What a blessing really is

By FATHER LAWRENCE E. MICK
Catholic News Service

"A Parish Guide to the Jubilee Year" says that the purpose of the special jubilee days is twofold: — "To honor and to remember a particular group of people for what they have contributed to the life of the church and to society, and —"To offer deeper reflection on the challenges to be faced in living the Gospel in society."

The guide suggests that those who are the focus of a Jubilee Day might participate in the Offertory procession, be included in the general intercessions and be given a special blessing at Mass.

Many Catholics will find such practices familiar. If a parish composes its own intercessions rather than reading from a published source, parishioners are accustomed to praying for particular groups of people — people in special need and others present as a group at the liturgy.

Many parishes also are accustomed to people bringing up the gifts on occasions that are special to them. This happens with a family bringing their child to be baptized at Mass, with Boy Scouts on Boy Scout Sunday, with a couple celebrating a 25th or 50th wedding anniversary, and with a family gathered to bury a loved one.

What may be less familiar to many Catholics, however, is the use of special blessings at Mass. The official "Book of Blessings" contains blessing rituals for a great variety of occasions and groups.

The year 2000, with its jubilee days, may prove a good opportunity to make more regular use of the "Book of Blessings." Most of its blessings are a combination of petitions for the Prayer of the Faithful and a special blessing prayer for the occasion. This is a reminder that a blessing is not a magical formula spoken in haste but a form of common prayer invoking God's help and protection.

Thus, the pattern suggested for the jubilee days is a pattern parishes often use periodically in any year. Expectant mothers might be invited to share in a blessing before childbirth. The parish might celebrate a blessing for the sick or for all suffering from addictions. Some parishes make regular use of the blessings for welcoming new parishioners and saying farewell to departing parishioners.

Blessings have been a strong part of the Catholic tradition in the past. They serve the same purposes as the jubilee days: to thank and praise God for the gift that various groups represent and for their contributions to the church, and to ask God's continued help in carrying out the ministry we share.

We bless one another and ask God to bless us so that we can go forth as blessings for the world in which we live. ▼

Father Mick is a priest of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a free-lance writer.

Blessings "serve the same purposes as the jubilee days: to thank and praise God for the gift that various groups represent and for their contributions to the church, and to ask God's continued help in carrying out the ministry we share," says Father Lawrence Mick.

Food for Thought

On the jubilee day in prisons July 9, the pope is expected to visit a prison. He already has asked the rest of the world's bishops to do the same.

"Prisoners cannot come out for the jubilee, so we must go in," said Msgr. Giorgio Caniato, chief of chaplains in the Italian justice ministry's department of corrections. Interviewed in April, Msgr. Caniato, the Vatican-appointed coordinator of this unique jubilee day, said its purpose won't be solely to convince prisoners to take responsibility for their actions and change their lives.

More is envisioned. Msgr. Caniato said that judges are called on the jubilee day in prisons to promote justice; prison guards are called to respect prisoners' dignity; chaplains are called to bring comfort and healing; and all Catholic citizens are called to examine their conscience regarding their attitudes toward prisoners and imprisonment, and their role in creating societies that spawn crime.

Msgr. Caniato said he hopes Catholic lay people will join their bishops in visiting prisons on this jubilee day as a sign "that we recognize Christian prisoners are Christians, they are part of the church."

Book Review

Source book answers questions about Catholicism clearly, easily

REVIEWED BY ANNE LEVEQUE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"The Catholic Source Book" could be subtitled, "Everything you always wanted to know about Catholicism, but had no idea where to look."

As a non-Catholic working for a Catholic organization, I occasionally have those "what are they talking about?" moments. I have studied church history and Catholic theology, but no amount of academic learning can replace exposure to Catholic culture and practice.

"The Catholic Source Book"
By Father Peter Klein
Brown-ROA (Orlando, Fla., 2000).
540 pp., $18.95.

This book has everything — everything about Catholic practice, that is. There are sections on prayers, tradition, Scripture, church history, liturgy, devotion to and veneration of saints, symbols and word origins. "The Catholic Source Book" is cross-referenced with the Catechism of the Catholic Church. It also has biblical references.

There are great lists of things, with definitions and illustrations. It is well-indexed for quick access to information. The explanations and definitions are clear and easily understandable.

Interspersed with the arrangement of facts and lists are many anecdotes taken from the lives of the saints or the history of the church. These sidebars help make this an enjoyable read.

The illustrations are clear and precise. You can look up the various forms of the cross or see illustrations of different periods of church architecture. There is a brief section on patron saints. The scope of information presented is incredibly comprehensive.

It is an amazing collection of information, and that is its main weakness as well — it is a bit short on depth. Another problem is that aside from the references to the catechism and the Bible, we are not told where the information comes from. A bibliography would have been helpful, or at least a list of suggested resources for further study.

For scholarly depth and erudition, stick with the Catholic Encyclopedia, but for quick answers turn to "The Catholic Source Book." ▼

CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

When I hear the verse from Isaiah describing the Suffering Servant — the Messiah — as "not crying out, not shouting, not making his voice heard in the street. A bruised reed he shall not break, a smoldering wick he shall not quench," I always think of a particular priest friend of mine.

I find him a near-perfect embodiment of these qualities. His parish, like many in our diocese, is very diverse, with noticeable contingents from many different countries and continents. Incomes range from the very rich to the poor. Education ranges are similarly broad.

When I attend Mass in his parish, I frequently observe him spending time with an individual or family who appear to have an urgent need to unburden themselves to him. His look at these times is consistently compassionate, his whole attention given over to listening and responding to the need before him.

I can also visualize this priest responding like Peter in today's reading from Acts to the news that God has opened up his covenantal relationship of love to all people, not just the Jews.

As I read it — with Peter's vision of the cloth coming down from heaven three times, and God instructing Peter to take and eat, and Peter refusing, saying these are unclean animals, then finally accepting the message of the vision — I can then see this priest responding in the manner we see Peter responding to all of this.

As Peter says, "I begin to see how true it is that God shows no partiality. Rather, the man of any nation who fears God and acts uprightly is acceptable to him." I can see this priest, as though he were Peter, sort of shrug his shoulders, acknowledging that God is God and can extend himself to whomever he chooses, and then, still in the role of Peter, launching into the further proclamation of the life and death and resurrection of Jesus.

Then when the Holy Spirit descends on the household of the righteous gentile Cornelius, it would all surprise him, but that same "docile before the Lord and before the inherent dignity of his fellow human beings" quality mentioned in the Isaiah Scripture would carry him through in obedient, if perhaps bemused, joy to do the will of the Lord.

Would that we might all have more of those same qualities evident in our lives. ▼

Disney's "Fantasia 2000" on IMAX is visual, aural treat

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — Disney's animated 1940 concert film, "Fantasia," has spawned a sequel of nearly all-new compositions set to colorful images playing on the huge IMAX screens in "Fantasia 2000."

Retaining only the segment starring Mickey Mouse in the title role of Leopold Stokowski's "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," the big-screen format plays host to seven new classic compositions which are set to animation as James Levine conducts the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Such state-of-the-art sound and imagery can be a little overwhelming on super-size IMAX screens. It's a lot to take in but it's a lot of fun too and it should hold the attention of all but the smallest children, not to mention their parents.

This follow-up film has a less formal feel with several former stand-up comedians, such as Steve Martin and Bette Midler, serving as upbeat hosts for individual segments.

The Disney animators were apparently given free rein in dreaming up images for the compositions being played.

First on tap are beguiling images of an underwater — and airborne — herd of whales, set to Ottorino Respighi's "Pines of Rome," which makes for an auspicious, dreamy start.

Possibly the best of the lot is George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," amusingly played out to Al Hirshfeld-inspired caricatures of working and wealthy New Yorkers during the course of a 1930's day turned into evening. It's a real valentine to a cosmopolitan city with the music capturing its unique sophistication.

Donald and Daisy Duck get into the act in a sweetly comical segment leading animal duos onto Noah's Ark to the marching melodies of Sir Edward Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance."

Most dramatic is Igor Stravinsky's 1919 version of "Firebird" suite, with sumptuous imagery depicting a forest's life, death and renewal overseen by a beauteous magical spirit.

Other selections are less successful with the images looking contrived to fit the accompanying music or segments that are too brief to be especially memorable.

Purists may not be endeared by hearing only truncated versions of compositions, but as a means of introducing classical music to a wider audience the movie has merit. It is also a visual and aural treat magnified by a screen that is seven stories high. The quality of the animation is also quite high, often attaining a three-dimensional quality, although this is not an IMAX 3-D presentation.

All in all, this is a welcome sequel, a most impressive wedding of glorious notes to elegant animation for a movie that stands apart from today's typical film fare.

Israel says pope to celebrate Mass with youths in Holy Land

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Some 45,000 young people will accompany Pope John Paul II at a Mass on the Mount of Beatitudes during his March pilgrimage to the Holy Land, said an Israeli Ministry of Tourism official.

Though dates and times have been more or less set for the pope's visit, they cannot be released due to security considerations, Zvi Liran, director of the special segments marketing division of the Ministry of Tourism, said Dec. 29.

The Vatican has not confirmed dates for the pope's pilgrimage, but church sources said Pope John Paul plans an overnight March 20-21 visit to Jordan as the first leg of a trip that would also take him to Jerusalem and holy places in Israel and the Palestinian territories.

During the pope's stay in Israel he will overnight in Jerusalem and will fly to and from Nazareth and the Galilee, said Liran.

Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak will most likely meet with the pope at the Mount of Beatitudes. In addition to Barak, the only other Israeli officials the pontiff was scheduled to meet were Israeli President Ezer Weizman and Chief Rabbi Meir Lau.

In Bethlehem, Mayor Hana Nasser, who is a member of the Palestinian committee organizing the pope's visit to the city, said the pope will be visiting one of the three refugee camps surrounding the city. He added that Palestinian National Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat would attend an open-air Mass the pope will celebrate in Manger Square.

Logistics of the visit were already being worked out, Nasser said, downplaying the threats against the pope issued recently by Muslim extremists in Nazareth.

"I think the Holy See has been one of the rare leaders in the world which has showed real feeling for Palestinians and especially the problems of the refugees and their right to self-determination," said Nasser, who called the pope "a freedom fighter."

"I don't think there is any room for any individual, whether they be Muslim or Christian extremists, to do something. But of course we will always be on the alert and take all precautions to keep the visit of the pope running smoothly," he said.

Some 700 buses will be used to transport the pilgrims. Officials said coordination is still needed for the arrangement of entry permits for pilgrims from countries who do not have diplomatic relations with Israel and for the landing of large numbers of chartered airplane flights.

Prayer resolve

Perhaps you made New Year's resolutions. Perhaps you've already broken them.

There are a lot of resolutions worth making. Why? Because none of us, no matter how old, is perfect, and we all have room to grow and change. At the heart of all resolutions is a single concern: to be a better person. Right?

Recently I wrote about what that means for believers. We want to mold ourselves more closely into God's image. So if you've decided to take on the challenge and to focus on becoming more authentically free, loving, intelligent and creative (for those are the main ways in which we're like God), what do you do? What's at the root of it? Try prayer.

I know you're busy. You get up early in the morning and barely have time to shove a piece of toast in your mouth. School is a nightmare: bunches of different classes, a hundred different soap operas going on among your friends, not to speak of tests, quizzes, reading assignments, papers, essays and math problems to keep track of.

After school you're off to athletic practice, or drama rehearsal, or music lessons, or work. After that you have to deal with all this homework your teachers have so thoughtfully piled on you. And did we mention the list of chores your mom tacked onto the refrigerator? Seriously, now, who has time to pray in the middle of all that? How about this:

With so many pressures and questions bombarding you every minute of your day, who can afford not to pray "in the middle of all that"? How can you get through any of it and, even harder, make sense of it without taking time — some time, somehow — to sit silently and lay it all out before the one who's in charge anyway?

When I talk about prayer here, I'm not talking about a whispered "Please help me" right before a test. There's nothing wrong with that. You're acknowledging God, you're admitting that you need the help only he can give.

That kind of prayer can open the way to something deeper. It's like the time you asked someone for help on a geometry proof, and the two of you ended up having a great conversation about other things as well. Your asking for help was an opening.

Asking God for help in little and big things can be that kind of opening as well — an opening that just might lead to praise as well as petitions.

But how about resolving this year to find other ways to start conversations with God?

— Like watching 20 minutes less television or spending 20 minutes less time on the Internet every other night, and spending that time reading a little bit of the Bible and letting God speak to you through that Word.

— Or maybe, once a week, taking half an hour to pray the rosary.

— Or (here's an amazing thought) going to Mass and actually praying there.

— Or setting aside your criticisms of how everyone looks or your thoughts of what you've got to do later and just praying.

You might find that if you put that first, every other good thing you want for yourself — and even some surprising things you never expected — will fall exactly, precisely, into place in the brand new, promise-filled year that has just begun.

Become an ambassador to marriage

We begin our marriage retreats and PreCana programs by asking the couples to introduce their partners and tell one endearing quality he or she possesses. A great icebreaker, it also sets the tone for the program. Without exception, it is always very powerful. Everyone present feels a more supportive atmosphere. Because by proclaiming their love (even only one quality), they have created a climate that suggests that what they attempt to do as married persons is doable.

We encourage the couples to make such outward displays of love a regular part of their relationship. Married couples need to frequently proclaim their love. It feeds their relationship but also serves the community.

It is good practice to compliment one another. It shows appreciation for the other and wards off tendencies to take one another for granted.

However, even when some compliments seem trite, saying them before others adds a new dimension. A wife may know that her husband appreciates the unselfish care she gives to others; he's told her that many times. However, saying it before others bears witness to their love, and serves the community by making evident even one small aspect of their marital love.

What couples do when they publicly witness their love is contribute, in small but significant ways, to a culture that supports committed love between spouses. In fact, given the today's hostile environment for marriages, this is counter-cultural.

Here is an example of our societal low expectations of marriage. Entertainer Cher, speaking about her personal struggle to accept her daughter's homosexuality, said, "I had dreams that she would someday fall in love with a wonderful man, get married, have children, divorce and live happily ever after."

Of course Cher was going for a laugh. However, in a cynical way, her statement reflects our society's disbelief in the ideals of Christian marriage.

Married persons, by virtue of the sacramentality of their marriages, are spokespersons for marriage. What we say and do reflect not just our marriage, but the institution of marriage.

Our confidence in marriage is helped by what we know and experience. However, it's not always a bed of roses. We also must rely on faith, acting on the unknown, persevering through the unforeseen. Our membership in the "People of God" is part of that faith experience. As married persons we give and receive the gift of witnessed marital love within the faith community.

May we suggest that during the Jubilee Year 2000 married couples be ever conscious of their public role as ambassadors to marriage. Proclaim the good news of Christ that is in your marriage. Shout from the mountaintop the love you share. As we enter a new era of Christianity, let us show our love to others. Let us change our cynical culture of divorce into a supportive belief system that says Christian marriage is realistic and very doable.

Having the time of your life

You are probably already aware of the terrific work of the Make-A-Wish Foundation: well-known celebrities and sports personalities are among the volunteers who make sure incurably ill children get to realize at least one of their dreams. Most often this takes the form of a travel excursion or the chance to meet someone they look up to.

What you may not know is that contact with these kids and their families not only continues well after their wish is fulfilled, but invariably the kids themselves touch the "wish-givers" in unexpected ways.

Marty Lyons and Ken Schroy, former football greats with the New York Jets, recently told me about their own experiences with the Wish kids since becoming involved with the foundation back in 1983. "In each case," Marty confessed, "the children inspired us by rising above their individual suffering and teaching us what it really means to be an authentic hero."

One such hero was Seth Zimolzak, a 17-year-old cancer patient. A promising golfer who spotted his opponents a whopping four-handicap, Seth got his wish: a meeting with pro golfer Greg Norman and a round with baseball Hall of Famer Mike Schmidt. Shortly afterward, Seth began to speak candidly to individuals and groups about what he had learned from his then three-year struggle with cancer.

He would start by asking a question: "What you would do if you went to a bank where $86,400 had been credited to you each day, but would not carry over any balance at day's end? Whatever was left in the account would be gone; and the next day another $86,400 would be available for use."

"Each of us has such a bank," he proclaimed. "Its name is time. Every morning it credits you with 86,400 seconds. Every night it writes off, as lost, whatever of this you have failed to invest. It carries over no balance. It allows no overdraft. Each day it opens a new account for you. Each night it burns the remains of the day. If you fail to use the day's deposits, the loss is yours. There is no going back. There is no drawing against tomorrow.

"You must live in the present on today's deposits. Invest it so as to get the utmost health, happiness and success. The clock is running. Make the most of today."

Seth added, "To realize the value of one year, ask a student who failed a grade. To realize the value of one month, ask a mother who gave birth to a premature baby. To realize the value of one week, ask the editor of a weekly newspaper. To realize the value of one minute, ask a person who missed a plane. To realize the value of one second, ask a person who just avoided an accident. To realize the value of one millisecond, ask the person who won a silver medal at the Olympics."

Eloquence from a boy who relished every moment he had. Seth died Sept. 6 last year.

Regret for time wasted can be a power for good only if it motivates us to stop regretting and start doing the things that matter. Most of us have unfulfilled wishes, which we also regret. It seems to me that if we use our time well, we greatly increase our chances of making our dreams come true. Next time you wish for something, try asking yourself what you can do today to make it a reality.

In-vitro fertilization

Q. Some months ago you discussed the moral problems concerning IVF (in-vitro fertilization), where a sperm and ovum are joined in a laboratory and then inserted into a woman's uterus.

I feel I have something to say about the subject. First of all, the procedure does not "wrongly place new human beings in high risk of death." It is a long shot for some women just desperate for children.

When I was 24 I was diagnosed with an incurable disorder that left me childless and sterile, wondering where would my children come from. Plain dumb luck and IVF made me a believer.

There are four main problems with IVF. It usually doesn't work, is extremely expensive, has some risk for ovarian cancer because of the powerful drugs necessary, and there are incidents of multiple pregnancies.

Yet for some women it's the only chance you have to get your desperately wanted baby, and it's the only alternative. I respect the Catholic Church's opinion, but seeing is believing. Enclosed is a picture of my two children.

A. Thank you for your moving letter. I know you are proud of your children, and I am happy things worked out well for you.

A number of things might be said in response, but a couple of considerations are particularly worth thinking about.

First, such activities actually do put new human beings wrongfully at risk. If fertilized ova are truly incipient human life, deliberately exposing them to destruction, which easily happens when several or many zygotes result from IVF procedures, is clearly wrong.

Further, the fact that something "works out" in certain circumstances does not necessarily make it morally right or good for the human race. If you follow what is happening on this subject, you must be aware of the increasing confusion in relationships (What does "parenthood" mean? Who is the father? Mother? and so on) and other chaotic factors that are multiplying as these reproductive technologies become more common.

Doesn't that tell us something about where our values and concerns should focus in this matter?

Does anyone, married or not, have an unquestionable "right" to have children? Life is a gift from God, pure and simple. We all know how precarious and contingent every life is — whether it will come into being in the first place and whether it will continue on its course once begun, through the various stages of growth and development to old age.

Even when we have a "right" to something, does it justify any means to achieve it, regardless of the implications for oneself and others? Unless we see ourselves as isolated individuals in the midst of the human race, with no accountability to others present and future, concerns about the consequences of our actions are urgent before we act.

The care for and nurturing of life, spiritual, physical, emotional and social, is perhaps the most serious responsibility laid on the human family by our Creator. The church's teachings concerning the use of these technologies attempts to respect that responsibility.

As I said, I'm happy for you. But if we take seriously our obligations to God, these questions should give us pause. They deserve some humble and honest attention, don't you think, when we're trying to discern what is right and wrong?

Praying in Stereo

When Seinfeld was on the air, the comedy writers coined the term "close-talkers" to describe the way some people invade your personal space when they have a conversation with you. You know the types. They grab your arm and move in, putting their nose right up against yours.

Whew! After a little while they have you backed into a corner praying for a "Tic Tac."

In parish life we come in contact with a fair number of close-talkers. Our maintenance man, Charlie, says he knows how to cure close-talkers. When they start moving in on you, don't move away, get closer. Then they back off.

But another variety of talkers is more noticeable in parish life than close-talkers. I call them "late-talkers" or "repeat-talkers."

Don't get me wrong. I don't mind. These little quirks are what make parish life interesting. Like being part of a large family. As Seinfeld would have said, "Not that there is anything wrong with late-talkers."

Nearly every parish has one. You know what I mean. You've heard them out there. They are always a beat behind. In the communal prayers, like the Creed or the Gloria, they always lag a word or two. When the whole congregation says "Amen," you can count on an echo "Amen" a second later.

It makes the Creed go something like this.

"I believe in God." "God."

"The Father almighty." "Almighty."

"Creator of heaven and earth." "Earth."

Maybe late-talkers are just being polite. (After you.... No, after you.) Or maybe they are just a little bit unsure of themselves, so they let everybody else go first just to be sure they are saying the right thing. Then they chime right in a beat late when they are sure.

One thing is sure. They like to be last.

This is generally not a problem unless there are two late-talkers in the same congregation. Then you have dueling late-talkers. They fight for the privilege of being last. ("After you." "No, after you." "No, after you!")

This actually can be entertaining. Once in our parish we had two expert late-talkers at the same Mass. It made all the prayers go in waltz time, 1-2-3, 1-2-3, 1-2-3. Every phrase had three endings.

The creed was something like this.

All: "I believe in God." Pause.

Late-talker No. 1: "God." Pause.

Late-talker No. 2: "God."

After a while you could see smiles breaking out in the congregation. The pauses got longer and quieter. People looked around just to see who would be last. It was hard to keep your mind on the mysteries of our faith. I found myself counting the beats. Cheering for one, then the other.

Trappist Father Thomas Merton used to report that often he found himself paying more attention to how his brother monks were praying the office than what was being prayed. Every now and then he wanted to leap across the choir and strangle the monk who never seemed to be on the right page. But he learned to smile.

Actually, ya gotta laugh. Besides, God probably likes it. That's why he made late-talkers. Then he gets to hear our prayers in stereo.

Poll finds many Americans spiritual but not religious

PRINCETON, N.J. (CNS) — Most Americans think of themselves as religious, but in a recent Gallup Poll 30 percent called themselves "spiritual but not religious."

The survey, conducted in early December and released Dec. 24, found that Catholics were more likely than Protestants to describe themselves as religious.

But it also found that Catholics were more freethinking than Protestants about following religious teachings in their own lives and about the validity of other religions as true paths to God.

The Gallup Poll, conducted for USA Today and CNN, was described as possibly the first to ask whether Americans think of themselves as spiritual but not religious. Generally surveys have asked about religious attitudes without making a distinction between religion and spirituality.

Poll-takers asked the question, "Which of the following statements comes closest to describing your beliefs: you are religious, you are spiritual but not religious, or you are neither?"

Fifty-four percent of the respondents said they were religious, 30 percent spiritual, and 9 percent neither. Six percent volunteered that they were both religious and spiritual, and 1 percent had no answer.

Among the respondents, 54 percent said they were Protestant, 27 percent Catholic and 2 percent Jewish. Eight percent gave other religious preferences and 9 percent said they had none.

Only one-third of the Protestants said they rely on their own views and the views of others, more than on God and religious teachings, when they decide how to conduct their lives. Among Catholics, 55 percent said they rely more on their own views or the views of others.

Catholics were also more likely than Protestants to say other religions besides their own offered a true path to God. Eighty percent of Catholics and 74 percent of Protestants held that view.

Only 42 percent of the Protestants surveyed said non-Christian religions can offer a true path to God, but 61 percent of Catholics held that view.

The survey found that four-fifths of Americans believe that one day God will judge them and send them to heaven or hell. But 44 percent said good people can go to heaven even if they don't believe in God.

It found that 86 percent of Americans believe in God and an additional 8 percent believe in some other kind of "universal spirit or higher power."

For the survey, 1,037 adults were interviewed by telephone Dec. 9-12. The standard margin of sampling error for the results of such a poll is plus or minus 3 percentage points. ▼

Sponsor a Child at a Catholic Mission. It's Affordable!

Little Maria lives in a village in Guatemala in a two-room house with a tin roof and dirt floors. Her father struggles to support the family as a day laborer. Can you help a poor child like Maria? Become a sponsor today!

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford (minimum $10). CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school – whatever is needed most. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child, information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child!

"I'm delighted to be CFCA's 100,000th sponsor . . . and I invite you to join me."

NFL quarterback donates money to group aiding teens

TEMPE, Ariz. (CNS) — The Arizona Cardinals and the football team's quarterback, Jake Plummer, announced they will donate a total of $500,000 to aid in the construction of a camp for disadvantaged youth.

The camp will be operated by Life Teen, a group that offers teen-agers friendship and guidance "in an environment where they feel loved and accepted," according to a statement released by the Cardinals.

Plummer's $250,000 and the Cardinals' matching donation will help Life Teen construct a state-of-the-art youth camp on 160 acres in Yarnell, Ariz.

Life Teen describes its mission as providing teens the opportunity to gain new experiences through physical and spiritual challenges.

The Arizona camp will offer a variety of sports and outdoor adventure activities. ▼

Rome's tourists crowd souvenir shops for jubilee year mementos

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — At the start of the jubilee year, the ring of cash registers at souvenir shops threatened to drown out the sound of church bells.

Holy Year guidebooks and histories, ceramic ashtrays depicting a youthful Pope John Paul II, official jubilee 2000 perfume bottles and velveteen wall hangings of Rome's four major basilicas were just some of the wares tempting shoppers.

"We're packed from morning till night," Massimiliano Conforto, manager of the Galleria Savelli souvenir store near St. Peter's Basilica, said Jan. 4.

The crowds in Rome over the Christmas-New Year's period translated into a 30 percent increase in business for Galleria Savelli compared to the same period in 1998. Other stores in the area reported similar jumps in sales because of pilgrims on the hunt for Holy Year mementos.

Trinkets with the official jubilee 2000 logo, like candles, plates, liqueur glasses and T-shirts, were the store's best-sellers, Conforto said.

Galleria Savelli also designed a jubilee logo of its own, applying it to, among other things, golf balls.

Trinkets with the official jubilee 2000 logo, like candles, plates, liqueur glasses and T-shirts, were the store's best-sellers.

Not all pilgrims were buying, however. While Italians filled souvenir shops, those from other countries, and English-speakers in particular, seemed to have little time for shopping.

"I'm not planning to spend anything (on souvenirs)," said Copenhagen native Eeskil Thylstrup. "I don't like any of them."

Crowded stores and overwhelming arrays of knickknacks were enough to frustrate even the savviest shopper.

"We walked straight past the shops," said David Watkins of Sydney, Australia, whose only purchase was a calendar from the Vatican Museums depicting frescoes from the Sistine Chapel.

"The stores are pretty tacky," he said.

One Canadian tourist also used the word "tacky" to describe the myriad religious souvenirs for sale. "But then you understand the history behind the objects, so you know what it really means, and you accept them for what they are," she said.

The more than a dozen stores around St. Peter's caused some to reflect on whether the jubilee had become too commercialized.

Despite being pleased over Galleria Savelli's increased intake, Conforto emphasized the need for perspective.

"It is too commercial. You risk forgetting the religious aspect" of the jubilee, he said.

"There's plenty to choose from, but it's a little excessive," said Tab Manning, a U.S. Catholic from Houston. "They're making a lot of money off the church."

His mother, Lucia, spent $2,500 on jubilee bells, medallions, plates, coins and rosaries.

Michael and Catherine Kelly of Adelaide, Australia, ignored the stores and street vendors altogether, focusing instead on taking photos.

"We'd much rather spend money on something worthwhile than on something to stick on the shelf. Our camera makes the memories," he said.

"And our travel journal," said his wife. ▼

Pope blesses world, expresses wish for 'year rich in peace'

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — With fireworks exploding overhead and champagne corks popping below him, Pope John Paul II blessed the world in the first seconds of 2000.

The pope led the Catholic Church into the new millennium, as he believed he was destined to do, with a glance at the past and prayers for peace in the future.

"I wish you a year rich in peace," he told an estimated 100,000 people gathered in St. Peter's Square for a New Year's Eve concert and his midnight blessing.

"I wish you a year of serenity and happiness," he said in a message broadcast live by an international group of television networks that had set up stages in the square.

The pope prayed that Christ would bless the first moments of 2000, "so that it may be the promising beginning of a new millennium rich in joy and peace."

While the concert was planned by the youth office of the Italian bishops' conference, the crowd that jammed the square to usher in the New Year with Pope John Paul included people of every age from all over the world.

A group of students from St. Thomas University in St. Paul, Minn., studying in Rome came for the same reason most people did: "It's the chance of a lifetime," said Brad Kluesner.

"Of all the places in the world to celebrate the millennium, this is the holiest," said his friend, Theresa Slattery.

While the night included prayer, the mood in St. Peter's Square was that of a party. Italian pop star Claudio Baglioni and the Harlem Gospel Singers entertained the crowd; people brought their own sparklers and bottles of spumante or champagne.

The mood was more solemn earlier in the evening as Pope John Paul presided over vespers and a thanksgiving service in St. Peter's Basilica.

"While we raise our thanks to God, we feel the need at the same time to ask his mercy for the millennium that is ending," he said in his homily.

Pope John Paul II stands at the window of his balcony as fireworks explode in Rome at the start of the third millennium Jan. 1. The pontiff welcomed the new year with a wish that 2000 be filled with joy and peace.

"We ask forgiveness because, unfortunately, sometimes the conquests of technology and science, so important for authentic human progress, have been used against man," the pope said.

With just a few hours left in 1999, Pope John Paul said it was natural to look back at the most important events of 1999, of the 20th century and of the second millennium.

The one event the pope chose to highlight in his review of the millennium was Europeans' discovery of America which, he said, "marked the beginning of a new era in the history of humanity."

In reviewing the 20th century, he said the most defining element was the rise and fall of "two oppressive ideologies" — communism and Nazism — which left in their wake millions of victims.

"What suffering, what drama" the 20th century brought, he said, "but also how many exulting conquests."

Pope John Paul said the greatest risk that humanity carries with it into the new millennium is that fewer and fewer people know how to bring moral and ethical values to bear on scientific and technological advances.

As he opened the Holy Door Jan. 1 at Rome's Basilica of St. Mary Major and celebrated the World Day of Peace, the pope again prayed, "May the year that is beginning be the dawn of a millennium of peace.

"May the Lord give you peace! This is the church's wish for all humanity on the first day of the new year," the pope said in his homily.

The 20th century, he said, was full of events that prove how fragile peace can be and how essential it is for people to commit themselves to dialogue and solidarity.

It was only 14 years ago, he said, that leaders of dozens of religions gathered in Assisi, Italy, at the pope's invitation to pray for peace.

"We were still in the period of the so-called Cold War," the pope said, and "the serious threat of a conflict seemed to hang over humanity."

God heard the prayers of his children, the pope said.

"While we have seen the explosion of dangerous local and regional conflicts, nevertheless we have been saved from the global conflict which seemed to be on the horizon," he said.

Returning to the Vatican Jan. 1 for his midday Angelus address and to bless participants in the Rome Millennium Marathon — which started from St. Peter's Square — the pope said everyone must be a peacemaker.

Pope John Paul offered special prayers for people living in countries marked by violence and war. According to a report cited by Vatican Radio, 65 countries — a third of the nations in the world — were at war or struggling with violent internal conflicts as the year ended.

"From every part of the globe there rises a heartfelt plea for peace," the pope said. "We pray that this plea is heard." ▼

Sri Lankan bishops denounce bombing, increased violence

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (CNS) — Sri Lanka's bishops expressed shock and sadness at continued violence, including a suspected Tamil militant's suicide bombing that left 13 people dead. "Once again blood has been shed and lives lost in the unending spiral of violent attacks on political leaders, security officers on duty, and civilians. We note with sadness the intensification of such attacks in the past few weeks," the bishops said in a statement Jan. 5, the day of the killings. Their remarks were reported by UCA News, and Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Bronx parish exchanges millennial greetings with Rome, Havana

NEW YORK (CNS) — The hopes and prayers of the people of St. Brendan's parish in the Bronx were heard in churches in Rome and Havana in a New Year's Eve telephone hookup and satellite broadcast over Vatican Radio. St. Brendan's was the only site in the United States chosen for the exchange of greetings, which was heard around the world. The conference call was part of a project called "24 Hours Waiting for the Year 2000 With the Holy Father." Organized by the bishops' conference of Italy, the Diocese of Rome and a Vatican jubilee office, it included the exchange of greetings between Rome and 26 countries.

Dallas Diocese adopts stricter guidelines on Medjugorje events

DALLAS (CNS) — The Diocese of Dallas has adopted guidelines on Medjugorje-related activities that clearly define as "private" any devotion to the reported Marian apparitions in the former Yugoslavian republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Bishop Charles V. Grahmann issued the guidelines Dec. 22 for pastors "to clarify the situation on the church's position." The guidelines were drawn up following efforts to organize a large gathering for Medjugorje visionary Ivan Dragicevic, who lives in the United States. He frequently tours U.S. cities and claims to have Marian visions wherever he is.

On Epiphany, pope ordains 12 bishops from seven countries

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II ordained 12 bishops from seven different countries — including the United States — and said their diversity reinforced the universality of the church. "You come from different nations and represent the universality of the church that adores the Word made flesh for our salvation," the pope told them during a Jan. 6 Mass in St. Peter's Basilica. "Around you are gathered the faithful from various parts of the world, to whom you are sent as successors of the apostles," he said.

Philippine priest-turned-rebel killed by brother's faction

MANILA, Philippines (CNS) — A priest who became a rebel during the rule of the late President Ferdinand Marcos was killed in his family home by communist guerrillas led by his younger brother. Police reports said Conrado Balweg, a former Divine Word priest, was having coffee in Malibcong, 170 miles north of Manila, when he was shot at 4 a.m. Dec. 31. UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand, reported the town is in Abra, one of the five provinces in the mountainous and predominantly tribal Cordillera region in northern Luzon. Balweg's brother, Juvencio, told a Jan. 3 press conference near Abra that the communist New People's Army command he leads was behind the execution, but he denied firing the bullets, which hit Balweg's right arm and jaw.

Ecumenical opportunities arise in rural climate, professor says

DES MOINES, Iowa (CNS) — Ecumenical opportunities abound in rural America as church and human resources grow more strained there, according to professor Gary Burkart of Benedictine College in Atchison, Kan. "Cooperation would appear to be the better path to survival, development and relevancy," Burkart said in an article in Catholic Rural Life magazine, published in Des Moines. Because of "continuing decline" in traditionally rural areas coupled with "mushrooming growth" from creeping suburbanization, joint ministries are just one of the ecumenical opportunities to be had, Burkart said.

Up to 20 more U.S. bishops could retire this year

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Even after two retirements Jan. 4, as many as 20 more U.S. bishops — including three cardinals — could also retire in 2000 because they are at or beyond the retirement age of 75. Six currently active bishops are celebrating their 75th birthdays this year. And sixteen active bishops were already 75 when the new year started. With the two Jan. 4 retirements, 14 are still active. Church law says at age 75 a bishop "is requested to present his resignation" to the pope.

CHARLOTTE — January fifteenth, a day associated with positive change, historical firsts and tragedy, is the birth date of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a proponent of nonviolent protest, whose life ironically ended by assassination in 1968.

People reflected on the teachings and traditions of Dr. King and how they are and are not being applied in today's society at the Fifteenth Annual Diocesan Memorial Celebration for Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on Jan. 8.

Our Lady of Consolation Church was the site for the gathering, which attracted over 80 attendants from all areas of the diocese. This event, sponsored by the African American Affairs Ministry, was held a week earlier than the national holiday celebrated this year on Jan. 17 because of the schedule of the keynote speaker, Dr. Morris F.X. Jeff Jr.

Also, parishioners from the Asheville area have stated that there have been conflicts with their own weekend observance of the holiday when the diocesan celebration has been previously held on the Saturday preceeding Dr. King's birthday, said Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, vice chancellor of the diocese and the vicar for the African American Affairs Ministry.

Dr. Jeff, a New Orleans, La., native, has been the director of the City of New Orleans Department of Human Services since 1974. He is the coowner of the Counseling and Diagnostic Family Institute of New Orleans, a black family service agency, and the founder of the Milne Boys' Home and Manhood Development Program, a long-term rite of passage for urban males. He has appeared on several television news programs and talk shows.

"The message of Dr. King is virtually unknown among young people and ignored or forgotten by those who lived during that time," said Rev. Mr. Todd. "We wanted Dr. Jeff to speak at the celebration because he is an expert in the works, talks and goals of Dr. King and in African-American history and has a solid recommendation for the future."

Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, vice chancellor of the diocese and vicar of the African American Affairs Ministry, and Fred Dewalt from the African American Affairs Ministry Board of Directors present the 2000 Glenda Rollins-Gaither Service Award to James Bingley from St. James Church in Concord. His daughters and great-granddaughter accepted the award on Bingley's behalf because of his illness.

Dr. Jeff's address concerned Dr. King's fusion of religion and politics and the struggle between social norms and radical change during the time of the volatile civil rights movement in America. He opened with a series of quotes from poems and writings from Dr. King and various other African-American authors.

Dressed in Afro-centric garments and speaking in a resonant voice, Dr. Jeff commented about Dr. King's statement, "nonviolence is power": "Dr. King had a strategy for his dream and a methodology for his strategy; he came ready for action — nonviolent action."

He gave statistical information about the socio-economic, medical, and political gap between the races that Dr. King fought to close during his time. He made reference to the links among medical statistics about infant mortality, living conditions and financial struggles for African-Americans.

"As we assess where we are 135 years after the signing and passing of the thirteenth amendment and 31 years after the passing of Martin Luther King Jr., we still see the residue of slavery and apartheid in America," said Dr. Jeff.

He made reference to the "new church — black," one that encompasses all people and is rooted in spirituality and love of neighbor and God.

"The black church is one that is truly in the spirit of what blackness represents, defining more than just color," explained Dr. Jeff. "It is a healing circle, one that transforms and transcends the evils of life. Blackness is the essence of every living thing, and we must live in that essence and go beyond the simplicity of black and white."

"Dr. Jeff speaks not from a denominational religious perspective, but the basis is spiritual in nature," commented Rev. Mr. Todd. "He talks about the horizontal relationship with Jesus and God and the vertical relationship among brothers and sisters. His message is in the context of blackness, not as a color, but the universality of blackness."

Larry Kirwan from Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro said, "we need to form a universal church and accept each other as one community. We have to be available for one another and give of ourselves to those who have less."

After the first question and answer session, the audience, who had been actively participating, decided that they wanted to engage in further discussion with the speaker instead of the scheduled word events.

During both question and answer sessions, the plight of today's youth and how older people could help to guide them in the right direction was repeatedly mentioned.

"We must use our own past experiences and tell children about them. We need to get back to the practice of sitting in a circle and telling stories to the kids. We can use our life histories as a frame of reference to encourage our children to have the courage to face the future," said Joann Munden, a parishioner from St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem.

Dr. Jeff talked about the importance of teaching children not only the history of Dr. King but also other aspects of African-American history. Every year, he takes a group of junior and senior high school students on

Breaking the cycle of homelessness

Sisters of Mercy ministry utilizes education as key to empowerment

By JOANN S. KEANE

BELMONT — Picture Annie. Her face is swollen from the abusive blow from the hand of one she thought she loved. She's lost her job. Drugs consume her daily existence. The 19-year-old mother wonders where the next meal will come for her and her 2-year-old child. With seemingly nowhere to turn, she's one step away from life on the street. Fortunately, Annie is a one-dimensional amalgamation, whose life only exists on this newsprint.

"When people come here, it is more than homelessness that is an issue," says Director Nancy Isbanioly. "Everyone comes with a multitude of issues. Our goal is to prevent homelessness from ever happening again."

Unfortunately, the situations are all too real. On any given day, dozens of women will come face to face with the angst and anger that consumes seemingly dismal lives. They are caught a vicious cycle, wishing nothing more than a second chance to change their lives.

If that wish is serious, a helping hand may be closer than they think. Catherine's House in Belmont is a phone call away. Women willing to adhere to a highly structured three-phase program find the doors of Catherine's House open wide. Inside, a safe, comfortable and welcoming environment stands ready to help break the cycle.

Make no mistake: Catherine's House is not an emergency shelter; it is transitional housing for women and women with children who are homeless.

Recycling facilities on the grounds of the former Sacred Heart College, Catherine's House is an outreach by the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina, a lifeline to vulnerable women in need.

The program of Catherine's House is underscored by a foundation of faith and hope as a visible witness of God's merciful love, all in the spirit of Catherine McAuley, foundress of the Sisters of Mercy. "There is an honest and real commitment," says President and CEO Laura Flaccus. And Flaccus feels this encouragement is palpable. "I believe the residents respond to that," she says.

It's not a Band-Aid approach. The staff of Catherine's House strive to reprogram clients, educate them and teach self-sufficiency skills needed for survival. It is a serious 90-day commitment on the part of incoming women.

"When people come here, it is more than homelessness that is an issue," says Director Nancy Isbanioly. "Everyone comes with a multitude of issues. Our goal is to prevent homelessness from ever happening again."

Following screening and intake to the program, the new client and staff members develop a plan to meet individual goals. "We have a strong emphasis on education," says Isbanioly. "Anyone who comes through our doors without a high school or GED education will be required to attain that diploma," she adds.

While in residence, the clients' case manager maintains close contact through each phase of progress. Should specific services be unavailable in house, staff members tap into community resources. Catherine's House works closely with a Gaston County agencies, including the Department of Social Services.

Phase I consists of securing basic needs such as benefits and healthcare, while meeting daycare or school needs for children. Phase II is considered successful when clients begin a job search, and are enrolled in appropriate classes. Clients open a savings account. Completion of each phase is a celebration, marked with certificates of achievement. Self-esteem soars. Phase III is graduation and clients re-enter the community, ready to take life as it comes — this time stronger, self-sufficient, and one day at a time. ▼

Belmont Abbey College announces prestigious Grace Award Dinner

BELMONT — Belmont Abbey College has begun planning for the 2000 Grace Award Dinner, an event traditionally attended by business and civic leaders to recognize a deserving colleague. This year the recipient of the Grace Award - named for Charles L. Grace, president of Cummins Atlantic, Inc. - is Tom D. Efird, president of Standard Distributors, Inc. based in Gastonia.

The dinner will be held at 6 p.m. Friday, Feb. 25 in the Student Commons on the Belmont Abbey campus. Corporate tables seating eight are available for $550; individual tickets are $75 each.

Proceeds from the evening benefit scholarships for employees of companies belonging to the Belmont Abbey College Associates (BACA), which co-sponsors the event with the Belmont Abbey College Board of Advisors.

The Grace Award recognizes an outstanding businessperson and citizen whose contributions and commitments have significantly improved the quality of life in the region. Efird is the fifth recipient of the honor, following Herman Blumenthal (1993); Bynum and Rebecca Carter (1994); Humpy Wheeler (1997); and Felix Sabates (1998).

Efird is a former chairman of the Abbey's Board of Trustees and is continually supportive of the college's initiatives. He has also given generously of his time and talents to Gaston College, the Schiele Museum, Hospice of Gaston County, the Community Foundation of Gaston County, the Gaston County Chamber of Commerce, and other community organizations.

"We are pleased to co-sponsor the Grace Award Dinner because it serves two important purposes," said Bynum Carter, current chairman of BACA. "It recognizes a deserving member of the community and it raises much-needed money for scholarships."

For more information or to purchase tickets to the dinner, call (704) 825-6735. ▼

Girl Scouting is more than just cookies

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

WINSTON-SALEM — The women in the Perrino family are a part of a long-standing tradition. Susan Perrino is the leader of Senior Girl Scout Troop 1023 — the troop to which her two older daughters, Patty, 17, and Jennifer, 15, belong. Her youngest daughter, Laura, 12, is a Cadette Girl Scout, the division before becoming a Senior Girl Scout.

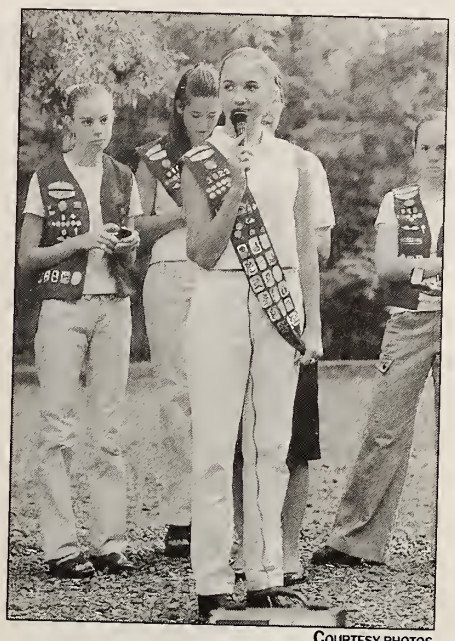
The Perrino girls' grandmother was their mother's troop leader, and their great-grandmother was their grandmother's troop leader.

"It has been fun being involved in my daughters' activities, watching them grow up and experience new opportunities," said Susan. "I have been a part of the planning stages, so I don't just send them out the door; I can be a part of that aspect of their lives. I just continued the tradition started in my family."

Susan began as a Daisy Girl Scout troop leader with her middle daughter Jennifer and moved to the Brownie Girl Scout division and up the ranks with her oldest daughter Patty.

All of the young women are dedicated to Girl Scouts, like their mother and their matriarchs, but Patty has gone the extra mile and was rewarded for her work.

Patty, who has been involved with Girl Scouts since she was in first grade, decided that she wanted to do a multi-leveled project which would put her in contention for the Gold Award, the highest honor in Girl Scouts. The project itself is only part of the requirements needed to be eligible to participate in the Gold Award program.



COURTESY PHOTOS

Senior Girl Scout Troop 1023 Leader Susan Perrino presents her daughter Patty with the Gold Award pin, the highest honor in Girl Scouts, at a ceremony in Winston-Salem last year. Patty, who attends St. Leo the Great Church, worked with a teacher to help Hispanic children learn English for her project.

She had to earn four badges over the course of two years, which involve community leadership, self-exploration and relationship development. Each of the four badges has a minimum of eight requirements, explained Susan.

Each teen has to perform 30 hours of leadership service in which she plans, organizes and evaluates an activity for the group. She has to work 30 hours by either obtaining a part-time job, including writing a resume and interviewing for the position, mentoring with someone on his or her job, or organizing a job fair. In addition to those tasks, the Senior Challenge has several components all related to self and community improvement.

Patty earned an additional 15 hours as part of her senior challenge by assisting her mother, who teaches faith formation at their church, St. Leo the Great in Winston-Salem. She worked two months with senior citizens to understand her own grandparents better. She also volunteered in other aspects in and around her community.

"As I started doing the work, I could see how my being a Girl Scout could help out the community," said Patty. "I saw how I effected change in my community."

She then wrote a report on how she earned her badges and submitted it and her project proposal to the Gold committee. They approved her idea of helping Susan Moretz, the English as a Second Language teacher at the elementary school where her mother teaches first grade. She would be helping the teacher to take some of her ideas and create more efficient ways for the children to learn English.

Patty explained, "This is something that I wanted to do because I had met the kids from working with my mother in faith formation, and I thought that combining the two things would be a great way to represent my mom's school."

Her project, which lasted from June 1998 to April 1999, had three facets, all focusing on helping the students learn English at a faster rate.

She cut out shapes and figures of various colors in vinyl to serve as flash cards and parts of matching games to help the children learn shapes, colors and sizes. She built a grocery store from plywood and collected cereal boxes, plastic fruit, an old cash register and other items to simulate a shopping experience and to teach them the names of food items and currency.

She also made a dollhouse, cut out pictures of furniture and parts of the house, laminated the pictures and applied Velcro to the backs of the pictures so that the children could learn the names of the rooms, furniture and appliances.

Because of her achievements, she earned her Gold Award pin and received congratulatory letters from businesses and prominent citizens and also received a flag flown over the United States Capitol building from Congressman Richard Burr.

"There were times when she would get discouraged, but she stuck with it, and I am proud of her," said Susan.

"Boy Scouts get a lot of recognition, and the community doesn't focus as much on the Girl Scouts," said Patty. "As more girls get involved, the community can see that girls can

Heads of 14 Orthodox churches celebrate Christmas in Holy Land

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The heads of 14 Orthodox churches celebrated Orthodox Christmas in the Holy Land in an unprecedented gathering.

It was the first time all the heads of Orthodox churches met together to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ.

"This is a rare, historic event," Greek Orthodox Archbishop Christodoulos of Athens and All Greece told the Israeli Ha'aretz newspaper.

In addition to the Greek Orthodox patriarch, the gathering included the patriarchs of Moscow, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, Serbia, Romania, Bulgaria, Georgia, Cyprus, Poland, the Czech Republic and Slovakia, and Albania.

Orthodox Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew of Constantinople is given special honor by all Orthodox churches, recognized as "first among equals," although he does not have authority to intervene in the affairs of local churches outside his own patriarchate.

Orthodox Christmas is celebrated Jan. 7. Orthodox churches use the Julian calendar, which differs by 13 days from the Gregorian calendar used by the Catholic and Protestant churches.

The Armenian Orthodox Church, which also uses its own separate calendar, will celebrate its Christmas Eve Jan. 18.

Under rainy skies, the patriarchs participated in a pre-Christmas procession through the narrow streets of the Old City of Jerusalem Jan. 4, culminating in a joint prayer at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, where throngs of Orthodox pilgrims joined their patriarchs in worship.

On Christmas Eve Jan. 6, the patriarchs were joined by some political leaders of their countries in a celebration at the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat also attended the service. Among the political leaders accompanying the patriarchs was outgoing Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who announced his resignation Dec. 31.

The patriarchs also attended a dinner in their honor at the residence of Israeli President Ezer Weizman. ▼

Bolivian bishops seek release of some prisoners for jubilee

LA PAZ, Bolivia (CNS) — The Bolivian bishops' conference announced the establishment of a commission to negotiate for the release of prisoners from Bolivian jails during the jubilee year. Juan Carlos Nunez, bishops' conference spokesman, said the commission was established to "ensure that all technical aspects are covered to make the release of some prisoners possible." Nunez said that in late 1999 the bishops' conference requested the release of prisoners for Christmas as part of the jubilee initiatives. But the government released only 27 inmates from Bolivian prisons, arguing that a greater number would had been inconsistent with its new policy on crime.

Court orders debt protesters not to break law again

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Superior Court Judge Stephen G. Milliken Jan. 4 released four Catholic protesters seeking debt relief for poor countries, on condition they not break the law over the next seven months. The four, members of the Religious Working Group on the World Bank and IMF (International Monetary Fund), were arrested Sept. 23 in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda when they staged a peaceful demonstration urging Congress to "do its share" in funding debt relief for the world's poorest countries.

Indonesian bishop seeks change in government to end conflict

JAKARTA, Indonesia (CNS) — An Indonesian bishop urged his country's president to change government and security officials to end the prolonged sectarian conflict in riot-torn Moluccas province. Bishop Petrus Mandagi of Ambon recommended the change to President Abdurrahman Wahid during a meeting at the state palace Jan. 5. He was accompanied by Archbishop Renzo Fratini, apostolic nuncio to Indonesia, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Ordination by pope 'overwhelming,' says new Wyoming coadjutor

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Being ordained one of the first bishops of the millennium by Pope John Paul II was "overwhelming," said Coadjutor Bishop David L. Ricken of Cheyenne, Wyo. Bishop Ricken, who spent the last three years working in the Vatican's clergy office, was the only American among 12 bishops ordained Jan. 6 in St. Peter's Basilica. "To be ordained by the Holy Father right at the tomb of St. Peter, with 11 other priests — it was so reminiscent of the Twelve Apostles," he told Catholic News Service. "The only way I can describe it is I was overwhelmed."

Illinois Dominican nuns forgive debts for jubilee

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (CNS) — To mark the jubilee year 2000, the Dominican Sisters of Springfield have canceled 19 debts owed to them. Most of the debts were loans to community-organizing groups that help poor people become self-sustaining. Sister Mary Jean Traeger, prioress general of the 312-member congregation, announced the action during community prayer Jan. 1. "Our world needs signs of hope from people of faith," she said. "It needs our energetic commitment to the proclamation of the Gospel. It longs for some assurance that peace with genuine justice is possible. In this spirit of jubilee we decided to cancel several long-term debts owed to our congregation."

Orthodox patriarch sees little hope for Christian unity soon

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The leader of the world's 200 million Orthodox Christians said hopes that Christians will achieve unity soon are "groundless." He added that Pope John Paul II had taken "larger steps" toward Christian unity than previous popes, but warned that his exercise of papal primacy was still unacceptable to Orthodox churches. "For me, fundamentally, the papacy expresses a spirit far removed from the spirit of the Orthodox Church," said Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew of Constantinople, spiritual leader of the world's Orthodox Christians.

Chinese church ordains bishops without Vatican approval

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a move that appeared to aggravate China-Vatican divisions, the government-approved Chinese church ordained five new bishops without papal approval.

The ordinations were performed Jan. 6 during a Mass in a Beijing cathedral, just hours before Pope John Paul II ordained 12 new bishops in St. Peter's Basilica. Church officials in Rome said the timing was a deliberate provocation, and the Vatican expressed its "astonishment and disappointment" at the act.

The Vatican has viewed the ordinations of bishops of the Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association as valid because they have been performed by validly ordained bishops, but illicit because they are done without a papal mandate, Father Politi said.

"This decision comes at a time when voices have been raised in many parts which lead one to hope for a normalization of relations between the Holy See and Beijing," spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said.

"But this gesture poses obstacles that certainly will hamper that process," he said.

China's long-standing refusal to recognize the pope's right to appoint bishops has been one of the biggest obstacles in Chinese-Vatican relations and a major factor in the division between the Chinese underground church loyal to Rome and the government-sanctioned Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association.

Some 300 people, a relatively sparse crowd, attended the ordinations at Immaculate Conception Cathedral. Among the congregation were representatives of the Communist Party's religious affairs office.

Bishop Liu Yuanren of Nanjing, president of the Bishops' Conference of the Catholic Church in China, was the ordaining bishop, with Bishop Michael Fu Tieshan of Beijing, chairman of the patriotic association, as co-ordainer, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Five additional bishops and 30 priests concelebrated the ordination Mass. All the bishops laid their hands on and embraced the newly ordained bishops.

Bishop Fu told the congregation that the ordinations reflected China's prosperity and said the development of the church in China had to keep pace with the development of the country.

The newly ordained were Bishops Peter Fang Jianping of Tangshan, 39; Jin Daoyuan of Changzhi, 71; Lu Xinping of Nanjing, 36; Su Changshan of Baoding, 74; and Zhan Silu of Mindong, 39.

Bishop Zhan later told UCA News that the new bishops had pledged obedience to the pope during the ceremony — a point the others did not confirm. He said the timing of the ordinations was not confrontational.

"We were ordained today because it is the Epiphany Day, a big feast day in the church. If it happens on the same day as the Vatican's ordinations, isn't it even better?" he said.

The vice chairman of the patriotic association, Liu Bainian, told the Italian news agency ANSA that the ordinations were a sign of the church's vitality.

"The Chinese church has bishops who are helping it prosper as in few places in the world. So I think the pope should be pleased," he said. He added that there would be more ordinations in the future because the average age of Chinese bishops was too high.

The pope made no mention of the new Chinese bishops during his annual ordination Mass at the Vatican.

Newly ordained bishops leave the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Beijing Jan. 6. Chinese Bishop Liu Yuanren ordained five new state-approved bishops in defiance of Pope John Paul II, who alone has the authority for naming bishops in the church.

But veteran China-watchers said the Vatican saw the Chinese ceremony as an act of defiance at a sensitive moment in church-state relations.

Coadjutor Bishop Joseph Zen Ze-kiun of Hong Kong said the ordinations were an "act of confrontation" that shows that China has "no real intention of reconciling with the Vatican," UCA News reported.

He said the ordinations conform with an internal Communist Party memorandum that surfaced in 1999, which called for more ordinations of bishops chosen by secular officials and further division of the underground and the state-sanctioned church.

In Rome, the missionary news service MISNA said the "Chinese

High School students invited to enter 10th annual poster contest

NEW YORK — The Christophers' 10th annual poster contest for high school students is underway, with prizes totaling $2,000. To enter, each artist must illustrate his or her interpretation of the statement "You Can Make a Difference," a theme that allows students to express themselves on a variety of topics. All students in grades 9 through 12 are invited to enter. Posters must be 15 by 20 inches and include the words "You Can Make a Difference." They will be judged on overall impact, effectiveness in conveying the theme, originality and artistic merit. Eight prizes will be awarded, with a first prize of $1,000. Entries must be received by Jan. 28, and winner will be announced April 21. All posters become the property of The Christophers, an nonprofit organization that used print and broadcast media to encourage all people to recognize their unique abilities and use them to raise the standards of public life. Complete rules for the poster contest are available by writing to High School Poster Contest, The Christophers, 12 East 48th St., New York, NY 10017, by calling (212) 759-4050, or on the Web at http:// www.christophers.org/poster.html.

government, which once again forces upon Catholics its desire for absolute control, is surely behind the decision of ordination."

The Vatican missionary news agency Fides reported that the ordinations were a failure for the government and the patriotic association. It said nine of 12 original candidates refused to participate in the ceremony because it was "in clear competition with the Holy See." In addition, Fides said, more than 130 seminarians at the national seminary in Beijing decided to boycott the ordination Mass after participating in a rehearsal the day before.

Fides said only one of the ordaining bishops had relations with the Vatican, and all of those ordained had "suffered extreme pressure" from Chinese authorities.

Italian Father Giancarlo Politi, who follows Chinese affairs as editor of the magazine Mondo e Missione (World and Mission), said the ordinations highlight a worrisome trend toward greater government involvement in the bishop selection process and raise questions about the eventual reconciliation of the bishops with the Vatican, especially because three of the new bishops were so young.

While China maintains that the election of bishops is a legitimate function of the local church, in practice it is the government and the Communist Party that control the selection of episcopal candidates, Father Politi said. It is "certainly not a good sign" that this type of government involvement appears to be increasing, he added.

The Vatican has viewed the ordinations of bishops of the Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association as valid because they have been performed by validly ordained bishops, but illicit because they are done without a papal mandate, Father Politi said.

That leaves individual bishops in a difficult position with the Holy See. But the Vatican has always avoided using the term "schism" to describe the situation in China, recognizing the political pressures involved, he said.

Some Chinese bishops who belong to the government-sanctioned church are said to have secretly reconciled with Rome, and others would probably not have too much problem reaching a similar understanding at some point in the future — especially older bishops who have suffered strong political pressure, Father Politi said.

"What is alarming is that these (new) bishops are very young and have made a choice that is at least somewhat free. There hasn't been for them the kind of pressure or fear that existed in the days of Mao (Tse-tung)," he said. ▼

Pro-life officials heartened by declining U.S. abortion rate

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A spokeswoman for the U.S. Catholic bishops lauded the newly released figures from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention which showed U.S. abortions in 1997 were at their lowest level in two decades.

Helen Alvare, director of planning and information for the bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, credited the decline in part to the four-year campaign against partial-birth abortions, which she said "exposed people to the reality of abortion."

Figures released by the CDC in Atlanta showed that U.S. abortion rates had climbed during the 1970s, remained stable during the 1980s and began a gradual decline in 1991.

The statistics indicate that there were a total of 1,184,758 abortions performed in 1997, which is 3 percent less than the 1,221,585 abortions performed in 1996, and is the lowest number performed since 1978. The number of abortions for every live 1,000 births also dropped from 314 in 1996 to 305 in 1997, which CDC officials claim is the lowest level since 1975.

The national abortion rate, defined as the number of legal abortions per 1,000 women aged 15-44 years, has remained steady at 20 from 1995-97.

Although Alvare was heartened by the CDC figures, she said they are about 10 percent lower than the figures reported by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, the research organization for the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, because some states do not have centralized reporting of abortions.

Authors of the report, published in the Jan. 7 issue of the CDC publication Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, attribute several factors to the decline in abortions including a reduced number of unintended pregnancies, "attitude changes" about having an abortion and reduced access to abortion services.

The CDC statistics from all 50 states and the District of Columbia showed that in 1997, white women received 58.5 of all abortions, black women received 35.8 percent and women of other races received 5.7 percent. In a category called ethnicity, about 15 percent of the women receiving abortions were Hispanic, while 85 percent were non-Hispanic.

Only 19 percent of the women receiving abortions were married. Approximately 20 percent of the women who obtained a legal abortion in 1997 were 19 or younger while 32 percent were between the ages of 20 and 24.

According to the report, 88 percent of all legal abortions were performed within the first 12 weeks of gestation.

Laura Echevarria, director of media relations for the National Right to Life Committee, said she was pleased with the "continuing trend toward fewer abortions" and said her organization would "continue working to educate Americans about the tragedy of abortion."

"The more the American people learn about the humanity of the unborn child and the violence of abortion, the more they reject abortion," she said.

The Family Research Council's spokeswoman, Janet Parshall, said the decline in the number of abortions "mirrors the change in attitudes about abortion documented in recent years." ▼

Bishop Curlin to participate in March for Life Masses

Editor's note: A story on the national March for Life in Washington in last week's issue of The Catholic News & Herald included an error regarding the date of a Mass to be celebrated by Bishop Curlin for diocesan pilgrims. The following includes the correct information.

CHARLOTTE — Bishop William G. Curlin will celebrate a Mass for people from the Diocese of Charlotte who will gather in Washington, D.C., for the annual March for Life on Jan. 24. During the evening before, Bishop Curlin will also concelebrate a Mass that opens the National Prayer Vigil for Life.

The bishop will celebrate the Mass for diocesan pilgrims Jan. 24 at 10 a.m. in the Blessed Sacrament Chapel in the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington. At 8 p.m. the evening before, he will concelebrate a Mass that will open the National Prayer Vigil for Life in the shrine's Great Upper Church. Cardinal William H. Keeler of Baltimore, chairman of the bishop's pro-life committee, will be the principal celebrant and homilist.

A number of busses have been chartered by the Diocese of Charlotte's Respect Life Office, parishes and other institutions throughout the diocese to travel to the march. The annual gathering draws tens of thousands of people from across the country to protest the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 decisions that legalized abortion in the United States. Students representing Charlotte Catholic High School and Belmont Abbey College will lead this year's march.

For further information on the Diocese of Charlotte's participation in the national March for Life, contact the Respect Life Office at (704) 370-3229. ▼

Thank You!

Samaritan's Purse would like to thank the thousands of volunteers who packed shoe boxes and worked at our Charlotte Processing Center so that needy boys and girls around the world might know the joy of Christmas. Through your hard work, our Charlotte center prepared more than one-fifth of the 3 million gift-filled shoe boxes Samaritan's Purse shipped around the world. We delivered some of these to children in Honduras and Kosovo recently, and with grins from ear to ear, they had one message for you—Thank you! We appreciate your hard work and sacrifices. They enabled us to share the joyful news of God's greatest gift, Jesus Christ. May God richly bless you and your family throughout this new year.

Harry Potter author: 'I believe in God, not magic'

By ANNE LEVEQUE
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — "I believe in God, not magic," said J.K. Rowling, author of the popular Harry Potter series of children's books.

During a U.S. book tour stop in Washington, Rowling discussed the nature of evil, censorship, and faith, among other things.

The three Harry Potter books, about a young wizard's adventures, have caused a sensation in the publishing world because they have held top spots on The New York Times' best seller list as well as on Amazon.com, the online bookseller.

The best-selling "Harry Potter" books focus on a young wizard's adventures. The author, J.K. Rowling, told Catholic News Service that she believes her books to be "moral."

Some parents have wondered whether the setting of the books and their dealing with witchcraft makes for wholesome reading.

In the stories, Harry is an orphan — reared by unloving relatives — who discovers at age 11 that he is a wizard. He has a mysterious lightning-bolt scar on his forehead, evidence of an attack by the evil Lord Voldemort. He goes to the Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, where he meets many more children — and adults — like himself.

"I personally think they are moral books," said Rowling. "I absolutely agree that you have the right to determine what your child reads, but I don't think that anyone has the right to determine what other people's children read."

In discussing the evil Voldemort, Rowling said, "(other than those) who are mentally ill and not responsible for their actions, evil will be the result of very poor choices and possibly insufficient bravery to take the right path. And that's what I'm attempting to show with my villain. Here is someone who had choices — he had a great deal of natural talent which he's abusing, he's totally self-serving, but he could have gone a different way.

"That is supposed to be contrasted quite strongly with Harry, who has come from an equally difficult start in life, but who consistently tries to make the right choices. Sometimes he fails."

Rowling has drawn criticism for characterizing Harry with human failings, but, she says, he is a human child. "I want to show that (he's human); I want him to sometimes make mistakes. ... But he is generally acting with the best of intentions."

So far, none of her bad characters has decided to reform, but Rowling hints that in future books there will be themes of redemption. "You will see redemption and you will see the other side as well, people struggling to do the right thing who do not."

Some of the main characters are based on real people. Harry's friend Hermione Granger is modeled after the author herself, while Ron Weasley, Harry's best friend, is based on Rowling's good friend and her daughter's godfather, Sean Harris, described by Rowling as a "committed Catholic."

Rowling is planning to write a total of seven books in this series, one for each year that Harry is at wizards' school. She is committed to having the entire series remain appropriate for age 9 and up.

"Harry will grow older, and I hope grow older plausibly. I do have a problem with treating a 16 year old character as though he were a prepubescent."

Describing future books in the series, Rowling said, "the books will become darker, in the sense that you feel

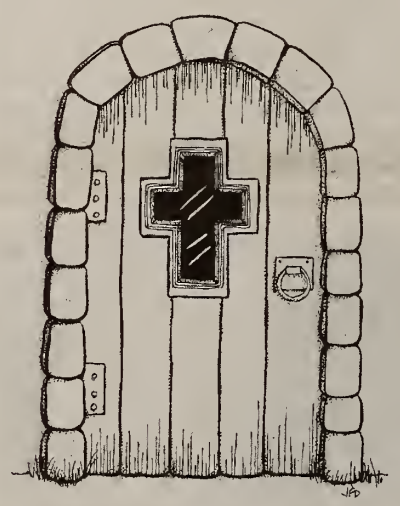
We know people for years, at work or as neighbors, waving from across the street and chatting over lunch. We swap stories, recipes and strategic plans. We join the same clubs, sweat the same projects, pray the same prayers.

But until we have visited in people's homes, until we have met their families, and seen them in their element, and watched them handle the responsibilities and opportunities of hospitality, our knowledge is incomplete. In public, it's easier to maintain a false front, even for ourselves.

We can play a role, use props and characters to help sustain our illusions about ourselves. But at home, where people know us, where social conventions and public images fade, it's harder to pretend. Even if we manage to fool ourselves, our behavior and patterns of relationship reveal us in spite of ourselves.



That's why I'm so fond of the story in Sunday's Gospel. Directed by John the Baptizer to the presence of God in Jesus, the would-be disciples follow him. Accepting his invitation to "come and see" where he lives — to see how he relates to family, friends and neighbors, to put themselves in his hands and discover from personal experience what kind of host he is — they come to believe that he is God's "Messiah," anointed to bring salvation to the world. In a life of discipleship, there is no substitute for a personal relationship with Jesus.

May this jubilee year be for us a graced time of accepting more earnestly his invitation to "come and see" how he lives in the sacramental life and biblical tradition of the church, in the struggles and triumphs of daily life, in the silent mystery of prayer and especially in the woundedness and poverty of our brothers and sisters all around us.

What does a visit to your home reveal to attentive guests about your deepest self?

Question:
Who in your life has given hospitality which helped give you life?

"Come and see."
— John 1-39a

NEW YORK (CNS) — The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Dudley Do-Right" (1999)

Thin live-action comedy based on the TV cartoon series created by Jay Ward in which the hopelessly square Canadian Mountie of the title (Brendan Fraser) gets some help from his faithful horse in saving his dim sweetheart Nell (Sarah Jessica Parker) from the villainous Snidely Whiplash (Alfred Molina) who's using a fake gold rush to fleece novice prospectors. Director Hugh Wilson settles for some easy laughs featuring Fraser's deadpan hijinks, corny dialogue, weak sight gags and overly busy slapstick action. Comic violence, much menace and assorted vulgarities. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of American rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Lake Placid" (1999)

Lame horror-comedy in which a big-city paleontologist (Bridget Fonda), a wealthy eccentric (Oliver Platt) and an earnest game warden (Bill Pullman) insist on helping a skeptical rural sheriff (Brendan Gleeson) catch a huge crocodile that has devoured a few locals. Directed by Steve Miner from David E. Kelley's contrived script, the movie offers sparse spurts of comic mileage with suspense equally absent. Some predatory violence with decapitations, sex references, occasional profanity and intermittent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Mickey Blue Eyes" (1999)

Frail mob comedy in which an expatriate British auctioneer (Hugh Grant) becomes engaged to a schoolteacher (Jeanne Tripplehorn) whose gangster family immediately ensnares him in mob business that could get him killed. Directed by Kelly Makin, the fish-out-of-water premise is stretched pretty thinly through the course of some mildly amusing situations. Brief violence, irreverent depictions of religious art, some profanity and a few instances of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Mystery Men" (1999)

Dopey spoof in which seven would-be superheroes (including Ben Stiller, Hank Azaria, Janeane Garofalo and William H. Macy) combine their kooky talents to outwit a nasty megalomaniac (Geoffrey Rush) intent on leveling their metropolis. Director Kinka Usher fails to rein in the ensemble cast and a chaotic script further dilutes the comedy-fantasy. Intermittent comic violence and some toilet humor. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Thomas Crown Affair"(1999)

Cat-and-mouse drama in which a billionaire art thief (Pierce Brosnan) and the investigator (Renee Russo) who will net $5 million for nailing him become romantically involved, complicating whether she will do her job or take off with him as he suggests. Director John McTiernan updates the 1968 crime caper with sleek performances but more explicit bedroom scenes for a slick escapist fantasy of riches and romance without consequences. Sexual encounters with nudity, occasional profanity and a few instances of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Tumbleweeds"
Modest, insightful drama in which a flighty, much married Southerner (Janet McTeer), having fled her latest husband with her 12-year-old daughter (Kimberly J. Brown) for San Diego, is about to repeat the pattern with a new boyfriend (Gavin O'Connor) when her daughter demands she stop running from her problems. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

TV programs of note — week of Jan. 16

By GERRI PARE

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope, at first audience of 2000, stresses motherhood of Mary

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, at his first general audience of 2000, urged the faithful to reflect on Mary, the mother of Jesus, who is also mother of all Christians.

"All through his childhood, Jesus called Mary his mother. When he later addressed her as 'woman,' he was emphasizing that she is not just his biological mother but also the mother of the people of the new covenant," the pope told a crowd of 7,000 people gathered in the Paul VI Audience Hall Jan. 5.

Following three years of jubilee preparation, the last of which, 1999, focused on the Father, the pope urged those present to reflect on Mary at the beginning of 2000.

The angel Gabriel's words at the Annunciation, "Rejoice, full of grace, the Lord is with you," "reveal God's intention to communicate to humanity the true and definitive joy which comes from having the Son present among us," said the pope.

As mother of Christ, Mary also played a crucial role in the education of her son, he said.

"The mother not only gives birth but also takes part in the education and development of her children. Mary's behavior certainly influenced Jesus' conduct," said the pope.

The pope said Christ's gesture of washing his disciples' feet, for example, might have reflected Mary's own behavior in the home, which could have included bathing guests' feet as a symbol of humility.

The pope also emphasized the reciprocal nature of the mother-son relationship between Mary and Jesus.

Jesus "thus received from Mary a true education that molded his humanity. On the other hand, Mary was influenced and educated by her son," said the pope.

Pope tells diplomats he views new millennium with hope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II said that as he pushed open the Holy Door at St. Peter's Basilica Christmas Eve, he was thinking with optimism about world progress in the new millennium. The pope, in an annual speech Jan. 10 to Vatican-accredited diplomats, said he felt called by God from the beginning of his two-decade pontificate to encourage the world to think of itself as one family. "Twenty-one years ago, when I became successor of the apostle Peter, I felt myself charged with a universal fatherhood which embraces all the men and women of our time without exception," the pope said. "Today, in addressing you who represent practically all the peoples of the earth, I would like to share with each one something personal: At the opening of the doors of a new millennium, the pope began to think that people might finally learn to draw lessons from the past," he said.

Vocations statistics and the fear of failure

At the recent Synod of Bishops for Europe, held in Rome in October 1999, Cardinal Carlo Martini of Milan called for a gathering of all bishops worldwide to examine such issues as the shortage of priests, the role of women, ecumenism and the discipline of marriage.

What a great idea!

One question we all need to explore is why there are fewer vocations to the priesthood today than in the past. It is a complicated question, and there are many factors involved.

Cardinal Godfried Danneels, the primate of Belgium, presented his thoughts on this topic in the September 1998 issue of Origins, a publication of Catholic News Service. He said that becoming a priest today is no longer a step up on the social ladder, it is a step down.

Seminarians today show a lot of courage when they offer their lives to the church. Many older priests are suspicious of the neoconservatism of the younger clergy. Young men tend to be cautious about accepting every theological opinion that comes along, and who can blame them? New-Age thinking is at odds with the deposit of faith.

Those who are called to the priesthood are swimming against the tide. The postmodern era is no longer Christian. They know they will have to proclaim Jesus as Lord in a world where his divinity is being denied more and more. For too many, Jesus is simply a great prophet, like Buddha or Mohammed. In this climate it is not surprising that vocations are down.

The staying power of today's seminarians and young priests is also an issue. One cardinal expressed astonishment when one of his priests left the active ministry after only two years. It was not because of celibacy or because he had a crisis of faith. He left because he was unable to bear failure of any kind.

Cardinal Danneels commented on this, saying that some priests never have learned to integrate the cross into their lives. They preach the Gospel but are unable to see any meaning in suffering. As a result they are unable to manage failure or even the appearance of failure.

The younger generation does not want to hear about sacrifice. They are repelled by the idea. But hasn't it always been so?

I remember resisting my own vocation for more than five years. I was scared to death that I might fail. I thought: Why should I put myself in danger's way? It was a reasonable fear because I knew I was weak.

Somehow the grace of God helped me to trust in divine providence and forget about my own powerlessness. So with a leap of faith, I asked the Lord to make me strong, and I never regretted that decision. I'm still weak, but I'm getting there day by day.

We all have fears of failure from time to time, but when we learn to trust in God's strength it doesn't matter if we are weak or strong. The Lord becomes our strength and our joy.

I am not worried about the future. The church has survived for 2,000 years in far worse circumstances. I think the Holy Spirit has many surprises in store for us in the years to come.

That is why I applaud Cardinal Martini's call for a wider collaboration among the bishops in dealing with these problems.

Hispanic Ministry

Proselytism among Hispanics

This month we will continue with two more major findings of a recent study commissioned by the Secretariat for Hispanic Affairs of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in January 1998. They deal with proselytism and leadership in the Hispanic community.

1) Proselytism among Hispanics is increasing, and more and more segments of the Hispanic population appear to be affected.

Most of the "new" Hispanic immigrants originate in countries where Protestant groups are increasingly active and popular. In addition, U.S.-based Protestant groups have increasingly attracted adherents among both the older Hispanic poor and the middle class.

National surveys indicate that the share of the Hispanic population which identifies as Catholic is shrinking annually. Protestant success is based on aggressive outreach and welcoming campaigns aimed at Hispanics. Protestant groups also offer Hispanics opportunities for community participation and social mobility (through ethnic church building) that are discouraged in the Catholic Church. In addition, Protestants provide their congregants with an emotive small faith experience that has few Catholic equivalents.

2) The central obstacle to Hispanic participation in today's Church is leadership. Without effectively trained and promoted leaders, Hispanics cannot gain sufficient recognition in diocesan departments and parishes to build a dynamic partnership between Hispanics and the larger Church.

An earlier generation of Hispanic leaders that built the current structure of Hispanic Ministry is passing from the scene. The new era demands more sophisticated and flexible leadership, which is not always available. The number of Hispanic vocations remains extremely low, and while lay leadership programs for Hispanics are increasing nationwide, support for them from the Bishops is uneven.

In addition, there is no agreed upon mechanism for ensuring that Hispanic leaders are recognized and promoted within diocesan departments and are effectively utilized within local parishes.

Hispanics, even when possessing comparable skills and experience, are more likely than non-Hispanics to be hired on a volunteer or part-time basis, and then assigned to work with Hispanics only.

We welcome your questions and comments.

Rights and wrongs, civil and otherwise

Martin Luther King Jr. Day was created as a tribute to a fallen hero of the civil rights movement. It remains that, but, as with many other national holidays, it is in danger of turning into one more long weekend. I like long weekends. I don't know anybody who can't use an extra day off. That's not the point.

Patriotic holidays remind us about matters of great historic and social substance. Remembrance and celebration by themselves are not enough, though. The value of setting aside special days is that we take the time to stop — to look back at where we came from, to look around at where we are and to look ahead to where we want to be.

Daily headlines confirm that prejudice and hatred still live, but the good news is that tolerance and justice are at work, too, transforming a nation where "separate but equal" was a way of life and a principle of law. This earth-shaking change was — and is — the result of the conviction, persistence and utter bravery of untold people of conscience.

Last July, two men died who have had a vast impact on the civil rights of every American citizen. The first of these was James Farmer. The founder and director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and a proponent of Gandhi's tactics of non-violent civil disobedience, he was born in Texas, the grandson of a slave. He assured those who feared his methods would be construed as weakness that "we are fighting back, we're only using new weapons." He was jailed for forty days for his protests and once avoided lynching by escaping town in a hearse.

CORE's volunteers focused on integration through peaceful demonstrations and sit-ins that were met with violence. In the 1960's, James Farmer organized the famous Freedom Rides to protest segregated interstate transportation. The courage of these men and women in the face of arrest, assault and even death won the respect of blacks and whites alike and inspired many to become active in the civil rights movement.

The second was Frank M. Johnson, Jr. who spent nearly a quarter of a century on the U.S. District Court bench in Alabama where he handed down rulings that broke legal barriers to desegregation. Beginning with a decision vindicating the Montgomery bus boycott of 1955, he ruled on a number of cases that outlawed segregation in schools, parks, restaurants and other public accommodations. From voter registration to the integration of the University of Alabama, his decisions had a profound influence. Other rulings on civil rights issues improved conditions for prisoners and for mental patients.

Judge Johnson endured decades of ostracism by fellow white people, a cross-burning on his lawn, the firebombing of his mother's house, and countless death threats.

These two contemporaries were as heroic in their actions and their achievements as Martin Luther King Jr. So were the countless men and women of every race and ethnic background who put their lives on the line to demand human rights, freedom and equality.

Indeed, one person can change this world for the better. James Farmer did it. Frank Johnson did it. Does anyone believe that the job is finished? Take your time to think about it. You have a long weekend.

Catholic Commitment for the New Millennium

At the start of the third Christian millennium, our church has embarked on a great jubilee year journey.

All over the United States, in their parishes, small faith communities, and families, Catholics are recommitting themselves to serving those who are poor and to working for justice and peace in the new millennium. They are taking the Jubilee Pledge for Charity, Justice, and Peace, which is being promoted by a variety of U.S. Catholic Conference offices and other organizations. This practical response to the Jubilee Year flows from the themes of Catholic Social Teaching.

However, taking the pledge is only a first step; finding ways to act on it is the challenge. Below are the points of the pledge followed by suggestions for parish actions:

As disciples of Jesus in the new millennium, I/we pledge to:

Pray regularly for greater justice and peace.

• Hold a parish jubilee retreat. Use Pope John Paul II's World Day of Peace message for reflections on your parish's involvement for Jubilee.

Learn more about Catholic social teaching and its call to protect human life, stand with the poor, and care for creation.

• Revisit the NC Bishops' 1997 pastoral Of One Heart and One Mind on moral and ethical dimensions of economic conditions in North Carolina. How has your parish responded?

Reach across boundaries of religion, race, ethnicity, gender and disabling conditions.

• Build bridges. Take action on issues of international justice and peace, or work with local immigrant or migrant issues. Apply for an Operation Rice Bowl mini-grant to help with costs.

Live justly in family life, school, work, the marketplace and the political arena.

• Incorporate into prayer groups or hold a parish mission on the discipleship themes and roles for laity presented in the U.S. Bishops' Everyday Christianity: To Hunger and Thirst for Justice, a short (10 pages) and highly readable document.

Serve those who are poor and vulnerable, sharing more time and talent.

• Analyze the underlying causes of poverty in your own community, e.g., lack of affordable housing, childhood hunger, underemployment, lack of affordable child care, etc. Resolve to attack the reasons for poverty in one of these areas.

Give more generously to those in need at home and abroad.

• Support the Catholic Church's international relief and development efforts this Lent with Operation Rice Bowl, a Catholic Relief Services program of prayer, almsgiving, fasting and learning. Support the church's domestic anti-poverty program, the Catholic Campaign for Human Development.

Advocate for public policies that protect hu-

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS Columnist

Nonbiblical traditions about Jesus' life

Q. Some time ago, you responded to a question about the brothers and sisters of Jesus mentioned in the Gospels. You said one possibility is that these siblings were children of Joseph from a previous marriage.

This explanation "goes back to some very early nonbiblical traditions about Jesus and his life," you said.

Such a theory was never mentioned in my past. That doesn't mean it is not a good explanation, but what is the source of your information?

A. Roughly two dozen Gospels concerning Jesus were written in the early centuries of Christianity. Some of them focused especially on the youthful life of Jesus and on the supposed time between the death and resurrection of our Lord, two subjects about which the canonical Gospels give almost no information.

Two of them are particularly significant, the Infancy Gospel of Thomas and the so-called Book (or Protoevangelium, "First Gospel") of James. Along with other early writings, usually attributed to the apostles or their followers, these are traditional sources for much of what we assume to know about Jesus and his family.

Both originated somewhere around the year 140 or 150, in other words perhaps 50 years after the canonical Gospel according to John.

According to tradition, "James, the brother of the Lord," had special information, apparently from Mary, concerning the young life of Jesus. It is the Book of James which relates that the siblings of Jesus described in the Gospels were his step-brothers and step-sisters, Joseph's children from another marriage.

This notion was opposed later by St. Jerome, who firmly believed in Joseph's virginity. According to Jerome, the "brothers and sisters" were actually cousins.

The same book identifies the names of Mary's parents as Joachim and Anna, speaks of her miraculous birth to the aging couple, and describes how she was subjected during her pregnancy to tests and questioning by officials suspicious of her virginity.

Perhaps such works were intended in part to assuage the curiosity of many early Christians, who felt the need, as many of us still do, to know all possible trifling details about Jesus. The four canonical Gospels, of course, were not at all interested in satisfying this type of curiosity. Overall, much in these writings is rather weird, to say the least. They describe wonderful things happening through contact with Jesus, his clothing, even his bath water.

The apocryphal infancy narratives typically portray the young Jesus displaying strange powers, sometimes quite out of character with the Jesus of the four Gospels we know.

Once, for example, while playing with other children, Jesus molded several clay birds. When the authorities protested to Joseph about this violation of the Sabbath, Jesus waved his hands, brought the birds to life, and they flew away. Another time, someone in a crowd accidentally bumped into Jesus, who turned and said, "You will never arrive at where you are going." A moment later, the man dropped dead.

Many if not most of these writings derive from gnostic sources. While they narrate extravagant stories, particularly about Jesus and Mary, and are not part of the canon of sacred Scripture, they still tell us much about the life, interests and traditions of the early Christian churches.

their own version of the "Freedom Ride" during the weekend of Dr. King's birthday to Selma and Birmingham, Ala. and Atlanta to retrace Dr. King's steps and relive his history.

"The trip affects them profoundly because it brings a consciousness to them about how everything happened during that time," said Dr. Jeff. "The Civil Rights Movement was a youth movement. Martin Luther King was only 26 when he was called upon to lead the movement made up of young people who changed this world. We have to turn the focus back on our children."

Thirteen-year-old Brittani Williams from Our Lady of Consolation Church said she came to the event because she wanted to "spread the word about what she knew and to try to understand the greater meaning behind Dr. King's message." She added, "adults should talk to us more so that we can understand because we don't have the resources, and the teachers aren't teaching us these things."

After the sessions, the second annual Glenda Rollins-Gaither Service Award was presented to James Bingley from St. James Church in Concord. His family accepted the wooden sculpture on his behalf because of his illness. Bingley serves as the vice-chair of the board of advisors for the African American Affairs Ministry and has been active in his parish and throughout the diocese.

The award is named for Rollins-Gaither, a parishioner of Our Lady of Consolation Church and a founding member of the African American Affairs Ministry, who passed away in March 1995.

The closing Mass included a performance by the Kabaka Dancers and Drummers and the Our Lady of Consolation Choir dressed in their individual representations of African-inspired garb.

In his homily, Bishop William G. Curlin said, "we must see each other with our souls and not just with our eyes. The Church is alive when people see Jesus living in each of us, regardless of race or color."

Chrys Chambers, a parishioner of Our Lady of the Highways Church in Thomasville, left the event with positive feelings and thoughts: "I find Dr. King to be a person who embodies the idea that everyone has their rights, the right to be free to express themselves, to hold jobs, to live where they want. To bridge the gap of cultural diversity is important, so it is necessary to be a part of something like this to be a part of the cure."

"As we assess where we are 135 years after the signing and passing of the thirteenth amendment and 31 years after the passing of Martin Luther King Jr., we still see the residue of slavery and apartheid in America," said Dr. Jeff.

Rev. Mr. Todd hopes that in the future more people will attend the celebration: "It is a shame that there was only a fraction of the over 120,000 Catholics in the diocese present at the event. It shows that there is too much apathy among black people and too much unconcern among non-blacks. Dr. King's legacy has been buried, and his words are just as applicable to today's time as they were 35 years ago." ▼

CRS Operation Rice Bowl program results announced

BALTIMORE — The Diocese of Charlotte raised $50,366 in last year's Operation Rice Bowl, a Lenten program of the national Catholic Relief Services office. The program was initiated in 1976 to encourage an active approach to the Lenten season with prayer, fasting, learning and giving. The program has promoted more than 1,200 long-term development projects in more than 60 countries. While 75 percent of funds collected in the program will be sent to development programs overseas, 25 percent will stay within the diocese for local charity initiatives.

"Being in Girl Scouts is a great way to help with self-esteem, and it can open up job opportunities. You learn to work with each other and in the community, so you are not as afraid to step out into the world," continued Patty.

Both mother and daughter agree that their Catholic faith and being involved with Girl Scouts complement one another.

"Girl Scouts and being Catholic go hand-in-hand," said Patty. "If I weren't a strong Catholic, I wouldn't have made it all the way through [with my project]. Girl Scouts just kind of fit into my life."

While the time for Patty to become her daughter's troop leader is down the line, she plans to follow in her mother's, grandmother's and great-grandmother's path later on in life. For now, after graduation, Patty will be attending the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill where she will major in biochemistry or biology to become a research scientist. ▼

Beliefnet.com offers Internet site for all faiths

NEW YORK (CNS) — A new Web site is aiming to provide a place for information, inspiration and advice on all religious faiths.

Beliefnet.com, officially launched Jan. 4, includes a combination of columnists, message boards, discussion groups, seminars and a spot for posting memorials.

The site was founded by Steven Waldman, former national editor at U.S. News and World Report, and Robert Nylen, founding CEO of New England Monthly.

In an introductory column, Waldman said the decision to create the site grew out of questions he and his wife faced in trying to incorporate religious faith into their family.

Waldman was raised a "cultural" Jew and his wife was Presbyterian. They found they needed to first learn more about religious teachings before they could pass anything along to their children.

"There's already an abundance of material on the Internet on spirituality and religion, yet it's hard to find what you want," said Waldman in a statement. "These Web sites are often disorganized or driven by particular agendas. We think there's a crying need for a Web site that lets people navigate this intimidating, confusing medium."

Regular columnists will cover a broad spectrum of beliefs, from Wiccan priestess Margot Adler to Tom Bethel of American Spectator magazine.

Current contributors also include Father Andrew Greeley, Episcopal Bishop John Shelby Spong, Harvard theologian Harvey Cox, Southern Baptist leader Richard Land, Buddhist Lama Surya Das and Oregon State University professor Marcus Borg, who serves as Bible columnist.

Among features on the site in the first week of January were a teen-age girl's diary discussion about whether she should go through with confirmation and columns by Father Greeley about millennium hype and by Arthur Magida, a correspondent for the PBS show, "Religion and Ethics Newsweekly," about whether Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan is turning toward a more traditional practice of Islam.

There was an interview with Trappist Father Thomas Keating on centering prayer and a review of the movie "The End of the Affair," as well as links to the religious texts of various faiths, and discussion boards on topics ranging from humor to grief, from tarot cards and homeopathy to Marian apparitions and fasting.

The for-profit site can be found at www.beliefnet.com. According to a release, the company plans to offer kits aimed at building religious and spiritual community Web sites in February and to add a sales section in the spring. Access is free. ▼ churches of North Carolina, especially those in our jurisdictions: to see the face of Christ in the faces of those who suffer deprivation; to seek to embrace with compassion those who struggle for dignity and economic survival; and to study the structures of oppression and the possibilities for changing them."

The religious leaders make six affirmations in the letter. Their statements focus on living the gospel message of good news to the poor, effecting systemic change by altering structures of injustice, providing ministries of outreach and charity, reducing injustice through moral and political will, empowering the poor in political and economic arenas, and promoting cooperation in society.

A Catholic response to poverty

The letter's principal themes — among them equality, liberty, living wages and eradication of the root causes of poverty — fall directly in line with the Catholic Church's teachings on social justice, says one diocesan official.

"Catholic social teaching proclaims very clearly that the economy exists for the person, not the person for the economy," says Joanne Frazer, director of the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace. "Economic choices and institutions must be judged by how they protect or undermine the life and dignity of the human person, support the family and serve the common good.

"As Catholics, this has been in our mind, in our teaching and in our action, and we see the need to continue to look at the problems that exist and act on them."

The council's letter is the second pastoral on economic justice that Bishops Curlin and Gossman have signed within recent years.

In November 1997, the two bishops issued "Of One Heart and One Mind," which emphasized the ethical and human dimensions of economic life in the state. In that letter, the bishops provide a moral framework based on principles of Catholic social teaching, especially as it applies to human dignity, productive work and wage standards.

The bishops' endorsement of the new letter is an example of the Catholic Church's ongoing commitment to challenge people to help the fight against poverty, says Frazer.

Here in the Diocese of Charlotte, a number of diocesan and parish projects and programs are operated by people who seek to end poverty by addressing both short-term crisis situations as well as long-term justice issues, Frazer notes.

In Catholic tradition, the Holy Year — as the jubilee is also called — is a time of forgiveness of sin and debt, of reconciliation and of conversion. The Catholic Church's preparation — and, indeed, the world's — for the Jubilee 2000 has been a key point of Pope John Paul II's ministry, especially in the '90s. The pope has frequently referred to the forgiveness of debt, both spiritual and material, in his texts and speeches on the jubilee.

The North Carolina Council of Churches' letter cites Pope John Paul II's significance in promoting the jubilee movement. It notes that the pontiff "reminds us that the 2000 years that have passed since the birth of Christ represent an extraordinary time not only for Christians but for the whole of humanity and should be celebrated as the 'Great Jubilee.'" ▼

Pope baptizes 18 babies in Sistine Chapel liturgy

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a ceremony enlivened by a chorus of crying infants and the smiles of their older brothers and sisters, Pope John Paul II baptized 18 babies, including one from the United States, in the Sistine Chapel.

"I hope these little ones will grow in the faith they receive today, in a way that allows them to participate actively in the life of the church," a visibly pleased pope said during the liturgy Jan. 9.

After anointing the 18 babies — 10 boys and eight girls — with holy oil, he deftly poured water over the heads of each and welcomed them into the faith. Some cried, some slept and some chewed on their pacifiers, while their parents beamed.

The heartiest cries came from young Jacopo Guglielmo. The quietest was Maria Chiara Mirabella, whose sister stood on tiptoes afterward, waiting until she could give the pope a kiss on the cheek.

Six brothers and sisters of the baptized took the offertory gifts to the altar, and a few of them, ignoring official prods to move on, paused in conversation with the 79-year-old pontiff, who seemed delighted.

Among the newly baptized were 14 from Italy and one each from Brazil, Spain, Switzerland and the United States. The U.S. baby, Alberto Coles Vollmer, was born in Miami in late November to two Venezuelan parents. He is the grandson of Venezuela's ambassador to the Holy See.

Early in his pontificate, the pope began the tradition of baptizing infants in the Sistine Chapel on the feast of the Baptism of the Lord. This year's Mass was celebrated a few weeks after completion of a 20-year restoration project of chapel frescoes by Michelangelo and other Renaissance artists.

If the babies did not notice the art, the pope did, saying the setting offered a fitting reminder of the history of salvation, the origins of the human being and the universal judgment to come.

The pope told parents and godparents of the baptized that they had a responsibility to guide the children along the path of faith in Christ and the Gospel.

"Be for them examples of solid faith, deep prayer and active involvement in church life," he said.

Speaking afterward at a midday blessing from his apartment window above St. Peter's Square, the pope said all Christians should meditate on their own baptism and view it as a "call to return to the roots of the Christian vocation." ▼

In U.S. Gallup poll, Mother Teresa tops list of century's most admired

By JERRY FILTEAU
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Mother Teresa of Calcutta came out as the most admired person of the 20th century in a yearend Gallup Poll of more than 500 Americans.

Of those surveyed, 49 percent called her one of the people they admire most in the century.

Other Catholics in the top 10 were President John F. Kennedy, who was third, and Pope John Paul II, who ranked eighth.

Most admired after Mother Teresa was the slain U.S. civil rights leader, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

The Gallup/CNN/USA Today poll of 511 adults was conducted by telephone Dec. 20-21 and has a statistical margin of error of plus or minus 5 percent.

Those surveyed were given 18 names and were asked, "For each one, please tell me if you consider that person to be one of the people you admire most from this century; a person you admire, but not the most; a person you somewhat admire; or someone you do not admire at all."

They were allowed to name more than one person among those they most admired.

For Mother Teresa, 49 percent said she was one of the people they admired most, and 32 percent said she was someone they admired, but not the most. Only 3 percent said they did not admire her at all.

Thirty-four percent said Rev. King was one of their most admired figures and an additional 33 percent put him in the next category.

The rest of the top 10, followed by the percentages that said "admire most" and "admire" respectively, were:

— Kennedy, 32 and 34.
— Albert Einstein, 31 and 39.
— Helen Keller, 30 and 33.
— President Franklin D. Roosevelt, 26 and 34.
— The Rev. Billy Graham, 26 and 26.
— Pope John Paul, 25 and 34.
— Eleanor Roosevelt, 22 and 34.
— Winston Churchill, 20 and 36.

The other eight people listed in the poll, in the order of how they were rated, were: Dwight D. Eisenhower, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, Mahatma Gandhi, Nelson Mandela, Ronald Reagan, Henry Ford, Bill Clinton and Margaret Thatcher.

Ironically, while the pope came out slightly below Rev. Graham on the "most admired" poll, the world-famed evangelist picked the pope as the man of the century.

Pope John Paul "has brought the greatest impact of any pope in the last 200 years," Rev. Graham said in a December interview with The Associated Press.

In a separate Gallup/CNN/USA Today poll, taken earlier in December, President Clinton came out on top. Rev. Graham second, and Pope John Paul third, when more than 1,000 Americans were asked to select the man they most admire among living persons they have heard or read about. There was a separate question for most-admired woman.

The question in that poll was open-ended. The president got 10 percent of the first or second mentions by respondents, the preacher 7 percent and the pope 6 percent. ▼

A solemn blessing

Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, receives abbatial blessing

BY JIMMY ROSTAR AND JOANN KEANE

BELMONT — The Right Reverend Placid D. Solari, OSB, was blessed as eighth abbot of Belmont Abbey on Jan. 15, two months after his brother monks elected and monastic officials confirmed him as the spiritual and administrative leader of the Benedictine institution.

The abbatial blessing of Abbot Placid is part of a new chapter in the Benedictine story in North Carolina, a story well over a century old. Abbot Placid was elected and confirmed as the new abbot last November, thus succeeding Abbot Oscar Burnett as the new superior of the abbey. Abbot Emeritus Burnett had served as abbot since 1991.

As eighth abbot of Belmont Abbey, Abbot Placid will tend to the spiritual and administrative leadership duties of the abbey and serve as chancellor of Belmont Abbey College.

The Mass in which the blessing took place was filled with themes celebrating the religious zeal and leadership the Benedictines have fostered in North Carolina for more than a century.

Presided by Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte and concelebrated by dozens of Benedictine, diocesan and other religious priests serving in North Carolina's two dioceses and beyond, the Mass was celebrated in Belmont Abbey Basilica.

The blessing took place on the memorial of Sts. Maur and Placid, disciples of the founder of western monasticism, St. Benedict. Hymns honored the servitude and joy of the Christian life, and called to mind the patroness of Belmont Abbey — known under the title of Maryhelp of Christians. Scripture readings chosen by the new abbot spoke of the graces needed to fulfill heavenly tasks and to live in the spirit of true faith.

Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh, Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, and Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte, share a moment in front of the Belmont Abbey Basilica.

The Rite of Blessing, customarily celebrated by the bishop of the place where the monastery is located, solemnly focused on the charge of the abbot and the living symbols of his role.

To a series of questions posed by Bishop Curlin, Abbot Placid affirmed his promise to lead as a determined teacher, a spiritual father, a prudent administrator and a religious loyal to the church and the pope.

Abbot Placid then knelt as the Litany of Saints was sung, as the abbot and all the congregation prayed for God's grace as he embraces his new ministry.

The Prayer of Blessing asked for God's grace in guiding the abbot to fully realize his responsibilities as a leader and a brother: "Give him the gifts of your Spirit. Set him on fire with love for your glory and for the service of your Church, and may he in turn inflame with zeal the hearts of his brothers. In his life and in his teachings may he set Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, was elected as eighth abbot of Belmont Abbey last November. He received the abbatial blessing Jan. 15, the memorial of Sts. Maur and Placid, who were followers of St. Benedict.

Christ above all things, and when the day of judgment dawns, receive him in the company of his brothers, into your kingdom."

A copy of the "Rule of Benedict," a synopsis of spiritual life that has guided the Benedictine tradition for 15 centuries, was given to Abbot Placid, as were a ring signifying the abbot's office and the abbot's pastoral staff.

In addition to the blessing of the abbot, the Mass provided for an exchange of thanksgiving between the monks of Belmont Abbey and the church community in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Flanked by his brother monks surrounding the altar, Abbot Placid offered his gratitude to the faithful who continue their support of the abbey, its monks and their works. The congregation broke into applause and offered a rousing standing ovation for the Benedictines.

"The election of an abbot is always the action of the entire monastic community," Abbot Placid said during closing comments. "We, the monks of Belmont Abbey who stand before you today, pledge to you ... our continued support to enrich this church in North Carolina with our lives and our hearts."

In his homily, and with Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Justices hear arguments in Colorado case on 'bubble zone'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — With attorneys arguing about whether a "floating bubble zone" is more or less of a restriction on First Amendment rights than the court previously has allowed, the Supreme Court Jan. 19 took up consideration of a Colorado law limiting protests outside medical buildings. For the third time since 1994, the court will rule on whether restrictions meant to address "sidewalk counseling" at abortion clinics are constitutional. The Colorado law adopted in 1993 prohibits anyone outside any "health care facility" from approaching within eight feet of another person to hand out a leaflet, show a sign, or engage in discussion with anyone within 100 feet of any entrances without permission.

Pope meets planners, says he looks forward to World Youth Day

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Meeting with the international planners of World Youth Day, Pope John Paul II said he was looking forward to the celebration in mid-August, when more than 1 million young people are expected to converge on Rome. He told organizers from 70 countries Jan. 15 that he wanted the young participants to leave the event as evangelizers and "builders of a civilization of love." The main events of the Aug. 14-20 celebration in Rome will be a vigil Aug. 19 and Mass Aug. 20, both presided over by the pope in a field on the outskirts of Rome.

Portillo's promises create cautious optimism among church leaders

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — The wide-ranging changes promised by newly elected Guatemalan President Alfonso Portillo have generated cautious optimism among Catholic leaders in the Central American nation. Auxiliary Bishop Mario Rios Montt of Guatemala City said Jan. 17 that Portillo's "willingness to make changes are a great advance." If Portillo "manages to do what he proposes, this will be a new Guatemala ... but it doesn't just depend on the good will of the president," the bishop said.

More strife in Indonesia
A man walk past a destroyed Catholic church on the Indonesian island of Lombok Jan. 18. Violence between Muslims and Christians on the so-called Spice Islands has raged for more than a year.

In his first public address after being sworn in as Guatemala's fifth democratic president Jan. 14, Portillo, 48, of the rightist Guatemalan Republican Front, announced a new internal investigation into the death of Auxiliary Bishop Juan Gerardi Conedera of Guatemala City, a veteran human rights campaigner slain allegedly by members of the security forces.

Corporate responsibility groups target genetic tweaking of food

NEW YORK (CNS) — Genetic engineering of agricultural products has emerged as a principal new emphasis of church groups involved in the corporate responsibility movement. The annual compilation of stockholder resolutions published by the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility in New York identified 19 resolutions that had been filed by church groups and their allies challenging corporations on the use and sale of genetically engineered products. "This technology involves significant social, economic and environmental risks," says a supporting statement for a resolution filed with American Home Products, Archer Daniels Midland, Dow, DuPont and Monsanto.

Israeli human rights report criticizes land policies

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Massive land confiscation from Palestinians for Jewish use and overcrowding in Palestinian neighborhoods are part of an "explicitly stated and intentional" Israeli government policy based on political expediency, said an Israeli human rights group. "Israel invests enormous resources to build large Jewish neighborhoods in East Jerusalem. At the same time the Israeli authorities choke development for the Palestinian population, which is perceived as a 'demographic threat' to Israeli control of the city," B'Tselem said in its report on the status of Jerusalem, titled "Injustice in the Holy City." B'Tselem is the leading Israeli human rights group advocating for human rights in the Palestinian territories and was founded in 1989.

Militant Muslims attacking Kosovo's Christians, says Fides

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Kosovo's Christians are facing increasing violence from militant Muslims in the war-scarred southern Yugoslavian province, said Fides, the Vatican's missionary news agency. Jesuit Father Mato Jakovic, coordinator of Jesuit Refugee Services in Macedonia and Kosovo, said in a Jan. 12 Fides report that Catholic cemeteries in the cities of Prizren and Pec had been destroyed. The graves of a bishop and priest were profaned. The Fides report said the relatives of priests are "ever more frequently maltreated," adding that the homes of relatives of two Franciscans were torched in early December.

Vatican TV newscast now has Internet home

NEW YORK (CNS) — Vatican TV's weekly newscast is now being made available on the Internet by ForeignTV.com. The official Vatican TV network, Centro Televisivo Vaticano, or CTV, compiles a weekly broadcast of 20-30 minutes. It is made available to ForeignTV.com each Wednesday, according to spokesman Lewis Goldberg. People wishing to see the broadcast should go to www.foreigntv.com and then click on its WorldNewsTV.com icon.

Pontifical university offers rabbi-led Holocaust seminar

ROME (CNS) — A Rome university instituted by the Vatican offered a seminar on the Nazi Holocaust — and invited a rabbi to teach it. From Jan. 10-18, Rabbi Leon Klenicki, interfaith affairs director at the Anti-Defamation League in New York and professor of Jewish theology at Immaculate Conception Seminary in Huntington, N.Y., led a six-class seminar on Jewish theological responses to the Holocaust. The class was at the University of the Holy Cross, instituted by the Vatican in 1985 and run by the personal prelature of Opus Dei.

Eighth abbot continues Benedictine tradition

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

BELMONT — If asked nicely, he might do his Donald Duck impression or retell the plot of the latest scary movie he has seen. This fun-loving and spirited side of newly installed Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, has been seen by many of his students, former parishioners and friends. However, he is best known as "pious, spiritual and dedicated" by many of those with whom he has worked over the years.

Abbot Placid explains his multi-faceted nature: "I have always enjoyed life and have had fun. I enjoy teasing and keeping people laughing. I have to keep a sense of humor as I sit back and watch things happen in and around my life over which I have no control."

To many, it may seem that Abbot Placid has always been in control of his life, from his childhood days in Richmond, Va., to his present days at Belmont Abbey and College.

He was born the youngest in a family of six and attended the same school, Benedictine High School, that his brothers attended.

During his high school years, he became friends with Trappist Father Aelred Hagan, the vocations and novice director at Mepkin Abbey in the Diocese of Charleston, S.C.

"In high school and in the novitiate, he [Abbot Placid] was a very focused and upright person, one who cares a lot about people," said Father Hagan. "He is a no-nonsense person who gets down to business ... but he has a good sense of humor."

The mini-pilgrimages he made to Belmont Abbey with Father Hagan and other students allowed Abbot Placid bonding time with his oldest brother, a monk in Belmont Abbey at the time. He and that brother, Father Jim Solari, now the pastor of St. Leo the Great Church in Winston-Salem, are 22 years apart.

Even though there are many years between the brothers, their lives curiously converge in several instances.

After receiving his bachelor's degree in history from Bellermine College in Louisville, Ky., Abbot Placid entered the novitiate in Belmont Abbey and then attended the Pontificium Athenaeum Anselmianum in Rome until 1978 — the same school his brother attended.

Bishop Michael J. Begley, founding bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte, ordains then-Rev. Mr. Placid Solari to the priesthood in this June 1980 photo.

Both brothers maintain that Father Solari had no direct influence on his youngest brother. However, Father Solari said, "I always thought it might be a possibility [for him to become a priest] because he was always pious, responsible, hard-working and attracted to his faith. But, I never tried to influence him."

When Abbot Placid was teaching theology at Belmont Abbey College from 1978-1982, he also worked at St. Michael Church in Gastonia as a transitional deacon and, later, as associate pastor to his brother, who was the pastor at the time.

"He taught me a lot, and I enjoyed working with him and the wonderful parish community," said Abbot Placid.

Father Solari agreed. "We enjoyed being together at the parish," he said. "We had always had a good family life, and there was never a time when we didn't get along."

Abbot Placid was ordained in June 1980 — almost exactly 25 years to the day that his brother was ordained in June 1955.

A parishioner from St. Michael Church remembers Abbot Placid in very positive terms: "I found him very understanding and compassionate," said Edith Baug Darwin, who has been a parishioner since 1934. "I felt very drawn to him, even though he was a younger priest, and he typified what I thought a monk was like."

After receiving his doctorate in theology and patristics, the study of early Christian writers, from a school in Rome, in 1996, Abbot Placid became academic dean of Belmont Abbey College — the position that his brother held from 1970 to 1978.

While working at these positions, Abbot Placid continued to teach, which is his first love.

"I love teaching so much — probably because I've seen, in my own life, the creative influence of teachers," he said. "The students have always been a challenge to one's self, and you can see as people's minds open to new visions and vistas."

He now begins the next phase in his life as eighth abbot of Belmont Abbey and the chancellor of Belmont Abbey College, a position which came as a "surprise to him" at the time of the elections last Thanksgiving.

His goals include "leading the community in discussions of monastic life to make the values of monasticism real and present, attracting vocations, and overseeing the identity of the college to make sure it continues in the traditions of monastic life and maintains identity as Catholic and Bendictine institution."

Father Hagan applauded the monks' selection of the new abbot. "The choice of him by the monastic community sends a good message to the college and the community, which is important in regards to the growth of monastic life in North Carolina."

Benedictine Father Paschal Baumstein, archivist and historian emeritus of Belmont Abbey, who was in the novitiate with Abbot Placid, said, "his pleasant nature and sense of discernment was impressive from the beginning."

"I am thrilled. None of the elections has gone more quickly because the community saw an obvious choice for the position. He has an impressive humility and a distinguished scholastic record and looks for what is good in all of those around him," he continued.

Father Solari realizes the level of responsibility ahead for his brother: "I am very proud of him and happy for the community. This is an honor for him but also a serious challenge. This is somewhat of a major responsibility that will not be an easy one, but his deep spirituality, based on the "Rule of St. Benedict," is a blessing for the college. His leadership qualities mean a bright day for Belmont Abbey." ▼

All are called to be disciples, parish leaders told

By ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
Correspondent

HICKORY — By comparing Jesus to the rabbis of his time, the Diocese of Charlotte's vicar for education explained how all Christians are called to be disciples in a keynote speech at the diocesan parish catechetical leader (PCL) meeting at the Catholic Conference Center.

Rabbis of Jesus' time only accepted the best candidates from those who came to them asking to be trained, said Father James Hawker during the Jan. 13 meeting. Jesus, on the other hand, "chose his disciples with all kinds of warts and calluses. He chose people who could be a real pain in the neck, people who needed to be fine-tuned, people who needed to be refined."

Another difference, said Father Hawker, was that the candidates who learned from the rabbis would eventually strike out on their own and find their own group to lead, leaving the rabbi behind. "Jesus asked his disciples to have a permanent relationship with him," he said. "Discipleship was a call to intimacy with him. He expected that the disciple would identify with him first, and then with his message."

Although all Christians are called to be disciples, said Father Hawker, all Christians are not meant to do the same type of ministry. "We respond according to the role and responsibilities of our lives," he said. "Our mission is directly related to our state and circumstances of life."

One thing that all disciples must do, said Father Hawker, is to use their authority properly. "Any authority you have is delegated," he said. "Our authority, as we live it out, must be a moral authority. Authority and integrity are two words that are integrally bound together."

"We also learn (in the Bible)," he said, "that any disciple is a person of faith." To illustrate this point, Father Hawker talked about several encounters between Jesus and his disciple Peter, and also pointed out writings of Paul on that subject in his letters to the Colossians and Philippians in the Bible.

Father Hawker then turned to the role of the catechetical leader in his or her parish. "The diocese has to have programs to assist in development and maturation (in the faith)," he said. "You play an important role" in the achievement of that goal on the parish level.

He defined a catechetical leader as "a person of vision, purpose and direction, who inspires and motivates, guides and directs." He also quoted Pope John Paul II as saying that "'the purpose of catechesis is to assist people to become intimate with Jesus.'"

"This assumes we are intimate (with Jesus) ourselves," said Father Hawker. "(Leadership is) an investment of self as a witness to Jesus."

Father Hawker also said that catechetical leaders should develop a mission statement to help them to implement their visions for faith formation in their individual parishes.

Marylin Kravatz, Southern Regional Coordinator for the Office of Faith Formation, leads a roundtable discussion entitled, "Parents, Our Partners in Faith Formation."

After Father Hawker's opening address, those attending the meeting had a choice of two roundtable discussions to attend in the morning, and two after lunch.

The morning sessions were "Parents, Our Partners in Faith Formation," led by Marylin Kravatz, faith formation coordinator for the Southern Region, and "Working with Faith Formation Boards," led by Dr. Michael Skube, superintendent of Catholic schools. The afternoon sessions were "Spirituality and Retreats," led by Sister Bernadette Svatos, faith formation coordinator for the Northern Region, and "Hispanic Ministry for the Millennium," led by Sister Johanna Orlett, a Franciscan nun who teaches at Catawba College in Salisbury.

Dr. Cris Villapando, director of programs for the diocesan Office of Faith Formation, said that programs for PCLs are held five times a year. "The basic idea is to equip our PCLs," he said. "This is diocesan-wide. When they go back to their regions, they get more custom-tailored service from their regional coordinators. This is more universal." ▼

Saint's "Rule" guides Benedictine, spiritual life

"This message of mine is for you, then, if you are ready to give up your own will, once and for all, and armed with the strong and noble weapons of obedience to do battle for the true King, Christ the Lord." — from the Prologue of the "Rule of Benedict"

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

The work is credited with advancing the monastic life across western Europe and into New World. It continues to offer spiritual and administrative guidance especially for those who lead and live in the Benedictine tradition, and it has done much to shape the spiritual lives of countless men and women — clergy, religious and laity — who seek God through prayer, study, solitude and Christian service.

Written in the sixth century, the "Rule of Benedict" has long been considered by the church as a treasury of spiritual advice for monastic life. Including a prologue and 73 chapters, it prescribes a way of living through humble, contemplative and obedient faith and service.

Benedict's "Rule" focuses on the spiritual and the practical, the doctrinal and the worldly. It directs its followers on everything from eating habits to virtuous zeal, from personal possessions to the use of prayer. It has survived, in several translated variations, for 15 centuries both as a body of law and a blueprint for spiritual fervor.

Based on Scripture and the Christian experience of community life, the "Rule" borrows — heavily, in places — from traditions found in earlier forms of monasticism in the East as early as the fourth century. Still, Benedict's "Rule" proved to have tremendous influence on monastic life from the sixth century on, and it refined ways of spiritual and practical living that are still experienced.

The "Rule" is very much applicable in monasteries today, and it is often adapted by individual monasteries based on monks' gifts and capabilities. While its content might not always be followed verbatim, monks across the world nevertheless continue to see the "Rule's" inspiration and wisdom as a means of living a true Christian life.

Benedictine Father Luke Edelen, who ministers and teaches in Newark, N.J., said the "Rule" has found new ways to manifest itself through the ages as it inspires a particular way of life.

"Monastic life is a form of Christian community living that involves attention to the Word of God, obedience to the Word of God, the recognition that Christ is present in all kinds of ways in that community, and that Christ is to be loved, served and obeyed in all those ways he is present," said Father Edelen.

Given that, he said, the "Rule" offers suggestions that can bring peace and simplicity of heart.

"The 'Rule' has been the prime vehicle for helping Benedictines through the centuries, because of what it does to encapsulate the best of the monastic tradition," he said.

Father Edelen, who entered monastic life as a Benedictine in 1972, said there has been an explosion of Benedictine spirituality among the laity as well. "It's very noticeable that there is great interest in general among lay people in recognizing that they are not second-class citizens, but rather are first-class Christians," he said. "Not surprisingly, many have found inspiration in the Benedictine way as a path of living out their baptismal vocations."

The "Rule" is more than a legal document, Father Edelen said. It is a spiritual document as well. And while the practical side of the monastery is necessarily guided by constitutions and directories, he added, "what is absolutely indispensable is a spiritual vision that the 'Rule' articulates."

As the world continues to experience constant transition, he said, "Benedictine tradition encapsulated in the 'Rule' is a witness to the fact that while changes have come and gone, there is something that is perennial — something of lasting value." ▼

Role of abbot: to serve as head of spiritual family

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

From the earliest days of Benedictine tradition, the role of the abbot has revolved around compassionate service as the head of a spiritual family. St. Benedict, according to various histories, conceived the notion of the monastic community as a family, and the community's superior has always been expected to lead with paternal care.

An article in the online edition of "The Catholic Encyclopedia" gives the following summary of the abbot's office: "In a word, uniting in his person the threefold office of father, teacher, and ruler, it is the duty of the Abbot to see that all things are administered wisely in the house of God."

A form of the Hebrew word "ab" — meaning father — led to the term abbot. St. Benedict, credited with founding western monasticism in the sixth century, directed in his "Rule" that the term be applied to monastery superiors and wrote "the abbot must always remember what his title signifies and act as a superior should."

According to Benedict, the abbot is to represent the person of Christ to his monastic community. Certainly not to be considered a replacement for Jesus, the abbot is by Benedict's estimation considered to be the primary person in a monastic community who takes on Christ's shepherding ministry — one that encompasses compassion, fairness and Christian outreach.

In his book "Cherish Christ Above All: The Bible in the Rule of Benedict," Benedictine Father Demetrius Dumm looks at the role of abbot through the text of the "Rule" and gives commentary on how the abbot is "the principal agent of compassion" in the monastery.

"The primary duty of the abbot is, therefore, to assure that the goodness of God, as loving Father, is made present in the monastery in a truly effective manner," writes Father Dumm, professor of New Testament at St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Pa.

Borrowing from phrases in the "Rule" itself, Father Dumm writes, "When the abbot is aware of 'what he is,' he realizes that he is the primary exponent of God's love in the monastery; and when he remembers 'what he is called,' he hears an echo of those words of Benedict describing himself as 'a father who loves you.'"

Moreover, the Benedictine "Rule" makes perfectly clear the role of the abbot as envisioned by Benedict, adds Father Dumm. In addition to his being a father figure, the abbot is to ensure that monastic life according to the "Rule" — adapted to individual capabilities — is lived by the monks in his charge. And, his duties also extend to the more earthly endeavors of administration of the community's possessions, hospitality to visitors, and serving as an educator who shares his knowledge and wisdom with a personal honesty.

In essence, the abbot is to lead by example. "Let him seek to preside over his brothers rather than to preside over them," reads the liturgical Prayer of Blessing for the abbot. "Give him a heart full of compassion, wisdom, and zeal, so that he may not lose even one of the flock entrusted to his charge."

That spirit of Christian love, adds Father Dumm, keeps the abbot focused on his primary obligations to his brother monks and all the faithful they encounter.

"A genuine love and compassion for community members will also guide the monastic superior toward a recognition of the priority of their spiritual welfare over all other considerations," he writes. "The good works of the monastery are, after all, merely the by-product of its primary function as a place where men and women can be supported on their journey to their final homeland." ▼

Canadian Celtic fiddler John Morris Rankin dies

HALIFAX, Canada (CNS) — Popular Celtic fiddler John Morris Rankin of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, died when his sports utility vehicle slid off a road in Cape Breton and plunged into the Atlantic Ocean. The funeral Mass for the 40-year-old Catholic musician was to be held Jan. 20 at St. Mary's Church in Mabou, and he was to be buried in the church cemetery. John Rankin formed a Celtic music group with siblings Jimmy, Cookie, Raylene and Heather. The group first known as The Rankin Family and later simply as the Rankins played together for 10 years and sold more than 2 million albums.

Catholic proposal among views at health coverage meeting

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Catholic Health Association Jan. 13 urged a steppingstone strategy to reach the goal of universal health coverage in the United States. Father Michael D. Place, CHA president and chief executive officer, proposed for starters cutting the current 44 million Americans without health care coverage by at least one-third over the next three years. The CHA was one of eight major national organizations involved in health care issues whose top leaders convened at the National Press Club for a daylong meeting, "Health Coverage 2000: Meeting the Challenge of the Uninsured."

Discussion continues over selection process for House chaplain

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Last spring, when House chaplain Rev. James Ford announced his plans to retire, he set in motion a six-month search to find his replacement — and then a firestorm of protest over the final candidate selected by House leaders. And the dust may not settle until the House makes its final vote in early February. Much of the uproar has been over an alleged anti-Catholic bias shown by House leaders when they bypassed a Catholic priest, Father Timothy O'Brien, in favor of a Presbyterian minister, Rev. Charles Wright, for the chaplaincy job, a position that has been around since 1789 and has always been filled by a Protestant.

ST. PAUL, Minn. (CNS) — The baseball team from the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul is heading to Havana. The team, which ranked No. 2 last year in the NCAA's Division III, apparently will be the first college or university team to play in Cuba since Johns Hopkins University in 1986. The Jan 22-29 trip is scheduled to include cultural and educational outings, such as visits to museums, and perhaps time spent with Cuban college students and their families. Ball games are planned for Jan. 26 or 27.

St. Leo Church parishioners embroider jubilee quilt

By SUSAN deGUZMAN
Correspondent

WINSTON-SALEM — The brainstorming began in January of 1999. The St. Leo the Great Church Jubilee Committee was given the task of finding a unique way to celebrate the millennium. They wanted to draw fellowship, unity and participation from parishioners of all ages in the process. They decided that the creation of a jubilee quilt would be the answer.

"The squares went like hot cakes," says Joyce Anderson, who has been the coordinator of the project. She added, "We (the committee) were all pleased that the participation went far beyond any of our expectations."

Dedicated Jan. 12, 2000, by Father James Solari, pastor, the work of art now hangs majestically in the Bishop Begley Parish Center at St. Leo the Great Church. It will remain in this location throughout 2000 to serve as a reminder of the jubilee year celebration. Many people will encounter the quilt, as the parish center is used for one of the Sunday Masses and numerous activities for youth, adults and seniors during the week.

The organizers — along with the 43 quilters, eight assemblers and numerous planners — remain in amazement at the overwhelming response and enthusiasm from parishioners.

The quilt consists of 40 squares, half embroidered in scriptural themes and half in liturgical ones. All the squares were pre-patterned. Many of the patterns were shared by committee member LaDonna Jensen, who was a central figure in proposing this project.

The squares with scriptural designs are generally quite detailed, while the liturgical ones are more simple. The two different designs are interspersed. Having so many different patterns and people involved, it was decided that all the squares would be embroidered with the same color to afford continuity. A gray thread was chosen, giving the quilt a sophisticated look. It also coordinates with the bright purple and teal colors of the borders, which the Vatican has chosen as the official colors for the Jubilee Year.

The official Jubilee Logo has been placed in the center of the quilt. Mimi Eisenmenger, a key participant in this project, explained, "We obtained permission from Rome to use the logo." Parishioner Marianne Donadio was responsible for construction of this centerpiece.

An explanation of the logo, according to the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, is that of a cross imposed upon a circular blue field symbolizing the universe. The cross sustains humanity gathered in the continents represented by five doves. It represents the Incarnation, whereby God enters into human history and redeems it. The light that comes from the center of the design signifies Christ, who is the light of the world. The colors of the logo express the joy and peace which are integral to the Jubilee celebration.

Father James Solari dedicates the jubilee quilt at the Bishop Begley Parish Center at St. Leo the Great Church in Winston-Salem. The quilt will hang throughout 2000 to serve as a reminder of the jubilee year celebration.

The project was first announced one Sunday in April at each Mass.

"The squares went like hot cakes," says Joyce Anderson, who has been the coordinator of the project. She added, "We (the committee) were all pleased that the participation went far beyond any of our expectations."

Once the announcement of the availability of the squares was issued, parishioners called asking for squares for weeks following.

Those with squares were encouraged to share the project with family members. Some of the squares were shared among different families. Working during the latter part of the spring and into the summer, all quilters finished by August.

A group of eight women met regularly during the fall for the final stages. It was no small task to piece together a quilt measuring roughly seven by ten feet. In five sewing sessions, the group brought the project to completion. The quilt was finished in mid-November.

"Everyone was so wonderful with the deadline," Mimi Eisenmenger expressed. "It was great to see such enthusiasm." ▼

King's dream lives through his legacy, says Catholic priest

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

WINSTON-SALEM — The civil rights movement in the United States has made tempered progress since the death of Martin Luther King Jr., said an African-American Catholic priest nationally recognized for his commitment to social justice. But, he added, the struggle for racial equality is far from completion, as racism today has become more subtle yet no less damaging to society.

Father George Clements was the keynote speaker at Wake Forest University Baptist Medical Center's annual Martin Luther King Jr. Day celebration Jan. 17. The hour-long service included prayer, music and readings from Scripture. A video presentation of King's "I Have a Dream" speech — filled with images of the often violent race relations effort — preceded the event. Tears were shed, hands were raised, amens were shouted.

And, in an animated address to his audience, Father Clements further stirred the emotions of those in attendance with words of passion and hope.

Father Clements, who for decades has gained attention as a humanitarian and proponent of social and economic justice, noted that many in the audience were not alive when King was at the forefront of the race relations issue in the United States. "But I assure you this," he said. "You are standing on his shoulders right now, whites and blacks."

He recalled being swept up in uncontrollable grief on April 4, 1968, the day King was killed in Memphis, Tenn. Father Clements was living in his hometown of Chicago, and was asked to celebrate a memorial Mass honoring King the next day on the campus of Loyola University.

Grief turned to anger when, driving to the campus, Father Clements encountered a young white motorist who scoffed at the priest's driving with his headlights on to honor the fallen civil rights leader. The white motorist laughed at the tribute, uttered a racial slur and sped off, Father Clements said.

The incident was a powerful lesson for the priest on how far things had yet to come in society where race relations were concerned — and, in another way, also reminded him of the legacy King left behind.

"Dr. King would have blessed this man; I cursed him," said Father Clements. "Dr. King would have forgiven him and would have genuinely embraced him with love."

That legacy of forgiveness and love is essential in promoting race relations today, said Father Clements, whose own ministry has kept him closely in touch with the oppressed and the marginalized.

The first Catholic priest to adopt a child and the founder of the Black Catholic Clergy Caucus, Father Clements has long blended active service with the ideals of civil rights leaders such as King.

In Chicago, the priest established the adoption program One Church - One Child, which expanded nationwide and has helped place more than 100,000 African-American and biracial children with adoptive families. His concern for the community led him to Washington, D.C., where he founded One Church - One Addict, an interfaith network of church teams who assist people recovering from drug addiction. More recently, he started One Church - One Inmate in the nation's capital, a support program that links churches with men and women recently released from prison.

Father Clements said one devastating aspect of today's race relations effort is that racism, while it still exists, is in many instances hidden. "Today, everything is so much more subtle, antiseptic, sophisticated, suave, urbane" than in King's day when it comes to people's fostering

King's name on Catholic list of martyrs sparks interest

By JERRY FILTEAU
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As Americans prepared to observe the anniversary of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, popular interest was piqued by media reports that the Vatican might declare him as a modern Christian martyr later this year.

The speculation is not entirely accurate. It appears that very few and possibly even no names will actually be announced at the event in question — an ecumenical jubilee year service May 7 at Rome's Colosseum honoring thousands of 20th-century Catholic and non-Catholic Christians around the world who shed their blood for Christ.

Nor is the event to be anything like the church's ceremonies formally pronouncing someone blessed or a saint — as is usually implied in discussions of the church declaring someone a martyr.

Even without added hype, though, the bare facts behind the speculation are noteworthy:

— When the Vatican asked church officials around the world to submit names of 20th-century martyrs who could be honored for having given up their lives in witness to their faith, it specifically asked them to include non-Catholics. Many scholars have described this as an unprecedented ecumenical gesture.

— On the short list of about two dozen names submitted by the U.S. bishops was Rev. King, a Baptist minister.

The slain civil rights leader, whose Jan. 15 birthday is commemorated as a national holiday, exemplified nonviolent resistance to racial injustice.

Bishop Wilton D. Gregory of Belleville, Ill., said the wide public interest in the appearance of Rev. King on the bishops' list of U.S. Christian martyrs "is indicative of the broad general respect that Dr. King enjoys in the United States."

Bishop Gregory, vice president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and head of its Subcommittee on the Third Millennium, spoke with Catholic News Service by telephone shortly before he appeared Jan. 13 on the "CBS Evening News" to comment on the matter.

Rev. King "deeply touched and impacted the life of this nation," Bishop Gregory told CNS. "He is one of our national heroes."

"The uniqueness of his approach to social change," he added, "was bringing together the Christian tradition of nonviolence and love of neighbor, with a deep Christian history as a Baptist preacher and a man of the Word of God, and combining that with his understanding and appreciation of the nonviolent movement so effectively exercised by Mohandas Gandhi.

"It was a wonderful interfaith combination of principles of justice and serving justice in a democratic nation."

Bishop Gregory declined to release other names the U.S. bishops sent to Rome, saying it would be up to the Holy See to decide how to release the more than 10,000 names submitted from around the world. A Vatican official later told CNS in Rome that there is no intention to publish the names at the May 7 ceremony.

Bishop Gregory noted that people knew of Rev. King's presence on the U.S. list only because of a CNS story in May 1998 when Archbishop Crescenzio Sepe, secretary for the Vatican jubilee committee, mentioned that Rev. King would be among those listed.

Bishop Gregory said Rev. King "was not the only non-Catholic" on the U.S. bishops' list.

Paul Henderson, director of the bishops' national third millennium office, said he received phone calls from media across the country Jan. 13 after wire services picked up a Boston Globe Page One feature story about the Catholic list naming Rev. King as a martyr.

"It sparked a good amount of interest in both the church's celebration of new martyrs and Dr. King's connection to that," he said. "I think it raises up the fact that at this time we need people to look up to who lived a noble Christian life, who became witnesses, pointers to living out the Gospel, to the point of the supreme sacrifice of their lives."

Bishop John H. Ricard of Pensacola-Tallahassee, Fla., who like Bishop Gregory is African-American, said he was not involved in putting Rev. King's name on the list, but he regarded it as a good choice.

"I think it would be based on our experience in the United States of the struggle of African-Americans and all minorities against the oppression of racism. Dr. King personified that struggle," he said. ▼

Benedictines hold important place in history of N.C. Catholicism

By FATHER PASCHAL BAUMSTEIN, OSB
Belmont Abbey

The Church was slow in gaining a foothold in North Carolina. So serious was this delay that by the 1880s it was urgent that aggressive measures be taken to rectify the situation. The western part of the state in particular suffered from lack of ready access to Catholic priests and the sacraments.

That led Rome to take the unusual step of entrusting the Church in North Carolina to the pastorate of an order of monks. In 1887 the man who had been the state's first vicar apostolic, Cardinal James Gibbons, proposed that the Benedictine abbot at Belmont oversee the church in North Carolina. Gibbons reasoned that the abbot had already established permanent residence in the state; his religious order could support him financially, and his monk-priests might assist the other clergy in the state.

Thus Abbot Leo Haid was named vicar apostolic of North Carolina, and, in a significant gesture, Gibbons enthroned the new bishop at both the vicariate's cathedral in Wilmington (St. Mary) and at the monastery in Belmont.

The Benedictine monastery in Gaston County hosted a college and farm as well, all situated on a campus of 506 acres. Later popularly called Belmont Abbey, the monastery reflected the Benedictines' permanent commitment to the state. Like all members of their monastic order, these Benedictines even vowed their stability, promising as part of their vocation an on-going allegiance to place as well as purpose. They seemed appropriate coadjutors for North Carolina's priests.

From the time of their arrival April 21, 1876, pastoral activities were part of the Benedictines' work. Gaston County had a church already, but no resident pastor. So local Catholics began attending Mass at the monastery. Monk-priests also traveled to other churches on Sundays, starting with St. James at Concord in Catawba County. The closest non-Benedictine priest was in Charlotte, across the Catawba River from Gaston County.

But there was a problem in staffing the Church in North Carolina with Benedictines. It pertained to vocation. The Church defined the monks' calling in terms of life in a monastery. Primarily, Benedictine priests were ordained for service in what St. Benedict called "the environment of the cloister and stability of the monastic community."

So the North Carolina Benedictines, from the beginning, understood their pastoral work as an interim rather than as an enduring contribution to the state. A Benedictine's principle service, they knew, is opus dei, a phrase that means "the work of God," namely prayer.

The first expansion of the Benedictines' parochial commitment came in 1891, when Rome gave Belmont's monks a territory of nine counties in western North Carolina.

This overhead photo of Belmont Abbey was taken in the 1940s. Several of the buildings shown have since been razed.

Within that territory they were assigned to nurture and solidify the Catholic presence for a period of 50 years.

Then, in 1910, the monastery was named a territorial-abbey. That made the Benedictines' church a cathedral, and gave the monks on-going pastoral jurisdiction within six additional counties, plus three from the previous number. Beyond that, their priestly work was limited mostly to the needs of their students, disparate periods of parish assistance and chaplaincies, and occasions of special need. Thus they covered a wide ministry, but in most of the state they acted primarily as an adjunct to the work of the state's dedicated body of priests.

Yet the monks always considered their principal priestly service as the readying of North Carolina for full diocesan status. In this effort, Abbot-

The Abbots of Belmont Abbey

The following abbots have led the monastic community at Belmont Abbey since its establishment in the 19th century:

Abbot-Bishop Leo Haid, OSB
1885-1924

Abbot-Nullius Vincent Taylor, OSB
1924-1959

Abbot-Nullius Walter Coggin, OSB
1960-1970

Abbot-Nullius Edmund McCaffrey, OSB
1970-1975

Abbot-Nullius Jude Cleary, OSB
1975-1978

Abbot Peter Stragand, OSB
1978-1988

Abbot Oscar Burnett, OSB
1991-1999

Abbot Placid Solari, OSB
2000-

Abbot-Bishop Leo Haid
In 1887 the man who had been the state's first vicar apostolic, Cardinal James Gibbons, proposed that the Benedictine abbot at Belmont oversee the church in North Carolina. Thus Abbot Leo Haid was named vicar apostolic of North Carolina.

Bishop Haid traveled thousands of miles within the state, aiding Catholics, expanding parochial jurisdictions, and administering the sacraments. He went to Europe four times, always returning with promises of the prayers of Benedictines internationally for the work in North Carolina, and with prospects for financial aid and vocations. Then, too, he toured the United States, preaching wherever pastors would allow a second collection to be taken for the benefit of the church and monastery in North Carolina.

Throughout Bishop Haid's 36 years as bishop, North Carolina claimed to have the most heavily non-Catholic population in the Union. Indeed, it would be the last area east of the Mississippi to receive full diocesan rank.

Yet Bishop Haid's administration won marked growth: By the time he died in July of 1924, the state's Catholic population had grown from 2,500 to 8,000; the number of parish churches had increased three-fold; there were three more Catholic hospitals, two orphanages, 15 schools, and 40 additional priests.

Thus on Dec. 12, 1924, after five months of deliberations, Rome finally decided that North Carolina was ready for diocesan status. The creation of the Diocese of Raleigh was possible because of the solid foundation afforded by a dedicated clergy, aided by the Benedictines, Sisters of Mercy, members of other religious orders, but especially the fidelity of the Catholic laity.

With the appointment of a non-Benedictine as a state's bishop, the Benedictines were able to re-focus on monastic life and the order's schools. Thus there began a progressive transfer of parochial jurisdictions to diocesan clergy. The principal Benedictine withdrawals occurred in 1941, 1944, 1960, 1969, 1977, and 1989.

Rome gave hearty endorsement to this transition. An Apostolic Letter of 1944 reminded the monks that "the missionary phase of the priests' life has to be foregone," and the college at Belmont had to be accepted as their chief apostolic work.

A Papal Exhortation of 1960 was even more explicit, calling for the monk-priests to be "freed from external duty" in order to "devote their entire efforts to the education and formation of youth."

Then in 1976, Rome issued an Apostolic Instruction defining Belmont Abbey's true work as the creation of a "living example ... according to the spirit and memory of St. Benedict." This, it argued, is "the most excellent of all the treasures which the Belmont community will hand on to the new generations of North Carolina."

In 1975, Belmont's fifth abbot characterized the Benedictines' cessation of most external parochial work as "a tribute to the zeal of the earlier monks [and] the surest proof of their having successfully nurtured a fledgling church to full maturity."

And that, he said, can "only lead to clarity about the peculiar genius of monastic life and allow us in the years ahead to make an even more significant contribution to the life of the Church in our area than that uncommonly worthwhile one of the last century." ▼

Prayerful best wishes to Abbot Placid Solari
From St. Vincent de Paul Parish
Charlotte, NC

U-I-O-G-D

Good Will Publishers, Incorporated, wishes to express its deepest affection to the monks of Belmont Abbey, who were so instrumental in bringing Catholicism to this region and who continue to be a witness to the truth and beauty of the Roman Catholic Faith. We congratulate them on their election of a new abbot.

We thank the retired Abbot Oscar Burnette for his tireless efforts, unselfish service and great contribution to both Belmont Abbey Monastery and College.

We especially send our prayers and warmest wishes to Abbot Placid Solari as he takes on the mantle of leadership within the monastic community as Abbot and within the College community as Chancellor. He is ever in our prayers and fondest thoughts as he so unselfishly and ably leads his brother monks and Belmont Abbey into the new millennium.

Raleigh seated nearby, Bishop Curlin promised loving support for the ongoing ministry of the Benedictine institution and noted its rich history in the state. "For over 125 years, Belmont Abbey has held a special place in the hearts of our two dioceses," Bishop Curlin said. "During the formative years of our diocesan history, Belmont Abbey, under the leadership of Abbot Leo Haid, nourished the infant Catholic community in North Carolina."

Bishop Curlin also called to mind the blessings of religious life and the responsibilities of abbot as head of the monastic community.

"It is the abbot's duty to demonstrate and encourage patience among the members of his religious family," said Bishop Curlin. "Having himself shared so deeply in Christ's love, (the abbot) must make it available to each monk in his dealings with him."

Bishop Curlin, who noted the wealth of spiritual wisdom found in the "Rule of Benedict," said the sixth-century saint urged all monks to strive each day for greater holiness.

