have the effect of enlightening and clearing the minds of any whose conceptions are cloudy on that glorious subject.

ALONG THE WAY.

I am often requested to give our readers a sketch of incidents of interest along the way I take in my ramblings, and I might often say many things, but fearing that I might not confine my narrations to those things which would be of general interest to our many readers, I often feel to decline to make the attempt.

If I attempt to tell where I stayed at night and give in detail the many or few kindnesses shown me, and fail to mention in full each instance, I am partial, and some one might feel slighted. Then I question the fact of its being of the slightest interest to the general reader where I stayed, or what were the manifestations of kindness toward me. Again it could be of no interest to many as to how I got there, whether aboard the cars, or a wagon, buggy, or dump cart. I may have gone horse back, or by steam boat, and may have walked, any of which is good enough for one no more deserving than I am. But few if any, are interested as to who conveyed me from place to place, but those who did it, and it might not have been so very pleasant to all of them. If the Lord has to drive out his preachers much against their feelings at times, I should not wonder if he does not have, at times, to drive some one out to convey them on. It might well be wondered at that I should find either conveyance or lodging. The master walked and slept upon the ground. He called no place his own, so he had not where to lay his head; but all things are Christ's and Christ's is God's. While he in one sense was blessed above us, yet we in another are blessed above him. He was never known to ride, but once, and that too upon a beast, which if offered in this day, as a means of conveyance to many who claim to be sufferers for Jesus, would be regarded as an insult to the dignity of their high calling. But we are furnished with all manner of conveyance as much arranged for our special benefit as for anything else. Therefore as all things are ours it is of no special interest to any, I conclude, as to which of them the Lord calls out for our conveyance or comfort at this or any other time.

During the months of May and June I had the privilege of attending four of the eastern associations. The first was the Baltimore which held its session with the church at Black Rock, which has been made historical by being the place where the great struggle began that terminated in the division between the Old School and the New School Baptists. The word Missionary is often used to designate the New School Baptists, but this does not mark the distinction, as all Bible Baptists are truly Missionary as being called of God and sent to preach the gospel. This doctrine we have always held, and taught as the true doctrine. Should one of our preachers feel impressed to go to any country whatever, all he has to do is to start, and if the Lord has bidden him go, he will prosper his journey. We favor the spread of the gospel but do not hold any means other than those of the spirit in Christ. As God works in his servants to will and to do of his good pleasure, so they are to work out. And the servant stands alone to his Master.

We hold that the support of the ministry is as clearly taught as is salvation by grace, but we differ from others as to how this is done, that the true minister may have that which he only should have. The man who ministers spiritual things should most undoubtedly reap carnal things of those to whom he sows spiritual things. But he must sow first. No man can expect to reap where he has not sown. But if he sows, he has the right to expect the privilege of reaping.

In many places our churches fail to do their duty towards their pastors. No church should think of calling one to serve it if it is not willing to give to that one according as the Lord has blessed it with the things of this life. Our pastors through unwarranted timidity fail to declare all the counsel of God on this point, it seems to me. There can come no real harm to one who is careful to preach what the Apostles preached. Truth is mighty and must prevail.

The Baltimore Association was well attended both in number and ability of ministers, none of which gave an uncertain sound, but with one accord they preached the doctrine of Jesus Christ in the salvation of sinners, as the wisdom and power of God.

There was perfect harmony from first to last upon all points of doctrine. The salvation of Adamic sinners according to the election of grace in Christ before the world was—and their quickening by him who is a quickening spirit, and their being born again by virtue of Christ in them the hope of glory were all set forth with marked ability and clearness as being the doctrines of the Bible, and therefore of all genuine Old School Baptists.

Our next Association was that of the Delaware, held with the church at Welsh Tract, where the saints were much refreshed by the same precious doctrine. Next we came to the Delaware River Association which met with the Church at Southampton, where we had another feast of fat things of wine well refined upon the lees. Among the most prominent and decisive features of this meeting, was the Circular Letter prepared by Elder Silas H. Durand, the present Moderator of that Association, in which it was most conclusively demonstrated that sinners of Adam's fallen race are the subjects of election, and are born again. The circular was carefully scrutinized by the committee to whom it was referred, which was composed of nearly all of the ministers present at the Association and was unanimously declared to be the doctrine held by that and all the Associations of their immediate correspondence, and was fully endorsed by the Association as its letter.

Next we came to Warwick Association held with the church at Warwick, N. Y. There was considerable life manifested at this meeting, several of the old brethren and sisters gave free expression of the fulness of their souls. Two were received for baptism, and I trust others will follow. Many were unable to suppress the tears of joy and gladness of heart for the wonderful blessings of the grace of our God. I love to see live Baptists, and love to preach to them, when the power of God is mutually known and felt in the unity of the spirit and in the bond of peace. When God is pleased to make his goodness known by revealing in our hearts the riches of his grace in Christ Jesus. I believe we should not quench the spirit by endeavoring to conceal or keep back an expression of the fulness of our hearts. A single tear upon the furrowed cheek of the aged father or mother, or bedimming the sparkling eyes of gentle maidens and manly youths are often a true index of the well-spring of living water in them, springing up unto everlasting life. I am glad that Jesus wept. If ever I have felt the melting prayer of God's love it was when it produced a kind of joyful weeping. If weeping indicates weakness or anything contrary to sound doctrine then even so was Jesus. These Associations are held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, leaving out Sunday. This is a good plan, for on Sundays there are so many who attend that care nothing for the meeting that those who do wish to worship are prevented. At these meetings there are but few except the brethren and friends, and everything is quiet.

The first inter-mediate Sunday I spent with the church in the city of Baltimore, where we had good meetings. The central figure in this church is that of Dr. John Thorne who is an earnest contender for that which he believes to be the gospel of salvation. He has been styled a kind of "Old Baptist grind-stone" especially for the benefit of preachers who may become somewhat ineffective in such a way that grinding will remedy the defect. As a good grind-stone improves as it wears down, I am inclined to think this one will eventually prove to be of more effective service, as I noticed some improvement in the quality of grit. The next Sunday I spent with Elder Wm. J. Puring ton at Hopewell, N. J. The privilege and pleasure of the society of this able, fixed and inflexible minister of the gospel of our God were most gratifying. Our conversation upon the great truth of the salvation of sinners of Adam's fallen race was to me both comforting and instructive. His discourses and conversation are beautifully illuminated by the most apt and pertinent illustrations. I was forcibly impressed by an illustration he used while treating upon who it is that was elected, and is born again. He said "there were no fish taken into the ark; as water was their natural element they needed no salvation as did those things taken in. So in salvation, it is the sinner that needs salvation and that is the subject of salvation."

The next Sunday was enjoyably spent with Elder S. H. Durand at Southampton. This church together with the churches generably in those associations is composed of good material and well rooted and grounded in the solid truth of the gospel.

The next and last Sunday I spent with the church in Canada, at Duart. The brethren in Canada under the ministry of Elder Pollard are well established in the truth. For some cause there seems to be quite a number there who are firm in the doctrine and have a hope in Christ, but have not denied themselves and taken up the cross and followed Jesus. May the Lord give his people strength to do that which is pleasing in his sight, and his name have all the praise. We had good meetings in Canada, and a manifestation of life.

While I am weary from much traveling and preaching, yet I feel strengthened and comforted by the warm reception given me, and the words of God-speed along the way, and the general kindness shown me, for all of which I trust I possess a grateful heart to the giver of every good and perfect gift.

I had the pleasure of meeting the following Elders who attended the different Associations—Elders Beebe, Jenkins, Hubble, Vail and Clark of N. Y., Durand of Pa., Purington of N. J. Quint of Me., Rittenhouse and Staton of Del. Grafton and Chick of Md., White, Francis and Paulson of Va., Hardy, Mewborn and Greenwood of N. C., Sawin of Ohio, and Eubanks of Ga., and Brother Meredith, licentiate of N. Y.,

Those Eastern churches are blessed with a sound ministry.

P. G. L.

POWER.

The greatest power or forces of what we call nature are not visible. We look at the muscles, sinews, limbs, frame and shape of a horse, and judge from these exponents that the horse possesses power. We see him draw a load, or bear a heavy burden, and we judge from this that he has power, though we do not see that power, but only the signs, evidences and effects of it.

We gaze at the signs everywhere around of vegetable life. In the Spring we see a grain of seed bursting in its life through the hard soil, leaves springing out of the wood of trees, and every where signs and products of a power or life that produces everything. But do we see the power itself? We see clouds floating or swimming in the air, weighing millions of pounds, yet we do not see the power that upholds them.

The thunder fills the air with terrific roaring, and causes man to tremble, yet we do not see the power. The lightning flashes and instantly a man is killed, but who has seen the power that caused so instant a death? One is attacked by a disease that rapidly consumes and destroys life. We see the effects of this malady in the prostration of the system and death resulting, but we cannot see the disease itself. Look at a man in health and active life, and see various displays of power, yet you cannot see the power that moves the man. We say that he has will, energy &c, but do we see the will or power itself? No, indeed, this is invisible.

Now we cannot doubt that a power incomprehensible and unseen, eternal, omnipresent, irresistible and everywhere active, pervades and upholds all things in this universe; for power belongs to God. It is not that power moves God, or upholds him; but power belongs to him.

This eternal power and god-head are clearly seen in and by the things that do appear, namely his creation of, control, and preservation of all things by the word of his power.

Where the word of a king is there is power. As a man, a king or ruler is no more than another man; yet he is so clothed with authority that his word carries power, or causes obedience from his subjects. A decree from Cæsar Augustus calls all the world to a taxing, and every one enrolls himself for this purpose, after he repairs to his own country. Where is the power that causes millions to obey one man, even in the matter of paying out money, a thing that men are not fond of doing? If such power is invested in a man who has no power at all in the day of death to prolong his life one hour, what must be the power belonging to the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality dwelling in light, whom no man hath seen nor can see? His words are spirit and they are life. He speaks and it is done. He commands and it stands fast to a thousand generations. Jesus says the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.

There is a power of guilt that burdens a convicted one, causing a distress and travail in sorrow that no penance can appease, that no sacrifice he can make can soothe. A stinging cry of guilt and woe follows and haunts him, let him go where he may. Nor can any amount of suffering efface or wash away this in-dwelling sense of guilt and sin. What an unseen power there is in a guilty conscience.

In the minds of men there abides a remembrance of everlasting guilt against such men as in ages past acted a wicked part, and died under guilt. The redeemed do not feel that Judas now is any thing better than a betrayer of innocent blood, or that Absalom any better than an ambitious, ungrateful and rebellious son. As they die so they remain. As the tree falls so it must lie. The memory of the wicked is held in everlasting contempt. Cain is still of that wicked one, while Abel is yet speaking as a righteous man, though long since dead. Why is it that things of the mind or spirit are so fixed? Where is the power of guilt that no lapse of age can destroy? Who has power on earth to forgive sins but God?

When we are pardoned of our sin, which we know from our inward feeling and consciousness of ease and peace, joy and love that fills our hearts with such gladness and praise to God, what a divine and wonderful power is this that we know is of God, and which causes us to hope in God that raises the dead and quickens whom he will.

The power that sustained Jesus, who was made sin for his people, enabling him to bear that load, and causing him to delight to do the will of God, and that enabled him to offer himself without spot to God, and that raised him from the dead and set him on the right hand of God, with all power in both heaven and earth in his hand that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him, is the power which quickens us together with Christ, and raises us up from the dead. For we live by the power of God, and are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last times. Greater is he that is in the christian than any other power. He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal body by his spirit that dwells in you. For this salvation is not by might, nor power, but by the spirit of God which swallows up all other power.

Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God, which is altogether unlike any other power or spirit.

It is eternal life to know the living Father, or the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. What a blessed truth to all lovers of God that the power that saves us is the blessed power of God which is never to destruction but always to salvation.

The power of the devil is to death, the powers of earth bring evil and oppression, but the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. If we consider that there is anything in the gospel to destruction we sadly mistake the gospel. For it is all to love and to edification.

What a precious truth that Jesus is stronger than Satan, and therefore the lawful captive shall be delivered, and this prey shall be taken from the terrible one. This unseen eternal power quickens the dead and raises up all that the Son of God pleases to raise. It shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto the glorious body of Jesus, according to the power whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself.

