Elon College Notes.

The Christmas holidays are almost gone, and we are getting ready for the spring work. How pleasant and enjoyable are these holidays! The toil, the care, the anxiety, and the worry of business life is laid aside for a short time. Those who have the right conception of life give themselves up to pleasure and recreation. Family re-unions, merry laughter, happy hearts, joyful feelings are the principal features of every Christmas. Those who have been separated for long months meet again. Students return after a 5 months absence to see loved ones at home. Friends visit friends and strengthen the tie which binds them together. Lovers whose hearts have yearned for one more opportunity to behold each other's faces have their hearts desire gratified. All is joy and peace and love in these little social gatherings, so in accord with the songs of the angels to the shepherds who are watching their flocks by night. Yet there is a dark side to the picture. Oh, the drunkenness, the vice, the woes of many human beings! While some people are happy in the comforts and blessings of life, how many there are whose poverty seems more severe during these holidays. What a number who keep Christmas as though it were the birthday of the devil rather than the birthday of Christ. But, all good intentions of the righteous are subverted to some degree by the wicked, and the hearts of the kind are often made sad at the condition of the poor whom they are not able to help. The poor we have always with us, and crimes will continue among the human family until the day of the millenium

On account of the small number of students here this week, there is not much news. Snow has fallen to an extraordinary depth to what we have had for several years past. Its purity and whiteness make it beautiful to behold, especially in the moon light, for under the gentle silvery rays of sweet Luna, it glitters and sparkles like diamonds on a golden ring. Snow-balling is the outdoor game at present, while all kinds of innocent amusements are practiced within doors. Bro. Sam Crawford killed two large hogs last week. One of them weighed 340 lbs, and the other 387 lbs. From these two fine specimens of the hog kind was extracted 100 lbs of lard. So you see we have people up here who know how to do something more than read books and discuss theories. We have practical farmers. And if there are readers of the Sun who desire their children taught how to raise hogs, would advise such to send their children along to Elon College where they can obtain an education in that line.

The Christmas entertainment given by the Sunday school on the evening of the 23rd, inst, was very pleasant and enjoyable. We have heard a number of compliments passed on the committee of arrangements for their interest and good management in the work

Well Mr. Editor, when these notes are printed, we will all be hard at work, provided the blessings of life and health are not withheld from us. And with our effort this term, we desire the prayers of all the friends of this institution that our work may be successfully performed and abundantly blessed by the kind and merciful God of heaven. With their prayers also we request a word or two from them in the endeavor to increase the number of students here and to make the apparatus for teaching more efficient. With these remarks we wish all concerned a happy and prosperous New Year.

Faithfulness.

Nowhere in the Bible is it said, Be thou successful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life, but be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life.

Two motives, very different in their principles, prompt one to faithfulness. One is the desire for promotion, the other a desire to do right. The latter is the one that should always move to faithfulness; and is the one which is sure to bring a reward. You may not know when, how or where it will come, but it is sure to come.

A faithful person to whatever work God may have assigned him, never goes backward, but is always on the up-grade. Faithfulness is sure to master the work in hand; and one thing mastered makes a place for another one.

If you are faithful in the small things, you will be faithful in the greater ones; and, if you are unfaithful in the little ones you will be unfaithful in the large ones. Remember the promise is to the faithful.

A minister, when leaving a denomination, should, before joining another, discharge all his obligations to the one from which he seeks to be dismissed. He should not only go away with clean papers, but with a clean conscience. The Nashville Advocate mentions an instance of honorable dealing in this respect, in the case of "one of the brightest young Methodist preachers," who was previously a Presbyterian, and "a candidate under the supervision of his Presbytery, for the ministry in that church. When he found that his convictions required him to change denominations, the first thing he did was to go to work and pay back all the money that had been expended upon his education." That man had in him the right ring of moral conviction. He showed a noble manhood, and a worthy conception of the obligations imposed upon him by his changed conditions. Having been educated by the church for service in it, when he found that his doctrinal views had undergone a change, and he could not consistently be a Presbyterian minister, restitution of the funds which he had received was demanded by every honorable consideration. No one who has regard to his own self-respect, and to what is due to others, will sever his ecclesiastical connection without first discharging his full indebtedness to it. When this is done, he can step into his new relations with credit, and with the blessing of him who says:—"Owe no man anything." —Presbyterian Observer.

When a brother borrows 50 cents to put in the mission box, and don't pay it back, both men claim the credit of it when neither deserves it.

THE PULPIT.

Not Conscious of God's Presence.

REV. JAMES MAPLE D. D.

And Jacob awakened out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not. Genesis 28:16.

This remarkable transaction reveals one of the methods by which God anciently made known his will to man by dreams.

This wonderful vision revealed to the mind of Jacob the superintending care of God, the nearness of heaven, the ministry of angels, and presence of God.

This is all a spiritual transaction. It lies outside of the material realm, and is a revelation of spiritual truths.

1. This method was adopted to open the mind of Jacob to a clear perception of the spiritual presence of God, and the reality of eternal things.

He had a knowledge of the existence of God, and a vague idea that he is the governor of the universe, but no adequate conception of his omnipresence. He was immersed in the world, and saw but little or nothing beyond the objects and aims of a sensual life. These were the only realities to him. The great spiritual truths of the universe were only as the shadow of a shade to his mind. The presence of God, the ministry of angels, and the spiritual realities of the invisible world, were all unknown truths to him; and it was to wake him up to a realization of these spiritual realities that God gave him this vision.

Jacob awoke from that sleep a new man, and in a new world. True he was in the same body, and in the same material world; but he was in a new world of thought, knowledge, feelings, and experience. He had passed out of the carnal into the spiritual state. This is implied in the exclamation, "Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not." He had just awoke to the consciousness of God's presence, and the reality of spiritual things. Nothing had been real to him before but the objects of this life. Now he saw that there was something above earthly things, and he felt that he was allied to the infinite—to angels, and to God. For the first time he began to live in his higher nature, and in reference to his higher relations.

We have two natures, and sustain relations to two different worlds. We have one animal nature, with its passions and desires, which belongs only to this world; but we have a spiritual nature that is related to the spirit world. We sustain a relation to God, angels, and eternity. Jacob may have had some faint idea of his higher nature, and the higher relations he sustained; but he was never fully awake to these wonderful realities until he had this vision. It lifted him up into a new world, and from that time on he looked at things from an entirely different standpoint. He was governed by new and higher motives.

Prior to this vision Jacob saw nothing to live for but the things of this life—food, raiment, pleasure, riches, and power. These were the only realities to his mind. He saw nothing higher above and beyond them; but now he realized the existence and presence of God, his accountability to him; and the fact that there is another world beyond this, to which he was related, and for which he should live.

Jacob is a representative character. As it was with him so it is with all men. We commence first purely an animal life, but we grow up into an intellectual life in course of time. This gives us simply a knowledge of the material world and the carnal objects of our worldly life. We see and feel nothing beyond them. This is the life that men are living in this world, just as Jacob was living. Their desires and aims centre in material things. They see nothing beyond them, and their desires are limited to these things.

God, angels, eternity, and all the realities of the spirit world are unknown and unfelt by them, and they live just as though such things did not exist.

In this state a man may be highly educated, and polished; but his knowledge is all used in reference to the material ends of life. He employs his wisdom and knowledge to secure riches, honor, pleasure, power, and the means of gratifying his desires and passions. All his efforts end with these things. His higher relations, and the spiritual realities of eternity are all ignored. He lives as though he sustained no relation to God and eternity—as though there was nothing beyond this life. This was the life that Jacob was living when God came in that wonderful vision, awoke him to a consciousness of his existence, of the reality of spiritual things, and led him out into a higher life. This vision was a revelation of new truths, and of new realities to the mind of Jacob, and he was so impressed with them, with their reality and importance, that they became the governing power of his life. He lived in reference to them. Thus it is with every irreligious man. 1 Cor. 2:14.

From this we learn that men may, and do, live in different worlds even in this life. Here is an ignorant uncultured man whose thoughts, desires, and aims scarcely ever rise above the things that relate to our lowest wants—food, clothing, and sensual pleasures. That is his world, and he lives in it. Right by him lives an educated man—one who has reached a higher plain of knowledge, and is acquainted with the natural sciences, and wandered in the walks of polite literature. He has thoughts, desires, aims, and pleasures that the other man is a stranger to. He lives in another world. In the same family lives another man, who has all this knowledge, and has also been awakened to a consciousness of the reality of spiritual things. He sees and feels the divine presence, and realizes his relation to eternity and eternal things. These things occupy his thoughts, and inspire the aims of his life. He lives in a world entirely above that of the "brutish man," and also of the merely intellectual man. He has thoughts that they have not, has experiences that they are strangers to, and sees and feels things that they do not see. He sees God in all the works of the universe, hears his voice in the zephyrs of summer, the mild winds of autumn, the storms of winter, and in the deep toned thunders as they speak from their stormy home in the skies, and exclaims with the Psalmist, "O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep. A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this." Like Moses he sees "Him who is invisible" to the natural eye, and he is more real than visible things.

The design of the mission, teachings, and all the dealings of Christ with man, is to wake him up, to a realization of the divine presence, and the reality of spiritual things. Here we live in a world of sense, are closely related to material things, and are necessarily occupied by them most of our time; consequently the great difficulty with us is to rise above these things, to take hold with a mental grasp upon the idea of the divine existence and presence, and of the invisible things of eternity, so as to make them more real to our mind than the things of sense are to us. This is necessary if we would realize our relation to God, to the universe, to angels, and comprehend the grandeur of our destiny so as to be governed by these things; but it is hard to wake men up to this realization of spiritual realities. This is illustrated in the history of the apostles of Christ. How hard it was for him to lift them out of the narrow worldly idea that they had of a mere earthly kingdom, to the conception of a spiritual kingdom. It was very difficult for them to see beyond the ends and aims of this life. Thus it is with man still. It is hard for him to see that there is anything more real than food, raiment, money, social and civil power, and the pleasures of an earthly life. These are objects of sense, and he can realize their power; but spiritual things are objects of faith, and he finds it difficult to see them and feel their power.

Men are usually gradually waked up to a realization of the reality of spiritual things. At first they are like the man in the gospel who "saw men as trees walking." He did not see things clearly. It was only a shadowy outline that he saw. Thus men see the great spiritual facts and truths of Christianity in shadowy outlines floating before their mental vision; but as they advance in spiritual life they become more real, and they are brought more and more under the power, until every thought and aim of life is inspired by them. Every Christian knows this to be true from experience. At first his ideas of God and his presence, of spiritual truths, and of eternal things are very narrow and unreal; hardly strong enough to hold him in the path of virtue; but as he advanced in the study of divine truth, and spiritual experience they became more real until they were more of a reality to him than material things themselves. This is the way that Christians grow, and are brought under the dominion of spiritual realities.

Every soul sooner or later finds its Bethel, Jacob found his while sleeping with his head on a rock on his way to Padanaram. There God awoke him to a realizing sense of the reality of spiritual things, and he became deeply conscious of the importance of living for them. That was his Bethel, and for the first time he saw the true end and aim of human existence—to live for God and eternal things.

Every soul, at some period of its existence, is waked up as Jacob was to a realization of the existence, presence, and claims of God, and the reality of spiritual things, God does not permit man to sleep on unconscious of the realities of spiritual things, and the grandures of immortality. In some way he reveals these things to every soul, and comes so near to it that there is a deep consciousness of His existence, presence, and of the realities of eternity. All have this vision of Jacob at some time in life. Luther found his Bethel in the fields near Erfenthen when overtaken by a fearful thunder storm, and a thunderbolt sunk into the ground by his side. The presence and power of God, the nearness of death, the solemnities of the judgment, an solemn realities of eternity, flashed upon his mind with a vividness never before experienced. It was a ne revelation to him, and the commencement of a new life, God comes to other souls, and repeats Jacob's vision in milder forms than he did to Luther; and they are quickened into new life by gentler influences.

If all find their Bethel, why do not all live the life of Jacob? Because they are not obedient to the heavenly vision as he was. Thousands turn away from the light when it dawns upon their minds, and choose to walk in darkness.

Irreligious men have thoughts of God, of death, of immortality, and of the solemn realities of eternity; but their convictions are not strong and deep enough to break up old habits of thought, feeling, and action, so as to change the current of life. Truth in such minds is like good seed sown among thorns. It is choked to death by other thoughts and passions.

II. In the spirit world there will be nothing to hide God from us.

Here we can only see him through his works, the revelations of his word, and the workings of his providence; but there we will see him in all his unveiled glory. "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face." "We shall see him as he is." This is a glorious truth, and it should inspire all our thoughts, and mold our character. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." David enjoyed this hope, and felt that its realization would meet all the wants of his soul. "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I wake, with thy likeness." Paul was inspired by the same glorious prospect. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

REMARKS.

1. It is an infinite blessing that God is always near, and watching over us even when we do not see him.

He was present with Jacob even when he was not conscious of it. The everlasting arms of mercy were around him, for God does not forget us even when we forget him. Blessed thought!

Sometimes we feel in the great sorrows of life that God has forgotten us. Feelings of loneliness and sadness come over the soul, and we feel as though the light of peace and happiness had faded from our path. All is dark and dreary, and we feel that all that we can do is to sit down and weep; yet even then God is with us.

Mary went out to the grave of her brother to weep. Feelings of unutterable loneliness filled her soul. The light had faded from her home, and the dark shadow of death had fallen across her pathway in life; yet the Saviour with all his power to bless and save, was near though she knew it not. Thus it always is with the Christian, and we should cherish this precious truth; for it is a rock of refuge in the hour of danger, and our prayer should be that of the poet:

"Is there a lone and dreary hour,
When worldly pleasures lose their power?
My Father! let me turn to thee,
And set each thought of darkness free.

Is there a time of seeking grief,
Which scorns the prospect of relief?
My Father break the cheerless gloom,
And bid my heart its calm resume.

Is there an hour of peace and joy,
When hope is all my soul's employ?
My Father! still my hopes will roam,
Until they rest with thee at home.

The noontide blaze, the midnight scene,
The dawn, or twilight's sweet serene,
The glow of life, the dying hour,
Shall own my Father's grace and power."

2. The fact that God is always near should banish all fear and inspire the soul with the utmost confidence.

Why should we tremble at the approach of the storm when we know that God is with us? "I will fear no evil: for thou art with me," is the language of faith. In the midst of the sweeping storm, and the rolling waves, the nodes of the compass remain the same, and the needle points true to the pole, why is this so? Because the compass is governed, not by the waves and the winds, but by the influence of the heavens. Thus the faith of the Christian remains firm amid all the rude agitations and distracted variations of time, because it is governed, not by the instability of the affairs of earth, but by the promises of God, which are immutable.

3. Sinner you may put away spiritual things from your thoughts, and look only to the interests of this life; but the awakening hour will come sooner or later. The angel of death will awake you to a full consciousness of the fact that there is nothing so real and valuable as spiritual things—nothing else that can meet the wants of the soul in its greatest hour of need.

The success of a Christian Endeavor Society depends very much upon the character of its committees. If they are earnest and wide awake, they can devise measures for putting life into all movements, and for developing the social and religious forces which will awaken interest and attract. Too much attention cannot be given to the selection of the various committees. The members should be thinkers—persons of mental resource. They should be wise and prudent. They should be good judges of human nature. They should know how to take, sift and apply suggestions, having regard to time, persons, circumstance and end. A society engineered with such material cannot but, with God's blessing, succeed, wherever organized, and howsoever operated

SELECTIONS:

Light in a Dark Place in Ottawa.

A regular attendant at the mission is J. L. He is a Frenchman of mature years though a dwarf in size. His face reminds one of Dore's picture of the inhabitants of Dante's Inferno. A better subject for a representative of Evil Incarnate could hardly be found. Joseph, who is the only child of over indulgent intemperate parents, learned to drink and smoke at the age of seven. He never attended school and seldom went to Mass. The profession he follows at present is that of night bartender in a Lower Town Saloon, his work lasting generally from 10 p. m. till 3 or 4 a. m., in payment for which he receives after each night's work a cheap bottle of whiskey. This he carries home and shares with his aged parents. Drinking is then indulged in until daylight when all three sink into a state of drunken stupor, from which they generally recover late in the afternoon or evening. Joseph is then sober and ready for the evening meeting. On one occasion the workers were under the painful necessity of having him removed from the hall for disturbing the meeting, and the following evening he took revenge by throwing into their eyes a handful of cayenne pepper. He was then lost sight of for several weeks. When told by a friend, however, that no action would be taken to have him prosecuted, he ventured to return one evening and manifested unusual interest in the meeting. On leaving the hall he was met by one of the young women, whom he had so cruelly treated, with a warm grasp of the hand and a few kind, earnest words, that went to his heart.

"Glad to see you back again Joseph, we have forgiven you and have prayed that the dear Lord Jesus may not only forgive but save you."

The Spirit of God seemed to work conviction for a time, but as yet no evidence has been given of a desire to forsake sin.

T. M. and J. S. are both fathers of large families. Their children attend the mission Sunday school. They were once strong, fine-looking, manly fellows, but have long since lost good situations as well as their manliness, their prospects, their health, their strength, their all, through strong drink. Both depend upon the meagre earnings of their overworked wives for support, and seize every opportunity of stealing from them the articles of clothing received into their homes to be laundered, that they may pawn them for liquor.

The men are not the only victims of intemperance in this locality. What a sad and terrible sight are the intemperate women. Some with little babes in their arms, who, as Bishop South truly said, are "not so much born into the world as damned into it," and who from the day of their birth, drink in the vile poison from their mother's breast. Is it any wonder that even the children are found with an insatiable thirst for it?

A poor little fellow, deformed and crippled, is a born slave of the bottle. His mother gives him all he wants whenever she can get it.

"Shure, it's his only comfort" she says, "the house is cold and food is scarce, and poor Charlie, it helps to keep him warm and comfortable like."

Charlie's boy friends who make a few cents now and again, in disposing of rags, bones and bottle, put their little earnings together and spend it in liquor obtained from a grocer, who is told that it is for "ma" and together they have "A spree like grown up people."

Darker scenes than these are witnessed daily by those who have faith enough in the saving power of God to go forth in His name to rescue them from sin and shame, for Bacchus is not the only false god who is licensed by the government and worshiped by our home heathen. What shall be said of the votaries of Venus, who night after night, are sacrificing precious lives upon her altars. Too long have public prejudice and perverted modesty silenced the church, the state, the press, from giving revelations which would shake society at the Capitol to its very foundation.

The time for silence, for timidity, for false modesty, for prudishness has long since passed, and those who hear the deep wail of anguish, and see the unutterable woe, which comes up from the the abyss of moral corruption in our midst, are in duty bound to speak out.

We boast of our Sabbath keeping, church-going people. We look with pride upon our thirty-two churches, and our numerous charitable institutions. We congratulate ourselves on the ever increasing amount given each year to foreign missions, while all the time young lives are being sacrificed in our very midst at the shrines of these false gods, as truly as in India where the heathen mother sacrifices her child to her idol.

Children have been found as young as fourteen with the awful realities and responsibilities of motherhood upon them.

Gay, giddy, thoughtless girls are being ensnared in dens of infamy and shame, which are not only tolerated but patronized by the law-makers of this guilty land, and by whom, alas! they are being ruined as effectually and irrevocably "as one, who, for caprice might turn a priceless diamond into a chip of carbon, from which condition all the chemists in the world can never recover it."

That the deliberate author of a ruin such as this should be entrusted with the responsibility of a legislator—nay worse—should be permitted to come to the Lord's table, and be received into the society of the good and the pure, is a sin and a shame.

Cases have been placed in the hands of lawyers who have expressed the hope that the grief stricken parents would "see the propriety of dropping the case, for if brought into court it would involve the putting of good men into the witness box and he would be sorry to tarnish their reputation."

Do these men with greater advantages of education and position, expect when arraigned before Heaven's Court and Heaven's Righteous Judge, that He will acquit them, pronouncing them "good men," while He banishes the poor unfortunate to outer darkness?"

Scores of these dens are known to the police and in asking their cooperation in an effort to break them up, it has been found that however clear the evidence, neither magistrate nor police can interfere, unless parties living in the immediate neighborhood are willing to appear in court, and this they are generally unwilling to do.

From a human standpoint the work of the mission is a hopeless one. No amount of reasoning has any effect upon those who are so completely under the mastery of appetite and passion that they cannot break away from it, although they see the most terrible consequences staring them in the face: but the Master has bidden His servants "gather up the fragments" of ruined lives, the wrecks of hope and love, and bring them to Him whose very touch means healing and salvation. He alone can bring out of a lost manhood or womanhood, a new creation as many a living witness to His saving power can testify.—The Friend of the Friendless.

◆◆◆◆◆ "Miss Untidy."

There is nothing more disagreeable than a "finnick" person, to use an expression which perhaps, may not be found in the dictionary but which so aptly describes some over-nice individual who frets and fumes over a speck of dust or a single hair out of place in the neatly arranged coiffure.

These very tidy beings make one positively uncomfortable, but perhaps to run this extreme is better than to be guilty of the other—an habitual untidiness of person and belongings that destroys all the beauty one or the other may possess. Much as we regret to say it, there are many, many young girls from fourteen to eighteen years of age who are not quite as particular as they should be about their attire or the rooms which they occupy.

Pretty, bright, sweet-tempered girls, too, they are; yet every day we see them with buttons off their shoes and gloves, holes in waists pinned up or allowed to gape open for the world to see, hair which plainly shows it needs a good shampooing, and foreheads where certain grimy marks tell of curling tongs that have never been cleaned off.

The bureau owned by such a one is chaos itself. Veils, ribbons, gloves, and handkerchiefs consort with hooks, boxes of candy, and matches. There is no stated place for anything to be kept, therefore a gown is just as likely to be found on the floor, where its owner lately jumped out of it, as hung up in the closet where it belongs. Shoes repose on a table, the work-basket is an intricate maze of threads and scissors, and crumbs and cores of apples ornament the mantel-piece.

This is no fancy picture, as many mothers can testify who despair of ever getting their daughters to realize that neatness is a virtue that must be cultivated or they will never have anything fit to be seen when the occasion comes for them to wear good gowns or throw their rooms open to strangers. It is so easy to keep things nice when once you begin to try; then there is no hunting for misplaced articles or pinning on of buttons and hooks at the last moment, when voices from below call loudly to Miss Untidy to hurry up, while she is frantically endeavoring to find the mate to her glove or catch together with hurried stitches some unsightly rent that will in all probability break out afresh before she has gone a square. The stitch in time and a place for everything and everything in its place will remedy all this if you start at once, before the habit becomes too deep-seated to cure, and you will have to go through the world forever bearing the truthful but unpleasant name of "Miss Untidy."—Selected.

◆◆◆◆◆ The Mother's Boy.

"He is only a mother's boy," is a statement I have heard more than once. And then there was a curl of the lip which said plainer than words that a mother's boy is not held in very high respect.

Let me see: what is a mother's boy?

I have one in mind as I write. He is about twelve years of age. He is strong of limb, and fair of face. He is a hard student, and an enthusiastic playfellow after school hours. He does not use vile language. He plays with a vim and dash born of enthusiasm and good health, but he is considerate of boys younger, weaker, and smaller than himself. He is tender in his treatment of his sisters. He does not cause his father anxiety by doing things that would displease him. He does not go into the classroom without preparation for the studies of the day. He treats his teacher with consideration that boys should treat their elders and superiors. He goes to bed early, and is up with the lark. He has a due regard for his own personal appearance, and keeps his face and hands and clothing clean. He reads good books to elevate his mind. He is loving and gentle with his mother. He finds pleasure in her society. He is ever ready to save her weary footsteps by anticipating her wishes. He is saving of his pennies. He is generous to those who do not treat him fairly. In a sentence he is a manly boy. There are such mother's boys in the world. They are the hope of the future. Some of them will be our presidents and lawmakers. They will be the presidents of our colleges, banks and railways. They are the men who will move the world. I wish all my boy readers were mother's boys. The lad who is called a "mother's boy" need never be ashamed of the application; many of the great men of this and other countries have been such and have been proud of it.

Upon the day of Garfield's inauguration as president of the United States he turned after taking the oath of office and kissed his mother who was standing near him. In his hour of triumph, and amid the glittering crowd, he did not forget his mother whose heroic struggle in bringing up her children in the poverty of frontier life forms one of the most fascinating pages in our history. Surely he must have been a "mother's boy."—Ladies Home Journal.

◆◆◆◆◆ The Right Way to Look at It.

Does a rose refuse to grow and to emit a sweet odor because there are noxious weeds in the same field? And does the rose complain and declare that it will not fulfill its mission until every weed is pulled up? A rose is a rose in the midst of thorns and thistles. A Christian is a Christian under all circumstances and whether the world is full of weeds, and the church swarming with hypocrites, the man of faith continues to grow and bear fruit, exhaling a sweet and salutary fragrance on all around.—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Letter From "Down by the Sea."

DEAR SUN:—It has been quite a while since I gave you a regular letter from this section of the "Old Dominion." My reason is a good one, at least in my judgment—I have been so busy that I have been compelled to neglect much of my private correspondence. Now, the weather is so bad that I am kept in doors and so I have a few spare moments for the SUN.

In our Berkley church the work is going on well. Rev. Roger Charnock is a man of ability and a worker of no ordinary capacity, and I believe under his ministry the church is growing and doing well. Recently he preached a sermon on "Ice Cream, Oyster Suppers and Entertainments Versus Cheerful Giving," in which he took a bold stand against supporting the cause of God by such means as are found in church fairs and entertainments. This he followed by another sermon in which he sought to give them "a more excellent way" of raising money for God's church. I do not know what his points were, but I doubt not they were good, and, if so, I wish he could preach those two sermons in every church of the Eastern Virginia Conference for our people generally are in need of instruction along lines like that. I devoutly hope that all the people will abandon church fairs, oyster suppers, entertainments and such like means for supporting the church, and learn to support the Master's cause in God's way. I have not the space here to show why this is wise and best, but if you will turn and read Exod. 35:5,10,21,22,25,26,29,31,35, you may see for yourself. In each of these verses appears the ground of their giving. In the 5th verse it is "Whosoever is of willing heart, let him bring it, an offering unto the Lord," in the 10th it is "the wise hearted," in the 21st it is those whose hearts stirred them up and whose spirit made them willing; in the 22nd it is the willing hearted; in the 26 it is again the wise hearted women; in the 26th it was the women whose hearts stirred them up in wisdom; in the 29th, it was the willing offering unto the Lord; in the 31st it was him who was filled with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, in knowledge and in workmanship; in the 35th, it was the willing hearted and the wise hearted that God clothed with power to work. There is abundance of Bible teaching on this subject. If those interested in finding out what the Bible says along this line will send 10 cts to A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., and ask him to send you a copy of "Ecclesiastical Amusements," they may pursue the line of thought further. When you get it, read it and read carefully and prayerfully all the Scriptural references, and I think you may change your opinion of this matter.

The work of the Christian church in Norfolk goes grandly onward. Dr. Jones, the pastor is a very busy man and his people are growing more and more like their pastor in this respect. Work wisely done brings growth, and so it is here, for the Norfolk church is growing. They have accessions to its membership almost every Sunday. They began three years ago with about 15 members. They have gained till now they are well on the way of the third hundred of their membership. Their need of a house of worship is so apparent and so urgent, that I do hope our people will give liberally for that purpose. If they had a suitable house of worship, I believe they would have 500 members in less than two years from Jan. 1, '93. I understand that they have their plans laid to begin this good work in the early spring of 1893. Let us help them as liberally as we can, for aside from the question of duty, it promises to become a stronghold for our work in Eastern Virginia.

My own field is in a hopeful condition, in the main. At Providence we are having good services, especially is this true of our week-night services. Our young people had arranged for some special work during Christmas week, but the beautiful snow came and their plans were frustrated, but we hope for a better opportunity later.

At Berea we are having reasonable prosperity and we hope for a year of great usefulness in the Master's Vineyard. Deacon N. Only has been quite sick since the Conference at Berea, but he is convalescent now, and we hope for his speedy restoration to health.

At Antioch we are arranging to remodel and repair the house of worship, which we hope to have completed, in time to receive the annual session of the Sunday school Convention in July 1893. Antioch is a mother of churches, and as such she has many of her old members scattered in different sections and different churches. We expect to raise the most of the money within the church, but we should be glad to receive help from any of the ex-members, or friends, now residing away. Any such contribution should be sent to Benj. P. Gay, Treasurer of the Building Committee, Windsor, Va. The spiritual condition of this dear old church is good—I think better than at any time since I became their pastor in 1835. May God bless the field with an outpouring of His Spirit.

Rev. Z. A. Poste of Medway, N. Y. State is now in Norfolk and will likely remain through the winter. On account of an affliction of the throat he gives up preaching, for a short while only, and comes to reside in a milder climate. I sincerely hope he may be fully restored to his usual good health. Bro. Poste is no stranger here, for he spent some five years in the South as a pastor, from the death of the lamented Beale, in 1881. He has many friends in Eastern Virginia who will be glad to welcome him into their homes again. While temporarily out of active pastoral work, on account of his health, he is representing Cram's Series of Atlases of the world—three in number. I have had the pleasure of looking through them, and I unhesitatingly pronounce them the most complete manual of information, geographical, commercial, statistical, political, religious, astronomical, etc., which I have met in anything like the same space. To possess either one of these Atlases and understand its use is to put the possessor in a position where he may inform himself on an extensive scale. Mr Poste is well equipped and ready to give information and furnish these most valuable works, and I hope he may sell many to our people and the public generally.

Berkley, Dec. 30, 1892.

Windsor, Va.

Christmas day was our appointment at Isle of Wight C. H. It was communion service also. Before we engaged in this impressive service Bro. L. H. Whitley presented to the church a beautiful communion set, given by Bro. Jas. A. Thomas of Lynchburg, Va., and sister Laura M. Harrell (nee Thomas) of Roanoke, Va. The gift was received and responded to in behalf of the church by the pastor. This gift is most highly appreciated as coming from two of the first members of the organization at the Court House. While they have moved to different parts of the State, it is an honor to each of them—that they have not forgotten their church. We will remember the sympathy and valuable help of these two members in our efforts to build a house of worship. Their encouraging words and pleasant association will be remembered with much pleasure. May God bless them in their new field—giving them much success in this world and a home in heaven when the day of this life ends.

Married in Isle of Wight county Va. November 30, 1892, by the writer, Mr. Robert Reynolds and Miss Martha M. Turner. By the same, in Isle of Wight, Va., Dec.

13, 1892, Mr. B. T. Stringfield and Mrs Nannie J. Bradshaw. Service appropriate to the occasion was conducted by the pastor of Christian church in Windsor 4th Sunday night in December. The text was written in large green letters across the pulpit under which was placed a beautiful star. The singing was good, and we hope the service was instructive and interesting. I hope that every Christmas day will be observed in the a suitable way, and that Christians, at least, will keep sacred the birthday of Jesus.

During these festive days thousands of hearts were made glad, but O, there were many sad ones too! The death angel did not fail to make his visits. He entered the home of Bro. Junius Cox and called for Mattie his fifteen year old daughter. Mattie was an interesting girl, loved by her associates, and highly respected by many devoted friends. Last Wednesday as the snow lay thick on the ground, and as the evergreen trees bowed lowly and mournfully under its white form her funeral was preached in Mt. Carmel church—where she was a member, by her pastor from the words: "Her sun has gone down while it was yet day." Then she was carried to rest beside loved ones.

Permit me to return my sincere thanks to Hon. J. H. Bogart of Franklin, Va., for a valuable and appreciated Christmas present. The gift was unexpected, and the giver will ever be held in grateful remembrance by the receiver. May he who sees to appreciate the Lord's workmen be blessed with the richest joy of His salvation.

Farewell forever to 1892. I shall think of it as one of the brightest years of my ministerial work. I am so glad I was permitted to see that year, and to enjoy so many spiritual and temporal blessings given by my Father in heaven. Dear old year, I shall never see you again except in memory. I welcome the New Year in, and pray that it may be a happy one to all.

Holland Items.

Our quarterly and communion meeting came off, as previously noticed, the 4th Saturday and Sunday in December. The weather was very cold, and the congregation on both days was smaller than usual. The business on Saturday was made to seem especially pleasant by the appearance of a new suit for the pulpit. Misses Mary Johnson and Lina Holland were the special agents in securing the beautiful suit, consisting of an elegant sofa, communion table, flower or vase stand the vase filled with beautiful flowers on Sunday. The chairs, which will be of splendid quality, had not arrived. Miss Mary Johnson also, had purchased a nice carpet, with which she covered the rostrum floor and steps on Saturday. We were also pleased to have for our use the first time, a splendid silver communion set. This was obtained by the efforts of Miss Myrtie Daughtrey. All the above named young ladies, as well as others not named, are good workers, and have accomplished much for Holland church.

We note with pleasure, at our meeting, the presence of Bro. T. L. Daughtrey of the Roanoke, Va., mission, son of deacon Eley Daughtrey. We were all glad to take him by the hand, and look into his pleasant, manly face. He seemed much to enjoy his visit, after an absence of three years, to his old church home and to meet friends and loved ones once more. He expressed much gratification at our prosperity and advancement in church work. He is much interested in the Roanoke mission.

We are glad also to see brethren from Georgia, members at Holy Neck, at our meeting, who had been away a year or two.

Since my last letter, death has visited our neighborhood, and Bro. Solomon Bradshaw, an old, well known and highly esteemed Baptist brother, has been consigned to the dreary tomb to await the resurrection of the just.

Bro. Richard H. Keene a Deacon, and beloved and pious member of Holland Christian church has been quite ill for two or three weeks. He is nearing his fourscore years and is a charter member of Holland church.

From Durham.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—I reckon a word from Durham occasionally will be read with some interest by the SUN family.

I have had but little time since I have been here to form acquaintances or visit my congregation. Was out Monday last and took the names of five sisters for my church who had moved here and were members of the Christian church elsewhere. My membership is so scattered cannot get together a large congregation, but I hope it will gradually increase in numbers.

Am arranging my study in the basement of the church where I may be found in the day, but board on Queen St. only a few doors from the church, and have a room where I spend the night. I give this information that my friends may know

The New Year.

The old year with all its foibles and failures is gone; and the new one with its prospects and duties is here. The foot prints of the old one must remain wherever they were made...

prove the slow dragging centuries is, to improve the little moments as they fly.

As we enter upon this new year, we start out upon an unknown journey which lights up only as each step is made. We cannot tell what is just in front of us.

Remember that each day of this new year, 1893, that we live we will make a page of history of some kind, had, good, tolerable or indifferent.

Let prayer go up that this may be a prosperous year with the church and all its efforts. With God's helping hand it is possible to do great things...

It will be our aim to make the SUN a grand power for good during 1893. Who is willing to help us do this? If each minister will get nine tenths of all the old subscribers in his field to renew...

Who will be the first to send in a new subscriber?

Let all reach the conclusion that the CHRISTIAN SUN is our paper, and then work as such for its success.

May this be a happy year to all, is the prayer of the SUN; and many souls born into God's kingdom.

Meditations.

Here we sit by the fire two days after Christmas has come and gone. As we look out through the window, we see the earth covered with snow seven or more inches deep...

As we thus look at nature wrapped in this beautiful garment, we get a faint idea of the purity of all things as they come from the hand of the Creator untouched by other influences.

How fast and irregular the mind moves these indoor days! The inclement weather often houses the body; but the mind rambles on, caring not for rain or snow, stopping here and flying yonder...

Now in mind land, we are living over the past again, when with trap and dead fall the snow bird and the sparrow were taken in, and with dog and gun, the rabbits gave us much fun.

Now our journey changes, and in our rambles we are making visits to the churches. Many of their local names pass in review. Among them we find quite a number of good brethren and sisters who meditate and pray much about their spiritual condition.

In our rambles, we find another class of church members. They are kind thoughtless people. They love their church, and want all its enterprises to prosper; but they are so thoughtless, they never think about putting by a dollar for the pastor or a quarter for missions when they have it.

Possibly, it is not best to tell of all the classes that are found in the churches; for some act more like they belong to the world than the church.

And now in our meditations, we have rambled this world over, taking a view at great and small, good and bad, and seeing and hearing many things that would not be expedient for us to write: we are forced, however, to say what this is a great world, containing much that is good, pleasant to the eye and delightful to the ear...

The man who shoves aside ten dollars in change to get a nickel for the Charity basket, will get the same fate when Christ comes to select His Jewels.

A Good Thing.

Nearly all people like a really good thing. And now we are going to tell the young and the old, the brethren and sisters, about a good thing, hoping all will read it and be made better by it.

We know a church which pays its pastor, raises its assessments, and has an interesting Sunday school. You say that is good, and so it is; but that is not the good thing about which I wanted to tell you.

This same church has what is known as the little boys' prayer meeting. The little boys, from about 8 to about 16 years of age meet once a week in a prayer meeting with the superintendent of the Sunday school. He meets with these dear little boys to assist them in their work. And these soldiers for Christ, under the leadership of the Sunday school superintendent, lead in public prayer, sing the songs of Zion, and make talks for Jesus. Now don't you agree that this is a good thing? We do, and shall pray, and hope, and wait, and expect that God will call some of this faithful band into the gospel ministry. We shall expect that to be a live church as long as the boys prayer meeting is kept up.

Cultivation.

Both form and matter are the results of the divine touch and the creative power of God; and He saw it were good. But nowhere is it implied that form and matter should always remain, in bulk, shape and beauty, the same in every particular. The laws which God has placed in the bosom of nature teach us that improvement is the outgrowth of careful cultivation, and retrogression is the result of neglect.

God has so arranged things, that cultivation is not confined to vegetation only. It may be used in harmony with God's laws in all the realms and kingdoms, of which He has given us any knowledge. The invisible things often improve as fast under the hand of cultivation as the visible. The mind, the affections, the emotions, all improve or retrograde according to the attention or neglect given them.

The contrast between plants may be caused to stand in very distinct proportions, by close cultivation of one and shameful neglect of the other; and so it is with the mind.

The cultivated mind grows strong and useful in the world of thought; whilst the neglected one has but little in it to be admired.

A cultivated desire for sin in any of its forms develops as fast as it does in anything else. Hence cultivation may prove a curse as well as a blessing. In all that is good, it is a blessing; in all that is bad it is a curse. Dear readers, cultivate the good and banish the bad.

Pay Your Vows.

Under the lash of conscience, untold promises are made, which are neglected, broken and then forgotten. But somewhere they stand against the debtor, and must appear in judgment to condemn him, if no hand of forgiveness has taken them away.

In the eyes of men, some classes of sins have grown respectable. Such as work for the public on the sabbath, using money to weaken the hand of justice, and many other things permitted by the laws of the government. But the man who makes promises to his fellowmen, and lightly violates them soon draws upon himself the disesteem of good citizens, and the contempt of the average class of the wicked.

People may make their vows to God, pledging themselves to a better life and a more faithful discharge of duty, and then let those sacred vows stand against them unpaid, but they are not forgotten by Him to whom they were made; and remember that He has said it is better not to vow than to vow and not pay.

Promises made and broken weakens one's forces for right doing, and gives the enemy of souls an advantage, of which he quickly takes possession. And then like some disease which finds its way into the system, it continues to weaken it as long as it remains. But vows of a better life and faithful discharge of duty and promptly paid, add strength and vigor to the soul's forces for aggressive warfare upon the enemy's lines.

Our Japan Mission.

Our mission interests in Japan are in an encouraging condition. Bro. and Sister Jones are working on with their untiring energy.

In the main our native preachers are doing well. Our missionaries, Bro. and Sister Woodworth and Miss Penrod, are taking hold of the work with a will and consecration that prophecies success. But for a time their energies will be largely given to the acquisition of the language. This is best. Without the language their work must necessarily be done under great difficulties, and consequently much slower, and at the same time quite unsatisfactory to themselves.

I am glad to note the fact that the Missionary Sentiment is gradually on the increase in our home churches. The aggregate amount of contributions this year, both for home and foreign missions, will exceed that of any previous year of our history. Still it is scarcely a tithe of what it ought to be. (I will give statistics for the year in a few weeks.) We are just beginning to rub our eyes a little open to the obligations God is laying upon us and to the opportunities he is giving us to have a worthy part in the great work of evangelizing the world for Christ. Privileges that we must hasten to improve or they will be taken from us and given to others.

Let us enter upon the year 1893 with a determination to pray more, do more, and sacrifice more (if indeed we have sacrificed at all) for Christ and the on-coming of his kingdom.

A pressing need of our work now is a church house at Oji, Tokio, Japan. The need is so pressing that a special meeting of the Mission Board decided to make a call for a "Japan Building Fund." Will not as many of our mission friends in the South as feel moved to help in this work, and have an interest in our church at Oji, send a special contribution for that purpose to this office, or rather to your own Treasurer, A. Moring, Raleigh, N. C.?

Suffolk Letter.

The calendar of 1892 is no longer useful, except as a reference to the past, and the calendar of 1893 is now before us for daily service. So the past year to us all is only a recorded chapter in our own history to which we may refer with pleasure or regret, while the year upon which we have entered is full of daily duties and trials. "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before (we) I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" Phil. 3:13-14. We need some goal for our lives, and Christ is the highest possible to our souls. Let us make this year a march forward in the "path of the just which shines more and more to the perfect day." "There was once a drummer boy in Napoleon's army. It was in the Peninsular wars. At one time Napoleon's army was about to be defeated in battle. An excited commander told the drummer boy to beat a retreat. "Sir," replied the boy I have been in Egypt. La Pierre never ordered me to beat a retreat, and I do not know how to beat a retreat. But I can beat a charge that will wake the dead." The boy began to beat a charge. Napoleon's forces were almost routed, but when they heard that inspiring music they rushed headlong against the opposing forces, and Napoleon won the day gloriously. "Let us beat no retreat in Christian warfare, but let us beat a charge that shall inspire us for victory.

Christmas day here was very cold, but our Christmas service, "Our Guiding Star" was rendered successfully and the congregation was very good. Our Norfolk collection was not as large as good weather would have made it, but we may have another chance to increase it, besides, it is not a good time for extra collections as most people have spent their money in settling up for the year and in purchasing presents. Will any small sums put together will make one large sum and that was the idea of this collection.

The big snow which fell last Tuesday yielded yesterday to rising temperature and rain and is gone this morning. It was over twelve inches deep in Suffolk. On account of the bad weather our congregations yesterday were small; but one promising young man was received by letter into our membership. Heavy work is in our path here for 1893, for we want to complete our new house of worship. It now stands with roof on and floor laid.

"The Week of Prayer" will be observed in Suffolk by one union service on Wednesday night at the Baptist church. This one meeting was substituted for the full week because of bad weather.

The Ladies Benevolent Society Union will meet to-night with Mrs. D. P. Portlock on Kilby Street. This is a most useful society in our church, and will soon have a preacher's home paid for and this home adjoins the church, on Main Street.

Mrs. L. Kernodle, mother of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, has been spending the past week with Prof. Kernodle on Kilby Street, and she will remain a short time longer with him.

Mr. Frank Little of Roanoke has also spent the holidays in Suffolk.

A "Happy New Year" to all the readers of the "Suffolk Letter," and to Mr. Mood who passed through Suffolk the 22nd of December with his bride, a charming Virginia lady.

The Cottage Hearth for January.

The Holiday number of The Cottage Hearth is an unusually interesting one, and is full of good, interest in stories and articles. The opening parts of Erastus Faulkner, by Matt Crim, create a lively interest in the reader's mind for the principal characters of the story. The fine illustrations and new departments which this number contains add greatly to its attractiveness. (W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston, $1.50 a year.)

A newspaper that shoots its flashy editorials and its mushy tittle tattle above the heads of the people is like carrying a reaping machine in a balloon.

where to find me when they come to the city.

I was very much surprised and gratified to receive a present from the Hon. J. S. Carr last Saturday of a fine gobbler for Christmas day. But as Mr. and Mrs. Peace, with whom I board, was unable to cook it then, have kept it to dine on tomorrow—come and take dinner with us, Bro. Clements.

The snow is very deep here and cold.

Bro. Mood and lady will please accept my congratulations.

Hope to have in a few nights a nice little treat for our Sabbath school scholars.

Dec. 27, 1892. J. W. WELLONS.

From Berea, Norfolk Co., Va.

DEAR SUN:—I have concluded to attempt to furnish your readers once more with a few items from this community. The first Sunday in November just two days after the adjournment of the E. V. C. Conference, Bro. Barrett (Rev. J. P.) being much encouraged because of the achievements of that body during the past year and desirous of accomplishing if possible more this year in his field of labor than last year; took up a collection for mission and raised $4.00 for a start. After this Bro. Barrett gave us one of his fine sermons in a very impressive manner. On fourth Sunday, same month Bro. B. preached one of the most powerful sermons we ever heard. His subject was along a very delicate line—that of debt-paying and oppressing the widow. The first Sunday of Dec. Rev. R. D. H. Demarest preached for us and Bro. Barrett went to Roanoke to perform a duty enjoined upon him by Conference. Bro. Demarest gave us the best sermon on this occasion that he has ever given us yet. He seemed to be possessed with the spirit. His sermon was highly spoken of by several. It has been quite sickly of late and a few deaths. Deacon N. Only has been very ill, but through the will of God is convalescent. The weather at present is very changeable. One day it is cold, rainy, dark and gloomy. Next day it is sunshiny and warmth. So is life, it is made up of joys and sorrows. To day as we allow our minds to feast upon carnal things and satanical influences surrounding us we feel that the way is gloomy indeed and faith is very weak, but tomorrow as we enter our thoughts upon heavenly things and allow the sunlight of God's love to enter our hearts, it is no longer dreary, but joy, peace and love reigns supreme. May God so lead us, and may we be so full of the love of Christ that our lives may be made up of a great deal of sunshine, but a very little of shadow.

Yours in Christ.

Was It too Much?

A young man wrote to ask how much it was his duty, as a man with limited income, to give to the cause and work of God. The writer declined to answer that question; as the Lord had not given him the right to prescribe another's duty. "They have Moses and the prophets," and according to their standard the "tithes," or tenths, and numerous other offerings, were to be given to the service of the Lord. How many are there willing today to give even a tithe, a tenth, to say nothing about the free-will offerings, thank offerings, peace offerings, sin offerings, which were offered day by day by the sons of Israel? The Pharisee when he prayed said, "I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess;" and the Saviour testified that the Pharisees paid "tithes of mint, and anise, and cummin;" but he also tells us that "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven!"

How many are there today whose righteousness does not only, not exceed, but does not at all equal the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees? They have never even paid their tithes to God in any shape, and as to offerings they hardly know what an offering is.

A story is told of an Indian who one day asked Bishop Whipple to give him two one-dollar bills for a two-dollar note. The bishop asked: "Why?" He said: "One dollar for me to give to Jesus, and one dollar for my wife to give." The bishop asked him if it was all the money he had. He said: "Yes." The bishop was about to tell him: "It is too much," when an Indian clergyman who was standing by whispered, "It might be too much for a white man to give, but not too much for an Indian who has this year heard for the first time of the love of Jesus."—Selected.

Wine and Women.

The opinion has been expressed in several publications of good standing that wine drinking is on the increase in this country and particularly among the women. It is pleasant to note the fact, however, that the North American Review for December publishes an article by a physician taking a contrary view. The thought that, with all the testimony of today touching the evils of strong drink and with the noble work now being done by women to lessen drinking, nevertheless among the gentler sex the drink habit is increasing, is a thought that may well sadden any philanthropic mind. Welcome be any word of experience that this is not so.

Dr. Crothers, the author of the article referred to, is the superintendent of the Walnut Lodge Hospital, of Hartford, Conn. He first calls attention to the remarkable phenomenon, pointed out by Dr. Westphal of Sweeden many years ago, that the existence of inebriety is tide-like, now increasing and now ebbing in accordance with forces and conditions that are practically unknown, and then delights us with the declaration that "the conviction that inebriety is diminishing in this country is sustained by all scientific study and observation." He notes that wine is gradually disappearing from social boards and that society increasingly frowns upon any excess manifest in public. Also that "the decrease of drinking among women is fully confirmed by the facts of heredity." A great argument in favor of "the woman's movement" is contained in the following: "The emancipation of women from the slavery of caste and ignorance, and the steady upward movement in mental and physical development, will prevent any general increase [as psychological drink-waves come and go] of alcoholism and inebriety." Heaven grant it.

What Does the New Year Bring?

Vacant chairs;
Good wishes without number;
Change, but not always silver;
January—and all of the others.
Mistakes — we date our letters wrong;
Friends grown older and a few joyless;
Bills of every description, but every one so large;
Improvements that cause wonder and questionings;
Dividends without variety, all shrunk, like old flannels;
"The new face at the door, the new foot on the floor;
New friends? Yes, and worthy ones, too. How have we existed without them?—Exc.

Memory, What is It?

It is the perfume which lingers around the vase, whose gift of flowers lies withered and dead. When earthly comforts have flown far away, and time's desolating hand has erased from sight every trace of hope—all that is fair and beautiful—so that at least we have learned to look upon life as a scene of pilgrimage, of warfare and of woe; then it is that recollections of by-gone happiness steal in upon us with their witching spell, and, as we dream on, memory colors the phantom with such bright tints that it wears the semblance of reality. We live over again those glad hours, and are consoled for a little moment by the lingering incense of the past.

Memory! 'Tis the troubled murmur of the wind on a stilly night

When wealth and the glitter of fame crown a period of toil, and the eager soul has grasped all that would seem to constitute the bliss of man—oftentimes at this most prosperous hour, whilst satisfied ambition sings a lullaby, whose purport is, "take thy rest, eat, drink and be merry," some hidden voice stirs the hitherto quiet current of the mind, and with a sudden impulse wakes into existence the remembrance of some unrighteous action which has long slumbered amid the relics of days now sunk to their endless rest, and this unbidden revealing embitters both the present and the future, clothing them with the sable garb of remorse, and causing the evening of life to be filled with the troubled murmurs of trammelled thought.

Memory! What is it? It is the gentle dew which wakes to renewed life the drooping blossom parched by a noonday sun. It is æolian tones, re-echoing with each breath the solemn music of the spirit-land, telling in earthly melody of the loved, the lost. Memory is one continuous, never-ending dream, requiring no heated imagination of call forth its power, for it is waked into being by a look, a tone. It is the muffled bell tolling forth the knell of blighted prospects, of wasted affections. It is the requiem chant of unimproved opportunities, of moments idly spent in folly's giddy maze, and of deeds we vainly wish undone. Memory is the halo which gilds the sunset hour of life, making bright the fleeting moments of the soul, for it points back to Calvary's cross and guides the weary wanderer to the bright home of those who have gone before.

Oh, Memory! thou searcher of the heart! who can resist thy despotic sway? Prince and peasant, the lordling of the land and the tiller of the soil alike, must bend beneath thy potent influence, and often bitter are the dregs with which thou druggest the cup of life. Yes, thou art a stern teacher, Memory, but most blessed are thy ministrations if they but warn us to guard the future, that in it we err not, as in the days gone by.—Exchange.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $100, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby's life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

Expecting Results.

I believe that the expectation of results has much to do with our success in bringing men to decide for Christ. This applies to ministers and laymen alike. But when you come to resolve it, it goes right back to that much used word faith. I shall never forget a scene in the study of the late C. H. Spurgeon, London. I had an appointment to meet him at the close of the evening service. I accordingly went to his study and found the door ajar. I heard a noise, which I soon discovered was that of Mr. Spurgeon. He was engaged in prayer. I listened, and I remember that he said among other things substantially this, "Lord, thou knowest that thy servant expects fruit from the services of to night." That petition touched me deeply. It seemed to show me one secret of the great preacher's success, and at the same time the reason so many of us fail to see the fruit of our labors.

I believe that expectation on the part of that man of God took hold of God and brought the fruit as the issue of that night's labor. The question I wish to impress on all Christian workers, but especially on ministers is this: "Is it a fact, or is it not, that we close our Sabbath morning and evening services with this expectation of heart that God will honor His word which has been proclaimed?" This expectation must be in the heart, not only of the preacher, but the people as well. It seems to me that wherever you find an earnest Christian worker you find one who is looking for, and living in the expectation of the fruits of his labor. Let us expect great things from God. We have the right, for He has promised them. Do we trust His promises?—Baptist.

Picked Up Here and There.

The Panama Canal affair, after causing half a dozen duels, and ruining scores of reputations in France, has at last crossed the Atlantic, and bids fair to become an international scandal of immense proportions. It seems that in 1880 it became evident to the projectors of this enterprise, that the United States Government did not take kindly to the idea of this great water way being owned and controlled by a foreign power. A resolution was introduced into Congress, declaring that the proposed canal should be a United State enterprise. The French projectors took alarm, for in France it was not forgotten how Napoleon's troops had been unceremoniously ordered out of Mexico at the close of our civil war, and French investment became slow when the idea got abroad that the United State would not permit the construction of the canal. The slappers who were in charge of this gigantic swindle, and who, it appears, designed all along to defraud the investors, and therefore paid De Lesseps for the use of his name, in order the better to carry out their purposes, became uneasy, and sent the great engineer to this country, hoping that his influence might be sufficient to prevent the proposed legislation against the canal.

De Lesseps came, and shortly after his coming President Hayes sent to Congress a message in which he reaffirmed the position assumed in the resolution already mentioned. The message was translated for De Lesseps, but utterly ignoring it, he called back to Paris a dispatch, boldly asserting that there was no opposition in the United States to the project.

He then proceeded to form an "American Company," to forward the interest of the canal in this country; and, according to the evidence just made public in Paris, $2,500,000 were sent to this country and expended by the committee. Who got this immense sum of money? is now the question which the American people would like to have answered—St. Louis Advocate.

"The death roll of the past year comprises a number of notable names. Walt. Whitman, Tennyson and Whittier, poets; Revau and Curtis, essayists; Gilmore, the musician; Cyrus W. Field and Jay Gould, the capitalists; Spurgeon, the divine; Noah Porter, the scholar, and Cardinals Lavigerie and Manning are a few of the prominent men who passed away during the last twelve months."

"The popular vote for president has been finally counted, and from the figures, it appears that Cleveland's vote was 5,607,124; the vote of Harrison was 5,282,086; that of Bidwell, 280,894, and that of Weaver, 996,998. The Weaver States were Colorado, Idaho, Kansas and Nevada. The Prohibition candidate, although obtaining a large popular vote, failed to carry a single state."

Sanctification.

For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Heb. 2:11.

Sanctification is a deeply interesting, and important subject; but it has been very much mystified, and because of this many Christians are in trouble on this question. The teaching of the Bible on this subject is plain and easy understood. The word sanctified as used by the sacred writers has the following meanings: 1. To separate and appoint anything to a holy use. "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." He set it apart from the other days of the week to be devoted to spiritual things. The temple, the priests, the altar, and the sacrifices were sanctified under the law. 2. To cleanse from pollution and filth, and make clean. "Such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified." That is, they were cleansed from the uncleanness of sin. 3. To manifest the glory, and vindicate the honor of God from the blasphemies of the wicked. "I shall sanctify my great name." Ezek. 36:23. The heathens thought and spoke contemptibly and meanly of God; but he sanctified, or cleansed, his name of this reproach by revealing his greatness and goodness in a marvelous manner. "This is the water of Mirabah, because the children of Israel strove with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them." Num. 20:13. He cleared himself from their reproach by demonstrating his omnipotence, vacacity, and clemency towards the Israelites; and of his impartial holiness and justice against sin, even in his dealings with his greatest friends and favorites, as Moses was. 4. To free the creature from the curse of sin, and make it fit for holy use. "For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer." 1 Tim. 4:4,5 5. To separate, ordain, and appoint. Thus Christ was sanctified by the Father, and sent into the world. John. 10:36.

Christians are said in the Scriptures to be sanctified. "Ye are sanctified: 1 Cor. 6: 11. Sanctification as applied to man in the Bible means, 1. To purify and be in a proper condition to appear before God, and partake of holy things. "And the Lord said unto Moses, go unto the people, and sanctify them today and tomorrow and let them wash their clothes; and be ready against the third to receive the law. And let the priest also come near to the Lord; and sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them." Exod. 19:10, 11,22 2. To prepare for the service of God, and to witness the manifestation of his glory and power. "Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh." Num. 11:18. "Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Josh. 5:5. By meditation and prayer they were to bring themselves into a state of mind, and heart that would prepare them to behold the great work of God with reverence and holy delight. 3. To praise God, to acknowledge his majesty, to endeavor to make him known, adored, praised, and be loved by all those that are capable of it, thus men hallow and sanctify the name of the Lord. "Sanctify the Lord, of hosts himself, and let him be your fear. Isa. 8:13. "Hallowed be thy name." Math. 6:9. We are to desire of God that his name may be honored and praised by all the nations of the earth.

The philosophy of sanctification is the following: 1. Man is awakened to a consciousness of his sinfulness and need of salvation. This is so deep and thorough that it breaks the chains of sinful passion and evil habit, and leads him to look to Christ through faith and repentance for pardon and deliverance. Christ pardons him. "For with heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. 10:10. 2. When pardoned and saved the penitent believer consecrates himself to the service of Christ. His language is, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Acts 9:6. He is ready to obey the command of Christ; willing to do any thing that is required of him. Thus he separates himself from the world and gives himself to the service of Christ. This is the commencement of the work of sanctification. It is the first step. Now he commences a new life; a life of holiness. Paul says, "Being made free from sin, ye become the servants of righteousness. Now being made free from sin, and become servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. "The old habits of thought about the world and its sinful pleasures has given place to meditation upon God, his word, his service, heaven and heavenly things. Old loves have been rooted out of the heart, and it is inspired with love for God, and all that is pure, noble, and good. He has been adopted into the family of God, and is now an heir with Christ. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."

This great salvation is all the work of grace. Paul says, "But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life."

This is sanctification, entire consecration to Christ. Paul expresses it thus: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God."

This is not the end, for the work is not yet completed. We have given ourselves to Christ, and our time and talents to his service. Now we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ: and Paul says, "let us go on unto perfection." How are we to do this? Peter tells us: "God according as his divine power hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, and add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren or unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Thus we see that the Christian life is a progressive one—a growth "in grace and a knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

We may grow wiser, better, and more useful in the service of our dear master as the years roll away, but absolute perfection can never be reached in this life. We are children of God now, but we are not perfect. Perfection may and will be ultimately reached, and John tells us how and when. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Then our sanctification will be perfected, but not till then. "As we have born the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Right at this point many Christians make a mistake, and get into trouble. They have got the idea that complete sanctification is something that is to be given to them in answer to prayer all at once, and that it is an instantaneous work. Something handed right down from heaven to them. The Bible says nothing about such a work as this, nor does it promise anything of the kind. Christ tells us how we are to be sanctified in his prayer for his disciples. "I pray not that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." How is it that we are sanctified through the truth? Peter answers, "Seeing that ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." Obedience brings the blessing. "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Peter tells us how the Christian is elected and sanctified. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."

We are to seek for complete sanctification as Paul did. Hear him: "Ye are doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them as refuse, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his suffering, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Not as though I had already attained, neither were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I was apprehended of Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before. I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." This is the way Paul expected to reach complete sanctification, and if we ever attain it, it must be in the same way. Paul says. "But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, won as by the Spirit of the Lord."

God desired to deliver man from the guilt and power of sin, and to make him "perfect even as he is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.) To accomplish this desirable end he sanctified, and sent his only begotten Son into the world to redeem and sanctify man. That is, to make him holy, and consecrate him to the service of God. "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Christ willingly accepted this mission, left his home in heaven, "took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." He was sanctified for this great work, and made himself one with those who were to be sanctified. He owns them as his brethren, and they shall all be glorified with him in the great day of eternity. He is not ashamed of his disciples. What a glorious fact! when we look at our own imperfections, and how far we have come from living up to our glorious privileges, we are ashamed of ourselves, and would cover our faces in humility; but Christ knows all about us, all our infirmities, and what we have to contend with. "For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." What a tender loving Savior we have, and we should trust him with implicit confidence. Fear not the power of darkness. Christian soldiers, for your Redeemer is mighty to save.

Sanctification is not something to get, but something to be and do. Some talk about getting sanctification as though it was something handed down from heaven outside of and apart from themselves. The Bible never talks about getting sanctification. Christ sanctified himself. He said speaking of his disciples. "For their sake I sanctify myself, that they might be sanctified through the truth." Christ consecrated himself without reserve to the great work of redemption, and nothing could turn him from it. He said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." That is complete sanctification, and he desired that his disciples might come into the same state of mind by turning from all sin, and consecrating themselves wholly to the service of God. Men are led to do this through the truth. "Sanctify them through the truth." The Lord says, "wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well." What we need is spiritual strength to control the impulses and habits of our animal, moral, and intellectual nature; and hold them in obedience to conscience and God. This is what we should pray for, and strive to attain. Paul says, "Put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lust; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness." This is a work that we must do through divine help. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling: for it is God which worketh both to will and to do of his good pleasure." God works in man by his Spirit and word. Hence Peter said, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God." "The law of the Lord is perfect concerning the soul." Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." If we do not hold the truth in unrighteousness, but obey it, it will lead us on toward perfection. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be presented blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Baptism.

DEAR BRETHREN:—There is quite a division upon the subject of water baptism. Some think it essential to salvation, some think it not. Some think it a strict commandment, while others think it not. "What is the cause of all this? Is it because the people don't yet understand the scriptures? As brethren are differing on this one thought, I beg leave for a few thoughts on the subject. When John the Baptist was on the earth, he baptised with water unto repentance, which baptism was only temporal token to introduce, or to represent Christ's spiritual, Holy Ghost baptism. To prove John's baptism temporal, he (John) says of Christ he must increase and I must decrease. That means John and his baptism must fade away, and be practiced no more. Then came the one (Christ) of whom John had been preaching and said, I come not to destroy the law and the prophets but to fulfill them. Now John was a prophet. And Christ was the Lord from heaven. John's works were fulfilled when he baptized Christ. Christ did not mean to destroy John nor his baptism. He was as far from that as he would have been from destroying Moses in offering his temporal object on a pole in the wilderness for the cure of the serpent bite.

What we want in the worship of Christ is to worship him in Spirit and in truth. Forgetting all temporal things. The first offering ever known on earth, were temporal objects or tokens of Christ being offered up for sin. Now Christ has come and fulfilled all temporal offerings and signs by offering himself for sin. Doubtless Christ appeared to others as a temporal being while on earth, but he was the Lord from heaven. Now as John was a prophet, and Christ was the Lord from heaven, whose examples must we follow? Shall we follow a fulfilled example? Think on this. What we want is to understand Christ's teachings and no one else. Christ's way of saving all mankind is the way to accept. It is true Christ said to Nicodemus 3 ch. 5 v. verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God. What do we understand by this scripture. Can a man be born unto God with a temporal thing? "We say not." Christ using this language to Nicodemus meant that the water was to represent the spirit of regeneration. As we learn in John 4 ch. 10 v. what Christ says to the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well, he (Christ) says if thou knowest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee. Give me to drink; thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

In this last scripture clearly proves that Christ in speaking of water meant to introduce his loving spirit. And this woman then and there was baptized by the spiritual waters of life in Christ. If all this be true then water baptism is not essential in any case. "Why do we use water." We use water as an outward sign, showing that our inward work has been performed, or rather an answer to a good conscience. If that is all that is derived from water, then we should be the more careful to observe that that is given us in commandments. This article is to spring ideas for our own spiritual good. We learn in John 4 ch. 2 v. that Christ baptized "not himself," but his disciples did. And we find in John 4 ch. 1 v. that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John. What shall we do with this scripture. If "Jesus baptised them with the Holy Ghost" was it not sufficient? Would we think that after Jesus has baptized a soul with the Holy Ghost that one of his disciples would come after him and baptize him with water? We think not, for the Holy Ghost is sufficient. No man can complete Christ's baptism by applying a temporal water.

SELECTIONS.

This One Thing.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The men who have achieved the greatest results in this world have been those who were actuated by some master passion. Their souls were occupied by some "one thing" which subordinated everything else to itself. They were, in a certain sense, men of one idea. For tho their minds have contained many ideas, yet a single purpose directed and animated them all. The master-passion with Sir Isaac Newton was science. His days and nights were given to his diagrams, his mathematical tables and his telescopes. He often stopped, when half dressed in the morning, to solve some problem that was agitating his mind, and his servant was obliged to rouse him from his reverie in order to induce him to partake of his meals. An American vessel once halted on the coast of California to lay in a supply of hides, and when the first mate landed he found one of his countrymen roaming about alone on the sea beach. It was a Harvard University naturalist, who was there searching for rare shells to adorn his cabinet. With Jay Gould the master-passion was to make money; with Lloyd Garrison to secure freedom for the slave; with Theohald Matthew and John B. Gough to rescue their fellow-men from the dominion of strong drink.

Now in the very place where Newton put his love of science, and Jay Gould his love of money, and Garrison, Gough, Shafteshury and other philanthropists put their love for their fellow-creatures, Paul put his love for his crucified Master. "This one thing I do," he exclaims, "I press toward the goal for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." He made the service of Jesus Christ to be the sovereign purpose of his soul. "Go a little deeper," said one of Napoleon's soldiers to the surgeon who was probing his left side for the bullet, "and you will see the emperor." So Paul might have said, go deeper, go to the very core of my heart and there you will find my Saviour. Other affections lie on the surface, but this one lives in the innermost depths. Other feeling I am possessed of, but this one possesses me. For me to live is Christ!

There is a prodigious power in this singleness of heart, this enthroning of one ruling affection in the regenerated soul. Even a man or woman of ordinary talents and endowments becomes a leading character when Jesus Christ owns and controls him. Here is the secret of the power of that heroic old missionary, John G. Paton. He is a man of one idea; but it is an idea large enough to make a king out of a poor Scotch peasant boy. We often see in our churches a plain man of moderate education and social rank who attains to a commanding influence. It is not brain-power; it is not purse-power; it is pure heart-power. The man follows Jesus so thoroughly and so projectively that he carries other people with him by the sheer momentum of his godliness. So it comes about that godliness of ten outstrips genius in the pulpit, and the minister whose sole purpose is to glorify his Master and to save souls, achieves a success that is denied to another man of higher culture and intellectual ability. Thorough-going uncompromising, whole-souled piety is really the highest requisite in the pulpit, in the Sunday school, and in every official position of the church; having that "one thing needful," then every increment of talent, money, culture, etc., is a positive addition to that person's usefulness.

But what was the "one thing" which Paul set before himself? He tells us that, "forgetting things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before," he pressed on toward the shining goal. The "things behind," his past experiences since the day of his conversion, did not satisfy him. He was not willing to sit down contented with his present attainments, as so many professed Christians do in our days. Upward and onward was his motto. Every achievement was only a stimulus to further progress. Paul was no "perfectionist"; that is very clear; but he had a holy ambition to reach the very highest mark possible this side of Heaven.

Just what the great Apostle aimed at ought to be the aim of every Christian who reads these lines. It is a good time, at the close of an old year and the beginning of a new year, to take a long step in advance. God have mercy on the Christian who is satisfied with his present attainments! How little any of us know in regard to our Bibles or in regard to ourselves in comparison with what we might know! We are right by an exhaustless ocean, and too seldom put down our tiny vessels for a draft. How little we know of the wants and the woes of a dying world! There are thousands of Christians who spend more time over the paltry gossip of the town in which they dwell than they spend in studying their Bibles, or in watching for opportunities for service of their Master, or even in trying to save immortal souls. The red hot zeal of Wall Street and the Produce Exchange ought to shame our coldness. The accumulations that men are making in scientific knowledge, in art and in wealth ought to make us blush that we are not striving to become richer in faith and good works.

The place for us to put in the probe is in the core of our own hearts. The wounded French soldier on the battlefield found his Emperor there; do we find our Lord and Master there? Are we giving him the central throne there, and on all doubtful questions giving to him the casting vote? Are we fighting resolutely with the sins that easily beset us? Are our lusts relaxing their hold, instead of hindering us into a closer bondage? Do we grow more self-denying, more humble, more fearless for the truth, more patient under crosses, more thoughtful of other people and less of our own comfort, and more ready to put self under our feet that we may exalt Jesus? Is our faith getting stronger, our hope becoming brighter, and our love becoming more pure, more ardent and more ready to "bear the burdens of others and so fulfill the law of Christ"? Are we catching more of the spirit of Heaven as we draw nearer to it?

Such questions as these are crucial tests, to be applied to our selves in order that we may know whether we are really advancing toward the shining goal set before us. Oh, for the spirit of him who first rang out the clarion call to "press forward for that mark of the prize"! On our own responsibility must we push forward, but not in our own strength. They that wait on the Lord shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint. When we are weak in the humility of self-knowledge, then are we strong. When we fling off the incumbering weights we can skim the surface like the roe. Fix your eye, brother, on the beckoning Jesus and the flashing crown; and as you listen to the New Year bell resolve before God—"this one thing will I do: I will reach forth toward the prize of my high calling in Christ Jesus!"—Independent.

The Selfish Side of Grief.

The removal from a family of one of its dearly beloved members, whether that member be a little child or a man in his prime, alters for a time the whole course of feeling, and takes color and flavor out of every incident in the daily life. Zest is gone. If it be a parent, whose counsel and power to comfort and sooth are missed in the experiences which fall day by day into every lot, the younger people walk, as it were, with heads bared to the storm; a bulwark that stood between them and the buffets of adversity is removed. They stand face to face in the front rank with eternity; the generation that preceded them and kept chill wind away has passed into the great silence. The sense of orphanhood is sorely felt by many a middle-aged man and woman when a gray-haired and tottering parent is taken home; felt as keenly and sharply as ever by a child, whose helplessness and immaturity are left undefended at the time of a parent's loss.

If the wife and husband are separated, the two that were one sundered, the broken half of a union that was well-nigh perfect remaining with rough and jagged edges, sensitive to each rude touch, and aching day and night, the grief is beyond human aid for a while. Into that sanctuary no profane foot may enter. The heart knoweth its own bitterness, with which a stranger intermeddeth not. That such wounds are healed by time, and that in time new associations and companionships may take the place of those that death destroyed, argues nothing against the poignancy of the first desolation. I question whether any new relation ever establishes itself in the precise place of the old. The heart has its locked doors, inscribed "In Memoriam," though so wise and tender is God, and so elastic and many-sided humanity, that grief wears itself out by degrees, and they who thought to spend their years in the house of mourning do, at last, find themselves again in the house of feasting.

The most difficult stroke to bear is often the loss of a child. Infinite possibilities are bound up in the baby's little bundle of life. So much of hope, so much of joy, so much of investment, is in the nature of things included in our love for sons and daughters that we go heavily for long, long days, and water with our tears the mound that covers our lost darlings. One never grows used to the loss of the little creature, who was so vital, so essential, to the home happiness, so truly a part of the daily round; for whom the father worked and planned, and the mother cared with a constant self-denial that knew no cessation, and was its own full reward. One wakens in the night at the thought of the baby's call, and breaks one's heart all day at the sight of the empty crib, and the pathetic, unused toys and picture books. I never see the white ribbon on the door bell, or the little stone cemetery, without a throb of sympathy with the stab of anguish that some heart has felt when it kept its vigil beside the dying bed of a child.

But, dear friends in the shadow, beware of the selfish side of grief. After the first interval when tears must have their way, it behooves you to be up and doing, lest your brooding over loss and loneliness make your home and your presence a torture chamber to those who remain to love you, a sphere to be avoided by the young and the happy, who derive from your absorption in regrets and your morbid self-pity a wholly wrong conception of the power of the Christian religion to uplift and console in hours of darkness. I have seen a mother's grief drive a youthful son into haunts of temptation in one instance, and in another have known it to work almost fatal injury to the health of a delicate daughter. Indeed, there are those who always mourn in such fashion that their tones, looks, and words—their whole behavior—reproach the living as well as lament the dead. Always we need to guard against this subtle form of selfishness. To gather up the fragments, and go on with what is left of life, bravely, trustfully, thankfully, may be a weary task, and full of sadness, but it is God-appointed to every grieving heart, and God himself assists him or her who attempts it in faith and with prayer.

All is seldom taken at once. We owe duties, we have responsibilities, to those who are still with us, and the only noble way, the only Christian way of meeting and hearing grief is, with God's help, to do this cheerfully. Pillow the aching head on the thought, "God knows." Rest the tired eyes on his starry words of promise. Gird up your loins, take the staff in hand, and go forward; for ever beside thee, poor, sorrowing one, even in the hottest fire of pain, if thou love and trust him, I see a form like unto the Son of God. There is the scar of the wounds in his hands, in his feet, and he who strengthens thee to-day was once nailed to the cross.

Another reason against a selfish indulgence in grief, the sort of indulgence that, by and by half insensibly finds itself an enjoyment and an occupation, is that this kind of grief is pagan. If we accept our Lord's positive statement that "in my Father's house are many mansions," and if we expect to meet our dear ones in the Father's house, in the Father's own good time, can we not wait with patient hope for the hour of reunion? We can spare our children for a journey across the Atlantic, or for a long period at college; we can give them in marriage to those with whom they go to dwell in other lands and other homes. Is heaven the only spot which seems to our hearts an abode of exile? Is the Lord's bright angel, who beckons them to immortality, the only messenger whom we cannot receive with faith when he comes in the Lord's name? Dearly beloved, we are to blame if we cultivate the selfishness of grief.—Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster.

Elon College Notes.

The holidays are over and we are all hard at work. Some of us are busy trying to get our lessons, while others are busy trying to keep from it. How amusing it is to mark and observe the many wiles which some students will practice in order to "beat" the teacher. But we feel thankful that not many such have taken up their abode in this part of the country, though a few are thus inclined. The college is holding its own very well since the re-opening. Two or three old students have fallen out of ranks, but several new ones have come in to take their places. Everything connected with us now bids fair for a good 5 months' work. The weather is wintry in the extreme, but the air is pure, and nearly all the students are enjoying good health and high spirits.

A little recreation after a term of hard work is always refreshing and beneficial. Judging from appearances we have all enjoyed ourselves exceedingly well during the good old Christmas time and we feel like throwing ourselves into the work with more vigor than ever.

The past year has been a year of wonderful events in many particulars. Leaving out the strong political animosities existing during the last campaign, many strides forward have been taken in science, sociology, art, and industry. It has been a year of great activity in the manual and mental spheres of life. What this year holds in store for us we cannot tell. It is best that we cannot. But there is one fact of which we are reminded on every New Year's day, and that is, we are one mile-post nearer to the end of life's journey. It is necessary, therefore, that we examine ourselves, and consider what improvements we can make over our last year's work. Have we made good use of our opportunities should be our question to ourselves. Have we used profitably all the little odds and ends of time which were at our command? If not, then let us right about and do better in the future. It is almost remarkable how much a man can do in a year, if he will but employ his time profitably. Every morning should behold us beginning some task which will earn for us our food and clothing, and bring to us that sweet peace of mind, and clearness of conscience which honest living alone affords. Industry, honesty, and piety are the qualities which bring success to all people.

Holland.

DEAR SUN:—We had a very nice time at Holland on Sunday. It was the celebration of the birth of Christ and at the same time we celebrated his death by holding our regular communion service.

It was a very solemn service for us to think that Jesus was born to suffer for us and we were permitted to hold services to remind us of his death on his birthday.

Bro. Richard Keen our senior deacon is very sick, we trust God will see fit to restore him to health again, but if not he is ready for the transfer over the river.

It was very cold but we had a very enjoyable time at Holland.

Deacon Doughtrey and family had the pleasure of having with them their son from Roanoke who has not been home in two years so they had a Merry Christmas.

Trusting God will bless us at Holland next year as much as he has this past year. I will close wishing You and all your readers a Happy New Year.

Union.

DEAR SUN:—We had our Christmas tree at Union on the 26th and although very cold we had a large turnout of people, the children especially enjoying the service we had some singing, a short address by the writer, and Santa Claus came in with his pack to distribute the presents.

The pastor was remembered by the school in a box of fruit and bouquet of flowers and some kind friend placed on the tree a silk handkerchief. I do not know who it was but I appreciate it all the same.

We had a very pleasant time and I trust God will bless the dear people at Union and bless our labors together this year.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We expected to have the SUN full size this week, but owing to unavoidable circumstances we found it was impossible.

Capt. James A. Turrentine gave the SUN office a pleasant call last week. Hope he will come again. He will always find a hearty welcome.

The editor of this paper expects to start to Eastern Va. next week, and will possibly remain until after the first Sunday in February.

Rev. J. D. Wicker and family have moved to Youngsville, N. C., and in the future the above named place will be his post office address.

THE WONDERFUL COUNSELOR, by Rev. Henry B. Mead, A. M., price 50 cents., Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. This is a rich book and one that we can heartily commend to all.

Southern Churchman comes to us now in a new dress, new head and eight pages. It is one of the best exchanges that comes to this office; and we are glad to see it thus improved.

The Christian Statesman, published at Pittsburg, Pa., at $2.00 per year. Wilbur F. Crafts and Rev. J. T. McCror, D. D., editors, is a paper that every body should have. It is alive to all the doings of the day and an active and very aggressive agent for the suppression of vice of all kinds. It is a noble advocate for Sunday closing of the World's Fair and the prohibition of liquor selling on the premises. May our great Ruler prosper it in its noble mission.

According to the provisions of the International Copyright Law, which went into effect July 1, 1891, any country may, by complying with certain easy conditions, receive the benefits of the law. The German Empire has just become one of the group of nations enjoying the international copyright system, the other ones being the United States, Great Britain, France, Belgium and Switzerland. The first copyright in this country of a German work has just been obtained by Robert Bonner's Sons. The work is a novel entitled "Miss Mischief," is by the most popular German novelist of the day, Heinburg, and will run serially in the New York Ledger.

BAPTISTS—IN THE SECOND CENTURY BY REV. J. J. BURROUS, D. D. On taking up The Central Baptist of January 5, our eyes fell on the above caption. Immediately a thought passed through the mind, something new; for we had long been of the opinion that there were no Baptists in the Second Century.

The article was read with much interest, expecting to find something said about the Baptists of the Second Century; but, to our disappointment, in all the history quoted and all that was said nothing was said about Baptists. Christians, and Christian church, however seemed to stand prominent all the way through the article. It appeared to us after a careful reading that his heading must have been a mistake.

There is probably not a single human parent who has not found it necessary to conceal from his child certain things which might have been communicated if the knowledge of them would have been for the child's good. A wise father keeps back from his child the knowledge of many things until the mind of the child is prepared to receive them. There are some things which God sees it would be most unwise to communicate. We must submit to the Divine wisdom, and believe that, if anything further were needful to our intellectual, moral, or spiritual improvement, God would have revealed it to us.

The above taken from The Baptist is suggestive of much religious thought. Hidden things belong to God; revealed things belong to man. If God should let us know everything in this life we would have nothing to learn when we get to heaven.

Truth Held in Unrighteousness.

Barren knowledge is useless without its practical fruits. What advantage comes to one through a knowledge of law, who takes no interest in it, and receives no income from it? A knowledge of medicine proves a blessing only to those to whom it is applied.

In politics, science, theology and all public questions, it is of the greatest importance to have truth as the foundation stone; for in all these, uncertainties may prove a source of weakness and even death to their advocates; but standing on truth with a sure knowledge of it gives a power that looks an opponent in the face without fear or trembling. Peter preached bravely on the day of Pentecost, right in the faces of the enemies of Christ without consulting flesh and blood, because he knew that he was on the side of truth. It was Felix that feared and trembled, when Paul reasoned of righteousness and judgment, because the discourse was the exponent of truth. Truth makes a man brave; but falsehood makes him a coward.

Truth, however, is worth nothing to the world without its practical development. A mere abstract truth brings no one any good. Paul speaks of certain ones holding the truth in ungodliness and unrighteousness. Many wicked men believe the doctrine of Christianity; but their lives are wicked, holding the truth in unrighteousness, and the truth will under the directing hand of justice punish them. Truth held in unrighteousness never saves.

It is when truth is developed into its practical fruits that the world is made better. A political party may have truth as a base in its published platforms, but if its laws made, should be the fruits of demagogism, a curse, rather than a blessing, is the result. Sciences demonstrated to be true, bring great good to the world only when their practical fruits are turned on the active developing forces of the world's machinery. An abstract truth without its legitimate fruits is like faith without works; and as the body is dead without the spirit, so is faith without works.

The Outlook.

Many readers of the CHRISTIAN SUN are always anxious for the prosperity of the Christian church, and read with much interest everything that gives any light upon that subject.

We can say to this anxious friend, judging from our standpoint, we never saw a brighter day for the Christian church than now. Her educational interest is in a better condition than ever before. The missionary work has grown in popularity almost beyond the expectation of its best friends.

All that is necessary for a grand success this year is a humble spirit, and earnest prayer, a loving trust in God and the best possible effort put forth. This done and you will see the Christian church rising in the strength of her beauty.

Running About.

The week before Christmas, we spent two days and one night in the neighborhood of Garner and Auburn, N. C. We met many of our old friends whom we had not seen in a long time. Among them brethren Henry Utley, W. L. Moring, Nash Smith, G. O. Barbee, Paul Johnson J. J. Flowers, J. A. Smith, James Sandford, Jesse Langston, Sister Lucy Murray and others whose names we do not remember.

Last week we took a tramp around O'Kellys Chapel, meeting and talking with many old acquaintances, among them brethren J. S. Harward, Wm. Brown's family, A. M. Parish, M. L. Harward, Josiah Atkins, W. H. Parish, J. F. O'Kelly, Dr. J. M. O'Kelly, C. S. Holleman and others.

It is quite a pleasure to move from place to place meeting there dear friends, though sometimes we feel very much like we were a way worn traveler.

The Legislature.

The Legislature of N. C. met in the city of Raleigh on the 4 in t. In appearance it is a very intelligent looking body of men. Rather above the average May God so direct that his name may be glorified.

Now let all the churches in the state petition the Legislature immediately to either pass a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the state or submit the question to a vote of the people next August. Let the petitions pour in fast.

At Youngsville.

Last Saturday in company with Bro. P. T. Klapp, we went to the appointment at Youngsville, N. C. After taking dinner with Bro. Klapp, services were held at the church, which were pleasant.

Whilst there we had the pleasure of visiting the families of brethren, J. D. Wicker, P. T. Klapp, S. B. Klapp, Matt. Winston, A. L. Allen and Harris. It is quite a pleasure to be in these Christian families. We also met the Rev. Mr. Moore the new Methodist preacher at Youngsville this year. He is an excellent spirited man, and will, we think, do a good work.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, our trip was a delightful one.

Deacon Henry Utley.

As has already been announced, Henry Utley, one of the deacons of the Christian church at Hayes' Chapel died suddenly at his home at Garner, Wake county, N. C. on the fourth inst.

He was a son of Rev. Little John Utley, a minister of great popularity in the Christian church.

We have known Bro. Henry Utley intimately, for twenty-three years, and can say that he was one of the best men to be found anywhere.

It was always a pleasure to talk with him about ministers of his earlier days. We feel that he has met in glory many of the ministers who used to visit his father's home in his boyhood day.

He leaves to mourn their loss one son and four daughters. May the Lord bless them.

Putting off.

A thousand times some people have heard the sentence, never put off until to-morrow that which ought to be done to-day, but many have failed to learn the lesson. Work which could and ought to be done to-day, is put off from time to time until finally all opportunities are gone, and loss thereby brought to some are, either temporally or spiritually or both.

Many whose subscriptions are out to the SUN think, well, I will renew in a few days or weeks, but it is put off again and again thinking the money is not needed at the office. But we want to tell you brethren we need the money and you need the paper.

Our Protest.

WHEREAS, God's Holy laws require his people to keep the Sabbath day holy, and,

WHEREAS, No man, nor men, have any moral right to repeal God's holy and divine laws or to teach men to disobey them, for the law says, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." Ex. 20: 8, 9, 10. And,

WHEREAS, The church would be guilty, by consent of the violation of said Sabbath law, if she did not record her protest against it, therefore be it—

RESOLVED, That the Christian churches at Pleasant Grove, Halifax Co., Va., Damascus, Orange Co., N. C., and Mt. Auburn, Warren Co., N. C., record their solemn protest against the opening of the World's Fair, or the selling of liquors on the grounds, on the blessed Lord's Holy Sabbath day.

That these churches beg that all appropriations made by congress and the legislatures throughout the United States, be withdrawn, unless God's Holy Sabbath is observed.

That these churches now and forever condemn the running of trains on Sunday and the riding thereon.

That the pastor of these churches and members do all in their power to prevent their members attending the World's Fair if opened on the Holy Sabbath, and from riding on Sunday trains.

That we ask all God's people in this country to unite with us in our protest.

That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the church books and published in the CHRISTIAN SUN, and copied by the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and all other papers that will. Signed by the deacons of the above churches, and pastor.

Notes From Harvard.

Well, one of us is lost! I hardly know which, and don't suppose he does; but according to promise one of us was to write the notes this week, so 'amid the silent stillness of somber solitude,' I assume the task, having, perhaps, the most spare time of the two, notwithstanding the fact that I was never busier in my life. My holidays have almost entirely been spent in trying to dig to the bottom of about 3,000 anglo-saxon 'roots.' Compare the pleasures of this kind of amusement(?) with a return to the family fire-side, where nothing but the ring of cheery voices greets your ear from morning till night, where the warm grasp of a friend's hand meets you at every turn; think of the difference between holiday chocolate cake and turkey, and a ten days menu of 'saxon roots,' and you may form some idea of a man's first Christmas away from home, at a distance of 800 miles, surrounded by thousands of strange faces, there being only one of him, with a natural southern temperature trying to adapt itself to a New England climate, and you may form some idea the writer's experiences of the past few days.

This has truly been called 'the land of the lingering snow,' for during the past two months the ground has seldom been visible, though the snow has been only a few inches deep; but somehow or other it has a way of staying here after it comes. For the most part buggies, wagons and carts have given way to the soft running sleighs; and 'from early morn till dewy (or rather snowy) eve' the merry jingle of sleigh-bells is heard along the streets of this beautiful city. Under the effect of snow and electric lights truly Cambridge tonight presents a fairy-like scene. No wonder New England has been the nurse of American poetry. The panorama of beauty that stretches before me as I gaze silently from the window of a cozy little room, causes poetic sentiments to rise within even me, but before I can pen them down, the thoughts of having to get up to-morrow morning and walk several blocks to breakfast, with the thermometer standing at Zero, nips all my poetry in the bud and converts it into prosaic prose.

All but about a hundred or two of the students have gone to their homes (or to some-one else's home) to spend the holidays, so it is indeed a lonely place around here. When we enter 'memorial' (our dining hall) we can fully appreciate the feelings of the man who said, 'I feel like one who treads alone some banquet hall deserted.' Only a ragged remnant frequents the haunts so recently resounding with the tread of 3,000 students. The few who are left here, most of them at least, find relief from their loneliness on the ice-ponds, in sleighs, or in the various haunts of the great Boston. My only recreation was a very pleasant day off at Fall River, and a nine miles 'tramp' to historic old Lexington. In company with a friend I spent a few hours roaming over the old battlefield, only a few years ago resounding with the clash of arms, and reddening with the flow of blood that was to be the seal of American liberties. And I thought, what a change! Now silent and still as in the hush of death, a sad reminder of the face of the brave old farmers who sleep beneath its sod. One stone monument and a few humble slabs, with here and there an old tree, are the only visible marks of days gone by. How little that brave band of heroes ever dreamed of what a nation was to crown the sacrifices that they were that day making in behalf of their liberties, and the liberties of those who were to follow after them. But that battle has been fought. We are what we are under God's mercies, and we will be what we will be with the same God the judge of our just deserts.

Well, the time of old broken resolutions having just passed. I suppose the world is pretty busy making new ones—many of them only to suffer the same fate of those of all the years since we can remember. How many a 'close place' will soon make a man wish he hadn't 'sworn off' lying! How many a tumble on the winter snow and ice will make him wish he had waited a few days to 'swear off' swearing! How many a sparkling cup will tempt him to say, 'well I won't count just this time!'—and how many will have the courage to go through the coming year, and have fewer new resolutions to form in 1894? I didn't intend to get off on this subject, but by way of parenthesis I may say, as for my part, I am resolved to spend no more Christmases as I have this one—if I can help it.

I am getting very anxious for the return of my fellow-companion, and anyone in his travels seeing anything of him, will confer a favor by returning him to the owner,
E. L. MOFFITT.

Public Road Congress.

To be held in Raleigh, January 19, 1893, 10 A. M. Governor Holt has issued a proclamation calling together a State Public Road Congress in Raleigh, Jan. 19, 1893. This action was taken upon the presentation to him of the views of fully two hundred citizens embracing Editors, Chairmen of the Board of County Commissioners, Mayors of towns, members of the legislature, farmers, business men, and others, saying the time and place was opportuned for the discussion of matters pertaining to the improvement of the public roads of the State. The various Boards of County Commissioners of the State have met and appointed delegates, and as many as 39 counties have already reported names of delegates to the committee of arrangements in Raleigh. Everything points to a meeting of great magnitude and important results are expected from their deliberations.

The inauguration ceremonies of the Governor elect will be held Jan. 18, the day before the meeting of the Road Congress, and very low railroad rates are promised.

The CHRISTIAN SUN urges a very full attendance.

Let us have good roads.

Poisoned Eyes.

There is a story of a painter who had bitterly offended a woman, so that she determined to take a cruel revenge. He was about to paint a picture for exhibition at a famous gallery, where he hoped to gain the first prize. The woman resolved to spoil that picture, and she went about the work very cunningly. She did not meddle with the picture itself; all she did was to give the painter every day a cup of coffee, into which she put a small white powder. What harm could that do, you want to know. Wait awhile, and the story will tell. The painter labored diligently and was well satisfied with his work. He was so confident that he should succeed in carrying off the prize, that when his picture was hung in the gallery, he placed a curtain before it, which he did not mean to take down until the last moment before the judges gave their award. The other pictures seemed to him very badly colored; the trees in them were all yellowish, their flesh-color more like leather than flesh, and the tint of their seas like that of boiled greens. He felt sure that his picture far excelled such sorry daubing. When he drew aside the curtain from his picture he was gratified to see that a crowd quickly gathered round it; but the crowd did not admire. On the contrary, every one burst out laughing, and people called to their friends to come and look at this droll thing. His picture was entirely blue!

What he had meant for flesh-color was violet in shadow; what he had meant for emerald green was like blue ink; and his trees were of the tint of blue serge. Of course he could not see that it was so, but his friends assured him of the fact. His enemy had poisoned his eyes with the powder, so that he saw everything as if through yellow spectacles. In a few days—taking no more of the powder—his sight was restored, and he saw how ridiculous was the picture he had painted.

The story may or may not be true, but it is quite possible, and I tell it you because, as a parable, it is entirely true. We are all painters at work upon a picture, and the picture is our life and character. And our picture may be utterly spoiled if we take much of a certain powder. It will be more or less spoiled even if we take a little of it, and I am afraid that most of us take some. The powder is selfishness. How can we tell whether we have taken a good deal? If we have, we shall be like the painter in the story.

We shall think that our neighbors paint extremely ill. A very selfish boy (or man) has a bad opinion of most other folk. He thinks that this one is greedy, and that one is a coward; that this one is mean, and that one is quarrelsome. He sees faults and vices in everybody, except those who flatter him. An unselfish person is known by the respect he has for others. He may not think them perfect, but he believes that there are some better than himself. A selfish person thinks in his heart that there is nobody, with whom he has to do, who is so fine a fellow as himself. The story of the painter is a perfect parable in making him with poisoned eyes regard every other's work as mean and poor.

It is a perfect parable in another respect. The painter did not know what a miserable daub his picture was until the time of judgment. It is possible that we may not know what our life and character really are until the great Judge pronounces sentence. Our Lord has told us that there will be much surprise in the day of Judgment. People who have imagined that they were good and religious will find themselves terribly mistaken. Others will be astonished to find that they have the approval of the Judge.

In one particular the story is not a perfect parable. An enemy gave the painter the poison. In real life it is our friends, or those who think themselves our friends, who give it to us. They magnify our worth, they excuse our faults, they overpraise our doings, they flatter our weakness; and, though they do so in kindness, they often do us harm. It seems nice to have such friends, but they are our worst enemies. "A spoiled child" too often becomes a madly selfish man or woman. If you have a friend or a teacher who points out your faults, you will be wise to listen to him or her, for when that is wisely and gently done it is the greatest kindness that can be shown to us.—Ex.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

New Year's Greeting to you all and may you have many happy returns of the season. I suppose every one of you have had a merry Christmas. If you have had as pleasant a Christmas as I have it has been a pleasant time indeed. It is true the weather was rather cold for the little boys and girls of the South but then the nice fires could be enjoyed all the better. I will not have time to write each a separate note to day for I am very busy indeed. Thanks to those who have expressed kind wishes. Welcome to our new writer. To Mary we will say that Annt Myrtle is the wife of Rev. J. L. Foster, pastor of the Raleigh Christian church. She is a devoted Christian and deeply interested in the little folks.

With the new year will you not strive earnestly to be a better Christian than you were last year. You are older and know more and can be better and do more for Jesus than ever before if you only will. Now will you? Let each one pray that God may help her or him to be a bold, brave workman for the cause of Christ this year. May God be with and help each one in my earnest wish for the BAND OF COUSINS.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

WEYERS CAVE, Va., Dec. 24, 1892.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write you and the cousins for the first time. I go to school. I am ten years old and I love to read the Children's Corner. We have cold weather now. It is almost Christmas now. Our teacher lets us have a little over a week for holidays. As I hardly know what to write I will now close for this time.

Your niece,
IVIE D. ANDES.

Dec. 18th 1892.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I feel that it is my duty to drop you a few lines. I was sorry to see no letters from the cousins in the last SUN, but hope there will be just lots of nice letters in the next paper. As my question has not been answered yet I will answer it. (how many generations are there from Abraham to David.) There are fourteen generations found in Matthew 1-17th verse.

Enclosed find one dime for the mission band.

Your nephew,
ALFRED W. ANDES.

WHALEYVILLE, VA., JAN. 3rd 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I begin again with the New Year, and will try to be more prompt than before. Well Christmas has gone. I would have enjoyed it more, if the snow had not kept me in doors all the time. Santa Claus came, and you know he was gladly welcomed by us all. School began again yesterday after two weeks holiday. I wish I could have sent you a bridal present, but I did not know you anticipated marriage until it was too late. But you have my best wishes for a long and happy life. I will close now, will write soon.

With many congratulations and wishes for a happy New Year.
LIDA DOUGHTIE.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., JAN. 1, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write again, as my question has not been answered, and I will tell the answer to it. Joseph was the favorite son of his father. I will ask another, what became of Joseph. I will answer Willie Staley's question, Jacob left his home to go down in Egypt to see Joseph. Gen. 45 chapt. 19 verse, and also Ora Winston's question: Diciples were first called Christians at Antioch. Acts. 11 chapt. 26 verse, and Allie Gibson's question: Aaron had bells of gold and pomegranites around the hem of his garment. Ex. 28 chapt. 34 verse. I will close find half dime for the Band.

Your little niece,
BESSIE GREY McCaULEY.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., JAN. 1, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I was very much surprised last week when I saw your marriage in the SUN, I thought you were an old married man and Aunt Myrtle was your wife. And now I want to know who Aunt Myrtle is? Hope all the cousins had a pleasant Christmas. Now cousins this is the beginning of a New Year and lets try and see how good we can be and show by writing that we have an interest in our Corner. Our school was out last Friday night and had a very nice time we had dialogues, songs and speeches. Old Santa Claus came and treated us and we had talks from some of the men which were enjoyed very much by us pupils and older ones. Our school will commence tomorrow and I will be busy with my studdies but will try and not forget to write, and I don't want you to forget to write, I love to read Uncle Tangle's letters and all the cousins.

I will answer some of the cousins questions:

Abraham was a decendant of Shem eldest son of Noah.

"Dogs" are mentioned first in the New Testament Matt. 15:27.

Saul was eager to have Stephen killed. Am I correct. I will ask a question:

What woman was beautiful and well favored?

I will close wishing you all a Happy New Year. I send ten cents hoping it will do much good.

I remain your niece,
MARY E. McCAULEY.

"Don't Scold Me."

We mothers often speak in harsh tones of reprimand; sometimes we are so nervous and fretful that we pitch our voices at a high key, very unpleasant to hear. And we often speak in an exaggerated way of our children's faults. "You are the very worst child I ever saw!" "I never knew a boy so noisy and disagreeable as you are?" "You tease me so much that I am only happy and quiet when you are out of my sight".

The manner and the tone of voice these words are said in provoke a child to anger very quickly. Children get irritated and discouraged much more than we think, when they are continually being found fault with. It is much better to give reprimands in a pleasant tone of voice, and with a smile even on the face of reproof.

"Don't, Tommy, don't do that," said a mother. "You know it makes my head ache."

"Does it make your head ache, mother?" asked the child curiously, and with a pitying tone in his voice, and came creeping up to his mother's side, and looking at her as if in doubt whether he would be repulsed or not.

"Sometimes it does, my son," replied Mrs. Lyon kindly, "and it is always unpleasant. Won't you try to play without making so much noise?"

"Yes, mother, I'll try" answered the little fellow cheerfully, "but I forget sometimes." He looked earnestly at his mother, as if something more was in his thoughts.

"Well, dear, what else?" she said encouragingly.

"When I forget you'll tell me, won't you?"

"Yes, love."

"And then I'll stop. But don't scold me, mother, for then I can't stop."

Mrs. Lyon's heart was touched. She caught her breath and bent her head down, to conceal its expression, until it rested on the silken hair of her child. "Be a good boy, Tommy, and mother will never scold you any more," she murmured gently in his ears.

His arms stole upwards, and as they were twined closely about her neck, he pressed his lips tightly against her cheek, thus sealing his part of the contract with a kiss.

How sweet to a mother's taste were these first fruits of a self-control. In the effort to govern herself, what a power had she acquired! Only first fruits were these. In all her after days did that mother strive with herself ere she entered into a contest with the inherited evils of her children. And just so far as she was able to overcome evil in herself, did she overcome evil in them. Often, very often, did she fall back into the old state, and often, very often, was self resistance only a slight effort, but the feeble influence for good that flowed from her words or actions whenever this was so, warned her of error and prompted a more vigorous self-control. Need it be said that she had an abundant reward? Words spoken in anger are sure to bring regret. — Exchange.

Poor Girls.

There is a wealth that is in the person and not in the pocket, in the head and not in the purse. There is a wealth which cannot be taken from us, and which lasts when earthly treasures are liable to vanish away.

The wealth which may be swept away by the breaking of a bank, the wrecking of a railway, or the stealing of a treasure, is too precarious to be depended upon. What we need is wealth of mind, wealth of body, wealth of health, wealth of skill, intelligence and power. Says a sensible writer: "The poorest girls in the world are those not taught to work."

There are thousands of them.

Rich parents have petted them, and they have been taught to despise labor, and depend upon others for a living, until they are perfectly helpless. The most forlorn women belong to this class. When reverses come what can they do?

"It is the duty of parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it.

Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living, and save her own earnings, and make a shilling buy a shilling's worth of something needful and valuable.

"The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly round—the rich are likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill added to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and is indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do parents must educate their daughters to work; no reform is more imperative than this."

Many a widow, left penniless, is brought to dependence and distress because she has never learned the dignity of labor, or been taught the method of a useful life; and many a girl, cast unsheltered upon the world, has gone down to unfathomable depths of sin and shame because she was never trained to care for her health, make herself useful, and by honest industry earn an honest living. — Selected.

An event of no little importance to the people of the Sandwich Islands is the eruption of Mauna Loa, the greatest volcano in the world, which for 12 years has been comparatively quiet. The eruption was preceded by severe earthquakes and was attended by bursts of fire, smoke and streams of lava which lighted up the sea and islands for 60 miles. Mauna Loa is the most interesting mountain of the whole group of volcanic mountains of Hawaii, from the fact of its still being an active volcano. Its central terminal crater, 8,000 feet in diameter, quite perfect with nearly vertical walls from 500 to 600 feet high on the inner side, and the bottom between the numerous cones is usually covered with solid lava, from the fissures of which issue steam and sulphurous vapors; but its features change with every eruption. There is no record of any eruption from Mauna Loa before 1832, when lava flowed from the summit crater on several sides.—Ex.

Died.

At Oregon, Rockingham county, N. C., Dec. 30th, 1892, Mrs. Margaret E. Foster, wife of Capt. J. W. Foster in the 60th year of her age. Sister Foster was converted under the preaching of Rev. Isaac N. Walter, baptized and received into church at Union, Alamance county, by him in 1850. She has lived a consistent Christian life since that time. Funeral and burial services at Happy Home church where she was a member at the time of her death. A good Christian wife and mother now rests from her labors. May God comfort the bereaved friends.

JEREMIAH W. HOLT.

Mrs. Susan J. Jones, died Dec. 10, 1892. She was about 67 years old, had been a very consistent member of the church for a number of years. Her husband and one child had gone to the spirit land. She leaves eight children and a number of dear friends to mourn their loss. After a lingering illness of about 1 month from typhoid fever she quietly passed away to her future home. She was fully resigned to the Lord's will, saying, that she was ready to die at any time the good Lord should call. She told her daughter, sister Sue Norwood that she would never get up any more; and requested sister Fannie Coghill to do all she could for her and her dear children, as she would be with them but a short time. And so it was. She requested that they sing at the grave: "Amazing grace—how sweet the sound," with chorus; "we shall meet, beyond the river." Also, "At the cross." She was buried at Big Rock, her old home to await resurrection from the dead. We believe she was a true, earnest model Christian lady. We extend a brother's sympathy to all the bereaved ones. May they all meet in heaven, where partings will be no more.

S. B. KLAPP.

It is with extreme sadness that we chronicle the sad death of an esteemed friend, schoolmate and neighbor. Mr. Ottis W. Roney the only and devoted son of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Roney. He was employed by W. Duke Sons & Co. as book-keeper and had won a noble reputation in Durham. To know him was to like him. He had lots of friends where ever he went. He was taken sick with typhoid fever several days ago and was moved from his boarding place to his Uncle's Mr Washington Duke. Where he lingered for a few days growing worse all the while, until his Master's voice called him to come up higher. He was just blooming into manhood. Had he lived until Christmas day he would have been twenty years old. He was coming up to take dinner at his old home. But Alas! the cruel hand of death came and blighted their fond hopes and that much loved voice was hushed and still when Christmas came. We know not at what hour we may be called away. The great thing that should concern us is to be ready. His fond parents weep not as some, for they have the blessed hope of meeting him by and by. He had been a member of Trinity Methodist church for about one year. He was called away ere his character was spotted with sin. His remains were brought up in a special car from Durham and interred in the cemetery at Haw River. A host of friends from his old neighborhood and several friends and relatives from Durham went to pay their last sad tribute of respect to him. His father and mother loses a noble and devoted son, and his sister a noble and loving brother, and Alamance loses one of her noblest and purest young men. They have the sympathy of a large host of friends in their sad hereavement.

The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, which were very sad.

DEAR SUN, AND DEAR SISTER CHURCHES:—Pray for us for indeed

we need your prayers. Again the Berkley Christian Church lays in ashes.

Last night at about twelve o'clock the police found the church in flames; by the time he blew his call the roof fell in and there was no way to save anything—all is gone not even one book was saved, so again we are without even a house to worship in.

There is no idea as to how it started, as it was so far gone before any one saw it they do not know from whence it came. As it is so early yet we do not know what we will do, so will tell more next week.

Your sister in Christ,
VIOLA C. DEMAREST.

DEAR SUN:—We are having such continued bad weather and snow we cannot do very much in our church work. Congregations are small and Sunday school not so well attended. We had a little treat last night for the Sunday school that was very well attended. The pastor of the First Baptist church was present and gave us a nice little talk suited to the occasion. The pastor and others made short talks, then the Superintendent was made a present of a beautiful Teacher's Bible, after which the hearts of the children were made glad with a nice tree of apples, oranges, nuts, candies etc., and there was an ample supply to treat the entire congregation. Everybody seemed to enjoy the occasion and all remained to receive the benediction. Mr. T. J. Winston who took an active part in all the exercises before leaving placed a beautiful scarf over the book board of the pulpit. Mr. S. H. Peace received a beautiful present through the Superintendent with instructions not to look at it until he got home. How many can guess what it was?

Pitiable Mothers.

Of all classes of people to be pitied

in this world it is the mother who has a wayward daughter. As a general rule, such a calamity falls to the lot of a meek little woman, a diffident creature, who would suffer any amount of torture rather than face a scene with her unruly daughter, and thus the girl comes out victorious in every word-scrimmage with the tired, patient mother. Mothers must meet unflinchingly the duties God has placed upon them, and remember that in their hands lies the future of their families for weal or woe. It is expected that they love their children dearly, but that should not be an impediment to their correcting them when they stand in need of it. In their infancy all they have to do is to cry for what they want, and the weak mother granting it will plant the first seeds of the evil which is to bear such bitter fruit. In girlhood the daughter soon learns that her mother's will is a matter of very little consequence; a little teasing, and the point is gained. And when she arrives at womanhood, ah! then your trials begin. You begin to learn the truth of the old adage that "when your children are little they tread on your lap, but when they grow older they tread on your heart."—Selected.

The Nation has been loud in praise of the New Jersey judge who sent the thirty-two ballot-box stuffers to prison; but Governor Abbott, in recognition of the fact that they stuffed the boxes for himself and his friends, has pardoned them all and sent them home to share the blessings of Christmas with their families. Such pardons are scoundrelism in high office, and intended premiums on knavery. Abbot has disgraced his name and his State. Who can respect the man or his act that has any regard for honor or government? The privileges of the ballot have been the glory of the Nation, and the ballot as cast and counted, the people had the utmost faith in; but that day has largely gone by. Even the final official count can not safely be depended on. Honor in politics was never so slow in our Land before, and in many instances the voice of the polls has ceased to be the voice of the people. We wish we could see this guilt wholly in one party, then we should have larger hope, but the subversion of the will of the people at the polls and in the official declarations is a crime not to be fastened on one party alone. Official positions, legislatures and States, are stolen, if we may believe the mutual accusations of the two old parties. It is high time that honest men ruled.

We are like-minded with the Presbyterian Observer in that American Church History needs a chronicler. We have separate denominational histories, but even they are deficient in many respects. No one, however, has attempted to take up Church life in this country, and present it in its different aspects and relations, from the planting of the Cross on the island of San Salvador to the present time, especially as a development of the distinctive principle of a "Free Church in a Free State." Here Christianity has been developed largely upon the idea of the separation and independence of Church and State, neither interfering with the other. The Church has been supported by voluntary contributions, and the results have not only been most satisfactory, but even wonderful. It has shown a power, growth and spirituality unknown to State-supported Churches. In a recent article in the Independent, Prof. Phillip Schaff, who is regarded as an authority upon ecclesiastical history, suggests the need of establishing, in all the theological seminaries of the land, a Chair for the teaching of American Church History. The suggestion is worthy of careful consideration. In this way valuable information could be collected and conveyed. The lectures in the course of study would be published in due time, and given to the public, and would lay the basis for an elaborate and authentic history of the Christian church from the discovery of America to this day, when its influence extends far and near.

"I believe" instead of, "The Bible says," is one way for a preacher to freeze a church.

THE PULPIT.

Profaning the Temple.

REV. JAMES MAPLE D. D.

And he said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise. John 2:16.

This occurred at the commencement similar to it near its close. The history of our text reveals the profound reverence of the Saviour for his Father's house, and also the deep depravity of man. The love of money, when fully developed, has no regard for the rights of humanity, nor reverence for God. It blinds a man's reason, prevents his judgment, hardens his heart, and brutalizes him. It leads to the most shameful cruelty.

To understand our text we must take into consideration the condition of things, and the surrounding circumstances. The place where this transaction occurred was not in the temple itself, but the outer court of the court of the Gentiles. This was esteemed the least saved part of the temple, and the Jews did not consider it profanation to appropriate this to any business in any way connected with the temple service. The things which were bought and sold were at first those pertaining to the sacrifices. It is probable that in course of time the traffic extended to all kinds of merchandise. This caused much confusion, noise, fraud, contention, and was exceedingly improper in God's house.

The law of God required every Jew to pay a tribute to the service of the sanctuary of half a shekel. Moses was commanded to number the people, and every man, "and they shall give every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary." Exodus. 30: 11-16. This was a Jewish coin, and the tribute was required to be paid in that coin. In the days of our Saviour the Jews were in subjection to the Romans. The money in current use was the Roman coin, and it was some what difficult for the Jews when they came up to Jerusalem to worship to get their own coin to pay the annual tribute. To meet this emergency a table of exchange was established in the outer court of the court of the Gentiles where the Roman coin could be exchanged for the Jewish half shekel. Of course the money exchanges would demand a small sum for the exchanges. There was nothing wrong in this business in itself. It was necessary to meet the wants of the people that could not so well be met in any other way. This business was profitable when honestly conducted, for many thousands of people had to have their money exchanged. The profitableness of the exchange attracted the attention of the covetous, and unprincipled who took it into their own hands. There was an opportunity for fraud and oppression, and the business had become outrageously wicked. Those who were conducting it were seeking their own personal interests, and had no regard for God nor his laws. The sin was not in the business itself, but in the manner of conducting it. They had made the temple "a den of thieves."

There were others beside the money exchanges who were engaged in selling doves. God is merciful and just, and his laws are suited to the condition and wants of man. He required various offerings to be made by the Jews, but only such as they were able to make. He required nothing beyond their ability. Some of the offerings were expensive, and many of the people were too poor to make them. God made provision to meet this condition of things. Those who could not bring a lamb were allowed to offer "two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons." Lev. 14: 21-22. The people coming a long distance could not bring the birds with them, and had to get them at Jerusalem. Thus it was necessary for some one to have the birds at the temple for sale, and this was an extensive and profitable business. Like the money exchange this attracted the attention of covetous and unprincipled men, and they took advantage of the people and robbed them. Selling doves in the outer court of the Gentiles was not sinful in itself, but in the manner in which it was done.

The men engaged in this business did not confine their traffic to those things which were required in the service of the temple, but sold many other things. They cared but little for the house of God, and its solemn services. They were supremely selfish, and sought to make all the money that they could out of the people who came up to the temple to worship. The sinfulness consisted in this, and not in the business itself. They made the temple a place of gain; they cheated and defrauded; they took advantage of the poor, and by their being under the necessity of purchasing these articles for sacrifice, they robbed them by selling what they had to have at enormous and unjust prices. When Christ came into the court of the gentiles, and saw the wickedness and cruelty of the money exchangers and those who were selling doves, his righteous indignation was awakened; and making himself "a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep and the oxen; and poured out the changers money, and overthrew the tables; and said unto them which sold these things; Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." This whip was an emblem of authority, and not an instrument of cruelty; for there is no evidence that he used any violence to any of the men engaged in this business. They fled from his presence not from the fear of physical punishment; but for other reasons. There was a strong conviction in the minds of the Jewish people that the holy prophets had a divine right to change, regulate, and order the various affairs relating to the external worship of the temple. Many of the people believed Christ to be the promised Messiah, and others were deeply impressed that he was a prophet. Even the most wicked felt this to some extent, and it was this feeling that made the cruel traffickers in the temple tremble and flee from his presence. They were overawed by this sense of authority, and struck with the consciousness that he had a right to command. There was a majesty in the personal presence and bearing of Christ that awed and overwhelmed the wicked. We have a remarkable illustration of this in experience of those who went out to arrest Christ, and bring him before the authorities that he might be put to death. When they encountered Christ he "said unto them, Whom seek ye? They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them. As soon as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground." The majesty of his mien, the frank, open, fearless manner of declaring himself convinced them of his innocence, quickened their consciences, and made them realize the awful wickedness of their conduct. This paralyzed them with fear, and they fell as dead men. There was a wonderful power in a quickened conscience, and men have died under it. Richard Crowninshield was a hardened, strong minded remorseless villain. He was guilty of murder, and had been arrested and shut up in prison on suspicion; but he felt confident that his crime was so completely hidden that he could not be proven guilty. He was cheerful and self-confident even in prison. There were accessories to his crime, not one of whom he thought was suspected. At length an intercepted letter in the post office led to the arrest of one of his accomplices, who was locked up at midnight. Next morning the sheriff went into his cell, and found him standing calmly at the foot of his trundle bed. "Well said the sheriff," did you hear the noise last night?" "Noise? no. What noise? I slept well." "Why did you not know that they had arrested Frank Knapp, and brought him here last night at midnight?" The strong guilty man put his hand to the wall to steady himself, but unable to conceal his feelings, or to recover from the shock, fell back senseless on the bed. The recoil, the scorpion sting, had reached him at last, his sin had found him out; the sword had pierced through the rocky casement around the conscience of the desperate animal, and was grinding in his soul. Thus it was with the sinful traffickers in the court of the temple. The solemn earnestness of Christ, the majesty of his mien, the testimony of their own consciences, unarmed them; and they fled in dismay from his presence. It needed no instrument of torture to drive them out of the court of the temple, for their own consciences were as whips of scorpions lashing their naked souls. This awful experience will come sooner or later to every impenitent sinner. There is no escape only through the pardoning mercy of God as revealed in Christ.

As we have seen the event described in the commencement of Christ's ministry, and at its close he found men engaged in the same wicked business. From this we learn how soon men forget the most solemn reproofs, and return to their evil practices. Christ had shown how wicked this business was, and made those who were engaged in it tremble under his burning reproof which came from his great heart of love. The man nature is the same now that it was in the days of Christ, and men are just as hard hearted, careless, and indifferent now as then. God reproves men, and warns them of the danger of sin, by his word, spirit, and providence. Sometimes they feel it, and are greatly moved; but soon forget the solemn warning, and rush on in sinfulness. The day of judgment came to the wicked Jews, and they reaped the reward of their own wrong doing. Thus it will be with all who disregard the warnings of God. "He that bringeth often reproved hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

The temple was the house of God, and he manifested his presence there in a peculiar manner. He designed that his house should be kept saved, and that all evil things should be shut out of it. Now the temple of God is the heart of the Christian, and he dwells in it by his truth, love, and spirit. The Jews polluted the temple, and God withdrew from it. The Christian sometimes permits wicked thoughts, unholy desires, and sinful ambitions to creep into his mind and heart and defile them. God will not dwell in such a heart. It must be pure to ensare his presence. Christ cleansed the temple in Jerusalem, and he alone can cleanse, and purify our hearts. If we find our hearts unclean let us go to God with the prayer of David in our hearts, and upon our tongues: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

Christ changes the heart by his truth and spirit. He holds the same power over all our sins that he did over the traffickers in the temple. He drove those sinful tradesmen out of the temple, and at his command all our evil thoughts and desires will flee, and our sinful passions will be held in subjection to his spirit and law. We can go to him in every hour of need in humble confidence assured that he will render all needed help, but we must not wait in sin for him to come unasked and purify our hearts. We must take our hearts to him, and ask him to have mercy and cleanse them. He will do it. He will drive out the strong man armed, take his armour from him, and take command himself in the palace of our heart. He will give all needed strength, keep the fire of devotion and love burning on the altar of our hearts; and enable us to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. What a blessed Saviour we have. How we should love, praise, and adore him, with what devotion we should serve him.

The Old Year.

How swiftly time flies away. Another year has passed by never to return. Its fortunes, its happiness, its prosperity have all been enjoyed and numbered with the things of the past. Adversity and misfortunes, no doubt, have darkened the pathway of many. The dark-winged angel death has visited many a family, carried away some loved one to the unseen world beyond. It may have been a dear infant that stayed long enough to be loved and dandled by a fond mother, to be the delight of a father, and joy of the whole household. The little clothes are put away and are kept in remembrance of the dear little boy or girl that has gone to the good Master who says, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Or a mother or father has been called to leave and bid farewell to a dear family and kind friends. How many vacancies his death made in 1892! How many precious souls have been saved in that bright celestial world of peace and happiness since the beginning of this year! How many have gone into eternity unprepared for death! They rejected the offers of mercy and pardon, notwithstanding the light of the Son of Righteousness fell all around them, and the Holy Spirit moved upon their hearts. But these are things now of the past and cannot be changed.

It is for the living to improve from the history of the past. Readers, let us look back into the Old Year and see, if we can, where we failed to do all that we could for the cause of Christ. No doubt we have made failures and have not been as cautious as we should have been, and we feel to regret now that we did not do more and better. Though we have many regrets to trouble us, yet we know that the good Master did bless us abundantly as we labored faithfully for Him. And we have been permitted to enjoy many rich blessings and glorious privileges from Him. We have seen many precious souls converted from sin and death unto life and peace by the grace of God our Saviour.

Our opportunities for work and doing good for our blessed Master lie before us. Let us commence to use these opportunities in the beginning of the New Year, and let us do more for the salvation of souls than we have done in the past. Let us work harder for the building up of our cause, and for the various enterprises of the church. If we do our whole duty, trusting in the Lord, He will surely grant us much prosperity. We must plant and water and God will give the increase. The genial ray from the Son of Righteousness and the refreshing shower of grace divine will descend and cause the seed to germinate and be brought forth to perfection. St. Paul says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling: For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Phil. 2:12-13. Our salvation is nearer than when we first believed. Let us take fresh courage and march steadily on forgetting the things behind and looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

Japanese Oddities.

The Japanese being on the other side of the world, and the day beginning there sooner than in the West, they have gotten ahead of the West in some things.

In the West the carpenter shoves his plane, in Japan he pulls it. His saw cuts as he pulls it to him, not when he pushes it. In the West the carpenter stands up and raises his timber on trestles to ease his back; in Japan he stoops over to get down to his board. The suppleness of the Japanese back—it seems to be as elastic as whale bone.

The Japanese women wonder at the foolishness of women of the West because they carry their babies on their breasts. "How much better to have the baby strapped to your back and out of the way when you wish to work!" Even the little tots are taught thus to care for the youngest member of the family. And the girls are to be seen with their dolls strapped to their backs parading about with them just like the old folks. Once I saw a little girl carrying a baby about as big as herself, the baby fast asleep and the little girl crying as if her heart would break.

And in Japan the color of the mourning garments is white; in the West, black. And the books in Japan begin at the end, at the upper right hand corner, and read down. And in entering the house they take off their shoes, and their hats, if they have any. One sees about as many Japanese without hats as with them.

And the women—mirabile dictu—wear their bustles on the outside of their kimono, and they consider no woman's costume complete without one.

And the weather-boarding of their houses is put on inside the studding, and not on the outside. And paint on the houses? It is about as rare as grasshoppers in winter. And do they have doors to their houses? A Simon pure Japanese house has neither doors, windows, chimneys, eaves. Instead of a door they have a slide. As a rule, all the partitions in the house consist of slides. Sometimes a house is made, a fashionable one, with three sets of slides along two sides of it. An inner slide, a passage-way, a second series of slides, and then an outer series of slides. These slides can all be shoved and packed away, exposing the whole interior of the house to the weather. These slides—the inner ones—are covered with paper; rarely they are provided with panes of glass. Of course, into these houses the cold slides wonderfully.

There is no way of fastening up a Japanese house. The lock is on the gateway leading to the premises. Any one can run the slides of the house from the outside as well as from within. And about the chairs? They do not need them. The proper way to sit is on the floor with your legs doubled under you. It was very amusing to see two American women, named Penrod and Woodworth, take their first lesson in the Japanese fashion of taking off their shoes—the button kind—and sitting on the floor. The Queen of Sheba might have been envious, they looked so dignified. It is perhaps hardly worth mentioning that both ladies caught cold that same evening. If it wouldn't spoil this story I would add I caught one about that time myself.

And the Japanese stove? This consists of a square box, varying in size, filled two-thirds full of ashes and suited to a charcoal fire. They call their stove a hibachi. The whole family sit about it and warm their hands and—smoke. They all smoke. About as many women smoke as men in Japan. And their pipes? There are very small, holding about two or three whiffs only. Every Japanese that can afford it has his little brass pipe, brass bowl, and mouth-piece, and his wallet of tobacco, and whenever the opportunity is offered he smokes. He goes to the store to buy goods. The hibachi is set out so he can light his pipe. No one hurries in Japan except riksha man. The second time I went to church in Japan we arrived, Mr. Otho and myself, a little before the time of meeting, and the family who had charge of the premises set out tea for us and the hibachi for a smoke. We drank the tea as a matter of course, but somehow I did feel like smoking just then.

And Japanese tobacco? It is not like our American weed, but as mild as the weed we use to call pennyroyal, and which I remember attempting to smoke in my boyhood days by means of a cob-pipe of my own manufacture. Neither are the pipes of the loud-smelling, sickening American sort. Neither do the people spit all over the floors. I have yet to see a tobacco chewer in Japan, or a man smoking a cigar, unless he happened to be just fresh from America and brought all his bad manners with him.

And the Japanese, when they say good-night, say "Oyasuminasai," which means, "May you rest well." And so say I. But I find myself forgetting that our friends in the States are just beginning to get up when we go to bed. So I suppose I ought to say to them, "Good morning to you all." Minasan Kounichi wa.

