Friends! Pay attention to what I am saying, it is for your good that I say this, now if you will heed to this warning. Drunkards never will enter the kingdom of God. He would not only fill our cells and graveyards, but also our judgment and our police commissions. My hearers, there are many a drunkard who has been led to the grave on account of liquor. So my friends do leave off that bad habit. You may search the Bible through and through and you will not find that it says that intoxicating drinks are for the best, but are for the worst. My friend, do you know where you are going? Have you reflected what you are engaged in? If not, stop and consider before it is too late; there is yet time; but you know not how short it may be. O flee to the Saviour for the pardon of your sins; pray that divine grace may be given to you, entreat the Holy Spirit to convince you of the evil of sin, and its dreadful consequences, and to influence your heart and mind to those things which alone can bring you peace at last. If you have not done this, if you can do this, then reflect. Oh! touch not the glass, for deep within that ruby tinted bowl. Lie hidden friends of guilt and sin. To seize upon your soul, that sparkling glass if you will partake, will prove your deadly foe, and may e'er yet the bubbles break have sealed your endless woe. Then, pause e'er yet the cup you drain, the hand that lifts it as ray; Resolve forever to abstain, and cast the bowl away.

SELECTIONS.

The Dance

A. C. SMITHER.

Perhaps the most popular and widely practiced of all amusements among young people is the dance. There is a fascination in it for the young that can scarcely be resisted. There is a charm in it that even many in mature years are not able to turn away from. The mania for dancing not only inflicts worldly and society people, but it often makes inroads upon the church and is fraught, I verily believe, with ruinous consequences to the followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene. In many churches fathers and mothers, and sometimes pastors, are indifferent to this widely prevalent evil.

I venture to suggest a few of the direful consequences of the modern dance:

1. It is hurtful to health. Often it is the beginning of an early decline. In the ball room the dress of the lady is nearly always insufficient for the demands of the body, to say nothing of the demands of modesty. The dancing room is usually heated. This, taken with the long exertions given to the whirl, the exposure often following upon this dissipation results in nervous or pulmonary trouble, and those who might otherwise enjoy good health and long life, start on a speedy march to death. This picture is not overdrawn. We have all seen it. It is as much of a sin against God to destroy this body, the human casket in which the soul is placed, as to transgress any other law in his domain.

2. The dance is destructive to moral, intellectual and spiritual life. In these three respects man is differentiated from the beast. Dancing is on the plane of the physical, the sensual. The fact that the sexes dance together is proof of this. The pleasure of the dance is in the contact of body with body. The dance is not a moral exercise. Surely it has none of the intellectual in it. It is far removed from the spiritual. There can be no other level for it but the sensual. Shall we descend from the Godlike realms of morality, intellectuality and spirituality to the planes of the sensual? The woman who continually does this will destroy her truest and noblest life, and this is the result of experience. Those most highly developed in intellect and spirit do not dance.

3. Nearly every feature of the dance is demoralizing. This begins in the dancing school which, if we may believe the experienced, is often a very hot-bed of vice, where the designing, vicious lepers of society are entrapping the young, unexperienced, unwary, chaste girls. From this place many pure minded girls start on the road to ruin. I could give some incidents just here that would make the heart ache. This demoralization continues in the inmodest dress of too many female frequenters of the dance halls and in the posture of those engaged in the dance. Such liberty and freedom as is taken in the dance is on the direct road to the same in the parlor. Then contact with such persons as frequent the ball-room must leave a taint on one's character. The same is true of the parlor dance. The sons of God never come together—they never do for the dance—but that Satan is in their midst. He is always present at the dance whether in the parlor or the public ball-room. The strongest evidence of the demoralization of the dance remains to be seen in its results. It is the common testimony of those in a position to know that more than two thirds of the fallen women start on their fatal career from the ball-room. What a warning this should be to the young and untaught.

4. Weakness of the arguments of the apologists for the dance. It is claimed that it makes one graceful in carriage. I doubt if this be true. I have never been able to discern that grace is in every movement of the habitual dancer. Concede it to be true. There are other means of securing gracefulness than by the dance. If there were not, and gracefulness were the thing demanded, why not secure it by dancing without the presence of the other sex. Gracefulness is not the highest end of existence. It is better to be lacking in gracefulness in the body than to be demoralizing in character. Others say it is necessary to fit one for society. If this be true society needs a reformation. Better no society than that of the habitue of the dance. It is urged by others that the young must have their fun. Surely there is enough in the world that is elevating to engage the attention of the young without descending to the practice of that which is founded on man's sensual nature.

5. Instances of dancing mentioned in the Bible examined. There are those who are so demented on the dancing question that they even quote the Bible in its support. A cursory examination of the Bible will explode this blasphemous charge. The dancing mentioned in the Bible was done before the Lord, and was an act of devotion or worship to God. See the examples of Miriam and David. They never indulged in the dance for amusement except perhaps in the instance of Herodias, and the dreadful result of this quickly followed—the beheading of John the Baptist. The sexes never danced together. Take this from our modern dance, and the charm is gone.

6. Then every principle of Christianity is against such a practice. The earnest, godly, pious members of all our churches are, with hardly an exception, set against this evil practice. Scarcely a preacher that is reputable can be found who endorses the modern dance. The Scripture teaches that we are to "abstain from all appearance of evil." Surely dancing is included in the appearance. We are to abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good. We would be shocked at the minister of the gospel who would indulge in the giddy whirl. The thought of the presence of Jesus in the ball-room is almost blasphemous. Why? Because there is an inner consciousness in every soul that it is an unsuitable place for the preacher of the gospel. If unsuitable for him, is it a fit place for other earnest Christians who should be equally mindful with him of their character and reputation?

7. The greatest folly of the dance is seen in the widespread neglect, on the part of the young, of the great privileges of life because of it. Here are minds to be developed, characters to be formed, Christian work on every hand calling for idle hands, souls to be saved, children to be taught the way of holiness, whole families sinking into ruin, and yet many of our young people are frittering away their time in idleness and sinful indulgences. Would that God might raise up a John the Baptist who might cause people to repent of their sins and change their lives, and to lead the young to the heights of righteousness.

I have written these few lines to set the young to thinking. If they accomplish this, then the end for which they were written shall have been subserved—Missionary Weekly.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE PREACHER'S MAGAZINE for May is as usual packed full of helpful articles of great value to the pastor, teacher and Bible student. We especially note among the varied contents a sermon by the Rev. W. L. Watkinson entitled, "Lightness in Religion," and also one by Prof. J. A. Beet on "Balaam." The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse continues his able series of articles on Moses and writes in this number on, "The Institution of the Passover." "Notes on the International Lessons." "Outline addresses on Golden Texts," (particularly helpful to the pastor and Sunday School Superintendent,) are department of the magazine. The magazine is published monthly at $1.50 per year. Single copies, 15 cents. Willhur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper New York.

THE BEST YET.—The New Peterson for May is ahead of its predecessors, excellent as they were. The number opens with a beautifully illustrated article by Julian Hawthorn, called "A City Within a City: Chicago To-Day." Another capital paper, with profuse illustrations, is Miss Elizabeth Robinson's "Day in Marken," one of the quaintest and least-known spots in Holland. The rest of the contents are of unusual merit, and there is a freshness and novelty about the number which is immensely attractive. The New Peterson has already proved itself the model family magazine, and its success is an established fact. Terms, two dollars a year. Address, 112-114 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY for May.—The idyllic and historic Bronx Valley, sympathetically described by one of its residents, Dr. Peter MacQueen, illustrated with a score of charming views. Other interesting and excellent papers occupy places in this magazine. The department of fiction includes an exquisite story by Paul Bourget, the author of "Cosmopolis," entitled "Dom Griffi." This magazine is considered the cheapest in price and best in quality in America.

The May number of The Cottage Hearth presents an unusual number of bright stories, interesting articles and special departments. The departments in The Cottage Hearth are directed by editors chosen for their peculiar ability for the special work under charge. This number contains especially handsome illustrations. (W. A. Wille & Co., Boston. $1.50 a year.)

HISTORIA, Chicago, Ill., is improving very much.

Professor Henry Drummond is having remarkable success in his lectures before the Lowell Institute in Boston. Crowds of people found it impossible to secure even standing room. An article from his pen on a subject connected with his lectures will be published in the June issue of McCLEURE'S MAGAZINE which will appear about the middle of May.

THE MOTHERS NURSERY GUIDE for May came to us and is a magazine for mothers that is almost invaluable. Price $2.00 a year of the Babyhood Pub. Co., 5 Beekman st., New York.

THE MUSICAL RECORD for May is on our table and for a lover of music there is nothing nicer at the price—$1.00 per year, of Oliver Ditson Co., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS OF D. LOTHROP CO., BOSTON

THE PANSY for May has a fine picture of James Russell-Lowell, and gives a good view of Mr. Lowell's study. It has another equally good portrait of William Cullen Bryant. These pictures accompany the American Literature Papers, which are excellent reading, and adapted especially to the comprehension of the young people. The stories and articles which make up the table of contents are well up to the standard of this exemplary publication, and the Pansy Society of Christian Endeavor continues its popularity with all. The publishers will send a sample number free to those wishing to examine the magazine. Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number.

OUR LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN for May is odorous of the breath of May. Not only May Day with the May queen and her retinue, but it offers a loving tribute to the "soldier old and gray," and speaks tenderly of the "Blue and of the Gray." But the number is an especially fine one. But the boys and girls maintain that every number of this magazine is a fine one.

BABYLAND for May has outdoor stories and pictures, and dainty little rhymes for Baby to learn. The May number has also many pretty illustrations. Every mother with little ones should send for a sample back number. Price 50 cents a year; 5 cents a number.

WIDE AWAKE for May is another of those excellent numbers of that bright and interesting magazine for young people. Price $2.40 a year.

In China there are 400,000,000 souls and in India, 250,000,000. This is an excess of one-half of the heathen population of the globe. India and China are the strategic points of missionary work.

On Casting the Lead.

Whenever the vessel on which I have embarked comes in to shoal water, my beloved brethren, I notice that a sailor takes his place in the waist of the ship, just outside the rail, armed with a long and stout cord, at the end of which is a lead of about five pounds' weight.

This weight he swings back and forth until it has acquired sufficient momentum; then, with a final heave, he lets it go. The weight falls into the sea, far forward near the prow of the vessel, and sinks to the bottom as the line straightens itself out. Then the quartermaster, who is casting the lead, pulls up the line, and shouts to the pilot at the bridge the depth of water that he finds under the keel. Meantime the vessel is going very slowly and cautiously.

Let me draw a lesson for my nautical sermonette, beloved hearers, from this every-day sight on shipboard.

Some of you, I am convinced, need to cast the lead. You are drifting upon shoals whose presence you little suspect.

A shoal of selfishness is under the very keel of your bark of life, my brother; and you are driving on it with all sails set and a full head of steam in the boiler. You always insist on having your own way. You seldom yield your pleasure to the wishes of others.

You are steering into shallower and shallower water every moment. You will make shipwreck sooner or latter of your own happiness and of that of many others.

And you, my dear friend, are drifting upon the quicksands of self-conceit. A few social or oratorical or scholastic successes have made you think of yourself more highly than you ought to think. You breathe the air of flattery; you are never content unless some one feeds your vanity with the sweet lollipops of praise. There is but little between you and the disastrous reef of pride, which is a very bleaching ground for the bones of thousands of careless mariners.

And you, my dear sister, are almost wrecked on the ugly sand-bar of fretful impatience. You scold your servants, and snap at your children, and peck your husband, all of whom are miserable enough at times to wish that you, or they, had never been born.

What shall you all do about it?

Why, follow the example of the quartermaster that I have watched so often cast the lead. But first slow down the machinery and take in sail. Stop and think for a little. Meditate and reflect. Take a long cord, composed of memories of the past; reeve to it a plummet of prayerful purpose to find out your exact position, however unpleasant the knowledge; drop it into the ocean of your daily circumstances and surrounding. See how much or how little space there is between you and disaster. Look the truth in the face when you have discovered it, and then steer into deeper and safer waters.—A Writer in Golden Rule.

Papyrus and Paper.

In ancient Egypt the papyrus plant grew in enormous quantities. The roots of it were used for food, the bark for ropes, baskets, mats, and even for river houts; the fine skin of the inner bark was glued together in strips and employed as writing paper. The word "paper" is, indeed our modern form of the word "papyrus."

Now this fine skin or rind was imported into Rome and by the Romans was called "liber," and when the papyrus was made up into a book it, too, was known as a "liber." The case in which such a collection of books was kept was termed (in Low Latin) a "libraria," whence, through the French "librairie," we have our English "library."

The Greeks called the plant itself "byblos;" and when among them the papyrus became a book, the latter termed a "byblos." The earnest Christian writers, using the Greek language spoke of the Holy Scriptures as "biblia," the books, and later, when the Scriptures were regarded as a single work and not as a collection, the plural form "biblia," the books, was adopted as a Latin singular, "biblia," the book. With slight modification, "biblia" spread into all modern European languages, and appeared in English as "the Bible" some time after the Norman Conquest.

So the very word "Bible" takes us back to those dark days of the Oppression, when as yet the great Lawgiver was but a weeping babe in the water flags, and the annals of the Jewish people had not got beyond the second chapter of Exodus.—Go. d Words.

Morning Meditations.

It is not enough for me to have love to others; I must take pains to manifest it in all possible ways, and by this means it will be both deepened and extended. Each day I must make a special point of thinking about people with love, and speaking to them in love, and doing acts of real kindness. It will be well, for some time to come, to concentrate my aims on this point, laying plans about it in the morning, and examining myself with reference to it at night. For if there be a decided growth in this direction, if love be really developed and enlarged and put in practice, it will include all else, it will mean greater likeness to Jesus, greater usefulness, greater happiness.—Selected.

The Weather.

If ever the curse of sin is removed from this earth, there will be no greater change anywhere in nature than in the weather. When sin came, it deranged the machinery, and the atmosphere certainly received its portion of the poison. Most of our diseases originate in "a cold." The weather changes and we are caught off our guard, and suffering and death result. If an epidemic starts on an excursion, it is not content to travel as slowly as persons go, but it makes a vehicle of the atmosphere, and travels upon the wings of the wind. If there were no extremes of heat and cold, no blizzards, no storms, what a pleasant world we would have.

Dear reader, we may never while on earth, see the natural physical forces so adjusted as to give us continual pleasure, but when we get to heaven, as I hope we will instead of breathing death from the atmosphere, we will inhale life from the breezes which waft over the plains and play among the hills of Paradise. But we are here, and since we cannot re-adjust our surroundings, the sensible thing to do is to change our dispositions, and bring our wants and wishes into unison with God's will, and then his dealings with us will all seem right, as they certainly are for our good.

My first suggestion is, that we educate ourselves to be satisfied with the weather. Why not? This is God's world. He made it. And we are not willing for the Lord to do as he pleases with his own earth. Like spoiled children, we are always complaining and kicking against his government. What if the cold does pinch us, the heat oppress us, or the storm beat upon us, do we not deserve it? Perhaps he is using the weather, as he did the whip of cords in the temple, to chastise us. Let us reform, and do our whole duty cheerfully and promptly, and then we will see that the weather was about right after all. Many farmers have a continual contest with the weather, and it seems to be against their business. But those men moved too slowly, they got behind with their work. There was suitable weather enough, but they delayed and wasted part of it, and now everything is out of time, and they blame the weather instead of themselves. Many are more foolish than Solomon's ant, which stored away food for winter. They have all of the spring, and summer, and pleasant autumn in which to provide food, clothing, fuel and shelter, yet they neglected it, and then when winter comes they blame the weather with it all. In Leigh Richmond's Story of the Shepherd of Salisbury Plain, we have a man who was always pleased with the weather, because he said the Lord sent it, and he wanted the kind which the Lord preferred. The weather generally comes in about right to the man who never lets his business get behind. Did you know that about nine-tenths of the people of this world are always behind time? If a man promises to meet you at a time, he thinks half an hour latter will do just as well. If a man promises to pay you money, and signs an obligation to do so on a certain day, he does not mean that day. He has been educated wrong, and although he says that, he really means when it is convenient. No wonder that the weather tries to whip us up, and make us prompt and submissive; but we are so slow to learn.

My last suggestion is, that we begin to educate ourselves by restraining and training our tongues. Let us stop discussing the weather. Some people seem to have no other stock in trade. Valuable time should not be wasted in telling people what they already know. You meet a friend, and he says: "A cold day," or "hot weather this." You knew that. Why does he not say: "There stands a post," or "Yonder is a tree." There would be about as much information in these expressions as in those. But the worst feature about it is, that our remarks about the weather are usually in a complaining mood. We educate ourselves to find fault with the weather, and by our complaints we render ourselves unhappy, and instead of sowing sunshine we sow gloom. How often do we hear the expression, "Bad weather." Let us quit calling the Lord's work bad.

Now, kind reader, let us make a covenant. Suppose we promise each other that, from this time forward, we will do our best to quit complaining about the weather, and that when we hear our blessed Lord impeached with doing bad work, we will speak a kind word in his defence. And should our pathways in this life ever touch, we can then report to each other how we are getting along educating ourselves in regard to the weather.—N. in Exchange.

A Pastor Who Sings.

It is something to his credit if the pastor sings. Among the duties required of him is that of director of public worship. Praise, prayer, and preaching are placed under his control. On Sunday the prayers and preaching are personal as well as representative acts, those of the man as well of the minister. Is it not important that praise should be also? To make this the pastor should be a singer and a leader of singing. Knowledge of music as a science is valuable to him, ability to read notes at sight quite desirable, but surely some familiarity with the simple art of singing is almost indispensable to the highest success as director, under the Holy Spirit, of public worship.

Extremes meet in more senses than one when the pastor passes from the pulpit platform, at one end of the church, to the other. Choirs are not always consecrated Christians who make melody in the heart. All admit that they should be. The best way to bring them to a proper frame of mind is for the pastor to be ex officio one of their number, just as he is in the Sunday school. He should not usurp the place of chorister or organist, nor make himself otherwise officious, but he should wisely control both by being in fullest sympathy with them. It is hardly well for him to think himself a gifted singer or to allow other singers to imagine he thinks so. Solos by the pastor are seldom in good taste. A singer he may be, but he is always something more. It is his duty to magnify, popularize, and spiritualize the service of song in the house of the Lord. This can be accomplished by keeping close touch with his chosen musical leaders, and by constantly reminding them that they and he are intimately associated in promoting proper expressions of praise to God.

Prayer meetings are turned into praise meetings by a singing pastor. Such meetings will be generally well attended. Young people will like them; women will enjoy them, as singing is the only act of public worship permitted them. Hymns, wisely selected and well sung, take the place of applause for the enthusiastic. They are the "Amen," "the responsive service," which so stimulate the preacher. Prayer meetings, where singing is made prominent, and if necessary, led by the pastor, will not only be enjoyable, but effective. Hymns of fervency will drown petitions that are dull, wandering, or cold, and make more sweet to the listening worshippers those inspired by the Holy Spirit. Singing may promote revivals; revivals indirectly thrive upon singing. Many a conversion is due to a song baptized in the grace of Christ.

Pastoral visiting is more delightful to the preacher who sings. Elias Dodson, of blessed memory, divided the household attentions of a minister into three classes. If you stop five minutes it is a "vis"; if you remain fifteen or twenty minutes a "visit," but if you prolong your stay for an hour and a half it is a "visitation." How to visit satisfactorily to himself and others is a problem few ministers out of heaven can solve. Some of us find it practicable to make singing do good in our twenty minutes interview. You can always become friends with the children by singing if it is proper. Once or twice a shy or skeptical girl has been brought to seriousness by a song the preacher marries to have her "play and sing" with him. And that dear old saint in the bed over there, whom you visit often, and to whom you have read the Bible time and time again, and with whom you prayed frequently, she would like to hear you sing perhaps. Ask if she likes "Children of the Heavenly King," or "How Firm a Foundation." Sing a few stanzas in a sweet low voice and see the face light up or the tears flow, and hear her tell you of how those words were blessed to her heart when it was young and fresh long years ago. Yes, some of us have sung with the dying till they crossed the river and caught up the notes of the ransomed in glory.

Then the home funeral, a funeral among simple hearted folk, especially country people or people reared in the country is much more sweet and consoling if the pastor can sing what is tender and appropriate. There will be no need of lengthy remarks. Scripture reading, prayer and singing, often cover all the conditions of a modest and Christian tribute to the Christian dead. Yes, and at the grave, sometimes, sing a hymn and many a heart will grow lighter of its insupportable burden.

In all religious assemblies—"associations," "conventions," and the like—singing is a very essential part of the exercises as every one knows. The more singing preachers present, as a rule, the more enthusiastic the proceedings. Heaven itself is all the more chiming to some of us, as we contemplate it, because it is a place of jubilant song, where there is sounded forth an oratorio of one hundred and forty-four thousands around the throne of God. Better prepare for heaven by learning to sing now. Sing here now and you will find heaven on earth.—W. W. Landrum, D. D., in Seminary Magazine.

The usefulness of young people is not a creation, but a growth, and the pastor who thinks that he can plan out some system of organization, and put it on his young people as he would fit a person with a new suit of clothes, will not be long in discovering his error. Organization is essential, but primarily so because it fosters the growth of principle within, where all development and power must have their origin.—W. T. Ellis, in The Presbyterian

Golden Rule Meditation on Sympathy.

When I think with what complaining, dear Father, I chafe against my petty troubles, and how, all over the world, haggard men and pale-faced women are bearing fearful burdens with a smile, I wonder that thou dost not indignantly exchange my lot with theirs. Forbid that I should longer study my woes and others' joys. For every sorrow of mine I can find scores of nobler souls with heavier sorrows. How greatly does God shame me in this, proving at once my weakness, to which he tempers his discipline, and my ingratitude. How greatly in this do I shame myself, convicting myself of selfishness, whether I be glad or whether I be sorrowful. Lord, thy chastisements, nobly borne, are the epaulets of thine army; but I have trodden mine in the dust, and have had no eyes to see the higher, stern honors of others. Dear Jesus, I do not weep enough, as thou didst weep, over the sins and griefs of men. My life is none the happier for failing to note their troubles; I only have more tears to spend on my petty woes. Let me live in thy wide sympathies, all-loving, all-pitying Savior. Then the agonies of those who starve and whose dear ones hunger, then the heart-broken watchings by beds of long sickness or sudden death, then the despair of ruined lives and of those whose hearts ache thereat, the horrors of prison, the worse horrors of conscience, the terrible emptiness of doubt, the unutterable misfortune of a hardened heart,—then all these pitiful woes, so common, so unregarded, will inspire in me a very passion of gratitude for my blessed lot, and a manly helpfulness of others. Grant me this entrance into thy sorrows, blessed Lord, that I may come also to the knowledge of thy joys.—Golden Rule.

Unitarians Graduating From Andover.

WHAT A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT REPORTS.

There is great commotion at Andover Theological Seminary. Not since the original arraignment of the professor who were accused of heresy, some years ago, has there been anything to equal it. Two members of the Senior class, which is to graduate in June, have openly gone over to the Unitarian denomination. Another member of the same class stood ready to do so, but he had been invited to take charge of a Congregational church in Minneapolis, and he first stated his belief to their official board, explaining that he was willing to serve them as pastor if the were willing to accept him. They decided, in the language of the poet.

"With all thy faults I love thee still," and so that man is saved, at least for a time, to Congregationalism. There are other members of other classes who are strongly suspected of the same tendencies, tho' thus far no one has publicly expressed any intention of following the example of the two seniors and uniting with the Unitarian denomination.

The members of the Faculty are naturally much wrought up over this situation. Several of them constitute the editors of the Andover Review; and they have been publishing for six months past a series of articles on "The Divinity of Jesus Christ," which have now been gathered into a volume and published from the Riverside Press. In these articles they have labored with the utmost of their ability to demolish the Unitarian conception of Jesus Christ as a mere man; and so important do the trustees of the Seminary regard this contribution to ecclesiastical literature, and so grave the situation, that they have voted to present a copy of the book gratuitously to every student who will apply for it at the treasurer's office. Many of the men have done this, and the effect is awaited with much interest. In addition to this demonstration, nearly all the professors, after a conference on the subject, have undertaken to emphasize in their class-rooms the Evangelical view of Christ, and as far as possible to remove the doubts of the students on that point.

The Board of Visitors, it is stated on the best authority, learning of the new complication above outlined, made a special tour of inspection last week among the various class-rooms, to observe what the professors are doing to occasion or prevent the Unitarian escapade. It is not known that any definite action was taken, or any discoveries made on which action can be based; but one of the Visitors was heard to remark that "the Seminary might be improved if there was not so much Higher Criticism taught." Whether this was ominous of official action remains to be seen.

The episode is regarded with extreme pain by most, if not all, the members of the Faculty. While the great majority of the students remain loyal to orthodoxy, and one who was recently examined for a license before the Andover Association presented a creed which Jonathan Edwards himself might have approved, yet it is felt that such an untoward incident, just as the Seminary appeared to have emerged from its troubles and to be on the high-road to old-time prosperity and popularity, is a menace which requires prompt and vigorous defeuding.—Independent.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

The Sunday School Convention.

From the article in the last issue of the SUN written by Bro. Foster one would conclude that he is in earnest. I am of the opinion that it is best always in such cases for the officers appointed to go forward and make all the arrangements for the body and publish the session in due time. The responsibility then rests on the body, and the official members are free from any censure. I wish to say for myself that I am unwilling to see it disband. That must not be. Put the whole matter in shape, and urge the Sunday schools and pastors to get ready. Let there be no faltering. The King's business needs prompt and faithful attention

W. S. LONG.

Elon College, May 6, 1893

The Sunday School Convention.

Dear brethren, I want to say a few words in favor of holding the Sunday school Convention of the N. C. and Va. Conference.

We must not take backward step. Our watch word must be onward in every good work. Would not Satan rejoice, if we should neglect to hold the convention?

Appoint the place and arrange the programme, and I will try to be there to do all I can.

Some may say, can we not keep up the Sunday schools without a convention? Not successfully. For the convention is the head of the Sunday school work; and the head is of the greatest importance to the body. When the head dies the body cannot live.

As to a place, I think our people at Youngsville want it to come here. I think we can give you a good time at Youngsville.

J. D. WICKER.

Youngsville, N. C., May 3, 1893.

The Sunday School Convention.

There is no line of Christian endeavor productive of greater good to the future growth of the church than the Sunday school work. It helps to mould and shape the characters of the young before they become contaminated by sin, vice and immorality. These are times of political, and commercial agitation, and the young people of the country are rushing to the towns and cities to engage in business combines and corporations unite their influence to perpetrate public Sabbath breaking which is a shame to a civilized nation and a stigma upon the church. Every other class of society except the church is organized and pushing forward their interests with all the sagacity of human mind. The evils of our land are better organized and receive more attention than many of our church enterprises. Capital and labor are using every means within their power to maintain their rights and to gain strength to oppose all the forces of evil that menace their prosperity. Seeing that almost every organization, by all classes, in every phase of human activity is receiving more attention than the church enterprises we are alarmed. Men everywhere seem to be wide awake on temporal questions and almost perfectly indifferent to the claims of Christianity. Churches are neglected and crime protected by those who profess Christianity. Our church is no more enthusiastic over its growth and prosperity than others.

None of our church enterprises are pushed and agitated with the enthusiasm that should be manifested by Christian people but the enterprise of the Sabbath school is neglected to an alarming extent. It has been a question as to whether the Sunday school convention of the N. C. and Va. conference should be continued. People seem to be indifferent about its continuance. The fault does not lie in the convention itself for it has been a success so far as it has gone but the fault lies in the hearts and at the homes of some of the church members who never attend their church except on preaching days and then take no part in the Sabbath school work. At many of the churches the members take no part in studying the Bible lessons that are prepared for the Sabbath school, whereas every man who professes to be a Christian should attend the Sabbath school and take part in its work. There is a growing need for greater diligence along the line of church work and this need is most emphatically impressed upon our minds by the indifference that is manifested concerning the work of the Sabbath school convention. The Sabbath school is undoubtedly one of the greatest influences for the growth and prosperity of the church if it is conducted properly. There is no better way to promote such work than to come together, discuss it best interest and lay plans that will unify the efforts of the entire conference. Thorough organization is one of the essentials of success in any public enterprise, and we desire to see every church in our conference deeply interested in this work. It is a grand and glorious work and will accomplish more good than we can determine if prosecuted in the right spirit with a diligence that should characterize Christians.

Elon College Notes.

Mr. W. T. Sears was called home to the burial of his father last Tuesday. The deceased was an honored citizen of the state and an earnest and devout servant of God. The faculty and students sympathize with the bereaved son and daughter, and we point them to the saying of that noted writer; "Afflictions though they seem severe are often mercy sent." Oh! what a comforting thought it should be to those children that the tie that binds them to heaven is only made stronger by the loss sustained in this world, and that it is in their power to meet that dear father in a far brighter world than this, if they follow in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Savior. "Be ye also ready."

After a few days visit to her home, Miss Irene Clements is again in our midst preparing herself for the duties before her. We are glad to see her return.

Bro. P. T. Klapp has moved into his new dwelling near Mr. Tate's residence. Our Bro. has a lovely home and we would be glad to see other faithful servants follow his example right along this line of work.

M. L. Hurley was with us only a few days before he was called to his home, we certainly did appreciate the efforts of our Bro. and we feel greatly benefited by them. We regretted to see Mr. Hurley leave, but another tried and faithful servant, Uncle Wellons came to continue the services till Saturday. By my saying Uncle Wellons I would not have the ladies think that our Bro. is getting old. If they had heard the sermons he preached to us, they would think that he is just in his prime of life. He not only gave us the blessed truths, but they were the means of bringing souls from the path of sin into the happy fold of Christ.

Misses Annie and Linda Porter went to Eastern Virginia today to be present at the marriage of their sister, Miss Nora Porter. We wish the former a pleasant trip, and the latter, a long and happy life in the blessed state of matrimony. We hope however that Misses Annie and Linda will not follow the example of their sister just now, for we are not willing to give them up at present.

Besides the regular exercises of Commencement we desire to offer the following inducement to our friends to be present the 8th, of June: Dr. Maple will deliver a lecture in the college chapel on "The womanly woman." Come and hear this, for we know the Dr. will give us something fine on that occasion.

Very truly,
ELIJAH MOFFITT.

Virginia Valley

Mr. Editor:—As you would like to hear from the Va. Valley I will endeavor to drop just a few lines. I never have seen that any of the laity from here write any, the reason I can't tell unless it is we think the minister ought to do it all. Brother Clements I don't think Brother Iseley has lost his pen but his time has been occupied. The 1st Sunday in April, he dedicated Concord church to the worship of God, and on the evening of the same day a protracted meeting commenced, which lasted two weeks and resulted in one conversion and others deeply interested.

The third Sunday Brother Iseley preached an interesting sermon to a large congregation at Bethlehem from Revelation 20:12. The same day he went to Linville and commenced a series of meetings there.

And he has one more church, this conference also has one more Sunday school added to its number, that of Concord organized the same day of the dedication. We have a good school of forty scholars, and some continue to join and I in my weakness, am trying to superintend the school. The membership of Concord is small in numbers yet, and for that reason through the pastor and the members of Concord I was induced to have my membership transferred from Bethlehem to Concord to my inconvenience, but I have this consolation, I hope it may be to my eternal gain. By the way I think the discussion on woman's right to preach has been very interesting. I have nothing to say; only this I was received into the church by Sister Alice A. Draper, and believe it will stand the test in that great day when all shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ. Will stop right here maybe I have said too much already for the first attempt.

JNO. S. MARTZ
Tenth Legion, Rockingham Co., Va.

Bro. CLEMENTS:—The work here is in a better condition than at any time since I have had charge of it. All of the churches have good Sunday schools and prayer meetings. In my opinion the success of a church in a great measure depends upon these as they are stepping stones to the church, and a higher and purer life. If the young people can be encouraged to take up the work, and develop their talents until they become fixed in their purpose, they will have a power for good. It is not so much in the number of conversions as the kind. Perhaps this is overlooked in the great effort to swell the church rolls, wishing to keep a pace with other denominations, who preach creed instead of Christ. "And that Lord said unto Gideon, By the three hundred men that lapped will I save you"—Jud. 7:7.

The victory is not to the multitude nor the strong, but to the humble. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Luke 14:11;18:14.

Easter Sunday was the day set to dedicate Concord Christian church. There was a large congregation gathered by eleven o'clock, and after raising the balance due on the new church, I then preached the dedicatory sermon and we dedicated the house to the Lord. They have a nice church, and all who helped in building that church have reason to rejoice that they helped in a good cause. So at least one member of the N. C. and Va. C. C. has an interest in that church. May the Lord bless him in his grand work for God and the Christian church, he does not only know how to get others to do their duty to the Lord by giving; but he knows how to give.

We protracted the meeting at Concord from the dedication. The congregations were attentive, two professed faith in Christ, and the church was much revived. Oh if the church could be kept in a spirit of growth all the year like the flowers that are placed in the green house during the winter they would bloom and bear fruit all the year like Aaron's rod. Num. 17:8.

The third Sunday of April was our regular time at Bethlehem, the congregation was large and attentive as usual. It is a pleasure to meet that congregation as they are always eager to hear the truths. Good hearers make good preachers, like wives. It is said every man thinks he has the best wife, I speak from hear-say, not from experience. So preachers think they have the best congregations. At night we commenced a series of meetings at Linville, which resulted in a number of conversions, three united with the church, others to join at my next appointment. Here the church was much revived, and is in good working order with a good prayer meeting every Sunday night which is well attended by two aged brothers Col. E. Sipe and E. Empsweller, with a large number of younger members Bro. C. H. Shank is Superintendent of the Sunday school which numbers more than eighty, he is a good worker in the Sunday school. Mrs. P. H. Fleming of Graham, N. C. is visiting her father Col. E. Sipe of Linville, Va. It has been raining here for 24 hours and has already rained more than at any time since last summer.

The members of the Advisory committee of Elon College are: Rev. W. W. Staley, Bro. E. T. Pierce and Hon. W. N. Pritchard. It is hoped this committee will meet three or four days before the trustees, so as to have everything in good shape for work.

Last Sunday the Raleigh Sunday school reorganized. D. J. Mood was reelected Superintendent with Wm. Horton Asst. Supt.; E. H. Alderson, Secretary, and Clarence Coley Asst. Sec.; Miss Willie McCullers, Treasurer; Mrs. D. J. Mood Organist and Miss Effie Crutchfield Asst. Organist.

We clip the following complimentary note from the Herald of Gospel Liberty:

"One of the richest pages of the CHRISTIAN SUN is that which weekly bears the sermons of Dr. James Maple. These sermons are always helpful, and we never have seen a word in one of his sermons that in any way undermined the faith of the Christian. Maple's sermons are pure gold from the Gospel mine."

A little trip up to Durham and Burlington, N. C., last week, and shaking hands with old friends, and picking up a few subscribers to the SUN gave a pleasure that was much enjoyed. Whilst in Burlington the night was spent with W. C. Isley; and those who have been there know it was a time of joy.

The printers are busy at work finishing up the new Christian church. The brethren and sisters deserve great praise for the energy and pluck shown in the church work.

W. S. LONG.

Suffolk Letter.

At the close of my sermon yesterday morning and just before communion the fire alarm sounded and the whistle at the Splinter Mill announced that plant was on fire. As the fire-bell is in the tower of the City Hall where we worship, and as several of the Fire Company belong to our congregation there was a tendency toward excitement. I dismissed the congregation and announced the communion for the evening service. The fire was soon extinguished and the damage very little. This incident suggests the unexpected call to duty. These firemen were called, and always are, suddenly, unexpectedly. So men are often called from time to eternity. These firemen have their dress for duty and upon the sound of alarm they rush to the room, where these are deposited, and within a few minutes are ready for service. All men ought to make spiritual preparation to answer God's calls to duty and judgment. I have noticed how composed and useful, how steady and fearless, firemen are compared with nervous, useless crowds when the flames are raging. Those who are prepared to answer God's call will meet Him in peace and perfect tranquillity. "Be ye also ready."

Cyclones seem to be more numerous this spring than usual. They have touched at several points in Virginia and North Carolina, doing much damage to property and destroying some lives. There is no absolute security to wealth nor to life in the body. The only absolute security is in spiritual, invisible things. Redeemed life is eternal and good character is indestructable. Treasure in heaven will endure and our home there is in a city with foundations which cannot be moved. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." The measureless forces of the invisible winds may well alarm the bravest men. How about those, who do not believe in the unseen, the unknown immensities and powers of God? I believe as fully in the unseen spiritual world and being as I do in the seen and national world and life. God rules both and we inhabit both. If we trust Him we are always safe in this present world and that which is to come.

It is nearly mail-time and I am writing this morning without much to write about; but I hope the lessons suggested may help some fellow traveler to eternity.

W. W. STALEY.

The Name Christian to the Exclusion of All Sectarian or Party Names.

We surrender much of the editorial page this week to a part of the chapter from the little book, Five Cardinal Principles Defined, by Rev. M. L. Hurley. The chapter is from the pen of Rev. W. W. Staley. The remainder of the chapter will appear in next week's issue; and we hope the readers of the SUN will notice closely every word in both this issue and the next. It is worth the consideration of any one:

God has only one church. "Upon this rock I will build my church." Math. 16:18. Christ is the foundation of this church, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3:11. He is also the head of this church. "He is the head of the body, the church." Col. 1:18. "Which is the head, even Christ." Eph. 4:15. The scriptures employ various figures to represent this church. It is spoken of as a family. "Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." Eph. 3:15. As a building. "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord." Eph. 2:21. Unity is a cardinal principle in the gospel church. It is a body with many members, a vine with many branches. But it is, in scripture language, always one church with Christ as foundation and head. Christ is moreover, the life of the church "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." John 1:4. "For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world" John 6:33. As one life pervades the church, all believers are bound into one body in Christ. This principle will be admitted by all who accept the gospel. But the interpretation of this principle some may strain. The multiplicity of parts in the gospel church is not denied; but this multiplicity, in their true relations, never breaks the bond of unity that makes the church one. It rather, like the multitudinous waves of the ocean, makes it the one grand church of Christ. The great cables that hold great steamers to the wharf are made of thousands of small strands, but they are so worked and twisted together that they become one in holding the ship to the shore. The church of Christ is wrought into one grand union of strain and life to hold the world to God. Whatever weakens this interwoven unity jeopardizes the salvation of men. All other questions merge into the stream of fraternal love, through which the united heart of the gospel church flows out into the boundless ocean of God's love. If the churches were closer to each other, they would be closer to their God.

With the principles laid down and the spirit indicated above, the name worn by the Christian church is here explained or defined.

Names, as applied to religious organizations, are all derivatives. Their value must, therefore, be determined by the root from which they are derived. This principle seems to be fair. It is not enough that they grow into large significance and wide reputation among men, laying the foundation for historic periods, and embracing many within their pale.

The name should carry with it the origin of this gospel church, and ever teach, in part, this salvation through Christ to the world. The name is a part of this church. All inheritance comes in part by reason of name. The children of God are "joint heirs with Christ." Rom. 8:17. Buddhists derive their name from Buddha who was born near the end of the sixth century before Christ. Mohammedans derive their name from Mohammed who was born toward the close of the sixth century after Christ. Roman Catholics derive their name from the historic fact, that about the fifth century the Bishops of Rome claimed to speak with supreme authority. Very early in the Christian church the word Catholic (Gr. Katholikos), universal, had been employed to denote the world-wide offer of salvation by Christ in contrast with the particularism of the Jews. Hence it came to be used by ecclesiastical writers to denote the church as the depository of the doctrine of universal salvation in contrast with heretical sects. Since the Roman bishops claimed to speak with supreme authority, the term Roman Catholic church has been used. Lutherans derive their name from Martin Luther, the great Reformer of the sixteenth century. Calvinists derive their name from John Calvin who was born at Noyon, in Picardy, July 10, 1509. Baptists derive their name from the views they hold respecting the ordinance of baptism. This denomination had its origin no doubt in the sixteenth century, when there was a great awakening of religious thought and feeling. Methodists derive their name from the system introduced at first into Wesleyan societies. Members of the University of Oxford gave Wesley and his society the name of "Methodists," in allusion to the Methodici, a class of physicians at Rome who practiced only by theory. This name thus given a century and a half ago came at length to be worn with pride by this large and growing denomination. Other names might be mentioned and their derivation traced out, and those already given could be enlarged upon with profit. The length of this chapter forbids, however, anything more than enough to establish the principle on which the name Christian is founded. There is no purpose to depreciate grand old names of historic value, or denominations whose numbers and activity bless two hemispheres. The aim here is only to search out in a plain way the significance of names as applied to religious bodies, and to discover, if possible, whether there is only one true name embracing all that should be worn by the church, to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names. The references are based on historic testimony and serve to illustrate the thought which is here presented. These bodies are all proud of their respective names. Their names are significant and fully reveal their meaning. They are true exponents of what they are intended to signify. There has grown up with these names not only historic greatness, but truest attachment, and tenderest affection. The good and the great have lived under their shadow, and died in their communion, and their graves are honored with marble shafts and bedecked with roses. Great theologians have grown up around their peculiar tenets and literature is full of their thoughts and and their labors. If the sleeping dust of their martyrs could speak, a thousand tongues would make earth ring with their praises. This is all true; and the world is better, and richer, and happier, and grander for its being true. But for all that, none nor all of these names combined set forth clearly and fully the origin of Christianity to men. None of them in itself shows the relation of the church to Christ. The only name that can do this is Christian. This name presents clearly to men the origin of religion in the gospel church, and the relation of the church to its head, even Christ, "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." Eph. 3:15. Perhaps all will agree that this is the only name that can set forth these two relations, and yet they may deny that this is necessary or that it was so ordained of God. Reverence for old things should never prevent the reception of truth. The attention of the reader is, therefore, directed to this point: What is the use of a name, as applied to the people of God? The object of a name is to distinguish the church, or the people of God, from the world and not to distinguish them from each other. The names referred to above and all kindred names serve to distinguish religious societies from each other, more than to distinguish denominations from each other, and sometimes to hold them apart in love and labors. This name should be such as to distinguish the people of God from the world, and to show their relation to Christ. In this paramount demand these names seem to be insufficient, tending rather to division and strife than to union and love. Paul seems to be speaking on this, when he says to the Corinthians: "For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" 1 Cor. 3:4. The apostles insisted that the disciples should be attached to Christ and not to them. "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." John 3:27. Besides, if these names are the true ones for the church, then centuries rolled away before she was properly named. None of these names goes back to the time of Christ. Either the name makes no difference, or these denominations wear wrong names. The right to wear the name Christian turns on the above condition. Some religious teachers hold two following positions:

1. That the name Christian is common to all denominations, and that no one body has a right to wear the name to the exclusion of others.
2. That this name is not of divine appointment.

At Graham.

We spent last Sunday with Rev. P. H. Fleming and the dear people at New Providence. This grand old church seems to be putting on new life. The services were very pleasant. Quite a number of the aged members were present, which added much to the interest of the occasion. Bro. Fleming, the pastor, is held in high esteem by his flock, and he knows how to appreciate it and love and pray for his dear people in return.

We expect soon to see a nice church building going up down in Graham. The time has come when our people must have a church in Graham. Both Graham and Burlington are growing, and reaching out their hands towards each other, and soon they may be called the double city.

We had the pleasure of visiting the families of S. E. Harden, J. W. Harden, J. H. Harden, C. H. Roney, J. W. Fonville, J. W. Holt, Bro. Clendenen and Dr. George Long. All these are good families, and make one pleasant in their homes.

Monday night was spent at Elon College with Bro. Samuel Crawford. This is another good Christian family.

Things are getting lively at college for the commencement. All are expecting a big time.

College Claims.

Many good friends have been written to recently relative to the amounts due the college. I have no other way of communicating with friends at a distance, and I hope they will understand my motives and comply with the pledges made to the college. No one is due the college a large amount, but there are many small sums unpaid. When these are put together they will make a nice fund. We want to pay every debt and we can, if all will come up with the pledges they have made. Money is scarce but we can obtain what is due the college if we will only try. Will friends please give this matter attention. Should any one who has never given the college any money see this we trust that one will do so now. Certainly no friend of the Christian church can feel that he has done his duty towards his church if he has done nothing, and if he has deliberated this matter seriously and has concluded not to help the college then the church would be better off without him. All invalids and individuals unable to provide for themselves are excused from such burdens. The church does not expect them to carry on her work, but should provide for them. All others are expected to aid in every enterprise of the church. We have projected several enterprises and we need the hearty cooperation of all our people. Our college, missions, church extension, and publications are the principal ones. May God give us all grace to do our whole duty.

Who ever heard of a Chinese anarchist? Yet we permit the dangerous anarchist to dwell at will in our country, while the offending Chinese must be subjected to the most galling and unjust restriction.

Corner Stone Services at Norfolk.

The service of laying the corner stone in the Memorial Christian church at Norfolk, Va., is to be most impressive and the occasion is to be utilized in adding to the finance of the church.

The walls of the new church are up one story, but a cavity has been prepared in the North East corner for the reception of a corner stone and it is proposed to fix it in position with impressive ceremonies on May 26. Invitations have been sent out to Masonic Lodges in Norfolk, Nansemond, Southampton, Isle of Wight and Princes Ann Counties, and to the eleven or twelve Christian churches same district special letters have been sent, and in view of the fact that Hon. C. T. O'Ferrall, M. C., is the orator of the day a large gathering of his political friends will doubtless be in attendance.

Three thousand tickets have been issued and are being sold, each ticket secures to the bearer one reserved seat at the service, and dinner. This dinner will be prepared and served by the ladies of the church and congregation on the grounds. One of Virginia's most distinguished sons, Hon. C. T. O'Ferrall, member of congress, and candidate for governor, will deliver the oration. A band will meet the resident lodges and visiting Masonic brethren at the Masonic Temple and escort them to the site. We hope and fully expect our brethren in all the adjacent Christian churches to make special effort to be with us on that occasion.

The tickets are $1.00 each and will secure a dollar's worth in the interest of the day and the cause to every well wisher of the Christian Church.

These tickets will be sent to the churches for sale or may be obtained by sending to C. M. Crusier, Esq., Brewer Street, Norfolk, Va.

Doubtless there are many noble brethren and sisters who would like very much to be with us on the occasion, but because of distance, business or other hindrance will not be able. But dear friends, if you cannot personally attend, you can at least send and secure ticket or tickets for the day, and thus be present in spirit and interest. Send to Bro. Crusier at the above address, or to the pastor 72 Wood street, secure and then preserve your tickets as vouchers for your real interest in the work.

Do not forget the 26 of May, pray for our success, then send for your tickets.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

As I sit here at my desk this morning to write the rain is coming down steadily out doors and it is dark and dreary in the office, but the flowers and trees and grass seem to enjoy the rain for they are looking fresh and green enough.

Shall we, when trials and trouble come, be less brave than the other plants of God's vineyard. He has placed them here for some good, and He has put us here for some good too; but there are so many who seem to think nothing about the good they may do but try to do all the evil possible. We must kill the devil that is in us entirely or we cannot get along at all. If we take DEVIL and cut his head off we have EVIL; then should we cut his shoulders off and put them under his feet see we have VILE; and then if we cut his body off we still have IL (ill) left; and then if you cut off one of his feet you have left what an Englishman would call HELL. So I say again don't try to do a little wrong and think you can be good for the devil must be cast out entirely or he is certain to spoil you in some way and then the end of life will be, like the end of the word I used above, the very worst part. Strive and pray mightily for a clean heart pure and undefiled.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

McADENSVILLE, N. C., MAY 2, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little girl eleven years old and would like to write to the Corner. I never wrote a letter to put in a paper, and hope my first will not find the waste basket. I never saw the SUN until Rev. J. R. Comer of Rise, N. C., came to McAdenville for his health. He is improving very fast, and says he likes to stay in our town very much. He boards at our home and we like him. I go to school and like my teacher; his name is Mr. Williamson. I go to the Baptist Sunday school, and like my teacher there too; his name is W. F. Simmons. I will close with a promise to write more next time if this is all right. Please find a half dime for the Band enclosed.

Much love to you and the cousins, if you will claim me for your niece.
MATTIE WRIGHT.

Mattie, you have a happy cordial welcome among the cousins, and I hope that you will continue to write to the Corner for many long years. I am glad you love your school and Sunday school for I think that the school is the nicest place for little folk to love.

ELAMS, APRIL 8, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I do not see any of the cousins letters in the Corner this week I will write again, I have been to Sunday school to day enjoyed it very much, hope you and all the cousins have enjoyed this lovely Sabbath day. Uncle Tangle, I will write something that I hope will interest the cousins and also some of the older friends: A Soldier was in prison without a Bible and had a deck of cards instead. This is what he said: when I see the one it reminds me there is but one God. When I see the two it reminds me of the Father and Son. When I see the three it reminds me of the Father Son and Holy Ghost. When I see the four it reminds me of the four Evangelists that preached, Matthew, Mark Luke, and John. When I see the five it reminds me of the five virgins that trimmed their lamps, there were ten, but five were wise and five were foolish, and were shut out. When I see the six it reminds me that six days the Lord made heaven and earth. When I see the seven it reminds me that on the seventh day he rested from all his great works he had made, and hallowed it. When I see the eight it reminds me of the eight righteous persons who were saved when God destroyed the world viz., Noah and his wife and three sons, and their wives. When I see the nine I think of the nine lepers that were cleansed by our Saviour, nine out of ten never returned thanks. When I see the ten it reminds me of the ten commandments which God handed down to Moses and the table of stone. When I see the king it reminds me of the great king of heaven, which is God almighty. When I see the queen it reminds me of the queen of Sheba who visited Solo non, for she was as wise a woman as he was a man. She brought with her fifty boys and girls all dressed in boys apparel for King Solomon to tell which were boys, and which were girls, the girls washed to their elbows and the boys to their wrist, so King Solomon told by that. Well said, you have described all but one that is the knave. The greatest knave is the constable who brought me here. When I count the number of spots I find there is 365, the number of days in a year. When I count the number of cards I find 52, the number of weeks in a year. I find twelve picture cards the number of months in a year. When I count the tricks I find thirteen the number of weeks in a quarter. I will close and write again soon. Much love to you and all the cousins, hope you will not think hard of me this time as I have no money

Your little niece,
LULA B. FLOYD.

Lula, you have given us a nice long letter and I hope you will write again soon I do not think hard of any one for not sending money. I know that people don't always have that useful article by them. What I want is for all to write, and send money when they can.

SHAKESPEARE

What Mr. Smith Thinks He Would Have

Said About Hood's Sarsaparilla

"Had Shakespeare lived here and suffered as I have, I think he would have said, Throw away all medicine except Hood's Sarsaparilla. As an Englishman, coming to this climate, I have felt the heat very much. In the spring I felt as if I had all the care and anxiety of America on my mind. I got one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and after I had taken it I felt as if I could undertake

The President's Duties.

Last month I had a return of prickly heat; it seemed impossible to stand up or lie down without almost tearing myself to pieces. I then got one more bottle and it has not only cured the heat but I believe it put my blood in good condition. I advise all to take Hood's Sarsaparilla in the spring and fall."

For Answer in the C. E. Meeting.

How far and why should Christians associate with drunkards?

How are intoxicating liquors tempting?

How can men so change their natures that there will be no attraction for them in these things?

What laws could be made that would to a great extent do away with the temptation to drink?

What gains has the temperance reform recently made in this country? in Europe?

What do you know about the work of Thomas E. Murphy?

What can you tell about the recent temperance campaign in England, under the leadership of Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and Mr. Woolley?

What is the especial good of "coffee-houses" and temperance lunch rooms?

What is to be thought of medicines for the cure of drunkenness?

What is drunkenness more than a physical disease?

What should we, as a society, be doing to promote temperance?

What counter-attractions should the church furnish, in opposition to the saloon?—Golden Rule.

Weekly Encouragements.

The Christiann Endeavor society connected with the church of the London Missionary Society at Berham-poor, India, has what are called "weekly encouragements, for one of the exercises of its weekly prayer meeting.

The name itself is significant, and is well worth transplanting to American soil. Under this heading are reported every reportable good deeds of the week. If any of the committees have met with special success, if they have developed any new methods of working, if any individuals have received the special blessing of God, they report these things with humility and thanksgiving in the ten minutes allotted to the "weekly encouragements."

We have long been convinced that there is a great source of power in the monthly reports of the different committees. In some societies this is an unused power. Every one of these reports may and should be a monthly encouragement.

If however, there is nothing encouraging to record, the report may at least be a monthly stimulator, for there is nothing more stimulating to future effort than a humble confession of failure and lack of effort. If we cannot have a weekly encouragement let us at least have a monthly stimulator.—Golden Rule.

Futility Illustrated.

Many a time a point can be quickly made by the use of an object-lesson, when without it words of explanation would need to be almost endlessly multiplied. A good instance is given in Harper's Magazine.

They were talking about futility, and, for some reason known only to each other, failed to agree finally she asked,

"Well now, suppose you give me an example of what you call futility?" "All right," said he. "Multiply 3946 by 721."

She took her little gold pencil in hand, seized a piece of paper, and after a few minutes of diligent figuring announced the result.

"Two million eight hundred and forty-five thousand and sixty-six," said she.

"Divide that by two," he continued. "One million four hundred and twenty-two thousand five hundred and thirty-three," she said.

"Very well," said he. "Now add seven to that, and then subtract 1,425,540, and tell me what you get."

"The result is zero," said she, after figuring a little more.

"Well, that's what I call futility," said he with a laugh. "You've covered a sheet of paper with figures to arrive at nothing."

Whereupon she became so angry that she refused to argue further on the subject.

If you are tired and never hungry, Hood's Sarsaparilla will make you feel strong and well, and give you a hearty appetite.

O dear young people, I would have you realize your tremendous responsibility. By the pressing need on every hand by the pitiable weakness of a slumbering worldly church in which are many who have only name that they've, and by the great opportunity which God has put before you, I beg see to it that the strong grasp of this Christian Endeavor Society is never loosed from the horns of God's altar; that everything that jars on the harmony of God's truth be excluded; that no guilty intrusion, no alien spirit or purpose, is allowed to bring its flag to the dust.—Rev. M. Rhodes, D. D.

What is a Wife?

The pretty school teacher, for a little advertisement, had asked her class for the best original definition of "wife," and the boy in the corner had promptly responded "a rib."

She looked at him reproachfully, and nodded to the boy with dreamy eyes, who seemed anxious to say something.

"Man's guiding star and guardian angel," he said in response to the nod.

"A helpmeet," put in a little flax-haired girl.

"One who soothes man in adversity," suggested a demure little girl.

"And spends his money when he's flush," added the incorrigible boy in the corner.

There was a lull, and the pretty dark-eyed girl said slowly:

"A wife is the envy of spinsters."

"One who makes a man hustle," was the next suggestion.

"And keeps him from making a fool of himself," put in another girl.

"Some one for a man to find fault with when things go wrong," said a sorrowful little maiden.

"Stop right here," said the pretty school teacher "That's the best definition."

Later the sorrowful little maiden sidled up to her and asked:

"Aren't you going to marry that handsome man who calls for you every day?"

"Yes, dear," she replied, "but with us nothing will ever go wrong. He says so himself."--Selected.

Worry.

Is there not a lingering belief in the minds of conscientious people that it is an occasional duty to worry? If brought to the bar of confession, most of us would probably have to own that, under certain circumstances, we feel anxiety to be incumbent on us. It is a sign that we are not bad-hearted, but sympathetic, if the woes of others cause us to lie awake at night; moreover, it shows great sedstbility, if we are gloomy over possible misfortunes to ourselves.

A little girl whose aunt had died, and who was herself too young to estimate the calamity, said, in after years, that she was greatly mortified at seeing others crying while she had no desire to shed a tear.

"Finally," she confessed. "I was so much ashamed at being so hard-hearted, that I got an onion and rubbed it on my eyes. Then I cried with the rest, and was quite happy."

"Why don't you go to sleep?" asked a school girl of an excitable room-mate at midnight.

"Oh, I can't," was the answer "I am so worried for fear my mother is ill."

"But she is fifty miles away, and it won't do her any good for you to lie awake."

"I can't help it; I should be ashamed in try to sleep while she may be awake suffering" was the natural reply.

Like the people who instinctively imitate an invalid who is coughing, under the impression that they are "helping him along," like the old lady who mercifully makes herself as light as she can in an overloaded carriage, we foolishly imagining that we can, in some mysterious way, help the suffering by refusing to be happy ourselves. Never was there a greater mistake.

When we can actually do something no sacrifice is too great to be made for the good of others; duty may justly demand of us both peace of mind and health of body. On the other hand, there are periods of inactivity through which we must live, seeing the struggles of those dear to us, and finding no chance to strike a blow in their defense. Then it is that duty demands: "Be cheerful and calm. Your turn will come, and until it does you have to keep yourself in good condition for action."--Youth's Companion.

Apples as Medicine.

Chemically, the apple is composed of vegetable fiber, albumen, sugar, gum, chlorophyle, malic acid, gallic acid, lime, and much water. Furthermore, the German analysts say that the apple contains a larger percentage of phosphorus than any other fruit or vegetable. The phosphorus is admirably adapted for renewing the essential nervous matter, lecithin, of the brain and spinal cord. It is, perhaps, for some reason rudely understood, that old Scandinavian traditions represent the apple as the food of the gods, who, when they felt themselves to be growing feeble and infirm, resorted to this fruit for renewing their powers of mind and body.

Also, the acids of the apple are of signal use for men of sedentary habits, whose livers are sluggish in action, those acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters, which, if retained would make the brain heavy and dull, or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other allied troubles. Some such an experience must have led to our custom of taking apple sauce with roast pork, rich goose, and like dishes.

The malic acid of ripe apples, either raw or cooked, will neutralize any excess of chalky matter engendered by eating too much meat. It is also the fact that such fresh fruits as the apple, the pear and the plum, when taken ripe and without sugar, diminish acidity in the stomach rather than provoke it. Their vegetable sauces and juices are converted into alkaline carbonates, which tend to counteract acidity.—Medical Eye.

"I Am So Tired"

Is a common exclamation at this season. There is a certain bracing effect in cold air which is lost when the weather grows warm; and when Nature is renewing her youth, her admirers feel dull, sluggish and tired. This condition is owing mainly to the impure condition of the blood, and its failure to supply healthy tissue to the various organs of the body. It is remarkable how susceptible the system is to the help to be derived from a good medicine at this season. Possessing just those purifying, building-up qualities which the body craves, Hood's Sarsaparilla soon overcomes that tired feeling, restores the appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, imparts vigorous health. Its thousands of friends as with one voice declare "It Makes the Weak Strong."

Moral Color-Blindness.

Not a few persons have received a genuine surprise on being told, after an examination, that they were affected with color-blindness. A much larger number might experience a far greater shock on learning that they are suffering from moral color-blindness.

The eye that fails to distinguish colors may be exceptionally good in judging of form, and unusually keen in detecting objects at a distance. The victim of color-blindness may even name colors so correctly that for a long time his defect escapes notice. So the person that is morally color-blind is frequently one distinguished for remarkable shrewdness and foresight; he is quite an oracle as to what is prudent in business and in good taste in social life. He names the virtues and vices as other people do, and his verdicts on conduct seem so generally to tally with the truth that his weakness is not suspected by others, and is entirely hidden from himself.

Yet the moral color-blindness goes to much greater length than does the ordinary trouble. Its radical evil is in a failure to distinguish black and white, a defect exceedingly rare in the physical eye. When the fault is betrayed, even in the slightest degree, in judgments on nice points, it is a sign of something deep-seated and serious, which will lead one to pronounce a lie white, and to call evil good and good evil. The revelation of its true nature may come, as the revelation of the other color-blindness has sometimes come, in some terrible wreck that means ruin to many others as well as to the one at fault.

Too much care in this matter cannot be exercised in regard to any one, whether in his own behalf or in behalf of those whose safety depends in large measure on his seeing things truly. There is a terrible danger in following a color-blind leader. There is one advantage and encouragement for the morally color-blind. The defect is not in their case organic; and, while it may develop with startling rapidity if neglected, it is possible to overcome it. Its detection, as well as its cure, depends on the most careful and constant testing by the trust standards and on hourly aid from the great Physician.

Notes From Harvard.

Harvard gets another donation. It was from a Boston man who died some time ago. In his will $150,000-00 is donated to Harvard with which to build a dormitory. It will be called Perkin's Hall—named for the benefactor and his ancestors who were graduates of this institution. Thus his name will be handed down to generations yet to come. "And departing leave behind them, Footprints on the sands of time" and so forth.

It is a mistaken idea to think that a man dies when the breath leaves his body and his earthly remains are laid in clay. In many instances it is then that they really begin to live right here on the earth. If a man is not his deeds, then what is he? The good men do live after them. Witness the apostles Peter and Paul and then Milton and Shakspeare and Washington and Jefferson and Calvin and John Wesley and the rest. These men are living in the world and doing something to and for the world today. They are not dead—no more than our civilization and our religion and our patriotism and our literature are dead. People may doubt about immortality in another world. They need not doubt about it in this. If men do anything for which they deserve to live they will live—they do live. And if they do not do anything for which they deserve to live, then—they will die, they do die. "The wages of sin is death."

If the argument from analogy is of any worth the student need no longer trouble himself about life, death and immortality. He can see all these as they are right here in this present world before his eyes. If he is troubled about whether men live and how men live in another world then let him scan the pages of history for a moment and see how they do live, and live on in this present world that we know about. God bless the great, good men who have so lived, as to make this age of ours such a rich inheritance.

Again Elon College is to be congratulated. Faculty, students, patrons and friends have a treat in store. Mark the prediction (and it neither akes a prophet nor the son of a prophet to make it.) The coming commencement will be a grand success. Dr. Maple and Lawyer Holland are to be there and that they will have something good to say to one doubt's Dr. Maple won many friends during his stay in the south a few year since and he will find many glad hearts and anxious listeners ready to extend him a cordial welcome back to the "Old North State." It will be well worth a trip to Elon to hear these two excellent speakers and we doubt not that many of our people will avail themselves of this opportunity, both of visiting the College and hearing some of their speeches.

And then Elon College has a graduating class that she need not be ashamed of. We doubt not that each and all of them will acquit themselves with merit, honor and dignity. We shall hope so at least and meanwhile entertain no fears along that line.

It is to be hoped that many of our people who have never visited Elon will do so at the coming commencement. Very few—if any at all—have ever visited Elon yet and returned home disappointed or unfriendly toward it. At least if any have they have not made it known. On the other hand the majority—if not all—of those who have visited the institution have returned home warm friends and enthusiastic supporters of the college and its work.

Let us hope this commencement will witness the biggest turnout of our people that has yet been seen at Elon. Go to Elon to commencement. You will enjoy yourself and never regret your time, trouble nor money spent therefore. At least that is our private opinion about it. If any doubt it, try it.

It is not out of fashion here to speak of the weather when one meets another. The fact is a beautiful day in Massachusetts is very considerably enjoyed any way. They know how to appreciate a good day here—when they have one—and all seem to enter into its life and joy and gladness. As one of the Profs remarked to me the other day. "We have no spring up here—it is a leap from winter into summer." A week ago overcoats were still worn. Today I have seen not a few straw hats, light suits, parasols, open street cars, and just out from my window here is a tree rapidly putting forth its leaves and the lawns are green and the flower gardens are radiant and the birds are nesting and in short summer seems to be here—such a change as I never saw before in a week. Resurrection, that is what it is. Everything is full of life now. Nature has been sleeping. She has woke up. It is strange that the wonders around us are ignored because they are of old recurrence. This is a beautiful world of ours and poorly does that mortal live whose eyes are not open to and whose heart is not aglow with the feelings of that transcendent beauty and life, a joy and comfort and pleasure, with which nature has so richly endowed and surrounded us. After nature wraps up her greatest wonders in "the most common and frequent occurrences of life" as we say. Take if you will some every day occurrence which a experience, analyze it for a moment and you find it full of wonders. Take if you will, sleep,—as nature above's spoken of as sleeping. The mere fact that we sleep away about one third of our earthly existence renders sleep the most common and ordinary of commonalities. Yet what wonders it involves! Think of it. The next door to death. Man gone within a moment from a state of consciousness to a state of unconsciousness and utter indifference as to what goes on around him. And then space and time are annihilated. At one moment—well you may be at sea, at the next on a mountain. You may be possibly on a house-top—or in Europe—or in the field or class room—with never a thought as to how you got there. More than this. You may commune with the dead. Friends that you know to have long since departed this life, you again live with them, talk to them and spend hours with them with never one thought that the friend had died. In short what is this sleep but the "death of each day's life"? Shakespeare realized this when he makes Macbeth say:

"Methought I heard a voice cry 'Sleep no more! Macbeth does murder sleep—the innocent sleep. Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care. The death of each day's life, sore labor's bath, Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course, Chief nourisher in life's feast." It is this witch sleeps the soul in sweet forgetfulness.

Troubles and cares and anxieties may toss the brain, but when once sleep gets control the troubled brain may fall in quiet repose and "luxuriate amid the splendors of a thousand palaces." And then from this the troubled mind may awake rested and refreshed and reinvigorated. (Is not here a faint picture of life and death and resurrection within the bounds of all our experiences, and put beyond the limits of all speculation?)

And so I say nature has been sleeping, and now with fresh life and vigor and energy and beauty and fragrance she comes to make our lives and hearts gladder and happier and more joyful. God has not left his world desolate, but he has filled it with wonder and beauty. And in every stretching landscape, in every blooming flower, in every note of bird, in every gurgling brook and in every ray of sunlight. He gives to you and to me a token of his love, an emblem of his life, and a picture of His greatness and His goodness and His beauty. Nature invites us to live with, rejoice with and be glad, in its richness, its harmony and its majesty.

THE PULPIT.

Every Man Writes His Own History.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

The judgment was set, and the books were opened. Daniel 7:10.

Daniel had a wonderful vision of God in the character of a Judge, and of the method of the judgment ver. 9-11. The Judge is infinitely wise, and just; therefore he can make no mistake, nor do any wrong to any one in his decision. The record of each man's life will be open before him. Rev. 20:11-12.

I. Each individual is living a life, and at the same time writing his autobiography.

Every man is conscious that he is living a life, but very few know that they are making a record of it. They imagine that the most of their life is known only to themselves, and that it will all fade away and never be known. This is a dreadful mistake, and all will realize it in the end.

The Bible teaches us that God will judge and reward all men according to their deeds. 2 Cor. 5:9-10; Matt. 12:36-37.

Such a judgment necessitates a record of every man's life, for without this there can be no such judgment. What arrangement has God made for the keeping of this record, and how will it be revealed? This is a great practical question. God has made the arrangement for the keeping of this record in our own souls, and we write it ourselves. The record is written on the tablet of the memory, and it is indelible. It can never be erased. We may not be able to recall the past at will, and it may seem to have faded from the memory; but it is there, and will be read in the day of judgment. There is a method of writing with invisible ink that cannot be seen; but expose it to a certain amount of heat, and it all comes out in bold characters that are easily read. Thus it is with the record of life written on the memory.

There are many facts in the history of man that confirm, and illustrate this truth. There is on record an account of an aged servant when delirious from disease repeating in Hebrew some of the Psalms of David. When in her right mind she could not speak or read a word of Hebrew, for she was ignorant of the language. Every one who heard her repeat the Psalms were astonished, and wondered how it could be; but the mystery was explained when it was learned that when only nine years of age she lived in the family of a Jewish Priest, and was always present at family worship, when he read the Hebrew Bible, and had never heard Hebrew at any other time. There is a well authenticated account of a lady whose mother died when she was only one year old. She was present, but soon after was taken from there; and did not see the place for twenty five years. She did not know then that she was near the place until she recognized the house in which her mother died, and recalled the circumstances of her death. Luke Short was converted when one hundred years old, by calling to mind the closing words of a sermon he heard Rev. Florel preach eighty-five years before. These facts show how the record of life is written on the tablet of memory, and its imperishable nature. Through ignorance of his mental and moral nature a man may not know that he is making such a record, but the time is coming when he will be made conscious of it; for he cannot escape from himself, nor from his accountability to God. Eccl. 12:13-14.

Men are often made to realize the terrible consequences it brings in the wrong done even in this life. There are many recorded facts in human experience that prove and illustrate this proposition. Men have committed great crimes with the idea that they could put it away from them and escape the consequences. True, they may avoid the outer consequences; but cannot escape from the effect upon their own souls. Judas betrayed his Master into the hands of his enemies, and they murdered him. There was no earthly power to call him to account for this awful crime, and he was in no danger from any court on earth; but he could not escape from his own conscience and it kindled the fire of remorse in his soul that burned so hot that he hanged himself. He thought by this means to escape from his torment, but in this he was mistaken; for death did not, and could not, still the voice of conscience. "He went to his own place."

The record that we are now writing of our lives will be read to us sooner or later. Sometimes something occurs that opens the book and we are compelled to read it here in this life. Some event of providence makes us realize the presence, holiness, and justice of God, and our accountability to him. This quickens conscience, awakens memory, and calls up the past. Joseph's brethren experienced this when a helpless lad they treated him in the most cruel manner, and went on for years in their sinful life untouched by their wickedness; but when they found themselves helpless in the power of the governor of Egypt, and did not know but death awaited them, the record of the past was opened and they trembled as they read it, conscience thundred guilt and condemnation in their ears. Their sins found them out.

Sometimes the events of providence recall the record of the good man's life, and it is pleasant reading to him. Job had this experience. He said, "Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." His review of the past was an inspiration and joy to him.

Sometimes the record of the past is opened to the mind of a man in the dying hour, and it brings joy or sorrow according to its nature. Just before Paul was led out to the block and ax of the executioner he wrote to his son Timothy, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." The record of the past was full of consolation and he could turn from it and look over into eternity with joy and rejoicing. "Thenceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give to me in that day."

The record of a sinful life is painful reading to a man in the hour of death. It awakens conscience and brings condemnation which fills the future with fearful forebodings of coming destruction. "Millions of money for an inch of time?" cried queen Elizabeth, the gifted but ambitious woman, as she lay on her death bed. Unhappy woman! reclining upon a silken couch—with ten thousand dresses in her wardrobe; a kingdom on which the sun never sets, at her feet—all now are valueless, and she shrieks in anguish, and she shrieks in vain, for a single "inch of time." She had lived three score and ten years in the enjoyment of all that the wealth and power of a kingdom could bring to her; but she had lived for the things of time, and eternity with its solemn realities had been crowded out of her mind. The review was sad and awful, and rent her soul with anguish.

The record of his life may not be read by a man here, and he may pass into eternity without any review; but the book will be opened in the judgment of the "great day," and he must meet the record he has made. John says, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

II. The writing of the history of our life on the tablet of memory is not a voluntary act. God has made the arrangement for the making of this record in our own nature, and it is done independent of our will. We have no choice in the matter, only to determine what the record shall be.

We may live a pure life of obedience to God, and thus make the record such as will bring peace and joy to the mind; or we may live a sinful life, and thus write a history that will fill the soul with unutterable anguish. This we may do, but the record must be made; and it will be a faithful history of our life. Thus we see that there are two things that we have no control over. 1. Our inner and outer life is written on the tablet of our memory, and can never be erased. 2. We must meet and answer for this record. There is no escape from this accountability. "God requireth that which is past." In view of this fact "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God."

The record of his life on earth will be a source of happiness to the Christian in heaven, for reading it in the light of eternity he will see and realize as he could not here the loving care and guiding hand of the infinite Father through all his journey here. This will warm his heart with increased love, and inspire his tongue with sweeter songs of praise and thanksgiving to God and the Lamb.

SELECTIONS.

The Value of Facts.

No creature seems to be without an enemy of some kind. However peaceful nature may appear to be on the surface, yet, as we look at it from one point of view, conflict would seem to run through it all. Of human life the same seems to be true, merely as regards the warfare of nations and the mad struggle of competition, but in the case of each individual.

It is easy to persuade ourselves that, were it not for this state of things, it would be easy to live rightly; that opposition from circumstances, from persons, explains most of our wrong-doing. But this very condition may be the reason why we have not departed further from the right "Who shall guard the guards?" was an old question; and the answer came, "The enemy." The security against destruction through relaxing watchfulness lies in the consciousness of danger near at hand. It is proverbial that persons that never are in good health often live longest, because they are compelled to take such good care of themselves. It is often remarked that it is well that political parties should be quite evenly balanced, in order that the thought of each may serve as a check on any unwise course on the part of the other. So the thought of those about one quick to note any departure from the right course, glad of an opportunity to sneer at one's inconsistency, may not seldom help to lessen the force of a temptation. The readiness with which persons will sometimes indulge in questionable pleasures when they are away from home, and think themselves free from criticism, will suggest the helpful restraint that is often thrown about us, by keen eyes and sharp tongues that we may fancy are only hindrances to our growth in grace. We may well pray not that we may be delivered from those that may seem to be enemies, but that we may be grateful for them, and so use them as to help them and ourselves.—Golden Rule.

Must and Won't.

A little boy once said to his mother, when he found himself getting into close quarters about something which disagreed over: "Don't make me do it, mamma; let me do it."

It is easier to do a thing when they will let us do it, than it is when they undertake to make us do it.

Little four-year-old Bud was playing with his older sister Ethel, when some plying was wanted from below.

"Bud, you go downstairs and get it."

The young man hesitated; and looked as if he was thinking.

"You might have said please."

But Bud you must. I am the mother, and I am the oldest."

The little chap straightened himself up, and stamped his little foot, and said: "Well, Ethel, if I must, I won't."

Bud had a great deal of human nature, and Ethel was slightly lacking in tact. If the older brothers and sisters will put on fewer airs, and less authority, they will get on much better managing their little brothers and sisters than they do when they try to show off their dignity. Patience and meekness, help much about managing little ones.—Industrial School Gen.

The "Ah Me" Brother.

The "Ah Me" brother is a preacher. As a rule he has attended the seminary at Louisville. He has heard another man say "ah me" who had the power of saving "ah me" with great effect. He brings the "ah me" in at the point where he thinks pathos would be good. But it ought to be known that because one man can say "ah me" with immense force and effect, it does not follow that sapless man in this large country can do the same thing. The "ah me" does not fit every mouth. It takes on an affected sound in the lips of some brethren who are good, but not great. It is a thing which the average, and those below the average ought to avoid. It adds nothing to the force of the speaker, and it is a wet blanket to the hearer. It makes a preacher shrivel up, and look like he was playing a pathetic part in a most unpathetic manner. It always gives the notion that the brother is putting on.

We are afflicted by the necessity of putting a brand on the "ah me" habit. It hurts us to speak about it. For years the "ah me" brother has been much aboard, and he has crossed our path at many points, and we have borne with him long enough. We can stand it no longer. He has "ah meed" around us until we must speak or faint. The thing must be stopped, and that at once.—The Baptist.

Persuasion, Not Force.

It is too late in the nineteenth century to undertake to force men to accept your opinions. You can't bring the other fellow to your side by calling him a fool or a knave, or both. You can't convert people to your way by doing around holding up your intellectual robes for fear your opinions will get soiled by contact with somebody else's opinions. Thank God, Christianity does not need to assume any such attitude. She rejoices in the light, but is not afraid to carry the light of her truth and purity into the densest darkness and defilement of sin.—Rev. F. Richardson, in Weston Methodist.

Once in the Bible.

A minister in North Carolina and another, and also a Bible teacher in Kentucky, have been puzzled over this query. "The word 'its' is found only once in the Bible—where?" They say: Will you please tell us where? We have failed to find it. It is not remarkable that a minister of experience should fail to find the answer to this query.

The word "its" is not found in the best concordances of the Bible, such as Cruden's and Youngs. Moreover, Worcester's large dictionary quotes the statement of Trench, "Through the whole of our authorized version of the Bible 'its' does not once occur. Although Worcester corrects an error of Trench in respect to the word 'its' by Shakespeare and Milton, he does not correct the statement in respect to the use of the word in the authorized version of the Bible

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary also says, "the possessive form, 'its,' is modern, being rarely found in Shakespeare and Milton, and not at all in King James' version of the Bible." The same statement is repeated in Webster's new International Dictionary, word for word. Dr. Angus, in his "Handbook of the English Tongue, also says: "its" is a recent form in English. It is seldom found in Shakespeare and never in sacred Scripture."

The statement of the revisers of the English Bible in their preface is more precise. They say: "It is well known that 'its' does not occur in the Bible of 1611, and it does not appear to have been introduced into any edition before 1660. But it is found 10 times in Shakespeare, and there is other evidence to show that at the time of the authorized version it was coming into use."

Now, if our North Carolina minister and other readers of the Bible will turn to Leviticus xxv. 5, they will find the following: "That which growth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap."

The word "its" is therefore found in the current version of our English Bible, notwithstanding the statement of Worcester, Webster and other authorities to the contrary. Moreover, the word appears in various editions, as those of the American Bible society, the Oxford and Cambridge Press issues, the Collins Bible, Eyre and Spottiswoode's, Bagster's and all the editions of family and pulpit Bibles consulted for this purpose.—Sunday School World.

The Way to Reform.

The best way of reforming an individual, soul or life is the best way to reform a nation. The one who simply resolves to abandon his faults makes slow progress. As fast as one vice is killed another grows. But when the love of Christ fills the soul, the vices are expelled and the man is saved.

So it is with politics. As long as we resolve simply to reform abuses, other abuses spring up. What we need is the introduction of religion, the fear of the Lord, the love of Christ, the Bible, into our politics. When these enter they will drive out the legion of devils that possess us, and our nation will be saved. Nothing will save us.—Christian Patriot.

Though the trifle does not chronicle his own vain words and wasted hours, they chronicle themselves. They find their indelible place in that book of remembrance with which human hand cannot tamper, and from which no being save One can blot them. They are noted in the memory of God.—Rev. G. Hamilton.

The Closing of the Gates.

The gates of the Columbian Exposition were closed on Sunday. Millions of Christian men and women read this statement in the daily papers Monday morning with a sigh of relief and an expression of satisfaction. The directors did right. They closed the gates in obedience to the will of the nation as enacted by Congress. They wanted to open the gates. They wanted the gate money. They believed it to be indispensable to the financial success of the Exposition.

There was strong local pressure in favor of opening. There was also a general demand for it from secularists and others who do not regard the day themselves, and condemn as fanatics all who do. The demand was made in various ways and supported by various reasons. The convenience of the workman was one of the most specious arguments; the moral needs of Chicago residents and visitors was another. If the Exposition were closed they would go to the saloons. Open the gates, was the cry, and give the poor laborer a chance; open the gates and save men from the saloon and the brothel.

But the gates have not been opened, the law has not been violated, the sentiment of the country has not been violated, the sentiment of the country has not been defied, and we apprehend no loss of privilege to the poor man. He will see the Fair, and he will see it without compelling his brothers on railroads, on the fair grounds and in other positions to work on the rest-day. So far as the saloons and brothels are concerned it is not the duty of the nation to police Chicago. There are State laws and city ordinances, and officers to enforce them. If such places are open on Sunday they are open in violation of law and ordinance. That is a shame to the municipal authorities. Let them do their duty. Let those who are stirred by the spectacle of open saloons appeal, not to the directors of the Exposition to violate the obligations of a contract, but to the Mayor of the city to do his duty and enforce the laws. This is the way for earnest men to prove their sincerity.

The directors did right, whatever their motive. They acted in accordance with law and with the real desire of the nation. They will be supported in this course; and in the end, if they adhere to it, they will find it the best and most profitable. If they should find a heavy debt the net result of the financial account, they will be in much better position to appeal to Congress for a generous appropriation than they would be if they should violate the condition on which they have received the Congressional appropriations. Disregard of that condition would be a poor recommendation to further favor.

We are glad that this great international Exposition, opened so auspiciously on American soil, advertises our fealty to a great Christian and social institution. We have no need to be ashamed of our weekly rest-day, whatever our foreign visitors may think. Let us show them how beneficent it is. Let them learn from us while we take warning from them. A Continental Sunday does not commend itself to us, and we do not want the managers of the Fair to place us in a wrong position.

The directors have done the right thing. We thank them for it, and we know the nation will be glad and grateful.—Independent Religion.

What is the office of religion if not to point out clearly the principles that ought to govern the conduct of men towards each other; to furnish a clear, decisive rule of right which shall guide men in all the relations of life—in the workshop, in the mart, in the forum and in the senate as well as in the church; to supply, as it were, a compass by which, amid the blasts of passion, the aberrations of greed and the delusions of a shortsighted expediency men may safely steer? What is the use of a religion that stands palsied and paltering in the face of the most momentous problems? What is the use of a religion that, whatever it may promise for the next world, can do nothing to prevent injustice in this? Early Christianity was not such a religion, else it would never have encountered the Roman persecutions, else it would never have swept the Roman world. The sceptical masters of Rome, tolerant of all gods, careless of what they deemed vulgar superstitions, were keenly sensitive to a doctrine based on equal rights; they feared instinctively a religion that inspired slave and proletarian with a new hope; that took for its central figure a crucified carpenter; that taught the equal fatherhood of God and the equal brotherhood of men; that looked for the speedy reign of justice, and that prayed, "Thy Kingdom come on earth!"—Exchange.

Golden Rule Meditation on Eternity.

Eternity is so long, so long, and so short is my time to prepare for it. If a million years formed but a letter of a volume, the universe could not store the books that eternity would write. Did one leaf on a tree hold the history of this world, all the forests of earth could not contain the history of eternity. Were the mighty universe annihilated but an atom in a million years, it would all be gone ere eternity had begun. When I think along the future to the uttermost stretch of imagination, I have but crossed the border line of eternity. Oh, eternity is so long, so long, and my time to prepare for it so short. Nay; but this time of preparation is also a part of eternity, and there is more of God in all the infinite reach of the ages than in this moment, nor if I should wait and watch forever could I find God more loving and more helpful than he is eager to be now. It is my distance from God that parts me from God's eternity, and makes the thought of it seem strange and terrible, as if it were not all around me now. What would that strangeness and terror become throughout an eternity of separation, if the very thought and expectation of eternity is rendered fearful by it? O draw me near to thyself, dear Father, now as I begin my never-ending course. I shudder to think how a slight deviation would be magnified by the prolongation of the ages. I rejoice as I think that steady faithfulness for but a little while will fix my line forever parallel to thy wise and loving designs. And so I bless thee that this time of preparations is so short, and that the peaceful, masterful eternity is unending.—Golden Rule.

Ram's Horn Blasts.

God loves a cheerful giver because giving is God-like.

Backsliding always begins on the day we neglect to pray.

The same wind that ruins the chaff cleans the wheat.

A mother's love is the same kind of love as God's love.

The most that any one can lose is to lose faith in God.

If you are praying for a revival don't do it on a back seat.

No man gets such great pay as the one who does God's work.

The religion of Christ never puts a long face on anybody.

No one can have joy to-day who is worrying about to-morrow.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—Ram's Horn.

For Girls.

If girls are brought up simply with the idea they must do nothing but look pretty and strive to be leader of fashion, then it would be far better for them when children to inhale the deadly miasma of the East, which blights only the body, than to be reared under such influences which will blight mind, body and soul and cause them to be a curse rather than a blessing.

The strongest tie on earth is the one that binds a child to its mother and the only way to keep this tie inviolate is to educate our girls to be practical, and teach them that their duty to God and themselves is not to plume their bodies with jewels and silks, and think only of the latest styles, but to learn to make home attractive, and to fit themselves for the sphere in which God has placed them.

The man who marries a "stylish lady" who unites his life with one who thinks only of her personal appearance and who stands before her mirror an hour every day trying to hide from the gaze of her sensual admirers the defects which God himself wrote on her face to show that she was frail and human, and of the earth, earthy and imperfect—yea, that man who marries the "lady" who has no God but fashion, no thought but style, and no aspiration but the admiration of other men,—such a man need not die to find a torment, for he finds it here, in his union with that heartless creature, who desecrates the hallowed office of marriage by assuming the sacred title of wife.—Selected.

If I Were You, My Dear.

I wouldn't turn my head to look after fine frocks or impertinent men. I wouldn't forget to sew the braid around the bottom of my skirt, or the button on my shoe.

I wouldn't conclude that every man who said something pleasant to me had fallen in love with me.

I wouldn't feel that I was an ill-treated personage because, though I could play pleasantly, my friend didn't count me a modern Mozart.

I would not, when I could have only one frock, choose a conspicuous one which would mark me as "the girl in the red plaid."

I would not, because I was tired and nervous, give snappy, ill-natured replies to questions asked me by those who really cared for me.

I would not get into the habit of speaking in a familiar way of the men I know: when you call them Tom, Dick and Harry they are apt to consider you as Kate, Nell or Molly.

I would not permit any girl friend to complain to me of her mother—it is like listening to blasphemy.—Ladies Home Journal.

The Growth of Militarism.

If and one can tell us what good or useful end has been served by this gigantic naval parade in New York harbor last week, we should like to hear the explanation. For our part it seems a particularly expensive and otherwise objectionable piece of child's play. It is commonly supposed to have some connection with the Columbian celebration, but what has this great exhibit of killing machines in common with the spirit of a great civic festival? It may not be possible just yet to wholly dispense with killing machines, but why should they be pushed to the front as the proudest, most creditable results of our civilization? We deplore the New York exhibition as another alarming sign of the rate at which militarism, step by step with plutocracy, is coming to the front in this republic.—Belamy, in New Nation.

More Fact Than Fable.

Once there was a very wise and good man who went to a great city to preach righteousness; but the head men of the church "hated him without a cause," and sought his destruction. To gratify their animosity he was slain by the legal authorities. The record of his life says, "He came unto his own and his own received him not." But "the common people heard him gladly."

MORAL. This history repeats itself when the church officials mount the high stilts of ecclesiastical arrogance and become incapable of seeing an opportunity for spiritual advancement.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

A Mother.

There is no friend this side of heaven like a mother. She is the brightest light, the sweetest song, the dearest joy, the guiding angel of home. The guide and staff in all the angels of life's path, through all the dark waters we have to ford. And when mother is gone—when deep is her sleep, low her pillow of dust, every object in and around home will be hallowed by sacred memories of mother yea, a thousand magic tongues will softly, enchantingly whisper of by-gone days with mother. The saddle curtain of oblivion will never fall on the memory of mother—the coil of forgetfulness never wind it in its folds. Every echo of the past will be filled with melody and our heart will beat time with each ringing note each tender strain. Were it not for the one that rocked our cradle and softly hummed a lullaby while we slept in sweetness and purity, what would these be to soften and to kindle? Sometime we'll pause at a grave, and it may be no monument of elaborate design will be there—it may be only a stone capping will border it, and vines will be creeping inside—a rose-bush showering its petals on the head, but that grave will be the prettiest, dearest grave. It will be the mother's grave. While we stand around that sacred mound with tear bedimmed eyes, something will weigh so heavily on the heart and will feel there are no flowers to cull, and that all the beauty of earth is gone out, and all is lost. But the sweet thought of meeting mother again in the best hereafter will steal to the heart like a twinkling gem and will wreath the future with fairest light.—By Eugenia, W. J. In N. C. Baptist.

Conduct in Church.

The congregation that built a church, built it and continue to regard it as the house of God. It is then, a place where the greatest respect and reverence are due. It does not matter whether you are a professed Christian, indifferent to religion or an avowed infidel. When you are in the house belonging to persons who regard it as the house of God, this respect is due. A person is bound by the laws of politeness to refrain from acting in your house in a way which you regard as improper. So you are bound to refrain from conduct regarded as improper in the house of others. It is not a question as to how much respect you have for religion. A polite man, a man of refined sentiments, will not scoff at or ridicule a neighbor's religious belief in that neighbor's house. While in church then, we should be respectful and reverent and attentive to the services, preserving the utmost silence, avoiding whispering, laughing, staring or making noise with the feet and hands. It is ill-mannered to be late at church. If one is unavoidably late it is better to take a seat as near the door as possible. But if not late, and the seat in the front are not occupied requires that a back seat shall not be taken. This rule is especially applied to the young people. It is the height of rudeness to turn around in your seat to gaze at any one or to look to see who is coming in. A person should never leave the church until the services are over except in some case of necessity. If books or fans are passed in church, let it be done quietly. If a stranger occupies your pew it is proper to provide him with a book. If there are no extra hymn books it shows politeness to offer to share yours with him. If you are visiting a church different in belief from your own or one for whose ceremony you have but little respect still pay the utmost respect to the services and conform respectfully to all the observances of the congregation, that is, sit, kneel, stand or rise as the congregation is accustomed to do. By all means never permit a contemptuous smile or remark to indicate that a religious observance strikes you odd or peculiar. While the minister is preaching never indicate a smile as trying to make fun of what he is saying, and I must say that last 1st Sunday the conduct in this church was very bad by some few persons always try to conduct your self in church the proper behavior. And when with the services are over there should be no haste or crowding toward the door, but the departure should be conducted quietly and orderly.

Churches ought not to be the places to which people go, to see and be seen. Quiet, and attention to proper behavior in church, are always marks of good breeding. Good manners are great helps in the work of life. The child who never learns anything at home will never know much, whether in science, morals or religion. Here he forms his habits—either habits of industry and virtue, and as the twig is bent the tree will grow. Their good conduct, like charity, must begin at home, train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. Therefore let us all of humble circumstances take courage and set to work at once to acquire knowledge of the laws and treatment of good conduct in church.

Always do good and you'll be blest,
And in heaven you'll forever rest

Washington Letter.

Essay read before the District Meeting No. 2 April 30, 1893, by Miss Florence Johnson.

"There was a time," said an aged minister who was discussing with several friends various changes he had noted in a long life, "when it was a common thing for ministers and prominent members of Christian churches to be known to indulge in the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage—moderately, of course, as a rule, and for that very reason their example was all the more dangerous. No young man deliberately followed the example of a common drunkard, while thousands are led astray because of the example set before them by respectable moderate drinkers, who pride themselves on being able to stop whenever they wish to do so. Too often, they find, when the effort is made, that it would be as easy for a man to stop a railway train traveling at full speed as it is for a man to throw off the alcohol habit after it has deadened his strength and will power, as it always does sooner or later for those who begin as moderate drinkers. I have always believed that it was more creditable, as well as beneficial to the public at large to reform a moderate drinker than a confirmed drunkard; my motto is, reform all the moderate drinkers of today, and tomorrow there will be no drunkards to reform, for so surely as the little shrub in time grows to be a mighty tree does the moderate drinker grow to be a drunkard.

"But I have wandered away from what I started to say about moderate drinking having once been more or less common in our churches and our pulpits. Today, thank God! the ministers and church members of our country are in the front rank of temperance workers teaching by example and precept the need of living a pure life, and showing the effects of the deadly poison that the use of alcohol in any form leaves in the moral and physical nature of man. Today, Christianity and temperance stand shoulder to shoulder in the front rank of the great army that is fighting the battles of moral reform, just as they should have always stood, and, as a rule, temperance is a necessary requirement for membership in all the churches. I do not believe in passing judgment upon my fellow men, but it is my earnest belief that while a man may, although it is usually under exceptional circumstances, be a good temperance man without being a Christian, it is doubtful, to my mind, whether a man can be a good Christian without being a temperance man; his life may otherwise be blameless, but his failure to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor casts a blemish over it all, even in the eyes of the worldliest of people."

The large building which was purchased by the Central Union Mission some months ago having been remodeled and fitted up for its work was thrown open to the public Monday evening, a reception being held by the corps of Mission workers from 8 to 11 o'clock. The good people of the city turned out in large numbers—the estimated attendance was between three and four thousand—to show their appreciation of the work of the mission, and the building was thoroughly inspected from top to bottom. Among its other appointments is a room fitted up for the entertainment of such traveling evangelists as may visit Washington from time to time. This room has already been properly christened "the prophets room."

"Young Women at Toledo."

The fourth International Convention of the Young Women's Christian Association of the United States and British Provinces convened at Toledo, Ohio, April 27-30, 1893.

The cordial welcome by the Y. W. C. A., the free street car tickets, the open churches, the earnest cooperation of city pastors, the beautiful palms and lilies donated to make even more attractive the First Congregational Church, the sweet singing of the Toledo men and women, and the free entertainment, are things that ever will make the two hundred seventeen delegates remember with pleasures the place where we held such a helpful convention.

Miss Price struck the key-note of the convention when, in the opening prayer she said, "Lord, help us to empty ourselves of self."

Mr. Hunt, of the Pastor's Union, in his word of welcome, told us to "look at the ecclesiastical changes that have made such a convention possible." He affirmed that "consecrated Christian womanhood is the moving force to our advancement."

Miss Price asked the prayers of all Christian people, and urged that whatsoever we did in the Convention be done "In His name." She said to the denominations, "We all love one Lord; we all serve one master." All through the Convention business and all, the prevailing idea was the saving power of Christ and sisterhood of woman of all classes and conditions.

Among the noted women present were:—Misses Price, Wilson, and Morris, Chicago; Mrs. C. K. Adams, Madison, Wis.; Mrs. Wm. Boyd, Kansas City; Miss Nettie Dunn, Hillsdale, Mich.; Miss Morse and Mrs. D. L. Wishard, New York city; Mrs. Harvey, Toronto, and state secretaries too numerous to mention, except Miss Hill of Toledo.

As ever the Y. W. C. A. gave us their best help. Our meeting would not have been so complete without the address "Neglected Rights Worth Contending For" by Rev. T. C. Hall, of Chicago, or the "Missionary Address" of Mr. L. D. Wishard, or the helpful "Bible hour" led by Prof. White, of Xenia, Ohio, or the song leader from Moody Institute—Mr. Charles Alexander.

The Y. W. C. A. now has 16 state, 53 city, and 247 college associations, but with money, women and prayer, we hope to have many more before the next biennial convention.

Trespass.

DEAR SUN.—In the CHRISTIAN SUN of April 20th I read an article on "forgiveness." The article was soul-stirring, and it takes just that to be a Christian. The article brings "this idea." If we are to forgive our enemies at all hazards, "What is to become of him if he does not confess his fault to his fellow man and ask to be forgiven." For instance, Bro. A. offends Bro. B. Bro. A. knows B. is offended, and that without cause. Can A. be saved without making confessions. We say no, for we find in Matthew 5 ch. 23 and 24 that Christ told his apostles, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." "What did Christ mean by this Scripture" did he mean that Bro. A. should make an open confession to B? before he could ever be saved? In our judgment he did. For he (Christ) said first be reconciled to thy brother. That means if we are seeking to be saved, we must settle all matters with our brother, before imploring God's blessing upon us. For in my judgment, no one can ever be happy in the love of Christ till he settles all matters with his brother. "What does Christ mean by saying, bring thy gift to the altar," it simply means the sins of the man brought to exchange for the love of Christ. Hear we find Christ gives love for sin, but not "then" till the man makes confessions to his brother. "Oh what a miserable thought, to think that men will die without asking his brother to forgive him." Every one that ever prayed for his sins to be forgiven, if he had offended his brother or committed any noted sin, his mind ran freshly back to it. And that is what Christ meant by the word "Rememberance." Many good wishes for the beloved SUN and its readers.

The N. C. and Va. S. S. Convention.

It seems to be a question whether we will have another session of the convention or not. Bro Foster has appealed to all who are interested in this work and especially to our ministers, to express their opinions, as yet few have done so. The convention at its last session evidently intended to hold another convention. Refer to the minutes on page 9 and we find the following "Convention adjourned to meet on Tuesday before the fourth Sunday in July 1893. Place to be fixed by the executive committee." If we do not hold another convention it means that the work along this line is abandoned. The only question for us to answer, is, can we afford to give up this line of work, and has the convention been a success or a failure? I don't that we can afford to give this work up, because all will agree that we can't get along successfully without the Sunday school. If this is so we can't get along without the S. S. convention, if it is calculated to advance our Sunday school work. Now let us see if it has been a failure. Refer to minutes and you will find that we have not held one single convention, that has been an absolute failure unless it was the first two, then I don't know anything about as no record has ever come into the hands of your secretary, and the last one was financially the best, more money having been paid in, and less expended, leaving a greater balance in the hands of the Treasurer. Our last conference recognized the Sunday school convention as an auxiliary to our church work. When it adopted the report of the committee on Sunday schools. Refer to the 4th clause of the report and it reads as follows. "We urge all our ministers to attend and take more interest in the Sunday school convention." Now I am sure that our ministers who were at conference and voted for the adoption of the report, are not going to fail to attend the next Sunday school convention, and have a full and complete report from all of the Sunday schools in their charge. With the aid of our ministers and all of our Sunday school workers we can accomplish much good in this branch of our church work. Now let us all make one more united effort and I think the next will be the most successful convention that we have had. It is in our power to make it so. Therefore let us do our duty as faithful servants of our great master, and no one will say in the future let us discontinue our Sunday school convention.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Shallow Ford.

I feel very much gratified to know that the church at Shallow Ford is taking on new life. Our congregations are now about double what they were at the beginning of this conference year. We have a large and flourishing Sunday school, superintended by Bro. L. L. Lassiter. We had a good attendance at conference yesterday. The deacons reported the church to be in a more healthy condition than it has been for some time.

We are doing all we can to raise the conference assessments; and expect to have them ready in due time. Bro Cyrus Micheal was elected deacon of the church yesterday and was ordained this morning. Rev. C. A. Boone was with us this morning, and after the sermon, he attended to the administration of the Lord's supper.

By a vote of the church yesterday, the writer was requested to say through the SUN, that shallow Ford is much in favor of continuing the Sunday school convention. We are opposed to any thing that would retard the progress of the Sunday school. We look out over this country of ours and we see a vast army advancing, and this army, composed of boys and girls, is going to take the world either for Christ or for Satan; an it depends almost entirely upon their religious training as to which they will take it for. The children that are now growing up in our homes the object of parents affections will either be a blessing to their parents, to the church and to their country; or they will be a curse to them.

We heard Mr. Blair, an officer of the state Sunday school convention, say in a lecture some weeks ago, that he had visited nearly every prison in the state of North Carolina and out of the hundreds of wretches that he found locked up in those prisons, he had only found two that said that they were brought up in the Sunday school. It seems to me that this should be a lesson for the church and for parents. Let us not only have the convention, but let us have more Sunday schools.

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—My communion meeting the 1st Sunday in this month was a very pleasant meeting and all seemed to enjoy the occasion and gave good attention to the sermon on the origin and importance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. I am now preaching a series of sermons every Sunday night to the unconverted and every Sunday night we have penitents and conversions. There is more life in the pulpit and the pews than has been since I have been here, for we have something to stimulate us seeing souls coming to Christ. Some of my members that had grown so discouraged and cold that they have not been to the church since I have been here until the last few meetings are now attending and becoming interested in the work of the church. Our congregations are better. But there is a Mission meeting been going on for three weeks not far from my church of considerable interest, that divides my congregation at the evening services.

Brethren and sisters pray for us that God may make us a light in this part of the city and a working church for the Master.

J. W. WELLONS.

May 15, 1893.

From Rev. H. H. Butler.

The 1st Saturday and Sunday in this month (May) I preached at Eure's church, Gates Co. N., C. On Saturday we had a good congregation, good attention to the word as it was preached from 2 Chron. 20:20 and the business of the church was transacted with much harmony, and I trust it will redound to the glory of God and to the building up of his kingdom at that place. I was delighted to meet at the Station, who went with me to the church, on Saturday morning, our Sunday School Missionary, Bro. Ira Connelly. Many thanks to Bro. Nat. Eure who so kindly sent Bro. Connelly and myself to Bro. J. R. Hinton's, near Sunbury, where we stayed Saturday night. Bro. Hinton has a most interesting family and they all are true to the church. God bless them all. On Sunday morning Bro. Connelly and myself were found very early at old Damascus church where we met many warm hearted friends engaged in the blessed work of the Sunday school I was very glad to meet with the earnest and intelligent superintendent Bro. Geo. Costen and hear him say, "that there was new life in the Sunday school" Bro. Costen has been true and faithful to the Sunday school at old Damascus. God bless him in all his work to do good. Bro. Connelly the Sunday School Missionary gave a very interesting talk to the congregation and I trust much good was done. All seemed to be much pleased with our missionary and desired him to remain with them as long as possible. The congregation was not very large, though we had good attention as the word was preached from John 14:2. Many thought it was good to be there. God bless them all at Damascus. After service Bro. Connelly and myself started for Eure's church where they were expecting the missionary and myself to preach for them at 3 o'clock p. m. We took dinner on the road. Sister J. R. Hinton, as we passed her home came out and handed us a box filled with just as good a dinner as you could wish. Many thanks to Sister Hinton for her kindness. We reached Eure's church about three o'clock and found a large congregation waiting to hear the word. The Sunday school was good and interesting. Bro. Connelly spoke well and no doubt made deep, and I trust, lasting impressions upon the minds of the people in reference to the work of the Sunday school. The word was preached to an attentive congregation. The day's work being over we went home with Bro. Henry Eure, where we spent the night very pleasantly and felt sorry that we had to leave on Monday morning. Would have been glad to have stayed over a few days, but duty was calling me elsewhere and I had to obey. Therefore, I had to leave Bro. Connelly in the hands of the Master to work up a greater interest in the Masters cause. Bro. Connelly is an earnest worker and no doubt will do great good in the field. Let us not forget to pray for this dear brother as he is traveling from place to place in the interest of our Sunday school work.

Union, N. C.

At the last appointment at this church there was preaching and Quarterly conference by the pastor on Saturday. The business of the church was transacted harmoniously, and the church work seems to be progressing finely. All members reported in good standing which speaks well for a church of such a large membership.

On Sunday there was preaching by Rev. W. S. Long, D. D, who preached one of his deep, logical sermons from 1 Cor. iv:17-18. The audience was large and attentive

Many were not able to find room in the church. Visitors were present from the surrounding country of other churches and denominations, from Burlington, Elon College, and Reidsville. After preaching the communion was administered to a large number of communicants by Dr. Long. This was a very impressive service and no doubt many reconsecrated themselves to the Master's service.

We had an intermission of one hour during which dinner was served on the ground and everybody present seemed to enjoy the luxuries that the good people of Union church know how to prepare for such an occasion.

Rev. G. R. Kendrick, A. M., of the Baptist church preached in the afternoon. His sermon was strong and forcible reasoning on the subject of "Life." The audience gave him their undivided attention. We trust that much good was accomplished by the services of the day. May this create an abiding enthusiasm among the church members that they may continue in this glorious work. We hope to have a continual growth in the Sunday school work and every church enterprise.

We made a number of pleasant calls while in the community and met many of the brethren, but it is our desire to visit all the homes and see all the members of the entire church.

A Few Things to Say as Well as Church News, Read My Brother.

DEAR BROS. CLEMENTS AND MOOD:—Perhaps you would like to have an item of news from my field of labor.

Through out the territory of my work the prospect for a fine crop of fruit and wheat is flattering, and the farmers seem to be encouraged, and an I do sincerely hope they will not fail to show their appreciation for these flattering prospect, by faithfulness in all good works, and by liberal returns to the treasury of the Lord. Yes dear brethren do not fail to bring into the store-house of the Lord your "Tithes," for I believe that much of your prosperity depends upon liberality to the Lord's cause. "Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure" etc. Believest thou this? If so act accordingly. Again God's Holy Word teaches us that our "withholding tends to poverty, and giving to riches. But I would not have you give, that you might become rich, but that you may glorify God and aid in advancing his blessed cause. Neither would I have you base your hopes for heaven simply on the fact that you give liberally, for that is only secondary.

The 3d Sunday of April I met my congregation at Damascus, the weather was fine, the congregation was good. It was communion, and the brethren and friends manifested quite an interest in the service. At night I preached for Rev. Bro. N. M. Watson at Chapel Hill, (the University of N. C.,) to a large congregation. Bro. W. is quite popular with the people of the Hill.

Fourth Sunday I exchanged pulpits with Rev. Bro. P. H. Fleming, he went to Mt. Auburn the place of his childhood and I have no doubt it was a pleasant occasion for him. I went to Long's Chapel for him, and there I found a good congregation, and by request preached them a sermon on the subject of missions. While in the community I spent the night with Bro. Clay King and family. His dear wife is very much concerned about our foreign mission enterprise, and is doing a good work for this cause in this congregation. I do hope that this woman's efforts will result in the organization of a woman's board on missions in the bounds of the southern convention. I think it is a shame upon us that this has not been done long ago. The world will raise the question, is it possible that the women of the Christian church have no interest in the great mission work? Do you know, my dear sisters, that for lack of a more active and practical interest on your part the Master's cause is held back? Will you suffer this any longer? Why is this? Is it because our sisters do not understand their responsibility? Is it because they are not intelligent enough to understand the work? Is it because they haven't religion enough? I think the true secret of the whole matter is, that we brethren have not taken hold of them and given the necessary amount of encouragement. Let us wake up, haven't we slept long enough? Awake thou that sleepest and come to the light and life before it is too late.

The 5th Sunday I was at Asheboro and preached morning and night. My congregations were large. Just before the service at night I ordained brethren E. A. Moffitt and W. A. Grimes to the office of deacon and after the sermon we administered the emblems of our Lord's body and precious blood to a number of communicants, and that number was surprisingly small, compared with the great number in attendance. The attention given to the entire service was good, and at this service we had the pleasure of having with us four ministers of the gospel, viz., Revs. Holmes of the M. E. and Cecil of the M. P. churches, and J. H. Wright and Dennis Stinson of the Deep River Christian Conference. In this meeting the union was sweet and blessed,

EDITORIAL NOTES.

One of the best friends the SUN has, is Sister A. P. Lewis of Albany, N. Y.

Be sure to read brethren Jones and Smith. They have more in store for you.

Rev. P. H. Fleming's wife and children are visiting relatives in the Virginia Valley.

Rev. D. F. Jones has gone to China as an independent missionary. May the Lord use him for great good.

Rev. James Maple, D. D., will spend the first Sunday in June with Dr. C. J. Jones, and his congregation in Norfolk, Va.

The SUN sympathizes with Rev. J. A. Whiteman in his misfortune in losing his left thumb and a part of one finger by a saw mill.

Rev. P. H. Fleming has bought a lot in Graham, N. C., and will build on it soon. So we are to have a preacher located in Graham.

Be sure to read the article on The Name Christian in this issue; and if you did not read the one in last week's paper, go look it up and do so. It will do you good.

Some one sends us an article from Duham, N. C., for publication; but we cannot tell what the name is, and cannot publish the article until we learn the name.

Bro. W. J. Payne of Ala. on renewing his subscription to the SUN speaks kind words. Many thanks. Kind words with the cash makes a hard worked editor feel good.

The three lines of reading regarding the essay of Miss Johnson was accidentally placed directly under the Washington Letter head, when it belongs under the head, "Conduct in Church."

Capt. P. H. Lee has the prayers and sympathizes of the SUN in his application. He had a partial stroke of paralysis a few days ago, but was doing well at last accounts. May the Lord cure him.

The corner stone of the Norfolk Memorial Christian Church will be laid May 26, 1893, with very imposing ceremonies.

We have the best Children's Day Programs on the market for sale at this office. Strickland's meets the wants of all. Single copy 5 cents; dozen copies 50 cents.

We marked quite a number of papers last week and this with a request to renew. We hope no one will pass this request by unnoticed; for it is of great importance to us and may be so to you. Let us hear from you.

The SUN acknowledges receipt of invitations to the Elon College, and the State Normal and Industrial School; the former to be on the 6th, 7th and 8th of June, and the latter to take place on the 23rd and 24th of May.

Always in correcting mailing lists, and in transferring names, some mistakes are sure to be made. So at any time, if your paper stops, without our notice of the same, write us immediately. Or if you find a mistake has been made, drop us a postal about it.

Many thanks to Prof. A. P. Fuquay for a nice club of subscribers sent from the district meeting of the Ga. & Ala. Conference. If all the districts would hold their meeting every fifth Sunday, and attend them what a power for good they might be made.

We take the following from the Independent, and would like to know if the deacon is the same one about whom Bro. Spillman wrote in the N. C. Baptist, who was engaged in the whiskey business; and if so, we think the church did right by excommunicating him, but it used the wrong charges:

"The Watchman considers our recent editorial on the excommunication of Deacon Cone from a Baptist church for offering bread and wine in communion to a Presbyterian brother, as 'very funny.' Perhaps we are deficient in humor; but it does not seem at all 'funny' to us. The contrary to rule, it was a very brotherly act, and it is sad to see an error on the side of Christian brotherliness made the ground of expulsion from a Church of Christ. When the disciples told Christ they had found men casting out devils in his name and forbade them, it did not seem at all 'funny' to the master. That Baptist church in Kentucky could have visited no severer punishment on Deacon Cone if he had denied the faith, or committed the most shocking immoralities. It is less and less 'funny' the more we think about it."

The Name Christian

We give below the second part of the chapter on name Christian as taken from the pen of Rev. W. W. Staley, as it appears in the little book, Five Cardinal Principles Defined.

They think that men have the right to choose a name for the society which they compose. They claim this as one of the rights of the church. In other words, they claim the right of all evangelical churches to adopt names expressive of their peculiar tenets and practices. They think that God has left this matter with the church. Those who claim the right of the church to name herself must deny that any name has been given by divine authority. Consistency requires this. This they do. The logical consequences of these principles are such as to lead into difficulty, when compared with the attitude of these men toward the Christians. They hold that men have the right to name the church, deny that any name is from heaven, and then deny the Christians the right to call themselves by that precious name. Are not the rights of all men in matters of religion the same? If the right of choice in the matter of name belongs to all other denominations, it belongs also to those who chose to call themselves Christians. The ages in their cumulative stores of wisdom and liberty are as open unto them as unto others. The same rights of personal choice belong to them that belong to other branches of the church. If God has not given a name for His church, and men have the right to choose a name, then those who call themselves Christians have the same right to do so, that others have to choose the names they respectively wear. This conclusion is inevitable from the premises of those who hold that the Christians have no right to this name, exclusive of all sect names. The Christians claim equality of rights in matters of religion, with all other denominations, but not superiority over them; and upon the principles which others have laid down they wear this one name, of right. If there was no other ground upon which to stand, the Christians would stand on an equality with all other evangelical denominations.

This name has the sanction of usage, history, and the scriptures.

Luther, in his celebrated Theses, uses the term Christian whenever he refers to the true children of God; and Tetzels, in his reply, begins every proposition recorded by Daubigni with that name. This shows that this name was important in their view, and had in it a significance pregnant with value to the church. It is dominant in the minds of all who truly comprehend the gospel as taught by Christ. But in the minds of many it is kept like conscience, under restraint. Many keep conscience in subjection to public sentiment or custom, and do not allow this moral sense to exercise its rights. They do the same in matters of Christian belief and thought. They allow purely church influences to smother their personal convictions in matters of religious thought. Such are not free. Now the gospel of Christ sets men free. It removes the darkness and reveals the truth that is to save men. It liberates the captive and sets the prisoner free "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." John 8:36 Bunyan calls his best character in his "Pilgrim's Progress," "Christian" Now Bunyan was a Baptist, and to have followed out his church affiliations he should have called his leading character "Baptist." But that would not answer his purpose. It would have circumscribed the usefulness of his great book. It would have robbed the book of its universal appreciation, and limited its sphere of doing good. But he laid aside sectarian bias and gave the hero of this famous allegory that title which clearly sets forth to men the deep, settled view of his own heart as to name, and the world has accepted the work of his pen. In every gospel sermon where men plead with men to turn from their sins unto God, the appeal from all evangelical pulpits, is to become "Christians." The invitation to become a Christian is invariably and without qualification made by gospel ministers in their appeals to the unconverted. It is only when men are urged to join the church, that denominational adjectives are used. Usage sanctions this name. It comes out like stars in the rifts of clouds, unconscious of itself, and revealing what is behind all sectarian titles. There is a common sense of things, all bathed in true religious life, that shows convictions covered by denominational restraints.

Suffolk Letter.

ASLEEP IN JESUS:—I was called to Ivor, Va., last Wednesday to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Charles N. Bradshaw. It was one of those bright days after a rain in May when nature's face is a bloom with beauty and aglow with life. But nature may be bright while hearts are under clouds. The community seems to feel the loss. The family was in sorrow and tears. The dear husband, with manly Christian faith, was trusting in Christ to sustain him and lead him through. Dear little Amy and an infant ten days old, did not realize that mother was gone to return no more. She was a sister of the wife of Rev. M. W. Butler who is pastor of the Christian church at Ivor where Mrs. Bradshaw held her membership. Many of her school-mates will remember her as Miss Marion H Brittle. When at the Suffolk Collegiate Institute she attended my Sunday school and church. She was a model lady and Christian. She was a devoted wife and mother. Her "Last Wish" written on the fly leaf of her Bible is touchingly sweet. The church was full. The sorrow was deep. But all felt that she had gone home to meet mother who went last year. We buried her at the old homestead and by the grave of Rev. Mills Barrett. From the grave I visited Mrs. M. B Barrett and Bro. Holt's family and then Bro. Butler. Mrs. Barrett is feeble, but glad to see friends. She waits the Father's will for health and grace.

Bro. Butler is getting on well in health and in his work for souls. His father-in-law was deeply grieved in the loss of his daughter and said it would not be long. Old people know what those feelings mean. "It won't be long" before the trials are over and the victory won. It won't be long till the grave is past and then rest at home. It won't be long till parting is ended and reunion brings old associations back enriched by endless joys

Capt. P. H. Lee, well known to many readers of the SUN has had a slight stroke of paralysis, but is, we hope, not seriously effected, and his friends hope that he may be himself soon.

Mrs. Wells has returned from a pleasant visit to Mrs. Hitch at Hamilton, N. C., and Mrs. Wells has returned from a visit to her daughter in Washington city. Both are well.

The entertainment given by Miss Florence Harvey's school last week for the benefit of pulpit fund netted $63.00 The children want to earn money to place pulpit furniture in the new church, and their parents furnish cream and cake to sell and to this they add a pleasant entertainment to which they sell tickets at 15 cents. If they succeed in raising money enough to carry out their purpose they will feel proud of what they have done.

I am glad to see that Burlington church is nearing completion and dedication. I congratulate Bro. Peel, for I know something of the load carried by a pastor who builds a new house. Ours is nearing completion also and daylight begins to appear.

The laying of the corner stone of the Norfolk church will be on May 26th, and a grand day is expected if the weather is favorable.

The S. S. Convention.

MR. EDITOR:—Surely a word just here relative to propriety of holding the next session of the convention cannot be out of place. Besides, being connected with the work of this body, I feel it my duty to say just a word. Shall we hold the next session of the convention? that is the question. Reader, what do you think about it? Have you expressed your opinion? If not, why not? Are you engaged in Sunday school work? If you are I'm sure you cannot object to the convention. If there is an organization that needs more thorough training along this line certainly it is the Sunday school. It is necessary that we meet together, exchange ideas, and formulate plans by which we may work more successfully. And especially is this needed in our church. Nearly all organizations of note, though far inferior to the Sunday school, have their conventions. Can we as a church afford to be behind in this respect. Those of us who attended the last convention realize what great good may result from these sessions by each one's doing his part. Now let us make the coming session one of great good. Let every Sunday school respond promptly to the calls. Let every one be represented in the delegation. Ministers, see to it that the Sunday schools of your churches do not neglect this important matter. Be sure that you do your duty along this line. Let those who are on committees have their work well done, throw your whole soul into the work and go to the convention with a determination to make yourself useful. If every one will do his part, we may be assured that the convention will be a success, every Sunday school represented will be benefitted, and we will do work next year of which we will be proud. Convention? Yes!

Respectfully,
S. M. SMITH.

Elon College, N. C.

Now for the Sunday School Convention.

By written vote of the officers of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention it has been decided to hold the Twelfth Annual Session of said Convention with Union Church, Alamance County, N. C., beginning Tuesday before the 4th Sunday in July, 1893. Union, Alamance, and Youngville, invited the Convention, and by a majority vote the invitation from Union was accepted. Now, brethren and sisters, let us have your prayerful co-operation and success will follow our efforts.

The following are the standing committees for 1893.

Executive Committee.—Officers of the Convention.

Committee on teaching.—Prof. Herbert Scholz, J. O. Atkinson, D. J. Mool.

Committee on best methods of conducting Sunday school.—Rev. C. C. Peel, Prof. E. L. Moffitt, I. W. Pritchard.

Committee on Sunday School Literature.—Rev. P. H. Fleming, S. M. Smith, J. U. Newman.

Committee on Sunday School Music.—J. H. Moring, W. A. Ellington, Miss Emma Harward.

Committee on Sunday School Missions.—Revs. J. W. Holt, J. S. Long, T. W. Strond.

Each committee is requested to present a written report.

All the officers of the Convention, and Superintendents of schools and Teachers of classes are earnestly requested to send such subjects as they would wish discussed in the Convention to the undersigned for the program; we also invite the ministers to forward questions for discussion relative both to church and Sunday school. Do not delay, but send in at once and as many as you wish.

Now brethren arrange your work so that you will be able to attend. Remember the time, Tuesday, July 18th, 1893.

Yours fraternally,

J. L. FOSTER,
Chairman.

Raleigh, N. C., May 16, 1893.

The E. Va. Sunday School Convention.

The twenty-fourth Annual session of the Eastern Va. Christian Sunday School Convention will be held at Antioch Church, Isle, of Wight Co., Va., beginning Wednesday July 18th, at which time every Sunday school in this convention should be represented.

Every Supt. should see that his school appoints and sends its delegates. We want this to be the best convention we have ever had, we want a full attendance. Last year three schools: Eures, New Lebanon and Union, Southampton, were marked blank. Now brethren, we do not want any school marked blank this year. Let the Supts. work for it. Let the pastors of the different churches encourage it. Let all put forth an extra effort to have every school represented. Our convention might be said to represent a large wheel, and this year, Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in July, Antioch will be the hub of that wheel. The other schools of the convention are so many spokes of that wheel. Christianity is the rim of that wheel. And if one school is not represented, one spoke is out of the wheel, and the rim (Christianity) is weakened right there. If we would grow, let every spoke be in its place and support its part of the rim, that the wheel may not be weakened at any point. Complete the wheel thus far and God will place His loving arms around it as a tire that will hold us snugly and firmly together, so the good work may roll on from generation to generation, and its fruits from time into eternity.

Please remember the time and place and the cause we represent

Elon College Notes.

Our good Bro. Clements was with us last week. We would be glad to see others like our Bro. who is fully enthused in every good work for the extending of knowledge and the up-building of our country. Come often and lend us all encouragement for the work before us. If you all cannot come to see us before, we want you to be very sure to be with us Commencement.

Mr George McCullers of Wake, spent Saturday night and Sunday with friends at the college. Bro. McCullers does not forget that there is such a place as Elon College. He always meets with a warm reception.

Quite a number of the faculty went to Union Ridge Sunday to attend the quarterly meeting at that place. Every one who has been there always looks forward with great pleasure to the 2nd Sunday in May. Those who go there not only to feast upon good temporal food, but they have a blessed opportunity of partaking of the spiritual food. We are told the attendance was large and the interest great.

Well, we did have that Sunday School Convention at St. Mark's Sunday. Mr. H. M. Thompson was elected President and Mr. S.M. Smith was made Secretary. A good programme was gotten up and each speaker took an interest in his subject, and endeavored to benefit the schools represented. There was a good crowd present and perhaps, a more attentive and appreciative audience was never assembled on a similar occasion. Dinner was provided for every person on the place, and if he did not get it, it was his own fault. In fact the exercises throughout the whole day passed off very pleasantly, and we trust that much good may grow out from the efforts put forth.

Rev. W. R. Coppige, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Graham, preached an excellent sermon Sunday evening, from the words recorded in John 3:14-15. Come again brother, for we are made stronger in the faith by listening to your words of exhortation and encouragement.

Very truly,
ELIJAH MOFFITT.

for there were ministers of three different denominations, elders, deacons and stewards; all sat together in this precious service; and I do not think Christ intended it to be any other way. Monday morning we left this busy town for High Point where we preached that night to a large congregation notwithstanding the rainfall late that evening. But I must stop just here and make a note by the wayside: As we passed Randleman, a manufacturing town, I saw twelve ministers of the gospel, of the Baptist church, get on the train for their homes. This I took as a sharp rebuke for they had been to a union and deacons meeting of their church, and when I could see the contrast between their love for the blessed Master's cause shown by their attention at this their union meeting and the love we show for His blessed cause by our attendance at our District Meetings, at best this will apply to a good many of our ministers and laymen) I felt it was a shame to us, I furthermore saw that we did not have enough love for His cause, as a people and now I am not astonished at their success and our failure. The very reason that some of our brethren take so little interest in our District Meetings is (and I say it without hesitation) for lack of love for our Lord's cause, and we need not expect our Master's cause to prosper in our hands till we have more love. Make heavier sacrifices and do more work for Him. Now these 12 ministers of God had to pay their R. R. expenses, and not one of them got off the train under 20 miles from Randleman and I learned that some of these ministers were poor men. I feel like the brand of shame ought to be written on somebody's brow. What is the matter? Well some of our number have turned aside to the farm, some to merchandise, some to the school-room. And it seems that these claims have a stronger hold on them, than the District Meetings, which is our dear Lord's cause. Come out from your farms, your store houses and school rooms, at least every 5th Sunday and Saturday before, and your farms will yield more, and the devonner will not come so often, and your store houses will be fuller, and discuss the importance of education, and you will have more pupils in your schools. Now am I right or wrong?

Yours affectionately in Christ,
P. T. KLAPP.

Burnt Cork

The entertainment idea in the church is pretty sure to be a vexed question before we get through with it. If the church is to be home, in the truest sense, it must provide for the social needs of its members, especially if it be a people's church, situated in a down-town location, and surrounded by multitudes of persons whose social life in boarding houses and tenements is anything but what it ought to be.

Religion casts no cloud over its possessor. It smiles and sings and laugh and huzzahs. There is no cowl about its head, no hobbles on its feet, no complaining in its tongue, no asceticism in its heart. It is here to beautify the world with its presence, and win the world by its cheery invitation and cordial welcome.

God is omnipotent, and, I suppose, has made everything in the universe; and yet there is one thing I know he did not make,—a groan. Sin did that. It is sin that has taken the color out of the cheek of humanity, and the music out of its voice. It is sin that has snatched away the rump from childhood, and made the old man wheezy and fretful and hard to get along with. If sin could be absolutely banished from the race, heaven on earth would be permanently established.

Now the church's business is to drive out sin by letting in Christ. When he enters the heart-room of mankind, the sun streams in through the windows, good cheer crosses the threshold, and happiness, bright of face, robust of frame, blithe of manner, irresistible in its enthusiasm, and unalloyed in its purity, sits at the hearthstone. Let the church, then, be the home of the parish.

But—yes, there should be a "but"—but don't carry your social ideas too far. The church ought not to be a club-house, where sanctified appetites enjoy some very unsanctified indulgences; or a gymnasium, where muscles are developed, while manhood is neglected; or a theatre, where a "drama" is put upon the boards, or a minstrel show displays its coarseness; or a variety parlor, where grotesqueness is the chief element in its social life. When the life of the church ranges itself on a level with the life of the world about it, it always suffers. It cannot compete in that field. The world laughs at its ludicrous attempts at imitation, and the better minds within its fold are pained at the deterioration.

Let the burnt cork be banished. Use the cork to bottle up and keep out of sight that effervescence that is sure to slop over; and let the fire go into a higher business than charring an innocent substance for the purpose of blackening a charming face. Until we feel like praying, "Lord, bless our burnt cork," let us see to it that our church entertainments be submitted to the test of the most exacting refinement.—Writer in the Golden Rule.

Alcohol as a Medicine.

The promiscuous plan of giving alcoholic stimulants is really, in a large degree, the force of habit and has no foundation in modern science or in good practice. It has survived from those days in which people took rum and applejack to keep out the cold; to keep out the heat; to help the appetite; to take the place of food; to wish health to a friend; to keep up the spirits; in fact to do anything that any one who liked its pleasant taste wished to imagine.

We do not mean by this to say that alcohol is not available as a medicine. We believe as such it has a very important although a narrow sphere in the hands of the skillful and conscientious practitioner. It may also be of service in other hands to meet sudden shock, where nothing else is at hand. But what we insist upon is that it is very rarely useful in sudden illness or pain, in the hands of the public to a degree that should give it preference over other remedies. Take, for instance, this matter of stimulation. It is as distinguished an authority as Professor Lander Brunton, of London, who tried the following experiment: He had a person who sipped a cup of hot water and afterward, at a proper interval, tried also the effect of a tablespoonful of brandy. In each case the sphygmograph was applied to the pulse at the wrist. It was found that the hot water increased the wave and rhythm of the pulse and so affected the heart beat as much as the brandy. The reviving effect of a teaspoonful of hot water, with a teaspoonful of sugar or six or eight drops of peppermint to give flavor, is very perceptible. This is really much of the value of catnip or other herb teas.

A good prescription, either in case of faintness or of pain is ten drops of spirits of camphor, ten drops of pepperic, ten drops of sweet spirits of niter and a half teaspoonful of baking soda in a tablespoonful of warm water. Ginger tea made by putting a half teaspoonful of ordinary powdered ginger in a half teaspoonful of warm water is a good stimulant. We doubt whether anything is gained in the interest of persons taken suddenly ill by suggesting a longer list of remedies. Position, cold to the head, stimulants to the nostrils, a mustard plaster, warmth to the feet, looseness of garments and one of the stimulants we have named, followed by a drink of warm peppermint water will do less harm and relieve more cases than will dependence on the liquor flask. We persist in not expelling it from the physicians' list of remedies, but as a medicine, as well as a drink, it has great abuse in the hands of promiscuous prescribers. While fully recognizing all that is necessary as to it, it surely behooves us to guard against excuses for its employment. All the more because in some of these cases of sudden illness the person and his habits are not known to us. New York Independent.

An important item of intelligence comes from Sussla in regard to a new outburst against the Jews, all the Jews in Poland having been ordered to move into the towns, which it is said, practically signifies their expulsion from Russia. This means a forced dispersion of people, compared with which the recent exodus from Russia proper is relatively insignificant. There are at present something like 1,500,000 Jews in Poland, or about four times the number affected by the Passover edicts of 1861 in Russia. They are of a somewhat better class as a whole than the Russian Jews, because they contain a much larger proportion of artisans and skilled workmen; but they have certain social characteristics, born of their peculiar environment, which render them even less welcome as immigrants than those we have already seen in exile. When this new Polish exodus gets fairly into motion the resources and patience of Christendom will be taxed as never before.—Christian Advocate.

A Discussion on the Support of the Ministry.

Good morning, Bro. Jones. I am glad to see you as I have been anxious to speak to you for some time. I suppose your pastor has left you all and gone into some other business?

Why, no, Bro. Smith. I have not heard anything about it, as the winter weather has been so rough, I have not been out but little so far; but I thought everything was going on all right at our church, where has he gone?

He has gone to the factory to try to get some employment. I heard.

Why did he leave the pulpit to go to some factory to get work?

Well, Bro. Jones, because his church would not support him. He is a good Christian man, has a family to care for and the Bible says: "He that provideth not for his household and family has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

Now Bro. Smith, I can only speak for our own local church, we always pay our pastor in the fall, provided he fills all his appointments, proves faithful, and does his full duty towards the church; and so I think he acted most too hasty in leaving us here in the middle of the conference year without a pastor. I am surprised at this, I am sorry I had not been out to hear him but few times as the winter weather has been so rough.

Bro. Jones, I see you are usually pretty close with your pastor. Do you know anything about his financial condition? And has he filled all his appointments this rough winter?

Well, Bro. Smith, It is true we ought to watch our pastor. I don't know whether he has filled all his appointments so far or not, the weather has been so rough I could not attend; but they say he missed at least one appointment during that big snow in Jan. and we require our pastor to be at the church whether we are there or not. It is true I live right near him and thought he had a plenty, you know preachers always get the cream of the crock any how, when they are visiting and they don't need much money.

Well, Bro. Jones, I fear there is reason for his leaving you all at this early season in the conference year. I heard he had a family to take care of, and that he gave his full time to the ministry.

Well, Bro. Smith, I grant he gives all his time to the ministry; but preaching is a very easy thing, and I think he is a little too high minded for an exemplary Christian minister, for I heard somebody say that they heard that he said on one occasion that he could wear patched clothes and eat bread and water, but to beg he was ashamed.

That is true Bro. Jones. I think that any pastor should be an exemplary Christian gentleman, and doubtless yours is but if he undertakes to preach money every time he goes into the pulpit I am sure he will soon render himself very unpopular, and it may be he feels too much Christian dignity to make his wants known, and reveal his necessity to the public congregations.

Now! Brother Smith, but it is not worth while to be mealy mouth about the matter, he has cast a reflection upon our church to leave us here alone in the middle of the year. There is somebody at fault, and it will come out some time and I don't think we are to blame, we have a good house for him to preach in, and could have paid him all we owed him and I am sure he need not have thought we were too poor to pay him his salary, for I could have paid him a few dollars, or given him a sack of flour, a barrel of corn, or a ham or two of meat at any time, for I always keep something lying by.

Ah, Bro. Jones, that is very true, it is a very sad reflection indeed upon your church for him to leave and I am sure there is a serious trouble some where. As to your innocency in the case, did you pay him anything, or did you give him any flour, corn, meat, or any thing at all? You said you could have done so.

No, Bro. Smith, I did not pay nor give him anything, but I see you are just like my wife about these preachers that come around here. I will say to you as I did to her: Is it any of my business to run around and see if he has money, bacon, corn, provisions and clothes? I will give my honest opinion in plain English. I feel that if he has a divine call to the ministry, that he should go forward in the discharge of his duty, leaving the result with God, and if he is faithful God will take care of him, "For no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

Bro. Jones, surely you could not expect him to live, take care of his family and meet all his appointments, as you demand without something to go on? You said you could have paid, but you did not, and thus your action was withholding all the good thing you had from your dear pastor, who was in need, and yet you demanded that he do his full duty, and you failed in almost every respect to do your duty in the least. Now as to being like unto your wife, I don't know about that, unless she believes in the "Golden rule," "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." I count it well that she is not like unto you. Certainly it is your duty to see after his temporal interest as he was so deeply interested in your spiritual welfare, and if some one does not look after his temporal interest what will become of him? How can he live without something to eat? and whose duty is it to supply him if not the members of his church. You all have employed him and you should not fail to pay him some all through the year. I am sure you do not treat your hands on your farm so. You pay them off monthly and if you don't pay them they will go where they can get pay, and I don't blame them for it. You have no right to demand his labor without pay. The Bible says, "The laborer is worthy of his hire," "Now concerning the collections of the saints, (the poor pastor) as I have given orders to the churches at Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him" 1 Cor. 16:2-3, and not wait till the close of the year before you pay your pastor any thing. You say you always do provide, however he is a very faithful servant both of God and you all. It seems that you question his call to the ministry. That is not a question of human consideration and criticism, it is alone between him and his God. "Judge not lest ye be judged with the same judgment," But my brother have you done your duty? God does not propose to do every thing for man. He only does what man cannot do. God does not give your pastor money, clothes, provisions and such like things, in one sense, except through the members of his church. The good Lord has lavished out upon you the good things of the gospel, and you are withholding every thing both from him and God's cause, so he had to leave the sacred desk, his calling, and all that was so dear to him in his profession, to make support for his family, all this was done by your churches failing to do their duty towards him. Cheer up Bro., don't look so melancholy. Where is your last year's pastor? Did you pay off all his salary? Did you want him to return this year?

Well, Bro. Smith, as to our last years pastor, why, he has gone into another field. No we did not pay off all his salary, we lacked a very little at least, I reckon, about, well, say, some $50 00 Oh, yes, we all wanted him to come back again, he is a mighty good man, a splendid preacher and stands high in our congregation, but there is one fault he has and that is he asked us too large a salary, and we thought he ought to curtail it some, and this he refused to do, saying it would take all he was getting to support his family, consequently he has gone up into the mountainous country where the people are rich and where he gets a larger salary, you know preachers will go for the big salary and the monied places. It seems to me they are preaching for the fleece and not for the flock any way.

Well, well, Bro. Jones, I am sorry to find your church in such a dilemma. The idea of your past $50 00 and the present year's pastor has been here 6 months and received but little, and has gone off to make a living elsewhere. How many members have you in your church? what did you promise your pastor last year? Are you a farmer, or what is your profession? You are very ready to censure your pastor for leaving and going where he could get enough to support his family. Would you not have done the same if your family were in want? Now as to preachers, preaching for the fleece and not for the flock, you ought to be very careful, you think others or preachers ought to walk a chalk line, but you do just as you please. Don't you work for a living for your family? Is there any thing wrong in paying a pastor the salary you promise to give him? Is it not your duty to pay it without murmuring?

Bro. Smith, It really seems to me that you are out of order. It is not last year's pastor that is giving us the trouble, it is the present, and we now have no pastor at all. But I will try to answer you as best I can; but I think we had better adjourn, as I am sure I ought to have been at home long ago looking after my business; but here you keep bringing me out on so many things that are really out of date. We have a very good church, we have some 150 members and we are out of debt. (I believe too some of the members did not pay off their assessments) and we have good homes, but we are rather financially weak as a church, but I want you to understand we are honest. Now as to the salary of last year. I heard some one say that the delegates promised him, $100 00 and that it should be paid off quarterly as he was a poor man, but I don't know whether they were authorized by the church or not, as I was not at the quarterly meeting when he was called, as I had paid $2 50 on our previous pastor's salary, (and he was one of the best men I ever saw) and there was yet due on his salary some $60 00 so I did not attend church, that day. Yes in part I am a farmer, that is, I have a very good farm, with good tenants on it, but I, that is, I myself sell goods; but come brother I am compelled to go to the store. I have lost at least two hours. Good day.

Good by.

Our Daughters.

The curse of our modern society is that our young women are taught that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, fiftieth, thousand thing in their life is to get somebody to take care of them. Instead of that, the first lesson should be how, under God, they may take care of themselves. The simple fact is that the majority of them have to take care of themselves, and that, too, after having, through the false notions of their parents, wasted the years in which they ought to have learned how successfully to maintain themselves. It is inhuman and cruel for any father or mother to pass their daughters into womanhood having given them no facility for earning their livelihood. Madame de Staël said: "It is not these writings that I am proud of, but the fact that I have facilities in five occupations, in any of which I could make a livelihood." We should teach our daughters that work of any kind, when necessary, is a credit and honor to them. It is a shame for a young woman belonging to a large family, to be inefficient when the mother and father toil their lives away for her support.

It is a shame for a daughter to be idle while her mother toils at her washtub. It is as honorable to sweep the house, make beds, or trim hat, as it is to play the piano, twist a watch-chain or embroider a slipper. — Select ed.

The Interior recently offered a prize for the best paragraph of a hundred words by a woman about women. Mrs. Alice E. Wells of Princeton, Kansas, won the prize over many competitors by writing the following: "Given a mind to cultivate, a heart to watch, a home to keep, a husband to love and obey (?), a boy with an immortal soul to train, a social circle to influence, a country to keep trace of, a world to be interested in, the coming of Christ's kingdom on earth to labor for, and a knowledge of God to acquire; given also, an appreciative sense of these blessings and of the responsibility of the situation; required, by her God, to account for the success or failure of her life word: Query, Where is the limit to woman's sphere of action?"

Says the Watchman: "Real prayer for others, of course, means much more than the formal mention of their names in our petitions. It implies that we envelope them in our interest and sympathy and love. When our Saviour tells us to pray for those who despitefully use us and persecute us, He is telling us to cultivate toward such the spirit which is the exact opposite to that which their conduct toward us would naturally excite in us.

Procrastination, speaking of the salvation of the soul, is a fatal arrow in the devil's quiver.—Rev. E. C. Sell.

Pygmies From Africa.

Two Akka girls, who were rescued from Arab capturers by Dr. Stuhlmann and his companions, have been brought to Europe, and will remain in Germany for some months. In the summer they will be taken back to Africa, where they will be placed in some mission house, or otherwise provided for. They are supposed to be between seventeen and twenty years of age. A correspondent of the London Daily News, who saw them at Naples, says they are well proportioned, and as tall as a boy 8 years of age. Their behavior is "infantile, wild, and shy, but without timidity." One of them was always cross, bending her head, and glaring from beneath frowning brows while the other often laughed joyously, was pleased with beads bracelets and other trinkets given to her, and expressed by a queer sniff of her flat nose her appreciation of some chocolate boudons. After making "a capital dinner on rice and meat," they greatly enjoyed the sunshine in a pretty garden, where they gradually grew more confident, and finally allowed themselves to be photographed arm in arm with the little son of their hostess. "The coquettish one shook with laughter, and seemed to guess that a process was going on flattering to her vanity, while the cross one still looked gloomy and suspicious. They showed neither wonder nor admiration of the people and things around them in the artistically furnished house and tasteful garden. Their eyes, though large and lustrous, have less expression than the eyes of a monkey." These interesting representatives of one of the pygmy races of the world are to be presented to various scientific societies in Berlin.

They were in a prohibition state at the time. "What will you take?" remarked the governor of South Carolina to the governor of North Carolina.

"I think I'll take the train for home," replied the governor of North Carolina, and the governor of South Carolina joined him.