"St. Benedict recognized that sanctity is not a once-in-a-lifetime commitment; it is a day-by-day recommitment of one's life to Jesus Christ," he said. "It is the responsibility of the abbot to help each monk respond to this challenge generously and wholeheartedly, for without this daily conversion, nothing of lasting value exists in the monastery or within the church." ▼

Nationally recognized education speakers to address diocesan teachers

CHARLOTTE — A pair of nationally recognized Catholic educators will visit Charlotte Feb. 11 to present topics at a Diocese of Charlotte Catholic School religion in-service day, for teachers in Catholic schools across the diocese and others involved in diocesan or parish catechetical and educational ministry.

The in-service day is organized by the director of religious formation for the Catholic Schools Office, Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan. The featured speakers are Father Richard Fragomeni and Dr. Elinor Ford, who will each present a workshop. The event will be at St. Gabriel School, 3028 Providence Rd., from 8:30 a.m.-3 p.m.

Father Fragomeni, who serves on the faculty of the Catholic Theological Union in Chicago, will present "The Language of God's Gifts" as his workshop theme. Father Fragomeni is a lecturer and author, who most recently published "Gifts for a Lifetime. A Sacramental Preparation Series," a guide for teachers of sacramental preparation.

Dr. Elinor Ford will present the topic "The Next Step: A Quantum and Synergistic Creation." A popular speaker on national and international catechetical, educational, parish, stewardship, clergy and health care groups, Ford currently resides in Fairview, N.C.

Father Fragomeni will celebrate Mass during the gathering, with music directed by David Anderson from the liturgical publisher GIA.

Also featured will be music from the Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School band, directed by Alan Kaufman, who will begin the in-service day with a performance of the band's "Our Sisters of Mercy Overture."

For more information and advance registration, call Sister Maureen Meehan at (704) 370-3268.

In addition to teachers in the diocese's Catholic schools, pastors, catechists, youth and campus ministers, and others involved in educational and catechetical ministry are invited. Advance registration is required. ▼

A child offers a reflection on prayer and God in a new book compiled by author Dandi Daley MacKall. "Why I Believe in God -- And Other Reflections by Children" contains comments from children ages 5-11.

Author discovers children have precious views of God

By LOU PANARALE
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — "I think God is there," says Sierra Wood, age 9, "even when I don't want him there."

Samantha Jann, also 9, says, "God's love feels like hot cocoa when you come inside from getting pushed in the snow."

Sierra's and Samantha's visions of God, along with those from scores of other children, are contained in a book called "Why I Believe in God — And Other Reflections by Children" (Prima Publishing, $10.95).

Author Dandi Daley Mackall, who compiled the book, says most children speak honestly when expressing how they see God — a quality rarely found in adults, she added.

Daley Mackall, who describes herself as a nondenominational Christian, has written numerous books and articles for children in the past 20 years.

She compiled material for her book from essays she gathered during a year spent talking to grade school students across the United States, she told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview from Ohio.

Each response is reproduced in the child's handwriting, sometimes in a barely legible scrawl, replete with spelling and grammatical errors.

She said her cardinal rule when meeting with children was never to laugh at what they told her about how they envisioned God.

Daley Mackall recalled the time she met with Elizabeth, 6, who said: "When I grow up, I think God wants me to be a missionary. But what I want is to be somebody who works at the cash register. So maybe I'll try to be, like a missionary with a cash register."

Daley Mackall laughed but couldn't get another word out of Elizabeth because the child felt she wasn't being taken seriously.

The author said she has learned that most children think deeply about God, regardless of how their responses are viewed by adults.

She recalled the description of God she got from Annie Seis, 6, who wrote: "God's love feels like he is hugging you with his fur coat on."

Word to Life

January 23, Third Sunday in Ordinary Time, Cycle B Readings:

1) Jonah 3:1-5, 10
Psalm 25:4-9
2) 1 Corinthians 7:29-31
3) Gospel Reading: Mark 1:14-20

By JEFF HENSLEY
Catholic News Service

It was Christmas Day, and the world was bright. The Mass was comfortably full, most having already celebrated our commemoration of Christ's birth the night before.

Despite Christmas carols, bright decorations, a good homily, and a profound sense of gratitude that my wife and my daughter and I could celebrate this great feast as a family, the Mass proved to be a challenge to our ability to focus.

It's not necessary to go into the details, but the twin distractions involved extremes of primping, even during the consecration, and a person who had imbibed a bit too much of something other than the spirit of the season.

I have to admit to feelings of irritation and self-righteousness, but in time God, in his infinite patience and generosity, reminded me of my own sinfulness, that we all came into his presence on an equal footing. And so, my focus switched to asking how we could reach out to others with devotion to the cults of beauty and drink so that they might be reached with the Gospel at deeper levels.

Today's readings from Jonah and Mark carry a particularly appropriate message. Jonah is sent to bring back an entire city, a massive city, not unlike many of our own, from the brink of destruction for their sins. To Jonah's chagrin, God is successful in using him to do that.

In Mark, Jesus says: "This is the time of fulfillment. The reign of God is at hand! Reform your lives, and believe in the Gospel." Then he proceeds to call Simon, who would become Peter, Andrew, his brother, and then the brothers James and John, asking them to leave their nets and follow him to fish for men.

Not much has changed. God still has work to do. He calls us to help him, sinners though we are. And he awaits our response. Will we help him bring others to freedom in his love in this year of jubilee? No one can answer that question for us.

Question:
Are there nominal Christians around you who need to hear the Gospel at a deeper level? Can you be one book of the Gospel that they "read" through your contact with them?

"Jesus said to them,
'Come after me; I will make you fishers of men.'"
— Mark 1:17.

Italian TV host says Mediaset to produce movie on life of pope

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

ROME (CNS) — Italian broadcaster Mediaset announced plans to film a television movie on the life of Pope John Paul II, with Ben Kingsley as the pontiff.

Mediaset talk show host and producer Maurizio Costanzo made the surprise announcement Jan. 14 at a company conference in Orvieto, Italy.

Company officials were reportedly trying to reunite "Gandhi" star Kingsley and director Sir Richard Attenborough for the project.

Costanzo said Ettore Bernabei, the president of the Italian production company Lux Vide and former head of Italian state television RAI, would produce the film.

But Costanzo seemed to jump the gun in making the announcement, as the project has yet to receive the Vatican's stamp of approval.

While Costanzo said the Vatican had already given its go-ahead, Matilde Bernabei, Lux's chief executive officer, said in the Italian newspaper La Repubblica, "We have neither asked for nor obtained authorization from the Vatican."

The Vatican has not issued any comment on the film.

"Up until now, we have received no request (for authorization," Msgr. Enrique Planas Coma of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications told La Repubblica.

Bernabei remained optimistic, telling Reuters she was confident an agreement would be reached with the Vatican. Discussions with Kingsley and Attenborough were already under way, she said.

The choice of Kingsley for the role of such an important religious figure should come as no surprise to Italian television viewers. The British actor played Moses in a 1996 Mediaset television production.

But Kingsley is best known for his 1982 Oscar-winning portrayal of the Indian nonviolent revolutionary Mahatma Gandhi, whom the current pope greatly admires.

If he accepts Mediaset's offer, Kingsley can draw on personal experience as well: He met the pope in September 1998 at an audience.

The proposed film on the Polish pope would be part of a Mediaset series on important figures of the 20th century.

Mediaset said it was also planning television movies on Pope John XXIII, Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini and Microsoft founder Bill Gates as part of the series. ▼

"Runaway Virus" threatens a flu pandemic like 1918

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — A deadly flu virus threatens to repeat the worldwide devastation of 1918 in the bland medical thriller, "Runaway Virus," airing Saturday, Jan. 29, 9-11 p.m. EST on ABC.

Scientists monitoring flu outbreaks around the globe from Atlanta's Centers for Disease Control begin to worry when pigs in a Guatemalan village keel over, and a local boy also dies after exhibiting flu symptoms similar to those in the 1918 pandemic.

"Runaway Virus"
Jan. 29, 9-11 p.m. EST
on ABC

Epidemiologist Dr. Dan Rothman (Jason Beghe) is sent to investigate, confirms the dreaded disease killed the boy and quarantines the villagers since no vaccine exists.

However, he is alarmed to discover the victim's engaged sister, Rita (Jacqueline Aries), who held the dying child in her arms, had already left, hoping to bus or hitchhike through Mexico then illegally smuggle herself across the U.S. border to join her fiance in Los Angeles.

When those whose paths she crosses quickly sicken and die it becomes imperative to find her — and produce a vaccine lest the flu spread with deadly speed across the continent.

This is where Centers for Disease Control Dr. Jenny Blanchard (Paige Turco) comes into the picture with her long-shot idea to unearth five Siberian miners who perished from the pandemic in 1918 and whose frozen, preserved bodies may still contain the flu strain necessary to manufacture the vaccine. As she heads for the Siberian burial site, the manhunt intensifies to locate Rita before she reaches the heavily populated City of Angels.

Directed by Jeff Bleckner, the movie follows a thoroughly predictable track as the scientists race against time to capture and isolate Rita while mass producing an effective vaccine. As such, suspense is minimal. ▼

"Bowfinger" (1999)

Goofy comedy in which a desperate Hollywood director (Steve Martin) secretly shoots footage of a top action star (Eddie Murphy) to use in his sci-fi-alien movie, but the star's paranoid fear of alien invaders complicates the plan. Directed by Frank Oz from Martin's script, the movie affectionately lampoons Tinseltown pretensions with Murphy and Martin in top form. Comic depiction of a promiscuous starlet, a few crude expressions and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13. (Universal)

"An Ideal Husband" (1999)

Oscar Wilde's 1895 drawing-room comedy of manners finds a rising London politician (Jeremy Northam) in danger of losing his career and adored wife (Cate Blanchett) unless a spoiled bachelor ally (Rupert Everett) distracted by a new love interest (Minnie Driver) can outwit a blackmailing femme fatale (Julianne Moore). Writer-director Oliver Parker's pokily paced adaptation is visually and verbally elegant with an able ensemble cast skewering the era's social pretensions. Fleeting nudity and sexual innuendo, references to fraud and deceitful behavior. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13. (Buena Vista Home Entertainment)

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope says in new millennium, Christians must pray for unity

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Christians must look forward to the third millennium with sorrow for their divisions and with prayers for greater unity, Pope John Paul II said.

Ecumenical activities, joint projects and common prayers for Christian unity are a fundamental part of the Holy Year, the pope said Jan. 16.

The pope used his midday Angelus address in St. Peter's Square to call visitors' attention to the Jan. 18-25 Week of Prayer for Christian Unity.

Pope John Paul and representatives from more than 20 Orthodox, Anglican and Protestant churches and organizations were scheduled to begin the week together with a prayer service at the Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls.

"We will ask God's pardon and each other's for the sins committed against the unity of the church and, at the same time, we will give thanks for the journey of reconciliation already completed, especially in the last century," the pope said during his Angelus address.

Pope John Paul asked all Christians to join him and the church representatives in praying "so that the beginning of the third millennium may see a promising development in ecumenical relations."

The pope said, "Only with God's help is it possible to advance on the road of unity, overcoming the divisions created in the Christian world over the course of the second millennium."

Meeting Jan. 17 with an ecumenical delegation from Christian churches in Finland, the pope said the opening of the Holy Door at St. Paul's Basilica as part of Christian unity week was meant to emphasize the fact that Christ "is the doorway into life."

"As we pass through the Holy Door, may we take another step closer to the unity in Christ which Peter and Paul proclaimed, and which the Lord himself so clearly wills," the pope told the Finnish delegation.

Pope, Christian leaders ask forgiveness for Christian division

ROME (CNS) — Pope John Paul II opened the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity kneeling in the doorway of a Rome basilica, flanked by the head of the worldwide Anglican Communion and by an Orthodox prelate. "We ask Christ's forgiveness for all which in the history of the church compromised his plan of unity," the pope said during the Jan. 18 service in the Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls. The service began with the opening of the basilica's Holy Door, the oldest in Rome. Anglican Archbishop George Carey of Canterbury, England, and Orthodox Metropolitan Athanasios of Helioupolis and Theira, a representative of the Ecumenical Orthodox Patriarchate, joined Pope John Paul in pushing open the door.

The Bottom Line

ANTOINNETTE BOSCO
CNS Columnist

Ordeal of a simple man

It's sad how often people who are "different" become victims of misunderstanding and downright prejudice. The uncomfortable reality of this hit home last year for Mike Fitzpatrick, a man in his late 40s impaired since birth with autism, a condition manifested by introverted behavior, repetitive gestures, retreating into a fantasy world and sometimes irrational actions.

Fitzpatrick, with the consistent, loving help of his parents, Anne and Bill, has grown into a functioning, responsible, working adult. Yet he was charged last year with robbing a bank in Ontario County, near DeWitt, N.Y., where they live. In spite of flimsy evidence, police insisted they "had their man," and Fitzpatrick faced years in prison. It was a tormenting, fearful time for him and his parents.

Fortunately, the man who actually robbed the bank — to support his drug and gambling habits — confessed, and eventually the police, albeit reluctantly, had to free Fitzpatrick.

His story was told on TV's "20-20" show in December 1999, with sensitivity and truth, titled movingly "A Simple Man."

I was glued to the set as I watched. I had a very personal interest in this story, for I knew Fitzpatrick as a baby and a little tyke. His father, a teacher, and mother, a writer, have been my friends for nearly 50 years. I can't think of people I respect and admire more. Two words come to mind when I think of, or talk to, them: "love" and "faith." These qualities have characterized their lives.

I first met Anne Fitzpatrick in 1952 when we both belonged to a fledgling writer's group. We were young Catholics, newly married, with a determination to become published writers. I was already a mother, with an infant, Paul, and a teen-age adopted son, Sterling. She was pregnant, and the couple were overjoyed when their son was born. But as he grew, it soon became evident that his behavior was baffling. Before long, he was diagnosed with autism.

All parents undergo great pain when a child is not "perfect." But the Fitzpatricks, putting their trust in the Lord, learned all they could about this malady so that they could help their son and other children like him.

The couple's faithful labor bore fruit. Today they have a son who has worked 29 years as a custodian in their school district, who is a friend to everybody, and is surprisingly independent. On the "20-20" show, Mike Fitzpatrick's supervisor had nothing but praise for this "simple man," saying he always had done his work, and expressing surprise that the police could not see how impossible it would have been for him to rob a bank.

"We knew he was innocent. We thought all we'd have to do was call and tell the police Mike is 'impaired,' but that didn't stop them," his mother told me. "My word didn't mean anything. The whole experience was horrible."

Yet, now the Fitzpatricks believe some good can come from this travesty of justice. "Perhaps as a result there can be more awareness of people like Mike and more advocacy for people who are different. A lot of prayer got us through," his mother said, adding that she believes that even in her lowest moment "the Lord touched me on the shoulder."

Wedding day mishaps

Now and then, we hear stories about how someone proposed marriage, a mishap on the wedding day, or how "divine intervention" prevented a simple mistake from being a disaster. There are two stories we'd like to share that fit into this category.

Rosie and Rusty were married last August in New Orleans. Rusty, on the day he proposed, in his excitement with getting the engagement ring for Rosie, received it from the jeweler without a case and put it in his pocket. Entering his car he casually removed his keys from the same pocket, unlocked the car, entered it, started it, and drove off.

Arriving at home to get ready for the big date, Rusty discovered, to his chagrin, that Rosie's ring wasn't in his pocket. Retracing his tracks with trepidation, he eventually returned to where he had parked his car earlier. A truck was parked in the same spot.

Rusty suddenly saw a glimmer of light beneath the truck. He thought, "Perhaps it is the ring!" Oblivious to any onlookers, Rusty immediately leaped out of his car and dove under the truck, grasping at the tiny, scintillating object. To his surprise and relief, the glimmering object was the ring, intact with only a small scratch.

They decided not to repair the ring. The scratch was a lasting reminder of a story about which they have shared many laughs.

Arnold and Marvia were married in Atlanta in January of 1994. Arnold and his best man, Barry, on the morning of the wedding, were out tending to last minute details. While eating a quick breakfast at McDonald's, they carefully went over a checklist of items. Arnold handed the marriage license to Barry for safe-keeping as he checked it on his list.

Later that morning as they returned to the checklist, Arnold and Barry, in a call and response manner, ran through their litany:

"Ring"
"Check"
"Tux"
"Check"
"License"
"Uh . . ."

Somehow, they had misplaced the marriage license. The very last place they remembered seeing it was at McDonald's on Barry's serving tray. They rushed back to the restaurant to find that the trash containers had been emptied in the dumpster.

Reminiscent of a scene from "I Love Lucy," Arnold and Barry, inside the garbage dumpster, searched through bag after bag of trash. Just as all hope of finding the marriage license was all but gone, Arnold found it unsoiled as he opened the last bag.

These stories report extraordinary human effort. But they also tell about that something else that makes the unlikely happen. Call it luck; call it serendipity; call it grace. What these stories report to us, in humorous contexts, are faith adventures. When we are willing to do the extraordinary, even against great odds, good things happen. How true this is of marriage, huh?

Prayer: The "Simplest Thing"

One year — I forget just when — the Lenten sermons at St. Patrick's in New York were given by a famous Jesuit who took prayer for his theme. His efforts were much admired, but the compliment that stuck in his memory was that of an old priest who praised the Jesuit for the great length and number of his sermons. Then, nudging him in the ribs, he whispered conspiratorially "Actually, Father, for all we make of it, prayer is the simplest thing."

I suspect the illustrious preacher did know, though the simplicity of prayer, its sheer, startling uncomplicatedness, seems to be the last thing that strikes most of us.

It is not difficult to intellectualize about prayer. Like love, beauty and motherhood, it triggers a flow of eloquent and pious expressions. It is not difficult, but it is often futile.

I just finished culling about 20 different articles on prayer — some scholarly, some popular — in the hopes of finding some fuel for this column. And I have concluded that you really can have too much of a good thing.

Writing about prayer, reading about prayer, talking about prayer, thinking about prayer, longing for prayer and wrapping yourself more and more in sublime abstractions can — if carried too far — set up a barrier. They can create a smoke screen that allows you to put God on hold while you analyze the subject to death.

What about actually praying?!

"Lord, teach us to pray." Jesus never seems to contemplate giving a theological answer, going into the question of what prayer is and what our dispositions should be. If you ask Jesus a question, you get an immediate working reply. Not "to get ready to pray," but "When you pray, say: 'Father.'" (Luke 11:1-2)

Jesus teaches that prayer is above all your response to God as His child. You stand alone before God, and what happens? You understand that you belong to God, your Father — and He belongs to you. And that this is the purpose of life.

To belong to God means using your free will to choose God's will. In experiencing God's presence in prayer, you no longer need personal ambition or achievements for comfort. You do not have to fear being an "unprofitable servant" rather than a "faithful servant." Through grace, you will be God's loving child, just as you are His deeply loved one, already.

Prayer is prayer if you want it to be. Ask yourself: "What do I really want when I pray?" Do you want to belong to God? Do you even want to want it? If you desire this communion, this belonging to one another, then you are praying. That is all prayer is. There are no secrets, no shortcuts. Prayer is the utterly ruthless test of your sincerity. It is the one place in all the world where there is nowhere to hide.

Prayer is the last thing you should feel discouraged about. It concerns nobody except God — always longing to give Himself to you in love — and your own decision. God always whispers, "I love you. I want you — but do you want Me?"

That wanting is ever the crux of the matter.

Combating abortion

Abortion isn't a subject anyone likes to discuss. But this time of year it tends to come up. Perhaps your radar has taken in some of the signs: a pro-life march in Washington, protests or programs in your local area, extra prayers at Mass or maybe even a homily or lesson plan devoted to this difficult, tragic topic.

If you're wondering why, and why now, it's simple: Jan. 22 was the date, in 1973, that the Supreme Court declared that individual states couldn't make laws prohibiting or even strictly limiting abortion anymore. Up to that time, abortion had been legal only in a few states for limited times during pregnancy and for serious, documented reasons.

But in "Roe vs. Wade," our Supreme Court threw all of those laws out and declared that states couldn't limit abortion unless a woman's life or health was in danger. And then it said that "health" included things like emotional distress.

In the United States, abortion is legal for any reason through all nine months of pregnancy. Period. We have the most permissive abortion laws in the West. Tragically, this is what you've grown up with. You were born into a society in which killing unborn babies is protected as a right and profited from as a business.

The Centers for Disease Control recently reported a slight decline in abortion rates, but the numbers are still pretty staggering: well over 1 million a year. The thought of it can be overwhelming. In the face of such a massive problem, we can sometimes feel helpless.

Even if you're 20. Even if you're 15 or even 12, you can do something to spread the message of life. Here are five simple suggestions:

1) Educate yourself. Find out about the stages of human development before birth and why scientists agree that at conception a unique human life begins. Find out what abortion does to that life and how it affects women as well.

2) Don't be afraid to voice your opinion, and don't allow yourself to be put on the defensive. When you're talking about this with acquaintances who support abortion, don't let them back down from the question of when life begins or why in the world they think it's OK for defenseless human beings to be attacked in the womb. Those who protect life don't need to feel defensive; those who seek to take it do.

3) Be a loving witness to the sacredness of all life. Treat everyone you meet with respect. Don't reject those who have struggled with this. Don't gossip about girls who get pregnant unexpectedly. Love.

4) Go to the local pro-life office, and ask what you can do to help. Believe me, they have something for you to do!

5) Pray. Pray for the girls your age — the girls in your town, in your school and in your class — who right now, this very moment, are confronting this quite terrible dilemma in the most personal way. And pray for their babies and their boyfriends as well.

So think about it. You're probably a pretty idealistic person, and are always looking for ways that you can help make life on earth ever more beautiful, harmonious and caring.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

When they both don't want children

Q. I am 31 years of age and want to marry a man who is 34. I am a teacher, he is a social worker. Both of us are practicing Catholics.

We believe we can do more good in our careers than in raising a family, but the priest we saw said that our marriage must be open to children.

We want to marry for mutual support. Do we really have to try to have a family in order to marry in the church?

A. According to Catholic teaching, and age-old Christian tradition, being willing to accept children, is an essential component of marriage.

It is true, of course, that the mutual support and caring love between the husband and wife are also essential for a true marriage, but our belief is that these two elements are inseparable.

The communion of life and love that exists between the couple nourishes them, and by natural inclination moves them toward the procreation and nourishment of the children who might come into their lives. The intention and willingness to fulfill both of these elements is essential for a valid marriage.

Perhaps it helps to see this in the perspective of sexual intercourse in marriage. The right to sexual relations, when reasonably and appropriately requested, is of course one of the consequences of the marriage covenant.

This right is, in effect, refused in marriage consent if one party (or both) intends to restrict intercourse in such a way that conception of children will never take place.

For the sake of clarity, we must distinguish this intention permanently to eliminate children from the marriage from that of many couples today who plan to delay having children for awhile.

Apart from the wisdom and perhaps moral implications of this sort of planning, such an intention, since it does not exclude children for the rest of their lives, does not invalidate a marriage.

Patron saints of dementia

Q. So many elderly people today are developing Alzheimer's disease. Have there ever been saints who suffered a mental illness, or would that prevent their being canonized? Is there a particular patron saint for those who have dementia or other mental problems?

A. Many people now honored as saints suffered from clinical depression and other varieties of severe mental or emotional illness, sometimes for nearly their entire lives.

This would create no obstacle to their being venerated as saints. Just as with a physical illness or handicap, all depends on the faith, hope, patience and charity they showed in their lives in spite of the limitations they experienced.

The saint whose prayers are most commonly invoked for mental diseases is St. Dympna, a Belgian lady who lived in the seventh century. When her body was rediscovered in the 13th century, it is alleged that many people with emotional and mental handicaps were healed through her intercession.

Her remains are preserved in a church in Antwerp, where an excellent sanitarium exists for the care of mental patients. Her feast is May 15.

racial injustice, he said. "Today, no one wants to be called a racist."

He noted that while "the struggle goes on," there is "a far higher percentage of whites on our side today than we ever had on our side" in the past. "And let's face it," he added. "The struggle will not be won without our white brothers and sisters joining in."

To the white members of the audience, Father Clements said that by their very presence in that auditorium, "we know you are on the side of social justice." He said that whites who have stood in defiance of racism "have struggled for us, and it's time for us to let them know how we feel about them. We call them God-lovers, because they truly recognize that we are brothers and sisters."

Father Clements led a standing ovation for the progress towards unity between the races. Then, everyone in the auditorium stood side by side and, at the priest's direction, turned to one another to exchange hugs and a message of oneness: "God loves you, and so do I."

In a closing prayer, Sister of St. Joseph Dennis Eileen Gamber reiterated Father Clements' — and Dr. King's — longing for racial and social peace. "Our brother, Dr. Martin Luther King, by his example was a healing presence in all situations," said Sister Dennis, at St. Leo the Great church in Winston-Salem. "Dr. King saw visions of larger truths, and dared to declare them." ▼

"Why I Believe..." from page 16

Get past the innocent humor, said Daley Mackall, and you find gems of wisdom in children's words, some of which she has found useful in her own hectic life.

During her visit to an elementary school, Zachary, 8, told her, "Everybody should spend more time with God. Don't just talk to him on business."

"At that time," Daley Mackall told CNS, "I was near exhaustion, hopping from city to city, gathering material for my book. Zachary's words were just what I needed to hear."

She said the innocent visions children once had about God are often lost on their journey to adulthood but they are alive and well in the children of today. ▼

St. Michael's Parish in Gastonia offers loving and prayerful congratulations to The Right Reverend Placid Solari, O.S.B., Eighth Abbot of Belmont

HISTORY

Founded in 1903 as a mission of Belmont Abbey, St. Michael's Parish is privileged to enjoy a special relationship with Abbot Placid and the monks of Belmont.

Abbot Placid was assigned to St. Michael's as a deacon and as a newly ordained priest.

The parishioners of St. Michael's offer him their heartfelt gratitude and assure him of their continued prayers in his service as Abbot of Belmont.

Mary, Help of Christians, intercede for him.

Faith is powerful weapon for undercover agent

By KRIS RADISH
Catholic News Service

OCONOMOWOC, Wis. (CNS) — Eric Szatkowski lives in a world of crime, corruption and callousness that would more than shake the faith of most people, but he has learned to use his belief in God as the most powerful weapon he carries.

Szatkowski, 38, is a special agent for the Wisconsin Department of Justice. His days and nights are filled with the crimes that often lead off the nightly news. He investigates murders, arrests sexual predators and has developed the unique specialty of posing as an undercover hit man.

When a disgruntled woman wants to kill her husband or a husband puts out the word that he is looking for someone to kill his wife, Szatkowski is the man who slicks back his hair, drives through the night, and poses as a hired killer.

"My Catholic faith is a very important part of my life and what I do for a living," said Szatkowski, who with his family is an active member of a parish within the Milwaukee Archdiocese.

"I really don't think that I could do what I do day in and day out if I did not have a strong faith," he told the Catholic Herald in an interview conducted in Oconomowoc.

Holding to that faith has not always been easy for Szatkowski. He spent years being angry at God.

"Today I truly believe that God cares about me and my family," he said. "I really do feel as if God has a plan for me, and it's a plan that I follow very eagerly."

As a young boy growing up in the Milwaukee area, Szatkowski attended weekly Mass with his parents, was an altar boy and attended the parish school.

He said his Polish Catholic upbringing was important to him, but in 1985, his faith was shaken. He watched his father, Waclaw — a Polish immigrant who survived the Nazi regime — die a slow and painful death from stomach cancer.

At the time, Szatkowski was working as a broadcast journalist in Madison. He was married and until his father's illness he felt as if everything was just as it should be.

His father died, and less than a year later his mother, Lucy, was hospitalized when her diabetes spun out of control. She seemed to improve, but died of a heart attack.

Szatkowski had to face his anger, his grief, and the loss of the guiding hand of his mother.

He and his wife had a baby, a daughter, and he left journalism to become an FBI agent, but that didn't work out. Szatkowski said he kept going to church but it was only a gesture to make his wife happy.

Eventually he found his way back into law enforcement with the Wisconsin Department of Justice, where he found a profession that he loved.

He and his wife had another child, a son, and then his faith journey got back on track, while he was preparing for a difficult murder-for-hire trial and his daughter was preparing for her first Communion.

"I thought there was something missing in my heart about my daughter's first Communion," Szatkowski recalled. "I had not been to weekday Mass in about 10 years, but on that morning, I thought I would give the church another chance and when the priest began Mass by announcing the feast of St. Stanislaus, the patron saint of Poland, I knew that God was sending me a message. I was overcome with emotion and received Communion that day with a renewed sense of faith."

Since then, Szatkowski has relied on his faith in both his personal and professional life.

The Szatkowski family traveled to St. Louis to see the pope in early 1999 and Szatkowski also has visited with the pontiff in Rome.

"Both were incredible, faith-instilling experiences," he said. ▼

'Rally for Unity' draws 50,000 marchers to S. Carolina capital

By JORDAN MCMORROUGH
Catholic News Service

COLUMBIA, S.C. (CNS) — Nearly 50,000 people converged on South Carolina's state capital Jan. 17 in an effort to have the Confederate battle flag relocated from atop the Statehouse dome in Columbia.

It was a mosaic of all races and faiths, young and elderly, grandparents walking beside young adults pushing babies in strollers, but it was still a mainly African-American crowd gathered for a march and rally against what some see as a symbol of racism and others see as a symbol of states' rights.

The flag was raised in 1962 to commemorate the Civil War centennial, and South Carolina is the only state to still fly the Confederate battle flag over its Statehouse.

Another issue of concern for many of the demonstrators is that South Carolina is also the last state to not officially celebrate the birthday of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

"King Day at the Dome: A Rally for Unity" exceeded even the most optimistic predictions of event organizers, who over the weekend were hoping for a turnout of about 20,000.

Among the sponsors for the gathering was the South Carolina Christian Action Council, or SCCAC, of which the Diocese of Charleston is one of 16 member bodies, representing 2 million people statewide.

The SCCAC has been on record to oppose the flying of the Confederate flag over the Statehouse dome since 1986.

"We are at a very important point in South Carolina history," said Julia Sibley-Juras, director of ministries of justice and reconciliation for the council.

"I think that is evident by the diversity of groups that have come together to work on this one effort," she continued. "This coalition represents the voice of the people. I think as Christians, we are called upon to witness our faith ... to impact the common good."

Among other sponsoring organizations for the rally were the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the Baptist Educational and Missionary Convention, the United Methodist Church, the SC Progressive Network, United 2000, the National Urban League, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP has launched an economic boycott against the tourism industry in the Palmetto State to try and force political leaders to stop flying the Confederate battle flag over the capitol.

In observance of the NAACP's boycott, many out-of-state participants in the event stayed at Columbia-area churches to avoid giving business to local hotels.

Marchers began converging at Zion Baptist Church in the early morning hours prior to the noon rally at the Statehouse, and the crowd just kept growing.

Step-off for the six block march began at 11 a.m., with many holding banners or placards and others singing in small groups, but by noon only a little more than half the marchers had made their way to the end of the route.

A girl holds a sign high above the tens of thousands of marchers at the Rally for Unity Jan. 17 in Columbia, S.C. The rally was held to focus attention on an effort to remove the Confederate battle flag from atop the Statehouse.

Primary speakers at the almost three-hour rally were Kweisi Mfume, president and CEO of the NAACP, and Hugh B. Price, president and CEO of the National Urban League.

However, among the roster of presenters on the steps of the Statehouse were many religious leaders.

Catholic Bishop Robert J. Baker of Charleston was in Rome and was unable to attend the gathering. However, in a Jan. 10 letter sent to all pastors and pastoral administrators of the diocese, the bishop urged all to take part "or otherwise promote the success of this important event."

The bishop also referred to his Nov. 22 letter sent to all of the faithful of the diocese.

In it he stated: "We Catholics understand the power of symbols. Our religious heritage, our worship, even our buildings are all a rich treasury of symbols. We know that symbols used well can inspire faith and good works, but used inappropriately they can divide and destroy.

"Whatever symbols we use to represent us should reflect the identities, aspirations, and hopes of all the people of the great state of South Carolina."

He added that whatever symbolic meaning the Confederate battle flag has for people, "it is clear that the placement of the flag above the chambers of our state government will not unite us for common good but will continue to foster division and cripple our future." ▼

Belmont Abbey College is home away from home for its students

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

BELMONT — Addy Jean Mullis, a former student of Sacred Heart College in Belmont, attended classes at Belmont Abbey College from 1976 to 1980. Not only did she receive her degree; she also met her husband and returned to the college to work.

Born in Puerto Rico, Mullis came to the United States to enroll in Sacred Heart College, but took classes at Belmont Abbey College to pursue her major in biology. While attending, she met her late husband, Joseph Mullis, who also attended Belmont Abbey College, and she worked in the admissions office from 1989 to 1992 as a recruiter.

"I think there is a secret charm that the school has because it is like an extended family," she said. "Those that are lucky enough to find that warmth want to stay and work on campus. When I was recruiting, I would tell students about the advantages of a liberal arts education and that I had been a student myself."

Belmont Abbey and Belmont Abbey College were established in 1876 by Benedictine monks after the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah O'Connell gave them the land. The monks came from St. Vincent's Abbey in Latrobe, Pa., to staff the college, and arrived in North Carolina to an area of farmland spotted with a few buildings. The school began with a fall enrollment of four students.

Today, nearly 1,000 students attend what they call "the Abbey," which now has over 20 buildings, including Belmont Abbey Basilica and the monastery, and continues the traditions set into place by the Benedictines, who are involved in the day-to-day activities of the college.

"All of the monks have some sort of relationship with the college, whether through teaching, praying for the students, individual counseling or other roles," said Benedictine Father Paschal Baumstein, archivist and historian emeritus of Belmont Abbey.

The close relationships she had with the monks is what Julie Pack, a 1989 psychology graduate, said touched her the most.

"I was looking for a small college so that I could get that personal attention from professors," she said. "The presence of the monks was what made me feel welcome, and I felt they cared about me." She said she was closest to Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, and the late Abbot Emeritus Walter Coggin, OSB, who she both described as "loving, caring and understanding."

Dr. Robert Preston, president of the college for the last five years, is also a product of the school; he graduated in 1953 with a philosophy and Latin degree. This semester, he is teaching an upper-level metaphysics class of 11 students.

"Every professor has the experience of teaching a group that isn't too large; it is small enough so that everyone become well-acquainted with everyone else," said Dr. Preston.

When Dr. Preston returned to the college as president almost 50 years later, some of the same monks and other faculty members were still there, he remembered.

"I think the Benedictine connection fosters both an atmosphere of community and hospitality," he continued.

Larry Simcox, who graduated in 1992 with a bachelor's degree in business administration, said the "size of the school, availability of the teachers and the closeness of friends" are reasons why he decided to attend the college.

The college is a liberal arts institution requiring 60 hours of a common core curriculum with philosophy, theology, and other areas of study, along with the 60-plus hours needed for graduation.

At the only Catholic college in the Atlanta Province, the focus for the future is growth, both in population and academia. Dr. Preston would like to see the enrollment increase to about 1,200 students. The college also is moving into era of technology with the establishment of distance learning via a new computer classroom and a new computer services director and staff.

Dr. Preston said, "What the liberal arts education does is it teaches students how to learn; it is important to learn the content, but learning the process is important."

"What amazes me is the tight-knit sense of community that students and alumni have; the alumni are extremely loyal," said Abbot Placid, abbot of Belmont Abbey and chancellor of Belmont Abbey College. "There is something about the experience here that is beneficial to the students." ▼

Hundreds attend right to life rally and march in Raleigh

By MATT DOYLE
NC Catholic

RALEIGH — Several hundred people gathered at the Children's Garden in downtown Raleigh Jan. 15 for the Rally and March for Life 2000. North Carolina Right to Life, Inc sponsored the event.

The rally, one week before the national march in Washington, D. C., was held in the shadow of the Legislative Office Building, a fact that was not lost on one Raleigh man. Jim McElwee of Our Lady of Lourdes said he was at the rally to offer "encouragement to our legislators to change the law (allowing abortion)."

It is no longer possible, according to Carol Long Tobias, National Right to Life PAC Director, for a woman to have an abortion without knowing that "that someone thinks it is wrong." Long said it is now more acceptable to be pro-life publicly than ever before.

Long said people are more open about being pro-life at work, in school, and in the home. She said that is having an impact on the number of abortions in the United States, a figure she said stood at about 3,500 per day.

Long warned, however, that "we do not condemn women who have had an abortion." Rather, she said, it is important to work with women who are living with the aftermath of the procedure.

Among those standing in the cold wind that swept among the government buildings were people who had traveled from Shalotte and Charlotte. St. Brendan the Navigator in Brunswick County sent a delegation to the capital city.

Jack and Shirley Pierce, Pat and Ed Taylor, Jackie Henry and Audrey Weager traveled from the coast to Raleigh. Ed Taylor said public demonstration was an effective way of letting politicians know where the Catholic community stands.

Irene Manning, chair of Charlotte Area Right to Life and a member of St. Thomas Aquinas Church, called abortion "the greatest injustice we have in the country." Manning said right to life activities are attended by people with nothing to gain and no self-interest; "we are already born."

Manning said the demonstrators were committed to their cause. She said they spend their own money and give their own time to be pro-life.

While offering the opening prayer, the pastor of Saints Cyril and Methodius Byzantine Catholic Church in Cary, Father Richard Rohrer, noted his parish's long involvement with Project Rachel, a post abortion healing ministry. He said the greatest victims of abortion are the mothers.

For the children, said Father Rohrer, the ordeal is over. However, he said the mothers must continue to live "the hell" of having "the most intimate of relationships in their lives destroyed."

Tom and Rosanne Pagles of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte felt their presence at the rally and march was particularly important this year. They are about to become grandparents for the first time and said it was important for them to support life.

Knights of Columbus from around the state took part in the rally and led the subsequent march around the government district in Raleigh. Banners waved in the breeze bearing council names from Winston-Salem, Garner, Belmont and Raleigh, among others.

When the rally ended and the marchers fell into line, the Knights took up the lead. As most of the people at the rally fell in behind the Knights, the two "right to life" horses brought up the rear.

Bill Hampton and his daughter Emily brought they large creatures into place behind the marchers. "Star of Gettysburgh" and "Moneypenny" done some babysitting during the rally, holding the attention of many children while their parents listened to the speakers. ▼

Dedication of center officially marks establishment of new diocesan office

MURPHY — Amid the picture book mountains in the westernmost part of the state, dilapidated trailers and shacks dot the landscape. Substandard housing and poor living conditions are a way of life for many residents in the Smoky Mountain Vicariate of the Diocese of Charlotte, which includes Clay, Cherokee, Graham and Swain counties.

One of the main problems is that many do not have the resources to bring themselves out of the cycle of low-paying jobs or unemployment due to a lack of child care, transportation or skills, which might mean better-paying jobs and a chance for a better lifestyle.

In keeping with the Nov. 1997 pastoral letter to North Carolina Catholics entitled "Of One Heart and One Mind," in which Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte and Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh wrote, "We must continue to address the effects of poverty by serving the poor in homeless shelters, in food pantries ... but we must also include action aimed at resolving the root causes of poverty ...," more than 100 people were present for the open house and dedication ceremony of the Bishop Begley Center for Economic Development on Jan. 19.

The dedication served as a celebration of months of planning and development to establish the Office of Economic Opportunity, which operates out of the center. The office, was opened in Oct. 1999 to focus on the cause and effect of poverty on people, particularly in those four counties.

The idea is to research and implement viable solutions for the serious problems of poverty affecting many people in the diocese.

The office is under the umbrella of the Office of Justice and Peace of Catholic Social Services.

John Scell, from St. William Church, accepts a plaque from Bishop William G. Curlin at the dedication of the new Bishop Begley Center in Murphy, NC.

Elizabeth Thurbee, director of Catholic Social Services (CSS), said, "This is very important step for CSS to be taking in this part of the state. This is part of what CSS stands for, reaching out to the community and putting social justice teachings into action."

Diocesan schools foster same vision through varied structures

By DIANNE RIGGS
Correspondent

"One size does not fit all" might be an apt slogan of the Diocese of Charlotte Catholic Schools Office. Perhaps unknown to some Catholics in the region, elementary and secondary Catholic schools in the diocese function under four different structural models, according to diocesan school superintendent Dr. Michael Skube. These models were created for effectiveness and efficiency, he said.

The first model, which is the most prevalent, is the parish school. This is an elementary school which is directly connected with a parish. The school is led by the principal in partnership with the pastor, and the school has the advantage of being integrated with the life of the parish, added Skube. He added that the parish school is generally a smaller school.

St. Michael School in Gastonia, St. Pius X and Our Lady of Grace schools in Greensboro, Our Lady of Mercy and St. Leo schools in Winston-Salem, Immaculata School in Hendersonville, Sacred Heart School in Salisbury, and Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point are parish schools in the diocese.

Asheville Catholic School, by virtue of its history, is a regional school, sponsored by several parishes. The parishes jointly decide upon a school administrator who is a pastor, and the pastor and principal work in a partnership. Day-to-day affairs are the domain of the principal, while overall directions such as budget involve the school administrator as well.

The third model is that of Bishop McGuinness High School in Winston-Salem. This is a "regionalized" school, said Skube, and like Asheville Catholic is supported by area parishes. The school is led by the principal, with the diocese being involved in overall planning and budgeting.

The fourth model is that of the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools, which is called "regionalization" according to Skube. This is a group of schools within a defined area that form a region. The schools have individual principals, but the diocese oversees the administration. Pastors are involved in the overview and work toward the spiritual development of students. Advantages of the regionalized school system, said Skube, involve shared ownership of improving curriculum, planning and

Religious say church needs them, but in different ways

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Reflecting on their diminishing numbers at the dawn of a new Christian millennium, religious men and women are confident they will continue to be needed by the church, but in ways adapted to global social changes. "Before anything else, the emphasis will be on quality rather than quantity," said Discalced Carmelite Father Camilo Maccise, president of the Union of Superiors General, representing more than 250 men's orders. Though conserving their trademark — radical living of the Gospel — religious must turn their energies to the challenges posed by today's often secularized, globalized society, he said Jan. 21 as religious communities prepared for their special jubilee day in Rome Feb. 2.

Venezuelan president praises Catholic reconstruction project

CARACAS, Venezuela (CNS) — Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez visited a Catholic reconstruction project, praising the effort as a model for Venezuelans struggling to recover from devastating floods and mudslides in December. "Count on us, Father," Chavez said as he embraced Jesuit Father Jose Virtuoso, who runs Faith & Joy, a neighborhood organization in Catuche, a hillside slum in Caracas. "We're going to work with you on this project, with the help of God and this united people," he said. Hundreds of neighborhood residents cheered as the pair embraced.

Pope urges proclaiming message in secular, religious media

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The church must search for ways to proclaim its message in secular as well as religious media, Pope John Paul II said. While the church needs to develop its own means of communication, it "must also use the opportunities that are to be found in the secular media," the pope said in his annual message for World Communications Day. The theme for this year's celebrations, to be marked June 4, is "Proclaiming Christ in the Media at the Dawn of the New Millennium."

Court leaves law intact closing public schools on Good Friday

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Supreme Court declined to review an appeal of Maryland's law requiring schools to close on Good Friday. Without comment Jan. 18, the court rejected an appeal by a retired Maryland teacher who argued that the law violates the separation of church and state. Maryland, Illinois and North Dakota are the only states that require all public schools to close on Good Friday, although the Illinois law was struck down by the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. A handful of other states designate Good Friday as a legal holiday but do not require schools to close.

Britain announces changes to Northern Ireland police force

LONDON (CNS) — The British government announced wide-ranging changes to the police force in Northern Ireland in a bid to attract more Catholic recruits. The proposed changes include a new name for the Royal Ulster Constabulary, which has a reputation among many members of Northern Ireland's Catholic community as being dominated by Protestant members. In fall 2001, the name of the Royal Ulster Constabulary will be changed to Police Service of Northern Ireland. Only 8 percent of the current police force is Catholic — compared to more than 40 percent of the population at large. The government's decisions were announced in London's House of Commons Jan. 19 by Secretary of State for Northern Ireland Peter Mandelson.

Notre Dame anti-sweatshop task force issues recommendations

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (CNS) — A special anti-sweatshop task force at the University of Notre Dame has called for the school to prohibit the manufacture of its licensed products in countries that do not recognize workers' legal right to organize. The task force also urged the university to create a model factory monitoring program to be overseen by professional auditors, church members and labor and human rights organizations. A third recommendation, that the school request full public disclosure of manufacturing sites by all its licensees, has been in effect since last November. Holy Cross Father Edward A. Malloy, president of Notre Dame, has accepted the recommendations.

Pope moved to tears while watching film by Polish director

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II reportedly wept as he watched the latest film by one of Poland's most successful directors. In a private screening at the Vatican Jan. 23, the Polish pontiff saw Andrzej Wajda's "Pan Tadeusz," Vatican Radio said. Wajda and members of the movie's cast were also at the screening. Vatican sources said the pope was moved to tears during the film, a historical saga set during the Napoleonic era, when Poland was divided between Germany, Russia and the Austro-Hungarian Empire. "Tears were running down (the pope's) face during the final scene of reconciliation" between two of the main characters, Wajda said after the screening.

CHA welcomes Clinton proposal to expand health care coverage

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Catholic Health Association Jan. 20 praised President Clinton's proposal to expand health care coverage for millions of low-income Americans. Father Michael D. Place, CHA president and chief executive officer, urged Congress "to act this year on the president's proposal and other efforts to expand health coverage." Noting that the nation is in a period of low unemployment, a strong economy and federal budget surpluses, he asked, "If not now, when?" The new Clinton plan would commit $110 billion over the next 10 years to expand the Children's Health Insurance Program, provide tax credits for small businesses to buy health insurance, expand access to Medicare and give tax credits for long-term care.

Pro-lifers urged to look to fall elections for change on abortion

By CAROL ZIMMERMANN
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The upcoming elections show promise for the pro-life movement, said several speakers at the kick-off rally for the annual March for Life Jan. 24 on the Ellipse in Washington.

"This year's presidential and congressional elections must be the turning point," Rep. Chris Smith, R-N.J., told tens of thousands of pro-life activists preparing for the 27th annual march to the U.S. Supreme Court to protest the court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion.

Smith, one of about a dozen politicians and religious leaders who addressed the crowd under gray skies and in a cold wind, said there was "a tremendous urgency to return a pro-life president to the White House."

And pointing to the White House in the distance behind the podium, Rep. Steve Chabot, R-Ohio, said that he hoped next year a different family "in this house" will support pro-life legislation.

Referring to the partial-birth abortion ban that was passed twice by Congress and vetoed twice by President Clinton, Chabot, a Catholic, said: "We'll pass it again."

But he also emphasized it was just as critical to stop all other types of abortion.

House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, likewise said the partial-birth abortion ban will once again be passed by Congress and President Clinton will be urged to sign it into law. He said Congress this year will also pass the Unborn Victims of Violence Act and the Child Custody Protection Act "out of our love for the innocent unborn."

Looking to this year's elections, Rabbi Yehuda Levin of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada said "presidential wannabes have to stop beating around the bush."

"Any disunity or apathy going into the fall elections will be self-defeating luxuries that will only perpetuate the horrific slaughter of 4,000 babies each day."

Enthusiastic young people carrying a March for Life banner lead a crowd of thousands down Washington's Constitution Avenue to the Supreme Court building Jan. 24 during the annual march commemorating the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"You've got to stop abortion, we demand it," he added.

Smith, a Catholic who chairs the Congressional Pro-Life Caucus, said he wholeheartedly supports Texas Gov. George W. Bush for president "because he will do all that is possible to end the violence of abortion."

But he added that no matter who pro-life activists support, they should commit to "rallying around whoever the pro-life nominee turns out to be."

"Any disunity or apathy going into the fall elections will be self-defeating luxuries that will only perpetuate the horrific slaughter of 4,000 babies each day," he said.

Over the course of the 60-minute rally, representatives were introduced from a cross section of pro-life activist groups including Doctors for Life, Dentists for Life, National Council of Catholic Women, and Operation Rescue. This year's rally was two days after the Jan. 22 U.S. Supreme Court decision in order to take place on a weekday.

Cardinal William H. Keeler of Baltimore introduced Cardinals Francis E. George of Chicago, James A. Hickey of Washington and Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia and 26 bishops, pointing out that Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York was unable to attend because of his health.

"I send special greetings to you from Cardinal O'Connor, who is with you in spirit and prayer. He says, and I echo, 'Don't give up.'"

Cardinal Keeler told the crowd that the nation's bishops "stand with you to pray, march and lift our voices" until the day when "life is protected at every stage."

Nellie Gray, the organizer of the event, told participants, many of whom were standing on melting snow, that pro-life activists will continue to gather each year in Washington "until Roe vs. Wade is overturned."

Referring to the theme of the day's gathering, "My Neighbor is Each Human Being in Existence at Fertilization," she said: "Each unborn child is our neighbor too. We must constantly talk about life beginning at fertilization."

Norma McCorvey, the "Jane Roe" from the Roe vs. Wade decision who became a Catholic two years ago, asked the crowd how many of them want to see the Supreme Court decision overturned.

The crowd, wearing parkas and holding up placards with pro-life slogans, responded with cheers. She told them there were hundreds of ways to work at overturning the decision, including getting involved in sidewalk counseling.

But many in the crowd have long been involved in pro-life activism on a daily basis, which explained their presence on the Ellipse in the first place.

Jason Negri, director of alumni relations at Franciscan University of Steubenville in Ohio, told Catholic News Service that participating in the march "definitely gives a shot in the arm to people who work in the day-to-day aspect of the pro-life movement."

If nothing else, being in Washington with thousands of others committed to the pro-life cause shows him that it's "more than just a handful of people" who are pro-life. ▼

Building a foundation of faith

Triad high school plans forge forward

By JOANN S. KEANE
Editor

WINSTON-SALEM — One of the sure signs of the growth of Catholicism in the Diocese of Charlotte is witnessed by the remarkable increase in the Catholic population of the Triad area, says Bishop William G. Curlin. "Growth," he says, "is a key reason we look forward to the building of a new Bishop McGuinness High School, to adequately meet an ever-expanding growth among our Catholic youth."

"The education of youth has an important place in the mosaic of the Catholic Church in Western North Carolina," says Bishop Curlin.

Plans for a relocated Bishop McGuinness High School have been rolling forward since the 1999 announcement by Bishop Curlin. A couple of intensive years of surveys, consultation and preliminary groundwork preceded the bishop's decision for the diocese to build a centrally located high school to serve the secondary educational needs of the Triad region.

With the new century came an outlined 'foundation for faith.' Initial drawings and facility plans for an 800-student facility have been reviewed and revised. Last week, Vicar General and Chancellor Father Mauricio West along with the school building committee met to review cost estimates and design development drawings. The building committee includes Bishop McGuinness High School Principal George Repass and members of the Triad community.

"The architect, proposed contractor and the diocese are working in concert to insure the success of this project," says Father West.

On the table are plans for a two-story 118,000 square-foot school building. Integral elements include a 225-seat chapel, 4,400 square-foot media center, and central courtyard.

State-of-the-art is the oft-quoted description of the planned high school. Computer labs along with computer learning supports in all teaching areas are nothing less than basic necessities. High tech is needed to meet the rapidly advancing needs of a computer-literate generation.

To help offset overall building costs, a campaign for Bishop McGuinness High School expects to raise several million dollars. "Is there any more important an undertaking than addressing the need to accommodate our children, grandchildren and others with the opportunity to receive their education at a new and even better facility?" ask members of the campaign committee. It is from that philosophy that Laying New Foundations for Faith and Learning evolved as the catchphrase for the fund-raising campaign, punctuated by acknowledging the need to "Help students develop strong moral values and a deep commitment to God and Church."

"Every Catholic household will be given the opportunity to make commitment to the future of Catholic education in the Triad," adds Jim Kelley, diocesan director of development. "We hope that when contacted, they respond generously."

Aside from the brick and mortar costs, Father West is very focused on the affordability of a Catholic high school education in the Triad. "This is a priority," he says. This spring, the diocese will begin a series of meetings to bring family costs to the forefront. "Pastor input and parish support are essential," says Father West.

As the Triad expands, so does the diocesan commitment to meet this growth head on. "People recognize the churches' obligation to meet needs," says Bishop Curlin. "Just as we work for the aged, the sick, the migrants, we work for the children."

"I thank God for the parents and for the people who generously acknowledge this need and generously respond to make this a reality."

A groundbreaking ceremony for the new high school is scheduled Feb. 6 at the site of the future school. For directions and more information, contact Bishop McGuinness High School 336-725-4247. ▼

Teacher honored for years of Catholic teaching

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — By sheer coincidence, Lorraine Malphurs ended up teaching at a school with the same name as the one she attended as a young girl.

Malphurs has held a myriad of teaching positions at St. Pius X in Greensboro: from first through fifth grade reading and math classes to instructing students on the sacraments of reconciliation and the Eucharist, the second grade home room educator who attended St. Piux X in Plainview, N.Y., has dedicated 27 years to education in the Triad.

Malphurs

Years later, her teaching skills have earned her the 1999-2000 National Catholic Educators' Association (NCEA) Distinguished Teacher Award, in honor of Sister Miriam Joseph Farrell. She is one of 11 teachers from the South Atlantic States region to be honored with this award. One of the first steps was to fit the award criteria, which included teaching in a Catholic school for at least 10 years and having a philosophy of Catholic education. She then had to answer 11 questions about her life and career.

"This is a great honor and is one of the biggest things that has happened in my life," said Malphurs.

Her life as a teacher got an early start when she tutored neighborhood first graders for 10 cents an hour as a ten-year-old. Her inspiration stemmed from one of her own teachers.

"My eighth grade teacher, Sister Mary Uriel, always said 'better late than never,' when it came to accepting late assignments. She understood how different people came from different places, and I try to do the same with my students," said Malphurs.

After earning her education degree with a math concentration from Oneonta State College in N.Y., she and her husband Bryon moved to Greensboro to join a sister who lived there at the time. Malphurs had heard from her sister that St. Pius X School was interviewing for teaching positions at the time.

Dr. Michael Skube, superintendent of schools for the Diocese of Charlotte said, "Lorraine is an excellent representative of all of our teachers because she expects the children in her care to do well, assists them in many ways to do so, and has a central focus of providing an environment of Catholic values and traditions for them."

Principal Celeste Usischon said she nominated Malphurs because "her talents are limitless, and she has used them with tremendous dedication."

Malphurs has worked with Usischon as the assistant to the principal and as advisor and facilitator for those teachers pursuing their licenses.

Usischon cited Malphurs' qualities as a teacher as reasons why she was chosen for the award: "She demands the best of her students and from their parents, and her interaction with the school community is edifying and professional. She nourishes the potential in each child in her care and is a person who is centered in Christ and concerned about the moral training of her students."

"Teaching in Catholic school makes me live my faith daily and weekly. Your heart gets touched when their hearts get touched."

As part of the application, a teacher and a parent wrote recommendation letters on Malphurs' behalf. Patty Delaney, a third grade assistant and president of the Home School Association (HSA) for St. Pius X School, said, "I thought she would be a great candidate because of her great knowledge in religion and teaching, which comes through in what she does. She is very energetic with the children and very religious, which gets them ready for their sacraments."

Manhattan attorney named president of U.S. Knights of Malta

By TRACY EARLY
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — John Paul Reiner, an attorney in a Manhattan law firm, White & Case, has become the new president of the American Association of the Knights of Malta.

He was elected by the organization's board of councilors Dec. 6, and took office Jan. 1 for a three-year term.

A graduate of Fordham University and the Columbia University Law School, he has been a Knight since 1978 and a member of the order's board of councilors since 1994.

His wife, Mary Elisabeth Wells Reiner is a Dame of Malta. And at a Mass of Investiture Jan. 14 at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York, his daughter, Mary E. Reiner Barnes, was inducted into the order.

The 41 men and 19 women inducted included Bishop James T. McHugh of Rockville Centre, Bishop George J. Lucas of Springfield, Ill., and Auxiliary Bishop Patrick J. Sheridan, vicar general of the Archdiocese of New York.

Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York, chaplain of the association, presided at the Mass, and Archbishop Renato R. Martino, Vatican nuncio to the United Nations, celebrated the Eucharist.

It was the 80th annual Mass of Investiture, and was dedicated to Cardinal O'Connor, who turned 80 the following day.

Reiner is also a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Sylvester the Pope and a Knight of the Equestrian Order of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem, and secretary of the Path to Peace Foundation, an agency established by Archbishop Martino to support projects related to the work of the Vatican's U.N. mission.

As president of the Knights of Malta, Reiner succeeded William J. Flynn, who had become president in 1996 following the death of his predecessor, J. Peter Grace, the previous year.

Flynn, who was chairman of Mutual of America Life Insurance Company, led in a reorganization of the American Association of Knights that put two-term limits on the service of presidents and councilors. Implementation of the changes brought a period of controversy, but Reiner said he hoped that now was over.

In another change this year, Jack Shine, a former public school administrator in Connecticut, has become director of administration at the order's offices. He replaced Henry J. Humphreys, who had the title of executive director.

Best wishes to all the students!

Program an "ace" in deck of educational opportunities

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

CHARLOTTE — From high school, Matthew Johnson knew he wanted to be a teacher. In pursuit of that dream, he drew an ace from a deck of opportunities: entry into a master's level educational program that promotes Catholic identity, service and commitment.

Today, Johnson is one of seven student teachers in Charlotte this school year as part of the Alliance for Catholic Education (ACE), an intensive two-year service commitment that yields a master's degree in education from the University of Notre Dame.

Johnson is in his second year of the program, teaching fifth-graders at Our Lady of the Assumption School. He says the program has taught him much about building educational experience around the example of the ultimate teacher, Jesus.

"When I think of Christ the teacher, I think of a lot of compassion," says Johnson, a Notre Dame graduate. "I truly believe that Christ has so much compassion for all those he has taught, and I really try to take that into the classroom — a lot of compassion and patience."

That sense of identity with Christ as teacher is a primary goal of the ACE program, organizers say. The program recruits, places and supports student teachers, about two-thirds of whom stay in Catholic education as a profession. In a Christian sense of service, participants spend a total of 16 weeks over two summers in intensive training at Notre Dame and in local schools. They teach for two full school years in Catholic schools across the southern and southeastern United States, where numbers of teachers in Catholic schools had been declining in recent years. Participants are paired with mentors in the schools, and stay in touch with ACE officials through e-mail, classroom observations and other visits.

This group of teachers in the Alliance for Catholic Education program currently teach in Catholic schools in Charlotte. ACE is a master's level program grounded in Catholic identity, service, and commitment.

What began in 1994 with a group of 40 teachers in nine communities is now an educational program with 138 teachers serving 22 dioceses in 11 states. Founded at the University of Portland, the program has since been enhanced by its affiliations with Notre Dame, as well as its involvement with the U.S. Catholic Conference's National Catholic Education Association and a growing number of diocesan school systems.

"It's an incredible program that has brought seven of its participants to the Diocese of Charlotte to work in several of our Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools," says Dr. Michael Skube, diocesan superintendent of schools. "These people have remarkable backgrounds and bring a true sense of enthusiasm to the classroom."

Joining Johnson in Charlotte are Brendan Sullivan, Sarah Van Ermen, Marcia Devlin, and Joseph Pietrangelo, who teach at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School; and Katherine Pytlak and Scott Reis, who teach at Charlotte Catholic High School.

The University of Notre Dame developed the master's in education program in 1997, and launched the enhanced ACE program the next year.

In all they learn and teach, participants are invited to deepen their faith while serving as Christian leaders — in the classroom and beyond.

"This program reminds me that — whether I'm actually in the classroom, attending a school function or in church — I am constantly a teacher by my display of actions and what I have to say," says Sarah Van Ermen, a second-year participant who teaches religion and social studies at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School.

Van Ermen, a Notre Dame graduate, says her classroom experi-

The event featured Father Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor, who read a passage from the bishops' letter and said, "The Diocese of Charlotte takes this opportunity to reconnect itself to partnering with this community and addressing the effects of poverty .... It is out of this vision, based on sacred Scripture and Catholic social teaching, that the Bishop Begley Center for Economic Development was created. Our efforts in the areas of childcare, affordable housing, job mentoring and business development have been very strongly supported by so many."

"It is an exciting opportunity to develop a new approach to economic development, guided by the noble assertions of Catholic economic justice teachings and guided by the needs and aspirations of a rich and resourceful community."

— Melissa Block, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity

Melissa Block, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity since the Oct. 1999 opening, has been actively working with other organizations and individuals to put workable plans into place.

"I feel fortunate to have been chosen for this office to work within the communities of Swain, Clay, Cherokee and Graham counties to address the root causes of economic injustice. It is an exciting opportunity to develop a new approach to economic development, guided by the noble assertions of Catholic economic justice teachings and guided by the needs and aspirations of a rich and resourceful community."

During the ceremony, Bishop Curlin thanked those involved for their help with bringing the goals of the office to fruition. He stated, "There has been an outreach of charity and love in this area. This ministry represents a Christ-like action because we have come together to enact positive change and offer support to those in need."

The bishop presented a plaque to the parishioners of St. William Church, which was accepted by John Scell, whom the parishioners affectionately call "the Czar," because of his tireless efforts with leading the refurbishing of the center.

The attendants then huddled around the center for a ribbon-cutting ceremony and a blessing by the bishop. They were then treated to a tour of the facilities.

Included in the center are the Mountain MicroEnterprise Fund (MMF) and the Self-Help Credit Union, both satellite offices out of Asheville.

The MMF helps people start or expand small businesses through loans, training and technical assistance and peer support in 11 counties, according to Greg Walker-Wilson, MMF director.

"We support what the diocese is doing, and we work together as partners with slightly different, but important roles," said Walker-Wilson.

The Self-Help Credit Union is an economic development bank, which serves low-end, low-income, minority and rural families and individuals to acquire access to capital, which most banks do not allow in most "high-risk" cases, said Joyce Harrison, Western N.C. regional director.

Harrison said, "We complement each other in what we do; we share resources to make more of an ecomonic impact."

"We are looking forward to the partnership we have developed with MMF and Self-Help," said Joanne Frazer, director of the Office of Justice and Peace.

The Office of Economic Opportunity has been busy at work with several projects. The Economic Development Fund, supported by the sale of a business once owned by the diocese, will be used for small business loans and individual development accounts (IDAs) for people to save money to buy a home or start a business, said Father George Kloster, pastor of St. William Church and the acting chair of the office advisory board.

A market study being done by the Mountain Resource Center, located on the campus of Western Carolina University, was commissioned by the office to research and compile reasons for a lack of adequate housing and the steps needed for purchasing. ▼

Delaney has worked with Malphurs, who is on the executive board of HSA, and Delaney's son Ryan, a fourth grader who had Malphurs as his teacher in second grade said, "she is one of the best teachers he has ever had and learned so much from her."

Pat Abondolo, who has been a technical specialist for 15 years at the school, said, "she is a wonderful teacher who has dedicated her life to Catholic education and lives her faith."

Malphurs' philosophy is simple: "I took a little child's hand in mine, and we were to walk together to the Father." "I am taking them on a journey [with sacramental preparation], and this is their first big encounter with the Lord," she explained.

"Teaching in Catholic school makes me live my faith daily and weekly. Your heart gets touched when their hearts get touched," said Malphurs.

She cites the Daughters of Charity, who used to staff St. Pius X School, as an inspiration. She said "her attitude about teaching is different because she worked with them; they were women who strived at everything they did."

Malphurs will receive her award, along with the other regional teachers, during a ceremony at the NCEA Convention in Baltimore in April. ▼

ence through the ACE program has been a valuable lesson on the influence that a teacher can have with students. Just as Jesus promoted his message through daily actions and words, she says, a teacher can similarly convey ideals of Christian life while serving people hungry for knowledge. Together, she says, both teachers and students can grow in learning and faith.

"They (students) want to know that there is an answer out there, and sometimes that's a big challenge," she adds. "The more they question, the more I have to find a concrete answer."

In addition to sharing a vision of Catholic identity in their classrooms, participants in local communities share in a spirit of mutual support through conversation and group prayer. They discuss their joys and frustrations, their hopes and concerns. Through their shared experience, says one participant, the teachers learn ways to grow in faith as well.

"People approach spirituality in different ways, and it's good to be exposed to that," says Scott Reis, who teaches math to freshmen and sophomores at Charlotte Catholic High School. Of the sharing of experience, he also says "it's great just having that support; other people are going through some of the same things you are."

Reis, who graduated from the University of Portland, says the program encourages "an outpouring of service to others."

"I enjoy teaching and I'm going to stick with it," says Reis, who also serves as a coach on the school's cross-country running team — an experience that has given the opportunity to work with students outside the classroom and which further strengthened his resolve to teach.

Faith development is vital to the program — both personal development as well as shared. "I definitely see that my personal faith has grown, especially though the classroom," says Matthew Johnson. "The fifth-graders tell you exactly how they feel; there's a kind of elementary faith they seem to have. That has definitely helped my own spirituality to grow."

Experiences like that have convinced Johnson that he will stay in education. "For some reason, I don't consider teaching a job," he says. "It's something that I love to do — to have the opportunity to touch lives and really be a minister of Christ by teaching these children, who will be our future." ▼ coordination, as well as unified tuition and salaries, comprehensive financial planning and fund-raising programs, coordinated programs of before- and after-school care, pre-schools, and summer programs, and efficiency in the use of school facilities within the system. The schools in this system are All Saints, Charlotte Catholic high, Holy Trinity Middle, Our Lady of the Assumption, St. Ann, St. Gabriel, and St. Patrick schools.

What do all these models have in common? "They are all ministry off of the local parish, going in the same direction," said Skube. That direction is a Catholic identity and a desire to meet whatever needs participating Catholics and other parents see for their children.

Several years ago, parents, staff and pastors in the diocese were surveyed as to these perceived needs. In response, the diocesan Catholic Schools Office set up a program of ongoing religious professional in-service training for the staff. Directed by the school office's director of religious formation for schools, Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, the in-service training takes place several times each school year.

The diocese is also putting together consistent preparation programs for religion teachers at all levels. ▼

Book Review

Humanity should be "mutually enhancing" presence on Earth, says Father Berry

REVIEWED BY ANNE LEVEQUE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Passionist Father Thomas Berry is best known as an environmentalist and cultural historian. His 1988 book, "The Dream of the Earth," was a seminal work providing a philosophical groundwork for environmentalism, not just as an isolated social issue, but as a broad cultural paradigm.

"The Great Work: Our Way into The Future"
By Father Thomas Berry
CP. Bell Tower (New York, 1999)
242 pp., $23.00.

"The Dream of the Earth" set forth the idea that the Earth has, in humanity, evolved a self-reflective consciousness. If we can see ourselves as fully a part of the Earth, we can understand ourselves as the Earth's consciousness.

Father Berry's most recent offering, "The Great Work: Our Way Into the Future" continues this theme while exploring ways in which humanity can become what Father Berry calls a "mutually enhancing" presence on Earth.

Father Berry's view is that we must change our underlying attitudes toward creation. This includes our relationship with our fellow humans as well as our relationship with every part of creation, both living and nonliving. Presently there is an enormous discontinuity between humans and anything not human. Our task, if we are to survive, is not only to bridge that gap but eliminate it completely.

While this may sound radical at first, be assured that Father Berry is no neo-Luddite. He recognizes the value that modern technology has brought to the lives of many. He also points out the great cost of technology: the devastation of the Earth.

Father Berry outlines the great work of previous generations and cultures, then goes on to say that the great work of our time is, "to carry out the transition from a period of human devastation of the Earth to a period when humans would be present to the planet in a mutually beneficial manner."

What this means and how we are to accomplish this is the subject of this book. Father Berry examines the current condition of the Earth and the historical background of human interaction with the Earth that has brought about the present situation of environmental catastrophe. The current order is based on human perception that creation exists for the use of humanity, in an exploitive relationship. The future order is one of coexistence and mutuality — an "Ecozoic Era."

Father Berry's perspective is ultimately a hopeful one. He has great faith in the ability of institutions and people to change in fundamental ways. Reading "The Great Work" is an exercise in optimism. Father Berry says that "the catastrophic moments are also creative moments."

"The Great Work" is an intellectually challenging book. It is also quite readable. Father Berry avoids the pitfalls of academese without sacrificing depth. He writes for a wide audience and expresses his ideas in ways that are inclusive and (small "c") catholic.

He includes modes of spirituality from many different traditions, both Eastern and Western. The effect of this is that readers from diverse traditions can find valuable guidance here. ▾

My friend's two sons were locked in a power struggle yet again. The older boy had scheduled an activity that directly conflicted with his younger brother's holiday plans. The latter was upset and disappointed, and their parents thought the older brother seemed a bit too triumphant for this to be a simple oversight. At their request he reluctantly rearranged his schedule — which was easily done — to accommodate his brother's needs.

It seemed that these boys in their upper teens should have outgrown their sibling rivalry by now, but over the years they had inflicted emotional wounds on each other that hadn't quite healed.

The younger brother was assertive and usually managed to get his way; the older brother had a number of serious personal struggles, a poor self-image and felt continually victimized.

Knowing this, their mother attempted to smooth her older son's ruffled feathers. "You know, for something like this it's OK to be the one to give in. It was a good thing to do," she told him.

"But, Mom, one of the things they told me in counseling is that I have to take care of myself and not always worry about other people or what they think," he countered.

She knew this was so, but she didn't know what to say. Then she heard herself telling him: "That's true, but you can sacrifice for other people for love. That's what the whole Christian life is about."

"Don't get me wrong, Mom, I love him; I'd die for him."

"But what about the incremental sacrifice?" she asked him. "Yes, Jesus died for his people, but he also sacrificed incrementally throughout his life. He was ridiculed, ignored, scoffed at and ostracized over and over."

Her son stopped arguing and just looked at her. The next day his attitude toward his brother was visibly changed. He smiled and silently shook his head as his younger sibling claimed superior knowledge of some trivial subject.

In this weekend's readings God places his prophetic words in the mouths of the people among us so we can understand. And his word makes sense and takes hold because of the authority it bears in action.

My friend says she doesn't "make a constant big deal" of reminding her kids of their Christian calling, but in this case it seemed appropriate. It made a difference because it was God's word. ▾

Engrossing documentary on Sidney Poitier to air on PBS

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — An actor who pioneered leading roles for African-Americans reflects on his life in "Sidney Poitier: One Bright Light," airing Wednesday, Feb. 2, 8-9 p.m. EST on PBS.

The engrossing documentary, from the "American Masters" series, is directed by Oscar-winning actress Lee Grant, who co-starred with Poitier in 1967's memorable "In the Heat of the Night."

"Sidney Poitier: One Bright Light"
Feb. 2, 8-9 p.m. on PBS

Now in his early 70s, Poitier recalls an impoverished but not unhappy upbringing on a tiny tomato farm on Cat Island in the Bahamas. At 15, Poitier was sent to relatives in Miami but bristled at racial discrimination in the South and headed for New York.

Ridiculed when he auditioned for entry to the American Negro Theatre, he resolved to learn the craft and so he bartered janitorial duties to gain admittance. For his stage debut he said his lines all out of sequence, which endeared him to the audience and gave him the confidence to go on and truly merit any positive critical response.

His racially charged 1950 debut film, "No Way Out" made him a hero in the Bahamas, but it was deemed too explosive to exhibit there. The resulting citizen protest group eventually led to the formation of a political party that would overturn British colonial rule of the Bahamas.

"Blackboard Jungle" in 1955 was Poitier's first real hit and his performance in 1958's "The Defiant Ones" with Tony Curtis brought him the first Academy Award nomination given for a black man in a leading role. But it was his 1963 stint in "Lilies in the Field" that garnered him the coveted Oscar.

However, a colleague relates that Poitier often felt very alone on studio lots as there were almost no other African-Americans employed in front of or behind the camera, and he became involved with the civil rights movement in the turbulent 1960s.

In 1967, Poitier starred in the top three releases of the year: "To Sir, With Love," "In the Heat of the Night," and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner," but following the 1968 King assassination Poitier was sharply criticized by black militants for being too passive.

Retreating to the Bahamas to reconsider his priorities, he turned to directing with 1972's "Buck and the Preacher" and several other comedies, "Stir Crazy" being the most successful.

Returning in 1997 to South Africa, where he had filmed 1951's "Cry, the Beloved Country," Poitier starred in a TV movie as Nelson Mandela and attributes the man's endurance to his spiritual inner strength.

Grant directs with somewhat less of an emphasis on flowery praise by colleagues than is customary in star bios, although there are remarks by, among others, Poitier's wife, directors Stanley Kramer and Norman Jewison, and Denzel Washington.

Poitier is mostly seen in facial close-ups and conveys a sense of integrity, pride and seriousness of purpose about becoming a skilled actor. His choice of roles also showed a deliberate commitment to improving the image of blacks to the mass audience with movies that dealt with racial issues previously ignored by the Hollywood studio system. And his often electric performances made the positive messages from these movies have resonance. ▼

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Contemplation of Trinity one of jubilee objectives, says pope

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Holy Year 2000 must include reflection on the Trinity, Pope John Paul II said.

At his general audience, he reminded the 4,000 pilgrims gathered in the Vatican's Paul VI Audience Hall that the glorification of the Trinity is one objective of the jubilee.

Following catechesis cycles dedicated to each person of the Trinity, the pope urged all people to contemplate the Trinity, comparing such reflection to "the journey of a pilgrim along the river of God."

Expanding on the metaphor, he called the Trinity the river's source and estuary, "the beginning and end of the history of salvation."

While the Trinity is "beyond the possibilities of our intellect and can be known only through revelation," the pope emphasized the Trinity's primary place in all people's lives.

"This mystery which infinitely overcomes us is also the reality closest to us, because it is at the source of our being," said the pope.

"The mystery of the Trinity, far from being an arid truth confined to the intellect, is life which lives in us and sustains us," he said.

Pope John Paul, who opened the Holy Door at the Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls Jan. 18 to begin the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, concluded his catechesis with words from the Greek martyr St. Dionysios the Areopagite, who is revered by Catholics and Orthodox.

Affirming the need for contemplation, the pope quoted from one of the first-century theologian's books: "It is in silence, in fact, that we learn the secrets of this darkness ... that shines with the most blinding of lights."

St. Dionysios, whom St. Paul converted to Christianity, is the patron saint of Athens.

No pope can dissolve valid marriages, pope tells church tribunal

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The bond of the sacrament of marriage is so strong and sacred that not even the pope has the power to dissolve it, Pope John Paul II said. The pope, addressing members of the Roman Rota, a church tribunal that handles appeals of marriage annulment cases, said Jan. 21 that he wanted to put an end to speculation that a pontiff had the power to dissolve valid marriages as part of his role as "vicar of Christ." "Faced with the doubts and confusion that could emerge, it is necessary to reaffirm that matrimony validly concluded and consummated can never be dissolved, not even by the power of the Roman pontiff," he said. "The opposite argument would imply that no marriage is absolutely indissoluble, which would be contrary to what the church has taught and still teaches about the indissolubility of the marriage bond."

Lighting the way to a new century

Recently I experienced the happy privilege of celebrating a Mass at which about twenty pre-kindergarten children from St. Ann's school participated. As you can imagine, throughout the celebration they manifested an enviable spirit of wonder and awe. Their attention was exemplary and their excitement was infectious.

During the homily I enjoyed a memorable dialogue with these pint-sized theologians. When I asked a question the little ones waved their arms enthusiastically hoping to be called upon to share their wisdom. At one point I queried, "How do we show our love for Jesus?" Each of the miniature sages seemed to have a ready response. As I pointed to one of the diminutive experts he shouted out, "Do good stuff and share." In listening to his succinct sentiment I thought, "I couldn't say it better myself!" Nonetheless I was well aware that achieving that goal is easier said than done. The maturing believer must be assisted to know what is true or false, right or wrong, good or bad. An integral component of the process of formation is education.

Is it any surprise, then, that Jesus, on the occasion of His Ascension, commanded that the Church take seriously and implement faithfully the responsibility of teaching in His Name? Throughout her history the Church has employed various means and methods to respond consistently to that directive. One of the most viable and valuable vehicles has been the Catholic school.

How might this unique agency of the Church's pastoral, educational mission be described? We must begin by acknowledging gratefully that it is a graced environment. It is founded upon the person and message of Jesus. He is present within this evangelizing and energizing community of faith day after day. Jesus, the Light of the World, shares the warmth of His love and the brilliance of His truth with each of its participants.

What a blessing Catholic Schools have been and are in assisting children and youth to come to know Jesus as Redeemer, Teacher and Guide; in enabling them to become intimate with the Lord as they journey toward the Promised Land.

Catholic Education

FATHER JAMES HAWKER
Guest Columnist

The Catholic school in fulfilling its mandate is commissioned to participate in the four-fold mission of Jesus and the Church. First, it reveals the caring, compassionate presence of God while teaching that every person is special and valuable in His eyes. Second, it affirms that each of those whom it serves has a promise and potential hidden within, that he or she can be a responsible friend, disciple and witness of Jesus. Third, it teaches the maturing believer how to live and love, how to pray and play, how to relate and respond to God and to others.

Fourth, it addresses respectfully and creatively those manifestations of fear, confusion and bewilderment that are no strangers to the process of human and Christian growth and development.

It follows, then, that those who minister in the Catholic School are involved personally in the ineffable task of informing and forming. They assist the children and youth to cultivate their minds and hearts; to develop their talents and skills; to appropriate, assimilate and share the vision, values and virtues exemplified by the words and works of Jesus; to understand and appreciate that learning is for living.

In truth the Catholic School fulfills a truly valuable role in lighting the way to a new century. In assisting its participants to "do good stuff and share" it contributes to the up-building of the Kingdom of God in their hearts and in the world.

Come rain, or sleet or dark of night ....

This newspaper — specifically this edition — is nothing short of a marvel of modern technology.

While Mother Nature dealt us an unexpected blow earlier this week, leaving Charlotte with an uncharacteristic measure of the frozen white precipitation, The Catholic News faced a dilemna: How to publish on schedule without the advantage of having a full staff in the office.

For the first time since we've been publishing The Catholic News & Herald — almost a dozen years — a snow contingency plan hasn't been put to the test. Thanks to very mild winters, snow has become even less frequent than in decades past.

With the salvation of home computers, email and the Internet, this paper is the first to be completed sans personal [face-to-face] interaction. We've been in contact, mostly via email, following an orchestrated plan of writing, editing, and design.

Where we did fall short is also attributed to Mother Nature. This edition is in celebration of Catholic Schools Week. Several stories fell through due to inclement weather. A planned trip to Bishop McGuinness High School was put on the skids, thanks to icy roads and closed facilities. Pictures to accompany other stories were quickly replaced with graphic elements.

And so, I take this opportunity to extend thanks a dedicated staff: Secretary Jane Glodowski, Advertising Representative Cindi Feerick, Staff Writer Alesha Price, Production Associate Julie Radcliffe, and Associate Editor Jimmy Rostar. These are the folks who may have caught a glance of winter wonderland outside their kitchen windows, as they hunkered down to keyboards.

Speaking of the paper

We are hearing more and more of delayed delivery of The Catholic News & Herald. It certainly benefits no one to read of an event scheduled to take place ... yesterday. We were in contact with postal officials as we try to improve delivery. To gauge your delivery, parishioners within a 50-mile radius of Charlotte should receive the newspaper on Saturday. Outside that circle, Tuesday is the late end of our anticipated date for delivery.

You can help us to help you. If your Catholic News is continually arriving late, contact your local carrier; that would be the postal center assigned to your zip code. Let them know your paper is late. If the paper continues to arrive late [give it a couple weeks], call, write or email our offices, and well take the tracing to the next level.

Send your Letter to the Editor to Joann S. Keane, The Catholic News & Herald, 1123 South Church Street, Charlotte, NC 28203 or e-mail jskeane@charlottediocese.org.

Speed, power, and change are flame-extinguishers

The theme of the Catholic Schools "Lighting the way to a new millennium" will unfold and will be implemented through the ups and downs of the third millennium. To make sure that this flame will always be shining, we must avoid the dangers which will extinguish the flame.

Hurry, worry, and fear will definitely play a very important role in the development of real and lasting education. One of my favorite writers in the pedagogical field is Henry Adams, the great-grandson of our second President. He wrote: "Nothing is worthless in education as the accumulation of knowledge in the form of inert facts and the sterile compilation of things known."

Catholic Education does not leave us inert or indifferent. It cannot leave us apathetic and atrophied. In our century we experience speed, power, and change, which translate into hurry, worry, and fear. These three major issues can and do block our educational path.

First, hurry. The person who is always in a hurry is indeed a foolish person, because even the world, as big as it is, it is not big enough for that person, getting and spending are not fast enough to keep up with the market. In our fast lane, we don't realize that we have been created by God in both his space and his time. We cannot turn back the hands of the clock. Neither we can turn those hands ahead. If we try to do so, we make fools of ourselves. St. Paul, many centuries ago, could well tell the people of Corinth that the present, the NOW, is the acceptable time for our salvation. Strangely enough, the older we get, the more likely we will say, "I don't have the time." We are rushing frantically about, looking for time. Did it ever occur to you that when you do that, you actually waste time, rather than finding time?

The second major issue is worry. So much talk today is about the threat of pollution — air pollution, food pollution, water pollution, and noise pollution. The real threat, however, is psychological pollution in the form of worry. The worrier of today reminds one of the perpetually complaining hypochondriac who had carved on his tombstone the inscription, "See, I told you I was sick!"

Another intriguing story tells of an atheist who one day decided to climb a high mountain. He got up to the top all right, but slipped while climbing back down. As he plummeted downward, he desperately grabbed a thin branch protruding from the side. He hung thousands of feet up the mountain. He looked down and could see no one. He looked up and saw the same. Looking down again, he loudly cried out, "Is there anyone down there who can help me?" No answer. So our friend looked up and asked the same question, "Is there anyone up there who can help me?" At that a voice came from heaven, "I can help you." Overwhelmed, our atheist friend queried, "Who are you?" "I am God," came the response. "Will you help me?" "Yes," said the Lord, "but first I want to know if you will do whatever I ask you." "I will," came the reply. "Good," said the Lord. "First, do you believe in me?" "I do," said the atheist. "Second, let go of the branch." At this my friend looked all the way down. Then he looked up again and cried out, "Who else up there can help me?"

In today's world of superficial commitments, shifting values, and low standards, we all can become perpetual pallbearers sizing up our newest client. It is like the person I once met who read so much about the evils of drinking, that he gave up reading. Worry kills more people than does hard work, because more people look for worry than for work.

The third and final issue is fear, which makes us live in the past, afraid of facing the challenge of the future. The philosopher of history, George Santyana, once said, "those who forget the past are condemned to repeat it." The past is important not because we live in the past, nor because we live for the past, but because we live out the challenge of the present.

A recent episode in Peanuts illustrates this in a striking way. One day Lucy decides to become a psychiatrist. She turns over an orange crate and chalks up a sign, "Psychiatric Help-Five Cents." Who stumbles along but Charlie Brown. "Lucy," he pleads, "what do you do if you don't fit in? What do you do if you don't seem to know what's going on? What do you do if you don't know what to do?" Lucy takes Charlie by the hand to the crest of a high hill, which overlooks a beautiful horizon. "Do you see that world out there, Charlie Brown?" she asks. "Yes," he replies. "Is that the only world you are going to live in for the next ten or twenty years?" "Yes." "Are you sure this is the world in which you are going to live for the rest of your life?" "Yes." "There is no other — you are sure?" "Yes." "Well, in that case, won't you please live in this world, stop complaining, and give me a nickel!"

We Catholics have a heritage. It is much more than two hundred years old. It goes back much further than the Declaration of Independence. Our Christian heritage comes out of our past, into our present, and walks with us into our future.

Father John C. Aurilia is Pastor of Immaculate Conception Catholic Church in Hendersonville, NC.

What is Catholic Schools Week?
Catholic Schools Week is an annual national celebration of the important role that Catholic elementary and secondary schools across the country play in providing a values-added education for America's young people. Catholic schools are proud of their educational network that emphasizes intellectual, spiritual, moral, physical, and social values in their students. Catholic Schools Week is a key part of the year-long National Marketing Campaign for Catholic Schools.

What does Catholic Schools Week celebrate?
Catholic Schools Week celebrates education that goes beyond preparation for a secular life. It is education that prepares students for a Christian life. CSW also celebrates the high standards of excellence and the quality of the education available to all students in Catholic elementary and secondary schools across the U.S.

What is the purpose of the Catholic Schools Week celebration?
The purpose of Catholic Schools Week is to build community awareness of, and involvement in, Catholic schools throughout the country. During this week, many dioceses and schools encourage parents to take full advantage of the benefits of local Catholic schools by enrolling their children in those schools. CSW is also an occasion for schools to interest citizens in volunteering their time and talents to the local Catholic schools.

Who sponsors Catholic Schools Week?
Catholic Schools Week is a joint project of the National Catholic Educational Association (NCEA) and the United States Catholic Conference (USCC). Individual dioceses and local Catholic elementary and secondary schools develop and promote their own CSW activities each year.

Lighting the way to a new century

Welcome to a week-long celebration of reflecting on traditions and of new beginnings. Pope John Paul II wishes that the time of the Jubilee Year will be a "new springtime of Christian life" to strengthen our faith and our Christian witness. This is a week we take stock of where we have been and how far we have come. We are expectant and hopeful for the innovations, discoveries and events that will shape our schools and the children they serve.

Catholic Schools Week 2000 has a special focus for each day of the week.

Sunday, January 30, 2000:

IN OUR PARISH. Our diocese, parishes and schools not only appreciate each other but also are linked in spreading the light of faith to a wider world.

Monday, January 31, 2000:

IN OUR COMMUNITY. Centered in the community, our schools serve and benefit from its neighbors. This is the day to celebrate those links and forge new bonds for the future.

Tuesday, February 31, 2000:

THROUGH OUR STUDENTS. As of this year, we have 2,000 years of Catholic education to celebrate. And that means 2,000 years of students — from the shepherds and wise men that learned the miracle of Christmas from the Holy Infant, to students currently in the midst of their first year of Catholic school. With such a rich heritage, it's appropriate that we focus on students themselves who are being trained as the leaders of tomorrow.

Wednesday, February 2:

IN OUR NATION. By providing comprehensive, quality education to 7,193 students this year, our 17 Catholic schools significantly reduce the educational and financial burden otherwise borne by the state of North Carolina and the local public school districts in which our schools are located.

In fact, current statistics show that our Catholic schools are a $36,000,000 (yes, 36 million!) gift to the taxpayers of North Carolina. And that is on an annual basis. This figure is the minimum it would cost annually to educate our students in the local public schools. This does not include the costs of building schools, which amounts to millions of additional dollars.

Moreover, the students educated today in Catholic schools go on to become leaders of our private and public sectors, statewide and nationwide.

Thursday, February 3:

THROUGH OUR VOLUNTEERS. Where would our schools be without its volunteers? Clearly, they have had an incredible positive impact on our programs, which our students have benefited. Today is their day, a time to take a moment to celebrate all their hard work, contribution, selfless example, and everything they accomplish in ensuring that Catholic education can light the way to a new century.

Catholic Schools Week arrives January 30-February 5

WASHINGTON, D.C. — "Catholic Schools: Lighting the Way to a New Century" is the theme for the 26th annual celebration of Catholic Schools Week, Jan. 30-Feb. 5, 2000.

The event is part of The National Marketing Campaign For Catholic Schools, a joint program of the National Catholic Educational Association (NCEA) and the United States Catholic Conference (USCC). This year's logo features a bright starburst shooting over the earth. A cross is the nucleus of the design.

"Recent themes for the national campaign and Catholic Schools Week have focused on the Catholic foundation of our schools, from which all else flows — a curriculum infused with values, high academic standards and discipline," said Leonard DeFiore, NCEA president.

Sister Lourdes Sheehan, RSM, USCC, secretary for education, said that the "lighting the way to a new century" theme has a special message for parents. "Catholic schools do provide a 'guiding light' for parents who are increasingly concerned that character and values education play a key role in the curriculum."

The purpose of Catholic Schools Week is to build support and recognition for the over 8,200 Catholic schools nationwide. During this week, many dioceses encourage parents to enroll their children in Catholic schools. CSW also is an opportunity to interest citizens in volunteering their time and talents to local Catholic schools.

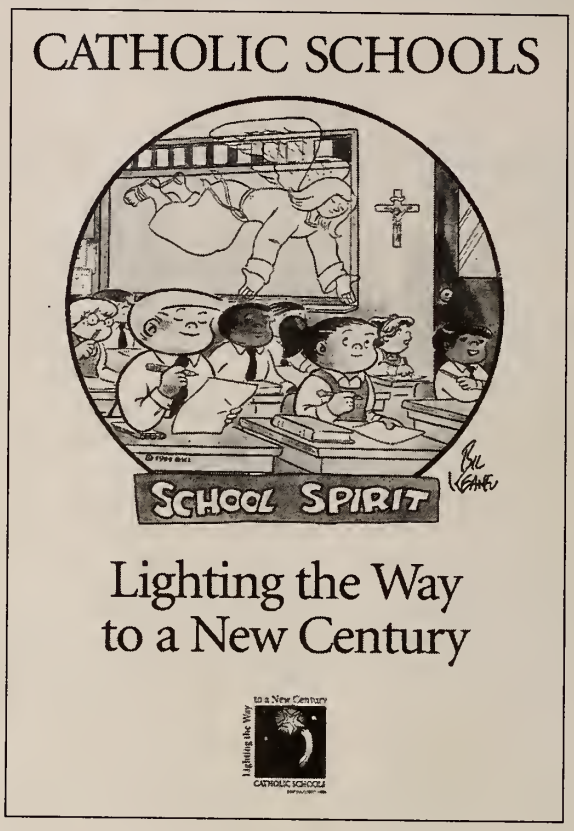
National Appreciation Day

National Appreciation Day falls on the Wednesday of Catholic Schools Week. This day was established to encourage supporters nationwide to showcase the great accomplishments and contributions of Catholic schools to our country.

In Washington, a delegation of over 100 Catholic school students, teachers and parents will visit Capitol Hill on Wednesday, February 2 to meet with congressional leaders to promote Catholic schools. As part of their marathon day, they will hand-deliver letters from chief administrators of Catholic education to their representatives and provide a background package on Catholic schools to every congressional office.

Across the country, diocesan and school leaders also meet with civic officials on this day. Governors, big city mayors, and small town councils have joined in to proclaim "National Appreciation Day for Catholic Schools" in their localities year after year. On this day in particular, advocates are urged to wear a "Faith for a Brighter Future" button to show their support.

The National Marketing Campaign for Catholic Schools was established by USCC and NCEA to promote Catholic schools year round. Thus the "lighting the way to a new century" theme and logo advancing Catholic education is used daily, not only during Catholic Schools Week.



Now in its tenth year, the marketing effort was launched to help create awareness of the value of a Catholic education and to increase enrollment.

"Family Circus" returns

The campaign also features an illustration from well-known "Family Circus" cartoonist Bill Keane. Fifth in a series, the design depicts Billy and Dolly in a classroom where an angel hovers above. It is titled "School Spirit."

Campaign materials provide schools with a "turn-key" package for marketing and include buttons, posters, banners and billboards. Products ranging from flags to T-shirts and sweatshirts may be personalized so that educators can customize their marketing efforts. Television commercials which promote the values of a Catholic secondary education also are available.

A popular campaign poster, which has been adapted for billboard and print advertisements, features a majestic sunrise. The headline reads: "Let There Be Light (And Faith. And Knowledge. And A Future Without Limits.)"

Members of the National Marketing Committee include Sister Lourdes Sheehan, RSM; Reverend William Davis, USCC Representative for Federal Assistance for Catholic Schools; Ms. Regina Haney, executive director, National Association of Catholic Boards of Education; Dr. Robert Kealey, executive director, Department of Elementary Schools and Daniel Curtin, executive director, Chief Administrators of Catholic Education (CACE).

NCEA is the largest private, professional education association in the world. Founded in 1904, the association's membership represents more than 200,000 educators serving 7.6 million students at all levels of Catholic education. USCC is the national policy organization of the bishops in the United States. ▼

Catholic Schools experience "Bull Market" with new schools and waiting lists

WASHINGTON, D.C. — When Catholic schools opened their doors for the 1999-2000 school year, there were 36 new doors through which students entered. According to a study published by the National Catholic Educational Association (NCEA), 36 Catholic schools opened during the 1998-1999 school year.

Dr. Leonard DeFiore, NCEA president made the announcement based on data included in the new publication, "United States Catholic Elementary and Secondary Schools 1998-1999", NCEA's annual statistical report on schools, enrollment and staffing.

Dr. DeFiore added that 200 new Catholic schools have been opened within the past decade. Currently there are 8,217 Catholic schools nationwide.

The NCEA president also reported that Catholic school enrollment remained stable over the past year and that overall enrollment has increased by 81,000 students during the past six years. In addition, 41 percent of Catholic schools have a waiting list for admission.

Total enrollment nationwide now stands at 2,648,844. Waiting lists exist in most suburban schools, and, where diocesan and privately funded scholarship support is available in inner-city schools, long waiting lists for lottery-like selection processes have resulted.

"These statistics remind me of the soaring stock market. It's a great story reflecting unprecedented growth and confidence in the system," said Dr. DeFiore. "Like the flip side of the bull market, the good news isn't reaching out to everyone — in our case the thousands of families who are on waiting lists for admission and the thousands more for whom Catholic schools are unattainable due to economic limitations."

"Our greatest challenge in 2000 and beyond is working for a just educational system in this country," said Dr. DeFiore. "Our waiting lists and new schools are a sensational statement about parents' motivation to choose schools. But what about the millions of other parents who have the will but no way of financing their school choice?"

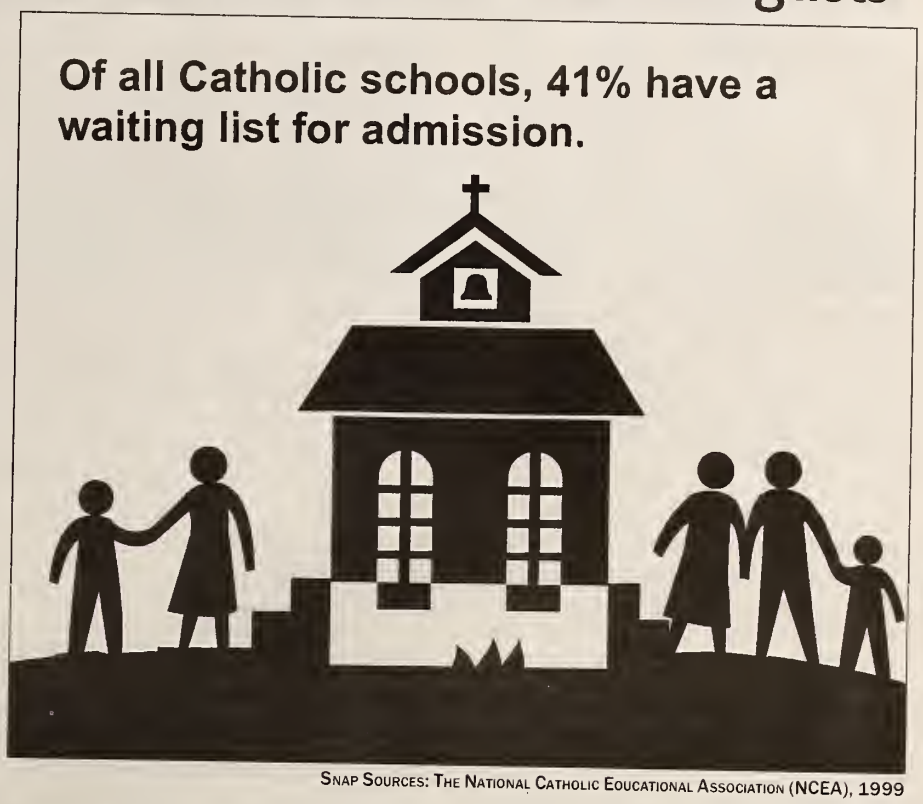
Elementary and Secondary numbers

Dr. Robert Kealey, executive director, NCEA Elementary School Department, said that the total number of Catholic elementary school students is 1,990,947; middle school enrollment numbers 22,155.

"Of special note is the continued increase.in preschool admission — up 5.7 per cent," said Dr. Kealey. "It's clear that parents recognize the value of early childhood education and are looking to Catholic schools for a values-based curriculum and academic excellence."

Michael Guerra, executive director, NCEA Secondary Schools Department, reported that 635,742 students are enrolled in Catholic high schools, up from 633,818 students last year.

"More parents are choosing Catholic secondary schools for their children, but there is a long list of those who cannot afford tuition, in spite of financial aid packages available at most of our schools," said Mr. Guerra. "Catholic school leaders are essential partners in the school choice movement because we are committed to justice for all children."



SNAP SOURCES: THE NATIONAL CATHOLIC EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION (NCEA), 1999

Regina Haney, executive director, National Association of Catholic Boards of Education (NABE), said that strong board support has been a key factor in the success story of Catholic schools. "The foundations for many of our new schools are built on parent and corporate partnerships with a vision for the educational growth of their parish or diocese."

NCEA is the world's largest professional association for private education. Established in 1904, the association represents some 200,000 educators serving 7.6 million students at all levels of Catholic education. ▼

Women who've lived under legal abortion tell pro-life story

By MARK PATTISON
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — At this year's March for Life, there weren't as many handmade signs attacking supporters of legal abortion.

But as the thousands of marchers gathered Jan. 24 at the Ellipse, with the White House in plain sight, in abundance were women who have lived their entire lives with abortion on demand as the law of the land.

Nancy Lee, who works in the admissions office of Christendom College in Front Royal, Va., is 26 years old — too young to run for the Senate, but able to get an abortion if she so chose.

Catherine Leonard, 16, who attends the eight-student St. John Bosco High School in Leesburg, Va., can't vote yet. But, if she wanted to, she could get an abortion.

Instead, she has chosen life.

"Growing up, my parents were always very pro-life, and we would always go to rallies," Lee said. Now, she volunteers at a crisis pregnancy center. "Teen-agers come in. It's a hard thing," she said. "But their parents aren't going to encourage them" to carry the pregnancy to term.

Sharon Pollitt, 21, and her sister, Kathleen, 23, of East Templeton, Mass., aren't old enough to run for a seat in the House of Representatives. But they're old enough to obtain abortions.

But they are also old enough to help support a family life center in nearby Fitchburg, Mass. — and to make their third trip to Washington for the March for Life.

"We just decided that this year this was something we wanted to do — to make a stance, to be a presence," Sharon said.

In a society where abortion is legal, what motivates them to be pro-life? "God creates life. He is the author of life," answered Kathleen.

Parental support also plays a factor. Their mother brought them to Washington the first two times. "She taught us," Sharon said. But now both parents are physically unable to make the trip. "They're here in spirit," she added.

Mary Veronica Price, 20, of Linden, Calif., can't drink alcohol legally yet, but she can get an abortion. Instead, she and her 260 fellow students at Christendom College got the day off from classes and took part in the march.

"I'm the sixth of 14 kids," said Price, a sophomore. Being pro-life is "the way it's always been presented to me. And when I started looking into it on my own — I mean, it's the slaughter of little babies."

Catherine Leonard, 16, who attends the eight-student St. John Bosco High School in Leesburg, Va., can't vote yet. But, if she wanted to, she could get an abortion.

Not that unintended pregnancies are going to be a problem for her anytime soon. "Just not having sex at our age would go a long way toward solving the problem," Leonard said. "I'm not sexually active."

Brendan Quinn, 1, and his sister, Moira, 6, were among the tens of thousands of people who rallied Jan. 24 in Washington to mark the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion. They came with their mother, Edel Quinn, from St. Genevieve's Catholic Church in Newark, N.J.

That's not the case with others, she added. "I heard three people this year talk about getting pregnant," Leonard said.

She expressed surprise at the small turnout a half-hour before the pre-march rally began. While marchers slowly but steadily made their way to the Ellipse during the rally, march organizers did not give their own crowd estimate from the platform as they have customarily done. The U.S. Park Police no longer makes crowd estimates.

"If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem," Leonard said. "If you can't even stand somewhere ..." she added in exasperation, her sentence left unfinished. "I just don't know why people wouldn't want to march."

Erika Doe, 14, came with 17-year-old sister Christina and several others from the youth group at St. Mary Parish in Lancaster, Pa. She got a ride for the three-hour trip — she's not old enough to drive, but she could get an abortion if she wanted one.

Erika remarked at how bizarre it seemed that society trusts her in one sphere but not in another. She added that she got her pro-life beliefs from the Bible. In trying to explain it, she declared, "You just know that it's killing."

The Supreme Court has said it will decide on the constitutionality of parental notification laws, but until then — and maybe after — Rebecca Adams, 12, a seventh grader at St. Theresa Grade School in Ashburn, Va., could get an abortion without telling her folks.

Rebecca sees another dichotomy between what society deems acceptable and what it doesn't. "Every day in the news media you see it all the time — murder, killing, war. But it's OK to have an abortion," she said.

"You have to look at them both — what is murder outside the womb, and what is murder inside the womb." ▼

Holy Cyberspace! Nuns on the Web!

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A research project dubbed "Holy Cyberspace" has found that more and more U.S. religious orders have their own World Wide Web sites. It found that the number of such sites roughly doubled in two years and will continue to grow rapidly in the near future. Men's orders were more likely than women's orders to have a Web site. The average site gets about 1,000 hits a month and the order uses it mainly to communicate to a wider public and to recruit vocations, the study found. The Commission on Religious Life and Ministry sponsored the study.

Seton Hall memorial service begins healing process after fire

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (CNS) — The healing process has begun at Seton Hall University in South Orange following the Jan. 19 dormitory fire that killed three freshmen and injured more than 50 other students. In an emotional and somber campus memorial service Jan. 27, Walsh Gymnasium was filled with an estimated 5,000 clergy, family, friends, faculty and administrators. Classes resumed following the service. The fatal fire broke out in the third floor commons room of Boland Hall at about 4:30 a.m. Built in 1952, Boland Hall houses some 600 mostly freshmen students.

Patriarch decries disputes over Eastern Catholic churches

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew of Constantinople, leader of the world's 200 million Orthodox Christians, warned that disputes over Eastern Catholic churches will overshadow the planned reopening of a major Catholic-Orthodox commission. But the head of Poland's Ukrainian Catholic Church criticized the patriarch's remarks, saying they would have "negative repercussions" for interchurch relations.

Priests in Kenya criticize security response after killings

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Priests working in a parish in Kenya's Rift Valley province criticized slow response of government security personnel after numerous killings in their district. Consolata Father Anthony Biaanchi, who has been working with the people of Rumuruti Parish in Laikipia since 1953, said in a late-January interview that security personnel in the area do not respond to distress calls until it is too late. More than 20 people have been killed since August in the Rumuruti area, and no one has been arrested to date, he added.

Vatican opens confession area near St. Peter's for jubilee

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — To underscore the sacrament of reconciliation's particular importance in the Holy Year, Vatican officials equipped a special area off St. Peter's Square with confessionals for jubilee pilgrims. Inaugurated Jan. 28, the confession room in the Braccio di Carlo Magno, one of the two wings linking the square's colonnade with the basilica, was furnished with eight confessionals, serving various languages. Officials said the new confession area was independent of, and in addition to, the array of permanent confessionals inside St. Peter's Basilica. Anticipating a heavier flow of penitents during the jubilee year, the basilica more than doubled its staff to 27 full-time confessors.

USCC lauds FCC decision OK'ing low-power radio

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic Conference Communications Committee voiced pleasure with the Federal Communications Commission's decision to license low-power radio stations in the United States. "The new local radio stations launched by the FCC offer the promise of greater diversity of voices heard on radio," the committee said in a Jan. 21 statement. "While this new radio service is helpful in opening the airwaves to more public interest programming, it does not eliminate the obligations of each existing full-power radio station to serve the needs and interests of their community," it added.

Pro-life comments to NIH urged on embryonic stem-cell research

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops' pro-life office and a coalition of scientists and ethicists are leading a last-ditch effort to stop the National Institutes of Health from allowing federal funding of stem-cell research involving embryos. A flier distributed by the bishops' office before and during the Jan. 24 March for Life said the NIH had set a Jan. 31 deadline for public comment on its draft guidelines for federal funding of embryonic stem-cell research. "The guidelines tell researchers how to obtain and destroy live human embryos from fertility clinics, so the embryos' inner cells can be cultured for taxpayer-funded research," the flier said.

Permanent deacons celebrate Rite of Lector

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

HICKORY — After six months of spiritual preparation and two-and-a-half years of study, the eight candidates in formation for the permanent diaconate in the Diocese of Charlotte received the Rite of Lector, a key step toward ordination.

Bishop William G. Curlin presided at the Jan. 22 Mass that included the rite at St. Aloysius Catholic Church. The bishop gave the candidates this advice during his homily: "Make sure prayer is the basis of your life. Talk to Jesus constantly, and you will have the heart, you will have the mind, you will think like Christ."

The eight men are scheduled to receive the Rite of Acolyte on Aug. 5 and the Rite of Admission to Candidacy on Oct 7. Their ordination is set for June 9, 2001.

"The program's really evolving to meet the needs of the diocese as time goes on," said Rev. Louis Pais, director of formation for the permanent diaconate program. He noted that new classes of candidates might be restructured in the future.

The U.S. bishops' Committee on the Diaconate has sent out a draft copy of new guidelines for the formation, ministry and life of permanent deacons in the United States, said Rev. Mr. Pais. This may result in changes in the order and the times in which the rites are given to the candidates. For example, the Rite of Candidacy may be given during the first year of training, the Rite of Lector during the second year and the Rite of Acolyte in the third year. Currently all three rites come in the third and fourth years of study.

The Rite of Lector gives the candidates the responsibility to proclaim the word of God, except the Gospel, during Mass and other liturgical celebrations. They may also be called upon to lead the people in the liturgy if other ministers are not present, and to instruct the faithful for their reception of the sacraments.

The Rite of Acolyte will enable the candidates to assist deacons and priests in the celebration of the liturgy, and to serve as eucharistic ministers during the liturgy and to the sick or shut-in. They will also be called to care for the body of Christ and the people of God, especially the weak and the needy.

In the Rite of Admission to Candidacy, the men will publicly offer themselves for ordained service to God and the church.

Although the role of deacon dates back to the early church shortly after the Resurrection, the move for its restoration began in the mid-1940s, and the Second Vatican Council called for the restoration "as a proper and permanent rank of the hierarchy" in its Constitution of the Church. The Diocese of Charlotte inaugurated its permanent diaconate program in 1980. Currently, 65 permanent deacons live and serve in the diocese.

A permanent deacon is an ordained minister of the Catholic Church and part of the hierarchical structure of bishop, priest and deacon. Besides his liturgical role, he is called to give of himself to the poor, the hungry, the sick and the suffering. Most deacons are expected to support themselves with earnings from everyday occupations, and to perform diaconal duties on evenings and weekends. By working in secular jobs, deacons help to establish a visible link between the church and secular society.

For example, Scott D. Gilfillan, a candidate from St. Joseph Catholic Church in Newton, is a general manager for a steel service center. He and wife Kimberly have three children, ages 16, 14 and 8. When he first considered the diaconate, four years seemed like a long time. "It's been one little step at a time," he said. "Each weekend I say to myself, 'Where does God want me to be this weekend?' That helps me put it into perspective."

Gilfillan said that the Rite of Lector was very meaningful for him. "When Deacon Louie (Pais) called my name, and I answered, 'Present,' it was the first time I felt like I was being called." Before that, he said, "It wasn't really a call, but just a sense that this was the right thing to do. It's a way of defining who you are."

The formation program consists of six months of spiritual preparation and four academic years. To be accepted, a man must live in the Diocese of Charlotte and must have completed the diocesan lay ministry program. He must be at least 32 years old when accepted into the program, and not older than 60 before completion. He must be healthy and be able to master the academic and ministerial disciplines of the program. He must accept the church's requirement that once he is ordained a permanent deacon he may not marry thereafter. If he is married, his wife needs to be supportive of her husband's participation in the program, and must agree to attend the classes with him.

Matthew Zboyovski, a candidate from St. Eugene Church in Asheville, spoke about the Rite of Lector. "It was a nice mile marker," he said. "It reinforces your commitment to the diaconate training. After two-and-a-half years of academics, this is finally a first step where it begins to come together."

The other men who received the Rite of Lector Saturday are Pierre K'Briuh of St. Mary parish in Greensboro, David King of Our Lady of Highways parish in Thomasville, Gerard LaPointe of St. Margaret par-

Lay program opens door to realizing gifts of ministry

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

ELKIN — Chuck Lucas feels an obligation to know and live his faith. At his home church community of St. Stephen in Elkin, he's had opportunity to serve as a catechist and, currently, as parish council president. As a new father, he speaks with enthusiasm of passing the faith on to younger generations.

Lucas says his own faith journey continues to lead him in new directions. And as a participant in the Diocese of Charlotte's lay ministry program, he says he is gaining information about the faith that will serve him — and those he reaches in ministry — for a lifetime.

"I think there's always a need for knowing more about your faith to pass that faith on, and the lay ministry program can give you a lot of that background," says Lucas. "If you see the group that's involved from our two churches, in our own instance it's a real sign that our faith is alive."

The two churches Lucas speaks of are St. John Baptist de La Salle Church in North Wilkesboro and its mission in Elkin, St. Stephen Church. He is one of seven parishioners from the two small churches in the foothills currently enrolled in the program.

Nearly 125 people from points throughout the diocese comprise the lay ministry class of 2000, which is expected to graduate in May. The two-year program is a blend of academics and spiritual growth, with emphasis on participants' realizing their gifts for ministry to their fullest potential. Groups of participants convene once a month at sites in Arden, Greensboro and Charlotte.

Founded in the diocese in 1990, the program was designed for men and women who seek to foster confidence and competence in their ministry in family, church, professional and community life. It is also necessary for entry into the diocesan permanent diaconate program, while catechists and religious education teachers can upgrade their certification by participating.

The program includes eight courses: Introductions to Ministry and Scripture; Christology, Church and Church History; Social Ministry; Vatican II Documents; Liturgy and Sacraments; and Christian Morality. Registration and tuition fees, plus the cost of books, are the primary expenses involved.

Whether for teachers, parish leaders or people in the pews, the lay ministry program has one constant. "The majority of people come for personal growth, which says to me that people are hungry for learning more about their faith," says Mercy Sister Mary Timothy Warren, diocesan vicar for women religious and director of the lay ministry program.

"This program is not really a training program in that we don't train people for ministry," she says. "We really give them information concerning Vatican II teachings so that they are better able to minister in their own (church) ministries, in the marketplace or wherever they are asked to answer questions about church life and beliefs."

For Ellie Elledge, a stay-at-home mom and a parishioner at St. John Baptist de La Salle Church, the program has added on to a foundation of faith she has built through active parish life and a desire to learn more.

"I would always like to be involved in church life," says Elledge, who teaches second-grade catechesis and the parish's first Communion class. "It is important for my children to see me involved and to know that your faith (development) does not end after you've gone through Sunday school.

"You're always changing and you're always growing if you are serious about your faith."

Elledge says the program also links participants from throughout the diocese, who hail from points both sparsely and heavily populated by Catholics and who seek "starting points" of entry into various forms of ministry.

That the lay ministry program serves as a stepping stone is an idea with which Mary Sorel agrees.

The lay ministry program is one of the 35 ministries and programs receiving funds from the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

"The program really does get people more interested in helping and becoming more aware of the needs the church is going to have in the future," says Sorel, St. John Church's faith formation director. She adds that, especially in areas as rural as Wilkes and Surry counties, the call of lay Catholics to greater church involvement is an important one.

For nearly 500 lay Catholics across the diocese in a decade, that call has been explored through the lay ministry program. Participants often move into or are reaffirmed in a variety of parish and diocesan-sponsored ministries, including the Loyola Institute for Ministry Extension program, the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults and parish religious education.

Like Mary Sorel, Patricia McNeill has been involved with the lay ministry group from St. John and St. Stephen churches from the beginning. She notes the camaraderie that naturally exists in a program that brings together people with commonalties.

"This program provides a way of connecting to people with the same religion," says McNeill, director of religious education at St. Stephen Church. "Because we (Catholics) are in the minority here, we want that connectedness with other Catholics. We want to know the church's perspective on things, and we've realized as adults that your education is not finished with confirmation."

Common interests intrigue Chuck Lucas, though the uniqueness of a lifelong search — both personal and collective — is another element that keeps him interested in making the trip to Greensboro for lay ministry gatherings each month.

"Coming to be part of a larger group, you're able to share that faith with people whose journeys are really at different points," he says. "It's interesting to see how that changes your perspective sometimes. It's good to have someone along for that journey."

And two shall live as one

By JOANN S. KEANE
Editor

WINSTON-SALEM — Read this before renting the tux, or calling for a limousine. If a wedding is in your future, the Diocese of Charlotte is ready with programs to help a couple prepare, before ordering a multi-tiered cake.

It may well be the day of a lifetime. But it is just that: A day in the life. And the Diocese of Charlotte is intent on sending newlyweds on their merry way well prepared for their lifetime together.

To wit, diocesan policies proclaim its obligation to provide adequate preparation for couples prior to marriage. Participation in a marriage preparation program — approved by the diocese — is the cornerstone required as a preamble to wedded bliss.

Fulfillment of this prerequisite may take one of three routes. Some parishes operate their own pre-Cana programs. Others refer people to Engaged Encounter, a weekend program devoted to marriage prep. And, a third option is available: a one-day program provided and administered by the Diocese of Charlotte's Catholic Social Services.

The CSS program was developed in response to requests for a one-day program. "Catholic Social Services wanted to offer a program to augment what Engaged Encounter already did," says Gerry Carter, CSS director of special ministries.

"This one-day program," says Carter, "is one piece of the larger pie. It's not that a couple just shows up at this program and then gets married." Concurrently, they are meeting with their pastor or deacon. This is formalized instruction, but does not negate the fact that there's a whole process within the parish. "We're adding to what is already going on in the parishes," he says.

How does the CSS program work? A pastor can suggest the couple attend the one-day program, if the parish does not conduct its own marriage prep. If opting for the one-day preparation, a couple can expect a program broken down into sessions. Following an introductory session, the day continues with instruction on Natural Family Planning. NFP is an element of instruction required by the diocese.

The CSS program begins with the administration of FOCCUS — a premarriage inventory of issues affecting the pending nuptials, an assessment of how an engaged couple looks at issues of money, family life and a myriad of issue.

"We want to raise issues," says Carter. "We want to get couples talking about critical issues, and being open to understanding what the sacrament of matrimony is all about."

"This is about your heart, your mind, and willingness to understand what the vow is all about," says Carter.

Ancient Order of Hibernians divisions devote efforts, funds to various causes

CHARLOTTE — The Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians of Charlotte recently devoted time, talent and treasure to several causes in the Charlotte metro area. Division 1 of the Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians recently gathered at Room at the Inn, an independent Catholic home for unwed mothers, to beautify a prayer grotto dedicated to the Blessed Mother. The division members planted pansies, weeded the grotto, and also replenished the children's sandbox. In addition, the men's and ladies' Order of Ancient Hibernians gathered for a charity fund-raiser, complete with Irish dancing, music and a buffet dinner. A handmade statue of St. Patrick was raffled during the event.

Sacred Heart School raises funds for AHA

SALISBURY — More than 100 students in kindergarten through fifth grade at Sacred Heart School jump-roped for the American Heart Association Dec. 10, raising over $2,000 in the process. The fund-raiser helped to give moneys to potentially lifesaving research into heart and blood vessel diseases. The effort also supports the development of educational materials. Student Alex Freeze raised the most money, at $128. The funds were raised through sponsorships. The school's physical education teacher, Barbara Caldwell, coordinated the event.

Annual Catholic Camporee for Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts

ALBEMARLE — The theme for the annual Catholic Camporee XXV, being held this year April 7, 8 and 9, is "The Great Jubilee/ Holy Year." Many of this year's camp activities will focus on the Jubilee/Holy Year and the Catholic faith, as well as, Scout Craft. The Camporee will be held at Camp Barnhardt on the western shore of Badin Lake, near Albemarle, N.C. Awards for the winners of the Scout competition will be distributed after the 10 a.m. Mass on Sunday. All Catholic Scout troops, Cub packs, individual scouts or units led by Catholics are encouraged to attend this Camporee. It is a fun-filled and rewarding weekend for Cubs and Scouts. The Camporee staff will provide lunch on Saturday. All Scouts are encouraged to make plans now to attend. For more information, contact Joe Vari at (704) 846-5155.

State of the Union seat gives cardinal glimpse behind the speech

WASHINGTON (CNS) — When Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago heard the State of the Union address Jan. 27, he got to see firsthand how the members of Congress responded to President Clinton's legislative proposals. He was particularly interested in how Clinton's proposals for family health care, a minimum wage increase, education programs and foreign debt relief will play out, Cardinal George said. But he also was intrigued by the theatrics involved on all sides in the election-year speech by an outgoing president. As the guest of House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., Cardinal George sat with Hastert's wife and other guests in the House gallery as Clinton addressed the joint session of Congress.

Pope inaugurates controversial parking complex near Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — After lengthy delays and much public debate, Pope John Paul II inaugurated one of the jubilee year's most controversial projects, a five-story underground parking lot on a historic hillside next to the Vatican. At a ceremony attended by Vatican and Rome officials, the pope blessed the ultramodern facility Jan. 31 and said it would make it easier for pilgrims to reach St. Peter's Basilica while easing traffic and parking pressure on area residents. Built on Vatican property, its cost of approximately $44 million was split by the Vatican and Italy. The project was designed as a symbol of Vatican-Italian cooperation for the jubilee year. But public reaction soured when archeological ruins — including frescoed walls from an early Roman villa — were found during construction of an access ramp on Rome's Janiculum Hill.

Pope plans to canonize Blessed Katharine Drexel

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II plans to canonize Blessed Katharine Drexel, the U.S. heiress who dedicated her life to defending and educating African-Americans and Native Americans. During a Jan. 27 meeting with the Congregation for Sainthood Causes, the pope published a decree recognizing as a miracle the 1994 healing, following prayers to Blessed Katharine, of a U.S. toddler born deaf. The Vatican did not announce a date for the canonization ceremony, but people familiar with Pope John Paul's Holy Year calendar said Blessed Katharine probably would be declared a saint during an Oct. 1 Mass at the Vatican.

Maryknoller campaigns in Rome to close School of the Americas

ROME (CNS) — Maryknoll Father Roy Bourgeois brought his campaign to close the U.S. Army School of the Americas to Rome in late January. "The school is a Cold War dinosaur, a relic," which helps the military keep a firm grip on power throughout Central and South America, the priest said. The school, known as the SOA and based at Fort Benning, Ga., since 1984, was founded in Panama in 1946. It has trained some 60,000 military officers from Latin America and the Caribbean. During a weeklong visit to Rome, Father Bourgeois tried to enlist the help of the world's religious orders in closing the school, whose graduates have included officers accused of assassinations and human rights abuses.

Rabbi: Jerusalem visit shows approval of Israeli sovereignty

JERUSALEM (CNS) — One of Israel's two chief rabbis said a papal meeting with Jewish leaders at Jerusalem's Western Wall would indicate a recognition of Israeli sovereignty over all of Jerusalem. But a Jerusalem bishop said Pope John Paul II's March visit to the Holy Land is a pastoral one and should not be seen as supporting one political position over another. Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Yisrael Meir Lau told Israeli radio he welcomed the idea of meeting the pope at the Western Wall, which stands in East Jerusalem. The Vatican does not recognize Israel's sovereignty over East Jerusalem, an area Israel captured from Jordan during the 1967 Middle East War.

Nun hosting Cuban boy's meeting worked with immigrants

MIAMI (CNS) — When the Justice Department called on Dominican Sister Jeanne O'Laughlin to host a meeting in Miami between 6-year-old Elian Gonzalez and his Cuban grandmothers, it picked a woman with a long history of handling delicate immigration problems. The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service Jan. 25 got U.S. relatives of the boy to agree to let him meet with his grandmothers from Cuba on a neutral site, the home of the 70-year-old Catholic nun. Sister O'Laughlin is in her 19th year as president of Barry University.

Pope clears way for Pope John XXIII's beatification

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, recognizing as miraculous a healing of an Italian nun, cleared the way for the beatification of Pope John XXIII.

Sister Caterina Capitani, a member of the Daughters of Charity, attended the Jan. 27 Vatican session at which the pope recognized her healing as a miracle attributed to the intervention of Pope John.

The decree clears the way for the beatification of Pope John, who served as pontiff from 1958 to 1963. Although the Vatican has not announced a date for the ceremony, officials have said Sept. 3 is the most likely date.

Another miracle occurring after the beatification would be needed before Pope John could be canonized.

Sister Capitani was dying from complications following stomach surgery in 1966 when she prayed to Pope John to help save her. She said she saw the pope smiling and heard him say, "Be calm, I am here."

The nun, who is now based in Naples, told Italian media that she was healed instantaneously.

Archbishop Jose Saraiva Martins, prefect of the Congregation for Sainthood Causes, told Pope John Paul it was fitting to publish the decree in Pope John's case on the heels of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity.

It was Pope John who, in 1960, created the Vatican's office for promoting Christian unity, the archbishop said.

"During his missions in Bulgaria and Turkey" as a Vatican diplomat, the future pope's "personal contact with so many brothers and sisters not in full communion with the Catholic Church generated in him a categorical commitment to recovering the unity lost over the centuries," Archbishop Saraiva Martins said.

Born in Sotto il Monte in 1881, Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli was one of 13 children. He entered the minor seminary at the age of 11 and was sent to Rome to study at the age of 19.

He was ordained to the priesthood in 1904 and after several years as secretary to the bishop of Bergamo, he was called to the Vatican. In 1925 he began serving as a Vatican diplomat, first being posted to Bulgaria, then to Greece and Turkey and, finally, to France. He was named a cardinal and patriarch of Venice in 1953. ▼

Newspaper series on priests with AIDS stirs controversy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (CNS) — A three-day series on Catholic priests with AIDS by The Kansas City Star has sparked wide controversy and criticism.

The series, begun Jan. 30, ended Feb. 1 with a long story revealing that AIDS was the cause of death last year of a prominent local Jesuit, Father Thom Savage, president of Rockhurst College in Kansas City.

The Catholic Key, Kansas City-St. Joseph diocesan newspaper, said that was "a fact known only to Father Savage's family until the Star report."

Priests contacted by The Catholic Key questioned several aspects of the series, which said that priests' deaths from AIDS are at least four times the rate of the general populace.

The series called into question "church doctrine" on homosexuality, AIDS and the celibate priesthood. In a sidebar commentary on the series, Star editor and vice president Mark Zieman described AIDS in the priesthood as "a question that strikes straight at the heart of church doctrine."

"He's just dead wrong about that," said Father Paul Turner, pastor of St. John Francis Regis Parish in Kansas City. "The central doctrines are that Jesus is the Son of God, that Jesus is present in the Eucharist and so on. These are the things we hold most dear in our church. I hope the media are aware of that."

Jesuit Father Thomas Reese, editor of America magazine in New York, said the reference to priests having AIDS at four times the rate of the general population — a figure widely picked up by wire services and other media — "is skewed" since priests are all adult males.

According to figures from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, the incidence of AIDS among adult males is roughly five times that among adult women. Father Reese said the series used the comparison with the general populace four times and only once compared priests' deaths from AIDS with those of other adult males.

On the whole, however, Father Reese said the treatment of statistics in the series seemed "pretty even-handed."

Father Patrick Rush, Kansas City-St. Joseph diocesan vicar general, deplored the "inferential reporting" in the series.

In a statement Jan. 29, he said, "Quite simply, HIV-AIDS affects us all and poses a health crisis nationally and internationally.

"With 47,000 Catholic priests in America, the number of HIV-AIDS deaths of ordained clergy pale in comparison to the tidal wave in our country and throughout the world," he added. "Selecting and publicizing a few facts about a few priests casts a shadow on the ministry of all Catholic priests."

Ned McGrath, Detroit archdiocesan communications director, seconded Father Rush's remarks and said news reports about the series appearing in Michigan could leave the mistaken impression "that the Catholic Church has been 'quiet' or 'behind the times' on the issue."

He cited numerous local and national church initiatives to address AIDS since the 1980s, including the U.S. bishops' 1987 statement on a Gospel response to the AIDS crisis.

In Kansas City, Father Norman Rotert, former vicar general and now pastor of Visitation Parish, described the series as "sensationalized."

"It appears that the Star is going for a journalistic award," he said. "If they are using the priesthood to win an award, then I resent it very much. There isn't any question that it calls the character of every priest into question and invites the general public to call the character of priests into question."

Father Joseph Cisetti, associate director of vocations, and Father Don Farnan, pastor of St. Louis Parish and vocations director from 1991 to 1997, took issue with the series' contention that seminarians receive inadequate training and counseling on sexuality.

Father Farnan, who was ordained in 1987, said the AIDS issue was new when he was a seminarian, but it was openly discussed.

"When I first heard about AIDS I was in the seminary," he said. "At that time, the whole thing was new. People were asking questions such as, 'Should we drink from the same cup?' — practical things like that. I don't think the church or anybody else knew how to deal with those questions at that time."

Father Cisetti said that prospective candidates for the seminary undergo an extensive application process that includes counseling on celibacy and sexuality. "The application process and the seminary formation process (on those issues) is much more sophisticated than it was in the past," he said.

Father Turner said the Star missed the mark when it attempted to explain celibacy as a doctrine of the church.

"Celibacy is certainly a spiritual discipline that we accept and embrace in our church. But it is not what I would call a central doctrine," he said. "The Catholic Church accepts celibacy for its priests because it has been a time-tested spiritual discipline that has proved useful for priests in their ministry as a way that they can hold society to a higher standard, to lift people up to think beyond what this world has to offer and to the promises of the next world.

"That element," he added, "is important to an understanding of celibacy and it is evaded in the article."

Benedictine Father Benedict Neenan, president/rector of Conception Seminary College in Conception, about 90 miles north of Kansas City, took issue with the series' repeated characterizations of seminaries as places that ignore sex education.

He said sexuality and celibacy are extensively explored as part of character formation.

"What seminarians learn about integrating sex into their character and identity is far more advanced than is available elsewhere on the college level, and certainly more advanced than in the general population," he said. "What society does is to expose people to sexual activity and give them permission to explore."

He said the comments on inadequate seminary sex education in the Star "focused on the '60s and came from people who are practicing homosexuals."

"We've come a long way from the 1960s," he said. "What was taught and not taught about sexuality then was no different in the seminaries than in regular colleges."

Msgr. Francis J. Maniscalco, secretary for communications of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said, "The seminary I went to made sure priests knew the facts of life."

He said when he was in philosophy and theology studies in 1965-71, "the seminarians themselves wanted to discuss priesthood and sexuality. ... In that era so many priests were leaving to get married, you couldn't avoid" those issues.

Msgr. Maniscalco called the series "regrettable," saying its extensive coverage of "a concern with a small segment of priests" turned it into "a judgment on priests in general" and a questioning of priestly celibacy.

He suggested that there would have been no such series without the element of interest in whether priests sin — if AIDS were not transmitted primarily by sexual activity and priests did not promise to live celibate lives. "It's the 'Elmer Gantry' syndrome — when the preacher sins, it's a bigger story," he said.

"We are sinners, but that does not diminish the value of the commitment made — and lived — by many priests," he said. "It seems to me the vast majority of priests are trying to live out faithfully" their promise of celibacy.

He also questioned the use of comparisons of priests' deaths from AIDS with those in the general population, saying a comparison with other unmarried adult males would provide a more valid statistical basis. He also saw a "spin" factor in comparing deaths of priests from AIDS over a period of years with the current number of priests, rather than the much larger figure of the total number of priests that there were in that time period.

While the Star did give "some nuancing" to some of its comparisons, he said, other news agencies picked up "only the bare bones."

"Once it takes flight, the nuances get lost. That's what happens when a story goes national," he said. ▼

The leaven that is powerfully energetic

By LAWRENCE S. CUNNINGHAM
Catholic News Service

The seemingly magical power of a small amount of leaven to change a great mass of dough provided the New Testament writers with a ready image.

Leaven was a negative image both in Mark (8:15, casting out the leaven of Pharisees) and in Paul (1 Corinthians 5:6-8, casting out the old leaven for the new).

Leaven also was used both in the synoptic writers (Matthew 13:13) and Paul (Galatians 5:9) to indicate the Gospel's power to "leaven" a greater whole.

The church's preaching tradition adopted leaven as an image for the Gospel's transformative power.

Of course, there is a temptation to trivialize this powerful image, as if it were an abstract slogan for letting one's "little light shine," whereas leaven in the Old Testament was thought of as a living thing full of energy and transforming power.

The issue is how a Christian or a small Christian community becomes leaven for the larger culture.

We might answer by thinking of the Christian life in terms of an ever-widening circle. The circle is tightest in what we might call our intimate community of family, friends and local neighborhood. The leavening process begins there when individuals act to advance God's reign in small concrete ways: by reconciling enemies, caring for the needy, nourishing the life of prayer, nourishing ourselves on the Word of God.

We might adopt as our spiritual strategy the rallying cry of the ecological movement: "Act locally but think globally." The motto means simply this: If we fight pollution in our immediate neighborhood we are inevitably led to ask the larger questions about why pollution exists at all, who contributes to it and so on.

"Act locally but think globally" is, in religious terms, as good a description of true catholicity as one could imagine. Every local church is fully Catholic when the full creed is preached, the sacraments are administered fully and when the local bishop is in union with all other bishops and the bishop of Rome. To be Catholic is to be, at the same time, local and universal.

The conclusion drawn from this is that every small act of being more Christian, of loving God and neighbor or serving our own circle, but with a mind to the larger church, advances the kingdom, builds the church. That is what St. Paul had in mind when he compared believers to a body in which each part acts in harmony with the others (1 Corinthians 12) or a body whose head is Christ (Ephesians 1).

In the concrete, to be leaven in the mass is to take seriously our call to be disciples of Christ in the real circumstances in which we find ourselves. To be spouses, parents, family members and so on after the manner of Christ.

Some people, by God's call, take on universal tasks as they advance the reign of God; most of us find ourselves in more circumscribed circumstances. But it doesn't matter where; all disciples of Jesus must cling to the conviction that our response to Christ's call in the here and now is, in fact, a leavening of the world in which we find ourselves.

The great saints always have been passionately concerned with the task right at hand, with little or no notion of how their fidelity would nourish the larger church.

How could a Therese of Lisieux, an obscure French nun who died in a provincial 19th-century cloister after she barely reached her majority, become a worldwide figure after her death? What she did know was that the way of perfection for her was to do the ordinary in an extraordinary fashion.

In time, that lesson captured the Catholic world's attention to such an extent that Pope John Paul II would name her to the rarest of honors, a doctor of the church.

If a small application of leaven can transform the larger mass for the good of the Kingdom of God, the reverse is also true. It only takes a small infection of the evils of this world to take over a person's soul.

The leaven Jesus speaks of in Matthew must always be kept in tension with that leaven of which Jesus says sternly, "Beware!"

That admonition does not mean people must seal themselves off from the messiness of the world. It does mean that there is a way in which we should situate ourselves within the real world in which we live.

Every authentic conversion carries, simultaneously, an aversion — a turning to and a turning from; a resounding yes and an emphatic no. In "New Seeds of Contemplation," Trappist Father Thomas Merton may have said it most succinctly:

"Keep your eyes clean and your ears quiet and your mind serene. Breathe God's air. Work, if you can, under God's sky."

If we follow that brief injunction, we become the leaven that works upon the whole. Such an act of faith could have consequences far beyond what we can imagine. ▼

"The issue is how a ... Christian community becomes leaven for the larger culture," writes theology professor Lawrence S. Cunningham. "The leavening process begins ... when individuals act to advance God's reign in small concrete ways: by reconciling enemies, caring for the needy, nourishing the life of prayer, nourishing ourselves on the Word of God."

Transforming the ordinary into something life-giving

By MARY JO PEDERSEN
Catholic News Service

A cake of fresh yeast is yucky tan in color and smells awful! When you mix it with warm water, it forms a distasteful looking paste. But oh, what that yeast does to a bowl of flour, salt and a little oil!

My grandmother lived next door, and she baked bread regularly when I was growing up. I remember standing on a chair at her kitchen table "helping" her mix the brown smelly yeast solution into a large bowl of flour.

This was a messy ordeal. I wouldn't touch the gooey mix until she had it mixed together and was kneading it.

After the first kneading, the bread "rested" atop the warm oven. I remember tucking it under a thick towel to keep it warm and undisturbed.

A hot oven would finish the process, with the awful smell of yeast giving way to the unforgettable fragrance of fresh baked bread!

I never hear the parable of the yeast in Matthew's Gospel without thinking of these miraculous transformations in Grandma's kitchen.

As families hear the jubilee-year invitation to become leaven for the world, they might take comfort in knowing that the messy but transforming work of leaven already is occurring in most homes every day.

The family is the first place we learn to be leaven for the world. You can see it in the patient efforts of parents teaching a 2-year-old to share his toys or an aging husband feeding an invalid wife.

Children learn how to be yeast for others by watching their parents work hard for their benefit and spend time with them when they have homework or are sick. Children learn to be yeast by acting responsibly and respectfully toward each other.

Something messy and unjust can be transformed into something beautiful and life-giving by these ordinary actions.

There are plenty of opportunities for becoming leaven in neighborhoods and parishes. Neighbors watch out for each other's mail when someone is traveling, take meals to each other when there is sickness or a crisis; our parish stocks pantry in the city that serves immigrant families and has an organized outreach to families in need.

In baking bread, yeast comprises only 2 percent of the dough's weight. It doesn't take much to do a lot!

For most folks, leavening happens in ordinary ways in messy situations. It occurs quietly, by the power of the Holy Spirit, when people respond to Christ's invitation to transform the ordinary into something life-giving. ▼

Images that penetrate the conscience

By FATHER EUGENE LAVERDIERE, SSS
Catholic News Service

Some images transform the world. I think of a photo depicting an execution in a Vietnamese village. As I remember it, a soldier was shooting a kneeling man point blank in the head.

The photo bridged the distance between America and Southeast Asia. It brought the war to every town and neighborhood.

Everyone could identify personally with the kneeling man as his head recoiled. Around the world, the photo galvanized people of good will against war itself. As a leaven, the photo image penetrated our conscience, proclaiming: "War is not human!"

Some images are like leaven, penetrating culture, as yeast permeates dough.

At the end of World War II, my dad took me to see a newsreel on the opening of the Nazi concentration camps. The camera followed the first Allied soldiers into the camps.

The images of the piles of discarded bodies and the emaciated, naked men and women are still with me. At the time I was only 8.

Like a leaven, these images penetrated every part of my being. I still ask, "How could human beings do this to a human being?"

Christian images and symbols can transform the world.

Christian images and symbols can also transform the world.

Think of crowded churches on Ash Wednesday. We live in a cosmetic, escapist culture. Usually, we do not face our mortality. But on Ash Wednesday, everyone wants to be signed on the forehead with ashes.

The ashes on our foreheads are a countercultural sign, proclaiming to everyone who can see that we are human and mortal, reminding everyone that we were formed from dust and will return to dust.

The New Testament images of Jesus nailed on the cross inspired artists and sculptors for 2,000 years. Their work is a symbol of forgiveness and salvation.

The crucifix evokes Jesus' dying words, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do" (Lk 23:34). The crucifix also evokes the words of the "good" criminal: "Jesus, remember me when you come into your kingdom" (Lk 23:42). Everyone remembers Jesus' response, "I say to you, today you will be with me in paradise" (Lk 23:43).

The image of the infant Jesus lying in a manger also inspired artists from the beginning. Usually, a manger is a place for cattle feed. But Mary placed the Son of God in a manger because there was no place for them in the city of David.

Lying in a manger, Jesus was a homeless child. And in his ministry Jesus was homeless. We read in the Gospel, "Foxes have dens and birds of the sky have nests, but the Son of God has nowhere to rest his head" (Lk 9:58).

Here are two points to reflect upon:

—From the beginning, the church has been a promoter — a builder — of human culture. Promoting artists and writers, the church has been a friend of culture. Think of the Gospels. Think of the earliest art in the Romans' catacombs.

—At the same time, the church called every culture to repent and believe in the Gospel, inspiring artists with the New Testament images of Jesus on the cross or lying in a manger. As such, we can describe the church as countercultural.