SELECTIONS.

Concerning Cards.

We are asked to give our ideas of card-playing at home—progressive euchre and the card-playing mania in general—and purpose doing so in a frank and familiar manner.

The first thought that comes to our mind is what Edison said to us when we went to see him at Menlo Park some time ago, to get his personal testimony on the total abstinence question. We asked him if he had ever used intoxicants, with a disdainful smile he answered, "No." We asked him why, and still smiling he answered, "I had a better use for my head." His philosophic mind recognized, even when he was but a little fellow living the life of a new-boy on the train, that alcoholic drinks make the brain less clear and powerful. For similar reasoning, if asked why we do not know one card from another we might say, it is because we had a better use for our heads. Our mother was a woman of sufficient ingenuity to put us early on the track of doing something worth while. She taught us that ourselves, plus time, was all the capital we had in life; that if we put ourselves into time to the best advantage, we should come to something by useful, helpful reaction on the world about us, either large or small, according to our powers. We determined that cards would get nothing of our time because they had nothing to give back. We put our heads into books, thoughts, work; for they had something to give back.

Repeatedly on the great trunk railway lines, as we have been busy with our work on the Pullman cars, persons would come to us and ask if we would be kind enough to make up such and such a game of cards; we have never uttered more solid words of satisfaction than these: "You'll excuse me; I do not know one card from another. I never did." To see men who on the scales would weigh anywhere from 200 to 300 pounds, spending their time between the smoking car and a pack of cards, has always been to us one of the most disgusting sights that we are called upon to contemplate; and these women with not a bit of a must, but lacking only butterfly wings to set them aloft in their symbolism, chattering over some combination or other of these pasteboards, has fatigued us for our race. Sometimes, when we have said this, the answer has been made: "Why do you mind it? Under the law of the survival of the fittest those people are going under; that is the best thing they can do." We have heard that some answer made when we bemoaned the loss that comes from drink; "Those people are fitted only for sub-soiling; let them go under; that's where they belong." We know that scientific articles have been written by learned specialists to prove that this is the only way out; this is the inevitable law. But while we see a great deal in the hypothesis of evolution that helps to explain the wonders of the world about us, we believe the gospel law seeks to work not so much the survival of the fittest as the survival of the most. And we believe that these brothers and sisters of ourselves who lose their lives instead of finding them are really more sinned against than sinning, after all. The environment of heredity, the lack of the regnancy of a splendid will power perhaps as much as anything else, and more, the lack of a good mother, has put them where they are—among the parasites of the earth rather than among the vital growth, has classified them with the drones instead of the workers in the great life of humanity. Our hope is, that the forces being set in motion under the law of our Christian civilization will yet teach them the happiness of use and the true use of happiness, so that in the future ages these idiotic methods of "killing time" will be told as the mark of a great semi barbaric period when people knew no better. We know that the Indian races are taught the cards, dice, and all sorts of games; the putting on of ornaments of every kind to the tripping of the light fantastic toe; and we believe that these things shall be put away "when the race out of childhood has grown."—Union Signal.

She Died and Made no Sign.

Two sweet but sad faced women met beneath a huge chestnut tree that overshadowed the quiet street. They stood for a moment in silence, gazing into each other's eyes. Then one spoke in a low tone: "So it is all over! Did she die without making restitution?"

"Yes," was the reply, "and she made no sign of regret for anything she had done." (To understand this, the reader should know that she who had just breathed her last, was a woman of strong character, but cold and hard, and who, while professing to be orthodox to the last degree, and to follow the strict letter of the law in everything, had been very cruel towards some of her kindred in wronging them out of their property.) And yet, the speaker went on: "She lay calm and seemingly at peace, leaving messages of kindness to this one and that, and as long as she could speak, she exhorted all who came near her to make no delay in seeking the Lord! She spoke as if she were dying in the triumph of faith."

"What do you make of such things? This is the third death of the kind that I've known of late, and I am bewildered by them." This was said with an expression of face which showed that she was indeed bewildered and distressed.

"I hardly dare say what I make of them," answered her companion; "for it would seem too much like judging. But the Bible tells us that there are those whom God will give over 'to believe a lie' because they take pleasure (a selfish; grasping and cruel pleasure) in unrighteousness. And surely it was not right to take the property of the fatherless, nor to do many other things in which she seemed to take intense satisfaction. The Bible speaks of 'holding the truth in unrighteousness,' that is, in unrightness. Mrs. ——— did certainly 'hold the truth.' I never knew any one more stout and steadfast in maintaining her belief in the Bible and observing the ordinances."

"This is true," said the other, "but the moment you applied any particular passage to her own conduct, she would argue it all away."

"Yes, I often remarked this. Her son one day charged her with disobedience to her husband. Poor man! what a life she led him! But she defended herself by saying that he was required to obey her as much as she was required to obey him. 'We are commanded to be subject to each other,' said she, 'and of course it means that the one who has the right of a thing should rule the other.' Of course she was always in the right, and therefore the one who should rule. And rule she did, and ruined too! But at last she is conquered!"

"And she has gone with all her unjust gains to be accounted for to God! Gone, with no word of sorrow for the mischief and the spite she sowed broadcast through many years; gone, leaving to her children that which belongs to her sister's child, yet gone in apparent peace with all the world and with her God! What can it, can it mean?"

As there was no reply Mrs. T went on: "I used to suppose that professed Christians who lived as she lived, would be brought to repentance at last, or be exposed as hypocrites. But these three deaths, in which the dying made no sign, have shown me that we can, in our own minds, turn white to black and black to white, right to wrong and wrong to right, and wrest the Scriptures to our own destruction, even while we are making long prayers, and living, in our own esteem, in the very odor of sanctity. We see others do this, and appear not to know it; how can we be sure that we are not doing the same thing?" The gentle lady who spoke looked into the noble face of her friend with troubled eyes.

"I know, my dear friend," replied her companion solemnly, "of but one way to keep ourselves from self-deception, for 'the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked.' I am so afraid of it, that every day I go to the blessed guide-book, and on my knees pray God to lead me by that unerring standard. And though to my sorrow and shame, I find that I come far short of the mark I aim at, yet I am pressing toward it, instead of trying to drag it down to me." She wiped away the tears which filled her beautiful eyes as she spoke.

"No one, my dear," answered her friend, "ever doubts that you are a Christian through and through. As for me, I hope my life bears some fruit. But I fear that I neglect the study of God's word, and the measuring of myself by it, which is such a help to you. I thank you for the lesson you have taught me, and will try to follow your example"—Louisa Moore, in Evangelist.

Agassiz's Belief in the Immortality of Animals.

It would be idle to multiply instances of the thorough humanity and geniality of Agassiz. Everybody who knew him can tell hundreds of anecdotes illustrative of his sympathy with all forms of life, whether in the jelly-fish, the human child, the developing boy or girl, the mature man or woman. Still his conviction of immateriality and personality of mind was something wonderful in so austere a naturalist. We happened to please him by defining a jelly-fish as organized water. "Now look at it through the microscope," he said. "But, Agassiz, the play of organization is so wonderful that it seems to me that nothing but mind can account for it."

"You are right," was his answer; "in some comprehensible way God Almighty has created these beings, and I cannot doubt of their immortality any more than I doubt of my own."—Boston Globe.

The Lord knows how to harness all things to his chariot. Even false teaching, which is so rife in the religious world, has to yield its services to the cause of truth in an important sense. The mission of error, providentially overruled for good, is to call forth the clearest and fullest statements of truth. The opposition of the Judaizers to Paul's Gospel was the occasion of some of his matchless statements of truth in his epistles. Some of his most glorious teachings as to the person of Christ were struck from his intellect by the keen edge of the sword of error. The Christians of the early centuries did not fully grasp or set in array the evidences of Christ's divinity until that divinity was denied. The revolving centuries since the ascension of Christ have brought one form of error after another into collision with the truth. Thus the false and the perishable elements that have attached themselves to it have been cut away by the keen edge of opposition. Thus the perfect diamond of God's truth one fact at a time has been emerging into rounded and perfect beauty. And so it will continue to be until the end, when it shall be found that no one jot or tittle of the word of God has failed.—The Baptist.

Notes from Harvard.

Talk about cold weather! Well I guess it is, my "partner" says so at least—Ergo it is bound to be so! Really I am getting so sorry for the thermometer, the thing has to pull itself so close to gether along now you know and it must be very monotonous to have ups and downs there below zero so long. "She" went down to six degrees the other morning, but she is looking a little more lively and cheerful now and may be she will reappear from her low estate in a few days. But my! they do make it so cheerful and merry here in this "benighted land of the lingering snow" along now. A vehicle here on wheels now looks rather odd—the rare exception and not the rule. Everything, labor, earriages, coal carts, street cabs, livery hacks, milk-wagons, coaches of two and four, all are sleighs now, and to every moving specimen of them is attached from one to a thousand (more or less) rattling bells and jingling contrivances of every conceivable type from the baby rattle species to the veritablest old cow bells that ever clattered their eternal elangings as requiems to the departed day, whether in the lone woodland glades of N. C. or any other state, or to put it in short, if you want to hear more bells and such stuff, than you have ever dreamed of, come a five minutes walk with us, you will possibly decide this is "Bell-ton" and not "Boston." But I doubt if, on the whole, the people suffer as much here from the cold as we do south. The weather indeed is much colder, but then they know it is coming and hence make every provision for it, and close tight houses with continually heated furnaces soften the temperature indoors at least, considerably.

But they got a little too much fire on hand the other day all of a sudden. It was over in Boston however and did not last very long, long enough tho to destroy $1,000,000 worth of property or more. Exit.

But Mr. Editor, if you will allow me I want to introduce to you and to the SUN's readers a friend and class mate of mine. I know you would all like him if you knew him. He is an excellent fellow withal pleasant, congenial, good natured, jolly enough, speaks good English now and is a close student. His name is Stoyan K. Vatralsky and he comes from across the sea. His native country is Bulgaria, but is here at Harvard now as a student. He expects to go back to the "old country" before many years tho to labor as a teacher and writer among his own people. As for my part I shall always be glad that I met Mr. Vatralsky. It is true that I had read a great history several years ago telling me some thing of Bulgaria and how the Turks served her in 1876, but now I have many things first hand that I could never have learned from history. And besides, Mr. Vatralsky has one of the richest and most beautifully pathetic religious experiences I have ever heard related. I feel like I can appreciate my own beloved country more, enjoy my own native religion better and sympathize more thoroughly and sincerely with the heathen now since I have known Mr. Vatralsky and heard him talk. I am sure that I cannot portray for you the experience of this friend, but in my next letter, I am going to relate, as best I can, much of his religious experience as he gave it to me. My next letter will therefore necessarily be a long one, not near as long as I would like to make it however, but I sincerely hope that every reader of the SUN will read it, not that I am to write it, but as the experience of one whom I certainly believe to be a Christian, and, one too who was beaten in streets, driven from country, home and loved ones, simply because he professed a belief in Christianity. But as he tells me his story, I will try to tell it you in my next Availing and Unavailing Prayer.

One of our trials as Christians arises from the fact that our prayers are not so frequently or so readily answered as we hoped, and that our efforts are more successful. We are conscious that we have prayed earnestly and often for various objects, and we have felt sure the objects were good and such as we could properly pray and labor for; and yet no adequate results have seemed to follow. We have felt disappointed and often deeply discouraged, and wondered why it should be so. No doubt this is a sore trial, and our faith wavers and staggers under it. We make one or two suggestions which may help to explain the difficulty.

The first is: Prayer is more frequently answered than we imagine. But it is answered in a manner and at a time least expected. In our own minds we had formed some particular plan or mode by which God would accomplish the desired end—forgetting that a divine love and wisdom knew better how to do it than we did. Afterwards we see and know that our prayers have been answered, not as we had expected, but in a far better way than we had planned and anticipated.

Our next suggestion is: In our prayer and efforts we may depend too much on our own strength or the strength of others. The great Apostle says: "I can do all through Christ which strengtheneth me." The Apostle had had a wonderful experience, and this experience led him to look more and more to his Lord for wisdom and strength to help him and lead to himself than others. We may pray and pray earnestly for all good objects, and may labor for them, but we must always remember that a divine help must go with our prayers and efforts.—Parish Visitor.

Pray and Pump.

In a seaman's prayer-meeting in New York one of the speakers thanked God that he had been a sailor. He had been in some tight place at sea, but he never hid his religion or lost his confidence in God. He had learned to call on God in trouble, and had not been disappointed. But then, faith must be joined with practice, praying only, without using effort is not enough.

"We were once," said he, driven to great straits in a gale. The wind blew a perfect hurricane, and our ship sprung a leak. It seemed as if we must go to the bottom in a few minutes. Our men worked hard at the pumps. The water gained on us. Death stared us in the face. I ran down below, and on my knees asked Jesus to save us, and give me a token. I opened my Bible, lying before me, and Isaiah xli. 10 met my eyes. The words, the first I saw, were these, "Fear not thou, for I am with thee. Be not thou dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yea I will help thee; yea I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

That was enough. I ran on deck and told the men. I said: Men, we are going somewhere, but we are not going down: I reported to them what I had asked of the Lord, and how he had answered me. Now said I, men, pump and pray, and pray and pump! And they did it with a will, and we pumped and prayed our vessel into Cork, as I believe, in answer to prayer and promise.

But what is the use of praying, with a leak in the ship, without pumping! It must ever be work and pray, and pray and work, and the best workers are those who pray most fervently.—Selected.

The Neglected Letter

The importance of present hours and present opportunities is often but little felt. "To-morrow shall be as this day, and more abundant," is the fond dream of the idle, the indifferent, and the pleasure seeking soul. But how often sad surprises break in upon our mirth and ease, and blast our cherished hopes.

Many years ago, a Greek nobleman made a feast for his friends. In the midst of the festivities, a messenger entered in great haste with a letter.

It was from a distance, and was sent to inform him that a plot had been formed by his enemies to kill him that night.

"My Lord," said the messenger, "my master desired me to say, that you must read the letter without delay; for it is about serious things."

"Serious things to-morrow," said the nobleman, as he threw the letter aside, and took up his cup of wine.

The delay was fatal. Before the feast was at an end, his enemies rushed into the hall and slew him.

He neglected his last chance, and perished through his folly. And are there not thousands who to-day are neglecting opportunities, and disregarding warnings, who will mourn at last, when they are lost beyond remedy?

To-day God sends His message to us.

Oh, read the letter to-day, for "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"—Selected.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Send your boys and girls to Elon College.

Rev. J. Pressley Barrett's present address is 810 Lovitt Ave. Norfolk, Va.

Rev. M. L. Winston gave us a pleasant call last week, come again, brother.

A. Iseley of Burlington N. C. was in the city last week, attending the Grand Lodge of masons.

We extend a brother's sympathy to Rev. J. J. Copeland of Goshen, Ind., in the death of his wife which occurred the 10th, inst.

The Wilmington Messenger (daily) appears in a new dress. This is an excellent paper and we are pleased to know that prosperity is smiling upon it.

We are glad to learn that Prof. A. P. Fuquay is well enough to be at his post again at the New Hope High School, and the school is in a flourishing condition.

Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., of the Union Christian church, Highland Terrace, has gone to New York to conduct a series of meetings. He will be there two weeks.

In the death of Deacon Wilson Pritchard of Damascus church, the church and community have lost, on earth a strong friend. He was one of the best men we ever saw.

The Berkley Christian church was burned down Sunday night after services. This church has had several set backs. May God help this dear people to renew their courage.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, President of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference expects to have out soon the annual address delivered before that body at Wake Chapel, N. C. When out every member in the Christian church ought to read it.

The family and friends of Deacon L. W. Hatch of Hank's Chapel have the prayers and sympathies of the SUN in their loss sustained in his death. A good man has gone. We do not know the particulars.

Demorest's Family Magazine for February has been received by us and we must say that for a family magazine at $2.00 there are none better. W. Jennings Demorest, 153. 14th St., New York, Publisher.

We have received a few words of complaint on account of the absence of the four pages missing—Some think it is done for economy. It is not done for economy but of necessity, and will be remedied just as soon as possible.

Rev. W. T. Herndon, the Financial Agent of Elon requested us to announce that Rev. E. T. Iseley is an authorized agent to receive money when due the College and receipt for same. Friends will bear this in mind and hand him the money and take a receipt.

There is a man going about over the country representing himself to be a son of one of our prominent preachers and borrowing money on the strength of the name. The Herald has repeatedly denounced him as a fraud. Let our readers be on their guard.

Daily Help, Spurgeon, compiled by E. F. W., and published by R. H. Woodward & Co., Baltimore, Md. This is composed of nice and suitable selections for each day of the year, selected from Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's writings. Price 75 cents of the Publisher, or from us.

We have had complaint occasionally from parties at three post offices that the SUNS are not received regular. One of them is in the Va. Valley, one in N. C. and one in Eastern Va. The papers are mailed to the parties complaining, regular, and we think the fault must be at the office to which the papers go.

The emptiest thing in the world, truly says the Nashville Christian Advocate, is what is technically called "Society." As things go in this country, the only conditions of entrance which it imposes are that the applicant should have a purse big enough to stand the expense of its sinful frivolities, and a mind little enough to be satisfied with puerile amusements. For high breeding, intellectual cultivation, noble character, it makes no demands. In its poisonous atmosphere, Christian faith at once sickens and dies; and under the thin veneering of its artificial good manners, there is often found a moral retteness that would disgrace a Hotentot and amaze a Sioux Indian.

Governor Holt's Message.

We have read with much interest the message of Gov. Holt of N. C. All papers of such character given to the public are open for criticism or approval, or both. Of this message, it shows much work, and by its length demonstrates very clearly that the Gov. is a man of great energy and perseverance. There are many very good things in it, but some, as might be expected, which do not meet the approbation of all people. We would think its general tone a little too far from economy to suit the close run farmer of these hard times.

We wish the University of N. C. the highest degree of prosperity. But we doubt very much the wisdom of establishing a chair of Normal Instruction at the University for the training of male teachers.

The public schools of the state are co-educational. Girls and boys attend them with equal privileges. Then it does seem that a teacher coming from a co-educational school would make a better public school teacher than one coming from either a male or female college. A gentleman educated with gentlemen is not apt to have as much of the sympathizing spirit as is needed among little girls. And a lady educated with ladies will not be likely to know how to manage little boys.

Open the doors of the Normal and Industrial school at Greensboro to both male and female teachers. Teach the gentlemen and ladies there together; and then when they come out they will know how to manage girls and boys together in the same public school room.

Don't think about making a public school out of the University. Make it a University in deed and in truth. Don't keep it down on a level with the colleges of the religious denominations.

We do hope that, if any appropriation is made to the Columbian Exposition by the legislature, it will be done on the condition that the Exposition shall not be open on the Sabbath day. We think it would be a disgrace and a shame to tax Christian people to make an appropriation to something by which the Sabbath shall be desecrated.

We hope that the legislature in the face of the hard times, will not make appropriations in keeping with what seems to be indicated in the governor's message.

How the Change Comes.

Changes some times take place in men so great that they look like miraculous power must have been used. How often do we see the young man turn about and go in an opposite direction with any seen power acting to influence him? This change may sometimes come from some word, thought or circumstances that was unnoticed by the world, but under God's touch moved powerfully on the emotions of the soul.

A chapter read, in the Bible, some times so fires the soul with a love for God's word, that in all future life, the scriptures are made the principle literary studies. Just how these changes come no one can tell, only it is the result of God's power.

But unfortunately sometimes the change is in the wrong direction. However a change towards sin is not suddenly, but gradually. We go away from God step by step.

The Love of Christ Constraineth Us.

Paul, knowing the terror of the Lord, put forth great efforts to persuade men to change their lives by faith in Christ. His zeal being so great, the thought of insanity was possibly taking hold of some minds; for he says, whether we be beside ourselves or sober it is for your cause. Then he says, "For the love of Christ constraineth us."

Constraineth literally means, to urge on by force. And this is what the love of Christ does, not in a physical sense, but in the sense of strong desire, from a consciousness of love to Christ, and for the conversion of those who are in the broad road to ruin.

This constraining power is the first qualification of all Christian workers. Every other qualification that may be possible from a human touch will not take the place of Christ constraining love. Oratory may attract, science entertain, and logic convince, but it is the love of Christ bubbling out of a soul that draws men and women to Christianity.

The University and the Denominational.

Every state of the wealth and number of inhabitants of N. C. ought to have a strong University to which graduates of other colleges may go and take a higher course than can be taken at any of the denominational colleges.

This higher course should not appear merely in the catalogue, but should be carried out in the examinations. It ought to require at a university at least five years for a boy of good mind to graduate, if he entered the fresh class the first year. And the fresh class of a university ought to be much higher than it is in denominational colleges. There can be no trouble between universities and denominational colleges, if the university will keep out of the way.

A Fraud, Beware!

A man is going about the country who is "working" preachers and obtaining money from them by borrowing or otherwise. He will register at a hotel and then approach a minister with letters of introduction, etc., and inform him that some rich party has died and left a sum of money to the church and as executor will draw a check on some bank. In some instances the swindler will inform the preacher that his share of the expense of settling is so much and collect it.

The check is always returned unpaid and the minister is out the amount paid or loaned the swindler. We give this warning that our preachers and church trustees may be on their guard.

I Want to be Better.

I want to be a better girl, woman, boy or man often floats out through the night, known to none but God and the burdened soul, from which it came. There is much more longing for improvement in a better life than we are disposed to believe.

Men and women pass on in apparent carelessness to the better life, showing but little besides the hard side of life, made rough by sins ways. But from these weather beaten ones may go up to God an occasional desire for a better heart. The Christian's desire is to grow better day by day and night by night.

Wake Chapel, N. C.

Last Saturday and Sunday were the appointments at Wake Chapel, N. C. The weather was so very cold and snowy, that the people kept very close in their homes; but we had the pleasure of visiting the families of Dr. B. S. Utley, Sister Margaret Rowland, Brethren L. H. Smith, W. W. Johnson, J. L. Johnson, and W. M. Ballentine. We hope some good was done, and that the Lord may bless the visits, if they were made in the snow. In fact this is one of the winters that visits here must be made in the snow if made at all for it is snow all the time.

Elon College Notes.

O the snow, the beautiful snow! "How beautiful was the snow; falling all day long, all night long; on the roof of the living, on the grass of the dead?" But tho it was so beautiful, it did not feel so comfortable. It threw us all into dumb chills, and hard-shaking agues, without the least particle of fever. And still it lingers, waiting, we suppose, for company, before it takes its departure for other climes. How pure and white it is! Stainless, sparkling, glittering, radiant! What a beautiful type! Could we all be as pure and spotless as the snow, how different this world would be. No sorrows, no cares, no heart-aches, no drunken men and women, but all peace and harmony and love.

New students continue to come in, and our number is larger than before Christmas. This, of course, is very gratifying to us, and to our friends. It seems to me that we should feel especially thankful for our continued prosperity; for, while other colleges have been affected to some degree by the short crops last year, Elon holds its own.

Among the visitors here during the holiday, were Deacon A. Moring, and his little grand-daughter, Maggie; guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Edwards. We were very glad to have them with us, and hope they will honor us with another visit, when convenient.

We all felt very sorry for Prof. Moffitt when we read his notes in last week's Sun, and are glad that he has decided to take Christmas the next time he gets a chance. Let him come back to the good Old North State, where he can find people with warm hearts and sympathetic feeling to welcome him. In the mean time, if he has not yet found his partner, we'll look around and see if we can't find his partner's spirit hovering about these snow-covered domiciles of ours.

Some of the students went out skating the other evening, and two of them had the misfortune to crack their skulls. Their injury, however, is not fatal, and we hope to see them well and lively as ever in a few days. He who on the ice would slide, must keep his heels below his eyes.

Rev. P. T. Klapp gave us a call this week, and kindly preached for us on Sunday. His sermon was edifying and enjoyable. We understand that Bro. Klapp is making arrangements to move here.

The Sophomore Class will give us an entertainment with orations and essays the last Friday evening in this month. The public are invited to attend, and partake of the treat which is in store for us. The Sophs are hard to beat.

There is some activity among the Y. M. C. A. boys now, in forming classes for the study of the Bible. Several classes have been organized, and are well under way in their studies. These classes meet every Saturday evening, and spend one hour in the study of the priceless truths. We commend the same course to the students of all other institutions. H.

Suffolk Letter.

Winter has asserted its claims by unusual severity for the last three weeks. The unsheltered and unfed have suffered, and the necessity of preparation for the future has a practical demonstration in real experience. But the fleecy mantle that has covered the earth and human habitations, and loaded treetops with its spotless treasures, has gladdened many youthful hearts with the glorious landscapes all clothed with purity. Lakes and rivers frozen over for miles and weeks have been the scenes of excitement and merriment as hundreds have glided over their glassy bosoms on the shining steel runners. Shouts and laughter have filled the air while indescribable motions and figures have been formed by the gayest skaters. In the midst of this arctic pleasure, in some sections, the glassy floors have given way under the load of human pressure, and the swift-running pilgrim has found a grave in the icy waters. The path along which we are all moving is just as uncertain. We know not what a day may bring forth, nor hour any day's journey may terminate. This we know, that, "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave," whither we are going "Life is the time to serve the Lord," and the great concern should be preparation. So far this year our congregations and Sunday school attendance have been small, but we have not missed a single vice. In the country and smaller towns it has been even more unfavorable. But the health of Suffolk is unusually good, as it is also in the surrounding country. This saves pastors from dangerous exposure during this hard weather.

The Elon College students from Eastern Va. who came down to spend Christmas returned promptly to their duties.

Rev. Z. A. Post, who is now in Norfolk, spent a short time in Suffolk during Christmas week, and many were glad to welcome him to his old home after an absence of seven years.

It is really too cold to write this morning. My thoughts seem to freeze before they reach the paper. It may be that my pen is not a good one; or the ink may be damaged by freezing, or my mind may be weary from trying to overcome the cold and the absence of a good congregation yesterday, or the cold snap may have cut off the current of information that usually furnishes matter for these letters. The market in everything is short now, except in skates and fuel.

Rev. J. T. Kitchen was in Suffolk last night and attended our services. Mr. W. A. King and family have moved from Cypress Chapel to Suffolk. Also L. H. Whitley and family have moved their country home near Isle of Wright Court House and now occupy a house on Main street. We welcome these good families.

When the weather and I get warmer there may possibly be an improvement in these letters: if not I hope some one will move a discontinuance of them.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Hope that you all have nice comfortable homes and warm fires these cold days, for I am told this is the coldest weather seen in this part of the country for a long, long time. The sad part about this cold weather is that there are so many poor people suffering, and many freezing.

Christmas is past now and I am expecting to get many more letters and lots of nickels and dimes for the Band. Are you going to disappoint me now, or will you come nobly to the front with your sweet little letters and little round missionaries? Will wait and see. So far this year you have done nicely. Waiting for your letters, I am

Cordially yours,

UNCLE TANGLE.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 11, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has been quite a long time since you have heard from me and I want to remind you that since you have an Aunt Tangle for us, we are still your little friends, and you need not think that you are going to get rid of us by getting married, for we intend to still trouble you with our little letters. Bring Aunt Tangle down to see us and let us see if she is pretty. I send a half dime for the BAND. Happy New Years to you and Aunt Tangle.

Your little niece,

MYRTIE KLAPP.

My dear Myrtie, I assure you it is a pleasure to me to get letters from the cousins, and I am very much disappointed when none come. I love the cousins and I love the cause for which the dimes are intended. When you move to Elon you must stop and see Mrs. Mood and I as you pass through Raleigh.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 12th, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—White Pin housed in by the snow I will write you a short letter. The weather is very disagreeable and I can't get out much. Well I have enjoyed Christmas very well and hope you have also. Mamma prepared for us a beautiful Christmas tree Christmas eve in our parlor, we invited our playmates in, and on Monday night after Christmas day we had a Christmas tree at the Christian church. I am not going to school now for papa is thinking of moving to Elon College very soon. I will ask the cousins a question. At what age did the law incapacitate the Jewish priest from altar service. I will give you the name of the book it is in: Numbers. I will close with love to you, amnt Tangle and the dear cousins. Enclosed please find half dime.

Yours truly,

MINNIE KLAPP.

Here is Minnie again, and glad we are to hear from you. I know Minnie, that you are a very busy girl but think you might get time to write a little oftener than you do; suppose you try

NEW HOPE, Ala., Jan. 10, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I guess you and the cousins have had a nice Christmas. I have, and have started to school again, and am glad to say that Prof. A. P. Fuquay is able to be in his school again. He keeps us very busy with our studies, he has about sixty-five scholars now, and we hope that he will do much good in the community. I think that if we had a few more such men as A. P. Fuquay in the community we would be better off than we are. We have dispensed with Sunday school for a while, but aim to renew in a short time. We want you all to pray for us that we may make it a success. I will ask a question: Where is dog first mentioned in the Bible? Enclosed find one dime for the Band. I will close for this time, with much love for you and the cousins.

D. T. STEPHENSON.

We are glad indeed to get your excellent letter and to learn that Prof. Fuquay is able to be at work again. But your letter makes us sad, for you say the Sunday school has been discontinued. That is sad for Sunday school ought to be carried on all the year. May it soon be started again and then be an evergreen Sunday school.

PROVIDENCE, Va., Jan. 9th, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Holiday is over and it is time for us all to go to work so I will write again to the Corner. I hope you and the cousins have had a Merry Christmas, and hope this "New Year" may be one of happiness to us all. I hope the cousins will go to work in earnest this year and keep our Corner filled with nice letters and send in all the dimes they can. I thank you very much for your kind encouraging letters. I think all of us appreciate the interest you have taken in us, the patience you have had and hope we will show you we do by writing oftener. I had a very pleasant Christmas but didn't get a single sleigh ride with all the snow but I enjoyed snowballing. I haven't but five cents to send to the Band this time. I have some other good cause to give my money to. Wishing you and your bride much prosperity and happiness. I remain your little niece.

ALLIE GIBSON.

Yes, thank you, Allie, I believe all have had a Merry Christmas, and if each one will try to make others happy there is no doubt but all will be happy this year. Mrs. Mood and I return thanks for kind wishes.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 11, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I am not going to school and have no lessons to study, I will write a little to the Children's Corner. Christmas is gone, the New Year is here, and time for work has come. I am not going to school now because papa is thinking of moving to Elon College soon. Mama had a little Christmas tree in our parlor for us children, and the Sunday school had one at the church, off of these two trees I received several nice presents. Sister Minnie and I went to Mill Brook to see grandpa Bland and we had a nice time. I expect you received a present that you think a great deal more of than I could of mine. Maybe I will send you my first composition for the next week's paper. I wrote it for the last day of the fall term of school. A Happy New Year to you, Aunt Tangle and the little cousins. Enclosed half-dime for the BAND. Much love to you and the little cousins

Your little niece,

MAUD KLAPP.

Now here is my little friend Maud, and glad am I to hear from you again. I think your Christmas must have been pleasant indeed. Yes Maud, I did get a very nice Christmas present.

PATMOS, N. C. Jan. 2, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a girl fourteen years old, and wish to join the Corner. I have four brothers and two sisters. I hope all the little cousins enjoyed Christmas and kept it as they ought. I live two miles from New Elam church, I go to Sunday school every Sunday unless I am sick or it is bad weather. I love to go very much. I certainly enjoy reading the SUN especially the cousins letters. We have preaching at New Elam every first Sunday by Rev. C. C. Peel. Well cousins yesterday was New Year's Day. Let us try to write often and try to make this year the happiest year of our lives. I will ask the cousins a question. Who was crucified after the same manner of Jesus? I wish I had some money to send but haven't any this time. I will try to send some next time. Hope the Corner will be full of letters next week. I will close as this is my first letter and I am afraid it will find its way to the waste basket, if it does I will try to do better next time. Much love to you and the cousins.

Your niece,

MAUD V. GUNTER.

Maud we welcome you most heartily to the Corner and hope you will be a constant writer. Hope you will always love the Sunday school and its work.

Johnny's Composition—The Cat.

The cat is a very interesting animal. He is a small fur dog that meows, and has whiskers and several other things. He has four paws—two fore paws and two hind ones—and a tail. He has been known for many years, two of him having been said to be on the Ark, where he must have been tied up, or what would have become of the rats? Cats don't get to be cats until they are a year old, when they stop being kittens, which they are born as. It takes a kitten several days to get his eyes open, if he doesn't get drowned before that time, and he scratches when he is mad. My father says camels used to be cats, but got their backs up one day and couldn't get them down again, and so they became camels. I never heard a camel meow, but I suppose they can, because they can do most anything, having seven stomachs, and going many days without water.

The dictionary says a cat is a carnivorous quadruped, but that does not sound like a cat. The old Egyptians used to be very fond of the cat, treating him like a member of their own family, and making mummies out of him when he died. Some of these mummies still live. They used to hang people for killing cats in Egypt, because the cat was supposed to be a sacred animal, being a sign of the moon, probably because they are generally out all night. We have a cat named Tom, and he has six kittens, which he washes their face every day just like me.

Cats never fall out of anything without landing on their feet, which is why their feet are so soft; and they have to be killed nine times before they die, and sometimes they don't then. They eat milk when tame, and when wild they cry like a baby until somebody comes to see what is the matter, and then they eat him, which is fatal and teaches people to mind their own business, and not go seeing what other people's children are crying for.—Harper's Young People.

The Prodigal.

BY D. E. MILLARD.

O! Where is he who our fond hearts gladden'd,
Who was the light of our paternal home?
In darkness we remain—with feelings sadden'd,
Since we know not where his feet may roam.

Could we but know where now his steps are tending,
Although perchance in some dark dreary way,
'Twould comfort us, amid our sad re-pining,
And with firm Christian faith we still could pray.

Alas! we know not where he is—where living—
If yet he lives at all, this side the grave;
Our kindly help, in want he may be needing—
While striving hard life's bitter ills to brave.

O, Father, 'round him place Thine arm protecting,
This dear one save—if yet on earth he stays;
Forbid that he, thy loving care neglecting,
Shall lose himself in Sin's bewild'ring maze!

Memory.

Under the snow the dear form lies
Hidden away from mortal eyes,
The pale white lips forever still,
And the dear clasped hands cold and chill.

We miss him from his accustomed place;
And the smile that beamed on his happy face,
No longer greet us by the home fireside,
And our hearts are sad at this Christmas-tide.

He was with us a year ago to-day,
So well and strong, light-hearted and gay,
And his voice joined in with all our glee,
There was none so happy and joyous as he.

Now under the snow he lies at rest,
His spirit gone to the home of the blest;
There's a vacant place at the home fire-side,
And our hearts are sad at this Christmas-tide.

The Home and Foreign Mission Work.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Realizing the importance of a stronger effort in mission work, I wish to speak to some of our people through the columns of the Sun. A failure to take hold of this important work has long since been seen in a good number of our people and especially in the Deep River Conference. While the heathens have been bowing to gods made by their own hands, a good number of our people have been slumbering and sleeping. Forgetting that Christ would have the gospel preached to every creature and that a soul in South America, in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, in Australia is of as much importance as any one that can be found in North America. Christ died that all men through him might be saved. How long can we, living in the light of the gospel, be contented to let our brethren suffer on the account of sin in darkness. Knowing that there is a pool of Saloam that can wash away their sins and give them light which is to be prized more than all earthly store? Some may think that they are too poor and if so remember the widow's mite and that the Lord requires something of us. The man or the woman who tries to hold all the world in his or her hand will find that it will be too big to go through the gate into the home of the blest. And not only are some of us sleeping and slumbering while the heathen cries, but while some of our own people are calling for help as well. I know of some churches which were organized and started off pretty well but died simply on the account of a lack of a little help. Taking the whole of the matter into consideration, I must say that it is a shame. I just now thought of an expression that was used not long since, which was this; "We use to have four churches to a preacher but now we have four preachers to a church." One great cause of this the church reports will tell, i. e., a lack of contributions to the Home Mission fund. I call to memory just now three thrifty towns where we have a number of members of our own church who have no preaching, that is by our ministers. A brother informs me of some places in the country where we could organize some churches. But here comes in that little word of that ruins so many pretty things—if we had means to send some one there. If our lamps have been burning, pray tell me what has been going with the light? The church that doesn't want to hear its pastor talk missions, doesn't want preaching. The minister that is afraid to talk missions to his churches would be afraid to say so if the devil was to come into his congregation and take it away by the car load. The freedom which we boast of and enjoy did not spring up in our midst like the flower in the valley nor the grass on the mountain side but like the grain that is garnered by the earnest laborer, yes it not only cost hard labor, but the blood of many a hero as well. Man is not to live for himself alone but also for his fellow man and his soul. Now, if we will do as we would be done by, let all, ministers and laity, go to work at the beginning of a New Year that when conference shall have arrived we may claim a grand victory, and flesh shall fail us that there may be a mighty crowning of the saints.

Fraternally,

J. K. COWEN.

Threshing EVERY Day.

In their occasional trips to town, farmers' sons are very apt to receive the impression that young men in cities not only have a less monotonous life than they, but work neither as hard nor as many hours.

One who had very decided opinions in this respect came to town in August, and secured a position in the fruit department of an extensive dealer in "family supplies." During the unprecedented rush of the next few weeks, when fifteen hours constituted an ordinary day's work and two or three additional ones were not unusual, he evidently did considerable thinking before he said to the proprietor, one day:

"Well, Mr. A——, I have concluded to quit next Saturday night."

"You have? What's the matter? Anything gone wrong?" asked Mr. A——, in his sharp, direct way.

"Oh, no! I suppose it's all right but I ain't used to it. When I was at home, father always hired a steam threshing machine for two or three days every year, and just about worked the life out of everybody."

Now, I've been here seven weeks and you've threshed every day, and I've got enough of it."—Selected.

None Had Spoken.

A casket containing the body of a maiden of seventeen years was carried over the door step of a mansion a few weeks ago and conveyed to the cemetery. The distance was short, and all who had filled the spacious house, whose inmates now number but two—for she was an only child—walked slowly and sadly after the carriages which contained the relatives. From the gate the casket was borne by six young men to the side of the open grave, where it was reverently placed.

It was the saddest of funerals, she was the most blithesome of girls, and as brilliant as gay. She had been ill four days, and delirious from the first seizure till within three hours of her death, when she becomes unconscious. The hymn, the prayer, even the benediction, were all mournful as the sound of winds on dark nights at sea. The people stood silent while the grave was slowly filled, and then turned to pass away.

Suddenly, the teacher of her, whose body had been lowered into the damp earth, broke forth into almost hysterical weeping. The pastor perceiving her grief went at once to her home to comfort her "Why," said he, "did you manifest such unusual sorrow?"

She answered: "A month ago I felt impressed to speak to her of her soul, and of her duty to her Savior; but I postponed it, and now she is gone."

Then, turning to her pastor, she said: "I hope you have spoken to her."

He was silent, and after awhile said: "I, too must confess my sin. When I saw how thoughtless she was becoming how much more interested in frivolous things, I also was impressed to speak to her of the things of the Spirit; but I postponed it, and she is gone." They prayed together for forgiveness.

Taking leave of her, went at once to the house of mourning. There he tenderly asked the parents if they had ever conversed with her about yielding her heart to God. The answer was: "On her last birthday we remembered that she was not in the kingdom, and said we must speak to her; but other things came up and now she is gone!"

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original samples as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black and white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original.

"I'M A LADY."
which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flash tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this great painting of Ida Wauha (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1892. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did print the last year, "A Yard of Pan-sies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1892 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the facts and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

At a regular meeting of Holly Springs, Lodge No. 115, the following tribute in memory of our deceased brother, Elias Langston, was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our Lodge and midst our aged and most highly esteemed brother, Elias Langston, who was for many years connected with this lodge, and was a faithful member of the Christian church, a kind father, good neighbor and loyal citizen, therefore

RESOLVED, That while we miss our fallen brother, we submissively bow to our Heavenly father's righteous will, believing that our brother is taken up higher to join his praises with the Celestial Lodge above, by Him whose will is supreme, and whose providences "all work together for good to them that love the Lord"

That we extend our sympathies to the children who have been bereft of their kind and affectionate father.

That we strive to emulate the Christian character and noble deeds of our highly esteemed brother especially his amiable disposition, his inflexible fidelity to his trust, and in his unfeigned piety to God; that we like him shall be prepared, when the final summons shall come to bid the messenger of death a hearty welcome sent simply to translate us from this unfriendly world of trials and troubles to the eternal home of God "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

That a copy of the above be spread on our minutes and also a copy be sent to the family and also one to the CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

Gleanings.

The general evangelist of the Christian church, Rev. C. L. Jackson, continues to be blessed in his labors. He recently closed a revival of great power at Schuylerville, N. Y. Sixty-two souls were brought into the kingdom, and 41 united with the Christian church of that place. Eight of the converts were Catholics or children of Catholic parents. Last heard from the evangelist, Jackson, was at Merom Union Christian College, Ind., in the midst of a glorious work of grace. Forty persons had taken a stand for Christ, and still the revival not closed. He goes from Merom to Marion, Ind.

Rev. T. H. Wade and George McKinney reports their work at Mt. Gilead, Ill., a success. Thirteen conversions, and the church much revived. They also report 11 conversions at Brockville, same state, as the result of their labors.

Rev. G. W. Draper reports a visitation of the Holy Spirit at Portersville, Ill. Six accessions to the church.

Rev. J. T. Phelps has just closed a revival of God's grace at New Liberty, Ind. Eleven conversions and seven accessions.

Rev. F. P. Trotter reports 12 additions to Center Grove church, Ind., and church strengthened, result of a revival.

The Christian church in Eastport, Maine, is undergoing repairs. The Eastport Sentinel speaks of it as "the First Christian church, a fine old structure."

Newark Christian church, N. Y., has been revived. Two members received to fellowship.

The Belmont Christian church, New Hampshire rejoices in a gracious revival. Forty-six were added to the church.

Rev. G. W. Morrow has had a successful pastorate with the West Randolph Christian church, Vermont. Twenty additions the past year and the Sunday school numbers 142, as average attendance.

Sister C. A. Tucker gives the result of the revival at Richfield Christian church, Ohio, as 14 additions

Rev. E. C. Fry of New Bedford, Massachusetts, who has been ill with typhoid fever, is so far recovered as to go to Woodstock, Vermont, where he assumes the pastorate of the Christian church.

Rev. H. J. Duckworth, Mt. Sterling, Ohio, reports 36 conversions and 26 additions, to the Five Point, Ohio, church. He was assisted in the meeting by E. C. Luck of Covington, Ohio.

R. H. HOLLAND.

Berkley, Va.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—This is the first time I have written upon any news regarding the Berkley church and now when I do so, it is to report our sad condition. It has pleased the Lord to see fit to deprive us of our sanctuary, and now, by reason of a terrible conflagration, which happened late last Sunday night, we are homeless. Yes, thank God, we have the Higher Temple in which, though with saddened hearts, we can find consolation.

Never, so long as I retain my memory, shall I forget the midnight of Sunday, January 15th, 1893. About 12:30 I was aroused from sleep, and on raising my window, Bro. Mercer cried out "the Christian church is on fire," and in almost less time than it takes to write it, I beheld our Zion in flames, roof and windows gone.

Her beauty is become a thing of the past, nothing remaining but ruins. The Lord deals with His children sometimes in strange ways, yet out of the darkest night He brings forth the glorious light of day, in which things are revealed. And we, bowing ourselves before His wise providence, believe that this additional trial, but refines the faith of our valiant few, and the light of His presence compels us to say, "It is well"

This is another bitter tonic for the Berkley church, yet it is ministered by a wise physician, and will indeed restore our spirit.

The trials of our brethren in Berkley have not been few, it appears that along the race track, on which they have been running in the contest for the prize, they have met with many weights which have beset them, and yet they are determined to run on still, until in the courts above they reach the goal and receive the prize. I think never before could their faith have been greater than to-day.

As a church we wish to tell our brethren in the Eastern Va. Conference we are still wearing our mourning garments, for whilst our faith is great, yet we are like a bruised lily, the stem almost snapped in twain, but pray for us, that our Father's reviving breath may fan us new life. He has promised "that the bruised reed He will not break," and relying on His word we have resolved to rebuild, as soon as possible our sanctuary.

We are deeply indebted to Bro. Bowden, for the brightness of our future prospects, we had an insurance policy for $3,000, and he feeling this to be very small got out a new policy of $2,000 on the building and $1,100 on the furniture, paid the premium and presented the church with the same.

We purpose building a more modern edifice as soon as we can, and resolve to open it, if possible free from debt.

But yet I pray that whilst we may have a modern church, yet may we have an ancient faith. Taking for our example the good men of old who esteemed their possessions not their own but God's, returning to Him of that which they had received with desiring any return.

I feel that the curse of the church today is in depending too much on secular means for its support. Permitting concerts, festivals, theatricals and a host of other things to take the place of consecrated giving. We shall not have much in hand when all our creditors are satisfied, but I feel assured that if our plans are laid and sanctioned with the Divine approval, even the few dollars shall then become like the loaves and fishes in the hand of Jesus, and we may, even after our church is rebuilt, have a few fragments for future purposes.

The various churches have been kind in offering us their sanctuaries but we have engaged the old Presbyterian church for our meeting and on Sunday we will take our harp from the willow tree and may the Divine magician return the strings, and then we will play forth music for His glory.

THE PULPIT.

The Obligations and Duties of the American Citizen.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inhabitants. Psalms 33:12.

God is the creator and ruler of the universe. He made and he governs it. "By the word of the Lord the heavens were made; and all the host of the n by the breath of his mouth. He gathered the waters of the sea together as a heap; he layeth up the depth in store houses. Let all the earth fear the Lord, let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him. For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast. The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations." Men and nations are accountable to God and subject to his law. They may disregard, and trample upon it for a time; but in the end they reap the reward of their wrong doing, for God punishes nations as well as individuals. The teachings of the Bible and the history of nations confirm this doctrine. Hence David said, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inhabitants." Such a people he will protect and bless. Wicked nations may prosper for a time, but they perish in the end. Where are the great empires and kingdoms of the past that were founded by the sword, and enriched by bloodshed and cruelty? They live only on the dusty page of history or in the poets' song. "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people." The nations of the earth are slowly learning this lesson, and as they learn it and obey God they advance in Christian civilization.

Looking at individuals, families, and nations from this stand point, the obligations and duties of the citizen becomes a question of supreme interest; and demands our profoundest consideration. Bringing this home to ourselves, I ask: "What are the obligations and duties of the American citizen? Obligations are of two kinds moral and legal. A man obligates himself when he enters into a personal contract to do a certain thing. For instance he enters into an agreement to erect a house on a certain lot of ground and within a certain time. This places him under a legal obligation. In this sense a man obligates himself only by his own personal act. This renders him liable to coercion or punishment neglecting to fulfill his contract.

There are what we call moral obligations. These bind men without promise or contract. Man is under obligation to reverence, love, and obey God without any contract or promise of his own. This obligation grows out of the relation that he sustains to God as a dependent creature. He is dependent upon him for his existence, and for all that renders life desirable and happy. "Every good gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of light." Our obligations to God are not created by any personal act of our own, but grow out of our relation to him; and await us when we are born into existence. We cannot throw off these obligations, and escape from them; for they are immutable, and we must obey them or suffer the consequences. "God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The only choice in moral obligation is whether we will obey them or not. We can disobey them if we will, but we cannot free ourselves from the consequences of disobedience.

We are sometimes brought under obligation to a friend by his act of kindness toward us. For this reason we are under obligations to God, for the blessings of life come from him. David said to him, "Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing." We are under obligation to God for our existence, and the capabilities of body, mind and heart that we possess. "Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?" We are indebted to him for the beautiful world in which we live, and the wise and bountiful provisions it contains to meet all our wants. The manifestations of God's infinite love for us, and his fatherly care over us should lead us all to reverence, love and obey him.

There are special obligations resting on the American citizen, for he enjoys blessings that are peculiar to this country. No other people enjoy the same. We have one of the loveliest and richest countries of earth. Its variety of climate, productions, and mineral wealth are unequalled. No country is so rich in its resources. We have the best government that God in his good providence has ever given to man. All our rights as men and children of God are secured to us as they are to no other people. In no other country are the people so prosperous and happy. Our people are better clothed, better fed, and have better homes than any other nation. This fact lays the American citizen under special obligations to God and humanity.

Every American citizen should bow to the authority of Christ, and live a Christian life. This is essential to his own personal wellbeing in time and eternity, and also to the highest interests of the family and nation. We cannot have a prosperous and happy nation without clean individuals, pure and religious homes. The purity of the individual, the cleanness of the home, is the fountain of national prosperity. The Christian people, and the religious homes of our country, are the life and the strength of the nation. The individual must be kept clean, and our homes pure or we will decay and die. Read the history of France, and in the awful and appalling scenes of the revolution you will see the dreadful results of personal uncleanness and corrupt homes. The nations of the earth stood aghast at the terrible sight, and even at this distance of time it makes the blood run back cold upon the heart to read its history. Fellow citizen, if you would have our homes what they ought to be, and our nation prosperous and happy you must be a Christian. What are the essential elements of a prosperous nation? Personal purity, love of justice, benevolence, intelligence, industry, and economy. What is best adapted to promote these virtues among the people? The religion of Jesus Christ. It teaches a pure morality, and enforces it with the strongest of all possible motives, accountability, and the certainty of the punishment of all sin. It shows man his true relation to his fellow man, and his duty to work for the good of all. It broadens his views of his relations and duties. It inspires him with a spirit of benevolence, and quickens his conscience. No other system of religion or philosophy ever given to man is so pure in its teaching as the gospel of Christ. It lifts men and nations out of the darkness and cruelty of ignorance and heathenism. It has made America what she is to day, and all that is needed to banish all crime from our land is to lead all men to become Christians. This is an unquestioned fact. Therefore it is the imperative duty of all American citizens to become Christians.

It is the duty of the citizen to assist in all lawful and just efforts to remove all that is pernicious to evil society. Evils have and still exist in our country that are destructive and ruinous. They paralyze our industries, waste our wealth, ruin our homes, corrupt our morals, and destroy men's soul and body. Some of these evils are imbedded in our social customs and our commercial interests, and are therefore hard to remove. To fight them we have to encounter man's love of money, and his carnal lusts. This is no child's play. The greatest evil that exists in our country today is the traffic in intoxicating drinks. We are so familiar with this that we do not realize its enormity, nor its greatness. The evil of intemperance is a terrible one. The organized liquor power is tremendous, and though drinking habits have changed in outward seeming, and things are not as bad as they were one hundred years ago; yet as a matter of fact excessive drinking and the abuse of opium and other pernicious drugs is worse than ever before in human history and increasing at frightful ratio.

"You know this danger, but I wonder if you realize what it really amounts to. According to an estimate that recently appeared in a magazine the amount of capital invested in the liquor interests of this country amounts to $1,000,000,000. The annual liquor bill of the nation amounts to about $900,000,000. It has been persistently remarked that so great wealth in the hands of one class having common interests and a common purpose is a mighty power.

"The United States Brewers' Association was organized in 1862. The object is stated in the constitution to be that the owners of breweries separately are unable to exercise a proper influence in the interest of the craft in the Legislature and public administration. At the brewers' congress at Buffalo in 1868 the president, referring to the state of New York, recounted the methods by which rates were secured and only such candidates supported as bound themselves to work for the repeal of the exercise law and thereby check the exertions of the temperance party, and he boasted that by such means the former minority in the Legislature was changed to a majority in their favor."

"In 1870 it was boldly declared at the congress at Davenport, 'unity is necessary and we must form an organization that not only controls a capital of $200,000,000, but which also commands thousands of votes politically through which our legislators will discern our power.' In repeated instances it has been shown that bribery and corrupt influences have been used, not only among our legislators, but among our executive officers and the police. So that it is not to much to say that we have here one of the gravest weaknesses that can exist in any nation.

In the city of Chicago there are 5,600 saloons. Place them in a single line and they would make a street ten miles long. They take in for the year $80,000,000. In our great nation there are 190,000 saloons, and in 1891 200,090 were arrested for drunkenness and crimes growing out of it. Not more than one out of five of the intemperate men in our country are ever arrested for this crime. This makes one million of drunkards in our nation. What an awful fact. How many crushed hearts, ruined homes, ragged children, and blighted lives does these terrible figures represent. If angels can weep they shed tears of unutterable sorrow over this dreadful scene.

Every American citizen should give all his influence, and use all the means in his power to put an end to this terrible business of drunkard making. He should be a temperate man himself. If all our citizens would stop drinking and live sober this would end the business at once; but all will not do this, and we cannot stop the dreadful work in this way. Some other method must be adopted, and what this shall be has been the question of ages. It is difficult, and almost impossible to reform the thousands of confirmed inebriates who are staggering in the downward path whose steps take hold on hell. This evil can only be removed by educating the young, and turning their feet into the path of sobriety. This can, and must be done. The evil effects of alcohol on the physical man should be taught in all our schools. It is in many of our states now, and we must agitate the question till it is taught in every school in our land. It is our only salvation from this blighting curse. We must save the young from becoming drunkards. This can be done through proper education, and leading them to Christ. I have but little hope in anything else, but I know there is saving power in the gospel of Christ. The Bible in the homes of our land, and the preaching of the gospel of Christ from the pulpits of our churches, have made us what we are to-day as a nation. An African prince was sent on an embassy to the court of Queen Victoria, when he asked her to tell him the secret of England's greatness. The Queen, handing him a beautifully bound Bible, said, "Tell the prince that this is the secret of England's greatness."

One of the dangers that we have to meet and overcome is the concentration of such vast multitudes in our cities, and the evils growing out of it. This presents a grave problem to the patriotic American citizen.

"The city is a problem all by itself. It has an interesting history, extending into the remote past. The civilization of the ancient world was largely one of cities. Cities have marked out many of the greatest changes that have affected mankind and one of the most notable characteristics of the nineteenth century, has been the rapid growth of great cities. London has to-day a population equal to that of all England at the beginning of the century. Paris, Berlin, Vienna, are creations of a few years in the sense of metropolitan greatness.

"Our own cities have grown even more rapidly than those of the Old World. In 1790 one-thirtieth of the population of the infant nation lived in cities of 8000 inhabitants and over; in 1888 nearly one-fourth. From 1790 to 1880 the whole population increased twelve fold; the urban population eighty-six fold, showing a vastly greater ratio of increase than that of the whole century. In 1800 there were only six cities with a population over 8000. Now we have over 300 such cities while our metropolitan centers have begun to cross the million line of population.

"One of our greatest national weaknesses is to be found in our city governments. Cities hold the bulk of our foreign population with all the weakness, political, social, moral that that means. Sixty-eight per cent of the population of Boston is foreign, 88 per cent of that of New York, 91 per cent of that of Chicago. Every problem of the nineteenth century is intensified in the cities! all the hope, the aspiration, the power, the pride, the glory of our great cities all the squalor, the misery, the vice and crime, the anguish and human despair!

"Yet here is the place to touch the evil and change it to good. Here is where to solve the problems, not in word or theory as lovely ideal, but in deeds of Christly uplifting. Here in the cities is the place to face nineteenth century problems and to face them not as dreamers but in manly, practical fashion."

It is the imperative duty of the American citizen to invite Christ into his heart and home, and thus keep both clean and pure. The child's environments in his home molds his character, and determines his destiny.

"Many boys and girls who have gone astray, many criminals in our prisons could reveal the fact of a drunken father and a dissolute mother and a home unblest by religious faith. What the next century of the republic is to be will depend upon the homes of the boys and girls of this and the succeeding generations.

We have just passed through a national bereavement in the sickness and death of Mrs. Harrison. She was a noble Christian woman, and was respected as such by the people. Her death, in the deep feeling it awakened, and the expression of sympathy and reverence it called forth, evinces the profound reverence of the American people for God and his word. We are not a nation of infidels.

"This event of the nations' bereavement has called forth the best qualities of the people. Expressions of sympathy and appreciation have poured in upon the afflicted President from all political parties and all religious denominations. Political rivalries have been forgotten. Discordant voices have been hushed. One touch of nature has made all akin.

"No one can fail to have been impressed by the universal and reverent recognition of God in this time of the nation's sorrow. 'God over all,' has chastened and subdued all hearts. During these weary and anxious months the minister of God has knelt side by side with the suffering family beseeching help and grace for the dying comfort for the 'troubled in heart.' In the East Room at the White House, on the day of the funeral, the blessed, comforting words of 'Holy Writ' and the tender, entreating accents of prayer alone broke the stillness of the scene. With the voice of prayer and song she was committed to her long rest. Her life and her death are a benediction to the Nation. 'Her own works praise her in the gates.'"

God reveals himself in his written word, in his providence, and in Christ who is the image of the invisible. The history of our country is a revelation of God in his gracious purposes concerning it. The time when this continent was discovered, the character of the people who settled it, the nature of the civil institutions they established, the successful struggle of the colonies for their independence, and the upward and onward march of the nation clearly reveals the guiding hand of God. The history of our country is a prophecy of the glory that is in reservation for it. All these things point to the future of commercial, intellectual, civil, and religious development. Great opportunities bring great obligations, and the American citizen should walk worthy of his rich inheritance, and of the glorious future God has opened to him.

Notes from Harvard.

As I stated in my last letter, I bring before you my friend, Mr. Vatralsky and I will try in as few words as I can to tell his own story, his own experience in fact, as I have heard him relate it. And here it would be interesting to relate some Bulgarian history, how it flourished as a nation in the 9th century, but how later it fell a prey to Turkish sway and the sad story of its oppression during the five centuries of Turkish supremacy. But what unspeakable wrong and outrageous oppression she endured during that time I leave the reader to learn from history. But we all remember how the Turks crowned their rule in this oppressed country in 1876, when by a general massacre 12,000 Bulgarian women and children were butchered and how Russia came to her rescue and thus Bulgaria was resurrected and freed. And religiously you know Bulgaria belongs to the orthodox Greek church. Now as a member of this church Mr. Vatralsky's religious experience began. As our friend happened to be born a Bulgarian, so he happened to be born a Christian. Why a Christian do you ask? Well because he was a Bulgarian—Bulgarian and Christian being synonymous terms in his country. And besides this he had been baptized, could make the sign of the cross, had fasted and was neither a Jew nor a Turk—hence he was a Christian. "It is the custom there" says Mr. V. "to baptize children by triple immersion on the eighth day after birth—sooner if necessary. I was baptized on the first day as I was a puny little fellow and they feared I would not live until I got eight days old. (And when I consider that I was dipped three times in cold water on the first day of my earthly existence the wonder to me is that I did live—a cold reception that, giving a man coming into the world). So I joined the church on the day of my birth. And as for fasting, why we all in Bulgaria, both young and old, healthy and sick fast on Wednesday and Friday all the year round—besides other regular "fast" seasons. And as soon as I obtained control over my right hand I was taught the sign of the cross. What is the sign of the cross do you ask? Why it is the most essential part of our religion over there—in fact all the religion many have. They make the sign of the cross when they start to church, make a journey, undertake any kind of work, as they sit down to or rise up from their meals and some even every time they drink water. Furthermore it serves two important ends: First it protects him who crosses himself from the devils. The Bulgarian devil—by the way is an interesting creature. He is thus pictured: he has one leg, short black horns and a long tail to the end of which is attached a small bell. This is his ideal form tho he may appear in any guise, so they say. Now when people travel in Bulgaria at night, unless they make the sign of the cross they may meet the devil and their fate may be even worse than annihilation. As for me, I never had the honor of meeting one of our devils, but my grand father did—he said so at least. So the first use of the sign of the cross is to keep off the devil. Besides this, he who makes this sign is proven beyond the shadow a doubt to be a Christian. This magic sign is an infalible test of the worth of man in Bulgaria. We thought the only reason why the Jews and Turks did not make the sign of the cross was to prove their loyalty to the devil. Other very vivid experiences as I recall them are my confessions to the priests and the annual sacrifices: a lamb to St. George; a sheep to St. Demeter; a fish to St. Nicholas. As for going to church, why we always went before breakfast—worship with a hungry breast, as the Bulgarians put it. In church the congregation neither understands nor tries to understand any of the hymns and fragments of scripture used in the service—in fact it is not apparently intended that they should. Often two or three hymns are sung at the same time; or several parts of the liturgy read simultaneously. And not only is the language used ancient and dead, but it is chanted or read in such a sing-song tone as to make it unintelligible. During the service people come in and go out, talk, laugh and even quarrel. Watch one of the devout worshippers, making first the sign of the cross, repeatedly bowing before one of the many pictures around; then kissing it, he lights his wax candle as an offering to the saint represented in the picture. Thus he goes from one picture to another and the lower he bows the better it is, therefore the more pious and those needing special mercy you will see prostrating themselves on the cold stony pavement. Such the church worship—a church of which the hull is there but the kernel is gone and tho alive in form and shape the Greek church is not only dead, but dead to such a degree that one who has not seen it can hardly believe the possibility of it. But however absurd these things seem to you and to me too now I believed in them then.

Just what I believed I could hardly tell you. I questioned nothing however. I doubted nothing in regard to my religion. And if you Americans had believed that "where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise," you should never have sent us a missionary. But you did send him and with his coming came n'y doubt."

Now here I would like to tell how the first influences were brought to bear upon Mr. Vatralsky which led to his conversion. It is suggestive, touching and pathetic, but too much in detail to relate in this article. Suffice it to say that it was no power of great teachers or eloquence of D. D. preachers that taught him the first lessons in Christianity. It was on the other hand a little 14 year old girl whom God used as an instrument in throwing light upon this life. This little girl told him one day of the "despised" protestants—she told him they were the best people she had ever seen that they were Christians indeed and not in form as Bulgarians were. She told him where he could find a protestant family and how that family worshiped. She pleaded with him faithfully and the result was he determined to investigate. He secretly attended some protestant meetings, he then got some tracts and then obtained a Bible and the more he read the more he doubted and then for the first time he began to pray secretly. And then it was the light began to come. He commenced to tell others about it—yes out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.—And "the more I told the more I wanted to tell. then I told every body I had a chance to speak with—not that I had got religion, as you say, but that religion had got me." "This took place in the village where I had been at school. I went home and began to spread the glad messages there but here the crisis came. The priest in public denounced me as a dangerous man. Heretofore I had been a favorite at home—being the only one from my village who had any schooling to speak of. Now the attitude toward me was changed. As the people of my village had never seen a protestant they were anxious to know what I looked like—they wanted to see just how many horns I had, what kind of cloven feet served me for locomotion. They stared and hooted at me as I passed, but generally avoided to meet me or speak to me. Then recovering from their first surprise, persecutions, hot, hated and violent began. From being ridiculed and laughed at I was one day beaten and kicked by a respectable citizen of my village. But believing in the New Testament now literally I did not attempt to resist. I found everybody my enemy. My friends deserted me to a man, and one of them threatened to shoot me.

Nor was my reception at home any better: for the venom of my persecution not only affected me, but my parents also. Their position became distressing. They were accustomed to hear people praise me; instead of which now they only heard ridicule and abuse, saw me as they thought utterly disgraced. They heard my uncle the priest say that if I were his son he would have shot me down on the streets like a mad dog. They, of course, sympathized with my persecutors, yet they could not bear to see their child persecuted. Above all, they were stung by their own belief that I deserved all I got. Having no idea of peoples being persecuted for righteousness sake my parents felt hurt and disappointed and disgraced to the highest degree. My becoming a protestant was the heaviest bereavement my parents ever had and one which they could never get over in this life. Tearfully and prayerfully and as tenderly as I could did I try to explain my position to them. All in vain. They neither would nor could understand me. My explanation only made matters worse. Not abuse, not kicks, not disgrace, not being shunned and abhorred by all—these were not hard to bear, nay I rejoiced in them as being counted worthy "to suffer for his name's sake." The hardest thing was to witness the disappointment, the humiliation and distress of my poor parents of which I myself was the cause. Yes, to suffer persecutions, abuse and disgrace for principle's sake, was easy enough; but, oh! how could I withstand the tears of my dear mother! It was a clash of love and duty. But there was no room left me for choice "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." This settled my line of conduct. I decided to go away, where if persecuted, my parents should know nothing of it. I left home alone; on foot. I did not regret the step I had taken, but I did feel alone as never before or since. I had lost the whole world of my childhood. My friends had all become my enemies and I was without anyone to help or guide me, save the God in whom I believed who is a very present help in the time of need. I was going, yes going, I did not know where. Well could I sing as I went

"Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee;
Destitute, despised, forsaken Thou from hence, my all shalt be."

It is needless to say I thanked my friend for his kindness in relating his experience to me as it actually occurred. Mr Vatralsky will soon have completed his education in this country. He then proposes to return to his own country, where he expects to spend the remainder of his days as teacher and ethical writer. Mr. Editor, I fear that by curtailing every point of the story as I have it will appear much less interesting to your readers than it did to me when told to me, but an hour's conversation cannot be put in a 20 minutes' paper. But may not this much serve to show us something of the thousands who are trying to feed on a dead religion, while we have life—food and to spare?

About Bethlehem the Birth Place of Christ.

Bethlehem of Judea, is situated on a beautiful little hill, or ridge, about 6 miles south of Jerusalem, overlooking the valley Kedron on the north, and the deep chasm of the Dead Sea on the east, is to the Christian the holiest place on earth. Doubtless it is one of the oldest villages in Palestine, and is associated with some of the most interesting events in the religious history of the world. On those fields gleaned Ruth after the reapers of Boaz. There the young shepherd boy David kept his father's flocks and was anointed king of Israel; this is the place, that Jeremiah, after denouncing God's terrible judgments upon the people, foretold the coming of our dear Saviour; and here the shepherds who watched their flocks by night were greeted by the angelic song announcing the birth of Christ, and proclaiming "glad tidings of great joy" to this world; peace on earth and good will toward men." "For unto you this day in the city of David is born Christ, the Saviour." "Bethlehem signifies house of bread," and true it may be, for Bethlehem has given to the perishing nations of earth, the bread of eternal life. Oh! what countless millions have feasted on this heavenly food. From Jerusalem going up to the birth place of our Saviour is the highway or road over which Sennacherib is supposed to lay encamped when smitten by the destroying angel. Abraham possibly journeyed over this road on his way to the Mount of God leading his only son Isaac, as a lamb to the slaughter, over this same road the virgin and her husband once toiled on their way to the "City of David which is called Bethlehem." Along this same road came the wise men of the east with their costly gifts to worship at the feet of the new-born King. Long before the birth of Christ; before the Hebrews possessed the land, when the Jebusites held the old castle of Zion, Jacob on his way to Hebron passed over this road; and it was here that Rachel, his young wife died, and was buried near Bethlehem. Nearly four thousand years has passed since this mother in Israel died, and the memorial stone that Jacob sat up over her grave is said to be still by the way side at her tomb.

Some historians point out a grotto as the birth place of our Saviour. The Bible says a manger. Justin Martyr, a native of Syria, says, Christ was born in this cave, so say Origen, and Helena; but it is not reasonable that so important an event as this, and also by inspiration should so soon be forgotten in the brief period between Justin Martyr and the Empress Helena. "The church of the Nativity" built by Helena is said to be the oldest Christian church in the world." It has 48 beautiful columns which support the cedar roof of long duration. History tells us that, for 15 centuries this old edifice has stood as a silent witness to the fact that in the basement beneath its altar the "King of kings" was born, and on this very site the manger of Bethlehem once stood. Christ was born in poverty, to make us rich, that we should become heirs of an eternal inheritance in heaven. We are now poor but by grace we may become rich, through Christ our Saviour.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Union.

DEAR SUN:—Saturday was the regular quarterly conference at Union, but as the weather was very cold and traveling bad we did not have a very large conference, but we transacted some business after the religious exercises. At the close of the conference I went home with Deacon Joyner where I spent a very pleasant evening with Bro. Joyner's family and some friends and neighbors.

Sunday on account of bad traveling our Dear Brother Holland could not get to Union so our communion service was postponed.

We had a pleasant and I trust profitable waiting together.

Bro. Joyner took me to Franklin Sunday evening to Bro. Harcum's where I spent a very pleasant evening, and preached to a small congregation at 8 o'clock but as it was very cold and the walking was very bad we did not expect very many.

The work of the cross appears to be growing in these parts, and I trust they will continue to grow until they are as a city set on a hill that cannot be hid from view.

I am trying to prevail on my members to take the "SUN" and trust that before long all our people will learn to love the SUN as I do.

Yours in Christ,
R. D. H. DEMAREST.

Asheboro, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—I desire to state that Rev. W. T. Herndon of Elon College spent a few days in our quite little town about the first of the New Year with his family, and the Doctor here as elsewhere so full of energy and get up, went around among our friends or rather members of the Christian church, and on Tuesday night Jan. 3rd, 1893, in the Presbyterian church, which was cordially tendered us, and organized a Christian church in our thriving little town with a membership of 22 persons. Elected Bro. Thos. J. Moffitt-Secretary, Bro. J. G. Stout Treasurer and Collector, Bro. E. A. Moffitt, Dennis Stinson, John T. Moffitt and Rev. J. H. Wright, a building committee. The Doctor was in good trim and preached one of his best sermons and also explained the principles of the Christian church to the satisfaction of all his hearers. We ask the prayers of all our sister churches throughout the conferences that we may be instrumental in doing much good for the advancement of our blessed Redeemer's kingdom in this section and the principles of the Christian church. We hope in the future to be able to build us a church house here, for worship. We are to have preaching each 5th Sunday at least and oftener if possible.

Yours very truly,
E. A. MOFFITT.

New England Matters.

Maine, can always be relied upon as a prohibition state. There are people in the state, who sell liquor clandestinely, in violation of law; and of course, some who drink. But notwithstanding these violations of law; prohibition, has been a great blessing to Maine. I know whereof I speak, for I was born in Maine, in 1813, and lived there over sixty years. Duty took me into different parts of the state, and I had the opportunity of observing the good effects of the prohibitory law.

When I was a young man, there were distilleries and breweries in the state. There were three distilleries in the city of Portland.

For many years, there has been no liquor manufactured in the state, and no license granted to make or sell liquor of any kind. I well remember, when liquor was sold in every city, town and plantation in the state. Now, no license is granted even to druggists.

The prohibitory law, is called severe. The violators of the law, are fined or imprisoned, or both, as is often the case. The prohibitory law, is enforced as easily, as the law against any other crime.

The financial prosperity of the state under prohibition has been very great. People living in license states, can hardly imagine, how great the change has been in Maine, under the prohibitory law. The people live in better houses, are less encumbered with debt, have fewer mortgages, have better furniture, and far better carriages. They have better school houses, better churches, do more for education, support the gospel better, and do more for missions.

In fact, Maine is a flourishing state, and prohibition did it, more than anything else.

If North Carolina will try it ten years, she will never turn back to license again.

Windsor, Va.

The ladies Aid Society of the Christian church in Windsor had an entertainment during Christmas which was successful. Sisters Mills Watkins, John King, Robert Holland, Miss Mamie Carr and several others took a most active part in the work. Windsor church may well be proud of such members. I hope they will be largely rewarded in this life and in the future one also, for their great sacrifice and consecration to the cause of Jesus.

Married in Southampton, Va. Jan. 5, 1893, by J. T. Kitchen Mr. David E. Joyner and Mrs. Maggie V. Bristol. May happiness attend them.

The Christmas entertainment at Mt. Carmel for the benefit of same on night of Dec. 30th was a success. Even if the weather was very cold, a large crowd met to enjoy the pleasant occasion. Misses Ruth Clements, Maie Bailey, Mollie Duck, and Dr. Duck, as well as many other took a most active part in the exercises, and deserve favorable mention for the parts they rendered. The proceeds of the evening amounted to a good sum of money. We extend our thanks for an invitation to be present. The invitation was accepted, and we enjoyed the time well.

Went to sleep "safe in the arms of Jesus" on Tuesday night Jan. 10, 1893, Mrs. Martha A. Barnes, at the age of seventy-five years. For several years she had lived in the family of her brother, Deacon I. W. Duck, where she spent a pleasant life. She was one of the most kind, pleasant, liberal, charitable, entertaining Christian women I ever met, always making one feel better by being in her presence. Everybody loved her. Being one of those sweet, winsome characters, she gained and held the confidence of all. She was very fond of thinking about and of reading the "Sunset hours of life;" and while her sun went down amid the rigor of midwinter it set here to rise and shine in the unclouded splendor of eternal day "where everlasting spring abides." Such a beautiful life as was hers must have had a glorious close. Her funeral was preached by Rev. H. H. Butler and the writer according to her request. Farewell dear Aunt Mat. I hope to see you again.

How to Excel.

Dr. Lyman Beecher was once asked after he had preached a powerful sermon, "Doctor, how long were you writing that sermon?" The prompt reply was, "Forty years." By this he meant that his studies, thinking, and practice of composition for forty years enabled him to write that sermon. But for that discipline of two-score years he could not have prepared such a sermon.

And so it is with every occupation. The careful discipline of years makes the expert. He is not ready-made on entering upon his chosen pursuit. Young people, if not older ones, want to be experts at the start. To look away to a goal forty years distant is discouraging to them. Ten years distant is about as far as they would locate a triumph. It is just here that many make a failure. They lack the grace of waiting. They are not willing to pay the price. They expect to get the price for less. They are willing to sow provided they can reap without the toil and drudgery of cultivation. If they do not expect to sow and reap the same day they want the distance between sowing and reaping materially shortened. And this is an unfavorable sentiment to cultivate. It does not promote enterprise and tact. It tends to dishearten and compromise pluck and enthusiasm.

God takes time to perfect things. Rich and luscious fruits must have time to grow and ripen. Vegetation needs all the time from the opening spring to autumnal frosts to be at its best. It has taken several thousand years to bring the big trees of Mariposa to perfection. Time is as indispensable in nature as sunshine. Nature never hurries and so she never botches. Give her time and she will show good work. Men have no fair prospect only as they imitate nature. There is only one way to excel and every boy and girl should understand it. Resolve to reach the highest standard if it takes "forty years."—Selected.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Harvard notes will interest everybody this week.

Do not judge from our reliable insurance advertisements that the CHRISTIAN SUN office is headquarters for insurance business.

Elias Carr took the oath of office and entered upon his duties as Governor of North Carolina, on the 18th inst. His address was full of good practical thought.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D. President of Elon College, N. C. attended the meeting of presidents of denominational colleges last Tuesday in the city of Raleigh, N. C.

The readers of the SUN will be glad to see that the notes on the Sunday school lessons appear again in this issue. We hope in future there will be no break in them.

E. E. Hathaway of Berkley, Va., has become connected with P. J. Kernodle in the Weekly Observer of Suffolk. Mr. Hathaway is an old newspaper man and well known in and about Suffolk.

Ex-President Hayes died on 18th inst., at Fremont, O. His administration will be remembered on account of wine being excluded from the White House by his wife. May God send more such ladies to the White House.

We are compelled to beg Dr. Maple's pardon for the way his sermon was printed last week. Part of one sentence was omitted entirely, "The man nature" substituted for "human nature," "saved" for "sacred," and several other typographical errors making a bad mess.

The SUN acknowledges the receipt of a beautiful ticket of invitation to the marriage of Miss Cora Lee Beavers to Mr. Joseph W. Upchurch at Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Beavers, on Wednesday, Jan. 25, 1893. They will accept the highest wishes of the SUN for their future success.

It is generally admitted that the snows in North Carolina this winter thus far have surpassed anything of the kind since the great snows of 1857. These snows and extremely cold weather have almost paralyzed our work in the SUN office. Only printers know the difficulties in a printing office such weather. The thermometer is frequently below zero.

We have mailed a number of bills this week to subscribers in arrears and we did not do it for fun. If any mistake has been made or error in any way, don't get mad about it, but tell us and we will gladly correct. We want to hear from EACH and every one of you SOON.

Read closely our premium list, and then enter the contest. There is a chance for you to get a good Sewing Machine, a Swing Churn, or a Teachers Bible. The editor's wife is using a Sewing Machine and a Swing Churn just like those offered in the premium list, and likes them exceedingly well.

Rev. G. D. Black of Yellow Springs, Ohio, has been elected a second editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. The paper is one of the best that comes to this office, and we are sure with two editorial chains, one filled by Dr. Watson, the present editor, and the other by Rev. G. D. Black, the Herald will rank among the best religious journals in the United States. Bro. Black is one of the strongest writers to be found anywhere.

Rejecting Prophecy and Acting on a Possibility.

It is queer, and yet it is a fact. There are many men who reject the prophecies of the Bible—they would not think of doing a thing so silly as to be caught believing and acting on prophecy. Oh, No! They are not so ignorant(?), nor are they so superstitious(?) as to be caught counting on the fulfillment of prophecy as given to us in the Bible, and they take this stand, too, in the face of the fact that many prophecies of the Bible have been fulfilled already, thus setting the seal of truth upon the prophecies of the Bible, for if one prediction of the Bible, which is justly entitled to be known as prophecy, came to pass, then that is a presumptive argument that the others are true also, for a genuine prophet would not mix with imposters; and yet there are many men too "cultured" to believe in prophecy. They are too wise to be "taken in" by such stuff(?). This is bold infidelity, stalking abroad in a land of Bibles and churches, asking to be respected and looked up to as "the cream of society" and the learning of the Nineteenth Century. Such pretences and claims are preposterous—absurd and shameful. "The histories of Assyrian lion, Medo-Per-sian bear, Greek leopard, and Roman complex "beast;" the existing facts of Tyre, Babylon, Egypt, Nineveh, the remarkable dispersion of the Jews, the most clannish of peoples, most attached to their own land, rich enough to buy every acre of Palestine with pearls, yet providentially kept out of it till the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled,—all these, and a hundred fold more, furnish a colossal argument for the divine origin of the prophetic Scriptures," and yet scoffers at the Bible are respected and their influence feared by many in the church. The day is upon us when we must arise and assert our rights as based on facts, or we may expect always to be dishonored and trampled upon by these would-be wise men.

By the way we would be thankful for the favor, if some one will give us respectable evidence to show that these daring cavaliers have any real culture and any wisdom which is worthy of the name; for they reject prophecy from inspired men of God, but let some man as Wiggins of Canada, in 1883, predict a great calamity, and these scoffers at Bible truth will be the most diligent in making preparations to protect themselves from the dangerous predictions. Why this difference? Why is it that a prediction, touching our temporal affairs so excites men and so moves them to make preparation against the threatened disaster, while a prediction made by inspired men of God is laughed at as incredible, as an absurdity?

Some person predicted that on Nov. 27, 1892, a comet would strike or pass near the earth, and forth with many people were excited and nervous—afraid of the comet, afraid it might strike and destroy the earth and its people.

In the word of God we are taught that a time is coming drawing nearer and nearer, day by day, when time shall be no longer, when the earth shall be wrapped in a winding sheet of dissolving flames, when the earth and sea shall give up their dead, and the great white throne shall flash upon the gaze of countless hosts of humanity, when the books shall be opened and the dead judged! "And yet these same people are not concerned, do not believe any such stuff, are going on unconcerned, claiming to be too brave to be disturbed by mere prophecy. They are very brave, aren't they? They were terribly frightened over Wiggins' prediction and over the comet, but they do not believe in prophecy. How they are to be pitied. They are blinded by their own wisdom.

That Inaugural Ball.

The last Sunday's State Chronicle gives quite an account of the Inaugural Ball. Just why the Chronicle should have given the account in the Sunday's issue, we cannot tell. If admitted at all, we think it would have suited some other day better than Sunday.

As to Governor Carr we have the highest regard for him as an honest, patriotic, political gentleman. But there are some people in North Carolina, who will be glad when the time comes that the State will have a governor living near enough to God to urge an objection to a ball at his inauguration.

We are ready to admit that some very nice, gentlemanly people attend and take part in balls; but we doubt very much that any truly, spiritually minded person ever does so.

A Visit to Elon College.

We ran up to Elon College last week; and there, as well as every where else, the snow was more conspicuous than all other objects. When the beautiful snow comes down, literature, science and art must all fade in the scale of beauty and perfection in comparison with this element, the white angel of nature.

We were glad to find the college doing well, with more students than were there before Christmas. So far as we could tell every thing was moving as smoothly as a glass train over an ice rail road.

The young ladies and young gentlemen seem to represent an element of beauty and piety. It would be hard to find a better body of young people any where.

May the Lord continue to prosper this grand institution.

Something Wrong.

It is stated that Jay Gould left at his death an estate worth $72,000,000; but he paid taxes on only $500,000. Surely it is true that the poor is servant to the rich.

No Government can live without some system of taxation. But the burden ought to rest equally on all. There may be much inequality here; but in death the leveling rod touches all a like.

BURNING OF THE BERKLEY CHURCH—THE COLD WEATHER.—DR. MAPLE'S SERMON.—OTHER ITEMS.

Bro. Staley said some time ago that this is a moving age, and I feel like I have fallen in with the ways of the age, for notwithstanding so recently I asked my correspondents to address me at Berkley, Va., as I had moved from Norfolk, now I have again to ask them to address me at Norfolk, as I have moved back. This made three moves in about a year, and now I am ready to testify that "three moves" are not equal to one fire, unless it be a very small one, for I do not think in moving from Raleigh to Norfolk, then to the country and now back again, that I was damaged as much as $10 in value by losses. This success, under the goodness of God, I attribute to the kind assistance of many friends, careful friends, whose names I should be glad to record here, were they not too numerous. But one thing is settled, I do not wish to move three times again this year.

THE BERKLEY CHURCH BURNED.

Last Sunday night at midnight the Christian church in Berkley was burned down, being a total loss, except what was saved in the brick, and an old organ which happened to be in the home of the pastor. All the church furniture, the new organ, the church record, and in fact, everything, was consumed. Sunday was a very cold day, and it is supposed that the effort to keep the house warm for the Sunday night service was the cause of the fire—the furnace getting too hot. The house was insured for $5,000, and the furniture for $1,100. While this will not cover the entire loss, it is said, we all feel so glad that even this much was saved to this little band of believers.

I saw Rev. Roger Charnock, the pastor, on the day after the burning, and he seemed full of pluck and a purpose "to try again," and that very soon. They hope to get the use of a small brick house, formerly used by the Presbyterians and later by the Disciples, till they can rebuild. This church has had a string of misfortunes. While in this old house, it was partially burned, then when they had the one burned last Sunday night, partially built, a storm came along and blew it down, and now fire has come again and played havoc with the completed house. The Presbyterians and the M. E. Churches have been very kind in offering assistance in the use of their respective houses of worship, and there is much sympathy expressed for this unfortunate church by the people of this section generally.

THE COLD WEATHER.

It has been many years (many say forty years) since we have known anything equal to the cold of the present winter in this country. The river which separates these "cities by the sea" has been frozen over now about two weeks, and at this writing—Jan. 20—there is little prospect of an immediate thaw. The ground has not been entirely clear of snow since Dec. 26, 1892, and yesterday, and the night before, we had the heaviest fall of snow which we have had in many years, so far as I can now recall. Almost every thing is at a standstill, and of course church work is included. It has been a season of great suffering with man and beast, especially have the poor had a hard time, many of them not having the actual necessities of life, and no money with which to purchase. The charitable people of the city have helped some by gifts for the suffering. The dray and street car horses have had a dreadful time of it. All in all, this is the hardest winter we have had in a quarter of a century, I think.

OTHER ITEMS.

Rev. Dr. Jones of this city is in N. Y. State in a meeting, Rev. Z. A. Poste is supplying for him in his absence. Our Norfolk people are getting their affairs in shape for a building, as they hope in the spring of this year. I hope a liberal hand will be extended to them in this effort. I read with much interest Rev. Dr. Maple's sermon in the SUN of Jan. 12, 1893. I hope your readers will preserve that copy of the SUN and read the sermon carefully again. I mean to do so, and if my first impressions are strengthened upon a second reading, I shall ask Dr. Maple for more light and some explanations touching his views as set forth in that sermon. I do not wish this to be construed as a hint at controversy—far from it, and God helping me, it shall be on my part, an earnest search for the truth as it is in Jesus, in which I dare say Dr. Maple will cheerfully join me.

Suffolk Letter.

Pen or types or both can easily change one's meaning. The "Suffolk Letter" of last week, under the pressure of a low temperature, or poor writing, or a typographical error, made a suspicious report about the Suffolk congregation. It said: "So far this year our congregations and Sunday school attendance have been small, but we have not missed a single vice." It should have read; "but we have not missed a single service." I hope we have missed some of the vices, for that is the object of attending the services. Artic weather has reigned supreme for another week. Another snowfall of eight inches last Wednesday night, has made the face of Virginia one veiled in spotless white. Lakes, Bays, Rivers, all covered with ice received the snow as the land. I am told that one might drive from Baltimore to Norfolk on the Bay; and some have driven across the Nansmond river where it is a mile wide at Town Point. The ice is eight and ten inches thick, and many are housing it in tide water Va., a thing rarely done.

Sunday 15th inst., a mass-meeting was held in the City Hall to organize relief for the poor. Coal, wood, meal, money were given or subscribed, a soliciting committee of eight appointed, and a committee of five, for the distribution of help, formed consisting of the President of the council, overseer of the Poor, and the Pastors of the city, and this committee relieved the present necessity of perhaps one hundred families during the week. The majority of families aided were colored. Something over three hundred dollars worth was donated, besides two car loads of wood given by the Norfolk & Carolina rail road. The majority of families in need were not identified with any church in Suffolk. The suffering of the world is outside of the church.

"Berkley Christian church in ruins again!" That is the sal news that reaches us in this continued storm. Not by wind this time, as in April 1889, but by fire on Sunday night January 15th 1893; or rather on Monday morning before daylight. Berkley has had reverse after reverse, but the Lord may be in all. The Hebrew children came out of the fire unharmed, and we hope it may be so with the Berkley congregation. It certainly will, if there is one walking with them "like the Son of God." All who read the story of their loss will no doubt send up a brief prayer for a "Father's blessing" upon the church. The pastor, Rev. Roger Charnock, writes me that they will rebuild as soon as they can, and he hopes to move on successfully with the work. The insurance on the property will save them from a total loss; and this should be hint enough to all congregations to keep their houses of worship insured for a reasonable sum.

Mr. E. E. Hathaway of Berkley has associated himself with Pro. P. J. Kernodle, in "The Weekly Observer," and will move his family to Suffolk, where he resided once before. He is an experienced printer, and no doubt will be a useful acquisition to the "Observer" and the "Job" department of that paper. He receives a hearty welcome by old, friends, and no doubt can make many new ones in a short time.

 THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

A merry greeting to you. During the past week winter has kept the ground wrapped in his beautiful mantle of snow, and the merry school children have enjoyed the fine coasting immensely I do know. But there are some to whom the cold has brought sorrow and pain. May our Heavenly Father comfort all such and help them very much.

Our Corner has started out finely for the first month and we cannot ask for you to do better. Just let us all keep at it for the whole of 1893 and next year will be brighter than this. I have not space to write much this week

Cordially yours,
 UNCLE TANGLE.

GARNER, N. C., Jan. 15, 1893,

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I could not go to church this morning on account of the weather, so I will write a short letter. There has not been any Sunday school for three weeks the weather has been so bad. I am going to school to Prof. Stewart, and like to go very much. He is an excellent teacher but is going to leave the place soon and we will all be very sorry indeed. I will ask the cousins a question. Who was Noah's grandfather? Close with love to you and the cousins.

Your loving niece,
 NELLIE GOODWIN.

GARNER, N. C., Jan. 15, 1892.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little girl ten years old, and would like to join the Band. I like to read the CHRISTIAN SUN especially the Children's Corner. I go to Sunday school every Sunday when it is convenient, and like to go very much. I go to the Baptist in the morning and the Christian in the evening. I could not go today as it snowed last night. I was very sorry. I will answer Mary McCauley's question. Esther was beautiful and well favored, I think. Am I right? I will close with much love to you and the cousins.

Your little niece,
 OLLIE GOODWIN.

LEACHBURG, N. C., Dec. 30, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I hope you and the band of consins have had a merry Christmas, but I am afraid that it has been quite dull for some of the consins on account of the snow as they had to stay in doors, and couldn't go out to pop fire crackers, we all of course love to make a noise

Christmas times. It didn't seem much like Christmas this time. I went to church on Christmas day and expected a good sermon from the new preacher at Plymouth but he didn't come, he didn't send any word whether he was sick or not but I hope he is not sick. Well I must close this time for fear it will be so long it will find its way to the waste basket good by.

Your loving niece,
 ANNIE V. TAYLOR.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

PREPARED BY PROF. HERBERT SCHOLZ, A. B.

LESSON V.—JAN. 29.

The Spirit of the Lord—Zech. 4: 1-10. GOLDEN TEXT—Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.—Zech. 4:6.

TIME.—March, B. C. 519. The twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month, in the second year of Darius Hystaspes. The same night as our last lesson.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

The Jews, who, at the command of Cyrus the Great, had come to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple, had met with many difficulties. After they laid the foundation and set up the altar, their work was delayed for nearly 15 years. This delay was caused by the following circumstances: The Samaritans occupying the country around Jerusalem came to Zerubbabel and Joshua and wanted to help them build the temple. On account of their religion, the leaders of the Jews at once refused this to the Samaritans. Angered at the refusal, the Samaritans threw all the obstacles in the way of the Jews that they could; and by misrepresentation to Ahasuerus obtained from that tyrannical king on adverse decree. But in B. C. 520, Haggai stirred the Jews again to action by his prophecies. A few months later, Zechariah encouraged them by relating four visions which he received from God. At the time of this lesson, we find Zerubbabel busily engaged in the work of rebuilding, but there are many obstacles still to hinder him. His undertaking is a vast one; his number of men is not large; the material necessary for building the temple is very scarce; he is still surrounded by adversaries; and it seems impossible that the prophecies which Haggai and Zechariah had already made to him should be fulfilled. But God gives Zechariah another vision which is intended to inspire confidence among the people, and the vision is embraced in to day's lesson.

1. And the angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, as a man that is awakened out of his sleep.
 2. And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked and behold a candle-stick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof.

3. And two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

4. So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord?

5. Then the angel that talked with me, answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

6. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

7. Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel, thou shalt become a plain; and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

8. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me saying,

9. The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this; his hands shall also finish it: and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10. For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

I. THE VISION OF THE GOLDEN CANDLE-STICK.

1. "And the angel" Zechariah had been shown four visions previous to this, all by the same angel. "Waked me" The prophet no doubt dreamed that he was asleep, and the angel awaked him, thus making a dream within a dream. We often have dreams similar to this.

2. "Behold a candlestick." This was rather a candle-stand. It consisted of a broad base upon which was the bowl for holding the oil, and springing up from the bowl were seven hollow pipes. Resting on the top of these pipes were lamps.

3. "Two olive trees." The olive was the tree from which the ancients made their lamp oil. People in oriental countries cultivate the olive for that purpose today. The Mount of Olives was a favorite resort of Christ's.

II. THE INTERPRETATION.

4. "So I answered." The prophet did not understand, so he wisely concluded to ask. The desire to know and understand is commendable.

5. "Knowest thou not?" The angel seems somewhat surprised that the vision does not explain itself. There stood the golden candle stick with the olive trees on either side, and a branch of each olive connected with the pipes, and pouring oil into them continually. The candle-stick was an instrument for giving light. As it stood there quietly shedding its rays abroad and dispelling the darkness of the night, surely it was sufficient to teach a lesson. The word "light" has always been used as a type of purity and goodness and power and enlightenment. When God desired to create a new world He said first, "Let there be light." Christ said, "Let your light so shine" etc. This candle stick represented the Jews, they were then the light of the world. The two olives pouring their oil into the candle-stick, represented God, pouring out his power and grace and blessings upon the children of Israel. They were to let their lights continually burn, and these lights were kept alive by the oil of God.

6. "This is the word and" etc; Zerubbabel was discouraged, perhaps, at the greatness of the work which he had to perform. He felt weak before the mighty task of directing the rebuilding of the temple, especially as there was but little material out of which to build it. "Not by might." The strength of man per se is too insignificant to take into consideration. It is good for man to be strong, but his strength when compared with power of God, is as the little ant beside the huge elephant. "But by my Spirit." This Spirit of God has much more to do with the affairs of the world than many think. It is a teacher. It leadeth into truth. It is a comforter. It comforted the disciples. It convicts of sin. It makes men brave and enthusiastic for the work of goodness and righteousness. The man who is guided by the Spirit of God in worldly affairs is bound to succeed. This was the Spirit by which the governor of Judea was to rebuild the temple.

III. THE APPLICATION.

7. "Who art thou," etc. The immense work to be performed is called here a mountain. This should become a plain. The mountain should be by the energy of the governor actuated by God's Spirit gradually fade away, and leave no trace whatever of its existence. "He shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shouting," etc. The headstone was the completing work of the temple. This was to be performed amid the rejoicing of the people. They would cry and shout and sing praises to God for giving them once more a place of worship.

9. "The hands of Zerubbabel," etc. A great promise. A glorious achievement for one man. He should not die before the work was completed, but he would live to see it completed, and moreover should worship in it.

10. "The day of small things." We cannot tell what may be the outcome of small things. Look at the little colony at Jamestown, Va., in 1706. Who would have thought then that they were the beginning of a great, and mighty nation. Take the little acorn. Who would think that it would make a large oak. These little forces and little influences are the component parts of mighty results. "They are the eyes of the Lord." This passage refers to the stone with the seven eyes spoken of in our last lesson, and we think it is simply intended to convey the idea that God sees everything and every where.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

We all have times of discouragement.

We can let our lights shine only as God pours into our lamps the oil.

The Spirit of God we should keep as our constant companion.

Little duties well done will help us on to greater achievement.

Lamenting and Repenting.

A middle-aged woman spoke of her gladness to be granted a longer life that she might spend it "in repenting of her past mistakes." The disposition to repent of sin and to regret errors is commendable, but the idea of spending one's life in fruitless lamentations over the past is a most mistaken one. If we can correct our errors, or repair our wrongs we should do it with all possible promptness; but when this is done or when this cannot be done; we have no right to waste life and time in empty regrets and fruitless lamentations.

The Lord continually represents himself as a God who is ready to forgive, and who "will abundantly pardon;" and he declares that "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." And when sins are thus confessed, forsaken, and forgiven, He has said, "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

Forgetfulness goes with forgiveness, and when the Lord has mercifully forgiven our sins, and cast them behind his back, he does not desire that we should harass our souls with them, nor perpetually bring them to our remembrance. He casts them "into the depths of the sea;" He dismisses them forever; and would He not have us to do the same? We may remember the past for humility, and for warning, but what is the use of our mourning, and sighing, and sorrowing over things which are done and are forever beyond our reach?

The Lord would have his children rejoice in him. He would have them come before him with thanksgiving and enter into his gates with praise. He would have them "come boldly to the throne of grace;" He would have them cast on him their cares and anxieties, and no longer fill the air with mournings and lamentations. Can we not then take Him at His word, and accept the mercies which he offers, and the pardon which he bestows? Let us waste no more of our time in mourning, sighing, and lamenting over the past, but let us gird ourselves for the duties of the present hour, and work while the day lasts, lest the night come wherein no man can work.—Selected.

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo.
The finish is perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this great painting of Ida Wauri, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life, are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $300, and are the same size (12 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely life like. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Dosehamps, and others of world-wide repute. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Fansies," and "A White House Rebel" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep every one posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a any size you choose. Send in your sub-

Peloubet's Select Notes.

Peloubet's Select Notes, by Rev. Dr. F. N. & M. A. Peloubet. 340 pages. Illustrated, cloth, 12 mo. Price $1.25. Boston, W. A. Wilde & Co.

This Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1893, like its eighteen predecessors, bears evidence of the widest research on the part of its compilers into every field of Christian literature. Its exhaustive quotations, excellent suggestions to teachers, helpful anecdotes, and admirable notes, wonderfully illumine the scripture text and impress upon the mind the salient points of each lesson.

The library references are particularly full and a great convenience to the busy worker, who desires to study in detail from original sources, of the times, places, personages, and secular, as well as the sacred history of the events and peoples mentioned in the lessons.

In authentic colored maps, appropriate original illustrations, and general mechanical make-up, the present volume excels all previous issues, and this is praise enough.

Through its wideness of scope, condensation of statements, and happy combination of original and selected matter, this commentary is at once so concise, evangelical, and practical that every teacher and preacher must find it an invaluable aid in the study of the lessons the coming year.

All who are troubled with Constipation will find a safe, sure, and speedy relief in Ayer's Pills. Unlike most other cathartics, these pills strengthen the stomach, liver, and bowels, and restore the organs to normal and regular action.

Ayer's Pills are constantly advancing in the estimation of those who use them. They improve the appetite, promote digestion, restore healthy action, and regulate every function. They are pleasant to take, gentle in their operation, and powerful in subduing disease.

The February Wide Awake has a delightful reminder of Tennyson in Carrol Burton's "Child-Life at Farringford," described by one who actually visited and played with the Tennyson boys. The serials by Stoddard, Molly Elliot Seawell and Mrs. Jenness are strong and absorbing; the poetry of the number is full of fire, pathos, humor and jollity, and the departments are, as always, replete with interest and information. Price 20 cents a number, $2.40 a year. On sale at news stands or sent postpaid on receipt of price, by D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

The New Peterson for February is an advance on the January number, admirable as that was in every respect. The illustrations are still better and more numerous, and the stories and miscellaneous articles are as good as they are varied. "The Evolution of Comic Opera," by Edward Stephens, is a very clever record of that favorite amusement and gives capital portraits of the leading singers of the day. "Art in Mikado Land," by Robert B. Graham, is an exceedingly well written paper, and the illustrations are capital. "One Clergyman and One Suburban Serving-Maid," by Joseph Kirkland, is in that popular Western author's happiest vein.

The New Peterson is meeting from the outset with a complete success which is certain to last, because it is thoroughly deserved. Terms, two dollars per year. Address PETERSON MAGAZINE Co., Philadelphia.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly
For February.

Emile Zola's thrilling and dramatic story of the Franco-Prussian War, entitled "The Storming of the Mill," is published complete, with illustrations, in the February number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. This tale is a revelation to readers who have hitherto had the misfortune to know the great French novelist only through that sinister and seamy part of his work represented by "Nana" and "Germinal." The leading article of this number of Frank Leslie's is a vivid historical paper upon "The Continental Congress," by Richard B. Kimball, LL. D. Daniel Dane's serial story of "The Great Chantry Diamonds" is brought to a dramatic conclusion.

A Money Maker.

It is so hard to get employment now and so hard to make money, that I know others would like to know how they can make a little money, as I have done. Tell your subscribers they can get all the jewelry, table-ware, knives, forks and spoons they can plate, and make $25 a week. The plating outfit costs $5. I bought mine from H. F. Delno & Co., of Columbus, Ohio. It plates gold, silver and nickel. I did $4.70 worth of plating the first day. The work is done so nicely that everybody seeing it wants work done. This machine is the greatest money maker I ever saw. Why should any one be out of employment or out of money, when they can, by using my experience, always have money in the house and have a little to spend too? Any one can get circulars by addressing H. F. Delno & Co., Columbus, Ohio. K. JARRETT.

Berkley, Va.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—I am at the best of times a poor writer, hence I never expect to be a calligraphist. Last week's Berkley letter gives evidence of this, inasmuch as the printer must have failed to decipher my mysterious characters and had to make a guess at much it contained.

The prospects of the Berkley church are much brighter now than when I last wrote you. The Insurance Company allowed us $6,050, then making a reduction of $50 the difference in the chandaliers. Bro. Bowden having insured them for $100, and the church only having paid $50.

They kindly gave us the old walls, so that we are in a very fair way towards a bright outlook in the future.

The Methodists have made us a very fair offer; they will hand over to us their church as it stands for our lot, and $3,000.

Personally I say no. Let us have a new edifice of our own.

The Berkley church deserves one. And the majority of the members say "we don't want any thing second hand."

The church records were destroyed in the fire, but Bro. Townsend took out the corner stone and found that though the papers placed therein were much charred, yet they were readable.

Services yesterday both in church and Sunday school were well attended. Bro. Bowden leads on his army with grand results. And the various officers of the school catch his buoyant spirits. He is a thorough disciplinarian.

Sister Upton lost her beloved daughter last Tuesday. She leaves behind a husband and five children the youngest being only three days old.

Our prayers are many in their behalf that the Father's presence may lighten the stroke and show that in love and mercy He has done this. It is a difficult task, when the heart is bleeding to say, "thy will be done." But true prayer will change not God's will but ours, and then it becomes easy to bow before the throne. Bro. Rev. N. G. Newman paid his sister a visit last Friday, may he come again soon and bring a little more of the sunshine akin to that he left behind him.

Side-Tracking the Sabbath.

It is the resort of men who wish to do as they please on the Christian's first day, to quote against everything, however venerable in the Church, that interferes with their wishes, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Thus one man says, "I will not shut myself up in a musty church; the groves were God's first temples; the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." And another, "My business presses, competition is hard; the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." And another, "Art is a fine thing for a man; the Sabbath was made for man: and not man for the Sabbath." They forget the first part: The Sabbath was made.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Souvenir Coins.

Somebody is likely to make a good deal of money out of the recent action of Congress, permitting "souvenir coins" to be issued for the benefit of the Chicago Fair, from the mint at Philadelphia. The silver dollar is now worth about 65 cents, and there being a less proportion of silver in the half dollar than in the dollar, the actual value of the half is about 30 cents. The coins could therefore be counterfeited at a considerable margin of profit, were they sold for no more than their nominal face value, which is a half-dollar, but they command a handsome premium, none being sold at less than one dollar, and some even more, as the papers state, an enthusiastic collector paying $10,000 in cash for the first one issued. Counterfeiting the coins is said by experts in such matters to be an affair of no great difficulty, and the premium paid is so high that the counterfeiters, if there be such, will be able to use the regulation amount of genuine silver and still make a handsome profit. How far the laws against counterfeiting will apply to this token is a doubtful question as it is certainly not a coin in the legal sense of the word, but a souvenir, and there seems to be no law against counterfeiting a souvenir. It is not certainly known that any counterfeits have yet been issued, but the conditions are such that the Chicago managers of the Fair are said to be feeling uneasy at the prospect.—Etc.

Italy.

Since 1861 Italy has built more than 8,000 miles of railways and steam tram lines, besides nearly 20,000 miles of public roads. The large cities have been quite transformed, and many improvements have been introduced into the prisons and hospital. During this same period the population has increased from twenty-five to thirty millions. In 1861 less than one million pupils were in the primary schools, now they contain more than two millions and a half. Then the postal income was twelve million francs, now it is forty four million.

Then there were 355 telegraph offices, now there are 4,509. Then the international commerce of Italy was about five million tons, now is fourteen million, while the internal coast-commerce has increased from eight million to thirty-three million tons. In 1861 only 446,000 tons of coal were consumed, while in 1890 the amount ran up to 4,350,000 tons. Eight hundred million francs have been added to the capital of charitable institutions, and the deposits in savings banks have increased since 1872 from 465,000,000 to 1,470,000,000 francs. Besides this there the many millions which have been spent on the army and the navy, and on coast and frontier defences.—Baptist.

THE PULPIT.

The Difference.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry; behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed: behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Isaiah 65: 13-14.

The Lord is here speaking to those who were living in open rebellion against him. They were burning incense in the groves upon the mountains unto idols, and were blaspheming him upon the hills. He points out their great wickedness, and solemnly affirms. "I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosoms." Blessings would come to the obedient and they should rejoice in the Lord: but tribulation and anguish would fall upon the disobedient. This fact is presented in clear strong language in our text. "Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed: behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit." This does not refer so much to the outward calamities that sin brings as to its infliction of evil upon the soul. There are outward and inward evils flowing from sin, and the spiritual injuries it inflicts are the greatest. Personified wisdom says, "Whosoever findeth me, findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord. But he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul: all that hate me love death."

Our happiness depends upon the state of our mind and heart. If we are right with God, and are living in obedience to him, we are independent of outward circumstances; and can rejoice even in the midst of the greatest outer calamities. This is confirmed by the experience of ages, and there are many instances in the recorded history of man that illustrates it. On the other hand the man who is not right with God, and is living in disobedience to him, may have all the outer means of happiness; but they cannot give peace of mind and comfort of heart in the hour of sorrow. The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

Man is related to the material things of this world, and dependent upon them for his physical well being; but he sustains a higher relation than this, and his peace of mind grows out of this relation. He is related to God and eternity. He is accountable, and must answer to him for his conduct. He must pass out of this life into eternity, and his happiness there depends upon the character he forms here. God has placed in his soul an executive power that we call conscience, and this condemns or approves his conduct according as it is good or bad. These three facts determine a man's state of mind, and bring misery or happiness according to the character of his actions; for there is no escape from them. We cannot shake off our accountability to God, nor can we escape death and the judgment. Neither can we annihilate conscience. All human experience proves this. It is this relation to God, eternity, and conscience that lifts us above and makes us independent of all outer circumstances. It opens to us a fountain of peace and happiness that the changes and afflictions of life cannot touch, and the believer can drink of this fountain and rejoice when all earthly fountains fail.

Let us look at the varied experiences of life from this standpoint, and from them we can learn the fulness of the gospel of Christ; and the redeeming power of faith. Trials and afflictions come to us from various causes, and cause us trouble; but if we are at peace with God, and conscience approves of our conduct, we can meet them in calmness knowing that God will take care of and deliver us. On the other hand if we are conscious of living in opposition to God it will bring condemnation, and we will have nothing to sustain us. The Christian can be happy and rejoice under circumstances in which the unbeliever will suffer the bitterest anguish of soul. We have many illustrations of this in the recorded history of man. The brethren of Joseph through envy planned to murder him, and threw him into an empty pit; and left him there to die. This was a cruel brutal act, and they were unmoved by the child's tears and appeals for mercy; but they were covetous, and loved money. This was the master passion of their souls, and when an Ishmalitish merchant came to their camp on his way to Egypt they saw the way open to get rid of Joseph, and at the same time make money by selling him as a slave to the merchant. They did this, and their brother was carried off they did not know nor care where. Years passed, and they prospered in the business; but famine came to their land, and learning that there was corn for sale in Egypt they went down there to purchase food to save themselves and families from starving to death. When they reached that land the governor had them all arrested as spies, and shut up in prison. This made them think, and awoke the memories of the past, conscience was quickened, and they recalled their cruelty to their helpless little brother many years before. It was a sad, fearful review, "and they said one to another. We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." It was not the fact that they were shut up in prison that troubled them, but the awful memory of their terrible cruelty to their brother, conscience kindled the fires of remorse in their souls that burned hotter than all the fires of an outer hell could burn, and there was no escape from it. They could not blot out this dreadful memory. It haunted them like a fearful phantom, and rent their souls with unutterable anguish. They could not still the dreadful voice of conscience, nor extinguish the fires of remorse it kindled. They carried hell in their own souls, and could not escape from themselves. The darkness and gloom of the prison cell was only as the shadow to the substance compared to the awful darkness that shrouded their souls in the gloom of remorse and despair. The prison did not cause their anguish of soul. It only made them think, awoke their memories, and recalled the sins of their past lives.

This is one side of the picture. On the other hand the Christian may be robbed of all earthly possessions, shut up in prison, and cut off from all Christian association; but this does not, and cannot, touch the fountain of his peace and happiness. He is independent of all his surroundings, and the darkness of his prison cell awakens no troublesome memories. His sins have all been pardoned, he is at peace with God and his own conscience; holds communion with Christ, and looks out of the gloom of his prison to "the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." His enemies may shut him up in prison, but they cannot cut him off from his communion with God. They may murder him, but in doing this they send him to heaven. Paul and Silas were arrested for preaching Christ, beaten with many stripes, cast into prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks. Their outward condition was as miserable as it was possible for their enemies to make it. Their backs were all cut to pieces by the cruel lash, their feet fast in th stocks, and they were shrouded in the darkness of the gloomy prison; but their minds were calm and their hearts full of joy. They held a prayer meeting there at midnight, "and sang praises unto God." They feasted upon his love and promises, and rejoiced in hope of his glory. He had prepared "a table for them in the presence of their enemies," and they "gloried in tribulation." Their surroundings were dark and gloomy, and they had no earthly hope; but "they looked not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." They saw what their enemies did not see and heard what they did not hear. They saw the infinite glory of God as it is revealed in heaven, and heard the songs of the angels and of the redeemed around the eternal throne.

In 1523 Henry Voes and John Esch, two young men, were burnt at the stake at Brussels for their faith in Christ. When led to the place of execution they were cheerful and joyful protesting that they died for the glory of God, and the doctrine of the gospel. When they came to the place of execution, and were despoiled of their garments, they joyfully embraced the stake to which they were bound, exclaiming, "We praise thee O God." A doctor, seeing their cheerfulness, said to Henry, "that he should not so foolishly glorify himself;" he answered, "God forbid that I should glory in anything, but only in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ." Another counseled him to have God before his eyes: he answered. "I trust that I carry him truly in my heart." They set the fagots under his feet on fire, and he said, "me thinks ye do strew roses under my feet." The smoke and flames soon choked them, and they ascended to heaven in a chariot of fire." In these circumstances where the man of the world would not have anything to sustain him these young Christians had food to eat that the world knows nothing about. They realized in their experience the blessing promised in our text.

The great truth expressed so beautifully in our text is realized in the dying hour by both saint and sinner. Nothing that this world affords can sustain man in the dying hour. He may have wealth, learning, position, and power, but they are only as a fog bank to him when he comes to die. They cannot give him any support then. How many dying men and women have realized this in that trying hour. The Rev. John Bradford was burned at the stake, and embracing the fagots, said, "Strait is the way, and narrow is the gate, and few that find it." And, speaking to his fellow martyr said, "Be of good comfort brother, for we shall have a merry supper with the Lord this night: if there be any way to heaven on horseback or in fiery chariots, this is it." The assurance of eternal life it sustained him in that trying hour, and enabled him to meet it with calmness and joy. Bishop Hooper when sentenced to death for preaching Christ was offered a pardon if he would recant, but he said to them, "If you love my soul away with it; if you love my soul, away with it." One of the commissioners said to him consider that life is sweet, and death is bitter. "True," said the Bishop, "but the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come is more sweet."

The irreligious man in death is left adrift. He has nothing upon which to rest. He cannot rest his hope of the future upon the promises of Christ, for they are made to the willing and obedient; but he has lived a life of disobedience to God and can claim no interest in them. They are not for him, and he realizes this now. He "is without hope, and without God." "Blessed are they that do his commandment, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs and sorcerers and whormongers and murderers and idolaters and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

From our subject we learn the true secret of happiness. It is reconciliation to God, and obedience to him. This brings peace of mind, comfort of heart, and un failing hope of ever lasting life in heaven. This is the fountain of abiding happiness, all who will may drink at it. God says, "Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil." "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble."

DEAR BRETHREN:—The outlook for the Christian Church was never more hopeful than at present. The future for us is bright if we will only do our duty prompted by love divine. We seldom know when we have done our duty towards the church. We may contribute to its enterprises, but until we have given till we feel it, and have denied ourselves of some of the comforts of life, we have made no sacrifices for the church. We need money to extend the borders of the Christian Church and unless those who are able will lend to the Lord in our denomination, the Christian Church must suffer, then God will hold us responsible for the failure. We must not fail, we are able to do the work; I have four places where I could organize Christian Churches soon if I were able to give my time to this work; but I am a poor man. I also have charge of the work at Antioch, Warren, and Goshen Chapel. The brethren at these new churches are doing about all they well can; the hope of the future is bright with them; but they need financial assistance. A little help while they are in their infantile state, and are trying to build, would possibly place them where they could soon become self sustaining churches. The house at Antioch is up, roof on, floor laid, with temporary seats. We need some help to finish up this neat building for the Lord. Goshen Chapel is a hopeful place; but they need a new house of worship, and arrangements are being made to build one 30 by 50 feet. They need assistance in this work. The outlook is good. From the influences of these churches with some assistance other Christian churches could be organized. I am almost giving my time and labor to build up these new churches. I feel that I have hid myself upon the altar of the Lord. Now dear brethren and friends, cannot some of you assist us in this important work? Dear readers, please pray for us, send us at least a small contribution, and the good Lord will bless you abundantly. "God loveth a cheerful giver." Please send contributions to S. B. Klapp, Youngsville, N. C., pastor, or to R. T. Slaughter, Berea, N. C., Sec., or Goshen Chapel, and to W. W. Rainey, Elms, N. C., for Antioch and you shall be receipted for the same with my thanks for your generosity.

Yours in Christ,
S. B. KLAPP, Pastor.

Notes From Harvard.

If we do not learn any thing from our books at Harvard, we are very likely to see and hear something worthy of note every now and then. There is something to keep up interest and enthusiasm here all the time. Had I to speak of grandeur, interest, notoriety and enthusiasm connected with any one branch or department of the work here, more so than with any other, I should do so in connection with the chapel exercises and church services in connection with the college. It is always something new and generally something sublime. They have no preacher or regular pastor as such stationed at the college. Instead they get preachers to come here and preach six or two Sunday evenings (more or less) and conduct prayers in the chapel at 9, each morning—save Sunday. These preachers are the most noted, eloquent and learned to be found in the pulpits of the various denominations of the U. S.—they show no preference for denomination—seeking for the man always of weight influence and power rather than for creed or churchism. So I guess we will be very apt to hear the men of our most note in the pulpit during our stay here. Lyman Abbott is a popular favorite here and always draws big crowds. We have already heard him two or three times and he is to come for another term in May I understand. Edward Everett Hale is also very popular here, but more so I believe as a lecturer than as a preacher. He also draws large crowds. But the largest crowd I have ever seen drawn together here for church services yet was last Sunday night when Dr. Parkhurst came over and preached for us. The house was crowded, galleries and all, and the standing room was even taken. Dr. Parkhurst, all will remember, is the man who created such a sensation in N. Y. last year by finding out the rottenness of the police and aldermanic system of N. Y. city, from practical experience, we might say, and then denouncing with all the violence, force and eloquence which could be brought to bear by one so learned and eloquent as himself. He preached as a powerful sermon last Sunday night some of it I shall never forget, and if time and space permitted I should give some sketches of his sermon even here. Suffice it to say that he, like Lyman Abbot, is in the ministry with his whole soul, and I scarce have heard such grand and burning truths fall from the lips of man before. If these two men, don't represent a live Christianity burning with a spirit of holy and sacred truth, then I don't know what that means. But the preaching is not all of the church or chapel services here. The music is simply charming and melodious. A great pipe organ, a choir of 50 male voices—30 little boys and 20 young men with now and then some famous soloist, furnish the music—always new, selected and printed for each service. In short they leave nothing undone at Harvard in trying to make the church services attractive, imposing, interesting, beneficial and elevating—and as a rule I should say the students generally take advantage of it. In short I should say, Mr. Editor, that the influences for evil and waywardness to be met with by the student body were considerably less frequent and tempting here than in many of our southern colleges, while the lesson of Christianity, truth, goodness, were more frequently taught here than in many places I have seen.

Well we are now in the midst of that dark valley and shadow through which all students have to pass Midyear examinations are upon us and of course as usual they are much dreaded. Now I am sure I can't do the subject justice, nor do I know what on earth has come over "my partner," but Mr. Editor that man has gone to writing poetry and here is one of his original verses—(I found it on my table and it is in Prof. M.'s hand writing.)

"Lo! thou dread, dismal King!
Examinations, horrid thing!
I see thy ghost with stealthy tread
Hovering o'er my 'fenceless head."

Will wonders ever cease?

SELECTIONS.

Knowing God.

Knowledge is power. The difference between the successful and unsuccessful, the prosperous and the impoverished man, is often simply a difference in knowledge. The knowledge of science enables one to command the resources of nature. Men have lived in poverty while possessing lands in which were mines of untold wealth. The lack of knowledge kept them poor; others with greater knowledge became rich.

A knowledge of man enables its possessor to make use of men to accomplish his purposes. Knowledge also serves as a safeguard against deception, imposition, mistakes, and in many evils. But there is no knowledge which is so potent for good, and has such adaptations and capabilities as the knowledge of God. "This is life eternal, that they know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou has sent." The angel declared to the prophet Daniel that "the people who do know their God shall be strong and do exploits." It is not enough to know there is a God, nor to know Him as the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but the people who do know their God, the living God, a present, mighty, eternal helper, "shall be strong, and do exploits."

There is many a man who is weak, feeble, and helpless, whose great need is to know God. If he had this knowledge his arm would have new strength, and his heart would feel new courage. If he had this knowledge no fears could dismay him, no doubts disturb him. What wonders have been wrought by men who knew their God; what exploits have been performed, what victories have been achieved, what triumphs over sin and evil, over darkness and despair.

Let us seek the knowledge of God, and pray that we may know him, and that, rebel in his righteousness and his strength, endued with his power from on high, we may stand among those "people who do know their God," and like them "be strong and do exploits."—Armory.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

PREPARED BY PROF. HERBERT SCHOLZ, A. B.

LESSON VI. FEB. 5, 1893.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Ps. 122:1.

TIME. B. C. 515, in the month of February.

PLACE. Jerusalem and the newly built temple.

PROPHETS.—Haggai and Zechariah.

INTRODUCTION.

The foundation of the temple had been laid and the altar set up in the autumn of 536, B. C. This was done amid great rejoicing, but soon afterwards, the Samaritans living round about Judea, grew jealous of the work, because the leaders of the Jews would not allow them to help in rebuilding the temple, and they did everything possible for them to do in retarding its progress. For 14 long years, the work was delayed; then at the call of Haggai and Zechariah the Jews again went to work, and in exactly four years from the time of our last Sunday's lesson the temple was completed. It was built on the same spot that Solomon's temple occupied; which was the summit of Mt. Moriah. The place where it stood was in the shape of a quadrangle, and contained about 12 acres. This was not more than two-thirds the space which Herod's temple occupied in the time of Christ. The structure of this temple was 60 cubits high, and 60 wide, while the temple of Solomon was only 30 high, and 40 wide. It was, however, much inferior to Solomon's in costly treasures, and beautiful furniture. The ark, the cherubs, the tables of stone, the vase of manna, and Aaron's rod were gone. The golden shields had vanished, and the costly raiment of the high priests. And yet it was a magnificent structure. God had promised to fill this house with glory, and the later glory should be greater than the former.

LESSON TEXT, EZRA. 6:14-22

14 And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes, king of Persia.

15. And this house was finished on the third day of the month Ada, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16. And the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy.

17. And offered at the dedication of this house of God a hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin offering for all Israel, twelve he goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18. And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses.

19. And the children of the captivity kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20. For the priests and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21. And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat,

22. And kept the feast of unleavened bread, seven days with joy; for the Lord had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

EXPLANATORY.

I. Rebuilding the Temple.

Verse 14. It took a vast amount of faith in God for those Jews to contend with their enemies, and overcome all obstacles. They built it, however and prospered in the building. Nowhere do we see the hand of Jehovah more clearly in human work than in this instance. What a sublime spectacle, to behold a little band of God's chosen people, in the midst of a world of heathen peoples, bravely struggling onward to uprear one solitary but magnificent house to the glory of the God of all the world.

II. The Dedication, verse 15-18.

The temple was finished in 20 years from the time of laying its foundation and setting up its altar. They kept the dedication with joy. Let us imagine ourselves the children of a nation that has been overthrown and carried away into strange lands, among the worshippers of strange gods. The memories of home with all its endearments would ever be making us sad, and causing us to yearn for the land of our birth and freedom. Then imagine that we had been permitted to return to our native land, had found every thing in ruins; had struggled for long years to rebuild and establish again the old-time house of worship, where all our early ideas of God and heaven were received, and we at last had completed it. Then, as we gathered ourselves together there, as the sweet strains of the old religious songs swelled the house with melody, and the religious experiences were exchanged, and the spirit of God began to fill our hearts, do you not suppose that we would be joyful? Such was the case with these Jews, and yet how much did the sacrifices lack in numbers, compared with the dedication in Solomon's time. On this occasion they offered 712 animals; on Solomon's dedication, they offered 142,000 animals. And yet they did the best they could. Here were gathered only a few thousand; on the other occasion, all Israel was present. Alas, how destructive are the powers of sin.

III. The Feast of the Passover. 19-22.

The feast was kept with the original ceremonies. It occurred at the same time of the year that we celebrate our Easter. It was held in memory of the night when the destroying angel passed over the land of Egypt and slew the first-born of that benighted people. The priests and Levites went through a ceremony typifying purity, and then killed the passover for the people. This passover must have called up many historical facts to the Jews. They so lately returned from captivity could appreciate by experience the situation of their ancestors when this great feast was established. They knew what it was to be in captivity, they also knew how blessed was freedom and the right to worship their God without oppression from the heathen.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

Great reforms are slow,—it took twenty years to rebuild the temple. God's house should always be finer than our own.

Adversity always makes prosperity more joyful.

God's priests should always keep themselves pure.

We should keep the observances which God has commanded us to teach.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Berea, (Nansemond.)