No Escape From the World's Fair.

One of the most remarkable things about the great Columbian Exposition is the thorough way in which it has been published abroad—and at home, too, for that matter. In the April Lippincott's William Ingleheart gives an amusing incident illustrating this.

A short time ago, some two hundred general passenger agents, representing nearly all the railroads in the United States, Mexico, and Canada, were in Chicago, and went to see the World's Fair grounds. Naturally enough, the talk on the return trip to the city was devoted largely to Exposition matters. Various marvels they had seen were discussed, until a Boston man broke in with an ejaculation. "You think you know something about this," he said, "but the biggest thing about the whole show is the way it has been heralded abroad. I spent last winter in Europe, and wore myself out trying to dodge questions about the World's Fair. I saw pictures of these buildings until my dreams were highly-colored lithographs; I fled from Paris to Berlin, from Berlin to Rome, and from Rome to Athens, and I'll pay my fare home if I could find a hotel on the continent that didn't have some sort of World's Fair picture hung up where everybody had to see it.

"When I took my summer outing, I went to Japan, and the pictures still haunted me. I left the railroads and traveled four days in a jinrikisha to get where I couldn't be reminded of the Fair. Finally, I struck I a great pottery, clear away from any regular line of travel, and the very first thing the superintendent showed me was a big exhibition at the World's Fair That beat me. I resigned myself to it, and concluded to Chicago the first chance I had, and face it I want to say right here that the world never saw anything like it, and I'd bet dollars that if Nansen ever drifts up against the north pole, he'll find a World's Fair lithograph tacked on it right in plain view."

"Only a Little Smutty"—Beware.

Beware of that man who is always ready to tell you a joke that is "only a little smutty." It is an unfailling index to a bad character. If you indulge him once you will find that he has plenty of the same sort, and many more blacker than midnight. A little humor, occasionally, is enjoyed by the wisest and best of men, and is allowable in all; but obscenity, any thing offensive to purity or delicacy, never!

Beware, not only of the man who indulges this sin but of first excusing and then falling in! Looking back today over the track of many years, this editor finds much of the way strewn with the wrecks of such characters. Beware!—Southwestern Christian Herald.

Death to Potato Bugs.

A gentleman of this city, who had considerable experience with the various ways of exterminating the Colorado potato bug, says the following is the best and cheapest way to dispose of them: To a peck of finely sifted wool ashes and about two heaping tablespoonfuls of Paris Green and mix thoroughly. Put about a quart of the above mixture at a time in an old flour sifter and walk along the rows of plants, gently shaking the sieve over the rows as you go so that a light shower of the mixture may fall on the plants.

When so treated, vines which were previously infested with thousands, scarcely show a single bug the next day. A second application within a week may be needed to dispose of such as may afterwards hatch out. This plan is cheap and as good as any. —Charlotte Observer

The Sin of Mammuring.

Mammuring is a species of blasphemy. You are in the Lord's guest chamber. You sit at his table. If you complain of the fare, you insult him on whose bounty you live. If you doubt whether you will be taken care of, you impugn the truthfulness and love of Him who declares that he is more willing to give good things to them that ask him than parents are to give bread to their children. Mark Guy Pearse says: "God does not pitch men into the world haphazard; don't cry out so much against your circumstances, it is half blasphemy; what you have to do is to find Christ. He will be a match for your circumstances." If we had eyes and hearts of faith, we would see that whatever he gives is best for us.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

VOLUME XLVI

RALEIGH, N. C., THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1893.

NUMBER 21.

The Christian Sun.

The Organ of the General Convention of the Christian Church.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES.

1. The Lord Jesus is the only Head of the church.
2. The name Christian, to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names.
3. The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the old and New Testaments, sufficient evidence of faith and practice.
4. Christian character, or vital piety, the only test of fellowship or membership.
5. The right of private judgment, and the liberty of conscience, the privilege and duty of all.

Light Wanted.

Dear Bro. Garrett, your articles have placed me in a quandary. Now you know I am superintendent of the Raleigh Sunday school, and have two women teachers. I understand you to assert that this is wrong—contrary to Paul's teaching—and I am not scholar enough to be able to tell what is right. My lady helpers teach, and Paul says: "I suffer not a woman to teach"—1 Tim 2-12. There are no men in the school who will take the classes. What can I do? I do not want to continue to sin before God and man. It is true you have been writing about preaching, but I find only that she is commanded not to "teach" and not to "speak" in the references you give. This has come to be a serious thing to me, and I appeal to you for relief.

D. J. Mood.

Giving in the Sunday School.

Christian benevolence is a living subject. Much has been written on it, and the writer would like to add a few words on how to train our Sunday school children to give.

Teach the spirit of giving. This is the great need. One of the main reasons that so many Christians are not liberal givers is because they have not the spirit of giving. This can be taught to the child. His mind is plastic, on which impressions can easily be made. In the Sunday school, while they are young, the children should be shown that giving inspired by love is the spirit of Christianity. They should be taught how God gave his Son to save the world; how the child-friend Jesus left his heavenly home, and gave himself to be the world's saviour; how he was constantly giving, and became poor that we might become rich. Impress it upon the young minds that only as we have this loving spirit of giving can we fully obey Jesus, and carry on his work. Let them see the blessedness of giving, fill them with a desire to give, to help, and they will find the way to give, to assist.

Teach to give intelligently. After the child has been permeated with the spirit of giving, he should be taught to give intelligently. In many of our Sunday schools, where missionary offerings are made, were the classes asked the purpose of the offering, or to explain the organization to which the offering was to be given, they could not give a correct answer. How many classes in a Congregational Sunday-school can clearly explain what the American Board is? or in a Baptist Sunday school tell the work of the American Baptist Missionary Union? or in a Methodist Sunday school show the purpose of the Freedmen Aid Fund? And so concerning the benevolent organization of any of our churches. The children are ignorant of these organizations; they grow up ignorant, and there is a great need of education concerning the missionary work of churches. The various "days," as "Children's Day," "Mission Day," "Bible Day," etc., are not sufficient. The children go through the program, give their pennies, while but few could afterward tell where their money had gone.

The only way to know of our denominational organizations is by thorough study of their aim and work. This can be done by occasionally appointing a Sunday for the study of some one of the various benevolent organizations. I would set apart one Sunday of a quarter for the study of the benevolent work of the church; not to take a collection, but to study the organization, its work, and its field. It will be time well spent. It will increase the child's interest in practical work. He will see Christianity at work. He will become interested, and will know what use is being made of his money. Having the spirit of giving in their hearts, and knowing where their money will be used, the children will give cheerfully and willingly. Nor will it harm the older ones to make such a study. They will soon find that there is something for them to learn; and they, knowing more of the work of the churches, benevolent agencies will themselves become ready and willing givers.

The children should be taught to give systematically. This can hardly be done by merely teaching that the child should give a portion, or to lay by something regularly the first day of the week. These principles should be taught, but a child with no income could not, while young, carry out these principles. Yet the children can be taught to give regularly by having fixed times for them to give. "Bible Day," "Children's Day," "Harvest Home Day," "Foreign Missions Day," etc., should be observed. Let it be a fixed time. Let the children know of its coming. Let them be prepared to give, and in this way they will be giving regularly, and soon it will become a habit, and almost unconsciously they are giving systematically.

In this way we are teaching the grace of giving at the right time—in childhood. And by actual practice they are being trained, for a child will learn more by practice than in any other way. Dr. Trumbull tells, in his "Yale Lectures on the Sunday-school," of the native Hawaiian mother's bringing their infants to the church contribution-box, and practicing them in giving. "The mother would put a piece of money into her child's hand. With the instinct of nature—not of grace—the little fingers would close tightly over the money, and hold it fast. Then the mother would take the child's arm by the wrist, and hold the little hand over the contribution-box, and with gentle firmness would shake the hand until its grasp on the money was loosened, and the coin dropped into the box. The mother's loving smile and words of approval were the child's reward for its submissiveness; and the frequent repetition of this process brought the child to a certain enjoyment of winning his mother's commendation. . . . Thus it was that, before the child was able to go alone, he was in the habit of bearing a part in missionary giving; and by the whole course of his training, of which this was a portion, he found the blessedness of being a giver in behalf of the Lord's cause." So in the Sunday-school by teaching the children the duty and blessedness of giving, by showing how to give intelligently, and an opportunity being given to contribute regularly to definite objects, our children will be trained by practice to give, and to give rightly.

Above all, the superintendent and teachers must be imbued with the giving spirit. Non-giving officers will not make a giving school. A selfish teacher cannot teach unselfishness. A superintendent who has no love for missions will not be able to stir up a genuine enthusiasm for carrying the gospel to all nations. In Sunday school work as in all work it is true, like teachers like scholars. The officers, teachers, and superintendent be entirely consecrated to their work; let them realize the responsibility that is upon them to train the children to give themselves and their means to the Master's work; let the principles outlined in this paper be followed, and we believe our children will be giving children, and the churches of the future will be true churches, the members truly interested in the Lord's work, and giving cheerfully of their means for doing that work.—S. God denies a Christian nothing but with a design to give him something better.—Cecil.

POETRY.

Only a Little.

Only a little. It is not much.
She stopped and laid her hand
On the heavy basket, "You are tired;
Let me help you across the strand"
And the woman looked in wonder
At the delicate, fair young girl,
Who, in spite of sneer, and cruel jeer,
Helped her through crowd and whirl.

Only a little. She might be Discouraged in the attempt.
She knew not what a brightness
Her little deed had lent
To a heart that was very bitter
From neglect and scorn and pain,
Whose life was so bare that she did not care
If she never smiled again.

A little! But the woman thought,
As she went her weary way,
That the world had yet some brightness,
As the loving words that day,
From a heart so like its Master's
Would come to her memory again,
And lighten the load and cheer the road
And lessen the power of sin

The Silence of Life.

Neither a song nor a sign,
Neither laughter nor tears:
Calmly the days go by,
And make, ere we know, the years.

How shall we count the time
That has nothing to mark its flight,
That is not sad nor sublime,
That is scarcely dark or light?

What are the years that thus Silently steal away?
What can they do for us
That word should bid them stay?

O better than strife or noise,
Better than stir and rush,
Better than pains and joys,
Sometimes, is the shade and hush.

For the weary amid the fight,
And the weak amid the strong,
It is good to come from the light,
And away from the gladdest song.

For silence means the rest,
And the quiet means the prayer,
And the weary and oppressed
May cast away their care,

And lie at the feet of God
In the peace and repose, till at length,
As flowers spring up from the sod,
To the soul come joy and strength.

THE PULPIT.

Endeavor Shadows.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

They brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing might overshadow some of them. Acts 5:15.

One of the grandest religious movements of the day is the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It is the outgrowth and incarnation of the spirit of Christ, for no other spirit that has ever moved men could have produced such a result. The objects of earthly ambition that move men all lead to widely different results. This movement has come out of love, and has the noblest of all objects in view—the salvation of sinners. The name of this society is expressive of its spirit and object—"Christian Endeavor." It is Christian in its nature and object. The word endeavor comes from a French word that means to owe or be indebted, and hence it primarily signifies duty, from the sense of binding, pressure, urgency. Hence our popular phrase. "I will do my endeavor;" make my best effort to attain the object in view. The society of Christian Endeavor is an organized effort for the salvation of sinners, and the development of Christian life in the church.

Each individual has an unconscious influence in society for good or evil. This is not a matter of choice. It grows out of the relation that we sustain to each other, and we cannot help it. We can determine what an influence shall be; whether it shall be good or evil. The apostles were a great power for good in Jerusalem, and "many signs and wonders were wrought among the people" by them. Their influence and power was so great that "they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might fall on them." They thought that this would heal them, but there was no healing power in the shadow of Peter. The power to heal was in Christ who was with Peter. Without him he would have been powerless for good. Thus it is now. The spirit of Christ in the heart is what makes a man a redeeming power in the world. Then his shadow is healing. Saul of Tarsus was a blighting curse until he was converted, and baptized with the spirit of Christ. The first thing for a man to do is to secure his own salvation from the guilt and power of sin, and consecrate himself to the service of Christ. Then he can lead sinners to the cleansing fountain, but not till then. David understood this, and prayed, "create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." The sinner is not, and cannot be, prepared for Christian Endeavor work until he is a converted man, conversion is a change of mind and heart that leads to a change of life, and it is every man's duty to seek this change. It is a duty that he owes to himself, for his salvation and eternal destiny depends upon it. Then it is a duty that he owes to his fellow men that he may be able to help them out of their sinful life into a better and happier life. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Connected with this solemn fact there is another of tremendous import. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." We are responsible for the influence we exert over our fellow men, and must answer for it in the day of judgment.

"An English clergyman has told the story how one day he sought the spot where he was wont to meditate in his quiet church yard and was quickly lost in thought. The hours passed unnoticed until the sun went down, and he suddenly awoke from his reverie. He felt at once a chill shaking his frame. He could not tell whence with its cold embrace it had come to him, until he saw that dark upon the place of his rest had fallen the shadow of a yew tree, and then he seemed to hear a message.

"Listen! I will interpret to thee the yew tree voice. 'It throws its chill shade about thee to teach thee that everything casts a shadow. Thou, thyself, hast a shadow that must rest upon those about thee. One that may chill and darken everything beneath it. Thou castest the shadow of unconscious influence upon the spirit of thy fellows. Angels good and evil match it. Would'st thou know of what it is composed? Thy words, thy deeds, thy looks, the very expression that passes from thy face to another, these with thy omissions weave the shadow of unconscious influence.

This world is full of shadows. Some of them are like Peter's, are healing shadows. Some are baneful and full of poison. They poison the mind against God, and religion. What a poisonous shadow the infidel Ingersoll is casting upon the minds of the young men of our country, and how many he has cut loose from their moral moorings and sent adrift on the wild stormy sea of infidelity. What a sad and terrible fact, and what sorrow and anguish it will bring to many lost souls.

This world is full of shadows. Every thing casts a shadow. Every man, woman, and child casts a shadow healing or poisonous. Each has an influence, influence to lift up or to cast down, to smite or to heal. This is a terrible power, the power of influence. It clings to you, you cannot shake it off. It was born with you. It has grown with your growth, and strengthened with your strength. It speaks, it walks, it moves. It is powerful in every expression of the eye, in every tone of the voice, in every word, in every act. It cannot live to yourself alone. It must be either a light to enlighten, or a tempest to destroy. This is a necessity. It is a tremendous thought that as we walk through life we are casting a shadow that will help or ruin souls. This unconscious influence is felt at every step we take in life whether we will or not. We cannot help it, but we are responsible for the nature of the shadow we cast. There is no escape from this responsibility, and we must answer for it in the end.

The sphere of one man's influence may be, nay must, be larger than that of another. The capacity of one man for good or ill may be a thousand times greater than that of another, and the position a man occupies may increase or diminish his influence. How much good or ill a man may do cannot be told till the day of judgment. When the books are opened, and we are judged according to the things written in them then we will know just what we have done.

The influence that we exert is of a two fold character, that which is direct, active, positive and that which is indirect passive and unconscious. Men sometimes desire and work to do evil, to lead men into sin, like infidel lecturers, gamblers, and rum-sellers. Then there are those who have no desire to injure any one, or to lead men into the ways of evil. They think only of the gratification of their passions, and of the personal enjoyment of "the pleasures of sin;" but they are casting their shadow upon others, and it is poisonous. Men are just as responsible for their influence as for their direct and active work; but they do not realize this.

In one of the counties of Kansas, at the recent election, two candidates received exactly the same number of votes, and the election had to be determined by lot. The lot fell in favor of the Republican candidate. The membership of the Legislature is also so nearly equal that this one member suffices to give that party a majority in the House of Representatives, and a control in State legislation. And this flows from the act of some one voter, in giving or withholding his vote.

Our illustration is from the the political world: our application would be to the religious world. How often does it occur that one man's influence may turn the course of his neighbor's life, to heaven or to hell, and for eternity! How often may it turn out that the efforts of some one of us may cause success or failure to follow some precious church enterprise!

Did the absent voters in Kansas argue with themselves that their votes were unimportant? The event proved the reverse to be true. In the matter of salvation, results will not all be known till the last day. May we all so work that on that day we may give account of our stewardships with joy!

No man can tell how far his influence will reach, nor all that it may do. A man may shout for joy or anger, and he thus sets the air around him in motion. The sound of his voice dies away in a moment, and is lost; but this is not the end of it. The effect of his voice on the air spreads until it reaches around the world, and every part of the atmosphere feels its effect. Thus it is with every expression of the face, every word, and action of our life. Our influence deepens and widens as the years roll on. Up in the Alleghenies there is a bubbling spring that sends forth a beautiful little stream that flows down the mountain side, and it gathers into its embrace other little streams. Thus it grows in depth and width until it makes the Ohio river. Such is our influence. It is ever increasing in width and power.

God in his wisdom has so arranged our relations in life that we all have our influence. This gives to every one a mission, and all can, if they will, do good in the world. Nothing was created in vain. Each atom of matter, each flower, each tree, each insect, bird and animal have a mission to fill. We may not be able to see what it is, but God knows. Thus each man and angel has a mission to fill, and the greatest works of earth have been done by individual, and not by the masses. Samson delivered the Hebrew nation from the oppressive hand of the Philistines, and Gideon freed them from the iron bondage of the Midianites when the whole nation lay in hopeless despair. David with his sling and stone slew the mighty warrior who defied all the armies of Israel, and put the hosts of their enemy to flight. Deborah, lone handed, waked up her people from their national lethargy, inspired them with new life, and led them to victory and freedom from the hand of Jabin king of Canaan. Luther, by his personal efforts, set in motion the mighty forces that revolutionized Europe, freed the church from the ignorance, superstition and bondage of Catholicism; and led the nations to a higher and grander civilization. John Wesley waked up all England from the sleep of spiritual death, and set in motion spiritual forces that are still felt in all parts of the earth, and among all nations. No one but God can measure the power of one consecrated soul for good. A Christian woman in Chicago invited a Sweden to go with her to church. There she heard the gospel preached, and was led to become a Christian. Her husband worked on a steamer that sailed the lakes. She led him to Christ, and went to work to save his fellow-workmen on the steamer. He succeeded in leading every soul on the vessel to Christ from the humblest sailor to the captain. This was the glorious result of personal work, and shows what one earnest Christian can do. This man's shadow, like Peter's was a healing one.

One of the most important and interesting features of the society of Christian endeavor is that it means personal work for souls, and it is through this that it has won its greatest achievements. This is what is most needed in saving men, and more can be won to Christ in this way than in any other. It is a glorious work, and the grandest in its results of all others. It was this that brought Christ down from heaven, for it he died; and in it he is still interested as is all heaven. There is nothing on earth so deeply interesting to the holy angels in heaven as the work of saving souls. And nothing increases the happiness and joy of heaven as the salvation of one soul. There is joy in heaven among the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth and is saved.

SELECTIONS.

What Our Troubles Mean.

It is common for us to regard our troubles as coming from an unfortunate combination of circumstances, or the ill-behavior of others, rather than to recognize them as sent of God, for our spiritual benefit. "As many as I love I reprove and chasten," was the message of our Lord to the Church at Laodicea. The troubles we are made to know, whatever the form in which they may come, are under God's control and are to fulfill his purposes. He may not answer our prayer for the removal of troubles as we desire, but he will undoubtedly give us grace to bear them. Paul's thorn in the flesh was not taken away, but there was an assurance richly fulfilled: "My grace is sufficient for thee."—Et

Semi-Profanity.

There is a habit too common, even among some professed Christians, of relating what another has said and repeating their positive expressions, and that, too, with such a gusto as to make the impression on some that they really enjoy it; and we fear they do, often, though satan keenly persuades them they are only repeating what somebody else said.

We regard it as a very pernicious and demoralizing practice, and especially when indulged in the presence of the wicked or the young

A father indulging in this habit is actually sowing the seeds of profanity in the minds of his children, which will spring up to pierce his own heart by and by. He may be charging it all to the evil associations of his boys, while in reality the recording angel has charged it to their father. O, think of it, ye thoughtless fathers! Are you prepared to meet that fearful record?

Such things are sometimes indulged in the presence of God's Ministers, and whether so intended or not, they always seem to say, "I have no respect either for you or your calling." Take no stock in the practice.—South-ern Christian Herald.

No Use

There is no use putting up the motto, "God bless our home," if the father is a rough old bear, and the spirit of discourtesy and rudeness is taught by the parents to the children, and by the older to the younger. There is no use putting up a motto "The Lord will provide" while the father is shiftless, the mother is shiftless, the boys refuse to work, and the girls busy themselves over gewgaws and finery. There is no use putting up the motto, "the greatest of these is charity," while the tongue of the backbiter wags in the family, and silly gossip is dispensed at the tea-table. There is no use placing up conspicuously the motto "The liberal things," while the money chinks in the pockets of "the head of the household," groaning to get out to see the light of day, and there are dollars and dimes for wines and tobacco and other luxuries, but positively not one cent for the church. In how many homes are these mottoes standing let us say banging—sarcasms, which serve only to point a jest and adorn a satire? The beauty of quiet lives, of trustful, freehanded, free-hearted, charitable lives is one of surpassing loveliness, and those lives shed their own incomparable fragrance and the world knows where to find them. And they shall remain fresh and fadeless when the colors of the pigment and the worsted and the floss have faded, and the very frames have rotted away in their joints.—Selected.

Yourself.

"Whoso knoweth himself," said Thomas a Kempis, "is lowly in his own eyes and delighteth not in the praises of men." And another saying by the same wise man may be quoted in connection with the first: "It is great wisdom and perfection to think nothing of ourselves, and to think always well and highly of others."

In these sayings is indicated a standard of which it may first be said that it is the same as that set up for our guidance in the Scriptures. It is said in the Proverbs, "It is not good to eat much honey; so for men to search their own glory is not glory." Said our Lord, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Paul said, "I say . . . to every man . . . not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think," etc. Also, "In lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves."

It is natural and not improper that men should desire the approval (in mind) of their fellows, but no desire we have is more easily and commonly developed to a discreditable and hurtful excess than this. Jeremy Taylor says in the "Holy Living" that some people are wont to inquire of others how they did a certain thing in order to extract from those others the statement that it was very well done, and so feed themselves on the praises of men, which often become the veriest flattery. More even than the approval of men we should desire the approval of God in the doing of what seems to be right and best; and as to the approval of men, surely it ought to be enough if their actions show that they are in accord with what we say and do. And we may be sure that it is no injury to us to esteem others as better than ourselves. Of all methods of self-exaltation that of speaking ill of others is the most ineffectual and miserable, and he who fears that by speaking well of others he is taking from his own standing and reputation lacks the first elements of true wisdom.

It should make us humble to consider our spirit and works in the light of the Master's. Our business is to follow the example he has set, but it is certain that we shall always fall very far short of it. Often we are tempted to think that we have done most excellently. Let us be careful. A celebrated artist, years ago, studied his art in Munich. One day he painted a head that was the admiration of the school. Highly elated, he hastened with his "strong study" to the Pinacotek and sought the room where hang many of Ruben's canvases. There he stood it on the floor under the brilliant works of the Flemish master. Amazement, disappointment, chagrin! His color, which seemed so fine before, now appeared dull and heavy. Crestfallen, he hastened away, a wiser man. Let none of us ever deem that we have done so well as to deserve praise.—Boston Star.

Christ Wounded.

W. B. HARRELL.

How strange that any one bearing the name of Christian, and also a member of the church, will allow himself to do that which is directly opposed to the sacredness and honor of the very name he professes to love and revere!

How strange that a Christian (?) will give his Lord and Master a cruel "stab in the back," by any unholy course of conduct whatever!

But this is done every time a professor of the religion of Jesus rents his store-house for the purpose of the degrading business of selling liquor. A whiskey shop is necessarily and always, a "den of evil." Profanity is there, daily and nightly, open-faced and unrebuked, either by the proprietor, or by the patrons of the place.

The name of our God is ever defiantly and unblushingly blasphemed in the so-called "saloon;" and the vilest jests of debauched obscenity are constantly belched forth from drunken lips that are enough to "turn the stomach" of the very devil himself. Such is the testimony of "reformers," and doubtless their testimony is true.

All this is known and more, too, to the man who owns the premises, and rents the same to the whiskey seller. He knows that his house is used for a most ungodly purpose. He was satisfied that it would be thus used before he consented, "for money," to put it to such use; and with his eyes open, he a CHRISTIAN (!) bargains, for a consideration, to suffer the devil's business to be carried on by one of his agents, in his house, and on his premises!!

The front door of entrance to such places, with the "slatted blinds" just inside; and the back door for Sunday visitors, and all law-breakers of every grade, both white and black, are all the same to this Christian owner of the "Saloon." It is all known to him. He knew it would be so, from the very nature of the business, and the character of the man who wanted to sell whiskey in his house. But the money, oh, there's the trouble, the money that is in it, led the Christian to smother his conscience, shame his brethren, and disgrace his holy profession, by renting his house to a grog-seller.

Christ Jesus the Lord, came to "destroy" the works of the devil; but John Doe, the church member, rents his store to Richard Roe, the blasphemer, to promote "the works of the devil" in our midst, by a business that makes other blasphemers and drunkards, thus continuing the race of the lowest and vilest people on earth.

Is not Christ wounded and betrayed by such so-called Christians? Wounded by one who professes to be his friend! How sad!

Oh, may that blessed Savior who turned his pitying eye on Peter who denied him, turn his eye of pity on that brother (?) who rents his store-house for a grog-den! "For His mercy endureth forever."—Selected.

Olive-tree Christians.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

To an American on his first visit to Palestine no object is more suggestive of Bible scenes and story than the groves of olive trees. At the first sight of them there may be some disappointment at their moderate size, for they are about the average height of our apple trees, and also the pale and dusty color of their foliage. But when the wind ripples through the the branches, the uppermost leaves turn over and show a silvery hue. The bark is smooth and of ash color. Gnarled and twisted are the trunk and the boughs, but in a picturesque and shady style; like all solid things they grow slowly, and they last for centuries. The olive berries are gathered in November, and after that comes the gleaning; for in the Mosaic law it was commanded: "When thou beatest thine olive tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again." After the owners of the orchard had filled their presses, then the poor were permitted to come and glean the branches. And so while the rich man's presses were out with oil for the sanctuary, the poor man's table was cheered by the oil of gladness" with his simple dinner of herbs; and at night the olive lamp shed its brightness over his household.

A generous old tree it is, yielding its fruit to prince and priest and peasant for two or three hundred years. One generation cometh and another goeth; but its bounteous boughs still rain down the bright berries. Even when the tough old tree stands on a desolate stone wall it "brings oil out of the flinty rock," and pours down fatness amid surrounding dreariness and desolation. It presents a beautiful emblem of the fruit-bearing Christian; and is well worth studying in these days when worldly ambition and Mammon consume the strength of so many members of the churches. The most striking feature of the olive tree is its fixed and permanent habit of yielding fruit. Season after season—on the low alluvials or up on the rocky cliffs—the same bountiful crop comes in, prompt as a sunrise and always "on time." A follower of Jesus Christ who is habitually laborious in every good enterprise, who is always abounding in love deeds and sweet, gentle words of sympathy, and in ministrations of mercy at sick beds and in poverty cellars or attics, who distills true piety like holy oil into every day of his life, who drops his benign influences on the thickest and bleakest spots that misery ever cursed, who loves to do good and cannot help it, and would chafe himself to death if he were not allowed to do good—such a man answers to the Bible description that "his beauty is as the olive tree." He has a habit of loving Christ and loving his fellow men; not on special occasions, but all the while. It is his way. We can count on him; and we go to him for contribution of money, or of a timely prayer or speech in a prayer-meeting or a good service of any kind, just as confidently as we go to a Bartlett pear tree in its September abundance of golden fruit. This blessed fruitfulness is the Holy Spirit who dwelleth in him; he is always alive, because Jesus Christ liveth in his innermost soul and supplies the vital sap.

There is nothing mean or scanty in this man's religion. He never gives God or man short measure. He speaks out his convictions when cowards are dumb. Is a righteous cause unpopular? then he loves it all the more. To do an honest deed in times of financial stress and panic if it takes his last dollar, to put his shoulder to the wheel of slow going enterprises of benevolence, to give systematically to Christ's treasury even if it pinches his pocket, and to face stormy weather in his rounds of duty—all this is as much the spontaneous acting of his godly heart as it is for an olive tree to rattle down a revenue of ripe berries every autumn. And never does he pour down such a shower of the "fruits of the Spirit" as when the filial of God's providential discipline is beating hard on every bough.

Such Christians are well rooted. No part of a tree is so invisible as its roots. The condition of a tree commonly reports where its roots are and what they are doing. A dearth of life below ground soon means death above ground. The roots of our religious life are our secret motives and ruling affections. When we are shocked to discover the loose living and the spiritual barrenness of some church members it is because the branches of their profession only hang over on the church-side of the wall, while their roots are in bad soil of "the world" on the other side. There is no soul union to Christ; for he has declared that "except ye abide in Me ye can bear no fruit." Some professed Christians root down into covetousness, and there is no use in shaking their branches with any hope of filling even the smallest basket of benevolence. Others root down into secret sensualities and fleshly indulgences. A genuine olive-tree Christian draws the inspiration of his daily conduct from his deep down heart loyalty to Jesus Christ. These are the motives which subdue selfishness; these are the holy affections which hold him as stout roots hold the veteran olive both under the severities of wintry gales and the parching droughts of midsummer. Every year is a bearing year. The beating of the boughs always insures the filling basket.

Their is a counterfeit of the olive tree which naturalist called the "oleaster." It bears a close resemblance in many external features to the genuine tree; but it yields no fruit. Ah, how many such get set out in the plantations of the church! When I see a man taking up a large space in Christ's orchard and yielding not one per cent, of Godliness I say, There is an oleaster. When I hear a professor of religion glib in the store or the stock exchange and yet silent in the prayer room—ready to speak for anybody but his Savior—I say, Ah, what an oleaster! When I hear of a church member going from the communion table to the deals and the dickers of the party caucus I say, Behold an oleaster! When I hear a brother pay glibly that he may provide things honest in the sight of all men" and then send his customers away with sleazy fabrics or cheap adulterations, I think to myself, You are as arrant a cheat as an oleaster. When a garrulous "sister" sheds tears under the pathetic stories of returned missionaries, and goes home to grind a dime out of an overworked laundry or to turn off a sick servant to languish or die in an attic, I want to whisper in her ear, "Madam, you may be fluent in your professions of holiness, but your oleaster bears 'nothing but leaves!'"

The growth of an olive tree may be slow, but it is steady and sure. Such is the growth of a fruit-bearing Christian. A solid, godly character is not to be finished up during a revival or by the mere religion of Sundays and sacraments. Regeneration may plant the roots of grace; but the trunk of character is built up in the solid fiber of Christ within the soul, the boughs spread broadly to the sunlight and in the face of all men the "tree is known by its fruits."—Independent.

Necessary to Perfect Christianity.

A Christian is incomplete for service without Christ as his partner. But there are two ways of taking Christ as a partner in the Christian life. The wise way is to look to Christ for help and wisdom in everything that pertains to our spiritual progress, and to do all our work with that help and guidance. The foolish way is to try to divide the spiritual life into separate provinces, and to give to Christ only his share, while we hold ourselves responsible for the remainder. One of the commonest blunders of this kind, is to look to Christ for the forgiveness of sin and assurance of acceptance with God, while we of ourselves undertake the purification of hearts and life.

Some of God's best saints have made this blunder for a time. Albert Hopkins, the aroma of whose devoted life lingers around Williams College, blending with the memory of his great brother the president, toiled years at achieving his own sanctification, before he wakened up to the knowledge that the right way to Christian holiness is by consecration to the Master, in order that he make of us what he pleases. When he found Christ made unto him sanctification, he was not less watchful, not less zealous, not less abundant in good works. He did not fancy that he himself was a "sleeping partner" in the great transaction of Christian life. But he found a more solid peace and a steadier progress than was possible to him before Christ is our very life, yet we are workers together with him in God's service.—S. S. Times.

Why not Prof it by Example.

Wilmington Messenger: It is surely a very wise, a very proper thing for a young man to do to remember that this life is not all and there is a judgment to come. Solomon was a wise if not a pious man. He has left this on record: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Youth is the spring-time of life. It is a glad season for the young. The heart is fresh and hopeful and happy. It is warm and sympathetic and receptive and responsive. It is easily moved and easily influenced. Impressions are made that are never forgotten, and plans formed that often fail. The seeds are dropped into its virgin soil, and as the sowing so shall be the reaping. The seeds easily spring up produce of their kind. The crop is often rank and luxuriant, and sometimes, it is sad to say it, poisonous and deadly. Habits are formed in youth. These habits may last for a life time. They may adorn or they may deface. They may lift up or they may cast down. They may bring happiness or misery. Youth is the time of strong passions. If you permit them to hold the reins they will run away and destroy you. After life is a more reflex of youth, unless God touches the soul and the whole life is changed thereby. Everything is colored by the medium through which youth looks out. The earthly, the material, the sensual, the things of this life are apt to be distorted. Many when grown old only see things through the same distorted medium. The blessed Savior loved the young when on earth and he once declared of a young man he met that he loved him. The young are the hope of the world. They are to fill all the vacant places presently. The responsibilities will be great, the dangers not less so. The only safety and guaranty of real success—success that shall tell upon the immortal destinies, is for the young to seek God early, and remembering their "Creator in the days of their youth," and "living unspotted from the world," serve their generation with singleness of heart and at last find Heaven. Woe to any nation, to any generation, to any people of whom it must be said that their chief men are bad men.

The Best is Truthfulness.

The following selection is old but it serves to illustrate a great truth:

Two country lads came at an early hour to a market town, and arranging their little stands sat down to wait for customers. One was furnished with fruits and vegetables of the boy's own raising, and the other supplied with clams and fish. The market hours passed along, and each little merchant saw with pleasure his store steadily decreasing, and an equivalent in silver bits shining in his little money-cup. The last melon lay on Harry's stand, when a gentleman came by, and placing his hand upon it, said: "What a fine, large melon! What do you ask for it, my boy?"

"The melon is the last I have, sir; and though it looks very fair, there is an unsound spot in it," said the boy, turning it over.

"So there is," said the man; "I think I will not take it." But he added, looking into the boy's fine open countenance, "is it very business like to point out the defects of your fruit to customer?"

"It is better than being dishonest, sir," said the boy modestly.

"You are right, little fellow; always remember that principle, and you will find favor with God, and man also. I shall remember your little stand in the future. Are those clams fresh?" he continued, turning to Ben Wilson's stand.

"Yes, sir; fresh this morning. I caught them myself," was the reply, and a purchase being made, the gentleman went away.

"Harry, what a fool you were to show the gentleman that spot on the melon! Now you can take it home for your pains, or throw it away. How much wiser is he about those clams I caught yesterday? Sold them for the same price as I did the fresh ones. He would never have looked at the melon until he had gone away.

"Ben I would not tell a lie, or act one either, for twice what I have earned this morning. Besides, I shall be better off in the end; for I have gained a customer, and you have lost one."

And so it proved; for the next day the gentleman bought nearly all his fruits and vegetables of Harry, but never spent another penny at the stand of his neighbor. Thus the season passed. The gentleman, finding he could always get a good article of Harry, constantly patronized him, and sometimes talked with him a few minutes about his future prospects. To become a merchant was Harry's great ambition; and when the winter came on, the gentleman, wanting a trusty boy for his warehouse, decided on giving the place to Harry. Steadily and surely he advanced in the confidence of his employer, until having passed through various posts of service, he became at length an honored partner in the firm.—India's Young Folks.

Refurnish The Parsonage.

Parsonages, like other houses, need to have the furniture replenished from time to time. Nothing lasts forever. The wear and tear in a preacher's house is not usually greater than it is in others. The care of the mistress of the manse over the furniture and house-furnishing goods committed to her keeping will compare favorably with that of the best house-keepers in the charge. She may not be able to make one dozen towels last as long as her neighbor's three dozen; with scarcely a change of sheets for her beds, they may wear out sooner than those of her neighbor who has an ample supply; a small tray of odds and ends of crockery may not last as long as the closet full of china at the next house; but, take it all in all, it is really wonderful how these blessed women who preside over our parsonages can make things last. They deserve better of the Church than they receive. See, then, that they lack for nothing in the furniture and appointments of the parsonage. Every church should have a Parsonage Aid Society, the business of which should be to see to it that the parsonage is kept well furnished. Once a year, at least, the matter should receive thorough investigation, and all needed articles should be supplied. If this work is done regularly the annual outlay will be inconsiderable.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Remarkable Dust Explosion.

Early on the morning of March 21, in the city of Litchfield, Ill., one of the most remarkable dust explosions on record occurred in the "Plant" or Kehlner flour mills. Before the explosion a fire broke out in one of the elevators, and the watchman was unable to send an alarm before the fire had reached the mills. Here it was beyond control. The fire companies, on reaching the scene, got their apparatus connected. By this time the flames had reached the part of the mill where there presumably was an accumulation of dust, and the explosion occurred. The great mill, said to have been the largest flour mill in the world, was blown to pieces as if by dynamite. Bricks, timbers, and pieces of machinery flew in all directions. The spectators of the fire were thrown to the ground by the shock, and people a mile distant were prostrated. Towns sixty miles away telegraphed that they had experienced the effects of the explosion. At Decatur, fifty miles away, the atmospheric concussion was felt. In the town no house escaped injury. Those near the scene had every window blown out. Some houses two miles distant were entirely destroyed. The town bore the appearance of having been swept by a cyclone. The incoming trains brought crowds of spectators.

When Sire Humphry Davy invented the safety lamp which bears his name it was supposed that mine explosions were due to inflammable gas, generally or mostly marsh gas, CH₄. But recently it has been found that coal dust plays a most important role in mine explosions, and the miner's "fire dam" may be interpreted as including coal dust as well as marsh gas. The recent development of steam milling has brought dust explosions more in prominence. In mill explosions there is absolutely no gas. The flour dust is so fine that, mingled with and suspended in air, it produces an explosive mixture. The loss of the mill, which had a capacity of two thousand barrels of flour per day, represents about one million of dollars.—Scientific American.

A Lesson in It.

"Come, hurry up!" said the second-hand of a clock to the minute hand; "you'll never get around in time if you don't. See how fast I'm going," continued the fussy little monitor as it fretted round on its pivot.

"Come, hurry up!" said the minute to the hour-hand, utterly oblivious of being addressed by the second-hand. "If you don't be quick you'll never be in at the stroke of one."

"Well, that's just what our young friend there has been saying to you."

At this point the clock pealed forth the hour as the hour-hand continued, "You see we're all in time—not one of us behind. You take my advice—do your own work in your own way, and leave others alone."

Moral—mind your own business.—Selected.

Why We Need God.

According to a French mot, "If we have no God let us invent one." That is good sense. If there were no God it would be a social necessity to believe in a God.

This fact that the world so certainly and imperatively needs a God makes all Christians who vitally believe in their religion—for too many do not—a little impatient with those who talk as if there no God, who make no room for him in philosophy of the universe, and who do not seem to miss the lack. We believe in God with too much intensity of assurance, and too much conviction of the social value of our faith, to be willing to have God bowed out of the universe as an unnecessary factor in it.

To say that the world and all that is in it was created by law is not to say that there is no God behind the law; and those who are devoting themselves to the study of Nature must not teach us that there is nothing but law and no Lawgiver. It is a very good thing to dissect Lingua and mudfish, or to study the lovenotes of Gryllidae, or search for the teeth of fossil birds, or fill up the lacking steps between the extinct and the living horses; but it is not worth while in the process to assume that the visible, which can be shaved off and put on a microscopic slide, can exclude the invisible. It is still well to let Nature point to Nature's God.

But however it may be with these students of processes of creation and life, we Christians confess that we need God for our own protection, and we also believe he is needed for the protection of society. We need him ourselves for our own personal wants, because without him we know into what worthless lives, or into what sins and crimes we may fall. For we look upon a bad life as itself the worst disaster that can befall a man; not merely or chiefly because of the suffering that a man endures for it in this world or the next, but because wickedness and all selfishness is in itself only bad. It not only leads to bad, but it is bad even when, as is often the case, it leads its agent to success and happiness. Against this worse evil we know that we need all the protection that the promises or the threatenings of God can provide us.

There may be those who have reached such sublimated heights that they do not need even to be reminded, by the presence of God, that purity is good only, and that vice is only bad. But we know that most of us are controlled by our hopes and fears. We know that men work not because work is a pleasure but because they hope to get comfort and escape discomfort by it. We know that in our efforts to avoid sin it is a decided help to us to remember that there is a God who sees us, and he will reward or punish. We thank him every day for the revelation of his righteous judgment, because it helps us and nerves us in our contest against the evil that is in our corrupt natures. We want all the help we can get; and if this motive of a present and rewarding God were taken away we do not know into what evil we might fall.

But if faith in God be lost, then with the loss of God will also go, for most men, the struggle for virtue. They will say, If our existence is but a bubble, why not let it be as gaudy as it may be? It will make no difference to-morrow. Let us eat and drink, like the swine of Epicurus's herd, for to-morrow we die. Possibly the generalized experience of the race might decide that theft or adultery or falsehood is unlucky, but observation teaches us that bad men are successful and happy. Why should we not be happy in the same way, if there be no righteous God, and no righteous judgment? We fear our philosophy might be no better than this. Paul's would have been no better, and he was a saint. We are sure that the world's would be no better. We know what society has become whenever the restraints of religion were thrown off, and we shudder at the prospect. We know the world needs God, and we want no philosophy which excludes him from life, and is content to study physical and vital conditions, as if the slope of a condyle were of more importance than the moralities of the universe.—N. Y. Independent

Washington Letter.

One of the most important international decisions ever made by the U. S. Supreme Court, particularly to the foreign Missionary interests of the Christian churches of the United States, was that handed down by the country on Monday of this week, affirming the constitutionality of the Geary Chinese Exclusion act, and there is no question about it having been contrary to what was expected by a majority of those who had interested themselves in the case, including some of those who voted in Congress to make it a law. It is regarded as unfortunate that the court was not unanimously in favor of the decision. The dissenters were Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Brewer and Field. Justice Harlan being absent a motion was made by the attorneys for the Chinese for a rehearing of the case before a full bench at the next term, but it was denied by a vote of 5 to 3, the same as that upon the decision. So the Geary act stands as unimpeachable law, that is, unimpeachable, except by act of Congress repealing it or portions of it.

Those in a position to be best informed as to the intentions of the Chinese government assert emphatically that if the unregistered Chinese now in the United States, and considerably more than nine-tenths of them are unregistered, shall be forcibly deported the Chinese government will retaliate by compelling every American residing in China to leave that country. It is estimated that at least $6,000,000 will be required to pay the expense of deporting all of the Chinese who failed to register within the specified time, and there is at this time less than $20,000 available for that purpose. The subject was discussed at a cabinet meeting yesterday, and, although no official announcement was made as to the policy of the administration in enforcing the law, it is believed that a conservative course will be followed until the matter can again get before Congress, on the proposition to appropriate the money needed to carry the law into effect, and that few, if any, arrests will be made until Congress shall have acted.

Everything is in readiness for the meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly tomorrow, and most of the delegates are in town. It is expected that the session, which will probably last ten days or two weeks, will be unusually interesting, not only to Presbyterians, but to the general public.

The Attorney General has rendered an opinion to the effect that the law will not permit the opening on Sunday of the lunch post office which is one of the Government exhibits at the World's Fair. This opinion applies to all of the Government exhibits. President Cleveland and all of the members of the cabinet are receiving requests from every section asking them to take some action to prevent the proposed opening of the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday, but they have as yet decided upon nothing.

Here are saloon statistics just completed by the Census Bureau: 257 cities with a total population of 15,316,167, have 61,336 saloons, an average, within a fraction, of one to every 250 persons. San Francisco has one saloon to every 103 persons; Buffalo, one to every 128; Philadelphia, one to every 870, and Pittsburg, one to every 2,460.

Hon Charles Lyman, president of the Civil Service Commission delivered an interesting address on temperance, Sunday evening. Among other important statements he said: "Two thousand millions of dollars a year is the sum expended in this country for drink. Were the country to be taxed by the government for any purpose for that amount the people would declare they were terribly tax ridden. This is more than a tax; it is a waste—thrown away. It is a moral waste. I have no right to waste anything that comes into my possession, be it property or money. I am bound morally to use it for a good purpose. Nobody has ever succeeded in proving that beer benefits the system. The most intelligent physicians have stated that it is not good for medicine. Therefore money expended for it is absolute waste."

Col. Bain, of Kentucky, the widely known temperance orator, made a characteristic speech to a large meeting held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Sunday afternoon. He was particularly severe upon Congress for having failed to appoint a commission to investigate the liquor traffic. He expressed regret that drinking had been made respectable in the Capital City, by wealth and influence and the example of state dinners, and closed with these words: "Not a mule that pulls a cart, a dog that watches a hen-coop, a snake that crawls in the grass, but better fulfills the purpose of God than the man who gets drunk."

Memorial.

BY REV. J. PRESSLEY BARRITT, D. D.

There is nothing new under the sun, and so the memorial idea is an old one, but none the less a happy conception and a most useful incarnation of a thought.

From the earliest times to this day have God's gracious dealings with his people called forth expressions of gratitude in "memorial" one form or another. These have been set as capstones upon the most interesting events in history, and left standing as peaks upon the mountain tops, commanding the admiration of the world.

Thus, when God delivered Israel from Egyptian bondage, he set the example and gave as a memorial of that wonderful event in human progress his own name,—I AM From this magnificent mountain top of divine thought God has spoken to all the world in his memorial—the I AM of Jehovah.

The feast of the Passover was instituted as a memorial of the deliverance of the first-born of Egypt from death at the hands of the destroying angel.

The feast of the Trumpets was the memorial for the closing year.

Moses and Eleazar offered 10,750 shekels of gold as a memorial of Israel's victory over the Midianites.

Twelve stones taken from the Jordan were set up as a memorial of the fact that the waters were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord.

Samuel took a stone and set it between Mizpah and Shen, and called it Ebenezer, as a memorial of the fact that hitherto the Lord had helped them.

The feast of Purim was instituted as a memorial of the deliverance of the Jews from death under the plot of the wicked Haman.

In all these instances the "memorials" represented events in history over which had hung fear and dismay as a pall, and from which the darkness had been lifted as by the hand of God, in his goodness to man, so ushering in upon the people a brighter day and a happier service.

And so it has been with the CHRISTIANS. There came a dark day in their history—discord and strife hung as a pall over them like a dark and ominous cloud bursting with the howling winds and the thunder's crash, illuminated only with the mad flashes of the blinding lightning. It was a time that tried the true and the brave. The day passed and the mists cleared away, only to reveal the havoc of the storm. We were twain, and our forces, God given forces, were weak and broken and scattered, and desolation at noon-day stared us in the face. We stood, the South against the North, and the North against the South. Dreadful and appalling was the sight! We struggled on—and what a struggle it was!—brother against brother, church against church, till, if it had been possible, the rent would have divided God himself and all his heavenly hosts.

But a brighter day came. Better influences got the ascendancy. A REUNION was proposed and effected. It was publicly declared at Marion, Ind., in October, 1890. Then and there we determined, too, that in demonstration of our gratitude to God for his goodness in preserving our existence and in restoring the Union, we would make a memorial and solemnly offer it to God in honor of this great event in our history as a people.

The memorial was to be a temple for the worship of God, to be built in the city of Norfolk, Va,—one of the most prosperous and thrifty cities of the new South. The day for the erection of this memorial is upon us. The ground has been broken, the work is progressing, and the call has been made for contributions, by the Executive Board of the American Christian Convention. The offerings for this temple are to be from the church at large, and the memorial is to bear testimony that we are again one people—one in work and one in spirit. The purpose is at once stimulating and commendable—is of itself an appeal which calls for a response from every heart and pocket where real, true union has a God-given hold.

This enterprise has already gone so far, that under the blessings of God, it will be built. Its proportions and magnificence must be determined by the liberality of our people. I have but one plea to make: Since we have reunited and have undertaken this "memorial" jointly, in honor of the reunion, let us make one united effort and so build a memorial which shall really testify to our appreciation of the event, and which may speak to our children and to strangers in years to come of the work accomplished at Marion, Ind., in October, 1890; and we will give the glory to God, to whom be all the praise forever.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Difference.

Between the man who does his best and trusts God, and the man who does his best because his inclination runs that way, and who refuses to look higher for a motive, there is a difference as wide as the universe. How the literalness of these expressions forces itself upon us! There is truly a universe between them. They belong to kingdoms not only separate, but utterly opposed to one another.

These two men are well known characters. To the careless onlooker there is much similarity in their cases. Each has freed himself of responsibility, and each takes his way lightly because of this care free condition. Yet the one state is an attainment after striving, the other is a refusal to strive at all.

The first is the result of a long struggle between belief and doubt, hope and despair; between the burden of a responsibility too great to be borne, and a crushing sense of inability to meet it. When the outcome of such a soul-conflict is Faith, it is a faith profound and unchangeable. "God lives!" Then, although the heavens fall, that soul may abide in security!

"But," says the second man, "what is the advantage gained by worrying and straining to reach this state of mind? It is possible to be content without it. Look at me. I long ago declined to face these questions, and I have been quite comfortable ever since. You have concerned yourself for nothing. You have but come around to my way of thinking. We stand upon the same ground, after all. We each do as well as the average man—rather better; but I have never troubled myself about the matter, while you, you do not give a thought to to-morrow."

"No," repeats the first man, "I do not give a thought to to-morrow!"

"And," goes on the second, "neither of us has any anxiety as to the final result of to-day's action!"

"You are right," echoes the first. "I feel no anxiety as to the final result!"

"Then how are you any better off than I? demands the second. "What is the difference between us?"

What, indeed?—Harper's Bazar.

News from the Field.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—I met my congregation at Oakland Saturday before the first Sunday in May and we held our second quarterly meeting. Sunday morning we met the Sunday school; after the lesson three little girls, Bessie, Annie and Willie Staley, came on the rostrum one by one and delivered missionary speeches that were thrilling and took well with the audience.

The Church Aid Society then held a short session.

After preaching we administered the sacraments of the Lord's supper to a goodly number of communicants, then took up a collection for the Norfolk church which amounted to three dollars. The hard times causes small collection even when the will is good.

This is a fine congregation, and it never fails to provide for the comfort of its pastor, and to keep up its finances.

All my charges are doing well and I am well pleased with the work. I think I have the best field in the conference, and the longer I stay among them the better I like them.

I went to Good Hope and Walnut Grove last Saturday; second quarterly meeting at Walnut Grove passed pleasantly. Sunday morning preaching at 11 o'clock, followed by communion service and a collection for the Norfolk church. This is a good church composed of solid material and it is taking a lead in finance.

I feel much encouraged with Pope's Chapel, Mt. Carmel and Liberty, (V.) for they are doing well. Three of my churches are in the tobacco region and three in the cotton region. I hope they will all come out right, and be fully prepared to meet the bridegroom when he cometh.

Yours in Christian love,

Notes Here and There.

TO THE CHRISTIAN SUN:—The fourth Sabbath in April it was my privilege to be at Mt. Auburn, Warren Co.,

N. C. This the church of my childhood, and it was sweet to meet relatives and friends, some of whom I had not seen for two or three years. But sadness came when I saw how many aged fathers and mothers had passed away. We miss them at the dear old church. This church is under the pastoral care of Rev. P. T. Klapp. Bro. Klapp is a tireless worker, and a bold defender of that which he believes to be right. It afforded me pleasure while on this trip to drop in the SUN office and shake the hands of Bros. Clements and Mood. They are giving us a good paper, and we should support them. Send in subscribers with the cash if you want the CHRISTIAN SUN to shine still more brightly.

The fifth Sunday in April I was at Bethel, Caswell Co. It was the dedication of their church. The congregation was very large, and attentive. They have a nice house, and it was all paid for before the services commenced. We did not have to ask the congregation to finish paying for the house so as to dedicate it. It was paid for and a few cents in the treasury, all before the services. This is a good people. They love the Christian church and have done well to erect such a neat and comfortable house. Bro. Stroud is pastor of Bethel and is highly esteemed by his congregation. I bespeak much prosperity for Bethel and her pastor.

The first Sabbath in this month Bro. Clements was with us at New Providence. We had a delightful day. Congregation large and attentive. Bro. Clements preached us a good sermon. We are always glad to have him with us.

Yesterday was communion at Long's Chapel. The church was well filled and a few out of doors. This church has recently enclosed their cemetery. It adds very much to the locks of the grounds and is an excellent enclosure. Where the people have a mind to work, everything moves on nicely, and promptly. Long's Chapel is always present in the finances of their church. When the quarter ends the pastor's salary is paid. We were pained a few days ago by the sad news of Mr. T. E. Longest's death. He died in Dalton, Ga. His remains were brought to Graham and we laid him away in the town cemetery to await the resurrection morn. Burial services by the writer. To his many friends, here and in Dalton, Ga. we offer the consolation of God's Word. A young man fallen in the prime of life. I understand that he feared not death. Not dead only gone before.

The annual address which conference ordered published will be sent out in a few days to those who paid at conference. Should those who have paid fail to get the address in a week or two please let me know at once. If you have changed your post office since conference please notify me of said change.

I would like for some one to give me the post office of J. E. Langston, and of A. D. Leonard.

P. H. FLEMING.

From the above taken from a private letter you will see that Bro. Fleming is in possession of the books containing his address before the conference and is ready to supply all who desire copies. We have seen nothing better on "The Christian Church" than his address.

No greater evidence of the vast trade and industrial development of the new life and activity reported in Baltimore could be given than is found in the publication of a 64-page special issue of the Baltimore News devoted to the progress and prosperity of Baltimore and the South. This is the largest paper ever published south of New York, and its list of contents is the most remarkable ever seen in any one issue of any daily paper.

Ten Southern Governors write of the resources and advantages of their respective States. Hon. Robert P. Porter, the Superintendent of the Census, gives an official census review of the South. Mr. Richard H. Edmonds, under whose editorial charge this issue was prepared, writes of the conditions of the South prior to the war, and of its progress since then, and editorially discusses every phase of Southern advancement.

The Name Christian.

We regard the chapter from the pen of Rev. W. W. Staley in Five Cardinal Principles Defined, so replete on this subject, that we think it best to continue it on our editorial page until the readers of the SUN have the last word of it.History sustains the claim to this name as the proper title for the church of Christ. Profane writers, who rank as standard authority, when they refer to the history of the gospel church, call it the Christian church. Josephus, Ant. 18:3—§3, employs this language: "Now, there was about this time (A. D. 33) Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call Him a man, for He was a doer of wonderful works,—a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to Him both many of the Jews and the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ; and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned Him to the cross, those that loved Him at the first did not forsake Him, for He appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning Him; and the tribe of Christians, so named from Him, are not extinct at this day." As an example of profane historians I quote the first sentence in Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire: "In the second century of the Christian Era, the empire of Rome comprehended the fairest part of the earth, and the most civilized portion of mankind." That is the idea that pervades the history of civilized nations of nineteen centuries. Christianity is the one religion that engages the attention of the historian and calls forth words of praise from most skeptical pens. Ecclesiastical history treats the subject as the history of the Christian church. There starts with Christ a new period in the history of the world, and it gathers strength as it comes from Bethlehem, with the babe over whose birth the heavenly host sang "Glory to God" and to whom the wise men bowed and presented their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh; on by Gethsemane, and Calvary, and Joseph's new tomb, and the ascen-sion, down through the blood of martyrs and brotherly love to this present age. This history in its life and its blessing for the nations has had its power in this grand fact. Whatever divides this idea into fragments weakens the saving force of this new life. The church in its aggregate life and work ought to keep this one idea before the world. There is no saving influence outside of this. Take this out of any denomination and there would not be enough left to save one soul. But some might ask, "Why is it then that you, as a people, do not succeed better and save more souls?" The answer is plain. The large bodies around us are not in sympathy with us. They look upon us as the Jews did upon Christ. The Jews prevented Christ from doing what He might have done with their sympathy and prayers. The doctrine of Christ required the surrender of many forms of Jewish thought and practice. The position held by the Christians pleads for a surrender of sectarian names. Men are unwilling to recognize such a plea. But such a surrender involves the loss of of no principle that has in it any gospel power or saving force. If all denominational titles were surrendered, there would still remain the same fundamental doctrines of this religion, and the same demands of gospel life. All that would be lost in such a course would be worldly honor, and fame. It might be the great Hudson losing her identity at the Atlantic; but she would be all the purer for that. That is what all need to lose themselves in Christ. All thought, and love, and work of God's people should be for Christ and the salvation of souls. But with many gospel ministers they do more work for their church than for the head of the church. They refer all their labors, all their thoughts, all their efforts to this one aim of building up the interests of their church. God demands of us more than this.This inquiry would be incomplete if it failed to refer this matter to the word of God. That is the source of all things to the church. It is a revelation of God's will to man. It is higher in authority than usage, or history, or the acutest moral sense. It is final as authority for man in all matters of faith and practice. This word seems to sanction the name Christian, and this accords with what has been written before. The comment of Matthew Henry on Ephesians 3:13, sustains this view: "The universal church has a dependence upon the Lord Jesus Christ; of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." The Jews were wont to boast of Abraham as their father; but now Jews and Gentiles both are denominated from Christ; so some.

While others understand it of the saints in heaven, who wear the crown of glory, and saints on earth, who are going on in the work of grace here. Both the one and the other make but one family, one household: and from Him they are named Christians, as they really are such; acknowledging their dependence upon, and their relation to, Christ."

The Sunday School Convention.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—We are very glad indeed to know that so many of the brethren are being more interested in our Convention work. Have already received quite a number of important subjects to be placed in the program. Let all, at once, who are interested, send in such subjects as they may wish presented in the Convention. Don't delay as we are arranging the subjects for the program. Remember the N. C. and Va. Christian Sunday school Convention meets with Union (Alamance) Tuesday before the 4th Sunday in July, and that YOU are expected to be present and take part in the work of the Convention.

Yours fraternally,
J. L. FOSTER.

Elon College Commencement.

The exercises at the approaching commencement will be of universal interest. There are ten members of the senior class. The largest class we have every had to graduate. The meeting of the Trustees, the sermon, the address, the speeches of the representatives of literary societies, the concert, the graduating exercises, the meeting of friends and the renewal of friendships, etc., etc. It is worth a great deal to know the people with whom we labor, and the young men and women who go from these halls are to take places in our congregations. The preachers should know them. We hope to see a large gathering of friends. You can spare a few days. Come to commencement.
W. S. LONG.

To L. H.

DEAR SIR:—I missed getting the SUN of May 4, till the 16th, hence no reply to you till now.

I am glad to find you interested in the salvation of your soul, and I sincerely pray that you may soon become a happy and useful Christian man.

At the earliest moment I can give the matter the necessary attention, by the help of the Lord, I will prepare and preach a sermon as suggested in your letter, of which due notice will be given.

Sincerely yours,
J. P. BARRETT.

Wake Chapel.

Last Saturday and Sunday were spent with the church at Wake Chapel, N. C. The congregations were good both days, and the services pleasant.

Saturday night was spent with the family of Bro. Wm. Utley. He is in quite feeble health; but his confidence in God is unshaken, and he is trusting in Jesus, his Saviour.

W. W. Johnson, Lennie Ballentine, J. T. Rowland and Dr. B. S. Utley all showed us acts of kindness

Suffolk Letter.

Last Friday was memorial day here. It was an ideal day. The attendance was very large. The decorations on the graves were profuse and tasteful. The G. A. R. music rendered by the combined choirs of the churches was touchingly sweet and inspiring. The address by Rev. J. N. McCormick of the Episcopal church was very fine and well delivered. The march to Willow Hill and thence to Cedar Hill cemetery to appropriate music by the Suffolk Band was significantly solemn and pleasing. The behavior for the day was a credit to any community. The memory of our soldier dead and loved ones departed in a time of peace was duly revived by military and band, by speech and song, by flowers and visits to their graves. The most precious acres to patriots and Christians are those acres where soldiers and believers lie buried. Our richest inheritance is what is left us by those departed. The beautiful flowers with which we decorate their graves will fade away, but the memory of their lives will live while we have our reason and being.

ANOTHER ADDED.

At 11 a. m. of this same day we laid the remains of Mrs. Mary M. Rawls to rest in Cedar Hill. She had been in declining health for months and passed away on Thursday. Her husband, Alisha A. Rawls, was buried March 13, 1890. At that time they resided near Holy Neck, since then Mrs. Rawls with her two sons and two daughters moved to Suffolk where she ended her pilgrimage. She was a sister of Mills Watkins of Windsor. She was a woman of faith and lovely Christian experiences. Devout in her disposition. She cultivated her religious convictions which were more to her life than all besides. She closed her life in peace to enter upon joys eternal.

Next Friday promises to be a red letter day in the history of the Norfolk Christian church. The cornerstone will be laid with imposing ceremonies and distinguished orators will lend the power of human speech to which involves the salvation of many souls. Dr. Jones deserves the co-operation of all the church in this noble and promising enterprise. His co-workers in Norfolk are loyal and enthusiastic in their efforts to further the work.

Quite a little company will attend Elon commencement from Suffolk, and they have read so much of it that they expect to see and hear things worthy of the long trip.

Once More I Come.

The SUN of May 4th did not reach me at all. May 16th I borrowed a copy and I find in it Bro. Holland's rejoinder. It is not my purpose to reply to him except to say:

1. Mr. H. says I see my mistake now. I am astonished at that statement, coming from a beloved brother minister, when there is not the shadow of reason for it. I am more fully convinced than ever that Paul said what he meant, and meant what he said.

2 He says that I have confessed that women did preach in the apostolic age. I am astonished at that statement, coming as it does, from a beloved brother minister, when I have said no such thing. What I did say was that there were women in Paul's day, as men, who wished to preach, but Paul would not allow it—altogether a different fact.

3. Bro. Holland declared that the Bible said women did preach. I called for book, chapter and verse. He could not give them, but excused himself by giving a "synonym." That is a poor answer to an italicized statement that they did preach. He could not sustain his own declaration.

The main purpose I have in this article is not so much to answer Bro. Holland, but to answer some correspondents who shoot at me in ambush.

A few days ago I received a letter from a familiar post office in a hand writing which is by no means strange to me. On opening it I found it contained only a little pamphlet entitled: "Jesus Christ, the Emancipator of Women." For the moment it did not occur to me that it was a shot at me on the women preaching question, but when I read it I found out that it was even that. Very well. I am always glad to have attention, and especially so in this case, as it turns decidedly in my favor. The pamphlet was written by Rev. C. C. Harroh, a strong advocate of the right of women to preach. He says plainly: "There were good reasons for saying: Let women keep silence in the congregations at Corinth; where the people revelled in excesses of wealth and luxury; where they abandoned themselves to vice and profligacy; where hundreds of bold courtizans appeared on the streets and public places, and the name Corinthian, as applied to woman, meant a bad character," etc. Now I want Bro. Holland, sister Adams and others to note this fact well. They have done all they could to make it appear that Paul did not mean what he said, but here is Rev. C. C. Harroh, a bold defender of the right of women to preach, admitting that there were good reasons why Paul should have so forbidden the Corinthian women to preach. Mr. Harroh says that it was because of their excesses in wealth, of vice and profligacy and that the name "Corinthian" meant a bad character, as applied to women.

He plainly admits that Paul forbade the Corinthian women to preach, and then gives his reason as above. I think Paul made no allusion to the reasons which Mr. Harroh assigns, but he did give reasons, and Paul's apply to womankind, and not to "Corinthian" women only. His reasons were: "Adam was first formed then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression." I do not know where Mr. Harroh got authority for what he said Paul's reasons were, but the above is what Paul said himself. See 1 Tim. 2:13, 14. I should like to know now how my critics enjoy having their main prop knocked from under them by a champion of their own cause. The SUN's readers who are interested in this question may decide now for themselves whose reasons why women should not preach they will accept. Mr. Harroh's, or Paul's. Paul forbade it and Paul gave his reasons. I prefer Paul's own statement to that of any uninspired man.

From the forgoing my friend who shot at me from ambush, perhaps now sees that his shot proved to be a boomerang, and the ball strikes him and the friends of woman's right to preach, instead of myself.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.
 MY DEAR CHILDREN:—
 After the lapse of a week the Corner is here again, and we give you a merry greeting. It is earnestly hoped that the many cousins who have been writing to the Corner, and those who do not write, will pardon me for the times I have missed having the Corner and I will try not to allow another SUN to go out without a word for the cousins.

Now the work for the Band has been neglected considerable of late; what shall we do about it? The old bad man and all the little folks, and big ones too, who belong to his band are just as faithful as can be. They work all the time; why can't we? Hoping to hear from all of the girls and boys of the Band, I am
 Cordially yours,
 UNCLE TANGLE.

MILLTOWN, ALA., MAY 8th, 1893.
 DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I was indeed sorry when your told us how you would go to the office and fail to get any letters for the Corner. I know how it is to be disappointed when one is, expecting a letter and fail to get it. I have a dear brother in Tenn. and when we are expecting a letter and fail to get it we are expecting a letter and fail to get it we are sadly disappointed. Yet we are all subject to disappointments in this life. Beautiful spring is here and it is very pleasant to live in the country to see the beautiful flowers and hear the birds sing, it makes us think of our creator and all his goodness. I will answer Una Davis question, Jonah was sent to Nineveh to preach unto the people. I will also ask a question: Who was Enoch's father. Enclosed please find half dime for the Band. With much love for you and the cousins.
 Your little niece,
 ADA STEPHENSON.

Ada, you have written us a nice letter, and I hope that all through your life you will manifest that sympathy for your fellows that will help them on their way to heaven.

DOUBLE HEAD, ALA., MAY 7, 1893.
 DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Well as I was reading the SUN this evening I thought I would try to Write you a short letter as it is my first time, and of course you will excuse my letter this time. My dear little sister wrote to you and I said that if her letter escaped the waste basket perhaps mine will too, as I am little the largest. Uncle Tangle God has called so many of our dear friends to his home here of late until every thing is so sad, may it not be long before he calls us there where we will meet them to part no more. Uncle Tangle I will ask you to pray for me for I want to meet my dear friends to part no more. Next Sunday is our regular meeting day at Antioch Well I guess I had better close for fear my letter will find its way to the waste basket.

Yours lovingly,
 CLARA G. HAMLIN.
 Clara, here is your letter, and a very nice one it is too; write again. The good Lord does not take us from this life until our work has been accomplished here.

MILLTOWN, ALA., MAY 9th, 1893
 DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Here comes a little school boy. But our school is out now and our teacher Prof. Fuquay and wife have gone on a visit to their former home Doles, Ga.; hope they will have a pleasant time. I am helping papa work on the farm since school is out. He says that if I will be real smart I may go fishing soon and I am going to try it. For I enjoy fishing very much. Rev. Jubilee Smith gave me ten cents of which I will send five cents for the Band. With much love for you and the cousins.

Your wee nephew,
 JUBILEE STEPHENSON.
 Jubilee, my boy, you have a glad welcome to the Band. It is hoped that you will become as useful a man as the Rev. Jubilee Smith. You will try to, won't you?

A Literary Sensation.
 "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has certainly "broke loose"! The copyright on this most famous of American novels, by Mrs. Stowe, has recently expired, which frees its publication from the monopoly of the high priced publishers, and though in anticipation of this fact they have within a few months greatly reduced its price, now that it is really "unchained" the consequences are something surprising. John B. Alden, Publisher, of New York, issues several editions, selling them only direct (not through agents or book sellers); one in good type, paper covers, for 5 cents, sent post-paid, or the same bound in cloth for 10 cents with postage 7 cents extra; also an excellent large-type edition, on fine paper, handsomely bound in cloth for the price of 25 cents, postage 20 cents Surely a copy of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will soon be found in every home where it is not already. Mr. Alden sends a 32-page pamphlet describing many of his publications free, or a catalogue of 123 pages of choice books, a veritable "literary gold mine" for book-lovers for 2 cents. Address JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

Love as an Essential Element of Mankind.

ELON COLLEGE MONTHLY

Love has truly been acknowledged to be the most potent element in life, and life without it may indeed be compared to the "world without a sun."

What is it that makes our grandest, noblest characters in life. It is that instinct that gives the a higher ideal of life. Something to look up to, to reverence. In that ideal of mankind are seen the qualities that will give one a purer and higher aim for his own, in some object that they have in view in striving to attain, thus you imitate them because you love them and in so doing you elevate your own life imparting a benefit to you.

No life is complete without first experiencing love,—hope is without aim and man is but miserable until he realize this influence with soothes all cares and troubles; and satiates all desires and expectations in life.

One who loves has something to live for. For our lives are brightened by love, our energy increased, our aspirations made stronger. Without this perpetual melody of humanity in the heart, man would be worthless, sailing on the grand old ocean of time not caring how life drifted.

Love is also an essential element in regard to health; no one can be happy without love. We all know that it is a pleasure to be loved. Life would be a burden if we thought no one loved us. It is often that it causes us to be discontented, dissatisfied with life and makes us want to drown cares in the baser habits.

With love our happiness increases—our selfish nature is forgotten and in striving to do for another's happiness, contentment comes in and that is the true essence of health and happiness. Love causes us to have a more elevated idea concerning a moral character and thus prepare us better for eternity.

Without love mankind would not be cognizant of the poor and we would not work for the elevation of mankind generally. For were it not for the love we have in our hearts for souls of others we would not endeavor to send the gospel to other nations and to the heathens at home and abroad, that they might know the goodness of God, teaching them to worship him as the maker and ruler of every good and perfect thing. Without it we too would be unable to appreciate his wonderful love for us, or to understand the passage—"Love thy neighbor as thyself"

Without the love of Christ in our hearts we would not be prepared to die, which is the most important element in our subject.

True love also in a manner elevates the intellect. The poet Browning says—"All love renders wise in a degree, and the most gifted minds have been the truest lovers." Great souls make all affections great. They elevate and consecrate all true delights.

"Oh love! pure love! Thou art the fountain of all comfort and without the man is but a brute."

The Great Fast Mail.

TWO NEW FAST TRAINS BY THE R. & D. NEW RAILROADS—NEW TRAINS—FAST TIME. FASTER TIME.

Fastest time seems to be the motto of the day in railroad circles of the New South, and the Richmond and Danville, it appears, has reached the climax. Since January, 1891, that company has been operating three (3) through passenger trains between New York, Atlanta and New Orleans, one of these being the justly celebrated "Washington and Southwestern Vestibled Limited," making the run from New York to Atlanta, Ga., a distance by its line of 912 miles, in 23 hours, or an average of about forty miles per hour. The great New York and Chicago Limited of the Pennsylvania R. R. makes the run from New York to Chicago, a distance by its rails of 876 miles, in 24 hours; thus you see "The Greatest Southern System" (the R. & D.) is giving the "New South" a service that is equal to that of the "Standard Railroad of America" (the Pennsylvania R. R.) But with the spring changes comes the second wonder—the establishment of the R. & D.'s "Great Fast Mail," composed of new and elegant postal cars, "complete post offices on wheels," new and luxurious coaches and magnificent Pullman palace vestibled sleepers. The southbound train (No. 35) leaves Washington every morning at 11:10 o'clock, with New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington papers of same date, and distributes them through Virginia, North and South Carolina the same day same day of issue, putting them into Atlanta at 6 o'clock A. M. the morning after issue and distributing them through Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi through the medium of the seven railroads radiating from Atlanta by noon of the day after publication, which is by many hours the quickest and most complete service ever given the United States mail to and from the South.

These fast mail trains make the run from Washington to Atlanta, southbound, in eighteen hours and fifty minutes, while the corresponding northbound train, No. 36, leaving Atlanta at 7:30 P. M., arrives in Washington 2:55 P. M. following day, making close connection for Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, arriving in Baltimore 4:19 P. M., Philadelphia 6:40 P. M., New York 9:10 P. M., next day and Boston 7:30 A. M. Time to Washington nineteen hours and twenty-five hours.

The fast time, splendid equipment and magnificent service of the R. & D. is greatly appreciated by the traveling public, as is manifested daily by their very large and constantly increasing passenger travel.

The management of the company is intrusted to men of intelligence and high character—broad and liberal in their views, "strictly business" in their methods and rules of conduct, just and reasonable toward all patrons, showing no favoritism, making no promises to be broken, guaranteeing nothing they cannot accomplish. Such a system, with such a management, is justly the pride of the people it serves and the section through which it passes. The influence of its progressive policy has become contagious on every mile of its great system and has acted as a stimulating impulse to the energies of the people in every State it touches with its magnetic power, from Washington, D. C., on the Potomac, to its western terminus, Greenville, on the Mississippi River.—The Republic.

Many persons are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters Rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile and cures malaria. Get the genuine.

ALL POLICYHOLDERS UPON AN EQUAL FOOTING.

By able, conservative management, safe investments, big rate of interest, low death rate, the Northwestern has won the love and applause of its policyholders and the respect and admiration of all who are acquainted with it.

Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C. says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and think the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The dividends of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders."

Mr. R. B. Raney, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has done superiorly."

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original samples as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original.

which we propose to send to you, transportation bill. The little darling rests on a pillow, and is in the act of drawing at its pink sock, the more of which has been pulled off and flung away with a contemptuous foot. The expression is perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter what you do. The exquisite reproduction is a gift of our friend, Ida Wauver, the most celebrated of modern painters of babies, and to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproduction cannot be told from the original, which cost $3.00, and also the same price for the best. The baby's life size, and is about 17 inches. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great engravings by such artists as "The Grand and Hungry Baby," Louis Deschamps, and others of what we had during the past year, "A Yard of Ladies," and "A White Face (Child)" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will rejoice everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the facts and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

At Youngsville N. C.

Last Saturday and Sunday were the appointments at youngsville. The congregations were very good both on Saturday and Sunday. The Sunday school is also doing well

The people in the community are rather low spirited. Several of them had held their cotton for a higher price, but now are forced to sell at low prices. No man can afford to make cotton at the present prices.

Dinner was taken Saturday with that ever energetic persevering brother, W. T. Young. A little while was spent pleasantly with the family of Bro. A. L. Allen, Saturday night was spent with the interesting family of Bro. M. C. Winston, and dinner was taken Sunday with our old friend Dr. P. R. Hatch, Sunday morning went to see sister Harris, she has been an invalid and great sufferer for some time May the Lord restore her to health.

From Berea, Norfolk Co.

DEAR SUN:—On Tuesday night following second Sunday, Rev. Rolger Charnock preached for us. It was not the pleasure of the writer to hear him, but I have heard his remarks on that occasion commended. On the fourth Sunday, same month, it was our pleasure to hear Rev. W. T. Herndon preach (what we considered a grand sermon) Last Sunday the 7th inst. Rev. R. D. H. Demarest (in the absence of our pastor) gave us another one of his good sermons. So you can learn from this, that we are blessed down this way with a good supply of gospel seed from different sowers. And I would like to add, that we have been fortunate in getting good seed and good sowers—men who know how to rightly divide and scatter them over the soil. I believe if they fail to spring up and bring forth fruit, it will be not in fault of the sowing neither the seed, but in fault of the ground upon which they fell. Our Sabbath school seems to be doing well under the leadership of our young brother, F. L. Curling. We love the Sabbath school and we hope, that by it we may accomplish that for which it was designed.

Yours in Christian love,

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

Rev. W. G. Clements, the editor of the "Sun" has been in Eastern, Va., since last Wednesday. He adds to his long list of friends wherever he goes, and is adding the list of subscribers at the same time. He attended the laying of the corner-stone of the Norfolk Church last Friday and took part in the exercises. He went to Cypress Chapel yesterday with Rev. H. H. Butler and will spend several days in that vicinity.

The ceremonies at the laying of the corner-stone of the Norfolk Church last Friday were very impressive and beautiful. There was a good attendance though not as many as provided for. The dinner was excellent in quality and variety, and superabundant in quantity. The ladies worked faithfully, and served their guests royally. After dinner the audience assembled under a large canvas on comfortable seats for public exercises. The Band enlivened the occasion with sweet music. Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., led the congregation in an appropriate prayer. Dr. Jones introduced the following clergyman who made most cordial and appropriate addresses. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church; Rev. Jas. I. Vance, pastor of first Presbyterian church; and R. A. Robinson, pastor Presbyterian Church in Atlantic City. These addresses were all very liberal and fraternal, and expressed the highest respect for and commendation of Dr. Jones in this work. The well pleased audience was dismissed by Rev. W. G. Clements. The day was very dry and very hot and so lemonade, ice-cream, ect. went like hot cakes. The walls of the church are well up and Dr. Jones appears to be in better health than for years.

Later in the day the joyous occasion was saddened by the news that little Mary Savage, oldest child of A. J. Savage and Mrs. Mamie Savage, in the absence of her mother had accidentally swallowed some poison from which she died that night. Mary with two other children were left in charge of a woman while her parents were at church. She was a sweet little darling of four. Yesterday they laid her remains to rest in the narrow house. Her spirit is with Christ for "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Deepest sympathy is felt for brother and sister Savage in this sudden and painful bereavement.

Maj Saunders of Cypress Chapel a widely known and respected gentleman has been confined to his bed for several weeks with some serious affliction. His many friends anxiously await the course of the disease, desiring greatly his recovering.

The congregation was good and attentive, very little sickness in this congregation so far as I could learn. Wheat crops are very fine, plenty of fruit. T. J. Haskins, Jr. is now spending some time with his father and family. After preaching in company with brother L. R. Crocker of Middleburg, we stopped at Enterprize to hear a minister of the Free Will Baptists church preach, and from there we came to Middleburg, where we spent the night with brother Crocker and his dear family. We have spent today visiting friends here in town. We need a church in this place and also in the growing town of Henderson.

Golden Rule Meditation On Fearlessness.

Lord, I am not worthy to receive thee for myself; thou hast enabled me also to bestow thee on others. My own prayers are too weak to deserve the assurance of faith, yet thou hast granted me also to remove the doubt to others. By my trembling and stammering words thou hast made others strong, and strengthened me as well. What amounting of power thou hast poured on my beggarly service! Yet still I bear me like a beggar, and when thou dost set before me a deed to be done I look on the weakness thou hast crowned rather than on the crown of might thou hast placed on my weakness. Nay, I am the King's man, earth slave no longer! His herald shall speak of authority. Let not the ambassador of the Most High tremble before men. I will be bold about my Father's business. Yet ever—be this my sincere and constant prayer, near Father—do thou abash my headstrong pride with frequent failure. Warn me from my weakness by clear disclosures of it. Drive me by my defeats to thy victories. Do I seek thy glory only? Gloriously prove it to me by de-roying my own. Yet I shall be exalted, for thou wilt work through me. Yet I shall be proud, as a subject of his king, as a child of his father. Yet I shall be strong, and masterful, and fearless; strong in the Almighty, masterful because full of my Master, and fearless because I fear thee, O Christ, Upholder of men.—Golden Rule.

Eternal Life in Christ

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. 1 John 5:11.

There are two great questions that have deeply interested man in all ages of the world, and will do so to the end of time. The first is, our relation to men and things, and our real interests in this life. How can we get the greatest happiness out of this life? This is what all men are seeking and laboring for in all the relations and business of life. The second great question is, is there a future life, and if so, what will it be to us? This question can only be fully answered by a direct revelation from God. There are indications of man's immortality in his nature and possibilities also in the providential government of God, but these things leave the question shrouded in darkness. God in his infinite goodness has not left us in any uncertainty on this vital question. He "hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Christ has scattered the clouds that hung around the grave, and enabled us to look beyond it to a home in heaven. John, in this chapter, is speaking of the duty and necessity of believing in Christ, and the dread consequences of disbelieving, the testimony of God concerning his Son, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The substance of this testimony is found in our text, which communicates two facts.

1. That God hath given to us eternal life. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life." What is eternal life? Where shall we look for an answer to this question? There is not much light thrown on this question in the Old Testament, but in the New Testament, and especially in the writing of John, man's immortality is clearly recorded.

As life is more than mere existence, so eternal life is more than unending existence. Unbelievers and devils will have unending existence, but they will not have eternal life. The nature of eternal life is not physical, but spiritual. A man may exist physically, and yet be an entire stranger to eternal life. Indeed, all men have physical life, but not eternal life. Eternal life is more than spiritual existence. Angels are living spirits and hence have spiritual existence, and will live, therefore, forever, but we never read of their having eternal life. This life is that ideal humanity of which Christ is the first born. It is the opposite of eternal death, which is not the loss of being, but of well-being. Neither soul-sleeping nor annihilation has any claim to consideration.

The Believer in Christ has eternal life now. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." Christ said, "verily, verily, I say unto you. He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." The irreligious man is morally dead. The dead regard not any thing. They are unaffected by the things that move the living, and care not for the objects of earthly ambition. They hear not the voice nor the tread of the living. Thus it is with the sinner. He sees the beauty of purity and holiness. Hears not the voice of God, nor regards his threatenings. He is without God in the world. The Christian realizes the existence of God, and lives with him. He hears his voice, and obeys him. He sees him in everything in nature and providence. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." He has new thought, new loves, new desires, new hopes, and new life for new objects. Everything in this life is made subordinate to God and eternal things. He can say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."

Religion in its nature and blessings is one and the same, here and in heaven. The happiness and joy of the Christian life here is living unto God being sensible of his presence, love, glory, and majesty. The happiness of heaven flows from the same foundation. There we shall see God as he is clothed in all his created glory, and shall live in sweet communion with him. The joys of the Christian life here shall expand into the sweeter and fuller joys of heaven. Hence when a man is converted and brought into Christian life here he is said to have eternal life. He is born into a new life of loving obedience to God, that grows up into the fullness of spirit life in heaven. This spiritual birth is essential to our admission into heaven, for heaven is not only a place, but also a state of purity and fellowship with God. No man can be admitted into, nor can he enjoy the happiness of heaven, without this change of heart. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Thus you see that necessity for this change of heart is founded in the nature of things, and that there is no other possible way for admission into heaven. This is a solemn fact, but men do not realize its fearful import. They rush on in the pursuit of the objects of earthly ambition, and the carnal pleasures of life, just as though there is nothing higher to live for. A man may live for, and if possible attain the highest honors and the richest pleasures of this life, but when life ends what can these things do for him? He must pass on, and leave them all behind. They are nothing to him then, and what has he in the great future? Nothing that can bring peace and happiness. In view of this fact Christ asks, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" 1 John 2:15-17.

This change of heart that brings us into fellowship with God now brings present peace of mind and comfort of heart. Then our sins are all pardoned, and when all nature feel his presence, and we realize our accountability to him, we are not afraid, nor do we dread the future; for we are at peace with him, and know that when we pass into eternity he will receive us to the arms of his love. We have nothing to dread in the future. Heaven will be our eternal home, and there we shall enjoy the society of the holy angels and of the pure and good of all ages and climes. Thus you see, my friends, that the religion of Christ secures to us the highest possible joys here, and enables us to get the greatest good out of this life. Why not then accept Christ as your Lord and Master at once, and live for him and heaven? Why not? can you give any good reason for delay? Is it to your highest interest here, and will it bring richer rewards in heaven to delay? Certainly not. The Master says, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you."

Eternal life also embraces the idea of endless existence in heaven. This Christ has promised to all his faithful disciples, and he is able to do all that he has promised. He says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." The believer in Christ is safe, and he shall live forever.

II. Eternal life is in Christ. God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." How is this life to be obtained? Not by natural descent. Our parents may have this eternal life, but we cannot inherit it from them. Christ "came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." This eternal life is not obtained by development of man's nature. There are a class of so called Christian teachers who propose to save man by educating him, but he needs more than education. He needs salvation, and eternal life is a gift. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." He said of his disciples, "I give unto them eternal life." Eternal life is imparted by the life giving spirit as the vitalizing force in the new nature. "God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." "In him was life, and the life was the light of man." "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

It is by repentance toward God, and through faith in Christ that we are quickened from death in sin, and made spiritual alive to God, heaven, and eternal things Christ tells us that we are sinners, and must be pardoned, or we cannot be saved; that a life of obedience to him will lead us to heaven and eternal life; that a life of disobedience to his authority will bring present condemnation, and eternal ruin. "He that believeth on him is not condemned: and he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; for the wrath of God abideth on him." When a man believes these statements of Christ, and lets them govern him, they will restrain all his evil passions, and quicken him to a new life of loving obedience to God. It is in this way that "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is only through faith in Christ, and obedience to his teaching that we can have eternal life. Matt. 7:24-27.

It is through Christ that the Christian is kept spiritually alive. "Abide in me," said Christ, "and I in you."

So the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me." The branch cut off from the vine will perish, and the Christian cut off from vital connection through faith with Christ will die spiritually.

Man has the functions for eternal life, and has more or less of it communicated to him; but the source and supply of this life is outside of himself. Here is his security. It is hid with Christ in God. It is as the spring hidden in the impenetrable rock. "The water that I will give him a well of water, springing up into eternal life.

"The element of life which issues from the parent fountain of life must also return to its primitive source. Here is warning. Though we have the functions for this life, they may be but feebly exercised because of a small supply of this vitality. We could have larger supply if we would. The reservoir may be full, the conduits, service pipes and plumbing all right, but the faucets may not be open.

"As this life is in Christ, we accept Him or remain destitute of it. He who has the Son has the life; he who has not the Son of God has not the life."

It is the nature of life to draw to itself things suitable and necessary to its perpetuation and development. Life in the vegetable draws from the air, water and earth whatever is essential to its growth. On the other hand life rejects and seeks to expel whatsoever is hurtful. If a tooth dies and commences to decay, and thus becomes an injury, life immediately sets to work to lift it out of the jaw; and in time will do this. Thus spiritual life in the heart and mind of the believer draws to itself from the fountain of life all that is essential to its sustenance and development, and seeks to expel the relics of sin from the moral nature.

SELECTIONS

Christian Unity.

This is one of the live questions of the present decade, pressing more and more to the front, attracting much thought and eliciting no little discussion. The end will not be reached by legislation, but by the growth of a vital principle. A dispassionate discussion of the subject will contribute to that growth, and facilitate a sound judgment on the issue. Even a casual observer must see that there have been great changes in the public sentiment of Christendom. Time was, within the memory of men now living, when denominations were at war with each other. The Methodists were pretty sure they well nigh held a monopoly of vital spiritual piety; the Baptists believed the immersed only were subjects of the Kingdom; Presbyterians were very sure that the Westminster Confession and the Shorter Catechism were essentials to genuine piety; and Protestant Episcopalians saw no way of acceptance with God but through the priestly functions of the historic Episcopate. On the basis of these differences, the religious press teemed with polemics. Religious controversies on baptism, or the decrees, or apostolical succession were the rage. Men of a warlike turn armed themselves to the teeth for these gladiatorial combats. Each denomination conscientiously believe that its presence was a necessity in every town and neighborhood. It is not so now. When has there been a religious controversy either in pulpit or press? This, at least, is a time of peace. Denominations are beginning to recognize each other.

Episcopalians have so far changed in this that they are really seeking union with other bodies. Methodists no longer discount the religion of a pious Presbyterian. A leading Baptist minister says the distinctive features of Baptists are not immersion and close communion. The upright, useful lives, the triumphant deaths of Christian, of whatever name, have demonstrated the soundness of their faith. And now fraternal messengers are beginning to carry messages of recognition and love from one to another.

Christian unity, as we see it, does not depend on exact sameness of polity or exact alignment of belief, but rather upon a full and frank recognition of each other as parts of the whole, members of the body of Christ. If one comes saying "Let us unite and be one," yet does not recognize you as a true church, trust him not. There is deception. It is not union he seeks, but rather absorption. That the times are not yet fully ripe for ecclesiastical union is apparent from the fact that there is yet lacking the fullest and frankest mutual recognition. However, Christendom is moving in that direction. A careful study of New Testament doctrine and an infusion of New Testament life with all its divine graces, will develop these tendencies as rapidly as is consistent with the normal condition of the body ecclesiastic. The ark of progress is moving, let no profane but well meaning hand touch it, lest there be displeasure from the Lord.

In the very nature of things, federation and co-operation must precede organic union. The former will come when we have reached that State that we can trust the entire occupancy of a field to another. So long as any church thinks its presence necessary in a field occupied by another, co-operation is a fiction, and organic union a long way off. A time of full recognition, co-operation and federation will make the way easy for organic union.

There may be a few denominations ready to unite in one ecclesiastical body, but only a few. There should be more official fraternity between different bodies. Some few are ready for co-operation and some for federation.—Christian Advocate.

Steps Forward in Christian Union.

N. Y. INDEPENDENT

We published last week an account of the negotiations for union between the Free Baptists of Michigan and the regular Baptists of the same State. It is a movement which has much to commend it, and it needs now only the ratification of the respective churches to be an accomplished fact.

We have no doubt the news of this projected union has proved a great surprise both to Free Baptists and to Regular Baptists, and we may add also to Congregationalists in other States. The latter have taken some not very effective steps toward union with the Free Baptists and have always been met in a kindly spirit. Their National Council has once and again commended the proposition, and has made it clear that no obstacles on their side would be put in the way. On the other hand it has been supposed that union with the Regular Baptists was impossible on account of the emphasis which the latter put upon close communion, a practice which is abhorrent to the Free Baptists. Their distinctive doctrines are open communion and the denial of the Calvinistic doctrine of election and reprobation help by the Regular Baptists. We can hardly believe that this union in Michigan indicates that Free Baptists have become adherents either of close communion or Calvinism. It is much more likely that it means that the Regular Baptists of Michigan will not insist upon either the one or the other, but are ready to grant perfect liberty within their own body. This, we say, is a most happy conclusion, and if we interpret the action aright such an end of the schism between the two is a victory for Christian union.

The conditions of the union we have already given in full. The Regular Baptists "signify their acceptance of the doctrine of the freedom and responsibility of man," and the Free Baptists their "acceptance of the doctrines of grace." These terms are very indefinite, and their exact interpretation is "left to the individual, subject only to the mind of the Lord as revealed in the New Testament." Nothing could be more satisfactory than this. But this is the easiest part of the difficulty to be solved. The greatest difficulty, practically, is that which has to do with open communion. On this point, according to the agreement, after stating the principle on which both agree, that "baptism should follow regeneration," it is added that it "properly precedes the Lord's Supper and all public Christian duties," and that it is "advisable that invitations to the Lord's Supper be omitted, the announcement to the Lord's Supper being considered sufficient." It will be noticed that a statement of the method of baptism by immersion is purposely omitted as something on which both agree, and that the Regular Baptists can assert that if it "properly precedes the Lord's Supper," no one should be received unless baptized by immersion; while the Free Baptists are at liberty to say that while this is the proper and orderly manner yet Christian charity respect the honest conviction of those who have been otherwise baptized. It is also agreed that "watch care" membership should be discontinued where it has existed, that is, among the Free Baptists, over those who have not been immersed, but who were admitted to the Lord's table. This is the only recommendation which seems to bear heavily upon the Free Baptists.

On the whole we desire to regard this union, which we hope will be consummated, as not a step backward toward close communion, on the part of Free Baptists, but as a step toward breadth and fellowship with the great Church of Christ on the part of the Regular Baptists. We have no doubt that the practice of open communion is spreading among them, and that a definite enforcement of close communion, as in the late case in Kentucky, would be condemned by a very large part of their Northern churches.

We trust our Congregational contemporaries will consider with a good deal of seriousness the advance toward union made in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, the organ of the Christian Connection. What it says is so serious and so important that the already given in substance in our columns, we may again repeat it more fully:

"There are no two churches, perhaps, that could so easily unite, without sacrificing the fundamental things, as the Christians and the Congregationalists. They are the same in polity; but, what is more important, they are alike in spirit. Their preaching is similar, their open fellowship is alike, their insistence upon character as the chief thing is the same. We can see no reasons why these two bodies should not begin at once to arrange by conference and kindly overtures for co-operation, to take steps that will lead to final consolidation. There will be friction, of course, for some on both sides will begin to arouse suspicion and to contend for the last inch of non-essentials; but all those that are more anxious for the triumph of the kingdom of Heaven than for the sway of their own ecclesiastical plans, will hail the movement in God's name."

This is a very important utterance; it calls for responsive action. We believe the Congregational National Council, at its session last October, appointed a committee whose duty it is to consider such matters, and we call their special attention to this subject. Union may be talked of for years and approved generally in a miscellaneous sort of way; but unless some one takes hold of it and assumes the labor of making that concrete which is approved in the abstract, nothing will come of it except—what is very valuable, to be sure—an era of good feeling. There are very close ties of sympathy which ought to unite the Free Baptists, the Christian Connection and the Congregationalists. Union of any of these bodies should receive careful consideration, but there is no reason for prolonged delay.

The Mormon Temple Dedicated.

The dedication of the Mormon Temple, at Salt Lake City, began April 6th, and the services were to continue for a week or more. July 28, 1847, Brigham Young stuck his cane into the soil, saying, "Here will be the temple of our God!" On that spot the work of excavation began February 14, 1853, and the corner stones were laid April 6, 1853, now forty years ago. The block whereon the temple is located is called Temple Block. The stone of which it is built is white granite, and was taken from a quarry twenty-miles south of the city. The walls of the temple were sunk 16 feet below the surface, and are 16 feet thick. At the top the walls are 6 feet thick. The length of the building is 189 feet, 6 inches, and the width is 99 feet. There are six towers, the three east towers rising to a height of 222½ feet, the three west towers being from 3 to 10 feet lower. Surmounting a central spire is the statue of the Angel Morono. The entire building covers an area of 21,850 square feet. Each tower may be ascended by circular stairways to the top, the steps being over 200, all having been cut by hand out of solid marble. The temple has four floors, but the assembly room is on the fourth floor, the ceiling of which is 36 feet high. Beautiful galleries with bronzed rails, extend around the room, the finish of the whole interior being perfectly magnificent. On the lower marble floor is the baptismal font, where the living are baptized for the dead; it rests on twelve brazen oxen. The temple is lighted by 2,000 electric lamps, and two elevators are run by the same power. A hotwater system heats the entire building. The cost of the structure has exceeded $4,000,000, and withal it is a magnificent building, and the first object to attract the eye as one enters the valley. The temple is divided between the Melchizedek and the Aaronic priesthood, the latter occupying the west, and the former the east part of the structure. The latter represent the temporal, and the former the spiritual interests of the church. Fifty thousand saints were expected to be in attendance at the ceremonies. We trust that the temple represents the past rather than the future glory of the Mormon system. Mormonism, in its moral character, has been a stench in the nostrils of Americans.

The Refined Dance.

We ask a careful reading of the following, taken from the Southern Christian Herald.

We have been asked by some (who say they have no use for the hateful waltz or lustful "German") what we think of "the more refined dance." It is a good old German proverb that "if you give the devil your little finger, he will soon grip the whole hand." Keep away, therefore from the most refined dance, (so called) for even the least objectionable quadrille is giving the devil a hold of your little finger, and he will soon draw you on to the repulsive waltz and nauseating "German."

A Little Twisted.

A gentleman in New York recently said to another, "Is Mr. L—— a Christian?" He replied, "Well, yes; Godward he is all right, but manward he is just a little twisted." How many really good people lay themselves open to this description! They do not carry out their Christian principles so as to be void of offense. Their life is not lived up to their faith. In small things they dishonor God. In some of their common-life dealings they do not carry out their principles amongst fellow-men. We are afraid the "little twist" is more or less to be seen in us all. Alas! twists of temper, twists of inconsistency, society twists, business twists, home twists! My God set us in our daily life a straight backbone, so that we may walk up right amongst our fellow-men on our way to heaven! —Ercbanje.

At some time in the world's history (nobody knows when) there lived a very just and upright man. His home was probably in some part of Asia, or Asia Minor, we are not certain which, but that does not make much difference. This good man's name was Job. Now Job is not a very pretty name, but probably it was considered so then. Job's parents would hardly have given him an ugly name if they could have helped it, and we suppose there were plenty of names for them to select from then, just as there are now for parents who want to name their children. Job was a good man, and we suppose he must have been a good boy. Not every good man was good when he was a boy, but yet we believe that Job was a good boy, and his parents wanted to give him a name appropriate to his character, and so they named him Job. Whether this name was very common at that time, we know not, but it is certain that there is a sacredness about it which all modern Christians reverence, because of the fact associated with it. We often hear people speaking highly of a name, and saying there is nothing in it, but the reader will please excuse us for demurring from such an opinion, because every one should feel proud of his name and always so live that his name will not become tarnished by bad deed which he has done.

As we just now remarked, Job's home was either in Asia, or Asia Minor. His home, we are told, was a very beautiful place surrounded on all sides by fertile fields, and lovely forest; bright skies constantly hovered overhead, and odorous flowers beneath his feet. His home was a happy hospitable home. It was a place sacred to the happy family which dwelt therein. There Job's parents had moved when they were first married, and had begun house keeping for themselves. There they had reared a large family of children, for Job had many, many brothers and sisters. People were very prolific in those days, and nearly all families were remarkable for their size. In this home Job's parents had battled with the evil things of life, and enjoyed the good. It had been a home of joy and care. Job had, when he was very small, played around the door-step many a time, and had annoyed his mamma by trying to swallow every curious little pebble or sti k which he happened to get between his tiny fingers. After he grew large enough, he had spent many pleasant hours chasing the calves up and down the road, sometimes yoking them to his little cart and taking a ride, and sometimes, tying them together, just to see them pull and jerk one another, in their efforts to get loose.

The country in which Job lived was especially adapted to the raising of sheep. His father probably raised large numbers, and it fell to Job's lot, when he grew large enough, to help his father clip the wool. Boys do not generally like to engage in any serious kind of labor, but this was not the case with Job. He enjoyed helping his father, and being of an inquiring mind, he often asked a great many questions about the why's and wherefore's concerning sheep and not only sheep, but also, many other animals which thrived in that region. We feel quite sure of this on account of the wonderful success Job had, when he became a man, and undertook to make a living for himself.

People sometime's get fretted with their children for asking so many questions, but this ought not so to be, because an inquiring mind is a sign of mental activity, and mental activity will always bring to a man success in life.

After Job had lived with his father until the arrival of manhood, he got married, and built for himself a lovely home. The lady he married was, perhaps, a very pretty woman, but like a great many men and women of this day, she was very fickle. She did not have that stability and tenacity of purpose about her which her husband had, and if she had married a wicked man, she might have been wicked too. But we believe that she and Job lived happily together, because Job was very prosperous in his efforts to make a living, and this is one of the main secrets in having a happy household. They loved each other, and felt that they were truly, "Two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one." They made home the brightest, dearest, happiest place in the world by dispelling from its halls those things which are apt to produce unpleasantness. And when they were drawn closer together in the band of union by the birth of their first-born, their joy was unbounded.

In this home Job and his wife lived happily a long time. Job accumulated great riches. He had seven thousand sheep, three thousand camels, five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she-asses. In addition to these things, he had many servants to wait on him and his household. So magnificent was his style of living, that he was considered the greatest man of the East. Seven sons and three daughters blessed his household, and for these he was accustomed to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings, in order that what ever sins they might commit might be forgiven. Thus Job lived in affluence and authority, and was held in honor by all his neighbors.

Should Prizes be Given Sunday School.

[Essay by Mintie A. Whitesell, Elon College, May, 1893.]

It has for some time been the custom in Sunday school to offer some prize as an incentive to exertion. I have been called upon therefore to discuss the question whether such an incentive is a proper one to be employed in Sunday school.

Just here I will say there are different kinds of prizes obtained in Sunday school.

First is that most valuable prize we all may gain by honest effort and faithful labor in Sunday school it is "Heaven." We should earnestly strive for this best of all prizes.

But lastly, and to dwell upon, is that little luxurious prize; and if there is any good to be expected from the awarding of such prizes will it counter-balance the evils that spring from the practice? Will the good of the whole school be advanced by such a measure—and will this be a permanent or temporary good? These are questions which press for an honest answer and if any of my hearers differ with me they should abide by truth rather than by prescriptive usage.

Excuse me for personal reference but I have been winner of prizes and till a short time past would confess with a strong bias in favor of the use of prizes in Sunday school I have tested their efficiency with a growing conviction that the prize is not the proper instrumentality to create a healthy interest in Sunday school. Perhaps I am expected to assign some reasons for the faith I entertain since I have expressed my opinion so decidedly. I will try to express such objections as have been suggested to my young mind by limited experience and observation.

Prize offered to a Sunday school in such a way that all may compete for them and but a few get them will nearly always produce evil sufficient to overbalance the good. I do not mean to say there is no good derived from prizes in Sunday school; some times they are found to create much interest among small children. Though if that interest be tested it might be found to contain greater evil than good.

To offer a prize gives prominence to many an unworthy person and teaches him to undervalue the high or most holy reward of a good conscience. The prize is placed in the fore-ground of his field of vision and very often cause him to exclude the more abiding reward. He thinks little of duty of Bible teachings. The prize outshines all these to him. We very often hear such remarks. "O yes he is a faithful attendant, or he answers promptly. He is trying to get the prize he says."

A spirit of rivalry exist among pupils working for a prize. All are pursuing one object which but one can obtain and disappointment and envy falls on the losers. This ought not to be so, but seldom can it be said it is not so. Did any of us ever work for a prize with a spirit desirous of someone else getting it? I have in mind an instance wherein a young man labored diligently to win a prize that his sweetheart was working for at the same time. He wanted her to get it but when he found she was going to make a failure he worked harder himself that he might win the prize for her. See got it too.

Is it not true that but few are stimulated by the hope of gaining the prize while so many become discouraged feeling very soon that they are not likely to receive any honors and retain but little spirit to share the toils? Of course this is not always the case there are few among the many who ceasing to strive for the prize toil for the more honorable blessing—"A home in Heaven."

It is very difficult to award prizes so as to give justice to all.

It rarely happens that the case is perfectly clear. We all know instances wherein there is much perplexity. If such abuses—abuses that might well make an angel weep—are the accompaniments of the prize system may we not well do without it? I use the term angel because many of us when expecting to receive a prize feel as happy as we could imagine an angel to feel. Then to be disappointed who would not feel bad?

God rewards effort and worth. Prizes reward success and talent.

We should not violate this rule of scripture which announces that "to whom much is given of him much should be required." God looketh upon the heart as man cannot do.

Pupils who work for prizes in Sunday school seldom continue to work faithfully after those prizes have been withdrawn.

In a Sunday school of which I was a member, not long since a prize was offered to the most faithful attendant and in case there should be more than one faithful, the prize was to have been divided equally among the faithful. Near the close of the year it was noticed that quite a number had been faithful. It was then decided to take the money and instead of purchasing prizes purchase other necessities for the school, which of course was all important but the point I want to get at is this—in a short time the number of faithful decreased till in the end there were "none faithful, no not one."

Those who have used prizes in Sunday school at first find it very difficult to awaken an interest there when the prizes have been withdrawn, and have again returned to the prize system believing it essential to their success.

Now don't you think it would be wise to omit such culture and avoid evil results?

Good intentions can't be bought with prizes and wherever good intention is exhibited we need no prizes.

Now quoting the words of a poem by Bonar.

"He liveth long who liveth well,
All other life is short and vain
He liveth longest who tell
Of living most for Heavenly gain."

And again he says:

"Fill up each hour with what will last,
Buy up the moments as they go,
The life above when this is past
Is the ripe fruit of life below."

Let it be true interest and love of God, that draws us to Sunday school, and not prizes.

Beware of Open Hatches "

Many times during these last few months, my beloved hearers, have I seen the notice that serves me as a text this week displayed in conspicuous places on shipboard.

These notices are posted to warn careless people of perfectly patent, but often unnoticed, dangers. Any one with a pair of eyes in his head ought to be able to see an open hatch way, one would think; and yet the Peninsular and Oriental, the Messageries Maritimes, and the Austrian Lloyds, and ever so many other lines, think it necessary to post notices of this sort near the hatchway of their vessels.

So perhaps you will bear with your old preacher if he points out some open hatches into which you may stumble unawares. Every preacher and moralist posts his notices over the yawning pit of the saloon, the low theatre, the gambling-den, the vile book. If you are not twice blind with sealed eyelids and wax-stopped ears, you cannot stumble into these pitfalls unawares, but here are one or two other open hatches which you are not so likely to see.

Hatchway No. 1, Selfishness and self-will. You call it manliness, self-respect, a regard for your own rights. You are not careful of the rights and feelings and opinions of others. Little by little you become arrogant and insufferable. Your friends fall away and your enemies rejoice. Almost before you know it you are at the bottom of the dark hatch, and it is much easier to fall down than to crawl up.

Hatchway No 2, Love of money. This yawning chasm, too, is often concealed from the careless traveller. He thinks that he is wisely providing for his family; that he is laying up something for a "rainy day"; that he is only prudent and forehanded; when in reality, he is mean and grasping; taking every advantage, fair and unfair, that his position gives him; and grabbing at every possible chance to make money, as Judas clutched the thirty pieces of silver. Look out for this hole. Many otherwise pure and white souls have fallen here.

Hatchway No 3, Fretfulness and peevishness. This is the hatchway into which delicately balanced and sensitive souls most often slip unawares. They so easily lose their equipoise, their nerves are so often rasped, their teeth are so often set on edge, that it requires unusual care on their part not to stumble into the pitfall of a peevish, unhappy, vixenish old age.

It will be seen that these danger signs are in different places on different vessels. The hatchway is not always in the same part of the ship. Look out, my hearers, for your own special open hatchway. It may be covered with a substantial-looking tarpaulin; but the chasm yawns beneath, and it is not safe to walk with your eyes shut anywhere. Consider your own dangers. Open your eyes to the perils of your own disposition, nature, environment. Beware of open hatchways.—Parson Mosback in Golden Rule.

The Christ-Life.

There are some truths which can be interpreted only by experience. The teacher cannot learn them in his study, nor expound them by philosophy; he must learn them in his own heart, and then utter as well as he can the secret of his own heart, in the confidence that other hearts which have felt the same secret will respond to his utterance. "For me to live is Christ" is one of these truths. One cannot enter into it by the door of philosophy, of argument, or even imagination. If we have not known what this Christ-life is, no one can tell it to us.

This does not mean that every one must become a missionary or a minister. Amos Lawrence carried this spirit into the countingroom; William of Orange carried this spirit into statecraft; Havelock carried this spirit into the camp; Arnold carried this spirit into the school-room; and there are thousands and tens of thousands of mothers who have carried this spirit into the nursery. It is the spirit of one who, whether he is in business, or in the teacher's chair, or in the camp, or in the household, or wherever he may be, is trying to do the work of Christ in the spirit of Christ.—Selected.

Y. M. C. A. Convention.

The Thirtieth International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America met in Indianapolis, Ind., May 10 14, over 400 delegates being in attendance. The officers of the Convention were President, G. N. Bierce, Dayton, Ohio; Vice President, L. H. Packard, Montreal; Robert A. Orr, Pittsburgh, Pa.; W. Woods White, Atlanta; Joseph E. Clifford, Grand Forks, N. D.; secretary James A. Dummett, Portland, Ore.

Each topic considered was introduced in a carefully prepared paper and a brief time was given for general discussion.

Among the topics were: The opportunities of the Young Men's Christian Associations in the promotion of Bible study, which was opened by Professor W. W. White of Xenia, Ohio. No subject was of more interest to the delegates.

Educational work, its best form and methods was presented by Mr. E. L. Sney of Dayton, Ohio. An interesting exhibit was made from the educational departments of the Associations.

The growth and prospects of Association work among colored young men was opened by Mr. W. A. Hunton of Norfolk, Va. In the discussions that followed it was stated that two missionaries now at work in Africa had gone from colored Associations in educational institutions and five more were in training for the same field.

Work among railroad men was presented by Mr. C. M. Hobbs, General Purchasing Agent of the Denver and Rio Grande R. R., and a most interesting topic it was.

Striking aspects of the college field today brought out delegates from some twenty of the leading educational institutions.

Association work in foreign lands was presented by Mr. L. D. Wislard who gave the result of four years' travel in the East.

Interesting papers were presented on Association athletics by J. H. McCurdy, M. D., of New York; on work for boys by Mr. D. W. Corbett of Montreal, and on extension of Association work by Seldon Spencer, Esq., of St. Louis. A paper on the training of secretaries presented by Mr. L. H. Packard of Montreal gave the opportunity for the presentation of the work of the Secretarial Training Schools at Springfield and Chicago.

Reports were presented from 1439 Associations, showing an aggregate membership of 245,809. They employ 1185 paid officers, own 284 building worth $12,581,000 and other property in excess of all debts (including buildings) to the amount of $14, 208,043. An aggregate of 2,582,365 young men attended the young men's Bible classes.

On Saturday ex-President Harrison and ex-Postmaster General Wanamaker visited the Convention and each made a brief and interesting address. The President referred to the fact that in the earlier days of its history he had been president of the Indianapolis Association. Mr. Wanamaker also spoke of his having filled the same office for the Association in Philadelphia.

During the sessions of the Conference information was received of the proposed opening of the grounds of the Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath day. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted and ordered sent to the President, the attorney-general and the Directory of the Exposition:

Whereas, The Young Men's Christian Associations of North America through the last International Convention at Kansas City, petitioned against the opening of the World's Fair; and,

Whereas, It has been voted by the local management to open the gates of the Fair on Sunday, with the charge of an admission fee,

Now, therefore, resolved, That this Convention enters its solemn protest against what we believe to be an open, flagrant and unwarranted violation of the law by the Exposition authorities; that, in view of the public character and purpose of the Exposition the whole people are vitally interested that it shall not be operated in violation of the law of the land; and that we condemn the proposal to open the gates with a charge of an admission fee as an evasion unworthy a law-abiding people, and as a painful evidence of the disregard by the management of the expressed opinions and protests of the large majority of the law-abiding and Christian people of the land.

Resolutions were adopted reaffirming the Portland test of active membership and recommending its adoption by all the Associations and setting apart the second Sunday in November as a day of thanksgiving and of prayer for young men. It was recommended that $75,000 annually be secured to carry on the work of the International Committee for 1893 and 1894.

On Sunday the pulpits of the city were largely occupied by delegates. In the afternoon a meeting for young men, numbering over two thousand, was held and nearly two hundred expressed a desire that they might lead a new life. At night a farewell meeting was participated in by the delegates in which there were brief addresses by the officers of the Convention, representative of the city and churches, and by delegates from all parts of the country.

Before the opening of the Convention a four days' Conference of Association secretaries was held in Louisville, Ky., over two hundred being in attendance.

What We are Doing.

The N. C. and Va. Christian Conference I notice has gained 411 members in the year beginning November 1891, ending November 1892. Will these new members come up this year with 10 cents each for home mission? If so we will make a gain of $41 10. We have 6289 old members, which, of course we hope will pay 10 cents each this will raise $628 90. Brethren and sisters try your hand this year. See if you can get your new members to pay up promptly this will swell the amount to $670 00. This would be a nice little fund, and no one hurt. Why the Children in this conference could do this much if it was fully impressed on their minds the need of home missions. Brethren in the ministry, push this enterprise. Give this department of the mark to your active young lady friends. The church that sends up the largest amount of home mission money according to membership this year will receive a present at conference for its most active young lady member. All that will try for help seize and their names and the name of the young lady they wish it awarded to the SUN for publication at once so we can purchase the prize. Now young ladies try your hand this year. It is fair. Now we have notified you in time. You may have as many helpers as you like. Beg all you see to help you. This will be a year long to be remembered. We intend to give you a keep sake to hand down to your posterity. Then you will have the Banner church. Send in your names at once the more racers we have the finer will it be, we may have two prizes first and second. So if you fail on the first you can get the second. The committee will soon be made up to fix up the prizes.

Influence.

Every one is possessed of power, and that power we term influence: the result of which is either good or bad. The ordinary intelligence of every human being places him far above the level of the brute creation, and raises him to a grander and nobler sphere of civilization. Thus we have the opportunity of exercising influence for good. Should we drop below the standard of Christian morality then we put forth an influence for evil.

The desire to wield influence is not only natural, and instructive, but it is praiseworthy. When properly guarded and controlled it will be sure to bring forward aspiration for something higher. We do not believe that anyone however lowly or destitute, can be found without influence.

Every act of our lives produces some kind of result. If it is done in public, the influence is broader and stronger. If it is done in private, it is confined entirely to ourselves, and serves to debase our nature if of a low character.

The greatest influence on earth is that which is given around the fireside. Our children will conform to our rules for good just as easily as they will for bad, and most deeds of shame has their origin in the family circle, children who grow up undisciplined by the gentle influence of loving parents will put to naught the most elevating principles that surge through the human heart.

The young man, the young lady, the boy and girl of our schools, and churches, sends out in their career in life, an influence, that makes, or mars their future.

Though I am yet young, "I have seen the son or daughter of loving parents grasp firmly, in one hand, the tender heart of the mother, in the other the gray hairs of the father, and with rapid strides bring both down to the grave, which to them, seemed their only resting place from a life that had been a mistake." How often do we see the parents of large families debase themselves at the wine cup. One son if no more, is most sure to follow, and sometimes the daughter too. Such is influence. One's whole character is shown by the influence we have over our associates and theirs by the influence they have over us.

It would be torture to my soul if I knew that I had ever wielded a bad influence. That some one in this life had made a sad failure, and all because I had failed to do my duty, and an influence for evil had gone out. Every trait of our disposition sends forth some significance, and it will kindle a radiance whose glow will embrace both poles and encompass the whole earth. A whisper of kindness to the destitute, a smile to the sad, a sincere shake of the hand to the bowed down, will live through all ages to come. Every act that has ever been committed since the world began still lives. None of the great and good of past ages are dead. They are yet loving, growing, and multiplying, while their sons are basking in the sunlight of heaven's glories, and their heads are pillowed on the bosom of a Saviour's love.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Alabama Letter.

EDITOR SUN:—Last 4th Sunday I preached at Bro. G. W. Antray's residence. We had a good meeting the Holy Spirit was with us indeed.

The 5th Sunday our District Meeting was in session, and to say the least of it we had the most profitable meeting we have ever had. The subjects were all discussed in a Christian spirit, and I must say that our improvement has been wonderful since our last District Meeting. We today have a ministry that will compare favorably with any other Denomination in the country. We have some young men who have enlisted in the work with full purpose of heart. And I just want to say to these young brethren that what we need is a more thorough consecration to the work. I never felt more determined to give my whole time the work than at present. May God help us to be faithful in all things.

The 1st Sunday I was with the church at Pleasant Grove. We had a very good meeting. I can't see much sign of improvement with the church at this place but sincerely hope the Lord may bless us here this year.

The 2nd Sunday I filled my regular appointment at Antioch. We had a good meeting both days. We can certainly see some improvements at this place for which I devoutly thank God.

Saturday night before the second we preached to the people of Mt. Zion church. We were greeted by a large and attentive audience. This was my first visit to this church. I find the church in good condition. The brethren here have a church house that would be a credit to any community. Bro. Knight is pastor he is greatly beloved by his people. We spent the night with Bro. S. W. Sledge, and his excellent family. They certainly know how to provide for a tired preacher, may the Lord bless them.

While we enjoyed good meetings, and spiritual feasts from the presence of God. We heard some very sad news. We learned that death had visited and claimed our victim our much beloved friend and schoolmate Mr. Thomas Hodges. How sad it is to part with, 'Tou' he was so friendly, so loving, so gentle, so studious, while in school. He was the only child of William and Mary Hodges, but now he's gone dear schoolmate, who may read this, let us offer up to God fervent prayers for the grief stricken father and mother and aged grandmother that they may bow in humble submission to the will of our Lord "who doeth all things well" and in the mean time let us all prepare to meet our God in peace. The loved ones have my prayers.

Prof. Finquay and wife are visiting relatives in Georgia.

Rev. T. H. Elder is much improved in health.

Oae Mr. Robertson living near Lafayette Ala. was killed by lightning a few days ago while plowing in his field, his horse was killed also.

Mr. Strickland died suddenly at his home near Antioch church last 5th Sunday. Verily death comes in every form and how many are not prepared. What a sad, sad thought I will endeavor to write oftener in the future.

Yours in harness,

Bethel.

DEAR SUN:—The church at Bethel was dedicated the fifth Sunday in April in the presence of a very large audience. The dedicatory sermon was preached, and services performed by Rev. P. H. Fleming at 11 A. M. At 3 P. M. Bro. Fleming preached and administered the Lord's supper.

I filled my regular appointment at Bethel the first Sunday in May, and spent the week following very pleasantly in visiting the members of the church and friends of the community. While visiting, I found Rev. A. G. Anderson very feeble. Bro. Anderson is confined to his bed. May the Lord bestow his richest blessings upon him in his old age.

The Sabbath school is doing a good work, both at the church and school house. The school is held at the church in the morning, at the school house in the evening.

The school favors the convention, and will take part in the work. Let us have the convention.

Children's Day Service at the Raleigh Christian Church.

The Children's Day Service was held with the Raleigh church last Sunday at five o'clock. There were about fifty children engaged in the exercises, ranging in age from two to fourteen years old. These children are members of the society of "Little Workers." (This society is non-denominational and elects its own officers and votes its money to objects of its own selection).

There was but one notice of These Exercises given in the city papers; but by four o'clock the audience began to assemble; by five o'clock the house was crowded to its utmost eating capacity, with a large number standing while quite a number was unable to get into the house and went away. Promptly at five the services began, and for one hour, the entire audience seemed deeply interested and greatly to appreciate the songs and recitations of the children. We believe all went away saying "God bless the children and the Children's Day."

Just before the close of the exercises a "collection" was taken by two little girls and two little boys—"four years old but pretty tall," which amounted to quite a nice sum, and was for Home Mission in the American Christian Convention. To all who attended and contributed to the great success of the Children's Day we most sincerely extend thanks: to the parents of the little children we say, encourage them in their efforts to sing and recite for Jesus; to all we extend a hearty welcome to our services again. To the young ladies and young gentlemen who kindly aided in singing we return thanks.

Before closing, it may be of interest to say that, the Sunday school of the church is increasing, ten or twelve new scholars having entered within the past month. Slowly but we trust surely, the membership of the church increases.

Eton College Notes.

When we tell the readers of the SUN that we are now in the midst of final examinations, they will expect very little news from the College. The one great thing about which many are concerned is as to the result of examinations.

Miss Rathke who is a former student of Eton College is visiting Miss Ida Kernolle for a few days. We are glad to look into the face of any one who has been a student at this place.

Some of our boys attended the Commencement Exercises of Greensboro Female College last Thursday. They report a pleasant time with the fair ones of that College, but the Eton girls cannot be surpassed anywhere. If you don't believe this just come here the 8th of June, and see for yourself.

We are very much pleased to learn that so many of our Eastern Virginia friends will be with us at the closing exercises of this College.

The Eton College Sunday school elected the following officers for next year. Supt. W. D. Harward; Assistant Supt. J. M. Cook; Sec. W. T. Sears; Treas. Miss Bessie Moring; Organist. Miss Irene Clements. Mr. I. F. Pierce was also elected to attend the Summer School of Music in order to prepare him to lead the singing next year. We feel sure that with the above officers our school will continue to prosper and send forth its good influence. Just here let us say, that good singing is so essential to the best work in Sunday school, and each and every school should send a representative to the Summer School and have a good leader next year. It will cost only about $10.00 for a full course. Surely it will pay you to send. The time and place of the meeting will be announced later.

We suppose that examinations at Harvard deprived us of the pleasure of reading the news from that place. We have experienced something of the kind on a small scale so we can sympathize with Prof. Atkinson a little.

Do not forget that Commencement Exercises will begin here Tuesday of next week. We hope to see the chapel full at every meeting.

Very truly,

ELIJAH MOFFITT.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Notwithstanding the first Sunday morning, was gloomy, yet my congregation at Pleasant Grove, Va., was very large. It was a day of spiritual joy, the attention that was given to the entire service was an evidence of the interest on this occasion. After the sermon, the emblems of our Lord's body were administered to a large number of communicants, and thus a part of the holy day was spent. I felt that God was in His earthly temple. I think the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, and the church are in a favorable condition. May the blessed Father direct and prosper this dear people in all things. I desire here to express my sincere thanks to Sister Henry Headspeth and Thomas Mebane for valuable presents.

Second Sunday and Saturday before I was at Lugran, Va., here my congregation was very good and attentive. The house was packed with people the attention was good, the day was fine, and here we commemorated our dear Lord's death again, and we felt it was good to be there. Bless the Lord O my soul.

I was at Damases last Sunday and Saturday before, and Saturday we had a most interesting business meeting. On Sunday the congregation was good, and attentive. The communion service followed the sermon. It was a day of spiritual help to us all. Bro. Clements your good name is a household word here, they are anxious to see you and hear you preach again, can you not exchange appointments with us, and give this dear people a call? I am sure it would be highly appreciated. I was delighted to have Rev. T. W. Strow with us, he is spending a few months with his parents, but will neglect his appointments; he preached an excellent sermon on Saturday. My work I hope in fair condition.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Next week we will have the account of another meeting of Brethren Smith and Jones.

A large number of subscribers have been requested to "renew." Now why don't they renew!

Has your church been supplied with the Hymnary? Don't delay any longer but come in or send in and get a supply.

Those who have remitted this week will be receipted next week. The absence of Bro. Clements will account for the omission of the Receipt Column this issue.

We will make a specialty of shipping tags. Can furnish them in any quantity, printed or blank. We can make you advertising Blotters at a very low price. Write us for Samples and prices.

The editor of this paper has only to go down to Va. to be dubbed a D. D. It is true he is a fine looking gentleman and worthy of such honors, yet he is just plain Rev. W. G. Clements in name.—M.

The article, in this issue taken from the Raleigh Christian Advocate, on Christian Unity, is so near in accord with the spirit always held by the Christians, and is so Christ like in its tone, we hope none of the Sun's family will fail to read it.

We urge upon our churches the importance of Children's Day. Don't under any account, let this year pass without giving a day to the children. It is profitable to the local church and to the church at large. Last year the amount realized in collections as sent to J. J. Summerbell, was $3,850. Appropriate programs can be furnished by this office at 5 cents each or 50 cents per dozen.

Spring medicine and Hood's Sarsaparilla are synonymous terms, & popularly so.

Send in subjects for the program of the N. C., and Va., Christian Sunday School Convention to Rev. J. L. Foster, Raleigh, N. C.

The Elon College Commencement next week promises to be an affair of considerable importance and interest. Let every one who can attend.

The month of May was the time to take collection for the Norfolk Church, but if from any cause whatever any church has failed to take a collection and forward it to Col. A. Savage, Norfolk, Va., let it do so at the first opportunity.

The ashes of Jefferson Davis, whose life and work will always live as a loving memory with those whose lot was cast with him for weal or woe, were brought to this city Tuesday, the 30th ult., where they laid in state from 2:00 o'clock until 3:00 o'clock P. M. A noble man's memory was beautifully honored by appropriate exercises, and an immense crowd of people who are true citizens of the United States as well as admirers and once compatriots of the lamented dead, overflowed the city. All honor to a noble life!

The Name Christian.

With the following from the pen of Rev. W. W. Staley in the "Five Cardinal Principles Defined," by Rev. M. L. Hurley, we close this series, and will next week take up the subject—The Bible our Only Creed.

The prophet Isaiah, in chapter 43:7, in speaking of the church and the relation of her members to God Himself, says: "even every one that is called by My name." Dr. Adam Clark in his comments on Acts 11:26, says: "It is evident they had the name Christian from Christ their Master; as the Platonists and Pythagorians had their names from their masters Plato and Pythagoras. Now, as these had their names from those great masters, because they attended their teaching, and credited their doctrines; so the disciples were called Christians, because they took Christ for their teacher, crediting his doctrines, and following the rule of life laid down by him. We are told in first Peter this: "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf" (1 Peter 4:16) In the notes on Acts 11:26, by Jacobus, there is the following: "Christians, Now that Jews and Gentiles were to be gathered into one church and communion, it was ordered in God's providence, that the body of unbelievers should receive a new name, not national, but universal, and equally good for all people and all times; where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision," &c. Col 3:11. The fact is here recorded that the Disciples (or followers of Christ,) were first called Christians here at Antioch, where the first Gentile church was established. This name could not have been assumed by themselves, because it is used only twice in the New Testament besides this, and in no way to imply that it was a term of reproach and for which they were called to suffer. (1 Peter 4:16. ch. 26:28) Nor could it have been given to them by the Jews, for they would not thus have acknowledged the Messiahship of Jesus by applying the term (or Messiah) to His disciples. It was doubtless given to them by the heathen as a suitable name for distinguishing this body who were more and more prominent as followers of Christ, and would naturally be known by a name that should signify their relation to Him. The term itself seems to be rather of Roman than Greek origin. Yet it was doubtless also by the Divine ordainment that this should come to be their name, and the word signifying called, elsewhere means called by God, or by Divine direction. (Math 2:12, 22; ch. 10:22; Heb. 8:5; 11:7.) This was more than ten years after Christ left the earth. They accepted this name, however reproachfully intended, and they gloried in it; and often when threatened before magistrates their only answer was, "I am a Christian." The church at Antioch was the first Gentile church. The gospel of Christ was to embrace all, both Jews and Gentiles. Perhaps this is why this name was not given when the first converts were made. The universal purpose of the gospel was to be settled before the church was named. God's purposes have often been carried forward by what is sin for men. The treatment Joseph received from his brethren was wrong, and yet the purpose of God was fulfilled in this man. "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive." (Gen. 50:20.) Judas sinned in betraying his master and yet it did not prevent the purpose of God. "But all this was done, that the Scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled" (Matt. 26:56) Let it be granted, then, that this name was given by those who had no purpose of doing service for the church in Antioch, yet no doubt it resulted in the fulfillment of the Divine purpose concerning His church. When Paul made his defence before Agrippa a deep impression was made upon the king. Said he to Paul: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And Paul replied: "I would to God, that not only thou, but all that hear me this day, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds." (Acts 26:28.) Agrippa felt the force of Paul's argument and still he was unwilling to accept Christianity. He could not deny and he would not accept. But this shows that he knew the term that distinguished God's people. The King felt it and used it and Paul indorsed it. This name has ever been the one despised of men. And yet it ever prescribes its claims upon honest hearts. It asserts its significance in all pulpit appeals, in gospel work, in the history of twenty centuries, and in the word of God. The gospel is to the nations life and peace. The Christ in His official capacity is all in all to the church. Through Him the family of God is saved. From Him the family of God is named. Around Him the elect shall gather and rejoice in their eternal home. Before Him they shall stand arrayed in robes of white. At His feet they shall cast their glittering crowns. They shall be like Him, for they shall see Him as He is. They shall reign with him in heaven, and He will be the light thereof. It will be the same family in heaven that Christ has upon earth. There will be no change in their character or their name. All that men can hope is to enter heaven as they leave this world. Their is no work nor device in the grave. As the tree falls, so it must lie. Heaven is the final dwelling-place of the family of God. No man can come unto the Father, but by Christ. That name which relates the pardoned to Christ, teaches the world that Jesus is the Christ, distinguishes the people of God from the world, removes the obstacles in the way of brotherly love, makes all the good in religion grow out of its head, reveals the origin and end of religion to men, preserves the only name given among men whereby we must be saved, is the one most worthy as a title for the church. This name is not claimed as the property of one society; it is claimed that it is the name by which all should be called. The conclusion already reached prepares for one of two views:

1. That if a name has been given by Divine direction for God's church, then that is Christian. There is no other that has such claim to Divine.

2. That if God approves names chosen by men, then a society of believers has the right to adopt this name of their own choice.

The name is claimed therefore by right under 2 and by divine authority under 1. All others names will be unworthy a place in heaven. This name, Christian, would be appropriate in that bright realm. When the sun, and moon, and stars shall fade out in obscurity, the Lamb of God will light the kingdom wherein dwell the redeemed—when names now luminous with a brightness that outshines the sun and stars shall fade away in the distance, and revolutions and historic changes shall bring in others in the centuries yet unborn, the name Christian will shine on with a steady and increasing brilliance that shows the shining way to God. Human hearts will cling to it, and human love will gather around it, and conscience will own it, and history will embalm it, and God will defend it, because it binds the church to Himself.

A Nice Time at the Laying of the Corner Stone.

Laying the corner stone last Friday of the Memorial Church in Norfolk, Va., was a day long to be remembered. The day was fine, and the audience of good size. Many old-time and tried friends met and clasped the hand of friendship again in life. Quite a number of leading members of the Christian church from the surrounding country were present ready to cheer the Norfolk workers, both with their smiles and money. Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., J. P. Barrett, D. D., W. W. Staley, N. G. Newman and W. G. Clements of the Christian church were present. Several of the city pastors of other denominations were present and made good speeches, all of them emphasizing the thought of Christian union which is now so often leaping over denominational walls and clasping the hand of spiritual fellowship.

The dinner prepared by the ladies was of the highest type of Virginians best effort to excel in loading a table with good things both in quality and quantity.

These Norfolk brethren and sisters are putting forth their best efforts. And Dr. Jones their pastor is in close touch with the people of the city in sympathy and Christian work.

The church is well located and will be a credit to the city of Norfolk. We take the following from the Norfolk Virginian:

The corner stone of the new Christian church on the corner of Cooke and Tunstall avenues, Brambleton Ward, was laid with Masonic ceremonies yesterday afternoon by Owens Lodge No 164, with District Deputy Grand Master J. B. Jenkins, officiating. The lodge was escorted to the church by Grice Commandery, Knights Templar, in full uniform, and headed by a brass band.

THE CEREMONIES.

The ceremonies were commenced at 2 o'clock and were witnessed by an immense crowd. The stone, an Indiana granite block, appropriately marked, was hollowed out to receive a small tin box, in which were placed the following articles:

List of membership of Union Christian Church; list of charter members; list of officers; copy of the CHRISTIAN SUN; copy of Norfolk Landmark; copy of News and Courier; copy of Norfolk Virginian; copy of Norfolk Virginian, special issue of December 2, 1885; copy of The Herald of Gospel Liberty; copy of Norfolk Public Ledger; card of Mackintosh & Co., contractors of stone work; antique coins of 1775, 1876 and 1853, from Nat Burruss; by-laws and poster of Owens Lodge No. 164, A. F. and A. M., having charge of corner stone ceremonies; officers of Eastern Virginia Christian Conference; coin of 1892, by P. J. Kernodle Esq antique coin, 1858, by J. C. Haynes; card of Mrs. R. L. Bunting; one ticket of cornerstone ceremonies; copy of Elton College Monthly; copy of Christien Herald, Dr. Talmage; card of Face & Co., brick contractors.

DINNER AND SPEAKING.

After the ceremonies dinner was served in the chapel by the ladies. Seats were arranged in a lot near the chapel in which the crowd assembled after dinner, and then after prayer by Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., listened to addresses from Rev. J. I. Vance, Rev. A. S. Lloyd, Rev. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk Christian Church, and Rev. Mr. Robinson, of this city.

The founder of the new church and its ruling spirit, Rev. C. J. Jones, made a short address. The long meter doxology was sung and the benediction pronounced Rev. W. G. Clements, of the CHRISTIAN SUN, of Raleigh, N. C.

THE NEW CHURCH.

The new church will be of brick and brownstone, and will be an ornament to the city.

Mr Parlette, the contractor, will superintend the work. The edifice will cost rather more than $20,000. For some time past Dr. Jones has been energetically engaged in raising money to put up this church. He has made trips North on several occasions in the interest of his enterprize, and as a money raiser and organizer he has been unusually successful. The work will go rapidly forward to completion.

Holland Items.

We are having it quite rainy to day—a thorough season, after weeks of drought.

Yesterday 28 h was our regular church service. Bro. Demarest preached and a good congregation was in attendance.

Sister Luter a member of the Christian church here has been very sick for several weeks. We learn that she has improved some within a few days past. She seems to be patient and resigned.

Rev. Roger Charnock is booked to preach for us next 4th, Sunday (June). Bro. Charnock is held in high esteem by the church here, and if the weather is good, we expect an overwhelming congregation.

The writer finds in the Annual, a resolution passed by our annual conference at its last session part of which is as follows: "And we advise all our members, now living within the bounds of other than the Christian church of which they are members, to as early as possible, make the transfer necessary to bring them into active relations with such church." We would like to see an explanation from the committee as to the purpose of the resolution.

R. H. HOLLAND.

Notes From Harvard.

In our study of history and the past with the great events that loom up therein, I think we often forget the importance of the present and the really great and significant events of our own time. The present, as well as the past, is history making. Because men live in our own times and because their names are common household words is no reason why they are not great and worthy of the historians here. We have men living today who have simply made history and whose lives afford us food for thought and whose deeds and achievements clearly exemplify what great men can do, to what they are exposed and what obstacles have to be overcome in every successful career. I think I am not alone in saying there is no grander man in all English history, from the Norman conquest in 1066 down to the present, than William E. Gladstone. Deservedly has he won the title of "The grand Old Man." At the close of this century no complete history of England could be written without accrediting to Gladstone a very large place therein. Even now having arrived at the ripe old age of 85 he finds himself with the virtual responsibility of administering the English government upon his shoulders. This power, as we all know, he came into a few months since, after a most vigorous and heated campaign, but with an overwhelming majority in his favor. This man is known as politician, statesman, scholar, author and the true Christian gentleman throughout the civilized world. We know too that there, his last days, are being spent in behalf of his long cherished scheme Home Rule for Ireland. Look at the "Grand Old Man"! Long and faithfully has he labored and even now when he richly deserves all the pleasure, retirement, and leisure that a well-spent life could bring, we see him denying himself of all these, and his last days are his busiest days—all for the cause he loves so well, the liberty, the freedom, the self-government of a people not his own, but whom he sees and knows are oppressed, abused and burdened with undue and unjust taxation!

But this was not begun as an eulogy to Gladstone. We all know of his greatness too well to be spoken of here. What I did intend to notice though was just this. A few days since when the Prince of Wales was entertaining Gladstone, as his guest, at each public appearance this good and great old man was met with jeers and hisses from the Tories—the political party opposing Mr. Gladstone and his Home Rule scheme.

Now it seems to me that among others there are two important lessons we may learn from this seemingly small affair.

1st Is it not strange that men of noble birth and high breeding and such like, can be carried so far by petty jealousies and party antagonism as to forget the rules of propriety, honor, citizenship and decency? And yet this took place among the aristocracy of England! Well, Americans may not have the titles and the good breeding and the high life training and the etiquette and such stuff as the English have, but it cannot be said of us that we have so far forgot all rules of honor and propriety as to hiss and taunt and jeer at a noted man of state when he appears on public occasion. Witness the reception which was given President Harrison on his tour of the United States. Republican and Democrats forgot party lines then and all joined in extending our President a most cordial welcome wherever he went. And thus may it ever be in our country.

2nd. But there is a moral in all this, and but for calling attention to this, I doubt if these lines would have been written.

Gladstone is fighting for what he believes to be the right. Wherever the English tongue is spoken he is known as an honest, up-right, noble Christian gentleman. And yet this man so much honored, so much admired, so widely known and so profoundly and universally loved, must spend his last days amid the jeers and taunts of his enemies, and amid the ridicule and abuse of hundreds and thousands of opposers.

Are we not justified in saying: There is but one rule for life, namely, to do the best you can and know and then leave the world to hiss and taunt and jeer as it will. Possibly some day it will call you blessed and honor the land that gave you birth.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Today we have three nice letters for the Corner and wish there were more. I suppose the cousins everywhere are getting ready for Children's day, and I hope that where ever it is held it will be as successful as the day at the Raleigh church was. The little folks did splendidly and the house was crowded with people. The children of the Raleigh church, under the leadership of Mrs J. L. Foster, always make these occasions pleasant and the people have found it out and give them a crowded house. The collections taken on Children's Day are used for Home Missions, and the amount realized last year was $3 850. Ain't that a large sum? And then to think that it comes from the children's effort. The Bible teaches us to despise not the day of small things, and it is shown by the children that small people are to be honored too. Let all write.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., May, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Our school closed last Friday and on Saturday our vacation began with a big Sunday school picnic at Mr. W. W. Staley's fish pond; they had a very nice time, nice speeches, nice playing the organ; they had marching with flags and had a glorious day. I will close by asking a question. YOUNGVILLE, N. C., MAY 22, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am so glad that our school has closed. Now I can write oftener than before, I can not write much at a time, but will try to write when I can. I would like very much to see you and Aunt Tangle. We had a picnic Saturday, the little girls performed their parts very well. We all at the picnic had our picture taken, I know you would like to see one. Couldn't it be nice to have a picture of all the cousins in one group? I will ask the cousins a question. What two chapter, in the Bible are alike? Find five cents for the Corner.

Yours affectionately,
MAGGIE WICKER.

The men who have been broken down in any way have usually said of the destroyer beforehand: "It will not hurt me." They have said this of overwork, of exposure, of disease, of moral evil, of pollution, of strong drink of opium, of evil companionship, of deviation from strict integrity. They have fallen victims, too, and their bones are bleaching on the sands. Any soul is safe who walks, truthfully and obediently, with Christ, fearing sin in any mode and any measure. Any soul is in danger who underestimates the power of sinful habit and thinks that in his own strength he is free from harm and death.—Herald and Presbyterian.

An attempt to induce the management of the World's Fair to dismiss all the non-union labor employed there resulted in a strike, which, however, lasted but one day, when common sense came to the rescue and mutual concessions were made.