In each case, the church calls every one of us to be a genuine human being.

Proclaiming the Gospel with images, the church is calling every culture to be a genuine human culture. Some images can transform the world. The church knows that. ▼

"When you mix (yeast) with warm water it forms a distasteful looking paste. But oh what that yeast does to a bowl of flour, salt and a little oil!" says Mary Jo Pedersen in her article on transforming the ordinary into something life-giving.

Food for Thought

The parable of the leaven in Chapter 13 of Matthew's Gospel is brief — so brief that it might be overlooked or underestimated. It goes like this:

"He spoke to them another parable. 'The kingdom of heaven is like yeast that a woman took and mixed with three measures of wheat flour until the whole batch was leavened."

What is like yeast? The kingdom of heaven.

Parables are thought-provoking. This one makes people think about God's kingdom and how it expands through a great amount of flour ("three measures"). The kingdom grows.

The parable often is thought-provoking because it prompts Christians to reflect upon themselves as "yeast" meant to work within the world, furthering the kingdom's growth. But how?

Are we meant to make the world a better place? And what if it doesn't seem to get better, at least not in some important ways?

What is the "measure" of our success as "yeast"?

The parable, depicting God's kingdom as a powerful, expansive presence, can give people hope. And hope is not an idle virtue. We have the option to leaven hope (and faith, and love) into the world around us.

I spoke today with my friend who suffers with chronic pain. I'm sure from the stories he has told me across the past several years that his pain and stress would allow him to identify strongly with Job and all of his trials.

"I have been assigned months of misery, and troubled nights have been told off for me," Job says in today's readings. I'm sure my friend has had occasion to pray with Job's words.

Today, though, not a word was said of his pain, though I am sure it is ever present with him. Instead, he spoke of one of his chief passions,

"Yet preaching the gospel is not the subject of a boast; I am under compulsion and have no choice. I am ruined if I do not preach it!"
— 1 Corinthians 9:16

making the Mass available for shut-ins. He has begun videotaping the Mass for people who don't receive the TV stations that carry it. He then makes these tapes available to them. It is one of many ways that my telephone friend seeks to bring the good news to others.

Like Jesus in the reading from Mark for this week, he has a sense of mission that keeps him moving in response to the needs of others. When Jesus arises early in the morning to spend time in prayer, the passage from Mark tells us, it is Simon and his companions who search around for him. When they find him, they tell Jesus, "Everybody is looking for you!"

And Jesus, ignoring what sounds like a concerned upbraiding, replies, "Let us move on to the neighboring villages so that I may proclaim the good news there also. That is what I have come to do."

And so it is with my friend. His mind is fixed on that next thing he can do to help put others in touch with the love of God; what is the next thing he can do to proclaim the good news that God loves us and has redeemed us.

I want to be more like him.

Questions:

Is your mind focused on your problems, or on what you can do to help others know the love of God? Is there one small thing you can do for others that could help you change your focus?

"Grizzly Falls" is tame but wholesome adventure

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — Enraged that her cubs have been taken, a grizzly bear kidnaps a boy from his campground in the tame adventure tale, "Grizzly Falls" (Providence).

The outdoorsy story is framed and narrated by crusty old Harry (Richard Harris) telling his grandchildren about being snatched by a fearsome grizzly many years earlier.

Father and son then head for the Canadian Rockies where dad intends to be the first to capture a grizzly bear alive, thanks to a newfangled anesthetic dart. Hiring Indian tracker Joshua (Tom Jackson) and a few less reputable hunters, the group encounters a grizzly and her two cubs but the dart doesn't take down the massive beast, who escapes. The cubs are caged and taken back to camp, but before dawn mama bear returns. Unable to free her little ones, she drags off Harry who has fainted at sight of the giant roaring over him.

"Grizzly Falls"
Due to brief violence and mild profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A—II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

And so begins the bear-and-boy odyssey as Harry sharpens his survival skills after realizing his abductor means him no harm. Although hampered by a broken arm, his dad and Joshua attempt to follow their trail through the wilderness. This gives dad a chance to express to Joshua his regrets at not being around when his wife needed him and his resolve to make a fresh start with his neglected son if he can be rescued.

Harry, meanwhile has been carrying on one-way conversations as well with his substitute-mother figure who seems to have a precise destination in mind.

As directed by Stewart Raffill, the situations are quite contrived, and viewers are expected to accept that the bear takes the boy hostage in tit-for-tat reprisal. The impressive creature often seems the brightest of the bunch, and it's an easy guess where everything's headed. Plumping up the plot, one of the hunters (Oliver Tobias) so turns on father and son he may as well have been a leftover mustachioed villain from silent-film days.

Nor are possibilities for action-adventure in the wild taken full advantage of, such as scenes with a mountain lion and menacing wolves seem to end too abruptly.

Nonetheless, the scenery is glorious, the youngster appealing and the old-fashioned treatment with its uplifting sentiments do not grate. Overall it is a tame but wholesome adventure. ▼

Compelling documentary tells story of civil rights movement through eyes of martyrs

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — The history of the civil rights movement is told through the eyes of its martyrs in the compelling documentary "Civil Rights Martyrs: Free at Last," airing Thursday, Feb. 10, 9-11 p.m. EST on cable's Learning Channel.

In retelling the stories of their lives and the circumstances of their deaths, "Civil Rights Martyrs" illustrates how each martyr's death pushed the civil rights movement forward.

The documentary, written and produced by Martin Kent, brings out at times the innocence and always the courage these individuals had in standing up for equality, liberty and justice for all.

The viewer learns the stories of these unsung heroes through interviews with surviving relatives and friends, often explicit dramatizations, and historical footage and photographs. One example is Emmett Till, who was killed because of a supposed comment he made to a white woman. His mother's controversial decision to have an open casket showing the brutality her son endured received national attention.

It is chilling to hear Vernon Dahmer's widow discuss how the couple would take turns sleeping at night so they could protect themselves and their family against those who wanted them dead. More horrifying still are the deaths of four innocent young girls trapped in the basement of the 16th Street Baptist Church as Ku Klux Klan members bombed it.

"Civil Rights Martyrs: Free at Last"

Learning Channel

But the victims were not limited to African-Americans. The documentary also highlights the murders of two Jewish men, a Christian preacher and a white woman who gave their lives in the fight for a better America.

A common thread throughout the documentary is that most of the killers were set free despite overwhelming evidence. Some of them were brought to trial not for murder, but for violating the Civil Rights Act. And for many of the survivors, justice would not be served for years to come.

It seems inconceivable that men could have such hatred in their hearts to actually perpetrate these acts of cruelty. As the Rev. Jesse Jackson says in the documentary, "It was a time of war."

Of particular note is the thoughtful commentary made by John Lewis, who lived through these historical times and continues to be a civil rights activist.

In light of the recent controversy over the Confederate flag, "Civil Rights Martyrs: Free at Last" presents a time in American history that left both scars and triumphs which still resonates today. This would be a good choice for parents and adolescents to view together and discuss. ▼

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope urges respect for nature, reassures Seton Hall visitors

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II called for respect for the environment, reminding Christians of the presence of the transcendent in God's creation.

"Nature becomes a gospel that speaks to us about God," he said at his Jan. 26 general audience.

After his catechesis, the pope told 14 pilgrims associated with Seton Hall University in South Orange, N.J., that he was praying for students caught in a dormitory fire at the school.

The Jan. 19 fire left three students dead and another 58 injured.

The Seton Hall pilgrims were among 7,000 attendees who packed the Vatican's Paul VI Audience Hall to listen to the pope's weekly teaching.

Continuing with the theme of the Blessed Trinity, which was also the focus of his Jan. 19 general audience, the pope said that while the act of creation is most associated with God the Father, all three persons of the Trinity are present in nature.

"The glory of the Trinity — we can say with the Christian tradition — is resplendent in creation," said the pope.

Quoting from the Old and New Testaments, the pope emphasized the roles of Son and Spirit in the act of creation and called on all people to marvel at the final result.

"Faced with the glory of the Trinity in the creation, mankind must contemplate, sing, rediscover awe," he said.

Contemplation also signifies listening, said the pope, and the faithful must heed the message that the creation bears.

"Our discovery of God's transcendent presence in the created world should lead us to take greater care of our natural environment and inspire us to work to establish the harmony which God intended from the beginning," he said.

The Jewish people understood this fundamental bond between humans and nature, said the pope, referring to their tradition of letting fields lie fallow during jubilee years.

"If nature is not violated or humiliated, it returns as the sister of mankind," he said.

Pope criticizes relativism, underscores unique role of Christ

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Criticizing the spread of a "relativistic mentality" in some theological circles, Pope John Paul II underscored the unique role of Christ and the church in human salvation. "In recent years a mentality has emerged in theological and ecclesial circles which tends to relativize Christ's revelation and his unique and universal mediation in the order of salvation," the pope said Jan. 28 during an audience with participants in the plenary assembly of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. The same mentality, the pope added, tends "to reformulate the necessity of Christ's church as a universal sacrament of salvation."

The stewardship of the DSA

I suppose that I should keep a hat rack in my office because my position as Associate Director of Development calls me to wear several different hats throughout the year. The seasonal hat that I am currently wearing is that of promoting the Diocesan Support Appeal. The hat that is most comfortable on my head is that of promoting "Stewardship as a Way of Life" throughout the diocese. There are several other hats, too, and I often find myself wearing all of them at once. It's my stewardship hat and my DSA hat that seem to fit comfortably on my head at the same time. I see the DSA as one way of responding to Jesus' call to discipleship — a call carried out through stewardship of time, talent and treasure.

While wearing my DSA hat, I often receive letters and phone calls from parishioners who want to know, "What's in this appeal for me and my parish?" I can often point directly to services provided by the Office of Faith Formation for catechists, youth ministers, RCIA teams, and lay ministers. I may mention that their Permanent Deacon receives ongoing formation through the programs offered by the Permanent Diaconate office. The Office of Justice and Peace has offered workshops in each region of the diocese as they work to carry out the challenge of the pastoral, "Of One Mind and Heart." I might mention the assistance their parish receives from the Hispanic Ministry as they seek to welcome and minister to their Hispanic brothers and sisters. The "50+" group in their parish is eligible for assistance through the Elder Ministry program. I even mention the fact that many people in their parish, unknown to others, might have received help from Catholic Social Services.

However, if I answer that same question wearing my stewardship hat, I might be more inclined to mention giving to the DSA out of gratitude for God's grace-of-giving because it is a way of giving back to God just a portion of what He has given. It is a way of being a good steward of God's gifts. Furthermore, contributing to the DSA is a means living the Corporal Works of Mercy. To borrow a phrase from my pastor, "it is a way of serving Jesus incognito." Jesus simply said, "I was hungry and you fed me. I was in prison and you visited me...mourning and you comforted me." Giving to the DSA involves reaching out beyond the boundaries of parish or mission and serving the needs of the greater diocesan community.

While wearing my DSA hat over the past five years, I've had the privilege of meeting hundreds of people who have been helped by DSA funded ministries. I have cried with those who were struggling and suffering, laughed and rejoiced with those who were celebrating. I every case I knew, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that I was in the presence of Jesus. I knew that my gift to the DSA was going to help Jesus incognito, and I was overwhelmed with gratitude for the opportunity to serve Him, ever-present in our midst.

Hispanic Ministry

Hispanics and Catholic Church

Let us continue with some more facts regarding Hispanic Ministry in the U.S. Catholic Church.

Hispanics, it is well known, comprise an ever-increasing share of the U.S. Catholic population. Estimates vary, but it is generally agreed that persons of Hispanic origin comprise between a quarter and a third of those who currently identify themselves as "Catholic."

In addition, because the size of the Hispanic population is increasing rapidly relative to non-Hispanic groups, it is entirely possible that during the first two decades of this century, Hispanics will surpass Blacks as the nation's leading minority group and may also surpass Whites as the dominant ethnic group within the Catholic Church.

Among Hispanic Catholics in particular, but increasingly among non-Hispanic Catholics as well, the idea that Hispanics are, in effect, "half the Church" is becoming both a widely accepted (if imprecise) statistical fact as well as a rallying cry for change.

A January 1998 study, commissioned by the Secretariat for Hispanic Affairs of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, finds the following regarding Hispanic Ministry Offices in all the dioceses of the United States:

On the plus side...

a) 44 Hispanic Ministry offices have been created or upgraded in the past nine years. Most of the new offices have their own budgets and have access to the Bishop directly or indirectly through an Episcopal vicar or through another high official in the chancery.

b) Hispanic ministry budgets have increased in over 80% of the dioceses with a history of Hispanic Ministry.

c) Hispanic ministry staffs have nearly doubled since 1990.

d) Hispanic ministry directors are more educated and professional than ever before.

e) About 55% of the Hispanic ministry directors say their diocese is providing "a lot" of support for their work.

On the down side...

a) Ten or more Hispanic Ministry departments or offices have been dismantled or downgraded since 1990.

b) Most Hispanic Ministry offices remains subsumed under another diocesan department and are supervised by that department's director.

I hope this has been helpful.

That special strength: Patience

Gloria Chisholm writes in "Parents of Teenagers" about a trip to the grocery store with her two teens who were battling nonstop. Her son had called his sister a dork, and her daughter had yelled at him to shut up "for the hundredth time." Gloria felt irritation turning to anger. She had to get away to calm down.

She ordered her son to go over by the carrots and her daughter to go over by the broccoli — "NOW!" The writer herself ran over to the eggplants, where she "took ten deep breaths and prayed like mad that God would help me stay in control enough not to bounce every eggplant off some teenager's head."

The silent prayer and minute's "time out" restored her self-control. Gloria didn't let herself scream, "You stupid, inconsiderate kids are driving me crazy!" Practicing patience enabled her to restrain herself, rather than say things she knew she would regret.

When we are angry, we may feel like we are ready to explode. We have to control that first impulse long enough to let our good sense and our concern for others and ourselves step in and say, "Hold it! You don't really want to do that."

The late great theologian Bernard Häring observed, "Patience with yourself and with others are twins that should never be separated. Each one has to be understood as a share of the unfathomable patience of God with us all, with me, and with you."

In his "Virtues of an Authentic Life," Häring recalls a psychotherapist who sent one of his patients to Häring in the hope of lifting her spirits. After conversing a while, the priest said, "May I ask you a question that I find embarrassing? Do you sometimes slap yourself in the face, perhaps in front of a mirror?"

Astounded, she asked, "Whatever made you come up with that question? I've never told anyone about it before. When I get really impatient with myself, I sometimes go through this ritual of self-punishment."

Häring's solution for the woman was to develop a grateful admiration for God's patience with us. "Imitate his patience and realize that despite all our weaknesses, He loves and treasures each one of us."

St. Francis de Sales put it similarly: "Be patient with everyone, but above all with yourself. I mean, do not be disturbed because of your imperfections, and always rise up bravely after a fall."

Sadly, lots of people confuse patience with weakness, with being a doormat. Hardly. Being patient does not mean putting up with everything without complaint. We often need to speak out. Patience is the strength that lets us speak with courtesy and kindness instead of sarcasm and abuse, even when we are angry.

Here are some techniques for calming down when you are angry: Pray for the strength not to lash out. Think about something else. Picture your favorite vacation spot. If possible, go out for a little while. Work off tension by taking a brisk walk. And, oh yes, count to 10 — or 100 — before you speak.

Lashing out does nothing to solve problems. It just causes ill will. And the stress can hurt you. Calming down first will help you speak in a more rational, constructive way with whomever made you angry, so you can explain why certain behavior or words upset you, and what you think needs to be done.

St. Teresa of Avila urged: "Let nothing disturb you; let nothing dismay you; all things pass; God never changes. Patience achieves everything. Whoever has God lacks nothing. God alone suffices."

"Open Wide the Doors to Christ"

In this Great Jubilee of the Year 2000, I reflect on the beginning of Jesus Christ's ministry when, in the temple, He read from the Prophet Isaiah. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to bring good tidings to the afflicted; he has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those who are bound; to proclaim a year of the Lord's favor." (61:1-2)

As disciples of Jesus, we are called to follow in his footsteps. We are called to reach out to the poor, the brokenhearted, and the captives. We must "Open Wide the Doors to Christ" and serve all who seek him in their lives. The ministries funded by the DSA provide a tremendous opportunity to open those doors for others, and your contribution to the appeal makes you an instrument of God bringing people to Christ and serving the Christ in them.

As your bishop, I have been touched by the many joys, sorrows and challenges experienced by the faithful of our diocese. When I meet people who are trying to cope with a family crisis or the death of a loved one, I am grateful for the counselors at Catholic Social Services who are helping to bring hope back into their lives. I have seen the joy that a child brings into the home of an adoptive couple, and I bless God for the Adoption Program of CSS.

I am thankful for the work of our Hispanic, African American and Hmong Ministries in addressing the needs and challenges of the growing multicultural population of the diocese.

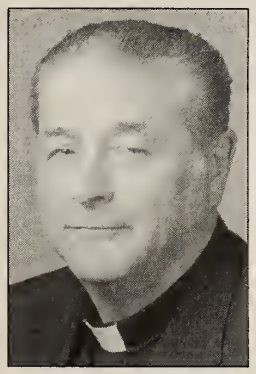
There are thousands of children, youth and college students in the diocese looking for answers to their faith questions. Our educational ministries funded by the DSA provide workshops for catechists and campus ministers who will return to their parishes and colleges to share the Good News with others.

Mother Theresa of Calcutta taught us to find Jesus in the poorest of the poor. He waits in the least of our brothers and sisters, waits there to be loved, waits for us to open the doors to our hearts.

As I travel to the parishes and missions of our diocese, I see countless men and women who have opened their lives to Christ. I see good and faithful people feeding the hungry, visiting the sick and prisoners, lifting up the fallen, and giving hope to those in despair.

Our DSA gives us a way to live out the challenge of our faith in this Jubilee Year. It is a way to be Jesus for others and to recognize and help the Jesus in our midst. Through the DSA we are able to make Christ present to the world in a real and tangible way. I am confident that the gift you share to the DSA will make a difference in the lives of thousands of people by helping turn a troubled time into a year of the Lord's favor for us all.

Question Corner



FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS Columnist

Does Lutheran-Catholic agreement apply to all Lutherans?

Q. Your column a few weeks ago concerning the agreement on justification between Lutherans and Catholics was enlightening. We do not understand, though, if this refers to all Lutheran churches. Our friends, Missouri Synod Lutherans, tell us the agreement does not pertain to them. Can you explain if this is true?

A. Yours is an excellent question. Many Catholics, especially in the United States, have received similar comments from their Lutheran friends.

The Joint Declaration on Justification, reached in 1998 and signed in October 1999, was between the Catholic Church and the Lutheran World Federation. The federation is an association of Lutheran churches with authority to act on behalf of members in matters committed to it. It represents about 58 million of the 61.5 million Lutherans in the world.

Bishop Christian Krause and Rev. Ishmael Noko, president and general secretary respectively of the LWF, signed the declaration for the Lutherans. Cardinal Edward Cassidy, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, and Bishop Walter Kasper, secretary of the same council, signed for the Catholic Church.

The confusion you experience results from the fact that the LWF represents by far the majority, but not all, Lutheran churches. The largest Lutheran church in the United States, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, has about 5.2 million members and is part of the LWF. It makes up roughly two-thirds of the Lutherans in the United States.

The Lutheran Church Missouri Synod, however, with about 2.6 million members, is the largest Lutheran group in the world not affiliated with the LWF. The next largest Lutheran Church in the United States, the Wisconsin Evangelical Lutheran Synod, has approximately 400,000 members, and also is not affiliated with the world federation.

For this reason, neither the Missouri nor Wisconsin synods were directly involved in the dialogue that preceded the document, nor are they participants in the agreement itself.

Miscarriage and funeral rites

Q. Three years ago, my first pregnancy ended tragically in a miscarriage at home. My husband and I were devastated and were left trying to decide how to humanely dispose of the body. Our parish priest told us that the Catholic Church makes no provision for miscarried babies. Why is there no service of any kind to memorialize our children who die before birth?

A. Perhaps your priest was not aware that Catholic funeral guidelines adapt in several ways to experiences like yours, which unfortunately are not uncommon.

First, full funeral rites may be celebrated for children whose parents intended them to be baptized but who died before baptism. Since there is no requirement that the body be present, a funeral or memorial Mass is totally appropriate after a miscarriage.

Other ceremonies, with prayers and Scripture readings chosen to meet the particular needs of the family and friends, are possible and entirely appropriate. These provisions are explained in the church's "Order of Christian Funerals" in the section on funeral rites for children.

Open your hearts and minds in support of the diocese

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Over the years, many people have selflessly given financial support to the diocese for its many programs and ministries. As people open their hearts and minds to the act of giving, they also open their spirits to Christ and can receive much more in return. The cycle of giving and receiving continues as the 2000 Diocesan Support Appeal rolls around.

As in past years, this year's DSA will provide funding for four main areas of ministry: Catholic Social Services (CSS), Multicultural Ministries, Educational Ministries and the Vocations program. Thirty-five agencies and ministries receive DSA funding

According to Bill Weldon, diocesan chief financial officer, this year's target amount is $3,140,000 — a 6.8 percent increase, or $200,000 more than last year. Three-fourths of the increase will go toward CSS and multicultural ministries.

"Most of the additional funding for CSS will benefit a new economic development initiative, which targets low-income persons in the western counties of our diocese," explained Weldon. "Additional funding for Hispanic evangelization is in direct response to the rapidly-growing Hispanic population in our diocese."

The DSA goal is calculated through account-by-account budgets for each of the agencies and ministries. Two components — program changes and cost increases — are carefully examined when establishing the DSA budget. Each budget item is evaluated and addressed on a case-by-case basis, said Weldon.

"We are all very conscious of the sacrifices people make. We have a responsibility to the people of this diocese to use their gifts as prudently as possible," said Weldon

Monthly financial reports ensure accurate accountability and provide a run-down of each agency's activities.

"Our diocese is a vibrant, growing Church. As the Church grows, so do its needs. This year's DSA will provide funding to support vital services of the Church throughout Western North Carolina," said Weldon. "We greatly appreciate the generosity of all those who support the DSA." ▼

Ministry making strides with diocesan Hispanics

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The number of Hispanics that are moving to this country grows every year. According to figures from the Census Bureau published in "La Noticia," a Spanish language newspaper published in Charlotte, the Hispanic population has grown more than 110 percent in North Carolina since 1990, with an estimated 300,000 Hispanic people living in the state.

An estimated 60,000 people have come to Charlotte in search of jobs and a new life in this state. They bring with them their culture, long-standing traditions and their Catholic religion. Hispanic Ministry serves as a link between the Hispanic community and the diocese. It also functions as a link for those who would not otherwise have a voice.

"We cannot rely on priests, who are so few in number, to do all the work. We need more vocations and people to work with the Hispanic population, those who have learned Spanish and about the community."
— Father Joe Waters of Taylorsville/Dobson

"People have heard that the Charlotte-area economy is booming and offers progress for whomever is able to come and work," said Hilda Gurdian, publisher of "La Noticia." "Some of us have come directly from other states or other countries; we are continuing to grow."

Gurdian, a Venezuela native, attends one of the five weekend Masses at the Charlotte Catholic Hispanic Center. She cites Vincentian Father Vincent Finnerty, diocesan director of Hispanic Ministry and the director of the center, as being an "advocate" for her people.

Father Finnerty not only works in Charlotte at the center but travels all over the diocese to minister to Hispanics in cities and towns. His ministry is based on the June 1998 Diocesan Hispanic Pastoral Plan, which stems from ideas from the National Pastoral Plan for Hispanic Ministry from the Bishops' Committee on Hispanic Affairs of the National Council of Catholic Bishops.

The four areas of concentration include: the promotion of small evangelization communities or neighborhood ministries, team ministry, the promotion of the missionary spirit, which involves targeting those who have strayed away from the Church, and the formation of laity. Hispanic Ministry further divides these areas into 12 concrete commitments.

"When we go into different communities, we look for the local leadership and perform retreats," explained Father Finnerty. "These retreats are instrumental in promoting the whole pastoral and conversion experience. From this, they form small communities and begin visiting in other neighborhoods."

This year, 19 retreats are planned — 10 adult and 9 youth — which will take place at Holy Family Church in Clemmons. The youth retreats will take place in Hendersonville, Monroe and Greensboro.

"It is inspiring to see so many young men and women who come here and are inspired and enriched by their experience," said Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church. "I consider it a privilege to put our buildings at the service of this wonderful work being done for the Hispanic community throughout our diocese."

One of the center's most community projects is the planned construction of a new multi-purpose building, which will serve as a larger meeting place for the Hispanic community.

Father Joe Waters, administrator of Holy Trinity Mission in Taylorsville and Sagrado Corazon de Jesus Mission in Dobson, works with Hispanics in his area and also in Boone, Newton and Mount Airy. He sharpened his Spanish and learned about Hispanic life from his work in Mexico and Peru.

He has visited farm workers during the summer to encourage them to go to church and has taken people to the doctor and served as a translator. He also conducts marriage preparation classes. He wants the people to do the work of ministering to others in the community through retreats and Bible groups.

"The ministry is important because it helps them to come to know their faith," said Father Waters. "However, we cannot rely on priests, who are so few in number, to do all the work. We need more vocations and people to work with the Hispanic population, those who have learned Spanish and about the community."

Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, coordinator of the Hickory Vicariate Hispanic Ministry, is involved in a Spanish radio program currently in the works. On Saturdays starting in February from 12 to 1 p.m. on 1170 AM on Claremont, the vicariate is sponsoring programming in Spanish, featuring the community.

The topics include reflections on the Sunday reading, income tax preparation, parental information and other important topics of which many Hispanics may not be aware. The programming had previously been sponsored by the diocesan Hispanic Ministry Office.

"This is a channel to advertise what is being done in different parishes and to establish a Catholic presence," said Sister Andrea.

"The Hispanic presence is seen as a blessing, and we can learn much from their community. They bring another way of practicing out faith, which is very incarnational," she continued. "The parishes need to work on becoming environments where 'inculturation,' the opportunity for expression of worship with a mixture of cultures, can take place."

Sister Andrea said that there are many needs within the Hispanic community, which extend beyond their faith, including a lack of transportation, language problems, unemployment and other problems.

"We are a growing community, and because we are new, there are so many things that need to be done. There is a need for education, better health care, childcare, a need for religion and a new church," added Gurdian.

Many agree that a key way to strengthen Hispanic Ministry is through communication.

Luis Wolf, administrator of the Catholic Hispanic Center in Charlotte, said that the pastors of the various churches are learning more about Hispanic culture and how they can integrate without losing their identity.

"We need more bilingual and bicultural priests," said Father Finnerty. "In general, the pastors have been open to Hispanic Ministry," he added, and said there is a continued need to understand the culture as an expression of Hispanics' faith.

"There is a positive spirit in the Hispanic Catholic community," Father Finnerty said, noting that while each parish is different, there is a spirit of collaboration and living the faith among the people that creates "a social and spiritual environment." ▼

World Catholic population up, number of priests rises

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The number of Catholics reached 1.045 billion, about 17.4 percent of the global population, the Vatican reported. The statistics, from 1998, were included in an updated pontifical yearbook presented to Pope John Paul II on Feb. 5. The number of Catholics represented a new high, up about 40 million from 1997, and the percentage of the global population marked a slight increase, too. The Americas, considered as a single continent by the Vatican, had the strongest concentration of Catholics in the general population, with 63.1 percent. It was followed by Europe with 41.4 percent, Oceania with 26.9 percent, Africa with 15.6 percent and Asia with 3.1 percent.

Mexican church leaders welcome police raid ending strike

MEXICO CITY (CNS) — Mexican church leaders expressed approval of a federal police raid that ended a nine-month strike by students at Latin America's largest university. About 2,500 police wearing full riot gear but under orders not to use firearms entered the main campus of the National Autonomous University of Mexico at dawn Feb. 6. Students who had occupied the university's main campus since April 20 did not resist arrest and were led to buses that carried them to various city jails. The strike affected almost 270,000 students in the university and in the UNAM's network of senior high schools in Mexico City. Cardinal Norberto Rivera Carrera of Mexico City expressed satisfaction that the UNAM installations were recovered in "a peaceful way."

Church leaders demand end to Canadian 'head tax' on immigrants

TORONTO (CNS) — Canadian church leaders demanded an end to a federal government "head tax," saying it imposes heavy financial burdens on refugees and immigrants entering the country. The "Right of Landing" fee, established by the government's citizenship and immigration department in 1995, levies a $975 charge on every refugee claimant and immigrant. "This tax establishes a 'welcome debt' for refugee and immigrant families coming to Canada," said Robert Filart, coordinator of the Toronto Archdiocese's refugee sponsorship program. Although the landing fee allows for government loans and repayment plans, Filart said this does little to ease a struggling family's integration into Canadian society.

Feast of the Presentation

Jose and Blanca Garcia prepare a Christ figurine to mark the Feast of the Presentation at their family store in central Mexico City Feb. 11. Mexicans celebrate the day by dressing the nativity figurine and taking it to Mass. The feast marks the ceremony in which Christ was brought to the temple and Mary was purified after his birth.

Cardinal, Vatican official differ on church response to problems

ROME (CNS) — In an unusual public exchange with a leading Vatican official, a French cardinal has suggested that the church show more openness as it confronts modern doctrinal and disciplinary problems. Cardinal Pierre Eyt of Bordeaux said that while today's lay Catholics have ideas to contribute on questions of theology, politics, bioethics and other issues, the hierarchy's dialogue with them seems to be going nowhere. He wondered whether the church might not expose its concepts more to modern ways of thinking. Writing in the French Catholic newspaper La Croix, Cardinal Eyt directed his comments to Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, of which Cardinal Eyt is also a member. Responding in the same newspaper, Cardinal Ratzinger said he thought so-called "institutional" problems in the church were the reflection of a deeper crisis of faith.

Seton Hall fire believed to be deliberately set, newspaper says

NEWARK, N.J. (CNS) — Two weeks after a dormitory fire that killed three students and injured 58 others at Seton Hall University, investigators believe the fire was deliberately set, The Star-Ledger newspaper of Newark reported Feb. 2. The report said investigators were seeking four suspects and were focusing on a dispute between students in the freshman dormitory and three non-students who were asked to leave the dorm less than an hour before the Jan. 19 fire broke out. "This was not an accidental fire. Someone started the fire," said an anonymous official quoted in the newspaper.

Maryland firm stops selling body parts from abortions

BALTIMORE (CNS) — A decision by a Maryland company to stop procuring and distributing body parts obtained from aborted fetuses is drawing praise from pro-life supporters who had protested the practice as abhorrent and inhumane. The Anatomic Gift Foundation, based in Laurel, announced in late December it would "no longer procure or provide human tissue derived from elective pregnancy terminations for research and education." State Sen. Martin G. Madden, a Republican representing the district where the company is located, said he was "very pleased" with the company's decision and hopes that it does not change that stand.

Death threats continue against Mexican church groups

MEXICO CITY (CNS) — Death threats continued in January against members of two prominent church-run human rights groups noted for their defense of indigenous people in southern Mexico, the groups said. In Mexico City, the Jesuit-backed Miguel Augustin Pro human rights center said Feb. 1 its lawyers who defend peasant leaders in the state of Guerrero found two threatening letters inside a desk within their offices Jan. 31. The center said the threats appeared to be related to its investigation of the April murders of three indigenous men and the rapes of two women by soldiers in Llano Largo, Guerrero.

Mercy Sister Mary Barbara Sullivan remembered for service

BELMONT — Sister Mary Barbara Sullivan, RSM, 74, died Saturday, Feb. 5, 2000 at Mercy Hospital. She was received as a Sister of Mercy on Aug. 15, 1950, and was in her 49th year as a Sister of Mercy.

The wake service was held at 7 p.m., Monday, Feb. 7, 2000, in the Cardinal Gibbons Chapel at Sacred Heart Convent, Belmont. Visitation followed the wake. A Mass of Christian Burial was held at 11 a.m., Tues., Feb. 8, 2000 at the Cardinal Gibbons Chapel with burial following at the Belmont Abbey Cemetery.

Sister Mary Barbara Sullivan, RSM

Sister Mary Barbara was born Aug. 7, 1925 in Corinth, Mississippi. Her birth name was Mary Frances Sullivan; she took the name Sister Mary Barbara upon entering the religious order of the Sisters of Mercy on Aug. 2, 1949.

Sister Mary Barbara studied voice and piano at Salem College, Winston-Salem. She was a graduate of Belmont Abbey College and the Mercy Hospital School of Nursing, receiving her degree as a registered nurse in 1947. A navy veteran, Sister Barbara served in the U.S. Naval Nurse Corps during 1948 and 1949. She went on to receive her Master's Degree in Education Administration from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1965.

Her first ministry assignments include supervisory posts in orthopedic and surgical nursing at St. Joseph's Hospital, Asheville, NC and Mercy Hospital, Charlotte, NC. She was later a teacher and principal at various North Carolina Catholic schools and, for many years, served as educational consultant to her religious community.

In 1970 she served as the acting Executive Secretary, Elementary Department, for the National Catholic Educational Association in Washington, D.C. In 1971-1972, she served as the first Director of Field Services for the NCEA, as well as the Director of Adult Education.

Later, Sister Barbara held several positions in the Diocese of Charlotte. She served as Coordinator of Federal Programs and Special Projects and, from 1984-1989, was Superintendent of Catholic schools. During her tenure as superintendent, all Catholic schools in the Diocese of Charlotte became certified by the North Carolina Department of Education.

In 1977, Sister Barbara became the first religious sister to hold a political office in North Carolina when she was elected to the Belmont City Council. In 1979 she was again elected to public office, serving a term as Mayor Pro Tem of the City of Belmont. During her term in office, she spearheaded the building of 32 units of low rent housing for the elderly.

In 1992, Sister Barbara assumed the role of President and Chief Executive Officer of Catherine's House, a transitional shelter for women and children. At Catherine's House, she devoted her energies untiringly to the residents.

By the time she retired in 1998, Catherine's House, under Sister Barbara's leadership, had provided food, clothing, shelter and opportunities for spiritual, emotional and intellectual growth to over 360 women and children.

Until her death, Sister Barbara continued her housing ministry as a volunteer paralegal advocate at Legal Services of the Southern Piedmont, helping families about to be evicted in the Gaston County area.

Sister Barbara belonged to numerous national, state and local educational associations, serving in 1972-1973 as the southern states' representative to the National Catholic Education Association. She served on many Boards of Directors, including the Charlotte Diocesan Board of Education, Sacred Heart Campus School Board of Education, Sacred Heart College Board of Trustees, Southern Piedmont Health Systems Agency and South Point Lifesaving Crew.

Sister Mary Barbara Sullivan, RSM, died at age 74 after nearly 50 years of service to the Sisters of Mercy in North Carolina.

Sister Barbara was also a Board member for the Gaston County Council on Aging, the state and local division of the American Cancer Society, House of Mercy, Legal Services of the Southern Piedmont and the NC Low Income Housing Coalition. In addition, Sister Barbara chaired the Belmont Housing Authority Board of Directors and served on the Editorial Advisory Board of the magazine "Highlights for Children".

In spite of her humility, Sister Barbara's efforts in education and her unflagging vigilance and advocacy on behalf of women and children who are homeless were recognized by numerous nominations and awards. She was twice nominated for the Gaston County Outstanding Woman of the Year award and nominated for the Distinguished Women of North Carolina award and the TBS/Sprint Century of Women Special Achievement award. She was awarded the NCEA Presidential Award for Outstanding Service to Catholic Education in 1975. In 1995 she received the prestigious Carpathian Award for Personal Advocacy, which is awarded by North Carolina Equity, Working for North Carolina Women and Families. In 1998, Sister Barbara was named Belmont's Citizen of the Year.

Sister Barbara's passing is a tremendous loss to her family, her religious community and the civic community she so tirelessly served. She will be remembered as an excellent piano player and singer. She was also an avid sports fan who had a particular fondness for UNC-Chapel Hill basketball games.

Sister Mary Barbara was the daughter of the late John Daniel Sullivan and Julia Barbara Flowers. She was the stepdaughter of the late J.W. Jamison. She is survived by her sister, Anne Hackney of Myrtle Beach, SC; her nieces, Jenny Taylor of Myrtle Beach, SC and Babs Smith of Durham, NC; her nephew, Sam Hackney, III of Monroe, NC; her grandnephews, Tommy Orr of Charlotte, NC, J.J. Taylor, II, Jason M. Taylor and Stephen C. Hackney; and her grandnieces, Jennifer Taylor Maher and Samantha Anne Hackney.

Memorials may be made to Catherine's House, P.O. Box 1633, Belmont, NC 28012 or Legal Services of the Southern Piedmont, 111-A Third Ave., Suite 200, Gastonia, NC 28052. ♥

"It is the primary way to be in worship, and you have to be prepared."

Father DeAngelo's message was part of this year's diocesan retreat for college students in Catholic campus ministry. The gathering at Camp Thunderbird focused on the who, what, when, where and how of Catholic faith, particularly as experienced by college-aged students.

The retreat included group and individual prayer, the sacrament of reconciliation, the celebration of Mass, and a message from Bishop William G. Curlin.

Colleen McDermott, diocesan director of campus ministry, said the focus of this year's retreat results from an effort to combine Catholic theology with lived experience.

"A retreat like this needs to be internal and integrated for college students, so that they're able to express and understand it in their own spirituality," said McDermott, who met last fall with campus ministers and past retreatants to discuss new possibilities for the 2000 retreat.

"Out of that," she said, "came what's really essential: Who are we? What does the church teach about human dignity? Where are we going? When are we living out our faith? How do we live this out?"

McDermott said discussions like the one Father DeAngelo led give college students the information about faith they seek — and often lack. "So many of our students are very spiritual and have a strong desire to know about faith, yet they are often uncatechized," she said. "As I meet people, I see a recognition that there is a search for Catholic identity and what that means. There is that strong desire to be involved, and a strong need for community."

In a conversation with students that was part history, part catechism, Father DeAngelo explained how the elements of the Mass — prayer, music, candles, the altar, the liturgies of the Word and the Eucharist — blend to present an opportunity for sacred union with God.

Noting that the sacrament of Eucharist is central to the Mass — and to the Catholic faith — Father DeAngelo urged his audience to have the greatest respect and reverence for the liturgy. "The Eucharist is the body, blood, soul and divinity of Jesus Christ, our savior," he said. "You want miracles, folks? It happens every day in Mass."

Father DeAngelo said the Mass is about relationship: relationship with God, with family and friends, with strangers, with ancestors in faith. At the Mass, he added, Catholics offer all of life's struggles and joys to God as they continue in their journey of faith.

"It's not just you and me — it's us and the Lord Jesus," Father DeAngelo said. "When you come to church, this is the best thing to do. This is where we're real; this is where we're really real, because it's all of us coming together.

"Every action that we do is a sign of unity with one another in Christ."

For Nadra Wagner, a sophomore at North Carolina A & T University in Greensboro, Father DeAngelo's presentation — and the entire retreat — was a learning experience.

"It educated me a little bit more about the meaning behind the Mass and really what it means to be Catholic — that coming together as a community and as a church," she said. "I've been Catholic all my life, and I've never really stopped to think about and understand what each part of the Mass truly means."

As a participant in the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults process, J.R. Myrick appreciated the chance to examine the Mass step-by-step. "It was a very interesting perspective," said Myrick, a freshman at Belmont Abbey College who will enter the church at this year's Easter vigil. "Knowing is so much better than not really understanding. One of the worst things there is to experience is to be lost.

"To have Father Jude look over it, you understand where it all comes from, why you're there at church and why you're doing what you're doing."

One of four retreat coordinators and a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Janet Price said Father DeAngelo's message left her "with a better concept of the Mass in general — what it means to be together."

"It helps to meet other people who are Catholic — to relate to them, to talk with them, to share experiences," said Price, who has been involved in retreats in high school and college as both a participant and a team member. "I walked away from the retreat feeling Christ's presence in my life in a very profound way." ♥

Pope notes low birth rates, urges Italians to have more children

By JOHN NORTON
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, calling Italy's negative birth rate "worrying," urged Italians to have more children.

"The worrying demographic decline registered in recent years cannot but be for Italian society a motive for attentive reflection and stimulus for renewal, both in mentalities and in cultural, political and legislative decisions," he said Feb. 6 during the Angelus prayer in St. Peter's Square.

He said that the government needs "to remove the obstacles which hinder families," and that couples must "revive the culture of love and life, rediscovering (their) mission as parents, assumed by them at the moment of their marriage."

The pope's appeal came during the Italian church's annual Day of Life, established two decades ago after the country's legalization of abortion.

Italy's declining birthrate featured prominently in a recent report by the country's bishops, which pointed to government statistics for 1998 recording 533,000 births and 577,000 deaths.

The country's average of 1.2 children per couple, some projections suggest, will reduce the population from the current level of 57 million people to 41 million by 2050.

About 4 million abortions have been performed in Italy since the procedure was legalized 22 years ago, Olimpia Tarsia, national secretary of the Italian Movement for Life, told Vatican Radio. ♥

Our Lady of Grace youth aid in N.C. flood relief

GREENSBORO — Seven teens and three adults from Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro recently spent two days in Windsor, N.C., assisting the rebuilding efforts of the Interfaith Council of Bertie County. Students helped drywall, putty and sand the walls of the ruined homes belonging to two elderly women.

The 75-year-old aunt of one of the owners visited the students working at the site. The retired nurse and the primary caregiver of a 40-year-old mentally- handicapped son was impressed that the youth would take time from their Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend to work on the home of someone they didn't know.

The group spent the night at the local fire station before continuing work the next day.

The next morning, the area's fire chief showed the students a video of the flood, which covered most of the 232-year-old town, including both of the homes the students had worked on the day before. About 95 percent of the town was covered with six to 12 feet of floodwater, much of which was contaminated. The town also lost two residents who drowned during the flooding.

The fire chief, who told the youth he can't even think about drinking water after all they have been through, said that Windsor actually experienced two floods — the first with Hurricane Floyd when they received over twenty inches of rain and the second with Hurricane Irene, when the saturated town received another nine inches of rain. The effects were devastatingly the same in both instances.

Kathy Powers, head of the Interfaith Council's Relief Center, said that there are still several areas in Bertie County that have not been assisted.

Moreover, efforts to identify and help those people have been hampered because many former elderly residents, believing they don't qualify for assistance, have gone to live elsewhere.

"We have to continue to find ways to assist these people, as many had so little with which to begin."
— Meredith Lambert

In fact, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) was pulling out of the county during that week as demand for their services has lessened, even with still evident damages in many abandoned homes after the floods.

The Interfaith Council plans to continue to assist flood victims and will work to raise funds to help those who have fallen through the gap of federal and state assistance programs.

Because the Interfaith Council was sharing FEMA's rented office space, Our Lady of Grace Church youth helped move the council's office to a new site. This entailed transferring hundreds of boxes of donated supplies.

"I see now that people don't really need donations of old clothes, household goods, etc., but what's really needed is money to help rebuild," said Nicole Bergeron, one of the parish's youth.

Most of the homes damaged by the floods have had to be completely gutted and rebuilt, including the heating and cooling systems.

Many of the flood victims received only $100 to $200 from federal relief programs because they were not in designated flood zones.

According to Powers, FEMA made a distinction between hurricane and flooding damages but declined aid to areas hit by wind-driven rain and tornadoes, which hit rural areas the hardest.

"The two days we worked were really worthwhile," said Cornelius Short. "I definitely want to go back because there is still so much work to be done."

Meredith Lambert agreed, "We have to continue to find ways to assist these people, as many had so little with which to begin."

As a result of the mini-service trip, the youth have made fundraising for the flood victims one of their priorities. They hope to be able to return to Bertie County to assist with the rebuilding again this school year and would welcome inquiries on how others can help assist in these efforts. Call 336-274-3766 or e-mail olgyouthmin@earthlink.net. ♥

At right, Cornelius Short and Christopher Callaghan quickly learned the art of sanding as they prepared the new drywall for a coat of primer.

Pope opens door to new entrance of Vatican Museums

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — After opening the Holy Doors of Rome's four major basilicas, Pope John Paul II opened his fifth door of the jubilee: the new entrance to the Vatican Museums. At a Feb. 7 ceremony, the pope pushed open the museums' new bronze door to inaugurate the revamped space. Praising the museums' role as a "temple of art and culture" for all people, the pope said "the museums are, on a cultural level, one of the most significant doors of the Holy See opened to the world."

Biblical scholar says Catholics need not fear the Bible

WASHINGTON (CNS) — For many years biblical scholar Steve Mueller has been concerned that Catholics often fear reading the Bible as if it meant journeying into uncharted territory. To allay those fears Mueller, a Catholic, has written "The Seeker's Guide to Reading the Bible: a Catholic View," published by Loyola Press. In it he treats Bible reading as a wondrous spiritual "journey." Mueller has been an instructor at the Denver Catholic Biblical School for the past 14 years, and also has written articles and lectured on biblical theology and spirituality.

Draft stem-cell guidelines should be scrapped, priest tells NIH

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The general secretary of the U.S. Catholic Conference has called on the National Institutes of Health to scrap the proposed guidelines that would permit federal funding of stem-cell research involving human embryos. The official, Msgr. Dennis M. Schnurr, said in an 11-page submission to the agency that withdrawal of the guidelines was "the NIH's only morally and legally responsible course." Msgr. Schnurr's Jan. 31 submission was in response to an NIH request for comment on its draft guidelines for federal funding of embryonic stem-cell research. The deadline for public comment, originally Jan. 31, was later extended to Feb. 22.

California bill to legalize physician-assisted suicide halted

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS) — Legislation to legalize physician-assisted suicide in California was halted Jan. 31 when its sponsor declined to bring it to the floor of the state Assembly for a vote. The legislation — AB 1592 — was modeled on an Oregon law. It would have permitted physicians to provide lethal prescriptions to certain "terminally ill" patients, within guidelines. The measure was carried forward last June as a two-year bill and needed to be considered in the state Assembly by the end of January. The bill's author, Assemblywoman Dion Aroner, a Democrat from Berkeley, reportedly felt she did not have the votes necessary to pass it and quietly let the matter drop.

"Spirit Songs for Church and Classroom"

Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, diocesan director of formation for the Catholic Schools Office, recently presented patron saints medals to seven students of Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte for their participation in a diocesan gathering of Catholic school teachers. The students assisted in a workshop last October called "Spirit Songs for Church and Classroom," which explained how music can enhance the spiritual lives of young people. Pictured in front, left to right, are Tanner Anthony, Kate Leone, Peter Bui, Regis Nkrumah and Jennifer Gilewski; in back, Sister Maureen, Benae Beamon, Matt Moorman, and Pat Murphy, school principal. Sister Maureen presented the medals during Catholic Schools Week.

Catholics applaud Illinois governor's moratorium on death penalty

ROMEOVILLE, Ill. (CNS) — Catholic leaders in Illinois praised Gov. George Ryan's decision to halt all executions in the state, the first such moratorium in the nation. The Republican governor, who supports the death penalty, made the announcement Jan. 31. He cited the state's "shameful record of convicting innocent people and putting them on death row" and said he couldn't risk the execution of an innocent person. Joliet Bishop Joseph L. Imesch, who provided testimony in favor of the moratorium at a public hearing in Chicago, was delighted with the governor's announcement. "Naturally, I'm pleased that the governor is taking this initiative," he said. "I think it expresses good leadership on his part. I hope a review committee will find that (the death penalty) is not a suitable punishment."

1993 assassination of Mexican cardinal called premeditated

MEXICO CITY (CNS) — The 1993 assassination of a Mexican cardinal was a "premeditated crime," the governor of Jalisco told his state congress. However, while Jalisco Gov. Alberto Cardenas Jimenez said evidence points to a plot to assassinate Cardinal Juan Jesus Posadas Ocampo of Guadalajara, "there is still not sufficient evidence" for the case to be sent to the courts. In his annual report to the state congress Feb. 1, Cardenas discounted the federal government's assertion that Cardinal Posadas was caught in the cross fire of a shoot-out between rival drug gangs or because he was mistaken for a prominent drug lord.

Australian Catholic named chair of government council on family

ADELAIDE, Australia (CNS) — It's easier to get a marriage license than a driver's license, said a Catholic woman appointed to head a new Australian government council on marriage and the family. But Pauline Frick is not advocating a tightening of marriage laws. Rather, she wants people "tooled up" on conflict resolution and communication skills before they walk down the aisle. Frick, a mother of four, was selected by Prime Minister John Howard to chair the 10-member National Marriage and Family Council. It is an 18-month appointment.

Italian bishops cautious to approve Catholic-Muslim marriages

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — While extolling the virtues of interreligious dialogue, Italian bishops urged caution in approving marriages between Catholics and Muslims. "A rigorous procedure must be followed, evaluating case by case to see if the conditions to grant a dispensation exist," the bishops said in a document concluding a meeting of the conference's permanent council. At a Feb. 1 press conference to present the document, Archbishop Ennio Antonelli, secretary of the Italian bishops' conference, emphasized the need to protect constitutional rights in the family sphere.

At jubilee for religious, pope stresses benefits of vows

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Religious men and women gain more than they lose when they take vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, Pope John Paul II said. "Far from being a renunciation which impoverishes, (the vows) constitute a choice which frees the person for a fuller realization of his potentialities," he said Feb. 2 during a Mass in St. Peter's Square celebrating the Jubilee for Consecrated Life. The vows also give an important message to the world, he said: "Those who vigilantly await the fulfillment of Christ's promises are able to communicate hope to their brothers and sisters, often distrustful and pessimistic regarding the future."

Catholic school students greet Sammy Sosa on Denver visit

DENVER (CNS) — When Chicago Cub's home-run hitter Sammy Sosa got off the plane at Denver International Airport, 30 grade school students from area Catholic schools greeted him with a hearty "Bienvenido!"

Clutching baseballs and trading cards, the students were hoping to get autographs from Sosa, who was in Denver to address a Latino educational foundation.

Sosa and St. Louis Cardinal Mark McGuire thrilled baseball fans when both surpassed Roger Maris' 1961 record of 61 home runs — two years in a row. McGuire holds the single-season homer record with 70; Sosa holds the No. 2 spot with 66.

Sosa's generosity is as legendary as his baseball playing.

In 1998, he was named National League Most Valuable Player and received the Roberto Clemente Man of the Year Award — given to the player who best balances outstanding skills on the baseball field with civic responsibility.

That year, Sosa created a foundation bearing his name to raise money for underprivileged children in Chicago and the Dominican Republic, his native country.

And he didn't disappoint the children gathered at the airport Jan. 29.

Flashing a smile and his signature home-run salute, Sosa took time to sign their mementos.

"He's a good role model and he's a very nice person to have around and he's a very good friend for everybody," said 8-year-old Christian Lujan of Guardian Angels Grade School.

"He plays very good baseball and makes lots of home runs. I think he's very kind to everybody — not just one person, everybody," said 10-year-old Juan Munoz of Annunciation Grade School.

Sosa also was a hit with 1,700 adults and youth as guest speaker at the 51st annual Latin American Educational Foundation gala, which raised nearly $800,000 to fund college scholarships for Hispanic youths.

One of the foundation's goals is to increase the numbers of Hispanic youths who graduate from college. It has awarded about 3,600 scholarships since 1949.

"Believe in yourself and believe in God and all your dreams will come true."

Chicago Cubs record-seeking batter Sammy Sosa smiles in the batting cage before a game last season.

Nationwide, 30 percent of Hispanic youths drop out of high school and about 8 percent of college graduates are Hispanic, according to a videotaped address by President Clinton.

During the event, Sol Trujillo, president and chief executive officer of US West, was given the organization's award for supporting Hispanic education.

In his remarks Trujillo stressed the importance of supporting Latino youths in pursuing their dreams.

He called Sosa a role model who illustrates "not just success, but a willingness, a desire, to always give back and that is of great value."

When it was his turn to speak, Sosa stressed the importance of never forgetting one's roots.

"We are born the same way, but we grow up in a different way — education comes from the house," Sosa said. Often when athletes get to superstar status and make big salaries, he added, "they forget who their friends are, they forget everybody. One reason I do this is to set an example, superstars can do that."

A Catholic, Sosa treasures his family and his faith in God, and he said he has never forgotten that others were willing to help him when he was growing up poor. When Sosa was 7 years old, his father died, leaving his mother widowed with six children.

"I didn't have the opportunity to go to college because I had to go to the street to help make money for my mother," Sosa said. "I would find somebody to help me — now I have an opportunity to help not one, but a lot of people."

Asked what advice he had for aspiring ball players, Sosa encouraged hard work and respect for fellow teammates.

To youths, he advised, "Believe in yourself and believe in God and all your dreams will come true."

Asked to explain the signature gesture he makes when he hits a home run — he touches his heart and then blows a kiss — Sosa said it means he is sending his love to his mother.

"He is so open with his respect for his mother and his faith in God, I hope that gives young people courage to do the same," Vicky Garfias-O'Brien told the Denver Catholic Register, archdiocesan newspaper.

Garfias-O'Brien, 53, is one of 133 individuals who received a scholarship last year. She wants to earn a degree in construction management, "to make a difference for people who need better housing."

"I would encourage older Hispanics, especially mothers, to challenge themselves and get the education they deserve," she added. "It's never too late."

Erica Soto, a 19-year-old freshman at the University of Colorado-Boulder, said the scholarship is giving her the opportunity to be "one of the first in my family to graduate from college." ♥

Conventual Franciscan Friars leaders meet to plan for future

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Leaders of the Conventual Franciscan Friars from North America, England and Ireland gathered at the Franciscan Renewal Center in Scottsdale, Arizona from Jan. 23-28 to chart a collaborative plan for the future.

Forty-six friars from eight Provinces were joined by the Most Reverend Agostino Gardin, OFM Conv., the Minister General of the Conventual Friars, who traveled from Rome to attend the Conference.

According to the Most Reverend William Robinson, OFM Conv., the Assistant General for the English-speaking friars and conference participant, "Never before have the Provincial superiors and their councils met together like this. We hope it will further cooperative ventures and thus a more effective preaching of the Gospel message."

Those gathered represent more than 700 friars who minister in 25 States and 57 Dioceses in the United States, two Provinces and five Dioceses in Canada, Ireland and England. Many of the friars attending had never met before and acknowledged this meeting as an important step, before other ventures can take place.

Sister Margaret Carney, OSF, Director of the Franciscan Institute at St. Bonaventure University in Olean, New York, addressed the friars, reflecting on the development and heritage of the Conventual Franciscans. She urged them to help the people of today to understand how St. Francis of Assisi met the person of Jesus Christ.

Father Gardin also helped those attending the conference to understand developments in the Order throughout the world. He urged these friars, from countries with a democratic tradition, to assist others in finding new ways of sharing responsibility.

The closing statement composed by the conference, addressed to all the friars of their Provinces admitted, "We may have gathered with doubts, but we depart with an overwhelming consensus that we should take the initial steps to further this dialogue." A number of concrete action steps were planned for the next five years.

Attending the conference was Friar Jude DeAngelo, Councilor for the Southern Region of the Immaculate Conception Province, Guardian of Our Lady of Mercy Friary in Winston-Salem and Campus Minister at Wake Forest College. ♥

Little Maria lives in a village in Guatemala in a two-room house with a tin roof and dirt floors. Her father struggles to support the family as a day laborer. Can you help a poor child like Maria? Become a sponsor today!

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford (minimum $10). CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school – whatever is needed most. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child, information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child!

"I'm delighted to be CFCA's 100,000th sponsor . . . and I invite you to join me."

Archbishop James P. Keleher, Kansas City, Kansas – sponsors José Muños of Honduras.

School groundbreaking signals new beginning

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

KERNERSVILLE — Next year, students in the Piedmont-Triad area will continue their education in a new environment, when the new Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School will open its doors for students in August 2001. In a symbolic beginning to the school's establishment, Bishop William G. Curlin dug the first hole during the groundbreaking ceremony at the site on Feb. 6.

Current and future Bishop McGuinness students, parents, educators and diocesan officials were present for the final day of celebration, which included words from the bishop, Father Mauricio W. West, chancellor and vicar general, George L. Repass, principal of Bishop McGuinness and Bishop McGuinness student council president Laura Hoeing.

The windy day finally overcame the flaming torch as it stood in the ground. The torch, carried in by student representatives from Our Lady of Grace School and St. Pius X School in Greensboro, Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point, and Our Lady of Mercy School and St. Leo School in Winston-Salem, represented a way to bring the middle schools in the Triad area together and served as a light for the future, said Eddie Mitchell, Bishop McGuinness director of development and public relations.

"I am excited about the school because it will be technologically better," said Greg Means, an eighth grader at St. Leo School, who carried the torch onto the site. "It is good, academically, because all of the new classes, and athletically, because of the new fields and sports programs."

Repass addressed the crowd, gathered in semi-circle fashion, and thanked all involved with the process on diocesan and community levels.

He mentioned the people who are "among those who recognized the need to provide for a growing Catholic presence in the Triad and those who have long-awaited and hoped for [the new facility] and who were involved with the planning process, which began so many years ago."

"What will be built upon this site will provide a more ample means for the school to achieve the vision embodied in its mission, and what begins today will ensure the excellence we seek for perhaps years to come," he continued.

Flanked by the Abbot Vincent G. Taylor Assembly of Greensboro Knights of Columbus, Bishop Curlin blessed the field, which will become a place of learning for many area students.

Parker Sloan, a ninth grader at Bishop McGuinness, said, "I will be happy when it is finally built because we will have more room and more options for clubs and sports programs, like football."

"We are here to consecrate this ground and lay the foundation for a Christian education; we are here to make Christ present in the lives of these young students."
— Bishop William G. Curlin

In his remarks, the bishop commented about the importance of Catholic education, which shaped his own life. "I would not be a priest today if I had not had the blessing of Catholic education; I believe the support I received from my parents and the inspiration I received from my teachers motivated me to give my life to the Lord."

"We are here to consecrate this ground and lay the foundation for a Christian education; we are here to make Christ present in the lives of these young students," he said.

In his benediction, Father West led the crowd in prayers of intercession: "You inspire us in the firm hope that the school we begin to build today with Your blessings will be brought to completion with Your protection."

Hoeing, a senior at Bishop McGuinness, talked about the various service groups at the school and how they have been beneficial to the surrounding community. She mentioned the camaraderie and family atmosphere found in the current building that will follow the students and faculty into the new facility.

"... With all of these improvements found in the new school, one thing at Bishop McGuinness is not going to change, and that is the sense of community and fellowship found in every hallway and classroom ..."

The response from parents, teachers and students is positive; many are in support of the new school and anxiously await its arrival.

"I am looking forward to having a larger facility and having a bigger classroom," said Bob Klepf, senior calculus and pre-calculus teacher at Bishop McGuinness. "With a larger student population, we'll be able to offer more courses and schedule more levels of honors classes."

Victor Archibong, an Our Lady of Grace Church parishioner, has children who have attended Bishop McGuinness, and his son Tony is currently a junior. He expressed his excitement over the new school. "It is a joy to see that it is finally coming together. Catholic education is worth the sacrifice because you can't beat the quality of education and the values you receive," he said.

Bishop McGuinness alumnus Tony Nitz agreed with his fellow Our Lady of Grace Church parishioner: "We have been waiting, and this couldn't be a more perfect time. The benefits of the school are less specific and more holistic because this will embrace the whole Triad community. Bishop McGuinness provided a wonderful environment and opportunity for me and my children, and the new school will bring better technology, more space and a better athletic and arts environment."

The groundbreaking ceremony was the culmination of three days of festivities, including a fine arts evening with poetry and music and soccer and basketball battles between the alumni and current students. ♥

Graham Joyce's "Indigo" full of rich, suspensful writing

Reviewed by JULIE ASHER
Catholic News Service

Graham Joyce's writing is rich, his descriptions powerful, and his story original, but "Indigo" is a bizarre, uncomfortable tale.

It opens with Jack Chambers traveling to Rome to wrap up the estate of his recently deceased father. He's accompanied by his half-sister, Louise, whom he barely knows, and her toddler, Billy.

Jack, an Englishman who is down on his luck (he's a bobby turned process server), never really knew his father, Timothy Chambers. Jack visited him at his Chicago apartment a couple of times but Timothy remained an enigma.

"Indigo"
By Graham Joyce
Pocket Books (New York, 1999)
258 pp., $23.95.

Now he's dead, and Jack has to follow his last wishes, including finding a publisher for Daddy's obscure tome, "Invisibility: A Manuscript of Light." Jack has to publish it to receive any money. The bulk of Chambers' estate is left to a woman named Natalie Shearer, and Jack has to find her.

That search takes Jack and Louise from Chicago to Rome, where their father had a house, between the Colosseum and the Appian Way. It's a strange trip.

Jack discovers his father was a madman, a cultlike figure who became fixated on how to become invisible, or, as he says, "the art of making oneself unseen." He also is obsessed with wanting to see the color indigo more clearly. Indigo is one of the seven primary colors, but supposedly is the most difficult for the naked eye to distinguish in the spectrum.

Timothy Chambers' dual obsessions are inventive. Joyce intersperses "excerpts" from the Chambers manuscript. Each one describes another step toward invisibility and seeing indigo. It's inventive, for sure, but weird and hard to grasp.

Billed as a thriller, the book is suspenseful. It is engrossing in parts as Jack follows a twisted trail around Rome to discover things about his father and ends up in some danger as he learns his father drew young artists into drugs, sex and mind games in hopes they would understand his invisibility quest.

Jack becomes attracted to one of the women his father knew and gets trapped in her world of sex and drugs. She lets him believe she is the Natalie he is seeking. She also is fascinated with the pagan festival Lupercalia and images of being a shewolf, which is really too much to take on top of the book's peculiar invisibility/indigo theme.

Finally, Jack rejects her weird ways, and he and Louise track down the real Natalie — in an asylum. She thinks she's invisible. Then Natalie disappears from the asylum, and Jack thinks maybe his father isn't really dead and has taken her away. He and Louise return to Chicago, and the task of publishing the manuscript.

There's more to the weird story of their father, including evidence he and his followers practiced "trepanning," a surgical procedure in which a small disc is cut out of the skull, perhaps to alter the brain. And there is the matter of how the father becomes obsessed with seeing indigo — it is spurred by seizures experienced by his second wife (Louise's mother).

The book is fast paced and one has to appreciate Joyce's colorful literary and imaginative style, but the story's fantastic nature is too much to buy. And the characters, while somewhat likable, have no moral dimension. ♥

February 13, Sixth Sunday in Ordinary Time, Cycle B Readings:

By DAN LUBY
Catholic News Service

1) Leviticus 13:1-2, 44-46
Psalm 32:1-2, 5, 11
2) 1 Corinthians 10:31-11:1
3) Gospel: Mark 1:40-45

Three boys peer nervously across the cafeteria where, at a table by himself, the class geek, all bad hair and thick glasses and dirty hand-me-downs, eats his sandwich, sloppily. Even the most oblivious passerby recognizes him as a social pariah.

As the scene unfolds, Homer, one of the boys, rises and walks forward. The outcast is a brain, and Homer needs his help to realize his dream of building a working rocket and winning a scholarship.

His friends warn that he's committing social suicide. If he sits down with this hopeless nerd, the shame of his differentness, his poverty, his sorrow, will settle on Homer like a poisonous mist. He too will become an outcast.

This scene from the movie "October Sky" mirrors the thinking at work in the treatment of lepers during biblical times (and for centuries before and after). They were feared and reviled because their calamity was thought contagious by touch. Lepers had to tear their clothes and dishevel their hair and cover their faces and call out "unclean," so that no one might touch them accidentally and suffer the same fate.

When a leper kneels before him in this week's Gospel, no one would blame Jesus for taking a discreet step backward. No one would wonder had Jesus politely pretended not to notice and kept walking.

I dare say it's what most of us do today when "otherness" — as mental or physical illness or social class or skin color or any of a host of "deviations" from the social norm — confronts us with our own vulnerability, with the fragility of the acceptance and inclusion and approval we so need.

Fortunately for the leper — and challengingly for us — Jesus does not step away or pretend not to notice. He acknowledges and touches — his friends gasping in horror — the brother who yearns to belong.

Questions:

Who in your life has risked exclusion by touching you at a time of need? What is one concrete way you can include someone who suffers because of isolation?

"Moved with pity, Jesus stretched out his hand, touched him and said: 'I do will it. Be cured"'
— Mark 1:41

Epic drama "Titus" tells tale of Roman war hero and family

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — A wronged mother avenges the death of her first-born son at the hands of a Roman war hero by bringing death and despair on the hero and his family in the epic drama "Titus" (Fox Searchlight Pictures).

"Titus"
The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Titus (Anthony Hopkins), Rome's finest general, returns victorious to his homeland with his Goth prisoners of war: Tamora (Jessica Lange), the queen of the Goths, and her three sons. He has lost all but four of his many sons in the war, and as reparation, he sacrifices Tamora's eldest son, right before her eyes. This begins the vicious cycle of bloody revenge.

In an unusual turn of events, Tamora finds herself the wife of the recently appointed emperor Saturninus (Alan Cumming). It is in this new position of power and with the help of her Moor servant and lover, Aaron (Harry Lennix), that she is able to make Titus pay dearly for the death of her son.

In a misguided rage, Titus kills one of his sons to protect the honor of Saturninus. Two of Titus' other sons are framed for the murder of his son-in-law (the emperor's brother) and beheaded. His only daughter is raped by Tamora's two sons, who cut out her tongue and shove twigs into the stumps where they have chopped off her hands. Lucius (Angus Macfadyen), the only son he has left, is exiled from Rome. And this is only part of the carnival of carnage in director Julie Taymor's "Titus."

Certainly not for the faint-hearted, Taymor's three-hour version of Shakespeare's first successful play is both visually scintillating and repulsive.

Watching the arms of Tamora's sons go slack after their throats are slit is jarring. A scene in which the emperor's court partakes in an orgy is also arresting. Revenge is painted so thickly that at times it can be nauseating.

But Shakespeare so eloquently expressed the effects of hatred sowed in the human heart that it is hard to escape how current his tale seems today, especially in light of the recent atrocities in Bosnia and Rwanda and the murderous high school rampages in the United States. And Taymor stays true to his words, reproducing a higher percentage of text than any other recent screen adaptation of his work.

Although this is a dark film, Taymor uses touches of humor mixed with modernism to lighten it. Tamora's sons, the punkish princes Demetrius (Matthew Rhys) and Chiron (Jonathan Rhys Meyers), live in a den that looks part MTV studio and part video arcade. Hanging on the wall of this dirty bachelor pad is a dart board with Titus' scarred picture in the center.

The stellar performances give the film's bloody audacity some balance. Lennix makes his Aaron seethe with contempt for the years of humiliation and prejudices his black skin has endured and presents a man in whom hate has only borne more hate.

It is a pity that Hopkins announced his plans to retire while still filming the picture because he gives one of his best performances as Titus. And Lange's passionate Tamora brings vengeance and loathing to an new height.

"Titus" is an unending descent of destruction culminating in a twisted banquet serving a "family" recipe. But even though the stunning visuals and key performances are engrossing, three intense hours of unavoidable gore may keep some viewers away.

Because of recurring graphic violence, several explicit sexual situations, and nudity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted. ♥

"Love Affair" (1994)

Sentimental remake of the 1939 "Love Affair" in which a couple (Warren Beatty and Annette Bening) have a shipboard romance though each is engaged to another, then plan to meet three months later to get married, until a tragic accident jeopardizes their future. Director Glenn Gordon Caron's sumptuous, postcard-pretty melodrama is sweetly old-fashioned in its execution though it ultimately disappoints as the lovers' characters are only superficially developed. Romantic complications and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Moonstruck" (1987)

Charming romantic comedy set in an Italian-American neighborhood in Brooklyn where a widow (Cher) accepts the proposal of a fastidious bachelor (Danny Aiello) but then falls in love with his darkly emotional younger brother (Nicolas Cage). Director Norman Jewison concentrates more on the comedy of character than on incident and the result is pleasantly amusing, emotionally operatic and humanly uplifting. Several sexually suggestive scenes but the movie's moral perspective is implicit throughout. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Muriel's Wedding" (1995)

Obsessed with fantasies of her wedding day, a young woman (Toni Collette) lacking self-esteem excitedly rushes into an arranged marriage, abandoning her wheelchair-bound roommate (Rachel Griffiths) in the process, only to come to her senses after a family tragedy. Despite the infectiously buoyant tone of the proceedings, Australian writer-director P.J. Hogan's giddy comedy-drama never digs deeply into the title character's development as a person until the undeserved feel-good ending. Discreet bedroom scenes, fleeting nudity and a few instances of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Sabrina" (1995)

Gauzy romantic fantasy in which a workaholic billionaire (Harrison Ford) falls in love with his chauffeur's daughter (Julia Ormond) while trying to distract her from an infatuation with his engaged brother (Greg Kinnear). Director Sydney Pollack's long but lush remake of the 1954 Audrey Hepburn version is featherweight fluff laboriously plumped up with contrived romantic emotions. Fleeting violence and very mild sexual references. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope calls on U.S. leaders to use moral values to save democracy

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In an address delivered by his apostolic nuncio, Pope John Paul II told the National Prayer Breakfast Feb. 3 in Washington that people of faith with political authority bear a moral responsibility to save democracy from self-destruction.

"Democracy is our best opportunity to promote the values that will make the world a better place for everyone," said the pope. "But a society which exalts individual choice as the ultimate source of truth undermines the very foundations of democracy."

His address was delivered by Archbishop Gabriel Montalvo, the apostolic nuncio to the United States.

The annual prayer breakfast draws thousands of people of all denominations from across the country. In addition to religious leaders, it typically is attended by the president and first lady, many members of Congress, the Cabinet, the judiciary, diplomats and state and local politicians.

The pope's remarks said that the vision of faith to which Christians are particularly called in this jubilee year has a public dimension, "for the deeper understanding of the truth about human nature and human fulfillment given to us by faith naturally inspires efforts to build a better and more humane world."

When economic and political systems fail to respect the spiritual nature of mankind, immense suffering results, as the last century shows, he said.

Those who believe in Christ have a moral responsibility to reflect his teachings in all areas of life, the pope's address said.

"The spread of a purely utilitarian approach to the great moral issues of public life points to the urgent need for a rigorous and reasoned public discourse about the moral norms that are the foundation of any just society," he said.

The pope noted that the United States was begun as an experiment in ordered freedom, "in which the exercise of individual freedom would contribute to the common good."

The American concept of separation of the institutions of church and state "was accompanied from the beginning of your republic by the conviction that strong religious faith, and the public expression of religiously informed judgments, contribute significantly to the moral health of the body politic."

In the Western democratic tradition, men and women in political life "are not mere brokers of power in a political process taking place in a vacuum, cut off from private and public morality," the pope's address said. "Your vocation as 'representatives' calls for vision, wisdom, a spirit of contemplation and a passion for justice and truth."

The pope said that in the United States, which has a heritage that has become synony-

The living wage movement

The best of times for shareholders reveals still hard times for low wage workers. Great times for CEO pay scales show flat times for workers making minimum wage. A surplus for the federal budget masks the mounting indebtedness of low skilled workers. The mighty national economic engine has already roared out of the station pulling a train of unprecedented prosperity, while the working poor stand on the platform left behind.

The movement for a "living wage" addresses the widening income gap. Since 1994 ordinances passed in 42 cities and counties with proposals in 80 more mandate that private firms eligible for local government contracts pay their workers substantially more than the minimum wage. At $5.15 an hour set in 1997, the minimum wage means a gross annual wage of $10,712, well below the federal poverty guidelines of $16,000 for a family of four. Plainly put, businesses that benefit from public contracts should pay workers enough to keep them out of poverty.

The living-wage movement comes at a time when prosperity has highlighted social inequalities. Welfare reform in 1995 never intended to eliminate poverty, but simply to get people off welfare roles. Stories written about welfare-to-work show the working poor beaten by a system that continues to bloat CEO paychecks and by government contracts that reward corporations with pork. Of the welfare recipients who went from welfare in 1998 to work in 1999, only 28.8 percent earned above the federal poverty level of $14,500 for a family of three. Approximately 6 million single-parent families, mainly headed by women, survive on low-wage jobs.

For people of faith, a just wage addresses the injustice of the system. "Workers must be paid a wage which allows them to live a truly human life," writes John XXIII, summarizing the church's 20th century social teachings on wages. Trying to calculate a just wage in dollars and cents, however, posses a daunting task. Numerous variables cloud the calculations. Fr. John A. Ryan, a theologian focusing on economics, published his doctoral dissertation in 1906 as "A Living Wage: Its Ethical and Economic Aspects." After careful analyses of living expenses and social expectations, Ryan suggested a $600 a year minimum for a decent living wage in an American city. At the time, the average wage for urban workers remained only $571, so about 60 percent of America's industrial labor force fell below Ryan's proposed living wage.

Today, the U.S. Catholic bishops reflecting about the just wage include provisions common in the American economic system: "adequate health care, security for old age or disability, unemployment compensation, healthful working conditions, weekly rest, periodic holidays for recreation and leisure, and reasonable security against arbitrary dismissal." Many of these provisions, though not all, have become American law and form part of a worker's social wage. Yet, the list indicates what a modern economy expects for "a truly human life."

Orthodox economists argue that raising the minimum wage for businesses contracting with lo-

Spirituality and world politics

Recently the Seattle police fired tear gas and rubber bullets at men and women protesting the practices of the World Trade Organization. The press, and the TV program "Sixty Minutes II," depicted all the protesters as wild anarchists who were bent on violence.

Not so!

The fact is that a broad coalition of sane, nonviolent protesters representing 70 nations came to the state of Washington to express their objection to the WTO's agenda. This organization represents big business interests, and has consistently put free trade above human rights, fair labor standards, environmental safeguards and public safety.

As a result there has been a worldwide ground swell of opposition.

I, for one, am not afraid of the globalization trend. It began in 1948 with the establishment of the United Nations. I also believe that free trade, if managed properly, will be a potential boon for the world's economy.

However, the WTO, in the five years of its existence, has managed to alienate people from every walk of life by attempting to sweep away any local laws that inhibit free trade.

What does all this mean to the ordinary citizen?

Mothers, for instance, have joined the protest because they are afraid that their children's health will be endangered by exposure to dangerous chemicals found in the food we import. Many countries drench their products in pesticides. We have laws regulating the food that comes into this country, but the WTO wants no restrictions on imports.

U.S. farmers oppose the WTO because they are afraid of going belly-up. They share with labor leaders a fear that they won't be able to compete with countries paying substandard wages to an exploited labor force. We already have seen mass firings as a result of NAFTA, which is our free trade agreement with those south of the border.

Many members of the clergy have seen the erosion of gains they made in the area of human rights and environmental protection. Even the Vatican has voiced its protest to some WTO practices.

After five years of frustration, it all came to a head. Representatives of 70 nations gathered to form an international coalition against the powerful cartel of multinational corporations. Big businesses operate internationally with no real system of checks and balances protecting the consumer. Without protests of some kind, their power will increase geometrically.

The WTO has shown a callous disregard toward those who oppose its goal of maximizing profits come hell or high water. In Seattle it caught a little bit of hell for it. I do not condone the violence of the small radical minority, but I am making a case for hundreds of protesters who came from all over the world to express their outrage.

Why am I writing about the WTO in a column dedicated to spirituality? Because spirituality can no longer be relegated to the level of private devotion, it must be part of our whole value system. Today, theologians and spiritual writers agree that spirituality involves the whole person. Your spirituality includes not only the way you pray and worship God, but also the way you think about money, politics and family.

We are all going to be judged on love. In view of this, we must all ask ourselves how Jesus would react to this situation. What would Jesus do?

A death in the cathedral

An event took place a few weeks ago that was for me one of the most profound experiences of my twenty-nine years of priesthood.

It's been my privilege to offer Mass at Saint Patrick's Cathedral in New York City during the past four years. Dec. 8 was the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, a holy day for Catholics celebrating Mary's unique place in God's plan of salvation. The Cathedral was full to capacity. Christmas shoppers, office workers, international travelers crowded into the pews or patiently stood along the side aisles.

The lector, music cantor and I had entered the sanctuary and were starting Mass when I noticed a couple in their 60s move from the aisle into a pew where a younger fellow made some room for them to sit. They captured my attention immediately because the older fellow beamed a broad grin and nodded cordially.

He saw me watching him and his wife settle in and eyed me apologetically — but I smiled sympathetically. It was one of those little moments when two people have a spontaneous, brief exchange of good will and warmth. The liturgy was proceeding when, just before the Gospel, a muted chorus of voices drew my attention back to where my new acquaintance had been sitting. Several faces turned to me in alarm and whispered all at once: "A doctor! A man here needs a doctor! Ask for a doctor! A doctor, now!"

At the pulpit, I leaned into the microphone and alerted the congregation: "A man is in distress. If there is a doctor here, please come forward." Several men and women moved toward him.

Sensing things would soon be under control, we continued the liturgy with a sung prayer leading to the Gospel. But, I had spoken only a few lines, when an usher came toward me, stood at my side, and said softly into my ear, "He's dead, Father. His wife is asking you to come to him and anoint him. Now."

There she was, in the midst of continuing efforts to revive her husband, summoning me to come. As I looked out to the congregation, I was struck by the silence. 3000 worshippers suspended in utter stillness and apprehension. If I had closed my eyes, I would have thought the Cathedral empty.

"I am going to tend to our friend here," I said. And in seconds, I had moved through the opening at the communion rail and knelt next to the motionless man, who only moments before had been smiling at me.

A fellow priest arrived with sacred oils for the anointing, so I stood to embrace the wife. She calmly explained that her husband and she were in New York celebrating their wedding anniversary. They had just finished seeing the Radio City Christmas Show and wanted to get to Saint Patrick's for Mass because it was there they had been married 43 years ago to the day.

And then she said, "Bless you, Father, and all these people who are trying to help. Bless you. My husband couldn't be in a better place."

Returning to the pulpit in the silent presence of all in that great Cathedral, my eyes searched the page for a place to resume the Gospel: "And Mary said: 'Behold, I am the handmaid of the Lord. May it be done to me according to your word."

No sermon was spoken. But, I know Mary's words of wholehearted acceptance of God's will had a profound meaning for us. Death and life, faith and hope, all come from God's loving hands.

Valentine's Day: Our love story lives on

Some years ago, the liturgical leaders of the Catholic Church decided to clean up the calendar of saints. They removed a number of pseudo-saints from the official roster of holy men and women. The existence of these people was founded more on imagination than on fact.

One such saint was the alleged but very popular Roman priest and martyr, St. Valentine, who was annually honored on the 14th day of February. The effort to remove the name of Valentine from our religious and secular vocabulary has not been very successful.

As a far as we know, there are at least three different St. Valentines — all of them martyrs — and they are mentioned in the early martyrologies on Feb. 14. One is described as a priest of Rome, another as bishop of Interamma (present Terni), and these two men seem both to have suffered in the second half of the third century and to have been buried on the Flaminian Way. The third Valentine was martyred in Africa with some companions, and nothing more is known.

Today, there is no longer an official liturgical commemoration of St. Valentine; however, eveybody knows that Feb. 14 is Valentine's Day. If anyone thinks otherwise, just visit a greeting card shop. The awesome array of cards lavishly decorated with hearts and loaded with the language of love is not named after Romeo and Juliet. They are Valentine's cards, and nobody can tell us otherwise.

It is healthy, after all, to celebrate love in this year 2000, especially when the world stresses anger and fear; whereas God stresses love. Our culture, especially through the advertising media, conveys the message that our feelings and emotions are determined by circumstances. Are they? For example: Buy this car, and you will be happy. Buy this shampoo, and you will feel loved. The truth is that we can change shampoos and still feel lonely.

Perhaps, it is time to re-program our thinking. The old-fashioned way of love is still valid and new. "John 3:16" is not simply flashing on billboards; he is flashing in our hearts. The love story of Valentine may not be historically sound, but it is a powerful story that still fascinates young and old people, because it is our own love story.

The real love story begins with you and never ends. Love indeed has many hands:

Hands that reach
Hands that love
Hands that offer hope
Hands that feed
Hands that teach
Hands that heal
Hands that nurture
Hands that comfort.
How many hands do you have?

The history of Christian marriage

Q. In connection with my responsibilities as a deacon, I'm requesting any information you might offer about the history of Christian marriage. Certainly the first converts to Christianity from among the pagans and Jews did not receive the sacrament of marriage as we know it today. My question is, When did the church establish matrimony as a sacrament? Why was this done?

A. In pre-Christian times, a "sacramentum" was the Latin term for a pledge of money, for example in lawsuits. Later it was the oath of loyalty to Roman officers and gods, taken by recruits for military service. This was the meaning of the word picked up by the early Christians for their primary ceremony of initiation.

When people committed themselves to a new life of holiness and service of Jesus Christ, baptism ritualized that commitment and at the same time was the channel of grace needed to become faithful Christians. Other sacraments later followed this understanding, each in its own way.

It was this understanding, that the sacraments are themselves sources of God's life and help, that kept marriage off the "official" list for many centuries. Marriage, particularly sexual intercourse, was widely accepted as necessary to alleviate sexual desire and to have children, but in itself it could not be a source of grace, since sexual desire and fulfillment, even in marriage, was always bad.

St. Augustine, who wrote more about marriage than any other early theologian, believed sexual relations were sinful, and anyone who engaged in them committed sin. "A man who is too ardent a lover of his wife," he taught, "is an adulterer, if the pleasure he finds in her is sought for its own sake" ("Against Julian," 2,7). For centuries this teaching made it difficult to assume that marriage is a sacrament.

The sacramentality of marriage, of course, was closely related to the church's involvement in the wedding ceremony. In early Christian centuries the church generally followed Roman marriage laws. A Christian marriage was simply one between two baptized persons who dedicated themselves to live their faith in Christ together.

By the year 400, some bishops and priests began to bestow a blessing to the couple, either the day before the marriage or at the festivities following the civil ceremony. The only Christians then actually bound to receive a church blessing of their marriages, by decree of Popes St. Siricius and St. Innocent I, were priests and deacons.

It took a long time before theologians could also acknowledge marriage as a sacrament, an authentic source of grace just as the other six sacraments. Augustine's concept that original sin was transmitted from parents to children by sexual intercourse remained strong.

From St. Thomas Aquinas onward, however, it increasingly was accepted that Christian marriage is a true sacrament, continuing throughout their life, and enabling husbands and wives to live and grow in a holy life together.

At last, the ecumenical councils of Florence (1439) and Trent (1563) listed marriage as one of the seven sacraments. According to Trent, the fathers, councils and tradition of the church "have always taught that marriage should be numbered among the sacraments."

Catholic teaching today contains many other profoundly rich biblical, theological and psychological insights on the sacrament of marriage. That marriage is a full-fledged sacrament, however, a source of divine grace for Christians in that vocation, remains of course the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church.

Vatican reserves judgment on Austrian far-right party

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Amid European Union outcry over the inclusion of a far-right political party in Austria's new government, the Vatican reserved judgment.

"The Holy See does not have a tradition of pronouncing preventive judgments on people or programs," Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican's secretary of state, said Feb. 3.

"When a government's plan is made known, then a judgment can be made," he said.

The only instance where the Vatican might intervene, said the cardinal, would be if governmental programs go "against Christian morality."

Austria's 14 partners in the European Union have all expressed grave concern over the inclusion of Joerg Haider's Freedom Party in the country's new coalition government.

Haider, whose comments playing down Nazi war crimes and expressing hostility to immigration have drawn widespread international criticism, will not be a member of the new Cabinet, but his party will boast six ministers.

The European Union said political sanctions against Austria would take effect Feb. 3.

Cardinal Christoph Schonborn of Vienna celebrated Mass Feb. 3, inviting all Austrians to pray for the good of the country.

In a Feb. 3 interview with the Italian newspaper La Repubblica, Cardinal Giovanni Cheli, former president of the Pontifical Council for Migrants and Travelers, said while he was not familiar with Haider, the church condemned all racist ideologies.

"It's right that people oppose any policy that supports racism or xenophobia. But I am not the one to express an opinion on concrete means of intervention," he said.

"It is the responsibility of governments, which know more about the situation," said the cardinal. ♥

Rabbis say they'll meet pope at Chief Rabbinate, not Western Wall

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — When Pope John Paul II travels to the Holy Land, Israel's chief rabbis will meet with him at the Chief Rabbinate and not at the Western Wall, said a spokesman for the Chief Rabbinate.

"The pope has asked to meet with Jewish religious leaders, and so the place to meet with them is where the chief rabbis sit," said the spokesman.

"He has asked to meet with them, and they would like to welcome him in their home, and their home is at the Chief Rabbinate. If they were to go to the Vatican they would also come to greet the pope at the Vatican," he said.

Pope John Paul was scheduled to visit holy sites in Jordan, Israel and Palestinian territories March 20-26.

Jesuit Father Roberto Tucci, the main organizer of papal trips who was in Israel to coordinate the pope's schedule, could not be reached for comment on the location of the meeting of the pope and chief rabbis.

Earlier, the Vatican announced a planned papal meeting with Jewish religious leaders at the Western Wall, or Wailing Wall, the place most venerated by Jews.

Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Israel Meir Lau, who represents Jews of East European descent, had welcomed a meeting with the pope at the Western Wall, saying that it symbolized a recognition of Israeli sovereignty over Jerusalem.

However, Chief Sephardic Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron, who represents Jews of Middle Eastern descent, disagreed and called for a meeting at the Chief Rabbinate.

News reports said Rabbi Bakshi-Doron brought the issue to Rabbi Lau's attention.

On Feb. 8 the chief rabbis said a meeting between the Jewish religious leaders and the pontiff at the outdoor plaza of the Western Wall would be demeaning, so the meeting should take place at the Chief Rabbinate.

Meanwhile, National Police Chief Yehuda Wilk, appointed to head the national control center overseeing the pope's visit, assembled representatives of the government and other bodies involved in the preparations to brief them on their responsibilities.

They discussed security and transportation of the papal entourage. A large contingent of police will be deployed for the operation, which has been code named "Operation Old Friend," and they will be joined by army personnel as well as internal security officers. ♥

mous with freedom itself, there is a burden for religious believers in public life to serve a "prophetic" function.

"As one who is personally grateful for what America did for the world in the darkest days of the 20th century, allow me to ask: Will America continue to inspire people to build a truly better world, a world in which freedom is ordered to truth and goodness?" said the pope.

"Or will America offer the example of a pseudo-freedom which, detached from the moral norms that give life direction and fruitfulness, turns in practice into a narrow and ultimately inhuman self-enslavement, one which smothers people's spirits and dissolves the foundations of social life?"

The pope said the world looks to the United States for leadership on "the great civil rights issue of our time," that of "cherishing every human life and in providing legal protection for all members of the human community, but especially those who are weakest and most vulnerable."

Also speaking at the prayer breakfast, President Clinton talked about the need for reconciliation among rival groups — from nations at war with each other to hate crimes committed within the United States.

Within Washington, "we often ... forget in the heat of political battle our common humanity," Clinton said. "We slip from honest difference, which is healthy, into dishonest demonization."

people, with the truth of Appalachia, with the living God."

Joe Holland, professor of philosophy and religion at St. Thomas University in Miami, delivered the keynote address of the anniversary celebration, in which he examined the contemporary state of Catholic social teaching.

"Catholic social teaching is today the core of Christian spirituality," Holland said. "Justice and peace are constitutive elements of the Gospel message."

Holland went on to say that "the Western, modern, bourgeois way of life is not sustainable." He noted that the self-sufficient communities of Appalachia are a model of lifestyle that can serve as an alternative to excessive consumerism.

"Some talk about a population problem among the poor," the bishops wrote in 1975. "There's an even bigger consumption problem among the rich."

Sister of St. Joseph Gretchen Shaffer said, "The letter is as true today as it was 25 years ago."

Todd Garland, executive director of the Catholic Committee of Appalachia, pointed to the pastoral letter's easy-to-read, poetic style. "It's so meaningful and easy to read, that many people actually read this document again and again.

"Hardly a week goes by where we don't get calls for reprints of the letter. After 25 years, that's amazing," he added. "The voices still cry out to us, and urge us to continue our efforts for justice in Appalachia."

Michael Vincent, director of Catholic Community Services Southern Region in the Diocese of Wheeling-Charleston, noted that "This Land is Home to Me" is a "pastoral of hope. It puts the reality of Appalachia out there, and moves us toward justice not only in economics, but in ecology as well."

Carol Warren, director of the diocesan Justice and Life Office, agrees. "In the coming century, our care for the earth may be the ultimate life issue," she said. "None of us will survive without food and clean water, commodities increasingly denied to the neediest among us."

Participants also discussed the 1995 pastoral "At Home in the Web of Life," a follow-up pastoral to "This Land is Home to Me."

In it the Appalachian bishops discussed the need for "sustainable communities," which would have their own permanent social and economic base in the region and be an alternative to outsiders coming in who see the area only as a source of cheap resources and labor.

The new message also stressed the abandonment of the people there in the post-industrial age and the pervasive attacks on the region's environment.

This is the cover of the 25th Anniversary Edition of "This Land is Home to Me," a pastoral letter on the Appalachia region written in 1975.

Vincent said the Appalachian pastorals have been instrumental in shaping social justice in Appalachia over the past quarter century, and that they will be "part of our spiritual geography for years to come." ♥ cal governments makes small businesses unprofitable and hurts job opportunities for low skilled workers. Living-wage advocates cite recent studies showing that Los Angeles's $8.64 living wage increased total costs by only 1% to 1.5% for the affected businesses.

With CEO pay rising 36% in the last Business Week survey compared to a 2.7% increase for blue collar workers and no increase for the minimum wage earners, the living-wage advocates are arguing from the moral high ground. A living wage between $8 to $11 an hour approaches a just wage more closely than the anemic federal minimum wage some corporations are now paying the working poor.

No Regis or millions here, but plenty of blessings, religious ed

By JOSEPH YOUNG
Catholic News Service

ST. NICHOLAS, Minn. (CNS) — Channel surfers have lately been riding the wave of the popular prime-time television quiz show "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?" hosted by Regis Philbin.

The basement of St. Nicholas Church in St. Nicholas is no New York TV studio, and Philbin was nowhere near the church the evening of Jan. 26, but about 65 contestants were.

These contestants, however, were not your run-of-the-million quiz show contestants. They were fresh-faced seventh-, eighth- and ninth-graders in the religious education program at Holy Cross Parish, Pearl Lake, and St. Nicholas Parish, which are in the St. Cloud Diocese.

Regis wasn't on hand to ask contestants, "Is that your final answer?" but a handful of the parishes' volunteer religious education teachers acted as Philbin fill-ins.

This staff — along with parish religious education coordinator Maureen Hieserich — planned the evening of quizzing for the youths by preparing 100-plus questions with a religious bent. For example, "What does Immanuel mean?" and "Who walked on the water to Jesus?"

For each one, contestants could choose an answer from four offered — one answer was correct and the three others bogus.

Students from each grade competed among themselves in a kind of simultaneous three-ring circus that was intense. Youths were placed in teams of three and four, all vying for, not money, but for the most fabulous prize of all — theological knowledge — in "Who Wants a Million Blessings?"

As a parting gift; all contestants received refreshments and a certificate for a pizza.

In the ninth-grade competition, teachers Matt Walz and Shirl Carlson grilled the team of Mitchell Braegelmann, Jennifer Kunkel and Steven Landwehr.

"Who is the patron saint of firemen?" Walz asked. "Is it St. Lucy, St. Florian, St. Stephen or St. James?"

"Of firemen?" Braegelmann asked incredulously. After consulting amongst themselves the team ventured a guess: "St. Stephen?"

"That's your final answer?" Walz asked, poker-faced. "Yes," they replied, their faces florid with hope. "No, the answer is St. Florian," he said apologetically.

Meanwhile, seventh-graders Amanda Krueger, Heather Anderson and Jessica Gully squirmed as pseudo-Regises Heidi Krippner, Sara Krippner and Leanne Donnay quizzed 'em about their wisdom.

"Which of the following is not a beatitude?" they were asked, and were given the choice of three beatitudes listed in Matthew's Gospel along with the subtly spurious "Blessed are they that starve, for they will be fed."

The girls, not really sure, used a "lifeline" — which is also an option on the TV show — and asked for help from a member of the audience. Luckily for them, Father John Caskey, pastor of the parishes who was moseying among the three classes, happened to be present and proffered the correct answer when asked.

"Are you positive?" Krueger asked, a doubt shadowing her brow. "One hundred percent," Father Caskey said confidently. The girls accepted the answer, and their doubts turned to shouts of triumph.

Tom Decker, a Rocori senior who emceed the eighth-graders competition along with Brenda Kunkel, said that "kids learn better when you make it fun for them, and you could tell they're having fun tonight working together and using teamwork."

Speaking of doubting, the question "Which disciple was known as a doubter?" stymied three eighth-graders — Tina Hennen, Monique Hieserich and Kelly Lochen.

So they took advantage of another form of lifeline — a telephone call for help. Hennen had warned her grandmother, Lorraine Hennen, who was waiting at home by the phone playing cribbage, that she might be getting a call.

"We asked her the question," said Tina Hennen, "and before we could even give her the multiple choices she blurted the right answer."

The telephone lifeline worked less successfully for ninth-graders Dane Inderrieden, Rodney Lutgen and Tim Krueger, who called their Rocori High School classmate Adam Hennen, a member of Gloria Dei Lutheran Church in Cold Spring, figuring he could help them with: "What did Jesus do at Jairus' home? Did he cure Jairus' daughter of leprosy? Of blindness? Did he bring her back to life? Or, did he cure Jairus' wife of a 12-day hemorrhage?"

"We didn't have a clue," Krueger admitted. Alas, neither did Hennen, who suggested to his friends that Jesus cured Jairus' daughter of leprosy, when he actually brought her back to life.

Tom Decker, a Rocori senior who emceed the eighth-graders competition along with Brenda Kunkel, said that "kids learn better when you make it fun for them, and you could tell they're having fun tonight working together and using teamwork."

"The kids are really excited," agreed Jim Norman, watching his seventh-grade daughter, Emily, earn a blessing or two with some correct answers. "Learning about religion while competing like on a game show — it's a great concept."

St. Mark parish community celebrates new family center

By JOANN S. KEANE

HUNTERSVILLE — A vision, a community and population growth beyond expectations. These are the key elements that — once combined — resulted in the formation of the diocese's newest parish, St. Mark.

On Feb. 12, St. Mark Family Center was dedicated with a standing-room gathering of nearly 900 parishioners, friends and members of the community at large. For the dedication Mass, Bishop William G. Curlin presided, with Msgr. Joseph Kerin, St. Mark pastor, and Father Peter Jugis, parochial vicar, concelebrating. Also concelebrating were Charlotte-area pastors Msgr. Richard Allen, pastor of St. Ann, Msgr. William Pharr, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul, and Father Paul Gary, rector of St. Patrick Cathedral.

After just 30 months, St. Mark is making history as one of the fastest growing parishes in this and surrounding dioceses. In June 1997, St. Mark was established to serve a rapidly growing population in the north-

Western Regional CSS office expands, moves offices

ASHEVILLE — Sister Marie Frechette was searching the Internet. In rushed International Adoption social worker Carol Meyerriecks with the news that a large, century-old house, kitty-corner to the Catholic Social Services Western Regional Office in downtown Asheville, was for sale.

Sister Marie e-mailed the realtors, office manager Marie Bucher made an appointment and by that afternoon, a realtor was showing the staff the property.

"It was totally staff driven," said Sister Marie, a Missionary Servant of the Most Blessed Trinity and CSS Western Regional Office director, of the effort. In their small, current building, there was no more space for interns, no more space for grant proposals office space to write grant proposals, no more space for additional clients to be served.

Additionally, they couldn't expand their services to the fast-growing needs in the area. "We even had an office in a bathroom ... we had utilized every square inch of space," said Sister Marie.

A call went to Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte. Then the diocese sent Rev. Mr. Guy Piche, diocesan director of facilities. "Then we had to pray and wait for the diocese to make a decision," said Sister Marie.

On Jan. 4, 2000, the modernized,

Catholic rural life group endorses Rally for Rural America

DES MOINES, Iowa (CNS) — The National Catholic Rural Life Conference has endorsed the Rally for Rural America, planned for March 20-21 in Washington. "Rural life is being left out of the economic prosperity" now being enjoyed by many Americans, said Holy Cross Brother David Andrews, the rural life conference's executive director, in a statement. "We'll be there in force, bishops, clergy, laity from across the country," Brother Andrews added. "This is the Great Jubilee; rural life is at the heart of the heritage of jubilee."

Guest worker bill said to take too much, give too little

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Senate bill addressing issues related to immigrant agricultural workers neglects critical needs and would make circumstances worse for employees, according to the chairman of the U.S. bishops' Migration Committee. In a letter to Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Ore., Bishop Nicholas A. DiMarzio of Camden, N.J., argued that the Agricultural Job Opportunity Benefits and Security Act lowers the level of wages and eliminates benefits, such as requirements for certain employers to provide housing for immigrants allowed to work in the United States temporarily. Smith is the prime sponsor of the bill, which has been assigned to the Judiciary Committee. As of Feb. 15 it had not been scheduled for hearings.

Colombians meet with Vatican officials to gain support for peace

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A Colombian delegation held talks at the Vatican as part of a European tour to gain support for the war-torn country's peace process. Msgr. Giorgio Lingua of the Vatican's Secretariat of State met Feb. 14 with Colombian government officials and members of the country's largest rebel group, the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, known by its Spanish acronym of FARC. "It was an informational meeting. We did not go into details," Msgr. Lingua told Catholic News Service Feb. 15. "The delegation believes the role of the Catholic Church is important," he said.

Namibian religious leaders warn against spread of Angolan war

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — Namibian religious leaders expressed concern over the government's increasing involvement in the conflict in neighboring Angola and stressed that the war be kept outside Namibia's borders. Nine members of the Council of Churches of Namibia, including Catholic Archbishop Bonifatius Haushiku of Windhoek, met with Namibian President Sam Nujoma in Windhoek in mid-February and stressed their concern that "everything be done to regain control" of Namibia's border with Angola "and to contain the spilling over of the war into Namibia." Nujoma repeatedly has affirmed his commitment to helping the Angolan government. The Namibian government recently gave Angola permission for its troops to cross its border too crush pockets of resistance.

Vatican clarifies status of secretly ordained in Czech Republic

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican said clandestinely ordained priests and bishops in the Czech Republic who have failed to reconcile with church authorities are forbidden to celebrate Mass and the sacraments. After several years of Vatican efforts to regularize those secretly ordained under communism — including more than 60 married priests — the time has come to clarify the status of those who have refused the Vatican's terms, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith said in a statement released Feb. 14. "Difficulties remain and a clarifying discussion is requested," the statement said, without specifying when or where such a meeting would be held.

Report says hunger can be halved in 15 years

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A new report from the Bread for the World Institute says world hunger can be cut in half over the next 15 years with the help of an extra U.S. contribution of $1 billion per year to nutrition programs. The trends in hunger eradication are promising, said the report, "A Program to End Hunger," released Feb. 10 by the institute, which works closely with Bread for the World, a Christian citizens' anti-hunger movement. "The proportion of hungry people in the developing world has dropped from one-third to less than one-fifth since 1970. The absolute number has also declined in spite of there being 2 billion more people to feed," it said. The number of hungry people was estimated at 791 million in 1997.

Vatican confirms beatification date for John XXIII, Pius IX

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican has confirmed that Pope Pius IX and Pope John XXIII will be beatified in a Sept. 3 ceremony, along with three other churchmen. Archbishop Jose Saraiva Martins, prefect of the Congregation for Sainthood Causes, made the announcement Feb. 7 as he presided at a memorial Mass on the anniversary of Pope Pius' death. Pope Pius, who reigned from 1846 to 1878, convoked the First Vatican Council, solemnly declared the dogma of Mary's Immaculate Conception and led the church during the rocky period in which the papacy lost its temporal control over Rome and the papal states. Pope John, pontiff from 1958 to 1963, convoked the Second Vatican Council and presided over its first sessions. He wrote the landmark social encyclical "Peace on Earth."

western corner of Mecklenburg County. Two hundred and ninety one families signed up as charter members. Today, 1,204 families — more than 4,000 parishioners —constitute the St. Mark community.

Until Saturday's family center dedication, St. Mark was a parish family on the move. Beginning with Mass in a nearby bowling alley, moving into gymnasiums and with benevolent support of the ecumenical community, St. Mark has been a mobile community. "This was made possible through the graciousness of local churches and clergy in the area," said Msgr. Kerin.

"We were fortunate to have the clergy from our neighboring faith communities," said Pattie Fulford, chair of the parish's pastoral council. "They welcomed us into their churches, which gave us the space we needed for worship, education and fellowship."

"We had the benefit of starting our church without a facility," said Msgr. Kerin. "Instead of being a detriment, this allowed our parishioners to build a church of people instead of concentrating on bricks and mortar."

"It is powerful for a parish this large to feel that connected," said Fulford. With a roster of 1,200 families, Fulford adds, "That's a lot of people to feel connected as a family." However, the heart of the parish, she said, is its strong sense of community.

Now, 25,600 square feet in the form of a multipurpose facility will tether the community. And Msgr. Kerin expects the church population to grow another 50 percent by virtue of the building alone. The multipurpose building will be home for Mass, with a separate chapel, rooms for receptions and meetings, 15 classrooms, a youth room, a kitchen and five offices.

The Family Center is not a formal church building, stresses Msgr. Kerin. Rather, it is a building to host activities of the parish, including Mass. A formal sanctuary planned adjacent to the Family Center is expected to be built upon completion of the current debt.

St. Mark parish is located on 23 acres on Stumptown Road, near the intersection of Ranson Road in Huntersville. ▼

St. Mark's priest makes 50-year home in North Carolina

HUNTERSVILLE — It's ironic that what attracted Monsignor Joseph Kerin to North Carolina in 1953 was the fact that so few Catholics lived in the state.

Today, Kerin, 68, is pastor of St. Mark Catholic Church, one of the fastest-growing churches in the state.

Born in Scarsdale, N.Y., Kerin graduated from Niagara University in 1953 with a degree in business administration with an emphasis in management and accounting. After graduation, he began theological studies at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., and was ordained a priest May 30, 1957 in Wilmington, N.C.

"I've been serving Catholics in North Carolina ever since," said Kerin. "I was originally attracted to the missionary character of the state and the scarcity of Catholics at the time. I remember hearing Bishop Waters of Raleigh say that there were less Catholics in North Carolina than in most foreign missions, less than 7/10ths of one percent."

Kerin has found his challenge. Since 1957, he has worked with Catholics throughout the state including heading a mission in Boone; as a teacher and a principal at Asheville Catholic High School; as pastor of St. John's in Tryon, Our Lady of Assumption in Charlotte and Our Lady of Mercy in Winston-Salem; and as rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Charlotte. He also participated in a special project on behalf of the Charlotte Diocese in Mexico City for nearly three years, and was Chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte for seven years.

St. Mark is Kerin's second start-up parish. He also oversaw the beginnings of St. Matthew in Charlotte from 1986 until 1996.

Kerin sits back and smiles as he reflects back on his more than 40 years of serving North Carolina Catholics. "I've enjoyed every minute of it," he said. "I never had a moment's question in my mind about where I should be. I have been blessed by God in my work." ▼

Census 2000: Everybody counts in diocesan census

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — With the focus on the new millennium and a new century, the arrival of another decade has become lost in the hype. After ten years pass, the U.S. Census takes place during the first 15 days of that April. Along with this year's national roll call of citizens and general information about their lives comes a census of Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte.

The number of registered Catholics in the diocese has grown seemingly overnight; however, the exact number is not known. The census will determine that figure based on questions about religion within a household.

"We now have estimates of Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte based on what the parishes tell us, which is not always accurate, and we make the assumption that the Catholic population mirrors the general population based on household size," said George K. Cobb, diocesan director of planning, who will receive the information and process the results.

The Catholic census will coincide with the national census so that statistical methods can be used in order to build correlations between the general population and the Catholic population. Estimates can then be made from that data, which will be tested for accuracy and completeness, explained Cobb.

The reasons for the Catholic census include having an accurate portrait of the diocese, concerning ethnic make-up, number of people, household size and other areas and providing accurate future estimates of that portrait. The census will also provide parishes and the diocese with basic information for long-term planning and grant applications and will answer specific questions that the laity and the Church hierarchy want to know, said Cobb.

Simple information about each member of the household is needed: age, marital status, ethnicity, sacraments received, religion, if not Catholic, education level and occupation, if available.

Cobb stressed, "The information given to the diocese will remain confidential and will be reported as totals, not on an individual basis. People should feel comfortable about supplying honest answers to the questions because we are not asking anything of an overly confidential nature."

"The purpose is to census is learn how we are similar or different from the general population - not to intrude on the privacy of our parishioners," said Father Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor. "After the initial responses are entered and checked, the names of the respondents will be removed from the census database to preserve privacy."

The churches are doing most of the work by gathering the information about their parishioners already in their databases. Parishes with 300 families or less are submitting paper forms.

There are high numbers of people who attend church who are not registered in a particular parish. More work in gathering the unregistered population numbers, especially in the Hispanic community, needs to be done, said Cobb.

"Current estimates show that the number of unregistered Hispanic households will equal the total number of registered households in the future," continued Cobb.

"We have no clear understanding of the ethnicity of Catholicism in the diocese," he said. "We are increasingly becoming a multi-ethnic diocese, and the census will allow the Church to become more responsive to the minority population."

"This Catholic census will give us information needed for our parishes and the diocese to plan well into the next decade," said Father West. ▼

Korean-American Sharing Event

Arden parish celebrates with multicultural event

ARDEN — The church was filled with beaming faces, colorful silk gowns embroidered with flowers, dancing and plenty of food. It may sound like the scene of a wedding celebration — but, in fact, it was the Korean-American Sharing Event at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Feb. 5.

Using the occasion of the Lunar New Year, the parish community of St. Barnabas celebrated the rich heritage of their Korean parishioners by incorporating Korean-language prayers and readings into the Sunday liturgy, offering an orientation for other parishioners on the Korean culture. Sister Theresa Mangieri led a dialogue for Korean members

The event culminated with a presentation by members of the Korean community on their customs, a Korean dance and a potluck dinner featuring all the cultures represented by those in attendance.

It is the custom for Koreans to go from house to house on the New Year to offer a blessing to the elders of each family. In addition to demonstrating this custom for parishioners, the Korean community honored the pastor of the parish, Father Roger Arnsparger, as "father of the St. Barnabas family" by presenting him with a gift.

The featured speaker for the vent was Sister Anna Boland, a Maryknoll sister who has served in Korea for 30 years. Sister Anna had several in-service sessions with lay leadership and staff to help them understand some of the misunderstandings possible when two cultures come together.

The event was one of several programs throughout the diocese this year supported in part by grants from Catholic Relief Services from funds collected from Operation Rice bowl.

Based on the concept of mutuality, this effort was designed to show how important this small group of Korean families is to parish life, and how important it is for the larger faith community to support and reach out to them.

As a result of the increased communication, a growing trust and a mutual dependence between the two groups, members of the parish community who speak English as a first language will be trained and become tutors for those learning English as a second language. Parish leaders note that many Korean Catholics end up in other churches because the language barrier is so difficult to overcome.

Parish leaders hope that a natural outreach to other Korean Catholics in the Asheville area will occur. ▼

Encuentro 2000 will include multiethnic array of speakers

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The speakers at the upcoming Encuentro 2000, the celebration of the jubilee year for the church in the United States, are Hispanic, African-American, Vietnamese, Native American, Jamaican and Latin American.

The speakers' list was announced Feb. 7 by Auxiliary Bishop Gabino Zavala of Los Angeles, chairman of the event which is slated for July 6-9 at the Los Angeles Convention Center.

Encuentro 2000 will draw participants from around the nation to look at their experience as Catholics and seek ways to improve the acceptance of the many cultures which make up the U.S. church today.

Encuentro 2000 will draw participants from around the nation to look at their experience as Catholics and seek ways to improve the acceptance of the many cultures which make up the U.S. church today.

Previous Encuentro meetings have focused on Hispanics in the church, but for the jubilee year 2000 the bishops' Committee on Hispanic Affairs is seeking to broaden the event by inviting representatives of all groups.

Encuentro 2000 speakers include:

— Archbishop Francois X. Nguyen Van Thuan, a Vietnamese bishop and president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace.

— Georgiana Sanchez, lecturer in American Indian studies at California State University Long Beach. Sanchez, a member of the Chumash Nation, is a storyteller and nationally published writer.

— Msgr. Raymond East, a nationally known African-American revivalist and pastor of Nativity Parish in Washington. He has been active in encouraging interfaith efforts in the District of Columbia.

— Sister Marie Chin, president of the Institute of the Sisters of Mercy of the Americas. She is a native of Jamaica and a popular speaker who has worked in educational and retreat programs throughout the United States and the Caribbean.

— Mercy Sister Carolee Chanona, native of Belize and coordinator of small Christian communities in the Diocese of Belize City-Belmopan.

— The Rev. David Beckmann, a Lutheran minister, economist and president of Bread for the World, a nationwide Christian citizens' movement whose members seek justice for hungry people through lobbying efforts. He is author of "Friday Morning Reflections at the World Bank" and coauthor of "Transforming the Politics of Hunger."

— Bishop Wilton D. Gregory of Belleville, Ill., vice president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. Bishop Gregory holds a doctorate in sacred liturgy and has written extensively on liturgical issues, especially in the African-American community.

— Kathy McGinnis, co-founder with her husband of the Institute for Peace and Justice, an interfaith, nonprofit organization based in St. Louis and working to respond to violence rooted in war, racism and global economic injustice. She is also co-founder of a spinoff organization called Parenting for Peace and Justice. She will be speaking with her daughter Theresa.

— Father Mario Vizcaino, executive director of the Southeast Pastoral Institute in Miami, one of the nation's eight regional offices for Hispanic ministry.

"The many faces in God's house at Encuentro 2000 will show dramatically the picture of the church in the United States," said Bishop Zavala. "With their history of immigration, the United States and the church therein are microcosms of the world.

"Our example of many living together as one can become a profound message to go beyond our borders," he added. "Peace begins with understanding one another and that develops as we share our concerns and feel in our hearts that what we have in common binds us. The events during the four-day Encuentro will highlight that reality."

In addition to major addresses, Encuentro 2000 activities will include liturgies, workshops, an international food festival, music and dances by various ethnic groups and other celebrations to highlight the many faces of the church. ▼

Column on weddings in diocesan paper fills Ann Landers' mailbox

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (CNS) — An Ohio bishop's column on how priests struggle with many aspects of modern wedding preparations created a firestorm in Ann Landers' advice column when she printed a letter about the issue, then invited clergy to share their views. The original column that sparked the reaction was by Bishop Thomas J. Tobin of Youngstown. Writing last May in his "Without A Doubt" column in his diocesan newspaper, the Catholic Exponent, he pointed out that many priests are not happy with the secular practices surrounding wedding ceremonies and receptions.

POW bracelet links nun to presidential candidate

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Sister Mary Leanne Leszczynski doesn't consider herself a political activist. But there she was on stage with U.S. Sen. John McCain Feb. 7 during a presidential campaign rally outside Detroit. It turns out the Catholic high school principal, who never met McCain before, had something very personal for him. She presented him with a metal bracelet engraved with his name and the date he was captured in the Vietnam War. She had worn it every day for nearly four years while praying for his release.

U.S. moral theologian Father Richard McCormick dies

CLARKSTON, Mich. (CNS) — Jesuit Father Richard A. McCormick, 77, a leading U.S. Catholic moral theologian of the 20th century, died of respiratory failure Feb. 12. Following a severe stroke last June he had moved to the Colombiere Center, a Jesuit retirement and health care center in Clarkston. He was to be buried Feb. 17 at Calvary Cemetery in Toledo, Ohio, his hometown, after a funeral Mass at Gesu Church there. A specialist in medical ethics, from the 1960s through the 1980s Father McCormick was one of the key figures in scores of far-reaching ethical debates over new medical technology, especially in the genetic, reproductive and end-of-life areas.

Prelate known for ARCIC work named Westminster archbishop

MANCHESTER, England (CNS) — Bishop Cormac Murphy-O'Connor has been appointed archbishop of Westminster, succeeding the late Cardinal George Basil Hume. The appointment was announced Feb. 15 at Archbishop's House, Westminster. It ended months of speculation following the death of Cardinal Hume in June. Archbishop Murphy-O'Connor, 67, has been bishop of Arundel and Brighton since November 1977. He was once described by the weekly Catholic magazine The Tablet as "everyone's favorite bishop: human, genial, collaborative, imposing." He is known in his diocese and beyond as "Bishop Cormac."

Muslim, Jewish leaders say pope should repent in Holy Land

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Two religious leaders — one Muslim, one Jewish — said Pope John Paul II's visit to the Holy Land should be an opportunity to repent for the Catholic Church's past wrongs. In a February colloquium sponsored by Sacred Heart University in Fairfield, Conn., and The Elijah School for the Study of Wisdom in World Religions in Jerusalem, Rabbi Shear Yashuv Cohen of Haifa, Israel, said the papal visit should be used to "repair and repent from age-long preaching of hatred" by Christians against Jews, he said. Ibrahim Sarsur, head of the Islamic Movement in Israel, said he would like the pope to use his visit to apologize to the Muslims of the area for wrongs of the past.

Archbishop hails journalists' soul-searching after AOL merger

ROME (CNS) — The Vatican's top media official hailed evidence of professional soul-searching by many U.S. journalists after the announced merger of America Online and Time Warner. Given the media's huge impact in shaping public opinion, all press organs must continually ask themselves about the objectivity of their reporting, said U.S. Archbishop John P. Foley, president of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications. Objectivity is a "question which is always important, but which becomes even more critical as the concentration of power in the media becomes ever greater," he said. The archbishop made his remarks Feb. 4 to the Croatian Association of Catholic Journalists meeting in the Croatian capital, Zagreb. His speech text was distributed to journalists in Rome.

Vatican demands return of Congolese archbishop to archdiocese

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged the return of a Congolese archbishop to his archdiocese, calling rebel authorities' refusal to let him travel home a "a grave violation that painfully injures all Catholics." The pope made his remarks following his Feb. 16 weekly general audience. He appealed for an end to Congo's civil war and prayed that Archbishop Emmanuel Kataliko of Bukavu, Congo, "would return quickly to the flock that has been entrusted to him." Archbishop Kataliko was on his way home from the capital, Kinshasa, Feb. 12 when members of the rebel group Congolese Rally for Democracy seized him and sent him to Butembo, his childhood home. He remained under house arrest. A Feb. 14 Vatican statement said, "The faithful of the diocese ask with grief-stricken insistence for the return of their pastor, who has been especially appreciated for his apostolic courage in defending the rights of all people.

15-room house was purchased. It was the opportunity they had been waiting for: to expand services, to provide other diocesan offices in the west, to access much-needed parking.

Much scrambling ensued: painting, repair, creation of four walls for three new offices, carpeting, a new phone system. The CSS staff, volunteers and painters are currently working evenings and weekends to beat the March 1 date when they have to vacate their current house.

"We've had so many answered prayers," said Sister Marie. "Literal ones, like locks suddenly working, phone calls coming at the right moment."

The diocesan chancery envisioned this new acquisition of property at 50 Orange Street as a "virtual Pastoral Center West," to better meet the needs of the people in western North Carolina, Sister Marie said.

The Diocesan Support Appeal supplies substantial funding to the CSS Western Regional Office, said Sister Marie. "Last year we received $163,000 dollars — about 45 percent of our operating budget," she noted. "Without this money, we would be sorely strapped to meet the burgeoning needs of the people in this area. We realize that the amount we receive is greater than what we would get in most other dioceses."

CSS provides four main areas of service: sliding-scale counseling for families and individuals; Immigration and Hispanic Services; Adoption/Pregnancy Support; and the Christmas Program.

Counseling

Counseling for families, individuals, couples and marriage is a growing area, said Sister Marie. "There is a lack of affordable counseling in this area, since several major organizations have closed their doors," she said. CSS provides a sliding-scale fee for those needing counseling who want to make changes in their lives. These needs might be for families in developmental crisis, separation/divorce, teen crises, empty nest syndrome, grief, and so on.

Immigration/Hispanic Services

Immigration/Hispanic Services provides for people of any nationality desiring assistance with immigration papers, green cards, naturalization and permanent residency and reunification of families. There is an emphasis on the Hispanic population, since the Diocese of Charlotte has the fastest growing number of Hispanic people in the nation.

CSS has submitted a grant proposal to the United Way in Buncombe County for a case manager to help Hispanics interface with the business community and with consumer society in WNC. This includes such basic social service skills as helping Hispanics deal with auto repair or product guarantees. "In a sense, (we are) a consumer advocate," said Sister Marie.

Adoption/Pregnancy Support

Adoption/Pregnancy Support has two main areas: International Adoption, which currently places infants and older children from Russia and China; and Domestic Adoption, which places infants within the Charlotte Diocese and assists birth parents with pregnancy concerns.

Jerry Tudela, Sister Marie Frechette, and Marie Bucher prepare the new facility of Catholic Social Services' Western Regional Office in Asheville.

Recently, CSS sent workers to Vietnam to investigate the possibilities of adoption from that nation. "We can take referrals for the whole USA," said Sister Marie.

An increasing number of requests come from couples who find themselves with an unexpected pregnancy, said Sister Marie, noting that "we are a Respect Life agency."

Christmas Program

The office's Christmas Program provides selective resources assistance during Advent.

"Our hope is that this base here in Asheville will allow us to give services to a larger area of people — something like a home base," said Sister Marie. "We would like to be able to expand to the west and be visible in the Smoky Mountain Vicariate." CSS would like to be more sensitive to the needs and be more creative with funding sources to meet the needs in out-lying areas, she added.

Sister Marie also envisions the development of volunteer assistance to free up office manager Bucher to address the concerns of the mission as an agency. "We have many generous people who often want to volunteer their time and talent," she said.

The CSS Mission Statement, approved in 1996, is one the Western Regional Office strives to live:

"Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte, North Carolina, Inc., is a Christian ministry of love, service and justice dedicated to supporting and empowering individuals, families and faith communities as they meet the challenges of life and address the conditions of society." ▼

Catholic Social Services is among the 35 ministries and agencies receiving funds from the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

House approves Congressional Gold Medal for Cardinal O'Connor

By PATRICIA ZAPOR
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — With just one dissenting vote, the House voted Feb. 15 to bestow the Congressional Gold Medal on New York Cardinal John J. O'Connor "in recognition of his accomplishments as a priest, a chaplain and a humanitarian."

In bringing the measure to a vote, Rep. Vito Fossella, R-N.Y., lauded Cardinal O'Connor for his commitment to education for all, his care for the sick, elderly and disabled, his involvement in interfaith understanding and his long career as a Navy chaplain, bishop and archbishop.

Senate approval and the president's signature are necessary before the medal may be awarded.

Cardinal O'Connor, 80, was praised by members of the House for his pro-life activities, his contributions to the Irish peace process and his sense of humor.

Rep. Christopher Smith, R-N.J., said Cardinal O'Connor is "a good and holy priest who radiates Christ and the healing power of God to believers and nonbelievers alike."

Smith praised the cardinal for working "tirelessly and effectively to bring an end to the culture of death."

Rep. Spencer Bachus, R-Ala., said in recognizing Cardinal O'Connor with the Congressional Gold Medal, the House honored "all those men and women who each day put their faith into action."

The same day, the House also approved a measure to bestow the Congressional Gold Medal on the late Charles M. Schulz, the cartoonist who created the comic strip "Peanuts."

In both votes, Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, cast the lone dissenting vote.

Paul said in a statement about the vote that he opposed spending $30,000 for such a medal.

"Appropriating $30,000 of taxpayer money is neither constitutional nor, in the spirit of Cardinal O'Connor, who dedicates his life to voluntary and charitable work, particularly humanitarian," the statement said.

Paul said he invited colleagues who asked for his vote to match his contribution of $100 toward the cost of the medal.

"To me, it seemed a particularly good opportunity to demonstrate one's genuine convictions by spending one's own money rather than that of the taxpayers, who remain free to contribute at their own discretion to the work of Cardinal O'Connor as they have consistently done in the past," Paul said. None of the members he approached took him up on his offer.

In 1997, Mother Teresa received a Congressional Gold Medal. And one has been approved but not yet awarded to Holy Cross Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, former president of the University of Notre Dame.

President Clinton in December signed the law authorizing the honor for Father Hesburgh. That medal is likely to be presented in an early summer ceremony, said Chris Mehl, spokesman for Rep. Tim Roemer, D-Ind., who sponsored the legislation to honor Father Hesburgh.

Mehl said it typically takes about six months to design the individual gold medals and have them cast.

There have been times when the recipient is honored before the medal is ready, however. Mother Teresa attended a June 1997 ceremony honoring her with the gold medal within weeks of the bill's approval. Her medal was presented to the Missionaries of Charity in September 1998, about a year after her death.

In the past, some medal awards ceremonies have been held in the Capital Rotunda, and others at the White House. Mehl said secondary presentations near the recipient's home also are common and that Father Hesburgh would probably have one at Notre Dame.

In addition to the legislation for Cardinal O'Connor and Schulz, bills have been introduced that would bestow gold medals on Pope John Paul II and a wide range of Americans.

Possible recipients include: the Apollo 11 astronauts; Gen. Henry Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; 1960 Olympics three-time gold medal-winner Wilma Rudolph; civil rights activists Jesse Jackson and Rosa Parks; former Presidents Reagan and Ford and their wives; and John Walsh, victims' rights advocate and host of the TV show "America's Most Wanted.

Some of those bills have languished more than a year without action. The House bill to honor Cardinal O'Connor was introduced Jan. 31. Both House and Senate versions of the bill honoring Schulz were introduced Feb. 10, two days before his death and three days before his last original "Peanuts" strip ran in Sunday newspapers. ▼

Sick treated to musical festival at Vatican for jubilee event

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican's Paul VI Audience Hall was transformed into a concert stage as artists from all over the world donated their time and talent to the Jubilee for the Sick and Health Care Workers.

Between performances from artists like Australian actress, singer and breast cancer survivor Olivia Newton-John and 92-year-old Cuban jazz sensation Compay Segundo, thousands of pilgrims listened attentively Feb. 12 to testimonials of spiritual triumph in the midst of physical pain.

U.S. volleyball player Kirk Kilgour, who led an Italian team to the country's national championship in 1975, said the 1976 accident that left him paralyzed changed his life forever.

"I found out very quickly that as an athlete everything I did was physical," he said.

"But I learned quickly that my arms and legs were not important. It was the mind that made me a man," Kilgour said to thunderous applause from the audience.

Andrea, an Italian boy from Naples who has spent much of his young life in hospitals, recounted his admiration for Gian Luigi Buffon, the Italian national soccer team's goalkeeper.

No sooner had Andrea pronounced Buffon's name than the soccer star walked on stage, carrying an official team jersey and ball for the 9-year-old boy.

While Buffon was unable to stay long due to a big match the following day, he said he would not have missed the concert for anything.

"Faced with certain human issues, I think soccer can move into second place," Buffon said.

The concert was broadcast live in Italy on state television and around the world via satellite.

Earlier in the day, jubilee celebrations brought the sick to the Colosseum.

Once the site of bloody Christian sacrifice, the ancient Roman amphitheater was transformed into a symbol of hope.

Organizers rendered the Colosseum handicapped-accessible for the first time to allow wheelchair-bound pilgrims to take part in a Stations of the Cross service.

The previous evening, a torchlight Marian procession illuminated Via della Conciliazione, the street leading from the Tiber River to St. Peter's Basilica.

More than 60,000 people, including 4,000 sick pilgrims, thronged St. Peter's Square, each holding a candle and a copy of the Gospel of Luke, for prayers in several languages.

Enormous television screens in the square showed a simultaneous procession at the French Marian sanctuary at Lourdes.

At the end of the service, Pope John Paul II blessed the crowd from the window of his private apartment and asked that Mary, "health of the infirm," might make the Holy Year a true year of grace.

The pope concluded the three days of celebrations for the sick and health care workers Feb. 13 at his weekly Angelus.

Before reciting the Marian prayer, he said sickness helped all people to understand human fragility and the desire for healing.

In Christ, said the pope, suffering acquires meaning.

"Sickness does not cease to be a trial, but it becomes illuminated by hope," he said.

Earlier in the celebrations, at an outdoor Mass in St. Peter's Square, Pope John Paul told 35,000 faithful — including 4,000 sick pilgrims — that Christ's incarnation gave meaning to suffering, so that "pain, illuminated by faith, becomes the source of hope and salvation.

"We cannot pass by in front of those who are sick. We must stop, bow down before their infirmity and generously share in it, thus lightening its burden and difficulties," said the pope. ▼

Book Review

Plot, character appeal in Patterson's latest, but little else

By JOSEPH R. THOMAS
Catholic News Service

Although he impregnates his girlfriend in a moment of mutual exuberance — demonstrating anew that sex sometimes has untoward consequences — senior homicide detective Alex Cross, the creation of the best-selling author James Patterson, again comes across as an appealing character in his latest foray against crime in Washington, D.C., the main setting for "Pop Goes the Weasel" (Little, Brown and Co., $26.95).

A caring 41-year-old former psychologist who, despite his age, "looks like a young Muhammad Ali," Cross calms crying babies, volunteers weekly at a parish soup kitchen, takes bus loads of inner-city boys to visit their imprisoned dads, and dotes on his own two children, left motherless when his wife was murdered — although why he would want to give boxing lessons to his daughter is beyond me.

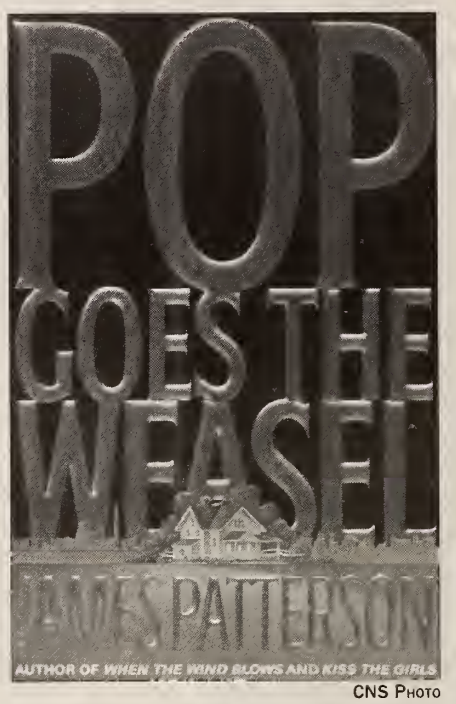
I mention all this out of a compulsion to say something positive about "Pop Goes the Weasel" other than the fact that, at its core, the plot device is a clever one. However, once you get past the character of Alex Cross, there is not much left to be positive about if you discount the fact that reading the book doesn't consume an undue amount of time.

"Pop Goes the Weasel" is Patterson's 12th — and possibly his worst — book. At least I hope he hasn't written anything worse than this because "Pop Goes the Weasel" is poorly written and poorly developed.

The dialogue is trite, descriptive passages are isolated and barren, the style is woeful, characterizations are perfunctory, inconsistent behavior is almost pandemic and events, as often as not, defy our sense of the rightness of things.

Is there, for instance, a court anywhere that would permit a clown to be called under one name but testify in full regalia as Silly Billy, or allow a defendant to make speeches in lieu of answering questions: Has television so corrupted our sense of the real that we are able to give credence to such silliness?

As for the plot, it revolves around an ongoing murderous fantasy game,



CNS Photo

"The Four Horsemen" (think in terms of "Dungeons and Dragons" with the victims being unsuspecting real people), played by British agents, some retired and yearning for the excitement of being assassins again, with the play of each being dictated by a roll of the dice.

Death, the chief player (others are Conqueror, War and Famine), is in reality Geoffrey Shafer, a psychotic now working out of the British Embassy in Washington. The head of a family he loathes, Shafer is the Weasel of the title.

This is not giving anything away because Shafer/Death is identified by Patterson right at the start when he notifies his fellow players that "death is on the loose in Washington, the game is on," then slashes the throat of a prostitute.

So this is not a whodunit because we immediately know who done it. Rather, it is a prolonged chase with the question being whether Death will be brought to justice before Washington is depopulated. Well, he is. Or he isn't. Or is he? Aye, there's the rub, as an old English hand at crime-and-punishment writing once put it in a quite different life-and-death context.

The Gospel story this week is about Jesus healing a crippled man whose determined friends lower him through the roof. I can no longer read this story without remembering the day I picked up my son Mark at school for his regular appointment with his orthopedic physician.

Our fondest dream was of the day when a doctor would say Mark could walk out of his office in freedom, unencumbered by his foot-to-hip leg brace and built-up shoe. During our drive we assured each other we would not be utterly disappointed this time if the answer to our hopes and prayers was once again "not yet."

The summer before Mark entered the first grade he had begun to experience excruciating pain in one leg and hip. An X-ray revealed a serious, progressive and painful deterioration of the head of the femur.

My fearless, rambunctious child was not only entering the first grade, but also a world of pain, limitations and ever-curious stares.

Our original physician had predicted Mark would be in his brace for 18 months. Four and one-half years had elapsed, almost half a lifetime for a child of 11, before we were seated in the crowded warmth of the waiting room on a snowy December afternoon.

In the examining room we watched as more snowflakes swirled past the window. While the X-rays were being developed, we distracted ourselves with wishes for a possible snow day.

When the doctor came in he flipped the film up for us to see. We watched in silence, almost without breathing. With a subtle smile the doctor turned to Mark and said, "Son, I think you're ready to walk out of here today!"

Neither of us moved for a moment. Final instructions are a blur. I remember our laughter. I remember our saying "Thank you."

Peppered by blowing snow, Mark gingerly walked to the car in his socks; he had no shoes. The cold was brutal, but we hardly noticed. I'll never forget the ride home that day. We laughed, we wept. The floodgates of pent-up emotion burst open.

In the midst of laughing and crying, the story of Jesus telling a man to take up his bed and walk filled my mind. We were living a variation of the story. I knew Jesus was telling us to go home and rejoice. He was saying enjoy the beauty and the gift of the ordinary — the gift of life.

Question:
Do you take time to thank God for the ordinary goodness of life, for the gifts of walking, seeing and hearing?

Tigger enjoys time with his young pal, Roo, in a scene from the animated feature "The Tigger Movie."

"Tigger" is fun, musical adventure

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — Tigger, Winnie the Pooh's bouncing tiger friend, sets off for fun and adventure to find his family in the musically animated feature, "The Tigger Movie" (Disney).

Despite having great friends, Tigger (voice of Jim Cummings) begins to realize that being the one and only can sometimes be lonely. Young Roo, his springy kangaroo friend (voice of Nikita Hopkins), is a wonderful bouncing partner, but Tigger wonders if there are other tigers out there just like him — his own tigger family. Soon the ever-exuberant Tigger springs into action to search for his "gigantical" family tree.

After looking high and low, Tigger has not found any sign of his family. Seeing their dear friend disappointed, Winnie the Pooh (voice of Jim Cummings also), Roo, Piglet (voice of John Fiedler), Rabbit (voice of Ken Sansom) and the rest of the gang decide to raise Tigger's spirits by dressing up and pretending to be his tiger family. But when Tigger discovers the truth, he becomes more determined than ever to find his real family.

The spirit of A.A. Milne's characters remains intact as a heartwarming story of love and friendship is told in the first original Pooh feature ever created for the big screen. Milne's lovable creatures leap out with vivid colors and artfully crafted animation as their adventure leads them through the Hundred Acre Wood and to the discovery of the meaning of family.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I -- general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G -- general audiences.

"The Tigger Movie" is at its whimsical creative best when Tigger's family members are portrayed in famous portraits such as "Whistler's Mother," Van Gogh's "Self Portrait" and even the "Brady Bunch" squares. Acclaimed Disney songwriters Richard M. Sherman and Robert B. Sherman ("Mary Poppins" and "The Jungle Book") have written six catchy new tunes for the film that will surely have young ones singing.

"The Tigger Movie" will surely have children bouncing while older ones will enjoy its clever and tender story. ▼

POPE JOHN PAUL II

History is humanity's path toward God, pope says

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — History is not a meaningless series of events, but is the path humanity travels toward God, Pope John Paul II said.

Already in the Old Testament, it was clear that God acted in history for the benefit of the people he created and chose, Pope John Paul II said Feb. 9 at his weekly general audience.

God's actions on behalf of the people of Israel, especially freeing them from slavery and leading them to the Promised Land, proved that "the Lord is not an impassive emperor crowned with a halo of light and relegated to a golden sky," the pope said.

God is a father who acts in history with tenderness and attentiveness to those who call upon him, he said.

"God the Father is not in any way indifferent to the things that happen to us," Pope John Paul said.

"The depth of God's love was fully revealed" when he sent Jesus into the world to save all men and women, he said.

When God the Son became part of human history he underlined history's meaning as the path toward eternity with God, the pope said.

Often it is difficult to see God at work in history and to realize that "the kingdom of God is already in our midst," he said. With the help of the Holy Spirit, people can understand the meaning of history and receive the strength they need to cooperate in building the kingdom.

"In the light of the Father, Son and Spirit, history ceases being a succession of events which dissolve into the abyss of death and instead becomes ground fertilized with the seeds of eternity, a path which leads to that sublime goal where 'God will be all in all,'" the pope said.

Outgoing emissary to Russia says pope-patriarch meeting unlikely

MOSCOW (CNS) — Hope for a meeting between the pope and the leader of the world's largest Orthodox church is no greater today than it was five years ago, said the Vatican's departing emissary in Russia. Archbishop John Bukovsky, the papal nuncio who was to retire Feb. 14 after a five-year stint in Moscow, believes a meeting of the two spiritual leaders could do much to ease tensions between the Catholic and Russian Orthodox churches in the former Soviet Union. "Such a meeting would give a terrific impulse to the resolution of problems. The Holy Father is ready to go tomorrow to meet the patriarch," said Archbishop Bukovsky, a 76-year-old U.S. citizen. "But the Russians would like to see the problems resolved first."

Justice for Jubilee 2000

Justice is often thought of in Old Testament terms: of a stubbornly just God constantly calling His people back to fidelity — faithfulness to the original covenant that God struck with the chosen people and the call to fairness and equity in dealings among the people. This biblical justice is expressed eloquently in Exodus:

"You shall not molest or oppress an alien, for you were once aliens yourselves in the land of Egypt. You shall not wrong any widow or orphan. If ever you wrong them and they cry out to me, I will surely hear their cry." (Ex 22: 20-22)

"If you lend money to one of your poor neighbors among my people, you shall not act like an extortioner by demanding interest from them. If you take your neighbor's cloak as a pledge, you shall return it before sunset, for this cloak is his only covering for his body." (Ex 22: 24)

It is often difficult to make this transition from an early society of mainly personal relationships and individual acts of justice to our more structured, complex and organized society of today. Herein lies the value of the distinction between person-to-person justice in a simpler time and the virtue of "social justice" in our time.

The act of social justice today is the virtue of organizing or re-organizing systems or institutions with the goal of advancing the common good — that is, the commonweal or common good within the network and moral reach of organizations, of civic life, or in the overall society.

Justice is often thought of, then, as merely giving a person what is their due — a cold, arm's-length virtue of being fair in our dealings — no more, no less. But it is much more than that, and it is warmed by a movement of the heart as well as the mind.

The act of social justice can mean that you care deeply about the people whom you may not know or ever meet. They may well live in a future generation. They may live in a distant country or continent. Because there are usually no final victories on the road to justice, you will often not see the fruits of your handiwork or witness the gratitude of a people helped or empowered.

Social justice can be called the public forum of love. It reaches beyond personal relationships and the familiarity of friends and associates who would be there to thank us and even reward our efforts.

Acts of social justice may involve:

— a just law or a more morally responsible budget;

— a public or private policy of including people in the shaping of their own lives and screening them into (instead of out of) participation and opportunity in the workings of society;

— working for solidarity and just relations within our community and our neighborhoods;

— the priority of a living family wage in our work life.

A successful act of social justice removes a condition that contradicts the God-given dignity of the person — whether the condition is poverty, unemployment, lack of affordable housing, discrimination, educational deficiency, or an unfair or inadequate health delivery system. In removing the dependency that often accompanies these social or economic conditions, social justice enables people to Grandparents' rights: Law over love?