My relation with this church covering only the last three months, has been one of the most pleasant of my ministry. I have never found more sympathy and encouragement from any church than from Berea. This greatly lightens the burden of a pastor and stimulates him to do more and better work. They are willing to do a good part by their pastor and they expect him to do a good part by them. This they have a right to expect and demand when they appreciate his efforts and lend him a helping hand. I hear on every side kind and tender expressions of their appreciation of the good work done by Bro. M. L. Hurley, the former pastor. Bro. Hurley served this church six years, and it was during this time that they built the handsomest church in the Southern Convention. His labor here will never be forgotten within the memory of the members now living. He has the heart-felt sympathy and earnest prayer of this people in his sad affliction.

This church has lost one third its strength within the past two or three years by its members moving out of the community. Most of them, however, have gone to Norfolk and are doing a good work there. Notwithstanding their loss, the church assumes the same financial responsibility as in former years, and I hear no word of complaint. The church has a very interesting Sunday school conducted by Capt. T. R. Gaskins, who doesn't stand alone in this work, but is ably assisted by some excellent lady workers. It also has an interesting Missionary Society, by which the conference assessments are raised. This meets quarterly.

On the evening of the 26th, the Sunday school gave a free entertainment and the Ladies Society furnished a supper in the hall. The entertainment was a success beyond expectations. All did well. The second most interesting feature of the evening was the breaking of the mission jugs and the presentation of prizes to the two-girl and boy collecting the largest amount. They were awarded to Addie Everett and Rice Ames. The most interesting feature, however, was the presentation, through Prof. J. O. Atkinson, to the superintendent of a handsome silver shaving mug. This was given by the Sunday school as a token of their appreciation of his faithful service. The entertainment being ended we all repaired to the hall and sat down to one of the most richly laden tables I have ever seen. It was a table that would do credit to any community or occasion, and these people know exactly how to make one enjoy a supper, i. e., have it between 9 and 10 o'clock. I don't say the crowd was exceedingly hungry, but they certainly did eat like they were. Upon the whole it was a most enjoyable affair, and the proceeds were over $100.00.

The first quarter meeting of the year was held on Saturday Jan. 7th. The pastor's salary for the quarter was paid in full. The conference voted to make Rev. S. S. Barrett of Berkley a present of $5.00, which was forwarded to Bro. Barrett at once through my hands. This was in addition to any call from the conference, and simply an expression of their sympathy for aged brother in his affliction. Can't some other church do likewise?

Holland Items.

News is very scarce and of little interest—items few and far between. I have married one couple only during Christmas. Mr. Chas. E. Jernigan and Miss Sallie B. Pearce, and they at the officiating persons house. I was invited to marry a second couple and went to the appointed place, but the intended bride had decided against a wedded life, and the expected marriage proved to be a failure.

It has been very cold, and more snow has fallen this winter than I have ever seen before and business of all kinds except making fires and taking our regular meals, has been suspended. Some have enjoyed the snow whilst others did not express much pleasure or satisfaction at its continued and persistent coming and staying. Sleighing has been quite fashionable and sleighs have been numerous and well used by many of the young, and some of the older persons.

Our feast held at the Alliance Hall Jan. 9th, was a success, notwithstanding the very inclement weather and the dark night. The crowd was not as large as it would have been under more favorable circumstances, but it was liberal and all seemed to enjoy the occasion very much.

The congregation at the Christian church notwithstanding the deep snow and cold weather, yesterday, was much better than we expected. I think there was some over 40 besides the preacher, Brother Demarest, who filled his appointment as usual.

R. H. HOLLAND.

Alabama Letter.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—As I have not seen anything in your columns from Alabama since the new year came in, I thought I would write.

The first Sunday in Jan found us with the church at Pleasant Grove, this church seems to be doing very well. We were greeted by very good congregations, notwithstanding the weather was bad.

On the second Sabbath we met with Antioch church. I think there are some signs of improvement with this church, the brethren say "we're going to put a stove in our house of worship." What could be more comfortable this cold weather.

The third Sunday was our day at Beulah. Rev. J. D. Elder was with us at this point, and on Sunday, after preaching by Bro. E, he assisted us in the ordination of Bro. C. W. Carter to office of Deacon; may the Good Lord help him, and his companion to live in humble discharge of every duty.

The Old Year with its sorrow sickness, pain and death, with its joys and happiness is forever gone. Here is another page written in our history. It may be good, or it may be evil but one thing we should remember, that we must give an account of our labors to God, and be rewarded according to our works.

Brethren, there is a great deal depending upon us as a church the present year, in regard to our future success as a denomination, let us "forget the things of the past, and reach forward to the things of the future," believing that God will grant us greater blessings this year than in the past.

No one ever shoots above the mark, but if we aim high we can shoot high, so if we expect God to bless us. Let us prove ourselves worthy, and the task is almost complete. Nothing more at this time. I remain your Bro. praying for the success of the Master's cause.

GEO. D. HUNT.

Milltown, Ala., Jan. 21, 1893.

Ivor, Va.

DEAR SUN:—I owe you an apology for waiting so long before reporting an item from my field. Since the last session of our Annual Conference I have moved my family to our new home near Ivor and have been in quite an unsettled way ever since; hence I have done but little pastoral work since and found scarcely an opportunity for writing field or other items. We are now partially settled and hope soon to be able to resume regular work.

Having more work than I could well care for, I resigned my charge at Union (Surry) two weeks ago and Rev. J. W. Barrett has been called to that charge. He has accepted and filled his first appointment there yesterday. I have served this charge for about eight years, and shall ever entertain fond memories of my association with this dear people in work for Christ, and their hospitality to me. May the Lord bless them and their new pastor, and make them abundantly useful in winning souls to Christ. Last 4th Sunday I filled my appointment to preach at Ivor. The congregation was very good and attentive to the word. In the afternoon I went to Waverly where I found Judge West and wife, Mrs. H. I. Mallory, and a host of children, assembled at the Christian church, rehearsing for a Sunday school Christmas service to be held Monday night. Monday was spent at the church assisting the faithful Supt. and ladies in arranging for the exercises at night. At half past seven o'clock p. m. the exercises began. The house was filled to its greatest capacity, even to the standing room along the aisles. The house decorations were the most beautiful, the recitations excellent and the music good. The entire program and decorations were arranged and directed by Judge J. P. West, the popular and successful Supt. assisted by his excellent wife. Miss Gussie Baird presided at the organ and did her part well. Mrs. H. L. Mallory assisted Judge West and wife in training the children in their recitations. Miss Annie West, Bro. R. T. Harris and wife, Prof. J. M. Cox and wife, and perhaps others, whose names I do not now recall, rendered assistance in making the occasion interesting. The gifts to the school were of a fine selection. The Supt. was presented a handsome piece of silverware. The exercises reflected great credit on the Supt. and those who took part. The school now has the largest enrollment of any school in town. The writer was kindly remembered. Dr. T. E. Baird, Supt. of the Ivor Christian Sunday school has moved to Windsor, Va., where he will engage in professional duties. He resigned the superintendence of his school and Bro. G. W. Brittle was elected to fill the vacancy, with Bro. J. I. Mumford, assistant. This school held special services Christmas, which I will try and tell you about, next week.

Hastily,

Elon College Not s.

Perhaps the friends of the college are becoming anxious as to our condition. But we are glad to inform them that we are not entirely snowed under. Notwithstanding the weather has been severe we all stood firmly at the post of duty and are now ready to enjoy the gentle rays of the mighty king of day.

Rev. P. T. Klapp has moved his family over the store-room of C. A. Boone, where he will make his dwelling place until his residence shall have been completed. We are glad to welcome anyone who is filled with love for the college, for the advancement of Christian education in our land.

Bro. Clements gave us a flying visit last week. He gives us many words of encouragement. Let the brother come oftener.

Miss Annie Brewer, one of Pittsboro's fairest daughters, is visiting Miss Delia Moring. The above are not the only charming girls at Elon, but we can't talk to the others.

We hear that Bro. Fleming will move here shortly. Is it too good to be true? Come on brother.

A Glee Club has been organized at this place. Judging from the members, especially some, it is bound to be a success. The Club has our best wishes, and I expect it will want some of our money about the 22nd of Feb.

In some of the recitation rooms we have cold (coal) stoves, but they make the room awful hot.

Dr. Herndon has gone to Asheloro to preach another one of his excellent sermons.

The Soph. Class gave us some excellent speeches and essays last night. But they would have been appreciated more, if each hearer had a self-pronouncing dictionary at his disposal.

Well, well, we are well again and hard at work. Who can find a more healthful place than Elon?

Another Bible Class has been organized. They are all doing good work. The good will be felt not only here, but wherever the faithful ones may go. Why not use the Bible as a text book at Elon? Any one may answer the question.

The young people seem to feel the importance of doing work in the Literary Society. Well may they, for the effects will be stamped upon each character just in proportion to the amount of work done.

Any church or school wanting a good bell can save money by corresponding with the SUN office.

Send in your orders for Hymnaries No better church music to be found. For prices, see advertisement on another page.

Mrs. Mollie Upchurch of Aberdeen, N. C., in renewing her subscription to the SUN, speaks kind words for the SUN. Kind words and money are thankfully received at this office.

Be patient a little longer, brethren. We will send you the Annuals just as soon as we can. No one wants them out more than we do. When we see you, and tell you all the facts in the case, you will say, God bless Clements & Mood; for they have done well.

At the request of Bro. Rogers of Texas and several others, we shall commence soon a series of articles on the Principles of the Christian Church, and, if Bro. Hurley does not object, we expect to quote them largely from "The Five Cardinal Principles Defined." For we could write nothing better.

We call your attention to the ad of Encyclopedia Britannica found on page 57. We want to get up a club and send for several sets at one time. In doing so it will lessen the freight on the books and thus make them come cheaper than otherwise. Read carefully and then write us for particulars.

The Suffering of the Poor.

Christ has said we have the poor always with us. And we think they are a great blessing to the world. Not all the poor however; for some of them are among the most wicked people who walk on the earth. But in every city, town, village and country place you will find good, honest poor people who are God given blessings to the world.

Much heavy, dirty work must be done and, if all were rich, no one would be found willing to do it. But the poor take hold of it with a willing mind, cultivating the farm, milking the cows, washing the clothes, cleaning the streets and moving the filth from the slums.

Among this class of workers, you will often find those whose souls are made as pure by God's rich grace as the drifting snows from the mountain top.

If you want to find examples of heroic suffering of which the rich know but little, spend a few months among this class of people. See the unsightly straw bed and, tattered quilts between which they shiver, trying to sleep while the wild winds whistle through the crevices of the old hull of a hut. Listen at the baby's midnight cry, the fruits of cold feet, hands, limbs and face, and hear the mother's faint voice as she hugs her darling closer to her bosom, trying to soothe it to sleep.

God only knows the suffering that has been endured and the prayers of anguish that have gone up to His throne during these severe cold weeks.

But many of these dear ones who are suffering so much are longing for a better home, and soon they will lay their suffering bodies down to suffer no more; and their blood bought spirits will fly away to that home where no chilling winds blow, and hungry ones are unknown.

Are Churches Disposed to Treat the Poor Kindly

There is an idea in the minds of some people that the wealthy churches of the towns and cities want only the high toned, well dressed classes to attend them. There may be a few hypocritical high society butterflies connected with some congregations, whose conduct may give reason for the opinion. But the great mass of worshippers desire the poor to come and take a part in the services. As the following taken from the Missionary Weekly will show:

A prominent Chicago daily recently dressed a number of its reporters in old clothes and sent them around on a Sunday morning to attend the services of a number of the prominent and wealthy churches, with a view to ascertain, in a reliable way, how much of truth there is in the oft repeated slander, that the churches do not welcome the poor when they come to their doors. In every instance the supposed medicant was treated with marked courtesy, shown to a good seat, offered the necessary books with which to participate in the worship, and treated so well in fact that, with all his repertorial self-possession, he was said to suffer no little confusion of face at the part he was playing. It was a novel way to test the churches, and they may congratulate themselves on the outcome of it.

Jonesboro, N. C.

We took a flying trip up to Jonesboro, N. C., last Saturday. Were delighted to meet and spend a little time with many of our friends, among them, Rev. P. T. Way, G. R. Underwood and brethren; J. D. Gunter, Nasa Neal, J. A. Gunter, J. A. Thomas, L. M. Foushee, J. P. Avent, H. A. Hight, and others whose names we do not now recollect.

Bro. Underwood is pushing his church closely.

Bro. Way is making the Home Journal a sprightly paper, and also looking after his church work.

Jonesboro is on the line of gradual improvement all the time. The people are first class. Good churches, good schools, a cotton factory, two lumber factories, a number of stores and many other things of enterprise make the town an important place.

Jonesboro is a beautiful, healthy town. We see no reason why it would not be a good place for capitalists to invest money.

Our visit to Jonesboro was one of much pleasure to us.

Evangelist's Songs of Praise.

From the Argos, (Ind.) Reflector we clip the following brief paragraph:

C. V. Strickland a few days ago was favored with the largest single order for music books he has had since engaging in the business. It was for five hundred copies of his "Evangelist's Songs of Praise," and came from a minister who is engaged in evangelist's work throughout the state of New York. This will attest the popularity of Mr. Strickland's publications.

The book must be good if one man at a single order gets that number. We always knew and said they were worthy of a place in every Sunday school in our church. We have them for sale at this office at 35 cents each, postpaid, or $3.60 per dozen express not prepaid. No. 1 or No. 2 can be furnished.

Little Things We Like.

We like to see love at home.

We like to see people dress neatly.

We like to see people respect old age.

We like to hear people speak kindly.

We like to see children kind to each other.

We like to see people show reverence for God.

We like to see people do by other people as they would have them do unto themselves.

We like to see people go to church and go in the house as soon as they get there and sit quietly down.

THINGS WE DISLIKE.

We dislike to hear men curse.

We dislike to hear unkind words.

We dislike to see ministers put on airs.

We dislike to see ministers go into politics.

We dislike to see men shun responsibilities.

We dislike to see ministers kiss ladies who are no kin to them.

We dislike to see people drink whiskey or intoxicating liquors.

We dislike to see a church employ a minister, and then not pay him.

We dislike to see ministers take the pastoral charge of a church and not attend to it.

An Open Letter.

TO REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D., MILFORD, N. J.

Dear Brother:—I read with interest your sermon on "Sanctification" in the SUN of Jan. 12, 1893. It was deeply interesting and instructive to me, and yet I find myself stopping at some points and asking for more light—how can these things be? I feel that it is wise for me, and just to you, to present my difficulties and so give you an opportunity to further instruct me, and perhaps others.

1. You say absolute perfection can never be reached in this life. I think that is true, but do I understand you to say that sanctification is absolute perfection? I infer that is what you mean, because that is the subject you are discussing, and a line or two further on you say: "Perfection may and will be ultimately reached," and still further on in the discussion you say: "God desired to deliver man from the guilt and power of sin and to make him (man) perfect even as He (God) is perfect" Matt. 5:48. "To accomplish this desirable end He sanctified and sent His only begotten Son into the world to redeem and sanctify man, that is to make him holy" etc. Thus it seems clear to my mind that you use the terms "absolute perfection," "holiness" and "sanctification" as synonymous terms. This being true, I do not see how your position is tenable, for you say that sanctification is to be "cleansed from the uncleanness of sin," and you quote passages of scripture to support this view, as for instance: "Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified." Now Paul wrote that passage to the Corinthian saints, and evidently the sanctification of which he speaks had already taken place, for he says: "Ye are sanctified." Now, in that case, it seems to me the Corinthians had reached sanctification already. Had they, or not? Again Paul prayed the very God of peace to sanctify the Thessalonians wholly," and why? That the whole spirit and soul and body of those saints might be presented blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This work was to be done not partially, but wholly. What work? Why, the making of these saints blameless to be presented unto God through Christ, but you say this can not be till Christ appears and we appear with him—that then our sanctification will be completed and not till then; but can a man be made free from sin and its power, and yet be bound by its fetters and held in a sinful state, disobeying God? You say that Christ came to “free man from the guilt and power of sin, and to make him perfect as He (God) is perfect.” You also say that our sanctification will not be complete till we appear with Christ. When will that be? Manifestly not till the death of the body. See Phil. 3:20,21. That is plainly your meaning, as I see it, and, if so, you have a dilemma on hand, for if sanctification is a blessing for the earthly existence, you have taught us wrong; on the other hand, if it be a work accomplished after death, you make Paul say of the Corinthian saints that they are sanctified—while they are yet in the earthly body. Again, if you hold that sanctification is completed after death, that puts you into the theory of probation after death, and leaves the situation to my mind considerably muddled.

2. Another point in your discussion has perplexed me no little. You emphasize the fact that full sanctification can not be attained in this life, and then you say to sanctify is to “free the creature from the curse of sin and make it fit for holy use.” You say, “now he commences a new life; a life of holiness.” But can an imperfect man live a holy life? And yet if free from sin ought he not to be holy?

3. You take the position that sanctification is not a gift but a growth. Does the Bible any where say “grow in sanctification?” It does say grow in grace. Now grace is the favor of God, while sanctification is the act of God’s grace by which the affections of man are purified and made holy. Then it would hardly do to say that we grow into the acts of God’s grace. It is first grow in grace and then the acts of that grace sanctify man’s affections and so purify his heart and life—for out of the heart are the issues of life. That is not only logic, but scriptural as well, as I see it, but do I see it right?

I love you as a brother and as my former pastor, and I esteem you for your learning and eloquence, and I shall be glad if you can lead me more fully into the light of God’s word on this subject by clearing up these points and difficulties.

Faithfully Yours,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Suffolk Letter.

Our nation has been sadly bereaved in the death of Senator Renna, ex-President Hayes, Justice Lamar, Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, and Bishop Phillips Brooks of Boston. The two named last were in the front rank of the most famous men of the United States. Mr. Blaine in the political and Mr. Brooks in the ecclesiastical realm. Such men are rare and all political and denominational bias should merge into a common sorrow when they pass away from earth. When prejudice dies and time discloses the excellence of learning and character, then society is able to place a fair estimate upon the lives of great men. One thing is re-announced in the death of these men: that we all are mortal. There is no station or condition exempt. Statesmanship, piety and position are no defence against death. The goal of this life should be preparation for eternity. As to the personal spiritual condition of these distinguished departed, that is with God. If human hearts are the same in their experiences, in all stations of society, we may well imagine the domestic heartache in the homes so sorely bereaved of dear ones. Bishop Brooks was one of the most eloquent preachers of this age, and certainly of this country, and was distinguished for his low church ideas, and liberal views in church affairs. His church in Boston where he ministered before his elevation to the Bishopric cost one million dollars. The brief references made in this letter to these distinguished sons of America so recently departed, are meant more especially for young people who do not read the daily papers, and who should know something of the men who lead in our nation. Somebody has said that the “biography of great men is the sum of history,” and if that is true we ought to study biography more than we do. A biographical department in a proper way would not be void of interest and usefulness. Mail time hurries me this morning and my letter must come to a close.

Nothing new or special in this part of Virginia. The hard weather is breaking up under higher temperature and rain and soon the rivers will be cleared of ice, and navigation will be renewed vigorously. One thing can be said thankfully for Suffolk, that during the ten years of my stay here, that not a single month of that time has been so free from sickness as this last month of snow and ice. That I think, was a compensation for hard weather and the suspension of business, and the hindrance to church operations.

W. W. STALEY.

Our Norfolk Letter.

The snow lingers, but much of the frigid state is gone, and we are looking and hoping for much sunshine and lovely weather for February.

The State Convention of the Christian Endeavor people is now in session in this city. It is doubtless doing a good work, and the organization is growing.

Dr. T. Edwin Baird, who was so ill for months last year, has recovered his health and has located at Winsor, Va., for the practice of medicine. He is a Christian man and worthy of a good practice, which I doubt not he will get. He is young and full of life and a good worker both, in his profession and in his church. He is a son of the late Dr. O. H. Baird of Sussex Co., Va., who was so well known to our people in connection with the Sunday school and church work at Spring Hill.

Bro. W. E. Herman, a member of Providence church—his post office is Norfolk, Va.—a few years ago made a trip—4500 miles in length—from the Yellow Stone Park in Montana to the Gulf of Mexico, and he made the trip in a canoe. The natural scenery of the trip was wonderful. Bro. Herman is about completing a series of these scenes for the magic lantern—electric—which he is to use in illustrating a lecture, in which a full account of the trip will be given. Bro. H. is an intelligent Christian man and fully competent to interest any audience on this subject. He is already engaged for Elizabeth city and perhaps other points. I should regard it as a treat to any community to hear his lecture. Those interested may address him at Norfolk, Va. and ascertain terms, etc.

I desire to acknowledge the reception of a card of invitation to the marriage of my friend, Miss Palmetta Beaman, of Damascus church, Gates Co., N. C., to Mr. J. E. Hodges of Cornland, Norfolk Co., Va. While I was editor of the SUN this good lady and her sister, Mrs. Smith, and her excellent mother were strong friends to the paper and often cheered my heart by timely assistance. I extend to the bride and groom my hearty congratulations with best wishes for their happiness and usefulness here, and for their eternal welfare hereafter.

I read with much interest Prof. Atkinson’s letter of last week giving an account of the religious life of Mr. Vatralsky. I feel that it ought to touch every Christian heart and prompt it to renewed zeal in the Master’s cause. How deep and immense is the darkness of idolatry superstition and heathenism.

I rejoiced to see by the letter from Bro. E. A. Moffitt that a church has been organized at Asheboro, N. C., by the indefatigable Dr. Hermon. God bless the new organization and make it a blessing to the cause of Christ.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Now I suppose you will wonder why this picture of a jolly old gentleman is at the head of our page. That is your Uncle Tangle's picture, but it don't look oue bit like him, and so we tell you that you do not make a mistake and think so.

Last week I had the pleasure of a visit from Maud and Minnie Klapp. I wish I could see and get acquainted with every one of the cousins, it would be such jolly fun, don't you think so?

This week we have here Margaret and Julia Etheredge from whom we are glad to hear again; and Bertie and Maggie Wicker who we gladly welcome and give a place in the Corner; and Lillie and Venie Winston are here and a hearty "come in" is given to them also with the hope that they will never have to go without the SUN any more. The money has been turned over to Aunt Myrtle who always seems so glad to get the nickels and dimes, for she knows that they will be used for a good purpose. Send them in and keep the Corner full.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C. Jan 26 1893,
DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write a few lines to the Corner. I am a little girl nine years old, last Monday was my birthday. I go to school to Miss Lillie Mitchell, and to Sunday school also, but I have not been since Christmas owing to the weather. I have three brothers and two sisters, one of my sisters is named Venie and the other Lythrial, and my brothers are named George, James and Hartwell. Please find half a dime for the BAND.

Your little niece,
LILLIE WINSTON.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 26, 1893.
DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I want to join the Children's Corner so I will write. I am a little girl ten years old. I go to Sunday school and to school. I would have enjoyed Christmas if it had not snowed. I wish I could have written before, but we have not been taking the SUN all the time. I read the cousins' letters every week—I love to read them. I will answer the question that was asked last week. Dog was first mentioned in the Bible in Exodus the 11th chapter and 7th verse. I will ask a question: How many times is dog mentioned in the Bible? Please find half a dime for the BAND.

Your loving niece,
VENIE WINSTON.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 27, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I want to enter the BAND. I have earned some money with my own hands and I want to help a little in the BAND. I am a little girl of 8 years. I shall start to school next Monday. There are two schools in our town and two Sunday schools. Uncle Clements is pastor of the Christian church in Youngville. The people like him ever so much. We moved to this town at Christmas and the people are so kind to us we love to stay here very much. I was so sorry to hear of the Berkley church getting burned my brother, W. C. Wicker, served it last summer and he loved it so much that I became attached to it too. May the Lord bless and the people help them to rebuild it again. I will close for this time. Enclosed find half dime for the BAND.

Your loving little niece,
MAGGIE R. WICKER.

YOUNGVILLE, N. C., Jan. 27, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I desire to become a member of the BAND. You may think me a little presumptuous as I have never met you, but I hope soon to see you and your better half. I think I would love her ever so much. The weather has been so bad that I have not started to school yet, but God willing I will start Monday. Uncle P. T. Klapp has moved from our town to Elon College, that makes us feel somewhat lonely. I hope the blessings of God may follow him. I went to prayer meeting last night and passed right by his house and could bear nothing but the rustling of rats. Oh, how lonely! Probably you will be tired of my letter so I will close by asking a question: Where did Peter get the money to pay his and his Master's tax? Find enclosed one-half dime for the BAND.

Your loving niece,
BERTIE C. WICKER.

SELMA, N. C., Jan. 22, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write to the corner, as I have not written in a long time. The snow here is a foot deep and the weather is so bad that I can't go to school, I go to Sunday school, Mrs. Atkinson is my teacher. I am sorry to hear that the Berkley Christian church is burned down. I hope we may do much good in our Corner this year I enjoyed my Christmas so much and hope you and the cousins did also. Santa came to see me Christmas. I hope it will soon be warmer, we have had a snow on the ground ever since Christmas. I have not snow balled any, I have such a bad cold. We had a fog this morning I never saw any thing like it before, the trees were covered in white mist like snow, it was the prettiest sight I ever saw. I will answer D. T. Stephenson's question. Dog is first mentioned in the Bible Ex. 11 c 7 v.

I will close with much love to you, Aunt Tangle and the cousins. I send half dime for the BAND.

Your little niece,
JULIA FULLER ETHEREDGE.

SELMA, N. C., Jan. 21, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write a few lines to the Corner as sister is writing. It was so cold that I could not go to Sunday school this morning I go to school to Prof. Pope, I like him very much, I think we have about fifty pupils. We have had plenty of snow ever since Christmas, for one time I will be very glad when it goes away so I can go to school once more, I haven't been in over a week.

I was very much surprised to hear of your marriage, we would be very glad to have you bring Aunt Tangle down to see us. We also had a very brilliant marriage in our town Christmas.

I have not been sleigh riding or snow balling any yet as it has been so cold, the snow is so deep that you can hardly walk in it.

I enjoyed myself very much Christmas, the M. E. Sunday school had a Christmas party for the pupils, which was very much enjoyed by all. I will answer Willie Staley's and Bessie McCawley's questions. Jacob left his home to go down into Egypt to see Joseph. Joseph was sold into Egypt by his brothers.

I will close with much love to you, Aunt Tangle and the cousins. Enclosed please find one half dime.

Your loving niece,
MARGARET ETHEREDGE.

There are 200 members of the Christian church in Columbus, Ohio. Yet we have there no house of worship or organized church. Let our Home Mission Board take a note of this.

A good revival interest is reported at Forest Home Christian church, Iowa with a number of additions. Also a grand awakening at Shiloh, same state, 19 additions.

Rev. O. I. Hathaway writes, that there is a good revival interest at Charleston Four Corners, N. Y., church of his charge. Eight received to fellowship and 7 baptized. The same pastor reports his annual donation as $150. This is not included in the pastor's salary.

The Maryland Christian church, N. Y., has been thoroughly repaired, remodeled, furnished and recently rededicated. It is now a model house of worship.

Rev. John W. Wright, pastor, reports a blessed work of grace at Willow Brook Christian church, Ohio. Nine were added to the church.

Rev. A. Bauserman has just closed a revival at Antwerp, Ohio. Forty-five were added to the church.

A protracted meeting commenced at Fellowship Christian church, Ohio, Christmas day, which resulted in 40 conversions and renewals. Revs. Menzo Shelton and T. H. Glasscock were the laborers.

Rev. James Moody writes that Mt. Joy Christian church, Sciota Co., Ohio, has been visited by a refreshing shower of grace. It closed with 15 additions.

Brother John Wallace reports a very enjoyable Christmas service in the Mt. Zion Christian church, in Philadelphia, conducted by Revs. John Conrad and E. E. Mitchel.

What has become of our good brother, Rev. D. T. Deans? We have lost sight of him since he left the Valley.

Cannot we hear from Brother Hurley also? Or is he too busy or too feeble to write?

Power of Tenderness.

A circumstance is mentioned by the naturalist, Audubon, and occurring within his knowledge a few years ago, of a certain individual who for many years had led the life of a pirate.

On one occasion, while cruising along the coast of Florida, he landed and was lying in the shade on the bank of a creek, when his attention was arrested by the soft and mournful note of a Zenaida dove. As he listened, each repetition of the melancholy sound seemed to him a voice of pity; it seemed to him like a voice from the past, a message from childhood's innocent and sunny hours; then it appeared like a voice of deep, sad sorrow for him, the far-off wanderer, the self ruined, guilty prodigal; and so thoroughly did it rouse him from his long sleep of sin, that there, on that lonely spot, where no minister of mercy had ever stood, he resolved within himself to renounce his guilty life, return to virtuous society and seek the mercy of God—a resolution which he subsequently fulfilled, as we are assured by the narrator. There is that in the human heart which responds to the voice of gentle pitying love, when all other agencies have lost their power; when all the thunder and lightning of Sinai itself might roll and glitter in vain: Would that there were more, among those disposed to good, who would make full proof of the spirit of kindness, pity and love.

The spirit of Jesus must be the model of our benevolence—New York Evangelist.

Paralytic Paralysis.

Those who are absorbed in one form of work so as to neglect all others, or one reform so as to become embittered against all who are not of the same temper as themselves, or who are so much interested in sanctification as to feel no interest in justification or the promotion of it; these all need reviving. Those brethren who continually speak censoriously of the "church" in prayer-meetings, and in a harsh, unsympathetic tone detail the actions of individual members, even though they profess entire sanctification, need reviving; for Christian perfection never breeds such a spirit, though the profession of it is sometimes accompanied by it. Those brethren who, when disappointed in securing the pastor they wished, vent their spleen upon the one sent especially those who, to prove they were right, will try to prevent his success, and are plainly "in the gall of bitterness," if not altogether "in the bonds of iniquity,"—greatly need to be revived.—New York Advocate.

Died.

Sister James E. Jones passed away quietly at her home near Holy Neck church, Jan. 15, 1893, surrounded by a sorrowing husband, children and friends. Sister Jones had been a consistent member of Holy Neck since her childhood. For a long while she had been gradually yielding to the terror of that dread malady, consumption, but was confined to her bed only a few weeks. She died happy in the love of Him who has been her joy and consolation through health and sickness. Her family are in sore affliction at the loss of such a dutiful, loving mother and true and devoted wife. May God's grace abound to the bereaved and may they all meet again where no sorrow ever comes. Funeral services by the writer.

Suffolk Letter.

Nothing worthy of mention has occurred during the past week, in this vicinity, and this illustrates a great truth in our own lives and in the history of the church. There are silences in every life; times when there are no marked experiences, no radical changes, no signs of progress, no evidences of growth. It was so with Moses: forty years in Midian keeping the sheep of his father-in-law. The middle period of his life was one of obscurity, silence; and yet at the end of that period he began his great work. At the end of that obscure path was the "bush on fire" with the divine presence and "vocal" with the divine voice. So was the life of Jesus at Nazareth a period of silences, obscurities. Very little is known of his life at home with his parents except that he "was subject unto them." His filial obedience is a divine lesson for childhood. But at the end of those eighteen years he entered upon that work that has filled a large portion of the world with his name and doings. Those periods of apparent stagnation are periods of greatest thoughtfulness. They are the pauses in life's sentence that give meaning and emphasis to its activities. A book would be unsatisfactory without periods. Life would soon be a piece of machinery, running, running, monotonously, if weather and booms, and health, kept business and even church work up to the highest mark always. More business and religious failures are made under booms and excitements than at the most quiet periods. Men never know their strength till they reach the reaction, the low point in trade or religion. The church can measure its power in bad weather and hard times. This winter is good schooling. At the end of this period there will come brightness. The country pastor cannot say he has had no time for study. He could do nothing else. These snowbound days and nights have been so quiet that he ought to come out in the spring full of the divine message. So you see there are compensations for silences—inactivities. We are all like those wells which, in long bright months, are always giving but not receiving; they run dry. Then when rain and snow come and activities cease these wells are quietly imperceptibly, replenished. So ought we to be.

Bethel, N. C.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Please allow me space in the SUN to say that Saturday and Sunday, Feb. the 4th, and 5th, was the regular time for preaching at Bethel. The business of the church was attended to on Saturday. Sunday morning the Sabbath school was conducted by Bro J. M. Fitch, the superintendent. We had preaching a few minutes after eleven o'clock; at the close of preaching the Lord's supper was administered.

On Saturday the members and friends met at the church before the time for preaching and did some work on the church yard, which improved the appearance and rendered it more attractive. There is much interest manifested in the church by all.

I desire to return my thanks to Bro. and Sister J. M. Fitch for a nice present given at the right time—when needed.

A Pastor Taken by Surprise by His People.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—In my letter to the SUN of last week I told you I had just moved, and now I want to tell you of something more pleasant than moving. Last Thursday night I heard a rap at my door. In answer to this I opened the door and ladies and gentlemen began to enter till my house was well nigh full, and I noticed as they filed in, each had a package in hand which was deposited on my dining table, till it was loaded with the said packages, meanwhile, I stood near the door and looked on with as much composure as I could. It was the Providence people "pounding their pastor," and they did it well. The donations were many and valuable. It has been a long time since the larder in our home was so full as it was when we got through packing away our many good things they brought to us that night. The gifts ranged from a— to a barrel of flour. Mrs B. and I join in returning thanks to these kind hearted people. May God help me to be more faithful as their pastor.

The World's Fair Once More.

The local directors of the World's Fair, aided and abetted by their natural allies in every part of the land, seem determined to secure a repeal of the Sunday closing act, passed by the present Congress. Whatever persistent impudence can do, they will certainly accomplish. In answer to much of their silly talk we wish to say once more that the civil Sabbath is not an innovation now for the first time sought to be foisted upon the American people. It has from the beginning been a recognized institution in this country; and is guarded and protected with more or less thoroughness by the statutes of every one of our States. The crusade against it is un-American and anti-American. All that we ask of the Federal Congress is not to initiate a policy at war with the whole past history of our legislation. We put in our plea and demand, not as Christians, but as citizens. As Christians, we ask nothing of the Government except to be let alone; but as citizens we claim the right to resist any movement that threatens to break down our civilization. Again, also, we raise our voice in behalf of the laboring classes of the land, to whom a weekly day of rest means more than to anybody else. If the nation should, in its official capacity, become a Sabbath breaker on a large scale, then the way will be opened for the imposition of unending toil upon the struggling poor. In their interest we insist that Congress shall not reverse its action — Christian Advocate.

The Necessity of an Aggressive Spirit in Church Work.

I think it is evident to the observing Christian that the majority of our churches are living much below their possibilities. The churches have a much wider field of work than simply holding their Sunday service and weekly prayer meetings. They have had abundant opportunities to occupy territory in advance of wrong, but they frequently failed to see their opportunity until the forces of evil had strongly entrenched themselves.

I had this fact strongly impressed upon me in visiting one of our enterprising Maine towns. In the words of our modern Western phrase, the town had recently received a "boom." Some capitalists had taken advantage of the magnificent water power and built two woolen factories and a large pulp mill. These industries employed about two hundred young men and half as many young women. The streets of the town gave evidence of the usual neglect incident to "boomers." Every one seemed to be hunting for the concealed dollar. So engrossed were they in their search that they found no time to look at their surroundings. The old "burghers" had evidently been taken by surprise; so much so that they had not yet sufficiently recovered to sweep the dust of passing progress from their front door steps.

In the mean time what were the young people doing that were employed in the mill? Most of these young people were unmarried, and so had no homes of their own. I stopped for dinner at one of the boarding houses where about thirty young men took their meals. As is my custom I entered into conversation. I soon got an expression of opinion from them to the effect that the town was insupportably dull (I had myself arrived at the same conclusion,) using their expression, "there was nothing going on." Some clamored for dances and some for shows. All agreed that nothing could induce them to stay in the town except the fairly good pay they were receiving; some even declared they should stay only a short time longer, and then go home. Did they go to church? No, they did not feel like going to church. They either went boating Sunday or sunned themselves on the front doorsteps of the boarding house.

Here, thought I, is a tremendous power of young energy, waiting for something to do; what can be done with it? The business men were too much engrossed in their business to do anything. What were the churches doing? So far as I could learn they were doing what is ordinarily expected of them to do. Each Sunday they gathered within their walls their usual number of fifty respectable citizens who "needed no repentance" and held their weekly prayer meetings of two dozen women and a few scattering men. Judging from past experience I inferred they would do nothing more until some enterprising servant of the devil had started a gambling saloon or brothel. They will then, no doubt, slowly raise their disheveled heads from their comfortable coverlets, and, rubbing their sleepy eyes, wonder what in the world can be done.

Perhaps then they will do what they should have done before; try to accumulate this young energy and turn it into channels of healthy action. I lay out the following suggestions for work. Let the churches have some rooms that can be open every night in the week. The young people should get accustomed to seeing the doors of the church open and an inviting light within. The churches should have a well organized reading room and a circulating library. The church parlors should be open to frequent socials. Evening classes of various kinds should be started; many a young man and woman would be glad to avail themselves of opportunities for study from which circumstances had debarred them. In fact, let the members attempt every device that will make the church a home for these homeless young men and women. The church members should frequently entertain these young people in their cultured homes. You cannot confine young life in a seven by nine room in the attic of a boarding house. These young people will congregate in places of evil or gather in places of good; which it shall be depends largely on the influence of their surroundings.

Here, then, is a marvelous opportunity for church work, and how few have undertaken it! Such churches as have undertaken this piece of work have met with signal success.

This appeal is not simply to the churches in our "booming" towns, but to all churches. The churches in young growing places have some shadow of an excuse in the general confusion arising from the newness of things; but our city churches have no excuse. They, at least, are acquainted with young life and ought to know its demands; they have watched the ebb and flow of young life for years. They have seen its storms and its calms. Its waves have dashed and broken at their very feet. But, safe within the harbor, how little inquiry have they made as to whither the tide was turning!

Let the churches rouse themselves and do work worthy of their existence!—Morning Star.

Charity Work in Japan.

STORY OF UADA O YUMI SAN.

Like in all the world, there is much poverty in Japan, especially in this city—Tokio—with 1,000,000 inhabitants. We did not notice it so much until about two years ago, when rice went up in price, which increased the number of poor people. I have seen as many as six different lots of beggars, sitting a few together, in the shortspace of about three hundred yards; and it is often the case that we meet them in groups; then all the children expect something, and often one or two will follow us a long way, if we do not give every time.

Now, we do not know all these people's history, nor the reasons of their poverty, but from close observation, it has been thought, in England where there is poverty enough to make the world weep, that drink and want of work are the chief causes of it; and in America, with the rest, pride and bad management in money matters. But here in Japan it is not so much the former reasons, but more of the last mentioned, together with low wages and a proper lack of forethought. It is characteristic of the Japanese to enjoy the present. They are slow to learn that many of to-morrow's duties are depending on to-day. We have had much trouble with some of them on this subject; yet we do not wish you to think there are no exceptions to the rule, for there are some, and it is of one such cases I will write, trusting that it may be the means of opening the hearts and pockets of some of the American ladies, who have hitherto done nothing for foreign missions. There are some people who like to do a little charity work because they may get a better name than they would by giving regularly to a general fund.

O Yumi Uada San lost her mother when she was about fifteen years of age. Her father was not a Christian, but in a good position as regards this life, though like many more of his own countrymen, wasted much that he had, so that in a few years, by the time he had a second wife and a young family, he had become a poor man. O Yumi was put into the Presbyterian mission school, where she became a Christian and a graduate by the time she was twenty-one. Her father had for some time promised her to become the wife of a Christian man in fair condition, so two years ago he took O Yumi as his wife, and the whole family as well, to help support, of which there were six beside his wife. O Yumi and her husband lived alone in a comfortable little home, but the poor husband was killed last November while away from home doing duty as guard on the train. The family were then left in great trouble, so O Yumi gathered all her courage together, went to the head station-master, laid the whole matter before him, and, as it was the rule to help if possible any of their own servants thus killed, he—the master—at once gave her father work at the railway station to carry money to the treasury department, but as he is an older man than they care to have besides a little deaf, his only wages is five yen—about four dollars—a month. It was not long, though, before O Yumi, hearing that I wanted an interpreter, came to me, and I am thankful to say has been a very good one, besides, giving me no trouble at all. We have been giving her as wages six yen a month.

Little by little have I drawn this bit of history from her. She never complained, but on hearing how small her father's wages were, together with her own—about nine United States dollars—I asked her if they had enough to eat. She said, "We have enough rice, but not enough of other things; can only buy fish twice a month, and vegetables occasionally." As there are eight in the family—father, mother, five children, beside O Yumi's own baby—they eat seven yen worth of rice in the month, so that there were only four left to pay rent, buy other food, and clothes. My heart ached. The mission at once raised her wages to seven yen, but still there is much want. Can not some one whose wardrobe is full of dresses that are so long in wearing out, send O Yumi or her baby a little present, because I don't want to lose her from the mission through want of clothing or proper food this winter. Or you may wish to help others; there are a few families that I feel it my duty to help with old clothes when I can; they will take them to pieces and re-make them into Japanese clothes.

Trusting some one will begin to work from to-day, I close with Christian love.

MRS. AMELIA JONES.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

PREPARED BY PROF. HERBERT SCHOLZ, A. B.

LESSON VII FEB. 12.
NEHEMIAS'S PRAYER.—NEH. 1:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Lord be thou my helper.—Ps. 30:10.
TIME.—B. C. 445, Seventy years after last lesson.

PLACE.—Susa or Shushan one of the three capitals of the Persian Empire.

INTRODUCTION.

In our last lesson we were told about the dedication of the temple, and about the gladness and joy of the people because they were permitted once more to worship as they had done of old. But a great change has come over those rejoicing Jews since that time. They had not kept themselves the shining candlestick, which Zechariah had prophesied they should do. They had not adhered strictly to God's commands, but they had mingled very freely with that class of people whom Zerubbabel had refused to allow to build the temple. They had married the women and men of Samaria, had allowed them to introduce their idolatrous forms of worship, and become sadly degraded both spiritually and physically.

In the year 458 B. C., there were two men who arose in Persia and by combining their faculties and what forces they could muster, did a great work toward restoring these fallen Jews in Jerusalem to their former purity. These two men were Ezra and Nehemiah. Ezra was a direct descendant of Hilkiah, the priest, who found the book of the law in the time of Joash. He was a young man in the time of Queen Esther, and heard the terrible decree which Ahasuerus gave against the Jews. When Artaxerxes Longimanus came to the Persian throne, Ezra secured from him a force of 1500 men and $3,000,000 in gold and silver, to fortify Jerusalem, which stood on the route between the Persian capital and Egypt. The Egyptians had rebelled against Persia, and Artaxerxes was anxious to fortify Jerusalem to keep back the Egyptian soldiers. This gave Ezra the opportunity to accomplish his long cherished desire of reforming the Jews at that place. Connected with this enterprise was Nehemiah, the author of the book from which our lesson was taken. Of him we shall learn in to-day's lesson and the lessons following.

LESSON PROPER.

1. The words of Nehemiah the son of Hachabai. And it came to pass in the month of Chisleu, in the twentieth year, as I was in Shushan in the palace.

2. That Hanani, one of my brethren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity and concerning Jerusalem.

3. And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach; the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.

4. And it came to pass, when I heard the words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven.

5. And said, I beseech thee, O Lord God of heaven, the great terrible God, that keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him and observe his commandments;

6. Let thine ear now be attentive, and thine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, day and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and confess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee; both, I and my father's house have sinned.

7. We have done it very corruptly against thee, and have not kept thy commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant, Moses.

8. Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant, Moses, saying, If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations;

9. But if ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them; though there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there.

10. Now these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand.

11. O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive unto the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name; and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day and grant him mercy in the sight of this man. For I was the king's cup-bearer.

Nehemiah was a favorite at the court of Artaxerxes. In the lesson he styles himself cup-bearer. This does not mean simply that he was a mere servant to the king, but that he was one of the king's councillors. Thirteen years elapsed between Ezra's expedition and the events in this lesson. Ezra had in part accomplished his aim, but he needed more help. He had forced the Jews to give up their Samarian wives and children, and this had brought down on him the hatred of that despised sect. They retaliated on the Jews, and often murdered them on the roads outside of the city. Again, the wars between the nations going around Jerusalem depopulated the country, ravaged the fields and made food often very scanty.

1. The Report from Judea. Vers. 1-3.

The messengers came to Nehemiah in the month corresponding to our November, in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, B. C. 445. Josephus tells us that as Nehemiah was walking one day outside the walls of Susa, some strangers, coming to the city, travel-worn, as if by a long journey, were overheard by him, discoursing in his own language, the Hebrew. He went up to them, and introducing himself, found they were from Judah; and one was his own brother. Their conversation led to inquire about Jerusalem, and the distressing situation was made known to Nehemiah. The fact that the walls were broken down was enough to declare the utter helplessness of the city, in case of foreign attack.

II. The Effect of the Report on Nehemiah. Ver. 4.

Suppose we were away from home, and we were to hear that some one had broken into the house, ransacked it completely, broken down the fence all around the place, and killed all our brothers and sisters, would we not feel like Nehemiah, sad and tearful, and would we not like him mourn over the great calamity? Nehemiah heard this sad news, but could do nothing immediately for the relief of his brethren.

III. Nehemiah's Prayer. Vers. 5-11.

We notice in the prayer, that before any request is made a confession of sin is made. The prayer is a beautiful specimen of penitence. Nehemiah acknowledges the faults of himself and his ancestors, and also his brethren contemporary with him. Then he calls upon God to remember his promises to his children. God loves for us to claim his promises, when we comply with his commands. This man was a good man. He felt deeply the humiliation to which his people were subjected, and he clearly understood that it was all on account of their sins. A load of sorrow was upon him for his people, and the words he utters to the Almighty, are the echo of a burdened soul. How this prayer was answered will be seen in our next lesson.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

The leaders in any reform must be actuated by a love for their fellow-man.

We should always take our troubles to God in prayer.

Faith in God's promises brings speedy relief.

A lack of faith in God brings misery and death.

Divine and Human Controversy.

BY T. M. M'WHINNEY, D. D.

Christianity, coming down through the ages of ignorance and superstition, has been burdened with much teaching about which, in this more enlightened age, there is doubt, skepticism, and even downright infidelity. But amid these currents and counter-currents of religious thought there is one truth that seems to defy all honest and intelligent criticism. Amid these rapidly gathering clouds of suspicion there is one Star that flashes out with a brilliancy that is transcendently beautiful. So that the best hearts and brightest minds of this glittering age are less and less concerned about genealogies and theological questions of endless disputation. Strip off the plumage of superstition and the "robe of righteousness" will appear all the more beautiful.

The teaching of Moses may or may not be eclipsed by the light of the "higher criticism," based, as claimed, upon scientific fact. Prophecies may be made to refer to this, that, or the other, owing to the bias of the mind that interprets them. The historic statement of the Chronicles may, in the mind of such men as Dr. Smith, be irreconcilable with the facts as stated by Samuel and the Kings. David's poetical prayers, now of imprecation and now of blessing, owing to his like or dislike, may be adjudged as right or wrong, due largely to the standpoint of the critic. The entire Old Testament, from Genesis to Malachi, may be interpreted as the verbum verbum inspiration of God, or largely paraphrased as human records of current events, attributable mainly to our inclination or disinclination to believe things because others have believed them. Even the discrepancy which some wise and good men have discovered between the "synoptic Gospels" and the Gospel of John, only give the spiritually minded a clearer vision of the superlative glory of Him whose Divine life can never be embellished or even portrayed by writing with pen or printing with type. In Christ only do we reach the point of possible unity and universal progress. Any effort, therefore, at bringing about harmony of opinion touching the infallible status of Moses, the Prophets, the Chronicles, the Psalms, or even the inspired Apostles, must continue the result of "confusion worse confounded." The Divine side of all this endless controversy was settled in the gift of Jesus, who was and is the world ever saw. Nor will the hideous spirit of heresy-hunting ever be relegated to the cradle of its birth, where it was nurtured by the carnivorous jockys of superstition, until this incarnate spirit of universal love be acknowledged as the "beginning and the end, the first and last," of our theology. Nor yet can Christ be comprehended by the reading of a Book, much less by the reading of creeds, confessions, and standards. Such holy conception comes not of observation nor by reading, but by the personal incarnation of the spirit which animated the heart of the redeemer. Christianity is concrete, and not arbitrary; subjective, and not objective. God inspires living men, and not cold pen and type.

No man should feel himself at liberty to go among the disciples of Christ hunting heretics until he is quite sure that he has been inspired by the spirit of Christ, and, when thus inspired, he will be likely to see that heresy-hunting has had its day, has played its cruel part, and may now contribute its share to mutability. It is the spirit of anti-Christ that has provoked this controversy; a controversy, too, that will never be settled until Christian and ministerial fellowship is based upon character, and not upon theology. We must come to regard men in the light of what they are, and not in the light of what they think. The man who shouts for union with a theological club in his band, may be commended for his zeal, but his judgment is greatly a fault.

To insist upon theology is to introduce discord, but to manifest the spirit of Christ is to draw men together by the strong chords of loving fellowship. The kingdom of Christ's love enthroned in the heart is the only one unifying power. Moses, the prophets, David and the rest, together with all sacred books, have done their part well when they have brought us to such ineffable good. At best they were but stepping stones to bring us to such superlative heights. They are but scaffolding to the "building which hath foundation," and if they were all removed the house "whose maker and builder is God," will stand firmer than adamant. We are all agreed as to the corn, but the spirit of heresy-hunting keeps Zion in a perpetual muddle over; the husks. This controversy will never cease until in the spirit of boundless charity, we meet God, who "is in Christ reconciling the world to himself."

The individual, too, is ill at ease with himself until he is brought into harmony with God's spirit of universal good will. Conscience and God are on the same side of this controversy, and there can be no lasting peace until we consent to a complete and unconditional surrender. As this world is a "sweet home" or a "very hell," according to our choosing—as great knowledge or stupid ignorance come of personal choice—so "sweet peace" is vouchsafed only to those who "hath chosen the good part." The shameful "discord in Zion," and the troubled sea of personal discontent, will be changed to the jubilee shout of universal peace when all have consented to "meet God" in Christ, who is the fulfillment of all prophecy and the highest revelation.

"Going Aloft."

OR HOW THE YOUNG FAILOR WAS PROMOTED.

One evening, not long since, a number of us, old ship masters, met at a social supper and after the cloth was removed we commenced spinning yarns. Among our number was Captain Richard Sutter, and a finer man or a better sailor never trod a deck. At length it came his turn to tell a story, or, what we preferred—and what the rest of us had done—relate some incident or event in his own life.

"Well, boys," he said, as he rejected the bottle of wine, which was at that moment passed to him for the first time, "I will give you a bit of the early part of my ocean life, and it is a very important bit, too, for upon it the whole of my subsequent manhood has been built."

We prepared to listen to Captain Sutter with most perfect attention for he was not only an old seaman, but one of the most successful commanders in our mercantile marine. His story was as follows:

"I was a very young man when I first entered upon shipboard, and at the age of fourteen I considered myself quite a sailor.—When I was eighteen I was shipped on board an East Indiaman for a long voyage. There were six of us on board of about the same age, and we had about the same duties to perform. The ship—the old 'Lady Dunlap'—was a large one, and our crew was large in proportion, there being fifty-two, all told. We 'boys,' as we were called, messed together, and in all other respects were separate from the rest of the crew, just as much as the officers are. Our captain was a noble-hearted, honorable man, kind and generous, but very strict. Of course we youngsters found plenty of occasion to find fault with him, and very often were in decisions arraigned before our mess and decidedly condemned. In fact, we should have reversed many of his judgments if we had had the power; but as he was the commander and we only foremost hands—and boys at that—he had his own way, and the luminous decisions we came to were consequently of no avail, and lost to the world.

"Now we boys had learned, in the course of our travels, to drink our grog as well as any sailors. We could toss off a glass of rum and water with as much grace as any one, and we claimed the right to do so, and not only as a privilege, but as an honor to which a life upon the ocean entitled us. But even in this respect our captain pretended to differ from us. When we could get on shore we would invariably indulge in our cups, and not unfrequently would we come off, or be brought off, in a state anything but sober. I said 'we,' but there was one of our number who could not be induced to touch a drop of anything intoxicating. His name was Jack Small, and he belonged to one of the towns of New Jersey.

"Now Jack Small not only refrained entirely from drinking himself, but he used sometimes to ask us to let the stuff alone.—He gave the job up, however, for we made such sport of him that he was glad to let us alone. But our captain had sharp eyes, and it was not long before he began to show Jack Small favors which he did not show to us. He would often take Jack ashore with him to spend the night, and such things as that, while we were kept on board the ship. Of course this created a sort of envy on our part, and it ended in a sort of ill-will towards poor Jack.

"Now, in truth, Jack was one of the best fellows in the world. He was kind, obliging and honest, always ready to lend a helping hand in case of distress, and as true a friend as ever lived—only he wouldn't drink with us, that was all. No, that wasn't all. He learned faster than we did—he was a better sailor and had learned more of navigation. But this we tried to lay to the captain's paying him the most attention, though we knew better at the time, for we had the privilege of learning just as much as we had a mind to. The truth of the matter was, we five loved the idea of being 'old salts' better than we did anything else, and we spent more time in watching for opportunities to have a spree than we did in learning to perfect ourselves in the profession we had chosen.

"It even got so at length, that Jack Small was called upon to take the deck sometimes, when the officers were busy, and he used to work out the reckoning at noon as regularly as did the captain. Yet Jack was in our mess; and he was a constant eyesore. We saw that he was reaching rapidly ahead of us in every useful particular, and yet we wouldn't open our eyes. We were envious of his good fortune, as we called it, and used to seize every opportunity to tease and run him. But he never got angry in return. He sometimes would laugh at us, and at others he would so feelingly chide us that we would remain silent for a while.

"At length the idea entered our heads that Jack should drink with us. We talked the matter over in the mess, when Jack was absent, and we mutually pledged each other that we would make him drink at the first opportunity. After this determination was taken, we treated Jack more kindly, and he was happier than he had been for some time. Once more we laughed and joked with him in the mess, and he in return helped us in our navigation. We were on our homeward bound passage, by the way of Brazil, and our ship stopped at Rio Janeiro, where we were to remain a week or so. One pleasant morning we six youngsters received permission to go on shore and spend the whole day; and accordingly we rigged up in our best togs and were carried to landing.—British Workman.

Religious Enthusiasm.

In the light of the larger and truer estimate of human faculties and powers that marks the thinking of to day the contempt of enthusiasm which was once regarded as the note of superior intelligence is seen to be the fruit of ignorance and conceit. Genuine enthusiasm does not wax strong in the obscuration of reason and conscience; rather it is found just where the highest intelligence and the clearest moral sense are being converted into action. As thought rises to loftier levels it passes into passionate conviction and seeks to express itself in universal forms in poetry and song, in cries of wonder and rapturous outbursts of love. As the call of duty becomes more imperious it lays its demands upon the whole man, his feelings and affections, his desires and imagination, till the very soul kindles into flame. No thought takes permanent hold of men till it is proclaimed with something of prophetic zeal that owns a divine necessity—"Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." "No virtue is safe that is not enthusiastic." There is, of course, such a thing as irrational and debasing enthusiasm; but it is the counterfeit of the genuine article, the shadow of the real. Now, if this is true, then it will follow that wherever the moral dynamic of enthusiasm is found it ought to be put to the most immediate and wisest use. The impulse should not end with the crowded assembly and the "great occasion;" it ought to go out in widening circles, to revive the drooping courage of lonely workers, to warm the hearts of those who have grown cold and indifferent, to stir the listless to action, and reinvigorate the whole body of the Church.—The Churchman.

A Word For the Preachers.

If your preacher is not quite up to the measure of the stature of your ideal; if he is not so elegant as Robertson, or entertaining as Beecher, or eloquent as Brooks; if he lacks somewhat on the social side, and is a little slow and awkward in making friends, the poorest of all remedies is criticism or censure. For all ordinary ministerial failings an ounce of co-operation is worth a pound of criticism, a gill of sympathy, more than a gallon of censure. Any sincerely pious man of ordinary talents can be made into an efficient, successful pastor by a congregation; and any man, however good and gifted, can be made a failure by the congregation. A congregation may be known by the sort of pastors it makes.—Christian Standard.

The Duty of Forgiveness.

Sometimes we have known two Christians, in whose hearts there was resentment the one toward the other, to kneel around the same sacramental board. We have seen them thus commemorate the loving sacrifice of the Son of God at the same table and from the same cup, and then mingle their voices in repeating the inspired petition: "As we forgive others, so may the Lord forgive us." Do they realize the significance of these words? If so, how dare they utter them without first showing to the world and each other that they have exercised the spirit of forgiveness?—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The Salvation Army.

The work of the Salvation Army for the year throughout the world is reported to be as follows: 2,084 corps, 1,253 in England; 11,056 officers, 4,727 in England; 31 weekly papers and 5 monthly papers in 37 languages, with a circulation of 45,000,000. In the United States the strength of the Army is said to be as follows: 464 corps, 68 outposts, 146 officers, 6 slum posts, 3 rescue homes, and 1 food and shelter depot. Indoor meetings have been held in 500 cities, with attendance of 29,000,000 people. The circulation of The War-Cry is now 70,000.—N. Advocate.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Elon College Notes.

Elon is not so lively as some places we have seen, but the fact is not to be regretted, since the students are not lured away by so many temptations. We can spend our time in peaceful study, while at the same time we find excitement enough to keep our minds vigorous and healthy.

Mr. Wilber McClenney of Va., is visiting his son who is a student at this place.

Prof. H. J. Stockard, who was connected with the school at Graham, gave us a call this week. We are always glad to see the friends and patrons of the College.

Mr. Peter Hughes is building a new residence west of the college.

Mr. A. F. Young has now charge of the Express at this place. He makes us a good agent.

Tennis seems to be the favorite game here. There are four courts on our grounds. We are glad to see the students exercising the physical faculties.

Mr. John T. Moffitt, of Asheboro, N. C., spent last night in our village. W. S. Long, D. D. S., spends a part of his time here. The Dr. does good work.

Mr. S. L. Adam's family has returned from a visit to relatives in Virginia.

The boys are always ready to move pianos, work on the campus or to do anything needed to be done.

Commencement will soon be upon us. Let us make the best possible use of the time from now on, so we will be able to enjoy the vacation.

This leaves every one quietly pursuing his work of preparation for doing greater good in the world.

Respectfully,

ELIJAH MOFFITT.

District Meeting.

Dear Brethren of the District No. 2. To-day we had a glorious worship with the church at Christian Light. Every member of this district, lost a gracious treat by not being there I have never seen as much harmony in our district work before. It is true none of our churches were represented by delegation. There were but two ministers of this district present, viz., Rev. J. A. Jones and the writer. We as ministers may think it too bad to turn out on occasions like this, when the ground is miry, and a little icy. Remember, dear brethren, we have a gracious duty to perform. And if the world of sinners is lost we are responsible for it. So we must not stand back, if health permits. If the churches see our delinquency, they will be slow to act. If we preach "rallying to the cause of Christ" to our churches and rally not ourselves, the church will lose confidence in us, and our congregations grow small. What we need to keep up our district work is a plenty of self sacrifice on the part of the ministry and delegated laity. On Saturday of our meeting all the various subjects of the program were discussed to the satisfaction of all. On Sunday we met in Sunday school mass meeting, and had good speeches from both Methodist and Baptist.

After a ten minutes intermission the writer preached to an attentive and lovely congregation. May God ever extend his blessing to that dear people.

We will (if the Lord permits) meet with the church at Pleasant Union, Harnett county, the 5th Sunday and Saturday before in April 1893. We do hope all the churches will be represented. "Bro. Ministers," you are invited too.

Rev. C. V. Strickland, says his meeting at Huntington, Ind., resulted in 10 valuable accession to the church.

Rev. J. T. Phillips of Granville, Ind., has just closed a pentecostal meeting at Wintergate, Ind., with 35 conversions and 24 additions.

Rev. P. Winebrenner gives an account of a good work of grace at Sparta, Ind. Eight were added to the church. He also says Rev. J. J. Copeland has been blessed in his labors at Broadway Christian church. Good revival interest and 9 additions.

The Powers, Ind., Christian church, which had the misfortune to have their beautiful house of worship with all its furniture burned about one year ago, has built a new and more beautiful house in its place. It was recently dedicated free of debt.

Rev. E. Cameron assisted by Rev. Peter Bushong recently closed a meeting of days at Lincoln, Kansas. Result 3 additions.

Eleven precious souls were added to Charity Chapel church, Ohio, as the result of a protracted effort. So says, Rev. J. B. Fenner.

Correspondents from almost every point north, east and west, report an unusually severe winter.

The talented and popular minister, Rev. W. B. Flanders, who has just accepted the pastorate of the Christian church in Brooklyn, N. Y., is under 30 years of age. He graduated at Dartmouth College. He has met with good success in his two former pastorates, York, Maine, and Salisbury Point, Massachusetts.

At the dedicatory exercises of the Worlds Fair buildings, at Chicago, all the 120,000 persons present arose to honor and welcome Vice President Morton, as the representative head of the Nation except two. The two that did not rise, and by the act grossly dishonored our Nation was Cardinal Gibbons and Alegate Satolli. "Straws show which way the wind blows."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Rev. W. H. Raach gave us a pleasant call last week, come again.

Elon Monthly for January is on our table. The subject matter is good. Send one dollar to the business manager, and receive a copy for twelve months.

In this issue we commence an article with the caption, "GOING ALOFT." It will be continued in two more issues. We hope every reader of the SUN, and especially every young man will read it

We are in receipt of the February Musical Record, published by Oliver Ditson and Co., Boston, which is only $1.00 per year. This number contains, beside the latest information and facts in the musical world, three nice musical selection.

The Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., of the Union Christian church, arrived home after a three week's stay in New York state where he has been conducting a revival service. While away he received a subscription of $1000 for the Norfolk church his congregation there intend building.

Rev. P. H. Fleming has completed his course in the Biblical Correspondence College. His certificate shows that he took a high stand which might have been expected of any one of the pluck and energy of Bro. Fleming. He has no idea of moving to Elon College as has been reported.

The Musical Messenger, for February, with Anthem Supplement, is a gem in that class of publications. It is $1.00 per year or 15 cents a copy. Fillmore Bros., Publishers No. 141 West Sixth St., Cincinnati, O. Among other very interesting and instructive things in the Table of Contents we notice—Transposition: Its Use and Importance; How to Teach the Piano-forte to Beginners; A Favorite Hymn, etc., two pieces of vocal music; four instrumental, and two anthems.

The card party in the private parlor may be but a harmless evening diversion to the young lady who gives it, an innocent refuge for the emptiness and stupidity which can not converse because it will not take the trouble to think, but to some of her guests be fatal food for a passion which grows to an insatiety not second to the appetite for strong drink, and which its victim will gratify at any cost. The whole interest of the game of cards, in the parlor or the saloon, turns upon the chance involved, whether it be the mere delight of winning or the more substantial stake, and what essential difference is there between playing for five dollars in a saloon and playing in the parlor for the prize bought with five dollars? Do you say a difference in the demoralizing surroundings? But the passion acquired and encouraged in the one place has led many a young man to the other.—Golden Rule.

On our need of an Omniscient Judge the Christian at Work fitly remarks: "All human forms of justice are sadly imperfect—and let us add, unjust. A distinguished Judge of the Supreme Court once said that he had never passed sentence upon any criminal without a sense of inflicting wrong; and this because he had the feeling that if he had been cursed with the culprit's inheritance of evil tendencies, or his environment of wicked associations, or with the example and influence of his vile parents and companions, or his lack of righteous opportunity and aspiration, he (the Judge) would probably have been in that culprit's place acting as a criminal against human law and a sinner against God. It requires absolute omniscience to mete out unimpeachable justice. After having done the best we can we need the consoling conviction that an all-knowing God understands just why we have not been able to do better."

Manhood.

Perhaps no two would agree on the exact constituents of manhood. Each individual is inclined to magnify the importance of the element predominant in himself, losing sight of the composite nature of manhood. Ask the athlete, and he will say physical strength. Ask the aesthetic, and he will say beauty or a knowledge of the beautiful. Ask the warrior, and he will say bravery. Ask the artist, and he will say skill. Ask the stoic, and he will say indifference to human ills. Ask the student, and he will say mental power. But not so. A man may possess either or all of these, and yet be destitute of true manhood. These may be either parts of a whole or even nonessential features. By bravery and recklessness a man may distinguish himself upon the battle field, and yet be lacking in those principles of justice and humanity essential to the preservation of society (Great beauty and personal attractiveness may conceal a heart stained with iniquity. The Indian may not utter a groan beneath the surgeon's knife, nor tremble on the scaffold steps, yet his tongue is ready for the most malicious slander and his hands for the most inhuman crime. A man may be an intellectual giant, and yet moral dwarf and therefore a failure in the world. The persecutors and oppressors of the past have been at times, men of great intellectual power.

Manhood is a composition of the most complex kind. It is a structure in which all the parts being fitly joined together constitute a complete and perfect whole; but let one be omitted, and the beauty is marred and its usefulness destroyed. True manhood is to sustain a proper relationship to environment. Life is a contest between the true and the false. In history, in service, in art, in morality, and in religion, the only question is between the true and the false. The world of mind recognizes only truth and error; whether designated by the terms the true and the false, or the right and the wrong, or the good and the bad, the mind sees only the distinction between two opposites always remaining the same. The power to discriminate between these opposing factions and the courage to stand by the right is the highest type of manhood

Manhood is neither a gift from the creator nor an acquisition of man, yet both enter into it. The foundation elements are given, on which man must rear his own structure. This can be done only by the most careful and rigid discipline the subduing of self. "He that ruleth his own spirit is better than he that taketh a city" and yet this is the last height of excellence to which man ever attains. The man who would stain his lips with an oath, or would wrong any human soul doesn't possess true manhood. The man who vents his anger with bitter curses, resents insults with blows, only yields to the impulse of a depraved nature. He does the easiest thing he can do. The man who refrains does so by a great struggle. He quells an insurrection within. Resisting temptation, enduring wrong with forbearance, suffering for the good of others, enduring persecution for the cause of Christ, being reviled and reviling not again, this is manhood.

Liberality.

Liberality is no new word. It has come down through the ages. All have heard it. Have you not? yes, many have heard it until they almost hate it, but some hear it with gladness; for they know it is a good old word used in the Bible. They know Paul gave directions to lay by something on the first day of the week as the Lord had prospered them so there should be no lack at his coming, and for fear that they might think that he wanted their money himself, he said to them that those whom they might recommend should carry up their liberality. So you see Paul thought liberality was a good word.

The liberal soul shall be made fat. Not in flesh, and possibly not in this world's goods, but in the enjoyment of grace, which brings great comfort to the soul. The nicest thing on earth is a man with a large, generous fat soul in him.

Do not be afraid of the word liberality, but love it, cherish it and practice it. Will you?

Graham, N. C.

We had the pleasure the first Sunday in this month of running up to Graham N. C., and meeting Rev. P. H. Fleming and his congregation at New Providence. Bro. Fleming is greatly beloved by his churches, and is doing a fine work.

It was interesting indeed to witness the reception of Virginus Crawford, a deaf mute, into the church. He is an excellent young man.

We spent a few hours in the homes of Bro. Fleming and Bro. J. D. Kernodle, and we don't know when we have enjoyed a few hours better. We also had the very great pleasure of shaking the hands of many of our dear friends. Among them J. W. Harlen and wife, J. M. Turner and wife, Bro. Andrews and wife, Bro. Nelson, Sister Holt, J. C. Holt of Burlington, and many others whose names we do not recollect.

Quite a number of nice buildings have gone up in Graham since we were last there, signs of improvement is seen in almost every direction.

Sunday night was spent at Elon College. A large number of students were present Monday morning. The work seems to be moving on finely.

A Visit to Christian Chapel.

We spent a day and two nights last week in the neighborhood of Christian Chapel, N. C.

We return thanks to the following brethren while these for favors shown us: Benton Stephens, L. S. Mann, J. B. Davis, W. T. Davis and Thomas Windam.

It gave us pleasure to look into the face of many others whose names have at this moment faded from our memory book.

We picked up a few dollars for the SUN, which cheered us a little. We have thoroughly learned that the most difficult thing to do in printing a paper is to get money enough to keep her going

From Durham.

DEAR SUN:—The weather continues bad and our congregations are yet small, but with pretty good signs of improvement. We have Sabbath school every Sunday since I have been here and services twice every Sunday and prayer meeting every Wednesday night. My membership is small but a few of them are as true as any I ever saw, but some of them are very delicate Sunday, and Wednesday night. But I am going to try to get them in perfect health when the weather gets better than I will tell you about it. As I am now getting my church in tolerable working condition I am going out very soon to look up recruits. For we have quite a number of members here of Christian congregations elsewhere have not united with us. We need all their strength and influence here. Now they are filling rather a nominal relation to the church and we have but a little time to work while it is day; and I want to see them come solid to the front as bold soldiers of the cross. God has a work for you to do come help to do it. We need all your children in the Sabbath school if your family is divided we won't object to have all of them come along with you but we will be generous and take a part. Bring along your families with you to hear me a part of the time then I will excuse to go a part of the time to hear their preacher. All right brethren and sisters, so you will come right up to the work and help us in the time of need.

I took out a petition last Friday and secured a large number of our prominent citizen to ask the Legislature now in session to so amend the laws of N. C. to allow a majority of the legal voters of this as well as all other communities in the state to say whether whiskey shall be sold in the county or not, instead of the county commissioners as we now have it.

The Superior court has been in session here for two weeks and whiskey was doubtless the cause of sending down two to board with Col. W. J. Hicks at Raleigh, one for about 16 years and another about 8 and another sentenced to be hanged in March. Oh! how long will this monster evil be permitted to go sweeping before it so many of the flowers of our land into the whirl pool of degradation and bringing devastation and ruin to so many families and breaking the hearts of so many dear friends. Great God stay this mighty hand.

Notes From Harvard.

They conduct examinations here at Harvard a little different from any place else I have seen. Three hours are allowed to each examination, in full courses, and when those three hours are out you must stop then and there, without another line. Possibly some would be surprised were I to tell them that it costs as much at Harvard to hold her two examinations, one mid year and one final, as it does to pay the entire expenses of an ordinary college. How is this do you ask? I am told that one item of examinations cost $4,000 annually. This amount is paid to proctors, and the rule is to have three proctors to the class and if a student is unable to go to the examination room then the proctor is sent to his room. But possibly some will want to know what the proctors are and what they are for? Answer: They have the general supervision of the class on examination day. But where are the professors do you ask? Well now do you suppose a Prof. here would lower his dignity(?) by even going into the room on examination day? But doesn't the professors in charge give the examinations? I suppose so, indirectly tho through the proctors. He writes out his questions, sends them to the press and each student receives a list of these questions and a blank book and three proctors to watch him while he writes away as he can. He is allowed to carry book of no kind, nor paper to the room. Look then: Questions must be printed for every student, blank books furnished to each one and three proctors to each class must be paid at a dollar an hour each. Not small items those and I am told that they amount to several thousand a year. But in the reckoning of what will be of advantage in any way to Harvard the money question seems to be altogether ignored—or of small importance at least. But she can afford to do so. I heard a gentleman say a few days ago that a wealthy man couldn't die decently around Boston without leaving Harvard some money. And just now as I write this I see from this morning's paper that some fellow here in a suburban town of Boston has just died and in his will is $100,000 to Harvard—and he gave $90,000 some time before he died.

Since I am writing on the money question I am reminded of another fact in this connection. All the indications now are that Harvard will soon be as co-educational in name and appearance as she is already in truth and in spirit. You know instead of throwing open the doors of the University to young ladies they have an "Annex." Now gentle reader knowest thou not what this "annex" really means? If thou dost not know, wouldst thou allow me then the privilege of telling thee? Now that is nothing more than a great brick building right here amongst hundreds of others. Now wouldst thou have me to tell thee who their teachers are? They have the same ones that we fellows, have the same courses, lectures and all. And again bethinkst thou what of their library, reading rooms and the like? They use the same one at the same time and likewise attend the same public lectures that we fellows do. "Well, doubtless my gentle reader would ask, "If you have libraries and lectures in common up there, and ladies and gentlemen of the University and the "Annex" can meet, receive and be received at their own sweet will, what is the sense of a college professor lecturing here in this building to young gentlemen and walking out then the next hour not a hundred yards and delivering the same lecture to young ladies only." Well there is just this difference, away back yonder in the dim and distant past some donations were given to Harvard and the words "for the promotion of education among young men" were incorporated with the gifts. Now since the trustees have come to see things differently it was announced some days ago as official that if an equal amount could now be raised for young ladies then the "annex" could be legally incorporated with the University. This I say was only announced shortly since and do you know the idea seems to be going like "wild fire" and I see it announced that $63,000 of the required amount is already pledged. I heard one of the professors say the other day that it was only a matter of time when the University and annex would all be one, and then the same old lecture would not have to be delivered over in the same day—which now constitutes the chief difference it seems to me.

Well we are "on the other side" of examinations now and we feel better and happier and younger and turn our faces now to another five months hoping that many rich lessons and fragrant truths are yet in store for us.

(Mr. Editor I can't resist saying in parenthesis that, "my partner" has quite aroused from that severe poetical attack and I now entertain great hopes of his complete recovery.)

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Now, this is very nice to have so many good letters in our Corner. But whose letters will be here next week? And how many dimes will Aunt Myrtle have to put in her bank? The little Brinkleys have found time to write again and I am very glad of it, for I do love to get their letters; and not only theirs but all the others too. And Myrtle has come again. Had begun to think she had forgotten or forsaken us. Blanche is a new writer to the Corner from my old home. I remember her well and am glad she has written. Let all write again soon.

Cordially Yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

CORAPEAKE, N. C., Jan 20, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little girl not quite four years old but I come knocking admittance into the Corner. When all my sisters and brothers write I ask mamma to please write a little letter for me. I am trying to learn my letters now and hope to be able to write you myself some time. Please find enclosed 5 cents for the BAND.

Your little niece,
GRACE BRINKLEY.

CORAPEAKE, N. C., Jan. 19, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As it is snowing to-day and I can't go to school I will write to the Corner. I was glad to see so many nice letters last week. I hope they may continue to fill the Corner every week. There has been so much snow and bad weather I have not been to school but three days yet. I spell in dictionary and I enjoy it lots. We have twenty-one in our class.

I am sorry to say our Sunday school has closed for a while, but I hope it will not be very long before it begins again; my teacher gave me a present for being one of the smartest in my class. It was a pocket knife for which I felt very proud. It will encourage me to try to study harder next time. As I am getting sleepy I will have to close with much love to you and Aunt Tangle and the cousins. Enclosed find half dime for the BAND.

Your little nephew,
ALEX BRINKLEY

CORAPEAKE, N. C., Jan. 27, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As all of the others are going to write I will try to do so too. I have been having a cold time lately, but I have enjoyed the snow lots, but am glad to see it melt away now. I never shot a gun before this Christmas. Papa has been letting me try and I felt very proud. There has not been much getting about for the snow. I have been trying to go to school, but the weather keeps so bad I don't know when farmers will be able to do any work it is so wet people can hardly travel along the roads, they are almost impassable, they are so muddy. I hope we will not have to wait so long before we write again. I hope to see many nice letters next week, as it is getting late I will have to say good night to you and all the cousins. Enclosed please find five cents with best wishes to one and all.

Your nephew,
SAMMIE BRINKLEY.

ARGOS IND., Jan. 25, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I thought I would write a letter for the first time to the cousins. I go to Sabbath school every Sunday. Mr. Strickland is our pastor. I am in a class of fourteen of which Mrs. Lydia Hughs is our teacher she is liked by all. I go to school every day, when well, my school is held in the Advent church since our school house burned.

We will soon have a new school house which consists of eight rooms.

I must tell the cousins of our Friday night meeting which is called the Young Peoples Christian Endeavor, of which Miss Katie Bowl is our President. I try to be an active member of this meeting.

My Papa is pastor of three churches. I have one little sister of six years, and who also attends Sabbath school with me. I will try and write often. Enclosed find one dime for the BAND.

I will close hoping that my letter will be accepted as one from the cousins.

Yours truly,
BLANCHE B. RUPE.

CORAPEAKE, N. C., Jan. 27, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Here I come greeting you all once more. It has been a long time since I wrote to you all, but I have not failed reading yours and the cousins letters I enjoyed the last weeks. SUN it had so many nice letters in it. I will tell you all about my Christmas. I went to visit a friend of mine near Dennis, N. C., and had a delightful time she did everything possible for my pleasure she is a sweet girl. But I have not been able to get around much. There being so much snow. I went to a big sugar stew last Tuesday night to my aunt's and I had a nice time. Uncle Tangle I will not fail to say something about my mission when she is getting very old and I think it is best to sell her and get me another one as have not had any luck with her the past year. Our church has organized a Ladies Aid Society and I am a member, but I failed to go the last two appointments on account of bad weather. I send 5 cents for the BAND. Love to the cousins, you and Aunt Tangle.

Your niece,
MATTIE BRINKLEY.

CORAPEAKE, N. C., Jan 15, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I have been silent so long I will try to write to day. I will tell you and the Cousins what a merry Christmas I had. I spent it at my Grandpapa's with all my Aunts, so you may know I had a nice time. I went to the Christmas treat at Parker's church and got a nice bag of confectionaries and an orange. I certainly did enjoy being there and after I come home our Sunday school gave us a treat, so you see I had a nice time. I was glad to see in the SUN how you enjoyed Christmas. I was surprised to hear of your marriage. I too, like cousin Mary thought you were an old man. How I wish I could have helped to get you a present like some of the cousins did, you have been so kind to us children. I wish you a long and happy life with many other congratulations. I too hope that each of us may do more this year than we have ever done before. I was sick yesterday but am better to day. Enclosed find half dime. With love to you and all the cousins.

Your niece,
MINNIE BRINKLEY.

FRANKLIN, VA Jan. 25, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I have been promising myself to write to the Corner for some time, and I will not postpone the fulfillment of my promise any longer. I hope the Cousins have not forgotten me; and I wonder, if Uncle Tangle has? I certainly have not forgotten the BAND, and never shall.

I love to read the CHRISTIAN SUN through, but I always read the Children's Corner, and Elon and Harvard Notes before the remaining contents are noticed.

I will tell about my trip to Berkeley. I went the second day of January, and spent nearly three weeks with my friend, Viola Demarest. I had a very pleasant time indeed. I was glad to avail myself of the opportunity of spending a short while with Rev. S. S. Barrett. He is one of the oldest ministers in the Eastern Va. Christian Conference, but is in good health for an old man. I was also glad to go over to Norfolk, and call on Mrs. Hill. She is devoted to the Christian Church, and a great worker. Mrs. Hill is one of the members of Berkeley Christian Church, which was burned Sunday night before last. I sympathize with them in their great loss, but hope they will persevere, and soon be able to erect another house of worship. I attended a Catholic service for the first time in my life, while I was in Berkeley. I was much struck with the form of service, which soon grew very monotonous.

I do not remember any of the questions asked by the Cousins, and I have no papers here to refer to, so I will close my letter for fear its length will crowd out others more interesting. I remain,

A well wisher for the BAND,
MYRTIE DAUGHTRY.

Christmas.

[A composition by Maud Klapp before Youngsville Female Academy. Dec 21, 1892.]

The year (1892) is nearly gone and Christmas is nearly here, and it makes me glad because we are expecting Uncle Santa Claus to visit us. I will hang up my stocking Christmas eve, hoping it will be filled with good things. It seems that I get up that morning sooner than I do any other. The first thing I do is to go look in my stocking and see what I have. Last Christmas Santa Claus brought me a sleeping doll, a roach-comb, candy, apples, raisins and oranges, but one Christmas, I found a switch in my stocking, and I am afraid he will bring another this Christmas. I hope there will be none on the road he comes this time. I don't care if he comes up through Florida and brings a pocket full of oranges. Jesus was a little baby 1892 years ago, who became the Savior of the world, who calls us little children to come unto Him. A Merry Christmas to you dear teacher and schoolmates and Good bye.

The Mother's Nursery Guide.

"It has seemed to me that some of the babies whom I have known from their birth were made into little tyrants, who gave their mothers no peace by day or night, were started on the down hill road physically, during the first two or three weeks of life." Thus speaks Dr. M. M. Vinton in the February number of The Mother's Nursery Guide, in an article on "Baby's First Month," which contains many practical suggestions for starting babies right—in the matter of feeding, bathing, sleeping, etc. Letters appear in "The Mother's Parliament," and the medical editor answers at length questions as of "Perspiring Head," "Cod Liver Oil," "Bathing as a Preventive of Colds," "Constipation," etc $2 00 a year. Sample copies free on application to the Babyhood Publishing Co., 5 Beekman St., New York.

Norfolk Mission.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees, it was decided to commence the work of erecting a church building; which decision carries with it, the beginning of expenses, and is a reminder to all of us who have subscribed, that the money is now needed to carry forward the work to completion without hinderance.

We desire to call the attention of subscribers, and those who have promised to give when the money should be needed, to the fact that we have no traveling agent to collect subscriptions: we need all the money to go into the building, therefore can not afford to pay traveling expenses, and trust they will not wait to be reminded by any one, or wait until others have furnished the money to put the roof on, as some, (who seem to be in doubt), have proposed to do. We also call attention of our ministers especially to the fact while several have responded to the call for the Christmas offering, many have not yet reported; we trust, if any have failed to give the matter attention, they will do so at once and report as early as practicable. This is the work of our conferences and conventions, and it is to be hoped that no individual represented in those bodies will endeavor to find an excuse for the failure to perform a duty self imposed.

COMMITTEE.

Elon College Notes.

We have to come out through mud and water to greet our friends this time: but just as long as we keep above the surface we shall make a way to greet you all.

Look out for that lovely Valentine next Tuesday. Did you send it?

The little boys have organized a boys department of the Y. M. C. A. They have entered upon the work with their whole heart. Who can tell but powerful and lasting sermons will be preached by those little boys? Brethren pray for the little boys that they may continue in the work, and that they may be bright and shining lights in the world.

The Psiphelian Society will give(?) an oyster supper next Sat. evening, for the benefit of its Society Hall. Come every one who is fond of good oysters.

The Freshman Class certainly did credit to itself and the college, last Friday night. The essays and speeches were good beyond our expectation. But we remember that this is an age of progress and wonders

Rev. Mr. Laine started to his appointment at Mt. Zion Saturday, but was compelled to retreat on account of high water.

Rev. J. W. Rowls preached for the people at Big Falls Sunday. Our young ministers are zealous in the work, they start out, rain or shine Excuse our short greeting, this week. May God be with you all till we meet again.

Very truly,

ELIJAH MOFFITT.

SELECTIONS.

After the Storm.

It was a gloomy looking afternoon, late in November, for the cold rain had been coming down steadily all day, and as the evening approached the wind dashed against the house in a perfect gale, rattling the shutters and driving the rain in great splashes against the window-panes.

Catherine Averill stood looking out, watching the people hurrying by, and although the darkness was gathering without, she still stood tapping her fingers on the window pane.

"A penny for your thoughts, Catherine," said a pleasant voice, and the young girl immediately turned towards the speaker.

"How cosy the room looks, mama; it is so cold and dreary without that I did not think it could look so cheery within."

"Well, dear, draw down the blinds and come and sit on this stool at my feet and tell me your thoughts."

"Please don't have me close the blinds, mama; you know it is a fancy of mine to leave them up so that the light may shine out on belated travelers. I do so hate to pass a dark house. To me there is something almost uncanny about it, and I either feel like creeping by for fear of arousing the skeletons in the closets, or else flying for my life."

She arranged the blinds to suit her own sweet fancy and then seated herself at her mother's feet near the glowing fire in the old fashioned fire place.

"I do not know that my thoughts were worth a penny, mama; they were idle thoughts. I was only wondering how it was with those who did not have a home like ours on such a night as this."

"It is a stormy night! How the wind whistles, or was it some one? Did you hear anything?"

"Nothing but the wind. What a strange fancy, mama. Who would call on such a night; the case would be an urgent one indeed," and the girl shivered and drew closer to her mother.

"I do not know; I thought perhaps"—then in a husky tone she said, "Catherine!"

"What is it mama? How pale you look! What did you think?"

"Catherine, listen to me, for there is something I feel that I must talk to you about to night; something that has been on my mind and heart for years."

"Mama, are you ill; you frighten me dreadfully," and a low moan escaped the girl's lips, as she pressed her face against her mother's knees in an agony of suspense.

"Don't be frightened, child; I am perfectly well, but do not interrupt me. I have come to the place that has stared me in the face for years, and the truth must be told at last." There was a silence of a few moments, broken only by the ticking of the clock and the pattering of the rain.

"Catherine," said her mother in a low tone, "do you remember your brother?"

"I sometimes think I do, mama, and yet my ideas of him are so faint, I fancy they must be mere vagaries of the night."

"You were five years old when"—she hesitated—"when he left us."

"Yes, and I am 18 now. Thirteen years have passed since then, and children do not remember like older people."

"You certainly must recall something; he can not have passed entirely from your memory, when he loved you with all his boyish heart—his little 'kittywinks!'"

"'Kittywinks!'" Catherine started up with a bewildered look, as if aroused suddenly from a deep slumber, and repeated, "'Kittywinks!'" Ah, I seem to recall a dream, a vision of the night, for there are darkness and tears!" She pressed her hands over her pale face and struggled intently to grasp the hitherto forgotten, then arousing herself she said slowly, as though speaking in a trance, "I recall a pleasant room—our dining room: There are five chairs at the table and a half eaten dinner—confusion reigns—some one rushes to the door, and with a loud scream. I follow with outstretched hands, calling, 'Brother! brother!' Ah, he turns and catches me to his breast, and while his burning tears bedew my face, he says, 'Good bye sweet 'kittywinks!'"

"Tears, did you say, Catherine?" and Mrs. Averill sobbed convulsively.

"Yes, mama, tears. I seem to feel them now," and she brushed her cheeks with her hands as she looked in wonder at her mother.

"Do not be anxious, my daughter," Mrs. Averill said, as soon as she could command her voice. "These tears seem to relieve my burdened heart, and quiet will follow. Your memory picture is true to life; it is indelibly engraven on my heart."

After a silence of a few moments she continued. "Hear my story, Catherine, but try not to think too harshly of your mother, although you could not condemn me more than I condemn myself.

"That you may appreciate the circumstances more fully I must begin with the days of my youth, the days when home and friends and love possessed my life. My future was assured, and joy and happiness crowned my days. Among the aspirants for my hand was one of nature's noblemen, a strong, brave, generous son of the sunny south. We loved each other, and on our bridal day the sun never shone on a happier couple. The sorrow that came upon me was wrought out by my own hand, by my own foolishness. It was the fashion with some in those days to have wine with the daily meals, and although your father opposed my following this fashion, I persisted, not knowing that 'at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.' No chain is stronger than its weakest link, and wine touched the weak spot in my husband's armor. Then followed the same old story, the same that has been written of thousands of homes. The demon of drink became stronger than the love for wife and children or for home, and crushed out all care for the opinion of the church and the world. Our money, our position, our friends slipped away, and when your father came to a drunkard's grave, in what should have been the strength of his manhood, I was left with four children in comparative poverty. I had been a petted child and was unfit to cope with the life before me. My pride was crushed and my temper soured until even my own children must have ceased to esteem me. You were a babe when your father died, and Robert, my eldest born, was 11 years of age, while your sisters, Mary and Jeanette, filled the space between your brother and yourself. This house, in which I was born and raised, was left to me by my father, and afforded a shelter for myself and children. I never had much control over Robert, who, in spite of his father's failings, still clung to him and over whose grave he shed more bitter tears than he would have shed over mine. As my income was small, I immediately put him out to work, drove him to it I may say, for boy as he was, he did not understand why he could not go to school as other boys. His companions soon became such as I did approve, but drove him to them by my upbraidings. As the years went on we seemed to get poorer and Robert of less account. He tired of work, would not stick to anything, saying he was not well, and like excuses. Poor boy! I forgot that he was only a boy, and that at a boy's age I was expecting a man's work. It almost breaks my heart whenever I think that at last I drove him from my house, the only shelter he had. I told him again and again that unless he found work he should no longer live with me."

Here Mrs. Averill stopped to wipe away the blinding tears, while Catherine shook with suppressed sobs.

"A day came at last," she continued, "which stands out above all other days in my history; a 'Thanksgiving Day' (?). The house we lived in was only a place to stay; it was not a home, for I never made it such, and of course I had not prepared a feast to commemorate the day. In fact the very day seemed to call forth all that was bitter and wicked in me. What had I to give thanks for? What had the Lord done for me? I saw other children trooping by on their way to church service, neatly dressed, and out from homes of luxury, while mine were crushed by the crime of poverty. I could have shrieked aloud in my frenzy. Robert came in as usual near dinner time, rough and untidy, but with a smile for his little 'kittywinks.' He made some slight remark about the meal before us, and I told him it was better than he deserved; that he was not only eating the bread of idleness, but was taking that which belonged to the children, and I wished he would leave then, never to return! A curious change passed over his face as he said, 'Mother, do you mean it?' I shouted in a perfect rage, I mean every word I say, and the sooner you go the better!' He sprang up from the table with his dinner half eaten, and hurried to the door. Your sisters sat cowering in their chairs, while you half falling from yours, ran after him, holding out your little arms and calling, 'Brother! brother!' He caught you in his arms, almost crushing you in his embrace, and hastily closing the door, left the house. I have never seen him since."

"Oh, mamma, how could you?" and Catherine wept and moaned like her heart would brake, not seeing the frightened look that came over her mother's face.

"Catherine! are you hardening your heart toward your mother? Will you leave me in my desolation and grief?"

Catherine gave one look into her face, and falling on her knees beside her, she melted into tenderness and love. "Oh, mother, forgive," she cried. "What you must have suffered!"

"It grows late," said Mrs. Averill, "let me finish. I thought he would return. I even brushed around his plate and made the table more presentable, but he came not. Then as the days passed into weeks, in my passion I heaped abuse upon his retreating head, being the cause of the agony which now possessed me. The neighbors abused him too for deserting his mother and sisters, little thinking that his mother had driven him away. I wonder how I lived through those years of suffering and anxiety. When Thanksgiving Day came again I half-way hoped some fancy would inspire him to return, and I had his place arranged, but still he came not. Now you know why there is always a plate for your brother on Thanksgiving Day. The second year after he left us your sisters died with scarlet fever, and you and I, my child, were left alone. I never had a happy hour. I never forgot my wandering boy. Dead or alive I knew not, but in the storm and in the sunshine, in the night or at the noonday, I thought of him. In my early life my name had been enrolled on the church register, but I had drifted far away from the church and far from God. Yet He did not forsake me. He gave me a treasure in one of the best of Jaughters, and the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail. Friends seemed to come to us, and a happy home for you. I never attended church, for I felt too wicked, but one night while you were walking with some friends, as I stood at the gate watching for and thinking of Robert, notes of music floated on the still night air, and I heard distinctly the words—

"Where is my wandering boy to-night?" With a shriek of agony I fled to the house, and locking the door of my room I fell upon my knees and cried, "Oh, Lord, have I not suffered enough? give me back my son!" Not that I ever upraided God for my suffering. I knew I had brought it all upon myself. I poured out my whole soul in prayer, and there came upon me such a peace, the peace which passeth all understanding. Don't you recall what seemed to be a 'bright light' on my face when you came in? From that hour, six years ago I have never doubted that Robert would return to me in God's good time."

Catherine kissed her mother's hands and pressed them to her cheeks in loving tenderness.

"And now, Catherine, the storm is over; quiet reins without and peace within. Even the fire is fading into rest. Good-night, my child! Let the sin and suffering of your mother's life be henceforth as a sealed book, but look forward with me to your brother's coming."

The storm was indeed over, and while broken branches showed the traces and the strength of the storm, the glittering icicles soon began to melt beneath the sun of that bright Thanksgiving Day. Catherine assisted her mother in the arrangements for dinner, and while the latter was finishing her toilet, she sat alone in the old dining-room. So intent was she on her own thoughts that she did not see the door as it was gently opened, or see the form which moved across the threshold.

"Kittywinks!" The words were breathed rather than spoken, but Catherine sprang to her feet and gazed with startled eyes at the outstretched arms of the bronzed-faced stranger, but only for a moment, when she reached out her own arms, and with the cry of "Brother! brother!" she was clasped in his fond embrace.

Mrs. Averill's steps were heard approaching, but Catherine hastily intercepted her, and in a voice which thrilled with a note of exultation, she called out, "Mamma—oh, mamma!"

That tone of rapturous joy aroused the mothers heart, and with swift step and face illumined, she passed through the open door and into the arms of her son.—Advocate

"Going Aloft."

OR HOW THE YOUNG SAILOR WAS PROMOTED.

"Now was our chance, and we put our heads together to see how it should be done. Jack's first desire, as soon as he got on shore, was to go up and examine the various things of interest in the city. He wanted to visit the churches and such like places, and to please him we agreed to go him with if he would go and take dinner with us. He agreed to do this at once, and we thought we had him sure. We planned that after dinner was eaten we should have some light sweet wine brought on, and that we would contrive to get rum enough into what he drank to upset him; for nothing on earth would please us more than to get Jack Small drunk, and carry him on board in that shape. Then we fancied that the captain's favoritism would be at an end, and that he would no longer look upon our rival with more preference than ourselves. We had the matter all arranged; and in the meantime we paid Jack all the attention in our power—so much so that he signified a willingness to go anywhere to please us provided we would not go to any bad place.

"Dinner time came, and a most capital dinner we had. We had selected one of the best hotels, for the prices were no higher there than at places of lower repute, and, in fact, not so high, for those low places fleece a sailor most unmercifully. The eatables were despatched with becoming gusto, and then the dishes were removed, and at a sign from me the wine was brought in.

"Ah! what have you here? asked

Jack, betraying some uneasiness at the appearance of the glasses and bottles.

"Only a little new wine," I replied, as carelessly as I could. "Mere juice of the grape."

"But it's wine, nevertheless," pursued he.

"It isn't wine," cried Sam Pratt, who was one of the hardest nuts old Neptune ever cracked.

"No," chimed in Tim Black, another of about the same stamp. "It's only a little simple juice. Come boys, fill up."

"The glasses were accordingly filled, Sam Pratt performing that duty, and he took care that Jack's glass had a good quantity of sweetened rum in it.

"No," said Jack, as the glass was moved towards him; if you are going to commence thus, I will keep your company with water while you remain orderly, but I will not touch wine."

"This was spoken very mildly, and with a kind smile, but yet it was spoken firmly, and we could see that our plan was about being knocked in the head. We urged him to drink with us—only one glass, if no more. We told him how innocent it was, and how happy his social glass would make us; but we could not move him.

"Then let him go!" cried Tim, who had already drunk some. In fact, all of us but Jack had drunk more or less during the forenoon. "Let him go. We don't want the mean fellow with us!"

"That's it," added Sam, with a bitter 'off he goes. If he's too good to drink with his shipmates, we don't want him."

"You misunderstand me," added Jack, in a tone of pain. "I'm not too good to drink with you, in the sense in which you take it. But I do not wish to drink at all."

"Too stringy—that's all," said I, determined to make him drink if I could. But Jack looked at me so reproachfully as I said this that I wished I had not spoken as I did.

"If you wish to enjoy your wine, mess-mates," said Small, at the same time rising from his chair, 'you can do so, but I beg you will excuse me. I will pay my share of the expenses for the dinner.'

"And for your share of the wine," said Tim, 'for we ordered it for you.'

"No," returned Jack, 'I cannot pay for wine—'

"Mean!" cried two or three at a breath.

"No, no, messmates, not mean. I will pay for the whole dinner—for every article you and I have had in the house, save the wine."

"And as he spoke he rang the bell. He asked of the waiter who entered what the bill was for the company, without the wine, and after the amount had been stated, he took out his purse to pay for it, when Sam Pratt who was our acknowledged leader, caught his arm.

"No—not so," said Sam. "You shall not pay for it, for we will not eat at the expense of one who will sneak out of a scrape in this way. We want nothing more to do with you unless you take a glass of wine with us."

"Very well," said Jack; and as he spoke I could see that his lip quivered, and that he dared not speak more.

"He turned towards the door then, but before he reached it, Tim Black ran and caught him, at the same time exclaiming:

"Nay, old boy, you don't go off so. You've commenced and now you got to stick it out."

"This was the signal for us to commence again, and once more we tried to urge Jack to drink the wine; and when we found that urging would not do we commenced to abuse and scoff. We accused him of trying to step over us on board the ship, and of all other bad things of which we could think. For a while the poor fellow seemed inclined to let his anger get the upper hand; but at length he calmed himself, and stepping back to his chair he said:

"Shipmates! listen to me for a moment."

"Silence gave consent, and in a moment more he resumed:

"Since matters have come to this pass, I have resolved to tell what I had meant to keep locked up in my own bosom."

"We had always thought, from Jack's manner, that there was something peculiar connected with his early life, and we were all attention in a moment.—British Workman.

LESSON VIII. FEB 19

REBUILDING THE WALL.—NEHEMIAH. 4:9-23

GOLDEN TEXT.—We made our prayer unto God and set a watch against them.—Neh. 4:9

TIME.—The summer and early autumn of B. C. 444.

PLACE.—Jerusalem and vicinity.

INTRODUCTORY.

We were told in our last lesson how sad Nehemiah was made when he heard that the walls of Jerusalem were broken down, and that the people had degenerated into a very listless condition. We were also told how fervently he prayed to God that there might be some means of reviving the ancient Jewish patriotism presented to him, and also some means by which the walls might be rebuilt. The prayer of Nehemiah was not answered at once. Four months were allowed to pass away before any visible sign of divine assistance presented itself. During these four months, Nehemiah was not on duty as a cup-bearer to the king. It seems that these cup-bearers of the ancient monarchs did their official work by turns, and while one was on duty the others were released to do what was most congenial to their desires. It was while Nehemiah was off duty, that he heard the bad tidings from Jerusalem, and he became so wrought up over the matter, that when he again took his position before his king, the king asked him why he looked so sorrowful and care-stricken. Then Nehemiah became afraid because it was the duty of the king's cup-bearer always to look cheerful; and it was nothing uncommon for a man to be sent to prison for daring to have a sad countenance. But Nehemiah summed up courage sufficient to tell the king of his troubles, and even to ask leave of absence and supplies that he might go and rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. These the king readily granted, giving him also his best wishes, and some passports over his his wide-extended realms to the city of Jerusalem. Nehemiah set out on his Journey which occupied about four months. When he reached Jerusalem, he went out by himself one night to view the ruins. He rode up and down the ancient remains of the wall in order to take in thoroughly the amount of work that would have to be performed. The next day he invited the Jews of Jerusalem to assist him in rebuilding the walls. They responded, and soon the work began. But when the people living in the surrounding country heard this, they began to ridicule them, because the undertaking was so great, and the number of workmen so few. This ridicule not having the desired effect, they began to devise means for stopping the work. They tried to capture Nehemiah by inviting him to a conference some distance from Jerusalem. He would not go. They then tried to scare him, but he was too brave, for that, he felt like he had God on his side. Then Sanballat and Tobiah the leaders of the Samaritans gathered their forces together against the city, for the purpose of putting down the work by force, but Nehemiah was too shrewd for them. He armed part of his men, and set them to watch while the others worked. Some would even work with one hand and hold their swords in the other. Thus under many disadvantages and much opposition the Jews went on with the work, trusting their fate to the mercy of God, and relying on their leader, Nehemiah.

THE LESSON, NEH. 4:9-23.

9. Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.

10. And Judah said, the strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11. And our adversaries said. They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12. And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

13. Therefore set I in the lower places behind the wall, on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

14. And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers and to the rest of the people. Be not ye afraid of them; remember the Lord, which is great and terrible; and fight for your brethren your sons and your daughters, your wives and your houses.

15. And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16. And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the barbegeons, and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17. They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and the other hand held a weapon.

18. For the builders, everyone had his sword girded by his side, and so builded: And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19. And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20. In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us; our God shall fight for us.

21. So we labored in the works and half of them held the spears, from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22. Likewise at the same time, said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labor on the day.

23. So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servant, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, saving that every one put them off for washing.

EXPLANATORY.

I. The opposition Vers 9-12.

Nehemiah and his people prayed to God and watched their enemies. They acted upon the same plan which Christ, centuries afterward admonished his disciples to adopt. "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." "And Judah saith." This expression refers to the Jews who were hostile to the undertaking, and also to the mongrel sect, that sprung from the union of Jews and Samaritans. These looked at the undertaking as being too great for the few who were performing it. And no doubt, the task was very trying. We are told that many of those working on the walls really suffered from a lack of food while they were thus engaged. They could not build walls and look after their family needs at the same time; and provisions were scarce. Their adversaries thought that the well-matured plot which they had made would entirely surprise the Jews, but the few friendly ones living hard by the city informed their brethren of the situation, and saved them from being completely off their guard. God always sends His messengers to those of His people who happen to be in peril. He will not suffer us to be harmed without first notifying us of our danger.

II. The Plan Frustrated. Vers 13-15.

Nehemiah in a very sensible way prepared to give Sanballat and his host a very warm reception. He armed his men, and put them to guard the works. Fore-warned is fore-armed. It is the business of all to shield themselves from danger. They were not to fear the enemy. God would be with them. They probably thought of the Red Sea miracle, and the Assyrian army when the angel slew so many of the Assyrians in one night. They were to have in mind, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, who is it that would not fight for these? This was a timely admonition. What surprise their enemies must have felt when they heard that Nehemiah was ready to receive them. It made them feel little and mean, and also stirred up the spirit of cowardice.

III. The work Proceeds to Completion. Vers. 16-23.

This division of the lesson shows that Nehemiah was quite a skillful leader. He knew how to take advantage of even small opportunities. He did not have many men, but he used what he had to advantage. These people in building the wall with their arms at hand, reminds one of the early settlers of this country, who had to harvest their crops with their arms in sight, lest they should at any time be surprised by Indians. One assertion in particular shows how intent the men were on building the wall. They never took off their clothes except to have them washed. They kept them on, and were on the alert at all times. This reminds us that by constant watchfulness and perseverance, we can build up strong walls of defence around our soul, and thus shut out all those adversaries which are constantly trying to tear us down, and make our future heavenly prospects nothing more than a heap of ruins.

SUGGESTIONS.

Prayer and work must go hand in hand

Prayer and watchfulness must exist together.

He who would overcome must work in accord with God.

The building of the walls is typical of the preserving of the soul.

Perseverance with common sense will bring success.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Graham, N. C.

Our work here is moving on as well as we could expect. The bad weather has hindered us much in our work, but brighter days will come. Last Sabbath was our communion day at New Providence, and we were all glad to have Bro. W. G. Clements, with us. Twenty-one years ago last Sabbath Bro. Clements was ordained an elder in the Christian church. This took place at New Providence. What memories must have clustered around his mind as he stood last Sabbath and proclaimed the glad news of salvation, in the same church where twenty-one years before he was ordained to preach the gospel. The same church, but not the same congregation for many have passed into the beyond. Twenty-one years of labor, toil, and anxiety; twenty-one years of rest, joy, and peace, which come to the faithful; twenty one years nearer death, home, and the great white throne.

Ah! the memories, the memories of one year! What will they be dear reader, when all thy years are ended?

Bro. Clements gave us a good sermon. The congregation was large for the day and the attention good. We are hoping to build here in Graham this year a house of worship. We are much in need of one, and indeed our cause is suffering for the house. I desire all members of New Providence church, and our friends, to aid us in the work of building here. We must have a church near the center of our town. Some of the ladies of our town have gone to work in the interest of a church here, and thus far they are succeeding well. Next Sabbath the 12th, there will be communion at Long's Chapel.

Windsor, Va.

Franklin church. At the earnest solicitation of several of my friends of the town I accepted the pastoral charge of this church, and entered upon my work there 3rd Sunday in November last. I am no stranger to the people of Franklin; for many of the best years of my life were spent there where I have many friends whose preference and kindness has been abundantly shown me. The work to me has already been of a most delightful character, and I feel glad to be honored after an absence of some years, with a call to serve the church in the town which was once my home. The church has some most excellent members, and we pray that it may be greatly blessed this year. About eight miles from Franklin in Southampton Co is the home of my childhood, so whenever I visit same many early and pleasant associations come thick and fast before me. It was upon her soil I first breathed the breath of life, it was there my eyes first saw the light of the world; it was there I first heard the sweet music of Nature which has charmed and thrilled me ever since; and it was there I began my childish talk. I love therefore to live in memory as well as in hope and in imagination.

At my appointment there 3rd Sunday morning and night, in November, my stay was with Bro. Jesse Hareum. He and his splendid wife entertained me in first class order. These dear friends have always been very pleasant and kind. Bro. Hareum his wife and myself were baptized at the same time in Nottaway river by Rev. W. H. Boykin. That to me, was a memorable time, and has since been considered delightfully pleasant. My wife who followed Jesus in this command still follow Him to the end. And may we who then came up out of the water and walked upon the shore of the Nottaway river walk and live in the bliss of eternal glory on the banks of the river of life.

Married in Mt. Carmel church January 26, 1893, by Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Mr. Jos. G. Johnson and Miss Sarah E. Baily. The church was crowded on that occasion with admiring friends. The young couple is decidedly popular and it is the earnest desire of all their friends that their married relation shall be long, prosperous and happy.

Dr Baird a member of the Christian church at Spring Hill has located in Windsor to practice his profession. He is a young man of fine attainments and will doubtless succeed well in his responsible work. He is energetic, hopeful, and studious having many of the main elements of success it is believed he will do well. Apart from this, he is a fine church worker, taking an active part in our church work here especially so in the prayer-meetings. We welcome him in our town, and feel that he will be of great service to us.

Died near Liberty Spring church Jan. 16th, 1893, Sarah C. Byrd in her seventy-sixth year. She was one of the best lady workers in Liberty Spring. We shall miss her pleasant face and active work in the church. She was truly an example of industry and Christian sincerity. Her life was devoted to the good of humanity and to the cause of Christ her Savior. I verily believe she has crossed over the river of death to live with Jesus. She leaves a devoted husband (Bro. Jno. Byrd) and two dear children to weep for her. Weep not dear ones, the parting is sad, but the meeting in heaven will be joyous, will be glorious.

Alabama Letter.

DEAR SUN:—As I have never seen any items direct from our school, suppose I give you a few dots. Prof. Fuquay is having the best work done, that has ever been done in this vicinity, educationally.

We certainly have an interesting school, composed of an intelligent student body, boys and girls, whom I believe will be a blessing to the country, to the home and to the church. I think the students generally are trying to improve every talent God has given them.

Rev. C. M. Dollar came into the schoolroom a few days since, and to the delight of teacher and pupils delivered a strong, practical lecture upon the subject of morality. We are always glad to have Bro. Dollar come to see us; and lecture for us, but just a word please, in behalf of myself and others. Lets have all lecturing early in the morning, or in the afternoon. Let all people everywhere, put an effort to sustain this school by our prayers, and patronage.

The wife of Rev. T. H. Elder is very sick let the prayers of good people go up in her behalf.

The brethren of New Harmony church are preparing to build a new house of worship. Rev. J. W. Elder is their pastor.

To-day was my appointment at Pleasant Grove church, notwithstanding the disagreeable weather we were greeted by a very good congregation. Church work has been somewhat dull since the winter set in. The prospect is brightening some though at present.

What we need is more men, more money, and consecrated churches. We need more preachers, and yet we have some who are doing nothing. "Come out from among the world brethren, and be ye separate from sinners, and God will open up the way for you."

I fully believe there could be a score of Christian churches organized this year if we had the men and means.

You Ala. preachers ought to be reading the SUN, and brethren quit that way you have, of reading the Bible and staying at home so much.

We were indeed sorry to hear that the Berkley church had been burned. May heaven's richest blessings be upon those people.

What is Bro. Hurley's postoffice? [Overland, Va.—Ed.]

May God bless the SUN, its readers, and his cause is my prayer.

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—I pen these few lines before retiring as it is Sunday night and the intense rain prevents my having services at church to-night. The first time we have failed to have services since I came here the 2nd Sunday in December. There is a decided improvement in our Sabbath school work here; also in the regular church work. We have Bible readings at our Wednesday night prayer meetings that is growing quite interesting and I hope will result in good for the cause of the church. We have added 18 members to the church since I have been here and more to follow. I am constantly praying that God may pour out his spirit abundantly upon us in a refreshing season this spring. I ask special prayer of all the brethren and sisters that we may have a gracious revival here during the year and that many souls may be added to the church such as may be saved. We have yet quite a number of members of the Christian church moving in the place and living here have not joined here yet. It is so very rainy can't get out much now to look after my little flock and have them meet me at the church for the last few days.

Feb. 12, 1893.

From Berea, Norfolk Co.

DEAR SUN:—Since my last letter dated Dec. 16th, 1892, we have made but little progress (seemingly) as a church. We did though on Christmas day reorganize our Sabbath school and elect Bro. F. L. Curling a very Godly and active young man of twenty-one summers, superintendent. Bro. R. R. Curling was chosen assistant and Bro. Geo. L. Hanbury, Sec Also Bro. Barrett gave us a grand sermon on the Advent of Christ. Saturday, 4th, inst we held our first quarterly meeting for this year and enjoyed a very pleasant communion service on Sunday, yesterday. The extreme severity of the weather for the past few week has greatly retarded church work and all other business more or less. But, notwithstanding all of these obstacles in the way of business, I find that the genial rays of the literary SUN that rises in Raleigh, N. C., has not failed to penetrate both snow and ice and make their warm comforting appearance down into this region of tide water, Virginia. And may they regardless of circumstances and hindering surroundings continue to shine into our homes to lighten up the pathway of life and encourage us to press on to the goal just beyond.

Yours in Christ,

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

From a private note we learn that the little church at Lexington is progressing fairly well. They have a weekly prayer meeting and Sunday school, with preaching each third Sunday by W. H. Roach.

Last Thursday a very destructive fire occurred in Raleigh destroying a three story ware house and 210 bales of cotton for Latta and Myatt besides damaging two adjoining buildings owned by the same firm, and a livery stable and dwelling house owned by Mr. Frank Stronach. But for the fine work done by the fire company a large portion of the business part of the city would now be in ashes.

Read closely what the committee of the Norfolk Mission says in this issue. The work is to be commenced soon on the building and the money is needed. Will they build or not can now no longer be a question with any.

Mr Moody on his visit to Chicago, determined to enlarge the Women's Department of the Bible Institute at once. Three houses adjoining the present location have been secured and will be ready for occupancy February 6th. Application may be made to Mrs. S. B. Capron, Supt. Women's Dept., of the Bible Institute, 230 La Salle Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

We have on our table the Report of the Board of Directors of the Normal and Industrial school at Greensboro, N. C., for 1892. It is full of interesting information. It shows the school in a healthy condition, and speaks volumes for President McIver and those who have worked with him as educators. Number of students in attendance 198. As a friend to education, we would be glad to see the doors of this school opened to male teachers as well as to females. We are fully of the opinion that those who are to teach in public schools, should be educated in co-educational schools.

It has done and is doing a good work in this important field of investigation. Rev. Dr. Maple, of this place, has been elected to membership in this Institute, on the nomination of the President, Dr. Deems.—Millford (N. J.) Leader.

A Glance at the Possibilities of the Christian Church What She Has Done and What She Will Do.

As to the principles of the Christian church they are not only the equal but as I see it, the superior of those endorsed by any other denomination; because of the fact that we take the Holy Bible both the Old and New Testaments as our only creed which, if carried out effectually obliterates all sectarianism, more fully demonstrated by the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience being granted to all as pertaining to the non-essentials to salvation. This article of our principles is objected to by some. They say that it allows us the privilege of believing any thing that biased judgment or an educated conscience might dictate; they entirely lose sight of the fact that the Bible is our only creed; and therefore, we cannot believe or do any thing that conflicts with its teaching. Hence it only applies to that portion of scripture that is not made positively clear. We will take for instance, baptism, a question that has been controverted since St. Paul's time by the ablest divines; or the final perseverance of the saints, or falling from grace, or the question of sanctification and many others that are no nearer settled now than then. All intelligent conscientious members of any evangelical church who act for themselves have acted from this principle. Hence, when understood cannot be objected to by any. Our superiority asserts its self here. Indorsing as we do the grand principle of union, we say to individuals seeking church membership, if you have repented of your sins and exercised faith in Christ, you may believe a part or all that most evangelical denominations indorse, and be received into and live a consistent member of our church—to illustrate, baptism being one of the controverted questions we admit any or all forms to baptism hence, if you believe in the principles of the Baptist church, you can have immersion as the mode or any other privilege, except close communion, which the Bible does not teach; you can be as good a Methodist, except the government, ours being congregational. In short I would include all evangelical denominations. If what I have said is true our possibilities are greater than that of any other denomination. What has the Christian church done? For more than half a century we seem to have been contented with our, so called, God given principles, thinking that they, within themselves, would insure success, losing sight in a great measure of the fact that their success depended upon brain, muscular and monetary power. Our progress up to that time had necessarily been slow. A few years ago, a few leading men were enabled to see the situation and realized that something more must be done, and inaugurated a new era in our history by agitating a spirit of education and missions, which resulted in the building of Graham College and the Suffolk Collegiate Institute from which institutions emanated our most talented missionaries and leaders of to day. At that time our work was in the country.

Home Missionary Societies were organized and our borders extended, in consequence of which we have to day churches in the cities of Raleigh, Durham, Burlington, and High Point. Considering our number of communicants at the time mentioned above our increase in membership has been equal, at least to that of any other denomination in the South, not being satisfied with the work that was being done, and realizing that proper education, that is education of head, heart and hands, was the one grand controlling power, and seeing the necessity of greater educational facilities, the plan for building Elon College was inaugurated, the success of which proves to be the grandest achievement of the Christian church south since its inauguration. Our people and the public have been inthused with confidence in the success of the Christian church.

With the work above mentioned, the $25,000 church in erection in the city of Suffolk and the flattering prospects of the Norfolk church, coupled with the general missionary assembly work, than which we have nothing more commendable. Last but not least the Union of the church North and South combine to make our work not only hopeful but flattering.

As to the future it will be what we make it. We are to stand by the enterprises of the church. In order to do this we want an educated, consecrated ministry to lead men who think more of the cause than of their salary, also a consecrated laity, not only a consecrated life of piety but a consecrated purse and I can testify to the fact that we have many such, and take this occasion of tendering my thanks as Agent for subscriptions given the College by friends both North and South. Now as our future in a great measure depends upon its success I appeal to those both North and South who have not subscribed to do so at once and to those who have not paid their subscriptions, to please do so at once, as we need your help now. It may not be convenient but it is doubtless possible.

Our Foreign Missionary work claims our attention and should be endorsed by all with payers and money.

W. T. HERNDON.

Suffolk Letter

The addition of Rev. G. D. Black to the editorial staff of "The Herald of Gospel Liberty" ought to meet with universal favor; and, so far as there has been an expression of opinion, such is the fact. He is accurate, lofty, and finished in his productions. He is what one might call a literary artist. But his logic and polish both deal with spiritual truth. I have read nothing from his pen that did not contain the grace of Christian lines and proportions. For one I shall welcome him to the Herald pages. But the first page of the Herald now is the best page of any paper with which I am acquainted. I do not see how that could be improved. It condenses and illumines the current movements of civilized society, and masses facts and statistics into mountains of wealth for busy students. The times are rich in material, I know, but Dr. Watson manifestly reads mureb, thinks more, and then uses a condenser. No wonder the progressive Agent, Brother Merrill, reports increased cash collections on Herald. The Christian church has men and means and appreciation, and progress is moving us forward. We need for the SUN an increase of subscribers, and articles from those who have ability and leisure. Dr. Barrett drops good live thoughts off the end of his pen, and makes one remember his editorial experience. He uses a fountain pen and we shall expect a regular stream of thoughts, and facts, and suggestions to flow from his "Paul Wirt" weekly. For myself I was not born to be a quill driver; or if I was, I entered the world in the wrong time of the moon, or in the wrong century. I certainly possess no gifts for newspaper work in this bright, utilitarian, progressive, glorious nineteenth century. In the first place I am too busy. Three sermons a week in the eleventh year of my pastorate run my taxes up so high that I have little to pay out through the paper. But I do send in a few pages every Monday to the "SUN." The sun has some spots, you know, and those who use telescopes can read my letters. These telescopers always look for spots, and things which the natural eye can not see. Good many of that sort read the papers to find fault; and so a poor letter gives them something to their taste. It is well enough to consult taste in a religious paper as well as a "Sunday dinner." A "Sunday dinner" does very well for all except those who prepare it. "Sunday dinners" may furnish food for thought to the average person, but I doubt whether they are of divine origin. I do not think all things come down from above; though "every good and perfect gift" does. The sunshine of heaven makes nature bud and bloom and bear fruit for man; and the "Sun of Righteousness" arises with healing in his wings for all who keep His day holy and do His will from the heart. No risk in doing right. No loss in serving God. No danger in obeying law. No condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit.

W. W. STALEY

Feb. 13, 1893.

Youngsville, N. C.

Last Saturday and Sunday were the appointments at Youngsville for the quarterly and communion meetings both of the Christian, and the Methodist churches; and the Methodist house of worship is not in a condition for worship, both meetings were held in the Christian house of worship; and on Sunday both communions were held together, thereby practically carrying out what we believe, open communion. Notwithstanding the rainy weather the season was pleasant.

The Presiding Elder did the preaching, and he did it well too.

Whilst there we had the very great pleasure of spending a night with each of the following families; Bro. Mat Winston, Dr. P. H. Hatch and Bro. Rob. Johnson. Also spending some time with Bro. A. L. Allen, sister S. B. Klapp and W. T. Young. These families all know how to make a preacher feel at home. May the Lord bless all the people at Youngsville.

That Inaugural Ball.

We recommend a careful reading of the following taken from Raleigh Christian Advocate.

I am truly glad that even part of the "Reception Committee" were not willing to give their influence and presence to the "ball."

Will the time never come when the citizens of this so-called Christian State will say, "Down with such measures and men?" O Lord, how long! Will the time never come when the report of the inauguration of the Governor of North Carolina shall not be accompanied with: "The inaugural ball was a grand success; the dancing (hugging set to music) lasted all night. It was a brilliant occasion and the attendance was very large?"

Pray tell us what is the use for the Methodist preachers of North Carolina to preach against balls, so long as the very heart of the Government, headed by the Governor and the Legislature, pander to the desires of a wicked and depraved society; and every four years give a new lease of life to this degrading revel, called the "inaugural ball?"

I wonder if it is not possible for the citizens of the "Old North State" to elect to these high offices men who will have the courage and true manhood to say no to all such wicked folly; and say it so loudly that they may be understood from the mountains to the sea?

So long as the leaders of the State give their support and the people money to such folly, just so long we will find our young people, even though they be Methodists, running after such delusions and calling them pleasure, because they have high society on their side and society says "no harm in these things."

 THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

The Corner comes to you this week with a splendid sermon, from Rev. Roger Charnock. This is 'specially for you and I want you to read it carefully, and then write for the Corner yourself. I expect we will have one of his sermons to the young people quite often and I hope you will enjoy them very much. Love to all.

Cordially yours,
 UNCLE TANGLE.

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 12, 1893

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—Our Corner is beginning to look so nice with cheerful words from so many that I want to say Hurrah! And then the dimes and nickels have been coming in so fast that I think you ought to know how much you have sent in since I made my last report. Well I have now in my bank $5.11 which I will soon turn over to Bro. A. Moring who is Treasurer, and will see that it is used for the purpose you intend it.

Does it not make you glad, to know that you are helping to spread the Gospel? Although it be but little yet we must not "despise the day of small things" and the small amounts may after awhile spread to hundreds and hundreds of dollars.

Now let us hear often from you. This bad weather is a splendid time for reading and writing letters for the "Corner." Lets have it crowded every week, and make dear old Uncle Tangles' picture smile with pleasure, as possibly a good smile would make it look more like him. The first letter of each answer to the following questions will spell the name of one whom you love and who thinks a great deal of you. See which one can send the first correct answer.

Of what country was Job a native?
 Who was the armor bearer of Joab?
 Who of the children of Israel besides Joshua, who left Egypt was allowed to enter the land of Canaan?
 Which of the four Gospels was written by a physician?
 Who was the mother of Timothy?

It was in the 13th year of the reign of what king when John the Baptist began to preach?

What king made his son to pass through fire and who also burnt incense on the hills and every green tree?

Where was Moses buried?

Who conquered the Midianites with 300 men?

Who was the father of Rachel and Leah the wives of Jacob?

What prophet while dying prophesied to Joash three victories over the Syrians?

Lovingly yours,
 AUNT MYRTLE.

Watch.

ST MARK XIII: 37, LAST WORD.

I have chosen a very short text for you so that there is not much fear of your forgetting it.

In our usual preaching services we give a text which it is sometimes very difficult for you to remember, and divide sermons into three parts with divisions that you are almost certain to forget.

But I am going to try and be a little boy in my thoughts, so that I may be very simple.

The text says, "Watch." You all know what it is to watch.