This blessed power is now in the church, and preserves and saves the true church and saves any member from all the grievous sins he commits; for the power of Jesus crucified and risen is the most perfect and glorious display of power that has ever been manifested on earth. It turns an enemy into a friend, a drunkard into a sober man, a hater of truth to a lover of truth, a vile wretch into a saint of God, and causes old things to pass away and all things to become new.

Now to him that is all to do exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think according to the power that worketh in us, to him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ forever and ever, amen.

"MESSENGER OF PEACE OFFICE GONE UP IN FLAMES."

"Our office with four of the finest business houses in the city was entirely consumed by fire this morning at 4 o'clock, which will cause some delay in our next issue, just how long, we are not now able to say, but will have it out as soon as we can possibly get the material and have the work done. We have sustained a very heavy loss, which will make it very important for our patrons to forward to us our dues at once, as we will be compelled to furnish our entire outfit of everything needed to go on with the paper. Hoping this will be heeded by all who can possibly do so, we send to each of our subscribers a notice of this great calamity. Examine the tag on your last paper to see how your account stands."

EDITOR "Messenger of Peace."
Macon City, Mo., Aug. 7th, 1888.

Remarks.

We publish the above notice as sent out by the Editors. We extend our deepest sympathy to the Editors in the loss of their office, and hope that the brethren will respond to their call for aid.

Obituary.

NEWMAN LEE ELLISON.

Our dear little babe died on the seventeenth inst. Little Newman Lee was born June the 5th, 1887, hence was one year, one month and one day old. He died with that awful malady flux and fever. Oh! it was hard to give up the sweet little babe. He was the son of H. and Matilda Ellison and was a bright and smooth-tempered little boy, the pet of the family.

Dear Readers of the LANDMARK, I fear I have read the obituaries in that paper of the departed ones with too little concern. To the dear brethren and sisters and friends who have had to give up their dear ones, O, how I do desire the prayers of God's dear praying children that he might comfort and support us in our great affliction, and oh that I could do as I am bid, "mourn with them that mourn, and weep with them that weep;" but the sweet tho't is though it cannot come to us, but we can go to it. From your poor afflicted brother, if a brother at all.

H. ELLISON.

CALLA CREACH.

Sister Calla Creach, the wife of Brother J. P. Creach, died at her residence in Columbus County N. C., on the night of June 19th, 1888. She was born in Johnston Co., N. C., May the 8th, 1840.

She has been a faithful member of the Primitive Baptist church at Union, in Johnston Co., for about ten years. Her house has ever been a good home for both rich and poor, saints and sinners, but most especially for Baptists, in the company of whom she was ever happy. You only had to know her to love her!

She died almost suddenly, her sickness not exceeding perhaps 2 hours duration. She leaves an affectionate and good husband and 7 children to deplore their loss. But God is able to solace and comfort and to lift up such as are cast down.

Rest, dearest Sister, slumber sweet,
"Till Christ shall bid thee rise,
Then with thee we hope to meet!
In heaven above the skies.

D. N. GORE.

JOSEPH. J. DUNFORD.

Died at his home in Edgecombe County on July 6th 1888—Mr. Joseph J. Dunford—aged 30 years and seven months. Mr. Dunford was taken suddenly ill, and after suffering severely for three days, calmly passed away from the toils and cares of life into a quiet and peaceful rest, having a wife and three little ones to mourn his early death.

He was perfectly conscious 'till the last, knew his friends and talked freely with them, several times speaking of his approaching death. He was a devoted husband, a kind and indulgent father, a good and obliging neighbor. All will miss him but none so much as the wife and little ones around the fireside; his chair on earth must henceforth be vacant, but let us hope that although we have lost one, heaven had gained one and that he is now singing with the redeemed around the throne of God.

Grieve not dear wife for your companion, and aged mother for your son, remember though he cannot come to you again, though if one of the redeemed, you can go to him. Bear your sorrow patiently. Our Father will not make your burden heavier than you can bear, for,

"Earth has no sorrows
That heaven cannot heal."

The Lord has promised, "To be a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless," so raise thy head, O sorrowing one, and look to Him who loveth thee even more than a husband, brother, sister, or mother.

A. FRIEND.

JOHNSON. L. BARTLEY.

My dear younger brother, Johnson L. Bartley, peacefully fell asleep in Jesus at 10 P. M., July 7th, 1888, at his home near Willow Hill, Jasper Co., Ill., in his 60th year. His disease was consumption. I visited him early last month, and preached at his house, by his request. His confidence and trust in the Lord Jesus were full of assurance and peace, and he was raised above all doubts and fears. He was not only reconciled, but even cheerful, while arranging his affairs for his departure, and counseling his young sons.

About thirty years ago he and my oldest brother, Amos, were baptized, by dear old Elder Simon Billings, in the faith, hope, and love of Christ. He was an humble, orderly and worthy Primitive Baptist. His end was peace.

His wife, Elizabeth, died in the faith of Jesus three or four years ago. He left one daughter and five sons, one sister, and five brothers, many relatives friends and neighbors, the church and brethren to sorrow, yet not for him, but for themselves.

His funeral was very largely attended, at Rockville, Sunday the 8th inst, at which Elder Lauter preached. I was not permitted the sad privilege of being present.

May the Lord comfort and save the dear orphaned children, that they may also die in Christ as did their dear parents. In sorrow and hope,
D. Bartley.
New Castle, Ind. July 17th, 1888.

LAWRENCE JACKSON COGGINS.

Died, Sept. 24, 1887, Lawrence Jackson Coggins, after receiving a severe burn the evening previous. In perfect health came the summons of death to bid adieu to this life, and his gentle spirit was borne from our hearts and home to that happy land above, from whence no traveller returns. Though his body suffered an awful pain that could not be relieved by loving hands, nor the best of medical skill, he was to bear it until the gate was opened to pass over Jordan and enter into that happy land.

He was born Aug. 12th, 1884, and died Sept. 24th, 1887, making his stay on earth 3 years, 1 month and 12 days. Jesus said "suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The tyrant Death of him took hold,
From earth he, had to fly;
He had to cross the Jordan old,
And li the tomb must lie

His time on earth can no more,
His soul's forever fled;
He's crossed the raging Jordan over,
And lies among the dead.

At the last day he then shall die
And meet the mighty God,
Go flying up beyond the skies,
No more on earth to plod.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

Elder David Bartly of Ind. has written and published a book on the Resurrection which deserves especial attention, as it treats more fully on that wonderful subject than any book written by any of our people. It presents the subject in an able and clear manner. No notice of the brief kind I can now give can suggest any idea of the value of the book. You can better appreciate it by reading it yourself.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not cost a cent to realize the merits of the treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs
 made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored,
 the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength
 restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been, tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember.

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or public opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

“Ask for the old paths where is the good way.”

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the “Church History” free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been received please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

THOUGHTS OF HEAVEN.

A golden scepter in thy hand,
Oh! may I touch and live,
And may the grace to us abound,
Thy spirit to us give.

I love to read in thy pure word
Of promises so divine,
It strengthens me when troubles rise,
And calms my troubled mind.

Oh! Lord be thou my shield,
Protect me from all harm,
Keep me safe by thy pure grace
And in each virtue shine.

And wilt thou be my hiding place.
When storms of trouble rise,
And Jesus to my view reveals,
His mercy never dies.

Thou lovely lamb who bled and died,
And suffered on the cross,
And for a victim such as I,
Thou conquered nature's dress.

Thy blood flowed down thy wounded side,
And from thy temples burst,
And on the cross my sins he bore,
And Satan's kingdom crushed.

Thou King of kings and Lord of lords,
Who sits upon thy throne,
And bids the pilgrims here below
To join the heavenly choir.

COMMUNICATED.

THE BETTER RESURRECTION.

Heb. 11th and 35th.

ELD. P. D. GOLD :—DEAR BROTHER
IN CHRIST,—There first came into my mind to-day, the desire to write something for the LANDMARK, and then came the words at the beginning of this letter, "The better resurrection."

I have been astonished sometimes in thinking over how much is said in the New Testament about the resurrection and how constantly it is held out as consummation of the hope of the believer, and how frequently it is dwelt upon by the Apostles and their master, that we are so little moved by it, and so seldom hear it preached or talked about. It seems as though Paul could not write or preach without bringing in this theme this final evidence of the power of God, and the efficacy of the atonement. Paul expressly declares that "for the hope of the resurrection" did he meet all the distresses and calamities of his life. This it was, that kept and cheered him on, in all his ministry; and this, at the last, enabled him to lay his head upon the block of the executioner, and cheerfully accept the summons that called him home. This same hope it is that has upheld millions of saints, in the dying hour, and that has cheered many a weary mourner, as dear ones have been laid to rest. "Thy brother shall rise again" has comforted many a heart, besides that of the sorrowing sister to whom it was spoken.

True, the resurrection is a mystery. But so is all divine truth. And though a mystery, it is a mystery revealed just as all other things that are divine, are revealed; else we can never know them. Mystery is everywhere. It is in ourselves. We are a mystery to ourselves. There is mystery in every blade of grass, in every dew-drop; and yet we do exist, and so does the grass and the dew-drop. And so there is a resurrection of the body. Why then should we not hope in it, and look forward to it, and talk about it? We do not hesitate to talk about other things though they be full of mystery. Why then, not also talk about this precious theme? If we are not to make it a theme why did the Master and the Apostles? They said much upon it: they held it up upon every occasion. If a mystery, it was not one that appalled them, but that lovingly invited them near. It is no longer mysterious whether there ever shall be a resurrection or not, that is abundantly declared, how the dead are raised, that is, by what power, is not a mystery. It is the power of God. How they shall come forth, who are raised up in Christ, is not a mystery. It is with a body, which though sowed a natural, is raised a spiritual body. And what the raised in Christ shall be like is not a mystery. They shall be like Jesus. There are many perplexing questions which we cannot value, but the things which I have stated are not perplexing questions; they are revealed things. The time of the resurrection is not a mystery, it is in the future. The day and hour we do not know, but we know it is yet to be. And it is declared to be a dangerous heresy to say that it is past already. Now, why may we not speak of these things and comfort one another with these things as the Apostle bade us do.

Now in the words at the head of this article we have another truth stated concerning the resurrection which sets it apart from all other things. It is called "a better resurrection." Better than what? The connection of the text will tell us. There we read, that by faith women received their dead RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN. By the same faith others were tortured, would not accept deliverance, that they might obtain A BETTER RESURRECTION. Thus it will be seen, that here is no contrast presented between the final resurrection of the wicked and the righteous; but between a coming back from the dead to this same natural life again, and a resurrection to heavenly life and glory. The declaration here is not that the resurrection to life is better than the resurrection to damnation, but after their being restored to this natural life again, some were so moved by faith and had such a glorious view of that world and the life beyond that they counted not this life dear to them, and preferred to depart, they would not accept deliverance.

When the Apostle said, in this connection, "women received their dead raised to life again" no doubt he alluded to the widow's son raised by the prophet Elijah, 1st Kings, 17th chapter, and the son of the Shunamite raised by the prophet Elisha, 2nd Kings 4th, chapter. These were notable instances of the divine power working through the faith of his people. And the raising of these children must have seemed most wonderful and glorious to the bereaved mothers. We should strive in vain to depict the joy, astonishment, and reverence, which must have filled them. Surely, one might say, nothing is left to be desired. What more could be wanted than to receive their loved ones back to earth again. Yet, even then, some with clearer faith saw a better resurrection than this. We may also call up to mind, the widow's son, the ruler's daughter and Lazarus in the gospels. One raised almost as soon as death had left the body, one being on the way to his grave, and one already in his grave, having been dead four days. These by a word from Jesus were restored at once to the arms of sorrowing friends, and weeping was turned to rejoicing, and yet there is "a better resurrection."

How often have parents felt like saying, oh! that I could clasp the form of that loved child again, and almost wished that Jesus was once more here in the flesh, that they might appeal to him as did the ruler, to raise up again the loved one. And brothers and sisters have not known how they could endure the loneliness before them; and husbands and wives have felt that they could not part, and yet for them also, this truth remains, that there is a better resurrection. Upon this the Christian's faith is fastened, and here is his comfort, when he buries his dead out of his sight.

Let us, if we may, speak about this better resurrection, and consider why it is better than to come back to this natural life again.