The U.S. Supreme Court has been handed a proverbial can of worms this season, and I gather the members will be engaged for quite a while in juggling questions and opinions. What's the furor all about? Grandparents' rights. What I would call sacred matters have entered the arena of law.

The bottom-line judgment will rest on how the Supreme Court justices view the current laws allowing grandparents and other relatives to seek visitation rights after divorce or some other disruptive circumstance. All 50 states have such laws. The justices are expected to make a decision by June.

This matter really hits home for the 60 million Americans who are grandparents. That number includes six of the Supreme Court's nine justices. We must pray that these august professionals will wisely balance parental rights with grandparents' rights, since it appears this issue is now to be settled by law and not by loving hearts.

That's the problem I see. Look what we're talking about from the grandparents' perspective: our bloodlines; our descendants; our legacy to the future world; our love made flesh again through the children we brought into the world who now have given birth to their children.

All of this also is the proof of our incredible destiny: to be co-creators with the Lord. I don't believe grandparents can look at their child's child and not be overwhelmed with the wonderful mystery of life renewed.

This is why I feel it is a tragedy that the question of contact between grandparents and their grandchildren has now become a matter of law over love. How sad when parents and grown children can't get along or when in-laws get cut out of the lives of their grandchildren, nieces and nephews because of a bitter divorce. How pathetic when the hostility and power plays — with children the pawns in the action — lead to virtual hate and then to the courts for a decision with clout for the winner.

The winner? I can't find any winners when families become contenders. Everybody loses. Especially the children.

I may be accused at this point of being naive, not acknowledging that some grandparents may be miserable people who shouldn't be around their grandchildren. I believe they could still have visits, quietly supervised by the parents, without the intervention of the courts. This, I believe, would be "in the best interests of the children," who have the right to know who they came from.

If interference with child-rearing is the problem, parents should be able to control that without cutting the grandparents out of the child's life. Even miserable people can be loving when it comes to their grandchildren. I've seen that a few times!

Before I started writing this, I called my sister Rosemary to ask how she felt about having courts decide the matter of grandparents' visitation rights. Between us we have 29 grandchildren and nothing but joyful times to remember. We agreed on one thing totally: It is a tragedy when families develop such hostilities that they cut one another off.

We need more love in this world, and the seedbed for growing love should be our families. Courts may be able to make decisions, but there's no way to legislate what's really needed when it comes to families: loving relationships.

George Washington's "Happy Nation"

The foremost name in the history of the United States will always be that of George Washington. For generation after generation, Washington has stayed a constant, not merely the hero of the American Revolution and the father of a new nation, but also the man who defined our national character.

At a time when so many citizens, particularly the young, have grown weary, if not cynical, of those associated with the government and public service, Washington remains a guiding beacon.

Washington's sense of character is best expressed in his Farewell Address of 1796. At the age of 64 and after 45 years of public service, he declined to run again as a candidate for the presidency.

Rather than limit his announcement to a speech before Congress and government officials, he wrote it specifically for publication and distribution through newspapers in the hopes of reaching the American people directly. His Farewell is regarded as his most famous written work.

Washington singled out the "increasing weight of years" as his reason for retirement, then added, "Here, perhaps, I ought to stop." But he went on, explaining that the occasion gave him the opportunity "to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection."

His concern focused on the question as to whether the American people were capable of ruling themselves. Repulsed by the spectacle of factionalism and party politics, he urged his fellow citizens "to shape a common opinion that transcends self-interested differences that divide" the nation.

To do this, Washington stressed the need to strengthen the connection between morality and public happiness: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that National morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle. Morality cannot be maintained without religion."

Here was someone who looked through the confusion of the moment and seeing the ethical issues involved, gave voice to them. For him, the only way to sustain good government is by making individual citizens aware of their moral obligation to create the conditions for "decent politics." For those of us determined to restore character to our national life, the wisdom of George Washington urges us to be more resolute about weaving moral and spiritual fiber into the fabric of our democracy.

This year, our national election provides yet another chance to express fidelity to our principles. We could do no better than to consider a 1783 message from Washington which reminds us that each of us has a responsibility to God and neighbor to endow our country with good character, starting with our own:

"I now make it my earnest prayer, that God would most graciously be pleased to dispose us all, to do Justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that Charity, humility and [peace-making] temper of mind, which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed Religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example in these things, we can never hope to be a happy Nation."

Rather than saying it's impossible, we could just start by saying a prayer. Then we need only meet our own high standards to change ourselves and our country for the better.

The Solemnity of the Ascension of the Lord

"He presented Himself alive to them by many proofs after He had suffered, appearing to them during forty days and speaking about the Kingdom of God. ... As they were looking on, He was lifted up, and a cloud took Him from their sight." (Acts 1: 3-9)

For centuries, the celebration of holy days of obligation has been a part of Catholic life and worship. These feasts call us from our very busy lives to pause in celebration of major occasions in the life of the church, and they invite us to rejoice as a community of faith.

Sacrifice may be required to attend Mass on some holy days. Indeed, sacrifice is part of all our lives. We Catholics recognize occasions when illness or the demands of work legitimately prevent us from attending Mass on a holy day. But the holy days of the church — like all of her great devotional and historical observances — are truly teaching moments of grace for the faithful, and we are obliged as Catholics to participate joyfully in them.

Some holy days focus on various mysteries of salvation history, while others commemorate specific milestones involving the life of Jesus, Mary and the saints. For example, Pentecost commemorates the birth of the church and is celebrated 50 days after Easter. The Ascension celebrates Jesus' ascent into heaven 40 days after His Resurrection. Both holy days are among the church's most solemn observances.

Last year, during our annual November meeting in Washington, D.C., the Catholic bishops of the United States discussed the merits of transferring the solemnity of the Ascension of the Lord from a Thursday to a Sunday. Some bishops expressed confidence that transferring our observance of the Ascension to Sunday would assure that more Catholics would celebrate this great solemnity of the church. Others felt the need to continue to celebrate the solemnity on the specific day — in this case, 40 days after Easter.

Discussion of transferring the solemnity of the Lord's Ascension from Thursday to Sunday has long been an issue among U.S. bishops, and the topic continues to make headlines.

Last August, Bishop Joseph A. Fiorenza of Galveston-Houston, the president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, issued a formal decree approved by Pope John Paul II that authorized each U.S. province to transfer the solemnity of the Ascension from Thursday to the following Sunday. Two-thirds of the bishops within each province, or regional group of dioceses under an archdiocese, would have to vote in favor of the transfer in order to move the observance from Thursday to Sunday.

My brother bishops within the Province of Atlanta — which includes the Archdiocese of Atlanta and the dioceses of Charlotte, Charleston, Raleigh and Savannah — decided to keep

What is the "right order" of the Ten Commandments?

Q. Our community, like many others today, I understand, is having a major controversy about placing the Ten Commandments in a local park. One of the objections is that people, religious groups in particular, cannot even agree on how the Ten Commandments should read.

I'm wondering, when did the fourth commandment become the fifth commandment, as it is on a card I obtained from a religious goods store? One priest told me it is a Catholic-Protestant problem. Is that true? Is there a "right" list of the commandments?

A. The confusion arises from the fact that there are two lists of the Ten Commandments in the Old Testament, one in Exodus 20:1-17, the other in Deuteronomy 5:6-21. And there are differences.

In all major basics they are the same, of course, although some variations are noteworthy and perhaps reveal some information about the time in which each was written.

In Exodus, for example, in one commandment, a man's wife is listed as simply one of his possessions. You shall not covet your neighbor's wife, it says, "nor his ox or ass or anything else that belongs to him."

In Deuteronomy, however, which reflects a later time of Hebraic culture, the prohibition against coveting a neighbor's wife is put first and is an entirely separate commandment from the prohibition about the rest of his household.

This also in part may explain the difference in numbering. Exodus combines the last two of the other list, but seems to divide the first commandment into two.

Other divergences can result, naturally, from differences in translation, though these should not affect the numbering or the meaning.

It is not entirely accurate to name this a Catholic-Protestant problem. Following St. Augustine, some Jewish traditions and many fathers of the Western church, Latin-Rite Catholics and Lutherans normally use the enumeration in Deuteronomy.

St. Jerome and the Greek fathers, however, preferred the enumeration in Exodus. Protestants other than Lutheran have generally adopted that organization of the commandments.

Landings program gears up in Hickory

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

HICKORY — How long does it take parish members to learn a program for welcoming back returning Catholics? If they are using Landings, it just takes two to three days.

A group of St. Aloysius Church parishioners spent a Friday evening and a Saturday learning the program, and conducted their first session with returnees the following Wednesday, Feb. 9.

"We had such a good response with very limited advertisement," said Father Ed Sheridan, pastor at St. Aloysius. "I think that it's a great move forward. We need to have it in every parish. This is a non-pressure program, and I think it will help a lot of people. We need to reach out to them, show them that we're concerned about them, and make them feel at home."

Bobbie May and her husband, Rev. Mr. Hugo May, were two of the parishioners participating in the training program. "I've worked in a lot of programs," said Mrs. May. "This, to me, was an easy, welcoming thing. My husband and I both felt it was an evening well spent. It invigorated and encouraged me to see how people responded."

Tom Vallie, a parishioner at Sacred Heart Church in Brevard and one of the people who trained the parishioners at St. Aloysius, said that was just the point. "You can go into this thing after a brief training," he said. "Once a parish is trained, they are pretty well on their own to go ahead with it."

"The object is that people tell their story," said Vallie. "We're not telling them what they need to know. When you come to a Landings meeting, you know you are being listened to, because you are being responded to." Vallie has worked with 11 different Landings groups at Sacred Heart, and in 1995 became the first person in the diocese to be certified as a facilitator to teach people in other parishes how to run the program.

He said that about 15 parishes in the diocese have been trained to use the program so far, and that Father Jac Campbell, the founder of the program, and Joan Horn, the Landings National Coordinator, trained about 12 of those parishes themselves in 1995.

According to its web site, Landings is "a safe harbor or landing place for returning Catholics to explore their faith and their future with the Church." In this Paulist program of reconciliation, a group of six to eight active Catholics joins two or three returning Catholics to welcome them back into the Church. The program consists of a two-hour meeting each week for eight to 10 weeks. At the end of the series of meetings, the group goes on a retreat together to focus on reconciliation. At this point, those who still wish to return to the Church are welcomed back as full participants in the Church family.

"Experience with Landings shows that those who return, sometimes after 25-plus years away, discover that they have never stopped thinking of themselves as Catholic," said Vallie. "They have the faith written on their hearts.... Many only needed a simple invitation to start the trip back home to the Church."

One important feature of the program is that lay people, volunteers from the congregation, run it almost entirely by themselves, with minimal involvement of church staff and clergy. Although Father Sheridan participated in the training and in the first meeting of the group, he stayed in the background so that the parishioners could run the meeting.

"The parish is so excited that they can participate in bringing people back to God and the Church," said Bonnie Tamrack, a St. Aloysius parishioner working with the group. "We're very excited about the participation from both the people in our parish and the people coming back."

She said that the parish had so many people interested in returning that they will be probably have to form two separate groups in the coming weeks. "People are really hungry for the connectedness ... for knowing God and loving God on an intimate level," she said.

Each meeting follows a similar format. First, each person in the group briefly tells how he or she is feeling or how his or her week has been. Following that are "angel cards," which are small cards printed with one word and a corresponding picture of an angel. Some of the words on the cards are strength, joy, power, simplicity, forgiveness, gratitude and obedience. Each person takes a card at random, and then tells the group what that word suggests to him or her.

"Experience with Landings shows that those who return, sometimes after 25-plus years away, discover that they have never stopped thinking of themselves as Catholic."
— Tom Vallie

"By beginning to relate feelings about a little card with an angel and a word, the Landings group members begin to relax about speaking in a group," said Vallie.

After this introduction, a member of the group conducts a 10-minute prayer service. Then, another member of the group tells his or her faith story, after which members of the group are invited to tell briefly what touched them about the story. A third member then introduces a topic about one aspect of the Church for discussion by the group.

Each week new people volunteer to do these three parts of the meeting, so that each person in the group has a chance to do each part during the eight to 10 sessions. A Landings participant manual is given to each person to guide him or her in preparing for each part of the meeting.

Telling faith stories is central to the program, because it gives those desiring to return a chance to say what is on their minds, and a chance to hear the stories of the parishioners in the group. "This may be the first time they've ever spoken about what's in their heart," said Vallie.

Penny Atkinson, a parishioner at St. Therese Church in Mooresville and the other trainer of the group at St. Aloysius, advised the group not to ask participants to say more than they want to while they are telling their stories. "Encourage people not to go beyond their comfort zone," she said. "You want people to heal, not be wounded."

Mrs. May talked about how the first session went at St. Aloysius. "The people responded so well," she said. "They were open. They didn't feel threatened. It seemed like we'd known each other all our lives."

"I think that this program is very much needed," she added, "not just in our parish, but in the whole diocese." ▼

The principal nominee was Gerald S. Healy from Holy Trinity Middle School in Charlotte.

Lorraine Malphurs from St. Pius X School in Greensboro is one of 11 teachers from the South Atlantic States region to earn the NCEA Distinguished Teacher Award. She will receive her award at the NCEA Convention in Baltimore in April.

All of the teachers and Healy were recognized and honored for their achievements during the liturgy at the religion in-service day at St. Gabriel School in Charlotte on Feb. 11. ▼

the solemnity of the Ascension on Thursday.

Our faith permeates every day of our lives, and Ascension Thursday is one of those times in which we should come together as a worshipping community — not just out of obligation, but with a true sense of thankfulness for what God has done in our lives.

Celebrating the great mysteries of our faith by taking part in the church's holy observances — even with the sacrifices we must make from time to time — is one very important way we increase our reverence for Jesus and His church. I am convinced that our continued practice of celebrating Ascension Thursday will be a blessing for each of us and our diocese.

The trick in reading "Pop Goes the Weasel" is not to linger over such questions as "How could this be?", "Is this a rational thing to do?", "Does C proceed from A and B?", because this is the kind of story where one person can look another in the eye and somehow know what size shoe he wears.

This is also the kind of a story where "eyes go cold and hard," a particular cop is "smart and tough and could go all the way" (but gets killed anyway), someone else is "a prize catch," another is "a lone wolf," and Death "flies as high as a kite" when on drugs, just to cite some of the more banal phrases the reader encounters.

At one point, Cross, as narrator, tells of getting "an emergency call that blew off the top of my head." Arriving at "the nightmare scene," he "moved forward as if floating in a very bad dream." Death seemingly had attempted suicide. "My mind," Cross confides, "was unhinged."

So was mine. ▼

Catholic educators tell teachers to reawaken to vision of faith

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Through animated storytelling and with a focus on celebrating God's gifts, two leaders in Catholic education challenged over 500 diocesan Catholic schoolteachers to analyze their teaching methods and create innovative ways to help their students academically and spiritually in the new millennium.

Father Richard Fragomeni and Dr. Elinor R. Ford led two discussions for teachers from throughout the diocese on Feb. 11 at St. Gabriel School in Charlotte. The religion in-service day was part of an ongoing series of gatherings sponsored by the diocesan Catholic Schools Office.

During her presentation, Dr. Ford assumed the identity of "Mosetta," while expressing her ideas about Catholic education to the teachers. The concept she conveyed is that just as the faith journey constantly evolves with different leaders along the way, so does Catholic education with its own continuous journey every school year.

"Just as Moses was shown the Promised Land but could not enter it, I will not live to see the dream of building up the kingdom of God [through Catholic education]," explained Dr. Ford.

"We cannot teach children the same way we taught them 20 years ago," she stated. "We must change the paradigm we use for Catholic education."

Dr. Ford repeated that mantra as she talked about her topic, "A Quantum and Synergistic Creation." With paradigm meaning "model or pattern" and synergistic meaning "characteristic of a combined action," the idea is that teachers must change from "either/or" thinking to "both/and" thinking, explained Ford.

She said that children think in a "both/and" way, so teachers should try to do the same in their classrooms. Accepting differences and dealing with changes are ways in which educators can begin to focus on a "both/and" way of thinking and teaching.

She talked about the importance of faith and how Catholic schools can use that in educating their students.

"We have the advantage of speaking Christ to our young children," she said. "We are all part of the eucharisting community of Jesus Christ because we are still on a faith journey."

> "We have the advantage of speaking Christ to our young children. We are all part of the eucharisting community of Jesus Christ because we are still on a faith journey."
> — Dr. Elinor R. Ford

"If your students see you living your faith with a great passion and feel your love and concern, then you can teach them authentically, and we must give them an opportunity to practice their faith," she continued. "Every teacher has the seed of truth and faith within him or her, and if they put their heads together, the Holy Spirit will speak and a new paradigm will be revealed."

Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, director of religious formation for schools, coordinated the in-service day. "As in the past," she said, "missionaries have come to the Diocese of Charlotte to give us the faith, and we are all called in the new millennium to spread the Gospel to others."

The religion in-service day also featured Father Richard Fragomeni, associate professor of liturgy and homiletics at Catholic Theological Union in Chicago, Ill. Using his latest book, "Gifts for a Lifetime: A Sacramental Preparation Series," for teachers of sacramental preparation, he focused on the role of the sacraments in the lives of students and faculty during his talk, "The Language of God's Gifts."

A priest of the Diocese of Albany, N.Y., Father Fragomeni has ministered in parish work, Christian initiation, catechetics and spiritual direction. Known for his engaging manner with his audiences, Father Fragomeni urges those he encounters in his ministry to seek a deeper union with Christ through the sacramental life.

"Father Fragomeni gave us the roots of our faith, while Dr. Ford gave us the wings to fly with our faith," said Sister Maureen. "They came with a concept of taking ownership of our faith at the deepest level of the heart."

With her home base in Fairview, N.C., near Asheville, Dr. Ford travels all over giving seminars and talks. This year she will be teaching at Seton Hall University and Sacred Heart University in Connecticut.

Father Richard also served as the celebrant and homilist for a liturgy, featuring David Anderson as the music director. Anderson is an Illinois parish director of music and liturgy and workshop coordinator of GIA Publications Inc. in Chicago. The day began with the "Our Sisters of Mercy Overture" performed by the Holy Trinity Middle School Band. The overture was composed and directed by Alan Kaufman, the school's band director. ▼

Diocesan youth "hip" on peace

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

HICKORY — There are some new special agents in the Diocese of Charlotte. Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry deputized a group of middle school youth that participated in the Help Increase the Peace (HIP) program Feb. 18 to 20 at the Catholic Conference Center.

His charge to them was to "be active champions of peace and to try to help us spread the peace" throughout the diocese.

HIP is a national program sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization that includes people of various faiths who are committed to social justice, peace and humanitarian service. Staff in the Syracuse, N.Y., office originally developed the program in 1990 to address increasing violence in schools. Through workshops in schools and church groups, participants learn communication and conflict resolution skills that allow them to deal with confrontation in a creative and non-violent manner. They increase their awareness of different types of prejudice so that they can reduce it in their daily lives; and they learn about positive leadership and community building.

Some play goes along with all of this work. The workshops use games, role-playing and hands-on activities, alternated with discussion, to keep things lively. "I thought it was really fun," said Kate Urbowicz, a youth from Holy Family Catholic Church in Winston-Salem. "I got a lot out of it."

Shannon Hollars, a youth from St. Mark Catholic Church in Huntersville, agreed. "They make it fun. It's not all work."

The games are not chosen at random. Specific concepts are learned from each one. For example, in one of the activities, participants were told to close their eyes while a sticker was placed on each of their foreheads. They were then told to open their

Court considers school's ban on first-grader's Bible story

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — Twelve judges on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals heard oral arguments Feb. 16 in Philadelphia on whether a first-grader's rights were violated when he wasn't permitted to read a Bible story to his public school classmates. The case, which has been wending its way through the courts since 1997, pits a Catholic mother, Carol Hood, as guardian for her son, Zachary "Zack" Hood, against the New Jersey Department of Education, the Medford (N.J.) School Board and the teachers and administrators at Medford's Haines Elementary School. In 1996, when Zack was in first grade, his teacher had invited her best readers to read a favorite story to the class. Zack's selection was the story of Jacob and Esau, two brothers who had been estranged then reconciled. The problem was, according to court briefs filed on Zack's behalf, the story, called "The Big Family," was in a book called "The Beginner's Bible."

Committee extends 'charitable choice' to literacy program

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Faith-based organizations may be able to participate as partners in a $500-million federal literacy program for disadvantaged families as a result of a recent House committee vote. Members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce Feb. 16 adopted an amendment extending the "charitable choice" provision to Even Start, the federal program that provides tutoring for preschool children and literacy and job training for their parents. Under charitable choice, states and localities are encouraged to utilize charitable and faith-based organizations for the delivery of social services to the poor and needy.

Vaccine from aborted fetus cell lines judged morally acceptable

ST. LOUIS (CNS) — The St. Louis Archdiocesan Pro-Life Office says using a hepatitis vaccine derived from cell lines developed from an aborted fetus is morally acceptable because it is the only available alternative to the spread of the disease. The office said it had been receiving inquiries about the ethics of such vaccinations when a bill was passed in St. Louis County ordering food handlers to be vaccinated. Some of them have refused to get the vaccine because of their pro-life views. Hepatitis A, a viral infection of the liver, is usually contracted by consuming food or drinks handled by an infected person. The vaccination against it requires an initial shot followed by a booster shot.

Chiapas paramilitary closes church; 33 shut down in diocese

MEXICO CITY (CNS) — A paramilitary group operating with the support of local officials seized a church in northern Chiapas and forced its closure, the Diocese of San Cristobal de las Casas reported. A Feb. 16 statement from the diocese said the group, known as "Peace and Justice," closed the church Feb. 14, bringing to 33 the number of Catholic churches in the diocese closed because of paramilitary violence. The church is located in the indigenous community of Jol-Ako in the municipality of Tila, close to the Chiapas-Tabasco state border. Residents told the diocese that the church was seized Feb. 14 by Peace and Justice members accompanied by local civil authorities, including the public prosecutor.

Church regrets 16th-century execution of philosopher

ROME (CNS) — As academics and politicians placed flowers on the spot where rebel philosopher Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake 400 years ago, a Vatican official apologized for the execution but said the Inquisition's judges had acted in good faith. Bruno's "atrocious death" in a Rome square on Feb. 17, 1600, is viewed with "profound regret" by the modern church, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, Vatican secretary of state, said in a message to an Italian conference. But Cardinal Sodano said it was not up to modern church leaders to pass judgment on the motives of those who sentenced Bruno for heresy or carried out the execution.

Officials say Zimbabweans' vote shows deep dissatisfaction

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — A referendum result that spelled Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe's worst defeat in his 20-year rule was a sign of Zimbabweans' deep dissatisfaction with the economic crisis in the country, church officials said. The 55 percent vote against a new constitution that opponents said would strengthen Mugabe's already considerable powers revealed "people's reaction to the economic situation in the country, rather than to the constitutional issues involved," said Father Walter Nyatsanza, general secretary of the Zimbabwe Catholic Bishops' Conference.

Israel criticizes Vatican-PLO accord, but pope still welcome

JERUSALEM (CNS) — As a diplomatic controversy continued over the signing of a Vatican-Palestinian accord, Israeli officials criticized the Vatican move but said Pope John Paul II would still be welcome in March. "Israel views the upcoming visit of the pope in the region as an important historical mission," said Israeli Foreign Ministry Director-General Eytan Bentsur. "We are expecting a message of peace and conciliation that will not include any pre-determination of the results of the negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians," Bentsur said.

Pope to lead mental pilgrimage to Abraham's birthplace

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Unable to visit Iraq, Pope John Paul II said he will lead a special mental pilgrimage to the land of Abraham's birth. "This will be the beginning of my jubilee pilgrimage to the places linked to the biblical account of God's interventions in history," the pope said Feb. 16 at his weekly general audience. The pope said he would lead a special reflection on the life and faith of Abraham Feb. 23 at the Vatican. Pope John Paul was scheduled to travel to holy sites in Egypt Feb. 24-26 and in Jordan, Israel and the Palestinian territories March 20-26.

St. Julia Church responds to immigration protest with prayer

By JOHN STRANGE
NC Catholic

SILER CITY, N.C. (CNS) — St. Julia Church in Siler City responded to a local anti-immigration rally in perhaps the only way it could: with the Eucharist, and with prayer.

The church always holds a bilingual Mass on Friday nights, but the Mass Feb. 18 held more significance as it came the night before a demonstration aimed squarely at the hundreds of Spanish-speaking people who have settled in this small Chatham County city.

Several hundred people attended the afternoon rally Feb. 19 in front of City Hall. The demonstration featured former Ku Klux Klansman David Duke, who only recently established a group called NOFEAR — the National Organization for European American Rights.

Participants listened to Duke and other speakers and carried signs bearing slogans as "America: World's Septic Tank," "The Melting Pot is Boiling Over" and "Repatriate Aliens."

But Friday night belonged to St. Julia's. More than 250 people — Hispanic, white and African-American — filled the little church to celebrate Mass and pray for peace, understanding, and that Spanish-speaking residents will find welcome and belonging "beyond these walls."

"St. Julia's has been blessed from the beginning by the Latino population," said Father Dan Quackenbush, pastor of St. Julia's, during his homily. "It's been an experience of two cultures coming together and learning from one another."

Catholic North Americans in Siler City have been "sensitized," Father Quackenbush said. "Our eyes have been opened to the plight of many people in other parts of the world, a plight that the North American has been spared to a great extent.

"We've come to know people who want a better way of life for their children and for their families. They come here to find that. And that's certainly what I thought America was all about," said Father Quackenbush, whose grandmother was an immigrant from Ireland.

Dr. Amanda Slater, a family physician who works in a local clinic, said she came to Siler City to show support.

"I'm here because these are my patients. It's because I love them very much. They are a very gracious and hardworking people," she told the NC Catholic, newspaper of the Raleigh Diocese.

Slater, a parishioner at the Newman Center at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, said she had talked to several of her patients, and found that many of them were offended by the coming demonstration.

"They said, 'We were invited here to work. The jobs we're working, nobody who lives in this country wants to do — cutting the wings off chickens in freezing plants, working in the fields. We've been invited, and we're bringing commerce into these areas.'"

Nolo Martinez, director of Hispanic/Latino Affairs for Gov. Jim Hunt's office and a Catholic, attended the Mass, and said afterward that the strong protests expected at Saturday's rally were rare.

"I have been in North Carolina for 14 years, and I have not ever experienced this kind of manifestation against Hispanic immigrants," he said. "In my experience I hear more opinions and comments about the wonderful things that Hispanics bring to our state."

Martinez said the Siler City demonstrations may prove to be a catalyst for ethnic groups, churches and activists to begin to work together to better welcome Spanish-speaking peoples.

"It would be beautiful if we have the African-Americans and the Hispanics together on this," he said. "In that respect, thank you to David Duke for bringing us together."

St. Julia's also heard from Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh, whose letter to the Hispanic community in Siler City was read in English and Spanish at all weekend Masses.

"Society has not always welcomed you as our God welcomes strangers," he wrote. "Be assured that the church stands with you on your journey and will work to respect your dignity as persons and your place in our society."

After it was all over, Father Quackenbush said, "I think we're all eyes and find their group, without talking. The task of sorting themselves into groups led the participants to discuss how people classify themselves and others as members of various groups in society. From there, the participants discussed the positive and negative aspects of groups. This led into a discussion about prejudice.

Peter May, HIP coordinator for the southeastern regional office of the American Friends Service Committee, came from Atlanta to help with the weekend retreat. He, along with Kotlowski and John Robichaux, youth ministry event coordinator for the diocese, worked with the group, which was the first in the diocese to participate in the program. "I'm really pleased," said Kotlowski. "This is my first HIP experience. I was really eager to introduce this to the diocese, in light of what's been happening recently in the middle schools and high schools."

Kotlowski said that the pilot program in this diocese was for youth in middle school, but that the plan was to offer the program to high school students as well, while also training some youth and adults to be facilitators. He said that he did not plan to alter the program, but wanted to add Catholic and Christian components to it. Robichaux, from St. Pius X Catholic Church in Greensboro, went to Atlanta in July 1999 to be trained as a facilitator. He said he was planning his first high school HIP weekend for the fall, and that he hoped eventually to open the program to college campus ministries.

May, who is working to expand the program in the southeastern United States, talked about this group of middle school students. "I was really impressed with them," he said. "They were an incredibly sophisticated group. They grasped the concepts immediately. It was almost like working with adults."

Shannon Hollars said that the program made her feel that way. "I liked that the facilitators treated you as an equal," she said.

"It was more than just sitting around," added Rachel Weiner, a youth from St. Thomas Aquinas Catholic Church in Charlotte. "We interacted and got to know everyone."

breathing a sigh of relief, and we're hoping it's not too premature."

But St. Julia's did not come through unscathed.

When Father Quackenbush opened the church Feb. 19, he saw that a lighted bilingual sign in front of the church had been vandalized, and that two tires on a van recently donated by a family had been slashed.

Maj. Al Craven of the Siler City Police Department said the letters on the English side of the sign were arranged to read, "White Power." Also left behind was a poster-size sign which told immigrants to leave and declared "This is our land."

According to Craven, the vandalism was being investigation. If arrests were made, he said, it would be likely that suspects would be charged with a felony under hate crime laws.

"We survived," Father Quackenbush told the NC Catholic. "But I can't say that I feel totally comfortable now.

"I got to know a whole bunch of different people," said Zachary Carter, a youth from St. Barnabas Catholic Church in Asheville. "I got to learn new techniques to stop violence and keep peace."

Kristan Cardinali, a youth from Holy Family Catholic Church in Winston-Salem, also talked about the non-violent strategies she had learned during the program. "This made me realize that I could use my mind to accomplish almost anything," she said. ▼

Busy Mocksville parish overflowing with activity

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

MOCKSVILLE — It can be called the little parish that could. The church began as a vision and a dream for three families in the Mocksville area in 1955, and 45 years later, St. Francis of Assisi Church is a visible and thriving presence in the area.

"We want to build a new church because our parish is expanding. I can't believe how many new people have come in the past three months. We grew up together and everyone knows everyone else. The youth are the reason why we need a new church because they are important; they are the ones who will be here after we are gone."

— Vince Mannino, parish fundraising chairperson

Now and Then

From celebrating Mass in the homes of the original three families to the present building, Mary and Eugene Pope have been there from the beginning. The family had been attending Mass in Winston-Salem when they decided they wanted their own parish.

"We were very close-knit then, and we still are," said Mrs. Pope. "I am surprised about the growth. When people started coming from up north, the congregation just started getting bigger."

When there were 11 families, the liturgy began to be celebrated in the local National Guard Armory, moved to a small house that was purchased, and then, the present structure was built where the house once stood.

"We keep things very personal, and we are interested in what one another is doing. We try to involve everyone in the parish activities," continued Mrs. Pope.

The parish has seen many administrators and priests come and go over the years, including Mercy Sister Bernadette McNamara, Mercy Sister M. Anita Sheerin and Mercy Sister Mary Carmelita Hagan.

"I enjoyed working in that community because there is a great spirit among the people," said Sister Bernadette, now the administrator at St. Joseph of the Hills Church in Eden. "They had to bond together to keep the church going."

November 1998 brought cooler weather and the arrival of a pastor. Third Order Regular of St. Francis Father Andrew Draper, who had been the chaplain of Maryfield Nursing Home in High Point, where his parents are in residence, was sent to the parish.

"When I arrived, there were about 98 families, now, there are about 120 families," said Father Draper. Along with the installation of the first pastor, Father Draper attributes the growth to additional Masses, a Saturday vigil and daily Masses, and the steady growth in the Mocksville and surrounding areas.

"What amazes me is how the parishioners can rearrange the building from a church to a hall to something else by simply moving the folding chairs," joked Father Draper.

As more families poured into the parish, there came a time when some of the male parishioners agreed that in order to better serve the needs of the community, St. Francis needed a Knights of Columbus council of its own. The fact that Father Draper is a fourth-degree knight himself may have a little something to do with the newest council in the diocese.

Good Knight

Through the efforts of Grand Knight Roger Hunckler, Past Grand Knight Jim Gildean, District Deputy Knight Matt Reilly and State Deputy Knight Bob Singer, the St. Francis of Assisi Knights of Columbus Council #12610 has the distinct honor of a Jan. 1, 2000, inception date. They are the first new council of the millennium in the United States.

"After Masses, Father Draper would encourage the men to sign up, and we were able to get the 30 men we needed for the council," explained Gildean. "Anytime you start something new, that is already great, but being able to tie it in with the millennium was really special and important."

Some of the projects that the council has been involved in include repairing and replacing the front steps of the church, replacing the front doors of the church and doing electrical work in the kitchen and back areas of the building. Their meetings are held on the property of a fellow knight who owns a nearby hall.

Gildean is not only involved with the Knights of Columbus but has also been the Shamrock Run director for the last two years. The Shamrock Run has become an event that the parishioners and the community have looked forward to for the past 12 years.

The Luck o' the Irish

In 1988, while Sister Bernadette was the administrator, she, Vince Mannino, and his daughter, Anna-Jo Mannino, came up with the idea for a fund-raiser for the building fund.

"I felt it would be a great community builder and that people in the parish could work and do things together," said Sister Bernadette. "Of course, the idea was that it would generate funds, but that wasn't the original purpose. It was a way for the other area churches and surrounding community to become involved with the congregation."

So, named after a symbol of her Irish heritage, the Shamrock Run was born. For the first year, there were 33 participants in the 5K walk and run and the 10K run. Last year, the number jumped to 182 runners and walkers. This year, on March 11, with cooperation from the local Chamber of Commerce, the route will now pass through downtown Mocksville.

When Sister Carmelita asked Gildean to take over as race director, he had no idea how much he would have to do. He and the committee are in charge of advertising, and this year, there is a website running on the Internet. They worked with the local chamber to create a new course that would challenge the participants.

"This is the largest fund-raiser for the church, and there is a lot of parish and community involvement. There has been so much positive growth, and there is a positive spirit and friendship among the parishioners," said Gildean.

Vince Mannino has volunteered his cooking talents in past years and managed to get many items donated and has generated support from local businesses through his work as the parish fund-raising committee chairperson.

"This event brings a community atmosphere to the town; it is the biggest event we have in Mocksville," said Mannino.

"We want to build a new church because our parish is expanding. I can't believe how many new people have come in the past three months," added Mannino. "We grew up together and everyone knows everyone else. The youth are the reason why we need a new church because they are important; they are the ones who will be here after we are gone." ▼

Bring Christ to the world, pope tells permanent deacons

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Permanent deacons must not let anything stop them from bringing Christ to the world, Pope John Paul II told deacons celebrating their jubilee at the Vatican. "Do not let difficulties and opposition trouble your hearts but, on the contrary, grow in your trust in Jesus who redeemed men and women through the martyrdom of the cross," the pope said. More than 2,000 people — deacons, their wives and family members — attended the Feb. 19 papal audience during the Jubilee for Permanent Deacons at the Vatican. Later the deacons, many holding hands with their wives, processed from the center of St. Peter's Square, through the Holy Door and into St. Peter's Basilica to renew the promises they made at ordination.

CEO of Best Buy gives $50 million to a Catholic university

ST. PAUL, Minn. (CNS) — A high school graduate who never attended college has endorsed higher education — and the University of St. Thomas — in a big way. Richard Schulze, founder, chairman and CEO of Best Buy Co. Inc., and his wife, Sandra, have presented the university, with campuses in St. Paul and Minneapolis, with an unrestricted gift of $50 million. This is the largest gift in the school's 115-year history, and the largest donation ever reported by a college or university in Minnesota. Schulze, who is on the university's board and received an honorary doctor of laws degree in 1998, said his family, which includes four daughters and one son, has been blessed and that it is important to give back to the community in a meaningful way.

Priest beaten with cross, stabbed in his Buffalo church

BUFFALO, N.Y. (CNS) — A parish priest in the Buffalo Diocese was beaten with a cross and stabbed with a holy water sprinkler Feb. 14 by a man who told police he wanted to kill the clergyman. Father Arthur J. Mattulke, 30, was attacked at about 6:30 a.m. on Valentine's Day at St. Margaret's Church. He was hospitalized overnight with a puncture wound to the back, and contusions and abrasions to the head. He was released Feb. 15. The priest was assaulted not long after the front doors of the church were opened for morning Mass, according to police.

Archbishop Tutu gets honorary degree from Seattle University

SEATTLE (CNS) — Though commencement is still months away, thousands of people flocked to Seattle University Feb. 13 to watch a special "graduate" receive his diploma. Retired Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Peace Prize laureate from South Africa, accepted an honorary degree from the Jesuit-run university for his role in dismantling apartheid and helping to heal its ugly wounds. "This is an important day in the history of Seattle University," said Susan Secker, acting provost, calling the archbishop's life "a model of justice for our students." Archbishop Alex J. Brunett of Seattle praised Archbishop Tutu for "the powerful message of justice and peace that you proclaim and witness in your own personal life."

Texas bishops ask governor to suspend executions

AUSTIN, Texas (CNS) — The Texas Catholic bishops have asked Gov. George W. Bush to suspend executions pending a thorough review of the state's system for carrying out capital punishment. In a Feb. 16 letter, Holy Cross Brother Richard Daly, executive director of the Texas Catholic Conference, asked on behalf of the state's bishops that Bush suspend all future executions on a case-by-case basis. Under the Texas Constitution, the governor does not have the authority to issue a blanket order stopping executions, even temporarily. But it would be legal for the governor and the Board of Pardons and Paroles to suspend executions individually as they come up while a study is conducted.

Dallas high school soccer teammates make major league

DALLAS (CNS) — It was a dream come true Feb. 5 when Major League Soccer teams drafted two young men who were soccer standouts together while students at a Dallas Catholic high school. Nick Garcia and Dominic Schell, who played together at Bishop Lynch High School in the mid-1990s, were drafted by the Kansas City Wizards and the Columbus Crew, respectively. Both players won the Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools state title in 1995. Garcia led the Lynch Friars to the state title again in 1996.

Teacher In-service

Gay and lesbian ministry and the school system

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — "Are we opening wide the doors to Christ to anyone and everyone?" This was a question posed to the group of sixth- through twelfth-grade religion teachers by Jesuit Father Gene McCreesh, administrator of St. Peter Church in Charlotte. This session, held at Charlotte Catholic High School on Feb. 16, was the second of two days of in-service, entitled "The Catechism of the Catholic Church," for diocesan teachers. The day before, teachers met at Bishop McGuinness High School for the same presentation.

"The Holy Spirit is in everyone — the inclusiveness of all as brothers and sisters of God," said Father McCreesh. "This is the great joy of our church; no one should be left out."

He is a member of the 12-person Diocesan Commission for Ministry to the Gay-Lesbian Community and Their Families, a board that advises and supports the bishop on how to best reach out to gays and lesbians in the diocese, said Father McCreesh.

The topic involved reiterating the words found in the "Catechism of the Catholic Church," on which the religion textbooks used in the diocese, including "Morality: A Course on Catholic Living," are based.

"This session concerns what the church's teachings are about homosexuality," explained Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, director of religious formation for schools and coordinator of the two days of teacher in-services. "With the diversity of views of teachers in the Catholic Church, we are asked to teach from the "Catechism of the Catholic Church."

Father McCreesh gave handouts to the teachers from part three "Life in Christ" and chapter two "You Shall Love Your Neighbor as Yourself" from the catechism.

The talk was based on the section about "chastity and homosexuality," subsections 2357 through 2359. The passages read: "The number of men and women who have deep-seated homosexual tendencies is not negligible. They do not choose their homosexual condition; for most of them, it is a trial. They must be treated with respect, compassion, and sensitivity ... homosexual persons are called to chastity."

"We cannot tell homosexuals that they do not belong to the church and are excluded and hated by God," said Father McCreesh. He added that the church needs to ask itself if it is opening up the doors to Christ because everyone should be included.

He told the teachers that they need to be more aware of their students' thoughts and feelings and not to focus on their own ideas, regarding gays and lesbians.

"We cannot let another generation of gay and lesbian youth grow up hating the Catholic church. This is a matter of justice, not of your fear, anxiety or feelings," stressed Father McCreesh. "These youth are important because they are vulnerable to suicide and self-hatred. We are not encouraging a gay lifestyle; we are trying to make clear the fundamental teachings of the Catholic church."

Jackie Ferry, Charlotte Catholic High School religion department chairperson and freshman and sophomore teacher, introduces Jesuit Father Gene McCreesh, the speaker at the religion teacher in-service on Feb. 16 at Charlotte Catholic High School.

He talked about how some teachers, uncomfortable with the topic, may be as reluctant to address the issue in their classrooms. The children are also as reluctant and scared to share their feelings, so someone should take the first step, he said.

"One of the things you have to try to get over is your fear of association with people who might be different," said Msgr. Richard Allen, pastor of St. Ann Church in Charlotte and a member of the diocesan commission, in attendance at the teacher in-service. "You may be able to accept what Father McCreesh has said and may agree, but [you may wonder] what are people going to say about me if I try to help gay and lesbian people."

"If this conversation begins and ends in this room, then it has not achieved its true purpose. I hope that you are not afraid to talk about this — make this your homework," continued Msgr. Allen.

Gerie Schohn, a sixth- and eighth-grade religion teacher and a sixth- through eighth-grade science teacher from St. Michael School in Gastonia, said that after attending the session, she will bring up the topic in her class.

"I knew what the Catholic teaching was already, and this is a topic that we don't need to ignore. This is a message that, as educators, we can spread, that we are all filled with the Holy Spirit and made in God's image," said Schohn.

Father McCreesh informed the teachers that statistically, according to the numbers of gays and lesbians in the population, that there are, more than likely, gay and lesbian students in their classes.

"You are the bearers of the church's teachings, and change can begin with you," said Father McCreesh. "Kids are looking for one person they can talk to. Let them know that God loves them."

"The teacher of religion within the Catholic school must be in touch and in tune with the teaching of the Church. In the fulfillment of his or her role, the religion teacher participates in the ministry of the Word," said Father James Hawker, vicar for education. "We are blessed in having so many dedicated religion teachers in our schools. It is imperative that their commitment be complimented by their competency in speaking as the Church speaks." ▼

"Interchurch couples ... don't have to believe the same things to have long-lasting marriages," writes Mary Jo Pedersen. "But they do need to minimize conflict and share joint activities such as Bible study or religious education; ... working on church projects; participating in church-sponsored activities; praying together."

For several years after their marriage, Jim and Diana alternated between her Presbyterian community and his Catholic parish every other weekend. But since the birth of their two daughters, they attend Mass regularly at the Catholic parish and also attend the Presbyterian church on Easter, Christmas, Mother's Day and several other holidays.

They, like thousands of other interchurch married couples, developed a system that "works for them." What church leaders now are discovering is that such couples often seek and welcome greater church support in addressing their situations and bringing faith into their lives together.

At home, Jim and Diana pray together as a family and observe Christian traditions that their churches have in common, such as the Advent wreath. Each parent talks about God with the children and respects the differences in the spouse's worship services and traditions.

A recent national study from the Creighton Center for Marriage and Family at the Jesuit Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., found that about one-third of couples of all Christian denominations in the United States, married within the last 20 years, began their marriages as interchurch couples.

In Catholic dioceses the percentage of all marriages in which one partner is Catholic and the other is not varies greatly. In some U.S. dioceses, it is as low as 20 percent, in others as high as 90 percent.

Such marriages present both special responsibilities and unique opportunities for the families involved and for pastoral ministers in the church.

The Creighton Center's research on interchurch marriage indicates that marriages between Catholics and non-Catholics have a higher divorce rate if they enter their marriages with lower rates of religiosity (religious practice and beliefs). Often these couples also feel that the church was not serving them as well as those in shared-faith marriages.

The research indicates that these couples have problems and strengths that differ from those experienced by couples in which the husband and wife belong to the same church.

There are highly diverse groups within this population of interchurch couples, and their needs must be addressed in different ways, the research indicates. It shows that they don't have to believe the same things to have long-lasting marriages. But they do need to minimize conflict and share joint activities such as Bible study or religious education; serving or working on church projects; participating in church-sponsored activities; praying together; discussing religious matters together.

Interchurch couples who both take their church seriously may have more conflicts over children than same-church couples do. But interchurch couples also may fare better in such matters than couples where one or both spouses are lukewarm about their faith.

Kentucky's bishops recently pointed in a pastoral letter to some factors that can contribute to healthy interchurch marriages:

—Mutual respect for one another's religious convictions, an interest in and continued learning about the other's community, positive support for the other's religious practice and a willingness to make sacrifices for each other.

—Efforts to keep growing in knowledge of one's own faith and to take part in as many religious activities together as possible.

The church is responding to the growth in the number of interchurch marriages with some creative adjustments to marriage preparation and marriage support.

In the Archdiocese of Omaha, Neb., special panels made up of interchurch couples are part of marriage preparation for these couples, as are resources aimed at helping couples negotiate their differences. There is also an ongoing support group for interchurch couples that has been meeting for more than 10 years to discuss practical issues such as church attendance, baptism of children, home devotions and dealing with in-laws' traditions.

Couples such as Jim and Diana are trying to assure that faith will be a source of strength in their marriages. Just as they do, countless other couples need support in making religion a part of their lives.

In the current Jubilee of the Year 2000, an emphasis is being placed on the important work of creating unity among Christians around the world. While church leaders and theologians continue their efforts at ecumenical dialogue, and adjustments are made in marriage preparation, couples in ordinary conversations and actions are contributing to an increased desire for the reality of Christian unity.

Pedersen is coordinator of the Leadership in Family Life Training Program for the Archdiocese of Omaha, Neb.

In a Nutshell

The Jubilee of the Year 2000 has an ecumenical character, Pope John Paul II said.

The pope expressed hope that "the different churches and ecclesial communities" would bring to the jubilee "everything that already unites" them and that the jubilee would become "a journey of reconciliation."

Promoting Christian unity "is the privilege and responsibility of all Catholics," Kentucky's Catholic bishops said in 1999.

Ecumenical Spirituality: Accent on Marriage

By FATHER JOHN W. CROSSIN, OSFS
Catholic News Service

How might couples grow spiritually in interchurch marriages? In some ways the answer is that their spiritual growth is similar to that of same-church couples:

— Pray for the Holy Spirit's help and guidance.

— Attend church each week.

— Set aside time for daily prayer, and — Perform works of charity together in the community.

Such spiritual practices are important for all couples. We root our Christian life in daily life's virtues such as patience, civility, honesty, wisdom and justice.

Yet each person is unique, each specially called by God. Each has a specific life history. Thus a couple's everyday spirituality can be lived out in many different ways.

Interchurch couples have unique opportunities to grow together spiritually. They have unique talents and possibilities. They encounter unique challenges too.

Communication for couples — as for all good friends — is always important. Interfaith couples often have much to learn about each other's Christian faith tradition.

Learning not only includes the doctrine of the church. It also includes the personal practices which make that faith come alive in worship, in family life and in the community. All the understandings and emotions — positive and negative — attached to these particulars of Christian living need to be explored.

We live out of our hearts and our heads. Thoughts and feelings often manifest themselves as Christmas, Easter or other special days come around. These days present couples with opportunities for dialogue, discussion and prayer.

Unfortunately, such special occasions can also be opportunities to ignore differences. Spouses or engaged couples may not want to risk upsetting each other. They sometimes submerge their differences by ignoring them.

This avoidance only creates a greater long-term risk for the couple's unity.

Differences need to be worked on — often many times — rather than ignored.

Reducing religious practices creates later problems. The recent study of interchurch marriages by the Center for Marriage and Family at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., indicates that these couples are at greater risk for divorce than same-church couples.

The study indicates that participation in joint religious activities can help couples grow together. Today there are many opportunities — such as ecumenical Bible studies or social-action groups — for couples to live their Christian faiths together.

The study indicates that better marriage preparation can benefit interfaith couples. Good marriage preparation begins the process of learning from one another and building a common spiritual life.

Skilled clergy and lay leaders can help couples address questions arising from their varied religious upbringing and education.

Recently, the institutions of the Washington Theological Consortium, an ecumenical group of Catholic and Protestant schools and associates, decided to offer an afternoon of practical, pastoral reflections on the Creighton study. The response so far from local clergy and laity has been positive and enthusiastic — almost overwhelming.

This indicates to me that there is a deep desire on the part of Christian clergy and laity of all denominational backgrounds to help couples grow spiritually — to share "how" we might aid couples in their preparation and in their faith-filled living.

Communion among the Christian churches will not grow by pretending differences don't exist. It will grow by taking them seriously and exploring them forthrightly.

As interchurch marriage becomes more and more the norm, I believe that these couples can grow together spiritually. And they can bring their experiences to the ongoing search for Christian unity.

Family traditions open doors to healing

By FATHER DAVID K. O'ROURKE, OP
Catholic News Service

Dominican Father David K. O'Rourke counsels couples, many of whom have interchurch marriages. "As we talk about planning their own family celebrations, we also indirectly are giving new shape to personal matters that have proven difficult," he says.

For 35 years I have counseled married couples seeking ways to make their marriages work. The couples come, convinced that there just has to be a better way.

And they're right. There are better ways. Getting there, however, often means recognizing that couples can benefit from cultural and religious supports to their relationship.

Our beliefs about the value of marriage and family life are examples of what I mean.

Today, of course, many couples come from mixed religious backgrounds. In my counseling I talk about the strengths in each of these backgrounds and work with the couples to draw on the strengths of each tradition.

The key word here is "tradition" — that concrete sense of who my people are and what my people do.

This is actually easy to do. For whatever our combination of religious backgrounds (Catholic, Protestant, Jewish), each tradition really values the efforts married people put into creating happy marriages and strong families.

Every year, for example, our families have wonderful religious holidays that we celebrate in our own homes. From decorating the Christmas tree to preparing the table for the Jewish seder, we have opportunities for everyone to come together in celebrations where we comfortably can invite relatives and friends across religious lines.

In the process we can resolve important personal issues.

Many people find dealing head-on with the troubling issues in their marriage to be very difficult. If counseling means talking openly about tough personal issues, then they'd rather skip counseling. But many issues can be addressed indirectly just as well.

Our families' religious traditions and their holiday preparations can provide us with indirect and safe opportunities to deal with personal matters.

Spouses, for example, can discover at holiday times that their different religious backgrounds mean more to them than they had thought. And family memories, both positive and negative, can surface.

There are really three points that I'm offering here for reflection:

—Counseling couples with different religious backgrounds can highlight rich traditions that accent family life's value.

—Examining these backgrounds in a respectful way can help us to deal symbolically with other personal issues.

—And in respecting different religious traditions we also bring broader cultural support for a solid family and marriage.

Father O'Rourke, a Dominican, is a free-lance writer in Oakland, Calif.

Food for Thought

Marriages in which one spouse is a Catholic and the other a member of another Christian community or a non-Christian tradition "are often referred to as 'mixed,' 'ecumenical' or 'religiously diverse' marriages," Kentucky's four Catholic bishops said in a 1999 pastoral letter.

"At a minimum," the bishops said, "spouses in religiously diverse marriages should:

1. Respect the person and religious convictions of the other.

2. Be knowledgeable of the other's faith expression and be able to interpret it well.

3. Continually attempt to learn more about the faith expression of the partner.

4. Be willing to make sacrifices for the other.

5. Positively support the other in the practice of his/her religion.

6. Feel obligated to do everything together in the practice of religion, except when the policies and practices of their individual churches prevent this.

7. Continually attempt to grow in knowledge of their own faith tradition and be able to interpret it well."

Art produced on early Jesuit missions reflects cultural tolerance

By NANCY HARTNAGEL
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — During an earlier era of globalization called the Age of Exploration, Jesuit missionaries worldwide contributed significantly to art and science and knowledge in general.

But, according to art professor Gauvin A. Bailey, tolerance is the lesson to be learned from the four Jesuit missions featured in his new book, "Art on the Jesuit Missions in Asia and Latin America, 1542-1773."

Published by the University of Toronto Press, the work examines the blend of European and indigenous art and architecture produced on missions in Japan, China, Mughal India and the Paraguay "reductions," 30 large mission towns where nomadic Guarani peoples were settled.

Over those two centuries, the number of conversions in Japan, China and Paraguay reached about 300,000 each, while the Jesuits "had virtually no luck converting Muslims" in India, said Bailey, assistant professor of Renaissance and Baroque art at Clark University in Worcester, Mass.

But, he told Catholic News Service in a phone interview, these missions enjoyed "flourishing artistic exchanges," and the surviving art is "a really important document" of cultural tolerance.

"The fact that the Jesuits had success culturally, but in almost all these missions really blew it in terms of pastoral activities, was because they were willing to accept and adopt culture much more than they were what I call cult or religion," said Bailey.

Though some Jesuits shared the prevailing European view that everything non-European was inferior, he said, "on the whole, they were a lot more tolerant of non-Christian, non-European societies in an attempt to communicate with them."

Art was produced for practical reasons, he said. It was used to convert, educate and facilitate sacramental and ritual life. But its main use was "to cross the language barrier as an international way of communicating," said Bailey.

Few people realize that Francis Xavier, founder of the Japan mission, never learned Japanese, he said. "He relied on converts, Japanese who would help him translate, but he also very much relied on images to teach."

A 15th-century scroll titled "Madonna of the Snows" from the Nagasaki Martyrs Museum in Nagasaki, Japan, illustrates the cover of a new book exploring artwork of Jesuit missions.

The art also was produced in a sequence, he said. First came images, most commonly of the Virgin Mary, especially the famous St. Luke Madonna in the Basilica of St. Mary Major in Rome, and of Christ as "Salvator Mundi" or savior of the world.

Next came the church building, then sculpture. These missions fell "within the region of the Spanish and Portuguese empires or just beyond them," he said, and both traditions favored altarpieces and statues in their churches. Sculpture also was needed "for processions, for parades, for the kind of spectacle that goes on at the mission."

Said Bailey: "The vast majority of people who did the artwork and built the buildings on the missions were indigenous people, mostly converts."

Our 11-year-old was intrigued but not dismayed by the lifestyle of the impoverished family she met in the far south of Mexico. The young couple had six children under the age of 7. They lived in two rudely built tentlike houses with dirt floors and empty flour sacks for beds. This home was in a rural neighborhood on the outskirts of a large city. They wore simple, spare clothing — in fact, the baby and toddler wore none.

After we returned from a morning visit with the family, someone asked our daughter if their situation made her sad.

"No," she answered. "They weren't sad, why should I feel sad?"

In today's Gospel, Jesus is asked why his disciples weren't fasting like all the holy people. He replied, in effect, what's to fast for? I'm here: There's life; there's love; there's hope.

Such was the case with the poor Mexican family. They obviously loved and cared for each other, even though they didn't have much.

A missionary group had provided them with a means to begin improving their life: money for materials that they used to make toys that they sold in the city plaza. The enterprise was growing slowly, with the older children sharing in the work.

Their missionary mentors also encouraged them to go to school, and so there was hope — more than there would have been if they had been given a one-time donation of food and clothing.

The hope of maintaining a better life was the "new wineskin" given them with the provision of "new wine."

Jesus' Gospel message here is a jubilee message of new life in systemic change. When a teen-age girl with an unwanted pregnancy chooses life for her baby, that's new wine. But if no one is willing to actively support and nurture her and her child, they're in an old wineskin.

If we, as a nation, provide foreign aid to a developing country where it gets swallowed up by a voracious and insurmountable debt, it may be a briefly refreshing new wine, but quickly tainted in a hopeless old wineskin.

This week's message reminds us, who live in a privileged society, that we should open our eyes to identify God's real presence in the world, but we also must be awakened to the condition of the wineskin.

Questions:

In the jubilee year, what is a systemic change you can work for to bring real hope to currently hopeless conditions? What active part will you take?

Catholic cartoonist pays tribute to 'Peanuts' creator

By CHRISTIE L. CHICOINE
Catholic News Service

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — The late "Peanuts" cartoonist Charles Schulz "really was Charlie Brown," said Philadelphia native and "Family Circus" creator Bil Keane, 77.

"He worried a lot. If something wasn't going to work out right, he figured it wasn't going to work out for him," Keane said in a telephone interview Feb. 14 with The Catholic Standard & Times, newspaper of the Philadelphia Archdiocese.

"Right to the end, just as Lucy pulled the football and Charlie Brown never got to kick it, Schulz never got to see the final cartoon in the Sunday morning paper."
— Bil Keane, "Family Circus" creator

"Right to the end, just as Lucy pulled the football and Charlie Brown never got to kick it, Schulz never got to see the final cartoon in the Sunday morning paper," he added. "He left us the evening before. He was Charlie Brown to a T."

Keane, who spoke from his home in Paradise Valley, Ariz., drew his own "Family Circus" tribute to Schulz upon hearing the news of his death.

Schulz died Feb. 12, the night before his last original strip — a fond farewell to his fans — was published in newspapers around the world. The cartoonist, who suffered from Parkinson's disease and had several small strokes last November, was told he had colon cancer. He announced he would retire so he could spend more time with his family.

His death "is a sad thing for all the comic readers throughout the world, as well as for the cartoonists' community who were personally associated with Sparky," said Keane. "Sparky is what we always called him. I've known him for about 40 years.

"I think he is probably the best-known cartoonist in the world today and possibly is the best cartoonist of the past century."

Schulz "will always be remembered for his work, and for those who knew him he'll be remembered as a genuinely nice, personal friend," he added.

Both cartoonists were born in 1922, Keane on Oct. 5 and Schulz on Nov. 26. Keane said his last conversation with Schulz was in the summer of 1999, before Schulz was diagnosed with colon cancer.

He remembers their first conversation at a cartoonists' meeting in New York in 1960.

"He was a very warm and friendly person, not at all the caricature of a cartoonist," he said. Some people picture such artists as being wildly funny and more or less burlesque comedians.

"He never was an extrovert. I used to kid him, I'd say, 'You're the only guy I know who can walk into an empty room and blend right in.' He would laugh," recalled Keane.

Schulz was a religious man and at one time studied theology, he said. "He injected that into his strip — not on a regular basis, but occasionally he would run words from Scripture. He never was as open in showing his characters practicing religion the way I do in 'Family Circus,' but it had a spiritual feel to it."

He also "devoted a lot of time to helping young people who wanted to get started in the cartoon business," Keane said.

Schulz "is going to be missed terribly," he continued. "Certainly he is an icon in the comic business, a real gentleman."

If Schulz's death could have been scripted, "it couldn't have been done any better," said Keane. "A lot of people figure it's just coincidence, irony. I figure it was Providence. I think it was God's hand, really." ▼

New CD puts Mother Teresa's words, prayers to music

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (CNS) — A California composer and singer has put out a collection of songs written to the late Mother Teresa's words and prayers.

Bradley James, who has worked as a volunteer with Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity in Los Angeles, said his CD, "Gift of Love: Music to the Words and Prayers of Mother Teresa," is the only such collection authorized by Mother Teresa herself.

James, who wrote the 13 songs over a 10-year period, said many of them are sung by the Missionaries of Charity in their homes and convents all over the world. He produced the CD through his own record label, called Only Little Things Music.

The record label takes its name from Mother Teresa's words, "We are not called to do great things, only little things with great love."

The CD contains Mother Teresa's voice blended into some of the songs. In addition to James, singers include two California choirs — the Children's Choir of Sacred Heart School in Palm Desert and the Voices of Mount Calvary Church in Indio, Calif.

In the liner notes, James dedicated the CD to Missionaries of Charity around the world. "These are your songs, and as Mother asked Christ that with each photo taken of her, he must release one soul from purgatory, I am asking him that every time one of these songs is sung or played, he hears it as a prayer for each of you. Your singing has been God's gift of love to me." ▼

The "Gift of Love" CD is available for $16 each, plus $3 shipping for 1-3 CDs and $6 shipping for 4-8 CDs. California residents also pay 7.75 percent sales tax. The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope says Auschwitz concentration camp must be reminder

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Nazi concentration camp at Auschwitz must be a permanent reminder of the horrors people are capable of committing, Pope John Paul II said.

Greeting city officials and pilgrims from Oswiecim, the Polish town where the camp is located, the pope said, "Auschwitz is a particular witness to the terrible war which caused millions of victims."

The pope spoke to the group Feb. 16 during his weekly general audience. The Oswiecim officials traveled to the Vatican to make Pope John Paul an honorary citizen.

"Your city bears the signs of the suffering and martyrdom of many nations," the pope said, referring to the 1.5 million Jews, Poles, Gypsies and other peoples killed by the Nazis at Auschwitz and neighboring Birkenau.

"The voice of Auschwitz, the cry of the tortured, must continually awaken the world so that such a tragedy will never happen again in human history," Pope John Paul said.

"I thank you for all you do to keep the memory of this painful past alive," he told the city officials and townspeople.

In December, Oswiecim Mayor Adam Bilski said his district council made the pope an honorary citizen to commemorate his visit there in 1979.

The pope, who directed the closure of a Carmelite convent at the Auschwitz camp in 1993, holds honorary citizenship of 25 other Polish cities and towns.

Pope meets with Hungarian president, jokes about keeping fit

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II met with Hungarian President Arpad Goncz, and afterward the two leaders joked about how hard work was keeping them fit.

"We belong to the same generation," the 79-year-old pope told Goncz, who is two years younger, after their private meeting Feb 21. He told the president he looked in good form.

"So much work keeps us well, the Holy Father, too," Goncz replied.

"That's right," the pope added as he slowly walked the president to the door.

The Hungarian leader was in Rome to preside over a ceremony marking the millennium of the founding of Hungary and the arrival of Christianity in the country.

Later, he held talks with Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican secretary of state. Sources said that among the topics they discussed was the drawn-out process of negotiating the restitution of church property seized under communism.

From the Bishop

BISHOP WILLIAM G. CURLIN

Catholic Identity: Part II

I was an ordained in 1957. At that time Catholics centered their life around their parish church and school. I enjoyed teaching religion to the children. On occasion I even served as the school janitor. I remember offering the sacraments in Latin and then reading them in English so that people could understand them.

During Mass, celebrated with my back to the congregation, I would sometimes turn to greet them in Latin. We had no Latin scholars in the parish. So I smile when I hear some talk about "the good old days".

Pope John XXIII succeeded Pope Pius XII. Everyone loved him. He was a very humble person who had a great love for Christ and the Church. During this Jubilee Year he will be canonized by Pope John Paul II. When Pope John announced his call for Vatican Council II, he said that he wanted the Church to go out into the world and touch the lives of all who were hurting and in need of Christ. He reminded us, that justice precedes peace. He urged priests not remain aloof from their brothers and sisters, but to walk beside them in their journey of faith. He recognized the great treasures of the Church in the sacraments and works of charity. He believed that these gifts could change the world and make it a better world.

Mother Teresa was one of the greatest influences in my life. She professed that the Eucharist enabled her to discover Christ in the "broken bodies of the poor.' For her prayer was a continuing dialogue with God. The frequent reception of the Sacrament of Reconciliation kept her humbly at the foot of the cross. She believed that to know the Scriptures is to know the mind of God.

What is a Catholic? It's not a person who limits their relationship with God to Sunday Mass. It is to live the life of Jesus Christ. However, discipleship with Christ demands day-by-day reconsecration of our life to Christ.

I envy you, young people. This is a new century and the beginning of a new Millennium. What a wonderful opportunity you have to reveal God's love and mercy to a world desperately in need of God. Do not allow anything or anyone to discourage you. I repeat the message of Pope John II to the young people of the world: "Do not fear! God is with you. He lives in you. Fill the world with His peace and love!"

Family Reflections

ANDREW & TERRI LYKE
GUEST COLUMNISTS

Christian marriage and modern families

Many of the ideals of Christian marriage have fallen out of favor with modern families. No longer is it seen essential to family life. Pastors struggle with their roles as those who preserve what is sacred (tradition) and direct us to what is sacred (community). For example, it is difficult to find "good news" in the teen mother who is without a spouse and pregnant with a third child. How does the Church preserve the sacredness of marriage and affirm the miracle of human procreation that our modern culture sees as not necessarily connected to marriage?

These and other questions concerning marriage in the modern world were addressed by the St. Joseph Society of the Sacred Heart on Feb. 9 and 10. Better known as "The Josephites," these men religious gathered in Breaux Bridge, a community just outside of Lafayette, La., to pray, listen and learn about strengthening the institution of Christian marriage in the 57 parishes the order serves in Alabama, California, Washington, D.C., Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.

Founded in 1893, the Josephites have dedicated themselves to ministry among African Americans. The Pastoring Workshop in Breaux Bridge focused on marriage preparation and marriage enrichment for African-American Catholics.

Andrew opened the program with a presentation on marriage ministry with African-Americans. He shared our dubious beginnings in marriage, and how an effective marriage ministry evangelized us. He reported the important role that Marriage Encounter played in directing us to God at the center of our relationship.

However, he also reported how easy it is to misappropriate the workings of the Spirit to human formats. He emphasized the need to honor the cultural variances of peoples of color. "When programs are design for whites they don't always fit well with African-Americans," he told the group of priests. He suggested that established programs that have been successful among whites should be open to restructuring with African-Americans in mind. The concept of process over content applies here.

Fred and Connie Sambrone, a deacon-couple from Archdiocese of Atlanta, presented a condensed overview of their marriage preparation program, "The Greatest of These is Love." One of few diocesan programs by and for African-Americans, Fred and Connie's program presents couples with realistic challenges to living a Christ-centered marriage in a material-centered world. Part of their mission is to impart "simple wisdom" that is key to unlocking marital joy long after the honeymoon.

While it was clear from the presentations that Christian married life is under siege today, there was an air of hope among those gathered. Despite the expressed feelings of frustration by some priests, there was a sense that the Paschal Mystery is operative in marriage and family life today.

The Josephites, evidenced by their focused energy on African-American marriage, are continuing a tradition of serving African-American Catholic families.

Words, Words, Words

As political rhetoric heats up this presidential election year, candidates and their wordsmiths are sculpting messages designed to persuade us to vote for them.

Some of us quickly tire, cynical of their methods: "You can't believe anything they say!" Others side with candidates whose promises square more or less with their own interests. Many say they are more concerned with character than substance (the who rather than the what) and try to find the person behind the words. Sadly, most of us won't do much listening and just "tune out" all the voices. And that's too bad.

Like it or not, the universe in which we live is a universe of words. Much of what we know, or think we know, we have learned through the words of others. Those men and women who have attempted to lead or to prod, to inspire or to intimidate, to defend values or attack conventions, have done so by using language to shape the actions and reactions of those who would listen.

On the plus side, language has at the very least helped us become civilized. As violent as our world is today, we still rely less on brute force and more on words to direct our relationships with one another. Indeed, throughout history, we have increasingly turned to the persuasive power of speech to alter or reinforce our beliefs and values.

That is why I'd encourage anyone trying to navigate the rhetorical currents of today's political scene to read a few speeches from our past. You'll be impressed with a sense of how our viewpoints have been formed for good or ill. Speeches open windows on history that demonstrate the clashes and the compromises, the successes and failures experienced by those who would lead us.

If you're interested in locating a good source for oratory born of the American experience, I'd recommend a new book I was thrilled to get as a gift this Christmas, "In Our Own Words: Extraordinary Speeches of the American Century," edited by Senator Robert Torricelli of New Jersey (who manages not to include any of his own) and Andrew Carroll. Having taught rhetoric and communications in college, I found that this volume's particular value rests in its range across the political, social and cultural landscape. It clearly illustrates that the famous and not-so-famous have a role in shaping society.

Reacquainting yourself with great speeches of the past can enhance your ability to respond more critically to today's speakers and office-seekers. We have more than a right to use our best judgment, we have a responsibility to do so. What we cannot afford to do is to give up our personal involvement in government and the political process. It's just too important.

David Lloyd George, British Prime Minister during the First World War, said that "the finest eloquence is that which gets things done."

It is not enough for citizens to listen or even to form opinions. We have to express ourselves through our words and our actions. Don't be afraid to speak out, to get involved with campaigns and issues. Your voice just might transform our communities, our nation and our world forever.

And that's my last word.

What a will can do for you

There are at least seven things a well crafted will can do for you.

1. A will can let you close the books on your earthly stewardship responsibilities. You've made careful decisions to conserve your estate during life, and you naturally want to do the same at death. Through your will, you can wrap up your affairs and "put your house in order."

2. A will can help you express your love and thoughtfulness to others. When a person dies without a will, those who are left behind must sort out the estate and make difficult decisions. The grieving process is compounded by frustration. What a difference when the bereaved are left with funeral instructions, an inventory list and a well-crafted will.

3. A will can remind your loved ones of your basic beliefs and commitments. The preamble can affirm not only your guiding principles, but also your aspirations for those who are left behind. Your words can provide comfort and encouragement. The way you distribute your estate can also express your commitments. Will you care for your family in an honorable way? Will you affirm worthy charitable organizations? Your will can be an inspiration.

4. A will can ensure your desires are fulfilled. If you have dependent children, you can designate who will care for them. You can specify the person who will handle the closing of your estate. You can select the trustee to oversee one or more trusts. You can time the distribution of gifts to children and grandchildren. You can make provisions to support charitable organizations. A will puts you in the driver's seat.

5. A will can conserve your assets, ensuring that more is available to meet your objectives. In many states, a will not only reduces the administrative costs of probate, it can reduce, delay or even eliminate estate taxes. Wise stewardship means making sure your assets go as far as possible.

6. A will can let you ensure the pattern of your lifetime support of your Church. With a bequest or endowment, you can continue to support your parish, Catholic school, the diocese or diocesan foundation just as you did during your life.

7. A will can provide peace of mind. You can relax in the knowledge that your temporal affairs are in order. You have cared for those persons and those concerns close to your heart. Your will can also bring a sense of peace and security to others.

With all the benefits, one might expect that every person would have a will. But the opposite is true. Of the 1.5 million persons who die each year in the U.S., only 30 percent have a will. For most people, making a will is like preparing a tax return — they put it off as long as they can. You may recognize some of these excuses: "It's too expensive ... I can't handle the decisions ... My estate is too small ... I'll do it later."

We encourage you to call your attorney and make an appointment to have your will prepared or updated. Please do it today.

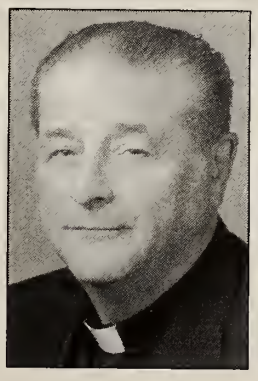
Question Corner



FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS Columnist

The difference between valid and lawful

Q. Thank you for your informative column in our diocesan paper. In your answer to a question on baptism, you seem to indicate that if the water is poured rightly and the proper words invoking the Trinity are said, the sacrament would be valid.

But we have been told that the baptism of an infant is not lawful unless there is a well-founded hope that the infant will be brought up in the Catholic faith. This supposedly is canon law.

How then can the baptism you speak of be valid? The parents were not even aware of the baptism. In two years they have not bothered to have the baby baptized. There doesn't seem much hope the child will be raised Catholic. How do you explain your answer?

A. Yours is only one of numerous letters I've received recently confusing the meaning of valid and lawful (licit) sacraments. Valid administration of baptism, for example, means that the sacrament was truly, authentically ministered and received.

A sacrament may be valid, however, a real sacrament, and still be unlawfully celebrated. It is true, for example, that, outside of danger of death, canon law (868) requires the condition you mention for a licit baptism.

As I explained in the column you quote, the church has good reasons for saying it is wrong to baptize children in situations where there is no Catholic life going on in the home and no expectation that the parents will give Catholic nurturing to their child. It would not be fair to the child, the parents or the Christian community.

It is wrong and unlawful, therefore, to baptize someone in these circumstances, but not invalid.

The same is true of the other sacraments. Several have written to me worried about an "invalid" Mass because a different form of wheat bread was used. By no means does that necessarily make the eucharistic liturgy invalid.

Bread made from wheat alone, in which nothing else has been added in such a quantity that the product can no longer be commonly considered wheat bread, is required for a valid Eucharist. Note the words between the two commas. (See the Instruction of the Congregation for the Discipline of the Sacraments, 1929.)

Thus, the common leavened wheat bread one buys at the supermarket would be illicit but valid for Mass. It has in fact been commonly used in some churches outside the Latin rite. By tradition, however, repeated over the centuries (by Pope Pius X for one, in September 1912), unleavened bread such as we are accustomed to at Mass is required for lawful celebration of the Eucharist in the Latin Church.

Similar distinctions apply concerning wine. Mass wine must be made from grapes, but more conditions (concerning mixture with water or other additives) are required for validity than for lawfulness.

To offer just one more example, the ordination of priests and bishops may be wrong in certain cases, but still valid. If, for instance, a bishop ordains another man bishop without proper authorization from the pope, that ordination ceremony is gravely illicit, but still valid; the newly ordained person is truly a bishop.

The theology concerning the overall intention of the Christian community, the church, in these matters brings in other important factors. It seems, however, that keeping the above points in mind would often serve to keep things clear, reduce anxieties and preserve some Catholic peace of soul.

Maryvale Sisters, parish youth score big in annual "Souper Bowl"

VALE — The youth group of St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte donated $1,431.50 to the sisters of the Congregation of Our Lady, Help of the Clergy in Vale Feb. 20. The youth group, which includes about 260 members, raised the funds for the congregation on Jan. 30 during the "Souper Bowl of Caring" drive.

Among the "Maryvale" sisters' ministries are serving 98 children enrolled at Maryvale Daycare School, providing a variety of outreach to the needy and hosting retreats for groups from throughout the region.

The ecumenical "Souper Bowl" effort is led each Super Bowl Sunday by youth in churches throughout the United States and Canada who collect donations from parishioners for local charities. This year's stats include an estimated total of $3 million raised by 12,500 church communities.

born in mid-morning.

The Luo tribe is based in the Western part of the country on the shores of Lake Victoria. Its economy and food comes primarily from the fishing industry, explained Syagga.

Some of the native foods that Syagga was taught to prepare include pilau, a spiced rice, chapati, a combination of wheat flour, water and oil, which makes a type of fried bread, and ugali, ground corn flour mixed with boiling water, which is eaten with vegetables.

With approximately 28 percent of the Kenyan population being Catholic, Syagga is one of many cradle Catholics in her country. Since her arrival in the states, Syagga has become involved with the Catholic campus ministry group at WCU.

Syagga said, "As a Christian, I love religion and learning more about things I thought I knew. I like knowing who made me and why I am here."

Gloria Schweizer, WCU Catholic campus minister, said that she first met Syagga when she looked out of her window and saw her sitting on a swing near the student center. When they began talking, Syagga admitted she was feeling disconnected with her surroundings and had found the center. "[Since I am feeling like this,] where else would I go except to my church?" Syagga said.

One earmark of her African heritage is her family's acknowledgement of their tribe, a group of people descending from a common ancestor or tradition. Syagga speaks Swahili, a Bantu language distinctive to Eastern and Eastern Central Africa, English and Luo, a language derived from her tribe of the same name.

"She needed to be at the Catholic center because her faith is at the center of who she is," said Schweizer. "The way that she has made friends in such a short amount of time is amazing."

Now that she is here in America, Syagga will have four years to adjust to this country. She will not return home to see her parents until graduation because of the cost of the overseas flight. Now, living in America, when Syagga turns on her CD player and listens to her favorite song or turns on the TV, she is reminded of home. ▼ and one or two Jesuits, mainly brothers, created the art on a mission, he said. Often, those who became brothers were professional artists, then considered tradesmen, who felt a calling to use their skills to benefit the missions, he added.

Bailey finds the art so interesting because it "takes this very basic kind of late Renaissance-early Baroque ... very clear, emotional style from Europe and transforms it by making it a little more like the style of the area."

In the Christian art produced in Japan and Mughal India, for example, the figures have the specific "eyebrow and nose and coloration" of contemporary Japanese and Muslim paintings, he said. The Guarani sculptures feature pre-conquest, pre-contact traditions, showing the "impact of indigenous weaving and ceramics coming out in the patterns on the drapery."

This hybridization is "what makes it not just second-rate copies of European art," Bailey said. "It's a lot more."

The missions were funded in a variety of ways.

Bailey said the Japan mission "was paid for largely by the silk ships" from China in which the Jesuits had invested. In Guarani territory, they had a monopoly on the production and export of mate tea. In southern India, they operated plantations worked by African slaves.

The Paraguay missions also made money from their artworks. "They produced so many ... they were able to sell them to most of the colonial centers in Argentina," said Bailey.

Another new University of Toronto Press title — "The Jesuits: Cultures, Sciences, and the Arts, 1540-1773" — contains 35 essays originating in a 1997 international conference at Boston College.

Bailey, one of the book's editors, said the missions had a great impact on the order before it was suppressed by papal edict in 1773.

"The worldwide missions served as a source for information about everything from pharmacology to anthropology to ethnography to geography that was sent back to Europe," he said. This "made the Jesuits one of the world's most important purveyors of knowledge."

Jesuit missionaries found the cure for malaria in quinine, he noted, and Jose de Acosta, a Jesuit in Peru in the late 16th century, theorized "that Amerindians had crossed a land bridge from Asia."

Amazingly, Bailey added, he came up with the Bering Strait theory long before that area "had even been charted." ▼

"Out of Africa"

Student celebrates faith, adapts to surroundings

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CULLOWHEE — Before Marilyn Syagga left home for college, she, like many other young adults, would listen to Mariah Carey on her CD player, watch "The Oprah Winfrey Show," catch the latest movie with her friends and attend Mass on Sundays. Who would guess that Syagga was born and raised in Nairobi, the capital city of Kenya?

The equator runs through Kenya, a country about the size of Texas, bordered by Ethiopia, Somalia, Uganda and Tanzania, on the Eastern coast of Africa.

Marilyn Syagga

Fresh from her trip from abroad, Syagga, 20, transferred to Western Carolina University (WCU), sight unseen, as a freshman in December. She had only heard about the school from a family friend who had moved to the Asheville area from Nairobi, but she decided to apply. Her older brother Michael was going to enroll at WCU but decided to attend school in South Carolina instead.

"It was my dad's idea to come to America because he likes the educational system better," said Syagga, one of five children, "but I also wanted a chance to go to school, see the world and explore my artistic abilities."

With her father having a doctorate in land economics and serving as the dean of faculty in architecture, design and development at the University of Nairobi, and her mother, a registered nurse and midwifery tutor, who has gone back to school to obtain her master's degree in nursing, education has always been an important part of her life.

Syagga is an interior design major, one area of study not offered at many universities, and is involved in graphic arts in her spare time.

However, Syagga did not have much room for extracurricular activities while attending boarding schools during her teen years. She attended Limuru Girls' High School, where she and the other 600 girls wore, what she described in a distasteful tone, a uniform of "white shirts, brown skirts, light brown socks and brown shoes."

"In Africa, study is the main focus, and you have to put in so much effort," she stated firmly. "At the school, we had one TV that we could only watch on weekends, but I really didn't mind because I focus better without TV and radio."

She lived and worked in a school much like a college with weekend parental visits and trips home for the break. When not busy with her studies, she was the basketball team captain and secretary of the Catholic-based school group, Youth Christian Students.

Because her family resides in the capital city, the only sign that Syagga lived in Africa came through the appearance of an occasional runaway zebra escaping from captivity across the highway between her school and home. "But, we really have the same things that you do here," she said seriously.

One earmark of her African heritage is her family's acknowledgement of their tribe, a group of people descending from a common ancestor or tradition. Syagga speaks Swahili, a Bantu language distinctive to Eastern and Eastern Central Africa, English and Luo, a language derived from her tribe of the same name.

MATTHEWS — The sight of pink flamingoes sometimes brings Peg Ruble to tears. Although many things cause her to weep, pink flamingoes are a significant stimulant.

"Pink flamingoes keep showing up in my life," said Ruble. The birds' influence come from Betty Cory, one of her sisters-in-law who passed away suddenly from a brain aneurysm. Cory began a social women's group named after the pink waterfowl in Ruble's home state of Illinois, in which a particular woman would host a party. To let everyone know about the party, the hostess would place a plastic flamingo in her front yard. In order to get rid of the bird, another woman would agree to host a party.

"Pink flamingoes were a very unique symbol to Betty, and I never got the chance to say good-bye to her," explained Ruble, who now wears a flamingo pin as a symbolic reminder of her sister-in-law. "When I talk about the importance of symbols and how they carry a deeper meaning, as in sacramental preparation where the symbols are universally specific and deep, I mention the pink flamingo and the importance of symbols."

Sacramental preparation is only one area that Ruble, the Central Region faith formation coordinator, covers during her various workshops and presentations to the parishes in the Boone, Hickory and Gastonia vicariates. She meets with parish leaders and updates them on diocesan policies and guidelines, meets with the parish catechetical leaders during the vicariate meetings, and assesses faith formation programs already in place, she explained.

Ruble said that her current vocation is directly linked to her family and her faith, two strong influences from her early days.

Ruble is the third oldest of 10 children born and raised in a Catholic family in Springfield, Ill. She said that being in a large family rooted her in a sense of community and taught her that everyone has something to contribute because everyone has unique gifts to share. "And sharing is something that you learned early on in my family," she said.

Teaching was a profession that she had always wanted to do from the time she was six, when she taught her younger brother to read right after she learned. Her teaching skills did not stop with one sibling. She had a brother with dyslexia, and her mother thought that since she was so good with her other brother, that she could help this one. So, with the help of a book her mother purchased, she also taught her brother to read.

This propelled her in the direction of special education; she obtained her bachelor of arts degree in that area of study in 1972 and began teaching. "I wanted to help kids who were troubled, which was out of my understanding of who I was as a Christian. I was responding to a Christian-specific ministry, although I didn't realize it at the time," she said.

After her oldest daughter Cory was born, she decided to stay at home to raise a family. During those years, she first became involved with parish catechetical ministry. "I eased into the ministry by teaching kindergarten faith formation because I thought my knowledge of the faith wasn't sound enough," she admitted.

After the family, which had grown to five with the addition of her daughter Michelle and her son Tyson, moved to Wisconsin, where

Gap between rich and poor widens despite boom

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Despite the booming economy, there is steadily worsening economic inequality in the United States, an economist told church social ministers. "The degree of inequality has so steadily increased since the 1970s that the United States is now more economically unequal than any other country," said Chris Tilly, a professor of regional and economic development at the University of Massachusetts at Lowell. He made the comments in a Feb. 26 presentation to the Roundtable, the association of diocesan social action ministers.

Vatican II was a gift, not a break with past, pope says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — People who believe the Second Vatican Council marked a break with the Catholic Church's past cannot correctly interpret its teaching, Pope John Paul II said. Although he had just returned from his pilgrimage to Egypt, the pope interrupted his rest to give the closing address at a Feb. 25-27 Vatican meeting on the implementation of the Second Vatican Council. Pope John Paul rejected the idea that the Catholic Church needs a new council to reorganize its structure and its mission to respond to modern needs and concerns.

Brief says partial-birth abortion not constitutionally protected

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The procedure known as partial-birth abortion is so different that it does not warrant the constitutional protection the court has given abortion in general, argues the U.S. Catholic Conference in a brief to the U.S. Supreme Court. "The killing of partly born children is new to both law and medicine," says the USCC in an "amicus," or friend of the court, brief for an upcoming case over Nebraska's law prohibiting partial-birth abortion. The brief, in the case of Stenberg vs. Carhart, was written by USCC associate general counsel Michael F. Moses and general counsel Mark E. Chopko on behalf of the bishops' conference and six other religious groups.

Congress asked to condemn moves to oust Vatican as U.N. observer

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The House and Senate are considering resolutions that condemn moves to end the Vatican's status as a permanent observer to the United Nations. The "sense of Congress" resolution was introduced by two Catholic Republicans — Rep. Chris Smith of New Jersey in the House and Sen. Robert C. Smith of New Hampshire in the Senate. The resolution says Congress "strongly objects to any effort to expel the Holy See from the United Nations as a state participant by removing its status as a nonmember state permanent observer." For about a year, the group Catholics for a Free Choice has been leading a campaign to change the Vatican's status at the United Nations to that of a nongovernmental organization. Nearly 400 organizations, including the International Planned Parenthood Federation, have asked U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to review the status of the Holy See as a permanent observer.

Nuns' beatifications will renew church in Belarus, officials say

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — A spokeswoman for the Holy Family of Nazareth order said the beatification of 11 nuns martyred in World War II will encourage "renewal and reconciliation" in the East European church. Bishop Aleksander Kaszkiewicz of Grodno, Belarus, welcomed the move as a "providential event," adding that it would encourage support for church-run charity and education projects. On March 5, Pope John Paul II will beatify Sister Maria Stella Mardosewicz and 10 other Polish nuns from the convent at Nowogrodek, now in Belarus. The nuns were killed by the German Gestapo after asking to take the place of 120 arrested civilians.

Theologian says Catholics need confidence in their faith

WASHINGTON (CNS) — To have an impact, Catholics need to approach public life with confidence in their faith, Dominican theologian Father J. Augustine Di Noia said Feb. 23. "We have to come to our audiences with confidence that we have something valuable to share," he said. Father Di Noia, secretary for doctrine and pastoral practices of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, spoke at a luncheon seminar in Washington hosted by the Faith and Reason Institute, a recently formed Washington think-tank on religion and culture.

Vatican official distinguishes between martyr, witness of faith

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — As Pope John Paul II prepared to beatify a group of martyrs, a Vatican official said it was important to understand the difference between a martyr and a "witness of the faith." Strictly speaking, the term martyr should be used only for Catholics who died for their faith and were beatified or canonized, said Archbishop Jose Saraiva Martins, prefect of the Congregation for Sainthood Causes. The term "witnesses of the faith" may be used for Catholics whose beatification process has not been completed or for other Christians who were killed because of their faith or promotion of Christian values, the archbishop said.

Vatican rejects some claims of best way to celebrate Mass

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In a letter to a U.S. bishop, the Vatican Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments has rejected arguments that priests should give preference to Eucharistic Prayer 1 and should stand at the altar with their back to the people when they celebrate Mass. The letter, responding to inquiries by Bishop David E. Foley of Birmingham, Ala., was sent to all U.S. bishops and was made public Feb. 22.

12 CHARLOTTE — The Newly Mar-

Morganton community discusses possibility of new Catholic school

By ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
Correspondent

MORGANTON — After working for over a year with architects, contractors, city engineers and diocesan school officials, a committee of parishioners from St. Charles Borromeo Church held a meeting Feb. 23 with over 100 parishioners and other interested people in the community to discuss their plans for a new Catholic elementary school, and to hand out applications for this fall.

Whether or not the parish school opens in the fall depends on how many applications are returned to the church by March 10. Lynn Henderson, chairperson of the Catholic school committee at St. Charles Borromeo, said that close to 70 students would need to apply to make it possible, but that plans would allow them to admit up to 90 students entering grades one through five this fall.

She also spoke of the possibilities of adding a sixth-grade class the following year, as well as seventh- and eighth-grade classes in years to come.

"I am very confident that this program will work," said Mrs. Henderson. "We can give our children something special. There will be people who will sit back to wait and see what will happen next year, but the opportunity is now."

The committee surveyed the parish last fall, and 241 families out of 258 that responded to the survey expressed support for the school, said Mrs. Henderson.

During the meeting, several education officials from the Diocese of Charlotte also gave presentations about the benefits of Catholic schools.

Dr. Michael Skube, superintendent of Catholic schools, gave an overview of Catholic schools in the country, in North Carolina and in the diocese. He also talked about some things that he said were important to parents when they send their children to school.

"Catholic schools exist to really help you do what you want done in your home, while your children are away from home," he said. The spiritual and moral foundation also happens at a Catholic school, he added. "It may not happen anywhere else."

Skube also said that Catholic schools provide a safe, secure environment for students, as well as a strong academic program. "No one wants to send their child to an environment that is second-rate in academics," he said. "Our children are well-prepared for the next level."

Skube added that the children in Catholic schools are also taught respect for people of other religions. "Although we are a Catholic school, we want it to be as diverse as possible," he said. "People of all faiths are welcome, and we're stronger for that."

Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, director of religious formation for the diocesan Catholic Schools Office, talked to those present about the training each teacher receives to be able to integrate religious issues into daily lessons. She said, "We have no binds on us to say we can't do it. God is so much present in the life of the child."

"I am very confident that this program will work," said Mrs. Henderson. "We can give our children something special. There will be people who will sit back to wait and see what will happen next year, but the opportunity is now."

Franciscan Sister Mona Wingert, assistant superintendent of schools for the diocese, was also present at the meeting. She talked about the testing that was required to make sure that Catholic school students are ready to go to the next grade.

In addition to the testing that is required by the state of North Carolina in the public schools, students in the diocesan Catholic schools take several nationally recognized tests as well. This is helpful, she said, for students in families that relocate to other states after spending time in schools here.

She also addressed the replacement of textbooks, which is on a five-year rotation, similar to public schools in North Carolina.

Tom Henderson, member of the Catholic school committee at the parish, presented the proposed ranges of tuition and the payment plans that would be available. He gave two examples, each based on the number of students enrolled and the number of teachers that would be hired.

In the first scenario, with 85 students and five teachers, tuition was estimated at $2,275 to $2,400. In the second scenario, with 70 students and four teachers, the tuition was estimated at $2,400 to $2,575. Both options offered a 10 percent discount on the tuition of a second student in one family that was enrolled in the school, and a 15 percent discount for a third student in one family. Students of other faiths have a surcharge of $1,000 added to their tuition.

Options for payment include monthly or quarterly plans, but a 5 percent discount will be given to those who pay the full year's tuition by July 1. The registration fee is $75.

Some in attendance asked questions about the financial liability of the parish for the school. Mrs. Henderson and Dr. Skube said that the committee had worked closely with diocesan school officials to develop the budget for the school, and that the plan was for the school to be self-supporting.

Mrs. Henderson added that she felt like this school was meant to happen. "Doors have opened during this entire mission," she said, "and that has strengthened my faith."

Dr. Skube said that the parish had been able to make a workable plan for a school without a huge capital expenditure to get started. "This will be great if this (does happen), because it will give hope to (many) other small parishes," he said, noting that this is one of the most exciting happenings in the schools in a long time. ▼

Anyone interested in more information about the school, or in getting an application, can call Lynn or Tom Henderson at (828) 584-6448.

Caring Friends program extends many hands

By SUSAN deGUZMAN
Correspondent

WINSTON-SALEM — When a crisis occurs, be it a death, a serious illness, surgery or isolation, it is the Caring Friends group that lends a hand. For the past five years, the Caring Friends of St. Leo Church and School have helped many in need.

"Caring Friends grew out of an awareness of families in need when there were medical crises," says Beth Hoeing, who founded the program.

The particular circumstance that she remembers was a couple who had simultaneous emergencies. The wife was recovering from surgery when the husband was suddenly hospitalized. Hoeing found out about the situation and started making meals for the family.

For many it is customary to make meals for friends, neighbors and family that face a difficult time. Yet, what if someone has no relatives living nearby, the neighbors aren't close, or friends are unable or unavailable to help? These are some of the circumstances when the Caring Friends Program comes to the call.

Beth Hoeing felt that a pool of volunteers could help many in need. Those who volunteer are asked to prepare and freeze a meal. They are given several recipes or may make their own dish following dietary guidelines. If the meal is not needed within two months, then the volunteer may use it for her own family.

Diane and Doug Lohman are the recipients of such assistance. Expecting triplets, Diane was put on bed rest at 19 weeks into her pregnancy. The Lohmans had no family in town and had only been living in Winston-Salem for two years.

"If it wasn't for the Caring Friends, I don't think we would have gotten through these last couple of years," Diane said. "They brought us meals two or three times a week since I was on bed rest until the girls were several months old.

"It was very comforting to have so many people reach out to us. Everyone was really helpful and got us through some tough times, even when we were strangers."

The Lohmans recently had another baby, and the Caring Friends brought meals once again, and also helped baby-sit when Diane had to go to the doctor.

Providing meals, while the initial work of the group, is only one of the areas in which Caring Friends extends itself. Attention to the homebound has become a large focus.

Marlene Olenick is responsible for developing this part of the program and has about 15 volunteers helping her who visit shut-ins once every two weeks. Organizers compiled a list of about 60 parishioners the help of Father James Solari, pastor, the church office and eucharistic ministers. Some of the eucharistic ministers are also Caring Friends.

With a need for this type of outreach, Olenick came up with a unique idea. Olenick asked third-grade teacher Maureen Patti if some of her students would be willing to write to the homebound once in a while. The response was overwhelming.

Now, every student in the St. Leo School writes once a month to their homebound 'friend.' The children also periodically make favors, which are various hand-made pieces of art, with the help of school art teacher Stephanie Iauco.

Matt Sechrest, an eighth-grader at St. Leo School who corresponds with an elderly gentleman, shares, "I write to him about basketball and other sports. He tells me a lot about what's going on with himself and his wife and about their activities, in particular, singing."

Hayden Jesserer, also in eighth grade, corresponds with an elderly woman. "It was kind of strange writing to her at first because I didn't know her," he says. "By the second or third time I wrote, even though I didn't get anything back, it was much easier. I felt like I knew her a bit. I tell her what's going on in my life, about school and sports. I ask her how she is doing."

The Caring Friends volunteers also bring letters to the school from those shut-ins that have been able to write back. Olenick has helped some of her shut-ins by taking dictation. She remembers one shut-in who was anxious to write before the World Series started because both pen pals were rooting for the Yankees. Olenick also tells that many of the shut-ins have their letters and favors on display when she comes to visit.

But it is not only with correspondence that the school reaches out to the Caring Friends' shut-ins. Patti organizes two trips a year, near Christmas and in the spring, for the older children to visit their pen pals.

Says eighth-grader George Wyatt about his visit to his pen pal, "I got to see what she was really like and what she did. She likes to know what's going on with teen- agers these days. I look forward to talking to her about Wake Forest Basketball when we go back in the spring. She loves them (the team) and so do I."

Transportation is another service that the Caring Friends program provides. Pauline Rosenwald organizes this, matching volunteers to provide rides to Mass, and visits to doctor appointments, ongoing treat-she had graduated to teaching fifth grade faith formation and had been a substitute special education teacher and tutor, she was undergoing professional catechetical training and finished the process in her new parish home after her husband Reid was offered a job in Charlotte.

She taught faith formation classes at St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte and was asked to become the youth minister in 1991.

The Office of Faith Formation invited Ruble to do a diocesan-sponsored program on natural family planning because of her implementation of a human sexuality component in her parish at the time. She was then asked if she was interested in taking a part-time diocesan regional position, involving adult education training and catechist workshops. This job led to her being hired on a full-time basis as the central regional faith formation coordinator in October 1997.

"I am a liaison and consultant and give the parishes a direct link to the Office of Faith Formation," said Ruble. "My role is to support them in their ministry to do excellent catechetical programs and to provide speakers, training and resources to help them provide the best catechetical program possible."

Ongoing personal faith formation is important to Ruble, and she will be receiving her master's degree in religious education this May from LIMEX, a program from Loyola University of New Orleans.

John Hess, the faith formation coordinator at St. Mary Church in Shelby, said, "she is very energetic, helpful and outgoing and is always open to coming to the parish to share with old and young alike. She helped set up the youth group and helped to choose the faith formation curriculum. She gives tools to faith formation teachers in the parishes and looks at different options as far as curriculum is concerned."

One recent project involves the faith formation textbook evaluations that she is working on with Marylin Kravatz, the Southern Region coordinator, and Franciscan Sister Bernadette Svatos, the Northern Region coordinator. Both individually and as a team, the three strive to foster the faith journey and bring the jubilee message of evangelization to many areas of the diocese.

The three other faith formation regions in the diocese include the Southern Region, composed of the Albemarle, Charlotte and Salisbury vicariates, the Western region, composed of the Smoky Mountain and Asheville vicariates, and the Northern Region, composed of the Greensboro and Winston-Salem vicariates. ▼

ments and the grocery store. Even those who are not shut-in but just without transportation on a Sunday morning are welcome to utilize this service.

Marty Conrad, a younger parishioner who suffers from advanced lupus, has experienced the Caring Friends outreach first-hand. A devout Catholic who, because of her condition, doesn't get to Mass very often, Conrad converted 12 years ago and is often starved to talk about her faith with other Catholics.

"I will want so badly to talk Catholic-to-Catholic, face-to-face...," she says. "I want to be informed about what other Catholics are thinking about now and what the current issues are."

She was delighted when Marlene Olenick first called to tell her that someone would come visit her periodically. "When she (Olenick) told me about Caring Friends, I was so thrilled," she said. "I had not wanted to be selfish in asking anyone to come to my home (prior to this)."

Conrad is also involved with the Homebound Ministry program, which is an offshoot of Caring Friends. Rev. Mr. Thomas O'Connell, one of the parish's permanent deacons, had recalled a prayer program from another parish that got shut-ins involved. Katherine O'Connell, his wife, took off with the idea and developed the program at St. Leo's.

Shut-ins who wish to partake agree to pray for others. Once inducted by a eucharistic minister, the participants receive a cross, a book of special prayers and a list of intentions from the church office once a month.

"Every single day, no matter how ill I am, I take that program extremely seriously," says Conrad says of her involvement. "As a practicing Catholic, it is the only thing I can do to help the church." ▼

Lay missionary makes return visit to Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — Al Barbarino, who travels throughout North America and beyond to sing and share a message on the essence of being Catholic, will visit Charlotte for several engagements March 11-14. His mission? To benefit the needy in places he ministers as well as in his home state of New York.

Since 1991, Barbarino has recorded five albums of traditional, contemporary and original songs. A lay apostolate of the Franciscan Friars of the Renewal, Barbarino speaks with and sings to audiences about appreciating the loving message of Jesus. All proceeds from album sales — both through mail orders and at his appearances — are given to charities that help the poor.

Locally, he gives a percentage to host parishes and organizations. Others receiving funds are the Padre Pio Center for homeless men in the Bronx, a ministry of the Franciscan Friars of the Renewal, and Croatian Relief Services, a New Jersey-based agency aiding victims of the war in Bosnia.

Barbarino will perform a free concert of inspirational and spiritual songs March 14 at 7 p.m. in St. John Neumann Church, 8451 Idlewild Rd., in Charlotte.

He will visit St. Ann Church, 3635 Park Rd. in Charlotte, to sing at all weekend Masses March 11-12 as well, and will sing at the 6 p.m. Mass at St. John Neumann Church March 12. He will also briefly address the congregations about his ministry. On March 13, he will sing at the Little Flower Assisted Living Community.

Through his ministry, Barbarino hopes to provide for those hurting both materially and spiritually. "The message is two-fold: to remind people that God is with us every minute of the day, and to help people realize the peace of Christ," he said during a 1998 visit to Charlotte.

Barbarino's recordings will be available at all of his Charlotte appearances. For more information on the concert at St. John Neumann Church, call (704) 536-6520. ▼

Catholic scholar says don't beatify Pius XII yet

CHICAGO (CNS) — In the name of scholarship, a leading expert in Catholic-Jewish relations has said the church should take no official action for now on Pope Pius XII's sainthood cause. "Many of us who have researched Pius' record are strongly opposed to his canonization, beatification or even elevation to 'venerable' status," said Servite Father John Pawlikowski, professor of social ethics at Catholic Theological Union in Chicago. "Such action would make it extremely difficult, particularly for Catholic scholars, to continue their investigation of his record." The priest made his remarks in the Feb. 23 issue of The Christian Century in a review of recently published books that took opposite sides in the debate over the response of Pope Pius XII and his Vatican offices to Hitler's World War II effort to exterminate the Jews.

Suffragette film brings Burns his fourth Christopher Award

NEW YORK (CNS) — A PBS feature on two women who were instrumental in getting American women the right to vote has won documentarian Ken Burns his fourth Christopher Award. Burns' documentary, "Not for Ourselves Alone: The Story of Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony," was one of 21 television programs, movies and books to be given Christopher Awards at a Feb. 24 ceremony in New York. Burns' previous wins came with "The Civil War" in 1991, "The Statue of Liberty" in 1987, and "The Brooklyn Bridge" in 1983. He has produced and directed each winner and he also wrote "The Civil War."

U.S. church official urges release of Congolese archbishop

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, chairman of the U.S. bishops' International Policy Committee, denounced the arrest of a Congolese archbishop and urged the U.S. government to press for his immediate release. "I vehemently deplore the recent arrest of Archbishop Emmanual Kataliko of Bukavu," Cardinal Law said in a Feb. 17 statement. "I pray that our government will use whatever influence it may have" for the archbishop's immediate release by the Congolese Rally for Democracy, the rebel group that arrested the archbishop, said Cardinal Law.

All School Mass Our Lady of Grace School in Greensboro was fortunate to celebrate Catholic Schools Week with Bishop William G. Curlin by participating in an All School Mass. Bishop Curlin spoke about his experiences in Catholic school and urged students to work hard and appreciate the sacrifices parents make for their children. The bishop also blessed the throats of all the students after Mass.

Family comes first, Marquette University coach emphasizes

WHITEFISH BAY, Wis. (CNS) — Put your family first, Marquette University men's basketball coach Tom Crean told a group of parents and would-be athletes at a Whitefish Bay parish. "Start with family first, and put everything else behind it," urged Crean, speaking as a coach and a young father. "Anytime you put family ahead of whatever you're doing, you're on the right track." The 33-year-old Crean, who is in his first season with the Golden Eagles, spoke to about 75 people at a fund-raising breakfast for St. Monica Elementary School.

'Romero' to be nationally televised in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — A film about the late Archbishop Oscar A. Romero, previously banned by Salvadoran authorities, will be shown on national television as part of the commemorations of the 20th anniversary of his death. "We have never before been given permission to show the film 'Romero.' ... I don't know why," Msgr. Ricardo Urioste Bustamante, an official of the San Salvador Archdiocese, told reporters Feb. 16. The film, starring the late Raul Julia, will be shown in the run-up to a series of activities being planned by the Oscar Romero Foundation for March, said Msgr. Urioste, who heads the organization.

At Vatican and in Egypt, pope begins Holy Year pilgrimages

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

CAIRO, Egypt (CNS) — With a three-day visit to Egypt and a "virtual" journey to Iraq, Pope John Paul II began a long-anticipated series of Holy Year pilgrimages to the roots of the faith.

In Egypt Feb. 26, the pope prayed at the foot of Mount Sinai, where Moses received the Ten Commandments, and said God's law was still the only hope for modern society.

"The Ten Commandments are not an arbitrary imposition of a tyrannical Lord. They were written in stone; but before that, they were written on the human heart as the universal moral law, valid in every time and place," he said.

Gazing over a desert mountain landscape that evoked the severity of the Bible, the pope said the world needs to rediscover the "liberating obedience" that prompted Moses to answer God's call.

The Mount Sinai pilgrimage capped a historic visit to Egypt, where the pope celebrated Mass for his tiny flock of Catholics and reached out to Muslims and Orthodox Christians.

"As-salamu alaikum — Peace be with you!" he said in Arabic after arriving at Cairo's airport, then delivered a pointed message against religious intolerance.

"To do harm, to promote violence and conflict in the name of religion is a terrible contradiction and a great offense against God. But past and present history give us many examples of such a misuse of religion," he said.

Egypt welcomed the pope with state honors and interreligious warmth. After kissing a bowl of Egyptian earth at the airport, the pontiff was greeted by the leaders of Egypt's Muslim, Orthodox and Catholic communities: Grand Sheik Mohammed Sayyid Tantawi, Coptic Orthodox bishops and Catholic Coptic Patriarch Stephanos II Ghattas.

President Hosni Mubarak, who has led a strong effort against Islamic extremist groups in Egypt, praised the pope as "a man of courage, wisdom and tolerance," and an ally in the struggle against fanaticism and hatred.

At a series of meetings, Egyptian religious leaders dwelt on the pope's efforts for peace and in particular his defense of Palestinian rights. But the pope's focus throughout the visit was spiritual, and his jubilee pilgrimage actually began at the Vatican the day before his arrival in Egypt.

Prevented by security concerns from traveling to ancient Ur, the birthplace of the patriarch Abraham located in Iraq, the pope took a mental journey there instead, leading a Vatican service filled with prayers, songs and images.

The pope said Abraham, called by God to move his family across the desert to a new land, was a model of "unconditional submission" to God's will, and in a sense a spiritual father figure for Christians, Muslims and Jews.

In Egypt, the pope's Mass, celebrated in front of 15,000 people at a Cairo sports arena, was broadcast on national television on a Friday, the Muslim holy day. The pope pointed out in his sermon that church-run social and charitable agencies were open to all, including Muslims.

"Christians and Muslims, while respecting different religious views, should place their skills at the service of the nation, at every level of society," he said.

Sheik Tantawi, considered the leading spiritual authority for the world's 1 billion Sunni Muslims, hosted the pope at his sprawling al-Azhar University complex, a major center of Islamic teaching. Sheiks and imams crowded around the stoop-shouldered pontiff to whisper a few

Cultural survival depends on preserving marriage, archbishop says

DENVER (CNS) — Preserving the status of traditional marriage as a union between a man and a woman is "a matter of cultural survival," Archbishop Charles J. Chaput said in a column published Feb. 27 in the Denver Rocky Mountain News.

"The 'tradition' in traditional marriage, after all, is not some dead habit of the past," the Denver archbishop wrote. "It's the voice of learned and re-learned experience. Alternative arrangements don't work."

Archbishop Chaput opened the column by expressing the church's support for "appropriate legislation which would class violence against homosexuals as a 'hate crime' involving special penalties."

"Whatever the content of a person's behavior, he or she never loses the right to be free from violence motivated by hate," he said. "The law can legitimately seek to ensure that."

But the Catholic Church also must support "legal efforts to define marriage as a unique relationship between one man and one woman; to protect and advance marriage's privileged status in society; and to exclude other types of relationships from sharing in that status," the archbishop said.

That support derives from the fact that marriage's unique legal status "exists largely to protect the children who depend on marriage to thrive."

"Tinkering with the identity of marriage tinkers with the welfare of children," Archbishop Chaput wrote.

"If the last few decades have shown us anything, it's this: When 'traditional' marriages dissolve, the children of those marriages suffer," he said.

"That doesn't mean blended or single-parent families will fail their children," he added. "It does mean that in those contexts, the task of parenting becomes harder, and the children involved will have more numerous and serious obstacles to overcome."

Society's response to the "extraordinary pressures" facing married couples today should be to "focus on easing those pressures and reinforcing our support for marriage, not redefining it or establishing parallel structures which erode marriage by sapping its special status," Archbishop Chaput said.

The Colorado Legislature is considering a bill that would define marriage as the union of one man and one woman and exclude the possibility of legalizing same-sex marriages in the state.

In Vermont, Bishop Kenneth A. Angell of Burlington has been at the forefront of an effort to defend traditional marriage and to keep the state Legislature from approving same-sex marriages or domestic partnerships.

The state Supreme Court in December ruled that Vermont laws discriminated against gay and lesbian couples and ordered that state laws be changed to give same-sex couples the same legal protections and benefits as married couples.

At a Feb. 17 clergy rally at the Vermont Statehouse in Montpelier, Bishop Angell said people sometimes ask, "What would Jesus do?" about same-sex marriages.

"I believe that he would rule on the side of 'love,'" the bishop said. "He always does, but he would also rule on the side of law, the law of God who loves us beyond our comprehension." ▼ words of greeting.

In extemporaneous remarks, the sheik and the pope — quoting, respectively, the Koran and St. Thomas Aquinas — agreed that Islam and Christianity shared several basic beliefs about the place of religion in human development. The sheik later announced he would make an unprecedented visit to the Vatican next fall to participate in dialogue sessions.

Pope Shenouda III, the 76-year-old patriarch of about 4 million Coptic Orthodox Christians in Egypt, welcomed the pontiff to his residence the same day with a speech extolling ecumenical cooperation. The bearded patriarch escorted the pope from room to room as small children scattered flower petals in their path.

The pope repeatedly praised the Coptic church, Orthodox and Catholic, and its ancient history of keeping the faith, even to the point of martyrdom — an allusion to the harsh persecution of Egyptian Christians in earlier centuries.

Speaking at an ecumenical prayer service in Cairo's Catholic cathedral Feb. 25, the pope traced the "painful" split among the Christian community back to the fifth century and urged new momentum toward reconciliation — specifically on the issue of papal primacy.

"Dear brothers, there is no time to lose in this regard!" he said.

At the ecumenical service, the Coptic patriarch broke through the formality when he embraced the pope and told him: "We love our country, and we love you!"

The pope replied moments later, "I would like to reciprocate by saying: We love you, too."

One priest in Egypt said the problem in local ecumenical dialogue was authority, not theology.

"I think the main problem is that the Coptic Orthodox Church is afraid to lose her independence. It has its own traditions that go back centuries. The Catholic Church is a very strong, monolithic church, and the Orthodox are afraid of that," said Dominican Father Emilio Platti, a Belgian who has spent 28 years in Egypt.

Even the pope's trip to Mount Sinai hit an ecumenical snag. The Greek Orthodox community that runs the Monastery of St. Catherine on the mountain welcomed the pope warmly, but deserted his Liturgy of the Word service. Greek Orthodox Archbishop Damianos said praying together would not be proper until the churches shared full communion.

The pope was animated during a tour of the monastery's holy places. When he reached the spot where God is said to have revealed himself to Moses in the "burning bush," he fell to his knees and prayed intensely for 10 minutes.

The pope planned to continue his biblical pilgrimage in a March visit to Jordan, Israel and the Palestinian territories. The idea, said papal aides, was to follow the progress of salvation history and in the process honor its chief figures: Abraham, Moses and Christ.

Vatican officials said they were still looking at the possibility of an additional visit to Damascus, Syria, where St. Paul preached the Gospel, sometime later this year or in 2001. ▼

"I will lift up my eyes to the mountains, from whence comes my help." — Psalms 121:1

Lent is the season the Church gives us to take stock and review our lives, to root out all that is not good and true and replace it with the faithful and the holy.

Lent in the Great

In this early age, the Church turns to the ancient penitential practices of fasting, almsgiving, and prayer. These practices remain as rich and life-giving in the year 2000 as they were when practiced by the early Christians and by our Jewish forebears.

Fasting reminds us of our hunger for God which no worldly things can satisfy. Almsgiving reminds us that love of God and love of neighbor are inextricably intertwined and that we bear responsibility for each other. Prayer reminds us to center our lives on God who alone gives meaning to all we do.

Lent 2000 is a most special time – the Lent of a Jubilee Year, a time of favor from the Lord. Jubilee is a special time of forgiveness, reconciliation, healing and liberation from all that binds us. The liturgies and devotions of Lent call us to a kind of spiritual spring cleaning, identifying relationships that are disordered and sins that imprison, and then seeking forgiveness and healing. We root out the darkness of sin so as to enter the Easter mysteries with a clean heart bathed in the healing, life-giving light of Christ.

Guidelines for Lent

1) The time of Lent is to be observed by Catholics as a special season of prayer, penance and works of charity.

2) Ash Wednesday and Good Friday, in particular, are the most important penitential days of the liturgical year. They are days of both fast and abstinence. All Fridays in Lent are days of abstinence.

3) The rule of fasting states the only one full meal a day can be taken. Two small meals, "Sufficient to maintain strength," are allowed, but together they should not equal another full meal. Eating between meals breaks the fast, but drinking liquids does not. The rule of fasting binds all Catholics from age 18 to 59.

4) Abstinence refers to the eating of meat. Under the present law, it does not include egg or milk products, meat stock soups or gravies. The rule of abstinence binds all Catholics 14 years old and older.

5) The Substantial observance of the laws of fast and abstinence is a serious obligation. Those whose work or health would be impaired are excused from fasting and abstaining. The individual conscience can decide if there is a proper cause to excuse. A more serious reason should be present to excuse from Ash Wednesday and Good Friday penance.

6) Self-imposed fasting on the other weekdays of Lent is recommended. Abstinence on all Fridays of the years is also highly recommended. The Peace Pastoral of the American Bishops, stating that prayer is incomplete without penance, urges Friday abstinences as something all American Catholics should offer up for the sake of world peace.

7) Parents and teachers should see to it that even those who are not bound by the laws of fasting and abstinence because of age are brought up in an atmosphere that is conducive to a sense of penance.

8) The faithful should be clearly and positively encouraged to receive the Sacrament of Penance during Lent. There should be adequate time scheduled for Confessions before Easter. Group penance services should not be scheduled for the last days of the Holy Week. At no time is it permitted to schedule a group penance service for the purpose of giving general absolution without individual Confessions.

9) The liturgical directions of the Sacramentary and the Lectionary must be faithfully observed regarding all the special Holy Week Rites.

10) Funeral Masses are not allowed on Holy Thursday, Good Friday or Holy Saturday. The funeral Rite outside of Mass can be held either in church or at the chapel on those days, with a Funeral Mass later.

11) The RCIA is incorporated into the liturgy during Lent. The Rite of Election is celebrated on the First Sunday of Lent. On the third, fourth and fifth Sunday of Lent, the Scrutinies take place during Mass.

The Sacrament of Penance and the Jubilee Year

What do sin and penance have to do with the celebration of the Millennium?

The jubilee year 2000 is for the Church "a year of the Lord's favor, the year of the remission of sins and of the punishment due to them, a year of reconciliation between disputing parties, a year of manifold conversions and of sacramental and extra-sacramental penance."1With these words the Holy Father reminds us of the importance of reconciliation and specifically the celebration of the Sacrament of Penance in the life of the church.

Why do we need the Sacrament of Penance?

"Because of human weakness..Christians 'leave their first love' (See Rev. 2:4) and even break off their friendship with God by sinning. The Lord, therefore, instituted a special Sacrament of Penance for the pardon of sins committed after baptism (See John 20:21-23) and the Church has faithfully celebrated the sacrament throughout the centuries in varying ways, but retaining its essential elements." [Sacred Congregation for Divine Worship]

What happens in the Sacrament of Penance?

In the Sacrament of Penance "the sinner who by the grace of a merciful God, embraces the way of penance, comes back to the Father who 'first loved us' (1 Jn 4:19), to Christ who gave himself up for us, and to the Holy Spirit who has been poured out on us abundantly." [Rite of Penance]3 Likewise, "those who by grave sin have withdrawn from the communion of love with God are called back in the Sacrament of Penance to the life they have lost. And those who through daily weakness fall into venial sins draw strength from a repeated celebration of penance to gain the full freedom of the children of God."

Notice of the Apostolic Penitentiary

The Gift of the Indulgence

The gift of the indulgence discloses the fullness of God's mercy, which is expressed primarily in the Sacrament of Penance and Reconciliation. The ancient practice, about which there have been many historical misunderstandings, should be properly understood and accepted.

Although reconciliation with God is the gift of God's mercy, it implies a process involving man with his personal efforts, and the Church with her sacramental function. At the center of the reconciliation process is the Sacrament of Penance, but even after the human being has received forgiveness for his sin through this sacrament, he continues to be marked by those "remnants" which prevent him from being fully open to grace, and he needs purification and that renewal of the whole person through Christ's grace. To obtain this, the gift of the indulgence is a great help to him.

An indulgence is "a remission before God of the temporal punishment due to sins whose guilt has already been forgiven, which the faithful Christian who is duly disposed gains under certain prescribed conditions through the action of the Church which, as the minister of redemption, dispenses and applies with authority the treasury of the satisfactions of Christ and the saints" (Enchiridion Indulgentiarum, Normae de indulgentiis, Libreria Editrice Vaticana 1999, p. 21; cf. Catechism of the Catholic Church, n. 1471).

The following notice of the Apostolic Penitentiary recalls the necessary dispositions for fruitfully gaining the Jubilee indulgence.

The celebration of the Jubilee Year is not only an extraordinary occasion for benefiting from the great gift of indulgences which the Lord gives us through the Church, but it is also a fitting opportunity to recall the catechesis on indulgences to the attention of the faithful. The Apostolic Penitentiary is therefore publishing this sacred notice for the benefit of all who will be making Jubilee visits.

General remarks on indulgences

1. This is how an indulgence is defined in the Code of Canon Law (can. 992) and in the Catechism of the Catholic Church (n. 1471): "An indulgence is a remission before God of the temporal punishment due to sins whose guilt has already been forgiven, which the faithful Christian who is duly disposed gains under certain prescribed conditions through the action of the Church which, as the minister of redemption, dispenses and applies with authority the treasury of the satisfactions of Christ and the saints."

2. In general, the gaining of indulgences requires certain prescribed conditions (below, nn. 3,4), and the performance of certain prescribed works (nn. 8, 9, 10 indicate those specific to the Holy Year).

3. To gain indulgences, whether plenary or partial, it is necessary that the faithful be in the state of grace at least at the time the indulgences work is completed.

4. A plenary indulgence can be gained only once a day. In order to obtain it, the faithful must, in addition to being in the state of grace:

• have the interior disposition of complete detachment from sin, even venial sin;

• have sacramentally confessed their sins;

• receive the Holy Eucharist (it is certainly better to receive it while participating in Holy Mass, but for the indulgence only Holy Communion is required);

• pray for the intentions of the Supreme Pontiff.

5. It is appropriate, but not necessary, that the sacramental Confession and especially Holy Communion and the prayer for the Pope's intentions take place on the same day that the indulgenced work is performed; but it is sufficient that these sacred rites and prayers be carried out within several days (about 20) before or after the indulgenced act. Prayer for the Pope's intentions is left to the choice of the faithful, but an "Our Father" and a "Hail Mary" are suggested. One sacramental Confession suffices for several plenary indulgences, but a separate Holy Communion and a separate prayer for the Holy Father's intentions are required for each plenary indulgence.

6. For the sake of those legitimately impeded, confessors can commute both the work prescribed and the conditions required (except, obviously, detachment from even venial sin).

7. Indulgences can always be applied either to oneself or to the souls of the deceased, but they cannot be applied to other persons living on earth.

Specific Aspects of the Jubilee Year

Having fulfilled the necessary conditions in nn. 3-4, the faithful may gain the Jubilee indulgence by performing one of the following works, listed here below in three categories:

8. Works of piety or religion

• Either make a pious pilgrimage to a Jubilee shrine or place (for Rome: one of the four Patriarchal Basilicas — St. Peter, St. John Lateran, St. Mary Major, St. Paul, or to the Basilica of the Holy Cross in Jerusalem, the Basilica of St. Laurence in Campo Verano, the Shrine of Our Lady of Divine Love or one of the Christian Catacombs, and participate there in Holy Mass or another liturgical celebration (Lauds or Vespers) or some pious exercise (the Stations of the Cross, the rosary, the recitation of the Akathistos Hymn, etc);

• Or make a pious visit, as a group or individually, to one of these same Jubilee places, and there spend some time in Eucharistic adoration and pious meditations, ending with the "Our Father", the profession of faith in any approved form and prayer to the Blessed Virgin Mary.

9. Works of mercy or charity

• Either visit for a suitable time their brothers or sisters in need or in difficulty (the sick, the imprisoned, the elderly living alone, the handicapped, etc.), as if making a pilgrimage to Christ present in them;

• Or support by a significant contribution works of a religious or social nature (for the benefit of abandoned children, young people in trouble, the elderly in need, foreigners in various countries seeking better living conditions);

• Or devote a suitable part of personal free time to activities benefiting the community or other similar forms of personal sacrifice.

10. Acts of penance

For at least one whole day

• Either abstain from unnecessary consumption (smoking, alcohol, etc.);

• Or fast,

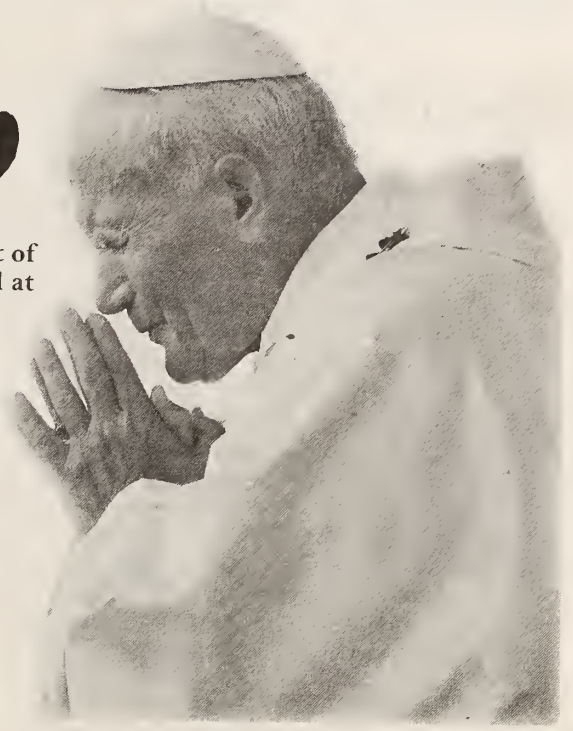
• Or abstain from meat (or other food according to the specific norms of the Bishops' Conferences), and donate a proportionate sum of money to the poor.

I am with you always, to the close of the age.
— Mt 28:20

Lent 2000



VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's Lenten message for 2000, released at the Vatican Jan. 27.

Dear brothers and sisters,

1. This year, the celebration of Lent, a time of conversion and reconciliation, takes on a particular character, occurring as it does during the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000. The time of Lent is in fact the culminating point of the journey of conversion and reconciliation which the jubilee, the year of the Lord's favor, offers to all the faithful, so that they can renew their fidelity to Christ and proclaim his mystery of salvation with renewed ardor in the new millennium. Lent helps Christians to enter more deeply into this "mystery hidden for ages" (Eph 3:9): It leads them to come face to face with the word of the living God and urges them to give up their own selfishness in order to receive the saving activity of the Holy Spirit.

2. We were dead through sin (cf. Eph 2:5): This is how St. Paul describes the situation of man without Christ. This is why the Son of God wished to unite himself to human nature, ransoming it from the slavery of sin and death.

This is a slavery which man experiences every day, as he perceives its deep roots in his own heart (cf. Mt 7:11). Sometimes it shows itself in dramatic and unusual ways, as happened in the course of the great tragedies of the 20th century, which deeply marked the lives of countless communities and individuals, the victims of cruel violence. Forced deportations, the systematic elimination of peoples, contempt for the fundamental rights of the person: These are the tragedies which even today humiliate humanity. In daily life, too, we see all sorts of forms of fraud, hatred, the destruction of others, and lies of which man is both the victim and source. Humanity is marked by sin. Its tragic condition reminds us of the cry of alarm uttered by the Apostle to the nations: "None is righteous, no, not one" (Rom 3:10; cf. Ps 14:3).

3. In the face of the darkness of sin and man's incapacity to free himself on his own, there appears in all its splendor the saving work of Christ: "God appointed him as a sacrifice for reconciliation, through faith, by the shedding of his blood, and so showed his justness" (Rom 3:25). Christ is the Lamb who has taken upon himself the sin of the world (cf. Jn 1:29). He shared in human life "unto death, even death on a cross" (Phil 2:8), to ransom mankind from the slavery of evil and restore humanity to its original dignity as children of God. This is the paschal mystery in which we are reborn. Here, as the Easter Sequence says, "Death with life contended, combat strangely ended." The fathers of the church affirm that in Christ Jesus, the devil attacks the whole of humanity and ensnares it in death, from which, however, it is freed through the victorious power of the resurrection. In the risen Lord, death's power is broken and mankind is enabled, through faith, to enter into communion with God. To those who believe, God's very life is given, through the action of the Holy Spirit, the "first gift to those who believe" (Eucharistic Prayer IV). Thus the redemption accomplished on the cross renews the universe and brings about the reconciliation of God and man, and of people with one another.

4. The jubilee is the time of grace in which we are invited to open ourselves in a particular way to the mercy of the Father, who in the Son has stooped down to man, and to reconciliation, the great gift of Christ. This year therefore should become, not only for Christians but also for all people of good will, a precious moment for experiencing the renewing power of God's forgiving and reconciling love. God offers his mercy to whoever is willing to accept it, even to the distant and doubtful. The people of our time, tired of mediocrity and false hopes, are thus given an opportunity to set out on the path that leads to fullness of life. In this context, Lent of the Holy Year 2000 is par excellence "the acceptable time ... the day of salvation" (2 Cor 6:2), the particularly favorable opportunity "to be reconciled to God" (2 Cor 5:20).

During the Holy Year the church offers various opportunities for personal and community reconciliation. Each diocese has designated special places where the faithful can go in order to experience a particular presence of God, by recognizing in his light their own sinfulness, and through the sacrament of reconciliation to set out on a new path of life. Particular significance attaches to pilgrimage to the Holy Land and to Rome, which are special places of encounter with God, because of their unique role in the history of salvation. How could we fail to set out, at least spiritually, to the land which 2,000 years ago witnessed the passage of the Lord? There "the Word became flesh" (Jn 1:14) and "increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man" (Lk 2:52); there he "went about all the cities and villages ... preaching the Gospel of the kingdom and healing every disease and every infirmity" (Mt 9:35); there he accomplished the mission entrusted to him by the Father (cf. Jn 19:30) and poured out the Holy Spirit upon the infant church (cf. Jn 20:22).

I, too, hope, precisely during Lent of the year 2000, to be a pilgrim in the Holy Land, to the places where our faith began, in order to celebrate the 2,000th jubilee of the incarnation. I invite all Christians to accompany me with their prayers, while I myself, on the various stages of the pilgrimage, shall ask for forgiveness and reconciliation for the sons and daughters of the church and for all humanity.

5. The path of conversion leads to reconciliation with God and to fullness of new life in Christ. A life of faith, hope and love. These three virtues, known as the "theological" virtues because they refer directly to God in his mystery, have been the subject of special study during the three years of preparation for the great jubilee. The celebration of the Holy Year now calls every Christian to live and bear witness to these virtues in a fuller and more conscious way.

The grace of the jubilee above all impels us to renew our personal faith. This consists in holding fast to the proclamation of the Paschal Mystery, through which believers recognize that in Christ crucified and risen from the dead they have been given salvation. Day by day they offer him their lives; they accept everything that the Lord wills for them, in the certainty that God loves them. Faith is the "yes" of individuals to God, it is their "Amen."

For Jews, Christians and Muslims alike, Abraham is the exemplar of the believer: Trusting in the promise, he follows the voice of God calling him to set out on unknown paths. Faith helps us to discover the signs of God's loving presence in creation, in people, in the events of history and above all in the work and message of Christ, as he inspires people to look beyond themselves, beyond appearances, toward that transcendence where the mystery of God's love for every creature is revealed.

Through the grace of the jubilee, the Lord likewise invites us to renew our hope. In fact, time itself is redeemed in Christ and opens up to a prospect of unending joy and full communion with God. For Christians, time is marked by an expectation of the eternal wedding feast, anticipated daily at the eucharistic table. Looking forward to the eternal banquet "the Spirit and Bride say 'Come"' (Rev 22:17), nurturing the hope that frees time from mere repetition and gives it its real meaning. Through the virtue of hope, Christians bear witness to the fact that, beyond all evil and beyond every limit, history bears within itself a seed of good which the Lord will cause to germinate in its fullness. They therefore look to the new millennium without fear, and face the challenges and expectations of the future in the confident certainty which is born of faith in the Lord's promise.

Through the jubilee, finally, the Lord asks us to rekindle our charity. The kingdom which Christ will reveal in its full splendor at the end of time is already present where people live in accordance with God's will. The church is called to bear witness to the communion, peace and charity which are the kingdom's distinguishing marks. In this mission, the Christian community knows that faith without works is dead (cf. Jas 2:17). Thus, through charity, Christians make visible God's love for man revealed in Christ, and make manifest Christ's presence in the world "to the close of the age." For Christians, charity is not just a gesture or an ideal but is, so to speak, the prolongation of the presence of Christ who gives himself.

During Lent, everyone — rich and poor — is invited to make Christ's love present through generous works of charity. During this jubilee year our charity is called in a particular way to manifest Christ's love to our brothers and sisters who lack the necessities of life, who suffer hunger, violence or injustice. This is the way to make the ideals of liberation and fraternity found in the sacred Scripture a reality, ideals which the Holy Year puts before us once more. The ancient Jewish jubilee, in fact, called for the freeing of slaves, the cancellation of debts, the giving of assistance to the poor. Today, new forms of slavery and more tragic forms of poverty afflict vast numbers of people, especially in the so-called Third World countries. This is a cry of suffering and despair which must be heard and responded to by all those walking the path of the jubilee. How can we ask for the grace of the jubilee if we are insensitive to the needs of the poor, if we do not work to ensure that all have what is necessary to lead a decent life?

May the millennium which is beginning be a time when, finally, the cry of countless men and women — our brothers and sisters who do not have even the minimum necessary to live — is heard and finds a benevolent response. It is my hope that Christians at every level will become promoters of practical initiatives to ensure an equitable distribution of resources and the promotion of the complete human development of every individual.

6. "I am with you always, to the close of the age." These words of Jesus assure us that in proclaiming and living the Gospel of charity we are not alone. Once again, during this Lent of the year 2000, he invites us to return to the Father, who is waiting for us with open arms to transform us into living and effective signs of his merciful love.

To Mary, mother of all who suffer and mother of divine mercy, we entrust our intentions and our resolutions. May she be the bright star on our journey in the new millennium.

With these sentiments I invoke upon everyone the blessings of God, one and triune, the beginning and the end of all things, to whom we raise "to the close of the age" the hymn of blessing and praise in Christ: "Through him, with him, in him, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, all glory and honor is yours, almighty Father, for ever and ever. Amen."

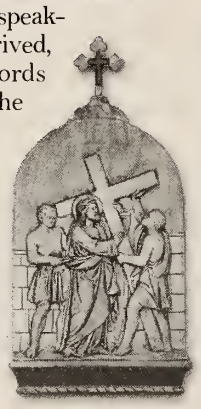
Stations of the Cross

The following stations of the cross are based on those celebrated by Pope John Paul II on Good Friday 1991. They are presented here as an alternative to the traditional stations and as a way of reflecting more deeply on the Scriptural accounts of Christ's passion. The stations shown here are located within Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, N.C.

First Station: Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane

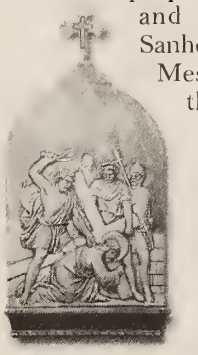
Then Jesus came with them to a place called Gethsemane, and he said to his disciples, "Sit here while I go over there and pray." He took along Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to feel sorrow and distress. Then he said to them, "My soul is sorrowful even to death. Remain here and keep watch with me." He advanced a little and fell prostrate in prayer, saying, "My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from me; yet, not as I will, but as you will." When he returned to his disciples he found them asleep. He said to Peter, "So you could not keep watch with me for one hour? Watch and pray that you may not undergo the test. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." — Matthew 25: 36-41

Second Station: Jesus, Betrayed by Judas, is Arrested



Then, while [Jesus] was still speaking, Judas, one of the Twelve, arrived, accompanied by a crowd with swords and clubs, who had come from the chief priests, the scribes, and the elders. His betrayer had arranged a signal with them, saying, "the man I shall kiss is the one; arrest him and lead him away securely." He came and immediately went over to him and said, "Rabbi." And he kissed him. At this they laid hands on him and arrested him. — Mark 14: 43-46

Third Station: Jesus is Condemned by the Sanhedrin



When day came the council of elders of the people met, both chief priests and scribes, and they brought him before their Sanhedrin. They said, "If you are the Messiah, tell us," but he replied to them, "If I tell you, you will not believe, and if I question, you will not respond. But from this time on the Son of Man will be seated at the right hand of the power of God." They all asked, "Are you then the Son of God?" He replied to them, "You say that I am." Then they said, "What further need have we for testimony? We have heard it from his own mouth." — Luke 22: 66-71

Fourth Station: Jesus is Denied by Peter

Now Peter was sitting outside in the courtyard. One of the maids came over to him and said, "You too were with Jesus the Galilean." But he denied it in front of everyone, saying, "I do not know what you are talking about!" As he went out to the gate, another girl saw him and said to those who were there, "This man was with Jesus the Nazorean." Again he denied it with an oath, "I do not know the man!" A little later the bystanders came over and said to Peter, "Surely you too are one of them; even your speech gives you away." At that he began to curse and to swear, "I do not know the man." And immediately a cock crowed. Then Peter remembered the word that Jesus had spoken: "Before the cock crows you will deny me three times." He went out and began to weep bitterly. — Matthew 26: 69-75

Fifth Station: Jesus is Judged by Pilate

The chief priests with the elders and the scribes, that is, the whole Sanhedrin, held a council. They bound Jesus, led him away, and handed him over to Pilate. Pilate questioned him, "Are you the king of the Jews?" He said to him in reply, "You say so." The chief priests accused him of many things. Again Pilate questioned him, "Have you no answer? See how many things they accuse you of." Jesus gave him no further answer, so that Pilate was amazed.... Pilate, wishing to satisfy the crowd, released Barrabas... [and] handed [Jesus] over to be crucified. — Mark 15: 1-5, 15

Sixth Station: Jesus is Scourged and Crowned with Thorns

Then Pilate took Jesus and had him scourged. And the soldiers wove a crown out of thorns and placed it on his head, and clothed him in a purple cloak, and they came to him and said, "Hail, King of the Jews!" And they struck him repeatedly. — John 19: 1-3

Seventh Station: Jesus Bears the Cross

When the chief priests and the guards saw [Jesus] they cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him!" Pilate said to them, "Take him yourselves and crucify him. I find no guilt in him." ... They cried out, "Take him away, take him away! Crucify him!" Pilate said to them, "Shall I crucify your king?" The chief priests answered, "We have no king but Caesar." Then he handed him over to them to be crucified. So they took Jesus, and carrying the cross himself he went out to what is called the Place of the Skull, in Hebrew, Golgotha. — John 19: 6, 15-17

Eighth Station: Jesus is Helped by Simon the Cyrenian to Carry the Cross

They pressed into service a passer-by, Simon, a Cyrenian, who was coming in from the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to carry his cross. — Mark 15: 21

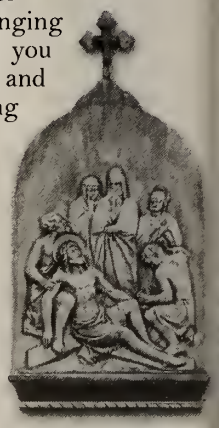
Ninth Station: Jesus Meets the Women of Jerusalem

A large crowd of people followed Jesus, including many women who mourned and lamented him. Jesus turned to them and said, "Daughters of Jerusalem, do not weep for me; weep instead for yourselves and for your children, for indeed, the days are coming when people will say, 'Blessed are the barren, the wombs that never bore and the breasts that never nursed.' At that time, people will say to the mountains, 'Fall upon us!' and to the hills, 'Cover us!' for if these things are done when the wood is green what will happen when it is dry?" — Luke 23: 27-31

Tenth Station: Jesus is Crucified

When they came to the place called the Skull, they crucified him and the criminals there, one on his right, the other on his left. [Then Jesus said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."] — Luke 23: 33-34

Eleventh Station: Jesus Promises His Kingdom to the Good Thief



Now one of the criminals hanging there reviled Jesus, saying, "Are you not the Messiah? Save yourself and us." The other, however, rebuking him, said in reply, "Have you no fear of God, for you are subject to the same condemnation? And indeed, we have been condemned justly, for the sentence we received corresponds to our crimes, but this man has done nothing criminal." Then he said, "Jesus, remember me when you come into your kingdom." He replied to him, "Amen, I say to you, today you will be with me in Paradise." — Luke 23: 39-43

Twelfth Station: Jesus Speaks to His Mother and the Disciple

Standing by the cross of Jesus were his mother and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Clopas, and Mary of Magdala. When Jesus saw his mother and the disciple there whom he loved, he said to his mother, "Woman, behold, your son." Then he said to the disciple, "Behold, your mother." And from that hour the disciple took her into his home. — John 19: 25-27

Thirteenth Station: Jesus Dies on the Cross

It was now about noon and darkness came over the whole land until three in the afternoon because of an eclipse of the sun. Then the veil of the temple was torn down the middle. Jesus cried out in a loud voice, "Father, into your hands I commend my spirit"; and when he had said this he breathed his last. — Luke 23: 44-46

Fourteenth Station: Jesus is Placed in the Tomb

When it was evening, there came a rich man from Arimathea named Joseph, who was himself a disciple of Jesus. He went to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus; then Pilate ordered it to be handed over. Taking the body, Joseph wrapped it [in] clean linen and laid it in his new tomb that he had hewn in the rock. Then he rolled a huge stone across the entrance to the tomb and departed. — Matthew 27: 57-60

Diocese to celebrate regional Rites of Election

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

Bishop William G. Curlin will join Catholics throughout the Diocese of Charlotte later this month in bringing hundreds of men and women a step closer to the Catholic Church.