If your father knew that a thief would be prowling around his dwelling at a certain hour of the night, I am quite sure he would not sleep. He would wait and watch so that the robber might not enter in.

That is what Jesus would have every boy and girl do today. There are so many robbers who would steal from you that which belongs to Jesus, and which he has entrusted to your care, that he tells you to watch, to be on the outlook for the approach of evil. He wants you to be little sentinels on the little field of life, so that temptation and sin may not spoil you.

Now I am going to divide my sermon into five divisions, and I pray that you may remember them all, first, W; second, A; third, T; fourth, C; fifth, H; Now each division stands for a word and each one I wish you to watch well. I. Watch W. This letter stands for words. Oh how many times are we tempted to speak unkind words, and very often by so doing we spoil another's happiness. Now there are two kinds of words. Kind words and unkind words. At home you will many times be asked to do things which may not be very pleasant to you, and then you will be tempted to speak unkindly, but if you will be on your guard and watch well, then you will speak only that which is kind

Two boys went to the same school, and one day they had a quarrel, and one in anger said that he would repay the other for what he had done. Both had to go in the same direction as they went home, and had to cross a stream of running water, which was spanned by a narrow plank. The boy, who said that he would repay the other, rushed along in haste, and after crossing the stream loosened the end of the narrow wooden bridge, so that when his companion placed his feet upon it, suddenly it fell and the little fellow went into the stream. Sad to say he fell with his back upon a stone, and today he is a little hunchbacked cripple. How the other repents today; could he recall his unkind and cruel words he would gladly give all he possesses. Unkind words thoughtlessly said may mar and destroy years of happiness. Watch well your words.

II. A. This letter stands for affections, Watch your affections. I know some children who are very selfish. They want everything for themselves. And so full are they of thoughts which belong to themselves, that they have no room for Jesus. Boys and girls your parents love you very much, but they cannot love you like Jesus. What would you think about a boy or girl who had no love for father or mother? You would say very unkind children, and how your father or mother would grieve if day by day they saw that you did not love them.

Well Jesus came into this world to suffer, in order to win our love.

You will find so many things that try to gain your affection that there is a necessity for you to ever watch, so that Jesus may have His right place. He will never be satisfied until you ask him to come into your heart and cast every bit of selfishness out. You may give Him your affection in many ways by being kind to others and all this may be done by loving Jesus first and best.

III. T This letter stands for Thoughts. So that now I want you to watch your thoughts.

You know an army never attacks the strongest point in a city, so sin never tries to gain an entrance through any place other than that which is weak. You will have to watch your thoughts or else the evil one will come in and before you are aware of his presence he will lead you astray. You may think that it is well nigh impossible for him to enter in, but if you are not very watchful he will see your weak place and conquer your little city.

A certain king when he was a little baby, was taken by his mother and dipped into a river. It was said that on account of this that an arrow could not pierce through his flesh. And he went into many a battle and came out of it without a bruise. But at last one day he went to fight against a city and his sandal came off; and an arrow pierced the place where his mother's thumb had grasped his heel and the water had not touched the place as she dipped him in the water, and he was slain. You must watch your thoughts so that the enemy of mankind cannot enter in. He is always watchful for the weak place.

IV. C stands for conscience. You must all watch conscience This is that little voice which speaks within and tells you that you are going to do wrong, and if you will watch it as evil approaches, the little monitor will sound an alarm.

A little boy had a very bad father. And many times he would go out and steal instead of working. One Sunday morning, this father told little Johnnie to go with him out in the country. At last they arrived at a field where potatoes were growing. The father told Johnnie to call out when any one was looking.

And the next instant little Johnnie called out "Father some one is looking." The next moment the father said "where?" "where?" "God is looking father," said Johnnie.

He felt that it was wrong for his father to steal. And the little voice compelled him to speak against sin.

My young friends always obey the voice that speaks within. Never try to quiet it down, and see well that you obey its command at once when it speaks, instead of waiting until tomorrow.

If you neglect it, in a little while its voice will be silent and you will sin and not know it.

V. H. This is my last division and stands for heart.

We sometimes tell you to give God your heart.

Jesus does not want you to do any hard thing. He but wants you to live for him. Oh! how nice to see children living for Jesus. You are not too young to die. "Jesus I give my life to thee." "Just as I am." And help me to watch my heart for thee. May I be tender, loving, pure and true as thou art, then my dear friends Jesus will watch for you.

And when the pearly gates open wide the angels will carry you through.

The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Enough Of This.

The press dispatches sent out from one of our Southern State Capitals, announcing the election of a certain gentleman to the Senate of the United States, the following paragraph.

"Senator — beamed with happiness, and about fifty bottles were cracked in his headquarters after the election, and cigars were as free as the wind. Some of his supporters got gloriously drunk from joy, and as many of —'s friends were beastly drunk from disappointment."

Whether these statements are true we have no means of knowing. If they are not true they ought to be denied. The time has passed when any public man can afford to celebrate his victories by either engaging in a debauch or providing the means for others to do so. Something is due to public opinion; and those who refuse to recognize this fact will do so at their own risk and peril. Equally reprehensible is the custom of getting drunk to break the force of a defeat.

Why any rational creature should "go on a spree" after failing to accomplish a desired end, is more than we can understand. Not wishing to do anyone injustice, we have in this instance suppressed names; but if it becomes evident that this sort of thing is to be kept up, we shall not hesitate as a public journalist to come to closer quarters.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"A Library in itself," a trite phrase, often misapplied, means something, when applied to this magnificent work. It is the product of nearly 1,200 of the world's most eminent scholars, in every department of learning. There is hardly anything in any department of knowledge that is "worth knowing" that will not be found here elaborately and clearly set forth—and all fairly within reach of every school boy—all for a payment of only 5 cents a day, for 420 days, or for $20.00 cash down. A Chance To Make Money.

I have berries grapes and peaches. a year old, fresh as when picked. I use "Hood's improved process;" do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over one hundred families. Anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful fruit samples. Fall and winter are the best time to sell directions, so people can experiment and be ready for next fruit season. As there are many poor people like myself I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars, round home, in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for 19 two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the sample, postage, etc., to me. Mrs. W. M. Just before he closed his eyes in death he repeated the 15th chapter of 1 Cor. then selected his funeral text in this same chapter verse 10, and requested that your humble servant should preach the sermon. His death was one of triumph; after he

A Request.

All members of the Missionary Association for 1893 are hereby notified that membership fees are now due.

In view of the fact that the fields needing our early attention are so large and so many, I am constrained to urge prompt payment of all membership fees for 1893. Both of individuals and of churches, Sunday schools, Missionary Societies and etc. Further, I wish to urge every member to make a special effort to add to our list of members, as the funds now due, if all are paid in will not be half sufficient for the work we have undertaken

The Association has no paid officer and it therefore depends wholly upon volunteer work for its usefulness as an agency for the spread of the gospel. I am anxious to receive as new members 1. Individuals; 2. All churches; 3. Sunday schools; 4. Missionary Societies; 5. Ladies Aid Societies, and etc.

All funds should be sent to Capt. Thos. R. Gaskins, Treasurer, Driver, Va.

Suffer me, fellow-helpers in the gospel field, to urge you to careful consideration of the great needs for the work we have undertaken for God's glory in man's salvation. So many and so large are the fields that are calling for help—the "Macedonian cry" is heard in the land, and the fields further south must stand weak and comparatively, non-progressive, unless we go to their help. If we go not to their assistance, of these destitute fields, then there is no one to go, as in the economy of our church government we are the only department which is authorized to undertake this kind of work. The Missionary Association will, under the blessings of God, work a revolution in our mission fields, provided we will work the Association, and to this end I appeal to all lovers of our cause to help the Association onward. Annual membership fees are $10, for both churches and individuals, except that ladies are admitted for $5. We need 500 members for 1893

Politeness.

Real politeness is something very different from bowing, and scraping, and chattering, and complimenting. Real politeness must have honesty, kindness, gentleness, self-denial and sympathy as its foundation. The man who approaches you with a smile made to order, and a simper borrowed from some empty-headed dandy, will bear watching, and doubtless make a very good stranger. The woman whose politeness consists in a borrowed giggle and a few honeyed phrases spoken in an artificial tone, is not truly polite. An honest heart, love that worketh no ill to its neighbor, a tenderness that bears one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ; a watchful tact that enables one to do the right things at the right time, and is careful of the feelings of the weakest and the poorest; these show that a person understands something of true politeness.

The Scripture lays the foundation for true politeness when it admonishes us to "Honor all men," "be pitiful, be courteous," and if we will ponder these precepts we shall learn the secret of true politeness. The Apostle Paul was a true gentleman, and the Saviour of sinners was the gentlest and noblest of all. To be Christ-like is to be really polite, not in the sense of hollow hearted pretense and complimentary affectation, but in tender and honest kindness which helps the weak; which makes the lonely feel at home; which smooths the rough places over which weary feet must pass, and which makes life brighter and better by our presence, our words and our deeds.—The Common People.

Into the Dark Tunnel.

A few days ago I had occasion to travel on one of the great American railroads, and was reminded of an incident that occurred some years before, when for the first time I made the same journey. While seated in the waiting-room, waiting for the starting of the train, I observed a party consisting of a gentleman and lady, two little girls and a nurse. They were evidently a family, well-dressed and of such appearance and manners as denoted cultured well-to-do people. I wondered who they were, but never found out.

When we had taken our places in the car, the nurse and the children were seated directly behind the parents. Very soon after starting, the mother turned round, took hold of the younger child and gently lifted her on her lap, with her face to her own, raised the little girl's arms and brought them round her neck, and placed her own around the child's body, holding her close in her embrace. Not knowing what was before us, I was kept in wonder as to what these movements; but as soon as darkness covered us, then light flashed out of darkness, and I understood. The dear mother feared that the child would be frightened, and so she took her in her arms; nor did the child by a sound or a movement show that she felt alarm. That warm, protecting embrace killed all fear of evil; how could any harm reach her?

How could the thought of God hiding some beloved soul, in time of trouble, in his pavilion, in the secret of his presence, be kept from one's reflections? Has not one of our old English devotional writers, Baxter or Doddridge, said that "when God foresees great trials for the believer, he takes care to prepare that one by gracious manifestations"?—Canadian Churchman

THE PULPIT.

The Nature and Necessity of Repentance.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Acts 3:19. Repent.

Repentance is one important step in the work of salvation, for it effects our personal relation to God. Repentance was the text of the first sermon of the forerunner of Christ. (Matt. 3:12) The Master himself began his ministry with a sermon on repentance. (Matt. 4:17.) Did you ever notice how often he preached on repentance during his ministry, and how earnestly he enforced it upon his hearers. (Matt. 9:13; Luke 13:3; Matt. 12:41.) Christ suffered and died that repentance might be preached unto all men. (Luke 24:46-47.)

To understand this subject it is necessary to consider.

I. What repentance is not. Men have fallen into various errors on the nature of repentance, that hinders true repentance, and keeps them from becoming Christians. Repentance, is not fear. Men may, and do, fear when they do not repent. Men when in danger will pray and appear very good saints, but when the danger is over they are the same blaspheming men that they were before.

Repentance is not feeling. A man may have feeling when he repents, or he may not. A man may repent without any special feeling. A man may feel deeply his sinfulness, and and even weep over it, and yet not repent. His feelings may come from a dread of the consequences of his sins, and not from sorrow for the sin itself; for he may love the sin, and will commit it again the first opportunity he has.

Repentance is not remorse. A man may feel deeply the guilt of sin, and his soul may be tortured with the keenest remorse; yet he may not repent. Judas was filled with remorse, yet he went and hanged himself. Tiberius, emperor of Rome, felt the remorse of conscience so keenly that he protested to the senate that he suffered death daily; yet he did not repent.

Repentance is not conviction. Conviction is a knowledge of sin, a man's realization of the fact that he is a sinner; but he may have this knowledge and feel it deeply, yet not repent. Rev. Benjamin Abbott, a very searching preacher in New Jersey, in the midst of a scathing indictment of crime, cried out, "For aught I know, there may be a murderer in this congregation." A large man in the audience rose and ran for the door, exclaiming, "I am a murderer; I killed a man fifteen years ago." He had been conscious of this crime all these years, yet it did not lead him to repentance.

Repentance is not fasting, or prayer, or the breaking off particular sins. This is only a compromise, and repentance has no compromise in it. It is a radical change.

II. Repentance is a change of purpose that leads to a change of life. This is what the world means. A man wishes to go to New York, gets on the cars, and starts; but after he has been in the coach for a time the conductor comes along to take up the tickets, and he hands him his. He looks at it, and says, "you are wrong. This train goes to Chicago." Finding he is going in the wrong direction, he gets off and takes the first train in the opposite direction. This is repentance—a change of mind. It is a complete change of purpose, of the plan of life, that leads to a turning around. This is why we are exhorted to turn unto God. (Ezek. 18:32; 33:11; Isa. 55:7; 1:16-17.)

In repentance man changes his disposition towards God. The disposition of the impenitent is one of hatred. (Rom 8:7.) This enmity is a reality, and is full of bitterness. (Titus 3:3.)

This change of disposition is brought about by a clear realization of God's holiness, and of the purity of his laws. (Psalms 19:7-8.) How this is done is seen in the conversion of the African chief who said to a missionary, "yesterday morning, when you preach, you show me the law, be our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. You talk about the 10 commandments. You begin at the first, and me say to myself, "me guilty!" the second and, "me guilty!" the third, me "guilty!" the fourth, "me guilty!" the fifth, "me guilty!" Then you say the sixth, "Thou shalt not kill, me say, Ah! me no guilty, me never kill some person," you say, "I suppose plenty people here, who say, "me no guilty of that!" me say again, "Ah, me no guilty!" Then you say, "Did you never hate any person? did you never wish that such a person, such a man, or such a woman, was dead?" Massa you talk plenty about that; and what I feel that time I can't tell you, I talk in my heart and say, "me the same person!" my heart begin to beat; me want to cry; my heart leave so much me don't know what to do. Massa me think me kill ten people before breakfast! I never think so bad." (Psalms 119:170.)

This change of purpose brings the man into a near relation to God, and this awakens new and happier feelings in his heart. Before this his relation was that of a rebel to his king, and this brought a sense of guilt and dread; but now he stands in the relation of a humble penitent desiring forgiveness and help to live a life of obedience from this on. This puts him on the side of God, and conscience approves of this. This awakens new feeling in his mind, a feeling of peace, confidence, and hope (Psalms 116:7-8; Rom. 5:1-2; 2 Cor. 5:1 2 Tim 1:12.) In his old age Dr Watts said, "I thank God that I can lie down with comfort at night, not being solicitous whether I wake in this world or in another.

This peace of mind can only be brought about by a change of purpose, for as long as we intend to live in sin we will be conscious of guilt and deserve punishment. This will prevent permanent peace of mind. I knew a young man who had acquired a taste for intoxicating drinks, and he would occasionally get drunk. His father was greatly troubled, and tried hard to induce him to quit his drinking; but he would not. This caused him to dread to meet his father, for he was conscious that he was displeasing him, and that he deserved his displeasure. He was unhappy whenever he thought of him, and was unhappy when with him. This state of things continued for several years, but finally the young man realized the sinfulness of his course, changed his purpose, went to his father and manfully confessed his sin, and told him that he was a going to live a sober life. This change of purpose brought him into a new relation to his father, took away all sense of guilt, shame, and fear. The relation between him and his father is now one of peace and confidence. He loves to meet him and enjoys his society. Thus the man who has repented of all his sins, and turned to God with full purpose of heart is at peace with him, and loves to commune with him in thought and prayer.

In this turning to God the sinner does not need any recommendation of any kind. This is where many make a mistake, and fail in turning with the heart to God. They imagine that they must prepare themselves in some way before they turn so that they may be acceptable to God—must first reform, and get into a state of mind that will recommend them to God. They try this and failing to realize in their own experience that state of feeling and life, that they think necessary and they become discouraged and give up in despair. This is a mistake. Go to God just as you are with a fixed purpose to obey him in all things, and he will accept and pardon you. (Matt. 11:28-30.) He does not say put away all your burdens, and then come to me, but come just as you are. During a religious awakening in a factory village in N. E., a foreman was awakened, but could find no peace. His superior wrote him a note requesting him to call at six o'clock in the morning. He came promptly. "I see you believe me," said the master. He assented. "Well, see, here is another letter sent you by one equally in earnest," said the master holding up a paper with the language of Christ written on it. He took the paper and began to read slowly, "come unto me all ye that labor." etc. His lips quivered, his eyes filled with tears; and he stood for a few moments not knowing just what to do. At length he enquired. Am I just to believe that in the same way I believed your letter?" "Just in the same way," rejoined the master. He believed and was set at liberty.

III. Repentance is a joyful experience.

It is pleasant to God, for he loves to have his children turn away from the ruinous path of sin, and obey him. He wants them to be happy, and their sinfulness grieves him; for he is not indifferent to their well being. (Judges 10:16; Isa. 63:9.) As a parent he rejoices when his erring child comes back to him.

It is a source of joy to Christ. He came, suffered and died that he might save man from the guilt and power of sin; and when a soul is redeemed he rejoices. (Isa 53:11.)

It is a cause of rejoicing among the angels of God when a sinner turns to God. (Luke 15:7-10.) Rev. Grimshaw Howard had a son who used to say when riding his father's pony, "yesterday you carried a saint, to day a sinner." After his father's death he was converted, and his first thought was: "What will father say when the news comes up to him in heaven?" The father rejoiced with the angels.

Turning to God is a joyful experience to the sinner himself. It brings the sweetest joy to his soul, but not at first. When he first thinks of turning to God he is troubled with fear and trembling. His sense of sin makes him afraid, and he feels ashamed to turn to God. At first he feels that he would rather hide forever from him if he could and find peace in this way; but as he gradually comes to realize the willingness of God to receive him his fears disappear, a loving confidence springs up in his mind, and he goes to God with feelings of joy that he can settle up the whole matter in this way and be at peace.

IV. Repentance is a condition of pardon. This is not an arbitrary condition that God imposes simply because he has the power, but one founded in the nature of things. It is essential to your happiness, and you cannot enjoy peace, confidence and hope without it. It is the only thing that will bring you into that personal relation with God that gives peace and hope. You can have no peace nor hope till you have put yourself right with God in thought, desire and purpose; and this can only be done by repentance. When you have injured any one the first impulse after the excitement under which the wrong was done has past away is to go to the injured party, confess the wrong and ask forgiveness. You feel that this is just, and that you ought to do it; and such is our moral nature that you can never feel right until this is done. Thus it is in our relation to God. We have sinned against him, and are conscious that we ought to confess our sins and ask forgiveness of him; and we can never enjoy peace of conscience until we do this. There is no escape from this conviction, for we cannot run away from our own nature, nor change our relation to God.

That repentance is a necessary condition of salvation or pardon is obvious from the consideration that God requires a loyal submission to him in thought, desire and life before he will pardon the sinner. (Isa. 55:7) We cannot deceive him for he knows the secrets of all hearts; therefore we must be honest with him. This makes true repentance a necessary condition of salvation, for we cannot be pardoned without it. Thus we see that repentance alone can bring us into that state in which God can pardon us.

Sinner, you sustain a personal relation to God, and it is not one of peace; but an unhappy relation. What are you going to do about it. Will you go on in the life that you are now living, and meet God in this state? Are you willing to do that? No you are not, you may turn away with careless indifference now, but the time is coming when you will be made to realize the infinite folly of sinful disregard of your relation to God: for you have got to meet this question whether you want to or not. When you come to die you will want the peace and hope of the Christian. An irreligious father objected to his daughter becoming a Christian, and when she was sick and dying he opposed the minister visiting her; but she was faithful and died rejoicing in hope of heaven, many years after this the father died, and when sick he sent for the same minister; and said, "Will you tell me sir, what made my daughter Annie so happy when she was dying? for I have great dread of death." Thus all men think and feel when they come to die, but we cannot have the peace and hope of the Christian then unless we live his life.

SELECTIONS

"Going Aloft."

OR HOW THE YOUNG SAILOR WAS PROMOTED.

"My story is but a short one," he continued, "and I can tell it in a very few words. From the time of my earliest childhood I never knew what it was to have a happy home. My father was a drunkard! Once he had been a good man and a good husband, but rum ruined all his manhood and made a brute of him. I can remember how cold and cheerless was the first winter of my life to which memory leads my mind. We had no fire—no food—no clothes—no joy—no nothing—nothing but misery and woe! My poor mother used to clasp me to her bosom to keep me warm, once—I remember—when her very tears froze on her cheek! Oh! how mother prayed to God for her husband; and I, who could but just prattle, learned to pray, too. And I used to see that husband and father return to his home, and I remember how my poor mother cried and trembled."

"When I grew older I had to go out and beg for bread. All cold and shivering I waded through the deep snow, with my clothes in tatters and freezing feet, almost bare. And I saw other children of my own age dressed warm and comfortable, and I knew they were happy, for they laughed and sang as they lounded along towards school. Those boys had sober fathers. I knew that their fathers were no better than mine had been once; for my mother had told me how noble my father could be if the accursed demon rum were not in his way; but the fatal power was upon him, and though he often promised, and though he often tried, yet he could not escape.

"Time passed on and I was eight years old, and those eight years had been years of such sorrow and suffering as I pray God I may never again experience. At length, one cold morning, in the dead of winter, my father was not at home. He had not been home through the night. My mother sent me to the tavern to see if I could find him. I had gone half the way when I saw something in the snow by the side of the road. I stopped and a shudder ran through me, for it looked like a human form: I went up to it, and turned the head over and brushed the snow from the face. It was my father, and he was stiff and cold! I laid my hand upon his pale brow, and it was like solid marble, He was dead!

"Poor Jack stopped a moment and wiped his eyes. Not one of us spoke, for we had become too deeply moved. But he soon went on

"I went to the tavern and told the people there what I had found, and the landlord sent two of his men to carry the frozen body of my father home. Oh, shipmates, I cannot tell you how my poor mother wept and groaned. She sank down upon her knees and clasped that icy corpse to her bosom, as though she would have given it life from the warmth of her own breast. She loved her husband through all his errors, and her love was all powerful now. The two men went away and left the dead body still on the floor. My mother whispered to me to come and kneel by her side. I did so. 'My child,' she said to me, and the big tears were yet rolling down her cheeks, 'you know what has caused all this. This man was once as noble and happy and true as man can be, but oh! see how he had been stricken down. Promise me, my child, oh! promise, here, before God and your dead father, and your broken hearted mother, that you will never, never, never, touch a single drop of the fatal poison that has wrought for us all this misery!'"

"Oh, shipmates, I did promise, then and there, all my mother asked, and God knows that to this moment that promise has never been broken. My father was buried, and some good kind neighbors helped us through the winter. When the next spring came I could work, and I earned something for my mother. At length I found a chance to ship, and I did so, and every time I go home I have some money for my mother. Not for the wealth of the world would I break the pledge I gave my mother and my God on that dark cold morning. And even had I made no such pledge, I would not touch the fatal cup, for I know that I have a fond, dotting mother that would be made miserable by my dishonor, and I would rather die than to bring more sorrow upon her head. Perhaps you have no mothers; and if you have perhaps they do not look to you for support, for I know you too well to believe that either of you would ever bring down a loving mother's gray hairs in sorrow to the grave. That is all, shipmates. Let me go now, and you may enjoy yourselves alone, for I do not believe that you will again urge the wine cup upon me

"As Jack thus spoke he turned towards the door, but Tim Black stopped him.

"Hold on, Jack," cried Tim wiping his eyes and starting from his chair. 'You shan't go alone. I have got a mother, and I love her as well as you love yours, and your mother shall not be happier than mine; for, by the love I bear her, I here pledge myself that she shall not have a drunken son. I will drink no more!'

"Give us your hand, Tim," cried Sam Pratt. 'I'll go with you.'

"I waited no more, but quickly starting from my chair I joined the other two, and ere long the whole five of us had joined with Jack Small in his noble life-plan. We called for pen, ink, and paper, and made Jack draw up a pledge. He signed it first and we followed him, and when the deed was done I know we were far happier than we had been for years. The wine upon the table was not touched, and the liquor we had drank during the forenoon was now all gone in its effect.

"Towards evening we returned to the ship. There was a frown upon the captain's brow as we came over the side, for he had never known us to come off from a day's liberty sober. But when we all came over the side and reported ourselves to him, his countenance changed. He could hardly give credit to the evidence of his own senses.

"Look here boys!" he said, after he had examined us thoroughly, 'what does this mean?'

"Show him the paper," whispered I.

"Jack had our pledge, and without speaking he handed it to the captain. He took it and read it; and his face changed its expression several times. At length I saw a tear start to his eye

"Boys," he said, as he folded up the paper, 'let me keep this, and if you stick to your noble resolution you shall never want a friend while I live.'

"We let the captain keep the paper and when he had put it in his pocket he came and took us each by turn by the hand. He was much affected, and I knew that the circumstances made him happy. From that day our prospects brightened. Jack Small no more had our envy; for he took hold and taught us in navigation, and we were proud of him. On the next voyage we all six rated as able seamen, and received full wages, and we left not that noble-hearted captain until we left to become officers on board other ships

"Jack Small is now one of the best masters in the world, and I believe that the rest of our party are still living, honored and respected men. Three years ago we all met, the whole six of us, at the Astor House, in New Yew, and not one of us had broken that pledge which we made in the hotel at Rio. Four of us were then commanders of good ships, one was a merchant in New York, and the other was just going out as American consul to one of the Italian cities on the Mediterranean. You know now why I do not drink wine with you and of course you will not urge it upon me nor take my refusal as a mark of coldness or disrespect."—British Workman.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

PREPARED BY PROF. HERBERT SCHOLZ, A. B.

LESSON IX.—FEB. 26.

READING THE LAW.—NEH. 8:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.—Psalms. 119:18.

TIME.—B. C. 444. About two months after the arrival of Nehemiah in Jerusalem, and a week after the completion of the walls.

PLACE.—Jerusalem. In the open square of Ophel, southeast of the temple area, and near the water gate, through which water was brought for use in the temple.

INTRODUCTORY.

Our last lesson told us about the rebuilding of the walls around Jerusalem, and about the opposition to this work as practiced by the Samaritans. Now these walls have been finished, and the people have had a week's rest from their arduous labor. How glad they must have been when they once more beheld their beloved city enclosed safely from the enemy! They were now in a state of defense, should outsiders seek to intrude. They could now turn their attention to their social and spiritual needs. How suggestive this arrangement of Nehemiah's! Is it not always well for us to see after the walls of our own souls? They may have been broken down by the enemy of mankind, and may need rebuilding. There may be a breach in the walls somewhere, which needs repairing. If we wish to keep our souls free from sin, we must have them always in a state of defense. The walls must be impregnable to the forces of Satan. If they are not, evil company may enter, and mingle with the pure, and all become corrupted.

About the time of this lesson was an interesting period with the Israelites. It was the season of three festivals: The Feast of the Trumpets, The day of Atonement, and The Tabernacles. Their thoughts were turned toward God and spiritual matters, thus we find them listening to the reading of the law. This was probably the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Bible. And we must remember that books were not plentiful then as they are now. They consisted of parchment rolls. No one possessed the sacred writings but the priests. The common people could not know anything of the law, except what was taught them by the priest. How anxious then must have been the people to have heard the words of their great law-giver, Moses.

THE LESSON, NEH. 8:1-12

1. And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel.

2. And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month.

3. And he read therein before the street that was before the water-gate from morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4. And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaeiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, Meshullam.

5. And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people) and when he opened it, all the people stood up;

6. And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands; and they bowed their heads, and worshiped the Lord with their faces to the ground.

7. Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaeiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites caused the people to understand the law.

8. So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

9. And Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep. For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law.

10. Then he said unto them. Go your way, eat the fat and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your strength.

11. So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

12. And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

EXPLANATORY

I. An Ancient Sabbath school. Vers. 1-4

The people came together from all sections of the city and the bordering country. They came for the purpose of learning the truths contained in God's word, and they brought with them their children, as were large enough to understand the meaning of what was read and explained. They assembled in the street. A wooden pulpit was erected for the purpose, and was made high enough to overlook the heads of the vast crowd probably numbered 50,000 souls. That was indeed a fine gathering for a Sunday-school. The superintendent was Ezra. This man was the spiritual leader of the people, and it was he who began the work of reformation among the Jews some time before Nehemiah took hold of the work. Ezra, we see, was assisted by a number of men, who were probably of the regular priesthood. He did not begin the services with the intention of continuing only an hour, but for half a day the teaching was to last. Such a long service would not be thought proper now, but it was necessary then, because people did not then have the advantages of home study which we have.

II. The Worship. Vers. 5-6.

Before entering upon the study of God's word, Ezra asked God's blessing upon the people, that they might have enlightened minds and receptive hearts. That is the way every one should do when beginning the study of God's laws. Without proper understanding we cannot construe rightly the meaning of the Scripture. Very few of us pray as much as we ought to pray. Let us take a practical lesson from Ezra's example.

III. Studying the Word of God Vers. 7-8.

Ezra and his assistants read the law aloud to the people. It is plausible to suppose these ministers to the people read by turns, and they may have divided the people into companies, with two or more teachers to the company. They, however, explained the gospel to them, to the best of their knowledge, and made the people realize that the laws of God had been sadly neglected. They did not study a part of the word, but they studied it all. The account of the creation was gone over, then the patriarchal records, then the exodus of Israel after 400 years bondage in Egypt, then the sundry laws given from Sinai and other places,—these were taken in their order. What a wonderful revelation that must have been to this last vestige of the once powerful nation of God's people!

IV. The Fruits of Bible Study. Vers. 6-12.

The effect of the study was to make the people sad and penitent. They realized what great sinners they had been, and they wept. This was pleasing in the sight of God. He always likes to see people sorry for their sins. But this was not the time to weep. The priests and Levites declared to them, that it was the season for festivity and rejoicing. They could not help what they had done in the past but they must strive to live right in the future. God had wonderfully blessed them, and now they must praise Him for his blessings. That was right, when one is fully penitent and resolves to do better, smiles should take the place of tears. We see the study of the Bible made these people better; it will have the same effect on us if we study it.

REFLECTIONS.

The Sabbath school is not a modern institution.

It is good for people to assemble together to study God's word.

The Bible will make us wise unto salvation.

The study of God's word is free to all.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

New England Matters.

The Maine legislature is in session now, and the Druggist have caused a bill to be introduced, in the hope that it may become a law, granting them the privilege of selling liquor for certain purposes. It has been before the committee for some time, and there has been a very warm discussion, and the end is not yet.

Gen. Neal Dow, of Portland, the "Father of the Maine law," a man 89 years old, was before the committee and opposed the bill. Possibly, it may be so modified, that the committee will report favorably. It is by no means certain, that the House will enact any law, making rum-sellers of the druggist in Maine.

The battle is on, and the fight waxes very hot. Maine can't afford to take any backward step in the temperance reform. Her worst enemies, are those who sell rum clandestinely, and those who would like to sell legally.

Druggists, don't want to sell liquor, just to accommodate a few sick people. There is Money in the business, and if they sell for Medicine, they can have sick patients enough, to keep them constantly employed. What they want, is a license to sell. The question will soon be settled.

We have a "Keeley Institute," located at N. Conway, New Hampshire. It is prospering finely. A large number of drunkards have been there, and taken the treatment, and at the end of four weeks, have returned home sober men. Among them is a large number of lawyers, doctors, and teachers, and one ex-judge who was disposed, two years ago. He is cured, and now practicing law. His letter, giving an account of his cure, is in my possession now.

The good work done at the Keely Institute is truly wonderful! More than one hundred thousand drunkards have been successfully treated in different states, their homes have been made happy. The blessing of God, seems to be in the work. drunkenness is treated as a disease. The desire for drink, is taken away from them entirely! God is in science as well as in religion. One night last week, an insane Hospital in N. H. was found to be on fire. They tried to save the 48 inmates, but only succeeded in saving four! Forty-four perished in the flames! One of the officers who tried to save the insane—they were in their beds asleep—had to jump out of the second story window to save his own life!

While the earth has been wrapped in snow so long and many churches were not opened for preaching or prayer meeting for many weeks. Satan has not been idle, but has kept his forces well employed sowing seeds of discord. Who are his agents? Those who gamble and drink intoxicating liquors until they are drunk? Yes. But they are not the persons who do the most to hinder the work of the church. It is not the thorns and the thistles in the fence corners or along the hedge that injures the wheat so much as the tares that are mixed with the wheat. So it is not those out of the church that are so much stopping the progress of the church as those belonging to it.

The trees that once protected the stream from the heat of the sun and gave shelter for the weary traveler and the cattle that came to drink may one day only hinder its flow by falling into its waters. Thus may church members who once helped to administer sacred things and were active in the work become a hindrance to the work of the church. Now as the sun is warming the earth, may the love of our heavenly Father warm our cold hearts that we may do much work for the Lord this year. This is the sixth month of our conference year and what have we done? I am now able to fill my appointments again.

Let all be up and at work and with a united effort trusting in the Lord we may yet do much for the Master this year and go up to conference with the Home and Foreign Missions all raised.

Holland Items.

Since writing my last letter, we have had another fire in Holland. Messrs. Porter & Everitt had the misfortune last week, to lose their store house and many of their goods by fire. The fire took place on top of the house from a defective flue. Their house and goods were insured for only about half their value. Therefore, the loss falls heavily on them; especially as they are young men just entering into business. They seem to have the universal sympathy of the community around. They are energetic deserving young men, and have fairly merited and won the confidence and esteem of their many friends by their upright course "fair and square dealings."

Whilst fires occur and houses are burned, others are going up. Mr. Elijah Joyner and Mr. Sol W. Holland have both bought half acre lots of Mr. T. J. Jones, adjoining the Christian church lot and are having timbers placed upon them for resident houses. They will both build nice houses. Our church house will then be in town instead of on the suburbs as heretofore.

Mr. Redell from the neighborhood of Holy Neck has also bought a lot of J. G. Holland and is building a house, having already moved to Holland. He is a good mechanic and will be a valuable accession to the place.

The weather has been so cold and disagreeable we are not yet fairly under way with our Sunday school and prayer meeting. We believe, however, that the religious services at Holy Neck and Holland's Corner Baptist churches were both well attended last Sunday.

Deacon Richard H. Keene of Holland Christian church whom we reported quite ill some time ago, has much improved, and will, we hope, soon be out again.

Gleanings.

The Christian Publishing House, Dayton, Ohio, is in a more prosperous condition than it has been at any time in its history. Its income last year was $5,000, more than it had been in any previous year. Much of its success is due to the present managers and perhaps another fact is, our Northern brethren are becoming more loyal to their denominational interests.

Rev. J. Alex Clapp of Danville, Ill., reports 24 accessions at the close of the meeting at Rileysville, Ind.

Rev. H. Crampton of Eaton, Ohio, accepts a call to the pastorate of the Christian church at Versailles, and will begin work April 1st.

Rev. Robert Harris says, "Our meeting at South Prairie, near Farmers City, Ill., closed with 33 additions."

Rev. J. M. Plunket of Trimble, Ill., says Rev. Bro. Hathaway assisted by others has enjoyed an interesting revival at Mt. Zion, with seven additions.

Rev. D. Powell of Lebanon, Ind., assisted Rev. John Layman in a series of meetings at Fairview Christian church, which resulted in nine accessions.

Rev. Sister V. K. Miller reports a glorious revival at Merriam, Ind., with 20 conversions and 20 additions.

Rev. D. O. Coy rejoices in a blessed work of grace at Mt. Olive, Owen Co., Ind., with 13 additions.

Rev. W. O. Parker closed his recent meeting at Greentown, Ind., with a good revival and 9 additions. Bro. Parker came to the town one year ago. Ex-Governor Ira D. Chase a Christian minister, assisted in the meeting.

Rev. C. C. Tarr reports an interesting meeting at Simpson a new point on the Chicago & Erie R. R. Eleven came for organization. Bro. Tarr also reports a good revival at Liberty Union church under the labors of Rev. Thomas Mills of the Christian church, with 5 additions.

Notes From Harvard.

The February number of the Elon College Monthly has recently been received and read with much pleasure.

Mr. Editor that is my text for the present occasion and upon it I would just like to make a few remarks. That Elon College does publish a Monthly magazine is a fact that methinks some people even this side of the north pole have not yet discovered. That the said periodical is a neat, nice, well-gotten-up publication and edited by the students of said institution with the assistance and supervision of a member of the faculty of the same said institution is another bit of information (here given gratis) for the benefit of that same said "some people this side of the north pole," above spoken of. So much by way of prelude.

Without saying that the Monthly is a Cosmopolitan, a Forum, Century, or North American Review, I do venture the statement that it is an excellent college publication worthy of close perusal and reflects high credit upon both the editors and contributors who make it what it is and the institution it represents. Look through the magazine and you are at once struck with the good taste, the excellent judgment and the high moral character displayed in its entire make up. The contributions are short, well written and as a rule, forcibly and frequently, beautifully treated. The editorials are terse, breezy, fresh, and as a rule, upon live, interesting topics. Here in this magazine, you have a true exponent of college life, student culture, and an amateur literary skill. And it is gratifying to the friends of the college to know that in this respect the Elon College Monthly does not fall behind other publications of its kind. It will compare favorably and very favorably with other college monthlies. It only costs one dollar per annum. Could any one ask it to be cheaper? Well if those students could pluck leaves off the trees up there and think their thoughts on them and send them out through the air (for they could hardly send them through the mails) then possibly this would not cost as much, but as long as paper and printing have to be paid for (for the editors—poor things—don't get a cent for their work) it can hardly be cheaper. The Monthly is certainly of much use and benefit to the students and the college and it were a mortal pity not to support the magazine—now that it is alive, running and doing most excellent work. But that like all other things of this mortal world of ours, cannot live on air and branch water, but must have food—financial support if you please. Now I should judge from an editorial or two and some other things, that the Monthly now needs some subscribers and something else. So why not subscribe and help the Monthly and thereby help a good cause and help yourself too—for you will get no better literature at this present time of ours for this money. Try it. J. O. ATKINSON.

P. S. The above remarks with the intelligence they bear are given "free, gratis and without charge." No body is to blame for a word of them save the writer who does not charge any body or concern one cent for publicly expressing his own private sentiments. J. O. A.

A desire to do right comes from God.

We are always glad to hear of the good work at Elon College.

Some people's eyes can see the sin in others, but not in themselves.

Sectarianism is selfishness, but mistaken by some for righteousness.

Rev. C. C. Williams gave us a pleasant call last week. Come again, brother.

Some people work more for the growth of their church than the cause of Christ.

The label on will be your paper changed as soon as we can get time to do so, if you have renewed.

Miss Mary Lawrence, one of the SUN's best friends renews her subscription and writes encouraging words for the paper.

The sermonette of Rev. Roger Charnock to the children in last week's SUN was read with interest by the grown people as well as by the children.

We send out this week a number of bills to subscribers. There may possibly be a few mistakes; if so do not become offended, but notify us immediately.

Do not forget to send your money to Col. A. Savage of Norfolk, Va., for the Norfolk Memorial church. Soon they will begin the work and will need the money.

E. W. Clements, son of the editor of this paper, had his left shoulder dislocated in the first part of January but is nearly well and has returned to his work again on the Norfolk & Western railroad.

The Missionary Association call by its chairman, Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., is important and should be answered at once. Do not neglect this request of Dr. Barrett.

Rev. D. F. Jones has tendered his resignation as Foreign Missionary in Japan, and it has been accepted by the Foreign Mission Board. This will be strange news to many. It will not, however, materially hinder the work.

Mrs. Eliza M. Yates of Shanghai arrived at San Francisco, Cal., on Feb. 1, and expects to be in Raleigh, N. C., about the last of the month. She is the widow of the missionary, Matthew T. Yates, and niece of Deacon A. Moring of Raleigh.

Mr. Wislard, a Presbyterian missionary arrived in Utah, thinks that immediate admission of this territory to statehood would be a calamity; that it would mean a return to the old days of church denomination, the revival of polygamy, and the destruction of the school system.

Bro. Staley's spots on the SUN are always enjoyed by the readers; for they are sure to be bright ones. Nothing is read with more interest. If he can write as he does now, what would he have done if he had been born on the right time of the moon? We heard a University man say the other day that the CHRISTIAN SUN had three strong writers: Dr. J. P. Barrett, Revs. W. W. Staley and J. O. Atkinson.

We learn from the Herald of Gospel Liberty that Dr. T. M. McWhinney seems to favor opening the gates of the World's Fair on the Sabbath. We regard the doctor to be a man of deep piety and excellent sense; but we think that both his religion and judgment are wrong on this question. We are glad to see that the Herald stands firm for closed gates. We certainly confess surprise at Dr. McWhinney, but remember that it is said that good and great men sometimes make the biggest mistakes.

After the morning sermon I gave the notices and then announced the number of the hymn to be sung. The congregation had opened their hymn books. Seeing one of the deacons coming toward the pulpit I waited with open book. He reminded me that I had forgotten to give a notice of the ladies meeting. I then stated to the congregation that I had forgotten to give such notice, announced the number of the hymn again and proceeded to read. The feelings of the congregation not to say my own may be imagined when I read the first line of the hymn, "Lord what a thoughtless wretch was I."—Homiletic Review.

To the Churches.

On the second Sunday in March all the churches among the Christians and the benevolent everywhere are requested to make a contribution for education. The proceeds of this gathering are to be divided among the schools under the influence of our people. Send the money to the Secretary of the Convention, J. J. Sumnerbell, Lewisburg, Pa.

He That Offends in One Point is Guilty of the Whole.

The Bible is a wonderful book. God is its author. Its truths are deep and full of meaning. God's ways are not man's ways. When God commences a great work, He does not commence according to man's wisdom. His thought to man, at some places, is quite plain and easy; at others, it is clothed in some apparent mysterious text. As in this, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." But this text, with many others which appear mysterious on the surface, exhibits, in the great thought of God, truths of the sublimest types of perfection.

The text quoted above is not one of quantity, but quality. It considers classes, but may deal with any or all kinds. It is the principle, and not the letter of the text, that is made its great throbbing heart of thought. This, like many others, when viewed from the stand point of principle, shows the thought of divinity that must have inspired it.

A man goes to a farmer's barn, not forced by hunger, but with a felonious purpose, breaks the door, takes and carries off secretly and in the dark two bushels of corn, leaving fifty barrels behind. According to the letter he is not guilty of stealing the whole, but according to the principle he is. The only reason why he did not steal all the corn was because he was not able to carry it off and conceal it. He who cheats in any one thing is guilty of cheating in any and all things, and the only reason why he does not is because the opportunities and respectability are not the same. A man who violates any law of the state because he thinks it a bad law would violate any other under similar circumstances. It involves as much principle to steal, cheat or violate law in little things as in great ones.

The man who wittingly disobeys God in one thing is guilty of a spirit of disobedience, and the principle that prompted the disobedience is in quality the same that would disobey in anything else. All that wrong principle wants to do a wrong thing is desire and opportunity. See the would be murderer pass by his desired victim and no deadly blow given or effort at slaying put forth because of the guard that protects the hated one. Is not the would be murderer guilty in the sight of God? It was in his mind to commit the deed and all that he wanted was an opportunity.

Concert of Action.

Solidification strengthens; but division weakens. An excellent cause is often made fruitless by non-agreement among its friends; and a bad cause is frequently made a power for evil by the unity of its advocates.

Christianity is built on eternal truth with God as its giver; and yet in many respects, it has not shown a strength equal to sin. It is true that it refers to the growth, and not to the real fountain of strength. But there must be a reason some where for this difference as seen in the effect. And will we not find the reason, if we look to the classes on each side? In the house of sin, concert of action is found; but in the church discord abounds.

Mohammed, in establishing his religion worked long with a mere handful of followers. But those few made a unit of strength that pushed its way out into the world, gaining strength as it went. And to day Mohammedism is a power to be dreaded more than almost any other. Christianity presents a very different picture. Contentions and discord have marched in its ranks very nearly since the days of Peter and Paul. And strange to say, these divisions have grown out of questions which have nothing to do with saving the soul.

It is true that God never intended that we should see every thing alike.

But seeing Christ the great center of Christianity, we should press toward him with loving concert of action, though we may not be able to step in each others tracks every time. Concert of action on the part of the followers of Christ would solidify Christianity in such a way, that its power for good would be irresistible.

The One Condition.

"If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." But suppose we do not confess our sins, then what? Well, undoubtedly he will not forgive. Then confession of sin on man's part is an absolute condition of his salvation. No confession, no forgiveness; no forgiveness, no Heaven; no Heaven, means all hell. Better stop and carefully go over the past of your life and see if there is hid away in some nook or corner of your life an unconfessed sin, and if there is, quickly take it to the Father and ask him for Jesus sake to forgive you as you confess it.

An old rusty sin committed twenty years ago, if unconfessed, is still charged against you; that the sun goes not down again until you have made a full confession and received forgiveness from your heavenly Father, and may the remainder of your days be happy in a Savior's love.

The Right of Woman to Preach.

A few days ago I received a very kind letter from a lady asking my opinion as to the right of woman to preach. She desired my answer to be given through the CHRISTIAN SUN.

My only objection to complying with her request is to be found in the fact that I have got no opinion of my own on the subject, but as I happen to have something better than my opinion could be, if I had one, I will give it for the consideration of the sister alluded to above and such others of the SUN's readers as may wish authorized information on this subject. In 1 Timothy 2:11-14, the matter is clearly set forth as follows:

"Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression."

Here Paul brings out two parts: 1. Woman was not allowed to teach. 2. She was not allowed to usurp authority over man.

Then Paul gives his reason for these two facts. She was not allowed authority over the man because man was formed first, and she was prohibited from teaching (preaching included) because she (not the man) was deceived, and was therefore in the transgression. Paul seems to be in harmony with Genesis 3:16, and so I see no way for me to have an opinion of my own on the subject, as I profess to accept the Bible and abide by its teachings. If these sentiments are distasteful and objectionable to any of the SUN's lady readers, or others, the fault is not mine, if fault there be, for I am not responsible for Paul's views, but I am very fond of standing by and consenting to what he says, for as I understand it he spoke by inspiration of the Holy Spirit,—except when he states to the contrary,—and hence I feel that my loyalty to Christ makes me accept without a murmur Paul's decision of this question.

If there be those who cannot do so, I am sorry for them. I am the last man who would object to woman preaching just because she is a woman. I only object because Paul, an inspired man, objected, and he objected because woman was the leader in the transgression, and not because he was a "crusty old bachelor," or because he had any dislike for a woman, or because he was an old fogey.

A curse follows sin, as naturally as fruit follows the blossom on the tree. It would be strange, if no curse were attached to the sin of the woman who was deceived and led

Adam into sin, but a curse was attached, as I understand it, and the woman was prohibited from becoming a herald of the glad news of man's redemption from the fall into which woman's folly led him.

I have examined the Authorized Version, the Revised Version and the Greek, and so far I find no reason to believe that Paul did not say what he meant as to woman preaching.

Elon College Notes.

Well, the winds blew, the rain fell and beat upon us, but we are still here, for we are seeking to build upon the solid foundation, Jesus Christ. We ask the prayers of the Christian people that each one of us may build a structure that will be able to withstand the world, the flesh, and the devil, and that we may come out more than conquerors through Him, who loves us and hath given His life for us.

We are pleased to have with us for a day or two Mr. Joe Clements, who was formerly a student of Elon College. Jodie's cheerful face and gentlemanly actions win friends for him wherever he goes.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. P. H. Fleming, and Mr. Trollinger are having the lumber hauled for the erection of their respective dwellings. Who will be the next good man to build a house and dwell among us?

The oyster supper given by the Psihelian Society was undoubtedly the grandest success of the kind, that was ever witnessed at Elon College. The young ladies deserve much credit for the courage and perseverance with which they are pushing forward the good work.

It looks very natural to see in our midst Mr. Jackson Rawls, who has for a few weeks been at his old home in Eastern Virginia. We are glad for him to be with us.

Dr. Long preached to us an excellent sermon Sunday. Many practical and useful lessons were gained by the discourse.

Rev. W. J. Laine went out Sunday to conduct the burial services of a good lady who was a member of one of his churches. People of all ages and in every standing of society are being rapidly taken from this world to eternity. So let us all live at all times that we may be ready to answer the summons and may stand uncondemned at the judgment bar of God.

Respectfully,
ELIJAH MOFFITT.

Custom.

Custom displays larger work and greater forces than written laws or taught science. The people of an average community usually follow in the wake of custom, asking but few questions as to right or wrong.

The wicked one knowing how readily the multitudes follow custom, which is a mere synonym for fashion, endeavors always to formulate the customs on the side of sin.

The current of custom is always hard to change. If one dares to raise his voice against the customs of the day, he is soon put down as a crank and disturber of the peace. Many people have been carried against their own conscience by the popular tide of custom. Custom often cramps the preacher, closes the mouth of the legislator and makes silent the public officer.

The first duty of all is, as the fashionable line of custom's march is passing by, to inquire, is it right?

Prosperity.

There is a natural inclination, in all well balanced minds, to be prosperous. There is no sin in this, if the desire is held in proper bounds. But when it is allowed to hold the highest place in the mind, God is asked, in the language of conduct, to take a lower seat. And when ever man lets anything rise, in his mind, to a level with God, sin is directing his thoughts. Prosperity in some way or other is sure to come to those who inquire after the paths of righteousness, and walk in them. It may not come in the way, or of the kind wanted, but it will come of the right kind and in the right way. It may not come in houses, lands or precious metals, but it will come as God's hand may direct it. It may come through meandering journeys of adversity, but it will come with crowns of joy and gladness, some day.

Two things are necessary to ensure prosperity; right doing and well directed energy. Though some times these may fail; and some times it may come in the absence of both, as seen from the world's stand point. But it may often represents the shadow and not the real substance. Or, if it is real, it is the exception, and not the rule. Some men are saints in adversity, but would be devils in prosperity and God knows they are worth more to the world in adversity than they would be in prosper.

God knows best how to dispose of these generations. Our duty is, to do right because it is right, and then push all work in hand, sanctioned by God, with all lawful energy. Right doing must come from the heart to meet the approbation of heaven's laws.

To God's saints, in adversity in this world, He may be hiding the lot of prosperity to appear on the other shore beyond the sun sets' radiant glow.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

A merry greeting to all. Winter is going and spring is coming on apace and with it I hope for a continuance of the bright and interesting letters we have been having from our bright-eyed Band of little cousins. Your letters are very nice, and those of you who write the most regular and often improve the fastest. Do not let the "spring fever" get hold of you and stop your writing. You know the more letters the more half-dimes and dimes, and the more money the better can we help in our work of educating the young ministers. May God's richest blessings be with you all.

Cordially,
UNCLE TANGLE.

CREEDMORE, N. C., Feb. 5, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little boy six years old, and would like to join the Band. I like to hear the CHRISTIAN SUN read, and especially the Children's corner. I like also to hear Bilkins letters in the Progressive Farmer. Your picture is almost as pretty as Bilkins at the "phone." Please find enclosed five cents for the Band.

Your little nephew,
VASSAR WINSTON

Well Vassar we are pleased to hear from you and hope to hear from you very often now. Yes the picture of Uncle Tangle is rather old fashioned.

CREEDMORE, N. C., Feb. 12, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—You may have forgotten me, as I have never written to you but once, and that was last summer. I was glad to see our Corner filled with so many nice letters this week, and hope it will be full next week. Mama and papa went visiting today and took my little brother with them, and his being gone made me get lonesome. We have a new preacher this year, it is Rev. J. D. Wicker; I haven't seen him yet. This was the day for services at our church; but, as the weather was bad, and it being a long distance, none of us went. I am anxious to see him. I must close, and if this doesn't find its way to the waste basket, I will try to write sooner next time. Enclosed find half dime for the BAND. Much love to you and the cousins.

Your niece,
MINNIE WINSTON.

Minnie welcome is your letter, and we have hopes that you will not wait so long again before writing. It looks strange to me that the weather was too bad to go to church yet some of your folks went visiting, ah, me!

ETHER, N. C., Feb 9, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As papa is writing I thought I would write a short letter for the Children's Corner. I am a little girl 10 years old have never written a letter before. I go to Sunday school in warm weather but live too far from the church to go in cold weather. I have read many nice letters from the little cousins and enjoy them very much so I wish to join the Corner and Mission Band. Will write again if this letter does not find its way to the waste basket. I send 10 cents for the Band. Will close with much love to you and the little cousins.

Your little niece,
HELEN M. FREEMAN.

Welcome into our Band, dear Helen, and I hope you will write many letters and be a cousin a long, long time. Write again real soon.

PROVIDENCE, Va., Feb 17, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has been raining nearly all day and looks very dreary out of doors, so I will spend a few moments in writing to the Corner. It looks very encouraging to see the cousins taking such an interest in the Corner this year.

I am very glad to see so many new cousins writing. I didn't go to school today but I have been right regularly this winter considering the bad weather. I love to go to school. My teacher's name is Mr. Hermance. I will answer Minnie Klapp and Bertie Wicker's questions. The law freed the Jewish priest from altar service at the age of fifty. Peter got the money out of the fish's mouth to pay his and his Master's tax. I will also ask a question. At what age did Adam die? Enclosed find five cents for the BAND. With much love to you, Aunt Muggie and the cousins. I think that is her name, and I like it much better than Au t Tangle. I remain

Your little niece,
ALLIE GIBSON.

We are glad to get your letter, Allie, and hope you will write again soon. I am pleased when the cousins love to go to school for then I know they are preparing themselves for the place in the world for which God intended them. Yes, Allie, you are right and I too like the name Aunt Maggie better than that of Aunt Tangle. Tangle is such an ugly old name anyhow that it fits nobody except myself.

NORFOLK, VA., Feb. 11, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write to you as I promised Uncle Clements to write to the Corner soon. But it has been a very, very long time since he was here, ever since November. I attended the state Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. which I enjoyed very much. Ma took two delegates during the time, Mr. Coggsdale of Suffolk, a member of Bro. Staley's church, and the other, Mr. Taylor of Richmond, Va., a member of the Christian church. We all enjoyed their company very much. They had a very interesting program.

We organized a Junior C. E. last Sunday of 35 members. I will tell more about our Junior of boys and girls next time I write. I send half a dime for the BAND. Love to all the cousins and Uncle Tangle and bride.

MATTIE C. WHITE.

Mattie, we are glad to get your letter and hope you will write again soon. I am sorry that I had to cut out the part about the Y. P. S. C. E., but on account of not having space enough it was omitted.

PATMOS, N. C., Feb. 14, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—This is my birthday and I thought I could not celebrate it in a better way than by writing to the Corner. I'm going to school now to sister Myrtie. Uncle Tangle I would like very much to see you, but if you resemble the picture in the SUN, O! excuse me. I will answer some of the cousins questions. Nellie Goodwin's question, "Who was Noah's grandfather?" Methuselah was Noah's grandfather, Minnie Klapp's question, "at what age did the law incapacitate the Jewish priest from altar service," Numbers 8th chapter 25th verse. "And from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof and shall serve no more." Am I correct? I enclose half dime for the Mission Band. Will close, wishing you and the cousins much happiness and prosperity.

Your loving niece,
MAUD VALENTINE GUNTER

Maud we are glad to get a letter from you again, and hope you will soon write again. So you don't like Uncle Tangle's picture? Well I don't blame you for he is no beauty, sure.

FRANKLINTON, N. C., Feb. 12, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As it is rainy today and I can't go to Sunday school I will write to the Corner. I was glad to see so many nice letters in the Corner last week. I am going to school now, my teacher is Miss Minnie Farmer, I like her very much, she has only four scholars.

We have the same officers in our Sunday school this year as last year. Our organist will be married the 15th of this month, in the Oak Level church by Rev. J. D. Wicker, our pastor who has moved to Youngsville. I will answer Bertie Wicker's question. Peter found the money to pay his and his Master's tax in the fish's mouth, found in S. Matthew, 17:27. I will ask a question: who was Elan's father? I hope the Corner will be full of letters next week. Enclosed please find one dime for the BAND. I will close with much love to you, Aunt Tangle and the cousins.

I remain your little niece,
ORA WINSTON.

Ora, your letter is very nice and I hope it will not be very long till you will come again. I am glad to hear that you have such a nice young lady for a teacher, and hope you study real hard and try very much to please her with good lessons.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees, it was decided to commence the work of erecting a church building; which decision carries with it, the beginning of expenses, and is a reminder to all of us who have subscribed, that the money is now needed to carry forward the work to completion without hinderance. We desire to call the attention of subscribers, and those who have promised to give when the money should be needed, to the fact that we have no traveling agent to collect subscriptions: we need all the money to go into the building, therefore can not afford to pay traveling expense, and trust they will not wait to be reminded by any one, or wait until others have furnished the money to put the roof on, as some, (who seem to be in doubt), have proposed to do. We also call attention of our ministers especially to the fact while several have responded to the call for the Christmas offering, many have not yet reported; we trust, if any have failed to give the matter attention, they will do so at once and report as early as practicable. This is the work of our conferences and conventions, and it is to be hoped that no individual represented in those bodies will endeavor to find an excuse for the failure to perform a duty self imposed.

The Man In The Moon

Is supposed to have a special influence on the affairs of lovers, but comparatively few realize how very old the superstition is. This same man in the moon has for ages been the god of love of the Chinese, and, it is believed, slides down to earth on a moonbeam, ties the end of the lover's queue to the top of the fair maiden's nose, by a magical knot, after which nothing can prevent the union. The marriage ceremonies of this ancient nation are very curious and these and many others are described in a very interesting article on "Curious Customs of Courtship and Marriage," charmingly illustrated, published in Demorest's Family Magazine for March. There are a number of charming stories, good poems, there are innumerable illustrations, including a water-color of "A Viking Ship," and all the departments are full to overflowing of good things. Demorest's is the ideal "family" magazine, and every number is equally interesting. Published for 20 cents a copy, or $2 a year, by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 E 14th St., New York.

Death the Reaper.

The white horse and rider for the first time makes his appearance in our ranks; Mr S. J. Waddill is the victim. He was ill a very short time, and his untimely death is deeply felt by parents and friends.

Whereas, The Almighty Ruler and Director of the destinies of man has in accordance with His divine presence and clear conception of justice and mercy judged best to remove from our midst and his friends and loved ones S. J. Waddill.

Therefore be it resolved: That we as a student body deplore his death and extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in the loss of one who would bring sunshine into any home, and whose place can never be filled. We as students can only adopt these feeble words as a token of respect to our fellow member.

That the institution has lost a worthy young man and the church a consistent member.

May we in this hour of common calamity recognize the hand of the Allwise One and bow submissively to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, also that they be sent for publication to the South Boston News and CHRISTIAN SUN and that a copy be preserved by the Cleosophic Literary Society.

Mrs. Frances Pugh.

Your committee, appointed to draft resolutions of respect to the memory of Mrs. Frances Pugh a member of this society, beg leave to report the following.

1. That the Ladies Benevolent and Social Union of the Christian church always found sister Pugh a consistent and useful member, faithful and true to all the interests of the society, active in all enterprises and pleasant in all relations

2 That we feel keenly the loss we have sustained in her death, and yet we believe that she is at rest with Christ, and therefore we bow humbly to the will of our heavenly Father in this sad affliction.

3. That we tender our heartfelt condolence to her bereaved family in the loss of a Christian mother, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her daughter, and published in the CHRISTIAN SUN.

Did You?

The following from a writer in the Burlington News is not inappropriate or altogether without merit: Be ye not forgetful to entertain strangers lest ye entertain Angels unawares

My friends when you went to your respective churches Sunday did you behold a strange face in church or Sunday school? What did you do? Did you go to him or her and grip their hand with a cordial God bless you, welcome, come again? I fear not. Did you say, my friend and stranger come visit my home and there together we will search God's Holy word for our mutual Christian advancement?

But, I am afraid not, you rather got up an expression like that old pharisee who raised his eyes toward Heaven and said: "I thank thee, O God, etc.," that was not my business to look after strangers and visitors; so I went home and my friends visited me and a good time I had God bless that poet when he wrote, "Where is my wandering boy tonight?"

Fathers and mothers you are always sending a prayer up for your son who is in a far off land whom your eyes have not seen for years, that he may be guided in the paths of rectitude and dwell among Christians

Let us come home. Do you try to help some other mother's son along the same road that you want others to do for yours? Then if you do not you had better get right yourself.

Did you ask anybody to attend Sunday school with you Sunday, or church, if not why not?

Suffolk Letter.

The Ladies Benevolent and Social Union of the Christian church in Suffolk held an ice cream festival and children's entertainment last week for two nights which was a very pleasant and successful affair netting them over one hundred dollars. This Society has been blessed abundantly in their work, and the social features of the monthly meetings is an attraction for all.

The work on our new church progresses very hopefully and we hope to occupy part of the building within six or seven months. The majority of wood work is done, brick work and stone work about completed, windows are being made in Philadelphia, and the plastering will be done this spring. Pastors who have built churches will know that I am loaded down with work. The a total office furnishes all the work one can do in the preparation of three sermons a week, visiting the sick, (and the well too), attending society and committee meetings, etc. But this is Monday morning, when a preacher always feels tired, and proper allowance should be made for anything gloomy falling from my pen.

Rev. M. L. Hurley preached at Bethany in Southampton county yesterday and spent last night in Suffolk. I am happy to say that he has improved marvelously. He thinks the Buffalo Lithia water has saved his life, and it is gradually building up his health. The prospect for full restoration to health is good. For this thousands would be thankful. Even what I have written will send a thrill of joy into many hearts. When he went to Buffalo Lithia Springs the first of last September, his friends, himself, and the doctors, thought the end was near. But God overrules the the lives of men and we learn by so many examples that "our times are in his hands"

I understand that Rev. W. G. Clements, the editor of the Sun was also at Bethauy yesterday, and hope that he may have a successful and pleasant visit to Virginia.

Before I pen another letter to the Sun the administration of this government will change by the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland as President. But the government does not change, only the administration of it. The movements of party, politics are only currents in the great ocean of government. Deeper than the pet policy of any party are the great sentiments of a loyal people who are the sources of power, of wisdom, and of legislation. Thousands will attend the inauguration next Saturday, and it will be another historic day added to our Nation's glory. The retiring President will be the only ex-President who remains of all that train of honored Americans who have enjoyed honors of chief Magistrate over a great nation.

W. W. STALEY.

Windsor, Va.

The 2nd quarterly meeting was held with the church at Franklin the third Sunday in February. The most of my time was spent at the kind home of Bro J. R. Howell, a prominent prosperous merchant of the town. To him and his excellent wife we extend our profound thanks for special kindness. Monday night the Ladies Aid Society of the church met with Sister Mollie Howell. A large crowd met, and after attending to the business of the Society, refreshment was served, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed. Their Society appears to be in splendid working order, and judging from the collections made that night they found but little trouble to raise funds for church.

There was a beautiful marriage in the Christian church at Isle of Wight court house Thursday 23rd of February. The parties united in the holy bonds were Mr. William M. Stephenson and Miss Mollie A. Battin. A large and interested company met to witness the ceremony.

Sister J. C. Thomas one of the most active and influential members of Isle of Wight court house remembered her pastor in a substantial way last week. It is a pleasure to preach to, and work for, such people. May the Lord abundantly bless the giver with temporal and spiritual blessings.

Three new members were received into Windsor church first Sunday night in February and there are others expected to join soon.

Holland, Va.

DEAR SUN:—I made my regular appointment at Holland yesterday, We had a good congregation, some were there that had not been there this year.

I rejoiced to hear Bro. Deacon Keene was so much improved. I hope he will be among us again soon.

It begins to look as if Holland is on a fair way to be a town, as they expect to have two new houses there, timber having been placed on the land for that purpose.

I am glad to hear of, and see, the prosperous condition of Holland, and trust God will bless us.

Elijah Under the Juniper Tree.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

But he himself went a day's journey in the wilderness, and sat down under a juniper tree; and requested for himself that he might die; and he said, "It is enough, now O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers."—1 Kings 19:4.

There is one fact mentioned by the apostle James that lends a peculiar interest to the character of Elijah, and brings him nearer to us than any thing in his recorded history. "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are." Jam. 5:17. There are some characters in the history of nations so eminent for their virtues, and all cardinal graces are so harmoniously blended in them that looking at them from a distance, they seem to belong to a higher order of beings; and we feel that they could not have had the common infirmities of humanity to contend with as we have, or they never could have lived such lives as they did. Their excellencies and heroic actions are painted in such glowing colors by the historian, and their infirmities passed over in silence, that we come to feel that they are more divine than human. Such are the ideas and feeling of the people of to-day concerning General George Washington, and I remember the peculiar feelings awakened in my mind when I first read an account of his becoming angry, and almost shaking the life out of a man. Then, for the first time I realized that he was only a man. Thus in studying the wonderful history of Elijah, and following him in his marvelous works, witnessing the striking answers to his prayers by withholding the dew and rain for years, sending fire from heaven to consume his sacrifice and burn up his enemies; and the sending of rain to restore the wasted land. We feel that he must have been more than mortal; but the apostle brings him right down to our level by showing that he was a man of like passions with us. This is an encouraging fact, for if he was only a sinful man with all the weaknesses of human nature and had such power with God we are encouraged to follow his example. The apostle mentions this fact for this very purpose. (Jam. 5:16-18)

The incident now under consideration shows that Elijah was simply a man with all the infirmities of humanity when Ahab went from the wonderful scenes on Carmel to Jezreel, and told Jezebel how Elijah contended and then destroyed the priests of Baal it excited all the bad passions of her vindictive and cruel nature. She was furiously angry, and swore that she would kill him before the next night. He became alarmed and fled clear beyond Beersheba, fell exhausted under a juniper tree, and prayed for death. Prior to this his actions seem to have been almost superhuman, but now he shows all the weakness of human nature. The greatest and best of men are only men at the best; men of like passions with other men, on this I remark.

I. We are at first surprised at this panic-stricken paralysis of his faith, but there is as much to instruct us in this as in his heroic deeds in denouncing the wrong and struggling for the right. This fright and flight of Elijah teaches us a beautiful lesson. He was grand and noble in his struggle with Baalim, and exhibited a heroic courage that has but few parallels in the history of our race. In this we feel that he was far above us, and that we have but little affinity with him; but when we see him prostrate in his despairing weakness under the juniper tree we feel that he is our brother. This brings us into close sympathy with him.

Paul teaches us in his peculiar experience that when we are weak then are we strong, but Elijah's experience teaches us that when we are strong then we may be weak. Yesterday he stood single handed on Carmel contending in the most heroic manner with the enemies of God, but now hides in the wilderness from the anger of a woman. How changed!

The sudden reaction was owing more to physical causes than to any thing else, but he does not seem to have been aware of it. There is a mysterious sympathy between the mind and body, and when the mind is earnestly engaged and all its powers absorbed in some great work, it gives, for the time being, some of its vigor to the body, we have many illustrations of this in the history of man. The departed John Knox when old was very feeble physically, and had to be led into the pulpit by two men, one on each side of him; and when he first commenced his sermon he would have to hold on to the railing to keep from falling. As he advanced in his sermon and his mental powers were quickened it gave strength to his body until as James Melville says, "ere he was done with his sermon he was so active and so vigorous the he was lyk to ding the pulpit in blauds (knock it to pieces), and fly out of it." Rev. Thomas H. Stocton was physically very feeble for several years before he died, and troubled with a terrible cough. When he would commence his sermon it would bring on a paroxysm of coughing, and some times it would be five minutes that he could not utter a word; but he would persevere until the mind gained control of the body imparted its own vigor to it, and he would preach with wonderful power.

On the other hand when after long continued strain the tension is slackened, the body runs down, and imparts its weariness to the mind. While moved by some all absorbing motive, and in the heat of action, man is not conscious of physical fatigue; but when the strain is removed, and the weight of responsibility taken away, both mind and body runs down. When the mother is watching over a sick child it is marvelous what she can endure, and she seems to be raised above the need of food and sleep. Through weariness some days and nights of anxious watching she goes on a wonder to her friends, and to herself; but when the danger is over and the hour of relaxation comes she sinks in body and mind. In this condition the nervous system is all unstrung, and the slightest things will disturb and depress the mind. Noises that at other times we would not notice crash on the nerves, and set us almost distracted. This is a law of our nature, and we all know something about it by experience. This was the trouble with Elijah. For days his nerves had been strung up to the most fearful tension, and he had passed through an exciting conflict; but when he gained the great victory on Carmel he felt that his work was done, and this removed the weight of responsibility. He felt free, and the reaction came. His nervous system sunk, and he was all unstrung. The threatenings of Jezebel which before he heeded not, now startled and alarmed him, and in fear he fled to the wilderness, and prayed for death. How true to human nature! In his ignorance of the laws of his own nature he magnified his dangers, forgot how God had taken care of him through all the past, and sank in despair. There is nothing unnatural or strange in this.

There is an important lesson in this lesson for us, and we should learn from it to distinguish between physical lassitude, and spiritual depression. Elijah in his nervous exhaustion mistook the depression flowing from it for the desertion of Jehovah. Many of the hours of spiritual depression are caused by physical derangement, and often when Christians go to their pastors for comfort they should go to their physician for medical treatment. In reading the biography of Dr. Payson I was much impressed with his frequent depression of feelings, and fear that God had forsaken him; but the facts in the case showed that it was measurbly the result of physical derangement caused by over work. It was the same that it was with Elijah. What he needed was rest and nourishing food, and these the Lord gave him.

Frequently when persons are suffering from depression, and imagine that they are forsaken of God a careful investigation would show that the cause of this gloom is a morbid state of the stomach, liver and kidneys, or other parts not perceptible to the patient. The saddest case of spiritual depression that I ever knew came entirely from physical derangement. A pious young man, a member of the Baptist church in Newark, N. J., suddenly lost his enjoyment, imagined himself doomed, or even worse, that he was the devil himself. No encouragement of the gospel would he receive. He went to the railroad, threw himself before an approaching train, and was crushed. This depression was the result of a morbid physical state.

It is evident from this history that Elijah gave too great a prominence to himself in this work. This is obvious in the answer that he gave to the question: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" (1 Kings 19:14.) There are traces of self complacency, and self importance in this language; and he was evidently suffering some from wounded self conceit. The wonderful answers to his prayers, and the great works that he had accomplished had given him an undue idea of his importance in this matter. This was lifting him up in self pride. There is great danger of this in the best of men, and especially where great success attends their labors. Samuel was one of the purest minded and noblest men that ever lived, but he fell into this very mistake; and placed too high an estimate on himself. When the people wanted a new ruler because of the wicked misrule of his sons he took it as a personal insult, and was greatly displeased. It depressed him very much, but God both rebuked and strengthened him by saying, "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them. Samuel had come to feel that he was doing the work. (1 Sam. 8:1-8) Elijah was in the same state of mind, and needed this sad experience to get him out of it. The prophet Jonah was sent on a remarkable mission to the city of Nineveh to declare that in forty days the city should be destroyed. The people heard, believed, and repented. God pardoned and saved them, but Jonah was greatly displeased, and very angry. He prayed for the Lord to take away his life just as Elijah had done. Why was this? Because he thought that it would reflect on his reputation as a prophet, God humbled him by showing him his wicked folly in a most remarkable manner. (Jonah 4: 4-11)

Great a man as Paul the apostle was he fell into the same error. God had greatly blessed him in the wonderful revelations that he had given him, and the mighty works accomplished through him. This awakened a feeling of self complacency and of undue importance of himself in the work of the Lord. To correct this, and humble him a grievous affliction was sent upon him. (2 Cor. 12:1-10.)

Elijah was unduly influenced by this feeling, and to show him who and what he was God left him to himself; and how weak he became in a moment. The strength of the hero was gone, and he fled in deadly fear from Jezebel. Some of the angels grew proud, lost their wings, and fell into Gehenna. (2 Pet. 2:4.)

The remembrance of how frail we are would take all self-conceit out of us. When ——— found that his end was near he said, "I have been every thing; and every thing is nothing." Then ordering the urn to be brought to him in which his ashes were to be enclosed on his body being burned, he said, "Little urn, thou shalt contain one for whom the world was too little."

There is a valuable lesson in this for all of us. It teaches us to think less of our own importance and aggrandizement, and more of the glory of God. Jonah when groaning in anguish under his withered gourd vine wishing for death was thinking more of his own reputation as a prophet than of the glory of God in the salvation of the thousands of the Ninevites.

Sometimes when we are not put in just the position that we think we ought to be we are depressed, discouraged, feel that every thing is going to ruin, and we want to give up. Perhaps that was just the discipline we needed, and will make us more useful.

Sometimes churches get proud of their wealth, members, and so in a position; and feel that they are doing a great work themselves. This destroys their spirituality, and God leaves them to their own strength to teach them how weak they are.

When we begin to worry over our lack of recognition, we are getting into a wrong spirit, and will soon find ourselves under the Juniper tree crying out, "I am weary; would that I were dead." It is the humble man who is the most patient, the most persistent in the work of the Lord. Your proud self-important man flies off at a tangent when things do not run in the line of his feelings and desires, and like Jonah, he would rather see every thing go to ruin than not have his own way. There are some such preachers. There were such men among the ancient people of God, and they brought great trouble and affliction on Israel. (Num. 12:1-2.)

Self is the worst enemy that we have to contend with, and the last one conquered. Alexander subdued the mighty legions of Persia but failed to conquer his own passions. Cesar triumphed in a hundred battles; but fell a victim to his ambition to be king. Bonapart conquered nearly the whole of Europe; but did not conquer his own vaulting ambition.

The greatest hero is he who gains the victory over self. (Prov. 16:32.) Too many are like the fabled Narcissus, who resisted all the charms of others, but coming one day to an open fountain of silvery clearness, stoops down to drink, and saw his own image. He thought it some beautiful water-spirit living in the fountain. He gazed at the lovely image adored, and fell in love with himself, and could not break the fascination.

Aaron and his sister Miriam fell into this sin of self-conscious importance, and rebelled against the authority of Moses. (Num. 12:1-2.) Their pride was touched, and they felt that they were not treated as they deserved to be. They had a higher opinion of themselves than God had. They had been looking into the fountain, seen and fell in love with themselves. This is one of the infirmities of human nature, and it takes severe discipline to correct it.

II. Though Elijah acted imprudent, in asking seclusion at a time when he was not manifestly successful in establishing the truth, and in giving up to melancholy forebodings; yet the Lord did not forsake him, but sent his angel to provide for him. Glorious truth! How tender and loving God was in all his treatment of the prophet. He let him sleep and furnished him with food to restore his nervous system to a normal condition before he said any thing to him about his having run away from his work. This was necessary that he might be benefited by his instruction, for at first he was too nervous to receive rebuke profitably. A son blinded by passion, runs away from home. The father goes after him, and finds him, sick and starving; but he calls in a physician, and nourishes him back to health again with tender care before he says any thing to him about his waywardness in running away. He nurses him into a fit state of mind to receive profitably what he wishes to say to him. Thus it was that God dealt with Elijah.

This spirit is beautifully illustrated in the life of Christ. (Isa. 42: 13.) The tenderness of Christ is revelation of the Father's heart.

There is a figure used by the prophet that reveals the infinite compassion of the Father most beautifully. "Thou wilt cast all our sins into the depths of the sea." (Micah 7:18-19.) The sea is so vast that it can swallow up mountains as well as mole-hills. This illustrates the boundless ocean of God's compassion. He can and will forgive the greatest sins of the greatest sinner when he comes to him in humble penitence. There is a beautiful story of a heathen who when a bird flew into his bosom for refuge from a hawk, said, "I will not kill thee, nor betray thee to thine enemy, seeing thou flewst to me for a sanctuary." Much less will God either slay or give up the soul that takes refuge in his mercy. (Psalm 18:2.)

A drover in the west, on leaving home, promised to bring, on his return, a doll to his youngest child. Having finished his business, his usual way was to start early in the morning for home, but this time he was deeply impressed to return at once. It was night and very dark and stormy, but he started; and when several miles from home he was startled by a cry like that of a child. He stopped and listened. He called, and it answered him. Cowardly feelings came up in his soul; for he knew that it was known that he had a large sum of money with him, and he thought this might be a plan to rob him. He heard the plaintive cry again, and it awoke every feeling of the father in his heart. He thought of his own little ones at home, and alighting from his horse, he followed in the darkness the sound of the voice. Soon he found a little dripping thing, that moaned and sobbed as he took it in his arms. He wrapped up as best he could, to his surprise, that it was his own child, who had wandered out on the prairie to meet her father. Such is the mercy of our Father in heaven, and when his erring sobbing child cries to him in broken hearted agony under conviction of sin he takes the penitent in his arms of mercy and forgives.

God's mercy and power are the same from generation to generation. He is the same now that he was in the days of Elijah. "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." This is a fact that we sometimes lose sight of and suffer despondency because of this. We forget that God feels the same interest in his children now that he did in the days of Elijah, and that he will take care of us as he did of him. Forgetting this fact we suffer undue anxiety of mind, and are tortured with fear. This should not be. We should trust in him realizing that his watchful care is over us, and that he will bring us off our conquerors through him with love and us, and given himself for us.

1. When the Christian neglects his duty God brings him to repentance and to his work again by gentle means if this will do, if not he uses severe means. He touched the heart of Elijah first by the visit of an angel, and then to wake him up more thoroughly he led him up into the mountains where he made a more impressive manifestation of himself to him. This brought him back into his work again the same earnest man that he was before he fled from it into the wilderness. It took severe means to bring Jonah back to his duty. He came back through "the belly of hell" (Jonah 1:1-17:19.) Miriam became proud and lifted up, and left her work to find fault with Moses. She was envious of him. (Num. 12:1-2.) God had to use very severe means to humble and bring her back to her duty. (12:4-10.)

2. The sending an angel to feed his servant evinced God's deep interest in and love for him; but he has given us a greater expression of his interest in and love for us. He sent his Son to die for our redemption. (John 3:16-17.) No mission of angels, nor anything that they could do for man, would reveal the loving interest that God feels in us as it is manifested in the gift of his Son.

3. The angel prepared food for Elijah, and he went in the strength of it forty days. This was wonderful. God fed his people on angel's food for forty years in the wilderness. (Psalm 78: 24-25.) This pointed to Christ. (John 6: 48-51.) The bread that Christ furnishes will last the Christian all through life, and it becomes more precious the longer we eat of it. The Jews once loathed their manna. (Num. 11:1-6.) The better the Christian becomes acquainted with "the bread of life" the more he loves it. (John 4:5-15.)

One of the glorious peculiarities of this bread is no one can rob us of it. This is beyond the power of men or devils. (Psalm 23:9.) We are safe.

As we approach the end of life religion becomes more and more precious to us, for it alone enables us to go hence in peace. There is an intense desire in the human soul to be able to go into eternity in peace with God who dwells in the presence. This desire cannot be taken out of man, and it is Christianity alone that can give this peace. It has enabled the dying Christian to go hence in peace and rejoicing though in the midst of the most terrible physical suffering. In the year 177 Blandina at Loyses was arrested, and tortured in the most dreadful manner. Frail girl, they roasted her on a red-hot iron clam; put her in a net and exposed her to the horns of the wildest oxen; whirled her in instruments of torture, till her senses were lost, and then plunged her into flames; and day after day did this, when she seemed to suffer but little pain, calling out at every interval when her strength came back: "I am a believer in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, one God who is with me. There is no evil done among us, I am a Christian." O sinner, would you have this sublime faith and hope? Then come to Christ. He alone can enable you to go into eternity in peace with conscience and God.

LESSON X.—MARCH 5.

KEEPING THE SABBATH.—NEHEMIAH. 13:15-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—Exodus 20:8

TIME.—About 18 years after the last lesson.

PLACE.—Jerusalem and vicinity.

INTRODUCTORY.

Many events have transpired since the reading of the law mentioned in our last lesson. Nehemiah remained at Jerusalem about 12 years after the rebuilding of the walls. During these 12 years the city was prosperous, because God's laws were obeyed and His name revered. But Nehemiah was at last recalled to Babylon for some purpose unknown to us. He was absent from Jerusalem quite a time. In his absence many changes took place. The wicked element of the Jews began to be negligent in giving their devotions and sacrifices to God at the temple. Through their influence many of the fainted-hearted were led to do the same thing. Soon the temple services were neglected to such an extent that the Levites were not supplied with enough to eat from their portion of decreasing number of sacrifices, and they had to abandon their office and resort to something else for a living. The temple services being abandoned, it was an easy thing for the people to be led into the desecration of the Sabbath. They threw open their gates to the merchants of Tyre and Sidon, and allowed them to mingle freely among the people of Jerusalem. These and Phoenician merchants put up their business establishments and traded with the people. They did not restrict their trade to six days in the week, but sold all day Sunday. The Jews were quick to follow the example of their cousins, the Phoenicians, and in a little time the Sabbath was the day of greatest activity among them. Another evil which the Jews resumed was inter-marriage with the surrounding tribes, Malachi, who lived at this time tells us that they even put away the Jewish wives of their youth in order that they might take to themselves wives of the Gentiles. The greatest crime, perhaps, of all was the act of Eliashib, the high priest. He went as far as to fit up an apartment in the temple for his heathen kinsman, Tobiah, and by so doing, showed his contempt for God and all things holy.

THE LESSON TEXT, NEH. 13:15-22.

15. In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine-presses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16. There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day?

18. Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath.

19. And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath day.

20. So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21. Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? If ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth, came they no more on the Sabbath.

22. And I commanded the Levites, that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the Sabbath day. Remember me O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

EXPLANATORY.

I. The Sabbath Day Profaned.—16-17.

When Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem after a long absence, he is astonished at the change in the conduct of his people. He saw them on the Sabbath day making wine, bringing in their farming produce from the country, selling goods, and engaged in eating drinking and reveling. The land of Canaan was noted for its luscious grapes. The people were much given to cultivating vineyards, which they make a source of great profit. They had been taught by the Gentiles with whom they were daily connected, that keeping the Sabbath resulted in nothing more than pecuniary loss, and that to work seven days in the week would enable them to make a much greater amount of corn and wine, and would be the means of enriching them. But this vicious teaching was the cause of ruin to Israel, and has been the cause of physical prostration to many nations. And yet intelligent people are not yet convinced. There are men among us now men who profess to be Christians, who are striving to teach a doctrine similar to the Tyrian merchants. If those who are so earnest in their advocacy for the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, would but reflect a little more on the fate of all those nations who have tolerated such things, probably they would be constrained to change their minds on the subject. The Sabbath is not kept as should be by Christian people now, and why does any one want to make it worse.

II. Sabbath Reform.—17-22.

Nehemiah at once enters upon the work of righting the existing wrongs. His first act was to drive the heathen Tobiah out of the temple, and to cleanse that sacred edifice of all the impure things which had been placed within its borders. This reminds us of Christ's over-turning the tables of the money-changers, and driving out those engaged in merchandise. The temple was dedicated to the Lord, and no one had a right to use it for any purpose save that of God's worship. This should be strictly observed in all our churches. If a church is dedicated to God's service, then it is certainly sacrilegious to use it for any other purpose.

After cleansing the temple, Nehemiah begins to work among the chief men of the city for reform. He reasons with them most earnestly and points them to the history of their ancestors and the fate brought on because they disobeyed the fourth commandment. He stirs up these chief men by his preaching and exhortation to do better. He combines his authority with his exhortations and orders the gates to be closed on Sunday, and even places his own trustworthy servants at the gate to guard them. But the merchants and traders thus shut out were incredible. They did not believe that Nehemiah would enforce his orders, but they soon learned better, and were only too glad to leave the city altogether.

The prayer of Nehemiah here recorded is explainable in this: his course excited great opposition. Men envied his very name, and contrived every means to ruin his influence, and to take his life. He had to fight as it were single-handed, in the great battle of reform. He did not expect any honor or applause from men, but he looked beyond this little selfish world to a more glorious one, and there by faith beheld his reward. His cry to God was an invocation for farther protection.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

Christians do not desecrate the Sabbath.

Heavenly influence is degrading.

We should always be ready to work for Sabbath reform.

The abolition of the Sabbath insures the destruction of the nation.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Notes from Harvard.

Mr. Editor, so far as your correspondent remembers he has never yet been accused of being a pessimist or in general of taking a dark view of things. But I declare one does see a thing or two now and then which reminds one of those stormy days when Thomas Carlyle in his altogether unique and characteristic style "dipped his pen in gall to write up a nation of rascals, atheists, robbers and cut throats." Poor Carlyle! He abused and lashed and satirized the nations and the times in which he lived. But I expect he said many true things—many things that were not only true with regard to his own time and people but which could even apply to our own times and people—may be with a little stretch sometime. Listen a moment at his words and let us see if we cannot even at this late date, find for them some application. Some where in "past or present" you will find words like these, "It is said our religion is gone. There is no longer any God for us! God's absolute laws, sanctioned by an eternal heaven and an eternal hell, have become moral philosophies, sanctioned by able computations of profit and loss, by weak considerations of pleasures of virtue and the moral sublime. God's laws have become a greatest-happiness principle, a parliamentary expediency: the heavens overarch us only as astronomical time-keeper; a butt for telescopes to shoot science at, to shoot senti-mentalties at:—man has lost the very soul out of him: and now after the due period—begins to find the want of it. For actually this is not the real fact of the world; the world is not made so and so, but otherwise. The universal being intrinsically a perhaps, being too probably an infinite humbug, why should any minor humbug astonish us: Truly any society setting out from this no-God hypothesis will arrive at a result or two." That is what I say too Carlyle, or why did you not add also which is a truth, that any individual starting from this hypothesis will arrive at a result or two also? And yet methinks there are individuals and societies even who really do start at this present time from this "no-God hypothesis"—or at least try to make believe that they do start from there. And as Carlyle says, they will in the end arrive at a result or two—either in this world or in the world to come—more probably in the latter. It may be because I am half-behind and do not understand at all the nature of things or what not, but it is one of the strangest things I ever thought of, that as soon as many students begin to learn a little science or philosophy, a little something of those deeper, nobler, sublimer truths about the human mind and nature and eternal fitness of things they begin to want to attack the Bible, declare themselves skeptics, doubters and such like. And yet I know there is a very large class of people in this world of this kind. Very learned fellows they—so they would have the world think (and I guess this "would have the world think" accounts for much of this so-called non-belief, doubt, etc.) Why suppose every wild theory of science that has ever been propagated from Adam down to the present were absolutely proven: and suppose further that it were mathematically demonstrated that man sprung from a monkey, ape, dog, cat or what not: and then suppose it were shown that the brain excretes thought as a tree excretes gum: and then upon this suppose (if it is not too great a strain upon the imagination—a faculty which is much exercised in these latter days by the way) that it were absolutely shown that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, or that Isaiah, John and Paul did not write either all or a part of the Sacred Scriptures credited to them—I say suppose all this were proven (which however by no means is nor is likely to be) then what of the situation? Would this alter God's eternal truth of things? No, no, ten thousand times No. As to those who busy themselves about the first three suppositions above, I wonder if it never occurred to them that beyond the surface "How" of science there is a deeper and more fundamental "How" that has never been answered save in the light of a great first cause and that with every "how" there goes a "why" and it takes as many letters to spell the "why" as it does the "how" and this "why" no argument or evidence can answer save the evidence of thousands and tens of thousands of human hearts, all of which join in the chorus "God's purpose and plan over all and through all." As to the two latter suppositions, I but reiterate the terms of Dr. Dale and myriads or others. I know that in these sacred books saints of all churches and of many races have found a light and a life which they found nowhere beside. They are hallowed and consecrated by the afflictions, and reverence, the faith of many generations of devout and holy men, to whom they have revealed God and to whom they have rendered possible a saintly life. And could it be proven by an army of Drs. Briggs that the gospels were written by unknown persons belonging to whatever time or generation they pleased, yet those who have found God in the story of Christ would still be sure that they preserve the true tradition of His life and teachings. And those who by believing in the Sacred Scriptures have, by an eye of faith and the mercy of God, ascended to new height of spiritual vision would still be sure, and bear witness of that fact, that their nameless guide—call him Moses, John or what not—had been taught of God. When I contemplate the history of the Christian religion and what it has done for the world; when I have the direct testimony of the best people the world ever knew and when I see that the Sacred Scriptures in their entirety have been the very life and light of civilization, I feel like saying to Dr. Briggs and the rest of the pseudo-theologico-scientific worshipers "away with your bosh and give us a rest."

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Since the roughest of the winter has, as we trust, passed, I have entered upon my work again, I have met my appointments at Pleasant Grove, Ingram, Va., and Damascus, N.C.; these were interesting appointments; the congregations were very good considering the weather. The brethren as well as myself seemed to be hungry for the service. The brethren at all these points took considerable interest in the business meetings of these several churches, I have not yet been able to discover any special inroad that the devil has made upon my congregations during the holidays, I received a letter from one of my young members who wrote me just after the Xmas days were over, that did my heart good. I quote this sentence from the letter, viz., "Dear Pastor, the Xmas days are gone and I have nothing especially to regret," I received another letter about the close of the last conference year, that filled my soul with joy, that letter contained such kind words, of appreciation of the pastor's effort to serve them as their spiritual advisor, and at the close of that letter this dear sister says, as a further evidence of our appreciation of our pastor please find inclosed $5 00, as a present. When I broke the seal and read this kind and affectionate letter my eyes filled with tears of gratitude. If our brethren knew how helpful and heart cheering such kind words to a pastor are I believe there would be much more of it done. I felt that the kind words contained in this letter did my soul much more good than the bill of money it contained, and yet I am sure that was highly appreciated. These is another favor which we very recently received that I assure you was duly appreciated, and especially when I remember the high price of bacon, (it was a nice ham.) Many thanks to these dear friends for their kindness may the Lord bless them here, with an abundance, and in the world to come with life everlasting. Every thing is cheerful at Elon. No one sick here at this time, that I know of.

There are three more buildings going up here now and good prospect for more soon. We are enjoying our new home very much.

Elon College Notes.

Dear Friends, this is a lovely day, and those who do not take time to see the beauty and mercy and goodness of God in nature fail to imbibe what alone can build up the higher man.

When we look around and see the timber being hoisted into the air, as if by magic, we must say let the good work go on. This is the place for good men to come and this is the place for them to remain good. Of course they should be good everywhere, and at all times, but then every place has not the Christian influence that is thrown around one at Elon College.

Dr. J. U. Newman gave us an excellent talk in Prayer meeting last night. His subject was "all things are yours." He proclaimed many encouraging truths. But there is a condition in the above—"if we are Gods, all things are ours."

Rev. W. C. Wicker filled his appointment at Union Ridge yesterday. Bro. Wicker is an earnest, devout young man.

Pres. Long and Prof. Scholz attended the association of College Professors at Raleigh last week.

The Glee Club gave the entertainment Wednesday evening, and judging from the way everybody laughed, it was a very enjoyable occasion.

I would that the friends of the College would read Prof. Atkinson's letter in last week's SUN. No patron of the College should be without the SUN and the Elon Monthly in his home. It requires money to keep these up. Can't you encourage us by subscribing at once?

Respectfully,

ELIJAH MOFFITT.

BRO. CLEMENTS:—Our ministers and laymen's Council was held at Shiloh, Randolph county. Revs. J. A. Webster, W. W. Hayworth, W. B. Richardson, H. T. Moffitt, H. A. Albright, and licentiates, S. T. Moffitt, and W. N. House, were present. Four churches were represented. Owing to the continued bad weather our meeting was very small. A very good interest was manifested, and I hope some good was done. The winter has so far been unusually severe, and there has not been much church work done for about two months.

The people are becoming anxious about the Minutes of Conference—the "Annuals."—Our next Council meeting will be held with the church at Macedonia, near Asheboro, on April 29th and 30th, 1893. We hope the brethren will bear this meeting in mind, and let it be made a good success. This is a new church and much good may be done to our cause there. Then turn out ministers and laymen having the harness on to do work for the Master.

The school at Shiloh, under J. B. Miller, principal, is doing good work and succeeding well.

Bro. Patton's school at Parks' Cross Roads Academy is flourishing so far as I know.

Truly,

H. A. ALBRIGHT.

Church at Lexington, N. C.

We are few in members, but strong in faith. Bro. Roach, our pastor was with us on the third Sunday and Saturday before in Feb. He preached three plain, strong, practical sermons. We feel much encouraged, and look forward anxiously to the time when this will be a strong church. We want the prayers of the brethren and sisters in our behalf. We hope that any of the preachers in passing will call and preach for us.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Raleigh church congregations have not been as good as usual since Christmas until last Sunday.

Prof. Atkinson's letter this week is a spicy bit sure. And we must confess that his conclusions are not far from the point.

We are pained to learn, just as we are going to press, that Mrs. Dr. Barrett quite recently suffered a bad fall from which she sustained serious injuries. No particulars. We sincerely hope she is not hurt as badly as reported.

The Rev. J. H. Nelson, Methodist, is in jail in Para, Brazil, serving out a four months' sentence for saying that the worship of the Virgin Mary is idolatry. That is what Romanism does where it has the power.—Western Recorder.

We are putting in some extra licks to get the Annual out next week. We may on that account give you a half sized paper. If we do you may depend on it that it will last but two weeks when we will have it full size—16 pages—again

At their January meeting the Board of Trustees of the Christian Publishing Association were pleased to release me from the general editorial management of the Herald of Gospel Liberty and transfer the same to Rev. G. D. Black, who becomes responsible for the general make-up of the paper, following the issue of March 2d. The Board assigns to me the first page of the Herald and the second editorial page. All communicated matter intended for the Herald will therefore, after February 25th, be directed to Editor G. D. Black. I am to retain the management of the Sabbath school literature—the Glad Tidings, Sunday School Herald, Bible Class Quarterly, Intermediate Quarterly, and Little Teacher. All matter for this department may be addressed to me as heretofore.—Herald of Gospel Liberty

Dr. T. M. McWhinney professes to be a follower of the meek and lowly Nazarine who commanded, love your neighbor as yourself, yet his love(?) for his neighbor, the poor laboring man, is so great that he would compel him to labor seven days in the week. At least that is our inference from his weighty arguments in favor of opening the World's Fair on Sunday. The Law of Nature demands that her creatures have their seasons of rest, and, in the wise providence of God, we see in the Holy Writ one day in seven set apart. May God help us to preserve the day of rest from designing money gormans and the duped followers of their sharp and wise(?) theories. We candidly believe that if Dr. McWhinney would devote as much time and energy to finding reasons why the gates of the Fair should be closed on the Sabbath he would surprse himself at the result.

Rev. W. G. Clements, the editor of the SUN, is down in the tide-water region in the interest of the SUN this week, and it is hoped he will not come back empty handed. It is an absolute necessity that we have money in this office! Does that surprise you and cause you to ask, why? Well, well, will we have to tell you that there is the ink, and the paper, and the postage, and the oil, and the rent, and the taxes, and the repairs to keep up, and the printers, and the coal, and the wood, besides other little things innumerable that cost money, and not a small sum of it either. Yes, and there is the office devil, poor fellow, he has to be paid too. So you see it has taken lots of moneu to send that paper to you during the past year. Now show that you appreciate our labors and sacrifice by sending in to this office or paying to Bro. Clements that little "dab" you owe us, and thus make us your friend for another 12 months.

Influence.

Whenever matter comes in contact with matter, either in mass, particles or atoms, an influence is thrown across from one to the other, bringing about a change in each. Such change may weaken or strengthen, make better or worse according to the union made by the new amalgamation. A piece of wet wood coming in contact with one that is dry, communicates to the dry one some of the moisture of the wet one. Hence the wet one is made dryer, and the dry one wet. In many things, however, this equal distinction is not kept up but there is a continual gain, one upon the other until finally the qualities of one becomes the whole, as the leaven hid in the measure of meal by the woman till all is leavened.

The charging process, by which things are made different by surrounding influences usually takes place little by little. The beautiful white carpet which covered the earth did not come down in one solid sheet, but came by degrees, white flake after flake until the earth was changed from the dark dirty tinge to the white snow sheet, seen in every direction.

From the influence change of material things, something may be learned of the sinful and the righteous bearings of all questions, in individuals, communities, states, nations, and churches. As the contest of these two forces goes on, the territory is occupied by one as the other gives up the ground.

Sin does not expect to capture the whole man, city or nation in a moment, but throws out its poisonous influence againsts the object it desires to capture, and as the parts of contact are affected, all the forces rapidly pushed forward to occupy every inch of advantage ground gained.

As all things which touch each other, whether material or immaterial, must of necessity force some of its own qualities into the object of contact, watchfulness should be continual guard ready to give the alarm of approaching sin. Every act of life is sure to imprint some where either for good or bad. How sad it must be to find along the road of this world's doings men and women full of sin's putrifying sores, the results of the thoughtless conduct of church members!

The great object of life should be to send out an influence of sweet incense pleasing to the Lord, thereby turning the world toward the better land.

Denominationalism.

A denomination is a body of religious people following some particular leader, or distinguished by some peculiar tenets, and distinguished by a term which distinguishes it from other bodies. It is exclusive in character. It is not designed for all of God's people, but only those who professedly adhere to the peculiar tenets of that body. This definition being correct, are we a denomination? We follow no (human) leader, are distinguished by no peculiar tenets, and designated by no term to distinguished us from the rest of God's people. We are not exclusive, but all embracing in character. The Christian church is not designed for any certain class of Christians, but for all those of whom Christ is the head, and Christ is certainly the head of all. We have often been criticised for adopting the name Christian.

We have never adopted this or any other name. The point in which we differ from other bodies is, that we have refused to adopt any name, but simply wear the name given by God and so proudly worn by all his followers from apostolic times to the present,—the name Christian. We do not believe in denominationalism; how then can we consistently be a denomination? In this sense we are not a sect nor a denomination, and here are some of the reasons why we are not:

1. Denominationalism tends to encourage inconsistency and dishonesty among Christians.

2. It tends to discourage a free and unbiased study of God's word.

3. It creates and perpetuates a feeling hostile to the principle of the universal brotherhood of man and the oneness of God's people.

4. It decreases the power and efficiency of the church universal by disorganizing his force.

5. It is contrary to all economic principles, necessitating a waste of time, talents, and moneu.

6. It is of human origin and contrary to the Word of God.

It is our purpose to notice from time to time in the columns of the SUN each of the above objections to denominationalism. We ourselves are not out of danger. We are liable to either of two extremes,—that of becoming denominational, or of coniving at it in others under the name of charity.

Making Sacrifices.

The thought of sacrifice too often carries with it only the darker side of the question, that of suffering for the sake of some thing else. It is true that it has a meaning of this kind. And it is also true, that to suffer for some thing else is a grand act, but there is a brighter side than this. Sacrifice presents the idea of setting apart for heaven. Seen from this side it is a pleasing thought. Giving to the cause of Christ, if done in the right spirit, is more of a dedication to heaven than a suffering sacrifice in the way of loss.

All the sacrifice, in the form of death, which God requires of the people, is one to sin. It is not a death of flesh and blood and faculties; for in dying to sin these are given to heaven.

Many very good people think when they give any thing to the cause of the church that they have actually thrown it away, so far as it benefits them is concerned. But this is not true. It is only started on a journey of usefulness to themselves and others. The liberal soul is to be made fat, not poor. God promises to give back to those who give, and in good measure.

The Increase of Power.

It has been said that knowledge is power. And this is true; but power may be turned in a wrong direction as well as in a right one. Hence, the importance of religious teaching in order to turn the hand of power in the right direction.

The increased knowledge of science in modern times has given much greater power to man for either good or evil, and is being used in both directions. Some of the modern inventions of powerful explosives, do great good when in Christian hands, but are powerful forces for evil under the direction of the wicked hand of the anarchist.

Whilst by use of these explosives, the mighty rocks are thrown from river beds, making way for the vessels of commerce, the way is seen by means of under ground gaspipes for the quick destruction of a city. Thus it may be seen that power may be a curse or a blessing according to the use made of it.

As knowledge increases, responsibility increases. And this will apply alike to individuals and nations. As fast as these new powers are born, we should put forth the very best efforts to turn them on the side of Christ. We may be sure that the devil will make use of every new power which may come into existence to push forward his work, if he can possibly utilize it in any way. One great work of the church should be to muster all new forces into the army of the Lord as fast as they may be found.

Wake Chapel N. C.

On Saturday before the third Sunday was a called church meeting at Wake Chapel. The business was transacted in harmony. On Sunday the congregation was large and attentive. Friday night was spent with brother G. B. Alford at Holly Springs. He greatly endeared himself and family to us by many acts of kindness shown.

Saturday night was spent with the family of M. C. Utley. It is always a great pleasure to visit this excellent family.

Sunday night was spent again at Holly Springs. This time with sister Margaret Rowland and Dr. B. S. Utley. These are also excellent families.

Whilst in the neighborhood of the church we visited Bro Wm. Rowland the father of the great and good preacher, O. Rowland of Texas. Bro. Wm. Rowland has been quite sick, but was improving when we were there.

A Contrast, or The Mid-night Reflections of an Idle Brain.

What a contrast! Yesterday was a day of perfect splendor. Nature—great, broad, beautiful nature—was charming, inviting and enchanting. With ten thousand harmonious voices of chirping bird, gurgling brooklet and gently-murmuring breeze, it seemed to invite man from the hurry, warty and conventionalities of life into the open fields and woodland glades, bespeaking a boundless freedom and a happy liberty, resplendent and aglow with God's glittering sunlight and telling of an undying love and an infinite joy. Its freshness gave life. Its warmth and merriment gave pleasure and gladness. Its sublime gentleness, its unadorned beauty and impressive grandeur seemed to whisper "God is love." Its cheering aspect, its life giving energy, and its complex, but ceaseless harmony, all seemed to join in singing "God is good and his mercy endureth forever." And as infinite love, boundless joy and untold gladness displayed themselves in every phase, feature and voice of nature the noiseless chorus of the elements seemed to be "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Yes, truly was yesterday a pure and perfect day—a day in which a dear Heavenly Father seemed to stamp his very image upon our souls—an image of a being whose very attributes are but the personification of Goodness, Love and Beauty.

But yesterday—ah! what a day is gone now. It is numbered with the past and will never, never return. It was only one day ago. But look now will you upon the face and bosom of nature. All has changed. The very elements do but seem to heat war with themselves. Look and listen! Has not nature itself become tired of its own freedom and liberty of existence? Does she not grow maddened, furious and desperate with exercise of her own boundless powers? Now dark, threatening and lowering clouds o'er shadow the earth. Driving snow, beating hail, chilling and blasting rain showers, each and all, driven by a headstrong and merciless wind, intermingle with one another in alternate succession. The sun, as it were, hiding his face in shame; compassion, or disgust, silently sinks behind the western hills and light of day is gone. Night comes on apace. More furious the winds howl and lash themselves with entangled snow, hail and rain upon darkened landscape and now frowning and embittered nature. Is nature mad or is she weeping? Are these winds that drive, hiss and howl unhallowed requiems to yesterday's infinite grandeur and beauty?

Or do they choose this means to chant the approach of the coming merry spring time? Or is there not still another horn to the dilemma? Is not here a striking simile and also an impressive lesson?

Here the simile and interwoven with it the lesson. Have I not seen lives with just this striking contrast? At one period it seemed a life of beauty, fragrance and promise for the future. It was in harmony with all around and in pursuit of happiness through performance of duty (for how else can happiness come?) it seemed to shed its rays of sunshine and beams of gladness upon hearts and lives around. But that life changed. It substituted fickle pleasure for true happiness and greed of gain, honor, fame, self-aggrandizement came in place of performance of duty and that life ended in darkened, maddened and wreckless fury. Again, Life may be part beauty, gladness, pleasure and dreams—but not all. As the days, nature and the elements themselves do vary and change so must this life of mine with its alternate and varied scenes of pleasure, sorrow, gladness and grief.

But when these alternations have ceased, when these fickle changes have wearied themselves with their own ever varying restlessness and the lowering clouds and threatening winds have become tired of their threatenings and their fury, may it not be that beyond all this is a land of perpetual day, of celestial brightness and boundless sunshine where the soul may at last find rest and be filled with joy replete forever more? Ah! methinks so. For are we not told "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give ye rest." KNELL.

Scandal Mengers.

A known and felt want of the time is a generation of men and women so active in the pursuit of truth so busy in good works as to have neither time nor disposition to hear or spread rumors, who would prefer silence to slander solitude to the brilliant destruction of reputation. That was a candid and courageous, if somewhat blunt woman who being in the company of several ministers for several hours said, "My sex has always been charged with a love for scandal but nothing has ever pained me more than to see how large a part of your conversation today has been made up of 'They say,' 'Have you heard,' 'I wonder if there is any truth in this.'"

Instead of the look and posture of attention, silence and the averted glance should be given to the purveyor of derogatory rumors.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

If I did but know just the right thing to say to you today I would not be sitting here scratching my poor old head trying to think of something nice, and as I cannot think of anything real nice I will just go ahead and do what I can, that is, not say much of anything this time. I have noticed some very pretty flowers blooming in the yards along the streets and I know that spring is close at hand and those of you who have Mission Lens will soon have some eggs to sell and soon some little chickens, and as you get your money I am sure the Band will hear from you quite often. It will be a good idea for those who have no mission hen to get one and see how much you can make with her in a year and give it to the Mission Band.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

FRANKLINTON, N. C., Feb. 18, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I guess all the little cousins know that you are married. I saw Aunt Maggie Xmas. I would like to see her again and tell her about our little pigs and lambs. Just think, papa is coming home Monday and oh! I will be so glad. I send 5 cents.

Your little niece,
WILLIE STALEY.

Willie, I know you must enjoy your Papa's visits for he is away from you so much. Write again soon.

FEB. 22, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I have never written to the Corner, I will write to the Cousins for a place in the Corner. I go to Spring Hill to Sunday school. We have preaching once a month by Bro. M. W. Butler; we all like him very much. I do not go to school now but will start soon and I will be very glad. As I have no news to interest the Cousins, I will close. You will please find one half dime for the Band.

Your nephew,
PRESSLEY L. BAINE

Pressley, we give you a hearty welcome and ask you to write again.

FRANKLINTON, N. C., Feb. 18, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As most of the cousins letters were Brinkleys last week the Staleys will send this week; though they may not be of much interest we have been housed in all winter. We have been to Sunday school twice since Christmas and hope we will not have to miss any more. I hope our Uncle in the Corner will continue to look patiently for letters. When was the day of Pentecost? I send one dime to the Band. Love to you and the cousins.

Your little niece,
ANNIE STALEY.

Am very glad the Staleys have written this week, for I think it is nice to get letters from the Staleys the Wickers the Brinkleys and all the other little cousins so do not keep Uncle Tangle waiting so long again.

HOLT, N. C., Feb. 11th 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As it is raining this morning and I have to stay in the house I will write a few lines to the Corner. This is my first letter to the little cousins. I am 8 years old. I have been going to school all the winter. Our school closed yesterday and I am very sorry for I like to go to school. Mr. John Lane was our teacher and he is a good teacher and a nice young man. I like the letters in the Corner very much. Papa takes the SUN and I am glad when it comes so I can read the letters from the cousins. I go to Sunday school every Sunday at Pleasant Ridge when the weather is not too bad. Enclosed find half dime for the BAND

A well wisher for the BAND,
JESSE W. HUFFINES

Jesse we welcome your letter and hope to hear from you again soon. It would be nice if it would rain real hard every little while if it would make you little fellows write.

MIDWAY, VA., Feb. 18, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I have seen the SUN at my Aunt's, Mrs. David A. Perkins, and I like it very much. I enjoy reading the cousins letters so much that I wish to join the Corner. I am a little girl of twelve summers: I belong to the Aaron's Creek Baptist church. We have an evergreen Sunday school to which I enjoy going very much. I go every Sunday if I am well, and it is weather suitable. Our pastor, Rev. H. G. Crews, is much beloved by all his members. He preaches every third Sunday. He is an excellent preacher. I go to Union Christian church sometimes, Rev. S. B. Klapp is the pastor of that church. We like to hear him preach. He is a splendid pastor and stands high among his members. I hope this may not find its way to the waste basket, as it is my first letter. I will ask the cousins a question: "How many times did Christ show himself to his disciples after his resurrection. I will close with love to you and the cousins.

Your niece,
VIOLA C. WILLARD.

P. S. Christ commanded Peter to take a fish and open its mouth, and he would find a piece of money with which he could pay tribute for himself and the Savior. V. C. W.

Viola, we are glad to get your letter and hope you will come again. I love Sunday school and am always glad to hear that the little cousins do too. I think it is splendid to have an evergreen Sunday school.

FRANKLINTON, N. C., Feb. 20, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am thankful to say that if the thief has stolen my time he has left me my conscience, with which I will join in with renewed energy to keep our Band working as Nehemiah did when he rebuilt the wall of Jerusalem. I hope we may not be hindered as he was. I went to the church last Wednesday night to see our organist Miss Annie Bridgers married. She was also a teacher in Sunday school. I am sorry she has left us because I know we will miss her. I regretted very much to have some of our little neighbors and members of the Band (Rev. P. T. Klapps little children) move from among us, but glad to welcome some more of the cousins into our community. Our pastor, Rev. J. D. Wicker and his family have moved to Youngsville. I will answer Aunt Myrtle's question.

Uz was Job's native country.
Nahari was Joab's armor bearer.
Caleb was allowed to enter Canaan.
Luke was written by a physician.
Eunice was the mother of Timothy.
Tiberius was king when John the Baptist began to preach.
Ahaz made his son to pass through fire.

Nebo Mt. was where Moses was buried.
Gideon conquered the Midianites with 300 men.

Laban was father of Rachel and Leah.
Elisha prophesied to Joash three victories over Syrians.

The answer is "Uncle Tangle" I send one dime.

Your little niece,
BESSIE STALEY.

Now Bessie you say you will work for the Band with renewed energy, and am glad of it, if you are really in earnest you will not allow the thief around you and our Corner will have more bright letters from you.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Feb. 19, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write to the corner as it is time. I would like to be acquainted with as jolly an old man as your picture. I know Minnie and Maud Klapp enjoyed their visit to see you. I have an uncle that lives in Raleigh, and if I ever go to see him, I am going to see you too. I will answer Nellie Goodwins question: Methuselah was Noahs grand father, Gen 5:25 27. Am I correct? I will ask a question: Who was snote by an angel and eaten by worms? I will close with love to you and Aunt Tangle and the little cousins. Enclosed find half dime.

Your little niece,
BESSIE GREY McCaULEY.

Bessie, I will be very glad indeed to see you when you are in Raleigh. Write again very soon.

CHAPEL HILL N. C. Feb. 19, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Our Corner looks somewhat vacant this week not but two letters although they are interesting. I was glad to see Aunt Myrtle's letter, I had been wondering why she did not write to our Corner. Hope she will write often. And now I would like to know, what has become of Aunt J. and Uncle Millard? Hope your picture in the Corner has not seared them. Rev. P. T. Klapp preached an excellent sermon today, which was enjoyed by all of us. I will tell you where you will find his text, and I think it a good one, 1 Cor. 15:10. Yes, Uncle Tangle, by the help of God, I mean to be a better Christian than I was last year, and want you all to pray that I may be faithful and be a useful worker in church, Sunday school, society and also in writing to the BAND. I will answer Aunt Myrtle's question, the first letter of each answer will spell "Uncle Tangle"

Uz, the country Job was a native.
Job. 1: 1.
Naharai the armor-bearer of Joab.
1 Sam. 23, 37.

Caleb, was allowed to enter the land of Canaan. Josh. 14.

Luke, was written by a physician.

Luke 4.

Laban, was the father of Rachel and Leah. Gen. 29, 16.

Elisha, prophesied to Joash three victories over the Syrians. 2 Kings 13, 14.

Am I correct? there must have been a mis print in the reign of the King I could find the answer only 15 years. I will send a half dime to the BAND and close with much love to you and Aunt Tangle and all the writers of the Band.

MARY E. McCAULEY.

Yes, Mary, you are remembered in our prayers, and I hope you will put your faith entirely in Jesus, and if you do there is no doubt but you will hold out. Write often.

Danger Signals.

On the top of a hill in England there is now a notice board, with the inscription 'This hill is dangerous to cyclists.' Before that notice was put up a stranger had ridden down the hill. Before he had proceeded many yards his machine became unmanageable and he was thrown with a sickening thud upon the pavement and killed upon the spot. After that they put up the notice. If every place where a young man's life has been ruined were to be labeled then every saloon in the United States would have to be labeled, "This place is dangerous to young men." Every racing course, every theatre, variety show and dime museum, and every dancing saloon would have to be labeled, "This place is dangerous to young men."—Zion's Herald.

The essays which some men make at independent thinking are like the first efforts of little boys in learning to skate, timorous and distrustful. Why should it be so? our faculties are given us for use. We must learn to trust them in their processes and in their conclusions. Not until we do so shall we be men in the best sense of the word. To listen to others to learn what the best and wisest of our fellows have thought and said, is all right and proper; but we must at last depend, not on their judgment but upon our own.—Nashville Advocate.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those who have been so near the original samples this one. Everyone will exclaim, "What that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little, black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transparently. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing out its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant ooo. The features are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (14x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by Richard Stanbury, "The Infant's Embrace," Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we had in the past year, "A Yard of Fancies" and "A White House Child" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

"I'M A DAISY."

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone interested on all the topics of the day, and afford and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

A SPLENDID NUMBER.—The New Peterson for March is a decided improvement on its predecessors, admirable as they have been. "Our Women Violinists," by Frances M. Smith, is a most interesting paper, accompanied by admirable photographs of all the celebrated American women violin-players. Charles Washington Coleman, Edward A. Oldham, and other well known poets contribute some of their best work. The success of The New Peterson is thoroughly established and is well deserved. Terms, two dollars a year. Address PETERSON MAGAZINE Co., Philadelphia.

Worthington's Magazine for March is a royal number. Evidently this vigorous young magazine is growing and thriving, since, though exceptionally bright from the start, each number steadily gains in interest, attractiveness and value, and its success in catering to the varied tastes and requirements of the American family at home proves its ability to give valuable points to many an older and more experienced periodical. The March number opens with a superbly illustrated article upon "The Chicago Women's Club", written by Sara A. Underwood, one of its prominent literary members. It is of timely interest to all progressive people in these close-of-the-century days, so aptly called by Victor Hugo, "The Woman's Era." A number of literary gems grace this number in short stories and papers by popular authors and writers. The poetry is fine, and the Departments: re above par. This delightful periodical is published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn. For sale by all dealers.

How "Zero" Was Adopted.

From a boy Fahrenheit was a close observer of nature. When only nineteen years old, in the cold winter of 1706, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of the year. That day was the coldest day that the oldest inhabitant could remember. Gabriel was struck with the coincidence of his discovery, and concluded that he had found the lowest temperature known in the world. He called the degree "zero," and constructed a thermometer, or rude weather glass, with a scale graduating up from zero to boiling point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing point thirty-two; because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero, and expanded the 180th on being heated from the freezing to boiling point.

Time showed the arrangement arbitrary, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature than "from Dan to Beersheba" represented the exact extremes of Palestine.

But Fahrenheit's thermometer had been widely adopted with its convenient scale; and made people cling to the established scale. The three countries which use Fahrenheit are England, Holland and America. —Selected.

The Price of Personal Freedom.

Rev. Dr. Edward Hale says: "I like to put myself on record as saying that all the poverty, all the crime, and all the vice which attract public attention in Boston among what we call the poorer classes may be ascribed to the free use of intoxicating liquors. I have said a hundred times, and I repeat, if anybody will take charge of all the poverty and crime which result from drunkenness, the South Congregational church, of which I have the honor to be minister, will alone take charge of all the rest of the poverty which needs 'out-door relief' in the city of Boston. If that church could satisfy its conscience with as small work as that, it would certainly relieve its visiting forces and its treasury of a very considerable part of the demands now made upon them." —Canada Wesleyan.

The appropriations of congress by this session are about $531,000,000. Surely those who make laws have but little mercy on the tax payers.

It is said that Louisiana produces more than half of the rice crop in the U. S.

Col. John R. Copeland.

The following was passed by a conference of Bethlehem Christian church, Nausmond county, Va., February 9th, 1893.

1. RESOLVED, That in the death of Col. John R. Copeland, who died October 21, 1892, we have lost a most valuable member and a true friend. His name is intimately associated with the interest of the Master's cause in this community, and his memory is dear to our hearts.

2. RESOLVED, That, as Secretary of the church from February 9th, 1861 to Nov. 7th, 1874, he left a record that would do credit to any church and any age. His work in that office was neatly and accurately done, and his life was, so far as we know it, of the same kind. His name is a part of the records of our church, and we believe his name is recorded in the "Lamb's Book of Life."

3. RESOLVED, That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father who has called the aged pilgrim home: for he was nearly 81 years of age. That we will try to emulate his virtues, and that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved daughters, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them, and a copy be sent to the "CHRISTIAN SUN" with a request to publish.

The Right of a Woman to Preach.

Many of the readers of the Sun were no doubt interested in the article of Dr. Barrett last week with the above caption. And they were no doubt amused to see with what tact and what ingenuity he endeavored to clear himself of all responsibility and make the Apostle Paul the author of his opinions. Now is this right Bro. B.?

But we readily see Bro. B's dilemma. He is honestly and conscientiously opposed to women preaching, but he does not, perhaps, wish to incur the disfavor of the fair sex, hence, places the inspired Apostle, and that too we think, without his consent, between himself and the good sisters who feel that they are called of God as laborers.

Now we would ask, is Dr. Barrett right in his opinions that woman should not preach? And does the passages of scripture he quotes serve his purpose, or is proof that woman should not preach? Does not the passage of scripture he quotes—1 Tim. 2:12—deal entirely with domestic and temporal affairs? To my opinion it makes the husband the head of the household, and the wife a subordinate, or to "be in subjection." She should not be so masculine in her nature as to usurp authority—not attempt to take the sceptre or the reins of authority from him. Neither should she undertake to "teach" him as a subordinate, his duty. Or whilst a wife's advice is often good, she should not authoritatively dictate or prescribe his course of action—mark out the management of the business which belongs exclusively and legitimately to the husband, the acknowledged head. The wife fills a most important place in the family, but her place, as we understand the Apostle Paul is not that of "teacher" or dictator. Yet, we would not say woman should not teach anywhere, for they are doing a grand and most commendable work in our public schools, high schools and colleges.

But if Bro. Barrett will allow me to dissent from his opinion, there seems to me, aside from the peculiar endowment of woman by nature and grace, there is ample testimony in favor of women exercising their gifts as gospel laborers or preachers; and I think the Apostle Paul will sustain me in this opinion. He says: "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head" 1 Cor. 11:5. This shows us clearly that women did pray and prophesy which was equivalent to preaching or interpreting the words of truth. And what is still more explicit and direct to the subject. Paul says: Phil. 4:3. "And I entreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel." Can anything be more explicit than this? "Laborers with me in the gospel." What can laboring in the gospel mean but preaching the gospel? We call a true preacher, a gospel laborer, those who assist him in any stated services, yokefellows, or fellow laborers in the gospel. Is not the above quoted scriptures sufficient proof then, that women did preach in the days of Paul? But there seems to have been quite a number of women at that time who were gospel laborers. Philip the evangelist had four daughters, virgins, that did prophesy. Acts 21:9. Which means they were ministerial students or regularly engaged in preaching or prophesying. Perhaps enough has been said, as I design to be brief, to satisfy even the skeptical that God has a place for the women in the gospel field, and that they have qualifications and gifts as well as the sterner sex, to do a grand and glorious work for Christ, and we would say like Paul of the faithful ones "their names are written in heaven."

R H H BLAND.

Suffolk Letter.

The question of opening or not opening the Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath has been under discussion among the people, in news papers, in church conferences, and in congress for nearly two years. But it seems to be settled now by the committee on the "World's Fair" deciding not to present a bill to repeal the Sunday opening clause. The Fair will open before this committee meets again, and so the gate will not be open on the Sabbath. The great heart of this nation is loyal in its aims to the Christian Sabbath. The time may yet come when the thousands of miles of railroads in this country shall be silent proclaimers of this blessed day of rest. The Sunday school lesson yesterday will do its work in the minds of ten millions of children in the United States, and that is more powerful, than philosophical discussions of the historic Sabbath. The command to keep the Sabbath is written by the hand of God (1) In the law of God, and (2) In the nature of man, and written in nature. That is the "Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

The meeting of the Trustees of the Norfolk Mission last Monday was the most satisfactory one yet held. It was decided to begin operations on the new church building as soon as material can be brought together. A Building committee was appointed, plans were adopted, and the work will be prosecuted vigorously. The membership of the mission numbers one hundred and thirty, the congregations are large, and the spiritual interests are deep and growing. Dr. Jones has been blessed divinely in his efforts, and the people have stood by him heroically. The outlook is bright, though the work is heavy.