LITERARY NOTES

DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—A fascinating picture of the possibilities of future development on the earth and of the condition of mankind in the ten thousandth century, when interplanetary communication has been established and the "dream of the ages" become a reality, is one of the special features of Demorest's Family Magazine for June. It is compiled from the records of the Optimists' Club, an organization established for foretelling the future of the world, and the unique illustrations tell the story as vividly as the words "The Diary of an Athletic Girl" tells all about tennis teas and tennis dresses; from "A Caravan Outing, one learns about the newest and most charming way of spending a vacation; and if suggestions in "Summer Furnishing" and "The Guest-Room, are carried out one may be sure of having an attractive home for the hot weather.

Demorest's always contains plenty to interest every member of the family; and is published for only $2 a year, by W. Jennings Demorest 15 East 14th St., New York.

A SYMPOSIUM OF WESTERN AUTHORS is the name for the Jane New Peterson. Many of the best-known writers from Chicago to the Pacific Coast are represented, together with the most promising new poets, romancers, and essayists, Joseph Kirkland, Joaquin Miller, Gertrude Atherton, Mary Abbott, Opie Read, Stanley Waterloo, Ernest McCaffey, Le Roy Armstrong, Harriet Monroe, Carrie B. Morgan, Patience Stapleton, and other popular authors have a place, "Pacific Coast Writers," with their portraits, by Ella Higginson, makes one of the attractions. "A Shelf Full of Western Books" is Octave Thuret's welcome contribution. We heartily recommend to our readers this enterprising periodical, which has so quickly established its claim to take a front rank among American magazines.

The first issue of McClure's Magazine in a surprise in many ways. The cover is designed by the famous artist Will H. Low, and, unlike the covers of most new magazines, it easily ranks in beauty and effectiveness with the best magazines. Another surprise in the magazine is its price; it is just half that of its older rivals. Then, it is very fully illustrated. This first issue contains ninety-five pictures and fourteen different articles. Perhaps the greatest novelty, however, in the magazine, aside from its extraordinary price, is a real dialogue between William Dean Howells and Professor H. H. Boyesen, in which Mr. Howells in a frank manner tells more of his early struggles and literary career. Professor Henry Drummond contributes a paper on "Where Man Got His Ears," that is a perfect study in evolution. The new department, invented by this magazine, "The Edge of the Future," contains some very interesting matter gained by interviews with Thomas A. Edison and Alexander Graham Bell. This magazine, with the completeness in illustration, the timeliness and interest of the articles and its extraordinary price, which is only $1.50 a year, and 15 cents a copy, make the advent of McClure's Magazine noteworthy. Published by S. S. McClure, Limited, 743, 745 Broadway, New York City.

"SMALL TALK ABOUT BUSINESS." By A. E. Rice. A banker's business hints for men and women. Published by Fremont Publishing Co., Fremont, Ohio. 60 pages. Paper 40, cloth 75 cents, by mail, post paid. Descriptive pamphlets free.

This book, as its name indicates, is a talk about business; a banker's talks to men and women about the every day business affairs of life. It is brimful of useful ideas and old, and is a book that should be on every desk and in every home.

In the June number of THE MOTHER'S NURSERY GUIDE, Dr. Canfield dispels some popular delusions concerning the contagious diseases of childhood which "some mothers think it just as well for their children to have and be over with them." His article on "Immunity and Protection from Disease," will repay careful reading. The advantages of a simple yet varied diet for children are set forth by Dr. Wm. H. Flint, and Dr. Meding contributes some useful "Points for the Summer." The entertaining, Kindergarten-at-Home Studies are continued. 20 cents a number, $2.00 a year. THE BABYHOOD PUBLISHING CO., 5 Beekman Street, New York.

"Even more important than Columbus's discovery is the fact that the General Government has just discovered a woman," says Mrs. Potter Palmer, President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair, whose portrait adorns the front page of FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY for June. The beautifully illustrated article on "Woman's Work at the World's Fair," by Isabel McDougall, which follows, is a revelation in this regard, of which every American has a right to be proud. Another timely feature, of extraordinary pictorial interest, is J. S. Stuart-Gleennie's descriptive paper on "The Ionian Islands," including earthquake-stricken Zante. Other illustrated articles are: "Ellerslie and its Guernseys," a description of ex-Vice President Morton's model dairy farm on the Hudson by Charles H. Crandall; "In the Metropolitan Museum of Art," by Mary Titcomb; "How the Big Tree was Sent to Chicago," by Sara D. Price; "Bird Babylon," by Nelly Hart Woodworth; and "Rays from the Search Light," together with half a dozen short stories of real merit, and the full complement of literary miscellany.

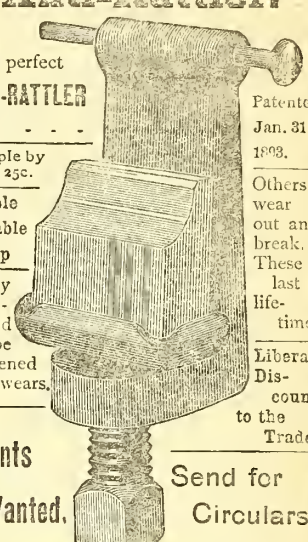

"THE PREACHER'S MAGAZINE" for June edited by Revs. Mark Gay Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory is received. This is the sixth number of the third volume of this Magazine which is intended more particularly for the preacher, but will be found of great aid to teachers and Bible students. Dr. T. Bowman Stephenson contributes a sermon of great power, entitled "The Social Panacea to this number. There is also a most excellent paper by Prof. Henry Drummond on "Joy, Rest, and Faith" it is written in his charming style, and is sure to attract great attention. The Rev. Dr. Robert A. Watson continues his able series of articles on the "Apostolic Churches," and takes up in this number their doctrine and fellowship. It is highly recommended by prominent clergymen of all Evangelical denominations. It is published monthly at $1.50 per year, single copies 15c. by Wilbur B. Ketchum, 2 Cooper Union, New York. Liberal premium offers are made to new subscribers.

PUBLICATIONS OF D. LOTHROP CO., BOSTON. OUR LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN FOR JUNE is an exceptionally good number. It opens with a poem by Mary D. Brine, and the frontispiece accompanies the verse. Other articles that will commend themselves are, A Little Columbian Grandpapa, The House that was Made for Me, There Little Gold-Diggers, and The Clock o' the Year. There are other illustrated poems and stories by Eleanor Kirk, Emma Huntington Nason, Lilla Barnard, Warren H. Frych and Mrs. J. S. Lowe, writers suggestive of good things and bright just what boys and girls like. Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number.

"BABYLAND" for June opens with a pretty picture, and continues with poems and pictures, stories and pictures, and merry little jingles, to its close. It is as dainty a number as any Baby could wish. Price 50 cents a year; 5 cents a number.

THE PANSY for June has much of value and worth, notably the Golden Discovery paper, by Margaret Sidney, in which the writer pays a fitting tribute to Senator and Mr. Leland Stanford, in behalf of their humanitarian work in establishing the Leland Stanford, Jr., University at Palo Alto, California. Only Ten Cents, by Pansy, is characteristic of this popular author's well-known stories; this number of The American Literature papers concerns itself largely with Bayard Taylor, whose name is a synonym for appreciation in travel and song; a good portrait accompanies the sketch, and a view of Cedarcroft—the home of this writer—is given as well; other shorter stories, and articles in both poetry and prose, supplement the many attractions to be found throughout this finely-conducted publication. Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number.

"Sick, And Ye Visited Me."

BY LILLIAN GREY

How the flies beat against the hot window panes, and how they buzzed! If they had fluttered only a few inches lower, they might have gone out into the free air and not been a nuisance to the poor little woman on the lounge, who was so tired watching them.

She thought of going over and brushing them down and out, and lowering the green paper shade, but she felt so dizzy and deathly sick whenever she raised her head, that she did not dare to make the effort; and so she lay and suffered, and thought, the same dreary round of thought that she was so tired of. Poor Mrs. Minor!

At least one-quarter of her time was spent on that lounge, or in bed, and the rest in trying to catch up and piece together the most important strands of her daily life and duties. No one of all her acquaintances, except Auntie Gould, who was eighty, was such an invalid as herself; and it was hard, with all her ambition and pride in nice and thrifty house-keeping, and her love for her dear John and desire to help him along, to be idle so many days, not even able to read. No wonder she grew morbid and sad, and fretted so that even the flies seemed a burden.

"How I wish somebody would come in to see me!" she sighed. "I am so tired of myself; anybody would be welcome,—except Sister Ellen. I just couldn't stand her!"

But Sister Ellen was even then at the gate; and a moment later she passed the window, and went around to the back door, and Mrs. Minor held her breath as the footsteps paused, for well she knew that her sister-in-law was taking a survey of the disordered kitchen; and then the door opened, and she came in, flushed with heat, and possibly with exasperation.

"Mercy mel you laid out on the sofy again? Why, I fully expected to see you around as lively as a cricket after spendin' a dollar on that new medicine."

"But I've only taken it three days, Ellen, and it's my head is so bad just now. I tried to do a little this morning."

"I should think it would ache,—all this light a-glarin' in, an' the flies swarmin' onto the winders. Why don't you have nettin' in? John could make some frames."

"Yes, he could; but he has so much to do when he's around the house, I hate to ask him to do anything extra, you know."

"Yes, I know John's dretful onfortunit in his homeskeepin', having to take holt so much himself. I wonder he stands it as patient as he does, an' hirin' a woman a day in every week besides; but John's naturally slack. I know when we was home together I couldn't make him do as I wanted him to, anyway, only to keep at him."

"John is as good as he can be!" said the loyal little wife, flashing out in his defence; "and their's a palmlife fan on the table to keep the heat and flies away from you while you stay here."

"O my! I can get along. I didn't see you out to meetin' yesterday; nor John, neither."

"No; was the new minister good?"

"Nothing to brag of. I wasn't so very much taken with him; preached very plain; but there! just the ones he hit didn't know it; set there as unconcerned as if he was preaching about the heathens. I stayed to Sunday school, too, just to see how it seemed to be flourishing. That class of boys you had so long acted awful. Miss Coe ain't much of a teacher, I guess; but it seems as if, if there had ever been any good seed sowed into their minds, it would be a-growing up an' bearin' fruit by now. They're bad boys."

"O, I don't agree with you, Ellen. Don't you remember, last Christmas, how they came to see me, and brought some of their fruit and candy? I often think how nice it was."

"Law! they knew they'd get more treat out of you than what they brought. You need n't ever expect much kindness out of a boy. But I must go to sewin'. I can't afford to set an' fan my time away; life's too short. I see the sink's full of dishes; an' if it was noon-time, and there was a fire and hot water, I might wash 'em up; but it ain't no work for the middle of the afternoon. I don't s'pose you've baked any this morning."

"No; John bought out of the baker's wagon."

"We'd starve if we had to live on baker's stuff. I washed this forenoon, an' baked four pies an' a pan of gingerbread. I didn't do as much as usual Saturday. I s'pose your woman's comin' to wash an' iron to-morrow. I should think John would get clean discouraged. I had a letter from Cousin Elias this mornin'; he's another that's got a hard row, wife as slack as a half-twisted rope, an' a lot of children under foot. You ain't got none of them, Rosy, to be neglected, an' a-whinin' around when you're so complainin'; that's one good thing, anyhow."

A good thing! The little woman on the lounge winced, and pressed her hands over her eyes, and her thoughts went straightway out to the hillside where slept the little daughter. Six years the grasses had waved and the snows had drifted over her little bed, and the marble was growing weather-stained, and the hurt in the mother's heart had never healed. Three years old was the baby when they had laid her there so quietly; and her mother often tried to fancy how it would have been if she had lived,—a little maiden flitting about the house, with quaint, womanly ways, and loving caresses when mamma had a headache, and——

"Have you clean gone to sleep, Rosy? I've been a talkin' an' a-talkin', an' you as deaf as a post. I laid out that you'd be glad of some company, stayin' home as close as you do, but my goodness! there goes Mandy Smith an' her niece; I most know they're goin' to my house, so I'll run along home. Now do try an' brace up, an' go outdoors more'n you do, Rosy. The more you give up, the more you may. Good-by; I'll be over again 'fore long."

The door, and then the gate, slammed after the departing guest; and the quivering nerves and sore heart of the little woman on the lounge found relief in a flood of tears; and the hot afternoon wore on.

"Crying? O my poor dear; how lucky I came!" and the face of Auntie Bruce beamed brightly into the room. Every one loved and admired Auntie Bruce. "There, you need n't try to tell me anything. I know you have one of those mean old headaches, and you've worried over the undone work and poor John, and the memory of every pain and worry you ever had come up again, and Ellen has been over; I saw her;" and the laugh that came with the last words rang out so cheerily that even Mrs. Minor was induced to smile, and the tears dried up of themselves.

"Yes, I know just how black an' blue things look sometimes; but my! they don't stay so. Just let me shake and turn these pillows."

How refreshing was the soft, cool side of the pillow to the hot, aching head, and the soft hand stroking the hair back, and a moment later the cup of cold water so longed for; and all the while the pleasant voice went on, recounting little bits of news, and telling how good and nice seemed the new minister; and he was going to call on sick people first, for he said that the sick and the little children were the favorites of the Master.

"Now tell me, have you eaten any dinner?"

"Not much; I could n't. I don't know how John made out, for I did n't go out in the kitchen at all after breakfast was over."

"I saw the dishes and now you'll let me go out and work a few minute, won't you?"

"O don't, auntie! it's so hot now; and by to-morrow I'll be able to work, I hope."

"Why, then you can wash to-morrow's dishes. There's pine wood in the box, and I can get some hot water in a few minutes. You just take a bit of a nap, and let me have my own way. I always was wilful, so they say."

Her busy steps went back and forth in the kitchen, and a little later the cheerful clatter of cups and saucers in the pans was heard, and then the words of a song:—

"He leadeth me O blessed thought!
O words with heavenly comfort fraught!
What'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 't is God's hand that leadeth me."

Some people might not have admired the singing of Auntie Bruce; but to the grateful listener on the lounge it sounded wholly beautiful, and carried the sweet meaning of the words straight to her heart.

"Lord, I would clasp thy hand in mine,
Nor ever murmur nor repine,
Content, whatever lot I see,
Since 't is my God that leadeth me."

Soon after the song was done, auntie came back to the lounge with a cup of tea and a plate of toast.

"Now just try a bit, dear; it will you make feel better, and freshen you up for John's coming home; and I must step along so as to have supper in time for my men folks. I've straightened up your kitchen, and you'll feel better to-morrow, I'm sure; but don't try to do much till you get stronger. You are too ambitious, I fear."

"I see so much to be done; but I do feel better already; just seeing you and hearing you sing has cheered me, and you've waited on me so nicely, too. I can't repay you."

"O, when I'm sick, and you are well and hearty, then you can come and pay it back. Now be a good girl, and don't cry another tear to-day; keep your eyes bright for John," and with a kiss and loving pat the visitor was gone.

"Well I guess some good fairy has been here by the looks of things." It was a manly voice this time. "Have you been flying around so, little one?"

"I haven't done a thing, John. It's Auntie Bruce; she would wash the dishes."

"But the supper, Rosa; did she get that?"

"I don't know. I didn't know there was any got. What are you laughing at?"

"You better come out to tea, Rosa."

And with the aid of her husband's arm Rosa did get up and out to the table. A loaf of home-made bread, a ball of cottage cheese, half of a delicious-looking cake, and a bowl of currants stood before her.

"Are the ravens beginning to feed us, Rosa do you think?"

"Yes, Auntie Bruce is the raven, bless her! though I had rather call her an angel."—Golden Rule.

Everyone will exclaim, "Well that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original.

"I'M A DAISY."

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tint is perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproduction of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life, are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Paradise" and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

Washington Letter.

The proceedings of the Presbyterian General Assembly, which has been in session since last Thursday, and which from present indications will remain in session for at least a week longer, are growing decidedly interesting, not only to Presbyterians, but the religious public generally. It has spoken in thunder tones on the relation of the temperance question to the church, and it has adopted a resolution on the proposed opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, directing that the exhibit of the Presbyterian church be removed from the Exposition if it be opened on Sunday, and setting apart the second Sunday in June as a day for special prayer in all the churches under its jurisdiction for the better observance of the Sabbath, and recommending that on that day sermons be preached denouncing the directors of the World's Fair for violating their promises in respect to Sunday opening.

The assembly has also decided by adopting the report of its Judicial committee to hear the appeal from the New York Presbytery in the now celebrated case of Dr Briggs, which has probably attracted more attention throughout the entire religious world than any similar case ever did before and the trial, now begun, whatever may be its result, will probably continue to be talked about long after all those who take part in it are dead. It is already evident that it is to be bitterly—much too bitterly many conservative people think—contested on both sides. It seems to be conceded that the assembly as it stands today is anti-Briggs by a considerable majority, but Dr. Briggs, who will conduct his own defense, and his friends appear to be confident that their arguments will change the opinions of many who are now wavering, if not actually against Dr. Briggs. There is fear, in many cases openly spoken, that the result will be the withdrawal of many ministers, if not an actual split in the church. There are hot headed men on both side and it is feared that they will make trouble as the trial proceeds, some of them have already done so. Many earnest prayers are being offered for Divine assistance to do the right thing, and, as the "prayers of the righteous availeth much," let us all hope that the Lord will direct the utterances of those who take part in this trial as well as their votes when the time arrives for the assembly to render its verdict, from which there will be no earthly appeal.

While the question of home missions was before the assembly, Dr. Roberts, secretary of the Board of Home Missions, in urging the necessity for raising and spending more money in extending and pushing the work made a statement which it seems to me is of vital interest to every Protestant church in America. He said that lack of money was largely the cause of the fact that beyond the Mississippi river Protestants were outnumbered by Roman Catholics ten to one. Surely that is something to think about.

Attorney General Olney is fully determined to use all of the judicial machinery of the Government to prevent the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, or to close the gates if they were opened on that day; but opinion is divided as to whether the judicial machinery will be sufficient. If the matter be taken to the courts after the gates are opened on Sunday the case may not be finally decided until after the Exposition is over.

Assistant Secretary Curtis of the Treasury department has been and deserves to be highly commended for the stand he has taken against appointing liquor dealers to office. An applicant for a position under him, accompanied by his member of Congress, called on Mr. Curtis to ask him to recommend his appointment to Secretary Carlisle, and the following conversation is said to have taken place between Mr. Curtis and the Congressman: Mr. C—"Is it true this man is a saloon keeper?" Congressman—"Yes; what has that to do with his getting this office?" Mr. C.—"Just this: I will not recommend the appointment of a saloon keeper."

I have berries, grapes and peaches, a year old, fresh as when picked. I use the California Cold Process; do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions, to over 120 families; anyone will pay a dollar for directions, when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself. I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars, round home, in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for 18 two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc., to me.

Notes From Harvard.

It is not often you experience a prettier and pleasanter day than the one just ended. Just cool enough to be comfortable out with a light overcoat on, not at all warm enough to be unpleasant. And the birds were singing and the flowers were blooming and the lawns and the gardens and the forests were all green and beautiful. This, in fact is memorial day here and the schools and the colleges and the shops and the factories and the banks and the post offices were all closed and all nature and every body seemed to be full of life and happy. So if the "boys in blue" had had the power of selecting a fitting day in which to do honor to their dead comrades and march (with their uniforms on), and beat drums and make speeches and strew flowers on the graves of the departed, I don't see how a more perfect day could have been selected. So the people turned out by the hundreds and the thousands today and those who did not carry flowers carried flags, great, small and otherwise.

But while there was so much demonstration going on in these parts, in memory of the events of '61 to '65, I am reminded that in the South hundreds and thousands are also turning to pay their tributes of respect to the memory of the chieftain of the "boys in gray" who took a part in that same tragic scene at the same period, but on the other side of the line you know. Thus the demonstration of respect and esteem and admiration for the departed was not alone on one side. Both sides today have done honor and reverence to heroes, statesmen, patriots, men. And who shall rise to condemn either for the manifestations and demonstrations of this day?

Long and desperate and bloody and deathly was that struggle of thirty years ago. Both sides fought like men—brave, honest, upright, patriotic men. And though the "blue" was victorious and as we see it today, all agree that it was for the best that it turned out thus, yet the "grays" were fighting for what they believed to be right and they were honest in that belief and their record proves it and no southern boy today need blush because "his" was the defeated side and the "Southern Confederacy" lives only in the realm of memory and history. "The boys in gray" of '61-'65 may be called "secessionists" and the like if you will, but they can never be called "cowards"—not indeed as long as memory and history and tradition stand for anything.

But that cause and those struggles and fierce battles are long since fought and ended now. And as men of both sides meet today to do honor to the fallen braves, it is in no spirit of hatred or envy or antagonism that the one side now bears for the other. It is in a spirit of love, reverence and esteem for comrades and loved ones long since gone before.

That spirit of hatred, animosity and "bloody-shirt-ism" has well nigh vanished now. This is as it should be and the whole country is wiser and better and happier for it. This is a great, grand country of ours and the men of the north and the south, the east and the west love, honor and reverence the Union. And in the development, progress and perfection of this Union do the true, honest men of today feel and realize the fondest dreams of their most cherished hopes—hopes for freedom, safety, peace and liberty—"and for her it must be lived, for her it must be died."

The moral that may be gleaned from the above is two-fold.

First: However desperate the contest and however wide the breach, the length of time and the days of the future may see the contest ended, the breach healed and the struggle and the worries and the trials all wiped away.

Second: The world honors its brave good and noble men, because its brave good and noble men first honored it and made it a greater, better, and happier world for their having lived in it.

J. O. ATKINSON.
Cambridge, Mass. May, 30, 1893.

What Is God To you?

"I will love thee, O Lord, my strength" (Psalm 18:1) It is profitable sometimes to get away from all the world ask yourself what God is to you. Is he more than a philosophy, a theory, or a creed? Is he anything to you that no other power could take away? Is he really your strength? or do you only trust in something that comes from him, like the church, or religious example, or godly teaching? Is Christ a real Saviour to you in all times and in all places. Do you think of him as having been, or is he now? Is he in you the hope of glory, a continual, abiding and real presence and power against sin? or is he a shadowy, indefinite Something, you scarcely know what? Do you really love him, and find joy in doing his will, or do you love what you imagine him to have been from what you have read and heard? Is he a revelation to your soul, or simply an explanation to your mind? Ask your soul as in the presence of God, just how near he is to you. Can you hear his voice? Have you ever felt his presence? Do you ever know that the thoughts you think and the deeds you do are his? Is he interested with you in your business? Is he more than home, or friends, or reputation to you? Is your life any sweeter and purer and better because of what you know of him? Is he first in your thoughts when any change in your affairs is contemplated? Do you have rest in his promises, and rejoice in them, no matter what happens? Do you know in your own soul that you know Christ as truly as a child loves its mother, and that he is all to you that your heart requires? If so, give God the glory, for you have something more precious than rubies, and more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold.—Selected.

The children in our homes to-day are the life blood of the nation.

We cannot accomplish much on the battle-field of the Captain of our salvation without wielding three weapons, piety and faith.—Rev. E. C. Sell.

THE PULPIT.

A DREAM

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Your old men shall dream dreams.
Acts 2:17.

One of the precious promises of God in the Old Testament to his people was that in the days of the Messiah he would pour out his spirit "upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." In the ages of the past God sometimes communicated his will to men by dreams, and important events resulted from them. A dream brought home to the heart and conscience of Jacob some great truths, and revolutionized his character and life. Doubtless God still instructs his children in dreams, and while most of our dreams come from natural causes and have no special meaning yet some of them are instructive and come from God. Every sermon should be like the negro's sermon preached to a colored congregation in the south. He said that he desired that his sermon should have male's ears to it. This is meaningless, and sounds strange to us here in the north; but it was full of meaning to his people. The colored men are accustomed to riding mules without saddles, and sometimes they have to hold on to the mule's ears to keep from falling off, or being thrown off. Thus the negro preacher desired to put into his sermon facts and ideas that his people could take hold of, and hold on in the way of life. This was a good idea. I have heard many sermons that had no mule's ears in them. They gave me nothing to take hold of and carry home with me to help me on my way to heaven. I want to use a dream in my sermon as a mule's ears to give you something that you can take hold of, and carry with you through life as a spiritual help. One of the most distinguished men in our country was sitting in his library by himself, and he fell asleep. In his sleep he dreamed a dream that has an important and beautiful lesson in it. He saw his big dictionary tumble off a chair by his side, and all the words fell out in a heap. Then a strange thing occurred. The words began to talk, and argue with each other. He wondered what they were going to do, and it looked like there was going to be a democratic or republican general convention. Then he heard a crack of the fire, and there jumped out something that looked like a king. He said: "Do you know who I am, you people who are making all this excitement? I am the king of language, the king of words. I think you want to have a little conference. They said they had just got out of the big book there, and were going to settle which was the biggest and greatest word in the world. They were going to find the king of words. 'Very well,' said the king, "you go a head and I will be judge, you fit the words, tell me the reasons, and I will decide."

Each word that desired too was allowed to speak for itself, and give the reasons why it should be regarded as the kings of words, and the best looking. The word "money" claimed to be the king of words, and gave a reason for it. It said that the business of the world could not be carried on without it, and that it could buy every thing that was desirable. It could buy houses and lands, fine cloth and beautiful jewelry, lovely pictures and books. It enabled men and women to travel, and see all that was interesting in the world. It could command the respect, and homage of men. It could open to all the doors of the houses of pleasure, and secure to man the pleasures of sin. All men and women worshipped it as being of the world. The presiding judge said that he did not agree that money was the king of words, and he called for the next one. It pushed its way up to the front, and said: "O King! I think I am of all the words the most important. My name is honor. Every body bows down to me, and I am able to make people strive, watch, and work for me. I have inspired all the great warriors, statesmen, and philosophers of the world. I have caused bloody wars, slain millions, overthrown kingdoms, and empires; and made nations my slaves. I have done what money could never do, and am the king of words." But the king did not agree, and called for the next speaker. A big word stepped to the front, and said: "My name is power, and from the beginning of time all my family have been kings. I have made men and nations my slaves. I have held the world in bondage, and millions have sacrificed peace of mind, health, and happiness for my sake. I have ruled senates, commanded armies, and robbed nations and empires of their wealth to gratify my ambitious desires. I am king of words." But the king did not admit its claims, and called for the next claimant. A big word stepped to the front, and said, "My name is Bride, and I am king of words because I look down with feelings of contempt and scorn on all other words. They are beneath my notice, and I never recognize them only as my servants. What do I care for money, honor, and power? They are all beneath me, and not worthy of my notice. I turn away from them with feelings of contempt, and am sufficient in myself." But the king did not agree with pride, and called for the next speaker. A beautiful word came to the front, and said my "name is Love. I am interested in and desire the well-being of all men. I lift the burdens of life, and make all hearts happy. I cause men and women to feel for the suffering and sorrowing, and open the purses of the rich to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, build schools to educate the orphan, send missionaries of the cross to tell the heathen of the loving Saviour, and to erect almshouses for the perishing. I smooth the rough paths of life, bind up the broken heart and pour the oil of gladness into the wounded spirit. I have planted every flower, and made every thing that is beautiful and lovely in the vast universe. I bind hearts together in the tenderest bonds, make homes happy, and fill the souls of children with joy. I draw men and women into my service with silken cords, and they are happy. Money will fail and leave its votaries helpless in the greatest hour of need. Honor forsakes its servants in the hour of death, and they are left adrift upon the wild waves of the dark river. Power is helpless in the presence of sorrow and death. It can do nothing for its slaves then. Power may rule empires, command armies, and destroy nations, but it cannot conquer death. It is powerless then. Pride may sneer at the humble, and scorn all the pure and the good; but sickness and death robs it of all its glory. O king, I alone can conquer all evil, and bring happiness and joy to all hearts. I am king of all words, and have a divine right to rule supreme." The judge said to the convention of words that he "thought if they would all stop and think a little longer they would find no other word that stands before love." This is true. It is the king of words, and the only power that can conquer and win the world back to goodness in God.

Love strong as death, nay stronger,
Love mightier than the grave;
Broad as the earth, and longer
Than ocean's widest wave.
This is the love that sought us us,
This is the love that bought us,
This is the love that brought us
To gladdest day to saddest night,
From deepest shame to glory bright,
From depths of death to life's far light,
From darkness to the joy of light."

There came a little child into the world and the angels sang when he came, and he walked up and down the earth with his loving face and gentle hands, but the people turned away from him. They treated him ill.

But to prove what love was, after taking upon himself the form of a servant and carrying the cross, he stretched himself upon it and gave up his life. His name was Jesus. And I read in the Book that there is no other name. His name is above every other name. There is no name so sweet as the name of Jesus, and I am so glad you have discovered the chief name, the name above everything, the name of Jesus, God's only son, who came out of his bosom and lived on this earth to show us that money and honor and power are nothing compared with love.

SELECTIONS.

Christian Testimony.

It is said by many that Christians in general misconceive somewhat Christ and his Gospel, and therefore fail to represent him and it correctly; and that this is one great reason why their testimony is not more convincing and effectual than it is.

Doubtless it is true that even well intending persons may misread the Scriptures or adopt more or less erroneous ideas about Christianity which they were taught in youth. They may even be known as Christians and this be true of them. The first followers of the Lord were sincere converts and accepted as the Lord's, and yet they did not fully understand the Master's teachings nor did they fully possess his spirit. So Christians to-day may in many cases lack, and yet by sincerity and fixedness of devout purpose be indeed "the Lord's." And it cannot be denied that there is a tendency on the part of Christians to fall away from first ideas, experience changes of conception and understanding—often of course toward a fuller comprehension of the truth, and yet not always so. Man's salvation, fortunately (if that expression may be allowed), does not depend so much on a correct understanding of texts and events as upon faith in Jesus himself, docility of mind, a charitable spirit, and good works.

So far as Christians are in error, owing to worldliness in the church and erroneous dogmatists in the past, it is of course very important that they should see and abandon such error. Communion under the dictation of a ministry that loves wealth and power for their own sakes are necessarily limited in their usefulness to spiritual ends. So also are communions that hold, through the determination of leaders, to dogmatic forms that the common mind rejects as manifestly untrue if not positively absurd. Our Presbyterian friends, for example, may refuse to revise a worn-out creed, but they cannot compel men to accept it and they are certain to sacrifice much of their ability to serve the Master himself by so doing. The true position of a Christian and of any organization of Christians is (of course) not to sacrifice truth to the prejudices of men, but to be willing to sacrifice forms which, even though framed in harmony with truth, have become less helpful than hurtful to the interests of truth. It may be necessary to build structures, but why insist on such externalities as operate to the injury of that which is internal. That is an unfortunate "letter" (to say the least) which "killeth" the "spirit" that of itself is adapted to give "life."

So far as Christians are in error in consequence of a misconception of the Scriptures and a misreading of texts it is also important that they should see and abandon such error. Man's salvation depends not on any theory of inspiration or interpretation of particular texts, but precisely on the same things as that of disciples before the books of the New Testament were in existence. What was it that Jesus accepted in Matthew, in John, in Peter? It is not through creeds and ecclesiastical forms that Christians can make the most effective testimony to the world. This needs to be said with sufficient frequency to insure its being perfectly understood.—Boston Star

Meditation on The Disapproval of Others.

When others condemn me, but my conscience does not condemn me, my troubled hearts condemns the Lord of heaven. By my sadness I am convicted of choosing the praise of men rather than the favor of God. Why should man's injustice vex me, while thou, my Father, art just? or man's unkindness, while thou art kind? What matters it, if my heart hears thy "Well done," though all the voices of earth cry out against me? But all earth's voices do not cry out against me. It is for the harsh words of one, the unjust thoughts of two, that I let my heart be troubled. My joy in the Lord of all creation is overthrown by the unkindness of a few of his creatures. For shame, weak soul; be strong in thy Lord. Trail not his banner of happiness in the dust at the bidding of this and that. Thy peace is seal of thy loyalty, the perfect peace of those that are stayed on God. Thou must forsake Him to lose thy peace. Dost thou hold a single frown so close to thine eyes that it shuts out all the smiling heavens? Do thy thoughts so seize upon and repeat and magnify a brutal word that thou art dead to the song of the angels? Oh, shame upon thee, my soul, thou craven. Forgive me, joyous Christ, who dost wish to be served by happiness; forgive me, and help me into thine unconquerable peace.—Golden Rule

Jewels of Right.

A jewel is lost in the street. A great elephant comes along, places his ponderous foot upon it, and passes on. Where is the jewel? It is there; but concealed in the dirt, it lies unnoticed by the busy multitudes that hasten by. Time goes on. The clouds gather, the rain falls, the dirt is washed away, the sun appears, and there in the street sparkles the jewel. It is soon discovered and taken up.

The hideous monster Wrong, as he travels through this world, may trample down many jewels of Right, and leave them concealed in the dirt of sin. Generations may live, and go to their graves without discovering them. Perhaps the showers of God's providence will wash away the dirt, as they often do, and reveal them in this world. But if not found before, they will certainly be discovered in the great and terrible day of account, when the secrets of all hearts shall be made known. (Matt. 10:26) The Lord only knows what the judgment day will reveal. In that day, Right will come with all her jewels, even those that were crushed into the ground and concealed in this world, and will lay them before the throne of God, and there in the sunlight of heaven's glory, they will sparkle before men and angels. All the powers of earth and hell cannot destroy one jewel of Right. May our hearts be adorned, our souls embellished, and our lives beautified with these precious jewels.—Rev. E. C. Sell, In Raleigh Advocate.

A Child's Faith.

She was about nine years old, I think,—very happy child in her own way. She loved all beautiful colors, and would sit for hours looking at them. She had asked to wear her mother's diamond ring one day, that she might go off to a little corner by herself, and gaze into the beauty of it,—into the mystery. She felt a strange delight in it. It was a great joy to her to have these colors in her own possession.

She sat down somewhere, afterwards she could not remember just where, and looked long and lovingly into the flashing blues, reds, and greens. It was a bit of heaven to her childish fancy in an undefined way. Then she got up to speak to some one,—she had to go into several rooms. At last, when it began to grow dark, she missed the precious ring.

A great leap bounded in her heart. She grew faint with fear. It was getting late, and her eyes had never been sharp-sighted. What would she do?

One quick thought. In another moment she had gone to a room where she could be alone. She knelt down, folded the little hands, and prayed as only the perfect faith of a child can pray. Then she breathed a deep breath of relief. It would come now; He knew; it could not help coming.

She unclasped the small white bands, spread them out on the couch before her. Was she surprised when her fingers touched the ring, there, on that very couch?

No. The faith of a child is a divine thing. She had not questioned for a moment; she believed. There it lay.—S. S. Times.

On Penalty of Being Blotted Out.

When Mrs. Morton, wife of J. Sterling Morton, died, her husband, who was greatly devoted to her, erected a tombstone with this inscription: "Caroline French, wife of J. Sterling Morton, and mother of Joy, Paul and Mark Morton."

On being asked by a friend why he had his sons' names put upon the stone, he replied; "I took my boys to the cemetery, and, showing them their mother's grave, I said to them: 'Boys, your mother is buried here. If one of you shall ever do anything dishonorable, or anything of which she would be ashamed if she were alive, I will chisel your name from her tombstone.' It is hardly necessary to add that the three names are still there.

Well it be if parents were as careful to impress the of their children with the fact, that their "names are written in heaven" as the redeemed of the Lord, and that they should be most concerned not to dishonor the Saviour who died for them or do anything to grieve His loving heart.

Distressing as it may be to have our names chiseled off the inscription that records our relation to the mother that bore us, how inexpressible the grief and sorrow of having our names "blotted from the Lamb's Book of Life!"—Peninsula Methodist.

Ability to Forget.

The ability to forget many things is a great and gracious gift. "Love worketh no evil;" that is, does not make a note of the bad things said and done against us, but lets them pass in at one ear and out at the other. We find this illustrative incident: "On my way to one of the ferries, I passed two little girls about eight years of age. They were evidently confidential friends and one, with an indignant look on her face, was telling the other of some unkind word spoken by a little playmate. 'Oh, well,' returned her companion calmly and soothingly, 'don't think of it; Forget it.'"—Ex.

How One Life Was Saved.

Prof Henry Drummond preached a sermon, says the Independent, the other Sunday to the students of Amherst College, on Temptation which we find reported in The Amherst Student, and from which we take, almost in the preacher's words, the story of a saved life, from which one person may learn one lesson and another another.

A medical student, half through his course of four years in the University of Edinburgh, had worked hard and had led a selfish life. At last he woke up and said to himself that these were the four best years of his life, and he had not done one stroke to help any other fellow; and then he thought of another fellow from the same town as himself, who was fast drinking himself to death. He had almost reached the lowest depth. He had done no studying for months. He was simply rotting. So he hunted him up, and found him drunk. He said to him that these lodgings were poor ones for such a man, and told him to come to his room. The fellow said that he was in debt and could not leave; but Number One said that was no matter, and he paid the debts and took Number Two with him. The next morning he was sober, and Number One said that he had a contract he thought ought to be signed by both if they were going to live together. The stipulations were that neither was to go out alone; if it were necessary to do so, twenty minutes was to be allowed to get to the university or back, and all extra time was to be accounted for; one hour each day was to be reserved for pleasure, under all or any circumstances; by-gones were to be by-gones. This was signed. One month passed and it was not broken. Then one night Number Two threw down his book and said that he could not stand it any longer; he wanted to "bust." "All right," was the reply, "then 'bust' here." That it was right Professor Drummond would not say, but Number One brought him what he wanted; and he got drunk and "busted" there. It was not a long debauch, and it tided him over the hour. Another month went by and there was another "bust," but this time it was a very short one. After awhile Number Two said that he had noticed the other reading, during the recreation hour, a book that he did not invite Number Two to read with him—the Bible; and that he did not talk religion to him—as if he had not been living the life of Christ before him. He said that he would read the Bible with him; he read two verses and said that was enough.

Number One went out of the university a commonplace man; he took no honors; he was simply commonplace. When the other man left he took the highest honors - he who only a short time before had been picked out of the gutter. The reformed man, the saved man, is holding a high position in London, while the one who redeemed him is known as the Christian doctor of a village in Wales.

What is the Christ-life? It is simply a life of self-sacrifice. He "pleased not himself." "He saved other," said the people, "himself he cannot save." "He that loseth his life shall save it." is the Christly paradox.

Feeling After God.

Miss Sybil Carter, a missionary in the Episcopal Church, told me the following incident: When in Japan she met with a young Japanese woman who is engaged in teaching. This young woman gave her a part of her early history as follows: She said in her lesson one day she came to the word Creator, and did not know what it meant. She opened her dictionary and read there, "Creator; one who creates!" - but was as much in the dark as before. The thought filled her mind by day and by night. She would go out at night and look at the stars and say: "That God must have made all these stars." In the sunlight came the same thought of God as the maker of the sun. The trees, too, all seemed to say that this God made them. When she went to the temple and looked at the image of Buddha, she would say to herself: "It wasn't you, Buddha, for I never heard you made anything." There was a shrine where some god was represented as a boy. There she would pause, and pointing her finger at the image, would say: "It wasn't you; you know it wasn't." By day and by night Tasshee's mind was filled with the thought of this God and the question, where should she find him?

She went to Tokyo, and there was an old woman in the same house where she was, who said one day: "Tasshee, I am going to a meeting. won't you go with me?"

"What meeting?" inquired Tasshee.

"A meeting to hear about God," said the old woman.

"O no," replied Tasshee, "I don't want any of your gods; I have a god of my own, if I only knew where he is."

The old woman prevailed, and Tasshee went to the meeting. The missionary opened the Bible at the first chapter of Genesis, and read: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Tasshee was startled. "Why," she said, "that is the God I am looking for." She listened eagerly, and with great agitation, hardly able to keep her seat, so much did she want to put the question to the teacher: "Where is he?" When the meeting was over she rushed to the teacher and said: "Tell me, where is this God that made the heaven and the earth?" Her yearning desire was met by proper instruction. She attended the next meeting, and there heard the words: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Here again was Tasshee startled. A God of love! She had never heard of a God of love: her gods were gods of hatred, gods of revenge and anger. This God gave his Son. All the gods she had ever known never gave anything; the people had to give them offerings.

This hungry heart received its food. Tasshee is now a teacher, giving this same food to other hungry hearts.—Church at Home and Abroad.

How To Do It.

Doubtless one reason why "the common people" heard Jesus "gladly" was that he primarily addressed them on the plane of their felt needs and common thoughts. Thus he began with the woman at Jacob's well. Here is suggested the secret, at least one of the secrets, of all successful teaching and preaching. Successful teachers of the young, especially in Sunday and mission schools, are much rarer than they should be. The great difficulty with right methods of teaching is that they are not generally known. Those who know them do not find them so very hard. How to handle that most difficult of all things, a parcel of young semi-savages in a Sunday-school class, is told in a very readable article by a minister in The Congregationalist, from which we take the following (the scene is in a mission school, and the particular class is described as made up of "a pack of young rascals," a style of description apparently not altogether without justification):

After looking him [Thomas Jones, the new teacher] over for a moment or two with a mild curiosity they [the "young rascals"] proceeded to entertain one another in their wonted fashion - jostled elbows, kicked shins, compressed jack-knives and other property, and carried on all the while an animated conversation in a loud and penetrating undertone. At last, while the teacher was attending to the preservation of order at one end of the line, a young anarchist at the other shied a hymn-book clear across the room, which struck off the hat from one of the lady teachers. Thereupon a great deal of tittering arose among the neighboring classes, and all the neighboring teachers said, "Hush!"

and looked shocked and grieved. The superintendent said "Boys!" very sternly, and looked shocked and grieved also, and surprised as well.

This little episode convinced Thomas Jones that the lesson for the day, however well it might fit him, was not for his class; he therefore closed his Bible, and, looking them full in the face, riveted the attention of the lads with a most remarkable question.

"Have any of you boys," said he, "ever seen a dog fight?"

"Seen a dog fight?" said one of them after a moment's astonished silence. "Yaas; all of us has seen dog fights; why, mister, I've seen a hundred!"

"When did you see the last one?"

"Well," after some hesitation, "de last good dog fight I seen was Christmas Day."

"When did you last see a dog fight?" Jones asked another boy.

"Las' Sunday mornin'," was the prompt reply.

"I seen one yesterday, mister," said another.

"Humph!" said the rascal that threw the hymn-book, "I was to a dog fight this mornin'."

Having had the freshest experience, as was ascertained by dint of careful inquiry, the last mentioned youth was invited to describe the encounter which he had witnessed.

"It was like this," he began eagerly. "Me'n and Ferd Schultz was comin' up de avenue to Third street when I heard a great yelpin' back of Joe McGuffin's place. I run an I looked fur de fence, and there was a yaller dog and a curly black dog fightin' good, all by themselves. I just stuck my head into der saloon and hollerd "fit ontler der dog fight!" an' morn' ten fellers come ranniz' out de back door, Joe amongst 'em, an' we made a ring round de dogs."

So the story went, and every boy in turn matched it with another, brief, circumstantial and vividly told, and all commanding closest attention from the entire class.

When the last story was completed the teacher began to ask questions after the Socratic method in some such wise as this:

"Do you like a dog?"

"What do you call a good dog?"

"What do you like about a good dog?"

"Would you like to be a dog?"

"Would a good dog make a good boy?"

"What is the difference between a dog and a boy?" and so on.

It was a success. The boys leaned in toward the teacher and listened intently and answered his questions freely. There was no more disorder in Class No. 16. Neighboring teachers turned about in their seats and looked with undisguised astonishment and immeasurable relief. The superintendent smiled a delighted smile.

"Don't I know human nature?" quoth he.

Before the sharp stroke of the bell announced the closing exercises Thomas Jones had given his pupils a lesson that they never will forget on the moral nature of man, the immortality of the soul, and the sinfulness and danger of sin, and had pointed them to the Saviour of the world.

"Say, fellers," one little chap observed to the others as they were going out, "say, fellers, ain't he de boss teacher?"

Washington Letter.

The probable attitude of the Chinese government towards the United States continues a leading subject of conversation here. Early this week it was publicly stated by Mr. J. Hnbly Ashton, a prominent Washington lawyer, who is in the employ of the Chinese government, that notice has been served upon the Department of State by China that the first move towards the enforcement of the Geary law would result in the severing of all existing relations between the two governments. Secretary Gresham states positively that no such notice has been given the Department of State, and now opinion is divided as to whether Mr. Ashton made a mistake, or whether he unintentionally divulged a state secret of the Chinese government, believing that it had been communicated to Secretary Gresham. "There will be no rupture of our relations with China," said a Congressman who voted for the Geary law, "simply because there will be no occasion therefore. The deportation clause of the Geary law will not be enforced; it was not intended by Congress that it should be. It was inserted in the bill solely for the purpose of compelling the Chinese laborers already in the United States to register, so as to enable the officers of the Government to more readily detect the Chinese laborers who would be hereafter smuggled into the country, and since it has failed in its purpose I am satisfied that it will be repealed and other steps taken to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. Congress as a body did intend to enact a law to send away the Chinese already legally here, but to prevent other laborers coming from that country, although that may have been the intention of some of the supporters of the bill. Had such a statement been made when the bill was pending it would have been overwhelmingly defeated, and it would have deserved defeat."

The Lucy Webb Hayes Bible and Training School held its commencement exercises in Hamline church, Monday night, and it was a very interesting event, showing that the school, which has been in existence only a year and a half, has already done good and that its prospects point to much more. The essays read by the graduates were above the average of such papers, and the short talks by Bishop Hurst and other ministers were enjoyed by the large crowd in attendance, among which were ministers of several denominations. A room has been set apart in the building owned and occupied by the school as a library named "The Katharine Hurst library" in honor of the late Mrs. Hurst, wife of the Bishop. It is the intention to gather in this room a collection of books of reference, dealing specially with matters included in the regular course of the school, and books of that nature will be thankfully received.

An interesting announcement was made at the conclusion of the commencement exercises of the Howard University Law School held this week. It was that ex Senator Evarts and Mr. Colis P. Huntington, the railway president, had generously provided a permanent home for the Law department of the University, something that has been badly needed for some time. The building, which has accommodations for 150 students, is to be known as "Evarts' Hall."

The Presbyterian General Assembly ends its second week today and the end is not in sight, although the members say they hope to complete their work this week. If they do it will be surprising. The time of the assembly has been entirely taken up this week with the unfortunate trial of Dr. Briggs, on the charge of heresy. I say unfortunate trial designedly, for it is unfortunate, not only to the Presbyterian church, but to every other church, no matter what may be the final result. If such trials must take place they should, in my humble opinion, never be public. This one has convinced me of that. Two daily newspapers are printing full verbatim reports of the proceedings, and by reason of this wide publicity the hard things said by eminent ministers of the gospel on both sides, in their arguments, are giving the ungodly a chance to cast aspersions upon the whole Christian church, which they are taking full advantage of. I, myself, have heard on the street cars and in other public places a score or more slurs upon the Christian religion, on account of the language used at this trial, which would never have been uttered had not the proceedings been published; and I have been unable to find a single individual who could point out any possible benefit that the cause of Christianity can possibly derive from this or any similar trial. May it be the last time that any minister of the gospel is ever publicly tried for such an offense, is the earnest wish of your correspondent.

Our Good Sisters Again.

I did not wish or intend to write on the subject any more. I thought I had made my argument so plain "the wayfaring man though a fool need not err." But we are told that "we may lead a horse to the water, but we cannot make him drink," and "there are none so blind as those that will not see." Aside from this it seems to be necessary for me to write again to sustain my reputation for truthfulness. Bro Barrett says I charged him with saying he confessed that women did preach in the apostolic age and that he said no such thing! Let us see what he did say in the SUN, March 23. "Bro. Holland says Philip had four daughters that did prophesy, I admit it." Now reader which is right and which is wrong? He admits that they did prophesy. Every biblical scholar knows that prophesy does mean preach, as much as think means reflect or reflect means think, and Bro Barrett knows it. Webster in his unabridged dictionary says, "prophesy in the scriptural sense" means "to preach; to instruct in religious doctrine; to interpret or explain scripture or religious subjects." For Bro Barrett to admit that those women did prophesy, admit that they did preach. This is as plain as a man's nose on his face.

Bro Barrett's second charge against me is, "made a charge I could not sustain"—that "the Bible said women preached." To answer this, would be but a reiteration of what I have already said, and the reader does not want repetition and verbosity. I made the declaration and I have sustained it. I said women preached, as the Bible states and every intelligent minister of any and every denomination knows it.

But it becomes my turn now to criticise Bro Barrett's commentary on 1 Tim 2:12. This seems to be his strong hold. I have already taken out his props, and am now going to take out his corner stone, and his building like the house upon the sand will have to fall. I did not want to say so much, and I promised to handle Bro Barrett tenderly, and

I will do so. But to the subject, 1 Tim. 2:12, "I suffer not a woman to teach or usurp authority over the man." How this can possibly have any reference to preaching whatever, I cannot imagine. Dictation and usurpation does not sound much like terms to convey a loving persuasive gospel. The gospel which Paul preached and those dear women preached whose names were written in heaven, did not convey the idea of tyranny and oppression, but of freedom from oppression, peace and good will, joy and salvation. Then to say that teach and usurp means preaching, and prophesying does not, is surpassing strange logic. It is unreasonable and heterodoxical, if not bordering on absurdity.

Then over whom does Paul say the woman should not teach and usurp authority? The man. Not a man, meaning any man, not the men, meaning mankind generally, but the man. Using the definite article the, pointing out some particular man—the husband. Which simply means that woman the wife should not be dictatorial to the husband, or usurp the authority that naturally and legitimately belongs to the man. In my opinion it has no reference to preaching whatever, and I cannot possibly see it in that light.

R. H. HOLLAND.

The Discussion on the Support of the Ministry. No. 2.

Good morning Bro. Jones; I am glad to see you again. How are you getting along in your church work? Have you got your pastor back yet?

Good morning Bro. Smith; I am also glad to see you; but here you come with that same old monotonous subject again. As for how we are getting on at our church, I think we are doing very well. We have prayer meeting occasionally, and we have organized our Sunday school since the spring has opened; but the attendance is smaller than I ever knew at our church; and as for my individual self, I had just as soon hear Deacon Patience talk as to hear any of these preachers nowadays; he is a good man, he don't always talk about things that we don't want to hear; he always talks about the love of God, not about what we have been doing all the week, like the preachers do, and then the best of all is it don't cost anything. I dare say there is more hangbry in this thing you call preaching, (and especially when they preach for money,) than you would think. Preachers are right good in revivals; but I don't like this way they have in making the members do so much of the work; and they are good to look after the work for conference. But bless your life, they are the most extravagant set of people in the world. They don't know how to take care of anything; they don't know how to take care of their family. They say they are bound to have so much from their churches so they can live. They are no better to work than I am and I think ought to do so too. Besides all this, every time they come around they are finding fault about something we have done. We have got to be so very nice about our business, private matters and social pleasures that we can't take a social drink of whiskey, etc, with our friends as a gentleman, nor whiff the smoke from the cigarette, nor play a harmless game of cards, but they get up into the pulpit and tell everything they heard about it. Our children can't go to an innocent dance, where they can show off in their most charming way, after we have gone to so much trouble to get them new dresses in the latest style, and fine shoes to dance in, and if we keep them at home from church they may be active and nice, the preachers get up and preach about it for the next month, instead of preaching Christ and him crucified. Here they come with all these criticisms, clatterings and clammerings and make a great to do and unnecessary exposition about it. I like some privilege myself and especially as to my own affairs and family. They make so much fuss in preaching, that they remind me of the man that bought a pair of sheep shears to operate with but having no sheep, he caught his big hog, laid it upon the table, and having finished, his wife asked him how he succeeded? "Ah! yes he replied. I got the biggest fuss you ever heard for the amount of wool I found," and that is just the way it is with these preachers. You asked if we had got our pastor back yet? No but he can come back if he want to, but I shall not trouble myself to go after him, as he was in such a big hurry to leave us. I don't know that these preachers do much good any way; but as it is a custom to have pastors I will pay him my "bob," that is, what I promised. And as there is so much talk about the matter, to avoid criticism and public censure, why let him come if he wants to.

Why, Bro. Jones, I am very much surprised at you, to think you could be getting along very well in your church without a pastor, a spiritual teacher. You just as well say your farm is in a good growing condition, and the prospects for a fine harvest are good when the farm is literally covered with hungry cattle, devouring it as fast as possible. "Satan is going up and down the earth seeking whom he may devour." I fear your church is in great danger, as you don't take into consideration its spiritual welfare. Your heart is upon saving a little money. Your logic is not good. You said the attendance at Sunday school and prayer meeting was rather small, and that Deacon Patience's talks were equal to sermons. Now my brother, I think you have shown your selfish disposition in this matter. I am constrained to believe the reason you enjoy the deacon's talks so much is that you don't have to pay him a salary. It seems that you want the good Lord to fill your barns, store house and purse with blessings and still you are not willing to lend unto the Lord. Now as to the gospel being full of humbuggy, that is rather a hard saying. I dare say the pure truth in the gospel is far from humbuggy, but I grant you that hypocrisy is full of humbuggy. you also charge preachers as being the most extravagant people in the world. I think you are mistaken; for as a rule preachers are the most benevolent people you ever saw. They have the burden of charity to bear. They pay more to the church than any other one class. A great many of them pay one tenth of all their income. Some pay even more than this. I have known them to pay to the church $50 per year when the same church had about 200 members and did not pay a salary over $150, and I know a case now that the pastor has given his entire salary into the treasury of the Lord, and yet you say they are so very extravagant. Ministers as a rule can and do live on as little as the average family, if not on less. The true minister never has money to waste in paying for the social drink, nor can he burn up his money in the poisonous cigarette as many of you do. Some poor ministers live on a very little indeed: I have known some to have to live on from 1 to 2 meals per day and one suit of clothes in about two years, and give their full time to the ministry while many of his members fare sumptuously every day. And as to their murmuring about what you are doing. The social drink as you say. My Bible very clearly teaches total prohibition from intoxicating drinks, and your whiffing of your tobacco smoke, you had better put that money to some good purpose that would honor God. If you would pay to the church the amounts you waste in smoking and social drinking: using 2 cigars per day at 5 cents apiece: $36.50, and 1 social drink per day at 10 cents per drink, (and there must always be two or three to make it social) $73.00; Total $109.50 this amount would be more than half your church promises on pastor's salary. Now as to the harmless game of cards; you dare not say harmless, when from it has come so much sin, shame, blood shed, sorrow and death.

There is no respectable feature in it at all. All gamblers began with the social, harmless, game; and it often results in death. You talk about the innocent dance. I do not know how you define things; but modern dancing is full of corruption and means physical death; spiritual death; the death of virtue, death of the church and license to sin. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man but the end thereof is the ways of death." I am sure it is right for the preachers to reprove all kinds of sins and evil conduct; They must "preach of righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come." I feel it is my duty to pay my pastor liberally to study me, pointing out my mistakes. It is worth more than everything else, as it brings to us, "glad tidings of great joy." When I pay into God's treasury I expect full reward. "God's work pays full wages." Now as to the hog shearing and the big fuss. I am of the opinion you were not looking for wool; nor could you have expected anything else from a hog. I am constrained to believe you are not anxious to hear a good reasoning gospel preacher, a good pious man of God, whose heart is deeply interested in the salvation of poor perishing souls, or you would not as soon hear Deacon Patience talk as hear a good gospel sermon. There are some people in the church now that think the louder the preacher, the better the sermon is. But there are some members of the church that take so little interest in the services, that the preacher will have to preach loud to keep them awake; but if they were at their business, they would keep their eyes open till the last dollar was counted. Hold on, don't leave yet, I am not quite through. Come back and let's finish this matter up.

Bro. Smith, As I am in a great hurry to attend some important business I must go; but you have cast some very serious reflections on me, I will see you again soon. Good day.

Good by.

How to Make The Sun Interesting.

I do not claim from the above to be able to tell in every way, nor in many ways, how to make the SUN interesting, but I have in my mind one way which I will express and which I truly believe would add much to the interest of our church paper. First, in order that the SUN be interesting literature. And in order to have interesting literature there must be men and women of deep, profound thought, of excellent reputation and of unquestionable piety to contribute to its columns. Now I wish to ask, have we not many men and women in the Christians church readers of the CHRISTIAN SUN, both in the ministry and laity who are so fortunate as to possess all of the above qualifications and yet seldom or never send one scratch of the pen for the good of the literary SUN. Brethren and sisters, why not arouse from your reverie and go to work and help the editor of you beloved SUN to make it just what he would like it to be. Are there not some in every church within the SUN's circuit who could now and then send a synopsis of their work as a church, if so, in this way you will awaken a desire among your brethren to peruse the SUN, not because you have written something, but because something has been written, and that about their church and they want to know what it is. Again, cannot our pastors all of them join in with the faithful few (we now have) and give us something weekly to encourage us on the way. I remember not long since of the editor saying that the discussion between Dr. Barrett and others on the "Right of women to preach" and "Church festivals" had helped him mightily! Now I will tell you something else, I have learned from observation and consultation that those two subjects mentioned above in which Dr. Barrett has been engaged and a few feeble letters from our church, has been the means of the SUN being read with more interest by our people than any time previous. It was this fact as seen so plainly among the brethren of our church that caused me to think of the importance of more literary scribes for the SUN. Now in conclusion let me say, pastors write for the SUN, laymen, write for the SUN, and you will arouse some of your sleepy heads and they will behold wonders they never thought of and you will help the editor "mightily."

The Misfortune of Job.

ARTICLE 2.

Our last article left Job in the height of happiness, and in the enjoyment of great worldly possessions. His lands extended over many acres, his cattle, sheep and camels were numbered by the thousands. His sons and daughters had married and settled in homes of their own. All was working well with Job, and all his neighbors thought him very fortunate.

So now we leave this terrestrial scene and turn to a celestial one.

We do not suppose that in heaven there are alternate periods of day and night, but all is day; and we hardly know how to designate the time when what we are about to relate occurred. At any rate, while every thing was contributing so unobtrusively to Job's welfare on earth, there was a meeting held in heaven, or in some unknown place connected with heaven. We do not know the nature of this meeting. It was composed of the sons of God, of God himself, and of Satan. It might have been that God called the angels together in order to declare unto them some of the great mysteries of which they knew nothing. Or they may have had a petition to present for His consideration. But whatever the purpose of the meeting was is unknown to us. And one very strange thing is, Satan was there and took part in the proceedings. The meeting-place therefore must not have been in heaven, but in some other place, because nothing sinful can enter God's kingdom.

While they were assembled in this meeting, God was reviewing for his audience the people and the affairs of the world. He, perhaps, was commenting on the good deeds of some of his terrestrial creatures, and the bad deeds of others. And during the course of his remarks, he turns his eyes toward Asia Minor and beholds there his noble servant Job. He then addresses Satan with this question. "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil? Then Satan answered the Lord and said: 'Dost thou fear God for naught? Hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and the substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face.'" And the Lord said unto Satan, "Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand." With this command to Satan God adjourned the assembly, and Satan went forth to do a work which was indeed sad in the eyes of mortals.

From the assembly of the angels we now turn our eyes again to earth, and see what Satan will do.

Job's children were all assembled one day at the home of their eldest brother. We understand that they were having something like a reunion, or were celebrating a wedding anniversary, or they might simply have been there on an ordinary visit, for we must remember that people in those times were given to hospitality. While they were all assembled here, and enjoying themselves, a rude band of people called the Sabaeans, went to their homes and stole all their oxen and asses. A storm also arose and the lightnings from the clouds killed all the sheep, and the servants that attended them.

Soon after this calamity, another trouble sprang up. Job's children had many camels, and were accustomed to carry on a caravan trade across the Arabian deserts. While their camels were journeying on one of these trips, three bands of Chaldeans suddenly fell upon them and carried them away, first killing the servants. So in the course of a few hours all the earthly possessions of Job's children and of Job himself were taken away, and they were left with nothing. But had misfortunes stopped here, the result would not have been so bad. They did not stop here. While Job's children were yet enjoying their feast and social pleasures, a cyclone came dashing over the land, struck the house in which they were assembled, and overturning it, killed them all. It was a dreadful scene. A house of merriment suddenly turned into desolation. A house of rejoicing converted in the twinkling of an eye into a place of silence.

Some messengers hurrying onward from the homes of Job's children, soon disclosed these sad tidings to the father. It was a dark hour with him. It must have dazed him for a time. So sudden, so unexpected did the news come. But gathering up courage from a remembrance of the past, Job did not attribute these sad calamities to the ill-favor of God, but declared that, as God had given him all the blessings which the world could afford, so he had a perfect right to take them away. He therefore, still praised God for his goodness, and thought it would all work out for the best to him.

Had he been able to look behind the veil which hides the natural from the spiritual, and there perceive by whose agency these evils were wrought upon him, he might have felt like many others have, that God had forsaken him. But he could not see; he did not know, and therefore he contented himself by thinking that God would succor him in his troubles and still rule over him as he had done for years before.

HERBERT SCHOLZ.

From Beren Norfolk Co.

DEAR SUN:—Here I am again knocking at the door of your columns for admittance, I did not think to call again so early, but you know Bro. Ira Connelly our Sunday school missionary is on the "go" within the bounds of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, in the interest of the Sunday school work. So through the providence of God he was permitted to be with us to day, and with a few appropriate remarks, Dr. Barrett introduced and turned him loose right in our midst to use us as he pleased. Well, like most every other talker or orator he began to hit at us, first on the right, then on the left and I verily believe he sometimes tried to strike our heads and hearts—at least it seemed so to me, and I would not doubt that he succeeded in his efforts. The whole truth is, it was a good plain logical talk, calculated to stimulate and encourage any intelligent people. We trust that he may be wonderfully blessed and accomplish much in his efforts to promote the Sunday school cause. We had the pleasure again to day of listening to an excellent sermon from our pastor. It was about the failure of farmers and the causes of such failures. So plain was the scripture given that we could not fail to see what wayward children we are. Oh God, help us to consider our ways and help us to walk in obedience to thy wishes and thy laws, then the light of thy countenance and thy blessings shall be ours to enjoy through endless ages to come.

Concord.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—I meet the Church at Concord the 27th and 28th. After preaching Saturday we transacted the business of the church. Sunday at 10: A. M. the Sunday-school met and continued its work for one hour. At 11 A. M. I preached, and at the close of the sermon administered the Lord's supper to a very large audience.

Are Americans a Practical People?

The notion prevails in this country that we are a very practical people. We take credit to ourselves for being sensible, shrewd, and at least mindful of our own interests. This quality gets a harsher name from our foreign critics. They say that we are materialistic, grasping, and in fact sordid, as the thing we most care for is money, and that which we are most alive about is our material interests. They admit that we are "smart," but say that we are mentally commonplace and unimaginative. The critics are mistaken, and our own estimate of ourselves is more complacent than correct. We are a very imaginative people, and in many ways the most unpractical. The old stage conception of Uncle Sam as a good-natured rustic sitting in a rocking chair, whistling, was not altogether out of the way. Whistling is not a remunerative occupation, as a rule, although this quaint waiter on Providence, who seemed to imagine that if he sat at ease, all good things would in the course of time pass his way, occasionally did whittle out an invention that would save him from labor. He answered the gibes of his critic by pointing out the fact that the chair he sat in was a self-rocker—a little invention of his own. He was a man of vague dreams and imaginations.

No; brought to the test in the commercial struggle of the modern world for supremacy, the American is not practical. In rivalry with other active nations he shows himself a bungler, and lacking in practical wisdom and foresight. An inventor, yes; but lacking practical shrewdness. He is very ingenious. He has gone on doubling in the past few years the great world staples of corn, cotton, and iron, and he seems confidently to expect that Providence will market them for him; especially as he has cheapened the cost of all these products, it would only be fair for Providence to attend to the selling part. He knows that one per cent of the arable land in the cotton States will produce all the cotton the world can use, and he knows that the product of cotton and iron and grain increases in an enormously greater ratio than the population, and yet he neglects many of the most obvious means to profit by this bounty of nature and of his situation. He looks on and brags about his greatness, while his industrial and commercial rivals occupy the markets of the world. Now that he is in rivalry with them for a fair share in so plain a prize, his conduct shows him to be the most unpractical of men.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine for April.

The Practical Kind.

What is charity? asks a popular writer. That's what the little interrogation point in my heart asks once and awhile. I look in the Bible and it says: "is kind and suffereth much." I look in the world and ask, and it says: "Charity giveth largely to subscriptions and has monuments erected to it," and then I come back home and think.

And I remember that the other day I saw a man pick up a lame child and carry it across the street—that was charity.

And I remember that when I was ill somebody came in out of the sunshine and the gladness and made me happier by reading to me—that was charity.

And I remember that once when an unkind word might have hurt a young girl it was left unsaid—that was charity.

And I remember that when a word of encouragement would have helped a downcast man, it was given—that was charity.

My friends, charity isn't of necessity the giving of money or the preaching of sermons; it is the taking out of the bit of goodness of your own heart and handing it ever to whomsoever may need it. A heart is a funny thing. The more of it you give away the more of it you get. That is the reason that kind and lovable and charitable people are called great hearted. Are you on the list? I hope you are. If you are not, then just join your hand to mine and see what we can do together.—Exchange.

Unlicensed Speaking.

Few of us have such real things to talk about that we do not at times discuss the petty and ignoble. We profess to be interested in "the good, the beautiful, the true," and yet we turn aside from considering such ideal topics for petty criticism of the affairs of others.

"I never speak ill of any one," said a lady, noted in her small world for harsh, personal onslaughts; "but, of course, I must tell the truth!"

And so, if it be actually true that her friend has a physical deformity or moral defect, she feels quite at liberty to allude to it.

Rogers, the poet, won a reputation for caustic speech, but he had a great distaste for the "small beer" of personal gossip.

"I wonder how the Blanks are able to keep a carriage!" a lady once said to him in his own house, and the poet at once turned to a servant to say: "Go to blank square with Mrs. Proctor's and my compliments, and ask how the family contrive to pay for their carriage."

It was a cutting reproof, but the object of it was a woman of good sense and good nature, and she acknowledged the lesson to be a deserved one.

Unlicensed speaking springs too often from a desire to be clever and witty. "When I was young," said a man whose tongue was dipped in gall "I used to say good natured things, and nobody listened to me. Now that I am old I say ill natured things, and everybody listens."

But to speak even from the low plane of morality, where expediency reigns, it does not pay. To wound one's own self-respect for the sake of a brief applause is a poor investment, a losing game.

"Yes, I did think of retorting," said a young man who had suffered in silence over a brilliant but brutal attack, "but somehow I didn't do it. I said to myself, 'You won't lose anything by remembering your dignity.'"

We thank Rev. E. T. Iseley for new subscribers sent.

Three commencements this week, Elon College, Trinity College and the University.

In sending money for subscribers, always state whether they are new ones or renewals.

Musical Record for June has been received and is an excellent member. Can be had of Oliver Ditson Co., Boston.

Bro. Hollowell says some things in this issue of the SUN that we earnestly commend to the careful consideration of its readers, and we give to his remarks a hearty amen.

The North Carolina Teacher's Assembly meets at Morehead City, N. C., June 20 to July 4, 1893. During that time address all communications there intended for the N. C. teachers' Bureau.

Rev. J. W. Wellons is in attendance on the Commencement at Elon College this week. He says the Sunday school at Durham is doing well. He received three members into church fellowship last Sunday.

We ask the pardon of Rev. J. W. Holt for the mistake made in his Committee notice in last week's paper. Bro. Holt sent in his matter for the paper in good shape, but in the rush of work it got mixed a little.

We have a few of those excellent Children's Day Programs, by Rev. C. V. Strickland, on hand yet and are quite anxious to supply your church or Sunday school. Price 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen postpaid.

Can it be possible after all that has been said and written by Christian people, and a protest from the United States congress against open gates that the Directory of the Columbian Fair has disregarded all but the devil's wish, and opened the gates on the Lord's day? Yes, it is true—No Christian gentleman or lady ought to patronize the fair.

Prof. A. P. Fuquay of New Hope High School, Ala., will commence a canvass of the Ga. & Ala. Christian Conference in the interest of education soon, and continue said canvass several weeks. We wish the New Hope school much success.

We have just examined the issue of the Ram's Horn of May 17. It is a weekly religious paper, published at Chicago, price $1.50 a year. It is an excellent paper, and we do not hesitate to recommend it as being worthy the patronage of any one.

The Bible Our Only Creed.

NUMBER 1.

In declaring the Scripture of the Old and New Testament a sufficient rule of faith and practice, the Christians do not stand alone, but in practical application of it they do. Many denominations set forth this same principle, but denying to their adherents the right of private interpretation, the declaration becomes a dead letter. The real issue, therefore, is not between the Bible and creeds. It is between individual interpretation and church interpretation. Who shall interpret the Scripture? Shall the church interpret and dictate to the individual what he must believe, or shall the individual, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, search the Scripture for himself? Rome says it belongs only the church, and jealously reserves to herself that right. Protestantism says it belongs to the individual, but denies him that right unless his interpretation coincides with that of the church. The position of the Christian is that man is responsible for his belief to God alone, and therefore all of his religious and theological opinions are simply a matter between him and his God, with which no bishop, priest, pope, nor council has any right to interfere. The logical result of this position is the discarding of all creeds. The great majority of protestantism, however, still cling tenaciously to the creed, notwithstanding it has failed in all its adherents have ever claimed for it. They claim—

1. It preserves unity in the church. Has it done this? After sixteen and a half centuries of creedism the church is more divided than ever before,—divided into more than two hundred principal sects, besides numerous smaller ones. It has failed to preserve unity in particular bodies. The creed of the Methodist church has not prevented that body from becoming dozens of sects, each having a different creed. The creed of the Presbyterian church has not prevented it from becoming scores of denominations, many of them so different that they refuse to fellowship each other. Nor does the creed bind individual members more closely in brotherly love. The members of creed-bound church preserve no greater harmony than others, and are not united in religious belief unless that belief is parasitic. The creed is iron-bound. It makes no allowance for growth, and the Christian must grow. The growth of the kingdom of God is likened unto a grain of mustard seed. Now that growth is going on in the heart, for "the kingdom of God is within you." One of two things, therefore, must result; either the creed-bound must not grow, or they must break loose from the creed. Occasionally such growth occurs that they cannot be contained, so at some weak point a few palisades are broken down and a large number of prisoners make their escape.

2. It prevents heresy. The least heresy existed before there were any creeds, as history will prove. The creed has been so far from preventing heresy that it has often been the very cloak of heresy. The suppression of free thought and discussion is conducive to all manner of error both in church and state. The government of England, in order to prevent the dissemination of dangerous political opinions, restricted the liberty of speech both spoken and written. By this she defeated the very end she desired to obtain. It was not until men were free to speak and write as they pleased that England began to be purged of filth and corruption in thought; and discussion is the surest safeguard against error.

3. It presents to the world the religious faith of a particular body. I can hardly consider that a religious body has any faith when they simply accept the opinion of others without any question or thought on their part. If a denomination doesn't do this, they will differ among themselves to such an extent that no formulated document can set forth the faith of that body. Let us notice a few examples. The unwritten creed of the Baptist church sets forth close communion as the distinguishing feature of that church, yet there are a large number of Baptist who neither believe it nor practice it, while many others practice it only because they are under obligation, as they believe, to conform to the principles of that church while in it. The creed of the Methodist church sets forth as one of its principles baptismal regeneration, and though I have been thrown with methodists all of my life I have never heard one say he believed it. When a youth, I studied the Presbyterian

Confession of Faith in a Presbyterian S. S. That Confession of Faith taught that a part of the human family had been foreordained from all eternity to eternal damnation, but the pious and godly woman who taught that class believed no such stuff. The pastor of the church did not believe it, nor have I ever heard a Presbyterian say he did. Can a man learn from these creeds what their respective denominations believe any more so than one can tell from the Bible what the Christians believe?

4. It presents the fundamental principles of the gospel in a simpler form than the Bible. The bare mention of this claim appears absurd and ridiculous. If the creed has failed in anything it has certainly failed in this. A denomination frequently calls upon one of its ablest representatives to expound its creed to the public, who do not understand what it teaches. On many of the creeds there are carefully prepared commentaries. The writer once found a creed almost incomprehensible, but when he turned to an expositor of its ablest representatives, he found that no better. Isaiah, in speaking of the way of holiness that Christ would establish, says, "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." Can this be said of the creed? Even the wise have erred when they have been led by it. Can man improve on what Christ has done? The four gospels are just as plain and simple, both in words and construction, as language can well be. They are adapted to the capacity of children, and, as the prophet says even to the capacity of the foolish.

But the faults of the creed have not all been negative. It has borne much fruit and by this fruit it is known and by this will it be judged. It has led to numerous inconsistencies and dishonest practices in the church of God. It has sought to deprive man of God's best gifts,—freedom of thought and liberty of conscience. It has created and perpetuated hostility between the different members of Christ's kingdom, where naught should exist but love. It has severed homes, rent churches and disorganized states. It has set on foot a deadly spirit of persecution which has slaughtered millions of human souls.

A Visit to Eastern Virginia.

It is always pleasant to spend a week or so in the tide water regions. And it is doubly so in Eastern Virginia and North Carolina. Whilst in this section last week and week before, we received many acts of kindness, for which we are very thankful. We are under obligations for special favors shown by Revs.

W. W. Staley, N. G. Newman, H. H. Butler, C. J. Jones, D. D., J. P. Barrett, D. D., and brethren P. J. Kernodle, M. J. W. White, J. B. Harrell, Geo. J. Costen, and Sister Beal.

During the visit, we picked up several new subscribers, and received quite a number of old ones.

Our stay was extremely pleasant, and wish we could have staid longer, and especially to have remained until the laying of the corner stone at the new Berkley church. Our Berkley people have had a hard time, and deserve the prayers and sympathies of the entire church; but there is a brighter time ahead.

To The Preachers.

Dear ministers, you want a nice denominational paper; and we are as anxious for it as you can be. So read carefully our proposition. We want and need a new press to make a nice paper; but we have not the money to spare to pay for it. We do not want any one to give us the money, we want to give you value received for it.

By reference to the Annual you will find that in the bounds of the convention are churches as follows; Virginia Valley Conference 4, Ga. & Ala. Conference 16, Deep River Conference 21, Eastern Va. Conference 32 and the N. C. & Va. Conference 82, total 150. Now, if these churches will send us, on an average, two subscribers each by the tenth of Aug., 1893, we will have money to buy the new press. Some churches will readily send eight or ten, if the pastor will earnestly present the matter. Dear ministers will you do this work for us? Only an average of two new subscribers from each church with the money in advance. Who will be the first minister to read the list in accepting the proposition? Send in your names, and we will enter them on the list for a new press.

We have made this proposition to the southern churches; but gladly will we accept any help that may be sent from any of the northern churches.

If every minister will push the matter, it will be a success.

A High Compliment to Co-educational Colleges.

The May number of the The North Carolina Teacher shows that young men from co-educational colleges are excluded from the oratorical contest at the Teacher's Assembly this year. Certainly this is a very high compliment to the co-educational colleges.

Last year's young man from the fresh class of a co-educational college came near being off the pulpit of victory in the oratorical contest with full graduates of male colleges; so this year the male colleges have ruled out the co-educational colleges. It must have been because some one was afraid to compete with brain and grace which had come in mental contact with young ladies in the same class room.

What a Contradiction.

A few days ago while the cars were passing through one of the live towns of N. C. the conversation was turned towards a fine hotel which was near completion, when some one said; "Much depended on the way it was kept in the commencement of its history as to its future," whereupon a man remarked with an oath that the first thing he "wanted to know about a hotel, was it in a prohibition town? saying, "if it was, he wanted nothing to do with it." And in the next moment said, he was a "temperate man, and in favor of temperance; but, if he owned a hotel, he would have a bar room connected with it." He simply said one thing, and contradicted it in the next moment.

Men know temperance is right, and it will not do to deny it in word, if they do in conduct. Many acknowledge it to be right because they know it would be unpopular to do otherwise.

Corner-stone Laying

Friday, June 3, 1893, the corner-stone of the Berkley Christian church was laid with appropriate exercises. A collection was taken amounting to $438.

The following articles were placed in the stone: Record of church membership, a one cent piece of the year 1847, the year in which the church was established given by G. L. Thompson; photographs of the church in ruins after the storm of 1888, when the building in course of erection was blown down; Berkley Daily News, of Jan. 16, 1893, containing an account of the fire which destroyed the late church. Berkley Graphic of Dec. 1891, containing portraits of the leading men in Berkley; Christian Sun; Herald of Gospel Liberty; Norfolk Landmark and Virginian of June 2, 1893; card of the contractors, Messrs. Nichols & Wrenn; also of Mr. D. J. Bowden, Rev. and Mrs. Roger Charnock and Mrs. A. L. Hill; ticket of corner stone ceremonies and copy of hymns used.

Reply to Bro. Mood.

In the Sun of week before last, Bro D. J. Mood came to me in distress about Sunday school teachers. The case is this:

In the Sunday school of which he is Superintendent, he says he can not secure men as teachers, and as Paul has forbidden women to teach, he wants me to tell him what to do. I will do so with pleasure: Put the sisters to teaching, for they make good Sunday school teachers. But you say: How about Paul? That is all right, as I will now explain.

In 1 Tim. 2:12 Paul says: "But I suffer not a woman to teach." I want to know what Paul meant, and I turn to the Greek, and I see he used the word didaskhein. Then I turn to Green's Greek (New Testament.) Lexicon for the meaning of that word, and I find it means "to teach or speak in a public assembly," and then he gives 1 Tim. 2:12, as the passage in which the word is used in that sense. Now, as your Sunday school teachers do not have to do their teaching before a public assembly, why they are not forbidden to teach in the Sunday school by Paul, or any other inspired writer, so far as I know. So let them go ahead. If any wish to leave teaching in the Sunday school and go into the pulpit to teach, why then you should feel distressed about violating Paul's injunction.—"Suffer not a woman to teach," but let it give you no trouble, at all, while the work is teaching in the Sunday school.

In all this discussion I have held as stoutly as any that women have a grand work to do in God's vineyard, but I do not think that work is to preach the gospel from the pulpit, and by way of reminder let me say: Under the old Testament dispensation. No woman was ever made a priest; under the New Testament dispensation, Christ himself did not choose a woman in the twelve apostles. When Judas fell and his successor was chosen, they did not even cast lots for a woman, they cast lots for men only, and all this is backed by Paul's emphatic prohibition, saying "I suffer not a woman to teach," for which he assigned a reason, viz. That she was in the transgression.—In 1 Tim. 2:14. Why this should be so, I do not know, but since inspiration makes it so, I am disposed to yield to it as it becomes me to do. I have no desire to array inspiration against inspiration—I do not wish to handle the word of God deceitfully—its plain truths I must accept, or reject. If I reject, then I feel that I am astray.

Truly your brother,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

NOT SATISFIED.

Yes, Dr. Barrett, I am aware that it (didaskhein) meant, as you say, "to teach or speak in a public assembly," and I know it also meant to teach privately. And I know that a Sunday school is not a private gathering, but that the public is most cordially invited to come to the Sunday school every Sunday. And if it applies to one service it does to the other, so you see your explanation does not help me a bit. And then Paul's "let your women keep silence in the churches," 1 Cor. 14:34, will deny them even the right to sing in the congregation; while his "And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home" 1 Cor 14:35, will even forbid them the right to go to church service, according to your statement that Paul said what he meant and meant what he said. Now you see that you have made a worse muddle in my mind of this thing than you thought or intended. I can not find in my Bible that Paul makes a distinction or says they may teach in one kind of a public gathering and that they must not teach in another kind; and what authority you have for making this distinction and saying the Bible teaches it is beyond my scant knowledge. I am like you inasmuch as I prefer to accept the inspired word to the teachings of uninspired man. Please give me something Biblical that will make my duty plain.

And Bro. Barrett, where in the Bible do you find that Jesus ever "preached from the pulpit," and where in the Bible do you find that Paul ever "preached from the pulpit," or where in the Bible do you find that any of the apostles ever "preached from the pulpit"? that you would make that sacred to the men and forbid a woman to teach "from the pulpit" yet allow her to teach in another part of the church. If the Bible forbids her to speak in one part of the church does it not plainly say—"let your women keep silence in the churches"?—Not in the pulpit, but "in the churches."

If I take your statement for the gospel truth and go ahead all seems clear but then the Bible is our creed.

If I take your word and try to harmonize it with the gospel I find I have an impossible task.

If I take the Bible and follow its teachings I find that they are not in accord with all you have said.

Yours truly,

D. J. MOOD

Every book in the Bible was put there to teach us something about Christ that none of the others could do.

The great heroes of the church are people who do little things for God with no expectation that they will ever grow to be more than little things.

Don't be afraid to take your preacher home to dinner. There are many plain hints in the Bible that nobody can lose anything by having a godly man for a boarder.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

The Boy that Laughs

I know a funny little boy—
The happiest ever born;
His face is like a beam of joy
Although his clothes are torn.

I saw him tumble on his nose,
And w i d ed for a groan—
But how he laughed! Do you suppose
He struck his funny-bone?

There's sunshine in each word he speaks
His laugh is something grand;
Its ripples overrun his cheeks
Like waves on snowy sand

He laughs the moment he awakes,
And till the day is done;
The schoolroom for a joke he takes—
His lesson are but fun.

No matter how the day may go,
You cannot make him cry;
He's worth a dozen boys I know,
Who pout, and mope, and sigh.

—Wide Awake.

Why Tommy did not Speak His Piece.

"THERE WAS such a lot of people there—
And all the gaslights seemed to stare—
And—some one whispered hold up your head";

And—"Don't be scared, dear," somebody said.

And—all of'em clapped when I went in—
And somebody said: "Go on; Begin!"

And—I forgot every word I knew—
And—all of'em laughed—Boo-oo-oo oo."

—Selected.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

As I promised you that I would see that the Corner gets in the SUN each week, I come with this greeting, although I am very busy as you will see from the picture. Now I suppose there are some—and I expect a great many—who will not like the looks of this old man. Many did not like him with his "spiketail" coat and fewer will like him as he appears at work. Well, never mind that, you write and I promise you he will make a much nicer appearance next week and then perhaps you will like him better.

I wonder if the cousins forget that God wants us to work for him in the summer as well as the winter; at vacation time as well as during the school term; while at play as well as when at work? do you, my dears?

There are many ways for us to work for him. And it looks to me that those in the country can have the best chance to make money for the BAND. Boys and girls, can't you get a chicken and raise it and sell her eggs or raise little chickens and sell them or keep them and sell their eggs and have the money for the BAND? Others might plant some corn and when the roasting ears come on sell them. Others can plant water melons and many other little things. I am quite sure your parents will let you do this if you will ask them. And then you know it is so nice to give the money when you know you have made it your self. Now let us see if we can't have a nice sum in the bank before Elon College opens this fall.

I hope all the cousins who can will be at Elon commencement this week, and you can see some of the good you are doing. Some of the young men who are there have been helped by the money you have sent in.

Wishing you all a happy time I am

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

WAKEFIELD, VA, MAY 29 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little girl 8 years old and want to join the Band of cousins, if you will allow me space in the Corner. I go to Sunday school at Burton's Grove. Rev. M. W. Butler is our pastor, and we like him very much. Enclose please find half dime for the Band. I will write again soon if this does not find its way to the waste basket.

Your little niece,
GERTRUDE BAIN

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches, a year old, fresh as when picked. I use "Hood's improved process;" do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over one hundred families. Anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful fruit samples. Fall and winter are the best time to sell directions, so people can experiment and be ready for next fruit season. As there are many poor people like myself I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars, round home, in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers; for 19 two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the sample, postage, etc., to me Mrs. W. M. Griffith, New Concord, Ohio.

What Mr. Smith Thinks He

Said About Hood's Sarsaparilla

"Had Shakespeare lived here and suffered as I have, I think he would have said, Throw away all medicine except Hood's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and after I had taken it I felt as if I could undertake

The President's Duties.

Last month I had a return of prickly heat; it seemed impossible to stand up or lie down without almost tearing myself to pieces. I then got one more bottle and it has not only cured the heat but I believe it put my blood

MARRIED.

At 24 North St. Suffolk, Va., May 4th, by Rev. H. H. Butler, Mr. Junius W. Wellons and Miss Jamie Thifer. May their lives be long and happy.

At Garner, 2 P. M. May 21, by Rev. J. L. Foster, at the residence of the bride, Miss Sandal Utley, to Deacon Willis L. Moring. A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the marriage. They are both members of Hayes Chapel. Their many friends offer hearty congratulations and best wishes for a long prosperous and happy life.

J. L. FOSTER.

Holy Neck church was the scene of an interesting event on the 10th inst. The occasion being the marriage of Mr. I. T. Byrd and Miss Nora S. Porter, both of this county. The bridal party arrived at the church at 6 p. m. and entered from both sides to the strains of a beautiful wedding march by Miss Mattie Enre. The bridesmaids entered from the right followed by the bride handsomely attired in cream and satin, leaning on the arm her best maid, Miss Mamie Nelms; the groomsmen from the left, followed by the groom leaning on the arm of the brides brother, T. E. Porter. The bride and groom met at the altar, where, beneath an arch of evergreen and flowers, they took the solemn vow. The party then repaired to the home of the groom where they partook of a most elegant supper, and after a delightful evening of social converse, music, tete-a-tete, etc. until near the erie hour, the merry party dispersed, while the dewy night was falling from heaven and the sinking stars were inviting slumber, leaving many kind benedictions upon the young and happy pair.

DIED.

DEAR SUN:—I have today received the sad tidings of the death of one of my dear pupils of New Hope. Thomas Hodges, of Langdale, aged about 21 years, died of Typhoid fever after a short illness of ten days. He was a close observing, hard working pupil, highly esteemed of all who knew him, loved for his modesty and respected for his manly bearing. He was the son and only child of the devoted parents Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Hodges, of Langdale (West Point Mills), Ala. The suffering was short but intense; and on the tenth day in his prayer was heard:—"Good Lord let me die," which Jesus in his kind mercy heard. To his dear parents let us extend our heart felt sympathy and prayer, and the dear grand mother, who loved him as an idol of her aged heart and the object of her tenderest care, may God's rich love sustain

A. P. FUQUAY.

Near Durham, N. C., on Feb. 16, 1893, Mary C. Shepard daughter of Lewis and Jane Howard, wife of J. M. Shepard, in her thirty-second year. She leaves a husband and three sweet little children, a father and mother, four sisters and three brothers and a host of friends to mourn their loss. She was a strict member of the Christian church at O'Kelly's Chapel. She died in the triumph of a living faith. Funeral by the writer. The largest congregation seen at O'Kelly's for years in attendance; the text was Jeremiah 15:9; Luke 8:52; Prov. 31:26-28. She has conquered the last enemy, laid down her armor and taken her crown. May God bless her little children and her husband, mother and father in their affliction.

Youngsville, N. C., May 23, 1893.

In Suffolk Va., April 24th, Mr. William T. Munford, aged about 30 years. He died trusting in the Lord. He spoke of soon being with his dear mother, who died over 20 years ago. His only regret was that he had not lived nearer the Lord, that he had not done his duty towards his church and his God. He was buried at Mt. Carmel church—where he first found the Lord and united with God's people to work for Jesus—but failed to do his duty—Sorry—Many of us will be sorry when we come to die, that we did not live nearer to the Lord. Neglected duty—so many of us neglect duty. Let us by the help of God, do our duty and when we come to die we will have nothing to regret. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

Blessed thought! if we are true to the Lord,

This and That.

Whenever the Christian has a need he should also remember that he has a God.

Who knows but that many of the sweetest surprises of eternity will consist of being shown by loved ones who passed over before us, how near they were to us in dark places where our hearts almost failed us.

God does not become weary and impatient as men do, but keeps on calling with first one voice and then another, for the sinner to repent.

God's way of making a man rich is to first make him righteous.

A bad man can never own anything that is fire proof.

The right kind of a good man will keep right on growing in grace whether he can have his own way or not.

Christian's soul will grow and fatten where that of a worldling would starve to death.

It makes courage to preach the gospel anywhere as God wants it preached.

It is better to fail in trying to do something for God than to succeed in trying to do something for ourselves.

We are so little and narrow ourselves it is hard for us to understand how God's mercy can be so great.

Nobody can have so good a time in this world as the people who are right with God.

Every Christian is a burning and a shining light for the Lord.

We do not have to be great in anything except faith to obtain great favor with God.—Rams Horn.

Live Within Your Means.

It may be hard and difficult for you to live within your means; but if you are an honest man, you must do it. To spend more money than you make is to open the way to untold troubles and to insure the final ruin of your reputation and character. For no reason—not to gratify your own tastes, nor to please your family, nor to help even a useful charity—should you adopt a policy so fraught with evil consequences. After all, the people who are compelled to practice rigid economy get as much good out of life as anybody else. "Plain living and high thinking often go together." To be able to do without luxuries is better than to have them.—Nashville Advocate.

There is a defect in the integrity of a man who takes a paper, gets the benefit of it, and then refuse to pay for it. That defect is dishonesty. Dishonesty is sin in the sight of God, and "the soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Rev. E. C. Sell.

We have reason to doubt the integrity of a man who will not pay an honest debt. His creditor being able to live without the money, does not cancel his obligation to pay it. Whenever you find a man who can, but will not, pay an honest debt, put him down on the list of those whose hearts are not right in the sight of God. He might as well go to the man's safe and take the same amount from it.—Rev. E. C. Sell.

Not So Funny.

Did you see this story by William Henry Siviter in the Bazar? If not, it is too good to miss.

I was engrossed in my magazine as the train sped on, and did not notice that a bride and groom had entered the car at a small station; but my attention was attracted to the couple in rather an odd way,—by telegraphic signals.

Two young men, who sat opposite to each other across the aisle, were making remarks about them by ticking with their pocket-knives on the metal arm of the seat.

"Sweet as a peach, is n't she?" tickled off the young man whose seat was immediately behind the new arrivals.

"Yes" replied the other. "Bridal couple, evidently."

"See how close he sits to his tootsy-tootsy."

"I see. They are holding each other's hand, are n't they?"

"No; but they are exchanging love-glances."

"How on earth do you suppose a chump like that managed to catch such an angel?"

"Give it up. She surely could n't see anything in him to admire."

"Her lips were just made for kisses."

"That's what they were."

"Say!"

"Well?"

"When the train gets to the next tunnel, I'm going to reach over and kiss her."

"You would n't dare."

"Yes, I would. She'd think it was her husband, you know."

Their telegraphic conversation ceased here, for the bridegroom had taken out his pocket-knife, and commenced to tick off this message on the arm of his seat:—

"When the train gets to the next tunnel the chump proposes to reach over and hammer your two heads together till your teeth drop out. See?"

Soon after that two passengers might have been seen sneaking off to the smoking-car; and they remained in the smoker not only while the train went through the tunnel, but until they reached their destination.

By able, conservative management, safe investments, big rate of interest, low death rate, the Northwestern has won the love and applause of its policyholders and the respect and admiration of all who are acquainted with it.

Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C. says: think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders."

Mr. R. B. Ramey, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has no superior."

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original,

"I'M A DAISY."

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo.
The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your sub-get over $35 in value. Address the publisher,

Died.

At his home, near Great Bridge, Norfolk Co., Va., June 1, 1893, Simeon J. Rountrey, aged 54 years, 2 months 22 days.

Bro. Rountrey was sick just one month, having been taken down May 1, 1893. He was a great suffer, but he was very happy and asked his wife and children not to weep, but to rejoice because one more soul was safe. What glad news from a dying bed!

Bro. Rountrey was from Gates Co., N. C., originally, and was to the day of his death a devout member of the Baptist church. God be praised for his life—devout, godly, consecrated. He had a host of friends and they were in all denominations.

We tender a brother's sympathy to his weeping loved ones in the sad loss they have sustained, and beg them to bear it the more cheerfully because their loss is his gain through Christ.

Funeral by the writer from Isa. 26:3.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.
(Biblical Recorder copy please.)

Near Great Bridge, Norfolk County, Va., April 1, 1893, John Thomas Taylor, aged about 40 years.

The deceased had been a great suffer, but in the end, he was very happy and fully resigned to death. Only a few days before, his wife died, and soon he went the same way—leaving a son to weep over their departure. His dear mother watched by him through many months of suffering, and did a faithful part, as a mother's love is so willing to do. Funeral services by the writer.

J. P. BARRETT.

The Same Old Story.

A terrible scene was enacted in a Brooklyn home a few days ago illustrative of the brutalizing effects of strong drink. A poor wife and mother lay on her bed in a wretched tenement-room dying. Her three little ones were at the bedside weeping and waiting for the end. Suddenly the father burst into the room in a drunken fury and drove the children away from the dying woman with fearful threats. He then locked the door of the room and began to smash the furniture. Police were called in, but when they arrived the wife was dead. The man showed fight, and it took the united efforts of several men to overpower him and carry him off to the police station. A few days later, in the same city, another drunkard came home late, and finding his wife asleep, dragged her from her bed by the hair and kicked and pounded her into insensibility. She was found in a pool of blood and carried to the hospital, where her injuries were said to be fatal. If such horrible cruelties as these were practiced in the interior of Africa, the civilized word would be called upon to send an expedition to that country to put a stop to such barbarities. But as they actually occurred in the city of churches no attention will probably be paid to them. It is the same old story after all—the story of misery, cruelty, blood and crime, which everywhere follows the liquor traffic. And yet there are Christian men who stand up and say that this devil business ought to be licensed!—Christian at Work.

From Friend to Friend

Goes the story of the excellence of Hood's Sarsaparilla and what it has accomplished, and this is the strongest advertising which is done on behalf of this medicine. We endeavor to tell honestly what Hood's Sarsaparilla is, and what it will do, but what it has done is far more important far more potent. Its unequalled record of cures is sure to convince those who have never tried Hood's Sarsaparilla that it is an excellent medicine.

A New York Block.

There is one block of tenement houses in New York—and it isn't the only one of the sort—in which dwell two hundred and sixty-four families, one thousand and sixty persons in all.

The nearest Methodist pastor has been looking up the religious preferences of these families. This is what he finds: Jews, 164 Catholics, 23; German Lutheran, 19; Methodist, 12; all others, 23; no religion, 23. Only a few of them really go to synagogue or church.

Miss Turner, a deaconess, tells of her discouraging work on this block:

"I have visited the block with great care, not a family escaping my attention. I have left tracts and papers and Bibles in every family that would receive them; prayed and read the Bible whenever it was possible always inviting all members of the family to our church. Some laughed; some said, 'Yes, we will come next Sunday;' 'We will come some time;' and yet another class, and a very large one, say, 'We have no need of church. What will you give us if we go?'"

"One woman said in the presence of a family of children: 'I'll go if you have a dance and give us lager to drink.' I have gone on, not discouraged, but praying that God would touch the hearts of these people."—Ex.

The agitation concerning the advisability of doing away with the communion-cup in church services, and substituting therefor, individual cups for each member, is bearing fruit. Our friend, Dr. A. J. Longfellow, of Fostoria, O., at the last quarterly conference of the M. E. Church, introduced the following resolution: "Resolved, That the church purchase four hundred little wine-glasses, and each communicant receive the wine out of a glass that no other person has used, and the bread be passed on baskets or plates, and that it be not handled or broken by the preacher."—Cincinnati Lancet Critic.

"That Woman Knows God."

An humble and deeply devoted Christian woman was recently spending Sunday at the house of a friend. She has passed through enough in twenty-five years to make a book of thrilling interest. At the dinner table, on the Sunday in question, she was engaged in animated conversation, recounting some of the kind dealings of the Lord with her, and while narrating these things her face was shining. There was a Roman Catholic domestic waiting on the table, watching and listening to the holy woman. Next day, after the visitor had left, the domestic said to the lady of the house, "That woman knows God—an' sure didn't I see it in her face!" The poor Irish woman was right—she had a discerning eye. O if every Christian were living so as to compel beholders to say, "That man or that woman knows God."—Evangelist

What Think ye of Christ?

What think ye of Christ? is the test
 To try both your state and your scheme;
 You cannot be right in the rest,
 Unless you think rightly of Him,
 As Jesus appears in your view,
 As he is beloved or not,
 So God is disposed to you,
 And mercy or wrath are your lot.

Some take him a creature to be,
 A man or an angel at most;
 Sure these have not feelings like me,
 Not know themselves wretched and lost.
 So guilty, so helpless am I,
 I durst not confide in his blood,
 Nor on his protection rely,
 Unless I were sure he was God.

Some call him a Saviour in word,
 But mix their own works with his plan;
 And hope he his help will afford,
 When they have done all that they can;
 If doings prove rather too light
 A little they own, they may fall,
 They purpose to make up full weight
 By casting his name in the scale.

Some style him the pearl of great price;
 And say he's the fountain of joys;
 Like Judas, the Saviour they kiss,
 And while they salute him betray;
 Ah! what will profession like this
 Avail in his terrible day?

If asked what of Jesus I think Though still my best thoughts are but poor,
 I say, he's my meat and my drink,
 My life, and strength, and my store
 My shepherd, my husband, my friend,
 My Saviour from sin and from thrall,
 My hope from beginning to end,
 My portion, my Lord, and my all.

Whips or Brains.

1. Dan Rice, the noted circus man, was an apostle of the whip, and though a successful clown was a failure as a horse trainer. In his efforts to manage a ring horse in Geneva, N. Y., he whipped him to death. Any fool can kill a horse, but killing is not training.

2. Bartholomew, whose trained horses astonish multitudes, adopts kind and intelligent management and subdues the most refractory horses without the whip or other cruelty. So do Gleason, Rarey, Norton Smith, Mingo and others. It is found to be immensely the best way! They neither kill nor degrade themselves with cruelty.

3. A valuable horse in Chicago became so unmanageable that his owner sold him at a heavy loss, whips and severity having failed, as usual. The buyer removed his check and blinders, treated him gently and kindly, and he is now driven everywhere by a gentle and timid lady, who will not part with him. Which method is best?

4. United States Senator Leland Stanford, who owns one of the most valuable studs in this country, not only prohibits all severity but says: "I never allow a man to speak unkindly to one of my horses, and if one swears at a horse I discharge him on the spot." His horses are remarkably docile, of course.

5. Intelligent horsemen are learning that kindness is far superior to cruelty in managing and teaching horses, that kickers, biters and balkers are natural results of abuse; that runaways are often a result of severity, causing nervousness and excitability; that pounding a horse is as senseless as pounding a baby, and quite as contemptible, and that the most useful, faithful and long-lived horses are those which are treated from birth with kindness and common sense.

6. In the best ordered stables in New York not only all harshness, but even loud talking is forbidden and the ill-temper which leads to swearing at a horse secures prompt discharge."—Light.

Seven Ways of Giving.

1. The careless way: To give something to every cause that is presented, without inquiring into its merits, and not to give to any cause unless it is presented.

2. The impulsive way: To give from impulse as much and as often as love and pity and sensibility prompt. This is uncertain and irregular.

3. The lazy way: To make a special effort to earn money for benevolent objects by fairs, festivals, etc.

4. The self-denying way: To save the cost of luxuries and apply to purposes of religion and charity. This may lead to asceticism and self-complacency.

5. The systematic way: To lay aside, as an offering to God, a definite portion of our gains—one-tenth, one-fifth, one-third or one-half. This is adapted to all, whether rich or poor, and gifts would be largely increased if it were generally practiced.

6. The equal way: To give to God and the needy just as much as we spend on ourselves, balancing our personal expenditure by our gifts.

7. The heroic way: To limit our own expenditures to a certain sum and give away all the rest of our income. This was John Wesley's way. —Homiletic Review.

God's Heart of Forgiveness.

A Christian visitor found a young woman who had left her father's house for a sinful life, and now was wretched beyond comparison. Her anguish was especially in the desire to get home again, and her certainty that her father could not and would not receive her, nor forgive her. "Have you ever tried him?" was asked. "No, I dare not." "Does your father know where you are?" "I have never written to him since I left home." It was a long time before she would even let the visitor write in her behalf. But at last she consented, and the letter was well prayed over. By return of post an answer came, with immediate written large on the outside, and the substance of was: "Ready to forgive." Said the father: "This is what I have been earnestly praying for. I have wanted to know where my wanderer was, and yearned to hear that she was willing to return. Let her come back at once; I will forgive all, and love her still." Notice that this father's readiness to forgive and receive his child was a fact before the letter was written—a fact all the time she thought so hardly of her father, and judged his heart by her own deservings. What should this teach us about our Heavenly Father?—Ee.

"Iowa," says a recent daily paper, "must be a pretty good State to live in; no State debt, a school fund of $14,000,000 and the smallest rate of illiteracy of any State in the Union." Let us see. Iowa is a Prohibition State is it not?

Whenever a battle is won it means that somebody has taken a stand under a flag that means something.

What is the Profit?

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin? Job 35:3.

Man is a sinner. "All have sinned." "There is none righteous, no, not one." Sin is polluting. It defiles the whole man. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it: but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment." Men know and admit that they are sinners, but they do not realize the polluting nature of sin until their minds are enlightened by the divine spirit and the truths of the Bible. Then they see and feel the sinfulness of sin, and the need of being cleansed from its pollution. This was the experience of David. He had sunk deep in sin, and had been awfully polluted by it; but he did not realize this till he was brought under the enlightening influence of divine truth. Then he saw his pollution, and prayed earnestly: "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin." Sooner or later all are made to realize the corruption of sin, and the need of being cleansed from it.

One of the great questions of the ages has been, how can men be cleansed from sin, and be as though they had never sinned? Human philosophy could give no satisfactory answer to this question, but God has made provision to meet this want of our nature. Speaking of the coming and work of Christ the prophet Zechariah said: "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." This was typified in the cleansing ceremonies of the law. Hence Paul said: "For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctified to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" It is through Christ that we are to be cleansed from the pollution of sin. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." "If we walk in the light as he (God) is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." The promise is, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The redeemed in heaven realize that they were cleansed from their sins through the blood of Christ, and they sing: "Unto him that hath loved, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever."

The philosophy of this cleansing of man from sin is explained by Paul. "After that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life." This washing of regeneration comes through obedience. Here Peter said to his brethren "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." Christ prayed for his disciples. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

The scriptures urge upon men the necessity of this cleansing from sin, but they do not see nor feel the importance of this purifying; and they ask: "What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin?" They argue that they will do just as well, make as much money, and be just as happy without it as with it. They love "pleasures of sin," and find their happiness in them. They do not see how they can be happy without them. "The national man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The man who finds his happiness in carnal pleasures can see no beauty in purity and holiness. Paul says. "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." This is a strange and fatal blindness.

When any matter is presented to, and urged upon men, the first question they ask is, will it pay? This is wise if we look at the matter from a right standpoint. If it is a matter relating only to the interests of this life we should look at it in this light, and weigh it accordingly. The question of cleansing from sin involves our best interests in time, and in eternity. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Cleansing from sin is essential to the attainment to the highest possible good in time and in the life to come. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." To "see" here means enjoying, and it teaches us that a man is not fitted for nor can he enjoy the kingdom of God without this change.

Cleansing from sin brings man into a state of reconciliation with God, and gives him peace of mind. Sin separates man from God, and fills the mind with feelings of fear and dread. Isaiah said, "Behold the arm of the Lord is not shortened, that he cannot save; neither is his ear heavy, that he cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." While living in this state of sin there is a feeling of condemnation, and a conviction of deserved punishment. Whenever we think of God, and our accountability to him, we are troubled. We know that we cannot escape from the just punishment of God, and this makes us afraid of the future; but when we are cleansed from sin this fear is all taken away, and we have peace of mind. We know that God has pardoned our sins, and we are thus delivered from wrath to come. Now we have sweet communion with God, and no dread of the future. One of old said, "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow. Then called I upon the name of the Lord: O Lord, I beseech thee, deliver my soul." The Lord heard his cry, and delivered him; and he said, "Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." Then turning in gratitude to God he exclaims: "Thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling."

Cleansing from sin frees the believer from spiritual bondage. Man is held in cruel and degrading slavery by evil passions and habits, and there can be no deliverance only by cleansing him from his sins. Rom. 6:16-18. Cleansing a man of his appetite for ruin, frees him from the most debasing of all slavery, and brings him into the enjoyment of the liberty of the children of God.

Cleansing from sin secures comfort and consolation in the hour of trial and sorrow. Afflictions come in some form sooner or later to all men, and the consciousness of sin clouds the mind in darkness in that hour. Trouble brings a man's sins to remembrance, and quickens his conscience. When the widow Zarepath lost her son by death she exclaimed to Elijah, "O thou man of God, art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?" The consciousness of sin was the bitter drug in her cup of sorrow. Thus it always is, and ever will be; but when cleansed from sin a man can trust in the love and mercy of God, and is sustained by his conscious presence.

He can say with David. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." He knows that all the sorrows of earth will soon end in the joy of heaven; that these light afflictions which are but for a moment will work for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. He looks beyond the temporal things which are eternal. He can glory even "in tribulation; knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience, experience; and experience hope." This is one of the great blessings that comes from cleansing from sin, and it can come in no other way. A lovely young lady, lay dying. Observing her father weeping she said to him: "Why, sir, so much grief? Had an offer of marriage been made to me by one who in himself is all that you could wish, and whose situation in life is far superior to mine, and whose residence must be in a remote part of the kingdom, perhaps the consideration of advantage and promotion to me would have reconciled you to my removal, though it would have been little other than a separation for life. But now I am about to be promoted beyond anything that could have occurred in this world. Then why this reluctance? Our next meeting will be in circumstances of high improvement, joyful and perpetual." When our friends win an honorable position, and attain something valuable here we rejoice; but when they win the victory over sin and Satan, and gain a crown in heaven we mourn and weep. We should rejoice in their triumph.

Cleansing from sin brings hope in death. Why is it that men fear to die? Because of conscious sin, and the conviction that death will bring them into the presence of God where they must answer for their sins. This is why men dread death. I have seen many die who were tortured with fear of death, but it was because of conscious sins, and they wanted to be cleansed from it in that hour. Men who disregard God, reject the Saviour, and neglect the Bible, long for the cleansing blood in the hour of death. They realize its need then. Without the cleansing power of the blood of Christ, and his love in our hearts we cannot meet death in peace; but cleansed from sin we can triumph over death, and go down into the dark valley rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. A man living in a dark, damp, unhealthy house, and compelled to remain there until it drops down around him, would rejoice to see it crumbling. Thus it is with the Christian. He is doomed to live in this house of clay until it tumbles down, and then he shall ascend to a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. This is one of the glorious advantages resulting from being cleansed from his sins, and it answers the question in our text: "What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin?"

Cleansing from sin prepares a man for, and secures to him eternal life in heaven. Paul asks his Roman brethren the question, "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are ashamed? for the end of these things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the ways of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Will there be no profit in being clothed in a body fashioned like the glorious body of Christ; in dwelling in his loving presence; in being the companions and equals of the holy angels; in beholding the uncreated glory of God and the Lamb; in listening to and joining in the songs of the redeemed in heaven walking the golden streets of the eternal city, and in feasting on the fruit of the tree of life that grows hard by the eternal throne? Will there be no profit in all this? "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

Cleansed from sin, and humbly trusting in Christ, the Christian is ready to meet whatever awaits him. It may be affliction, or it may be death; but he has no fear, for he knows that all is well.

Wesley, the chief founder of Methodism, was always ready and to the minute. A lady once said to him: "If you knew that you would die at twelve o'clock tomorrow night, how would you spend the intervening time?" "Why," was his answer, "just as I intend to spend it. I should preach tonight at Gloucester and again tomorrow morning. After that I would ride to Tewkesbury, preach in the afternoon and meet the society in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's house, as he expects to entertain me; converse, pray with the family, retire to my room at ten o'clock, commend myself to my heavenly Father, lie down to sleep and wake in glory." Can anybody suggest a better program?

"Home, Sweet Home"

Of all songs we sing the loveliest is "Home, Sweet Home," and how true is the saying that the two sweetest words in our language are "Home and Heaven." Yes, God meant that there should be a very close link between the two, and that is why there is so much in the Bible about family life. Yet how is it that so many young people seem to be happier anywhere than at home? There must be something wrong, and when there is anything wrong, in the home life the mother must ask herself where she has been making a mistake. Have the children learned that home is a place where there are sour looks, and continual fault-finding; a place from which their friends are banished; where innocent merriment is silenced, and their gathered treasures condemned as rubbish and litter. If so, can you wonder that they prefer the liberty of the streets? But let the children learn that home is a place where peace dwells; where mutual rights are respected and justice is done to all, and it will have an enduring attraction for them.

The corner-stone on which true home happiness rests is religion. The home must be consecrated by family prayer. Wherever Abraham pitched his tent there he built an altar. Family prayer is the strongest cement with which you can bind your home together; it raises it from a mere lodging place where we eat and sleep, to a sacred spot around which gather the holiest feelings of our hearts. Where God is thus honored parents will be more readily, obeyed brothers and sisters will be more loving, and there will be harmony instead of discord.

Cherish courtesy in your own manner towards your children, and in that of child to child. Show them the home is not a bear garden, but a place for gentle words and deeds. Teach the boys to wait on the girls, and the girls to accept their help with ready thanks. Be patient yourself with the children's noise and audacity; it is better for your head to ache now than your heart by and by. Take an interest in their game and pursuits, guiding them in the choice of those that are good and elevating. Encourage the boys in handicrafts, not scolding them for making a mess, but teaching them to clear it away themselves.

Do not let your home be all self-centered, let the light of your household joys fall on other homes less happy. Encourage your children in acts of voluntary self-denial. Mark your family anniversaries by some deed of kindness to others.

Try this plan, and you will find that when the children are scattered along life's many ways the memory of the old home will be a safeguard in temptation and a solace in trial, because it was a foreshadowing of that eternal home where "tears are wiped away," and where "naught that defileth enters in."—Mary Cochrane.

The Sustaining Power of Sympathy.

One can hardly know the value and comfort of being surrounded by those whose ideas and interests are kindred to his own except by coming into some situation where this is no longer the case. Our lives are sustained by the environment of sympathetic lives as our bodies are buoyed up by the atmosphere in which we live. We instinctively choose the fellowship of those whose thoughts have some affinity with our own. Strangers on meeting one another spontaneously seek for some common interest,—some point of connection in ideas or experience which their lives may have. There is generally a careful avoidance of subjects on which it is seen that they could have no common ground. The possibility of such an acquaintance ripening into an abiding friendship is chiefly dependent upon the degree in which the minds of the two persons can sympathize with one another.

Sympathy is the soul of our best friendships, and an essential element in all true religion as well. It is one of the activities of love. It is our feeling with and for another, and takes various forms according to our relations to that other. It takes the form of pity where its object is in suffering and distress. It goes out in heroic support and defense when its object is subjected to injustice and reproach. It assumes the form of adoration when our highest and holiest feelings are called out toward one who comes to us radiant with the love of God, and who offers to take us into friendship with himself. It was one of the great aims of the Jesus to quicken men's sympathies so that they should see things as he did, and should feel about life as he felt. Some real sympathy on the part of men with him lay at the basis of all true discipleship to him. Men would never be drawn to him as long as they felt no attraction for his views of truth and duty. But when once they came to belong to truth as he expressed it; when they recognized his ideas of God and of life to be the true ones, and yearned to make them more fully their own,—then they came to him, drawn by the strong attraction of an inner affinity of life.

The large place which sympathy has in all that is best in human life proves its power to sustain, strengthen, and comfort us in every hour of need. Our experience in receiving the sympathy of friends when we were in trouble, or in finding encouragement from those of like minds and interests with ourselves, soon teaches us how desolate would life be without the strength and refreshment of spirit which we constantly receive from sympathetic friends.

Sympathy is our principal incentive in study. This is one great reason why studies are more successfully and easily pursued by men in classes than alone. It is, no doubt, conceivable, that a man should take books and sit down alone and acquire a liberal education, but it almost never happens. Why? Because the stimulus of a sympathetic environment would be wanting. When one pursues his studies in conjunction with others of similar aims and interests, every other man's work is a source of strength to him. Here, too, lies the power of the living teacher. He may convey no information which is not conveniently available in some book, but his work is justified if he communicates something of himself to his pupils, if he by his interest in their exertions, and by his appreciation of their difficulties, encourages them to renewed application, and shows them how to attain the good desired by patient, sure achievement.

How difficult is it for men to make progress in good character, or even to maintain it at all, when all their surroundings are unfavorable to this result! Few can wholly resist the personal environment of their lives. The instinctive desire for fellowship becomes in certain evil conditions of life one of the most potent forces which tend to undermine good resolution and to thwart good tendency or right start in life. Hence the power of association. The greatest human force which operates upon a man's life, to lift it up or drag it down, lies in the personal relations which he sustains. The soul thrives best in a favoring atmosphere, as the plant grows best in pure air and sunshine. The spiritual nature is sensitive to touch of other souls. We are unconsciously but powerfully swayed and shaped by the subtle forces which spring out of our surroundings, and which play constantly upon our lives.

It must enhance our realization of our Lord's suffering on earth to reflect upon the scanty sympathy with his heavenly truth which he met among men. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not," is the brief pathetic story of the spiritual desolation amidst which he lived. Those whom God had been seeking to prepare for his reception by cen-curies of training, and therefore, in a peculiar sense, were His proper possession, refused to recognize this true relation. With their minds filled with thoughts of God which were irreconcilable with his doctrine of the divine grace and fatherhood, they turned a deaf ear to his sublimest teachings concerning the way in which men should worship God and prove themselves to be his sons. Filled with ambition for power, and with dreams of national greatness, they would not listen to a teacher who taught that true greatness consisted in humility and service. Flattering themselves that they were the favorites of heaven, and firmly convinced of their own righteousness, they resented the call to repentance, and burned with rage and hate for him who spoke with holy courage of their selfishness and hypocrisy. What an experience of suffering it must have been for Jesus to meet all this indifference and scorn for his heavenly mission! What a loneliness of mind, a desolation of spirit, must have been his in the unsympathetic atmosphere of the Judaism of his day! In the suffering which he bore during his life in this sinful world there must have been present, as one of its bitterest ingredients, the sense of the immeasurable gulf between his ideas and interests and those of his contemporaries. His was the pain of solitariness and isolation,—the consciousness that he was without the sympathy of the men whose friendship he would gladly have won.

This fact in our Lord's life lends new impressiveness to the way in which he ever opened his life to his Father, who never left him alone, however deserted he may have been by men. In consequence of his fellowship with God, he was never alone, not even in the stillness of the night or in the solitude of the mountain. Whether in some desert place, or on the shore of the Galilean lake, or in the still lonelier city of Jerusalem, he still found comfort in the presence of God, and in the knowledge that he was doing his will.

The real humanness of Jesus' life is shown in the way in which, as an offset to the lack of sympathy on the part of the mass of the people, he gathered about him a company of those who sincerely, though partially, entered into sympathy with him, and into appreciation of his thoughts. From the beginning of his ministry he began to gather about him a band of those who felt drawn by his purity and truth to his person. At length he chose out from this coming twelve who should continue in specially close relations with him, and of these twelve there appears to have been an inner circle of three who were the still more intimate companions of his solitude, and the sharers of his inmost thoughts; and again, of these three there was one who is mentioned, with peculiar emphasis, as "the disciple whom Jesus loved." This emphasis is due to the fact, no doubt, that the Apostle John possessed a nature peculiarly sympathetic with Jesus. His was a fine grained, spiritual mind. The depth and tenderness of Jesus appealed to him powerfully, and his whole being responded to the heavenly glory and divine purity which he beheld in his Lord. He yielded himself up to the power of that holy mystery which he found in the life of Jesus. The heavenly light which had come to the world in Jesus filled his own life with its brightness and blessing, and during all his subsequent life he continued to develop in reflection and experience of the results of this divine bestowment.

How natural, how human, it was for our Lord to resort to fellowship with this little circle of sympathetic friends, in order to receive from them comfort and cheer during those days which he passed in this indifferent and hostile world! While the nation as a whole was rejecting him, he could find in the group of his disciples that kinship of spirit with himself which men must have in order to please God; and he could see in those faithful souls which had drunk of his his spirit, the nucleus for the kingdom of heaven which he had come to found, and the sure promise of the progress of his cause.

But Jesus did not merely use the sympathy of others; he gave his own freely to them also. There is as great a blessing in giving as in receiving sympathy. We make ourselves strong in all things good, not by casting ourselves idly upon the sympathy of others, but by taking an interest in others. We cannot helpfully use sympathy unless we give it too. Such a unity of interest as makes us strong in the strength of others is not a one-sided, but a two-sided, affair. We are secure of the inspiration and comfort which the sympathy of others can give us, only as we give them our own. In this way men are bound together in a union which gives strength to them personally, and strength to the cause which they combine to support.—S. S. Times.

Your Boy.

You do not know what is in him. Bear with him; love him. He is a boy. You think him so lighthearted and fear he is light-headed as well. Remember he calls you father. When he played in your lap you fondly hoped he would some day be a great and useful man. Now that he has grown larger and his young blood drives him into gleeful sport, and makes him impatient of serious things rattling, thoughtless you almost despair. But don't be snappish and snarlish, and make him feel you are disappointed in him. He is your boy, and you are to live with him. He bears your name, and is to send it down on the stream of time. He inherits your fortune and fame, and is to transmit them to generations to come.

It may be difficult to govern him; but be patient. He may seem averse to everything useful and good; but wait. No one can tell what is in a boy. He may surprise you so and so. Hope. Let him grow. While his body grows larger and stronger, his mental and moral nature may expand and improve.

Educate your boy. You may think money spent in that way is money spent in vain; there is nothing in him; he has no pride, no ambition. You don't know. No one can tell what there is in a boy. Besides, there may be an unkindled spark, a smouldering flame, a smouldering fire, a latent energy, which the teacher's aid may stir, the association with books may arouse, develop and direct, and thus start your boy agoing with such energy and determination that no power on earth could stop him short of the top-most round in the ladder of fame.

If you cannot educate him, let him educate himself. That will make him strong, a giant with whom none dare interfere. Such are the best men in the world. The greatest benefactors of the race have stooped their shoulders to bear burdens, have carried hands hardened with rough labor, have endured the fatigue of toil. Many such are in our mind now. Labor conquers all things. The old Roman was right. We see it in a thousand instances. Labor makes the man. No boy ever came to be a man, the noblest work of God, without labor. This is God's great law; there is a divine philosophy in it. Let your boy work; if he will not work, make him work. There is no progress, no development, no outcome, no true manhood without it. We must work.

Father, be kind to your boy. We know what a mother will do. Thank God! A mother's love, a mother's prayers, follow us still, and the memory of her anxious tears shall never fade out during the succession of years.

Finally, but not least, pray for your boy, God hears prayers. Do the best you can; commit all you cannot do to God, and hope. Never despair, for no one knows what is in a boy.—The Ensign.

Get In Somewhere.

Find your place in some Christian church as soon as possible. Do not delay, but go at once to some godly minister and tell him that you are on the Lord's side and want to get into rank with his people. I once heard of a little child who had recently been converted. She was one day talking to her grandfather, who was questioning her about her new faith and no doubt giving her some good advice. Finally she said, "Grandpa, are you a Christian?" Yes, my dear, I hope I am."

"What church do you belong to, grandpa?"

"O, I belong to the church of Christ."

"But what is that? Are you a member of the same church that mamma and I are—the Episcopal church?"

"No, my dear, I am not an Episcopalian."

"Are you a Presbyterian, then?"

"No, I am not a Presbyterian."

"Are you a Baptist, then?"

"No."

"Are you a Methodist?"

"No, dear, I do not belong to any of the churches; I just belong to Christ."

After a pause, in which the little one was thinking it over, she turned her face up to her grandfather's and said, "Well, grandpa, if I were you I would try and get in somewhere."

Now, I think the little Christian was right and the old one was wrong. I know there are many who from various reasons stand apart from organized relation to the church of God. No church is perfect—No doubt we might all find things in the churches to which we are allied which could wish might be changed, and certainly we see things in other bodies which we do not approve; but at the same time I would say that it is better to be in than out. Imperfect as the outward church is, nevertheless it is the church of God, and among its members are to be found the true people of God, and within her organization are found the ordinances of God. I repeat the little girl's advice, "Get in somewhere."—Dr. Pentecost.

When the Society of Christian Endeavor will Die.

Now and then some wise individual is seized with a wholly original thought (as he alone considers it), and declares in print or in public address that the Christian Endeavor movement must "die or die." It must enter upon some course; it must adopt some struggling, quixotic cause; it must identify with some reform; or else its doom is pronounced, and its days are numbered!

Very often, when specific inquiries are made, it is found that it is the critic's own crusade, his own particular piece of quixotism, his own pet reform that the Christian Endeavor Society must adopt, if it wishes to survive; and because it has not set itself with sufficient alacrity to turn the stone that grinds his axe, he announces that it has failed of its mission, and is not long for this world. These prophecies have been rife for the last ten years.

Sometimes however, very honest and unselfish people, with very little conception of the real mission and object of the Society, make the same assertions, and declare that the Society, which has grown so marvelous, will die unless it enters upon some vast and original crusade to justify its existence. "Now, after these years of growth, it is time for the Society to do something," they seem to say.

Let us ask of these honest critics (for we do not care for the others), Is it nothing that the Society has quickened the spiritual life of more than a million and a half of young Christians?

Is it nothing that its vows and esprit de corps keep them active and unswerving in their duty?

Is it nothing that the Society has created ten thousand young people's prayer meetings, and rejuvenated ten thousand more?

Is it nothing that the Society has poured into the veins of the church prayer meeting a surging tide of fresh, red blood?

Is it nothing that the Sunday school and the choir and the evening service and the missionary treasury have felt the impetus of a purely spiritual organization?

Is it nothing that one hundred and forty thousand of the associate members were last year brought into the churches of Christ, and that at least one hundred thousand dollars found its way from these societies into the missionary treasuries?

Is it nothing that young people by the hundred thousand, of different denominations, have been brought together in great conventions all the world over, have come to love each other, and to forget the bitterness of their differences in their common love for Christ?

Is it nothing that lessons of loyalty and fidelity to the church and pastor and all the church ordinances, as well as to God, have been inculcated every week of the fifty-two weeks of the past twelve years?

Are these things nothing? While spirituality needs to be increased, while fidelity needs to be emphasized, while Christian fellowship remains to be enlarged, while denominational jealousies remain to be tamed, while young souls long for larger and deeper conceptions and realizations of the religious life, the mission of the Society will not have been accomplished.

Let it be repeated again; the object of the Society of Christian Endeavor is a spiritual object. Its purpose is to strengthen every local church where it is established. Its aim is to do that, and only that, which its church and its pastor wish it to do. So long as it does not forget this mission, it has the best possible right to exist.

Let us not be understood as objecting to any special or collective mission for the societies which is not inconsistent with these fundamental principles of spirituality, fidelity, and fellowship. On the other hand, we believe in such missions. We will ourselves suggest two.

Let it be the glory and crown of the Society that it has entered upon a missionary campaign such as the world has never seen. Through its own churches in connection with its own denominational missionary boards, let it dedicate itself to winning the world for Christ, until every empty mission treasury shall feel its influence, and shall laugh with plenty. Already this glorious crusade has begun, but as yet the young knights are only buckling on the armor.

Again, let Christian Endeavorers feel that it is their mission to make better the world close around them, as well as the world at a distance. Municipal reform, social uplifting, village improvement, a better government of the people, by the people, and for the people,—these things all come within the province of the Endeavorer. The suppression of the rum traffic, the preservation of the Sabbath, the election to power of clean and honest men when corrupt men are put forward,—these are all things which may well concern Endeavorers and Endeavor societies.

But, while these things are attempted and accomplished, let the fundamental idea and purpose of every Endeavor society never be forgotten. Whatever is gained at the expense of personal consecration and spirituality is a loss. Anything that takes the place of the prayer meeting is a disaster. Anything that overshadows the consecration meeting is a deadly nightshade. Anything that weakens the sense of devotion to Christ, loyalty to Christ's church, and fellowship with Christ's brethren is gained at a terrible sacrifice.

The Society will die when it forgets these principles,—and not a day before.—Golden Rule.

Don't be too Hasty in Judging

A drummer in displaying his samples before us some time ago showed us first some very rough and rude specimens. We said to him, "We don't want your goods, they will not suit our trade." Then he proved to us that we were judging him wrongly by placing before us some of the loveliest and rarest specimens of artistic metal ware that our eyes ever rested upon. It is so with many a man's character. We see what we believe to be an ugly action or a mean thing that he has done, and we proceed at once to denounce him as a hypocrite utterly devoid of any of the noble and truer principles that should distinguish the Christian man. Don't be too hasty. Wait awhile. Watch the man and see if he will not exhibit some of the better samples of true manhood. If we look through envious or prejudiced eyes we are not apt to see any good thing. If we feel this way, let us ask ourselves if we would like our lives to be judged by one action.

If we look at the one sin in David's life that brought him so much sorrow and misery, we would utterly despise and condemn him, and yet God speaks of him as a man after his own heart.

If we consider the apostle Peter denying his Lord, we characterize the man as a coward and an ingrate. Was he? Let his whole life answer. The tenor of the lives of both of these men were towards God and a higher and nobler life. While they sinned so bitterly, Oh they repented so deeply. God must have given us the view of the inner lives of these men that we might not utterly despair when we had sinned, and that we might be charitable to those who have strayed from the right paths. A Christian brother came to us many years ago and complained bitterly how a man, an officer in a Sunday school, had borrowed money from him and wouldn't pay him, or even show any disposition to pay him, and that he thought he ought to be displaced from his position. He got no sympathy from us. We told him that, despite all this, we believed that at heart the accused man was honestly trying to serve his Master. At another time a worldly man assured us that he had seen a prominent church officer drinking in a bar room with a companion not a Christian, and he could prove it. We politely told him to keep quiet and mind his own business. We did not even take the trouble to enquire into the truth of the charges and said nothing about it, not even to the people accused. Time has proven the wisdom of our course. We have watched the men. They are still in the church of which they were then members, and occupying the same positions, and we believe are sincere Christians. If we judge by one action or failure, people will judge us the same way. God certainly will, for He says so. "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Keep on with the unrighteous criticism and judgment if you will, but the day will come when you stand before Him that you will be treated in the self-same way—condemn our lives even if we have made one single solitary blunder. If we measure people this way, God will will measure us this way. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."—Baptist.

Following Their Shepherd.

Dr. Jessup was once walking over a dangerous pass in Syria, and had just reached the top, in the narrowest part, when a caravan of camels was seen coming in the opposite direction. He has told the story himself in "Children of the East."

"I turned back a little, and stood close under the edge of the cliff to let the camels go by. They were loaded with huge canvass sacks of tibu, or cut straw, which hung down on both sides, making it impossible to pass them without stooping very low.

"Just then I heard a voice behind me, and looking around saw a shepherd coming up the pass with his flock of sheep. He was walking ahead, and they all followed on. I called to him to go back, as the camels were coming over the pass.

"He said: 'Ma ahalak,' or Don't trouble yourself,' and on he came.

"When he met the camels, they were in the narrowest part, where a low stone wall runs along the edge of the precipice. He stooped down and stepped upon the narrow wall, call all the time to his sheep, who followed close upon his heels, walking in single file. He said, 'Tahl! Tahl!' 'Come, come,' and then made a shrill whirring call, which could be heard above the roaring of the waves on the rocks below.

"It was wonderful to see how closely they followed the shepherd. They did not seem to notice the camels on the one side or the abyss on the other. Had they left the narrow track they would either have been trodden down by the heavily laden camels, or have fallen off into the dark waters below.

"But they were intent on following their shepherd. They heard his voice and that was enough. The camel drivers were shouting and screaming to their camels to keep them from slipping on these smooth rocks, but the sheep paid no attention to them.

"They knew the shepherd's voice. They had followed him before, through rivers and thickets, among rocks and sands, and he had always led them safely. The waves were dashing and roaring on the rocks below, but they did not fear, for the shepherd was going on before."—Parish Visitor.

Meditation On Nature In Heaven.

Why do I think of the life to come after so ghostly a fashion? Surely it is nothing vague, since God is nothing vague. It may be mysterious, but who can comprehend the mystery of this present world of ours? It will not be foreign to us, if we are at home with God. Indeed, while Christ is preparing for us our abiding place, surely he will so prepare it that we may not be startled, or homesick with strangeness, or ill at ease. Does not God show in this world what he delights to create? He is infinite in resources; yes, he need never repent a design or a material; and yet all his works that we have seen witness of one steadfast spirit that is not fickle or fantastical, but looks steadily on man that man may come to know it and conform to it. God, who exults in fashioning matter here below, dealing so deftly in form and color, solid and liquid, warm and cold, perfume and texture,—that same Artificer has fashioned heaven. Will he have lost his love for flowers, and kingly trees, and singing birds, and tinted clouds, the ripple of brooks the firmness of the rock, the freshness of green grass? Will heaven preserve memory, only to make it an alien in a foreign land? In the natural world God does not create and then destroy, in order to please his shifting fancy with a change of scene; will God destroy nature itself? Yet what an I, thus to question the All-wise? It is for me in this world to acquaint myself with heaven. Let me be no stranger to him, and no place in his universe will be strange to me. For this world is like God, and the next world is like God; help me, loving father, into likeness to thyself.—Golden Rule.

Not Sufficient.

BY REV. O. J. WAIT.

Not very long ago, a minister resigned his place because he felt his insufficiency for the work. This prompts a few words.

There are, at least, two classes of ministers—the self-sufficient. The first class is always “rough and ready.” They can preach from a text given them two minutes before preaching, as if it had been given them six weeks before. Generally, they are much like young bumblebees—the biggest when first hatched.

The second class is quite different. They feel their needs. Like a veteran in the Gospel, who asked, “Who is sufficient for these things?” they apply themselves to study, and use all means available, that no man may despise their youth. They are open to counsel, and they study how to utilize “all means” within their reach. This class does not take churches by storm. Their first sermons are not all they know. They begin gradually, and get stronger as they know the people.

Ministers of this class wear well, growing as time runs on. Churches that have pastors of this class will do well to encourage them, for, generally, they are purified. If such ministers get discouraged and resign, it will prove better for the churches not to accept. These ministers are, generally, very conscientious, and of course, wear well.

Now, while about it I suggest that churches be as conscientious toward their ministers. By this I mean when a minister has shared the poverty of the church, and has been instrumental in building it up to where it is able to pay a fair compensation, it is not the best thing for such church to forget the laborer that has proved himself to be worthy of his hire, and seek some man of whom they know little. A good talker in the pulpit is but a tittle of a good pastor. He may preach and sing like a seraph (all well in their place,) but be good for nothing before the people in divers ways.

The man that builds, is good at repairs, also. Some of our strongest churches have had few changes of their ministers. Fickle people, Jehu drivers, want frequent changes. Better let such persons go than to change off a good minister to please them.

I close as I started, by saying that churches which change off their church-builders for novelty and show, generally do an unwise thing! And ministers who resign, while the work progresses in their hands, or because they feel they are not competent, make a great mistake. But few earnest, conscientious ministers who do not have their days of despondency. Mind tires, body tires, and “Satan stands at their right hand to resist” them. Better take rest and feel that in the Lord they have everlasting strength. When the spirit of despondency hangs heavily, it is no time to resign simply because feelings favor it.

Therefore, churches that want to prosper and ministers who build, let me be in no haste on this momentous question.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Less of the World and More of Christ.

In a letter from Bro. Woodworth, written from an Ohio town while he was making a missionary canvass of some of our churches before starting for Japan, he says: “But if I could see less of the world and more of Christ in some of our pastors, I would expect to see gracious results. Not even family worship at——. Dr. Paton says that in the New Hebrides they knew who were Christians and who were not by whether they had family worship. According to that test what would be the effect here?”

“Less of the world and more of Christ in some of our pastors! Not even family worship in the pastor’s home at——!”

These significant words have occurred to me so often since they were penned, nearly a year ago, that I repeat them here. Why is it that in some churches so little spiritual life is developed? Doubtless one reason is couched in the quotation above: No family prayer in the pastor’s home, and too much of the world in the pastor’s heart. “To be carnally-minded is death”—spiritual death. From this inevitable law pastors and churches are not exempt.

Brother pastors, have we ever sung:

“Oh, the bitter pain and sorrow
That a time could ever be,
When I proudly said to Jesus,
All of self, and none of thee?”

From this sad experience may our transition be so complete, may we get so near to Jesus, and live so near to Jesus, that we can ever sing:

“Higher than the highest heavens,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, thy love at last has conquered,
None of self, and all of thee.”

Then will there be soul in our preaching, and life in our congregation.

Taking the Temperature.

Not far from the particular spot on deck where I am sitting, my dear Golden Rule hearers, hangs a leathern bucket, with a thermometer suspended from a nail near by. I frequently notice that a sailor comes along, souses the bucket into the sea, draws it up partly full, and then plunges the thermometer into the fresh sea-water. After it has been immersed for a few minutes he takes it out, notes and records the height of the mercury in the bulb, and hangs up the bucket and the thermometer in their places once more.

He wishes to know, for scientific purposes, the temperature of the water, and this knowledge has not a little to do with accurate navigation and with a knowledge of currents and shoals and depth of water and distance from land. Now, my dear hearers, did it ever occur to you that it would be well for you once in a while to take the temperature as you are sailing across life’s ocean?

Do you habitually attend the theatre? I hope not; but if you do, take the spiritual temperature of the water through which you are sailing, and you will find, I warrant you, that it is down to the freezing point. An occasional prayer meeting will not make it lakewarm.

Do you frequent the public ball? Again it will be well to bring your spiritual thermometer into use. Dip it into the water through which you are sailing, and you will see the mercury rapidly and steadily go down, down, down almost to the zero mark.

Do you sometimes take a chance in a lottery, or bet on a base-ball game, or back a favorite horse? Again let me ask you to take the temperature, and you will find that the mercury goes almost out of sight, and is quite frozen in the bulb.

On the other hand, are you living a useful unselfish life? Do you try to do some kind deed every day? Are you always found in your place at the church service and the Sunday school? Do you find genuine delight in the prayer meeting? Do you joyously confess your Lord in public, and do you commune with him in private?

If these things are true of you, you will find that the spiritual temperature of life’s ocean is warm and grateful; that the ocean basks in the sunshine of God’s love, and that its depths are stirred by the balmy breezes of heaven.

Make this test, my dear hearers! Use your spiritual thermometers. Find out whither you are sailing by discovering the temperature of the water round about you and you will be far more likely to reach the desired haven in peace and safety.—Parson Mossback in Golden Rule.

Preachers out of Employment

Competition is held to be honorable in the world and in the pursuit of remunerative secular positions; but the man of God must flee unholy rivalry, and struggle to win his daily bread. An aspirant for pulpit work, however pressing the claims of home and its loved ones, feels cowed and depressed if he must seek work, even through his friends. Vacant pulpits may stand ready for occupancy, and he may be able and willing to fill them; but he shrinks from pressing his claims, lest in doing so he lowers the tone of his life and sinks the pulpit to the level of pennywise secularism. Preachers shrink from the appearance of making merchandise of the gospel. In bitterness of soul and in unutterable anguish many a preacher longs for work that he can do, but from which he is excluded, because it is falsely believed that the days of his usefulness are past, or that he is not fitted to meet the demands of the people. Thus the Church remains without proper instruction and guidance, and the preacher loses the opportunity for work and the consequent support it might afford. Just how to remedy this evil is the problem.—Apostolic Guide.

Notes from Harvard.

Judging from the daily and weekly papers that come to us from N. C., we would think that the people in general had been mostly busy of late in attending commencements. I believe that the accounts as we read them from the various colleges almost make us home sick just a little. You know commencements are not only educational, but are intensely social—new and pleasant acquaintances are formed and old ones are renewed.

By the time these lines reach print we at Harvard will be trying to reproduce in three hours time what it has taken our professor five months to tell us. In other words the sweet examinations will be upon us! But then they do not last always and I see already in the papers that they are to have a commencement here about the last of June. And I am reminded just here of a slight difference with regard to an item or two connected with a Harvard commencement and the ones we have at our colleges in the south. For instance in the south you know we get out nice tickets and send to our friends and invite them to come and be welcome. Here is the difference. In the Harvard Daily Crimson of June 1st, I see this notice:

"Sale of tickets, open to all members of the University, will be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday June 19, 20 and 21 from 1.30 to 3 p. m. The price of tickets will be: Yard tickets 25 cents each, Memorial tickets $1.50 each, Free tickets $1.75 each, Sanders tickets $2.00 each."

It will be understood that the above are admission not invitation tickets. In other words during those eventful days a student as well as the outsider will have to pay 25 cents to get in the yard (campus) to any exercise held therein. And for the exercises in Memorial Hall or Sanders Theatre—well you can see the price above. Seniors who are to graduate get tickets a little earlier and cheaper than the above. So if our friends down in Carolina don't receive any tickets from us don't think that we have forgotten you or that we are not going to have a commencement at Harvard. In short they get out no invitation tickets. It is no trouble to draw a crowd here though. It is just the other way—how are you to keep the crowd away, so at least that you may have elbow room and not suffocate. An ordinary baseball game here will draw a larger crowd than any of our biggest commencements in N. C. Harvard played a game here at the college the other day with Princeton and there were some over 7000 people to see it. The tickets for this were from 50 cents to $1.50. Putting the tickets at only one dollar each you have a total of over $7,000.00—a right good sum for a baseball game.