And here many reasons present themselves to my mind. It is true that God has seen fit to tell us but little concerning the unseen world. One reason is that we could not comprehend it were it put into words. And if, like Paul we are ever shown the things of the third heavens, we should find them, as did Paul, unspeakable. God has not, in his word, answered the questionings of a vain curiosity concerning that world. If we ever grow up to know anything about it, we shall find that there, as here, then as now, only the spiritual can understand spiritual things. But to the spiritual man God has given by his spirit some glimpses of unseen things, some prelibations of their future bliss. We may well wonder what is there in store for us, when the few bunches of the grapes of Eschol are so joyous and life-giving here.

Let us then point out a few things wherein that world and that life is better than this; some things, I mean, for which, it seems to me, we have warrant in the scriptures.

And first, it is a better life, and the resurrection to it is a better resurrection, by so much as spiritual life is better than natural life. We cannot measure the difference between vegetable and animal life, or between the life of the highest animal and the life of a man. And the distance between the life of a savage and the life of a Bacon or an Isaac Newton is well-nigh immeasurable. But, infinitely more beyond measure, is the difference between the highest natural life and spiritual life. And this is true when we only compare natural life with the small, faint beginnings of spiritual life which we have entered into down here. Spiritual life is of God, it is God manifest in the flesh. Eternal life is not more unending existence. It is a different kind of life from the natural life. All life is to be judged by its fruits, its manifestations. We know what fruit the natural bears. If we ask what it is that manifests spiritual life, we may point to Paul after his conversion, and compare the life he then lived with his life before. Or rather, if we wish to judge more fully of spiritual life let us meditate upon the blessed Savior, his love, his pity, his forbearance, his patience toward men, and his submission and obedience to God, and his hourly communion with God. Even in the exalted life of Jesus and in the bright example of Paul, we see such wonderful beauty as tongue cannot express. Yet the real glory of the feelings of spiritual life was veiled by the flesh. What then shall the unhindered shining forth of that life be in the world beyond the resurrection? And by so much is that resurrection better than the resurrection of men back to natural life.

Again, when men were brought back to natural life it was but for a season. The pains, the groans, the fears of death must all be gone over again. They came back to earth, but to again decay, and fade, and vanish. After all, what had they gained? While they might have learned to face death with less of dread, still he was still "the king of terrors" and must again be met. When we are ill and draw nigh to death and the grave, and once again are raised up to health and life, we are not so much the gainers, since at the last we must travel over the same road again, and then die. But beyond the better resurrection there is no death. No death! How can we conceive of it? Here we are forced to contemplate death every day in some form. It always meets us and shadows the brightest day. If it be no more than the withering of a flower, it still is death. And always is something being removed out of our lives. But there death never enters. There the things we love abide. And there we abide. In this also, is that resurrection better than any natural resurrection.

Again by so much as that world is better than this, is that resurrection better. Right here we need not speak of that which led the Apostle to say "this present evil world." Sin is the curse and bane of this world, but of this I will speak bye and bye. Ever without the curse of sin, this world is inferior to that. And all that we see declares his handiwork. But after all it is but the shadow. It is merely a preparation for the enduring world, it is but the porch into the real temple of God. It was not made to always endure. It was not intended for the permanent home of man. It is material, gross and heavy. It can never satisfy the spiritual mind. At the best, the spiritual man must cry, "This world is not my home." Even an eternal Eden could not satisfy the Christians' large desires. But this world is no longer Eden; its inhabitants are no longer innocent, and its delights are not pure and refined. The believer must long for a better world, where no night is, and no gathering gloom, where there is light and where crystal fountains perpetual flow. That world is filled with the light of God. "For the Lamb is the light thereof" and its inhabitants are not sick and they worship God forever. Who that is in the kingdom of heaven here, would exchange it for all that is here below! What then shall we say of heaven itself, of which we are taught to say "Our Father which art in heaven." By so much then is that resurrection which gives us entrance there, a better one.

Again, we are called upon to contrast the relationships of this world with those that exist there. The ties that bind us to our natural kindred here are the chief pleasures of this life. They are the best things that we can know. They are the things that make it possible to live and be measurably happy in this selfish world. God himself has ordained them for us, and he has sanctified them for us. How dear the names of father, mother, brother, child, sister, husband and wife are to most men. They belong to this natural life. But this is all. With this life they shall end. And even while we live how often do they impart pain instead of joy. All human love is at the best imperfect and often marred and broken. Those who have come back to this life and have once more taken up the thread of these natural ties found it as we find it.

There was no perfection in them and soon they must be broken again. Not only must they be broken, but even while they lived, misunderstandings, and selfish aims often interfered and turned what was meant for a joy into heart-burnings and sorrow. But thank God, there is a better resurrection, there is a spiritual world. In that world, we have the very Jesus for it, "they are neither married nor given in marriage." And surely, we may say if this dearest of all earthly ties does not exist there, the others cannot enter. Could earthly marriage be carried over into that world, then surely no man nor no woman here, should contract a second marriage. The occasion of this testimony of the Saviour was that the Sadducees, who did not believe in a resurrection at all, thought to catch him by proposing the case of a woman having been married to seven men, who were brothers, and asking whose of the seven she should be in the resurrection, which he taught should be. And this was his answer, "ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God, for in that world, they are neither married, or given in marriage, but are as the angels of God." Among the angels there are no parents or children, brothers or sisters, husbands or wives. AND WE SHALL BE LIKE THE ANGELS. How absurd, and false, and misleading then, are all exhortations and appeals to men based upon the supposed continuance of earthly ties! Fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, husbands or wives are not looking down upon those related to them here, any more than upon any one else, if indeed, they look down at all. And if our desire for heaven, be simply upon the ground of taking up and resuming the broken threads of this life, we are not of a really heavenly mind, but are still earthly and sensual in our nature. No thank God, there is a better resurrection! There is a resurrection to the communion of God and Christ and saints. There we shall see God. There, we shall awake in the likeness of Christ and shall be satisfied. There, we shall know what is meant when we say "I believe in the communion of saints." I have no doubt that each one will maintain his own personal identity there. Paul will be Paul, Peter will be Peter, and John will be John still. But the communion will be the communion of saints, and not of earthly relationships. We can all sympathize with the tender longing of bereaved hearts after loved ones gone before, and can understand how easy it is to believe what we so much long for. But we do not give up this earthly hope, and nothing in its place. No! there is a better resurrection. In that world we have God and Christ and saints in place of parents, brothers and kindred. Who that has ever known the love of God, the indwelling of Jesus through the spirit and the communion of saints can for a moment compare the purest of earthly love and treasure with it? We shall see the being in his beauty.

Once they who came back to this life came back to all manner of imperfection and sin. They had been sinners, and they were still sinners, and sin is the evil of evils. It is that which turns every Eden into a barren wilderness. It spoils every joy and corrodes every heart. The child of God finds himself perplexed by it when he would do good and it hinders his most earnest approaches to God.

"If I hear, or pray, or read, Sin is mixed with all I do."

And sin belongs to this life. Into that world beyond the better resurrection there enters no sin. Without sin! Without the presence of those who love and make a lie! What shall it be? Satan there hurls no darts of fiery temptation. Here when we would pray or praise God, evil thoughts and earthly passions often obstruct and hinder our joy; but there such swellings surges of sin shall never come. We shall be holy as God is holy. We can only speak about it. It cannot be uttered. We have nothing in our present state to liken it to. Who that hates sin and loves holiness would not desire this better resurrection. From this we may deduce an argument against the unscriptural theory of sinlessness in the flesh. If such a state can be ours in this life, then what is there more for us beyond. Holiness is happiness—if heaven. Perfect holiness banishes death, pushes back the doors of darkness and closes the yawning grave. Wherever death enters and the grave takes men to its bosom, there is sin. But we have "A better resurrection," beyond which there is no death because there is no sin.

Let us draw out the contrast still further, although this letter is already too lengthy. Those who come back to this natural life bear still the image of the earthly, but those who partake of the better resurrection shall bear the image of the heavenly. Here there is natural affection, there the love of God reigning in the heart. Here, even among saints there is parting, but there exists eternal communion. Here the flesh often hinders the full realization of christian fellowship, but there it shall flow free and unbroken world without end. In this life is that which is corruptible and corrupted, but there we shall find that which is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away. Here are corruptible bodies and those who were brought back again to this natural life, still bore about with them corruptible bodies, but in that better resurrection the bodies shall be incorruptible. Here there is weakness, there shall be power; here we are unlike Christ, there we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is. Here there is suffering, while there shall be recompense that is not reckoned of debt, but given according to the unbounded measure of grace and that of the infinite God.

Now since the better resurrection is so much better, can we wonder that others were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain it. Rather is it not a matter of wonder that we are unwilling to endure so little in this warfare? It is not marvelous that such a glorious hope makes so little impression upon us? We live, as though we lived not so much of our time. What are we enduring? What one earthly comfort are we doing without because of our following Christ? Does the glory of that world so impress us that we are by it made willing to forsake all things, to yield all things for Christ's sake; counting that they are but dung if we may win Christ and through him attain to that resurrection? As I write about these things, these questions come home to me. What have I endured for his sake? And the answer it seems to me must be, nothing. As I look back I can see nothing in all my life that looks like torture. Now suppose it should come, would I accept deliverance, or not? Oh, that the unseen things might make more impression upon our minds, and be more real to us!

All the time while writing this article my mind has been going out to some of my dear kindred in North Carolina, who have within the past year conveyed to earth the mortal remains of loved ones and have felt a desire that some word might be written here that should comfort and make them glad. Since I was last with you some in families, under whose roof I have been, have been called away, and some had been taken home just before. I shall miss them if I ever visit you again. But they sleep in hope of the better resurrection. My brethren, let us comfort one another with these words. I remain, your brother, in hope, 153 PSALM—102.

"Teach me to do thy will for thou art my God thy spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness."

The child of God is often made to contemplate much upon the many changes that he is made to pass through here in this vale of sorrow, in the midst of his troubles here on earth, many deep sorrows and discontentments he often meets with and cannot see any way to surmount them and he is often made to think if I were a child of God it would not be thus with me, wondering in his mind how the Lord can save such a sinner as I am.

Knowing of a fact that my heart is as a cage of unclean birds, and no soundness therein, but with a longing desire he is made to think of the Lord and in the language of the Prophet to look to the hole or pit, from whence we were digged, or to the rock from whence we were hewn.

And yet hope that the Lord will lead him by the right way, that he may go to a city of habitation where all of our sorrows and sighings will end. And yet so long as he remains here in this tabernacle he desires to be taught and led by the Lord, and often feels to ask the Lord to teach him the right way for David here in speaking of the Saints of God, has addressed himself to the Lord and says, "Teach me to do thy will for thou art my God." David here speaks with confidence and with much assurance as if he knew the Lord, for he says, my God, and again he claims him as his rock and my refuge, and a present help in time of trouble.

So every child of God in his experience, here on earth feels to express the same with that of David. We have many trials and afflictions here in this world and sometimes they are very great, and we know not how to surmount them and that our trials are so great, even of a literal character that we do not know what to do. We sometimes resort to all the means that we are in possession of, and they all fail and we are often made to think that we are not right in the matter and have a great many thoughts that render us almost miserable, and day by day we go mourning and grieving about things and matters that if we had them as we would like, they would prove disastrous to us and many times when we are about to abandon, all hope, and when all of our earthly propensities are subdued, then it is that we ask the Lord to teach us to do thy will, and it is then sometimes that we feel to exclaim with a sensation of love and weakness in our hearts, thou art my God thy spirit is good. Then we feel to be submissive to the will of the Lord, and then we desire of the Lord with all meekness and humility to be led by the Lord and even into the land of uprightness. Then when we feel that we are delivered from our affliction and are made to believe that the Lord hath delivered us, then we can rejoice in the Lord and praise his holy name.

We understand that the Lord teaches his saints to do his will in various ways and under different circumstances, for instance the Lord taught Joseph under the similitude of dreams what should come to pass in the futurity of time respecting his trials and afflictions which he should pass through, and equally so to-day does the Lord teach his people in the same like manner and warn them of the trouble that awaits them, and enables them to realize in their experience the fulfillment of such teaching. The Lord by his spirit reveals to our dark and benighted minds things that are wonderfully strange, and yet for the want of faith we are made to doubt notwithstanding we can't help believing it must be of the Lord. So it was with Joseph in the midst of all his afflictions, he still served the Lord, and after suffering much at the hands of his brethren he was delivered from his afflictions, and oh, my brethren many of the Lord's people has suffered in like manner, and let me say to all that have had such like afflictions trust in the Lord and he will give you of his strength and of his grace to overcome all of your enemies, and at last will enable you to thank the Lord and praise his holy name. And oh! may God teach all of his poor and afflicted saints to do his will, and then we can say with David, Thou art my God.