Bishop Curlin will celebrate the Rite of Election and Call to Continuing Conversion at three sites between March 12-16. The rite is a key step in the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults, the process by which men and women fully enter the Catholic Church through study, prayer and liturgical celebrations.

The Rite of Election and Call to Continuing Conversion will be celebrated at the following sites:

• Basilica of St. Lawrence, 97 Haywood St. in Asheville, on March 12 at 3 p.m.;

• St. Pius X Church, 2210 N. Elm St. in Greensboro, on March 15 at 7:15 p.m.;

• St. Matthew Church, 8015 Ballantyne Commons Parkway in Charlotte, March 16 at 7:15 p.m.

The regional celebrations of the Rite of Election and Call to Continuing Conversion have become comprehensive diocesan events in the past few years. Diocesan and parish officials involved in the RCIA have said that gatherings such as this do much to raise the awareness of the community regarding the Christian Initiation process.

The RCIA process can take several months to several years, and it involves periods of inquiry, formal instruction, sacramental preparation and formation in church life. The Rite of Election and Call to Continuing Conversion is the second of three major rites in the RCIA. It marks the end of the period of discernment called the catechumenate. During its celebration, participants affirm their desire to continue their preparation for full reception into the church.

The Rite of Election is celebrated for catechumens, participants who have not been baptized and who prepare to receive the sacraments of baptism, confirmation and Communion during the Easter vigil Mass. The Call to Continuing Conversion is for candidates, those who have been baptized and who will receive the sacraments of confirmation and Communion.

Traditionally celebrated during early Lent, the Rite of Election and Call to Continuing Conversion invites RCIA participants to sincere personal reflection and preparation while also calling the community of faith to support catechumens and candidates in their faith journey. ▼

Little Maria lives in a village in Guatemala in a two-room house with a tin roof and dirt floors. Her father struggles to support the family as a day laborer. Can you help a poor child like Maria? Become a sponsor today!

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford (minimum $10). CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school – whatever is needed most. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child, information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child!

"I'm delighted to be CFCA's 100,000th sponsor . . . and I invite you to join me."

Archbishop James P. Keleher, Kansas City, Kansas – sponsors José Muños of Honduras.

Book Review

Author chronicles faith stories of famous, obscure sportsmen

By MICHAEL COX
Catholic News Service

WORCESTER, Mass. (CNS) — Much like the subjects he chronicles in his new book, Wally Carew is an avid sportsman, a gifted professional and a man of great faith.

Carew's first book, "Men of Spirit, Men of Sports," released late last year by Ambassador Books Inc. of Worcester, was on the Boston Globe paperback best-seller list for six of 10 weeks beginning in mid-December. A second printing was planned for March.

In the book, Carew, the son of a former St. Bernard's High School football coach, chronicles the warm and inspiring stories of both world-famous and little-known athletes of the 20th century.

The book provides rare glimpses into men of great faith, including Mike Ditka, Bob Cousy, Jimmy O'Brien, Jackie Robinson, Roger Staubach and others.

"Men of Spirit, Men of Sports"
By Wally Carew
Ambassador Books, $14.95

Carew skillfully combines those stories with his own childhood joys and sorrows growing up in Concord in the 1950s as the son of the town's legendary football coach.

"It combines two of my greatest loves — competitive athletics and my faith," said Carew, a newspaper man who spent 25 years as a sportswriter and columnist for New England newspapers.

Publisher Gerard E. Goggins said the work is about much more than sports stories. It's about human relationships and the often difficult relationship between parents and their children.

"With this book it was like Wally was coming to terms with himself," Goggins told The Catholic Free Press, newspaper of the Worcester Diocese. "Wally's relationship with his father stuck in his throat for 50 years, and I think he had to write this book to finally come to terms with it."

Walter R. Carew Sr. was a Battle of the Bulge survivor and coach of Concord High School football through much of a stretch from 1946-55 when the team had a 58-0-1 record. He was also a gifted athlete, his son says, who would have played baseball for the Brooklyn Dodgers were it not for the war.

When it came to football, his son says, Wally Carew Sr. was one of the rare coaches who brought the Gospel to the gridiron. His faith was something both his son and players admired most about him.

Wally, 55, still lives in Medford with his wife, Mary Rose. He is a former writer with the Lowell Sun and Medford Mercury and is still a regular contributor with the Archdiocese of Boston's newspaper, The Pilot.

In his book, some of the greatest athletes this century are among those who reflect on the spiritual strength that sustained them through their careers.

Carew said he did all the interviews by phone, except one, a candid interview in which former Boston College basketball coach Jim O'Brien

By JEFF HENSLEY
Catholic News Service

My daughter Amy's eighth-grade class has been reading the 1961 Pulitzer Prize winning novel "To Kill a Mockingbird." It is a great book. I've been reading it to her chapter by chapter each evening, growing in appreciation of this moving depiction of life in the deep South of the mid-1930s.

To modern readers, it is history so distant from our experience as to seem out of the Stone Age instead of the recent past. The racism depicted is so unfair, so ingrained, it seems impossible that it could be defeated — both in law, and in fact, for the most part — in so short a time.

My 14-year-old has asked vehemently how people could have lived in such a manner, never giving people a chance just because of the color of their skin. "It's just like abortion," she said. And she was right.

In "To Kill a Mockingbird," Tom Robinson, a black man with a withered right arm, is convicted of a rape he could not have committed. Today, millions of unborn children are not given the chance to live, also as a result of a prejudicial judgment.

In today's Mark reading, Jesus knows the hearts of his accusers who are looking for a chance to trip him up. Will he heal on the Sabbath?

"He looked around at them with anger, for he was deeply grieved that they had closed their minds against him. Then he said to the man, 'Stretch out your hand.' The man did so, and his hand was perfectly restored. When the Pharisees went outside, they immediately began to plot with the Herodians how they might destroy him."

God's image was in Tom Robinson. God's image is in every unborn child. Jesus still grieves when men and women seek to destroy that image.

But we must never forget that destroying Jesus' body built his church, that novels such as "To Kill a Mockingbird" helped deal a death blow to racism enshrined in law and that nearly 30 years after "Roe vs. Wade," a new birth of freedom for the unborn may yet dawn, quickly, unexpectedly, like a resurrection or as the fruit of an organized movement for freedom.

Question:
Do you seek to work against your natural prejudices to help you respond to all people as individuals with inherent worth and dignity?

"Then he said to them: 'Is it permitted to do a good deed on the Sabbath — or an evil one? To preserve life — or destroy it?"' — Mark 3:4 ab.

Archbishop: TV programs can aid spiritual life if well-chosen

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (CNS) — Television can be a tool for evangelization and spiritual growth if viewers are very picky about what they watch, U.S. Archbishop John P. Foley said.

"Through television, we can be intellectually enriched, creatively entertained and spiritually uplifted; but we can also be tempted and, indeed, debased," said the U.S. archbishop.

Archbishop Foley, president of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications, made his comments Feb. 19 during the Monte Carlo Television Festival.

Television has enabled Christians to bring the Gospel of Christ into the homes of millions of people who may not have heard it otherwise, he said.

The medium also has brought many people "a liberation from ignorance, from isolation and from loneliness," Archbishop Foley said.

At the same time, he said, by watching some television programs "we can be derailed or at least sidetracked from our journey through earthly life to eternal life with God."

Archbishop Foley said Christians have an obligation to avoid watching programs that lead them away from God and to choose programs that can bring them closer to God.

"Television can be a source of temptation, and it can also introduce a type of slavery, not only the traditional slavery of sin, but the slavery of the person who merely observes and does not participate in life," he said. ▼

Fox Family to air special on life of St. Patrick

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — The life of the patron saint of the Emerald Isle is dramatized in "St. Patrick: The Irish Legend," to be shown on Sunday, March 12, 7-9 p.m. EST on the Fox Family cable channel.

As a rebellious 16-year-old in a Christian fifth-century British village, Patrick (Luke Griffith) impulsively partakes in a midnight pagan ceremony only to be snatched by Irish raiders, put on a ship and sold as a slave in Ireland.

"St. Patrick, The Irish Legend"
March 12, 7-9 p.m., EST on the Fox Family channel

Forced to tend sheep on the cold hillsides, Patrick has time to reflect on his unhappy state and turns to God. In a golden vision of light, Patrick is told he has been chosen to do God's work. Escaping slavery, he returns to his parents (Alan Bates and Susannah York) who are thrilled to see him alive six years after he vanished.

But another vision reveals he is destined to convert the Irish, so he studies for the priesthood in Gaul where Patrick (played now by Patrick Bergin) convinces Bishop Germanus he has been selected by God to become the bishop of Ireland.

The chief bishop of Britain (Malcolm McDowell), however, is suspicious of Patrick and dismisses the Irish as "an uneducated, barbaric race." Nonetheless, Patrick perseveres, facing down heathen King Laoghaire, walking unharmed through an inferno to prove God's might and conveniently shape-shifting into a deer when in danger.

Preaching to throngs and using a shamrock to explain the Trinity, Patrick gains many converts but scorns the British bishops' demands for tithes. Nearly recalled from his beloved Ireland when his one instance of teen-age idolatry is revealed, Patrick takes heart in another vision in which God confirms his place in the history of Ireland, in the church and in preserving civilization.

Filmed in Ireland, the visuals are lush and the background music a lyrical delight.

However, director Robert Hughes' extremely reverential treatment of his subject does make him seem more a magical legend than a human man who struggled with his mission and eventually became a saint.

Patrick is able to deflect the blows of sword, change men into stone with a flick of his hand and drive the snakes into the sea the moment he sets foot back in Ireland. His miracles seem more like glitzy special-effects dramatics than instances of God working through his servant.

Bergin plays the saint with the conviction of one who knows he is invincible since God is on his side. While the religious ideas expressed are inspirational, it is the overly pious treatment that reduces a saint of the early church to more of a mythical figure whose reality is shrouded in centuries of Irish mist.

Some may be pleased to see two hours of prime time devoted to the life of a saint and want to share the story with other family members. ▼

"Wonder Boys"

Michael Douglas and Frances McDormand star in a scene from the feature film "Wonder Boys." Fitfully amusing comedy about a grouchy, pot-smoking English professor (Michael Douglas) who, daunted by the success of his first novel, is laboring to finish his second and in the process unwittingly takes an odd but gifted writing student (Tobey Maguire) under his shaky wing.

Skillful performances and the picturesque campus setting enhance director Curtis Hanson's character-driven movie but they aren't enough to sustain interest in the sluggish and insubstantial narrative. Recurring recreational drug abuse, implied homosexual encounter, an extramarital affair and some rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

U.S. Bishops to Catholics: Get Politically Involved in 2000 Election

The Church in politics? Is that legal?!

In fact, Catholic teaching declares that citizenship is a virtue, and participation in the political process is a moral obligation. And during this election year, the U.S. bishops are pressing the nation's Catholics to get politically active in order to reshape political priorities.

Catholics must enter into a "new kind of politics, focused more on moral principles than on the latest polls, more on the needs of the poor and vulnerable than the contributions of the rich and powerful, more on the pursuit of the common good than the demands of special interests," the bishops write in "Faithful Citizenship: Civic Responsibility for a New Millennium," their guide for this election year.

They list 10 areas for inquiry, framed around principles of Catholic teaching, against which voters and candidates can measure their positions and decisions.

"We hope parishes, dioceses, schools and other Catholic institutions will encourage active participation through non-partisan voter registration and education efforts," the bishops write.

To provide some how-to's for civic responsibility, Joan Rosenhauer, special projects director of the U.S. Catholic Conference's Department of Social Development and World Peace, will be in our diocese during the week of March 12th.

Rosenhauer, who worked closely with the bishops and several other departments of the USCC in preparing this statement, will give two regional workshops in Charlotte and in Greensboro.

She will also present two special sessions, one for priests and permanent deacons and one for Catholic Social Services staffs and boards.

Rosenhauer's sessions will cover Catholic teaching and principles of faithful citizenship, do's and don'ts for churches for political activities in an election year, and moral priorities for public life and questions for campaigns.

The first regional session is at St. Peter Catholic Church in Charlotte on Wednesday, March 15 from 7-9 pm.

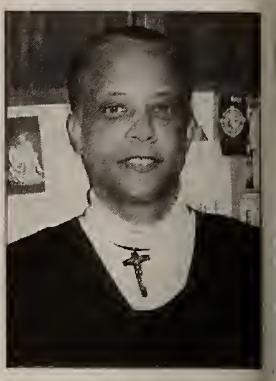
The same session will be given for the northern region at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro on Thursday, March 16 from 7-9pm.

The Office of Justice and Peace is sponsoring the sessions, and all are welcome to attend these free sessions. Call (704) 370-3225 to register.

Joanne Kennedy Frazer is director of the Office of Justice and Peace, Catholic Social Services.

"The Pope Speaks" will return in the March 10 issue of The Catholic News & Herald. Read the pope's Lent 2000 message on page 3 of "Lent and the Great Jubilee 2000."

The Season of Lent



SISTER LARETTA RIVERA-WILLIAMS, RSM
GUEST COLUMNIST

Committing to the Paschal Mystery

Each Ash Wednesday I have reverently received ashes and remained loyal to fasting on Fridays during Lent. This year, however, greater knowledge of the world around me has moved me into a deeper spirit, more consciously aware of the Passion of Christ. Prayer, Scripture and the reality of life in today's society have moved me toward experiencing Lent from a different perspective.

The cycles of life have become so violent and frightening that most people avoid listening to media commentaries. News reports, once a stage for grand celebrations and historical events, have become a wave of nightmarish activities.

As the year 2000 was birthed, technology made it possible for us to watch the year unfold worldwide. There were colorful costumes and festive dances enjoyed from Australia, the Pacific Islands, Switzerland, the United States and other countries. January 1st was a day to be bottled and magically opened for unity and peace, again and again and again.

How much of the 21st century will our children inherit? The present is too unpredictable to even assure a hopeful future. I am fearful that many young people will never have a desire to achieve higher goals. Anger and loneliness will grip the hearts of many before troubled minds find acceptance and peace. Some dreams will be deterred because they could not outrun the catalyst of contagious apathy. Violence will trample upon the footsteps of aspiring leaders and academic scholars. Too many others will roam unnoticed and never hear the encouraging words that build character.

Presently, I minister in Forsyth County, the county with the highest infant mortality rate than any other county in the state. North Carolina has the highest infant mortality rate in the United States. The redistricting of schools in the city has led to segregated classrooms, a lack of quality education in predominantly black and Hispanic schools, and a reevaluation of civil rights. Throughout the world, teen-agers are killing and being killed. What has fueled this rising pulse of inhumanity to humanity?

How can I be aware of the infant mortality rate and the content of my prayers not change? How can I know that people are still threatened by racial injustices and not advocate change? Since I have seen children lost because death came too soon for a parent, how could I never open my heart to more love?

The Paschal Mystery has to become more than a prayerful memory during this holy season. It has to be held at the forefront of human actions. People have to become the eyes, hands, heart and feet of Jesus Christ. Perhaps, then, peace would spill on the earth, not blood. Maybe then, children of the world would inherit tomorrow's dreams as aspiring leaders and scholars.

Sister Laretta Rivera-Williams, a Sister of Mercy of North Carolina, is director of faith formation at St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem. She is a former teacher of religious education at Charlotte Catholic High School.

Thanks from Raleigh

Dear Bishop Curlin,

I received your letter and enclosed check for $170,000 on behalf of the Diocese of Charlotte. You and the people of your great diocese are most kind in your generosity and thoughtfulness in our time of need. I know you have heard the stories and seen the destruction.

As Bishop, I have been most humbled by the generosity of the people of this state and throughout the United States. Frank Schulte in his correspondence said they know well what it means to be in need in such circumstances and like you were most generous. It puts things in perspective, doesn't it?

Be assured of my own prayers of thanksgiving for the kindness and generosity of the people of your great diocese. Please communicate to them my thanks on behalf of the countless thousands they have helped. May God continue to bless you and your diocese with a generous heart.

Pope John XXIII

That Pope John XXIII is considered by many scholars to be the greatest pontiff of the last 2000 years is yet another indication of the crisis which grips the Church.

While good Pope John's personal piety cannot be questioned, his judgement certainly can. Convoking the Second Vatican Council, though perhaps well-intentioned, was a disastrous mistake, as each passing year seems to demonstrate ever more clearly. By opening the Roman Catholic Church to the world — Pope John's stated goal — he inadvertently allowed the spirit of the world to invade and infect the Church. The much-balleyhooed spirit Vatican II is, I'm afraid, the spirit of the world, the spirit of ecumenism, the spirit of freedom.

And before you accuse me of being an old fogey, a misty-eyed nostalgia freak longing for the 1950s, let me assure you I'm not: I'm a 29-year-old convert to Catholicism who has no personal experience with pre-Vatican II worship. It's grown increasingly clear to me over time, however, that Pope John's Council, with or without his approval, gave rise to a New Church, one with new liturgy, new sacraments and a new theology.

This New Church has its cheerleaders, certainly — Vatican and press officials engaged in a perpetual PR battle to portray the Council's reform as beneficial and inspiring — but their rah-rah-rahs are ringing hollow. It is no longer deniable that the reforms of Vatican II, far from renewing and energizing our priests and laity, have instead spawned devastating declines in Mass attendance, religious vocations and Church discipline.

Most troubling of all, perhaps, is the post-Vatican II preoccupation with ecumenism, a belief that all religions are equally pleasing in God's sight and are valid pathways to salvation. This belief, endorsed though it may be by our current pope, is unquestionably a violation of the First Commandment and Church dogma. When choosing between God and Vatican II, it seems we are now expected to choose Vatican II.

I am a convicted felon, a prison inmate. Aside from the prohibition against killing, there's not a single commandment in the Decalogue I've not broken. I'm a wee bit uncomfortable, then, calling into question someone else's judgement when my own has been faulty on more than one occasion. But to promote Pope John XXIII as the most outstanding pope of the last 2000 years, when the Council he called has wreaked so much havoc upon the Church and wounded so acutely the mystical Body of Christ — this is a serious and regrettable lapse in judgement and should not be repeated.

Signs of "Springtime"

The word "Lent" comes from an early Saxon word for "springtime." It's a good image to keep in mind during these next forty days leading up to Easter.

Lent has a way of bringing you down to earth: "Remember, you are dust and to dust you will return." At the same time, Lent challenges you to spend six weeks in an attempt to achieve utter honesty about the state of your soul. In the process, you open yourself to a spiritual springtime — a time for new life and the potential for personal growth.

Spiritual growth is measured differently for each individual, but ultimately, it depends on your personal desire to link your own will with the Will of God, the Father of all life. To get yourself started, try these three steps in your reflection.

First, study your daily actions, especially those activities that demonstrate your sense of commitment to those things that matter to you. They may include your family life, the way you go about your job, spend your leisure time or get involved with neighborhood concerns. Behind the priorities you give these activities is your will. Honest reflection will reveal that you cannot achieve all your goals on your own, even with the greatest effort of will.

At this second stage, you begin to see more clearly how your conscience actually negotiates what you want to do with what you actually do. Conscience motivates will into action. For example, you recognize within yourself a yearning for spiritual truth. You cannot reach it yourself. At that moment, you know you need God if you are to attain everything for which you heart aches.

For the third level of reflection, consider carefully the things religion has to say to your conscience. What does religious truth say about your deepest yearning for truth? What about the possibility that God can enable you to move beyond yourself — to share in a Will that perfects your own?

When you know you cannot become what you most want to become by yourself alone, you can open your heart, mind and soul to God's grace-filled intervention. Recognizing the pure gift of faith in God's power to bring fulfillment is the final step. Your will and the Father's will become one.

At Gethsemane, on the night before He died, Jesus prayed, "My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from Me; yet not what I want but what You want....Your will be done." (Matthew 26:39,42)

Your challenge is to make this your prayer for Lent and for life. Ask for the grace and courage to act upon the will of the Father as your own — however humanly impossible it may seem.

Then, you will say, "I forgive you" to someone you have never had the strength to face squarely. You will take the risk of performing an extraordinary act of generosity and selflessness. You will find greater reasons than your own satisfaction to make a difference. You will trust and hope in the Lord rather than despair.

This year, welcome the fresh, beautiful growth, not just in the natural world around you, but within yourself. Join Jesus in praying those words He spoke in the Garden of Gethsemane in that long-ago springtime: Choose God's Will and you choose life.

Serving an aging population

As health care becomes more sophisticated and medications are discovered to maintain health, people in the United States are living longer. This allows older people to enjoy living in the community longer, in their own homes or with loved ones. It also creates the opportunity for family, friends and neighbors to share their love and learn from their wisdom and experience.

Sometimes, it creates challenges, as well. As people age, they must often learn to live with conditions of aging and health that have not yet been mastered by modern medicine. Some of these conditions result in pain and a decline of some functions that people have tended to take for granted.

It is often difficult to accept help, even from loved ones. In the American culture, independence is valued highly. It can, also, be a challenge to offer assistance and advice to those who have usually been the people who gave it.

As couples age together and one spouse needs more assistance, the other may need to learn complicated and physically taxing care-giving skills. When parents and family members need more help with daily chores, families are often stretched thin, balancing their time and energy among children, spouse, work and care-giving. Experiencing the illnesses of loved ones is painful. It can be even more difficult when the illnesses involve memory and changes in personality traits.

There are 25 million family caregivers in the United States. They are spouses, children, sisters and brothers, nieces, nephews, parents, friends and neighbors.

There are many services available to assist senior citizens and their families. Home health agencies provide nursing care, therapies and personal assistance. Many counties provide assistance with meals, housekeeping, errands, transportation and daily phone calls. Telephone emergency services can summon assistance at the press of a button. These services can be accessed by calling local social service agencies and physicians. Most parishes have groups who visit the sick and offer the Eucharist in the home. Pastors should be made aware of those who are unable to attend church functions regularly.

Education is important in the care of anyone who is ill. Physicians, hospitals, home health agencies, the Internet and support groups offer this kind of education. Individuals and parishes can contact Catholic Social Services Elder Ministry, which can connect them with services in the area, assist in setting up education and training sessions, or provide education as needed.

St. Joseph Church in Newton and Catholic Social Services Elder Ministry will cosponsor a Caregiver Support Group at St. Joseph's Holy Family Hall. The first meeting will be Wednesday, Mar. 15 at 1pm. Care will be offered for adult family members who accompany caregivers to the group. For more information, call Meg Smith at (828) 464-8442.

The moral implications of filing bankruptcy

Q. I have a question I hope you will answer very simply. Is it against our Catholic religion to file bankruptcy? My husband and I wish to buy a home, and we have a large sum of bills that are due. Filing bankruptcy might solve our problem, but would that be wrong?

A. I can't tell you. First, however, I congratulate you for thinking of this as a serious moral decision. Too often, it seems, people consider it a purely financial issue.

We begin with the fact that we're dealing here with restitution, the responsibility we have in strict justice to repay others for what we have taken from them. If I buy a pair of shoes, for example, my debt to the seller is not simply one of charity or philanthropy, something I can pay if it is convenient and agreeable. He has a moral right, in what is called commutative justice, to what is due him, and I have a moral duty to compensate him.

Bankruptcy is one of the circumstances that excuses a person from this kind of obligation. It provides a way to satisfy one's creditors equitably when full satisfaction of all debts is simply not possible. As you know, when an individual or business declares bankruptcy, state laws control the legal process in detail. For guidance through that maze you need a good attorney.

It needs to be said that bankruptcy, when pursued honestly, is a perfectly justifiable procedure, both legally and morally. A lot of successful and very good people have had to declare bankruptcy sometime in their lives. Some have later quietly paid part of their past debts, even though there was no legal, or probably even moral, obligation to do so.

Morally speaking, insolvent persons claiming bankruptcy are not required to dwindle their possessions down to nothing. They have a right to retain what is necessary to support themselves and their loved ones in decency, according to their social status, and to try to re-establish their financial security.

Moral obligations begin, of course, long before any bankruptcy proceedings are initiated. Building debts one is fairly certain one will never be able to pay off is obviously wrong, both legally and morally. As I said, this is equivalent to stealing.

When declaring bankruptcy begins to loom on anyone's horizon, another obligation is to explore what settlements one might make with creditors. Sometimes that is more attractive to creditors than attempting later to extract payment from a debtor who is bankrupt.

Fat Tuesday

Q. Please explain the significance of Fat Tuesday, the day before Ash Wednesday. Some say it means to feast or pig out before Lent. Can this be correct?

A. The celebration of Mardi Gras in anticipation of the rigors of the Lenten fast goes back many centuries.

Foods forbidden during the Lenten time included meats and fats, common condiments for cooking, which would spoil by the time Easter arrived. (Our word carnival comes, in fact, from a Latin phrase which means taking away the meat.)

Thus, the day before Lent began was a time to consume all the fat in the house. It also provided Christians a chance to enjoy their last pre-Lenten party, often in company with the non-Christians around them who were in the midst of their own spring masquerades and feasts. Not much, it seems, has changed, except the fasting.

Accusations of anti-Catholicism color GOP primaries

By PATRICIA ZAPOR
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Texas Gov. George Bush told New York Cardinal John J. O'Connor in a Feb. 25 letter that he wanted to assure Catholics his Bob Jones University appearance does not mean he "approves of the anti-Catholic and racially divisive views" associated with the school.

Charges of anti-Catholicism have followed the GOP candidate around the country since he spoke at the evangelical Christian university in South Carolina in early February.

See Joann Kennedy Frazer's guest column, "U.S. Bishops to Catholics: Get Politically Involved in 2000 Election"
...Page 12

The school bans interracial dating as immoral, and its leaders have called Catholicism a cult and likened it to satanism.

The Bob Jones University issue reached a peak during the Michigan primary campaign, when some voters there received recorded phone calls accusing Bush of religious bigotry because of his appearance and urging support for Arizona Sen. John McCain.

The McCain campaign initially denied any involvement with the calls, but later acknowledged the calls originated with his staff.

In the days leading up to the Michigan primary, Bush's campaign, in turn, criticized McCain for not disassociating himself from former Sen. Warren Rudman, McCain's campaign co-chair.

Some Michigan voters also received recorded calls from Christian Coalition founder Rev. Pat Robertson, calling Rudman "a vicious bigot who wrote that conservative Christians in politics are anti-abortion zealots, homophobes and would-be censors. John McCain refused to repudiate these words."

The Bush campaign said Rev. Robertson's calls were made independently of their organization.

Detroit Cardinal Adam J. Maida decried the injection of religious bigotry into the campaign in his state.

In the Feb. 25 edition of The Michigan Catholic, newspaper of the Detroit Archdiocese, Cardinal Maida said the bishops of the United States are clear in their insistence that the church keep out of partisan politics. The challenge, he said, is "to be principled without being ideological, to be political without being partisan, to be civil without being soft."

The Detroit Archdiocese goes to great lengths to encourage political involvement and responsibility, he said. But "it's not our approach to label candidates as 'pro' this or 'anti' that," he added.

The Texas governor, in his letter to Cardinal O'Connor, released Feb. 27, said he "should have been more clear in disassociating myself from anti-Catholic sentiments and racial prejudice. It was a missed opportunity, causing needless offense, which I deeply regret."

New York's Republican primary is March 7. Some news sources said the letter also was sent to Catholic leaders in other states with imminent primaries.

Bush told the New York cardinal that because of the cardinal's "long friendship" with members of the Bush family and the cardinal's meeting with Bush last year, he should know that the accusations of anti-Catholic views leveled against Bush are "unfair and unfounded" and such views "are personally offensive to me."

Bush, whose brother and sister-in-law are Catholic, noted he has "profound respect for the Catholic Church — a sympathy beyond mere tolerance."

Cardinal Maida's post-primary critique of campaign tactics also was directed at calls made in Michigan by Michigan Right to Life. The organization made recorded calls urging voters to support Bush, whom the National Right to Life Committee has endorsed. The calls reportedly challenged McCain's commitment to the pro-life cause.

Detroit archdiocesan communications director Ned McGrath issued a statement saying he told callers that Catholic Voters Alert — the name of the group which made the anti-Bush calls — is not affiliated with the archdiocese.

"The reality is, the word 'Catholic' isn't copyrighted," McGrath said. "It can be used and misused."

At Bob Jones University, in response to the political furor, its Web site explained the school's positions, including that "if there are those who wish to charge us with being anti-Catholic, we plead guilty. But we are not Catholic-haters."

It added, "All religion, including Catholicism, which teaches that salvation is by religious works or church dogma is false. Religion that makes the words of its leader, be he pope or other, equal with the Word of God is false. ... We love the practicing Catholic and earnestly desire to see him accept the Christ of the Cross."

Bob Jones III's late father, former university president Bob Jones Jr., was known for calling the Catholic Mass "blasphemy" and referring to the papacy as "the religion of the anti-Christ" and "a satanic system."

A third Republican candidate, former Ambassador Alan Keyes, spoke at the university Feb. 14 and challenged his audience to reject racial and religious bigotry. Keyes, who is black and a Catholic, noted that "there are folks who don't think I should be talking at Bob Jones University."

But just as his speech "put the lie to that," Keyes said, "we are, all of us, enjoined to put the lie to it by what we do, and what we pray for, and how we act, and how we love." ▾

Clergy respond to Kansas cross burning

By JOE BOLLIG
Catholic News Service

LANSING, Kan. (CNS) — A cross burning outside the trailer of an interracial couple in Lansing prompted an outcry of protest and an outpouring of prayer.

More than 70 people gathered in the street and narrow yard of a trailer in east Lansing for a noontime prayer vigil Feb. 16. The vigil had been organized by Clergy And Church Against Race Violence, an organization based at the Central Baptist Seminary in Kansas City, Kan.

Father Michael Stubbs, pastor of St. Francis de Sales Parish in Lansing, and president of the Leavenworth and Lansing Ministerial Alliance, was the local liaison between Reginald Timmons and Angela Jones, the residents of the trailer where the cross was burned, and Clergy And Church Against Race Violence.

"We are here to show support for the family, as well as to state to the community that this kind of thing can't be tolerated, that it must be stopped," said Father Stubbs. "The firefighters put out the fire, but it's important for us to put out the fires of hatred, and stop it from spreading throughout the community. The way for that to happen is through the power of God's love."

The vigil was attended by ordinary citizens, representatives of various faiths (including three Catholic priests), city officials and the acting police chief. Several Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth also attended.

The cross burning sent shock waves throughout Leavenworth and Lansing, which adjoin each other. Timmons and Jones were awakened at about 4 a.m. on Feb. 13 by the lights of police and fire vehicles, and firefighters putting out a small fire in front of their trailer.

Someone made a crude cross out of two pieces of broken furniture, 18 by 20 inches, held together by a wire hanger. The cross had been splashed with gasoline, set upright on the trailer hitch and set on fire. The fire didn't consume the cross, but it spread to a plastic gasoline container on the ground.

Fortunately, a neighbor noticed the fire and called the Lansing fire department. The fire could have killed the couple and their three small sons, said Timmons, a native of the area.

The family had only lived in the trailer park for four months and didn't know anyone there. No unusual incidents happened before the fire, and Timmons and Jones don't know why they were singled out.

"It was intimidating," said an angry and exasperated Timmons. "This is a problem that must be addressed."

Timmons and Jones stood quietly together in the crowd as Father Stubbs began the vigil, standing on grass burned black by the flames. The damage had been repaired, but pieces of melted, plastic trailer skirting lay nearby.

After a short introduction, he led the semicircle of people in singing "Amazing Grace," and then read from the Book of Ezekiel. Timmons and Jones were visibly moved when the Rev. Don Baker, pastor of the Bethel A.M.E. Church in Leavenworth, spoke to the crowd.

"Some people may call this hate. Some may call it anger. May I remind you that anger destroys the vessel that holds it, and destroys what it is poured out upon," he said. "But I look at it another way. I look at it as a sickness in the mind, that somehow Satan has risen up again to destroy what God has created.

"So I pray that somehow or another, as we bind ourselves together, that this will be the last time in Leavenworth County that people will have to come together to combat racism, that somehow we will understand that we are all God's children."

A number of other people spoke, including Timmons, clergy, and political advocates. Henry Gueary III, chief legislative advocate in Kansas for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, decried the rise of hate crimes in the United States.

He urged citizen support for passage of House Bill 2309, held up for two years in the Kansas Legislature, which would enhance hate crime penalties.

Lansing's acting police chief, Allan Collins, said this is the first hate crime that has occurred in town, so far as he knows, since he became part of the force in 1981. Some hate crimes may have been committed since then, but were not reported to the police, he said. ▼ spoke at length about his wife's death. At the time of her death, O'Brien had two teen-age daughters.

"We just sat down and started talking," Carew remembers. "In my mind I wanted to ask him about it but I didn't know how to do it comfortably." O'Brien, he said, just took over.

"It was a watershed moment that he would share that tender and delicate experience with me," Carew says.

Mike Ditka, the former New Orleans Saints and Chicago Bears coach who is best known for his sideline tirades, was the first interview Carew did for the book.

"He was the only one who called me back two times," recalls Carew. "He wanted to reiterate a few things."

The book describes how Ditka prays to calm himself down, finds comfort in the words of St. Paul, attends Bible classes and makes no apologies for living his faith.

Writes Carew: "Ditka becomes incensed when he is criticized for his beliefs, particularly his opposition to abortion. 'Everything is washed over today — not exactly right and not exactly wrong,' Ditka says. 'Abortion is murder. If I believe something is morally wrong and against the laws of God, I am going to say so. This is my right and my duty.'"

Carew says Jackie Robinson is his all-time favorite athlete.

"What he endured to bring new life to a whole race of people makes him one of the greatest men, not only this century, but any century," he says.

The book also profiles some lesser-known athletes including Boston Auxiliary Bishop Jerry Minihan, who played football in the '30s for Georgetown University, and two of his father's former Concord High football players who became priests, Franciscan Father John Joseph Pierce, awarded the Bronze Star for valor while serving in Vietnam, and Father Charles B. Hancock, who spent much of his life as a missionary working with the poor in Japan. ▼

Catholic couple picked as longest married in nation

DRUMS, Pa. (CNS) — Susan and Andrew Lechman, who will celebrate their 76th wedding anniversary in May, have been honored for having one of the longest marriages in the nation.

Worldwide Marriage Encounter recognized the couple on World Marriage Day in February, as did the Diocese of Scranton, where they live.

Each year Marriage Encounter groups conduct an annual search for the longest married couple and the Lechmans had the longest union of all couples nominated.

"The Diocese of Scranton is thrilled that Mr. and Mrs. Lechman are being cited by Worldwide Marriage Encounter," said Mary Ann Paulukonis, diocesan director of family life in the Office of Parish Ministries. "We have been blessed by their efforts of nearly 76 years to model love that mirrors God's unfailing love."

"The Diocese of Scranton is thrilled that Mr. and Mrs. Lechman are being cited by Worldwide Marriage Encounter," said Mary Ann Paulukonis, diocesan director of family life in the Office of Parish Ministries. "We have been blessed by their efforts of nearly 76 years to model love that mirrors God's unfailing love."

The Lechmans, who live in a nursing home in Drums, were born in the Freeland area; Andrew was born in 1903 and Susan in 1907. Andrew, a member of St. Mary's Byzantine Church, married Susan at her church, St. John Nepomucene in Freeland, in 1924.

After enduring the hardships of the Great Depression, they moved to Baltimore with their only child, Helene, during World War II. While there, they were active in the establishment of a new parish, Most Precious Blood. In addition, Mr. Lechman became a member of the Santa Maria Council of the Knights of Columbus and Mrs. Lechman became a member of the Catholic Daughters of the Americas.

Upon Mr. Lechman's retirement, the couple returned to Pennsylvania, and are still active. Last summer he finished a term as resident council president at their nursing home, while his wife continues to serve as vice president of the council.

Helene and her daughter, Barbara Kasecamp, and several grandchildren have actively led worship at the home and shared music with the other residents.

Nursing home administrator Marjorie Bell said the Lechmans are "faithful and faith-filled" and they "exemplify the joy and love of the Lord."

Susan and Andrew Lechman have been recognized by Worldwide Marriage Encounter as the longest married couple in the United States. The Lechman's of Drum, Pa., are to mark their 76th wedding anniversary May 20.

The Lechmans are also members of Good Shepherd parish in Drums, where Father Gerard Safko, pastor, helped the couple mark their 75th wedding anniversary with family members last year by celebrating a special Mass.

The Lechmans have four grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

In addition to the Lechmans, two other couples who have been married 70 years or more were nominated for the longest marriage by the Scranton Diocese.

Rose and Joseph Sileo of Peckville, married six months after the Lechmans in 1924, have three children and several grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The couple, who are in their 90s, are parishioners at St. Anthony's Church and reside in a nursing home in Peckville.

According to Colleen Murphy, the activity director at the nursing home who nominated the couple, the Sileos say "you need a lot of patience and faith in God" to sustain a marriage for as long as they have.

Anna and John Ruspi of Clarks Green, married in 1930, are parishioners at St. Gregory in Clarks Green. They have one child and two grandchildren.

World Marriage Day is observed on the second Sunday in February. Originating with the Worldwide Marriage Encounter movement, it honors married couples for their love for each other and their example to the church. ▼

Report shows Hispanic Catholic boom in some unlikely places

BY PATRICIA ZAPOR
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Since 1960, Hispanics have accounted for 71 percent of the growth in the U.S. Catholic Church.

While such a statistic may not come as a surprise in El Paso or Miami, the Diocese of Charlotte, N.C., isn't where most Americans would expect to find an 84 percent increase in the number of Hispanics over six years.

Support Appeal an avenue for stewardship, says director

BY JIMMY ROSTAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — As the annual Diocesan Support Appeal nears its closing later this month, its director said the appeal opens the doors to Christ while providing an opportunity for Christian stewardship.

"The DSA provides us in the diocese a chance to live the Beatitudes and the corporal works of mercy," said Barbara Rohrman, associate director of development and director of the Diocesan Support Appeal. "More and more people are embracing that spirituality — that self-giving stewardship — and because of that, the DSA does so well every year."

The support appeal is the Diocese of Charlotte's primary fund-raising effort, providing moneys for 35 vocational, educational, social service and multi-cultural ministries of the diocese. Reflecting the church's celebration of the jubilee year, the theme of this year's appeal is "Open Wide the Doors to Christ."

As of March 6, 51 percent of this year's $3.14 million goal had been pledged. The appeal officially closes with Appeal Sunday Weekend, March 18-19. Pledge reminders will be sent in early May to donors choosing to give over a six-month period.

"On Appeal Sunday, in most parishes a lay presenter shares about what the DSA means to them," said Rohrman. "Many times, it is someone who has received help from the DSA or who is a parish leader who knows about the benefits of the appeal."

As of March 6, 51 percent of this year's $3.14 million goal had been pledged. The appeal officially closes with Appeal Sunday Weekend, March 18-19. Pledge reminders will be sent in early May to donors choosing to give over a six-month period.

While letters and pledge cards have already been mailed to registered Catholics in the diocese, Appeal Sunday Weekend invites those who have yet to respond to give.

"It's also a way of reaching out to those new parishioners who perhaps did not get a letter or pledge card in the mail," said Rohrman. "This diocese is growing so quickly that in just the short month since the first mailing went out, many people have joined parishes."

With that rapid growth comes an ever-pressing need for outreach through ministry, said Rohrman. The past several issues of The Catholic News & Herald have brought readers several glimpses of how the appeal touches the lives of thousands throughout the western half of North Carolina. The permanent diaconate, the lay ministry program, a preparation program for engaged couples, Hispanic Ministry, Catholic Social Services, youth ministry, campus ministry and faith formation are but a few of the ways the DSA brings ministry to those who need or seek it.

"When we open wide the doors to Christ, we open ourselves to something that is all-inclusive," Rohrman said. "When we dedicate ourselves to serving Christ, we are provided with an opportunity to recognize him in all people. At the same time, we are called to be Christ for others."

Through the efforts of the DSA, Rohrman added, parishioners live their commitment to giving of their time, talent and treasure.

"Each year, more and more people embrace the DSA as another avenue for their stewardship," she said. "They are participating in the mission of the church." ▾

Colombia Caritas says government must aid massacre survivors

WASHINGTON (CNS) — While the church can offer some aid to survivors of a paramilitary massacre in northern Colombia, the government must take responsibility for helping the people, said the director of Caritas Colombia. "For me the problem is how the army didn't know" that paramilitaries were in the town for four days killing the people, said Msgr. Hector Henao Gaviria, head of Caritas Colombia. "Four days — and it is not very far from the army. So I think the Colombian government has a responsibility there, and they must help the people," he said. In late February in El Salado, in the Archdiocese of Cartagena, paramilitaries cut the throats of more than 40 people, including one in a church. Investigators said a 200-man death squad murdered the villagers during a four-day raid in the community in Bolivar province.

Conference reviews Catholic-Jewish relations, looks to future

ST. LEO, Fla. (CNS) — Experts at a national conference described Catholic-Jewish relations as flourishing, with no small amount of credit due to Pope John Paul II. They also looked at the future, as the start of the third millennium brings what Rabbi A. James Rudin called a "new frontier of Jewish-Catholic relations." Rabbi Rudin, interreligious affairs director for the American Jewish Committee in New York, was among some 60 Catholic and Jewish leaders who came to The Center for Catholic-Jewish Studies at Saint Leo University, northeast of Tampa, for its third annual Catholic-Jewish conference. "There have been more positive encounters between Jews and Catholics in the last 35 years than there were in the first 2,000 years of the church," said Rabbi Rudin, one of the featured speakers.

Sierra Leone Caritas official says abductions may halt aid work

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (CNS) — If rebel abductions of aid workers and U.N. peacekeepers in Sierra Leone continue, the Catholic Church's local charitable agency may suspend operations, said a Caritas official. "If they continue, we have no alternative but to cease operations," John Conteh, monitoring and evaluation officer for Caritas, told Catholic News Service. He said the frequent abductions have caused Caritas workers to fear venturing into the interior of Sierra Leone, where the agency's projects are based. "We have partners we are working with. If abductions continue, they will cease aiding us," he added.

Religious leaders, 'Granny D' back campaign finance changes

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Religious leaders who have fought for significant changes in federal campaign financing over the last three years now have a high-profile ally in Doris Haddock, the 90-year-old "Granny D" who walked across the country for the cause. Haddock met with two members of Congress who are pushing for campaign finance changes and representatives of the group Religious Leaders for Campaign Finance Reform at a March 2 forum at the Capitol. At the forum, Haddock said her trek had a spiritual dimension to it. "God often speaks to us with crazy ideas," she said. The House has twice passed campaign finance bills only to see them stall in the Senate. In 1997, the religious leaders' group said passage of bills then under consideration "will go a long way toward meeting moral standards and restoring credibility and public trust in the democratic process."

Pope urges aid to flood-stricken Mozambique

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged international aid to flood-stricken Mozambique, where thousands were feared dead in the wake of a cyclone.

As aid agencies scrambled to provide emergency food and medical assistance to hundreds of thousands of survivors, the pope praised the international response but said more was needed.

Speaking at a Sunday blessing March 5, the pope said his thoughts were with "the people of Mozambique, who are experiencing a tragedy of unprecedented proportions caused by the serious flooding that has stricken a vast portion of the country."

The worst areas of flooding were in Mozambique's Limpopo River valley, about 100 miles northeast of the capital, Maputo. Despite deliveries of emergency supplies by helicopter, aid workers said they risked running out of safe water in camps where more than 200,000 people were being temporarily sheltered.

The Mozambican government has not made an official estimate of the dead, but relief agencies said the final toll is likely to be in the thousands.

Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops' international relief and development agency, said March 2 it was sending an assessment team to the region to begin an emergency response in cooperation with local church partners.

If your parish chooses to take up a special offering, please contribute in that way. Alternately, individual conations may be sent by check payable to the "Diocese of Charlotte — Mozambique Relief" and mailed to the Diocese of Charlotte Pastoral Center, 1123 S. Church St., Charlotte, N.C. 28203. All money collected will be forwarded to Catholic Relief Services, which is the U.S. Catholic community's official overseas relief effort. ▼

Put on your ghillies and dance a ceili

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — For those not familiar with Irish dance terms, ghillies are soft dance shoes, and a ceili is an Irish dance or gathering. Since the arrival of "Riverdance" and "Lord of the Dance," the popularity of Irish dancing has gained momentum in the United States. Although the dancing that many Americans have seen on stage and on screen differs in some ways from tradition, many local children and adults have joined the Irish dancing craze. For many, the dancing has a deeper meaning — one reaching back to Ireland.

"I was dancing before 'Riverdance,'" joked Emily Adkisson. Adkisson, a freshman at Bishop McGuinness High School and a St. Leo the Great Church parishioner, who has been dancing for six years. Her Irish lineage comes from her mother's side with her great-grandparents who immigrated to America. "This is really neat because it is something my ancestors would have done," she said. "It is good exercise, and it is fun." In celebration of her heritage, she also plays the Celtic harp, a smaller version of a concert harp, and reads about Irish history and culture.

Mrs. Adkisson travels back and forth from Winston-Salem to Charlotte at least twice a week for her daughter to attend dance classes. "It does get tiring, but this is something we do as a family. The competitions are family-oriented because my girls share, practice and work together. They are learning self-discipline and how to be gracious winners and losers, and this helps with values that you try to teach them," said Mrs. Adkisson.

Rince Na h'Eireann, meaning "dance of Ireland," is the name of Sandra Connick's dance school that Adkisson attends. Connick, originally from Cork, Ireland, has been living in America for seven years. The family moved here because her oldest daughter Sarah, now 11, has cerebral palsy. After researching schools, she and her husband William moved with their son Killian, now 9, to Charlotte to enroll Sarah in the St. Mark's In-School Program in Billingsley Elementary School, said Connick.

The 16 and older ladies group from Rince Na h'Eireann dance school in Charlotte practice their routine for the world Irish dancing competition held in Belfast, Northern Ireland, during late April around Easter. The young women are one of three groups traveling along with three soloists to compete with other Irish dancers from around the world.

Connick, who had been involved with Irish dancing since she was a child, began the school in 1993 with the help of a registered teacher. At the time, there were no registered schools in Charlotte or in North Carolina; one of Connick's former students has since started a dance school in Raleigh. Her sister Aine Walsh-Kelley began teaching with Connick until Walsh-Kelley began her own school. Now, the sisters good-naturedly compete against one another.

Connick is a member of the Irish Dance Teachers' Association of North America and the Irish Dancing Commission of Ireland. She had to go through an extensive examination process in order to become certified.

For over two years, Connick's partner, Pam Pierce, has helped her in her teaching. Pierce, who is from Dublin, Ireland, has been living in the states for over 20 years. She met Connick after enrolling her daughters in the school in Charlotte and began to help out with teaching. She has been dancing for many years, also beginning when she was very young.

Connick has 160 children enrolled in her Charlotte school and nearly 80 in her recently opened Winston-Salem school. She opened the new school because of the demand in the Triad area.

Throughout the year, the students literally kick up their heels — all dancing is done on the toes with arms straight at the sides— at feishanas throughout the Southern region, consisting of East Coast states from Maryland to Florida, all the way to Texas. Feishanas, plural for feis, are regular competitions or festivals held throughout the year. The students can hone their craft, showcase their skill and practice for the oireachtas, the qualifying round for the world championships in Ireland, explained Connick.

After placing in the top positions at the Southern Region oireachtas held in Baltimore, Md., in December, 26 students from Rince Na h'Eireann qualified to take the trip to Belfast, Ireland, for the competition with students from Ireland, Northern Ireland, Scotland, England, Wales, Australia, United States and New Zealand. This is the school's third trip to Ireland for the world championship.

Three teams — boys and girls under 13, girls under 16 and senior ladies 16 and over — and three soloists — Emily Adkisson, Caitlin Gill and Oliver Shock — will be competing in April around Easter in the ceili championships and the solo championships.

Pierce Beach is one of four boys competing with the mixed team. Eleven-year-old Beach said being one of a few boys in the school doesn't make him uncomfortable. "We have all known each other for so long that we are like brothers and sisters. I like Irish dancing because it is competitive and fun. I've been to Ireland for competition and saw where my grandfather's grandma was baptized," said Beach. The fifth grader at St. Patrick School has been dancing for three and a half years.

Textbook evaluations to benefit faith formation students

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

"These evaluations will help make sure the parishes are using good materials that are doctrinally-sound and immersed in scripture... The materials should help the catechist in teaching the church beliefs to the students who must learn and internalize the lessons."
— Marylin Kravatz, southern regional coordinator of faith formation

MONROE — In an ongoing effort to ensure that students are being assisted in their need for spiritual and religious growth, diocesan and parish-level faith formation coordinators and directors met to discuss the policy, criteria and procedure for the evaluation of the textbooks used in kindergarten through sixth-grade faith formation programs. Our Lady of Lourdes Church was the host parish for the Feb. 24 workshop for those from parishes in the Southern Region, which includes the Albemarle, Charlotte and Salisbury Vicariates.

The process of analyzing the textbooks being used in parish faith formation classes began nearly a year and a half ago, when diocesan staff members began to review the Faith Formation and Guidelines Handbook for the Diocese of Charlotte. At the time, the evaluation of textbooks was a concept evolving from the guidelines update; therefore, Father James Hawker, vicar for education, assigned staff members to begin the procedure, explained Peg Ruble, Central Region coordinator for faith formation.

After a committee of parish catechetical leaders evaluated a set of two series of textbooks, the two diocesan staff members on the committee wrote textbook summaries and discussed the strengths and weaknesses of each series of catechetical texts, said Ruble. A list of recommended and non-recommended textbooks for faith formation classes was formulated based upon the evaluation.

In order to assist the parish catechetical leaders to select the most appropriate of the recommended series for use in their faith formation programs, a criteria list was developed for their use, based on the six fundamental tasks of catechesis, as written in the General Directory for Catechesis, said Marylin Kravatz, Southern Region cooordinator.

Translated by the American Catholic bishops, the directory comes from Rome and serves as a guide for pastors and bishops for catechetical ministry. The focus of the new directory is evangelization because in order to catechize, evangelization has to take place at every stage of development and should be the framework for passing on of faith, she explained.

The six tasks — promoting knowledge of faith, liturgical education, moral formation, teaching to pray, education for community life and missionary initiation — were used as a basis for the updated criteria for evaluation of catechetical materials. The focus areas include the overall faith formation program, the catechist manual, the student text and family resources. Each area is graded as strong, weak or absent, as it corresponds to each of the six tasks.

"The textbook selection instrument, or criteria list, is based on the new General Directory for Catechesis and the six tasks of catechesis, which makes the instrument on the cutting edge," said Dr. Cris Villapando, diocesan director of faith formation programs. "It's been at least five years since the Office of Faith Formation has had any kind of textbook evaluations. This is very important because it impacts the catechetical life of the parish, not only in terms of the orthodoxy of the material to be selected but also in terms of those resources which are pedagogically important."

One of the members of the parish catechetical committee, Martha Drennan, director of faith formation for St. Therese Church in Mooresville, talked about her experiences with reading through the different textbook series. "The publishers of the various textbook series are trying hard to address the new General Directory for Catechesis and the incorporation of the catechism. This is good because the publishers should be rooting their materials in church documents, which are central to what we do as catechists," she said.

"When the diocesan staff members made the instrument for evaluation more user friendly by connecting it to those six tasks for catechesis, I see that as a great improvement because it has to be practical so that people on the parish level can use it," continued Drennan.

These revised criteria and other supplemental findings were presented to the southern region parish catechetical leaders and teachers at the workshop. Franciscan Sister Bernadette Svatos, Northern Region coordinator, began the workshop with a prayer service and spoke about the history and evolution of catechesis since Vatican II.

"The purpose of this workshop was to inform and help parishes who may change what they are using; this serves as a guide for them by pointing out the strong and weak points of various textbook series," said Sister Bernadette. "They should use materials that employ good teaching methods based on life experiences and methodology using the senses and their own life experiences."

Some parishes have already begun to evaluate the texts that they are using in their faith formation programs. St. Patrick Cathedral has begun its own evaluations, and Joanna Catabui, parish coordinator for faith formation, was very interested in the information she received.

"This workshop was very informative concerning the special criteria as far as the selection of catechetical texts. Our parish is doing a textbook evaluation now, so the criteria will help us in establishing what our priorities in selecting a text." Catabui also signed up to become a part of the parish catechetical leader evaluation committee because she wanted to represent her parish's needs to the diocese.

If a parish decides not to evaluate their catechetical materials, and those they use are not on the recommended list, then the parish has to meet with the regional faith formation coordinator and present some supplemental materials to support the weaknesses or remedy the weaknesses if they don't plan to make changes, said Ruble.

"These evaluations will help make sure the parishes are using good materials that are doctrinally-sound and immersed in scripture," said Kravatz. "The materials should help the catechist in teaching the church beliefs to the students who must learn and internalize the lessons." ▼

ager at Sacred Heart Church, and her daughter nine-year-old Katie Tobias, who is in fourth grade at Sacred Heart School, travel from Salisbury to Charlotte several nights a week. "I don't mind the driving because this involves our heritage," said Burchard, whose great-great grandparents are from Ireland. "The dancing is exciting to watch because the music is upbeat and fast-paced, and I like the Catholic connection we have with everyone." Katie has been dancing for six years and said, "I like it because I get to meet different people and go to different places."

"We all interact and work well together, and we are really strong as a team," said Gill, a 17-year-old junior at Charlotte Catholic High School who attends St. Matthew Church. Both sides of her family are Irish, and she has been dancing for nine years. "The focus is on the feet, the straight body, rhythm and grace. My friends think that it is interesting that I do this because it is so different from other types of dancing." In addition to her dancing, she is also involved in cross-country, track, basketball and soccer. "The scheduling is hard sometimes," she added with a smile.

"These dances are hundreds of years of old, and the children work very hard," said Connick. "I like it that I can raise my kids and keep them in touch with their Irish heritage and nationality." ▼

Church leaders say confessing sins of past sets precedent

By JOHN NORTON
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Unprecedented acts, like Pope John Paul II's jubilee gesture of confessing the sins of the church's past, often set a precedent.

The Christians of today, having aired in detail the faults of their predecessors, can expect the same treatment by future Christians, church leaders said.

"What will the men and women of tomorrow think of us?" said Dominican Father Georges Cottier, the pope's personal theologian.

"We are no better than the men and women of the past. It is with modesty and 'fear and trembling' that we must judge their acts," he said.

The theologian's musings were echoed by other Vatican officials during a press conference March 7 detailing the pope's much-awaited "request for forgiveness" liturgy March 12 in St. Peter's Basilica.

"How will we ourselves be judged in a hundred years by future generations for our current blindness?" said Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, president of the Vatican's jubilee committee.

In hanging out the dirty laundry of past Christians, the church must not forget to do its own wash, he said.

"Don't we today sometimes think with satisfaction that all of the church's clothes are white?" he asked.

The central danger in focusing on sins in the church's past, according to Father Cottier, was the potential for overlooking current problems.

"The danger, in fact, is that the request for forgiveness for the wrongs of the past might serve as an alibi for amnesia toward recent wrongs or for the wrongs of our epoch," he said.

Current evils for which future generations may take the church to task, he said, included modern forms of slavery like child-trafficking and large-scale prostitution — "phenomena which are growing under our eyes, amid the greatest indifference."

Done correctly, though, reflection on the errors of past believers may be the best possible way of preparing for the scrutiny of future Christians, Cardinal Etchegaray said.

"Our solidarity with the church of yesterday helps us better discover our responsibility for the church of tomorrow," he said. ▼

Charlotte topped the list of dioceses with the largest percentage increase in Hispanic population between 1990 and 1996. It was followed by Reno-Las Vegas, Nev., Atlanta, Raleigh, N.C., and Portland, Ore.

The ranking came in a list of dioceses and archdioceses with the greatest percentage increases of Hispanic population in a report on "Hispanic Ministry at the Turn of the New Millennium," released March 7 by the Hispanic Affairs Committee of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. (Reno-Las Vegas was split into two dioceses in 1995, but was considered as one entity for the purposes of the study.)

It only took 22,735 Hispanic newcomers to the Charlotte Diocese to account for that 84 percent increase. The total Catholic population of Charlotte in 1990 was just 63,973.

Nationwide, estimates of the percentage of Hispanics who are Catholic range from 67 percent to 71 percent, according to the NCCB committee. Between 30 percent and 38 percent of U.S. Catholics are Hispanic.

Even dioceses where the Hispanic population has always been significant reported steady increases in the study period, according to the report. For example, the Diocese of San Bernardino, Calif., recorded a 41 percent increase in Hispanic population and the Diocese of Austin, Texas, had a 37 percent increase.

In three of the 13 episcopal regions of the country, the Hispanic population growth rate exceeded 40 percent, according to the report.

The smallest regional increase was the 14 percent growth in Hispanic population in region 2, made up of just the state of New York. The area with the biggest growth was the five-state region 12 — Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Alaska and Montana — where the Hispanic population grew by more than 50 percent.

And those figures are likely to be proved low following this year's census. The Census Bureau and independent demographers believe the Hispanic population was dramatically undercounted in the 1990 census. Various changes have been made in the census program to avoid an undercount this year.

According to the report, the five U.S. dioceses or archdioceses with the largest number of Hispanics are: Los Angeles, 4.27 million; Miami, 1.3 million; New York, 1.2 million; Galveston-Houston, 1 million; and San Antonio, 979,000.

No U.S. diocese reported a decrease in its Hispanic population from 1990 to 1996, and only three had an increase of less than 10 percent. Those are: Cheyenne, Wyo., with a 7 percent increase; Juneau, Alaska, with an increase of 9 percent; and Steubenville, Ohio, with an increase of just under 6 percent.

The data was based on the actual population count and statistical sampling of the 1990 census, and updated by the Census Bureau based on statistical estimates. Information from the General Social Survey of the National Opinion Research Center in Chicago and the Strategy Research Corporation was used to calculate numbers of people who identify themselves as Catholic, according to the NCCB committee report. ▼

Catholic leaders want House chaplaincy issue resolved

WASHINGTON (CNS) - Amid the growing dispute over the deadlocked appointment for the next House chaplain, some Catholics are urging a quick resolution. About 40 Catholic Republican lawmakers met privately with GOP leaders March 1 to discuss possible solutions to what has now become a political quagmire. Catholic legislators also brought up some of these solutions on the House floor during the first week of March. Suggestions included that the nomination process should start over or that the position of House chaplain be abolished and replaced with a rotating voluntary ministry.

Colo. governor says family ties key to stopping violence

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The key to stopping youth violence on the street and in the schoolyard is to strengthen families, Republican Gov. Bill Owens of Colorado told a Washington think-tank Feb. 29. Government must do what it can to help families spend more time together, in part by lessening their tax burden, he added in a talk titled "A Year After Columbine: How Do We Heal a Wounded Culture?" "We have to strengthen our families," said Owens, a Catholic and a father of three. "There is no institution more critical to the success of this country or our culture."

Dominican sister wins CCHD Development of People Award

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Dominican Sister Teresa Auad received the Development of People Award from the Catholic Campaign for Human Development Feb. 27 in Washington during the 2000 Catholic Social Ministry Gathering in Washington. Sister Auad has worked over the last 17 years in migrant and immigrant populations in Indiantown, Fla., a small town in the northern Everglades about 40 miles from West Palm Beach, Fla. After hearing and recounting her many accomplishments in Indiantown, Bishop Joseph A. Fiorenza of Galveston-Houston, president of the U.S. bishops, said, "Sister Teresa, you are one hot number!" to the cheers and applause of the 450 in attendance.

British prime minister's wife backs appeal for children

LONDON (CNS) — Cherie Booth, wife of British Prime Minister Tony Blair, has backed an appeal by the Catholic Children's Society in the Westminster Archdiocese. The "Family 2000 Challenge," launched in the February edition of the charity's Network newsletter, aims to recruit 2,000 families to raise money for the charity, which works with children throughout the archdiocese, including London. Writing from 10 Downing Street, the prime minister's official London residence, Booth, a Catholic, said the appeal was a wonderful opportunity for all families, large or small, to work together for the common purpose of helping other families and children. Booth, also a distinguished lawyer, has three children and is expecting a fourth in May.

Religious, civil rights leaders urge participation in census

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholic and other religious leaders at a March 6 press conference in Washington joined civil rights figures in urging participation in the 2000 census. "We stand fully behind an accurate count," said Beverly Carroll, director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for African-American Catholics. "We've asked schools, parishes to open their doors" to assist in the effort, she added. Speaking to those who receive help from the church through soup kitchens, day-care centers and children's programs, Carroll said, "We are asking you to trust us again. We want to make sure the services of the federal government are available to you."

Jesuit House of Prayer facility restored, readied for future

By JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
Correspondent

HOT SPRINGS — It's a renovation whose time has definitely arrived. Now nearing completion, the restoration of part of the Jesuit House of Prayer includes remodeling the kitchen, dining room and the bedrooms at the north end of the house.

Mercy Sister Margaret Verstege, director of the Jesuit House of Prayer, said most of the work will be finished by April 1, when a group is expected for a one-day retreat.

"We'll have enough in order to have that day of recollection," she said.

Getting to this stage has been a long process. The Jesuit House of Prayer Advisory Board began implementing a five-year plan in 1994. The first phase was renovation of the Chapel of the Redeemer, which was completed in May 1998. Bishop William G. Curlin dedicated the altar Oct. 25, 1998.

Phase 2 is renovation of the north side of the house. Phase 3, planned for the future, will include renovating the house chapel and the bedrooms adjacent to it.

The house was built in 1892 as a private home. It had several owners before Jesuit Father Andrew Graves bought it in 1954 or 1955. Father Graves had come to the area as a missionary in 1937. He periodically purchased additional land totaling seven acres.

Over the years, a dining room and laundry room were added to the house, and the kitchen was enlarged. An early photo shows a glassed-in porch where the north-side bedrooms are now.

"Historically, I think the story of the Society has been one of responsibility to the needs of the people of God in this area," said Sister Peggy, who has been director of the Jesuit House of Prayer since October. "It's a ministry of prayer. We're here to make it available to everyone. A Catholic presence, particularly Ignatian, is a charism that needs to be shared with the world."

Father Frank Reese arrived in 1978 to start the retreat center and to serve as Catholic pastor in Madison County. The first retreatant was a Sister of Mercy from Tennessee who traveled about, teaching religious education to children in rural areas. She discovered the Jesuit House of Prayer by accident and decided to make a six-day retreat.

"Historically, I think the story of the Society has been one of responsibility to the needs of the people of God in this area," said Sister Peggy, who has been director of the Jesuit House of Prayer since October. "It's a ministry of prayer. We're here to make it available to everyone. A Catholic presence, particularly Ignatian, is a charism that needs to be shared with the world."

The House of Prayer's staff and the advisory board saw that the aging facility needed an upgrade. A capital campaign, begun in 1997, raised more than $100,000, mainly from donations, including one from the Maryland Province of the Society of Jesus. The retreat staff — Jesuit Fathers Joe McGovern and George Hohman — are members of that province.

The money will provide a new dining room and a more efficient kitchen with a bigger cooking and cleanup space. The dining room will have a domed ceiling. Also, the dining room already had a concrete floor; now the kitchen will have one, too.

More efficient insulation and new walls will mean quieter bedrooms, and each bedroom will have individual heating and air conditioning. The electrical system and plumbing are upgraded, and an additional water heater has been installed. Some cosmetic changes will be made in other parts of the house.

Not that improvements weren't needed. When the kitchen walls were ripped out, workmen discovered that no support beams were holding up the ceiling. How did the ceiling stay up? "God or the tension of the building," Father McGovern quipped.

The foundational sills in the kitchen were so rotted the wood could be pulled apart by hand. A cracked pipe had been leaking water under the kitchen. Workmen pulled up red, cream and green vinyl and several layers of flooring to reveal a hole deep enough for a wading pool.

With the renovation nearing completion, people are already booking retreats, Sister Peggy said. A variety of formats is available, including private retreats, or directed retreats with the staff. Groups such as confirmation classes are welcome for retreats and there are Advent and Holy Week retreats. Or people can visit the center for a day of private prayer and meditation.

United in faith, World Day of Prayer brings solidarity

By JOANN S. KEANE

WADESBORO — At the same time as the human rights of a young woman are being violated, a woman worlds away says a prayer on her behalf.

An ecumenical group of about 30 gathered at Sacred Heart Church in Wadesboro, united for the international March 3 World Day of Prayer. Around the globe, others joined in solidarity, raising awareness and standing together in faith and action with and for the people of Indonesia.

"We are invited to stand up in faith and action with the people of Indonesia," said Sister of Divine Providence Theresine Gildea. "To stand up against human rights violations." Sister Theresine along with her counterpart Sister Maxine Tancraitor are outreach icons in the Wadesboro community.

More than four decades have passed since the first World Day of Prayer. Beginning with a 1957 prayer service in East Java, from its early intentions of a day to reflect on the strife and suffering of those in Indonesia, WDP has blossomed into an ecumenical event celebrated by an estimated 12,000 internationally.

On the easternmost edge of the diocese, Presbyterian, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist are the prevalent denominations. This year, for the first time, WDP brought a community together in prayer with their Catholic neighbors.

"It's important to show our support of our churches in this community and how well we work together," said Carole Heste Evans, a member of First Presbyterian Church in Wadesboro.

More than a sense of community, participants got a brief rundown on the plight of Indonesian citizens while a slideshow depicting scenes of seemingly destitute women brought a slice of the Third World into view.

The gathering gave 14-year-old Cecelia Pueschel an opportunity to connect on a global level while fulfilling a few confirmation community service hours. "It helps in my understanding of what confirmation and church is all about," she said. ▼

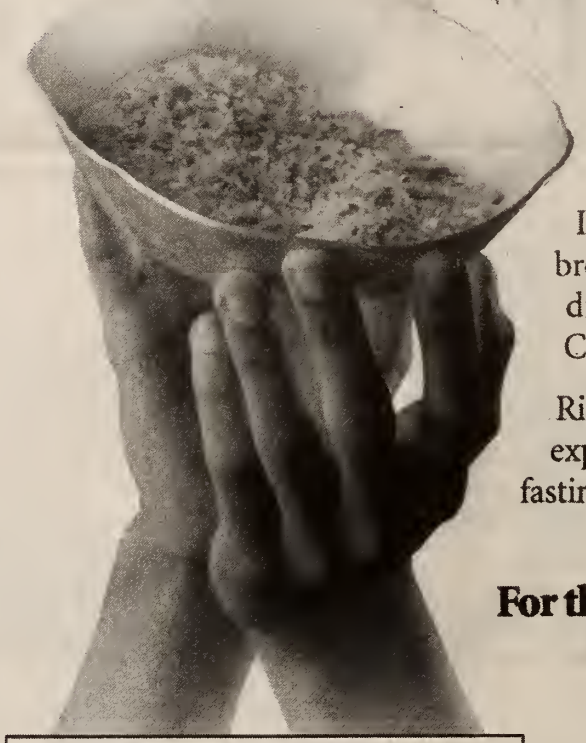
Celebrating 25 Years

You can help make a world of difference.



More than half of the world's population is surviving on less than one bowl of rice each day.

That's why, this Lent, more than 13,000 parishes and schools across the United States are participating in Operation Rice Bowl, helping the poorest of the poor help themselves.

In addition to expressing solidarity with our brothers and sisters overseas, you can make a real difference, raising money to support the work of Catholic Relief Services in the developing world.

Right now you can support this work for justice and experience the true meaning of Lent: praying, fasting, learning and giving.

For those who hunger and thirst. For justice.

Operation Rice Bowl
LENTEN PROGRAM

Twenty-five years and still counting on you.

Since its inception 25 years ago, Operation Rice Bowl has been making a difference in people's lives around the world, thanks to the support of Catholic schools and parishes like yours.

Operation Rice Bowl has helped fund hundreds of development projects overseas such as:

- Providing clean drinking water.
- Improving agricultural techniques.
- Introducing health education.
- Facilitating small business loans.

And of the $105 million raised through the years, 25% has helped fund programs to improve local communities, too. For example, right here in the Diocese of Charlotte, contributions are disbursed as mini-grants to community groups working toward ending poverty and hunger. But there is still more to be done.

So as Operation Rice Bowl marks its 25th anniversary – with a new look for the new millennium – celebrate what your contribution has done and how your participation can make all the difference in the world.

Operation Rice Bowl: Supplying physical and spiritual nourishment for twenty-five years

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Rice is a complement to a meal for many families in the United States, but for those in less-fortunate countries, a meager supply of rice serves as the main dish. Operation Rice Bowl, named for this unfortunate dietary fact, has collected over $88 million for the impoverished and hunger-stricken in Third World countries for 25 years. This year's Beatitude-inspired theme "Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for justice, for they shall have their fill," is part of the silver anniversary of the Lenten program, one of the programs of Catholic Relief Services (CRS).

"Along with Operation Rice Bowl, CRS also handles agricultural programs, clinics, conflict resolution between warring parties in places like Rwanda and Kosovo and aid to countries like Mozambique," explained Joanne Frazer, diocesan director of the Office of Justice and Peace and CRS.

The Operation Rice Bowl slogan — pray, fast, learn, give — reflects the season of Lent and is expressed in the activity calendar that accompanies the cardboard rice bowl for money collection. These items will be sent to every family in the mail through the parish coordinators. The calendar includes activities and reflections for every day of the season of Lent, including recipes and biblical passages for family participation.

"The main thrust of Operation Rice Bowl is to educate people and to help them identify with those who are poor, their experiences and their daily lives," said Terri Jarina, office assistant for the Office of Justice and Peace and the diocesan Operation Rice Bowl coordinator.

Ed Konarski, chair of the CRS diocesan committee and the parish coordinator for St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton, said, "Operation Rice Bowl isn't just about collecting money; it is about education and living out Catholic beliefs. It should give insight into other people's countries and their needs and can serve as a way of fostering spiritual growth."

St. Charles Borromeo Church has had the highest contribution per household for the past two years. The parishioners follow along with the calendar to show solidarity as part of their Friday stations of the cross services. Designated groups prepare a simple meal every week according to the activity calendar and share in group prayer, said Konarski. "Our parish has responded enthusiastically and generously." Konarski's family also participates in the activities included in the Operation Rice Bowl calendar.

The CRS diocesan committee works with Frazer and Jarina by offering feedback on ways to enhance the program, promoting Operation Rice Bowl to the parishes to increase participation and expanding the mini-grant program, said Konarski.

Seventy-five percent of the money collected from Operation Rice Bowl goes to the national CRS office for micro-enterprise efforts in Third World countries. Women primarily receive the money, anywhere from $30 to $500, to start their own small businesses, explained Frazer. "They are the poorest of the poor, and these businesses help them to provide money for their families to move toward economic self-sufficiency."

Twenty-five percent of the collected money remains within the diocese to fund $500 mini-grants. Parishes, schools and other Catholic organizations may apply for the grants, which can be used for any program or service with an immigrant or migrant focus, said Jarina. Many parishes sponsor a sister parish in another country, and there is much work with immigrants and migrants in various local areas around the diocese.

Last year, many parishes received the mini-grants for their efforts with people from other countries. For instance, Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Cherokee received a mini-grant to finance a project entitled "Operation Love" to help with the citizenship process for Hispanic parishioners, and Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro used their grant to buy a CD recorder/changer for the startup of a radio station at Our Lady of Assumption Church in Khrakov, Ukraine. The parishioners also have an annual Ukrainian dinner

The evaluations were gratifying. Students were saying wonderfully complimentary things. For a long time it had been a goal to teach university students, and he'd thought the class was going well all semester. Now, here was proof.

One after the other the numerical rankings were high and the comments laudatory. He was thrilled, almost floating.

The jagged edge that burst his bubble surfaced toward the bottom of the pile. On an item asking about class lectures, a student had circled "good" and then written, "Lectures are sometimes elusive."

The criticism, mild as it was, fractured his brittle self-confidence. He suddenly remembered those few times he'd felt uncertain about a fine philosophical point or rushed past some historical sequence he was unsure of. In his mind, the insights of the other students now seemed shallow, flawed. The excitement of success was gone.

"Repent, and believe in the good news," Jesus tells us on this first Sunday of Lent. Repentance usually occupies our focus, with its call to root out selfishness and sin, to turn our lives around. We are most of us skilled discoverers of failure and weakness in ourselves.

What's often missing in our approach to Lent is the second part of Jesus' invitation: "Repent," he urges us, "and do so by believing the good news that you are loved beyond all measure, before and beneath any accomplishment, any demonstration of good faith or talent or effort."

To believe that — deep down, in our bones — is to embrace a radical and liberating truth. To believe in that great good news is to repent of both our self-reliance and our self-doubt. It is to trust God and give ourselves away more and more every day.

May this Lenten season move us to deep repentance and joyful belief. ▼

Book Review

Book explores public role of American women in religious life

REVIEWED BY NANCY L. ROBERTS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

While women have not been able to develop their public role in American religion as fully as have men, "The Religious Imagination Of American Women" demonstrates that they have been thinking long and hard about the spiritual life.

Mary Farrell Bednarowski's provocative, readable analysis covers a wide range of religious traditions, including Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, Mormon, and Buddhist.

Bednarowski, professor of religious studies at United Theological Seminary of the Twin Cities and a practicing Catholic, illuminates key areas that have compelled American women religious thinkers.

The book is exhaustively researched and reflects Bednarowski's years of immersion in her subject, an effort which produced two earlier, well-received books, "American Religion: A Cultural Perspective" and "New Religions and the Theological Imagination in America."

The author delves into such questions as: "When women write and speak publicly about religious ideas, what do they have to say?" and, "What does it mean to be a human being and a woman and how does our understanding of God and reality shape our answer to this question?"

Bednarowski's book aims not to create a pan-woman spirituality but to interpret critically what women religious thinkers have had to say.

She starts by noting that, "Having inhaled the contradictory nature of their experiences, women breathe out in their religious thought an ambivalence toward their traditions."

She says that this very "ambivalence about one's religious tradition — about where one stands in relation to it — can be viewed quite positively."

In a fascinating chapter on healing and religion, Bednarowski views this subject "as one more angle from which to explore women's search for intellectually and emotionally adequate ways, more theologically creative ways, to expand and transform traditional religious ideas."

"The Religious Imagination of American Women" is a scholarly work whose subject, scope, and graceful prose will command readership beyond the academy, among any who wish to explore this subject in thoughtful depth. ▼

Out on video

"The Best Man" (1999)

Uneven romantic comedy in which a wedding is jeopardized when an autobiographical novel by the best man (Taye Diggs) suggests he was intimate with the bride-to-be (Monica Calhoun) while she was dating his best friend, the now-enraged groom (Morris Chestnut). Writer-director Malcolm D. Lee's talky take on the war of the sexes strains for obvious laughs over the sexual double standard and is often raunchy despite the groom's fervently held Christian beliefs which finally lead him to forgiveness. A fleeting sexual encounter, crude bachelor-party lap dancing, brief violence, occasional profanity and much rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Random Hearts" (1999)

After discovering his wife and the husband of a congresswoman were having an affair when both were killed in a plane crash, a Washington cop (Harrison Ford) becomes romantically involved with the man's widow (Kristin Scott-Thomas), jeopardizing her re-election. Director Sydney Pollack explores the painful aftermath of adultery in a plodding drama whose melodramatic subplot is similarly uninvolving. A discreet sexual encounter, brief violence, minimal profanity and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Shooting the Past" (1999)

Character-driven drama in which the devoted staff of an obscure London photo archive, which is about to be discarded by its new American owner (Liam Cunningham), connives to find a new home for their treasured stills. Writer-director Stephen Poliakoff's quirky tale is somewhat flawed but captures the still camera's ability to freeze a moment in time forever. Ethical issues, drug references and a few Victorian-era nude photos. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Suburbans" (1999)

Trite comedy in which the love lives of four guys from a once-popular early 1980s rock band are complicated when they move in together to attempt to produce a comeback album. As directed by co-star Donal Lardner Ward, the characters are sophomoric, their romantic problems dull and the humor flat. Sexual situations, intermittent rough language and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Drowning Mona:" Witty, dark comedy

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — When a nasty resident of a small upstate New York town is suspected of being murdered, the chief of police has a harder time figuring out who wouldn't want her dead than who would in the dark comedy, "Drowning Mona" (Destination).

Chief Rash (Danny DeVito) has a problem. It seems that Mona Dearly's (Bette Midler) plunge into the Hudson River was no accident. As local mechanic Lucinda (Kathleen Wilhoite) puts it, the Yugo she was driving was "fixed to kill."

More accustomed to breaking up

William Fichtner, Bette Midler and Marcus Thomas star in the film "Drowning Mona."

bar brawls than investigating murders, Chief Rash is finding that his list of suspects is growing longer by the minute. It seems everyone had a reason for wanting brash and brutally honest Mona dead.

With his finger tightly on the pulse of lower-class America, director Nick Gomez captures the essence of what some would describe as "white trash" in this often acerbically funny film.

The main characters are well fleshed out with each having a convincing reason for killing the queen of mean. Bobby (Casey Affleck), co-owner of a fledgling landscaping business with Mona's lazy son Jeff (Marcus Thomas), is being pushed to the edge by Jeff's incompetence and Mona's insistence on getting a bigger share of the dwindling profits. He just wants to earn a decent living to support himself and his wedding-obsessed fiancee, Ellie (Neve Campbell).

Mona's henpecked husband, Phil (William Fichtner), who wears snazzy "Members Only" clothing and is having a steamy affair with Rona (Jamie Lee Curtis), a wannabe rocker turned waitress, is suspiciously unmoved by his wife's death. "You snooze, you lose," according to Phil.

Shaggy-haired, belching Jeff, who was bullied and belittled and rarely shown any maternal love, has plenty of reason to do it. The only question is whether the dull-witted son has the smarts to even come up with the idea of murdering his mother, much less pull it off.

And the list goes on, as everyone in town has at one time or another incurred Mona's wrath.

The witty script is filled with comedic details including wild rumors describing how Jeff's hand was chopped off, all built around him reaching for a beer; and throwaway lines are delivered with deft timing and deadpan faces.

The solid cast provides some good performances, including DeVito, whose keenly reserved Chief Rash works well, and Affleck, whose wide-eyed boy-next-door look fits Bobby's character perfectly.

Taken as a very dark comedy it succeeds, but the viewer is subject to flippant attitudes and cynical viewpoints. Even the local priest does not escape the sardonic edge, being portrayed as an alcoholic. Not one person in the working-class town shows any sorrow for Mona's death and the movie's laughs are built around this idea.

Because of the comical treatment of extramarital affairs, fleeting violence and homosexual innuendo, and a few instances of rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13. ▼

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope expresses gratitude for Mount Sinai pilgrimage

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pausing between Holy Year pilgrimages, Pope John Paul II expressed gratitude for his recent trip to Mount Sinai and looked ahead to a planned visit to the Mount of the Beatitudes in Israel.

The two biblical sites — where Moses received the Ten Commandments and where Christ gave his sermon on the Beatitudes — sum up the divine law that modern men and women must still follow, the pope said at a general audience at the Vatican March 1.

Both expressions of moral law should find an echo in the human heart, he said.

"The person who follows Christ does not feel oppressed by a multitude of rules, but, driven by the strength of love, experiences the commandments of God as a law of freedom: freedom to love, thanks to the inner action of the Spirit," he said.

The pope, his face tanned after his Feb. 24-26 visit to Egypt, said the high point of the trip was the one-day stop in Mount Sinai. While there he was able to pray at the site of the "burning bush," where God revealed himself to Moses, and at the foot of the mountain where Moses received the Ten Commandments.

"Individuals cannot think they are faithful to God if they do not observe his law. To be faithful to God, in fact, is to be faithful to oneself, to one's own true nature and one's deepest and strongest aspirations," he told some 6,000 people in the Vatican audience hall.

He thanked Egypt's political authorities and religious leaders, including Grand Sheik Mohammed Sayyid Tantawi, for the welcome he received in the predominantly Muslim country. He recalled his meetings with Pope Shenouda III, the Coptic Orthodox patriarch, and said he hoped for new progress in ecumenical dialogue.

Having focused on Moses during his trip to Egypt, the pope said he would dedicate his upcoming Holy Land pilgrimage to Jesus Christ. The March 20-26 visit will take him to Jordan, Jerusalem and other holy places in Israel and the Palestinian territories.

"I ask everyone to accompany me with prayers ... in the spiritual preparation of this important event," he said.

The pope, scheduled to celebrate Mass for thousands of young people near the Sea of Galilee in northern Israel, said that when Christ preached the beatitudes, he brought new meaning to the old law of Moses.

In Christ's life and suffering, "the Ten Commandments are heard through his voice," he said. Christ came to perfect the old law, becoming himself the "new law" through which salvation is offered to all peoples, he said.

Lent: A Time of Reconciliation

As we enter the season of Lent, we understand that we are observing the forty days of preparation before Easter. Its purpose is to better prepare us for the feast of the Resurrection of the Lord. Lent is a privileged time during the liturgical year that disposes us for a more fruitful reception to the graces that Christ merited by his passion, death and Resurrection.

Lent is an opportunity to reform ourselves, individually and as community, in order to practice the virtue of love. Some good forms to live the season of Lent include a more attentive listening to the Word of God and a more constant attention to prayer.

Scripture and the fathers of the church will insist on three forms: fasting, prayer and almsgiving. But these three forms will make no sense if there is no interior conversion, conversion of the heart. The Lenten practices such as fasting, prayer and almsgiving are to express sincere conversion in relation to oneself, to God and to others. Fasting and almsgiving have a much wider significance than just refraining from eating or buying. They symbolize giving up our own ways to take up those of Christ.

The main purpose of Lent is the struggle against evil within ourselves. If we give up a plate of food but don't give up our desire for revenge, our fasting will be almost sterile. If we take out money from our wallets to give alms but don't remove from our hearts hatred or pride, almost nothing has been gained.

Reconciliation is attained in daily life through gestures such as desire to forgive, attention to the poor, the exercise and defense of justice, acceptance of suffering, the owning of our faults before our brothers and sisters, examination of conscience, and so on. Lent will be a true time of reconciliation if we fix our eyes in Christ's love, mercy and compassion and try to put them into practice.

May the good Lord bless us during this Lenten season with his divine grace in order to experience reconciliation with him and one another. And let us close our thoughts with the words of St. Peter: "Therefore, be serious and sober for prayers. Above all, let your love for one another be intense, because love covers a multitude of sins. Be hospitable to one another without complaining. As each one has received a gift, use it to serve one another as good stewards of God's grace. Whoever preaches, let it be with the strength that God supplies, so that in all things God may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom belongs glory and dominion forever and ever." (1 Pt 7-11)

Evaluating Hispanic Ministry

The 1998 study of Hispanic Ministry, commissioned by the Secretariat for Hispanic Affairs of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, offers an evaluation of diocesan structures and parish structures, regarding Hispanic Ministry in the U.S.

With regard to diocesan structures, it concludes the following:

On the plus side...

A growing number of dioceses have created new structures for Hispanic ministry at the regional or deanery level.

On the down side...

a) Collaboration between Hispanic Ministry and other diocesan departments tends to be limited in duration.

b) Most dioceses do not conduct pastoral planning for Hispanics on a consistent or regular basis.

With regard to parish structures, the study finds the following:

On the plus side...

a) Hispanic Ministry's "presence" at the parish level has grown by almost 50 percent.

b) The recognition of Hispanics as a "presence" in local parishes has increased.

On the downside...

a) Most Hispanics continue to worship in "mixed" or "parallel" parish settings. These settings allow Hispanics to maintain their own identity and culture, but the administration and life of the parish is divided into separate, and at times, highly unequal spheres. Most Hispanics attend their own masses in Spanish, usually at non-peak times, and not always in the main church sanctuary.

In addition, Hispanics rarely have the same level of representation on the parish pastoral council as non-Hispanics, and frequently rely on volunteers to manage their own parish programs.

b) Most Hispanics are not receiving culturally sensitive programs in their parishes. Less than a third of the parishes with a significant Hispanic presence offer youth ministry, RCIA, lay leadership training, parish renewal or retreat programs in Spanish. Only 13 percent are developing Christian "base" communities for evangelization and outreach to Hispanics.

In addition, about 21 percent of all Hispanic-oriented parishes offer no Hispanic programs, aside from the liturgy and mass in Spanish.

Again, I hope this has been helpful.

Light One Candle

The Sabbath: "Do I Gotta?!"

"Why do I gotta go to church?!" is part of the weekend ritual in many households where teenagers test the patience and skill of many a dutiful parent. "It's so-o-o-o boring!" "John's mom doesn't make him go!" "I find God more in nature, so howsabout I just sit in the backyard while you're gone?"

Some arguments are more informed. One dad told me that his 13-year-old recently shot back: "Remember what Jesus said! 'The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath.'" "What did you do?" I asked. "Well, I was so impressed that he even knew something from Scripture, I let it go!"

But what is a parent to do? One of the most frequent concerns I hear from moms and dads everywhere is what to do about getting their kids to church. Some have found it helpful to take a closer look at the matter.

The word Sabbath comes from the Hebrew "shabbot," the "cessation of labor." The first thing in the world that God made holy was not a mountain, not an altar, not a person, but a day — the Sabbath. "God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it." (Genesis 2:3)

In time, the Sabbath was defined by elaborate rules and regulations. All work was forbidden. So when Jesus and his disciples were going through a field of grain one Sabbath and plucked the ears of grain to eat them, they were technically breaking the rules. Reaping a meal from the harvest was a form of labor and they were lawbreakers. When confronted, Jesus argued that human need takes precedence over human, and even, divine law. He insisted that we are not to be enslaved by the Sabbath. Quite the opposite, the Sabbath exists to make our lives better.

And here, Jesus teaches us at least three essential truths vital for our life of faith. First, religion does not consist of rules and regulations. There is a great deal more to religion than Sunday observance. As Garrison Keillor aptly put it: "If you think going to church makes you a Christian, you probably think sitting in a garage will make you a car." Whenever we forget the love and forgiveness, the service and mercy that are at the heart of religion, and replace them by adherence to rules and regulations, religion loses meaning.

Second, if the performance of your religious faith stops you from helping someone in need, then you misunderstand the essence of religion. People matter far more than systems. Persons are far more important than rituals. Jesus could not have been more clear on this point: the best way to worship God is to serve others.

Third, the Sabbath is never more sacred than when it is used to help those who need help. The altar is sacred not only because it is dedicated to God's worship but also because it is used for the spiritual well-being of His children. Bread is never more holy than when it is used to feed one who is starving.

Then "Do I gotta go?" My answer: the Sabbath means more than not working. It is a day devoted to God and our spiritual lives. Its observance begins in the home, where we show love for family and friends. And as family and friends, we go to church freely to join with others to thank and worship our Lord and Creator.

Coming of Age

I dare you to take Lent seriously

Do you remember, ages and ages ago, when you were just a little kid, and you'd get dared to do something?

"Dare you to climb up to the top of that tree!" "Dare you to eat that worm!" "Oh, yeah? Well I triple dare you to steal home!"

Do you remember how a dare made you feel? If you were a normal kid, it probably made you feel as if you just had to run out and do whatever that dare was about. It didn't matter what it was. You'd been challenged, and you weren't about to back down, right?

OK, how about this? It's Lent. I dare you to take it seriously. Double dare you, in fact.

Giving up candy bars and cutting down to one soda a day was fine and dandy when you were a little kid, but you're older now. Don't you think you're ready for a more grown-up approach?

I dare you to take a few minutes out of your life and reflect on what Lent is really all about. Dare you to confront that whole issue of "giving things up" as an adult.

Maybe do it this way: Ponder the whole concept of "sacrifice." Think about how many important things in life require sacrifice.

Being a good athlete requires you to sacrifice time and comfort. Doing your absolute best in school, using the brain God gave you to explore this fantastic world, requires its own kind of sacrifices too. So do relationships. Being happy in your relationships with friends and family requires the sacrifice of ego and pride, and the willingness to give.

And it's just like that with God. Being close to God and living within God's comfort and peace requires sacrifice too.

We have to examine our lives closely, all the time, for those things that are keeping us from God. Sometimes those things are sinful, and sometimes they're just a waste of precious time, energy and focus.

So what we do during Lent is try to put a microscope to the stuff in our lives that is keeping us from being closer to God. For some of us it's alcohol or sexual sin that's working at destroying our best selves. For some it's the hours we spend in front of mindless entertainment. For some it's just plain, shut-the-door-in-everyone's-face selfishness.

So I dare you. Dare you to think about Jesus and how much he loves you.

—Dare you to clear your life of junk this Lent: junk relationships, junk entertainment, junk pastimes.

— Dare you to open the door to your room and face the rest of your family as though they're human beings, not impositions on your freedom.

— Dare you to go to Mass every single Sunday during Lent, open your heart to God and pray, really pray this time.

— Dare you take 15 minutes a day and in silence read God's word and listen to him.

— Dare you to rest your eyes on Jesus on the cross and not look away after two seconds.

— Dare you to reflect on the pain he suffered out of love for you.

Dare you. Double dare you.

Determining the Sunday readings

Q. I have been struck by the prayerful coherence of the three Scripture readings at the Sunday liturgies and especially appreciate when the homilist shows how they illuminate each other.

I know the readings come in three-year cycles, but would like to know how they are selected, who does the selecting and when this all began.

When I was growing up, as I recall, the same Sunday passages were read every year. Are these readings fixed or can they be altered if the priest wants to use others?

A. At Vatican Council II, in the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy (1963), the bishops of the world ordered that a more lavish table of the word of God be spread before the faithful, that the treasures of the Bible be opened up more widely and that a more representative part of the holy Scriptures be read to the people over a prescribed number of years (No. 51).

The Lectionary for Mass is the result of that request. First completed in 1969, some expansions and slight revisions were added later.

In spite of its inevitable limitations, the Lectionary truly is, as you indicate, a remarkable achievement. Under the auspices of the Vatican congregation responsible for the church's worship and sacraments, a group of experts in Scriptural exegesis, liturgy, catechetics and pastoral theology from all parts of the world worked on the task for several years.

They first refined the principles which would guide the choice of readings and then assembled the list of texts itself. The Order of Readings is the result of their combined effort.

Underlying the entire effort, of course, is the church's ancient belief that the celebration of Mass — hearing God's word and offering and receiving the Eucharist — is one single act of worship. In both of these elements Christ is present as he carries on the work of salvation, makes our human family holy and offers perfect worship to the Father.

Somewhere along the line much of that vision got lost. As with the rest of us older Catholics, you obviously are one who remembers when what we now call the Liturgy of the Word was still considered a negligible, even unnecessary, part of the Mass.

Today we have returned again to acknowledge liturgically the one presence of Christ, who both speaks to us when the Scriptures are proclaimed and who is sacramentally with us above all in the Eucharist.

As you note, the Sunday readings are arranged in three-year cycles (A, B and C), designated as if the series started in Year 1 of the Christian era, Year 2 being B and so on. Thus, all years evenly divisible by three are in the C cycle, with the others falling into place behind them.

Most of us know from experience that the Bible texts during Advent, Lent and Easter harmonize with the character and themes of those seasons. During the rest of the year (Ordinary Time), the Gospel passages are predominantly from Matthew (A), Mark (B) and Luke (C).

Not many Catholics, I believe, realize that when the Scripture passages for each year were chosen, a particular effort was made to reflect the unique theological and stylistic characteristics of that par-

Women religious gather at Catholic Conference Center

About 50 sisters representing a cross-section of the nearly two dozen orders of women religious who serve the Diocese gathered Feb. 26 at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory. The women met to discuss ways to support one another in ministry, and to discuss future plans as a collective group.

"We used to live in convents and had the support of our communities right there with us," said Mercy Sister Mary Timothy Warren, vicar for women religious. "Today, we have a lot of sisters who live alone, separated from their communities in distance. We need to build in some support, both spiritually and socially."

ticular synoptic Gospel.

One can, for example, learn much about the "feel" of Matthew by being sensitive to the Gospel texts in the A cycle.

The same is true for Mark and Luke in their years, as well as for John in the many texts from that Gospel during Lent and Easter.

The first reading, most of the year from the Old Testament, usually is chosen because of some relationship to the other readings, especially to the Gospel of the day.

Obviously the entire Bible cannot be covered in three years, so some large sections must be omitted. But the church is very concerned that "difficult" texts not be easily passed over.

Some profound literary or interpretative difficulties arise from the texts themselves. But there is "no justification," according to the rules of the Lectionary, "for concealing from the faithful the spiritual riches of certain texts on the grounds of difficulty if the problem arises from the inadequacy either of the religious education that every Christian should have or of the biblical formation that every pastor of souls should have" (Introduction to the Lectionary for Mass, Art. 76).

This helps to explain that, while considerable flexibility in readings is possible on other occasions, such options are very rare on Sundays and major feasts so as not to blur the character of the season, the sequence of readings or the message from a particular book of the Bible.

and host two Ukrainian priests.

The diocese was recently honored with the Operation Rice Bowl Award at the Annual Social Ministries Gathering in Washington, D.C., for the efforts of CRS and Operation Rice Bowl. "We have quadrupled our Operation Rice Bowl offering in the last three years, and we have the diocesan CRS committee, which most other dioceses don't have. Also, our mini-grant program is unique among the dioceses in the United States," said Frazer.

"The Operation Rice Bowl Program provides an opportunity for families to realistically experience how the poor live," said Jarina. "The second step is by contributing to Operation Rice Bowl to help improve that situation." ▼

Blessed Bakhita a model of Christian faith, piety

By DIANNE RIGGS
Correspondent

The lives of the saints provide the faithful with exemplary models of men and women who dwelt in the love of Christ and lavished that love upon others, often in the most humble of ways. Such was the life of Blessed Josephine Bakhita, who will become the first Sudanese saint when she is canonized on Oct. 1.

Called Mother Moretta, our Black Mother, by the Canossian Daughters of Charity community at Schio, Italy, Josephine Bakhita emerged from a cruel background and became a woman of faith, whom those at the Canossian Institute found humble, simple and tender of heart.

Born into a prosperous, loving family in Sudan, Africa, in 1869, Bahkita experienced a world turned suddenly upside down when she was kidnapped and sold into slavery at the age of nine. So severe were her tortures, both physical and moral, that she even forgot her own name. She was sold and resold in the markets of Sudan's cities. One owner named her "Bakhita," which means fortunate.

She described in first-person narrative one of the horrors, according to the February 2000 issue of Living City magazine: "One day I unwittingly made a mistake that incensed the master's son. He became furious, snatched me violently from my hiding place, and began to strike me ferociously with the lash and his feet. Finally he left me half dead, completely unconscious. Some slaves carried me away and placed me on a straw mat where I remained for over a month."

In 1883, she was bought by the Italian consul, Callisto Legnani. For the first time, no one used the lash, but instead treated her in a loving, cordial way. According to the Canossian sisters' Web site, in the consul's residence she "experienced peace, warmth and moments of joy, even if always veiled by nostalgia for her own family who were perhaps lost forever."

She was eventually sent to Italy to care for a young woman named Mimmina, the daughter of one of the Consul's friends, who was attending a boarding school run by the Canossian sisters. It was here, through the sisters' nurturing, that she learned of the Catholic faith and of the God whom she knew was always in her heart.

After several months, Bakhita was initiated into the Catholic Church and assumed the name Josephine. The year was 1890. From then on, according to the Canossian Web site, she was often seen kissing the baptismal font, saying, "Here, I became a daughter of God."

When Mimmina's mother came to take her and Bakhita back to Africa, Bakhita, who was now of age, refused. With the help of the Canossian superior, the cardinal and the king's procurator, it was declared that since slavery was illegal in Italy, Bakhita could not be forced to return to Africa.

Bakhita remained with the sisters, discerning her call to become a religious. On Dec. 8, 1896, she was consecrated forever to God, whom she called the Master.

In community, Bakhita performed very humble tasks: sewing, cooking, embroidery, door-keeping. She was known to pray for the sisters of her community, who held her in high esteem for her piety, and she was fond of the children whom the sisters taught.

According to the Canossian Web site, her voice, "which had the inflection and rhythm of the music of her country, was pleasing to the little ones, comforting to the poor and suffering and encouraging for those who knocked at the door of the Institute."

Her experiences in childhood and young adulthood did much to shape her desire to serve God and to live the religious life. She once said, according to Living City, "If I were to meet the slave-traders who kidnapped me, and even those who tortured me, I would kneel and kiss their hands, for if that did not happen, I would not be a Christian and Religious today.'"

In 1930, a biography of her life was published and from then on, she had many speaking engagements. Towards the end of her life, she became ill and was confined to a wheelchair. Even with the long, painful years of sickness, Mother Bakhita continued to witness in faith. To those who visited her and asked how she was, she would respond with a smile, noting that she accepts God's wishes.

She died on Feb. 8, 1947, at the age of 78, surrounded by sorrowful, praying sisters. A large crowd gathered to see for the final time their "Mother Moretta" and to ask for her intercession from heaven.

At the Canossian General House, hundreds of letters were received from persons who had experienced the efficacy of her intercession. She was proclaimed blessed by Pope John Paul II on July 6, 1991. ▼

Charlotte parishioners to travel to El Salvador, commemorate Romero death

CHARLOTTE — A delegation from St. Peter Church in Charlotte that has fostered a relationship with a community in northeast El Salvador will travel to the Central American locale later this month meet with some old friends and commemorate the death of Archbishop Oscar Romero of San Salvador.

Since 1990, the parish's El Salvador interest group has fostered a relationship with Segundo Montes, a civil-war weary refugee community 100 miles northeast of San Salvador. Continuing their pastoral and financial assistance to Segundo Montes, the parish group will send a delegation there March 18-26 as part of its jubilee observation. The delegation will get updates on the status of a variety of social justice, educational, community and church projects made possible through the involvement of the interest group. The delegation will also take part in the 20th anniversary observance of the death of Archbishop Romero, who was killed while celebrating Mass during El Salvador's bloody civil war.

To commemorate this jubilee event, the interest group has designed sweatshirts for its supporters. For further information on how you can help support the work of the interest group, call Mike Horn at (704) 598-4283. ▼

Black History Month celebrated at St. Lawrence Basilica Mass

By JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — People must look beyond the symbols to the soul of black, white and Catholic cultures, the vice chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte told the congregation in the Basilica of St. Lawrence at a recent Mass observing Black History Month.

Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, who also serves as vicar of African American Affairs in the diocese, was homilist at the Feb. 27 Mass. Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor of the diocese, presided. Father Cecil Tice, rector of the basilica, had invited Father West and Rev. Mr. Todd to help the parish celebrate Black History Month.

What started some years ago as Black History Week has become Black History Month, but, Rev. Mr. Todd said, "We want to be celebrated all year — as all cultures should be."

The Catholic Church also is celebrating a Jubilee year. A banner hanging in front of the basilica proclaims the Jubilee message, "Open Wide the Doors to Christ." But, Rev. Mr. Todd says, there's more to that than might seem obvious.

"Who is the church?" he asked. "We are. The doors to be opened are not the doors to the building. We must open our minds and our hearts to Christ. Opening wide the doors to Christ means being the Jesus someone needs to see."

Rev. Mr. Todd added that before one can evangelize others, he or she must experience evangelization of self.

Rev. Mr. Todd took his homily theme from the day's second reading from the second letter of St. Paul to the Corinthians. He quoted from the reading: "You are our letter, written on our hearts, known and read by all, shown to be a letter of Christ ministered by us, written not in ink but by the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone but on tablets that are hearts of flesh."

"What do people see when they read my heart's letter?" he asked.

He acknowledged the differences between black and white cultures, but said, "All people are created in the image and likeness of God, and we are not entitled to deny that. Some people say when they look at me, 'Curtiss, I don't see a black man.' I know what they mean, but I have to ask, 'What do you see?' Because that's what I am. That's what God made me to be."

White U.S. culture in America has been shaped by white European culture, he said, and so has Catholic Church culture. When blacks look at the Catholic Church in the United States, Rev. Mr. Todd said, many feel unwelcome when all they encounter is white priests and nuns, a white hierarchy, the grandeur of European royalty, and art and icons showing fair-skinned people.

While differences in worship style between white and black congregations exist, he added, one is not better than the other.

Rev. Mr. Todd's comments reflect on the ethnic makeup of today's church, both in the United States and in the Diocese of Charlotte.

There are more than 62 million Catholics in the United States. According to the National Conference of Catholic Bishops/United States Catholic Conference's Secretariat for African American Catholics, 2.3 million Catholics are African American.

In this diocese, two priests in active ministry are African American, and Rev. Mr. Todd is the only African-American permanent deacon currently serving. Of the 94 parishes and missions in the diocese, three have predominantly African-American congregations.

In November 1989, the U.S. Catholic bishops approved and recommended a pastoral plan for black Catholics. The plan, originally adopted by the National Black Catholic Congress in 1987, focused on Catholic identity of African-American Catholics, ministry and leadership in the community, and the obligation to reach out to broader society.

The plan was part of an effort by the U.S. bishops to more effectively evangelize the nation's African-American Catholics. It dealt with a multitude of issues, including cultural, spiritual, educational and social awareness and development.

Black soul and culture come mainly from Africa, Rev. Mr. Todd said in his homily, but "slavery stripped Africans of their culture, their identity, even their humanity. What they were allowed to keep was for the entertainment of others."

But, he said, "Everybody has the right to belong to their own culture. No one culture is better than any other. Jesus came for everybody. There should be respect for all cultures. Go beyond the symbols and understand the soul of the culture."

All are to evangelize, reconcile and celebrate, he said. America has been called a "melting pot," but a better term might be "stew pot," he added. In a melting pot, all the ingredients blend into one, with no distinctions, but in a stew pot, each ingredient contributes to the whole while retaining its individuality.

Rev. Mr. Todd noted that he is asked from time to time why he feels a sense of belonging in a church with such a relatively small percentage of African-American congregants. "I tell them, a Catholic is a Christian who believes that God manifested himself to the world through Jesus Christ," he said, "and that the purpose of life is to know, love and serve God through divine worship and service to others." ▼

With 'mea culpa,' pope culminates church's examination of conscience

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II made an unprecedented apology for the sins of Christians through the ages, the culmination of the church's "examination of conscience" for the jubilee year.

The pope's long-awaited "mea culpa" March 12 was echoed by local churches in the United States and elsewhere and generally welcomed by non-Catholics around the world.

The pope's idea of a day of atonement, which met some resistance even inside the Vatican, was designed to acknowledge shortcomings in the church's past, in order to give Catholics a sense of reconciliation and make future evangelization more credible.

"We forgive and we ask forgiveness!" the pope said during a historic Lenten liturgy in St. Peter's Basilica. He and seven top Vatican officials pronounced a "request for pardon" for sins against Christian unity, the use of violence in serving the truth, hostility toward Jews and other religions, the marginalization of women, and wrongs — like abortion — against society's weakest members.

The pope said the church has had many saints, but some of its members have shown disobedience to God and inconsistency with the faith — in the past and present.

"For the part that each of us, with his behavior, has had in these evils that have disfigured the face of the church, we humbly ask forgiveness," he said.

Pronouncing the apology for Christian intolerance in the past was Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, which was created more than 450 years ago under a different name to run the Inquisition.

"Even men of the church, in the name of faith and morals, have sometimes used methods not in keeping with the Gospel in the solemn duty of defending the truth," the cardinal said.

Other Vatican officials expressed regret for actions by Christians that have aggravated ecumenical divisions, increased discrimination against minority and ethnic groups, "humiliated and marginalized" women, and shown contempt for local cultures and religious traditions.

The pope called for "genuine brotherhood" between Christians and Jews, telling Jewish people that "we are deeply saddened by the behavior of those who in the course of history have caused these children of yours to suffer."

At the conclusion of the apology liturgy, the pope embraced and kissed the crucifix and, in a final blessing, declared that "never again" should such sins be committed. Thousands of people attended the service, packing the basilica and watching on giant-screen TV in the square outside.

Network helps Greensboro families find their way home

GREENSBORO — In the early-'80s, Karen Olson felt compelled to give a sandwich to a homeless woman in a subway station in New York. After she talked to the woman and learned about her life, she and her two sons began delivering sandwiches in and around New York and New Jersey. When area churches became aware of Olson's efforts, that is how the first Interfaith Hospitality Network came to be formed in October 1986 in New Jersey.

The National Interfaith Hospitality Network (NIHN) was later organized, which oversees the approximately 73 local networks throughout the country. One of those 73 networks includes a group of Greensboro churches — the Greensboro Interfaith Hospitality Network (GIHN) — all trying to help homeless families in that area to find their own shelter from the storm.

"This is a grass roots organization in which churches pair together to provide housing for families and provide transportation for them and their belongings to and from the host church," explained Jeanie Roberts-Wyatt, the GIHN director.

The GIHN began in October 1999 to accommodate up to 14 people, or about five families, in a rotating schedule with the host churches using their facilities for five weeks during the year. The network was created through the efforts of Bruce Bergen, now, the president of the GIHN Board of Trustees, and a parishioner of St. Paul the Apostle Catholic Church in Greensboro. He attended a meeting with members who wanted to start a local network, and because of his prior ecumenical work, he and others went to churches to pitch the idea.

"The churches are not shelters but are safe places. We aren't just feeding them; we are having dinner with them and trying to bring some hope to their lives," said Bergen. "For the people of the churches, this puts a gentler face on homelessness because

Two-year minimum wage hike has church support, but veto likely

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A House measure to boost the minimum wage by $1 over a two-year period has the support of Catholic Charities USA and other church organizations, but President Clinton said he would veto it because the bill includes business tax cuts. The House approved a two-step $1 increase in the hourly minimum wage to $6.15 in a March 9 vote of 282-143. The Senate has approved $1 wage boost over three years and different tax cuts. Organizations including Catholic Charities that have pushed for the two-year increase instead of the Senate version's three-year increase backed the House action.

Religious leaders urge moratorium on federal executions

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Representatives of more than 30 church-based groups joined in a plea to President Clinton to impose a moratorium on use of the death penalty by the federal government. In a March 9 letter, religious leaders told President Clinton that "our nation is slowly realizing the truth of capital punishment: the death penalty, as applied in America today, threatens to shed innocent blood." It was signed by leaders of Baptist, Quaker, Episcopal, Lutheran, Greek Orthodox, Jewish, Presbyterian, United Church of Christ and Methodist organizations, among others. Columban Father Michael Dodd, director of the Justice and Peace Office of the Columban Fathers was among the signers.

Israeli officials pledge to keep politics out of papal visit

ROME (CNS) — After meeting with Pope John Paul II, Israeli officials pledged to keep politics out of the pontiff's Holy Land visit and called on Palestinians to do the same. "I hope that politics will not shadow what is a very important spiritual and religious visit," Haim Ramon, a Cabinet minister in charge of government planning for the trip, told reporters at a Rome press conference March 10. "I want to thank the Vatican, which is doing its best to make sure this visit is not used by anyone for political purposes. I hope the Palestinians will respect this. It is not just our request, but the request of the pope."

Don't just forgive debt, reorder economies as well, says priest

WASHINGTON (CNS) — External debts of poor countries should be forgiven, but a reordering of the world's economy is also needed, said a priest serving in Bolivia. Debts of poor countries should be forgiven "for moral reasons, but it's not going to change things in the end," said Oblate Father Gregorio Iriarte, author and specialist in Catholic social justice. Father Iriarte spoke March 3 in Washington. "The problem of external debt is related to the deterioration of commercial relations," said the priest. "The raw materials produced by the Third World are every day cheaper in relation to the intermediate products the people have to buy. So if what you produce is worth less every day and what you have to buy is worth more, obviously that's going to lead to debt," Father Iriarte said.

Bishops praise support for traditional definition of marriage

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (CNS) — California's Catholic bishops praised voters for approving a measure March 7 that defines marriage as a union only between a man and a woman. The church leaders, speaking as the California Catholic Conference, said they were "saddened," however, by passage of a measure extending the circumstances under which the death penalty is warranted. On another crime issue, the state's Catholic Charities consortium voiced regrets at the voters' decision to have more juvenile offenders tried and sentenced as adults "while allocating nothing for programs to prevent juvenile crime."

Pakistani official confirms notice on blasphemy cases

TOBA TEK SINGH, Pakistan (CNS) — A member of Pakistan's National Security Council has confirmed a government notice that no blasphemy case will be registered without proper inquiry. Local papers reported council member Attyia Inayatullah said deputy district commissioners have been ordered not to register cases of blasphemy against the prophet Mohammed or the Koran without proper investigation. The council is a top-level body that advises the government on various matters, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. Syed Zakir, spokesman for the rights group Solidarity International, welcomed the move to change the process of registering blasphemy cases and said those who make false accusations should be punished.

Maryland bishops support Spanish translation for courts bill

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Concerned that Spanish-speaking Maryland residents are not always given equal access to the state's justice system, Maryland's Catholic bishops want the General Assembly to support a bill that would help eliminate the language barrier in the court system. S.B. 741 would require Maryland courts to provide certified language interpreters for Spanish speakers who are not proficient in English. The bill would prohibit a state department, agency or program from denying public services or discriminating against a person based on language ability.

Embracing stewardship

Regional workshop highlights giving of time, talent, treasure

FRANKLIN — Stewardship. It's not just about money.

That was the message to 20-plus parishioners of the Smoky Mountain Vicariate at the Charlotte Diocese's first Regional Stewardship Day March 11. Barbara Rohrman, the diocese's associate director of development, spoke to representatives from Immaculate Heart of Mary, Hayesville; Our Lady of the Mountains, Highlands; St. Joseph, Bryson City; St. Margaret, Maggie Valley; St. William, Murphy; and St. Francis of Assisi, Franklin, which hosted the event.

Rohrman said she hopes to hold at least two more regional stewardship days in other areas of the diocese.

"I help parishes promote stewardship, to embrace stewardship as a way of life," Rohrman said. "Too often, when I come into a parish to do a workshop like this, people get out their wallets, or (the pastor) brings the finance council for me to talk to."

There's much more to Christian stewardship than that, she added.

The Charlotte Diocese formed the Office of Development in 1986. Its primary responsibility is to "help educate, encourage, and assist people in the diocese to use their gifts of time, talent, and treasure so that they may grow spiritually." Charlotte was ahead of the game in another way. In 1989, it created a stewardship manual, one of the first dioceses in the country to have such a publication.

In 1992, the bishops of the United States were asked to address the church's diminishing resources. The bishops drafted a pastoral letter, "Stewardship: A Disciple's Response," which calls upon all Christians to embrace stewardship.

The letter does not talk about money, but rather, describes stewards as disciples of Jesus, who joyfully appreciate all that God has given them. "These linked realities, discipleship and stewardship, then make up the fabric of a Christian life in which each day is lived in an intimate, personal relationship with the Lord," it says.

Gone are the days when the pastor did it all. The bishops' letter emphasizes that stewardship is integral, not optional. Everyone is called to be involved.

Motivations to give time and talent, as well as treasure, range from fear to gratitude, Rohrman said. Fear is at the bottom of the ladder. Next above fear is reward: giving to get something in return. Then comes social approval ("I'll let people know what I did so they can appreciate how good I am").

Need is next: People give to those in need, but when the need is over, the giving stops. Nearer to the top is sacrifice — giving until it hurts. Some people give and give and then tell everyone how much it hurt. But, Rohrman said, if it is to be a real sacrifice, it must align the giver with Jesus.

The top reason for stewardship is gratitude — giving until it feels good, until you feel good about your giving, whether of time, talent or treasure.

"Proportionate giving," rather than tithing, is what the Charlotte Diocese prefers, Rohrman said, giving in proportion to what the person has been given. "And only you know what you've been given," she added. "Perhaps you've been given more time than others. Some people have been gifted with more talent. Stewardship is something we plan. It's intentional, as in, 'I'll spend three hours this week working at the soup kitchen,' rather than, 'If I have any time left, I'll work at the soup kitchen'."

Rohrman suggested that each parish form a stewardship committee under the parish council. The stewardship committee would be responsible for helping the parish to be aware of stewardship through a program guided by an annual plan. Members of the committee would be spiritually motivated; exemplify stewardship in their own lives; envision where stewardship can take the parish; and have personal qualities such as accountability, optimism and creativity.

She said that moving fully into stewardship can take a parish seven to 10 years, but the results are worth it. Rohrman shared the example of Our Lady of the Assumption parish in Charlotte. Some of the fruits of its stewardship efforts are:

- Weekday Mass attendance increased.
- Bible study groups increased.
- In 1990 the parish had no prayer group; now it has five.
- Invited to participate in community outreach programs, more than 60 parishioners committed to a six-week seminar, "Moving Faith into Action," and are now involved in ministry to the hungry, elderly and immigrants.

Attendees at the Regional Stewardship Day were eager to get involved in their own parishes.

"She gave us a lot of good ideas," said Carole Johnson of St. William Church. "We're just getting started in stewardship. She gave us a lot of food for thought."

Dan Lange is already involved in stewardship as a lector, lector chairman, eucharistic minister and member of the pastoral council at St. Francis of Assisi. "I just thought it was wonderful to have this workshop," he said. "So many people in the parish want to do things, but they don't know who to ask." ♣

Getting to the bottom of Teen Summit 2000

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — A local radio station decided to give area teens a dose of discussions of social issues violence with a sugar spoonful of a concert featuring national recording artists. WPEG FM-98 sponsored their first Teen Summit 2000, a day of talks and performances geared toward African-American middle, junior high and high school students.

"There are so many issues that the youth have to deal with on a daily basis, and this was a forum where they could address issues like sex, violence in schools and drugs," said Andre' Carson, WPEG program director. "Hopefully, we were able to further educate them and possibly change some viewpoints."

Of the many teen and young adult attendants who listened to the panel discussions and benefited from the statistical and social information, the Youth in Action group from Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte participated in the event on March 11 at Halton Arena at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

The segments, with panelists from the Chemical Dependency Center, Teen Health Connection, Metrolina AIDS Project and other agencies and organizations, were hosted by the station's DJ's who gathered questions from the audience.

During the first segment about drugs, one of the youth from OLC, Ashley Grier, 15, a freshman at Charlotte Catholic High School, said that students should be tested for drugs at school to the boos and groans of the young crowd.

Thirteen-year-old Courtney Colon made a plea on behalf of her brother, a victim of drug experimentation. She wanted to know what agencies could help him and her family with intervention. "I have experienced the negative side of drug experimentation because of what my brother has gone through," said Colon. "I wanted to know how he can get help, and I think that we can definitely try to help him, even if he doesn't want it."

The Youth in Action group from Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte gather for a minute during Teen Summit 2000, sponsored by WPEG FM-98, on March 11 at Halton Arena on UNCC's campus.

"It is important for me to support my children and to be a part of everything they do. I want to see if they are learning what I am teaching them, that they have to believe in God first and their friends and other things should come second."
— André Tompkins

After a 21-year-old mother of two stated that there should be more parental involvement with children, one of the parents of two Youth in Action members, Celean Tompkins said, "Parents need to trust their children and trust that what they have taught them. You need to pay more attention to your children."

The Tompkins attended the event as a family with their son, Nicholas, and daughter, Cerita. "It is important for me to support my children and to be a part of everything they do. I want to see if they are learning what I am teaching them, that they have to believe in God first and their friends and other things should come second," said André Tompkins.

The musical interludes consisted of young popular R&B and rap artists Sammie, N-Toon, J-Shin and the Youngbloodz and a junior and senior high school step competition, an African-American fraternities and sororities' art form.

The segment about sex and violence brought with it the many statistics that affect many youth and teens. Michelle Gay, community health educator, from the Mecklenburg Council on Adolescent Pregnancy said that there were 1,670 pregnancies reported in Mecklenburg County in 1998. The highest age range of these reported pregnancies were between 15- and 18-year-olds, and 67 percent of fathers identified were 20 years of age and older.

One single 28-year-old mother of three warned the audience about the dangers of unprotected sex and said that young women should be more careful about their lives.

"The event was educational but also fun. I thought that the session about sex was the most important of the day," said Bianca Graham, a 16-year-old junior at Charlotte Catholic High School. "People think that the cool thing to do now is to have sex, but when the consequences come, people aren't ready to face them."

Seventeen-year-old Fernando Steele said, "This was very informational because it let kids know about things they should and should not do, depending on their age. What hit home for me was the segment about violence in schools — six-year-olds shooting each other is ridiculous. We are here to live, learn, have fun and praise God. You should look toward your religion and the groups you are involved in to prevent those negative things from happening."

Nanette Lide, one of the parish's youth minister, thought that the event was important for her kids to attend. "This gave them a platform to communicate their beliefs about abstinence and other teen issues, like community awareness, social justice and drugs, and to share their beliefs as Catholics. Most of what they are dealing with are issues that seem to run rampant in the black community, and it is even harder for them because there are so few young black Catholics in this area."

"They need to feel comfortable sharing what they experience in their lives, which is why they need to be exposed to environments like this," said Leslie Johnson, the parish youth minister. ♣

Performer brings biblical-times women to life

By JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Who were they — the women who surrounded Jesus and Mary? You can find out who one woman thinks they were.

Olivia Woodford has written "Faith and Hope: A Mother's Story" and "The Heart of the Cross," one-woman plays that bring to life some of the women who were — and who may have been — part of Jesus' and Mary's world.

"You watch the characters have spiritual awakenings," she said. "Women are usually silent in Scripture, and in real life, their voices are often not a strong as men's. So, to have a whole evening where women's voices are heard affirms our place in the world and our relationship to the church and God. At the same time, men are not threatened."

She has been performing "Faith and Hope: A Mother's Story" for two years. Last Advent she gave performances at Grace Baptist, Emma United Methodist, and St. Eugene Catholic in Asheville; St. Margaret Mary Catholic, Swannanoa; St. John Catholic, Waynesville; and St. Margaret Catholic, Maggie Valley, among other churches.

The play is about Mary; although, Mary herself never appears. Instead, the characters are women who knew or might have known her: her cousin, Elizabeth; her mother, Anne; Anna, the prophetess; a shepherdess watching a flock of sheep on a hill above Bethlehem; and Leah, a young woman who was one of Mary's schoolmates. The audience can see how each woman changes because of her relationship with Mary.

"I think what I do is end up putting myself in their shoes," Woodford said.

She uses few props. The most important is a shawl that she wears in a different way for each character. For Elizabeth, it becomes an apron. For Anna, the prophetess, the shawl is bundled so that she seems to be carrying the baby in her arms as she pronounces about his future. Leah, involved in the world, starts out wearing the stole seductively but finally is blanketed in it.

"I knew I wanted someone who wasn't caught up in the story," Woodford said. "Leah's attention is focused the same place as most people's. Everybody has their own time and their own season. She ends up as an old woman, dedicating her whole life to Jesus."

Woodford graduated from Boston University with a bachelor's degree in theater and worked as an actress in New York. She did mainly Shakespeare but left "because the quality and message of the theater didn't speak to me," she said.

Moving to Asheville, she started the Healing Theater. "I wanted to create a venue where the audience was impacted," she said. "I wanted theater that initiated some kind of reflection. In one play, the actors stepped forward to say how their characters were like them."

Woodford began working on "Faith and Hope: A Mother's Story" during six months spent recuperating from back problems. She read books, absorbing details about the time and place in which Jesus lived.

"I wrote the Christmas play in 10 days," she said, "but I thought about it for six years and researched it for five months. When I was rehearsing it, I cried all the way through. In some scenes, I still cry.

The Easter play has a 10-year history. Just as Mary is not a character in the Christmas play, Jesus does not appear in the Easter play. The women in "The Heart of the Cross" include Veronica, Mary Magdalene, Martha and Jesus' mother.

What was life like for Martha, who had to take care of the household details when Jesus and his disciples visited?

"I think, what if we just did what Jesus did and went from town to town thinking "God will provide"; well, somebody has to do the providing," Woodford said. Referring to the Last Supper, she adds, "What would you do if 13 people suddenly showed up [for dinner]?"

And then there is Jesus' mother. In this play, she does appear, standing at the cross, "not only losing her son, but losing him in such a violent, humiliating way," Woodford said. "To watch someone you love die, the purest person you've ever met, [and he's] not being embraced by the world. Am I safe in the world? Will God be accepted in my community?"

She wrote the play to perform at her own church and invited a friend who was a member of a Congregationalist Church to attend the program.

"You've got to have this at my church," the friend exclaimed, which began a series of performances for people of various faith traditions, including a group of Hindus.

She believes that the stories of the women she portrays are the stories of all women.

"You're already whole, and your story has a wholeness," she said.

Woodford will perform "The Heart of the Cross" at St. Eugene Catholic Church in Asheville on March 26, beginning at 7:30 p.m. ♣

Archbishop says Catholics first to respond in Mozambique

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Missionaries and Catholic charities were the first to respond to Mozambique's flood disaster, said a Vatican official.

"They know the (Mozambican) people and are close to them," said Archbishop Paul Josef Cordes, head of "Cor Unum," the Vatican's charity promotion and coordinating agency.

Archbishop Cordes held a press briefing March 14 to discuss his March 9-12 trip to the devastated southern African country, where floods have claimed 500 lives and left another 260,000 people homeless since January. While foreign countries reacted slowly, he said, Catholic agencies took immediate action, and Pope John Paul II was one of the first people to draw attention to the crisis.

In the Diocese of Charlotte, relief efforts are organized through diocesan contacts for Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops' international relief and development agency.

If your parish chooses to take up a special offering, you can contribute in that way. Alternately, individual donations may be sent to the Diocese of Charlotte - Mozambique Relief" and mailed to the Diocese of Charlotte Pastoral Center, 1123 S. Church St., Charlotte, N.C. 28203. All money collected will be forwarded to Catholic Relief Services. ♣

Archbishop predicts food crisis if farm crisis isn't solved

TOPEKA, Kan. (CNS) — America's farm crisis may become a food crisis if state and federal governments do not halt the decline of family-owned farms, said Archbishop James P. Keleher of Kansas City. "Our (meat) lockers are filled with food and so are our grocery markets," he said. "We don't realize there's a farm crisis. But I'll tell you this; if we don't solve our farm crisis, there will someday be a food crisis." The archbishop was a featured speaker March 8 at the Kansas Farm Rally at the state Capitol, attended by about 200 family farmers, state legislators, clergy, agriculture activists and assorted lobbyists.

Pope says late Cardinal Kung showed 'heroic fidelity to Christ'

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The late Chinese Cardinal Ignatius Kung Pin-mei demonstrated "heroic fidelity to Christ amid persecution and imprisonment," Pope John Paul II said. The cardinal, who was diagnosed with stomach cancer in late February, died in Stamford, Conn., March 12 at the age of 98. He was the Catholic Church's oldest cardinal. Cardinal Kung, considered by the Vatican to be the legitimate bishop of Shanghai until his death, had spent more than 30 years in prison in China for his refusal to renounce his ties with the Vatican and with the pope.

Florida women mobilize for 'sane' gun laws

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla (CNS) — Ann Nanni knows what the mother of the 6-year-old Michigan student killed Feb. 29 must be experiencing. Nanni's son was murdered in Florida more than a decade ago. "You literally step outside of yourself and there is nobody who can make you whole again," said Nanni, a member of St. Luke Parish in Lake Worth. She is the organizer of the Florida chapter of the Bell Campaign, a nondenominational support group and grassroots movement that is calling for greater gun-user education and controls. Campaign members are organizing a Million Mom March for Mother's Day, May 14.

Erie bishop travels diocese to welcome Catholics back home

ERIE, Pa. (CNS) — If Catholics in the Erie Diocese have a complaint against the Catholic Church that has kept them from the sacrament of reconciliation, or if they simply have drifted away from the spiritual benefits offered by God in the sacrament, Bishop Donald W. Trautman is inviting them back home. For the second consecutive Lent, the bishop will be traveling to parishes in the Erie Diocese to listen to their concerns and invite them to reconcile with the church. "We're trying to reach out to those who are alienated from the church and help them understand that God loves them," Bishop Trautman said.

Week of events to mark 20th anniversary of Romero's killing

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Up to 40,000 people are expected to participate in religious events in San Salvador during a five-day commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the murder of Archbishop Oscar Romero. Processions, religious services, and an international ecumenical conference are among the events planned in the run-up to the commemorations, while books, posters and a CD are being produced for the occasion.

St. Patrick scholar sees more than a saint for a party

By PATRICIA ZAPOR
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Christopher Snyder wants people to understand a few things about St. Patrick.

First, the patron saint of Ireland wasn't Irish. His ethnic background was probably Celtic, like the people of Ireland, but he was the son of a landowning British deacon. Patrick originally got to Ireland as a kidnapped teen-age slave, in fact. After escaping, he returned years later as a bishop.

Then there's that "drove the snakes from Ireland" legend.

"There weren't any snakes there before he arrived," explained Snyder, an assistant history professor at Marymount University in Arlington, Va., and an authority on St. Patrick and his era in Britain. Scientific reports from the third century — more than 100 years before Patrick lived — reported an absence of snakes on the island.

Most likely, the legend that St. Patrick chased the snakes from Ireland was an allegory for his success in converting people to Christianity from the pagan druid beliefs, Snyder said.

There also is no proof that St. Patrick ever made a practice of teaching about the Trinity using a shamrock, according to Snyder. According to legend, St. Patrick explained the principle of three beings in one God by using the three-leafed shamrock as a model.

The story may well be true, but since the church's history in Ireland at that time was largely handed down by oral tradition, there's no way of knowing for sure, said Snyder. Shamrocks have long been reputed in folklore to have special powers, so the Trinity story could have been the cause of their origin, he said. But, just as likely, the Trinity story may have grown out of a pre-existing Irish affinity for shamrocks.

A man dressed as St. Patrick, bishop and apostle to Ireland, waves from atop a float in the St. Patrick's Day parade in Washington March 12. Washington holds the annual parade on the Sunday prior to the saint's actual feast day, March 17.

Two documents known to have been written by St. Patrick account for most of what Snyder and other historians of the "sub-Roman Britain" period know about the saint.

In one, his "Letter to the Soldiers of Coroticus," Patrick excommunicated the Christian and Romano-Briton soldiers who had kidnapped some of his new Irish converts and sold them into slavery.

In the other, his "Confessions," Patrick told of his own faith revelations, of his escape from slavery and journey back to the continent, where he studied for the priesthood and was ordained.

Because Patrick only began to become famous 150 to 200 years after his death, the details of his life are unclear. Snyder said by the time word of Patrick's success in evangelizing Ireland became well-known, his life story was as much legend as fact.

Tales abound of dramatic battles with wizards and druids, of rainfalls of fire and of other outrageous events.

But some elements of the accomplishments of St. Patrick are clear, according to Snyder.

First, his monklike simple existence was an inspiration to followers, including several of Ireland's homegrown saints.

St. Patrick's practice of fasting and praying to this day inspires thousands of pilgrims to climb up a mountain in Connaught each July. Croagh Patrick, named for the saint, is a traditional pilgrimage site, with many people making the trek barefoot.

As for a more recent claim-to-fame linked to St. Patrick — that the Irish "saved civilization" — Snyder's a little more reserved.

In his 1995 book "How the Irish Saved Civilization," one of author Thomas Cahill's central points is that St. Patrick's evangelization of Ireland was the key to the preservation of the documents of Western civilization. It was the monks at Catholic monasteries in Ireland who copied Greek and Roman books and scholarly works when barbarians overran Europe, destroying much of what had been written, according to Cahill.

"The notion of Patrick singlehandedly saving civilization is a big stretch," said Snyder, who said he hasn't read Cahill's book but is familiar with its premise. "That the Irish alone saved 'civilization' is also a stretch."

By inspiring his followers to learn more about the church, St. Patrick clearly helped improve literacy in Ireland, Snyder conceded. "So he may have contributed to the preservation of traditions."

And finally, to burst another popular American myth, the tradi-

Commentators inside and outside the church hailed the event as a historic step, and the pope was described by one Italian newspaper as a "voice in the wilderness" for his willingness to publicly ask forgiveness.

Jewish leaders also praised the pope, but some said he should have been more specific about the Holocaust. In Israel, where the pope was to visit later in the month, Chief Rabbi Israel Meir Lau welcomed the pope's words but said the church needs to apologize for the actions of Pope Pius XII during World War II; many Jews think the wartime pope did not speak out strongly enough against Nazi persecution of Jews.

In New York, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said that in failing to specifically mention the Holocaust, the pope had "missed a historic opportunity to bring closure" to Christian responsibility for sins against Jews.

In the United States, local bishops took their cue from the pope and conducted Lenten services with public apologies for church actions against Jews, women, native peoples and other groups:

— Los Angeles Cardinal Roger M. Mahony, in a Lenten message, asked forgiveness for any of his own actions or those of the archdiocese and its Catholics that have offended or hurt others. He made specific apologies to Jews, Muslims, women, ethnic and cultural minorities, organized labor, victims of clergy sex abuse, divorced and remarried Catholics and women religious. To gay and lesbian Catholics he apologized for "when the church has appeared to be nonsupportive of their struggles."

— Boston Cardinal Bernard F. Law led a prayer service March 12 asking forgiveness for the faults of local Catholics throughout history, specifically regarding slavery, racism, anti-Semitism, sex abuse by priests and the treatment of women.

— Bishop John S. Cummins of Oakland, Calif., invited survivors of clergy sexual abuse to a March 25 service of apology and reconciliation.

— Bishop Joseph L. Imesch of Joliet, Ill., presided over an atonement service, apologizing for the sins of church leaders. Those attending were asked to express their own forgiveness by writing down names or situations of sin involving the church; the forms were then ritually burned, symbolizing atonement.

Similar services were held in Norwich, Conn., and Santa Fe, N.M., and other dioceses.

In Australia, bishops asked forgiveness for their failures in dealing with such issues as church unity, care for aborigines and sex abuse. Swiss bishops acknowledged that Catholics did too little to prevent persecution of Jews by Nazis.

Vatican officials emphasized that the church's apology was not a political but a religious act, addressed first of all to God. On March 7, they presented a 19,000-word document titled "Memory and Reconciliation: The Church and the Faults of the Past," which examined several difficult theological questions and tried to eliminate some misperceptions about the apology movement.

The church's "mea culpa" cannot be seen as a form of "self-flagellation" performed in public for the benefit of others, said French Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, president of the Vatican's jubilee committee.

Cardinal Ratzinger, head of the International Theological Commission, which prepared the document, said the church was not setting itself up as a tribunal to judge the actions of past Christians. The aim was to "know ourselves and open ourselves to the purification of memories and to our true renewal," he said.

The document said the church was holy and cannot sin, but that its members have sinned through the ages. Acknowledging these faults can foster renewal and reconciliation in the present, it said.

The document, however, rejected any notion of collective guilt by Christians, saying that would be as unfair as blaming all Jews for Christ's death.

"Sin is ... always personal, even though it wounds the entire church," it said.

The church officials also said that the pope's unprecedented gesture of confessing past sins could set a precedent — today's Christians and church leaders can also expect to have their actions closely judged.

"What will the men and women of tomorrow think of us?" asked Dominican Father Georges Cottier, the pope's personal theologian.

"We are no better than the men and women of the past. It is with modesty and 'fear and trembling' that we must judge their acts," he said. ♣

CHARLOTTE — The Catholic Social Services, Charlotte Regional Office's, yearly fund-raiser and award dinner has undergone some major reconstruction. The Col. Francis J. Beatty Award Dinner has become the Wings of Hope Annual Award Gala and Fundraiser, benefiting CSS. The name, location and program have changed, but the focus, spirit and intention have not.

"This is the major fund-raising event of the year for the agency," said Geri King, CSS director of the Charlotte Regional Office. "It has become a social event in the Catholic community and other faith communities as well."

"We wanted to give the event a face-lift and give it some new life. We wanted to make it a fun-filled evening," continued King.

With that in mind, the event-planning committee, chaired by Bea Staub, worked with the CSS-Charlotte Regional Office Advisory Board and staff to make the changes. The first was the name of the event. Staub based her choice on her own experiences with CSS and their overall function.

Staub and her husband Pat adopted their son, Dylan, and daughter, Danielle, through CSS. "I wanted to be a part of something that provides opportunities within the community, and I wanted to tell the community what they had done for me and for others," explained Staub.

Staub said of the new name of the reception, "'At the same time we fly, sometimes we are able to give wings of hope' — that is where the theme comes from. CSS gives hope to those in need."

"She (Staub) suggested the theme which captures the heart and essence of the agency," said King.

The fundraiser has honored members of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg community, regardless of religious affiliation, with the Col. Francis J. Beatty Award. Col. Beatty was the one of the founding members, co-chairperson and the first Catholic to be a part of the local National Conference for Communities and Justice, chairperson of the Belmont Abbey College Board of Trustees, and a U.S. Army officer in three wars. During his '80s, even until close to his death, he delivered meals to shut-ins.

This year's recipient, who will be honored at the ninth annual April 1 banquet at Founders Hall in the Bank of America Corporate Center, is Gerald G. "Jerry" Fox, Mecklenburg's County Manager for the past 20 years. One part of Fox's job is to supervise the annual county budget of over $1.4 billion. The part-time Santa Claus for his office's family Christmas parties is a parishioner at St. Peter Church, where he is a Eucharistic minister and lector, and volunteers for Habitat for Humanity.

New additions to the evening gala include a silent auction, dancing with music by The Blue Moons and Larry Sprinkle, NBC 6 weather anchor, as the master of ceremonies. A video using the pictures and personal illustrations from this year's annual report will also be shown during the evening event.

Brady Drummond-Ryan, director of development for CSS, said, "We've looked to expand the focus of the event to reach out not only to the Catholic community but to the greater Charlotte community as well." ♣

tional Irish celebration of the March 17 feast day is more along the lines of going to Mass or following the Stations of the Cross, than the Americanized day of parades and drinking parties, Snyder said.

That's apparently changing, however. Since 1996, Dublin has been marking St. Patrick's Day in a more secular style. A Web site for this year's St. Patrick's festival advertises "Four Days of Music, Madness and Magic," including parades; a ceili, or Irish dance contest; a festival; and a carnival-style masquerade ball.

It does mention an ecumenical church service at Dublin's St. Patrick's Cathedral March 19, but that seems only a footnote to the "Xerox Night Parade," the "Norah's Ark, Community Pageant," and the Trinidadian-style "Masquerade 2000." ♣

Secured hot-pink and white balloons sway almost imperceptibly in clusters. The glorious, triumphant notes of the Pachelbel's "Canon" and Purcell's "Trumpet Voluntary" resonate among the congregation. I am immersed in the absolute joy and beauty of this familiar and much-loved music. The unexpected notes of "Silent Night" take on new meaning for me. Tears begin to escape and roll down my cheeks.

Those of us who have gathered here today have not come to witness a wedding, as the music might indicate, nor have we come to celebrate Christmas now long past. We have come to celebrate the life of a faith-filled Christian.

For the last few weeks my friend Carol and I exchanged e-mail messages as her illness advanced with a furious intensity. One day she wrote that she knew she would be going "home" soon. I asked her to pray for me when she was finally enveloped in the glory of God. She quickly replied: "Oh, how I love those words! 'Enveloped in the glory of God.'"

The minister sadly covers the casket with the pall. Carol was his friend as well. I wonder what it must be like to be enveloped in glory. The age-old questions about the meaning of life and death that we ponder at funerals fill my mind and imagination.

Then I notice a blue banner, hanging on the wall at the foot of Carol's shrouded coffin and read the words, "God of Glory." Obviously, the banner has been suspended there the whole time, but only now does the message speak to my heart. I smile. We can count on God.

Here in the midst of balloons, music, grieving family and friends, I have experienced a moment of grace — a glimpse of glory that I know will sustain me in some future hour.

In this week's first reading I feel Abraham's relief when he sees the animal for sacrifice in the thicket. I am in awe of his great faith, for he has discovered that the Lord's presence is often palpable if we are able to open our eyes to the unexpected — the God of glory. ♣

"Mission to Mars" (Touchstone)

Sleek space fantasy set in 2020 when four NASA astronauts (led by Tim Robbins and Gary Sinese) head for Mars to rescue the sole survivor (Don Cheadle) of the first manned landing after a catastrophic but unexplained event on the barren red planet. Director Brian De Palma crafts an intriguing, visually alluring if quite fanciful tale of aliens and their connection to human life on Earth. Brief sci-fi violence and mild profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Erin Brockovich" (Universal)

Fact-based tale of an earthy single mom (Julia Roberts) who persuades her litigator boss (Albert Finney) to pursue a class-action suit against a major California utility for contaminating local waters. As directed by Steven Soderbergh, Roberts vividly captures a foul-mouthed but good-hearted woman who makes something of herself in doggedly seeking justice for families beset by cancers. An implied affair, some profanity and much rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Ninth Gate" (Artisan)

Atmospheric but dramatically dull satanic thriller in which a venal rare books dealer (Johnny Depp) becomes entangled in a demonic web while trying to authenticate a centuries-old book supposedly authored by Lucifer. Despite sumptuous cinematography, director Roman Polanski's nonsensical plot goes nowhere with its callous characters intent on summoning the devil to their midst. Devil-worshiping theme, intermittent violence, a few sexual situations with nudity and minimal profanity and rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope says priests called to lead by example

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Priests are called to lead their congregations by example, including the example of going to confession, Pope John Paul II said.