Boston and the neighboring towns and cities can very readily furnish a crowd for most anything, and then leave a goodly number at home. And now considering the quality of the above remarks, I guess the quantity is most abundantly sufficient for this time.

The Lord Jesus Christ.

You are to live as you would live if you were expecting Him every day. Whether changed or raised, then we shall be with Christ and like Christ. Christ will be satisfied; so shall I. The thought and purpose of God is to have us like Himself and with Himself. He is still gathering out souls. But on the other hand, we are to be "as men that wait for their Lord." If a mother is expecting her son from abroad, she is always expecting him, for she loves him. When a person is really waiting for Christ, he has the room of his heart ready for him. He has given Himself to have us for Himself, with hearts united, gathered up, to him; a peculiar people, a people of possession, manifesting the character of God in grace till he display it in glory.

Now, beloved brethren, where are we? Can we say "This present evil world," not in hardness as if we did not once belong to it, but as the world that has rejected Christ, and of which Satan is the prince? The world is not only a sinful world outside the earthly paradise, but a world that rejected Christ when he came into it.

The things I shall have in heaven are to form my heart now. Our hearts are so dim to see these heavenly things, but it is God's thought to reveal them to us. "Now we see through a glass darkly"—true, but we see the same things. I Corinthians ii., often quoted to prove I cannot know them, really proves I can. "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." Christianity says he has revealed them all. Quite true, it has not entered into the heart of man to conceive them. In the old Testament they did not know them (of course not,) but the Holy Ghost has come down to reveal them to us. The veil is rent, the way into the holiest of all is manifest. There is a perfect contrast as to the condition of the saint now. I am associated with Him now; I know I shall be like Him then. He has become a man for the purpose to have me with him in glory. I know that righteousness is there, and through the Spirit I am waiting for the hope of righteousness by faith, (that is, for glory,) for him to bring me actually there. I am so identified with Christ that, when He appears, I shall appear with him in glory.

Has this power over our hearts? Are your hearts settled as to the perfectness of his work? Is there such love to Him that you wait for Him who loves you?

The Lord give us in these last days to have hearts thus watching, making His word and clinging to it. This gives us what is heavenly, and perfectly suited to us while here.—Sol.

"A Holy Life."

Guthrie illustrated the emptiness of a mere profession by the simile of a tree lying across the path, apparently a fair and mighty object, but the foot lightly placed upon it breaks through the bark and sinks down into the body, for insects and poisonous fungi have attacked the core and hollowed out the heart.

"Take care," said, he, "that your heart is not hollowed out and nothing left but the crust and shell of empty profession."

There are some who began the Christian life full of warmth, ardor and zeal, who are still regular attendants at the religious services, but scarcely the fruit bearing branches that witness nearness to the Master. It would be possible to live beneath their roof in a state of unconsciousness as to religion influences, which certainly ought not to be the case with any who name the name of Christ. Religion is not a matter for Sundays only, for outside respectability, or even a mere matter of subscriptions and religious work, but it is a vital, everyday concern, affecting the heart.

It is an easy thing, but a dangerous condition, for us to glide into the customary groove of attending meetings and performing good works, thereby increasing our responsibilities the more, while our own souls are full of worldly tendrils. It has been truly said that it costs but little nowadays to multiply copies of the Bible in our homes; our personal concern must be that God's Word is hidden within our hearts, and that is the rule and chart—whereby we are steering the bark of our everyday life, not only in perilous places when storms seem threatening, but when all around us things betoken fair weather and prosperity.—Quiver.

So Say We.

Presbyterian Observer: Whatever may be said about the propriety or the opening of the world's Fair on the Sabbath day, the fact remains that it has been opened successive Sabbaths. The laws of the Commonwealth of Illinois, the contract of the Directors with the Government of the United States, and the Divine Commandment, which prescribes a day of rest, have all been set at naught. The question comes up, and cannot now be put aside—What shall a Christian man, who is trying to regulate his life by the law of God, do in regard to the Fair? One of the recognized Commandments of the Decalogue has been scornfully disobeyed. What it requires has been distinctly refused. What it prohibits has been done. May one who accepts the law of the Sabbath as the law of God, supreme in its authority over all men and institutions, support, by his patronage, a great public exhibition which violates the sanctity of the Lord's day? This is a question which must be settled by the conscience of every individual, acting under the enlightenment of the holy Word of God. Not to go to the Fair would be to many a decision implying severe self-denial. There is much to be seen and studied within its gates. It is an educational institution of acknowledged value. What does loyalty to the law of God require in regard to this flagrant transgressor? We think that the only effectual way by which the protest of the church in faithfulness in the observance of a civil contract, and against sin in the violation of the law of God, that can now be uttered, is to be made by quietly staying away from the place where this law is publicly and ostentatiously defied.

Two Fatal Errors.

They lie close together, and are on the surface. The one is trust in anything under Heaven or in Heaven for salvation except Jesus Christ. The other is, such a faith, or fancied faith in Christ as leaves the heart without genuine love to the God or the Bible.

Look back at two things: The blessings which have come to you from your disinterested acts of kindness; and the woes which have come to you from doing to others as you would not that they should have done to you.

Two truths never forget: Jesus Christ satisfies the soul that truly receives him; never yet has any child of Adam regretted being a Christian in the hour of death.—Baptist.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Commencement at Elon College was a grand success.

The SUN sympathises with Rev. H. H. Butler in the loss of his excellent family horse.

Miss Dora Ayscue, in renewing her subscription to the SUN, says excellent things of her church paper.

Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., left Norfolk last week for Merom, Ind., where he was to deliver a course of lectures before the Union Christian College.

Many friends and students of Elon College were to be seen in Raleigh last Friday on their way home. All seemed highly pleased with Elon. A large crowd was in attendance at the commencement.

Cards of invitation are out to the marriage of Miss Lena Beale and Mr. William G. Farrar, June 14th, at 3 o'clock, Washington Square, Suffolk, Va. The SUN expresses grateful thanks for an invitation.

The friends of J. T. Pugh will be glad to know that he graduated last week from the University of North Carolina, and returns next year as a Latin tutor in his Alma mater. We shall expect much from Mr. Pugh, and do not think we will be mistaken.

Who will be the first minister to send in his name accepting the proposition to send in two new subscribers from each church of his change to create a fund with which to buy a new press? Brethren you can do it with a little effort; and then we can give you a better paper.

How to Begin to Live, Forever, by Joseph Merlin Hudson, published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, is a beautiful little book of 88 pages, price 60 cents. It is beautiful in appearance, it is beautiful in thought, sentiment, and language telling just what its title indicates,

Rev. Geo. E. Merrill, agent for the Christian Pub. Association, says: 'Personally, I can not take away from the Disciples the privilege of calling their churches Christian, though it sometimes causes confusion. But I guess no constant reader of these Notes regards me as thinking there is not much difference between the Disciples and Christians. As Editor Black wrote: 'They are fundamentally apart.' The millennium will be pretty well advanced before the Disciples and Christians coalesce.'

The following by a writer in the Raleigh Christian Advocate shows the position that isms hold in the minds and hearts of many professing Christians, that is, they think the doctrine of their church the core and the scripture the husk:

There are many good and wise men anxious and capable of accomplishing much good, but have no talent for School work. Let such take other fields of labor, and supply their places by those who were 'born and trained for the express work of making Methodist School Literature.' It is Scriptural to leave the principles of doctrine and go on to perfection, but do not starve the children by feeling them on husks, let them be trained in the nursery (S. S.) as they should go, so when they are old they will not depart from it.

The Central Baptist says: There are two dangers which confront our churches of which we wish to speak briefly. The first is that it is too easy to get into the church and the other, it is so easy to stay there after one gets in. In other words there is not enough care in the reception of members and there is not a sufficient exercise of discipline. If the church would maintain its strength it must also guard its purity. We have never known a true Christian offended because of the care exercised in admitting him into the church and even if people should be offended occasionally that should not deter us from our duty. The difficulties in the way of the exercise of church discipline are numerous and increasing but loyalty to the great head of the church imposes upon us the duty of withdrawing from every one who walketh disorderly.

The Bible Our Only Creed.

In the last issue we endeavored to show wherein the creed was insufficient as a rule of faith and practice. In this we shall attempt to show wherein the Bible is sufficient.

God has spoken to man in various ways. He has spoken to him face to face, by the mouth of angels and the prophets by dreams and visions, by signs and wonders. He has spoken to man through nature—the swelling forth fresh from mother earth, and has not yet come in contact with any polluting substance. Here all may drink because it is broad and deep. The little streams sometimes become stagnant, sometimes they flow over contaminated soil, sometimes they are insufficient to supply the demand for water. 4. They are perfect. 'As for God, his way is perfect, the word of the Lord is tried.' 'Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right.' 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.' Whatever else can be claimed for a faith formulated by man, it cannot be claimed that it is perfect. Man is imperfect and an imperfect being can not produce anything absolutely perfect. 'Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one.'

Among the many reasons why they are sufficient, we submit the following:—

1. They are of divine origin. They came direct from God, unpolluted by the touch of human hand, or the contact of human mind. 'For the prophecy came not in olden time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.' 'And the Lord spake by his servants, the prophets.' David says 'The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue.' Nothing formulated by man can only appropriate the Word of God, and we prefer the Word of God to the nearest possible thing to it.

2. They possess the power to illuminate the mind and heart. The creed may be the result of illumination in the heart, but cannot be the cause. The Bible is the cause, the source from whence came the illuminating power, the only regenerating and sanctifying volume in the universe. 'Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.' For the commandment is a lamp and the law is a light. Peter says, 'We have also a more sure word of prophecy, where unto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts.'

3. They are pure. 'The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.' 'Thy word is very pure, therefore thy servant loveth it.' 'Every word of God is pure.' Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and the good. The creed may be pure, but the Word of God is pure. If the creed be pure, it is not perfect.

It is narrow and shallow, and for this reason I prefer it. We prefer the Bible because it is broad and deep. It is simply the difference between the fountain and the many little streams flowing from it. The fountain is pure, because it but forth fresh from mother earth, and has not yet come in contact with any polluting substance. Here all may drink because it is broad and deep. The little streams sometimes become stagnant, sometimes they flow over contaminated soil, sometimes they are insufficient to supply the demand for water.

4. They are perfect. 'As for God, his way is perfect, the word of the Lord is tried.' 'Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right.' 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.' Whatever else can be claimed for a faith formulated by man, it cannot be claimed that it is perfect. Man is imperfect and an imperfect being can not produce anything absolutely perfect. 'Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one.'

5. They have cleansing and sanctifying power. God says of his word, through Isaiah, 'It shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing where to I sent it.' Again, Jeremiah says, 'Is not my word like as a fire with the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in peices?' Christ said to his disciples, 'Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.' 'For the word is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the human heart.' In speaking of the church, Paul says 'That he (Christ) might sanctify and cleanse it.... by the word.' In that celebrated prayer to his father, Christ says, 'Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth.'

Elon College.

Elon College has closed its most prosperous session and presented the patrons and the public with the finest exhibition in its history. The interesting occasion brought to Elon a large concourse of people from various parts of Va. and N. C., and surely they were well paid for coming. The exercises were of high order throughout, and reflect great credit upon both students and faculty.

Tuesday evening witnessed the speaking by representatives of the three societies. The orations were of a high order of thought and forcibly delivered. They showed quite a range of reading along the line of modern thought. The essays by the young ladies were in no respect inferior to the orations of the young men. They were equally as fertile in thought and elegant in expression. The essays and orations were interspersed with solos, duets, etc. by the music class.

The baccalaureate sermon delivered on Wednesday morning by Dr. J. Maple of Milford, N. J., was one of the finest efforts of that grand old man of God. The most scholarly man in the audience characterized it as all that one could ask for either heart or head. His theme was the "Divine Philosophy of Human Happiness," discussed under the heads of memory, reason, conscience and anticipation.

At 3 p. m. of the same day the crowd assembled again to hear the Literary Address by Hon. E. E. Holland of Suffolk, Va. Bro. Holland is a young lawyer who has acquired an excellent reputation at the bar, but this was his first effort on an occasion of this kind, and slight signs of timidity were at first evident, but only a few moments sufficed to place him at home with his audience and subject. No address delivered at Elon has been more highly complimented. The thought was both beautiful and practical. His subject was "Guns."

From 4 to 5 p. m. was the Art Exhibition. Many fine specimens were on exhibition, showing that good work has been done in the department. The musical and class exercises came off at 8 p. m. the order of which was, introductory remarks by the Pres. of the class, R. H. Peel; Historian, Miss Annie Graham; Poet, Mr. W. C. Wicker; Prophet, Mr. S. E. Everett. All these were interspersed with music, instrumental and vocal.

Thursday at 11 a. m. a large crowd assembled to witness that most interesting of commencement features, the graduating exercises. The class consisted of Miss Annie Graham, Messrs W. C. Wicker, R. H. Peel, J. W. Rawls, B. F. Long, J. E. Long, E. Moffitt, W. H. Albright, J. W. Roberts, and S. E. Everett, W. C. Wicker was valedictorian, and R. H. Peel, solitatorian. The orations were of first class both in matter and style, indicating that the class was worthy of the honors its Alma Mater was bestowing upon it. The diplomas were delivered by President Long in a tender and affectionate and encouraging address. After which Bibles were presented by Dr. Jas. Maple. He commended the Word to them as an infallible guide, through the vicissitudes of life. Each society awarded medals to its graduates. They were presented by G. W. Long, M. D., of Graham, N. C., in a short, tender, and practical address.

At 8 p. m. was the annual reception in the college chapel, old and young assembled for social enjoyment, and to bid farewell to each other. This is the sad hour to faculty and students. The ties formed in the school room can never be forgotten, and to say farewell can but bring tears of sorrow to both.

Music was furnished during the entire commencement by the "Lexington Band." The following ministerial brethren were present, Revs. C. A. Boon, W. G. Clements, T. B. Dawson, M. L. Hurley, A. F. Isele, S. B. Klapp, P. T. Klapp, N. G. Newman, J. W. Patton, C. C. Peel, W. H. Roach, W. W. Staley, T. W. Stroud, R. G. Timin, J. W. Wellons, J. D. Wicker, and Dr. James Mapel of Milford, N. J., and Rev. Mr. Coppedge of the Presbyterian church.

The people of the village are to be thanked for their kindness in entertaining the large crowd of visitors. All seem to express themselves as highly gratified with the occasion and the work of the past year. Now let us all be thankful for the blessing that have rested upon our beloved institution, and bend all our energies to its future success. God bless Elon College in the work of Christian education.

Glimmers of the Past.

A great man has said, "The only way of judging the future is by the past. And in many respects this is true. But the past may also be made a valuable servant in other departments of work. For who has not used the past as a quickener of the better emotional parts? And where is the source that furnishes better matter for interesting conversation than the slumbering years of the past?"

Living over the past in the mental house of memory, presents many incentives for higher Christian thought. Where is the heart so hard that it may not be touched by a thought that brings up in the mind's eye a glimmer of the picture of the chair beside of which a loving mother once knelt in earnest prayer for her darling Loy? How often, in after years, the mind visits the old homestead, viewing the cows in the barn yard, the horses drinking at the well, the hogs grunting in the pen and the sheep bleating in the field. And then take a ramble over the woods, hills and valleys where John, Tom and James, in the by gone days, shot the birds and squirrels, and chased the foxes and rabbits; finally coming home at sunset's beautiful hour, hearing the merry song and laughter of Bettie; Annie and Susie ringing out from room to room as they tripped around making mother glad by their acts of kindness.

As these glimmers of the past fly by in a thousand thoughts, as our conduct passes in review. And thus it is that unkind words and other sinful acts of which we have been guilty are made pounding hammers to break into pieces our strong hearts. Or it may be that as the good deeds of our lives at the old homestead bubble up in our minds the better emotional feeling is quickened into new activity giving greater determination to live the higher Christian life. Where will you find the man so hardened in sin, that he wants the glimmers of the past forever shut out from memory's chamber?

Of all the different faculties God has given memory is not the heart by any means. It holds up the past as an index to point out the way of the future. Points out your acts of sin before your eyes, so you must see them in their blackness. Brings in close touch the loving acts of the sainted dead, influencing to a better life, and makes a pattern for future work.

The happiness or misery in the future state will depend much on the glimmers of the past. Though they will not be glimmers then; for they will brighten into living pictures, showing every dot and tint of sin or righteousness, giving woe and wretchedness or joy and gladness for evermore according to the picture of the past

Suffolk Letter.

The corner-stone of the new Christian church in Berkley, Virginia, was laid with Masonic ceremonies on Friday, June 2nd, 1893. The day was stormy and this reduced the attendance; but the services passed off pleasantly and profitably. The address was delivered by Rev. James Maple, D. D., and was a brief lucid exposition of the position of the Christian church. An excellent dinner was served by the ladies, a subscription of nearly five hundred dollars was taken, and the prospects are good for Berkley to be in good shape again. The roof tinnings are in place and the work will be pressed to completion.

ELON COLLEGE.

I left Suffolk last Monday in a party of seventeen to attend Elon commencement. Recent rains and waving wheatfields tinged with golden signs of harvest, made the hills rich in beauty and promise. The attendance upon the exercises from beginning to close was large and attentive. All of the public exercises were interesting and successful. The sermon by Dr. Maple and the Literary Address by E. E. Holland, Esq., were gems of truth, nails driven in a sure place. The sermon was rich in thought, brilliant in illustration, and forceful in delivery and spiritual impression. The Address was unique in conception, profound in treatment, inspiring in sentiment, and eloquent in delivery. Both left lasting impressions of helpfulness upon the students.

The graduating exercises were excellent, measuring up to the standard of similar ones in the best institutions. Five received A. B. and five others received Ph. B. One lady in the class and she received A. B. The addresses were all good and the audience was well pleased. The Annual reception on Thursday night was enjoyed by a large company of young and old.

The three Literary Societies all have beautiful halls and they are improving them every year. These are helpful to the college in many ways, but especially in the higher culture of the students in all that pertains to manners and composition.

Rev. Dr. Maple, on his return from Elon, spent yesterday in Suffolk, and preached for us two eloquent sermons to good congregations. His sermon at night was especially pleasing and instructive. He is full of fire and power and he burns the truth into the mind with brightest and clearest illustration. His sermons will long be remembered and we will always welcome him and his dear wife, who wins the hearts of all who meet her, to Suffolk. They left this morning by steamer Virginia Dare to spend the day at Captain Gaskins thence they go home by way of Washington. Time is up and I must close.

Report of Committee.

The committee on the Division of the N. C. and Va. Christian conference recommend the following plan for the division of the territory of said conference: Beginning at Fayetteville, N. C., running north with the C. F. & Y. V. R. R. to Sanford N. C., thence with the Seaboard Air Line R. R. to Haw River, thence up said river to southern boundary of Grange county, thence east with said line to the corner of Durham county, thence north with the line between Durham and Orange counties to Person county line, thence east with southern boundary of Person county to Granville county, thence with the line between Person and Granville counties to the Virginia line, thence east with the state line to the corner of Brunswick county Va.

We would further suggest that it would be a good idea to define the line between the N. C. and Va. C. C. and the Deep River conference by beginning at Fayetteville, N. C., and running north with the C. F. & Y. V. R. R. to Greensboro, N. C., and thence west with the N. J. R. R., and the churches west and south of said roads constitute the Deep River conference. We ask the churches affected by this suggestion and the Deep River conference to consider the suggestion, and if agreeable to take such action as may be necessary to bring the matter properly before the next session of the General Convention.

LITTLE SOLDIERS.

Be brave, little soldiers,
To battle for right;
Before and behind you
The foe is in sight;
Beware of the pitfalls
In paths yet untrod;
Be true to your manhood,
And so, to your God.
You need for your weapons
A heart that is pure;
A will that is ready
To do and endure.

THE THREE P'S.

If you have a task to do my boy,
That's hard, don't try to shirk,
Just do the very best you can;
They only win who work.

If on the first attempt you fail,
Don't say, "I can't be done,"
But think of those who've won success,
And how success was won.

Pluck, patience, perseverance, boys,
O'er hardest tasks prevail,
For those who really mean to win,
There's no such word as fail.

JACK-IN-THE-PULPIT.

I found a camp-meeting of teachers,
Most wonderful ever was seen;
Such quaint and prim little preachers,
In pulpit of purple and green.

I knew not the words they were saying:
The sermon I did not understand,
But I saw all the flowers a-praying,
And hid my face in my hand!

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

In this picture you have your uncle on a visit to the home of some of the cousins. What a nice cozy place he has found, and see what a nice family—the mother at her knitting, the children at their play and the uncle sitting quietly by the fireplace for it is cold weather, enjoying the peace and love of the little folks. How much nicer he looks here than when he is rushed with work and perspiration dropping from his face as last week's paper showed him. It is a hard time he has had and for him to get out in the country or at the home of some of the cousins makes him feel very happy.

What do you think about the way I suggested last week that the cousins get money for the BAND? I would like to hear from you on that subject. And if any has one a plan for making money write us about it and we can talk about it and if it is a good one it will help somebody. Remember that we are working for Christ and the plans must be something that Christians can do.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

ROANOKE, ALA., June 4, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write to you this morning. It has been raining nearly all the week. I went to Sunday school last Sunday, but wasn't there long when I learned that my little niece was badly scalded so I had to come home. I sat up with her Wednesday and Thursday nights, and expect to tonight. I have been hauling lumber this week and got wet yesterday. There is to be an all day singing at Mt Zion, and I am going if I can. I like to go; I enjoy singing and answering questions. I will answer Ada Stevenson's question, Jared was Enoch's father. I will ask a question: What two chapters in the Bible are alike? What is the shortest verse in the Bible? I will close for this time with much love to you and the cousins.

Your nephew,

JOHNIE SLEDGE.

Johnie, we are very sorry that your little niece was hurt so badly and hope she will soon get over it. You write again soon for we enjoy getting nice letters.

NEW'S FERRY, VA., MAY 26, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I guess you and the cousins think I have forgotten the BAND but I haven't, I go to Sunday school at Pleasant Grove I like to go very much. I will ask a question what kings body was dewoted by the worms when he died. I will close with much love to you and the cousins I remain.

Your little niece

PEARL E. FAFMER.

Here is a letter from our little niece that tells us how well Pearl likes to go to school. I wish grown folks liked to go as well.

HOW GOLDENHAIR HELPED HER MOTHER.

Her real name was Margaret, but the family and friends often called her Goldenhair for her luxuriant yellow curls. She was only three years old and rather small for her age; but her father said that "jewels were always done up in small parcels," and I am quite sure he meant that Goldenhair was a "jewel." One day a lady visitor, taking the child upon her knee, said, with a smile, "When you grow up, my little maiden, you will be a great help and comfort to your mamma."

"I'm a he'p to mine mam'ma now," replied the little one, with a look of surprise in her sweet blue eyes that any one should think she was not a help, even at the present moment.

"You a help! Such a widget as you!" laughed the lady. "Just tell me, if you please, how a baby like you can help your mamma?"

"I kisses her."

"Kiss her?"

"Yes, I kisses her."

"And do you call kissing your mother helping her?"

"Yes; I fink mamma likes to have me kiss her. I fink I he'p her. I likes to kiss mine mam'ma;" and the baby got down from her perch on the lady's knee, and went in search for Jim Crow, her black doll, whom she had not seen for an hour.

After a considerable search, Jim Crow was found under the sofa, in a bruised and tumbled condition Goldenhair undressed him, put on his night-gown, and tied a rag around his head. Just as she had covered him up in his cradle, her mother, looking quite weary, came into the room. She sighed as she sat and down in her sewing-chair by one of the windows, took up her work as if it were some tiresome duty that must be done.

Do you remember how you rejoiced one dark, depressing day, when the sun came out suddenly and chased the shadows away? Well, the sun came out just as suddenly that moment in that little sitting-room where Jim Crow was sleeping in his cradle. The sweet, bright picture that the guest saw was this—a little golden-haired girl kissing a weary mother, first on one cheek and then on the other lip. What the guest heard was, "I love 'ou, mamma," and the glad answer, "My little darling, what a comfort you are!"

And lol where are the clouds? Gone, and because of a little child's helpfulness—the helpfulness of a child's love.—Christian Observer.

Washington Letter.

President Cleveland, in announcing his intention to call an extra session of Congress to meet in September, to "deal with a financial condition which is the only menace to the country's welfare and prosperity," used some language which deserves the careful attention of every business man in the country. I quote a portion of what he said: I think that between now and the meeting of Congress much depends upon the action of those engaged in financial operations and business enterprises. Our vast national resources and credit are abundantly sufficient to justify them in the utmost faith and confidence. If instead of being frightened they are conservative, and if instead of gloomily anticipating immediate disaster they contribute their share of hope and steadiness they will perform a patriotic duty and at the same time protect their own interest. The things just now needed are coolness and calmness in financial circles, and study and reflection among our people."

The Briggs' case continues to be much talked about, but your correspondent believes that no good will be accomplished by repeating what is said by either or both sides in such controversies. That such things are costly, in money as in other ways, is shown by the estimated cost of the entire Briggs' trial, which is placed at quite $50,000, an amount which Dr. Bartlett, who was chairman of the local committee of arrangements for the General Assembly, says he thinks is about correct. Dr. Bartlett thinks that Col McCook, who was a leading member of the prosecuting committee, paid at least $20,000 of this money out of his own pocket. The case was mentioned in a number of our pulpits last Sunday, but to the credit of our ministers, the language used and the opinions expressed were in every case conservative and in keeping with the Christ-like spirit.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Boole, of New York, and his wife, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of A. M., took prominent parts in the quarterly meeting of the District W. C. T. U., held Monday and Tuesday of this week. They are both pleasing and impressive speakers and enthusiastic in the work of the white-ribboners.

Church anniversaries, especially when they reach the dignity of a centennial are always interesting. Last Sunday the centennial anniversary of the independence of the Reformed church in the United States was fittingly celebrated at Grace Reformed church, the sermon being preached by Rev. Geo. W. Richardson, of Allentown, Pa. This church sprang from the Reformed church of Switzerland, and was started in the United States early in the last century by refugees from France, Switzerland and Germany, and was supported by the Reformed church of Holland until 1793. It began with 22 ministers and 150 congregations and now has 900 ministers, 1,600 congregations and a membership of 200,000. Its first educational institution—Marshall College—was established in 1830; it now has under its control 18 schools and colleges, with four theological seminaries. It has 100 missionaries in the home field and 10 abroad.

Bound hand and foot and placed at the mercy of the liquor demon. That it practically the situation in which the National Capital is placed by a decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, our highest local court, and in this particular case a court from which there is no appeal. It had been held by the District Commissioners and decided by the Judge of one of the Police Courts that the new liquor law which went into effect, or rather which was approved by the President on March 3, 1893—it doesn't seem to have gone into effect to any considerable extent up to the present time—repealed the old liquor law and annulled all existing liquor licenses. According to the decision of the Court of Appeals that was all wrong, and while the new law repealed the old law it does not effect the old licenses which were issued previous to the enactment of the new law. Now observe the effect of this decision upon the business of the saloon keepers who hold the old licenses: all the regulations and restrictions of the old law—poor as they undoubtedly were—are repealed and only those who hold licenses under the new law are subject to its restrictions. Therefore there is no law to deal with the holders of the old licenses; they can sell to minors, sell on Sunday, in fact do as they please and there is no legal remedy for an outraged community. All this is to continue until the first of next November, the beginning of the new license year. This also involves a large loss of revenue as the old license fee was $100 and the new is $400.

Summer Work in the Country.

Societies in country towns and villages often feel that there is little that they can do to help their city cousins, but during the summer months the young people in the country can, with a little exertion, do city missionary work of great value.

Few people have any conception of the eagerness with which the sick in the hospitals, and the poor and unfortunate children of humanity pent up in the close tenement houses in the city, watch for the coming of the "distributors" from the flower missions. Every week throughout the summer months these ministers of mercy scatter their offerings among those unfortunates that are unable to enjoy the blessings of a summer's outing. The cheer and brightness that these gifts bestow do not a little toward the softening of the pain that racks the weary, feverish frame, while the perfume of the flowers tells of the thoughtful love of the givers.

Though multitudes of flowers are scattered broadcast every week, yet many more are needed; and it is in helping to satisfy this need that our country societies find their opportunity. The beautiful red lilies, the daisies with the yellow hearts, and the larger ones with the soft, brown eyes, together with a bit of swamp grass or a handful of oats, make a bouquet most charming in rich color and grace, and far more forceful, in the story that it tells of waving fields and sheltered nooks, than the choicest flowers from the conservatory.

Thousands of these will flowers are growing in every country village, and little is thought of them there, but to the child in the city they give joy beyond measure. Could you see the little ones running with outstretched hands to the flower distributors, and crying, "Just one posy, please," there would be no question in your mind as to the real value of these flowers.

Several societies have taken hold of the work on some such plan as this: To some well-known Christian Endeavor society in the city, in a church engaged in mission work, each week a box of flowers is sent (express prepaid) by the country society.

The flower committee of the society receives and distributes the flowers, and at the end of the season, or perhaps before the season is over, a report is made to the donors, telling of the use to which their offering have been put.

This is by no means an insignificant work. It is the life of the country touching the very heart of evil and misfortune in the city with the spirit of Christ's charity. It means a closer unity of interest among different branches of the society, and helps to lift us all out of ourselves to a consciousness of the power we may exert in the deep, broad stream of needy human life.

If you have not tried this plan, try it. The exertion is little, the return rich and sure. Golden Rule.

The Dear Little Wife at Home.

The dear little wife at home, John,
With ever so much to do,
Stitches to set, and babies to pet,
And so many thoughts of you—
The beautiful household fairy,
Filling your heart with light;
Whatever you meet to-day, John,
Go cheerily home to night.

For though you are worn and weary,
You needn't be cross or curt;
There are words like darts to gentle hearts,
There are looks that wound and hurt,
With the key in the latch at home, John,
Drop troubles out of sight;
To the dear little wife who is waiting
Go cheerily home to-night.

You know she will come to meet you,
A smile on her sunny face;
And your wee little girl, as pure as a pearl,
Will be there in her childish grace;
And the boy, his father's pride, John,
With eyes so brave and bright,
From the strife and the din to the peace,
John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

What though the tempter try you,
Though the shafts of adverse fate
May bustle near, and the sky be drear,
And the laggard fortune wait,
You are passing rich already;
Let the haunting fears take flight,
With the faith that wins success, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

World's Fair.

New York Independent: The second Sunday of the Fair was not characterized by the crowds of the first Sunday. All the accounts agree thus far; but there are wide discrepancies between them as to the number who were actually admitted. According to the Tribune barely 60,000 passed through the gates, while the Sun represents that nearly 150,000 were admitted. Evidently the novelty of the Sunday opening is wearing off. The number of those within easy excursion distance who will choose that day in preference to the other six is comparatively small. Most of the members of the churches would prefer another day, and it is not likely that any very great number of those of the "toilers" who have no scruple against Sunday desecration, would visit the Fair more than once, even with the inducement of half-rate admission. Moreover, the Sunday visitors, according to the Tribune's dispatches, are expressing their disappointment because there are so many things they cannot see on Sunday.

"Many of the finest exhibits in the manufactures and other departmental buildings are hidden from the view of the visitors because the exhibitors or their agents in charge do not purpose to work seven days in the week. . . . And all the visitors could see were big ornamental booths or showcases disfigured with canvass, wood or iron sheeting. The Exposition authorities have no right to remove the coverings without the permission of the exhibitors and no arrangement has yet been made for unveiling on Sunday. Not even a flag was to be seen on the buildings of Great Britain, Canada, New South Wales and India, and the doors were locked. Visitors are denied access to the great display of the United States Government in the big-domed building and the small adjuncts; Machinery Hall was as silent as it was last Sunday."

It also says that the New England State Buildings, together with those of Pennsylvania, New York, Missouri, North Dakota, Utah, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia were locked, and will be to the end of the Fair. The next thing we shall hear will be a demand that the machinery shall be started and that the exhibits shall be uncovered. As to the machinery, the managers of the Fair may start it if they choose; but fortunately, they have no power over the exhibits. From motives which the managers do not appear to be able to appreciate, many of the exhibitors have kept their goods covered and are likely to continue to do so. In the end we believe that Sunday opening will prove to be very unsatisfactory to the authorities themselves. They have been obstinate in overriding the Christian sentiment of the country for the purpose of financial success; and we should be very much surprised if they do not find that what they have done will defeat the very object they had in view. At twenty-five cents a head the Sunday receipts cannot be very large nor very profitable; and if, as many stay away from the Fair altogether for conscience' sake as are admitted on Sunday the positive loss to the Fair would be very large.

Random Arrows

The face of Moses shone when he came down from the mount. Be much with God, and see what a change is effected in your countenance.

Many of the most truly rich men do not know where their next day's dinner is coming from.

A conundrum: How much more time can a man spend in grumbling than he spends in work for Christ, and still be a consistent Christian?

Felish men are the devil's merchandise, with the owner's trade-mark stamped on every face.

If "home is an imitation of heaven," has yours made the real heaven any more delightful to you?

The Christian that cannot see God in everything had better have his spiritual eyesight attended to.

If a man would live close to God, he must live close to his brother, for in him will God be found.

Many persons are proud of their humility. "You cannot be humble and know it."

A little more love invested in your life would pay big dividends.

Did you ever spend fifteen minutes in thinking over your own religious experience? Try it; it will pay you.

Saying "Our Father, which art in heaven," necessitates say "My brethren" to your neighbor on earth.

Which is the most characteristic thing about you, your cloths or your life?

The man who starts out with only selfish gain in view, and arrays himself against all mankind, shortly finds all mankind arrayed against him. From being in the minority defeat inevitably results. Golden Rule.

Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends." Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders." Mr. R. B. Raney, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has no superior."

Resolutions.

Passed by the Christian church at Damascus, Orange Co., N. C., on the life and death of Bro. John Wilson Pritchard.

WHEREAS, it has pleased God in his infinite wisdom and mercy to remove from our number Bro. John W Pritchard;

RESOLVED 1. That in the death of Bro. Pritchard the church has lost a faithful and consistent member and the community a good and useful citizen.

2. That we believe he lived and practiced the religion he professed and that there are today in this community those that owe a debt of gratitude to their deceased brother for the influence for good he exerted over those with whom he mingled while here on earth.

3. That we tender our heart felt sympathy and prayers to the bereaved ones and hope that they may all meet in that better world of which we have all heard him talk with such bright hopes of going at last.

4. That these resolutions be published in the CHRISTIAN SUN and a copy placed on the church record.

Romanism Illustrated.

What if a Protestant church should advertise a charity ball in its own interest, and on the announcement page should publish forty eight liquor advertisements! Should we not justly say, "That church has joined hands with Satan for the overthrow of faith, virtue, and honor?" But, happily, no Protestant church in America is so lost to its sense of honor as to do such a thing. But Roman Catholicism is wholly another thing.

St. Stephen's Catholic church, of Boston, has recently done just this, and by the act shows that it is a thing of the world and in cordial league with Satan. But this is Catholicism!—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Decline Ending in Death.

No Church ever died so long as it maintained its attitude of hostility to the world, the flesh and the devil. When the church enters into a truce—strikes a compromise or makes a peace with these enemies of her Lord—her decline has begun and her downfall is but a question of time, unless the peace, compromise and truce are speedily changed for active renewal of hostilities. "There is no peace, saith my God to the wicked." This sentiment voices God's attitude towards those who make or love a lie. Whoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God, "He that is not with me is against me." saith Christ. Many of those who once had solid prosperity are now withered, dry and unfruitful—why? They are and have been temporizing with the enemies of the Lord. Their locks of strength, Sampson-like, are gone, and fancy they can go in and out as at other times. One day, like him, shall find themselves having their eyes put out, making sport for the Philistines, the enemies of the Lord.—Sel.

A Glass of Cold Water.

Where is the liquor which God the eternal, brews for all his children? Not in the simmering still over smoking fires choked with poisonous, smothered with the stench of sickening odors and rank corruptions doth your Father in Heaven prepare the precious essence of life, the pure cold water. But in the green glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wanders and the child loves to play; where God brews it And down, low down in the lowest valleys, where the fountains murmur the rills sing; and high upon the tall mountain tops, where the naked granite glitters like gold in the sun; where the storm-clouds brood, and the thunder storms crash; and away, far out on the wide, wild sea, where the hurricane howls music, and the big waves roar; the chorus sweeping the march of God; there He brews it—that beverage of life and health-giving water. And everywhere it is a thing of beauty, gleaming in the dew drop; singing in the summer rain; shining in the ice-gems till the leaves all seem to turn to living jewels: spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the cataract, sleeping in the glazier, dancing in the hail shower, folding its bright snow curtains softly about the wintry world, and waving the many colored iris, that seraph's zone of the sky, whose warp is the rain-drop of earth, whose woof is the sunbeam of heaven, all checkered over with celestial flowers by the mystic hand of refraction.

Still always beautiful, that life-giving water; no poison bubbles on its brink; its foam brings not madness and murder; no blood stains its liquid glass; pale widows and starving orphans weep no burning tears in its depths; no drunken, shrieking ghost from the grave curses it in words of eternal despair. Speak on my friends, would you exchange it for demon's drink, alcohol?—J. B. Gough.

The Sunday School Convention.

MR. EDITOR: I have watched with anxiety for words of encouragement from our ministers and Sunday school workers in request to Brother Foster's earnest reply that they advise and suggest as to holding another convention. So far I have seen but very little about it. Bro. W. S. Long in the SUN of May the 11 says that one would conclude that Bro. Foster is in earnest I think I have known for sometime that he was, and I would be so glad if all our ministers would manifest the same earnestness of zeal that he does for this good cause. I feel if they would we might expect great growth and prosperity to our conference. Bro. Long says also that his opinion is that the officers should go forward and make all arrangements for the body, and then the responsibility will rest on the body. Here comes the trouble. Who is the body? By looking over the minutes of the last convention one can see that it was either a small one or that it was not all there. Well the officers (executive committee) have appointed a place for the next convention, and I expect we will be there and try to do our duty. As this is a plan and arrangement of our conference surely the members of said conference should constitute this body I suggest that we read 1st Corinthians 12 Chap. 14 to 26 vs. and thus decide who is the body and who each member is responsible to. One might ask what good will come from such a convention. I answer 1st, we will carry out the plan or order of conference. 2nd, it will cause us to feel that we have done our duty. 3, and as the Sunday school is one of the most important enterprises of the church I can't see why not have conventions to push it to success as well as any other enterprises. It is true there does not appear to be much money in it but I feel that there is great reward in it. I wish our hopes would look into this matter as they should. In the minutes of Conference session 1891 the committee on Sunday schools reports 55 schools with a decrease of 281 the same minutes show 76 churches, is it possible that we have 21 churches that have no Sunday school, or do we need conventions to get at and print the facts as they are. Again the minutes of the convention report 35 schools thus showing that we have but 20 or that a good many do not report to the convention also we report 35 or more Ministers, 8 of these are reported in convention Minutes 1892.

Further if we will think of our church membership and then of the Sunday school membership and deduct at least one half (I think $\frac{2}{3}$) from this for those who are not members of the church. I think we will decide on one of two things either that by a majority rule we do not favor and work in and for the schools as a Christian people should and as we purpose to do, or that we will arouse and show our Faith by our works, let me suggest that the churches raise and contribute a small amount to their pastors to defray his expenses to the convention and further insist that he for their sakes attend. And likewise the schools their superintendents and delegates, by thus doing we may realize how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; and to you, Mr. Editor, keep the time and place before your readers, let no one have it as an excuse I forgot it, or I did not know when or where it was to be held.

Dr. J. P. Barrett's Lectures at Union Christian College.

DEAR EDITOR:—I desire to express through the columns of your excellent paper our high appreciation of Dr. Barrett's lectures.

The course began with "Down Hill to success," but we were carried upward all the way through. There did not seem to be a weak point in the lecture. And so with the five lectures that followed; they were all carefully prepared and their delivery held the audience so fully that a unanimous request was voted to persuade Bro. Barrett, if possible, to have the lectures printed that they might be more widely useful. Dr. Barrett is too well known by our southern brethren to need any praise at my hands and yet I do feel prompted to express what I am sure will voice the conviction of our students, faculty and visiting friends this year, viz., that Dr. Barrett brought us a spiritual and intellectual uplift. Himself and other men like him will always be welcome at U. C. College. Most earnest, progressive, he is a model to our brethren in many respects and we are glad he came to us.

We are glad also to recognize true worth in unanimously conferring the honors of our college upon Bro. W. W. Staley of Suffolk.

I may add also that the address on Commencement Day delivered by the associate editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Bro. G. D. Black, was very inspiring indeed. The outlook for U. C. College is excellent.

Yours truly,
L. J. ABLRICH, Pres.

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—Very quiet here; commencements are over and student have gone home.

I was at Elon College last week and everything was quiet. Some changes and improvements will be made about the dorm. and boarding department and college; 500 fine chairs have been ordered for the chapel; other improvements are being discussed.

Since my last communication I have received four members, making twenty-eight since taking charge. Have expelled two and dismissed four by letters. J. W. WELLONS.

Isn't there something wrong if you get mad at the preacher whose sermons tell you that your life is sinful?

Many people are in the habit of trying to measure their own spiritual condition by somebody else's experience.

If people would stop looking toward the wrong place they wouldn't find it half as hard to stay in the right place.

The Position of the Christian Church.

REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

[The following sermon was delivered at the laying of the corner stone of the Berkley, Va., Christian church, June 2, 1893.]

We desire to hear of thee, what thou thinkest as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.—Acts 28:22.

In all ages the Christian church has met with powerful opposition from the enemies of the cross. It has encountered the prejudices of the ignorant, the opposition of the philosopher and statesman, and the power of kings and princes. They have united to crush it, yet it has survived all opposition; and lives the greatest power in the world to day. The nature and object of Christianity was misunderstood by both Jew and Gentile. It was a stumbling block to the Jew and foolishness to the Greek. The Christian church occupies a peculiar position in the religious world, and many oppose us because they do not understand our principles and object. I propose to present our true position, and the reasons why we occupy it.

Our origin is peculiar—unlike any other religious organization in the history of Christianity. Most, if not all, religious sects are the long drawn shadow of great men. The Methodist, Presbyterian, Winebrenarian, Friends, Mennonites, United Brethren, Lutheran, New Jerusalem church, Disciples of Christ, are the shadows of John Wesley, John Calvin, John Winbrenner, George Fox, Meuno Simon, William Otterbin, Martin Luther, Emanuel Swedenborg, Alexander Campbell. They are the founders of these churches. The Christian church did not originate with any one man. It is the result of a spontaneous movement among different people and in different and distant parts of the country.

The opening of the nineteenth century witnessed a new development of gospel truth and religious impulse. This was not the result of the revelation of any new truths, for the divine doctrine which produced this new development was revealed to man eighteen centuries before; but these truths had lain dormant under ceremonies and dead formality.

Each age has its characteristic events and attributes. The distinguishing event of the opening of the present century was the wonderful revival of religion that gave birth to the Christian church as it now exists in the religious world. This revival, and its far reaching results, grew out of an earnest striving after a deeper religious experience and larger freedom on the part of men in different parts of the country unknown to each other. Doctor Abner Jones, and a few others in New England, Rev. J. O'Kelly, and a small band of brethren in the South, Rev. Barton W. Stone, and a number of earnest educated young men in the West, were led by the Spirit of God to realize and mourn over the lifeless condition of Zion. They saw and felt the backsliden condition of the church. This led to an earnest inquiry into the cause; to heartsearching self examination; to earnest prayer and faithful study of God's word; to a more practical and feeling presentation of gospel truth from the pulpit. Under the divine blessing this resulted in a glorious revival of religion. Thousands were converted to Christ, and the beautiful valleys of New England, the enameled plains of the sunny South, and the fragrant groves of the West were made vocal with the songs of new born souls.

Revolutions never go backward. The germinating life in the seed bursts its shell, and springs forth in new and brighter life. Thus the spiritual seed, the word of God, germinating in the Christian heart, bursts the iron bands of human creeds, and shoots up into broader and nobler Christian life. Thus it was with the leaders in the great revival at the opening of the present century. They drank too deep of the spirit of the gospel to be brought back again into the bondage of ecclesiastical deopostism, and the iron dominion of creeds. They renounced all masters but Christ, all names but Christian, and all tests of communion but Christian character.

Such a movement never occurred before, and none was ever more spontaneous in its development, none ever less the result of mutual concert. It reminds one of the great national changes in which islands are cast up from old ocean's bosom, in obedience to the divine laws which preside over all essential changes. It was not born of human policy, and was as free from designing craft of man as the coming spring, or the fading autumn. It was a natural outgrowth. The ideas and forms which satisfy human nature in one age will not do it in another. Man outgrows his old systems, as the youth outgrows the garments of childhood, as man outgrows the views and habits of his youth. Manly nature, is still too great for his adopted creeds, and he must needs be cramped to wear them. There are times when the soul of man becomes too deeply conscious of the insufficiency of harren, antique theories to continue its homage to them, and then it stands up in its native independent strength, and lo! like the fabled statue of Olympian Jove, when it arose upon its feet and stretched forth its arms, the building falls, and the walls crumble down, because the house is too small for its gigantic occupant. Thus in the opening of the present century the leaders in this great movement, aroused by the power of divine truth, and thrilled with the glowing light of intellectual and spiritual freedom shed upon them by the Son of Righteousness, burst asunder the chains of ecclesiastical despotism, asserted their native rights, and in the name of God set up the banner of liberty; liberty for all to read the Bible for themselves, and to obey the earnest convictions of their own souls.

We reject all creeds, and take the Bible for our only rule of faith and practice. We were the first people in the religious world, since the days of Constantine the great, who took this position. Since then the Unitarians and Disciples have come out on the same platform. Our reason for taking this position are the following.

1. All creeds and confessions of faith are unauthorized by the Scriptures.

Every man has a right to read and think for himself, and to express his sentiments. Every man who thinks has a creed, and it is his privilege to publish and defend his views; but he has no right to set them up as a test of Christian character and religious fellowship. God has not delegated this authority to any man or set of men. Creeds interfere with the freedom of thought and speech. They only allow a man to think and speak in accordance with them. If he goes beyond them he is dealt with as a heretic.

2. Creeds infringe on the right of private judgment.

God has made a revelation of his will to man, and this is the only authority that the Christian should submit to. Creeds interpose their authority between the conscience and the scriptures, and tell us how we must understand them; what we must believe and what we must reject. They enslave the conscience in iron fetters. Why was Micheal Servetus burned at the stake? Because John Calvin claimed the right to say what he should receive as the true doctrine, and what he should reject as heresy. Why were the fires of Smithfield kindled, and some of the noblest men in England burned at the stake? Because there was a power that claimed the right to come between the conscience and the scriptures. Dr. Adam Clark says, "British Protestants have learned, and Europe is learning, that the sacred writings, and they alone contain what is necessary for faith and practice; and that no man, number of men, society, church, council, presbytery, or conclave has dominion over any man's faith. The word of God alone is his rule, and to its author he is to give an account for the use he has made of it."

3. Christianity as presented in creeds and confessions of faith presents a very distorted character.

As presented in the Bible it is one beautiful harmonious system. Like the mariner's compass it has many points, yet it is but one system. In Winchester, England, there is an old cathedral built centuries ago. When Cromwell's soldiers held the city they quartered their horses in the Cathedral, and broke most of the painted windows. Afterwards the fragments of glass were gathered up, and the great western window is composed of these luminious scraps, not in any order of figure, but only for the effect of color. This window is a symbol of the theological systems of Christianity as embodied in the various creeds and confessions of faith. They are not complete systems of truth in glorious harmony, through which God's Spirit streams in divine illumination upon the minds of men; but made up of scraps, bearing something of the beauty and color of heavenly things, but nothing of their form and proportion. In the Bible all is glorious harmony.

"A glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic like the sun;
It gives a light to every age;
It gives, but borrows none."

4. Creeds have a tendency to destroy the authority of Christ.

He is the head and law giver of the church. He is "the head over all things to the church." Human creeds assume authority over the conscience, and claim to dictate in matters of faith. Where this authority is acknowledged it has, to some extent, crowded Christ into the background, and creeds have taken the place of his word. In the Methodist conference in England a few years ago it was laid down as a principle that in religious discussions men had no right to appeal to the scriptures—that the standard of appeal in conference investigations into the soundness of a minister's principles were the writings of John Wesley. These were put between the conscience of the man and Christ, we accept Christ as the head of the church, and his word as our law.

5. Creeds promote sectarianism, and divide the family of God. They destroy the unity of the church, and divide it into antagonistical parties. Good men are divided in their opinions. This difference grows out of the nature of things, and cannot be otherwise; hence when creeds are made tests of Christian fellowship they divide the church. There are forty-three different denominations in America. Why is this?—making creeds tests of fellowship. The Bible with the right of private interpretation is the only platform on which all Christians can unite. All cannot unite on the Westminster confession of faith, nor on any other; but all Christians accept the Bible as the word of God, and can agree on it.

6. The end for which creeds are made can never be realized.

The object of creeds is unity of opinion. This cannot be accomplished. After fifteen hundred years of creed making the church is not as much united in opinion as before the existence of creeds. Then there was but one church and creed, but now there are hundreds. As long as men think there will be differences of opinion, and they will have different creeds; by we can all have one spirit, and live for one object.

The Bible is perfect, and all its facts, truths, promises, and commands are adapted to the spiritual wants of man. They qualify him for every good work in life, and arm him with the most inspiring of all motives. At one place in England there is a bed of Ochre. The water flowing through it comes out tinged with yellow. Thus it is with all the productions of men. The truths that pass through their minds, and come out in their writings, are tinged with the prejudices of their education.

In the Bible we have the truth as it comes from the infinite mind without the colorings of human prejudice and ignorance. A man asked the celebrated John Lock what was the shortest way for a young man to attain a true knowledge of the Christian religion. He replied: "Let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament; there are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation its end, and truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter." Creed making is an attempt to improve what God has made perfect. John Wesley says, "I want to know one thing, the way to heaven;—how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way. He hath written it down in a book. Oh, give me that book! I have it! Here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be 'Homo sapiens libri,' that is give me no book but the Bible." It meets every want of the soul, and arms us against all evil influences.

We reject all sectarian names, and take the Bible name Christian.

We do not do this because we think that we are the only Christians in the world, and that none others are worthy of the name. We rejoice to know that there are Christians in all denominations. Our reasons for taking this name are the following:

1. The name Christian is of divine authority, and the only name the scriptures authorize us to take.

The first followers of Christ were called Christians by the command of God. "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Acts 11:26. Some suppose that this name was given by their enemies as a term of reproach, but it is hardly reasonable to suppose that they would have selected one so beautiful and honorable as this. Others think that they took it themselves; but the original word shows that it was done by divine direction. The word signifies oracular denomination, or declaration from God. Dr. Doddridge translates it, "and the disciples were by divine appointment first named Christians at Antioch." He remarks, "I think with Dr. Benson, that the word chemaisai, which is rendered was called implies that it was done by divine authority or direction. "Dr. Adam Clark says, "The word in our common text, which we translate were called, signifies in the New Testament, to appoint, va-n, or nominois, by Divine direction. In this sense, it is used, Matt. 2:12; Luke 2:26; and in the preceding chapter of this book, ver. 22." The giving of this name to the disciples of Christ is the fulfilment of an ancient prophecy. "Thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name." Isa. 62:2.

2. Christian is the only name derived from Christ, and the only one that points out our relation to him.

"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." Eph. 3:14-15. The phrase "of whom" refers to Christ, and it means that this family derived its name from him. Dr. Adam Clark says, "It is evident that the name Christians from their master; as Platonist and Pythagorans had their name from their masters Plato and Pythagoras. Now, as these had names from those great masters because they attended their teaching, and credited their doctrines, so the disciples were called Christians because they took Christ for their teacher, crediting his doctrines, and following the rule of life laid down by him."

All names but Christian are derived from men or from human systems of theology, and do not refer to the relation that we sustain to Christ. Lutheran refers to Martin Luther, and the fact that they accept his system of teaching and church government.

Presbyterian, Baptist, Unitarian, and Congregationalist points to certain dogmas in controversial theology. The name Christian points out our relation to Christ, and keeps it ever before the mind. This name does the most reverence to Christ. No other renders him equal homage. He is the centre and life of Christianity, the Alpha and Omega, the chief corner stone, the foundation rock; therefore his church should bear his name. The name Christian alone points directly to Christ as the Teacher and Founder of our faith, and exalts him in the thoughts of his people.

3. Christian is the only name that corresponds with the spirit and universal truths of the gospel of Christ.

In Christianity we meet with a spirit of universal goodness; with truths that are as far from being local as the great laws of which govern the planets. The heavens are not so high, the oceans are not so deep, and immensity is not so vast as the facts and truths of Christianity. Christianity does not wear the badge of sects; the stamp of narrowness, so common to man's productions. It reveals God as the universal Father, infinite in his love; Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of all men; promises pardon and salvation to all who accept him as Lord and Saviour. Denominational names represent only broken fragments of Christian truth. Take the name Baptist to illustrate this truth. It reminds you of only one outward ordinance in the church. It is important, but it is only a fragment of Christianity. Presbyterian is not a name of doctrine, but of one idea in relation to church government. Unitarian is only the symbol of one truth, the unity of God. Christian is not a representative of one idea alone; but corresponds with the spirit of universal goodness, and the broad truths of Christianity. There is nothing narrow in it. It has no sectarian associations.

4. Christian is the only name on which all Christians can agree.

There is no other name on which they can unite. If we take the name of any one of the different churches all but the members of that church will reject it. As we earnestly desire the union of all Christians we have taken a name on which all can unite.

5. In the most trying circumstances in life the disciples of Christ forgot all names but Christian, and clung to his alone.

When a loved one dies we only ask, "Were they a Christian?" This assures us of their eternal safety, and our hearts rejoice.

6. Christian is the only name that will be honored in the day of judgment.

In that day we will not be accepted because we are members of this or that church, but because we are Christians.

7. Christian is the name most consonant with spiritual freedom.

The great end of Christianity is to free the soul not only from the bondage of sin, but from all intellectual bondage. Christ said, "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." This is not simply theoretic, but a reality. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." The man who belongs to a party, bows to a creed, or a dogma, which he dare not forsake, is not free. He finds in one man, or in many, a master. Christ alone is master. He comes to free man from the bondage of sin and ignorance and bring him into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Every thing must have a name. Even nothing must be called nothing. Deity is named, and can only be known through a name. Flowers and angels, all must have names. Every object is worthy of an appropriate name. The church of Christ should have a name expressive of its nature, character and work. Such a name has been given to it by God himself, and that name is Christian. It is derived from Christ, points out our relation to him as his disciples, does him reverence as our saviour, corresponds with the broad spirit of his religion, unites his people as one family, is expressive of our spiritual freedom; and around it clusters all our ideas of God, of Christ, and of heaven. Said a distinguished Episcopal clergyman, Dr. Neville, "I glory in the name Episcopal more than any other of earthly origin; but I'd glory ten thousand times more in the simple name Christian."

We reject all tests of Christian fellowship but Christian character.

This is Christ's basis of Christian fellowship. This is the test that he sets up. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." The fruit of the Spirit is "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Christian character is the only basis on which all Christians can unite. They cannot be one in opinion. The constitutional difference of men, and the different influences through which they come up into life render this impossible, while there cannot be a oneness in opinion there may be a unity of spirit. They may be one in love, sympathy, and the great object for which they live.

The great mistake of all reformers in their effort to unite Christians has been the attempt to bring them all to embrace the same opinions in speculative theology. This is an absolute impossibility. All churches are in favor of union, but it must be on their creed. Each sect supposes that er 3:14,16, "Our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures; unto their own destruction?"

But there is no use for any one to say another word about this thing since Bro. Barrett has decided that the passages of Scripture under consideration must not be applied to any person or persons (and Dr. B. seems able to tell) except the church at Corinth, thereby releasing all women from the prohibition—"Let your women keep silence." I am glad that for my lady Sunday school teachers cannot be improved on by any man.

I thank you for that statement Bro. Barrett, as it gives more satisfaction than almost anything else you can say.

I am through,

Yours truly,
D. J. MOON.

Holland Items,

The protracted meeting at Holland Christian church will commence next Sunday, 1st. Sermon on Sunday at 11 o'clock by Rev. R. H. D. Demarest; and after Sunday services will commence in the evening at 2 o'clock, to be conducted by Rev. H. H. Butler.

Church service here last 4th Sunday, was well attended, notwithstanding there was regular meeting with the Friends at Somerton church, near by.

It was my pleasure to be at the Sunday School Convention of the E. V. C. Conference last week, which was in every way a success. The representation from the churches was full and the attendance large. All of our interests, nearly, seemed to be represented. Dr Jones and Col. A Savage made good speeches in behalf of the Norfolk mission, in which they gave glowing accounts of the work of building up the Christian cause there. They need some outside help to complete the house of worship there. Brethren and sisters, (you who are able) this is a most worthy cause, and should be assisted to our utmost ability. Don't pass it by without immediate attention. No investment will result in better interest to our beloved church. Send on your money according to your ability, let it be much or little, at your earliest convenience.

Dr Newman and Prof. Atkinson both made able speeches in behalf of Elon College, which we think were not without effect, and we hope for a much larger number of students from Virginia, than went up from here last year.

Our young brethren from Elon and others all made strong, enthusiastic speeches and much interest was manifested in all departments of our work, and all seemed to enjoy the meetings, as it was most royally entertained. May God bless all the efforts put forth in his name, to the good of his cause.

Children's Day at Holy Neck.

Holy Neck S. S. celebrated Children's Day the 3rd Sunday in this month (July). Notwithstanding the excessive heat a very large concourse of people assembled from far and near. Two services were held and dinner was furnished for all who came. The exercises of the forenoon consisted of music and recitations by the children and music by the choir. Prof. Taylor was present with his cornet and added much to the music. The children acquitted themselves very well, and no doubt gratified those who had labored so faithfully to train them. A collection for mission was taken, resulting in about $7.00.

After an intermission of about 1 1/2 hours the audience again assembled to witness the afternoon exercises which consisted of addresses by Prof. Atkinson, of Elon College, and Bros. S. E. Everett and J. H. Jones, interspersed with appropriate music by the choir. The addresses of Bros. Everett and Jones were good, and showed that they had acquired habits of thoughtful study. Holy Neck should be proud of her young men. Prof. Atkinson's address was in the interest of Elon College, and was a strong appeal to the denomination to stand by the institution which it has established. In the course of his remarks he let fall some very practical thoughts on manhood and womanhood.

Washington Letter.

The prospect for any distinctly moral reform legislation, by the fifty-third congress, soon to assemble in extra session, cannot be considered especially bright, as the average member of Congress needs a very little excuse for not doing what he has no desire to do, and from present indications financial and tariff legislation will dwarf everything else and will furnish a ready-made excuse for the neglect of bills intended to aid in the march of moral reform.

The absence of new laws might be excused, if those already upon our statute books were rigidly enforced which they certainly are not in Washington. There is a law in force here prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors, yet it is a common thing for children to be found upon our streets in a state of intoxication, and no arrests are made. Children have recently been under treatment in our hospitals for alcoholism and a messenger boy under thirteen was picked up on Pennsylvania Avenue helplessly intoxicated. These things make it plain that the law against the sale of intoxicants to minors is being constantly violated, but notwithstanding extraordinary efforts on the part of the local temperance people no arrests have been made for such violations.

A national quarantine has been by direction of President Cleveland established at Brunswick, Georgia, Surgeon General Wyman of the Marine Hospital Service having reported the failure of the local authorities at that place to enforce the quarantine regulations against a yellow fever infested vessel. This action was taken under the National Quarantine act of February 15, 1893, and is generally approved here. It seems that Georgia has no State board of health.

Everything is unusually quiet in government circles just now. Secretary Carlisle is the only member of the cabinet on duty. Treasury officials speak very hopefully of the financial outlook and say that a large percentage of the national banks which have recently suspended will in a short time resume business, and that they have information from all sections of the country which leads them to believe that public confidence is being gradually restored.

The War Department has about come to the conclusion that Indians do not make good soldiers, and while those already in the service—about 700 in all—will probably be allowed to serve out their terms of enlistment it is not probable that any further efforts will be made to enlist Indians in the army, at least not under present conditions. There is some talk of organizing an Indian auxiliary branch of the army, modeled on the British system in India. The present trouble, according to Army officers, is that the rules of discipline in the army are entirely unsuited to the nature and habits of the Indians.

Carelessness in Hymn Singing

BY JOHN B. CLEMENTS.

"Mamma, did you ever see a conserated cross eyed bear?

That was the question little Willie greeted his mother with, on his return from Sunday-school, one afternoon.

The school had sang, the old, oft-used hymn, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone," and the one line had impressed Willie in a peculiar manner.

Not unlike this, was the little fellow who returned from church to express the wish that he might go to Greenland. When asked why, he said, "because he would like to see a mountain, and they sang in church 'From Greenland I see mountains!'"

In the singing of the choruses of the hymn by Major Whittle, "The Banner of the Cross," one line is often rendered:—"For Christ counts every thing but loss," the adding of the final "s" to "count," causing an entire change in the meaning of the chorus, and making a flagrant misstatement, and one that does not at all carry the idea the author would have conveyed.

The writer sat in a meeting, not long since, when the well-known hymn, "At the Cross," was announced, and the leader, in a heavy bass voice, started up:—"At last, and did my Savior bleed," with utter disregard for the deep sentiment of Watts.

All this goes to prove that much of our singing fails of its effect because we have so little regard for the words of the hymns, that we do not make them what they should be—musical prayers. Our thoughtlessness of expression may be fixing in the minds of little ones wrong ideas and impressions, that, if they do not cause them embarrassment sometime, will, at least, annoy them in an endeavor to set themselves right.

We should be hymn-students, even as we search for the meanings which the poets give us in sweet metrical lines and daintily constituted sentences.—Presbyterian.

The Southern Home Companion.

Elizabeth Lyle Saxon, in her War Time Reminiscences in the August number of the Southern Home Companion, writes of Terrible Privations Ingenious Makeshifts, telling how broadcloth shoes, fashionable bonnets, etc., were made at home. Dr. Annie M. Hale contributes an interesting and instructive World's Fair Letter. Martha Homebody, editor of the Home-Making Department, gives practical instructions for canning and preserving the fruits of the season; also for putting up wine, made from either wild or cultivated grapes, so that it will keep the year round without fermenting, thus making at slight expense a delightful beverage in the sick room, having all the healthful properties of wine without power to intoxicate. There is also the usual variety of interesting stories and charming poems, by the best authors. Ten cents a number, $1.00 a year. The Companion, 192 Common Street, New Orleans.

A Day at Niagara for Twenty Cents.

Niagara, "the crown jewel of our continent," centuries old, but ever new in its infinite variety, is the one spot that every American should see; and every reader of Demorest's Family Magazine for August may see Niagara in all its different aspects, at every season of the year, without the fatigue and expense of the journey. Through the charmingly written and superbly illustrated article "A Day at Niagara," one may become familiar with every point of interest in the vicinity of the Great Falls; while those who propose stopping there on their way to or from the Exposition, may learn how they may see all to the best advantage, and with the least expenditure of time and money. "Society Fads" describes all the latest foibles of the butterflies of fashion; and all the departments for which this Magazine is noted are full to overflowing with good things. There is something in it of interest to every member of the family. This number is a fair sample of what is given twelve time a year for $2. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East 14th St., New York.

The Pansy for August

comes to us with its usual amount of good things. It never fails to do that. As clever a piece of reading as any between its covers, however, is the paper which concerns itself with American Literature. The P. S. Society maintains its popularity with all, while it adds fresh interest to each. Price, $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston is an unusually bright number. "The Duck Flowers" with its apt illustrations makes a dainty botany lesson, and "Flossie," who belonged to the author of "My Dogs and their ways," will amuse and interest all lovers of dumb animals—and what little man or woman is not that? Price, $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston.

Our Little Men and Women for August

Babyland for August tells about a good many things that Baby will enjoy. This dainty little magazine is sure always to captivate both Baby and Mamma. Price, 50 cents a year; 5 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston.

The Preacher's Magazine for August is the eighth number of the third volume, which is edited by the Rev.'s Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory. The leading Sermon in this number is by Dr. Hugh Macmillan, and is entitled, "A Bardsome Stone." Is published monthly at $1.50 per year; single copy 15 cents. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, N. Y.

Wide Awake—St. Nicholas.

The merging of Wide Awake into St. Nicholas will prove a surprise to the thousands of readers and lovers of the former magazine. The August number will be the "farewell" issue. We quote from the "Story of Wide Awake," the leading article in this number:

"A great publishing house, carrying out the plans of its founder, determines to devote its best strength and energy to the publication of the best books for American readers, young and old. It has necessarily broadened and deepened, until now, new lines of book publishing are to be taken—lines that preclude diversion of thought and labor necessary to the carrying on of such a magazine as Wide Awake has become. Thus, looking out for the best interest of Wide Awake, it publishers decide to face where it will do the most good in the future, and therefore transfer it to the comradeship and companionship of its friendly competitor and twin."

A cursory glance at The New Peterson for August is enough to show that it is best of the month's magazines. "Days in England," by Maty Gray Unken, describes all sorts of charming out-of-the-way nooks, and the accompanying illustrations are worthy of the text. "Under the trees" is a new department, made up of sketches by Minot J. Savage and other prominent writers. A glimpse of the number's contents will convince our readers that The Peterson keeps thoroughly up to its high standard. Terms, two dollars a year. firmed his sincerity, and in a few weeks he was united with his wife in the church, and within a month she had the joy of partaking communion in company with her long opposing and godless husband. Did such a sudden change prove permanent? As long as I knew his life he walked in humble obedience to the Gospel. Then change of residence removed him from my watchcare. But five years ago I was sent for one day to attend his funeral, and then learned that he had died peacefully in that faith which he once persecuted.

In the twenty hurried, crowded years that had intervened I had almost forgotten the man. But as I looked on his dead face as he lay in the coffin, the circumstances of his religious history came rushing back to me, and I instinctively asked myself, What but the Holy Spirit could have wrought such a sudden, unlooked for and enduring change?

The lesson of this conversion is obvious. "We ought to obey God rather than men." This "ought" carries a blessing as well as an obligation. This wife's domestic happiness for all her subsequent life, lay wrapped up in her surrender to this divine "ought." For nearly four years she heeded her husband and held back from confessing Christ before men. Then she resolutely put God first, and made his claims supreme, and from the very first day she did so the most ardent wish of her heart was fulfilled in the conversion of her husband to Christ and in the uniting of a long distracted and unhappy home in those bonds in the Lord which continued unbroken for twenty years.

An anxious wife once asked an experienced pastor what more she could do to bring her husband to Christ. "I have talked to him and warned him and urged him till I am worn out," she continued; "and still he remains unconverted." "Talk less to your husband about God, and talk more to God about your husband." was the curt and wise reply of the pastor. The moral of the story of conversion here rehearsed seems plainly to be: "Less fear of an opposing husband, in obeying the claims of Christ, and more faith in an approving God, in honoring those claims."—Independent.

Try Individual Work.

In every congregation there are souls who have been tarrying at the threshold for a long time. They are moral, thoughtful and earnest, but not religious. They have not hitherto been moved to consecrate themselves to Christ by the public services of the Church, either ordinary or extraordinary.

What remains to be done for them yet? We have an answer in three words: Try personal work Go to them after diligent effort to put yourself in working mood, and after assuring yourself that you are in touch with him who alone can "give the increase." Seek a fitting season, and tenderly, prayerfully, anxiously, lay before them your sense of their duty and their danger. Seek to get the approval of their judgment, and to ally yourself with their conscience. With tact, with delicate consideration, in the spirit of Christ, in earnestness of soul, deal with them as you would want some courageous and faithful man or woman to deal with you, in similar straits. Moreover, put the burden of personal work upon half a score or more of others around you. Get them to go out after others. Try it, brother pastor. Victory will follow. The services of the sanctuary alone often fail to bring men and women to Christ; supplement these services with individual work.—Selected.

Young Converts Holding On

Almost anybody can make a spurt but only those who are soundly principled can stand the long stretch of heroic effort. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," and this language implies that there is constant waste and wear and tear, making constant renewal necessary; and this is true alike of our physical and intellectual and religious nature.

We need perpetually fresh impulses of power, or presently we shall come to a dead stop. And this is the meaning of that other Scripture, "He hath saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." The first refers to the change that is wrought once for all, and the other to that constant impartation of fresh grace and strength to repair the loss of power that comes from contact with the world; and this we must have, and this we may have, if we will only keep up our connection with our base of supplies. "My grace is sufficient," saith the Lord. Only let the golden pipes be unobstructed, and the grace will flow steadily in; and steady flow is what we want. Enthusiasm is peaceful, but "patient continuance in well-doing"—this, after all, is the thing that wins.

To "mount upon wings as eagles" is doubtless very fine, but to "run and not be weary" finer still; while to "walk and not faint" on the long tramp is the highest of all tests of of true soldierly quality. There is no "hurrah" about that. Beautiful and enjoyable is the flush of feeling, but there will be times when feeling is faint, and if we simply "go by our feelings" we shall presently cease to go at all.—Standard

Her Prayer.

This was how it happened. The last two sleeping cars were thrown down the embankment. I was in one of those cars. And a perfect wreck they were, a mass of broken timbers. Truly it was kindling wood, and it kindled too.

Then arose an appalling wail of souls in agony. Human prayers and human curses; prayers to be taken, prayers to be spared; while straight into the air rose the pillar of steam and smoke.

Staggering and amazed, filled with wonder at my escape, I heard a pitiful little moan amidst a tangled mass of splintered timbers, bell-cords and velvet cushions.

Poor little girl! I remembered she had sat in the seat in front of me. Her golden curls had seemed an aureole, that enhanced the sweetness of her pure face. With the help of others, I succeeded in extricating her bruised and broken form. She was horribly lacerated, but her face, by some rare chance, remained untouched. We laid her gently down, beyond the heat of the burning cars.

The moisture of agony was on her cold white forehead, her eyes were contracted with unutterable pain. The scarlet thread of her pure little lips was parted, her mouth was parched and dry and drawn. She did not see us—she was looking far beyond. Though she wished for death to end her agony, yet she feared to suffer greater pain. With all the sweet simplicity of a child's faith she closed her eyes and said, "Oh, take me, God, but please be easy!"

He took her. The rigor of her face relaxed, and the smile that illumined it was evidence enough to us who remained that He had answered her prayer.—For the Companion.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

Washington Letter.

Surely no more striking illustration of the uncertainty of human life was even given than the catastrophe in the old building in which President Lincoln was assassinated, a catastrophe which caused the immediate death of a score of men without a moments warning and injured, some of them very seriously, nearly four times as many. It was as if the voice of God had said to us all "Prepare, prepare, while yet ye have the opportunity, to meet your God." In nearly every pulpit in Washington, last Sunday, the accident was referred to, and in several the entire sermon was devoted to bringing the sad lesson home to the people. It has been, and is still being discussed in every household in the city, the evidence now being taken by the coroner's jury and the military court of inquiry, which are trying to ascertain if any person was responsible for the awful accident, through having neglected seeing that proper precautions were taken in the making of an excavation under the building, serving to keep the matter prominently before the public.

It would seem to be difficult to select an occupation the followers of which would be in less danger from accidental death than that of a Government clerk, and yet, in one awful minute the falling floors of this old building carried twenty of them into the presence of God, wounded a large number and gave the remainder of the nearly 500 men employed in the building an experience that can never be forgotten by them. The people of Washington, who whatever their other faults are always generous to those in need or distress, are nobly responding to a call for contributions to aid the families of those who were killed, and already the total amount contributed exceeds $25,000 and is still growing rapidly. A number of them left large families entirely unprovided for.

Two of the texts from which sermons were preached on the disaster were so appropriate that I quote them. That of Rev. Dr. E. S. Todd, of Hanline church, was—"or those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them; think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall likewise perish."—And that of Rev. I. W. Cauter, of Mount Vernon Place Church, was—"Therefore be ye always ready, for ye know not the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." The last named began his sermon by impressively saying: "It was the voice of God speaking to us in admonitory accents."

In consequence of this accident and of the belief that one man is largely if not entirely responsible for the loss of the lives the meetings of the coroner's jury have been attended by great excitement and at one time there was actually danger that the National Capital would be disgraced by an attempt on the part of frenzied citizens to take the law into their own hands by making an attack upon that man, but fortunately wiser counsels of cooler heads prevailed. Owing to the large number of witnesses to be heard it may be a week before the inquest is closed and a verdict rendered.

There is at least one liquor seller in Washington who believes now, if he never did before, that the sins of fathers are visited upon their children. While this man was violating the laws of both God and man, by selling liquor on the Sabbath day, his 18 year old son, while drunk, engaged in a brawl which resulted in his death. This father's feelings may be imagined when he was informed, while in the dock of the police court the next morning, that his son was dead, murdered as a direct result of drinking the cursed stuff with which his father was constantly poisoning the sons of other men. If that father has a heart that is not entirely deadened to every ennobling emotion he must in that first moment of his fatherly grief have for once realized the dreadful evil of the traffic in which he is engaged. Would to God that such a realization of the evil they do could be, without the murder of a son, brought home to the conscience of every liquor seller in the world.

It seems to me that every year "children's day" in the churches is made more interesting. The day was observed in nearly all of the Methodist churches last Sunday.

At a meeting of the Sunday School Union of the District held Monday evening delegates were elected from the following denominations to the World's Sunday School Convention and the seventh International Sunday School Convention, which are to be held at St. Louis from Aug. 31 to Sept. 6, next: English Lutheran, Baptist, Protestant Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal and Christian.

The Misfortunes of Job.

NUMBER 3.

When nature frowns on a man, that man is inclined to grumble. It is very easy matter for a man to be contented and happy when he has no trouble to encounter, but dark days are the times when the most of people lose faith in God and begin to murmur.

"When the sky is bright and clear,
Any ship to port may steer."

But it the sentiment contained in the following stanza, which should fill the heart of every one:

"When all the sky is draped in black,
And beaten by tempestuous gales,
Thy shuddering bark seems all a wreck
Then trim again the tattered sails
To grim despair be not a pray,
Remember this will pass away."

Such were the feelings of Job. He did not give up in despair at what he conceived to be the work of God, but bore his severe and cruel losses bravely, trusting in God and believing that these evils and their effects would yield to better times. He did not think that he was to give his own body as material upon which foul disease were for a time to prey.

But there was a second meeting of the sons of God in heaven. God was there with them, and Satan transformed probably into an angel of light was there also. Satan went to that meeting for a purpose, and that purpose was to get permission to visit still more trouble on Job. Satan is to be admired for one thing. He is always the most persistent of beings in carrying out his plans. If human beings were half so energetic and enthusiastic as Satan there would be but few failures in human undertakings, provided those undertakings were right and proper. Yes, Satan was present in this second meeting, and drew out the following dialogue between himself and God "And the Lord said unto Satan, From whence comest thou? And Satan answered the Lord, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it. And the Lord said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil! and still he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movest me against him, to destroy him without cause. And Satan answered the Lord, and said, Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life. But put forth thine hand and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold he is in thine hand, but give his life. So Satan went forth from the Lord, well-pleased with what he had accomplished, and thinking that he had added one more soul to his regions of the damned.

There in his own home sat upright, innocent Job. His house wore the aspect of desolation. There were no youthful voices to cheer up the old hearth-stone. The clouds of sorrows hung gloomily over the highest hopes of his earthly life. His wife was the only one that had been left of his once happy household. And as he sat there he felt very badly. He had not lost confidence in God; he had not given up in despair; but he had the feelings of a man, a husband, and a father, and he could not keep from thinking over the past.

One day as Job was performing his daily duties he became sick. His skin gradually began to break out with sore boils. They were of little consequence at first, but in a short time they grew larger and sorer, until he could see no peace at all. It is a very great inconvenience for a man to have but one or two boils, and we may from, remembering this, imagine in what condition Job was. Seeing his pitiable condition and believing that all these troubles were a visitation of the divine hand and believing further that Job had done no wrong sufficient to justify such chastisement by God, she at once told him to curse God and die. But he was not so impetuous as his wife. He still believed that God was just, and that it was his duty to suffer patiently, so he told his wife that she spoke very foolishly indeed. To use his own words, he said to her, "What! shall we receive good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Job could not understand why he was called on to suffer so much, but still he did not desire to attribute any wrong motive to the Almighty, hence he concluded that God not only sent good things but also bad things upon us. This is not exactly our idea of God, but it was the only reasoning probably by which Job could in any way account for his condition. How bad it was that Job could not look into the future, and behold the outcome of his trials as we are permitted to behold them now. Do you suppose, that it would have been very hard for us to have endured without cursing God even if we could have known the out-come, and yet what a wonderful amount of faith must it have taken for Job to have endured it when he saw no other chance to end his grief and pain than to die.

Stir Up Your Gifts.

Stir up the gift that is in you. If God has given you a gift, it is for use, for exercise, for employment; and He would have it used for His glory and the good of your fellow-man. What is a sword good for if it rests in the scabbard? What is a lamp worth if it is never lighted? What is a seed worth if it lies stored away, and is never cast into the ground? What is wealth good for if it be clutched and hoarded? So any gift which God bestows on man, if allowed to remain unused, largely loses its value, and at last seems to fade out of existence. The gifts of the painter, the musician, the artist, the student, all must be exercised and stirred up or they will soon become of little worth. So "the gift of God," the power which the Most High bestows upon men, is for service, for exercise, for use, for blessing; and the Christian must stir up the gift of God which is within him, and so use that gift that it shall bring good to others and benediction from the Lord. — Armory.

Have you been reading "The Misfortunes of Job," by Prof. Herbert Scholz? If you have not do so.

Revs. W. S. Long, J. W. Wellons and P. T. Klapp were at the meeting of the Executive Committee of Elon College last week.

We ask the pardon of Rev. J. W. Hatch for the omission of his name in the write up of Elon College Commencement. He was there.

The honorary degree of D. D. was confirmed upon Rev. W. W. Staley of Suffolk, Va., by Union Christian College of Merom, Ind., in its Annual Commencement last week.

The commencement exercises of Turlington Institute, Smithfield, N. C., took place the 21st. Pres. John T. Crowell of Trinity College delivered the literary address, his subject was Self-Culture.

The basest decision of any court ever foisted upon a Christian people was that of chief justice Fuller last week that decided for open gates at the worlds fair on Sunday. We vote the exposition a failure.

Any person wishing notices, programs or anything else in next week's SUN will please have them in the office before Monday noon, for the SUN printers expect to take their regular Fourth of July vacation as usual this year, and matter for the next issue must be in early.

In the death of Rev. J. A. Sutton, M. D., which occurred at his home in Argos, Ind., June 12, 1893, of heart disease, the writer has lost an esteemed friend and brother, and the church a noble laborer, and the family of the deceased a loving and devoted father and husband. We sincerely sympathize with the family and relatives in their sad loss.—D. J. M.

Fourth Cardinal Principle.

Christian Character, or Vital Piety, is the Only Test of Fellowship, or Church Membership.

Ever since the time people began to multiply and spread themselves over the oriental world, they have had a disposition to organize into societies for mutual benefit. Man is a dependent being. He cannot thrive well without the aid of his fellows. This is clearly proclaimed in Rom. xiv. 7. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Before the deluge, we are told that men were divided into three classes, each class being formed by one man who spent his life in advancing its interests. The classes with their originators were as follows: (1) those who lived in tents and raised cattle—Jabal was their father; (2) those who manufactured all kinds of musical instruments and were gifted in using them—Jubal was their father; (3) and those who were workers in all kinds of metal, such as brass, iron, copper, etc.—Tubal Cain was their father. These three classes are supposed to have been firmly united in the bonds of union, and it is thought that they were loyal to their caste under all circumstances.

After the deluge, this same spirit of co-operation was seen again at the tower of Babel, and the confusion of tongues which took place there had the tendency to increase this spirit, because those who were found to speak the same tongue formed into companies and made settlements for themselves wherever they found suitable places for habitation. As time went on philanthropic societies were formed, and did a good work in advancing human welfare. It was during the reign of king Solomon, we are told, that a great and grand organization originated which has lived to the present day, and is now wielding a mysterious but elevating influence among all the nations of Christendom.

When Christ appeared on earth, his first work toward establishing his religion was the gathering of a few poor men about Him as his helpers in the cause. These men, with the exception of one, spent their lives in His service. They sat at his feet and learned the grand, stirring truths which were to be proclaimed to the world. They beheld Him when He performed the most wonderful of his miracles. Their three years' stay with Him fully impressed them with the sublimity of the mission to which they had been called. After his ascension they went to work to perfect the organization which He had begun. They gathered together all the people in Jerusalem who had embraced the Christian doctrine, and they organized them into a church.

It is not our purpose here to trace the history of the first church at Jerusalem and all those which were an out-growth of it, but simply to say a few words on the requisites necessary to membership in the church. The history of the church sets forth many vicissitudes of fortune, many changes in its ceremonies and creeds, and many evils perpetrated in its name. Every time the doctrines of Christ have been perverted to suit the conveniences of men, the church itself has suffered accordingly. The church was established by the apostles for the purpose of shedding a benign influence over its members and of strengthening them against the temptations of the world. This has been the object of the church at all times, and this is its object today. Every denomination of Christians have certain requirements which a candidate for membership must meet before admission into its organization is granted. Among orthodox denominations the essential requirements are the same, while the non-essential differ considerably. It is about the requirements which the Christian church holds as necessary to enable a person to become a member that we wish to speak.

Let us dissect the fourth cardinal principle as stated in the beginning of this chapter, and see if we can come to a clear understanding of what it really means.

The first two words are, Christian character. The word "Christian" means "pertaining to Christ." Character means "the sum of distinguishing qualities." Putting both meanings together, we have as a definition of Christian character, "the sum of distinguishing qualities pertaining to Christ." Hence, for a man to have a Christian character involves the idea that he must have a character like Christ. Let us notice some of the distinguishing qualities of Christ.

Christ was a social being. Christ was no recluse. He did not shut himself off from the people of the world. He mingled with them as freely as it was possible for him to do. He engaged in the conversation at the marriage feast as pleasantly as He did around the frugal board of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. There was no such thing as high society with Him. He regarded all as equals. The rich young man who came to Him by night, the poor widow whose son was dead, Zaccheus up the Sycamore, the harlot washing his feet with her tears—all received the same attention and were cheered, comforted and advised in the most kindly manner. He believed in being social and He laid the example for his followers.

Christ was a compassionate being. He knew all about the ills and cares of life, and whenever an opportunity presented itself to Him for relieving any one in suffering or distress, he was always willing and ready to offer his assistance. He healed the sick, opened the eyes of the blind, made the lame walk, released the maniac from evil spirits, raised the dead to life, and restored peace and serenity of mind to the troubled soul. The tale of sorrow and distress always had an attentive ear in him. He never listened to the sorrows of others without lending aid.

Christ was a forgiving being. He cherished no malice against any one. "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, pray for them who despitefully use you," were his words. When on the cross He hung, parched with thirst, tortured by the iron spikes through his hands and feet, weak from hunger, completely crushed by the load of sin which He was bearing for the world, even then, amidst the jeers of a brutal, blood-thirsty crowd, He lifted his eyes heavenward, and besought his Father to forgive them.

Christ was a pure being. He was pure not only in mind but also in body. Christ looked after the interests of his body. He kept it clean, took a proper amount of food, and no more. Whenever He became too weary to preach, he would retire to Mt. Olive and rest. He realized that a pure body was essential to a pure soul then. He was pure in mind. No mean, low thoughts passed his mind. The good, the true, and the beautiful were ever uppermost with Him. To deceive, to cheat, to steal, to lie were as opposite to his nature as the East is opposite to the West.

Christ was an industrious being. Thirty years were spent in preparation for his life work, but it took only three years to perform the work. And yet, how much He performed during that three years! No idle moments were passed. No time spent in brooding over the past, or in commiserating the future. But it was work, work, work, all the time. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," was his motto. The apostle John gives us some idea of the work Christ did when he tells us that he supposes all the books in the world at that time would not hold an account of Christ's deeds. Time was valuable with Him. He let none of it slip away unutilized, but every golden moment was employed.

Christ was a humble being. He loved his heavenly Father, the courts of heaven, the inhabitants of the earth—everything. It was love that brought Him from heaven, placed Him in a manger, caused Him to hunger forty days in the wilderness, to be tempted three times by the devil, to be arrested by a tumultuous mob, and to be crucified as a malefactor. It was the element of love within Him that did it. He gave his life for his friends. This love was the principle which set the world astir, and caused the powers of evil to totter and fall into oblivion. "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!"

Summing up the qualities which made up Christ's character we find he was social, compassionate, forgiving, pure, industrious and lovable. These are the qualities which constitute Christian character. These are the qualities which a man or woman must have to become a true member of the Christian church.

But perhaps some one may say that it is an impossibility for sinful man to become like Christ. Christ was perfect, without sin, while every man has sinned and fallen short of God's glory. This is true, and a few words of explanation may do much to enlighten and encourage.

It is not expected that we can possess a perfect Christian character, as Christ possessed it, because one that has sinned can never become as good as Christ who has never sinned. We cannot attain to God-head in goodness. But let us notice what it takes to bring about regeneration. Before the new birth takes place all sin of every nature must be given up. Not one sin of the smallest nature can be retained. All must go. A determination by the Almighty's help to live for Him and to do everything possible for Him in the future must be made. Implicit faith in God's promises must exist. Whenever a person reaches this point—is in this condition, at that moment he is regenerated, and when a person is regenerated every quality of character which Christ possessed also is bestowed on the regenerated being. His ruling purpose in life is changed, and his heart's desire is to live like Christ. Of course after a man is regenerated the habits which he has formerly acquired will still exist, and may sometimes cause him to sin, but there is a great difference in sinning wilfully and intentionally from sinning without having the desire to sin. Men who have contracted the habit of cursing will often curse unthoughtedly after reformation has taken place, but they do so from the force of long-indulged habit and not from desire. These bad habits have to be overcome after regeneration takes place, and it sometimes takes quite a time to accomplish the task. But the man himself may be good and true and pure within, even though he have constitutional defect to subdue without. Thus if a man has been regenerated, if his purpose in life is to gradually subdue the imperfections of the old man, and to develop the Christ like qualities of the new man, then he is a fit subject into the Christian church.

It is needless to dwell upon the words "vital piety" which alternate with "Christian character," because both terms are paramount in meaning. They cover the same ground. A man who has Christian character has vital piety; and a man who has vital piety has also Christian character. They are co ordinate terms and mean the same thing.

In conclusion we desire to say that he who has a true Christian character possesses the greatest, grandest blessing which an omnipotent creator is capable of bestowing. The man who has a Christian character possesses the richest jewel of the universe. He is made thereby a son of God. He becomes a brother to Jesus Christ. He has the promise from Christ the world is at his disposal to cheer and elevate with the grand doctrine of salvation. He has the power of developing that character into something remarkable for strength and wonderful for beauty. It will serve as a bulwork for him when the shafts of temptations shall fly, and as a source of consolation and help when troubles may come upon him. It a great privilege to be permitted to enjoy such a blessing, and he knows not what it is to be a Christian cannot appreciate the goodness of God, nor the blessings which are placed before him to enjoy in this life.

Not The Best.

What, is it not the best? The ministers of the Christian church centralizing at Elon College. And in entering this protest, we must not be understood as having any thing personal in the matter; for we have not. But we cannot believe that it is best for the church at large for so many of our preachers to locate at the College. And having the good of the cause at heart, we speak out in Christian love against it. Sare the College is a pleasant place at which to live; but the minister must consider other things as well as the pleasures of home life. The great question with every Christian should be, where can I do the most good?

In Different Places.

Second Sunday in this month, we filled our appointment at Youngsville, N. C., The congregations were of respectable size, and quite attentive. We are much pleased with the Youngsville people. We had a pleasant home Saturday night in the home of Bro. J. C. Winston, and was kindly cared for Sunday night by Brother W. T. Young. Monday we spent visiting and canvassing for the SUN, and the effort was not in vain.

Last Thursday and Friday were spent at Elon College with the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. The committee transacted much important business. Among other things chairs were ordered for the chapel. So when the students return they will find the chapel seated with beautiful chairs. While at Elon we visited several families, and spent one night pleasantly with Bro. J. D. Edwards.

Thursday night was spent with Bro. Fouville at Burlington. While there we visited the stores of Brethren Foster, Hall, W. C. Iseley, Sellars and the Burlington Furniture Co. These all seem to be doing a good business.

Elect one delegate for every thirty members of the school—provided no school has more than 4 delegates.

A Protest.

Let no more preachers go to Elon college to live, lest a tree should fall on two or three of them at one time. They are getting so thick up there that I am getting uneasy about them, lest they should not thrive well, and I fear the work will suffer on the border of the conference, and the R. R. company get a good deal of their pocket money. Bro. P. T. Klapp has a lovely home—beautiful house, well furnished and adorned with a loving wife and five sweet children more could I heart desire of this world? May the Lord give him a large number of spiritual children to adorn it in my prayer. He is a faithful minister of the word, and the world will never know his worth till he is gone. The proper estimate is seldom placed upon a zealous, fearless preacher of the world till his work is done. But on the other hand he is generally persecuted, but go on my brother they that would live godly in this present world must suffer persecution.

Suffolk Letter

Mr. W. G. Farrar and Miss Lena B. Beale were married last Wednesday afternoon at the residence of the bride's mother, the parlors being filled with friends. They were attended by Misses Ella Beale, Annie Farrar, Effie Beale, Ollie Beale and Messrs J. E. West and L. T. Dobie. Miss Luribee played the wedding march and Mr. Elmer Thomas the cornet accompaniment. The vows were taken under the sounds of sweet music, the fragrance of rarest flowers, and the best wishes of dearest friends. The presents were many, beautiful, and useful. The Christian church choir of which the bride was a member presented a beautiful silver pitcher properly inscribed. The happy couple left soon after the marriage for Washington, Baltimore, Luray and Natural Bridge. After this pleasant tour they will return to Norfolk where Mr. Farrar is engaged in business. The congratulations of many friends follow them, while the prayers of dear ones invoke divine blessings on their union.

Our Sabbath school enjoyed the annual picnic at Magnolia Springs last Thursday. The attendance was large, the day was perfect, and the enjoyment was without measure. Mrs. West of Waverly, Mr. Walter Gaskins, and Mrs. Mittee Ames, who had been present at Miss Lena's marriage, attended our picnic.

There is to be a free picnic in the grove at Antioch Christian church, in Isle of Wight county, Va., on the 4th day of July. Dinner will be served free, and R. Leigh C. Crumpler, of Suffolk will deliver a fine lecture. They anticipate a good time and cordial welcome will be extended to all who attend. Dr. Barrett preached there yesterday to a large congregation. They are making great improvements on their church building which will soon be completed. They have already appointed the 3rd Sunday in July for dedication. Dr. Barrett has just returned from Union Christian College Indiana where he delivered a course of lectures and was present at the commencement. He had a pleasant visit, and no doubt will tell the readers of the cordial and appreciative reception he had in the west.

Maj Sanders continues to decline with no hope of recovery. We have set apart second Sunday night in July to formally deliver license to J. W. Rawls and R. H. Peel who recently graduated from Elon College. Their licensure was ordered by our last conference. The ceremony will take place in the City Hall at the close of the services.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Happy greetings to you. And what does this long silence mean? I do not understand it. I have hunted up all sorts of excuses for your silence. I see in some other paper how the children write nice letters and send in lots of money. I don't see why our BAND is so negligent—I ought to say lazy, but that is rather a hard word.

Here is a puzzle for our bright little folks: You will find a book in the New Testament with only three chapters and in one of the verses this expression, teachers of good—." Let us see how many will give the missing word, and give book chapter and verse, in the next two weeks. Now hustle.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

PROVIDENCE, VA., JUNE 8, 1893!

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As it is raining, and I can't go to school, I will write, I wrote about a month ago, but didn't see my letter in the Corner, so I think it was either thrown in the wast basket or misplaced through the mail. We are not having the Corner so full now, but I am glad to see some letters in it. Most of the schools have closed now and I think the cousins will write oftener, but our school don't close until the last of this month. I will answer Bertie Wicker's question Moses made the tables of stone and the Lord wrote upon them. Am I correct? I will also ask a question: Who was the weeping prophet? I send one dime for the Band.

Lovingly,

ALLIE GIBSON.

ALLIE, we are glad to get your letter. Am sorry that your last letter was lost, for all we have received have been printed. Hope to hear from you again soon.

Dick.

BY M. CALLA MERRY.

"O mamma, Dick doesn't know!"

And Dick didn't know, for "Sweet, sweet, sweet," he sang from his ever-green embowered cage as blithly as if no question of vital importance to him had just been decided. Then, too, there was only a bit of blue sky visible from the window of the attic which Widow Vanberg and her son Archie called home; still the pet canary sang as tunelessly as if it were the broadest, bluest stretch of sky imaginable! Because of what he intended to do Archie felt as if this bird singing would break his heart. Mrs. Vanberg herself half turned her chair so that Archie might not see the tear that fell, in spite of herself, on the rich lady's garment she was trying to finish while the sunlight lasted. Archie could stand it no longer. Hastily snatching the bird cage and a box of bird seed he exclaimed, "I'm off for Jerry's, mother; it gets harder every day I wait." His mother sighed, and Archie thought, "How sorry mother is for me!" and little knew she was partly sorry for herself.

Only three short years ago she had brought Dick home to that tiny cottage where as a maiden she had played, as a wife and mother had toiled. There many and many a sunshiny day had he made brighter with his sweet songs. "Dick is my inspiration," Lawrence, her Lawrence, had said over and over again. And Lawrence with his sweet, thrilling tenor had wrapped men in ecstasies, had moved men to tears—generous, handsome, gifted Lawrence. But even to him death came, and the cottage was sold. Mrs. Vanberg and Archie were with a sister in New York city, and that sister too had died before another spring gladdened the earth. They had been obliged to part with everything except the barest necessities of life—everything but Dick. Dick was the one link which bound them to their past life. When Dick sang the dear old cottage bright with roses, the grassy terrace where Lawrence used to sit, and the little white church where Mrs. Vanberg was baptized and married all came back; and still as Dick sang they seemed oftentimes to see Lawrence, as was his wont, gazing at the bird as if he would read his very soul whence such music issued.

And yet Dick was Archie's. And the child wished to make the sacrifice. And really poor crippled Jerry did need him more than they. "He looked so wistful, mamma, when he said, 'How I wish I had a bird like yours, Archie.'" And her boy had had a look such as Lawrence always wore when actuated by some noble purpose. After that she could not have said no; and so Dick had gone out of one world with the sunset. Would he flash much brightness into the other still more cheerless, the sorrow-stricken lady wondered.

It had been a hard day with Jerry. Just as the last ray of sunlight struggled in at the basement window, worn out with pain, Jerry had dropped into a deep slumber that resembled death. Archie entered with his treasure, crossed the room, and hung the bird-cage on an old rusty hook, and still Jerry slept. After a few frightened flutters Dick seemed to understand; for he poured forth such a burst of melody as was never heard in that ally since the wildwood trees sheltered their native songsters. From the all-like houses the squalid inhabitants rushed to Jerry's to see the wonderful bird. Visions of a happy childhood bright with meadow brooks and wonder-bearing woods came before the country-born who had drifted into this miserable harbor, and to even the natives of this wretched ally, came a vague wish for something better. And still Jerry does not awaken. But look now. His lips are parted! His dark eyes sparkle brilliantly.

"O such sweet music! I must be in heaven!" exclaims the bewildered Jerry.

Archie laughs and says, "Why no, Jerry. It is only Dick. You may have him for your very own, and I'll run down every day and take care of him for you!"

"My very own! A real, live canary bird. O Archie! O Dick!" And between delight and surprise Jerry could get no farther in his thanks; but the most eloquent speech would hardly have meant more to Archie. Indeed, Mrs. Vanberg herself was scarcely more pleased than Archie.

And so the spring days passed away; and the look of pain on Jerry's face was fast giving place to a look of patient endurance. "I never tire of Dick, and we understand each other so well," Jerry confided to Archie more than once. And the cheering, softening influence reached beyond the little basement room, pervading the entire alley. In her heart Mrs. Vanberg felt that the sacrifice had paid; and thanked God that even the humblest may do some good.

One memorable evening Archie actually succeeded in getting his mother to go with him to see Dick and Jerry. What an evening that was! Mrs. Vanberg had worked a little harder for a week in order to spare the time. Archie had saved enough to buy an apple apiece and "one for the dish," and no menu on Fifth Avenue was ever served more proudly. And Dick of course sang one of his sweetest songs in lieu of an orchestra. That wasn't all, nor by any means the best, either Jerry seemed to be absent-minded, and, while he appeared happy, would gaze quite frequently towards the door. Archie thought perhaps the pain was worse, and tried to interest Jerry by telling about Uncle Raymond and his strange disappearance years ago. While he was in the midst of his story the door was suddenly opened by a silver-haired gentleman, who came towards his mother; when suddenly with the glad cry, "Raymond, Brother Raymond!" she was in his arms. Then followed long explanations of sickness, miscarriage of letters, sudden prosperity, and the long, long search for his sister and her child.

"And do you know I might never have found you but for Dick? You see I brought a little flower-girl who fainted away at her stand to let her home in the alley here, and, hearing Dick sing and catching a sight of Jerry's pale face against the tiny window, I was seized with a desire to know how a canary bird came here. So when Jerry told me that "Archie Vanberg, the best boy that ever he knew, gave him his own canary bird," I felt sure that Jerry's Archie was my nephew Archie. Jerry told me about this evening and together we planned this meeting. And now you must all come home into the new house I have just purchased—Jerry and all—and the sooner the better."

"Me? Why, I ain't your relation, mister. Though I'd like well enough to go."

"Yes, you, Jerry," laughed the old gentleman. "We want Dick, and Dick is yours, and so if we have him we must take you; don't you see! Besides, I think Archie deserves some reward for his generosity; don't you?"

But all Jerry could say was "O Archie!" and all Archie could say was "O Dick!" while in their heart of hearts Mrs. Vanberg and her brother both thanked God for the Christlike spirit that prompted Archie to give away Dick.—Boston Star.

Training the Memory.

The late Thurlow Weed had a wonderful memory. He retained faces, names, dates and facts. In answer to one who had asked him if he had ever done anything to strengthen his memory, Mr. Weed replied by giving an account of a method which had accomplished two things—it made his wife a confident, and it developed a surprising memory:

"I had to adopt a regular method, and I hit on one that was very effective I will tell you about it for the benefit of other young men. I got married in 1818, when I was working in Albany as a journeyman printer.

"In a few months I went into business, established a newspaper for myself, and some of my friends thought I was 'cut out for a politician'—that is, I probably impressed my views strongly on those about me.

"But I saw at once a fatal weakness. My memory was a sieve. I could remember nothing. Dates, names, appointments, faces—everything escaped me.

"I said to my wife: 'Catherine, I shall never make a successful politician, for I cannot remember, and that is a prime necessity of politicians. A politician who sees a man once should remember him forever.'

"My wife told me that I must train my memory. So when I came home that night I sat down alone and spent fifteen minutes trying silently to recall the events of the day.

"I could remember little at first; now I remember that I could not then remember what I had for breakfast. Finally, I found I could recall more. Events came back to me more minutely and more accurately.

"After a fortnight or so of this, Catherine said: 'Why don't you tell your business to me? It would be interesting, and my interest in it would stimulate you.'

"Then I began a habit of oral confession, as it were, which followed for almost fifty years. Every night, the last thing before retiring, I told my wife everything that I could recall that had happened to me or about me during the day.

"I generally recalled the very dishes I had for breakfast, dinner and tea; the people I had seen, and what they had said; the editorials I had written, and an abstract of them; the letters I had sent and received, and the very language used as near as possible; when I had walked or ridden—everything, in short, that had come within my knowledge.

"I found I could say my lessons better and better every year, and instead of growing irksome, it got to be a pleasure to run the events of the day in review.

"I am indebted to this discipline for a memory of somewhat unusual tenacity, and I recommend the practice to all who expect to have much to do with influencing men."—Selected.

God's Patience Toward Us.

It is inexhaustible so long as he sees in us a possibility of reform. We sin in thoughtlessness, and he bears with us. We sin deliberately, and he withholds his wrath. We sin repeatedly, and although the natural, inevitable consequences are not hindered from following, we experience no special token of divine indignation. We even may sin extravagantly, committing some excess of crime and placing ourselves among conspicuous sinners, yet his ears still will be open to our appeal of penitence. There is a point beyond which, if we pass it, we shall find his patience with us exhausted; but so long as there remains within a human heart the desire, even in the faintest degree, for a better life, God bears and forbears with it. Not even Omnipotence can compel it, but the all-wise and all-loving One seeks to allure and encourage it to turn from evil unto him.

This practically boundless patience is due to the fact that God is God. He who is our Creator remembers that we were not consulted as to whether we wished to be born, and that our natures are largely inherited and previously determined for us. He who is our Father loves and pities, and is eager to help us. He who orders even the fall of the least understands perfectly and makes all necessary allowance for the force of our temptations. He who knows by his own sorrowful human experience as the Redeemer of men how hard it is to live as we ought, is filled with a yearning sympathy for every one of us when we blunder or sin, which makes it easy for him to be patient with us when we should have little patience with one another. The divine patience toward us is one of the supreme, fundamental, and most precious and trustworthy facts which we ever learn.

But, and equally, because it is the patience of God, it may not be trifled with too far. There is a point at which the divine dignity and self-consistency and the good of mankind require forbearance to cease. He who willfully persists in wickedness, or even in that mere neglect of God which, because it is negative rather than positive, he does not believe culpable, must take the consequences at last. There is nothing more sublime in its long suffering tenderness than the patience of God with the incorrigible sinner; but it never degenerates into weakness. It must be one of the bitterest sources of remorse to know that one has desisted, or even been indifferent to, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The fish tint is perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid," by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

The Sunday Closing Question at Chicago.

Sunday closing at the Fair is still an open question. It would be a singular fate if it should not be closed while the Exposition lasts. Those in favor of Sunday opening have certainly managed their case with great persistency. In their determination to overcome all opposition—moral, legal, religious—they have been singularly energetic. Knowing that application was to be made to the United States Court for an injunction to close the Fair on Sunday, they applied to the State court for an injunction to prevent Sunday closing, hoping to bring about a conflict between the courts in case the decisions should not agree. The United States Court having given last week a decision against them they were ready with an appeal, and succeeded on Saturday morning in obtaining from Chief Justice Fuller, who is to preside in the Court of Appeals, a supersedeas, which allowed the Fair to be opened on Sunday last. The appeal is to be heard on next Thursday, and doubtless the injunction will be suspended until the decision of the higher court is given. These delays in the settlement of the question are vexatious. As the managers evidently mean to fight against Sunday closing as long as they have anything to contend for in the courts there is nothing for it, of course, except for the Federal Government, through the District Attorney, to oppose them point by point.

The decision of the United States District Court, last week, on the application of the United States District Attorney that an injunction should be issued to the directors to compel them to close the gates on Sunday was what everybody ought to have expected. The act of Congress making the appropriation on the condition that the Fair should be closed on Sunday was so plain and simple that under ordinary circumstances no one would have assumed to misunderstand it. Two of the three judges are quite clear that Congress had a right to make such a condition, and that the directors in accepting the money legally bound themselves to observe it. It will be remembered that the National Commission, in accepting the money, voted to close the Fair on Sunday. Then the Local Directory adopted a rule opening the gates on Sunday. This rule, in the opinion of the court, has no legal status, and does not supersede that of the National Commission, which has not been repealed.

On the point raised by the counsel of the Local Directory that the United States has no jurisdiction over Jackson Park was tendered to the Jackson Park, the court holds that Federal Government and was accepted by Congress, and hence is lawfully under Federal jurisdiction. It, therefore, decided that an injunction should be issued.

The court also disposed of other questions which have been long in controversy. The action of Congress in diverting something like a half-million dollars of its appropriation to the payment of expenses of juries of award, was a violation, it was argued, of the contract, on the part of Congress itself, so that the directors were under no obligation to comply with the Saturday closing condition.

The court treats this as a fallacious argument, and holds that Congress, in retaining or diverting the half-million dollars, did no more than it had a right to do, in view of the fact that the national honor was involved. There was one other point made, and that was that Congress, in the Sunday closing provision, violated the Constitution of the United States and set up a religious test. The court dismisses this point with observation that the question of observing Sunday as a rest day is not a religious question as viewed by the Government. It is a day of rest, and is needful for humanity to recover from the strain of six days' labor.

It is founded on humanity and not on religious creeds.

The decision of the court commends itself not only to those who are in favor of Sunday closing on principle, but even to many of those who would like to see the Fair open. There is a moral question at the bottom of it, and a great many who would not object to Sunday opening, if the way were clear, do not think that the Fair corporation ought to be guilty of a dishonorable act in order to keep it open. It would seem to be plain enough that the corporation ought either to observe the conditions or return the money. As a matter of fact, they propose to do neither. Whether Congress had or had not a right to attach such a condition to the appropriation, certainly the corporation had no right to receive it if it could not comply with the conditions on account of legal or other difficulties. We do not see how any other conclusion can be reached except by a resort to sophistry. We are sorry indeed that the question has taken this phase. We are sorry indeed that the corporation should be found contending for a dishonorable proposition. We hope that an ultimate decision will be reached in the Federal courts at an early day and that it will be such as to vindicate the honor of the nation.—Independent.

A Life of Joy.

"How that man or woman is to be pitied who has no joy that others cannot take away, whose life, to its innermost stronghold, is open to the tread of alien feet! It is dreadful to have no joys of which the world cannot rob us, to have all our happiness, the deepest and most sacred, within the reach of human or earthly depiling. Yet there are many people of whom this is true. They have no inner sanctuary of life which is beyond the reach of intrusion, which no foot can invade, which no hand can desecrate. But if we are friends of Christ, our heart's joy should be untouchable. Our property, our loved ones, our health, may be taken away, and all earthly sources of happiness despoiled; but deep within, untouched and untouchable, the joy of Christ still and ever abides.

"This is the ideal Christian life. It is possible to every one—the weakest the most exposed, the most sorely troubled—possible, but possible only in Christ. There is no self-sufficiency in us which will give it to us. The dream of self-culture may be most radiant, but it is only a dream; it never can be realized. All that self alone can build up may be destroyed. The fairy palace of self-sufficiency which one may pile up can be nothing more than a house built upon the sand, which the floods will sweep away. But when we have Christ in our heart, we have a life which no one can touch, whose joy lives on, sweet, calm and serene, amid all earth's strifes and trials.

"There is the life every one should seek to live. We should not carry our joy where any earthly experience can destroy it, but where it will be safe from whatsoever might quench it. It is impossible to estimate the power for good, in this sad, struggling life, of a bright, glad, shining face.

"Of all the lights you carry in your face, Joy shines farthest out to sea."

"One of the best things any of us can do for this world is to show ever a victorious life of joy, a face that shines even through rents, a beauty of the Lord which glows with radiance even in the night. That is the life the Master wants every follower of His to live; and we can live it, too, if our life is truly hid with Christ in God.—Rev. J. R. Motter, D. D.

There is an ancient fable which tells us that while Noah was planting the vineyard, the Devil approached him and inquired what he was doing. "Planting a vineyard," replied Noah. "Hum!" granted satan, "what's the use of a vineyard?" To which Noah gave answer that "its fruit is sweet and good, and its wine gladdens the taste." Whereupon satan, seeing here a good chance for speculation, proposed that they work it on shares, which was agreed upon, and immediately the devil brought a lamb, lion, hog and a monkey, and mingled their blood with the soil. Therefore, if a man eats only of the fruit of the vineyard, he is as innocent as a lamb; if he drinks wine, he imagines himself a lion, and falls into mischief; if he drinks habitually, he becomes as selfish and unmannerly as a hog; if he gets drunk, he jabbars and jumps about, and is silly and nasty, like a monkey.—Sacred Heart Review.

Nellie's Gift.

"Did you ever want anything awful bad and then have it come? Then you know how I felt when the package came from auntie in New York, and I opened it and found a pair of real silk mitts. Jack said they were just 'splendorific,' and Jack's my brother, and he knows. I had wanted some for ever so long, but I didn't say much about it, 'cause when you live in a little cuddled-up house, and your papa has to buy bread and shoes for so many, the money flies away before it gets around to what little girls want.

"I don't know how auntie found it out unless Santa Claus told her, and it wasn't near Christmas time, either. They were such pretty brown mitts. Tilly Jones said they were just the color of my hands, but I didn't care for that. Little hands will get brown when they weed the garden and do so many things. I looked at them 'most a hundred times in two days, I guess, and then it came Sunday. Wasn't I glad! I put them on and walked to church, just so. Jack said I held my paws like a scared rabbit, but I didn't ever see a rabbit with mitts on.

"It isn't right to think too much about what you wear when you go to Sunday school, and by and by I didn't, for we had such a good Sunday-school I forgot everything else. A missionary man told all the folks about some poor children away off; how the fire had burned down their school-house, and they hadn't any nice houses, or clothes, or anything, but they were trying so hard to get along and learn; and he said what was given to those little ones was just the same as giving to Jesus. Think of that! Just the same as giving to the dear Christ child. I supposed everybody would give. Why, some of the folks are worth as much as $10, or $100, and yet that basket stayed 'most empty.

"I did wish I was rich, and all at once I remembered the poor widow in the Bible. I'd read it that very morning, how she had given her two mitts, every living mitt she had; it said so. So I slipped mine off and dropped them into the basket, and I was glad if my throat did choke up. But pretty soon, when the basket was carried up, the gentleman picked them right out. 'Has any little girl lost her gloves?' Nobody said anything, and he asked again, Did any little girl drop her gloves in the basket by mistake? It was awful still in that room and I thought he was looking right at me, so I had to say something. 'It wasn't a mistake,' I told him; 'I wanted to help and poor widow woman in the Bible gave her two mitts, and so—' Then those folks just shouted, they did! and I felt as if I'd like to drop right down through the floor.

"I knew I had made some dreadful blunder, but I couldn't see what, for if m-i-t-t-s don't spell mitts, what does it spell? 'Course I cried, but my teacher put her arms around me and whispered, 'Never mind, little Nellie,' and she stood up and said, with her voice all trembling, 'Dear friends, this little girl has given her greatest treasure; have we older ones done as much?' Some way, the money just poured into the basket after that, and the missionary looked gladder and gladder. They brought my mitts back to me, and my teacher said she would show me how to get some money to give. But oh, how full that basket was! And when that gentleman counted it his eyes grew all wet, and he said softly, (though I didn't know what he meant), 'A little child shall lead them.'"

There is Room.

What a glorious declaration is this in regard to the gospel! There is yet room. Millions have been saved, but there is room. Millions have been invited, and have come, and have gone to heaven,—but heaven is not yet full. There is a banquet there which no number can exhaust; there are fountains which no number can drink dry; there are harps which other hands can strike; and there are seats there which others may occupy. Heaven is not full, and there is room. The Sabbath-School teacher may say to his class, There is yet room; the minister of the Gospel may go and say to the wide world, There yet is room. The mercy of God is not yet exhausted; the blood of the atonement has not lost its efficacy; heaven is not full. What a sad message it would be if we were compelled to go and say, "There is no more room, heaven is full. No other is invited. No other can be saved. No matter what their prayers, or tears, or sighs, they cannot be saved. Every place is filled; every seat is occupied!" But thanks be to God, this is not the message we are to bear; and if there yet is room, come, sinners young and old, and enter into heaven. Fill up that room, that heaven may be full of the happy and blessed. If any part of the universe is to be vacant, oh, let it be the dark world of woe! —
Albert Barnes.

In the United States there are 32,000,000 men and 31,000,000 women. Men are in the majority in all States and Territories, except in the District of Columbia, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, North Carolina, Maryland, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, South Carolina, Virginia, and New Jersey, in which there are more women than men. The District of Columbia has the largest proportionate excess of female population, and Montana contains the largest percentage of men. Which Way do You Lean?

"If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall lie?" Eccles. xi. 3.

The tree will not only lie as it falls, but it will also fall as it leans; that is, we shall go after what we are inclined to—is not that so?—which makes it all in all to us what the bent of our mind is.

Twenty years ago there were two boys in my Sabbath-school class, bright, lively fellows, who interested me very much, only one of them made me sometimes feel anxious. I often found him out evenings in company with young rowdies. When I asked how it happened, he used to say he was only out on an errand: the boys spoke to him, and he could not help their speaking he was sure. Perhaps that was so, still it made me uneasy. I once said to his mother: "is not Willie out nights too much?" "Willie out nights! Oh no; Willie does not go out nights." Was I mistaken then?

The other boy whose name was Arthur, I never met among the rowdies. His evenings, I am sure, were spent at home. I always found him studying his lessons, or reading with his sisters, or amusing himself at home.

That was twenty years ago. Both boys had begun to show which way they were leaning, and how their tastes inclined them. Twenty years will show it plainer.

The other day I heard of Willie. Somebody met him in Chicago "What is he?" I asked. "A good-for-nothing, certainly, if not worse," was the answer, "a shabby, idle, drinking fellow, whom nobody wants to employ."

"Oh, I am sorry to hear it—sorry, but not surprised. I wonder where Arthur—is!"

"Arthur! Why didn't you know he has just been taken into partnership with the old firm he served his time with? They could not spare him, so they had to take him in."

"Good!" I said, "good! It is just what I should have expected. He leaned right as a boy."—Selected.

New Hope Institute.

Notwithstanding the fact that Prof. A. P. Fuquay's friends in the East have repeatedly heard of his success here in Alabama yet we feel sure they will not object to another repetition of such news. His advent among us last Nov., marks the beginning of a new era in the history of the school at New Hope.

For several years the patrons have thought that their's might be made the hanuer country school of Chambers Country, and it is believed that this hope is now being realized. Many of our schools are in a chaotic state, but Prof. Fuquay by his skilful management has succeeded in evolving order out of chaos. We are not quite sure that there is another country school in this portion of the state that is in a better condition than his. He has succeeded, in a very eminent degree, in securing the active co-operation of both pupils and patrons. The parents and children not only respect, but love him. This gives him a lever power by which he is enabled to lift a weight that few of his fellow teachers can move. The teacher who only secures the formal respect of his school without the love, may accomplish some good, but he can never achieve consummate success.

Prof. Fuquay's sickness last fall, coming at the opening of the term, was a severe blow to his school, by the faithfulness of his highly esteemed assistant, Rev. Geo. D. Hunt, the ship was again able to take his place at the helm.

The Prof. spent a day with me recently. He informed me that the outlook for the summer term is very flattering. He is expecting several students from a distance. His enrollment will probably exceed a hundred. Arrangement are being made to ceil and paint the school building. The patrons also speak of erecting a dwelling for their teacher. By this you will understand that they have no notion of allowing their prisoner to escape at the close of the present year. The loss of Prof. Fuquay at this time would prove a calamity that New Hope can ill afford to bear. New Hope Institute needs him; Chambers County needs him; yea, Alabama needs him! If North Carolina has any more pedagogical sons of his caliber that she can possibly spare we petition her to send them to Ala., and we will thank her heartily for her sacrificing generosity.

In conclusion we would say that there is a grand work at New Hope Institute for Prof. Fuquay, and if he can be blessed with health and the unanimous support of his patrons we believe he will perform it. Let them retain him for five year, at least.

Virginia Valley.

It is now harvest, the harvesters and mowers can be heard from early morn until the last rays of day have vanished. Wheat and grass are the principal crops. There are some stock farms where they raise nothing else. The farmers are much depressed owing to the low price of wheat which is lower than has been known for many years from 62 to 71 cents per bushel.

A trip down the Shenandoah valley at this season of the year would be a treat to a person who has never seen the Valley. As the wind vibrates the golden grain, it reminds one of the ebb or flow of the waters of the ocean. Rev. Sam P. Jones is conducting a meeting in Winchester, there was an excursion last Sunday, some went from here and was highly pleased both with his sermon and the ride down the Valley.

At four o'clock p. m., the fourth Sunday of May, we baptized seven persons by immersion in Linville Creek at Edom, a large crowd were in attendance. Rev. P. H. Fleming preached for us at Antioch the second Sunday of this month I heard his sermon highly complimented.

The third Sunday of this month I preached at Bethlehem to a large and attentive congregation, at four p. m. we met at Smith Creek near Bro. John G. Martz's and baptized four persons three by immersion and one by pouring. Monday I visited two sick persons Mr. John Harrison who was suffering much from rheumatism, and Bro. Abram Rosenberger who has been suffering for some time with cancer. In conversation with him he said he did not think he could live longer than fall but said he felt ready to go. O is that not worth every thing to be ready to go. "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest." Job 3:17. He asked me to read a lesson and after the lesson we bowed in prayer with this dear family. It is both a pleasure and an encouragement to a pastor when visiting his members to see them go and get the Bible and ask him to conduct family service, it looks like they appreciate his visit. A family who do not hold service only when the preacher comes cannot be a happy family. They may have a place where they eat and lay down to sleep but it is not a home. Mary would not go home without Jesus.

Leaving Bro. Rosenberger's at eight p. m. I arrived at home at 11.55 next morning. I learned that Mr. John Bowman was dead and they had sent for me to preach the funeral. I went to Antioch and there met a large congregation of relatives and friends with sad hearts and weeping eyes. Rev. Mr. Taylor of the Baptist church assisted in the service. Last Thursday Mrs. Bowman sent for me to talk with her husband. I read and prayed with him and asked if he could not trust the Savior he said yes I would give everything to be saved and then said he felt he could and did trust him. May we all be ready when we are called.

Rev. J. Wallace Rawls filled Bro N. G. Newman's appointment at Holy Neck yesterday. The brother's effort was well received. We are glad to see our young men putting on the gospel harness just as soon as they are out of college. This is commendable and shows their devotion to Christ.

Bros. Thomas Haslett and Ethelred Holland of Holy Neck and this writer have all had the misfortune of losing a valuable horse each. The writer's was a family favorite, a beautiful spotted animal with excellent qualities.

Our Children's Day exercises comes off the 2nd Sunday in July. Public invited. Rev. Roger Charnock of Berkley is expected to preach for us next Sunday—quarterly meeting. Mr. Eliska E. Lee and Willis J. Lee of Berea, Nansmond were up at Capt. P. H. Lee's yesterday. The former to see his brother and the latter to see his father. He can be up a little.

June 18, 1893

Yesterday was a lovely day, and we had a large inspiring congregation at Holland. Bro. Charnock came up "in the fullness of the gospel of Christ" and fed us "with the sincere milk of the word," and all hearts were made glad on account of his coming. Bro. Winbourn came up with him and assisted in the music. We had dinner on the ground and quite a number remained for our mission meeting in the evening, and the congregation was increased by many others coming, till we had quite a crowd. Bro. Charnock gave us a short, but excellent talk on missions. Our collection was good and we feel that "one day at the Lord's house was better than a thousand" in idleness or sin.

Attending the fair.

Bishop J. H. Vincent is credited by the papers with saying, in his sermon at Grace Methodist church, last Sunday: "I haven't gone so far as to say that if the fair is open on Sundays I will not attend week days. I have some common sense left. The people who say such things forget that they must come to Chicago on the cars of companies that run there Sundays." The words, "must come on the cars that run on Sundays," express just the difference between Monday patronage of the fair and of the railways, both being Sabbath breakers. One is compelled on Monday to use the Sabbathbreaking railway, or stay at home. No one can say that a man "must see the fair." Citizens must utilize the postal service, even if it does necessary work on Sunday. The railway and mail alternative operate 365 days in every year. The fair alternative is presented for half a year, at long intervals. It would appear that our Bishop has used an unsound argument at an inopportune time.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE PULPIT.

The Joy for Which Christ Endured the Cross.

BY REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross. Heb. 12:2.

Mighty works and great efforts come from different causes, and blended motives—from inner and outer considerations. Men work hard and endure great hardship to acquire money and win renown. The motive that inspires them is two-fold—outer display and inward joy that these things will bring them. "Paradise Lost" was not written for money, but for the relief of the poet's own soul. Money never entered his mind. His soul was full of the subject and he must give it utterance. The beautiful Cathedral of Cologne was the work of pure devotion. Washington gave his service to his country not for the salary he received, but for the good of the country. It was for joy that would come to him from the freedom and prosperity of his country that he gave himself to her service. The death of Christ was an act of joy bestowed without the prospect of outer reward. It was not for any enhanced glory in heaven that he endured the cross, for he existed in heaven and enjoyed a glory with the Father before creation. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." "And he is before all things, and by him all things consist." "Who living in the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high." Thus we see that it was not for any throne in heaven that he endured the cross. Before the telescope scanned the heavens the universe existed in the mind of Christ, and was called into being by the word of his power.

Now what was this joy that was set before Christ? This is an important question, for we as Christians must be inspired by the same joy. This joy we find not only in the Scriptures, but in our own inner consciousness. Christ is in us, not because of hereditary, environment, or our own cultivation; but he is in us by his truth and spirit. We reflect his character as the dew drop reflects the rays of the sun.

There is a sweet joy in self consecration to a noble work. There is a joy in it for its own sake, and the enrichment which it brings to a life that is courageously taken up from which we shrink. When we willingly give ourselves to that which is hard it elevates and enriches our better nature, and brings the highest joy to the soul. When a man from a sense of duty growing out of love for his country buckles on his armor, accepts the hardships, and braves the dangers of the march, the camp, and the battlefield in her defense it inspires his soul with joy. A minister dressing the wounds of a soldier found that he had been shot through the eyes and the bridge of his nose, and that his sight was entirely gone. "Poor fellow," said he, "this is hard," "yes it is hard; but I would go through it all again for my country replied he sightless hero. Consecration and self sacrifice to the highest interests of his country brought peace and joy to his soul. He had joy in himself that he gave himself for the salvation of his country, so Christ had joy in himself that he gave himself for the redemption of the world. This spirit of consecration to the great work of saving men inspires the soul of the Christian with the sweetest and purest joy.

There is joy in self-renunciation and supreme self-sacrifice. The noblest spirits know that this is the real exhilaration of life. The wife who devotes herself to ministering to her husband, whose life is fading away, the mother to the child, and the child to the parent, the miner going down into the fire damp to save the lives of his comrades, and the martyrs going to the stake with songs of jubilee realize the sweet joy that flows from self-sacrifice for the good of others. This is the joy that he sets before us. There is no purer joy than this, and it lifts a man above all sordid selfishness, and he finds his happiness in love and work for his fellow men. There is joy in beneficence. When a man can save a family of helpless children from starving to death by furnishing them with food it fills his soul with joy, and he thanks God for the privilege. When we can, by our influence, help those who are in moral peril, and lift them up to a higher life, there is joy in it. This love and beneficent work enlarges a man's soul, lifts him to a higher plain of life, and makes him more Christ like. Love of money, the pride of life, and worldly ambition, narrow the soul, and make men mean and selfish. Satan tried to tempt Christ into such a life, but with holy indignation he turned away, and said, "get thee hence, Satan." Christ found joy in lifting men up out of the degradation of sin, and making them Godlike. Howard, the noble philanthropist, found richer and sweeter joy in his work of benevolence than Jay Gould did in the possession of his millions, or Cesar in his greatest achievements on the field of battle. The joy resulting from the diffusion of blessings to all around us is the purest and sublimest that ever entered the human soul, and can only be conceived by those who have experienced it. Next to the consolations of divine grace, it is the sweetest and surest balm to the miseries of human life. There is nothing more elevating, nor that will bring greater happiness to the human soul than working for the highest good of our fellow men. It awakens our better nature, and enriches the soul. Paul said to his Corinthian brethren, "Great is my boldness of speech toward you, great is my glorying of you: for I am filled with comfort, I am exceedingly joyful in all our tribulations." He suffered these tribulations for their sake, and found his peace and comfort in the good that came to them through his trials and afflictions. Hence he said, "And whither we be afflicted it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation."

There is the joy of revelation. Christ says. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest, that they are wrought of God." The universe is built on the plan of bringing every thing to life. We see this when the blossom on the tree reveals itself in the fruit, so in the government of God every thing tends to revelation. God delights in the revelation of himself. He reveals his wisdom, power and love in all nature. The beautiful flower, the blossoming tree, the ripening harvest, and the fertile earth are all revelations of God. The morning breeze and the evening zephyr whisper to us of his love, and the heavens declare his glory; but he never fully revealed himself until he revealed his Son. He had manifested himself in nature, in law, in conscience and holiness, but in the deepest secrets of his character, in self-forgetfulness for others in love for those who were not even his friends, he had not shown himself till the advent of his Son. Christ for the first time in the history of the world revealed the glory of God in the tenderness and sweetness of his love. Thus every pure minded man loves to reveal the spirit that is in him, not for admiration, but in contrast with the evil minded who hide themselves. There is pure, sweet joy in coming to the light of truth and love, and revealing it in our lives.

There is joy in success. Christ had this joy. When he came and gave himself a sacrifice for the redemption of the world an angel would have said that it was impossible to save the world. The earth was in despair. The nations were sitting in the shadow of death, and the darkness of ignorance and sin covered the earth. It was ruled by ruffians, and the valleys swam in blood. It was devoured by armies, and pierced with lust. It was impossible to lift such a world to God. Yes, it was impossible for an angel, but Christ could do it. He triumphed over death, hell and the grave, and the earth has been growing lovelier ever since. Every thing is more inviting. It is through regenerated men that the earth is to be prepared for the coming of the King, and this great work is progressing triumphantly. Christ "must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. The prophet in looking through the coming ages, saw Christ's triumphant march in his conquest of the world, and he exclaims: "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bazzrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength?" The answer comes back, "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save." To his trembling disciples he said: "Because I live, ye shall live also." "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead; yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." In the end when he hath gathered all the redeemed home to heaven his banners of peace shall shine in majesty around the throne.

The latest for North Carolina is an organized Society for committing murder, for dispensing sorrow, grief, hunger and wretchedness. This Society is being organized all over the State and now has several thousand members. The courts protect it for it feeds the courts it has branches in nearly every town, and when a murder is committed the responsibility is shifted onto some one else. This gigantic murder mill is the "North Carolina Liquor Dealers Association." Members of the Church of God, we call on you of all denominations, for our purposes and aims are the same. Gather yourselves together in a phalanx and fight the dread demon of destruction. Arise and shake thyself for "the Philistines be upon thee."—N. C., Baptist.

POETRY.

Plenty of Time.

Plenty of time—plenty of time!
O what a foolish and treacherous chime!
With so much to see, and so much to be taught,
And the battle with evil each day to be fought;
With wonders above us, beneath, and around,
High sages are seeking to mark and expound;
With work to be done in our fast passing prime,
Can ever there be for us "plenty of time?"

Our schooling at most lasts a few score of years,
Spent in sunshine and shadow, in smiles or in tears;
While none are equal, how'er they be classed,
And judgments too often are faultily passed.
'Twixt eternity past and its future to stand
Like a child sea-surrounded on one speck of land,
There to work out the duties that make life sublime,
Oh, surely there can not be "plenty of time!"

The Right Will Right Itself

When overcome with anxious fears,
And moved with passion strong,
Because the right seems losing ground
—And everything goes wrong,
How oft does admonition say:
"Put trouble on the shelf;
Truth will outlive the liars' day,
And right will right itself!"

By all the triumphs of the past,
By all the victories won,
The good achieved, the progress made
Each day, from sun to sun;
In spite of artful ways employed
By perfidy or polf
Of one thing we can rest assured,
The right will right itself!

Unshaken in our faith and zeal,
'Tis ours to do and dare,
To find the place we best can fill,
And serve our Maker there;

For he is only brave who thus Puts trouble on the shelf,
And trusts in God, for by His aid
The right will right itself.

The New Baby.

There came to port last Sunday night
The queerest little craft,
Without an inch of rigging on;
I looked and looked, and laughed,
It seemed so curious that she Should cross the unknown water
And moor herself right in my room;
My daughter, O my daughter!

She has no manifest but this,
No flag floats o'er the water,
She's too new for the British Lloyds—
My daughter, O my daughter!

Ring out, wild bells, and tamed ones too!
Ring out the lover's moon!
Ring in the little worsted socks!
Ring in the bib and spoon!

Ring out the Muse! Ring in the nurse!
Ring in the milk and water!
Away with paper, pen, and ink—
My daughter, O my daughter!

SELECTIONS.

The Church Paper, and How to Circulate it.

My work on the above topic is cut out for me. The editor does not want any of my "theories," but my "experience." How does he know that I have no "theories" that are worthy of his paper? But cheerfully I give my experience on one of the most important collateral duties of the pastor. I did not dream, when I was making the historic experience, that I would so often hear of it and be asked to give the repetition of it.

I did have large success in securing subscribers to the church papers within whose patronizing territory I was pastor for twenty-five years. I believe the church paper my best and most effective assistant pastor. I believe any other paper displacing the Herald or the Advocate (according to my locality) to be undermining of Methodists intelligence and loyalty of the members of my church. Hence, to circulate the church papers became a conviction, a passion, a joy. I felt it a duty, a part of my legitimate pastoral work, as much as the conversion of souls and the building up of the saints in holy living. Yes, I conceive it to be a strong reinforcement in effecting these results. Hence I threw my brains, soul, tact, and enthusiasm into getting subscribers for the paper. I worked for it as I did for a revival, and on the same ground—that it was necessary to the highest success of my pastorate. And it was.

If you want it in a nutshell—I worked to get subscribers with all the tact and enthusiasm I could if I owned the paper and received all the profits. There you have it. I was a partner in the concern. I received my dividends in a more intelligent and devoted membership. The modus operandi was as follows:

1. I took the paper into the pulpit. I opened it wide and showed it to the people. I expatiated upon its beauties, its benefits, its departments, its necessity to any member who would be an intelligent Methodist and know the current history of his church. I warned with my theme and exhorted. I appealed to their loyalty. I exoriated the disloyalty that dropped the church papers and took outside papers, especially if they were cheap. I told of the bread they were taking out of the mouths of hungry supernumerates, widows, and orphans of our church, to put money in the coffers of outside publishers. I portrayed the fact that the paper was worth five cents a week all it cost—to any family in the prepared exposition of the Sunday-school lesson. I swept the whole key-board of incentive to take the paper. Then when the iron had been made hot by striking, I struck to weld it by taking subscribers on the spot! I got all I could on Sunday as a religious work. I used blank cards often in the pews. I nailed their ears to the paper with a pencil.

2. I followed up this bombardment from the pulpit by a renewed attack at closer range in the prayer-meeting. I repeated this effort in the prayer meeting at intervals. I always gained some at the close of a warm prayer-meeting.

3. I next put a clean copy of the paper in my pocket, and started on my pastoral visitation each afternoon. By this time I had made a list of all who ought to take the paper, but had not subscribed. With this list and the paper in my pocket, I began sharp-shooting at close range. I went to the house, the store, the shop, the factory. I pulled out my paper and my list. I submitted the question. Most surrendered at once when thus individually appealed to. The few that hesitated I stayed with till they "saw a great light" and subscribed! Only here and there an obtuse or stingy soul escaped.

4. There were always a few poor people who could not afford to take the paper. On Christmas or New Year's I would state this fact to the public congregation and ask the well-to-do to send a Christmas or New Year's gift to these poor, that would come every week in the year. This always met with a quick response.

5. At the close of the revival each year I appealed to all new converts to take a church paper. I explained the benefit, and urged on them the duty of taking a church paper, as they were now to be Methodists.

6. Finally, I attend to this work personally. I no more allowed some indigent woman or aged preacher to do this for me. When I found such agent (appointed by a predecessor for the revenue he got out of it), I always relieved him or her, and gave back the commissions quadrupled.

This is my "experience." It fills me with joy to recall it. Hallelujah! It was good work for Christ. There is no patent on the experience. I ask no "royalty" on its use. It would be a good thing if the general conference would pass a regulation that no person should be appointed a member of the official board who does not take a church paper.—J. O. Peck, in Zion's Herald.

Modern Dangers For Young Christians.

Never was there a time in the history of the Christian church when its youth were subjected to more insidious and overpowering dangers than at the present time. The whole atmosphere of modern life is charged with the poisonous vapors of a decaying conception of religion and of ethics, which cannot but prove most unhealthful to young minds, unless counteracted by some new and truer conceptions of the soul's relations to God, truth, and righteousness. The flippant materialism of the age, its too ready repudiation of sacred or even conventional standards of life and thought, and above all its confident assurance of the primacy and infallibility of human reason on the great questions of life and death, are subtly dangerous influences when brought to bear on the minds of thoughtful young men and women both in and out of the church.

We must recognize the fact that the summary disposal of creeds, conventions, long established church traditions and regulations, and the whole modern theological house cleaning operation which has raised so much dust in these days, tends at least to confuse and bewilder and unsettle the minds of Christian youth. There is this danger, to begin with, that they will lose some of that feeling of reverence and loyal regard for sacred things which has fallen to them as a natural inheritance from godly ancestry. This is no mere phantasmal apprehension of weak and foreboding minds; there is a real and serious peril for Christian youth, and one which we ought not to conceal from ourselves or from them, in the extensive changes and reconstructions which are going on in the church itself at the present time. But the saving consideration lies in the fact these changes are of the nature of reconstructions. The attention of youth should be clearly called to this fact—that the church, or the Christian community, has given up nothing, in these shifting struggles over creed and form, which has not been fully replaced, and indeed in many instances more than replaced, by that new phoenix-form of truth which has risen out of the devouring flame. The church is stronger to-day for all the renunciations (if they can be called renunciations) which she has made in the conflict with science and scholarship. She has absorbed the new truth hurled against her, as a tossing lake absorbs the hail-stones with which it is smitten by a passing storm. Truth is always stronger when its partial forms are replaced by the more complete: and it cannot be said that the church of to-day has closed its doors against the new light. If any young person is inclined to waver because of the apparent defeat and renunciations of the Christian church, let him look on the other and truer side of the picture—the victories of newly appropriated truth, the acquisitions of broader power, the opening up of unsuspected resources, the better equipment, the closer touch with all of human life and thought. Let such considerations as these guard the Christian youth against misjudgment and misconception of recent changes in the life and thought of the church. The Christian church of 1893 is an infinitely stronger and better and more helpful church than that of 1863, good and helpful though church the of that day was.

But the most serious dangers of the Christian youth of to day come from the worldly side of their environment—from the letting down of the moral tone of the community in general; the growing flippancy and irreverence and self-confidence of the multitude of worldly minded; the arrogance of materialists, and the indifference of seekers for fame, wealth, and pleasure. These are truly serious and increasing dangers; they cannot but exercise a certain influence—indirect, at least—upon the young men and young women who are brought into daily contact with them.

Here, as in the former case, we must find, if we can, something which shall counteract the unfavorable influence—something which shall counteract it not only negatively and subjectively, but positively and objectively. Here appears at once the necessity and value of such an organization of Christian young people as the Christian Endeavor—a defensive bulwark of faith and an aggressive army of Christian soldiers; a fountain of spiritual refreshment and strength, and a stream that sweeps onward through the world and purifies it; a little world of Christlikeness in itself, and a little world of Christlikeness in the greater world that lies about it. In such fellowship are the defense and the equipment of the Christian youth. It is the best safeguard against all dangers of immorality, and it furnishes the inspiration and the weapons which are most effective in the conflict with evil. Great as are the dangers of modern life for youth, surely the safeguards against those dangers are of equal power. Sin and the world upon one hand; God and his truth and his organized followers upon the other. To which side belongs the victory? To which must it inevitably come if we but remain faithful to our Great Commander?—Zion's Herald.

Washington Letter.

It is fitting that the English-speaking nations should lead the world towards a universal peace union, which would substitute international courts for the great standing armies which are productive of nothing but needless and expense. Although no general law was enacted President Harrison's administration committed the United States to the arbitration policy and there are the best of reasons for believing that the present administration is just as strongly in favor of arbitration. This being the case it naturally follows that a very strong sentiment exists here in favor of the proposition which has gone so far as to reach the calendar of the British House of Commons, in the shape of a bill providing for the negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain which would make war impossible by providing for the settlement of all international disputes between the two countries by arbitration.

Only one regret is expressed in Washington concerning this matter, and that is, that the United States did not make the initiatory movement towards securing this great boon for the civilized world. But that is after all a small matter. The great object of the friends of peace, in the United States, should be to create such a public sentiment in favor of such a treaty that Congress will meet the British Parliament more than half way, by taking up and passing a bill at the coming session authorizing the negotiation of a perpetual treaty of arbitration, not only with Great Britain but with any other nation which might be willing to join the movement for universal peace, which is ardently hoped for by the truest friends of Christianity and civilization.