We will notice Moses the servant of God, a man who undoubtedly was taught of the Lord to do his will. See the many judgments that was wrought by the Lord according to the words of Moses, who was doing the will of God. And oh! what strong faith it was that enabled him to approach before the king and speak of the wonderful works that God was going to perform in behalf of his people. Yet how strange it may seem to one though slow was Moses to perform the will of God notwithstanding he saw the mighty power of God displayed in the persecution of his people. And oh! brethren it is so to-day with God.

Servants are sometimes slow to perform their duty. They feel their unworthiness, so that the servants of God often imitate Moses in a sense. So the Lord said unto Moses, now therefore go and I will teach thee what thou shalt say. So the Lord teaches his servants to-day what they shall say concerning his will and he gives them strength and boldness from on High to perform their duty in his service and how often should our minds be engaged in asking the Lord to teach us to do his will aright that we may be found blameless in his sight, that he may lead us to the land of uprightness. Then we can sing with David from a heart-felt sensation and say they shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power. David we presume, was a man that was taught of the Lord, yet he suffered many trials and afflictions.

I have thought much of the affliction of David and of his confidence and faith in God, and how he bore his afflictions with much long suffering and patience. I believe it was the grace of God in his heart and that living faith in God that he would deliver him from the hands of his enemies, and I believe to day that it is the grace and mercy of God that sustains us and keeps us from falling, other-wise we would one day fall by the hand of Saul, but the good Lord teaches us by the spirit, the way that we should go and gives tous of his strength to enable us press onward to the gaining of the prize, of the high calling as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. We see that the Lord taught Joseph by his spirit even to take Mary and the young child and flee into the land of Egypt, for Herod would seek to destroy the young child's life so we find through all the dispensations of time, God has ever taught his people by his spirit, and I believe will ever continue to teach them in the way that they should go. And again we find that the Lord taught Solomon wisdom that he might know how to go in and out before thy people. Oh Israel! so teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God, thy spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

There is not a child of God but what in his experience feels to express the language of David, Thy spirit is good, oh! what wonderful love it was that the Lord had for we poor hell-deserving sinners. And oh! what low condescensions of his mercy that he remembered us in our low estate going the downward road with no fear of God before our eyes, and without hope and without Christ in the world. Thy spirit is good, David has said, The Lord hath taken my feet out of a horrible pit and out of the miry clay, and hath set my feet upon a rock, and hath put a new song in my mouth, even praises to Israel's God. And in this song David has portrayed the experience of every child of grace that has ever been resurrected from the grave of carnality by the spirit of God, and have been able to know him in the power of his resurrection, the fellowship of his sufferings being made conformable to his death then the spirit of God teaches us that we are sinners and that we are without strength and in that condition where God and his Christ is we can never appear, and by his spirit we are enabled to comprehend the condition that we are in by the reason of sin and transgression and are made to feel poor and dependant upon him for life and for salvation, and by his spirit illuminating our mind and casting out the old leaven of sin and corruption, then we can say in deed and in truth, teach me to do thy will for thou art my God, thy spirit is good, and oh! how our hearts are made to glow with love when we are enable to view Christ as our Savior the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely.

So may God teach us all to do his will, for thou art my God, thy spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness is my heart-felt desire.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDERS GOLD AND I ESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—As some of my children have requested me to write out my experience, and have it published in the LANDMARK for them to read when I am gone. I will now make the attempt although I feel very weak in body and in mind, as I am nearly seventy nine years old.

When I was nearly thirteen years old there was a protracted meeting going on near my grand father John Weatherford. Two of my neighbor girls came to go with me to the meeting. They were the first mourners I ever saw. I asked them if they wanted me to show them how they looked a night or two before. I fell on my knees to show them and said pray for me. Mr. Nowly pray for me. I them said, girls if you ever see me do this, you may say Susan can't help it. I had as soon be caught stealing as to be caught in such a snap as that. I commenced singing a reel and danced as far as my strength would let me on our way to church. When we got most there I heard them singing. I thought it was the prettiest singing I ever heard, and said, girls they have new singers, let us run and see who they are that's singing so pretty.

I had not been in church long before I fell prostrate under the bench that these two girls were sitting on. My father came to me and said he was afraid I was sick, but my grandfather said that I was not sick, only of sin, let me pray for her. He stood over me and prayed for me. It seemed to me that I was lying over a bottomless pit as black as mid-night my father laid me on a bench, but still that pit was there. Oh! brother Gold, this was when I was sinking down beneath God's righteous frown.

When preaching was over I went home walking between those two girls, and didn't feel worthy to even touch their clothes.

I continued in this way until the week after this I went to preaching, but it seemed to me I grew worse instead of better. That evening my grandmother came up and told my sister and I that my uncle Billy had left us. I commenced crying. My sister said grandma where has he gone? I said sister don't you know what grandma means? Uncle Billy has a hope, but we are lost.

That night my sister and I were at the cow-pen milking, and it came to me if I didn't pray before I got back to the house that I would be certain to die and go to torment. The kitchen was between the house and the cow-pen, and I thought if sister went one way I would go the other, and I fell on my hands in the corner of the chimney and said, God be merciful to me a sinner. When I arose from my knees my burden left me. I felt so light that I commenced jumping up and praising God, but something said to me, now don't you go in the house for they are christians in there, and they will tell you what a sinner you are, so I stayed out until dark drove me in.

If I slept any that night I don't remember it. The next day I had to go to my grandpa's, and as I was going on I viewed the Savior on the cross, and these words came to me, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you shall be saved. I said Lord I do believe, help thou mine unbelief. Something kept telling me not to tell my grand-father, for he would tell me what a wretch I was. But brother Gold I told him what I hoped the Lord had done for me. He told me to join the church and be baptized, which I did the next meeting.

When I had related my experience to the church, I asked them to tell me if they thought it was religion, and if not to tell me. Your unworthy sister.

SUSAN JENNINGS.

ELDER P. D. GOLD: DEAR BROTHER,
I send you the experience of brother Wm. M. Stone, for publication in the LANDMARK, hoping it may prove a blessing to some poor mourner, or saint of God. Yours truly,

F. R. STONE.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Having been somewhat impressed in mind and feelings, and also requested by some of the dear saints of God to pen down my experience, or hope in the eternal world to come, I through much weakness make the attempt. In about the year 1874, I set to work to try to bring myself into favor with the Lord. In the month of October, of the above date, I attended what was called a big meeting among the Missionaries, in which there was a great revival. A good many professed to have a hope in Christ. This caused me to have some serious thoughts on religion, and the preachers got after me, also some of the members, and wanted me to get religion, as they called it. I told them I could not do that for it was out of the power of men to do that. But they told me that all I had to do was to believe that Jesus was the Son of God, and accept salvation on the terms of the gospel, and I would be a fit subject for baptism: but I thought then that I had never been changed from nature to grace, and without some change I was not fit to belong to any church. But they told me that I was a very common sinner, and I need not expect God to reach out his hand and pull me into heaven; but that I could be changed and hardly know it. Well I thought if this was the case I would go to work in good earnest. So I commenced by cutting off my worse habits, such as cursing and drinking too much; and so on, and sometimes I would get along very well until I would get mad, and then I would spoil everything. I went on in this way for about twelve years, and I got to thinking that I was about as good as any one and better than many, and I have often said I would not exchange chances with half of the preachers.

I had no use for half the doctrine the Old Baptists preached, especially, electing grace, for I had won the prize myself, and I didn't thank God for it. But about this time, when I had gotten my stock of religion complete, and in my exalted condition I was riding upon the scarlet colored beast and claiming the victory I had won, God showed me that of all men I was most miserable. I dreamed that I was condemned to die by the power of almighty God for the sin I had committed, and I had to die blind. I awoke myself trying to pray to God to restore my sight that I might see my children one more time before I died, but I could not pray a word that went above my head. Brethren, let me say to you and all who may read this, that I never was in darkness before that, I could feel the weight of it upon me. Right there I was shown that I was entirely dependent upon God for all blessings, and I went begging the Lord to have mercy upon me, a poor sinner, with a load of sin and guilt upon me. All the time I thought sure enough God was going to cut me off as a cumberer of the ground. I was not willing to die in that condition, but saw that it was just, for I had transgressed the holy law of God, and death was the penalty. I went on in this way for about twelve months when I do believe the Lord, for the sake of Jesus, pardoned my sins and revealed himself to me, and removed that load of guilt and sin. I do not remember whether I was asleep or not, but do not think I was, though it was in the night.

I will tell what I saw and felt. I was carried up a very steep mountain. The road was rough and rugged, and with this load of sin upon me with such weight it seemed to me it would sink the land under my feet, and the path was narrow, so much so it looked like a line stretched across a water-course more than anything else I can compare it to, and on my left was the place of destruction. It seemed that I was desirous to go to the top of this mountain, to which place I was carried, and went on until I came to an opening, and the darkness did not seem to be so intense, but my burden was the same. I went on a little further, and I saw one of the most beautiful rivers I ever saw in all my life: and I saw a company of little children, and they were past numbering for multitude, and among them was my only dear sister, who died July, 13th, 1886, and it seemed to me that of all the congregations that I ever saw they were the most rejoiced: they were all singing the same song; there was no discord in their tone, and there was one seated in their midst on a throne, and he was the most lovely personage I ever saw in all my life in the form of man, and my sister asked me to come and help them sing. I told her that I could not get over the river, there was no pathway across it. She looked at me with a smile and said, "Brother I did not come that way, and the one that sat on that beautiful seat looked very pleasantly at me, and the light that lighted the place where they were shone across the river, and shone around me above the brightness of the sun, and this company-to-gether with their king crossed over the river and went upwards, the last I saw of them, and my load of guilt and sin left me, and when I came to myself I was praising God with all my powers and I felt like I wanted to tell everybody what a dear Savior I had found. Right there I found myself in love with the Old Baptists, the very ones I had thought to be the lowest religious people in the world. I loved them with a superior love to that I ever had for any church before: so much so I got in such a fix it seemed to me that I was compelled to go to their church and tell them what I believed the Lord had done for my soul, which I did on the 12th of May 1888 and was received into the fellowship of the church at Arrarat, and was baptized the 2nd, Sunday in June following by Elder Gabriel Denny, our beloved Pastor. I still have many doubts and fears, but I have that hope dwelling within my soul that is an anchor against the tempest and storm, and do believe that I have seen by an eye of faith the thing that God has prepared for them that love him.

I do not claim to be fully acquainted with all, but in part, but if I am saved it will be through the merits of a crucified Redeemer, and not any merit of my own; and if all the members in the Old Baptist church feel as small as I do they feel to be at the feet of Jesus is too exalted a position for them to be in.

"The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

The way of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness."

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, :— I tried to give you a reason of my hope, and sent it to you, dated June 22nd. When I was first troubled about writing to you I really did not know what to do. That night I dreamed I saw you standing on a most beautiful bright looking place by the side of a tree with your elbow resting on a table. I felt in my heart when I saw you that you loved the truth, though you never spoke a word to me. I thought I walked up to you and said, oh brother Gold, I love the truth, and I know it when I hear it, and it makes me feel so happy and good, throwing my hands up. I shall never forget how you looked. Your bright looking countenance cheered my drooping heart. I felt happy and good for several days. Then it was heavily impressed upon my mind to write to you, and I could take no rest until I did. I wanted to tell you my dream when I wrote to you, but I thought it would make it too lengthy, and be in the way of better matter, and so I left it out, and for the last two or three days my dream is with me, and your bright looking countenance is before me, and I feel that I must tell you. It is short but it is sweet to me. I shall never forget it for it shines so bright to me. When I was so troubled about writing to you the devil tried me, telling me that I was no christian, if I was I could write to you and tell you my feelings like you and others do. Oh the trouble it caused me to see. The 2nd Cor. 12: 1 came to my mind: it reads as follows. "It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord." He banished from me, and then I could give a reason of my hope.

I hope the Lord will lead, guide and direct me, and keep me in that strait and narrow way that leads to everlasting life. O I feel so often I am afraid that I am deceived, and know nothing about him. I turned from him once and went back, but now has he commanded the house to stand. I feel that the Lord had something against me because I threw my first love away. I don't doubt the Lord and his great power, but I do doubt my poor self, and I don't feel fit to be among them.