"The priest himself, minister of God's forgiveness, needs to receive this forgiveness in a spirit of faith, humility and profound trust," the pope told priests from the Diocese of Rome.

The priests' March 9 audience, an annual appointment with the bishop of Rome, was expanded to become the Jubilee for Roman Clergy and included a procession into St. Peter's Basilica, a penitential prayer service and individual confessions before the pope arrived.

Priests must be the first in their parish to heed the Lenten call to conversion, repentance, charity and reconciliation, the pope said.

Going to confession, he said, is a "great help for overcoming indulgence in those forms of self-justification, part of the mentality and culture of our day, which make one lose a sense of sin and prevent one from experiencing the consoling joy of God's forgiveness."

Although it is easy for a priest to get buried under a pile of pastoral commitments, he must not forget the importance for his personal and spiritual life of fostering a sense of communion with the bishop and his brother priests, the pope said.

Pope John Paul said supporting continuing education programs, reaching out to priests who are undergoing difficulties, offering support and friendship to elderly priests, "openness to dialogue and meeting those who have left the priesthood" all demonstrate a commitment to "the ways of communion and reconciliation."

"A united and harmonious presbyterate able to work together is a strong witness for the faithful and multiplies the effectiveness of ministry," the pope said.

Nothing can replace personal witness and contact, Pope John Paul said.

Even if they need to rely on using lay missionaries and foreign priests studying in Rome, he said, parishes should continue the practice of visiting every home in the parish boundaries during Lent.

"The visit reinforces the sense of belonging of many people who frequently live at the parish's margins" and are awaiting a sign that someone is willing to listen, to offer friendship and to help them rediscover their faith, the pope said.

Pope John Paul said the priests must make a special, personal effort to reach out "to families in difficulty, those who are estranged from the church and those who have serious problems of faith or morals."

The Holy Year, he said, "offers everyone the possibility of being listened to, accepted and encouraged to find the path of reconciliation with the Lord and with their brothers and sisters, even where everything seems lost or irreversible."

The Season of Lent

FATHER TERRANCE HYLAND, O.S.A.
Guest Columnist

Living Lent is a matter of attitude

Several years ago, I was visiting patients in a Philadelphia-area hospital when I heard someone call out my name from a hospital room. I went in and found a young man named Ted whom I had taught in high school a few years before. Ted was wrapped in bandages, punctured by tubes and surrounded by electronic equipment. He had been in a car accident and had been told by doctors that he would most likely never walk again.

Ted surprised me by saying, "You know something, Father, I think they're wrong! I think I will walk again because I have a good attitude. Everything in life is a matter of attitude!"

As Ted's slow recovery continued, I visited him frequently at the rehab center. One day he grinned and pulled the blankets up from over his feet. He wiggled his toes and said, "See that, Father; everything in life is a matter of attitude!"

Shortly after that I was transferred to another state, and I never saw or heard from Ted again. I never found out if he was able to walk or not. To me, that's not so important. What is important is that Ted learned a wonderful life lesson. Everything in life is a matter of attitude. And so, I believe that wherever life takes him, Ted will be okay because he has learned and lived the importance of attitude.

As we continue living our Lent, it's helpful to remember that Lent is about attitude. It's about the way we look at life, our relationships and our circumstances. As the prophet Joel reminds us, Lent is about our interior disposition: "Even now, says the Lord, return to me with your whole heart, with fasting and weeping and mourning: rend your hearts, not your garments, and return to the Lord your God."

We sometimes use the expression "wholehearted" to refer to living life with exuberance. When God invites us to return to Him with our "whole hearts," the invitation implies an exuberant response. We are invited to "put God first." A friend of mine likes to compare this generous attitude with what he calls EGO — Easing God Out!

St. Paul describes a whole-hearted response to God's invitation in even more challenging words: "Your attitude must be that of Christ Jesus ... who empties himself ... and became obedient to the point of death — even death on a cross." Such is the extravagant love of God for us! In Sunday's second reading, Paul describes this generosity as the foolishness of God that is wiser than human wisdom and the weakness of God that is stronger than human strength.

The lesson of the cross teaches us that Lent is about self-emptying. It is about imitating the extravagant generosity of God in our relationships. It is about the foolishness of the cross that encompasses the power of God and the wisdom of God. In short, it is about attitude — an attitude rooted in the self-emptying of Christ.

My friend Ted was right. Everything in life is a matter of attitude. This is true of life, and it is true of Lent. Once again this spring, we have a graced opportunity for an "attitude adjustment."

Lent: Invitation to create an ever-green world

When I was very young, it was clear to me that Lent had a specific meaning. It was the time to chalk up sacrifices, like grades on a report card, so I would not forget how flawed a person I was.

Even as I got older, I thought this was solely a time to think about my mortality, my destiny of ashes. I thought the importance of Lent was to keep the reminder of my death ever fresh, and so I kept my body uncomfortable with self-denials and morning risings at 5:30 in order to make it to 6:30 Masses.

Lent for me was colored purple and fringed with black. The effect of the 40 days of Lent in the earlier years of my life was to put a focus on me, my soul and my salvation.

Then gradually, well into my adulthood, I found that I had misinterpreted the road signs from Ash Wednesday to Easter. Lent wasn't deep purple; it was green, teeming with life. It wasn't suffering and death; it was love and hope.

That required a readjustment in my thinking. In my mind Christmas was the season of love and hope. The coming of God as an innocent baby was a natural for love-thoughts. Knowing that the baby who had come was the one who would jolt us into a new human and joyful way of interpreting life added to the excitement.

Then Lent came, with its Good Friday uneasy love, and we got so caught up in the mourning that we shrouded the impact of what had happened. In his preaching Jesus had said, "Greater love than this no man has, that he lay down his life for his friend."

Christmas was the promise that Jesus would transform the world with his love, and it was peaches and cream. But Good Friday was the fulfillment of the promise. Without Good Friday, Christmas would have been just another day on which another Jewish male child had been born. It would have gone quite unnoticed by history.

Unless we embrace the fact that Lent is about Good Friday, and Good Friday set the model for what it means to truly love, then we're stuck in the deep purple. Jesus defined love in terms of what he was willing to give of himself for another. And on Good Friday he showed us that he set no limit on his love.

Strange, how we all yearn to be loved like that, completely, perfectly, no conditions attached. Strange, how difficult it is for us to love others that way.

I think Lent is the time for reflecting on love, as demonstrated by Jesus, by whatever method you choose: fasting, morning Mass or volunteering in a soup kitchen. Lent is the time for trying a little harder to say yes to his invitation to make this an ever-green world.

We welcome your letters and comments.

Missing Erma

"When I stand before God at the end of my life, I would hope that I would not have a single bit of talent left and could say, "I used everything you gave me." So said Erma Bombeck, the housewife-turned-columnist, who spent the last 32 years of her life helping us laugh at ourselves and the everyday routines of family life.

"Too old for a paper route and too young for Social Security," she started to write with such engaging humor that her columns quickly syndicated to 700 newspapers, and her books, like "The Grass is Always Greener over the Septic Tank," became instant best sellers.

I do not belong to her official fan club, but I do miss Erma. Whether on TV or in print, she consistently taught me how to find humor in the people and values we cherish without ridiculing them. And there is a huge difference: Ridicule picks on and ultimately discriminates against an individual or group for the sake of a heartless laugh. Genuine humor has heart and actually celebrates our shared human response to life's unending incongruities.

Enjoy a few samples of Erma's vision and feel the bond between humor and humanity:

"Never go to a doctor whose office plants have died."

"Marriage has no guarantees. If that's what you're looking for, go live with a car battery."

"Spend at least one Mother's Day with your respective mothers before you decide on marriage. If a man gives his mother a gift certificate for a flu shot, dump him."

"Giving birth is little more than a set of muscular contractions granting passage of a child. Then the mother is born."

"The age of your children is a key factor in how quickly you are served in a restaurant. We once had a waiter in Canada who said, "Could I get you your check?" and we answered, "How about the menu first."

"Good kids are like sunsets. We take them for granted. Every evening they disappear. Most parents never imagine how hard they try to please us and how miserable they feel when they think they have failed."

After she found out she was dying of cancer, Erma wrote: "If I had my life to live over, I would have invited friends over to dinner even if the carpet was stained or the sofa faded. I would have taken time to listen to my grandfather ramble about his youth. I would have cried and laughed less while watching television — and more while watching life.

"I would have gone to bed when I was sick instead of pretending the earth would go into a holding pattern if I weren't there for the day. I would have sat on the lawn with my children and not worried about grass stains. But mostly, given another shot at life, I would seize every minute ... look at it and really see it . . . live it and never give it back."

Thanks, Erma. Your words still make me laugh at and cherish my humanity at the same time. I think it's safe to say you really did use everything God gave you.

I hope all of us will be able to say the same.

Economy of Faith

Fallowness: A spiritual alternative

Three images help capture a daily part of our economic life. How many times do we see a car circling the mall parking lot looking for a place? How about a person using a cell phone in a store, on the street or in a car? And what about those vibrations we feel from a car stopped beside us at a light rocking with the sound blasting from customized speakers? We are a buying people, a busy people, and frequently, a boisterous people. In the process our spirits become dulled by bargains, distracted by phone calls and deadened by noise.

In the midst of this self-imposed perpetual motion, one biblical theme especially helps us discover ourselves and find the path to peace. The theme points out a direction rather than a step by step formula. Yet, it contains the potential to change individuals and influence the way we do business.

"Rising very early before dawn, Jesus left and went off to a deserted place, where he prayed" (Mk 1:35.) Evidently, Jesus occasionally had to withdraw from the demanding crowds, from the stress of his enemies, even from his own inner circle. In silence Jesus entered the mystery of Self and God. At rest Jesus could converse with his Father while he let his body-spirit lie fallow. Fallowness, the key biblical theme, represents a movement from distracting noise to peaceful solitude.

In Leviticus 25, fallowness applies to the land. The land must rest every so many years in order to remain fertile. Theologian Maria Harris reminds us we are "dust and breath" (Gn 2:7) and allowing our "human land" to lie fallow, brings balance and perspective to work and life.

In contrast, the business world continually bombards us with music in shops and restaurants and commercial announcements from in-store loud speakers. TV and radio have become so common they play as background noise even when people hold a conversation. Those watching prime time TV hear more than 20 commercials an hour telling them what to buy, invest and think.

The antidote to noise pollution comes with fallowness, allowing time for solitude and prayer. In everyday life it means making choices: less TV, fewer commercials, perhaps driving with the radio off. Biblical fallowness allows us to "waste time" with others building healthy relationships, encourages a day off and time for a hobby so our "dust and breath" can rest and our spirit can heal.

Since few can easily find the flexibility to take time for solitude, fallowness begs a communal effort. Mothers of young children might need a program like Mom's Day Off to structure their time for fallowness. Married couples might consider Marriage Encounter or periodic retreats. Families could designate the Sabbath as a special day together with few outside activities.

Fallowness demands some structural changes, as well, since the business world

The Eastern Star and the Masons

Q. My long-time friend is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and has invited me to join. I know from your past columns that the Catholic Church still officially prohibits men from joining the Masons. But what is the position on women's auxiliary groups? I'd like to join, but frankly would not want to do so if it is forbidden by my church.

A. As you say, the prohibition against Catholic men joining the Masonic orders remains in existence, even in our country.

However, without getting too technical, there is a principal of church law which states that any church regulation which restricts the right of a person must be interpreted strictly.

That is legal language for saying that such regulations must not be extended to cases other than those actually expressed in them (Canon 36).

Applied to your question, this means that the ban on joining the Masons means just that and nothing more. Thus, the restriction would not apply to the Order of the Eastern Star, which is an adjunct group, not a formal part of the Masons. In fact, as is well known I believe, women are not even eligible for membership in Freemasonry.

The same would hold for the other two major auxiliary groups related to the Masons, Job's Daughters for girls, and DeMolay for boys.

Other concerns naturally need to be weighed in making such a decision. As a 1985 background report for the American bishops noted, for example, "Although the possibility of scandal may exist, the fact remains that these women and young people do not swear Masonic oaths and are not considered Masons."

"Other Catholic Churches"

Q. Not long ago you discussed intercommunion with "other Catholic Churches." You called them Eastern churches, but what are they? This seems to deny what I thought we always believed, that there is one Catholic Church. Who are these others? Are they really Catholic?

A. In the creed we recite together every Sunday, we do proclaim belief in "one, holy, Catholic and apostolic" church. Perhaps most Catholics are like yourself. They are unaware that there are 22 Catholic churches in the world who profess that faith. One of them, and by far the largest, is the Latin, or Roman, church.

They all have the same sacraments, profess the same basic Catholic doctrines and believe in the primacy of the bishop of Rome in the universal church.

The other 21 churches are called Eastern primarily because they trace their origins to the eastern part of the Roman Empire, which later became the Byzantine Empire. Many of their traditions and customs, therefore, reflect quite different cultures than the primarily Western European cultures which have heavily influenced the Roman church.

In other words, the differences go beyond simply different ways of celebrating the Eucharist. Each of them has its own rich heritage of feasts, devotions, church structure and other elements of faith life which deserve to be part of the continuing life of the church.

As the Vatican representative to an assembly of these churches said several years ago, the reason for the existence of the Eastern Catholic churches is that they might contribute their valuable and unique gifts to the universal church.

of the many children who are involved."

There are 19 churches currently in the network with 12 host churches, which actually house the families, and seven support churches who help with cooking or supplying the necessary 50 to 60 volunteers a week, over 1,000 volunteers total, at each church. Those include A.M.E., Baptist, Catholic, Episcopal, Church of Christ, Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran and Evangelical area churches, who all are working jointly to help homeless families.

"The ecumenical aspect is important because poverty and homelessness is an equal opportunity disease. Most major religions want to serve and assist the poor," said Roberts-Wyatt. "This transcends religious differences because our common ground is helping unsheltered families."

With the network's 15-passenger van purchased with the help of a local synagogue, volunteers transport the families from the Pathways Shelter of the Greensboro Urban Ministry during the day to the host church in the evening. Dinner is prepared, and the volunteers counsel and interact with the families or help the children with their homework.

The families sleep in either the parish center, if the church has one, or faith formation classrooms. "We try to make the sleeping areas as homey as possible. This is not the old mentality of a shelter with just a cot in the basement," explained Roberts-Wyatt.

Breakfast is also served before the residents leave for work, the children go to school or the others are driven back to the Pathways Shelter.

The average length of stay for an individual family is 30 to 90 days, and the network can get most families into homes of their own within two months. Not only do they help with temporary housing but the GIHN also helps with debt counseling and management, budgeting, job-training skills and educational support for the children, explained Roberts-Wyatt.

"We are able to work with them intensely since there are four to five families. We try to give them a really good start in their own homes with donated furniture, clothes, food and other things. We provide food and shelter so that they can save their money to afford their own homes," she said.

Patti Ross, the GIHN coordinator for St. Pius X Catholic Church in Greensboro, became involved with the network after a call from Bergen. St. Pius X Church has hosted 11 families since then with the help of their support church Bethel A.M.E. Church in Greensboro.

"I have seen this work, and we have had our eyes opened," said Ross. "Hopefully, other outreach programs will come out of this to change Greensboro for the better." ♣

Catholic group condemns desecration of Montreal cathedral

By ART BABYCH
Catholic News Service

OTTAWA (CNS) — The desecration of a Montreal cathedral brought condemnation from the Catholic Civil Rights League and left a national newspaper wondering why there had not been more public outrage.

"These acts are those of terrorists, deliberately planned and executed on the people and property of Mary Queen of the World Cathedral, and those responsible should be charged to the full extent of the law," said Thomas Langan, president of the civil rights league.

A group of vandals burst into the cathedral March 8, disturbing several afternoon worshippers. Witnesses said the group shouted anti-Catholic slogans, spray painted "Neither God Nor Master" on the altar, littered the church with condoms and sanitary napkins and tried to overturn the tabernacle.

The demonstration reportedly was organized by a group of feminist activists opposed to patriarchy and the Catholic Church's stance against abortion.

Seven people were arrested and later released to appear in court on several charges, but a police official said hate crime charges would not be laid against the group. Such charges apply only to spreading hatred against specific groups, not for voicing issues of public concern or for expressing their opinions, said the official.

Langan disagreed, saying, "This was nothing less than a hate crime that meets the legal requirements for the extreme form of vilification."

Similar desecration of a mosque or synagogue would be "a national outrage and would be energetically opposed by the Catholic Civil Rights League," said Langan. "Catholics should be treated like anyone else." ♣ thrives on activity and noise. Americans now work 163 hours more each year than they did 25 years ago, and they spend 10 to 12 hours fewer each week with their children. Estimates range between 8 percent to 17 percent of the work force work longer hours than they desire because of employer demands. Fallowness has a justice dimension. In order to have time for fallowness, people need more flex time, less overtime, and above all, a living wage so they can avoid a mandatory second job.

With the wheels of commerce moving ever faster by office electronics, fallowness represents a salutary way of refreshing the human spirit and keeping it connected with the divine.

St. Leo the Great Church spreads Mardi Gras spirit

By SUSAN deGUZMAN
Correspondent

WINSTON-SALEM — Beads, balloons, games and prizes were all part of the festivities for Mardi Gras this year at St. Leo the Great Church. Hosted by the St. Theresa Guild for the third year in a row, many parishioners gathered for this fun-filled family event March 7 — the day before Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent.

A new parishioner, Lyann Church, attended with her two sons and two nieces. She expressed her fondness for St. Leo the Great Church, noting that it seemed to be a very family-oriented parish. "Everyone seemed to have a lot of fun," she said. "This is something we can do for the family while helping them learn Catholic traditions. It's a little party before Lent."

Mardi Gras — a French term meaning "Fat Tuesday" — is characterized by parties, parades and other festivities in the days leading up to Lent. Many Latin American and European countries call this merry time "carnival." New Orleans, Rio de Janiero, Nice and Cologne are among the cities with the best-known celebrations.

At St. Leo the Great Church, Mardi Gras was celebrated in a spirit of fun, too — and with a variety of food. A light supper was served and dessert came in the form of game prizes. The "Cake Walk," a game of guessing the number to match that on the spinning wheel, gave entire cakes to winners. Parishioner Gwen Schweighart reported that there were at least 25 homemade cakes baked for this game.

Several children reported the "Cake Walk" to be their favorite part of the Mardi Gras celebration. Said third-grader Adam Morgan, "I almost won the 'Cake Walk.' My Mom did. I don't know what the cake was. It was brown."

Katherine Allen, a 10-year-old, shared, "Last year my family won three cakes, and I was really looking forward to winning one again, but I didn't. I played the 'Cake Walk' as many times as I had tickets for."

Cupcakes by the dozens were also made for the "King Cake" game, which represents a traditional form played in New Orleans. Kathy Bryan, co-president of the Guild and event organizer, explained that those interested bought cupcakes to try their luck at finding a plastic baby inside (and because they looked delicious). If they found one, they were allowed to reach into the paper maché "King Crown" for a prize. In addition, finding a winning cupcake was supposed to bring a year of good fortune.

St. Theresa Guild co-presidents Maggie Henning and Kathy Bryan of St. Leo the Great Church, shown at right with some of the attending children, organized the Mardi Gras celebration and festivities held March 7.

The children played a number of other games, including a duck pond, a fish pond, basketball and face painting. Trinket prizes were given to participants of these booths.

David Bruce, a third-grader, shared that bingo was his favorite game. He said, "I played about five times. I wanted to win a golf chip game for my Dad." Kody Kuhn, his classmate, agreed that bingo was his favorite: "I almost won, and I kept on trying and trying."

Maggie Henning, also co-president of the St. Theresa Guild and planner of this event, expressed, "We keep the theme pretty light each year." Several substantial prizes were given away by raffle, too: First prize was a television set, second prize was a Mardi Gras Special Edition Barbie, and third prize was a homemade quilt with matching pillow shams.

A new parishioner, Lyann Church, attended with her two sons and two nieces. She expressed her fondness for St. Leo the Great Church, noting that it seemed to be a very family-oriented parish. "Everyone seemed to have a lot of fun," she said. "This is something we can do for the family while helping them learn Catholic traditions. It's a little party before Lent." ♣

Philadelphia prepares to honor a saint of its own

By LOU BALDWIN
Catholic News Service

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — During a Mass celebrating the feast day of Blessed Katharine Drexel, Cardinal Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia praised the woman who will soon be named a saint as "a brilliant example of unselfish and unconditional love."

During the March 3 Mass, the cardinal announced that Mother Drexel, a native of Philadelphia, would most likely be canonized on Oct. 1. That date was confirmed by the pope during a March 10 meeting announcing the upcoming canonization of Mother Drexel along with 120 martyrs killed in China and a Spanish nun who was killed in 1912.

At a news conference following the Mass, Cardinal Bevilacqua explained that Oct. 1 isn't the day Mother Drexel becomes a saint, but "an admission that she already is one. She will be a canonized saint."

The canonization process for Mother Drexel started 36 years ago in Philadelphia. She was beatified in 1988 and has since been credited with two miracles through her intercession for two people suffering hearing disorders.

"The miracle part is the easy part," the cardinal said. Saints must have led "heroic lives, not just ordinary holy lives but heroically holy."

In his homily, the cardinal spoke of Mother Drexel's devotion to the Eucharist. With some saints, he said, this devotion "was seen in the hours that they spent in contemplation and adoration of the Eucharist. For others the reality of Jesus' presence in the Eucharist led them to share his way of living and loving and therefore be truly like the bread that was broken in order to be distributed to those in need."

He said Mother Drexel "seemed to fuse these two ways of understanding Jesus in the Eucharist. For her the commandment to love God and to love one's neighbor were interdependent and harmoniously fused in the consecrated bread and wine."

Mother Drexel, who was born in 1885 and died in 1955, inherited a large fortune when her father died. She spent the money building and supporting schools and missions for African-Americans and Native Americans with the congregation she founded, the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament.

More than a half-dozen church communities in North Carolina are among the recipients of Mother Drexel's benevolence. In 1904, Mother Drexel visited Belmont Abbey.

Cardinal Bevilacqua pointed out that with the many obstacles that Mother Drexel and her sisters faced, they often prayed before the Blessed Sacrament.

It was only after ill health forced her retirement from active ministry that she was finally able to do what she always wanted to do, he said, "to spend her hours in adoration of the Blessed Sacrament."

"For her, the Blessed Sacrament was a living, vibrant reality," he added.

Among those present during the Mass honoring Mother Drexel were Robert Gutherman, whose 1974 cure of a serious ear infection and hearing impairment was the miracle approved for Mother Drexel's 1988 beatification, and Amy Wall, whose 1994 cure of deafness was accepted as Mother Drexel's most recent miracle.

Sister Monica Loughlin, president of the Blessed Sacrament Sisters, warmly welcomed Gutherman and the Wall family, all of whom have played an important part in the cause of Mother Drexel.

CNS PHOTO FROM CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES

African-American and Native American children are depicted with Mother Katharine Drexel in a painting. Pope John Paul II, recognizing a second miracle attributed to the American nun, cleared the way for her canonization. She will become the second U.S.-born saint.

But she also stressed that Mother Drexel's message is "not one of miracles but of mission."

Her message speaks of quiet, simple, everyday action that contributes to the accomplishment of goals," Sister Loughlin said. "Her vision is a long way from being accomplished."

"Let us resolve today to honor Katharine Drexel through our prayer and through our celebration," she added, "especially through our work for social justice."

Philadelphia's African-American community was well represented in the overflow congregation and also in the ceremony. Chief Buffy Red Feather Brown, representing Native Americans, led the Blessing of the Four Winds.

Among those representing the Drexel family was Cornelia Biddle, a descendant of Anthony Drexel, who was Mother Drexel's uncle and founder of Drexel University in Philadelphia.

"I am in awe of this woman," said Biddle, adding that Mother Drexel's miracle was the way she had lived her life for the "bettering of humanity."

During her lifetime, Mother Drexel helped establish some 63 schools, including Xavier University of Louisiana, the first Catholic university in the United States for African-Americans. It is still operated by her order.

Following the announcement of her upcoming canonization, Xavier University issued a statement describing their school as Mother Drexel's "very first miracle." ♣

Lent in the Lives of Youth

Retreat reminds students about Lent's significance

By Alesha M. Price
Staff Writer

HUNTERSVILLE — Luke 4: 1-15 — The passage about Jesus' forty days of temptation in the desert was the central focus of the Lenten Retreat 2000 for high school youth. The retreat, entitled "Into the Wild, Led by the Spirit ... Out From the Wild, Armed with the Spirit" was held at St. Mark Church during the weekend of March 17-19. It served as a meeting place for diocesan youth from various backgrounds to reflect on Lent and its meaning in the lives of Catholics.

The weekend consisted of small and large group activities and presentations from the team leaders based on prayer, fasting, charity, almsgiving and sacrifice. The sessions were mixed with journal writing, prayer services given by each of the six smaller groups, arts and crafts and games.

"We focused on temptation with Lent being our own personal wilderness time. For some young people, the challenges of Lent are harder than for others because they are growing up in today's culture, which brings its own temptations," said Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry. "This is a means for the young church to enter more fully into the Lenten experience by pulling out of the fast lane and entering into Jesus' life and responding to the call of Lent to conversion in preparation of Easter."

One of the activities required the students to find pictures of worldly temptations in magazines to paste on one side of a card with a related Bible passage on the other side.

Sixteen-year-old Jezrael Hood from Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte said that activity was one of the parts that he liked. "I am exposed to many temptations in my life, but I tend to reject them. You have to in order to remain close to God."

John Robichaux, the Office of Youth Ministry event coordinator, said that the other teens seemed to understand the overall theme and to grasp the point of the activities. "This group has been excellent, and they are one of the more energetic and largest groups I have seen, with 38 participants. They have been really outgoing toward each other and the topics."

As the weekend progressed, the teens' feelings about the other participants and their roles as young Catholics also seemed to move forward.

Matthew Newton, 14, from St. Jude Church in Sapphire Valley was skeptical about the retreat. "It has turned out better than I expected. I've met a lot of new people, and it has been nice to hang out with others communicating about church and our personal lives with people other than my friends at home. We have formed a kind of trust with each other."

Hood agreed, "This retreat has brought me closer to God because of the teachings I have learned. I realize that seeing people who are less fortunate and turning your back is like turning your back to God."

The retreatants also took part in an arts and crafts activity where they constructed banners depicting the Stations of the Cross for a Saturday afternoon presentation to the group.

The activity that many of the teens favorably commented about was the World Hunger Banquet, which had them separated into three groups — first, second and third worlds — representative of the world's population and given food accordingly. The first world was served a full meal, and the second world had vegetables and an adequate supply of water in cups.

However, those from the third world, the group with the most people, were given bread and water, without cups. As in society, many in the three different groups reacted in the same way as the general population.

"The third world folks were complaining and upset and trying to steal food. Eventually, some from the second world gave their food away, while those from the first world watched, which was really interesting," explained Robichaux. "One girl from the first world said that she wanted to help but felt like she couldn't because no one in her group acted."

Matthew Houghland, 16, from St. Mark Church in Huntersville said that the activity helped to demonstrate what the world is actually like, but on a larger scale, he thought more people would probably give more of what they had.

Other activities included a presentation on Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane and the crucifixion and a silent reflection time, rosary prayer and closing Mass.

Sixteen-year-old Hanna Gordola, a parishioner from St. Stephen Church in Elkin, said, "I liked being with people I've never been with before, and it was nice to reflect on my religion and how it affects me and other people. It is hard because I come from a predominately white neighborhood with mostly Protestant families, and in the Phillipines, most of the people are Catholic. So, it was nice being with other Catholics from

Cardinal announces opening of Dorothy Day's sainthood cause

NEW YORK (CNS) — Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York announced "with great joy" that the Vatican had approved opening the cause for canonization of Dorothy Day, the Catholic Worker leader who died in 1980. "With this approval comes the title Servant of God," he wrote in his March 16 column in his archdiocesan weekly newspaper, Catholic New York "What a gift to the church in New York and to the church universal this is!" On the same day, Bishop Joseph A. Fiorenza of Galveston-Houston, Texas, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, issued a statement calling the Vatican approval "a blessed moment for the church in the United States."

Jewish, Christian leaders laud papal apology

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Pope John Paul II's jubilee-year apology for wrongs committed by Catholics has drawn strong praise from U.S. religious leaders including two national rabbinical groups. In a joint statement the Central Conference of American Rabbis (Reform) and the Rabbinical Assembly (Conservative) hailed the pope's "inspiring leadership" and "courageous strides in working to heal the historic breach that has separated our communities." In a separate statement the Executive Committee of the Rabbinic Committee for Interreligious Dialogue called the pope's expression of sorrow a "revolutionary and epic-making confession."

Only General Assembly can review Vatican U.N. status, says official

UNITED NATIONS (CNS) — Kofi Annan, secretary-general of the United Nations, cannot conduct the review of the Vatican's U.N. status that Catholics for a Free Choice has called for, according to a spokeswoman at U.N. headquarters in New York. Myriam Dessables, a staff member in the office of the spokesman for the secretary-general, told Catholic News Service in mid-March that such a review could be conducted only if it was formally requested by the General Assembly. So far, no government has taken or proposed any action that could lead to the voting of such a request.

Mass suicide in Uganda

A crucifix is found outside the prayer house at the compound where some 500 people died in a mass suicide in Kanungu, Uganda, March 19. Those found burned to death were said to be members of a Christian cult "Movement for the Restoration of the Ten Commandments of God." Some of the cult leaders were former Catholic priests and nuns.

AFL-CIO, bishops to collaborate on amnesty, immigration reforms

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops and the AFL-CIO will collaborate on efforts to reform U.S. immigration policy, including a new amnesty program for illegal immigrants. At a March 15 press briefing, Los Angeles Cardinal Roger M. Mahony, AFL-CIO President John Sweeney, and Bishop Nicholas A. DiMarzio of Camden, N.J., announced that the two organizations will work together to seek fundamental changes in U.S. immigration policies. The church-union collaboration will start by coordinating with like-minded organizations and establishing a core agenda, said Bishop DiMarzio, who chairs the bishops' Migration Committee. "Obviously, a broader coalition needs to be developed."

English text recounts Romero's anger at curial stonewalling

WASHINGTON (CNS) — An English translation of a book about slain Salvadoran Archbishop Oscar Romero recounts his anger at being in Rome to meet Pope John Paul II, then being stonewalled by Vatican officials. The story is one of several vignettes in "Oscar Romero: Memories in Mosaic," by Maria Lopez Vigil, a Cuban-born journalist and editor of Envio, the Jesuit magazine on Central American affairs. The book, a translation of the Spanish work published in 1993, was released in mid-March, just before the 20th anniversary of the archbishop's death. The account is based on Lopez's interview with Archbishop Romero in Madrid May 11, 1979, as he returned to San Salvador from Rome.

'Roe' abortion case figures ask courts to reconsider rulings

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The women in whose names the Supreme Court legalized abortion in 1973 are asking the courts to reconsider those rulings on the grounds that their participation was coerced and exploited and that many women today have abortions under similar coercive circumstances. At a March 15 press conference, Norma McCorvey and Sandra Cano Saucedo said they are making their appeal in connection with a New Jersey class-action lawsuit by women who have unsuccessfully tried to sue doctors who performed abortions on them without first obtaining informed and voluntary consent. That case, Santa Marie vs. Whitman, follows attempts by three women who had abortions to sue different doctors and clinics for wrongful death of their babies.

Ten convicted for trespassing at School of Americas protests

COLUMBUS, Ga. (CNS) — A 70-year-old Catholic nun and nine others have been convicted of trespassing during protests last fall at the U.S. Army School of the Americas. Nine people who joined last November's 12,000-person protest aimed at shutting down the military training program at Fort Benning, Ga., were convicted March 10 and face sentences of up to six months in prison and fines of up to $5,000. A 10th protester who also engaged in a separate December protest was also found guilty in a March 13 trial. He faces a possible sentence of 12 months in prison and $10,000 in fines.

Priest charged with murder of Guatemalan auxiliary bishop

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — A Guatemalan prosecutor formally charged a diocesan priest with the murder of Auxiliary Bishop Juan Gerardi Conedera of Guatemala City. Police officers delivered the charges March 10 to Father Mario Orantes in a city hospital, where he is recovering from a chronic ailment. Father Orantes lived in the same house as Bishop Gerardi and claimed to be the first person to find his body April 26, 1998. Under Guatemalan law, the charge of "murder" covers direct and indirect involvement in a crime, said Neri Rodenas, director of the archdiocesan human rights office.

Glenmary priest visits with economic justice message

By JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — "If you want to be a holy and wonderful person, you've got to look after your economic life and the economic lives of those around you," Father John S. Rausch told attendees at "Putting Your Faith to Work: Transforming Society," a workshop held March 18 at St. Eugene Catholic Church.

It's all about choice, Father Rausch said, and the choice should affirm human dignity, opt for the poor and involve community. Father Rausch, a Glenmary priest, has organized three worker-owned business in central Appalachia; taught at the Appalachian Ministries Educational Resource Center in Berea, Ky.; and has organized the Mountain Management Institute to serve the business needs of Appalachian cooperatives. His column, "Economy of Faith," appears in 22 diocesan newspapers, including The Catholic News & Herald.

The marketplace drives everything, including how people regard each other. "In the marketplace," Father Rausch said, "your worth equals your wealth. What happens in the marketplace when you're not strong, smart or beautiful?"

Even when people can work, their income is often insufficient to meet their needs. "The global economy should be called the one-third economy because only one-third of the world can participate," Father Rausch said. "The two-thirds can sew my pants, but they don't make enough to buy what they produce. When you are in the marketplace, the wants of the rich bid against the needs of the poor. We send a message into the marketplace if we continue to consume luxury goods. As a consumer, my choice of lifestyle has an impact on the economic system."

Father Rausch, who has a master's degree in economics from Notre Dame, said that economics is based on scarcity. "It also is called the science of choice," he said. "You can have a standing forest or cut it down and make tables and chairs. Economics also is a study of power. A company can devastate a small community."

He suggested that people ask themselves how much they need, as opposed to how much they want. "We should all have enough, in order to be more," he said. "When you have enough, you can dispose yourself to grow. If you don't have enough, you can't function well and your mind will always be on yourself.

"The marketplace is not a dogma, but it is a device. It's wonderful, but it falls down. If it was so great, there wouldn't be 44 million people without health insurance or one out of five children in the United States who are malnourished. I'm not saying throw out the marketplace, but let's recognize that it's limited."

Father John S. Rausch chats with attendees at his workshop on social justice held March 18 at St. Eugene Catholic Church.

In the Old Testament, idolatry was the greatest sin; the New Testament equates only one thing with it, "the greed that is idolatry" (Colossians 4:5), because, Father Rausch said, "you are taking a part of creation and making it your god."

We use the "poor you will always have with you" (John 12:8) as an excuse not to do anything," Father Rausch said. "Mary was in a stance of listening, so she could hear. We have to be careful who we are listening to. We have to hear what the poor are saying. What's important, more toys for me, or enough for everyone?"

There are other things we can do besides living simpler lives, he said. "Invest yourself in a group that has the purpose of making life better for others," he said. He also suggested getting together with friends to work for better conditions for the poor and disadvantaged by forming a mediating structure, "which is one in which each person is heard, but together we have more punch."

That made an impression on the Rev. Beth Glass, a Methodist minister who is director of Transylvania Christian Ministries. "I though it was wonderful," she said, "bringing the issues of the poor to the megastructure so those issues can be heard. And I think about how the poor go home to their houses and we go home to ours, and what could we be doing to bring us together?"

Claudia Blackstock, a parishioner at St. Eugene, also was impressed with the workshop and its focus on social justice. "Sometimes you wonder what you could do," she said. "It's given me a lot to think about."

Father Rausch suggested that the church's social teachings are principles. "Everyone of us has to figure out how to put those principles into play in their own lives. We (the church) have a vision that we can be stewards of creation, have a fulfilling life, and live in community with others because we don't take everything for ourselves." ▼

Carolina's fastest-growing parish kicks off campaign

CHARLOTTE — The Carolinas' fastest-growing parish has announced "Campaign 2000: Give to Touch a Life." St. Matthew Church launches its capital campaign this weekend with a goal of $2.5 million for expanded spiritual, educational and recreational facilities. Plans include a multi-purpose/education center, a daily Mass chapel, and a sports and recreation facility. Landscaped gardens are also in the plans, as are memorial dedications available for parishioners and supporters. St. Matthew Church now has more than 12,000 registered parishioners representing over 4,000 families. Sixty parish ministries address a variety of needs, and five Masses are celebrated each weekend. ▼

Sisters are doing it for themselves

By ALESHA M. PRICE

CHARLOTTE — History is in the making for July of 2001. The city of Charlotte will be the host site for the first national gathering of black women Catholics. Three representatives from the National Black Sisters' Conference (NBSC), sponsor for this summer meeting of the minds, traveled to Charlotte from various places to talk with diocesan officials, hotel staff and other businesses to continue their preliminary preparations for the event.

"In many urban cities, black women are the movers and shakers in the church," explained Sister of Notre Dame de Namur Patricia J. Chappell, president of the NBSC. "There is a hunger on the part of black Catholic women to experience renewal in their own faith and a need to talk about issues specifically related to black women and to bond and celebrate who they are as black and Catholic women."

The event with the theme "Black Catholic Women — Untapped Treasures ... Magnify the Lord" — will take place during the weekend of July 27-29, 2001 at a local hotel with workshops, speakers, performances and vendors. There will be four speakers with five workshops, where participants can choose to attend two of the workshops.

The keynotes are as follows: "The Gift and Genius of Black Women," presented by Franciscan Sister Francesca Thompson, "The State of Black Women in the Catholic Faith," presented by Dr. Diana Hayes, "The Emergence of Black Women in the Catholic Faith," presented by Dominican Sister Jamie Phelps, and "Untapped Treasures Revealed ... Magnify the Lord, presented by Daughter of the Heart of Mary Sister Anita Baird.

The workshops include a focus on solidarity, health and spirituality, with topics including "Sister to Sistah" about building relationships between black Catholic lay women and black Catholic women religious, the link between institutional racism and the link with stress among black women and group witnessing to Jesus' role in the lives of black women.

"What we have found is that black Catholic women have not come together, and we are excited about this and want it to come together," said Carol F. White, co-chairperson of the NBSC Black Women's Project Committee and the campus minister for St. Philip's College in San Antonio, Texas.

One of three programs or committees of the NBSC is the Black Women's Project, where the idea for a national gathering first emerged. The national gathering serves as the culmination of diocesan forums on local levels to identify the reasons for the lack of representation of black women within Catholicism and to work to resolve those issues on local and national levels.

Forums have taken place in Rhode Island, New York, Connecticut, Chicago, Ill., Sumpter, S.C. and St. Paul, Minn. Plans are in the works for similar forums in Boston, Mass., St. Louis, Mo. and Greensboro, N.C. for black Catholic women from the Dioceses of Charlotte and Raleigh.

The idea is to form an on-site committee consisting of women from both dioceses to handle local details, said White.

"We hope to publish the proceedings from the national gathering and possibly a study guide in addition to forming a national black Catholic women's organization that actively promotes change," said Sister Patricia.

The idea for this type of national gathering, for and by black Catholic women, began several years ago, and many strides have taken place. The event had not had the support it needed to take off until NBSC representatives spoke with Bishop William G. Curlin, who suggested having the event in Charlotte and Father Mauricio W. West, who supported the idea.

"I am excited about this national gathering for black Catholic women, and we in the Diocese of Charlotte will do whatever is necessary to ensure that the event is a success. This is significant, not only for diocesan women, but for black Catholic women across the nation," said Father West.

Sister Patricia said, "We are so appreciative and grateful for the invitation from Bishop Curlin to come to Charlotte and for the help and support from Father West."

"The people in Charlotte and the diocesan personnel have been enthusiastic and so willing to offer resources and service to see that this is a success," said Sister of Notre Dame de Namur Martin de Porres Coleman, NBSC treasurer and pastoral minister and care coordinator

According to the mission statement, the NBSC has been in existence since August 1968 and includes black Catholic women religious and lay male and female associates from across the United States. It serves as a center for education and support of black women religious and education in the African-American community and a source for statistical research about black women religious. ▼

Catechists urged to renew faith

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

STATESVILLE — Catechists and parish catechetical leaders from across the Diocese of Charlotte gathered with Bishop William G. Curlin March 18 for a day of reflection at St. Philip the Apostle Church.

The diocesan Office of Faith Formation organized the day to help catechists and parish catechetical leaders be renewed in their faith so that they could be more effective in their day-to-day, teaching and reaching out to others.

The day began with a short prayer service, and it included two talks by Bishop Curlin and a time for silent reflection.

Bishop Curlin's stories illustrated a point that he came back to time and time again during the day: that catechetical leaders have to feel Jesus in their hearts to be effective in teaching others about him.

"When you are really in love, you have to share that love," he said. "When it is real to you, unconsciously, you radiate that love."

"You have the power and the ability to say, 'Let me show you Jesus,'" he said. "The goal of your ministry is to set the world on fire with Christ."

"How do you find that spirit where every day is a good day, whether it's raining or it's sunny?" he asked. "Don't see life as a struggle. Get up each day and say, 'Here I am, Lord. Let's do this together.'"

Bishop Curlin also talked to those gathered about the importance of seeing Christ in every person. "Jesus knew how to reach people where they were," he said. "To do that, we need to know where we are."

He also said that every person has dark times in life, but that prayer helps. "When you bring your weakness, your fears, your brokenness to God, he gives new life," he said. "The world is ours if we believe that God walks the world in us."

Bishop Curlin also stressed the importance of the Eucharist, the sacramental life and reading the Scriptures. "It is important for us to have the Eucharist present in the church," he said. "It's the presence of the Living God. The power of that sacrament is the power to love."

He also suggested spending extra time in reflection before Mass to prepare for receiving Communion. "We should nourish the spirit before the Eucharist so that we hunger for it," he said.

Marie Jordan, a faith formation teacher at the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, talked about what Bishop Curlin had to say. "It just reminded me of what my role is as a faith formation teacher," she said. "I have to go inward and be aware of the presence of Jesus, and pray and hope that the message that is received is influenced by the presence of Jesus."

Ann Marie Bridges, director of faith formation at Christ the King Church in Kings Mountain, talked about the importance of faith renewal for those who teach others about the faith. "Everybody has to be fed in order to feed," she said. "This is something you have to do. You have to go to the source. If I can't feel it, I can't help them to feel it."

Bishop Curlin ended his second talk during the retreat with a challenge to the group. "The hunger is out there for God," he said. "But, do we have the food for the hunger?"

"To be Catholic is to surrender in Jesus, to be so in love with him that you cannot hide the love," he added. "You have the power to do it. (Say every day to God), 'I'm yours.' ▼ different backgrounds."

One of the team leaders, 20-year-old Erin Graves, a junior at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, has participated in prior retreats and is the co-coordinator for the senior high youth group at St. Ann Church in Charlotte. "So many times, especially during the Lenten season, the kids get flack for being Catholic. When they come here, they see that it is O.K. to express their Catholic beliefs. If they can leave here feeling better about themselves and take an active part in the Lenten season, then the rest of the team and I have done our jobs. We try to get them to mature as Catholics, while we are maturing at the same time." ▼

Cardinal O'Connor's absence felt at St. Patrick's Day parade

NEW YORK (CNS) — St. Patrick's Day festivities in New York were marked by cool temperatures, rain and snow, but even more by the absence of the Irish-American who has been a central figure for the past 15 years, Cardinal John J. O'Connor. The cardinal, who has celebrated Mass each year for the patron saint of the New York Archdiocese in the cathedral named for him, and then has stood in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral to greet dignitaries and review the parade that goes up Fifth Avenue, was too weak to leave his residence.

Founder of Catholic teachers' organization dies

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — John Reilly, founding president of the National Association of Catholic School Teachers, died of cancer March 2 at the age of 77. In 1978, he spearheaded the creation of the organization representing lay teachers in Catholic elementary and secondary schools. He continued to lead the organization until his retirement in 1993. Reilly, who initially taught in a Catholic high school, founded Philadelphia's Association of Catholic Teachers, the country's first Catholic teachers' union.

No medical explanation found in cure of Pennsylvania girl

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — The medical board of the Vatican Congregation for Sainthood Causes has ruled there is no medical explanation for the cure of a Pennsylvania girl who suffered from a crippling and debilitating spinal ailment. The cure is attributed to the intercession of Blessed Frances de Sales Aviat, the French religious who founded the Oblate Sisters of St. Francis de Sales. The Archdiocese of Philadelphia did not name the girl, but the Philadelphia Inquirer daily newspaper identified her as Bernadette McKenzie. She was also identified in the parish bulletin of St. Bernadette Parish in Drexel Hill. The Oblate order founded by Blessed Frances Aviat runs the parish school there.

Robert Burns, columnist and editor at U.S. Catholic, dies at 80

CHICAGO (CNS) — Robert E. Burns, an award-winning columnist who served for more than 20 years as executive editor of U.S. Catholic magazine, died March 13 after a long illness. He was 80. His funeral Mass was scheduled for March 18 at St. Vincent Ferrer Church in River Forest, with burial to follow at Queen of Heaven Cemetery in Hillside. "Mr. Burns was an invaluable friend of and partner with the Claretians," said Claretian Father James Maloney, who worked with Burns for many years.

Polish director's Oscar highlights Christian values

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — When Poland's veteran director, Andrzej Wajda, collects a lifetime achievement Oscar in Hollywood March 26, church leaders will join in the applause. While not stressing a church affiliation, Wajda has won praise for his skilled expression of Christian ideas and images. "It's risky to call him a Catholic director," said Father Adam Boniecki, editor of Poland's Tygodnik Powszechny Catholic weekly. "But Wajda's work represents an encounter with Christianity on a foundation of supreme values that both respects and is respected by the church."

Wrestling coach gives Catholic high school $1 million

BALTIMORE (CNS) — When Alan Gebhart first came to Archbishop Curley High School more than a decade ago to help coach the school's wrestling team, he didn't know much at all about the Franciscan order of friars who staff the all-boys' school in east Baltimore. He wasn't Catholic. And he hadn't attended a Catholic school. But from the instant he saw the black-robed priests and observed their commitment to shaping the "total student," Gebhart said he was convinced he had discovered one of the best schools in the state. That's why the successful 52-year-old businessman decided to give the school $1 million — believed to be the largest contribution ever to a school in the Archdiocese of Baltimore.

Fides says Chinese martyrs' canonization is challenge to Beijing

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican's decision to canonize 120 Chinese martyrs can be seen as a challenge to China's communist government, said the Vatican's missionary news agency. "The canonization of China's martyrs is a challenge to Beijing, a challenge of courage," said a March 11 editorial in Fides, the news agency of the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples. The Vatican announced March 10 that Pope John Paul II will canonize the martyrs Oct. 1. The group includes Chinese citizens and European missionaries, clergy, religious, men, women and children; half of the martyrs were killed during the Boxer Rebellion of 1900, and the other half were martyred during 17th- and 18th-century persecutions.

Faithful citizenship a moral imperative, official says

"As bishops, we do not seek the formation of a religious voting bloc, nor do we wish to instruct persons on how they should vote by endorsing or opposing candidates. We hope that voters will examine the position of candidates on the full range of issues, as well as on their personal integrity, philosophy, and performance. We are convinced that a consistent ethic of life should be the moral framework from which to address all issues in the political arena. We urge our fellow citizens to see beyond party politics, to analyze campaign rhetoric critically, and to choose their political leaders according to principle, not simply party affiliation or mere self-interest."

— from "Faithful Citizenship: Civic Responsibility for a New Millennium," by the Administrative Board of the U.S. Catholic bishops

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

CHARLOTTE — Catholics who connect faith values with decisions they make in the public arena are taking an important step toward shaping public policy, said an official from the United States Catholic Conference during a visit to the Diocese of Charlotte.

Joan Rosenhauer, special projects coordinator for the USCC's social development office, was in western North Carolina March 14-16 to speak to parishioners, priests, permanent deacons and Catholic Social Services personnel about the U.S. bishops Administrative Board's 1999 statement on political responsibility, "Faithful Citizenship: Civic Responsibility for a New Millennium."

In a March 16 interview in Charlotte, Rosenhauer highlighted key points of the statement, and discussed ways Catholics can — and should — be faithful citizens.

"The primary message of the statement is about participation," she said. "This is a call to Catholics and to all people to get involved in public life, to not become so cynical that we drop out, and to understand that that there is a connection between our faith and the decisions we make as citizens."

Rosenhauer said concerns about separation between church and state, as well as discouragement with candidates whose positions do not reflect Catholic teaching, are barriers to Catholics' involvement in public policy discussions.

"You do have to make a decision in the voting booth, but then you also need to recognize the importance of continuing to work on the issues that we care about."

— Joan Rosenhauer

"The separation of church and state doesn't prohibit us from being involved in political life and in public policy decisions," she said. "The Constitution prohibits the state from opposing religion, from discriminating against people because of their religious beliefs, or treating people with favoritism because of their religious beliefs."

Involvement in public life must go beyond Election Day as well, she explained.

"This is an ongoing obligation," she said. "You do have to make a decision in the voting booth, but then you also need to recognize the importance of continuing to work on the issues that we care about."

She cautioned against the thought that the church endorses or opposes certain candidates, noting instead that the bishops "certainly encourage Catholics to look at church teaching, to look at the importance of the issues that they talk about in their statement, and then make that difficult decision (of whom to vote for) themselves."

The difficulty many Catholic voters run into is that candidates often do not stand for the wide range of life, social justice and other issues that the Catholic Church holds in its teaching, she said. In addition to apathy and discouragement, divisions over issues can result, she added.

"All of us have to challenge ourselves to see that there is a consistent message in our teaching that says we do have to be concerned about all human life," she said. "That doesn't mean that at any given time we might not put more effort into one issue than another.

"But in the larger scheme of things, we have to challenge all Catholics to see that we care about human life and that we need to be working together to advance that as a priority in our society" so that Catholics do not dilute their ability to shape how decisions are made.

The bishops' statement reflects the need for Catholics to address such challenges by knowing and acting on church teachings.

It points out the broad range of the Catholic moral framework and how those issues are important in public life. In particular, the statement highlights the principles of Catholic social teaching, which range from the dignity, rights and responsibilities of the human person, to the need for family and social life and outreach to the poor and vulnerable.

In its discussion of moral priorities for public life, the statement suggests a number of issues the bishops say are important concerns, including war, development, the death penalty, family life and social justice. The statement also quotes from the U.S. bishops' 1998 statement "Living the Gospel of Life": "'Abortion and euthanasia have become preeminent threats to human life and dignity because they directly attack life itself, the most fundamental good and the condition for all others.'"

Rosenhauer's visit here is part of an ongoing diocesan effort to instruct Catholics on the principles of faithful citizenship. Educational efforts led by the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace will continue into the fall, and a resource kit from the USCC was mailed to all parishes in the United States this month.

Especially in this election year — the first year of new millennium and one the church calls the great jubilee — Rosenhauer said civic concern is especially important for Catholics.

"The Constitution protects the rights of people to participate in the debate about public policy," she said. "What the bishops are saying in this statement is we need to be a part of the public policy discussion, and they hope others will also be a part of that discussion and bring their moral convictions to it."

In Jordan, pope walks in footsteps of St. John the Baptist

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

AMMAN, Jordan (CNS) — Reading from chapters of salvation history in the Holy Land of Jordan, Pope John Paul II evoked St. John the Baptist as a sure guide for Christians of all ages, then walked in his footsteps near the Jordan River.

During a Mass in an Amman soccer stadium March 21 for 20,000 Jordanian Catholics, the pope recalled how John the Baptist, an itinerant preacher, had prepared Christ's path throughout the river valley area more than 2,000 years ago.

"We look for a guide to show us the way. And there comes to meet us the figure of John the Baptist, a voice that cries in the wilderness," the pope said.

"He will set us on the road that we must take if our eyes are to see the salvation of God," he said. John, who baptized Christ in the waters of the Jordan River, was the "last of the line of prophets" who, like Abraham and Moses before him, defended God's law and nurtured the divine promise made to God's people, he said.

The pope, on the second day of a historic pilgrimage to the Holy Land, sat hunched on an altar half-covered by a fabric canopy, as a cool breeze blew across the soccer field. Dressed in brilliant red vestments, he coughed occasionally but spoke in a strong voice.

His popemobile was mobbed by well-wishers when he arrived at the complex, and the stadium was decked with banners proclaiming Jordan "the land of prophecy and salvation." Among the crowd were dozens of Christians from Iraq, many of them living in Jordan since the 1991 Gulf war. They waved small Iraqi and Vatican flags.

Some 2,000 children, dressed in white with yellow sashes, made their first Communion during the papal liturgy, and the pope offered them a simple message in his sermon: "Jesus is your best friend; he knows what is in your hearts. Stay close to him, and in your prayers remember the church and the pope."

He also marked Mother's Day in Jordan by asking mothers to help build a "civilization of love" where the dignity of all life is respected.

The pope described himself as a pilgrim through the church's historical landscape and said his pilgrim's path led naturally to Christ, the "realization of the promise" of the Old Testament and "the goal of all our journeying."

"The risen Christ alone reveals the full meaning of all that happened at the Red Sea and Mount Sinai. He reveals the true nature of the Promised Land, where 'death shall be no more,'" he said.

The Mass was a high point for Jordan's small Catholic community, which represents just more than 1 percent of the population in the predominantly Muslim country.

The pope praised the results of a recent regional synod and said the future of the church in the Holy Land clearly lies in "unity and love," expressed through parishes, lay movements, schools and other activities.

"There is no more effective way to be involved socially, professionally and politically, above all in the work of justice, reconciliation and peace," he said.

He also urged Christians to strengthen the bonds of friendship with members of "the other great religions that flourish here."

Later in the day, before heading to Jerusalem, the pope made a brief prayer stop near the banks of the Jordan River at Wadi al-Kharrar, where many Christians believe Jesus was baptized by St. John the Baptist.

"Glory to you, O Christ, Son of God! ... From the river blessed by your presence you went forth to baptize not only with water but with fire and the Holy Spirit," he said in a prayer.

Thousands of people covered the dry and dusty hills of Wadi al-Kharrar for the visit. The site's few date palms usually provide the only touches of color in the barren landscape, but for the papal visit the panorama was enriched with red-coated soldiers on horseback and the crowds waving Vatican, Jordanian and Palestinian flags.

The pope rode through the crowd in a golf cart, following a path lined with newly planted palms to a small platform, where, in a strong wind, he led the crowd in prayer. Asking the people to remember their own baptism, the pope blessed a terra cotta jug full of Jordan River water and sprinkled the crowd with it.

Jordan has uncovered archeological evidence that it says indicates this was the place where St. John did his first baptisms. In Israel, other experts claim the most likely site of Christ's baptism lies on the western side of the Jordan River, in disputed territory now under Israeli control.

The pope, in a display of even-handedness, was scheduled to visit that site later in the week. Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls downplayed the rival claims, noting that the Bible speaks of St. John performing baptisms throughout the river valley, not in one place. ▼

Pope reaches Israel as a pilgrim, realizing his dream

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Pope John Paul II reached Israel March 21, realizing a dream that frail health, interreligious squabbles and political tensions could not stop.

Arriving at the airport in Tel Aviv, the 79-year-old pope briefly acknowledged the sensitive issues surrounding his visit, but said he came as a pilgrim, "in a spirit of humble gratitude and hope, to the origins of our religious history."

His seven-day pilgrimage to Jordan, Israel and the Palestinian territories, he said, was "a tribute to the three religious traditions which coexist in this land" — Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

After kissing Israeli soil held up to him in a bowl, the pope said, "I pray that my visit will serve to encourage an increase of interreligious dialogue."

Pope John Paul said the teaching of the three religions should give all their members "the motivation and the perseverance to work for the peace and justice which the peoples of the Holy Land do not yet have and for which they yearn so deeply."

The pope's arrival in Israel coincided with the opening in the United States of a new round of peace talks between Israeli and Palestinian negotiators, and amid increasing signs that Israel and Syria would restart direct talks about the Golan Heights, territory Israel captured in 1967.

"May peace be God's gift to the land he chose as his own," the pope said at the rainy airport welcoming ceremony.

Pope John Paul told Israeli President Ezer Weizman, Prime Minister Ehud Barak and other officials at the airport that although he traveled as head of the Roman Catholic Church, his visit was also a private pilgrimage that began in late February at the Vatican and in Egypt and continued the day before in Jordan.

"Along every step of the way I am moved by a vivid sense of God, who has gone before us and leads us on, who wants us to honor him in spirit and in truth, to acknowledge the differences between us, but also to recognize in every human being the image and likeness of the one creator of heaven and earth," he said.

The pope and Weizman spoke of rapid changes and improvements in Catholic-Jewish relations, especially over the past 20 years, paving the way for the visit.

Pope John Paul, who repeatedly used the phrase "the state of Israel" in his airport speech, said "many things have changed" since Pope Paul VI visited the Holy Land in 1964. Pope John Paul specifically cited the launching of diplomatic relations with Israel in 1994 as "a seal on our efforts to open an era of dialogue."

"With new-found openness toward one another, Christians and Jews together must make courageous efforts to remove all forms of prejudice. We must strive always and everywhere to present the true face of the Jews and of Judaism, as likewise of Christians and of Christianity, and this at every level of attitude, teaching and communication."
— Pope John Paul II

For many Jews, the exchange of ambassadors between Israel and the Vatican was a long-awaited sign that the Vatican recognized Israel's existence as a state.

Relations on a religious level have improved as well, the pope said.

"With new-found openness toward one another, Christians and Jews together must make courageous efforts to remove all forms of prejudice," he said. "We must strive always

Book Review

Irish subjects explored in three new books

REVIEWED BY MAUREEN E. DALY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Three new books on Irish subjects — one for the armchair historian, one for the scholar of sociology and religion and one for the researcher on the Irish in America — have just been published. Not all three are for everyone, but I highly recommend them all.

"For the Cause of Liberty: A Thousand Years of Ireland's Heroes" by Terry Golway is a very readable survey of Irish history for a general audience. Golway begins with the conquest of Ireland in the 11th century and ends with November of 1999 and today's heroes struggling for peace. Golway is an editor and columnist for The New York Observer and an author of two other books on Ireland. The bulk of the book is the period from the late 18th to the early 20th century, the years of repressive legislation, emigration, famine and revolution.

In telling the larger story Golway focuses on individual heroes with inspiring personal vignettes, such as the story of attorney Thomas Addis Emmet, whose client was convicted in 1795 of administering the United Irishmen's oath. Taking the oath was an act of sedition punishable by death. Emmet read the oath aloud: "I will endeavor, so much as lies in my ability, to forward a brotherhood of affection, an identity of interest, a communion of rights and a union of power, among Irishmen of all religious persuasions." He turned to the judges: "My Lords, here in the presence of this legal court ... I myself in the presence of God, declare: I take the oath." Emmet's clients were spared the death sentence, and Emmet was marked as a dangerous man.

A contemporary hero is Gutsy Spence, who served 18 years in prison for his role in a sectarian killing and emerged from prison in 1984 committed to nonviolence. Spence, a Protestant, became a spokesman for progressive Unionists and had a public friendship with the late Catholic Cardinal Tomas O Fiaich of Armagh.

This carefully footnoted history helped me sort out the Loyalists from the Nationalists, Theobald Wolfe Tone, Padraig Pearse, Michael Collins, Daniel O'Connell and where they were featured in the story that produced today's Bernadette Devlin, Gerry Adams and Rev. Ian Paisley.

"The Encyclopedia of the Irish in America"
Edited by Michael Glazier

A more scholarly work by sociologist Michael P. Carroll is "Irish Pilgrimage: Holy Wells and Popular Catholic Devotion." Carroll writes that in the years between the Reformation in the 16th century and the famine in the 19th century Irish Catholics had a tradition of visiting sacred spots to complete a series of prayers and a pattern of pacing. There were hundreds of these pilgrimage destinations all over Ireland. Some, like Croagh Patrick, are still pilgrimage sites today. Carroll examines why this custom began and declined in Ireland.

The bibliography alone is worth the price of the book, but Carroll, a professor at the University of Western Ontario, also has an interesting theory to defend. He disagrees with the widespread belief that these pilgrimages were not mainstream Catholicism but were rather vestiges of Celtic pre-history. Carroll says this interpretation was invented by writers of the Romantic era who preferred to believe that charming folk customs were pre-Christian; Druids seemed more fascinating. Carroll argues that Today's Gospel reading includes the story that often seems to get dragged out as an apologetic for giving in to anger. It shows, the argument goes, that, hey, Jesus got angry, and with good reason. But my friend Peggy's story helps me see that Jesus' behavior in the temple was motivated by something other than anger.

Peggy was a diligent homemaker, keeping the house clean and comfortable for her family. But, as happens in homes with adolescent children, she "constantly was picking up after them." No sooner would she finish a day of housecleaning than the troops would come in, drop their bookbags and jackets in the middle of the floor, get a snack and leave a trail of cups, chip bags and crumbs throughout the place.

One day, exasperated, Peggy directed the kids to do a thorough housecleaning — not just their own mess, but it was their turn to do the entire job. After a day of work, the children sat in the den, exhausted but pleased with how clean and neat they'd made their home.

So imagine their horror when Peggy strolls through the room, dropping her coat, shoes and a shopping bag in the middle of the floor, plops down a can of soda and a plate of half-eaten pizza, strews magazines all over, and finally, literally, throws popcorn everywhere!

As the kids stared incredulously she said, "Now you know how it feels." Then she instructed them to clean up the mess, which they did without complaint but with some amusement.

Peggy told me the story. She laughed, "I love object lessons."

Was she angry? No. She was a little frustrated, maybe, but mostly she just wanted her children to appreciate their home and take part in caring for what they valued. As she went about trashing the den, she was neither in a rage nor gleeful. She was going about a task — to make an important impression.

That's how I see Jesus knocking over tables and spilling money in the temple. When Jews complained, noting that it took a long time to build the place, Jesus' point was: Then why are you making such a mess, are you forgetting what it stands for?

He knew that, as with the temple building, people would abuse God's goodness wherever it was present, even in his very person. That's what is in the human heart, this Scripture reminds us. Mercifully, the Lord continues to pick up after us, but he also offers this object lesson. ▼

Priest serves as consultant to new NBC animated series

By MARK PATTISON
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — NBC's new animated series, "God, the Devil and Bob," has a little extra help in the God department.

Paulist Father Ellwood "Bud" Kieser and Rabbi Harold Schulweis serve as theological consultants to the show, seen at 8:30 p.m. EST Tuesdays. If you squint hard enough as the closing credits zip by, you can see their names.

Father Kieser, producer of the "Insight" TV anthology series and the movies "Romero" and "Entertaining Angels: The Dorothy Day Story," is proud of the work he's done so far. "I've read the first 13 scripts, and I've got the next two sitting on my desk," he said.

In "God, the Devil and Bob," God (voice of James Garner), is getting a little tired of creation, and lets Satan (voice of Alan Cumming) choose a soul to determine whether the world should be destroyed once and for all. Chosen is Bob Alman (voice of French Stewart), a Detroit autoworker whom God admits is not his best work.

Father Kieser, in a telephone interview with Catholic News Service from Paulist Productions' office in Pacific Palisades, Calif., said he's not a big fan of the show's animation style, having been raised in the era of the Disney movie classics. But "the most important thing is the script," he added. "In the beginning was the Word."

As a consultant, Father Kieser said he reads the scripts, then sends memos with suggestions for rewrites of "problem areas," such as things "an unconditionally loving God wouldn't do."

One script, he said, was so problematic he told the show's executives, "You're not putting my name on the credits without making some significant changes."

The result? The writers are working on those changes, Father Kieser said. Incidentally, he added, "the rabbi had significant problems with that same show."

But Father Kieser said he has trust in the series' creator, Matthew Carlson, a onetime seminarian who has won two Humanitas Prizes for his work on "The Wonder Years."

A handful of NBC affiliates in Utah, Idaho and Mississippi caused a stir by yanking "God, the Devil and Bob" from the prime-time schedule.

"I think they're uncomfortable with a truly human God, an earthy God, a God who doesn't confine himself to the heavens, a God who shows his vulnerability," Father Kieser said, noting that any resemblance of God to the late Grateful Dead guitarist Jerry Garcia is unintentional.

The devil and God are portrayed in the new NBC animated series "God, the Devil and Bob." A Paulist priest and a rabbi are serving as theological consultants for the show, which has drawn some criticism for content and style.

And in Bob, station managers may want their viewers to avert their eyes from his "stupidity, and sometimes sinning," he added.

Still, Father Kieser can't get over the fact that one of the stations involved airs NBC's "Veronica's Closet," a sex comedy about a lingerie company, "but they don't want to run 'God, the Devil and Bob.'"

The series has also gotten the once-over from some well-known U.S. religious figures.

The priest noted that the Rev. Jerry Falwell "came out and called it blasphemous," and American Family Association leader Rev. Donald Wildmon in Mississippi "came out and attacked it."

One hurdle to overcome is ABC's blockbuster show "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," which airs opposite "God, the Devil and Bob."

NBC debuted the show between "Friends" and "Frasier" March 9, and 14.42 million people made it the 18th most watched show of the week, but Father Kieser said it is not known how many viewers will follow the show to its regular time slot.

Another hurdle is the mixed critical reception. The Washington Post panned the show, The New York Times had a mixed review, the Los Angeles Times was "basically favorable," Father Kieser said, and the Wall Street Journal "liked it a lot."

Anne Navarro of the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting faulted the animation style and said "the jokes fail to reach the smart, acerbic style of 'The Simpsons.'"

"The series gives the tired premise of good vs. evil an interesting twist," Navarro added, saying there was a good scene in the premier with Bob crying out to God "with a laundry list of complaints: God is vague, unknowable, more like a deadbeat dad than a father." But "the final product doesn't really have any bite," she added.

What if "God, the Devil and Bob" gets nominated for one of the Humanitas Prizes which Father Kieser helped initiate more than 25 years ago?

"That's an interesting question," he replied, noting that a selection committee of 20-25 people — of which he is not a member — nominates the finalists.

"It's certainly eligible," Father Kieser said. "Whether it would win, I don't know." ▼

TV of note — Week of March 26

NEW YORK (CNS) — Here are some television programs of note for the week of March 26:

Wednesday, March 29, 8-11 p.m. EST (PBS) "Puccini's Tosca." A "Live From Lincoln Center" program in which the New York City Opera stages the three-act opera with soprano Amy Johnson in the title role, which takes Tosca into Fascist Italy.

Thursday, March 30, 10-11 p.m. EST (ABC) "Wonderland." Premiere of a gritty ensemble drama series set in a New York hospital's psychiatric and emergency wards.

Friday, March 31, 9-10 p.m. EST (PBS) "The Other Immigrants: Importing our Brain Power." From the "National Desk" public affairs series, the other side of the immigrant issue, dealing with how America imports many of its doctors, lawyers and nurses from abroad.

Friday, March 31, 10-11 p.m. EST (PBS) "Faith, Hope and Capital." Program explores grassroots activists and organizations using loans rather than charity for creating economic success and empowering the impoverished.

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope says Lenten retreat highlighted power of hope

By BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Concluding his annual Lenten retreat, Pope John Paul II said the week of prayer highlighted the power of hope.

The pope thanked the retreat master, Archbishop Francois Xavier Nguyen Van Thuan, president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, for "deepening our vocation as witnesses of evangelic hope at the beginning of the third millennium."

Speaking March 18 to Archbishop Nguyen and other Vatican officials who participated in the spiritual exercises, the pope said that today's world is in urgent need of hope in the risen Christ.

Archbishop Nguyen's 13 years in Vietnamese prison make him a "witness of the cross," said the pope, "reinforcing in us the consoling certainty that when everything crumbles around us and perhaps even within us, Christ remains our tireless support."

The archbishop, who fled Vietnam in 1988, used his personal experiences in prison to illustrate the role suffering can play in realizing the truth of God's mercy. He chose the theme "Witnesses of Hope" for the March 12-18 retreat.

Archbishop Nguyen said his years in prison taught him the value of searching for God not in any one particular place, but in daily life itself.

He cited three examples of witnesses of hope: Mother Teresa of Calcutta, Pope Paul VI and Blessed Faustina Kowalska, who was to be canonized April 30.

The archbishop said they showed the importance of living God in the present moment, "trusting in divine mercy."

Archbishop Nguyen said that during his years in prison, he found strength from the Eucharist, "the bread of hope."

He said the Masses he celebrated in prison, with wine relatives sent him as "medicine" for a feigned stomach ache, were the most moving of his life. Today's Christians, said Archbishop Nguyen, have a duty to be credible witnesses in a world "anesthetized" to the Holy Spirit.

"The church," he said, "has a perennial need of its Pentecost. It needs fire in the heart, words on the lips, prophecy in the eyes."

Pope says Iraqi people always present in his thoughts

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Iraqi people, "severely tried" under a U.N. embargo, "never cease to be present in my thoughts," said Pope John Paul II. Pope John Paul has consistently condemned the international embargo imposed after Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990, saying it hurts primarily the weakest members of Iraqi society. The pope made his remarks during a March 18 audience in the Paul VI Hall, attended by a large contingent of Chaldean Catholic jubilee pilgrims, mostly from Iraq.

Lent 2000: I am thirsty

I have celebrated Lent 59 times. I don't know how many "Lents" you have been through. Which Lent, if any, has made a difference in our lives?

Lent has been around since the year 325 (Council of Nicea), and perhaps it is time to ask at the beginning of the third millennium: "What is Lent, anyway?" For me it comes down to the three thirsts of humanity.

First, a physical thirst. Have we heard yet Jesus saying "I thirst" in the squalid field of South America, amid the tea-pickers of Sri-Lanka, in the unemployed, in the refugees of Kosovo? Yes, there are people in the world who suffer physical deprivation, who are still able to live with $25.00 a month.

Second, an emotional thirst. There is thirst for understanding, for companionship, for forgiveness, for friendship. As Jesus moved about the dusty roads of Galilee and Judea, he experienced first hand the isolation and loneliness of many people. He himself had to go through the dryness of abandonment. "Will you also go away?" Then came the garden of Gethsemany, "... they all forsook him and fled." Finally, even God seemed to have gone away, "My God, why have you forsaken me?" Loneliness today can be found everywhere in the great cities of the Western World, where millions of people live quietly and lonely. Yes, there are crowded building complexes, but still neighbors don't know neighbors and some die without the comfort of a human being. Lent 2000 will be meaningful if we are able to make somebody smile and say "I belong."

Third, thirst for God. Sometimes in our lives, we have experienced that money, sex, alcohol, drugs, have not been enough to satisfy our thirst. Those who have expeirenced some or all of the above can testify to that through their ordeal; there was an inner cry for God, a thirst for something or someone better. Yes, happiness is nothing else than the experience of our conscious relationship with God.

The "I thirst" of Jesus is not rooted in wishful thinking. There are two pairs of words which all true believers should stay away from. They are: if only and next time. If only I had prepared my life better, if only I was given an opportunity, if only I had taken the other job. This pair of words makes no sense. Yesterday is past. Then we go into the next time. Next time I am going to speak up. Next time I am going to apply for that job I heard about last month, next time I will be more forthright in my comments, next time I will step into a given situations. Pretty good idea, isn't it? The problem is that we are living into the future, forgetting the present.

The "I thirst" of Jesus is the mother's love for you. There is a story about Bradley Walker when he was 10 years old and had a bad habit of evaluating everything by its worth of money. He wanted to know the price of everything he saw, and he constantly talked about the money he was going to make in life. One morning when Bradley came down for breakfast, he left on his mother's plate the following note, nearly folded:

Mother owes Bradley
For running errands	$1.50
For being good one week	$ .50
For taking music lessons	$ .50
Extras	$ .50
Total	$3.00

His mother smiled at the statement, and at lunchtime the bill and three dollars were on Bradley's plate. Bradley's eyes fairly danced when he saw the money. Then he saw that beside his plate was another piece of paper on which his mother had written:

Bradley owes Mother
For being good to him	Nothing
For nursing him through his long illness with scarlet fever	Nothing
For clothes, shoes and toys	Nothing
For his meals and beautiful room	Nothing
Total Bradley owes Mother	Nothing

Happy Lent 2000 and may Jesus' thirst and your thirst be quenched.

"This Land is Home to Me"

In your Feb. 11 issue, you ran a front page article from Catholic News Service relative to the celebration of the 25th Anniversary of the Appalachian Pastoral, "This Land is Home to Me." Although I realize that you took this story 'off the wire,' I would like to correct some impressions left by the article as it was printed in our paper.

Our Bishop Michael J. Begley was the major force in bringing this pastoral into being. It was the first pastoral ever presented by the bishops that was printed on 'cheap' newsprint. I was pastor at St. Patrick Cathedral when this pastoral was written. The diocese has just been created and St. Patrick had just become a cathedral. Bishop Begley and his small staff were squeezed into the present rectory and that was also the Chancery office.

In looking back since that time, I have never experienced a driving force (The Holy Spirit) take over the life of a man as it did Bishop Begley. He was in the midst of helping to settle a major coal miners strike in the Appalachian Mountains, and shuttling between the mine villages and Duke Power in downtown Charlotte, who owned the mines. He was putting a fledgling diocese together and taking on the leadership role to give birth to one of the most revolutionary pastoral latters since Bishop Vincent Waters pastoral in the mid-50s which pointed out the evils of segregation in our state of North Carolina.

Days and nights of meetings (They really blew our rectory budget on coffee!) turned into a marathon of rewriting. Just try to get twenty-six bishops to agree on every word in that pastoral. But Bishop Begley did that. He brought together an outstanding group of men and women who 'knew the mountains.' Priests, sisters, brothers, and laity, the poor and the rich, those who worked the mines, and yes, some of those who owned the mines.

Perhaps this adjustment to your published article will get no further than the pages of The Catholic News & Herald, but on the occasion of this 25th Anniversary, we all need to collectively shout "Thank you!" to Bishop Michael J. Begley for taking the risk. And, to use an oft quoted saying of Bishop Begley's, "You did real good, partner!"

With gratitude to Bishop Begley,

Msgr. Richard F. Allen
Pastor of St. Ann Church, Charlotte

In the court of public opinion

Lately, I have found myself tuning into NBC's dramatic series "The West Wing," a behind-the-scenes glimpse into the inner workings of a fictional White House. While obliging the popular demand for subplots that intersect the staff members' personal lives, the writers frequently allow characters to rise above melodrama to tackle some thorny social issues. The results are often compelling.

A recent episode dealing with capital punishment riveted my attention. Essentially, the story line drew the president, his staff, the Supreme Court, a rabbi and a Catholic priest into a series of conversations about the State's right to execute criminals — and the exercise of that right. The president's dilemma: how to bring into line the court of public opinion with the "higher court" — that of God's judgment seat.

The program's frequent mention of history and statistics got me to do a little research on my own. Watt Espy, director of the Capital Punishment Research Project, estimates that over 18,000 executions have taken place from the early 1600s through the 1990s. Official statistics were recorded only since 1930 and indicate 4,646 executions since then. There were none in the 1968-1976 period.

Over the last few decades, the Gallup organization has conducted polls about capital punishment. In 1966, 42 percent of those polled favored the death penalty, in 1981, 66 percent favored it, and last year, the percentage was 71 percent. Why has 29 percent of the population turned to favoring capital punishment in the last thirty-four years? And why does the same poll report that fully 51 percent of the respondents "would still support capital punishment even if studies showed conclusively it does not deter crime"?

Yet, people often argue that deterrence justifies capital punishment. If not to deter crime, why do people support it? Thirty percent of those who favor capital punishment indicated their reason was simple: Revenge.

One might argue that the cycle of violence has become so intense in our society that it is appropriate and understandable for people to support capital punishment. What alternative is there, some ask, in a violent society other than to meet violence with violence? This is the verdict in the court of public opinion.

But what about the opinion of the "higher court"? The moral argument depicted by the writers of "The West Wing" is enacted by two religious figures. A rabbi asserts that the Jewish faith has never sanctioned revenge. And a Catholic priest cautions the president that the death penalty might satisfy a vindictive desire, but such a desire cannot be an objective of a Christian approach to punishment.

These characters speak for many real people who oppose the death penalty not just for what it does to those guilty of brutal crimes, but for what it does to the rest of us. As Bishop Joseph Fiorenza of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops put it: "It offers the tragic illusion that we can defend life by taking life."

We owe a debt to all people — leaders in religions and producers of popular culture, public servants and private citizens — who encourage reflective, informed assessments of civil law. They enhance our capacity for moral criticism within our society and impress the dignity of the human person more deeply on the consciousness of public opinion.

Family Reflections

The story of Eddie

Eddie Hannigan came into this world 36 years ago. He was seventh child of Frank and Alice, who were told that Eddie would not live long enough to raise his head. After Eddie beat those odds, his parents were told he would not likely make it to adolescence. He died two weeks ago at the age of 36 after a full life beating the odds.

Born with Down Syndrome, Eddie's life condition was not received as good news by his family. It would take extraordinary love from extraordinary people with extraordinary faith to raise such a child. Frank and Alice, though they would balk at the characterization, have turned out to be such people. What a blessing for Eddie!

However, after witnessing the outpour of love and grief from family and friends, and the many "Eddie stories" told, it seems that it was the people Eddie loved who are the blessed ones. At the funeral Mass, the family's grief was as evident as their faith. Father Pat Marshall, the celebrant and a longtime family friend, wore his grief, as well. Present also were members of his "other family" from Park Lawn School.

As Eddie's story unfolded through the homily, the special prayers of the faithful and the eulogy, it became clear to us who didn't know him, that Eddie was indeed a special person. His brother, Jack, said in the eulogy, "I never knew anyone who wanted to be with his family more than Eddie." His love was pure and flowed undauntedly.

In the stories, we heard about Eddie's passion for sports through his participation in the Special Olympics. There was also a very special bond he had with his dad and brothers. He held dear a toolbox and union button that symbolized his being one of the guys. The family told of special sayings and expressions that were Eddie's. Most clear in the stories were the lessons of love that they had learned for him. He taught them exuberance with life by showing it. He taught them to rejoice in the presence of others by his own rejoicing in their presence. He taught them to bet against the odds when life is at stake by beating the odds himself. He taught them his own special love by loving them.

Through his illness, months before his passing, the Hannigan family showed their love and devotion to Eddie through the diligent care they gave. It was a rare moment when a family member was not at his side.

It has been said that it is difficult for people of affluence to hear the gospel as "Good News." Perhaps, it is similarly true that those of us who haven't had a special person like Eddie in our lives would find difficulty in receiving such a person as a blessing. In a world that too often sees persons like Eddie as only tragic, the Hannigan family has witnessed the ironic, counter-cultural character of the gospel in their life with Eddie. Indeed his life was good news. And the "Eddie stories" that will live on in the Hannigan family will be part of their testament of faith.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

The removal of a saint's name from the calendar of Feasts

Q. My question stems from our Holy Father's recent visit to Mount Sinai, at the monastery of St. Catherine of Alexandria. Our religious community formerly observed her feast on Nov. 25, with much celebration. I know the same was true even in other countries.

Since around 1970, her feast has been eliminated from the breviary and from the Sacramentary. With the interest newly shown in her life, why is her name still removed? Such an attractive personality could draw numerous religious elements together, including Greek and African Christians.

A. As has happened at other times in the history of the church, names of some saints, which had accumulated over the years, were eliminated from the annual calendar of feasts in the revision of the missal around 1970.

One criterion used in the process was the general relevance of a particular saint to the whole Christian world. Very few of the numerous saints canonized by Pope John Paul II, for instance, will find their way onto the list of celebrations for the universal church.

They may well be honored more in their own locality where their lives and virtues are better known. The pope himself seems to hint at that by often canonizing Koreans in Korea, Poles in Poland and so on.

Another criterion is the authenticity of information about that saint's life. St. Catherine, for example, has been honored as a saint for hundreds of years, in the East and later on in the West. Churches were named in her honor. Hers was one of the heavenly voices St. Joan of Arc claimed to hear.

Yet, the fact is we know absolutely nothing for sure about her. Descriptions of her exploits and martyrdom are known to be historically unreliable.

This is not to claim she never existed. The widespread devotion and honor given to her by Christians for hundreds of years, and apparent evidences of the influence of her prayers, are always significant for the church in matters like this.

When it comes to saints celebrated each year by the universal church, however, effort is made to focus on those about whom there is sufficient knowledge to make them helpful models and signs of God's presence to the rest of us.

Because of her purported conversions of many pagan Romans with her learned Christian teachings (about 310 A.D.), St. Catherine is the patron of philosophers, teachers and women students, among others.

As news reports noted at the time of the pope's visit there, her body is said to repose in the monastery at Mt. Sinai. Her feast is still Nov. 25.

Questions may be sent to Father John Dietzen at Box 325, Peoria, IL 61651, or e-mail: jjdietzen@aol.com.

Pope in Israel, from page 9

and everywhere to present the true face of the Jews and of Judaism, as likewise of Christians and of Christianity, and this at every level of attitude, teaching and communication."

Weizman, welcoming the pope, traced the history of the Jewish people and of their return to the Holy Land and proclamation of statehood in 1948.

"During the years of exile, we suffered religious persecution and anti-Semitism, and a third of our people were exterminated, incinerated in the terrible Holocaust," Weizman said.

The president thanked the pope for "condemning anti-Semitism by labeling it as a sin against God and humanity" and for his March 12 request for forgiveness "for deeds carried out in the past by representatives of the church against the Jewish people."

With the Vatican continuing to insist on the special character of the city of Jerusalem and on the need for internationally guaranteed access to holy sites by all believers, Weizman encouraged the pope to see for himself how Israel governs the city.

"From its inception, the state of Israel has guaranteed freedom of religion and freedom of access to holy sites to all peoples, and you will certainly see the evidence of this, your Holiness, throughout your visit in Israel," the president said.

"You are arriving this evening in Jerusalem, the city of peace, the capital of the state of Israel, the heart of the Jewish world, which is also a holy site for Christianity and Islam," he said.

The president called Jerusalem "the city of eternity, a city that has been reunified" by Israel in its 1967 war with Jordan.

The city, he said, is "the capital and source of pride of the state of Israel."

Just before the pope arrived, the director of the Anti-Defamation League in Israel told reporters the papal visit would be an educational opportunity for Israeli Jews.

Pope John Paul II is a "different pope" than Jews are accustomed to historically, said Rabbi David Rosen, the ADL director.

Jews who do not live in predominantly Christian countries might not realize how much has changed in relations between the Vatican and the Jewish people, he said.

"What we need from the Christian world is a lot of tolerance, love and patience so the wounds of our boxed ears can heal," he said, referring to the historical animosity between Judaism and Christianity.

The pope's visit, he said, is a "personification, substantiation, witness and recognition of the relationship of the Jewish people and their ancestral homeland." ▼ the Irish pilgrimage was a distinctive expression of Irish Catholic faith, what today we might call an example of inculturation.

"The Encyclopedia of the Irish in American" is a surprise-filled reference work. About 300 writers contributed entries on every state, dozens of individuals and hundreds of Irish-American related topics. The lengthy entry on emigration from Ireland to the United States contains maps illustrating the numbers and home counties of emigrants since the 1700s, concluding with the 1990s when, for the first time in eight generations, more Irish went home than left the island. There are sections on ethnic relations between the Irish and the German, Polish, Jewish, Italian and African Americans. The encyclopedia is a good starting place for information on the Irish and the American Revolution, the Civil War, the move West and the labor movement. ▼

Catholic paper calls NRA 'immoral organization'

DALLAS (CNS) — The Texas Catholic, newspaper of the Diocese of Dallas, called the National Rifle Association an "immoral organization" and urged Catholics not to support it.

Editor Bronson Havard said the March 17 editorial was in response to the NRA's "newest propaganda campaign against reasonable gun regulation proposed in Congress."

"Every citizen should raise his or her consideration of the gun issue in America to the level of moral conscientiousness," said the editorial in the 51,000-circulation newspaper.

The editorial added: "The NRA consistently fights to thwart every social effort made at reducing gun violence through better gun regulation."

"After that remark," said the editorial, "there should be a heightened level of concern on the part of every citizen over the NRA. The charge is so vicious, so irrational, that it reveals the deepest, darkest nature of the NRA, whose sole reason to exist is to lobby on behalf of the interest of those who manufacture and own guns."

"Catholics should not give any support to the NRA. It would be immoral to do so," the editorial concluded.

The newspaper has been outspoken over several years against gun violence and has called for better gun regulation, such as longer waiting periods for purchases at gun shows and strengthening the federal "Brady Law." ▼

The Poor Clares visit for Irish celebration

BY STEPHEN UZZELL
CORRESPONDENT

CHARLOTTE — Foot stomping, clapping hands, bobbing heads and sing-a-long revelry filled the pastoral center at St. Luke Church in Mint Hill from floor to high rafters recently. The Poor Clares were the music, green was the color and full Irish merriment was the mood of the evening March 10.

Some 200 parishioners and guests crowded the round tables across the church floor. They began their merry making for St. Patrick's Day early within a homestyle Irish pub atmosphere. Amid lively songs and dancing, not a soul young or old, could sit still.

The Poor Clares' boot-kicking tempo danced music lovers along high winding meadow traces of the Emerald Isle, and then romped them through low trail bayous of the Cajun country. These talented pilgrims were on a flash tour of the Southeast from their home base: O'Flaherty's Irish Channel Pub in New Orleans' French Quarter.

Their lightning trek would lead through Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia to the District of Columbia before a dash back south to Lafayette, La., by March 17.

And Irish hearts were on their feet. Some created a fancy "River" steppin' at stage front and center. Others rocked and sang from wherever they were afflicted with the tonic throb of the beat.

"A very lively party — and well organized," is how parishioner Griselda Sanders described the event. "And the music really accented the celebration."

Lead singer Betsy McGovern trilled heavenward, cascaded through lowlands and hovered soulfully upon the balance in between. With harmonica, button accordion and mandolin, Patrick O'Flaherty measured, marked and quickened the pace. Murphy's flute, whistle and bodhran wove and twined a mystical theme twixt the four musical wizards. And Beth Patterson banked the fire and flanked the song magicians with a bowl-you-over bouzouki and bass.

"It's better with four. We get along very well together. That's half the battle," spoke O'Flaherty of the group's balance and success. "This year will be our 8th year in a row playing at the Louisiana Jazz Fest."

Their music was proof. And their portrait on stage was one of grace and refreshing exhilaration fused in a solid, even blend. Their image was a merry mix that would lean you dizzily forward, then lay you back into a rambunctious roll.

The evening passed all too quickly for some. Parishioners were serenaded with a varied repertoire between 8 and midnight. "The Well Below the Valley," "Greenwood Laddie" and "In Cannemara" were a few melodies enjoyed. And a crowd favorite was the familiar "Oh Danny Boy."

"I thought the music was very unique — authentic Irish, a great variety of songs," said parishioner and former musician Dominique Francese. "Their instrumentals were artistic and original." ▼

Conflict workshop scheduled for April

CHARLOTTE — A workshop on healing and dealing with conflict, presented by "The Solo Partner: Repairing Your Relationship on Your Own" author Phil DeLuca, is scheduled for April 8 from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the Best Western Merchandise Mart Hotel, 3024 E. Independence Blvd., in Charlotte. The workshop is designed to instruct participants involved in a variety of relationships. Participants include persons in a troubled relationship whose partner insists there's no problem; rational people whose discussions about problems lacks reason; those seeking intimacy with a partner who always seems to retreat; those hoping their partners will admit blame for problems in their relationship; those who have either tried counseling together only to make matters worse or are in a relationship where one party refuses counseling; and dating or engaged couples who want to ensure strong relationships. For more information about the workshop and registration, call (704) 334-2283, ext. 11. The workshop is sponsored by St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte. ▼

Mountain doctor making a difference in Madison County

By DIANNE RIGGS
Correspondent

MARSHALL — While some people may just "talk the talk" when it comes to making a difference, Dr. Marianna Daly also "walks the walk."

In rural Madison County, Daly practices family medicine at the Marshall-Walnut Health Center. "I've always been intrigued, fascinated with rural life and culture — how the people are tied to their roots, the land, the extended family," she said.

Daly, who grew up in Durham, was not always going to be a doctor. She studied to be a forest ranger at Princeton. But long philosophical talks with a close friend and the chance to spend an intern year with the Jesuit Volunteer Corps changed all of that.

With other volunteers, she served an outreach ministry in southern West Virginia, living in an old rectory in a small town, doing home visits, a recreation program, an ecumenical Sunday School and nursing home visits. Based on that pivotal year, she went to graduate school in public health in Chapel Hill and then on to East Carolina University Medical School in Greenville, N.C.

"It was a privilege to go to medical school. And I asked myself, what am I going to do with it — with this chance I've been given," said Daly.

While doing her residency at MAHEC (Mountain Area Health Education Center) in Asheville, Daly discovered Madison County to the north. For her, it had the same feeling and values she had found in West Virginia. So now, married and with a house in Asheville, she found the ideal place to practice family medicine that was in concert with her values.

Marshall-Walnut Medical Center is part of the Hot Springs Medical Center: fee-for-service, community-owned, private, non-profit. It comprises four centers, with nurse practitioners and 11 doctors, of which Daly is one. While services are charged, Daly said, "We have never turned anyone away."

"What you do with your life is all tied in with your faith. It's about using your God-given talents — serving others," she said.

"I feel I've built really strong relationships with the patients that might not be possible somewhere else," she said. "It keeps me going. It is not a materialistic society. People are committed to taking care of the elderly."

A member of St. Andrew Church in Mars Hill, she did not grow up Catholic. In college, she found herself drawn to the Church, and at one time, was attending Mass three times a week.

The Jesuit Volunteer Corps experience was also important.

"It (the Church) was where I found myself most comfortable," she said. She stressed the universality and the ritual elements of the faith. "I was once overwhelmed by Communion — this one action being done by millions of people in the world," she said. "When you walk up there (to receive Communion), you're all one."

She was confirmed in 1987.

Her faith in Christ permeates the medical office as well. "What you do with your life is all tied in with your faith. It's about using your God-given talents — serving others," she said. "As one office staff member stated, 'Every person who walks through this door could be Jesus.'" When appropriate, when a patient signals, Daly shares her faith and sometimes prays with patients.

Social justice and development concerns shape her hopes for Madison County's health problems. She cites the need for some form of universal health care, since the most difficult thing about her job is "having to spend so much time trying to find access for people without insurance for X-rays, (diagnostic tests), subspecialty visits and medicines." Also, transportation to and from medical facilities is a problem, she said.

But Daly's hopes also span across the U.S. She believes Americans must take better care of both the geriatric population and the youngsters. "As a society we must change our attitudes on what priority children take," she said. "How much do we value our children? There is such a domino effect from that."

"It is important for people to develop an ethical framework," said Daly. "They must know what and why they believe and then follow it in their lives." ▼

Jubilee of Women

Women observe day with prayer and praise

By Alesha M. Price
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Many women took a vacation day from work, and some women chose to use the time as an escape and a day of relaxation. Over 200 women, young and old, celebrated the essence of being a woman and commemorated the Annunciation of the Lord during the International Jubilee Day for Women on March 25, held at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

The idea to have the Charlotte celebration in honor of women came from Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast, parish pastoral associate, who asked the members of the parish Ladies' Guild and the parish adult education program to help sponsor the event.

"We are celebrating the jubilee of women on the same day as the Solemnity of the Annunciation of the Lord. The Holy Father designated this day as the jubilee day of women, and it is also the day Mary said 'yes' to the angel Gabriel. The women who attended the event wanted to renew their own 'yes' and to celebrate who we are," said Sister Jeanne.

The day's themes, "women saying 'yes' to God" and "the work of women's hands" were demonstrated through the artwork and decorations displayed in the parish center. Several women of the parish offered their handmade quilts, needlepoint designs and artwork to add to the springtime décor of lights and flowers.

The Giving Tree was decorated with leaves written with the names of nationally known and unknown women admired by the attendants.

Enclosed in the programs were green leaves of varying sizes, on which the attendants wrote the name of a woman they admire to add to the "Giving Tree," a nearly life-sized tree taped on the wall. Among the names were Mother Teresa, Rosa Parks, Mary, Madame CJ Walker, Princess Diana and other common names of mothers, grandmothers and sisters

Marking women's jubilee hails 'feminine genius'

By Maureen Boyle
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As Pope John Paul II celebrated Mass in Nazareth on the feast of the Annunciation, Catholic women worldwide — including hundreds in Washington — gathered to observe the church's Jubilee Day for Women.

At a prayer breakfast before a March 25 Mass in Washington's Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Harvard law professor Mary Ann Glendon used the example of the late Dorothy Day's life to urge the women to "open their hearts to the grace of God."

A convert and a founder of the Catholic Worker Movement, Day lived before her conversion during the 1920s in the Bohemian lifestyle that "has spread to all corners of life today," Glendon said. "And that has taken a toll on women."

She urged the audience to resolve "to reach out to all the Dorothys we know."

Patricia McGuire, president of Trinity College in Washington, told the women to use their voices to spread Christ's message, especially in today's secular and modern age. "If we believe in the Gospel of life, we must speak out against all who mock the Gospel values," she said. "And we don't need Roman collars to do that."

She said Pope John Paul's Lenten pilgrimage to the Holy Land is "an incredible witness to what we must give out — forgiveness, faith, hope and charity."

Boston Cardinal Bernard F. Law, in his homily during the Mass, called the Annunciation "the turning point in salvation history." Bishop Daniel A. Hart of Norwich, Conn., concelebrated the liturgy, which drew about 700 people, including many groups of women religious.

Mexican bishops call for changes in government, economy

MEXICO CITY (CNS) — Mexico's bishops said collaborating with electoral fraud was a sin and democracy not framed in human rights could become demagoguery. In a wide-ranging document launched in a celebration at the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, Mexico's bishops proposed changes in the country's government, economy and other social structures. The document is intended to guide the church's participation in Mexico's elections this year and in the country's democratic development in years to come.

Russian Catholic leaders unsure what Putin will do for religion

MOSCOW (CNS) — Catholic leaders in Russia say it is unclear what the administration of newly elected president Vladimir Putin will mean for religious minorities like the Roman Catholic Church. "As everyone stresses, Putin is an unknown quantity. No one knows what he is thinking or will do," said Jesuit Father Stanislaw Opiela, general secretary of the Russian bishops' conference. Putin, 47, was elected Russia's second president March 26 with more than 52 percent of the vote.

El Salvador's Congress recognizes Romero's work for justice

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — El Salvador's Congress recognized murdered Archbishop Oscar A. Romero of San Salvador as "a pastor who fought for justice, freedom, democracy and peace." The Congress approved the recognition March 23, the eve of the 20th anniversary of the archbishop's killing. "As we commemorate one more year since his death, we hope that incidents such as his and thousands of other murders never happen again in our country," said the statement, supported by the majority of the 84 representatives. The statement was the subject of intense negotiations between its proponents, members of the former Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, now a political party, and deputies of the governing ARENA party.

Philippine group that seized kids requests Vatican negotiator

MANILA, Philippines (CNS) — A Muslim group that seized dozens of children, school personnel and a priest in the southern Philippines wants the Vatican to name a representative to negotiate the hostages' release, the chancellor of Isabela Prelature said. Father Martin Jumoad told UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand, March 23 that the children's parents have asked government and church leaders to respond quickly and decisively so the children can be freed. He said the parents gathered after he met with a man called Abu who identified himself as the spokesman of the group that took the hostages from schools March 20.

Clinton's India visit evokes mixed reaction among church groups

NEW DELHI, India (CNS) — U.S. President Bill Clinton's visit to India drew mixed reactions from church people. While an official from the Catholic Bishops' Conference of India said the U.S. president should be "warmly welcomed," the Jesuit-run Indian Social Institute said it joined the protest against the visit, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. Father Donald D'Souza, bishops' conference deputy secretary-general, said India should welcome Clinton, although there are areas in which the church and other groups might disagree with the United States. Jesuit Father Ambrose Pinto, director of the Indian Social Institute, said it was "very shameful" for a government that supports self-reliance and indigenous people to welcome "the symbol of multinationals and capitalism."

Nigerian bishops call for unity, interreligious harmony

LAGOS, Nigeria (CNS) — The Nigerian bishops' conference reiterated its commitment to a unified Nigeria where people of different religious and ethnic traditions can live in peace and harmony. The bishops declared March 31 a day of penance, reparation and reconciliation for Nigeria. "We do not countenance the breakup of Nigeria, neither are we in favor of the split of Nigeria into different pockets, where one state lives under the constitution and a neighboring state lives under another law," the bishops said in a statement at the conclusion of their March 13-18 meeting at St. Leo's Catholic Church in Lagos.

Churches stand with you, official tells farmers at D.C. rally

WASHINGTON (CNS) — "The churches stand with you because you are on the right side," a Catholic official told farmers at the Rally for Rural America March 21 in Washington. Holy Cross Brother David Andrews, director of the Des Moines-based National Catholic Rural Life Conference, was among the 30 featured speakers at the rally, which was co-sponsored by his organization and others. The rally had been intended to be held in front of the U.S. Capitol, but a steady three-inch rainfall caused the event to be held under a big tent pitched on the Mall.

Court upholds student activity fees at public university

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Public universities may continue using mandatory activities fees to subsidize extracurricular programs to which some students object, the Supreme Court ruled March 22. The court unanimously found that the University of Wisconsin-Madison student activities fee does not infringe upon the constitutional rights of students who disagreed with some of the groups receiving funds. The fee system had been challenged by students who objected to parts of their $167-per-semester activity fee going to groups involved in activities they disagreed with.

International dinner fills the air with dynamic flair

By DEBRA HARTRUM
Correspondent

GASTONIA — The fragrant aroma of gourmet cooking drifted across the parking lot at St. Michael Church in Gastonia last Saturday night on March 25 where hundreds of people waited anxiously to bite into the delicious food that created such delightful smells.

The fourth annual International Dinner — the parish's largest fundraiser of the year — was an evening of fabulous food, lively entertainment, colorful atmosphere and music for all tastes. The doors opened at 6 p.m. to reveal a multicultural environment filled with colorful flags, lighted trees and festive tables.

"I wanted the theme to reflect multiculturalism, tradition and festive surroundings," said Cheryl Cherry, chairperson of decorations.

At 7 p.m. St. Michael's welcomed guests to the gymnasium, where the perimeters of the room offered tables of main dishes, side dishes and desserts, representing culinary treasures from all over the world. Father John Allen, parish administrator, gave the blessing, and over 500 people formed lines at every corner of the room.

"Eastern Europe, Western Europe, The Middle East, Latin America and North America were among the geographical areas represented," food and beverage chairperson Pauline Pearce said. "I have been involved with the International Dinner for the past few years, and this event is something St. Michael Church can patent. Our cultural identity in the larger community is diverse, and this is where our colors shine."

Stuffed shells, Italian Wedding Soup and Italian cookies were just a few items that led the crowd toward the Italian table, where Mike Bordino proudly shared his wares. The Western European table could hardly keep up with the requests for paella from Spain. The Middle Eastern table galvanized the palate with hummus, tabouli and baklava.

"This is the best international dinner I have ever attended," raved parishioner Kelly Rath. "The food was fabulous."

At 7:30, the entertainment began. North America, Colombia, Mexico, Ireland and Spain were represented with colorful costumes and lively music as dancers took the floor. The audience, caught up into a world of foot-stomping and hand-clapping excitement, captured the passion of dance.

The voices of Laura LaFrancis, Yvonne Bratcher and Chrissy Glisson brought an element of classical performance to the evening entertainment. Parishioners from St. Michael lent their special expertise to the evening, with Kristopher Hartrum and Eliana Martinez dancing a courtship dance from Colombia called "The Cumbia." Erin Sigmond ignited the room with "Jazz Dance in the American Vernacular."

"A nice touch this year was the availability of two rooms for seating and entertainment," commented one parishioner. In the main room, seating for about 350 allowed guests to enjoy the DJ and the dance floor. The "Easy Listening" room sat about 200 people, and Dave Pearce, a multi-talented singer, instrumentalist and parishioner, who volunteers his talent every year, provided the entertainment.

In addition to the entertainment, a silent auction was held. "My objective was to provide an upbeat, different and diverse auction, and I know we were wonderfully successful," said chair Alice Krawczyk. "Bids were higher than expected, and I think we came close to raising $2,500."

Four years of core cooks, organizers and helpers make St. Michael's International Dinner more improved every year. This year, over $10,000 was raised for parish programs and development.

Debbie Freeman, staff member and parish 'organizer' summed up the evening: "This was the best yet."

As the evening came to a close and the crowds moved toward the exits, a lone woman stood folding the flags of nations that graced the walls. Lindsey Meekin, the energetic, ambitious and organized mind that chaired the entire event, just smiled.

When asked about the evening she simply said, "St Michael's strength is its parishioners, the old, the young Americans and the newly arrived. What we did tonight was pulled together and showed the citizens of Gaston County the beauty and strength of true cultural diversity."

"For me, the biggest success was not the financial goal, but the number of people who want to be a part of this event next year." ▼

— honoring women who have given in some way, explained Rita Brennan, from the parish event steering committee.

The two keynote speakers, Mercy Sister Larretta Rivera-Williams, director of faith formation at St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem and Joanna Case, a parishioner at St. Gabriel Church, were followed by two breakout sessions with four talks on different subjects, led by women religious and laywomen from local parishes. Katy Volponi, campus minister at Belmont Abbey College, and her daughter Rose led the teen breakout sessions.

Rose Volponi said, "It is important for younger women to celebrate their womanhood and to start thinking about how the woman is viewed in society, and part of growing up is learning what it really means to be a woman."

Through dance and words, Sister Larretta addressed the crowd about prayer and the manner in which it is done during her talk, "Being Women of Prayer, or Women Who Pray." "Prayer is more than a conversation with God; it is sacred time and space we have with God, which can be expressed in many different ways."

Sister Larretta expressed one form of prayer through a liturgical dance she performed for the audience to a version of the "The Magnificat" by John Michael Talbot. "This form of prayer is not for everyone, but liturgical dance is something that has been used throughout biblical history," she said.

She continued, "Prayer is interior and a mystery. We know we are in touch with something, and it is that hope that gives the intangible validity."

Joanna Case used posters to illustrate her topic, "'Yes' to God in My Actions." Priest, prophet and king were the three focal points of discussion, as Case used humor and personal stories during her talk. The terminology was taken from words used during the rite of baptism.

"Each of us, in our baptism, is called to become Christ; we are Christians — the anointed ones," said Case.

Fran Fallon and her mother Marion Fallon look at some of the homemade crafts from parishioners during a break at the International Jubilee Day for Women at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte on March 25.

Case talked about everyone living as "priest, prophet and king" in terms of prayer, proclamation and power. "Our priestly role concerns prayer, which should be at the center of our lives. It is your priestly role to teach your children to pray. ... Our prophetic role is to speak out when you see injustices. ... The kingly role is to provide what is necessary to live; as women, we have the power to encourage or support someone else. ..."

"Even though these words sound masculine, they have to do with roles in our lives. We are called to say 'yes' to God in those three ways," she continued.

The day ended with candlelight as the women recited a closing prayer and an act of commitment with Mary as the intercessor.

"I wanted to celebrate the jubilee year by doing something special to refocus my direction," said Lisa Revilla from St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte. "It is vital for women to get together because it gives us the strength to go out and be spokespeople for Christ in our churches, communities and families." ▼

Bishop McGuinness High School students perform "Grease"

By SUSAN DEGUZMAN
CORRESPONDENT

WINSTON-SALEM — April 6, 7 and 8 are the dates for performances of "Grease" in Winston-Salem. Sister of St. Joseph Anne Thomas Taylor, dean of students at Bishop McGuinness High School and faculty moderator of the play, has collaborated with more than 60 students, faculty and parents for the past seven weeks for this presentation.

A professional actress and friend of Sister Anne's, Micki Sharpe, has come from Philadelphia to direct the students. Sister Anne explains that the school has been fortunate, as this is the fourth production with which Sharpe has assisted. These recent performances, of which there are two each year, included "You Can't Take It With You," "Godspell" and "Our Town."

Professional expertise is in abundance among the faculty who are helping with the play as well, according to Sister Anne. English teacher Kim Leavitt, in charge of the technical and stage crew, holds a degree in drama and was recently in Tennessee to work on a play she has written.

Music teacher Dr. Alan Hirsh brings phenomenal expertise to the production as orchestra director. Carol London, school guidance director, and Debra Gray, a science teacher, have put in many hours sewing costumes.

"More parents have been involved this year," Sister Anne reports. She is grateful for what she calls her "parent guild."

Senior student Kevin DeLury plays the role of Danny. Meredith Roche, also a senior, plays the role of Sandy. Twenty-seven students make up the cast, and 20 students are the technical and stage hands with 20 students making up the orchestra. Overall, Sister Anne feels the play is a "pretty well-devised operation in the sense of having faculty and students involved." She also feels this to be an important learning experience for the students to see that the amount of work that goes into such a production is similar to what it takes to play on an sports team.

"Grease" will be performed at the Williamson Auditorium on the campus of Winston-Salem State University. Show times are 7 p.m. on April 6, 8 p.m. on April 7, and two performances at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. on April 8. Tickets will be available at the door.

A special performance at 10 a.m. on Friday, April 7 will also be presented for the area parochial grade schools. Approximately 900 students from the schools, including those from Salisbury, Greensboro and Winston-Salem, will be attending this particular performance. Sister Anne feels this to be a wonderful opportunity for the younger students to gain exposure to the arts.

Youth fling themselves into spring at diocesan event

By ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
Correspondent

MORGANTON — It was a physically and mentally challenging day for over 200 Catholic middle school students who came to St. Charles Borromeo Church on Saturday, March 25 for Spring Fling 2000. It was also a day for fun.

Participants were able to choose three of the activities offered during the day. Their options included "extreme games" that were held outdoors and a variety of workshops. The Office for Youth Ministry of the Diocese of Charlotte offers the event annually for students in grades 6 to 8. The theme for this year's event was "Open Wide Your Heart to Christ."

Jarred Dawson, a middle school student from the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, tried out the extreme games as one of his morning activities. "It was awesome," he said. "The gladiator ring took a lot of skill, and you had to focus a lot." In the gladiator joust, two students put on padded head protectors, took padded jousting poles, and tried to knock each other off of pedestals and onto the padded surface below.

Tiffany Oddo, a student at St. Barnabas Church in Arden, enjoyed the games as well. "The Jupiter jump was really cool," she said, speaking of the air-inflated trampoline.

Both students spent their first part of the morning in the "Make a Joyful Noise" workshop, which focused on music. "We learned the 'Magnificat' in music," said Oddo. "It was fun." Peter Hartman, organist at St. Charles Borromeo, led those sessions.

Dennis Seavers, a seminarian from the Theological Union at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., who is spending a pastoral year at St. Michael Church in Gastonia, led the workshops entitled "Vocations — Called to Service." He said that in his first session that he tried to get the students to discuss various life issues and how God fit in to all of that. "This is wonderful for me," he said. "There's something about this age where nothing is taken for granted. I really have to put myself into it."

> "I think that it gets the message across that Christianity ... spirituality ... is about taking joy in life."
> — Dennis Seavers

Seavers said he was glad to see everyone having so much fun. "I think that it gets the message across that Christianity ... spirituality ... is about taking joy in life," he said.

Peg Ruble, diocesan faith formation coordinator for the Central Region, conducted the workshops entitled "Jubilee for Juniors" in which she led discussions about the jubilee year and how it applies to middle school students.

Some of the topics they touched on included what things hold people prisoner, what they could do to help the poor and needy and how they could find their own voices in the world. "Much wisdom was shared by the young," Ruble said. "When they hear it from their peers, it means more than when it comes from me."

Several students attended a workshop on racism. Emma Frankart, a student from St. Joseph Church in Asheboro, enjoyed the experience. " ... It was kind of like a seminar," she said. "You got to tell about your experiences with racism."

Suzie Moore, a student from the Basilica of St. Lawrence, agreed. "We learned new things. I've had discussions like that before, but that was the best I've ever had," she said. "It was interesting and fun."

Lizette Lopez, also a student from the Basilica of St. Lawrence, said she found the racism workshop interesting as well. "A lot of things made you think really deeply about how you are related to them," she said.

Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry, led workshops entitled "Scripture Alive." In these workshops, students divided into small groups, looked at three parables, and then picked one to do a skit or other rendition of it. For example, one group chose the parable of the lost sheep (Luke 15: 4-7) and decided to tell about their individual experiences of being lost or losing someone.

One workshop leader taught students about holy art and icons and had them paint their own renditions. Students made their own rosaries and learned how to pray with them in another workshop. Other workshops offered were "Liturgy Ministry" and "Celebrate Diversity."

Lunch was served after the first two sessions, and a liturgy was celebrated at the end of the day.

Tony Santoro, a student from Good Shepherd Church in King, was a satisfied customer. "I went last year," he said, "and I knew I wanted to do it again." ▼

Drew Saia, a student from Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro, makes a rosary. Participants in this workshop also learned about saying the rosary.

Archbishop praises women for special gifts to church, society

ST. PAUL, Minn. (CNS) — Women unite reason to feeling, combine sensitivity with intuitiveness, and know how to listen, said the head of the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis. "If Jesus were here ... he would thank every woman for the simple fact of being a woman," Archbishop Harry J. Flynn continued. "Women help make human relations more honest and more authentic." Archbishop Flynn addressed more than 700 people — mostly women with a sprinkling of men — who attended the liturgy that opened the archdiocesan evening of prayer and reflection for women March 18 at the Cathedral of St. Paul in St. Paul.

Rabbi cites revolutionary changes in Jewish-Catholic relations

WORCESTER, Mass. (CNS) — The last 50 years have brought extraordinary progress in Catholic-Jewish relations, the significance of which is inadequately appreciated by people of both faiths, according to the leader of a major Jewish organization. In a wide-ranging talk at Assumption College in Worcester, March 23, Rabbi Eric H. Yoffie, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, touched on the dramatic changes in the church's attitude toward Judaism; criticisms from some Jewish leaders that apologies for past wrong-doing by the Catholic Church are inadequate; and the tangled nature of Jewish-Catholic and Vatican-Israeli relations.

Chicago priest named new House chaplain

WASHINGTON (CNS) — House Speaker Dennis Hastert named a Catholic priest, Father Daniel Coughlin, as the new House chaplain March 23, ending a four-month political quagmire over who would get the position. Father Coughlin, vicar for priests in the Chicago Archdiocese, had not applied for the position that had stirred up political controversy in the House when Democrats accused Republican leaders of anti-Catholic bias for not selecting a top candidate, Father Timothy O'Brien, for the job. The Rev. Charles Wright, a Presbyterian minister and the primary candidate for House chaplain, reportedly offered to withdraw his name for consideration March 21.

Georgetown University president to retire in 2001

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Jesuit Father Leo O'Donovan, the 47th president of Georgetown University, announced March 20 that he will retire next year. "In June 2001 I will have served 12 years as president. In my heart I know that will be the right time to pass the torch," Father O'Donovan wrote in a letter to the Georgetown community dated March 21. Cardinal James A. Hickey of Washington said he extended both prayers and best wishes to Father O'Donovan as the college president planned for his future.

Catholic labor leader inducted into Labor Hall of Fame

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Terence Powderly, an Irish-American Catholic who organized hundreds of thousands of laborers into the Knights of Labor by the 1880s, was inducted into the Labor Hall of Fame in Washington. Powderly, who settled in the Washington area and has many descendants in the area, was the 23rd person inducted into the Hall of Fame at the U.S. Department of Labor building. During the ceremony, U.S. Labor Secretary Alexis Herman and Msgr. George Higgins, a nationally known labor priest, extolled the long-overlooked accomplishments of Powderly, who served the cause of labor from about 1880 until his death in 1924.

Bishop Vera installed as bishop of Saltillo, Mexico

SALTILLO, Mexico (CNS) — Bishop Raul Vera Lopez was installed as bishop of the Diocese of Saltillo and called for service to those who suffer most. At his March 20 installation Mass in the Cathedral of St. James the Apostle, Bishop Vera said the problems facing Mexico and the world could provoke despair and pessimism, but that the signs of the kingdom of God allowed a more hopeful view of the action of the Holy Spirit in history. "In this jubilee year that the church lives in the year 2000, we have been called to retake with all sincerity our identity as the people of God at the service of those who suffer most, of the communion and fraternity among all men and women of our time," Bishop Vera said.

Sister Prejean leads vigil as Texas executes killer

HOUSTON (CNS) — Houston-area Christians gathered with death-penalty opponent Sister Helen Prejean in a vigil for a convicted killer who was executed March 15 as they prayed. Sister Prejean, author of "Dead Man Walking," a book about her experiences with death row inmates in Louisiana, joined Texans at Houston's Sacred Heart Cathedral in the vigil for Timothy Lane Gribble. During the vigil Sister Prejean said, "Anybody who is not standing up against the execution and not working against it ... is involved in the killing that happened tonight." Gribble was the 211th death row inmate executed by Texas since 1982 and the 12th executed this year.

New British archbishop says family key to policy-making

WESTMINSTER, England (CNS) — Archbishop Cormac Murphy-O'Connor of Westminster said the family must be central to government policy-making, and he urged continued dialogue among Christian churches. The archbishop spoke in a March 20 interview with the editors of the English Catholic press about his aspirations for the Catholic Church in England and Wales. Two days later, the former bishop of Arundel and Brighton was installed as Westminster's new archbishop. Referring to the new social and political agenda that faces the church today, Archbishop Murphy-O'Connor said the family must remain at the center of policy-making.

Jubilee of Women

"Through the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit, the eternal Son of the Father becomes flesh," the cardinal said. "God among us is flesh of her flesh."

Sponsors of the Mass included the U.S. bishops' Committee on Women in Society and the Church; the National Council of Catholic Women; Women Affirming Life; Catholic Daughters of the Americas; St. Mary's Press; Magnificat magazine; the Leadership Conference of Women Religious; and Trinity College.

The prayer breakfast and Mass marked the close of a two-day conference on "The Feminine Genius and the Culture of Life" sponsored by Women Affirming Life and the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

Drawing more than 200 women from around the United States and five countries, including more than 75 female college students, the conference offered prayer services, workshops and training sessions, all aimed at finding ways to promote pro-life efforts in their professions, parishes and communities.

In a keynote address, Janne Matlary, a member of the Norwegian Christian Democratic Party and a professor at Oslo University, described the "feminine genius" as the unique difference between men and women and said secular society downplays that notion.

"Women are told, 'We should be like men,' and in order to be like men, we must forgo or neglect motherhood," she said.

Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast, pastoral associate at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, applauds those who helped her and her committee to celebrate the March 25 International Jubilee Day for Women through song, dance and prayer.

Matlary, who is married and the mother of four, urged the women to define a "new feminism" which emphasizes the family unit. She said that not only requires support from the church, but the government as well. "To retain the family as a natural unit of society, it must be supported by politics," she said.

At an evening banquet March 24, Glendon said women are especially called to be transformers of culture, since "the changing of the culture boils down to the formation of humans, one by one."

Glendon noted that currently "the main institution speaking out in favor of protecting women is the Catholic Church." She cited Pope John Paul as one of the clearest voices speaking out on behalf of women, their "true advancement" and their role in building the culture of life.

Cardinal Law read a letter from the Vatican secretary of state on behalf of Pope John Paul on the occasion of the Boston-based group's anniversary.

"Women are called to be a moral force in society," he wrote. "As messengers of healing, hope and reconciliation, women have an irreplaceable role to play in the conversion of hearts and change of attitudes."

At the conference March 24, Mary Cunningham Agee, founder and executive director of the Nurturing Network, led a workshop on "Taking the Crisis Out of a Crisis Pregnancy."

A former business executive, Agee began the organization 15 years ago as a practical outreach to women facing pregnancies in vulnerable situations. To date, some 13,000 mothers have received aid from a network that has grown to 25,000 volunteers nationwide.

Many of the workshop attendees said they work in crisis pregnancy centers, and Agee offered practical approaches to their work. She said the woman most likely to abort her child is between 20 and 26, from a middle-class background and "can't imagine hurting her parents."

"That is the phone call more often than not we receive," she said, adding that the Nurturing Network also gets calls from professional woman contemplating an abortion for job-related reasons. "We hear the rhetoric of the 'freedom of choice,' but a vast majority of women (have abortions) because they feel they have no choice and their pregnancy compels them to leave the corporate world."

When encouraging a woman to choose life for her baby, Agee said counselors must be "highly interactive," primarily by being available and ready to listen.

"Conversion to the pro-life movement will come about one life at time. We must do something positive and practical," she said. "Remember, Christ healed one broken life at a time and performed one miracle at a time."

Boston attorney Frances Hogan, president of Women Affirming Life and a member of the Pontifical Academy for Life, said she was especially encouraged by the attendance of so many college students, who made up one third of the conference participants.

Among the universities represented were Harvard, Boston College, Wellesley, Boston University Law School, Fordham, St. John's, Georgetown University, Creighton, the University of Dallas, Franciscan University of Steubenville, the University of Maryland, and Marquette. ▼

Pope creates new pilgrim's path with interfaith journey

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Walking at last amid the ancient stones where Jesus lived and died, Pope John Paul II created a new pilgrim's path by reaching out to other religions and to the divided peoples of the Holy Land.

His March 20-26 visit to Jordan, Israel and the Palestinian territories will be remembered as an interfaith journey that, despite some notes of dissonance, struck a spiritual chord among those who watched and listened.

In sharing prayer and emotions with Christians, Muslims and Jews at places of deep religious significance, the pope was clearly trying to set an example of harmony in a land beset by political conflict and religious turf-guarding.

"Our gaze directed to Jerusalem, let us lift up our prayer to almighty God for all the peoples living in the lands of the promise. ... They share the same place of blessing, where the history of salvation has left an indelible trace," he said at the start of his long-awaited pilgrimage.

But he also spoke with realism, telling interfaith leaders in Jerusalem: "Not everything has been or will be easy in this coexistence."

At the heart of the pope's message was the conviction that the Holy Land can and must be a homeland for all its faiths and for all its peoples.

His path of prayer took him from Moses' mountain in Jordan to the river where St. John performed the first baptisms; to Jesus' birthplace in Bethlehem; to Nazareth, where Mary received the annunciation and where Jesus grew up; to Galilee, where Christ preached; and to Jerusalem, where he was crucified.

For the church, this is the historical homeland, and the pope did his best to encourage the dwindling Christian population to remain in the region where so many chapters of the Old and New Testaments were written.

He made a strong connection with the mostly Muslim Palestinian population when, preaching the justice of the Gospel, he endorsed their right to a political homeland and said their suffering as a displaced and desperate people had "gone on too long."

And, in a gesture that made one of the deepest impressions of the trip, he prayed at Judaism's holiest place, the Western Wall, the stone remnant of the temple that for many Israeli Jews symbolizes the religious homeland they once lost and have now regained.

Like the daily reality of the Holy Land, the pope's trip was a blend of the spiritual and the political. The jarring notes were heard on the few occasions when politics gained the upper hand.

From Israeli and Palestinian leaders came repeated claims that Jerusalem was each side's "eternal capital." The pope ignored these assertions, and after awhile they seemed petty and out of place.

Interreligious dialogue went off-key during a meeting presided over by the pope in Jerusalem. Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Israel Meir Lau started it when he erroneously claimed the pope had accepted Israel's territorial claim over Jerusalem. A Muslim cleric responded with a righteous harangue against Israeli occupation and discrimination against Palestinians.

"It's a photograph of the reality here," shrugged Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls. Better that the pope see it and hear it than "walk on the clouds," he added.

But the squabbles paled next to the beautiful form the pilgrimage assumed, as the pope moved from places of the Old Testament to the New Testament, from the Old Law of the Ten Commandments to the New Law of the Beatitudes, and along the path of suffering and salvation walked by Jesus, from the manger in Bethlehem to the tomb in Jerusalem.

Although each of his audiences viewed the pope through a different lens, they all appeared to appreciate that this man was truly on a religious pilgrimage and seemed to receive new energy from each stop. The pope who knelt for long periods at the holy places, hunched over in silent prayer, became more fascinating as the trip went on.

Papal visit to Bethlehem longtime dream of local Christians

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (CNS) — For Palestinian Christians, the arrival of Pope John Paul II was the fulfillment of a longtime dream. Many came hours before the open-air Mass March 22 to stake their place on Manger Square. Samayah Khosh, 37, who came with her 12-year-old daughter, said she had been waiting since she was a child to see him. "For many years, since I was small, we have been waiting for the pope to come here. Now I am big and I want to see him, to know who I am, where I come from," she said. "Now my daughter will see him." Mai Asmar, a 33-year-old Catholic, said as she waited with her husband and three children: "We have been waiting for him. He is our father. We feel much better when he comes to visit."

Pope celebrates Mass in room of Last Supper, Pentecost

JERUSALEM (CNS) — In the land where Jesus was born, Pope John Paul II celebrated Mass in the room where the church was born. "I thank the Lord who has given me the grace of celebrating the holy Mass in this place," the pope said March 23 as he began the liturgy in the Chapel of the Cenacle. The Israeli government, which owns the building, installed an elevator so that the 79-year-old pope could reach the upper room of Jesus' Last Supper as well as the Pentecost descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles.

You can express your commitment to your Church by making a bequest to the Diocese of Charlotte or to your parish. Simply have the following statement included in your will:
"I leave to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte (or ____ parish, city) the sum of $____ (or ____ percent of the residue of my estate) for its religious, educational and charitable works."

Remember God's Will In Yours.

"A valid Will stands as a continuing expression of our concern for loved ones, as well as an ongoing commitment to the Church and the community in which we live."

CAMPUS MINISTRY

Nurturing the lives of young Catholics on campus

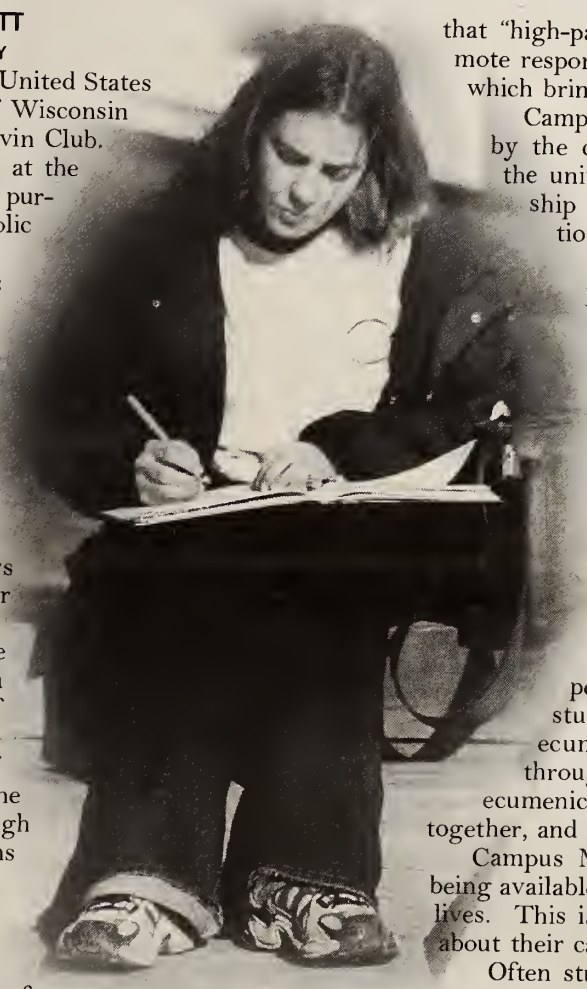
By COLLEEN MCDERMOTT
Director of Campus Ministry

Campus Ministry began in the United States in 1883 at the University of Wisconsin with the founding of the Melvin Club. The first Newman Club was established at the University of Pennsylvania in 1893. The purpose of both clubs was to keep the Catholic students in touch with their faith.

When "Empowered by the Spirit: Campus Ministry Faces the Future," a pastoral letter on Campus Ministry by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops was written in 1985, there were approximately 2,000 campus ministers across the country serving in teams at large public universities and working individually at small community colleges.

Currently, many campus ministers work alone at large public universities or small private colleges.

In fact, at NC A&T University, the Catholic campus minister, Alberta Hairston, is the only campus minister of any denomination serving that campus. Campus Ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte is blessed by the support of the Bishop, the priests and the laity through their parishes' outreach and contributions to the DSA.



Additionally, the number of Catholic students is growing on many college campuses in this diocese. Catholics are often the second largest denomination of students and, at Wake Forest University which is Baptist in heritage, Catholics are the largest denomination on campus.

At a recent meeting of the interns in Campus Ministry, they were challenged by the words of the Bishops about the alienation that students may experience. They added their concerns about the fragmentation and compartmentalization that they observe and remarked that the students' spiritual life often lags behind their intellectual life.

There are so many opportunities offered through clubs, student life departments, athletics and academics that students are unable to choose. One campus minister said many of his students appear to be seeking as many experiences as possible. Students participate in highly academic classes and are involved in community service activities sponsored by the college, but often do not integrate this knowledge and experience with their faith.

Campus ministers work with other college professionals to assist students to set priorities and reflect upon these experiences. Campus ministers support professors who voice concern about the students who view learning as a means to achieve that "high-paying job." They work together to promote responsible citizenship and encourage learning which brings about the transformation of society.

Campus ministers have also been encouraged by the development of leadership programs by the university offered to all students in leadership positions including religious organizations.

The bishops' letter describes six aspects of Campus Ministry: forming the faith community, appropriating the faith, forming the Christian conscience, educating for justice, facilitating personal development and developing leaders for the future.

When Friar Greg Spuhler, OFM Conv, an intern at WFU, spoke at Our Lady of Fatima Church during the DSA, he demonstrated that campus ministry in this diocese lives out the bishops' values. He spoke about the retreats offered, gatherings with family and alum, communion services, student peer ministry, collaboration with offices of student life and the local chaplain and the ecumenical work that the ministry does through the Listening Post, fellowship night, ecumenical chapel services, Thanksgiving meal together, and Wesleyan social events.

Campus Ministry is a ministry of presence — being available to students in this critical time of their lives. This is a time when students make decisions about their careers, lifestyles and vocations.

Often students grapple with issues of faith and life. They want to learn about the beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church. Campus Ministers often comment that they never know what a student may need to discuss when they walk through the door. It could be anything from the meaning of a particular teaching, a comment on a popular news article about religion or a personal issue.

The campus ministers must be ready to respond on all these levels — to present the official teaching of the Church, to assist students with preparation for the sacraments, to discuss how to integrate faith and life and to discern with them God's call in their lives.

Like those who started Newman Clubs in the late 1800s, students today are still looking to Campus Ministry to keep them in touch with their faith. ▼

Greensboro students feel at home at Thea House

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — There is a place where students from North Carolina A&T State University (NC A&T) and Bennett College go for spiritual and emotional support, and they get that and much more from campus minister Alberta Hairston, better known as "Mama Hairston." She does her mothering at Thea House, the center for Catholic campus ministry, located on the campus of NC A&T.

NORTH CAROLINA A&T STATE UNIVERSITY & BENNETT COLLEGE

Thea House is named for the late Franciscan Sister Thea Bowman, a consultant for intercultural awareness for the Diocese of Jackson, Miss., and a faculty member of the Institute of Black Catholic Studies at Xavier University of Louisiana. The center was opened in 1992 with funds and donations from St. Pius X parishioners, the Franciscan Friars of Holy Name Province, who staffed the campus ministry as part of their outreach program until 1994, and the Black and Indian Mission Fund, explained Hairston.

"It is named after Sister Thea because of her deep faith and love for the church and her love of kids and family," said Hairston.

The center is a quaint, white house furnished with pillows and plants, stocked with books of all subjects and religious brochures, with enough room left over for students of all denominations to hang out, talk, sit and reflect and eat the home cooking of Hairston.

"We want to do what to what we can to help the students through college, not only spiritually but also academically," said Hairston. "Sister Thea said, 'it takes the whole church to raise the child,' and I represent the church for them. These children become my responsibility, and even though they are young adults, they still need nurturing and mothering. I work with them out of African-American ministry, and we are like a family."

"Having a Catholic center on a black campus where there aren't many Catholics is a comforting feeling."
—Nadra Wagner

Hairston serves as the housemother, spiritual advisor and surrogate mother all in one. She has been the campus minister since 1994, after graduating from Bennett College with a bachelor's degree in social work. She is working on her master's degree of religious studies through the LIMEX program from Loyola University of New Orleans.

"She is like the grandmother I never had and is someone I can look up to and talk with," said Christina Donovan, an 18-year-old freshman majoring in graphic communications systems. "Ms. Hairston is like a teacher and a support system, and Thea House keeps me focused because I can attend Mass, more often than I would because I don't drive, and make new friends."

Mass is celebrated on the second Sunday of the month with family dinner, prepared by Hairston herself. Wednesdays feature afternoon meals and fellowship, with the second Wednesday of the month dedicated to feeding the homeless at Grace Community Church. The students help to serve food instead of having the dinner themselves. Every Thursday, the students have a "spiritual check-up" — Bible study with Hairston and the Rev. James McDaniels, pastor at Grace Lutheran Church. The students have also been involved with service projects like Crop Walk, the Winter Walk for AIDS and the Big Brother/ Big Sister Program.

Nineteen-year-old sophomore Everett Henry, a computer science major, said, "It is like a home away from home because when I come here [to Thea House], I don't even feel like I am on campus; it is like your grandparents' home."

Dr. Stuart and Dolores Ahrens, St. Pius X parishioners, have been with Thea House since the beginning. Dr. Ahrens, a now retired physics professor who taught for 26 years at NC A&T, said, "This is their own little place of retreat, where they can meditate and find some quiet. Alberta adds her warmth and motherly touch."

"Having a Catholic center on a black campus where there aren't many Catholics is a comforting feeling," said Nadra Wagner, a 19-year-old chemical engineering sophomore and peer minister. "This is good for people my age at a time when we are exploring who we are and growing in our faith, to have someone in a place where we can learn." ▼

DAVIDSON — Davidson College Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM) sponsored an "alternative" spring break from March 3 through March 10 to Orlando, Fla. Six men and six women responded to the call to lead them to Florida to immerse themselves in serving in whatever way was necessary.

Accompanying them and organizing the trip was Barbara Bagnall, the college campus minister. Bagnall contacted Father Brian Sheridan, a friend of hers who is pastor of Good Shepherd Church in Orlando, Fla. They established five sites of ministry:

1) Working the Good Shepherd Mardi Gras Festival in a variety of capacities, from running games to serving food and cleaning. The festival is the major source of income for the very diverse community and school, which the church serves.

2) The Hope Team is made up of experienced substance abuse counselors, social workers and registered nurses who go out in jeeps and canoes into the surrounding wooded areas of Orlando in search of homeless in need of provisions and medical attention.

3) The Coalition of the Homeless Facility helps to staff the medical clinics for the homeless and to provide after school care for the children living in the shelters.

4) BETA stands for birth education, training and acceptance of unwed mothers and their children. The purpose is to provide necessary nursery care where mothers attend classes and to distribute supplies to anyone proving need of infant provisions, food and other goods. Many of the mothers were 12 and 13 years or age.

5) The Catholic Charities Food Pantry gleans and sorts donated vegetables and fruit and prepares packages of emergency food staples for those in need.

The students rotated through different sites during their weeklong stay. They were housed through the generosity of Good Shepherd Church and the Sisters of the Good Shepherd. The trip was challenging and quite a gift for all involved.

As one student reflected in the required journal: "I believe that a conscientious faith must encompass an ethic of service and sacrifice. That theme and calling seems to me inescapable in the teachings, actions and life of Christ. Christ calls us to live in the world, not outside of the world. I can say from my experience on this trip that the ethic of service is based in a belief in the basic value of each human life. ▼

"Ministry of presence" felt on Lenoir-Rhyne campus

HICKORY — When Dr. Sal Inglese arrived on the campus of Lenoir-Rhyne College in the fall of 1998 as the new Catholic campus ministry intern, he immediately made a lasting impression on faculty and students alike as a people person.

Inglese is part of the growing presence of Catholic campus ministry throughout the Diocese of Charlotte. At Lenoir-Rhyne, a Lutheran institution, he reaches out to Catholic students in a spirit of devotion to the church and to all with strong sense of ecumenism.

In an August 1999 letter to diocesan campus ministry director Colleen McDermott, the Rev. Andrew Weisner, college pastor, called Inglese an enthusiastic, reliable minister with a keen sense of issues that college students face.

LENOIR-RHYNE COLLEGE

"Sal's presence at Koinonia House, where his and my offices are located, has enormously enriched the ministry of 'the House,'" the Rev. Weisner said. "When I was there alone, various campus responsibilities often called me away, leaving the house vacant. Sal's presence draws students there, and he has proven a trusted friend and counselor to people in need of ministry. Also, his conversation and posters around the house draw attention to the Church's struggle against racism, prejudice, and service to the poor and children."

The Rev. Weisner noted Inglese's skill in approaching and meeting students, faculty and families, especially in one of the campus's more popular haunts.

"Much of Sal's skillful 'ministry of presence' (better described as a 'ministry of incarnation') occurs at the college's favorite meeting place and time: in the dining hall during lunch and dinner," the Rev. Weisner said. "There, Sal amiably goes from table to table, greeting students, faculty and staff, engaging them in conversation and often inviting them to upcoming campus ministry events."

The Rev. Weisner said that Inglese promotes a variety of events on campus, not exclusively Catholic campus ministry ones, and that Inglese's presence is often felt in ecumenical settings — prayer services, dinners shared by students of various campus religious organizations, and other group gatherings.

"It is a great tribute to Sal's openness and ecumenical spirit ... that students from the Lutheran Student Movement wished for him to join them in their yearbook photograph," the Rev. Weisner noted. "In this regard, he is an exemplary Roman Catholic."

Weisner commented on what he called the success of the Diocese of Charlotte's campus ministry intern program, adding that "the success is due, in large part, to the minister the diocese sent to Lenoir-Rhyne, Dr. Inglese."

"Sal is a kind, loving man," he said, "who has become dear in the hearts of many at L-R." ▼

WAKE FOREST UNIVERSITY

A few of us from the Catholic community at Wake Forest University came up from North Carolina to Philadelphia for our spring break and had the honor of working with the Redemptorist Volunteer Ministries. Each of us was moved by what we saw at the Sarnelli House.

The first day of our visit to the house, we came bearing fresh fruit and cupcakes and were welcomed by Father Kevin. We passed out snacks, towels and soap, assisted with haircuts, had great conversations with both the visitors and the volunteers of the Sarnelli House, and played hour-long chess games with the guests. By the end of the afternoon, their showers and haircuts had transformed visitors. Each left cleaner, happier and more energized. Many asked us to return that Thursday night for dinner. We had planned to help with Thursday's dinner, and it was exciting to be welcomed back by the visitors we had met.

The Thursday night dinners resemble weekly Thanksgiving gatherings. The neediest come not just from the neighborhood but also the surrounding areas to reunite, share a blessing, and nourish both their bodies and their spirits. Father Jude's homemade lasagna was served with salad and music. We brought a guitar with us and within a few minutes, music by Redemptorist Volunteers was heard and God's blessing was felt throughout the halls. Wilbur helped roll instruments into the main room, Gail started her guitar, Ben echoed on bass, and Janis kept the rhythm with her drums.

Once everyone had been well fed, the music carried on and Susanna, another volunteer, talked with us about some of her experiences with the ministry. Farewells to everyone at the Sarnelli House followed. We left with hopes that the Redemptorists would come share their ministry during a retreat to North Carolina...and, just over two weeks later, they did indeed make the trip down and we again broke bread together!