Such action on the part of Congress would show to the world that it is no mere idle boast to claim that the credit for inaugurating the greatest and most marked advances in the work of Christianizing and bringing the world to a higher state of civilization belongs to the English speaking nations. With such a treaty in existence between the United States and Great Britain it cannot be doubted that the good example would soon be followed by the principal European nations and that the standing armies which now menace the prosperity of more than half of Europe would soon belong to the barbaric past. The accomplishment of such an object is a goal worthy of the grandest minds of our time, and how puny when compared with it would appear the greatest achievement of the greatest soldier the world has produced. No wonder that the idea appeals to the enthusiasm of such great men on both sides of the Atlantic as William E. Gladstone and Benjamin Harrison; it is grand enough the dawn of the twentieth century it would dwarf all other achievements of the nineteenth century, great as to appeal to every lover of humanity, and could it be accomplished before many of them have undoubtedly been.

United States officials claim that French officials are violating the agreement entered into at the Dresden international Sanitary Conference, that each nation there represented should inform each other nation at the earliest possible moment of the appearance and progress of epidemic diseases within their respective borders. According to reports made to their government by British consuls there have been more than 500 cases of cholera and something like 290 deaths from the disease in French cities near the mouth of the Rhone river, and instead of reporting those cases, according to agreement, the French officials have actually tried to conceal them. Although it has not been fully determined upon, Secretary Gresham may call the attention of the French government to this very dangerous apparent breach of faith on the part of its officials.

President Cleveland appointed within the last week thirty Indian agents, and in accordance with the new law twenty of them were army officers detailed to act as agents. The ten civilian agents were assigned to those Indians who are the farthest advanced towards civilization.

The coroners jury which sat upon the death of one of the unfortunate clerks who perished in the Ford's Theatre disaster found that four men—Col Ainsworth who was in charge of the clerks in the building, the contractor who was making an excavation under the building, and two minor officials—were guilty of criminal negligence resulting in manslaughter. They have each been put under $10,000 bail to appear for trial should the grand jury find true bills against either or all of them. There is no longer any excitement over this matter, everybody expressing a willingness to leave it with the courts.

Questions for Men.

BY REV. ALICE A. DRAPER.

The press is full of the woman question, but I may startle you by confessing that I have no interest in it except as it stands linked by God to the human question.

Let us have a change, not that women will stop preaching, for they are coming more and more, and we prefer to take our chances at the day of judgment as the women who dared to preach rather than as the men who dared to say us nay. Indeed, why women ever thought of asking men if they could do, what God says they may, as certainly as He says they may breathe, is an enigma. But the woman question is out for awhile in the Sun, to come up as occasion and duty demand, meanwhile let questions for men receive as much attention as was shown the other. In fact more time, more space will be needed for there are several very important questions for men to consider, and their views are wanted though views not backed by ballots are like birds without wings. Let men tell why, that question is too hard for women. Grave questions confront the nation, and why is the secular press silent? Why is the religious press silent with few exceptions? The right solution of the seven problems (which I call the Seven Plagues of America, in what passes for a patriotic lecture) upon this right solution depends the perpetuity of American institutions. The life of the Republic. What is the matter? Does religion kill patriotism? If so, then could we not dispense with it? No country—no church—Now all these questions pertain to man's sphere. That is, his supposed sphere. His sphere is unlimited save by nature—But these questions are within his boundaries. Why are the secular papers supported, when they feed the people largely on trash and partisan lies? Why are not these papers if patriotic and loyal to America, sounding the alarm? Had Americans better learn why?

Here are the seven plagues. Plagues to be mastered as much as cholera. I give them in order as given by an able patriot.

1. Immigration.
2. Romanism.
3. Mormonism.
4. Intemperance.
5. Socialism.
6. Wealth.
7. The City.

Need a woman remind the men of America, that in these seven perils, we have legions of devils. Old theology or new, higher criticism, sectarian controversy, what are all these compared to the seven plagues? Why are they here? Why do they grow stronger? Whose fault is it? Have those things, called Democrats and Republicans, got any responsibility in this matter? Or are they mere machines? What ails our men, when so many are silent?

The south calls for immigrants, but large portions of America have found them not an unmix'd blessing. It letter sift them, yes even strain them, judging from the condition of the states which have received a deluge of foreign refuse and crime. Again, Romanism, may not be felt much in the south, but it is here, and were Protestants doing their duty they would find it out. Is it cowardice, apathy or what on the part of Americans that the present dangers threatens the Nation, you'll please allow me to spell Nation with a big N, and Protestant with a capital, also, it is a matter of conscience, as it is also, to spell queen and pope with a small letter.

Dare any intelligent Christian or patriot affirm that the American voter has done his duty? If so, let us have his name in print. Let us see what that man is like. Dare these voters say that America's present strait is not due to partisan politics? Is Democracy fit to survive unless men put principle and patriotism before party?

Is Republicanism fit to live, unless men put God and country before a name?

Again these monsters that threaten America, can only be slain with ballots and I am told the Protestant church, has voters enough to hold the balance of power and that no measure or party could succeed were the Protestant ballots turned against it. Rome threatens with fire and sword as soon as she is strong enough and the time is nearer than most people think. Her attitude is as traitorous as that of the liquor traffic and Mormonism, yet most men seem to be concerned only about their party and so many professed Christians are down in the mire on their knees to their party god, that the Protestant arm of this Nation lies paralyzed — Is not country more than party? Why are not men as quick to use their ballots against their common enemies as in years gone by they were their bullets upon each other when a divided nation was the result of a divided vision.

Do men read the treasonable utterances of Rome, Mormonism and Run and then coolly go to sleep? Do they forget that to sleep means to be a Roman Catholic —? Do they forget the horrible oaths of the men in orders? In short is America to be America or an Europeanized perdition?

All of these curses have caused blood shed, as every man knows who reads history, and blood shed, here in America too, and all are more aggressive and more defiant than ever, and how long before north and south, east and west are to make up and join hands against these perils? Yes and cast ballots? After answering all these questions then to rest your brains, see if you can dream out why American women should be moral queens but political imbeciles.

Duty.

Duty, only a little word but what a multitude of things are included in this one word, the truest wisdom is found in the obedience of life to God's law. Pleasure, wealth, honor, power or position, may add to man's earthly happiness, but nothing but living up to the standard of God's will can develop true happiness to human life. But in the first place we fail to do our duty to our maker by our disobedience to his laws. When we enter our name upon the church book we feel that God for Christ sake hath forgiven our sins, and we mean to live a godly life and the outside world looks upon us as Christians, well so we are or ought to be; why is it then that there are so many cold, careless, and inactive Christians in the church? the church is not a place for idlers. God does not want idlers in his vineyard. "Go ye also into the vineyard and whatsoever is right I will give you, Matthew 20:4; nor will we find when we get to heaven any idlers there. The prayer of every Christian should be "Lord what will thou have me to do" but it looks as though there are some in the church that are trying to see how little there is for them to do, they pay nothing to their church assessment and little or nothing to the pastor's salary, we would hate to see our church go up to conference behind with its mission, the pastor has to live, and the Bible says he is to live by the gospel. "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live by the gospel," 1st. Corinthians 9:14; this money is all to be paid and if it is a duty for one member to pay why not a duty for all to help shoulder the burden then how easy it would be to carry. When we enter upon the Christian life we enter a life of duty and a life of work. "There's a work for me and a work for you something for each one of us to do" you cannot do my work, neither can I do your work. God requires each one to do his own work, "to every man his work," Mark 13:34. He has given us talents some five some two and some one, if only one let us not hide it but try to improve it. There are some Christians that are very still about their religion, "There are lonely hearts to cherish, there are weary souls who perish" our religion has not done much for us if it does not cause us to have a sympathy for the unconverted, he which converteth a from the error of his ways shall sinner save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins, James 5:20; we are not to live for ourselves alone if we would be happy we should try to make others happy and what better way is there than to point them to Jesus for the soul that is without Christ cannot be happy.

Now will I tell to sinners round, what a dear Saviour I have found, and I point to his redeeming blood and say behold the Lamb of God. A Christian should be dutious, learn one's attitude toward his duties and you have an accurate point of view from which to measure him as a Christian. Next comes our duty towards the Sunday school. Ask the church if they must have the Sunday school, oh yes, it will not do to let it stop but who is to support it when the church members take such little interest in it, notice the young men when they go to church standing around the church laughing and talking, how much better would it look on their part as church members to go in the church, in the Sunday school, and invite all others kindly to go with them and there both old and young read and study God's holy Word together. The young people should be the life of the Sunday school and yet they say they cannot attend it regular, they want to go some where else or to preaching at other churches; well my young friends that is all very good if you go for the good of preaching, perhaps your superintendent would like to do the same but duty compels him to go to the Sunday school and he feels it his duty to go but remember that your vote helped to place him there and will you compel him to go there Sabbath after Sabbath to perform his duties while you neglect to do yours. Oh my young friends duty comes before pleasure besides the Sabbath is not a day for pleasure. God holds us accountable for the way we spend the Sabbath. Rejoice oh young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes, but, know that for all these things God will bring thee unto judgment. Eccl. 11: 9. The young people should not only be the life of the Sunday school but they should be the life of the church; the older ones are fast passing away one by one, soon the burden will fall on their shoulders and the responsibility will be great, next it is a duty for every family that is a member of the church to take their church paper and yet I find there are members of families that belongs to the Christian church that do not take the CHRISTIAN SUN. We know what our own church is doing but how are we to know what other churches are doing if we do not take the church paper. I am glad to see such an improvement in the SUN. Dr. Maples' sermons are grand. When I read the one of June the 8th it reminded me of an excellent sermon that I heard a good preacher preach, from that one word "Love." There are Professor Atkinson's letters, they are interesting, they show to us what a different state of affairs there are where he is to what there are here. Prof.

fessor Scholz's pieces are also interesting, and how much better the paper could be made if each one would do their duty in subscribing for it, and getting others to do the same. If a smile we can renew, as our journey we pursue, and the good that we all could do if we only would do our duty. May God help us all to see our duty and give us ready hands and willing hearts to do it.

The Two Minds.

1 John 2:8. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.

After God created this world, he then made man and man being a subject to sin, fell by transgression of the law. But "this law" was not written that was given to Adam. It was verbal, saying, "in the day that thou eatest thereof, (Meaning the forbidden fruit) thou shalt surely die." Just there my brethren we find that by the first transgression, even by our Father Adam, that man then obtained a double mind. A mind to know both good and evil. Before the transgression, man knew nothing but the good thoughts. Afterwards, he obtained the evil. Of which minds are known as Spiritual and Carnal. Paul in speaking of these two minds says in Romans 8:6. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. And we find men laboring under both carnal and spiritual, and no man is laboring under both at the same time. How long, oh how long did Israel labor under this carnal standpoint. We are told they toiled under it for four thousand years, even till Jesus the beloved Son of God made his appearance on the earth. And not only they but we. We find in 1 John 3:8. Speaking as to what purpose Christ came, reading thus, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." What did man possess, that Christ should destroy? Was it the soul of man? No, it was that part that the devil gave to man in the garden of Eden, which is the carnal mind. Romans 8:7. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Because one mind leads to death and damnation, and the other leads to joy and eternal happiness. Did, I say that men possessed a double mind? Yes. And we all yet have a double mind as to the knowledge of sin, but by the light we now have in Christ by regeneration, the disposition to sin is all gone. And that is what is meant by Christ destroying the works of the devil. "Thank God, for a change from darkness to light through our blessed Savior." "Behold the old things are passed away, and all things are become new." When Abel offered up a lamb as an offering to God, it was only a temporal light in darkness introducing this great light which Christ brought into the world. Moses in lifting up the serpent in the wilderness, merely introduced Christ being offered up for sin; John the Baptist was only a smaller light introducing a greater, of which light, the beloved Apostle John being inspired, and wrote unto us this new commandment. Realizing the old manner of worship before Christ, as being a worship in darkness. Christ came as that true light and told the world that he was the light of the world and we are told that in him is no darkness "Glory be to God in the highest, for the light we now have in Christ Jesus," for it drives all the dark fears away, and makes us feel that heavens glorious rays are shooting forth their light upon us. After realizing of this precious light herē in this life. It is "then nothing to be compared with the light being in the presence of our dear Savior." For I have often thought, that if a man could but catch one small glimpse upon the great shining throne of heaven, while in this life he then could be able to proclaim to all, the true meaning of this great light. "Glorious thought," that heaven is lighted up with the glory of God. There is no darkness there. "Why?" because the true light, even Christ is there, and I think appears as the morning sun of heaven. There are larger and lesser ones." "Why should they vary as to brightness." Because Christ taught us so while on earth. "The greater your cross the brighter your crown." "Why is this." Because it takes endurance to the end, "end of what?" "Life" "Christ taught this." He that endureth to the end the same shall be saved "Endureth what?" Persecutions for Christ sake. Overcoming all that pertains to the flesh. And they that overcome all these and walk humbly before God, are promised to be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And not only the greatest, but shall have a brighter crown. Looking through all this we are made to rejoice and cry aloud. "Praise God," for endurance, for I know "my crown will be bright and shining with the sunlight of glory." I have often imagined myself standing beside my blessed Saviour and he placing a victorious crown of glory upon my head. "All glory be to God, for such a crown that will outshine the glittering sun." We have taken spiritual wings of glory and have flown away to Jesus. "Oh my heart has been so full, since we parted this life." Thank God, I can now imagine myself in their presence. "Then I shall know that darkness is past and the true light now shineth."

LITERARY NOTES.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL PAY.

A Chinese baby is really the funniest looking little tot that can be imagined, and we have never seen such a lifelike portrait of one as that published in the July number of Demorest's Family Magazine, which contains "The Oriental Legation at Washington." And this highly interesting article is further embellished with other curious and beautiful portraits and views from the several Oriental Legations. "The Story of the Millennium" grows in interest. The July number would not be complete without something about fireworks, and the bill is filled by telling with pen and brush just how they are made. All these attractions under one cover sell for 20 cents. Published by W. Jeannings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York.

"Josiah Allen's Wife" has visited Chicago, and will give the results of her observations in a book entitled "Samantha at the world's fair," the early publication of which is announced by Funk & Wagnalls Company. There can be no doubt that the impressions of the unsophisticated but irrepressible Samantha in regard to Christopher Columbus and his nineteenth century admirers will be exceedingly rich reading. Samantha went to Chicago with authority to tender the freedom of Jonesville to the Duke of Veragua, but why he has not seen fit to accept doth not yet appear. Possibly Josiah can explain on the ground that his too fastidious spouse wouldn't allow him to arrange a bull-fight in the back meadow for the duke's entertainment. Chicago presents a large field for Samantha's genius to caper in. Her encounters with the Infanta, Mayor Harrison, Paderewski, and other "features" of the fair are most laughable. Her trip through the midway plaisance, and her comments on the sedan chairs, the gondolas, the cave of the cliff-dwellers, the Eskimo village, etc, are sidesplitting. The volume, which will, of course, be illustrated, is to be issued in September, and will be a much-prized souvenir of the fair both by those who have been there and seen the sights described by the inimitable Samantha, and also for those who were not so fortunate.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH FOR JUNE.

The June number of the Cottage Hearth presents an unusually large number of bright stories. Zitella Cocke in the account of Them Twain handles her subject with great skill. One of the cleverest short stories of the month is that told by Maud Rittenhouse under the title of An Up-Hill Wooing. The departments are increasing in interest each month, and the practical hints and suggestions in the two under the change of Mrs. Marion A. McBride, cannot fail to commend them to every house-keeper (15 cts., a number. $1.50 a year. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.)

"From the Atlantic to the Pacific," a most interesting illustrated article by Joseph P. Reed, makes one of the attractions of the July New Peterson. "California Women in the World's Fair," by Minna V. Gaden, gives a series of well-written biographies accompanied by portraits. "Old Valenciennes China" is a most delightful article with appropriate illustrations. Our readers should send for a sample copy of this ably conducted monthly. Address the Peterson Magazine Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Edge of the Future" in McClure's Magazine for July will deal with a cool, refreshing topic suitable for the hot weather. Three eminent writers tell all about the great expeditions to the North Pole, which will be undertaken this summer—Nansen, Jackson and Peary's—and also Col. Gilder's expedition to locate the North magnetic pole.

FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY FOR JULY

All the leading features of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for June possess timely and seasonable interest, in addition to their intrinsic attractiveness. Then there is an intimate personal sketch of the Infanta Eulalia, our royal Spanish visitor, by G. Stanton Sickles, with a charming portrait reproduced from her favorite photograph.

Windsor, Va.

The commencement exercises of Miss Mai Bailey's school taught at Dr. J. J. Duck's took place Tuesday evening the 13th, of June, and was one of the largest and best we ever saw in the country. Much credit is due the principal the teacher and scholars for the ample provisions and the splendid program which was rendered so well. Seats, in the ample yard, adorned with majestic oaks and beautiful ash, had been well arranged. The stand for the exercises was made attractive with beautiful lanterns and lovely flowers, and when the hour had come to commence, the salutatory address was made in the following brief way: "In behalf of the principal—the teacher, the patrons, and the pupils of this school I come before you tonight to welcome you, each one of you, to these commencement exercises under the rustling leaves of these lovely shade trees through which the stars in their nightly glory gleam, amid the lanterns which swing in verigated beauty all around us, sending soft light into pleasant anxious faces, and flashing eyes, and on this splendid mild summer night in June we come to greet and to welcome you. You who have come from the grand old country homes, where rural life is so much enjoyed we also give words of welcome. Some are here from town and village, and some from the beautiful populous city, you too will find a hearty welcome, and unlimited hospitality. From the constant work and study of the school room, teacher and pupils have come to entertain and refresh you. They have come to entertain you with music, speeches and songs, and after these are sung and said, to refresh you with ice cream and lemonade. The nice speeches and charming music we expect to hear, and all the exercises will give double enchantment to this occasion. As the program is a long one, and full interest I will close this introduction by wishing you a pleasant time and a happy good night." Every one of the pupils did so well it is hard to distinguish, but I cannot forbear mentioning the names of Miss Lulian Duck and master Fabius Clements as acting well their part. Rev. W. L. Richards pastor of Windsor Baptist church was present, and presented prizes to a number of the children.

The 3rd, Sunday in June was Children's Day at Franklin. The children and all who took part in the exercises did well. The Baptist church kindly dispensed with its morning service, and its members and Sunday school attended the Christian church making one of the largest congregations ever seen there. At night of same day the congregation was good, and appealed to wait upon the service with increased interest. I have had much encouragement in my work at Franklin. The Lord is blessing us, and it is earnestly desired that still greater and grander blessings may be given, until every one who worships there shall have his abiding presence. The church has recently had electric lights put in it. This addition was greatly needed, and highly appreciated. As the electric light is turned on the congregation may the light of Him who is the Light of the world flash upon it, until preacher, and hearers, shall have more heavenly light.

Friday afternoon before the third Sunday in May I baptized seven members of Franklin church in black water river in the presence of many friends. It was so pleasant to see these young Christians taking up the cross and following Jesus in his commandments Several days were most delightfully spent in visiting the members of that church in calling upon the sick and aged, and in trying to do good in every way possible. The quarterly conference was held at night and business of much importance to the church received attention. Among which was the election of two more deacons. Bros. Jesse T. Harcom and B. D. Crocker were elected. On Sunday night before preaching they were ordained in the presence of the congregation. They are excellent men, and we pray that they may be a great help to the church, and that they may enjoy largely the blessings of the Lord. Monday night following that appointment the ladies church society met at Miss Alice Curry's home, and it had a most delightful and profitable time. The ladies of the church are working hard, and they are succeeding with their plans.

The summer has come to us again. The beautiful growing summer has come. The drifting clouds, the lightly falling dew refresh the growing fields and the green forest, until charmed with natures splendid, and wonderful development. Summer is the time for commencement exercises, after which students may rest for a time. Professional men, people of means and leisure can visit summer resorts, away from care and toil, but the news paper man has to work hard and long to get news and matter for them to read. We ought to appreciate fully the valuable and cheap services of editors and correspondents, and all in any way connected with the printing press. But O! it is so easy to sit back and criticize them for not giving better editions. Yes it is easy sometimes to think and talk, but when we come to do the thing which means action it has a different meaning and gives some of us a different feeling. It takes time, thought, capacity and energy to write glowing, flowing beautiful articles and papers. If the writer, the editor, the scholar is well paid for his work, that, of itself, gives him greater inspiration and zest with which to labor. The world has many frothy articles, some of our dailies and weeklies and monthlies are crowded with them to an unhealthy extent. They are unhealthy intellectually, physically, and morally. Let us appreciate more than ever the work of our workmen, and if not as good as we desire let us still encourage them by our means and our words. When this is done if there is any chance for improvement, it will develop itself. Encouragement is a strong word, strong enough to lift men from the vale of despondency and to elevate them to the highest point of success and honor. In the hottest weather of mid summer some one must shoulder the burdens and responsibilities of life, and carry them on, if possible to complete success. There will always be some idlers sitting or standing, looking, hoping, praying that failure will be the result of him who starts up the way to duty and honor. But when a passion for honorable success burns in the soul of man it fires his whole being with unflinching energy to reach the goal. J. T. KITCHEN.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Your attention is directed to Bro J. T. Kitchen's Windsor Letter. Read it. He speaks no idle words.

The thanks of the SUN office are due Prof. Herbert Scholz for the valuable aid given the paper in the effort to make it a first class religious journal.

The catalogue of Holly Springs Masonic Institute has just been issued from this office. It will compare favorably with the work of any of fice.

The Confederate War Journal is a new monthly that will interest every southern person and those of the north as well. It is published at New York, and Lexington Ky, $100 per year

A note of the 22, from Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., says: "Just closed one of the best commencements ever known at Antioch. All difficulties amicably adjusted. The outlook for next year the best in eleven years."

It is the opinion of the writer that the Va. Valley S. S. Convention made a sad mistake when it voted to use the International lessons to the exclusion of the Bible; as will be seen by the report of its 2nd session last week. It is all right to use the lessons but do not rule the Bible out of the Sunday schools. If more Bible was taught in the schools more good would be done. And don't forget that the Bible is our discipline—rule of faith and practice—and that to deny it a place in our Sunday schools is not calculated to instill into the minds and hearts of the pupils that reverence and love for God's Holy Word which the Christian church has been so earnestly striving to accomplish for near a century.

Dr. Summerbell, who has an article in this week's issue on the union of Christian denominations, is himself an unusual illustration of the principle which he supports. He is in active membership at one and the same time in two denominations, whose politics vary just enough to make the relation possible. He is a member of the New York Eastern Convention of the Christian church. He is Secretary for Education of the same Convention and Professor of Pastoral Theology in the Christian Biblical School at Stauntonville, N. Y., and president of the Christian Correspondent College. At the same time he is connected with the Free Baptist Body, being a member of the Main Street Church in Lewiston, of which he is pastor. It was expressly covenanted when he took this position that it should not interfere with the general educational work of the Christian Connection. We believe that this situation has not called for unfavorable criticism, and the chief embarrassment comes, we presume, from the fact that he is summoned to attend more conventions than would be the case were he associated with but one denomination.—Independent

A Spirit of Union.

We are informed that recently in a place in the western part of N. C. the union of denominations seemed very harmonious. A Presbyterian Pastor was conducting revival services in a Methodist church with the assistance of an Episcopal evangelist and a Baptist singer. Behold how pleasant for brethren to dwell together.

What will be the Result.

The liquor dealers state association met last week in the City of Raleigh N. C.; and the State Chronicle says: "It is one of the most important conventions of business men called to order in the Metropolitan Hall." All collective bodies of men are important either to the elevation and betterment of men, or to the advantage of sin and degradation of the human family. And what sane man will undertake to say that this liquor dealers association is for the elevation and betterment of men?

One speaker said, It must be the great aim of the association to elevate the liquor business to the highest plain of fair and honest dealing. If he meant what he said, he has undertaken an impossibility. O, thou sinful association, take to thee much soft soap, and wash thee until thou dost lather and foam but then cannot make thy business righteous.

We enter a protest against its long name. It includes too much. The liquor dealers, distillers and grape growers' association of North Carolina. What a name? We think it an insult to many of the grape growers in the state; for some of the best temperance men in the state are grape growers; and to undertake to associate these good men with a whiskey band, is too bad. But you know the devil always tries to use some good men to sugar coat his iniquitous pills of sin.

We notice that Mr. Sol Bear was made president. Well, we think if there is an animal in the work suitable for a liquor dealers association, surely it must be a bear:

But what will be the result of this meeting? We know that God often overrules the works of the devil to the good of the righteous; and we hope it may be so in this case.

Bros. Holland and Mood.

1. Rev. R. H. Holland insists that I have admitted that the women did preach in Apostolic times. I suppose that he made the charge based on the fact that I admitted that then as now, there were women who wished to preach, but that Paul forbade them. But he says it was based on the fact that I admitted that Philip had four daughters who did prophesy. I did admit that, but at once stated that to prophesy was not to preach, and cited as my authority Paul who said that Christ gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelist; and some pastors and teachers. With Paul the office of a prophet was one thing, while that of a pastor and teacher was quite another. Bro H. quotes Webster, but I think Paul knew more about officers in the church in a moment than Webster ever knew, so I prefer to stand by Paul. If Bro. H. really desires to be fair and seek only the meaning of the Bible, as to the right of women to preach I cannot see why he should try to make me say what I did not say, but, if it will help him any to do so, I hereby give him the right to misrepresent me all he wishes—so far as I have any power to give him such right. Bro H. makes several thrusts at me personally, saying that he has promised to handle me tenderly. I was not aware that I was up to be handled at all—I supposed it was "the right of women to preach" that was to be discussed. But if it be me, instead, I am sure it is very kind in him to handle me tenderly, yet I wish to assure him that I find no need to leave my subject and take him up personally. He thinks Paul in 1 Tim. 2:12 alludes to man only as husband of the woman. Then what does he mean in 1 Cor 14:34-35? Please do not dodge the issue, but I do not wish to reopen the discussion. I am sorry that Bro H. has lost his temper to such an extent as to induce him to allude to some in this discussion as "fools," as "none so blind as those who will not see," etc. That may sound all right to Bro. Holland's ears, but somehow it sounds unbrotherly to me. I think the world might be expected to talk that way, but we as disciples of the meek and loving Savior, ought not to be so harsh, and especially when we are simply searching for the truth. But Bro. H. is very bold in his statements. I mention two: 1. He says that prophesy means preach, and that I know it. Why Bro. Holland, do you mean to say that I knowingly made a false statement? 2. Again you say: "I (Holland) said women preached, as the Bible states, and every intelligent minister of any and every denomination knows it."

That is pretty hard. I will leave my poor self out just for argument's sake admit that I have very little intelligence—but what of the Rev. J. L. M. Carry, D. D., LL. D., and Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D. D., and Rev. J. B. Hawborne, D. D., and Bishop Whittle and hundreds I might name were it necessary. Have they no intelligence? Will Bro. Holland affirm it? I sincerely hope that Bro. H. will not repeat these harsh things, if for no other reason than that the cause of Christ be not charged with the spirit of bitterness. We be followers of the Meek One and, as such, let us lovingly and sincerely imitate our great Exemplar.

2. As to Bro. Mood I am glad Bro. Mood is so wise, even if it does make me feel small to have him pronounce my ideas worthless and erroneous in the time it would take for the twinkling of an eye. That is one way to do it, Bro. Mood—rely on self and annihilate your opponents by simply declaring them wrong. You seem so sure that I am wrong it strikes me as quite a hopeless task to get you to see things from my standpoint.

You make much of my use of the word palpit. If I had known what a linguist I had met, I might have taken the pains to say that by the pulpit I only meant to indicate the teacher's seat or stand of authority as a teacher, and in that—the true—sense I guess all will admit that Jesus taught and preached in a pulpit.

Now since you have so quickly disposed of all my explanations of facts in this discussion, permit me to ask for your explanations. You have rejected mine. Surely you do you not mean to leave us here in the dark. That will not do, and therefore I want to ask you to help me a little by explaining a few things:

1. Why was it that under the Jewish dispensation no woman was ever made a priest?—so far as the Bible or history informs us.

2. Why did Christ not permit a woman to be one of the twelve?

3. Why was it that a woman did not preach on the day of pentecost—since your side claims that Joel said she should do so?

4. Why was it that lots were not cast for women when Judas' place was to be filled in the apostolic body?

5. How do you harmonize Paul's statement in forbidding women to speak in the church—1 Cor. 14:34-35—with your views in favor of their preaching?

Now, let us come down to business. You asked me to help you. I did the best I could to do so, but you refused all of my help—threw it aside lightly as nothing—now let us have some help from your side.

Faithfully yours,
J. P. BARRETT.

Norfolk, Va.

REGRETS.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT, it pains me for you to make a laughing stock of my ignorance; and the stinging sarcasm is unworthy a man of your ability; and then everybody knows that sarcasm is not argument. In the first place I asserted my ignorance and asked for light. You stated a fact, viz.: That didasko was the Greek word translated "to teach" in 1 Tim. 2:12, and I meant "to teach or speak in a public assembly." With that fact in hand I looked the thing up for myself and found you had given me a half of the fact. I found that didasko was the infinitive form of the Greek verb didasko and meant "to teach, to instruct, to inform."

"Wise," indeed, Bro. Barrett, if you will read a little more carefully you will see that no claim whatever has been made by me to wisdom. In fact I am so ignorant that I cannot see the difference in the principle between teaching one or a half dozen and teaching hundreds; between teaching a Sunday school class and teaching a congregation from the pulpit; and between the pulpit as in your definition above and the seat of the Sunday school teacher; I have been unable to find where Paul makes a distinction and allows women to teach in Sunday school—he commands utter silence.

You speak very glibly about my side of the question. I have taken no side as yet on this question, in the SUN, am just trying to get at the truth; therefore I have nothing to explain while you have a very delicate question to settle. Now Bro. Barrett, please leave all sarcasm out and get at the facts in the question.

I have been reading a little of the history of Greece and in the light of what I learn there, have come to the conclusion that for a man to say unqualifiedly that Paul's command to the Corinthian church, 1 Cor. 14:34-35, applies to womankind, is to place our elevated, pure, Christian women on a plane with those debauched and foul harlots and the uneducated and insipid women of Greece, and consequently is the grossest insult that man can place on a noble woman. Am I right Bro. Barrett?

You seem to think I am not sincere, but my dear brother I am terribly in earnest. I want light and I want it so that there is no shadow of doubt. I ask of you only what you demand of others. I want you to give me light, with book, chapter and verse, as your authority for making a distinction and claiming Paul allows a woman to teach in one service and forbids in another of the same nature. And I will reject, as I would a falsehood, a distorted fact.

Yours truly,
D. J. MOOD.

The Misfortunes of Job.

It has always been a very perplexing question to the writer, why God allowed Satan to visit so many afflictions upon Job. According to the Almighty's own statement, there was not another such a man in all the country. He was an upright man; he did what he thought was right. According to his own assertions found in different parts of the book of Job, he fed the hungry, clothed the naked, administered to the sick, cared for the widow and the orphan, provided diligently for his own household, and offered sacrifices to God for the remission of his family's sins. What more could Job have done to show his fidelity to God? Was he deficient in righteousness? It seems to us that he was doing all he could to serve God faithfully, and if such were the case, then, why was Job allowed to be persecuted. Does God punish people for doing good? Does he allow his own saints to be harassed and tormented by Satan and his followers when they have done nothing to merit such treatment?

There are several reasons which men have assigned for Job's being so cruelly persecuted. They are as follows: (1.) Satan did not believe there was any man living so good that he would not sin under sufficient provocation, and God made an example of Job to prove to Satan that the human family was not thus depraved. (2.) God desired to chasten Job that he might be made a better man. (3.) God desired to make an example of Job showing to the people of future ages what a mortal man could endure and still retain his faith and his integrity. (4.) While Job was a righteous man compared with the standard of righteousness in his age, still there were some requisites necessary to the true love of God which Job did not have, and God used this means to bring him into a more abundant knowledge of him who rules the world. There may be some other reasons assigned but these are the chief ones.

Now in order to satisfy ourselves on the subject as best we can, let us take up each of the above stated reasons separately and see if any or all of them are valid.

Satan did not believe there was any man living so good that he would not sin under certain provocation, and God made an example of Job to prove to Satan that the human family was not thus depraved.

On thinking about this reason, we inquire is there a similar case on record, or is this the only one? Is there an incident recorded in the Bible setting forth the idea that God allows the just and good to suffer in order to show wicked people how good and noble and true and faithful the people of God are. If there is such an incident recorded we would be very glad for some one to cite it. The trial of Abraham's faith is not similar because it involved a voluntary act on the part of Abraham. The case of the Christians who were persecuted in the most cruel manner is not similar, they could have saved themselves by clinging to the world if they had chosen. But here is a man who had no say in the matter. He did not choose to lose everything he had, and have his life made a burden by a horrid disease. It came upon him without his consent and there was no voluntary act of his own involved. Now if there can be found no similar incident on record, this of itself suggests a strong probability that the reason is incorrect. It would not have been entirely satisfactory to Satan to have stopped with one human being, he would have wanted stronger proof that some men were irresistible to his temptations than the mere repulsion by one man.

Again, does God allow such misery to be laid upon those who trust and serve him? Does not the Bible plainly teach that the righteous shall flourish as the bay-tree and that he shall see happiness all his life? Does God return evil for the good service of his people? Such would not seem plausible, and besides, it would be lowering our idea of the perfection of our divine creator.

Furthermore, was not Satan once an angel of heaven? Is he not a Spirit just as all other angels? Does he not understand the human family sufficiently to know what characters he can manage, and what he cannot? Satan does not need to have proof of the strength of God, or of his works. He understands them; he admires them, and he hates the Almighty because He occupies the throne of heaven. It is true the dialogue between Satan and God seems to indicate that Satan was ignorant of Job's character. This may have been true, or it may not. Satan may have desired to persecute Job through some terrible spite he had against him, and he may have taken this opportunity while in God's presence to work on God's feelings concerning him. We are compelled to think, however that God had some other purpose than to gratify Satan in placing Job in his hands. The next reason we will amplify in the next paper.

A Valuable Gift.

Rev. H. Y. Rush of West Milton, Ohio, gave 108 volumes to the library of Elon College recently. This was a liberal and valuable gift and the friends of the college return their sincere thanks to our beloved Brother for his generous offering.

About the same time we found at the depot a nice pulpit for our chapel, a present from S. L. Adams of Durham, N. C. We extend hearty thanks to Bro. Adams. Now when our opera chairs are placed in the chapel, as we have engaged them, we will have a magnificent one indeed. Come to the opening Aug. 31, 1893 and see it.

Elon College Vacation Notes.

It is almost impossible to realize that nearly one month of our vacation has glided rapidly by, and is now numbered among the things of the past.

It has been said that "nothing so shortens retrospect as monotony," which may be the reason why the time seems so short; as our little village has been very quiet since the departure of the students.

We have nevertheless enjoyed the quiet rest, after ten months of regular work in the classroom. We trust that all connected with the College are enjoying their vacation to the fullest extent, and that we may have the pleasure of welcoming each and every one of them back to Elon in the Fall.

Your correspondent would like to inquire when the Summer school of music will be held. Several of the students, whose homes are quite distant, have expressed a desire to attend, and we suggest, that if the time has not been appointed, that the last of August will be a suitable time. Then the students could come earlier, and attend the school of Music, and be here at the opening of the Fall term Aug. 31st, without additional expense.

Our Sunday school, though comparatively small, is in a flourishing condition under the management of our efficient Superintendent, Mr. John M. Cook. We have five classes.

Prof. Holleman is attending the Teachers Assembly at Merchants City this week. Prof. Newman is traveling in the interest of the college. He will canvass different parts of the State.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER

Mrs. Wasp and Mrs. Bee.

Said Mrs. Wasp to Mrs. Bee,
"Will you a favor do me?
There's something I can't understand;
Please, ma'am, explain it to me.

"Why do men build for you a house,
And coax you to go in it,
While me, your cousin, they'll not let Stay near them for a minute?"

"I have a sting, I do confess,
And should not like to lose it;
But so have you, and when you're vexed
I'm very sure you use it."

"Well," said the Bee, "to you, no doubt,
It does seem rather funny;
But people soon forget the stings
Of those who give them honey."

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Today we have two nice, letters, one from John and one from Lula. I only wish there were many more of them. I think that by the time the next SUN comes out we will have a Corner full.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

ELAMS, N. C., June 21, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I have seen so few letters in the Corner for several weeks so I will try to write to you and the cousins. Hope all are well; I am, but very lonely since my school closed. I go to Sunday school every Sunday and enjoy it very much. I hope all the cousins go and have a nice time. Enclosed find five cents for the Corner. Hope all the cousins will write often as I enjoy the letters very much. With much love to you and all the cousins I remain

Your little niece
LULA B. FLOYD.

EAST DURHAM, N. C., June 26, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will, for the first time, try to write you a short letter. I am a small boy eleven years old. I go to school every day, Miss Annie C. Smith is my teacher. I go to Sunday school every Sunday at Carr M. E. church, Rev.

J. J. Johnson is our pastor. If my letter don't find its way to the waste basket will write again. Enclosed find half dime. Much love to the cousins

Yours truly,
JOHN B. KELLY.

The Superintendent's Dream.

There had been a very noisy ten minutes in the Sunday-school room, for two small boys were carrying around the baskets, and every child was noisily hunting up and depositing pennies, nickels and dimes.

It was missionary Sunday, and, after the two small boys, in short knee-trousers (very short ones), had climbed up to the superintendent's desk, and handed him the baskets, the noise suddenly ceased, and every eye was fastened on the baskets—the school was waiting to hear how much it all counted up.

But Mr. Ramsay seemed to be in a sort of a daze. What made him sit and look into the top basket in that dreamy way without speaking?

"Children," he said, suddenly, shaking off his sleepy look, "a curious thing has happened to me while Frank and Phil were going around; I, ve had a dream; no, I haven't been asleep, so you needn't laugh, but I've had a dream. I dreamed that our blessed Saviour was standing by me when the baskets were brought up, and, as I looked into them, I was surprised to see how few bright, wellrounded pieces of money were there. 'Lord,' I said, 'I do not know why this is,' 'I will tell you,' said the Lord 'when any one puts in a piece of money because he thinks his neighbor is looking at him, or because somebody gave it to him to put in; or if he gives five cents when he ought to give ten, or for any reason except because he loves Me and wants to serve Me, that takes from the value of his money, and when it reaches me it looks as you see it.'

"'But, Lord,' I faltered; 'there are some bright pieces.'

"'Look again,' He said to me, smiling. I looked, and there in the basket lay a little copper cent; I knew it was a copper cent because it said so on its face; but I had never seen a diamond half so bright; it glittered, it sparkled, it shone, and even the Lord seemed to look with pleasure on it. 'This,' He said to me, 'was given by a little one who never had a cent of her own before. This is the first time she had ever had a dress decent enough to appear among your scholars, but she has learned to love Me, and she has now given Me her whole treasure, and I love her, and she is loved in heaven.'"

¶The superintendent ceased speaking, and there was perfect silence; many eyes were cast down, as if many little givers were wondering how their pennies had appeared. If your eyes are sharp as mine, you might have seen one little face lighted up with a strange look of questioning joy, as if she knew something about the bright penny. She was a new scholar, and wore an old dress, evidently made for somebody else.

Then the superintendent said softly: "Let us finish our services by singing hymn 184, 'I Gave My Life for Thee!'" But the school forgot to ask, and the superintendent to tell, and so they never knew just how many dollars and cents they had gathered that day.—E. P. A., in the Presbyterian.

Severe Pain and Stiffness

4 Bottles of Hood's—Perfect Cure.

"I am not only willing, but anxious to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was taken with severe pain and stiffness in my limbs; at times being hardly able to walk. I consulted a physician, who pronounced my trouble sciatic rheumatism. Notwithstanding I took medicine, I became worse instead of better. I had read so much of Hood's Sarsaparilla's wonderful cures that I concluded to give it a fair trial. When I was taking the first bottle I could feel a change for the better: my appetite increased and my limbs became less stiff. I have now taken four bottles and am happy to say I can walk as well as ever I could before. I recommended to my cousin, who has received equally good effects from it. I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Mrs. CLARA FISHER, N. E. cor. Caroline and McIlhenny Sts., Baltimore, Md. Be sure to get Hood's.

A Lesson for Housekeepers.

WRITER IN GOLDEN DAYS.

It was convincing, as the reader may soon know. Although some other articles of furniture were concerned, the main influence was exerted by the rocking chair, and so I give it the place of honor.

A young Swedish girl was seeking employment. She had been helping to make dresses in a cheap shop, where the sedentary life and close rooms were making her ill, body and mind. She was a natural cook and home-keeper, and therefore she had determined to find some position as housemaid.

One day among the "Wanted" of a newspaper column she noticed two items that at once sent her simple, country-bred mind out on wanderings among flowers and birds and sunshine, until they quite obscured the calico, needles, and thread with which she worked; and the lessening light of that very evening found her walking swiftly toward 1810 and 1812 Oak Avenue, in the suburbs of one of our thriving cities.

The large yards, with sometimes a cow shed and chicken-house in the rear, looked homelike and pleasant to her. She knew well how to milk, and felt that if that work were required of her she would much rather do it than to prick her fingers over any more stitching.

She reached the first house, 1810. Timidly she told her errand. References? She had none, for she had never done housework in this country; but she gave the name of the shop at which she worked, and stated that she had been there for three years.

She was told the nature of the work required, and was shown the kitchen that would be the scene of a large share of her labors. The room was rather small and decidedly gloomy. The one window looked out toward the north. There were two tables, both bare and unpainted, used, evidently, for whatever the various kinds of work should demand. There were two grayish, wooden chairs, looking to the young girl, tired with the long day's labors, very hard and unattractive. The floor was quite bare,—not a strip of carpet anywhere.

A room over the kitchen, small and low, was shown her as the sleeping-room that she would occupy. There was a comfortable-looking bed, a light-stand, a dreary wash stand, and another straight-backed, hard chair. On the small stand was a hand-lamp, without shade. The window shade was of a dark stone color. A cheap hand-glass was suspended by a piece of twine against the wall, near the window. In front of the bed was a soiled square of carpet.

"Why," thought the young home-seeker, "should so rich and handsome a house have so lonely a kitchen and such a chamber as this?" The face of the mistress hardly helped in her bewilderment. It was a peculiar face. Sincerity and a sort of intellectual kindness were visible in it. It smiled, but the light of its smile did not warm. The poor girl felt an influence as of something cramped and mechanical settle down upon her. Her mind did not analyze, but she felt that the weather must have changed as if she would find snow and wind outside instead of flowers in the grass. At length, promising to give her decision on the morrow, if she should still be wanted, she found her way into the street again.

Quickly brushing away the tears that would fill her eyes, she walked resolutely toward 1812. What a beautiful, home like yard, and what a dear, old-fashioned house!

A sense of peace came to her from the plain, roomy surroundings, and she did her errand again with a calm confidence that re-assured and surprised her. A motherly face was soon lighted up with the prospect of some one to be of real help in the household once more. A kind voice said, "Now I'll show you the kitchen. We've been brightening it up a little lately. My housemaid has to spend so much of her time here that I always try to have it a pleasant place."

Pleasant it was, to be sure. Sun-lighted windows, draped with cheese-cloth curtains; at one window, a small work-table with a pretty shaded lamp upon it, standing on a soft Canton-flannel spread; a strip of clean carpet by the table, and extending nearly across that side of the room; and near the table a roony rocking-chair, its back draped with a white tidy, securely fastened at the top by a knot of wide, bright ribbon. It looked so restful and comfortable that the young seamstress decided that her back should get rested leaning against that very rocking-chair, if she could have her way about it.

She said that she was tired and would not go upstairs. She would take on trust the room that would be her sleeping-room, so sure she felt that a house with such a kitchen would have somewhere in its embrace a room with peace and comfort, and even beauty, for her.

So the rocking-chair decided that Mrs. A—, 1810 Oak Avenue, should lose her opportunity to secure an excellent servant, sweet, faithful, and kind as a daughter; and that Mrs. B—, 1812, should find all those blessings. Yet not the rocking-chair, either but the motherly beneficence which ordered that pleasant kitchen, and gave it its winning argument, the easy chair.

A Nineteenth-Century Vision.

BY J. FRE SMITH.

I was a comparative stranger in a Western city, but had entered, as usual, upon the work of the Sunday-school. After the session, a very plain but vigorous looking farmer asked me if I would go out into the country a few miles that afternoon, and speak to the children of a mission school, and to those of the country people who might gather at the school-house to hear me. I thanked him for the invitation, and told him I should be pleased to go if he felt that I could do any good. He said he would call for me, and at the appointed time we rode away. The beautiful stretch of prairie, the rich harvests on every side, the earnest little company of children, their eagerness for the words of life, and the pleasant greetings of plain-spoken people, made a very enjoyable afternoon. The most abiding influence of the day, however, was the story my companion told me while we were riding home.

He was a rough Western farmer. His life was well filled with work during the six days of the week; he had most of the early experience of pioneers,—fording rivers, driving cattle, fighting Indians, and keeping the wolf from the door in more senses than one.

As the prairies became more thickly settled, the villages sprang up here and there with schools, colleges, and churches. He had felt a strong calling toward the children too far from town to get to Sunday-school, and yet too scattered to meet near any of their homes; and he conceived the idea of conveying them to town, and his big carriage, "the Ark," became a familiar sight for miles around. The work was blessed, and he was very happy in it. After a while many of the families began to grow interested in the attendance of their children, and, as they prospered, they became owners of teams themselves, and drove to church of their choice, and thus, naturally, the Bethel school somewhat decreased in numbers. The question arose of dropping the work, many of the volunteer teachers being in favor of it. "Let us make it a subject of special prayer during the week," said their leader; and it was so agreed by all.

One evening, toward the close of the week, as our friend was in earnest prayer, he seemed to have his eyes open to a beautiful scene.

The bright harvest sun shone upon a broad slope of rolling prairie where the grain stood ripe and full. As he gazed, he saw entering the field a fine team of horses drawing a modera reaper. As the careful driver guided his horses across the field, great swaths of grain were deftly cut, rolled together, and bound, and the heavy sheaves lay along the ground. "What is the lesson for me?" he thought wonderingly. "I surely am not reaping souls for the kingdom at that rate, nor can I expect to; what does it all mean?" Then he looked more carefully about the field and spied a little boy put by his father in a gap in the fence to keep out the cattle. A little farther on was another boy guarding another break. As he looked, the last little fellow called to his neighbor, and said, "O Johnny! let's go off to play, there are no cattle near, and we are not doing any good." But Johnny manfully said, "Father put me here, and I shall stay, whether it does any good or not." The uneasy, restless boy went off alone. The old farmer began to get a little insight, and gazed with renewed earnestness. The great wagons were soon bearing the sheaves to the stack-yard, and he saw the faithful little lad trudging along behind.

When the grain was safely in, he put his little hand into his father's, and looking up, said, in boyish heartiness, "I kept the cattle out, and we've got the wheat all in!" A look of unspeakable tenderness and love beamed from the father's face; and, as the vision faded, the doubts all faded from the simple worker's mind. With renewed energy he took up his humble work; and now, when prone to be discouraged over the seeming uselessness of his labor, there comes a thought of the look of tender love when he shall see his heavenly Father face to face.—S. Practical Steps Toward Union.

BY THE REV. MARTYN SUMMERBELL, D. D.

It is a question with some of us, who have been preaching and talking Christian Union for a quarter century, if the time is not ripe for some thing practical in this direction. So far, fine words have buttered no parsnips; and, the spirit of union is in the air, to the many it is merely an iridescent vision. And yet, might not an alliance be struck between the Christians, the Free Baptists and the Congregationalists, with profit to all concerned? These bodies already possess much in common; and each, so far as I know them, permits wider divergence of doctrinal sentiment in its own membership than exists between the denominations as such. And overtures of organic union have been made, notably between the Christians and Free Baptists, which were progressing finely until suddenly terminated in 1886, and still more recently in the utterance of the last Triennial Council of the Congregationalists, respecting possible union with the Free Baptists. This expression reopens the whole subject and calls for some response.

In the light of recent experiences in these affairs, it may be taken for granted that direct organic union between either two of these denominations may not be immediately expected. Three barriers intervene.

1. The attitude of doctrinal extremists who, from loyalty to their own past, will sternly oppose any movement that fails to support the doctrinal positions with which they have been identified.

2. The tendency of denominational life to self-perpetuation. A denomination is an organism. The more vigorous its growth the more jealously it resists self-effacement.

3. The conservatism of fixed capital as invested in publishing houses, mission boards, theological seminaries and the like. Many of these trusts are held on terms which require a continuity of denominational existence. In consequence, any activity from these sources may be relied on as inimical to organic union.

So much being understood, it remains to inquire if some arrangement may not be reached which shall secure some of the benefits of union while not disturbing property interests or overturning the formal existence of the denominations affected. The steps toward such a consummation would be:

1. Recognition, by prominent men in the three bodies mentioned, that such an alliance would be profitable and practicable.

2. A conference of such leading men to discuss and lay out a basis of alliance, not doctrinal, but practical and covering the points desired.

3. The understanding that the basis is to become operative only when ratified by the highest governing bodies of the three denominations.

4. The points to be reached to be something as follows:

(a) A proviso recognizing that the three bodies are in alliance, that they have common interests, and that they are to labor for the promotion of the common welfare, without detriment to denominational institutions as at present constituted, such as conferences, associations, publishing houses and theological seminaries; all of which are to be unaffected by the alliance, until time demonstrates the feasibility of closer union.

(b) That is consequence of the alliance, as church members make changes of residence, they be encouraged to choose a church home in the alliance, in preference over any other. The saving in membership under a compact of this tenor should soon show marked gain to the churches.

(c) That ministers be free to accept calls from any church, or churches, within the alliance limits; feeling the same liberty in so doing, as if making change within their own denomination; and that, while remaining within the alliance, their names be retained on their own denominational lists, as if still working exclusively with their own people.

Could some such plan be adopted by these three denominations, it would mark a new era in the church. At once we could feel that we were making progress in the recognition of Christian brotherhood. The smaller churches, which are clamoring for pastors, could unite in calling a minister more able than could be supported by a single congregation. Ministers now unemployed, because their gifts are hardly fitted for present relations, could have wider range, with better prospect of service. One can easily perceive obstacles to the plan proposed; but it is submitted with the conviction that there are none, which a brave Christian spirit and devotion to the Master may not easily overcome. Grant that it may be a dream, but how we would welcome the dawn of the new century, if it were to present this dream as a reality. May it not be hoped that brethren in the three denominations mentioned will give the proposition their prayerful attention?—N. Y. Independent.

A Son's Tribute.

My father and mother, both of them, for their time, were well educated; for their schooling, for the most part, "working their way." Mother could read Virgil beautifully to the last; so could father. First a farmer's son, next a village merchant's clerk, after that till the end my father was a Christian lawyer, who never one time prevented justice, or shamed the Methodist church. Our folks were Methodist in lead—being all they could for the church. (Two years I was sexton for old Trinity—when it was poor and kept the Discipline; my mother and sisters—that expenses might be saved—for nearly one year sweeping it out Saturdays.) Our parents "knew and loved the Methodist discipline and doctrine;" the doctrine they lived, the discipline they kept. Having promised to keep the rules of the church, they felt in honor bound to keep them. If they had made up their minds to break them, in order to preserve truth, they would first of all have withdrawn from the church. And this is the course several thousand of our half-and-half Methodists ought now to take. But they did not wish to attend Germans, theaters, and such like; nor did their children ever once ask of them privilege to do such un-Methodistic things. We respect the consciences of our parents, and so grew up to respect the church, and not "shoddy," backslidden Methodists.—Bishop Haygood, in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

For Our Readers.

If you can make eighty words from letters contained in the word "MONTREAL" you can have a FREE TRIP to the World's Fair and return, as the publishers of that well known magazine, "DOMINION ILLUSTRATED," offer to pay expenses to Chicago and return to the first person in each State sending a list of not less than eighty words as above. This is a popular way of attracting attention to a popular publication. A host of other valuable prizes will be given to successful contestants, and every one able to send a list of not less than sixty words will be awarded a prize valued by the publishers at not less than five dollars. As prizes are equitably divided among the different States persons residing in any locality have an equal opportunity of securing the free trip to Chicago, or one of the other valuable prizes for their State. This announcement appears in the leading newspapers of this State for the first time THE SAME DAY. Enclose twelve U. S. two-cent stamps with list of words for sample number of this elegant and profusely illustrated (96 pages) magazine, containing full particulars of this most liberal prize distribution. "Dominion Illustrated" is the leading and longest established magazine in British America (larger than Harper's, Century, Scribner's or Cosmopolitan). Its publishers are rated by mercantile agencies and worth over one hundred thousand dollars. Send promptly as date of postmark decides. Address "DOMINION ILLUSTRATED, GROUND FLOOR, Y. M. C. Assoc'n, MONTREAL, QUE."

By able, conservative management, safe investments, big rate of interest, low death rate, the Northwestern has won the love and applause of its policyholders and the respect and admiration of all who are acquainted with it.
Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."
Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C. says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policyholders."
Mr. R. B. Raney, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has no superior."

Meditation on Undeserved Joy.

What have I done, blessed Giver, to deserve these joys? I have frowned at thy providences and distrusted thy ways. I have raged when thou hast sent to my desires most merciful failure, in order to satisfy my desires. My tears have blasphemed against thee. My fears have shrunk from thee in darkness. My very cries to thee have been half defiant. And now thy smile has driven away, with the darkness, even the memory of fear. And now thou hast spoken, each syllable golden with blessing. And now thy sage providences have transformed every tear into a diamond, for a crown. I must receive my joy with awe and trembling, remembering my unworthiness. And how may I become more worthy of it? By accepting thee with thy gift. Thy love sent it; may it bind me to thy love. Thy wisdom devised it; may I win thy wisdom through it. Thy faithfulness will maintain and perpetuate it; let it lead me into the steadfastness of my Father. Lord, thou hast taught me by sorrow how to learn of joy. That stern school shall glorify this sweet one. The very unworthiness thou hast chosen to bless, with all its failures and errors, its doubts and impious despair, shall make me more worthy of blessing. Help me to pluck from the infidel cowardice thou hast crowned a new and kingly manliness. I rejoice that my desert did not win for me my joy, for then my folly would soon lose it for me. All is of thy love, dear Lover of men. Thou hast showered upon me blessings undeserved; hear now my prayer, and make me more deserving.—Golden Rule.

Women of Irritable Temper.

It is like living in a den of snarling animals to live with a person who has this sort of temper, writes Ella Wheeler Wilcox in an article on "The Destroyers of Domestic Edens," in the February Ladies' Home Journal.—Many an Eden is destroyed by it, while the possessor prides himself upon being a good Christian, and doing his whole duty by his family. Yet, if the soup lacks a little salt, or contains a little too much pepper, if a meal is a moment delayed, if a child is noisy in its mirth, if a drawer sticks, or a door slams, or a chair creaks, each trifle calls forth an exhibition of disagreeable temper, which ruins the comfort and peace of the household for an hour. Many a woman is addicted to this sort of temper and calls it "her nerves," and considers herself the most devoted wife and mother in the world. Yet if she is obliged to delay her dinner for any member of the family, if she is called from one task to perform another, if the children scatter their playthings, or leave their school books in the parlor, she indulges in such petulant scolding that a gloom settles over the whole household. She would consider it no difficult thing to die for that household, if it were demanded of her. But to control her irritable temper is a task too great to demand of her. And so the Eden is destroyed, and the children grow up eager to get out of the home where everything is uncomfortable, and the parents wonder why all their sacrifices are so poorly appreciated, why their children, for whom they have toiled and saved, seem to care so little about their home, and why they seem so anxious to seek pleasures elsewhere.

Hard on The Counsel.

Lawyers often make a jury suffer, but it is not often that a jury can hit a lawyer as neatly as the one did in the following instance.

The Boston Globe tells the tale of a young barrister, not noted for intelligence, who succeeded in having a client acquitted of murder. Meeting a friend a few days afterward, the barrister was greeted with warm congratulations.

"Yes," said the lawyer, mopping his brow, "I got him off; but it was a narrow escape."

"A narrow escape. How?"

"Ah! the tightest squeeze you ever saw. You know, I examined the witnesses and made the argument myself, the plea being self-defence. The jury were out two whole days. Finally, the judge called them before him, and asked what the trouble was.

"Only one thing," replied the foreman. "Was the prisoner's counsel retained by him or appointed by the court?"

"No, gentlemen, the prisoner is a man of means," said the judge, "and engaged his own counsel."

"I could not see what bearing the question had on the evidence," continued the lawyer; "but, ten minutes later, in filed the jury, and what do you think the verdict was?"

"What?" asked his friend.

"Why, not guilty, on ground of insanity."

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending of babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black and white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The finish and are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite productions of this greatest painting of Ida Wang, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1904. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (12x22 inches). The baby's life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1904, other great paintings by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did in the past year, "A Yard of Fancies," and "A White House Orphan" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

"PI A DAISY."

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1904 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a Fashion Magazine, its fashion-pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. Disasters Commenc d

It is a notable fact that when an individual violates the laws of God and nature disaster follows in some form. On Monday, July 10, the first great disaster came to the Chicago show in the burning of the cold storage building resulting in the loss of half a million dollars and between fifteen and twenty lives. It is only reasonable to expect to see this calamity followed by other and more serious mishaps. It will be wise for the people to carry life and accident policies when going to the city of corruption.

Suffolk Letter.

The first meeting in the basement of our new church, will be held on Wednesday night of this week. The building is nearing completion. It is our purpose to occupy by Sunday School, the first Sunday in August.

J. W. Rawls and R. H. Peel were licensed here last night. Their licensure was authorized by conference last fall, and it was delayed because they were at Elon College where they graduated in June. Rev. H. H. Butler was present and took part in the services.

The infant and only child of W. J. Green died last Friday night and was buried Saturday evening. The little one was a bright child seven months old. He was named after his father, and was the pride of their home. May the hearts of the parents go daily where the dear spirit of their darling.

A party of seven persons returned from the world's fair last week greatly pleased with the wonders of the exposition.

Brother Mood and wife visited Smithfield last week where he enjoyed a few days of over due rest with friends in the home of Mrs. Mood's parents.

I am so taxed by extra duties that I may not be able to send in these Monday notes for some weeks to come.

Our Modern Judaizers.

The Judaizers of the apostolic days were the Jews who had accepted Christ, but wanted to bind on the neck of the church the ritual and ceremonial laws. These laws they rightly claimed to be of divine obligation, but failed to see that by the Gospel of Christ which they owned, they had been all fulfilled and abrogated. St. Paul labored with them in vain to show them that they were denying Christ and building again the things they destroyed. These were the most formidable and dangerous adversaries of the Gospel. Like Jannes and Jambres, they resisted the truth by an imitation of it, setting up a gospel which was not a gospel.

The first general Council at Jerusalem condemned, but did suppress them. They have their successors still in the church who, in addition to the Gospel, which they hold in common with the rest, would also bind on the neck of the Christian church the yoke of all ancient law, under specious plea of Catholic consent and ancient usage. Granting the unity and continuity of the church, they argue that the churches of this and of every age bound by the law of the undivided Catholic church, i. e., the six general Councils. This was just the logic of the Judaizers in the Apostles' times—the continuity of the church required that the laws of Moses which God imposed on His Church must be universally and perpetually binding. This, says the Apostle, was "laying a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear."—Southern Churchman.

What Prohibition Means.

The outcome of a successful national prohibition of the liquor traffic will be:

1. Our government policy will be more on the line of a protection of the rights of the people.

2. Our finances and business relations will be benefited by a greater security and restored confidence.

3. The wheels of our industrial machinery will not only run smoothly but with greatly increased activity.

4. Money will be plenty, labor in demand, and general prosperity everywhere.

5. Our judicial decisions will be more in harmony with our profession of justice, and loyalty to our country.

9. Crime will be greatly diminished, and the people more contented and happy.

7. The good name and fame of our country will be greatly enhanced. —Democrat.

The press dispatches bring the information that the case on Sunday opening of the world's fair has been postponed by Supreme Justice Fuller until the fall term of the Supreme Court, which means that the directors of the fair will keep it open on Sundays through its entire existence. The original Chicago anarchists were hung, and it is a pity that there is not some legal recourse against these later anarchists, who have the world's fair in charge. They are no less guilty of treason against the United States government than Albert Parsons and August Spies, and their escape from just punishment is an evidence of the laxness of our American law.

It is the duty of the Christian people of this nation to stay away from this Sabbath-desecrating and God-dishonoring exhibition, which has outraged, not only all the principles of equity, but has brought shame and dishonor upon our national escutcheon. It is a pity that there is not some organized effort among Christian people against this outrageous action of the Chicago authorities. This incident but adds another link to the chain which is dragging its weary length along, and is manning American liberty and American honor.

With Roman Catholicism and the liquor traffic enthroned in our nation government, and with lawless men running riot in high places, there must needs be a regeneration of our national life, or we shall confront a species of vandalism as fearful as that which pillaged Rome. We may shut our eyes, but that does not put out the fire. The spirit of lawlessness and Sabbath desecration that is becoming the fashion in this country forecasts its downfall as surely as that sands fall through the hour glass. The storm must either be checked or it will become a cyclone that will engulf us in an overwhelming catastrophe. —Standard.

THE PULPIT.

The Greatest of all Names.

BY REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name. Phil. 5:2.

The nature and fullness of Christ is set forth in various ways in the Scriptures. Many beautiful and expressive symbols are used by the inspired writers to illustrate the character and work of Christ as our Lord and Savior. He is called the "chief corner-stone, elect, precious." His teaching, promises, and works are the foundation of the Christian church, and of our hopes of pardon and eternal life. He is "as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." His love, sympathy, and sustaining grace, bring comfort and strength to the soul in the hour of sorrow and affliction. He is "as rivers of water in a dry place." As living streams of water fertilize and make the earth productive, so the gospel of Christ civilizes and brings peace and happiness to the nations of the earth. Its "fruit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." He is the "bread of life." As bread sustains animal life, and enables a man to do the work committed to him, so Christ by his truth, spirit and promises quickens man to a new life, and imports strength necessary to the religious duties of life. He is the "pearl of great price." As the pearl was worth more to the merchant than "all that he had," so Christ is worth more to man than all that it is possible for him to secure in this life. He is "the shepherd and bishop of our souls." As the shepherd provides food for his sheep, and protects them from all danger, so Christ furnishes all needed spiritual food for his disciples, and guards them against all their spiritual enemies. He is "the bright and moving star." As the morning star reflect the light of the sun, so Christ reveals the Father in his love and sympathy for man. The morning star is a pledge of the faithfulness of God, and Christ is the strongest of all possible assurance of his abiding interest in and love for us. He "is the light of the world." As the light of the sun scatters the darkness of the night, and lights up the earth clothing it in robes of beauty, so Christ "the Son of Righteousness" scatters the clouds of ignorance and sin enlightening the world with light of divine truth and of an immortal hope. "I am come," said Christ, a light unto the world, that whosoever believeth in me should not abide in darkness." He is "a refiner and purifier of silver." As the refiner purifies the silver from all dross, so Christ cleanses the soul from the pollution of sin. He "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

The fullness of Christ is also set forth beautifully in the titles given to him in the Scriptures. He is "the Deliverer." This sets him forth in his office as the Deliverer of man from the guilt and power of sin, and the bondage of death. He is the King of kings, and Lord of all. He is clothed with authority over men and angels, and all are accountable to him. He is the "one mediator between God and man." Through him the blessings of God flow to man, and our prayers ascend to him. He is the Messiah, the anointed of the Lord. He was appointed by his Father to the great work of redeeming the world.

The names given to Christ also reveal his fullness, and the most beautiful of all is Jesus. This is the name referred to in our text. God hath "given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." This is a mighty name. There are names of great power in all the relations and departments of life. The most potent name in the commercial world is Rothschilds. He wields a greater power there than any of the rulers of earth. Cuvier is a great name in the scientific world, and his authority is felt there. Irving is a powerful name in the literary world. Wellington is a powerful name in the military world, and Washington in the political world, but above all these names the name Christ Jesus the mighty Son of God and Saviour of the world. The one world Jesus arrested Saul of Tarsus in his murderous career, and made him a gentle tender loving Christian. When on his journey to Damascus "there shined round about him a light from heaven: and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me." He was conscious of the presence of a divine being, but he did not know who it was; "and he said, who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." This was a new and startling revelation to Saul, and for the first time he realized who and what Jesus is. That name humbled and converted him. There was power in that name to quicken his conscience, enlighten his mind, tender his heart, and turn the whole current of his life into a new channel. It was this name Jesus that gave to the world the great apostle to the gentiles, the mightiest preacher of all ages. This name holds 400,000,000 of the human race with omnipotent spell. This name in Germany means more than Emperor William; in England more than queen Victoria; in France more than President Carnot; in America more than Washington. In all the long line of great names of the past and the present there is none so potent as the name Jesus. There is a redeeming power in it. It speaks to us of the infinite love of God for sinful man, and of his burning desire for his salvation. It tells how he longs to bring the wandering prodigal back again to his father's house. It tells us that there is a fountain for sin and uncleanness open to all men. Millions have washed and been cleansed.

I have seen men who were bound hand and foot by Satan, and in the most cruel bondage, made free by the magic of the name above all names when no power on earth could free them. John Newton was a great sinner. He commanded a vessel employed in the slave trade, and became addicted the vilest of sins; but the name Jesus humbled and redeemed him, and he became one of the most successful ministers of his day.

How sweet the name Jesus to the believing penitent. In it is revealed a tender loving Saviour who died for his salvation. Luther said, "I would fall into the arms of Jesus if he stood with a drawn sword in his hands," but he found not a sword to kill Christ stood with open arms to receive him. To every burdened soul he says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He demonstrated his marvellous compassion by dying for us; and he will not now repulse the penitent sinner. He said, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound: to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them who mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." A sceptical soldier lay dying in the hospital of his wounds. He sent for a chaplain, and in various ways, tried to get rid of his doubts, upon the wall was hung the Scripture, "Who so cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out," which caught his attention on a night. In the morning, he asked to have a letter from his mother read to him. The reader came to the words, "Who so cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." "There" said he, "that is what I want. I thought mother said that. Read it again. It was read. "Mother says that, does she?"—"Yes."—"And the Bible says so too?"—"Yes."—"Then it must be true. Jesus will receive me. Here, Lord, I give myself up." How sweet the name of Jesus was to him. There was music in that name to him. Poets love the music of the mountain stream, the song of birds, the soft whispers of morning breeze and the evening zephyr; but there is no music so sweet as the name Jesus. "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ear! It soothes his sorrow, heals his wounds, and drives away his fears."

How sweet the name of Jesus to the believer in the hour of sorrow. It is then a fountain of consolation and joy. A Christian child was struck with that terrible disease the leprosy. A cell was constructed for her, where she must spend her days alone. As she entered it, a sense of her utter helplessness and desolation came over her, and she fell to the floor in great agony. She was soon conscious of some uplifting presence and power, and she seemed to hear a voice saying, "My child, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Her sufferings were very great. Her eyes grew dark, one after the other, but in her blindness she saw her Saviour ever present. I have seen men overwhelmed with disaster, and all hope fled; but the name Jesus scattered the clouds, and a sunburst of eternal goodness poured into their souls filling them with unspeakable joy. The apostle Peter was once in great sorrow, and his hope was gone; but the name Jesus inspired him with new hope, and in the fullness of his soul he exclaimed: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."

How sweet the name Jesus in the hour of death. It brings peace and hope when every thing else fails. All realize the need of Jesus in that hour. A pastor called at the office of the man who had charge of the railroad shops to see him. He found him to be a man of great mental power. He talked freely on the subject of religion, and as they parted he said to the pastor: "I am interested in church matters, and am always glad to see ministers when they call. But I have thought the subject over long and carefully, and have come to the deliberate decision that I have no need of Jesus." Only a few days after this he was taken sick, and died suddenly. His last words were: "Who shall carry me over the river?" Then he realized his need of Jesus. His learning and philosophy could do nothing for him in that hour. How many have learned this sad truth in the dying hour. Jesus is our only hope then, and he never fails to carry his disciples safe over the river. He can be trusted with abiding confidence. Paul said, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." In his hands we are safe, and can rejoice in hope of the glory of God. The distinguished preacher Chrysostom was exiled because of the faithfulness of his preaching, and he had so much influence over the heathen people among whom he lived that his enemies determined to change his place of exile. His guards were to conduct him to a place on the Black Sea, and were ordered to make the journey as exhausting as possible. The plan was to wear him out, and kill him in this way. Over three months over hard roads, and through storms, the journey lasted. Stopping at a church near Comona, he had premonitions that he was nearing the end of life; and he begged his guard not to take him any further but they forced him on. They had only gone four miles when they saw that he was dying, and they carried him back to the church. There he put on white robes, received the holy communion, offered his last prayer and thanksgiving which were his last words, "Glory to God for all things, amen." Then he lay down, and expired, September 14, 407. Jesus was with him, and leaning on his strong arm he walked down into the valley and shadow of death without fear. The difference between the Christian with Jesus, and the man without him in death is strikingly illustrated in the dying experience of Paul and Lord Byron. Paul said, "The time of my departure is at hand. I have a desire to depart and be with Christ. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Byron said, "My days are in the yellow leaf,

The flower, the fruit of life are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone."

Sinner which experience would you have? Paul's, or Lord Byron's? This is for you to decide. God loves you, Christ died for you, and all heaven is interested in your salvation; but you alone can decide the question, and you must do it.

Christ's authority embraces heaven and earth, "and at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." The dominion of Christ is spreading, and the power of his name is increasing as the ages roll by.

"Other dominions seem to be giving out: this seems to be enlarging. Spain has had to give up much of its dominion. Austria has been wonderfully depleted in power. France had to surrender some of her favorite provinces. Most of the thrones of the world are being lowered, and most of the sceptres of the world are being shortened; but every Bible printed, every tract distributed, every Sunday school class taught, every school founded, every church established, is extending the power of Christ's name. That name has already been spoken under the Chinese wall, and in Siberian snow castle, in Brazilian grove and in Eastern pagoda. That name is to swallow up all other names. That crown is to cover up all other crowns. That empire is to absorb all other dominions."

The Misfortunes of Job.

NUMBER 5.

We spoke in our last paper about one of the reasons assigned by men why God allowed Satan to bring poverty and misery upon Job. Now we will take up the next reason, viz., that God desired to chasten Job in order to make him a better man. If Job was bad, this would be a very plausible reason. We have numerous cases showing that God often brings people into subjection to his will by afflictions. Jonah received the divine command to go to Nineveh, one of the most wicked cities of ancient times, and to preach the gospel there. Jonah did not feel like he was equal to the occasion. He first hesitated, then resolved not to go, and then fled in a ship from the voice of God. But he was thrown into the sea to pacify its fury; he was swallowed by an enormous fish that he might be carried back to land again; and it was this narrow escape from a watery grave that brought him to his senses and enabled him to cast himself unreservedly upon God's altar. Jacob, the patriarch, deceived his aged father and stole from him the blessing intended for the elder brother. He thought he had done something exceedingly cunning, but it was all brought home to him when his ten sons brought to him the coat of his much beloved Joseph, all besmeared with blood and torn to tatters. Jacob deceived Isaac, and Jacob's sons in return deceived him. Jacob remembered the fault of his youth and resolved to do better. Good John Bunyan lay in Bedford jail for long weary years. It was a cruel confinement, and yet it not only made Bunyan a better man, but also enabled him to preach to thousands who would never have heard him otherwise. The Israelites of old groaned under the Egyptian yoke for four centuries. It was an exceedingly hard fate, they thought, but during that time they were acquiring a knowledge of the famous Egyptian arts and sciences which were to enable them when they became a free people to build for themselves a kingdom whose glory was to attract the attention of many great nations and whose temples of God were to be the fountain-head of all true religious inspiration. They were severely chastened, but it was for their good—their offspring reaped the benefit.

Again, when we look around us now, we can see or we can think we see many illustrations of the chastening of God to make people better.

Here is a man who has let his appetite run so completely away with him that he is now the victim of all kinds of intemperance. He often forms resolutions to break off from his bad habits and do better. But his efforts to reform are too weak. He cannot muster sufficient strength to control himself. It is that person's desire to stop drinking strong drink, but the desire is too weak. By some mysterious providence a beautiful little child is snatched from his home. He is broken down with grief at his loss, and feels like he cannot stand the bereavement. In his hopelessness his thoughts revert to God, in him he finds consolation, and to him he vows to be a sober man the remainder of his life. He is reformed by the chastisement of the Lord.

But the question arises with us, what had Job done to have caused God to chasten him? Is he not declared the most righteous man of his country? Job was not a drunkard. He did not gamble. He did not cheat his neighbors. He did not live intemperately. He did not withhold from God the things that belonged to God. Then why the chastisement? Was there any real ground for it. Had Job merited it? The Bible does not say so.

A father whips his child when the child does something very wrong, and we look upon the father as acting rightly. But suppose the father were to whip the child when the child had done nothing bad whatever. What would people say of such a man? Would they say he did right? Would they consider him just? Most assuredly not. He would be condemned at the bar of public opinion and no one would regard him fit to be a father. Just so with our heavenly Father. Were he to chastise us when we had done nothing wrong, how quickly we would find it out, that we were the victim of injustice. But contrary to this, we are almost always sure to trace all our evils back to some cause which was created by our own doings. So as Job was not a bad man we must look somewhere else for the cause of Job's distress and misery.

HERBERT SCHOLZ.

Lowly Service.

The following conversation occurred between two young men of the Y. P. S. C. E., one of whom, to secure an education, had given up a brilliant business prospect, was contemplating a life of service in the Christian ministry.

"When you look forward to your life work," said the younger, "and consider the great good some men have done, and how little you seem able to accomplish, do you not think your life will be insignificant compared with other lives?"

"You see this little pink?" was the reply "It is insignificant in size compared with a great tree, but it has qualities—beauty and fragrance—which are very pleasing. So our lives. Although we may be unable to accomplish great reforms, by acts of kindness and love we can fill the atmosphere about us with the fragrance of little pinks, and thus be of some service."

"Have you no desire to secure a great reputation and be prominent?" he again asked.

"I would rather be loved than worshipped. When I became a Christian I brought all my ability and laid it at the feet of Jesus. He will use it to accomplish some good. Whatever he has for me to do I will undertake, be it great or small. In our society the work of the flower committee can be made equal to that of the president, if performed faithfully."

"Have you regretted the sacrifice you made to live for the Master?"

"The pleasure and sweetness of the Christian life is reward enough for any sacrifice. 'Whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.' A person can learn the truth of these words only by experience. I have lost my life for the present, but a little way in the future I can see it clothed in beauty and splendor. A life of service for others is the only true life. Try it. Forget yourself. Then you will develop a stronger, nobler character, and be lifted up to a close communion with God." — Golden Rule.

Waiting for My Boy.

REV. J. J. HALL, D. D. IN GOLDEN RULE.

A few years ago, in one of the growing cities of New York State, there was a home into which the great sorrow of a father's death had entered. The sons, of whom there were several, were of a nervous temperament, full of animation, and exposed to the many temptations which endanger the young in large cities. The widowed mother realized the vast importance of her responsibility, and many a time did she look upward to the heavenly Father for divine aid in the guidance and protection of her fatherless boys. She made it a rule never to retire to rest at night until all her sons were at home. But as the boys grew older this became a severe tax on both her time and health, often keeping the faithful mother watching until midnight hour.

One of the boys displayed a talent for music, and became a skillful violinist. He drifted, however, among the wrong class of people, and was seen at balls and parties that seldom dispersed until the early hours of the day. Upon one occasion it was nearly seven o'clock in the morning before he went home. Entering the house and opening the door of the sitting-room, he saw a sight that can never be effaced from his memory.

In the old rocking-chair sat his aged mother fast asleep, but evidently she had been weeping. Her frilled cap, as white as snow, covered her gray hair; the knitting had fallen from her hands, while the tallow from the candle had run down her dress. Going up to her, the young man exclaimed, "Why, mother! What are you doing here?" His voice startled her, and upon the question being repeated, she attempted to rise, and piteously, but O! so tenderly, looking up into his face, said, "I am waiting for my boy."

That sad look, and these words, so expressive of that long night's anxiety, quite overcame the lad, and throwing his arms around her, he said, "Dear mother, you shall never wait again like this for me." That resolution has never been broken. But since then that mother has passed into the world beyond, where she still watches and waits, but not in sorrow, for her boy.

What were the results of all that godly mother's faithfulness, patience, and love? The young man deliberately and forever consecrated his talent unto the Lord. Never again did he play for dances or midnight parties. He did not give up his music. He could not. He must sing and play. He soon organized music classes, kept spiritual aims constantly in view, and taught his pupils to praise God with heart and voice. He found engagements in public schools, and more than thirty thousand pupils have received instruction from him. He ranks high as a composer, and has given the world some of its sweetest and most sacred songs.

Not a few young people have thus far failed to enter upon the grandeur and ecstasy of life because they have not consecrated their talent to the Lord. If it be skill in music, then let us "sing for Jesus." If it be the ability to accumulate money, let this be for the Lord. Whatever the ruling passion, the controlling purpose, the uppermost desire, our calling in life, let all be for the glory of Him "who loved us and gave himself for us."

And let us remember that when this is done, and our talent, whatever it may be, is thus consecrated to the Lord, our heavenly Father, in accepting it, does not take it from us in the sense of depriving us of it; but he leaves it with us for our enjoyment, and greater good we can do thereby, so that it becomes the more precious to us.

Does Your Minister Suit You?

"I do not remember to have heard in my father's house one disrespectful or unkind word respecting a minister." That is what we overheard a young woman say not long ago. She was paying a high compliment to her parents, as well as to her minister, and she described a condition of things which should exist in every Christian home in the land. "Ministers are men," says the Epworth Herald. They are not perfect. There are flaws in character, and inconsistencies in life. But many persons magnify molehill infirmities into mountains of real badness. The reckless handling of ministerial infirmities is one of the sins of the times. Poisoned arrows are shot from a thousand bows. A minister's reputation is his capital. It is everything. You might a hundred times better burn his home than assail his good name. As well waylay him and stab him as break down public confidence in his integrity and religious character. A bad man should not be shielded because he carries the shepherd's crook. But the fact that he carries the crook should not subject a man to unjust or malignant criticism.

All the more ought Christians to be outspoken and true blue in loyalty to their ministers. Are others against him? They should be for him with emphasis. Are others talking him down? They should talk him up. Suppose he does not suit you? Well, he cannot suit everybody, and he is an ideal pastor in the estimation of a good many people who know almost as much as you do. Kind words count, speak them often. Allow no one to speak disparagingly of the minister in your presence. You will very likely do something to cure the speaker of the habit. Give the faithful man a lift every little while. Talk him up, if he deserves it, on the way to church, in the home, in society, on the street, on the train, everywhere. He will take courage—will preach better sermons—will put increased enthusiasm into all his multiplied duties. And you will have the great joy of knowing that your bracing words were a real tonic, and helped him to conquests he would never have achieved while struggling alone.—Record of Our Work.

Chicago Enterprise

Frequent instances, says the Railway Review, of what can be done on occasion have been recorded concerning Chicago entitle the city to pre-eminence, but one of the most remarkable exhibitions of energy was brought to completion early in the present month, when the largest grain elevator in the world, having a storage capacity of 3,680,000 bushels, was commenced on April 1 and finished and commenced business on May 3, a period of thirty-three days; having within one week from that time more than one million bushels of wheat in store. More than eight million feet of lumber were used in the construction of the building, which is of the ordinary crib style. The elevator is equipped throughout with electric lights and is completely furnished with all styles of modern machinery. From six to nine hundred men were continuously employed night and day in its construction. If any one knows of a quicker job, we should like to have it reported.

Among Our Exchanges.

An enterprising eastern newspaper has, by mail and otherwise, ascertained the opinions of the members of Congress with regard to the repeal of the Sherman Silver Law, and declares that a majority of the members of the House of Representatives have now said over their own signatures that they propose to vote for the repeal of the Sherman Silver Law. An absolute majority is never necessary to pass a bill in the House of Representatives, there being always many absentees. Most bills are passed and other business done by the vote of less than 100 members a majority of those present governing, unless the point of no quorum is raised. So far as ascertained, 140 are in favor of repeal without qualifications, eleven with trifling qualifications; ten are against repeal and twenty-seven for free coinage.—Selected.

Two telescopes of enormous size are now in process of construction and when completed will afford facilities for examining the heavens such as have not yet been attained. The lenses for both are being constructed by the Clarke's. One is forty inches in diameter, one of the largest glasses that ever came from that famous factory; the other, designed for photographic use, has a 24-inch lense. It is expected that with the former instrument important discoveries will be made, while with the latter photographs are to be taken which, it is hoped, will be far superior to anything that has yet been known in the line of celestial photography.—Ex.

Sunday opening at the World's Fair has won. It ought to have won earlier. A handful of well-meaning but misguided persons have opposed it, but the great masses of the intelligent, progressive people of the country have been in favor of it all along.—Globe-Democrat.

Is it not strange that a great daily paper, which professes to be the advocate of law and morality, should make so many gross mistakes in eight lines? Sunday opening has not won. Twenty-five millions of people are a pretty good "handful." If the anarchists, saloon-keepers, certain secular editors, Seventh day Adventists and infidels are the only intelligent, progressive people of the country, the rest of us are certainly a sorry lot. Surely some irresponsible scribbler must have slipped that paragraph in and it must have escaped the usually keen eyes of the managing editor of our contemporary. The secular press and the Chicago commissioners may as well understand that we intend to "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer!"—St. Louis Advocate.

A shout of triumph went up from a majority of the secular papers of the country last Monday over the desecration of the Sabbath by the world's fair managers on the day before; As had been threatened, the gates were thrown wide open and thousands of the hoodlum and anarchistic element thronged the streets and buildings of the exposition. Doubtless by the time this reaches our readers, an injunction will have been served on the exposition managers and the ease will come up in the United States Courts. We cannot believe that the directors of the Fair will be allowed to violate with impunity the law of Congress, which closed the gates, or that they will be permitted thus to override the overwhelming sentiment of the Christian people of America. No more fragrant outrage than this desecration of the Sabbath has ever taken place in our country, and every Christian patriot's voice should be raised in this emergency. No Christian who has any respect for himself or his religion can afford to go near the fair until this matter is decided, and if the gates are opened permanently on Sunday, let ministers, Churches, Young Men's Christian Associations and all young people's organizations boycott the institutions and keep all their friends whom they can influence away from it. Let no Lutheran Methodist disgrace himself by going near the law-

Eternal Vigilance

Is the price of health. But with all our precaution there are enemies always lurking about our systems, only waiting a favorable opportunity to assert themselves. Impurities in the blood may be hidden for years or even for generations and suddenly break forth, undermining life and hastening death. For all diseases arising from impure blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is the unequalled and unapproached remedy. It is King of them all, for it conquers disease.

less and (to less institution any more than he would attend a Sunday theater or Sunday baseball game. If the Sunday-opening continues, the managers will make the Sabbath a great free day, and it will be the most disgraceful exhibition of a profaned Sabbath and of violated law that the people of the United States have ever seen. Hundreds of excursion trains tied by a two-thirds vote of the Senate would have all the power of the state of the United States and consequently would repeal such parts of the treaty and other acts as might conflict with the treaty. Nothing official has been said or is likely to be said about this matter at the Department of State, but it is known that the Chinese legation that the new Chinese ministers is expected to arrive in Washington about the last of July, and there are reasonable grounds for the belief that he has been instructed to propose the negotiation of a new treaty. If he does, it is extremely probable that he will find the administration favorably disposed.

Impressive religious services are frequent in Washington, but few have more so than the memorial service in honor of the late Senator Stanford, of California, held in the Metropolitan church Sunday. The few occupied for many years by the Stanford family was heavily draped in black cloth over which were scattered sprays of fern and honeysuckle. The service was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Dalby, and the sermon was preached by Bishop Harts from a double text—Proverbs xxii, 29; First Corinthians, xii, 8-13. Space for a reproduction of the entire sermon, but the aptness and truthfulness of it were so apparent here, where Senator Stanford was so well known and so highly appreciated as a man and a Christian, that I quote some of its most striking sentences that your readers who were unacquainted with Senator Stanford may know what manner of man the world has lost: "There was none more reverent than he, none more glad to bear the gospel or to whom the Word came with deeper sympathy, for he was fond of speaking at home of the Capital he did not leave his religion behind him, but brought it to Washington, where it constituted the public life. The deeply religious life of Senator Stanford was plain to all who came in contact with him. He made no effort to speak of religion, but spoke of it as though it was his usual thought. The two sole articles in his creed were God's goodness toward men and man's charity to his neighbor."

For steady nerves—Hood's Sarsaparilla. To gain strength—Hood's Sarsaparilla. For pure blood—Hood's Sarsaparilla. For steady nerves—Hood's Sarsaparilla. To gain strength—Hood's Sarsaparilla. For pure blood—Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Washington Letter.

The administration has the power to annul the objectionable features of the Gentry-Chinese exclusion law, and many well informed people are of the opinion that this power will in the near future be exercised. This no pessimism in Senator Stanford. He had always faith in the progress of the world towards lofty ideas and higher achievements. The calamities and disappointments happening to both individuals and nations he was accustomed to think of as incidental. Years after, a soldier came back from the Mexican war, and having sought out Dr. Marshall, presented him with the same Bible, now soiled with the dust of many a weary march and stained with the blood of him to whom Marshall had given it years before. The bearer said: "Do you remember this Bible and the man to whom you gave it in the penitentiary some years ago? He told me to find Charlie Marshall and give it to him, and tell him he died a Christian because of that Bible and the love that went with it."—Christian Herald.

Even So.

"The difference that divide members of the same church are often so trivial and insignificant that they become a disagree to those who are parties to them. There will be differences among men on every subject, and Christian people are not an exception, but Christians should exercise patience and forbearance so that differences do not develop into hostilities. Not only is the peace and prosperity of the Church put in jeopardy, but the example set before the world is vicious and destructive. When men cannot have their own way, the only rational thing to do is to accept the situation and fall in with the way that has been decided on. In any event, the majority should rule. Men are satisfied that it shall be so in civil and political affairs, and it indicates a narrow and unchristian spirit when it belated in finance and business that action of the local government of that country in closing the mints to the coinage of silver on private account has thrown a bombshell, so to speak, into the already complicated financial discussion in the United States, causing a special meeting of the cabinet and setting the brains of the President and his advisers to work to decide what, if any, action shall be taken by this Government. The impression is that his action on the part of India has made the proposed re-assembly of the international monetary conference useless."

Elon College Vacation Notes.

The students and friends of Elon are always anxious to hear from the place where they spend so many of their happy hours, and we are very anxious to say something concerning her growth prosperity, losses, etc., during vacation

Since commencement there has been several changes at Elon. We are all very sorry to lose our esteemed and highly respected friends Mr. A. J. Rawles and family. Who will come to fill their vacancy?

Rev M. L. Hurley is building a nice house on his lot. Dr. Herndon is enlarging his dwelling, this adds very much to the place.

Mrs. E V. Moring has been appointed Post Mistress here.

Prof Holleman has just returned from Morehead city and reports a and encouraging trip

Mrs. S. A. Holleman and son, Master Long Holleman, are visiting Mrs. Sidney Holleman of Chatham.

Mrs. Winbourne of La Grange, N. C., has been visiting relatives here since commencement. Drs. Herndon and Newman have just arrived from a canvassing tour.

Mr. Avent and wife have returned to their home in Jonesboro, N. C. Mrs. Avent has been here since commencement with her father Rev. C. A Boone-

Dr. W. S Long is canvassing in the eastern part of the state.

Mrs. E O. Moring and daughter, Miss Berta are visiting in the eastern part of the state.

Will Boone is in Pittsboro.

There is a batchlors hall here also an old maids hall, we think a compromise would be effective.

Mr. A. F. Young is down about Raleigh visiting friends.

Mrs. Dr. G. W. Long, her daughter, Miss Lorena, and little George have been visiting us since commencement, we hope their many friends will pray for them that they may be comforted in their sad bereavement.

Mr. Hurley preached us a good sermon on Sunday.

The young people of Elon had a picnic at Cables pond not long since all went well until in the evening when it commenced raining very hard. We had to come home in open wagons.

The prospects for better times are very encouraging around Elon at present. We have never seen better crops, gardens, cows, hogs and more fruits than we have at present.

Come to Elon next fall and bring your friends with you we are prepared to take care of more students than ever and to give better quarters, provisions, etc.

We hope to see Elon start off with a larger attendance next session than ever.

W. S. LONG, Jr.

Elon College, July 3rd, 1893.

Holland Items.

Our Children's Day at Holland Christian church came off yesterday as appointed; and although the day was very warm and the clouds betokened rain, and notwithstanding we had failed to announce it at previous meetings, a very large congregation was present to witness the most interesting exercises. The children acquitted themselves most admirably. No attention or pains had been spared on the part of Misses Myrtie Daughtry, Netta Butler and others to make a success and much credit reflected on them, by the brilliant rendering of all the parts, especially the music which was most thrilling and inspiring. The collection at the closing of services was good. Exercises all over, the congregation were invited to remain and take refreshments which had been prepared for all. Many remained, some on the church ground and others dining with friends in the village. Dinner all over, the ringing of the bell called the congregation together again to hear a most appropriate and eloquent address to the children by our young friend J. H. Jones. We are glad to know our young ministers as students and others from Elon college show a disposition to work and go at it with a vim and commendable zeal. They are good representatives of the grand work in training and disciplining the minds of the men and ladies at Elon for the busy scenes of life.

Our young brethren J. Wallace Rawls and R. H. Peele were expected at Suffolk yesterday to receive their license as ministers, as ordered at our last annual conference. We are hoping for much good work from the young brethren.

Children's Day exercises will take place (no preventing providence) at Holy Neck next Sunday.

R. H. HOLLAND.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—I will give the readers of the SUN a few words from my field.

Graces Chapel is doing well. They have a good Sunday school, prayer meeting and large and attentive congregation. The financial condition is better than it has been. We think all the conference assessments and pastor's salary will be paid off in due time. The spiritual condition of the church is very good. At the last appointment I baptized 4 candidates in Bro. E. Worthley's pond. We are expecting to dedicate the church this fall. We have an evening appointment that is well attended.

Union, Va is one of our old churches. Here we are getting along very well with the work. The spiritual condition is very good. The financial condition is not as good as the brethren would like, but the present growing crops are very promising, and we hope to meet all the request of conference. Our congregation is yet good, although there is preaching at Olive Branch Baptist church at the same hour that we preach. We have been the pastor of this dear congregation for the last 10 years.

Goshen Chapel is moving on fair in the work. We hope to have the house in readiness for the protracted meeting, yet there is a great deal to be done. Our congregation is good and the spiritual condition is very good.

Antioch, Warren, is moving on steadily. The Sunday school is in a flourishing condition with Sister N. J. Harris as the very popular Supt. She is a good Supt and a fine teacher. We think the prospects are very good for success here. Miss M. Mosley, the popular day school teacher at Antioch gave an entertainment, not long since in interest of the church, and she raised $21.08 this was very highly appreciated by the church.

Moore Union is moving slowly, but trust we will be in full readiness by conference

Haywood, Harper's Chapel, Christie, Floyd's school house, and another mission point, we will give some account of the work at these places later on. There is much to be done in the Christian church, and some body will have to make sacrifices for Christ's sake to build up the cause and save souls. Who is ready to lay himself upon the altar of the Lord?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., preached for Dr. Jones last Sunday night.

D. J. Mood of the Raleigh church and his wife spent the fourth of July in Eastern Virginia with relatives where they had a pleasant time.

Programme for the district meeting at O'Kelly's is late in coming out but let every church send its delegates, and every minister in the district attend.

We have an article this week from Rev. Jubilee Smith of Ga. He always writes something readable. Let us hear from you often Bro. Smith.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., and N. G. Newman will represent the CHRISTIAN SUN at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention. Please renew your subscription through them.

We ask the pardon of Rev. J. W. Fonville for the omission of his name in our account of the commencement at Elon College. He was present, and was much interested in the well-fare of the College.

Three of our dear friends have within the last few days been called from labor to reward. First, Sister Holmes of Popes Chapel, second, Sister Lee of Wake Chapel and third, Bro. Wm. Utley of Wake Chapel. May the Lord bless these dear families in this their day of sadness.

Shallow Ford heads the list with 4 1/2 new subscribers in answer to our call for an average of 2 new subscribers from each church to enable us to buy a new press. What church next? Remember these new subscribers are to make a press fund. Let every church strive to get on the roll.

We notice from the Ohio Press that the commencement exercises at Antioch College were of the highest order. There were nine graduates. Everything passed off to the delight of all. President Long remains at the head of this grand institution of learning with bright prospects for the future.

The Norfolk congregation was assembled and expecting Dr. Jones to make his appearance when news was received that he was lying at the point of death. He sustained a sudden and serious attack of illness and for hours his life was despaired of. At last accounts he had slightly recovered. Let prayers ascend for his recovery.

The Sunday opens claim to voice the sentiment of the people, and charge the Sunday-closing sentiment to "a few religious bigots." Now look at the figures, as summarized by Secretary Dickenson after several weeks' labor:

For Sunday closing....25,825,086!
For Sunday opening... 87,507!

Summarized they give an answer to the question, "Do the people demand that the fair be open on Sunday?"—Evangelical Messenger.

The Christian church will be finished in a few weeks, the basement is to be finished at once and occupied. When the church is complete it will be the prettiest in this section. The architect, Mr. Charles Cassell, of Baltimore, has done himself proud in this plan, particularly the inside, in making such a handsome auditorium pulpit, choir recess or platform, all being marvels. Then the gallery is splendid, such a wealth of space, the beautiful ceiling above looks like marble and was done by Mr. Geo. Borum and force. Now when this church is finished and an elegant organ, presided over by that charming performer Miss Larabee, the congregation should feel truly the "Lines have fallen to us in pleasant places and we have a goodly heritage."—Suffolk Daily Progress.

One of our contemporaries observes, "It becomes a puzzle for the psychologist to answer why, as the Sunday sermon grows shorter, the Sunday newspaper grows longer." This may puzzle the psychologist, but it need not puzzle the devout. Both are to be attributed to the indifference felt about Christ and his teachings. If the ancient hymnist could declare "the world is growing evil," he might tell out his opinions with more assurance in these days. It is one of the mistakes to suppose the Church it to grow more pure and the world less evil the nearer the approach of Christ "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons."—
"When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth" "The spirit of evil will not be exorcised from this earth until Christ returns."—Southern Churchman.

Sociability not Religion.

Sociability is a principle given to human beings by the Almighty, and is common to all the people, and may be developed or restrained at the will of the individual. It is true that its natural qualities seem to be more deeply seated in some people than in others. But whether in greater or smaller proportions, all may be made stronger or weaker by cultivation or neglect.

Sociability is often seen as vividly in the wicked man as in the righteous man, thereby showing that it is no part of the Christian religion. Besides no where in the Bible is sociability held up as any part of religion. On the contrary if Jesus ever smiled, or laughed when he was on earth, we have no account of it either in history or in the sacred world. But we do find where he wept. St. John 11:35 Also we find that Jesus taught that an account must be given in the day of judgment for every idle word we speak. Matt. 12:36.

We hold that sociability is no part of the Christian religion; but, at the same time, we hold that it is no part of a sinful frolic when kept in its legitimate channel. Like many other noble qualities which God has given to the natural man, it fills an important place in this world, and fades away under the cloud of death like the morning vapor.

The nature of man is such that he requires sociability in this life, and should his social qualities be blotted out he would be a miserable being. And this would be true of either Christian or sinner. God has given this quality to make people cheerful in this life. But He has sent His spirit into the world to change them from nature to grace. And often they are fully as social before the change of heart as afterwards.

The social principle like many other God given blessings, may be made an instrument for good or evil. In the line of right doing, it is a power of great strength in making the world better, and should not be neglected by God's people. It is also used by Satan's forces, and by them made a great power in promoting the darkest deeds.

Social qualities, in the hands of God's people are very much like the oscillating waves of the ocean or boughs of the trees in going from one side past the central line before a halt is called. It may be that the Puritans swung too far toward the solemn side. But the tendency with the church now in this country is, to pass the central line, and a limit too much merriment. It is time that a long face and a solemn look is no part of religion. Neither is merriment making, which often turns the mind to that which is worldly. Our social qualities are God given for great blessings, and should be used, but not abused.

Notwithstanding our social qualities here will fade away under the cloud of death it is quite possible that, in the future state, we will have social qualities of a much higher order than those we have here. Those we now have are adopted to flesh and blood, and flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven. It may be that one of the torments of the wicked will be the possession of higher social qualities without permission to enjoy them. But the enjoyment of these higher social qualities by the righteous will add to their happiness.

A Word of Explanation for Our Brethren.

Occasionally a whisper is caught from some of the Northern brethren that there is a little complaint because the Southern churches do not take all the collections as ordered by the Quadrennial Convention. It is true that only a few churches take these collections. The reasons are these. First, in the union as agreed to by the church North and South, the autonomy of the Southern church was in no way to be disturbed. And to change from our own plans of work would destroy to some extent our church autonomy. We have our own way of collecting money, and, at any time, if the Quadrennial wants to make a call on the Southern church for money, it must be made to the Southern Convention, and let the Convention devise the plan for raising it.

Second. What we raise goes through the hands of the various conference treasures, and must be paid out by them. It is true that the secretary, Rev. J. J. Summerbell, has reported but little money from the south, and he has reported all that has been sent him; but we have sent to the Foreign Mission fund, through brethren Bishop and Palmer, our full proportional part. It is true this did not go to Bro. Summerbell, but it went, nevertheless. We hope we are ready to aid the good work financially, but we must do it in our own way.

The Revival Season.

Every season ought to be one of revival in the church. But local circumstances are such as to give to each community seasons more favorable to revival work than others. And in the south these periods are confined more closely to July, August and September than any other month. Hence, we speak of them as revival seasons.

The periods in which this special work is done, is upon us; and the churches are now looking forward for the usual protracted meeting. These meetings are expected to do two things, revive the church and awaken a religious interest among the unconverted, and thereby bring them to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

Thought in every thing is the most important element to successful culmination. And possibly nothing has more power in generating thought than agitation. And in the revival season serious thoughts of the future state are agitated in such a way that people are set to thinking and then praying. In this way God's people are strengthened and sinners brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

There is however another open door for good in the revival which is too often left out of the question. It is a neglect to give those converted and reclaimed something to do. In the revival is an excellent place to do private work for the enterprises of the church. There ought to be two or three new subscribers secured for the CHRISTIAN SUN in every revival, and that would bring in enough money to pay for the new press. Dear friends help us pay for a new press during the revival season.

See How Brethren Differ.

The following are extracts from letters sent by excellent brethren:

First Letter. "Dear Bro. Clements, why did you discontinue my paper? I always pay for it. Times are so hard now I could not get the money. I am behind; but you know me, and know I would pay you every cent soon."

Second letter. "Dear Editor: Some months ago I wrote you concerning the Sun, but for some cause or other I did not get an answer. However, I am behind and want to pay up my dues. Had you treated me with justice, and yourself also, I would not have been behind now; for, if an editor would stop the paper whenever the time expires, then is the time when a man will renew quicker than any other."

Now, both of these are excellent brethren; and we have simply quoted from their private letters to show a few of the trials of an Editor. Why we did not answer the brother we do not know. We have no recollection of his first letter at all. Don't know whether we ever received it or not. Sometimes we receive letters that do not seem to need an answer. We do not blame the brethren for such letters as these; for they are good brethren, and want to do right. They just don't think alike every time.

A Long Name.

The State Chronicle of Raleigh N. C., has been bought by Capt S. A.

Ashe, editor of the News and Observer, and the two papers consolidated and christened with the long name, News-Observer-Chronicle. We like the editor, and know him to be one of the best newspaper men in N. C., and one of the cleverest gentlemen to be found any where. But we do not admire the long name. Would it not have been better to have made up a short name from parts of the three? We think it would have been more euphonious and less trouble to other newspaper men. However we shall expect the new name to represent one of the best secular papers in the state.

Liberty (R.)

It was our pleasure to preach at Liberty, N. C., the fourth Sunday in June. The congregation was good and attentive. We preached at Smithwood at 11 a m on the same Sunday that we preached in Liberty in the afternoon.

The people at both places were very kind to us. We had the pleasure of visiting quite a number of families and received acts of kindness from them all. We spent one night with Bros. Keck, Trogdon, and Dr Albright.

Shallow Ford.

The first Sunday in July we preached at Shallow Ford, N. C. The people were very kind indeed, and worked manfully for the Sun. If all will work like Shallow Ford for new subscribers we will soon have the requisite number to buy the new press.

To Our S. S. Workers.

I have mailed to each Sunday school a blank on which to make a report to our next Convention the blanks were mailed to the Supt. or Secy. of the Sunday school when I could get their address and when I could not obtain the address of either the above it was mailed to the church Secy who will please deliver the same to the Supt. If any Sunday school fails to receive a blank they will please write me and I will promptly forward one to them. We are very anxious to have all our Sunday schools reports to our next session, so that we may be able to make a full and complete statistical table of our Sunday schools strength. Let every Sunday school be reported if they can not send a delegate, but send a delegate if possible

Why go to Harvard?

The News-Observer-Chronicle, speaking of Miss Long one of the faculty of Greensboro Female College, says: Miss Lillian Long of Chapel Hill, N. C., has been selected for the chair of English Literature and History. Miss Long is a sister of Prof. A. W. Long and of Mr. Vernon W. Long. She is a graduate of Greensboro Female College and has had fine experience in teaching. We learn that she is taking a special course in English Literature and History at the great Harvard University, preparatory to her work at Greensboro. She is a woman of fine character, of high intellectual attainments and a progressive teacher.

Miss Long lives at Chapel Hill, under the sound of the bell of the University of N. C., Dr. Thomas Hume, Prof. of English at the University is generally recognized as one of the finest English scholars to be found in any institution of learning. And yet young ladies living at Chapel Hill must go some where else to complete their English course. Why is this? Simply because of the old fossilized ideas of those who control the policy of the University. Many of these men who hold to their old fossilized ideas against co-educational colleges, are perfectly willing for their daughters to go to the commencements at Chapel Hill, visit the ball room and engage in the miserable, modern dance with the opposite sex. Why it is so much worse for a young lady to recite in the same classroom with young men than to dance with them, is strange logic.

But we want the young ladies to know there is a college in North Carolina where young ladies can go and take a course as high as at the male college. That college is located on the N. C. R. R. in Alamance County, and is known by the name of ELON COLLEGE. The English course, especially, is among the best to be found any where.

Lexington.

The third Monday in June we ran up to Lexington, N. C., to preach for Bro. Roach. He is doing a good work at Lexington, and is greatly beloved by his people. He organized the church last fall with ten or fifteen members, and now has fifty or more. This is a beautiful town of possibly 1500 in habitants

We preached twice for the people, to large and attentive congregations. We also attended the Sabbath school. It is in a flourishing condition. Bro. H. M. Turner is the Supt. And he does his work well. We never saw kinder people. We visited several families but cannot recall their names now. May God bless the people at Lexington.

Convention at Union.

As the time for the Sunday school Convention is now near at hand we trust that every one who wishes to attend will make the necessary arrangements; and let there be a full attendance from all the Sunday schools. We, the people around old Union, welcome you in our midst and we hope that your coming may be beneficial and strengthening to our Sunday school. Indeed, we are glad and anxious to see the Convention made a success even superior if possible to any ever realized heretofore. I wonder that this result may be obtained, we insist on a full delegation from all the Sunday schools around. We cordially invite you to come, and those who cannot come by private conveyance, will be met at depot if they will only notify me of their intention to attend and the time of their arrival. Please let me know by the 15th of July, they will be met at Burlington, and conveyed to the church where homes will be assigned. Unless notifications are sent in by the 15th of July there will be no arrangements made except for those expected. I remain.

Yours truly,
W. J. GRAHAM

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

After a week's absence I greet you again. I have had my vacation and I enjoyed it to the highest possible extent and now am ready for work. On coming to the office I found several letters, but not as many as I expected. For need of room a few will have to wait until next week, then we hope to have a full page to ourselves.

Bethel, Annie and Della have answered the puzzle correctly, for in that verse the women are given liberty to be teachers of "good things." Now for another one and perhaps a trifle harder: In a book of four chapters in the New Testament are found these words, "charging them before the Lord that they strive not about  profit" Supply the missing words and tell where found. Wishing all a happy time I remain.

Cordially yours
UNCLE TANGLE.

GRISSOM, N. C., July 2, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write again. It is Sunday afternoon. I have just returned from prayer meeting at our church and thought it would be good employment to find the missing word to your puzzle, so here it is, "teachers of good things" it will be found in the second chapter of Titus and third verse. Summer is here again and with it a plenty of flowers and fruit, just what every one likes, it is delightfully nice out here in the country now. I hope the Corner will be filled with letters this week. With love to the cousins I will say good by until another time. I send a dime for the Band.

DELLA GRISSOM.

HAW RIVER, N. C., July 2nd, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little boy 8 years old I come knocking for admittance to the band. I go to Sunday school every Sunday, my school is out and am very sorry for I love to go to school I help mama and they keep me right busy sometimes. What are those little children doing in the picture are they planning some way to make money for the band? I think Uncle Tangle's plan a very nice one. I have a little hen have been selling the eggs but I think I shall set the eggs and sell the chickens. In the 2nd chapter and 3rd verse of Titus I find those words "teachers of good things" am I correct. Enclosed please find five cents for the Band. Love to all.

BETHEL KING

FRANKLIN, N. C., July 1, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has been a long time since I have written so I thought I would write today. I wonder if any of the little cousins have had as nice a time as I have this summer, some of our little cousins came to see us and we fished, went boating and played dolls. Now for Uncle Tangle's puzzle, the missing word is things, in Titus second chapter and third verse. I will also ask a question: How long did the kingdom of Israel last. I send one dime to the Band. Love to you and the cousins.

Your loving niece,
ANNIE STALEY.

ELON COLLEGE, N. C., July 11, 1893.

BRO CLEMENTS:—Since I saw you in Raleigh the first of this month I have been to New Elan, Pittsboro, Sanford, Jonesboro, Aberdeen, Liberty, and Greensboro, I went into the community of these places and accomplished something for the college. I obtained the promise of nine new students and have some prospect for others. I trust every friend of the college will put forth an effort in its behalf. We want two hundred at the opening. Friends write in freely and fully about the prospect in your section, giving names of persons to whom I may send catalogues, etc.

Rejoinder.

Bro. Barrett's last article on the right of woman to preach, was read by me with interest and I laughed heartily over it as I read it to my wife. I laughed because it claims to disclose a new revelation—that I was mad! That is I would give Paul's modest reply when arraigned at Caesarea; "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." If I was mad, or allowed passion, prejudice or unkind feeling to dictate a single line or sentence, I was perfectly unconscious of the fact. I have not so forgotten myself, who I am and where I am, and my purpose, as to indulge in ill-temper. It is true I have thrown a little spice and pleasantry in my articles to please and interest the readers, but have tried by assisting grace to avoid all unkindness and offensiveness, and I leave it with the reader to say whether I have pursued this course or not. Indeed it would be folly in me to get worried or fretted when I am fortified by truth on all sides. I always feel at peace and safe when ensconced in the refuge of truth. But on the other hand it is Bro. Barrett and not myself seems to be chafed and sensitive. Why is this? Not that I have said offensive things. Not that I have flatly contradicted him, as he did me—"it is no such thing." But because he is foiled in argument He has become a little sore and cannot "endure sound doctrine." Therefore in the absence of better argument, as a sort of subterfuge, or last resort, tries to make impression that I am mad. If you intend this for argument Bro. Barrett, it is very weak and thin.

Again Bro B. says my question from Isaiah 35:8 implied that he was a fool, or I so meant it. I will not admit that Bro. B is so weak as to so construe it Has not Bro. B. quessed this scripture a number of times while addressing his congregation? Did he mean that all were fools; or did he mean the subject treated was plain? "A word to the wise is sufficient"

But Bro. B. objects to my saying I would "handle him tenderly." Now Bro. B., you know it is necessary to handle some things more carefully than others. If you were going to ship glass, especially if valuable, you would mark on the box "handle with care," tenderly. If not for this precaution the costly and much valued article might be tumbled about roughly and be broken. To make the application, I might have used sharp and cutting argument, although truthful and to the point which might have been considered rough. But as I esteemed Bro. B very highly, appreciated his worth to us as a denomination and desired a continuation of our fraternal feelings as brethren and fellow laborers in the same cause, I have tried to be tender and deferential in all that I have said

But Bro. B. quotes Dr. Curry as authority for the stand he has taken against woman preaching Dr. Curry's opinions I consider worth no more than Dr. Barrett's. I care not how many prefixes and suffixes he may have his name. He may be called Hon. Rev. Mr. Dr. Curry D. D., LL. D., etc., yet, if he sets his judgment up in opposition to the verdict of the whole Christian world, he shows that there is a weak place about his cranium.

Now I am done with the subject. Shall say no more. And I kindly ask Bro Barrett not to say I am mad or out of humor any more, because it has not been the case. I am much older than he is and it is not treating me with due regard to make such statements.

Berea (Nansemond) Sunday School.

Berea Sunday school is doing nicely under the superintendency of Capt. T. R. Gaskins. Capt. Gaskins makes a good superintendent and receives the hearty co-operation of the school, especially the faithful ladies. The most striking feature of this school is the interest taken in training the small children to sing, a thing sadly neglected in so many of our schools. Our number has been recently augmented by the return of our college boys and girls. We are glad to welcome them back and to see them looking so well and happy. The 4th Sunday in June was Children's Day. The weather was all that could be asked for and a large audience assembled to witness the exercises. The rostrum was tastily decorated with rare and beautiful flowers, while the children were adorned with that peculiar, yet loveliest form of beauty, bright faces indicative of happy hearts. The exercises began with a march by Miss Emma Williamson to the music of which the children marched from the rear of the church and took each his assigned seat on the rostrum. With this ended all apparent management of the children. It was their day. No one called out the programme or directed the children. Each one knew when his time came and performed his part with readiness and efficiency. Much credit is due those who trained the children and contributed otherwise to the success of the day. I think it is pronounced by general consent the best "Children's Day" celebrated by the school. The missionary collection amounted to $13 50.

A Word from Georgia.

DEAR BROTHER CLEMENTS:—I hope you will pardon me for having anything to say in relation to lady ministers. I desire nothing but the truth. I don't propose to take sides in its discussion. I would inquire first, whether or not this equality of responsibility existed in the ancient church? Does the law dispensation contain any types and shadows significant of this equal responsibility? The logic of events persuade me of the impossibility for women to officiate in the Tabernacle service. Could she have administered in holy things of the Temple service? Could she have slain and offered the sacrifices for the sins of the people? The ministers of God go in and out before the people as teachers, and expound the word of God. Did any holy woman of old even appear as priest, if not, why not? There is such a thing as Prophet, Priest and King. But all these Titles do not always belong to the same person. I would inquire if there is one example of any holy woman of old, ever entered the holy place as a watchman to cry aloud and spare not? The Ark of the Covenant was borne or carried on the shoulders of men. The trumpeters that blew for the morning and evening service were men. The Temple with its services is a type of the true church, hence impossible for women to go out and labor in the forest quarries, and prepare the rough ashlers of the forest for its place in the great building. If it was not lawful for them to take part in the establishment of the first church, which was one of works, and a type of the new, by what law can we set them apart as Priest to go in and out filling the highest offices in the church of Christ. In order to fill this office legally they must be set apart by the laying on of hands. Who has authorized any one to do that? I have never seen a command authorizing the ministers to set apart by ordination any lady as a minister of the gospel. Now my brother, if it was ever the province of ladies to be builders in the church, we have no examples in the old dispensation. Holy men of old speak as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. Nothing is said of holy women. Not that there was none: but it shows all great and vital matters of the church was addressed to men. There is a mistake somewhere. I must confess I cannot see any grounds to justify the ordination of a woman. This subject was discussed in the life time of my father and others of our ministers who were learned men in theology and history, who interpreted Paul's writings on this subject as Brother Barrett has done. I must say I am no little surprised to see Bible students differ so widely about as plain a declaration of an Apostle. I admit all that each may have said in the argument, then, it is not proven that it is the duty of women to fill pulpits as ordained ministers. You may think this extravagant, but if you will study a little, the Apostles meaning can be understood. According to the interpretation of Paul's writings; who is not authorized to preach? All teachers seem to be classed as ministers, Sabbath school teachers, exhorters, he that gives a reason for the hope he has within him. These are all useful auxiliaries to the church but never presume to sermonize. Are they not as much ministers of the gospel as these holy women of old, and preachers in the same sense, as the daughters of Philip or any other good sister of those times. Every believer has a right to give a reason for his faith. In doing so, is he or she not teaching or preaching if you please? But does that imply they were ordained ministers of the gospel. We read of men forsaking father, mother, wives and children for the sake of Christ, etc. Must they forsake husbands, homes, and children to fulfil the commission. I see no command to that effect. I hope no sister will think I am opposed to their entering into the gospel field, if they believe God has called them to this great work. My object is to know the truth and then defend it. In this case I am at sea without a compass or chart. An ordained minister of the gospel is one thing and a worker in the church is another. It is no small matter to be a legal minister of the gospel. Nearly 19 hundred years have passed. Is not this something new? May we not be mistaken about this matter? Had we not better keep in the good old way and pray for more light. God grant that the truth may prevail. May the Lord bless our efforts and give us more light is my prayer.

JUBILEE SMITH.

The State Fair for 1893.

We have received from the secretary, H. W. Ayer, a copy of the premium list for the State Fair of 1893. It is a more artistic publication than ever before, being embellished with handsome illustrations of North Carolina scenery, agricultural and fishing industries, etc.

The list has been thoroughly revised, especially in the departments in which ladies are interested, and the premiums are very liberal. The usual star premium of Fifty Dollars in gold is offered for the best exhibit made by a lady resident of the State, with a second premium of Twenty Dollars. There is also a premium of Fifty Dollars for the best display of any kind in the Main Exhibit Building. Fruit growers and Poultry fanciers, as well as others, will find the list for this year very interesting. Anybody can get copies by applying to H. W. Ayer, Raleigh N. C. Everybody should have one.

Bishop Merrill, of the Northern Methodist church, threatens to boycott the Chicago fair because of the Sabbath desecration. He says his church will do this. We wish it would. We do not often agree with the utterances of Northern Methodists, except in doctrine, but we like his declamation of a "boycott" and if the 5,000,000 Methodists on this continent would unite it would give a much needed rebuke to the violators of God's law and all their abettors and sympathizers. The very worldly N. Y. World thinks this will not be done as the Methodists "have outgrown swaddling cloths of thought." The trouble is that many Methodists, like some other religionists, "have outgrown" a profound reverence for God and his commands. If they loved God and honored his laws they would never enter Chicago while the desecrating thing was running. There is not a Southern Methodist religious paper that has not condemned the desecration of the Lord's day by opening the circus. They all say steer clear of the "unclean thing" — Messenger.

ALL POLICYHOLDERS UPON AN EQUAL FOOTING.

By able, conservative management, safe investments, big rate of interest, low death rate, the Northwestern has won the love and applause of its policyholders and the respect and admiration of all who are acquainted with it.

Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders."

Mr. R. B. Roney, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has no superior."

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS THE AUTHOR AND FINISHER OF OUR FAITH."

VOLUME XLVI.

RALEIGH, N. C., THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1893.

NUMBER 27

The Christian Sun.

The Organ of the General Convention of the Christian Church.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES.

1. The Lord Jesus is the only Head of the church.
2. The name-Christian, to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names.
3. The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character, or vital piety, the only test of fellowship or membership.
5. The right of private judgment, and the liberty of conscience, the privilege and duty of all.

New England Matters.

Some of the Christian churches, are having good success. The city of Haverhill, Mass., is reported to be in a prosperous and growing condition. Very good reports come from the four Christian churches in the city of New Bedford. I hear of no sickness among our ministers, and no church troubles of any kind. What we need more than anything else, in New England, is a sweeping revival of religion all over these Eastern States. Every church needs it. The spirit of "unity" seems to be on the increase in New England. The frequent exchange of pulpits among the different denominations clearly indicate it. I have preached for four different denominations in the last four months, and am invited to preach for another in a few weeks. I worship with any church, whose teaching leads to Christ. And will preach for those whose theology leaves Christ out of their teaching, when they will permit me to do so. The Christian Camp-meeting at Craigville, Mass., will commence the last Monday in this month—Believe.

The "Summer Company" are coming to Maine, now, from all parts of the country by thousands. The summer resorts in Maine, are very numerous and the hotels are well kept generally, and give good satisfaction. We have had some very hot weather of late, and people beng in crowded cities are glad to get some fresh air, in a pleasant village by the seashore.

Yours,
H. M. EATON.

Middleboro, Mass., July 15th, 1893.

From L. H. to Dr. Barrett.

DEAR SIR:—In thinking of your sermon delivered first Sunday in this month (June) in answer to my request in the SUN of May 4th. I wish to say that I cannot let the time pass without offering some words of praise and thankfulness for your words of encouragement on that occasion. Yes Dr. Barrett I will agree with you, in order to have pure thoughts we must have pure hearts. Pure hearts produce pure thoughts, pure deeds and pure religion for I even now realize it. If you have not pure thoughts within, you prove an impure man, for a man's thoughts are his very soul within him, and if corrupt he is all the time thinking of low down cunning tricks, how to defraud and and slander his fellow beings. If this be one's case I think he had better cease such and cultivate purer thoughts. I can truthfully say there is not a day passes over my head, nor a night that darkness creeps around me that I do not try to cultivate better thoughts, which I trust makes me a better man. I know I am not a Christian, but I am a better man morally than ever I was before. I do not now love to hear this old slang go-sip and many others things which used to please my fancy and which has a tendency to degrade human souls and place them on a level with the lowest of creation and at last be the means of plunging them into perdition. I used to care nothing more of the Bible than I did an Almanac, for I could tell the day of the month and when I thought it would rain, etc., from that but could not get that much satisfaction from the "Book of books." I remember trying to read a chapter one day and I found where it spake of great sheep, cattle, bullocks etc., I threw it down disgusted and full of prejudice, then went back on the devil's books and part of the time no books at all, but in search of some at the devils printing offices, and now unbelieving readers that is your case to day, mine is better and I thank God for it. I can truly say that I feel very thankful, Dr. Barrett, for your words of encouragement as given to me and others from the pulpit. I have often felt that I ought to open the door of my soul and let the Visitor, in that visitor which accompanied the two disciples from Jerusalem to Emmaus.

We remember when they drew nigh to Emmaus it was late in the evening and the sun was sinking behind the western horizon. The beautiful evening shades were hiding the earth, the invisible Christ which was to them as their eyes were holden made as though he would go on and they bade him stop with them, he did so and opened their eyes, broke bread with them and revealed to them that he was Christ which was crucified. Why not man when Christ accompanied his soul along through the journey of life, stop at the dawn and bid the invisible Comforter, (Christ) in and make peace with their souls at once. As I write my mind is deeply impressed, but, as I am I find that there is yet something lacking. Therefore in conclusion I ask an interest in your prayers and the prayers of God's people that more light may be revealed until I may find the visitor, the comforter lodging and a bidding with me.

Yours truly,

L. H.

Charles H. Spurgeon's D. D.

We trust all our boy readers will remember this bit of experience in this great preacher's childhood, and remember what he says about the miseries that come from getting in debt:

"When I was a very small boy in pinafores," said Mr. Spurgeon, "and went to a woman's school, it so happened that I wanted a stick of slate pencil, and had no money to buy it, I was afraid of being scolded for losing my pencils so often, for I was a real careless little fellow, and so did not dare ask at home; what then, was I to do? There was a little shop in the place, where nuts and tops and cakes and balls were sold by old Mrs. Dawson, and sometimes I had seen boys and girls get trusted by the old lady. I argued with myself that Christmas was coming, and that somebody or other would be sure to give me a penny then, and perhaps, a whole silver sixpence. I would therefore go into debt for a stick of slate pencil, and be sure to pay for it at Christmas. I did not feel easy about it, but still screwed my courage up and went into the shop. A farthing was the amount, and as I had never owed any thing before, and my credit was good, the pencil was handed over to me by the kind dame, and I was in debt! It did not please me much, and I felt as if I had done wrong, but I little knew how soon I should smart for it.

How my father came to hear of this little piece of business I never knew, but some little bird or other whistled it to him, and he was very soon down upon me in right earnest. God bless him for it! He was a sensible man, and none of your children-spoilers; for he did not intend to bring up his children to speculate and play at what big rogues call financiering, and therefore he knocked my getting into debt in the head at once and no mistake. He gave me a very powerful lecture upon getting into debt, and how like it was to stealing, and upon the way in which people were ruined by it, and how a boy who would owe a farthing might one day owe a hundred pounds and get into prison and bring his family into disgrace. Then I was marched off to the shop, like a deserter marched into barrack, crying bitterly all the way down the street, and feeling dreadfully ashamed, because I thought everybody knew I was in debt. The farthing was paid amid many solemn warnings, and the debtor was free, like a bird let out of a cage. How sweet it felt to be out of debt! How did my little heart declare and vow that nothing should ever tempt me into debt again! It was a fine lesson, and I never forgot it. If all boys were inoculated with the same doctrine when they are young, it would be as good as a fortune to them and save them wagon-loads of trouble in after life. Ever since that time I have hated debt. To keep debt, dirt, and the devil out of my cottage has been my greatest wish, and although the last of the three has sometimes gotten in by the door or window, for the old serpent will wriggle in the smallest crack, yet thanks to a good wife, hard work, honesty, and scrubbing brushes, the others have not crossed the threshold."—Exchange.

Christ The Branch.

BY REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is the Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord:

Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both. Zech. 6:12-13.

The prophet is here speaking of Christ, and his great work of redemption. This was the view of the ancient Jewish writers, and it is expressly applied to Christ in the New Testament (Rom. 12.) This language is not applicable to any other personage than the Messiah, and in him it is fulfilled. In this promise of Christ we have an illustration of God's method of dealing with his people, and it reveals his tender love for them. Because of their wickedness he was going to bring great afflictions upon them, but his anger would not last forever. He would raise up a Redeemer who would save them from their sins, and give them everlasting consolation.

Branch is one of the prophetic titles of Christ. He is called "the Branch of the Lord;" (Isa. 4:2) "Branch out of the roots of Jesse;" (Isa. 11:1.) "A righteous Branch;" (Jer. 23:5.) This is a beautiful symbol of Christ, and it has reference to his humble birth. Isaiah said, "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots." The figure is that of a tree that has decayed and fallen away all but the roots, and from them springs up a sprout. This represents the family of David which had fallen into decay; and the mother of Jesus, though belonging to the family, was poor, obscure and unknown. To all appearance the glory of the family had departed. Yet from it, as from a long-decayed root in the ground, he should spring who would restore the family to more than its ancient glory, and should shed additional lustre on the honored name of Jesus.

The Lord of hosts said, "I will bring forth my servant the Branch." Christ came not of himself, but was sent of his Father. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Long ages before God had promised to send his Son into the world to redeem it from sin, and when the fullness of time had come he sent him. This is an important fact, and it should commend the attention of all men, for it is God who is speaking through him. "God, who at sundry times and in diverse manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

The Branch is here called a man. "Behold the man whose name is the Branch." This points to the incarnation of Christ. He was with his Father in heaven from eternity. "Whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." (Micah 5:2) "And he is before all things, and by him all things consist." He had a glory with the Father "before the world was." John 17:5. To accomplish the salvation of man it became necessary for him to be "made in the likeness of men," so he "took upon him the form of a servant," and was "found in fashion as a man." "For he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." This is the most remarkable fact in the history of the universe so far as we know, and it is impossible for us to comprehend it in all the fulness of its meaning. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." The mighty Son of God, "the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," the creator of worlds, he "who upholds all things by the word of his power," "humbled himself" and came into the world in the "form of a servant." Why was this? That we might be redeemed from sin and death. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." This wonderful fact should not only command the profound attention of men, but it should draw all hearts in loving obedience to him. At "the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Isaiah describes the extraordinary endowments of the Branch as eminently holy, pure, and wise. "The Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and his faithfulness the girdle of his reins." The Spirit of Jehovah rested upon him, and qualified him for his great work as prophet, priest, and king. He was to "build the temple of the Lord." This does not mean the temple that was being erected in Jerusalem, for that work was in the hands of Zerubbabel; but it refers to the Christian church of which the literal temple was a type. The church is represented as a temple, the habitation of God through the spirit. (Eph. 3:13-22) This spiritual temple is erected by Christ. "Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory." He shall have the honor of this great work; for he alone can do it. Paul understood this, and he closes one of his prayers with the sublimest doxology ever uttered by human tongues. "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." This great fact is recognized in heaven, and the redeemed sing, "unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever. Amen."

The Branch "shall set and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne." A throne denotes dignity and dominion, extensive power, and exalted honor. Christ is here represented as filling two offices, and thus sustaining two official relations to man. 1. He is to rule upon his throne. Isaiah said, "The government shall be upon his shoulder." There are two ideas in the passage. 1. That the government is sustained by Christ. The shoulder is that by which we sustain any thing, so the divine government is sustained by Christ; and he will "reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Kingdoms, empires, and republics have grown up, exercised great power in the world, and then decayed and passed away; but the government of Christ still lives, and increases in power. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law." Mighty efforts have been made by learned infidels and the haughty rulers of kingdoms and empires to crush out the kingdom of Christ by argument and force, but they have all been swept away by the march of time, and live only on the records of the past. The kingdom of Christ still lives.

2. That Christ has the authority to rule over men and nations, and the power to enforce his authority. His Father hath set him "at his own right hand in heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and hath given him to be head over all things to the church." He said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." All men are accountable to him, and must appear before his judgment seat "that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." There is no escape from this judgment, and this tremendous fact should arrest every man in his sinful course, and bring him to repentance and God. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." If men would only allow themselves to think on this question until they fully realized its full meaning it would lead them all to become Christians, but they will not do this. They put it out of their thoughts, and let the things of time govern them.

He shall be a priest upon his throne.

One object of Christ's incarnation was that he might fill the office of Christ. "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor all them that are tempted." He knows all about us, and sympathizes with us in all our trials and temptations. This should encourage us to go to him in every time of need, for he loves us, and his great heart goes out in sympathy for every struggling soul. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace in every time of need."

Christ has offered himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. "He hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour." "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."

How wonderful that Christ should sacrifice his own life to save his enemies. "While we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Sinner, Christ loved you better than his own life, and died that you might live. Have you no love and reverence for him. I am acquainted with a soldier whose life was saved, when endangered, by his general, and when he sees or hears his name spoken, it awakens in him feelings of love and reverence for him; and he says: "That man saved my life." There is a living bond between them that can never be broken. Thus it is with the redeemed, and the Redeemer. As the ransomed in heaven behold his uncreated glory they say in their heart of hearts, "He saved me from sin and death, and made me what I am." How precious he is unto them.

Christ is now sitting as a priest upon his throne "where he ever liveth to make intercession for us." "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins." Because of conscious sin when men think of Christ and his throne they see him only as a judge, and tremble at the thought of coming into his presence; but we should remember that he is now on the mediatorial throne as a loving tender Saviour anxious to save us. He is not now on the throne of judgment, and holds out the sceptre of peace inviting you to touch it and live with loving sympathy. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." What an infinite blessing that Christ is not now on the throne of judgment, for if he was the day of mercy would be closed; and all the impenitent would be lost forever.

The prophet says, "The counsel of peace shall be between them both." The ones spoken of here are God and his son Jesus Christ, and the counsel of peace is the purpose and plan to establish peace between heaven and earth, God and man. "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." There is an intimate relation existing between the Son and the Father, and they are united in the great work of saving man from death. "God was Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." They are one in the work.

Washington Letter.

The return of the two physicians, Dr. Kempster, and Surgeon Irwin of the Marine Hospital Service, from a six months tour of investigation of the cholera in Europe and of the methods used to prevent the spread of the disease as well as to keep it from obtaining a foothold, and the publication of a synopsis of Dr. Kempster's preliminary report to the Surgeon General of the Marine Hospital Service, under whose direction the investigation was made, serve to remind the people of the efforts that are being made by the authorities to keep the cholera out of the United States, and to prevent the spread of the scourge from the few cases that may be expected in spite of our vigilance to reach our ports from time to time.

The investigators covered nearly the whole of Europe and a considerable portion of Egypt and the Holy Land. They regard the swarms of Russian pilgrims constantly flocking to Jerusalem and camping around that city in filth and squalor as a source of danger to the whole world, as they come in contact with people from everywhere; and they are at a loss to understand why the Turkish authorities refused to allow the English-speaking residents of Jerusalem to replace at their own expense their old sewers, built by Solomon, and to furnish the city with an ample supply of pure water. They visited Smyrna headquarters of the wool, rug, goats and camels' hair trade, and looked into the quarantine system at Constantinople, which was found to be careless and ineffectual. Vessels go through the Bosphorus with no examination whatever, the medical officer in charge of the so-called quarantine station told the Americans that it was impossible to carry out a proper system, even if money was allowed him to do it, because no sanitary measure suggested by him is adopted unless authority for it can be found in the Koran, which in the Turkish minds is the only authority.

The investigation at Constantinople also convinced the physicians that it was along the routes taken by the pilgrims to and from Mecca and other Moslem shrines, and those followed by merchandise, that cholera came from its original home in India to Mecca, passing thence northward through Persia to points on the Caspian Sea and into Russia; also that the expulsion of the Hebrews from the southwestern provinces of Russia, where the cholera prevails, is a source of great danger, as the exiles swarm through the Mediterranean, spreading cholera germs in all its ports.

After looking through Athens, Dr. Irwin remained at Naples to assist the American consul in his efforts to ward off the disease, while Dr. Kempster followed the route of emigrants from the northern points of Europe bound for America and was not surprised when he found cholera along his route. He expected it. He found that the commerce between France and England, which is practically unrestricted, was a menace; also that the activity of our consuls at other European ports had driven the emigrants to avoid detention at ports under suspicion by coming to America via England. A mass of medical information was obtained that is regarded as very valuable, although it is thought to be practically impossible for the cholera to become epidemic in America, because of the intelligence of Americans, and their readiness to adopt needed precautions at the proper time. Still, it is well to be prepared for the worst at all times, Congress has provided the means and the people have a right to expect that full advantage will be taken of them by the authorities, and they seem to be doing it.

The High Tent of the Independent order Rechabites in North America is holding its annual session in this city. The High Chief Ruler has made some radical recommendations as to changes in the ritual and laws of the order, which are being considered as I write. This evening is a complimentary excursion for the entertainment of the visitors.

The friends of moral reform are watching with the greatest interest the working of the Board of Childrens Guardians, which was authorized by the last Congress, and which begun its existence July 1. The idea is to provide a way to dispose of children who get before our courts in any other ways than in committing them to jail or the reform school as had heretofore to be done. The guardians are appointed by the Judges of the Criminal and Police Courts and serve without compensation. The present board has nine members, three of whom are ladies. An office has been opened by the board, in charge of Mr. W. H. Lewis, late of Minneapolis State School, and already it has assumed the guardianship of a number of children below the age of 16. The greatest good is expected to be accomplished by placing the children in the houses of Christian families, and great is interest manifested in saving the children. Already fifty families have notified the board of their willingness to each take a child. Whenever circumstances will justify it the board will render material assistance to the natural protectors of the children and leave the children in their care.

Pastorate System.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS—In a late issue of the SUN I notice a protest against the ministers of our church centralizing at Elon College. It seems that the protest is brought against an effect rather than the cause, and we wish to notice the cause.

Under our present form of pastoral work my advice would be to all ministers to locate where they can have the most pleasant hours, but at the same time I am of the opinion that our cause is greatly retarded where the minister is so far separated from the people.

There can never be any propriety in one minister's dictating to another as to the place he should locate until some of our ministers are the guardians of the others.

While there is parity among the ministers, it is their right and privilege of every one to locate where he pleases according to his own absolute judgment in the matter. If any one else however is better prepared to understand plans, methods and purposes in selecting a location as well as the location of his minister's work then it would not be presumption in the least to give such an one advice and he if wise would thankfully and gladly receive it. One of our "Protestant" brethren is afraid a tree will fall on some of the ministers and kill them, and is uneasy about their not thriving. In reply the brother should remember that this is where young men are prepared for the ministry, here they get plenty of food for the body, mind and spirit and certainly these things ought to render them thrifty, active, energetic, and progressive.

Our brother who lives here at Elon was mentioned in convention with this protest. By his coming to the college to live his railroad expenses are greatly diminished as he is nearer the main body of his work.

We wish now to notice the cause rather than the effect. The college is a central point. Here there are better facilities for education. To locate on the border might necessitate traveling clear across the conference to reach the work. For instance a minister might locate at High Point on the extreme western corner of the conference and have work down about Catabaw Springs or Auburn near Raleigh on the eastern part of the Conference, again one might locate at Youngsville and have work at Pleasant Grove, Va., or Ingram, Va., his home at one extreme, his work at another now it would be more consistent for both of these ministers to get nearer their people. Getting too far from the people is the exact point, in my mind, upon which the protest was written, but you see that it is a mistake. You ask why not go to these churches instead of the college, because building a house and beautifying a home are not so easily done especially by ministers who scarcely receive a support. If he were to endeavor to build in every community in which his work should be he would perhaps have to build each year and the work of some is so badly scattered that they would have to have several houses.

The one great need of our conference is that we adopt the pastorate system.

When this is adopted then the ministers will locate in their respective pastorates where they can visit their people and establish district schools as auxiliaries to the colleges. Our conference should be laid off in pastorates so that the pas-

EDITORIAL NOTES.

For Sunday schools we have the Evangelist's Songs of Praise, a fine song book.

We are pained to learn that Rev. D. E. Millard's eyes are sorely affected.

The E. Va. Christian S. S. Convention is in session at Antioch, Isle of Wight Co., Va.

The N. C. & Va. Christian S. S. Convention is in session at Union, Alamance Co., N. C.

The people quickly recognize merit, and this is the reason the sales of Hood's Sarsaparilla are continually increasing. Try it.

The Christian church has in the Christian Hymnary one of the best hymn books extant, and all our churches should not fail to supply themselves with them.

Many fail to pay subscriptions promptly and we are greatly inconvenienced for necessary cash. Come forward dear readers and give us our dues.

For want of space we are unable to give an account of the Christian Endeavor Convention at Montreal, but hope to favor our readers with a few facts next week.

The Sun is moving into new and more comfortable quarters this week, and as a result you are surprised to get a half-paper. Do not get worried with us please, for it cannot be helped.

We understand that Bro. J. N. Farrell of Texas fell dead from his horse a few days ago. Will some one please give us the particulars? He was a member of the N. C. & Va. Conference.

Prof. J. U. Newman paused here last week on his way to Virginia in the interest of the college. He expects to visit Newport News, Smithfield, Isle of Wight, and other places in that State.

Rev. A. G. Anderson of the N. C. & Va. Christian Conference died last Thursday. He was possibly the oldest living graduate of the University of N. C. We will give a more extended notice soon.

Quite an interesting account of the Children's Day at Holy Neck was on our desk but the writer's name fails to appear with it so it has been consigned to the waste basket, as are all communications where the writer is unknown to us.

Rev. J. L. Foster, pastor of the Raleigh church, and his excellent lady started Monday evening for the Sunday school Convention, and expect to prolong their stay in Alamance County three weeks. They have labored faithfully and are due a respite. It is hoped their rest will rejuvenate them wonderfully.

The Fifth Cardinal Principle of the Christians.

The Christians state as their fifth Cardinal Principle: The right of private judgment, and the liberty of conscience the privilege and duty of all. We must not be understood as giving to this statement the fullest sweep; for that would have a tendency to carry us into latitudinarianism, a thing for which we have no sympathy. But we apply it to non-essentials in doctrines, about which good men have differed for ages.

The question is sometimes asked us. Are not all things in the Bible essential? The answer to this question is ready. They are essential to some things, but not to all things. The eyes of a man are essential to perfect vision, but not to physical life, for blind people live. And who will undertake to say in this enlightened age that all must see the Bible teachings eye to eye in order to be saved. In the Bible, the things essential to salvation are so plain that men see them alike. But in many of the statements made by men, in their belief either written or unwritten, the Bible is not definite; therefore, they must be left to the private judgment and liberty of conscience. Who will say that the mode of baptism is clearly stated or the doctrine of the final perseverance of the saints is left without a doubt?

It is an evident fact, that God has made men with different minds and capacities. Men belonging to denominations of the strongest iron clad creeds do not agree in the interpretation of every text of Scripture. Why undertake to make men do a thing that is impossible? And why say men must believe alike in one passage of Scripture where there is doubt, and not in another? Is it not strange inconsistency? "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Rom. 14:5.

"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth." Rom. 14:4.