Dear brother Gold, my children seem to be resting upon my mind. Oh how my heart feels for them. My whole heart and prayer to the Lord for them is, oh Lord, turn them and save them with an everlasting salvation. I put all my trust in him believing that he is God, and has all power in heaven and on earth, for every perfect and good gift is from the Lord.

My dear old mother is no better. She is slowly passing away from this world to a better one, I hope. The old Baptists are the people she loves. She appears to be resigned to the will of the Lord.

I hope the Lord will bless you and all who may read this. Your unworthy sister, if one at all. I feel to be the least of all.

AT WHOSE FEET.

"And thou shalt go in and uncover his feet and lay thee down." Ruth, 3: 14.

Thus Naomi an old Israelite said to Ruth a young convert. To lie at the feet of any mere man or woman signifies a lack of character, or that one is degraded, but it is not bowing down to man to comply with anything the scriptures demand of us, but it is rebellion against God not to do it whether it be to confess our faults, wash a brother's feet, or to humbly submit to a private or a public rebuke, and the scriptures speak commendably of Sarah, Abraham's wife, who obeyed her husband calling him lord, and the wife is scripturally bound to obey her husband, unless he requires something unscriptural of her, then she is, if she is a christian, under obligations to disobey him as said Peter and John to the dictating and threatening authorities, whether it seem right in your sight or not, we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

Peter and John were law-abiding citizens, unless they required them to disobey God. They must lie at the feet of their spiritual head at all hazards. In the same spirit that Sarah possessed went Ruth to the couch of Boaz, as much as to say, I would cheerfully, humbly and meekly become your obedient helpmeet; and this act of hers was a pure and virtuous act. Humility is as pure and virtuous as honor, and a thousand times more so than pride or stubbornness.

The scriptures require of us, if our brother trespass against us, that we rebuke him; if he repents, forgive him. It requires both to rebuke him, and that he repent. How are we to know that he has repented, unless he makes sufficient acknowledgment to forgive him? in the absence of free acknowledgement upon his part is to wrap it up instead of rooting it out, like a cancer wart healed over, while the roots remained untouched.

To go too far or to fall too short is a failure. Both are wrong, and seem to signify an unwillingness on our part to submit to Christ's government. Some time ago a beloved brother reproved me publicly for one of my short comings, which reproof has made me more watchful, and has no doubt been beneficial to others. It came in the right time, because several of us needed it; but he was a little sarcastic in his reproof, and as every spirit begets his own likeness, it begat sarcasm in me also, and I surpassed him, my father, in sarcasm, and used too much of it; because any is too much. I at first thought he did me a little wrong to expose me to the public, but he did not, for Paul rebuked Peter to his face on account of one of his dissimulations, and then published it to the world. Paul says, they that sin rebuke before all that others may fear. It is true I didn't think I was doing much or any wrong, because I thought I gave him full time to call in most or all the appointments, but he says I did not, and of course he knew more about it than I did: but I feel like I am at the feet of our spiritual Boaz in this thing. It was no great task for Ruth to get down to the feet of Boaz, because she was a meek, humble and lowly follower of Christ. It is the proud and rebellious who refuse to bend, but it is better to bend in time than to break in eternity. An incident is told of a preacher who attempted to preach a big sermon at an association, and to make a grand display. Of course he made a failure, after which when expressing his deep mortification over his failure, an old brother remarked yes, if you had gone up like you came down you might have come down as you went up. Before honor is humility, says the scripture: and if we obtain it any other way it is like all other ill-gotten gain, it will perish with us. There the disapproval of God starving us in the face is more bitter than death. We had better have the frowns of the whole world than his frowns. The brilliant and learned Voltaire, the noted infidel, while grappling with death, the King of terrors, said that even hell would be a refuge if it would hide him from God's frown.

In love to the faithful, I am their humble servant in love.

DEPARTED.

We deeply sympathize with our dear brother Elder F. A. Chick in the loss of his precious wife who died August the 19th. What a loss a good wife is. Elder Chick is a very lovely brother and useful preacher, and has the fellowship and sympathy of our people generally. Sister Chick has long been sick, and has suffered much during the time with wasting disease.

We are heirs of sorrow and pain, suffering and death, in this world. What a mystery is life with its tempting, prospects of flower and sunshine in youth, or spring and summer of time, to be chilled and turned into gloominess and death by the hoar frosts of winter.

How many fall in the spring of life ere the drouth of summer has gone.

VOLUME XXI No. 20

WILSON, N. C., SEPT. 1. 1888

Entered in the Post Office at Wilson, N. C., as second class matter.

Editorial.

Brother W. G. H. Abel, of Arkansas, requests my view of Matt, 25 : 1, 13, especially what the oil and the lamps represent.

The scenes described in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew are very solemn and important. What could be more so? It was just before the wonderful death of the most wonderful man that was ever on earth. A death made most excruciating by the malignity and treacherous betrayal of the enemies of Jesus, and a death curative of sin and death; for he was the Son of God.

We love to hear of the last words and deeds of those dear to us. How sublime and comforting the words of Jesus, "It is finished..". This was as he had finished what God gave him to do. It is the voice of the conqueror over sin and death. It is the shout of victory in the death struggle.

Just before his death he tells of the destruction of Jerusalem. No doubt it was a matter of deep astonishment to the disciples to be told that the goodly temple, where they supposed Jesus would reign forever and they should be greatly exalted over their enemies, should be thrown down so that one stone should not be left upon another that should not be thrown down. In their astonishment they wish to know when shall these things be.

He tells them plainly of the destruction of Jerusalem, and gives them signs by which it may be known to them when this shall be, and also the time of his coming. It is at this memorable time that the words Jesus uttered were under consideration have their fulfillment. Then at that time shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, five of them being wise and five foolish.

This was at the end of the Jewish world, or kingdom then existing, and at the coming of Christ in his glory in the gospel heavens.

While as yet the first Testament was standing the true gospel covenant was not manifest. The old one which made nothing perfect must be removed. For when the gospel kingdom comes no place is found for the first.

The literal destruction of the temple and scattering of the Jews denotes the removal, the fading, vanishing away of the first Testament, when it shall be manifest who are wise virgins, and who are the foolish ones. For while the first Testament is standing this cannot be discerned. For all slumber and sleep while the bridegroom tarries. Not until the coming of Jesus in gospel power and great glory is it known who are truly waiting for the consolation of Israel. As it was when Jesus appeared in the flesh, while all Jews professed to be waiting for the coming of the Messiah, yet how few received him when he did come. Who shall abide the day of his coming?

In the destruction of Jerusalem, which precedes the coming of Jesus in his great power and glory, all that are false, carnal worshippers are left to perish, while the true spiritual worshippers of Jerusalem enter with them into the joy and salvation of his kingdom. A lamp is a profession or appearance of religion. Oil represents grace, or the favor of God which all his children are blessed with, and which they all carry with their vessels in their lamps. The wise virgins are all those true virgins blessed with the love and grace of God in the new heart. While the foolish virgins took no oil, for they thus show their folly. When too late they discover their mistake, and beg the wise for oil, their own lamps having gone out. The wise answer them, "We have none to spare," and tell them to go and buy for themselves. Why do the wise tell them to buy for themselves? Do they not answer the fool according to his folly? What is his folly? It is that he says he can buy for himself, or that salvation is not of grace altogether. For that there is something the sinner can do, or not, just as he pleases. If he does it he will be saved; if he fails to do it he will be lost; for man is a free agent left to himself to decide this matter as a rational or wise being.

Now the wise virgins tell the foolish virgins to go and buy for themselves, as they say men can do this. While they are gone to buy, it being midnight darkness, or the end of that world, the bridegroom comes. For he comes at the end of that world.

When he comes the wise virgins are ready, and they enter in with the bridegroom in his kingdom, and the foolish virgins afterward come and desire to be received. But Jesus the bridegroom says, I know you not. They cannot enter. None who seek grace by buying it can inherit the kingdom of God. Ye are redeemed not with corruptible things, such as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Jesus as of a lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

The destruction of self-righteousness in the child of God is as throwing down every stone of the building of the temple, not leaving one on another. Then it is that Jesus the Son of man comes in power and great glory in the gospel, and reigns over the wise in gospel grace and glory. It is then that the foolish virgins are manifested in their folly.

At the end of this present evil world this shall all be consummated. For there every righteous, or wise one will surely appear in glory, and the foolish will be cast out into outer darkness.

P. D. G.

RIGHT—WRONG.

God works all things according to the counsel of his own will. That is, all that God does is, according to his foreknowledge. That does not mean that wicked men do his will, as it is done by those in whom God works both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

If all men, righteous and wicked, equally do God's will necessarily and always, then why did Jesus teach his disciples to pray, "Thy will be done as in heaven so in earth?" Again, Jesus said that not every one that saith unto me, "Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven." This shows that every one who does do the will of God shall be saved.

Known unto God are all his works from the beginning. That is, God knows, purposes and approves all his own works from the beginning.

No theory that does not recognize the difference between works that God's word authorizes, and such as his word forbids, can be right, and whatever that word forbids is wrong. The people of God do his will, while the wicked do not the will of God. There is the broadest distinction between what is right and what is wrong. God hates sin. I am taught in my own soul and in the word of God that is the cause of all my trouble. Yet if we exclude the deeds of wickedness, and the works of Satan from the dominion of God, and deny the dominion of God over all deep places we do err. For God makes the wrath of man to praise him, and restrains the remainder of wrath. There is no wicked event of man, nor a single foul work of Satan that at all defeats the purpose of God, but such wicked things in their sphere and in place subserve in accomplishing the will of God.

Man can form no theory that can cover this ground. Let him spread his covering as he may it will be too narrow. There is nothing that so well sets forth truth as the Bible, nor can man frame to pronounce, by any theory of his own, the Shibboleth that will set him across all the deep places in the mystery of truth and iniquity.

Good brethren differ on this question. As good are on one side as on the other. All Old School or Primitive Baptists are necessarily predestinarians. No one that understands the teachings of the Bible could be anything but a predestinarian. But to tell how and why every thing is as it is not required of man. We are more inclined to undertake to do what we cannot than to do those things which we are commanded.

GOOD ORDER

The Country Line Association was held this year near Durham, N. C.,

The congregation was an immense one, and the behavior of the people better than usual.

No traffic of any kind was tolerated which tended to prevent disorder. There is no need of selling food or drink at such times, as the people in the community are forward to supply large quantities of food—indeed more than is needed.

Do not people burden themselves by providing too much to eat, and do not the visitors think too much of such things, and too little of setting at the feet of Jesus and hearing his words?

Young people give more trouble than any other class at such places. Young ladies and young men talk and laugh so much that often the older ones cannot hear the preaching. Such young people are very thoughtless often of the comfort of others.

We certainly fail to see any good fruit in Sunday Schools that turn out young men and young women that seem not to have a serious thought concerning their own condition, nor much regard for the rights or the comfort of others.

If people desire to commend Sunday Schools and other training of other denominations to the consideration of Primitive Baptists they must do better than they are now doing. For the worst behaved people at our meetings are such scholars.

The Association tendered its thanks to the public for their hospitality in entertaining the Association so well. The citizens of Durham and the surrounding country did nobly in entertaining the Association.

Also the Association returned its thanks to the officers of the law for their diligence in maintaining order.

NOT ALWAYS STRIVE.

"And the Lord said, my Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years." Gen. 6:3.

The common interpretation given to this scripture is that God strives by his Holy Spirit with every body seeking earnestly to make all mankind christians, but, inasmuch as they refuse to become christians, he decides to withdraw his Spirit from man and leave him to perish: or that man is a free agent and good and evil are set before him, and he can choose which he will take; yet many who have the Holy Spirit striving with them do finally reject that Spirit, and become hopelessly involved in ruin.

Let us take the entire verse as it reads and consider the language. God said his Spirit should not always strive with man, seeing he is flesh, not spirit. Man was carnal and corrupt, and therefore God's Spirit should not always endure him, yet he would bear with man one hundred and twenty years.

Does this one hundred and twenty years mean that man shall live an hundred and twenty years now? Do men live that long? Is that the average of human life? Do even any live that long? If you take this text of scripture literally it teaches that man will now live an hundred and twenty years. Hence it cannot have that meaning. It would be an hundred and twenty years from the time that God saw the wickedness of man was so great that he would destroy the earth by a flood of water until he did send it.

Noah was five hundred years old when he begat Shem, Ham and Japheth. It was before that time that he said that man's days should be an hundred and twenty years. Noah was six hundred years old when he entered the ark and the flood came, showing that by the one hundred and twenty years that should be man's days, was meant that it would be that long before the coming of the flood.