We also volunteered at a Catholic Worker Clinic and St. John's Hospice. We stayed at a Friary of the Conventual Franciscans and came together in the evenings to pray and reflect. ▼

Students from Guilford College proclaim Jubilee in the Capital

GUILFORD COLLEGE

Remembering the words that encompass this Millennial Jubilee: Biblical text from Leviticus that speaks of restoring economic justice to the people, Claire Adams, David Hedman, Will Link, and Trisha Matthew, and Campus Minister Douglas Campbell set out for Washington, D.C. The Guilford College students would spend their week of spring break proclaiming Jubilee in the nation's capital.

First stop was at the Education for Peace in Iraq Center where they meet with its director, Eric Gustafson, and EPIC's staff. EPIC works to change U.S. foreign policy and raise public awareness in support of human rights in Iraq and peace in the Middle East.

From EPIC's office, the students left to meet their host, Father Frank Higdon, known to the students as Pancho, at his Maryknoll House in D.C. One of the highlights of the trip was listening to the many stories that Pancho told of his 25 years in Bolivia. He shared his experiences of working with the poor and helped the students make contacts with other Catholic peace activists.

On Tuesday, the students visited the office of Jubilee 2000 where they met with Director Dan Driscoll and others to work for an end to the debt burden of the poorest countries in the world. Jubilee 2000 is part of a worldwide movement seeking to cancel the unpayable international debts of the poorest countries by the new millennium.

Last fall, the pope issued a statement to world leaders to take urgent and decisive action towards resolving the debt crisis that afflicts the world's poorest countries. He warned that it is the poor that pay the cost of indecision and delay. In Washington, students brought the pope's message to U.S. Representative Howard Coble of Greensboro. The congressman listened for half an hour to their concerns for the poorest people in the world. Though not convinced of the justice of canceling these debts, Congressman Coble promised to look further into the matter.

The next morning began with an Ash Wednesday service in the Maryknoll Chapel, where the students received ashes as a sign of their solidarity with the poor and the earth. Later, the group met with staff person of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee where they brought the message of Jubilee. One of the most rewarding moments of the trip came later that afternoon when the students were able to help remove a North Carolina representative's name from a letter endorsing sanctions against Iraq. Long a supporter of debt cancellation and peace and justice for the citizens of Iraq, the congressman mistakenly signed a letter asking for continued sanctions against Iraq. Partly through the student's efforts, the mistake was realized and the signature of support was removed before it was to be circulated the very next day.

In retrospect, first-year student Trisha Matthew spoke of her experiences, "The overall visit was great. Though we had a lot of work to do we still got to do some sightseeing and we also got to do some worship." ▼

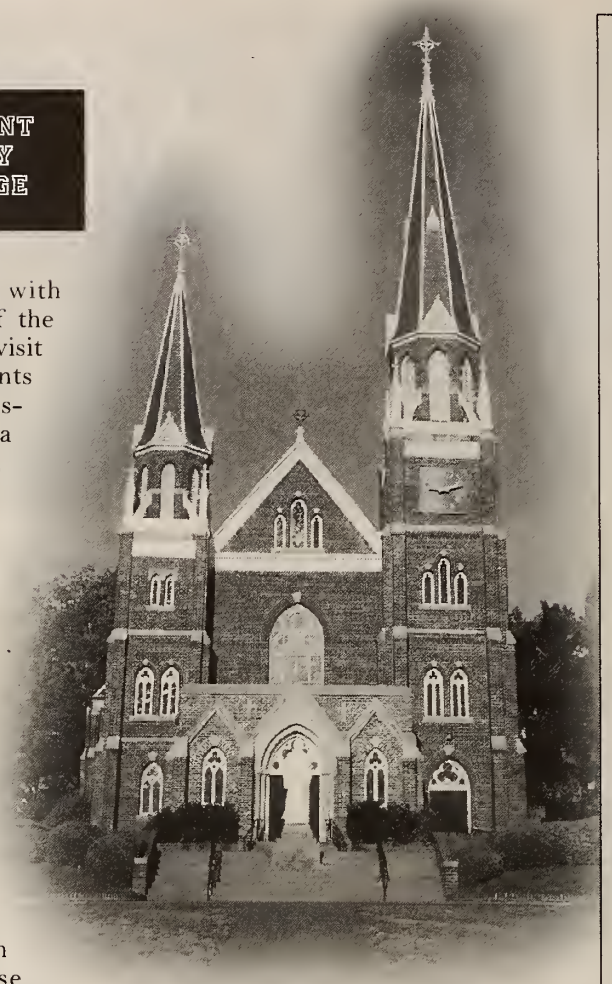
BELMONT ABBEY COLLEGE

March 25 was the Feast of the Annunciation. Sr. Jeanne-Marie Kienast asked Campus Minister Katy Volponi to invite Belmont Abbey women to assist with breakout sessions for teenagers after talks at the special event being planned for the day. Kara Bohlinger and Sharon van der Horst participated in the Jubilee celebration of 2000 years of women saying "Yes" to God at St. Matthew Catholic Church in Charlotte. Kara Bohlinger facilitated the morning session on prayer with the teenage girls who were attending the conference. Rose Volponi of UNCGreensboro facilitated the afternoon session.

Campus Ministry students, under the direction of Chaplain Fr. Kieran Neilson, O.S.B., continue to fill the roles of Lector and Server for the daily Mass in the Basilica. In addition to those duties, students serve in several other capacities for the 7pm Sunday evening student Mass. Nicole Bouffard, especially gifted on the piano and Alex Larsen as Cantor make the Mass truly a celebration.

Belmont Abbey monk Br. Agostino and Campus Minister Katy Volponi are putting together a Lectio Divina weekly study group for students that will be held on Thursday evenings in the Clancy's student lounge.

Thirty-five students, Theology Professor David Williams and Volunteer Coordinator Gayle Butterfield attended the Ripples retreat with Katy Volponi and several of the monks including a daylong visit from the Abbot. The retreatants spent four days at High Pastures in the North Carolina mountains in reflection, prayer and fellowship. Matt Memrick saw that a Perpetual Adoration Chapel was set up and adorers kept constant watch for over 24 hours. Mass, Reconciliation, Liturgy of the Hours, the rosary and meditation were all part of this special time away. The purpose of the retreat was to build community and deepen holiness. One of the highlights of the weekend was having Brian Brady playing the bagpipes. The proprietors of High Pastures asked us to please bring him along when we return next year.



Prayer Ministry team continues to speak aloud in prayer the name of each person in the community every week. Built on the idea from the Campus Ministry at Lenoir-Rhyne College, this faithful team lights a candle and says a prayer then speaks their particular list of names aloud. The list includes all monks' faculty, administration, staff of all kinds and every student. A day retreat in December included planting bulbs on the nature trail in conjunction with saying the rosary, Mass, pizza for dinner and Vespers with the monks in the Basilica. ▼

WCU group makes a difference on Johns Island

CULLOWHEE — As students from the Catholic campus ministry group at Western Carolina University are entering the home stretch of the spring semester, they know they have made a difference in the lives of others.

Members of the group spent their spring break on Johns Island, a sea island south of Charleston, S.C., whose rural areas are marked by need. The group worked with the local Sisters of Charity at Our Lady of Mercy Outreach Center in a variety of projects, including home repair and painting and providing an after-school program for a group of children.

WESTERN CAROLINA UNIVERSITY

The group's theme, "Go Make a Difference," was adapted into song and inspired a variety of educational and recreational activities. The mission was sponsored in part by a mini-grant from Operation Rice Bowl through the Diocese of Charlotte, which funded seven months of preparatory programs. ▼

Colleen McDermott smiles with UNCC campus minister Mary Wright.

UNC CHARLOTTE

I feel my life has come full circle. When I was a student at Sacred Heart College back many moons ago, I was instrumental in starting Campus Ministry. Now more than twenty (20) years later, I find myself once again in Campus Ministry. God as a wonderful way of calling us to that which we feel most passionate.

This year has been spent continuing the good work that Barbara Neff Hutchinson had done for so many years. Unfortunately with Barbara's departure was also the students in leadership. We have worked hard this year evaluating and planning strategies to attract students to UNCC Catholic Ministry. On a brighter note, UNCC Campus Ministry was very fortunate to have Jennifer Rupp, an alumni from UNCC doing her Diocesan Internship here. Her ability to meld together the past, present and future was invaluable.

We have focused on four (4) areas: Prayer/worship, an opportunity to deepen one's relationship with God; Retreats, an opportunity to deepen one's relationship with each other; Service, an opportunity to deepen one's relationship with those less fortunate in society; and Leadership, an opportunity to plan and develop Catholic Campus Ministry at UNCC.

UNCC Catholic Campus Ministry is incredibly blessed by the support of the Capuchin Friars at St. Thomas Aquinas. They believe in the UNCC Catholic community so much they have assigned Fr. Martin to UNCC in addition to his many other responsibilities at St. Thomas and Our Lady of Consolation. Fr. Martin, O.F.M. Cap gives endlessly of his time, energy and enthusiasm. He celebrates Mass once a week on campus and joins us for lunch afterwards. I am also continually inspired by the presence of Fr. Ignatius and Fr. Stan at our monthly dinners.

It is very reassuring to know that they are "just down the road." Sometimes it gets a little difficult on a large, secular campus. St. Thomas's spiritual, professional and technical support has made my first year most enjoyable, gratifying and enriched. ▼

He made connections even where they were problematic.

In Bethlehem, a Muslim call to prayer interrupted the papal Mass. The pope waited patiently — the picture of religious tolerance — and had his aides point out that the muezzin's call had been abbreviated out of respect for the pontiff.

Speaking to ecumenical leaders in Jerusalem, the pope spoke so movingly that his host, Greek Orthodox Patriarch Diodoros, added a spontaneous message thanking the pope "from the bottom of our hearts" at the end of the ceremony.

At Yad Vashem in Jerusalem, the Holocaust memorial where spiraling smoke from an eternal flame hauntingly evokes the deaths of Jews in the extermination camps, the pope met with Polish survivors, including one woman who said that in 1945 the future pontiff had personally carried her out of a prison camp and given her food and drink.

The story, which the pope says is "possible" but which he does not specifically recall, was discussed at length on Israeli TV and seemed to introduce a significant new side of the pontiff to Israeli Jews.

At the Western Wall, the pope amazed Jews by leaving his own written prayer in a crack of the stones, like Jews have done for centuries. It prompted one rabbi to remark, "He touched the wall and the wall touched him."

In the end, the pope managed to bring a week of good will and good news to a region sorely in need of both. On the plane carrying him back to Rome, his spokesman, Navarro-Valls, was asked how the pope managed to navigate the Holy Land's political minefields without any major explosions.

"The key thing, I think, was that the pope told the truth to everyone, but without humiliating anyone. He spoke in charity ... and people respected that," Navarro-Valls said.

That was no small accomplishment in today's Holy Land. ▼

Unlike when Jesus prayed in garden, pope can't find silence

By JOHN THAVIS
Catholic News Service

JERUSALEM (CNS) — When Christ prayed in the Garden of Gethsemane outside Jerusalem the night before his death, he did so in silence and solitude after his apostles had fallen asleep.

Pope John Paul II revisited the spot of the agony in the garden March 25, but he had company: a small but noisy army of aides, priests and journalists that appeared to make prayer a difficult prospect.

When he strolled past what's left of the garden — eight massive olive trees, one of which has been dated at more than 2,000 years old — he paused to lean on a fence and reflect as police helicopters buzzed overhead and his entourage waited behind.

Then he was ushered inside the Church of the Agony, built around a rock Christ was thought to have fallen upon when he prayed: "My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from me; yet, not as I will, but as you will."

The pope knelt and put his head in his hands, to a crescendo of camera shutters. A few feet away, chairs scraped, plastic video cases dropped loudly and then, what sounded like a ladder crashed to the marble floor. Another crash, and the pope lifted his eyes and looked to the side.

After four minutes, without warning, a woman began reading from Scripture through a loudspeaker. The pope simply stayed where he was, praying. The click of the shutters decelerated, and after 14 minutes the pontiff rose stiffly and sat down, gazing up at a mosaic depicting Jesus on the Mount of Olives.

Judging from his expression of awe, he had reached an inner place where he could pray. ▼

Pope calls for 'just solution' to plight of Palestinian refugees

DEHIYSHE REFUGEE CAMP, West Bank (CNS) — Delivering a message of support to the Palestinian people, Pope John Paul II emphasized the plight of their refugees and called for a "just solution." Throughout his pontificate, he said, he has felt close to the Palestinian people. He said he hoped his March 22 visit to Dehiyshe Refugee Camp would "draw attention" to their continuing difficulty. "You have been deprived of many things which represent basic needs of the human person: proper housing, health care, education and work," the pope said.

The parish hall was filled with Father Joe's friends, members of the parish he had served so quietly and faithfully for more than a decade. They had gathered to wish him well and extend their blessings as he left for a pastorate in the distant city of Pittsburgh.

Story after story poured from them in praise of this great bearded bear of a Franciscan. Their affection was evident, and it was based on the love of Christ which had flowed from him to them and to those they served in the parish together.

One of the most touching stories was of a youth retreat. The response to his availability for confession before he celebrated the evening Mass was unanimous — and there were 70 plus teens.

So starting at 7 p.m. they lined up. Time for the Mass came and went. The youth minister telling the story approached Father Joe between confessions. "What should we do?"

"OK, we'll move to the Mass now; just give me a minute," he had responded. Father Joe announced to those still waiting, "Remember where you are in line, and we'll take up where we left off after Mass."

And he did. And the line finished up around 2 a.m. After he finished, Father Joe sat down at a table and wrote 70 plus notes to the young people on the retreat. When he had completed his task, he drove home from the retreat to celebrate the Sunday morning 7 a.m. Mass.

In today's readings, John tells us that God sent his Son into the world not to condemn the world, but to redeem the world. And John implicitly invites all of us to come into the light of God's redeeming love, lamenting the fact that humanity has loved darkness and so has avoided that light.

The light of God's love is not intended to scar us like burn victims, but to heal us and give us the glow of spiritual health. Repentance, bringing our sins before God along with our intent to "change our ways" for God's ways, is life-changing, liberating and a cause for personal joy. This is just as true, even though the doorway to this joy is entered by way of the sadness we experience as we express regret for our sins.

Book Review

Book on Archbishop Romero shows man behind the controversy

Reviewed by AGOSTINO BONO
Catholic News Service

"Oscar Romero: Memories In Mosaic" does a lot to cut through the myths and mysticism surrounding the late Archbishop Oscar Romero of San Salvador. It shows the man behind the controversies.

Twenty years after his assassination, Archbishop Romero is revered by many as a saint and martyr while pillaged by others as a stooge for Marxist subversives wanting to undermine traditional Salvadoran society and values.

Rather than offer a traditional biography, this book provides vignettes by people who knew him. What emerges is a church leader who was above all a pastor of souls, concerned for the sheep as well as the wolves threatening them. His growing opposition to the military and its civilian power brokers was not the result of an ideological mindset; it came from a painful, continuous witnessing of repression against the poor Salvadoran peasants whom he came to know by sharing their daily lives.

The image pieced together is of a basically conservative man, bending over backward to give the country's military and civilian leaders the benefit of the doubt that they wanted what was best for the nation. Yet he was simultaneously consumed by a Christian conscience which could not accept massive injustices by the powers that be.

On March 24, 1980, Archbishop Romero was assassinated by a right-wing death squad while celebrating an evening Mass at the tiny hospital where he lived. Publication of this book coincides with the 20th anniversary of his death. It is the English translation of a Spanish work issued in 1993 by Maria Lopez Vigil, a Cuban-born journalist who has lived for many years in Central America.

Vigil interviewed firsthand witness, friends, colleagues, parishioners and employees of Archbishop Romero. She then organized these into short, colorful and anecdotal essays tracing the archbishop's transformation into the only figure in the country able to effectively and publicly criticize military governments. Interspersed are excerpts from the archbishop's homilies and diary.

Most of all, the vignettes show the human being who was the archbishop. A friend recounts their secret trips to Mexico to attend concerts and circuses when the archbishop needed a break from the tensions of El Salvador. Another tells of his anger and disappointment after being scolded by Pope John Paul II because he was causing church-state problems. One vignette describes a Christmas Eve meal in a poor parish where the archbishop sat a runny-nosed, dirt-stained boy on his lap and shared the food off his plate because there was literally no room for the child at the dinner table. ▼

UPN program shows teens the devasting effect of drugs

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — Teens get a dose of reality about the devastating effects of drugs in the informative program, "Teen Files: The Truth About Drugs," airing Friday, April 7, 9-10 p.m. EDT, on UPN.

"The Truth About Drugs" begins by giving a group of four teens who casually admit that they have fun taking drugs and don't see any reason to stop a glimpse at what their futures might be like if they continue.

The teens are taken through the motions of being arrested for drug possession; raped while drugged up; found unconscious with possible brain damage; and dead of a drug overdose. Although these mock situations are well-done, the experiment loses some of its gripping edge because the viewer — and more importantly the group of teens — realizes that they are fake.

"Teen Files: The Truth About Drugs"
April 7, 9-10 p.m.
onUPN

More powerful than the mock situations is the teens' visit with a young man who overdosed on the deadly "club drug" GHB. One capful of GHB is equal to six glasses of alcohol. Blind, unable to care for himself and barely able to speak, the young man slurs out the words, "don't take drugs."

Next the program concentrates on the dangers of inhalants. A second group of kids, younger than the first, are treated to an unforgettable trip to the coroner's office where they see the effects of "huffing" — inhaling from an aerosol can — on each of the body's parts.

In an emotional scene, the kids also talk with the father of a 14-year-old boy who died the first time he huffed and hear the desperate 911 call made by his mother minutes before his death. The message here is loud and clear: Even though inhalants are defined as poisons, not drugs, a person can die the hundredth time he huffs or the first.

The final segment of the program deals with addiction to drugs. A third group of teens walk the streets of Seattle where homeless, drug-addicted teens talk about life on the street. What they have to say is sobering.

One homeless teen sums up his addiction by saying, "It's not about getting high anymore, but keeping from getting sick." A young woman who is recovering from her addiction in a rehabilitation home explains that because of her addiction, taking drugs was "not even fun anymore, it was just a chore." The program compellingly shows that addiction is not just a possibility of continued drug use, but a definitive result.

The program, hosted by Leeza Gibbons, is peppered with sobering statistics such as 500,000 teens use inhalants a month and every 60 seconds a baby is born with a drug addiction. It uses MTV-style camera work with skewed angles and quick zooms, which is sure to appeal to teens accustomed to these fast-paced visuals.

Informative and attractive despite some contrived moments, "The Truth About Drugs" offers parents an opportunity to discuss the crippling effects drugs have on the users and their families and loved ones. The program is preceded by back-to-back episodes of the series "Moesha" which focus on pre-teen drug use and a family's solution to that shocking revelation. Together the programs are a good reason to make it a family night in front of the TV April 7. ▼

"Here on Earth"
Chris Klein and Leelee Sobieski star in a scene from the movie "Here on Earth."

New at the Box Office

"Here on Earth" (Fox 2000 Pictures)

Sweet but schmaltzy romantic teen drama about a poor local girl (Leelee Sobieski) who falls in love with a rich prep-school boy (Chris Klein) and encounters many obstacles — including her boyfriend, her family's opposition and a serious illness — on the path to happiness. As directed by Mark Piznarski, the film's manipulative plot is filled with contrived dialogue and few surprises, but it does offer a sentimental look at the blush of first love. Implied sexual encounter, brief violence and rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Romeo Must Die" (Warner Bros.)

Entertaining hip-hop action drama about an ex-cop (Jet Li) who escapes from a Hong Kong prison to avenge the death of his beloved brother in California only to get caught in a gang war between Asians and African-Americans, and by chance, fall in love with the rival gang leader's daughter (Aaliyah). Director Andrzej Bartkowiak's feature debut combines skillfully choreographed martial-arts action with cutting-edge music but the surprising twists produce a convoluted plot. Recurring violence, brief homosexual innuendo, fleeting nudity, brief recreational drug use, and some rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Whatever It Takes" (Columbia)

Forgettable romantic teen comedy in which a socially awkward boy and a popular high school jock hatch a plan to woo their respective dream girls. As directed by David Raynr, the "Cyrano de Bergerac" imitator lacks any original spark with its predictable plot and strained comedic efforts. Several sexual references, adolescent drinking and some rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Gathering at the well

I have vivid memories from my childhood of waiting impatiently in the car after church each Sunday for my mother to "stop talking" so that we could go home, change into more comfortable clothes and eat some lunch. My father, brother and two sisters usually joined me in this waiting, while Mom, oblivious to our scowling faces and growling stomachs, chatted with friends and acquaintances for what seemed like hours (but really was only 20 minutes or so). We were hungry. After all, it had been some time since breakfast!

Now that I'm a mom, I realize that my mother was hungry, too — hungry for conversation and friendship with other women. She spent her weekdays taking care of the needs of four children, a house and her husband. On Sundays after church, she decided to spend a little time caring for her own needs.

I've come to this realization because I am now doing this to my own husband and children. The children are not old enough yet to go sit in the car by themselves, but they are old enough to tug on my arm and give me subtle hints like, "Mom, let's go! I'm hungry!"

I am not alone in this. On several occasions I have observed other people, sitting in cars and looking dejected, while a family member chats, blissfully unaware of what time it is.

I am also part of a long tradition. My grandmother loved going to church. She especially needed this outlet, because in addition to taking care of four children, a house and a husband, she also cared for her mother and her mother-in-law who lived with her at different points of her life. My mother says she never had to eat her peas because her paternal grandmother would step in, saying, "You know that child doesn't like peas!" I'm sure my grandma needed that time at church more than most of us do!

Of course, the tradition goes back much further than that, to biblical times when women journeyed twice a day to the village well to draw the family's water supply. This was their meeting place, their time to chat with friends. I wonder if their families ever had to wait a few extra minutes for the evening meal!

The well was also the place where Jesus met a Samaritan woman, asked her for a drink of water, and then told her about the living water that would give her eternal life (John 4:5-15).

These days we don't have to travel for our daily water. It comes to us. We still, however, come together for the living water that is our sustenance.

The Church is our well. It gives us the strength to go on with our daily lives. It brings back our focus — the proper perspective with which to look at our day-to-day problems. It saddens me that there are families who feel they can do without the comforts that loving God and being involved at church can bring. They feel it is not worth the time and effort, or maybe their shyness holds them back. But, they don't realize that the friendships formed at church can be deeper and more satisfying than all others because we have our belief in God in common. Indeed, these relationships

The pope's message from the Holy Land

The papal reign of Pope John Paul II has been truly remarkable. The depth of his faith, the breadth of his hope and the inclusivity of his love have been inspiring. His fidelity to the Person and message of Jesus has been apparent for all to see. For twenty years the Holy Father has led and guided the Church with conviction, commitment and courage. He has exemplified consistently the meaning of the message he shares so often, "Don't be afraid."

Recently, as we know, the Pope experienced a personal, spiritual journey to the Holy Land. He visited as a pilgrim longing to be refreshed and renewed as a disciple of the risen Christ, to be strengthened and sustained as God's faithful servant. During that unforgettable week, he spoke as a prophet proclaiming the relevancy of God's Word to every aspect of the human condition.

As we listened to or read the magnificent messages that Pope John Paul II shared at the shrines and sacred sites, we were touched by his absolute belief that the message of Jesus Christ supercedes and overcomes racial, ethnic, territorial and political realities and boundaries. The heart of Christ cannot be contained or controlled by narrowness of vision or smallness of mind. The Gospel of Jesus is a gift intended to speak loudly and clearly to human life and relationships; to penetrate and permeate the human mind and heart; to transform the attitudes and actions of its hearers.

When the Holy Father visited with the Israelis and Palestinians, he came with a message of peace, hope and reconciliation. He urged them to hear and heed the call of the passionately present God, to appropriate and cultivate a spirit of mutual respect and common responsibility. The Pope was well aware of the long-standing disputes and divisions among these people. He recognized that they were based upon a merely human interpretation of tragic events and inhuman experiences. The message of the Holy Father, however, was rooted in the spirit and vision of the Lord. All are God's children regardless of the conflicts and tensions apparent on the territorial, communal or personal level.

The Season of Lent

FATHER JAMES HAWKER
GUEST COLUMNIST

Pope John Paul II reminded his hearers and all of us that in praying the "Our Father," we acknowledge not only our personal identity but our mutual responsibility to extend God's Kingdom of peace and justice, compassion and forgiveness. As God's children we are to be agents of reform, renewal and reconciliation. If we are faithful to our common vocation, we cannot be mired in the muck of pride and prejudice, isolation and orientation. As we open our hearts to the Father of us all, we have no reason to fear. In witnessing to His presence in our lives we are to choose life rather than death, love rather than hatred, peace rather than violence, solidarity rather than separation, hope rather than despair.

The message of the Holy Father during his sojourn in the Holy Land is universal. Its comfort and challenge cannot be contained. As the Lenten season unfolds and we prepare to celebrate the feast of Easter, each of us should reflect prayerfully upon the wondrous words of the Pope. In appropriating their spirit, we shall be more ready, willing and able to witness to the Resurrection and its power in our lives.

Father James Hawker is vicar for education for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Gay and Lesbian ministry and schools

We are indeed called to "open wide the doors to Christ to anyone and everyone" as Jesuit Father Gene McCreesh is quoted to say in the article "Gay and Lesbian ministry and the school system" (Feb. 25, 2000). No small part of loving our brothers and sisters is to educate and instruct them — especially our youth.

Although the article did not distinguish, I pray that the teachers and members of the Diocesan Commission for Ministry to the Gay-Lesbian Community make clear to all that God loves the sinner, but not the sin. We are all sinners, and though Jesus embraces us anyway, he also says "Go [and] from now on do not sin." (John 8:11)

The article briefly quotes the Catechism by mentioning that "homosexual persons are called to chastity" (CCC 2359). Of course we are all called to a life of chastity (controlling our sexual desires) according to our vocation — be it marriage, a single life or a celibate religious. This is not a message of hatred, but of love, since "homosexual activity prevents one's own fulfillment and happiness by acting contrary to the creative wisdom of God" (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Letter to the Bishops of the Catholic Church on the Pastoral Care of Homosexual Persons, 1986, no. 7.)

Father McCreesh says in the article "We cannot tell homosexuals that they do not belong to the church and are excluded and hated by God," but the church doesn't hate or exclude. If anyone said these things to a homosexual person, then they were misrepresenting the church. If so, indeed, this jubilee year is a great occasion to beg forgiveness for these misunderstandings and say that we welcome you, we love you, and together let us pray to God our Heavenly Father, for love, acceptance and the courage to fulfill His will.

"Such a beautiful death"

A lot of wonderful folks took the time to let me know how deeply affected they were by my recent column, "A Death in the Cathedral." Among them was one letter which I must share — a handwritten "thank you" from Ruth Otto. She is the widow of Ray Otto, the man who died of a massive heart attack while attending a Mass I was celebrating at Saint Patrick's in New York City.

The column described how a capacity crowd of worshippers at the Cathedral was suddenly drawn into Ray's death vigil. It was a holy day celebrating the Virgin Mary's unique role in our salvation, the feast of the Immaculate Conception. It was as powerful an experience of communal prayer and reflection as you can imagine.

Ruth explains that she received copies of my column from friends around the country: "You touched a lot of people. My husband was a wonderful man, and God certainly was very good to give him such a beautiful death."

Such a beautiful death. Those words tell you that this is a woman of extraordinary faith. In the midst of the alarm and anguish of that chaotic moment at St. Pat's, Ruth graciously blessed and inspired all of us with her assurance that Ray couldn't be in better hands or in a better place.

And there are more blessings to report concerning the events of that fateful day because we touch each other in so many ways. As Ruth explains, "I have so many people to thank. Two people came from nowhere and did CPR on Ray until the ambulance arrived, one a nurse, whose name I didn't get, the other a doctor from Fort Smith, Ark. His name is Dr. John Swicegood. He was on vacation in New York and attending Mass and came to Ray's aid and did all he could to help him, but Ray was dead already.

"Then there was Father John Fraser, a priest assigned to the Cathedral, who rushed to the hospital and comforted me with his heartfelt prayer.

"Loria Russo, a woman who was at the Mass, sat with me all day until my family came for me. When she learned that Ray and I had been to the Christmas Show at Radio City Music Hall, she arranged for her daughter, Nicole, who had a friend at Radio City to have all the Rockettes sign the program from the show. Nicole framed it and sent it to me.

"Then there were all those people at Mass who were praying for me and Ray. It was very comforting. I was all alone, but I know God always gives you the strength to go on."

Indeed. Strength came through the kind help of complete strangers. Ruth Otto's letter of thanks confirms the meaning of an old Irish greeting I regularly use to welcome out-of-towners to Mass: "There are no strangers here at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Only friends who have not yet had the opportunity to meet."

And it is also true, Ruth, that all of us who unexpectedly came to know you have been equally strengthened. Your love for your wonderful Ray and your faith in God at a time of unspeakable sorrow gave witness to that joy no one can ever take away.

"Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with you."

What your endowment will do

Endowment funds are growing in popularity as more and more donors discover the remarkable benefits they provide. Perhaps you have even thought of creating one of these funds yourself. Your endowment, should you establish one, will accomplish many things. Here are just three to consider:

1. Your Endowment Will Endure

Diocesan Foundation endowments are like artesian wells; they never run dry. That is because our policies prohibit us from spending the principal. Only the income can be used to meet the purposes of the endowment.

For example, let's say you create an endowment to provide assistance to your parish or Catholic school. Once established, your endowment will generate financial grants every year to that entity. Even after you're gone, your endowment will live in perpetuity. A hundred years from now, parishioners and students will benefit from your prudent planning and generosity. This enduring quality makes endowments the perfect tool to create a lasting legacy.

2. Your Endowment Will Enable

Regular cash gifts to your parish or the diocese certainly help us meet our financial obligations. But what happens when the donor dies? Or what if these cash gifts are not so readily available in lean years? Because of their enduring quality, endowments enable us to plan ahead with confidence. We can project endowment income and develop programs accordingly.

Sometimes our donors create endowment funds to enable us to accomplish things we would not ordinarily be able to do through normal budget channels. For example, an endowment may provide ongoing resources for such things as priest retirement, seminarian education, refugee support or social justice outreach.

Your endowment will enable the Catholic Church in Western North Carolina to be a stronger, more viable organization both now and in the future.

3. Your Endowment Will Inspire

When you establish an endowment, you inspire your Catholic community. That is, you deepen our financial foundation and lift us higher in the minds of fellow Catholics. Through your endowment, you say, "This is an organization worthy of my resources. I expect the Church to be fulfilling its mission far into the future."

Your prudent and forward-looking decision encourages us and challenges us to honor your "investment." Inspiration spreads to your family as well. Your children and grandchildren have added reason to appreciate their Catholic heritage. The ongoing impact of your endowment reminds them of who they are. It lifts their own sights and inspires a benevolent spirit.

Your endowment will do more than endure, enable and inspire. Call me for information on ways you can establish an endowment in The Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, at (704) 370-3320, or write to me at the Pastoral Center, 1123 S. Church Street, Charlotte, NC 28203.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS Columnist

Celiacs and reception of the Eucharist

Q. I have read your two recent columns in our Catholic paper about eucharistic bread. In some ways I feel sad that so much attention is given to the form of the bread. As a person with celiac disease, who can eat nothing made of wheat, I realize people should be grateful just to receive Communion. It is apparent from our support group that celiacs are finally managing to get diagnosed. When there are enough of us, maybe some way will be found for us to be among those called to the supper of the Lord.

Some time ago you suggested that celiacs could receive Communion from the cup only. A friend asked her priest to do that and was told, "We will not serve wine in this parish." Others don't even seem to believe they receive Communion unless they receive the host.

I feel better at least having unburdened myself about the plight of celiac "second-class citizens" in the church. Is anything being done to help?

A. As one who is blessedly spared from this disease, I had no idea how many celiacs there are, many of them Catholics with the same dilemma you have. Even a tiny bit of wheat (or rye, oats, barley and other grains) can, in many cases, be dangerous for those who have it.

Obviously, for them the Eucharist is but one of many daily challenges, but that one is a major spiritual concern for any Catholic, since bread must be made of wheat flour to be valid for celebration of the Eucharist.

Some efforts are under way to find a solution. A possible alternative presently being worked on is spelt flour. Spelt ("triticum spelta") is a grain related to wheat, but digests differently from other flours in that it doesn't stay in the digestive tract as long. For some this may eventually be a solution, if it meets the conditions.

A group of Benedictine sisters in Missouri, who bake Communion hosts for hundreds of parishes, are working with specialists to produce a low-gluten or gluten-free wheaten flour.

In a letter on this subject to the American bishops (June 19, 1995), Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, again affirmed that bread from which all gluten is removed is not valid for the Eucharist.

If enough gluten remains to permit the making of bread, however, such flour could be used for Communion. Low-gluten hosts, containing only about 13 percent of normal gluten, are available now.

I return, however, to what I've said on this subject before. The most obvious solution is to receive Communion only under the form of wine. A lot of people are still under the impression that unless one receives the host, one does not receive Communion. That is wrong.

It is Catholic doctrine, and always has been, that Jesus is no more or less present under the form of wine than of bread. I have heard even priests occasionally speak of ministering the "cup" with the precious blood, and then of ministering "Communion" with the host. Both are equally holy Communion, whether received separately or together.

Two sources of information on what is being done to deal with this problem are the Benedictine Sisters of Clyde, Mo. at (800) 223-2772); and the Institut Voor Doven in the Netherlands, who supply Catholic distributors in the United States. The number for their host bakery is 011-31-735-588434.

Rumor about nonexistent FCC petition circulating again

By MIKE KILLEEN
Catholic News Service

ST. CLOUD, Minn. (CNS) — The rumor that will not die about a fictitious Federal Communications Commission proposal to limit or ban religious programming on television and radio is circulating again.

According to e-mails and letters sent to a few St. Cloud diocesan offices, Madalyn Murray O'Hair, a self-proclaimed atheist, is asking the FCC to consider limiting or banning religious programming. The letters say that O'Hair has been granted a hearing to discuss that proposal.

In addition, the FCC has received mail claiming that O'Hair filed a formal petition (RM-2493) calling for an end to religious programs on radio and television.

The rumors — which have also been reported in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and Diocese of Belleville, Ill., in recent weeks — are untrue, according to a statement on the FCC Web site (www.fcc.gov).

In fact, O'Hair has been missing since 1995 — the victim, authorities believe, of foul play.

"There is no federal law or regulation that gives the FCC the authority to prohibit radio and television stations from presenting religious programs."
— FCC Web site statement

"There is no federal law or regulation that gives the FCC the authority to prohibit radio and television stations from presenting religious programs," the Web site statement says. "Actually, the Communications Act (the law that established the FCC and defines its authority) prohibits the FCC from censoring broadcast material and interfering with freedom in speech in broadcasting.

"The FCC cannot direct any broadcaster to present, or refrain from presenting, announcements or programs on religion, and the FCC cannot act as an arbitrator on the insights or accuracy of such material," the statement adds. "Broadcasters, not the FCC, nor any government agency, have the responsibility for selecting the programming that is aired by their stations."

According to the statement, the rumor has circulated periodically since 1975.

"The fact that the FCC has been forced to set up a Web site to deal with it states how problematic it is to them," Mercy Sister Mary Ann Walsh, associate director of communications for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said by phone from Washington.

She told the St. Cloud Visitor diocesan newspaper that her office has received calls from around the country regarding the rumor and refers people to the FCC's Web site.

"This is the first time it has risen up in a few years," Sister Mary Ann said. "It's out there now. All of the sudden, we've had a spate of calls."

Why does it happen? "They (the rumors) make it into the national folklore. I guess I don't know why it happens. I guess people believe ... it seems feasible, and it's something that would just send them over the edge. It captures people's imaginations," Sister Mary Ann said.

The petition quoted in the letters and e-mails — RM-2493 — was actually filed in December 1974 by Jeremy Lansman and Lorenzo Milam. They had asked, among other things, that the FCC inquire into operating practices of stations licensed to religious organizations. The Lansman-Milam petition was denied by the FCC on Aug. 1, 1975.

"Since 1975 to the present time, the FCC has received and responded to millions of inquiries about these rumors," the FCC's statement said. "Many efforts have been made by the FCC to advise the public of their falsehood."

The rumor "wastes a lot of time," said Sister Mary Ann, adding that "if people are putting their efforts here, they're not putting them" in other important areas.

O'Hair and two of her adult children vanished from San Antonio in 1995. Last December, a federal grand jury indicted a Michigan man on charges of kidnapping O'Hair, resulting in her death. Her body has never been found. ▼

Supreme Court rules on immigrant detention, welfare cases

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Supreme Court on March 27 rejected the appeal of a man who has been detained by the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Florida since 1997 pending a deportation order. The court also refused to hear the appeal of a group challenging a 1996 law that cut off welfare benefits to legal immigrants. In that case, the court left intact a 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that found a 1996 law cutting legal immigrants off from food stamps and other welfare benefits to be constitutional.

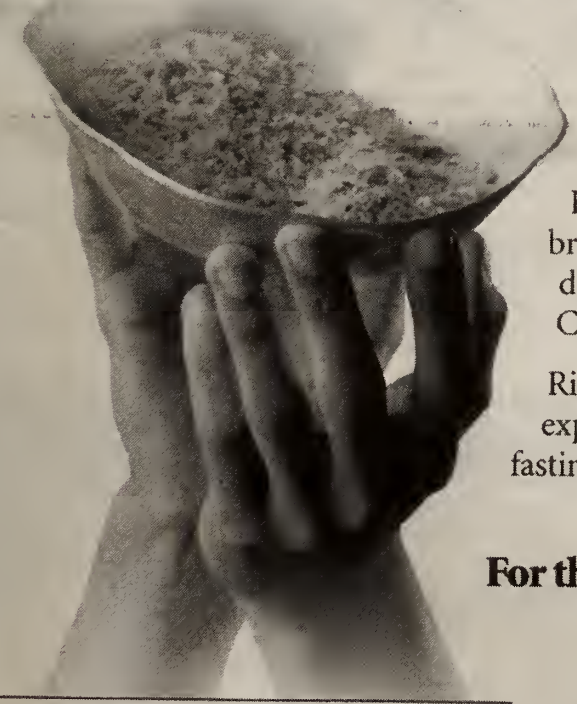
Celebrating 25 Years



More than half of the world's population is surviving on less than one bowl of rice each day.

That's why, this Lent, more than 13,000 parishes and schools across the United States are participating in Operation Rice Bowl, helping the poorest of the poor help themselves.

In addition to expressing solidarity with our brothers and sisters overseas, you can make a real difference, raising money to support the work of Catholic Relief Services in the developing world.

Right now you can support this work for justice and experience the true meaning of Lent: praying, fasting, learning and giving.

For those who hunger and thirst. For justice.

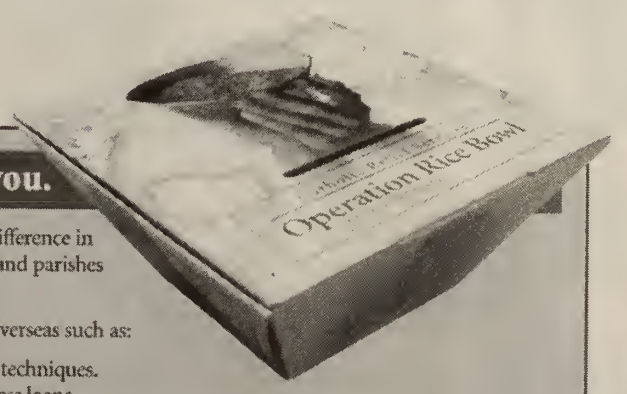
Catholic Relief Services
Operation Rice Bowl
LENTEN PROGRAM

Twenty-five years and still counting on you.



Since its inception 25 years ago, Operation Rice Bowl has been making a difference in people's lives around the world, thanks to the support of Catholic schools and parishes like yours.

Operation Rice Bowl has helped fund hundreds of development projects overseas such as:

- Providing clean drinking water.
- Introducing health education.
- Improving agricultural techniques.
- Facilitating small business loans.

And of the $105 million raised through the years, 25% has helped fund programs to improve local communities, too. For example, right here in the Diocese of Charlotte, contributions are disbursed as mini-grants to community groups working toward ending poverty and hunger. But there is still more to be done.

So as Operation Rice Bowl marks its 25th anniversary – with a new look for the new millennium – celebrate what your contribution has done and how your participation can make all the difference in the world.

Brevard parishioner inspired by Day's example

By DIANNE RIGGS
Correspondent

BREVARD — There are people who come into others' lives — miraculously, in person, or through the printed page — who, by what they say and who they embody, call people beyond themselves, closer to what God would have them become.

Connie Nash, a soft-spoken Brevard homemaker, writer and social activist, found such a person in the late Dorothy Day, who has been voted by Catholic scholars as the most important Catholic lay person of the 20th century.

"Through Dorothy Day's writings and journals, I learned that Christ's love for the disinherited is the core of the Gospel," said Nash. "No human being who has ever lived on earth is less than loved by God.

"Christ came to love the poorest of the poor, the most voiceless, the most angry, the most evil. Christ came for the least among us."

Dorothy Day, a Catholic social reformer, was one of those persons whose life touched the Church in significant ways. Her tireless work among the poor, the laborers, the disenfranchised, as well as, in picket lines, peaceful demonstrations and the Catholic Worker newspaper, left an indelible mark on the Catholic understanding of works of mercy.

Day lived in community with the homeless at Hospitality House, which she and Peter Maurin had begun in the slums of New York and became the model for Catholic Worker houses across America, according to Nash.

"Through Dorothy Day's writings and journals, I learned that Christ's love for the disinherited is the core of the Gospel. No human being who has ever lived on earth is less than loved by God."

— Connie Nash

There she came to know and love the disinherited from the streets, breaking bread and delighting in their personal histories, sharing in their problems, joys and gifts. Taking her cue from Christ himself, she found no one unlovable.

Like Day, Nash and her physician husband have chosen to embrace a lifestyle in solidarity with the poor. Early in their marriage, they were missioners to Nigeria. They live in a modest home and work in a modest office. Of their four children, three were adopted.

"My greatest joys have come from sharing community with people, including our own children, of different races, ethnic backgrounds, social classes and countries," said Nash. Indeed, the Nash residence has housed many people with nowhere else to go. Their dinner table has always been ready for the unexpected guest.

"Instead of staying within the protected church institutions, Day and Maurin embraced the suffering in the streets inspired by Christ himself," said Nash. "They provided a vehicle for lay people to minister to the poor in a way that had only been done historically in American Catholicism through the religious orders."

Connie Nash, a fairly recent convert to Catholicism, says she was influenced in part by Dorothy Day. She and her husband have chosen to embrace a lifestyle in solidarity with the poor.

Nash attributes her fairly recent conversion to the Catholic Church (she is a member at Sacred Heart parish in Brevard) in part to Day's influence.

"Dorothy Day, like me, had the intuition that the best place for her to blossom was within Catholicism," said Nash.

Day had an enormous respect for the Sacraments, hierarchy, basic doctrines and spiritual life of the Church. She was also an avid reader of the Bible, said Nash.

Day brought Nash another realization: that much beauty and treasure is to be found in the hearts and lives of those who are shy or can't get out of their home, or whom others might pass by as inconsequential.

"Sometimes the most dear and compassionate are without the resources we think are essential," said Nash.

"Dorothy Day thought we needed to be creative and original in living out the Gospel in our own place in history — following the lead of the Holy Spirit," said Nash. "She was unafraid to do what she believed in, even if she was the only one doing it."

Following her mentor's lead, Nash began an AA-like group for black alcoholics in her town. She held day camps and motivational groups for high-risk youth, both boys and girls. "Dorothy Day showed me that if you see a need and your heart is in it, just do it," Nash said. "You only need your heart and God — and then go and do."

At present, Nash is hard at work seeking the abolition of the death penalty, through writings, demonstrations, friendships with victims' families and friendships with death row inmates and their families. She is also writing a novel corresponding to the above.

"One of the most glaring instances of the disinherited of our culture today is the growing prison population," said Nash. "We're hiding our mistakes, our problems — ones we don't want to look at. We're executing the least salvageable, and we think by this, we can erase our society's mistakes." ▼

Catholic Social Services presents ninth-annual Beatty Award; annual gala ascends with Wings of Hope

By JOANN S. KEANE
Editor

CHARLOTTE — In acceptance comments of Catholic Social Services' annual award, Mecklenburg County manager Gerald G. "Jerry" Fox drew parallel to a prayer of the late Dorothy Day with a community where he sees needs.

His timing was impeccable. Last month, the Vatican approved opening the cause for Day's canonization, while a recent news report called her ability to see Jesus in the weakest of his brothers and sisters and her realization of the call to right injustice an inspiration to the world. In her lifetime, Day worked tirelessly for justice.

In her prayer Embracing the Outcasts, Day petitioned God to "help us to embrace the outcasts of society."

"Where in Charlotte-Mecklenburg do we find those in need of embracing?" was the rhetoric posed by Fox. For the outcasts of society, Fox suggests compassion.

In further alliance with Day's prayer for the people, he pointed to a need to break down barriers that divide a growing disparity of wealth within the community [and nation]; crossing the thresholds of prejudice; and feeding each other in the likes of senior nutrition sites, soup kitchen, homeless shelters and in schools.

Not unlike the Catholic Social Worker who died in 1980.

Nearly 400 CSS staff, civic and community leaders, family, friends and associates of Fox attended the April 1 Wings of Hope reception and dinner at Founders Hall in the Bank

Vatican installs metal detectors around St. Peter's Square

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Significantly raising its security profile ahead of the arrival of Easter Week pilgrims, the Vatican installed airport-style metal detectors and X-ray machines around St. Peter's Square. The new security measures were expected to be operational as soon as technicians finished testing the equipment, said Passionist Father Ciro Benedettini, a Vatican spokesman. No specific threat had prompted the changes, the spokesman told Catholic News Service April 3. Italian police officials, responsible for security in St. Peter's Square, had asked for the devices because of larger-than-usual crowds of pilgrims in the jubilee year, he said.

South African bishop urges continued aid for Mozambique

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — A South African bishop said it was crucial "that there is the political will to keep aid flowing" to Mozambique so that people there can rebuild their lives after severe flooding. "There is concern that, when the cameras go, the help will stop," said Bishop Kevin Dowling of Rustenburg, who heads the Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference's justice and peace commission. He said many of the land mines laid in Mozambique during a 16-year civil war that ended in 1992 might have been displaced by rushing floodwaters, increasing the danger to people returning to their homes.

Irish prelate urges disassociation from Magnificat Meal Movement

DUBLIN, Ireland (CNS) — Archbishop Desmond Connell of Dublin urged Catholics to disassociate themselves from the Magnificat Meal Movement and its Australian founder and leader. Archbishop Connell repeated the views expressed by Australian Bishop William Morris of Toowoomba, who launched an investigation into alleged visionary Debra Geileskey and into her movement, which claims to have thousands of members in 62 countries, including Ireland, where there are at least 300 members. Geileskey visited Ireland in late March. Based in Australia at Our Lady's Mount in Helidon, a small town about 60 miles from Melbourne, some of the movement's members dress in habits and describe themselves as "slaves of the Eucharist."

East Timorese refugees must be allowed to return, says bishop

DILI, East Timor (CNS) — The 100,000 East Timorese refugees residing in Indonesia-controlled western Timor must be allowed to return to their country and not be forced to resettle in other parts of Indonesia, said Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo, apostolic administrator of Dili. "No forced resettlement must be permitted. I know that many want to come home, and they have not yet been given the freedom to do so," Bishop Belo said. The bishop called on the international community to pressure the Indonesian government to not resettle the East Timorese should the refugees not leave the camps in western Timor by the end of March. Indonesia has said that it would cut off all humanitarian aid to refugees March 31.

Supreme Court tackles prayer before football games

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Supreme Court, having barred organized school prayer from public school classrooms and graduation ceremonies, must now decide if it will allow student-led prayers over the public address system before football games. In oral arguments before the court March 29, most of the justices seemed hesitant to allow this now-suspended policy of a pre-game invocation in a Texas school district to resume. The court's ruling on the case, which is expected by early July, could have a significant impact in the ongoing debate over religion in public schools.

Successor to Archbishop Tutu urges moral responsibility

WORCESTER, Mass. (CNS) — "Seek 'ubuntu.'" This was the message Anglican Archbishop Winston Hugh Njongonkulu Ndungane of Cape Town, South Africa, brought to Worcester State College. Loosely translated, "ubuntu" means to have compassion and fairness and to have good morals — themes the archbishop explored March 21 as guest speaker at the college's annual Academic Honors Convocation. "With ubuntu as your guide in life you won't make big bucks," said the archbishop, successor to Archbishop Desmond Tutu. "But all of us will become richer. You will satisfy your most essential self. And we will share together in the fulfillment of humanity."

Denials of genocide are 'madness,' says editor of new encyclopedia

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Whether a denial of genocide is rooted in malevolent bigotry, opportunistic gain or popular skepticism, it "is madness to begin with," said the editor in chief of a new two-volume "Encyclopedia of Genocide." "It appeals to everything ugly or violent, just as genocide, Holocaust, is madness," said Israel W. Charny in a March lecture at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington. He is executive director of the Institute on the Holocaust and Genocide in Jerusalem and professor of psychology and family therapy at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. The encyclopedia was published in December by ABC-CLIO.

Sri Lanka bishop, at rally, appeals for end to 17-year war

JAFFNA, Sri Lanka (CNS) — Bishop Thomas Savundaranayagam of Jaffna called for an end to the 17-year war in Sri Lanka at a peace rally in Jaffna attended by 6,000 people. "The conflict has been going on for many years with suffering increasing year by year," said Bishop Savundaranayagam, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. The bishop urged all concerned leaders to stop hostilities and war, to seek a negotiated settlement to the conflict and to ask for a third party to help in the peace process. "While we earnestly desire for peace, let us ask what we ourselves can do to bring about peace," he told the mid-March rally organized by the Peoples' Committee for Peace and Goodwill in collaboration with at least 60 organizations.

Shelby seniors find fountain of youth

By ALESHA M. PRICE

SHELBY — As the years go by, many people dream of the day when they can step off of the beaten path to explore the woods around them. Retirement — a period of rest, a time to travel and a reward for working. However, many wonder what they can do after leaving work permanently. This is not the case for seniors from St. Mary Church in Shelby and Christ the King Church in Kings Mountain, involved in an organization that keeps them feeling "young at heart."

"Even though I am retired, I still stay so busy. I wonder how did I get everything done when I was working," joked Sylvia Kaiser. "Now, I can do the things I like doing."

After meeting with the diocesan Task Force on Aging in 1997, out of which diocesan Elder Ministry was created, Louise McMurry brought the idea of beginning an organization for seniors in their parish to a steering committee made up of Sylvia Kaiser, the current chairperson, Ann Quire, Yvonne Nuhrah, Bill and Kathy Campbell, Velma Skibo, Evelyn and Bill Hill, and Pat and Dave Hobart, explained McMurry.

One of the objectives of the task force meeting was to identify and work to service the needs of seniors in each parish, said Sandra Breakfield, diocesan director of Elder Ministry.

"We in Elder Ministry work as a support to parishes in forming, promoting and nurturing elder groups as we help them assess the needs of elders in their parishes and look with them for ways to address those needs," continued Breakfield.

The nameless group from the Shelby parish and mission started having meetings in 1998, and a year later, Dot McNamara, one of the current committee members from Christ the King Church, came up with the title "Young at Heart."

"We are a senior citizen group, yet we are young in our hearts," said Dot McNamara. "I certainly don't feel old."

St. Mary Church and Christ the King Church parishioners participate in the Soup and Substance program on March 22. The Young at Heart group sponsored the Wednesday night Lenten event.

"We are a senior citizen group, yet we are young in our hearts," said McNamara. "I certainly don't feel old."

"Young at Heart" is for men and women age 60 and older; it serves as a time for the area's older Catholics to socialize and evangelize. The 14-member committee helps to plan the events and serve as advisors. The group is still in its early stages but has plans for more activities and events.

"Everyone really enjoys it, and we do things in the middle of the day because it is so much easier to travel," said McMurry. "We would rather eat a big meal in the middle of the day, and nighttime driving is difficult."

During the first year, there were spiritual and social gatherings, but as the numbers grew, Kaiser noticed a pattern. "I have heard from people in my age group and older that they want to relax and have a good time now that they are retired. People want friendship and socializing; they want to have fun now, but they also want to enhance their spirituality" she said.

She and the committee members have started sending invitations to the parish seniors to inform them of diocesan and parish-level events. "Invitations make people think of a party," added Kaiser.

The numbers have grown over the past few months through the efforts of the committee. They have sponsored the parish "Soup and Substance" program and have participated in the Day of Reflection in Hickory and will be attending the Spring Fling in Hickory. They took part in the Stations of the Cross on Ash Wednesday with lunch afterward and had a soup and sandwich luncheon with door prizes and bingo and a coffee and dessert social.

"I am really pleased that people are interested, and there is a great appeal in our parish to have the get-togethers," said Quire, one of the committee members. "We did a survey to ask about people's hobbies and interests, and we are working to organize groups according to similar interests."

Some of the groups already in place are golf and bridge, and upcoming groups will include crafts and travel.

Committee member Evelyn Hill said, "This gives us an opportunity to keep in touch with people in our own age group in the community and in church. We can also enhance our spirituality, even at our age."

McMurry is pleased with the growth of the senior group and the presence of couples. "This is one of the few organizations in which couples work so well together. There is a lot of husband and wife teamwork," she said.

As for what keeps these seniors feeling young at heart, Kaiser and McMurry said their grandchildren keep them feeling youthful, while McNamara said the ordinary things make her happy. Pat Hobart sweetly admitted that her husband and her good marriage have a lot to do with her staying young at heart. ▼

Sister Genevieve Noonan dies at age 81

EMMITSBURG, Md. — Sister Genevieve Noonan, a Daughter of Charity who spent 12 years ministering to the poor in Greensboro, died on Feb. 14, 2000, at Villa St. Michael, the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul province's retirement residence in Emmitsburg for the elderly and infirm sisters. She was 81 years old, and she was a Daughter of Charity for 62 years.

A native of Richmond, Va., Sister Genevieve was born on Jan. 16, 1917. She entered the Daughters of Charity in 1937. She received a bachelor's degree from St. Joseph College in Emmitsburg in 1950, and a master's degree in religion from LaSalle College in Philadelphia.

Sister Genevieve spent 60 years as a Daughter of Charity serving the poor and homeless in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts. She was stationed at St. Mary Church in Greensboro during her 12 years in North Carolina, and she was quoted in a 1987 Portsmouth, Va., newspaper article to say that she considered the Greensboro residents she knew as her family.

While most of her career was in social ministry, she also served in pastoral ministry and as a teacher in numerous elementary schools in the province. From 1987-97, she served at Immaculate Conception Center in Baltimore in parish ministry and as director of outreach. In her desire to serve and be of service to the poor and homeless, Sister Genevieve lived the charism of the Daughters of Charity.

Sister Genevieve Noonan

A wake service was held at Villa St. Michael Feb. 17, and a Mass of Christian burial was celebrated Feb. 18 at the Basilica of the National Shrine of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton in Emmitsburg.

A daughter of the late John Joseph and Genevieve Bozzelli Noonan, Sister Genevieve was preceded in death by two brothers and one sister. Her nearest living relative is a niece, Patricia Kirkpatrick of Fairfax, Va.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Sisters Support Fund for the Elderly and Infirm, 333 S. Seton Ave., Emmitsburg, Md. 21727. ▼

of America Corporate Center in Charlotte.

Fox, who will retire this fall after four decades of civil service — including 20 years as a county manager — is a member of St. Peter Catholic Church, where he serves as lector and eucharistic minister. He is a member of the Diocese of Charlotte's Vision 2000 committee and the Catholic-Lutheran Dialogue, and he works with Habitat for Humanity.

Fox and his wife, Dee, are parents to three sons and one daughter.

Under Fox's administration, Mecklenburg County received national attention as an All-American City in 1990. Mecklenburg is one of 12 counties nationwide to maintain a AAA bond rating from two rating agencies: Standard & Poors, and Moody's.

The Colonel Francis J. Beatty Award — established in 1991 — is presented annually to an individual whose strong religious faith promotes effective church and public service in Mecklenburg County.

The late Colonel Beatty served as a U.S. Army Officer in three wars. He was involved in textile, trucking and warehouse industries. A Knight of Malta, Beatty delivered hot meals to shut-ins until his death at age 89.

Fox was introduced by last year's recipient, Jan Valder Offerman, and joins a line-up of former recipients: Diane English, Mercy Sister Mary Thomas Burke, Peter Keber, John Engler, Ray Ferris, Chuck Grace and Jim Babb.

This year's CSS gala was renamed Wings of Hope. Along with a new name, a change in format and venue fell into place. The former dinner and presentation were revamped, adding a silent auction and live entertainment.

Dr. Paul Wadell to present at Oratory

ROCK HILL, S.C. — Dr. Paul Wadell is the speaker for the "Visions in Faith" program this June at the Rock Hill Oratory. The annual conference on faith and doctrine is scheduled for June 11-14 at the Pope John Center at the Oratory. "Friendship in the Christian Life" is the topic for Wadell's examination of the moral life for contemporary Christians. "It will examine both what it means to think of the Christian life as a life of friendship with God, and why so much of our own moral and spiritual development takes place in the deepest and most lasting of our lives," Wadell said of the program. "Attention will also be given to what this model of friendship means for the church today, and the virtues such friendships both require and encourage."

Paul Wadell currently teaches theology at St. Norbert College in DePere, Wis. He taught Christian Ethics at the Catholic Theological Union in Chicago from 1983-97, and his articles in the moral field are widely published. He is the author of four books, and he earned his doctorate from the University of Notre Dame in Indiana.

"Visions in Faith" is a yearly gathering for continuing education in doctrinal and moral faith. The course especially enriches the ministries of teachers, preachers and those involved in faith formation, parish, campus and social ministries. The seven sessions are offered in late afternoons, from 4-5:30 p.m., and evenings, from 7-9 p.m.

For information on registration, tuition, and room and board options, contact The Oratory, Center for Spirituality, Box 11586, Rock Hill, S.C., or call Sarah Morgan weekday mornings at (803) 327-2097. ▼

Pilot praises priest's airborne medical ministry in Tanzania

ST. LOUIS (CNS) — Wayne Collins has seen the world — twice when flying his single-engine plane around the world, and several other times when taking trips across the ocean.

One of the most impressive places Collins has visited is the jungle of Tanzania, where physician-priest Father Pat Patten runs the Flying Medical Service.

"The work they're doing there is fantastic," Collins told the St. Louis Review, archdiocesan newspaper. "You should see how much good they are doing."

Collins, a 75-year-old Texan, delivered an airplane to Father Patten in January. Collins is a volunteer pilot with Wings of Hope, a St. Louis-based nonsectarian organization that refurbishes planes for bush-type flying.

Archbishop Justin F. Rigali of St. Louis had blessed and dedicated Father Patten's Cessna 206 after the plane was rebuilt and modified at the Wings' hangar at Spirit of St. Louis Airport in Chesterfield.

The next step was for Collins and Bill Bancroft of Madison, Wis., 67, to fly the plane halfway around the world on an 11,000-mile trek.

The pilots took a northern route to avoid areas over Africa where permission to enter the air space is routinely denied because of civil wars or security concerns. The two men flew to Maine, then on to Newfoundland. From there they went southeast to the Azores for an overnight stay on the island of Mallorca. The next day they continued east to the Greek island of Crete, then turned south to Luxor, Egypt, then to Djiboubti, and across Ethiopia to Nairobi, Kenya.

Father Patten met the pilots when they arrived in Nairobi. Collins returned with the priest to his medical service headquarters outside of Arusha, Tanzania.

"I wanted to spend time in Tanzania to see the areas he's serving, to see where the Matzi tribe is," Collins said.

CNS PHOTO FROM ST. LOUIS REVIEW

Bill Bancroft of Madison, Wis., and Wayne Collins of Mineola, Texas, pose in front of a single-engine plane before taking off from St. Louis in January. They made a 11,000-mile trip to Tanzania to deliver the plane to a priest working with Flying Medical Service.

Father Patten and his two volunteer pilots fly doctors to health clinics and hospitals, covering some 35,000 square miles in northeast Tanzania. The clinics are next to airstrips built by the priest's organization.

Collins said he was impressed with the work at the clinics, especially the prenatal care for pregnant women and inoculation programs. Measles kills about half of those who contract it.

"If they inoculate 500 children, they save 250 lives," Collins said. "That's how dramatic this kind of work can be."

Collins described a day flying with the medical crew. They went to two clinics and treated about 60 patients. Four people were transported to the hospital and a woman and her two babies released from the hospital were flown back to their village.

Father Patten and his pilots "fly an unusual amount — way above most planes doing this kind of work," Collins explained. "They're short hops, often 20 or 30 minutes, but it would take days by foot."

Some trips are for medical emergencies, such as the time Father Patten's quick response saved the life of a girl. Her head had been crushed when she was attacked by a hyena. She is expected to make a full recovery, Collins noted.

The priest's work is linked closely with the Arusha Diocese. The medical service compound is on 12 acres and includes a school, where tailoring, masonry, carpentry and mechanics are taught. Collins, who is not Catholic, attended Mass celebrated by Father Patten.

Collins has retired "two or three times" from retail and banking businesses in Mineral, Texas. Even now in retirement, he is as busy as ever as a volunteer with Wings of Hope and is proud to serve the organization.

"If I wasn't impressed with the way they maintain their planes I wouldn't fly them," he said.

Wings of Hope has about 175 volunteers, many of them McDonnell-Douglas retirees who have been around aviation nearly all their lives.

Collins' next trip is expected to be across the Pacific. "They said stand by," he said. ▼

Crystal goblets sparkle expectantly on the counter. The host stands unsteadily on a stool and reaches into the depths of a high cabinet.

The wine had been a gift from a knowledgeable and generous friend, its label bearing dignified testimony to its excellence. After suitable expressions of gratitude, it had been put away for a special occasion. Many had come and gone, but none had seemed fully worthy of such fine wine. Now the moment is here, and the host smiles to think how pleased the guests will be.

The bottle is carefully lifted from its dark haven and brought forth. The host wipes off accumulated dust, then draws the cork.

Open at last, the wine is allowed to "breathe" for a bit, then ceremoniously poured into waiting glasses. The diners lift them to the light, swirling the red wine, and a noble toast is offered. They drink.

Their faces tell the tale. Involuntarily cheeks twist, and eyes shut, and lips purse at the sour taste in their mouths. The glorious wine, so carefully saved for just the right moment, has gone bad. The guests swallow it courteously and try to return their faces to neutral. No one wants more.

Jesus warns us in today's Gospel that a grain of wheat — or a gift for service or a life of faith — finds its purpose only in the death-defying act of being buried, immersed in the tomb-like confines of ordinary earth, ordinary life. Only in being spent does the gift bear fruit.

The supernova of Easter light is visible only after the Good Friday darkness of disappointment, rejection and loss endured for the sake of love. May our impulse to hoard our gifts, to prize security over discipleship, not blind us to Christ's invitation to follow him through the sorrow of the cross to the glory of resurrected life. ▼

Questions:

What gifts have you been saving for just the right moment? Where might they fruitfully be opened and shared with others?

Devotional Bible for Catholic women to be published

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (CNS) — A new devotional Bible especially for Catholic women will be published in September by Zondervan Publishing House in Grand Rapids.

The more than 1,700-page "Catholic Women's Devotional Bible," which will sell for $24.99, features 260 daily meditations drawn from classic and contemporary sources.

It also includes 52 meditative weekend devotions that summarize a week of devotions and encouraged an activity designed to help the reader apply a biblical principle to her life.

Its editors hope the Bible will aid in answering women's questions about a number of everyday life issues including their relationship with their spouses, raising their families, career pressures, and finding personal fulfillment.

Ann Spangler, general editor of the Bible, said women today want to understand the roots of their faith and their own spirituality.

"In Catholic circles over the last 20 years there has been a huge increase and interest in spirituality, as evident in the expansion and variety of books and other resources now available," she said. "But no such Bible has been readily available to Catholic women to encourage and strengthen readers in their pursuit of holy and godly living."

Ways to be useful in retirement

By VICTOR PARACHIN
Catholic News Service

When a young mother died giving birth to her third daughter, there was no one in the family able or willing to take care of the three girls. While other family members hesitated, one woman — the 83-year-old great-grandmother — came forward to open her home to them. She lived another 16 years, dying at age 99, but living long enough to parent each of those girls into their teen years.

That remarkable "senior" citizen is an inspiring example of the reality that there is more to retirement than golf games, rocking chairs, television viewing and boredom. Today, more and more people are living longer, healthier lives than ever before in our history.

With many experiencing good health and financial stability, retirees today are ready for interesting, challenging and meaningful pursuits.

Here are some ways to live a retirement that is both useful and busy with a purpose:

• Become a person of regular, disciplined prayer. While Christians are called and urged to be persons of prayer and while prayer is an indispensable part of Christian living, many people experience difficulty finding time for prayer. Retirement, bringing an end to rigid schedules determined by outside forces, provides more time for prayer.

Retirees often have the time and talent to pursue community activities like neighborhood beautification projects.

Offer yourself and your day to God's holy use. Mornings, for example, speak of praise, wonder and gratitude, while the mid-day is an ideal time to pause, pray, reflect on God's love, goodness and guidance. The evening can become a sacramental time when one can whisper "thank you" messages for the blessings of the preceding 12 hours and can ask for forgiveness for mistakes and/or missed opportunities.

• Become a "prayer warrior," championing the cause of the sick, the anxious, the grieving, the troubled by bringing them and their issues before God in prayer.

• Let your retired life be a blessing upon others. Be creative and intentional about letting your life become a source of blessings upon other lives. Consider ways in which you have had a real impact on people's lives in the past and how you can draw upon those experiences to do so in retirement.

• Clean up the environment. Caring for the environment is one way in which one person can have a significant effect to help reverse decades of pollution, neglect and abuse. One retired couple walk four miles every morning beginning at 5:30. As they walk, one of them carries a large trash bag while the other picks up trash and litter they find on their route. Caring for your property and lending a hand when neighborhood beautification projects come up are other ways to make a positive impact on the area living space.

• Provide practical help to your children and grandchildren. Take an interest in and discuss ways in which you can provide material and emotional support to the next generations. Many retirees spend time caring for grandchildren on a full-time or occasional basis, providing needed care where no other exists or a needed and appreciated break to the parents. Yet, the most important element is the sharing of life that seniors have the opportunity to with young people, to the enhancement of both generations.

• Utilize your life experience by volunteering your time. There are many civic and religious organizations which seek to serve others, but must do so with limited funds. There

WHAT'S YOUR IMPACT?

Make a positive one in your community!

- Read for the blind
- Coach athletic teams
- Volunteer at a soup kitchen
- Mentor young people
- Tutor struggling students
- Teach the skills you have
- Volunteer at an animal shelter
- Shelve books at the library
- Join community programs like "Big Brother" or "Big Sister" is an overwhelming need for help and always a desperate shortage of volunteers for the many organizations devoted to helping others. Usually no experience is necessary and many organizations offer training when necessary.

Here are just a few ways retired people are making a positive impact by volunteering their time: reading for the blind; coaching athletic teams; feeding the hungry at soup kitchens; mentoring young people; tutoring struggling students; being a "Big Brother" or "Big Sister"; teaching quilting, cooking, sewing or other skills; staffing an animal shelter; shelving books at the public library; and, being a docent at a museum or zoo.

Other volunteer options an be explored through your church, senior center, hospital, family service agencies, Catholic Charities, or nursing homes. Keep in mind that you have much to offer and that volunteering provides you with an opportunity to make new friends, stay connected and make a positive impact on other lives.

Finally, when considering ways to have a successful, creative and meaningful retirement, be guided by this wisdom from Gen. Douglas MacArthur: "Nobody grows old by merely living a number of years. People grow old by deserting their ideals. Years may wrinkle the skin, but to give up interest wrinkles the soul. You are as young as your faith, as old as your doubt; as young as your self-confidence, as old as your fear; as young as your hope, as old as your despair." ▼

Plan ahead to ensure milestones are memorable

By MARK PATTISON
Catholic News Service

Too often the lament is uttered, "Oh, we only get together at weddings and funerals."

It doesn't have to be that way, as there are plenty of milestones that are occasions for getting together and sharing memories and good times. If you want others to share in your joy, you can plan ahead to ensure that your joy will spread to others. Sometimes, others will do it for you.

When my mother celebrated her 65th birthday, my brother and I took charge. When an aunt and uncle of mine celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary, they were the guests of honor at a surprise party.

What are some things that should go on the to-do list to make sure your celebration goes off without a hitch?

Decide what kind of celebration you're going to plan: formal or informal; sit-down dinner, buffet, pot-luck or dessert-only; several hundred in attendance or immediate family. As part of these decisions, determine the budget with which you will work. Budgetary considerations as well as the amount of help you will have to make arrangements will be major factors in determining the way you will be able of celebrate.

Identify who should be on the invitation list, those who truly will be able to celebrate the guest or guests of honor. Make sure invitations — formal or informal — are sent out with plenty of notice in order that guests may plan to attend and make appropriate travel arrangements, if needed.

Reserve the space where the celebration will take place, whether that's a hall, a hotel ballroom or the home of a family member or friend. Make sure that there is enough space for the number of people you want to attend. Remember the larger and more complex the event, the more important it is to plan in advance with enough time to secure necessary reservations.

In choosing when to hold the celebration, you have to balance the desire to schedule it on the milestone date itself and to schedule it on a day and time most convenient for the most people and/or the most important people to be present. You might want to consider holding the observance on a Sunday afternoon so attendees can go the church first or even to connect the family event to the larger Catholic community celebration of the Mass.

Gifts can range from the modest to the extravagant. For my mother's 65th birthday, my brother and I purchased her a new color television. A cousin suggested a "money tree," to which guest can attach bills of any denomination. It helped my widowed mother pay for a new roof on her house.

My uncle and aunt had their surprise anniversary recorded with a video camera and were given a gift of the tape. When they protested that they didn't have anything to play it on, they were presented with the next surprise: a television-videocassette recorder combination, for which all of the nieces and nephews contributed.

One last tip to make sure the milestone celebration will be remembered in as much detail as possible: Have available a number of videocameras and cameras and plenty of film. ▼

Caution needed to play the sweepstakes game without losing your shirt

By PATRICIA ZAPOR
Catholic News Service

The oversized envelope promises riches beyond your dreams.

"Guaranteed prize winner."

"Reply immediately to improve your chances."

"Official winner notification."

What the envelope's contents won't say quite so clearly, however, is that you probably stand a better chance of being struck by lightning than of being the "guaranteed winner."

There are indeed some huge prizes being awarded through legitimate sweepstakes promotions. But, there are far more phony or, at best, misleading contests, sweepstakes and "give-aways" enticing people into buying unwanted products and sending money to scam artists.

Congress, the U.S. Postal Service, attorneys general from at least a dozen states, consumer organizations and lobbyists for direct mail businesses are among those trying to crack down on unscrupulous or outright deceptive sweepstakes programs.

In August 1999, the U.S. Senate passed a bill that would require sweepstakes sponsors to include "clear and conspicuous" messages in mailings telling participants that no purchase is necessary to enter or win a sweepstakes. Violators could face a fine of up to $2 million.

In hearings about the legislation, Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, said the four largest legitimate sweepstakes companies send more than a billion mail solicitations a year. Dozens of smaller companies send out an estimated 100 million more offers and take in $40 million in sales, according to Collins.

That means each year, thousands of people buy something or send in a fee they think they need to pay in order to claim a prize they believe they have won.

Ongoing lawsuits against some sweepstakes companies have highlighted stories of people who were so convinced they have won a valuable prize that they travel across the country to claim their winnings, only to learn they misread the material.

In testimony to the House Government Reform Committee, Chief Postal Inspector Kenneth J. Hunter described recent investigations into direct mail and sweepstakes companies.

Each year, thousands of people buy something or send in a fee they think they need to pay in order to claim a prize they believe they have won.

Typically, according to Hunter, the mailings came in official-looking envelopes, bearing seals resembling government emblems. Some told recipients they had only to send in a "transferal fee," "acquisition fee," "release fee," "redemption fee," or "mandatory processing fee" in order to claim their prize.

After money was sent to the "claim centers," some companies disappeared, only to reappear under other names in other states, Hunter said. Other companies create intricate rules disqualifying entrants who submit their claim in the wrong envelope, for instance.

Besides the actions Congress is taking to help protect consumers, the U.S. Postal Service is teaming up with the American Association of Retired Persons, the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the National Association of Attorneys General to try to make consumers more aware of how to avoid being taken in by unscrupulous sweepstakes and contest pitches, according to Hunter.

In the fall of 1999, the Postal Service was sending every home in the country a card with fraud prevention tips, including an 800 number to call and an address to write for additional information. The agencies also planned to create a fraud Web site with links to the participating organizations, and a video that would be available at 16,000 public libraries and on the Web site.

Information about sweepstakes offers from the Postal Service and the Direct Marketing Association, which represents direct mailers, include:

• Under federal law, no purchase or entry fee is ever necessary to enter a sweepstakes. The odds of winning are supposed to be the same, whether or not you purchase anything from the company.

Separate "yes" and "no" envelopes or stickers are supposed to be used by the companies to sort which entries contain an order to fill, not determine whether entries are included in the contest.

• Lotteries by mail are illegal.

• A legitimate sweepstakes mailing should include the following information: entry procedures; date the contest ends and date by which entries must be received; the number, retail value and complete description of all prizes offered; approximate odds of winning a prize; method by which winners will be selected; eligibility requirements; dates when winners will be selected and notified; information about tax responsibilities of winners; and, a mailing address for participants to request a list of winners.

Information contained in mail-in sweepstakes packages can be confusing and misleading.

If you suspect someone you know may have fallen prey to unscrupulous sweepstakes companies, short of initiating legal action to take over a loved one's finances, the Direct Marketing Association suggests:

• Volunteer to help the person sort through sweepstakes offers. Point out that no purchase is necessary in legitimate offers.

• Offer to help the person with his or her finances to determine whether excessive amounts of money is being spent to "qualify" for contests or sweepstakes.

• Contact a consumer protection organization or group such as the AARP, which may provide volunteers for advice. ▼

Myths about cost of health care for seniors shrouds issue's moral dimension

By AGOSTINO BONO
Catholic News Service

"Nothing is sure but death and taxes," goes a traditional American adage.

But a variation of this may be on the horizon as the United States moves into the third millennium: "Do we want to spend tax money to postpone death?"

The question arises as the ongoing revolutionary advances in medicine and medical technology prolong life but at spiraling costs, producing fears that Medicare bills will soar, burdening younger taxpayers. The issue also has its political dimensions as lawmakers debate using significant chunks of projected budget surpluses to revitalize and reform economically crunched Medicare programs.

Advocates for the elderly say that the economic and political considerations often are twisted around popular misconceptions about the Medicare costs for a graying America and their true weight in the financing of overall health care.

Often shrouded by the economics and politics of Medicare are the moral and social dimensions of health care for the elderly.

The U.S. Catholic bishops are among the supporters of fortifying Medicare.

"In this time of projected budget surpluses, I urge you to dedicate a portion of those surpluses to strengthening the financial stability of the Medicare program," said Cardinal Roger M. Mahony, chairman of the U.S. bishops Domestic Policy Committee, in a July 1999 letter to members of Congress.

The cardinal's letter said improvements in Medicare are needed to foster the common good and respect for the human dignity of the more vulnerable members of society.

He asked legislators to "protect seniors and disabled recipients who have limited financial resources by subsidizing their premium contributions and copays for both current and new benefits" and to ensure that future Medicare benefits "reflect the advances in medical care, including the increased and cost-efficient use of pharmaceutical therapy, often as an alternative to expensive hospitalizations."

Patricia King, policy adviser to the bishops on health and welfare issues, elaborated on the cardinal's letter. She cited studies on the stability of health care costs for the elderly over the past 20 years.

One study, published in 1993 in the New England Journal of Medicine, found no evidence that seniors in the last year of life accounted for a larger share of Medicare expenditures than in the years prior to the rapid advances in technology.

A report published in 1998 by the Alliance for Aging Research, an independent citizen advocacy organization promoting health research on the elderly, criticizes what it calls "myths" about the high cost of Medicare programs.

Dr. Gene Cohen, chairman of the panel conducting the report, said the "myths" are being propagated as a "politics of blame" against the elderly.

"It appears that age alone is not a reliable predictor of medical-care outcomes or expenditures, nor is health care at advanced ages usually characterized by recourse to futile expensive technologies," said Cohen, director of George Washington University's Center on Aging, Health and Humanities in Washington and former director of the National Institute on Aging.

Even putting limits on health care for the elderly near the end of life would not significantly save Medicare money, said the alliance report. "If care had been cut off to the 3.5 percent of Medicare patients who were high-cost users in 1993 and who died in that year, national health care costs would have fallen only slightly, from $900 billion to $895 billion. The savings would have amounted to one-half of 1 percent of total U.S. health care expenditures for that year," it added.

The alliance report also criticized the belief that "as the population ages, health care costs for the elderly will necessarily overwhelm and bankrupt the nation."

The alliance report notes, however, that between 1986 and 2040, the United States is projected to have an increase of one-quarter of 1 percent in

Parish ministry to seniors urged to move beyond bingo, buses and brownies

By MAUREEN E. DALY
Catholic News Service

At the beginning of the 20th century, one in every 25 Americans was 65 years or older. Today, one in eight — a total of 34.1 million Americans — has reached that milestone. A person who reaches 65 can expect on average to live another 17 years; many live well beyond that.

How are parishes responding to this change? Is senior adult ministry just "Bingo, buses and brownies?"

While older adults do need the opportunity to socialize together, experts agree they need much more than that from the parish, and the parish should ask much more of them.

The U.S. Bishops' Committee on the Laity suggests that parish ministry to older persons be guided by these five principles:

• Older people are providers, not just recipients, of pastoral care. The parish must look beyond serving seniors to embracing them.

• Older people themselves should help identify their pastoral needs and decide how they are met.

• As seniors may differ in age from each other by more than 20 years, older people are as diverse, if not more so, than other generational groups.

• Older people need a mix of activities that connect them with each other as well as the larger faith community, and need those activities to be physically accessible to all.

• Spiritual health is affected by and affects the individual's physical, emotional, mental and social health. Parishes cannot be expected to answer these needs but they should be prepared to direct older people to assistance and to advocate for older people with the wider community.

"Senior adult ministry is going to be as big or bigger than youth ministry and we have to be prepared for that," said Richard Johnson, a gerontologist specializing in the spiritual life of older adults.

Johnson founded the Association for Senior Adult Ministry, based in Wildwood, Mo., "to raise the spiritual fare that is offered to senior adults at the parish level by providing good tools for parish ministers to work with."

The association trains parish workers "to understand senior adults' real needs on a spiritual level, to develop relationships with senior adults and to see retirement living as a spiritual journey," he said.

The organization publishes Well, Wise and Whole Monthly, which provides parish ministers with curriculum for formal classes, content for a monthly day of prayer and reflection, and literature for the church vestibule and for home visits.

The Diocese of Pittsburgh has created several programs to respond to the changing population. The Elderly Outreach Program trains parish workers to provide service to older and "home-centered" persons.

The diocese's Senior Connection Collaborative was born out of an identified need for coordinated care for persons age 60 and over. The program helps older adults and their families connect with the many services for the elderly: energy assistance, meal delivery, budget counseling, legal services, transportation, home health care and other practical matters.

With the average retirement age today being 57.5 years, Johnson asked, "What are they doing with their time?"

"The culture says to them 'Go play.' But the church," he said, "should have a more challenging answer than that."

"Any church that is serious about development and evangelization needs to be serious about ministry to older adults," he said — "development because seniors hold the checkbook, and evangelization because the church has to have expectations for the armies of retiring adults who are now available to spread the Gospel." ▼

the relationship of inactive to active citizens. The report says that this is a manageable rise for a highly industrialized country experiencing economic growth and the rise is less than many other industrialized countries.

On the positive side, there are signs that medical advances and improved health practices are causing serious illnesses to drop in the elderly, which could bring long-term economic relief.

"Data from the National Long-Term Care Survey show that the prevalence of seven chronic conditions — dementia, stroke, arthritis, hardening of the arteries, high blood pressure, circulatory disease and emphysema — declined almost 15 percent among people age 65 and older between 1982 and 1994," the report said.

King noted that medical advances make possible the use of drug therapy and outpatient services for cures that before required the more costly hospitalization.

King said that any balancing act between the health needs of the elderly and the financial concerns of the younger generations must keep in mind the common good and respect for human dignity.

The struggle now is how to balance these needs and concerns, said King.

"People need affectionate caring at the end of life," she said. The common good is also served because "all of us will be vulnerable one day and have to look to the community to provide for us," she said. ▼

Retirement planning requires preparation for future changes

By JULIE ASHER
Catholic News Service

Financial planning for your retirement means the dif ference between enjoying one's golden years and having to scrape by.

When it comes to planning, prospective retirees must prepare for an extended life span, the effects of inflation, future taxes and health costs and changes in life circumstances.

But many Americans really don't want to think about their retirement, said Louise Piazza, a senior program specialist on economic security with the American Association of Retired Persons in Washington.

"We say that people spend more time planning for a two-week vacation than they spend planning for their retirement," she said. "People tend to think they are about 10-15 years younger than they are. Baby boomers, in particular, do not want to think of themselves as retiring. To confront those issues of retirement is to say I'm getting older."

The idea of "getting a handle on your money" can be so overwhelming that many people "just don't do anything," she said, but "it's never too late to start planning."

First, to figure out how much you need to put away through savings, investments and pension funds or to determine if the money you've already socked away is going to be adequate, you need to think about the lifestyle you want for retirement and calculate what that will cost.

For example, deciding whether you want to be near a golf course in North Carolina or you would be content to have a condo in the town where you live now will "drive how much money you'll need," Piazza said.

Remember, your future will cost more. Inflation will make what you save today buy less tomorrow as prices for goods and services continue to increase.

Inflation through most of the century has averaged 3 to 4 percent a year, but it has been as high as 12 percent, said Piazza. In 1990, a pound of regular coffee cost $2.97, the average car was $15,900, and a basic home was $122,900. In 2010, the same pound of coffee will cost $6.50, the car will be $34,840 and the typical home will go for $269,300.

When it comes to planning, prospective retirees must prepare for an extended life span, the effects of inflation, future taxes and health costs and changes in life circumstances.

Piazza also stressed that longevity also must figure into your planning. People are already living far longer than their predecessors, so you may need to stretch your money out over 25, 30, 35 years.

A tool called "Ballpark Estimate" will help you calculate what you are going to need to live the way you want in retirement. It's available from the American Savings Education Council (www.asec.org).

It's a step-by-step work sheet that asks you what annual income you will want in retirement, what income you expect to receive from Social Security, employer pension, part-time income and other income sources, and what your savings totals to date. The council also offers a "retirement readiness" quiz.

Piazza said there are four main sources of money in retirement: Social Security, pensions (either a 401K or a defined benefit plan), personal savings and investments, and work.

"Within five to 10 years of retiring you should have a pretty good idea of what your monthly income is going to be from Social Security and pension (funds)," she added.

Currently Social Security pays the average retiree 40 percent of his or her pre-retirement earnings, but over time that may fall to 20 percent, Piazza noted. To find out about your Social Security benefits will be, call the federal agency at (800) 772-1213 for a free statement.

Your employer should be able to provide you with figures on what you can expect to get from your pension. If you have a 401K, Piazza noted, "you decide what to invest in, stocks, bonds, whatever, so you really have responsibility for how that is allocated."

Beyond investments in the stock market, people also need to have savings, she added. While much of the news these days about this nation's low rate of savings may make the situation seem more dire than it is, Americans clearly are spending more than they should, she added.

Another factor to consider in planning is that your needs during retirement will change. "Plan not only for that period after you retire when you're going to be in pretty good shape," Piazza said, but also for the possibility "you're going to be in a nursing home or assisted living."

Vashishta Bhaskar, a professor of finance at the Catholic-run Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, offered these tips for getting started on a financial plan:

- Make a good estimate of your net worth and do this annually as you move toward retirement.
- Get more conservative in your investments.
- Concentrate on estate planning and tax planning.
- Look at your overall insurance situation, including life, health, disability and long-term care, which "becomes more vital as you get older."
- Start to slowly move about 10 percent of your funds each year from your stock market portfolio to more conservative investments, in fixed income funds. ▼

What's in a name? To Catholic musician Kenny D, not everything

By MARK PATTISON
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — So what's in a name? Easy listening music has its Kenny G. Now, contemporary Christian music has its Kenny D.

The D stands for Discorfano — a mouthful, to be sure. "My friends used to call me Kenny Disco," he said, and he uses that moniker for his personal e-mail address.

In the early 1970s, when he cut a handful of singles for Mercury Records under the guidance of two of the Four Seasons, he was Kenny Russell.

CNS PHOTO

Catholic musician Kenny Discorfano, who goes by the name Kenny D, is breaking in the contemporary Christian music scene at age 54. His debut album is titled "Do You Believe?"

But for Kenny D, it's not so much the name as it is the message in his music.

He made that abundantly clear in a telephone interview with Catholic News Service from his home in Tucson, Ariz.

"Look at the lyrics," he said, talking about his debut album, "Do You Believe?" The CD includes the lyrics to each of the dozen shimmering pop songs on it.

Discorfano's especially fond of the title track that leads off the self-produced album, which he says asks the question, "What kind of a Christian are you actually?"

He says the next song — "You Can Look It Up!" — promotes Bible study. "It's the first song I've ever heard that addresses reading the Bible," he added.

"Momma, I Love You!" is sung from the point of view of the child inside a mother's womb. Discorfano said it was "getting played a lot down South" after this year's March for Life in Washington.

He added he's getting resistance from some Christian radio programmers about "No Man Shall Ever Undo What God Has Joined Together," which deals with the indissolubility of marriage. "Some of the Protestant groups say, 'It's too Catholic for us,'" Discorfano said.

Discorfano is one of the relatively few Catholics trying to hit the big time in the contemporary Christian music industry — an even tougher nut to crack at age 54.

Having just retired as a police captain in his native Lodi, N.J., Discorfano said age isn't that much of a barrier. "Yes, to start a rock group. But not, not when you have Tony Bennett in his 70s singing pop," he said.

He also related a story about how crooner Frank Sinatra once said he wanted to retire after 15 years as a singer, "then he came back at 50 and said, 'I'm not so old after all.'"

Discorfano said he's aiming for the 30-and-up age group with his music, which is being sold by a Nashville label via the Internet.

As for concerts, he said he'd rather wait until "Do You Believe?" had sold a lot of copies, allowing him to be a headliner.

"Local performing doesn't do that much for the record," Discorfano said. "Once you get on the charts you can get on a tour. I want to wait until I can lead the chorus."

One place he said he'd like to play is Israel. He's visited three times and met Christian musicians while he was there. ▼

"The Road to El Dorado"

Tulio, voice by Kevin Kline, offers a gift to El Dorado native Chel, voice by Rosie Perez, in the animated feature film "The Road to El Dorado." Disappointing animated adventure about two Spanish con men (voices of Kenneth Branagh and Kevin Kline) who find El Dorado, the legendary city of gold, but run into trouble when the natives mistake them for gods. As directed by Eric Bergeron and Don Paul, the film has a strong cast of voices and vibrant coloring, but the story sometimes limps and the flat, formulaic music is forgettable. Mild animated violence that may scare younger children and fleeting crass language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope says God wants sinners to convert and be faithful witnesses

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — God does not want to destroy sinners, but to convert them, Pope John Paul II said.

Addressing members of Holy Year pilgrimages from dozens of parishes, dioceses and organizations April 1-2, the pope said, "Only those who really convert can be faithful and credible witnesses to the world.

"This is the true significance of the Holy Year," he told 6,000 people participating in the national pilgrimage of the Czech Republic.

The pope said the Czech Catholic Church, having survived the years of communist persecution, "intends to offer its spiritual treasures to all the people."

The church wants nothing more than to help people realize their dignity as children of God and to offer them guidance and spiritual support as they discern their God-given vocations, he said April 1.

"Unfortunately, a progressive secularization and a widespread moral relativism" are starting to affect not only Czech society in general, but Czech Catholics as well, he said.

Religious education programs must be strengthened, but the first line of defense is strong families that educate their children in perennial moral values, the pope said.

Addressing thousands of visitors in St. Peter's Square April 2, the pope said the midpoint of Lent is a time for Catholics to reflect on the power of God's love, rather than on their own sinfulness and need for conversion. Catholics, he said, should experience a sense of happiness and joy, which "comes from awareness of the mystery of love which is before us."

"God does not want the death of the sinner, but that he converts and lives," the pope said.

"In order to live," Pope John Paul said, "man must turn to him, must abandon the ways which degrade his dignity and return to the house of the father."

The pope prayed the rosary the evening of April 1 with thousands of Rome university students in St. Peter's Square and, via satellite link, with students at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington and at Marian shrines in the Philippines, Brazil, Portugal and Poland.

He told the U.S. students: "Continue to bear witness in your college life and in your daily activities to your faith in Christ.

"Defend and promote respect for the dignity of every human being," he said. "The church and society need such apostles at this time of extraordinary developments in the fields of information technology and bio-medicine."

The pope told the Portuguese students that they and their peers face many challenges, but also many opportunities at this point in their lives.

"Be courageous and faithful to the Gospel," he said.

The Season of Lent

Holy Week in Chiapas, Mexico

Twenty-four years ago, on a hot day in mid-April, I walked down dusty streets behind a man carrying a heavy wooden cross. The town was Socoltenango in southern Mexico, and the man was a farmer from one of the parishes in which Sister Annette and I were serving as members of the pastoral team.

The farmer was wearing a crown of thorns, and along the way, he was beaten by "soldiers" carrying whips made of rope. Along the sides of the roads, many people with compassion written on their faces followed, and several men took turns helping carry the heavy cross.

The procession stopped at a doorway decorated with flowers and branches of palms and banana leaves, and the pastor announced the station and led the prayers. The choir intoned the sorrowful melody of a Lenten hymn, and the procession continued on to the next decorated doorway.

This was my first Lent in Chiapas, Mexico. It has been a memory that I have held dear ever since, because for me, it was the grace of going back to the Holy Land and accompanying Jesus as He suffered and died for us on the first Good Friday almost 2,000 years ago. What had become real to me on those dusty streets was what I had tried to imagine during the Stations of the Cross in my home parish and other parishes where I had been stationed earlier.

Twenty-four years later, I still love the ceremonies of Holy Week. They don't move me in the same way as that first Lent in Chiapas, but I believe that I have grown in the realization that the Jesus who suffered and died almost 2,000 years ago continues to suffer and die in our brothers and sisters alive in the world today.

He is humiliated in the persons who are humiliated by others because of their race or their beliefs or their status in society. He suffers in the poor and the hungry. And He dies in the persons who die because of the violence rampant in our society today.

I wonder, will this Lent touch people, especially us Catholics who have the opportunity of participating in the Lenten ceremonies so rich in tangible symbols? Will we realize that it really is the Jesus whom we know and love who suffered then and who suffers now in our brothers and sisters? As I help with the preparations for this year's Holy Week in the different parishes where I coordinate Hispanic Ministry, I like to pray that the services will be beneficial to all of us and lead us to a deeper awareness of the reality of Jesus' great and unconditional love for us.

Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott is coordinator for Hispanic Ministry in the Hickory Vicariate of the Diocese of Charlotte. She ministered in Chiapas for about seven years and has served in this diocese since 1990.

Carrying the cross for others

"Is that your final answer?" is a statement that is as popular today in our country as the Golden Arches. It is a statement that could have been asked by Pontius Pilate to Jesus, but Scripture tells us that Jesus did not even open His mouth to reply. Instead, we are told He was scourged and spit upon, and a crown of thorns was placed on His head.

The longing to be a millionaire is probably in the heart of most people today. No one wants to be poor, and with the booming economy it is easy to forget that there are homeless and forgotten people. We fail so often to notice that people go to bed hungry every night, can't pay their rent, have inadequate medical attention and are forgotten. But Jesus did not forget. When He placed the cross on His shoulders, He felt the pain of all future generations and loved them with immense compassion.

We feel so powerless, so helpless. We want to do something but are often unable. We are called upon to carry our own cross — the cross of loneliness, the cross of rejection, the cross of our own powerlessness. As Jesus carried the cross for all of us who suffer, during Lent we are reminded that we, too, can join Him in carrying the cross for others. We can suffer in solidarity with them without murmuring or complaining, but in offering it all in union with Him who told us: "Come to me, all you who labor and are overburdened, and I will give you rest."

Across the street from our rectory and church, there is a small shopping center. It houses a Laundromat, as well as a small store where people can purchase some of the small food items they need. It also has a men's club and a topless bar. On many of the nights of the week, we hear gunshots coming from that area. They tell us it is because of the drugs and prostitution in the area. I think then of the poor people who live in this area and are trapped in their homes at night, fearful to venture out.

Some years ago Leonard Bernstein wrote a musical work called "The Mass." Toward the end of the work, the priest, richly dressed in splendid liturgical vestments, is lifted up by his people. He towers high above the adoring crowd, carrying in his hands a glass chalice. Suddenly the pyramid collapses, and the priest comes tumbling down. His vestments are ripped off, and his glass chalice falls to the ground and shatters. As he walks slowly away from the debris of his former glory, we hear singing: "laude, laude, laude — praise, praise, praise." The priest notices the broken chalice. He looks at it for a long time and says: "I never realized that broken glass could shine so brightly."

It speaks of brokenness — the brokenness of our lives, the life of Jesus, the life of all those who suffer. It reminds us that we are the hands and feet and bodies of the Lord here on earth. It reminds us that as we, too, are broken and hopefully healed, we are called upon to do that for our brothers and sisters as well. Let us make ourselves a gift for others.

Light One Candle

Lighting a candle at work

Best-selling author Richard Carlson and I are kindred spirits. His "Don't Sweat the Small Stuff" series of books captures the heart of the Christopher credo — "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." Put simply it means that no amount of worry or complaining ever baked a cake, built a bridge or did anything positive.

At a recent taping of the "Christopher Closeup" television program, Richard and his wife Kris shared with me some of the ways "lighting a candle" can brighten all our relationships. And when our conversation turned to the workplace, where most of us spend an enormous amount of time and energy, their insights were particularly illuminating.

We talked about the simple ways in which stress and conflict can be minimized at work while bringing out the best in ourselves and others. The question wasn't whether or not stress exists in the workplace, but how we deal with it.

Richard asked me to imagine how much energy is expended in being frustrated and angry over relatively minor things. It's exhausting just thinking about it! "Now imagine," he suggested, "what might happen if you use that same energy by taking a positive approach."

Then he recounted a couple of examples from "Don't Sweat The Small Stuff at Work." "Suppose gossip or talking behind others' backs is a problem where you work. Rather than remaining resentful or frustrated that this bad habit exists, see if you can make a tiny dent in the problem.

"Gather together a few of your friends and gently bring the issue to the table. But rather than accusing anyone, focus on your own contribution. Confess that you have been as guilty as anyone else in indulging in occasional gossip, and state that you are going to make a genuine effort not to do so.

"Make your invitation lighthearted and unthreatening. There is solid evidence that people will jump at the opportunity to join you — simply because you have taken the first step."

Richard Carlson told another story about someone making a decision to change things for the better — starting with herself. Sarah, a young woman Richard met at the Department of Motor Vehicles, was the most helpful clerk he'd ever seen. People in her line moved quickly and were smiling and leaving satisfied. He asked her what her secret was.

Sarah explained, "I spent several years putting customers off with the excuse, 'That's not my department.' The truth was, at least half the time, I knew the answer to their questions and could have helped. Practically everyone in line was either mad at me or disgusted by my bureaucratic attitude.

"I became fed up with my sourpuss behavior and decided to change. I help people when I can instead of putting them off. Everything has changed — I feel better about myself, and my job is a lot more fun!"

For most of us, "lighting a candle" begins within ourselves. As Gandhi put it, "You have to be the change you want to see in the world." The good news is, when you do, your work life — in fact, your entire life — becomes more purposeful, less stressful and more fun. And you have that much less to sweat about.

The Passion of Jesus

Andréa, our firstborn, came home after a teen session with Father Terry Tuesday evening deeply touched by what she had experienced. The teen group had re-enacted the passion of Jesus in such a way that they really "got it" this time. She said it was like hearing it for the first time. Somehow life's experiences had given her and her fellow adolescents a context in which the bogus trial, the scourge, the betrayal and crucifixion of Jesus made new sense. The story reached her in a new place and touched her in a new way.

This profound revelation is just one of many she'll experience as the Paschal Mystery opens for her through the stages of life. As parents we too were touched by her newfound understanding of a story that has been told to her all her life.

We reflected on how we have come to know Jesus in small doses through our lives by way of the stories from which we come and in which we live. Some things we just can't "get" because we're not ready for them. Life gives us experiences that help us make meaning of God's story.

For example: though we may grasp the meaning of John 3:16, ("For God so loved the world that he gave his only son, that everyone who believes in him might not perish but might have eternal life."), this verse took on new meaning for us when we became parents. Having a child ourselves gave us a new context in which we better grasped the meaning of God's love for us.

Andréa was moved to tears as she shared with us how she connected with the horror that Jesus experienced through the insults and mockery at the hands of the Romans. But, she really identified with the feeling of betrayal when Jesus' friends disowned him and hid as he suffered a most horrible death.

Friendship is very important to her. The adolescence stage is when we differentiate ourselves from our family. Our peers begin to take on more important roles in our lives. At this stage we experience friendships in new and exciting ways. The betrayal of friends brings a new level of pain. Jesus' friends turned their backs on him. What a horror, particularly in the context of adolescence.

Thank God the story doesn't end here. What does Jesus do after rising from the dead? He goes back to the same friends who had "dissed" him to comfort them, encourage them and give them peace. This reveals, perhaps also in new ways, how radical the gospel of Jesus is, and how God's ways aren't our ways. Most people would find new friends.

As parents we are encouraged by our children's growth in their faith. The context of family life offers us opportunities to find ever-new meaning in the Paschal Mystery through all the stages of life. Though it may never be fully revealed in this life, the Paschal Mystery's unfolding in stages make our faith journey a real adventure.

Those who leave Catholicism for another faith

Q. What is the Roman Catholic Church's policy on the salvation of those who were baptized and raised Catholic, but have left the church to practice another religion? I recall reading once that this is the only sin the Catholic Church does not forgive, or finds it difficult to forgive. Can they ever return to the Catholic Church?

A. Any sincere and knowledgeable Catholic believes that in the Catholic Church there are certain channels of truth and grace and intimacy with Jesus Christ that normally are not present in the traditions, liturgy and life of other churches.

If he did not believe this, one would assume he would belong to another church or to none at all. The same, we presume, would be true of Baptists or Presbyterians or any others who deliberately and prayerfully join another particular denomination.

Our doctrines in this matter are stated often and clearly. We believe that "the one true religion subsists in the catholic and apostolic church," and that truth imposes its demands on the human conscience "by the power of its own truth" and not by coercion. (See Vatican II, "Declaration on Religious Freedom," Art. 1, which is quoted here; and the decrees on ecumenism, Art. 2, and the constitution on the church, "Lumen Gentium," Art. 15.)

In the face of widespread and frequently vicious repression of religious freedom in the world today, however, the Catholic Church is vigorous and urgent in its declarations that people everywhere must be free to exercise their religion as they understand themselves obliged and called by God.

The Catechism of the Catholic Church, for example, has this significant sentence, among others, in connection with salvation inside and outside the church: "Hence they could not be saved who, knowing that the Catholic Church was founded as necessary by God through Christ, would refuse either to enter it or to remain in it" (No. 846, quoting the Vatican II "Dogmatic Constitution on the Church").

If you read that carefully, it states that individuals who do not believe membership in the Catholic Church is a religious obligation for them personally can be saved even if they were members of the Catholic Church but now do not wish "to remain in it."

Perhaps they were never sufficiently educated or committed in their Catholic faith in the first place. Or perhaps something happened to make them lose it. Whatever the reason, the church explicitly recognizes that in this matter the essential requirement is candor, sincerity and truthfulness by the individual before God. And that, of course, is something we cannot judge.

Pope John Paul II repeated this teaching even more plainly as recently as last year. The theme of his message for the World Day of Peace (Jan. 1, 1999) was respect for human rights. In the section on religious freedom, which he called the "heart of human rights," he writes that "no one can be compelled to accept a particular religion, whatever the circumstances or motives."

The inviolability of religious freedom "is such that individuals must be recognized as having the right even to change their religion if their conscience so demands. People are obliged to follow their conscience in all circumstances and cannot be forced to act against it."

Our Holy Father then refers to the Vatican II "Declaration on Religious Freedom," (n. 3) which expands broadly on the same point.

People who have left their practice of the Catholic faith are always welcome to return. It happens a lot.

Kenyan archbishop warns against repeating Ugandan cult tragedy

By JOSEPH NGALA
Catholic News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Archbishop Raphael Ndingi Mwana'a Nzeki of Nairobi urged the government to be on the alert for cultists who could plunge the country into a tragedy like the recent cult killings in Uganda.

Archbishop Ndingi said in early April that Kenyans should learn from what happened in Uganda, where some 900 cult members were systematically killed.

"It happened to our close neighbor Uganda, it can happen here. It has happened elsewhere," the archbishop said.

The prelate said there were so many suspicious people with misleading interpretations of the Bible who could lead others to a situation similar to the Ugandan one.

Archbishop Ndingi said that in 1998 a woman in Mwala, Kenya, was led to believe that the world was to end that May. She sold all her belongings and even withdrew children from school to stay home as they waited for the imminent coming of the Lord, which never occurred.

"It is easy for those working with the devil's power to hypnotize even the educated, let alone the illiterates like the Mwala woman. These are strong signs of what is developing in our society," he said.

Ndingi said Christians should know God does not advocate death and nobody knows when the world will come to an end.

He said all sorts of religious organizations were springing up and some of them could be dangerous. Some, he pointed out, even influence followers not to work as the world will come to an end soon and that there is no need for earthly things.

Ndingi said Christians should know God does not advocate death and nobody knows when the world will come to an end.

He cautioned Christians against running from their mainstream churches and rushing to suspicious religious organizations.

"Whereas there is freedom of worship, the government must watch out for fundamentalists who could mislead the people into committing mass suicides and murders.

"Nobody has the right to take the life of the other or influence its taking, and the government has the cardinal responsibility of ensuring that people live their full lives," he said.

Meanwhile, the apostolic nuncio to Uganda, Archbishop Christophe Pierre, confirmed Pope John Paul II's concern over the tragedy.

The pope "is very, very concerned about the unfortunate event. I have informed him," said the nuncio in Kampala, Uganda.

Prisoners dig for bodies behind the house of a leader of the Movement for the Restoration of the Ten Commandments in Rugazi, Uganda, March 27. Police investigating the death of hundreds involved with the cult have discovered more graves. Hundreds died in a blaze at the cult's compound in Kanungu March 17.

Archbishop Pierre dismissed claims by cult leader Joseph Kibwetere that he had met the pope during the pontiff's visit to Uganda in 1993.

"Certainly he (Kibwetere) did not meet the Holy Father. People don't meet the pope just like that," he said.

The cult leader "should produce evidence to prove that he met the pope. We don't have any proof that he met the pope," Archbishop Pierre said.

A Uganda minister of parliament said by telephone that Kenyans, Tanzanians and Rwandans were among those burned to death or found dead in and around various properties of the movement.

Stanley Kinyata, in whose constituency the cult's Kanungu headquarters is located, said that the movement had recently opened branches in the three nations.

He said that the cult's leaders, including two suspended Catholic priests, could have hired experts in the mass murders or trained their own killers.

"They must have hired the killers. For a priest to kill these numbers of people he must be wild and crazy," Kinyata said. He suspected that the murders were deliberate and planned long beforehand by the leaders, because some of the pits containing dead bodies have been discovered inside and under houses of the cult leaders.

Police have arrested one of the suspected leaders of the cult, Joseph Settumba Ssemande, in the southwestern Uganda town of Rakai. ▼

New chaplain expects to be 'spiritual guide' to House members

CHICAGO (CNS) — When Father Daniel Coughlin's spiritual adviser heard that he had been interviewed to become the first Catholic chaplain of the U.S. House of Representatives, "he just laughed and laughed," Father Coughlin reported.

"I told him, 'It's all your fault. You helped create in me an openness to God where I can say, "Do with me what you will."' Nobody, least of all me, expected this," the new House chaplain said in an interview with The Catholic New World, Chicago archdiocesan newspaper.

The interview took place March 28, five days after the 65-year-old priest was sworn in to his new post by House Speaker Dennis Hastert. Vicar for priests in the Chicago Archdiocese for the past five years, Father Coughlin served before that as director of the Cardinal Stritch Retreat House in Mundelein, Ill.

Although Father Coughlin said he found it "kind of daunting" to be the first Catholic House chaplain in history, he said his primary role would be to serve as a "spiritual guide" for House members.

"The unique challenge in the position is that they're very public persons, they're leadership types," he said. "Sometimes people can tend to think they've got it all together or they're removed from the ordinary class of people. Ministry has taught me there's a common ground in us all."

Father Coughlin said he wasn't sure how many members of the House were Catholics.

"In truth, I approach this quite ignorant of their religious or political affiliations," he said. "I want to meet them simply as people."

The priest said he has received a warm welcome from House members and others at the U.S. Capitol. "So many of them are saying, 'I'm glad you're here and I'm so glad we're putting this controversy behind us,"' he said. "Even the staff people. The guards. ... It's been wonderful."

The controversy to which Father Coughlin referred involved the nomination of the Rev. Charles Wright, a Presbyterian minister, by House leaders despite a bipartisan selection committee's recommendation of Father Timothy O'Brien, a Marquette University professor of political science.

Father Daniel Coughlin, newly appointed chaplain for the U.S. House of Representatives, speaks to Catholic New World about his duties. Speaker Dennis Hastert named the Chicago priest to the position March 23, ending a four-month political quagmire over who would get the job.

Critics had accused the House leadership of anti-Catholic bias when Father O'Brien was not selected for the chaplain's post.

Before Father Coughlin's appointment, no Catholic had served as chaplain of the House in its 211-year history.

Father Coughlin said his primary focus as chaplain will be to serve the members of the House.

"You look for inroads, the moments when you can be with people, the glimpses into their lives, the prayer with them and for them," he said.

In his first days on the job, the Chicago priest also had discovered a prayer room in the Capitol. "It's not a chapel — no services take place there — it's just a little room for silent meditation and prayer," he said.

"While I was waiting for someone today, I spent some time there," Father Coughlin added. "In the prayer room is a stained-glass window of George Washington and all the names of the states on banners. It was wonderful for me to pray and immediately look for Illinois, and then expand my prayer to all the states." ▼

Family honors devoted Catholic through endowment

CHARLOTTE — Robert H. Moeller Sr. spent his life in women's hosiery.

Inheriting his business savvy from his father's work in the same field, Moeller Sr. and his partner Elwood Sachsenmaiere started Larkwood Hosiery Mill in 1929 at a time when mills peppered the landscape in and around Charlotte. In those days, hosiery mills were a popular resource up and down the East Coast, and Moeller Sr. had moved to Charlotte to start what grew into a successful endeavor. His beginnings, however, were not as easy to overcome, as his son Robert Moeller Jr. remembered.

After immigrating to Philadelphia, Pa., from Germany, the elder Moeller's father Hans Hinrich Moeller and several partners began a business in ladies' full fashion hosiery, but after his untimely death, the business folded. A prepubescent Moeller Sr. dropped out of school to support his mother and sisters by selling vegetables from a pushcart, and then, began attending night school to finish his education. His start in the hosiery business as a knitter came from an opportunity given to him by his father's former partners.

"Those times were rough, but my father was able to build up a reputation as a knowledgeable worker," said Moeller Jr.

Moeller Sr., his wife and family moved to Charlotte to begin a hosiery mill at the advice of one of his father's partners. Larkwood became one of three hosiery mills in the area and was the source of many jobs. Moeller Jr. recalled how the family would go with his father to the mill after Mass at St. Peter Church in Charlotte: "I would run around and play in the large bins of bagged hosiery while my father prepared the machines for the work week."

"People would come to him for business and personal advice, and the mill workers were like an extended family," said Moeller Jr. "He was known to be helpful to his employees and others in financial trouble and was a personal aide and comfort to his workers as well."

John Everett Roberts, a friend of Moeller Sr., is well acquainted with the daily operations of the mill; he worked for Larkwood for nine years and later became a mill sales representative until World War II. "My sister, who was working in the office at the time, told me how well the boys in the mill were being paid. So, I became a machine operator and was earning $50 a week, which for the early 1930s, was a good wage. Those were great years, and it was good move to work out there (at Larkwood)."

Moeller Sr. sold the mill in 1945 and remained for a year before retiring. However, to Moeller Sr., retirement — the first of three — meant finding other endeavors as the years passed. He was on the board of Holy Angels Inc. and Mercy Hospital and was active with the Knights of Columbus as a Fourth degree Knight.

"He was a generous benefactor and a wonderful, loving and generous man who was a wonderful friend to the Sisters of Mercy," said Mercy Sister Mary Michel Boulus, former president of Sacred Heart College in Belmont. "He helped to build up the nursery at Holy Angels."

Moeller Sr. was ready to lend a helping hand whenever necessary. His daughter Madeline Tyser recalled a incident when a neighbor asked her father to help to tend her yard after she observed a man she did not recognize in dirty clothes and cap in the Moellers' yard. When she asked him "how much" for the service, much to her surprise, he replied, "no charge for a neighbor."

In his later years, Moeller Sr. lived in Wesley Nursing Center, a Methodist-run facility, and even though he was treated well and was invited to the religious services at the nursing home, he missed attending Mass on a regular basis. "He thought there should be a home for Catholics and felt there was a great need for it," said his daughter Patricia Gaylord. "He was worried about other people even when he was sick."

Bob Moeller Sr. lost his third bout with cancer in 1994 at the age of 95. Gaylord remembered one of their last conversations: "Tutti (he had nicknamed her after her love of Tutti fruitti ice cream), I can't fight it anymore," he told her.

His children decided to establish the Robert H. Moeller Memorial Endowment Fund in honor of their father with the intention that the money be used in the form of grants to aid Catholic elderly and their families with assisted living program expenses. "He wanted it to be Catholic-oriented but not limited to Catholic people," explained Moeller Jr.

"My brother William Moeller, my sisters, brothers-in-law John Gaylord and Bud Tyser and I gave the money to initiate the fund. We sent letters out at the end of 1999 and received a favorable response from people he had known," continued Moeller Jr. "We four kids weren't able to support it alone, so we asked a number of people to make donations."

"I contributed to the fund because of my appreciation of Bob Sr.," said Roberts. "I saw him often in later years. At first, he was the mill owner, and I was a worker, but as time went by, we got to be such good friends."

An endowment is a permanent fund placed in the diocesan foundation, which earns interest over time. The original amount is not spent but the income can be used in the manner stipulated in the endowment agreement, said Jim Kelley, diocesan director of development. The foundation is a non-profit organization established to provide endowments for the Diocese of Charlotte and its parishes, schools, agencies and organizations, he continued.

The four Moeller children are serving as advisors to a committee from Catholic Social Services, who will decide who will receive the grants.

"This is a wonderful resource for needy elderly," said Cindy Rice, diocesan director of planned giving. "This is a way to support a critical need for the church."

"The Moeller family has set up this endowment to honor the legacy of their father, and by doing so, they are able to ensure that the values that Robert Moeller Sr. lived by are handed down to the next generation," said Kelley. "More and more people around the diocese are setting up endowments in memory of loved ones." Moeller Jr. said, "It was in his nature to help people. My father came from a poor background and never forgot it, even though he became financially successful. He felt an obligation to be generous and helpful to people without calling too much attention to himself."

"It is our hope that this endowment can grow and meet the needs of Catholic seniors for help with assisted living," he added. ▼

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC DIOCESE OF RALEIGH

Good Friday in the Jubilee Year 2000:
NC Catholic Bishops Call for an End to the Death Penalty

This Great Jubilee year, a year of favor from the Lord, provides an opportunity for conversion and reconciliation, a time to open the door to Christ as He comes to change hearts, to make all things new.

It is in this Spirit of Jubilee, that on this day when we recall the execution of Jesus Christ we call for an end to the death penalty. In doing this we reaffirm the US Bishops' Conference 1999 statement, A Good Friday Appeal to End the Death Penalty.

We call on all people of good will to join us in working toward ending this cycle of violence in our state and country. The death penalty is not a deterrent to murder. Murder is a crime of misplaced passion, often fueled by drugs or alcohol and made possible by ready access to guns. The possibility of the death penalty as a punishment is never thought of in most murders. Moreover, recent evidence has revealed that innocent people have been tried, convicted and sentenced to death both in our state and across the country. The possibility that an innocent person can be executed should be enough, by itself, to cause people of conscience to stand against the death penalty.

In his pastoral visit to St. Louis in January 1999, Pope John Paul II said, "The new evangelization calls for followers of Christ who are unconditionally pro-life; who will proclaim, celebrate and serve the Gospel of life in every situation. A sign of hope is the increasing recognition that the dignity of human life must never be taken away, even in the case of someone who has done great evil. Modern society has the means of protecting itself, without definitively denying criminals the chance to reform."

This statement affirms the church's teaching that public authority should limit itself to means which do not take a life when these means are sufficient to deter an aggressor and protect the safety of persons. Today, with the advances in our penal system, such protection is available through long-term incarceration, including even sentences of life imprisonment without release.

We do not call for the repeal of the death penalty at the expense of the victims, their families or loved ones. We understand the enormous pain those close to a murdered loved one must feel. Our family of faith must stand with all victims of violence as they struggle to overcome their terrible loss and fear and find some sense of peace.

But we must understand that the violent act of capital punishment is merely vengeance, an act that keeps us as a nation steeped in violence. Please join with us to pray for a change of heart, that we may stop this cycle of violence, break the culture of death and seek justice without vengeance.

We encourage parishes and communities to hold discussion groups on the death penalty and to form ministries to provide long term spiritual and material assistance to grief-stricken families.

This is not an easy issue. All of us need to consider how we will stand up for life for all human beings, how we will stand with the victims of crime and how we can work for a society that imposes justice without violence.

NC bishops in solidarity against death penalty

CHARLOTTE — Leaders of the Catholic Church of North Carolina, Charlotte's Bishop William G. Curlin and Bishop F. Joseph Gossman, bishop of the Diocese of Raleigh chose Good Friday — the day of the crucifixion of Christ — as a release date for a letter calling for an end to capital punishment.

"While Bishop Gossman and I call for an end to the death penalty in all cases in our state, we also recognize the expediency of an interim step which would establish a moratorium on executions in North Carolina," said Bishop Curlin. The bishops' letter parallels the 1999 statement issued by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops: Stop capital punishment in the United States.

"We call on all people of good will to join us in working toward ending the cycle of violence in our state and country." This plea to end capital punishment is included in the joint letter of the two Roman Catholic Bishops of North Carolina.

Theologian James J. Megivern of Wilmington, writing in the recently published Contemporary American Religion, said the shift from support of capital punishment to a rejection of it, is based on the understanding of the "dignity of human beings as the handiwork of God."

Megivern noted that after World War II, the western world began to take a different view of capital punishment. The sheer magnitude of destruction of people by the state, he said, had a major impact on the theories about the value of human life.

Soon after the war, the dignity of the human being was clearly established, said Megivern. "This cleared away the theoretical smoke screen. Capital punishment was exposed as a direct and deliberate act of destruction of human life, unnecessary [and therefore unjustified] in a modern society.

"It has long been recognized that one major difficulty inherent in capital punishment is the possibility of error," said Bishop Curlin. "We now know that in recent years 79 people [at least three from NC] who were sentenced to death were subsequently proven to be innocent and freed from death row. A mistaken infliction of the death penalty is especially abhorrent because it is irreversible." ▾

World Youth Day to feature papal meetings, catechetical events

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — This year's World Youth Day celebrations in Rome will feature three encounters with Pope John Paul II, special Masses and catechetical services, and plenty of opportunities to build international friendships, Vatican organizers said. As many as 1.5 million young people are expected to participate in the Aug. 14-20 celebrations, with some arriving as early as Aug. 10 for several days of hospitality in Italian dioceses.

Pope beatifies five, including priest who ministered in U.S.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In St. Peter's Square, Pope John Paul II beatified three religious women and two priests, including Redemptorist Father Francis Xavier Seelos, a German who ministered to immigrants in the United States. Known as an expert confessor, Father Seelos "invites the members of the church to deepen their union with Christ in the sacraments of penance and the Eucharist," the pope said. More than 40,000 pilgrims, bundled up against stiff winds and dark skies, attended the beatification Mass April 9.

Southern African bishops accuse Zimbabwe of encouraging unrest

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — The Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference accused Zimbabwe's political leaders of encouraging lawlessness in the country since white-owned farms were invaded by blacks. "We note with great regret that the political leadership of Zimbabwe has not only failed to intervene to restore order, but actually seems to be encouraging the lawlessness," the bishops said in an April 8 statement. President Robert Mugabe has called for redistribution of white-owned land to Zimbabwe's black majority, and Zimbabwe's Parliament voted April 6 to sanction the seizure of farms without compensation.

Haitian bishop rejects international pressure for elections

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (CNS) — As the world increased the pressure on the Haitian government to organize overdue legislative elections, Bishop Willy Romelus of Jeremie has spoken out against the threat of economic sanctions. Breaking ranks with the Haitian bishops' conference, Bishop Romelus said in a local radio interview that the government and the electoral council should not heed foreign pressure to organize elections so that the Parliament can be seated June 12 if the date does not suit the Haitian government. Bishop Romelus said the Haitian government should prioritize the organization of "serious and democratic" elections, rather than rigidly work toward the June 12 deadline.

Vatican urges liturgy commission to get Psalms version off market

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Vatican official has called on the International Commission on English in the Liturgy to do all it can to halt further publication or distribution of its "doctrinally flawed" 1994 English version of the Psalms. "The text does not accurately represent the word of God and therefore risks being a danger to the faith," said Archbishop Francesco Pio Tamburrino, secretary of the Vatican Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, in a letter Jan. 14 to ICEL's chairman, Bishop Maurice Taylor of Galloway, Scotland. "Such a text is clearly no more suited for private prayer than it is for public proclamation," he wrote.

Missionary council criticizes police action against indigenous

SAO PAULO, Brazil (CNS) — Brazil's Indigenous Missionary Council criticized police action against the indigenous population of Santa Cruz de Cabralia, in Brazil's coastal state of Bahia. Representatives of the church-backed group said police destroyed a monument constructed by the Pataxo Indians on the beach of Coroa Vermelha. The beach is famous for being the location where on April 26, 1500, the first Mass was celebrated on Brazilian soil by Portuguese explorers. "It was a political statement," said the council, known by its Portuguese acronym as CIMI. "The state and federal governments are not allowing the indigenous to participate in the official celebration of the 500-year anniversary of the discovery of Brazil."

Catholics glad at registration extension, but some face problems

MOSCOW (CNS) — Catholic officials are relieved at a recent extension of the deadline for religious organizations to register under a controversial law that threatens unregistered groups with "liquidation." "It is very important for us. It means that we still have hope," said Father Krzysztof Kempa, rector of a small Catholic parish that has been consistently denied registration under Russia's 1997 religion law. An informal survey of Russia's four Latin-rite Catholic jurisdictions indicates that roughly 90 percent of the country's 200 parishes successfully obtained reregistration with the Justice Ministry under the original Dec. 31, 1999, deadline.

Pope urges U.N. to promote 'holistic vision of development'

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged the United Nations to promote a "holistic vision of development" in the third millennium. "The millennium just ended has left in its wake a series of unusual challenges," the pope said at an April 7 audience with U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, members of the U.N.'s administrative committee and officials from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. The pope said while challenges like war and poverty might not be new, they are different from the past, "because the world's increasing interdependence has given them a global dimension."

Ukraine native says faith helped her persevere

By ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
Correspondent

HICKORY — When Lucy (Oksana) Kukla shares stories of escaping the Communist regime in the Ukraine, she brings mementos of those trying times. And, she brings her Bible.

The book is a powerful reminder of Kukla's early years. "It's my treasure," she said. "I take this wherever I go. God blessed me with the strength to go on to give testimony about Him."

Kukla was seven years old when the Communists, under Stalin, took over her homeland of the Ukraine. Fleeing from the regime at the risk of starvation, her family escaped to the coal mines — the only place where her father, a doctor, was able to find work, dragging dead and injured workers out of the lower levels of the mines.

At that age, Oksana, who had never heard of God, was looking for something. "I was searching and I was questioning myself, 'Where is the good?'" she said. "'I know the evil. Where is the goodness? It has to exist.' I didn't know about God. You could not talk about God. I couldn't ask anybody."

It was very cold outside on the first night that she had to wait in line for bread. She was alone, as her mother had to take care of her siblings at home, and she saw two ladies in the distance who were wearing long skirts. Thinking she might be able to get under the skirts somehow to keep herself warm, she crept closer to the ladies, not wanting them to see her. She heard one of them say, "He is good." That interested her, so she crept closer, and she heard them talking about angels.

"I was so excited, I forgot about being cold," she said. "I said to myself, 'I will keep that good in my heart.' I didn't get any bread that night (the adults waiting squeezed her out), but I got something awesome."

Kukla, a member of St. Aloysius Catholic Church in Hickory, tells stories like this and many others to those who listen to her speak, often at schools and churches.

As a child, Kukla lost a brother, a sister and her grandmother to starvation. She went out with her mother at night to find rotting leftover potatoes in the fields to eat. Her uncle was taken to Siberia, and during World War II, her father was taken away to the front.

Kukla herself was taken away to Auschwitz after the Germans occupied the Ukraine. Although she was not Jewish, she was taken there when she was 15 years old because of a false accusation made by some German soldiers who were angry with her because she had disagreed with them. It would be many years before she found out what happened to her family, and 22 years before she would see any of them again.

After she was released from the concentration camp, she spent four years working in a boot factory in Cologne, Germany, under very bad conditions until the war ended in 1945. During her time at the factory, she helped to smuggle several Jewish people out of Germany.

She came to the United States with her husband when she was in her 20s, and he died two years later, leaving her with four young children.

Despite these experiences, she emphasized how God has worked in her life.

The thing that saved her, she said, from a longer time in the concentration camp was the fact that she was born with blonde hair and blue eyes, even though both of her parents had dark hair and eyes. "He (God) knew what I would have to go through," she says. "He knew, but I didn't. He knew me, but I didn't know Him."

Before she was born, she said, her father had a dream. In his dream, an angel came to him and told him that he would have a daughter, and told him to name her Oksana, after a child martyr who was burned on a cross because she refused to stop helping the poor. Her father went to the local priest to tell him about the dream, but the priest told Oksana's father that he would have to name her according to the religious calendar, depending on when she was born. Her father felt strongly about the dream and protested this, she said, and "my father won."

Lucy (Oksana) Kukla, left, with her friend Suzanna Williams after a recent talk she gave for a women's group at St. Andrew's Lutheran Church in Hickory. Mrs. Kukla's sons and Mrs. Williams' husband are doctors in the same medical practice in Hickory.

She remembered what her father told her on the day he was taken to the front. "Do three things for me," he said. "If you have a little piece of bread, cut it in half and give it to somebody hungry. Be good, and keep my name clean."

Kukla's mother, father, two sisters and a brother survived the war, although her father lost a leg. Kukla went to Kiev as a tourist, 22 years after she was taken away at the age of 15. Her sisters, were one and eight years old when she was taken, and her brother was four, so she was hardly able to recognize them when she finally saw them again.

"I could not go before that," she said, due to political conditions in the Ukraine at the time. She said that she wrote and received letters during the time before her visit, but that they were heavily censored and mostly unreadable.

Even though Mrs. Kukla has endured many hard times in her life, she said that she is more impressed by the suffering of Jesus, Paul and other early Christians. "Because of them, that's why we are all believers today," she said.

In addition to speaking to groups and telling of her experiences, Kukla has a favorite project that she does every summer. St. Stephen's Lutheran Church in Hickory sponsors a group of children from Belareuse each year, and Mrs. Kukla teaches the Bible to these children in Russian. "It's awesome when they come," she said. "What a joy to see the smiles on their faces." This summer will be her fourth teaching these children.

Kukla remarried 44 years ago and now has 5 children, 7 grandchildren and one great-granddaughter. She was Russian Orthodox before she got married, but became a Catholic like her husband. They have lived in North Carolina for 10 years. ▼

South Vietnamese woman aids needy children back home

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — Because of the war, many Americans avoid the subject of Vietnam entirely. However, South Vietnam holds strong memories for St. Pius X parishioner Minhthu Ngo Lynagh.

Because of these memories, Lynagh wanted to become involved with Children of Vietnam, a Winston-Salem group, when she first read about it over a year ago.

Children of Vietnam, a non-profit, tax-exempt charity organization, was established after Ben Wilson, the founder, had been working in the country through his job. He saw the handicapped and destitute children, who resided in Danang in the Quangnam Province in Central Vietnam. Wilson and the board of directors, of which Lynagh has been a member for over a year, solicit medical and monetary donations from various churches, businesses and organizations to take to Vietnam, explained Lynagh.

"When I was working in Vietnam, I came to know and understand the people, their positive attitude toward life and the closeness of their families; I felt it was to become my life's work to help the children," said Wilson.

The group also helps with building houses, supplying 45 pounds of rice, to needy families, purchasing prosthetic limbs, wheelchairs and medicine and paying for hospital stays for children, many still affected from war materials. In March, Lynagh, Wilson and two other board members traveled to Danang to deliver the money and supplies and help with distribution and building efforts, explained Wilson.

"She (Lynagh) is outgoing and resourceful and interested in what's going on," complimented Wilson. "She made contacts to people in Greensboro and is our spokesperson, and she is looking for ways to help broaden our scope."

Lynagh was born in Dalat in South Vietnam, sixth in a family of 12, to parents who had converted to Catholicism. "Dalat was on a plateau, about 2,000 feet up, with a temperate climate and was simply a beautiful city," remembered Lynagh. "Before my parents met, my mother had worked in the Daughters of Charity convent, where she was converted, and my father worked on a coffee farm, where a priest informed him about Catholicism."

> "I want to develop programs to build bridges between my two countries and between U.S. churches and Vietnamese churches. Through faith, I think we can achieve many things."
> — Minhthu Ngo Lynagh

Growing up Catholic in a predominantly Buddhist country was not difficult for Lynagh: "It was interesting because everyone would come to my house for our holidays and celebrations, associated with Catholicism. As a minority, we were united in our faith with the other Catholics around us."

After graduating high school, she enrolled in LaSalle University in Saigon, where she majored in chemical engineering and lived with her uncle and his family. Living in Saigon was a change from life in Dalat, where she was not exposed to the war on a large scale. "There wasn't a lot of fighting in Dalat as compared to some places in Vietnam; it was hard for the Communists to infiltrate the city because of the schools and other establishments. It was understood that you wouldn't destroy Dalat," she said.

"Saigon was noisy, and there was some fighting. By then, the war was coming to an end" she continued. "I really didn't think about the war as such because we had one war after another; we hadn't had peace for years. However, I had two brothers killed in the war, which affected my family and me very much. Every family had someone who died in the war, and we (the Vietnamese) paid a painful price."

In April 1975, right before the fall of South Vietnam to the Communists, eighteen-year-old Lynagh, her older sister Dieu Ngo and her uncle and his family left her homeland with several others on a shrimp boat. After being lost at sea, the small vessel was picked up by a Taiwanese Navy boat, which brought them to the Philippines, then to Guam, where she sent her parents a telegram to let them know she was safe.

She traveled to Fort Walton Beach, Fla., to Eglin Air Force Base to a refugee camp, where she was assigned to a sponsor couple, Dr. Jack and Kathy Wagoner. She later went to live with her sister in Washington D.C.

Lynagh said, "When I left Vietnam and came to the U.S., I had no idea what would happen. I didn't want to go, but I knew I couldn't stay by myself with my parents and other family members so far away. I didn't have time to think about it. I had faith while I was in the camp, but I was worried about what would happen. The sponsor family and everyone I met were so nice, and what I experienced was beyond my expectations."

At the urging of a priest at the refugee camp, she enrolled at Catholic University in Washington D.C. and received a four-year scholarship to major in nursing and worked in the dining hall to pay for housing. In college she met her husband Dr. Bill Lynagh, who was in graduate school at the time. After graduation, she worked as a pediatric nurse, and her husband went to medical school and was in residency in Florida.

"Going to school strengthened my faith as a Catholic," expressed Lynagh. "I think what drew Bill and I to each other was our Catholic faith."

Three years ago, after her two sons, Sean, now 13, and Kevin, now 12, had arrived, the family moved to North Carolina to Charlotte, then to Greensboro. She read about "Children of Vietnam," and Wilson and was immediately interested in helping in any way she could.

"I thought it interesting that Wilson had never been in Vietnam during the war, and I was impressed by his generosity. By then, I felt I was ready to go back to Vietnam to help," admitted Lynagh.

Lynagh's goal is one of solidarity and hope for the future of her native and home countries: "Through Children of Vietnam, I hope we can improve the lives of families and especially children, but I also want to focus on the bigger picture. I want to develop programs to build bridges between my two countries and between U.S. churches and Vietnamese churches. Through faith, I think we can achieve many things." ▼

Gallup Poll explores anti-Catholic bias in U.S.

PRINCETON, N.J. (CNS) — A Gallup Poll has found that roughly one-fourth of Americans have a negative view of the Catholic religion and nearly two-thirds view it favorably. Contrary to widespread opinion that anti-Catholic bias exists disproportionately among evangelical or born-again Protestants, the survey found that only 29 percent of that group — compared to 30 percent of Protestants generally — described Catholicism as "unfavorable." Despite recent flaps over alleged insensitivity to Catholic feelings by Republican leaders, the poll found that Democrats and independents are slightly more likely than Republicans to view Catholicism negatively.

Illinois bishops issue pastoral to combat 'sin of racism'

CHICAGO (CNS) — The Illinois Catholic bishop have issued a pastoral letter on combating racism called "Moving Beyond Racism: Learning to See With the Eyes of Christ." The letter, six years in the making, was officially released April 4, the 32nd anniversary of the assassination of civil rights activist Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. "This is not just about a change in attitude, but a change in behavior so that we can go enter the millennium free of the sin of racism," said Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago.

Annan says he, pope in same business: working for peace

ROME (CNS) — Ahead of a meeting with Pope John Paul II, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said he and the pontiff "were in the same business." "We both work for peace, but we use different means," the secretary-general said at an April 6 press conference at the U.N.'s Rome-based World Food Program. Annan was due to meet the pope as part of his April 5-11 visit to Italy and the Vatican. Annan said the pope's March 20-26 trip to the Middle East "was a very positive one."

Nun says years of death penalty has not deterred crime

ROMEOVILLE, Ill. (CNS) — Use of the death penalty has not deterred crime, says Providence Sister Dorothy Rasche, who has worked in prison ministry for 20 years. She believes that although it has taken nearly 25 years, people are beginning to realize that the death penalty is ineffective. In an interview with the Catholic Explorer, newspaper of the Joliet Diocese, Sister Rasche pointed to efforts in Illinois and in the nation's capital as evidence the political climate is shifting. In January, Illinois Gov. George Ryan announced a moratorium on the state's use of the death penalty, the first such moratorium in the nation and a move widely praised by Catholic leaders.

Proms in Florida county conflict with Holy Saturday services

LEESBURG, Fla. (CNS) — Catholic teens in Lake County are facing a tough choice on April 22: they can go to their proms or to Easter Vigil services. Proms for Leesburg and South Lake public high schools in the Orlando Diocese have been scheduled on Holy Saturday. "We don't believe the prom committees made the decision intentionally but it puts our teens in a difficult spot — to go to prom or to participate in Easter Vigil services," said Linda Clark, business manager at St. Paul's Parish in Leesburg. "Our youths shouldn't have to make that kind of choice," she said.

Identical twin priests hold chaplain posts at Houston hospitals

HOUSTON (CNS) — As transplant patient Steve Foster tells it, when Father Bruce Noble visited him in the intensive care unit, the clouds outside the window cleared away, letting the day's first sunlight into his room. Father Noble, chaplain at The Methodist Hospital in Houston, won't take credit for the daylight but has brought sunshine into patients' lives for 12 years. Father Noble, 63, and his identical twin brother, Father David Noble, a chaplain at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston, have been recognized for their hospital ministry work with two lifetime achievement medals.

Peruvian bishops urge calm amid post-election tensions

By ALEJANDRO BERMUDEZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — Peruvian bishops renewed their call to citizens to avoid violence amid tensions following the country's presidential election.

The president of the Peruvian bishops' conference, Archbishop Luis Bambaren Gastelumendi, said the Peruvian population showed a "great level of civility and respect for the democratic system."

"This respect must be kept," Archbishop Bambaren added.

Tensions between the followers of President Alberto Fujimori and those of candidate Alejandro Toledo increased late April 10 after the president of the National Office of Electoral Process, Jose Portillo Campbell, stated that the official results of the elections would not be known until two or three days later.

Following a demonstration by opposition supporters protesting possible election fraud April 10, Bishop Miguel Irizar Campos of Callao, secretary-general of the Peruvian bishops' conference, urged citizens to avoid violence "at any cost."

Toledo protested that day along with 4,000 demonstrators at Government Palace in Lima, where they were dispersed by police tear gas.

Portillo said that after counting nearly 40 percent of the votes, Fujimori had almost 50 percent, just short of winning the first round.

But the spokesman for the international organization Transparency, which monitored the elections, said that, statistically, "it is impossible to deny a second electoral round." Transparency said its sample counting of less than 1 percent of the vote indicated Fujimori should face a runoff and added his outright win would confirm its suspicions of fraud. ▼

Tikkun Olam: "Repairing the World"

Habitat for Humanity event crosses many faith traditions

By LARRY CHANCE
Correspondent

GREENSBORO — Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, non-denominational and Jewish faithful have gathered in the eastern part of Greensboro to build homes together, with several of them being built for Muslim families. This ecumenical effort is "The Building on Faith Blitz," sponsored by Habitat for Humanity of Greater Greensboro.

The build began April 5, and the homes should be ready for families to move in later this summer.

Many Habitat for Humanity homes are sponsored by single organizations, such as churches, businesses, civic groups and even members of the U.S. House of Representatives. All Faith Blitz 2000 is unique because these eight homes are being co-sponsored by more than 50 Christian churches and Jewish congregations in the Greater Greensboro area.

"We knew that there were a lot of small congregations that didn't have the financial resources to sponsor a house but would like to be involved, so we thought this was a way to come together in an ecumenical way so that we could involve the small and the large," said Bob Kelley, president of Habitat for Humanity of Greater Greensboro. "We enjoy good spirit all the time, but this is just special."

Kelley said that Habitat for Humanity believes in the importance of being overtly Christian by reaching out and being respectful of all faiths. Kelley believes that this event embodies the spirit of the organization's mission of bringing "people of all faiths and backgrounds to work as partners building decent, affordable housing."

An interfaith group of volunteers works on a Habitat home during the The Building on Faith Blitz in Greensboro. Twelve denominations represented by more than 1,000 people volunteered for the four-day blitz.

Twelve denominations represented by more than 1,000 people volunteered for the four-day blitz.

For instance, the traditional Habitat home dedication ceremony is highlighted by giving the homeowner a Bible. In this case, seven of the homes are being built for Sudanese Muslim families, so at the dedication, Habitat will also present them with the Koran.

An ecumenical worship and celebration kicked off the blitz. At the service, Christian hymns and prayers, the blowing of the shofar, and South African freedom songs all blended to provide a truly spiritual backdrop for the labor to follow.

"By the end of the service, everybody was holding hands, singing the Unity song, exchanging smiles and shedding tears," said Trudy Menzzentto, a parishioner at Our Lady of Grace Catholic Church and Habitat board member.

"It was a very moving experience," she added.

This sentiment was echoed by Rabbi Fred Guttman of Greensboro's Temple Emanuel, who felt that the service was one of the most spiritual interfaith events he had ever attended.

Volunteer coordinator Roland Russoli said that the spirit of unity from the service has carried over into the actual building process. "They're all working together as one group, doing something good in the community, building these eight houses," he said.