Suffolk is going to erect a new Public school building, in order to accommodate more comfortably her increasing school population. Signs of improvement for the good of the community are visible also in improved churches, water, lights, sidewalks and all the conveniences of a good city. This age is conspicuous in what it is doing for the people. Some growl at great fortunes amassed by the few; I rejoice at what is done for the many. All modern improvements for comfort and use are within reach of almost our entire society. If a man is found with five loaves and two fishes, the multitude is seated on the grass and distribution is made to their satisfaction. The news papers are great revealers of truth; great instructors of men; great leaders of thought; great educators of society; great creators of wealth; great checks to evil; great promoters of peace. Millions will read this week of the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland last Saturday, as President of the United States. His visit on Friday of eight minutes to Mr. Harrison at the White House and Mr. Harrison's call upon Mr. Cleveland of sixteen minutes, has already been read with pleasure by loyal citizens, and is a lesson to the nation of proper conduct between those of different parties in politics. We are moving onward in our history. The day dawn of a future unrivaled by the splendors of the past already appears. Behind all this is the church of Jesus Christ, religious news papers, with their blessed columns of pure thoughts and sentiments, and the prayers of men and women, whose lives are inspired by the Spirit of God.

LESSON XI — MARCH 12.

ESTHER BEFORE THE KING.—
ESTHER. 4:10-17; 5:1-3.GOLDEN TEXT.—Judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.—Prov. 31:9.TIME.—About 46 years previous to our last lesson.Place.—Shusan (Susa), the winter capital of the Persian Empire, about 200 miles east of Babylon, and 125 north of the Persian Gulf.

INTRODUCTORY.

It seems rather strange that we should go back from the events recorded in our last lesson to a period 46 years previous, but this is done in order to bring forward a grand lesson which would otherwise pass unnoticed. The Persian Empire was then the greatest on the face of the earth. Xerxes, the son of Darius Hystaspes, and the Ahasuerus of Esther, was on the throne. He was the same Xerxes who entered the land of the Greeks with 100,000,000 Persians, and who was defeated at Thermopylae by Leonidas and the famous 300 Spartans. Later, Xerxes and his 2000 vessels were defeated by Themistocles with 380 Greek vessels. These disasters drove Xerxes back to his capital with about 1-20 of the number that went out with him. After his return, he gave up the idea of conquering Greece and lived for some time at his court, indulging in its licentiousness, and enjoying the lust of his harem.

It was during this time that Esther was offered the queen-ship of the court, Vashti had been deposed, and for some years the king had been wifeless. While Esther was queen, Haman the king's chief associate, and most influential adviser, had become very much displeased because Mordecai, a gate-keeper of the king, would not bow down to him and do him reverence. In order to revenge himself on Mordecai, and also to plunder the Jews, and enrich himself from their plunder, Haman obtained a decree from the king, that all the Jews should be killed on a certain day. When Mordecai found this out, he at once sends messengers to queen Esther advising her to procure a revocation of this decree.

THE LESSON TEXT.

10. Again Esther spoke unto Hatach, and gave commandment unto Mordecai

11. All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into the inner court, who is not called, there is one law of his to put him to death, except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live; but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12. And they told Mordecai Esther's words.

13. Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther. Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

15. Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer

16. Go gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: and if I perish, I perish.

17. So Mordecai went his way, and did according to all that Esther commanded him.

1. Now it came to pass on the third day, that Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in the inner court of the king's house; and the king sat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2. And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that she obtained favor in his sight; and the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3. Then said the king unto her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom.

EXPLANATORY.

1. The Heroic Queen. Vers. 10-17.

God's people were in great danger. The king had issued the decree that Haman should proceed to have the Jews put to death on a certain day. What was the purpose of this severe penitential? It was simply to take revenge on one man because he refused to break the second commandment. Mordecai, hearing of this decree had sent word to Esther, requesting her to intercede with the king for her people. Esther reminds Mordecai of the law which existed in reference to appearing before the king without being summoned. It meant instant death, unless the king held his sceptre as a token of grace. Even Esther could not violate this law with impunity. The object of the law was to prevent the king from being disturbed by unwelcome visitors, and to guard against assassins. It would have been little thought of had the king ordered queen Esther to be slain for appearing uninvited before him. Such is the fickleness and silliness of all despotic monarchs.

But Morecai sends to Esther a second time Esther is in as much danger as any of the other Jews. It may not be known that she belongs to the despised sect, but it will soon be found out, and her rivals will rejoice to see her die. If she appear before the king without invitation, she truly stands some chance of escaping death, but if she remains quiet, she will surely die. It may be that she was made queen for this very purpose of saving her race. What if she let the opportunity pass, another may grasp it and leave her to lament her inactivity. Esther takes a bold resolve. Duty calls, and she must answer, death or life, neither are to be considered in the face of a great and glorious work. She requests prayer and fasting on the part of the Jews, that she may be successful. A three days fast. There is a strange significance about that word three.

II. Esther's Victory. Vers. 1-3.

At the appointed time, Esther proceeds to her mission. How beautiful she must have appeared, in her royal garments; she was so young and pure. Even though she lived in a corrupt court, she was uncorrupt. She arrayed herself for the purpose of attracting the notice of the king. We can do good by the way we dress. We can lay examples for others in the clothes we wear. Standing in the court, fresh and lovely as a morning rose, Ahasuerus beholds his beautiful queen. His heart leaps up with joy at sight of her. The sceptre is extended, her work is accomplished. The fear of death is past, and the rescue of her people insured. Who is it that is afraid to meet duty in the face of death? Let such an one go to the sweet queen Esther, and learn a lesson of faith, courage, and success. She accomplished her purpose not without the aid of common sense, but by the most commendable tactics. A banquet is offered the king and his beloved Haman. A second invitation is extended, in the mean time, Mordecai meets with great favor from the king. Haman is sorely discomfited. And lo, when Esther, at last, gives her request to the king, the whole fortune of his favorite is changed in a twinkling, and the gall was made for Mordecai furnish a means of death for Mordecai's bitterest enemy.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Notes from Harvard.

Dr. Talmage lectured over in Boston last night and of course a good number of people gathered themselves together to hear him. They heard him. He is undoubtedly America's greatest divine. He has the power to hold and sway his audience and his way of putting things is peculiar to himself. You will be certain to try to catch every word he says and will regret to see him stop and take his seat. He has oratory, and eloquence and has got a soul in him. You can see that—feel it, in fact, in his words. But, as I heard one of our professors say the other day, it takes great men to make great mistakes. I guess it must be so. Tonight as I glance at my note book and see sentences recorded there as they fell from the lips of this world-famous man, I can hardly believe that they were really spoken by Talmage. His subject was "Russia and The Czar." These were pictured to us in grand and glowing terms. And without entering into detail I will just say that if they are what Talmage pictured them to be, we certainly ought to try to unseat Cleveland immediately and put a Czar in his stead and transform this Republic of ours into an absolute monarchy at once. I think two short sentences will serve as samples. Look: "Yes the Czar of Russia is an autocrat, but he uses his power to bless and not to suppress. I don't believe there is one man in Russia out of 500,000 but loves the Emperor." To which the present writer has only to say that if this be true ninety-nine and a half out of every hundred of the histories and magazine articles written for the past several years are absolutely false from beginning to end. It simply reduces itself to this: Talmage versus History, An Absolute Monarchy versus a Republic. Dr. Talmage depicted for us the superiority of the Czar's government over ours in a great many respects and said if he had ever seen a face that seemed devoid of fear, and anxiety it was the Czar's. If that be true, is not the much talked of 19th century civilization a farce and had the wheels of time and progress better not be reversed for a season?

But Talmage is a great, good man. I suppose there is not a man this side of the waters who is doing the good and wielding the power that Talmage is. My only object in writing as I have above is to show that the greatest as well as the smallest of us may sometimes be in error. It is not for me to say who is right, the score of historians, or Dr. Talmage. Both certainly can not be. So it is. Very frequently when we think we are most surely right, we are most absolutely wrong.

Man's duty is to search for all the truth he can get and live accordingly. Truth is so broad and profound that, thank God, no body has a patent or reserved right on it. Most assuredly do we see through a glass darkly here. Happy is he who can now and then in the light of reason and revelation brush away some of the smoke from the glass and glance through at those grander, nobler and deeper truths beyond. There are three things that enter into man to make him man and into life to make it worth living and the first of these is truth. Goodness and beauty come in, but truth is first—it constitutes the great battle ground upon which the wars of the ages have been waged and upon which the martyrs of the past have freely sacrificed their life. There is something in man that responds to truth and is ever pushing him upwards and onwards—braving him to do or die. Remove that something and man would be a brute. God gives us more truth in the world and hasten the day when we will not despise, slander and abuse our neighbor because he or she does not agree with us or see things as we see them.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—As the winter has been so very cold and bad, I have not attended very many of my appointments. The 3rd Sunday in this month, I filled my appointment at Morrisville. The congregation was very good in the morning, and night. The singing was excellent led by Pro. J. H. Moring; with Miss Minnie Sears as organist. Sunday evening was spent in visiting several families. The outlook at this church is good, we hope to see a grand work accomplish there this year, for the Master's cause. The 4th Sunday, and Saturday before, I preached at Plymouth for Rev. W. H. Roach, and he was to preach for me at Ebenezer at the same time, Saturday the congregation was small but Sunday it was very large. I preached a sermon in remembrance of sister Penelope Ann Penny, the wife of Mr. J. J. Penny, who died Oct. 25, 1892.

Sister Penny was a highly respected Christian lady. After the sermon I received Mr. J. J. Penny into the church, this was a glorious privilege, and a happy time with God's people, when Bro. Penny came forward to connect himself with the church; oh may God bless him, and help him to be a bright and shining light in the church. He is to be baptized the 4th Sunday in May, if nothing prevents, (by the writer) he also subscribes for the Sun six months.

Berea Christian Church.

Notwithstanding the windy weather we have had for the last week Sunday was a very lovely day. Mr. N. G. Newman preached an elegant sermon in the morning to a very good congregation. When morning services were over a sumptuous dinner awaited us at the hall where we all enjoyed ourselves. When dinner was over our Missionary Society was called to order by Miss Martha Driver and Mr. Walter Gaskins, Prayer by Mr. Newman, Solo by Miss Blanche Williamson. She was so small the congregation could not have seen her well if she had stood by the organ so she went up and stood beside the pulpit to sing it. After collection of dues and singing we were dismissed by Mr. Newman. All went home happy feeling that they had gone another Sabbath day's journey toward Heaven.

Holland Items.

Last Sunday (4th) was a lovely day and a large congregation greeted us at Holland, which you know is inspiring to the preacher, and Bro. Demarest fairly excelled himself, or his effort was above the average of his sermons. The singing was better than usual, and all the services were pleasant and apparently appreciated, by the intelligent audience.

Our next appointment (the 4th Sunday in March) will be our quarterly meeting, and Rev. Roger Charnock of Berkley is looked to preach for us. Bro. Charnock will no doubt have a full house if the weather is favorable, as he is quite a popular speaker.

We were much pleased to have Miss India Wright of the Berkley Christian church to attend our services. She is a young lady of a very sprightly genial nature and made herself most agreeable at our home. She took the evening train for Berkley, and we only regretted that her stay was so short. The communication is direct from Holland to Berkley, which makes a trip either way very convenient.

We had a very enjoyable visit to day from Rev. W. G. Clements of the Sun. He was traveling in the interest of his paper and met with encouraging success. If the members of the Christian church south will only come up loyally to her support, I assure them we will soon have a paper that all will feel justly proud of. It cannot grow up in a night like Jonah's gourd, but its growth will be, though gradual, sure and satisfactory.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—In the days of old it was the custom to burn men, but now by way of change, we burn not men, but their opinions. I fancy this after all, very wise, so that our Dear Bro. Dr. Barrett's letter though it be led to the fires, may after all bring forth a purer belief in this much discussed question.

Our sisters need not, after all, be discouraged. I feel assured that Dr. Barrett would be the last to discourage their endeavors to serve their Lord. Yet I am sometimes led to ask the question, where shall we draw the boundary line? As near as possible I always try to settle questions relating to church matters by the inspired word. And since reading Bro. Barrett's letter I have turned to my Bible and must conclude—I may be very wrong but—if so I shall be pleased to be corrected, that I do not find this command of Paul's to be against a woman speaking for Jesus in public. I rather imagine Paul must mean that women must submit to man, as the weaker vessel and not set herself above him. Does it refer to preaching at all? I think not. A woman is a child of God, and as such, I contend should speak of his love whenever and wherever she can.

It may be that I am prejudiced in leaning towards the woman's rights even in religious services, for I certainly think that when a woman feels led to stand up for Jesus she must do so without fear. We grant them full permission to teach in our Sunday school and thousands around the throne rejoice before the Lord for the message of the cross proclaimed through women. By woman came the first transgression and thus was ushered in the beginning of sin, but by woman came the "Light of the world." We do not find amongst the first Christian band a female Judas, nor a Peter nor do they forsake Him like the men. Nearest the cross were they and first at early morn to visit the sepulchre.

I announced last Sunday that I would preach tomorrow from the Subject "Woman," I feel that Dr. Barrett's letter has given me a stronger desire to do so.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Rev. W. G. Clements who is in Virginia in the interest of the SUN reports that he is doing very well.

Let the Sunday schools that have been closed during the winter now take on new life and work for the Master.

We understand that though Mrs. Dr. Barrett received serious injuries by the fall she had she will recover. May God be with and sustain this dear sister.

There seems to be many objections to what Dr. Barrett said in a recent issue of this paper about woman preaching. Perhaps a little more light will be thrown on the subject by these various writers.

Can we, dare we, feel safe yet about the gates of the World's Fair being closed on the Sabbath day. We see that the committee on the World's Fair has decided not to present a bill to repeal the Sunday opening clause.

From D. Lothrop, Co., Boston, Mass. we have received the March numbers of Pansy, Little Men and Women, and Babyland, papers that do interest, please and instruct the young readers. See "a liberal offer" on the last page of this paper for more particulars about the beautiful Magazines.

The Golden Rule. (Roston, Mass.) sends to new subscribers a picture of the thirty-two officers, of United Society of Christian Endeavor. It is an array of noble looking men, and we know they are engaged in a grand work. In the center of the picture is placed, and very appropriately too, F. E. Clarke, D. D., the founder of the C. E. Society.

The SUN is but half size this week. As we told you last week, we expect to have the Annuals ready for mailing this and next week, and in order to do this we have put all our efforts in that direction and then after next week you will have the paper full size again and we hope that never again will we have to give less than 16 pages a week.

The Mother's Nursery Guide for march is on our table, and it speaks for itself. You have but to look over the table of contents, to gain an idea of its value to mothers. Among other things we see—"Hysteria in Children;" "A Neglected Factor in Education;" "The Mother's Parliament; Nursery Problems, and under this head comes some very useful topics. Published by Babyhood Pub. Co., No. 5 Beekman St., New York.

The Inauguration of President Cleveland last was attended by very imposing ceremonies and on March 7 his cabinet with one exception—Secretary Gresham was sworn in March 6—took the oath of office. The present cabinet is as follows:

John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, Secretary of the Treasury.

Denominationalism.

That denominationalism is unjustifiable can be seen.

I. From its numerous inconsistencies.

The inconsistencies of denominationalism are so many and absurd that each body looks with little charity upon the inconsistencies of others, while the enemies of the church mock and scoff and stand farther estranged from the church and Christianity. They rarely attack genuine Christianity, but vent themselves upon the abuses of denominationalism. These inconsistencies are seen:

1. In the fellowship of ministerial brethren. The most casual observer can note the following peculiarities among ministers: First, one minister refuses to fellowship another whose doctrinal views are in strict harmony with his, simply because he belongs to another denomination: Second, he fellowships a minister whose doctrinal views are contrary to his, simply because he belongs to his denomination: Third, he accepts ministerial courtesies which his denominationalism will not allow him to return: Fourth, he professes a sympathy and fellowship contrary to the express teachings of his denomination, and which he must practically deny when he has returned to his own flock.

2. In local churches. In the fellowship of laymen the same is true, but in a less degree. Denominationalism is always strongest in the pulpit. The local member would be content to read his Bible, apply its teachings, and be consoled thereby, were it not for the narrowness of the pulpit. But the preacher says: This will not do. You must remember you are an Episcopalian or a Presbyterian and etc, (as the case may be); you must study your creed also. He yields to what he considers the superior judgment of his pastor. The results are various. Sometimes he believes it, and becomes narrow and bigoted and uncharitable. Sometimes he becomes bewildered and disgusted, and turns away from both. The Bible could never have had this effect. Again he cannot believe, but since he has avowed allegiance to it he feels that he must stand by it. Here a brother's conscience is bound. Again he plainly avows his disbelief, yet retains his fellowship, only to constitute another example of denominational inconsistency.

In local churches members fellowship each other while holding radically different views touching their own creed but deny fellowship to those of another denomination whose doctrinal views are the same as theirs. They excommunicate a pious, godly man, because he cannot subscribe to all the articles of their faith and fellowship a man of little or no piety and of questionable conduct because he professedly subscribes to them. This is exalting denominationalism above Christianity; substituting assent to a creed for personal piety.

3. In subordinating the Word of God to a man-made creed. The inconsistency is between the theory and the practice. Theoretically they acknowledge the Bible as all in all, but practically they subordinate it to their denominational creed. They say the creed is taken from the word of God. This being true, in cases of appeal it should be the final source; but is this true? Are heresies tried by the Word of God? No, not one of the millions and tens of millions that have perished upon the gallows, under the gibet, at the stake, upon the battle field, and in foul dungeons for their denominational views have been tried and condemned by the Word of God. Even now men are arraigned before ecclesiastical tribunals and tried not by the Word of God, but by human creeds. This was seen in the recent trial of Dr. Briggs, and furnishes another fine example of denominational inconsistency. He was tried by the Presbyterian Confession of Faith, found guilty of violating most of its fundamental teachings, and honorably acquitted. What consistency!! This means either that his accusers do not believe the Confession of Faith or that they did not act in good faith. To arraign, try and acquit a man guilty of such flagrant violation of its teachings is inconsistent. To adhere to and support what one does not believe is dishonest.

4. It takes what it will not grant. Nearly every denomination claims the right of private judgment and liberty of conscience, but denies it to all others. Every man or body of men that have ever formulated an article of faith has done it in the enjoyment of this divinely given right; then turned to the world and said: We will no longer be bound by other men's consciences, but you must. We have exercised private judgment and liberty of conscience, but you must not. We believe the Bible teaches this, you must believe it too. You must adopt this, not because you believe it, but because we believe it.

II. Dishonest Practice.

No creed bound church has or can have a membership, of uniform doctrinal opinions. Many members have little faith in the distinguishing features of their creeds, and are bold enough to say so. This is dishonest; for by their allegiance to the church, they virtually assent to its principles, which they declare to the world they do not accept. If they could not endorse them when they entered, it was false, and dishonest to enter. If they cannot endorse them now, it is dishonest, an unmanly to retain fellowship. Now when are the practices of creed-bound ministers? First, in their denominational zeal, for members they receive men into the church who are unwilling to endorse, or accept the distinguishing features of the denomination, and thereby encourage dishonesty of action in the individual. Second, they zealously support a creed which they do not believe. It is a known fact that many ministers cannot conscientiously endorse the creed, of their church. It is also a known fact that they encourage others to believe it, refuse fellowship to applicants who cannot subscribe to it, and excommunicate members, who deny its validity. An Episcopal minister, when asked about certain parts of his creed, answered, I have never believed it in my life, but I have sworn to support it, and must do so as long as I live. Such as this is an inexcusable, violation of the principles of Christianty and must prove detrimental to the church of God. Shall we accuse the church, the teacher of honesty and truth, of being dishonest? The facts have been submitted. Are they honest? Do they become God's children? Are they in keeping with the spirit of our blessed Lord, who drew no denominational lines, and forbade his followers to draw any, but prayed that they might be one even as He and the Father were one?

Suffolk, Va.

In our rambles last week, we reached the blooming town, of Suffolk, Va. The last day of Feb. This town presents a busy scene, all the time, stores, factories, schools, church, steamboats, railroads, meet you continually.

It was our pleasure to take a stroll through the new Christian church, which reminds one of almost a great temple. The floors are laid, and things ready for the inside finish.

Bro. Staley, the deservingly popular pastor, has used brain, muscle, and money to the best advantage, in the erection of this church.

One night was spent with Hon. E. E. Holland, President of the Farmer's Bank of Nansemond. He is an excellent Christian gentleman. Two meals were taken at the splendid boarding house, of sister Beal. many old friends were met, among them, Bro. Staley, and Bro. N. G. Newman. A visit was made to the Observer office, where we found Bro. Hathaway, moving every thing a-a-long like clock work. He and Bro. Kernodle, are getting out a good paper

It is always a pleasure, to visit Suffolk. Many of the SUN's best friends, live here.

WAVERLY, VA.

A day and two nights, were spent in Waverly, and neighborhood This is a nice little town, on the N. & W. R R Supper was taken with Judge J. F. West, one night spent with R T. West, and one with J. J. Faison, these are all excellent families. Our thanks are due and tendered to R. T. West, J. J. Faison, J. H. Harris, and T. H. Hargraves, for assistance in getting over the country. Here as at other places, we found the friends kind and obliging. We were pleased to have an opportunity, to take a part in the Wednesday night prayer meeting, at the Christian church, at Waverly. Bro. M. W. Butler, is the pastor, of this church, and is very popular. We also had the pleasure of meeting, a few friends at Wakefield.

It is stated that the fine for smoking cigarettes in Michigan is $50. or 30 days in jail.

President A. C. C.,

Dear Brother:—The members of the board have I believe, all voted in favor of the call for the Norfolk church; and if the Norfolk church cooperates with me, I will, according to the terms of the memorial addressed to us, unless you direct otherwise, at once proceed to make the call. I think I will use the month of April "American Christian" and otherwise for the work.

REV. J. J. SUMMERBELL, D. D.,
Sect'y. A. C. Convention,

My Dear Doctor:—Yours of 23rd, inst. received. As all of the Members of the Ex. Bd. A. C. C. have voted in favor of the call for the Norfolk church I trust you will proceed, at once to arrange to take the collection. So far as I know, your suggestion to "use the month of April American Christian and otherwise for the work," is just as good as could be made. That matter, however, is entirely in your hands. Now that everything is getting in shape for work and practical business I look for a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together which will be crowned with success.

Very truly,

Franklin, Va.

We left Raleigh on the 23rd of Feb. for Franklin, Va., reaching it in the afternoon. The place has improved very much since our visit five or six years ago. It has grown to be quite a town, and seems to be on the up grade all the time

While in Franklin acts of kindness were shown us by Bro. I. W. Norfleet, Bro. A. Gardner, Bro. Halcum, Bro. H. A. Williams, and quite a number of others whose names we do not recollect.

Rev. J. T. Kitchen is pastor of the Franklin Christian church, and is, judging from what we heard, quite popular. The church is doing well. It has a Ladies Aid Society that is doing a good work.

The fourth Sunday was spent with Bro. Hurley at Bethany. He is the pastor of this church, and is greatly beloved by his peop'e. We were glad to meet many of our old friends in this congregation Saturd y night was spent with Bro. Vaughn, and Sunday night with Bro. William Beale. Bro. Cobb kindly carried us out from Franklin to his home. All these brethren showed us much kindness.

Monday found us in the neighborhood of Aguste, Elwood and Holland. Again the brethren helped us in our work, bringing us under renewed obligations to them. Among the number were A. T. Lee, Eli Daughtry, P. H. Lee and Rev. R. H. Holland. Bro. Holland is greatly interested in the work of the church at Holland. He has made many sacrifices for the Christian church, and is willing to continue so to do. He is about 73 years old, is in good health, and is one of the finest looking men of his age that we have seen anywhere. Bro. Demarest has charge of the church at Holland, and seems to be doing his work well.

Reflections.

To-day is the fourth of March 1893, and we are a long way from home, but seated in a comfortable room by a good fire, under the roof of our esteemed friend, Rev. M. W. Butler. The snow comes thick and fast out of doors; but the good fire and the company of Bro. Butler and wife with their dear little children, make everything around bright. As we look upon the sweet faces of these two little ones, the mind naturally goes back home to the loved ones there.

Today a new President of the U. S. takes his seat, or rather an old one made over. We hope this inclement, snowy day is no bad omen for the administration of Mr. Cleveland. It looks like it would be a little more euphonious, if the president could always take his seat on some year carrying an even date, as 94, 96, or 98. Would it not be well to let some president hold his seat five years, if a good one, in order to make the terms end with even dates?

We hear from Dr. Herndon over in this section, collecting for Elon College. Sometimes we are close together, but have had no collision yet. The doctor is a mover, and will have money for the college. He is a natural born agent.

These snowy days hinder our work some, but it is all right. God knows what is best.

"While God corrects with one hand He supports with the other, and makes us say, even in our affliction 'His mercy endureth forever.'"—Selected.

I am a Christian and as such I pray that Bro. Moffitt's request may be granted. May the structure, that each student seeks to build, be a solid one.

Every man has his favorite horse on which he rides in the race of life. I have one, and have been riding on and off for a little while. And sometimes I push forward the nose of my pet pony to the annoyance of others. But I pray that the members of the Psaphelian Society, at Elon, will pardon my idiosyncrasy in relation to oyster suppers. The students of today are the fathers and mothers of tomorrow, the pastors, deacons, and members of churches.

The cry of many pastors in small towns today is, that they cannot get their salary without holding "Fancy paid," ice cream socials and oyster suppers: And when it is too cold to eat ice cream, and oysters are too expensive, then the salary goes down and his poor wife has to wonder how she is going to pay her monthly accounts. I am fond of socials and hence do not say never have them. But these oyster festivities create an appetite for more questionable efforts, and then in church life they become important factors in finances.

Therefore may I give this advice to my young brethren who intend, in the near future, to take pastoral charge over churches? try and bring about a reformation in this matter. A church built upon ice cream and oysters is unstable and unfit to brave the storm and fierce beat of the world and the devil, then you will have worked untold good and strengthened Christ's cause.

I am doing nothing except grumbling Bro Clements, but pray excuse me, after all I do not think I am much of a Pessimist.

We have at last received plans for our new church. And purpose putting up, very soon, a nice edifice, on a modern style and we feel assured that when completed, the Christians of Berkeley need not be ashamed of it.

Dear Sister Hill met with rather a painful accident last week. Having fallen down stairs and badly sprained her ankle. But we rejoice to know that she is progressing towards recovery.

We are moving on steadily, we boast of no rapid growth, but yet placing brick by brick towards erecting a spiritual temple, and above all joining them together with the holy cement of Christ's love, and going on in the fight with the crimson zeal of Christ's blood, we hope to see a glad surrender of the enemy at the cross and a joyful crowning of the children of God with the crown of Eternal Life?

Yours until the Eternal Morn,
ROGER CHARNOCK.

Alabama Letter.

DEAR SUN:—Last Friday in company with Revs. J. D. and H. W. Elder I started for my appointment at Beulah. Rev. H. W. E.'s appointment being at McGuire's Chapel, and Rev. J. D. Elder being due at Hillabee. All of us having to travel the same road we went together, of course we enjoyed ourselves, as preachers usually do, but presently our happy anticipations were changed to doubts, for just in front of us was the Tallapoosa River, which owing to the recent heavy rains had swollen to considerable size, and it seemed almost impossible for us to cross, but after depositing our stock on this side, we crossed over in a boat and the two Bro. E.'s borrowing a horse and buggy went on their way rejoicing, while your humble writer trudged through the mud on foot until we reach Bro. C. E. Bailey's where we spent the night, most pleasantly. On the following day we met with the church at Beulah and found the best of feelings prevailing among the members, two persons were received to fellowship, steps were taken to ceil the house, and put lights in, also to organize a Sunday school and prayer meeting. Beulah church is on the road to prosperity. May God bless those people. The spirit of the Lord was with us both days. We are expecting great things at all our churches this year may it be a year of prosperity is my prayer.

The above named preachers all returned home safe and sound, all report good meeting, pleasant trips and signs of prosperity along the lines. Such is the case with a minister: we have doubts; we have troubles; we have disappointments; we have to take it afoot sometimes, but (all) "things work together for good to those who love the Lord." Dear brethren let us thank God and take courage; let us be ready when the summons comes to cross over the river of death, and rest under the shade of the trees. May we cross that river as safe as we did the Tallapoosa.

Yours in brotherly love,
Geo. D. HUNT.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—During the past quarter of the conference, it has been very difficult for the country pastors to attend to their church work. There has been no more disagreeable winter, within the range of my memory, than this has been and oftentimes it was almost impossible for us to reach our appointments, and when we would venture out the people could not attend church, because of the weather. In the month of January, owing to the snow I was not able to reach my appointment at Martha's chapel. Had to travel through the snow to O'Kelley's chapel, and Union and found very few in attendance at each of these appointments, was not able to fill my appointments at Martha's chapel and O'Kelley's during the present month owing to sickness, but the appointments filled for me, by Bro. J. W. Rawles at the former, and Bro. R. H. Peel at the latter. These brethren held the quarterly conference at each place for me, and all the business was transacted in a harmonious manner. The communion services were deferred until the next appointment.

Owing to sickness, and high water, could not reach Union on the 2nd Saturday and Sunday, at the regular time for the quarterly conference so it was deferred until 4th Saturday.

Saturday before the fourth Sunday, being a pretty day, there was preaching at 2 o'clock to an attentive audience, after which the quarterly conference was held. All the business of the conference was transacted, without any discord. Some of the brethren spoke in the interest and for the future prosperity of the cause. Much interest seemed to be manifested by all present. We hope now since the most of the winter, and bad weather has passed, that the church will take on new life in the work, and begin at once to work up the various enterprises Sunday morning, the Sunday school, met at 10 o'clock and spent an hour in the study of the lesson. While the Sunday school seems to be in a very prosperous condition, and while those that attend do all they can, to make it a success, yet it would do our hearts good to see more of the young people, as well as the older ones, taking an active part in this work. The present Sunday school is the church, of the future, and great responsibilities, devolve upon the members of the church, as to the training of the hearts, and minds of the young for future usefulness. The prosperity of the church, depends largely on the work of the Sunday school and there can be no grander work than this. What an influence for good are those who work in the Sunday school, and what an example for bad are those who neglect it and this touches the influence, and usefulness of every church member. The spring has not fully opened yet, and we are not able to number our forebuds with the warm genial spring time, comes with its blooming flowers and singing birds we hope to see the Sunday school work bloom into greater beauty, and develop into greater usefulness.

After the Sunday school the Ladies Aid Society was called to order by Miss Jessie Graham, president and held its regular meeting. This society has as its object foreign missionary work and has taken the conference assessment in hand. I have no doubt about its being raised, for the ladies are more faithful to the church work as a general thing than the men. This society does not intend to deprive the men from paying foreign missions but rather to induce them to do their duty along this line.

At 11 o'clock there was preaching after which the communion was administered to a very large number of communicants. It was truly a solemn service, and no doubt new resolutions were formed which will result in great good to the church. May the Lord bless this people and cause his face to shine upon them.

Fraternally,
W. C. WICKER.

Impels Him to Tell How His Son Was Saved

White Swelling and Scrofula Perfectly Cured.

Son of John L. McMurray
Of Ravenswood, W. Va

"I do not write this at the request of any one, but because I feel it a duty to humanity, so that others afflicted as my boy was may know where to find relief.

"When my son was seven years old he began to complain of soreness in his right leg. A white swelling soon appeared just below the knee joint, and extended from the knee to the ankle. At the same time he was taken with an attack of fever, which was broken up, but the leg became very badly swollen, causing him great suffering, and the muscles so contracted that his leg was drawn up at right angles. He was unable to walk, could not even bear to be handled, and I thought him a Confirmed Cripple.

"After a time we had the swelling lanced, midway between the knee and the ankle, and it would discharge over a pint of pus at times. I decided to take him to Cincinnati to have the leg operated upon, expecting he would lose it. But he had become so poor and weak that I thought I would let him gather some strength, if possible, and bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and began giving it to him. This medicine soon woke up his appetite, and he ate more heartily than for a long time. At this time the sore was discharging freely, and soon pieces of bone began to come out. I have in my office one piece of bone 3 1/4 inches long by nearly half an inch broad, which came out of the sore. We continued giving him Hood's Sarsaparilla. The discharge from the sore decreased, the swelling went down, the leg straightened out, and soon he had perfect use of his leg. He now runs everywhere, as lively as any boy, and apparently Norfolk Letter.

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Norfolk Christian Church it was decided to proceed with the work of building a house of worship at once, and to this end a building committee was appointed. It is expected that the work will begin soon—possibly in April. I have seen the plans and am glad to say I think they are what we need—the plan is excellent—and I am told the cost will be economical. This ought to stimulate our people to make great effort to assist this growing band of workers. The outlook is hopeful indeed.

Rev. Dr. Jones and Col. A. Savage have both been feeble of late, but they are better. Mrs. A. F. Hill and Mrs. J. P. Barrett have been suffering much of late from the effects of a fall. Mrs. Hill we think is better and so is Mrs. Barrett.

We are all greatly surprised that Rev. D. F. Jones should have given up the cause of the Christian church, but we hope he may do good where he goes to labor. The Christian church took him up when he was "a stranger in a strange land," educated him and gave him much prominence, as well as support, and now he goes from us without even having remonstrated, or protested against the cause which leads him from us. Let it be so—there is no cause for discouragement—the work will go on, if it is for God's glory, as well without him as with him. Let us hope he may be more useful elsewhere.

The church at Providence is making fair progress. They have recently organized and put to work the "Home Circle." In this they are seeking to raise their incidental expenses without the help of questionable means, as so many of our churches are doing in introducing the "theatricals," suppers and various entertainments, by which the house of prayer is virtually made a house of merchandise. God is not pleased when his people look to the world to support his cause. O, let us quit it—let us quit it, and let God's people do their best in God's way to support God's cause, and then what they can not do in that way, let it go undone, and I believe they will do more to glorify God by not doing these doubtful works than they can ever hope to do by using them. Let us quit it!

At this writing, March 4, a heavy snow storm is upon us. This will doubtless be a disappointment to the thousands of visitors at Washington, D. C., attending the "Inaugural ceremonies" of President Cleveland, if the same is true there.

We were all glad last Monday to welcome Rev. M. L. Hurley to our midst. He was on his way to Baltimore. I hope he may yet be a well-remembered name, and again enter actively the work of the ministry. When in health he was a power for good in his field, under the blessings of God.

I hope the members of the Missionary Association will not be slack in paying up their dues for 1893.

I wish the editor of the SUN would tell us why he did not publish Dr. Maple's reply to that "open letter," which appeared some weeks ago in the SUN. I am anxious to hear from the doctor, and I have heard of quite a number who feel as I do about it. Let me beg you Bro. Clements, to give Dr. Maple a hearing—a chance to speak for himself.

Found the reason for the great popularity of Hood's Sarsaparilla—simply this: Hood's Cures. Be sure to get Hood's.

Another Pounding.

Only recently, Bro. Clements, I troubled you for space to say that I had been pounded by the good people of Providence. February 26, 1893, I received a load of valuable gifts from the people at Berea, Norfolk County, Va. The gifts were of a most substantial character, and are fully appreciated by Mrs. B. and myself. The Berea people are very kind, and thoughtful, for their pastor's welfare. It is pleasant to work with them. Long may they prosper and follow God.

"The Blood is the Life,"

Runs the old saying, and everything that ever makes part of any organ of the body must reach its place therein through the blood. Therefore, if the blood is purified and kept in good condition by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, it necessarily follows that the benefit of the medicine is imparted to every organ of the body. Can anything be simpler than the method by which this excellent medicine gives good health to all who will try it fairly and patiently.

As a tree flourishes in proportion to the richness of the soil, so the human body thrives in accordance with the quality of its blood. Hence the necessity of keeping the vital fluid rich and pure with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the best blood medicine you can find.

When the blood is impure or impoverished, boils, pimples, headaches, neuralgia, rheumatism, and various other diseases are developed. Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It purifies, invigorates, and vitalizes the blood, and restores vigorous health.

The March Number of The American Sabbath, the official organ of The American Sabbath Union, is just from the press. The special features of this valuable paper will attract attention. The contents include articles on Sunday closing at the Columbian Exposition by Hon. John Bigelow, Bishop A. Cleveland Cox, Dr. A. H. Plumb and others; also addresses by Prof. Herrick Johnson, Dr. W. W. Atterbury, Dr. T. A. Fernley, Dr. Joseph Cook, Dr. Mackay Smith and Col. Elliott F. Shepard delivered at the late hearing in Washington, D. C., on that subject. These papers and addresses are all choice reading. Rev. J. H. Knowles, D. D., Editor. Subscription price per year 50 cents. Any one sending ten cents will receive a sample copy. Notes from Harvard.

We will confess that the "beautiful snow" is becoming to be a rather monotonous luxury in these parts, as well as quite an expensive, one to the great city. I notice that one Boston paper says should there be no further snow fall here this winter, it will have cost the city fully $65,000.00 in getting the streets and side walks in somewhat navigable shape. The daily expenses last week, I see were $5,000.00 for snow shovelling and dumping from street and side walk. On my way to church last Sunday, I counted 40 teams (and there seemed to be hundreds of men) busy trying to get the highways passable, and I was reminded of the fact that "the gates" at Boston were open on Sunday, whether they would be at Chicago or not.

The following paragraph, is clipped from a Boston paper and inserted here so that any who desire may "read as they run" and draw such conclusions as they see fit, "as the result of the recent whist party, given at the Melrose Highlands club house for the benefit of the Universalist parish, about $120.00, has been turned into the treasury of that parish. The next religious card combination in this town, is the whist-dancing party, to be given at Eastman's Hall March—for the same parish, under the direction of Mrs. C. H. I. and Miss Ella Pierce," a strong "combination" that. Surely the "sun do move."

It is March now and time for the "merry spring" to begin to appear. (although 18 inches of snow doesn't look much that way) Am sure though it is coming for one of Harvard's prominent features, to wit, her athletics, show signs of it. Foot ball has long since passed away, and now base ball begins. I see from a paper before me that Harvard's various athletic teams cost in the various expenses last year $50,259.02. But their receipts were some $800 more than that, so they were "in"—on the money question a little at least.

Some unknown friends of Harvard, have just bequeathed, several hundred thousand to be used in constructing two additional buildings one for a library, the other for dormitory.

But the latest sensation here is that a wealthy merchant near here has willed Harvard some $3,000,000.00, is now building him a home in one of the quiet out of the way towns down in N. C. and will retire to spend the balance of his days in ease. (I don't wish Harvard any harm at all, but why didn't that big hearted man wait till he got down in N. C. before he made his will?) It is said that Harvard alumni never forget their alma mater. It really seems so. And it further seems that Harvard is to be a wealthy university some time—her valuation already being put down at $12,000,000 I believe.

The above is the news (?) and I believe I will write no more at present.

Elon College Notes.

On each Thursday, there is a rush among the students for the SUN. Now there are many reasons for this, but I will mention only a few of them. First, it is our church Organ, and we have all learned to love it. Second, it always gives us some good lessons of love and Christian devotion, which tend to develop the spiritual being, and to elevate man in all his walks, and works through life. Third, we are always anxious to read the Harvard Notes, not only because we get from them good lessons, and valuable facts, but also because Prof. Atkinson is near and dear to the students, on account of the pleasant associations of by gone days, and we are always glad to hear from him.

Rev. P. H. Phleming paid us a flying visit last week. We remember the excellent sermons he preached for us last year, and it does us good to see his face in our midst.

The prospects for a church in Asheboro, N. C. fill our hearts with joy, because we feel that a mighty work may be done at that place.

If we can not give of our means toward the building of the church, let us offer our prayers for its success. May the good work continue to spread.

Rev. W. J. Laine filled his regular appointment at Mt. Zion last Sunday.

The Y. M. C. A. has three mission points near the college. The teachers report interesting and profitable services, at all the points. Though we are doing much good along this line, let us pray and work for mightier results.

Owing to the illness of Rev. W. C. Wicker, Bro. Peel filled the appointment for the former Sunday, the 12th.

Rev. J. W. Harrell preached his first sermon to the people of Big Falls last Sunday.

The Y. W. C. A. will send delegates to the State Convention to be held in Winston-Salem April 6--9. So we see that the young ladies of our college are also awake to a sense of their religious duties. Young woman, press onward performing the mission that God has assigned you.

There were three additions to the church at this place on Sunday.

Do not forget the Annual Debate, March 31st, but come to hear the discussion of the query—Resolved, that the Signs of the Times indicate a long Life for the Republic.

Respectfully,
E. MOFFITT.

A Precious Habit.

My mother's habit was every day, immediately after breakfast, to withdraw for an hour to her own room, and to spend that hour in reading the Bible, in meditation and prayer. From that hour, as from a pure fountain, she drew the strength and sweetness which enabled her to fulfil all her duties and to remain unruffled by all the worries and pettishness which are so often the intolerable trial of narrow neighborhoods. As I think of her life, and of all it had to bear, I see the absolute triumph of Christian grace in the lovely ideal of a Christian lady. I never saw her temper disturbed; I never heard her speak one word of anger, or calumny, or of idle gossip; I never observed in her any sign of a single sentiment unbecoming to a soul which had drunk of the river of the water of life, and which had fed upon manna in the barren wilderness. The world is the better for the passage of such souls across its surface. They may seem to be as much forgotten as the drops of rain which fall into the barren sea, but each drop adds to the volume of refreshful and purifying waters. The healing of the world is in its nameless saints. A single star seems nothing, but a thousand scattered stars break up the night, and make it beautiful."—Archdeacon Farrar.

The Right of Women to Preach.

A few days ago, I read in the columns of the CHRISTIAN SUN an article with the above heading, written by J. Pressley Barrett. This article he tells his readers is the answer to an inquiry from a lady respecting his opinion on the subject of woman's preaching. The writer declares that he has no opinion of his own, but proceeds to express an opinion which he attributes to Paul. Now I differ altogether with J. Pressley Barrett and all others who suppose that the Apostle Paul held any such opinion.

J. Pressley Barrett writes: "I have examined the authorized and revised versions and the Greek, and so far I find no reason to believe that the Apostle Paul did not say what he meant as to women preaching." In this part of the opinion I quite agree with the writer of the article, for the Greek that Paul used in expressing his opinions is said by competent judges to be both forcible and elegant, and the versions consulted are no doubt very accurate translations. The difficulty does not exist in these. I will tell you where to look for it; it is found in the fact that the writer of the article attempts to deduce the opinion of the Apostle Paul on the subject of woman preaching from only a part of what Paul had written on the subject, therein lies his error as I will proceed to show you. When you have carefully read the article, and examined the passages of Scripture used by the writer of the article as proof of Paul's opinion. 1 Tim. 2, 11, 14. Please follow me to another portion of the writings of the inspired apostle, and with the help of the Lord I will endeavor to prove to you that Paul did not intend by those passages in Timothy to express the opinion that the writer of the article supposes to have been his, that woman had no right to preach.

The portion of Paul's inspired writings to which I refer you is found, 1 Cor. 11, and for the benefit of a fuller understanding, see 4th verse. "Every man praying, or prophesying having his head covered dishonoureth his head. Every woman praying or prophesying having her head uncovered dishonoureth her head; for it is all one as if she were shaven." What does the apostle mean by prayeth or prophesieth? In 1 Cor 14 3, he says: "But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, exhortation and comfort. This comprehends all we can understand by exhortation, or even preaching. "But every women that prayeth or prophesieth whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying in respect of the man they have precisely the same meaning with respect to the woman." So that according to the inspired Apostle Paul, some women at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification, and exhortation and comfort. And this kind of prophesying was predicted by the Prophet Joel, 2, 28, 29. This prophecy of Joel was also referred to by Peter, Acts 2, 17, where he declares the prophecy of Joel was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. Acts 1.14 reads: "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and his brethren. And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and said unto them: These are not drunken as ye suppose, but this is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel. And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. And on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy." Now had there not been such gifts bestowed upon women how could Peter have truthfully declared the prophecy fulfilled.

Thus kind reader in our search for Paul's opinion, we find, the prophet Joel, Peter, the Eleven, and indeed all the church impressed with the opinion that woman had a right to preach.

But let us follow Paul a little further in the belief that he will come out plainly and unequivocally declare his opinion on this subject. This time I invite you to Romans 16. After reading that chapter I do not think you will remain unconvinced that Paul not only believed that woman had a right to preach, but that he also found it very helpful to have some of them assist him, (perhaps at big meeting time.) "Phoebe our sister, is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea." The Greek word translated servant, can be properly translated deaconess and such she was. "Greet Priscilla and Aquilla my helpers in Christ Jesus." "Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa who labor in the Lord." "Salute the beloved Persis, who labored much in the Lord." Thus we learn from this chapter of the Apostle Paul's writings that Christian women as well as men, labored in the ministry of the word.

In those times of simplicity, all persons, whether men or women who had received a knowledge of the truth, believed it to be their duty to propagate it to the uttermost of their power.

There were some prophetesses, as well as prophets, in the Christian church we learn; and that a woman might pray or prophesy, provided she had her head covered we have seen; and that who ever prophesied, spoke unto others to edification and exhortation and comfort, Paul declares 1 Cor. 14. and that no preacher can do more every person must acknowledge, because to edify, exhort, and comfort, are the prime ends of the Gospel ministry. If women thus prophesied, then women preached.

Having unravelled this mystery and found Paul's opinion, let us see what woman our Saviour employed as an apostle. The story is thrillingly told in St. John 4. "And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did." This woman was the first apostle of Christ in Samaria! She went and told her fellow citizens, that the Messiah has come: and gave for proof, that he had told her the most secret things that ever she had done.

Now my dear reader I am very glad that Mother Eve though in the transgression was only deceived, and not willfully disobedient as was Adam, and I am sure that Jesus the Son of God when he became incarnate and born of woman conformed all curse that might be attached to an act of Eve so far as it is extended to her daughters, and if it did not his sacrificial death on the Cross of Calvary is quite sufficient to take away the sin of being a daughter of Eve, as well as of personal sins actually committed

From Berea.

DEAR SUN—though the kind providences of a merciful Father, I am permitted to give your readers a few more thoughts. Some time since Bro Barrett announced that he would give us preaching on Tuesday nights following second and third Sundays, of each month, thus giving us four sermons a month. It is needless for me to say that we appreciate this voluntary, extra labor of our pastor. Last Sunday Feb, 26th, at 11 o'clock a. m. a large concourse of people had gathered at the church waiting for the coming of our pastor; but, severe illness in his family necessitated a disappointed people, well, in his absence it was the duty of some brother to conduct services, so the brethren said the writer must perform the duty. Now dear reader if it has ever been your lot in life to have to stand up before a large congregation, (hungering and thirsting for anticipated truths from a gifted theologian), and attempt to talk with limited intellectual capacities, you can imagine my situation. But, (notwithstanding the illogical arrangement of sentences and the zig zag grammatical phrases used), I trust that some effort was not in vain. Through the goodness of an all wise Creator, our highly esteemed leader was permitted to day, to take his stand in the sacred desk, and preach with great power, the word of truth. Now dear brethren, and sisters in the Lord Jesus, while meditating upon the goodness of God I feel inclined—before closing this letter, to ask you to stop a moment and think, reflect, consider, how stands the case with you to day? Are you at peace with God? Do you feel an undisturbed consciousness that you are in the way of godliness? Have you the cords of Divine love entwined around your heart? Do you feel that your heart is a fit temple for the indwelling of Gods spirit? Do you thank God evening and morning for protecting, and preserving your life? Do you freely realize that you are always in his presence, and that he is watching you with a kind, loving fathers care? Brother, sister, if you, if I, cannot answer these questions, in a conscientious satisfactory manner, in our own minds, it is time, as followers of the Lord Jesus; as children of God, that we disrobe ourselves of every barrier that retards the progress to this degree of blessed communion with God. "And now, brethren, I commend you to God and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

Yours in Christ,

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

From Holy Neck.

Long before I ever saw this church I had heard of the kindness and hospitality of its people. Four months pastoral service has fully verified the truthfulness of the report. Without an exception, I have been received kindly by this people, and received much encouragement in my labors. For this I feel deeply grateful.

Notwithstanding the extreme cold, ice and snow, I have filled all my appointments, and with few exceptions have had fair congregations. The special collection ordered by conference, for the superannuated fund, was duly taken up, and the amount ($5.00) sent to the treasurer. The 1st. and 2nd. quarterly conferences have been held. At the first the church endorsed the action of its delegates to conference and joined the Missionary Association. On the 24 inst. the ladies assisted by the gentlemen, gave a concert and supper. The building (Holy Neck Seminary) was crowded and all seemed to enter into the enjoyment of the evening. The net proceeds were about $85.00.

The collection for Norfolk mission was taken up 3rd. Sunday in Feb., and the amount in cash ($23.23) forwarded to Col. A. Savage, treasurer.

The Sunday school has continued through the winter, but during the severe weather the attendance has been small. The Bible lesson pictures have been introduced into the school and seem to add greater interest to the study of the lessons.

During the winter there has been much sickness in our congregation. Holy Neck has several members permanently afflicted. Among these are Bros Albert Rawls and John Norfleet, who are totally blind.

These brethren seem to bear their affliction with Christian fortitude. Bro. Norfleet attends to all his business and keeps his grist mill himself just as in former days. He rides six miles to church and Sunday school every Sunday. Has missed only two or three Sundays during the severe weather, and then he couldn't get across the swamp on account of ice. He contributes liberally to his church and to the general enterprises of the denomination. He does more than many who are in health and in just as good financial circumstances. Bro Norfleet is now 77 years of age. What a standing rebuke should such activity and generosity be to all excuse-pleaders!

A Question for Discussion and Decision.

Shall we continue or shall we discontinue the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention? This is the question now before the people of said Convention.

At the last Session of the convention, (Graham, N. C., July 19, 20, 1892) no school petitioned for the session of 1893; consequently the matter of securing a place for holding the twelfth annual session, July 18, 1893, was left to the Executive Committee, as yet we have had no application for said meeting.

If any Sunday Schools or churches wish the said convention to meet with them, they will please notify the undersigned.

In the meantime, possibly, it would be well for the brethren and sisters to exchange views through the SUN, as there are those who are in favor of holding another session and thus continue the convention, while there are others who think to the contrary. The matter is now before you, what shall be the decision?

Yours fraternally,

J. L. FOSTER

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Good weather is here now. Help us make the SUN brighter.

Bro. Wellons, the people like to hear from the work at Durham.

We hope Mr. Moody may come to Raleigh before he leaves North Carolina.

Let the ministers and churches push the work of the Master these bright days

Will Rev. J. N. Farrell of Texas give us a note occasionally from his far away home?

Look for the full paper next week. We are trying to get the Annuals ready to mail this week.

Brethren, send up the news from your fields. It is always read with interest. Let us have it.

Now the work is to commence in a few days on the Norfolk church send in your contribution to Col. A. Savage of Norfolk, Va.

Rev. M. L. Hurley paid his father a visit this week. We had the pleasure of seeing him on his trip to the home of his boyhood days.

On account of the ill health of his aged mother, Mr. Moody will not hold meetings at Charlotte and Wilmington N. C. in this month. This will be a great disappointment to many.

Bro. Barrett requests us to say that many pressing pastoral duties so occupies his time that he could not answer Bro. Holland and Charnock in time for this issue, but he hopes to be ready to do so in the next issue of the SUN.

Let not the friends of the Missionary Association be slow to act upon the request of the president of that body, made recently in these columns to pry in, as promptly as possible, the assessments or annual dues for 1893. Send to Deacon Thos. R. Gaskins, Drivers, Va.

Denominationalism.

In the SUN of Nov. 2 we gave as one of the reasons why we do not believe in denominationalism this: "It tends to discourage a free and unbiased study of God's Word."

The right of free access to the Word of God, and of private judgment and liberty of conscience in the interpretation and application of its blessed truths, is inherent in the nature of man and the character of God's Word. It is a divinely-given right with which no law ecclesiastical or civil should dare interfere. He who would do this is striving to lord it over God's heritage. He is an enemy to the truth, a stumbling block in the church of God, and oftentimes becomes that man of sin and son of perdition, who exalteth himself above all that is called God.

Rome prohibits the study of God's Word thereby keeping her followers in the darkness and superstition of ignorance. This is the only means by which her iniquitous purposes in the past could have been accomplished. Intelligence cannot be enslaved, ignorance can not enjoy freedom. Educate a race, of slaves and their shackles at once fall off. Allow a people to sink into ignorance and they become voluntary slaves. Ignorance and superstition would bow in humble adoration at the feet of the Pope and kiss his toe, intelligence never could. Ignorance would confess and implore forgiveness of the Pope, intelligence would ask of God alone "who giveth liberally to all and upbraideth not." Ignorance would pronounce him infallible and submit passive obedience, but intelligence would boldly declare. "We must obey God rather than man." Therefore Rome had only to choose between intelligence with overthrow and ignorance with power. She chose the latter and history tells the remainder of the story.

Protestantism has been unanimous in its denunciation of Rome. It has declared her practices an abominable superstition and her Pope "that man of sin and son of perdition." But what has she herself done? She has not prohibited the study of the word, but has restricted it. She has not sought to unite the church under one pope, but has divided it into hostile factions under leaders variously designated. She has never attempted to subject to herself, by force of arms, all Christendom, but in the conflict of her hostile factions she has sown the seeds of a discord that has drenched some of the fairest spots of the globe with human blood. She has not yielded passive obedience to a pope believed to be infallible, but has freely submitted to other leaders acknowledged by herself to be fallible.

"Who art thou," O Protestantism, "that judgest," "for wherein thou judgest another thou condemnst thyself."

Each faction of denominationalism would deny all others, and have its adherents educated with a view to that end. They do not say to their followers: Here is a mine of truth. It is all yours. Learn all its truths you can, apply them to your heart, and practice them in your lives. But it says: Here is a volume which contains certain truths. You must study it with a view to learning those certain truths, and no other. If you imbibe any other truth from this book than those taught by this body, you shall be excommunicated from the church of God. The result of all this is

(1) Interest in the study of God's Word is decreased.

A visitor would care little for a walk through the botanical garden of New York or London if he had to go blindfolded amid all these rare beauties of nature, and could lift the blindfold only when he came to some common place flower or shrub which he had seen from childhood. Yet this is just the way the poor creed-bound sectarian approaches the Word of God. From his childhood days in the Sabbath school his mind has been directed away from all truth of the Word, save those taught by his denomination. These are usually tabulated and given him, tending even more to direct him from the pure Word of God. What incentive can it be to a man to search for truth, when he knows that the discovery of any other truth than that already in his possession, would necessitate the severing of the dearest associations of life and the breaking of the most sacred obligations?

(2) The Word itself is degraded. Instead of being made the only infallible rule of faith and practice, it is made secondary to the few articles of faith drawn up by a single person and expressing simply his opinions. It is studied, not for its rich spiritual truths which alone can bless the soul, but to show that the individual's particular denomination is the church of God while all others are either inferior branches or absolute heretics. It is studied, not for a message of salvation to dying men, but for argument whereby denominational lives are drawn and the command of our blessed Lord violated. It is studied, not for its lessons of wisdom and love, but for vindication of the bitterest invective and the most withering sarcasm.

(3) It degrades the scholarship of the church. Instead of an independent, dignified scholarship among the ministry, we often find, as a fruit of denominationalism, a class of parasites, narrow in their views and uncharitable in their actions. Denominationalism has obscured some of the best talent of the world and has debased, perhaps, even more. We see men wasting their God given talents in wrangling over questions which have never saved nor condemned a soul. One man is compiling volume after volume to prove that the wicked will stand just as high in God's favor as the good. Another is spending his life in explaining away the divinity of Christ. Another in attempting to prove that a man's eternal destiny has been sealed from all time. All of which tend to make men worse instead of better. May God deliver in his own good time his church from this baneful curse!

Respectable Sins.

In the mind of God there is no such thing as respectable sins. But under the unyielding law of customs society has divided sins into various classes without giving special names to them. This is a matter of no little importance to both church and society. For it opens many roads into the ways of sins, along which people go, led by the social side, thinking but little about the final results.

Many members of the various churches are walking in the channels of wrong doing, with conscience lulled to sleep in the cradle of respectability fashioned by the hand of popular sentiments.

The man who plows his crop on Sunday is frowned down upon as a miserable sinner; but fifty men may form a company, build a railroad, hire a thousand men, work them on the Sabbath and send the cars thundering along the track on the Lord's day, and nothing said, all because custom and money have made it respectable to do so. The laws of society make it right for great money companies to work and receive money for it on the Sabbath day, but wrong for the fellow to carry his freight home on the same day. The God of the universe will not follow the laws of custom made by society. His eyes are open to all wrong doing; and sin's respectable feature will all fade away before Him as the flowers of the field before the sun. Many things respectable here are as black as midnight with crime, in the light of heaven's perfection.

Windsor Va.

On Saturday, the cold snowy after noon in March, Windsor was reached, and the kindness of the family of Bro. Mills Watkins enjoyed through the night. We had learned to love the people of this place years ago. Their hospitality seems to grow more and more as they grow older.

Sunday morning, Bro. Watkins kindly took us to Mt. Carmel where we found a large congregation, to which Rev. J. T. Kitchen preached a good sermon. He is quite popular with his people. It was a great pleasure to look into the genial faces again of Bro. I. W. Duck, Dr. J. J. Duck, Bro. J. Yner, English and many others.

Sunday night we attended services at Windsor, and met many friends whom we had known in former days. The night was spent with Bro Carr. He and his wife know how to make a preacher feel at home.

Monday Bro. John King kindly took us to Isle of Wight Court House. Here we were glad to see many of the brethren. Monday night was spent with Bro. Kit hen. He, as usual, was ready to talk about the church work. He is working hard for the cause of temperance.

We went to Norfolk, Tuesday morning where we took breakfast with the family of Dr. C. J. Jones. He and his Norfolk people are doing a fine work in that future city of the South. It seems now that the Norfolk church has a bright future. Whilst in Norfolk, we had the pleasure of seeing, Dr. Jones, A. M. Eley, Col. Savage, J. T. White, M. J. W. White, Sisters Jones, Eley, Hill and others. One day and night was spent with Dr. J. Pressley Barrett. He showed us many acts of kindness, for which we are thankful. An excellent dinner was taken with Bro. R. A. Hyslop, in Berkley. Rev. R. D. H. Demarest rendered us much aid. The brethren at Berkley are fixing to rebuild their house of worship. Rev. Roger Charnock, their pastor, seems to be very popular.

On our return home, one night was pleasantly spent in Suffolk, with that princely gentleman, W. H. Jones, and one in Franklin with that high toned Christian gentleman, A. H. Williams.

A Word of Defense.

MR. EDITOR:—We notice in this week's issue of the SUN a stricture by the Rev. Mr. Charnock on the Psiphelian Society of Elon College for the very enjoyable oyster supper which the society gave us not a long time ago. Now it seems to us that if Bro. Charnock had cleared his mind of the mist which was hovering around it when he wrote, and had sought to obtain some information on the matter before entering his protests so profusely, he would not have had quite so much adverse criticism to offer. The oyster-supper had no religious bearing, other than what is common to all social gatherings. It was not began by singing hymns, nor by reading the scriptures, nor by praying of prayers. Neither was its intent for the purpose of raising money to carry on the work of the church and keeping the pastor's wife from starving, but it was simply for the benefit of the Psiphelian Society,—only this and nothing more. If Bro. Charnock objects to that, then it must be because he does not like oysters. And if that is the case, we do not think he ought to object to other people's liking them; and in regard to the effect on our appetites referred to we hope he will permit us to inform him that not one of us felt the slightest inconvenience, and the only regret was that the oysters did not hold out quite long enough.

Very truly,
HERBERT SCHOLZ.

Suffolk Letter.

Our church is preparing for an Easter service, and usually they have been very pleasant and very profitable spiritually. We use this year, "The Dawn of Glory," a service of song and responsive readings, with additions of recitations.

All around in the papers last week the opening of the World's Fair on the Sabbath was a topic of interest. The matter seems to be settled that it will not be opened on Sunday. This is a step in the right direction. The American people stand square for the Bible, for the Sabbath, and for Christianity as taught by the gospel; any departure from these lines does not fully represent our nation Hurrah for the United States! It is the "New World" in a better sense than we usually think when we pronounce these words. In ideas, in liberty, in discovery and invention, in religious convictions and loyalty to them, in equality of life and nobility of character a "New World" exists in this western continent.

Dr. W. T. Herndon and Rev. W. G. Clements were both in Eastern Va. last week the former looking after Elon College interests, the latter after the interests of the CHRISTIAN SUN.

Deacon J. A. McCloud and Bro. D. L. Bowden of Berkley, Va. are in Suffolk this morning. They are deeply interested in the new Christian church to be erected in Berkley.

Congregations at our church here were large yesterday. Bright days increase church attendance.

Deacon John T. Nurney has been sick for more than a week, but is now improving.

John F. Lotzia, merchant tailor, was in Baltimore last week making spring purchases for his store.

J. Frank Little spent last week at his old home in Suffolk. He has been living in Roanoke for nearly two years, but love for the old town remains in his heart; and also love for his church.

I find myself too tired this morning to write; but I am just as willing as at any past time. "The Spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," you see. Attended only six services yesterday.

Elon Missionary Meeting.

The missionary meeting of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. of this school took place of the prayer meeting to night. The exercises began with a duet, sung by Misses Price and Harward our music teachers, and we thank God that he has furnished us with such devout ladies who are so willing to help us. The meeting was led by Prof. Scholz. His subject; "The Hindo Religion." Prof. gave us a vivid and touching description of the degrading beliefs of the 254,000,000 people of India, showing their forms of worship, beliefs in human sacrifices. Such a description took hold of all and created a prayerful sympathy for, and a longing desire to render this benighted people the necessary Christian aid.

After music by the choir we were favored with a paper by Mr. W. H. Boone, on missionary progress in India. The news of Christian progress among such a people greatly pleased and encouraged us. And brought vividly to our minds the command. "Go preach my gospel to all the world." Music by the choir.

Next a reading: "Blind Chin Moorie" by Miss Annie Eley. This is a touching account of a little Chinese girl who was won for Christ and who, even in her blindness is now doing much for Christ among her people. Music by the choir.

A good collection, for the benefit of mission was then taken up. Our students are taught to give, and to give willingly, as well as to read Greek and Latin. And God grant that this spirit may be transmitted from them to all the people of the Christian church; for then we would boom as a denomination and the results of such a spirit would be marvelous. Exercises closed with music. "Over the Ocean Wave," by the choir.

I would to God that all of the people of the Christian church south could be present at some of our meetings here, I feel sure that if such could be the case, they would catch the moving, acting spirit, and that things with them would have more life and especially would their mission fees always be paid up.

Yours in Christ,

J. H. JONES.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I was looking over the SUN this evening, and I saw the picture, and papa said that was Uncle Tangle, but I thought it must be old Santa the one we had at the Raleigh Christian church, at Christmas, but papa said no it was you, but I can not think your nose is so long, but the weather has been so bad I could not come to Sunday school since Christmas, and I have almost forgot how you looked, and papa says when people get married they begin to get older very fast, though I do not think your nose has grown so fast. PATMOS, N. C. Feb. 25, 1893.

DEAR COUSINS:—How I'd like to meet each one of you, and Uncle Tangle! Have met five, and hope some day to meet a great many more. May the Lord help us to live a good Christian life, and meet in that beautiful land above. The Corner has started out very bright this year. It would make Uncle Tangle rejoice to have the Corner filled with letters every week, and to have the dimes to come in fast. The dimes seems a trifle but God will reward the effort, and only eternity can tell the great good your little dimes will do. Uncle Tangle is very kind in giving you a Corner in his valuable paper. I like to read the SUN very much. I always get mine on Saturday, and it seems that I can hardly wait for it to come. I shall ever feel grateful to the person who is sending it to me, may their life be long, and prosperous. Well dear cousins I will give you a few questions to answer: Who assisted the Jews in their return to the Holy Land? Who came out against the Israelites at Elrei? As Abraham's servant was praying at a well, who came to draw water? What Syrian captain came to Elisha to be healed? Who was made queen instead of Vashiti? Which one of Jacob's wives was beautiful, and well favored? Who will answer first? I see that you all seem to be prompt in writing, now who will be prompt in answering the questions?

I will close wishing you all, and Uncle Tangle, much happiness.

Lovingly yours,

COUSIN JOSIE.

Strength Just in Time.

Mr. Isaac Aber
Of Vienna, N. J.

"I gladly testify to the following facts: I have been a very great sufferer for the last five years with troubles of the Lungs and Kidneys and the worst stage of Dyspepsia.

I could scarcely eat anything because of the intense pain in my stomach. I was also at one time covered with salt rheum, and my cough weakened me so that I could scarcely walk. I had several attacks of bleeding at the lungs. My breath became so short that I was unable to work and was obliged to give up my business, which is that of a mason. I could not even walk about much. So I kept going from bad to worse. I then had an attack of the shingles, which, with all my other complaints, confined me to my room for three months and Nearly Took Away My Life.

I had heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a good medicine, so I bought a bottle. When I had taken it, I found it had done me some good, so I continued till I had taken three bottles. more. The physicians told me five years ago that I would not live three years, and all the neighbors think it a very strange thing to see me at work again. It is the strength given me by Hood's Sarsaparilla which enabled me to do it."

In Luck Certain.

After trying to sell books, pictures and wringers, and nearly every contrivance imaginable, I became discouraged and thought there was no chance for a poor man to earn a living.

There was nothing to do on the farm, and I could not get a job in town, when I happened to see how a teacher made money selling platers and thought I would try my luck. I bought a $5 Lightning Plater from H. F. Delno & Co., Columbus, Ohio, and from that day my luck seemed to change. I carried the plater from house to house and plated knives, forks and spoons, right before the folks, and it is surprising how many want their things plated. I made $3.70 the first day, and in one week $28.

I can plate with nickel, silver or gold. The work is fine, my customers are pleased and I am happy. I hope some other fellow, who is down on his luck, will see this and do as I have done and get up in the world.

—William Evans.

A Curious Clock.

A curious clock, destined for the world's Fair at Chicago, has been made by a clock maker at Warsaw, named Goldfaden, who has worked at it six years. The clock represents a rail way station, with waiting rooms for the traveler, telegraph and ticket offices, a very pretty, well lighted platform, and a flower garden, in the center of which is a sparkling fountain of clear water, past the rail way station run the lines. There are also signal-boxes, lights and reservoirs—in fact, everything that belongs to a railway station, to the smallest detail. In the cupola of the central tower is a clock which shows the time of the place; two clocks in the side cupolas show the time at New York and Pekin; and on the two outermost towers are a calendar and barometer. Every quarter of an hour the station begins to show signs of life. First of all the telegraph official begins to work. He despatches a telegram stating that the line is clear. The door opens, and on the platform appear the station master and his assistant; the clerk is seen at the window of the ticket office; and the pointsmen come out of their boxes and close the barriers. A long line of people form at the ticket office, to buy tickets; porters carry luggage; the bell is rung, and then out of the tunnel comes a train, rushing into the station and, after the engine has given a shrill whistle, stops. A workman goes from carriage to carriage and tests the axles with a hammer. Another pumps water into the boiler of the engine. After the third signal with the bell the engine whistles and the train disappears into the opposite tunnel; the station master and his assistants leave the platform and the doors of the waiting room close behind them; the pointsmen return into their boxes and perfect stillness prevails till, in a quarter of an hour, the whole is repeated.—Home Journal.

We all Make Mistakes.

As misery always loves company, we give the following from the Biblical Recorder, to show the readers of the Sun that it is not the only paper that makes mistakes: The Christian Index of Atlanta, Ga., the most poorly edited Baptist paper in the South, in last week's issue presumes to criticise our use of capitals in the words "Judaism" and "Christianity." Glancing over his page in which the criticism occurs, a number of mistakes, as usual, presented themselves. We turned the paper over to two of our printers, and in a little while they returned it marked all over, and the entire margin, top and bottom and both sides, were entirely covered with marked errors, and on his editorials page over one hundred errors were marked. Many glaring errors in spelling in his leading editorial—the word "bigotry" was twice spelled "bigoty." Many errors in the use of capitals, errors in rulings, punctuations, and every conceivable thing. But he would be critic outraged editorial courtesy in his effort to hold up a contemporary to ridicule before his readers by displaying his criticism in leaving out all capitals, and thus printing the name of our paper in small type. One hundred errors on a single page is a hundred times more excusable than a wilful violation of every courtesy. But we are charitable enough to think that it was the work of some irresponsible interloper who wanted to vent some spleen against us.

Georgia affords the best field for a firstclass Baptist paper in the South. Isn't it a wonder and a pity that some one does not improve the opportunity?

After the grip, when you are weak and "played out," Hood's Sarsaparilla will restore your health and strength.

Serve God by doing common actions in a heavenly spirit.—Spurgeon.

A Triumphant Death.

Charles H. Winfree was born Dec. 25, 1812 and died Oct 27, 1892. He made a profession of religion in early life and joined the Christian church at Union, Va. I was his pastor for the last 9 years, and I knew him to be an earnest Christian, and truly devoted to his church. He was a good neighbor, an affectionate husband and a loving father, and good church worker. He was conscious to the end of his earthly pilgrimage, saying to his son, "I am going home." I have been with you all for a long time, but will leave you for a while. "I cannot return to you but you can come to me." He said his whole trust was in Jesus, and his last days were his brightest and happiest, as he lay upon his dying bed and sang, How firm a foundation." But the end was coming, and he knew his condition. He gave his dear friends his parting counsel. He kissed them farewell. It was farewell dear wife, we have been companions for a long time. Farewell, daughter; farewell, sons; farewell, little grand son; farewell, neighbors; farewell, friends; farewell, to all. Then came a whisper from his quivering lips as of old. The time of his departure being at hand, and he clinging to Christ with such child like faith, he said, "glory, glory, glory to God forever." His body was laid away to rest in Union, Va. cemetery, till the resurrection morning. May God bless the dear bereaved ones, and sanctify this dispensation of his goodness to their eternal good.

S. B. KLAPP.

Died.

At his late residence, near Providence church, Norfolk county, Va., Suddenly on Sunday morning, March 5th, 1893, Mr. John H. Hodges, in the 58th year, of his age.

Our friend whose death we thus record, was a native of Norfolk county, had long been a popular citizen, an excellent neighbor, and a devoted husband. He had held responsible positions of trust in the county, and always in faithfulness.

He was twice married; his first wife was Miss Edith Portlock, who preceded him to the spirit world many years. His second wife, who survives him was Miss Josephine Halstead, daughter of the late W. N. Halstead of Norfolk county.

He leaves no children by either marriage.

The funeral service was conducted from his late residence by the writer, and his body was laid into its lasting resting place in the cemetery in Berkley, Va. The attendance was very large, clearly indicating his wide circle of friends.

May God bless the broken hearted widow in her great loss

DEAR SUN:—We had pleasant services yesterday at both hours, as the weather improves our congregations improve.

Our Wednesday night Bible readings are very pleasant services and pretty well attended. Our Sabbath school is small but prompt in attendance.

I announced yesterday we would commence a series of meetings the 2nd Sunday in April. We have been looking forward and praying that we might see a necessity for such a meeting at an early time and I hope the meeting is the suggesting of the Holy Spirit.

I want to ask that the pastors of the respective congregations please have one special prayer for the success of the meeting, and we ask the prayers of all God's people that the meeting may result in great good for the cause of the Maker here. We are few in numbers, but a few of my members are true and devoted to the church and very apt to do their full measure of duty.

J. W. WELLONS.

March 20, 1893.

Youngsville Church.

The second Sunday and Saturday before were spent with the church at Youngsville, N. C. It was always a great pleasure to meet this dear people. And this time the pleasure was emphasised by the presence of sister Hatch of Hanks Chapel, mother of Dr. Hatch. She was on a visit to her son's home.

We miss very much, at the organ, Miss Minnie Klapp since her father's family has moved to Elon College. Dr. Hatch, however, filled her place well last Sunday.

Saturday night was pleasantly spent with Bro. Genatus Winston; and Sunday night with Bro. W. T. Young.

Resignation of Rev. D. F. Jones.

The following letter from Rev. D. F. Jones will be read by our people with no little surprise, even as it was by the mission board.

"To the Board of Foreign Missions of the American Christian Convention.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—While I acknowledge your kindness to us and full fellowship with us in the blessed, though trying work in Japan, from the first day until the present, I must from conscientious reasons, present my resignation, to take place March 31st, 1893, or sooner if you should so desire.

My reasons being the following: I find on examination, that I have dishonored the Lord by ever in any way, acknowledging pouring or sprinkling as Christian baptism; when the plain teaching of the Word of God is otherwise. While continuing as your honored servant, I find that I am forced in one way or other to recognize them as baptism. It being my determination to follow the Lord fully, at all costs, therefore, while I very much dislike to offer to you my resignation, I see no other way. This includes the resignation of my dear wife also. Please consider the above as positive.

Respectfully offered,

Yours in Christ,

D. F. JONES.

Tokio, Japan, January 19, 1893."

The following quotations are from Brother Jones' letters accompanying his resignation: "I am sorry to say in pouring water on a candidate and calling it baptism" (this he did before leaving the south for Japan) "I dishonored the Lord, and now while repenting I determined to do so no more, or even countenance the same, which I must do to continue on as heretofore." "If true to conscience I do not see how I can be true to your trust, therefore the action," (resignation).

"We sincerely trust the day will come when you all will understand and follow the dear Lord on the subject of baptism."

From all the above it will be seen that the reason Brother Jones gives for resigning is purely a theological reason, so far as I know no other reason has been given or intimated.

From the time of his employment as missionary to the present he has never by any member of our board been asked to sprinkle or pour for baptism. His uniform practice in Japan has been immersion and this has been satisfactory to our mission board. Neither on the other hand has he been asked or expected to make Christian character plus baptism, a condition of fellowship.

He frankly writes me that he has already offered his services to another denomination.

So much by way of explanation. While gratefully acknowledging the financial economy with which Bro. Jones has managed our mission, the consecration of himself and wife to the work, and all that they have accomplished, the Board has by a unanimous vote accepted their resignation, to take place March 15th, 1893.

But What of the Japan Work?

It is to go on with scarcely an interruption. If the Schools of the Prophets at Gilgal, Bethel and Jericho felt badly when Elijah was removed, their hearts were soon reassured when they saw the power of God resting on Elisha their new leader.

Our new Missionaries feel the weight of the responsibilities which will now rest solely upon them. But Our Mission board believes that the mission is in safe and efficient hands. They have now been in the field four months, by March 15, it will be five months. Bro. Woodworth and Miss Penrod are making good progress in the language. Bro. W. has been diligent in learning the situation; he has held a conference of and with the native preachers, and is well in sympathy with the native workers and the work. In the hands of our Missionaries now on the ground, under the blessing of God, our Japan mission will go on to greater prosperity.

Some contemplated changes and improvements are expected to be brought about in due time. Among which are a greater centralization of the work in view of permanency; a better acquaintance among the native workers themselves. Occasional serial meetings in view of revivals; a mission or religious paper in their own language; and a church and school building in Tokio, or some other central point.

Let our home churches stand unitedly, with faith in God, much earnest prayer for our Missionaries and their helpers, and a generous liberality for the work, and a glorious part in the evangelization of Japan is assured for our Mission.

THE PULPIT.

A Scriptural Sermon.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

God is love. 1 John 4:8

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.

Their line is gone out through all the earth and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the same.

Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

To whom then will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?

The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

He that is so impoverished that he hath no oblation chooseth a tree that will not rot; he seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.

Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

That bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown; yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

I. Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his son to be the propitiation for our sins.

For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die

But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

O the depth of his riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!

For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor?

Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again?

For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

II. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world.

But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of woman, made under the law,

To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners: of whom I am chief.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins:

But if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called Trees of righteousness, The planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified.

Jesus answered them, verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you.

Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.

For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness.

What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death.

But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For we ourselves also were sometime foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving drivers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared.

Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

Which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.

Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

III He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ:

According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love:

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will,

To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved:

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace;

Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence;

Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself:

That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him:

In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God:

And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

For I reckon that the suffering of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I become a man, I put away childish things.

For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.

Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?

I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

O Lord truly I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thine handmaid: thou hast loosed my bonds.

I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord.

I pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people.

In the courts of the Lord's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the Lord.

Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy,

To the only wise God our saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever Amen.

Assurance.

1st. John 4:18. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. What does John mean by writing this scripture. Does he mean we shall know we are Christians? The answer comes "Yes." We are to know we are the children of God by the spirit which he hath given us. This beloved apostle (John) had in his possession Christ's peculiar love. And he tells us in the 4th ch. and 8th v. God is love. And if God is love, religion is love because religion is of God. Religion has no respect to person as to salvation. Neither has Christ. And when one's soul is full of the love of Christ, he loves every body even his enemies, John 3 ch. 14 v. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

Then if we are in possession of Christ's loving spirit, inasmuch that we love one another, then we should make it known upon the housetop. I "know that I am a Christian, by the spirit which he has given me." Love is a gracious principle wrought in the heart by God. Suppose we were destitute of this gracious principle, then our minds would be pondering in doubts and fear. Why doubt Christ any longer? Why not say by the spirit of Christ, the "great tester," I "know I am a Christian". If the love of Christ were a substance we know not of, then religion would not be worth having.

Some may say we are not to know we are Christians, but say we hope we are. To such as may use the above language we say as did the Apostle Paul we ever should be ready to give a reason for the hope we possess. And Christ's loving spirit which is the reasoner teaches us this scripture 1 John 2 ch. 3 v. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

And his commandments are not grievous, when we learn to love them. Would we think our earthly father would tell us to do a thing that he knew we could not do. How much the more our heavenly father in giving us his commandments. God is too just, to give his sons and daughters a command so hard he knew they could not keep it. Suppose we were to ask Paul if we should know we are Christians. It seems to me he would give us this scripture. Romans 8 ch. 10 v. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, it so be that the spirit of God dwelleth in you. Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness.

Paul in his dying moments, begun to retrospect his past, and "exclaimeth" I have fought a good fight, have kept the faith and am now ready to die or to be offered up. Could we think that Paul's mind was pondering in doubts as to his Christianity? or his past life as a Christian "Not by any means!" He had kept the commandments and the spirit of Christ had and was teaching him so.

Oh my brethren, think how many suffered martyrdom because they denounced paganism and claiming they were Christians. There were hundreds, doubtless there were thousands, who suffered martyrdom because they would say they were Christians, long after Paul was martyred. Suppose, my brethren, we die with our minds clouded with fear to meet the great Judge, just as our minds, our spirits, our faith, is when we die, so shall we appear before our blessed Saviour. Then on seeing him in fear, we will not be happy to meet him. "Why." Because we did not trust him in this world as a God of reality. The way to meet Christ is to feel that we have kept the faith, that has been conformed in us by Christ. Then with this experience we can approach Christ as a loving Saviour. Oh dear brethren away with your doubts and let us be happy forever. Happy in this world and the world to come. Use this world as the beginning of heaven. Cry aloud with Isaiah, "Arise" "Shine for the light is come," and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. May God bless the dear Sun and all of its readers.

Bread stolen from the poor is poison to the soul.

Why did Christ Die?

Various answers have been given to this question, and there has been much bitter controversy upon it; but we have one infallible guide, the Bible. There we learn the following facts: 1. Christ died for man. He "tasted death for every man." Heb. 2:9 "Christ died for the ungodly. Rom 5:6. 2 He died for our redemption. "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity. Titus 2:14. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Col. 1:14 3. He died that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all people." Luke 24:47. "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Acts 5:31. 4. He died to save us from the curse of the law. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Gal. 5:13 5. He died for our sins, "who was delivered for our offenses." Rom. 4:25. 6 He died "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them, who through the fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Heb. 2:14 15. 7. He died that he might live again. "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again." Job 10:17. 8 He died as a sacrifice to God. He offered himself without spot to God." Heb. 9:14. He loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour." Eph. 5:7 9 He died that he might return to heaven, and send the Holy Spirit. "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you." John 16:7. 10. He died as a ransom for man. "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Matt. 20:18. 11. He died to set us an example. "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps. 1 Pet. 2:21. 12. He died and rose again that he might prove that he is the Son of God and Saviour of the world. "The Jews said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us seeing thou doest these things? Jesus answered and said unto them. Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. Then said the Jews. Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he spake of the temple of his body." John 2:18-21.

He "was declared to be the Son of God, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. 1:4. 13. He died and arose from the dead to confirm his appointment as Judge of the world. God "hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts. 17:31. 14. He died to reward the death and tenderness of God's love for sinners. "God commandeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5:8. 15. He died to reconcile man to God. "For Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." 1 Pet. 3:18. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." 2 Cor. 5:19. 16. He died for remission of sins. "This my blood... which is shed for many for the remission of sins. Matt. 26:28. 17. He died to redeem us from sin. "Jesus Christ who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity," Titus 2:13-14. "Once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9:26. 18. He died that he might be ruler of both the living and the dead. "For this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." Rom. 14:9.

These are the reasons given in the Scriptures why it was necessary that Christ should die, and we should be satisfied with them; for the plan of salvation originated in the infinite wisdom and boundless love of God. He cannot make any mistake, nor do wrong. Theologians have gone back of the statements of the Bible, and attempted to give us the philosophy of this great question, and from this has arisen all the controversy and strife on this subject. If all were satisfied with the statements of the Bible there would be no trouble, but Christian philosophers try to explain what God has left unexplained. They are wise above what is written. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor?" Rom. 11:33-34.

But the question is asked, why send his Son to suffer and die? Why not send some one else? Christ answers this question. "But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, they will reverence my son." Matt. 21:27. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16

The Importance of Little Things.

When we look away down the the dim and shadowy past, when 500 years B. C. the grand old prophet spoke the sentiment of our subject, we find that the people were inclined to overlook the importance of little things. Since that was the case with the people of that remote time, what should we expect to be true of those who live in these the closing years of the nineteenth century, when men converse by means of electricity, and when everything seems to be going at lightning speed? The answer unmistakably comes back, "That the last state must be worse than the first."

In the natural world let us notice the office of little things. See you mighty oak in the distance towering fourth as if it would become an endless ladder joining heaven and earth. Know ye not that it sprang from a very tiny acorn, and watered by the dew-drops of heaven, warmed by the gentle rays of the sun, it ever mounted higher and higher, little by little, till now it stands the giant of the forest? So also the tallest pine grew from a little seed wafted here and there by the gentle breeze. This grand structure in which we now are, is but the development of a little clay and a tiny seed. The Amazon, the largest river in the world had its origin in a little bubbling spring. The historic deluge was but condensed vapor; while the boundless ocean itself is only the accumulation of small drops of water. When nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dew-drops. This grand old earth upon which we dwell is made up of atoms so small that they can not be seen by mortal eye; while the proudest race in existence are but organized particles of dust. And since the observance of little things is so important, it behooves us to look well to the littles in our dealings with others. It is by the little word or deed of loving kindness and loving sympathy that we make other hearts glad, and that we win the love and gratitude of others. And it is by the little word of thoughtless and deliberate unkindness or severity that we give pain to others, and that we leave sad and bitter memories of our unlovely course in the minds of those whose love and respect we might have won and held. It is often true that—

"A clouded face Strikes deeper than an angry blow."

It is easier to show littleness in the doing or the attempting of great things than it is to show greatness in the doing or attempting of little things. But both these things are possible; and both of them are sure to be recognized, and to have their potency whenever and wherever they are manifested. It is the unconscious, the instinctive and the impulsive word or act of those whom we observe, rather than their more deliberate and more formal expressions of self, by which we shape our estimate of them. And in the same way we are judged by the world about us. It is more important for us in fact to have a care to our course in minor affairs of every day life, than in the greater matters and on the chief occasions when every body knows that we are on our guard and are at our best.

It is said that the cost of the fences in America is greater in the aggregate than the cost of the buildings. It is certainly the case that the smaller items exceed in amount the larger ones in every man's cash account. And when it comes to the troubles and worries of life, who will say that it is the great things rather than the little ones which make up his daily burdens and that cost him his keenest heart-pangs?

Our fathers who fought so bravely, so heroically in the late war, will tell you that they had no such fear of heavy artillery as of light infantry in the hour of action. It is the little pieces of the cannon ball rather than the whole ball that are so destructive to human life. They did not dread the ponderous round shot, or the shrieking Parrot shell, as they did the hissing bullet that pierced the air and the tissues of life, like a flying needle. Many a man who could nerve himself up to bear the amputation of a limb, or who could move forward unflinchingly into the thick of battle, shrinks like a child from the thought of having a tooth pulled, or an inflamed finger lanced. The very smallness of the demand for courage stands as a barrier to heroism.

As there are poisons which kill surely in small doses, but which work their own cure in larger portions, so there are many trials and causes of suffering which are overpowering and deadly in proportion to their seeming insignificance.

Those who could bear great griefs courageously and who could grandly meet great emergencies are powerless in the presence of discomforts and annoyances which are large enough to be a reality, but too small to create a demand on all the energies of mind and heart.

All great discoveries are made through observing the little things rather than the larger ones. It is the man who watches the flying kite, or the swinging lamp, or the convulsive liftings of the kettle-cover, or the twitching muscles of a frog, or who pores in study over the lenses of the microscope, who brings to light new forces in nature, and new helps to toil, and to power, and to health. More has been learned concerning the starry heavens, by the examination of the single rays of light from the distant orbs, under the scrutiny of the spectroscope, than by all the survey of the vast orbs themselves in the limitless sweep of the telescope. And the great scholar in any sphere always shows this greatness rather in his new uplifting of an overlooked little in his realm of research, than in his setting in a new light the great truths which even an untrained eye could see, and an unskilled mind could perceive the meaning of.

It requires constant watchfulness to guard our littles in speech and conduct. It is harder to be always right in little things than to be always right in great things. When the Lord chose men for Gideon's army, he judged them by so simple an act as drinking from a spring. Agar's is a model prayer; but a short one and the petition is but for a little. That grand old sermon on the Mount is a little one, but the last dedication discourse was an hour. Day is made up of little beams, and night is glorious with little stars. Life is made up of littles; death is what remaineth of them all.

God is judging every one of us right now by the manner in which we do our simplest tasks. And His glorious rule of judging is of universal application: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much; and he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much."

The Old Homestead.

Often with sadness mingled with joy and delight our minds run back to former days. We picture in our minds the dear old home and the loved ones who used to form the circle there. With what fondness we are wont to think of the pleasant days of childhood. How we scan the events and scenes of the days gone by. We call up our brothers and sisters, our dear old playmates, our schoolmates, the innocent pleasures of youth. But when we count how many have gone, one by one, and are no more in this world, our hearts yearn with feeling of sadness. We shall never meet them this side of the judgment seat of Christ. We think of that dear mother who cared so tenderly for us in our infancy, in our helplessness; of our father who was sterner, yet kind and indulgent. We think of the deep anguish of mother and father when the waves of cruel war rolled ruthlessly against our beloved south country, and their boys, one by one, had to leave home, and all, to risk the fortunes of war. We feel to thank God forever for such good Christian parents whose earnest fervent prayer followed their noble boys, as they fought, for their safety in the dangers incident to a soldier's life. Through many severe battles God's protecting hand was clearly seen; and unscarred we were preserved and permitted, when sweet peace came, to return home again. But these dear parents are gone. All is still. One by one all have gone. "I am thinking tonight of my old cottage home"

The Right of Woman to Preach.

In the SUN of March 9th, I find myself called to account by two dear brethren, as to what I have recently said touching the right of woman to preach.

Bro. Holland thinks I am in a dilemma, in that I am conscientiously opposed to women preaching, and yet do not wish to incur the disfavor of our sisters. I am not aware of having the reputation of being very brave, but I would hold myself in contempt, if the fear of the disfavor of any man, or any woman, could make me handle the word of God in a deceitful manner. I may in my ignorance misinterpret the scriptures, but so long as I maintain my loyalty to God, I will not handle his Word unfaithfully to shield myself, the sisters, or even Bro. Holland.

He asks if the passage I quote does not deal entirely with domestic and temporal affairs. I think not.

Let us see. The passage is:

1 Tim. 2:12, 13, 14: But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression.

Now, the question is: Does this passage deal entirely with domestic matters? If it is wise to interpret scripture by scripture, it certainly is safe to interpret the same inspired writer by his own expressions. So let us go to 1 Cor. 14:34

"Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak."

Now, Bro. Holland, does that passage deal with domestic and temporal affairs? Certainly not.

It may be said: But Paul in 1 Cor. 11:5 recognized women in public teaching. I think not, for clearly it will not do to array inspiration, against inspiration, for the moment we do that, we bring the Scriptures into contempt and ridicule, that will not do. Then how can the two passages be consistent? That is the question, for it is quite certain that Paul was not such a "turn coat," as in the eleventh chapter to favor women preaching and in the fourteenth chapter to positively condemn it. Then how shall we understand Paul? Clearly, at least to my own mind, this is the explanation.

In 1 Cor. 11:5. He was not condemning the practice but the manner, and then when he reached the fourteenth chapter, he boldly assailed the practice itself. If this is unsatisfactory, I will ask my critics to show a clearer consistency between the two passages, for manifestly there must be a consistency, or error? Which is it? Bros. Holland and Charnock will you answer?

Macknigh, one of the clearest interpreters of the word, takes this view of it, while Clark, another able expounder, "mixes up" on the question and leaves himself clearly in confusion. For instance he says in commenting on 1 Cor. 14:34 where women are forbidden to teach: "But this by no means intimated that, when a woman received any particular influence from God to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey that influence."

Now let us hear this same man (Dr. Clark) on 1 Tim 2:13: "God fitted man by the robust construction of his body, to live a public life, to contend with difficulties, and to be capable of great exertions." Then he at once says:

"The structure of woman's body plainly proves that she was never designed for those exertions required in public life." How inconsistent he is

Bro. Holland says that Philip had four daughters which did prophesy. I admit it, but was their work in the official ministry, or was it of a private character? The latter, evidently, as is shown in Acts 21:8. What took place was in a private house. This is also illustrated in Acts 18:26, where Aquilla and Priscilla took Apollos from the synagogue unto them and expounded the way of God more perfectly. They were workers in the gospel—laborers—in part co-operators with the men who constituted the official ministry of the church

After Paul expressly condemned women preaching, he asks: What I come the word of God out from you? or come it unto you only? This shows plainly, to my mind, that Paul reminded them of the fact that woman had not been the official messenger of the gospel, but that official messengers had brought the gospel to them.

Bro. Holland lays stress on "Help those women which labored with me in the gospel." I do not object to that at all. Laborers with him only meant co-operators, as I think the Greek will show, and we have abundance of proof that the women co-operated with the ministry, as in Matt 27:55; in Matt 28:5; in Mark 14:3; in Mark 15:40; in Luke 10:38; in Luke 23:27, 49; in Luke 24:22; in Acts 1:14; in Acts 16:15; in Phil. 4:3; and other places, too numerous to name.

But Bro. Charnock asks: Where shall we draw the line (between the woman's work for the Lord and preaching the gospel)? Just here Bro. C.: Let her bear personal testimony, let her pray in the prayer meeting, in the home; let her teach in the home circle and in the Sunday school; let her go to the bedside of the sick and pray with them, teach them, let her go any where, every where, like her Master, doing good, stopping only when she comes to the line of the official ministry. Let her not enter the pulpit to teach as an ordained Minister, let her not be in authority in the church councils and legislative bodies. Do you ask why I draw the line here? I answer only because God's word draws it there, as I understand it. If God's word does not prohibit, if it can be shown—then I have not a word to say against women preaching, but so long as the Word teaches me, as it now does, so long, must I stand against it, without fear or favor.

Bro. Charnock says we do not find among the first Christian band a female Judas, nor a Peter. That proves too much Bro. C. for there was no female in the "twelve"—and that is on my side of the question. Does any one suppose that Jesus would have left the sisters out of the "twelve," had he wanted them there? Does any one suppose he would not have wanted them there, if it had been in keeping with God's law to have them there? Let us meet the issue squarely; Thus was no woman in the first "chosen twelve;" we have no account that Jesus ever authorized a woman to preach his gospel; we have no account of the ordination of any woman to the gospel ministry in the New Testament, and on the contrary, Paul the chief authority in the Apostolic age positively forbids it.

I go a step further: Will my critics be so kind as to cite a single instance in the New Testament where a woman was ordained to the gospel ministry?

For every case so named, I will bow in humble apology. But the ordination of men is specified time and again. I hold that all these facts support my claim that Paul stands squarely against women becoming ordained or official ministers of the gospel. If this is true, there must be some reason for it, and that reason is found, as I see it, in 1 Tim. 2:14, she was deceived, and for this proof of her weakness the curse was given, she must not preach, or teach, in the churches. For years I had been in doubt on this question. When the letter alluded to in my last letter came I began to examine and for the first time I saw that Paul gave a reason for his prohibition. It was then that I saw that the many ways of explaining away Paul's word, did not, and could not, remove his reason for forbidding women to preach. If that can be done consistently with truth, I shall have no objection to women preaching. As to any attempt on my part to make Paul the author of my opinions, I must think Bro. Holland is laboring under some misconception, for I said distinctly that I had no opinion of my own, but something better—Paul's inspired statement. I fully disclaimed any responsibility for his statement, but confessed my fondness for standing by and consenting to what he said. Would it not be the height of presumption for me to claim any responsibility for inspired statements? I think so.

I should like to know who is the author of Bro. Holland's idea that the wife should not be a "teacher" in the family. That is where I should judge she is eminently qualified to be a teacher, for in 1 Tim. 4:14, Paul says: "I will therefore that younger women marry, bear children, guide the house."

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

New England Matters.

There is but little transpiring in New England, that will interest the readers of the SUN." There has been an uprising in the state prison, in Charlestown, Mass. which came very nearly resulting in the escape of the convicts, and the death of officers of the prison. Some of the convicts were armed with revolvers clandestinely obtained, and the time set for the strike for liberty. Just before the time arrived, one of the convicts, notified the officers, of the deep laid plot, and being "forewarned," they prevented their escape. One officer was shot, but not killed. Gov. Russell went to the prison, and ordered every convict put in his cell and kept their, till a thorough search was made for any weapon which any convict might possess, forbidden by prison rules. The search is not yet completed. The whole thing, has caused great excitement in the state.

Last Friday, there was a big fire in Boston, the loss of property, is estimated to be over $4,000,000. Four bodies have been found among the ruins, many were injured by jumping from the windows of burning buildings. The "Solons," in the Massachusetts Legislature are "tendering" the License law. The great question seems to be, whether men shall take their grog, sitting at a table or standing in front of the "bar"! Even school boys, laugh at such nonsense! The fact is, the lobby rummies, control legislation on this question. 'Tis a burning shame, that the saloon cant be closed, when a majority of the people are demanding it. Three fourths of the towns, last week, voted no license. The cities, generally, have not had their annual elections. Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire stand ferme for prohibition. In each of those states, are men who sell in violation of law, and take the consequences,—fine or imprisonment, or both.

The storms and heavy gales, have been very destructive to shipping, and many lives have been lost.

Some of our ministers, are on the sick list. The most of them, are having fair prosperity,—but no special interest. The young people, are more active than formerly.

Some of our ministers, are taking a deep interest, in obtaining subscribers, to the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

While the "Sun" shines brightly, 'tis hoped the churches in the South will give it a liberal patronage.

Mt. Zion.

Owing to the heavy rains, I was unable to get to my appointment at Mt. Zion the second Sunday in Feb. Therefore the quarterly conference of the church was held yesterday. The business of the church was transacted in a spirit of kindness, and brotherly love.

This morning at the usual hour for preaching, I met at the church a nice congregation, to which I tried to preach the blessed gospel. After the sermon the doors of the church were opened, and Bro. W. H. Richmond and wife presented themselves for membership. Bro. Richmond professed faith in Christ last Oct. Sister Richmond came with a beautiful letter from Pleasant Ridge Christian church, recommending her as a noble Christian, and enthusiastic church worker. After the usual examination, the choir sang, "Blest, be the tie that binds," while the church extended the right hand of fellowship. Many friends and relatives came forward, with tears of joy trickling from their eyes, to welcome them to a home among them. There is a peculiar blessedness in giving our hearts to God while young. This young couple have started in life's journey right. May the Lord bless them abundantly all through life, with both spiritual and temporal blessings.

After Bro. Richmond and wife had been received in the church, the Lord's supper was administered by Rev. R. G. Tinnin. It was a solemn occasion, and we feel that the Lord was present.

Mt. Zion is moving on nicely. The pastors salary is paid up, and the conference assessment for foreign missions is nearly or quite raised, besides something on the other assessments. It has not been a year since we first met this dear people, but we have learned to love them. The writer feels under many obligations to Bro's. J. B. Richmond, W. A. Bradley, W. E. King, A. F. McAdams, and their excellent families for special favor and kindnesses while in their homes.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—My last appointment at Mt. Auburn which was on last Saturday and Sunday of Feb. was one of some special interest. There were several items of business which were very enthusiastically considered, and especially the endorsing of the Womens Aid Society. The dear sisters of this church have organized themselves into a Society and agree to raise all the money that the Conference assessed their church, and they leave the brethren to raise the salary. This is just what we need in all our churches and it would not only be the means of a better support for our enterprises, but give our dear sisters an opportunity for a broader field of usefulness, and as a consequence higher attainments in their spiritual life. These sisters have Constitution and by laws: The membership fee is $1.00 and beside their fees, they solicit aid out side of their membership. I think it is a sad reflection upon our denomination, that our sisters have done so little organized systematic work in our church, though I do not blame them, but our pastors for neglecting them.

The sisters of the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, etc., are raising thousands of dollars every year, for the advancement of our Lord's cause in their denomination and I believe our sisters would do as well in proportion to numbers as any, if they had the proper encouragement. I believe that our sisters ought to have an annual convention, that they might be enrolled to develop some well arranged plan for the raising the money so much needed. Can't sister Julia King of Longs Chapel, suggest something for such an enterprise as above mentioned? Come sisters rally to the front, and take your places as I believe you are capable of doing. With proper effort on your part and with the necessary encouragement by us. I believe that our sisters can raise more money than all of us put together have been doing, of course I know this is saying something along the line of advance, but have I said too much?

Our Foreign Mission work needs close attention, a strong and faithful support. We must not allow the resignation of Rev. D. F. Jones to discourage our efforts for this gospel enterprise. Other denominations have their reverses and backsets and we must expect ours with them. Let us take courage, and look at the trial through which we have just passed and look at it being for the best. I guess we have as little use for fickle minded men as any other denomination. Let us look well to the next appointees for the Foreign work, and try to appoint men of Christian stability.

Yours more determinedly,
P. T. KLAPP.

Notes From Harvard.

Mr. Editor, when I see the mistakes which the types have caused in my letters I generally whistle a tune and go ahead and not call any attention to them for three reasons. First, because they are so numerous, second, because the correction would be two weeks behind the error and third, because those who saw the error would have doubtless forgotten the article, error and all. But if I may be forgiven this once, I just wanted to remark that never in this world did I mean to put down Carlyle's famous book "Past and Present" as it occurred over my name some letters back, to wit, "past or present." I have about decided any way that the defects and blunders in my chirography were only equalled by those in my orthography and until improvement can be made in either or both of these, I know not that I shall further call attention to these blunders any more while the world stands.

This is said to be the hardest winter Boston has had for several years. I guess it is so. And now windy March is upon us with all the wrath and fury attributable to the famous war god,—Mars—from which the month gets its name. Not merely has the weather been hard in these parts, but hard times and suffering have come from other sources. Fires have been both numerous and destructive. Last Friday p. m. in a few short hours between three and four millions went up in smoke and several lives were lost. The fire was right in the heart of Boston and had it been windy then as it is tonight, the fifty fire engines that then fought the flames would have been as powerless to subdue as so many pop guns against a Napoleonic army. Fire is a good servant, but a bad master (and fire is not the only thing of which this same may be said.)

And for the past few weeks the death rate around Boston has been increasing, from pneumonia. The papers I see report this an exceptionally hard time in this respect—especially on adults. Those of us who are in school can but realize that the scholastic year is rapidly passing away. How the days and weeks do flow into one another and glide hastily by. When at the close of the week (12 o'clock Saturday night) the student shuts his book and looks back upon the week's work and asks himself what has he done, what has he learned that week, he is sure to get an answer and something more than possibly his inquiry first intended. It is strange that the events of a busy week can in this unity be grasped in a moment and judgment cast upon them. Not merely do the hours and the days of the week melt into one, but the thousand events dissolve in a unity and there is in a moment of feeling—a feeling pleasant or unpleasant according as to whether this retrospect reports "something" or "nothing," "success" or "failure" to the mind. This is doubtless true in all the affairs of life—whether with student, merchant, farmer or what not. Our feelings will come and make themselves known by their own weight and our will has about as much power to control them as the August breeze has to control the ebb and flow of the tide. And what is true of the weeks is doubtless true of the months and years in retrospect. These feelings I guess are ones private account with ones self and good or bad feelings come according as to whether the credit or debit sides out balances. If this be so, what an impetus it should be to try to keep the credit side in advance—so there will be a "surplusage" of good-feeling (pleasure) at the time of reckoning, whether at the end of the day, week, year or life. Exit philosophy.

The whole church can but rejoice at the bright prospects, as reported through recent letters to the Sun, about the Norfolk work. This is a great grand work and the whole denomination will rejoice in its success, I frequently think there has been no bigger mistake on the part of our church than that of failing to take the towns and cities." We have lost scores and scores of our best members in this way—leaving the country, going to the cities finding no church there of our name and belief and thus drifting into others. But this is only a minor consideration in comparison with the amount of good in other ways, an excellent church in a city can do. You let our people educate more in our own schools and colleges, as they will ultimately see they must do, and you will see more churches going up in cities—and in the country too as for that—and you will see our denomination inforced with new blood and quickened with renewed grace and vitality—that is if a prophecy can be formulated from history and facts.

In fact, Mr. Editor, as one reads the SUN from week to week and watches our church enterprises, I think that one can but see a steady and healthy and hopeful growth and development. We are, it seems to me, learning that there are general enterprises that belong to, and should interest all, as well as special and local ones. These general enterprises go beyond our own home, church door and can but tend to bind us closer together, broaden our interest and deepen our Christian spirit by giving to it extensiveness as well as intensiveness. These interests that we are to have in common will broaden our love as well as intensify our fraternity. "He that loseth his life shall find it"—not if he loseth it in self, but in a greater whole.

There are many other things of interest in the SUN recently but I see my letter is already too long, and "my partner" hath somewhat to say else where. So this is enough for us this time.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Elion College Notes.

We noticed in last week's SUN that Bro. Foster asked the question. "Shall we have the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention?" In response we would say yes, by all means.

The Y. M. C. A.'s of our country are doing a greater work to-day than ever before in its history, and much of the success is due to the work of the conventions of the different associations. There, where the young men exchange ideas and discuss as to the best plans for work, is where the love of God is made more manifest and the young men are aroused more fully to a sense of religious duty and responsibility. And no less is this the case with Sunday school workers. No teacher has ever yet become so wise, so perfect in his teaching but that he can learn valuable lessons from a little child, how much more then will he be benefitted by contact with stronger minds. But these conventions not only aid in the discipline of work, but they also bind the different Sunday schools more closely together, and unite the workers in a common cause, all working and praying for the advancement and success of each individual school. Any school that is able to accommodate the delegates should feel that by securing the convention, it will not only aid its own school, not only all the schools, but also the cause of Christianity throughout the entire country. We say never give the good work up.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, who spent a day or two at Asheboro in the interest of the church, reports bright prospects.

We are glad to welcome Mrs. John T. Moffitt, who is visiting her parents at this place.

Those young men and women acquitted themselves manfully at the public exercises in the college chapel last Saturday night.

The students were delighted to hear the splendid sermon preached by Prof. Kendrick Sunday. The matter was not only good, but it was presented in a pleasant and forcible manner.

Miss Mattie Whorton is visiting friends here this week.

Mr. S. L. Adams returns from Harvard University, bringing good news and encouraging words from Prof. S. Atkinson and Moffitt.

Mr. Albert Lee of Virginia visited his son and daughter who are in school here. We are always glad to see any friend and patron of the college.

It really snowed Friday and Sat.

Very truly,

ELISAH MOFFITT.

"SUFFOLK, VA., March 13, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER:—We desire again to call your attention to the Eastern Virginia Sunday school Convention. The plan of the Convention for raising money to carry on this work is as follows: That each school take up four collections annually,—1st Sunday in January, April, July, and October, respectively, that two weeks before each of these collection days, the superintendent distribute "mission barrels" to such children as may be willing to solicit funds for this purpose; these to be taken in on the days named, opened by the Superintendent, the money placed in the Treasury, and the "barrels" kept by the superintendent until two weeks before the next collection day. The Convention recommends further that the schools have entertainments, festivals, excursions, etc., to raise funds for that purpose. Could your school not have one during the year?

Remember that a handsome silk banner will be presented to the school sending the Convention the most money per member for this purpose.

By order of the Convention, the Committee in charge has secured the service of a missionary, Brother Ira Connelly, who is now traveling—seeking to organize new schools, revive old ones, and spread our denominational literature.

Please urge upon your school the importance of this work, and interest the children in striving for the banner. The 3rd Sunday in this month is the time to give out the "barrels" for next collection day.

Wishing you much success in the good work of the Sunday school, we remain,

Yours in Christian love,

N. G. NEWMAN,

(Chairman of Committee.)

P. S. The above circular letter has been sent, by order of the committee to the superintendents. A card has been enclosed on which we wish the supt. to report the success of his collection as soon as taken up. Some Sunday schools have done well, while many others have failed to report at all. We hope, however, they did not fail to take up the collection. Failure to take up the collections will mean failure to the enterprise. Superintendents and delegates voted solidly at our last convention to continue the missionary work. Now, let each school carry out to the extent of its ability the duty it has voluntarily imposed upon itself

Sunday schools wanting literature should write to the Christian Publishing House, Dayton, O., which can supply you with anything needed. The literature supplied by the House is superior to anything you can get from other publishing houses for Christian Sunday schools. The SUN does not keep Sunday school supplies, except song books. The Evangelist's Songs of Praise are on sale at this office.

Bro. J. M. Fitch, Supt. of the Sunday school at Bethel, says: The school is doing well. He mentions the fact that the members of the church are interested both in the church and Sunday school work. We are glad to know that Bro Fitch and those acting with him are pushing the Sunday school work.

The Western Recorder says: "It no more helps a preacher to parade his rejected calls than it helps a lady to parade her rejected offers of marriage. It makes the impression that he has coquetted with the churches, and also that he cannot be moved from his present field. Often the announcement that a preacher had declined one call has prevented his receiving another call he would have been glad to accept."

Justice says: In my rambles among the churches, I sometimes find that the church members seem to worship their pastor more than their God; or it looks so to a spectator. Is this best for the pastor and congregation? Preachers are human and liable to err like other people. If the preacher is a good man, he is as good and no better than a good layman. The adulation shown him sometimes makes him worship himself and dislike all those who do not worship him or sound his praises.

Could it have been jealousy that caused all the Raleigh pastors except Foster and Curtis to oppose calling Mr. Moody to Raleigh to conduct a religious meeting? It was not because there is no sin in our midst; for God knows this is a sin cursed city, it being not a whit more holy than other centers of population. It might, have been as some one said, they were afraid he would get a little of Raleigh's money; but then she has plenty of that, and what Mr. Moody would have gotten these preachers will never be able to touch.

The Raleigh Sunday school under the efficient labors of Deacon D. J. Mood and his excellent co-workers is in a prosperous condition and promises much for the summer. The teachers are the best to be found, especially would we mention Mrs. J. L. Foster who has charge of the Infant class, and Mr. F. O. Moring in charge of the Bible class, and besides these there are two other interesting classes taught by J. A. Mills and the superintendent's excellent wife, respectively. The pupils are earnest and faithful. Bro. M. says that under such favorable conditions the school cannot be otherwise than in a prosperous condition.

Denominationalism.

"It creates and perpetuates a feeling hostile to the principle of the universal brotherhood of man and the oneness of God's people." The universal brotherhood of man and the oneness of God's people is one of the central ideas of the New Testament. Paul says, "We are one body in Christ and every one members one of another," and Christ prayed that his followers might be one even as He and the Father were one. The diverse gifts and necessities of man, and the varied products of the different parts of the earth show that men are mutually dependent upon each other, and should therefore be united by bonds of love in one common brotherhood. Anything interfering with this principle of God and nature can but prove detrimental to the best temporal interest of man and the cause of Christ.

But has denominationalism done this? History answers in tones louder and accents more emphatic than we can. Let history show how it has severed homes, rent churches, and disorganized states, how it has caused insurrections, rebellions, and revolutions, how it has banished and beheaded kings and disinherited heirs to the throne, how it has made England, Scotland and Ireland the most implacable enemies, and the scenes of the most inhuman butchery; how it has changed the dynasties of France and drenched her soil with human blood. Nor is this all. Other nations can tell the same tale of persecution,—of days just as dark and crimes just as inhuman as France and England have ever been called upon to witness. It has been estimated that 70,000,000 of human souls have been slaughtered in the conflicts of denominationalism.

The persecution of the past has not been the exception, but the rule, among religious bodies. The unholy spirit naturally engendered by denominationalism extended even to the present bodies of Christians. Note the Pilgrim Fathers. They turned their backs forever upon home, kindred, and friends, and exposed themselves to the dangers of the sea, and later to wild beasts and savage natives, that they might enjoy religious freedom. They perhaps represented the purest and best blood that has ever come to our shores seeking a home; yet these same Pilgrim Fathers persecuted even unto death the poor Quakers, who asked of them only what they had demanded for themselves,—the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. It is a comfort to all Christians to feel that these dark days have passed away. But unkind feelings still exist. If the reader should think otherwise we refer him to the denominational literature of the various churches, to the attacks often made from the pulpit, the fellowship of ministerial brethren, and the association of local members.

The question arises, how can denominationalism bring about the evils named? It is the natural tendency of separation. When the human family dwelt together they spoke one language and lived in peace, but when they separated, not only the language, but their manners and customs and interest became more and more unlike, until in course of time they became hostile nations, each ready to devour the other. So it was with the church. It once lived in peace speaking only the language of love; but when it separated on account of some little minor difference in opinion, the factions became more and more unlike until they were found in direct antagonism. These evils have been greatly multiplied by the union of church and state at a time when the state was essentially warlike. A conflict between nations over the most trivial matter involved churches and tended to perpetuate hostility between them.

These evils have been greatly increased also by the direct influence of denominational teaching. It is a fact to be lamented that many of the denominations do not teach their adherents to regard others as brethren in Christ. This teaching begins in the Sunday school and is continued on through the seminary, where it returns to the pulpit with a new vigor and zeal. Even where they are not taught to regard each other as hostile, an influence is thrown around them, which tends toward greater differences of opinion and less affection.

But must this state of affairs continue? Is it the only evil without remedy? No, it can and will be remedied, not by the discovery of any new antidote, but by the practical application of the one Christ gave. That antidote is love. Let love have its perfect work, and then will men grant to others the privilege they demand for themselves, churches will discard all sectarian names, and become one to the blessing of mankind and the glory of God.

Appreciative.

Kind, loving, and obedient children are a great joy to good parents. The pastor of deep piety is sure to be drawn to an appreciative people. And it is none the less true, that the editor's pen is made more lively by appreciative readers.

What we want to say in this short article is, not to write an essay on appreciativeness, but to indicate to the readers of the SUN, the gratitude we have for the appreciation shown. It would be hard to find a people any where more appreciative, than the Christians. Occasionally some one gets his back up a little; but these are the exceptions to the rule.

It has been our great pleasure within the last decade to meet many of the Christians in their homes, in their churches, on the cars, in the country places, villages, towns, and cities, from the cold winds of New Hampshire to the hot rays of the Sun of Alabama. And every where, whether in the humble cottage or costly mansion, we met with Christian sympathy, calculated to make one feel that the little efforts which he was putting forth for good were appreciated.

But recently we have been made to feel more grateful for an appreciative people than ever before. For notwithstanding it has been impossible for us, during the last four months to make the SUN what it was once, our readers, with few exceptions, seem to understand the situation, and with their souls possessed in patience showed a loving appreciation for the efforts we were putting forth. Had it not been for the patient waiting of our dear people for the Annals, we do not see how we could have borne up under the work. We say God bless our people for their appreciativeness.

The Golden Rule Broken.

A few days ago as we walked along the street, we passed a couple of young ladies, guessed to be about fifteen years old. They were in earnest conversation about an absent one of their own sex. Just as we passed we caught the sentence; Oh! she is horribly ugly. Such language called forth a glance to see, if they were beauties. They were regarded of the medium kind. Then came the thought; the golden rule broken again. Where upon our meditations started on a journey of the golden rule.

The poor girl, about whom the two young ladies were talking, possibly could not help it. And it certainly made them no better nor prettier to talk as they did. Such conversation can do no one any good, but may sadden some heart. In conversation about people who are absent, it is well to follow the GOLDEN RULE.

Appointments at Wake Chapel.

Third Sunday and Saturday before were spent with the church at Wake Chapel, N. C. Notwithstanding the snow storm that came Saturday night, Sunday gave us a pretty day. The services were very pleasant. The Sunday school was reorganized by electing J. E. Ballentine superintendent, Frank Johnson Assistant superintendent, and Willie Jones secretary. With these brethren, and many others who will work with them, we shall expect success.

Saturday night was pleasantly spent with the family of Bro. J. E. Ballentine.

Bro W. M. Ballentine has been quite ill of late, but is much better now.

Bro K. B. Johnson kindly took us in to Raleigh Sunday in the afternoon where we, at night enjoyed a good sermon by Bro. J. L. Foster. The music, with sister Foster at the organ, and Bro. Geo. McCullers with the horn, and a choir of good singers, was inspiring.

Eastern Virginia.

In the brief accounts given, in the SUN of our recent visit it was impossible to mention all the acts of kindness shown us. We do not recollect names very well; and therefore, often neglect to mention some that ought to be given. Therefore our friends are asked to excuse any seeming neglect of courtesy as unintentional.

We can say truthfully that we have not found anywhere a kinder people than those of Eastern Virginia. They are both kind and liberal in the highest sense of the word. Every where we went we were made to feel that we were in the midst of large hearted friends. Open doors, open pocket-books and open hearts all contributed to augment the sum of our pleasures during our stay on Virginia soil. May God bless the dear people of Eastern Virginia.

Books are the true levelers. They give to all who faithfully use them the society, the spiritual presence of the best and greatest of our race.—Channing

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

I am glad indeed that you are writing so nicely this year. I am very sorry that I have not the time to write each one of you a note as usual; by next week I expect to be able to talk to you more; now I am working just as hard as I can to get the Annuals mailed and it is a big job, I tell you!

Some ask if I look like the picture and I must say that I do not think so. Am not quite as old as it seems to be. But whether that picture looks like me or not, I love you all and hope God will bless and keep you.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

MARCH, 6th, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I have never written to the band I will write a few lines. I am a little girl eleven years old and I am going to school to Mrs. Myrtle Gunter. I like to go very much, and I go to Sunday school at new Elam, and I like to go to Sunday school. I will close for this time. I haven't any money this time, but I will have some money next time. Much love to you and the cousins.

UNA DAVIS.

NEW HOPE, ALA. March 2, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has rained and stoped us from plowing. I will have time to write to the Corner I am not in school now. I had to stop to help papa farm. Rev. G. D. Hunt preached a short, but a good sermon last Sunday at New Hope. We are glad to have him with us; he is a nice young man. I have been studying very hard trying to find the answer to Aunt Myrtle's questions, and I have found all but the seventh one; and I think they spell Uncle Tangle.

1. Joab was a native of the land of Uz. Job 1 chapter.

2. Naharai was Joab's armor bearer. 2 Samuel 23 chapter.

3. Caleb entered the land of Canaan with Joshua. Numbers 14 chapter.

4. Luke was written by a physician. Cor. 4 chapter.

5. Eunice was the mother of Timothy. 2 Timothy 1 chapter.

6. It was in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius when John the Baptist began to preach. Luke 3 chapter.

8. Moses was buried in a valley in the land of Moab. Dut. 34 chapter.

9. Gideon conquered the Mid-anites with 300 men. Judges 7 chapter.

10. Laban was the father of Rachel. Gen. 4 chapter.

11. Elisha prophesied to Joash while dying. 2 Kings 13 chapter. Write again Aunt Myrtle we enjoy hunting for the answers to your questions. I will close by asking a question. How long did king Solomon reign over Israel. Inclose find one dime for the Band. With much love for you and the cousins.

THEODORE STEPHENSON.

MILLTOWN ALA. March 4, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—We are a class of little boys and girls, and as it is Friday we are going to write you and the cousins. We go to school every day at New Hope and love to study our lessons. We feel proud that we can write for we could not read a word nor write a line when we started to school to Mr. Fuquay. We are all little now and our teacher calls us little class, but we hope to be big men and women some time. We are all seven and eight years old and will soon be in second reader. We will ask Uncle Tangle a question instead of the cousins? Are you as ugly as your picture? We all send some money to the band. Love to you, Uncle Clements, and the band.

AGUSTE, Va. March, 13, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I feel like chatting to you and the cousins this morning. It is such a lovely day: the sun is so bright, that it seems to invite us out to enjoy its light. I love the sunshine so that I think every body else loves it too. I most sincerely pity those, who can not enjoy the beautiful sunshine, because of sickness and affliction, but these are more than comforted, as they bask in the sunshine of God's love, which we all should do; for God is not only a sun, but a shield also. We have not only the sweet light of his love to enjoy, but we are in His loving care, and under His protection. We were pleased to have a call from Bro. Clements a short while ago, and will be glad to have him call again. I attended the services at a neighboring Baptist Church yesterday. I liked the sermon very much really enjoyed all of the service, except the communion. Uncle Tangle, somehow, it makes me feel terrible to be where the Lord's supper is being commemorated, and not allowed to join in the service. I can not express my feelings yesterday, when the minister emphasized the fact, that only the sister churches of like faith and order were invited to partake of the supper; and then one of my uncles passed the emblems to so many of my friends, who partook and I was excluded. I hope to see the corner full of letters each week and help for the Band. I send a dime.

Love to all.

The Healing Christ.

How wonderfully art is illuminated by the life and ministry of the Son of God. So picturesque and so full of marvels is the Gospel story, that poets and painters, sculptors and artists, have found it the choicest field for the exercise of their genius, and though their highest conceptions have fallen short of the reality, yet art itself has been ennobled and glorified by the representations of the work the Saviour wrought.

The Son of man came to destroy the works of the devil. All the sin, and sorrow, and pain, and sickness, and misery which satan had wrought He labored to undo. The lame, the leprous, the palsied, all felt the magic of His touch and the majesty of His presence. The power of His word broke the spells cast by spirits of darkness, and the touch of his hand gave health to the suffering. His spoken word rebuked disease and the power of Christ shall be not only known among the hills and fields of Judea and of Galilee, but the will God shall be done in earth as it is done in heaven, and through the wide world shall be known the power of Him who heals the sick, who raises the dead, who conquers demons with His word, and whose kingdom shall come, and whose will shall be done in earth as it is done in heaven.—Selects

Hood's Cures

Owe all My Health to It

Cured of Sick Vomiting Spells, Dizziness, Neuralgia, Weakness.

Mrs. S. M. Waters
Georgetown, D. C.

"I have often seen statements from people benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I feel that I am not doing justice unless my testimony is added. I have been suffering with sick vomiting spells for three or four years, with giddiness, most of the time almost perfectly prostrated. I had no appetite, and suffered also with neuralgia in my head and eyes. I was treated for two years by the best physicians, but found no relief. They would tell me my condition was and that I must have patience. But after two years I thought patience ceased to be a virtue. I was growing so weak I could not sleep at night. And when I was able to go out, I was afraid to go far from home. I was constantly tired; I could not go up or down stairs or raise my arms above my head without giddiness, and was so afraid to look up that I became accustomed to holding my head down.

Owing to my Age

At Last

I was persuaded to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using four bottles, my improvement in health is wonderful. I candidly believe I am cured of all my ailments. My appetite is good, can eat at any time, am free from neuralgia and other troubles. I never felt so well or was as stout as now since I was married, and I am mother of nine children. I have increased from 125 to 143 pounds. I am perfectly well, go out every day. When my friends ask what has made such an improvement I tell them I owe it all to and that I am made over again." Mrs. S. M. WATERS, 1213 32d Street, N. W., Georgetown, D. C. Take Hood's

The Sabbath.

The world would indeed be a dreary place without the blessed Sabbath, with its hallowed rest. Thousands would fill untimely graves, for no human being could long bear the rush and whirl, and the ceaseless fret and worry of the daily work. Insanity and suicide would claim hundreds, where one now becomes their victim.

The silent death angel would fly with swifter speed than ever before, if tired hands, beads and souls could not rest one day out of the seven, and there would be one unceasing wail of agony forever sounding in our ears.

The sweet Sabbath breaks this terrible march that would lead to untimely death, and places a halo of peace upon the aching brow. It unclasp the galling chains of labor, and calm, sweet peace holds for a blessed season the fretted human spirit. It wraps its mantle of rest about the wearied form, and the poor child of daily toil is saved.