Does the Holy Spirit of God make an effort described by the word strive to save every creature of Adam's race now? To strive is to do all that can be done. No one could do more than strive. That is the greatest effort one can make to do a thing. When Jesus said to some, strive to enter in at the strait gate he told them to do more than to seek. Now is the Spirit of God able to do all He pleases? Certainly not if he strives to do something and then fails, and according to this theory fails not merely in one instance, but in many, even in a majority of cases. The Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters, and brought order out of Chaos; yet he strives to do many things he cannot do. David says, whither shall I go from thy Spirit? The Spirit quickeneth whom he pleases. As the wind blows where it pleases, so is the power of the Spirit of God. It is not by might nor by power, but by his Spirit, saith the Lord.

So complete and perfect is the power of the Spirit that we had nothing more to do with it than we have in controlling the blowing of the wind, or understanding how the wind blows. Yet those that wish to exalt the creature, and that deny the power of God, claim that generally the mighty God fails to do what he desires to do, even after straining to do it, or making his utmost efforts. One has not to strive to overcome another that is not as strong or stronger than himself. A man would not have to strive to do that which he is competent to do, or to overcome that which is weaker than himself.

It is true sin is strong, and that it is in man and has the dominion over him. For it is not that good and evil are both equally set before him, and he is to choose between the two. But evil is in him, and the choice is already made in the sense that man is a doer of evil by nature. He is born with evil in him. No doubt but that man has plenty of opportunities to do good with great rewards resulting from such a course. But wherefore is the price of wisdom in the hand of a fool seeing he hath no heart to it. The prevailing motive in a man leads him and determines his course. It is not what is in itself right that guides a man's course, unless that spirit or principle of right is in the man. All the reasons are on the side of sobriety, and not one in favor of drunkenness; but what weight have they against the appetite and thirst for liquor in the drunkard.

But now is this power of evil and sin stronger than the Holy Spirit of God? The strong man armed (Satan) keeps his palace (man's heart) until a stronger than he (Jesus) binds him, and takes away his armor wherein he trusted. For Jesus by the finger of God casts out devils. If the finger of God is able to cast out Satan, is not the arm of God able to do the same?

We think it wicked and denying the power of God, yea blasphemy to preach that the Lord God is not able to do all his pleasure.

The child of God has the Spirit, and he is not to quench the Spirit. That is he is to walk according to the Spirit, and he is not to quench the spirit. The christian has the Spirit. To quench him is to offend or grieve that Spirit. Grieve not the Holy Spirit whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. This is done by not giving heed to his teachings, and will if done bring grief to the child of God and distress him. For his own comfort and peace the child of God should walk in the Spirit and not after the flesh. David prays, uphold me by thy free Spirit, and restore unto me the joys of thy salvation. David by sinning had lost the joys of God's salvation, and he greatly desired a restoration of these joys. For it is so much better to obey God and follow the leadings of a spiritual mind.

The fact that God can and does correct and chastise his people when they are disobedient shows that he has power over all flesh, power over Satan and sin, power on earth to forgive sin, indeed all power is his. The powers that be are ordained of God.

Obituary.

STANCILO C. BELL.

Departed this life, Oct. 23rd 1887, aged 67 years, 8 months and 17 days, after a long and severe illness, Mr. Stancell C. Bell of Carteret Co., N. C., and on the 26th, he was carried to the place of interment, the old burying ground at Hadnot's Creek, there to await the great day when he will be taken up to heaven to inherit a life of joy eternal, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

Many of his friends, with his bereaved widow and children were present to witness the sad and solemn scene.

Mr Bell was received and baptized a member of the Primitive Baptist Church at Hadnot's Creek, March 6th, 1870, and was ordained Deacon the following September, where he remained a devout member and assiduous deacon, performing his duties cheerfully and to the satisfaction of all during life.

He was a kind and loving father, at all times exercising judgment possessed by few in the management of children, six of whom, three sons and three daughters (all of age) together with their mother are left the loss to mourn. He was much loved and respected by his neighbors as well as by all who knew him. He was a true christian, assiduous deacon, kind, affectionate, and indulgent husband and parent, an obliging, kind and generous neighbor, open and frank in all he said and did; mature deliberations and judgment appearing prominent in all his words and acts.

Those who knew him best, knew him to be a true christian and gentleman, honest and conscientious in everything.

ARRENA D. PRICE,

By request, I forward for publication in the LANDMARK, the obituary of our dear sister Price, wife of Joseph H. Price, of Rockingham Co., N. C.,

The subject of this notice was the daughter of George W. Roberts and Jinnett Roberts, was born April the 4th 1848, and departed this life Jan. 20th, 1888, making her stay on earth 39 years 9 months and 16 days. She was married to Mr. Joseph H. Price, Jan. 28th, 1869. She bore to him two children, a daughter and a son. She was a devoted wife, as well as mother. Having obtained a hope in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, on Saturday before the 2rd, Sunday in April 1872, she came before the church at Matrimony, and gave a reason of her hope in Christ, and was received in full fellowship by the church, and lived a faithful and devoted member until God saw proper to call her home. She loved to visit her church, to hear the gospel of Christ, was very much afflicted during her life, but would go to her church meetings when able to do so. Sister Price was amiable and kind. In her death the church has lost a good member, the husband a good and affectionate wife, the poor, bereaved children a noble mother. May we all bow in humble submission to the will of our blessed Lord who rules in the heavens and upon the earth, and works all things after the counsel of his own will. She has finished her course an earth. We believe she is now enjoying the rest that remains to the children of God. May her bereaved husband and motherless children be prepared by divine grace to meet her in that world of bliss, where there shall be no more parting nor sorrows. I would say to the sorrowing husband and weeping children.

Weep not for her, no more her eyes
Beam on you as you come
In yonder happy world of light
She is near the great, white throne.

Weep not for her, no more her eyes
Charm with her words of love.
She's chanting praises now to him
Who reigns over all in love.

Weep not for her, 'twas God that gave
And he has all the right,
To call his loved ones through the grave,
To be with him in light.

F. J. STONE.

ROBERT WALTER ROBERTSON.

The spirit of Robert Walter Robertson took its flight for a fairer land June 25 th 1888, after a short illness of typhoid fever. He was born the 2nd of July 1871, and lacked just one week of being 17 when he died. He was the oldest child of W. P. and Della Robertson who reside near Scotland Neck, Halifax Co., N. C.

Just on the verge of manhood; just as the future was unfolding bright pages to him; just when it was hardest to give him up, "God's finger touched him and he slept." Walter was always an obedient and affectionate child. He was devoted to his mother whom he loved with all his heart; and never a wish of hers which he could gratify went ungratified. On him his mother's heart was centered, she loved him only too well. To him his mother and father were looking for help and comfort in their old age, and though they still have five children left, yet they have not another Walter.

He was sick only a week yet he suffered much, but happily he was unconscious of it, as he was delirious towards the last; but before he died reason regained its sway for a short while. Ere he passed away he called his mother and told her that all he dreaded in dying was the thought of leaving her.

Walter had never joined any church, nor ever expressed any wish to do so, yet as his spirit hung on the shadowy border of eternity, his life breathed forth a prayer of supplication, and with the ending of that prayer his spirit was gone, and Walter was no more.

Walter had an extensive circle of relatives and friends who loved him devotedly, and now mourn for him sincerely. He had many traits of character which won true friends for him, he was a strictly moral character, never doing that which he thought was wrong. His mother was nearly crazed with grief, nearly heart-broken at the bare idea of giving him up, and did she not have everything to make her so? He was so young and strong, just in the bloom of youth, so kind and good, and such a fine prospect for a manly man; so devoted and attentive to her, and just as he was old enough to be of so much help to her then to be taken from her. O her burden seems very hard for her to bear. But, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

Perhaps it was better for him to die in innocent youth than to have lived to have been assailed by storms of sorrow and to have gone with bowed head to the grave. 'Tis better that the tender shoot should be broken, than the gnarled tree should be torn by rough winds and cutting storms and then hurled headlong to the ground.

There are some who will never cease to miss Walter; some with whom his memory will be green forever; and some with whom none other can ever take his place. The sorrowing parents have the heartfelt sympathy of a multitude of friends, and although sympathy cannot do him any good now yet it may console the parents to know that some others cared for Walter too. O how sad it was for them to bury him—their hope and pride, and see their sun of anticipation set in a cloud of despair.

The burial was attended by a large crowd of relatives and friends, and as the coffin was slowly lowered to its humble resting-place, and as the clods fell with a sad and mournful thud upon that poor lifeless clay there was scarcely a dry eye in that crowd. Several floral tributes were brought and strewed upon that lowly mound, some thus showing their last love and respect for him. But it is as wrong as it is useless for us to grieve for him, instead we should spend the time in preparing to meet him on the shore of that boundless forever.

So do not grieve for Walter, only think of him as being there to meet you when you shall go. Walter has only passed into a peaceful sleep from which there will be no dreary awakening. "God giveth his beloved sleep."

BELLE.

JOANNA SATTERFIELD.

Joanna Satterfield was born February 20th 1803. She married Samuel Satterfield. Soon after their marriage they professed a hope in Christ and joined the church at Ebenezer, Person Co., N. C.

Father died 12 years ago. A faithful member left her. She has been afflicted for many years, but she was true to her church as long as she could get there. She remained an orderly and faithful member until her death, which occurred the 18th of January 1888, aged 84 years, 11 months wanting two days.

She was a member sixty years. I do not feel that I can speak too highly of her noble character, her christian walk, generous spirit, and excellent virtues. She never was heard to fret, or murmur at anything. She was sorely afflicted. All was done that could be done on earth for her. She had heart-disease, bronchitis and many other complaints. She told us her sufferings were great, but nothing to compare to her happiness she was going to meet in heaven. She told me not to grieve but to rejoice at her death.

She prayed to die. She prayed for her children. Brother Albert Blalock came to see her. She sang a verse of a song he sung when he went to prayer. We think she gave us a token when she could not speak. She raised her hand three times to heaven and died at 5 o'clock that evening.

She has left eight of us children; four in the Primitive Baptist church and one has a hope in Christ. May we feel submissive to the will of God, and his grace sustain us and all the relatives and friends be prepared to meet her in heaven, is my prayer for Christ's sake.

PATIENCE THIGPEN.

Our dear and aged sister Thigpen, the wife of that renowned Baptist, Deacon Wm Thigpen, died last June. She was more than four score years of age, and for a great while had been a member at Little Creek.

She was of a sober, serious disposition, while brother Thigpen was of a jovial turn, and often was very cheerful. One of her habits was to suppress all foolish jesting, if possible. She was a candid, matter-of-fact woman. She would often tell sisters that they did wrong to praise preachers to their faces. She knew that preachers are flesh and blood like other people, and are sometimes vain enough to believe such praise and are flattered and puffed up by it.

If preachers always had sense enough to know that they are nothing of themselves, praise might not hurt them. But she knew that some of them love it, and that there is no getting along with an old preacher who has been flattered until he gets above himself, unless you let him have his own way, and that is often a poor way.

We need such good, faithful sisters as she was.

After much patience and long-suffering she peacefully passed away quietly and gently, as an infant falling asleep.

MATTIE SHARP.

Mattie Sharp, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Van Sharp, died with brain fever, July 13th, 1888.

Mattie dear has gone to rest,
 Around God's throne
 There she is blessed,
 Taken to dwell with Christ.
 In heaven, where all is bright,
 Ever to reign with the angel band.
 Savior more precious to her soul,
 Heaven more bright for her to behold,
 Affection could not keep her here,
 Remember now the Precious one is in Heaven.

A. FRIEND.

WILLIAM ANN HIGGS.

William Ann, the beloved wife of Wiley J. Higgs, of Halifax Co., sweetly entered into rest on the 18th of June. A devoted husband and eight children, four sons and four daughters, weep for her, "but they sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." She has left them the memory of a shining example, a sweet and gentle Spirit, a love which made her watchful and wise in helping her husband, guiding the house and providing for and training her children; the consciousness also that she has gone to "be ever with the Lord" which for her is far better. "Blessed are they that mourn," having such heavenly consolation. Without it how could we who knew her as no one else can know, stand the loss which has shadowed our lives and darkened our home!