The Christians never apply this statement to the question of morals, but strictly to doctrines about which good men differ. The fourth cardinal principle of the church regulates the question of morals. Whenever a man thinks that the members of the Christian church are allowed a loose rein of morals, he is wonderfully mistaken. We believe heartily in repentance, regeneration and a righteous life.

These are questions asked those seeking membership among the Christians. Have you heartily repented of your sins? Do you believe the Lord Jesus Christ is the savior of the world? Is it your purpose, through grace divine to live a godly life? These questions being answered in the affirmative, he is received into church fellowship, unless some member raises objection. Whereupon the matter is deferred to the next meeting. We think these questions include all that is required to enter heaven. And why should we require more to enter the church on earth than God requires to enter it in heaven? We try to make our platform as broad as the Bible and no broader.

A Plan.

The following plan is offered for a better supply of pastoral work in the N. C. & Va. Christian Conference:

FIRST. The churches shall be grouped into pastorates as follows:

No. 1. Shallow Well, Turner's Chapel, Moore Union, Christian Chapel and Christian Light.

No. 2. Wake Chapel, Pleasant Union, Catawba Springs and Piney Plains.

No. 3. Pleasant Hill (J.), Spilona, Plymouth, Pleasant Grove (J.), Mt. Hermon and Amelia.

No. 4. Auburn, Hayes Chapel, Ebenezer and Morrisville.

No. 5. Raleigh.

No. 6. New Elam, New Hill, Martha's Chapel, O'Kelly's Chapel and Bethany.

No. 7. Durham.

No. 8. Beulah, New Hope, Oak Level, Youngsville.

No. 9. Pope's Chapel, Mt. Carmel, Walnut Grove and Good Hope.

No. 10. Liberty (Vance), Mt. Auburn, Antioch (Warren) and Goshen Chapel.

No. 11. Hebron, Union, Va., Lebanon and Mt. Pisgah.

No. 12. Pleasant Grove, and Ingram, Va., and Happy Home.

No. 13. High Point, Sage Garden, Salem Chapel and Lexington.

No. 14. Mt. Bethel, Pleasant Ridge, Kallum Grove and Howard's Chapel.

No. 15. Hine's Chapel, Apple's Chapel, Shallow Ford and Bethlehem.

No. 16. Elon and Mt. Vernon.

No. 17. Union, N. C., Bethel and Mt. Zion.

No. 18. Long's Chapel and New Providence.

No. 19. Burlington.

No. 20. Asheboro, Liberty (R.), Pleasant Hill (J.), Clover Orchard and Damascus.

No. 21. Hank's Chapel, An'ioch (C), Center Grove and Zion.

No. 22. Egypt, Grace Chapel, Poplar Branch, Winder, Mt. Pleasant and Keyser.

SECOND. Each Pastorate shall be regarded as the unit, and it shall have power to arrange with any minister who is a member of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, for pastoral services in said pastorate. Provided however, said minister serves all the churches in said pastorate.

THIRD. It shall be the duty of the churches of each pastorate to hold a Pastorate Meeting, at least one month before the meeting of the Annual Conference, to arrange for pastoral services the ensuing Conference year. In all such meetings, the number of delegates from each church to the Pastorate Meeting, shall be in the same proportion as it is to the Annual Conference.

FOURTH. Pastorate and minister shall have the right to dissolve pastoral relationship at any time by mutual consent.

FIFTH. When ever any pastorate fails to make arrangements for pastoral services, it shall be the duty of conference to do so, through its Home Mission Committee.

SIXTH. Any and all difficulties which may arise between minister and pastorate, and cannot be amicably settled otherwise, shall be reported to the conference for final adjustment.

Of course this paper is imperfect and may possibly, be much improved. But if nothing better is presented, this will be at the next Annual Conference. It is earnestly hoped that the brethren will point out the weak points, and suggest what changes are necessary. The columns of the Sun are open to you.

That Resolution.

The following resolution was passed at our annual Eastern Virginia Christian Conference last year:

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of this conference, that in every case where the members of one of our churches shall move into or within the reasonable bounds of another, that a letter of transfer be taken, even though the change be temporary; and we advise all our members, now being within the bounds of other than the Christian church of which they are torate would constitute the unit instead of the individual church then the work of each minister would not be scattered to the extremes of the conference. The ministers could build homes in the central part of the pastorate and live among their people and not have to spend so much of their income and time on the railroad. You may cry out against the pastors, being separated from the people and still they must of necessity be separated until we have more order and system in our work. If this system were adopted with what the churches now pay the pastors, any field in conference will support a minister because of the decrease of his expenses, then the ministers could give their whole time to ministerial and pastoral work and thereby our church would soon grow in strength and influence.

There is another point I wish to mention. The older and more influential ministers naturally are called to the stronger churches and they naturally accept the call and thereby unconsciously weaken the weaker churches by reducing them to the necessity of getting any one they can and also kills the weaker ministers by causing them to receive starvation prices for their work or none and they soon are obliged to go at something else for a support. Wouldn't it be much better to group one or two strong churches with some of the weaker churches all of which would give a man a support, then the stronger ministers would help to strengthen the weaker places. I find no fault with the ministers that accept the strong churches I would do the same, you would, or any one else would, that could get them when the work is necessarily scattered, but I do find fault with our present system of work and shall ever find fault with it unless some of the wiser heads can show me wherein it is better than the one suggested. I am of the opinion that the majority of our ministers would accept any pastorate in the conference if this system were adopted. Some would oppose this system because they fear the tendency towards Episcopacy, but it is not the case. Episcopacy was one of the main issues upon which our church sprang off from the Methodists, and in doing so the pendulum swung to the other extreme into a condition that has not been the most favorable to our prosperity. I find no fault with our principles, I love them, and shall labor for them with all my might, but I desire to see the pendulum swing back to a perpendicular when we shall have perfect freedom both among churches and ministers as we have now and a system of work that will tend to prosperity, strength, power, instead of retrogression, and weakness.

"Order is heaven's first law." "In unity there is strength." We need both unity and order in our work. When this system is adopted then the churches of the various pastorates can select representatives who shall have a meeting before the annual conference and call a man to serve the entire pastorate instead of delegates from each church going up to the annual conference to call different pastors for the same field as is now done. The pastor is notified then and accepts or rejects the call as he may see fit, should he reject the call then they can select another before conference meets and at our annual conference the ministers can report in their annual reports what pastorates they have accepted then the committee on Home Missions can very readily see what churches are supplied and ministers have work and be enabled much better to adjust their business relative to supplying churches. I have written this simply as an introduction to the subject. I desire that all who are in favor or opposed to the plan will express themselves through the SUN or by private letter to me giving their position and reasons for the same.

and he promised her he would. Among the words she made use of were these. "If it is necessary for me to die in order that all of my children may be brought to Christ I am willing to go. I thought she had a fine opportunity to test her religion. This occasion I think furnished an opportunity, that proved to strengthen the faith of every Christian who was present, in the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. May these churches that have lost these dear members be brought nearer to God.

members, do as early as possible make the transfer necessary to bring them into active relations with such church."

We publish this resolution that the attention of some to whom it may apply, may be called to it. There are several members of another Christian church living within the bounds of Holland Christian church, who by transfer would be a great help to it. On account of their nearness and convenience to Holland can do much more for the cause of the Master (and it should be our object to be where we can accomplish the most good) than in the church of their present relation; yet no move is being made in that direction. Holland church has a good house of worship centrally located, the house is well furnished, is out of debt, pays its pastor's salary and all the assessment of conference, has on its roll one hundred and fifty or more members, a flourishing Sabbath-school and weekly prayer meeting and has a bright future as any church of its size in the E. Va. Conference, and I cannot imagine why any should delay to make the necessary transfer and accomplish the great good within their reach.

The annual conference to which we should all be loyal, in its wisdom saw the necessity of this resolution and the importance of carrying it out to the letter, and not only admonishes those to whom it applies to take transfer to the most convenient church, but to do so "as early as possible" and become "into active relations with such church"

R. H. HOLLAND.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—The last trip to my Va. appointments at Pleasant Grove and Ingram in Halifax county was very pleasant, I visited more than 30 families during the week and I had some experience that was profitable. During the week I was among the rich and the poor, the well and the sick, and on the 7th ult., Sister Edith Ray, a member of the Christian church at Pleasant Grove, Va., passed into her heavenly home, she was in her 86 year and had been a consistent member of the church for a considerable while. She was perfectly willing to die. I see also that Mt. Auburn has lost one of her valuable members in the death of Bro. J. D. Cole who has been a great sufferer for many years with asthma. And again I see that Popes Chapel has lost one of its best and most useful members in the death of Sister Amanda Holmes. I remember once in my life when I was awakened from my slumbers about 1 o'clock at midnight by the most lamentable cries from her children "mother is dying, mother is dying, mother is dying," I arose and came down stairs and found her speechless, but perfectly calm, and in a short time she was able to speak, and said this may be death, but if it is, it is all right, then she addressed her self to her eldest daughter Miss. Dora (who has been severely afflicted for some time) and begged her to meet her in heaven and in like manner to the rest of her children who were present, and list of all to her husband and asked him to take good care of her niece, Miss Lovie Williams, and her own children, and then she asked him to meet her in heaven,

A Gentleman Defined.

London Tit-Bits recently offered a prize for "the best definition of a gentleman." The winning definition is as follows:

A knight, whose armor is honor, whose weapon is courtesy.

The following are some of the definitions sent in:

A gentleman is one who combines a woman's tenderness with a man's courage.

The mirror of mannerly manhood. A man who does his best to do the best.

A man whose money mars not his manners.

is one who wherever he may be, remembers what he is.

The quintessence of true manliness.

The embodiment of male perfections.

A happy result of the combined efforts of nature, preceptors, and—the tailor.

One whose merits are patent as well as his shoes.

Manly, honest, generous, pure, a gentleman—rich or poor.

A man both cultured and refined, who always has in his mind, and acts upon it always, too, to do as he'd have others do.

A human magnet.

A man who gracefully recognizes the rights of others.

Nature's finishing touch.

The crown of man's accomplishments.

A planet in humanity's constellation.

A gentleman is a person who perfectly combines self-forgetfulness with self-respect.

A compound of various good qualities that embellish mankind.

A human brilliant very frequently unpolished.

One who acts with equal courtesy and consideration to all men, be they prince or peasant.

Man's truest model—with "honor" for its base.

A gentleman is one who realize that there are others besides himself.

The male unobtrusive tit-bit of humanity, who makes life a success without blustering or vanity.

Honor personified.

One who knows what honor is and acts up to it

A man who treats others with considerable kindness and respect because he can't help it.

A man who has a great capacity for doing right.

A man who does unto others as he would they should do unto him.

He whose first consideration is for the feelings of others.

One who is well behaved to the meanest of his fellows, kind and genial to his equals, deferential, but not servile, to his superiors

One who is ecivalously tender to women, honorable among men, and guided at all times by an innate delicacy of feeling.

Pray aloud in Private.

BY MISS GRACE TURNER.

If you are as I was, you will say, on seeing this admonition, "Why, I could not." The president of our Christian Endeavor society stated to us quite positively, one evening, that we did not get one-tenth of the benefit from prayer that we should if we prayed aloud in private. I thought about the matter and agreed with him; but when I knelt that night, it seemed to me that I never did anything more difficult. The sound of my own voice seemed to scatter my thoughts. But I persevered, and very soon I was of my friend's opinion. Whenever possible, not only on retiring and arising, but during the day, I pray aloud. I find the habit helpful in four ways.

1. My thoughts, which formerly (to my distress) wandered persistently, are well kept on what I am doing. When I say, "Amen," I have a clear recollection of what I have mentioned in my talk with my Father.

2. Hitherto, it seemed to me that I just touch'd on so many things. Now, when I pray about missions, for instance, I do not stop after simply asking a blessing on the work, but I pray for the missionaries, the schools, and that the contributing and praying Christians at home may grow in zeal.

3. My prayers are much more earnest. Just as I could not play a composition by Beethoven or Mozart while carrying on a conversation, I could not pray while my thoughts were wandering.

4. I can now pray in public without stammering or halting. In fact, I have to watch myself, sometimes, that I do not pray too long in our meetings, as I almost forget where I am.

It has always been a great trial for me to try to pray in public. I thank God for putting it into the heart of his servant to bring me the message he did, and I pray that as I "pass along my blessing," it may profit you as it has me. Try it and see.—Golden Rule.

DEAR SUN:—Our third quarterly meeting the present year convened to day Business was transacted harmoniously. We have decided to hold a series of meetings, beginning 5th Sunday inst. Bro. Barrett has the promise of Rev. J. W. Wellons to assist him. We are anxiously waiting his coming. He labored in a revival here fourteen years ago this past April and did, we believe, an abundance of good. After the meeting, nothing preventing I will give your readers the results.

To-morrow we hope to enjoy a pleasant communion service. The 9th of Aug. has been set apart by us as a time for "Children's Day," and we are anticipating a jolly day too.

Yours in Christ,
M. A. HOLLOWELL.

Young Men for Christ.

BY REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

I have written unto young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. 1 John 2:14.

The apostle John was deeply interested in young men, and for various important reasons. He loved them, and was anxious for their salvation. They had in them the elements of great usefulness, and he earnestly desired to bring them into the church where they could be useful in the cause of Christ. He wanted their powers of body and mind consecrated to him, and he felt that they were the hope of the church. Through all the ages God has used young men to work out his gracious purposes concerning this world, and they have accomplished much for God and humanity. There is a vigor, energy, and enthusiasm in young men that makes them a power for good when consecrated to Christ. As men grow older they become more cautious and conservative.

They do not, and cannot, as a rule, enter into a great work with the push of young men; and are governed more by forms and rules of action that hinder them in their work, for they are not as ready to take advantage of new measures as young men are. They have sometimes been disappointed in the use of new methods, and this makes them cautious. For this reason they fail where young men succeed. At the age of twenty seven Napoleon executed that grand campaign in Italy which stamped him the foremost captain of any age, drove back the routed Austrians to their capital, treated with the haughtiest monarch in Europe as an equal, and exacted from the terror-stricken house of Hapsburg peace on his own terms. Hannibal was made commander-in-chief of the Carthaginian army in Spain at twenty-six, and had won all his great battles in Italy, concluding with Cannea, at thirty-one. Scipio Africanus, the elder, distinguished himself at the battle of Ticinus at sixteen, and at twenty-nine overthrew the power of Carthage at Zama.

Julius Cæsar commanded a fleet before Mitylene and distinguished himself before the age of twenty-two; completed his first war in Spain and was made consul before the age of forty; conquered Gaul, twice crossed the Rhine, and twice invaded Britain before the age of forty-five; won the battle of Pharsalia and obtained supreme power at fifty-two. He died at fifty-six the victor of five hundred battles, and the conqueror of one thousand cities.

Peter the Great of Russia, was proclaimed Czar at ten years of age, organized a large army at twenty, won the victory of Embach at thirty, founded St. Petersburg at thirty one, and died at the age of fifty-five.

Charles completed his campaign against Denmark at eighteen, overthrew eighty thousand Russians at Narva before nineteen, conquered Poland and Saxony at twenty-four, and died at thirty-six.

Frederick the Great ascended the throne at twenty-eight, terminated the first Silesian war at thirty, and the second at thirty-three. Ten years later, with a population of but five millions, he triumphed over a league of more than one hundred millions of people.

Henry IV, of France, was at the head of the Hugonot army at sixteen, became king of Navane at nineteen, overthrew his enemies and became king of France before the age of forty.

The age of his generals and marshals was not less surprising. Desaix was a general of brigade at twenty five, a general of division at twenty-six, and died at thirty-two. Massena was a general of division at thirty-five. Soult was a second lieutenant at twenty-two, captain at twenty-four, and, passing through the grades of major, colonel, and general of brigade, became a general of division at twenty nine. Davoust was a second lieutenant at seventeen, general of brigade at twenty three, and general of division at twenty-five. Eugene Beaubarnais was a major at nineteen, colonel at twenty-one, general of brigade at twenty-three, and viceroy of Italy at twenty-five. Saint-Cyr was a general of brigade at twenty-nine and general of division at thirty. Suchet was a brigade commander at twenty-five, and a corps commander at twenty-eight. Oudinot was a general of brigade at twenty-five, and general of division at twenty-eight. Ney was a general of brigade at twenty-seven, and general of division at twenty-nine. Lannes was colonel at twenty-seven, general of brigade at twenty-eight, and soon after general of division. Joubert was adjutant-general at twenty-five, general of brigade at twenty-six, general of division at twenty-eight, general in-chief of the army of Italy at twenty-nine, and died at thirty. Victor was a major at twenty-seven, general of brigade at twenty-nine, and general of division at thirty-two. Murat was a lieutenant at twenty, general of brigade at twenty-five, and general of division at twenty-seven. Mortier became a general of brigade at thirty, and general of division at thirty-one. Marmont was a captain at twenty-one, general of brigade at twenty four, and general in-chief of an army at thirty-two. Bernadotte was a colonel at twenty-eight, general of brigade at twenty-nine, and general of division at thirty. Lefebvre was general of brigade at thirty-eight, and general of division at thirty-nine. Bessieres was colonel at thirty, general of brigade at thirty-two and general of division at thirty-four. Curoc was a colonel and general of brigade at twenty seven, general of division at thirty, and died at forty-one.

The same is true in other fields of action as in military life. At the age of twenty-seven Calvin published those "Institutes," which have so profoundly affected the theological thought of the world ever since. At twenty-seven the serphic Summerfield, ascended to heaven, leaving a name which the church will cherish forever, not merely as the designation of a remarkable person, but as a delicious aroma of a style of sympathetic and subduing eloquence, unique and inimitable.

Youthful energy is a most precious blessing when consecrated to the service of Christ, and the majority of the men who have been a power for good in the world have been called into the work early in life. John Wesley, the founder of the M. E. church, commenced his great work while he was yet a young man in college; and he set into motion influences for good that are now world-wide. Directly and indirectly, and he has been the means of leading uncounted thousands to Christ; and his influence is widening and deepening as the ages roll on. The celebrated George Whitfield was converted to Christ at an early age, ordained when only twenty-one years old; and the Sunday following preached a sermon that made so deep an impression upon the minds of his hearers that it was slanderously reported he had driven fifteen of them mad. Wherever he went vast multitudes were attracted to hear him, and many were converted to Christ. He attracted and excited a greater degree of attention to religion than can well be conceived; and millions bless his memory, yet he was only fifty-six when he died. On the 19th of June, 1623 Pascal was born, perhaps the most brilliant intellect that ever lighted on this lower world. He only lived thirty-nine years and three months; yet he wrote several books; yet he wrote several books that have been greatly admired by philosophers for profundity and deep piety.

When God desired to prepare the way for the preservation of his chosen family from destruction by famine, and also to save the people of Egypt from the same calamity, he selected the boy Joseph for this great work; and all are familiar with his history. While yet a young man he did a work in the court of Pharaoh that has been felt for good through all the ages down to the present, and will be to the end of time. Hezekiah twelfth king of Judah ascended the throne when he was only twenty-five, and died at the age of thirty-six. He was the son of the apostate Ahaz and Abi who were very corrupt, and had led the nation into gross idolatry. His first act was to purge, repair, and reopen with splendid sacrifices and perfect ceremonial the Temple which had been despoiled and neglected during the idolatrous reign of his father. He did not spare "the high places" where images were worshipped. The brazen serpent made by Moses in the wilderness was still in existence in Jerusalem, and it had become an object of worship. He destroyed this remarkable relic. This act shows a strong mind as well as clear sighted zeal. He restored the observance of the Passover, and brought back the whole nation to repentance and God. He organized a powerful army, drove the Philistines out of the strong cities they had taken from his father; and dispossessed them of all their own cities except Gaza. He found time in his troubled life for many works of peace.

The prophet Daniel was carried a captive with the Hebrew people to Babylon when he was a mere boy and about the age of sixteen he was selected by the King with other boys and put into the best school in the kingdom to fit them by proper training for service in the court. They were there three years when they were taken into the service of the King, and the first work of Daniel was to interpret a strange dream of his that the wise men of Babylon could not explain. The King was so impressed with the wisdom and learning of Daniel that he at once made him governor of the Province of Babylon, and he conducted the affairs of the city and Province in the most successful manner. He won the approbation of the King and the people, though he was only about twenty years old. He made a name and set an example at this early age that has shown as a beacon light through the centuries beaconing young men on in the path of virtue that leads to usefulness and heaven.

The facts that I have given show what young men can do, and how God uses them in building up his kingdom in the world. What has been done can be done again. As God used young men in the past so he is using them now, and there are more young men in the service of the Master than ever before. Never in the history of the church have there been so many young people organized into an organization to work for the redemption of souls as are now in the young People's society of Christian Endeavor. The young people are coming more and more and more to the front, and this is one of the brightest features of the present age.

All these young men of whom I have been speaking were willing and anxious to work for God. They were not driven into it, but loved it; and it was the greatest pleasure of their life to do it. This spirit of obedience grows out of love for and confidence in God. He loves him for his infinite goodness to him, and desires to show his appreciation of his love by obeying all his commands. He has confidence in his wisdom, and knows that he will never command him to do any thing that will be an injury to him. These two considerations lead to implicit obedience, and abiding trust. All that the Christian asks is to know that it is the command of God. He may not be able to see the reason for the command, but he trusts in the wisdom and love of God. A poor man applied to Stephen Girard, saying that he was willing to do any thing that would bring him an honest living. "I will give you a dollar a day," said Girard. "You take that pile of stones that you see in the end of the lot, and carry them to the other end and pile them up in the same manner that they now are." The man did the job and received his dollar.

Next morning he reappeared and was sent by his strange employer to replace the stones as he first found them. So the laborer wrought faithfully for a week, carrying the stones from one place to another without a murmur or question. On Saturday night the eccentric banker said to him, "I like you, there is no nonsense about you; you do what you are told to do. Many men would have objected to doing the work over and over. You shall have work as long as I have anything for any body to do." Such servants the Lord wants.

The young man's success in life all depends on a right start. He must have right ideas of his obligations and duties, and arm of himself against all evil with the word of God. Philip, a great necromancer, took a company of Swabian and Bavarian young men to a lonely place and entertained them at their request. He drew a circle around them with his sword and warned them not to leave it on any account. By his incantations he surrounded them with armed men who dared them to conflict, but none were lured forth. By his second enchantment he surrounded them with a company of beautiful dancing damsels, who tried every power of attraction upon them. A nymph, whose beauty exceeded all others, advanced to one of the young men and wrought such an effect on him, that he forgot the restriction and stretched forth his finger beyond the circle to receive the ring she proffered, she at once seized him and drew him after her. It was not till after much trouble that the necromancer was able to recover him. The circle is the rule of right and virtue. The armed men are pride, ambition, passion. The charms are intemperance, voluptuousness and sensuality. The only safety is within the circle. The first finger over the line and the whole body will follow to shame and ruin.

There is an old oriental story which describes an enchanted hill, whose summit concealed an object of incomparable worth. It was offered as a prize to him who should ascend the hill without looking back; but whosoever ventured to secure this treasure was told, that, if he did look backwards, he should be instantly changed into a stone. Many princely youths, allured by the tempting prize, had ventured up the fatal hill; and as many had been changed into stones; for the adjacent groves were filled with the most melodious voices, and with birds of the sweetest songs, whose bewitching strains and enticements followed each youth as he ascended the hill, till he suffered his curiosity to control his hopes and fears, turned his head, and instantly he became a stone. Hence said the story the hill side was covered with stones. To every young man, life is such an enchanted hill with its thousands of alluring vices, and its unnumbered victims, who have listened to some fatal charmer and have perished. The best defence against the charmer is to fill the mind with thoughts of God and eternity. Store it with the facts and truths of the Bible. David understood this, and tells us how he guarded himself against charms. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." A coachman said to a gentleman on the box, "Do you see that off leader there, sir?" "Yes: what of him?" "He always shies, sir, when we come near that gate. I must give him something to think on." No sooner said, that up went the whirling throng, and came down full of its sting, on the skittish leaders haunches. He had something else to think on, and flew past the gate rapidly. He had no time for panic. Fill the mind with something grand and noble to think on, and it will keep out evil thoughts and sinful desires. Young man, your destiny is in your own hands, you can make your life honorable and glorious, or sinful and shameful. You can buckle on the armour of righteousness, master your inclinations to evil, and live for God and humanity; or you can give yourself up to a life of idleness and carnal indulgence. There are in a Boston library certain books lettered on their backs, "Succedanium." "Leccedanium?" exclaims the visitors "what sort of a book is that?" Down it it comes; when lo! a wood-block, shap'd just like a book, is in his hands. Then he understands the meaning of the title to be "in place of another;" and that the wooden block is used to fill a vacant place, and to keep genuine volumes from falling into confusion. Such is an idler in society; a man in form, but a block in part; living for no high end, doing no good, giving no instruction; a dumb, dispised "succedanium" among men. Young man, what will you be? A "succedaneum," or a man among men? You alone can answer, and you must answer it; for your life will be what you make it.

Who is Thy Neighbor?

"But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, and who is thy neighbor?" Luke 10:29. Our Lord gives us one of the most striking illustrations of neighborly kindness and true Christian principle. Who is thy neighbor? it is not he that simply lives near you. He who lives the principle of the "Golden rule" is your neighbor in deed and in truth. In the parable of the "Good Samaritan" the disposition to shun the sight of misery, is very correctly illustrated in the "Priest." when a certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves who stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, etc., and by chance a certain priest came by: and when he saw him he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he came near and saw him he also passed by on the other side. In this we find no evidence of sympathy; but human selfishness. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil, etc., and took him to an inn, and paid off his account, which of these was a neighbor? The ruler, who would have restricted the word neighbor to a very narrow circle of friends, is shown that all men whom he has the power of benefiting are his neighbors, and that he owes to all a debt of love and self denial. This is beautifully illustrated in the following act of self denial: A fire broke out in a village of Denmark, one of the inhabitants, a poor man, was very active in rendering assistance; but every endeavor to extinguish the flames was in vain. At length, he was told that his own house was in danger, and that if he wished to save his furniture, not a moment was to be lost. There is something more precious, replied he, that I must first save. My poor, sick neighbor is not able to help himself; he will be lost if I do not assist him: I am sure he relies upon me. He flew to his neighbor's house, rushed, at the hazard of his life, through the flames, and conveyed the sick man in his arms to a place of safety. A society at Copenhagen showed their approbation of his conduct by presenting him with a silver cup filled with Danish crowns. We are to prefer our neighbor's interest to our own; I fear there are but few that fulfill this injunction; the great masses of humanity are seeking self interest, honor, fame and glory. The Bible standard of Christianity is a very high one; yet man with his carnal mind would lower it. But, who is thy neighbor? He who denies himself for your comfort, treats you with self-respect places you in his condition and does towards you as he would have you do towards him, is your neighbor. Our neighbor is a man where ever he may be found, whatever be his name, or race, into whatever pit of misery and degradation he may have fallen. Neither principalities, nor powers, nor things present or to come, can ever break up that heavenly created relation. Thy neighbor will stand by you in trials, troubles, adversity and greatest needs of life, and will rejoice with you in prosperity. Once there was a very poor man, a member of the church, he being afflicted, his wife afflicted, several small children to take care of, and they were very poor. Their main support was from a good milk cow they owned. This cow died and one of the rich deacons offered resolutions of sympathy at their next meeting at church and made a long tearful, sympathetic speech, desiring to comfort the poor brother. The pastor arose made a few remarks and put his hand into his pocket and handed the poor brother a $5 bill saying, I sympathize with him this much, where upon the deacon buried his face in his hands, refusing practical sympathy, and gave nothing of his great bounty to truly comfort his poor brother. Who was his brother the poor pastor, or the rich deacon? Who was his neighbor? Who was his friend? It is not every one that pretends to sympathize with you that is a true friend to you. It is not alone lip service that pleases God, but heart felt honest consecrated service.

Don't Again.

Don't be afraid to call a spade by its name, and don't be afraid to tell a sinner that he is one, if that is your opinion of him. Is there not actual

Dr. Stephen B. Weeks of Trinity College has written a book upon the early colonial history of our State, which has been published by Johns Hopkins University. In it he alleges that in colonial times no one was allowed to conduct a school in North Carolina unless he was a member of the Episcopal church, and to that fact is attributed "the backwardness of intellectual activity characteristic of the State to day." Dr. Weeks also says in his book "that Presbyterian ministers were not allowed to perform the marriage ceremony till 1766, and when they did perform it the fee went to the local minister of the church of England."

The editor of the News and Observer last week controverts both these statements, and says the first is "very incorrect," and that while there is much in Dr. Weeks' book to commend, "he was not content to narrate the story, but had an objective point to work up to." In regard to Presbyterian ministers marrying people the editor says he is uncertain how it was before 1741, but after that year the Presbyterian ministers would marry people, and if they could not, Presbyterian justices of the peace could, and there were a great many of them.

We do not know whether the editor of the News and Observer or Dr. Weeks is right about the matters mentioned, but so far as we have read the colonial history of this State and Virginia we are led to say that we would not be surprised if Dr. Weeks has authority for his statements. The Episcopal brethren back in those old colonial times had a large opportunity, and these brethren, so far as we have observed, wherever they have had a chance have always been very "assumptuous."

Those who have been through the records of colonial times, and have written down their investigations, have generally brought out a great deal of intolerance on the part of the established church of those times. Some of the histories that have recorded these things have not been very well relished by some.

It may be that Dr. Weeks is wrong in regard to the matters mentioned above, but if it shall so turn out, there are still some matters along the same line that have been lodged in our mind that we would like to have additional information about, and while we would not ask a newspaper published for general readers to devote itself too much to the defense of any particular church, yet when the editor of the News and Observer has some space which he can properly devote to the matter, we should like to know whether or not ministers of other denominations than the Episcopal were put in jail in Virginia in colonial times for preaching the gospel, and whether they were also required in those times to give bond for claiming the same privilege in this State.—Biblical Recorder.

It Does not Prove It.

"To unite with a sectarian church does not prove that you really love Christian union. If you are a minister, to be on better terms with Christian ministers than with the Christian ministers does not prove that your charity is more remarkable than that of the fathers, nor that you are building up a church that will stand fast when you are dead. To fight our ministers who dwell in their preaching largely on theology does not necessarily prove that you yourself are a man of peace. To preach in such a manner that people do not know what you believe does not prove that you are an admirer of truth, nor that you are broad in your learning. To cultivate in your parish the society of the rich only does not prove that you are a man of culture, nor that you are like Jesus Christ. To fail in a small enterprise does not prove that you are able to carry on a great one. To become very popular in sectarian churches does not prove that you are building up the Christian church. To be wavering in your fidelity to a people, or cause, does not prove that you are the man for that people to trust. To be an excellent critic of the measures, or work, of others, does not prove that you are a worker, nor that you are a genius. To point out all the dark spots in the snow does not prove that you could clothe the earth in white, nor that you are in important business. To be on the opposite side to your brethren does not always prove that you are on the side of Jesus. To arrive at definite conclusions on some doctrinal question does not positively prove that you ought to leave the Christians: for there ought to be some missionaries among us that know what they believe. To ask for a thousand dollar salary does not prove that you are worth two hundred. To spend your time at games, or gossip, does not prove that you are hurried in your gospel labors. To be an invalid does not prove that you ought to be ordained to the work of the gospel ministry. It does not prove that Jesus was a sectarian, to show that he would not make a union with the devil, when that popular religious leader showed the Master "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," and offered them all to Jesus for union. Jesus was too narrow to make that kind of an alliance, and even sometimes said, "Narrow is the way that leadeth unto life." To condemn this article does not prove that there is no truth in it.—American Christian.

International C. E. Convention Notes.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

State badges seemed brighter and more varied than ever.

Indiana interprets "Y. P. S. C. E.," "Young People Should Christianize the Earth."

You cannot keep a truly Christian man or woman outside the pale of a Christian society.—Dr. Henson.

No Convention ever held—not even the New York Convention—has received so much attention from the press.

Montreal, city of a queen though it is, never before has had within her borders so many heirs apparent to a throne.—Bishop Arnett.

"C. E." everywhere, in shop-windows, swung on great streamers across the streets, peppering all the newspapers, on every one's tongue.

Many bright-faced girls and some pastors, as well as the young men, wore the yachting caps of the hard-working reception committee.

The decorations of the Drill Hall included all the State seals, and the roof was beautifully hung with great festoons of the Canadian and American national colors.

It was fun to see Mr. Wainwright present the Illinois Junior banner to himself. "If you want to take this from Illinois, you've got to sit up nights and hustle!"

The famous French politeness was conspicuously shown in Montreal, in general, by men of all nationalities. Strangers could not be more hospitably treated.

Presbyterians lead in the Christian Endeavor societies. I tell you, this fact in Presbyterianism counteracts all its troubles and trials from Professor Briggs.—Dr. Tupper.

The Convention badge was a silvered maple-leaf, Canada's emblem, bearing a "C. E." on a red background, and suspended over a blue ribbon. It was a red, white, and blue symbol, you see!

At one time, when the hostile demonstrations of the Montreal roughs looked rather threatening, the police attached the hose to the hydrants on either side of the Drill Hill, and were ready to quench the ardor of the boldest.

The "scouts" of the Montreal reception committee were thoroughly appreciated. They appeared on the trains two or three hours before they reached the city, and gave the travelers a kindly greeting that made them feel at home at once.

A striking incident of Friday night session in the Drill Hall was the procession of Ohio Endeavorers up the central aisles, bearing their great banner, that stretched half-way across the hall, "Welcome to Cleveland in '94!" Yes, yes! We'll be there.

The banner for the delegation aggregating the largest number of miles of travel was won by Pennsylvania, with 393,000 miles. Massachusetts came next with 297,500 miles; New York with 270,000; California with 267,500; Illinois with 261,000.

While the Protestants are praying for the Catholics the Catholics were sending up petitions for the Protestants. Rev. Abbe Marre, of Notre Dame, was especially urgent that his parishioners should pray for the conversion of the visiting heretics.

One delegate was a man with three children. He had taken them to Minneapolis and to New York. "How can you afford it?" was asked him. "Why, before my own conversion, I spent on drinking, tobacco, and gambling, many times what I now spend on such glorious things as these!"

A brother asked me: I thought the churches could stand the Christian Endeavor movement. I answered that if the church could not stand a movement whose main purpose is to get the young people to hold prayer meetings in their own church, it needs to be prayed for.—Bishop Arnett.

What a beautiful sight to stand on the Levee terrace at night and see the vast throng pouring from both Drill Hall and gym, along the sidewalks, filling the street-cars, with a crowded mass of humanity, up the wide streets, as far as the eye can see, a vast army of Endeavorers!

The registration, and badges given out, showed an attendance of seventeen thousand, by far the largest attendance of any Christian Endeavor Convention, with the single exception of the New York meeting. Considering the failure of Western railroads to give rates, the attendance may fairly be considered a better than ever before.

"I wanted to burn up the old snags and branches in a dead levee in my garden. I started a bonfire. In a trice I had a company of boys about me. They asked permission to gather sticks and snags. I did no more work that afternoon. Brother pastors, kindle a bonfire of love in your hearts, and start a Junior society, if you want to see things cleared up around your church."—Kinney.

At one of the early morning prayer meetings Rev. Mr. DeGruchy, a French Protestant clergyman of Montreal, referred to the fact that some of the drunken roughs of the city had got hold of the yellow streamers worn by the California Endeavorers, and were wearing them into saloons and in other evil ways, to the great scandal of the cause. "But I am perfectly confident," said he emphatically, "that so far as the patronage of Endeavorers is concerned, every saloon in Montreal might as well have crape on the door!"

The mayor and aldermen of Montreal, on the Monday following the Convention, tendered a complimentary dinner and a ride to Mount Royal to the trustees and other prominent Endeavorers. This was a high compliment to the Convention, and one never before paid such a gathering. At the city council chamber, after "Blest be the tie" had been sung, Mayor Desjardins remarked that he wished the harmony of that song could prevail permanently in that room. "La Marseillaise" was played in compliment to the French hosts. About two hundred Endeavorers partook of this courtesy.

The rally of the "Christian" Church was held in the Sunday School room of Emmanuel Church. Rev. T. S. Weeks, of Wolfboro, N. H., presided. The delegates present, for the most part gave their experiences in connection with the Christian Endeavor Society, and the progress being made by their own church. Both were highly satisfactory. One of the delegates thought that the Church should be represented by at least 2000 delegates at Cleveland, Ohio alone being able to furnish half that number. Other speakers agreed that a move should be made in that direction without delay. The meeting before parting adopted a vote of thanks to Emmanuel Church. All expressed great delight at the reception extended to them in Montreal and on the success of the Convention.—Montreal Star

One or two of the speakers made remarks that were wrongly interpreted by the Catholics as indicating that the Convention intended to insult the religious faith of the majority of Montreal citizens. A large company of them met, one night, outside of the "Temple", and, after some loud harangues, marched around the square, shouting noisily, and singing "Li Misreil-aise." All such opinions have been set at rest by the assent given to Dr. Clark's statement that not a word spoken by any of the Convention speakers had been intended to insult the religious feelings of any of their hosts. Every member of the great audience rose to his feet in token of agreement. Nevertheless, the anger of the French populace grew, fanned by inflammatory statements—or misstatements, rather—in their papers, and by the vigorous action of the hated Orangemen, who came to the protection of the Endeavorers in large numbers and with great zeal. The police and the city government, both to a large extent French, maintained the peace bravely and efficiently. The Endeavorers won the respect of all by their patient forbearance, and the leading Catholics of Montreal are as deeply grieved as the leading Protestants over this exhibition of a religious prejudice and bigotry that cannot permit a word of honest and respectful criticism without flying into the excesses of insult, outrage, and lawlessness.

The Pastor's Hour.

The following are testimonials of the value and work done by the C. E., according to the pastors' two minute speeches—Reported by the Golden Rule:

The hearty testimonials to the worth of Christian Endeavor, given at the St. James Methodist Church, were most heartily received by the audience. Baptists, it was said, shout first, last, always, now and forever, fidelity to the whole movement. The Disciples have found in Christian Endeavor the spring of eternal youth, renewing the church's early vigor. The Friends' Church in America stands solidly for Christian Endeavor, with but two local exceptions reported. Efforts are being made by the United Brethren that may soon make them among the most aggressive workers for the cause. The Reformed Presbyterians are attracted by the absolute loyalty to Christ, bold protest against evil, common-sense covenant and pledge. The Methodist Episcopal Church has so strong an instinct for taking up good things that it would seem that it cannot long forego the interdenominational fellowship. Because of the tendency towards the union of all Christians, Cumberland Presbyterians are Christian Endeavor to the core. The Methodist Protestants have as a motto, "A Christian Endeavor society in every Methodist Protestant church." Lutherans like the society because it is fundamentally right, and always puts first that which is first. Canadian Presbyterians that know the movement love it, and are ready to defend, to commend, and to extend it. Christians have expressed their judgment by a gain of one hundred per cent in their societies. Congregationalists would as soon part with the Sunday school as with the Y. P. S. C. E. The Epworth League babe of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, already shows an interest in twelve year-old Christian Endeavor, and a wedding of the two may be looked for at no distant day. The Reformed Episcopal Church loves a movement that is teaching its young people to pray. The Episcopal Church approves of an organization born in late years, but having the best of earlier ages, and that requires study of the Bible. The attitude of the Mennonites may be summed up in the words "admit," "submit," "commit," "transmit." The Reformed Church has shown its position by the formation of a Christian Endeavor mission league and the holding of a missionary conference. Presbyterians believe in the providential origin and guidance of the Society. In the interests of effective work the Evangelical Association seeks to enlist its young people in the Endeavor organization. Southern Presbyterians think the Society one of the greatest movements of the nineteenth century, and would like to see a similar one among the older people. The African Methodist Episcopalians look to see every helpful thing continue to come from Christian Endeavor. Official approval has been given by the Moravians, and it is only a question of a short time when all their young people will join—the Society.

"The Raw Material of a Great Life," and its relation to the finished product, was the topic handled at this meeting by Rev. J. W. Lee, D. D., of Atlanta. "The raw material is found in the conditions surrounding life. The material corresponds to the kind of life that it supports.

We look to Kentucky for perfect horses, and to the island of Jersey for perfect cows, and to Florida for perfect oranges, and to Minnesota for perfect wheat; but who can tell us where high and wide and deep and rich and holy men and women grow? The material must be a duplicate of that which it effects. We find the duplicates of ourselves in the eternal Mind. Mind is dependent on thought, affection, and will. But thought does not come to us from things outside ourselves. We develop affection by loving those around us. Alone we are nothing; it is only when we come in contact with the race that we come to be strong and great. When a good deed passes from us, it ceases to be a little, local, human thing. By touching humanity we touch Christ, in whom God issued a second edition of humanity. We need intellectual piety, heart piety, and will piety; and when these have been gained by accepting the Lord Jesus Christ, perfection will mark all the ways of our life. The perfect Christian is the perfect gentleman. A true Christian is the most beautiful of objects. Christianity is not self-denial; it is the asserting of one's higher self. Religion is the royalty in one rising up and claiming its estate in God."

The Secret Revealed.

In his speech before the Convention of Christian Endeavorers at Montreal, Canada, Rev. M. H. G. Temple of Boston solved the problem of how to raise money for the cause of Christ:

You ask me how to raise money for the Lord's work; I answer in two words, GIVE IT! My address this morning shall be an amplification of that advice. When God gets ready to sell salvation, it will be time for him to purchase man's aid for the great purposes of his love. If I read my Bible aright, the All-Father has been sitting upon the circle of the universe from all eternity and doing nothing but give, give, give. And if I have read the history of the race aright, man, ever since he had a being, has been doing little than get, get, get. God has put to shame every well-to-do andiggardly giver, the world over, by his magnificent benevolence, for he began his existence with nothing. That only goes to show that the disposition to give produces the power to give, until zero becomes infinity.

First, he gave matter in chaos; then he gave order in creation; then he gave the lord of creation,—a lifeless piece of clay. Then he simply breathed upon this supreme sovereign of earth, and man became a living, regal soul,—God's grandest production. Then God gave himself in his Spirit, and, more wonderfully still himself in his Son as a sacrifice for sin, the soul of which was selfishness, because man would be always getting and never giving. Here then, is the gospel in one sentence: God gave himself in his infinity to man, that man might give himself in his entirety to God. Hence, when a man says to me, "How can I do this work for God? I answer: "Give yourself to him. You do not have to do the work. He will do it through you." When a church asks, "How shall we raise money for the extension of the Lord's Kingdom?" I answer: "Raise it in the Lord's way. Give it by giving yourself, body and soul, time and talents, person and docket-book." The Christian Endeavor Society is breaking in all directions the cement that has glued together Christians lips. And now it considers that it is intrusted with another mission,—that of smashing the padlocks that have heretofore fastened youthful pockets. A disposition to give; that is the meaning of the word generosity,—a disposition so strong that it will not be crossed in its purpose; a disposition so faithful that it will not lose a single opportunity; a disposition so aggressive that it will go out and hunt up cases upon which it may lavish its munificence. And I mean by munificence not large benefactions necessarily. I mean, if need be, only five cents, yes, even two mites, which make a farthing, if they bear a large proportion to all the donor has. Do you suppose, if the church of God were in right condition, it would be necessary to tickle the palates of the saints with savory suppers, and to go to the very verge of propriety in getting up entertainments, and to aid and abet the speculative spirit of the age by introducing the Louisiana lottery into church fairs, themselves unnecessary, only giving it a different name, so as to avoid the disgrace, in order to induce the people to support the gospel?

I have no objections to church fairs properly conducted, because I think they bring into requisition talents which ought to be utilized and which might otherwise run to waste, and bring together various classes of workers in harmony for the promotion of some worthy cause dear to them all. I want them conducted on proper business principles, and not scandalize the whole Christian community by their manifest unfairness and chicanery. But, while I amid all this I do affirm that when a church-member says, in effect, "I will not give liberally of my substance for philanthropic and missionary purposes unless I can see dollar for dollar in sort of return," he had better go to his dictionary and find out anew the meaning of that word "generosity." If he says in effect, "Here are one hundred dollars; but I want a pew for my money, and a pew fully up to the price, too; in fact, I would like a hundred-and-fifty-dollar pew for that sum if I could get it; here is a ten-dollar bill, but I want a worked afghan, or an embroidered sefapillow, or a lace what-you may call-it for my contribution; here is a quarter, but I want a fifty cent supper or a dollar entertainment before I will let it pass through my fingers," well, that man needs to be reeducated in the significance of the word we are discussing. That is buying not giving. That is barter non benevolence.

Finally, there is such a thing as the grace of giving. It ought to be put in the list as the tenth fruit of the Spirit. I have very little hope of the permanence of youthful piety until I see marked evidences of this estimable virtue. But like all other Christian virtues. It must be enthusiastically entered, into and enjoyed to produce the best results. Prayer thus emphasized becomes communion. Service thus rendered becomes holy zeal. Oiving in this spirit doubly blesses. It leaves its benediction alike upon both donor and receiver. It droppeth like the gentle dew from heaven, blessing both him who gives and him who takes. This is the way God intended His Kingdom to be built upon earth. When the church has fully learned this divine principle, and has put it faithfully into operation, depend upon it, there will not be room enough to contain the divine blessing that shall be hers. Give, then generously, individually, vicariously, enthusiastically. Mark the initial of these words, g-i-v-e! I close then as I began. How shall we raise money for the Lord's work? GIVE IT!

Washington Letter.

As soon as a man of prominence dies it seems that all of the absurd and ridiculous stories with which his name has been connected—such connections are penalties paid with more or less frequency by all men who become prominent in any station—are republished, no matter how often they may in the lifetime of the deceased have been proven to be entirely false, and begin a fresh round of the newspapers. The truthfulness of this statement is proven by the revival of the old stories about the late Senator Leland Stanford having become a spiritualist after the death of his only son. Your correspondent once heard Senator Stanford say in the most positive language, soon after the death of his son when the story was first started, that it was not true; and Bishop Newman, who was for many years the pastor and the close personal friend of Senator and Mrs. Stanford, has more than once publicly denounced the story as being without the slightest foundation. Now comes further proof. Rev. Dr. Hugh Johnson, who, although pastor of the church at attended by Senator and Mrs. Stanford for some months previous to the death of the Senator, never saw him but three times, told his congregation last Sunday of one of these visits. It was on the day of the annual pew-renting, and the Senator being confined to his house, under medical treatment for a painful ear trouble, could not attend, so Dr. Johnson called at his residence to ask him whether he wished to retain his pew. His reply was: "Oh, yes, I shall keep my pew. I am a Methodist; I love the theological system—a generous teaching of the Methodist church." After a general conversation in which the Senator explained why he had not been able to attend church and expressed regrets, Dr. Johnson said to him: "My dear Senator, in view of the uncertainties of life, I trust you have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ and have no fears for the future. The Senator warmly grasped the hand of the minister and said: Thank God, I have peace, I have no fears for the future. I do not fear death. I rather welcome it. It seems to me that the happiest moment of existence must be the moment when the soul returns to its maker." "His eyes were suffused with tears," said Dr. Johnson; "so were mine. I said: My dear Senator, I am so glad to hear you speak as you do." And when in Toronto, I read of his sudden departure, I said: "The happiest moment of his life's existence has come. His soul has been kissed away to God."

As a rule the funeral of military officers are gorgeous affairs, but that of Gen. Kelton, late Superintendent of the soldiers' Home which took place late Monday afternoon was a striking exception to the rule, owing to the following quotation from a letter written by the deceased some time before his death, which was sudden: "Having lived longer than the average lifetime of men, and having wrought hard for many years in the interest of public good and for the benefit of the Army, and for which the Army and the public have both shown appreciation, I feel that my work and usefulness must soon come to an end. I therefore express the wish that, if I die on duty at the home, I be buried in the National Cemetery near the home in a common coffin, such as are made for the inmates, covered with common black serge, and that the home-hearse be used. I do not desire a military funeral, nor any pall-bearers; I have been permitted to walk alone, self-reliant, all my life; I prefer to go alone to the cemetery, without the escort of pall-bears or military band." The dead officer's wishes were carried out to the letter, although 2,500 people, including all the inmates of the Soldier's Home, attended the simple funeral services.

Government officials do not attach the slightest importance to rumor telegraphed here a few days ago from the Pacific coast, that the British authorities were preparing to resist by force the decision of the Behring Sea arbitration, of the claims made by the United States. They are unanimous in the belief that the decision, whatever it may be, will be accepted by both countries, in accordance with the terms of the treaty of arbitration.

Statements to the contrary are both malicious and disgraceful.

The number of men who can address a congregation in three languages—German, Swedish and English—, as the Bishop of Visby, Sweden, did Monday evening at the reception given him at St. Paul's Lutheran church is limited. The Bishop was sent to make a tour of the United States by King Oscar to commemorate the 300th anniversary of the Reformation of the English Lutheran church.

The Misfortunes of Job

NUMBER 6.

In this article we will consider the third and fourth reasons given for the evils which befall Job. The third reason is, God desired to make an example of Job, showing to people of future ages what a mortal man could endure, and still retain his faith in God, and his own personal integrity. If the above reason were correct, it seems to the writer that the free volition of man would be only a theory and would not exist in fact. But we know from experience that man does enjoy the freedom of will, Job did not desire to undergo what he did undergo. He did not suffer freely and willingly without a murmur. During his illness he was continually sighing for relief or death, and declared that God was not justifiable in treating him thus. Job had no control of his condition, and though he still trusted God he did not think him just in inflicting loathsome miseries upon him. Had God desired to give to the world a model of patience and long suffering, he would not have selected one whom he knew would wish that he had never been born. Job longed for death: he quarreled with his friends and he declared himself free from sin. So while many under the same circumstances might at the solicitation of their wives curse God and die, and while many others might have borne the same misfortunes equally heroically still Job bore his suffering remarkably well, and has made a name proverbial as the patient man. But God did not wish to make Job an illustration of what it is to be patient. There was something of more vital importance than that, and it were necessary for Job to realize it, and this brings us to our last reason. While Job was a righteous man compared with the standard of righteousness in his age, yet there were some things lacking in him which were necessary to bring him to a more abundant knowledge of God. As we gather from the book of Job, he was a self-righteous man. He had been trying to do right, and he became fully persuaded that he had done right, and that there was nothing on his part that he had left undone. The most of us know what kind of men such persons always are. We meet them in almost every community, and such a thing as convincing them that they are not as good as they think themselves to be is almost impossible. It is our opinion that Job was a man of that kind. He was a mortal man. He believed in God and served him according to an established ceremony, but he probably lacked that humbleness of mind and meekness of spirit which a true worshiper of God ought to possess. God saw that Job possessed a wonderful tenacity of purpose in life to do right, but he saw that Job thought too highly of himself, and for this thing he allowed satan to persecute him. God saw that the remedy to be applied must be an exceedingly severe one, because the defect to be treated was of an exceedingly obstinate nature. This is the conclusion we reach after a careful study of the case. If it is incorrect we would be glad for some one better informed to show us our error. We do not believe, we cannot believe that God visits afflictions upon his people when they serve him with their whole heart. We cannot believe that God would gratify an evil spirit by almost destroying a righteous man. We cannot believe that God makes his innocent subjects to suffer disgrace, shame, and the other ills of life involuntarily for the sake of showing others what good people will endure for His sake. We believe that every punishment which man receives, or every evil thing which comes upon him is the result of some violation of God's law, and that God does not send afflictions without a just cause. We believe that there was a cause for Job's being afflicted. It was a cause for which Job was responsible, and had he been exactly what he ought to have been God would have never allowed the evil one to bring him to ruin. After the fiery trials which Job suffered were over, he was restored to his former position in society. But notice please, that God did not restore him until he repented of what he had said concerning his own self-righteousness, and confessed that he was a sinner before God. It was not till then his haughty spirit was broken and he saw his true relation to God. Then God gave him back his possessions. Then new friends rose up to greet him. Then more sons and daughters were born to cheer his life, and peace and plenty surrounded his pathway.

The Christian Newspaper.

C. H. WETHERBEE

One the strange things which we are compelled to observe is that thousands of professed Christians take no Christian newspapers. And one unpleasant feature about the matter is, they have no desire to read one. If you ask them to subscribe for one, they are apt to say that they cannot afford to. But in very many cases this is a groundless excuse. The fact is, they will fritter away their money on things which they not only do not really need, but which are a positive harm to them. In one year they will spend at least five dollars on some class of useless and perhaps harmful luxury, when, at the same time, if they were asked to subscribe for a good religious paper, at the rate of two dollars per year, they would roll up their eyes in solemnity and sighfully say that they could not afford to pay such a high price for any paper. And many of these very people will pay, without a single groan, five cents each week for a copy of the Police Gazette or some sensational sheet, which in the course of a year, amounts to two dollars and sixty cents. What inconsistency this is. But then we have long since got used to seeing inconsistencies in the most of people. There are quite a number of Christian papers which are sold at one dollar per year. The price is put down so low as to reach the cases of those "poor" Christians who say they cannot pay two dollars a year for a paper. And yet there are plenty of church members who will even then say that they cannot afford to pay for such papers! The wonder is if they could "afford" to read them if they were given outright to them! Now, what is really the trouble with such folks? It seems to be this, they are troubled with a dearth of vital spirituality. They may seriously object to this charge, but it is too true. Of course, their early education may have been against an interest in religious reading of this kind. Or, in other words, they may not have been early educated into the habit of such reading. At the same time, if they were ardently spiritually-minded, they would have a craving for food of this kind. They would have a longing to know what God is doing in the world for the souls of men. They would desire to see what triumphs the cause of Christ is making. When a man is interested in a certain project or line of business, he will take and read that newspaper which gives special attention to it and informs its readers of its condition and outlook. Those who are specially interested in horse racing have a desire to take at least one sporting paper. And is it not reasonable that Christians should take enough interest in the affairs of Christ's cause to lead them to take a Christian newspaper? Most reasonable. And will not an honest Christian pay for such a paper if he take it? Of course.—N. C. Baptist.

The Fair to be Closed After All.

At last the Local Directory of the Chicago Exposition have capitulated. They have been utterly and totally routed; disgracefully and gloriously beaten. The disgrace belongs to them, the glory to the American people.

From the beginning it was evident that the Local Directory, who had the immediate management of the Fair, would determine that it should be open on Sunday. They felt that they had their hand on the throttle and could do what they pleased no matter what any other authority might say. The National Commission forbade it, Congress forbade it, the public sentiment of the country forbade it; but they had resolved that open it should be on the first day of the week. The unanimous protest of the churches made no difference to them. The traditions of the country they cared nothing for; the American Sabbath they despised. All they wanted was financial success; and that they thought would be secured by keeping the Fair open seven days in the week. For the scruples of Sabbatarians they had a contempt. Congress made them an appropriation of millions, on condition that the Fair should be closed on Sunday. They took the money and ignored the condition. They supposed that Sunday was an effete institution. They imagined that Sunday games and Sunday races and Sunday saloons represented the principles and the practice of the American people. They have found out their mistake and, as we have said, they have capitulated.

For their capitulation we give the Local Directory not one bit of credit. The National Commission deserves credit, which by a vote of fifty-four to six passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, By the World's Columbian Commission, that the rule now being enforced by the World's Columbian Exposition for the purpose of opening the gates of the Exposition on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, has not been approved of or indorsed by this Commission, and is in violation of the rule jointly adopted and promulgated by said Exposition and said Commission, and is being enforced without the assent or authority of the World's Columbian Commission."

This is what the opponents of Sunday opening have claimed all along, that the Local Directory in deciding to open the gates did so on its own responsibility and without the legal co-operation of the Commission. In other words, the rule originally adopted closing the gates was a joint rule and the concurrence of the Commission in repealing it was never had. After passing the above resolution a committee of four was ordered to confer with the Council of Administration and the Directory with a view to securing "a strict compliance with the rule requiring the gates to be closed Sunday." This has now been achieved. Last Sunday was the last open Sunday.

The Columbian managers have certainly made a mess of it. Sunday opening has proved a failure. The laborer does not want it, it is unpopular, and it does not pay. The National Commission now says it was never legally provided for. It has sadly prejudiced the Fair, which is undoubtedly the greatest the world has ever seen, in the eyes of thousands of persons who would have visited this gigantic collection of wonders and would have already put many thousand dollars in the coffers which they have failed to get.

Perhaps it is just as well, after all, that this miserable exhibition of stupidity and trickery should have been made. We have had a colossal demonstration of the strength of the Christian sentiment of the country and of the weakness of that sentiment which opposes it. The two views have been pitted one against another. A fair trial has been made by the enemies of a Sabbath for the workingman. They told great stories during the first two or three Sundays of how the gates were besieged by angry thousands. Then they opened the gates, and the result was that these surging multitudes did not come. There were only half as many visitors on Sunday as there were on other days of the week, and these could have come on a week day as well as a Sunday. Last Sunday, announced to be the last Sunday, and advertised a benefit for the families of those killed in the fire, witnessed the smallest attendance since the Fair opened. The great body of the people believe in a weekly day of rest, and they do not care to leave their homes and crowd the Fair on Sunday. It is amusing to see how silent the papers are which have been urging and defending the opening of the fair. They can find nothing to say. Those most delighted are the thousands of workingmen, attendants and policemen, who can now rest on the seventh day.

We were not surprised that so many newspapers with their Sunday editions were booming a Sunday Fair. But what right had you to do it—a few, a very few of you ministers, bishops and archbishops? What business had you not to know the churches better and the country better, and the demands of the people for a day of rest? What business had you to be deceived by the transparent, pretext that a Fair meant crowded saloons? How have you felt when you have read that on Sunday the spaces in the Exhibition were empty and the streets about the saloons in the Plaisance were crowded? Will you learn a lesson as well as the Local Directory?

But now the error has been corrected, the wrong has been righted. Many thousand had declared they would not visit the Fair because it was to be open on Sunday. That stain is removed. Hereafter it will be closed on the first day of the week. Let the past blunder be forgotten. The Fair is the most magnificent exhibition ever had on the face of the earth. That man or woman makes a great blunder who fails to see it. It is an education and a memory for a life time. Do not let the opportunity slip. Let every one who can possibly manage to do so go to Chicago and spend as long a time as possible studying this great exposition, no matter if it costs some self-denial some economy for months afterward. It is worth the time and the expense. We especially urge the young people, if they can in any way manage it, to go to the Fair just as we urge them to go to school. It is not unreasonably expensive. The excursion rates will be moderate, and reasonable arrangements can be made for board. There is now no excuse for staying away and every reason for going. Let it be made a great success.—Independent.

Genuine Honesty

Men talk of honesty and integrity and benevolence as though they consisted in outward acts. We speak of honest deeds and benevolent deeds. But there is no honesty of the type except where the principle of honesty is firmly fixed in the heart. An honest man is honest at all times and in all things. When a dishonest man does what is called an honest deed, he does it to escape the penalty of the law, or the condemnation of men, or from some other selfish and unworthy motive. He is acting a part. His honesty is on the surface, and not on the heart. It is not genuine.—New York Christian Advocate.

Breakwater.

Young writers, and some older one, take offense when an article is returned with a kind note, and really they are the kindest notes in the world. They see it never to realize that many editors have spent years of day and night study preparing themselves to stand between the writer and the readers. Think of the world of trash we would encounter if it were not for patient editors!—Cor. Albany Advocate.

Have you read our Great Book Offer?

We have a nice cool office now, which makes us feel better these hot days.

The Sunday School at Youngsville is doing well. The Children's Day service was a grand success.

The Raleigh Sunday school has purchased a small library and expects to add to it from time to time.

Many of the preachers are engaged in revival services; now the SUN is anxious to have reports from them.

The great and pressing need of this office is for those who have been notified of their delinquency to PAY UP.

What has become of Prof. J. O. Atkinson? Does any one know? Is he sick or has he lost all his pens and pencils?

Where are our good brethren and sisters of the Deep River Conference? Look up your pens, and let us hear from you.

Revs. T. W. Stroud, P. T. Klapp, W. H. Roach and J. W. Parker made the new office pleasant calls last week.

The good news of the closing of the World's Fair gates on Sunday is hailed with delight by God's people everywhere.

In moving our office the children's letters which we had has been misplaced and we have not been to find them as yet.

Do you want books cheap, then read the Literary Revolution on next to last page, renew your subscription to the SUN and order your books of us.

Nothing has been heard at this office about the health of Dr. Jones since his serious illness, but it is earnestly hoped he is improving.

Rev. P. H. Fleming was too sick last week to attend the Sunday School Convention at Union. We felt sure that Bro. Fleming had a good excuse for his absence.

Rev. J. L. Foster is absent on a three weeks vacation so there will be no preaching in the Raleigh church next Sunday. The regular Sunday school service at 9:30 a. m. will be held.

The SUN formerly occupied the top floor of a three story building, but it has "gone down" and at present occupies a basement, but it expects with the help of God, to shine as brightly as ever.

Revs. W. H. Roach and J. W. Parker are in a revival meeting at Plymouth this week. Let prayers be made that the Holy Ghost will be with them in great power to the converting of many souls.

Burlington gives a new subscriber toward the press fund and so does Union, N. C., and Bethel. What other churches will enter the list? Remember that an average of two new subscribers from each church in the south, with the cash in advance, pays for the new press.

The funeral sermon of Col. J. M. Pugh was preached at Morrisville last Sunday by Rev. W. G. Clements. Rev. J. A. Jones taking part in the services. The congregation was large and attentive. Mr Pugh had many friends, and they came to pay the last tribute of respect to one they had known so long.

Let all our readers read closely the C. E. Notes and Pastor's Hour, and then take steps to organize a young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor in your church. This C. E. is a Pastor's Aid Society and a Young Peoples Prayer Meeting as well as a strong prop to the Sunday school in every church where it is organized and properly conducted. For information on how to organize and conduct the Society address United Society of Christian Endeavor, 646 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Our brethren, sisters and friends at Burlington, N. C., have shown themselves true church workers in their efforts to build a house of worship in the fast growing town of factories. Rev. C. C. Peele (their pastor) has done a work at Burlington that will live when he shall have gone to the future state. But the brethren and sisters have been as faithful as he. How much money the sisters have raised by their own efforts, we do not know. But we understand they have bought a set of nice pulpit furniture, the carpeting, and are now going to buy the bell. These Burlington sisters deserve the highest praise.

Why Murmur Always?

It is not expected that men will live in this world without some trouble. And it is true many dark days and sad hours cross life's pathway. But are not some of these the children of their own conduct? Who will say that bad health is not often the effect of a miss spent life? And is not idleness often the parent of poverty? If any of these things are the cause of your troubles, why murmur? You did it yourself. Now bear it like a brave soul. But if it comes through some other channels, will murmuring stop the tide or soften the bed?

Notwithstanding that we come in contact with so much which we do not like, we receive many more blessings than disappointments. We are so apt to complain about the bad things we forget the good ones. With thousands of people it is much easier to murmur over hard times than it is to work for bread and butter.

Christian Work.

The work of the Christian in all of its different phases, resolves itself into the fields of actively and passively. If those two fields are faithfully cultivated, glorious crops of blessings will be gathered in at harvest.

Christian work activity enters into two departments. The first one is that of aggressiveness towards the enemy of souls. His various armies must be met and driven from the fields of sin. And his temptations, with all their combinations, must be resisted at every point with a power like that seen in Jesus on the mount of fasting.

Again the Christian's work of activity must move him on rapid journeys of relief to the suffering ones. The active sympathies of his heart must fly with the wings of kindness to the huts of misery and suffering, carrying gladness and joy from a crucified Saviour to these sad homes. His faith must lift the soul in earnest prayer for the blessings held in God's hand. His feet must move him to God's house for worship of Him who delights in obedience in his children. He must teach his eyes to follow the lives of the Bible, studying the message of eternal truth.

The second part of Christian work is of a passive nature, and floats on God's love without resistance. Passiveness in Christian work reminds one much of drift wood which always floats on the water's surface, in any and all directions, wherever tide or current moves it. So the Christian is to throw himself with full confidence on God's mercies, with a willing heart to be used of God. And, like the drift wood, he should move as he is moved.

The N. C. and Va., Sunday School Convention.

The Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference met with the Church at Union, N. C., last Tuesday, and was called to order by Rev. J. L. Foster, the former president. In the organization, Bro. Foster insisted that he should be relieved from the arduous work of chairman and some one else take the responsibility for the present. Finally the body yielded to the wishes of Bro. Foster, and Rev. W. C. Wicker was elected President. Bro. Wicker is well qualified, and filled the position well. But no one will be expected to do more or better work as president than did Bro. Foster. The Secretary, Bro. J. M. Turner, sent in his resignation which was accepted, and Prof. S. A. Holleman elected to fill the vacancy. Prof. Holleman will fill the office with credit to himself and the convention, but not more so than Bro. Turner. It was a press of business that forced Bro. Turner to resign. Rev. J. W. Fuquay and Bro. Cobb were elected vice presidents, W. S. Petty was continued as Treasurer. He makes a faithful officer.

On the whole, the Convention was a success notwithstanding a number of ministers were absent, and many schools did not send representatives. Why some ministers and churches take so little interest in the Sunday school work is a strange thing.

The following ministers were in attendance: W. S. Long, J. L. Foster, J. W. Wellons, J. W. Holt, A. F. Iseley, W. G. Clements, J. W. Fonville, J. W. Fuquay, W. C. Wicker, C. C. Peel and T. W. Stroud.

The speeches were generally good; and several excellent papers were read.

The community turned out well. Provisions and accommodations were in abundance. People always like to go to Union.

We spent one night with the kind family of Bro. Levi Walker, we were with him in the late war, and we lived much of the war over in conversation. We missed, however the genial face of Rev. A. G. Anderson for he has gone to the spirit land. Wednesday night was spent with Bro. Albert Graham. This is another excellent Christian family that always makes a home cheerful and happy.

As the minutes of the Convention will soon appear in pamphlet form, we shall not undertake to give here the work of the Convention.

We Have Moved.

Those wishing to visit the CHRISTIAN SUN office, will find it in the basement of Page's opera house on Martin St., just west of the post-office. The entrance is from the west end of the building. We are always glad for you to visit us.

We are working hard dear brethren and sisters, to give you a good publishing house. Will you help us? In a few days we will be ready to do your job work in good style and at short notice.

We can furnish you shipping tags and all kinds of blank forms at low figures. Send in your orders.

And Now They Close.

At last the directory of the world's fair has decided to close the gates on Sabbath. Not because they had the fear of God before their eyes; but because it was so poorly attended on Sunday, that it was a losing business, financially, rather than a paying one.

We are glad that the religious world had power enough to close the gates, though it did not come in the way they asked for it. God's people showed their faith by their works in refusing to desecrate the Sabbath by attending the Fair on Sunday. So if they could not whip the devil in one way they did in another.

To The Students of Elon College.

The business manager of the Elon College Monthly wish to say, to all Elon students, that those who secure two new subscribers for the Monthly, with the cash during vacation will not be required to subscribe next session. Those securing four new subscribers with cash will be exempt from any assessment during the year, besides a free subscription will be given them.

Now you have a chance to show your love for the Monthly and to relieve yourself of any financial embarrassment. If you appreciate its Mission, you will avail yourself of this opportunity to work for it. The Monthly is well worthy of your help and should receive it. Don't forget it during vacation. It is an honor to the institution you represent and you deserve credit for its rank among the other College journals of our land.

The Sunday School Convention.

The 12th annual session was held at Union, Almace Co., N. C., July 18, 19 and 20, 1893. The programme published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN was followed very closely.

President Foster asked the Convention to release him as president for the next year and with reluctance it did so, and elected Rev. W. C. Wicker, President, with Rev. J. W. Fuquay 1st Vice-president and Bro. Jno. T. Cobb 2nd Vice-president. Bro J. M. Turner, who has so faithfully and so long served as standing secretary tendered his resignation and Prof. S. A. Holleman was elected in his place. Bro. Wm. S. Petty was re-elected treasurer as usual.

It is not necessary to give the details of proceedings here as they will be published in pamphlet form soon.

There were very few ministers present but those that did come are the regular working men of the church and showed by their zeal that the work will go on though some of their fellow ministers were not in harness.

The churches that were represented showed excellent work during the past year, and the representatives were workers as can be seen from the proceedings.

Those churches that were not represented should contrive to send me a report of their school between now and August 14th that they may not appear delinquent in the report to be published in the minutes.

Do, Brethren, try to do your duty in this respect. Each superintendent should see that his school sends in its report and assessment to me at once.

The committee was good and here I may as well publish the standing committees: Executive committee: Rev. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., ch., with S. A. Holleman and W. S. Petty.

Committee on teaching—Prof. Herbert Scholz, ch., with Prof. J. O. Atkinson and D. J. Mood.

Best methods of conducting Sunday schools—Rev. J. L. Foster, ch., with Rev. W. G. Clements and H. C. Simpson.

Sunday School Literature:—Dr. W. S. Long, ch., with Miss Annie Graham and G. M. Parish.

On Sunday School Music:—S. A. Holleman, ch., with Mrs. J. L. Foster and G. M. Parish.

Sunday School Missions:—Rev. J. W. Holt, ch., with Rev. T. W. Strowd and Rev. J. W. Fonville.

Among some of the items discussed were the division of territory of the convention, The helps a teacher should have, Manner of studying lesson, Teacher's Morals, etc., etc., The publications of the Christian Publishing House, Dytton, O., were heartily endorsed, and well they should be. The reports show that nearly all schools are using them now. Every school represented sent in its pro. rato contingent fund, and nearly all paid their mission assessments. Let those that are behind yet come to the rescue of their good name.

The division of territory was left open until after Conference next fall. Union is famous for its hospitality and in the meeting this week she maintained her position well. All were well pleased and appeared glad that they came.

I forgot to say that "The Summer School of Music," which meets at Elon College Aug. 14, 1893, was heartily endorsed and every Sunday school urged to take advantage of it as the best and cheapest way to improve its singing. Particulars can be had by writing S. A. Holleman at Elon College, N. C., or Prof. J. H. Moring, Morrisville, N. C. I beg pardon, Mr. Editor, if I am two long.

For further knowledge of proceedings the reader is referred to the pamphlets to be published soon, and if you want them, see that your Sunday school has sent in its report and paid the funds.

Elon College.

I wish to speak to the members and friends of the Christian Church in behalf of Elon College. This institution has been established by the toil and sacrifice of devoted men and women. The good hand of our God has guided and blessed Zion's laborers. The members of our beloved Zion are greatly encouraged and greater zeal and more enthusiastic and united labors will be seen in every department of our church activity. The college stands centre to all our interests. From it go out those who are to be the active workers in the church. The church and the world made these the great public needs the principles of the Christian Church. No branch of the church is expected to teach them for us, and we must prepare ourselves for the task. The field is white into harvest. We must enter or be disloyal to God and our own profession.

Will you please consider the claims of the college before you arrange to send elsewhere.

1. It is prepared to teach your boys and girls as well as they can be in other schools, and at as little cost. At the same time no influence will be exerted to turn them from the church of their parents, but where greater love will be enkindled for it, and for all its departments of work.

2. Elon College is your college, the only one you have in the south. Now if you will not help to support it who will? If many fail what will become of the college? If the college languish, what will be the effect on the church? Is it not the duty of every friend and member of the Christian church to rally to the support of Elon College? If not then what institution must we support? We can make it a grand success. It has done well. It stands high in public favor. It ranks with the old colleges of the state. Let us push it right forward. Enough students were sent to other schools last year to have doubled our number. Send them this way next year. We can take care of them. There are many young people who have not entered other schools near you whom you can induce to come to Elon.

3. Our future depends on the education of our children. We have a future. That future will be what we make it. We cannot make it by scattering our forces, and dissipating our strength. By educating our children, teaching them our church principles of Christianity, we will prepare the way for future usefulness and prosperity such as we have never known before but such as will gladden the heart of every lover of Jesus.

I invite correspondence from every one who desires to enter school, and those who have children to educate.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

By direction of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference there will be a SUMMER SCHOOL OF MUSIC held in the college chapel at for the purpose of training young men and women for teaching vocal music. To all teachers, and young men or women who may desire to prepare themselves for teaching we recommend this school of music. Serious Problems.

No country, I suppose, can be found that offers more serious problems than does this "Southern Paradise," as Brazil is sometimes called. Here the statesman, the politician, the social reformer and the missionary are taxed to their utmost to solve the problems that present themselves on every hand. They call this a republic, "the latest star in the galaxy of republics"; nothing was ever much further from the truth. It would be but for two rather serious defects—it is neither by nor for the people. In the first place only about one man in a hundred takes any interest whatever in the elections, than which there can be no greater farce. Then the few who take part in politics are about equally divided between republicans and monarchists. In the third place, almost without exception, all who are interested are looked upon as office-seekers—for the money there may be in the office. There is no public confidence either at home or abroad. "There is neither patriotism nor executive ability in the Brazilian," said a man to me, who has had a long and useful life among them. Another said: "They pretend to copy and follow the Constitution of the United States; but they cut out all the parts that are disadvantageous to self aggrandizement."

Now let me add that one redeeming feature is that religious liberty is guaranteed here, yet, too, this is a great farce. No missionary has assurance that he will not receive a shower of stones from the howling mob that dogs his footsteps—that, too, with the knowledge and consent of the police.

We are walking over the partially hidden mouth of a smoldering volcano that is constantly giving forth signs of an eruption. Even now in several states a fratricidal war is in progress—in one of which mutual extermination seems to be the order of the day. In this revolutionary feature of Brazil the religious "seer" thinks there may be ground for hopefulness. Seeing that nothing stable remains, whether we look to the social, moral and spiritual business or political feature, it is hoped that by the faithful presentation of the ever-abiding blessings of the Gospel many may be won to lives worthy of the name.

The social reformer, too, has much to do. Insurmountable difficulties rise up at the very outset. Disregard, wholesale and complete, of the Bible as the authoritative voice of God declaring vengeance against all ungodliness, has led priest and people alike and together into the great pitfall of unchastity. If you preach purity, insist upon it, denounce unchastity, you are laughed at for your pains and denounced as a hypocrite; for "manly purity is impracticable, impossible and not demanded."

With all this cloud of darkness and death there is a silver lining. There are at least a few who do show the power of the Gospel in the hearts and lives of those who by it do believe in God. Many places are sending Macedonian cries for helpers, many are hungering for the comforts of the Gospel, many gladly hear the preaching of the Gospel and express entire belief in the message presented.—Independent.

A Safe Knowledge.

A passenger who had been looking with great interest at the "man at the wheel" as he was directing the course of a steamboat through the windings of an intricate channel, said to him: "I suppose, sir, you are the pilot of this boat?"

"Yes," replied the man at the wheel, "I have been a pilot on these waters for over thirty years."

"Indeed!" continued the inquirer; "you must then, by time, know every rock and bar, and shoal on the whole coast!"

"No, I don't, not by a long ways," said the pilot.

"You don't!" responded the passenger, in great surprise; "what, then, do you know?"

"I know," answered the pilot, with strong emphasis, "I know where the deep water is."—Selected.

Hoss on Funny Preachers.

We are free to confess that we do not admire the "funny" preacher. An occasional flash of spontaneous humor irradiating a sermon as a sudden burst of sunshine spreads it elf over a landscape, is proper and right enough. Nobody except the helplessly dull can have any objection to it. But what shall we say of the humor that is not spontaneous? What of the preacher that "with malice aforethought" tries to raise a laugh? What intellectual freshness or moral sensitiveness can be left in the soul of a man who tells a stale joke for a hundred times? And what judgment must be passed upon the audience that responds to such a stimulant?—Nashville Advocate

"Too Warm."

We heard a man confidently affirm that the "weather is getting too warm for special meetings." No one seemed to dispute the statement, but we are unable to understand why it should be so. We are told that business men hold their meetings as regularly in in summer as in winter. The warm season of the year is frequently chosen as the time for special meetings of a worldly character. Souls are certainly as precious in July as in January, and we are not aware that God has conditioned His promise of the Holy Spirit upon any limitations as to time.—United Presbyterian.

Literary Notice.

"Atheism and Arithmetic," by H. L. Hastings, is a fifteen-cent pamphlet of sixty pages, presenting the evidence of mathematical law in nature, as proof of the existence of a supreme intelligence. Unlike most works on the same subject, this essay is written in such plain, simple language that the uneducated man can comprehend every sentence; and yet it exhibits such keen rational deduction that the learned reader will feel well repaid for its perusal. It is published by the author 47 Cornhill, Boston, and forms the fifteenth number of the "Anti-Infidel Library," a quarterly publication of which "Will the old Book stand?", the most widely circulated of all essays on Christian evidences, was the first issue.

"Victor Flyer" as Usual in the Van.

Cycling has become such a universal pastime as well as a healthful recreation and business expedient that some of the workshops in the country are devoted to the manufacture of the modern vehicle. But there is only one establishment in the United States in which an entire machine is made, including the steel parts, leather work, rubber tires, nickel-plating, tools, etc., and on this account nicety of adjustment, smoothness of bearing, lightness and strength are insured, all of which are essential elements in a perfect wheel. This great factory is located at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and bears the name of the Overman Wheel Company, familiar to cyclists the world over. This company introduced the safety bicycle in America, and on that account as well as by reason of superlative merit "The Victor" has steadily held first place in popular favor. It is universally preferred because its makers are known to be masters of improved construction. The "Victor Flyer" has undoubtedly attained the highest plane of perfection. The Overman Company has the handsome exhibit in the balcony of the Transportation Building at the World's Fair. This exhibit is built mainly of solid mahogany, elaborately carved and ornamented with gold. It far surpasses any other display in this department, was designed by one of Boston's best architects, and built by the most artistic cabinet-makers of that city. The display of the "Victor" machines here is attracting the attention of all wheelmen, as well as the notice of thousands of young men and women who hope and expect to become expert riders. The company has issued an elegantly printed and embossed "Victor" catalogue for 1893 covering every variety of their standard machines, as well as cycling in general. The work is as fine as the printers art can make it, and gives much useful, valuable, and interesting information. Visitors to the exhibit can obtain copies of this catalogue on request. "The Victor" fully deserves its high reputation for the reason that it is made with as much skill and care as the finest piece of mechanism. The vast factories built by Messrs. Overman were intended expressly and solely for its manufacture, and with the express object in view of turning out the best and highest grade bicycles in the world—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Though He Slay Me."

A few days ago, as I was hunting up some absentees from Sunday-school, with the possibility of finding some new ones who attend no school on the Lord's Day, I was asked by a poor crippled man, suffering from the effects of a fall while at work, if I would please call two doors from there, to see a poor family who were in great distress.

I entered an alley, and, climbing up the rickety stairs, in a rear room I found a woman in the fast form of consumption, apparently, lying on a miserable pallet on the floor, and three small children with her. The day was bleak and cold, the wind blowing fiercely from the north; and there had been no fire in the room for three days, and no food excepting what the neighbors had furnished.

After caring for their immediate wants, and speaking a few kind words to cheer the suffering mother, I left, promising to see them on the morrow. Early the next day I called again, and was greeted very pleasantly, and, first doing what I could to relieve them, I said, "Please, tell me something about yourself; how is it you are here? And have you been in the habit of attending God's house?" There was something in her manner that indicated to me that she had not always been in poverty.

Instantly her eyes filled with tears as she drew from under her pillow a worn Bible; and, on opening it, I found her name written on the leaf, presented to her by her Sunday-school teacher when a child in New York City.

She said that though friends of former days were all gone, still she had clung to God's Word, knowing and feeling that it pointed her to a haven of rest; and lying on that bed of death (for she passed away to be with Jesus that same night) she repeated verse after verse of Scripture, and also told me of her younger days as a scholar in the Sunday-school, and later on she became a teacher in a well-known mission school in the city of New York.

As I left her and wended my way homeward, I thought, "Here is one of the precious ones soon to be gathered home to dwell forevermore." No sickness there, her suffering almost over. The pathway had been thorny, but through it all she could still praise her Saviour, who had redeemed her; and her last words, as she passed away were, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." "I know whom I have believed."—L. Bridgman, in S. S. Times.

Duties Never Clash.

"Oh, dear! What shall I do?" Lucy Hammond was kneeling at her desk in the deserted class room. All her companions were enjoying themselves in the large reception parlors; where to night they were allowed to entertain their friends. She thought herself quite alone when she uttered her despairing words; but a gentle hand touched her shoulder, and a voice replied to them.

"You are in trouble, dear. Tell me what has gone wrong for you."

"Oh Miss Holmes!" Lucy turned to her teacher with a sobbing cry. "I didn't know anybody was here. But I am in trouble. Harry has just gone away so angry with me!"

"Your brother? I thought you were so fond of him. How did you vex him?" asked Miss Holmes, with ready sympathy.

"He wanted to borrow some money to go to the theatre with some boys that he'd promised to treat. And I hadn't any of my own, but I had five dollars that grandma had sent me for contributions to the Sunday-school and the missionary society. She wrote expressly that I wasn't to use it for anything else. So I didn't feel that I had a right to lend it to him."

"It would certainly have been wrong," said Miss Holmes.

"So I thought, but Harry didn't agree with me. He said I preached about religion, and duty, and all that stuff, but it was much more a duty to help my brother when he was in a scrape. And he had promised the boys, he said, and he would pay me back when his allowance came. But I couldn't feel it was right to give him grandma's money. So he called me mean, and stingy, and selfish," sobbed Lucy; "and he said he would never speak to me again if I didn't send him the money tomorrow. Oh, Miss Holmes, what shall I do?"

"Don't do wrong, whatever happens," her teacher answered. "There is an old saying that duties never clash; and even if Harry wanted the money for a better purpose, you have no right to disobey your grandmother."

"But it Harry never speaks to me again?"

"You can always pray for Harry, that God will make him wiser and kinder, said Miss Holmes. It is hardly possible that he will carry out such a foolish threat."

She comforted her pupil with such kind words and good counsel that Lucy took heart again; and knowing that she had done right, resigned herself to bear whatever might happen. She had a letter from her brother the next day, demanding the money; but she did not send it. She wrote to him lovingly, repeated good reason, and begging him to give up his follies and extravagances, and turn to better things. Then she waited with an anxious heart to see what he would do. But she had not long to wait.

That night a fire broke out in the theatre, and two hundred people were burned, or crushed to death. Harry came to see his sister early in the morning afterward. He was trembling and pale with excitement.

"If you had give me that money," he said, "I shouldn't have been alive to-day. The fellows that I was going with are all killed. I had to stay at home because I had no money."

Lucy's thankfulness need not be described. She felt truly that she would have been her brother's murderer if she had yielded to the wrong that he urged; and he learned a lesson that checked him in a course of folly, and led him to a wise and Christian manhood—A. E. B. in the Sunlight

Don'ts Again.

Don't be afraid to call a spade by its name, and don't be afraid to tell a sinner that he is one, if that is your opinion of him. Is there not actual danger that our preachers carry their ideas of politeness and refinement so far as to preach to men for years who are notoriously wicked without ever condemning clearly the sins of which they know they are guilty? Did it never occur to the soft brethren that even wicked men will respect them the more in the end for dealing honestly and fearlessly with their sins. In doing so, however, it is well to avoid personalities.

Don't be so anxious to know what people think of your sermons as to fish for opinions soon after they are delivered. If you need the comfort and encouragement that come from appreciative remarks on the part of your members, God will move some of them to make them, and if they come in this way they indeed strengthen and comfort you, if you have the Master's glory at heart.

Don't place your pastor in a parsonage or permit him to rent a home where there is no fruit nor flowers, and then regale your appetite and taste for twelve months at the time without it ever dawning on your pate that he and his good wife and little ones might enjoy some of these good things with you. There are church members (tell it not in Gath!) that will consume or sell wagon loads of nice palatable fruit and never gladden the pastors home by nice presents that would comfort the outer man. Now don't flare up and say, "Our pastor is not an object of charity." That may be true, but he ought to be an object of love; and if you love your pastor you could not feast month after month on the good things God has given you without gladly offering him some things needful for the body. How would it look for a husband to go down town daily and feast on choice fruit and send nothing to his wife and children? The husband that loved his family would never do so. But is not this the way you treat your pastor? We have read an old Book which says, "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently."

Don't join the church and then cause an everlasting worry to pastor and members in the way of getting you to attend church meetings, pay your dues, &c. What did you join the church for if you expect to act in this way? The Saviour himself would have you hot or cold. Why should you wait for the pastor and deacons and committees to be perpetually running after you, coddling you, bolstering you up, scolding you, citing you to "appear at the next meeting," &c., &c. What a miserable farce it all is! How long will it go on? Ah, brother be one thing or another; be hot or cold. Do your duty as a church member, or else get out of the church, and make no pretensions in the line of religion. It will be better for you and for all concerned for you to pursue this course. From cold, do nothing, stay-at-home church members, may the good Lord deliver us!—Recorder.

Habits.

Nearly all the disagreeable habits which people take up come at first from mere accident or want of thought, says a thoughtful writer. They might easily be dropped, but they are persisted in until they become a second nature. There are disagreeable habits of body, like scowling, winking, twisting the mouth, biting the nails, continually picking at something, twirling a key or fumbling at a chain, drumming with the fingers, screwing or twisting a chair, or whatever you lay your hands on. Don't do any of these things. There are much worse things than these, to be sure; but we are only speaking of these little things that are only annoying when they are persisted in. Then there are habits of speech with "you see," or "you know," "now-a," "and a," "see here," "let me tell you," indistinct utterance, sharp, nasal tones; avoid them all. Stop and think what you are going to say and then let every word drop from your lips just as perfect as a new silver coin. Before you know it, you will find that your habits have hardened into a coat of mail that you cannot get rid of without a terrible effort. —Ec.

A New Study for Girls.

Would it not be wise if some exercises in the mysteries of money were added to the curriculum of every girl's studies, asks Harper's Bazar. A boy finds it all out by actual contact with the public as soon as he is out and a part of it; but a girl may become a mature woman, shrinking then through the habit of long protection, and be thrown on the mercies of the world with her money to fall the prey to the first cheat and cozenor. She is taught at school the spectra of the stars, and the map of Mars; what pity that she should not be instructed in the workings of life on the planet where she lives! That a knowledge of the nature and meaning and care of money should be made a part of every girl's education is growing more and more evident in this age of enlargement and prosperity, which puts money into the hands of so many women. And in the coming century, the woman's century, as it is already called, in which so many women will be workers and earners of money, it is all the more important, in order that they may be neither handicapped or too far outstripped, that they should be well instructed as to business movements and investments, that they may be directed in the right way before they set out to earn.

The Literary Revolution.

The Literary Revolution has saved American book buyers millions of dollars in the cost of their books. Its methods: the cooperation of book buyers, securing cost of manufacture; direct sales, no agents, booksellers or other middlemen. Descriptive pamphlet, 32 pages, sent free on request. Mention this paper.

A Pretty Surprise.

Sold at about cost of manufacture by the 100,000, because pretty books in the hands of pleased customers are our best advertisements. Evangeline, without illustrations, paper covers, 4 cts.

More "Surprise" Bargains.

We offer, also, the following, which represent different styles; in which we issue a large number of the world's best books; prices cover only about cost of manufacture by the 100,000:

J. Fenimore Cooper's "The Pilot," cloth, 20c., postage, 8c.
Scott's "Ivanhoe," half morocco, gilt top, 30c., postage, 9c.
"Herodotus," in Ancient Classics for English Readers, cloth, 10c., post., 4c

Uncle Tom's Cabin—5 cts.

Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" complete, in this type, cheap paper bound, for 5 cents, post-paid; the same in cloth, 10 cents, postage 7 cents.

A fine edition, in this type, excellent paper, printing and cloth binding, 25 cents, postage, 10 cents; or in half morocco, gilt top 40 cents, postage, 10c.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, $20.00

Now ready, large type, the last (9th) edition, over 20,500 pages, 10,000 illustrations and 200 maps. Specimen pages free. Don't be humbugged into buying any "slaughterized" edition, or into paying double price on "catch" installment schemes.

Great Handy Cyclopedias.

Alden's Cyclopedia of History, illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price for the set, post-paid, 75c.
Alden's Cyclopedia of Natural History. Profusely illustrated. In 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price, post-paid, 75c.

10 Cents will secure by mail, post-paid, a specimen manilla volume, 100 pages, of either Cyclopedia, by which you can judge of the character of the remainder of the work.

Wonderful books in the amount of the most interesting and valuable knowledge given for a little money. Their equivalent cannot be had elsewhere under ten times the cost.

In the Cyclopedia of History you have ancient history back to B.C. 5004, and modern history down to 1892. Every nation of the earth, (except the United States which is to form an independent volume), is treated in its alphabetical order and described in its physical aspects as well as historically, so you have the equivalent of a book of travels round the world.

In the Natural History you have the most complete, popular, and at the same time thoroughly scientific, work ever compiled for general use. Nearly every beast, bird, or other creature, in earth, air or water, living or extinct, known to science, is described, and thousands of them are illustrated.

Oxford Teachers' Bibles.

With References, Concordance and Helps. Size, closed, 5 7/8 by 7 7/8 inches, by 1 1/2 inches thick. 1,330 pages, besides maps. We bind in two styles: Limp black silk cloth, red edges, 90c.; French Seal, Divinity Circuit, round corners, gilt edges, $1.50, postage, 15c.

Size of type shown by these lines. Beyond comparison the cheapest Bibles sold, and always found satisfactory. Circular describing finer and higher priced Bibles sent free.

Please mention this paper when you write.

Conversions That Converted.

Salvation made easy is a modern invention. So is salvation made small. The first converts did not hold up their hands, join the church, and go off on a spree. They were cut to the heart, cried for mercy, got it, and went off to preach the Gospel. They were filled with the Holy Spirit. They were steadfast in doctrine. They were one in heart. They were in favor with the people. They praised God. They ate their meat with gladness and singleness of heart.

They went to prayer meeting.
 They spake the word with boldness
 They gave until they had nothing to give.
 They rejoiced when they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.
 They were hospitable. Lydia's house becomes the preacher's home.
 When persecuted they went everywhere preaching the word.—Selected.

Elon College Again.

In last week's issue of the SUN Dr Long makes an appeal to the members and friends of the Christian church in behalf of Elon College. I just wanted to indorse, and add a hearty amen to, every word that was said in the above named appeal.

In my canvass thus far I have been surprised to find so many of our people sending to other schools and colleges. Now if these had tried Elon and found her wanting in any respect it would be different. Or again if the merits, status, and records of Elon had been enquired into and there was some fault found even then it would be different. * But the majority of those who are sending to other colleges—well it seems to be from difference or lack of interest in our own cause and that too to the degree, of not even enquiring into what is being done at Elon. Numbers and numbers of our people don't even know what Elon is and what she is doing and what a record she has made and what a stand she has taken among the other colleges of this and other states.

Now the need of this appeal? Do we mean that we are trying to teach denominationalism or sectarianism at Elon? By no means. But if we as a denomination do not stand by and support the College then how can we hope for others to do so? We would not call upon the Christian denomination to the exclusion of the Methodist or Baptist or what not. But we as a people should stand by and work for our own institution and make it so thorough and so complete that it would attract a few people from other denominations. It is true we have some from other denominations already—but we want and need more. And the way to get those is for our own people to stand by the institution, and if is not what you want it to be and what you think it ought to be then in the name of reason why not fall in with your effort and help to make it better.

Times are hard and money is scarce. Elon College has not one or two hundred thousand dollars endowment. Her success depends upon the efforts put forward in her behalf and the thoroughness and completeness of the work done at the Institution. That this latter is not as it should be no one has yet come forward to complain. That efforts are needed then to bring students to her doors goes without saying. Reader will you not try to get one student to go to Elon next fall? Parents will you not send to President Long and get a catalogue and enquire into the school—what it is and what it is doing—before sending elsewhere? It will do you no harm. Give us a trial. We will do you no harm. This is all we ask. Do you not feel enough interest in the school—in your own institution—to either let it stand upon its merits or fall upon its demerits; we simply beg an investigation, an enquiry and then, if you think proper, a trial at your hands. Will you give it?

J. O. ATKINSON.

Quiet.

Ah, reader, this is what our hearts all want, quiet, quiet! And this is what the world, cannot give us. Are not our souls infinite? Oh, poor tired, human soul, buffeting with the winds and the waves of this stormy life, be still! look upward! Ask not of Time—what it never gave, what it never can give to any man, but ask it of God, and in answer shall come the peace "He giveth his beloved."—Ex.

Baptist Policy.

The Independent Says: A very brief item in The Christian Inquirer might attract no attention, and yet it appears to us that there is something very interesting about it. It simply announces that the Rev. William Coburn "was recognized as a Baptist minister by a council representing twenty-two churches, held in the Calvary church, Thursday, June 29th." The prayer of recognition was given by the Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, then in this city, and the right hand of fellowship by R. S. MacArthur, D. D., pastor of the church. The special point of interest lies in the fact given that Mr. Coburn "had been ordained as a Congregationalist, but upon conviction joined the Baptist church." And does the reader not see anything remarkable about this? Observe that he was not ordained but "recognized"; that is, Dr. MacArthur and his council of twenty-two Baptist churches, with the Rev. Thomas Spurgeon to represent the English Baptist churches, did not think it necessary to reordain a man who had once been ordained by a Congregational council. It was necessary that he should be baptized on joining the Baptist body, but his unbaptized ordination was held to be valid. We understand that Dr. MacArthur's church was particular in sending out the call for the council to put it in a form, which should not seem to discredit the ecclesiastical validity of Pedit Baptist ordination. We are glad to see this courteous and Christian expression of fellowship; and we trust that now we have called attention to it, it will not be repudiated by those who have been regarded as the stricter teachers in the Baptist body.

The Happiness of Those Who Die in the Lord.

BY REV. J. MAPLE, D. D.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them. Rev. 14:13.

John had been describing the great afflictions that would be brought upon the world, and especially upon the church by the Anti-Christian power distinguished as Babylon. These were terrible, and it was discouraging to the infant church to look forward to such appalling scenes of suffering and death; but God never leaves his people without comfort and hope. John was instructed to strengthen them by giving them the assurance that this great anti-Christian power should be ultimately utterly destroyed, and that though many of them would be slain yet death would be a blessing to them. He heard a voice from heaven instructing him to "write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." There are two important points in our text that demand serious attention.

I. Those who are to be blessed in death.

The text does not read "blessed are all who die." God never pronounces the condition of those who die in their wickedness a happy one. The Bible guards this point, and confines the declaration to those who are "in the Lord." "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death." "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness, but the expectation of the wicked shall perish."

The phrase "to die in the Lord," implies two things. 1. That those who thus die are the friends of the Lord Jesus Christ. This phrase is often used in the Scriptures to denote close communion with him. He says, "Abide in me, and I in you." Then he illustrates it by a beautiful figure "I am the vine, ye are the branches." This shows the intimate and enduring relation that exists between Christ and his people; and the vital nature of this relation. Those who are in Christ, and those alone, are delivered from the guilt and condemnation of sin. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit." "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." This is an important point, for out of Christ there is no hope. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." 2. To "die in the Lord" implies an evidence of his favor and friendship in the dying hour. We have this evidence in the gift of his Son to die for our redemption from sin and death, and if we accept him as our Lord and Saviour we know that God will save us. Then we have the promise of his word that he will be with us even in death. "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; though art mine. When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour." In the dying hour the Christian has the sweet assurance of the Savior's presence with him, and rests safely in his love and power. He can say with David, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." In his last moments Cullen whispered, "I wish I had the power of writing or speaking, for then I would describe to you how pleasant a thing it is to die." This heavenly peace and joy is only enjoyed by those who die in Christ. The man out of Christ has "no hope, and is without God in the world." "He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

II. The blessedness that comes to those who die in the Lord. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth." The meaning evidently is that they would be blessed immediately after their death. This implies that they were not to fall into an unconscious sleep when they died, but would still live in the conscious exercise of all their powers of mind and heart, capable of the highest enjoyment. This was Paul's view of death, and he could say, "We are confident, I say, and willing to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. He had an earnest desire "to depart and be with Christ."

Even a violent death was not to be regarded as a misfortune by the holy martyrs, but a blessing; for they would die in an honorable cause; would inmerge from a world of sorrow; and ascend to eternal life and blessedness in heaven. This is true of all who die in the Lord. Thus we see what a blessed thing it is to be in Christ.

The consequences of the Christian's work will follow him into the eternal world, and he shall reap his glorious reward there. It is said of the righteous that they shall "rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." The word here rendered "Labors" means wailing, grief, from to beat, and hence a beating of the breast as in grief. Then the word denotes toil, labor, effort. It is here used in the sense of wearisome toil in doing good, in defending the truth. Death releases the Christian from all such labor, and introduces him into heaven. There will be employment there, but it will be without any sense of fatigue or weariness; for death will free us from our mortal bodies, and we shall have spiritual and immortal bodies that will know no fatigue. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

All that the Christian does and suffers here shall be appropriately rewarded in heaven. The consequences of a man's actions is all that can follow him into eternity. He may acquire an exalted position in the estimation of the world, he may accumulate vast riches, he may drink at the sweetest fountains of earthly pleasures; but he must leave all these things when he passes into eternity. "The world passeth away; and all the lusts thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

One of the noblest honors of our nature is that we can make the present affect the future for good; that by our conduct now and here we can lay the foundation for happiness millions of years hence. In noting else does a man appear so noble and dignified as in this. In one sense he is only a worm of the dust, and will perish as such; but in another sense he is immortal as the sons of God in heaven, and shall bloom in endless youth in their society.

"The soul on earth is an immortal guest, condemned to starve at an unreal feast.

A spark, which upward tends by nature's force;
A stream, diverted from its parent source;
A drop, dissevered from the boundless sea;
A moment parted from eternity;

A pilgrim, panting for the rest to come;
An exile, anxious for his native home."

It is a grand thing to live, and it will be a glorious thing to die. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

"Thank God, I only am an embryo still;
The small beginning of a glorious soul,
An atom that shall fill immensity."

This sublime message came to John from heaven. He says, "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." This message could only come from heaven. Human wisdom and philosophy could give John no such assurance. It is Christ that has given to man this inspiring hope.

Little Things.

Young people in beginning life are apt to be impatient of the first little steps that apparently make no advance, forgetting that seeming "trifles make up the sum of life," just as in building, the little bricks, laid carefully, one at a time, side by side, and securely cemented together make at last a great structure.

A young man, having exhausted his patrimony in obtaining a professional education settled himself in a town already filled with successful lawyers to practice law. One day one of these older lawyers asked him how, under such circumstances, he expected to make a living.

"I hope I may get a little practice," was the modest reply.

"It will be very little," said the lawyer.

"Then I will do that little well," answered the young man decidedly.

He carried out his determination. The little things well done brought larger ones, and in time he became one of the most distinguished jurists of his State.

Again, a certain old Bishop, who was fond of finding old characters in out-of-the-way places, was visiting in a quiet neighborhood. One day in a walk with a friend, he came across a crossroad settlement of a few houses. Among them was a snug little shoeshop, kept by an old negro man, which showed signs of prosperity.

Interested in the old cobbler, the Bishop stopped for a chat.

"My friend," he said, "I would not think so small a business as mending shoes would pay so well."

"Ah," said the gentleman with him, "old Cato has the monopoly of shoe mending in this region. No one else gets a job."

"How is that, Cato?" asked the Bishop.

"Just so, marster," replied Cato. "It is only little patches, put on with little stitches or tiny pegs. But when I takes a stitch, it is a stitch, and when I drive a peg it holds." Little things well done!

The good Bishop used that reply as a text for many a sermon afterwards.

A bright young girl, living in a mountain region, by accidental contact with some visitors at a near watering place became conscious of her lack of education and consequent mental inferiority to them.

She was intensely anxious to obtain this education, and at once set about gaining the money to secure it. There was absolutely only one way within her reach. Near her home was a stream filled with mountain trout, which she knew to be greatly in demand by the proprietor of the watering place hotel. She made an arrangement with him to supply fish for his table.

Every day found her with her rod fishing diligently, and every morning found her at the same early hour at the hotel with her fish. A benevolent old gentleman chanced to see her one morning, and was greatly interested when told her story and the object she had in view in selling the fish. Particularly when the hotel proprietor added:

"You will scarcely believe it, but this young girl is actually the only one—though I have tried many—who has kept scrupulously to her bargain. She never fails me, be the number of fish large or small."

Thinking that such diligence in small matters deserved large reward, the old gentleman obtained the consent of the girl's parents, and out of the abundance of his means placed her at a school to be fitted for a teacher.

With painstaking care she mastered each difficulty in her new life, and became an educated, cultured woman and a skilled teacher.—M. E. Saffold, in Christian Union.

Hurricane and Sickness in the New Hebrides.

We are sorry we have to record two terrible disasters that have befallen the two medical mission stations in the New Hebrides. On the first week of March the northern end of the group was visited by a fearful hurricane. The islands principally affected are Ambrim, Malekula, Malo and part of Santo.

The violence of the squalls, which were accompanied with torrents of rain, wrought more ruin to the settlers and missionaries than all the hurricanes that have visited these islands since white men knew them.

On the fertile island of Ambrim Dr. and Mrs. Lamb, from the New Zealand Church, had established a medical Mission, the whole island was smiting with crops of maize, bread-fruit, coconuts, etc. In one night the typhoon cleared the whole away, the growing food belonging to both whites and natives being destroyed.

In the awful darkness of that night when huge trees were being torn up by the roots by the violence of the wind, and the rain falling in torrents, Dr. and Mrs. Lamb, with their twin baby boy, had to leave their home and grope their way to a hole of a hut surrounded by a wall of stones where the heathen chief and some twenty natives had found a refuge. This was literally a case of the star and the wolf and the meek Lamb dwelling together.

The missionary had just escaped in time, as the corrugated iron roof was torn in pieces and blown about in all directions, while the dwelling house was beat down by the force of the gale, their personal property being all more or less destroyed.

A Queensland labor vessel, which had been cruising about, had her three masts snapped off like match-wood, and a French schooner, named the "Ika buka," was fairly whisked through the water at Malekula and lifted on to a coral reef, where she fell with such force that she broke in two. A competent judge in Sydney estimates that the actual loss of property to the English and French settlers and others will amount to no less than £160,000.

In the south end of the New Hebrides group a calamity of another kind has befallen the other medical mission.

On Futuna, where Dr. and Mrs. Gunn have been laboring for the past ten years, a Christian community had been formed, and the mission work was latterly of the most encouraging kind; but in the end of February last a labor vessel from Queensland called at the island, and in some way or other an epidemic of dysentery had been introduced. Within a fortnight the disease became so fatal that thirty five of the natives died, and many more, especially of the young, were dying when the mail left. Two of Dr. Gunn's own children, five girls of seven and nine years, died. The third, aged five years, was not expected to recover, and Dr. and Mrs. Gunn had been themselves seized with the same trouble. We know not what news the next mail may bring.

The New South Wales and the Victorian Governments used to grant subsidies for the upholding of a monthly steamer service. This has been withdrawn, and a sailing schooner has been chartered by the Presbyterian Mission Board to convey supplies of food and other necessities at intervals of about three months.

The first Apostle and foreign missionary to the Gentiles served the Lord amid many tears and trials in his evangelistic efforts; those who follow in the same footsteps have the same experience still.—J. H. L., in Independent.

Meditation on Disclosing Love.

Forbid, Father, that I should bear in my heart any love that I hide from the loved one. There is so great need of love in the world, and the love that is equal to the need. Let me not hide my love as a miser hoards his gold; nay, rather, as a careless spendthrift throws his gold into a corner for the rats. Men hunt for diamonds; shall I rejeet the most valuable thing in the world when it has sought me out? Men arduously cultivate music, but here am I scorning the very soul of music. Men die for glory, but here stands at my door the queen of glory, and I trample her diadem in the dust. Infinite Lover, by the love I bear to others I touch mine own infirmity. Let me exult in it. Let me wear it proudly and gladly, as token of my more than royalty. Father and mother, brother and sister, dear friends, all that I love, pardon the great wrong I have done you and myself. I have trusted to the life to express what eyes and tongue and loving caress should also have expressed. And because these were dumb, even my life has often lost the language of love, and the beautiful spirit has flown to a kindlier home. Help me, loving Father, to win it back. Thou who dost always make thy love manifest in beautiful ways, be with thy servant's tongue and make it eloquent of love; be with his hands that they may warm to affectionate greetings; and be with his heart that it may forget its sullen indifference, and ever seek new ways and betser ways of showing forth its joy.—Golden Rule.

Provide for the Future.

During the past twenty-five years there has been an extravagance in personal expenditures quite beyond what was the case during the same length of time preceeding. The great majority of young people are in the habit of spending their incomes as fast as they receive them, and, in many instances, they will incur debts which they have no reasonable grounds for meeting, and all for the sake of keeping up with the rage of the latest fashions and getting the greatest amount of this world's pleasures, not to say follies. And, I regret so say, not a few professed followers of Christ are very lax about their financial affairs. I will not say that young Christians are as eager for all sorts of worldly pleasures as their ungodly neighbors are, but certainly in the matter of financial management they are often decidedly too careless and improvident. They do not seem to realize that the money which comes into their hands is to be held as a trust from God and to be wisely used. Now, it is the duty of every one to make some provision for the future. Not that they should miserly hoard up all that they can get, but after having used what is necessary for the present needs and dispensed to God's cause according to their financial ability, they should lay by a portion for future necessities; even though it be a little each month. A certain minister well says: "It is not only right, it is duty, for a man to lay something by from what he earns. I believe it to be a young man's duty and a young woman's duty, if she or he is a wage earner, to attempt to lay something by however small it may be to begin with the very first earnings and to think of the day when they may not be able to earn, of the day when there may be some unusual call; to lay by something, as the saying is, against a rainy day, to provide for old age, to provide for children. All this is not only wise and right, but is fundamentally bound up in moral; for no man or woman has the right to run the risk of being sometime dependent upon others." This is indeed a moral question. "It involves the principle of the golden rule, for we should not, by our improvident, reckless course, compel others to at last support us, when we would dislike, if we had the means to support those who, by such a course, should get into a penniless condition. And, besides, he who makes no effort to provide for the future, fails to develop that manliness and self-respect which come by exercising economy, prudence and a wise foresight of future necessities. While we are all more or less dependent upon others, yet there is a certain degree of independence needs to be cultivated and contributed to the building up of true manhood and womanhood. Let us look upon this matter in the light of a Christian duty, if not privilege, and view our responsibility of God and to man in the work of wisely providing for the future.—Baptist.

The Largest Sunday-School in the World.

BY J. G. HODGKINSON.

LAST month the eighty-eighth anniversary of the laying of the foundation stone of the Stockport (England) Sunday-school was celebrated. The institution boasts the proud distinction of being the largest Sunday-school in the world. Stockport is situated on the border line of Lancashire and Cheshire, England, and contains at the present time from 75,000 to 100,000 inhabitants, chiefly engaged in the cotton manufacturing industry. On one of the highest points, near the center of the town, stands this massive brick structure, singular in size and appearance to its largest cotton mill.

This edifice was founded nearly a century ago by a cotton manufacturer named Joseph Mayer, who devoted his long life of over fourscore years, apart from his labors at the mill, to this purpose. Some idea of the greatness of this work may be gathered from the fact that its register bears the names of more than 100,000 scholars and 5,700 teachers; and the Queen herself heads the list of its patrons. Previous to the erection of the present building the school had an existence, for in 1795 it published a hymn book for the use of its scholars.

Thousands of the graduates of this school are now scattered over the world, many of them in this country, noteworthy among whom is Mr. Thomas W. Weathered, a prominent merchant of New York City, who for twenty-three years has crossed the ocean for the special purpose of taking part in its anniversary proceedings.

The building is five stories high, and covers a large area of ground, describing the three sides of a parallelogram, and, rising in front, upon a grassy prominence, is a mighty flagpole, a present from California. The school has many exits and entrances, and all precautions are taken in case of fire.

The principal room is known as the "large room," which occupies the upper two stories of the entire front of the building. From a depth of about thirty feet at the lower end of the room, the floor rises gradually to about eight feet from the ceiling at the upper end. At the lower end and along two sides of the room are spacious galleries, the larger one in front containing the organ and seats for a choir, which has hundreds of times numbered more than 500 voices and instruments. The organ was originally donated, and has been enlarged from time to time by similar donations, until now it is one of the largest in existence.

In this room the school is opened every Sunday morning in the year promptly at nine o'clock, and closed again in the evening at four. Immediately after the opening services, which consist of prayer, a hymn, and a short scriptural address, the different classes march orderly to their own rooms.

The first class is composed of ten divisions, fifty scholars each, of young men from fifteen years of age. It has an "inspector" and ten regular teachers; while every division has its officers, rules and regulations, petty organizations, etc., all conducted in the most orderly and hearty manner. It also has its own lending library. The second class is similar to the first in everything except that its scholars are young women.

The adult classes, male and female, are even larger and composed of those who have not been regularly brought up in the school from infancy. Each have their own library. Then there are the "large room" classes and the "little rooms," peopled with a throng of some 3,000 boys, girls and infants.

Thus a child is brought in the school as soon as it is able to walk, and placed in a "little room" which is designed by a letter. Each of these rooms has its eight or ten classes presided over by a "visitor" and a full complement of teachers. From the lowest, or A B C class, the child goes through the little room, until, at a suitable time, it is promoted to the "large room." Here the classes are numbered. On one side of the center of the room sit the boys, and the girls on the other. Each of the classes is divided into two divisions, and has a "visitor" and two teachers. Here the boy or girl is taught not only reading and instruction in the Bible but writing. From thence promotion takes them to the first and second classes, where they may receive a first-class religious education.

Each Sunday morning at 10:30 some part of the school marches in a body to a church for which a regular chart is provided, so that each church in the town of any denomination is visited in turn, as the Sunday-school is entirely undenominational.

Its anniversary, referred to in the opening of this article, takes the form of a grand procession through the principal streets to the marketplace, where a hymn, specially composed for each occasion, is sung. Every honor is paid them by the town; a fine string band is provided and the place properly prepared for them; and here thousands of people flock from all parts of the town and country, until the great space is like a sea of faces, wedged close up to the walls of the old parish church.

It has an "annual sermon" in November, admission to which is gained by ticket; and this is the only instance of a scholar being asked to contribute to the support of the school, by purchasing a ticket. They are graded in price from a shilling to a "subscriber's" ticket of a guinea. These sermons have always been a feature of the school, and are preached by the most noted men in the religious world.

In September, on the occasion of the annual "wakes" of the town, it has a grand tea party, when that large room is the scene of the happiest mirth of thousands of children.

Again, at seven o'clock on New Year's morning, it holds a great service, when every scholar is presented with a report of the year's work, printed in book form.

Over a score of years ago its scholars, by penny subscriptions, purchased a lifeboat, which was placed at Dunkirk, on the coast of Ireland.

The school has five branches, in the suburbs, all in a very flourishing condition. The whole institution is under the direction of two "Inspectors," one of whom, Mr. James Leigh, celebrated his golden jubilee of service as a teacher and inspector last year. —Independent.

The Prayer that has Power.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

All of God's mighty men and women have been mighty in prayer. When Martin Luther was in the mid-valley of his conflict with the Man of Sin he used to say that he could not get on without three hours a day in prayer. Charles G. Finney's grip on God gave him a tremendous grip on sinners' hearts. The greatest preacher of our times—Spurgeon—had pre-eminently the "gift of the knees"; the last prayer I ever heard him utter (at his own family worship) was one of the most wonderful that I ever listened to; it revealed the hiding of his power. Abraham Lincoln once said: "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go; my own wisdom and that of all around me seemed insufficient for the day."

But what is prayer? Has every prayer power with God? Let us endeavor to get some clear ideas on that point. Some people seem to regard prayer as the rehearsal of a set form of solemn words, learned largely from the Bible, or a liturgy; and when uttered they are only from the throat outward. Genuine prayer is a believing soul's direct converse with God. Phillip Brooks has condensed it into four words—a "true wish sent Godward." By it, adoration, confession of sin and petition for mercies and gifts ascend to the Throne, and by means of it infinite blessings are brought down from Heaven. The pull of our prayer may not move the Everlasting Throne, but—like the pull on a line from the bow of a boat—it may draw us into closer fellowship with God and fuller harmony with his wise and holy will.

1. This is the first characteristic of the prayer that has power. "Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart." A great many prayers are born of selfishness, and are too much like dictation or demand. None of God's promises are unconditional; and we have no such assets to our credit that we have a right to draw our checks and demand that God shall pay them. The indispensable quality of all right asking is a right spirit towards our Heavenly Father. When a soul feels such an entire submissiveness toward God that it delights in seeing him reign, and his glory advanced, it may fearlessly pour out its desires; for then the desires of God and the desires of that sincere submissive soul will agree. God loves to give to them who love to let him have his way; they find their happiness in the chime of their own desires with the will of God.

James and John once came to Jesus and made to him the amazing request that he should "do for us whatsoever we shall desire"; and then they bolted out the petition that he would place one of them on his right hand and the other on his left hand when he set up his imperial government at Jerusalem! They were as selfish office-seekers as any who now pester our President at Washington. As long as these self-seeking disciples sought only their own glory, Christ could not give them the askings of their ambitious hearts. By and by, when their hearts had been renewed by the Holy Spirit and they had become so consecrated to Christ that they were in complete chime with him, they were not afraid to pour out their deepest desires. James declares that if we "do not ask amiss," God will "give liberally." John declares that "whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." Just as soon as those two Christians found their supreme happiness in Christ and his cause they received the desires of their hearts.

2. The second trait of prevailing prayer is that it aims at a mark, and knows what it is after. When we enter a store or shop we ask the salesman to hand us the particular article we want. There is an enormous amount of pointless, prayerless praying done in our devotional meetings; it begins with nothing and ends nowhere. The model prayers mentioned in the Bible were short and right to the mark. "God be merciful to me a sinner!" "Lord save me!" cries sinking Peter. "Come down, ere my child die!" exclaims the heart-stricken nobleman. Old Rowland Hill used to say, "I like short, ejaculatory prayer: it reaches Heaven before the Devil can get a shot at it."

3. In the next place, the prayer that has power with God must be a prepaid prayer. If we expect a letter to reach its destination we put a stamp on it; otherwise it goes to the Dead-letter Office. There is what may be called a Dead-prayer Office, and thousands of well worded petitions get buried up there. All of God's promises have their conditions; we must comply with those conditions or we cannot expect the blessings coupled with the promises. No farmer is such an idiot as to look for a crop of wheat unless he has plowed and sowed his fields. In prayer, we must first be sure that we are doing our part if we expect God to do his part. There is a legitimate sense in which every Christian should do his utmost for the answering of his own prayers. When a certain venerable minister was called on to pray in a missionary convention he first fumbled in his pocket, and when he had tossed the coin into the plate he said, "I cannot pray until I have given something." He prepaid his prayer. For the churches in these days to pray "Thy kingdom come," and then spend money on jewelry and cigars than in the enterprise of foreign missions, looks almost like a solemn farce. God has no blessings for sissy pockets. When I hear requests for prayer for the conversion of a son or daughter I say to myself, How much is that parent doing to win that child to Christ? The godly wife who makes her daily life attractive to her husband has a right to ask God for the conversion of that husband; she is co-operating with the Holy Spirit, and prepraying her heart's request. God never defaults; but he requires that we prove our faith by our works, and that we never ask for a blessing that we are not ready to labor for. Genuine, self-denying, prevailing prayer is always willing to make any sacrifice to secure the blessing which his soul desires.

4. Another essential of the prayer that has power with God is that it be the prayer of faith, and be offered in the name of Jesus Christ. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." The chief "wrestling" that we are to do is not with any reluctance on God's part; it is with the obstacles which sin and unbelief put in our pathway. What God orders we must submit to uncompainingly; but we must never submit to what God can better. Never submit to be blocked in any pious purpose or holy undertaking if, with God's help you can roll the blocks out of your pathway. The faith that works while it prays commonly conquers; for such faith creates such a condition of things that our Heavenly Father can wisely hear us and help us. Oh, what a magnificent are the triumphs of striving, toiling, victorious faith! The firmament of Bible story blazes with answers to prayer, from the days when Elijah unlocked the heavens on to the days when the petitions in the house of John Mark unlocked the dungeon and brought liberated Peter into their presence. The whole field of providential history is covered with answered prayers as thickly as bright-eyed daisies cover our Western prairies. Find thy happiness in pleasing God, and sooner or later he will surely grant thee the desires of thy heart.—Independent.

The Twelfth Annual Convention of the North Carolina State Sunday-School Association will be held in Greensboro, August 22nd, 23rd and 24th, next.

The Convention will be attended by Mr. William Reynolds, Superintendent of Organization of International Sunday-school Association and by the most prominent and experienced Sunday-school workers of the State.

The representation will consist of ten delegates from each county, except Guilford, which is unlimited. Delegates will be provided with free entertainment by the citizens of Greensboro. The railroad fares will be equal to full fare going and one third fare returning. Tickets for the round trip will be obtainable from all depot agents.

The program will be published as soon as completed.

The local Committee, on behalf of the people of Greensboro, extend a hearty invitation to the Convention, and will cordially welcome its delegates to their homes.

At this Convention delegates will be elected to the World's and International Conventions to be held in St. Louis, Aug 30-Sept. 6. Arrangements are being made to carry the delegates so elected in a Pullman car, as excursionists to St. Louis and the World's Fair at Chicago and return, for not over $30 00 for the round trip.

All Counties which have not held Conventions during the year are earnestly requested and urged to take immediate action and hold Conventions before the State Convention. It is especially desired that Counties, at present unorganized, should hold Conventions and elect delegates to the State Convention. A representation from every County in the State is greatly desired.

We appeal to the Ministers, Superintendents and every lover of the Sunday school cause throughout the State, to bestir themselves and see that County Conventions are held in Counties where none have been held during the year.

Let delegates who expect to attend the Convention, notify E. P. Wharton, Greensboro, Chairman of Committee on entertainment.

A profitable and pleasant time may be expected. Let no county fail to be represented.

By order of the Executive Committee.

Missionary Work in the Sunday-School.

There has been a great deal said about home mission and foreign mission. Some people are in favor of both kinds, while others are opposed to both. Some are in favor of home missions and opposed to foreign missions; and others are opposed to home missions, but are in favor of foreign missions. Now this diversion of of education on the mission subject.

We are all to some extent the creatures of education. Those things which we were led to believe were true when we were young, cling to us with remarkable tenacity when we are grown into maturity.

"As the twig is bent the tree's inclined" is the way Pope puts it. If a child is taught to steal, he will grow up to be a man dangerous to the country. If a child is taught to be honest, society need not have many fears concerning him when he is a man. If a child is neglected, and not taught anything, he will be apt to follow his own inclinations, and in nine cases out of ten, his inclinations will be detrimental to human progress.

Since this is true, there should be no wonder that so many of our people are doing nothing for mission. Some of them have been reared up with the idea that there is no necessity for missions. Some of them have been brought up without any ideas at all, and of course, they have but little interest in the mission work. The benefits to be derived from mission work in the Sunday-school are three-fold. (1.) It would stimulate the missionary spirit among the adult members. (2.) It would teach the little ones how to do mission work. (3.) It would increase the attendance of the Sunday school and do more good to the community. Concerning the first benefit, that it would stimulate the missionary spirit among the adult students it is to be noticed that we all become more proficient in our work for God by practice. An adult Sunday school scholar may be in favor of missions, but if he puts forth no effort in behalf of missions, he will evidently not be much advantage to the missionary cause, nor the missionary cause to him. In order to do himself and others good and also practice what he preaches, he must go out among his neighbors—those who are not in the custom of attending the Sunday-school—and urge them to come in. He must use all the arguments, arts, and forms of persuasion which are lawful to be used, in his endeavor to win students for his school. This is not by any means a hard work. During the week, while travelling around, a student often come in contact with people whom he can do a great deal of good in this way. On Sunday morning it would be quite an easy matter to go by some friend's house, and kindly show that friend that it is an imperative duty for him to attend the Sunday school. It is a sad fact that the most of us will always do a better day's work for ourselves than for God. We are often very intent on obeying and spirit of the other part. We generally labor well during six days of the week, but we overlook our duty on the Sabbath. It often happens that six days we labor and do all our work, and oftentimes when the shades of night come down upon us, we are wearied with the work of the day, and our minds are burdened with toil and care. But how about Sunday night? Are we ever tired and weary then from working in the cause of the Master? Do our limbs ache from going around among the abandoned of the neighborhood and endeavoring to better their condition? We often boast about the work we do in our professional career, but our work for God is so scant that it would make us ashamed, were it to be balanced up before our own eyes in our account with God. Not until we learn to work for God with the same interest and earnestness that we have when we work for ourselves, will we see the cause of Christ move forward as it should, nor will we be able to receive the richest blessings which heaven has in store for us. Concerning the second benefit, that it would teach the little ones how to do mission work, we feel much interest. Children have more influence over children than have grown people. A child understands its playmates better than any man or woman can understand them. They exert an influence over one another that the superficial observer never notices. It is this fact which should encourage us to get the children to work. They can lead other children to the Sunday-school which grown people could not reach. It is hard for a person mature in age and intellect to get down on a level with the children; to enter into their childish feelings and fancies; and to become congenial as companions. Children can and do lead children. It is a grand sight to behold little children working with one another and for one another in religious work. It is significant of great things in the future. It is one of the great wonders of the age. Concerning the increase of the Sunday-school, and the increase of good to the community, we may note the direct visible result of the mission work in the Sunday school. We all like to see good, live, well-conducted schools; but it is impossible for such a school to exist without missionary work. Missions is the life of the church, it is also the life of the Sunday-school. This fact is true concerning every religious organization and we have loving demonstrations of its practical working. One denomination rejects missions. As a consequence, it decreases in numbers yearly, and will ere long pass into the forgotten things of the long age. Here is another denomination that has for its foundation both home and foreign missions. Upon this foundation it has flourished and will continue to flourish for many years hence. A large flourishing Sunday-school is a blessing to any community. It shapes the religious thought of the community, and practically directs religious affairs. It infuses life and strength into the church; it is the great saving institution of our young people. God grant that the day may soon come when the missionary feature of the Sunday-school work will receive its just portion of attention, for then we will have good schools in every community, then the tendencies to idleness and indifference and half-heartedness will pass away, and we will have much better times in the religious world.

HERBERT SCHOLZ.

The Sunday School as an Educator.

The Annual Address delivered before the N. C. & Va. Christian Sunday school Convention by Rev. C. C. Peel.

The Sunday school has been viewed from nearly every conceivable standpoint, but, perhaps, less from the educational side than any other. Still it was with this view that it was first established with its paid corps of teachers.

In the days of present college opportunities, it has become the custom to consider most things from an educational standpoint. Education is becoming more and more generally diffused; and, while not so much so as we would desire to see, is now considered a very important help in most things, and in many a stern necessity. Men now begin to be measured by their mental worth and educational strength. In church and state, men are sought after whose training fits them for special positions. Some still stumble on in ignorance, unconscious of their deplorable condition, while college bells ring the morning air and call to higher life. The surprise is that with present educational advantages many prefer ignorance to knowledge; and are content to be nothing, when opportunities crowd responsibilities in every path they tread.

Not only do the colleges afford general opportunities, but here and there we find institutions to give special training in special lines. It is not that we wish to discuss education in general, but to discuss that peculiar education received at Sunday school. The great need of the church today is trained workers. In many sections, churches cannot officer either church or Sunday school anything like creditably, while very few can do so efficiently. The great reason for this is found in the fact that the proper amount of training has not been done. No denomination can furnish an efficient faculty for a college unless it has trained men and women to furnish.

Many of our church enterprises are today neglected because scarcely the feeblest conception of their importance can be formed by those whose duty it is to support them. Children are today kept out of our Sunday schools because parents are without the proper conception of what the Sunday school can and ought to do for them. As those kept out of the school are some day to become responsible for others the same is likely to follow.

Briefly we wish to point out few lines of training as education in the Sunday school.

I. Giving.

There is no one line of duty more sadly neglected, perhaps, than this. Many of our Sunday schools are suffering for want of necessary Sunday school supplies, just as many colleges are suffering for want of necessary equipments. Yet many fathers and mothers are expecting their children to do something and be something, when they withhold every opportunity. One is here reminded of the man who complained that his children failed to grow, when he gave them five cents each to go to bed without supper, and refused them breakfast until the five cents was refunded. Sunday schools are suffering, churches dying, colleges languishing Christ's kingdom in its onward march, hindered—all because men do not support them, and they do not support them because they have not been trained to give and to appreciate that to which they are asked to give. I know young men who say that they are not able to pay their church dues—two or three dollars per year—and yet they are courted characters, which must mean that they want some young lady to take them and take care of them; and the young ladies are consenting to do so. When people are rightly trained, and have the proper conception of every-duty, and each one becomes willing to do his part, the work will be done and no one will be burdened.

II. Church Attendance.

In most places there are some, in some places many who neither attend church nor care to do so. The most frivolous excuses are often rendered by even church members for not attending church. Children usually are influenced by home influences, and unless acted upon by outside influences, will always be thus and grow up indifferent even to the privileges of church and Sunday school; hence are seldom if ever seen there. Some even who send their children to Sunday school do so to get them out of the way. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Parents need to be influenced to attend the services of the sanctuary and take their children with them, then the children are likely to grow up with a love for God and the church. Some people seem to prefer to turn their children out to the devil, and even train them for his service, rather than train, or have them trained, for God's service here below, and for his eternal kingdom above. Many think more of horses and cattle than they do of their children. They take especial care to see that the stock is properly cared for and in place but know nothing of their children's whereabouts whatever.

III. Church Work.

Church workers are so scarce that when we find one, that one is a jewel indeed. Many of the members of our Protestant churches have never done anything and can't be influenced to do anything. They act by the church as though to make a profession and sit down, like purchasing a R. R. ticket and taking a seat, was all that was ever necessary to be done. They say that the "water of life" is free, and then want others to furnish pitchers in which to carry it to them. Such members are burdensome to any church. But they cannot work because they have not been trained. They might do something, it is true, but as they are so far behind, they prefer to do nothing. If we would see one trained for proper usefulness, his training should begin early in life, and a failure in this respect means, at least, a failure in part through life. Many of our churches present the sad spectacle of a picture once drawn of a church built on wheels and the preacher between the shafts pulling and all the congregation riding and singing, "Must Jesus bear the cross alone, and all the world go free." Workers, and not idlers, are those that the church needs, and God calls for such.

IV. Bible Study.

Bible students are very scarce in this our day. We complain that the Pope has kept the Bible closed and has not allowed his people to read it, and yet many of us know, perhaps, less about it than do the Roman Catholics. Perhaps, not one in ten ever read the bible through with a smaller per cent who really study its teachings. "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." In the Sunday school we are taught not only to read, but to study the Bible, to search it. With these important lines before the Sunday school on which to educate the people we are sure that such work is not easily over estimated; and, dear friends, we are sure also that the church and Sunday school with all their enterprises are not asking you for one thing to compare with what they are offering you and yours. Here is offered that which sweetens the ills of life, makes its burdens easy, fits and prepares for life—the life that now is and that which is to come—and offers an education to make home happy, the community pleasant, the nation peaceable and prosperous and at last to exalt to the paradise of God and the Lamb.

A Few Concluding Words.

“The right of women to preach” discussion has been protracted far beyond any intention or expectation on my part, but I hope not in vain. Now that Bro. Holland has finished I will take the privilege which custom gives to the party who opens a discussion, the right to close it.

That arguments with my brethren who have so earnestly sought to carry their point should have been so scarce as to make it necessary for them to deal out unkind personal reflections upon myself, is a matter of regret, the responsibility of which they must divide among themselves, as best they can. I never could see any reason why the discussion of a theme might not be carried on between brethren without personal thrusts and unkind words.

Bro. Holland says he was not mad, as I had supposed when he used that ugly language toward myself. That is good. I am glad he was not, but I am sorry he used language which is common to people who lose temper because they have been worsted—hence I supposed he had lost his temper.

I am glad to tell him that I have been sensitive in this discussion over no argument brought out on his side, but only over uncalled for personal thrust—and this was legitimate.

In his anxiety to shift the responsibility of unbecoming language from his own shoulders he says I have flatly contradicted him by saying—“it is no such thing.” If I did, I beg his pardon, but I have no recollection of having used such naughty words toward him. Please tell me when and where I used them, for if I have used these words, as indicated, I must, and will, apologize.

I have used that passage about the fool, but never did I publicly apply it to one individual with whom I was in dispute—or discussion—and I know that many of the SUN's readers felt that Bro. Holland was most unfortunate in his use of it.

Again, did not Bro. H. do himself an injustice when he intimated that Dr. Curry has set himself against the Christian world as to the right of women to preach? Does not Bro. H. know that only a few denominations as such favor women preaching? Dr.

Curry is on the side of a large majority.

The joke of the discussion is that Bro. Holland closes the discussion by putting in a plea for defence for his age on my part. Evidently he expects me to imitate his example and say some hard things of him personally, and so he seeks to shield himself by asking that his age be considered. It shall be so. I will consider old age and I will offer no word which a son might not with propriety say to his father. I will go further. If I have shown any lack of respect for my aged brother in this discussion, he has only to get three disinterested, honorable men to say so, and show wherein, and I will promptly apologize through the SUN, with the editor's permission. If he says not do this, his failure will be all the vindication I desire.

In closing, let me say Bro. Holland makes all the show he can for his side—that was to be expected, and I do not blame him, but let me ask why he has not shown that the following points are “no good?”

1. That there is absolutely no evidence in the Bible that any woman ever was ordained to the work of the official ministry in God's church, either in Old or New Testament times.

2. That Jesus did not choose a woman to be one of the “twelve” or the “seventy,” so far as we have any information.

3. That Paul gives in 1 Tim. 2:14, a distinct reason, which from the very nature of the case had no local application to the church at Corinth, but it was general. It was because she was first in the transgression.

4. That Paul draws a clear distinction between the work of preaching and that of prophesying which show clearly that in his day prophesying did not mean preaching. See Eph. 4:11.

5. Why did he not show that a woman preached on the day of Pentecost, instead of Peter, as it is claimed that Joel said she would do? Joel really only said she would prophesy—not preach.

6. Why did he not show that Paul meant something, other than what he said, when he commanded the women to keep silence in the churches? Why not, brother?

TO BRO. MOOD.

In his reply to my effort to give him light, Bro. Mood seemed to vie with Bro. H. in making personal thrusts. In fact there has seemed to be a little sting in all that has appeared against my side—I mean each writer on the opposite side has seemed to have his thought stimulated by a little temper. I hope this may be forgotten when the good is remembered.

Bro. Mood says he can not see the difference between teaching a Sunday school class and teaching a congregation from the pulpit.

His difficulty arises in the fact that he makes no distinction between the ordained ministry and the unordained teachers, and so naturally enough he says he cannot find where Paul made any difference between teaching in the Sunday school and teaching in the pulpit. If Bro. Mood will accept Paul's own statement I can show what he wishes to see. Turn to 2 Tim. 1:6, there Paul clearly shows that he conferred a special gift in the ordination of Timothy to the official work of the ministry. A case of the work of an unordained teacher you may find in Acts 18:26. Now you have book, chapter and verse for which you asked.

Bro. Mood brings to bear upon this question the fact that he has been reading Grecian history. Be it so, and then I will submit to the mind of the candid reader that Paul's own words ought to be worth more in this discussion than the teachings of Grecian history. By the way, what has Grecian history to do with it any way? Bro. Mood thinks it shows that the women against whom Paul wrote the famous prohibition in 1 Cor. 14:34, were “debauched and foul harlots.” How he gets that idea I cannot tell, for Paul 1 Cor. 1:2, shows, plain as can be that he was, in his letters to the Corinthians, writing to the church of God. Hear him, as he says: “Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both their's and our's.”

That does not look like “debauched and foul harlots”—so far from it Paul calls them the church of God—so far from being “foul harlots” he speaks of them as being sanctified, and as called to be saints. Certainly Bro. Mood may have found in Grecian history that Paul was writing for “debauched and foul harlots.” but Paul says he was writing to the church of God, to the “sanctified” and whatever that means it certainly does not mean “foul harlots.” I should like to ask Bro. Mood if he believes the church at Corinth was made up of “foul harlots”? Do you, or do you not? If you say, no, you take away the foundation for your remarks, for Paul was writing to the church at Corinth, and not to “Tom, Dick and Harry” outside. If you say, yes, he did fellowship in the church of God the “debauched and foul harlots” of Corinth, of whom you spoke in your reply to me, then you make Paul's teachings and practices to stand far apart, for in 1 Thess. 3:6, Paul specially directs that God's people withdraw from every one that walks disorderly. Certainly a “debauched and foul harlot” would be a disorderly character. But it may be said that Paul was then writing to another church. True enough, but would he enjoin one church to withdraw from the disorderly and then have another to admit the disorderly? It would be a queer Christianity which would have one standard for morals in one town another very different in the next town.

Bro. Mood said he wanted light, but when I offered it he promptly rejected it and said I had committed an act unworthy of myself—that he rejected my offering, for his benefit, as he would a falsehood. That is pretty severe on me in return for my honest effort to give the aid which he had solicited. But I can bear it and much more, if need be, by the grace of God.

Seeing he rejected the light I offered him, and thinking that if he had light enough to reject what I offered, he ought to have enough to share with me, I asked him to do so, but he promptly declined by saying he had nothing to explain—that he had taken no sides in the discussion. That is strange, isn't it? I guess all intelligent readers of the SUN would have no difficulty in placing him. I never did fancy a seat on the fence—it is not a good place.

May God's blessings be upon the discussion—may the truth only remain while all that is wrong perishes forever.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Norfolk, Va.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT, it pains me for you to make a laughing stock of my ignorance; and the stinging sarcasm is unworthy of a man of your ability; and then everybody knows that sarcasm is not argument.

And I will reject as I would a falsehood, a distorted fact.

The above remarks of mine have been misconstrued by Dr Barrett as personal reflections upon himself. If they are, I honestly did not mean them as such and beg his pardon.

If the ordination of a man or woman makes a difference in the principle involved in teaching I fail to see it. Nor can I see how the passages cited as proof can possibly be applied to the woman question.

If Paul thought the church of Corinth was composed entirely of saints and sanctified ones why was the fifth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and others of the same tenor, ever written?

It is my opinion, backed by Greek history, that the women of the church at Corinth were converts from the class of women referred to by Bro. Barrett.

If knowledge of these things amount to nothing why did Peter say in 2 Pet-

EDITORIAL NOTES

Don't forget to work for the CHRISTIAN SUN.

Let every church strive to be in the roll for the press fund.

Hon. Geo. H. Snow of Raleigh died in the City of New York last Monday.

Rev. C. H. Rowland is in a protracted meeting at Piney Plains. Considerable interest is manifested.

The dedication of the church at Antioch last Sunday was largely attended. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., preached the sermon.

Any one can obtain a copy of a sermon, The Golden City by Rev. W. V. Tudor, D. D., by applying to W. F. Richardson, Richmond, Va.

A Sunday school picnic of much interest, was held jointly by the Baptists and Christians at Morrisville last. Every body seemed to have had a nice time.

We are glad to see that the church at Providence, Norfolk Co., Va., has Dr. J. P. Barrett to serve them another year, and has increased his salary nearly 100 per cent.

The first issue of The Church and College News is on the table. It is the State organ of the Christian Church in Iowa. It seems to be square on the platform of the Christian Church, and we hope it may do much good.

We have received a copy of the announcement of Suffolk Collegiate Institute. It shows a determination in those concerned in the school to make it first class. With good buildings and four professors well qualified, we may look for an excellent school, a thing that we want to see.

Awfully Afraid.

The Plain Dealer, the organ of the North Carolina, Liquor Dealers, Distillers and Grape Growers Association—what a name—seems to fear that the South Carolina Dispensary law will increase the cause of drinking in that state. What glaring inconsistency. For the same paper undertakes to show that total abstainers do not live as long as excessive intemperate drinkers. If drunkards live longer than sober men, surely insurance companies do not act wisely.

Are Your Ready?

The different events of life, through which we are called to go, are filled with pleasure or disagreeableness in proportion to the readiness to receive them. If it is misfortunes or troubles, a preparation to meet them gives guide to the faltering steps until the critical moments are passed. If it is an event of pleasure, a preparation to receive it, gives it new colors of joy and gladness.

To be in readiness for the different events of life, whether they are full of joy to the soul or sadness to the heart, is a desirable thing to all intelligent beings. But like many other things to be decided, few are willing to pay the price of their purchase. Because the necessary effort is greater than the average man is willing to put forth.

All rational beings would like to be educated, if they could pluck the fruits from the literary tree without opening the eyes or raising the hands to do so. Fortunate, however, for them, they are not allowed a life so soft as this.

All preparation for readiness requires effort. And effort means work. Mind and muscle with all the powers of the body come into active operation in getting ready for the events of life.

The events to be met requiring preparation are many. But a preparation to meet them as they cross life's journey are only strengthening one to meet the great event standing at the end of life, death. That event is certainly coming. It is coming to you and to me. Are we ready? If not would it not be well to make the necessary preparation immediately? Can you afford to wait longer?

The Spirit of Union.