To the Christian, it is the bright milestone in his journey toward the eternal city. It casts a golden link in life's wearisome chain, and its calm, restful hours soothe the care and pain of daily living. The doors of the celestial city swing open and he catches fair visions of his future home.

Oh, holy blessed Sabbath, may thy peace and blessing forever fall upon the tired, toiling world!—Mrs. M. A. Holt.

What about Those Oyster Suppers?

In the issue of the Sun of March 9th. I find two casual attacks upon oyster suppers, ice cream socials, and various entertainments, by which the house of prayer is virtually made a house of merchandise. The unfortunate(?) event that called forth one of these attacks at least, seems to have been an 'oyster supper' given by the young ladies of the Psiphelian Society of Elon College, for the purpose of raising funds with which to make improvements in their hall. The other attack seems to have been made on 'general principles.' The author of the first must have been mistaken as to the object of the young ladies in giving their entertainment, as in their innocent labors, they didn't try to "build any church on ice cream and oysters," but were merely displaying a laudable interest in the welfare of their society. Surely no one will condemn them for this. Then I take it that both the writers referred to, had reference merely to the 'oyster supper' etc. in church finances. Now, if this be an evil the people certainly should be enlightened as to 'the evil tenor of their ways,' for there are doubtless far more churches that help to raise their funds by means of these entertainments, than there are churches that do not, and if this custom be wrong, it must be a sin, and if it be a sin, then, there are many thousands of all denominations who either ignorantly or wilfully bring in sin as a mighty factor in church finances. If ignorance be at the bottom of the illusion(?), then, is it not the duty of those who see more clearly to lift the veil, and let in more light? If the good women of our churches who labor so zealously in these entertainments—thus raising a great part, if not many times a greater part, of the church funds—be actuated by any less Christian spirit, than the women who belong to Dr. Barrett's Hen Army, or the men who cultivate their fields, ought they not to be taught that they are in error? If wilful wrong—doing be at the bottom of the custom, ought the people not the more quickly to be reformed by a vigorous presentation of the 'whys,' and 'wherefores'? No long established custom gives way before brave assertions; and I am sure that Dr. Barrett, and Rev. Mr. Charnock, who are so conscientiously opposed to the custom referred to, will give the readers of the Sun, their views on this question. As for my part, I am heartily in favor of these entertainments, and if I am wrong I want to know it,—and I suppose many others feel the same way about it.

Keep Busy.

The secret of success in life is to keep busy, to be persevering, patient, and untiring in the pursuit or calling you are following. The busy ones may now and then make mistakes but it is better to risk these than to be idle and inactive. Keep doing, whether it be at work or seeking recreation. Motion is life, and the busiest are the happiest. Cheerful, active labor is a blessing. A Love Letter.

He hurried up to the office as soon as he entered the hotel, says the Detroit Free Press, and, without waiting to register, inquired eagerly: "Any letter for me?"

The clerk sorted out the package with the negligent attention that comes of practice, then flipped one—a very small one—on the counter.

The travelling man took it with a curious smile, that twisted pleasant-looking face into a mask of expectancy.

He smiled more as he read it.

Then, oblivious to other travellers, who jostled him, he laid it gently against his lips, and actually kissed it.

A loud guffaw startled him. "Now look here, old fellow," said a loud voice, "that won't do, you know. Too spoony for anything. Confess now: your wife didn't write that letter!"

"No, she didn't," said the travelling man, with an amazed look, as if he would like to change the subject. "That letter is from my best girl."

The admission was so unexpected that the trio of friends who had caught him said no more until they had eaten a good dinner and were seated together in a chum's room.

Then they began to badger him.

"It's no use; you've got to read it to us, Dick," said one of them; "we want to know all about your best girl."

"So you shall," said Dick, with great coolness; "I will give you the letter, and you can read it yourselves. There it is;" and he laid it on the table.

"I guess not," said one, who had been the loudest in demanding it; "we like to have a little, but we hope we are getting it. The young lady would hardly care to have the letter read by this crowd;" and he looked reproachfully at his friend.

"But I insist upon it," was the answer.

"There is nothing to be ashamed of—except the spelling; that's a little shaky, I'll admit; but she won't care in the least. Read it, Hardy, and judge for yourself."

Thus urged, Hardy took up the letter, shame-facedly enough, and read it. There were only a few words. First he laughed, then swallowed suspiciously, and as he finished it, threw it upon the table again, and rubbed the back of his hand across his eyes, as if troubled with dimness of vision. "Pshaw!" he said; "if I had a love letter like that!"—and then was silent.

"Fair play!" cried one of the others, with an uneasy laugh.

"I'll read it to you, boys," said their friend, seeing they had made no move to take it, "and I think you'll agree with me that it is a model love letter."

And this was what he read.

MI OWEN DEAR PAPA
I sa mi PRair every nite and Wen I kis yure Pictshure I ASK god to bless you gOOD bi PaPa your best gurl DOLLY.

For a moment or two the company remained silent, while the letter was passed from hand to hand, and you would have said that each and every one had had hay fever, by the snuffing that was heard. Then Hardy jumped to his feet:

"Three cheers for Dolly, and three for Dick's best girl!"

They were given with a will.

Washington Letter.

Nothing in the future seems more certain than that Washington is to become a great educational center, many believe the greatest in America. Indications of this are seen on every side, in the increased interest displayed in educational and kindred subjects. In the near future three great church Universities will be in operation, and from the tendency of the talk among Senators and Representatives it seems probable that the necessary steps towards the establishment of a National University under government auspices will soon be taken, if indeed, they have not already been, in the favorable report of the project which was made a few days ago by a Senate committee. This project was a hobby with ex-Senator Edmunds for many years, but while he was in the Senate the time was not ripe and he never could get his colleagues sufficiently interested in the matter to make any progress toward its accomplishment. The honor of having secured the favorable report referred to belongs to Senator Proctor, who succeeded Senator Edmunds.

Nothing could give a more forceful idea of the growth of the higher educational sentiment in Washington than the "Directory of the Scientific Societies of Washington," a book just issued. There are six of these societies, with the following names and membership: The Anthropological, which aims to encourage the study of the natural history of man, especially with reference to America, 222; The Biological, for the study of the biological sciences, 195; The Chemical science, pure and applied, 97; The Entomological, for the promotion of the study of entomology in all possible bearings, 109; The Geographic, for the increase and diffusion of geographic knowledge, 682; Philosophical, for the free interchange of views on scientific subjects and the promotion of scientific inquiry, 250. Among the 1,555 members of these societies are many with world wide reputation, not only as scientists, but as Christians, men constantly laboring to sweep away the barriers that ignorant and ungodly men have raised between science and Christianity, and now they are well nigh crowned with victory, as the number of those who consider science antagonistic to religion are few and constantly growing fewer, as education, the hand-maiden of religion, becomes more generally diffused.

It almost necessarily follows that hurried legislation has defects, and the liquor license law for the District of Columbia, enacted during the rush of closing hours of the last session of Congress is no exception to the rule. Already one of our local courts has decided that all prosecutions for violations of the old law—there were a number of such—against the liquor dealers must be abandoned. The rum sellers are jubilant and they say there are other defects in the new law.

The Sabbath breakers, like the rum sellers, are always ready to take advantage of the absence of specific laws, and of defects in laws. Since the Commissioners stated that there was no law under which they could prevent the opening of the theatres on Sunday several of the theatres have given Sunday performances, styled in the advertisements

"sacred concerts," but none the less objectionable on that account to those who believe in a Christian observance of the Sabbath day. These performances are likely to grow more frequent until the Sabbath observing people of the country shall bring their influence to bear upon Congress, as they did in the closing of the World's Fair, to stop it by legislation. The good people of Washington are helpless without their aid.

A Noble Boy.

Well! I saw a little boy do something the other day that made me feel good for a week. Indeed it makes my heart fill with tenderness, and good feeling even now as I write about it. But let me tell you what it was. As I was going down the street I saw an old man who seemed to be blind, walking alone without any one to lead him. He went very slowly, feeling with his cane.

"He's walking straight to the highest part of the curbstone," said I to myself.

"And it's very high, too; I wonder if some one won't tell him, and start him in the right direction?"

Just then a boy about fourteen years old, who was playing near the corner, left his playmates, ran up to the old man, put his hand through the man's arm, and said, "Let me lead you across the street." By this time there were three or four others watching the boy. He not only helped him over one crossing, but led him over another to the lower side of the street. Then he ran back to his play.

Now this boy thought he had only done the man a kindness, while I knew that he had made three other persons feel happy, and better, and more careful to do little kindness to those about them. The three or four persons who had stopped to watch the boy turned away with a tender smile on their faces, ready to follow the noble example he had set them. I know that I felt more gentle and forgiving toward every one many days afterward.

Another one that was made happy was the boy himself; for it is impossible for us to do a kind act, or to make any one else happy, without being better or happier ourselves. To be good, and to do good, is to be happy.—Youth's Temperance Banner.

One Sin Leads to Another.

Do you know how the suspension bridge below Niagara Falls was built? The span is some 750 feet, and the height of the bridge 238 feet. How were the cables stretched from pier to pier? I will tell you. A boy's kite was sent up on one side of the river, and carried by the wind across to the other. To the string of the kite was attached a cord, and to the cord a rope. Thus a communication was established. So a single sin, even a small sin, may draw after it the most weighty consequences. Beware of the first sin, the first oath, the first glass, or petty dishonesty.—Kind Words.

We need more preachers and less pulpit talkers.

The Rights of Women to Preach.

MR. EDITOR:--There have been some interesting and readable articles of late, in the SUN, on "the rights of women." This subject has interested me for some time. Will you allow me to express my mind on the subject through the SUN?
I highly esteem, a good woman. My mother was a woman,—a godly praying woman. Fifty six years ago last month, I married a woman, and she is the mother of my three noble sons. She is my equal, in every respect, in some things, my superior. The state allows me to vote, but will not allow her to vote. Men, made the law; but, I ask, who gave them that right? Who gave them the right to exclude women? Did Jesus? Did the apostles? Is it not an assumed right? Where did man get the exclusive right to vote? Woman didn't give it to him! God didn't give it to him! Where did man get that right? Can some solon tell us? Woman is taxed, if she owns property, that is taxable. She is punished, if she violates the law that man has made, and the jury is composed wholly of men! are these things right? A foreigner, who has no taxable property, nor any moral principle, is allowed to vote, and does so, if he is not too drunk to go to the polls on the day of election,—provided he can read a few words in English. I write his name. In some states even that is not required. But a woman, of scholarly attainments, sound mind, and loyal to the principles, and practices of morals and religion, is not allowed as exalted a privilege, as an ignorant Irishman, or German! Well; should a woman preach? Yes; if she is a godly woman, and "apt to teach," and can preach, let her preach. Jesus didn't say she shouldn't! What right have we to forbid her? Woman, was interested in Jesus, and in the cause which he lived and die to establish! Hear his words, "She hath done what she could." These words are big with meaning. Let woman do what she can—if she can preach let her preach, by all means! woman, will not be like some men,—perhaps, and think she can preach when she can't. If she feels that God has called her to the work let her work.

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—The Normal Institute of Sunday School Workers of North Carolina convened here the 24th in the First Presbyterian church. Geo. W. Watts, President, and J. W. Snow, Secretary, exerted themselves considerably to make the Institute a success, and succeeded remarkably, for it was a grand success. Prof. Hamill of Illinois was present. He has given the Sabbath school work such undivided attention he can make every theme he touches interesting and instructive. His Bible drill on the book of Job was grand. There were quite a number of topics discussed by the various teachers which were very interesting and I trust will result in great good to the Sabbath school. The various evangelical churches were represented in the Institute. Prof. Hamill showed very clearly the necessity of a more thorough training of the teachers and grading them for their work. I wish every Sabbath school superintendent and teacher among us could have heard his lecture on the Bible and the Sabbath school work.

I conducted services Sunday morning and evening in my church with marked signs of revival interest.

Notes from Harvard.

The Rev. Edward Everett Hale preached for us last Sunday night. Harvard is his alma mater and it always honors him, when he speaks here, with a large audience. The Rev. Dr. is getting old now but he is still in active life and he represents a living, active faith. He is thoroughly awake to the great social questions which agitate now so much the minds of the present age.

They say we are to have the Rev. Lyman Abbott with us again this term. I for one, in common with many others, certainly hope so. The very name of Lyman Abbott will ever have associated with it, for me, a live theology and a deep, broad spirituality.

In fact as one hears from time to time these men of such useful lives, of such depth of thought, coupled with such profound spirituality and so alert to the complex problems of modern society, one can but be deeply impressed with the fact that the old dogmas of an antiquated theology are positively and absolutely dead. The pulpit and the church have to confront questions that the theology of fifty years ago never dreamed. Rules and theories that were accepted as final and sufficient some half century ago would today be rejected as impartial, selfish and useless. This is true in science, philosophy, and theology. It is no less true of the one than the other. What men want today—and what they must have, or they will have nothing—is living principle, not isolated facts and theories. Men want to know how to live they will let dying take care of itself. As Mr. Silas Thompson tells us in his "Divine order of Human Society," "The Bible is eminently a sociological book. To very many Christians much of the Bible means nothing or next to nothing, because they have no perception of its sociological purpose. John the Baptist and our Lord both begin their mission by proclaiming, not a way of salvation for individuals, but a kingdom of heaven a new order of society, a holy and universal brotherhood embracing, or aiming to embrace the whole family of man."

We need to day not merely a repentance and a faith which will merely enable us to escape "from the wrath which is to come"—in the future—sometime—away off yonder, we need a faith—living and active which will help us to escape the wrath which is,—a faith which will enable us to "love our neighbor as ourselves." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his neighbor, he is a liar." I think sometimes we forget how Christ himself tells us that at the last Judgment the good shall be separated from the bad—the sheep from the goats. It can be found in Matt. xxv. 31-46. The language there is too plain to be ignored. The distinction is fully marked and closely drawn. Read those verses and you will find that the marks of distinction are "not regular attendance at church—not sound notion in regard to the form of baptism, or methods of ordination, or apostolic succession, or the nature of Lord's Supper, as to who shall partake and who shall not, or church organization, or what not. These may be and are doubtless important, but these are not the distinctive things by which Christ separates the good from the bad." But here it is that seals the doom of mortal man and immortal soul. "The performance or non-performance of social duties." "I was in prison and ye visited me not," etc.

"Verily, I say unto you inasmuch as you did it not unto the least of these, ye did it not unto me. And thou shalt go away into everlasting punishment," etc.

The doctrine of Humanitarianism is not a dead doctrine by any means and never will be "until the kingdom come and thy will be done in earth as in heaven." Man is born into society. He can't escape it. He must adjust himself to it. He can't withdraw from it. He finds his noble, better, self, not in the promotion of selfish or ambitious ends, but in the betterment of the whole. The promotion of self to the detriment of another is mean, selfish, and fiendish. We are brothers in society, fighting for a common cause and against a common and powerful enemy. I know not better how to close this thought and these notes than by a quotation from Carlyle, not from his "Past and Present," this time but from his "Hero as Priest." Listen; what profound thoughts are lodged in these few sentences: "A few all true men that live, or that ever lived, soldiers of the same army, enlisted, under heaven's captaincy, to do battle against the same enemy, the empire of darkness and wrong? Why should we misknow one another fight not against the enemy, but against ourselves, from mere difference of uniform? All uniforms should be good so they hold in them true valiant men. All fashions of arms, the Arab turban and swift scimitar. Thor's strong hammer smiting down Jotuns shall be welcome. Luther's battle voice, Dante's march-melody, all genuine things are with us, not against us. We are all under one captain, soldiers of the same host."

Moses Invitation to Hobab.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law. We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel. And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.—Numbers 10:29,30.

There is some difference of opinion among learned men as to who Hobab was. Some think that it was Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, but the most probable opinion is that he was the son of Jethro, and Moses' brother-in-law. When Moses reached Sinai his father-in-law came to see him, and after remaining some time returned to his own land. It is probable that he left his son Hobab with Moses where he remained as long as the Hebrews were at Sinai, but now they were to march on towards Canaan; and Moses wanted him to go with him. This would take him away from his father and his home, and he was not willing to do this.

This invitation of Moses to his brother-in-law shows the deep interest that he felt in him, and the desire that he had to have him share in all the blessings God had promised to Israel. This is the feeling of the Christian towards all his friends. He is on a journey to heaven, and he wants them to go with him.

I. The analogy between the deliverance of the Hebrews from their bondage in Egypt and their journey to the promised land, and the deliverance of the Christian from the slavery of sin and his journey to heaven.

1. The Hebrews were delivered from cruel bondage in Egypt. Their condition was a hard one. They had to make bricks without straw, and were at the mercy of their masters.

The Christian was in the slavery of sin, and had a hard master. (John 8:34; Rom. 6:16-18; Prov. 5:22; 2 Peter 2:19; Rom. 7:17-22.)

Moses was sent to deliver the Hebrews from slavery and set them free. In this he was a type of Christ who came to redeem man from the slavery of sin. (Isa. 49:9; 61; 3.)

2. The Hebrews commenced their journey to the promised land where they were delivered from their bondage in Egypt. Then they started for Canaan. The Christian commences his journey for heaven when he is converted. Before this he is traveling away from heaven, but at his conversion turns around and starts for it. Then, like Lot, he turns his back on the city of destruction. (2 Peter 1:5-11.) This was the commencement of a new life with the Hebrews, and they were animated with new loves, new desires, and new hopes. Thus it is with the Christian. (2 Cor. 5:17.)

3. The Lord provided a guide to direct them in their journey to the promised land. This was a pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night. (Exod. 15:21-22.) God has given us a divine guide in the Bible. (2 Tim. 3:16-17.) He has given us his spirit to bring the instructions of his word to remembrance, and to help us understand it. (John 14:26; 16:17.) The pillar of cloud never led them astray, and thus it is with the Bible. Every man is conscious that if he follows it he will do right.

4. God sent his angel before the Hebrews to keep and protect them. (Exod. 27:20-23.) This angel was Christ. (Isa. 79:9.) Christ is our leader. (Isa. 55:4.) God employs his angels to protect his people. (Heb. 1:14; Psal. 34:7.) We cannot see them now, nor understand how they do their work; but we will. The ceiling in one of the old cathedrals of Europe when a man first looks up at it seems to be a confused mass of clouds, but after looking for a time its beauty comes out and it is seen to be a multitude of angels.

5. God supplied all the wants of the people in their journey, gave them manna from heaven, food from the desert, and water from the solid rock. The clothing that they had on when they left Egypt lasted them to the end of their journey. God supplies the wants of his people now. (2 Peter 1:2-4; Psal. 84:11.) He has given us his Word, Spirit, Grace, and hope of heaven.

6. The Lord enabled them to triumph over all their enemies. He rolled back the waves of the Red Sea, gave them the victory over Pharaoh's mighty host, and the army of the Amalekites. Thus God enables the Christian to conquer all his enemies. (Eph. 6:11-17.) The captain of our salvation is always present with us, and this ensures victory. The city of —, with a garrison of 40,000, surrendered to Napoleon without firing a gun. Such was the terror inspired by his name and presence. On the same day his navy was entirely destroyed in the battle of Trafalgar. When he heard this he said, "I cannot be present every where at once." Our leader can.

7. Their journey ended when they arrived at the promised land. The long weary march was at an end, and they rested. The Christian's journey ends at death. (Rev. 2:10; 14:13; 2 Tim. 4:6-8.) To enjoy the blessings of Canaan the Hebrews had to keep on until they reached it. Thus it is with the Christian. (Rev. 2:10.)

II. The land to which they were journeying. "We are journeying unto the place which the Lord said, I will give it you."

1. It was the land of promise. (Gen. 12:7; Heb. 4:9.) Heaven is the Christians' promised home (Isa. 33:16-17; 75:10; John 14:10; Luke 12:32; Psal. 16:11.) Canaan was promised only to the Hebrews; Heaven is promised only to the Christian.

3. It was a land of rest. There they rested from their journey and the sufferings of the way. Heaven is a land of rest. (Rev. 14:17; Heb. 4:9.) This does not mean that the Christian will have no employment in heaven, for the Bible teaches us that its inhabitants are now actively employed. It will be activity without weariness.

3. It was a rich and beautiful land. (Dent. 8:7-10.) Heaven is a beautiful country. There is the tree of life, the water of life; and the great white throne. The most beautiful and sublime scenes in nature are used in the Bible to set forth the loveliness and grandeur of heaven. It is rich in all that is good and glorious.

Canaan was filled with and surrounded by enemies. It is not so with heaven. (Rev. 21:23-27.) We know more about what is not in heaven than about what is. There is no night, no sickness, no sorrow, no tears, no sin, no death.

III. The Christian desires to have, and has good reasons to offer why all his friends should go with him to heaven.

Christianity inspires the heart of the Christian with a love for his fellow men, and it is the highest pleasure of his life to do them good. He wants them all saved. In business men are sometimes envious, and try to monopolize every thing in their branch of business; but it is not so in Christianity.

Moses was anxious to have Hobab go with him for the following reasons:

1. They could do him good. "We will do thee good." Hobab could do them good. They needed him. He could be as eyes to them. What need, you ask, had they for him when they had the pillar of cloud and of fire to guide them? This led the way in all their travels, but not in special excursions. Parties took several journeys while the army lay still. (See chapter 17, 20, 31, 32.) Hobab was well acquainted all through that country, and could lead these parties. Thus men of business capacity who are now living only for the world are needed in the church. Their ability and the influence it gives them is needed in the camp of the Lord's people.

Every man needs the church as much as the church needs him. He needs it to help him live right. Union with the church brings man under influences, and into associations that give him moral strength and build him up in his faith and hope. It is inspiring to be associated with pure and good men. Lord Peterborough lodged for a season with Fenelon, Arch Bishop of Cambrai, and was so delighted with his piety and virtue, that he exclaimed at parting, "If I stay here any longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." How much greater the help when a man gives himself up to such influences by uniting with the people of God.

There is a wonderful power in association. This is illustrated in the tree toad. This changes to the color of whatever it is on. If the bark of the tree is brown, black, red, or green it changes to the same color.

Thus men are changed in spirit and character by their associations. Evil companions help to drag a man down to moral ruin, but the companionship of the pure and good help him into a better life.

2. The Lord's promise to Israel. "The Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel." He had promised them a divine guide, food, clothing, protection, and a home at the end of the journey. He has promised the Christian wisdom, grace, strength, protection, peace, joy, and heaven in the end. (Isa. 45:1-2; Psal. 16:11; Luke 12:32; John 12:26; 17:24.)

3. Moses knew where he was going. "We are journeying unto the land of which the Lord said, I will give it you." They were not deluded but knew what was before them. There was a definite object before their minds, and thus it is with the Christian now. We know where we are going. (Heb. 11:8-10; 13; 14; 2 Cor. 4:16-18; 5:1.)

Heaven becomes more and more of a reality to the Christian as he advances in life. Our friends go there, and we feel that there is some one there that we know. This brings us near to it. It does not seem like a strange distant land, but the home of our parents, children, and friends. Mother, since your child went there heaven has been more real than ever before.

It is a grand and inspiring thought that we know what is before us, and are not left to uncertainty. One of the miseries of heathenism and infidelity is that they cannot tell us any thing certain about the great future.

It is all conjecture to them, and in this uncertainty there is nothing to sustain the soul in view of death and the future. Mr. Owen visited A. Campbell, at Bethany, and they went to the family grave yard. Mr. Owen, said to Mr. Campbell there is one advantage I have over the Christian—I am not afraid to die. Most Christians have fear in death; but if some few items of my business were settled, I should be perfectly willing to die at any moment.” “Well,” answered Mr. Campbell, “you say you have no fear in death; have you any hope in death?” After a solemn pause, “No,” said Mr. Owen. “Then,” answered Mr. Campbell, pointing to an ox standing near, “you are on a level with that brute. He has fed until he is satisfied, and stands in the shade, whisking of the flies, and has neither hope nor fear in death.” No mind can be satisfied with this, and here Christianity meets the wants of the soul. It tells us where we are going. John 6:40; 10:27-28.

One reason why we want our friends to go with us is, we know where we are going and what awaits us; and we want them to enjoy the same blessings.

Sinner, do you know where you are going? Have you ever stopped in the midst of the busy scenes of life and asked yourself this question? You must go some where. You cannot remain here. You have no choice in this matter, but you must decide where you shall go. This is a personal matter, and you must settle it yourself. The road that leads to heaven is clearly marked out by Christ. (Matt. 16:24) This is the road to heaven, and you must walk in it if you ever get there. Traveling in the opposite direction will not lead you there.

Progress of Religious Liberty in Japan.

BY TOSHIO OHTA.

It is a fact that only thirty years ago the government's edict, “Christian evil doctrine is strictly forbidden,” was written on the boards and hung up all over the country; also that the Roman Catholics, who were the only Christians of the time, were all arrested and imprisoned. But how is it now? In the constitution of Japan, the proclamation which gave universal joy, it is clearly stated that the Japanese citizens have the right of religious liberty as long as they do not neglect the duty of citizenship and disturb the peace and order of the country. The Christians of the early days passed through the persecutions of fire and water for three hundred years before they obtained religious liberty at the reign of Constantine. But we are very, very thankful to see this great change in Japan in such a short time, and without shedding any blood. And, in looking carefully, we find this thing came gradually, step by step. In the following I will give briefly an account of these changes:

1. On February 24, 1873, the public boards which said, “Christian evil doctrine is strictly forbidden,” were taken away by the order of the government, and the reason they gave was that they had hung up so long that every person knew them well. But I do not think it was the only reason. They had no doubt felt the mighty hand of God, which can not be resisted. Because soon after all the imprisoned Christians were set free. More than that, just about the same time a Christian church (Protestant) was built in Yokohama, which the government did not order to be closed up. Christianity, which hitherto was strictly forbidden, now is winked at, and in this manner tolerated.

2. On March 12, 1876, our government published an edict, given in the following language: “The day of rest, which till now has been 1st, 6th, 11th, 16th, 21st, and 26th days of the month, will be altered to Sundays from April, this year.” This change was made, no doubt, for official and economical benefits. But the adopting of the Christian Sabbath shows the feeling of the government against Christianity was not so strong as formerly.

3. The Japanese translation of the Bible, which was done in five and half years (June, 1874–November, 1879), under the leadership of Dr. J. C. Hepburn, was published and sold. But the government did not stop it, even though the Buddhists and others worked hard to hinder its publication. This is more remarkable because it occurred before the wide liberty of the press was allowed.

4. The last is the proclamation of the constitution which made Christianity a public religion. And now the heavenly voice of “Repent, the kingdom of heaven is at hand,” is heard in almost all the country, and the living influence of Christianity is felt by Japanese people more and more. But how many Christians in the whole empire? Only 35,000; and there are yet 39,965,000 of unconverted people. O merciful Father, bless the work in this country, so that the Sun of Righteousness may shine brightly on this so-called “Sunrising Country!”

(Readers of the Herald may be congratulated on the fact that Mr. Ohta will write other papers on the condition of things in Japan. Mr. Ohta is one of the first converts made under the preaching of Bro. Jones at Ishinomaki. Ever since he has been connected with the work of our mission, and is one of our most efficient workers. Mr. Ohta is much better versed in Japanese and Chinese than English, and is the editor of our forthcoming religious paper for the Japanese work. Its name translated means “Gospel Herald.” I am sure our home workers will be proud of the name given to this offspring of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. May the columns of the new magazine, under Mr. Ohta's leadership, shed much light in this idolatrous land.—A. D. WOODWORTH.)

A Few Thoughts about Music.

Poetry and music have ever been associated with divine worship, in all ages, and in every land, the voice of praise has been the voice of songs. This intimate connection between music, and religion is one of the most interesting facts of sacred history. It is too widely prevalent to be regarded as mere accident, too permanent to be accounted for by any thing less than some essential fitness. It has the warrant of inspiration, and the precedent of angelic usage. We find that music and religion have not only come down all the path, of human history, hand in hand, bringing joy to the world, and giving that joy a suitable expression, but beyond the sphere of human agency, the voice of music is the voice of praise. The very cornerstone of earth's foundation. God laid

“When the morning stars sang together
And the sons of God shouted for joy.”

Far away on the other side of earthly history, we hear again the voice of song in praise, for the redeemed around the throne are singing, “and they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb.” It is not surprising, therefore that the church has ever held the arts of poetry, and music as the sacred vessels in which to preserve all that is most precious in her history, and to celebrate the sweetest joys of our salvation. Almost every great event in the history of our redemption is commemorated in inspired hymnody. Look for a moment what a rich possession we have in the church's hymnody. such is the inheritance of the Christian church. We are heir of the ages in many things, but few of our birthrights are more precious than this. We are the fruit of trees our fathers planted; we dwell in houses which they built, we speak in the words which they have enriched, and we sing the songs which they composed, and hallowed by their best affections. But the church of today is a spoiled child, who knows not how to value this wealth, nor how to turn it to account.

Rich beyond measure in the talents we have received, we are slothful beyond excuse in our employment of the same. God in this providence has satisfied our mouths with good things, he has literally put songs, both new and old, into our mouth, even praise unto our God, and we are too lazy to learn to utter them. If it be a duty to sing praise to God, it is surely our duty to learn to sing, since it is a thing that cannot be done decently without learning. We expect our ministers to make full preparation for their preaching, and have little patience with them, if they fail to do the best they can; if they preached as badly as we sing, not one church in fifty, would support a pastor. Then let us learn more of our standard church hymns, and sing them until we can feel the love of God in our cold hearts. The value of sacred songs as a means of instruction can hardly be over estimated. They are peculiarly effective for several reasons. First, because they may be, and they should be, the earliest in the field.

The minds of little children are like the mouths of young birds in the nest, all agape for food; and the quantity that they can swallow is amazing. The mother or teacher who fails to fill these gaping minds with the sweet psalms and hymns, so suitable for children, misses the best possible opportunity to prevent the devil and preoccupy the citadel of the soul, second, because hymns find access, and welcome where a sermon is refused admission. When a man attacks us with an argument, we instinctively stand on the defensive, and feel somehow in honor, bound not to yield till we can neither answer, nor evade the logic of the discourse. But a good hymn does not argue; it simply presents a phase of truth, a tender grace or a noble aspiration, and these find a responsive chord in the heart, and conscience, the affections turn to the light thus given, and the truth enters the soul. There are a great many hearts that can be melted by a hymn that cannot be broken by any sermon. Sometimes I think the church expects too much of our ministers, they think that the minister should have good singing all the time; the minister is in a sad predicament. The church puts the Bible in his hands and provides a thorough course of instruction before she even permits him to preach the word; at the same time she puts the hymnal in his hands makes him absolute dictator in the whole conduct of worship, and not only makes no provision for his musical education, but actually gives him no time to find it for himself. Every minister should learn as much of music as he can, and enforce the duty of congregational singing. The people must be brought to feel that the worship of God is a matter which we should not treat so lightly. The very best that we can offer is poor enough; anything short of the best is an abomination to the Lord. The great power of song is and always will be the chorus—the whole congregation. When men are deeply moved they want to take part in the worship not only with their heart, but with their voices. At such times we do not want even an angel to sing for us, unless we can join in the chorus.

Elon College.

Doubtless there are only a few of our denomination who really realize what a blessing Elon college is to us today.

In viewing the past history of our denomination, we find that no step has ever been taken to advance our cause so much as the erection of our college. We have been an oppressed people on account of not having sufficient educational system, but we can be thankful today that we are to the front.

Since the work has commenced at Elon our people are drawn more closely together, we see more of each other and know and love each other better, thus knowing and loving each other better makes us a better people.

We should be thankful that our college is a mixed school, for we see that it is an advantage to the students morally. Other colleges are following our example which is certainly a high compliment to the Christian church. We wish that all of our people could visit the college for we know they would take a deeper interest in it and feel that it is our college for which we should be justly proud.

The Christian church is prospering and will continue to prosper, so long as we have such a noble institution in which to train our children. We should be proud of our buildings, our faculty, and above all, our good class of students, who are to be the leaders of our future. We are proud to say that there is not a single young man at Elon who is not a member of the Y. M. C. A. and every one takes an active part in the work. Now I think it my duty to speak for the young ladies of this institution I want to be understood in what I may say just here. I am not a student; for which I regret, but my college days are over and I can only congratulate those who come after me and attend Elon college. Well I must go on with my subject. It seems that in the last SUN the young ladies of Elon were somewhat criticised, as to the oyster supper. We are happy to say that we happened to be at that memorable occasion and we do believe that it was the most pleasant affair we ever witnessed. I want to speak for the young ladies. The oysters were given to them by our esteemed friend Mr. W. J. Lee and were sold to the guest at a reasonable price. Now we do not see where the weakness mentioned by our brother comes in. We certainly got value received for our money. As I have never seen a church built upon oyster suppers, etc., I cannot speak, but I do know that the Psiphelian society hall of Elon is a success and it was made so by the energy and push of our noble girls. I thank God that we have such girls in our churches and pray that our homes may be governed by such women.

"A FRIEND."

SELECTIONS.

A Brave Christian in Peril—Prayer Answered—A Providential Deliverance.

The Wolf Trap is a dangerous sand-bar lying on the western shore of Chesapeake Bay between the mouth of the Rappahannock river and New Point Comfort. Mathews county, Va., is the dry land from which this sand-bar juts. On the extreme edge of this bold obstruction, three miles from shore, in about ten feet of water, stood, until the 22d of January, 1893, the Government Light-house, manned by two as brave men as Matthews can produce—Joseph Diggs, the son of "Uncle Bailey" Diggs of Bethel church, and John William Thomas, class-leader at Beulah church—both in Mathews Circuit.

When the "cold wave from the Saskatelewan Valley" struck this section, John William Thomas, the assistant keeper of the Light house, was there alone—Joseph Diggs, the keeper, having gone ashore on business.

Brother Thomas's account of his escape from his perilous position is a thrilling, unvarnished narrative, worthy of record in the annals of adventure of any age. He is a plain man, who tells what he knows without coloring of any sort or degree.

The Wolf Trap Light-house was a substantial wooden structure, set up on iron piles driven down into the bottom of the bay. Vessels of heavy draught were warned by this beacon to keep to the eastward when going up or down the bay. Brother Thomas says: "By the 15th, Chesapeake Bay was well-nigh frozen across I felt no fears for my safety till Monday morning, the 16th (January), when the ice commenced moving with the flood-tide. I knew then by the shaking of the house, that it would be swept a way. I had a notion of trying to get ashore; but the ice kept opening and closing between me and the shore, without warning or regularity, so that I gave it up. I did not give up all hope of escape till Thursday, the 19th. Then it was I committed myself into the hands of God (as I had been doing ever since I joined the church), and confidently believe that no matter what the sequel to my then situation might be, it would be all right, and for some good some how. I spent my time reading my Bible and Wesley's Sermons. I got no sleep except on the slack of tide, when the ice was not grinding against the house. About sunrise Friday morning, the 20th, I saw a tug to the south'ard, and hoisted a signal (flag at half-mast), but no one on board seemed to notice it, and they were passing by. Presently I went down from the house on the ice; found it would bear me; saw that the tug had gotten stuck fast in the ice; and, concluding that this was God's answer for deliverance, ran toward her, hailing her and asking to be taken aboard, which was readily granted. I found her to be the tug Samson, bound for Baltimore, breaking a track for a steamship, which was following closely. The tug landed me on Wilson's wharf, in Lancaster county, at the mouth of the Rappahannock. The first man I met was Mr. Davis, who married my niece, and lived close by. I asked him what he was doing there, and he said he didn't know—that he hadn't been there before for three or four months. I told him I thought the Lord had sent him down there to show me the way to his house. Sunday morning, the 22d, I came near losing my life by drowning in a little creek. I went down to the river (Rappahannock) shore to see if the ice would allow me to cross over to Middlesex, and on my way back to my niece's broke through the ice in about ten feet of water. I remained at my nieces's till Tuesday, the 24th, when her husband, Mr. Davis, put me across the river, and landed me on the ice three fourths of a mile from shore, and I walked ashore at the mouth Sturgeon creek, in Middlesex. I went to Mr. Kellam's, who carried me up to Jeff. White's, near Conrad's wharf. On Wednesday, the 25th, I walked up to Freeport, and crossed the Piankatank river there into Gloucester, and by 3 p. m. I was at Brick Store, on the edge of Mathews and Gloucester, waiting for mail-cart. At 9 that night I was in the bosom of my family, eight miles south of Mathews Courthouse, and about six miles from where the Light-house was, from which I escaped on Friday before. I had traveled at least fifty miles to get home. The Light-house was carried off on Sunday, the 22d. In all my experience from the time the ice began to form till I got back home I felt myself under the special protection of my Heavenly Father. When I could see no way of escape, He gave me perfect peace; and when a way of escape was near, He gave me courage, which I did not have before, to test the ice even to the side of the tug."

No comment is needed. I would add only this, as his pastor: No man has a better name in all this section than John W. Thomas. And this letter would be unfinished if I did not add that the brave wife's faith in God did not slacken in the least. There was no light visible on Wolf Trap after 12 o'clock Wednesday night. From her home she could have missed it, but she did not look for it, and no one told her the light was gone. Though strong in faith, she became sick at heart once, and within an hour she got a telegram from her husband from Whitestone, Lancaster county, telling of his safe arrival there.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Ballast.

I was reading in one of the daily papers the other day of a ship that capsized at sea. As soon as she got outside the harbor and into the waves of the open ocean, she rocked and rolled until she finally rolled over, was filled with water and went down. They said that she had not ballast enough to steady her. She was chartered to make a quick voyage to a distant port, and bring a return cargo to the port from which she sailed. The captain wanted to take no more dead weight than was necessary. But in his impatience of delay, and anxiety not to be overburdened, he did not take enough, and hence the catastrophe.

Now, ballast, as my readers can see by consulting the dictionary, means "just load enough." It is a compound of two Saxon words, "bare" and "last"—"a load"; i. e., a bare load, or barely a load. The idea is that a certain amount of loading is indispensable to the steadiness of a ship on the ocean. A ship is made as buoyant as possible in order to carry as much freight as it can safely. But when empty, it is too light to sail well. No ship attempts to cross the ocean without either heavy freight or ballast in its hold.

The ship I was reading about was top-heavy—the weight below the water line was not sufficient to balance that above it.

As I read the account of that shipwreck, I thought how like it are many of the human wrecks that we see all around us. A young man is impatient to enter upon his life voyage. He dreams of brilliant success if he can only reach a certain position. He is told to wait, to study, to think, to secure right principles, to take in ballast enough to keep him steady amid all the perils he must encounter. But he calls his advisers old fogies. He doesn't want ballast, but speed. He rushes into society. He rushes into business. He rushes into politics. He shouts as he spreads his sails. "Hurrah for Young America." But in a few years we find him capsized. He was overcome by temptation. He began with a social glass, and in due time became a drunkard. Or he began by determining to get rich, honestly if he could, but rich at all hazards. He borrowed the trust funds in his hands, to speculate with. He meant to return them. But he lost them. He became a defaulter, an embezzler and finally a convict. Or he attended the primaries, and by activity in politics secured an office. He found that his position gave him opportunities for petty speculation. He improved those opportunities until he became "a boodler." His career of official corruption sent him to State's prison or to Canada.

The great defect in our system of education is the want of thorough moral training. Our young people are smart; they are ambitious; they want to learn what will help them to secure social position or wealth. But they don't realize that all permanent success must be built on character. The first thing in true culture is to fix and settle principles, just as a builder secures a firm foundation before he puts up his palace or his warehouse. And the taller the intended edifice, the deeper must the foundation be laid.

But to return to the illustration of the sea-going ship. What is the ballast for a young man or woman to take on board before leaving the harbor?

IT IS THE BIBLE.

God has given it to us for that purpose. In the thirty-seventh Psalm man is represented, not as a voyager, but as a traveler. He is walking in steep and slippery ways. But David says if "the law of his God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide." That law gives steadiness, moral equilibrium. It enables us to go safely amid the perils of the land or of the sea. Paul had a great deal of confidence in Timothy. He placed him in charge of the church at Ephesus when he was so young that some people might be tempted to despise his youth. (1 Tim. iv. 12).

And he tells us why he trusted him so. He wrote, in his second Epistle: "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." Yes, the Scriptures made Timothy what he was; and they have the same power to day.

When I was a child my mother, like Eunice, believed in the Scriptures as the best look for the young. She not only had me read to her at least one chapter a day, but she encouraged me to commit to memory passages of special interest. I knew a score of Psalms by heart, and such chapters in the New Testament as 1 Cor. xiii, before I was ten years old. After I was fourteen I was seldom at home. I was a thousand miles away, and among strangers, when my mother died. I lived for years in an atmosphere of temptation. Young America-like, I rushed into society, into business, into politics. Why was I not shipwrecked in those stormy waters, as so many of my comrades were? Not because I was by nature or by human culture any better than they, but because I had been ballasted for the voyage in the harbor of home. Oh, if I could reach the ear of every mother in the land I would say to her: "Be sure that the word of God is in the heart of your child before you send it out into the world.

Some of my readers have no doubt seen the story of the cabin boy whom the sailors tried to teach to drink and to swear when he came on board. They wanted him to be like themselves. But he had been brought up by a pious mother, and had promised her that he would be faithful to her teachings. So when the jolly tars teased him or coaxed him or threatened him, he always had a Bible verse ready for them, such as "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." At length one of the oldest sailors said to the rest: "Shipmates, you might as well give up. You can't do anything with that boy, for he is

CHOCK FULL OF BIBLE."

When a bottle is chock full of water, you can't pour oil into it. The best way for us to resist temptation is to leave no room for it in our hearts.

And the best way for us to fortify our children against the evil that is in the world is to have their memories and their affections pre-occupied with the truth of God and the love of Christ. I wish that we could go back in our homes and our Sunday schools to the old idea memorizing the word of God. There never was a time when nobler ships went out from the home harbor than today. Oh, that they were all well ballasted for the voyage of life!—Senex Smith, in Journal and Messenger.

Newspaper Ghosts.

BY REV. ALICE A. DRAPER.

You would not think it, but I confess I am haunted by newspaper ghosts.

The only effectual way to deal with them is to drive them off with my pen.

Not a paper, not a magazine that comes to my home, but brings one or more ghosts during the year.

The SUN and the HERALD perhaps because of the relationship they sustain, denominationally, bring more than the rest. Last summer a ghost came to me in the SUN, see how long I have borne with it, and it has appeared to me scores of times since. Not often do I allow one to haunt me for months and make no protest; but I make it now, and the effort slays the Ghost whether the editors see fit to allow the pen to strike before the public or not. It frees my conscience and that ends the matter.

Now I appreciated that young man's appeal for women to be clothed and in their right mind, and it would have been a grand appeal, if there had not been a ghost in it, and in fact, did not the editor (now, I cannot help it, if editors are, sacred truth is truth, and we must face it) also let a ghost in? Two ghosts in one brief article? Ugh! Call the women to account, my brothers for their style of dress; pass laws forbidding the abominations of fashions, but always be men, and never whine "I can't," when God says you can, God must mean that for men as well as for women. You would laathe the woman, and rightly who made such a confession as was made in that article. Christian men, all men have a right to demand that women appear dressed, else remain invisible, but no Christian man young or old, has any right to say what that article implied. The paper is not at hand just now, or I would quote from it, but if all in it be true, then Christ is not true, for according to that teaching Christ demands the impossible. Your Bible tells you the portion allotted to certain spiritual offenders; see Matthew 5:27-28.

Christ demands men to keep the law of purity in spirit as well as in the letter. And Christian men are in duty bound to do this, as well as Christian women. Christendom is a flaunting lie, as long as she tolerates a double standard of morals, purity for women, and license for men.

God recognized no such need, and made no provision for it, then let pulpit, press and pew beware, how they utter the least thing that has the appearance of evil. Weak, indeed is that man or woman who allows eyes or ears to steal away their crown.

Newspaper ghosts! Alas, yes, and troublesome things they are to us, who pause to count the probable cause and effect of what papers send into homes and into human hearts. Excellent as was that article on "Kissing," there were ghosts in it, and this is said with all due deference. Ghosts that called up thoughts that have pursued me ever since I read it, until I fancied myself like a scampering mouse from a pursuing cat. The cat, however, either catches the mouse or drives it away.

Frankly, all my ghosts disappear, when I strike them with the pen. That a minister (a male minister of course, that has such an euphonious sound, coupled with the "female prayer-meeting") should presume to "take liberties that would make any other man, a target for a bullet, is something of a mystery."

Such a course is enough to cause every self respecting woman to despise them; and every man, whose manhood enables him to measure the proprieties by the Golden Rule to abhor them.

The kind of kissing so justly rebuked by the SUN, does not come under the injunction, "Greet one another with an holy kiss."

Yet to say that "we know about as much of the Holy Kiss as about the Holy Ghost" is, if the brother can bear the statement, a little misleading. All true Christians must know by his own inner life something of the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Spirit.

But there are holy kisses, as all loving, devoted husbands and wives know, as all true fathers and mothers know, but lips common to all cannot fail to be loathsome, while promiscuous kissing is profanation.

Nor will it do to excuse the women, on the plea, "fear of offense." That plea might lead, would lead, to multitudinous evils.

If a man ceased to be a man, though tricked out in clerical robes you would expect your wives and daughters to enter a vigorous protest. You would hardly excuse them, if they plead "fear of offense."

All honor to the man, who says to his brothers, "confine your kisses to your immediate family circle."

And what do our women mean by suffering the indignity? Does this come under the injunction "let your women keep silence?" Yet that would be on the plane of much that passes for legitimate interpretation of Scripture.

Have we women so benighted, as not to know that a woman may so carry herself, that she may go from pole to pole, from ocean to ocean, and no man even dare kiss her?

Plenty of reliable women, both young and older, can vouch for this. Where, how, have they lived, who permit in a minister, that which would not be tolerated in any other man? Is he more than man? Is he less? Assuredly not; taking men at their own estimate. It is no credit to a woman to suffer these things. If you are married it is heinous, if not, it will not make you more desirable to your prospective husband. Men, believe in the most rigid exclusiveness for women, whatever they may practice themselves, and by and by, perhaps, women will take the hint and demand purity for purity, loyalty for loyalty. Perhaps the best study for man is man, but to you women who have the privilege of reading, I say, open your eyes, and learn that either consciously or unconsciously, men reveal in their writings, that of themselves one would hardly learn in conversation, with them as a rule. However, there are things husbands should tell their wives, and fathers their daughters. Coming from a loyal heart, it could hardly fail to take root in the heart of woman and bear precious fruit. Said a devoted husband to a charming young wife, after the departure of an old friend of her family, "Nelle, never as long as you are my wife, must you permit any man to kiss you except your father and brothers and I just as soon they leave it all for me to do."

Jealous? No, only he knew men, better than his wife did; and though the tears glistened in her eyes when she arose from her husband's knee, yet she saw then as he did.

And he assures me that thing can never happen again in his family.

And what sensible man would not care? And what woman without the tact to prevent the offense?

Again, why should a married man indulge in that he would condemn in his wife? Why should the young man take that which belongs to the husband.

And fancy either, as minister, looking down into the faces of women when in the pulpit, whose confidence they have themselves at least jarred, if not shaken. Picture the inspiration a man must get, seeing a silly woman here, another there, whose added brains, may be more concerned about the holy (?) kiss he gave them, than his sermon. Does each wonder how many holy kisses the other received? No doubt, when the brother sounded the timely warning, he had in mind, men of his own locality, but like small-pox, it is not confined to any one point of the compass, nor to any particular denomination.

Especially here I have confessed things found, in those years of lecture work, though I received so cordially and the recipient of so many favors from various denominations, on the part of pastors and people, yet I should have been unworthy of my profession, had I gone with my eyes closed, refusing to see and shun the boulders, I saw here and there good men and women stumbling over. And now for the last ghost in the article.

It is to be hoped that no husband or wife has been made uneasy for a second, by reading, that many "not having married their ideal, ghosts may be touched that have slumbered," that you dreamed not of, and fires kindled that destroy both soul and happiness.

The union of the right man with the right woman was God's plan, and society need never hope to get beyond infinite wisdom. No husband or wife who lives in a true home, or has so lived, but deprecates every newspaper ghost that haunts the homes of our age. No one is more anxious to see men and women living in Edenic happiness and purity than the faithful preacher of the gospel.

Do not dear friends, let your heads be turned with animal magnetism. Conceded, it enters by God's laws, largely into the makeup of all well sexed men and women, and the better sexed, the greater the degree of that magnetic power, yet it would be suicidal to have a marriage on that alone.

Men and women, boys and girls must be taught, that they are to base all actions on reason, and failing to do this, they must sooner or later pay dearly for their folly.

Here is a field fraught with joys that can be measured only by those who experience them, or with woes that set up miniature hells on earth as the discordant couples, and children born of lust and hatred tell too plainly.

But why this culpable ignorance? Why this wicked silence? Why schools and colleges to master this or that science, and ignore the (yet science of life). The wonder is that the failures are not greater; the misery does not drive more to death; and that the cause of divorce, is not even greater than it is.

You are all familiar with the fact, that a magnet carried closely over the floor on which needles have been scattered, will gather every needle to itself.

You ought to be equally familiar with the truth, that certain temperaments sustain the same relationship to each other as the steel to the magnet, that the magnet will take up only some particular needle, is not true, nor is it true that men and women will be unconscious of the power of a magnetic opposite except in husband and wife. Here lies the danger, and they mistake the stronger magnetism too often for love, which as hundreds of cases prove, ends disastrously. Human beings have a soul to reckon with and no right minded man or woman need hope to be able to love till death, a person in whose life they find that which outrages their sense of right, decency and propriety. That boys and girls in their teens are not able to sift this matter is not strange, but for men and women to be thus shiprecked is unpardonable ignorance or temerity.

It is hard to tell where some of us get our ideal, since the more we see of people, the stronger the conviction that it does not exist, and it absolutely raises the question, why should men and women have an ideal they cannot find? Why their soul demand in companionship, that which is not forthcoming?

Here are illustrations from life, more are known, but these suffice. It is proof too, that men and women of character, of noble soul, will not allow the heart to do what the head cannot sanction.

The man found in the course of his life, one who seemed the embodiment of all that he wished for his happiness; but before it was too late, he found a serious flaw in his idol, his reason, his sense of honor, forbade the marriage; and they separated, never to meet again if it could be avoided. Though years have gone by and he still walks alone, yet he is thankful that he did not succumb to magnetic attraction, and allow an unworthy woman to wear his name.

A young girl, fair, sweet and pure, nears her magnetic opposite, she is swayed by his power, she thinks it is love, she gives up home family, society, steps down to the level of the man who wins her, associates with a class of people far beneath her, marries him giving as a reason, "that she loves him, therefore she must marry him." And in a few short hours it dawns upon her that she has played the part of the fool, and must writhe in torture and disgrace the rest of her life. The attraction that won her, has been turned into loathing by forced animation and daily exhibition of his moral blackness. A woman, found her magnetic ideal, but to her honor, she found her gold, brass when tested, and she thrust it from her, and has never ceased to rejoice that her sense was stronger than magnetic power. Magnetic power without good character is a common occurrence, but woe to that benighted mortal who risks his or her all on that alone. Boys and girls, men and women, should be made as familiar with these facts, laws of being, of sex, as with the alphabet, then blunders will decrease and misery will diminish. The character of man or woman, must be such as to command your respect, your implicit trust, else too late you will find the magnetic power, you once thought "perfect," so "entrancing," gone, and loathing and disgust filling your being are the confessions of men and women who have come for sympathy, for advice, for help, for prayer; and happier is the convict in his prison cell, than these men, these women, chained to rottenness and corruption until death.

Even in the Garden of Eden, before sin entered the world, Adam and Eve were not allowed to stake their all on a magnetic attraction. Each was given to the other. Speculation on what might have been without sin is useless, we must deal with life as it is; hence, men and women, are to be taught that other qualities are necessary for human happiness, besides magnetic power. Given the good qualities in large degree, then the greater the magnetic attraction the better, the more satisfactory the union. Again, undoubtedly a close approximation to your ideal will be the best you can do. While the older you get, the more you will demand, dotage excepted. You can dispense with wealth but not with character. You can safely forego that degree of magnetic power that makes fools and victims of so many men and women, but not an inch of abatement in good principle. And if you are so unfortunate as to yield the strongest power of your life the least desirable, that you must choose more principle and less magnetism; but in no case, commit the heinous sin of marriage without love. Know that love dies where respect cannot live. It is folly, worse, an abomination to pretend to join together, those whom God through nature has sundered. Men and women, (boys and girls have no right to marry) must learn that the hearts that God does join together, no man can sunder, which by the way, is the only cure for divorce, our curse. And learning all this, they must also learn that marriage has its laws, and to yield the greatest happiness these laws must be obeyed by both husband and wife. There will be then no "dangerous chords" to be touched. Knowledge in regard to these matters, which only fools ignore, not only means strong men, strong women, morally, but men and women, safe, absolutely, amid all the various circumstances of life. That the books are not without faults or extravagances may also be true, but who is competent to sift for the world? Seek the knowledge as the miner seeks the gold; take the nuggets, take the grains, and leave the refuse where it belongs. If so precious a thing as gold, has to be obtained by digging and smelting, shall we flinch, when the happiness of the human family and our own joys are at stake? Shall we not prayerfully ask God to widen our horizon, and step boldly, yet reverently forth, and consider men and women in their three fold nature, the spiritual, mental and physical, remembering that as God created this trinity, we are in duty bound to understand it, that we may wisely care for it.

FROM PASTORS AND FIELD.

Ivor, Va.

Last first Sunday Dr. W. T. Herndon, the financial Agent of Elon College was with me at Waverly and preached a most instructive and interesting sermon. In the afternoon I drove to Centerville leaving the Dr. with the brethren at Waverly with whom, I learn, he spent some time in the interest of the College. At night I returned home and attended a prayer meeting service at the Ivor Christian church. This is a most active little church. It is late for such news, but according to promise, must say that they had most interesting service at this church last Christmas for the children. The decorations were elaborate and beautiful, the presents well selected and the program well rendered. The Superintendent, Bro. G. W. Brittle, was notably and substantially remembered. Mrs. B. F. Bell of Holy Neck Christian church, and Mrs. M. Bell, of the Baptist church, and others, gave the young ladies of the church valuable assistance.

Last Sunday I met my congregation at Spring Hill at 11:00 a. m. The congregation was unusually large. In the afternoon the Ladies Aid Society met and after the regular routine of business, the congregation was entertained with selections, music and recitations by the young ladies, children and some of the older ones. Bro. R. T. West, the efficient Superintendent of the Sunday school wears a beautiful gold medal presented by the school there Jan. 1st. Bro. C. M. Poind and sister Payne, both members of this church have been critically ill and while I am glad to note improvement, still their conditions are rather precarious. May the healing hand of our Father be upon them. They both enjoy a most happy state of mind, that of resignation to the divine will. I am indebted to Bro. R. T. West, Judge West, and Hon. C. S. Parsons for assistance in getting to some of my appointments.

Miss Myrtie I. Vaughan, daughter of Bro. Thos. J. Vaughan Union church and Mr. Willie Riggan of Surry County were united in marriage on the 8th inst. at the home of the bride's parents. Best wishes to follow them.

Very truly,
M. W. BUTLER

Holland Items.

Our Sabbath school yesterday (2nd. Sunday) was an improvement upon former meetings, quite an encouraging number of young people were present. The lesson (the story of Esther, Mordecai, etc.) and exercises were interesting.

We are having some sickness—colds, influenza, pneumonia, etc. In one family there were five cases of sickness at one time, all under medical treatment.

The weather betokens the near approach of spring, and soon we can sing,

"The winter's past, reviving flowers
Anew shall paint the plain,
The woods shall hear the voice of spring
And flourish green again."

The buds of peach trees begin to swell and shew signs of life. In the winter of 1857 the buds of peach trees were so killed that but very few of them ever swelled or bloomed. The winter of 1857 must have been some colder than 1893, for a while, at least.

The pea nut crop is rapidly going off at the advanced prices. It is said the World's Fair has much to do with the sudden rise in the market.

The Easter entertainment by the ladies of Holland Christian church will come off April 3rd. A large crowd is expected, and a treat is in store for all that come.

Asheboro Christian Church.

DEAR BRO. CLEMETS:—I thought the brethren would possibly like to hear something concerning the newly organized Christian church at Asheboro the county seat of Randolph. I took charge of it one month since. I will preach for them every fifth Sunday and occasionally in the week and on other Sundays as I may be able to get some one to fill my appointments at other places. I have been there twice since taking charge of the little church. From what I could see and learn Asheboro is one of North Carolina's rapidly growing towns. Its population has been about doubled within the last four years. Among the desirable features of this town, there is one that especially impressed me, and that is the brotherly Christian spirit that exist here among the different churches, and another thing made a deep impression upon me, and that was the spirit of liberality. In company with Bro. E. A. Moffitt, ex-Sheriff, I canvassed the town soliciting aid to build a church edifice for our membership here; at the close of the day we had raised between $700 and $1000. We hope to honor the Lord with a nice house. While here I met Rev. Bro. Holmes pastor of the M. E. church and Bro. Cecil pastor of the M. P. church; they are both clever brethren. On Tuesday night I had the pleasure of hearing Rev. J. L. Michaux of Greensboro, preach a good sermon. This town affords a nice weekly paper titled "Asheboro Courier." While here I also met Sheriff Ross, Mr. Bradshaw, clerk of the court, Mr. Birkhead, Registra of deeds, and Mr. Hammer, Superintendent of public instruction, and a host of other prominent citizens of the town and county, who gave me nice subscriptions for our new church building. I believe that when God's people go about raising money for church enterprises in the right way the time will not come when there will be any need of feasts, festivals, oyster suppers, or any other kind of entertainments, to raise the needed amounts, for God will open the hearts of His people. The very fact of holding these entertainments, seem to imply that God is a poor dependant, and that the people have to resort to this method, to help them out or a long with His work. My friends God is not a dependant but is independent for all and all things are His and I therefore honestly think that these entertainments reflect upon the church of Christ, for they are more or less demoralizing.

Elon College Notes.

BRO. CLEMETS:—gave us a very pleasant surprise in his arrival to our village Friday night, not only that, but we had the pleasure of hearing his talk in the prayer meeting Sunday night.

Miss Emma Harward, our esteemed music teacher, and Mr. W. L. Sears visited, friends in Morrisville Saturday and Sunday.

The buildings of Rev. P. H. Fleming, and Bro. Klapp are nearing completion.

The father of our Post Master, Mr. J. W. McAdams, has moved his family to his new residence at place. We are glad to welcome them as citizens. Mr. McAdams has a pleasant home, and we feel sure that he will prove a blessing to the college.

Mr. Peter Hughes has also moved into his new home, which is just completed.

Prof. F. S. Blair will give us a lecture in the college chapel to night. His subject will be in reference to Sunday schools, Prof. Blair is a good worker and has an important filled in which to work.

Come to the Annual Debate Friday night, and keep up with the "times."

We remember reading of a very aged man, in New England, who was busily engaged in felling trees with which to build a home. A traveller passing by, asked him concerning some other work to be done in the community, but the old man turned again to his work saying, "I am an aged man now, and yet have no home, so I must work diligently until my resting place is completed."

From this let us learn the lesson, that our days upon this earth are but few, and it is important that we prepare the soul for its final resting place.

We have no time for idle curiosity, no time for engaging in the sins of the world. There has been no day set apart for serving the devil. So let us begin in early youth, the work which God has given us to do, in order that we may become strong Christians, and perform the whole mission which God has assigned to us. It matters not what vocation in life we may choose, every thought, every word, every act should tend to the preparation of immortal souls to dwell in the home, prepared for those who are faithful unto the end.

Evangelistic services under the labors of Evangelist Schoolfield are being held this week at the Edenton St. M. E. church with much interest. Rev. J. N. Cole and the evangelist are doing some faithful work. We hope they will succeed abundantly.

We earnestly recommend the following, taken from the Religious Herald, to the careful consideration and practice of the SUN's readers:

"The problem—a most difficult one—before pastors, secretaries, committees and other leaders in church and denominational life is to make the people see by the help of God that our mission work, our benevolent work, our educational work, need first of all their prayers. When this is fully understood "the tithes" will come into the storehouse. Let us not forget to urge upon givers the duty and privilege of praying for God's blessing on their gifts. If we cultivate ate this habit, two excellent results will follow. We shall thus increase the power of our gift for good. We shall also be more careful to make our gifts worthy of being prayed for. The rich old gentleman who gives fifty cents for foreign missions will never have the face to pray for a blessing on it. "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before the Lord." Praying and paying. "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

Flying Around.

Last Friday night we ran up to Elon College. We found things generally moving smoothly. The professors said that nearly all the students were doing good work. Better than usual, and that means much.

Sunday night was also spent at the College, or a part of it. And this time we had the pleasure of attending religious services, in the chapel. These services, are conducted by the student-body. To us they were very interesting. The line of thought handled by the young men, showed intelligence yoked to piety. It would be hard to find another student body equal in piety, to the standard seen at Elon College.

For Elon our prayers shall ascend,
For her our tears shall flow,
Till prayers and tears shall end.

Saturday in the afternoon, through the kindness of Rev. W. C. Wicker, we were carried to the neighborhood of Union Ridge. In company with Bro. Wicker the night was pleasantly spent at Albert Graham's. Nearly all the preachers know this to be an excellent home for a preacher, or any one else. Dinner was taken Sunday with J. A. Graham, and was enjoyed very much. This is the home of Miss Annie Graham, who will be one of the graduates at Elon this year.

We met many of our old friends at the church, Union, N. C., on Sunday. And it was a joy to the better emotional feelings to see them in the flesh again.

Bro. Kernode kindly took us back to the College Sunday in the afternoon, for which he will accept our thanks.

At 1.00 a. m. in company with Bro. John Moffitt, our backs were turned on our friends at Elon, and in an old coach on a long freight, we commenced bumping, jumping and jerking at a slow rate toward the beautiful City of Oaks. And now we are at home again.

We think that Bishop Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal church, in his decision in the case of Frank W. Palmeter, and William C. Briggs, has bowed low to the alcoholic god. We hope and believe he will not often be quoted by the great family of Methodist, as good authority.

Denominationalism.

"It decreases the power and efficiency of the church universal by disorganizing her forces."

Revolutions are not the result of the might of the church universal by disorganizing her forces. The Revolution our forefathers put forth the mighty declaration "United we stand divided we fall" The phrase, "In union is strength," has passed into a proverb. Statesmen have ever perceived the soundness of this principle, and the world's battle fields witness the success of its application. No state denies that it can the better withstand its foes and promote its internal welfare when thoroughly organized and united. No general denies that a small army organized under one leader has the advantage over superior members acting independently under various leaders. A clan of the Scottish highlands was, perhaps, the equal, or superior, of any army of the same number on British soil, yet all the clans combined could not stand against half their number of British Regulars. This is no new principle, but was announced by the Divine Teacher more than 1800 years ago, when he declared that a house divided against itself could not stand. Statesmen were not slow to perceive it, but divines were. Contrary to all human experience, contrary to the express declaration of God's Word the church has practically declared that there is strength in division, that the attacks of enemies can be best withstood by disorganization, that the internal welfare of the church can best be promoted when it is divided into factions, differing and sometimes hostile. If union in state means strength, can union in church be otherwise? The fallacy of all argument for division can be seen in that it denies not mere theory, but existing facts. The divisions of the church today are not separated because they are hostile, but are hostile because they are separated. The separation tends to engender and perpetuate the hostility. It is useless to argue that since men do not believe alike they had better be separated. This argument carried to its legitimate conclusion would sever all family ties, disorganize every society on earth, and hurl every state, headlong into anarchy. Division engenders a feeling which hinders the spiritual development of the church, while it renders concerted action impossible. The various denominations of our country united could furnish comfortable churches and good ministers to all its inhabitants. As it is, there are many countries and small towns in which there is no church at all, while in other small towns scarcely strong enough to support one church there are four or five struggling churches and poverty stricken preachers.

But, say some, this division produces a rivalry and men are stimulated to do more. It has produced a "rivalry," but a very unwholesome one. Persecution written with red letters would have been the more correct word. It stimulates men possibly, but all stimulus outside of pure love to God and fallen humanity are naught in his sight.

Division is one of the greatest barriers to the general enterprises of the church. A state might afford one strong college, one strong asylum, and one strong church paper; but the division of the church necessitates four or five. Each is weak and a burden to its respective denomination, when all might enjoy the benefits of an abler institution without burden.

In no enterprise of the church can the baneful effects of this ecclesiastical strife be more clearly seen than in foreign missions. The various bodies each present the heathen with a religion differing slightly and sometimes radically. Yet each tells him that the Bible teaches that religion and that alone. He knows this cannot be true, and often turns away in disgust to his former religion. Is it not criminal to thus put a stumbling block in the way of these poor heathen who would otherwise come to Christ? In countries where millions of human souls are perishing without the gospel we see a few weak missionary stations, far separated and acting independently. How greatly would their strength be increased and their expenses lessened by cooperation! They should be united for protection, and Christian counsel and fellowship amid those trials incident to missionary life.

Disorganization lays the church open to attacks from her enemies. The enemies of the church have never found a more vulnerable point than her schism. Infidels and skeptics have attacked these with much delight and great success. They have driven many from the fold and stood in the way of others who would have entered. The schisms of the church destroy her national influence. It is complained that the petitions of protestantism avail little at our national capital. This is true, and because it is so factious that it can present little strength. Congress could not dare disregard any reasonable petition coming from the whole protestant nation. It is also complained that Rome is one and we are many.

If a divided church cannot stand, what must be the future of the protestant world? The machination of Rome no man can predict, but it tends to confirm the opinion that there slumbers in the bosom of Rome a spirit, which, let loose in all its fury, would mean troublesome times for protestantism in her divided state.

Whatever Rome may or may not do, we know that there is one common enemy, the powers of evil, to be fought until the appearing of our Lord. That enemy presents one solid phalanx against the people of God. How shall we withstand him unless we too shall stand hand to hand and heart to heart? "If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand."

Sister Adams.

Permit me to have a few words in reply to sister E. J. Adams, who, in the 6th of March 16, so vigorously defends the right of women to preach. In doing so, I desire to take her on her own grounds and show that, in fact, she has not a single prop with which to maintain herself in her arguments.

1. Sister Adams lays much stress on the fact that Paul in 1 Cor. 11, spoke without condemnation of women prophesying. She thinks this is warrant for her to preach. Let us see The office and work of a prophet is not that of a preacher as Paul clearly shows in Eph 4:11, where he says:

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelist; and some, pastors and teachers." See also 1 Cor. 13: 10, 23

So the office of a prophet was one thing, while that of pastor and teacher was quite another thing. A woman could be a prophetess—foretell events, or give interpretations of divine messages, and yet not be a public teacher in the churches. Bear in mind that Paul only prohibited public teaching in the churches—see 1 Cor. 14:34.

The prophet, or prophetess, was a servant of God, but not the ordained minister. To rightly understand this matter, let us see what is meant by prophecy. Luke says prophecy comprehends three things. 1. Prediction. 2. Singing by the dictate of the Spirit. 3. Understanding and explaining the mysterious hidden sense of Scripture, by an illumination and motion of the Spirit. The last signification is said to apply to the prophets of the New Testament. So a woman, gifted as a prophet, was not a public teacher, but by the Spirit was enabled to explain the mysteries of the Bible, just as so many devout women have done in the Sunday school and prayer meeting and in the sick room.

2. Now, I propose to show that the cases cited by sister Adams covers just that sort of work and not the official work of the ministry.

Let us see. She says that Joel 2: 23, 29, was this kind of prophesying—meaning preaching as she thinks—and that Peter (Acts 2:17) declares that this prophecy was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when all, men and women, continued in prayer and supplication. That is right, but when the time came to have a sermon—Peter (not his wife, or sister, or even Mary, the mother of Jesus) but Peter a man, lifted up his voice and preached to the people. So, sister Adams, you see that point is against you, for according to your own position, the women mentioned in Acts 1:14, were prophets, and the record there given clearly shows that their part in the services—their prophesying—consisted in praying and supplicating, and that the preaching was done by a man. I beg you, do not worry because the facts are against you. I am no more responsible for this than I am for Paul's opinion.

As to the 16th chapter of Romans giving authority for women to preach, it is so far from it, as to harmonize exactly with the work of the women in Acts. 1:14, for the women are spoken of as servants of the church, as laborers for the Lord, but in no place as the ministers—that is, as authorized public teachers in the churches. Again, sister Adams, your own facts are against you, and for it. I am not responsible. To illustrate: Sister Clark, a member of the church at — dies and I write her obituary. I write it: "Sister Clark was a faithful servant of her church"—that does not mean that she was a preacher, but that she was an active worker—a helper in the work of the gospel at — church. That is all—she was often with us in prayer and supplication and in alms deeds, but she did not enter the pulpit to preach to the people in the public congregation. This is further shown to be Paul's meaning when he speaks of Priscilla and Aquilla as "My helpers."

The case of "the first Apostle of Christ in Samaria," as Sister Adams calls her, is more fully against her than any other quoted. In the first place, Christ never had but twelve apostles, and they were all men. So this woman was not an apostle at all. She was only a private "helper"—purely an unofficial messenger to the Samaritans. What she said to the Samaritans was purely her personal testimony, and in no sense a public exposition of divine truth by an official teacher. Sister Adams fails to recognize the fact that there is much difference between the utterance of a private individual in giving personal testimony, as in the case of this woman, and in the public preaching of the gospel, as by Peter on the day of Pentecost,—but there is a great difference. For one I am an earnest advocate for the praying of women and for anything she can do to forward the gospel in a private—that is unofficial—way, and there I stop because I understand it is forbidden to women to preach as public teachers, and this prohibition is by inspiration, against which I dare not array myself.

It is a pity to so spoil an argument so nicely written by a lady, but she unfortunately chose facts which upon careful examination and analysis turn against her. For this, too, I am not responsible.

I appreciate and honor the sisters in their work for the Master, but only when that work is done as directed and in the sphere assigned by divine authority.

Rev. J. R. Maynard.

Rev J. R. Maynard fell dead in the wood shop at Morrisville N. C. last Friday. He was at work on a wagon wheel, suddenly fell to the floor and died in a few minutes.

Bro. Maynard has lived in the little village of Morrisville nearly ever since the close of the civil war. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and has been actively engaged in the ministry for a number of years. He was greatly beloved and respected by the people of Morrisville. In the absence of the pastor, he preached in the pulpit of the Christian church at Morrisville on the third Sunday night. It was his last sermon on earth. He has gone home to die no more.

May the Lord bless the wife and five children who are left to mourn their loss.

An Enquiry.

Mr. EDITOR:—There seems to be a misconception, or a misunderstanding, of the purpose of the Missionary Association. Some understand it to be to help the needy any where, where it can be wisely done, while others understand it to be to aid weak or new conferences only, leaving needy points which are within the bounds of the stronger conferences to be helped only by the said stronger conferences. Which is right? Will Dr. C. J. Jones give us his opinion, as he had much to do with shaping the plans of the organization?

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

We are here again today with a very nice crowd of cousins, and we all come happy in our love of a Savior. And then we are all trying to do something for Him in giving for the Band. The Band is doing nicely this year. We get so many such nice letters and so many dimes and half-dimes; yes, and some are sending quarters. Now these contributions soon count up to a lot of money. Let all write just as often as possible. So far this year the Corner has been the best part of the SUN, to my notion, and now I want you to keep it so.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

WEYERS CAVE, VA., March 14, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As brother is writing I will write a few lines too. We love to read the SUN. I will ask the cousins a question: Who was Noah's father? I will answer Nellie Goodwin's question: Methuselah was Noah's grandfather. I will also answer Allie Gibson's question: Adam died at the age of 930 years. Am I correct. I will close with love to you and the cousins. Please find one dime for the band enclosed.

Your loving niece,
IVIE D. ANDES.

Ivie, you have written us a very nice little letter, and we all want to hear from you again soon.

SANDY GROVE, N. C., March 20, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As the Corner is filled with such nice letters I thought I would write a short one to the Corner. I am a little boy 10 years old, have never written to the Corner before. I think the children write nice letters. I wish to join the Band very much. I will answer Lillie Winston's questions. Sarah was one hundred and twenty-seven year old when she died and was buried in the cave of the field of Machpelah. I will ask the cousins some questions: Whose rod was turned into a serpent? Who became a pillar of salt? Whose least spoke while its owner was riding upon its back? Who was sent to Nineveh to preach unto the people? I will close for fear my letter will find its way to the waste basket. I remain.

Your little nephew,
EDGIE THOMPSON.

Edgie, we welcome you and give you a place in the Corner. The children's letters do not find the waste basket, unless they come without any name signed to them. Write again soon.

GRISSOM, N. C., March 18, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I haven't written to the Corner before this year, I think it is quite time I was doing so. It is snowing today and is so cold I have to stay in doors but but I don't mind it, the snow is so beautiful I like to watch it fall. Our pastor Rev. J. D. Wicker filled his first appointment last Sunday, he preached a splendid sermon that was much enjoyed. I greatly enjoyed the sermonette by Rev. Roger Charneck several weeks ago. Hope he will write for us again. I am very glad to see so many bright cherry letters every week. I should think your picture would indulge in a good smile now that the Corner is full. I send twenty-five cents. Love to you and all the consins.

DELLA GRISSOM.

Della, we had about concluded, you had deserted the Corner altogether, and are glad to see you loyal. Write again soon.

ELAMS, N. C., March 19, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I am a little girl 9 years old and want to join the Band of Cousins if you will allow me space in the Corner. I go to school, and like to go very much, my teacher is Miss Annie Mosley, she is very good and I love her. I will go to Sunday school as soon as it opens. The weather has been so bad the school has not been opened yet. I hope it will not be long before I can go to Sunday school. I was sorry I could not go to church today on account of the snow. No one met Mr. Klapp and all were disappointed at Antioch today. Hope next third Sunday will be nice. Enclosed find half a dime for the Band. I will write again soon if my letter does not find its way to your waste basket. My love to you.

Your little niece,
LULA B. FLOYD.

Lula we welcome you to the Band and hope you will become a very useful member. Your first letter is very nice.

WEYERS CAVE, VA., March 5, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE: I thought it was time for me to write so I take up my pen to do so. I was glad to see so many nice letters in the paper this week. I am glad to see the cousins take such an interest in the Corner. I will ask a few questions: How old was Enoch when he was taken up to God? How old was Seth when he died? How old was Enos when he died? How old was Cainan when he died? How old was Mahalaleel when he died? How old was Jared when he died? How old was Noah when Japheth was born? How old was Samech when he died? How old was Noah when the flood came upon the earth? I will answer Venie Winston's question: Dog is mentioned 12 times in the Bible. Our school will not close for five weeks yet. I will be sorry when it closes for I like to go to school. I send one dime for the Band.

Your nephew,
ALFRED W. ANDES.

Alfred, we always enjoy your letters. On account of rush of work and some other things, your letter has been overlooked a few weeks, but I hope you will write again soon.

It was my pleasure to be at Holy Neck last 3rd Sunday to hear Bro Newman, the pastor, for the first time preach. My decision after hearing him was that Holy Neck had made no mistake in extending him a call to serve them. I find that he is greatly beloved by his flock, as he deserves to be. His sermon was good, and delivered in fine style

On Monday I visited Holy Neck again this time to "mourn with those that mourn," to enter into the feelings and sympathies of others, and weep and condole the death of a loved one. This time Bro. Newman preached and conducted the funeral rites of Bro. Jas J. Holland, who lived and died near the church. He was a member of South Quay Baptist church, where he was held in high esteem. His wife, who had preceded him to the grave, a woman of deep piety, with all her children were members of Holy Neck Christian church. Rev. Jas. E. Jones, pastor of the deceased was expected to be present to perform the funeral services; but for some cause did not come, and Bro. Newman by request of the family filled his place. The sermon was appropriate and full of comfort to all especially the bereaved ones

Dr. J. P. Barrett in his article against women preaching, had some things to say about Father Adam and Mother Eve. Bro. Adams, a descendant of the first Adam, has testified against him. Now we would like to have the evidence of the Sister Eves in the case.

Perfectly Marvellous

35 Years of Misery With Chronic Diarrhoea.

A Perfect Cure by HOOD'S.

"About 38 years ago I got overheated while at work in the harvest field, and was sick abed for three months. When I got on my feet again I found that I had a bad kidney trouble and chronic diarrhoea, which has drawn on me for over 35 years.

Just Think of My Misery.

I dared not eat anything more than would barely keep me alive. For years I felt that my stay on earth would be short. I have times without number been in such distressful pain and aching that I could not turn myself in bed, and I would have to ask my wife to take hold of my hands and turn me. In all these years I employed the best physicians but nothing gave me permanent relief. I had an iron constipation, or I could not have stood the drain upon me.

"In the fall of 1887 I was so weak I could not work. I concluded I would try Hood's Sarsaparilla. To my surprise and great joy I soon found that it was doing me good and when I had used 7 bottles I was perfectly cured. It is now 4 years and the Cure was Perfect and Permanent.

"For the past four years I have enjoyed life and felt better and younger than in any of the 35 years preceding. I endured everything a human being could and live, and I will recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla long as I live." WM. OSBORN, Gibson City, Ill.

HOOD'S PILLS cure liver ills, constipation, biliousness, jaundice, sick headache, indigestion.

Moral Influence of Ministers.

The moral influences of the minister will immensely add to his pulpit power, or counteract. We must live well, if we would preach well. The "moral pressure" of ministers, of which we read in modern writings, must come from the moral qualities of the preacher. We cannot leave the ministerial character in the pulpit or the vestry any more than we can our complexion. God can and often does employ the less-gifted servant who is full of the Holy Ghost. How successful some of our less known, but consecrated, brethren have been. And in them we see the words of the Lord fulfilled. "Them that honor me I will honor." For he constantly reminds us "that it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

When we were candidates for this ministry it was asked of each, "Has he gifts and grace and fruit?" It might be well if we sometimes, before God, asked the question again, each one of himself, and faced the answer.—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

A Secret Talisman.

The Germans have a story which that home loving people like to repeat. A father, when his daughter became a bride, gave her a golden casket with the injunction not to pass it into other hands, for it held a charm which in her keeping would be of inestimable value to her as the mistress of a house. Not only was she to have the entire care of it, but she was to take it every morning to the cellar, the kitchen, the dining room, the library, the parlor, the bedrooms, and to remain with it in each place for five minutes, looking carefully about. After a lapse of three years the father was to send the key, that the secret talisman might be revealed. The directions were followed. The key was sent. The casket was opened: It was found to contain an old parchment, on which were written these words: "The eyes of the mistress are worth one hundred pair of servant's hands." The wise father knew that a practice of inspection followed faithfully for three years would become a habit and be self-perpetuating—thit the golden casket and the hidden charm would have accomplished their mission.—Ex.

Our Daughters.

The household blessed with noble daughters ought to be a happy one; most parents forget, however, to imbue them with love of nature, which is so invigorating and healthful. Give them not only noble teachings, but noble teachers, and give them the help which alone has sometimes done more than all other influences—the help of wild and fair nature. You cannot baptize them rightly in inch-deep church fonts unless you baptize them in the sweet water which the great Lawgiver strikes forth from the rock of your native land. You cannot lead them faithfully to those narrow, axe-hewn altars while the azure altars in heaven remain for you, without inscription; altars built not to, but by an unknown God.—Ruskin.

LITERARY NOTES.

Historia, from Chicago, Ill., is on our desk, and presents a neat and attractive appearance.

N. Y. LEDGER.

A most suggestive and beautiful picture of Spring, in the form of a lovely woman arrayed in the latest fashion and standing in an Easter egg, which forms a chariot, to which are harnessed the traditional rabbits, make the cover of the Easter number of the New York Ledger a thing of beauty. How such a paper as the Easter Number of the New York Ledger can be produced for five cents is a puzzle which we invite our readers to solve.

FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY FOR APRIL.

THE "Art Aspects of the world's Fair," as set forth by Isabel McDougall in the leading illustrated article in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April, make beautiful and impressive showing of the wonderful white City at Chicago. Two other articles in this number especially noteworthy from a pictorial point of view, in addition to their literary interest, are Dr. Popoff's "Russian Folk Songs" and Charlotte Cousen's "Bavarian Highlands" together with short tales and sketches by David Ker, Katherine Strickland, Charles H. Crandall, Serena Townsend, Mary A. Denison, Eleanor Waddle, and others.

BETTER AND BETTER.

The New Peterson for April is more attractive than its predecessors and cannot be too highly praised, both for its contents and illustrations. "Easter Days in and About Rome," by Sarah Powel, begins with a visit to the Eternal City in the days of Pius IX. It is not only amusing, but instructive; and several of the photographs are entirely new. The New Peterson is the only magazine for which Mr. Savage writes monthly, and its list of contributors contains the names of nearly all the leading authors of the country. Terms, two dollars a year.

NOT EVERYBODY CAN HAVE THE CHANCE.

To visit Washington; but that is no valid reason why everybody may not become thoroughly familiar with the points of interest at our National Capital, and with many things about it that only a favored few could enjoy even by a sojourn. Yet you may sit quietly at home, without incurring the fatigue and expense of the journey, and see them all,—all the magnificent rooms and portraits of their occupants, in DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, the April number of which contains a charming paper, superbly illustrated, on "The Foreign Legations at Washington." "En Route for Chicago" gives excellent information for women who purpose traveling alone to the Chicago Exposition; there are numerous excellent stories; all the departments are full of good things; there are over two hundred illustrations, including an oil picture and a crayon; and altogether it is a superb Easter number,—a specimen of what is given twelve times a year, for $2. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 E. 14th St., New York.

MAGAZINES BY D. LOTHROP COMPANY, BOSTON, MASS.

The Pansy for April would be a notable number had it only the American Literature paper to recommend it to the readers' notice. For the historians Parkman and Prescott will be read and admired so long as there are English-speaking students to read their gracefully written English. A fine picture of each accompanies the article. But there are stories, bits of narrative, and poems, as well as stirring pen pictures drawn by "Pansy" and Margaret Sidney, the young folks, favorite writers.

The junior Society of Christian Endeavor has likewise been remembered in the P. S. Department, which is always an attractive feature of this highly commendable young folks' magazine.

The publishers will send a sample back number free to those wishing to examine the magazine.

Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number.

Our Little Men and Women for April fairly scintillates with bright, wholesome thoughts, artistically woven into apt story, clever verse and merry rhyme that make up for the boys and girls a table of contents that will cheer older hearts as well as theirs.

Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number.

Babyland. How anything prettier than this dainty number, or mere to Baby's taste, could be thought of for all the Babies everywhere, were hard to say. There is a dainty frontispiece followed by a sweet little rhyme which goes with a sweet little Baby. Then is a pretty picture, more dainty, to finish with rhymes and pictures—all made for Baby, for Babyland is the Babies, only magazine.

Price 50 cents a year; 5 cents a number.

W. S. Martin, Jr., the Captain of the Tufts College Base-ball Team, and whose efforts have raised Tufts to a leading place in Athletics, gives the boys seven rules for base-ball in the April Wide Awake.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original samples as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (7 1/2 x 11 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

Perfect Through Suffering.

What a mystery there is in suffering! How terrible are the inroads of pain! How strangely is suffering meted out! How unjust it seems sometimes! Men cry out in their misery and anguish as Job did, and expostulate with the Most High because his judgments are hidden with a cloud; in bitterness of spirit they ask whether there be indeed a righteous ruler of the world. But Christ comes into the chamber of suffering and he lights up its gloom. He does not say: "You are the plaything of an inexorable destiny, you must submit to your pain, you must be brave and bear it like a man;" but he says: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." If you endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? He does not take away the pain, it may be, or heal the sickness; but he gives strength to bear it, he irradiates the couch of suffering with his own precious promises. He says: "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." "I, too, was a sufferer; I, too, have felt pain and weariness, though I have no sin, neither was guile found in my mouth; you are a partaker of my sufferings now that you may be a partaker of my glory hereafter. This light affliction which is but for a moment is working out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." What a light shines in the chamber! How the gloom is dispelled! How darkness of suffering is dispelled, and the mystery of suffering irradiated by the presence and the voice of Christ! Christ is the light of pain.—Perowne.

Alcohol in Surgery.

Mr. Frederick Treves, the well known surgeon of the London Hospital, in his "Manual of Operative Surgery," has some striking remarks on the risks attending operations on the bodies of drunkards. He says: "A scarcely worse subject for an operation can be found than is provided by the habitual drunkard. The condition contra indicates any but the most necessary and urgent procedures, such as amputation for severe crush, herniotomy, and the like. The mortality of these operations among alcoholics is, it is needless to say, enormous. Many individuals who state that they 'do not drink,' and who, although perhaps were never drunk, are yet always taking a little stimulant in the form of 'nips' and an 'occasional glass,' are often as bad subjects for surgical treatment as are the acknowledged drunkards"—Scientific American.

Depreciating Other People.

Some men have a habit of depreciating others. They can always see the faults of their neighbors much quicker than their good qualities. Where no real fault exists they either imagine one, or by innuendo suggest to other people that so and so is not what he is generally supposed to be. The true inwardness of this evil habit of speaking depreciatingly of others, is an effort to elevate one's self in the estimate of the person addressed. When a man has no strong points to commend him, he seeks to appear important by ingeniously reflecting on his contemporaries. The spirit that will do this is little, narrow, selfish. Such conduct deserves the unqualified condemnation of all honorable persons. The man or woman who is betrayed into this ignoble practice will surely come to grief. Nothing is truer than that the world will ultimately measure us at about our true worth. He who for a time gains a fictitious merit by pulling down others, is destined to exposure. His methods will be found out, and there will come a time when without genuine worth upon which to base his claim for respect and confidence, and having forfeited the love of those who were once his friends, by insinuations against them, he will be pitiable indeed. Don't go through life reflecting on other people. Let your good works and kind speeches commend you, and you will always have friends.—Epworth Methodist.

A Chance To Make Money.

I have Strawberries, Raspberries, Currants, Peaches and Grapes fresh as when picked. I use the "California Cold Process." It keeps perfectly fresh, can put up a bushel in ten minutes and costs about one cent a quart. I sold directions to over 100 families last week. Any agent can sell the directions at $1.00 each, by showing the beautiful samples. You can get directions from Jno. Casey & Co., Zanesville, Ohio. They mail samples and complete directions to anyone for 20 two-cent stamps, which is the actual cost of samples, postage, advertising, etc. Times are so hard, I think it my duty to give my experience for the benefit of poor people, who may be glad to make two or three hundred dollars round home in a few days. Mrs. MARGARET EWING.

God can overlook ten thousand mistakes on the part of any man who is trying his best to do right, but he has sworn that he will never forget the sins of those who are dishonest with their fellow men —Ram's Horn.

MRS. ROBERT L. HEFLIN,

PROPRIETRESS.

The Stay-Aways.

Plenty of them every where, little and big, old and young. Here are some of their reasons:

1. "Don't like the preacher." Well, my friend, if you were a preacher somebody wouldn't like you. Strange to say, some don't like Christ. Read II Thess., iii. 1, and I Tim. v., 17.

2. "So and so is a hypocrite; I won't go where he goes." Then you should by all means prove that you are not. "Judge not, that ye be not judge."

3. "Wife won't go; husband won't go; don't like to leave wife or husband home alone." No husband or wife has the right to be a bad example to the other. Marriage is "in the Lord" God never meant marriage to justify a bad example.

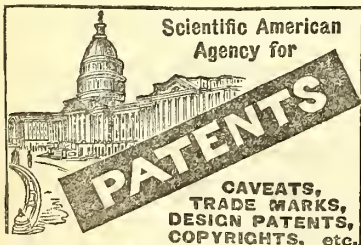

4. "I've been snubbed." Then why not quit all business? If being snubbed is a valid reason for quitting the Lord's business, it is an equally valid reason for quitting your own. Why don't you close your shops and stores, and leave your offices, and throw down your tools? The world is full of snubbers and the snubbed. Christ endured the contradiction of sinners; so must you and I. Kindle anew hot fires of love to God and men.

5. "The church isn't sociable; they are all icebergs." Be sociable yourself, then. Their sin is no excuse for yours. Don't run like a coward to another church, because the battle is hard in your own.

6. "Don't like rented pews; don't like free pews."

Perhaps the real difficulty is that you don't like to support any system. You are always welcome at the house of God, free pews or rented pews. And you will be there if your heart cries out for God.—Selected.

Suffolk Letter.

Rev. Sam P. Jones lectured here in the City Hall on "Manhood and Money" last Friday night, and the proceeds were for the benefit of our building fund. The net results were $170.70. About six hundred people were in the Hall. Some came from Windsor, Holland, Driver, Whaleyville, and other places. The audience was a very fine one and the lecture was one of his best. He was pleased with Suffolk and Suffolk was pleased with him. His lecture abounded in wit and humor, and solid common sense. His portrayal of the real experiences of society, and the causes that prevent manhood were unique and laughable, while full of strength. He sometimes grows eloquent and touching as he presents its better side of human nature illumined by the presence of God.

Rev. Roger Charnock of Berkley, on his return from Holland, stopped over in Suffolk and preached for us last night. The congregation was good and the sermon was a sweet message to all. The people enjoyed the discourse and we will gladly welcome our brother whenever he can come. This was his first visit to Suffolk. He had been to Holland to conduct quarterly meeting for Bro. Demarest.

Rev. M. L. Hurley came down from Bethany yesterday afternoon and spent the night in Suffolk. He is still thinks he is improving. His condition is certainly much better than when he left Eastern Va. last September. Most devoutly do we desire his full restoration to health and service.

The naval rendezvous and review in Hampton Roads from April 17th, to 24th, will be an attraction for thousands of people to visit Norfolk and to see the navies of many nations. It will be the grandest display of war ships ever brought together on the seas, and yet in perfect peace. The forces and machinery of war dwell together in peace under the gospel. "Peace on earth" is what we have a right to expect. The most destructive elements are changed into objects of admiration when touched by the spirit of Christ. He is only revealing Himself on the seas where great battles once raged and saying to the storm elements; "Peace be still." What He said to the disciples, in the storm, when they were in great fear. He is repeating to the nations on the seas, and the huge navies and roaring cannon are calm and safe.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

News just reached me that Mrs. Minerva P. Coggsdale, wife of Wm. H. Coggsdale, and a member of my church, was taken sick last night about 9 o'clock and died before 11 o'clock. The death angel often comes at an unexpected moment. "Be ye also ready." I believe she was, blessed be her memory. God bless her husband and son who both belong to the church.

Temperance Progress in England.

Progress is making on temperance lines even in Great Britain. In 1854 the United Kingdom Alliance to secure the immediate prohibition of the liquor traffic, was formed in Manchester, England. The first society consisted of seven men, but it grew apace and has become the terror of saloon keepers and brewers. The present president of the society is a gentleman of world-wide reputation, Sir Wilfred Lawson, a prominent parliamentary leader. The society is very earnest in its work, constantly employing the best of speakers, men and woman, for lectures throughout the land, using, some years, as high as $120,000 on the work. More than one half of the members of Parliament have expressed sympathy with a local option law, Mr. Gladstone himself being one of the majority. Every member of the Alliance is pledged to vote against any man for the House of Commons whose convictions are not in sympathy with the temperance reform. The friends of temperance are greatly encouraged, and efforts are redoubling in the work. The day is dawning in England, after a long night of fearful darkness.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

A Gleam Across the Wave.

There are times when nothing is so valuable as light. When light floods the earth, and the morning's sun bathes creation with its glory we rejoice in the brightness, but yet we do not know its value; but when night comes down, and darkness blots out the landscape, and robs all things around us in gloom, then we see the importance of the light. We cannot always tell when light is needed, but the business of the light-house keeper is to trim his lamps, and when the sun goes down send the gleam of his lantern across the waters. There may not be a vessel in sight, no ship may pass through the livelong night, and yet he is to trim his lamps, watch the flame, and be ever at his post. If for a single hour his light should burn low, some passing vessel might be misguided, and lie a wreck upon the cruel rocks before the morning dawned; for there are critical movements when nothing will meet the need but light.

An earnest minister of the gospel at Boulogne, France, Spencer Compton, relates the following incident in his experience: "During a voyage to India I sat one dark evening in my cabin feeling thoroughly unwell, as the sea was rising fast, and I was but a poor sailor. Suddenly, the cry of 'Man overboard!' made me spring to my feet. I heard a trampling overhead, but resolved not to go on deck lest I should interfere with the crew in their efforts to save the poor man. What can I do? I asked myself, and instantly unhooking my lamp I held it near the top of my cabin and close to my bull's eye window, that its light might shine on the sea, and as near the ship as possible. In a half minute's time I heard the joyful cry 'It's all right; he's safe,' upon which I put my lamp in its place.

"The next day, however, I was told that my little lamp was the sole means of saving the man's life. It was only by the timely light which shone upon him that the knotted rope could be thrown so as to reach him.

The Christian can never know when his light will be most required. He cannot tell the critical moment when a lost soul, struggling in the waves, must look to that light as the means of his rescue; and hence being in ignorance of these things, it is for him to let his light shine every day, to have his lamp trimmed and burning, and to be always ready to hold forth the word of life, and send a gleam of brightness across the wave, to help the shipwrecked and the ruined and to save the souls for whom the Saviour died.—Exchange.

What Followed.

The newspapers contained notices not long ago of the death of an old man at the hands of a younger man who had been his friend from boyhood. Both men belonged to cultured families, held high places in the community in which they lived. Both were married, and had children depending.

The newspapers stated that they met at dinner at the house of the older man, and quarrelled concerning some trifling question. The host, maddened by liquor, boasted that he held letters written to him by the younger man's mother when she was a school girl. Her son defied him to prove it, on which he produced the letters, yellow with age, and commenced reading them aloud. They were pert, familiar and vulgar. The girl who wrote them, though not criminal, was coarse and immodest.

The young man's mother was now an old woman, respected by her friends and her children. Her son, infuriated by this insult to her, drew a pistol and shot the older man, as he was reading the letter aloud, dead at his feet.

He was found guilty of manslaughter, and was sent to prison. The keenest suffering perhaps which he had to bear was the discovery that the accusation was true; that the letters had actually been written by his mother.

The young girls who read this will feel that the mother of this young man had hard measure. Her adult life had been pure and good. She would have blushed to recall the coarse flirtations of her girlhood; yet this folly of her youth arose to destroy her honorable old age, to bring murder and ruin and misery into the lives of her children.

The story suggests a fact to which The Companion has often urged attention.

American girls, except in the highest class, are usually left to their own control, unwatched and unguarded. They crave amusement and occupation. The natural desire for admiration is strong within them. Then follow too often flirtations, correspondence and exchange of presents with young men of whose characters they know little, and of whose motives they know less.

The girls are innocent of any base purpose. They think it is all "fun," a moment's folly, but such conduct leaves a poisoned taint that possibly can never clean away.—Youth's Companion.

Preaching experimental religion

One reason why it takes so long to Music In the Home.

I want to call the attention of mothers to the importance of music in the home. Busy mothers are too apt to "hush" their children when they sing or whistle. It is just as natural for some children to sing as it is for the birds, and it seems to me almost wicked to hush their little voices. To be sure, one does get tired of hearing street songs all the time, such as "Amie Rooney," "Ta ra ra boom de ay," etc., but we should have patience and teach the little ones other songs, with pretty airs and easy words; then they will soon stop the street music.

I know of a mother who has kept her children in the kindergarten until they were nine years old merely to have them learn the attractive songs which are taught there. These children go to a primary school in the afternoon. This mother will not read a nursemaid who cannot sing and naturally musical, and one of them cannot sing a note correctly, but she allows him to think that he can, because he truly loves music, and some day he may learn. They have no piano in the house, because they cannot afford one, and cannot spare the funds necessary to employ a music teacher. Neither father nor mother can play on any musical instrument; you listen some rainy day at the nursery door, you would say, "Oh! what a musical family! how well those little children sing." Yes, they sing from their hearts, because they are happy, and because they have never attempted a new song they were encouraged, and so were kept bright and pleasant by music. If the baby falls, they do not allow it to cry, but pick it up and sing to it. When the tired little feet come patterning in, after a long day's run, mamma or nurse wash the little faces and hands, and they all sit down and sing sweet songs together, while waiting for their supper.

When these children are men and women, how pleasant it will be for them to remember their nursery songs. Rich and poor should have music guard against much that is evil. We do not need to be skilled musicians in order to make children happy. —The Mother's Nursery Guide.

Something that Can Not Be Told.

"A little boy was born blind. At last an operation was performed; the light was let in slowly. When one day, his mother led him out-of-doors, and uncovered his eyes, and for the first time he saw the sky and earth, ('O! mother!' he cried, 'Why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?')

"She burst in tears, and said, 'I tried to tell you, dear, but you could not understand me.'"

"There are certain things, which it is impossible to tell to certain people. We cannot explain music to a deaf man, and we cannot describe a landscape to a blind man; so we could not explain the higher mathematics to an uncultured savage who knew not how to count. Before any man can see he must have eyes; he must have the power of sight. All the light of heaven would be wasted on a blind man. So the Apostle Paul when commissioned for his work, was sent forth to the heathen and under the thin veneering of its artificial good manners, there is often found a moral rotteness that would disgrace a Hottentot and amaze a Sioux Indian."

"First, they must have eye-sight; second, they must have light, and then they must be persuaded to follow it to God. Multitudes of people to-day fail to perceive, to understand, and to appreciate divine truth, because they need sight. There was One who could open the eyes of a man who was born blind, and He can open all blind eyes if we will but yield ourselves to him, and pray as did the Psalmist, 'Open Thy mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law.' He will give us sight, and then He will give us light. How many there are groping in darkness, and unable to see many things which are plainly written in the Word of God. Let us pray God that we may have our eyes opened to see, our ears opened to hear, our understanding opened to comprehend, and our hearts opened to receive the wondrous words of grace which God has spoken.—Selected.

"Every Methodist preacher should beware of mannerisms in the pulpit. Let your attitude, voice and gesture be as natural as possible. Above all things, do not try to ape any one, for you will be sure to copy their faults and eccentricities rather than their virtues. Carlyle said he would rather be himself than an angel.—St. Louis Advocate.

"Man has but One Chance." One of the greatest sources of weakness in the church of to day is unconverted church members. They dilute its energy, fill it with a spirit of worldliness, and act as perceptual drags on the whole of its progress.—Bishop Ross.

"It is alleged" that on one occasion, passing by a man who did not contribute, the ticket puncher, after his reputation will continue attached to his name; his wealth he left behind.—New York Independent.

Facts About the Bible.

A prisoner, condemned to solitary confinement, obtained a copy of the Bible, and by three years' careful study obtained the following facts:

The Bible contains 3,586,489 letters; 773,692 words, 31,173 verses, 1,188 chapters, and sixty-six books. The word and occurs 46,277 times. The word Lord occurs 1,855 times. The word reverse occurs but once, which is in the ninth verse of the 11th Psalm. The middle verse is the eighth verse of the 118th Psalm. The twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet except the letter J. The finest chapter to read is the twenty-sixth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The nineteenth chapter of 21 Kings and the thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah are alike. The longest verse is the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of St. John. The eighth, fifteenth, twenty-first and thirty-first verses of the 107th Psalm are alike. Each verse of the 136 Psalm ends upon him and said: "Conversion, conversions here!"

The man turned heart, said: "Well, have you many conversions here?"

Do you take this to be a Wesleyan chapel?" The idea of a conversion to his idea of things, it was precious for a man to talk of conversion in that great church was so foreign knowledge the gift of a nice short from Brother J. W. Carlton of Ingram, Va. This is a gift that we give expression of our thankfulness for the same, and pray that God in his infinite mercy and goodness may bless this dear brother and family with an abundance of good things in this world and in the world to come everlasting life.

We Are Thankful.

We desire through the Sun to acknowledge the gift of a nice short from Brother J. W. Carlton of Ingram, Va. THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

My Dear Children:—

I want to tell you something about the Sunday school in the Raleigh church. Some time ago I told you about the "Little Workers" and how they were working to get a library for the school. They have regular meetings and their dues are one cent a month. Last Sunday we had an Easter Offering for the library, so the Sunday before each one of the "Little Workers" was given a nice box. When Easter Sunday came the boxes were opened and the Offering was found to be over $9. This with what was on hand before will nearly get the library. The school is getting along nicely and we think that during the summer it will increase to be the largest in its history. It is a pleasure to walk in to the room Sunday morning and find a crowd of young folks, and older ones too, present and all interested in the lesson. And then the lessons for this quarter are so pretty it is a pleasure indeed to study them.

Now children don't you think the Corner is the nicest part of the Sun, I do as long as you keep it full of such splendid letters. Why it is almost as if we were talking to each other. Here we ask questions and get answers, and tell about the pleasures we have, and how we love Jesus and his work, and give our money to help make preachers, and so many things besides. I hope Uncle Roger Charnock will sermonee us with another of these Love from from Aunt Myrtle, Aunt Maggie and myself. Cordially yours, Uncle Tangle.

Saturday, Va., March 21, 1893. Dear Uncle Tangle:—Will you receive a little boy like me as a member of your Band of noble workers? Today is a beautiful and I am going to town and mail you this letter myself and also a dime, hope you will receive both all right. I want you to hurry and bring Aunt Maggie to see me and bring Aunt Maggie to see me and am learning fast. I love to read the consins letters in the Sun. We had a Christmas tree at our house the night before Christmas, and we all got a lot of nice presents. I enjoyed very much. I will ask the consins a question: How many times is the word made mentioned in the Bible? Enclosed find half dime for the Band, to write again soon. So you are in a hurry to see Aunt Maggie are you? She is going home pretty soon then you will see her.

Yes sir, Thornton, we will welcome you to the Band, and want you come you to the Band, and want you to write again soon. So you are in a hurry to see Aunt Maggie are you? She is going home pretty soon then you will see her.

Dear Uncle Tangle:—I will write you a few lines to the consins this morning. I have just come from Sunday school. We did not have church because our pastor was sick. I will answer Theodore Stephens questions: Solomon reigned 40 years. I will ask a question: Who reigned in his stead? Easter will soon be here, and won't we be glad. I was sorry to see so few letters this week hope to see more next time. Uncle Tangle please have the paper stuck together better; every time I go to turn over the leaves they tear apart. I don't know what to tell the consins. Uncle Tangle please let me know how they are getting along. I must close as it is nearly train time. Love to you and Aunt Maggie and the consins. I send a dime for the missionary Band. Your loving niece, Julia E. Etheredge.

Morritts Mills, N. C., March 25, '93. Dear Uncle Tangle:—I will for the first time try to write you a short letter. I am a small boy eight years old; am going to school and love to go very well. I have two goats: Nannie is white, and Billie is rather gray. I call them and Nannie will answer just as far as she can hear me. I think a heap of them. Our Sunday school will start next Sunday, and I'm glad for I love to go. Enclosed find half a dime for the Band. Waiting to see my little letter in print I am ever your loving little nephew. Obert H. Dear Uncle Tangle:—I will write you a short letter for the first time. I am going to school and love to go very well. I have two goats: Nannie is white, and Billie is rather gray. I call them and Nannie will answer just as far as she can hear me. I think a heap of them. Our Sunday school will start next Sunday, and I'm glad for I love to go. Ina L. Morritt. Ina we gladly welcome you to the Corner and we have your promise in Joe's questions: Og, king of Bathan came out against the Israelites at Elzei. Rebecca came to the well to draw water, as Abraham's servant was praying. Naaman came to Elzisha to be healed. Esther was made queen instead of Vashti. Rachel the wife of Jacob was beautiful and well favored. Am I correct? I send half dime. I will close wishing the Band much success. Yours truly, Nellie Goodwin.

Nellie, you have written a nice letter and answered the questions well. I hope you will soon give the Corner another letter.

Lizzie, we welcome you and expect another letter from you soon so be sure and write. Youngsville, N. C., March 18, 1893. Dear Uncle Tangle:—As I have never written to you I thought I would try to write to day. I am a little boy twelve years old, I go to school every day to Miss Katie Whitfield. I think she is a nice teacher. I go to Sunday school at the Christian church every Sunday when the weather will permit. Uncle Clements spent last Saturday night with us. I enjoyed reading the nice letters this week. Uncle Tangle I know you are much better looking than that picture in the Corner for I've seen you once. Now cousins let's write real often, and have our Corner the brightest spot. Well as this is my first, I'll bid you all adieu. Your nephew, Linton Winston.

Cancers in the Neck

Terrible Choking Sensation

Mrs. James Baker of Locust Valley, Long Island. "Four years ago, while living in Trinidad, Colorado, a small lump appeared on my neck, which gradually swelled and developed into an intensely painful hard sore with a centre filled with granulations like shot. Another sore appeared on my neck or two distant, and I had to give up and return to my parents in Brooklyn. Physicians pronounced them cancers and performed an operation. I suffered a great deal for their removal. I suffered a great deal before the operation, and far worse since. One of the cancers, the smaller one, healed over but was as sore as ever, while the other did not heal and was worse. The physicians told me I would have to submit to another operation, but I said I would die first. A similar lump a year ago came on the right side of my neck. For many months I could swallow only hard or very soft food, and sometimes found great difficulty in speaking aloud. At the suggestion of a friend, I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the only thing I regret is that I did not take it years ago, and thus have prevented terrible suffering, for had I taken the medicine, I sincerely believe I should not have needed any operation at all. These sores are now, after taking two bottles.

and, I am satisfied, permanently healed up. The lump on the right side of my neck has nearly all dried up, and no longer causes me any inconvenience. I can eat anything once more, and can use my voice as well as ever." Mrs. James Baker, Locust Valley, Long Island Hood's Pills cure Nausea, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Biliousness. Miss Blanche Long.

But few times in the history of the town of Graham, N. C., has a heavier gloom of sadness gathered over its people than the one which came in the form of the death angel's touch of Miss Blanche Long, daughter of G. W. Long, M. D. Notwithstanding her death had been expected for several days, and physicians, relatives and loving friends had done all possible for her, it cast a gloom over the plucks the flowers, sometimes He waits for her bright intellect and Christian spirit had made her a host of friends wherever she went.

Her funeral was preached in the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member, by her pastor, Rev. W. R. Coppedge, Rev. P. H. Fleming, W. W. Staley and W. G. Clements assisting in the services. Nearly all the students and faculty of Elon College were present. She was a student of this institution, and there as comrades fled into the room in groups to look for the last time on that sweet face. The young men and young ladies thus went in turn. It was a scene never to be forgotten. It seemed as though their hearts would break, and as though their eyes were fountains of tears. But she lay there like an angel asleep, with the repose of heaven upon her brow. The great crowd gathered in the church. The prayers and prayers and words of comfort left on the shores of time, proving that God's grace may sustain them in this their great trial.

Catawba Springs.

It was a joy to the soul to meet the dear people at Catawba Springs, N. C., last Sunday. We learned to love the people years ago while passing that church and we love them yet.

The services were pleasant, and especially was the singing excellent. Bro. W. H. Roach is pastor and greatly beloved by his people. Both Saturday night and Sunday night were spent with the family of Deacon Jesse Winborne. It is always pleasant to spend a night with Uncle Jesse.

Suffolk Letter.

The experience of last week and our Easter service yesterday put death and the resurrection before me visibly. Called by telegram, on Thursday day to Graham, N. C., to be present at the funeral services of Blanche Long, the second daughter of Dr. G. W. Long, I was soon on my way in sadness. Blanche Long dead! Only seventeen! So young, so bright, so full of hope! Yes, I found it so. The light had gone out, the sweet blooms in character, sing in the melody of redeemed souls, and shines in the lives of good men. The resurrection promises gladness and life.

It is the foundation of all our hopes. At night Rev. N. G. Newman preached a good sermon on "Keeping the Sabbath;" and, at its close, the Holy communion was administered.

After the funeral, on Friday, I went up to Elon College where I spent a few hours and was present at their annual debate. The audience was large, the debate was good. I was met the teachers with whom I was not acquainted and was pleased with all. The impressions made on me by all I saw and heard at the college increased my admiration for the institution. The tone of morals and manners is conspicuous there, and that commends any person or institution favorably. These are really essential elements of culture. Full rounded character embraces all the elements of nature moulded into beautiful symmetry and strength.

God-education may secure better manners and morals. It seems reasonable that it should be so. President

W. S. Long thinks so, after an experience of thirty years. He seems to be more interested in his students and work than ever before.

Holland, Va.

April 3, 1883.

Dear Son:—My visits at Holland grow more pleasant every time I go.

I love the work of the Lord more and more, and also my congregation.

We held our regular quarterly conference on Saturday, and although the roads were very bad and weather threatning we had a fair turnout, after conference I tried to prevail on some of our members to take the Sun and two gave me their names to hand to the local agent, and I trust that I stopped with Dr. Holland and wife, where I also met Miss Irene ones, and in company with the latter I spent a few hours very pleasantly at Mr. R. H. Hollands Jr. with himself his wife, and Miss Freear, and Miss Crumpler of Suffolk. On Sunday Rev. Rodger Charneck of Berkeley preached a good sermon, after which he delivered the sacrament of the Lord's supper in his usual impressive manner.

In the afternoon, Bro. Charneck conducted the religious exercises of the missionary society and gave a very interesting and instructive address about the mission fields of China, Japan and India.

The work at Holland is progressing, and God is blessing us. We will have a revival service during the summer, when we look for a blessing, and in proportion as we trust, so will we receive. At 8 o'clock I preached at Berkeley, Bro. Charneck having stopped at Suffolk. Yours in Christ, R. D. H. DEAREST.

Durham, N. C.

Dear Son:—This pretty Easter Monday morning I want to say, my service was very pleasant yesterday and my congregation nearly twice as large as usual, and I hope all looking forward to a good meeting to commence next Sunday. Our Sabbath school was very good yesterday, the best we have had this year.

The tobacco sale here is very large now every sale day and the farmers have to remain some time to get their tobacco on the market sometimes. A meeting has been in progress in the First Presbyterian church for a week. Dr. Lacy from Norfolk is doing the preaching. Congregations large and attentive.

J. W. WELTONS.

Thanks.

On the first Sunday in this month, at Pleasant Grove, Va, after I had preached and before I could get to the door on leaving the house, I was compelled to come to a halt, and hear what was said and govern myself accordingly, and take what was placed upon me. So I just submitted at once, for I saw my helplessness, as men have to see it when they are in the hands of the ladies.

I took the consequences as cheer-fully as I possibly could, and bore the pain with the indurance of my strength. It was a beautifully knit counterpane. Worth at least $5 or $6. It was given by our dear sister

H. T. Headspeth of the above mentioned church, and for which I scarcely can find language to express my appreciation for it. And more especially for having such a liberal-hearted member in my congregation. P. T. KLAAR.

The Presbyterian with a synodical evangelist have begun services in the First Presbyterian church in this city. The revival services at Edenton St. M. E. church were fairly successful so far as can be seen. While we rejoice in the birth of souls into the kingdom of heaven and say amen to all the work that is being done for the Master, we feel sad at the evidence of chunichism displayed by the pastors of this city. They tell us in a public meeting called for the purpose of inviting Moody to Raleigh, that they are opposed to having evangelists come to the city, and then immedately begin services with an evangelist of their particular denomination, and are opposed to a union of God's school and prayer-meetings, and ready for call in case of sickness or death. Would not this, I ask, be better? Take the $7500.00 which it took to build the four, and put it instead of building churches, with poor pastors, poor congregations, and poor church buildings. United they could have one fine church, one able minister, and one good congregation. Now, is not something the matter? Did

God ordain and establish principles which lead to all this and then reward the Master's work? Just think of four men preaching within a few blocks of each other to about 50 or 100 men each, while thousands and millions are without the gospel!

Thousands being spent to put churches in little towns and villages, in which there are already several, and not half enough people to fill them! Is this Christianity, or churchanity? If the salvation of souls is the prime object in establishing churches, then why not put them where more souls can be saved?

Notice the effect of denomination-alism on the publishing interest. In the same territory you see about five church papers, five sets of S. S. papers and quarterlies, and five hard-worked and poorly paid editors. Each publishing house is struggling for its existence, the literature is poorer than it otherwise would be and more expensive. One house would meet the whole demand. The expense would be greatly lessened, the editors would be far better and at the same time cheaper.

The same is true of education. In some states denominationalism have built five or six colleges. All are weak in finance and inferior in schoolarship. Yet half the money in these

Denominationalism.

ple of economy can be seen in the dispensation of grace, for Christ withholds his blessings from those who will not appropriate them. This principle extends to one's time and talents as well as to his money or goods. God's chosen servants have no right to be prodigal of time or talents; for they are not their own, but another's. They have been "bought with a price."

But does denominationalism neces-money? It makes it necessary for a

Albright—Unqual distribution of wealth brings discontentment and retrogradation; so many inventions have made a dependent class, and hence a conflict and a struggle for equal rights: corruption in election; socialism; amalgamation of the two races; oppression by the wealthy resulting in strikes. Peel Conflicts are necessary for development and advancement; rapid increase of Protestant churches and church membership; our people a unit; advantage of inventions; literary advancement; decrease of venal voters. Hurley—Evil brought by immigration; increase of licentious literature; immorality in our government; the great number of liquor dealers in contrast with the number of preachers; danger in Mormonism and in the Roman Catholic church.

At the close of the first round the audience was favored with an instrumental duet by Misses Mamie Elzey and Florence Lassiter. This was well rendered and gave evidence of skilled training.

At the close of the second round, the judges, consisting of Rev. W. W. Staley, Sullik, Va., Rev. W. T. Walker, Greensboro, N. C., and Rev. W. G. Clements, Raleigh, N. C., were conducted by the marshals to a private room for decision. During their absence the audience listened with pleasure to a song given by the Glee Club.

The judges returned and reported that they had been well pleased with the argument on both sides, but the negative speeches were to bear off the laurels. The house was then declared adjourned; but to our surprise, our worthy president arose and announced that a social reception would be allowed for three quarters of an hour. Now, with all due respect to the speakers of the evening, we do believe that this was the most entertaining part of the program, especially for the young people. It was perhaps not so literary, but faces all wrapped with smiles, emphatically hope that all present spent a pleasant evening, and trust that these Annual Debates may continue to grow in interest, and to be of benefit to the college.

For this very pleasant occasion Mr. S. E. Everette of the Ohio was president and Mr. W. P. Lawrence of Philadelphia was secretary. The weather having been favorable during the day, quite a number of friends had assembled, and were present with us to listen to the discussions. The Chair called the house to order, and, in a few rich and appropriate remarks, extended welcome to all present. He specially mentioned how interesting before the dawn of mental contests. All of these men feel an interest in the college and we are always ready to welcome them. The school in a body went to Graham Friday to attend the funeral of Blanch Long, a former student of Elon College. It was indeed a sad occasion, and there many friends were of the people until all men every where shall rise to call him "blessed." There is a source of delight in such contemplation as this. I think men too often try to estimate their life by the great things, the magnificent achievements they can point to. Rite full unto the end. The young as well as the aged are being cut off in our midst, so let us live that we may at all times be ready to meet our God in peace. The second Annual Debate was a triumph and the young soldiers of life is not all measured by great things. Not to all are given ten talents. Again, we frequently measure greatness by the wrong standard. It often takes more true greatness to bow to an exigency than rise to an emergency. Genuine spirituality never rises to greater heights than in moments of simplest obedience and present humility. It does not take a great general to win a great victory every time. But it does take a great general and a noble hero every time to surrender like a man. To perform those deeds that the world will talk about, honor and proclaim, requires little effort and may be performed by him who is selfish, dwarfed and not a man. To perform those deeds of humility, gentleness and kindness that the world makes men more humble, when he washed his disciples feet. Oh for more of that spirit in the world which makes men more humble, devout, sincere and obedient!

At his late residence at "Knockville," Isle of Wight Co., Va., March 10, 1893, after a long illness Bro. Dampsey Bowden, in the 72nd year of his age. Bro. Bowden has for a long while been a consistent member of Antioch Christian church, and a hard working man. He had been twice married. His first wife was Miss Sallie Barrett, who died some twenty years ago, leaving no children. His last wife was Miss Fannie Bab, who, with eight children survives him. Died on the 25th, of Oct. Mrs. J. J. Lenny one of as highly respected ladies as ever lived and died in Lancaster Branch Township. She was beloved by old and young, by rich and poor. She was so kind we cannot express the love and respect we have for her. We feel like we cannot not give her up although she died strong in the faith of Jesus. Oh there is joy in heaven. She was anxious to be called home to meet her friends and relatives, yes she wanted to see the time come to die and that we bow in humble submission to the divine will of him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we will cherish her memory and trust that her sad and untimely death will lead many to the cross and be the means of making us all purer and better. Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to her many friends and relatives and pray that this dispensation of God's providence may be sanctified to their good and that they may realize that she cannot return to them but that they may go to her and that her departure leaves this world poorer, and enriches heaven and brightens our hopes and prospects for the better. Resolved, That we will ever cherish her memory and trust that her sad and untimely death will lead many to the cross and be the means of making us all purer and better.

Resolved, That in his infinite wisdom, God has seen fit to call from the labors of earth our beloved brother Deacon L. U. Hatch in the 46th year of his age, whose sudden death on the 11th of January 1893 has saddened the hearts of his many friends not only in our church but all over the community.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Hatch this church and Sunday school has lost a faithful, earnest and devoted Deacon and co-worker whose place in every way will be hard to fill and whose loss we deeply feel.

And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.

And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: for this hour I did come into this world.

Then Father, glorify thy name. Then the voice came from heaven, saying, Whom thou hast heard, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

[The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered: and others said, An angel spake to him.]

Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes.

And it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?

Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.

And blessed is he, whosoever shall in this world, but also in that which is to come:

THE PULPIT.

The Incarnation of Christ.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth.

For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. Though he were a Son, yet learning obedience by the things which he suffered; And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

I. The Word was made flesh. Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. (Which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy Scriptures,) Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. II. Why was it necessary for Christ to come in the flesh. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by his blood, and hath given to us science, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

Jesus Christ, and hath given to us science, and our bodies washed with pure water. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices which can never take away sins: But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God; From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool.

For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; And having a high priest over the house of God; Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. Leprosy Among The Lao.

One of the most constant drains upon one's pity here is the omnipresent leper. Go where you will about the city, you will be almost sure to see one or more of these miserable unfortunates making his rounds begging. There is practically no quarantine put on the disease, except in the matter of permanent dwelling. Here and there villages are set apart for their use, and all lepers are presumably required to live in these villages. But there is absolute freedom of egress. In fact, it is necessary that they should be allowed to go where they will in search of food and clothing so long as the authorities make no provision for them. In front of my house, less than a stone's throw from the bank, there is a small island, and, except at highest water, some three or four boats full of lepers are always to be seen. They come up from the leper village some distance below, Chieng-Mai, and make this island the basis of their begging operations. Those who have no boats come afoot. It would be hard to say how many are in and about the city every day, but many times I have seen as many as seventy collected outside the gate of some missionary's house, waiting for some charity. Those that thus come are in all stages of the disease. The little nursing sometimes as healthy looking as any babe can be, sometimes already showing signs of blood taint; little boys and girls, some with very attractive faces, some already loathsome; young men and maidens, and the aged, some without eyes, ears, nose, fingers or toes, just a mass of living putrefaction, they come just as long as they can move their suffering bodies. And nobody here thinks of fearing them. So utterly foolhardy are the natives in their contact with lepers, that many sound persons go to live in the leper villages, in constant touch with the diseased, merely to enjoy the immunities from Government impress that are accorded to the inhabitants of these villages. When there is such gross carelessness it is unnecessary to say that there is no attempt made to lessen the dangers of contamination. The barefooted leper with festering feet walks across the bridge, and his track is followed by thousands of other barefooted passers. He takes his change in his mutilated hands and buys food; the money finds its way into everybody's house—the coppers of the realm are leprous coppers. There are hundreds of ways in which the contagion is spread, and the disease attacks new families every year, and the authorities do nothing. It would cost them too much money to seclude, and feed and clothe the hundreds of victims, and the common people have to bear the burden of supporting by alms a pitifully suffering class, who give nothing but disease in return.—Selected

The Utilization of Old Tin Cans.

In the suburbs of great cities an industry has sprung up, having for its object the recovery of the solder used in making and sealing tin cans. In consequence the formerly despised and useless tin can has acquired sufficient commercial value to rescue it from the back lot dumping ground and garbage scow.

Under the present system of street cleaning, New York City's refuse is loaded on scows from docks located at convenient intervals along the river front, and then taken to sea and dumped. These docks have double decks, the upper projecting sufficiently to allow the contents of a cart to fall upon the middle of the scow, and be distributed by the trimmers who keep the vessel on an even keel. The trimmers also select everything of value with the greatest care; rags, fat, bone, metal, paper stock, etc., being stored on the lower deck of the dock. The silver and jewelry form no small item of the contractors' profit, and the total value of a scow load is estimated at an average of two hundred dollars.

The space between the dock platforms is often closed in with odds and ends, and the interior converted into a miserable habitation by the trimmers, men and women, who thus herd together, their supplies being drawn from the dump.