On the second day of the blitz, Rabbi Guttman led a Temple Emanuel youth group that had teamed up with a Presbyterian youth group to work on the home co-sponsored by St. Mary Catholic Church, one of the smallest congregations represented.

"For us, a major tenet of Judaism is called 'Tikkun Olam' ... which means 'repairing the world,'" Guttman said. "So we really feel that by doing this we are helping to make the world better, helping to repair the world. And I would also say that we're bringing more of the Godliness that exists within each one of us out into this."

The homes being built during "The Building on Faith Blitz" are the final eight homes in Poplar Ridge, a Habitat subdivision consisting of 67 occupied homes. Building on this site began in 1996. In addition to the faith communities involved, the Greensboro Bar Association is also part of the effort. ▼

Gail Feddish and Joe White, parishioners of St. Mary Catholic Church in Greensboro, were among the volunteers at the Habitat for Humanity's Building on Faith Blitz.

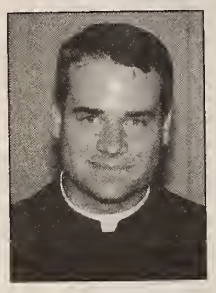
VOCATIONS

"So why you?"

Eight years ago I was experiencing the spring angst that comes with a senior's decision about life. As an 18-year-old, my plans for the future included the Naval Academy, playing football, getting married, making money and enjoying relative success.



Rev. Mr. Matthew Kauth

These seemed to the best options that the world had to offer. What more could a man want? I was plagued with the question why?

Why at that moment was I burdened with questions? Why, with all of these viable options did my heart, propelled by my mind, stretch itself to find something more?

I quickly discerned that if I was to talk about a purpose at all, I had to consider the One who made life meaningful. If my life has any purpose at all, it is because I was created for something, and more specifically, for some One. I had to discover the mission for which I was created.

I was a novice at prayer, utilizing it mostly when I was in trouble. I had lived for some time as if God was a mere helper, ready at hand to aid me in all of my trivial dilemmas. I knelt down one day, reluctantly, in front of the Blessed Sacrament, and He began to pull. The desires I possessed were revealed to be the deeper longings for the fullness of goodness, truth and beauty found in God alone. In Him was the source and abundance of life. I went to Him with the questions, and over time realized that He, Himself, was the answer.

He has led me to the Holy Priesthood. And answered the question, why.

Deacon Matthew Kauth will be ordained to the Priesthood on June 3, 2000.

Food for the body and soul

ARDEN — Parishioners at St. Barnabas Church in Arden have reflected on the Lenten season through soup, song and scripture with their "Soup and Substance" program. On March 15, a designated parish group sponsored the first of the Wednesday night sessions with their homemade meatless soup and featured various speakers with specified topics of discussion after the community meal.

"We tried to focus on jubilee themes and have tried to hold to a level of continuity this year," explained Sheryl Peyton, the parish Soup and Substance program coordinator and the parish director of religious education. "In Lent we fast and abstain. Many Catholics have the tradition of giving up meals or eating simple meals and treating their Wednesday like a Friday."

The attendants feasted on varieties of soups from potato and cheese and vegetable to minestrone and a dish of Cuban black beans and rice, courtesy of parishioner Mirtha Martinez and her mother. The parish youth group, the Knights of Columbus, the Family/ Community Life Commission and the Marconi Lodge members presented their soup to an average of 50 to 80 fellow church members every week.

Dana and Paulette Wardwell agreed, "This (the Soup and Substance Program) gives us an opportunity to grow in faith and to share with fellow parishioners and to learn more about Christ."

This year's theme, "Open the Doors to Christ: Jubilee 2000 Soup and Substance," was reflected in the different topics. Peyton and Mary Ann Poli, parish youth minister, gave the first night's talk, "Pilgrimage as a Model for Understanding our Spiritual Journey." "We talked about how we are on a spiritual journey toward God and how Lent is a special time to focus on our spiritual journey," explained Peyton.

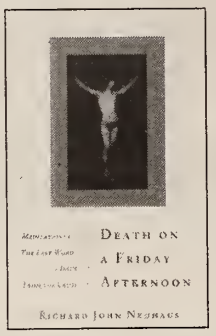
Book Review

Priest says Good Friday meditation not just for one day of year

By MARY CLAIRE GART
Catholic News Service

CHICAGO (CNS) — The title of a new book by Father Richard John Neuhaus — "Death on a Friday Afternoon" — would probably catch the eye of anyone searching for spiritual reading for Holy Week.



But the author says that exploring the mystery of Christ's death should not be confined to one day alone.

"Every day of the year is a good day to think more deeply about Good Friday," he writes in his preface, "for Good Friday is the drama of the love by which our everyday is sustained."

Father Neuhaus, head of the Institute on Religion and Public Life in New York, discussed his latest work, published by Basic Books, during a reception and book signing March 31 at Pauline Books and Media in Chicago.

"Of my 30 or more books," he said, "this is different in that it is an exploration into the core reality of what it means to be a Christian — the cross of Our Lord."

Explaining that it is "not an academic work," the former Lutheran minister said his aim was "to see why the worst of all things — the death of God — becomes for us the beginning of life eternal."

Subtitled "Meditations on the Last Words of Jesus from the Cross," the book devotes a chapter to each "word" — actually the seven last statements Jesus made from the cross. Father Neuhaus noted that he is just the latest in a long list of writers and composers — from Haydn to Gerard Manley Hopkins — who have delved into the meaning of the Seven Last Words.

But, he said, the book is not entirely meditative. Arguments are also advanced and there are stories about people "who in their troubles find themselves, as they say, at the foot of the cross."

Father Neuhaus asked those at the bookstore not to follow the example of one woman who liked the book so much she read it all in one sitting. "Please don't," he said. "Take it as a companion for your own reflection."

Noting that every one of the church's doctrines is "a door opening to mysteries beyond," he said that after writing each chapter, he realized he had just begun to explore each word. "It was an immeasurably rewarding experience for me and I hope it will guide your own exploration." ▼

Catholic News Service

Earlier in the day the sun had cheerfully shone, but by the time of burial the north wind came raging across the plains of southeastern New Mexico, filled with an icy vengeance. Hurried prayers and final condolences were hardly audible over the thundering blast that scattered tumbleweeds, dirt and mourners alike from its furious path.

Now quiet had descended, accompanied by a numbing cold. We were a small group of tired, despondent and somewhat dazed people who re-entered the cemetery where long cold shadows covered the mound of freshly piled moist dirt.

The smell of flowers and freshly turned earth mingled with our sorrow, because resting below us was the battered body of one we had known as the kindest and gentlest of people.

Here was the final resting place of a woman who always was in church if the doors were open. She was a Christian woman, a peaceful woman, a mother, a grandmother, a widow, a murder victim. She was my mother-in-law whose life ironically had ended in her own kitchen where she had cooked hundreds of meals for all of us who now surrounded her grave in disbelief.

The last rays of light disappeared, leaving us enveloped and shivering in the darkness. We wondered among ourselves what we should do next. Agreeing that we were hungry, we decided to go to my mother-in-law's favorite restaurant.

Around the table was her immediate family, the 14 people she loved most in the world. It was the most memorable family meal I ever shared.

As we ate and talked, "remember-when" stories about her began to fill the air. We laughed. The meal became an island of joy in the midst of deepest grief. Moreover, it would sustain us in legions of dark days yet to come.

Tomorrow would be another day of sad challenges, but we were family. We possessed faith.

Driving back to the hotel, I thanked God for the wonderful meal we had shared. I thought about the Last Supper. I thought about Jesus' wisdom in choosing the power of a shared meal so that people would be able to remember and would be strengthened by him for all time.

Questions:
Can you make connections in your own life between significant meals shared with others and their lasting impact on your life? Does this offer you any new insight on how the disciples might have experienced the Last Supper?

"Keeping the Faith" a witty comedy of childhood friendship

By ANNE NAVARRO
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — The lifelong friendship of a rabbi and a priest is threatened when a childhood friend re-enters their lives and both fall for her in the troubling yet witty comedy "Keeping the Faith" (Touchstone).

How's this for an opening scene: A young priest, plastered from a night of binge drinking, falls down onto a pile of garbage bags on the streets of New York. Is it more than a bit off-putting? Absolutely. Is it typical of the rest of the film? No.

"Keeping the Faith"
The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

It is certainly upsetting to see a Catholic priest portrayed in such an unholy manner. But don't be deceived; this is not all the film is about.

Best friends since childhood, Rabbi Jake Schram (Ben Stiller) and Father Brian Kilkenny Finn (Edward Norton) chose careers serving God because of their passionate faith. Jake and Brian work hard to get their respective congregations as enthusiastic about God as they are, sometimes in unconventional ways.

Determined to bolt his congregation out of their ingrained worshiping routine, Rabbi Jake brings in a black gospel choir to sing a rousing rendition of a traditional Hebrew song and encourages group meditation. Father Brian, a conscientious priest, has a good rapport with his parishioners, parleying in their native Spanish, and delivers thoughtful and spirited homilies that pack the house.

The trouble comes when a childhood friend, Anna Reilly (Jenna Elfman), now a high-powered executive permanently attached to her cell phone, comes back to New York and both men fall for her.

As the Upper West Side's most eligible bachelor, Jake is constantly set up with the daughters of the well-intentioned mothers at his synagogue. These outlandish dates provide the film with some of its most comical moments. But each woman lacks that certain zing and Jake finds that unexpected sparks begin to fly with Anna.

Although they both agree to keep things low-key and — most importantly — a secret from Brian, Anna falls harder for Jake than either anticipated. This poses a serious problem for Jake. What would his congregation say about their young rabbi dating a gentile?

Anna's feelings for Jake prompt her to study Judaism. Her willingness to leave behind her implied Christian roots is troubling even though it is clear that she has only become interested in her own spirituality through Jake's influence.

Ben Stiller and Edward Norton star as a rabbi and a priest in the romantic comedy "Keeping the Faith."

In the meantime, Brian's mind has wandered into the murky territory of romantic love with Anna and he begins to have doubts about his priestly vows.

Distraught when Jake distances himself, Anna seeks comfort from Brian. But he misreads her signals and blurts out his attraction to her, even going so far as to kiss her. When, humiliated and embarrassed, he discovers that not only are the feelings not reciprocated, but that he has been deceived by his closest friends, he uncharacteristically goes on a bender, bringing the audience full circle to the beginning of the film.

As directed by Norton, the majority of the film is concerned with Anna and Jake's relationship, but it does tread on dicey territory, namely a priest's confrontation with temptation.

When Brian sits down to speak with his pastor (Milos Forman) about his trouble, the old monsignor's response that he has fallen in love at least once a decade since he became a priest may be disconcerting. But the more significant implication is that he did not succumb to these temptations and his faith is stronger because of them.

Even the provocative issue of celibacy is taken on in a clear and straightforward manner. Brian explains that his fulfillment with God is so satisfying that the question of sex has been settled for him.

The film is at times reminiscent of Woody Allen's films in its humor and ample footage of New York with the city presented in all its racial, cultural and religious diversity. This is exemplified not only by the close friendship between a rabbi and priest, but also by their joint effort in opening an interfaith senior citizen karaoke center.

Although some may be discomforted watching a priest battle with temptation, "Keeping the Faith" presents Father Brian in a humble and human way. And the film's droll dialogue and fine performances help to balance some of the more predictable moments of the yarn.

Taken as a whole, the film gives a fresh, smart look at thirtysomethings who may have gotten a little too comfortable and are inadvertently pushed to question their lifestyles and opinions and grow in the process. ▼

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Trinity is center of Christian life, pope says at audience

By JOHN NORTON
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Far from being abstract and irrelevant to believers' daily lives, faith in the Trinity is the central mystery of Christian life, Pope John Paul II said.

The creed's description of one God in three equal and distinct persons "cannot be interpreted as a sort of 'celestial arithmetical theorem' from which nothing derives for human existence, as the (18th-century German) philosopher (Immanuel) Kant supposed," he said.

Speaking during the weekly general audience April 5 in St. Peter's Square, the pope said the glory of the Trinity manifests itself throughout time and space in the whole of creation, reaching a high point in the Incarnation.

God's sending of his own son to take on human flesh reveals his love for humanity and enables humans to become his children, the pope said.

"To know God and his son is to accept the mystery of the loving communion of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit into one's own life, which even now is open to eternal life because it shares in the life of God," he said.

The revelation of the Trinity's glory in the Incarnation was not "a simple illumination which threw back the darkness for an instant, but a seed of divine life deposited forever in the world and in human hearts," the pope said.

At the end of the audience, the pope appealed for greater respect for the human rights of Gypsies.

Noting that April 8 marked the International Day of Gypsies — dedicated this year to Gypsies victimized in the Kosovo conflict — the pope said he hoped that the commemoration would help "to promote the full respect of the human dignity of these brothers of ours, promoting their adequate integration in society."

He said he looked forward to meeting with Gypsies at the Vatican during jubilee celebrations June 2 for migrants and travelers.

Looking relaxed and alert throughout the audience — attended by 40,000 pilgrims from more than 20 countries — the pope smiled and joked after Croatian pilgrims sang him "Gaudeamus Igitur," a rousing Latin-language students' song.

The pope was fresh from a unofficial day trip outside Rome, most likely to the clean air of nearby mountains, according to Italian news reports. His destination was unknown, but he left the Vatican at 7:30 a.m. April 4 in a black BMW with a small escort, the ANSA news agency reported.

Passionist Father Ciro Benedettini, a Vatican spokesman, declined April 5 to confirm or deny the reports.

The Season of Lent

REV. MR. FRANK SEABO

Holy Thursday and RCIA

Holy Thursday evening is the beginning of the Easter Triduum. The Easter Triduum of the passion and resurrection of Christ is the culmination of the entire liturgical year. Holy Thursday begins a three-day period of prayer, reaching its climax when Jesus Christ is raised from the dead to new and eternal life at the Easter Vigil, where we celebrate the baptism and confirmation of new Catholics, new members of the Catholic Church.

What an awesome experience; what a joyous occasion!

For those journeying in the RCIA program, Holy Thursday marks a series of spiritually intense events leading to the beginning of new and blessed lives as Catholics. On Holy Thursday evening, the period of solemn preparation and the "purple" of Lent are left behind, as the priest and deacons put on white vestments for the evening Mass of the Last Supper. This evening is the first time that the Elect are not dismissed from the holy sacrifice of the Mass for the breaking open of the Word.

For the last two years, my ministry has primarily been involved with the RCIA program at St. Michael the Archangel Church in Silver Spring, Md. For a catechist and now a transitional deacon of the church, there is no more joyful moment than witnessing my fellow journeyers, my friends, enter the Catholic Church.

Holy Thursday itself is an awakening from the season of Lent. We celebrate the Eucharist, we commemorate the Last Supper "on the night he was betrayed," and we have a special option for the washing of the feet. St. John the Evangelist directly told us that our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, came to serve — and not to be served. All those who follow Jesus are expected to follow the example of the Master. We follow Jesus, carrying our own crosses, for in doing so, we will share everlasting life with him.

My brothers and sisters, Christ is the light of the world. For myself, Holy Thursday Mass brings all these wonderful experiences to a clear focus and meaning. Christ's intention is for all those baptized to follow his example, and by following his example, to serve the people of God. The beautiful witness of faith by those who, as adults, choose to enter the Catholic Church by attending RCIA feeds my own faith.

On Holy Thursday evening, we witness together, we pray together and we watch together as the Blessed Sacrament is carried out of the church to a prayerful place of reservation. For on Good Friday, on Calvary, Jesus — the Son of God and the Son of Mary, the Lamb of God, the sinless one — one time and eternally takes away the sins of the world.

Rev. Mr. Frank Seabo is a transitional deacon in formation for the priesthood of the Diocese of Charlotte. He is currently completing formation at Theological College in Washington, D.C. He will be ordained to the priesthood in June.

Hispanic Ministry

Evaluating Hispanic Ministry

Last month we took a look at an evaluation of diocesan and parish structures with regard to Hispanic Ministry. Let's now take a look at programs for priests and seminarians as well as lay participation and leadership in the Church.

The 1998 study commissioned by the Secretariat for Hispanic Affairs of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops offers the following with regard to programs for priests and seminarians:

On the plus side...

Language and cultural training for priest candidates has increased in recent years. In 1990, only 18 percent of the dioceses offer "English as a Second Language" programs to Hispanic seminarians; in addition, only 31 percent required their non-Hispanic seminarians to study Spanish.

By 1998, the number of dioceses offering ESL to Hispanics had doubled, and the number requiring non-Hispanics to study Spanish had increased by 67 percent.

On the down side...

a) The number of new Hispanic vocations remains low. The growing pool of male Hispanic newcomers is a potential source of new energy for the priesthood.

However, education, language and cultural barriers continue to limit their entry into seminary. Among the native-born, new opportunities for social advancement outside the Church, coupled with a lack of active recruitment in the parishes, has led to a decline in Hispanic vocations to the priesthood. In the Northeast alone, the number of Hispanic seminarians has declined 64 percent since 1983.

b) Continuing education in Hispanic Ministry for non-Hispanic priests and sisters is on the decline. In 1998, far fewer US religious are taking courses in Spanish or studying Hispanic faith culture.

For example, in 1990, 9 percent of priests and about 6 percent of sisters nationwide were studying Spanish; in 1998, the combined figure for all religious was under 4 percent. The percentage of U.S. religious engaged in studies of Hispanic devotions and sacramental life has declined by well over 50 percent.

In the Diocese of Charlotte this year, we have organized a one day cultural consciousness awareness day for the priests. We will take advantage of this workshop to provide materials to the priests of the Diocese to help them celebrate more effectively the sacraments in Spanish. The workshop will be conducted by Father Mario Vizcaino and Lidia Menocal from SEPI (Southeast Pastoral Institute).

Vincentian Father Vincent H. Finnerty is director of Hispanic Ministry for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Light One Candle

Peace! Shalom!

Every once in a while, we hear a story that we never forget. This is one that has affected me that way.

The world premiere of one of composer Deems Taylor's most beautiful works had just been played. The concert hall's capacity audience reacted as though spellbound for a moment. Then, wild applause. Over and over again, they called for the composer.

When Deems Taylor finally walked to center stage and bowed gracefully, the audience settled back expecting a curtain speech. Instead, Taylor just stood there, slowly turning his head, from center aisle to side aisles, and then looking up into the balcony. He wanted everyone in the audience to get a good look at him. Then, with utter joy in his voice, he simply said, "Now you can go home and tell your friends for once in your life you have seen a truly happy man."

I would hope this Easter, if you were with me and I with you, we would look into each others eyes and find a truly happy person.

I believe that is what we are called to do for others — to be that truly happy person that the Resurrection Power of God makes possible. To be that truly peace-filled person speaking the word of love, as it is needed — carrying food to the hungry, aid and comfort to the sick, new hope to the despondent.

To encourage young and old alike to nurture and develop all of their God-given creativity. To listen when someone needs a friend to pay attention. To hug when someone needs a friend's comforting arms.

Actually, those of us who joyfully celebrate the Peace of Christ this Easter are called to do these things. Why? Because with Easter, we rejoice in Jesus' final victory, the fulfillment of His life and ministry, and our fulfillment as a Christian people. The Prince of Peace has conquered, not by the power of the sword, but by the power of love.

The Hebrew word for this complete personal fulfillment is Shalom — the presence of harmony and wholeness in your life. There is nothing better you can wish for yourself and for others. When you think about it, you begin to realize what an important part Shalom played in the life of Jesus.

That first Christmas, when the Angels sang, they sang, "Peace on earth!" On the very last night of his life, in the upper room, Jesus said to the disciples, "My peace I give to you. Not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your hearts be troubled, neither let them be afraid." (John 14:27)

And, in between, again and again, he offered Shalom. As the Prince of Peace, Christ makes his Peace real to us, and delegates each of us to make it real to one another. Indeed, once you experience Christ's Peace you cannot contain it. It radiates from your very being, and others can sense it.

How wonderful it would be this Easter for someone to actually sense the reality of Christ's Peace in your life. Indeed, my prayer during this Holy Week is that you will be so at peace with God and yourself, that your joy will be as contagious as it is visible. And please remember me as working and praying with you to bring His Peace to all we meet.

God is with us! God loves us! Shalom! Shalom!

The Bottom Line

A jury no longer out

During the Easter season each year, someone is bound to challenge me on what happened after the crucifixion of Jesus. Questions usually range from, "How can you prove Jesus rose from the dead?" to "How do you know for sure that the Holy Spirit infused the apostles with grace, courage and spiritual powers 50 days later?"

Well, the answer is, of course, we can't really "prove" such incredible happenings that are so completely out of the range of what can be attested to scientifically. We can only respond that we walk in faith, which means we accept that these events are mysterious, yet believe they are true.

The source that verifies this for us is the church, which — as the sign of Christ on earth — could not be in error. I felt it would always be comforting to be able to go beyond faith and say, "These are the facts, friends. It happened just the way the Bible says."

Well, I had the good luck to get my hands on a new book that puts all the questions raised by the Gospels to the test. The author comes up with a conclusion that should force even doubters to reconsider their questions about Jesus' life, death and resurrection.

The book is written by an attorney, Pamela Binnings Ewen, and is called "Faith on Trial — An Attorney Analyzes the Evidence for the Death and Resurrection of Jesus" (Boardman and Holman Publishers). A specialist in corporate finance, Ewen began her investigation with a question: "Would the testimony of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John stand up in court?"

From there, the fascination begins. From the perspective of a lawyer, who needs to have compelling evidence for proof in building a factual case, the author analyzes the four Gospels with magnifying-glass detail. She presents her case as if her readers were members of the jury in a trial.

She offers scientific, archaeological and historical evidence to prove that Jesus' life, death and resurrection actually occurred as described by the four evangelists, who, she also argues, give us the accounts of reliable eyewitnesses. Her "Summation to the Jury," proving that the evidence is valid, that the events in the Gospels did occur as a historical fact, is a document in itself that believers should have in hand to pass on to doubters.

Ewen says she wrote the book when, in the middle of life, still an agnostic, she went on a search for faith. Yet, though she found she wanted the answers faith provided, she still needed to understand faith with the logic and reason she had acquired in her professional life as an attorney. For, she states, "The heart will not accept what the mind rejects."

Her personal search went on for 15 years. She studied the researched works of great biblical scholars and archaeologists, subjecting every detail to the rigorous standards of proof required in a court of law. Now her work of documenting the veracity of the Gospels, legally, is completed, and she shares her findings with us — the jury.

Her book is a faith journey that is an eye opener and a heart warmer.

Question Corner

Jesus' Exhortation: Take up your cross

Q. Your column in our diocesan paper is very informative and helpful. Our question is about the passages in Matthew and Mark where Jesus tells his disciples that they must "take up their cross" if they are to follow him.

How would they have understood this since it was Jesus' death on the cross that gave the cross its significance? And obviously that had not happened yet. Does it have to do with the fact that the Gospels were written after the resurrection, when the apostles knew about his death on the cross?

A. That certainly would be a significant part of the answer. Whatever Jesus actually said in this context, it is certain that the early Christians would have read these words in the Gospels of Matthew (10:38 and 16:24) and Mark (8-34) with their minds on the death of Jesus.

The church's well-established teaching about the formation and writing of the four Gospels supports that interpretation. In their preaching during the first few decades after the Lord's death and resurrection, "the apostles passed on to their listeners what was really said and done by the Lord with that fuller understanding which they enjoyed" after being instructed by the Spirit following the resurrection and Pentecost ("The Historical Truth of the Gospels," instruction of the Pontifical Biblical Commission, 1964).

The instruction explains that just as Jesus, after the resurrection, interpreted to them passages of the Old Testament and his own words, so the apostles interpreted his words and actions from the perspective of their enlightened beliefs and the needs of their listeners.

These apostolic teachings then found their way into the written Gospels, with each of the evangelists presenting the life and teachings of Jesus according to his own theological purpose and forms of expression. (See the encyclical, "The Promotion of Biblical Studies," Pius XII, 1943; and the above instruction.)

In this way, as you say, words of Jesus spoken before his death were seen and understood later on in the context of his death and his presence in the living community of believers.

We should note also, however, that these verses in Matthew and Mark would have a particular spiritual significance even before Calvary.

Punishment by death on the cross was common in those days. Chances are that all the people in the entourage of Jesus had looked on frequently as condemned men carried their cross, at least the upper cross bar, to the place of crucifixion.

Commentators have noted that when Jesus adopted this exhortation to carry the cross in the way the Gospels suggest, he would also be urging his followers to submit themselves to God's authority in some way comparable to the condemned criminals' submission to Roman authority.

OLG students place first in NASA Competition

GREENSBORO — An eighth-grade science class team at Our Lady of Grace School has been awarded first place in the NASA Student Involvement Program's (NSIP) 1999-2000 competition. Kyle Barbour, Matthew Frederick, Al-don Schraeder and Craig Reed of Danita McDonald's class are being honored for their work on "Design a Mission to Mars."

NSIP is a national program that stimulates math, science, technology and geography excellence through five competition categories designed for students in grades three through 12. The competitions are "Design a Mission to Mars," "Earth Systems in My Neighborhood," "Watching Earth Change," "Aeronautics and Space Science Journalism," and "Flight Opportunities."

Over 360 students submitted more than 1,200 entries to the competitions. Students engage in research that promotes critical thinking, problem solving, communication and collaboration skills.

Student entries are judged at NASA Centers by teams of scientists, engineers, educators, journalists and other professionals who select the first, second and third place winners. The Our Lady of Grace School winners were judged and selected at NASA Langley Research Center.

NASA headquarters will officially announce the names of all NSIP winners in mid-April and post the names on the NSIP website www.nsip.net. A NASA representative will visit the school to present plaques to the winning students. ▼

Jesuit Father Frank Reese, on staff with the Jesuit House of Prayer, spoke about reconciliation and how "God the Father of Mercy Calls Us to Conversion," the second presentation. Dominican Father Michael Burke from Raleigh participated in the parish mission and returned to discuss the Beatitudes.

Bishop William G. Curlin joined the Arden group on March 5 to celebrate Mass and to facilitate the program focusing on the Eucharist and its place in the lives of Catholics, especially during the season of Lent. "Lent is a period of retreat and a time to purify ourselves and to reassess and re-evaluate our lives," said Bishop Curlin. "When we receive the Eucharist, we become the extension of Jesus presence on earth. The Eucharist is the living Christ, which we should try to remember during this holy time."

The final topic, "Go Now and Transform the World," was presented by a panel of parishioners. "For the final week, the idea was to go out and change the world. Through the weekly presentations, we should have received the sense of going out to live these truths in the marketplace and the workplace. We have to make choices that reflect our Christian understanding of our place in the world," said Peyton.

"Lent is a period of retreat and a time to purify ourselves and to reassess and re-evaluate our lives," said Bishop Curlin.

Cornelia Scibetta has been attending the programs for several years and mentioned that it sparked the interest of a Baptist friend who was impressed about the concept of nourishment for the body and soul. "I enjoy the program because it is an opportunity for fellowship and is a learning experience and a part of my Lenten journey," said Scibetta. ▼

Stations program brings Way of the Cross to life

By JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

SYLVA — The narrator announces the first station, "Jesus is Condemned to Death." The sanctuary of St. Mary Church darkens for a moment, then lights come on as the narrator reads the commentary about the station. The sanctuary goes dark; mysterious figures move into position.

The lights come up again as a group sings. The congregation sees that the mysterious figures have become people frozen in time: Jesus, accosted by the Roman soldiers, and, just to his right, Pontius Pilate, his hands poised over a bowl held by a servant.

It is the first of 14 tableaux in St. Mary's annual presentation of the Living Stations.

One Friday evening during each Lent, St. Mary youth recreate Jesus' passion and death in this manner. This year, members of the confirmation class portrayed Jesus, Mary, Veronica, Simon of Cyrene, Pontius Pilate, the soldiers and the crowd. They stopped each moment in time along the Way of the Cross. Singers and guitarists from Western Carolina University and Smoky Mountain High School accompanied each scene with a different song, including "Be Not Afraid," "We Remember, We Celebrate, We Believe," "Hail Mary, Gentle Woman," and "Behold the Death of the Lord."

This year's Jesus, chosen by the youth from among their group, was Cliff Thompson, a junior at Smoky Mountain High School in Sylva. Thompson and his brother, Adam, recently converted to Catholicism. "I felt that I needed to be closer to God," he said. "As I came to be here, I learned more about Jesus because the Catholic Church stressés Jesus."

Gloria Schweizer, campus minister at Western Carolina University in nearby Cullowhee, brought the Living Stations idea to St. Mary when she and her family moved to the area nine years ago. Her previous parish, Holy Spirit in Union, N.J., had presented the program on Good Fridays.

"It was something we really looked forward to," she said. "This (St. Mary) was our new church, and I wanted to bring that here and have my son experience what my daughter had."

She approached Father James Cahill about having the Living Stations at St. Mary. It was Father Cahill's first Lent at St. Mary, and he was enthusiastic about the program. He's still pastor there, and he still enjoys the Living Stations. "It's been great every year," he said.

He also sees how it influences those who take part: "For some of them, just in the way they do things for others, both in the church and in the community. We've got a great bunch of kids here."

Linda Kinnear, whose son Tyler worked on the lighting this year, also praises the parish youth.

"They're very spiritual kids," she said. "They always rise to the occasion, and they really like each other. It's very moving, and every year we have the most wonderful Jesus."

The group did rise to the occasion, going flawlessly through the program after only two rehearsals, the second one finishing only half an hour before the Living Stations began.

This year's Jesus, chosen by the youth from among their group, was Cliff Thompson, a junior at Smoky Mountain High School in Sylva. Thompson and his brother, Adam, recently converted to Catholicism. "I felt that I needed to be closer to God," he said. "As I came to be here, I learned more about Jesus because the Catholic Church stresses Jesus."

He understands more about Jesus as a result of representing Him in the Living Stations, he said, "by understanding what actually happened. He went through torture, humiliation, a long ordeal. I will have an understanding of that, more than just pictures on the wall. It's like bringing the pictures out of the wall."

Joel Stroot, who portrayed Jesus last year and was stage manager for this year's presentation, offered Thompson advice on how to remain still during each tableau: "Make sure to concentrate on one thing so as not to blink. To make it mean more, think of it as a service to Jesus, and when you're up there, think about what it was really like."

Megan Hayes was one of those in the crowd scenes. It was her third year in the program. What means the most to her, she said, is "just to see how Jesus' life was. It's just touching to see how everything goes on, how everything fits together."

Lisa Heim has also been a member of the crowd for the last two years, but this year she portrayed Mary. She thinks about what Mary must have thought, the sadness at the death of her son. "I think about the stations more seriously now," she said.

"It's incredibly beautiful and moving," said parishioner Don Buzney. His son Scott was co-narrator, along with Eric Carpenter. Buzney's son Brian played one of the guards.

"We all grew up with the stations, but this live performance is so moving," Buzney's wife, Jean, said. "They give us a great gift." ▼

Lutherans open hospice named for Cardinal Bernardin

By PAUL BARRA
Catholic News Service

COLUMBIA, S.C. (CNS) — Mere months after Lutherans and Catholics signed an accord, U.S. leaders of the two religions gathered April 2 in Columbia to dedicate The Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Hospice House in the birthplace of the late cardinal of Chicago.

The hospice, run by the Lutheran Homes of South Carolina, will provide a residence for terminally ill patients.

"The Catholic community is humbled and honored that you decided to name this hospice after a Catholic bishop and cardinal," said Bishop Robert J. Baker of Charleston during a worship service at St. Joseph Church to dedicate the hospice.

"It's a great tribute to a great man and a practical sign of follow-up to the recent Lutheran-Catholic accord," he added.

Msgr. Kenneth Velo, director of the Catholic Church Extension Society, was the guest homilist. He was Cardinal Bernardin's executive assistant, and he delivered the homily at the cardinal's funeral.

Msgr. Velo called the hospice dedication "most significant" and, alluding to the Gospel reading chosen for the service, he said "Joseph Cardinal Bernardin was a good Samaritan. He stopped by the side of the road all his life."

The priest said it was appropriate that the Lutherans chose to name the hospice after the late cardinal and that in the work they do, Lutheran Homes would also "stop by the side of the road" like the Samaritan.

He pointed out that the cardinal was born in Columbia and served the Charleston Diocese as a priest. The then-Father Bernardin was named an auxiliary bishop of Atlanta, then appointed Cincinnati's archbishop in 1972 before becoming archbishop of Chicago 10 years later. He was named a cardinal in 1983. In June 1995, he had surgery for pancreatic cancer and he died from the disease in November 1996.

"Through it all, his ministry was marked by reconciliation, peace, reaching out to people of all cultures and faiths," Msgr. Velo said. "He himself was a gift of peace. He was a prince of peace."

The Rev. Boyd Cook, president and CEO of Lutheran Homes of South Carolina, also spoke fondly of Cardinal Bernardin.

"Our brother Joseph was Columbia's favorite son. Reconciliation was the compelling instinct of his life," he said.

John White, Pulitzer-prize winning photographer from the Chicago Sun-Times, who was the photographic biographer of Cardinal Bernardin, attended the dedication service.

He told The New Catholic Miscellany, diocesan newspaper of Charleston, that he wasn't Catholic, except when he was around the cardinal.

Octavie Mosimann, a native of Charleston, and the cardinal's secretary for 32 years, said the cardinal would have been pleased with this honor.

"He was a great reconciler," she said. "Everyone who knew him misses him very much."

The Bernardin House has 12 private patient suites, family rooms, a library, a nondenominational chapel, a dining room and bedroom facilities for families of patients.

"The Bernardin Hospice House will be a safe haven for patients, family members and friends to have an opportunity to prepare for the final event of living," said Cathy Askew, executive director of nursing for the hospice.

The dedication ceremony took place on the cardinal's birthday. He would have been 72 years old. ▼

The Risen Christ

A Living Presence

Thirty years ago I joined friends in serving dinner on Easter Sunday to the senior members in our community. Many of our guests were alone in this world without family or friends. While dessert was being served, one of our guests rose to express her appreciation. I will never forget her words: "Don't go looking for Jesus in a tomb. He ain't there. He is right here with us in this room."

One does not have to be a Christian to admire Jesus. Many non-Christians believe Him to be a hero. They often quote His words to support the cause they champion, especially His teaching concerning peace and justice. But, they do not accept His claim to be the Son of God. For them, Jesus, like many great leaders in this world, is dead, while His words live on. Unfortunately, some Christians also look for Him among the dead. They fail to understand that He lives and can be found in those around us.

We will discover Jesus if we seek Him with "eyes of faith," for He appears in many disguises. Jesus is that homeless man or woman on the street corner. He is the elderly person next door who lacks the strength to walk to the grocery store or visit the doctor. He is the single parent who feels very much alone in trying to be both mother and father to his or her child. He lives in those whom society brands a social outcast. He can be found in every hospital and nursing home. He is husband and wife, son and daughter in every home. He is everywhere love needs to be!

During the forty days of Lent, we walked beside Jesus on His journey towards Calvary. Holy Week invites us to be with Jesus in the upper room where He gives us Himself in the Eucharist as a lasting memorial of love. Good Friday bids us to celebrate that price He paid for our sins. Easter rings with joy in His triumph over death.

We cannot allow these days of special grace to end. Jesus has asked us to be witnesses to His triumph over the death. Again, if we look for Him among the living "with eyes of faith," we will find Him. May this Easter discover us sharing His gifts of love and peace, especially with those most in need of these gifts.

God grant you and your loved ones a Blessed Easter!

Prayerfully in the Risen Lord,

+ William G. Curlin

Vatican to publish new general instruction on liturgy in June

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican plans to publish updated instructions for celebrating the Mass when it releases the third Latin edition of the Roman Missal in early June. Archbishop Francesco Tamburrino, secretary of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, said the revised "General Instruction of the Roman Missal" will be released around Pentecost, June 11. The archbishop said the instruction will be dated April 20, Holy Thursday, which marks the institution of the Eucharist at the Last Supper.

Anglican, Catholic bishops to meet in Canada in May

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Thirty Anglican and Roman Catholic bishops will meet near Toronto in May to review the progress in their 30 years of ecumenical dialogue. "This high-level meeting is happening at a time when Anglicans and Roman Catholics around the world are exploring the possibilities for further steps toward visible unity," said a April 17 Vatican statement. The May 14-20 meeting at the Queen of Apostles Renewal Center in Mississauga will be led by Anglican Archbishop George Carey of Canterbury, primate of the worldwide Anglican Communion, and Cardinal Edward I. Cassidy, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

U.S. bishops oppose giving China permanent normal trade relations

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops are urging members of the House of Representatives to vote against granting China permanent normal trade relations because of China's human rights violations, especially in the area of religious freedom. Boston Cardinal Bernard F. Law, chairman of the bishops' Committee on International Policy, stated the bishops' position in an April 12 letter to House members. Under a historic U.S.-China trade deal announced last November, the United States agreed to support China's long-sought membership in the World Trade Organization.

Vatican asked to declare Chinese patriotic church in schism

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a letter to top Vatican officials, the nephew of the late Chinese Cardinal Ignatius Kung Pin-mei asked the Vatican to declare the Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association schismatic. "The CPA is not and cannot be Catholic because it continues to deny the ... supreme authority of the successor of Peter," said Joseph Kung, president of the U.S.-based Cardinal Kung Foundation. Kung sent the letter March 28. The Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association was founded by and continues to be directed by China's communist government. It elects its own bishops and spurns all ties with the Vatican. The Vatican press office would not comment on Kung's letter April 14.

Vatican diplomat presses for law against kids enlisting

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — While applauding an international effort to raise the minimum draft age to 18, a Vatican diplomat pressed for a broader law prohibiting children under 18 from even voluntarily enlisting in the armed services. "In many cases, it is difficult to recognize a truly voluntary and free decision," said Archbishop Giuseppe Bertello, the Vatican's permanent observer to the United Nations in Geneva. The papal diplomat spoke April 12 in Geneva during a meeting of the U.N. Human Rights Commission, which discussed new rules to prevent child soldiers and the sexual exploitation of children.

Pope likely to travel to Oceania in 2001, say regional prelates

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II is likely to travel to Noumea, New Caledonia, in the weeks following Easter 2001 to present a major document on church life in Oceania, prelates from the region said. A draft, prepared in the wake of the 1998 Synod of Bishops for Oceania, was virtually complete, said Cardinal Thomas Williams of Wellington, New Zealand. Members of the post-synodal council, made up of Vatican officials and seven prelates from Oceania, met in Rome April 4-6 to add last amendments to the draft before it went to the pope.

Indian archbishop calls attacks on Catholics an 'opportunity'

AGRA, India (CNS) — The Agra Archdiocese in northern India witnessed attacks on missionaries that its archbishop considers a challenge for dialogue. Three of the four attacks reported March 31-April 11 were on priests and nuns associated with schools. They were manhandled, verbally abused and threatened, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. Archbishop Vincent Concessao of Agra told UCA News April 11 that the attacks posed "an opportunity for us to come out and tell what we are doing and why." He said he wrote a letter to federal and state officials, including Indian Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee, seeking "immediate action" to provide security to Christian schools.

Vatican to hold Easter vigil outdoors to accommodate crowds

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — So many pilgrims want to celebrate Easter with Pope John Paul II that the Vatican has decided to hold the April 22 evening Easter vigil Mass in St. Peter's Square. The Mass, which will begin at 8 p.m. with the blessing of fire and a procession with the Easter candle, usually is held inside St. Peter's Basilica. St. Peter's Basilica holds about 8,000 people seated. The piazza, when filled with chairs, can accommodate five times as many.

Peruvian bishops urge calm amid post-election tensions

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — Peruvian bishops renewed their call to avoid violence amid tensions following the country's presidential election. "This is the moment for serenity, respect and confidence in the law," said Archbishop Juan Cipriani Thorne of Lima. The president of the Peruvian bishops' conference, Archbishop Luis Bambaren Gastelumendi, said the Peruvian population showed a "great level of civility and respect for the democratic system." "This respect must be kept," Archbishop Bambaren added.

Catholic mayor, marchers want end to debate over Confederate flag

By JORDAN MCMORROUGH
The New Catholic Miscellany

COLUMBIA, S.C. (CNS) — The vast majority of South Carolinians support moving the Confederate flag from atop South Carolina's Statehouse, yet the Legislature has failed to act, Charleston's Catholic mayor told a rally in Columbia April 6.

A throng of people converged at the Statehouse for the rally, which marked the conclusion of a five-day, 120-mile trek led by Mayor Joseph P. Riley to call for action on the issue.

The effort was a "grass-roots initiative to let the South Carolina Legislature know that the citizens of South Carolina want an immediate end to the Confederate flag debate," according to march organizers.

In his remarks, Riley, a parishioner at the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist in Charleston, shared a threatening letter he received prior to the event, which necessitated the wearing of a bulletproof vest throughout the march as well as a beefed-up security presence for marchers.

The anonymous letter writer told the mayor that if he marched with blacks through Calhoun County south of Columbia, "I will put you in my gun sights."

"Ladies and gentlemen," Riley said, "that is not his heritage, that is his hate."

Opponents of the flag see it as a vestige of hatred and slavery and want it removed from the Statehouse dome. Supporters see the banner as a symbol of Southern heritage that honors Confederate dead and demand that it stay where it is.

Mayor Riley started the walk April 2 with about 600 people. Marchers braved rain, rough roads, blisters, and groups of protesters along the way. About 2,000 people walked the final leg, including Charleston Bishop Robert J. Baker.

"It is time to reconcile and to find a solution that represents the sentiments of the parties that disagree about the meaning of the flag over the state Capitol," the bishop said in a statement.

> "There are those who value the flag for its historical and cultural heritage, and there are those who feel the flag does not represent them," he added. "Now is the time for a solution, not tomorrow — in this session of the Legislature, and not the next."

"There are those who value the flag for its historical and cultural heritage, and there are those who feel the flag does not represent them," he added. "Now is the time for a solution, not tomorrow — in this session of the Legislature, and not the next."

"Get in Step" officials noted the event drew thousands of participants along the way — some for a few minutes and others for an entire day. Church groups came by the busloads, as did school groups.

St. Philip's parishioner earns Morehead Scholarship

By ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
Correspondent

TROUTMAN — Dan Folliard, a high school senior at South Iredell High School and a member of St. Philip the Apostle Church in Statesville, had a problem that many high school seniors would like to have. Should he accept an appointment to West Point, an appointment to the Naval Academy or a Morehead Scholarship to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill?

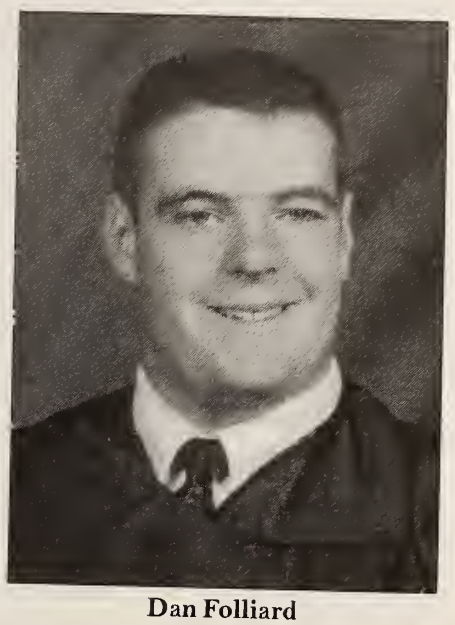
He chose to go to UNC. "It was really a tough decision, but I think I made the right one," he said. "I'm so lucky. All my friends are filling out scholarship applications to see what they can get. I'm so happy I don't have to worry about that stuff anymore."

One thing that factored into Folliard's decision was the fact that his brother is currently a junior at UNC. He also mentioned the atmosphere of the campus when he went there for final interviews last fall, just when the leaves were starting to change colors and fall off the trees.

"The scenery was breathtaking," he said. "They really spoiled us in the finals weekend." His room and food at the Carolina Inn were paid for by the Morehead Foundation.

He was able to visit his brother's dorm room and play video games before his interviews. "That helped me relax," he said. "All my interviews went smoothly. Nothing went wrong."

This year was the first time that the Morehead competition did not include local interviews, Folliard said. Instead, nominees wrote essays and listed their extracurricular activities and sent that directly to the screening committee in Chapel Hill. Folliard then had his regional interview in Greensboro before the finals in Chapel Hill.



Dan Folliard

Folliard doesn't plan to play too many video games once he arrives at UNC. "I'm not one to stay in my room and study or play games too much," he said. He is considering a major in international affairs or foreign relations. He also talked about volunteering at the Newman Catholic Student Center in Chapel Hill, where his brother just received an internship for next year to work as program director.

He plans to get involved in other ways as well. He had thought he might try out for the wrestling team, but he injured his knee during high school wrestling this year and wasn't able to finish the season, and he thinks that the injury may prevent him from participating in the future.

Tina Swaney, youth minister at St. Philip the Apostle, said that Folliard is not the type to let injuries get him down. "He's a real neat kid,"

Program sends fresh air through the minds of afflicted elderly

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Suzanne Bach's learned to respect and cherish the elderly from her childhood in a small German Catholic community made up of her older family members and other elderly people who were a part of her life. She carried this respect with her throughout her life as she served as the former diocesan director of CRISM or Elder Ministry and now, with her work with the memory-impaired.

Bach is spearheading an information session on May 6 for caregivers and family members suffering from Alzheimer's Disease or dementia, featuring local panelists, Dr. Fred Allen, a neurologist, Bill Claytor, an attorney specializing in the legal ramifications after a diagnosis of Alzheimer's, Henry Bostick, the newest director of the Alzheimer's Association in Charlotte, and Bach herself, the director of the Shining Stars Adult Day Respite, held weekly at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte.

The Alzheimer's Information Day is being held at Providence United Methodist Church, across from St. Gabriel Church, from 9:30 a.m.-12:15 p.m. and will be a time for caretakers to learn the latest information about the disease and for those with Alzheimer's to experience a little of what takes place at the Shining Stars Adult Day Respite sessions.

Shining Stars grew out of the support group, held on the fourth Monday of the month from 2:00-3:30 p.m., also at St. Gabriel Church, for those who are faced with the day-to-day task of caring for those family members or friends whose memories are slipping away.

> "With something as difficult as Alzheimer's, many feel embarrassed because their loved one is not the same anymore. The Church is a good location because of the certain level of trust people feel for it."
> — Suzanne Bach

"With something as difficult as Alzheimer's, many feel embarrassed because their loved one is not the same anymore," explained Bach. "The Church is a good location because of the certain level of trust people feel for it."

The adult day respite, a state-regulated program, serves as a place for the memory-impaired to go to participate in activities and for the caregivers to have some time for themselves, said Bach. "The day respite is a little jewel because it helps the care receiver to get out of the home and interact in a safe social setting with people who are trained to work with them," continued Bach, who has a master's of human development and learning in counseling..

The people who participate in the activities can still take care of most of their functions because the caregivers can drop them off for the day's activities from 9:30 a.m.-2:00 p.m., which include reminiscing activities, physical chair exercises, arts and crafts and occasional work with the pre-kindergarten children from Cradle, St. Gabriel's early childhood program. Bach added that the group does something spiritual every day from Bible readings to Stations of the Cross and sing-a-longs, which adds an element on which other such programs do not focus, explained Bach.

"We are lucky as Catholics because we have so many rote prayers and song committed to memory, and we can recite those prayers and songs learned as children," said Bach, in reference to someone in the group who remembered the words to several songs though suffering from memory loss.

To help with the Shining Stars program, Bach went in search of funding and received a positive response from United Way. The grant will also help with the newly established program in place at Providence United Methodist Church, the host site for the May 6 information day. Associate Pastor Rev. Mr. Bill Jeffries, one of the ministers at St. Gabriel's neighbor church, had taken a notice to the program and thought that it would work well with several in his congregation dealing with Alzheimer's and dementia.

"It is hard for families to deal with, but underneath all that confusion, these people do shine," Bach said of the name of the program. "I see them as a blessing." ▼

she said. "He's the type that can take just about anything and deal with it and make the best of it. He has a positive attitude."

Swaney also talked about Folliard's involvement at the church. "He's always been an active part of our youth group," she said. "He's always been a leader, mainly by example," she said.

In addition to being involved with the youth group, Folliard teaches the first-grade faith formation class at St. Philip the Apostle, along with Katie Swaney, her daughter. "They do a great job," said Swaney. "There are not a lot of kids who will get up every Sunday morning to teach faith formation."

Swaney said that there were about 20 children in the class, and that the class continued to grow. She also said that the class recently took its turn leading a Sunday Mass at the church, doing the readings, the responsorial, the petitions, the ushering and the bringing in of the gifts.

"Several people made a point to tell me what a great job they did," she said.

Folliard is involved in many ways at school as well. He was captain of the football and wrestling teams this year, as well as the senior class president, an executive officer of the Marine Corps Junior ROTC, a member of the Beta Club and the Junior Jaycees.

Folliard said that Father Peter Fitzgibbons, pastor at St. Philip the Apostle and a former army chaplain, wanted him to go to West Point. All the same, Father Fitzgibbons wishes Folliard well. "Dan's a great kid," he said.

"He's very devoted and energetic. He has a great sense of humor. He's just a real all-around good kid." ▼

Springtime rain does not dampen seniors' spirits

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

HICKORY — Hundreds of years of living were represented through smiles that shone through the rainy, blustery day during the Spring Fling for seniors March 13 at the Catholic Conference Center. Many seniors from all points of the western half of North Carolina braved the weather and traveled on charter and school buses and in cars to join together for a day of games, demonstrations and an all-around pleasant time.

"It is nice to get out and see other Catholics from my parish and other parishes," said Marie Isley from St. Mary Church in Greensboro. "This gives me a good outlook on life, and as an older person, you have to enjoy life now because you don't know how many more years you have. This also makes you appreciate your religion more."

"This gives me a good outlook on life, and as an older person, you have to enjoy life now because you don't know how many more years you have. This also makes you appreciate your religion more."

— Marie Isley

Nearly 300 elderly men and women from approximately 30 parishes attended the annual event, sponsored by Catholic Social Services Elder Ministry. "Spring Fling is a day filled with fun and activities and is a time for elders to step out of the normal role and reconnect with their inner child," said Sandra Breakfield, director of Elder Ministry. "They come together on common ground to renew their faith and get reacquainted with friends."

Breakfield enlisted the help of several elderly men and women from around the diocese to serve as this year's Spring Fling team. This was Helen and Tom Gassen's first time on the committee. "This is critical for seniors because of fellowship and simply getting out and moving around," said Mrs. Gassen, who teaches tai chi in her spare time. "This can bring some people to life, and we need more activities for senior citizens."

After the morning group presentation from Mika Magic, a magician, the seniors had their pick of several afternoon activities including: blood pressure and pulse checks, arts and crafts, where attendants made miniature cloth angels, bingo, professional massages in the "chairway to heaven," line dancing from J.N. and Company, and a presentation about edible flowers from Rachel Sigmon.

Lisa Bruen, a licensed massage therapist from Carolina Myotherapy Clinic, talked about the importance of massage therapy especially for seniors.

"For elderly people that do not receive touch or one-on-one contact anymore, massage brings them comfort and helps with bodily and emotional systems and lets them know they are not forgotten," explained Bruen, who, along with Arc Drumheller, helped to relax the eager people standing in line for the rare treat of personal massage.

A Spring Fling participant happily and bravely struggles with the Electric Slide during the line dancing portion, taught by J.N. and Company.

"I became involved with herbs and edible flowers a few years before my retirement in 1985," said Sigmon, who presented one of the more popular events among men and women. "If you don't stay active as you grow older, you tend to lose something vital and important in your life," she continued.

Some of the participants decided to forgo the scheduled events and used the time to catch-up with friends, visit the center's chapel or sit on the sofas and read. Edward O'Brien and a large group of fellow parishioners from Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem sat around smiling while joking and talking the day away.

"It is delightful to get together with friends who feel the same way I do about things. There isn't much for us old-timers to do except watch TV, and this is a way for us to have a nice, casual time," said O'Brien.

After the closing liturgy of the day, celebrated by Bishop Curlin, he and the audience were surprised by a large cake with candles in honor of his sixth anniversary as bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte. "It was a good ending to a nice day of activities and fellowship, in spite of the rain," said one participant.

James Thompson traveled to the Catholic Center from St. Mary Church in Shelby and noted, "Events like this help keep me motivated and young, and a little change always helps. I meet people who can help me, and I can help someone else. You never get too old to learn." ▼

Extend religious workers visas, cardinal asks Congress

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A bill to permanently extend a visa program for religious workers is critical to many pastoral ministries, Detroit Cardinal Adam J. Maida told a Senate subcommittee. "The work of the Catholic Church in the United States would suffer dramatically without the assistance of nonminister religious workers," said Cardinal Maida in April 13 testimony to the House Judiciary subcommittee on immigration. The 5,000 visas approved annually for nonminister foreign church workers benefit more than half the U.S. dioceses, he said. The nuns, religious brothers and others given the visas work in health care, parish ministry, teaching, nursing and counseling.

Chicago Archdiocese takes part in 'No Sweatshop' campaign

CHICAGO (CNS) — Chicago's cardinal said his archdiocese has joined a national anti-sweatshop campaign because the church is called in a jubilee year to proclaim "'liberty to captives,' including those 'enslaved to undignified working conditions.'" In a statement April 12, Cardinal Francis E. George said the archdiocese is working to make sure that school uniforms are made "sweat-labor free." He noted that similar campaigns are under way in the Archdioceses of Philadelphia and Newark, N.J. He said the U.S. Labor Department has been asked by the archdiocese to review a list of 19 uniform vendors known to be used by Catholic school personnel "in an effort to identify the source of manufacturers of school and sports uniforms."

Project Rachel ad campaign not for proselytizing, official says

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The national advertising program for Project Rachel, the Catholic Church's post-abortion reconciliation ministry, is not aimed at "returning Catholics to the faith nor proselytizing," a spokeswoman for the U.S. bishops' pro-life efforts said April 12. Helen Alvare, director of planning and information for the bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, said in a statement that the purpose of the ad campaign and of Project Rachel "is to offer women and men suffering after abortion any help they need." She said widespread interest across the United States and internationally had prompted stories that contained some "inaccuracies which should be corrected."

Way of Cross marks jubilee-year debt protests

WASHINGTON (CNS) — About 100 praying, singing protesters marched from the U.S. Capitol to the World Bank and International Monetary Fund April 11, linking Jesus' passion and death with the suffering of the world's poor. The fifth annual Economic Way of the Cross brought an afternoon of prayerful reflection to a week of escalating protests in the nation's capital against policies of the World Bank and IMF. Those institutions were to start their annual spring round of meetings in Washington April 16. Members of the Religious Working Group on the World Bank and IMF sponsored the outdoor prayer/protest.

Black Catholics often feel invisible in U.S. church, says priest

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (CNS) — African-American Catholics often feel invisible in the U.S. church, says a Nashville pastor. "They may not say it, but they feel it: This is not our church," said Franciscan Father Ferdinand Cheri, who is black. In an interview with the Tennessee Register, newspaper of the Nashville Diocese, he recalled an assignment as a young priest at a New Orleans parish that had a mixture of black and white families. Parishioners celebrated St. Patrick's Day for the Irish families and St. Joseph's feast day for the Italian families, but when the black members wanted to celebrate a black saint, like St. Martin de Porres or St. Augustine, there was opposition, he said.

Protestants honor Catholics for defense of Christians in India

NEW YORK (CNS) — Protestant evangelicals honored a Catholic archbishop and layman from India April 11 for leadership in defending India's Christian community against attacks by Hindu fundamentalists. The International Council of Evangelical Churches and the Global Center for Indian Christians, both led by an Anglican minister, the Rev. Bernard Chand of Wilmington, Del., gave the Staines International Award for Religious Harmony to Archbishop Alan de Lastic of Delhi and John Dayal, a newspaper editor in Delhi and official of several organizations.

Pope to beatify two visionaries in Fatima in May

By JOHN NORTON
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II will travel to Fatima, Portugal, in May to beatify two shepherd children who had visions of Mary in 1917, a Vatican official confirmed.

"The Holy Father accepted the invitation of the bishop of Fatima to hold the beatification ceremony of the shepherd children directly in Fatima," Archbishop Crescenzio Sepe, secretary-general of the Vatican's jubilee committee, told Vatican Radio March 21.

The pope will leave for Portugal May 12 and celebrate the beatification Mass the following day — the Feast of Our Lady of Fatima — on the shrine's esplanade, he said.

The announcement marked the first Vatican confirmation that the pope would travel to Fatima to beatify Francisco and Jacinta Marto, two of the three children who had visions of Mary. The third child, Sister Lucia dos Santos, is a 93-year-old nun living in a Portuguese convent.

Portugal's bishops, after visiting the Vatican in November, said that the pope had agreed to make the trip.

Archbishop Sepe also announced that the Fatima statue of Mary would be brought to the Vatican in October for a special ceremony entrusting the third Christian millennium to Mary's care.

Archbishop Sepe said that at the end of Mass Oct. 8 during the Jubilee for Bishops, the pope will lead an "act of entrustment" to Mary.

Pope John Paul has several times spoken of Our Lady of Fatima as a special protectress. He was shot and seriously wounded on her feast day in 1981, and a year later he paid a visit to the Fatima shrine to give thanks for his survival. On the 10th anniversary of the shooting, he placed a fragment of the bullet that wounded him in the crown atop the Fatima statue of Mary. ▼

Is God calling you?

Rev. Mr. Frank Seabo
is a transitional deacon in the Diocese of Charlotte. He is completing formation at Theological College in Washington D.C. He will be ordained in June 2000.

"For 14 years I worked in law enforcement education after receiving an undergraduate degree in finance and an MBA.

During that time, I became active in my parish and the Catholic community in North Carolina. I taught faith formation classes and became active in the Knights of Columbus serving as Grand Knight for my Council.

I really loved teaching and helping others in a parish setting. My friends encouraged me to consider the priesthood, knowing my love for serving the people in our church. With their encouragement and prayers, I answered God's call to be a priest.

Joyfully, I can serve you as a priest in this diocese. I hope that others will prayerfully consider their vocation in life."

Senate bill would award Congressional Gold Medal to pope

WASHINGTON (CNS) — U.S. Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., has introduced legislation that would award the Congressional Gold Medal to Pope John Paul II.

Sixty-six senators have co-sponsored the bill.

"Though many people see the pope as an important statesman, diplomat and political figure, Pope John Paul II is much more than that," Brownback said April 13 on the Senate floor. "As spiritual leader to the world's 1 billion Catholics, the pope has commenced a great dialogue with modern culture, one that transcends the boundaries of political or economic ideology."

A House version of the bill was introduced in January.

The pope "stands boldly as an ever-vigilant sign of contradiction to a culture that is darkened by the clouds of death," Brownback said. "In the face of this mounting storm, he has tirelessly proclaimed the need for a culture of life."

Brownback added, "He is a crusader against the offenses against human dignity that have transpired in the 20th century. More than any other single person this century, Pope John Paul II has worked to protect the rights of each individual. As well, John Paul II has addressed almost every major question posed by the modern mind at the turn of the millennium."

A Brownback spokesman said the bill has been assigned to the Senate Banking Committee for consideration.

The pope "stands boldly as an ever-vigilant sign of contradiction to a culture that is darkened by the clouds of death," Brownback said. "In the face of this mounting storm, he has tirelessly proclaimed the need for a culture of life."

— Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan

Earlier this year, a Congressional Gold Medal was approved for Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York. Last year, a medal was approved for Holy Cross Father Theodore Hesburgh, the former president of the University of Notre Dame. In 1997, Congress approved a medal for Mother Teresa.

Others under consideration for Congressional Gold Medals are the late "Peanuts" cartoonist Charles Schulz, the Apollo 11 astronauts, 1960 Olympics three-time gold medal-winner Wilma Rudolph, civil rights activists Rosa Parks and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, and former Presidents Ronald Reagan and Gerald Ford and their wives. ▼

The Mosaic of seminary life

Special to The Catholic News & Herald • April 21, 2000

We set out for a glimpse of the future church.

A couple months back, Editor Joann Keane and Associate Editor Jimmy Rostar met with Bishop Curlin, seeking counsel on how to best bring vocations to the pages of The Catholic News & Herald. With 22 seminarians in formation for the Diocese of Charlotte, what could be placed in print to develop a picture of who and what these men are all about?

What we wish to share with you in this special section, is what Bishop Curlin calls, "a mosaic of seminary life."

As we prepare to celebrate new beginnings in Easter, let us introduce you to another form of new life — in the stories of men of faith.

By JOANN S. KEANE
Editor

LATROBE, Pa. — We set out as voyeurs of the future church. What we found comes as no surprise: We are in good hands.

We were driven by the prospect of a historic number of priestly ordinations this coming June, when seven men will commit themselves in service to God and His people in the Diocese of Charlotte.

But our story plans traveled well beyond our initial thoughts. As we mulled over the editorial direction of this edition, it became more than just the seven. We wanted to introduce all of the 22 seminarians in formation for the Diocese of Charlotte. Moreover, we wanted to cut into a slice of daily life in seminary.

As practicality set in, we realized the daunting task of 22 interviews, not to mention the logistical challenge posed by nearly half a dozen seminaries up and down the East Coast. Last month, Associate Editor Jimmy Rostar and I hit the road. Destination: St. Vincent Archabbey and Seminary in Latrobe, Pa., with plans to meet with the largest coalition of seminarians studying at the same institution.

In Pennsylvania, we found the mosaic — not a cookie-cutter mold of a priestly man, but nine distinctively unique personalities. Nine diverse men preparing to serve a diverse church, nine men, not unlike the rest of us, sharing some of the same challenges of daily life. Yet, one sacrament will someday separate them from the flock: The sacrament of ordination.

We met a man who escaped the religious persecution of a communist regime, only to be captured, returned, imprisoned. His faith journey is one of near fatality. And while a second escape proved successful, his road to freedom was blighted with horrendous obstacles. He survived on faith.

We met a man holding the world in his hands, or so he thought. The trappings of wealth and success, as it turns out, were but smoke and mirrors to his true calling.

We met a man contemplating marriage and coming to grips with the whisper that grew louder: God has other plans.

We met a man who always had an inkling he wanted to be a priest. Though he joined the working class, he felt an emptiness. This void is filling now with the Holy Spirit.

We met a man already immersed in faith. For the better part of a decade, he was a brother in a religious community. The fork in his faith journey brought him to the diocese to fulfill his desire to become a priest in service to Western North Carolina.

The stories go on, poignant and honest, each unique. Every interview a new tile in this mosaic of faith.

On the campus of St. Vincent Seminary, these men are learning more than homiletics. They are finding camaraderie in friendship and support that extends beyond the diocese in which they will serve. St. Vincent Seminary is the formative home for men from 16 dioceses.

And while support comes from their brother seminarians, it is nurtured by a faculty and staff eager to assist with theological quandaries and the intricacies of faith formation.

We met nine men in love with the church. And while diversity was evident in their stories, the cohesive bond of this mosaic is irrefutable: Jesus. ▼

Sharing the Faith: Rev. Mr. Dave Brzoska

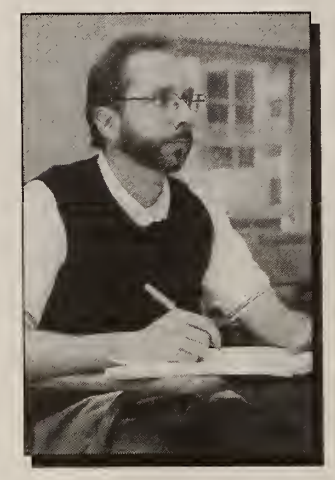
Rev. Mr. Dave Brzoska sees the church as a place for people to share their faith, find support and encounter a sense of life in their faith. It wasn't all that long ago when he, too, found himself looking for those very elements.

Brzoska grew up outside Philadelphia, where, he says, Mass was much like a production line. Move 'em in, fill the parish, get ready for another Mass. It was a delivery of the sacraments, but there wasn't much life to it. He drifted away.

When Brzoska's job transferred him to Newton, a small hamlet near Hickory a dozen years back, he got reacquainted with his faith. He found St. Aloysius in Hickory. More significantly, he discovered the peaceful prayerful manner of then-pastor Father Wilbur Thomas. "It gave me a new perspective on the Mass," says Brzoska. "Going to church on Sunday was something I really started looking forward to."

While enjoying the success of his job, it was at the expense of stress and pressure, and little life outside the work environment. He became involved in parish ministries, and found relief and satisfaction in his volunteer efforts.

The idea of priesthood and a future of service drifted through his mind. The thought of priesthood was dismissed about as quickly as it popped into his head. Dismissed, but not forgotten. Time passed and he broached the idea with Father Thomas.



Rev. Mr. Dave Brzoska
June 2000

"I had no clue about what would be involved," says Brzoska. Father Thomas listened, encouraged his vocation and connected him with then-Director of Vocations, Father Frank O'Rourke. "And the process went from there, and here I am, six years later," he says.

In those intermediary years, he felt at times as though he'd been plucked from his friends and family, and went through a natural progression of 'what am I doing here.' But seminary is discernment, and a time of learning more about yourself. It's a time of, "trying to come to grips with yourself and recognizing gifts, talents and weaknesses. And learning to improve them," says Rev. Mr. Brzoska. Further, he says, "it is a time of becoming aware how God works in yourself and others."

This past year has been one of practical experience, with his assignment to assist a nearby parish on weekends. As a transitional deacon, Rev. Mr. Broska can celebrate sacraments such as matrimony and baptisms. In St. Bernard parish, he also preaches at a couple of the weekend Masses. It's invaluable, he says, "Learning to preach and how to effectively express Scripture and the church's teachings for the people to make it practical in their lives."

Today, Rev. Mr. Brzoska is much more comfortable with himself and the growth of his own spirituality. "More specifically, in relationships with others ... and taking an active role in bringing expression to God's presence in those relationships."

It wasn't all that long ago when he set out on a journey for those very elements. ▼

A lifelong dream to serve: Christopher Roux

From the age of five, Christopher Roux sensed he wanted to be a priest.

"That was sort of always there, through grammar school, high school, dating and everything else," said Roux, now 36 and anticipating ordination by 2002. "I just somehow always knew."

To be an instrument in the eucharistic mystery is what Roux looks most forward to in priesthood. "The greatest miracle on earth is when that bread and wine is transformed into the body and blood of Christ," he said. "To be used by God in that way is very awe-inspiring."

Like many of his brother seminarians, Roux entered the professional world after college, working as a youth ministry director, for a pediatric health project, and as an assistant director of human resources for a catering company. The calling to priesthood stayed strong, however, and Roux spent a year in college seminary.

The youth ministry and health care experiences, he said, taught him much about evangelizing and helping people in need, while the human resource work fostered some of the management skills he'll need in parish life.

"I think I can handle hiring a parish staff a lot easier than some of the human resources work," he said with a laugh. "They don't have to tend bar."

A couple of chance meetings with Bishop William G. Curlin — in addition to having family in the Carolinas — influenced Roux to decide to pursue studies for the priesthood of the Diocese of Charlotte.

He said support from his family, brother seminarians and the people he will someday serve as a priest has been invaluable while in formation.

"I don't think that can be underestimated," he said. "It's just nice to know that people are thinking of me and praying for me." ▼

Humble servant: Leo Fowler

There is a pleasantness on Leo Fowler's face when he speaks of the things he is passionate about.

He has vivid recollections of growing up in Louisiana and of family life in South Carolina. He wears a contented look when he discusses the spirituality of the saints. And when the subject of his upcoming life as a priest comes up, Leo Fowler's happiness is unmistakable.

"I've always felt the desire to be a priest, even as a kid," said Fowler, 52. He recalls knocking on his pastor's door in grade school, eager to be an altar server. He loved the Mass from his earliest memories.

Even St. Nicholas himself got in on a plan that had yet to fully unfold itself.

"By fifth or sixth grade, Santa Claus brought me a Mass kit, so I had my little altar and white vestments and alb, and I used to practice Mass," he said with a chuckle. "That was sort of the beginning of my vocation, and it's something that's stayed with me all these years."

Fowler's discernment process took him to Belmont Abbey, where he spent nine years preparing for the Benedictine life. But, as is common in the faith journey, a new path unveiled itself. Fowler began studies for the diocesan priesthood last fall.

"The experience of God and wanting to be in his service requires a great deal of taking second looks," he said of his vocation. "You can't take your prayer life for granted."

Fowler said his ambitions, shaped in profound ways by his faith, are simple. Again, that pleasantness returns to his face. "All I want," he said with a humble smile, "is to be is a good priest." ▼

Surviving through Faith: Tien Duong

Tien Hung Duong is alive by the grace of God. Eight years ago, Tien and his younger brother attempted a daring escape from oppression in Vietnam. They failed. The two Duong brothers were returned and jailed. A determined Tien escaped a second time with his older brother, making their way to a refugee camp in Indonesia.

In Vietnam, Tien went to minor seminary, that is until the government closed the seminaries. "The more they forbid people to become priests," says Duong, the more determined he became to someday be ordained.

It would be two and a half years before Tien would leave the encampment. Malnutrition took its toll, and Tien was temporarily paralyzed, unable to walk. All the while, thoughts of priesthood remained. Tien prayed and prayed. He could not walk, and asked, "God, why? Why me? You brought me safely to the free country, I want to be a priest, but how can I serve if I am paralyzed?"

His epiphany came when he realized, it wasn't God wanting him to be like this. "It's just a challenge," recalls Tien. "I just prayed and prayed." He exercised and got himself back on his feet.

Tien had hoped to reach America, and be able to sponsor his parents and nine siblings. Instead, his family would reach the United States first. Through resettlement by the United States Catholic Conference, the Duong family put down roots in Charlotte.

The family sponsored Tien and his brother Duc, allowing them entry into the United States. The brothers entered seminary together, spending their first couple years in Lousiana before transfering, Tien to St. Vincent, Duc to St. Mary Seminary in Washington, D.C. A younger brother is studying to become a Vincentian priest in New York. ▼

Resolved in his calling: Rev. Mr. Luis Osorio

Rev. Mr. Luis Osorio is an early riser, but his calling to the priesthood didn't exactly come at the sunrise of his vocational discernment.

Now 42, Rev. Mr. Osorio experienced a variety of professional choices before answering that call to ordained ministry in the church. A native of Colombia, South America, he will be ordained in June as one of seven new priests to serve the Diocese of Charlotte.

"My parents made the effort to pay for my studies, and after I graduated, I had nice jobs," says Rev. Mr. Osorio, who worked in a government office and a sugar refinery in Colombia.

"But I felt that I was missing something here," he adds, pointing to his heart. "I was looking for something else."

It was during a trip to visit his sister in Statesville back in 1988 that Osorio's path to the priesthood slowly began to unveil itself. Father Joe Waters, long known in the Charlotte Diocese for his work with Hispanics, was pastor at St. Philip the Apostle Church in Statesville at the time. Osorio felt an instant connection.

"It was marvelous, because we could relate in Spanish," he says. "Since I met him, his kindness, his friendship, the way that he relates with the people have been so special. He is a very holy priest."

Osorio left Colombia in 1990, relocating to Statesville and searching for a new career. Father Waters asked him to help with the immigrant population. Soon enough, Father Waters brought up the priesthood.

Rev. Mr. Luis Osorio
June 2000

"Oh ... ," says Osorio, smiling at the memory. "I said, 'Father, why are you asking me that?' I never in my life thought of that. Never."

But in Father Waters, Osorio found a mentor and an example of faith. He entered a four-year period of prayer, during which he felt the support of many. Finally, the call he felt was strong enough to lead him to seminary life.

He said it was a life lesson on letting God do the directing.

He recalls a conversation with Father Frank O'Rourke, diocesan vocations director at the time Osorio entered the seminary. "I asked him, 'Father, why did this happen to me so late?'"

They laughed, and Father O'Rourke offered advice that stays with Osorio today: "'It's not your time. It's God's time. God is a mystery, and he works in mysterious ways.'"

With ordination just weeks away, Rev. Mr. Osorio is more resolved than ever in his calling. He begins his mornings by 5 with a holy hour, attends classes, enjoys a hike or a meal with friends, catches the evening news, spends weekends in a parish pastoral assignment, and studies — a lot.

He says the opportunity to serve a diocese with such ethnic variety is appealing. "In our diocese, there is a big necessity for bilingual priests," he says. "Our population is multicultural, and we need to understand the language, the culture and the behavior of the people. The church is universal, and we have to include everybody in that family."

His life at seminary has been one of self-discovery, too. "I have looked at myself in the mirror and asked, "Who is Luis?'" he says. "'What were the mistakes? What kinds of failures and doubts do I have?' I came to understand that, and I forgave myself. Because I came to this place, I could do that."

"It's something that moves your inner being," he added. "If you know yourself, you can love yourself. And in that way, you can share that kind of love and understanding with others." ▼

Conversion of faith: Rico De Silva

Perhaps nobody is more surprised by the priestly vocation of Rico De Silva than Rico himself. At 34 and now in his second year of studies, Rico describes his former self as a party-boy with a eye for the women, a taste for drinking and somewhat reckless living.

"I was a fallen-away Catholic, even though I had gone to Catholic school all my life," says De Silva. "I stopped practicing my faith right after graduating from high school."

Certainly a lifetime away from the Rico today, who rises before dawn for a personal holy hour to start his day.

Panamanian-born De Silva came to the States in 1985, landing at Radford University in Virginia. Though he studied journalism, he found he had a nack for sales. He made his way to Charlotte, falling into a relationship that appeared to have him headed for the altar.

His altar call took an abrupt turn. He'd returned to the church on a casual basis, but something drew him closer. He found himself turning more and more to prayer. He questioned his relationship and was surprised to find himself pondering questions of the priesthood. "God had me in the palm of his hand," says De Silva.

Now in year two of formation, De Silva remains faithful to prayer and Eucharistic adoration as he continues his journey towards anticipated ordination in 2004.

De Silva will bring much-needed bilingual skills to the diocese. His native Spanish will serve a diocese listed by the United States Catholic Conference as home for the largest Hispanic influx in the country. ▼

A new path: Chapin Engler

In a 1995 commencement address at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, singer-songwriter James Taylor had this to say about his craft: "I thank God for music, and I thank music for God."

Those words are ones Chapin Engler can relate to, for it is through music that his journey toward the priesthood was initially orchestrated.

"I had a conversion experience, and the beginnings of it were while I was singing," said Engler, who was a cantor at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte for eight years.

"It's quite an odyssey how God just basically tapped me on the shoulder. I finally turned, and it was like he said, 'Hey, you! I've been trying to get your attention for a long time.'"

Engler had been struggling with his appreciation of the liturgy for a number of years, and it wasn't until he had the chance to serve as cantor that he returned to weekly Mass.

His struggle continued, and then one Sunday, as he was singing, the lyrics and the music moved him to tears.

"I was right in the middle of this song, I just started breaking down," he recalls. "I said, 'Lord, I don't know what's up with this, but I need to figure it out.'"

That experience began an intense discernment process that would immerse him in a love of the church. That process would eventually take him away from a successful eight-year career as a stockbroker to St. Vincent Seminary, where Engler, now 37, prepares for the priesthood.

Though he'd never have guessed it then, the faith struggles of his earlier years were lined with a heavenly plan.

"There's an incredible amount of peace that happens when you finally say, 'Okay, Lord, I've made a mess of things. If you've got a better plan, I'll do what you want me to do,'" he said. "When you get to that point, you never look back.

"That's a very unique and special place to be, and I think that is the peace of Christ. I want to communicate that message of God's love to as many people as possible." ▼

"It's quite an odyssey how God just basically tapped me on the shoulder. I finally turned, and it was like he said, 'Hey, you! I've been trying to get your attention for a long time.'"

Unwavering Faith: Thomas Darcy

Thomas Darcy wrestled with his calling for twenty years. That time frame just about covers his entire lifetime. At 31, Darcy is fulfilling his call to the priesthood as he studies at St. Vincent Seminary. "I felt the call for over 20 years," said Darcy. "God is persistent."

In the interim years, Darcy received a degree in Archaeology from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. He spent time in a wide variety of professions, from broadcast TV to mental health.

His is a faith that follows the magisterium to the letter. If it is written, then so let it be done. It is through this faith he sees little need for concern for the future. "The church was founded by Jesus Christ and guided by the Holy Spirit," said Darcy.

Darcy describes himself as a gentle and loving man with many life experiences.

"I believe [these experiences] will enable me to be empathetic towards most and sympathetic towards all. I desire to be a good and faithful servant." ▼

Seminary administrators see change, growth in future priests

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Associate Editor

LATROBE, Pa. — Witnessing a seminarian grow in faith, confidence and fidelity to the church is a true joy of seminary administration, said key personnel involved in priestly formation at St. Vincent Seminary.

Benedictine Father Thomas Acklin, who for 11 years has served as rector of the seminary, said to walk with a seminarian on his faith journey is a grace-filled opportunity.

"The most important area is the spiritual," he said of seminarians' formation, a period of discernment, deepening of faith and intensive studies. "To see them grow in their prayer life and in their faith life, to see them go through the process of really coming to know the Lord better, has just been a beautiful thing."

Father Acklin serves as chief pastor and administrator of the 154-year-old St. Vincent Seminary, where nine of the Diocese of Charlotte's 22 seminarians are in formation.

> "It's Christ who forms the person He has called for ministry, but to be involved in seminary work is really an experience of grace and of the miraculous every single day."
> — Benedictine Father Thomas Acklin

The rector's responsibilities are many, but the one Father Acklin holds most dear is the ministry of preparing others for the priesthood. Through that work, he said, his own resolve as a priest is renewed.

While seminary rectors work from what is called the external forum — meaning they do not hear seminarians' confessions or serve as their spiritual directors — they do share a dynamic relationship with those in formation. They are models, teachers and evaluators. They reach out as brothers in faith.

"It's all grace," said Father Acklin of seminary life. "It's Christ who forms the person He has called for ministry, but to be involved in seminary work is really an experience of grace and of the miraculous every single day."

Like Father Acklin, Mercy Sister Cecilia Murphy noted the spiritual benefits in her administrative role.

"I often tell them that if I could give them one gift, I would want to give the gift of listening," said Sister Cecilia, academic dean for the seminary. "I think that would include listening to God, listening to the needs of others.

"That dimension of other-centeredness is so important for a minister of the church."

Sister Cecilia, who is responsible for the seminary's academic programs, curriculum and hiring of faculty, meets with the seminarians regularly for theological reflection sessions and other encounters, both academic and informal. She agreed that such gifts as service to others are natural results of the formation process, in which personal growth is so important.

"It's really a privilege," she said, "to be in this kind work, to see them learn to look at an experience they had in terms of what happened 'then' — but also, what the religious, social and cultural dimensions of that experience are."

Benedictine Father Kurt Belsole, assistant rector of the seminary, agreed that a seminarian's growing self-awareness is essential in the formation process. That very personal process, he added, builds a future priest's foundation of spiritual life.

"We try to have them develop in fidelity, consistency and responsibility," said Father Belsole, who has been at St. Vincent for 35 years as a student, a monk, a teacher and an administrator. He was named assistant rector last January.

"Once they get out of the seminary, they have to have a strong enough relationship with Christ and a deep enough love for ... the church, that they're able to get through the tough times," he said.

For those in formation, the rigors of the process are indeed daunting at times.

"They are not without problems, and they won't be priests without problems," Father Belsole conceded. "God never promised that to the church, and we've never had a period in church history when that was the case.

"But here we see that God is preparing outstanding priests for his church, and I have every confidence they are going to make great contributions."

Father Acklin and Sister Cecilia echoed similar sentiments, both noting that their greatest hope for seminarians is that they will be faithful men of God.

"What do I want for the men?" Father Acklin reiterated. "I want them to become men who are on fire for the Lord." ▼

Trading science for the church: Bill Clark

Bill Clark's vocation is a story of life changes, a process that began in a career of science, continued with a conversion experience and proceeds today in formation for the priesthood of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Clark, 38, is a native of Lancaster, Pa. He earned undergraduate and graduate degrees in biochemistry from the University of Maryland, and he enjoyed a 10-year career at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., working as a molecular biologist. Still, he has said, something was missing in his life.

He began attending Mass at St. Matthew Cathedral in Washington D.C.. Something moved him in a profound spiritual way, and entered the Catholic Church at the Easter Vigil in 1992.

It would be another four years or so before Clark truly felt a calling to priestly life. Clark, who has family ties to Ashe County and the Triad in North Carolina, visited the Charlotte Diocese at the invitation of Bishop William G. Curlin.

For Clark, who had not been in the Tar Heel State since he was a youngster, the visit was fruitful — and one that would help him in his decision to enter seminary.

"Once I came down and looked around in North Carolina," he said, "I fell in love with the place and the people." ▼

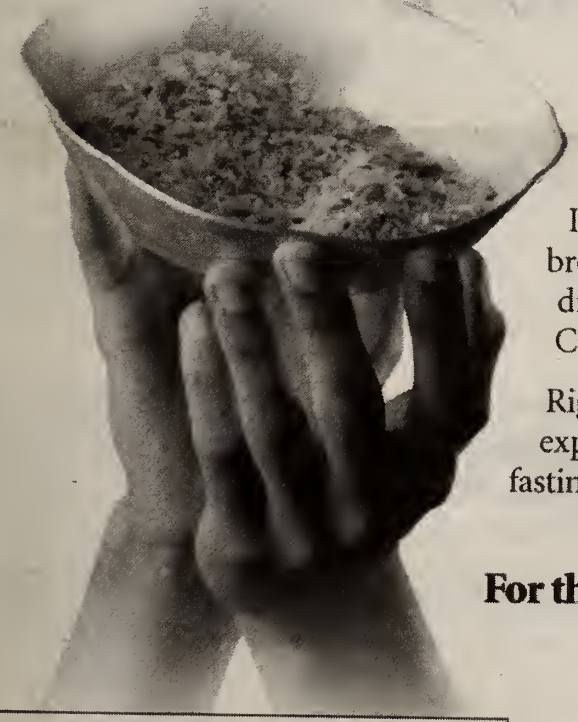
Happy Easter!

Celebrating 25 Years

You can help make a world of difference.



More than half of the world's population is surviving on less than one bowl of rice each day.

That's why, this Lent, more than 13,000 parishes and schools across the United States are participating in Operation Rice Bowl, helping the poorest of the poor help themselves.

In addition to expressing solidarity with our brothers and sisters overseas, you can make a real difference, raising money to support the work of Catholic Relief Services in the developing world.

Right now you can support this work for justice and experience the true meaning of Lent: praying, fasting, learning and giving.

For those who hunger and thirst. For justice.

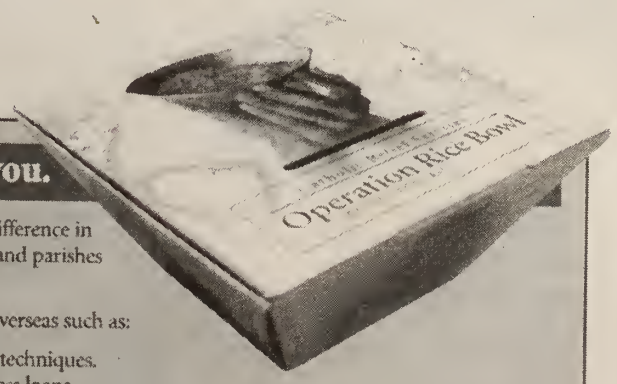
Operation Rice Bowl
LENTEN PROGRAM



Twenty-five years and still counting on you.

Since its inception 25 years ago, Operation Rice Bowl has been making a difference in people's lives around the world, thanks to the support of Catholic schools and parishes like yours.

Operation Rice Bowl has helped fund hundreds of development projects overseas such as:

- Providing clean drinking water.
- Introducing health education.
- Improving agricultural techniques.
- Facilitating small business loans.

And of the $105 million raised through the years, 25% has helped fund programs to improve local communities, too. For example, right here in the Diocese of Charlotte, contributions are disbursed as mini-grants to community groups working toward ending poverty and hunger. But there is still more to be done.

So as Operation Rice Bowl marks its 25th anniversary – with a new look for the new millennium – celebrate what your contribution has done and how your participation can make all the difference in the world.

Christopher Lathem, pastor of a Summerville church, as well as such notables as Darius Rucker and other members of the rock group Hootie and the Blowfish; author Pat Conroy; and former Gov. David Beasley, who initially proposed relocation of the battle flag during his term in office.

When he arrived at the Statehouse, Riley was greeted by Gov. Jim Hodges and Columbia Mayor Bob Coble. Riley presented Hodges with the official South Carolina state flag, emblazoned with the palmetto tree and the crescent moon.

The Confederate battle flag has flown atop the Statehouse since 1962, when it was hoisted during the Civil War centennial celebration. South Carolina is the only state in the nation that continues to fly a Confederate flag over its Capitol.

The current controversy erupted last year after the NAACP called for economic sanctions against the state until the flag is removed.

"It's Lent; it's a new century, a new millennium, a new era," said Bishop Baker in his statement. "Let's lay down our hatchets and make a new initiative, all of us working together, all people of the great state of South Carolina!"

The Rev. Joe Darby, senior pastor of Morris Brown A.M.E. Church in Charleston, delivered the prayer at the end of the April 6 ceremonies.

"Since somebody will say that this was an insignificant event populated by outsiders, if you're from South Carolina, say amen," Rev. Darby said. "The crowd shouted back, "Amen."

Although about 300 pro-flag supporters were holding a concurrent rally on the north side of the Statehouse, there were no arrests or serious incidents. ▼

Word to Life

April 23, Easter Sunday, Cycle B Readings:

1) Acts 10:34a, 37-43
   Psalm 118:1-2, 16ab-17, 22-23
2) Colossians 3:1-4
3) Gospel: John 20:1-9

By JEAN DENTON
Catholic News Service

I will never forget that moment of clarity when I held the tiny, malnourished Haitian baby girl in my arms. She was so weak she could barely cry. Just as I began to wonder why she had to be so hungry, why she would probably only live a couple of years more and in such poverty, I felt a profound love and oneness with this child.

As her little arms clung to me, I recognized that for that moment she was there for me — for me to know the embrace of Jesus.

Since then I have experienced other instances in which someone else's brave suffering and trust in the Lord have brought me into his presence and have drawn me close to him in love. I can think of more than one occasion in my life when I realized and felt, with every fiber of my being, the shame of a specific sin I committed, only to be blessed with the pure exhilaration of knowing God's forgiveness and desire for me to be reconciled with him.

Such were the ways that, after many years of a superficial understanding of the existence of God and a studied indifference to him, he slowly and gently poured the gift of faith into my life. Somewhere in there I also became a Catholic.

I know this is how God works in revealing himself to his people. But sometimes I do wonder what it's all about.

The first of the readings for Easter Sunday offers a very huge clue. Peter says that when God raised Jesus from death to life, he granted that this action would be witnessed by those who already knew him, who would eat and drink with the risen Lord.

That's us, we who have experienced the life-giving embrace and mercy of Jesus, and who are so blessed to come to his table every week as he fills our lives with his own — and we are called to bear witness to that same love and forgiveness.

The second reading points out, "Your life is hidden now with Christ in God." Easter is the ultimate eucharistic message in which we who are given life in Christ bear his life to others. We are called to go forth at his resurrection, forgiving, ministering, reconciling and embracing all those he sends our way.

Questions:

When was the first time you remember that the risen Lord was clearly revealed to you? What is one concrete way you can bear Christ to someone this Easter season?

"They killed him, finally, ... only to have God raise him up on the third day and grant that he be seen ... by us who ate and drank with him after he rose from the dead"
— Acts 10:40-41

Book Review

How-to book explains Catholicism

You know a lot about the Catholic Church, or maybe you are just learning, but there are things that confuse you — like what to do when you pray a novena, or how to "offer up" something, exactly what the Angelus is, or any of the dozens of other devotions that set Catholics apart from other Christians. But help is here!

"The How-To Book of Catholic Devotions: Everything You Need to Know but No One Ever Taught You"
By Mike Aquilina and Regis Flaherty

"The How-To Book of Catholic Devotions" is the only book that not only provides the who, what, where, when, and why of the most time-honored traditions of the Church but also the how.

About the Author

Mike Aquilina is the editor of New Covenant magazine and has been widely published in the Catholic press. This is his sixth book for Our Sunday Visitor. Regis J. Flaherty was the executive director for the Archdiocese of Boston Catholic Cemeteries. He has written many articles for the Catholic press. This is his second book.

Key Distinguishing Features

- Offers step-by-step guidelines to all the devotional rites and rituals of the Catholic Faith
- Provides a history of each devotion and a reflection on its importance in the prayer life of Catholics
- Features succinct and salient quotes from saints and prominent members of the Church
- Furnishes cautions, drawn from Scripture and Tradition, for potential temptations and distractions
- Outlines the blessings and graces associated with the devotions

TV special showcases disastrous military campaign of Napoleon Bonaparte

By GERRI PARE
Catholic News Service

NEW YORK (CNS) — A pivotal year in Napoleon Bonaparte's extraordinary military career is examined in "Napoleon's Obsession: Quest for Egypt," airing Sunday, April 23, 10-11 p.m. EDT on cable's The Learning Channel.

Lively Egyptologist Bob Brier chronicles what was actually a disastrous military campaign, but which the cunning Napoleon reported as a glorious French expansion of power.

"Napoleon's Obsession: Quest for Egypt"
April 23, 10-11 p.m. EDT
The Learning Channel

Determined to conquer Egypt as the gateway to Indian trade routes, and to foil the British, Napoleon's fleet set sail in 1798. After easily capturing Alexandria, he ordered his wool-uniformed men to make the grueling three-week march through the desert to Cairo, leaving his vulnerable fleet of ships behind.

Although weakened by dysentery, the French did defeat the ferocious Mameluke army in Cairo in what Napoleon tagged "the Battle of the Pyramids" — despite its having been fought in a much less impressive-sounding melon patch miles away.

However, British Adm. Nelson soon attacked Napoleon's fleet, slipping behind the ships so that the French cannons were aimed in wrong direction. The decisively won naval Battle of the Nile left Napoleon stranded in Egypt.

The program goes on to describe Napoleon's foray to defeat the Turks in Syria in 1799, where French troops rape and massacre civilians and General Bonaparte orders the slaughter of 3,000 Turkish prisoners of war — by bayonets, to save on the use of bullets. But Napoleon is defeated when the British join Turkish forces and he returns to Cairo, then flees Egypt, claiming victory abroad, and within months he is the virtual ruler of France.

As produced and directed by Peter Spry-Leverton, this lesser-known chapter in Napoleon's life comes alive as a character study of a charismatic leader who could always inspire his men under miserable conditions. Yet his dark side included ruthless deceptions, mass killings and adultery with the wife of one of his lieutenants.

During on-the-scene shooting in Egypt and Israel, Brier conveys a deep admiration of the general's military boldness as he never stopped looking for new worlds to conquer. The legacy of his Egyptian adventure was the scientists and artists he left behind; their discoveries in the Valley of the Kings and of the Rosetta Stone led to the translation of hieroglyphics and immense European interest in ancient Egypt.

The hour proves a quite interesting look at the future self-crowned emperor of France, who certainly knew how to turn the shame of defeat into a glorified portrait of triumph in the eyes of a public eager to embrace victory. ▼

"Where the Money Is"
Paul Newman stars as bank robber Henry Manning in the movie "Where the Money Is." The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

New at the Box Office

NEW YORK (CNS) — Following are recent capsule reviews issued by the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting.

"American Psycho"

Repelling tale of a late 1980s Wall-Street yuppie (Christian Bale) who despises his associates and is able to murder women, colleagues and cops with gleeful impunity. As directed by Mary Harron, attempts to satirize the greedy excesses of the me generation are overwhelmed by the remorseless main character's killing sprees and the film's core nihilism. Recurring violence with gore, including nudity and graphic sexual encounters, recreational drug abuse, some profanity and frequent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is O — morally offensive. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"East Is East"

Droll British comedy-drama set in the early 1970s about a controlling Pakistani father who blindly tries to drag his seven British-born children back to traditional Muslim ways despite their resistance to saris, arranged marriages and religious instruction. Damien O'Donnell's deft directorial debut is an absorbing look at cross-cultural familial relationships with a well-written, credible plot and lively characters. Brief marital sexual encounter, some domestic violence, homosexual innuendo, flash of nudity and recurrent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Set Me Free"

Somewhat poignant coming-of-age story set in 1963 Montreal where a 13-year-old girl (Karine Vanasse) runs away from her selfish would-be poet dad (Miki Manojiovic) after her overworked mother (Pascale Bussieres) attempts suicide, but a caring teacher (Nancy Huston) guides the troubled teen away from life on the streets. Writer-director Lea Pool sluggishly explores a family torn by conflicts between the Jewish father and Catholic mother but is less insightful following the girl's friendship with another girl who is physically drawn to her as well as to her older brother. Subtitles. Brief violence, sexual situations and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

The Pope Speaks

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Pope, at audience, says whole Trinity involved in salvation

By CINDY WOODEN
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The essential role of the Trinity in bringing salvation to all men and women was revealed when Jesus was baptized in the Jordan River, Pope John Paul II said.

The voice of God the Father proclaiming his love for Jesus and the descent of the Holy Spirit set the seal of authenticity on the mission of Jesus, the pope said April 12 at his weekly general audience.

The mid-April audience marked the first time Italian police began using the 15 metal detectors they installed under the colonnade encircling St. Peter's Square.

With an estimated 30,000 people attending the audience, the screening appeared to go smoothly as visitors passed through the metal detectors and put their bags through X-ray machines.

Continuing a series of audience talks about the Trinity, Pope John Paul said the reality and the glory of the Trinity were revealed when Jesus was baptized.

The action of the Father and the Spirit as Jesus comes out of the Jordan were a clear sign that with Jesus "the history of salvation has entered its central and definitive phase," he said.

"He is the one who brings to completion the divine plan of salvation, humbly putting himself in solidarity with sinners," the pope said.

"Through baptism, we, too, enter into this mystery of salvation," Pope John Paul said. "Being reborn in the baptismal waters, we begin our journey of Christian life and witness."

Pope celebrates Palm Sunday Mass, urges youths to follow Christ

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II opened Holy Week with a colorful Mass on Palm Sunday, leading a procession through St. Peter's Square in front of 100,000 Holy Year pilgrims. Preceded by lay people, bishops and cardinals dressed in bright red vestments, the pope rode on a white jeep through the packed square April 16 as faithful from all over the world waved palm fronds and olive branches, in remembrance of Jesus' triumphal entrance into Jerusalem a week before his death. Among those at the head of the procession were groups of young people — including five from the United States — who squinted in the sunshine as the 79-year-old pontiff prayed at the start of the liturgy.

Economy of Faith

Shop till you turn green

With the arrival of spring, much of nature again turns green. God calls forth renewed growth, and we recognize our interdependence in the web of life.

Yet, a gruesome thought stalks us. We, the stewards of creation and the managers of the earth, have the power to pollute a river, destroy a mountain and ruin the countryside. No law of physics says we must, no formula from chemistry makes this inevitable.

The marketplace, that marvelous device for allocating resources in the economy, harbors an inherent flaw that pushes it towards destructive behavior. The market simply undercounts the social and resource costs of producing goods and services. By not cleaning up fully after production, a company lowers its production costs by shifting part of that cleanup cost to the entire society as pollution. The quest for profit maximization encourages this. By pursuing the cheapest way of extracting resources, corporations can devastate mountains and countrysides, leaving communities without good water or a healthy economic base. Globalization pits one part of the world against another in a race for the least cost.

For people of faith, the market represents a device, not a dogma. As a device, the market decides trillions of transactions daily without any problem. Yet, left to its own, it lacks a moral compass. There are limitations to the market's abilities. A cheap price for a good, the result of competition for the consumer, does not differentiate between a greater efficiency of production from the exploitation of people and creation.

As a result, many people of faith are intentionally supporting businesses with an environmental and social vision, enterprises called "green businesses." These companies practice a responsibility toward the environment and the world community. The National Green Pages (www.greenpages.org), for example, lists over 10,000 products and services for ordinary consumers. The Cloth Bag Company (www.clothbag.com) is dedicated to ending society's dependence on throw-away bags. The Fair Trade Federation (www.fairtradefederation.com) promotes economic self-sufficiency in developing countries by eliminating the middleman and returning the best price to the farmer growing the coffee or the craftsperson making the jewelry.

But, the most widely celebrated green business concerns the stock market. Socially responsible investing screens companies in regards to the environment, labor, human rights, diversity and many other topics. More than 150 socially screened mutual funds and hundreds of socially responsible financial advisors nationwide are supporting corporations with a social vision and keeping social and environmental issues on company agendas. The Social Investment Forum (www.socialinvest.org) offers practical advice and references for socially committed investors.

Market theory says that competition delivers the cheapest price for products, and people invest where they receive the highest returns. Yet, people of faith add additional filters. Informed by their responsibility toward creation and global workers, they assess the impact of their economic decisions. Since every purchase registers a vote for a particular product or service, people of faith are questioning profit at-any-cost and changing mindless consumption into intentional shopping.

When the rule of teen secrecy must be broken

Every teen-ager knows certain rules — they're just assumed. One of the most basic is that you don't tell your friend's secrets.

If a friend is doing something foolish or dangerous, you may hope that he gets caught early so that the worst doesn't happen. But the rule is clear; you don't tell. It simply isn't done.

Sometimes that rule is wrong.

Recently, the New York Times published a study of multiple murders, looking at 100 "rampage killings" over the past 50 years.

What did the staff of the Times learn about these crimes? One significant fact stands out clearly: While adult killers act alone and in secrecy, many of the teens involved in rampage killings told people what they were planning. Certain friends and acquaintances knew about the murderous thoughts and schemes.

Mostly, people didn't believe them. They couldn't imagine that someone they knew — someone who went to their school — could ever do something so horrible.

The same is true of violence directed inward — toward the self. While most adults who kill themselves act in secrecy, teen-agers usually give signals. They tell their friends how badly they feel and often talk about thoughts of suicide long before they act.

Often people don't believe them. "People who talk about it don't do it," they tell themselves. "She's down, but it really isn't that serious. She'll snap out of it."

I work with a mental-health crisis service. Research shows that even one contact with a mental-health professional greatly reduces the chance that a teen-ager's depressed thought — "I feel like I'd be better off dead" — turns into a tragic reality.

Many times we have reached out to a teen because a friend told somebody — a parent or someone at school. In case after case, we have gotten the depressed teen the help that was needed.

With so much recent publicity about mass killings, we have started getting calls about teens threatening rampage killings. Here again we've been able to get those kids into treatment.

Mass murder is very, very rare. Who knows if we've really prevented anybody from marching into a high school with a loaded assault weapon? Far better, we believe, to talk to 100 kids who wouldn't really have done it than to miss the one kid who would.

Preventing teen violence — toward others and toward the self — depends on you. Teachers, counselors and psychologists simply don't have access to the critical information.

Confused, depressed and angry teens talk to their friends — not to grown-ups — and all those teachers, counselors and psychologists stand helplessly on the sidelines until somebody breaks the code of secrecy.

Every teen-ager knows that you don't tell on your friends. However, when a friend or acquaintance is talking about violence, that rule must be broken.

It seems wrong. It makes you feel like a snitch. You'll worry that your friend will be mad and may not ever talk to you again. "Probably," you tell yourself, "nothing is going to happen, and I'll be making trouble for nothing."

Still, imagine the possible consequences if you hear talk of suicide or threats of murder and do nothing.

Unconditional love is eternal

The older I get the more I understand that among all the ways we love, unconditional love is the noblest gift a human being can enjoy. Love that gives without measure is truly a gift of God.

Surely you have your own personal example of someone who embodies such selfless love. A parent, a friend, a spouse whose love demands nothing in return. Recently I met the aunt of a friend of mine, and, for me, she has become the most striking example of what I am talking about. Her name — Rose Marie Bergna, or as she prefers, Aunt Rowe.

As a young woman, Aunt Rowe went through a difficult marriage and then separation from her husband. Determined to remain loyal to her wedding vow, 'til death do you part, this devout Catholic steadfastly refused to even consider marrying again.

Then John Baker moved into town. He and Aunt Rowe met one snowy Christmas Eve. He promptly fell in love with her and proposed marriage. But try as he might to convince her otherwise, Aunt Rowe was determined as well. She recalls, "John became so discouraged that he quit his job as a business manager and moved as far away as he could from Mineola, Long Island — to Nogales, Arizona!"

Still, Aunt Rowe knew intuitively that they were meant to meet again. As he said his goodbyes, she softly pledged, "John, if ever you need me, I will be there for you."

Two years later, John built a home in a new development, but a freak fire changed everything. He was burning construction debris when a dry desert wind coiled around him, swallowing him up in a whirlpool of flames and searing heat. 85 percent of his body was irreparably charred. Amazingly, he survived through swift emergency action and a helicopter ride to the hospital burn clinic in Tucson.

Aunt Rowe was awakened in the middle of the night by a call from John's niece. That morning she was on a plane hopscotching across the country. That evening she stood at his bedside. "His body was all wrapped up like a mummy when I got there, but his mind was alert. He said, 'What are you doing here? You have a job!'" Her response: "John, I am here for you." Looking up at her, John said, "Rowe, I see two angels on either side of you." And then came his radiant smile. "It was a smile that changed my life forever," she said.

He flat lined twice but was resuscitated. His legs were so gangrenous both had to be amputated. The gnarled stumps that were his hands made it impossible to fend for himself. With the help of Aunt Rowe, John eventually settled into a nursing home, and for the next 23 years she dedicated herself to caring for him.

John Baker was a remarkable man. Through all the pain and loss, he created a new life for himself. The near-quadriplegic learned to dive and swim — when he was told he never could — and went on to win awards. His vitality and humor kept him going. Most of all, Rowe kept him going.

One friend reported: "Rowe was with him 16 hours a day, seven days a week. He couldn't scratch his nose; she did it. When he got angry, she absorbed it. When he was happy, she cheered him further. ...Rowe's life was John." This February, John died.

Aunt Rowe misses him terribly. But she told me, "We will be soul mates forever. Remember, we were meant to meet and we will meet again."

I believe they will because unconditional love is stronger than death, stronger even than life.

Easter 2000

Easter 2000: An old and ever-new story

Creation, death, and resurrection form the dynamic triangle of our existence. Let me explain this simple and profound truth with a story. A little boy made his way home from school one afternoon. As little boys do, he walked through alleys and vacant lots. Along the way he found a piece of wood. Not much more than a piece of a 2x4, but he took it home. Once home, he went into the garage. Using his father's tools, he hammered and sawed and fashioned a little toy boat.

Later that afternoon, he went to play with his little boat in the stream that ran near his house. For days, after he came home from school, he played with his boat in that creek. He greatly enjoyed those hours with his little toy. He loved his little boat, and even gave it a name. One afternoon, while pushing the boat about with a long stick, he accidentally let the boat slip away into a strong current. He ran along the creek trying to catch up with the little boat. Soon another creek spilled into the stream, and the current sped up carrying his boat faster than his little legs could keep up. Finally, he stopped running and watched his little craft sail out of sight. Tears came to his eyes as he realized that his boat was lost forever. For days, he mourned the loss of his wonderful toy.

Months passed, school ended, and his family went on summer vacation to the ocean. One day as the little boy played along the beach, he stopped to admire the things displayed at a beachcomber's shop. There were pieces of driftwood, fishing net floats, and old bottles. Then he saw it. He could hardly believe it. There on one of the shelves of ocean debris was his little boat. It was hanged up and its paint was scratched, but there was no doubt in his heart. "That's my boat," he told the shopkeeper. He begged him to hand it over. "Well," said the man, "it may have been yours once, but now it's mine, and if you want it, you'll have to pay for it."

As fast as he could, he raced to his father and explained the situation. The boy and his father returned to the shop. A price was agreed upon, and the little boy received back his little boat. As he and his dad walked toward home, the little fellow looked down at the boat held in his arms. With tears in his eyes, he said, "Little boat, I love you. You are now really mine. You are mine twice. I made you. I bought you."

The parallels are obvious: Creation, death, and resurrection. Don't despair if the currents of the world toss you around, you will eventually end up in the ocean of God's love.

I have created you, O Jacob,
I have formed you, O Israel.
I have called you by name,
I have redeemed you.
You are mine.
— Isaiah 43:1

Coping with the guilt of an abortion

Q. I hope you can help me. A close friend sent me one of your columns about excommunication because of an abortion. More than a year ago I too had an abortion, and I've never forgiven myself for it. Honestly, I don't think I can.

No one in my family knows, and my friends who do know have no idea what pain I feel every time I hear a baby cry. I haven't gone to confession and sometimes don't want to be forgiven because then I'll forget, and I won't let myself off that easily.

I wanted more than anything to have the baby, but I knew my mother would kick me out, and the baby's father would not be there physically or emotionally.

I'm now in a new relationship with someone I believe truly cares for me, but I find myself holding back. Maybe it's the anger I have toward myself. I know I want to be happy again, but I still want to remember that awful mistake I made.

A. I'm very sorry for you. A lot of painful healing will be needed in your heart as you move, as you say, toward happiness again. It will be helpful, I believe, to reflect prayerfully on a few truths as you move in that direction.

First, there is no way you will ever forget your experience, no matter what you do. It has had too great an impact on your feelings and memories. But that has little connection with forgiveness, either your forgiveness of yourself or God's forgiveness of you.

Genuine forgiveness, which can occur gradually, and which will be part of your returning happiness, happens at another level than remembering. Forgiveness means letting go, especially of anger and resentment, and of the desire for revenge. For you, this means the anger and resentment, and perhaps even the need for punishment you feel toward yourself.

You have done a serious wrong, we admit that. But it is past, part of history, and there's nothing you, or even God, can do to change that. The important present concern of God is where you go from here.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS Columnist

God knows you (as all of us) are a long way from perfect. You are not the first to make a big-time mistake, and you will not be the last. What is needed now is the humility to acknowledge that, and to calmly and peacefully go home to God's love, and believe in his faith in you.

I realize this is a big order, but with prayer and patience, and the sacraments of reconciliation and the Eucharist — and insofar as possible working through it with a friend you can trust — it can happen more peacefully and gracefully than you think. Don't be intimidated by how you feel at the moment. As the Bible says, God is bigger than our hearts; so don't be afraid to move on. Good luck!

Cardinal George goes door-to-door in Chicago

CHICAGO (CNS) — The mission stamped on their T-shirts was to "make disciples of all the nations." So Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago and St. Sabina's pastor and parishioners started block by neighborhood block. Dressed in "Army of the Lord" beige and green mock military fatigues, hundreds of parishioners joined the cardinal and their pastor, Father Michael Pfleger, in taking the Gospel to the snow-covered streets of a Chicago neighborhood April 8. "As a church, outreach has always been a part of what we do, but it's usually been through services like Catholic Charities, schools and hospitals. What we want to do is attach to that a clear invitation of evangelization," said Cardinal George, wrapped in a black winter cap and scarf.

Retired Bishop O'Keefe of Davenport dead at 82

DAVENPORT, Iowa (CNS) — Retired Bishop Gerald F. O'Keefe died of a heart attack early April 12 in Davenport. He was 82. His funeral Mass was scheduled for 11 a.m. April 17 at Sacred Heart Cathedral in Davenport. His successor, Bishop William E. Franklin of Davenport, will be the principal celebrant. Bishop O'Keefe, a native of Wayzata, Minn., where he attended public schools, studied for the priesthood at St. Paul Seminary and was ordained for the Archdiocese of St. Paul-Minneapolis on Jan. 29, 1944.

Church officials to assess need in drought areas of Ethiopia

By DECLAN WALSH
Catholic News Service

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (CNS) — A delegation of Catholic Church officials and aid workers was to travel to the drought-stricken Gode region of eastern Ethiopia to assess needs for a planned emergency aid program.

"This famine is what we have been trying to avert for years, but now our aim is to reach the needy. I think that it can be contained if all parties come together," said Abba Tsegaye Keneni, general secretary of the Ethiopian and Eritrean Episcopal Conference.

Abba Tsegaye was to travel with representatives of the U.S., Irish, English and Welsh bishops' international aid agencies and Caritas Internationalis, the church's international aid umbrella organization.

The delegation was to fly from the capital, Addis Ababa, to the eastern town of Dire Dawa, where they were to pick up local church representatives before continuing on to Gode, in the eastern Somali region.

The United Nations estimates that 8 million Ethiopians risk starvation due to the current crisis, caused by lack of seasonal rains for the fourth successive year. An estimated 12 million people are at risk in the Horn of Africa region.

Gode is the worst affected region in the current crisis. Tens of thousands of people have flooded into the main towns of Gode, Danan and Imi after losing their livestock to the drought. More than 90 percent of all cattle have died.

The displaced have settled in camps where there is little water, food or medicine. The most severe conditions are to be found at Danan, where more than 300 children died in March and the first two weeks of April.

The Catholic relief effort in the area will be organized by the Apostolic Vicariate of Harar, Abba Tsegaye said.

The vicariate will distribute food and medicine either directly or through the aid agencies already working on the ground. It is already supporting the emergency distribution of food in the neighboring Borena region, which is considered to be the next most serious after Gode.

Abba Tsegaye said airlifting emergency supplies to the crisis-stricken area would be considered during discussions with partner agencies.

The budget of the proposed intervention has not yet been approved pending the report from the assessment. Funding agencies such as Caritas are anxiously awaiting the delegation's report, he said.

U.N. World Food Program Executive Director Catherine Bertini visited Gode and warned at a news conference in Addis Ababa April 14 that the current requirement of 800,000 tons of food to avert a crisis could rise before the summer.

Just over half of the current requirement has been pledged. The United States donated 400,000 tons of wheat while the European Union donated 50,000 tons.

The Ethiopian government has been criticized for continuing its border war with neighboring Eritrea while millions of its own citizens risk starvation. While the government will not say how much it is spending on the war, it is estimated at $1 million per day.

Abba Tsegaye said he did not think that the war would have any impact on the delivery of aid to Gode and other regions.

"There is no relationship between the two. One is due to the shortage of rainfall, and the other is a conflict between people, and they are in completely different regions." ▼

Attendants witness blessing of oil and priestly pledge at chrism Mass

By ALESHA M. PRICE
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The chrism Mass, held at St. Patrick Cathedral on April 18, drew a large, collective congregation from all parts of the diocese, and approximately 100 of their priests concelebrated the sacred Mass with Bishop William G. Curlin.

In keeping with traditional Holy Week observances, the Mass' purpose is to bless three different oils used in sacramental and liturgical practices for all of the faithful. Moreover, the attending priests re-dedicate themselves to their mission in life as spiritual advisors and leaders within their parishes and the diocese.

During the renewal of commitment to priestly service, the bishop reminded the priests of their ordination vows and their pledge to serve their parishioners and lead them toward a deeper devotion to Jesus. He also asked the congregation to pray for their continued work as priests — their leaders in faith.

"My brother priests, this is a time when we must say, 'God, we would like to begin again,'" said Bishop Curlin. "This is a new century, a new millennium, and this Mass serves as a new beginning for us, when we must strive to deepen our love for Christ and our people."

"I ask God to give me the grace to be more faithful, generous and loving, and I ask God's forgiveness for all of my failings," he added.

In his homily, the bishop said, "this day we come to reclaim our love for Jesus Christ and to consecrate our lives to him. We ask that that God give us the grace to renew ourselves in faith and love."

During the Eucharistic prayer, the bishop first blessed the oil of the sick, used for the ill and dying. After Communion, the oil of catechumens for baptismal candidates was blessed next. Balsam, a naturally-derived aromatic essence, was mixed into the sacred chrism, or christ oil, and then consecrated.

Fourteen-year-old Ross Shingledecker, a student at Our Lady of Grace School in Greensboro, traveled to the Mass with Danita McDonald, his eighth-grade teacher and school religion coordinator, Ruth Flemming, Our Lady of Grace Church youth minister, and his eighth-grade confirmation class on a religious field trip to witness the ceremonial traditions.

"The whole experience of watching then bless the oil that we will be confirmed with adds to the whole experience of the sacrament," he said. "It was really exciting to see that many priests up on the altar; it was the pinnacle of holiness for me."

Another student Jackie Assal, 13, added, "we are all making our confirmation this year, and we thought it would be special to see the chrism being blessed."

During the Liturgy of the Eucharist, all of the priests and deacons gathered on the altar with the bishop and the vicars of the diocese.

"As a priest, this is one of the most important Masses of the year because this being Holy Week, is a joyful time and the holiest of the year," said Father Mark Lawlor, pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church in Jefferson. "It a time when all of the priests are together and when we can recommit our lives to serve the Lord and the body of Christ, the Church." ▼

"Laying New Foundations for Faith and Learning"

Update on the new Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School

Women celebrate at 23rd biennial convention

HICKORY — At the close of their 23rd biennial convention, North Carolina's Catholic Daughters of the Americas heard a message urging them to experience God's grace and to live their faith for the benefit of others.

"We are all called to a particular share in God's grace," said Father Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor, who celebrated Mass on the last day of the April 28-30 convention at the Catholic Conference Center. "It does no good for us to talk about it. We have to put it into practice."

In his homily, Father West reminded the Catholic Daughters that an important responsibility, like that of all Christians, is finding ways to serve God and others.

"Jesus in no way limits his call," said Father West. "The divine invitation requires every one of us to embrace their responsibilities of discipleship, to put the words of Jesus Christ into action each and every day of our lives.

"Our challenge, our commitment, our motivation must be the living out of the Gospel, no matter how great the odds, no matter how bitter the disappointment or how discouraging or frustrating."

Father West's message came at the close of a weekend that celebrated the Catholic Daughters' commitment to church, country and neighbor. There are a dozen Catholic Daughters courts, or chapters, in North Carolina:

Cardinal O'Connor dies at 80

NEW YORK (CNS) — John Cardinal O'Connor, New York's archbishop for 16 years, died May 3, a little more than eight months after undergoing surgery last Aug. 31 for a brain tumor. He was 80 years old.

His funeral was scheduled for Monday, May 8, at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City.

Pope John Paul II mourned the death of U.S. John Cardinal O'Connor, praising his "many years of dedicated and courageous witness to the Gospel."

"As a deeply spiritual man, a warm and zealous pastor, and effective teacher of the faith and a vigorous defender of human life, Cardinal O'Connor modeled his own life and ministry on the figure of the Good Shepherd who, to the end, gives his life for the flock," the pope said.

The pope expressed his appreciation for the late cardinal's efforts toward "better ecumenical and interreligious relations" and his work on behalf of the poor, calling him "a source of inspiration in serving God in our

Senate committee approves Pain Relief Promotion Act

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Catholic pro-life official said the Pain Relief Promotion Act approved April 27 by the Senate Judiciary Committee shows respect "for dying patients" and "compassion for their suffering." The bill, approved by a 10-7 vote, "can mark a new beginning in our government's commitment to the real needs of these patients" and means "a sad chapter in our nation's history may be nearing an end," said Richard Doerflinger, associate director for policy development in the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities. "The full Senate should take up and approve this bill at its earliest opportunity," he said in a statement. No date for a Senate vote has been set.

Msgr. McSweeney to step down as director of The Christophers

ERIE, Pa. (CNS) — For the past four years, he has hosted scores of television programs, written a weekly newspaper column and used other media to earnestly promote the idea that it is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness. Now, Msgr. Thomas McSweeney, director of The Christophers in New York City, is preparing to bring the light of his experience and talents back home to the Diocese of Erie. "I really am eager to plug in whatever I've learned, contacts I have made, and the gifts (the diocese) has allowed me to accrue," said the priest, who was named a monsignor earlier this year.

Catholic educators urged to prepare for crisis situations

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Catholic school administrators and school boards cannot be naive about the possibility of school violence, said a speaker at the annual National Catholic Educational Association convention in Baltimore. "Unfortunately, it's only a matter of time before it's one of us," said Sister Mary Angela Shaughnessy during a standing-room-only workshop April 26 for more than 200 Catholic school educators. Sister Shaughnessy, a Sister of Charity of Nazareth, Ky., and an education professor at Spalding University in Louisville, said the time to figure out what to do in a crisis situation is before something happens.

At a canonization Mass April 30 in St. Peter's Square, the pope said the humble life of the Polish Mercy sister, who died in 1938 at the age of 33 and whose diary account of visions and revelations inspired Divine Mercy devotion worldwide, "is tied to the history of the 20th century."

Religion coverage by major media grows over decades

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A new study has found that coverage of religion by major media outlets has grown over the past 30 years. The study showed a dip in the 1980s, but said it rebounded in the 1990s to levels surpassing that of the 1970s. The study also showed that the Catholic Church figured more prominently than any other religion in news coverage. It also found that while the number of stories about the Catholic Church stayed the same, the percentage of stories about it decreased because of an overall increase in all stories about religion. The study, issued in April by the Center for Media and Public Affairs and the Ethics and Public Policy Center, two Washington-based think tanks, examined news coverage in the ABC, NBC and CBS nightly newscasts; reports in The New York Times and The Washington Post; and articles in Time, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report magazines.

Bishop: Zimbabwe's land crisis is flag for South Africa

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — The crisis in Zimbabwe, where white-owned farms have been invaded by blacks demanding land, raised concerns that a similar situation could arise in neighboring South Africa, where 80 percent of land is still controlled or owned by whites. "There is great expectation of land restitution, and we need to be careful that slowness in settlement does not lead to a situation like Zimbabwe," said Bishop Kevin Dowling of Rustenburg, who heads the Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference justice and peace department. According to government statistics, less than 13 percent of land in South Africa is controlled by black people.

Salvadoran prelate asks pardon for U.S. churchwomen's killers

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Archbishop Fernando Saenz Lacalle of San Salvador supported the request for a pardon from two ex-soldiers in jail for the 1980 killing of three U.S. nuns and a lay worker. "Let's show mercy and pity. They (the jailed soldiers) have shown repentance, and that's the correct conduct," Archbishop Saenz told reporters after Easter Mass April 23 in the capital. In March, former national guardsmen Carlos Palacios and Francisco Contreras petitioned Congress for a reconsideration of their cases.

Major abortion, First Amendment cases in court's final round

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Two major cases in the final week of the Supreme Court's argument calendar raise significant questions about abortion law and about the competing issues of anti-discrimination law and an organization's right to define its own membership. On April 25, the court was to consider whether Nebraska's law prohibiting partial-birth abortion is constitutional. The next day, it was scheduled to hear arguments over a New Jersey Supreme Court ruling that said because of anti-discrimination laws the Boy Scouts may not reject participation by homosexuals.

Vatican releases collection of papal writings on social teaching

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — To whet Catholics' appetite for the church's social teaching, the Vatican released a book of quotes from papal documents over the last hundred years. The book gathers quotes from Pope Leo XIII to the current pope, said Archbishop Francois Xavier Nguyen Van Thuan, president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, at a press conference April 27. Titled "The Social Agenda: A Collection of Magisterial Texts," the 225-page book contains nearly 370 quotations, most a paragraph's length, from some 75 church documents.

six in the Diocese of Charlotte, and six in the Diocese of Raleigh. Each is involved in a variety of religious, charitable and educational efforts on the local, state and national levels.

Headquartered in New York, the national Catholic Daughters of the Americas organization has about 115,000 members in the United States, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Guam, Saipan, Mexico and the Dominican Republic.

The national organization was founded in 1903 by the Knights of Columbus in Utica, N.Y.

Since 1956, the state's Catholic Daughters have met every other year for a conference that is part business meeting, part spiritual retreat. Deceased members are memorialized, officers are elected and installed, committee members are appointed, reports are given, awards are bestowed.

It is a time to remember the past, celebrate the present and look forward to the future as an organization dedicated, as its motto states, to unity and charity.

"Each convention has the potential of becoming a great learning experience," said Dolly Peña, national director and national supervisor of Catholic Daughters of the Americas, in a letter to the state organization. "It is a time to renew acquaintances, visit with friends, reminisce over past achievements and concentrate on plans for future CDA accomplishments."

Maryann Grabasky, the state court's second vice regent, agreed that the convention is an opportunity to reflect on the work of the Catholic Daughters.

"I feel like I'm contributing to the church and to my country," added Grabasky, who is a member of Court Greensboro. She spoke of the diverse charitable and spiritual outreach the organization provides, from feeding the hungry to fund-raising for Alzheimer's and AIDS patients, from supporting vocations to promoting a strong spiritual life.

"We're living out the Gospel by doing these things," Grabasky said. "This is our role; this is what our organization does."

During the closing Mass, the new officers were installed into their two-year terms, promising their fidelity and service to God, the church, the organization and the nation.

The new state officers are: Doreen Warren of Court Children of Mary in Elizabeth City, state regent; Joyce Rachid of Court Msgr. Michael A. Irwin in New Bern, first vice regent; Maryann Grabasky of Court Greensboro, second vice regent; Sheila Storey of Court Durham, secretary; and Ruth Carlisle of Court Charlotte, treasurer.

Father Mauricio W. West shares a smile with present and past officers of the Catholic Daughters of the Americas following the closing Mass.

Just as the new officers affirmed their resolve, Father West urged all of the members to live out that commitment to faith, charity and evangelization.

"We who gather in this room this morning must commit ourselves to share in God's Word, relieving those who find themselves in need," he said during his homily. "We must strive to be authentic signs of the truth, the reality and the beauty of God's love.

"We know the path along which the Lord, Jesus, leads us is not always an easy one, but it is the one of loving service to humanity. ... Our commitment to him requires us to reach out in love, care and concern to all of our brothers and sisters whom we encounter on our journey." ▼

New Catholic Daughters Court continues tradition of charity, unity

ASHEVILLE — The largest organization of Catholic women in the United States recently added its newest court in North Carolina.

On March 4 of this year, during a Mass at St. Joan of Arc Church in Asheville, Court St. Joan of Arc #2471 was officially instituted and officers installed. It is the sixth court, or local chapter, to be established in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"It is a blessing to be a Catholic Daughter," said Marjorie Thomas, Court St. Joan of Arc's regent, or president. "It has added to my self-esteem."

Thomas, a member of St. Joan of Arc, had been a part of the first CDA Court in North Carolina, at the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, for "about 22 years." That original court, Court Asheville #412, was established in 1920, she said.

Court St. Joan of Arc, which currently has 29 members, held its first meeting on April 22. While the gathering was organizational in nature, the attending members began at once with what is most characteristic of the CDA: charity.

Members will begin making "fidget aprons" for the Alzheimer patients in the nursing home at the Veteran's Administration Medical Center in Asheville. The aprons contain sewn-in keys, zippers, fringe and such for the patients to "work their hands," said Thomas.

Thomas anticipates that the new court will be involved in many charitable projects, as well as doing things at the church "at the request of the priest."

According to Doreen Warren, state regent, the Catholic Daughters of the Americas is basically a charitable organization, concentrating on the seven spokes of a program called "Circle of Love": quality of life, youth, spiritual enhancement, legislation promoting a Catholic perspective, education, national charitable projects and leadership.

Court St. Joan of Arc enters a rich legacy of service, both here in North Carolina and in the nation.

Among numerous projects, the national CDA has recently built five houses for Habitat for Humanity and given $3,000 to the Diocese of Raleigh for flood victims, Warren said.

Historically, the national organization's works included supporting the efforts of both World Wars at home and abroad, helping the poor, working with youth, assisting the blind, securing funds for seminarians, doing literacy work and spreading the faith. All this and much more was done in addition to raising funds for numerous charities.

The Catholic Daughters have also been active locally and legislatively in attempting to protect the sanctity of the home and the right to life.

Any Catholic woman age 18 or above is eligible to become a Daughter, said Marjorie Thomas, who with Court St. Joan of Arc Vice Regent Ginny Eldreth attended the CDA State Convention April 28-30 at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory. Members do not need to be parishioners of the sponsoring parish.

In addition to the two courts in Asheville, the Charlotte Diocese has courts in Lenior, Salisbury, Greensboro and Charlotte. ▼

Thunderous spirit ignites Diocesan Youth Conference flame

By DEB HARTRUM
Correspondent

LAKE WYLIE, S.C. — Camp Thunderbird lived up to its name last weekend, when thunder from the sky joined with the thunder of 350 joyous voices as diocesan teens gathered for the 23rd Annual Diocesan Youth Conference.

The theme for this year's event was "Generation Christ: New Beginnings."

Paul Kotlowksi, the diocesan director of Youth Ministry, shared his expectations for this year's conference and noted the growth process that can occur even within the timeframe of a weekend.

"My hope is that the youth of the diocese gather in fellowship, coming to a greater appreciation of their participation of Christ's generation," said Kotlowski.

Friday evening began with prayer for a weekend of spirit and fun. Icebreakers that set the stage for fellowship were followed by a dynamic presentation from Franciscan Father Jude DeAngelo.

With a reverent passion, Father DeAngelo, a campus minister in Winston-Salem, reminded the youth that it is not enough to say "I believe" and expect salvation. He said that one must live that faith every day with every choice that is made.

His talk made an impact on teens and adults alike.

"Father Jude emphasized our Catholic identity as a conversion experience that is present in everyday life," said Adriana Macciavello, a chaperone from St. Michael Church in Gastonia.

The evening moved from a visionary keynote presentation to a night of music with the Christian rock band Clear on the main stage.

"I really like the music," 15-year-old John Paul Dunning, a youth from St. Pius X Church in Greensboro who was attending the conference for the first time, said later. "In fact, I ended up going to the workshop the group presented the next day, and it was my favorite."

When the music stopped, a short prayer service sent the teens to their cabins, where keeping warm was a challenge.

Saturday morning, teens brimming with expectations began their quest for spiritual renewal and new friends.

"I love when the kids come to the conference and mingle with kids from other Catholic Churches," said Ruth Morrissey, youth minister from St. Eugene Church in Asheville. "I think this is a valuable experience." Morrissey accompanied 18 members of her youth ministry group this year.

"Please say to yourself, 'God is interested. God put me here in this world, and he allows me to be here ... to make it a better place.' Be there for others, and your life will have meaning.

— Bishop William G. Curlin

Among the highlights of the conference are the workshops that lift up the connection all youth have to each other as Catholics. One workshop, presented by religion teacher Tony O'Meara, gave new meaning for many to the suffering of the Lord.

"In the real world, one cannot expect to avoid suffering. Instead, they should learn to love others through suffering moments, just as Jesus did," said O'Meara, whose workshop was called "By His Stripes."

Diocesan Youth Council members, who are elected after interviews with former members, united to provide leadership and glean experience in the running of a large youth conference.

The conference had a tier effect for Caryn Raming of Our Lady of the Annunciation Parish in Albemarle. Raming, who is a new youth minister and came to DYC with two teens.

"Our youth program is in its growing stages," she said. "I hope the kids get pumped up and excited so they can go home and inspire others in the church to join youth ministry."

As the conference headed towards the anticipated Saturday night dance, thunderous showers finally made their presence known. The rain did not dampen the spirit of the conference, however, and the sun returned as the teens heard a special presentation by Bishop William G. Curlin.

His spirit-filled words focused on this year's theme, pointing out the responsibilities this young group of Catholics has in the world's future.

"You're young, and you can say 'the world is mine.' And it is yours," Bishop Curlin said. "Maybe you will cure AIDS or cancer. Maybe you will discover how to find peace on earth. Maybe one of you will be another Mother Teresa. Maybe one of you will be the bishop of Charlotte."

"Please say to yourself, 'God is interested. God put me here in this world, and he allows me to be here ... to make it a better place.' Be there for others, and your life will have meaning.

"This is what it means to be a Christian. We are people who believe that Jesus Christ is alive within us, and through us, he brings his love, his joy and his hope."

Saturday evening's dance illuminated the energy of teen-age identity seen everywhere on the camp's grounds, while Catholic singer-songwriter Anne Trufant's Sunday keynote address enlightened the teens about the challenges and the impact today's media make.

The closing Mass, celebrated by Capuchin Father Stan Kobel of St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte, was an emotional and profound moment bringing this year's DYC to a close. The sea of teens walked towards their cabins, arms linked with new and old friends, ready to take on the world.

Brian Fortune, a senior, has been attending the conference since his freshman year. The parishioner of Sacred Heart Church in Brevard is also youth council member this year.

"The conference is great fun, and the experience of helping out with the charities and people the conference benefits has been a wonderful experience," he said. "Each time I leave DYC, I come away with a renewed sense of faith." ▼ less fortunate brothers and sisters."

"Through the years he has been of great support to me in the service of the universal church," said the pope.

"It is time of mourning for the Church," said Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte. "We join the world and pause to remember the life of John Cardinal O'Connor."

"His articulation of Catholic doctrine and belief was exceedingly clear," said Father West. "His voice will be missed, but his message will continue."

A plain-speaking public figure, Cardinal O'Connor often addressed current controversies in his weekly newspaper column, in homilies at St. Patrick's Cathedral and in frequent contacts with news media.

A memorial Mass in honor of John Cardinal O'Connor will be celebrated by Bishop William G. Curlin at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte.

At the time of printing this newspaper, the date and times were still to be determined.

New Yorkers learned of the feisty side of his character within the first few months of his arrival in 1984 when he became embroiled in several controversies that made national headlines.

While uncompromising on church teachings, he reached out to the larger non-Catholic community. He developed strong relations with Jewish leaders and was noted for his efforts to bring healing and reconciliation to situations of racial or ethnic conflict.

A native of Philadelphia and priest of that archdiocese, he devoted 27 years to the military chaplaincy. He retired as Navy chief of chaplains with the rank of rear admiral in 1979, when he was made an auxiliary bishop of the U.S. Military Vicariate.

John Joseph O'Connor was born in Philadelphia Jan. 15, 1920. He attended St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in suburban Overbrook and was ordained a priest of the archdiocese Dec. 15, 1945.

He became a Navy chaplain during the Korean conflict in 1952 and served on vessels in the Atlantic, Caribbean and Mediterranean, ashore in various U.S. posts, and overseas in Korea, Japan and Vietnam.

He was then named to the writing committee for the bishops' statement, headed by Cardinal (then Cincinnati Archbishop) Joseph L. Bernardin. The 1983 pastoral letter that resulted, "The Challenge of Peace: God's Promise and Our Response," was a carefully nuanced critique of U.S. defense policy. It drew wide international attention and provoked similar efforts by other religious bodies in the United States and Catholic bishops' conferences in several other countries.

During the special meeting in Chicago at which the bishops approved the pastoral letter, Bishop O'Connor, then 63, learned by telephone that Pope John Paul had chosen him to be bishop of Scranton, Pa.

His appointment was announced May 10, 1983, and he was installed in the Scranton Diocese June 29. He immediately set out to visit every parish in the diocese, began preparations for Scranton's first diocesan synod in more than a century and made several other changes.

New York John Cardinal O'Connor visited Ethiopia in 1985, where he saw feeding programs for the population starving in a famine. The cardinal died at his home in New York on May 3.

But less than a year later, on Jan. 31, 1984, he was named archbishop of New York. He was installed there March 19. On May 25, 1985, he became a member of the College of Cardinals.

Within his first few months in New York it became clear that he was not afraid of taking stands that would provoke controversy.

In June he and Cardinal Bernardin testified jointly before Congress, opposing the deployment of U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles in Western Europe, questioning the MX missile system and challenging Reagan administration proposals for massive new expenditures on nuclear weaponry and space-based defense systems.

Also that June, he said he did not see "how a Catholic in good conscience can vote for a candidate who explicitly supports abortion."

He also said, in a separate statement, that he has "absolutely no tolerance" for politicians who "try to sit on the fence" on abortion by saying they personally oppose it but will not impose their views on others.

In October Archbishop O'Connor, with Mother Teresa at his side, answered with a speech, "Human Lives, Human Rights," in which he called on politicians to commit themselves to changing the permissive abortion laws of the United States.

He also made a memorable pledge that any woman considering abortion could come to his archdiocese to receive whatever help she needed to bring her pregnancy to term.

For most of his 16 years in New York, Cardinal O'Connor enjoyed good health. But he never recovered fully after surgery to remove a brain tumor last August. He resumed celebrating Sunday Mass in St. Patrick's but cut back substantially on public appearances and began celebrating weekday Masses in his private chapel instead of at the cathedral.

In mid-October he was rehospitalized briefly for treatment of a blood clot in his leg and was unable to attend the annual Al Smith dinner, long one of the most notable annual events in the archdiocese.

In December, after weakness prevented him from celebrating Mass in the cathedral on two successive Sundays, plans for public Mass or other events were evaluated on a day-to-day basis.

He regained some strength at the beginning of the year and visited Pope John Paul and other officials at the Vatican Feb. 9-11. But he then became markedly weaker, and Zwilling told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview April 24 that Cardinal O'Connor was no longer involved in the work of the archdiocese.

In Washington, both the House and Senate approved legislation earlier this year to give the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest civilian honor awarded by Congress, to Cardinal O'Connor. ▼

Word to Life

May 7, Third Sunday of Easter, Cycle B Readings:

1) Acts 3:13-15, 17-19
   Psalm 4:2, 4, 7-9
2) 1 John 2:1-5a
3) Gospel: Luke 24:35-48

Catholic News Service

Peace. Terror. Doubt. Joy. Disbelief. Wonder. "Mixed feelings" hardly describes the dizzying roller coaster of emotion that rocketed the disciples in this week's Gospel from the stomach-churning descent into doubt to the neck-snapping curve around the edges of fear, to the awe-inspiring pinnacle of joy which was their encounter with the Easter Jesus.

I used to imagine, as a child, what I would do if the Lord appeared to me. I pictured myself happy, eager to display my virtuous deeds like some vain Boy Scout showing off a particularly impressive array of merit badges.

I imagined Jesus smiling kindly at me. And though I knew it wasn't likely — I'd never seen it in pious pictures or heard of it at home or church — I harbored the hope that, if I kept being a good boy, there might be a pony in my future soon. I did not imagine mixed feelings.

Now, with many more miles on my heart and soul, with flesh that's been bruised a time or two, and bones that sometimes creak and ache for no good reason, I find the picture of that emotionally volatile scene in the Upper Room compelling and real.

The fact is that when things have gone disastrously awry, when someone we love has been brutally hurt, and our hopes have been dashed and our shallowness and inconstancy mercilessly revealed, the unexpected arrival of the wounded loved one is bound to provoke a storm of emotion.

The good news is that, having failed our friend, our friend does not fail us. Patient, persistent forgiveness heals us of our fear and empowers us to be truer, more compassionate, more willing to risk our comfort and safety in the service of demonstrating not our brittle virtue, but the mercy of God.

Questions:

What part of the Gospel message do you occasionally hear with mixed emotions? What's one concrete way you can testify to the power of forgiveness?

Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School Today

A Tradition of Achievement

"Bishop McGuinness prepared me well for the rigorous academic demands at Yale. My educational background has placed me on an equal footing with students from the best prep schools in the country."
Ime Archibong
Graduate af Bishap McGuinness Memarial High School, Class of 1999
Freshman, Yale University

"You don't spend four years in any one place without enjoying special memories. In addition to my favorite classes and teachers, I will always remember being part of the performances in the greatly improved drama program. This, along with the proud, exuberant school spirit, friends, parents, and brothers and sisters, make the Bishop community like a family."
Molly Flynn Peterson
Graduate of Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School, Class of 2000

"I am graduating from medical school and pursuing a career in emergency medicine. While attending Bishop McGuinness, my family went through a serious upheaval. The educators and staff supported me educationally, emotionally, financially, and spiritually through this most difficult period. I have no doubt that if I had not been fortunate enough to be at McGuinness, I would certainly not be where I am today."
Richard Jacobson

"As an alumnus and volunteer member of the coaching staff, I am extremely excited about what the new campus will have to offer students on all fronts. I am particularly pleased about the plans to provide first-class practice and playing facilities for our teams. They will be a wonderful match for the quality of programs we're trying to build - and the qualities in people that excellent athletic programs foster."

Excellence in Action

The primary mission of Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School is to develop students spiritually, intellectually, socially and physically to serve as responsible Christian citizens and leaders. Toward that end, we offer:

• A dedicated faculty (student/faculty ratio of 14:1) conducting a college preparatory curriculum that gets results. Ninety-eight percent of our students pursue higher education ($1 million in scholarships awarded to 1998 graduating seniors). SAT scores consistently exceed local, state and national averages.

• Athletic and physical education programs that reinforce the values of teamwork and school spirit. Over 60% of students participate in team sports.

• An emphasis on service activities and clubs which help prepare students to be leaders in their Church and in the larger community.

Bishop McGuinness Memorial High School strives to reinforce Catholic Christian values and to challenge students to reach their achievement potential.

A Growing Need for Faith-Centered Education