Dr. Dollinger said: "We can say each to the other as baptized, we are on either side brothers and sisters in Christ. In the great garden of the Lord let us shake hands over these confessional hedges and let us break them down, so as to be able to embrace one another altogether. These hedges are doctrinal divisions about which either we or you are in error. Let us examine, compare and investigate the matter together, and we shall discover the precious pearl of peace and unity; and then let us join hands together in cultivating and cleansing the garden of the Lord, which is overgrown with weeds." In these words from men of different sects we see evidence that the Holy Ghost is deepening the desire for the unity of the universal church of Christ. Then dear brethren of every sect let us pray for the healing of the wounds of the body of Christ that the sinking world may believe in Him and be saved.

With gladness, we give the above taken from the Raleigh Christian Advocate a place in our own columns. It breathes the spirit for which the CHRISTIAN SUN has been contending for nearly fifty years. We are glad to see our brethren of other denominations turning eyes towards the principles, for which we have been contending and praying so long.

These doctrinal hedges have done much to retard the work of Jesus. But thank God, many of the thorns are being turned off, and soon denominations will burst through them and all praise God together.

Bethlehem.

Leaving home last Saturday morning we reached Elon College about 7:30 a. m. Here we met many old friends, but the absence of the student body gave rather a lonely aspect to the appearance of things. Soon seated with Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., in his buggy, we were on the road to the District Meeting at Bethlehem N. C. A very good congregation gathered and a meeting of interest was held. Rev. A. F. Iseley was made chairman and Bro. Pritchett Secretary. W. S. Long, D. D., Bro. A. F. Iseley, P. H. Fleming, W. T. Herndon, J. L. Foster and W. G. Clements were present.

A number of good speeches were made, and a vast deal of good victuals eaten.

Bethlehem is a strong church, and under the leadership of its excellent pastor, Rev. W. T. Herndon, is doing much work for the master. The singing led by Bro. Madsid is always good.

We had homes while in the neighborhood with David Michael, J. W. Watson and Samuel Ireland. All of these dear brethren gave us the very best of attention. We always like to go to Bethlehem.

Will be Educated.

A few days ago in conversation with a friend respecting the duty of parents in training their children, touching educational questions, he said. They will all be educated." This unexpected sentence fell on this ear with, a somewhat strange meaning, causing a slight lull in the conversation for a moment. Whereupon, he remarked. "They will all be graduates if not in one thing, in another." This little explanation furnished the key by which the door was opened, and the thought was made plain.

It is true your children will all be graduates in some thing. Will it be in ignorance and vice, or in intelligence and righteousness? Will it be in the heart felt science of Christianity or will it be in the science of sin? Which will it be parents? Which do you want it to be? Which are you working for?

Voices of Wisdom.

"Wisdom crieth aloud; she uttereth her voice in the streets." There is not a material object in existence that does not teach a lesson worth our learning. The little ant that burrows in the earth, having no guide nor master, lays up for herself food in summer for her consumption in winter when the bleak, cold winds shall blow, and the earth be bare and cheerless. This minute creature teaches us that there is a time when we must work if we are free from hunger and penury; that we can do something in life, no matter how small and apparently insignificant we may be; that we must take advantage of our opportunities if we are to be respected when the winter seasons of life are upon us. The mocking-bird that flits among the boughs of the majestic oak makes the welkin ring with its merry song. It teaches us that it is our duty to be cheerful; that we are endowed with the gift of music and that we should appropriate that gift to our own benefit and the benefit of others. A great many people never sing. Some of them never try to sing. Many who do not sing could sing, were they to persevere with proper diligence. There is one fact which we should think about carefully. Around the great, white throne of God there stands a magnificent choir made up of the spirits of just men and women made perfect. That choir is constantly singing praises to the Almighty. Suppose we do not cultivate our talent for music on earth, can we join that choir in heaven?

There is the little bee that flits from leaf to leaf and sips the honey from the dew-washed morning rose. Then there are the morning roses and the lilies of the fields that raise their tender faces heavenward and seem to proclaim in silent tones the same truth uttered by our savior, "if God so clothe the flowers of the field, how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith." Yes everything with which we are surrounded stands ready to give us a lesson in life. The world is man's university, and this university is teeming with teachers. What a pity that there are so many who are walking in ignorance, when knowledge is so near to them. Here we are with five special senses, designed for the sole purpose of acquiring a knowledge of our surroundings, and of helping us to conduct ourselves rightly in life. And yet we often go about our homes, having eyes, but seeing not; having ears, but listening not; and having feeling, but exercising it not. One man will look at the sky, and observe the kind of weather for the next ten hours; another will look at it and see nothing but a blue concave dotted with clouds.

One man will look at a block of wood and see in it material for a beautiful picture frame; another will look at the same block, and see nothing but fire-wood. One man will run his hand over the raised letters of a book, and read every word quite rapidly; another will use his fingers the same way, and feel nothing but a confused mass. What a pity that men and women do not try to develop more thoroughly the powers which God has given them. The voices of wisdom warn us to act, and to act in the living present, with a heart within us, and at the same time conscious that God is over-head, beholding our actions and perceiving every thought. They teach us that certain courses of action are detrimental to body and soul, and that certain other courses will preserve us and open up for us a way to an abode higher than that in which we now exist. What we need is to heed the voices of wisdom and turn a deaf ear to the voice of folly.

Our Norfolk Letter.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—It has been quite a while since I have sent you a news letter from this place. I need not stop to give my reasons—I can do better—I will offer you a letter.

The work of the church is moving forward fairly well in Eastern Virginia. The S. S. Convention at Antioch in Isle of Wight County last week was largely attended and a most enthusiastic meeting of the Sunday-school workers of our Conference was held.

The Summer of 1893 is fast passing away. And with its departure will go the larger part of our church year and the best time for work. Our Conference will be here again, and, as usual, it will find many of us unready.

Some changes will likely take place in the pastoral relation. Rev. Roger Charnock has already resigned the charge of the Berkley Christian Church to take effect Nov. 1, 1893. It is intimated that Rev. M. W. Butler may be called to succeed him. The new house of worship in Berkley is soon to be finished, and it will be a much handsomer building than they have ever had.

The work on the Norfolk Church is going forward well. Dr. Jones goes on a canvassing tour next month, on which he hopes to raise money to materially aid in the completion of the house. Rev. Prof. J. O. Atkinson will supply the pulpit while Dr. Jones is away.

July 30 (5th Sunday) I expect to begin a meeting of days at Berea. Rev. J. W. Wellons of Durham, N. C., is to help me. The work at Providence is hopeful. They have of late extended their present pastor a call for the year 1893-4, with an increase in salary from $350 to $600 for the same work. This was a complete, but of course a pleasant, surprise to the pastor. He sees no reason, outside of the love of his people, why his services should be so liberally rewarded.

Berea will elect a pastor Saturday before the second Sunday in August.

Antioch is "up to its ears" in work. They have just entertained the Sunday School Convention, and are this week finishing the work of repairs and remodeling the old house. The interior now looks like a new place. The improvements have cost about $800. Rev. Dr. Staley is to preach the sermon next Sunday, rededicating the house.

Revs. J. O. Atkinson and J. U. Newman are both in E. Va. now, canvassing for students for Elon College. They report most gratifying success. I do sincerely hope that our people will do a liberal part by Elon College. Dr. Herndon, the indomitable financial agent for the College is in this country also—he is faithfully looking after the dollars for the college. We shall probably never know, certainly not in this life, what Dr. Herndon has been worth to Elon College, nor what trials and discouragements he has encountered in the way. May God give him grace to hold out to the end and get his crown.

We regret to hear that Rev. M. L. Hurley is not so well of late. May he speedily regain what he has recently lost and what he has lost in the last ten years, is the wish of many friends in Eastern Virginia. The field which secures the service of Rev. Roger Charnock will get a good preacher. He is an educated man and a faithful preacher of the word. He deserves a good field for usefulness.

I was to see our aged brother, Rev. Stephen S. Barrett of Berkley, this week. He is now about 81 years old and very feeble. He cannot go out any more. He suffers no pain, has a good appetite he is simply worn out and is awaiting the call of the Master, God bless him—may his last days on earth be his happiest—a joyful foretaste of the joys of the other shore.

In speaking of the Sunday School Convention I failed to say that the Convention decided to put its missionary fund in with the Christian Missionary Association—the S. S. C. will have twenty delegates in the missionary Convention—that is good and a step forward.

The next session of the S. S. Convention is to meet with the church at Berea, Nansemond Co., Va., in 1894. Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., is to deliver the introductory address. By the way the Berea Sunday School, Nansemond, won the "Convention Banner" this year, it having raised for the S. S. Missionary fund 79 cents per member. Well done.

I am glad to note the announcement in the Norfolk Virginian of today that the new and handsome house of worship for the Christians in the town of Suffolk will have the most beautiful stained glass windows to be found in this section, four of which are Memorial windows—one in memory of REEVES C. WELLS, one for THOMAS J. KILEY and one for JAMES M. CAULK, all of whom have been prominent as donors of the church in other days, while one will be for the founder of the church, and for many, many years the beloved pastor—the late lamented REV. W. B. WELLONS, D. D., who has been dead now more than 16 years.

The Suffolk church has done wonderfully under the labors of its present beloved pastor, our dear Brother Staley. Long may he live to carry on the Lord's work.

Prof. W. E. Herman of Providence has just returned from the World's Fair at Chicago. He says he had a grand time. He is preparing to give a stereopticon exhibition showing the World's Fair in leading features. He will do it well.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Norfolk, Va., July 27, 1893.

Should be Supported.

The Independent of July 27, says: the action of the managers of the World's Fair in resolving to close the gates on Sunday has been received by the Christian public with every evidence of hearty satisfaction. The pulpit and the religious press rejoice over it as an indication of the strength of the Christian sentiment of this country. In pursuance of the resolution of the Local Directory the gates were closed tight last Sunday; and we do not hear that they were besieged by crowds. Excursion trains have ceased to run, and things have assumed their normal Sunday condition in and around Chicago. The daily papers, which were so strenuous in their determination to have the gates opened, have very little to say. They accept the result quietly. The demonstration of the fact that Sunday opening was not a popular demand has been so overwhelming, that it has left them without a single argument against closing. Some of them say, however, that the failure was not due to conscientious objection to Sunday opening, but to the fact that so many exhibits were covered and the machinery was silent. People did not care to see half a fair. This is undoubtedly true. They paid full price, but got only half as much for their money as week-day visitors. This doubtless kept some away; but the chief reason for the small attendance was the Sabbath sentiment of the people. Probably the heaviest financial loss inflicted was by the staying away altogether of those whose conscience was offended by the action of the Local Directory. It is clear now even to the Local Directory that their policy was a very short sighted and ruinous one. As we said last week, we say again, as the blunder has been confessed and remedied, the Fair ought to have a hearty support; and we are surprised that one of our most prominent religious contemporaries should seem to discourage such support. We do not think that there is any reason whatever to believe that the Fair will again be opened on Sunday. That matter, we take it, is finally settled. At any rate the wise policy is to assume that it is finally settled, and give the Fair the hearty support which has been withheld on conscientious grounds.

Rev. A. G. Anderson.

Rev. A. G. Anderson of the N. C. & Va. Christian Conference was born, Dec 20, 1813, and died July 13, 1893. He graduated in early life from the University of N. C. He was married, Dec. 31, 1835 to Mary Thach. He was married a second time to Fannie Thach June 4, 1839. God gave to his last wife seven children, all of whom have passed to the spirit land but two. His last wife passed over the river of death several years ago. He professed religion Sept 29, 1850, joined the church Nov. 11, 1850, and was baptized Nov. 16, 1850. He was ordained an elder in the Christian Church at Pope's Chapel Oct. 9, 1858.

The better emotional qualities of Rev. A. G. Anderson were well cultivated, and were always an index to the noble soul that was in him. His convictions on all important questions were well fixed, and he contended strongly for what he believed to be right. He was a true friend to the church of his choice.

er 3:14,16, "Our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures; unto their own destruction?"

But there is no use for any one to say another word about this thing since Bro. Barrett has decided that the passages of Scripture under consideration must not be applied to any person or persons (and Dr. B. seems able to tell) except the church at Corinth, thereby releasing all women from the prohibition—"Let your women keep silence." I am glad that for my lady Sunday school teachers cannot be improved on by any man.

I thank you for that statement Bro. Barrett, as it gives more satisfaction than almost anything else you can say.

I am through,

Yours truly,
D. J. MOOD.

Holland Items,

The protracted meeting at Holland Christian church will commence next Sunday, 1st. Sermon on Sunday at 11 o'clock by Rev. R. H. D. Demarest; and after Sunday services will commence in the evening at 2 o'clock, to be conducted by Rev. H. H. Butler.

Church service here last 4th Sunday, was well attended, notwithstanding there was regular meeting with the Friends at Somerton church, near by.

It was my pleasure to be at the Sunday School Convention of the E. V. C. Conference last week, which was in every way a success. The representation from the churches was full and the attendance large. All of our interests, nearly, seemed to be represented. Dr. Jones and Col. A. Savage made good speeches in behalf of the Norfolk mission, in which they gave glowing accounts of the work of building up the Christian cause there. They need some outside help to complete the house of worship there. Brethren and sisters, (you who are able) this is a most worthy cause, and should be assisted to our utmost ability. Don't pass it by without immediate attention. No investment will result in better interest to our beloved church. Send on your money according to your ability, let it be much or little, at your earliest convenience.

Dr. Newman and Prof. Atkinson both made able speeches in behalf of Elon College, which we think were not without effect, and we hope for a much larger number of students from Virginia, than went up from here last year.

Our young brethren from Elon and others all made strong, enthusiastic speeches and much interest was manifested in all departments of our work, and all seemed to enjoy the meetings, as it was most royally entertained. May God bless all the efforts put forth in his name, to the good of his cause.

R. H. HOLLAND.

Children's Day at Holy Neck.

Holy Neck S. S. celebrated Children's Day the 3rd Sunday in this month (July). Notwithstanding the excessive heat a very large concourse of people assembled from far and near. Two services were held and dinner was furnished for all who came. The exercises of the forenoon consisted of music and recitations by the children and music by the choir. Prof. Taylor was present with his cornet and added much to the music. The children acquitted themselves very well, and no doubt gratified those who had labored so faithfully to train them. A collection for mission was taken, resulting in about $7.00.

After an intermission of about 1½ hours the audience again assembled to witness the afternoon exercises which consisted of addresses by Prof. Atkinson, of Elon College, and Bros. S. E. Everett and J. H. Jones, interspersed with appropriate music by the choir. The addresses of Bros. Everett and Jones were good, and showed that they had acquired habits of thoughtful study. Holy Neck should be proud of her young men. Prof. Atkinson's address was in the interest of Elon College, and was a strong appeal to the denomination to stand by the institution which it has established. In the course of his remarks he let fall some very practical thoughts on manhood and womanhood.

Washington Letter.

The prospect for any distinctly moral reform legislation, by the fifty-third congress, soon to assemble in extra session, cannot be considered especially bright, as the average member of Congress needs a very little excuse for not doing what he has no desire to do, and from present indications financial and tariff legislation will dwarf everything else and will furnish a ready-made excuse for the neglect of bills intended to aid in the march of moral reform.

The absence of new laws might be excused, if those already upon our statute books were rigidly enforced which they certainly are not in Washington. There is a law in force here prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors, yet it is a common thing for children to be found upon our streets in a state of intoxication, and no arrests are made. Children have recently been under treatment in our hospitals for alcoholism and a messenger boy under thirteen was picked up on Pennsylvania Avenue helplessly intoxicated. These things make it plain that the law against the sale of intoxicants to minors is being constantly violated, but notwithstanding extraordinary efforts on the part of the local temperance people no arrests have been made for such violations.

A national quarantine has been by direction of President Cleveland established at Brunswick, Georgia, Surgeon General Wyman of the Marine Hospital Service having reported the failure of the local authorities at that place to enforce the quarantine regulations against a yellow fever infested vessel. This action was taken under the National Quarantine act of February 15, 1893, and is generally approved here. It seems that Georgia has no State board of health.

Everything is unusually quiet in government circles just now. Secretary Carlisle is the only member of the cabinet on duty. Treasury officials speak very hopefully of the financial outlook and say that a large percentage of the national banks which have recently suspended will in a short time resume business, and that they have information from all sections of the country which leads them to believe that public confidence is being gradually restored.

The War Department has about come to the conclusion that Indians do not make good soldiers, and while those already in the service—about 700 in all—will probably be allowed to serve out their terms of enlistment it is not probable that any further efforts will be made to enlist Indians in the army, at least not under present conditions. There is some talk of organizing an Indian auxiliary branch of the army, modeled on the British system in India. The present trouble, according to Army officers, is that the rules of discipline in the army are entirely unsuited to the nature and habits of the Indians.

Carelessness in Hymn Singing

BY JOHN B. CLEMENTS.

"Mamma, did you ever see a consecrated cross eyed bear?"

That was the question little Willie greeted his mother with, on his return from Sunday-school, one afternoon.

The school had sang, the old, oft-used hymn, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone," and the one line had impressed Willie in a peculiar manner.

Not unlike this, was the little fellow who returned from church to express the wish that he might go to Greenland. When asked why, he said, "because he would like to see a mountain, and they sang in church 'From Greenland I see mountains!'"

In the singing of the chorus of the hymn by Major Whittle, "The Banner of the Cross," one line is often rendered:—"For Christ counts every thing but loss," the adding of the final "s" to "count," causing an entire change in the meaning of the chorus, and making a flagrant misstatement, and one that does not at all carry the idea the author would have conveyed.

The writer sat in a meeting, not long since, when the well-known hymn, "At the Cross," was announced, and the leader, in a heavy bass voice, started up:—"At last, and did my Savior bleed," with utter disregard for the deep sentiment of Watts.

All this goes to prove that much of our singing fails of its effect because we have so little regard for the words of the hymns, that we do not make them what they should be—musical prayers. Our thoughtlessness of expression may be fixing in the minds of little ones wrong ideas and impressions, that, if they do not cause them embarrassment sometime, will, at least, annoy them in an endeavor to set themselves right.

We should be hymn-students, even as we search for the meanings which the poets give us in sweet metrical lines and daintily constituted sentences.—Presbyterian.

The Southern Home Companion.

Elizabeth Lyle Saxon, in her War Time Reminiscences in the August number of the Southern Home Companion, writes of Terrible Privations Ingenious Makeshifts, telling how broadcloth shoes, fashionable bonnets, etc., were made at home. Dr. Amie M. Hale contributes an interesting and instructive World's Fair Letter. Martha Homebody, editor of the Home-Making Department, gives practical instructions for canning and preserving the fruits of the season; also for putting up wine, made from either wild or cultivated grapes, so that it will keep the year round without fermenting, thus making at slight expense a delightful beverage in the sick room, having all the healthful properties of wine without power to intoxicate. There is also the usual variety of interesting stories and charming poems, by the best authors. Ten cents a number, $1.00 a year. The Companion, 192 Common Street, New Orleans.

A Day at Niagara for Twenty Cents.

Niagara, "the crown jewel of our continent," centuries old, but ever new in its infinite variety, is the one spot that every American should see; and every reader of Demorest's Family Magazine for August may see Niagara in all its different aspects, at every season of the year, without the fatigue and expense of the journey. Through the charmingly written and superbly illustrated article "A Day at Niagara," one may become familiar with every point of interest in the vicinity of the Great Falls; while those who propose stopping there on their way to or from the Exposition, may learn how they may see all to the best advantage, and with the least expenditure of time and money. "Society Fads" describes all the latest foibles of the butterflies of fashion; and all the departments for which this Magazine is noted are full to overflowing with good things. There is something in it of interest to every member of the family. This number is a fair sample of what is given twelve times a year for $2. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East 14th St., New York.

The Pansy for August

comes to us with its usual amount of good things. It never fails to do that. Society maintains its popularity with all, while it adds fresh interest to each. Price, $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston is an unusually bright number. "The Duck Flowers" with its apt illustrations makes a dainty botany lesson, and "Flossie," who belonged to the author of "My Dogs and their ways," will amuse and interest all lovers of dumb animals—and what little man or woman is not that? Price, $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston.

Our Little Men and Women for August

Babyland for August tells about a good many things that Baby will enjoy. This dainty little magazine is sure always to captivate both Baby and Mamma. Price, 50 cents a year; 5 cents a number. D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston.

The Preacher's Magazine for August is the eighth number of the third volume, which is edited by the Rev.'s Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory. The leading Sermon in this number is by Dr. Hugh Macmillan, and is entitled, "A Burdensome Stone." Is published monthly at $1.50 per year; single copy 15 cents. Wilbur B. Wide Awake—St. Nicholas.

The merging of Wide Awake into St. Nicholas will prove a surprise to the thousands of readers and lovers of the former magazine. The August number will be the "farewell" issue. We quote from the "Story of Wide Awake," the leading article in this number:

"A great publishing house, carrying out the plans of its founder, determines to devote its best strength and energy to the publication of the best books for American readers, young and old. It has necessarily broadened and deepened, until now, new lines of book publishing are to be taken—lines that preclude diversion of thought and labor necessary to the carrying on of such a magazine as Wide Awake has become. Thus, looking out for the best interest of Wide Awake, it publishers decide to place where it will do the most good in the future, and therefore transfer it to the comradeship and companionship of its friendly competitor and twin."

A cursory glance at The New Peterson for August is enough to show that it is best of the month's magazines. "Days in England," by Maty Gray Unsen, describes all sorts of charming out-of-the-way nooks, and the accompanying illustrations are worthy of the text. "Under the trees" is a new department, made up of sketches by Minot J. Savage and other prominent writers. A glimpse of the number's contents will convince our readers that The Peterson keeps thoroughly up to its high standard. Terms, two dollars a year. Cruelty Old and New.

BY LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY.

The average Cook's tourist, who has seen and examined a medieval building, certainly carried away no love for it. So great is the power of formed prejudice, so ready is a suspicion or misunderstanding to strengthen itself, like an orchid upon air, that an ancient Italian house, honey-combed with dim passages, and stairs, and alcoves innumerable, means to the narrow mind of some Americans, nothing beyond possible, nay, probable, vice and crime; it means poisons and waylayings, chains and cells, the rack and the fagots for the stake; with the bones of nuns calcining the hollow walls, and, perhaps, the specter of the Pope himself whisking his evil and invisible wings overhead! The best to be said of the architecture of the Dark Ages, by half-educated people, is that our slanderous terrors lend it the look it never had. Were we to stop to analyze its hatefulness, it would appear to consist in the fact that it is not ours. Is anything truer than that in the matter of priding ourselves upon increased respect for one another's feelings modern society poses as a huge and absurd Pharisee? We are kinder than our ancestors for the same reason that we are more universally expert in the three R's: literally because we cannot help it, because converging circumstances have constrained us to a change. If we brag now of our mutual tolerations, and affect to despise the hearty old hangers and parboilers of simpler ages, we are running into the arms of a logical and historical irrelevancy. The exterior difference is none of our making; and the portions of guilt or innocence in the original case, remain, for us, the same. For if the Incarnation involve anything at all, it must involve deepening and widening of human charities, era on era. The late-born of a perfectible race, if he be a Christian, and true to the law of spiritual development, ought to be in the rich light of his dynastic experience, the consummate neighbor; the most helpful and tender, the most enduring and protecting, the most understanding and reconciling man among men. A flaw of unkindness, in him, ranks, relatively, with the crude outrageous passion of his convert brother, Clovis, A. D. 500, who smote down a follower as he might a twig or a fly.

It is obvious that faith, love and war were the main interests of life in Europe up to the Renaissance, when other forces began to diffuse themselves and smooth the face of the earth. Faith, love and war bred their elemental strife and enormities; and the consequences have vanished with the causes, of which two have wellnigh ceased to actuate the mind of man. We are better; but it is largely because we have lived longer and learned in difference. We cannot cherish, in like degree, the innocent, childish craze for uniformity of opinion, nor believe ourselves public benefactors when we put a dissenting spirit out of the room. Rose bushes nourish slugs; and, even so, creeds have nourished fanaticism, inwardly deploring it all the while. We must cast no blame on creeds. But it may be advisable to remember that the system for which Catholicism is often held responsible—the abominable Jew-baiting of the twelfth century and the equally abominable heretic-baiting in Spain at the close of the fifteenth—were be ten upon their own ground by the most Penal Laws of modern and Protestant England; “the most hateful things,” as Lord Chief Justice Coleridge said in a recent speech, “known from the ning of the world"--a code which bitually took, not life indeed, but at with a subtler assassination took om life for generations every prop had to lean on, every opportunity learning, wealth, ambition, civic function or social safety, until a an should deny the outlawed religion of his fathers. What do we lean by this unthinking cry of cruelty with which we pursue the long-go dead? Every day shows us that e have been too hasty and too severe. While we find out no new animals and tyrants, reputations are being built from their ruins, thanks records newly read and conscientious biography. Even Lucretia Borgia, the worst type of the transitional time, come forth a noble woman and a genius, and no poisoner; and Sir Thomas More turns out very consistently as the gentlest of saints and statesman, who did not log the es rays of the Reformation in his Chelsea garden

It is much to be feared that our mingled scorn and compassion for our medieval kinsfolk is composed of cant pure and simple. They had no drainage, and they believed in brownies; but they can give us a lesson in our present uttermost need, since there was no problem of a pauper class in their cities where the poor were, in a measure never since known, the wards and children of the rich. And it is well, beside the spectacle which is ever before us of the extraordinary use which they found for thumb-screws and wild horses, to place that other spectacle of heroic charity which, like it, has vanished from our less contracted civilization. Persecutions, alas, were a normal thing; but so was the self-sacrifice which made Martin have his only cloak with a beggar, Elizabeth lay a leper in her palace bed, Vincent replace a galley slave at the oars and Francis go out alone into the Umbrian hills, in the sweetest of legends, to convert the cannibal wolf with pity and with a Gospel text. These were not professional philanthropists like the little souls who decry the conditions which bred them. No; the world which smirks upon its own most flourishing bull fights, and cattle transportations, and child labor laws, and vivisection, and snarlings of the marriage bond in almshouses, and Russian espionages and exiles, and rides from Berlin to Vienna; even the more just and loving West, which has no interest a broad in abolishing the Africa slave trade and none at home in adjusting the Indian peace with honor or in removing the political disabilities of women, can hardly afford, with gracefulness, to sniff at the "cruel" past Might not the accused, were it as wordy as the accuser, fitly thunder back the immortal indictment of boys, "You're another!" Impertinence

ALL POLICYHOLDERS UPON AN EQUAL FOOTING.

By able, conservative management, safe investments, big rate of interest, low death rate, the Northwestern has won the love and applause of its policyholders and the respect and admiration of all who are acquainted with it.

Mr. J. S. Carr, Durham, N. C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders."

Mr. R. B. Raney, Raleigh, N. C., under date of April 1, '93, says: "I have held a policy in the Northwestern for a number of years, and am satisfied it has no superior."

The Literary Revolution.

The Literary Revolution has saved American book buyers millions of dollars in the cost of their books. Its methods; the cooperation of book buyers, securing cost of manufacture; direct sales, no agents, booksellers or other middlemen. Descriptive pamphlet, 32 pages, sent free on request. Mention this paper.

Book-lovers find "a literary gold mine" in each new issue of our Catalogue of choice books, which is published monthly, 128 pages, and sent for a 2-cent stamp. Mention this paper.

World's Best Books.

Fabulously cheap for such excellent editions; nearly all in this or larger type, always fine paper and excellent cloth or half morocco, gilt top binding. The style and quality of most of the following are represented by Cooper's "The Pilot"; those marked with an asterisk (*) are in cloth and also in half morocco gilt top, like Scott's Ivanhoe; see under "More Surprise Bargains"; prices are for cloth, or 15 cents higher for half morocco.

A Pretty Surprise.

Longfellow's Evangeline, in large type. 45 fine illustrations, on fine and heavy paper, richly bound in blue and white and silver and gold—for 19 cents, postage 6 cts.—usual price $1.00 to $1.50. Sold at about cost of manufacture by the 100,000, because pretty books in the hands of pleased customers are our best advertisements. Evangeline, without illustrations, paper covers, 4 cts.

More "Surprise" Bargains.

We offer, also, the following, which represent different styles in which we issue a large number of the world's best books; prices cover only about cost of manufacture by the 100,000:

J. Fenimore Cooper's "The Pilot," cloth, 20c., postage, 5c.
Scott's "Ivanhoe," half morocco, gilt top, 33c., postage, 5c.
"Herodotus," in Ancient Classics for English Readers, cloth, 10c., post., 4c.

Uncle Tom's Cabin—5 cts.

Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" complete, in—this type, cheap paper bound, for 5 cents, post-paid; the same in cloth, 10 cents, postage 7 cts.

A fine edition, in this type, excellent paper, printing and cloth binding, 25 cents, postage, 10 cents; or in half morocco, gilt top 40 cents, postage, 10c.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, $20.00

Now ready, large type, the last (9th) edition, over 20,500 pages, 10,000 illustrations and 200 maps. Specimen pages free. Don't be humbugged into buying any "slaughtered" edition, or into paying double price on "catch" installment schemes.

Great Handy Cyclopedias.

Alden's Cyclopedia of History, illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, etc., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price for the set, post-paid, 75c.

Alden's Cyclopedia of Natural History, profusely illustrated. In 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, etc., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price, post-paid, 75c.

10 Cents will secure by mail, post-paid, a specimen manilla volume, 193 pages, of either Cyclopedia, by which you can judge of the character of the remainder of the work.

Wonderful books in the amount of the most interesting and valuable knowledge given for a little money. Their equivalent cannot be had elsewhere under ten times the cost.

In the Cyclopedia of History you have ancient history back to B.C. 5004, and modern history down to 1892. Every nation of the earth, (except the United States which is to form an independent volume), is treated in its alphabetical order and described in its physical aspects as well as historically, so you have the equivalent of a book of travels round the world.

In the Natural History you have the most complete, popular, and at the same time thoroughly scientific, work ever compiled for general use. Nearly every beast, bird, or other creature, in earth, air or water, living or extinct, known to science, is described, and thousands of them are illustrated.

Oxford Teachers' Bibles.

With References, Concordance and Helps. Size, closed, 8 1/2 by 7 1/4 inches, by 1 1/2 inches thick. 1,320 pages, besides maps. We bind in two styles: Limp black silk cloth, red edges, 90c.; French Seal, Divinity Circuit, round corners, gilt edges, $1.80, postage, 10c.

Size of type shown by these lines. Beyond comparison the cheapest Bibles sold, and always found satisfactory. Circular describing finer and higher priced Bibles sent free.

Wings.

BY JOSEPH A. TORREY.
I.

The happy bird that sits and sings
Upon the bough that sways and swings,
Fears not though bough should bend or break,
For she hath wings.

II.

O timid soul, that, fluttering, clings
To earth's frail unsubstantial things,
Take heart of grace, thy fears forsake;
The soul hath wings!

—Golden Rule.

From the Independent.

The following notice has been very much delayed: Married, June 21, 1893, at the residence of the bride's parents in Wake Co., N. C., by Rev. J. L. Foster, Miss Almira Johnson and Geo. M. McCullers. A large circle of friends of the happy couple wish them a young and useful life.

It is not to any important extent a contraction of money in the country which has caused the present scarcity of the circulating medium. The amount of money coined and issued in the country at present is $2,120,281,093; the circulation per capita being $23.86. A year ago the amount was $2,219,719,198, with $24.47 circulation per capita. Gold exports are the chief cause of the small decrease shown, the aggregate decrease in gold coin and gold certificates being over $53,000,000. The Treasury's holdings of coin and currency are $75,500,000 less than a year ago; but the silver bullion held as the result of the silver-purchase law is $41,500,000 greater.

Superintendent Draper, of the Cleveland public school system, who was formerly State Superintendent of Public Instruction of New York, has in operation in the Forest City a substitute for examinations for promotion. The teachers of the various grades are instructed to give each pupil his rank monthly, indicating it by the initial letters of the words "admirable," "excellent," "good," "fair," or "poor." This represents the teacher's best judgment as to the merits of the pupil. The system has been in operation a year, and Mr. Draper is confident that it has points of superiority over the old system. Over a thousand pupils were promoted last year according to this system, which, of course, puts increased responsibility upon the teacher.

The failures of banks recently resulting from apprehension excited by our silver dangers have been more numerous than is pleasant to contemplate. During June and July 99 National banks suspended, with an aggregate capital of $16,450,000.

This amount is extraordinarily large, compared with all past experience; the number of failures in these two months alone being 53 per cent of all the failures of National bank since 1864. In the panic of 1873 only seven National Banks suspended in the entire country, and the figures above take no account of the suspensions of State and private banks and trust companies of which no record is at present available. What these banking troubles mean to commerce may be gathered from the fact that in July 1,733 trade failures occurred. Only 14 of the banks that suspended have resumed business. The Comptroller of the Currency is showing a wise leniency with all the banks, as he finds that the difficulty is not so much actual insolvency as it is lack of ready cash for making payments.

Financial stringency has influenced materially lower prices on nearly all the commercial exchanges. In the case of provisions, the drop in mess pork from $18 to $15 and in lard from $9.75 to $8.15 is explained by the Cudahy and other failures at Chicago and the enforced liquidation of speculative engagements, which cannot be considered as other than a favorable development in the general situation. Wheat was slightly lower at 68 cents, compared with 71.09 cents, which was the average daily price during the month of July. A year ago the average daily price in July was 84.80 cents. Iron is unchanged, at $14.50 for No. 1 foundry, Pennsylvania, and $8.25 for Alabama gray forge. Copper, at 10 cents for lake ingot, is 1 cent lower. Spot tin is 20 cents lower, and lead 5 cents lower. Cotton is 3-16c. lower for Midland uplands and coffee 3c. lower for No. 7 standard. Corn is 1/2c. higher, but oats 1c. lower. Dressed hogs declined from 8 1/2c to 7 3/4c. and tallow from 5 to 4 1/2 cents.

The laurels for high attainment in exploration no longer rest only with men. The first European to enter Tibet proper is Miss Annie R Taylor, of England. Several years ago, when still quite a young girl, she was seized with a desire to go to Tibet as a missionary, and communicated with the China Inland Mission. Delays, however, occurred, and being independent of pecuniary help, she went straight off to China, learned the language and went to a town on the Tibetan frontier, where no English person had lived before. From there she went to the city of Darjeeling on the Indian frontier, in order to learn the language as spoken on that side. She then returned to her first residence in order to slip into the country at the first opportunity. This came when the wife of a man with whom she had made acquaintance, and who was a native of the capital, wanted to visit her home. By offering to pay the expenses of the company Miss Taylor was allowed to accompany the woman and her husband. The husband, however, robbed her, and more than once she would have been murdered but for the devotion of her Tibetan servant Ponso. To add to her trouble they fell in with brigands, her men died of lung diseases, her horses were nearly starved, and her own food cut short. On reaching the vicinity of the capital she was betrayed by the husband, was seized by soldiers and sent out of the country. On the journey she met the Golochs, the most ungovernable tribe of brigands. The Queen, however, happened to take a fancy to Miss Taylor, and she secured her safety.

Neither precocity nor dullness is a certain index of the future of a boy. Only a wise man can tell the difference between the priggishness of conceit and the display of unusual talent, and it takes a superlatively wise man to devise right methods of exciting temperaments that are dull, or, on the other hand, to guide a genius. Abnormal brilliancy and abnormal slowness are usually the result of abnormal physical conditions, and physiologists are only just beginning to show to ordinary parents how these unusual conditions may be discovered and treated. When we see a man we cannot tell what sort of a boy he came from, and when we see a boy we cannot tell what sort of a man he will make.—President D. C. Gilman.

Christ Revealing The Father.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE.

No man hath seen God at any time: the Only Begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him. John 1:18.

Men in all ages and in all climes have been conscious of the existence of a Supreme Being. This conviction came from the intelligence and wisdom manifest in the material universe, and the inner consciousness of man. The thoughtful serious minded among the heathen saw clearly the evidence of creative wisdom, love, and power in all nature; and there was an abiding conviction in the inner consciousness of accountability to a power above man. This created an earnest desire to learn all that it is possible about this Supreme Being, and no question has awakened so much serious and earnest thought as this. The design that he had in creating man and placing him among his works, was that he should contemplate his works and wisdom, and thus come to a knowledge of his existence and character. Paul states this fact in clear and strong language in his sermon on Mars hill in Athens.

"And hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."

God is a Spirit, infinite in his bearing, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. This God no man has ever seen, because he is a spirit, and you cannot see spirits with the natural eye. When Christ appeared to his disciples after his resurrection they could not believe their eyes, for they took him to be a spirit; but he replied, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Spiritual beings are real organizations with all the powers of mind and heart, but are not visible to the senses of seeing and feeling. This is why no man hath ever seen God, and it is this intangibility and invisibility that many give as a reason why they cannot believe him. But if men would only think far enough—and they don't have to think very far—they would learn that a spirit is more enduring and better calculated to establish a hope as a sure foundation than material things are, and since intangibility and invisibility are essential elements of a spirit, we must not reject spiritual things merely because we cannot see or touch them. There are many things that we prize that are invisible to the natural senses. Mother's love. I have seen its manifestation in words, deeds, and especially in looks. I have felt that love within my own heart. It has been a redeeming power in my life, and moved me wonderfully along lines of duty and affliction. Love is a spiritual part of my mother's nature; words, acts, smiles are the visible manifestations of her being. Now the word, the gentle caress, the expressive smile, would be meaningless without the love that is enthroned behind these visible manifestations in the citadel of her soul. God is to the material universe what a mother's spiritual nature is to the physical organism, viz: The unseen and intangible power that lies back of matter, and gives expression to matter. God is a spirit and as such no human eye has ever looked upon his divine countenance or beheld his celestial form. And yet man is expected to believe in this unseen God, to worship this intangible deity and obey his divine commands. There must, therefore, be some way of discovering this unseen God in order to know him or else this belief and worship and these commands are absurd and unreasonable.

Where and how are we to know God? This has been a question of deep interest to man since the commencement of time. Jophar, one of Job's friends, said to him: "Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what can't thou do? deeper than hell, what can't thou know? The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea." It is a simple, but sublime truth, that God is higher than the heavens, and greater than all nature; for he created all things. "He hath made every thing beautiful in his time."

Materialists claim that natural religion answers this question, that God has revealed the invisibility and intangibility of his being in the material creation. That the laws and regulations of the solar and sidereal systems of the universe, the revolutions of the earth on its axis and in its orbit, the germination, development and maturing of animal and vegetable life according to well defined laws and in a well established order give evidence of the divine intelligence. That these things are a declaration of God in the outward world of his spiritual nature. That God does manifest his spiritual existence in the world around us no intelligent person can deny. Go where we may among the nations of the earth we will find that they have all obtained some knowledge of God. In some cases it is creed, but always as a spirit, to be represented in some material shape, either a stone image, a carved block, a living animal, a fetich or a charm. Such conceptions are exceedingly imperfect and inadequate to express any high conceptions of duty. Nature worship has never reflected any high idea of divine holiness, much less has it succeed in lifting man's soul up to higher planes of duty and pointing him to perfection.

I love and enjoy the study of God's works in nature. I behold the greatness of his power, the infinity of his wisdom in the starry heavens, and the wild grandeur of the vast ranges of the mountains that belt the earth. I see his love in the dew drops that sparkle like diamonds on the flowers of summer, and read his wisdom in his handiwork in all creation; and yet it is not here that I obtain my highest conceptions of God. It was not mere star-gazing and delving into the secrets of nature with purely natural powers that led David to exclaim, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge." By a calm philosophical study of nature, and cold logical reasoning a man may learn something of God and his infinite attributes; but there is no warmth in it, and it kindles no glow of love in the heart. It is not nature that unfolds the beauty and wisdom of God's love to man. It comes in another, clearer and more certain manner, even by his Word, and Spirit, and Son, he opens our spiritual vision, and thus enables us better to see him in nature, and interpret his divinity there. It is "the pure in heart" that "see God" in all his beauty, loveliness, and glory. It was the quickening of his spiritual vision that enabled David to behold all he did in nature.

There are those who tell us that they would rather study God in nature than in the Bible. These people have either inadequately understood the scope and purpose of the Bible or they shut their eyes to the unfathomable mysterious of nature, which are as deep if not deeper than the greatest mysteries of the Scriptures. There are profound mysteries in nature that we cannot solve, yet men reject the Bible and prefer the teachings of nature because there are unsolved questions connected with it. Is this consistent with sound reason?

Have those who search for God only in nature ever developed any noble and elevating ideas of his nature, attributes, and character? What is the testimony of history on this question? It shows us that the wisest of men have never been able to understand the nature and character of the living God from the light of nature alone. Simonides, a heathen poet, being asked by Heiro, king of Syracuse, what is God? desired a day to think upon. At its end, he desired two. Thus he continued to double the number of days before he could give an answer. The king asked what he meant by this conduct. The poet replied, "The more I think of God, he is still the more unknown to me." This is where the light of nature leaves a man, and those who have thus searched for God have represented him in all kinds of grotesque forms, as vengeful, wrathful, a power to be dreaded. In their very ceremonies practicing all kind of vice and crimes without compunction, in the belief that they were doing service to deity. To illustrate. When missionaries first landed on the Island of Tauna, in the South Pacific, they found the Taunese worshippers of idols even holding one day out of seven with special regard.

They had their fetiches, their superstitious rites and ceremonies. Still their conception of deity was vengefulness. Their worship was with the thought of warding off the wrath of their of their gods. Besides their own lives were immortal; crime was a constant practice. If a chief died his wives were strangled to death so that their chief might enjoy their companionship in the other world.

Among the three hundred millions of the gods of India, effecting the character of their worshippers, there is not one which represents virtue, not one which is not a monster of iniquity. Brahma is reckoned to bad too be worshipped; and the gods, by consent, determined that he should not. The prevailing characteristics of Shiva are revenge and malignity; the character of Krishna is notoriously that of a profligate; the god Juggernaut is represented by an idol without legs or arms, because the legs and arms of the god were cut off by a sentence of the gods for his incurable iniquity. Such are the gods given for our worship and trust by those philosophers who reject the Bible and are guided only by the light of nature. Paul says, "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things."

Did you ever see a genuine, noble true-minded, tender-hearted virtuous man become so by mere nature study?

"Did the Mosaic law or Puritanism ever exhibit such a hideous offspring of bigotry as is disclosed in the pure, unadulterated naturalism of barbarous races? You who love your homes, who believe in monogamy, that a single wife is more conducive to peace and virtue than a dozen. Did this conception of the martial vows come from the study of nature or is it the product of the noble virtue inculcated by Christianity? You who love political freedom and civil liberty. Did the student of nature proclaim this to man? Is it not rather the unfolding of those eternal truths of God through Christ and His word. Does such freedom find its largest exemplification and completest development where tribal chiefs rule with an iron hand among their clans and dwell in daily feuds with neighboring tribes? Friends, let us be honest here! Let us be willing to grant that as a blind man cannot see the beauty of the sky and hills and flowers till the film has been removed from before his eyes, so man cannot see the power, the majesty, the beauty the son of deity in nature, till the dark film of unbelief, ignorance, selfishness, and sin has been removed by gospel light through the power of the Divine Spirit.

Our text throws a flood of light on this entire question.

The Only Begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father He hath declared Him.' In these words is embodied the fundamental claim of Christianity, viz.: In Jesus Christ there is presented to the race completest and fullest manifestation of God. In nature unaided by spiritual truth man gets but crude ideas of God, thoughts calculated to inspire dread and fear, but in Jesus Christ we catch such visions of God's being as warms our love, and devotion to Him."

God's creative wisdom power and love are revealed to some extent in the material universe, but the clearest and fullest manifestation of him is in Christ. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father.) full of grace and truth." "And no man knoweth the Son; but the Father neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." To his Son God made known his purposes and his tender regard for all his children, and commissioned him to make it known to them. "He hath declared him. "He hath communicated his character and purposes; for he made known what the Father instructed him to teach. He said, "my doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." He exemplified the purity, tenderness, and benevolence of God in his own life. His teaching, life, and actions toward men were a revelation of God's thoughts, feelings, and purposes. Hence he could say, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."

Christ was the incarnation of love: love is sacrifice, —to give rather than to receive, —the blessedness of self-giving. The whole life of Christ was the sacrifice of self. "As gave himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God. "In this he reveals the Father as sacrificing of self for his children. That which seeks to enjoy all instead of giving all is not love, and "God is love." The life of God is a flow of divine self giving charity. This is revealed in Christ.

Moral Law in the Secular World.

REV. W. F. TILLET, D. D.

The business failures of the past few months have revealed in many instances a deplorable absence of moral law in the secular world. While many of these failures have been honest, some of them have been so thoroughly dishonest as to startle us with the utter depravity that may co-exist with a reputation for integrity and a profession of piety.

The city of Nashville has been shocked during the last few months by a series of failures, mostly of barks nearly every one of which can be traced to the dishonesty of officers in whom implicit confidence was reposed. Generally these hypocrites have been members of some Christian Church. The public have come to feel that they do not know whom to trust. When the Methodist steward and the Presbyterian elder have defrauded those who trusted them—the one of half million and the other of a million dollars—we may well exclaim, Who then can be trusted? The man who stole a million of dollars was, of course arrested; but one would suppose from the ovation which he received that he had done something heroic. The ladies sent in flowers all day long (in part through sympathy for his wife, it is true), and gentlemen friends extended their sympathy to him in his "misfortune." He had no trouble in giving bond and going free. Many able and leading lawyers are retained to defend this "moneyless" man, and they will have the case postponed and postponed until the indignation of the public has subsided. In the meantime, he "answers no questions, by advice of counsel." He will then be tried, and if perchance sent to the penitentiary, he will, doubtless, in due time be pardoned by petition. The poor negro who stole a few chickens or a ham or a pair of pants must go to the penitentiary and serve his term out, and not look for mercy or mitigation of his sentence. The penitentiary forsooth was made for such as he, not for "gentlemen" living in fine houses, well connected in the community, who have made a "respectable" steal of a half million, less or more.

But though these criminals seem to escape the quick and just condemnation which the enormity of their crimes merits, it is not all sunshine within to them. Sin is its own punisher, and the wages of sin is death. One, finding out that his sin can no longer be concealed, and that he is hopelessly gone, commits suicide. Another dies of brain fever within five days after his theft is made public. A third, though his room is filled with flowers, twice endeavors to take morphine and end his miserable existence. A fourth, seeing what is coming, goes off to a distant sanitarium when the crash comes and "hides out" where he can watch and see what turn the storm of public indignation will take. The first failure precipitates another, and that another until four failures have followed in quick succession, with evidences of fraud and dishonesty at the bottom of all of them. A Methodist pastor had put the savings of years—a thousand dollars—in the stock of a National Bank considered thoroughly safe. He wakes up and reads in the morning paper that the cashier has stolen the money, and the bank is hopelessly gone. He not only loses his stock, but, by the law regulating National Banks, an equal additional amount which he with others, must raise to make good all deposits. A hard-working farmer had put all the slow earnings of years in the stock of the bank, and he, too, not only loses all his stock, but must sell his farm to make good the additional amount for which he is responsible. In like manner, a good Methodist lady who invested her little patrimony in the stock of that bank because she had implicit confidence in the cashier, has her house now advertised for sale to make good an amount equal to her stock. And thus it is that one man by his unholy desire to make a fortune for himself out of other people's money, brings poverty and want, it may be, to a hundred homes.

Most of these failures can be traced to the passion for speculation—the desire to make money more rapidly than can be done by ordinary methods, and to accumulate larger fortunes than can be made from the ordinary and honest profit of legitimate business. The speculation fever, when it takes possession of a man, seems to become a disease, a frenzy, a mania, a delirium—it seems to sweep a man away by an irresistible force—it blunts his moral sense as to right and wrong when it concerns his use of other people's money. Few defaulters ever start out with the deliberate intention of taking permanently that which is not their own; they mean simply to use for a short time and then restore it, arguing that they can thus make something for themselves, and do others no harm in the end, and perhaps never be discovered. But, having once started upon such a line of conduct, they are almost certain to continue. For if their first effort in speculation fails, they try it again—surely they cannot fail a second and a third time, they argue. If their first effort is crowned with success, they can surely count on success again. So they argue, and thus are they drawn on, until at length they are overwhelmed, and are beyond the possibility of redeeming their good name and fortune. The temptation to do this thing is temptation to sin. It is wrong—it is a sin—and the Christian religion is meant to deliver man from this temptation and sin just as much as from lying and drunkenness and profanity. Nor should the fact that many forms of legitimate business have elements of uncertainty and fluctuation in them lead us to obliterate the distinction between those lawful kinds of business that depend upon labor and reasonable increase for their profits, and others, such as gambling, dealing in futures and the like, which are illegitimate and immoral. The one class are lawful and right, the other are incapable of defense. But even a lawful business may be conducted in a manner utterly devoid of conscience and regardless of the obligations of the moral law. But these failures are not without their good effects. They purify the business world. They reveal fraud, it is true, but they also check fraud, bringing to light corruption that exists, and preventing further theft and dishonesty. They cause a closer scrutiny of all officers in positions of trust and responsibility, and secure fidelity and safety in business for the future. Hence periods of unusual fraud and failure in the business world are invariably followed by some years of prosperity, success and satisfaction.

One of the problems of Christianity in our day is to get men to guide their conduct as much by religion and conscience when their individuality is lost in corporate and collective bodies, as when they are acting as individuals and for themselves alone. That "corporations have no conscience," is a proverb that gives expression to his truth. Many a man who act conscientiously and feels his moral responsibility when acting as an individual, seems to lose, in part, at least, the sense of moral responsibility when he becomes a Congressman or a member of the Legislature or of a City Council or a Director in a Railroad, or, forsooth, a Manager of the World's Fair at Chicago. Said that the New York Board of Trade would expel instanter individuality belonging to it who should act in his own business as dishonestly and shamefully as did the managers of the Chicago Exposition in receiving money from the Government with the distinct understanding and agreement that the gates of the Exposition should be closed on Sunday, and then as soon as they secured the money (or a large part of it, at least) go back on their contract, and order the Exposition open on Sunday. And the heinousness of this sin, the shamefacedness of this dishonesty, is made all the worse by the fact that the Exposition would be closed before the courts could compel them to keep their contract and fulfill the conditions upon which they received the money. Perhaps, few, if any of the individuals composing this Board of Managers would have dared attempt any such dishonesty in conducting their own private business.

There, again, are the "Trust" and the "strike" combinations, in which the conscience of the individual seems lost in the aggregate of which he is a part. What is most needed in the great battle that is being waged between capital and labor, is to bring about a reign of moral law in those organizations of rich men known as "Trust" and those combinations of wage-earners and laboring people which sometimes enter into a "strike." There are many rich men who, as individuals, are full of consideration and sympathy for the working classes and burn with indignation at the tale of a rich Irish landlord oppressing the poor whom he has in his power, and yet these same rich men, entering into corporations and trusts, will often oppress the poor quite as unmercifully by combining to make themselves richer at the expense of those who are already poor. Here, for example, is a wealthy manufacturing corporation that supplies a commodity which is purchased almost exclusively by the poor and working classes, and is to them one of the necessities of life. By entering into a trust, it is suggested, they may increase their profits at the expense of the consumers. Shall they do so? What saith the moral law? Has their business proved a success, and is it yielding a fair and reasonable profit at present prices and with good prospects for safety and permanence as to the future? If these questions be answered affirmatively, then it would seem that the moral law, which must have consideration for the poor, would say the trust combination is wrong. I believe that the State and Government should use every legitimate means to suppress those combinations of wealth and capital which are designed not to give necessary protection to a useful industry, but to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. Nor should any more forbearance be exercised towards those organizations of working people, who, unwilling to work for the wages offered, enter upon a strike and resort to violence to keep other poor people from accepting these wages and doing the work when they desire to do so. Laboring people have the sympathy of the great majority of mankind when they are underpaid and are making an honest effort to secure reasonable and just compensation for their labor; but they lose this sympathy entirely when they resort to violence to secure what they consider their rights or try to prevent other poor people from working at the wages they will not accept themselves. What is needed is, that the moral law shall be supreme in these organizations whether of the rich or the poor. Thus alone can justice be secured to all.

If Christianity is ever to save the world, it must permeate society, and moral law must dominate the industrial and business world. The Christian man, who is an honor to the Church and a blessing to the world, is he who takes his religion into his business, and who votes as he prays, whether that vote be cast at the polls, or in Congress, the State Legislature, the City Council, the Board of Directors or the Stockholders' meeting. The rich man who, in endeavoring to increase his wealth, forgets not the moral rights of the poor, and the poor man who, in seeking just remuneration for his labor, forgets not the rights of the rich and of other poor not of his own order—these alone can truly claim to be guided by the principles of the Christian religion. Not professing Christians merely, not Church members merely, but Christian citizens, Christian men of business, Christian officers and representatives of the people, Christians who are guided by the high principles of the religion of Christ and who make the claims of the moral law supreme everywhere and in all things—these the Church needs, that they may shine as lights in the commercial world, and by their unswerving fidelity give solidity, permanence and confidence to the economical and civil institutions of our Christian Civilization.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Some Men's Wives.

It was a man of most astute intelligence who said, "As a rule it is safe to say every public man of prominence owes his position largely, perhaps chiefly, to his wife. There are exceptions, of course, which occur to every one, but this is the rule." And this man is generous enough to believe, and gallant enough to say, that Martha Washington is as worthy of a monument as the immortal George or his mother. Woman is beginning to realize that there is no gift or grace of mind or manner, no logic in the realm of philosophy, no language dead or living, no data known to the savants, which may not be of service to her in the fulfilment of her simple wifely duty to the man of her choice. To the influence, the wealth, and neverfailing interest of his wife, the great premier who made the Queen of England Empress of India acknowledged that his political success was largely due; and an impertinent questioner who asked him "What feeling could bind him to a wife older than himself?" was answered by Mr. Disraeli with, "A feeling unknown to your nature—that of gratitude." Very easily disturbed was this great man by any diverting incident occurring before he delivered a speech in the House, and it is said that his wife, who always accompanied him when he spoke, rode the entire distance from her home to the House of Parliament with her fingers caught beneath the carriage window, rather than put to flight his carefully prepared period by telling him of the crushed and aching members. Very pleasant it is to read Gladstone's tribute to the wife who is the closest friend, the best adviser, and the severest critic of the Grand Old Man, where he says, "No words that I could use would ever suffice to express the debt I owe her in relation to all the offices she has discharged on my behalf, and on the behalf of those who are nearest and dearest to me; not only is she the dearest of companions, but the most devoted of helpmates, but for whose self-consecration to the service of her husband and her children my own public work must have been seriously fettered and hindered." Over all the domestic comfort of the household she exercises untiring watchfulness, feeling herself responsible to the nation, as well as to her own happiness, to preserve the health and prolong the life of the famous statesman. A bright, entertaining conversationalist, it is in her cheery companionship that he seeks rest and forgetfulness from cares of state. Whenever he makes a great speech she is present to share his triumph, and when the speech is over she it is who wraps him in warm garments and brings him hot tea, in loving, wifely ministrations, which has never failed since the then beautiful Catherine Glynne, more than fifty years ago, joined hands with his at the altar.

And Mme. Carnot, wife of the French president, who acts as secretary to her husband, has the care of his private correspondence, and during his absence takes his place and transacts all current affairs with a perfect knowledge of business routine. In addition to this she deputes to no one the care of overlooking the menus for her household, designating the apartments to be occupied by her guests, and the general supervision of all domestic details.

There is the patient and amiable Countess Tolstoi, who has acted as amanuensis to her erratic and gifted husband in all these years, copied and re-copied his manuscripts, brought up a large family of children, and lost neither her reason nor her good humor. She declares without contradiction in the presence of her husband that he changes his social views every two years, and that one of his disciples has made himself an idiot following Tolstoi's teachings.

It was Philip Gilbert Hamerton who wrote, in "The Intellectual Life," of his wife. "We have shared together many hours of study, and you have been willing, at the cost of much patient labor, to cheer the difficult paths of intellectual toil by the unfailing sweetness of your companionship. The subtle influence of your finer taste and more delicate perception is ever like some penetrating perfume in the whole atmosphere around me."

And of Lowell's wife Edward Everett Hale has written, "He would have said himself that her enthusiasm for every social reform, including her alliance with the unpopular abolitionists and her sympathy with every form of human suffering, were at every step of his young life encouragement and stimulus to him in all he said and did."

And every good man who rejoices in the possession of a good wife, and isn't too conceited to acknowledge the truth, knows of a thousand ways in which his wife has been instrumental to his success, and one of the best investments he even made, ever if she has little ways of her own—if she makes him wait an half hour after he is all ready while she pins her veil and puts the last little dab of powder on her nose; even if she does get her dear feelings hurt over things she does not understand, and, when she gets over it, insists on forgiving him for something he knows he hasn't done; even if she does think that the Declaration of Independence puts her in possession of all the top drawers and more than half of the closet hooks, and the right to make him wheel the baby cart and carry knobby bundles that she has done up herself and fastened with a pin.—New York Sun.

Washington Letter.

Once a missionary always a missionary. I heard an aged minister who has devoted the greater portion of a long life to missionary work abroad use those words many years ago and they were recalled to mind by the announcement that Rev. Theodore S. Wynkoop, who has been pastor of a Washington church for something like fifteen years, had resigned to accept the secretaryship of the North India Bible Society, with headquarters at Allahbad, India. Mr. Wynkoop was a missionary in India for several years before he came to Washington. Other cases have at various times come under my observation, of the return to missionary work by individuals after long intervals spent in other branches of Christian work, and sometimes in secular work, and I am about convinced that once a missionary always a missionary is almost, if not quite absolutely true. Add at heart and it becomes, I believe, an absolute truth.

The opponents of the liquor saloon, among our churches and temperance organizations, have adopted a new plan of battle which promises to produce better results than any of its numerous predecessors. Some time ago an anti-liquor league was organized, all opponents of the liquor traffic being invited to become members, and one of the principle objects of this league is to see that no liquor license shall be granted, except in compliance with the law, and in order to carry out that plan the league investigates through its own agents, one of whom is kept constantly on duty in the office where applications for license, particularly as to the location of the saloon and the identity and genuineness of the signatures on the application of the residents on the square upon which it is located. The result has already been astonishing, having made it plain that fraud has been used to obtain licenses in numerous instances. It has been deemed best that the results of the work of the league shall be kept secret until the beginning of the new license year, November 1, next, when the new liquor law, enacted by the last Congress, will in accordance with the decision of the local court go into effect. There are excellent grounds for the belief that facts already in the possession of the league will be amply sufficient to prevent the renewal of the licenses of a large number of rum-sellers now doing business, even with the officials disposed to always give the liquor men the benefit of any doubt that may arise. The league proposes to point out to the officials every application upon which there is a violation of law, and to demand that it be rejected, no matter what influence may be behind the man who makes it.

The largest Sunday school in Washington has 35 Chinese among its scholars, and on Monday last they gave a complimentary excursion and picnic to their teachers. The party went to the shore of Chesapeake Bay and those who accompanied them say the amusements introduced by those Chinese for the enjoyment of their teachers were unique and that the teachers were greatly pleased with everything except the music on Chinese instruments; they could not appreciate that.

While there is the widest possible divergence of opinion among Congressmen as to what financial legislation ought to be adopted by Congress, it is regarded as a hopeful sign that nearly all of them express the belief that an agreement will certainly be reached that will be approved by a majority, and which will be satisfactory to the country at large. What that agreement will be can only be guessed at just now, but the opinion appears to be gaining ground here that it will provide for the use of both gold and silver as money, slightly increasing the present ratio of 16 to 1, and many expect that authority for an issue of bonds, in the discretion of the President, will also be provided for. But the last is, in the opinion of your correspondent, very doubtful, because of the general prejudice, outside of strictly financial circles, against an increase in the public debt. The attempt will be made to confine the legislation of the extra session to finance, but the impression here is that it will not succeed.

Moody's Boys.

A few minutes after five in the gray dawn of a cloudy morning, the train left New London, on the Northern Road, the passenger-car half-full of patient travelers too early waked to be cheerful. No one was smiling, unless perhaps the heedless youths at the forward end. There were eight or ten of them who had come on in a body, probably from the steamboat. They turned over seats and settled themselves in a sociable boy fashion, stowing away their belongings overhead. They might have been returning from an excursion, or just starting on one. There was a little noise and clatter among them, a little fun that might become too rough by and by. So one of the lady passengers thought as she whispered plaintively, "I hope they won't keep that up all the way. My head aches already."

"They've probably been down to New York to celebrate Labor Day, and now they have to get home early to work," suggested one.

But what was this? Were they going to sing—those restless boys? One of them stepped out in the aisle and raised his voice, and of all words, what were these that broke upon the silence of the car:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word!
What more can He say than to you He has said—
You who to the Saviour for refuge have fled?"

The others joined in, but his voice led clear and strong, verse after verse, to the end.

At first there was a startled, troubled feeling on the part of some who heard it. They feared there might come an irreverent chorus, or a burst of laughter, or a change-off on some riotous song. But the boys sang the hymn straight through as if they enjoyed it.

"They know every word without any hymn-book," whispered the lady, whose head had stopped aching.

Another hymn followed, and another, and then the boys were laughing and joking again as only boys can; but there was not one jest that marred the effect of the hymn. Presently they sang two or three merry college songs.

"Now I know," said a passenger, "they are Amherst students. I've heard that they send out a good many clergymen from there."

One of the songs had a jocose chorus that rang on the word "sailor." Just as they came to that, one of the young men said hastily to the other: "There might be one on board!"

And he turned and glanced down the car, to see if there were any evident sailor there whose feelings might be hurt.

"That was kind in him," thought some of the observant passengers.

A little more laughter and raillery among them and then with bright, serious faces, they sang a hymn again.

It was interesting to see the effect on the passengers of these hymns. Nothing especial was said, but every face brightened; everybody was cheerful and accommodating; new passengers who came on from time to time cast off their strained, hurried looks; and it really seemed as if the conductor showed unusual kindness in explaining routes and changes.

At last Amherst was passed, and the young men had not left the train there.

"Now, where can they be going?" asked the passengers of one another.

On went the train. Presently a look of eagerness came into the faces of the party. They began to get down their gripsacks and umbrellas; they looked out of the windows; evidently they were nearing their destination.

"There's the new building!" exclaimed one.

A great, sweeping hill was in sight on the left, with green fields and trees, and among them a group of buildings.

"I know now," said a passenger softly. "We are almost at Northfield. They are some of Moody's boys."

They sang once more, and the chorus rang out among the weary, dusty travelers:

"This is my story, this is my song, Praising my Saviour all the day long."

And then they were off, bound for Northfield Farm. They were Moody's boys."—Mary L. B. Branch, in the S. S. Times.

Jones and Smith on Church Literature.

NUMBER 3.

How are you this morning, Bro. Jones? It is my pleasure to become a traveling agent for the CHRISTIAN SUN, and I thought I would come to you for information as to the best methods of working for the SUN, and learn how many copies are taken in your church.

Good morning, Bro. Smith, as to the information you want, I suppose I am as able to give as any one in the congregation. But I will tell you in the beginning, if it is your business here to get subscribers to the SUN, my advice to you is to leave as soon as possible. We think we are able to run our own business, and as for agents we have the most possible contempt for them. They are thronging our land. They have become a pest to us. Book agents, paper agents, apple tree agents and in fact agents for almost everything. It is said that a dog not long since had such a hatred against agents that he killed himself barking at agents passing along the streets. As to the number of subscribers to the SUN, I really think that no part of your business; that is the business of the pastor, and I think it really presumption in you.

Well, Bro. Jones, I meant no intrusion at all, but rather to aid you in the church work. I was under the impression that you were without a pastor, at least you so stated in a previous conversation. I am glad to know that you got him back. When did he return?

As to our pastor, he has not returned, but Deacon Patience acts as pastor for us. He is competent, and there is economy in it, as it does not cost any thing and he is mild and pleasant in all his work. Let any thing occur that will in the church, you would never hear it, as he would never say a word about it to anybody.

But my brother, you have not told the number of subscribers to the SUN. I want to get the SUN into every family in your church.

I am under no obligations to tell you how many subscribers we have. I don't think it is the business of anybody to be prying into the business of our local church. And as to getting it into every family in the church I will assure you, you will make a failure. That was one of the many faults we found in our pastor; at every appointment he would say, he wanted everybody to take the SUN, and we generally know when we want any thing, and do not want to be forced into things. We claim the right of private judgment and liberty of conscience in such matters. Deacon Patience never tries to force anything on us that we don't want.

I fear you are ashamed to give the number of subscribers to the SUN, it is so small. I think the zeal shown by your pastor in trying to circulate the SUN is very commendable. It was his duty as pastor to hold up the enterprises of the church, circulate the SUN, and place every means of information possible in the reach of all his people. The Bible teaches two classes of sins, commission and omission. I fear your seemingly good Deacon Patience is laying a bad example before you. He is committing the sins of commission and omission. It would have been well had the mantle of your zealous pastor fallen upon him or some one in your church.

It seems to me you are casting some reflections on our church. It seems that we differ in all our views on church work, and the general principle of religion, and the Bible says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another," and I do not think you have shown me any true brotherly love in all our conversations; but have shown a very rigid train of oppressive requirements. I love my brethren, and am not willing to expose them and if they should make a mistake, I don't think it is right to get upon the house top and sound a trumpet to all around in the community.

I did not intend to cast any reflections on all upon you. I have only been trying to hold up your duty as well as the duty of all the church. I believe in a high standard of religion. Higher than that of popularity. I am sure it is the truest evidence of brotherly love to help each other on in the way of righteousness, and as God does not look upon sin with any degree of allowance, I think it is Christlike to point out our mistakes in life; as, "Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Christ said, "If ye love me keep my commandments." My authority for reasoning with you is from the Bible. "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come, Felix trembled and answered, go thy way for this time, and at a more convenient season I will call for thee." My dear brother this is not the first time the truth has been evaded and effort made to shake off the true obligations to God, as one would lay his garments by to rest. Felix of old objected to the Bible standard of religion, and I am not surprised to hear of others where religious piety is not very deep, to object to the same. I believe the truest evidence of love is to show us our danger. The truest evidence of God's love to the world is in the plan of salvation and in fully warning us of the danger of disobedience. "God chastens whom he loves." I think it is the Bible plan to expose our sins, so we will forsake them, as we cannot carry sin into heaven. Brother, as I represent the SUN, please give me the number of subscribers.

(Concluded next week.)

Ivor, Va.

DEAR SUN:—I think I owe you an apology for not giving you an item more often from this section of our conference. The cause of the church is moving on nicely, this way, though perhaps not as rapidly as in some other sections. For the last number of years we have had only one minister in a territory that needed at least two. I think some of us make a mistake in our love for the cause, when we undertake more than one man's work. A small field, well cultivated is best. I would be glad if our young men would think along that line, as they enter the Master's vineyard.

Rev. W. J. Laine is at home on vacation and is instructing a class in vocal music at Burton's Grove and Barretts Neck. He has preached two excellent sermons in my field. Bro. J. W. Rawls preached at the Ivor Christian church last Sunday and at Waverly at night. I heard only the morning discourse, which was excellent. Last Sunday morning Dr. Herndon preached for Rev. J. W. Barret, at Barretts church and at night he preached at the Ivor Christian church. His sermon was good and well delivered. Rev. J. W. Barrett was present and took a part in the exercises. We expect to begin a revival meeting at Burton's Grove 5th Sunday, one at Waverly 1st Sunday and one at Spring Hill 2nd Sunday, which gives me three weeks, consecutively in revival work. The brethren in the ministry are cordially invited to assist in these meetings. Bro. C. M. Pond of Spring Hill church, who has been a great sufferer for many months, and several times at death's door was slightly better when I heard from him last. He is enjoying the presence of the Lord and possesses a sweet spirit of humble submission to the will of God. Let the prayers of the church be continued for him.

Sister C. C. Richardson, one of Spring Hill's most devout lady workers is again confined to her room and is in very feeble health. She is greatly missed at her church. May the Lord bless the dear sick ones. Bro. R. T. West and family are greatly missed at Spring Hill since moving to Waverly, but are of much usefulness at the Waverly church. The churches at Ivor and Waverly have each held an entertainment recently with nice success.

Very truly yours,
July 26, 1893. M. W. BUTLER.

LATER:—We are now in the midst of our meeting at Burton's Grove. Bro. W. J. Laine is assisting us and is preaching some good sermons. This is his home church, and here he enjoys the confidence and high esteem of the community.

Yesterday afternoon we had a good service, eight professing conversions. Today the rain is coming in such copious shows as to keep us at home. Bro. C. M. Pond referred to above is able again to get out on crutches. Rev. R. Charnock of Berkeley, Va., will assist me next week at Waverly and Rev. Dr. Barrett of Norfolk will assist me at Spring Hill the following week.

M. W. B.

Aug. 3, 1893.

Our meeting at Burton's Grove closed yesterday. The Lord graciously blessed the church with the presence of His spirit. The church is greatly revived and strengthened spiritually. Fourteen professed faith in Christ and eleven united with the church; Next 3rd. Sunday I will administer the ordinance of baptism to there. I leave this p. m. for Waverly where I begin a revival meeting tomorrow. Rev. W. J. Laine who assisted me at Burton's Grove has returned to N. C. to conduct meetings in his own field, but will return soon to finish with his classes in vocal music.

Fraternally,
M. W. BUTLER.

The Deep River S. S. Convention

The session of the Deep River Sunday school convention which was held at Antioch, Randolph Co., N. C., July 28-30, was not very largely attended but the whole convention was pleasant, lively and interesting.

Bro. L. E. Brady was elected president, Rev. H. A. Albright still holds his office as secretary and was elected treasurer. Not more than half of the schools in the conference were represented, and the majority of those represented were schools that ran all the year. These as a rule are the primary supports of the convention while the schools that run only a part of the time are secondary in the support of the convention. Whenever you hear the report from an evergreen Sunday school you may count on the home mission money being paid by that school. And I will throw in a parenthesis right here to those schools that are delinquent in the payment of the home mission fund.

(Resolved: "That each school shall pay not less than 50c every year for the support of home missions.") This is a resolution passed by your convention a year ago at Patterson's Grove. Are you going to ignore the action of the convention by wilfully neglecting to pay even so small a sum as 50 cts. for home missions? Some one may say; "I did not know our school was expected to pay 50 cents for home missions." To such, I would say, why didn't you have your delegates to tell the school when they returned what was done in the convention at Patterson's Grove?

Will you not raise the money at once and send it to Rev. H. A. Albright, treasurer, Moffitt's Mills, N. C.? If you have stopped your school raise it among those who did attend while the school was running and send it with a full report of your school to the treasurer so that it may be included in the minutes of the convention. I am sure that no Sunday school worker that wants to see the convention prosper will pass this by without an effort to make amends for the carelessness of his school.

Nearly all the subjects in the program were well discussed. It seems that the convention has done its part pretty well. Now, the result of the good methods and suggestions of the convention is with the delegates. If they fail to carry them into their respective schools, the work of the convention will never be felt by the individual schools. Some delegates seem to think that all they have to do is to carry an envelope containing the report of their school up to the convention.

It appears that some of the ministers have too low an estimate of Sunday school work. They prefer going on a pleasure trip or devoting their time to some secular pursuit to attending the Sunday school convention. Does not indifference on the part of a minister in Sunday school work, which is the greatest auxiliary to his church work, weaken his influence in his church work?

The following brethren constitute the Executive committee; Revs. J. S. Lawrence, W. W. Hayworth, and Bro. C. H. Welch.

It is believed that Bro. L. E. Brady will make an excellent President. He is a zealous Sunday school worker and has been identified with it for many years. The success of the convention depends largely upon the officers and we trust that no officer will fail to do his part during the year.
W. P. LAWRENCE.

Is the University Worthy of the State.

ITS MORAL AND RELIGIOUS CONDITION.

The Committee of the Board of Trustees appointed by the Governor to inspect the University, made a full and detailed report at commencement. We print a few extracts which will inform the people of the condition and management of their chief institution of learning.

GENERAL CONDITION.

Your committee as a body, and individually, were very favorably impressed with the high moral and religious tone of the University, as it applies to both the faculty and the students. We were informed that the students regularly attend some of the church services of the several Christian denominations having churches in Chapel Hill. The orderly decorum, the gentlemanly bearing, and the quiet of the students at the chapel service and prayers were very marked, and the members of the committee were highly pleased and gratified. The young men listened attentively to the reading of the scriptures, and engaged heartily in the service of song. The morning prayers we attended impressed us as solemnly as would a family worship before the duties of the day began. It was a company of joyous, hopeful, happy young men. Your chairman, by invitation of the young men, attended the worship of the Young Men's Christian Association, and by their request made a short talk after reading some selections from the Scriptures and prayers. He was encouraged and strengthened by the service, and went away grateful for the privilege, and with the prayer in his heart, "God bless the young men in this institution, and turn the feet of many through their influence to obedience to His statutes. And God bless the University, and multiply its power for good."

QUALITY OF INSTRUCTION

The quality of the instruction given is in keeping with the character and quality of the men in charge of the departments and their scholarship and ability. No one doubts this who knows the standard claimed for it by the management of the University. The standard of the work is best judged by the bright and aspiring young men of the high grade institution. These are the best measures of college class work. Such young men desire the advantages of the best work. When it fails to come up to the standard of the best, they are the first to find its defects and to demand its improvement. Such young men are not easily deceived; and woe betide the professor who fails to reach their standard of demand. From these, and their attitude towards the professors here, largely, your committee conclude that the work is well and efficiently done.

HEALTH.

We inquired about the health of students, and received the reply that not a member of the faculty nor of student body was sick during our visit; that no professor had been sick during the year, and only one student had been seriously sick, and that he came in September, having contracted sickness elsewhere. He returned to his home and died there in October. The testimony was that the village was unusually healthy.

RELATIONS OF OFFICERS AND TEACHERS.

After careful inquiry we concluded that the relations of the faculty to each other, and to the President, were most cordial and kind. Not a jar, but peace and the kindness of friendship pervaded the entire faculty. All were working together harmoniously for the common purpose of serving together the best interests of higher education; and all were striving in generous rivalry to serve the University and the State to the very best ability of each. The faculty were unitedly following the leadership of our worthy President, and aiding him in every way possible in the administration of the affairs of the University. They united in testifying to his wisdom, prudence, firmness, zeal and high executive ability.

We found the very best state of feeling between students and the faculty, the faculty striving to be helpful to the students, and the students rendering much aid to the faculty in the general management of the University, and taking a great pride in making a good name for the institution. The faculty bore warm testimony to this, and expressed grateful appreciation therefore to the committee.

NON-POLITICAL AND NON-DENOMINATIONAL.

The management of the University, we fully believe, from our investigations, to be free from political and denominational bias. We have seen no evidence of any such bias in either directions. The students are from families of every shade of politics and religion. We heard not a word of discord or unpleasantness on either score. We do not believe anything of the kind has any existence here. There is a bias for religion, the religion of our Bible, the Christian religion. Why should it not be so biased? Our civilization is a Christian civilization. Our school system is a Christian civilization. Our constitution, which is a religious constitution, declares that "religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." Does anyone suppose that any other religion than that of our own Bible, or that any morality except that of which our Bible is the best teacher, was in the minds of the men who framed this constitution? Under this constitution, and by its command, we have our public school system; under this constitution, and by its command, this University was founded.

Let it be religious! It must be religious. There is a common ground for the common good, broad enough for us all to stand on as Christian men and citizens of a Christian State. Denominational bias should have no place here, either in the faculty or in the board of trustees. We believe it has no place. It becomes us to see to it that it has no place.

THE STATE NEEDS THE UNIVERSITY AND THE UNIVERSITY IS WORTHY OF THE STATE.

We believe that the University is worthy of our highest efforts to maintain it and to broaden its influence, and to send out its light to bless the State in blessing its young men and broadening them for service. The State needs the University. The University is worthy of the State. Let us keep it so. As our educational horizon expands with the advance of these wonderful times let us enlarge the center light that its rays may touch the remotest points and bring hope and joy to the men are to come after us

Elon College Notes.

As the notes have been neglected awhile for some cause, I thought I would let old students and others interested know something of us left here yet. We often think of our associates and their pleasant intercourse with us and we feel glad to know the time is not far distant when the most of us will meet again.

I think it is the duty of each one of the old students to make themselves very active for the College; and it seems like it would be a small task for each one to bring a new student back.

We have several denominations among our students and they all seem equally interested.

It does seem that, if we love the cause we profess, we would not answer a question about Elon College by saying, "I know of a good school too." Certainly you know of many good schools besides Elon College; yet when we claim to be a friend and lover of our denomination and enterprises, should we not patronize our own Elon College, since it is as good as the best and cheap as consistent. Turn to last week and read Prof.

Atkinson's piece in the SUN and week before to Dr. Long's, you all should read them—so full of sound logic.

Rev. M. L. Hurley is in town. He came to look after his building which will be one of the handsomest in Elon College. He preached at Shallow Ford Sunday.

Rev. W. J. Laine is again with us. He is protracting his meetings at Shallow Ford this week.

Prof. Holleman starts to the World's Fair next Tuesday (7th) morning. H. T. Simpson will likely go with him. We all wish for Prof. and Harrison a pleasant and profitable trip.

Profs. Newman and Atkinson are still in Eastern Va. in interest of Elon College and, we are gratified to hear, meeting with success.

Dr. Long is in and about Greensboro and along C. F. & Y. V. Railroad at work.

With such untiring workers how can the prospects for students be anything but bright?

Our charming young ladies gave an ice cream supper at the College last Friday evening. All were invited, old and young; and they all came I think. A few visitors were present, and till 11 o'clock everybody was in high social enjoyment and ate as much ice cream, cake, melons, grapes, etc., as they wanted—free. Never was such a charming lot of young ladies as we have at Elon College—vacation or not.

The writer was at Union at the Sunday school convention. People seem to like to go there, I suppose because they find such congenial society and are treated so well.

The post office is now in Mr. Boor's store and Mr. Boone is our congenial Postmaster.

Greetings.

DEAR BROTHER EDITORS:—We beg to submit a few lines to our church organ. This is the first attempt we ever made to correspond with our brethren through this medium. Brother editor and brethren, pardon our mistakes. Pray for our success in the future. Come to our relief brethren, we have enjoyed a glorious session in the District Meeting held at O'Kelly's Chapel. We were made to realize that this is a branch of our conference work, and our determination strengthened to a more faithful discharge of duty in the future. As was stated in the SUN, the District meeting at O'Kelly's was called; and hence, but few ministers and delegates attended. It was the intention of the president, Rev. J. A. Jones, to carry the meeting to O'Kelly's the fifth Sunday in October. The announcement will be made in due time. A. P. BARBER.

Brethren, we are painfully aware that times are not the best, and we have been very easy on you that are in arrears, but our creditors are pushing us, so we kindly ask all who are owing us on subscription to please remit at the very first opportunity you can make to do so.

The New York Independent, independent in all things, is among the very best of our religious exchanges and while it seemed to be as good as could be expected the enterprising editors are making it better as the weeks go by. Last week's issue was a fine one indeed. The subscription price is $3.00 per year.

Rev W. W. Staley, D. D., left for his home in Franklinton, N C., last Tuesday. Next week he will visit the World's Columbian Exposition, where he will spend some time viewing the many sights. The young ladies and little girls of his flock by their efforts raised a purse of $50 to defray his expenses at the Fair and the boys of his Sunday-school collected a sum sufficient to purchase his round-trip transportation. The appreciation of Dr. Staley's people is being evidenced at every turn, and never were pastor and people more closely knit together in the bonds of love.—Suffolk Herald.

The following from the Baptist Standard is commended to the notice of some of the writers to the Sun. We can guess at a great many words, but when it comes to a name—well, read and take the hint, and possibly you will have fewer occasions to criticize:

"Some of our correspondents still insist on forcing the Standard to guess at initials and proper names. A marriage notice which recently came to hand looked like this: "Mr. So&!&††—?to Miss;††Sk;††y." Of course it is perfectly plain who these living young people are. If we print the notice at all the names will be incorrect and the young folks will get mad and stop their paper. If we don't print it the brother who performed the ceremony and sent us the notice will get mad and stop his paper. Please do not leave us to guess at initials, names or dates. Write them plainly. We are a good guesser, but we never guessed a name correctly yet."

The world is making rapid strides, even though the progress may not be always according to our notions of what is desirable. Women are entering the fields which men have heretofore set aside for their own majesties; for the lords of creation have laid down the law for the weaker sex and have long kept them within the bounds prescribed by custom of their own making. But in these latter days, the women are rebelling. They are breaking down the customs. They are even invading the sacred precincts of the colleges and universities. Thus the Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama have resolved: "Young women of not less than eighteen years of age, of good character and antecedents, who are able to stand the necessary examinations, be admitted to the Sophomore class or any higher class of this University, provided that suitable homes and protection have been provided for them, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the President in consultation with the faculty." And the University of Tennessee has taken substantially the same action, granting to women all the privileges heretofore enjoyed by the male students. The University of Virginia likewise moving in that direction. A majority of the Faculty have recommended the change, and the Board of Visitors at a special meeting has requested the Faculty to present a suitable plan for the admission of women. Indeed we have heard something of the same sort in connection with the University of North Carolina, but so far perhaps it is suggested rather than recommended. Yet we can see the drift. Women are forging ahead. They are entering the pleasant grounds of the universities, and are going to take possession. If once they are freely admitted, the boys will find them worthy competitors for the highest honors. Whether it be woman's sphere or not to wrestle with Greek roots and higher mathematics, they can do it, and they will lead the boys a dance. While we do not approve of turning all women into learned professors, yet if any are disposed to lead that life, for the honor of the sex, we applaud.

Give them a fair chance. We are always ready to say, make way for the ladies.—Raleigh N.-O.-C.

A Friendly Talk.

Dear readers, many of you have been reading these columns for months and years. Others have been paying for them, and reading them occasionally. Now, has the reading them been worth anything to you? When this question is read, many responses will naturally bubble out of the gladdened soul in the affirmative. Others, possibly, will find no special concern in it on either side but will move on in the way of indifference with no interest respecting the good or bad. A very few may answer in the negative.

Now, dear readers, as these friendly words may carry you back over your past life, important questions for you to ask are these, have I been faithful to my Christian duties? Why have I not? Will I do better in the future? How can I improve my Christian work? If you have not done your duty, and want to do so, try the following; Pray more than you have been doing, study your Bible with an earnest desire to learn more of God; pay your pastor better, pray and work for missions, assist the poor and look out in all directions, for some good thing to do.

Why are you Christians? Is it because you are afraid of future punishment? Or is it because it is fashionable? Many of you have higher motives of Christianity than these. Are you not Christians because you want to be better men and women, because you want to do the world good as you pass through it?

It is our great desire that you may all be Christians in word, thought and deed in all things. We can want no greater joy than to know that you are walking godly in Christ Jesus. For then your lives will be pure and spotless, and the day will draw nigh when you will receive your crown.

But, if you merely have the name of Christians, without the cleansing touch of the Holy Ghost, your lives will be failures, and your future state a withering death of misery. Never rest until you have the heavenly fire burning in your soul. When you are full of the Holy Ghost, Christian duties will be light and pleasant. The reason you sometimes feel that you cannot attend to religion, is because you are not in touch with the good spirit. The good spirit always gives a desire to attend the preaching, the Sunday school, the prayer meeting, and to give to the enterprises of the church in all directions. God's spirit always tells a Christian where the key to the money chest is, when good is to be accomplished with the money.

Ask God to direct you in your duties. He will never tell you wrong. If you do not ask God, satan will volunteer his services, and he will be sure to tell you a falsehood respecting duty.

Influence.

Every one has some influence as all well know. It is either for good or for bad. And now stop and see what influence you are exerting. Is it for the cause of Christ or is it for the wicked one? Why is it that one's actions should always be guarded with so much care? It is because we never know when we are going to do some little act that will lead some weak person astray. Some little word may be spoken that will cause some one to take the downward path. If this is the case, is it not necessary that every word, thought, and action should be guarded? How do we know that one social game of cards is not going to lead some young man to be a professional gambler, or one glass of wine lead to a drunkard's grave?

Now, let's see if there is any harm in playing a game of cards just for amusement. First we will look into some bright cheerful parlor and what do we see there? We see seated around a table two young men and two young ladies, and in their hands we see cards. They are laughing and talking and having quite a delightful time. Well, no harm done you say, just playing for amusement; why certainly. But just wait and let's see what happens later on. These young men come here evening after evening to play eard with these ladies and seem to enjoy it very much. Of course after playing for some time in this manner, they get to be very good players, and after enjoying this quiet amusement as long as they desire, they wish for something more exciting. So it is only occasionally they call to have a game with the young ladies now and finally their calls are so far between, that the young ladies take notice of it and wonder what they have done to cause offense. But poor things, well they may wonder, for have they not lead these men to the gambling saloon? They begin to inquire into the matter, and they find that instead of coming to take a social game with them, they go every evening to some saloon and there drink, gamble, and engage in many things that are wicked.

Now, how do you suppose these young ladies feel when they find what their influence has done, and that influence so bad. Perhaps, if they had given good examples, they could have lead them to be as true and noble as they were wicked.

Could we not look into hundreds of other homes and see the same picture? Or it might be instead of the cards, we would see wine, glasses, and later on the result would be just as bad.

Let your influence always be for good. Let your light shine, and by so doing, help others to see their path clear so that they may even climb upward. Always be willing to lend a helping hand or speak kind word, and no matter how small the act yet the influence will be good. How often a gentle touch of the hand may cause some dear soul to take new courage and at last reach home.

How much better it would be if every one would stop and see if their influence was for good or bad. Do you know that every word you utter has its weight? If this is true, should we not then cease to speak the idle and careless words that so often fall from our lips?

You may think that you have but little influence either way, but please banish this thought, for you are mistaken. We will admit just for a moment that you have influence over just one person, and then see if that is not a great influence. Now, if you are the cause of this one person being lost, do you not think that was a great loss, for was not that soul every thing to that person, and when the soul is lost what is there to give in exchange? Now, on the other hand, suppose you were the cause of one soul being saved, would you not feel that you had done a noble deed, and would that not be one star in your crown? Always be careful, for you know not how many are following along in your foot-steps.

Calling a Halt on Romanism.

Is it at all surprising that the press of this country both secular and religious, criticise freely and a little severely the recent autograph letter of the President of the United States to the Pope of Rome congratulating him upon the golden jubilee of his Romish episcopacy—Mr. Harrison had been severely censured because he declined as President to take any notice of it. I have nothing to do with, or say of, either Mr. Cleveland or Gen. Harrison as private individuals; but as Presidents of this Republic, all have a right to criticise their conduct, especially toward foreign powers; but towards the Pope who is foreign, but has no temporal power, it looks decidedly queer for our President as such to give any sort of official recognition. The Pope once ruled Rome, and under the rule of the Popes, no one could hold any sort of religious service except in the houses of their Ministers and under their flags floating. No American citizen would worship anywhere except at the house of the American minister and under the flag.

Believing as the American people do, in the eternal divorce of church and State; and also in the sight of every one to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience, it is exceedingly offensive to the Evangelical Christians of this country for the President to send his congratulations to a dethroned and execrated Church dignitary, who represents the odious and abominable principles of Romanism, and would re-establish them in Rome to-morrow if restored to temporal power; and not only in Rome; but in these United States.

For maintaining civil and religious liberty, public schools, etc., the late Victor Immanuel was excommunicated from the church. The present King Herbert and royal family are in the same fix. The following clipping shows some of the absurdities of that Romanism that is so aggressive:

The greatest significance attaches to the announcement made by the Mayor of Montreal that he could not attend a reception to be tendered the admiral of the Italian war ship Etna by the people of Montreal. The reason given by the Mayor was that "the King, the Queen, royal family and government of Italy have been excommunicated, and as a good Catholic I cannot receive their representatives."

This attitude of the Mayor is simply a declaration that his allegiance to the Pope at Rome is paramount to that which he owes to the city over which he rules and the British Crown. This is dangerous ground for Catholics to get onto, although, to be consistent, there seems to be no other course for them to take. However, we should like to propound the query whether it was entirely honorable for the Mayor of Montreal to accept office with such scruples as he possesses, or, having accepted the office, to retain it while acknowledging a higher authority than that which he is sworn to support?

PHI CHI.

Prof. James T. Pugh.

A FINE EXAMPLE FOR YOUNG MEN.

Very often young men complain of a lack of opportunity for advancement in the world, and look with envy upon those more favored by birth. The world is full of opportunities, and few fail who put forth honest effort, and maintain their personal integrity.

Three and a half years ago our friend and brother, James T. Pugh of Morrisville, N. C., applied for admission at the University of North Carolina as a member of the freshman class. He was the son of a plain merchant. At first the authorities refused to admit him on account of his insufficient preparation; but the father, knowing the true worth of the boy, asked that he be admitted on trial. This request was granted and brother Pugh graduated from that institution in one of the largest and most remarkable classes since the war.

His record at the University is one unbroken example of faithful work, honorable conduct, and splendid achievements. His merits, both mind and heart, were early recognized by the Faculty and student body. He was a general favorite.

Immediately upon his graduation, he was appointed by the Trustees as Instructor in Latin, in the University of North Carolina, a position which he will no doubt fill with the same fidelity and success that have hitherto attended his career.

Let no boy, however poor he may be, despair of rising in the world. If he be faithful to duty, the possibilities for him cannot be calculated. His merits will be recognized if he rest them upon character, good habits, and amiable manners.

On the Wing.

Leaving Morrisville last Saturday morning, we started to Salem Chapel to attend a meeting. At Burlington Rev. J. W. Holt, the beloved pastor of the church, came on the cars. At Elon College Rev. P. T. Klapp came on going to his appointment at Pleasant Grove, Va. Soon Greensboro is reached. Here we have to remain for more than five hours. During the time we visit the office of Dr. Whitsit, the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Bro. Rayborn and Bro. Holder, 1:30 p. m. we are on the cars for Walnut Cove. Here we are met, and carried to the church, and then to sister Marshalls where we are well cared for during the night. Sunday comes, a large congregation assembles at the church and the services are pleasant. Sunday night is spent with Bro. Samuel. He lives in full view of Sorrytown mountains. We are looking for a good meeting. May the Lord bless us.

Ask Your Friends.

Who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla what they think of it, and the replies will be positive in its favor. One has been cured of indigestion and dyspepsia, another finds it indispensable for sick headache, others report remarkable cures of scrofula, salt rheum and other blood diseases, still others will tell you that it overcomes "that tired feeling" and so on. Truly, the best advertising which Hood's Sarsaparilla receives is the hearty endorsement of the army of friends it has won by its positive medicinal merit.

It will be to the interest of all persons thinking of getting monuments or fine carved tablets, before purchasing elsewhere, to call on or write E. T. Marks & Co., Prop.'s of the Capital Marble Works, Raleigh, N. C. 810ft.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—After a long time I greet you again. I am very sorry that we have had no place for so long. But now will have to be the more faithful and try to make up for lost time.

The office has been moved and in moving several nice letters were misplaced which I hope will turn up soon. Here are some that I have found and print.

May God bless you and may you strive to be faithful is my wish for all.

Love to all,
UNCLE TANGLE.

PROVIDENCE, VA., Aug. 1, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I expect you think my month has been very long this time, but it seems so much harder to write an interesting letter to the Corner than to a private friend that I am inclined to put it off. I have been to the convention at Antioch, since I last wrote, and had a splendid time. I went with my pastor, Dr. Barrett, and staid at his brother's house, Mr. Joseph Barrett. They were all so nice and treated me so kindly I could not help enjoying myself. I met with three of the consins. Everything passed off nicely at the convention and all seemed to have a pleasant time. Enclosed find one dime for the Band. I will close with love to all.

ALLIE GIBSON.

Allie, I don't see why you think it harder to write to the Corner than to a friend, anyhow your letters to the Corner are always nice.

GARNER, N. C., July 16, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I have not written in so long I am nearly ashamed to write for I am afraid you all have forgotten me I thought I would write sooner but somehow I kept neglecting it till now I will try to write oftener in the future. I have been to my grandfathers and staid a week. I came home yesterday and was very glad to get home although I had a nice time. I had a little sister to die last week but I hope I will meet her in heaven. I want you and all the cousins to pray that I may be a faithful little girl to the end. I will send five cents for the Band.

Your little niece,
OLLIE GOODWIN.

Ollie, I do hope the cousins will be more prompt in writing hereafter. I hope you will be such a good girl that you will always have a nice time.

GARNER, N. C., July 15, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I have waited so long that I am really ashamed to write. Mama has been very sick, but is well now. My little sister died last Friday. We all miss her so much but I want to meet her in heaven, and I want you and all the consins to remember me in your prayers. Pray that I may be faithful until the end. I was very sorry to see so few letters in the SUN for the past month. Cousins we must work and let us write regularly so that the Corner may look bright. We really must wake up I guess you have heard of the death of Rev. R. R. Day a student of Wake Forest College. He was the faithful and beloved pastor of the Baptist church of this place. I certainly was surprised to hear that he was dead. He has preached a good many excellent sermons in Garner. I must as I am afraid it will be put into the waste basket I send five cent. Give my love to Aunt Maggie.

Your loving niece,
NELLIE GOODWIN.

Dear Nellie I think it is very sad to lose one's little sister, but since God knows what is best we must say "thy will not mine be done", and live so that we will meet them when God takes us away.

Personal Responsibility.

There is no lesson that needs emphasizing more earnestly in our own time than that of personal responsibility. One of the fruits of our tendency to congregate in cities, and to do business in corporations, is the loss of the sense of personal, individual accountability to God. The director or trustee will do a deed of selfishness or cruelty in his corporate capacity which as a man and a neighbor would scorn. How many characters are ruined that way? But when God keeps accounts with us, it is not as firms or trusts, but as individuals. God does not regard us in the mass but as individuals. God not only chisels out mountains, but he paints flowers and butterflies, and cheers the hearts of mountain squirrels, and tunes the voices to tiny warblers. We are not the creatures of circumstances over which we have no control. There is never a sin we fall into that we could not have escaped. There is never a temptation into which we fall but that we see afterwards how we might have resisted it. It has been our own fault, and no plea of the power of circumstances will avail us with God who sees us as individuals. We have a will given us, strong and indomitable, which, if sustained by prayer to God, will override the most adverse circumstances and make them stepping-stones in the heavenly race. No adult person is in any sense a creature of chance: we are rather, each of us, the sum total of causes we ourselves have set in motion. When a man against great obstacles forces his way to become an orator, or a great general, or a renowned financier, we say he is a self-made man; but it is just as true that the great drunkard, the great liar, the great libertine, the great fool, a self-made man. Let us not deceive ourselves. We, and not some one else, are responsible to Almighty God for our conduct, and we will have to give an account for it.—Dr. J. A. Banks, in "Common Folk's Religion"

Sixty Years of Greek Teaching.

BY WILLIAM S. TYLER, D. D. LL. D.

I BEGAN to teach Greek in Amherst College more than sixty years ago as one of three or four tutors who taught Latin, Greek and Mathematics indiscriminately in more senses than one. And inasmuch as Latin, and Greek and Mathematics, or Greek, Latin and Mathematics, or Mathematics, Latin and Greek (for a change in the order of succession was about all the variety allowed.) were required during the first three years, we may be said to have taught almost all the studies that were pursued in the college. There was a great deal of tutoring done in those days in all the colleges. The two lower classes were for the most part given over to the tender mercies of the tutors; and when we became professors we were little more than tutors, so little preparation had we for our work, and so numerous and miscellaneous were the duties of the office. We all professed a great deal too much. Professor (afterward President) Hitchcock, for example, was sole Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Botany and Zoology; and in an exigency he taught Physics, or, as we then called it, Natural Philosophy, and Astronomy also. And I was appointed to teach "the Latin, Greek and Hebrew Languages and Literatures," without any special preparation for either of them. How great the change has been since that day I need not remark. Nor need I inquire whether the professor or the student derives the greater advantage from the division of labor and the special training. I may, however, be permitted to suggest that we were little in danger of being narrow in our profession or men of one idea.

When I entered upon my professorship, all the Greek which was required for admission to college was contained in the "Græca Minora" and the Greek Testament; and all the Greek that was studied in college was comprised in the two volumes, one of extracts from Greek Prose Authors and the other from Greek Poets, of the "Græca Majora"—an American edition of an English school book—a Greek reader on a large scale which comprehended all the legitimate helps to which the noble youth of Great Britain and America were supposed to have access in that generation; and the only Greek lexicon to which I had access in preparation for college was that of S. Hrevelius, in which the definitions were given in Latin!

Immediately upon taking charge of the department I introduced a more extended and connected study of Homer's Iliad; and feeling that no just idea of an oration of Demosthenes, for example, could be obtained from the study of excerpts, gems tho they might be, I soon introduced the study of separate and entire authors substantially as it has continued to the present day. The "Græca Majora" contained selections from some forty or fifty Greek authors, scarcely any of them mere fragments selected as specimens. Since that day "Legendum est potius multum quam multa"—"It is better to read much than many books"—has been the motto of our Greek department; and the best works of the best Greek authors reviewed and re-reviewed, read and re-read, repeated and re-repeated, till their thought and language and style and spirit were impressed upon the mind and character of the student—such has been our choice of text-books, such our ideal and method of teaching, such our ius et norma loquendi et legendi et docendi; and in all the changes of teachers and the times for more than half a century, in required and in optional studies in regular lessons and in reading at sight, by recitations and lectures, in the text-books which I have edited and the Socratic conversations, question and answer, which I have habitually held with my classes, my aim and end has been one and the same—not to teach words only, but words in their inseparable connection with things; and thoughts, I take it, are the greatest and best things, not to teach the lesson only, or the language only, or the literature only, or the life of the Greeks only; but the lesson and the language and the literature and the life, and that not of the Greeks only but of mankind as illustrated by the Greek—not only to make Grecians, but scholars and men; and not only men, but Christians; for "the Christian is the highest style of man." So may Greek always be taught in Amherst College! It was not without some good reason, founded in the nature of things, that Greek and mathematics were so long given so large a space in the curriculum of our colleges and universities. For mathematics is the foundation of all the physical sciences and the framework of the material universe. And Greek is the fons et origo of archeology, of art, of language as a study, of literature, of history, of philosophy, of ethics, of theology—of all political, moral and religious studies. In short, classical studies are, as they have always been called, "the humanities;" for as Cousin well said in his official Report to the French Government on Public Instruction in Prussia, "their tendency and object is the knowledge of human nature, which they consider under all its grandest aspects." Other studies can be pursued, in their sources, only in connection with classical studies, and classical studies should always be taught with more or less reference to all others studies. Indeed, they can be taught in their broadest aspects and their highest relations. They can be seen in their true light only with an eye to the knowledge of human nature, the service of mankind and the glory of God. Well then might the great French philosopher insist that "classical studies are, without any comparison, the most important of all," and that "to curtail or enfeeble such studies would be an act of barbarism, a crime against all true and high civilization, and in some sense an act of high treason against humanity."

I am afraid that Amherst can hardly plead entirely guiltless to this indictment; but I trust that she will not do so again, that she will never repeat the crime. And I hope she will never follow in the footsteps of Harvard and Williams by first admitting students to college without any study of Greek and then conferring the degree of Bachelor of Arts on those who have no knowledge of the language from which poetry, history, philosophy, all the arts and all the sciences derive their terminology and their very names.—Independent.

From Shallowford S. S.

The fifth Sunday of July was the time set apart for Children's Day at Shallowford. The house was well filled with an attentive audience. When the hour for the exercises arrived we were all made to feel at home by a few very appropriate words of welcome in behalf of this Sabbath school. A well arranged program was then executed which consisted of the following recitations speeches, etc., interspersed with songs of praise: Battle hymn of the Republic, by Miss Eugenia Huffman; The weight of a word, by Miss Nellie Tickle; Your Mission, by Miss Florence Low; Do all that you can, by Miss Birdie Truitt; The Seasons Life, represented by four young ladies; Little Bees, represented by seven little girls; Little Workers, represented by seven little boys; Kindness, by Lester Crouse. All performed their parts remarkably well, which reflects credit on themselves and the school. After remaining in the house for nearly one hour and a half we retired to the grove where we found dinner in an abundance. After the expiration of an hour we returned to the house for the purpose of having another service which consisted of essays followed by talks on the subject of missions in Sabbath school, which were interspersed with appropriate pieces of music. The papers read by Misses Minnie Klapp and Lena Cobb were very good. The school owes a debt of gratitude to Miss Lillie Stroud and to Prof. Holleman for valuable assistance which they bestowed on this occasion, and returns to them its sincere thanks. The day we trust was spent pleasantly and profitably, and hope that the words spoken were as seed sown in good ground that will bring forth much fruit in the day when he cometh to make up his jewels.

How It Seems to a Minister from the North of Ireland.

I came from the North of Ireland twenty-two years ago, and have been laboring ever since, to the best of my ability, in the Presbyterian Church in this country in the Synod of Michigan.

I came out from the Irish Presbyterian Church, one of "the straitest sects of the Pharisees," disgusted with two things especially in Ireland—landlord tyranny on the one hand, and extreme conservatism in the Church on the other. Why, sir, it was an offence over there to have an organ in a church, to sing a hymn, or even, in many churches, a paraphrase so named, or to think a line in advance of old stereotyped ways and phrases. I longed for some little liberty, and came to the American Presbyterian Church, and thought I had reached the home of freedom, liberty of thought and of expression, without descending into error. I have been woefully mistaken.

Liberty of thought and of expression—yes, so long as you think and express according to the old views and interpretations. But don't go beyond this, or you will be pronounced a heretic.

If any of my brother ministers ever passed through such a conflict of doubt and trial as I did three months after my conversion, he would pause long before he would condemn a man for saying the "Reason" led some to Christ. But for "Reason" I should be an infidel most probably to-day. In my season of unbelief—for it was unbelief of the darkest dye—it was not the Word, with its promises and its comforts, that helped me. I reasoned out the existence of a God, the need of a Saviour, and all along the line, till I came to a complete surrender to my blessed Jesus, and I have never been troubled since. Why will men confine the Spirit of God to any hard and fast line, beyond which he cannot go, according to which he must work?

The Presbyterian Church has been in the past a synonym for learning, progress and liberty. Is it now to have for its watchword, "No progress, no scholarship, and no liberty!" It is not the old blue flag that has been put up, it is the white flag of death.

But while the flag of surrender of our former position is lifted up for the present, I am thankful it is not nailed to the mast. If I mistake not, a few years will see the old blue flag on the peak and at the masthead again, with liberty, progress, Biblical learning, and loyalty to Christ inscribed in unmistakable characters, and the old Confession will have given place to a simpler creed, and be laid away with the relics of the past. So may it be!—Evangelist.

Mr. Bennett is a bright and well-preserved old gentleman; but to his little granddaughter, Mabel, he seems very old indeed. She had been sitting on his knee and looking at him seriously for some moments one day, when she said: "Grandpa, were you in the ark?" "Why, no, my dear!" gasped her astonished grandparent. Mabel's eyes grew large and round with astonishment. "Then why weren't you drowned?" she asked—Youth's Companion.

C., under date of Oct. 24, '92, says: "I am pleased to say that I have been insured in the Northwestern since 1887, and I am greatly pleased with my investment, so much so, in fact, that I have since taken out three additional policies making altogether $50,000, the full limit on a single life. I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. I now hold three policies in this company. My dividends are much larger than in other companies in which I carry insurance. The affairs of the company are safely and conservatively managed; they pay promptly and are exceedingly fair and liberal in their dealings with their policy-holders."

A Boy's Soda Water Trust.

The keenness in business of these boys is well illustrated by the story of the Soda-Water Trust. Whenever the boys went to the store in Holder-ness they generally bought soda-water. This went on until some one suggested the apparatus could be bought and the soda-water made in the camp. Two firms—one of three boys and the other of two—each firm having a bank account large enough to purchase the apparatus and supplies, were formed at once. But the privileges or monopolies in the camp were always sold for the benefit of the Charity Fund, and it was promptly announced the soda-water franchise would be put up at auction. The two firms were rich, but they were not willing to enter a contest of this kind. The members got together and talked matters over at length, finally resolving to form a trust. When the time came the trust bid one cent for the franchise, and there being no other bid it was sold at this price. When their apparatus came the trust did a rushing business. —McClure's Magazine for August. This Magazine furnishes much good and instructive Reading for all.

Little Drinks.

If five drinks make a man drunk, how drunk is he when he takes one drink? One-fifth.

How drunk is he when he takes two drinks? Two-fifths.

How drunk is he when he takes three drinks? Three-fifths.

How drunk is he when he takes four drinks? Four-fifths.

When he takes five drinks? Dead drunk!

If there were no Little Pigs, there would be no Big hogs.

If there were no little drinkers, there would be no big drunkards!

In this nation above one hundred thousand die every year from the effects of Intoxicating Liquors, and all began as moderate drinkers! —Selected

"We all do fade as a leaf." Some leaves in fading become more beautiful, and while tinged with hues of rarest loveliness, fall to the ground and carpet its green with gorgeous robe. Others, with the first touch of autumn's frosts, part with their rich green and become seared and withered. Crisp and shriveled they still cling to their branches until compelled to release their hold by the rough winds of winter.

So there are some Christians whose loveliness of character attains its full development, when they are in "the sere and yellow leaf." But others, like autumn leaves which have become brown and scraggy and yet refuse to fall to the earth, cling to life and cleave to earth, without either the beauty of youth or the yellow ripeness of old age. —United Presbyterian.

DEAR SUN:—I will now proceed to verify my promise as appeared in your columns July 27th. Our series of meetings as stated began 5th Sunday ult. and continued through the following week, with two services a day, one in the afternoon and one at night. Rev. J. W. Wellons was present at the beginning, and remained until the close and did all of the preaching. We feel that Bro. Wellons did his whole duty during this meeting. His sermons were excellent, full of feeling, sympathy, love and gospel truths. He reasoned with all the pathos and earnestness of his soul, trying to convince sinners of their sins and trying to encourage and strengthen the brotherhood. But, notwithstanding all of the earnest untiring efforts of Bro. Wellons, our meeting was not as spiritual as we wished to see it. The weather was inclement most of the time and greatly conflicted with the services, but we feel the meeting was not in vain, I think we had about five conversions, four accessions to the church and two baptized by immersion. Bro. Wellons labored here in a meeting fourteen years ago this past April, during which time thirty-five souls were converted, most of whom joined the church at this place. Some of the leading members of our church today are those who came into the vineyard of the Lord at that time. It was during that meeting through the instrumentality and fascinating persuasion of Bro. Wellons that the writer was convinced of his waywardness, and turned to God, and to-day I feel that he is to me as a father in Israel, I love him and shall continue to love him through endless ages to come, May God's blessings accompany him all through this life and if we meet no more on the shores of time, I trust that we will meet around the dazzling throne of God.

Our "Childrens Day" came off Wednesday 9th. It was a fine day for such an occasion and we had a very fine congregation and some very fine speaking and you may be sure some very fine speakers among whom were Hon. I. N. Eason of the M. E. church and Prof. J. O. Atkinson of the Christian church. These brethren did much to endear themselves to the people. We as a church convened yesterday to elect a pastor, Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., was unanimously re-elected to serve us another year, but has not accepted the call yet, we love Bro. Barrett with a strong love and we would be very loath to see him leave, we hope he will remain.

Paying Your Small Bills.

It would be impossible to so disturb credit and confidence as to bring on conditions of stagnation and panic if every man and woman owing small bills to the grocer, the doctor, the milliner, the baker, the butcher, the carpenter, and the hundreds of persons in other callings who minister to our daily wants, should make prompt payment. If the ten dollar debt owing to the grocer should be paid to him he could settle his debt with the doctor, and the doctor's wife could settle with the milliner, and the millner the baker, and so on.

The ten dollars once started on its errand of liquidation might satisfy hundreds of dollars of indebtedness as fast as it could be passed from debtor to creditor. The man who thrusts it in his pocket and lets his creditor wait, contributes his share toward augmenting business distress. When thousands of men, actuated by fear or careless disregard of obvious duty, begin to hoard money, instead of paying their debts, distress must result. When millions lose confidence and only pay as they are forced to do it, further business is impossible. All the wealth of the millionaires thrust into the breach could not make good popular default.—Philadelphia Record.

Praying For More Faith.

"I bear men praying everywhere for more faith; but when I listen to them carefully and get at the real heart of their prayer, very often it is not more faith at all they are wanting, but a change from faith to sight.

"What shall I do with this sorrow that God hath sent me?"

"Take it up and bear it, and get strength and blessing out of it."

"Ah, if I only knew what blessing there was in it; if I saw how it would help me, then I bear could it."

"What shall I do with this hard, hateful duty, which Christ has laid right in my way?"

"Do it, and grow by doing it."

"Ah, yes; if I could only see that it would make me grow."

"In both of those cases do you not see that what you are begging for is not more faith, although you think it is, but sight. You want to see for yourself the blessing in the sorrow, the strength in the hard and hateful task.

"Faith says not 'I see that it is good for me, and so God has sent it,' but 'God has sent it, and so it must be good for me.' Faith, walking in the light of God, only prays for His will to be done more closely—does not even ask Him for the lighting of the darkness, so that the man may find the way himself."—Philips Brooks.

It is about time that one argument for the Sunday opening of art galleries, Expositions, etc., was decently and finally buried. The "working classes" have posed, or have been posed before the public as suffering martyrs, oppressed and defrauded by the narrow and selfish demands of Sabbatarian bigots, as all those who favor Sunday rest are stigmatized in the name of these laboring classes doors have been thrown open, when, lo! almost without exception, wherever the bid to labor has been offered it is refused. The working classes, for some reason, decline to respond and play their part in the transparent farce. It is the testimony of those who watch and know that the throng of Sunday visitors to the Metropolitan Art Gallery in this city does not differ much in character from that of any other free day. And now the complaint comes that Sunday opening at Chicago calls out the same kind of people that comes any other day in the week, only not so many of them. Sunday opening thus far is a failure. That is admitted by its friends. Would it not have been better to keep honour and respect the will of the people as declared by Congress? Would it not be better now to own up to defeat and gracefully back down? But for truth's sake let us hear no more of the working classes defrauded by intolerance and bigotry of their Sunday rights!—Advocate.

God's Everlasting Love.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee. Jeremiah 31:3.

It is the people of God who are speaking here of his infinite and unending love for them. They had been punished severely for their sinfulness by being taken and carried prisoners into a strange land; but God still loved them, and this chastizement was an evidence of his deep love for and interest in them. He was seeking their spiritual well being in all his dealings with them. "At the same time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest." Many of the people had been slain by the sword of the Assyrians, and those who were spared felt that they were dwelling in a wilderness compared with their own land; yet God loved them, and they "found grace in the wilderness." When brought to repentance, and restored to their right mind, they realized that God had loved them with an everlasting love, and had drawn them to himself with loving kindness.

The precious truth in our text is, that though God's people had sinned he loved them still. They were dear to him, and desired their salvation. "Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I poked against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord." How beautiful and tender this language, and how near it brings God to us. Ephraim represents the ten tribes, and they had rebelled against God; but though he punished them for their wickedness he loved them still as a tender parent loves an erring child. He did not approve of their conduct, but he wanted to save them from their sins. Thus God feels toward all men. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Under the conviction of sin, and the consciousness that we deserve the displeasure of God, it is difficult for us to realize that he loves us. Many are troubled at this point in their experience. Christ helps us out of this difficulty by teaching us to look up to God through a father's heart. "What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will give him a stone? or if he ask fish, will give him a serpent? If ye then, bring evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" The intelligent loving father may see and feel that it is necessary to punish his disobedient child for its own good, but he loves it still; and its willfulness increases his loving anxiety for it, for he sees its danger. His heart goes out in tender sympathy after it, and his absorbing anxiety is to save it from its downward course. Such is the loving interest of God in his sinful children. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust."

That God loves and earnestly desires the salvation of the sinner is clearly and strongly stated in his word. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet preadvantage for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

From this subject we learn that God's love for us is not dependent upon, nor does it change with, our moods of feeling. He loves us because it is his nature to love, and is interested in us because we are his children. His great heart yearns over us with the yearning love of a father. He said "my people are bent to backsliding from me," though they called them to the most High, none at all would exalt him. How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? How shall I deliver thee Israel? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee, as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together." They deserved his displeasure, and felt it; but he was merciful, and gracious. He said, "I will not create the fierceness of mine anger. I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city. He would not enter there to punish them. This great fact meets a conscious want of our souls, for we are apt to feel that God's love for us changes with our moods of feeling; that when we feel cheerful he loves us, but when we are gloomy and despondent he is angry with us. This is a mistaken idea of God, for his love never fails. It is our conscious guilt that hides his face from us. The prophet says, "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." But he loved them still, and when they turned to him in humble penitence he heard and pardoned them. "The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. Far as the heaven is high above, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him."

The love of God is not only unchanging, but unailing. He says to Ephraim, "I love thee with an everlasting love." Ephraim realized this, and said, "The Lord appeared of old unto me, saying, yea I have loved thee with an everlasting love." The Hebrew is, "from afar." He loved his people when they were in bondage in Egypt, and delivered them. He loved them while they were in the wilderness notwithstanding their frequent backslidings, and all through their history his loving care watched over them. It never failed. It is said of Christ. "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end." In this Christ is a revelation of his Father. In the unchanging and unailing nature of God's love we find a safe refuge, what troubles us most is fear of the future. We can get along with the troubles and trials of today, but we are afraid of tomorrow. We do not know just what awaits us in the future, and we fear its trials; but the same love and wisdom that watches over us today will take care of us tomorrow. This was the path of David, and in the calm composure of the hope it inspired he said: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters: He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

We dread to enter the "world to come" for we know so little about it. Darkness, to a certain extent, hangs over it; and there are many questions connected with it that we cannot answer. Our subject meets this want, and gives us peace of mind; for the love that provides and cares for us here will take care of us over there. How sweetly Whittier sings:

"And so beside the Silent Sea,
I wait the muffled oar:
No harm from him can come to me
On ocean or on shore
I know not where His islands lift
There fringed palms in the air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care."

David was inspired with the same sublime hope, and sings as sweetly as the quaker poet: "though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me thy rod and they staff they comfort me." The Christian looks beyond the valley and shadow of death to the mansion of light, and praises with the poet.

"The golden palace of my God
Tow'ring above the loud, I see,
Beyond the cherubs' bright abode
Higher than angels' thought can be,
Conduct me thou Life-giver, there,
Conduct me to thy glorious throne,
Lead me through sin's darksome night
And clothe me with thy robes of light,
My Savior and my God."

The unailing and unchanging nature of God's love for his people is seen in the fact that he drew them to him from their backslidings "with loving kindness." Even his chastisements were exhibitions of his love, for these were necessary to awaken them to a consciousness of their sinfulness. God says, "I drew them with cords of a man, with bonds of love" How wonderful the forbearance and long suffering kindness of God toward the children of Israel, and we sometimes wonder how is it with men now? Are they not just as sinful, and hard hearted? God has given to us a greater manifestation of his love than he did to Israel. He raised up Moses as a leader to lead them out of Egypt to the promised land, and sent his angels as ministering; but he so loved the world that he sent his beloved Son to die for its redemption.

Is n't there a timely hint for many societies in this, sent us by Mr. C. W. Fullwood? "During the month of June the society of St. Paul's M. E. Church, of Nyack-on Hudson, N. Y., had young lady leaders from the sister societies of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Reformed, and "Union" churches, to conduct the prayer meetings. This infused new life and interest into the meetings; and gave a practical demonstration of the beauty and value of Christian Endeavor interdenominational fellowship."—Golden Rule.

An agreement not to fight till the question in dispute has been referred to a body exercising the functions of court of law, is a step in the direction of that alliance between the United States and England which, we trust and believe, is the destiny of the two countries. If we begin by an acknowledgment that we are not in the position of foreign powers—i. e., liable to war at any moment—we may soon rise to a definite race alliance, and, lastly, to that declaration of a common citizenship which would prevent any Englishman from being an alien in America, or any American from being an alien in England, and would heal the breach in the unity of the race caused by the folly of George III and his ministers.—The Spectator (London.)

It will be to the interest of all persons thinking of getting monuments or fine carved tablets, before purchasing elsewhere, to call on or write E. T. Marks & Co., Prop's of the Capital Marble Works, Raleigh, N. C. 5101.

The Power of Love.

The following story is from a recent English work entitled "Blessed Be Drudgery," by Wm. C. Gannett:

"In a pottery factory here there is a workman who had one small invalid child at home. He wrought at his trade with exemplary fidelity, being always in the shop with the opening of the day. He managed, however, to bear each evening to the bedside of his 'wae lad,' as he called him, a flower, a bit of ribbon, or a fragment of crimson glass—indeed, anything that would lie out on the white counterpane and give color to the room. He was a quiet, unsentimental man, but never went home a night without something that would make the wan face light up with joy at his return. He never said to a living soul that he loved that boy so much. Still he went on patiently loving him, and by and by he moved that whole shop into positively real but unconscious fellowship with him. The workmen made curious little jars and cups, and painted diminutive pictures down their sides before they stuck them in the corners of the kiln at burning-time. One brought some fruit in the bulge of his apron, and another engravings in a rude scrap book. Not one of them whispered a word, but they put them in the old man's hat, where he found them; he understood all about it.

And, believe it or not, cynics, as you will, but it is a fact that the entire pottery full of men, of rather coarse fiber by nature, grew quiet as the months drifted, becoming gentle and kind; and some dropped swearing as the weary look on the patient fellow-worker's face told them beyond mistake that the inevitable shadow was drawing nearer. Every day some one did a piece of work for him and put it on a sanded bank to dry, so that he should come later and go earlier. So, when the bell tolled, and the little coffin came out of the lonely door, right around the corner out of sight there stood a hundred stalwart working men from the pottery, with their clean clothes on, most of whom gave half a day's time for the privilege of taking part in the simple procession, and following to the grave that small burden of a child whom probably not one had ever seen."

Be not Discouraged.

Many young people are apt to be easily discouraged. Failure takes the heart out of them. But they should be taught that the way to success is strewn with many a failure. Blessed is he who has learned to endure failure without being discouraged.

Easily discouraged people are as a general thing, those who too confidently expect success. The sanguine temperament is apt to take only one view of the prospect. The way is perfectly clear; the sky is full of roseate lines; one has only to move on, and the end is surely reached; he has only to reach forth and pluck the ripe fruit that hangs on drooping boughs. Little wonder that they who thus think and feel are but poorly prepared for disappointment and failure. They have made no preparation for failure either in material matters or in spiritual strengthening.

It may be sometimes wise to burn bridges behind us; but it is not generally wise to do so. When Grant was moving on to Richmond, at one time on the eve of an engagement, having made little provision for food for the men, he was asked about it and replied, "If this army gets whipped it won't need any food." But who would quote an incident like this to indicate what should be the rule in the ordinary affairs of life? As a rule no one ought to engage in any undertaking without some provision, at least in mind and spirit, for possible failures. We must all meet failures, and who knows whether any present undertaking will prove successful?

Not until one has learned to meet failure with a cheerful spirit and with courage to try again has he put on the whole armor for conflict in life's arena. The world admires pluck and despises whimper, and in so doing the world is right. The Christian religion implies charity for the unfortunate and needy, but it also implies faith and action on the part of all. It is unjust to Christ to suppose that he was other than the manliest of men, or that his teachings tend to make men weaklings. A study of his life on earth, and of that of Paul, and of those of the best Christians every where, will show that Christianity means invincible courage as well as inextinguishable faith.—Star.

Empty Seats.

"Are you going to church this morning, Susie?" asked Dr. Clark, lying back in his easy chair with the morning paper. "A doctor who is out day and night can't be expected."

"No, I made jelly yesterday, and I'm tired. I'm faithful enough to stay at home this cloudy morning," and Mrs. Clark curled up on the couch with the Bible she had not opened for a week, but it soon dropped from her hand. She was aroused by a strange voice saying:

"Now, my good imps, what have you done to weaken the kingdom of God?"

The voice came from a suspicious-looking personage seated on a throne of human skulls. Around him was gathered a crowd of terrible beings, each with a crown of fire in which gleamed some name, such as "Malice," "Envy," "Pride," "Hatred," and kindred passions.

"We have been busy to-day making empty seats in churches," began one.

"Nothing could please me better," answered their king.

"I persuaded one man that he had a headache, and kept him from a sermon that might have changed his old life," said one.

"I induced one good man to slip down to his store and fix up his books," said another, with a horrid grin.

"Good!" said the king. "He'll soon give up Sunday altogether."

"I was able to get one devoted young man to visit old friends," said one imp.

"I worried a good sister about her old bonnet until she decided to stay at home until she got a new one," spoke up the imp labeled "Pride."

"And I made several poor women who were hungry for God's word stay at home to repine over their trials. I just said to them, 'Oh, those rich people don't care for you; you can't wear fine clothes, so I wouldn't go where I was looked down upon.'" He continued, "That way I keep many poor people at home whom the rich would have been glad to see."

"That is one of the best ways to cheat poor people out of heaven I know of," answered the king with approval.

"I induced a good many men and women to think that they were not strong enough to go out," said one called "Indifference." "Of course all these men will be at their business to-morrow, even if they feel worse. But they could not go to church, where they would have no special mental or physical strain. And the ladies would have been able to clean house or go calling, but I made them think they couldn't walk to church unless they were perfectly well."

"Very good," said the king, with a sulphurous grin. "Sunday headaches might often be cured by getting out in the air, and backaches forgotten by thoughts drawn to higher things. But lying imps must see every weakness of the flesh to help make empty seats."

They all smiled, for in their kingdom "lying" was a great compliment.

"I have a way of keeping people home from church, and they feel perfectly innocent about it," said one.

"I induce people to have company or go visiting on Sunday. Of course this takes their minds off sacred things to begin with, and puts them on dressing and eating. Hired girls, mothers, and older sisters have to stay at home to get big dinners. Many of the guests lose church to be in time for dinner."

"Anything to make empty seats," approved the king. "Those people cannot be tempted by Sunday excursions, but they miss God's house just as easily in this way."

"To make ladies feel that their servants need no Sunday privileges is good," suggested one.

"Very true," said his superior. "As long as we can get Christian people to cause or allow men and women to work during their church hours we can keep many empty seats in church and men and women away from God."

"I am the weather imp,"—said one gloomy fellow. "I go around persuading people it is going to rain, or it is too cold, too damp, or too hot to venture out to church. It is enough to make even your gloomy majesty laugh to see these same people start out the next day in wind and weather. One would think it a sin to carry umbrellas and wear gum coats to church."

"Confidentially," answered the king, when I find a Christian who has no more concern about the weather Sunday than Monday—determined to make as much effort for spiritual gain as he would for worldly profit—I just give him up. It's no use to try to drag back the man or woman who goes to God's house in all kinds of weather."

"I'm able to do a good deal with some of the ladies of the congregation," spoke up the imp labeled "Fashion of This World." "I can make some stay at home because the new hat did not come, or because their clothes are out of style, or they have not got a new cloak."

"I have a better scheme than that," said another. "These people you keep away are indifferent—generally good for-nothing folks who are hardly worth getting into the kingdom of his satanic majesty, but I have a plan that empties seats of the workers in the church."

"That's just what I want," said the king.

"I make these people overwork on Saturday. For instance, get some good man the preacher depends upon, or some devout Sunday-school teacher, to make Saturday the busiest day in the week. I just keep him rushed with neglected things till late at night, and then he oversleeps or is sick the next day and can't get out; or, if he goes in is too tired and sleepy to take part or even listen."

"Splendid plan!" cried Satan.

"Yes, it works well with delicate women. If they clean house or have Saturday-night company, they can be kept home without knowing that they have broken the Sabbath the day before. A church party late Saturday night helps with empty seats."

"You are doing finely, my imps," his majesty said warmly—for his breath was a flame of fire. "Preachers may work and pray over their sermons all the week, but there will be no results in preaching to empty seats. One of the most important things we have to consider is how to keep people away from churches of Sunday. Your plans are excellent, but I might suggest another good point. All preachers have human imperfections—some fault of manner or speech. Get Christians to criticise their pastor, especially before their children. This keeps young people from wanting to be church-members. If you can stir up a spirit of fault-finding against the preacher or among the members it will help make empty seats. People who get mad at each other do not care to go to church together. If the seats are empty the minister may be a saint and preach like an angel to no purpose. See the result of your labor on — street church to-day. Half of the seats empty. Not only did the two hundred people who stayed at home lose a blessing, but each empty seat did its work against the Lord's kingdom. The preacher made unusual preparation, and went with his heart on fire, but the empty seats chilled him, and he did poorly. Several strangers had dropped in with letters, but they were disappointed at the small attendance, and took their letters home, and some will not take them to any place. There was a special collection, but the best givers were away, so it was a failure. It isn't a smart preacher, or a rich congregation, or a good location, or a paid choir that make a successful church. It is the church-members always being there that draws in the unconverted and makes an eloquent preacher. As soon as a Christian begins to stay at home, from one excuse or another, I know I have a mortgage on his soul, which, if he does not shake off, I will foreclose in the judgment day."

"You have none on mine!" cried Mrs. Clark, who had been listening with bated breath; "I'll go to church, if only to defeat you."

"What's the matter, dear?" asked the doctor. "Have you been dreaming?"

"Perhaps so, but I'm going to church if I get to my seat just in time for the benediction, I'll cheat Satan from this day out of one empty seat." And she has kept her word.—Myra Goodwin Plantz.

Save the Boys and Girls.

It has been in my mind for some time, Mr. Editor, to write a few words in regard to "light" and obscene literature, and if you will allow these feeble expressions to appear in the columns of the Advocate I will appreciate it. It may be well for me to say that what I say in this article is said with a desire to do good.

The Ram's Horn—which by-the-way is a very lively paper—has a cut on its last page (July 12th, 1893) which is an excellent one, speaking the truth. The devil is pouring a liquid from a bottle which consists of "scandal," "immorality," "infidelity" in literature, and as this fluid runs in a stream (of "literature") down an elevated rock it is caught in vessels and drank by boys and girls. This tells us the true state of affairs in the literary line among our young people. How eagerly they drink in the vile stuff which is being published by the American presses of to-day.

I desire to give two quotations from the above named paper, quoted by it from an address by Jesse B. Young, and the Philadelphia Ledger. Mr. Young says:

"Mr. Anthony Comstock and those who have co-operated with him in the work of suppressing illicit printed matter have done a remarkable task in the destruction of hundreds of infamous establishments devoted to the publication and sale of vile books. At one time it was thought that these persons had been driven out of employment and that their business had been broken up. Later investigations showed, however, that these persons had simply diverted their energies into a new line. Ceasing for a while to minister to the diseased imagination and the corrupted lives of adults, they have devoted themselves to the enterprise of alluring childhood and youth to read low, worse and vicious stories, and now for years the stream of corruption which used to find its way here and there through the land by underground channels has been openly flooding the country in the pages of boys' and girls' weeklies, and the journals of free lovers and spiritualists."

This is awful, but I fear too true; for are not the minds of the young people being blasted by these weeklies and journals?

Here is the other quotation:

"The inquiry which is wrought by pernicious and loathsome publications is incalculable, and it is impossible not to view with concern the pollution of the minds of the young by such insidious poisons. Director Butler is recently reported to have said that crime among the children of this city (Phila.) is on the increase. If that is true his words are a serious indictment of the laws, and our legislators dare not overlook them. It is safe to say that fully nine tenths of the crimes against morality, with reports of which our newspapers teem daily, have their origin indirectly from reading foul books and from the exposure of indecent pictures."

Is it not true?

It is a great pity that our legislators do not do something to stop the sale of these vile and pernicious books, weeklies, etc., in our State. It is a shame to pass the windows of news stands (or stores) and see hanging in them indecent pictures exhibited from the pages of the sporting papers, the Police News and the Police Gazette. (In 1885 there was a law passed by our legislature prohibiting the sale of obscene literature in North Carolina, and to my mind that certainly included these dirty sheets.) But that is not all. We are having sold to the young people (boys and girls) of our cities books and papers too "light" and trashy for older people not to be contaminated by them. It does harm for such periodicals to be sold to the young, but what can be done when such papers as the Fire-side Companion, Family Story Paper, Boys of New York, Saturday Night, and many others as filthy, and such books as "Dead Wood Dick, Jr.," "Broadway Billy," "Bob Brooks, Detective," "Old Sleuth" library and "Cap. Collier's" library are sold by members of our own dear church, and holding official positions in the church. How many times have I been in a certain book store (not 400 miles from Wilmington) and seen lying on its counters some of the papers and books which I have named, and this was not in Wilmington, but the store is kept by a Methodist. I have seen the evils of such reading, and any mothers and fathers who allow their sons or daughters to read these books and papers will be held responsible, but not as much so as the one who sells. This is an evil, a great evil, which is surrounding the young and they should be saved from it. Let the religious press cry out against it. Let the ministers cry out, denouncing it from the pulpit.

In closing I will say may the Lord look down in mercy upon those who sell these loathsome books, be they laymen, preachers or what not, and upon the readers of the same.—E. K. in R. C. Advocate.

Church Members and Saloons.

I have just read a communication from a member of the North Carolina Conference in the Raleigh Advocate. The brother goes on to say his town has 600 inhabitants and nine churches, which certainly shows a bountiful supply of church facilities. He says also that two weeks ago all the 600 inhabitants who have reached the years of accountability were found to be members of the church, except about 40. Since that time nine of the forty have joined the Methodist church. Then he adds the following remarkable statement: "Notwithstanding the fact that only 31 are left outside of the churches, among these 31 there are 5 bar-keepers." I say this is a remarkable statement. These 5 bar-keepers must have a bar keeping business in the said town, or how could they, with propriety, be called bar-keepers? Then there must be at least one bar room, and may be 5, in the selfsame town of 600 inhabitants and nine churches. If there is only one bar room there it certainly does a thriving business to employ 5 bar-keepers. If there are 5 bar rooms it is only the greater evidence of the prosperity of the wicked business. Now, the remarkable part of this story is that there are only 26 persons in the whole town to patronize the business of these 5 bar-keepers, unless we be permitted to suppose that they get some patronage from church members. Or, it may be possible that there is a strong bar-patronizing element round about the town.

Now, all this is simply the strongest possible proof that the churches are responsible for the existence of the saloon. Not that the church procures it, but that so many of the members of the various churches patronize the saloon, and show it all the favor it wants from them that it easily gets its majority and hence exists by the help of church members.

We have just held an election on Local Option in our town. The dry ticket was the winner. But if no church member had worked or voted for the wet ticket there would have been no campaign. The town was dry before. Church members were very conspicuous in the election on the wet ticket. In a neighboring town it is thought that a large majority of the church members who are voters voted the wet ticket. Satan has no objection to such church members as that. They could not serve him more faithfully unless they stood behind the bar themselves. What shall we do about these things? When will such churches convert the world to Christ? Church members should have at least some idea of the meaning of their church vows.—Raleigh Advocate.

The worth of an approving conscience! The Transcript tells of a well-known lawyer of this city who discovered on returning from a bank one day that the teller, in cashing some rail-way bond coupons, had overpaid him $200. He sent back the money to the bank by his colored servant. One day, upon his speaking of the incident to a millionaire client, the latter exclaimed,

"You are a fool! What did you do that for? I wouldn't have done it. The banks never rectify errors in their favor."

"I don't know about that," replied Mr. P., "but I happen to labor under a disadvantage. I have to shave myself; and you see I wouldn't like to look in the glass every morning, and see a scoundrel!"

Virginia Valley.

The fourth Sunday of July I baptized a member of Linville, church by immersion at Edom.

Saturday before the fifth Sunday of July I took the train at Linville, and went to Weyer's Cave, where Bro. J. A. Andes met me and carried me to his home. It had been one year since I visited this family. It is a pleasure to visit such devoted Christians and spend a few days with them. Sunday at 11 a. m. I preached at the school house near A's, at 4 p. m. we went to the Shenandoah river where I baptized Bro. A's eldest son Alfred by immersion. I preached again at 8 p. m. to an attentive congregation. It helps the preacher so much when he has the attention of the congregation. Good listeners make good preachers. I use to think it was the minister's fault if his hearers went to sleep while he was preaching but my mind has changed, I think it is more frequently the fault of the hearers, for there are some people who will go to sleep nearly every time they go to church. while there are others who never go to sleep at church. Now the most of those church sleepers will go to a dance and dance half the night and show no signs of sleep this shows their taste and what they are made up of. It makes me sad to see non-church members sleeping while I am trying to influence them to lead a better life and prepare to meet the Lord in peace; but it is more discouraging to see members sleeping for it looks like satan has come in and chloroformed them so they may not receive any benefit from the service. A person may sleep his way to hell, but we must pray our way to heaven.

We held our last quarterly conference at Concord last Saturday. The church is working well for a new organization, there are some good workers in this church who are determined not to give up because of opposition. If the churches had more of this kind of members who are willing to stand up for the Master at all times and not give way to discouragements we might expect great blessings to be poured out upon our efforts. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling: For it is God which worketh in you to will and to do of his own good pleasure." Phil. 2:12.

This Conference convenes Thursday the 31st of Aug. with Bethlehem church, and any one coming by R. R. will be met at Broadway by notifying Bro. J. D. Hilliard, May Land, Va. Let all who are on committees get ready for conference that we may have a profitable session.

Washington Letter.

Few men have the gift of saying the right thing at the right time and of saying much in a few words to a more marked extent than the "Blind man eloquent," as Rev. Dr. Milburn, who has for a period of years been Chaplain of the House of Representatives and who is now Chaplain of the Senate, is commonly called. He made his last prayer in the House of Representatives at the opening session of that body, and his language was so well chosen and so well suited to the occasion and to the circumstances under which Congress assembled in extra session that no apology is necessary for quoting therefrom. It was an impressive scene and even the chattering crowds in the galleries were awed as the blind minister, his sightless orbs turned upward as though looking up to the Supreme ruler, and his hands extended supplicatingly, said: "In this critical moment of the Nation's life, endow Thy servants with supreme statesmanship and patriotism, inspire them with sound judgment and good counsel, that all their deliberations and decisions may be guided by thy good spirit to the welfare, honor, and prosperity of the people. Dispel all fright and panic, and grant that our country may soon return to its accustomed ways, crowned with prosperity and blessed with peace." It required no extra-vivid imagination to hear a universal amen to that prayer.

Rumsellers are impudent everywhere, but it does seem that those at the National Capital are more impudent than those elsewhere. They talk and act as though they absolutely controlled a majority in both branches of Congress and have only to give their orders concerning legislation to have them obeyed. Patriotism has no meaning to the rumsellers, and now, when a distressed country is looking to Congress for legislation that will bring financial relief, the Washington rumsellers are bringing their nefarious influence to bear upon Congress to secure the repeal of the liquor license law passed by the last congress, and which has not yet gone into effect, the courts having decided that it must start with the license year, which begins November 1st. The queer thing about this move on the part of the liquor dealers of Washington is that the law was originally drawn for them by one of their lawyers, and when it was introduced not long before the close of the last session of Congress they openly boasted that the temperance people would either have to accept that bill or get nothing. The temperance people accepted the situation, and by hard work succeeded in getting some amendments attached to the original bill which made it a big improvement upon existing laws. It is those amendments that the whiskey sellers object to, and knowing that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get them struck out they are trying to get the whole law repealed.

The reading of President Cleveland's message was followed with the closest attention in both House and Senate, and the manner in which it dealt with financial question is commended even by those who do not agree with the conclusions drawn, and the wish is heard very frequently that Congress in dealing with this matter will keep in mind these words from the message: "This matter arises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling, and enters every household in the land."

Rev. S. W. Haddaway, the new Chaplain of the House of Representatives, opened yesterday's session with prayer. He is well known and much liked in Washington for his plain-spoken old-fashioned Methodism. Aug. 9, 1893.

CORRESPONDENT.

Our Norfolk Letter.

The dedication of the remodeled house of worship at Antioch, Isle of Wight Co., Va., took place on the 5th Sunday in July. The weather was very warm, but the attendance was large. Rev. Dr. Staley of Suffolk preached the sermon, while Revs. Jno. T. Kitchen and J. W. Barrett and the pastor took part in the services. Deacon I. W. Duck of Mt. Carmel, who was for many years an active member of Antioch, before Mt. Carmel was organized, gave a historical sketch of the early days of Antioch, which proved to be interesting. Dr. Staley was sick and yet he gave us a fine sermon. A quartet from the Suffolk Christian church gave us some fine music in addition to that furnished by Antioch's own choir. The improvements on the building cost about $700.00 and we now have a very comfortable, as well as neat, church house. A few of the Antioch people, and some of their friends, have been liberal, but many held back preferring to see the work done by others. The prophet said "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." That is the condition of many, if we judge from appearances, and if so, the woe must come as a consequence. Long may Antioch live and prosper to the glory of God in the salvation of souls.

The protracted meeting at Berea, Norfolk Co., Va., began on 5th Sunday in Aug. and continued till Friday of the following week. The inclement weather of the week retarded the work, but we had a good meeting with five conversions and four accessions to the church. Rev. Jas. W. Wellons, pastor of the Christian church at Durham, N. C., did the preaching and he did a good work. The Berea people love him as a father in Israel. Fourteen years ago, while he was serving as an evangelist, he held a meeting with this church, which was greatly blessed. Today many of the active members delight to speak of that meeting as the beginning of a new life in Christ with them. On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, the pastor baptized two persons.