These dumping docks are the principal source of supply for the industry we illustrate, and a wagon load of tin cans can be bought at such places for four or five dollars.

The furnace is an old soap boiler, into which a few sticks are thrown; the bowl is then filled with cans, a quart of kerosene poured over them and ignited.

The heat developed by the oil is not great enough to attack the tin but melts the solder, which flows to the bottom of the bowl. The solder recovered from a load of cans averages forty pounds. After this process is completed the tin plate scrap is sold to make what is called "acid"

Into a large open vat containing waste acid, acid ferric sulphate, sulphuric or hydrochloric acid, the scrap is thrown and allowed to remain until the tin is stripped from the iron underneath; more scrap and metallic iron is added until the solution is neutral. The tin thus dissolved is used as a basis for the preparation of stannates or other tin compounds, and by dyers.

The iron plate is rolled into balls for melting, the ferrous sulphate purified and sold as commercial coppers, and the remaining acid used in repetition of the process.—The Scientific American.

Tommy's Sermon.

It was a rainy day, and the children could not go to church or to Sunday-school. They lived so far away from the church that they could not go unless it was a pleasant day.

"I will tell you what we will do," said Tommy, the oldest; "we will have church by ourselves here at home."

"Who will preach the sermon?" asked Amy, the youngest of the family.

"I will preach the sermon," answered Tommy, "and you and Freddie shall be the choir and the congregation."

"Can I bring my dollie to church?" asked Amy. "Yes she may come," Tommy answered. So Freddie and Amy, with her doll in her arms, sat down on the end of the oak settle in the front hall, and Tommy stood on the lowest step and gave out the hymn and preached the sermon.

First they sang the hymn that all little children love to sing, "I am so glad that our Father in heaven," and then Tommy preached.

"My text is 'God is love,' he began. "God loves us all very much; even the little teenty birds God loves, and he takes care of them, and he wants to have us love him and love each other. If we love God, then we shan't ever quarrel or fuss about things, but we will give up things even if we want them very much indeed; and when mamma wants some one to go to the store for her, we will not say, 'Let somebody else go', but we will just run as fast as we can. Now, my dearly beloved brethren, let's do just what we ought to do this week, and then we will please God, who loves us so much. We will try and not be naughty once, and then He will know that we love Him and are trying to please Him. If we feel like being cross, then we will remember the text I preached about to-day, and we will say 'God is love' over to ourselves, and then that'll help us to be good. Now the choir will sing, 'Jesus loves me,' and then the church will be over for this time." Was not that a very good sermon for a little boy to preach? and will you not remember it, too, and try to practice it? If your hearts are full of love to the dear Saviour, then you will not find it hard to love one another, and to show your love by being unselfish and kind to every one, as Jesus was when he was here upon earth. Sunbeam.

Doing His Utmost.

It recalls an announcement I heard made by a negro preacher in a mississippi town one very hot Sunday night. I had spoken an hour on Christian family government. I spoke a language they understood. The preacher was "got up without regard to expense." His clerical rig—coat, vest, collar—was en regle; his voice had the perfect pulpit tone on which some people dote with peculiar fondness. I give his exact words—no more, no less; manner and tone cannot be reproduced: "Owing to the prevalence of atheism in this community, I will on next Sunday morning deliver a discourse designed to prove the existence of a God, considered from the cosmological standpoint." "My lawd!" exclaimed a fat old mammy with bandana about her head and turky-tail fan in her hand, as in the old regime. The preacher added most solemnly: "And, brethren, I shall do my utmost."—Haygood in Independent.

SPECIAL CALL.

Norfolk Memorial Church.

The following are extracts from the minutes of the American Christian Convention, in session at Marion, Indiana, and from the proceedings of the Executive Board by correspondence, which include all action taken by our representative general bodies:—

7:30 P. M. Oct. 13, 1890.

The Convention was called to order by the President. Singing. Prayer by Mrs. C. D. Ellis. The minutes were read and approved.

Voted to take from the table the report of the committee on missions. Under the subject of "Home Work" the first and second items on call were read, referring to the union of the North and South, the continuance of Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., as General Evangelist, and the establishment of a memorial church at Norfolk, Virginia. These items were extensively debated. Rev. E. A. DeVore, A. M., offered the following, as a substitute for items 1 and 2 of the home work part of the report:

Substitute for Recommendations 1 and 2.

That we approve the effort to organize a memorial church at Norfolk, Virginia, under the direction of the Eastern Virginia Conference, with Rev. C. J. Jones as the present minister, and that the Mission Board be requested to aid this work for this fiscal year by an appropriation not to exceed $800.

The substitute of Rev. E. A. DeVore was adopted. Items 3 and 4 were adopted. For the fifth item of the report, of a "cautionary" nature, Rev. J. B. Weston offered the following as a substitute, which was adopted:

"5. That we approve the rules adopted by the Mission Board for their guidance in appropriations; and advise the continuance of similar caution."

The item of the report concerning the establishment of a cottage at the World's Fair ground in 1893 was postponed indefinitely. The amendment of Rev. P. L. Ryker was adopted as follows:

We recommend that the Mission Department take steps, as soon as practicable, to establish a Christian church in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana.

The whole report was then adopted as a whole, as amended, as follows:

Your Committee on Missions beg leave to report as follows:

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

1st. Recognizing the good and acceptable work done by our foreign missionaries, now in the field, we recommend that earnest efforts be made by our churches and conferences to give them liberal support.

2d. We most heartily commend the work of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions to the brotherhood, and urge a hearty co-operation with them in their earnest and successful efforts.

3d. We would urge the necessity of a more liberal contribution from the churches, that the present force in the foreign mission field may be well sustained.

HOME WORK.

1st. That we approve the effort to organize a memorial church in Norfolk, Virginia, under the direction of the Eastern Virginia Conference, with Rev. C. J. Jones as present minister, and that the Mission Board be requested to aid this work, for this fiscal year, by an appropriation not to exceed $800.

2d. That the brotherhood at large be requested to aid in the erection of a memorial temple at that place, &c.

The foregoing was the action of the American Christian Convention at Marion, Ind. About a year ago the Secretary of the convention called the attention of the brotherhood to the fact that the Convention had endorsed the work at Norfolk. From that time the Secretary has frequently published the Norfolk church as an "approved object of benevolence." It has been kept regularly before the public; but no "call" has been issued for it, as for education, home missions, the S. S. Department, foreign missions and the Convention, naming a specific day on which a contribution is asked. But this year the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, which, prior to the "union" at Marion, Indiana, had in an official manner regarded the southern brethren as a distinct and separate body from the northern, brought the following memorial, through the President of the American Christian Convention, Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., J. L. D., before the Executive Board:

"Resolution adopted by the E. Va. Christian Conference, Nov. 4th, 1892.

"Resolved, that the President of this conference be requested to memorialize the Executive Board of the American Christian Convention through the President, asking its recognition of the call of this conference to the Christian churches of Canada and America for a special collection in each church, at such time as the Secretary of the A. C. C. shall think best, to aid in the erection of the memorial Christian church building in Norfolk, Va., and that he reiterate the call through the Herald of Gospel Liberty and CHRISTIAN SUN, and kindly urge the unanimous action of all our churches."

Following the record of this memorial in the minutes of the Executive Board of transactions by correspondence, occurs this passage:

"The subject was laid before the Executive Board by direction of President D. A. Long: and all the members finally approved the taking of a special collection at a time to be appointed by the Secretary of the Convention. The Secretary named the first Sunday in May."

On the that day, therefore, we request all our churches and missionary societies to make a contribution for the building of the Norfolk Memorial church at Norfolk, Virginia. Send the money directly to J. J. Summerbell, the Secretary of the Convention, mentioning your church, pastor, clerk and Conference: that we may know what parts of the country have contributed. There is no other way to arrive at this knowledge.

Read the other articles on this subject next week.

We speak to missionary societies: for this is a missionary enterprise. The Marion convention adopted the matter in the report of the committee on missions: and the missionary board has rendered help to Norfolk as a missionary enterprise.

Remember the date the first Sunday in May.

J. J. SUMMERBELL,
Secretary A. C. C.

Moral Honesty in the Ministry.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away, concerning faith have made shipwreck. Tim. 1:19.

The most important and responsible position in all the relations and business of life is that of the minister of the cross of Christ. It involves the highest and most far reaching of all questions connected with the soul of man and its destiny in time and eternity. The minister of Christ is dealing with eternal destinies, and affecting the minds of men for all time. He is responsible to God for what and how he preaches. Paul realized this fact in the fulness of its meaning. Hence he said to Timothy, "This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare; holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck."

The minister's business is to preach "the glorious gospel of Christ," and through it lead sinners to him to be saved. This is his work, and he must be honest in it. He must be honest with men and God, and with himself. He must not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Fidelity to God requires a faithful presentation of divine truth. At the present time there are powerful influences brought to bear upon the mind of the minister to prevent him from preaching the whole truth on the subject of sin and its punishment. It is very unpopular to preach the unvarnished truth about sin. There is a false philosophy that has obtained a very wide influence, and it has reached the pulpit. It teaches us that sin is no very great evil; that it is comparatively a harmless disease, and will work out man's ultimate good. There are communities where this false philosophy has gained such an influence that it requires strong moral courage to preach the truth on this question. There are here and there ministers who have not the strength of purpose to do it. They cannot face the popular feeling on this question, and tell the people that sin is damning. This is moral cowardice. When a man is called of God to the work of the ministry he is to preach the word of God just as we have it in the Bible. This is the commission God gives him, and he must be honest with him. He must faithfully declare the sinfulness of sin, and the purpose of God to punish it. "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness." God's commission to his minister reads: "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word of my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand, yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul." When the minister fails to give this solemn warning from fear of personal loss he disobeys God, and is dishonest with his fellow men. To save himself he leaves them to perish unwarned of their danger. Every principle of manliness and honesty demands that he lift up his warning voice exhorting them to flee from the wrath to come. The spiritual welfare of the people is committed to him, and he must watch for their safety, preach for their edification, and pray for their eternal well being. When he succumbs to popular feeling, and fails to give them warning, the only honest and manly thing for him to do is either to repent, seek forgiveness, and commence his great work anew, or step down and out of the pulpit; for he has no business there. He is not working for the salvation of souls, but for self. A western minister visiting New York, preached in one of the uptown churches on Sunday. Just before the service began the pastor whispered to the stranger: "Don't say anything on temperance today, for one of my wealthiest members is a wholesale liquor-dealer, and he is in the front seat this morning." Soon the pastor made another request: "Please have nothing to say about Sabbath desecration, for one of the steam-boat captains is here to-day, who generally runs his boat on Sunday." The stranger said: "What will I be safe preaching about?" The pastor replied: "Bang away at the Jews for I don't see any in the audience." This story may not be true, but it certainly illustrates a truth: many preachers are afraid to preach at the evils they see around them.

In the pulpit the minister should know no king but Christ, and no motive but the salvation of souls. He should hide himself behind the cross. Paul in speaking of Christ, "the hope of glory," says: "Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." Pulpit power comes from implicit faith in God's word, and holy boldness in proclaiming it. In 1670, Bowdalone, the founder of genuine pulpit eloquence in France, preached before his sovereign. Having described a sinner of the first magnitude, he turned to Louis XIV, and in a voice of thunder he cried: "Thou art the man!" The effort on all was electrical. After the sermon the preacher went and fell at the feet of the king, saying: "Sir, behold one of the most devoted of your servants. Punish him not because in the pulpit he owns no other master but the King of kings." He was honest with his God, and his own convictions of truth and duty.

No man should seek to enter the ministry of a church unless he believes and heartily accepts its system of faith and government. This would be dishonest with God and the church, and would bring the displeasure of heaven upon him. He would be dishonest with himself, and the consciousness of this fact would rob him of all spiritual power in the pulpit. He would be like Samson shorn of his locks, helpless in the hands of his spiritual enemies. He could not look to God for the divine unction, for he is conscious that he deserves his displeasure; and he could have no confidence in himself. There may be learning, eloquence, and outer display; but the quickening power of the Holy Spirit is not there, and it is only "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Moral honesty should keep a man out of the pulpit of a church whose creed he cannot accept; and for a man to secure admission into such a pulpit and then publicly boast that he never read the confession of faith confesses the sin of moral dishonesty. If angels are capable of weeping they would shed tears of unutterable sorrow over such a scene.

It is only through moral honesty of desire and purpose that a man can get near to God, and close communion with him spiritualizes his nature, opens his spiritual eyes, and enables him to see and understand spiritual things as he never did or could before. One of Rev. Bromwell's hearers said to another, "How is it that Mr. Bromwell always has something new to tell us when he preaches?" The other answered, "Why you see brother Bromwell lives so near the gates of heaven that he hears a great many things that we don't get near enough to hear any thing about." There is a profound truth in this remark in that it should lift every minister above all selfish ambition, and lead him to seek the closest possible communion with Christ. This will bring the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and make the minister a flame of fire." Cotton Mather says of John Eliot, the apostle to the Indians, when he began to preach in the colonies in 1632,

"When he preached, he spoke as many thunderbolts as words. He would sound the trumpet of God against all vice with a most penetrating liveliness, and make his pulpit another Mount Sinai."

When a man enters the ministry of a church, accepts its confession of faith, covenants with it to preach this system of doctrine, he is morally bound to live and work loyal to the vows he has taken upon him. As an honest man he can do nothing else, and if in the study of the Bible he is led to change his views of Christian doctrine, and is no longer in harmony with his church, the only honorable course for him is to quietly withdraw from it. It is wrong for him to remain in it and cause strife and division. His pride of opinion, and love of controversy, may make it an enjoyable thing for him to remain in the church and carry on a theological warfare; but this is not the spirit of Christ, and it is ruinous to his cause. Every minister should seek the peace of Zion, and the salvation of sinners above every thing else. He should only be ambitious for the glory of God as revealed in the salvation of souls.

One interesting incident was told by a lady who had been much impressed by the character of the last sermon preached by Dr. Brooks as rector of Trinity. This sermon was entirely free from the reminiscent personal quality which might almost have been looked for at such a time, and was only an earnest appeal for renewed consecration of life. She asked him, on meeting him a few days later, where she could find a full report of that sermon. He replied that he could not tell her; possibly in the Boston Journal; but he never read any reports of his sermons. "Then," she continued, "he, looking down into my face, said thoughtfully, 'I do my work, the work of the Master, as best I can, and care little what is said of it.'"

There is another fact that should have weight in the consideration of moral honesty in the ministry, and that is the question of salary. When a church employs a minister, and agrees to pay him a certain salary, he obligates himself to preach the gospel as it is interpreted by the creed of that church; and when he changes his views of doctrine, and preaches a different system of theology he has no longer any moral right to his salary. This is especially true of ministers who are employed as teachers in theological schools, and to hold on and claim their salary after they cease to teach the doctrine of the church which employed them is dishonest. The only honest course is to resign their professorship, and step out. They owe this to themselves, to the church, and to God. An honest man is the noblest work of God, and of all places in life a man should be honest in the pulpit.

The Right of Women to Preach

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them," "for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7:12.

In all questions of right and wrong the church, i. e., the Lord's professed people, must bow to an interpretation of the Law and the Gospel which is strictly in harmony with Christ's own unquestioned declaration of Gospel Rights. The Bible is a large book, but Christ was able to put it all into a few words. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy will, and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These cover all as to duty, and "whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," marks the boundaries of the privileges of his people, and only an old heathen, that Christendom has not yet uprooted would dare so twist, distract and pervert Scripture as to say women are under the prohibition of the law, as to its commands, and not equally entitled to the privileges of that same law. Such reasoning ought to put a heathen to shame, much less so called intelligent Christian men. No one disputes but the children, of Israel were from first to last rising and falling—being overcome by heathen ideas and vice, seconded by their own lusts, and God dealt with them sharply, and by so doing always kept a part of Israel that was struggling to keep free from carnality and idol worship, but it is plain to any one, Israel took on more or less coloring from her heathen surroundings. And I am ashamed of Christendom, and ashamed for it, that with her increased light, her greater opportunities, she is quite as guilty today, as was Israel then.

The conceit of men has only been equaled by their lust and tyranny, else they had not for centuries ignored the principles of the Golden Rule. This law applies to women as much as to men. It grants to women all it grants to men. It denies them what it denies men. No more, no less. By a law of language, the masculine gender is used often for the race, but it refers to both men and women. No one thinks of claiming that the ten commandments are not as much to women, as to men. Yet, should women employ the ignorant and bigoted and perverting method of interpreting Scripture, they could triumphantly say, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife" hence the law was given to men and the decalogue is not at all obligatory on women. Then there could be no law for them and they could do anything they please. Women have the same right to so interpret the decalogue, that men have to interpret Paul, in an equally unwarrantable manner.

Again, Christ said to men "whosoever looketh on a woman" and with equal propriety and reason could women again say in neither the Law nor the Gospel is there any law of purity for women. To their honor be it said women have scorned the license of men, and they have never distorted Scripture to sanctions their license or uphold them in a tyranny so bare, so unwarrantable that every true woman, is filled with the utmost scorn for such offenders. It is neither scholarship nor real Christianity that foisted upon a large part of Christendom, this shocking, degrading and false interpretation of the Bible. It is not the Bible, that is responsible for this thing that is an insult to common decency, common honesty, and common intelligence but it is the theology of men. The record of men is not such, that they should have the effrontery to set themselves up as the infallible interpreters of the Bible. The Bible must be taken as a whole, and men have been no more divinely appointed to interpret the Law, for women, than have women for men. The Bible taken as a whole, and interpreted in harmony with its most comprehensive law, must be the rule. Wresting the Scriptures is a sin, and God have mercy on the thousands who have done this. When men could have the truth, and shut their eyes to it, and lean toward prejudice and tradition. Wherein do all such fail to enact again the role of the Pharisee? They prefer darkness rather than light. That production is no more of God than the drunkard, God made the man, but man made the drunkard, and so God has given us His law, but man has made the interpretation, and he has made it by the chopping up process mainly, until modern intelligence, orders him out of its presence, and spurs him for presenting such an ugly thing as the Word of God. The day has gone by for forming opinions from detailed parts and passages of Scripture. Such base and ignorant methods have multiplied the ranks of infidels, and and as most of these men would shrink from being an infidel their case is at a par with that of the drunkard maker. No one is fit to preach the Gospel, who does not pledge himself to the law of honest interpretation, which is, that no doctrine can be admitted as a part of the Gospel, which is not in harmony with the general tenor of it all. Such interpretation is sectarianism. And bigotry foisted upon the world has caused millions to be butchered and burned and blood to flow like rivers, yet the religion of Christ calls for no man's slaughter or cremation.

Christ appointed no man, no set of men, to formulate a creed or to declare a law not in the gospel, but simply a call to all his followers, to "go and preach the gospel to every creature." It was not a male gospel, to be preached to males, but an all inclusive gospel, for all, to all, and by all whom the Spirit called.

But let us look backward, before looking further forward.

That we may have a more complete view, let us proceed from the law to the gospel. In Gen. 1:26, we read, "let them have dominion."

But say the objectors, woman lost that equality when she sinned? Did she, indeed! Such an interpretation does not harmonize with the Golden Rule.

While if it be true that "Adam was not deceived" 1 Tim. 2:13, then Adam's sin was incomparably greater than Eve's, for sin must be the known and wilful transgression of the law. There is a spot for the piecemeal interpreters to mire. Again, Gen. 3:13-19 is a consequence, not a condition that must be endured as a religious duty, otherwise it were a grievous sin for man to presume to uproot the thorns and thistles.

Man does fight these, he gets rid of them. Oh, impious man, how dare you, when God decrees, such, shall the earth bring forth?

But unto the woman he said, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow shall thou bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Consequences again, of sin, not his right, but he, because of sin becomes so changed, that he usurps the rights of the woman, and soon is far in advance of her in crime, sin and lust, and has kept a wonderful distance ahead of her ever since. No doubt this demonstrates both his superiority and his greater strength. For proof study your Bible, the history of all nations and particularly the prison records of the United States.

Supposing the sun, to have been the objective point the fall in comparison would be for Eve, like falling from Mercury, while that of superior man, like that of falling from Neptune. "Because thou hast done this," yes, as a consequence, not as the wish of God or his law, else it were sin to alleviate the suffering of motherhood, as to uproot the thorns and thistles.

Modern medical science has demonstrated, that, cursed us women are by a vitiated heredity, through ages of sin, and debauchery and carnality of men, that, even now, proper marriages, right living, right dressing makes motherhood easy and robs it of all its horrors. It is a wonder, men do not say to their wives, bear these horrors, it is God's will, but there are few men so inhuman as not to wish to see this suffering mitigated—and the knowledge of today enables the obedient women to bear her children in joy.

As men uprooted the thorns and thistles, and as even many Christian men do not scruple to earn their livelihood in some other way than by tilling the ground, as much less do all eat bread in the sweat of their face; so women, have the same right to get rid of the pains and sorrows of maternity, and to strive to get back to her equality of dominion, which God never took from her, but which man in his sin and sensuality wrested from her, as a consequence of sin. Sin was the cause, lust and tyranny, the effect.

We go through the Old Testament with a glance at Miriam, who was smitten not because she was a woman, but as any one was, who presumed to overstep the boundary God marked out for him or her. God's estimate of Miriam, as well as that of Moses and the people, is shown in the fact, that the cloud was not lifted from the camp, until she was cleansed from her leprosy.

"Seven centuries later, God speaking by Micah 6:4, names her as one of those by whom he had brought this people out of Egypt."

Nowhere in the Law is there a hint of woman's subjection or her inferiority.

During the period of the Judges, Israel had her greatest liberty in the selection of leaders. Then Deborah, judged Israel, precisely, as did Gideon and Ehud. Judges 4:4 makes plain that she was not called for a special emergency as those who wrest the Scriptures try to make out, as she judged Israel both before and after that war; no hint is given that her sex was any obstacle to her acting as judge.

True, false prophetesses are denounced, but so are false prophets, and the denunciation is not at all a matter of sex.

Women, in early times among God's people had her rights respected, and a freedom, that only the spread of heathen vice and tyranny robbed them of.

Ps. 78:11, certainly shows that either women then did speak and work in great numbers, or that they were to; and the Proverbs seem to warrant that they already had that freedom to engage in what they pleased.

In Ps. we read, "the Lord gave the word, the women that published the tidings are a great host," and thus are they praised therefore and not for silence.

While the 30th chapter of Proverbs from first to last shows the power and glory and liberty of woman over a thousand years B. C. Passing the honor given the mother, for the prophecy she taught her son, we glean from it, that the wife was free to engage in business and entitled "to the fruit of her hands," a fact England, America, would do well to consider and wipe off the infamous stain of heathenish property laws from their statute books.

Perhaps, men have in this matter done in the United States as they would like to be done by. I ask the women to look and see. Again, "She considereth a field and buyeth it." "She maketh fine linen and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant."

She certainly did get out from the chimney corner. Yet "Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." "Give her of the fruit of her hands"

Evidently the men among the Lord's faithful followers, failed to teach the women of their age that women were either the subjects or the inferiors of men.

While Joel, 800 B. C., shows the work of women under the outpouring of the Spirit predicted as an Old Testament expectation, Joel 2:28, "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh." Not male flesh alone, but "upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit." All of which is in harmony with Paul's, there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

Turning to the Gospel you are reminded that Christianity or the religion of Christ, is "not of Paul, nor of Apollos, nor of Cephas. Christ is not divided. nor was Paul crucified for you." The belittling of Christ, and the magnifying of Paul, ought to brand every Christian with shame and consign them to sack cloth and ashes until like Miriam, they are cleansed from this sin. Open your mouths, shut your eyes, brace yourselves, for I must deal out Allopathy doses of Homeopathic medicine, that is, you must take copious doses of your own kind of scripture interpretation. Grimaces, groanings and rivings will be of no avail. Now for the Pauline doses, Paul, piece meal, isolated, dissected, texts, without regard to time, place, condition or what precedes or follows, 1 Cor. 3:11, "For other foundation can no man lay," can woman? If not, why not? Paul does not say she cannot. 13 V. "Every man's work shall be made manifest," and not woman's? It does not say it shall be in her care, 17 V. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy," but woman is not mentioned, is she safe in defiling the temple of God? Chapt. 5:11. "If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one, no not to eat," but if a woman be any or all of these, is it all right? Or as woman is not mentioned she may claim such sin is impossible for her sex. So of course when Paul says in 1 Cor. 14:24. "But if all prophesy," it means only men. Does it? In the 34th verse, we read. "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience as also saith the law." But according to Paul, Christ is more than Paul, hence we must consult Christ before going any further, Christ, says, "whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father, which is in heaven." All the denominations that permit their women to discharge their Christian duty never allow the woman to forget that and the following passage. Again, 35 V. says, "and if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." In the first place, all women do not have husbands, and less and less will have, until men accept the Gospel standard of a "white life for two," but were they willing to continue to give virtue for vice, there are not enough men to go around; and it is a problem for these wonderful interpreters to solve as to what shall be done with and for the women without husbands to ask at home? Poor things, must they remain fools, and who is to blame, that they have no husbands to ask at home. Can any unbiased person doubt, that did not refer to disorder in the church, and interruption of worship, and not at all to the right of woman to speak in the church or preach? If not then they must not sing; speak, or teach, or pray. Who that knows any thing of dissolute Corinth, of her customs, that all decent women, were kept housed, while the women of vice were allowed to do any thing but marry, and ming'ed freely with the Corinthian men in their public life and assemblies; is made to grasp the fact that these directions were made necessary, lest after professing Christ, they bring reproach upon the church, by doing that which in that country at once branded a woman as one belonging to the women of vice, for any honest and thorough scholar will tell you the first converts among the heathen women, were of necessity from this class of women. Then as to day, those men would as soon admitted, bears, panthers and lions among their wives and daughters, the purely respectable women, as Paul or any other apostle. Among the heathen, only the women who were to live an immoral life, "only the harlots, had any chance for intellectual cultivation," or to go about. Remember the free women, were the courtezans, and aside from marrying they could do any thing they pleased. The citizen women, housed, watched, restricted, had to be mothers and wives, only, but these other women were the companions of the men of Corinth, Ephesus and the principal cities of the Greek civilization of that period. Corinth was recognized even among the heathen nations as the city pre eminent for its impurity. "In the Temple of Aphrodite there were above one thousand of these Heptairai as Hieroduli, who are described as the ruin of foreigners." Corinth was the most licentious city of all Greece.

Whoever will post themselves on the conditions of society Paul addressed will never again need be told that such women once converted would need to be extremely careful in their public behavior not to bring reproach on the name of Christ. Only the wilfully blind can fail to see that what was proper for Hebrew women was not, and could not be proper until Christianity had so permeated those cities as to enable its people to grant, that all are free in Christ, and hence no mark of impurity for women to speak in public or in mixed assembly.

The Roman women occupied a much higher position, and Paul, sends no such communication to them as to the Corinthians. The Roman women would gather with the men, and hear the Gospel preached—But the women who heard it at Corinth, Athens and Ephesus were not the virtuous women of the homes, but were of the Hetairai. "The first part of the eleventh chapter of 1 Cor. cannot be properly understood without some faint notions of the habits and dress and manners of those Greek courtezans." Paul and Timothy undertook a tremendous work, not alone that of saving souls, but of transforming "the position of womanhood in those cities from its obscurity and immodesty into the piety purity and freedom of Hebrew womanhood. Paul to Timothy 2:11-12, "Let the women learn in silence all subjection, "But I," Paul, not God, not Christ—"suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." Paul is simply telling how he manages his churches, under whatever the difficulties were that confronted them in their work in trying to evangelize the heathen. Nothing Paul says, can be interpreted to conflict with Christ and all must agree with his own "ye are all one in Christ Jesus" "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in child bearing." Horrors! was God's Word even more dishonored than by such interpretations as the world is compelled to witness? What becomes of the millions of women who are never married and never mothers? Are they to turn prostitutes for a time that their souls may escape hell by bearing illegitimate children? Do any of you remember in what especial detestation God holds the bastard? "I will therefore that the younger women marry" 1 Tim. 5:14, but how can they. all obey when there are not as many young men even as young women, and it is Paul who speaks with, his personal I, but not with his, thus saith the Lord. To return to the 3 chapter and according to this kind of interpretation, which is of the devil, allowed by prejudice and ignorance, then all men in the church of Christ, except the bishops and the deacons may be polygamists. Have as many wives as they please. Of only such is it declared by Paul, that they must be limited to one wife.

Again, says Paul in Eph 5:24. "Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their husbands in every thing." Then the wife must, lie, steal, murder, sell her own body to, lust, all of which husbands have been known to command and all of which is their right to demand if the old interpretation is to stand, but as the old theology has been exploded by increased knowledge so must the old interpretation—so far as false to both God and Christ, go to the wall with it. Such interpretation, sent the rich man to hell, compels preachers to drink a little wine, compels communism in property, literal foot washing promiscuous kissing or Christian salutation, and celibacy, which means the extinction of the race.

Shame and oblivion overtake such teaching, and conversion such teachers, I pray, and may the man-made theology be destroyed by the Gospel of Christ.

That women should be silenced by such false interpretation, kept from preaching the gospel, when Christ's commission is to all, for all, when Paul knows no sex in the law, is simply a colossal monument of the bigotry and usurpation of man; showing how deeply he is yet imbued with the notions of heathendom.

"Whatsoever ye would," is the law. Let men face this. Let them be relegated to seclusion, drudgery, vice, or idleness, and be made to be what they in their wicked assumption have compelled women to be Try your medicine on yourselves, brethren, besides, note, if it is not beyond the obtuseness of the average male brain, that, God shows men, their baseness and tyranny, in choosing the virgin (man is left out) to be the mother of the Christ.

Fancy Omnipotence choosing weakness, inferiority and subordination, for the mother of our Lord. Paul recognized that Christ preached purity for men, and equal rights for women, hence his all inclusive text. Paul, had not a few women helpers, and there is no doubt some of them were preachers. There were such of necessity. Only female preachers could have been admitted to the women. Paul's attitude toward woman, is found in the last chapter of Romans and the 28th verse of the third chapter of Galatians.

The customs of heathen nations made women preachers a necessity. Read up, get the truth as it is in the Bible, and cease clinging to the fabrications of men. Most of our people loath a creed, but certainly, such interpretation of the Bible is a greater evil than a creed. Read, read, until you know the Bible sufficiently in spirit, to know, that "where the Golden Rule is true the subordination of woman is a lie."

Therefore she has a right to preach the gospel, to be ordained, or do any work God has given her the brains and ability to do.

The rule that, "what is not authorized is prohibited" will not stand, for if applied to women, it must be applied to man and to all the work of the modern church.

When the meddling Pharisees came to Christ he met them with, "but from the beginning it was not so," and the Golden Rule is in harmony with the beginning, when both had dominion, when there was equality. Now if Christ goes to the beginning to correct the divorce curse, and to teach the true law of marriage, that shows us that woman's rights and privileges, spiritual, ecclesiastical, civil, and social, are also to be based upon the condition in the beginning; and Christ's "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," is the brief but all sufficient summing up of the gospel.

ALICE A. DRAPER.

Amusements.

Different days demand different testimony, and every watchman who would be faithful, in his Master's service, has need to note the signs of the times, and emphasize his witness accordingly. Of the testimony required in reference to the mission amusements, there can be little doubt.

It has become an evil so prominent that the most short-sighted of men cannot fail to perceive it.

And as years roll on, it gains new ground, and now, look which way you will, you will find its presence.

If you doubt my word you have only to take up the SUN, and religious periodicals; daily newspapers, or to attend to the announcements on the Sabbath day, and you will have an abundance of proof that scarcely is there any difference between church, chapel, and mission hall in this respect. And if you will be an honest judge, you are compelled to conclude that "amusements" are ousting "consecrated cheerful giving" to God's cause, and in some cases, the preaching of the gospel.

If the pastors of churches will ask their congregations how are we going to raise money to pay our conference assessment, and Sabbath school funds, the answer will soon be heard, not, let us go deep down into our pockets and give of our possessions, but, "let us have a supper, and one half will be clear profit;" "let us have a concert and a few comic songs and charge 25 cents." A number of volunteers will be ready to amuse.

These things are becoming as much a recognized part of church life as the prayer-meeting and soon will be looked upon as binding upon the church, as though God's will had approved of them.

Oh! that God will raise up some man gifted with voice, and power to pen words that shall echo in every church, and cause this grinning Dagon to fall from its base, and bite the dust.

Since the days of the Puritans the church has been toning down its testimony against evil.

Our forefathers looked with suspicion on every thing wordly.

Their children though questioning the right of these new movements which were brought into the church began to wink at them. Their grandchildren approved of them with a smile, today we recognize them as a necessary part of our church life, and if we go much further, the church will become a "play house," and the Sunday school a "restaurant" with fried oysters, ice cream, cake and Lemonade on the Menu, and the preacher's study, if near the church, will be a smoke room.

I contend the church has no right to use the world in its holy exercises.

It has been said "fight the devil with fire," there is a danger that in so doing we may be burned ourselves. I know many will differ from me, when I give reasons for my belief. Others may conclude that mists obscure my vision.

This may be true, yet my conclusions give me courage to set forth my convictions, and in the face of all, I say, that as far as possible, I set my face against these modern evils.

Never will I countenance the changing of the rough old Cross of Calvary, for a dress or a costume with the idea that I am doing it for the purpose of elevating a fellow sinner.

And far better for the students of the colleges, studying for the ministry to return to their old secular callings if they are not prepared to favor the building up the churches by one means, the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation.

If as a result of preaching this truth the salary decreases, preach it still. It will not be for long. For I have never yet found a church, and I challenge others to find one, where the members are resolved to do all by the aid of God, that has been unable to pay all its dues.

Of course they must like the early disciples give up all to God and count not anything their own. If we sing: "Were the whole realms of nature mine, That were a present far too small."

And then put a cent into the basket it is not likely that we shall realize our ideal.

I contend that we do not find a single command in the Bible to provide amusement for the people.

I cannot find a single word in which Christ has given us the permission to preach his word on the Sabbath, and then have a drama on the Monday. He never even hints at it. He does say "Go ye into the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

He does tell them not to be mindful as to the necessaries of life. But never do I find Him saying. If they do not clear your expenses go and catch a few fish and have a jolly time and with the proceeds pay yourself, and the balance pay to the treasury.

"He gave some apostles, some pastors and teachers, etc." But where do the public entertainers come in? The very silence of the Holy Spirit in this matter is His eloquence.

Why were the martyrs slain? Because they amused? No! but because they refused to.

Christ does not authorize these additions; The Holy Spirit has made no provision for it; and God has given no promise that they shall be a blessing.

"My word shall not return unto me void," has been declared but no sweet promise is given as a stimulus in the wearying task of amusing others.

And that which claims to be good, as an addition to Christ's requirements must remain doubtful, and if doubtful, not to be permitted. "Satan is oft transformed into an angel of light."

It is against the teaching and life of Christ and His Apostles

Our Savior demanded unworldliness;

as the characteristic of his disciples.

"Ye are the salt of the earth" not a bit of candy, nor a lump of delight, something that the world will not swallow with a smile, but rather spit out, something to make men weep rather than smile.

And when many turned away because of the searching nature of his preaching. I do not find Him attempting to increase His small congregation by saying, "John and Peter we must keep our people together somehow. Run after them and tell them that Monday we are going to have something short and sweet. Tell them they are sure to enjoy it, and have a happy hour. Be quick Peter we must get them somehow. We shall have a tableau of angels with white wings and a dialogue with satan in it with black wings. We are going to have a vision of fair women. A moving wax work and all the fun we can get. All for 10 cents. And ice cream and cake as refreshment. If we cannot get them in our midst with the gospel we will with nonsense." Not a bit of it. He said indeed to those who remained, "will ye also go away?"

One method—they preached;

One theme—the cross;

Their power—the hand of God;

Result—many believed.

These men turned the world upside down, but today the world is turning the church upside down. The modern way of raising money for church expenses is leading men away from the spirit which led the early disciples to sell their possessions for the good of Christ's cause.

It has created this spirit. "I will give where I can see a chance of getting the value for my money." It has nearly destroyed the spirit of self denial, and the cheerful giving which are pleasant in the sight of God.

This cannot be right, for everything which leads men to become selfish is not blessed of God.

I say selfish for the following reason:—A man will go to an ice cream social and yet ask him for 10 cents toward the church funds, and it is with difficulty that you persuade him to give it to you, give him something to eat for his money and you may get 25 cents. Now again, the amusements used and preached in our churches have not only failed to bring in the unsaved, but have made young converts indifferent. Were they a success, it would be none the less wrong. Success belongs to God; faithfulness to His instruction, but it is not.

Bring forth the converts made and won by amusement.

Let the drunkard and harlots to whom a dramatic entertainment has been God's first link in the chain of their conversion stand forth. Let those who rejoice in happy homes through these things stand forth, and be not backward to speak their praise. Let those who imagine Paul's way of working to be a mistake stand out and prove his blunder, when he said "I am determined not to know any of you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Their failure to do so is on a par with their folly. And the failure to bring forth converts proves it to be a hideous sin.

But on the other hand. The opposite result is not far away. How many have become indifferent, cold, and at last have gone into the world. Many have testified that the beginning of their fall was the part that they had taken in the pleasures of the concert room which had for its object raising funds for God's cause. The church amusements are the devil's halfway house to the world. Its mission is blasting her service for her King.

And it will be no wonder if in a short time the Holy Spirit departs, "for what concord hath Christ with Belial, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" The cry to day is "come out" cast down the altars and groves of the world. Trample upon Saul's arms. Grasp the sacred Book of God. Shun the applause of a delighted audience and listen for the sobs of a converted one. Give up trying to please men who have but a thin partition between their souls and hell.

Brethren let the church meet the world behind the cross and like her Lord she shall overcome.

Salem Chapel.

The work at this point seems to be moving on smoothly now. Last Sunday was our regular monthly appointment there. The day was fine, the congregation good and attentive, and the spirit of worship seemed to pervade the entire congregation. Just before the opening of the services a bright little boy stepped up into the pulpit with a basket and handed the pastor a note. The basket contained a communion set which the note instructed the pastor to present to the church in behalf of Mrs. E. Fulp. Of course the pastor complied. Both surprise and pleasure were experienced by the congregation. Such evidences of esteem mark the brightest experiences in a pastor's life.

At night I preached to a good congregation in Walnut Cove.

Alabama Letter.

Yesterday (the first Sunday in April) Was my appointment at Pleasant Grove church, we were greeted by a large congregation, and one that gave good attention to the word. I trust that much good was done in God's name. I am expecting great things this year, at this church. I believe prosperity is just ahead, and if we are faithful we will win the prize.

Rev. H. W. Elder and myself are going to exchange appointments through the month of April, beginning next Sunday.

Next Friday night the closing exercises of Prof. A. P. Fuquay's school will take place at New Hope, this closes the first term of the school, and very successful term it has been. Bro. Fuquay has greatly endeared himself to our people he has proved himself a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed," he has discharged his duty faithfully, and those who have attended his school are the ones that are benefitted. Bro. F. has our best wishes, our good will, and our prayers. Brethren let us unite to make the Summer Term of the school the most prosperous of all.

Our District Meeting will convene the fifth Sunday, we hope we will have a full attendance, we reasonably expect the Venerable Dr. Jubilee Smith, to be with us then, let every body come.

We learn that Rev. Thos. H. Elder is very sick; let the prayers of God's people go up in his behalf.

We are indeed sorry to know that Bro. D. F. Jones has resigned the mission work, but may God bless him in his efforts among other people, the world is full of surprises. Indeed I who would have thought of his leaving the Christian church. Let us as a church not falter by the way side. Brethren we have no time to waste, for the King's business requires haste. I fully believe that when one falls out of ranks the Lord will place one hundred more there so the fort will be held, Christ's cause will triumph only let us be toiling in the vineyard till the master comes. As for me, I prefer to serve Him, I also prefer the Christian church, I want to advocate her principles while I live, yes, I want the WORLD to know my position.

"I love thy church O God,
Her walls before Thee stand
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
And graven on Thy hand.

May God bless the SUN, its readers, the editor, the mission cause, the educational cause, and every thing that tends to elevate man.

Yours till the warfare is over,

Windsor, Va.

Marriages:—About the last of February 1893 in Isle of Wight, Va., at residence of Deacon Jos H English, his first daughter Miss Indiana V., and Mr. Geo. W. Carr, were united in the holy bonds. May their future be bright and happy.

At Central Hill Baptist church 23rd of March, 1893, Mr. Junius R. Hart and Miss Maggie L. Spivey were married.

Our regular quarterly and communion service at Isle of Wight Court House fourth Saturday and Sunday in March was well attended, and we believe was spent in waiting upon the Lord. Saturday night before I visited the pleasant and entertaining family of Bro. J. C. Thords. It always gives me pleasure to visit this family. They are indeed faithful and earnest church workers. May the Lord bless them largely.

The editor of the SUN visited Windsor some weeks ago, and preached for us a very good sermon. He seemed to be encouraged in his work. That is the right way to be. Keep right on working and be sure to keep to the front. You have to work hard to do so, but honest thoughtful work will tell.

Easter Sunday service was held at Mt. Carmel. The day was beautiful and pleasant, and a large congregation met to which I preached a sermon suited to the day. These Easter services ought to impress us more and more, and ought to make us stronger in the faith, and in the belief of the resurrection. Dr. J. J. Duck and wife, Miss Maie Baily and others purchased a beautiful and valuable communion set for Mt. Carmel church and it was presented to the church by Deacon J. C. Johnson in suitable remarks. We appreciate the efforts of these friends for the interest they have taken, and pray that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon them, and that He may grant unto them the joy of His salvation.

At night of Easter Sunday we held a delightful Easter service in Windsor Christian church. The house was made fragrant with some rare, beautiful and lovely flowers, and the service all through was beautiful and most impressive. The Baptist and Methodist joined with us to commemorate the resurrection of Christ. At both services that lore was enjoyed which gives tone and power to delivery. The unction from the Holy One seemed to be given to many who waited faithfully and loving upon the Lord, and hundreds went from that service with a better understanding of what Easter meant. May each returning Easter be blessed with the presence of the Lord.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS: - Please allow me to return thanks to Bro. J. S. Ellixson, Sister J. A and Pattie Bray and sister Balsie Tuck, for nice hams, fruits, and clothing. Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:—When Monday morning comes I feel like I ought to say something to the SUN family although I haven't much of interest to write.

Our meeting was well attended yesterday and last night its being the commencement of our series of meetings. Rev. W. T. Herndon reached here yesterday P. M. and preached us an excellent sermon last night to good effect and was with us again this morning in our morning services, and we all regret so much to see him leave today.

Several cards were taken out last night desiring the prayers of God's people. Oh! that the Lord may bless the efforts that are being put forth for the promotion of His cause here and that many dear souls may be converted and added to the church.

One of our best Christian ladies a member of the M. E. church in our city was buried yesterday, Mrs. Mary E. Lyon the daughter of Washington Duke, Esq., of the company of W. Duke & Son tobaccoists. She was in New York for treatment when she died. The funeral procession was the largest I ever remember attending. I suppose the procession of vehicles was a mile long. She had means and used it freely for the cause of Christ and she never lost sight of the poor and afflicted. She was the only daughter of her parents who have the sympathy of us all; also her husband, children and two brothers we all sympathize so much with in their affliction.

The case of murder I spoke of in my last was then being tried in our court lasted ten days and a verdict of man slaughter brought in and the judge put a penalty of five years in the penitentiary but they have taken an appeal and he will be bailed I reckon today until the next court. He was a young man just starting out in life and was a special police and killed a man in making an arrest.

Very Urgent.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Some time ago I asked a question through the SUN, in regard to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention. No one has answered it through the SUN; one Bro. answered privately. We cannot hold a convention unless our brethren will attend. Please let us hear from you in a few weeks through the SUN, what is your opinion? Shall we continue or discontinue the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention? Please answer.

To The Friends of Elon College.

Doubtless the readers of the SUN are aware of the fact that there is such a place as Elon College. We presume however that they are informed to that extent at least.

Yet kind reader, think that there are many things about the College of which you are ignorant. Now of course you would feel more interested in our success if you knew more about what we were doing here.

No doubt you would like to pay us a visit and see for yourself just what is being done in the different departments of our institution, to see the improvements that have been made within the last year and to realize what Elon may become in the near future by the co-operation of friends and loved ones at home. The College is what we (the students) make it. We are proud of our institution and it is our purpose to make it a MODEL COLLEGE.

It is always the height of our ambition to do whatever may be for the good of our College and for the advancement of the Christian Church. We are striving daily to thoroughly qualify ourselves for filling the various stations in life that await us. May we some day be men and women of whom our parents may be proud.

Now dear reader, you know that for us to be on equal footing with others colleges many things are essential.

Of these things doubtless not one is more essential than that of having a good College Magazine. Perhaps you have at some time in the past received a sample copy of "The Elon College Monthly," perhaps you are a subscriber, or perhaps you are not. Now reader, what we wish to say is this: if you are not a subscriber we trust that you will consider the matter and give us your subscription; and if you are a subscriber kindly present the matter to your friends, secure their subscriptions and send us a long list. Rest assured that your effort will be appreciated on our part. Never before since the first number of the Monthly was published have we been so financially embarrassed. It is impossible for us to continue its publication without the support of our friends at home. Now can you not lend us a helping hand? We are under many obligations to Mrs. W. J. Lee for a list of subscribers sent us some time ago, also to Prof. Atkinson for his words of advice in a letter to the SUN. Now we cannot publish the Monthly without money. That is an impossibility hence we kindly solicit your aid. We speak directly to you reader, not to somebody else. Now by a very small effort on your part you may be a very great help to us in extending the publication of our College Magazine. Will you help us? If you will send us your name we will be glad to send you sample copies. Should you at any time secure any subscribers send your list to Miss Rowena Moffitt who is Manager of the Subscription Department. There is something else that we would like to say to some of our subscribers, but we will not say it here. Now in conclusion if you wish to know what we are doing here and have not the time to pay us a visit SUBSCRIBE FOR THE ELON COLLEGE MONTHLY.

Yours very truly,

S. M. SMITH.

Elon College Notes.

I don't think there ever was a time in the history of the college, when the students seemed to be possessed of more dignity and true manliness than they have here this week. It is time that the young people of our land should know and feel the importance of laying a broad, and solid foundation for life while they are in the strength of youth. We should try to so cultivate ourselves that we may have a steady and continuous growth mentally and spiritually all through the course of life. Let us remember that a plant which springeth up in a night, withereth in the noon-day sun.

The delegates who have been attending the State Convention of the Y. M. C. A. are again on our grounds. Their very expression speaks of the love of God and the new inspiration gained by brotherly contact with godly young men. We feel very sure that God will bless their efforts in trying to broadcast that zeal for work, which becometh true and devoted followers of our Lord and Saviour.

We are also glad to see that some who have been somewhat negligent as to the physical man, are now beginning to come into the realization of the fact that in order for the greatest development of the intellect, for the highest improvement of the moral faculties the body must be kept in a vigorous and growing condition, and in order to bring about the latter, it is necessary to take daily exercise. Hence as a result of this awakening there have been three, or four nines organized for playing base-ball.

Miss Emma Harward spent Easter at her home in Chapel Hill.

The Senior Class had some work in photography done Saturday. The photographer need have no more fear of losing his instrument, since that class (especially a part of it) did not break the camera.

Baptism Of The Spirit.

People should be willing to surrender themselves to God so as to receive a baptism of the Holy Ghost for personal service. You could have had it if you had wanted it. There is no one but has all the Holy Ghost he has made room for.

Finney once used an illustration of a man seeing a beautiful team of horses, and saying to their owner: "What will you sell them for?" The reply was: "I will take five hundred dollars for them." The man had the five hundred dollars in his pocket, but immediately there came to his mind a new coat of paint his house wanted, and the trip he had contemplated making, whereupon he said: "I will keep my money and you can keep your horses." This is a homely illustration that you have all of the Holy Ghost that you paid for. You can not have your selfishness, your worldly lusts, your avarice, your pride, or secret sin in your heart and have the power of the Holy Ghost; but if you would rather have the power of the Holy Spirit than these things, God will give it to you. —B. Fay Mills.

The Deadly Cigarette.

A leading chemist, one whose name is widely known in this country, recently took pains to analyze a number of cigarettes produced by the best factories, and after doing so gave utterance to the following remarks: "There are five ingredients in every cigarette, each one of which is calculated to destroy human life. First, there is the oil of tobacco; next, the oil in the imported paper, which is nearly as destructive; third, the arsenic introduced to make the paper burn white and add a peculiar flavor; fourth, the saltpetre put in the tobacco to prevent it from moulding; and finally, the opium that is sprayed on the tobacco to give it the insidious influence which it possesses over the brain. Can you wonder that the animal life of a young man is killed with such a disease? In the cigar or pipe we have but one poison—nicotine—but it is not inhaled." —Raleigh Advocate.

Bring Forth Fruit in Old Age.

When Chalmers had won a fame such as few men ever attained, after he had held the highest and richest places in the gift of his Church, after he had been the great leader of the Free Church movement, in the Sabbath of his life, at an age when most men retire from active pursuits, he performed the noblest of all his labors as a missionary in West Port, the most destitute and depraved of all the precincts of Edinburgh. Nor do we hesitate to say that Chalmers, preaching in the Tan Loft of West Port, to an assembly of ragged outcasts, was greater than Chalmers preaching in the Tron church, to which the wealth and fashion of Scotland crowded—greater too than Chalmers in the chair of Theology.—Central Presbyterian.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mrs. J. L. Fester desires us to say that the parties who have kindly sent aprons will soon receive a card of thanks.

When you send money as a subscriber to the SUN, watch the receipt column, and if you do not see your receipt in two weeks after it is sent write us. Or, if your receipt is not correct, write us immediately.

Many thanks to Revs. J. D. Elder, P. T. Klapp, A. F. Iseley, J. W. Holt, C. C. Peel, S. B. Klapp, H. H. Butler, W. W. Staley and N. G. Newman for favors recently shown the SUN.

We are dropping the labels from the names of our subscribers as fast as we can correct the mailing list. We receipt subscribers now in the paper when they send in the money; therefore it is useless to go to the trouble to keep the dates on the labels.

Rev. J. Maple, D. D. of Millford N. J. preaches the baccalaureate sermon at Elon College this year. We congratulate the young gentlemen and young ladies for their good sense in the selection made. Some thing good in store for those who may be so fortunate as to hear the sermon.

April is the month that The Executive Board of the Quadrennial Convention of the Christian church has set apart for collections for the Norfolk Memorial church, and we earnestly urge that every church in the South which did not take its collection near Christmas will do so in this month, and forward the amount to Col. A. Savage, Norfolk, Va. The work has been commenced, and the prospects are bright; now let us have a strong effort from every side.

Dear brethren, sisters and friends, we think it time that the controversy respecting the right of woman to preach" should be drawn to a close; therefore we hope your pens will soon be turned to other subjects. Possibly you have found by this time all the good there is in this subject. And if you were to continue the controversy a month longer it would be no nearer settled than now. Thanking you all for the earnest zeal you have shown on the subject, we hope you will desist soon, so we shall not have to under go the painful task of rejecting any ones epistle on this subject. It is true we have rejected one or two, but it was because no name was given by those who sent them. And all articles without a name are sure to find their way into the waste basket.

Denominationalism.

"It is of human origin and contrary to the Word of God." Schisms in the church are contrary, not only to the express declarations, but to the whole tenor of God's Word. Christ founded one church, not only one, and prayed that it might ever remain one. "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me that they may be one as we are."—John 17. 11. But some say this repress only to those particular disciples on whom fell the great responsibility of the infant church. Not so "neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one." John 17:20-21. The fundamental principle of this church is LOVE. "God is love." Religion itself is love. The love of Christ constraineth us." If divisions in the church have sprung from any other principle, they are wrong and must come to naught. But whence come they? Are they the works of the flesh, or the fruits of the spirit? "By their fruits ye shall know the n." Now, among the works of the flesh are these; "Hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envying," but among the fruits of the spirit. "Love, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness." All history, ecclesiastical and political, declares that the fruits of denominationalism have not been "love," but "hatred," not "peace," but "strife," not "longsuffering," but "wrath;" not "gentleness" but "seditions," not "goodness," but "heresies" and "murders;" not "meekness," but "emulations" and "envying."

One source of division is bigotry; but there is no bigotry in God's Word. "I say to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think." Rom. 12:3. Another source is intolerance; but there is no intolerance in God's Word. It exhorts all God's children to "longsuffering, forbearing one another in love." Another is exclusiveness; but this also is not found in the Word. "For we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."—Isarah 45: 22 "Whosoever will, let him come."

The divine idea of the church is that of one great family of whom Christ is the head. "Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." That God has not ordained these divisions in his church, as some claim, but that they are contrary to his righteous will, can be seen from the following scripture. "Now I beseech you brethren by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among you."—1 Cor 1: 10. "Fulfill my joy that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."—Phil 2:2. "Finally be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous."—1 Pet. 3:8.

But division and strife have come, and the problem now is. How shall we deal with them? Fortunately for us, they began during the ministry of Christ and the apostles, and they set an example which it would be well for the Christian world to follow. On one occasion John came to Christ saying, "Master we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us, and we forbade him because he followeth not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not, for no man which shall do a miracle in my name can lightly speak evil of me, for he that is not against us is on our part."—Mark 9:38-40. A schism arose in the church at Corinth over human leaders. "Now, this I say, that every one of you saith I am of Paul; I am of Apollos; and I am of Cephas; and I am of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? 1. Cor. 1:12 and 13. "For whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal?" Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed?" "I have planned, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase." Thus Paul disposes of the question of human leaders. Another schism arises over eating meat offered to idols. Paul declares that "an idol is nothing," and "meat commendeth us not to God, for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worse. But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours becomes a stumbling block to them that are weak." 1. Cor. 8:8 and 9. So far as he was personally concerned, Paul says, "if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth."

Dissension arose in the church at Antioch over circumcision. "And certain men which came down from Judea, taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised, after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about their question" Acts 15:1 and 2.

And after "much disputing," James pastor of the church at Jerusalem, arose and said, "My sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the gentiles, are turned to God." In accordance with this, letters were sent to the gentile churches, saying, "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." Acts 15:28 and 29.

In these we see the divine method of dealing with church dissensions, which seem to be nothing more nor less than, "In essentials unity; in none-essentials liberty; in all things charity." In Christ's rebuke to John, we see the truth, that the Christian derives his power and rights, not from the particular brand of the church to which he adheres, but directly from Christ by virtue of his relation to Him. It is absurd for any class of God's children to claim any superiority or privilege over others. For the Master has declared to each and every child of his. "All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

Reply to Rev. B. H. Holland.

Let me say a few more words in the "right of woman to preach" controversy.

1. Bro. Holland says he has not the shadow of a doubt that the Word sustains women in preaching I believe it is universally admitted that when there is not the shadow of a doubt the fact is easily established. So far I think it appears that the fact is rather hard to establish—a good many shadows linger in the minds of some of us.

2. He says 1 Cor. 14:34 means women should not participate in the temporal or business affairs of the church. The 36th verse tells what Paul was talking about it was not business matters but the Word of God. I commend the 37th verse to Bro. Holland's special attention. It is important.

3. He thinks I am cornered with Paul against me, since I virtually admit that women were preaching, when I say Paul condemned their manner of preaching I made that point on the supposition that we grant prophesying means preaching, and then I answered it from that standpoint, but as my letter to Sister Adams will show, and as I think Eph. 4:11, will show, prophesying is one thing and preaching is another. So Bro. Holland I am in no corner on that point.

I will again suppose we admit that prophesying does mean preaching, and then I should say: No doubt there were then as now, some women who were preaching, but without divine authority, and therefore Paul condemned in 1 Cor. 11: first their manner of preaching and then in 1 Cor. 14:34 he boldly assailed the practice. According to Bro. H.'s way of reasoning the fact that a thing is done at all, makes it right. He did not mean so much, I am quite sure.

4. Again he says 1 Cor. 11:4-5 recognizes men as preachers and also women. That is a mistake. It recognizes both as prophets, but not as preachers. That there is a difference between a preacher and a prophet see Eph. 4:11. Turn and read it for yourself.

5. Can laboring in the gospel be anything else but preaching? I refer Bro. Holland for answer to this question to the latter part of his own article in which he so fully describes the noble work of Miss Francis E. Willard—not Mrs. for she is not a married lady—Miss Willard is not a preacher, but a grand worker in the gospel. Also to the work he says women have done to raise the fallen, etc. That was gospel work, but not preaching. Do you see?

6. As to his references permit also a word. He says Neh. 6:7 appointed prophets to preach, but did not ordain them. Does not Bro. Holland know that ordination is the conferring of authority, and is not an appointment the same thing authority. Isa. 61:1 refers to the Messiah and so is a reference in point. I have examined John 4:29; Exod. 15:20; Judges 4:4; 2 Kings 22:14; Neh. 6:14, and there is not the trace of preaching in either one. I wish to ask Bro. Holland if he does seriously believe that the Samaritan woman was a preacher in the true and scriptural sense of that word? If so, on what is his opinion founded?

7. He says God has used woman in every age of the world as an important factor in his work. I gladly grant it, but that by no means indicates that he ever appointed, or used her, in the sacred office of the official ministry.

8. He mixes up Paul in 1 Tim. 2:12. There are four parts. 1. He did not allow her to teach. 2. He did not allow her to usurp authority over man. Now he gives his reasons. 3. He did not allow her to teach because she was in the transgression. 4. He did not allow her to be head over the man because Adam was first formed, then Eve. This is the logical arrangement of the thought. Will Bro. H. show it is not? If he can let him do it.

9. He says the Word informs us they (the women) "did preach." Please give the book, chapter and verse where it is said woman "did preach."

10. I repeat my challenge to name a single instance in the Bible where a woman was ordained to preach the Word—where there can be no reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the statement.

I hope Bro Holland will not consider anything he may write further on this question as an answer, till he has plainly and unequivocally answered the points involved in Nos. 9 and 10 above. Till he, or some one, can answer those two points squarely, I think the discussion should stand ended.

Notes From Harvard.

Leaving off a stiff wind which made it just a little cool to be pleasant in open air, Easter Sunday in Boston was almost a perfect day, so far at least as the weather was concerned. The sun shone brightly and despite the rather chilling effect of a just departed March, there were all indications of fast approaching spring. There was reviving and energizing vitality in the very atmosphere. What a fitting anniversary of that resurrected life which came forth from the grave on that Sabbath morning some 1860 years ago! That resurrected life still has its influence in the hearts and minds of the nations of the earth and forms the most potent factor in the history of mankind.

What a tribute the world paid the risen Christ last Sunday!

Boston was thoroughly alive to the occasion. Vast throngs crowded the churches. The decorations of flowers and evergreens were rich, fragrant and profuse. The immense crowds and the police would not admit us to Trinity church but we gained admittance to the "Old South" of which Edward Everett Hale is pastor and no more pleasant service have we attended than the one last Sunday. The sermon was one of living spiritual interest. With the subject "The life of the world," this able divine, with the powers of a wonderful inspiration told his flock of the way of life, how to obtain life, life more abundantly and that life which makes for the betterment of man and the salvation of society and the soul.

After the sermon we were all invited to remain and partake of the Lord's Supper. What a pleasure and a privilege this was—the first of the kind we have had since leaving the south. What a consolation it is for God's children to meet around the sacred altar, commune together, partake of the broken body and spilled blood of Christ! Here the great and small, the learned and unlearned, the rich and poor commingle on equal footing, sup together, and learn that most vital lesson of all, namely, that we are all brothers fighting for a common cause and against a common enemy. God is no respecter of persons and His holy name be praised that around His table His children may meet and commune—mingle hand with hand, heart with heart, life with life and in union give all to one common beloved Father.

But while last Sunday was in some respects so pleasant, yet in other respects so sad, so full of grief to us here and of sympathy for friends far away. We had just learned of the death of our dear friend and former pupil—Miss Blanche Long. What a good, pure and noble life has been taken so soon! We cannot realize that we shall never meet on earth again the merry, happy, healthy school girl whom we knew only a few short months ago as the most obedient, congenial and faithful of pupils, the most pleasant and agreeable of friends and the most amiable and sincere of ladies, and at the same time the most true, genuine and devoted of Christian characters. In the school room and out of the school room, in the home circle and in the social circle, we have never known a more thorough and genuine and congenial character than the one whose life must now be but a memory and whose taking away we deeply and sincerely mourn. Frank, open, sincere, obedient and devoted in character and in spirit, lived a life most worthy of emulation and I am sure that she now enjoys the reward of a well spent, Christian career. I know I am right in saying that those who knew her best esteemed her most highly and in the memory of those and all her acquaintances her life, her character, her example will still live to remind us all that she has gone up higher to await and welcome loved one, friends and associates left behind. However mysterious it may seem now we know that "it is all well." We can all hope to meet again where there will be no more sickness nor pain, nor death.

Suffolk Letter.

The opening spring brings a larger attendance at Sunday school and church; and it is to be hoped a larger spiritual life Nature seems to teach that all life has its seasons of richer growth and brighter hues: and the Bible teaches that there are "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Some pious souls seem to think that religion should run the same the year round and the life through. Nothing does that but a machine. There are periods more favorable to serving God, and seasons better suited for worship. "Seek ye the Lord, while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near." Bright days help us, even in religion; though the dark days have their place in the growth of grace and the refining of our nature.

The forest fires which have been raging in this state and North Carolina have done much damage. Timber, fences, homes, churches, and even human life yielded to the fierce flames fanned into fury by the winds and aided by the dry weather. Nothing is secure but spiritual interests, and they only when under the care of Jesus. "The things which are seen are temporal; the things which are not seen are eternal." Here is a lesson for all. We should strive after spiritual good by devoting ourselves and our possessions to spiritual culture and enterprises. The good of life should be likeness to Jesus Christ in character. That will endure the "wreck of matter and the crush of worlds." The "tide of time" bears us all on toward the spiritual world, either to enter upon its felicities or to be cast out into "outer darkness" to meet undefined horrors. It is strange that so many seem to seek only the material and perishing, while the spiritual and lasting treasures are offered more freely. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven."

Little Mary King, the seven year old daughter of W. A. King, died Saturday evening, after a week's sickness. The funeral service was conducted from the residence on Kilby street yesterday afternoon in the presence of a large congregation. She was a bright little member of our Sabbath school, but she is now a bright little cherub with Jesus. It was sweet to see so many of the children at the funeral. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Dr. Talmage is to deliver a lecture on "Big Blunders" here in the City hall, on Wednesday night, April 19th, for the benefit of Odd Fellowship. The people in reach of Suffolk are fortunate in having an opportunity to hear this celebrated American.

Earnest Millington, a young painter, who is a member of our church, fell some seventeen feet on the brick pavement last Thursday afternoon, and has been in an unconscious state most of the time since, though the doctors think that recovery is probable. The stage on which he was at work gave way and precipitated him to the ground, while his companion caught in an upper porch and was saved from injury. Human life is uncertain and our only security is to be found in Jesus Christ.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

I never was more at a loss what to say than I am this week, so I guess I will have to let the Corner go along just so. I must say that you have done nicely so far but the past week has not brought in any letters by mail. I think some one will have to write if there is to be any Corner at all next week. We will wait and see. Hoping to get lots of letters.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

FRANKLIN, N. C., April 8, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I don't have much time to write now, I keep so busy out doors. I want to tell the little cousins about my garden. I have peas, beets, radishes and onions, have worked them all nicely but they need rain. Planted my wax beans yesterday. Will tell you more about my garden next time I write. I send 5 cents.

Your niece,
WILLIE STALEY.

Willie, it is so nice to get out doors this nice weater and then to make garden is so pleasant. Write again and tell us all about your work.

PROVIDENCE, VA., April 3, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE: AS I have never written to the Band before I thought I would write a few lines. I am a little girl ten years old, I go to school to Mr Hermance, I like to go to school and love my teacher, but I am sick so often that I cannot go to school very regular. I go to Sunday school at Providence. I send one half dime for the Band. I will write again. With love to you and the cousins.

GERTRUDE GIBSON.

Gertrude, we welcome you to the Corner and hope to hear from you often. Am very sorry to know you are sick so much. I do hope it wont be that way always.

FRANKLIN, N. J., April 8, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—April does not seem to know March is gone from the way the wind blows but it is warm enough to bring up the spring flowers and after school how we love to walk and hunt them, the grass is green and the birds sing so sweetly to let us know that they are happy and enjoying the fresh air, why should not we feel so to? I will answer Theodore Stephenson's question, Solmon reigned 40 years over Israel. I send ten cents to the Band.

Your niece,
ANNIE STALEY.

Well, there is no doubt that March has gone for the weather has been so warm. There is no reason why we should not take on new life and energy with the trees and flowers and birds and grass.

FRANKLIN, N. C., Mar. 8, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—After the cold winter the beautiful spring has come with her train of flowers, and everything seems to be bursting forth into new life; so earth and sky and creatures too unite to give due homage to him, who was crowned with thorns and crucified that we might have a new life in glory. Didn't we have a glorious morn commemorating the resurrection? We went to Sunday school; but did not have any special Easter services. Sister and Willie and I recited some little Easter poems. Mr. Wicker preached us a good sermon. It was the first real nice Sunday we have had for services at our church this year. I send one dime to the Band.

Your true friend,
BESSIE STALEY.

Bessie, don't you think it strange that any one can pass through life without a single grateful thought to the Christ who suffered so much for our soul's salvation. It behooves us who profess Christ to do our whole duty.

DURHAM N. C., April 1, 1894.

MY DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has been almost a year since I enlisted with the Band, but I hope my long silence has not caused my name to be erased, and as all the little folks have been telling what they did Christmas and what they received and where they went, I will now tell of my holidays it was the happiest Christmas of my life. Father, sister Mary and myself went to my grandfather's to stay a few days but the snow came and they forced us to remain longer and all we little folks will remember how deep that snow was, and during the time Darling Santa claus made his round and filled us up and caused our hearts to overflow with joy and gladness. And last and best of all, was our tree at the church. All my class had a verse to recite, and each had some little gift for the poor, and we placed them on the little tree of our own. I was No. 7, and my verse was: "Some poor child I'll happy make, I'll give my doll for Jesus sake," and I put my doll on the little tree, it was so pretty when we were all through.

Your loving niece,
MABLE LYNCH.

Mabel wrote us a real nice letter, but the last pages has gotten separated from this part and lost. I have hunted high and low for them but have to say am very sorry they cannot be found. Mabel you will have to write again to make up for my carelessness in letting it get lost.

SELMA, N. C., March 26, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write a few lines to the Corner as I haven't written in so long. I went to Sunday school this morning. We were to have services but our pastor was sick. We are going to have an Easter entertainment for the Bright Jewels. Some of the girls and boys were going to have a picnic yesterday but we didn't have it I have a very nice time going to school, as all the school girls have, but of course they all have their trials, but you know we all have our trials. I am very glad that Uncle Tangle has taken that picture of his out of the Corner because I don't think Uncle Tangle can be that ugly, do you, cousins, think so? We will have to ask Aunt Maggie, I reckon she can tell us. I will answer Lillie Winstons question: Sarah was one hundred and twenty-seven years old when she died, and was buried in the cave of M. chapel. I will also ask a question: How many times is celebrate mentioned in the Bible? Enclosed please find one dime for the Band. With much love to all.

MARGARET E. ETHEREDGE.

Margaret we are glad to get your letter and to know that you are well enough to go to school. I do hope you will never be kept from school or any place else on that account any more like you used to be.

The Longest Day.

Some one says, "It is quite important, when speaking of the longest day in the year, to say what part of the world we are talking about, as will be seen by reading the following list, which tells the length of the longest day in several places. How unfortunate are the children in Tornea, Finland, where Christmas Day is less than three hours in length!

At Stockholm, Sweden, it is eighteen and one half hours in length.

At Spitzbergen the longest day is three and one half months

At London, England, and Bremen, Prussia, the longest day has sixteen and one-half hours.

At Hamburg, in Germany, and Dantzic, in Prussia, the longest day has seventeen hours.

At Wardbury, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21st to July 22d, without interruption.

At St. Petersburg, Russia, Tobolsk Siberia, the longest day is nineteen hours and the shortest five hours.

At Tornea, Finland, June 21st brings a day nearly twenty two hours long, and Christmas, one less than three hours in length.

At New York the longest day is about fifteen hours, and at Montreal, Canada, it is sixteen.

But the longest day of all will be in the New Jerusalem, for "there shall be no night there."—The Evangelist.

"For the benefit of other sufferers we state the case of our boy, who was taken with hip disease five years ago, when three years old. After two months, I happened to read of a similar case cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is hardly necessary to say that I pulled it from a drug store and got a bottle. This was in April. We gave it to our boy, and in July several places on his hip gathered and broke. When we had taken a bottle and a half of the Sarsaparilla we saw that his general

Washington Letter.

It was generally supposed that the question of opening the World's Fair on the Sunday was finally and definitely disposed of when the 52nd congress expired without repealing the law against Sunday opening. I was therefore much surprised a few days since to learn that a Chicago lawyer, representing the board of control, was in Washington for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, what would be the probable action of the government if the exposition officials defied the law and opened the gates on Sunday. It is not likely that the lawyer got the information, because no single official, not even the President, would undertake the responsibility of saying in advance what action would be taken by the government to enforce its laws and to punish its violators; but his coming after it indicates an intention on the part of those in charge of the exposition to ignore the law against Sunday opening. The argument has been advanced that the government will be powerless to punish anybody or to compel the closing of the gates on Sunday, if the managers care to open them, because there is no penalty stated for the violation of the law, which is in effect merely a stipulation that the managers shall in consideration of an appropriation of $2,500,000 in souvenir silver half dollars agree not to open the exposition grounds on Sunday. Not being a lawyer your correspondent will not venture an opinion as to the law, but he does not hesitate to predict that failure to keep this agreement made with Congress will be financially disastrous to the managers of the exposition, if it does not make them liable to legal punishment.

Two gentlemen, business men of Washington, were discussing and congratulating each other upon the recent failure of the attempt to establish a permanent race track in a suburb of Washington, and one of them said, I thought very pertinently: "I am a horse lover, as you know, but I am teetotally opposed to the public race tracks of the country as at present conducted; and rejoice at the failure to establish one here, with daily races all the year. The old argument that race tracks were necessary to improve the breed of horses may once have been a good one, but the public race track of today makes nothing but a breed of gamblers and drunkards, and I venture the positive assertion that not a single public race track in the United States could pay its expenses if gambling and the sale of liquor were prohibited at the tracks, and by prohibiting gambling I mean that they shall not be allowed to telegraph the results of the races to the dens in all of our large cities where pools are sold on the races, to the ruination of thousands of young men."

President Cleveland has decided to attend the opening of the World's Fair, and it is probably that all or nearly all the members of his cabinet will accompany him, but according to present arrangements Mrs. Cleveland will not go.

CORRESPONDENT.

April 5, 1893.

Somebody's Opinion.

Occasionally I fall in with hints like this: Some D. D., Ph D, Bishop, Rev., deacon, or some high private has, in some way, hinted to somebody that he or they would think more of us if we were more specific in our theological opinions, and the hintings are that we better speak out, and save or win popularity.

There is another side. We have the frankness to assure them that our Lord, the Master whom we serve, has made our theology, and we know we are correct; but men made their creed much after the spirit of the times. We know our theological words are those "which the Holy Spirit teacheth," and the safe thing for them to do is to come to us and use the pure tongue—that shibboleth will pass them much better than siboeth. Creed words are about all siboeths; all of our words are shibboleths, especially the shib part. Creeds are moonlight; the Lord's words are sunlight.

We have not one Gospel reason why we should modify to please and win personal honor. The honor and the light which cometh down from heaven are "sevenfold" better than all siboeth's theology of man's make. Therefore, we, from our professed high calling and holy profession, have more abundant reason to say to them that we would like them better if they would leave "the words's wisdom" and honor our Lord in the words which the Master prefers.

But, then, we have most always had timid mortals among us, who "exceedingly fear and quake" when somebody suggests that we better say siboeth. Cheer up, ye timid souls, and follow the Lamb whithersoever he leadeth. Shibboleth opens the gates of glory. Our Savior's words are "right words" and vastly better. Cheer up, we are on the right side, if so be we shun the words of man and prefer the approbation of heaven

Brace Up.

Is a tantalizing admonition to those who at this season feel all tired out, weak, without appetite and discouraged. But the way in which Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up the tired frame and gives a good appetite, is really wonderful. So we say, "Take Hood's and it will brace you up."

For a general family cathartic we confidently recommend Hood's Pills.

A Bitter Draught.

There are many bitter cups which men drink, but there are few which are more bitter than those pressed to the drunkard's lips. There is the cup of grief and sorrow, the cup of disappointment and disgrace, the cup of anguish and distress; and among them all, what is more bitter than to drink the tears of those we love? Let us hear the story of drinking a tear: "Boys, I won't drink unless you take what I do," said old Josh Spilit in reply to an invitation. He was a toper of long standing and abundant capacity, and the boys looked at him with astonishment.

The idea," one of them replied, "that you should prescribe conditions makes us laugh. Perhaps you want to force one of your abominable mixtures down us. You are the chief of mixed drinkers, and I won't agree to your condition." "He wants us to run in castor oil and brandy," said the Judge, who would have taken the oil to get the brandy.

"No; I'm square. Take my drink, and I'm with you." The boys agreed, and stood along the bar. All turned to Spilit, and looked at him with interest.

"Mr. Bartender," said he, "give me a glass of water."

"What! water?"

"Yes, water. It's new drink to me, I admit, and it's a scarce article, I expect. Several days ago, as a parcel of us went fishing, we took a fine chance of whiskey along, and had a heap of fun. 'Long toward evenin' I got powerful drunk, and crawled off under a tree and went to sleep. The boys drank up all the whiskey and came back to town. They thought it was a good joke 'cause they'd left me out there drunk, and told it 'round town with a mighty bluster. My son got hold of the report, and told it at home. Well, I lay under that tree all night, and when I woke in the morning, my wife sat right thar side of me. She said nothin' when I woke up, but sarter turned away her head, and I could see she was chokin'.

'I wish I had suthin' to drink says I.

Then she took a cup wot she had foteched with her, and went up to whar a spring cum up, and dipped up a cupful and foteched it to me. Jes, as she was handin' it to me, she leant over to wipe her eyes. I saw a tear drop into the water. I tuk the cup and drank, and raisin' my hands, I vowed that I'd never drink my wife's tears again, as I had been doin' for the last twenty years, and that I was goin' to stop. You boys know who it was that let me. You was all in the gang. Give me another glass of water, Mr. Bartender."

When that man took his first glass, in gaiety and jollity, he little thought he would ever drink the tears of her he loved; but he did it. There are others whose tears are falling, thousands on thousands who are weeping over friends they have loved, who have been beguiled and enslaved by strong drink.

Let the young who are now free shun the intoxicating cup; let them see to it that nothing which they do shall ever cause their dearest friends a needless sorrow or a needless tear. How many weeping eyes would beam with smiles could they but know that those they loved had abandoned the use of wine and strong drink, and turned their feet into the testimonies of the Lord.—Little Christian.

Misfit Coats.

Most persons like to have the consciousness that they are well dressed, and that they are wearing garments perfectly adapted to them. It is somewhat surprising, however, to note the occasions when people take much more delight in helping others try on garments and in standing off and admiring the perfection of the fit. Their pleasure is not altogether the selfish one of the philanthropist who finds enjoyment in clothing the needy. We are thinking, rather, of those to whom a familiar bit of advice is given in the homely form, "If the coat fits, put it on." It is in this particular that a marvellous lack of taste and a surprising passion for misfits is betrayed in our own case, and is generally balanced by a wonderful anxiety as to the proper appearance of others.

If in an assembly listening to a plain and direct address, some spell should open our eyes to the different persons looking over the stock presented to them which to choose, what a ridiculous scene would be presented to us, if it were not also so painful a sight! The spendthrift would be trying to force himself into the coat that was cut for the shrivelled miser; that solemn-looking man would be appropriating the coat that was intended for the giddy fellow, and he in his turn, would seize upon the garb that was recommended to the other. A skilful dealer indeed in such clothing must he be that does not find the recluse pouncing upon that part of his stock that was designed for the man of fashion; the coward at heart arrayed in the raiment intended for one whose spirit is willing, but whose flesh is weak; and the one whose sensitiveness is like that of the rhinoceros going off wearing the garment especially fitted for one of a morbid conscientiousness.

While we were smiling at the grotesque sight, and wondering at the folly exhibited by those about us, what would a glimpse at a mirror show us? While we had been mentally righting all these misfits and distributing the garments as they should be, with the thought of how perfectly each might be fitted, what should we have been choosing for ourselves? Are we in the habit of taking complacency in a garb suited for another, and of choosing misfits? Golden Rule.

The Spring.

Of all seasons in the year, is the one for making radical changes in regard to health. During the winter, the system becomes to a certain extent clogged with waste, and the blood loaded with impurities, owing to lack of exercise, close confinement in poorly ventilated shops and homes, and other causes. This is the cause of the dull sluggish, tired feeling so general at this season, and which must be overcome, or the health may be entirely broken down. Hood's Sarsaparilla has attained the greatest popularity all over the country as the favorite Spring medicine. It expels the accumulation of impurities through the bowels, kidneys, liver, lungs and skin gives to the blood the purity and quality necessary to good health and overcomes that tired feeling.

Many persons are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile and cures malaria. Get the genuine.

I was riding on the train through the eastern section of North Carolina. Nothing can be flatter than that portion of the country, unless it be the religious experience of some people. The rain was pouring down fast, and for a person so inclined, not a better day and place for the blues could be found. Looking out of the car window brought nothing more interesting to view than pine trees, boney mules, and razor back hogs. Groups of men, white and black, gathered at each station to see the train arrive and depart. Each passenger that entered brought in more damp, moisture, and blues.

Two men at last came in and took the seat in front of me. Shortly after, one of them took a bottle from his pocket, pulled the cork, and handed the bottle to his companion. He took a drink, and the smell of liquor filled the car. Then the first one took a drink, and back and forth the bottle passed, until at last it was empty and they were full. Then one of them commenced swearing, and such blasphemy I never heard in all my life. It made the very air blue—women shrank back, while the heads of men were uplifted to see where the stream of profanity came from. It went on for some time, until I began talking to myself. I always did like to talk to a sensible man.

"Henry that man belongs to the devil."

"There is no doubt about that," I replied.

"He is not ashamed of it."

"Not a bit ashamed"

"Whom do you belong to?"

"I belong to the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Are you glad or sorry?"

"I am glad very glad."

"Who in the car knows that man belongs to the devil?"

Everybody knows that, for he has not kept it a secret."

"Who in the car knows you belong to the Lord Jesus?"

"Why no one knows it, for you see I am a stranger around here,"

"Are you willing they should know whom you belong to?"

"Yes; I am willing."

"Very well, will you let them know it?"

I thought a moment, and then said, "By the help of my master, I will."

Then straightening up and taking a good breath, I began singing in a voice that could be heard by all in the car:

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

Before I had finished the first verse and chorus the passengers had crowded down around me, and the blasphemer had turned round and looked at me with a face resembling a thunder cloud. As I finished the chorus, he said:

"What are you doing?"

"I am singing," I replied.

"Well," said he, "any fool can understand that."

"I am glad you understood it."

"What are you singing?"

"I am singing the religion of the Lord Jesus."

"Well, you quit."

"Quit what?"

"Quit singing your religion on the cars."

"I guess not," I replied. "I don't belong to the Quit family; my name is Mead. For the last half hour you have been standing by your master; now for the next half hour I am going to stand up for my Master."

"Who is my master?"

"The devil is your master—while Christ is mine. I am as proud of my Master as you are of yours. Now I am going to have my turn, if the passengers don't object."

A chorus of voices cried out: "Sing on, stranger, we like that."

I sang on, and as the next verse was finished the blasphemer turned his face away, and I saw nothing of him after that but the back of his head, and that was the handsomest part of him. He left the train soon after, and I'm glad to say I've never seen him since. Song after song followed, and I soon had other voices to help me. When the song service ended, an old man came to me, put out his hand, and said:

"Sir, I owe you thanks and a confession."

"Thanks for what?"

"Thanks for rebuking that blasphemer."

"Don't thank me for that, but give thanks to my master I try to stand up for him wherever I am. What about the confession?"

"I am in my eighty-hird year. I have been a preacher of the gospel for over sixty years. When I heard that man swearing so I wanted to rebuke him. I rose from my seat two or three times to do so, but my courage failed. I have not much longer to live, but never again will I refuse to show my colors any where."—Rev. C. H. Mead, in Exchange.

Golden Rule Meditation.

When my friends rebuke me, or criticise me, let me humbly consider whether God is not speaking through them. Let no peevishness of man toward man lead me to reject what may be God's command, uttered through man. Let me remember that the seemingly harsh word comes from my friends, and is probably as painful for them to speak as for me to hear. Then let me love them for their corrections, even as I revere God in the same. When I think of what I should be, and of my many sins, I bow my head in shame. But when another lays loving, stinging hand upon my conscience, I am grieved and angry, as if I had not confessed my sins to myself. Lord, have I confessed my sins? Or is my self-humiliation, and the clearness of vision with which I think to examine my life, all a mockery and hypocrisy? Should my spirit chide itself as full of faults, only to chide another who in kindness points out a single error? For failing zeal and faltering industry, for harshness of tongue and of thought, for gloom and passion and despondency, for selfish indulgence and selfish neglect, for professions poorly practised, for feeble faith and unworthy fruits, forgive me, loving Father, merciful Saviour. Speak to me often of my errors and my sins, through the spirit within, but especially through the more effective warnings of my friends. Help me to the modesty that can learn, the humility that can be taught. Draw me so close to thee that no corrections shall seem exterior to me, or more harsh than if my own will had prompted them. And thus, by whatever discipline is best, instruct me in thy strength and happiness. —Golden Rule.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and hung aside with a triumphant ooo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life, are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (7x9 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such art stars as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we had during the past year, "A Yard of Pantries" and "A White House (Reid)" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

"I'M A DAISY."

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

A Comparison.

Doubtless our readers noticed the advertisements for nurseries that we had in the SUN during February. Among them were Nanz and Neuner of Louisville, Ky., and James Vick's Sons of Rochester, N. Y. For these two ads we were to receive flower plants and seeds. In ordering our seeds from James Vick's sons we received from the "collection of 40 varieties of seeds for $2.00" which we chose, but 22 of the lot, and the garden seeds were the same way—only a little over half the amount advertised. From Nanz and Neuner there was an extra plant of nearly every kind ordered. Which is the best house to deal with? D. J. M.

Norfolk, Va.

Everything is running along nicely. I have received eight gentlemen into the church in the last two Sabbaths. Since conference I have received twenty-eight and fourteen of these are men. We have a constant revival and scarcely a Sabbath in which we do not receive one or more. The work on the new church has commenced. Now for a united effort all along the line and we will by the blessing of God have a record of which all Christians may be pardonably proud. I trust you are all well prosperous. Much love to you and all the dear brethren in the Lord.

Even yours,

C. J. JONES.

Here and There.

Last Saturday and Sunday were the preaching days at Youngsville, N. C. The congregations were very good, and the outlook seems to be encouraging. In the afternoon Sunday, the pastor of the Youngsville Christian church preached for the Methodist congregation at Wesley's Chapel; and the Methodist pastor preached for the Christian congregation at Youngsville at night. This is brotherly, and shows the Christian spirit.

Friday night was spent with Bro. Moss's family. This is one of the best families in the town. Sister Moss is in poor health. We pray that she may soon be restored to her health again.

Saturday night was spent with Bro. Williams. A number of friends came in, and a few hours were spent pleasantly in song and prayer.

Sunday night was spent with our old friend Rufin Holmes. His oldest daughter, Miss Doris, is an invalid and has been for several months. She is a most excellent young lady; and though she is so much afflicted, she is cheerful and says, it is all right, and she is so thankful it is no worse. She is an example of God's grace to sustain His afflicted children. May the Lord bless her and all the family.

We called to see several other families a few minutes.

Our thanks are due Miss Nora Williams and Miss Minnie Farmer for valuable assistance in the music at Youngsville Saturday and Sunday.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

The Japanese Language.

Amid the perplexities of mission life we would not have our friends think that we are altogether miserable. In Japan as elsewhere we have sunshine and shadow; and the smiles and the tears are not always far apart. In my last summer's travels I came to the conclusion that however sober the preachers are in the Herald, they always appear a good natured set when you catch them at home.

Here are some adventures with the Japanese language. We have always held to the principle that if a piece of knowledge has been acquired the best thing to do is to put it to immediate use. On this theory we have acted. When, therefore, we found it necessary to keep house for ourselves we set out in search of furniture. The word for bedstead is nedoko. Leave out the middle syllable and you get nekko—a cat. In a lapse of memory I stopped at a furniture shop and inquired for a nekko. The woman of the shop looked surprised and said they had none; but supposing I had seen a cat on the premises, or else I would not ask to buy it, she, too, began a careful search to find it. In those first days we always went out armed with jibiki (dictionary), and with the aid of it we were able to make ourselves understood.

Perhaps the case of greatest danger was when Mrs. W. was riding for the third time in a jinriksha and her hat blew off. Being quite anxious to have him stop immediately, she calls a loud "whoa" to him as she had been accustomed to at home with the animals that do the hauling. Fortunately for her some of us could make him understand in "pull-man," language, or he might have run away with her completely.

One of the ladies attempts to tell the servant to start a fire in the dining-room. What she did tell him was to set the dining-room on fire.

Miss Penrod and Miss Veda, when returning from an Oji meeting, had occasion to take a crowded street car. They were sitting wedged into one corner, and all the passengers were packed like sardines in a box. But one of the passengers had studied a little English which he wished to show off. So turning to Miss Penrod, in a voice and manner intended to be the cream of politeness and sympathy, he says, "Be it tight?" They explained that they were quite comfortable.

On one occasion I thought the riksha man was running faster than he needed to, as I was in no hurry to get to my destination, and told him so; but what I did say was that he was going slowly. With a grunt which I supposed at the time to mean "yes," he started off at brisker pace, and I felt too paralyzed at the result of my venture, to try any further conversation with him, and so I let him run.

Mrs. W. tells the servant to put salt in the potatoes. She remembers afterwards that she told him to put in sugar, which he faithfully did.

One of the latest adventures was with this same servant, who had contracted the smoking habit. As this was becoming rather offensive in the kitchen, I took occasion to ask him how long he had been smoking. But what I really asked him was how long he had been a smoking chimney. The consequence was he made quite a careful examination of the chimney flue.

Finally, I am obliged to say that it taxes me woefully to get ahead of the quick-spoken Japanese and keep ahead. I have at present a somewhat limited stock of words. They know all the words I can use, but I don't know a hundredth part of what they know. Consequently a Japanese can chatter at me for half an hour and not give me one luminous idea.

Well, in order to have perfectly intelligible conversation on both sides, I am put to the necessity of making an effort usually to lead in the conversation. And as long as I can keep within the circumscribed limits of that vocabulary the conversation goes on quite nicely, and I understand everything that is said.

Naval Ships in Hampton Roads.

At 8 o'clock Monday morning five of England's big war ships, headed by the flag ship Blake flying the pennant of one of her vice admirals, came majestically in the roads from Lynn Haven Bay, where they had anchored over night, let go as many bow anchors and fired the customary salute. They are as follows: The Blake, armored cruiser, 9,000 tons; Australia, armored cruiser, 5,600 tons; Magicienne, protected cruiser, 2,950 tons; Tartar, partially protected cruiser, 1,770 tons, and Partridge, partially protected cruiser, 7,550 tons. The Blake is 20,000 horse power and the largest in this respect of any that will take part in the manevres, domestic or foreign. Before 8 o'clock this morning, Col. Frank, commander of the army post, was informed by Admiral Gherardi that the British vessels were coming up from the capes and that they would be along in an hour. This was notification to stand by and salute the visitors after they had fired 21 guns in honor of the American colors, and the fort was prompt in doing this. The fashionable set were ruthlessly awakened by this bombardment and the reverberation of the mighty guns of the Blake and the answers that came quickly back from the post and flag-ship Philadelphia. Hardly had the dense curls of white smoke disappeared from the muzzle of the guns, when the Blake started in to assure the French, Russian and Italian flags of her distinguished esteem and consideration by saluting the commanding officers of the four vessels with the number of guns due their rank. During these ceremonies the flags on all ships were constantly changing from one country to another, and to an on looker it was apparent that if there ever existed any ill-feeling between Russia, England and France, there were little remnants of it left.

The appearance of these five cruiser ships of the Queen's navy presented as they moved majestically over the water and past the outer end of our fleet to the anchorage grounds designated them by Admiral Gherardi, was one of the prettiest sights ever seen here. At the head of the fleet was the big armored cruiser Blake, the counter-part of our own ship, the New York, heavily armored and the most formidable ship that will be in the review. In her wake was the protected cruiser Magicienne and behind her came the monster armored cruiser Australia with her sides toothed with fierce looking high power guns. Gliding gracefully next was the cruiser Tarteara and in the rear was the little bark-rigged cruiser Partridge. In perfect line they sailed in with signals flying from their tops and yards and the ensign of the country floating from the taffrails of each ship. At the mast head of the Blake was the pennant of Vice-Admiral J. O. Hopkins, K. C. B. commander-in-chief of the fleet, and upon the signal halyards were combinations of the yellow and white signals to the ships behind her.

Sweeping by the fleet, the Blake slowed down just as she passed the Newark, and when abreast of the Philadelphia the signal was displayed to the other ships to anchor. As quickly as the signal was seen, just as quick were the five bow anchors seen to splash the water into foam, and the deep rumbling of the chain could be heard as forty fathoms ran through the hawse pipes. With the flood tide all five ships promptly swung around with their noses pointed out to the roads, and forming a line extending a mile out. The firing commenced and was kept up incessantly for half an hour. At 11 o'clock Admiral Hopkins put on his cocked hat, buckled his sword on and embarking in his gig was pulled over to the Philadelphia, where he saw Admiral Gherardi, heard 15 guns fired of in his honor; and then departed to his own vessel to get ready to receive our Commander-in-chief, who went through the same preparations and had the same number of guns discharged for his benefit. These courtesies having exchange-ed, the noise was suspended for an hour. Later in the day Admiral Hopkins called on Col. Frank and was received as became his rank. Col. Frank returned the call, and the Blake was again called upon to honor an official of our country.

The weather continues perfect. The sky is as clear as a May day, and the water smooth for the Roads. The barges, steam launches and gigs were plying constantly to the ships carrying those anxious to see the new arrivals. As every every new ship arrive the attention of the ladies changes temporarily to her officers, and today it would seem that the Britishers are to the front.

The Dutch frigate Vanspeyk, late this afternoon, anchored in the Roads. —Sel.

The Revised Version.

Is it a failure? It certainly has not come into general and authorized use in the Churches. It certainly has not displaced the King James' Bible from the affections of the people. It does not command approval as to its style and use of English words. A great number of the changes made were small and unimportant. Before the revision, Ellicott proposed 75 changes in the Sermon on the Mount. The Revision made 127. Bishop How, writing in the Epositor, proposes to reduce these to 24. Yet it remains an invaluable contribution to the study of the Scriptures. It is a splendid gift of modern scholarship to the church. Beyond doubt it has brought the mind of the church nearer to the mind of the Spirit of God in his Word. It is, no doubt, well removed from a final revision. After it has been thoroughly tested, both by scholarship and by the piety of the church, the really valuable results will be gathered. Some day the Spirit of Christ may move the church to another revision. More than ever it will be seen that a fixed principle, in English revision must be that the wonderful translation of King James will be the basis, and from it there must be no variation, except where truth imperatively compels, and then in the accepted language of that "well of English undefiled." —Ex.

Why Christ Failed.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

Ye will not come to me, that ye may have life. John 5:40.

God had a plan of salvation in his mind, and an object in view in sending his son into the world. It was to save man from sin, death, and hell. John 3:16-17; Luke 19:10; 1 Tim. 1:15.

Christ realized the importance of the work committed to his hands, and was intensely in earnest. Isa. 53:11; Luke 19:41.

Christ did not succeed in saving all with whom he came in contact. John 1:10-11. Those whom he came to save murdered him.

Why was this? Christ gives the answer in our text. "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life."

Why was it that men did not accept Christ as their Lord and Saviour? Let us take three representative characters that Christ sought but failed to save, and learn the reason of his failure. The cause of the failure was not in himself. Heb. 6:25; Matt. 23:18.

The first man that I call your attention to is Judas. He was intimately associated with Christ, enjoyed his teaching, witnessed his miracles, and had many manifestations of his loving interest in him. Christ sought to save him even when he was in the act of betraying him. Matt. 26:14-22.

The cause of Christ's failure to save Judas was his covetousness. Judas loved money. This was stronger than his love of justice and truth, or his sense of gratitude. It was the master passion of his soul.

The sin of the world is essentially the sin of Judas. Men do not disbelieve in Christ, but they will sell him. Riches may increase and not injure a man if his heart is not set on them. Matt. 19:16-26. George Peabody commenced life without a penny, but he accumulated a princely fortune. He was a Christian man, and knew his danger. He said that he made it his daily prayer to his Heavenly Father that he would enable him by his wealth to render some benefit to his fellow creatures, and he did. But alas! how rare are such examples as his! The master passion of this day is money getting; but is this worthy of man, his nature and destiny?

When we run over the world's list of great and good men, men who have made the world better, and life richer to all who come after them, we find that they were not rich in this world's goods. Was Christ rich? Were the apostles rich? Wesley, the great religious reformer, when he died left an estate of two silver spoons.

"Michael Faraday said he had no time to make money and so also did the noble Agassiz. Poor John Bunyan, the Bedford tinker, did far more for his fellow-men than did Jay Gould. Many a poor Christian woman, some Sister of Charity, is doing infinitely more to bless and help her fellow creatures than the woman of wealth who spends season after season in the mere exhibition of jewelry and finery. And yet there are thousands of young men in this city who are altogether neglecting the claim of Christ and religion upon them, because they feel, and rightly, that they can't serve Him and Mammon too. They are ruling Him out of their lives, because they are bound to be rich at any and every hazard.

"Alas! the pity and the insanity of it. Make out your list of what money can do for a man and I will make out one of what Christ can do, and we will compare. You write houses, lands, wine, purple, and fine linen, equipage, servants, and 'so forth', and I write truth, purity, manhood, kindness, unselfishness, self abnegation, and instead of your 'so forth' I will write eternal life.

Men in the pursuit of wealth stifle conscience, and crush out conviction of duty to God and their own souls. Mark 10:17-22.

The second failure that I will mention is Pontius Pilate.

He came into close quarters with Christ, and Christ powerfully influenced him. They were alone together in the inner chamber and all that had passed between them, we do not know. But the maguet drew tremendously on Pilate. But it didn't draw him fully to Christ: it failed in the end. Pilate fell wholly, and why? Because of Pilate's moral cowardice. He hadn't the courage of his convictions. He wasn't man enough to do his duty when he knew it. He could not make up his mind to do anything which might jeopardize his political ambition. So he stifles conscience, and crowds back his convictions, and gives up Christ.

How many Pilate's there are in the world today? How many there are in this house now: How many men who have not the courage of their convictions, with reference to Christ, who if they acted upon them would turn to Christ at once. Christ cannot do much for such a man. He is not man enough to go forward in the path of duty where it is plainly set before him. This is why Christ failed to save Pilate.

There was a crisis in the life of Pilate, but his moral courage failed him in that hour. He was not like Moses in the court of Egypt.

"Moses, when 40 years old, experienced a crisis in his life. He made a choice, and he embraced the religion of the Lord Jesus. There was a royal feast in Pharaoh's magnificent palace. The kingly robes of bright purple were bedecked with gold and silver and jewels, and gems of the richest luster and sparkled from the regal diadems. There was wine and frankincense and bewitching music and gathering of captains, courtiers and princes of the realm. In the midst of the nobility reclining on easy couches of blue and gold and scarlet and tapestry and fine twined linen stood the supposed grandson of Pharaoh, the King of Egypt.

"One of the courtiers who stood near him, emboldened with wine, inquired of him, 'Who was that Egyptian you killed the other day and hid him in the sand? Truly you do do as you like because you are the son of Pharaoh's daughter.'

"A bright light suddenly flashed across the conscience stricken Moses. 'Shall my whole life be founded upon a lie?' he inquires within him, and he determinedly reaches the decision which is the turning point in his career. 'I am not the son of Pharaoh's daughter.'

He quits the palace with all its glittering allurements and hurries away to his room. There he casts aside his princely robes, tramples the richest jewels of royalty beneath his feet and leaves the palace in beggarly simplicity. It requires a man to make that choice, to throw off the royal dignity, only to be clothed in the rags of a Hebrew slave. He publicly disclaimed the lie upon which his life was based. He was true to himself and his God.

Every thing that is worth having costs something. Thus it is with the religion of Christ.

"I would not give the snap of my finger for a man's religion which has not cost him anything. 'Give and it shall be given unto you.' God measures unto you happiness, health, hope, pleasures, and blessings of every kind just in the proportion to which you have given Him.

"Religion with you should be a matter of careful calculation. Not emotional, not a surmise; not brought about by any sensational pulpit oratory; but it should be a question of careful calculation with the nicest exactness. The Lord said, 'Count the cost.' A true disciple must deny himself of many things. There must be no rush or gush in your religion. It does not mean a regular occupying of your seat each Sunday, nor merely a respectable outside.

Are you willing to persevere as Moses did in the wilderness for forty years? You must make your choice. You must sacrifice and persevere in the work until God calls you to great success. To be a success in life you must be a religious man of the right sort. Remember the divine truth: 'Godliness is profitable in all things, a promise of life that now is, as well as the life to come.'

"God saw Moses in the fiery bush. He saw him at the head of over half a million of His people proudly marching out of Egypt and Pharaoh and his army swept over by the sea. The Lord God says: 'Prove Me and I will open the window of Heaven and let down a blessing.'

The third signal failure to which I will refer was those who were about the bar of Pilate, who chose Barrabas instead of Christ. Barrabas was a robber. Christ had lived a noble and useful life in their midst, but they cared nothing for this when they came to choose. The robber and the benefactor were standing together, the robber and the benefactor, and they prefer the robber. Why? Because the benefactor told them the truth—told them that they were sinful men, and needed the Saviour, and that he had come to save them.

"But they didn't want a Saviour, they wanted a temporal prince. They wanted show and glitter, not salvation. Christ became their enemy because He told them the truth? How many of us can bear the truth? How many of us are turning away from Christ because He tells us that we are lost sinners to be saved only by His precious blood, instead of our own righteousness?

Notice in each of these three cases the terrible Nemesis. Judas rejected Christ for gold, and what were the results? What did he gain? In a few hours his conscience was quickened, and the gold burned his soul so that that he flings it at the feet of the High Priest, and went out and hanged himself. He could not endure the fire of remorse that burned hotter than the fires of Tophet in his soul. How many who have sold Christ for gold suffered the same dreadful anguish of soul. A rich landlord, ordered his steward to turn out a poor widow with four children, one of them too sick to be removed, because she could not pay the rent. They were driven out, and the sick child perished in the woods. The landlord lay down to rest in his summer-house; but the murmuring of a brook that flowed near by seemed to him to imitate the crying of the poor children. Then he heard distant thunder that sounded to him as the voice of justice. His gardens and his wealth became hateful to him. He became delirious. Every sound was an accusing voice. So he died.

How was it with Pilate who sold Christ for popular favor, and that he might keep on good terms with Cesar? In a few years Cesar recalled and banished him to a distant country. There, in his isolation from all that had inspired and given him happiness, he sank into despondency, and killed himself. God is from everlasting to everlasting and his justice never fails. Every man's sins find him out.

The Hebrews preferred a robber to Christ, and crucified him. Only forty years passed and we see Titus with his mighty army thundering at the gates of Jerusalem. The city falls and over one million of Jews perish in its fall. It was an awful scene unparalleled in the history of the world.

If there is any thing that we deliberately prefer to Christ, we may get it, but the chances are that in the end it will be the plague and ruin of our lives. Judas got money in exchange for Christ, but what did it do for him? It was a blighting curse, and he flung it from him as through it had been a poisonous reptile.

We have a glorious Saviour who is willing and able to save the vilest of sinners, and he has redeemed millions who are now rejoicing in heaven; but he cannot save man against his will, for this would not be salvation. It would be coercion, and this would not, and could not make the man happy.

Christ has shown in every possible way his willingness and power to save sinners; but he cannot save them unless they are willing to be saved. The eternal destiny of man turns on this point. Looking with sorrow upon the unbelieving Jews Christ said, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life."

The right of the States to restrict and control the liquor traffic has once more, been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, which gives additional encouragement to those engaged in the conflict with the mighty rum monster. The case in which this decision was made was appealed under habeas corpus proceedings from the Supreme court of Texas, before which a man had been tried and convicted of selling liquor without a license, to the United States Circuit court, and the plea made that the liquor law of Texas, which in addition to other requirements makes the giving of a bond for $5,000 necessary before an applicant is granted a license to sell liquor, conflicted with the guarantees contained in the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The Circuit court decided that the plea was not well taken, because there was nothing in the 14th amendment which prohibited a state making such regulations as it might see fit for the control of the liquor traffic, and an appeal was taken. Now that the United States Supreme court adds the weight of its decision to that of the circuit and state courts the question of the right of several states impose even the most oppressive—it would be impossible to make them too oppressive—restrictions upon the sale of liquor should be considered as settled, but it probably will not be so long as big fees can tempt shrewd lawyers into trying to discover weak spots in our laws. The opinion in this case was prepared and read by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller.

Can you imagine a more horrible fate than for a man to die intoxicated? Last Sunday a man was buried who only a few years ago was regarded as one of the ablest business men of the city, a man whom everybody thought certain to get to the top, in a worldly sense; but he didn't. On the contrary he got to the bottom. He began his downward course with the social business drink, as so many before him had done. Later he became a habitual drinker, then a drunkard, and then, while under the influence of liquor, a murderer. The good woman he married before he became a slave to rum stood by him throughout his imprisonment and trial and when he was acquitted and promised never to drink again she wept tears of joy. But it was too late; his promise was broken, his faithful wife beaten, and he again became a drunkard and was finally crushed to death while drunk, by the wheels of an electric car. What a career! and what a warning for the young men who see no harm in a social drink. The holy man who officiated at the funeral had known the deceased and his wife for years, and for that reason the portion of his remarks quoted below was all the more impressive. He said: "Friends, he has gone. But there are some things I ought to speak of as a minister of God. Shall I say I cannot but feel there would have been a living man, a man Washington could be proud of, but for the presence in this city of the devastating saloon? We stand in the presence of one of its catastrophes. When shall we see the flaunting sign taken down that ruins so many men of noble impulse? I dare not stand here, with a determination to be true to God, and leave this said."

A more sincere compliment, although probably not so intended, was never paid the Woman's Christian Temperance Union than when one of a group of disappointed politicians who were discussing a Territorial appointment said: "Well, the fact of the matter is, we were unable to overcome the influence of the W. C. T. U., which was against our candidate because of his being a drinking man."

SELECTIONS.

A Sailor's Burial.

When maritime Jack dies he is buried without undue ceremony. A brief prayer, a shotted hammock, the lee rail, and all is over. But on board a ship of war a sailor's funeral is pathetic in its dignified simplicity. No muster of the ship's company is, naturally, so sad as this, and you can see it on the face of all when the subdued shrilling of the bo'sw'n's whistle is followed by the long drawn out and modulated call of "All hands to bury the dead!" The men come aft quickly and take their allotted stations. To leeward, if it be at sea, or upon the port side of the quarter deck if in port, the seamen are ranged in the front rank; behind them are the ordinary seamen; and in the rear of both, the apprentices and the landsmen. In the gangway forward of the mainmast, on such ships as still have sail power, senior petty officers stand at attention. Around the coffin, folded in the jack or national ensign, are grouped the pallbearers, selected usually from the dead man's mess or gun division, and close at hand, resting on arms, the marine guard is paraded. Nearest the coffin are the chaplain and the captain, and then in order of their rank stretch aft the other officers of the ship.

The ensign at the peak or staff flutters tremblingly at half mast, and from overhead the yard and stay tackles swing lazily, ready to lift the coffin outboard. When the weather permits the way of the ship is stopped, and, it may be, little flocks of idling steam curl upward and leeward like incense, and the wind in the backed and fretting topsails murmurs a dirge. The order to "uncover" is passed gently, and while the beautiful words of the burial service are being read the hush of the living is accentuated by the low accompaniments of sea sounds—by the rumble of eager waters eddying sternward, and by the surging of the breeze in the hollows of the canvas and through the rigging and gear. When the closing prayer is said, the last blessing given, the tackles are manned, the coffin is stripped of its flags and slung in straps, and slowly, reverently, is hoisted above the rail and clear of the ship, until it is poised above the billows. The marines load, aim, fire, in all three volleys, that awaken rattling echoes in the hidden space of the ship; the bugle sounds "taps" tenderly and sweetly, with a newer meaning of sleep and rest; the coffin swings further out, and is lowered gently until the foam and spoon-drift moisten it; the tackles are detached with sudden jerk, and in an instant the weighted box shoots downward, bedded in foam and bubbles, and all is over until the sea gives up the dead.

In a little while the cheery whistles trill out a call to duty, the half masted ensign climbs to the dasher block, the ship is brought to her course and dazedly the men take up the wearying routine of the lives so sadly broken. An unusual quiet rests upon the vessel and around the mess table; but in groups gathered to smoke during the supper hour and after the hammocks are piped down, the virtues—those heroic and honest sea virtues—of the dead sailor are recalled and with a tenderness born of a comradeship closer than any other men except soldiers may know.—Lieutenant J. D. J. Kelly, in New York Tablet.

Prayer For Rain.

The giving of rain is a divine prerogative; heathen rain-makers and modern scientists have never yet proved that they knew the ballancing of the clouds, or could supply the need of rain from heaven. The Prophet Jeremiah asks the question, "are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? or not thou He, O Lord our God? there fore we wait upon thee: for thou hast made all these things." Jer. xiv. 22. Again and again the Scriptures speak of rain as from the Lord. He "caused it to rain upon one city, and not to rain upon another." Amos iv. 7. In time past "He left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." Acts xiv. 17. He has sent plentiful rain to confirm his inheritance when it was weary. Psa. lxxviii. 9. He "giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the fields," (Job. v. 10); and though we talk of the laws of nature as ruling the air and the sky, Job understood more clearly, when he said that God

"made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder." Job xxviii. 26. "He saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth; likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength." Job xxxvii 6. The Psalmist calls upon all to sing with thanksgiving unto the Lord "who covereth the heaven with clouds, who prepareth rain for the earth, who maketh grass to grow upon the mountains." Psa. cxlvii. 8.

Repeatedly does the Scripture furnish us with instances where in answer to prayer God has sent rain upon the earth; and the same God still lives, the refuge and the trust of all who seek his face; and he still hears prayer and sends rain. But men turn to every other source for help, they try grumbling, scolding, and swearing about the weather, forgetting that it is God that "sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust," and causeth His sun to shine upon the evil and the good. Matt. v. 45. Thus the land is often parched with drouth. "Because of swearing the land mourneth." (Jer. xxiii. 10) and He who turneth "a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." Psa. cvii. 34. There are lands where suffering, starvation, and famine have prevailed, but they are lands where soil has been defiled with innocent blood. Thus when Cain had slain his brother it was said unto him, "Now thou art cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brothers' blood from thy hand: when thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth." Gen. iv. 11, 12. It was thus in the land of Israel, when Saul had shed innocent blood. 2 Sam. xxi. 1. It has been thus in India, in Russia, in Ireland, and wherever innocent blood has stained the soil, and men have lived forgetful of the Most High. But when men will turn to God, and seek his mercy, he is a God at hand and not afar off, and he can cause the clouds to drop fatness, and the fields to smile with plenty. Thank the Lord that there are some who in the simplicity of their hearts still believe in God; and while others curse, and swear, and blaspheme, they turn for help and blessing, to Him who gives the sunshine and sends the rain.

The following account of prayer for rain from the pen of Mr. A. C. Rogers of Shanghai, is taken from the Y. M. C. Association paper, Our Herald, for Jan, 1892.

"One of the Chinese Christians there, a very earnest man, suggested to the missionary stationed there, that all the Christians should meet and pray to God specially for rain on a certain day, and to make it known that they were going to pray to the God of heaven for rain. Well, the missionary felt rather dubious about it, and decided to wait on God. After having done this he called the Chinese Christians together, and they fixed a day for conference and prayer, and had placards printed and hung up inside the chapel, to the effect that they were going to pray for rain. On the day appointed the missionary, in company with the Chinese Christians, repaired to a vacant piece of land, and began having a service, in which the missionary and the others took part, speaking of how true God in times past answered prayer. By and by quite a crowd collected, as it had got noised about that they would pray for rain.

"The day was clear, and no sign of rain. The missionary was rather dubious, but one of the Christians—the one who had suggested the idea—was quite sure rain would come. Afternoon drew on, and still no sign of rain indeed the wind was dead against it. Still they continued in prayer, and soon the heavens became blacker and blacker, and the wind changed. So they said to the people, unless you soon get home you will all get soaked. Before they could get home, it began to pour, and poured for hours! At this the people were so glad, that they overcame their prejudice, and even asked the missionary to come into their house till the rain should stop! When the missionary and the Christians were going to the place appointed they crossed a creek over the bed of it, but on returning they had to go over a bridge, the water had risen so much."

"A Port Adelaide paper suggests that a few Christian Chinese at Broken Hill would be a good investment.—Anyway, the trustful simplicity of those at Shanghai should make many of us who are more highly favored, look to it that our faith fail not."—Christian.

Christ's Spirit, A Fire.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

ON this sharp wintry evening, as I look into the cheerful glow of a well-filled grate, I open my Bible and read this passage: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire." This was John the Baptist's description of Jesus Christ and of the spiritual work which he would perform. Baptism, in this passage, signifies the divine influence on human souls. John meant to say to his auditors: "I indeed baptize your bodies in water, to a profession of repentance; but he that cometh after me is so far superior to me that he will bathe your souls in the effusion of the Holy Spirit and of fire."

Jesus Christ sends his mighty influence through his Spirit, and he sends it after the fashion or type of a heavenly flame.

The most precious promise which Jesus made to his disciples was that, after his ascension to Heaven, the Paraclete or "the Comforter" would come, and in his farewell address to them, he gave them this assurance, "ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days hence." Accordingly, a few days afterward, when they were assembled for prayer in the upper room, a sound from Heaven as of a mighty wind swept through the apartment, and upon each of them appeared a body of flame, "like tongues parted asunder." That was the descent of the Spirit of Jesus Christ into the hearts of his followers. That body of lambent flame was the emblem of kindled heat, the purifying work and imparted power from above which Christ's Spirit was bestowing. From that hour those disciples became different men and women; they went out into the world with a tongue of fire and a life of light. We need not wonder that three thousand souls were converted in a single day, and that all Jerusalem was exclaiming, "what meaneth all this?"

What came upon that little band of Christians in that prayer-room is the indispensable want of every church and of every Christian now. That divine flame is ready for us all, if we are ready to receive it and are longing for it. There is a strong temptation often with pastors to resort to some methods for arousing their people and for converting souls; but such methods are apt to prove only a blaze of pine shavings that soon ends in smoke. Christians may often mistake the cause of their coldness and spiritual barrenness. At this midwinter season many people fall, naturally, into the error that the sun emits less heat than during the midsummer. This is not so. While we are shivering with the cold, the fact is that the mighty furnace of the sun is glowing with the same heat as in July, a heat so intense that it would melt a column of ice fifty miles in diameter as fast as it shot toward the sun, even tho it flew with the velocity of light. The simple reason why we are ice-bound in January is that our globe lies at another angle toward the solar furnace, and only receives its indirect radiations. The change is not in the sun, but in our position.

The reason why any Christian is cold or why a church gets frozen up is that they have swung away from Christ, and have put themselves into the same position toward him that our earth now has toward the sun. When a Christian neglects prayer, he neglects his duty and backslides into worldliness, he throws himself out of the sunlight of Christ's countenance. His spiritual winter is of his own making. So with an ice-bound church in which formality or fashion, or neglect of prayer and work, or other grievous sins have so lowered the spiritual temperature that the plants of grace are frost bitten. The conduit pipes through which prayer ascends, and spiritual blessings descend, are frozen up. The prayer-meeting is a refrigerator, and no poor sinner is attracted there to be warmed or cheered, to be converted or comforted. Conversions in such a church have sunk down to zero.

The first duty of a cold Christian, or a church of such frigid Christians, is to recognize and to confess their sins. He that covereth his sins—or seeks to make a scapegoat of his pastor—will find no mercy at the hands of God. But the soul that honestly says: "I have wandered from thee, O my Savior; I have drifted off into the wintry atmosphere of selfishness and worldliness; forgive my shameful sins, and help me to turn from my backslidings"—the soul that makes this confession takes the first step toward recovery. With this confession must come a return to duty. This means a reconversion, such as backsliding Peter had. It is a coming back to Jesus Christ. "He that is nearest to me is nearest to the fire," is one of the traditional utterances attributed to our Lord. Whether he ever uttered it or not, it is undeniably true that the only hope for a freezing soul is to flee from a state of indulged sin and to hasten back to Christ. As Spurgeon once said: "All will come right when we are right." All will come right with the preaching and the prayer-meeting and the whole church machineries; a new converting power will be felt in the congregation just as soon as the church swings back into the light and warmth of Christ's countenance. Frozen tongues will begin to speak in the devotional meetings; frozen purses will thaw out and begin to give liberally; frozen hearts will begin to melt. Christians will begin to live differently, not only in the prayer-room, but in their own houses and places of business; the change will not be only on Sunday, it will be every day a change of conduct and of character. This is the revival that is needed. When the spirit of Jesus Christ is restored as a living flame, then winter is turned into spring; preaching becomes a tongue of fire; sinners' hard hearts are melted, and the whole atmosphere becomes instinct with the glow of brotherly love.

Second: Not only is Christ's Spirit essential to melting our hearts. He is the only Purifier. The prophet Malachi predicted him as a "refiner's fire" No water of reformation can remove the ingrained filth and pollution of sin. As one of the greatest of living preachers has truly said: "The only way to purify a soul is to do with it as they do with foul clay—thrust it into the fire, and that will burn the blackness out of it." My friend, get the fire of Jesus Christ into your heart to melt you down, and then the dross will come to the top and you can skim it off! Two things will conquer sin. First, the atoning blood of Jesus, which cleanses away the guilt of past wrong-doing. The other is the indwelling flame of Christ's Spirit in my soul, consuming evil lusts and keeping up the pure glow of love. We cannot create fire. We can only receive it and use it.

Third. Neither can we create spiritual power. In the natural world there is just as much power in the wind, and we must set our sails to catch it. There is a certain amount of power in a thousand tons of coal. Kindle a fire under the furnace of the "Etruria" or the "Teutonic" and those majestic steamers will march against head seas at twenty miles an hour. In like manner when the Divine Spirit takes hold of our faculties, our affections and our wills, then are we endued with might in the inner man. Do you want more power, brother? Then open your heart to Jesus Christ, and give him full control. "Without Me ye can do nothing!"

Now we can see the sin and crime of quenching the Holy Spirit. As soon extinguish the fire in your dwelling during these freezing days of winter. Those church members who help to quench the divine Spirit, which alone gives life, commit a sort of willful murder of souls. Resist not that blessed Spirit—either by committed sin or by neglect of duty! Blow every spark into a brighter flame by working in cooperation with Christ! Come, oh, holy and loving Jesus, into all our souls as a living fire, warming our affections, killing our selfishness, consuming our lusts, filling us with power to work for thee, and making us burning and shining lights to thy glory in this dark, sinful world!—Independent.

DIED.

Sister Francis King, a member of Union church, N. C., and a devoted Christian woman, was burned to death Saturday, April 1, 1893. Sister King lived in Caswell Co. She had been to church, and was returning home. She passed through a piece of wood that was burning. Her dress caught from the burning trash near the road, and in a few minutes she was burned to death. Sister King leaves a husband, two sons and many friends and relatives to mourn their loss. In the midst of life we are in death.

Near Liberty in Franklin Co., N. C., April 6, Miss Jesse E., daughter of James G. Lassiter, in her 14th year. This dear sister was converted under my ministry and united with the church at Liberty, and was baptised by me more than a year since. I understand that she was patient under her affliction, and died in the triumphs of a living faith in Jesus. She was a faithful Sunday school scholar from her childhood. Dear parents, where she is you can go also.

It hath been said that death loves a shining mark, and it verily seems true in the death of Miss Blanche Long which occurred last Wednesday evening, March 29th, at the home of her parents in Graham, N. C. Her father, Dr. G. W. Long, had serious apprehensions from the first, and for nearly three weeks watched by her bedside night and day. He summoned to his aid the best of medical skill, but all to no avail. Death came Wednesday as the last lingering rays of a golden sunset were fading away to shine no more, and a sweet and gentle life passed into eternity to shine evermore. A few evenings before she was taken sick, in company with a relative, she was taking a walk, when the beautiful sunset attracted her attention.

They stopped and watched the golden rays as they passed away and she said, when I die I want my life to pass away as the sunset fades. It was my happy privilege to be in charge of the meeting in which she confessed her Saviour. She was a bright and happy convert, and from that day her light continued to shine brightly. It grew not dim, but shone more brightly as the days went by. I remember her as a golden haired little girl when I was a school boy here some ten years ago. She was bright and happy then. She grew up, and was just blooming into beautiful womanhood. The flower was not full blown, and ere it could unfold fully, death's rude hand plucked it. But death could not destroy. It lives in a more healthful clime. But sorrowing hearts remain. They may find comfort in the fact, that Blanche is not dead. She has only gone before.

"Death's but a path that must be trod
If man would ever pass to God."

The funeral services were conducted last Friday afternoon the 31st. There was an immense crowd that attended the services. The services were very impressive, and the floral tribute's beautiful beyond description.

All hearts were filled with sorrow and tears fell from eyes unused to weep as we performed the last sad rites. But is Blanche dead? Oh! no.

She is not dead. "There is no death, what seems so is transition.

"This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the elysian
Whose portal we call death."

The bereaved ones have the sympathy of all who know them. Sorrow not dear friends, for your heavenly Father knoweth best.

A Sketch of Mrs. Ann Judson's Life.

[Prepared by Miss Lucy Jones and read before the Missionary Meeting at Elon College April 2, 1893, and published by request.]

A Roman poet once said that being a man himself he felt an interest in everything that related to mankind, and it is this universal sympathy which has always given a charm to biography.

History, which has been called, "philosophy teaching by example" owes the greater part of its usefulness and interest to sketches of individual character.

A large portion of the Bible consists of biography, and it is remarkable too, that God has thought proper to mention in his word, with honorable commendation many "holy women" whose lives were full of good works.

The lamented individual, a sketch of whose life is attempted in this essay was indeed, a great woman. Not great from a worldly point of view, but great in that she so earnestly sought to do God's will in the face of all difficulties.

Mrs. Judson was the daughter of Mr. John and Mrs. Rebecca Hasseltine. She was born in Bradford, Mass., Dec. 22, 1789, and was known to the public almost wholly as a Missionary.

In her earliest years, she was distinguished by activity of mind, extreme gaiety, a strong relish for social amusements, and unusually ardent feelings. She had an eager thirst for knowledge, and a book could allure her from her favorite walks and from the gayest social circle.

She was educated at the Academy in Bradford. Here she pursued her studies with much success and so conducted herself that her teachers and associates ever regarded her with respect and esteem.

Early in life she expressed a desire to be a Christian, but being naturally of a gay mind, and fond of social amusement, she found it very hard to break off from the world. But at last by constant prayer and watchfulness, she was enabled to separate herself from worldliness, and became a zealous Christian.

During the session of the General Association at Bradford, in 1810, Dr. Judson, who was soon to sail as a missionary to Burmah, first saw Miss Hasseltine. An acquaintance was formed, which resulted in the marriage of Dr. Judson and Miss Hasseltine, Feb. 5, 1812.

Before she decided to go as a missionary she sought by earnest prayer to know whether or not she should give her life to that work. She asked the advice of her friends, but received but very little encouragement. No woman had ever left America to go as a missionary to the foreign field. The general opinion was decidedly opposed to the measure. It was deemed wild and romantic in the extreme. Amid all the discouragement she at length felt that God would have her go, and to show you her conscientiousness in the matter we will quote a few lines from her journal, written just after she made her decision. "If I have been deceived in thinking it my duty to go to the heathen, I humbly pray that I may be undeceived and prevented from going. But whether I spend my days in India or America. I desire them in the service of God and be prepared to spend an eternity in his presence.

The resolution of Dr. and Mrs. Judson to devote themselves to the service of their Master as missionaries was not formed blindly and hurriedly. They had calmly estimated the hazards and toils of the missionary enterprise.

They foresaw what it would cost them what they would have to do and suffer and yet they yielded themselves as willing sacrifices, for the sake of the far distant heathen.