She was married in her eighteenth year, on the 5th of February, 1861. Thenceforward her life was spent in the laborious but uneventful routine which falls to the lot of a Southern farmer's wife of our time. Into the new home she brought the bright joyousness of youth which time chastened but did not quench: a maidenly modesty and purity which, deepening as the years went by, pervaded the household as the fragrance of a delicate flower; an unselfish love for her husband and children which made her ever mindful of them and forgetful of her self, and energy which did not rest until the hands were folded on the breast in the final sleep. She was social and hospitable, a faithful friend and a good neighbor. But her home was her kingdom. There she reigned; there she was happy to adorn and beautify it and make it as "the house of God," the "gate of heaven," was her chief care, her greatest joy. No truer woman has blessed or brightened this sinning and sorrowing world.

Of her as a mother I may not, cannot speak in this hour of unspeakable loss, of immeasurable grief. Three of her sons have reached the age of manhood. If they have been kept from the evil of the world; if they have accomplished anything; if they have any thing of lofty aspiration and manly resolve, they owe it under God to her example, her teachings and her prayers. To me she seems worthy of a place among the saintly mothers whose lives are recorded in the Holy Scriptures.

An earnest, thoughtful nature like hers begins early to have questionings and meditations of God and the heavenly life; but it was not until 1878 that she was able to realize her acceptance with God through our Lord Jesus Christ and make public avowal of her faith. In August of that year she was baptized by Elder J. S. Woodard, of Wilson, into the fellowship of the church at Lawrence, Edgecombe Co. From that time until her decease she was a burning and a shining light, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

LANDMARK.

She was born in Edgecombe Co. March 1843; entered into heavenly rest June 18th 1888, after seventeen days of great suffering.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

The South Carolina Primitive Baptist Association is appointed to meet with the church at Mount Pleasant, Sumter Co., S. C., commencing on Friday before the 3rd, Sunday in Oct. The place is four miles West of Bishopville. Those coming by rail will be met at Bishopville on Thursday. Ministering brethren are requested to attend, as we are destitute of preachers.

JOHN BROWN.

The fourth Annual Session of the Toisnot Association will be held with the church at Meadow in Green Co., commencing Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1888. Wilson is the nearest Railroad Depot. We hope visiting brethren will be met and conveyed to the place of meeting.

A. J. MOORE, Mod.

G. W. THOMAS Clerk.

The Seven Mile Association is appointed to be held with the church at Harnett M. H., Sampson Co., N. C., commencing on Friday before the 4th, Sunday in September.

We invite brethren to visit us, especially preachers. Those coming by Wilson and Fayetteville Short Cut R. R., will be met at Dunn, on Thursday, addressing Josiah Baggett, at Hawley's

The 58th Annual Session of the Centenea Primitive Baptist Association will be held at Town Creek Meeting House, Edgecombe Co., N. C., commencing on Saturday before the 2nd Sunday in October, 1888 when and where we hope to see a large number of the brethren, especially those in the ministry.

Visiting brethren, who come on the Railroad, will be met in Tarboro Friday before the Second Sunday in Oct. If any come up the River on Steamboat, they will be met at Old Sparta, Edgecombe Co., on Friday evening also.

B. C. PITT, Mod.

L. J. H. MEWBORN, Cl'k

The Mountain Association will hold its next session with the church called Zion six miles from Sparta, Alleghany Co., N. C., commencing on Friday before the 4th Sunday in September.

The White Oak Association is appointed to be held with the church at Cypress Creek, Duplin Co., N. C., on Sat. before the 3rd. Sunday in Oct.

Those expecting to visit by Railroad will please write to Elder Isaac Jones, at Chinquepin, Duplin Co., N. C., The R. R. Station is Duplin Roads, on the Coast Line.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

Elder David Bartly of Ind. has written and published a book on the Resurrection which deserves especial attention, as it treats more fully on that wonderful subject than any book written by any of our people. It presents the subject in an able and clear manner. No notice of the brief kind I can now give can suggest any idea of the value of the book. You can better appreciate it by reading it yourself. P. D. GOLD.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

This interesting book, by Elder D.
 Bartly, contains 342 pages, printed from large new type, well bound in cloth with red edges, and a large and finely executed lithographic portrait of the author. Price, single copy, post-free .75c; per dozen, transportation prepaid, $7.50.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. The book contains 272 pages of print in all, printed on heavy No. 1 book, well bound in full cloth. Two kinds are printed, round notes and shaped notes. Be careful to name which kind is wanted.

Price post-paid, cloth, $1.25; morocco, $2.50; per dozen, purchaser to pay transportation, $12.00. We have a few bound in Turkey morocco, price $2.50. To any one sending us an order for a dozen, common binding, with the money, ($12.00) we will send an extra copy.

Send draft, money order, or registered letter, to Silas H. Durand, Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania; but money orders must be made payable at the Philadelphia post-office.

These books, except the Morocco, are kept for sale by me on the same terms. P. D. Gold.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it costs not a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

Each subscriber can tell the time to which he has paid for the paper by noticing the date just after his name.

All brethren and friends are requested to act as agents.

All names and post offices should be written plainly.

All communications, business letters, remittances of P. O. orders, money, drafts, etc., should be sent to

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS

PROVE ALL THINGS.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—For nearly a year I have felt impressed to write on the duty of our showing our faith by our works, but feeling my weakness and inability to write anything to the comfort of the dear children of God; and fearing that some might say that I was fault-finding, I have refrained thus far from writing, which has caused me many restless hours; but God forbid that I should ever presume to find fault or accuse the people of God. There are none who need sustaining grace more than myself. Then trusting alone in Him who is able to guide me in the way of all truth, I venture to notice a few duties that we owe, first to God, and second to our brethren, as members of the body of Christ. The Apostle tells us to "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." And Christ said: a new command I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another" John 13: 34—35. "We know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren;" but how do we know that we love them? We may say we have love, but if we prove it not we make ourselves liars; for if we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth. I understand there is no fellowship with out love. Then, in order to find how we may prove our love, we will go to the scriptures, which are profitable for reproof and instruction in righteousness. There, we are thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Then the first duty we will notice is Heb. 10: 25. "Forsake not the assembling of our-scelves together, &c." Now it is meeting day and I have some domestic duty to attend to, and I say I won't go to meeting to-day; they will not miss me. Now is this what I should go for, in order not to be missed, or should love be the cause that prompts me to go? Now if I stay at home, have I proved that I love the brethren? Suppose I miss two or three meetings, or go only once or twice a year, how much love do I show the church? I do not even prove that I love the Gospel of Christ. What proof have I given to the world that I am his disciple? Now this is only to those who can bear it. I know there are some who would go to meeting, but cannot; I pity them; but I speak to those who can go. It seems there are some who think if they lose a day or two out of each month, they will suffer need, and their families will come to want; to such I ask, do you not remember that he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added? Do you think he will feed the fowls of the air and clothe the lilies of the field, and yet forget to care for one for whom he shed his blood, and that too while you are obeying his word? "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." David said, "I was young, but am now old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread."

Again, I find some one who can go to courts, shows, and all popular public gatherings, and yet seldom get time to go to the house of worship. Surely such light is under a bushel, hence is darkness to all that are in the house. "And if the light that is in us be darkness, how gross, how deplorable, is that darkness." Well has it been said: "because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. Little children love one another, for love is of God and they that love are born of God." 1st John 4. "Let us love not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." 1st John 3: 18.

I will now notice some things in the 13th chapter of Romans. The 13th verse bids us to distribute to the necessity of saints. Christ said the poor you have always with you, and we know that it is true. We can look around and see our brethren in distress, we know that they need help and we feel that we would like to help them. That old sister has been very faithful to attend her meetings, hospitable and kind, always willing to do all she could for the interest of the church, and I would like to give her something, I know she is needy, but there are others much more able to give than I am, and they might give: besides I don't think she worked as hard when she was able to work as I do, or she would have more now: but is it my business how she employed her time when she was young. I admit she has been faithful in some things; perhaps like Mary she has chosen that good part, while I, like Martha have been cumbered with much serving, and as the Lord has blessed me with temporal things, so I should minister to her necessities. Because another more able than I does not give, is no reason I should withhold. We should give as the Lord has prospered us. My dime out of a dollar is as much as your dollar out of ten, or brother A's ten out of a hundred. We should give cheerfully whatever enters into our heart. If we feel it our duty it is our duty, and we should obey. If our mite is small, the Lord counts it as much as the hundreds of the wealthy, and from him we receive the blessing. You remember what he said of the widow who cast in two mites? And John says if any man has this world's goods and see his brother have need, and shut his bowels of compassion from him, how dwells the love of God in him? I might cite several other such cases, such as needy ministers, afflicted families, &c., all trials of our love, and if we do not obey the gospel in ministering to their necessities, or visiting them and talk of the mercies of God, what love do we show toward them: then, what evidence that we are the disciples of Christ. I will now pass on to the 16th verse, a part of which reads, "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate."

This one thing seems to me, to be most needful, for if we are as the meek and lowly Jesus; we are certain not to place ourselves above our brethren, for if we love them we will seek their welfare. This command brings us down to our poor brethren, and makes us love to meet in church capacity. But are we all obeying this precious command, or would some of us rather not go to the house of that poor brother? his food and clothing are both coarse and plain, and his house is also plain; there is nothing charming about the place, and if I should go it would be a dull visit, I can do as much good by staying at home, for I have nothing to give them, they are welcome at my house and we can converse of the things of the Lord here. But would not my poor brothers or sisters feel that I had more love for them, if I would visit them at their own home. They would feel that I was not high-minded, or above them, probably they would feel more like going to their meetings; for probably there they do not receive the attention that they should. I come into the house; sister A. in her fashionable dress sits on the front seat; I speak to her and sister B. and others and am glad to see them. But sister C. because her dress is old and plain, and because she feels humble and does not wish to be in the way, has taken a seat further back, and I do not see her, or because it is some trouble to get to her I only bow good-morning and take my seat. Would she not have more love for me if I should go up and express joy at seeing her present, and would I not feel better for having condescended to those of low estate. Again, I have grand company to-day; I see sister C. coming, and it would not do for her to come into the parlor: I meet her and take her to the kitchen, get what she wants and she goes home; I treat her kindly, but I prefer she would not come when I have such company for I do not want everybody to know that I entertain such people. Now is my heart right toward her: am I not like some who would not follow Jesus lest they should be put out of the synagogues? Do those around know by this that I am a disciple of the meek and lowly Jesus? "Has he not chosen the poor in this world rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom of heaven?" James says, "If there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment, and you have respect to him that wear the gay clothing, &c., are ye not partial in your-elves, and are become judges of evil thoughts. These things ought not to be. Remember how poor Christ became for us, not that we should be above one another, but that we should be equal with each other. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another."

There are several other points I would like to notice, but my letter is already too lengthy. I have merely touched upon the subject. I do not know what influenced me to write on this subject, but it has been on my mind ever since last fall, and I could get no relief from the impression. If it is of the Lord it will accomplish the thing whereunto he sends it. For me, I think I feel peace and good-will to every one.

May the Lord add his blessing, and his name have all the praise. In love to the household of faith, I remain, your sister,

MARK, and also the Signs, and many pieces in each bearing testimony of their author having at sometime in their life's journey been led to see themselves helpless sinners in the sight of God, and even led by that power unseen by mortal eye, and natural-power failing them, then was the Savior revealed to them by faith and they enabled to hope in his mercy and to believe that in him and him alone there is a full and complete refuge from the frowns of a just God and the condemning sentence of a just and righteous law. There is one subject upon which I wish to express some thoughts, but more especially to make some inquiries.

I do not wish to ask any particular person any question, but to ask them in a general way, and will say by way of apology for what I write that may seem unkind or uncalled for, that no one will be to blame but myself. I hope to say nothing but what the brethren Editors will feel free to publish, for I trust to be governed by the Spirit of candor and of a sincere desire of writing nothing to offend those who may differ with me on the subject of which I wish to speak. The subject is one on which there has been much controversy, and it may be that as long as we are in the flesh good brethren will not be enabled to see alike upon all points of the doctrine, and as long as this is true we shall have need of the charity that endureth all things, and that vaunteth not itself.

I have reference to the new birth, and in treating on the subject I wish to refer to an article that I read, and in which article it is made to appear that the sinner is not born again, and not wishing to be personal we will call the author of the article Elder A—. To digress a little I will say that I sometimes wonder at the great difference of opinion among the ministering brethren, and it does at times seem strange when we see able brethren so wide apart in their views upon the very principles that underlie and are the framework of that sublime plan "to wit" the redemption of sinners.