The Berea Sunday school held a picnic on Wednesday, Aug. 9th. A very pleasant day it was. The attendance was immense, the music and recitations were excellent, in many instances, while we had two able addresses by Mr. J. W. Eason and Rev. J. O. Atkinson. In the afternoon of the same day Prof. Atkinson spoke on education and gave a talk for Elon College at the same time. We hope to send three or four students from Berea to Elon. Let us make special efforts to give Elon College this year its largest attendance, and then we shall expect its biggest year's work. Let us thank God for Elon and its work, and do our best to enlarge it.

Rev. M. W. Butler has accepted the call of the Berkley church to become its pastor. He will enter upon his duties Nov. 1, 1893. Bro Butler is a worthy man, a Christian of ripe experience and a good preacher. We hope he may be greatly blessed in his labors with this church. Their new house of worship will soon be ready for use. Rev. Roger Charnock is this week assisting Rev. M. W. Butler in a meeting at Waverly, Va.

Rev. Dr. Jones is away collecting money for his church in Norfolk. Prof. Atkinson is supplying for him, and report says he is doing it well.

Dr. Staley of Suffolk, in company with some friends, is in Chicago, visiting the World's Fair.

Bro Clements, why is it you do not get our brethren generally to write more for the SUN? I found it hard to induce them to write much when I was editor, but I thought may be they would do better for you. Really we ought to have more "contributions" for the SUN, who will agree to furnish them free of charge, and do it well? I am willing to be one to do the best I can under surrounding circumstances.

How time flies! Just think of it! I feel like I am still a boy in accomplishments and service, and yet as I call to mind that this is August 10th, 1893, I recall the fact that August 10th, 1873, in the church at Union, Southampton Co., Va., I preached my first sermon—now twenty years ago. Verily we are fast hastening to our journey's end. God grant us grace and wisdom and strength to do our work well while the days are going by.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

September 28, 1893, New Harmony, time and place for the Ga. and Ala. Conference.

Rev. D. R. Yarboro, 700 North C St., Charlotte, N. C., will be the brother's address

The readers of the SUN would be glad for Rev. J. T. Kitchen to use his pen more frequently.

Conferences are approaching and it behooves you to make arrangements to meet all the assessments of conference.

Elon College is to be congratulated upon the election of Prof. J. M. Bandy to the chair of Pure and Applied Mathematics.

Rev. W. G. Clements is assisting Bro. H. H. Butler in protracted meeting this week. He expects to be in E. Va., for several weeks.

Bro H. J. Holt renews his subscription, and thinks he cannot do without his church paper. May the Lord give us many more such brethren.

Salem Chapel gives one new subscriber to the press fund, and Ala. sends one for the same purpose. Let every church strive to have an interest in the new press.

A good meeting is reported at Berea by Dr. Barrett in which there were five conversions and four accessions to the church. Rev. J. W. Welons assisted in the meeting.

Bro. Holland reports a grand meeting at Hollands. There were fifty conversions and twenty-nine accessions to the church and more to follow. The spirit was with them in great power.

Elon College presents courses of study, corps of instructors and general facilities equal to the best in many respects and far superior in a great many more. Give our own college your patronage.

Rev. M. W. Butler has been called to the Berkley church for the next conference year. Rev. Roger Charnock having resigned to take effect Nov. 1, 1893. Bro Butler will fill the pulpit acceptably.

From the Yellow Springs, O., Citizen we learn that all vacancies in the Christian Educational Society and faculty of Antioch College have been filled and the college will open Sept. 13 under very favorable circumstances.

The Va. Valley Conference will convene at Bethlehem church Aug 31, 1893. By notifying J. D. Hilliard, May Land, Va., all persons going by railroad will be met at Broadway and conveyed to the church. Don't wait till the last minute before notifying Bro. Hilliard.

The highly gifted and widely known Rev. Chas. F. Deems, D. D., L. L. D., is lying at death's door in New York. He has never fully recovered from the stroke of paralysis he had some time ago. Latest news from his bedside is that he is a trifle better.

Rev. J. L. Foster returned to Raleigh last Friday and reported an excellent meeting in progress at Bethel. He had been assisting Bro. Strowd but had to leave before the close of the meeting so results cannot be given. There were several conversions before he left. Bro. Strowd will probably make a full report.

Rev. J. A. Webster says: "My field is one of infant churches—a missionary field. At Pleasant Union we have no building of our own as yet but expect to have one soon. Macedonia has a good 30x40 house started and will finish before long. Patterson's Grove Church is not finished but we hold services in it. We expect good meetings; pray for us."

J. S. Atkinson, the gentlemanly and highly respected General Secretary of the Raleigh Y. M. C. A., and Miss Nora King, a lady of high accomplishment and pleasing address, were quietly married at the home of the bride's parents on New Bern Avenue Wednesday morning, Aug. 16, 1893, and took the 6.30 a. m. train for a northern trip. May God's richest blessing be their portion.

August and September are the grape months, and we hope that some one in every congregation will make some wine for sacramental purposes.

Select ripe grapes. Press the juice out of them. Strain the juice. Boil the juice thoroughly and skim it well. Do not add either water or sugar; both are unnecessary, and sugar was not known in the age of Christ. Pour the juice while hot into bottles or preserving jars, and seal them. Lay the bottles on their side in a cool place. The wine will keep for years.—Sel.

The new Faculty of Antioch College, which is the best the College has had for a number of years, has been confirmed by the Board of Trustees. The outlook for the College is quite flattering. The new Educational board, the Trustees, the President of the College and the Faculty, are all on good terms and will work harmoniously together for the best interest of the College. Nearly all of the old students will be back together with a number of new ones.—The Weekly Citizen. (Yellow Springs, O.)

The following paragraph in the "Nortolk Letter" is of great weight and we are anxious to have every person with the gift of the pen to read and do as our dear Bro. proposes. Here it is, read:

Bro. Clements, why is it you do not get our brethren generally to write more for the SUN? I found it hard to induce them to write much when I was editor, but I thought may be they would do better for you. Really we ought to have more "contributions" for the SUN, who will agree to furnish them free of charge, and do it well? I am willing to be one to do the best I can under surrounding circumstances.

On account of the hard times many of our readers hold back their subscription money and thereby embarrass us to no small extent and cause Bro. Clements to be out in the field nearly all the time thus giving him very little time to devote to the reading matter; the work of the office thus falling very heavy indeed upon the shoulders of this writer; he finding himself very much in need of time, thus causing him to try to accomplish two hours' work in one. The result is, proof read poorly, selections not as carefully culled as he would wish for the SUN's readers, and any amount of criticism from irate brethren whose articles have been handled very poorly. Much of this overwork could be lifted from his shoulders if those who could would contribute more liberally. There are enough good writers in the Christian church to fill the paper full of articles every week. We beg of you, as you love the cause of Christ, write for the SUN. You can make it shine so that when our people are out canvassing for our enterprises they will not be ashamed to recommend our church paper to the consideration of the people. Original articles are what make the paper interesting. We are compelled to give you something to read and if those who can do not write selected reading will be furnished.

Have Courage to Say No.

That is, in the proper place and time.

Seldom do we think of the importance of this one little word; yet, it is of great importance. There are times, when the happiness of a life time may depend upon this one word. Then, is it not necessary that we learn how to say no?

When you are tempted to go into something wicked, or your play-mate may be leading you into some wrong act, have the courage to give a firm and decided no; for it may be the cause of much happiness or the turning point of your life. Do you know that by doing one wrong act it is one step toward another? And do you not also know that if you never take one step towards a thing, it will never be done? Then, if when about to take the first step, you give no, instead, can't you see the second will never be taken! For the first act has always to be done, before the second.

Fortunate is the person who has back-bone enough to give a decided, no. Do you not wish to be that person? We know that it is a hard thing to say this one word, when we see and know it is better, for when we would say it, we see some of our friends standing near that we are afraid would laugh at us. But would it not be better to be laughed at now, than to yield and later on have our friends turn away with a look of scorn because we have gone so far in sin? If you will say no the first few times, soon your comrades will respect you, because they see that you are going to make a true man or woman. They may laugh and sneer, but always stick to the right and you will come out safe at last. Why should we care for a few sneers from the people of this world, when we know the reward of after life will be so much greater! Have you ever thought of the importance of refusing yourself one little sinful pleasure? It may be very small and so small, that, when you give it a slight thought, it may seem no sin at all; yet, this one little pleasure may be the cause of your ruin. You say you can't see why that is, nevertheless it is true. Just think over it a moment now, and see if it is not so. You engage in some little pleasure that is very charming, and you continue to engage in them until before you know it you enter some greater pleasure that is more sinful, and thus you go on step by step until almost before you know it, you are committing some of the gravest crimes. But we hear you saying that you would not do that way, that you would stop before you had gone so far; still, we say it is better to have courage to say no, and not run such risks. Humanity is weak, and always needs to be guarded.

If you are strong enough to resist the greater temptations, it may be by saying no, you help some weaker fellow being to say no. If by one lit-act of yours, you could keep some other person out of sin, would not that be reward enough? When the tempter is near trying to persuade you to do some sinful act, and you feel that you are almost yielding, brace yourself, and proudly stand like a man and say, no!

The Halcyon days.

Seven days before and seven days after the winter solstice; is the time when the halcyon broods its offspring. The Solstice is regarded the most quiet season of the year, being at a time when the Sun is standing at its greatest point from the equator. Hence, these are regarded pleasant days. So there are pleasant periods in life's work that may be called halcyon days.

As the storms often come when the sun is midway between its two most divergent points, and as the burning rays pour their heat down when the center of the equator is reached, so there are times in life when the storms of passion rage, and the heat of ambition runs high. just as it is necessary to have shelter to protect one during the fury of the natural storm, so it is necessary to have a refuge in Christ during the storms of sin that may gather around in this life.

There are many kinds of work that are not easily done, while the storm cloud is flying by. They require the halcyon days. Nature has taught the halcyon the proper time for brooding its young.

There are no better times to read and meditate than when the mind is quiet and pleasant. Then is a good time to brood new thoughts of a higher Christian type. Many Christians have enjoyed these quiet pleasant seasons that give one an opportunity to lift the heart and mind toward the heavenly kingdom. "He is then ready to say."

"I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbering care,
And spend the hour of setting day
In humble grateful prayer."

Salem Chapel.

Our last lines to the dear old Sun left us with Brother Samuel near Salem Chapel. This is a fine neighborhood, and an excellent farming community. The people are kind and obliging.

The meeting moved off very well. Rev. W. F. Herndon reached the church Monday evening and greatly endeared himself to the people by his earnest efforts and efficient work. Bro. Holt, the pastor is much beloved by the church. He was called away by telegram on Wednesday, to preach the funeral sermon of Bro. Rudd the father-in-law of Rev. W. T. Walker. We hope Bro. Holt will give full particulars soon. We left Bro Herndon, with Revs. P. W. Allen and H. C. Fulton carrying on the meeting.

It was our great pleasure to spend a night with each of the following families; Sister Mat Marshall, Bro. Samuel, Dr. Fulp, John Marshall and Bro. Marshall. We will not forget soon the kindness of these families to us. We made pop visits to a number of other places. It was soul replenishing to meet so many friends at Salem Chapel again in the flesh. Dr. J. P. Barrett has a number of friends in the community, who kindly enquired after him.

We think the people around Salem Chapel are as fine, intelligent looking folks as we have seen in a long time, and we would be so glad to see a score of those fine looking young gentleman and young ladies from that neighborhood at Elon College this fall.

At Youngsville.

We were at Youngsville, N. C., last Saturday and Sunday. The business of the church was harmously transacted on Saturday, and the communion service, on Sunday, was pleasant.

Saturday night was spent in the excellent Christian home of Bro. James Timberlake. He is always ready for every good word and work. The home of Bro. C. H. Strickland was made sad during July. His wife passed through a severe period of fever, and their dear little boy, Beale Strickland, was called to the glory land. He was one year, three months and five days old. He was an intelligent, beautiful child. May God bless the parents and help them so to live that some day, they may dwell with him in the bright home above.

Sincerity in Prayer.

The test of our sincerity in prayer is not in what we say, but what we do. Prayer that does not mean work, and leads to work, is not prayer. It may consist of well arranged sentences or loud words, but it is not prayer. And hence it is that all earnest workers for any cause are persons who have strong anxiety for the success of that cause. Men do not act without impulse or motive power; and prayer is a powerful source of the inspiration and faith that lead to effort.

"Say what is prayer, when it is prayer indeed?
The mighty utterance of a mighty need,
The man is praying who doth press with might
Out of his darkness into God's own light."

Durham, N. C.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—The 5th Sunday in July found me at Berea in Norfolk Co., Va., in readiness to assist Rev. J. P. Barrett in a meeting of days, but it rained day and night a good portion of the time I was there and disturbed our congregation very much every day. But we had a good congregation nearly all the time and a good meeting. Friday the last day I was there was so rainy we could not get a congregation and consequently the pastor didn't open the doors of the church to receive members and I didn't learn the number of converts. It was a great treat to visit this congregation where I held a meeting fourteen years since. I saw quite a number that were converted at that meeting while many others had crossed over the Jordan. Dr. Barrett has a fine work with the churches at Berea and Providence and is much beloved by his congregations. While at Norfolk I called on Rev. S. S. Barrett my kinsman who is gradually wearing away and repining for the grave and the better world.

The 1st, Sunday found me back again at my post of duty with my church at Durham, net a good congregation twice on Sunday, and in Sabbath school.

Monday morning I boarded the train for Four Oaks, N. C., to assist Rev. J. A. Jones in a meeting at Spilona, where I reached Tuesday morning in time for services. Here we had a good meeting and when I left there had been some 8 or 10 converts I suppose and the meeting going on. That was my first visit to that church and it was a very pleasant one. I also preached Thursday night at Four Oaks and we had a pleasant service. And I spent the time while here with my cousin Dr. Wellons and family that I was pleased to meet. I spent a few hours in Selma very pleasantly. With the kind family of Mr. Tuck Etheredge and friends of long standing.

Saturday morning found me at my work in Durham. And soon Sunday is passed and the days work done and numbered with things of the past.

I am expecting to assist Rev. K. D. Holmes a few days this week nine miles from our city.

J. W. WELLONS.

Holland Items.

We rejoice to say our meeting at Holland was a grand and glorious success. Over 50 were converted and 29 united with the church. The last day of the meeting (Friday) was the great day of the feast. Twenty-nine made a profession in about one hour. It was an occasion of great spiritual power. I never have witnessed a greater and deeper manifestation of divine grace. The entire congregation seemed under the influence of the Spirit, and there was a move from every direction towards the altar. One brother who had been struggling for days to be freed from sin and guilt, got so happy he was still rejoicing the day following when I met him. Bro. H. H. Butler was the chief laborer in the meeting; Bro. J. W. Rawls gave us two excellent sermons; Bro. Jos. H. Jones assisted by exhortation and prayer, and Bro. John Harrell was with us one day. Baptism will be administered next 4th Sunday evening at 3 o'clock when others will, most probably, unite with the church.

We are pleased to have Mrs. E. M. Porter and daughter Lillian, our daughter and grand daughter from Elon College, visiting us. They are in good health and are pleased with Elon and the people.

It was my pleasure to be with Bro. R. D. H. Demorest yesterday at Union, Southampton Co., in the commencement of his protracted meeting there. Will probably be with him again during the week.

R. H. HOLLAND.

When the Chestow Baptist Church was without a pastor, the young people formed a Christian Endeavor society. For months only four or five members attended the meetings. No encouragement was received; still the young people met, prayed, sung, and did what they could. They held their first annual meeting on April 19, and reported twenty-five active and four associate members. Ninety friends afterwards partook of a coffee supper.—Christian Endeavor (England).

There are so many people who never do anything in the world and the church just because they never brace up their mind to a decision; everything in their mind is in a state of solution; you cannot get a precipitate. If you could label their minds you would have to write on them, "Decision in solution." There is only one thing they do decide, and that is not to decide. As Christian Endeavorers we say, "We do decide."—Rev. J. Alford Davies, at the English Convention.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—Have you not been surprised of late at the large number of letters in the Corner. I have not; But have been at the very few that come. Perhaps when that train up there gets to Raleigh it will have some letters for the Corner. Any way I would suggest that it is time for several of you to send in. Elon College will open in a few weeks and we want to help some poor fellow to get an education, so we need your nickels and dimes, and the Corner needs your letters.

I am very sorry about those lost letters for I cannot find them any place at all. The money was not for I took that out and gave to Aunt Myrtle.

Be sure to write soon for I am anxious to hear from you. Love to all.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

Loving Back.

Little Alice was playing with her doll while her mother was writing. When her mother had finished the writing she told Alice she could come and sit in her lap, and Alice said, "I'm so glad; I wanted to love you so much, mamma."

"Did you, darling?" And she clasped her tenderly. "I am very glad my Alice loves me so; but I fancy you were not very lonely while I wrote; you and dolly seemed to be having a happy time together."

"Yes we had, mamma; but I got tired after a while of loving her."

"And why?"
"Oh, because she never loves me back!"

"And that is why you love me?"
"That is one why, mamma; but not the first one, or the best."

"And what is the first and best?"
"Why, mamma, don't you guess?"
—and the blue eyes grew very bright and earnest.

"It's because you loved me when I was too little to love you back; that's why I love you so."

Parity of Thought.

Boys and girls as they grow will learn the ins and outs of this wicked world. If their parents do not give them this knowledge, somebody else will, and the manner in which this information is given is, in all moral respects, vastly more important than the matter. The parent should instruct the child in everything it should know, satisfy its curiosity within proper limits, and thus pre-occupy the ground that would otherwise be sown by chance cultivators and more with the tares of vice than with the wheat of knowledge.

It is simply astonishing how soon young children pick up slang words, vile words, profane words, and attach to them meaning. Objectionable words and phrases seem armed with hooked burrs and cling tenaciously to the mind they catch hold of. It is equally surprising how instinctively they conceal all this knowledge from their parents. It is not possible for the mother to cultivate too great intimacy with her child. She should have the juvenile heart spread out before her as a mirror, reflecting every thought, every feeling, every passion of the child. Thus she will be able judiciously to administer antidotes to vice and build up safeguards to virtue. When there is a perfect understanding between parents and children; when the daughter feels that she can carry every thought and desire to her mother, and the son is in full sympathy and counsel with his father, there is little danger that the happiness of Christian parents will be wrecked by profligacy of their children, little danger that the children will wander far from approved lines of conduct.—Christian Advocate.

One evening when the Floating society of Oakland, Cal., was down at the long wharf holding a meeting, the saloon keeper on the wharf came to the door and railed at them for coming down there and making a disturbance. He said, "You will ruin my business if you keep on coming down here," and since then the S. P. Company have offered that building where the saloon is to the Floating Society for about one-half the rent that the saloon pays to open a reading-room for the benefit of the sailors. — The Pacific Endeavorer.

I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. The Slaughter of Railway Employees.

Mr. Henry C. Adams, statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission, presents in The Forum the following startling showing of deaths and accidents to railroad employees:

Total number of railway employees (all kinds).....749,301
 Number killed in one year.....2,451
 Number injured in one year.....22,396

This means one death for every 306 and one injury for every thirty men employed. Confining the statement to those employees engaged directly in the handling of trains, that is to say, engineers, firemen, conductors, and other trainmen, the results are beyond the experience in any other business or trade.

Total number of trainmen only.....153,235
 Number killed in one year...1,459
 Number injured in one year...13,172

This means one death for every 105 and one injury for every twelve men engaged in handling trains. In no other employment, not even in mining, which is a most dangerous occupation, can such results be shown.

As to the chief causes of deaths and injuries, the total number killed in coupling and uncoupling cars was 339, and the number injured was 7,842; while the total number killed in falling from trains and engines was 561, and the total number injured was 2,363. That is to say, 37.94 per cent of the total number of deaths and 45.57 per cent of the total number of injuries sustained by railway employees resulted while coupling cars or setting brakes.

Out of a total of 1,105,042 cars used in freight service, there are but 87,390 fitted with automatic couplers and but 100,990 equipped with train brakes.—We can well understand, in the light of such figures, when taken in connection with the fact that there are forty-four different kinds of couplers and nine kinds of train brakes in actual use that so-called safety appliances, as at present used, increase the danger of railway employment.

Mr. Adams advocates the adoption by the Government of uniform appliances for coupling, and the requirement that all roads shall use them.—Selected.

30 North Carolina Sermons.

I have read with pleasure and profit "Thirty North Carolina Sermons" edited and published by Rev. Levi Branson, D. D., of Raleigh Dr. Branson deserves credit for trying to rescue some of the sermon literature of the North Carolina pulpit from utter perishing. The book represents in its sermons nearly all the Evangelical Churches. It is good reading—every line and syllable—especially to general readers; but as a book of sermons, it is open to serious criticism. Too many of the sermons so called, are not sermons at all; but mere outlines. No such sermons were ever preached; a condensed resume is published but it is not a sermon. The sermon should be printed as it fell from the lips of the preacher—then we know him as he is, as well as is possible from the printed page. There are some excellent sermons in the book, decidedly good. The two sermons over which thoughtful minds will think most and linger longest are "The Lost Legacy" by Rev. P. H. Fleming of the Christian church at Graham, and "Heavenly Recognition" by Rev. H. T. Darnall of the Presbyterian church at Durham. There are many ways of spending a half-dollar very many of them are worse than buying this book.

Strewing the Golden Grain.

BY KATHARINE LEE BATES.

Strewing the golden grain,
Sowing for sun or rain,
Shall this suffice that our souls may eat?
There is whiter bread than is made from wheat.

Ah, for the larksome deed
Time plucks up as a weed!
But myrtle and lily and balsam leaf,
How came these in our harvest sheaf?

'Tis our angels softly go
After us down the row,
And the broken hope and the hidden need
Sow in our furrows for beauty seed.

— Selected.

From Airfield, Va.

We left this point on Friday, Aug. 4th, and reached Elon College, N. C., about one o'clock Saturday a. m. Saturday afternoon we began a protracted meeting at Shallow Ford, N. C. Rev. M. L. Hurley was with us on Sunday, and after preaching an excellent sermon, he administered the Lord's Supper for us. We are very sorry to find Bro. Hurley so feeble yet. He was with us again on Monday, but did not feel able to preach. Rev. C. C. Peel was with us after Monday, and did all the preaching until the close of the meeting. Bro. Peel's sermons were fine and to the point. We had a good meeting. The church was almost thoroughly revived, sixteen professed faith in Christ, ten united themselves with the church, and Bro. Peel administered the ordinance of baptism to seven. Others will join the church at my next appointment. May the Lord greatly bless those who are just beginning a new life in Christ.

Thursday night, at the close of the meeting, we returned to the College, where we spent a very pleasant time with friends and schoolmates, until Saturday a. m., when we left for Mt. Zion. We found our Mt. Zion people very sad. On Aug. 1st, in spite of all the efforts that could be put forth by loving friends and skilled physicians, the death officer approached the home of Bro. J. B. Richmond and took from him his loving companion. Sister Richmond was a member of Mt. Zion Christian Church, and was a devoted Christian lady. In the death of Sister Richmond, Mt. Zion loses one of its strongest Christian workers; but while we fully realize our loss, it is her gain, because we believe that death to her was "swallowed up in victory." May the blessing of God be upon the bereaved husband and children, and may they realize that "those that sleep in Jesus, God will bring forth with him." Her funeral was preached by Rev. Mr. Blanchard of the Baptist church.

On the night of Aug. 11th the same officer invaded the home of Bro.

John Christefer, and took from the loving mother and father, their only child, which was only nine months old. May the blessings of the Father, be upon the bereaved parents, and may they be able to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." The funeral was conducted by the writer, from Mt. Zion Church, Aug. 12th.

At four o'clock, on the above named day, the regular quarterly conference of the church met. The business was all pleasant and transacted in a spirit of kindness and brotherly love. Sunday a. m. we meet a small congregation to whom we tried to preach the word. After the sermon, the emblems of the Saviour's broken body and spilt blood, were administered by Rev. R. G. Tinnin. Bro. Tinnin is very old and feeble, but strong and robust spiritually.

Monday a. m. at two o'clock we boarded the train at Mebane for E. Va., reaching my father's home that afternoon, nearly sick for want of sleep and rest. Three days this week have been spent in teaching singing school. Yesterday I was called on to preach the funeral of Sister Victoria H. Kitchen. Sister Kitchen had been sick for several weeks, and Friday she fell asleep in Jesus. She was a member of Barrett's Church, and longed to go home to be with the Lord. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss. One of her sons, a young man about twenty-two, has been an invalid from rheumatism, for several years. He is anxious for the Lord to take him home with his mother. But don't grieve Sammie, the Lord always takes care of his children, even though they be afflicted. May all the family find sweet consolation, in this sad hour of affliction in the precious promises of God's Word. Sister Kitchen was a first cousin of Revs. W. B. Wellons, D. D., and J. W. Wellons.

At this time the dear mother and oldest sister of the writer are very ill. May I not ask all of God's people to join me in prayer, that they may soon be restored to health and soundness of body again.

To day the Lord is blessing us with gentle showers of rain upon the thirsty earth. Already the vegetation seems to stand stronger and look refreshed. If our lives were such that we might continually receive showers of grace, how much stronger and robust would we be spiritually.

WILLIE J. LAINE.

Complimentary.

The high grade of Elon College and the proficiency of her professors are coming to be more and more known and admitted as time goes on. It is with a degree of pleasure the SUN reprints the following from the News-Observer-Chronicle:

"We have read with grateful pride the mention in your columns of several of our North Carolina boys who have taken the highest honors at the leading Northern Universities. The recent graduates of Harvard University, in post graduate department, escaped the notice of your correspondent, Profs. J. O. Atkinson and E. L. Moffitt, of Elon College. These young men graduated with first honors. In a private letter the Dean says that no such record has been made at Harvard for years as that of Atkinson who led all his classes.

Flattering inducements were offered them to accept professorships North; but love for the old North State, love for the educational development of their native State, love for the college which is fast taking its place among the first institutions of the State, led them to return to Elon College. As she welcomes them to her recitation rooms, her elegant and richly furnished halls, her handsome and newly seated chapel, her improved facilities in the chemical and physical departments, and looks with pride on her increasing patronage and enviable reputation, she will say to them, 'You stood guardians at my cradle, share the joys and honors of my youth.'"

Opening of the University.

The next session of the University will open Thursday, Sept. 7th. Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 5th and 6th, will be devoted to registration and the allotment of rooms. Lectures will begin Thursday. President Winston has had over 1,000 letters during the summer, and the prospects are fine for a large attendance.

True Manliness.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Be strong. 1 Cor. 16:33.

Every man has his ideal. This is true in every department of life. Men conceive of things beyond and above their present attainments. The humblest artisan who uses tools has conceived more useful ones than has ever been made. No architect has ever erected such a building as that of which he has thought. The sculptor and painter have each an idea of beautiful works of art, such as never have been produced in marble or on canvass. The artist is never satisfied with his work. He sees where he could improve it. A distinguished painter once said: "When I paint a picture that I am satisfied with I shall quit, for then I know that I have reached the limit of my work."

As there are ideals in all departments of life, so there are ideal men. There are ideal warriors, statesmen, poets, bankers, and philosophers. Every young man has an ideal character before his mind that he desires to attain. This is natural to man and it is a wise and benevolent arrangement of God; for without this there would never be any advancement in the individual nor in society. Unless above himself he can erect himself, how poor a thing is man. Men have different ideal characters in their intellectual and moral development; for man never rises above his ideal. He may reach it, but he never transcends it. Different nations and different ages have their ideal men. In the lower forms of civilization and culture the ideal man is one of force, strength, brutal power. It is impossible for such nations to conceive of the ideal man without physical strength. The most celebrated hero of the mythological age of Greece was Hercules the god of strength.

Physical strength is not to be ignored, nor undervalued. The body is the home of the soul while in this life, and through it the work of life is to be accomplished; therefore the young man should seek to develop his muscular system, and attain the highest possible measure of physical strength. This will increase his power for good in the world. The magnificent physical manhood of Daniel Webster was one of the elements of his greatness. When on a visit in England he attended a court ball given in his honor. When he entered the magnificent hall one of the first ladies of the court noticed him, and deeply impressed with his personal presence, asked in an excited manner, "Who is that stranger who has just entered the hall?" The reply was, "Daniel Webster of America." With bated breath she exclaimed: "He looks like a god."

It is true that some of the greatest intellects in the history of man were clothed in feeble bodies, and though they accomplished much they could have done a far greater and better work if they had been physically strong. Dr. W. E. Channing was a man of a great mind, but of feeble physical strength. His whole life was a struggle for existence, and after writing and preaching one of his great sermons he would be confined to his bed for days from sheer exhaustion. How much more he could have accomplished in his work had he possessed the physical strength of Daniel Webster, and how much better the work he did do might have been.

But young men should remember that the perfection of physical training is only the perfection of animalism, and that a man so trained is merely fit for the circus or the amphitheater. Man possesses a higher nature than his physical being, and he should make the animal subservient to the intellectual. The fore head, and not the hind head should govern. Some men have never emigrated out of their animal nature. Their inspiration comes from their animal impulses, and they find their happiness in the indulgence of their carnal passions. They come within Plato's definition of man, for he defined man to be a two-legged animal without feathers. Diogenes plucked the feathers from a cock and said: "Behold Plato's man!"

It is only by the strict observance of the laws of health that the young man can attain, and retain, physical health. There is no other possible way for him to "be strong." Intemperance in eating, drinking, and in the indulgence of the carnal passions is ruinous to the health. It destroys the physical man. How many wrecks of noble physical manhood we meet in all the walks of life.

It is our duty to "be strong." Physical weakness may, and sometimes does, come from causes over which we have no control; but usually it is the result of the violation of the laws of health. Horace Mann once said to me that when was sick he was always ashamed, for he felt that he had sinned against the laws of health, and that this was shameful.

When Paul said, "Be strong," did he mean merely intellectual strength? This is superior, to physical strength, and enables man to do things and accomplish ends entirely beyond the reach of physical strength. Through his intellect man has mastered the mighty forces of nature, and made them his servants. He has laid his hand upon the sweeping wind, and harnessed it to his machinery; has called down the lightning from the clouds and made it carry the messages of love and business on the wings of thought; turned the waters of the river aside from their channel and compelled them to do his work. I have seen one man, through the aid of machinery, doing the work of two hundred men. A few years ago it took from twelve to fourteen men to make a pin, each performed separately a different part of the work. The lowest cost was 12½ cents for a paper of 120 to 144, with the points rough and blunt. Now a single machine turns out a stream of 200 pins a minute, all ready to be finished, and a paper containing 240 or 238 is sold at 3 to 5 cents. A boy old and strong enough to drive a team of horses will with a self-binder cut more grain, and do the work better, than twenty men could fifty years ago. In England there are today 15,000 steam engines driven by means of coal, with power equal to 2,000,000 of men. A knowledge of chemistry has put in operation machinery equaling the unaided power of 300,000,000, or 400,000,000 of men. The power of machinery in England, it mills alone, is equal to 600,000,000 of men, and one man can now do as much by the aid of steam, as it required 250 men to accomplish 50 years ago. Man's power and knowledge advance with equal pace.

Through his intellect a man may, and sometimes does, rise superior to his fellow men, and sway the multitude, like a Webster, a Calhoun, and a Corwin; but his influence may be anything but beneficial to mankind. He may be a keen politician, and yet prove merely an Aaron Burr, known by the slimy track he leaves, or an Ingersoll going through the world with a sneer at sacred things, undermining the faith of young men in God, and sending them adrift upon the wild surges of the sea of infidelity, or a Voltaire, a Hume, a Gibbon, a Paine, a Bradlaugh, cursing the world with his infidelity. Physical strength need to be guided by enlightened reason to save the man from animalism, and intellectual strength must be governed by right ideas of God and duty or the man is an educated devil. No college should ever graduate a student who is immoral.

In the truly strong man there is a blending of the human and divine. Paul recognized this in his own experience. He said, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God." It was the union of the divine and human in the life of Moses that made him the strong man that he was. "By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible."

God was a conscious presence with him, and the inspiration of his life. The thought of God, of his holiness, justice, power and presence was a part of his very being; and armed him against every foe. He was strong in his faith in God. Young man, you may have the same strength. "Be strong."

Paul was familiar with the intellectuality of the Greek Schools, and he did not despise them; but he thought of a higher strength, viz.: that derived from a religious life—spiritual strength. This is the highest form of strength, and just what every man needs to meet the emergencies of life. Young men, there are conflicts in life that nothing can prepare you to meet successfully but the moral strength that comes from the religion of Jesus Christ. Life is a warfare. A skirmish is kept up with the enemy almost all the time, but there are pitched battles to be fought with satan, when the question is to be settled who will rule, God or the devil. One such battle is fought in every life. Christ "was in all points tempted like as we are" all through his life, but he had one great pitched battle to fight with satan on the mount of temptation in the wilderness. This is true of all men. Martin Luther fought such a battle with satan. He says, "Once upon a time the devil came to me, and said, 'Martin Luther you are a great sinner, and you will be damned.'—'Stop, stop!' said I, 'one thing at a time. I am a great sinner: that is true, though you have no right to tell me if I confess it. What next?—'Therefore you will be damned.' 'That is not good reasoning. It is true I am a great sinner; but it is written, 'Jesus Christ came to save sinners: therefore I shall be saved.' So I cut the devil off with his own sword; and he went away mourning, because he could not cast me down by calling me a sinner."

Young men have this battle to fight with satan. The junior class of a southern college had assembled in a student's room to spend the night in riot and debauch. Amid the crowd was one who had never recited a had lesson since his matriculation. In his studies he was head and shoulders above the class. That day he had failed. A shade of the deepest gloom came over him and he was melancholy. But wine and jest passed around while he felt like Lucifer in Eden, where all was joy and gladness around him. Said a classmate: "come Bob, quaff this bumper, and it will make you feel bright as a hermit's lamp." The tempter whispered in his ear, "Drink once and forget the past." A powerful struggle took place in his soul for a moment; but conscience triumphed, and he silently shook his head. He retired to his room, gave vent to a flood of tears and the victory was won. That boy never drank—not even once. He took the valedictory, and is now president of a college. An able and experienced thinker has justly said: As no man knows when the hour of his opportunity will come, so no man knows when the storm of his temptation will suddenly burst upon him. There is no science which can predict the tempest to which every human life is exposed; there is no map on which the storm-centers of the future are indicated; there is no code of signals warning of approaching perils. The strain upon character comes often like a tropical storm, which rises without warning over a cloudless horizon or bursts without the possibility of escape from a radiant sky. There is only one way in which a man can prepare for these sudden and critical strains which are to test the very tissue of his character, and that is the flawless building in truth and righteousness. The oak survives the tempest by virtue of the daily accretions of strength which have entered into it year by year; the man survives the swift and tumultuous advance of temptation by virtue of the moral power which, almost unconsciously, he has slowly accumulated from day to day. It is true that sometimes the strong man who breaks is a man in whom the signs of disintegration were already evident. The tree which falls in the silence of a summer's day was rotten within, and, as a rule, the man who suddenly collapses morally, yields to a process of decay which has long been going on within him. He who is faithful to himself hour by hour is all the while preparing for the storm that may some time burst upon him. The storm is certain to come. No human life is so sheltered that it escapes those great temptations, which, unresisted, play havoc with a man's career. He who lives without the thought of this possibility is as criminally unwise as the captain would be who should give up all care of his ship because, at the moment, waters were smooth and skies were fair. To prepare for peril ought to be the constant solicitude of every man, and this preparation is nothing more than the daily rectitude which becomes first a habit and then a permanent and imperishable character.

Man is innately religious, not necessarily Christian, but religious. This is obvious from the following considerations: 1. No nation has ever been found without a temple, however rude or simple. They have had some system of religion, and some form of worship. They have had some idea of distinction between good and evil. This is seen in their laws, and their punishment of wrong doing. 2. Another evidence of the religiousness of man is the fact that infidels whenever they get into deep anguish or trouble turn to God in prayer. Thus it was with Voltaire, Paine, and the earl of Rochester; and Volney when in danger of shipwreck threw himself on deck crying, "O, my God! my God!—what shall I do—what shall I do!"

These facts prove that man is a religious being, and experience shows that he cannot trample with impunity upon his moral nature. Hence the necessity for the development of his religious nature as well as his intellectual. Paul's ideal man is one fully developed physically, intellectually and spiritually. His ideal man was Christ, and when he directs man into the path to perfection, he says as the starting point. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Christ is the highest ideal of man ever seen in this world. He is perfect. Men have never been able to conceive of anything in the true manhood above and beyond him, nor can infidels pick any flaws in his character. Once, at mid-day, Diogenes went through the streets of his city with a lighted lantern in his hand, as if searching for something. A citizen asked him what he was seeking; and he replied, "A man!" He said he had found children in Sparta, and women in Athens; but a man he had never seen. The perfect man had not yet appeared among men. He existed only in ideal.

The character of men is like the view of distant mountains, which look beautiful; but prove to be covered with brambles, divided by ravines, the home of snakes and wild beast. Thus there are men whose characters when viewed by the world superficially, seem to be perfect, but on closer investigation we find the imperfections common to humanity. The character of Christ alone stands the most rigid scrutiny. He is the ideal man. The testimony of all experience and history is, "Behold the man!"

Paul's ideal man was not the perfection of the physical and intellectual alone, but the divine blending with the human, strength blended with love, intellectual culture with the graces of the Holy Spirit. Paul was a man in whom love and power were commingled. He could write the tenderest letters to the churches in which he exhorts them "with tears" to remain steadfast in the faith, while at the same time he was strong enough to meet and triumph over the most powerful opposition. Thus it was with Christ. He feared not the face of man, but when he denounced the Jews for their sins, he manifested his love in his tears over their heartlessness.

Man must have strength to stand and withstand. Living under God's word and providence; guided by conscience, it is man's duty to withstand evil, and stand up for righteousness. All wrong is to be withstood. The King of France ordered the Prince De Conde his choice of three things, first to go to mass; second to die; or third, to be imprisoned for life. The answer, "with regard to the first I am fully determined never to go to mass; as to the other two, I am so perfectly indifferent, that I leave the choice of your majesty." He was a strong man.

The young man needs strength that will make him independent, self-reliant, as a worker, who deserves all he gets. Too many young men depend on outside help, and here is where many parents make a mistake. They labor hard and live sparingly to give their children a start in the world, as it is called. Lifting a young man afloat in the world with money left him by relatives, is like tying bladders under the arms of one who cannot swim; ten chances to one he will lose the bladders and go to the bottom. Teach him to swim, and he will never need the bladders. Give your child a sound education, intellectual and moral, and you have done enough for him. See to it that his mind is cultivated, his morals pure, and his whole nature subservient to the laws of God; and you have given him that which is more valuable to him than the wealth of the Indies.

Young man, you should not be the creature of circumstances; but the architect of circumstances. It is character which builds existence out of circumstances. Our strength is measured by our plastic power. From the same materials one man builds palaces, another hovels; one warehouses, another villas. Bricks and mortar are bricks and mortar till the architect makes them something else. Washington and Aaron Burr were young men of equal ability, and surroundings; but one became the father of his country, and the admiration of the civilized world. The other became a blighting curse the incarnation of social impurity. The molding power in the mind and heart of these two young men was widely different.

The true life must be worked out in obedience to the law of God, for he is the ruler of the universe, and no man can trample with impunity upon his law. It holds us to strict account. When the force of the current had carried away the bridge Heretics had caused to be thrown over the Hellespont, on his grand expedition into Greece, he was so enraged, that he not only ordered the heads of the workmen to be cut off, but, like a mad man, inflicted lashes upon the sea to punish it for its insolence; and he, moreover, affected to hold it in future control by throwing fetters into it. We smile at this man's folly in assuming control over the restless waves of the sea, but he was just as wise as the young man who disregards the moral law of God and seeks to work out success and secure happiness in his own way. What a sad illustration of this truth we have in the life of Burns, nature's poet. He was the victim of the social evils of his day, and his history is a solemn warning to all young men against the fascination of the wine cup.

Man was created in the image of God, but it has been defaced by sin; and the work of Christ is to restore man to the divine image. A researcher after art in Italy learned from a book that fell into his hands that there was a portrait of Dante painted by Giotto, and was led to suspect where it had been traced. There was an apartment used as an outhouse for storing of wood, hay, and the like. Obtaining privilege he cleaned away the rubbish, and experimented upon the whitewashed wall. He soon discovered signs of the long hidden portrait. Little by little, with loving skill, he opened up the sad, thoughtful, stern face of the grand old Tuscan poet. Sin has done for man what wash did for the painting. It has covered the likeness of God upon the soul, but Christ comes with loving skill through his truth and spirit to cleanse the soul and bring out the divine image again. "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

This fact opens to us a glorious future in which we shall be transformed into the image of Christ. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." This likeness of Christ is brought about by the regeneration and development of man's moral and intellectual nature through the purifying and elevating influence of the truth and Spirit of God. There is a legend that tells us that when Christ was a boy playing with his comrades one Sabbath day, he made birds of clay. As they were standing on the ground, an old Salducee came along and disgusted with the boy's sport broke the birds to pieces; but Jesus waved his hand above the broken birds, and they took flight, and went singing heavenward. This is only a legend, but it symbolizes a great fact, for when man is brought under the loving influence of Christ he is freed from the bondage of sin, and goes singing towards heaven. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Man was created for an immortal destiny, and is capable of endless growth in wisdom, knowledge, goodness, usefulness and happiness. You may answer, "man is a reed, the feeblest thing in nature"—true, but he is a reed that thinks. It needs not that the universe should arm itself to crush him. An exhalation, a drop of water may destroy him; but if the material universe were to crush him, he is yet nobler than the universe, and shall outlive it.

"Know'st thou the importance of a soul immortal?
Behold this midnight glory—worlds on worlds!
Amazing pomp! Redouble this amazement;
Ten thousand add and twice ten thousand more;
Then weigh the whole! One soul outweighs them all,
And calls the astonishing magnificence
Of unintelligent creation poor."

Man is always greater than his surroundings, and his ideal grows with his growth. The traveler in the Alps sometimes beholds painted on the clouds at a distance, in wondrous colors, his own walking figure, in large glowing outlines. Thus every one sees an enlarged image of himself forward of and above him, softened and etherealized. This world cannot make good for us this ideal of moral and spiritual character. We can never reach it here. This fact teaches us that we were created for immortality, and that there is a purer and nobler state of being than this where we shall realize our highest ideal. This enabled David to exclaim in triumph, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness."

This sublime hope inspires the soul of the believer with the spirit of heroism, that enables the young man to meet and triumph over all opposition. It enabled the young man Moses in the court of Egypt to dash the sparkling cup of pleasure from his lips, to turn his back upon the pride and glory of empire, and identify himself with the despised people of God; "esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

Young men, be true to truth and to God, and success is yours; but remember that this calls for self-denial.

The historian Anquetil of France one of the small members of literary men in France who refused to bow to the Napoleonic yoke, and as a result he sank into the greatest poverty, living on bread and milk, and limiting his expenses to three sous a day. He said, "I have still two sous a day for the conquer of Marengo and Austerlitz. "But if you fall sick," said his friend to him, "you will need the help of a pension. Why not do as others do? Pay out to the Emperor—you have need of him to live." "I do not need him to die," was the heroic answer of the noble man. He was strong in moral convictions, in his will power. This is the strength that conquers self and triumphs over all outer enemies. Young men, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

In the museum of the capitol of Rome there stands the marble image of a child, holding in her arms a dove and slinking from a serpent which is at her feet. It is a symbol of the human soul becoming conscious of the difference between holiness and sin. It is an embodiment of the truth that good is always good and evil always evil even when both are expressed in the form of beauty. It is a sermon in stone that the world will always need.

Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." His aim is to produce a sanctified and noble manhood, preparatory to angelhood in a higher world.

If I must answer you according to my honest convictions. I would say we have at least two more than we really need, unless the paper was better than it is; but there are three copies that come into the church, Deacon Patience takes it since our pastor left, and there is old Bro Willing, one of the poorest in the community, he is afflicted, with a family, and he says he had rather do without a part of his daily bread than do without the SUN. And there is old Sister Leader who takes it, who is not able to take care of herself; but she takes the SUN and reads about all in it and she goes all through the community and gives the news without our taking it. Now as to myself, I don't know that I will ever take it, unless there are some changes in it; and besides this, I am taking the New Observer-Chronicle, The N. Y. World, Atlanta Constitution, Progressive Farmer, House and Home, Evening Visitor. True and Co's Publications, Sinsons Publications, and other papers that don't cost me more than from 50 to $1 00 per year, and also I have just got me a full set of the latest fashionable novels, and I think I have as much as I need without the SUN, as well, I can't say any thing much about it.

Well, well! well! Bro. Jones, I am surprised at you, the idea of only three copies of the SUN in your church of 150 well-to-do members, and those taken by the poorest members in your church. Bro. Willing is a true example of an exemplary Christian. He is poor, yet he is self-sacrificing for the gospel's sake. Old Sister Leader is one of the best examples I know. She does without the comforts of life yet takes the SUN, reads it and then goes through the community to do what you brethren ought to do is more than could be expected of her. God bless her. Now as to yourself. I am not surprised at you as you are taking so many secular, political, and trashy papers. I know some of them to be the trashiest, filthiest, the most impure and corrupt literature in the world, not fit to be found in the home of Christian people. I am not surprised at you not taking any interest in your church, when your heart and mind are filled with the dirtiest trash in the world. I fear there is not much room for the love of God in your heart. I am sure novels and the love of God do not hitch at the same rack. Have you a Bible in your house? and do you read it? Why do you object to the SUN?

For you to ask me if I had a Bible in my house is to intrude upon civilization and intelligence, when we take the Bible as our rule of faith and practice. Yes I have a good Bible in my house and it is kept as neat as you ever saw one. We have had that Bible for about 50 years I reckon and it is not soiled yet, I was looking at it a few months ago when a brother minister came in and asked for the Bible to have family prayers and I looked into the bottom of the old blue chest for it and I found it wrapped up in a sheep skin. Yes I have read the Bible some, I used to read it when I was young; but since I have become old I have so much else to read I have not the time to read the Bible now. My real objection to the SUN is, it is too high, $1. is enough for it. These are a great many other papers just as good as it is that only cost $1.00 per year. It seems to me the whole thing is a money trap any how, in my opinion; some times it is a week old when Deacon Patience gets it, and some times it don't come at all. Now when I pay for anything I want it at the time it is due. Another reason is, the editor has proposed several times, that if we would make a great effort and get so many new subscribers he would make some improvements in the paper, and I have not seen the improvements yet, though Sister Leader says it is the best paper she ever saw and that is in the best condition she ever knew it. And in a few more months the editor comes out asking for another rally all along the lines, that he is bound to have help or the SUN will go down. Another objection is the editor will keep a communication on hand till it almost sours before it is published and then when it comes out he some times cuts out or boils it down till the author himself would hardly know his own production, that is what they say about the SUN.

Well! well! well!!! My Dear Bro. Jones, I wonder if you treat your money and goods as you treat your Bible, I do not believe you treat anything else as you treat your Bible and your church (religion). I do not believe that a true Christian will look up his Bible in this intelligent gospel land for six years and never read it. How can you expect to go to heaven by neglecting your Christian duty? It is a great blessing you have no children to inherit your evil influence, I think you have exhausted your objections against the SUN and I must say you are mistaken and your objections are without a foundation, I am really surprised that you are a member of the church. I think you need a missionary at your church, for I believe there are some in the far off land, among the heathen nations, who lay a better example than you. I pity your church, I pity your home and your poor soul. From the objection you have to the Bible. I am not surprised at your objections to the SUN nor anything else that has good in view. You think the SUN ought not to be over $1.00 per year. I know it cannot be published at that price. I will say this, that according to the expenses of the office and the number of subscriptions to the SUN it ought to be worth about $3.00 per year. As to the advertisements that is not objectional from the fact that there is more reading matter in it than is read by its readers and they help to pay the expenses of the paper. If we all would give the SUN a better support the editor could have more time to devote to the work. The editor should be commended for pushing the work of the paper and getting all the subscriptions possible, for it is by continual work that every thing is kept in motion. The changing of editors is some times a necessity; some times he works himself down and has to retire from the great burden to recruit his health. Some times he is forced to give it up because he has spent about all he has and has to go to something else to make a living. I am sure editors, preachers and doctors have very ungrateful positions, and have to bear unkind criticisms. And his repeated calls are certainly necessary because there are so many people just like you. I do pity you from the bottom of my heart. And I say God bless the poor editor.

Attend Your Own Church.

You are not a member of all the churches in the community, but you do belong to one specific church. When you joined that church, you promised before God and man that you would "attend upon its ordinances." That meant you would be a regular attendant upon the services of that particular church on Sunday and in the week. And yet, perhaps, you have drifted into the habit of attending some other place of worship, even when your own church is open for service. It may be that you "visit around" among the churches, "sampling" each of them in turn, and going wherever there seems to be promise of the liveliest time. Now, this is a very objectionable and hurtful practice.

Perhaps you say: "I live so far away from my own church that I cannot attend it often; so I go to churches nearer home." This being the case, you ought to transfer your membership to the church that you propose to attend. To be a member of one church and regularly attend another, is wrong in principle and injurious in practice. There is no warrant for it either in Scripture or in sound reason.

One says: "I get tired of hearing one man preach all the time." Possibly you do, because you hear in order to be entertained. If your hearing were directed to spiritual profit, you would not get tired so soon. Besides, if your sole object in going to church is to hear what the preacher has to say for your entertainment, your motive is more pagan than Christian. The great object in church-going ought to be, to worship God and do His will. The sermon is important, but subsidiary. You ought to be able to worship God amid the familiar surroundings of your own church better than anywhere else. The question as to who preaches the sermon is much less important than the other question as to your own spiritual attitude toward God and the truth.

Don't be a gadabout. Go regularly to the church to which you belong. It discourages your pastor to know that you care so little for his ministrations. It grieves you fellow-Christians to see that you do not prize their fellowship. It works injury to your own soul to be on the tramp from church to church. Spiritual starvation lies along that line. Before you know it, you will lose what religion you now have.

Be fair and square about this matter. If you do not like the church to which you belong, or if you like some other church so much better that you have made up your mind to attend it and neglect your own, by all means ask for your certificate and join the church that you prefer. But if you wish to retain membership in the church where your name is now recorded, be a regular attendant upon its services.

The only time when you should feel free to attend other churches is when your own church is closed.

Statements to Cause Terror.

The Rev. Thomas Dixon, Baptist, of New York, said lately:

The poverty of the city is an open door to the deepest hell, and through it daily crowd countless thousands, because poverty in the city means loss of a home. There is no home life among the poor of the great city. The word home is stricken from the language of man. The poor live in a den. They exist in a tenement, and the tenement life with its attendant horrors is constantly on the increase in our great cities. In New York city it has swallowed up all the other life practically. The tenement has, like a huge monster, devoured the home. One million three hundred thousand people in this city exist in second and third class tenements. To every so called house in the city of New York there is an average of 19 dwellers. London averages seven. In what is known as the tenement house district there are no fewer than 276,000 families packed together.

Father Thomas J. Dacey, Roman Catholic, New York, took for his subject these words: "No murderer shall enter the kingdom of heaven." He compared capitalist who force their employees to work for small wages to murderers and said that the contribution of their blood money for charitable purposes could not compensate for the wickedness of grinding down the poor. Continuing he said:

There is no place in heaven for those millionaires who have no compassion for their fellow men in starvation. The vanity of women and the thirst of men for wealth have created the conditions of the present age, and a revolution is eminent. Justice cannot be much longer delayed. The human race is dying out to day on account of the vanity of women and the pride of men. They fear to see their families grow too large lest they might thereby lose some of their power and prestige, and the greatest of social sins is daily growing to be more common. What can be more foul than this, and I declare to you that no murderers shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. We cannot serve God, no matter to what religious denomination we belong, if we do not have justice, and there can be no justice where grasping, grinding capital takes advantage of distress and poverty to make the labor of millions contribute still more to the piling up of wealth in the hands of a few. It is murder! The wealthy man who disregards the distress of his brother commits more than the individual murderer. He commits a crime against society. Such a man may be a true husband and faithful father, but he cannot hope to enter into heaven.—Ev.

Election and Reprobation, vs. Acts.

Election from eternity as an act is an absurdity. An act, from "ago," "actus," implies something done, and in order that a thing may have been done implies a specific date in time or eternity when said act was performed.

But, to say that an act was done "from all eternity" is to say that it never was done; for eternity never had a beginning. So to speak of Election and Reprobation as acts done upon individual moral beings "from eternity" is sheer nonsense.

And to affirm that the act of Election or of Reprobation upon certain persons is so definite, as to number that "one cannot be added, or one diminished," does not relieve the subject of its absurdity; for it still implies an act done before eternity began, upon, ideal beings some of whom God intended for eternal life, and others that He intended to create for eternal death, knowingly.

What then shall we say there is no Election taught in the Bible? By no means. There are elections taught in the Bible, and some of these are unconditional and have been "from all eternity"; but they are not acts in reference to persons. They are requisites of God's eternal nature, laid upon moral character, in accordance with the eternal law of fitness in things, requiring such a morally developed state of character in men and angels as shall fit them to live with God in His Kingdom forever. This eternal requisition is not an act. It is God's moral nature, demanding in the very philosophy of moral being such a state of spiritual develop-as shall make it possible and pleasant for that being to dwell in the holy presence of the Infinite Creator, upon the great law of fitness in things.

This eternal nature extends from eternity to eternity, when the moral character of men or angels conflict with the same the possessor of such a character is reprobated, not by any special act, but by the very nature of deity himself. On the other hand when the character of a man or an angel fits this straight-edge of God's holy nature that man or that angel is elected to eternal life; and it is no violation of true philosophy to say, it is from eternity, because God has existed from all eternity.

These thoughts are not written to excite controversy, but simply to give what the writer conceives to be the true philosophy of this once vexed subject.—R. L. A., in R. C. Advocate.

Dead.

At his home near Brown's Summit, N. C., in the 69th year of his age Bro. Hezekiah Rudd passed to the spirit land on the morning of Aug. 8th, 1893. Bro Rudd had been a devoted member of the church at Concord in Caswell county, N. C. For 31 years. A wife and seven children are left to mourn the loss of a husband and father. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends. We laid his body to rest in the grave yard at Hines Chapel to await the resurrection. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

JEREMIAH W. HOLT.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Laine, the writer conducted the burial services of Mrs. Annie E. Richmond, wife of Mr. J. B. Richmond in Mt. Zion Christian church, Aug. 2, 1893. She had been a member of this church for nearly four years but we could not ascertain how long she had had a hope in Christ. Her death was triumphant. From the beginning of her sickness she thought she would die and was fully resigned to go—sometimes rejoicing in her prospects of heaven. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn her departure besides a mother and sister and many friends. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." C. W. BLANCHARD.

Charles Wesley, the son of Mr. Charlie Marshal, aged four years, four months and four days. Little Charlie, was a very bright and interesting child, every body loved him, who knew him. It was very hard to give him up, but we know that he is with him who loved little children, therefore we sorrow not, even as others who have no hope. His funeral sermon was preached at Oakland Christian church by the writer, where his little body was placed away, near loved ones, to await the resurrection morn, God bless and comfort the much bereaved parents.

Near Bethlehem Christian church, Nansemond Co., Va. July 17th 1893, Alphonso Beale Pruden, son of Bro. Mills Pruden, aged nineteen years, one month and twenty-six days. Alphonso was a good young man. He was a member of Bethlehem Christian church, a member of the Sunday school and also a member of the choir. He was a bright and promising young man. He was greatly beloved and will be missed at the church, in the community and at home, where he was so much loved, and where he so much loved to be. Alphonso is now at home, with Jesus in heaven. God bless and comfort the bereaved ones Departed this life July 7th, 1893 after a short illness, near Ivor, Va. Miss Maggie E. Kello, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of the late Dr. S. B. Kello. She spent last session at the Suffolk Female College, graduating in some branches. She returned home at the close of the session to spend her vacation with parents and friends, but was never able to leave home again until called to go to the spirit land. The writer was not intimately acquainted with her, but has been informed by reliable friends that she possessed rare qualities of character.

She was a communicant of the Episcopal church and in her life were beautifully blended those graces and virtues which constitute and adorn Christian character and crown life's purposes. The mother, who has had so many shadows cast on her pathway, enjoys the presence of the Lord and bows meekly to His decrees. Her remains were placed by the side of her fathers in the family burying ground July 8th, 1893. Funeral services by the writer. May the Lord bless and comfort the distressed and trouble ones, and gather all at last to Himself in the home above.

The Ivor Christian Sunday School has again been called to weep. July 1st, 1893, sister Mason Darden wife of Mr. W. T. Darden, and one of the most devout and active ladies of the Sunday school at Ivor, peacefully passed to the land beyond. She was sick for only a short time. When quite a small child she professed faith in Christ and united with the church at Spring Hill. Her life has been a most consistent one and in her death the church and cause of Christ lose a useful advocate. Sister Darden seemed to be an humble inoffensive woman. Her funeral took place from the Ivor Christian church attended by one of the largest congregations I ever saw at that church on such occasions. She was about 35 years old and had been married since April 21, 1881. She leaves a young husband, mother, two sisters and circle of friends. Funeral services conducted by the writer, July 2nd, 1893. I extend to the family a pastor's sympathy.

Ivor Va. July 20, 1893.

One of the most useful of all arts is the art of utilizing. In nothing has science, during the last quarter-century, shown itself more worthy of admiration, than in the immense progress which it has made in the utilizing of waste, refuse, and all seemingly worthless products, of art and nature. Manufacturers now eagerly pay a good price for those things which used to be classed as an encumbrance to civilization. It were well if men could keep pace with science in its discoveries of the arts of utilizing, by learning how to utilize themselves and each other in the propagation of truth, and in the accomplishment of God's work. There is not a person in any church who has not some usable quality, some positiveness of character which is adaptable to the church's needs in one place or another. Instead of worrying ourselves by wondering how a seemingly useless man can be got out of the way, let us find out his strong point, and make use of it. Utilizing that which has been deemed mere rubbish in the church-membership, may not only cancel it as rubbish, but render it a means of enlarged revenue and efficiency to the church as a whole.—S. S. Times.

How often have the world's troubles and confusions grown out of the very largeness of God's giving! He has given us silver too plentifully, and so the commercial world can no longer use it satisfactorily for the one leading purpose for which we have employed it. Its use in a thousand other directions probably will be enlarged, and new processes in the arts will be made possible through this very cheapness. But the world had agreed upon a use for it which depended on its relative scarcity, and now is in trouble because it has not remained scarce enough. So of many a chapter in the world's spiritual history. Trouble and confusion have followed the proclamation that what had been thought the privilege of a few was the rightful birthright of the many. Paul lived and walked among perils manifold, because he proclaimed that God himself was not the monopoly of the Jews, but "the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe." And in later times also men have valued the gifts which they had from God largely because they believed these to be the privilege of a few. To those who do so, God is apt to bring disappointment. Nothing in his kingdom takes its value merely from its scarcity.—S. S. Times.

Good News.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—We held our meeting at Mt. Auburn from the fourth Sunday in July. Our congregations were very good. Rev. T. W. Strowd assisted me in the meeting, he preached good sermons and made good impressions on the minds of this congregations, and he will please excuse me for expressing my own feelings so fully, I was delighted with him as a co-laborer in this meeting. The result of the meeting was, between 15 and 20 professed faith in Christ, 17 accessions, and the church was greatly revived. Our next meeting took place at Damascus from the fifth Sunday in July, and it was a glorious season of rejoicing. Tuesday and Wednesday of this meeting are days long to be remembered for the out pouring of God's Holy Spirit, and as a time of rejoicing. Our dear brother Strowd was with me in this meeting also. Damascus is brother S.'s home church and he greatly enjoyed the meeting with his father, another family relatives and neighbors. The congregations were very good. The result of the meeting was, some 18 or 20 professed faith in Christ, 11 accessions, and the church was greatly revived. I felt that it was good to be there. Our next meeting took place at Pleasant Grove, Va., from the first Sunday in Aug. Uncle Sol Apple came over and spent the week with us in the meeting, and preached one sermon every day from Sunday till the close, his sermons were good and enjoyed much by his friends, I was indeed glad to have this venerable father in the ministry with us. I have never seen such large congregations at any country church: The house is one of largest in the Conference and there was only one day that the house would hold anything like the entire congregation. The meeting was a glorious one, the result was about 40 professions, 26 accessions, and I think the church wonderfully built up. There will be several others to join here at my next appointment. On Saturday morning at the close of the meeting I baptised 24. And now for all these good meetings, we give God the glory, honor and praise. My church at Ingram, Va., on second Sunday was filled to overflowing.

Washington Letter.

The decision of the Behring Sea tribunal of arbitration which was received in Washington yesterday afternoon, while not in accordance with the expectations of either this government or that of Great Britain, was well received by Senators and Representative and members of the administration: It is in the nature of a compromise between the contentions of the two governments, and is a far more satisfactory settlement of the long dispute than ever seemed likely to be arrived at by diplomacy, and there is not the slightest doubt about its being accepted as a final and permanent settlement by both governments of a question which has at several different times come dangerously near to causing war. A gentleman who has been conversant with the negotiations between our government and that of Great Britain for the last ten years, speaking of the decision said: "I think as a whole it gives the United States as much as either Secretary Bayard or Secretary Blaine ever expected to get, and I have the best reasons for the belief that if Great Britain had offered at any time during the negotiations to have conceded what the arbitration has given us the offer would have been accepted by this government." But away above and beyond the questions at issue in the dispute is the benefit to the world at large of the precedent set by two of the most powerful nations of the earth in settling so serious a dispute by peaceful arbitration, in accordance with the teachings of modern Christianity, instead of by force of arms. Verily, the age of international arbitration is upon us, and as was said by an eminent Detroit minister in a recent sermon preached in Washington, we are rapidly approaching the time when there shall be no more war. Godspeed the time when the energies and wealth of governments, which in the past have been devoted to making war upon each other, shall be devoted to the advance of moral reform and the consequent welfare of mankind.

The administration, through Secretary Carlisle, has unqualifiedly endorsed the bill which was favorably reported to the Senate from its Finance committee yesterday, providing that National banks may issue currency to the full face value of the bonds they have deposited with the U. S. Treasury to secure their currency. The bill appears to be generally regarded as a step in the right direction; it will, if taken advantage of by the banks, and of that there is little doubt, result in an immediate addition of $19,000,000 to the money at present in circulation, and probably a great deal more, as it is believed that the National banks would make large purchases of bonds now held by trust companies and savings banks, in order to deposit them with the Treasury for additional currency. It is stated that Treasury officials are so confident that this bill will become a law that they are already making preparations to meet the expected large demand for currency from the banks.

The debate in the house of representatives, under the agreement giving fourteen days for discussion of the bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law and the several proposed amendments thereto; for the free coinage of silver at the present and increased ratios, and for the restoration of the Bland law, is going on daily, but it has up to this time brought out little that was new.

Our people have regarded the South Carolina State barrooms as something radically wrong but a long ways off and consequently of minor interest to them, but it has been freshly and rather strikingly brought to their attention by the proceedings before the Patent Office in connection with the official application of the state of South Carolina, through its governor, for the sanction of the use of the popular soubriquet of the State, "Palmetto," as a trademark for the whiskey to be sold by the state barrooms. The application was denied by an Examiner in the Patent Office, on the ground that the law only provides for the registration of trade marks owned by persons, firms or corporations, and that a state of the American Union is neither a person, firm nor a corporation. The state, through its Washington attorneys, appealed from the Examiner's decision and the question is now before the commissioner of Patents. It is a matter of small moment whether the copyright shall finally be allowed or not. The important thing is that a great state thus publicly advertises itself as having entered the lowest and most degrading of all business callings—that of selling intoxicating liquor, a business that is responsible for more law breaking than arises from all other causes combined. The popular idea of the principle duty of a state government is maintenance of good order and enforcement of law, but here is a state government engaged in aiding the breaking of its own laws.

New England Matters.

Mr. Editor:—The Craigville camp meeting, was a grand success, and it is believed that it will be so shown, in the final day. The preaching was of an high order, i. e., it was thoroughly gospel preaching. Jesus Christ was not left out of a sermon by any minister on the encampment. There were several denominations present; but the most of the sermons were preached by our ministers. All the sermons were commended by the hearers, and believed to be profitable. The religious interest increased to the last hour, and there were no conversions on the spot, and others rose for prayers, and left the ground under deep conviction, and it is hoped that they will all find peace and rest in Christ. Craigville is a beautiful spot for a camp-meeting. There are now 62 cottages—some of them are quite large. There are three hotels to accommodate those who have no cottages. They were all full. The Tabernacle a wooden structure with tower and bell, with a seating capacity for nearly or quite 1,000 people.

The singing was said by those who were capable of judging to be very fine. At the beginning, it was led by the leader of the meeting Rev. C. L. Jackson. For two days or more it was led by a first class singer from New York City—Bro. Sweat. The last two days, by a trained singer from Boston.

The singers in the congregation seemed to "sing with the spirit," as well as "with the understanding."

The prayer meetings were well sustained. The prayers were short but very fervent, and the exhortations were brief and to the point—as a rule.

Some of the owners of cottages will remain on the ground till September. They have a good postoffice, and a mail twice a day. The ground owned by the association extends to salt water, where they have a large number of bathing houses. As the weather was very warm during the week, many people went into the salt water every day. There were ministers present from all New England states. Also from New York and I think from some other states. It was a grand saint-like meeting, and there must have been much good accomplished.

Yours for the cause, etc.

A Voice from Pleasant Grove.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—On last Friday closed our protracted meeting at this place, on Saturday Bro. Klapp baptized 19 by immersion and five or six by sprinkling. We had about forty converts, twenty-six joined at the close of the meeting, six or eight will join at our next meeting. Bro. Klapp was assisted by Bro. S. Apple, or Uncle Sol, as he is called here. Uncle Sol is a man of God and speaks as able as he did twenty years ago. We are always glad to welcome Uncle Sol to the Grove. Bro. Clements, if you just could have been with us it would have made your heart rejoice: Bro. Klapp and Uncle Sol did everything in their power to save the sinners. The whole congregation of all denominations worked as becoming Christian people. Dinner was refused by a great many and intermission spent in praying for and talking to sinners. The whole house was made to rejoice day after day to see sinners converted and prodigals returning back to God. Sinners had no excuse they were visited in the grove as well as the house. It seemed that every prayer every word and every hymn was sung that would do any good. I never saw Pleasant Grove more revived and more determined to push on the good work and in a better fix to do so than at present and now we can cry with the apostle, "thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

CHARLIE.

Among the Virginia Brethren.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—It has been about three weeks since I left my home to go out into the field in the interest of Suffolk Collegiate Institute. During that time many acquaintances have been formed, and several places visited.

While the old Dominion does not seem so dear to me as the old North State, yet it has many attractions which would very quickly dispell any homesickness which a stranger might feel.

One of the characteristics of the section in which I have been placed is the kindness and congeniality of the people. They know how to welcome a stranger and make him feel at home; and I take this opportunity through your columns to thank the brethren and friends whom I have met since coming here for the kindness and hospitality they have shown me.

The prospects for a good attendance at the Institute the coming session are encouraging, considering the financial condition of the country, and we feel assured that the Institute can be made a feeder and strong supporter of our beloved Elon. While it offers either a preparatory or finishing course, yet we feel assured that with ordinary success we will be able to prepare more than a few young men for a higher course at our college. What we need to help our cause among as Christians is greater educational facilities, and it is to be hoped that in a few years we will be able to make a far better showing so far as education is concerned than we are making now. If we wish to have progress we must educate, because that is our chief means by which we can stand shoulder to shoulder with other denominations. We must educate both mentally and physically. Very often the mind is educated at the expense of the vital forces of the body, but this is not right. Every school should have either a well fitted up gymnasium, or a military department, in order that, after school hours are over, sufficient physical exercise can be obtained. This is the idea which will be put into execution at the Institute next year, and it should prevail at our other educational enterprises.

Very truly

A Lady Born.

True politeness is the inborn impulse of a higher and noble nature. Here is an apt illustration:

An aged truckman bent under the weight of a big roll of carpet. His bale hook fell from his hand and bounded into the gutter out of reach. Twenty idle clerks and salesmen saw the old man's predicament, and smiled at his look of bewilderment. No one ventured to help him. A fashionably dressed young woman came along, took in the situation at a glance, and without looking to the right or left stepped into the gutter, picked up the hook in her dainty, gloved fingers, and handed it to the man with a smile. The idlers looked at each other and at the fair young woman.

The old truckman, in a violent effort to express his thanks politely, lost his hat. It rolled into the gutter where the hook had been. This was almost too much for any woman young or past young; but this New York girl was equal to the occasion. Into the gutter she tripped again and got the soiled hat. When she handed it to the truckman a happy smile was seen to play about her lips. "God bless ye, miss," the old man said, as the fair maiden turned her back on the idlers and went on her way. What an example of true politeness!—Selected.

Prof. J. O. Atkinson attended the World's Fair last week.

Revival meetings are being held at Hayes Chapel this week.

Get your collections ready for conference; it will soon be here.

The Valley Va. Conference convenes at Bethlehem, Aug. 31, 1893.

Have you decided to send your sons and daughters to Elon College?

It will be a good idea to stitch this paper together before it becomes separated.

Renew your subscription to the SUN for we have a special need for that $2.00.

Bro. J. A. Jones reports some excellent meetings held during the past four weeks.

We call your attention to the selection in this issue entitled "Attend your own church."

Owing to sickness we were unable to give you the regular size last week and this. Next week it will be all right again.

Christian Endeavorers believe in at least one boycott—that of the saloon, and most of them that of the tobacco-vender.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some prophets; some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers"—Ephesians 4:11.

A good meeting at Oakland, Va., is reported; at last accounts there were 35 conversions. May God prosper the good work.

Last week Charity and Children of the Thomasville Orphanage entered its seventh year. May it have many more years of usefulness in its field of labor is our wish for it.

Has the stringency of money matters paralyzed our people so that they cannot use a pen? A few choice articles would seem to command a premium.

Prof. Herbert Scholz has accepted a position with Prof. P. J. Kernodle in the Suffolk Collegiate Institute. There are but few better teachers any where than he.

No one has as yet expressed an opinion with regard to the Pastorate System as set forth in these columns some time since. Can it be that no one has anything to say on the subject!

In last week's SUN was an article entitled "Empty Seats" which contains a moral for all church members who from any cause stay away from the church services. If you are one of them read it.

Did you shake the hand of that new convert and give a word of encouragement when you met him after the meeting closed? Much of the spiritual growth of the young Christian depends upon you.

Rev J. A. Jones proposes to organize a church at Six Fork on Monday following the fourth Sunday in September and calls on the Home Mission Committee for an opinion with regard to the advisability of such a step.

It was with surprise and pleasure we learned from last week's Raleigh Christian Advocate that the system of the M. E. church South is perfect. A perfect thing made by man is something this writer never even dreamed was in existence before reading that paper! Wonder if they will call their bishop infallible next?

The Ram's Horn is a weekly religious paper that cannot be equalled and only needs to be seen to be subscribed for. Price $1.75 per year. The price of the SUN is $2.00. We have perfected arrangements whereby the two papers—the CHRISTIAN SUN and Ram's Horn—can be secured for $2.50. This offer is made to new and old subscribers alike.

The Herald voices our sentiments in the following: "Remember that the Biblical Institute at Stanfordville, N. Y., is an institution of the Christians. It is their property, under their control exclusively, and devoted to the exposition of their principles. There is no better, more thoroughly tried man, in the denomination than its President. His life has been given to teaching. His scholarship is unquestioned and the influence of his life is a benediction to every young man or young woman that comes under his instruction. His assistants are worthy of the work which is given them to do."

Every man can do something that no one else can do as well. He may not have found it out, but all the more shame to him. God makes no unnecessary men. The soldier cannot do the seaman's work, nor the seaman the soldier's. You are just as necessary in your small sphere as Queen Victoria to her large one. Do your work as well as she does hers, and your reward will be equal.—Anos R. Wells.

"Owe no man anything." The idea that a young man without any one but himself to care for should owe little bills at the stores and for borrowed money is a shame, and is not in any way proper. How can they expect to make a success in life by that kind of management? Boys, don't run in debt; no matter if you have something due you. Wait until you can pay, even if you are obliged to go without an extra suit. Better wear cotton that is paid for than silk that belongs to some one else.—Soldier Clipper.

The bigotry and ignorance of some people is remarkable, and the following from the Baptist Standard is a fair sample: "A Presbyterian pastor or a Methodist pastor would be as appropriate for a Baptist church as a Christian Endeavor Society or an Epworth League would be for its young people. The pedit Baptist pastors would only teach pedit-Baptist doctrines, and the alien society might do much worse. The effect of these alien societies is to train Baptist young people away from Baptist doctrines and principles and lead them to believe that "one denomination is just as good as another." The only legitimate young people's society for the Baptist churches is the Baptist Young People's Union."

The Voice says that in "New York, whiskey on the Bowery causes drunkenness, on Wall street causes alcoholism, and on Fifth avenue causes heart failure." This is the strange partiality that warps the social conscience, and gives to vice and the consequences of vice, milder names, and names less linked with reproach, in proportion as we find them prevalent among the wealthier and higher classes of society. So we blunt the point of our own arrows and the edge of our own sword in the warfare against the immoralities of the times. But the consequences of vice and vice itself are neither abolished nor abated because we soften our speech towards them: what is drunkenness on the Bowery, call it as we may, is drunkenness on Wall street and Fifth avenue—everywhere the sin denounced by Scripture and shutting souls out of heaven. Oh for pure hearts loathing it everywhere, and honest lips everywhere, exposing it.—Index.

The idea seems to prevail among a great many people that the Christian Endeavor Society is an "outside movement," but that is a great mistake. When a C. E. Society is organized in a church it is more strongly denominational than the church itself and yet it is broad enough in itself to cooperate with other C. E. Societies for the glory of Christ. "For Christ and the church" is its motto, and with its banner flying it has encircled the globe in twelve short years, everywhere strengthening the usefulness and influence of the church, that has taken it to its bosom.

Let some evangelist conduct a meeting and there be thirty or forty additions to the church, and notices to that effect will be given in all our papers two or three times; but let there be only three or four received, and nothing is scarcely said about it. The evangelist will seldom mention the numbers, and the pastor seems to be ashamed to make it known. If a report is sent up it is on this order: "Had a good meeting, and some additions." But if the "some" amounts to twelve or fifteen you are sure to get the number. So many seem to think that if they have great numbers added to their churches that they will be called among the most successful. This certainly is a sad mistake.—Selected.

Some men are declaring that Christianity is on the decline. Some timid Christians have been alarmed by such statements. We invite the attention of such people to the following facts. The progress of Christianity is set forth as follows: The English historian, Sharon Turner, says that at the end of the first century there were 500,000 Christians. By the end of the second century there were 2,000,000. This number was increased in the next hundred years to 5,000,000. Then the figures advanced as follows: 500 A. D., 10,000,000; 600 A. D., 15,000,000; 700 A. D., 20,000,000; 800 A. D., 24,000,000; 900 A. D., 30,000,000; 1000 A. D., 40,000,000; 1100 A. D., 50,000,000; 1200 A. D., 70,000,000; 1300 A. D., 80,000,000; 1400 A. D., 75,000,000; 1500 A. D., 80,000,000; 1600 A. D., 100,000,000; 1700 A. D., 115,000,000; 1800, A. D. 155,000,000; 1893, 250,000,000. The army of the Lord is marching on.—Exchange.

A paragraph states that the mayor of Lancaster, O., proposes to his city council a novel method for enforcing temperance laws. He says that if the council will pass an ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquors on Sunday, he will himself visit the saloons on Saturday night, at or before midnight, and will seal every saloon door in town. At six o'clock on Monday morning he will himself make the rounds, inspect the seals, and break them. This would certainly prove a very effective method, especially if the back doors should be sealed as well as the front, and the saloon-keeper sealed out! But—some centuries from now—what will be thought of the apathy of a Christianity that endured a business whose spirit was such as to require a method like this to make it law-abiding?

The women of England take a very enthusiastic part in the politics of their nation. The Woman's Liberal Federation has a membership of 75,000, and at their recent annual meeting, 700 delegates were present. It is claimed that the return of Gladstone to power was largely the result of the systematic efforts of the federation. The government is expected, as a reward for this service, to give further recognition to women. We hail with satisfaction any advance of womanhood toward the front lines of political life. Nothing will so ennoble the ballot as its being found in woman's hands, for the same equal and free use as in man's hands. Even the New York Sun, though so very conservative as a rule, boldly says in a recent issue: "When, therefore, the time comes that women ask for and receive the suffrage on a full equality with men—and it seems to be approaching—we have no fear for the result. Theirs will be a gracious rule in state as it has been a gracious rule in society." These are noble words and words full of significance. Politically, woman will be with us in an early to-morrow, and then some Ægean stables will be cleansed, or woman will have lost her womanhood.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

On One Side or the Other.

Great questions are continually coming up in life for consideration. They frequently touch the thought of vital intellect to the human family. And it is the duty of all to investigate the nature of these questions respecting right and wrong, and then take the side of God; for all great questions have as its center thought the ways of God or the ways of sin.

Unfortunately for the world, indifference blunts the interest of investigation and paves the way for wrong doing with but little resistance until the chains are forged to bind the side of right. He who refuses to investigate the great questions, and place himself on the side of right as indicated by the lights given will be held accountable to God for the sin of omission.

It is true that many questions come up in life that seem to be quite different in their nature, when really the vital issues are the same, but are painted in different colors. In this case investigation is necessary to see that the paint is not used to mislead. This is not unfrequently here in questions of politics, colored by demagogues to carry out their own selfish purposes. Sometimes questions of this kind have their birth in religious bigotry or sectarianism. Many exciting and injurious political campaigns have been furiously waged when there was scarcely a shadow of difference in the main issues. But demagogues managed to manufacture their campaign thunder from the vapor that gathered around the edge. In like manner sectarians continue to divide the people on religious questions of their own inventions where God has made no difference.

But there are real questions of right or wrong which require careful consideration, and he who through indifference refuses to look for the right side, will be held accountable. And it will not do to think that mutual ground may be occupied and thereby escape responsibility. Seek for the right and then fall in line on that side.

Unfortunately for the church, too many are looking for the popular side instead of the right side. This is a great sin in the sight of God. Many are afraid to antagonize a thing because it may be unpopular. The enemy of souls is always ready to make unpopular that which is right, because the right is on the side of God.

Look no longer for the popular side but for the right side and finding it, fall in there and remain there to the last; and then you will have a conscience void of offense toward God and man. You may apparently go down for a while, but finally you will hear that pleasing sentence: "Well done thou good and faithful servant thou hast been faithful over a few things: enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Oakland Church.

Leaving our home Monday after the second Sunday in this month, we reached Suffolk, Va., on the fast train about 11 a. m. Here we were taken by Rev. H. H. Butler to Oakland Church, Va. We found Rev. J. W. Rawls in charge of the meeting. Bro. Butler, the much loved pastor, and the membership of the church had been praying for a good revival, and early indications showed that God was ready to answer their prayers. The meeting continued until Friday late in the afternoon. There were some 35 or more converts, and 16 accessions to the church with quite a number of others to follow. It was a meeting of great power.

Bro. Butler is a good preacher, an energetic worker, and an excellent revivalist. No wonder his people love him.

The people around Oakland are among the kindest it has been our pleasure to meet. Ten years ago, we were with them in a revival of great power. They were kind then, and they are kind now. May God bless them. In a few weeks the contractor will commence a new house of worship for them.

Up to this writing, we have spent one night with each of the following families: Bro. Mills Rogers, Bro. W. M. Crumpler, Capt. E. C. Ramsey and Bro. A. Moore. These are all excellent families, and are true friends to the church.

Rev. R. H. Peel has been carrying on a meeting at Mt. Zion in connection with J. W. Rawls and H. H. Butler, their pastor. It was our pleasure to go down one night and be with them. We were glad to meet many there whom we had met before. This is a live working church, full of spiritual power. We were kindly cared for in the home of sister Houghwout. When we were there before, her dear husband, Capt. Theo. Houghwout, was living; but now he is living in the future land. He was a true friend to the church.

Crops are good in this part of the old Dominion State, and if it were not for the money pressure the outlook would be bright.

We think Eastern Virginia will send up quite a number of students to Elon College.

From Bro. Jones.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Our meeting at Christian Chapel closed Thursday. The Lord greatly blessed the church with the presence of His Spirit. The church is greatly revived and strengthened spiritually. Two professed faith in Christ. Rev. J. W. Fuquay was with me and preached four good sermons. Here he gained the confidence and high esteem of the people. Bro. Pleasant of Durham was present, and took an active part in the meeting. Within the last few weeks the brethren have put new seats in their new house, they expect to ceil it soon.

The first Sunday in August I commenced my meeting at Spilona, Johnson Co., the meeting continued five days, resulting in great good, 9 professed faith in Christ and two united with the church. Rev. J. W. Wellons of Durham was with us three days, and preached six good sermons which were soul stirring, here he made many good friends while with us, Bro. Pleasant was also and assisted wonderfully in the prayer meetings, Rev. C. H. Rowland was also with us, and preached two excellent sermons. Sister Lassiter is in very feeble health, She was greatly missed at the meeting. Lord bless the dear sister.

The fourth Sunday in July my meeting commenced at Ebenezer the meeting continued till the next Sunday this was a glorious meeting 15 professed faith in Christ 7 united with the church and the church was greatly revived. Rev. J. W. Fuquay was with us and preached well. Bro. Pleasant was present and assisted in the meeting. We protracted a meeting from the fifth Sunday about five miles from Ebenezer at a place known as the Niper place near Six Forks eleven miles from Raleigh. Here we had a glorious meeting seven professed faith in Christ. The people want a Christian church at this point they have a deed to one acre of land here for a Christian church and Mr. Eugene Penny offers to give us one acre of land at Six Forks 9 miles from Raleigh. Before we left the community we got the names of 9 persons as charter members for a church at this point, the outlook is good for a church at this point. Bro. J. W. Fuquay agreed to preach for them until conference. The fourth Sunday evening in September I shall preach for them if nothing prevents and on Monday morning at 9 o'clock a. m. I will organize a church here if we think best. Now will the Committee on Home Missions look after this, and let me know what they think about having a church at this point, at once?

Yours in Christ,
J. A. JONES.

Literary Notice.

People who take an interest in the strife between the Bible and its many enemies, and especially those who are perplexed by the teachings of infidel scientists, should read "The Errors of Evolution," a dollar book of three hundred pages, written by Robert Patterson of San Francisco, and published by H. L. Hastings of Boston. The subjects treated are "Scientific Star Building," "Geological Evolution," "The Origin of life," and "Darwinism." The book completely demolishes the various infidel scientific theories.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—I greet you today with a loving heart and an earnest prayer that you will toil manfully onward doing your little work in your little corner this praising good with the perfection of your labors. The best praise a machinist can get is the perfect work of an engine or any tool he has made, so can we praise God by our effort to do our little duties right.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

PORTLAND, MICH. Aug. 12, 1893.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I wonder if you who read the little articles that are written for the "Corner," remember Uncle Milliard. No doubt it seems a long time since he has written anything for you. And it has been; for he has been afflicted with sore eyes much of the time for the last year. They are not quite well now, but they are so much better he has decided to write again.

A very little child once said: "I love to go to Sunday school because I love my teacher and because she tells me all about Jesus." Those words led me to write the verses I now send you, and the title I give them is—

WHAT A LITTLE CHILD SAID

I love my own dear Sunday school;
I love my teacher too;
She teaches me the Golden Rule,
And what I ought to do.

Once Jesus was a little child
Like me and baby Tim,
And O He was so meek and mild
I want to be like Him

But if I would His favor gain—
I must be good and true,
And never give my parents pain
By what I say or do.

Then He will bless me every day,
Though hidden from my sight,
And, whether I'm at work or play,
I'll try to do just right.

D. E. MILLARD.

Boys and Boys' Ways.

"Watch that boy, now," said Phil.
"Which boy?" said Ned.
"That boy who was at play with us down on the sand. His name is Will. He knows how to look out for himself, doesn't he?"

Phil and Ned, with their parents, had been spending some times at the seaside. Will was a boy who had come to pass the evening in the parlor of the boarding house. Here it was that Phil and Ned saw Will taking a great deal of pains to find a good place.

First he noticed a large book full of pictures on the table. After looking at it for a few moments, he had hunted out a large easy chair and was tugging at it to get it to the table.

"There—he's got squared round just to suit him," laughed Ned.

"Now he's moving the lamp near er it," said Phil.

"And—well, if I ever! If he isn't putting a footstool before it I suppose he's already to enjoy it.

It was plain that Will was. With a pleased look he gazed around the room until he caught sight of a lady who was standing. He darted towards her and said:

"Come, mamma; I have a nice place for you"

He led her to the chair and settled the stool to her feet as she sat down.

Phil and Ned looked a little foolish. Presently Phil sprang out of his chair as his mother came near.

"Mamma, take my chair," he said.

Ned stepped quickly to pick up a handkerchief which a lady had dropped, and returned it with a bow.

A True Story.

A gentleman well known in literary and social circles of New York entered an elevated car the other day, and took his seat beside a lady who chanced to be an acquaintance. After a few minutes' conversation, he said:

"You remember when I met you on an L car about a dozen days ago you were reading The Youth's Companion; I told you I had never happened to read it, and you insisted on my taking yours."

"Yes, I remember."

"Well, I must tell an amusing story. I took the paper home and read it. That evening an English political question was discussed at my club. I had just read a mighty clear editorial on that very question in The Companion, and I straightened things out for the crowd. A few days later I was with some professional gentlemen, and a certain scientific topic came up about which they were a little at sea. I suddenly remembered I had also read an article by some specialist in that same Companion which covered the point, and I astonished them by my familiarity with such an authority.

"Then last night at a dinner party, I carried off the honors by telling a couple of capital anecdotes I read in that same paper."

This story has special point in view of the brilliant program The Companion announces for the entertainment of its more than half million readers during 1893. The sum of $6500 was awarded for seven prize stories which will appear. Besides, among its contributors are nearly all the leading story-writers in America, together with a striking array of statesmen, generals, historians, scientists and travellers of world-wide fame. It comes every week in the year and costs only $1.75 for the 52 weeks. Address The Youth's Companion, Boston, Mass.

How to Give.

A gentleman who has raised large sums of money for benevolent purposes says that in soliciting charitable and other subscriptions he has never had any difficulty or trouble with men who have given proportionately and systematically. He further says: "A man who does not give definitely, and who does not set down in his account book exactly what he does give, is apt to think that he is always giving. There is no falsehood larger and deeper than this in all practical life. If you will put down just what you give to charitable purposes you will be surprised, at the end of the year, at how little you have given, yet you may have the feeling that you have been always parting with your money in response to benevolent appeals."—Selected

The catalogue of the Horner School, Oxford, N. C., shows a patronage extending over ten States. For years this school has been full and to meet the demand the principals two years ago put up a model school building with all the modern improvements—electric lights, scientific ventilating, and heating, a complete gymnasium, and a steam laundry. The patronage was doubled the first session, reaching within ten of the increased limit. It is to be noted that this school still places such a restriction in the number of pupils admitted, that the principals can give due personal care to each pupil. It is probably just here that the reputation of the school for the highest standard of scholarship and morals has been won and maintained. If you send your son to a school to be instructed by a certain teacher, it is desirable that no more pupils shall be admitted than can receive a large part of the personal instruction of that teacher. Secure the very best advantages for your son by engaging a room before it is too late.

The work of redemption is purifying and perfecting, and when at last the work is done, it is the world of Christ—your world, my world—human society redeemed, transformed, the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. It is because young men and young women all over this country have seen this vision of a Christ in themselves, of a Christ in their fellows, and of a Christ in society, because clearly or not clearly, consciously, they do know that they are the sons of God, and their fellow-men are the sons of God, and because they desire to work out in themselves and others likeness to Christ, it is for this they have risen up with a great enthusiasm, and are marching forth, I believe, to a great victory.—Lyman Abbott, D. D.

I do not hesitate to commend the Northwestern to my friends."

Mr. J. H. McAden, President Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Charlotte, N. C., says: "I think the Northwestern, without exception, one of the soundest organizations and the best for the policyholder. Saturday and yesterday was quarterly and communion meeting at Holy Neck. Bro. Newman, the pastor was greeted by a large appreciative congregation. We forget to mention in our notice of the revival at Holland, that Bro. Newman was also with us and assisted us in the exercises. Bro. Newman is expected to start for the World's Fair tomorrow. Hope he will have a safe and pleasant trip, and that on his return he will give us an interesting account of "The World's Columbian Exposition." We forgot to say in connection with the above, that Bro. Newman has been re-elected pastor of the Holy Neck church. He is highly esteemed by the church, for his work's sake.

Our prayer meetings at Holland, are largely attended and very interesting. Last night, notwithstanding it rained till passed 8 o'clock, we had a fine congregation, some coming a distance of six or eight miles.

It was my pleasure to be with Bro. R. D. H. Demarest at Union, Southampton Co., two days last week. He had a good meeting. Twenty-eight conversions up to Thursday evening. The meeting was to be continued on Friday and the doors of the church to be opened for the reception of members at the close of services. We would here say that Bro. Demarest is succeeding well in his work. He is not easily discouraged, but persevering and untiring in his efforts. He is much beloved by the brethren wherever he labors.

We are pleased to hear that Bro. H. H. Butler is having a grand and glorious meeting at Oakland church. Bro. Clements, the Sun's editor is with him. Bro. Clements has a strong hold and a large place in the hearts of the brethren of that place, and his efforts there which were so signally blessed a few years ago, will not be forgotten in time or eternity.

My son-in-law, Mr. I. A. Luke got hurt quite bad a few days ago. He was on his way with wife and babe, from Holland to our house. His horse became frightened at a little cart drawn by a little boy in the road, whirling around suddenly, upset the buggy, throwing his wife and baby out, neither of which was much hurt, the little babe receiving a bruise on his forehead. Mr. Luke was caught under the buggy and the horse tried to run. Mr. Luke held on to the horse, though he was dragged some distance. The buggy was broken to some extent and Mr. Luke received deep and painful bruises on his side and hip.

Hayes Chapel.

Our meeting began 3rd Saturday at 2 p. m. and continued till Tuesday afternoon, running three services per day. The attendance was not large owing to press of work in the community.

There was quiet an earnestness on the part of many Christians to begin a nearer walk with Christ. Two back sliders consecrated themselves.

Quite a large number of the unconverted requested prayers.

Five joined the church. The baptizing will be attended the 3rd Sunday in September at 10 o'clock.

Making Improvements on Creation.

We frequently hear of some skeptic saying that if he had made the world he would have made it much better than it is now. The only trouble with these gentlemen is they do not seem to know how to make any worlds, and it is much easier to find fault with the work of others than it is to improve upon it. If they would make two or three worlds, and set them running, they would be better qualified to speak on the subject.

The vain talk of such men reminds us of a woman whom we knew, whose face was not quite as beautiful as she could have desired it to be, and who used to complain sometimes, and declare that if she had made things she would have made them much better looking. But her niece said, "She made a doll for me once, and it was the homeliest looking thing I ever saw."

This probably would be a fair illustration of the results of these gentlemen's efforts in the line of world making if they once undertook the business. One would like to see a world with the modern improvements of these skeptical scoffers; or if they could not make a world, perhaps they might try their hand at making a donkey, or a monkey, or if this was too large a job they might start with a goslin, or a chicken, or a hed-hug, a lightning hug, or some such smaller fry; and if they do not succeed in turning out one of these in working order, we would recommend them to try their hands on a hum-bug, where their experience would perhaps enable them to effect great results.—Armory.

Waiting to be Asked.

Some one inquired of a stranger who had come into a new place to live why she had not cast in her lot among the people of God. Her answer was, "Nobody ever asked me." Modest people do not like to go where they are not invited, and where they fear they may not be wanted. It is very well to say people are free to come if they will; but here are timid, hesitating souls, who fear to put themselves forward, and press in where they long to be; and it is the business of Christians to give them earnest and hearty invitations. "The Spirit and Bride say, Come! and let him that heareth say, Come," and so invite others to accept the gracious call.

The nobleman when he determined to have his house filled with guests, did not set the door open and allow them to come and go as they pleased, but he sent his messengers into the highways, the lanes, and the streets, not only to invite but to urge, not only to urge, but to "compel them to come in."

There is a sweet compulsion which is allowable and is often most welcome. There are many bashful people who need to be urged; who hesitate about accepting a first invitation, but only need a little pressure to bring them in; and if we are to follow the plan of the heavenly Master we must not only invite people to Christ, but we must entreat and urge them to come in that the Lord's house may be filled with guests. He is calling "whosoever will," and is waiting to receive all who come, but it is for us to know him, and know how wide is the invitation which he extends, and how hearty the welcome that he gives to those that do come; to tell what we know, and invite the timid, the trembling, and the doubting, and emphasize the Master's call, and bid them welcome to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

"Whosoever heareth, shout, shout the sound,
Tell the joyful tidings all the world around.

Whosoever will may come."

No Devil.

Men don't believe in a devil now, as their fathers used to do; they've forced the door of the broadest creed to let his majesty through; There isn't a print of his cloven foot, or a fiery dart from his bow To be found in earth or air today, for the world has voted so.

But who is mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain, And loads the earth of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain? Who blights the bloom of the land today with the fiery breath of hell, If the devil isn't and never was? Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint, and digs the pits for his feet? Who sows the tares in the field of Time wherever God sows His wheat? The devil is voted not to be, and of course the thing is true; But who is doing the kind of work the devil alone should do?

We are told he does not go about as a roaring lion now; But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row To be heard in home, in Church, in State, to the earth's remotest bound, If the devil, by a unanimous vote is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith, and make his bow and show How the frauds and the crimes of the day spring up, for sinicity we want to know. The devil was fairly voted out, and of course the devil is gone; But simple people would like to know who carries his business on.

Thirty-One Millions.

The statement of the Brewers Gazette that America manufactures 31,000,000 barrels of beer in a year is startling.

Who drink it? Half of the people of the country never touch it. Another one-fourth drink much less than the half barrel which would be their proportion. Possibly an eighth or three-sixteenths drink their half barrel. The rest goes to feed the craving of the "old guard" of the saloons.

Of this old guard every city has its quota. We know its members at sight. Every man wears the badge of dishonor in plain sight, and, in fact, all over him. One of them was fined last week in a neighboring city for assault and battery. He threw stones at bad boys who called him "an old beer barrel." The boys were hoodlums, but they knew where he got his immense girth and his lurid complexion.

Members of the old guard wear their hudge not only all over, but all through them. Physicians assure us that no class of men are so incapable of resisting disease as the habitual beer-drinker. Medicine does not do its work. All their organs are diseased. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the mind or body, will commonly provoke acute attack, ending fatally. Compared even with other inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, they are more generally diseased and harder to cure.

The Scientific American says that in its observation "beer-drinking produces the lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer-drinkers. Intellectually, a stupor, amounting almost to paralysis, arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism—sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal."—Selected.

Put a Prayer Under.

There are some loads for the back, and some that must be lifted and carried with the hands. It tires the arms and makes the back ache when the loads are heavy, and if some one comes along who will put his shoulder under or lift with his hands, what a comfort and relief it is!

A young girl was once carrying a market basket that was much too heavy for her strength, and another girl, in passing, noticed it and said, "Let me help you." Then she took hold of the handle and lifted half of the load. It was easy to carry after this. The young girl who was overworked never forgot the kindness of this stranger.

But there are weights that can never be carried in this way. They rest upon the heart. The load may be fear, anxiety or care. It may be a heavy sorrow. Put a prayer under the load that presses. — Journal and Messenger.

Timely Words.

The Memphis Commercial says: "A recent authority makes a statement regarding cholera which cannot have too wide a circulation. It is, he says, a 'filth disease of a specific character, carried by dirty people to dirty places, and there spread by the use of dirty water. With pure water, air and soil, and pure habits cholera need not be feared by any nation or any individual.' The bearing of these remarks lies in the application of them. Memphis has pure air, the most hygienic water in the world; now let us have clean streets, clean alleys, clean cellars, clean cisterns, clean yards, a sweet-smelling, wholesome city, and there will truly be no danger of cholera or yellow fever. If the sanitary force is not large enough make it larger." The bearing of all these remarks lies in their general application. Circulate them.

Will you please give your opinion of the doctrines of "Christian Science?"

We have before said that it is not Christian and not science; and we now add that it is the most consummate idiocy that ever was sought to be palmed off on a credulous world. Some of its adherents are honest cranks; the most of them are designing knaves. All alike, they are afflicted either with hardening of the heart or with softening of the brain. — Christian Advocate.

A recent investigation in Louisiana, says the New York Evening Post, brings out the fact that the same text-book on physiology that is furnished in the Ohio public schools for 75 cents is sold in Virginia for $1, and in Louisiana for $1.25, "and this ratio seems to hold good all through the list." This is an example of what is called by railroad men "charging what the traffic will bear." In Ohio people can afford to pay $1.25, but compel their School Boards to act as purchasing agents, and get the book for 75 cents. In Louisiana the people cannot afford to pay 75 cents, but allow the State to make long-term contracts with particular dealers, and are charged $1.25. Verily, the destruction of the poor is their poverty. — Exchange.

The Scriptural Law of Dress.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold or putting on of apparel:

But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. 1 Pet. 3:3-4.

Dress is a necessity of our nature, and is essential to our physical and moral well being. This is an arrangement of God. He intended that our bodies should be clothed in proper apparel, and has directed us in his word how to dress. He says that women should "adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame facedness and sobriety: not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

It is necessary for us to wear clothing of some kind, and the question is what shall be their nature and character? They should not be such as will draw our thoughts and hearts away from God, and make us proud and vain. This would disqualify us for his service to some extent. The apostle was not opposed to all ornament or adorning, provided it is of the right kind. He says, "that the women adorn themselves in modest apparel." In using the word "adorn" he shows that he thought it right to adorn the body in a proper manner. God has shown in his works that he is not opposed to proper ornaments. The world, as God made it, is full of beauty. How beautiful the grass, the flowers, the trees, the plains, the mountains, the valleys, the rivers, the lakes and the seas. Many things, as far as we can see, are made merely because they are beautiful. God made them to ornament his universe. The trees would make just as good wood and lumber without their leaves and flowers, but they would not be so beautiful. God has adorned them in the most beautiful manner. How beautifully he has painted the grass, the flowers, the leaves and the clouds. Who has not gazed with rapture upon the blended beauties of the rainbow that God paints up in the dark bosom of the retreating storm cloud. God reveals himself in these things, and shows that he approves of proper adorning. When we adorn our bodies in a proper manner we are only following the example of our Creator.

God has planted in the soul of man and woman a love for the the beautiful, and a desire to appear well in sight of others. This is a wise and benevolent arrangement, for it will, if guided by the word of God, develop man's higher nature. Dress is educating in its influence upon our minds and hearts. It will elevate or degrade us. Neat, handsome apparel will awaken new and elevating thoughts in the mind, and kindle pure desires in the heart. When we see a man or woman adorned in beautiful garments it has a refining influence upon us. It lifts us into a new world of thought and aspiration, and the vision lingers in our memory as a thing of beauty and loveliness. We are better in thought and desire for it. What God has planted in our nature is not sinful, and he does not condemn the desire to appear in such a way as to secure the esteem of others. God has adorned our bodies himself, and made them beautiful. The beauty of the human complexion, the ruddy cheek, the sparkling eye, are all of the nature of ornament. They are something superadded to what would be merely useful, to make them appear well. They are not absolutely necessary to the existence of that to which they are attached; for the eye could see without the various tints of beauty that are drawn upon it, and the lips and the cheeks could perform their functions without their beautiful tints, and the vegetable world could exist without the variegated colors that are painted on it; but God meant that this should be a beautiful world; that it should appear well; that there should be something more than mere utility. Surely he who created the beauty and fragrance of the flowers, and the music of Paradise; he who made all colors and mingled them together, in the armor of insects, and the plumage of birds, and has blended lily and rose in the cheek of youth; he who strewed the bottom of the ocean with pearls, and sowed jasper and amethyst and chrysolite among the rocks; he who planted the forests with flowers, — was no contemner of ornaments.

We are not to ignore all ornaments in our own apparel. The Bible commands women to "adorn themselves in modest apparel." The word rendered modest relates to ornaments, or decorations, and means that which is well ordered, decorous, becoming. It does not mean modest as opposed to that which is immodest, or which tends to excite improper passions and desires, but that which is becoming or appropriate. It is our imperative duty to ourselves, and to others, to adorn our bodies in such a way as to commend ourselves by commanding the respect of our fellow beings. The apostle does not say positively what our clothing shall be, but mentions some things that we are to exclude, and which, in his view, are inconsistent with the true adorning of the Christian woman—"braided hair, gold, pearls, costly array." The idea is that the apparel of females should be such as becomes them, or is appropriate to them. The word the apostle uses shows that due attention should be paid to this matter, and that the woman's dress should be truly neat, fit, decorous. There is no religion in neglecting of our personal appearance, and going dirty and rough. Our appearance should be such that we will not be offensive to any class of persons; such as to show that our hearts are supremely fixed on higher and more important things than mere outer adornments; that spiritual and eternal things are real and supreme in our thoughts and desires. To make dress and outer ornaments, and the admiration they command, the object for which we live is sinful. It is degrading to our better nature, and unfits us for the true work of life.

The first thing the apostle mentions that women should not do is the "plaiting of the hair." This cannot mean the mere braiding of the hair, for this may be the most simple or convenient way of disposing of it. Peter refers here to the excessive care which then prevailed among the women of the east, and especially to their setting their hair on such ornaments rather than on the adorning which is of the mind and heart. Great attention was paid to the fixing of the hair by eastern women. Dr. Shaw who travelled extensively in the east says, "The women in the Eastern country affect to have their hair hang down to the ground, which they collect into one lock, upon the hinder part of the head, binding and plaiting about with ribbons. Above this, or on the top of their heads, persons of better fashion wear flexible plates of gold or silver, variously cut through, and engraved in imitation of lace." Roberts says, "No ladies pay more attention to the dressing of the hair than these (the dancing girls of India); for as they never wear caps, they take great delight in this their natural ornament." It is proper and right that a woman's hair should be dressed neat and beautiful, but she should not set her heart on it. It may not be an easy thing to fix the exact limit of propriety about the method of arranging the hair, or about other ornaments; but those whose hearts are right have very little trouble about this question.

The second ornament Peter mentions is the "wearing of gold." The golden ornament alluded to here was that worn in the hair. This is a common female ornament in the east, and has been through all the ages of the past. It means in our text an expression of pride, a love of display. The Christian woman should avoid this, and dress so as to show her mind is occupied with better and nobler things. Sometimes the love of jewelry is the master passion of the soul, and the comfort of life is sacrificed to it. This is sinful. If it be said that our text forbids the wearing of gold at all, it may be replied that it would follow that the next clause teaches that it wrong to put on apparel at all. There is no real difficulty in the expressions if we exercise a little common sense. The doctrine of our text is illustrated in the following fact: When George Faulkner, the printer, returned from London, where he had been soliciting subscriptions for his edition of Dean Swift's works, he went to pay his respects to him, dressed in a lace waistcoat, a bag wig and other fopperies. Swift received him with the same ceremonies as if he had been stranger. "And pray, sir," said he, "what are your commands with me?" "I thought it was my duty, sir," replied George, "to wait on you immediately on my arrival from London." "Pray, sir, who are you?" "You George Faulkner the printer! Why, you are the most impudent, barefaced scoundrel I have ever met with! George Faulkner is a plain, sober citizen, and would never trick himself out in lace and other fopperies. Get you gone, you rascal, or I will immediately send you to the house of correction." Away went George as fast as he could, and having changed his dress he returned to the deanery, where he was received with the greatest cordiality. "My friend George," said the Dean, "I am glad to see you returned safe from London. Why, there has been an impudent fellow with me just now, dressed in lace waistcoat, and he would fain pass himself off for you, but I sent him away with a flea in his ear."

We may learn something on the subject of dress from the example of Christ. He wore the same kind of clothing that was worn by all men in his day. He did not cloth himself in a dress different from theirs to show his piety and devotion to his Father, and in this way attract attention to himself. Neither did he tell his disciples to cloth themselves different from their associates to show that they were his followers. There is nothing of this kind in his teaching. He sought to purify the heart, and this would regulate the outer life. Hence our text says, "Let the adorning be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." The hidden man of the heart is the same as Paul's "inward man." This means the soul. All outward ornaments are temporal, and will soon perish; but the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is not corruptible, Gold and silver ornaments will all perish, but the internal ornaments are ever enduring. As the soul is immortal, so all that tends to adorn it will be immortal also. Its attainments in knowledge, wisdom, love, and purity will endure forever.

"A meek and quiet spirit" is that state of mind and heart which is free from the excitement, pride, and irritability which comes from the love of outward ornaments and show. Those who live for fashion, and seek to lead in fashionable life, are almost constantly in a state of agitation and vexation. It is a life of strife and bitterness, and heart burdening.

The most valuable of all adornings is that of the heart and mind. The most precious jewels are of the spirit. Precious stones, silver and golden ornaments, and appropriate apparel are beautiful. They adorn the person who wears them, and are refining in their influence upon the pure mind and loving heart; but the jewels of love, tenderness, gentleness, goodness, meekness, long suffering and sympathy that adorn "the hidden man" never lose their luster, but shine with ever increasing beauty. They command the love and reverence of all, and give one a power for good that outer ornaments cannot give. The beauty of the "hidden man" illuminates the countenance, and makes the homeliest face beautiful. How Thaddeus Stevens called upon President Lincoln in company with a lady whose son was condemned to death. The president heard the case patiently, and granted pardon. As Mr. Stevens and the lady left the room she exclaimed in an excited manner: "I knew that it was a copperhead lie!" "What do you refer to madam?" said Mr. Stevens. "Why they told me that he was an ugly looking man; but he is the handsomest man that I ever saw in my life." His tender sympathy and love that found expression in his looks and words made him beautiful to the anxious sorrowing mother.

Our expense for apparel and outer ornaments should be governed by our means and the needs of the cause of Christ upon us. I have known Christians whose love of dress and jewelry was so great that it absorbed all their means. I have seen church members loaded down with outer ornaments who did not give one cent to the cause of Christ. This is sometimes the case with whole families, and it is sinful. Simplicity of dress is always the most beautiful. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

Man in his unconverted state is represented in the Scripture as being naked, but he does not realize this; and imagines that he is in the possession of all he needs to make him happy. Christ says to such. "Because thou saidest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold, tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see." White raiment here means the garments of salvation. White is a symbol of purity, and the raiment means pure religion. This is to the soul what raiment is to the body, and is essential to salvation. It is what is symbolized by the wedding garment. "The man at the marriage feast without 'the wedding garment' was 'bound hand and foot, and cast into outer darkness.' This is the doom of all who do not have on 'the wedding garment'." How important then that we hearken to the invitation of Christ, and secure the garment of salvation "that the shame of our nakedness may not appear" in the great day of eternity.

A Preacher Drunk.

The secular papers that print Sunday editions take special interest in the preachers. In a leading daily there was a half column of telegraphic special under this head, "A Preacher Drunk." The facts were as follows: A young minister who had been intemperate before his conversion and call to the ministry, was persuaded to take a glass of wine by one who pretended to be his friend. The old appetite revived, and he was led on step by step until he was found in a saloon dead drunk. The men who plotted his ruin summoned the reporters to see him in his degradation. It was a big item, and the enterprising caterers for those who read the daily papers telegraphed it all over the country. A preacher drunk! Why, it was as good as a cyclone. They worked it up in their best style, and expected it to make a sensation. And it did.

I have a neighbor who gets his religion from the Sunday newspapers, and has a buzzard's appetite for carnation. He came to me with that paragraph marked and said, "See here, Oldschool, you believe in preachers and I don't. Tell me what you think of that!" I read it and replied: "I think the editor and the reporter have paid the Christiana ministry a high and deserved compliment in that despatch."

"Why so? A compliment to the cloth to report that one of them was drunk last night in a saloon?"

"Yes, and I can make you see if you will listen to me. Do you know how many preachers there are in the United States?"

"No; but I reckon there's lots of them, for it's an easy way of getting a living."

"I'm not so sure of that. People are mighty particular now-a-days. A preacher has got to be smart or they won't hear him. A man who has brains enough to get a living by preaching in these times could get rich in any other profession. But as you can't answer my question, I will have to answer it myself. According to the census of 1880 there are over 75,000; and now, mark you, when one of these 75,000 falls it is considered so remarkable that it is telegraphed all over the land. The Bible says that ministers are but men. It speaks of them as 'earthen vessels.' And the great wonder is that among so many so few turn out badly. So you see the publication of this case three thousand miles from where it occurred shows how rare and remarkable it is. They don't have commonplace and every day occurrences telegraphed across the continent. And now let me ask you another question. Suppose, when you opened your daily paper to-morrow, you found a despatch at the head of the column from Cranberry, N. J., or Dover, Del., with the heading, 'A Lawyer Drunk,' and that in the despatch all the details were given of A. B., a promising young lawyer who had become intoxicated, and was found in a low groggery dead drunk—what would you think in that case?"

"I would think that the editor was a fool."

"Why so?"

"Because there are lots of lawyers all over the country who get drunk every day. The finding of a lawyer in a whiskey shop is hardly an item of local news, much less an item to be wired across the continent."

"Well, how is it with doctors and merchants? Suppose the paper should have a despatch of a quarter of a column whenever any of them got drunk anywhere in the United States?"

"Why, bless you, no paper would be big enough to hold all the despatches. We could send half a dozen from this one town every day."

"Yes, and don't you see the result of your own admissions? The fall of a Christian minister is regarded by telegraph operators as a first class item, like an earthquake, a cyclone, or a million-dollar conflagration. It is a thing so rare, so unexpected, so out of the usual course of things, that it must be sent flashing around the world."—Interior.

A Lay Sermon.

Adulterated coffee, sugar, tea, flour, and baking powder, grease, cottonseed oil and tallow for butter, glucose and alum for syrups, poisonous acids for vinegar. A whiskey trust founded on fusel-oil whiskey, sugar trusts, coffee trusts, flour trusts, glass trusts, oil trust; coal, iron, pottery, salt, and ice combines, all "opposed" to any "meddlesome" legislation, as it "unsettles trade." Bank syndicates, loan syndicates, tax-dodging, money-lending shylocks, school book rings, contractors, rings, all "deploring" any tendency towards a "paternal government," it makes capital "timid."

Miners and coke workers in Ohio and Pennsylvania averaging one dollar per day wages; the masses of laboring men in other lines averaging $1.12 to $1.27 per day: scarcely enough to keep the souls and bodies of their families together. Thousands of men out of employment with starving families begging for work; every now and then one driven to suicide.

With the exception of a few noble men among them who are rising to higher levels of thought and of humanity, our so-called "Christian teachers" quibbling and quarreling over questions of creeds, confessions of faith, catechisms, doctrines of original sin, election, probation, purgatory, immersion vs. sprinkling, heresies of "higher criticism," etc.; threshing chaff while God's precious grain lies rotting in the fields; utterly losing sight of the grand, simple doctrine of that greatest of all religious teachers, the lowly carpenter and laboring man, the godlike Nazarene, whose doctrine, so perfectly adapted to all human requirements that had not its original spirit and practice been subverted by fraud and force, in the 4th and 6th centuries, would ere this, have regenerated a world.

Send more missionaries to China; to India; to Africa: while at home our business life is honeycombed with dishonesty; every man watching his neighbor to keep from being cheated; our social fabric rotten with secret lust and licentiousness; our false "civilization" soaked and cursed with intemperance. Women by the thousand selling their bodies, their womanhood, their lives, for bread and clothes. The laboring millions being pushed year by year into lower depths of want, misery and despair. Our streets and slums constantly drilling and graduating new armies of "heathen." The deep and portentous rumblings of social revolutions, growing louder and nearer, heard in every "Christian" land. Anarchy, like a horrid nightmare, thrusting its hideous features, distorted with hate and malice and long-treasured wrongs into the dreams of national security.

Watchman, look forth from the walls and tell us if thou canst discern aught of hope of succor or deliverance? Will China and Japan send us missionaries who will teach us private and public honesty? Will Turkey send us missionaries who will teach us chastity and personal purity? Will Mohammedan Arabia send us an army of teachers who will persuade us into temperance and sobriety? Will Buddhist India send us a ship load of priests to teach us that "the love of money is the root of all evil, and teach us to have knowledge for its own sake?" Or, will some noble man arise in our own land and time, who will serve God and man, and not mammon and superstition, who will have breadth of intellect, greatness of heart, love for humanity, and moral heroism sufficient to lead men back to the acceptance and practice of that early and perfect Christianity which was the "light of the world?"—Church Militant.

English Manners.

BY REV. ALICE A. DRAPER.

How any loyal American, can read the history of this nation and not feel a contempt for the Anglo mania that prevails among some of our so called Americans passes my comprehension. Reading the notes from Harvard, where I find allusion to "men of noble birth and high breeding" my memory calls up at once a host of infamous things that are "purely English you know," then, not being an Anglo-mania, I see many things social, political and international in which England can improve her manners. As a people we are young, but we are not without good breeding. Not without culture, though some try to carry the impression that America has yet to be run through a refining process, before it can begin to compare with England. English snubbery can be of no benefit to America, and Europe or England has done no more to improve American manners than it has to improve our morals and we all know that vice and immorality receive their impetus from abroad and that there is a class here that would if it could make America as ignorant, as degraded, as berated and as treacherous as Europe.

The glitter of the throne cannot blind us to the bad morals prevailing in high places. The prospective heir of the crown, is a stench in the English nostril even, and the English nostril can stand a great deal. The etiquette, that has no character in it or back of it, Americans do not want.

The great mass of our people see little of English life, and only the best as a rule, through the press, but some of us know, and all may seek the knowledge, and that we glean does not increase our respect for royalty, Royalty indeed! The rake, the libertine, the debauchee, are all found in royal homes. They are by no means confined to the common people. But for the pure blood and purer lives, keeping poisoned royalty out, it would soon become extinct through its own inherent rottenness. Even royalty cannot any longer defy wholly public opinion, and England has got so far as to demand purity in its women, but tolerates the grossest vileness in its men.

No wonder there are those in America who want to be "English you know," Ugh! Has there ever been an abomination in America, that England has not first tried?

Manners are good, but morals are better, and put our American men on the scales—put the English men there, and you will find the average American man, outweighs the average English man morally. There is no room in America for Anglo-manias. They should go to England and stay there.

Why should we be surprised at the treatment of Gladstone. What man in the United States from the president down to the most humble citizen but has the breeding to see that his guest is treated with courtesy, regardless of all political or ecclesiastical differences. An insult to one's guest is an insult to the host. Manners indeed! Good principles must precede good manners. Certainly England has her well bred people, so has America, and the well bred people of England are no more of necessity confined to the aristocracy than the well bred people of America are confined to the millionaires of our country, "Noble birth, high breeding," a study of the laws of marriage and of heredity will convince any one that Nature's royalty, God's royalty and England's royalty are by no means identical. We of America, if loyal, if worthy of being protected by the stars and stripes, place God's royalty far above all that of men.

We judge the tree by its fruits, Englishmen may lose their superiority by setting foot on Canadian or American soil, but a polar bear, does not lose his dress by being put in Central Park in New York City, and so for one I feel, after meeting the species at home and in Canada, I have a faint idea of its real nature, whether its claims to superiority are real or unfounded. Perhaps I have read history too thoroughly to look with admiring eyes upon any Englishman. Would all American women might be so affected, and then America's daughters would be spared broken hearts, wrecked lives and dissipated fortunes and the English animal get his mate in a more fitting country. Get something better adapted to his nature. Our girls please take note, English manners do not make English men, superior husbands, and I believe Mrs. Frank Leslie is the latest American woman of note who finds English manners and morals intolerable and applies for a divorce, which for aught that I know may have already been granted—The Englishman's idea of a husband's duty and fidelity is utterly at variance with that loyalty our American women demand as well as give. Will American women never learn or will they go on repeating this folly? Again, manners, that do not give us good morals and good principles from the Queen down, Americans are to shun. Far be it from me to question the morals of England's gracious queen. She is devoted to England and no mistake. But we who know of "sixty-nine subsidized prisoner's aid societies," for the dumping of British paupers and criminals in America, feel that it is not the act of a Christian government, nor one becoming a Christian queen. I regard that as reckless dishonesty, as a wholesale breaking of the golden rule, and I wonder that the church of America has not ere this independent of our government demanded the practice of better principles. Crime can multiply and perpetuate a base stream, from generation to generation much faster than the church can accomplish regeneration.

Again, let every minister of the gospel, remember however great his power in the pulpit, that pre-form will do more to save souls than reform.

A man or woman reformed, converted at fifty, forty, even thirty are as a rule converted too late to benefit or save their children—this for a hint that there are new lines of work to grapple with. To return, read and ponder—"In 1880 there were about 25,000 convicts (felons) in the prisons of England and on ticket of leave in Great Britain, —10,839 in prisons and the balance on leave. In 1885 there were more than half that number. From 1879 to 1886 there was a decrease of 2,500 actually in prison average saving, £87,000 per year, at £35 per man. Those who have perfected this system, and who are important government officers claimed to have reduced the prison population of Great Britain from about 25,000 in 1880 to less than 12,000 now" But how? Were they taken up to heaven? The present number of prisoners aid societies is from 80 to 100 and when discharged "the government pays to the society from £2 to £6, which sums are added to by the society and Christian England under the cognizance of a Christian queen, assist these choice souls(?) to go to the United States. "Many long termers have been so released and are now in the United States, assisted here partly by a fund made up by the British government and partly by these (so called) benevolent societies "The sum of $435,000 yearly is saved in England.

17.50 gives them a steerage passage to the land of the free where they are courteously turned over by John Bull to be cared for by Uncle Sam. Thus is America poisoned by a filth, ignorance, degradation and animality that like cholera can only start where conditions are favorable for it, but once started may go everywhere unless we quarantine politically against this influx of crime not only from England but against the scum from every nation.

Now if any body thinks that this makes a good showing for the manners or principles of England he must be an Anglo-maniac. Some one has said it took 1500 years to bring the orange which was a berry no larger a wild cherry to its present size, but inherent rottenness and vileness was not in the orange, hence there is no use in the United States trying to develop a human race out of Europe's inhumans and incupables.

Shut the gates, manners or not, and let England master her own scum, and sink under it. When our seamen were impressed forbearance ceased to be a virtue, when England did a few other things, she merited chastisement, but this is an offense that might well put the prince of devils to shame.

It is a greater thing to be President than king or queen. The Presidency stands for a higher grade of civilization, a higher, better, purer type of people than empire or kingdom. For a higher type of homes. Democrats and Republicans are not saints, they are not perfect, but where among either would there be one so ill mannered as to treat a guest of the president as Gladstone was treated? And where is the man, who as president would tolerate without protest such treatment of his guest? Verily the manners of that man go hand in hand with his morals.

Washington Letter.

Congress is apparent working towards a solution of the vexatious financial problem, although the end is not yet in sight. Senator Voorhees, in his position as chairman of the committee on Finance, gives his opinions additional weight, made more so by a speech yesterday which was listened to by nearly all the Senators. He was surrounded by as large a crowd of outsiders as could be very well packed into the galleries. The Senator, although not so popularly known as a silver advocate, favors the immediate and unconditional repeal of the purchasing power of the present silver law. The vote will be on this question next week.

Family having this week my future committees, the House shall be proceeded with general not for as the silver question out of the way. The first bill by the house was that admitting free of duty, all articles from foreign countries intended for exhibition at the proposed California international exposition. This bill had previously passed the Senate, and now only needs the President's signature to become a law.

By unanimous consent of the Senate, Representative Johnson, of Ohio, was yesterday allowed to introduce a bill providing for the exchange of U. S. bonds for treasury notes. The bill was referred to the committee on Banking and Currency, of which Representative Spriner, of Ohio, is the chairman, with leave to report at any time after the vote on the bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver law has been taken. This bill has been widely discussed here, and many regard it as a good and wise measure. Until any holder of U. S. bonds deposit those bonds with the Government and receive their face value in treasury notes which may any time be returned and the same again obtained, the payment of the accommodation being made on the bonds, which will be so long as they remain in the hands of the Government. The bill was also passed by unanimous vote of a joint resolution extending the Cherokee outlet, which, in accordance with the President's proclamation yesterday made public, is now opened to settlement on September 16, next, the provisions of the act providing for town site lands of land in Oklahoma.

U. S. Minister Blount arrived in Honolulu yesterday, direct from Hawaii. He had a long conference with Secretary Gresham, and it is expected that as soon as President Cleveland returns, which will be in about ten days, a new Hawaiian treaty will be submitted to the Senate.

It has for many years been contended that Washington city officials were, as a rule, controlled by the rum-sellers, and the contention is constantly being borne out by the action of some of those officials. The last public occasion was during a somewhat remarkable trial a few days ago. A police sergeant raided the grocery store of a notorious character who was well known to be engaged in selling liquor without a license and arrested the proprietor and several members of his family, besides seizing a quantity of liquors. When the case came to trial a stranger would have supposed that it was the police sergeant, and not the rum-seller, who was being tried. He was accused of being a temperance man, and with belonging to an organization which was opposed to the liquor traffic, and when he admitted the accusation the whiskey lawyer said the testimony of such a man was not worthy of belief, and introduced a police lieutenant to swear that he would not believe the sergeant on oath. Right there the plot came in. This same sergeant was under that lieutenant last inauguration day and preferred charges against him for being intoxicated while on duty, and what is more he proved them, although the authorities dismissed the charges and the sergeant was transferred to another precinct, and given a hint that he had better not make any similar charges in future. This matter may not seem important to the average reader, but it is of the most vital importance to every man and woman who has the future welfare of the country in view. It involves a great principle, one which many try to ignore, but which has got to be faced sooner or later by us all. The city of Washington is the capital of the United States; your capital, reader, as well as mine, and if the liquor men are allowed to control officials, high or low, here, there will come a time when they will control them everywhere. The trouble is that people who do not investigate the matter fail to realize the full extent of the cursed liquor power and by their indifference really aid the rum-seller in extending that power.

MISSIONS.

Read by Miss Bettle Stephenson before the District meeting at McGulre's Chapel, Alabama, and published by request.

You who are expecting something grand of me this morning may be disappointed. I feel that I am incompetent to handle such a grand subject, yet, God being my helper, I will do the best I can.

This age seems to be an age of mission. The people of God realize more than ever before that they are the chosen agents of Christ to spread the Gospel throughout the world.

Perhaps half a century ago no missionaries could be found in China and Japan, and few in other heathen countries; but today these are a legion in number.

Just think for one moment of the good that could be accomplished by the Christian people of this land. We as Christian people should do all in our power towards Christianizing the world for without a doubt it is one of the strongest commands of our Master. It is a matter of experience that no organized body of Christians make progress without the spirit of mission existing among them.

In attempting to perform any kind of work, we must have good tools if we expect to do the work successfully. This is just as true in mental, as in manual labor. So it is with Christian work. Our forefathers were content with letting their pastor plough all the week and then do what preaching he could on Sunday. They did not deem it necessary that a preacher should be educated that the labor assigned him might be more easily performed, neither did they think that money was required for his support, but he must work for a living with his own hands. If he felt impressed to go on a missionary tour they some how got it into their heads that the Lord would feed him by a raven as he did Elijah of old, hence carry out what he felt to be his duty. The result was they made but very little progress. The tools were not good, nor were they well handled. Now, we have better means at our command if we will only use them. If it true we are using them some but not so successfully as we might. We need more missionary spirit to make us use them aright.

We often hear people say they don't believe in foreign missions. Too much labor and no reward. Too much expense for the results. Enough, to attend to home affairs without going into strange countries. There is selfishness in their religion. More satanic selfishness, than Godly love.

The more enlightened the people of different countries become the more closely connected with each other they become. The Railway, the Telegraph, and the Steam ship, have worked wonders in bringing many parts of the world together. This being so we have a fine opportunity of promulgating among them the truths of the gospel, and urging them to accept the teachings of the great Teacher. That we should do this is both a necessity and a duty.

because the more we come in contact with them, the barriers which separate us, both socially and religiously, are broken down.

There is not a Christian in the world who does not feel sad to see men and women bowing down to gods of wood and stone. There is not a Christian in the world who does not prefer to see those with whom he deals in business, worship the same God who is recognized as the God of the universe.

We must seek to plant the standard of God in our midst, and proclaim his name throughout our land. It is our duty, because it is the last command of our Leader. His last words urged his followers to go into all the world and proclaim his gospel. It is true we all can not go, the majority of us must stay at home, but we can send as our representatives, those who feel it their duty to go. There are men and women who desire to go, but the opportunity has not been presented. It takes money to carry on mission work, and a great deal of it. There are plenty of people who are opposed to foreign missions because it takes money. They love money better than their God and place a higher value on it, than they do upon their duty; but notwithstanding this they cannot give any reason for their opposition, and simply content themselves with growling, and stifling the voice of conscience. The fields are white ready for the harvest. Our brethren are already in the field. All denominations of any importance are ahead of us in the mission line. This shows our negligence, which we cannot answer for, and can only remedy by persistent effort in the future.

So let us as a Denomination awake to a sense of duty, and God will bless us in the effort.

Sensible Words.

In refuting some fallacious statements of the plaine dealer the N. C. Baptist says:

We are opposed to the acceptance or retention of any liquor seller in our churches. The plaine dealer says: "The attitude of sensible churches and people the world over is to let the liquor trade alone." Let it alone! We would as well let rattlesnakes live on our dwellings and dose our children with poison. Sensible people! what shall we do with Sprague and Talmage, and Gladstone and Gibbons, Farrar and Deems and a lot of others. Let it alone never. The right and duty of government is to protect its citizens. We quarantine against small pox and yellow fever and cholera, but this plague universal that is sweeping the land is borne from house to house, from home to home on the wings of the law. Its course is marked by death, by misery, by woe. Its devastation is clear to any right thinking man. Shall we quarantine against it? Shall we as a people defend our citizens from the scourge of America that counts its supporters among the legislators and judges? A single American citizen murdered on foreign soil and our warships are manned for the contest, the nation is stirred and vengeance is sworn, but when daily thousands are being stricken down, the soldiers of Christ, many of them sink away like dogs from the scene of action. It you can't give your effort to the abolition of the liquor traffic, in God's name get out of the church. The attitude that churchmen should sustain is clearly marked in the Word of God, and it means for you to follow.

The liquor men see the growth of temperance sentiment in the State, and the plaine dealer is put in the field to fight for the saloon, for its preservation and recognition by law. When the saloonists unite, in God's name, we call on Christian men to rally around principles of right of duty, and stand for the protection of your weaker neighbor. No, all sensible people don't say let it alone, and it will never be let alone till the curse shall be blotted out.

Where is "Iola"?

DEAR SUN:—May I speak a word in behalf of the Home Mission cause? Everywhere I go I am asked if I have an "Iola" to sell. The time is at hand when there could be hundreds of this book, "Facing the Truth," sold within the bounds of the Ga. and Ala. Conference.

I tell my inquirers when asked in regards to it, that I think its type is taken down. If it be so, then let the type be set up again, for no one knows the good it is now doing but those who have to lend out their own little volume, not to see it again in six months.

Rev. J. D. Elder says he could sell 50 copies at West Point Mills and at Phoenix city, and other ministers say about the same.

Rev. Jubilee Smith of Ga. says his country has just come to see the good it has already done and what it might do further on. Besides, I am knowing so many doctrinal converts that it is making all along lately. Where is Bro. Barrett? Let us hear from him on the subject.

Very truly,
A. P. FUQUAY.

Following Jesus.

I have been impressed recently with the stress Jesus lays upon following Him.

I took my concordance and was amazed to find how often He says:

Follow me. Take up thy cross and follow me. Follow me and I will make you fishers of men. Let him deny himself and take his cross and follow me. There are only a few places where Jesus enjoins following Him. In studying the literalness of the possible meaning, I began to think that after all had I ever followed Him? Had I ever gone among the poor, fed the hungry, helped the blind and the lame just as nearly as He did as I could? Had I ever done like Jesus so that any one would think of Him—would he "reminded" of Him?

By chance I was reading a line from James Russell Lowell's pen, like this:

"But straight I knew those foot prints were the Lord's. I followed where they led, And in a hovel rude, With naught to fence the weather from His head, The King I sought for meekly stood; A naked, hungry child Clung round His gracious knee, And a poor hunted slave looked up and smiled.

To bless the smile that set him free, New miracles I saw His presence do, etc."

By this time my face was bathed in tears and I said, Lowell has it, and I turned to my text again. "If any man will come after me let him take up his cross and follow me." Very much of my life I have felt that praying and going to church and "being good" was following Christ, though I have not gone among the poor and wretched and blessed the children by bringing them into the Sunday school and helped to open the eyes of the spiritually blind by sending missionaries, and was a long time a teacher, and all these years a preacher, but I did not see that I was thus walking in the foot steps of Jesus as I do now, and O, how sweet it is to know that in some feeble way I am doing like Jesus did when he was here, following Jesus. O, if I can do just one thing like He did it and with the same spirit, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me, how happy I should be.—Selected.

THE New Peterson for September is in many respects the very best number yet of that excellent Magazine. Among the illustrated articles of special mention, both from a literary and artistic point of view, are "New England Nooks," by Mary G. Umsted, "Memories of Augsburg," by Miss Stroup, and an exceedingly interesting account of "Old English Iron-Work." As usual, the poems are exceptionally good, and among them "Finis," by Ella Higginson, carries off the palm. Terms, two dollars a year. Take Care of the Enterprises of the Church.

None of the enterprises of the church are worthless. They are all necessary to its prosperity and success in the world. We cannot afford to neglect them or dispense with them. God proposes under his blessing to lead the church to its highest consummation and to its final victory through them. The education of the ministry and membership is of vital importance. The success of the church require both. One is necessary to appreciate and enjoy the other. Our young men in the ministry especially must be educated. Hence the educational fund must be raised.

The cause of the missionaries is also an important factor in the success of the church. The church grows in proportion as the spirit of education and missions among its members advances. It is through the missionary spirit and work that the gospel is to be carried into destitute sections and the ministry largely supported. These two enterprises lie at the very foundation of our success and prosperity as a church. Now to these two enterprises, I desire briefly to call attention. We are all aware of the fact that we are passing through a season of great financial depression seemingly without any hope of mitigation or end. There is also a commendable spirit of economy prevailing the entire country. People are disposed to economize on every hand. Now in our disposition to economize let every one see to it that we do not begin in the church. In the church is a poor place to commence economy. When your pastor presents your conference assessments for education and missions this fall do not plead hard times. Cut down your expenses every where else you can and contribute largely to these enterprises. This will under the blessing of God silence the situation as much as any thing you can do. If you would have a prosperous home a glorious country and a happy world take care of the church of God. Some think the way to prosperity is to be close with the church while the contrary is true. Only about ninety days to conference, see that your assessments are raised.

M. L. HURLEY
Lebanon.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Our meeting at Lebanon was continued from 5th Sunday in July, and closed the following Thursday. Our congregations were large all the time, and a deep interest seemed to manifest itself. Three professed faith in Christ, and four united with the church. There were several reconsecrations, and many expressed a desire for a closer walk with God. Rev. J. W. Holt was present, and did most of the preaching. His sermons were deep, to the point and heart searching. The people around Lebanon will be glad of another opportunity to hear him. Rev. Mr. Stickney an evangelist of the Episcopal church, was present on Tuesday and preached an excellent sermon, speaking strongly of a united effort in the interest of Christ's kingdom.

The work of better furnishing the church is already begun mainly by the Ladies Aid Society. Lebanon now needs a united effort by all her members to come to the front as a working church. May God bless her abundantly.

Bethlehem.

DEAR BRO.—The meeting at Bethlehem resulted in quite a revival to the church and 81 professions and about 25 accessions with others to follow. Bethlehem is one of the best churches in the conference. I think the membership is composed of as many good pious people as will be found in any church with same membership.

W. T. HERNDON.

Aug 26, 1893,

Bethel.

DEAR SUN:—Our meeting began Aug. the fifth and lasted eight days. Rev. J. L. Foster was with us from Monday until Tuesday inclusive. Bro. Foster did all the preaching while us, and preached us excellent sermons which endeared him to the people at Bethel. There were fourteen or more conversions, and eight additions to the church. I have never seen a meeting close with more interest. The pastor, members, and friends would be glad for Bro. Foster to come again at any time.

Fraternally,
THOMAS W. STROWD.

Union Ridge, N. C., Aug. 22, '93.

From Shallow Ford.

The protracted meeting begun here on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. It was conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. J. Laine, assisted by Revs. M. L. Hurley and C. C. Peel. They both did very efficient work though Mr. Hurley's health was so poor he was obliged to leave us.

The preaching was full of power and earnestness from the beginning. There were 16 professions and 10 additions to the church with perhaps several others to follow.

The church is in a better working condition than it has been for years.

We now have a flourishing Sunday school numbering 80 pupils with Bro. L. L. Lassiter as superintendent. He labored faithfully with us in our meeting but has now gone home to see his father who is in feeble health. May the Lord restore him to health again.

JOHN T. COBB.

Pleasant News.

DEAR SUN:—I am glad to state that I am still living and now have every favorable indication of returning health. I am now feeling better and more natural than I have in five years. I pray that under the blessing of a kind heavenly Father, I may be fully restored. I shall leave this place the last of next month with my family for Elon College to make it my future home. I think now that I shall be able to take some work if not full work this coming fall. I feel very grateful to God for the hope I now have of restoration to health and do most earnestly request all my brethren and friends to remember me at a throne of grace that I may be completely restored. Enclosed find check for two dollars to pay for the SUN for the present year. May the Lord bless our dear Zion.

M. L. HURLEY

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—My last was two weeks since. I went out to Andrew's Chapel Monday after the 2nd Sunday, nine miles from Durham and helped Rev. K. D. Holmes three days and preached six times for him and left him Wednesday p. m. and they had 30 converts up to the time of my leaving and I left the meeting going on. I enjoyed the meeting very much with my M. E. brethren. I found them a plain good people full of work.

Sunday night of the 3rd Sunday I boarded the train for Elon College reaching there about day break and had about two hours to sleep at Dr. Herndon's when the announcement was made for breakfast and I and Rev. Bro. Edwards, Dr. Herndon's brother-in-law, was on the train making for the same place of destination. We were soon off for Bethlehem to help Dr. Herndon in a meeting. Here the crowds were immensely large and we had a good meeting and when we left there was about 60 converts. 28 Thursday night and a postal this morning from Dr. H. saying there was 22 converts Friday night after we left, making about 81 in all and 25 additions to the church. The house holds about 700 persons and was densely filled all the time. I was there about one year since when we had about 115 converts. This is a plain nice people and a good many good workers and singers.

Saturday noon found me back home almost broken down having preached twice a day the most of the time for a month. I had two pleasant services at my own church Sunday with good congregations. I must look after my home work now for a while.

J. W. WELLONS.

From Rev. M. W. Butler.

Aug. 20:—Last week I conducted a series of revival services at the Waverly Christian church. Rev. R. Charnock of Berkley, Va., assisted and did all the preaching. The church seems to be strengthened spiritually. The meeting resulted in five conversions and three additions to the church. Bro. Charnock did some good preaching and won many friends. Prof. Herbert Scholz of the Suffolk College Institute was with us and took part in the prayer-meeting and song service. I would be glad to see the Institute enroll a large number of pupils. This week I have been conducting a revival meeting at Spring Hill church. Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., has been with me all the time and has done most of the preaching. His preaching has been of the highest order and perhaps no man has ever so fully awakened and united the membership of this dear church as Dr. Barrett has done during the past few days. But few men have such perfect gifts and power as he possesses. Besides the awakening in the church membership, the burying of strifes and ill will, we had fifteen confessions and five additions to the church. Bro. Charnock was present a part of the time and preached some excellent sermons.

As has been previously stated, in the SUN, I have consented to serve the Berkley charge next conference year and consequently have notified my present field that it will be necessary for them to look for a pastor. I have been laboring in this section of country almost ever since I first entered the ministry, and have been serving the larger part of my present field most of that time. I have found them to be a noble, true and generous hearted people. I feel that in accepting work elsewhere I have been guided by the Hand Divine, yet it is with emotion that I think of the severing of a relationship that to me has been and is, dear. God bless this dear people and may He smile blessings upon the new relationship.

Rev. R. Charnock has been called to take charge of the churches at Spring Hill, Waverly and Burton's Grove, but has not yet accepted. The call at each place was of the most hearty and unanimous character. He will preach for me at Burton's Grove next Saturday and Sunday.