DEAR BRETHERN EDITORS:—I trust to not be thought presumptive for attempting to write some thoughts for publication, but feeling an interest in the questions that are from time to time discussed in the columns of the LAND-

Those who oppose the thought of the Adam man being the new or again birth hold the view that the man born of God is a distinct person in contradistinction from the sinner. I very much fear in attempting to pen my thoughts I may not express them so as to be understood, but trust the Saints will have charity for my weakness. Let us then ask the question, was it for fallen man, the Adam sinner, that Jesus came down from his glory, the glory he had with the Father before ever the earth was, or did he come to redeem an eternal Spiritual family that eternally existed in him, not in a life sense, but in that personal sense which must be accepted and understood as distinct and separate beings or existences in contradistinction from sinners. I hope to be understood on this point, for it rests here, if I understand the brethren, and I understand Elder A—to hold the latter view. We do not understand that he in any way wishes to detract from the complete redemption of the Adam sinner, but that there is a spiritual man included in that redemption. I understand that sinners were to be redeemed through and by him by the offering of himself without spot to God. My understanding is that to redeem is to buy back, to pay a price for that which is held in lawful bonds by another. I understand that Math. 1:21. gives us a view of who it is that was in bondage, that John 6:37—39 teaches us that the persons therein mentioned were the men of Adam's race and not spiritual children; also John 17:2, 6, 9, 12, 22 and 24, if these scriptures mean spiritual children, how must we understand the words of the Redeemer in the 2nd verse? I ask this question in all candor.

When did Eternal Spiritual children lose Eternal life that it must be given back again, and how can that life be given to a creature or person if they Eternally possessed it! Where do we read of Eternal Spiritual children being or having fallen out of Christ? And if having fallen out once, can they not fall away again, seeing that Jesus has no more power now than he had before ever the world was.

But as Adam and the Adam sinner is used to illustrate an "E S" family in Christ, the chief question to ask at this point of every enquirer is, how did this family become involved in sin, unless their representant fell in the transgression of law.

I do not understand Elder A—to teach that this family was represented in Adam. Then how could the Spiritual family be under the law by the transgression by which came sin and the fall if they were not represented in Adam. There being no other representative of any family of creatures or beings, that has fallen in sin by the transgression of law, it follows that Spiritual children need no redemption, and that Jesus did not come to save something more than sinners of Adam's race. Let us look at a quotation from Philpot as that is referred to by Elder A—by way of illustration: after quoting the following, "but primarily he accepts her unfallen." Elder A—says this looks like an election of something more than sinners of Adam's race. He endorses the sentiment or language of Philpot, and believes him to mean that the bride he accepts was a Spiritual bride, being personally, eternally in him. I do not understand Philpot to mean this, but that the gift from the Father was a bride who in the foreview of the Redeemer would fall.

Adam is spoken of as the figure of of him that was to come, as Elder A—quotes, and as I believe, and am led to believe that the elect bride of Christ could not fall in Adam if they were Eternal Spiritual children, seeing that Adam could not be their representant, he being national and they spiritual, I cannot embrace the thought that the natural man can be the representant of a spiritual one. Elder A—has stated that there can be no salvation without a sinner. I believe this, and it therefore follows that the E. S. child is a sinner, else they have no interest in the redemption of Christ which was wrought out by him in his sufferings and death, the triumph over the grave, and in the ascension to the bosom of the Father. I hope to make no misrepresentation of what brethren differing have written, but I believe they hold the view that the Adam sinner is a separate and distinct person or being in contradistinction from the Spiritual child.

Elder A—in the article to which I make reference said, that the New Testament name for a disciple is christian, and that he this christian was composed of two distinct and antagonistic natures.

We do most certainly understand this to be just as quoted by Elder A—but fail to see how it conforms to his view of the new birth. I feel constrained to ask a great many questions on this subject, and ask for some indulgence. Farther up in the same article he says, "if the again birth is a Spiritual one, and not natural, how can that birth produce a being of two distinct and antagonistic natures? I ask, if there was no again birth would there be any christians? If not, does it not appear evident that the again birth produces, as Elder A—says, and which I believe, the christians of whom the scriptures teach as being composed of two distinct and antagonistic natures. Does not the scriptures quoted answer his question? It certainly does in my understanding of it. But if Elder A—is to be understood to mean that the again birth produces the Spiritual nature only of this christian man, then it is evident that the E. S. child is not produced, but only the nature of the child, and the thought that an E. S. child is born is lost, and I fail to comprehend it in any other light. In regard to the words election, elect, chosen, all of which are similar in their definition, I think that I am agreed with the many correspondents among Old Baptists that the subjects of redemption were elected or chosen of God, in Christ from before ever the earth was, and are spoken of as the elect children. In Ephesians 1st and 4th, the Apostle says, according as he has chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. Referring again to the quotation from Philpot, Elder A—says that he speaks of an elect bride, existing in Christ before the world began, and in eternal vital union with him, and that Adam is spoken of as the figure of him that was to come, Eve being created in him, and that if we regard this as a figure we must look for an elect church in the Lord Jesus Christ before the world began. I do not understand Philpot to mean an eternal Spiritual bride, or do I understand how Eve the created bride, can be a true figure of an elect bride that is in the sense of being created.

I now come to a point in this most interesting subject where I may not be understood by the dear reader, but trust that I may be enabled to be comprehended, and shall endeavor to state my thoughts in full. If the church the bride was an Eternal Spiritual bride, and was in actual personal oneness with the redeemer, then it follows that if she in her personality and individuality was in oneness with the bridegroom in an indissoluble state or condition, and in which state and condition there is no law, no power in the dome of thought that can separate them seeing they are in the state of oneness, but I wish to show in this article, dear reader, that the position or assumption, that this relationship, this unity, as I am pleased to term it, and which is the lawful term to apply to the expression of the tho't—actual oneness—does not express the thought that is included in the figure of Adam and his bride, which truth I wish to show farther on in this article. It is another point that I wish to make clear first, before proceeding to the figure of Christ and his bride. We do not understand the scriptures to teach that the mediator was elected unto the state of an eternal existence, seeing that he in spirit is self-existing, and equal with the Father, dwelling in the state of deathlessness, beyond which there is no revelation, and being impenetrable by the power of language or of thought, and if there is no penetration beyond that eternity in which state of an unending immortality the mediator eternally existed, it follows that the law of application must forever be void, and the terms of election chosen, and appointment becomes a mis-nomer for their meaning is to appoint, to change, to elect unto a something, of state, condition or being that the object or objects did not or could not in lawful sense obtain, enjoy, or possess without such election, and therefore Christ being in oneness equal with the Father, the terms elect, or appoint, cannot be applied to him in the sense as must be accepted, as meant or intended by the application of those who believe in actual, personal oneness of the mediator and the elect bride, seeing that they make it to appear that they the children composing his body or the church were elected unto eternal life: for if they eternally existed in him in personal oneness, then they could not be the elect of God unto the life or condition that they in an eternal existance eternally in personal oneness possessed in Christ, the Spiritual bridegroom, which bridegroom and bride Adam and Eve are the true figure of. Dear reader please go with us and let us if it be possible, and if light be given us, to understand, we in some small degree may comprehend the true figure of the mediator and his bride.

We believe then that Christ was the elect of God unto the mediatorial throne, being the appointed of the Father unto the mediatorialship, and in which mediatorial office or priesthood, as an intercessor and propitiator, he was to be the atoning sacrifice; which sacrifice in the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, was to be for the sins and transgressions of the bride or the people, which people are the gift of the Father, and of whom the bride, the church, the Lamb's wife are composed, and which are the people and the only ones he came to redeem. We believe further that Jesus is the Alpha and Omega of the divine plan, which is immeasurable by the powers or thoughts of mortals. That it was because of him, and through him and by him that infinite mercy and grace is ever bestowed and made manifest to the fallen sons and daughters of Adam, race. We now come to the figure of the precious Redeemer and his bride, and dear saint of God, may we be enabled to see and know in part the joy there is in beholding with eyes of faith the beauty and grace as manifested in the love of him who is as the rose of Sharon, and altogether lovely; and in looking at the figure of Adam and Eve in the garden, let us look to see what the true figure is, and we behold Adam alone in the garden with no companion or bride, except in the pre-determined will and foreknowledge of God, who in and by his infinite wisdom and power forms or makes ready a bride, a being such as was companionable to him and in accomplishment of his eternal purpose he takes a part of the vitality of the bridegroom, and forms or adorns a companion in all respects, with the fulness of the charms of his (Adam's) nature. Now then let us behold the king, the husband and the chief delight of the church, the bride the lamb's wife, and we behold him, as by faith's clear eye on the throne of his glory, and in covenant relation with the Father of light, who is enthroned amidst the refulgent splendors of the light of Perennial day, the light unapproachable by one whose eyes are unenlightened by a sip from the cup of his infinite bliss. From the word of truth we have the revelation that in the covenant there was given a bride to the beloved of the Father, and accepted of or by him, all of which promises in or by covenant made were in the premeditative plan, foreknowledge and wisdom of the triune Jehovah. He only calling things that are not as though they were. We come then to the beautiful quotation from Philpot wherein he speaks of the bride unsullied and unstained by sin, the gift having been received before the fall. Dear child of God, can we receive and drink of the cup of the ineffable story of love, and sealed by the unfailing and unchangeable promise of the Father of Light.

But then comes the fall which fall the fall of Eve is the true figure of the fall in Adam of the bride, and of whose husband it is said in the book of books that his goings forth have been ever of old. The bride having fallen she was forever separated from her husband, and could not go to him, but because he loved her he was willing to follow her into the state of captivity by partaking of the nature of that in which and by which she fell. Now are we not led to view in some small degree what power there is displayed in the love of Christ, for his bride seeing he was willing to partake of the nature of his bride in and by which she also, as did Eve in the figurative sense, fall from the husband, the Saviour partook of her nature, yet without sin. Wonderful thought. Then do we not have presented to our view the true figure of the King of all kingdoms, and the wife of his tenderest love, and she is whom he adores with his own incomparable loveliness. She having been made and formed in him and for him, in and by the eternal purpose of mind and power of the Father, she was by God's election and love in and for the beloved given that life, the life which is eternal. Blessed thought. We then dear reader have beheld in the figure how Eve was made a partaker of the vitality of her husband, and then in the boundless mysterious love and gloriously manifested power of the supreme and infinite oneness of God. Can we see his inexpressible love and tender mercies displayed in the adorning of the fallen sons and daughters of Adam with his own supreme and infinite perfections, by and in the gift of life eternal which was hid with Christ in God.

"Blessed thought, that Jesus died for me,
That as a flood
He shed his blood,
From sin to set me free."

Let us now look in humble confidence to Revelation 22nd and 1st, where John by revelation was shewed a pure river of water of life clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. When that pure river shall have been engulfed in the unfathomable ocean of love, and the Saints come in to the full light and transcendent splendor of Jesus their Savior and King.

then shall in blissful emotions of ineffible joy their thoughts to full consciousness, inspired by baptism in that ocean, then will they, by fond memories chain with links made enduring by love, be carried back to time where, though having merited only his frown, they by the power of his love were made heirs to a crown by being born again, born of water, the water of life, and of the Spirit, the Spirit of life, the life given them ere time began in Christ, the blessed Redeemer. This life, which is eternal and is a gift of his grace, is in him and them in regard to time, the unity of life; but when the completion of the cycle of the years of time have come and gone, and time is no more; when the King and his glorified bride shall be in bright glory enclouded, then can it be said of the unity of life that it is the unity of the united, and this blessed thought and wonderful love is revealed and witnessed by the testimony of Jesus in the volume of inspired thought, and when the Spirit of truth takes of the things of Jesus and shows it unto them, then are they according to the measure of the gift of grace in time enabled to see and know in part the wonderful mystery of the unity of life, and of the unity of the united, which thoughts are revealed in the testimony of him who stands in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and who in his own right hand holds the seven stars.

May we with all saints be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and with them stand after the fleeting years of time have passed: and that then we may be enveloped in the enraptures of bliss, with eyes fully enlightened by the unchanging refuge and glory of the infinite perfections of our gracious master and King: and while in wonderment we then behold him in his unfading beauty, join in sweet anthems of praise making chimes of heavenly music.

"All hail the power of Jesus name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

May the cadences of song sweetened by the fragrance of his presence be only exceeded in bounds by the ocean of His love.