They sailed from Salem, in the brig Caravan, on Feb. 19, 1812, for Calcutta. Mrs. Judson was now embarked on her great enterprise. She had, as she supposed taken a last farewell of her friends on earth, and was hastening to distant lands to wear out her life in teaching the dying idolaters of India knowledge of that Savior, who died on Calvary, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life.

The voyage was attended with many difficulties but the thought of being the means of leading some poor heathen women to Christ, overbalanced all Mrs. Judson's trials.

The missionaries arrived at Calcutta, on the 18th of June, 1812, and from thence they went to Burmah where the greatest part of their missionary work was done. They found the Burmese in a low state of heathenism. Mrs. Judson at once commenced the study of the language, and as soon as possible began to teach them of Christ. She spent the remainder of her life among the heathen, and none of the difficulties with which she met ever caused her to regret being a missionary.

During her missionary life she visited America once, but remained only a short while. She felt that she was losing precious time in which she might be leading souls to Christ.

The state of her health repeatedly forced her from the scene of her labors; but she returned as soon as her recruited health would permit.

After spending 14 years in this glorious work. Mrs. Judson died on the 24th, October, 1826.

Her habitual piety was her most lovely and important trait. It was not an official devotion assumed on particular occasions, but she was everywhere and at all times, the true Christian and Missionary.

Let us hope that her bright example will inspire many others with the generous resolution to labor and to die, like her, for the salvation of the heathen.

The females of Burmah are lively, strong and energetic, susceptible of friendship and the warmest attachment and possess minds naturally capable of rising to the highest state of cultivation and refinement. And shall we the honored daughters of America, suffer minds like these to lie dormant, to wither in ignorance and delusion, to grope their way to eternal ruin, without an effort on our part, to raise, to refine, to elevate, and to point to that Savior who died for all?

Shall we sit down in indolence and ease, and indulge in all the luxuries with which we are surrounded, and which our country so bountifully affords, and leave beings like these to perish, to sink into eternal misery? No! by all the tender ties of which the female mind is susceptible, by our own duty to God, and our fellow creatures, and by the blood and groans of him who died on Calvary, let us make a united effort, let us call on all to join us in attempting to meliorate the situation, to instruct, to enlighten, and save females in the Eastern world. If we cannot go, as did Mrs. Judson, let us stay as did Fuller, and like him, let us give liberally of our means, speak encouraging words, and offer prayers of faith in behalf of the Mission cause.

Notes From Harvard.

We anticipated an interesting bit of the World's Fair the other day. There is quite a novel story connected with this, but will not tell it here—will simply tell what the "bit" was we saw. Why, it was only a lady's dress. It was brought over from Paris and was put on exhibition for a few days in Boston. It was interesting and fine to look upon. It is known as the "Royal Costume"—but then no royal personage or any other woman ever wore it. It was said to have been ordered by the Empress of Russia—but then she died knowing anything about it and so never got the dress (and just here comes in the novel story which we will not take space here to tell.) But the dress said to be the most costly costume in the world. Total cost $40,000.00. Thread and embroidery used in the making is all of pure gold and alone cost $11,200.00. The embroidery work was all done by the hands of nuns and was two years in the doing. The material of the costume is white satin. The train is nine yards long. It is all lined with ermine skins and 2,500 of these animals were sacrificed for the lining of this single costume. It is said to be the finest piece of dress-making ever yet accomplished. But I am sure I don't know.

We are having some interesting lectures along now. Prof. Henry Drummond of Edinburgh, Scotland is, lecturing twice a week in Boston now on "The Evolution of Man." He is to preach for us here at Harvard next Sunday and Sunday following and also lecture "to the students only" two or three times next (this) week. The Sun's readers will remember Prof. Drummond as the author of that world famous book "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" and also of that possibly more popular and widely read little book "The Greatest Thing in the World." I will possibly speak of his lectures and sermons in my next letter—have not yet heard him enough to give any valid estimate of him as a lecturer. I would guess that Prof. Drummond has had more readers for the past four or five years than any other living man I had never hoped to have the pleasure of hearing him—but sometimes events and circumstances unexpected take place.

Our friend Mr. Wray—or rather "John"—who has been our "third partner" here all the year leaves us this week. We shall miss him very much and he carries with him back to N. C. our best wishes. He was a Wake Forest student. Has decided to enter the ministry. Goes from here back to Wake Forest for two or three months study and expects to enter some theological seminary next fall. John is a big-hearted, whole-soul, congenial fellow, and is a public speaker of already no mean reputation, and will doubtless make a success in this chosen and high calling. He came to Harvard last fall with the expectation of soon entering upon the study of the law. He now feels otherwise impressed. There is plenty room in the Master's vineyard and God bless and increase the laborers.

Children's Day Program.

A Service of Song and Recitation for the Sunday school, by Rev. C. V. Strickland. Price, per single copy 5 cents; per dozen copies 50 cents; sent postpaid on receipt of price.

Rev. C. V. Strickland has been very persevering in his labors to have the observance of Children's Day made a success in the Christian church, and by the use of literature and music by those of our own denomination, his efforts have met with a high degree of success.

The Programs for this year are better than previous ones, as good as they were.

We would urge that all who contemplate, and we hope it is every school in our church, celebrating a Children's Day will order early that we may be able to get them to you in time. Send orders to Clements and Mood, Raleigh, N. C.

Shall the Sunday School Convention of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference Be Continued?

MR. EDITOR:—In answer to Bro. Foster's request, permit me to offer a few suggestions.

It would be a step backward in our denominational work should our S. S. Convention cease to exist. We cannot afford to let it die. Organizations of a like character are essential to the advancement and success of any work promoting the welfare of people generally. If we do not move forward with some preconcerted plan and some combined effort, we will accomplish nothing. We must accomplish something. Our cause is loudly calling us to be up and doing. If we as a denomination do not do our duty in the Sunday School work, some one else will do it for us, will get all the reward, and we will be left with guilty consciences to trouble us in the great hereafter. We cannot afford to let the Convention discontinue. There is too great and grand a work before us to let anything like that occur. Let us not be discouraged by the small attendance which we had at our last convention, for we must remember that while the number was small, they were all good workers, and the financial feature was brighter than it had ever been previously to that time. Less than half the churches in the Convention were represented, but the work done then was by no means in vain. Let us have another convention, and if it is not any larger than the last one, let us try to make it more interesting and profitable to ourselves. And while writing on this subject, I would like to offer a suggestion with reference to the program. Instead of putting men, or women down on the program for a speech or an essay, without knowing whether they will attend the convention, first drop them a postal asking whether they will attend and deliver a speech or an essay on some subject, and if they think they can do so, then print their names on the program, but not otherwise. This will influence all speakers to be prepared for their part of the work, and more interest and benefit will be derived.

In conclusion, I want to request all our ministers to boom the Sunday-school work, and endeavor to arouse some enthusiasm in our churches for the work. Talk to them about the work, encourage them in it, see that they all elect representatives to the next convention, and also send up the assessments asked for at the last session. We can have a large convention if we will try, and one that will do us good. If there is one held and I am able to get there, I shall be on hand to do my part of the work as best I can.

Very truly,
HERBERT SCHOLZ.

A Side Track.

A great deal has been said through the SUN on the "Right of woman to preach." I do not feel that I can say any thing to aid in the decision that so many are looking for, but I would like to suggest a side track for their car while the main line is under contest. If the good sisters will go to work in the Sunday school they will find no opposition, but will view in the rising generation abundant reward for their labors in intelligent, zealous, Christians, and an appreciation of woman's interest in the cause of Christ.

Yours in the work,
IRA CONNELLY, S. S. M.

Bethel.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—The first Sunday and Saturday before in April was the regular appointment at Bethel. It was decided to have the church dedicated the fifth Sunday in April. Saturday after preaching the doors of the church were opened and one member received. The Sabbath school is doing a good work.

Fraternally,
THOMAS W. STROWD.

Elon College Notes.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We failed to tell you the most important item of news that has come to us in quite a while. One of our fellow students for whom we have been praying for some time attended the Y. M. C. A. Convention last week and while there he gave his heart to God and has publicly declared his determination to spend the remainder of his days in consecration and service to God. Oh! what a blessed thing it is to see the young men of our country turn their backs on sin and the world and enlist as all bold soldiers in the army of the Lord. This is especially important and encouraging since these young men have such a mighty influence upon those by whom they are surrounded; and it is upon these, that the mantle of government must soon fall; it is these young men who will soon have to take in hand the sword of the spirit and become leaders in the church. Then young man, since the work will soon fall upon you, let the close each day find you better prepared than you were at the beginning.

Dr. W. S. Long, Jr. took his leave for Eastern Virginia last night, where he will pursue his work in Dental Surgery. The Dr. leaves many friends in the Old North State. We have tried his work and we are glad to recommend him to the good people of the "Golden spot of the world."

We have some more good news for you. The Baccalaureate sermon on the 7th, of June, will be preached by our wellknown and beloved Dr. James Maple of N. J. The Literary address will be delivered by our honored and distinguished friend, E. E. Holland of Suffolk, Va. All who fail to be present on that occasion will certainly miss a treat. We know this, for we have had the pleasure of listening to the above named.

Sunday School Convention? Yes, every time. Never fail. We are sorry that we cannot entertain the delegates who would be expected, but we want to send some delegates where all can be accommodated we know that you can do us good; and we hope to do you good also. I tell you we need organization, work, and unity in the Sunday schools of our land, and until we have this we will not do the work that we should do.

Truly yours,
ELIJAH MOFFITT.

Philosopher and Grumbler.

One day a philosopher came to Athens, from a far country, to learn the ways of the wonderful Greeks, and perhaps to teach them the great love he treasured in his heart. The wise men heard him; sought his company in the gardens; talked with him in private. The young men loved him. He passed for a wonder among the people. Among those that followed him was an illfavoured young man, a mechanic of humble rank, the son of Sophronicus. He was one of the few that understood the dark oriental doctrines of the sage, when he spoke of God, man, freedom, goodness, of the life that never dies. The young man saw these doctrines were pregnant with actions, and would one day work a revolution in the affairs of men. So he said to himself, when he saw a man rich or famous, "Oh, that I also were rich and famous, I would move the world so soon. Here are sins to be plucked up and truths to be planted. Oh, that I could do it all, I would mend the world right soon." Yet did nothing but wait for wealth and fame.

One day the sage heard him complain with himself, and said, "Young man, thou speakest as silly women. The Gospel of God is written for all. Let him that would move the World, move first himself. He that would do good to men begins with what tools God gives him, and gets more as the work gets on. It asks neither wealth nor fame to live a noble life. Make thy light thy life; thy thought action; others will come round. Thou askest a place to stand on hereafter and move the world. Foolish young man, take it where thou standest, and begin now. So thy work shall go forward. Reform thy little self, and thou hast begun to reform the world. Fear not thy work shall die."

The youth took the hint; reformed himself of his coarseness, his sneers, of all meanness that was in him. His idea became his life; and that blameless and lovely. His truth passed into the public mind as the sun into the air. His influence passes like morning from continent to continent, and the rich and the poor are blessed by the wisdom and warmed by the light of Socrates, though they know not his name.

The Beauty of Quiet Lives.

There are great multitudes of lowly lives lived on the earth which have no name among men, whose work no pen ever records, but which are well known and unspeakably dear to God. They make no noise in the world, but it needs no noise to make a life beautiful and noble. Many of God's most potent ministers are noiseless. How silently the sunbeams fall all day long upon the fields and gardens, and yet what joy, cheer and life they diffusel! How silently the flowers bloom, and yet what sweet fragrance they emit! How silently the stars move on in their majestic marches around God's throne, and yet they are suns or worlds. So Christ has many earthly servants, who work so quietly that they are never known among men as workers, whom He writes down among His noblest ministers. They do no great things; but they are blessings, oftentimes, perhaps, unconsciously wherever they go.—Exchange.

Bro. E. D. Turner reports a good meeting at Lexington, N. C., with 34 conversions and 32 accessions to date.

We know whereof we speak, when we say nothing in the SUN is read with more interest than the Suffolk letters.

The First Baptist church in this city has secured the services of an evangelist and are conducting revival services.

Let every body get ready to attend the commencement at Elon College this year. A good time for those who go.

Our esteemed friend, T. C. Sears of Morrisville, N. C., has been in quite poor health for some time. Let prayer go up for his recovery.

This is the month to take the collections for the Norfolk Memorial church, if you have not already done so. The work is going forward.

We intended to publish this week several articles respecting the Norfolk church but failed to receive them soon enough. They will appear next week.

Rev. T. B. Dawson has had much sickness in his family during the winter and spring; but has not failed to work for the SUN. May the Lord bless this dear brother and family.

Hon. E. E. Holland of Suffolk, Va., will deliver the Literary address at Elon College this year. Again the Literary societies are to be congratulated upon their wisdom and good taste.

Rev. J. W. Wellons reports good attendance, and a seriousness on the part of the congregation that bodes much good for the welfare of souls. Six conversions and one accession up to Tuesday morning.

We have received the Children's Day Programs prepared by Rev. C. V. Strickland, and find them to be very nice indeed. We can supply schools or individuals with them at 5 cents each or 50 cents a dozen. Order early.

Friends sending money to the SUN office for either old or new subscribers, will please ALWAYS give the post office; and, if the paper is to be changed, give the office to which it is going, and the one, to which it is to be sent. By doing this you will save us great trouble.

The SUN, with all other North Carolina papers, rejoices in the appointment of Prof. Eben Alexander of the University of North Carolina as minister to Greece, Romania and Servia. He is in every way qualified for the high position, to which he has been appointed.

N. C. Baptist says. The population of Jerusalem is under 50,000, the most correct information available making it not over 47,000. Of this number 20,000 are Mohammedans and Christians. The number of Jews in Palestine at the present time does not exceed 55,000.

If I could borrow Jacob's ladder and climb into heaven, and ask Gabriel, who stands in the presence of the almighty, if he could tell me how much love the father has for the world, all that he could say would be, "God so loved the world that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—MOODY.

Forgiveness.

Forgiveness is a principle that enters largely into the system of Christianity. It stands at the gateway of our spiritual kingdom. A mistake made upon this question brings troubles innumerable. Hence, the importance of a correct idea of Bible teaching on this line of thought. The scriptural teachings are so contrary to man's natural disposition, that the Bible idea of forgiveness is often kept in the back ground.

The relative idea between the forgiveness of God and that of men are quite different in their results. The former elevates and makes better the object of forgiveness, the latter elevates and makes better the subject of forgiveness. God forgives A. this act does not change God, but changes the condition of A. On the other hand A. forgives B, another man, it may not make B. any the better, but it changes the feelings of A.; so God's forgiveness works in one way and man's in another.

Religious thought is divided on the question of man's forgiveness. Some holding that we are not required to forgive those who have wronged us until they ask us to do so, others taking the position that, in the heart, we must forgive our enemies whether they ask it or not. That the latter idea is right, we shall undertake to prove.

1. To forgive our enemies broadens our ideas of right and wrong.

As long as there remains, in us, a principle of non-forgiveness, there must necessarily, be some prejudice, which always has a tendency to contract the better emotional points. The nature of man is such, that the evil passions are kept irritated as long as they are continually coming in contact with the spirit of non-forgiveness. Just as the match ignites as it comes in contact with friction, so evil thoughts are around when the mind comes in contact with the name of one whom we have not forgiven. And when the mind is soured and chafing under the high pressure of bad feelings toward some one else, it is then in a condition to look for all the dark spots in the character of those taken to be enemies. In this state no one is in a proper frame to hold in his mind evenly, the balances of right and wrong. He is then in a condition to connive at sin in a friend and see nothing good in an enemy.

2. It destroys happiness.

The mind must be in an easy condition to promote happiness, which is an impossibility as long as it is in a state of irritation made by the thoughts of a supposed enemy. Haman held a high office, and was surrounded by the luxuries of life; but the thoughts of Mordecai, his supposed enemy, shuts out from his bosom contentment and happiness. No one can be fully happy as long as he refuses to forgive.

Then, if it is impossible to be happy until we have, in our hearts, forgiven all people, it follows that we can not go to heaven if it is not done. Heaven is a place of perfect happiness; and, if it were possible for us to get there before we shall have forgiven all people, it would not be a place of happiness to us. If we were to go to heaven with our minds all fired up with the spirit of non-forgiveness, we might soon imagine that some of the heavenly family had not shown us that degree of civility due.

3. The Bible teaches it.

Christ prayed for the forgiveness of his enemies, and that at a time when they were putting him to death, not asking His forgiveness. This act was the climax to his teachings on this subject. In the form of prayer given. He had taught His disciples to pray for forgiveness as they forgave those who had trespassed against them. He also said "Except ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly father will not forgive your trespasses." The prayer of Stephen uttered under the pelting stones thrown not by the hands of those who were asking pardon, but by those who were thirsting for his blood, is a high example of the spirit of forgiveness taught in the Bible. He who is not willing to forgive an enemy would not be very apt to pray for him when he was putting him to death.

Christ has said we must be converted and become as a little child. The disposition of the little child, is to forgive. And its forgiveness is of that kind that forgets. A little child's mind is always perfectly calm toward its play mate in a few hours after the injury has been done.

Though both reason and Scripture teach that it is our duty to forgive all people who may have done us a wrong, it does not follow that it is our duty to tell the individual that we have forgiven him, unless he shall ask forgiveness; for some times that might encourage him to greater wickedness.

Now, there is a beauty in this requirement of Christianity, which correspond with its general principles. The constituent parts of Christianity are such as to subdue every part of will, and watching has a better bearing in this direction than the unyielding requirement to forgive those who trespass against us.

To love and pray for your enemies with spiritual earnestness is a stream that washes all of self out of one. And the reason that some people are so unwilling to forgive, is because they have a will of their own. Dear friend, do you think you are going to heaven and your own self will unsubdued? we must forgive, if we would be forgiven.

Faithfulness.

The circumstances of men are such as to make, necessarily, many turns of difference in their life's work. But there is one perfect base line, along which all people may move with equal rights. The God given law of privilege, to every one, to walk fully in the path of faithfulness is an inheritance common to each child of the human family. Position, poverty or ignorance has nothing to do with the travellers of this perfect highway. Here the poor, miserable, ragged wretch of suffering may move beside the king on his throne. It is the line, to which all may come; but beyond which, none can go.

No one deserves special consideration for success in life; for the circumstances may be such as to give it to those who do not possess the qualities necessary to bring it about. Or the way which opened wide to one, closed to another equally talented and faithful. The faithful man deserves consideration, though he may live a stranger to success. God's word does not say, be successful; but it does say, be faithful.

Faithfulness to duty, in right doing, is the moving power, in God's hands, that lifts the world toward heaven. Men who are conscientiously faithful to duty are sure to put in motion a wave that will grow larger and larger, as it goes, until some black curse is purified, and higher principles of right given footing in the hearts of the people. The great thought of purpose all through Paul's life, was a faithful discharge of duty along the line which he believed to be right. And whenever he found his work was wrong in one direction, he did not consult flesh and blood about turning to the opposite, but immediately walked faithfully in the path of the new seen duty. When Christ was on earth one of the things that seemed to be ever before his eyes was to do faithfully the work that the Father had given him.

If the membership of every church should prove faithful to all duties, in church, state and family, soon our world would bloom like the Rose of Sharon, and send forth a sweet influence in every direction, purifying and healing the sores made by sin. All collective bodies of men are moulded into their resultant work by the faithfulness of their individual members. And the church is no exception to this rule. Any local church with a few faithful members in prayer, in contributing, in every good word and work, may become a Gideon-band for power, though they may be strangers to wealth and affluence. And numbers numerically large with great financial power, mental talent and high social position, with no regard to faithful work, may become a blight and mildew curse to any church.

The hopes and high anticipations, of how many once happy families, have been destroyed by unfaithful members no one knows. The hearts of wives are often made to throb and quiver by the treacherous conduct of those who pledged themselves, at the sacred altar, to prove faithful until death. The ignorant children that crowd the street in tattered garments, uncared for, often point in no uncertain direction to unfaithful parents who have but little regard for their offspring. And parents, many, have been left in old age in misery and wretchedness by unfaithful hands of children who should have been a joy and comfort to their best earthly friends.

Let all the friends of right their faithfulness prove, in family, state and church, wherever they move.

Jacob's Dream.

Men have dreamed in all ages. The causes may be many. And if we were sufficiently versed in the science of this mysterious sleep thinking, we might possibly be able to classify the causes that give birth to the brilliant, flashing thoughts of dream land. But many long years may be numbered with the past before the man is born, who shall write us a scientific book explaining all the various causes of the mystic dream.

Dreams are sometimes the outgrowth of the physical conditions. A crowded stomach or high fever has often given eyes that saw terrible, frightful hobgoblins during the hours of sleep. A state of mental unrest may paint pictures, and hang them upon the walls in dream land's chamber much more unsatisfactory than those seen in the settled, mental vision. But doubtless some dreams, especially some in ancient days, are the hand writings of God's own direct fingers upon the tablet of the heart, to make known something of His future dealings with his people, either as warnings or encouragements or both. And such was the dream of Jacob.

Jacob was in great trouble. He had turned his back on his father's home. The mother that loved him so tenderly, was seen now only in the miid's eye. A tiresome day's journey had been made. His thoughts were lingering around the old home with meditations of what the future might develop. With these reflections hovering around the mind, his head placed upon a stone for his pillow, the wide world his home and the blue dome above, its roof, his eyes closed in sweet sleep.

And as the pulsations went on unconsciously, with the gentle breathing noticed only by the heavenly host, God opened his thoughts to things unseen to the world. And through the dark sleep his vision pushed its way to the bright world of perfect love. From the cold, hard stones, upon which his head lay, he saw a ladder reaching to the heavenly city. Upon this ladder he saw angels ascending and descending, and God stood above it. What a beautiful picture this must have been to Jacob! What the color of the ladder or the material, out of which it was made, we are not told. If it was right, it would be pleasant to know; but we will not venture to guess. Four important things in the dream besides Jacob; ladder, angels, heaven and God. But no description of any of them is given. If man had written the account of the dream unaided by inspiration, long descriptions would have been given. At least we think this may be inferred, judging from the way man generally writes when left to himself.

Possibly the first lesson gathered from the dream is this: To teach Jacob that, though he was far away from the supplies and protections of the old home, with no loving voice of father or mother heard, he would not be left friendless and helpless; for as he had seen the angels coming and going on the ladder, so friends would come to his assistance. Let no one be discouraged because long miles may intervene between them and loved ones; the angels may be guarding the old pathway, and keeping it open for you to travel back to the old homestead again some day.

The second lesson seems to be that of mediatorship. The ladder connected heaven and earth. It showed to Jacob that there was a way from earth to heaven; and along the way communication was kept up. So in Christ the flesh and divinity came together, making a spiritual highway from earth to heaven. Christ said unto Nathanael, verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. Let us thank God for the ladder that reaches from earth to heaven. Christ is the ladder. He is the way, the life and the truth.

Suffolk Letter.

The only special interest in this section is the "Naval Rendezvous" in Hampton Roads this week. Norfolk is literally robed in gayest bunting, and the harbor contains the ships of war and flags of several nations. It is gratifying to know that, on those very waters where the Monitor and Merimac, in sharpest conflict during the Civil War, changed the naval warfare of the world, now the great steel monsters of several nations are anchored in peace together, in the celebration of our Columbian jubilee. The improved navies and guns are to be means of peace. The very instruments of war are being converted by Christian civilization into guardians of peace. The gospel is to be preached to every creature, all hostile elements are to be brought into the service of the Master. It will be easy to change the commerce, and navies of the world into peace and instruments of religious service, when all the nations are born into the kingdom of Christ. A sword or pistol is harmless in the hands of a man of peace. All nature and art and science are to become buttresses of the truths of salvation and of the church.

AT REST.

Staley Albright, infant and only son of J. C. and A. Felton passed away on Sunday night, April 9th, and was laid to rest in Cedar Hill cemetery on Monday evening, after funeral services at their residence, on Kilby street, in the presence of a large gathering of friends. Thus the little ones come into homes and hearts here, and then go to the home up there to rest forever in the bosom of God. Those who have lost their darlings know how much happier the home is here with children; and by this they may learn how much more blessed heaven will be because the children are there. I cannot imagine a heaven without children: "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

On Tuesday of last week I buried, also, J. M. Hatchel who had been confined to his room for several months. He leaves a wife and five children in sadness and necessity. This is one of those sad cases that touches tender places in our being, and calls forth the sympathy of neighbors and true Christians. "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation." Orphanage and widowhood seem to me to have special consideration the providences of God; and whenever they trust him, He sustains them and provides for their necessities.

Dr. Barrett and Rev. N. G. Newman report good congregations at Antioch and Holy Neck yesterday.

Antioch is going to remodel and very much improve her house of worship; Berkley is moving in the work of rebuilding, and work is progressing finely on the Norfolk church. Suffolk's new house moves slowly, but it keeps moving toward completion.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Today I must greet you as happy as the birds and nature, and try with them to do my work as well as theirs is done. There is no doubt that all of the cousins have seen a bird's nest, and noticed how nicely it is made, and perhaps some have felt of the inside to see how soft and cosy a little home mother and father bird have made for the little young birdies. Many of us have been delighted at some time to find Mr. and Mrs. Bird's home hid away so nicely in a tree or some where; and with what pleasure we have taken just a little peep into the nest just to see the pretty, cute little eggs, and then how anxiously we have watched them from week to week till the tiny little birdies came out of the shells; and oh, how ugly we thought they were with their great big gaping mouths that would fly open at the least noise. But it did not take long for them to get on their jackets of nice warm feathers, and then they were the sweetest little things you could imagine. It has been a good many years since I was a little fellow but I still remember what a pleasure it was to me to find a bird's nest and how anxious I was for fear some naughty boy or an old hawk would come along and destroy the happiness of the little family. I do hope there is not a boy or a girl so wicked among the cousins that would be guilty of stealing from the birdies their home or their eggs or young ones. To do this would be cruel indeed.

If any one of you at any time is tempted to be so wicked just think how dreadfully bad you would feel if some big giant was to come along and steal your mama and papa from you, or how bad they would feel, and you too, if some other old giant should take you off, and then think that little birdie would feel just as bad too if you, a great giant to birdie, would steal baby birdies. Let each one remember the Golden Rule and do to birdie as you would have people do to you.

I said last week somebody would have to write if we had a Corner this week, and see what a nice lot of letters have come in. Every body write. Love to all.

Cordially yours,

UNCLE TANGLE.

DOUBLE HEAD, ALA., April 13, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE: As I was reading in the SUN this morning and saw so many nice letters from the little cousins, thought I would write. I am a little girl twelve years old, I go to school to Prof. Clert, Rev. G. D. Hunt is our pastor. I will ask the cousins a question: What chapter is it that the last of every verse is the same I will write again soon if this letter escapes the waste basket.

Yours very truly,

JENNIE HAMLIN.

Jennie, we welcome you to the Corner and expect you will write again soon.

ELAMS, N. C., April 4, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write to the Corner again as I am very much interested in the Cousins letters, and hope they enjoy mine. I go to school every day. I cannot go today my teacher had gone to a wedding. I reckon it is very nice to go to weddings. I went to Sunday school last Sunday, had a very nice time. I like very much to go. I will correct the mistake in my teacher's name: it is Miss Susie instead of Annie. Inclosed find half dime for the Band; will write again soon. Much love to you and the cousins.

Your little niece,

LULA B. FLOYD.

Lula, we are glad to get another letter from you. And glad to know you enjoy your Sunday school.

MERRY OAKS, N. C., April 7, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I will write a few lines today, it is my birthday and I did not know how to observe it any better. I am not going to school now but I go to Sunday school at New Elam and we have preaching by Rev. C. C. Peel. I will ask a few questions. How old was Seth when he died? Who was Noah's father? Who became a pillar of Salt? Who was sent to Nineveh to preach unto the people? I will close for fear my letter will find its way to the waste basket. Inclosed find half a dime for the Band. I remain yours with much love to you and the cousins.

UNA DAVIS.

Una, we are glad to get your letter and would like for you to have a birthday every month if that would cause you to write.

ROANOKE, ALA., April 8, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As there are so many nice letters in the Corner I thought I would write a short letter, I like to read the cousins letters very much. I attend M. E. Sunday school at Roanoke, it is a fine school and I like to go very well. I will answer Ivie Andes question. Lamach was Noah's father. I will also answer Alfred W. Andes questions: Enoch was 365 years old when he was taken up to God; Seth was 912 years old when he died; Enos 905 years old when he died;

Cainan was 910 years old when he died; Mahalaleel 865 years old when he died; Jared was 662 years old when he died; Noah was 500 years old when Japheth was born; Lamech was 777 years old when he died; Noah was 600 years old when the flood came upon them. I will ask a question. What was the length, breath and depth of Noah's Ark? I will close. If this escapes the waste basket I will write again.

JOHN S. SLEDGE.

John, you have answered the questions very nicely. Guess you must have read a great deal in order to find all those answers. Write again.

WHALEYVILLE, VA., April 11, 1893

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—It has been some time since I wrote to you, but I have thought of you and the cousins often. I see there are several letters this week and I certainly have enjoyed them. I say like Julia Etheredge I wish you would make the paper better, so it would last until I could read it. I tear it so easily. I will answer Julia's question, Rehoboam succeeded Solomon as king. Am I right? I would like to see you and Aunt Maggie. I have only one month to go to school now. I will be real glad, for I am growing tired. I will close, please find a dime for the Band. Love to you and Aunt Maggie and the cousins.

LIDA DAUGHTIE.

Lida, I am glad to get your letter and hope you will write oftener than you have been doing lately.

GARNER, N. C., April 15, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I was very much delighted to see the Corner with so many nice letters this week. I must confess my negligence of the Corner for the past, but am determined by God's help to be more enthusiastic in the future. Uncle Tangle pray for me that I may grow up to be a useful Christian and exert an influence over those with whom I associate, to live and work for God. Uncle Tangle, I would be so glad to meet you and Aunt Maggie for I must think she is a sweet lady indeed. We have a very good Sunday school, I try to go every Sunday when I possibly can. I will ask the cousins a question. What did Job's wealth consist of and what became of it. I send ten cents to the Band.

Your niece,

MINNIE MORING.

Minnie, we are glad to get your letter and are so delighted to know that you are trying to labor so that God will in the end say to you, "Well done thou good and faithful." I will pray for you.

Hood's Cures

Terrible Headaches

Distressed and Discouraged

Health all Broken—Thoroughly Built up by Hood's Sarsaparilla

Mrs. Eva Covert
Of Bath, N. Y.

"I am glad to have my experience with Hood's Sarsaparilla widely known, because the medicine has done me so much good, I think it will benefit others who are out of health. I was in a very distressing and discouraging condition. I had no appetite whatever; could not sleep well; suffered with excruciating headaches. I felt

Tired and Languid,

Had no ambition and seemed all broken down. After I had taken medicine prescribed by two of our best physicians, a kind neighbor advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I followed her advice, and the result is I am perfectly well. I do not have the headaches now, sleep well, that tired feeling is vanished, and I am bright and ambitious. I can eat heartily at every meal, and have gained in weight from 94 to 195 pounds. I do not have any distress in my Rich in Her Poverty.

As I was crossing the ferry from New York to Hoboken, one day in the early spring, I recognized an old acquaintance in the person of a German woman who was carrying a large market basket.

Her face told the life full of hardship and privation which had been her lot, and yet there was an expression of peace and joy which spoke of some hidden spring within. I had known her in the darkest hour of her trial, when her husband, who was a mason by trade, had been brought home a cripple; when her children were crying for food, and she had not known where to turn for "daily bread." Yet her faith had never wavered, and had carried her triumphantly through all her trials.

I had lost sight of her for some time, and was glad to meet her again. After asking for her welfare, and hearing that she was now comfortable in the home of one of her sons, I said: "Well, Mrs. B—, you have an advantage over me in one thing. You have known what it is to be very poor, and can feel for those who suffer from want, more, perhaps, than I can, who have always had a dollar in my pocket."

Her reply was: "But I have never been so very poor. I have always had food and clothing."

"Yes," I said, "but you have known what it was to be cold and hungry. I remember when you were picking up coals on the railroad, and did not know where to find the next morsel to put into your children's mouths."

She sat silent for awhile, and then, looking up, she said: "I think, sir, that perhaps you feel more sorry for the suffering of the poor than I do.—You, who have never had to suffer in that way, think that want and misery are to be dreadful; and cannot be borne. I, who have been through it all know that they can. There are troubles worse than that, and our heavenly Father is caring for us just as much when we are hungry as when He gives us plenty.

She had prayed for "daily bread" for spiritual strength as well as for bodily need, and her prayer had been answered.

I looked at her in speechless wonder. Toiling early and late, amid sickness and sorrow, for the bare necessities of life as I knew she had done, suffering agonies of body and mind as few of us could imagine it possible that we could suffer and live, her faith had risen above it all.

To her, human misery seemed as nothing when compared to the higher spiritual life which she had attained.—She had found the "true bread which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world." How few of us when we pray for "daily bread," desire before all things else that heavenly gift. Our privilege as well as duty it is to bring comfort and relief to God's poor, but while we relieve their bodily wants, let us pray that we and they may have faith to seek for spiritual strength and grace to bear every burden, and to realize, with St. Paul, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory which shall be revealed in us."—J. M. D., in S. S. Times.

A Fatal Mistake.

"Nothing in my hands I bring, Simply to Thy cross I cling."

A young man in a boat, while hunting near New Haven broke an oar. A sudden rain storm was coming up, but he was so desirous of securing a duck he had shot he neglected to go ashore while he could. The squall drove him far from land, and with but one oar he soon found himself helplessly drifting rapidly out to sea. Finally, seeing no hope of safety by his own exertions, he took his handkerchief and tied it to the oar, and held it up to attract attention of others, should any vessel come in sight. After weary waiting, a sloop was at length seen making for him, and as soon as it was within distance of the boat the captain bade the man jump aboard the instant the sloop came alongside, as it was sailing fast under a strong wind. The order was obeyed. He jumped and caught the taffrail with both hands, "Saved!" you say. No, for no sooner had he seized hold than he was pulled back, fell into the water, and was seen no more, as the sloop dashed onward in its course. He had tied the boat's painter about his loins, and so the weight of the boat dragged him down into a watery grave. In trying to save his game he was driven out to sea; and then, in trying to save his boat, he lost his life. Had he divested himself of every weight and leaped unfettered into that ark of safety, which for an instant was within his reach, he would have been saved. Oh, the folly of those who are anxious to save trifles and reckless in risking all—who hesitate to lay aside every weight, and the sin that so easily besets them, and thus forever perish.—Did they say as Toplady, "Nothing in my hands I bring;" did they drop what was dear to them, as a right hand or eye, for the sake of eternal life they would gain heaven.

He that forsaketh not all that he hath cannot be Christ's disciple. If there be love of money, or fear of hardship, or dread of ridicule, or choice of pleasure—whatever it is that fetters and loads down the soul, there is no hope of heaven. The gate is narrow. There is no room for the bulky appendages which the self-righteous, or worldly, or covetous burden themselves. To dream of thus entering heaven is a fatal mistake. But by giving up all, we gain all. By dropping the toys of time we receive the wealth of eternity.—Church Union.

Living and Teaching.

When Dr. Emmons of the last century was asked, "what is the best remedy for inattention in a congregation?" he replied: "Give them something to attend to." This seems a pertinent reply; but if we remember, Christ gave his hearers "something to attend to" but the vast majority attended, to it not, some of them went away, got offended at Him and His teachings. There is one factor in all congregations that must be considered and that is—the hardness and indifference of the human heart and the power of the will to reject Christianity.

In this connection, we give an extract from one of the papers about Mr. Mood, on "live what you teach:—"

We remember hearing Mr. Moody say, 'No one can teach cream and live skin milk.' The force of any Scripture lesson is largely limited by the personality of the teacher. Sometimes the truths of the Bible will affect the hearer in spite of the character of the one who utters them, but usually they possess only about the spiritual vitality of the teacher. First of all, then, the teacher should seek to be what he urges his scholars to become. He should study his lesson, not for them, but for himself. Having been greatly quickened by its truths he will be able to quicken others, but not otherwise. Said a man once of Phillips Brooks, 'I did not know of what he had been talking, although my eyes never once wandered from his face; but I know that what he said he believed; that he is greater and better than his sermon, and I'm a better man for having been under his influence.'—Churchman.

The Backward Child.

Everybody is ready to pet and praise the forward child, the child whose cleverness reflects credit upon his parents and teachers, and whose attainments are felt to be a testimonial to his school and to forecast for himself a successful future when school days shall be over. Father and mother point with pride to Willie's certificates of progress, to Willie's prizes, to Willie's proficiency in arithmetic and grammar, to Willie's fondness for study and the ease with which he acquires difficult lessons. Not long ago I heard a man of large experience in affairs, himself the winner of a fortune in the teeth of adverse circumstances, exclaim in the presence of his son, bright lad of twelve; "Fred is a genius! He always comes out at the head of his class. As for these drawings, which you observe show uncommon talent and skill, why, he doesn't labor over them, does he, mamma? They are sketched as fast as his pencil can move. It's perfectly amazing!" Freddie, standing by, cool and complacent, accepted this homage with a superb air of indifference; he was evidently accustomed to parental tributes and they had ceased to be an incentive. The probability was that Freddie had touched high water mark. He would never do much better work than he was doing now. The motive for study had been taken away by the indiscreet admiration of an overfond father. Yet I believe in praise for young and old. Human nature is dependent on affectionate appreciation of its endeavors. Few ever outgrow the necessity to be approved by those with whom they associate in the everyday intercourse of the household. The weary wife toiling on at her common tasks—at the making and mending, baking and sweeping, saving and and scrimping which fall into the daily lot of so many women—brightens up and receives new courage if her husband takes the time and trouble to praise her. His gratified notice of her pretty and tasteful gown or of the arrangement of her hair fills the morning with sunshine, and he, too, great strong fellow though he be, goes on his way rejoicing if the dear wife gives him a kind, commendatory word.

If grown people love, nay absolutely require praise, and find it as manna on the hard road of life, it cannot surprise us that children thrive on such a diet judiciously administered. The care should be, however, not to feed their vanity while endeavoring to train them in a proper degree of self reliance and a just measure of self esteem.

The backward child—backward for whatever cause—is in little danger of spoiling from this source. He, or she, may be physically weak, may perhaps be physically infirm, without the knowledge of busy parents or preoccupied teachers. Often a little child is scolded or punished for inattention when the ear is at fault, not the mind. That delicate organ is not quick to receive impressions, has lost its sensitiveness through injury or cold, and a deaf child is blamed for not hearing aright, or for not answering promptly when called. A boy or girl may be color blind or sighted, or far-sighted, and for this reason be unable to keep pace with mates whose sight is normal. Do not be hasty to condemn a child for something which is only a misfortune or a calamity, not a fault. A little gentle experimenting in the home will frequently solve the problem which is the perplexity of the class-room.

Again, a child is often backward because, in a graded school, he or she is not adjusted properly to the rank selected. The preparatory work may have been imperfectly done and the poor little pupil may be, in reality, toiling far harder, and with more conscientious effort, than the brilliant comrade who surpassed him with little difficulty. Class-room triumphs do not always tell when the race is run in the later life, and the qualities of diligence, fidelity and responsibility are incomparably beyond some which make a greater show, as, for instance, facility, a talent for memorizing and a readiness to imitate.

The backward child is just as interesting to the teacher who takes hold of his profession as the other who penetrates mysteries at a glance and recites a lesson glibly after a few minutes' study. In fact, the backward pupil should awaken the stronger sympathy, the greater interest, for there is, could it but be discovered, a reason for the slower mental process and a compensation also in a power to grasp and to retain what is once mastered, which in the long run is as useful as the opposite faculty of easy attainment. That mother or teacher who is wise enough and clear-sighted enough to recognize and consider the claims of the body, to estimate the demands made by rapid growth, and to take heed to the indications of nature in the child's own attractions and repulsions, will very probably be repaid in time. The manly little fellow may not take kindly to his books just yet, but God's great picture book of life has its fascinating pages open before his eyes, and he may by and by be a botanist, a geologist, or an astronomer. If he can be lured to any single occupation or pursuit, though it be nothing beyond some little daily "chore" which helps mother, let him be praised for achievement in this, and never allow him to be rated lower than another so long as you are convinced that he is honestly doing his best.

The backward child may indeed be deficient in application, not in capacity. Should this be so, arouse him, not by a hail-storm of nagging or a downpour of fault finding but by a system of rewards lovingly adapted to his disposition and character. Suffer no discouragement to creep into your own heart concerning him, and do not allow him or her to feel that there is reason for any doubt about their reaching the top of the ladder in due season. The top, mind not the middle rounds; any one can reach these. Set a definite aim before your child, cultivate a high and noble ideal, but be willing to climb slowly. Haste is at the root of many a failure, haste and lack of thoroughness as one goes on.

With tender regret for lost opportunities, who has not sometimes seen a mature woman timid, self-conscious, handicapped from youth to gray hairs simply because she was a "backward" child once, and therefore was snubbed and ridiculed and pushed into the background, while her sisters and brothers bore off the honors and were the objects of universal estimation? A wrong for life was done to the little daughter, and her daughter may perhaps suffer from the same old mistake, for wrongs are far reaching. Be pitiful and just to the backward child in your home.—Margaret E. Sangster.

Christian vs. Tobacco.

Tobacco using is a habit commendable in no one, least of all in a man professing a likeness to Christ. There is nothing Christlike about it, for it is wasteful, filthy, hurtful, and selfish, with not one redeeming feature. It is wasteful because the user has nothing to show for the money which might have been spent for food and clothing for himself and family. It is hurtful, for it renders one more liable to disease, and the system becomes less susceptible to the action of medicine. It is a selfish habit, for the user has more regard for his depraved appetite than for the pleasure of those nearest to him. Indeed, it is more than selfish: it is mean. For his wife has the impure smoke to inhale by day and his impurer breath at night, but she is not allowed to puff the smoke or chew the quid for herself. Besides the family, there is the community at large that is imposed upon by every one that carries a smoking pipe or cigar upon the streets or in public resorts.

Pure air is the inherent right of all and a requisite to perfect health. Any man, therefore, whatever his profession or pretense, commits an offense against the individual right and the public health by fouling the air that belongs to others. Now, then, since no amount of habit, of itself, makes a practice justifiable, has a person any more right to blow tobacco smoke in the air than another has to breathe than he has to throw his quid in the water that another is to drink?—F. P. Fish, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original.

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The fish tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh, the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life, are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $100, and are the same size (12 1/2 inches). The baby's life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Desechamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did print the past year, "A Yard of Fancies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

One Stitch at a Time.

"What is the secret by which you do your work so beautifully?" The questioner held in her hand an exquisite piece of crochet work, wrought by the lady to whom the question was addressed.

"There is no secret about it," replied the lady; "I only make every stitch as perfect as I can, and am careful to put it exactly in the right place. There isn't one wrong or careless stitch in all that work. If I make a mistake, I ravel it out and correct it."

One perfect stitch at a time. So the marvelous fabrics of lace at fabulous prices are made. So the intricate and exquisite embroideries are wrought. So costly garments of men and women are put together. One perfect stitch at a time!

The noblest lives are lived—no moment at a time. No moments wasted; no moments carelessly spent; no moments viciously spent. Wrong stitches in crochet can be raveled out, and made right. But who can reverse the tide of time, and undo a wrong act and make it right?

Some unknown friend left a card on my desk, on which was printed this: "I shall pass through this world but once! Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it, now, in his name and for his sake! Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

Is there a better secret than that for making the whole fabric of life perfect? "Any good thing that I can do;" that covers all our duty to God and to ourselves "Any kindness that I can show to any human being;" that covers all our duty to our neighbor. Love to God and to our neighbor is the fulfilling of the law.

One stitch at a time! Sometimes we allow ourselves to become confused with the thought or feeling that we have a dozen things to do at once. But this is a mistake. We can do but one thing at a time, think one thing at a time, speak one word at a time, see one thing at a time. For every duty really required of us, we have time given in which to do it. We may pass rapidly from one task to another, we may construct machinery by which much of our work can be done simultaneously, and thus multiply our executive power; but to live two minutes at once; is something no mortal can do, any more than we can recall one act or one moment of the past.

"Let us then be up and doing, Heart within and God o'erhead."

—Christian Advocate.

The Way to Heaven.

A simple word, an earnest action, the expression of a careful thought —these have the power to transform a life. Thus it was that a poor match-boy could become a street missionary:

This poor boy stood, some time ago, at the corner of one of the busy streets in Glasgow, selling matches. As he stood there a gentleman approached him and asked him the way to a certain street. The way to that particular street was very tortuous, but the little fellow directed him very minutely. When he had finished his directions, the gentleman said, "Now, if you will tell me the way to heaven as correctly, I'll give you a sixpence."

The boy considered for a moment, then suddenly remembering a text he had learned at Sunday school, he replied, "Christ is the way, the truth and life, sir." The gentleman at once handed him the promised sixpence, and left him visibly affected. The child thought this an easy way to make money, and going along the street, he met an old companion of his father's, whom he stopped and to whom he said, "If you give me a sixpence I'll tell you the way to heaven."

The man was surprised, but, from curiosity, he handed the boy a sixpence, and was told, "Christ is the way, the truth, and the life."

"Ah!" said the man, "I have been looking for the way in the saloon these many years, but I believe you are right. It was my mother's way."

Going on his way the boy told the same message to others. In after years it was his privilege to tell it to the heathen, for the little fellow saved a little child from being run over one day, and, from gratitude, he was educated by the child's father, and to day he is a foreign missionary, showing to others the way to heaven.

—Exchange.

There is a romantic idea in the minds of some of our young sisters that they can reform an attractive and dissipated young man by marrying him. Cold facts compel the statement that this experiment is nearly always a dismal failure. She who marries a man who drinks, even moderately, must make up her mind sooner or later to be a drunkard's wife.—Central Baptist.

Post Mortem Love.

I stood at his coffin, and then there were many tongues to speak his praise. There was not a breath of aspersion in the air. Men spoke of self-denials—of his work among the poor, and of his good qualities, of his quietness, his modesty, his humility, his pureness of heart, his faith and power. There were many who spoke indignantly of the charges that falsehood had forged against him in past years and the treatment he had received. There were enough kind things said during the two or three days that he lay in the coffin, and while the company stood around his grave, to have blessed him and made him happy all his fifty years, and to have thrown sweetness and joy about his soul during all his painful and weary journey. There was enough sunshine wasted about the black coffin and dark grave to have made his whole life-path bright as clearest day. But his ears were closed then, could not be thrilled by the grateful sounds. He cared nothing then for the sweet flowers that were piled upon his coffin. The love blossomed out too late. The kindness came when the life could not receive its blessings.

But meanwhile there is a great host of weary men and women toiling through life toward the grave, who need cheering words and helpful ministries. The incense is gathering to scatter about their coffins; but why should it not be scattered in their paths today? The kind words are lying in men's hearts and trembling on their tongues, which will be spoken by and by when these weary ones are sleeping; but why should they not be spoken now, when they are needed so much, and when their accents would be so pleasing and grateful?—Exchange.

To the Point.

When professedly Christian people have time to chase up the vagaries and delusions of Lieut. Totten and other manipulators of millennium mathematical computations, it is a pretty good sign that they need to engage in some practical form of Christian service. If the end is coming this September, it will be well to crowd the interim with good works. It is more than likely that the lieutenant has made an error of some fifteen thousand years, or so, in one of his varied twists of the figures; but good works will always be in place, and will count mightily when born of faith.—Standard.

“Laborers Together With God.”

It is not the part of wisdom to become impatient over the slow movement of great reforms. They are doubtless subject to laws and conditions no less surely than the ebb and flow of ocean's tides or the process of the seasons. These cannot be hastened, neither can great reforms.

Let us consider that the greatest actor in history is God, not man; and that God always takes a plenty of time for what is to be done. It is a mistake to suppose that the progress shown by the world up to the present day is primarily the work of men, and that they could have reached their present state a thousand or five hundred years earlier than to-day. The great agent has been God. Men have been but his servants, doing the things that he has set before them to do as the outcome of thoughts and conditions that he has inspired and arranged. The world's progress has been, on the whole, as rapid as the conditions permit, and men could neither have hastened nor prevented it.

What men can do, as individuals or in groups, is to refuse to do what God gives them a chance and a call to do. We are free in our ability to choose our own courses of action. It is certain that a man may either do what God wants him to do or refuse to do it. It is no less certain that if he does not do what God wants done, it will be done, never the less, by some other agency. Men are powerless to stay the unfoldings of Divine purpose. Their neglect to aid in these unfoldings, and also their occasional hostility thereto, may even contribute in some way to the very ends which they neglect or oppose; but what a record they make as moral beings and what a loss comes to themselves! Recall the deap question of Eliphaz the Temanite: “Can a man be profitable unto God as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?” God can and does make even the wrath of men to praise him (Ps 76: 10) but the sin and folly of men react with terrible consequences upon themselves. It is one of the most wonderful things of history that through whole periods in which (e. g., the French Revolution) men have worked fierce destruction among themselves the conditions have been preparing for a more marked progress of the kingdom of God than ever before.

Let us “cast our burden on the Lord” and learn not to fret if progress toward great ends seems less rapid than it should be. We have only to do what is plainly required of us and patiently intrust to God the entire work to which we contribute our part. Of course we may and should exhort others to do their full duty also. We should exhort at home and also send the Gospel to the heathen. Only let us not fret and worry and despair if progress is not made at lightning speed. It is as unwise to expect too much as to expect too little. It takes time for a tree to grow, for a thought to develop, for a purpose to mature for a reform to be accomplished.—Star.

A True Woman.

She doeth little kindnesses,
Which most leave undone or despise;
For naught that sets one heart at ease,
And giveth happiness or peace,
Is low esteemed in her eyes.

She hath no scorn of common things;
And, though she seems of other birth,
Round us her heart twines and clings,
And patiently she folds her wings
To tread the humble paths of earth.

Blessing she is; God made her so;
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow,
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless.

She is a woman—one in whom
The springtime of her childish years
Hath never lost its fresh perfume,
Tho' knowing well that life hath room
For many blights and many tears.

I love her with a love as still
As a broad river peaceful might,
Which, by high tower and lowly mill,
Goes wandering at its own sweet will,
And yet doth ever flow aright.

And on its fll, deep breast serene,
Like quiet isles, my duties lie;
If flowers around them and between,
And makes them fair and fresh and green—
Sweet homes wherein to live and die.

—James Russell Lowell.

THE PULPIT.

The Birth of Christ.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. Luke 2:11.

The birth of Christ is the most remarkable event in the history of the world. It means more to man than any thing else that has ever occurred.

There are three questions to be considered in order to understand the birth of Christ in all the fulness of its meaning.

I. The character and position of Christ before he came into the world.

If a messenger should come to our country from a distant land with a message of great importance to us we would want to know who he is, and what is his position in the country from whence he came. This would in some measure determine the value of his message.

1. Christ existed before he was born into this world. This is clearly stated in the Scriptures, John 1:1-3; Colo. 1:16-17.

2. He was in the imagine of God. Colo. 1:16; Heb. 1:1-3; Thil. 2:6.

3. He sustained the most intimate relations to his Father. He dwelt in his bosom. John 1:11; Matt. 11:26.

4. He was rich in his preexistent state. 2 Cor. 8:9; John 17:5.

5. Through him the Father created all things. John 1:3; Heb. 1:2; Colo. 1:16-17. The nature, character, and position of Christ in heaven shows the importance of his mission into this world.

II. Christ's coming into the world, and what it was to him. John 1:14.

It was leaving exalted state, and descending to a humble position. Phil. 2:6-8. It was the putting off the form of God, and putting on the form of man. 1 Tim. 3:16.

There is, to me, a profound mystery in the incarnation of Christ. How he could come as he did I do not, and cannot now understand. I cannot understand how I live in my own body. Much less can I comprehend the incarnation of Christ.

Christ's incarnation meant great sacrifice and self-denial to him. It meant giving up heaven for earth, a crown and a throne for a crown of thorns and the cross. Why did he do this? Cor. 8:9.

During the past year the German Empire was ravaged by the cholera, and suffered from a dreadful famine. Hundreds of men and women perished from hunger and disease caused by it. Suppose that the Emperor to relieve his starving people and save them from perishing had parted with all his wealth and reduced himself to abject poverty, and went among them to sympathize with and aid them. Poets would have sung his praise, historians would have eulogized him, and all civilized nations would have honored him. But what would all this have been to what Christ did and suffered for our redemption.

III. What Christ's coming means to us. 1 John 4:14; John 3:17; Luke 19:10.

It means pardon, spiritual life, moral strength, comfort in sorrow, hope in death, and eternal life in heaven.

1. It means pardon. Acts 13:38-78; 10:45; Colo. 1:15.

While living in the enjoyment of "the pleasures of sin" men do not realize the need of pardon, but the hour comes when they do. Luke 7:36-50. The prodigal son knew that he was doing wrong while mingling in the society of the wicked and indulging in their vices; but he did not realize his need of pardon till he felt that he was perishing.

2. It means justification. Rom. 5:1-2.

Sin brings condemnation. John 3:18-19. This condemnation fills the mind with fear, and dread of the future.

When God pardons a man's sins he receives him to the arms of his love, and treats him just as though he had never sinned. "Being justified by grace" he is "made according to the hope of eternal life."

3. It means spiritual life. John 14:6; 5:21; Titus 3-3. Through the quickening and the cleansing power of divine truth and the Spirit of God, man is raised to a new life of purity, love, happiness, and hope. 2 Cor. 5:

17; 1 Peter 1:3-5. He lives in a new world of thought, enjoyment, and action. He has new loves, new desires, and new hopes.

4. Comfort in sorrow. Isa. 61:1-3.

Sorrow and affliction come in some form to us all. There is no escape from trials and troubles. Psalms 34:19- But deliverance comes through Christ. Rom. 5:1-5. Christ does not deliver us from all affliction now, but he gives us strength to bear them. Isa. 43:1-3. Christ gives us the assurance that we shall ultimately be delivered from all sorrow. John 14:1-3. The pass of Glenes Scotland is reached by a long steep path; but at the top is a stone with the inscription, "Rest, and be thankful." Such is the Christian's path to heaven." Rev. 14:13.

5. It means strength in weakness. John 15:4-5; Phil. 4:13. We are unable to meet in our strength the trials and temptations of life, but we find the needed help in Christ, "who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification."

6. It means hope in death. 1 John 5:11-12; John 10:10, 27-29. Trusting in the promise of Christ the Christian knows that his future is safe. 2 Tim. 1:12. He can sweetly rest on this truth. The Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I., was found dead in her room, with her head leaning on the Bible open at the words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." How sweet this rest to her in the hour of death, and millions of believers in Christ have realized the same.

When St. Augustine was about to die he caused the penitential Psalms to be written out and fixed to the wall near his bed; he then read them with tears streaming down incessantly. And lest he should be diverted from this pious exercise, he, ten days before his death, desired those about him not to suffer any one to come into his chamber except at the hours when his physicians came to visit him; or when his food was brought in. His desire was complied with, and he thus spent the whole time in prayer. He was perfectly sensible at his death, neither his sight nor his hearing being impaired. His friends were at his bedside praying when he died. He made no will, being so poor that he had nothing to dispose of; but it was always his earnest wish that his library and all the books belonging to his church should be carefully preserved.

The Right of Woman to Preach.

In order to defend some of my former argument in favor of woman's right to preach, which Dr. Barrett thinks he has totally demolished, I take this opportunity to do so, and also add some new points as props in defence of her right.

Dr. Barrett's argument against "the Right of Woman to Preach," is based on 1. Timothy 2:11-14.

"Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor usurp authority over the man but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed then Eve."

And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression."

"A curse follows sin, as naturally as fruit follows the blossom on the tree. It would be strange if no curse were attached to the sin of the woman who was deceived and led Adam into sin, but a curse was attached as I understand, and the woman was prohibited from becoming a herald of the glad news of man's redemption from the fall into which woman's folly led him."—Dr. Barrett.

"And so it is written. The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." 1. Cor. 15:45.

"It ought not to be passed by," says Dr. Lightfoot, that Adam, receiving from God? the promise of Christ. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent," and believing it, named his wife Chavah, that is, Life, and Adam called the name of his wife Life." What! Is she called Life that brought death into the world "But Adam perceived the last Adam, exhibited to him in the promise to be a quickening or life giving spirit; and had brought a better life of the soul; and should at last bring in a better life of the body. Hence is that saying, John 1:4. In Him was life."

"But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his son, made of a woman, made under the law. To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." Gal. 4:4-5.

The penalty pronounced for breaking the law was death: The Covenant of the New Testament gives life everlasting, as the result of the sacrificial death of the Immaculate son of God, to all who believe in his name, and trust in him for salvation. Why should woman from whom he had his human body be prohibited from proclaiming his glad news? If death entered the world through woman, so did Jesus enter the human existence by woman, and of him it is witten, "In Him is life." So for no word of the curse attached to woman is found.

"And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth. To a virgin espoused to a man whose named was Joseph, of the house of David: And the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women.

And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God.

And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus.

He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David.

And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God.

And Mary said, behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her. Luke 1. No curse in all this Bro. Barrett, all is blessing.

"And the angel said unto them, (the shepherds,) Fear not; for behold I bring you good tidings, of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. Luke 2:10

"And there was one Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phannuel, of the tribe of Asher; and she was a widow of about four score and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day. And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem. Luke 2:36.

What! A woman preacher in a public place of worship, as a herald of the glad news of man's redemption from the fall?

The prophetess Anna does not appear to have considered herself prohibited.

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruits, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. St. John 16."

Does this mean the general body of followers, or the apostles only?

"But when the comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth, he shall testify of me.

And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning. John 15:26;27.

"Some critics have confined the whole of this chapter to the apostles of our Lord, and the work of propagating Christianity to which they had been called. The whole comment of Rosenmuller on this chapter proceeds on this plan and shows at once how nugatory it is. The appointment to, and preparation for, the work of the sacred ministry, must ever be primarily with Christ; for those who have no higher authority than that which they derive from man, are never likely to be useful in Christianizing the world. The persecutions to which the apostles were exposed, has been the common lot of Christians from the foundation of Christianity. The consolations and influences of Christ's spirit have not been the exclusive privilege of the apostles; they are the birthright of all the sons and daughters of God"—Dr. Clark.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one. As thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." St. John 17:20,21. "For as many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus" Gal. 3:27, 28. "Christ will have all his members to be one in Spirit,—one in rights and privileges, and one in the blessedness of the future world."—Dr. Clarke.

Now I bring to your notice two other women, who received a command or commission from an angel, and from Jesus, to carry the glad tidings of a risen Saviour to his church and ministry—that is to the disciples. The angel said—"And go quickly and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and behold he goeth before you into Gallilee; there shall ye see him, so I have told you.

And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, all hail. And they came and held him by the feet and worshipped him.

Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren, that they go into Gallilee and there shall they see me."

This command was received from Jesus the Head of the Christian church, to go and carry the news of man's redemption to his waiting church and ministry, the disciples, therefore the message, since it is recorded in the Scriptures, was doubtless official.

"The case of the "first apostle of Christ in Samaria," as sister Adams calls her, is more fully against her than any other quoted. In the first place, Christ never had but twelve apostles, and they were all men."

According to this view of the case, St. Paul, and Mathias were not apostles of Christ, though so often claiming that distinction; according to my way of counting, there were thirteen of the Apostles, exclusive of Judas Iscariot, who made the fourteenth chosen or called. Bro. Barraett is right, into this band there was no woman. But how a Greek scholar, and Bible student could have made the mistake of supposing that the word apostle, always meant one of this band, I cannot see.

"Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope. Tim. 1:1.

"We have already seen that the term apostle, literally signifies a person sent from one to another, without implying any particular dignity in the person; or importance in the message. But it is differently used in the New Testament, being applied to those who were sent expressly from God Almighty, with the message of salvation to mankind."—Dr. Adam Clark.

Did not Jesus, the Head of the church, therefore an official sender, send the women to carry the important tidings that the Messiah had come, to other Samaritans. Therefore was she not officially sent, with an official message? Jesus said to his disciples, when sending them forth, enter ye not into any city of the Samaritans; go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Dr. Clarke says, the work messenger in the following places, may be translated apostles. Philip 2:25. Epaphroditus is alluded to.

2 Cor. 8:23. "Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow helper, concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are the messengers (apostles) of the churches, and the glory of Christ. Luke and Apollos are referred to in this place". Prophecy means all St. Luke claims it to mean, and also means as Paul wrote. "He that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort."

Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith. Rom 12:6.

That prophecy in the New Testament often means the gift of exhorting, preaching or expounding the scriptures is evident from many places in the Gospels, Acts, and St.

Paul's Epistles, see 1 Cor. 11:4-5. 1 Cor. 14:3. Luke 1:76. Luke 7:28. Acts 15:32. 1 Cor. 14:39.

"But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Acts 8:12-17.

Do you think they separated the women from the men before doing this, Bro. Barrett?

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3:27-28. "They prayed and laid their hands on the disciples, and God sent down the gift," so the blessing came from God by the apostles, and not from the apostles to the people. But for what purpose was the Holy Ghost thus given? certainly not for the sanctification of the souls of the people, this they had on believing in Christ Jesus, and this the apostles never dispensed.

"It was the miraculous gifts of the spirit which were thus communicated, the speaking with different tongues, and those extraordinary qualifications which were necessary for the successful preaching of the gospel, and doubtless many, if not all of those on whom the apostles laid their hands, were employed more or less in the public work of the church."—Dr. Clarke.

"And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy." Edify, exhort, comfort.

Bro. Barrett, were Sunday schools organized in the days Phillip's daughters prophesied? Sister Blank's case was very instructive, but please tell me which of the primitive churches had a pulpit, was it the church in the house of Priscilla? If so, there is where she went to instruct apollo's more fully in the plan of salvation.

"In primitive times before Christians had any stately buildings, they worshiped in private houses; the people that had been converted to God, meeting together in some dwelling house of a fellow convert more convenient and capacious than the rest; hence the church that was in the house of Aquilla and Priscilla, Rom. 19:3-5, 1 Cor. 16:19 and the church that was in the house of Nymphas. Col. 4:15. Now as these houses were dedicated to the worship of God, each was termed "kuriou oikos, the house of the Lord; which word in process of time became contracted into kuriolik, and kuriake, finally coming to be church.

In the proper use of this word there can be no such thing as the church, exclusively,—there may be a church, and the churches, signifying a particular congregation, or different assemblies of religious people.”—Dr. Adam Clarke.

“Salute Typhena and Tryphosa, who labor in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which labored much in the Lord.” Rom. 16:12.

Typhena and Tryphosa, two holy women, who, it seems, were assistants to the apostle in his work; probably exhorting, visiting the sick, etc.

Persis was another woman, who it seems excelled the preceding; for, of her it is said she labored much in the Lord.

We learn from this, that Christian women, as well as men, labored in the ministry of the Word.

“Many have spent much useless labor in endeavoring to prove that these women did not preach.

That there were some prophetesses, as well as prophets, in the Christian church, we learn; and that a woman might pray, or prophesy, provided she had her head covered, we know; and whosoever prophesied, spoke unto others to edification, exhortation, and comfort, St. Paul declares 1 Cor. 14:3. And that no preacher can do more, every person must acknowledge; because to edify, exhort, and comfort, are the prime ends of the gospel ministry. If women thus prophesied, then women preached. There is however, much more than this implied in the Christian ministry. Of which men only, and men called of God, are capable.”—Dr. Clarke.

This might be true of the intricate system of the ministry of the Established church of England, of which Dr. Clarke was Bishop. But is not true of our dear Christian church, which, it seems to me, is the exact counterpart of the primitive Christian church. Well, Bro. Barrett, you see I have vindicated my right to preach, and although I could produce a great deal more Scripture evidence in support of this right, yet it is time I should now stop, but I must produce one more instance of Woman's right to carry to glad tidings, out of the many the Scriptures afford me. “Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren. 11 Timothy, 4:21. Claudia, some think was a British lady, converted by St. Paul; and that she was the first that carried the gospel to Britain.

E. J. ADAMS.

“I commend unto you Phoebe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea.”

Phoebe is here termed a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea. There were deaconesses in the primitive church, whose business it was to attend the female converts at baptism; to instruct catechumens, or persons who were candidates for baptism; to visit the sick, and those in prison; and, in short, perform those religious offices, for the female part of the church, which could not with propriety be performed by men. They were chosen in general out of the most experienced of the church; and were ordinarily widows who had bore children. Some ancient constitutions required them to be forty, others fifty, and others sixty years of age. It is evident they were ordained to their office, by the inspiration of the hands of the Bishop; and the form of prayer used on the occasion is extant in the apostolical constitutions.”—Dr. Adam Clarke.

NORFOLK MEMORIAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

DESIGNED AS A LASTING MEMORIAL OF THE REUNION OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH NORTH AND SOUTH.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN.

Let Us Unite and Build.

BY Z. A. POSTE.

When Nehemiah rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, the people had a mind to work. The spirit of unity strengthened effort and gave success in the face of opposition that was strong and persistent. All great reforms reach their best condition through unity of purpose and effort. It is from want of unity that so many failures come. This is true in civil service, temperance and other movements along the line of a higher moral life. Their advocates are divided. Division weakens efforts and leaves the cause too much at the mercy of its foes. When, by the unifying power of the Holy Spirit, the Lord's people have been led to stand together in the conflict against sin, the kingdoms of the world will become the Kingdom of the Lord and righteousness will reign. Unity of effort under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, would accomplish fully every work that God has for his people to do.

Thoughts such as these have occupied my mind often since last December, when I came to this city of the sunny south. The International Sunday School lessons which we have been studying lead naturally, to such reflections. The thoughts have received additional weight to me, from the pleasing condition of the Christian church in this city, under the pastoral care of Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D. One could write of the members of this church and society as was written of the returned Jews at Jerusalem, “The people have a mind to work.” It has not often been mine to see such unity of effort as exist among this people. They keep the Spirit in the bonds of peace. It was only a little more than three years ago that Dr. Jones began his work with this people. At that time they were not an organized body. When the first meeting was held to consider establishing a Christian church in Norfolk, there were only seven persons present. The church is now a well organized body with two hundred and thirty names on its roll. With great devotion to their church, the members give freely of time, talent and money, to the work which lies so close to their hearts. They believe that the work is of the Lord, and is worthy the best they have to give. Such devotion as the pastors and members show in this movement is evidence of strong faith. Large faith is always hopeful of large results already obtained, pastor and people may well rejoice. If the future condition of the church here is to be judged by its record past and present, that condition will be a bright one. With the work so well organized, if the same spirit of unity and devotion that now characterizes the members continues with them, they can hardly fail of large spiritual success.

In its departments of work the church is well organized. Its Sunday school is large and spiritual; and to the encouragement of superintendent and teachers, the membership is increased at nearly every session. A Christian Endeavor Society was organized last November, with forty members. The present membership is above sixty. On the first Sunday in February the children were organized into a Junior Society, with thirty-five members. This society has already nearly doubled its membership. With such a band of workers to sustain him as these societies form, Dr. Jones is encouraged to start any enterprise that the good of the church demands, with assurance of success. One feature of the work here which I have not mentioned, is the frequent additions to church membership. Dr. Jones looks for present results from his earnest and faithful work. In this he is not disappointed. For in response to his invitation, given after every sermon, there is often someone to confess Christ or to present himself for membership in the church. Frequently, two, three and sometimes four are received after the usual services of the day. Viewed from different points as I have seen the church during my stay here in Norfolk, I am led to say, I know no church in the Christian denomination with a more hopeful future than this appears to have. That the Lord has led pastor and people into such close sympathy and union of effort that He may accomplish through them a blessed work, I have no doubt.

To the brotherhood at large the success of this church should be of much interest. The relative position that the Christian church of Norfolk sustains to the other Christian churches of America is unique. It is different from that of any other. For this reason its claims on the denomination are different from those of any other church. The condition under which the church is to build its house of worship have been foreordained. They are decreed by the highest tribunal of the church in its last quadrennial convention at Marion, Indiana. It was there decided to make the house a memorial. It is to stand a witness of the union that was formed at Marion, among all churches of the Christian denomination on this continent. Since this temple of worship is to commemorate a virtue so large and so Christian as the union of God's people, are not its claims justly laid on each of us? Those who were present at the Convention when it was agreed to make this a memorial church, still remember how good and pleasant it was for brethren to dwell together in unity. They will recall also, the action of the convention which declared this, then prospective house of worship, a memorial of that union which they so much enjoyed. The time has now come for us all to give substantial evidence of our appreciation of this union. By direction of the Executive Board the General Secretary has issued the call. Response should be general. Not long ago the unfortunate though honorable Governor of Ohio received a letter from a laboring man, stating that there were fifty thousand men in the state who were willing to contribute one dollar each toward making good his financial loss. Can there not be found one-fourth that number in the Christian Church who will be willing to contribute one dollar each towards building this memorial of church unity? The sacrifice necessary to do this would seem small; but the aggregate of the contribution would be twelve thousand five hundred dollars. This added to the sum already pledged would make an amount sufficient to build a temple of worship in which we all might delight. I am sure that action in this matter cannot be taken too soon nor too heartily. When the house shall be ready for use, a large and spiritual congregation will be waiting to occupy it. The claims of this enterprise urge themselves upon us. It seems to me that no member of the Christian Church can escape responsibility in the matter. Our representative in the Convention virtually pledged our hearty support. Now is the time for us to pledge. May we each contribute something toward this memorial of the unity in the Christian Convention which the Lord prayed might exist among all His followers.

Norfolk, Va

The Work in Norfolk.

This enterprise was initiated under the direction of evangelist Rev. C. J. Jones, D.D., three years ago, and has continued with increasing interest to the present time. Upon the consummation of the long-hoped for Union between the two sections of our Zion, at Marion in 1890, it was decided by unanimous vote to erect a Christian church in Norfolk, Virginia, as a memorial of this event in our history, and to it under the care of the Eastern Va. Christian Conference. The General Convention of the Christian Church South fully endorsed this effort by unanimous vote in 1892. The Executive Board of the A. C. C. has recently directed the General Secretary to issue a call for a collection, from all the churches in this country, to prosecute the work to its final completion. The South has already secured half of the means necessary to the erection of the property.

If the twenty-five thousand Christians who read this paper knew the situation, in all its bearings, they would contribute the necessary money cheerfully and in a short period of time. This is written to help all to see the enterprise in its true light and thus to appreciate its true merits.

It is not a local enterprise calling for help. It is an enterprise of the whole church located in Norfolk. The American Christian Convention proposes to make it the seal and visible monument of an inner, organic union. Let me show the wisdom of choice as to location.

Norfolk is the natural door-way between Europe and the south and west of the United States. It has the best harbor south of New York, if not the best on the Atlantic coast, and no other harbor has such a good entrance from the ocean. The fact that the navies of the world are to rendezvous in Hampton Roads in this very month, in honor of our Columbian jubilee, proves this; for certainly New York and Philadelphia have the advantages in present population and importance as great cities. But the natural advantages of the harbor are thus recognized. This age more and more seizes nature at her best points, and the Bible at cardinal points, rather than cling to great cities because old, or to traditions and theologies formed by human wisdom. Maury showed in a famous address many years ago that Norfolk was nearer Chicago than New York and destined to be a great city. It is ten hours closer to the ocean than Baltimore. Our great Fort Monroe points its cannon over her placid and storm-sheltered harbor. Four great railways from the west and south meet the ocean steamers from the east and fill them with American products. Other smaller lines terminate in Norfolk, where ships from all countries washed by the Atlantic find safe anchorage and do business. The city itself is expanding as never before. It is, in this respect, more favorable for us than the old and more finished cities, increasing only by natural growth, with fixed church relations. The population is new, the influx will keep it so for years, and the location of our church is in the midst of this new element, which is destined to be the centre of a great community, as it is now the geographical center and highest point in the city. Already the membership has increased in that neighborhood. The congregation is large and growing larger. The work was projected at the most favorable period to give us the advantage of those new conditions, which must continue. Great corporations see for business just what we see for Christ's cause, and hence railways and shipping and large investments. One of the discoverers of this age is that business and religion belong together, and henceforth it is to be so. Wherever great corporations see points of advantage the church may wisely invest money and effort. I have introduced this commercial idea because money is what is needed to establish this church in the center of great commercial and spiritual possibilities.

Grouped around Norfolk, within a radius of seventy miles, are thirty other Christian churches, nine of which are located in towns and villages. All these smaller centers send bright young people to Norfolk as the natural larger center. The growth of Norfolk is a drain upon these churches unless we have a church equal to others to receive them. The opportunity is ours. The elements of success are within our reach. The only embarrassment possible is the lack of money, and that should never come. The treasurer of the enterprise, Col. A. Savage, who is an earnest member, is a man of large business experience and success, most careful and prudent as a financier, and is worthy of all confidence, and a guarantee of caution and economy. He is also a member of the building committee, which is composed of prudent, faithful men. With the Norfolk church firmly established, as a basis of operations, the line of growth would naturally be out and along the rail ways from town to town and from city to city until the Christian Church would take its deserved place in the south, for the propagation of the gospel; untrammelled by the traditions and creeds of men. The tendency of this age is toward the position occupied by the Christian Church. Let us take our place at the centers of society to show the people who we are and where we stand. Rev. Dr. Jones is doing that manfully in Norfolk, and the cause is gaining all the time. With no advantage save that which truth forces, his influence has increased over the people, and the Christian Church is gaining favor with men.

The history and growth of the work warrant its further prosecution with hope. Its destiny is success. It is worthy of prayers and cash. Its failure means broken vows. The whole church is pledged to this cause. Heaven seems to be propitious, and the time has come for ripe fruit to be gathered.

The natural, commercial and religious advantages all seem to meet the action of A. C. C., and the long-cherished desire of our people in the south to plant a Christian church of influence in Norfolk. All the conditions and elements are new, and the outlook brightens as the light streams in above the horizon to gladden our souls. We have passed the star-light period now, and see already the upper edge of the rising sun. The trowel, saw and hammer will soon begin their music on the church, but behind these are the silent workings of devoted hearts, where no sound of saw, or hammer, or any tool of iron will ever be heard. In these silent workshops of God is preparing the means for the erection of the memorial to our united church Objections Considered.

The manner in which our people might defeat the intended results of this call for the Norfolk Memorial Church is that which is so often exercised to induce a pastor of a church to leave the charge: that is, to reduce subscriptions, or payments, on his salary. The minister generally takes the hint. But in this case, to pursue that course will not accomplish the results that an opposer might desire, though it might defeat the call. For us to make no contributions will not cause the work to be given up, as far as building a church is concerned. The moneys already contributed and in bank, according to the statement of the treasurer of the Norfolk church, herein published, make it essential for the managers to erect a building, or return the money: the latter would be absurd, in view of the strength developing in the congregation and church. Then the church must be built. If the north were not to contribute a single dollar the church will stand there. The point is this:—Will the north have a share in the work? The American Christian Convention gave the Norfolk people the right to expect that they should receive important assistance from the north. Refer to the record of the official action, if you doubt this, and read how the delegates voted to approve of the erection of a memorial temple at Norfolk. Did they mean that the south should do it alone? The brethren at Marion were too noble to make the vote with that spirit in their hearts. They intended that the brotherhood generally should aid in the work; that their recommendation should have influence with the people, to induce them to give. By the union of the people of both sections in the sacrifice only, could the church be a becoming memorial of union. However, although this object of benevolence has been steadily published in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and American Christian as "approved," the contributions on the part of the people at large have not reached a figure that is fitting. It may be that some of the brethren, notwithstanding the vote of our representative body, may be held inactive by reasons similar to some that have been written the Secretary. It is due to these brethren, to their loyalty to our general work, to their talents, to their usefulness, and to their faithfulness to the Master to consider the reasons they urge:—

I. That the vote was passed through the Convention; but that did not bind anybody, nor pledge anybody; it was only a recommendation. This reminds me of those "gentlemen" who are in favor of prohibitory laws, "but ag'in their enforcement." When after full debate the brethren did not vote against the section containing the recommendation to our people, they became pledged to use their influence for the building of the church. The day has gone by for our people to sit silent when measures are adopted in conference or Convention, and then go away and disregard the vote. If there were reasons of weight against assisting the southern brethren in building the structure those reasons were known at the time of the Marion Convention; there were good speakers there that knew them. Unquestionably we are pledged.

II. This leads us to the point as to how much we are pledged to contribute. I admit that there was nothing definite said at Marion; also, that the Executive Board has not promised a definite sum. If the Executive Board should promise a definite sum you might object reasonably if it were too large. But for the north to give one half as much as the south,--is this too much? Surely not; when we consider that the north is so much stronger. I know that the south should give more than the north; for the property is to be in the south; the southern brethren are to have sole benefit of the enterprise, from the worldly point of view. But the southern brethren intend to do more than the north. They have suggested a much larger sum for themselves. Read the appeal of the pastor on that point. Would the north have been flattered if the south had suggested a petty, or inconsiderable amount for the north? Besides; are we ready to declare that we are willing to contribute to the erection of a building, which, in a secondary sense, is to commemorate a union, union---for which we labor and pray, (the only contribution of the kind in the closing century), a less sum than we are sending to Japan every year from now on? Remember, brethren, these southern people are ours; our national brethren; our Christian brethren; they speak our language; they help us in our Japan work; our ministers intermingle, and we wish still more of it. Surely we accept the sum named as an appropriate amount.

III. It has been said that the southern brethren generally disregard the calls of the American Christian Convention, and have hardly made a change since the Marion Convention. We will not enter into a discussion on that point: we will only say this:--Should Christian brethren regard the calls of the American Christian Convention when properly issued? You say, Yes. Well, here is a call: a call for the Norfolk church, and probably the only call that will ever be issued for it. If it was wrong for the southern brethren to disregard the calls, is it right for us to disregard them? If you condemn the southern brethren for disregarding the calls, you will rest under your own condemnation, unless you now help Norfolk. Mat 7:2 "With what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged." Luke 19:22 "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee."

But brethren, we of the north are no better than we ought to be, in this regard. Perhaps not two thirds of our churches contribute with regularity, in the north.

IV It has been said that the union is not a perfect union. How hard it is to get perfect union! Shall we wait for perfect action till we have secured perfect union? That was not the Master's way. He did not demand perfection before he was willing to impart his blessings. I know, by my correspondence with the brethren of the north, that there is a strong desire for a full and perfect union in the hearts of those who now consider that the union is imperfect. The way to secure such union is to act as though we had such feeling, and wished the southern brethren to realize it. The money given is not buying our southern brethren; but the gift will cement the south to the north, for future work in the service of the Lord.

V. It is said that the calls are so many. But all the calls issued by the Secretary of the Convention, except this one, were not only authorized, but ordered upon him by the Convention in full-session. No calls except those issued by the Secretary of the Convention were intended by the Convention. If you regard the others, truly the calls may be many. But why put the unauthorized calls in front of the authorized ones. Although this call was not directed by the Convention it is in full harmony with the vote of the Convention, and it is as authoritative as any call among the Christians ought to be; being now issued by the approval of the Executive Board of the Convention in the interval between the sessions, and it is issued in the regular channel. But if the other calls are many, observe this only one, issued once, not annually, nor weekly, only once; to commemorate an organic union of the followers of Christ.

Brethren, let our money flow together in the Norfolk Memorial Church. Send a contribution to the Secretary of the Convention, in some manner that secures it against loss in the mail.

The Norfolk Call

We are all glad to see so business like a move as that which the Executive Board of the American Christian Convention is now making to carry out the resolutions of the Marion Convention respecting the work at Norfolk, Va. That call will come to our entire brotherhood, backed by all the authority of our national organization, so that a general and generous response ought to be assured. It has been the writer's privilege to have a humble part in the Norfolk work, having been called on two different occasions to assist the pastor in evangelistic services, thus being placed in a position to know rather thoroughly the prospects and the needs of our cause in that growing southern center. The importance of having thriving churches in such cities ought to need no emphasizing for those who have eyes to see the tendency of our modern civilization to centralization in large cities. The history of Paul's work is a continuous chronicle of city-evangelization. He well knew that only from such centers would there go forth that wave of influence of which he speaks in 1. Thess. 1:8: "From you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to Godward is gone forth; so that we need not to speak anything." (R. V.) See also Rom. 1:8, "Your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world" So far as the "sounding forth" of the word of the Lord is concerned, a strong church in a large city is worth more than half a hundred churches in rural districts. The successful general gets possession of the strong, strategic points upon the field of battle. Here is where we have suffered others to take the place which legitimately belonged to us. We are seeing it now, and we should diligently seek to redeem the time. Perhaps there is no other city in all the South where a strong church of Christians could be so potential as in Norfolk, which is so rapidly becoming a great center of population and of commerce. Today we have a magnificent opportunity of establishing such a church. A strong nucleus is already formed, and a strong workman is assiduously and patiently at work amidst the encouragements and many discouragements that are always incident to pioneer work. A most judicious selection has been made of a location for the building that is to be,—it the response on our part is what it ought to be; the lots have been paid for; the congregation is made up of people who will give character to the work,—some of as noble, whole-souled people as I ever met. Now house them well, in a building that shall be the fitting monument of an event so notable as the reunion of our once dismembered church, and we shall find that we have dropped a huge stone into the midst of a placid lake, and set in motion a succession of concentric circles of evangelistic and missionary influence that shall go on, ever widening, until the remotest churches, both North and South, shall share the blessing.

Let me entreat our people not to make the irreparable mistake of compelling the Norfolk congregation to take up its permanent abode in a building of insignificant size and architecture, by withholding from it the necessary funds for the erection of a church that will do us honor. If we do, we paralyze the enterprise (for they are not able to build it themselves) and we shall bring upon ourselves the curse of Meioz (Judges 5:23,) that came not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. "But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you." (Heb. 6:9.)

C. L. JACKSON.

7 Tremont Place, Boston Mass.

Special Call.

1st. That we approve the effort to organize a memorial church in Norfolk, Virginia, under the the direction of the Eastern Virginia Conference, with Rev. C. J. Jones as present minister, and that the Mission Board be requested to aid this work, for this fiscal year, by an appropriation not to exceed $800.

2d That the brotherhood at large be requested to aid in the erection of a memorial temple at that place, &c.

The foregoing was the action of the American Christian Convention at Marion, Ind. About a year ago the Secretary of the convention called the attention of the brotherhood to the fact that the Convention had endorsed the work at Norfolk. From that time the Secretary has frequently published the Norfolk church as an "approved object of benevolence." It has been kept regularly before the public; but no "call" has been issued for it, as for education, home mission, the S. S. Department, foreign missions and the Convention, naming a specific day on which a contribution is asked. But this year the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, which, prior to the "union" at Marion, Indiana, had in an official manner regarded the southern brethren as a distinct and separate body from the northern, brought the following memorial, through the President of the American Christian Convention, Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., LL. D., before the Executive Board: "Resolutions adopted by the E. Va. Christian Conference, Nov. 4th, 1892.

"Resolved, that the President of this conference be requested to memorialize the Executive Board of the American Christian Convention through the President, asking its recognition of the call of this conference to the Christian churches of Canada and America for a special collection in each church, at such time as the Secretary of the A. C. C. shall think best, to aid in the erection of the memorial Christian church build in Norfolk, Va., and that he reiterate the call through the Herald of Gospel Liberty and CHRISTIAN SUN, and kindly urge the unanimous action of all our churches."

Following the record of this memorial in the minutes of the Executive Board of transactions by correspondence, occurs this passage:

"The subject was laid before the Executive Board by direction of President D. A. Long; and all the members finally approved the taking of a special collection at a time to be appointed by the Secretary of the Convention. The Secretary named the first Sunday in May."

On that day, therefore, we request all our churches and missionary societies to make a contribution for the building of the Norfolk Memorial church at Norfolk, Virginia. Send the money directly to J. J. Summerbell, the Secretary of the Convention, mentioning your church, pastor, clerk and Conference: that we may know what parts of the country have contributed. There is no other way to arrive at this knowledge.

We speak to missionary societies: for this is a missionary enterprise. The Marion convention adopted the matter in the report of the committee on missions: and the missionary board has rendered help to Norfolk as a missionary enterprise.

Remember the date the first Sunday in May.

J. J. SUMMERBELL,
Secretary A, C. C.

Lewisburg, Pa. April 10, 1893.

The Pastor, as to the Norfolk Movement.

The present issue of the American Christian contains the official call of the General Secretary of the American Christian Convention, Rev. J. J. Summerbell, D. D., in the interest of the Memorial church work in Norfolk, Virginia, and also communications on the same from J. J. Summerbell, D. D., W. W. Staley, A. M., J. P. Barrett, D. D., Z. A. Poste and others.

These gentlemen have written on the work from close observation, and now it remains for me to refer to material interests relative to present condition, locality, plans, style, expected expense, &c.

At a meeting of the board of trustees held in the city of Norfolk, February 27th, it was decided to begin the work at once and advance as fast as the money could be secured. Accordingly a Building Committee was created, church plans as submitted by Architect G. A. Williams of Norfolk considered and adopted, and after considering other matters of interest the board of trustees was adjourned.

The Memorial church building to be created is a Gothic structure, brick with stone trimmings, tower and sub-tower (but not a spire). It will stand upon a corner, with the audience room fronting on the more important, and the Sunday school room fronting on the other, street. The size of the audience room is 54x56, and of the Sunday school room 30x50, on the same floor so that both rooms can be thrown into one when necessary. The audience room will have seating capacity for five hundred, and by the use of chairs, six hundred, while by closely seating up the space, as in times of special meetings, we can accommodate one thousand in the use of both rooms.

The lack of this building has been a very serious obstacle in the progress of our work, and to those of us who have been called on to struggle with the difficulties personally there has seemed to be an unnecessary delay in the official action now heartily given.

In every detail of work thus far accomplished the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and the church at Norfolk have rigidly adhered to the letter and the spirit of the resolutions adopted by the American Christian Convention at Marion, Indiana; and whatsoever reasons may be assigned for inaction, the fact remains that the long period of two years and six months time intervening between the enthusiastic action of the American Convention and the first official call upon churches to fulfill that pledge, has been a period of serious trial and detention in the work.

We have no desire in this paper to magnify the difficulties through which we have passed or sit in judgment on the action of anyone; but rather, we gladly recognize the action of the Executive Board officially announced by its General Secretary, and seek in every way to co-operate with the Board in extending and making successful the call.

To this end we have made a special contract with Dr. Summerbell, and for a certain consideration he will send out additional thousands of "The American Christian" to the brotherhood at large, containing the official call, and also special communications from distinguished brethren on the same subject.

The locality of our building site is admirable in every way. More than in any other part of the city of Norfolk property in the vicinity of our church is being improved and hundreds of new residences will be erected during the present season. The spiritual condition of our church work is exceedingly gratifying. Our congregations are increasing in numbers and interest and it is not often that two Sabbaths pass without additions both to the Sunday school and church. Our people are united, spiritual and plucky, and under the Divine blessing we have been enabled to accomplish a good work. With the hearty co-operation of our brethren all over the country as indicated in the "call" of the Executive Board of the A. C. C., we are ready to assume responsibilities and enter upon the work of erecting a Memorial Christian church edifice which may stand in commemoration of a most notable event in the history of our church, to the honor of our brotherhood, to the salvation of the people, and the glory of God.

Inclusive of lots in building site our church building will cost $20,000 approximately. Certainly not in excess of that amount. It is the fixed determination of the Board of trustees to begin and continue the work as the money may be secured, in no case incurring debts beyond a reasonable ability to pay.

By a reference to the statement of Col. Alex. Savage, treasurer of the board, in this issue, it will be seen that at this time we have money in bank and good subscription to the amount of $11,517.08. Of this amount the Christians of the Southern churches have given $10,910.87, and to complete this structure as a Memorial church the brethren of the South will make a desperate effort to raise $13,000, if our brethren of the North will raise the balance. Of the $7,000 from the North it will be seen by reference to treasurer's statement $606.21 have been already paid, reducing the amount to $6,393.76. At this present time a friend is seeking to influence another to give an equal amount with himself, which will materially diminish the sum, and Rev. T. M. McWhinney is earnestly engaged and hopeful.

Now suppose that which the friends alluded to contribute there should be $5,000 to be raised by our brethren of the North to complete the work, is there any good reason for feeling that this is a great burden?

Dr. Summerbell announces in "The American Christian" that the Christian church represents one hundred thousand Christians I believe this estimate is accurate. But in every church neighborhood there are those who while they are not members of the church themselves are closely related to the church by business, social and family ties, who are interested in our work, and who if interestingly informed will be pleased to help in the good work. Certainly then we are safe in saying there as one hundred thousand interested friends who may be solicited to help in this project. Four-fifths of this number are in the North—twenty thousand in the South and eighty thousand in the North. Now if this $5,000 be divided equally among the eighty thousand it amounts to a fraction over six cents each. If we say fully one half of our people will never hear of the enterprise, then the amount for each of the forty thousand remaining would be only thirteen cents! But if it be said that fully three-fourths of even this number are either indifferent or unable to contribute, so that only ten thousand remain, it would require but fifty cents from each of these to cover the amount!

If the one-fifth of the brotherhood (our Southern brethren) have raised $10,910.87, and to complete this work will undertake to raise it to $13,000, won't the other four-fifths of the church undertake to raise $5,000 in addition, in order that the work may be completed? When the official Call is presented in the churches are there not one hundred who will give $10.00 each, three hundred who will give $5.00 each, five hundred who will give $2.00 each, five hundred to give $1.00 each, and one thousand to give fifty cents each, so that success may be assured? If undertaken with unanimity and enthusiasm this can be done without any conflict with existing interests or burdening the church.

While returning sincere thanks to all who have thus far assisted us, and to the Executive Board for its hearty, earnest call to the churches, may we not hope that in response our ministerial and other official brethren will take hold of this work with a vim and enthusiasm which will thoroughly present the cause, kindly urge the interest, and faithfully execute the trust! If so, then I am satisfied that the result will be every way and to every one satisfactory.

To our brethren in the ministry, let me add a few words—won't you kindly take pains to circulate among our people all available copies of the Herald, American Christian, and Sun containing the "Call" and special communications? Won't you kindly and earnestly present the cause of the Memorial church from your pulpits and otherwise? Won't you begin at once to call the attention of your congregations to the "Special Call" for the 1st Sunday in May, or nearest Sunday upon which you can take up the collection? Won't you as it is practicable appoint one or more of your active members and friends, so that with the Sunday collection your church, Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society may have an imperishable record of a noble work preserved in the archives of the Memorial church?

May the blessing of Almighty God rest upon the effort and upon every one interested in making it a grand success.

C. J. JONES.

P. S. Contributions and collections may be sent to Rev. J. J. Summerbell, D. D., Lewisburg, Penn'a, or to Col. Alex. Savage, Norfolk, Virginia, who will promptly publish and receipt the amounts received.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Brethren, give the news from your churches.

We need the money that is due us, please send it in.

Revs. P. T. Klapp and P. H. Fleming exchanged pulpits last Sunday.

Revs. S. B. Klapp and C. C. Williams exchanged pulpits last Sunday.

Let every body attend the district meetings next Saturday and Sunday.

Revs. P. H. Fleming and W. H. Roach gave the Sun office pleasant calls last week.

Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., is expected to preach at Holland Christian church next Sunday.

Union, N. C., wants the Sunday School Convention to meet there this year. It is a good place.

We would like to hear from the Va. Valley Conference. Please look up your pen, Bro. Iseley.

Why are there not more district meetings next Sunday? Who is to blame? Every body should be interested in them.

The excitement of the week, in Raleigh, seems to be over the James City affair. Though not as great as one might expect.

Will the brethren of the Deep River Conference please let us know how their appointments ran? The editor wants to visit them.

We acknowledge the receipt of a beautiful ticket of invitation to the closing exercises of the Fairview Institute on 21st to 24th of May.

Bro. Ira Conneley, the Sunday School Missionary of Eastern Virginia Conference, sends us a good list of subscribers, for which we are thankful.

The pastor, brethren and friends of New Providence will hold an all day service the first Sunday in May.

It will be the communion service of the church. Let every member be there.

We understand the Raleigh Christian Church is heir to many aprons. Sister Foster and those other sisters who work with her, know how to push church work.

Orders for Children's Day Programs are coming in and those churches and Sunday schools that intend to commemorate the day will do well to order early.

Will those who write for the SUN, please write only on ONE side? We love for you to write; but it is much easier for you to write one side of your paper than it is for us to rewrite your article.

Let every church sing the song the first Sunday in May, that is in this issue of the SUN, and take a collection for the Norfolk Memorial Church. And if you have no services that Sunday, sing the song and take the collection the first Sunday you do have services.

By reading the article of our venerable Bro. Eaton on New England Matters, it will be seen that his wife has passed to the spirit land. Our dear brother has our sympathies in this his hour of trial. Possibly no other man of his age is doing as much work for the Lord as Bro. Eaton.

Our great object in life should be to make the world better as we pass through it. Let our desire be to sweeten every thing that we touch. How sad it is when we make those things with which we come in contact worse. Only God's grace can prepare us for the great work of life.

We understand that the new Christian church at Burlington, N. C., is to be dedicated on Sunday the 10th of June, and that Dr. Maple will preach the sermon. Our brethren, sisters, and friends have not made much fuss about it, but have built a house of worship that does credit to the booming town of Burlington.

We find that a good way to get brethren to write for the SUN is for some one to sound a key note on some question of controversy. The questions of the right of women to preach and church festivals has caused many old pens to be rubbed up, and pencils trimmed. It helps the editor out mightily.

We devote this issue of our paper principally to the Norfolk Memorial Church, thinking that it will do more good than in any other way. May is the month for taking collections according to the call of the Executive Board of A. C. C. and we want every church to respond liberally. Let eyes, prayers and money be turned toward Norfolk, Va.

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald writing in Zion's Herald, seems to think that there is in some of the wealthy churches considerable dissatisfaction and a tendency toward Congregationalism. He however intimates that this trouble may be easily checked by properly applying the strong machinery of Methodism in time. We think he may find men's independent views a little harder to bind down now than in former days.

Like Other People.

A desire to be like some one else is the quick-sands which have swallowed up many people both soul and body. A desire to walk like some one else, sing, speak, smile or act like some one who is his ideal of perfection, has often sapped from some young man all originality that was in him, and left him a mere bubble of another man's conduct.

The thought that should expand every heart should not be a desire to be like this or that individual, but like God desires him to be. Let us remember that no two nations can be alike. Their geographical make up must of necessity differ. And many of the laws that are of advantage to one would be a disadvantage to the other. The thoughts, customs and ways of nations differ. No two persons can be alike, and it is useless to try. God does not intend it.

Israel's desire to be like other nations gave birth to a thorn in the flesh that pierced the side through the long line of kings which followed. Israel's religion was different from the other nations; and a desire to be like them was calculated to blend her religion with one of a heathenish type, and thereby weaken its power.

It is true that a desire to be like some one else may cut two ways; for it may elevate or debase according to the pattern followed. But if the example should be a good one, it may then destroy the beauty of independent thinking that inaugurates, and pushes forward all reform movements, to the betterment of man.

Had the great moving power of Luther's soul been an imitation of the ways of Catholicism, the glorious blessings brought to the world through the Protestant church would have lingered long in the lap of reformation. But his desire was not to be like some one else unless it was right.

A desire to be like some one else broadens the channel for the filthy use of tobacco, sharpens the appetite for strong drink, dresses the soul in pictures of ball room raiment and fills the mouths of bright boys with bitter oaths. A boy sees a man smoke a cigar; the boy wants to be like the man, so he longs to make a chimney of his own nose. A young man sees another drink whiskey; a craving to imitate destroys all restraints, and a journey to a drunkard's grave is commenced.

Dear readers, let your greatest desire be to do right whether it is like your friend or not. Suffer no one to take thy crown. Remember strong effort is necessary to think and act independently. It is much easier to drift with the popular current than to stand for the right.

On the current of fashion you may drift with ease;
But when up the stream you try to go,
And all the alturements of the world shall leave,
Many difficulties will come you know.

Christianity Applied.

Theory lives in the mind, science looks for the reasons, art tells how, and application manufactures the world's supplies of every kind. Theory and science may form the body, application gives the life.

Christianity in theory is as lifeless as buddhism, or that of any other heathen god. The mind that speculates with it only, will remain void in good results. And the Bible studied only as a book of science will prove a dead letter.

The great life giving power of Christianity is its truths applied practically. It is not enough to read, "Thou shalt not kill," and continue to wish people dead. Why should we read, "Thou shalt not steal," and at the same time watch for an opportunity to cheat some one. A prayer for the suffering is worth but little with no effort put forth to relieve them.

Faith is dead as long as it remains dormant in the mind; but on the best errands, it goes more rapid than the lightnings flash, when given life by applied principles. A belief in God and the atoning blood of Christ bring no special joys to the soul until a personal application is made. Naaman's leprosy would not yield its hold until faith was strong enough to carry out the directions given. It is practical obedience that brings the blessings.

Christianity practically applied in all its bearings would soon lift the world high above the slums of corruption that now environ our towns, cities and country places. Let the daily walk, conversation, and business life shine forth through the glass of applied Christianity, and sin's ways will soon fade like the plucked flowers of the morning.

Is it Right?

We understand that the second Presbyterian church in Columbia has turned out of the church a young woman because her business compels her to work on Sunday, and a resolution has been introduced to thus discipline all members whose occupation compels them to work on the Sabbath. This act of the church, though seemingly small, is creating some interest, and the question is being asked, ought the action of the Columbia church to be adopted as a rule?

We give our answer in the negative. Not because it was right for the lady to work on Sunday, for it was not right; but because the church commenced at the wrong place. In many churches of all denominations, are to be found, wealthy men owning stock in various interest, where work is carried on Sabbath after Sabbath, and thereby forcing their hands to either desecrate the Sabbath or lose their position. Let the church expel first these wealthy men who work their money on Sunday to make more, and then she will be in a position to expel the poor members who are forced to work for their bread and butter.

Any member of a church ought to have faith enough to refuse to work on Sunday. But quite a number of laboring people think it almost a life and death case with them. We ought to have a law strong enough to say to the people the Sabbath day must be observed.

A Visit to Durham.

Week before last we ran up to Durham, N. C., one day. It is always a pleasure to meet our friends in this pushing, energetic, driving town.

We found Rev. J. W. Wellons hard at work in the commencement of a revival effort. He is much beloved by the people at Durham, as he is every where else where he is known.

We were pleased to run a few minutes into the stores of W. A. Slater & Co. Herndon and Bagwell and Rawls New York store. Mr. Slater and Mr. Bagwell are both former school boys of ours, and are nice honest gentlemen. Mr. Rawls is a nice gentleman, and then Bro. J. J. Pritchard is there ready to sell you nice goods. With Herndon and Bagwell is Bro. J. W. McLennan, and whilst he was always a clever gentleman, we think he has improved since he married. Mr. Slater sells nice clothing cheap.

Here and There.

Last Sunday gave us a few hours at Durham, N. C., with Bro J. W. Wellons and his congregation. He is working hard, and we saw signs of improvement. He has been conducting a series of meetings which have resulted in the conversion of some souls, and some accessions to the church. He has a few faithful workers.

Sunday night found us at Elon College. The young people as usual, were much interested in the Sunday night meeting. Elon College is a good place to get ones religion toned up. All are trying to get ready for the commencement.

Wake Chapel.

The third Sunday and Saturday before were spent at Wake Chapel, N. C. Friday in the afternoon we were carried out from Raleigh by Bro. Wm. Jones to his home where we received the best of attention, until Saturday morning when time's voice said start to the house of God. Saturday night we were taken care of in the hospitable home of Bro. D. H. Fuquay, and Sunday night we were pleasantly situated in the home of Dr. B. S. Utley.

The service on Saturday and Sunday were pleasant, and we trust profitable.

Suffolk Letter.

The lecture of Dr. Talmage in Suffolk last Wednesday night, on "Big Blunders," was an event in our calendar. The City Hall was well filled, more than seven hundred being present. Many enjoyed his flights, his pictures, and his brilliant passes; but some were disappointed and thought that others could do as well. No artist can please all eyes, no music can please all ears, and no orator can please all listeners. But Dr. Talmage pleases the majority, and is the best known preacher on this continent. His face is a benediction, and his words drop like honey-dew upon an audience. He soars, he sparkles, he flames. He trills like a bird, shouts like a multitude, roars like a cataract, and booms like distant thunder. All nature seems to be subject to his description, and God seems to inspire his utterances. I prize the opportunity to hear his voice in Suffolk. The naval Rendezvous has ended. The fleet lifts anchor and leaves Hampton Roads today for New York for the Naval Review. The distant shores will reverberate with the booming of great cannon as the war monsters leave the harbor. The big guns on Fort Monroe will answer the big guns on the ships, and the noise of battle will be the sound of peace and mutual benediction. It is to be hoped that the blue waters over which they sail will never be cut by hostile ships or colored by the blood of conflict. Benedictions of peace forever on the navies of the nations. Perhaps Norfolk was never so crowded for one week, and there were never so many things to interest visitors. Military and Bard contests, military and trades parades, boat excursions to the fleet, and the multitudes of people, made things lively and interesting. I never saw such good behavior and so few signs of drinking. The streets were literally thronged and yet I saw only one man intoxicated. Of course there was a great deal of drinking, for Norfolk is full of saloons; but the drinking seemed to remain in those parts of the city where the saloons are located. But with all the saloons our civilization is improving. We are moving on a higher level with brightening prospects. Christianity is doing its work silently but surely in society. The leaven is changing the meal into its own nature. Diamonds are not made in noisy workshops and under the gaze of man, but in the silent and hidden process of crystallization. So character is fashioned under the transforming power of the gospel, working silently and mysteriously in the heart.

Elon College Notes.

The students are making some special preparation for final examinations which will begin in a short while.

There will be a Township Sunday School Convention held in this township at St. Marks church on the 2nd, Sunday in May. The programme will be printed and we want every one to come up with his soul filled with the subject for discussion. It is important that those who are on the programme, come up to the work in order that we all may be benefitted by the different ideas and methods of work.

We hear that there is to be a convention of the Sunday schools in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. We are indeed gratified to learn this, and in order to make it a success we must have God with us in the work. Let us begin to pray now for the manifestation of His presence and a great outpouring of His Spirit on that occasion. And if the committee will pardon us, we would suggest that no person's name appear on the programme unless he agrees to be present and make a talk.

Bro. Clements preached a good sermon for us last night. We assure him that he always has a welcome to our midst and that we enjoy hearing him speak to us the blessed truths of the gospel.

Mr. W. H. Albright, one of our honored students has been on a visit to friends at Guilford College, and he says that the young ladies there take an active part in the prayer meetings. Young ladies, you have a work to perform in Christ's vineyard and if you can do more good in that way, we say God bless your efforts. It should be the motto of every true Christian to labor where he can do the most toward advancing God's work here on the earth.

Dr. Herndon is again on a visit to Eastern Virginia. The Dr. can come nearer reaching both the souls and the pockets of the people at the same time, than any other man we know.

Township S. S. Convention.

There will be a Township Sunday school Convention at St. Marks church near Elon College on the second Sunday in May. A very good program has been arranged and everybody we hope will be benefitted.

The exercises will begin at 10 o'clock and after a dinner on the church yard will close in an afternoon session. The Sunday schools of this township are St Marks, Elon College, Shallow Ford, and Mt. Vernon. We hope to have as good attendance as possible.

Foreign Mission.

What a grand work for all and yet there are some that are not in favor of Foreign Mission why? They give for their reason that there are so many heathens at home who need the gospel. Were the disciples to remain at Jerusalem until all the Jews there were converted to the Christian faith? The church is not responsible for the salvation of any man, but it is responsible for the preaching of the word to all men, hear Christ's command. "Go ye in to all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," not convert every creature, but preach the gospel to every creature. The heathens at home have been preached to and they would not accept Christ, the church has performed her duty to those at home, and it is our duty to aid in sending the gospel to those who have never heard Christ. Obligations are laid upon us, it is our duty to obey. Disobedience is sin.

In vain with lavish kindness
The gifts of God are strewn,
The heathen in his blindness
Bows down to wood and stone.

Notes from Harvard.

MR. EDITOR:—As I have been to hear the world-famous Scotchman—Prof. Drummond—every night this week, I have not the time now for any notes. I tried to hear him over in Boston tonight (Friday) but was met at the door by a policeman whose orders were to “shell out, hall was full and doors closed.” It is hard to tell which night I have enjoyed him most—last night I guess as that is the last time I heard him. His talk last night was to students only. He requested that no one take notes, but one student disobeyed orders and Harvard's daily paper The Crimson got the benefit thereof. The man can't be written up—as his side way illustrations add much to what he says. But as the time is not mine to give any out line of the talk. I will send herewith the notes of the “disobedient listener” as they appear in The Crimson this a. m.:

“Sever 11 was not nearly large enough to hold the men who gathered to hear Professor Drummond again last night. Monday night, he covered, in a way, the whole subject of religion,—cleared away the objections to it, explained its meaning, appealed for its acceptance; last night he had two thoughts which he brought out with all the power of a man who thinks deeply, conceives vividly, and expresses clearly.

The first thought was that religion is both a science and an art, and that full understanding of it as a science is not essential before man may begin to practise it as an art. Pure speculation is by no means useless, and there are men who seem to be fitted, above everything else, for investigating scientifically the place of religion in the world. While we eagerly await the results of these men's researches, and while every man may push on for himself as far as he can into the knowledge of religious truths, there is no reason why he must put off, until he knows all truth, the practice of that which he already knows. He gave a vivid portrayal of the attempts of missionaries to correct the cannibals of the Pacific Islands. It is men like these that move the world, and their spirit is what young men need.

His other thought was that God not only started the processes of evolution but that he still governs their development. Men realize that God is back of all the first cause from which everything springs, but they have yet to appreciate fully that God is not dead, that he is not powerless in the presence of his own creations, but that he is still alive, and that his activity still continues. If we understand that God's purpose is the evolution of the world, then we have one object in life, to allow ourselves to become his agents. If we put our own will against his, then we so much hinder the final out-come of God's purpose and our lives have become a hindrance, not a help.

Now the doubt comes as to what God's will for us is. We have not the voices; we can use our common-sense, the advice of our friends, the inspirations of books and the teachings of experience. When a man has once made up his mind as to his life and career after mature deliberation, he will do better not to alter that decision. Let him make sure, however, of one thing, that he cast his lot in with the progressive nations. If he decide that other lands need his work, let him go to China, Japan or India where the people have a future before them; not to those lands where the natives are dying away before the white civilization. Men will be more useful to their native country than to the other parts of the world; by working there, advancing, lifting up their own country, the final perfection of the world is best aided.

If one lives a life which he can feel is filling the purpose of his being, then he knows genuine pleasure and satisfaction.

He needs only to do his simple duty, and learn to be expansive, to help the men less favored than himself, to learn that it is, in reality, more blessed to give than to receive. It is at a university that this lesson is hardest to learn; for the life though grand, is apt to be selfish. A man is withdrawn from the affairs of the world and shut up with his books and his amusements, so that he needs to be cautious lest he shall be narrowed rather than broadened by his course. He must first of all be sure that no religious convictions he has shall be disregarded. It is God in him, and, once given a chance to work, will lead him toward his best life.”

New England Matters.

My good Christian wife, who had been very active in the cause,—and noted for her deep interest in the welfare of the sick, poor and needy, left me the 4th inst, and went to her home in heaven. She had been a great sufferer for eleven months,—as the result of the grip. Two hours before she died, she fell asleep, and while asleep, she stopped breathing. No pain. No struggle. We had lived together, a little more than fifty-six years, in the unbroken enjoyment of each others society. During all those years, we never had a death in our family before! My three sons, are alive and in health,—and though I shall reach the 80th mile stone, next Sept. 3d, I am physically well and strong, and still love to preach “Christ and him crucified.”

I am like a man standing on the platform at the depot, waiting for the train to take me on. It may arrive very soon. When I go, I shall take nothing with me. It would be wicked to murmur, but my soul is filled with grief. Jesus, the Prince of sufferers; alone, gives me comfort. Everything of earth looks lonely. Even only is bright! Thank God for the brightness!

The Rhode Island and Massachusetts Christian Ministerial Association, held its Annual meeting in New Bedford, Mass., Tuesday of this week. It was well attended. Several valuable papers were read, and the criticisms of each paper, were free, full, and in a Christian spirit.

The cold winter, has taken its departure, and the New England farmers, have commenced stirring the soil, and are preparing to put in the seed. There was a great deal of gospel seed sown during the winter, that has not yet sprung up. That it may germinate, take root, and spring up, and bear fruit to the glory of God, is the prayer of the laborers in the gospel field.

Alabama Letter.

Sometime last year I saw an advertisement in the SUN, here is the substance of it to the best of my recollection. Wanted!! A Dollar to Hunt an Elder, for the purpose of writing to the CHRISTIAN SUN, the owner of the above Advertisement is (or was) one severe Payne. I just mention this to let the people know that Elder has found a Dollar and it gave him a Payne. But Hunt is still trying to write for the SUN, those other brethren are still at large if any see or hear anything in regard to their whereabouts you will confer a favor upon the owner by notifying him of the same.

Last second Sunday my regular appointment at Antioch the services were well attended both days. I never saw better attention given to the Word. I see some sights of progress with this church and hope that this may be the most prosperous year of its history.

The third Sunday I was with the church at McGui.e's chapel, we met a large congregation who were very attentive.

It was indeed a pleasure to me to visit my home church. I found the church in good condition Rev. H. W. Elder is pastor there, and is greatly beloved by his people.

Rev. J. D. Elder is at work in the mission cause. May God prosper him in his work.

Our Bro. Orr has moved to Texas

Nearly all of our preachers are at work since the spring opened.

If my time wasn't filled with the care of churches I could organize 3 Christian churches within 3 months.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Gives Strength and Overcomes Rheumatism.

“There is nothing I have ever taken in my life that did me so much good as Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was in the Union army from '61 to '65; was confined in Andersonville prison eight months, and the diseases contracted there still linger. I had chills and fevers for years, and my doctor told me that I must take 40 grains of quinine a day for a long time. I did so, but after a time it did me no good, and then he ordered bop tea, which was as bitter as gall and made me sick. Rheumatism then caught me in my left leg and I could not move it. The doctor said

I Had Malaria.

Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I have taken it ever since and it always does me good. My friends tell me I look younger and better than I did ten years ago. This makes me feel proud and I cannot praise Hood's Sarsaparilla enough. My case was a bad one, but Hood's and I am naturally very grateful to it. I recommend it to all the people whom I hear complaining of feeling weak and tired and for other troubles, and know of many who have been benefited by it. I am a living witness to the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla.” JOSEPH O. LOPEZ, Maynards, Md.

To The Churches of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference.

As chairman of the committee on Church Extension, I will ask each church and pastor in this conference to make a stong effort to raise the full amount assessed for this purpose. This is one of the very important enterprises in our church, and let us have one full report this year. There are several places that need help to finish up their new houses of worship, which would place them where they could soon sustain themselves. The amount asked for by conference is only about $300.00 and I can see no reason why it should not be raised, and really it ought to be doubled. Brethren please hasten this work, take collections, appoint committees, and adopt your very best plans for the success of the church this year.

Sending Out Samples.

One of the most customary methods of advertising is by sending out samples of goods. This plan is adopted by men engaged in all kinds of business. Periodicals frequently obtain substantial additions to their subscription lists because of the "sample copies" that are judiciously distribute.

Truth compels one to admit that the samples are often such in an exaggerated sense. They are usually a little in advance of the average, and the prospective buyer should consider this fact, and not have his expectations a raised to too high a pitch.

Some one has suggested that advertising be applied to religious meetings. Of course, we are always anxious to proclaim that services are to be held, but do we sufficiently advertise them by sending out samples?

This may be done in various ways. For example, the man who has been thrilled by the joyous songs, and comes out into the great congregation of the world humming one of hte tunes, is carrying a sample with him.

"Where did you get that tune, John? It's quite catchy."

"Why, I heard it at our prayer meeting. Come around tomorrow evening."

Again, the time one arrives at home is a sample of the meeting. Should you appear at your residence so soon after the service is known to have closed as to suggest that you have journeyed via a pneumatic tube, you are carrying a poor sample, the meeting has not taught you to tarry with strangers.

If one ming es with the throngs that issue from the doors of a church, he may obtain an assortment of samples composed of shades most varied:—

"That sermon was too tedious. I wish Dr. X — would preach for only half an hour."

"The singing was simply magnificent."

"It is so good to get a breath of fresh air. I don't believe they ventilate that church properly."

"The church seems to be made up of young people, and did you notice how they shook hands with strangers?"

These comments will serve to show the nature of the gosp! dispensed within the four walls of the edifice.

Various means of advertising our meetings will suggest themselves; and it is our duty to carry a good service with us through the week, handing out portions to the reedy ones we meet.—By Wilbur M. Vansant in Golden Rule.

Washington Letter.

The return of spring brings a revival of outdoor religious and temperance missionary work, which has for some years been steadily on the increase in Washington. It does not severely tax the memory of adult Washingtonians to remember the time when our churches, with rare exceptions, ignored, if they did not not actually oppose street and alley missionary work.

Today, that work is endorsed by all the churches, and the church which has not its own band or bands of alley and street missionaries is the exception rather than the rule, and, in addition to the denominational bands, there are several large non-denominational organizations, which are supported by non-churchmen as well as churchmen actively engaged in the work of making converts to Christianity and temperance; thus carrying peace, and if not happiness at least contentment, into many humble homes where both were unknown before the advent of the street and alley missionaries. No change either in individual or public sentiment ever takes place without a clear and well-defined cause. What was the cause of this change of sentiment regarding out-door missionaries? The question can be answered in one word results. A friend fond of illustrating his meaning with little stories says of it: "The street missionaries were like a farmer who went into an agricultural country, secured an abandoned farm, and began to plant seed in a manner different from that of the old farmers in that section. Some of the old farmers were disposed to ridicule the newcomer's methods of planting seed, others to sympathize with the mistaken zeal which he devoted to work which they felt certain was wasted on poor soil and would never amount to anything, and still others to ignore him and his method; as being unworthy of notice. The new farmer had faith in his methods and worked on, trusting to the future for his reward. By and by harvest time came around, and the new-comer had a crop, not so large as that of some of his wealthy neighbors, but still a crop. That opened the eyes of some of his neighbors to the fact that it was not always safe to condemn a method because it happened to be new to them, but there were still doubters who did not believe the old abandoned farm could be made to keep on producing crops, but they became fewer and fewer as each annual crop from the old farm became slightly larger than that of the year before, and that too, in the face of droughts and bad seasons which had caused the crops of more than one of his wealthy neighbors to be partial if not complete failures, now they can scarcely be found at all. The old farmers have not changed their methods, which experience has proven to be well adapted to the soil they cultivate, but they have acknowledged that the new man's methods are also well adapted to the soil he cultivates, and are all disposed to lend him a helping hand." Is it not a good illustration?

The two subjects uppermost in official circles this week relate to Hawaii and the financial condition of the country. Nothing official has been given out on either subject, but the impression is general that Hawaii will not be annexed, and that some sort of an arrangement will be made whereby the United States in exchange for a naval station on the islands and probably certain trade privileges will guarantee to protect the Hawaiian government from foreign interference. Further than to say that he apprehends no danger Secretary Carlisle declines, as he has done since he assumed office, to publicly discuss the financial situation.

A Pleasant Protest.

The following excerpt is one of many straws that recently have been painfully suggestive of an adverse and perilous wind blowing southward:

The New York Sen estimates that 20,000 flasks were emptied during the football game in that city between Yale and Princeton. "Altogether, it was the greatest day for public drinking that New York has seen. There is nothing like it on any other day of the year. Everybody participated, but the drinking was done in such a way that the police had no addition to the responsibilities on account of it." Moreover it says: "It was a common sight in the boxes and in the seats of the grand stands for men to offer their flasks to the girls with them before taking a drink themselves, and in many cases the girls accepted the offer."

As an alumnus of the University I feel it my duty through your columns to enter an earnest protest against the stand taken by President Winston in favor of inter-collegiate match games. Having closely read the current press, secular and religious touching the same, it is my candid judgment that the attendant evils over-balance, by far, the good results, and as a consequence should be discouraged and intredicted if necessary by the proper authorities.

I am quite sure that the President was not aware of the increasingly iniquitous trend of games inter-collegiate, or he would not have imperilled the fair fame of my alma mater by any favor or patronage shown them. I sincerely trust he will reconsider and amend his license recently granted, by "striking out the enacting clause."

Two promising lads in my home have been marked "U. N. C.," and right royally they cherish the sentiments their sire sings anon to them:

"Vive la, vive la, U. de N. C.
Vive le President!"

But while I love my alma mater and her distinguished President, I love my lads much more, and would rather they be left without a university education, if they must run the gauntlet of such risk to their souls. No apology is needed for this utterance, let it be found in the devout prayer my mother taught me: "Lead us not into temptation."—W. A. Betts, in Raleigh Christian Advocate.

The College and the Y. M. C. A. Convention.

That greatest of religious movements, the Y. M. C. A., has been from the beginning the outgrowth of the religious enthusiasm and the thought of college men. If there is no other single great awakening that can be credited to these institutions of society in this century, it is sufficient that it be said of them that they have largely produced, maintained, and expanded the greatest religious movement of the nineteenth century for young men. Due credit must be given to others from the places of business whose life has been poured into the current and given it force and directness; but after duly recognizing this and all other contributory forces, still it is beyond dispute that out of the walls of colleges have come both the policy and the genius that has formulated the policy of the Y. M. C. A., throughout the length and breadth of the earth.

Colleges are mothers of reforms. They are nests of impatience at the sight of the inadequacy of old methods; they have eyes that see the present in a different way from that in which mature manhood and womanhood see it. To this fact we must attribute much of the divergence in views as to methods in religious work. This fact too must account for many partings in the ways of thinking that prevail in the college and outside. The college thinks faster, feels faster and acts quicker than the world about it. Hence it is often ahead of the times—the old times, not the new.

The share that college men had in the Seventeenth Annual convention of the Y. M. C. A. at Winston last week indicates that the colleges are still with it and furnish much of the thought and experience that belong to the work. There was on the programme a College Symposium, treating the questions.

Pass it On.

The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse tells us that when he was a lad of fourteen years, he was returning to his home in Cornwall from school in Germany passing through London on his way. After spending a little money here he took train to Bristol, and then went on board a ship going to Cornwall—the railway not running so far in those days. The passage money, which he thought included his meals, he gave the whole of his cash, and his surprise was great when the steward, toward the close of the passage, brought him a bill for his food. He told him that he had spent all his money. "Then," said the steward, "you should not have ordered the things you did," and asked him for his name and address. Directly the lad had stated who he was, the steward looked at him intently, and exclaimed: "I never thought I would live to see you."

Then he told how that many years before, when a fatherless boy, and his mother was in great distress, Mr. Pearse's father had befriended them, and he had resolved if ever opportunity afforded, he would repay the kindness thus shown. So now he paid the lad's bill, gave him five shillings, and saw him safely landed.

When Mr. Pearse told his father the incident, his reply was: "My lad I passed the kindness to him long ago in doing what I did, and now he has passed it on to you. Mind as you grow up you pass it on to others."

And Mr. Pearse did not forget; seeing a lad one day at the railway station in trouble because he had not enough money by fourpence to pay for his railway fare, Mr. Pearse gave him a shilling, and when the lad brought him back the change, he told him to keep it, and that he was going to ride with him. And then in the carriage he told the boy the story of how the steward had treated him on the boat.

"And now," he said, "I want you, if ever you have the opportunity, to pass it on to others." Mr. Pearse got out at the junction, and as the train left the station the lad waved his handkerchief and said:—"I will pass it on."

How much brighter and happier the world would be if everybody would only "pass on" the little deeds of kindness shown to them. Are you doing this my young friend, or do you only pass on unkind actions instead of kind ones? —Ed.

Reaching the People.

The way to reach them is to reach them. The gospel has lost none of its power. It is efficacious in the case of the most hardened sinners. As our Lord cast the legion of evil spirits out of the man of Gadara in the days of his flesh, so he can now break the bands of sin with which men are bound and set them free. The reason more are not saved is because they do not come or are not brought to Jesus. Too many ministers and other workers to day are like the disciples who could not cast the dumb spirit out of the one who was brought to him. Christ rebuked the faithlessness of these followers of his, and at the same time taught his people an invaluable lesson when he said to the father of that child, "Bring him to me." That is the secret of reaching men. We must get near to them. We must take them by the hand, and lift them up, and point them to the Lamb of God.—Sel.

There will be serious trouble if you don't overcome those dyspeptic symptoms. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine you need.

From Bro. Connelly.

BRO. CLEMENTS:—The good people of "Barretts Neck" complain that you did not visit them while in Va. The past four days spent in their midst enables us to say you missed a treat.

We have there a people consecrated to God's work, a Sunday school like a bee hive, and a minister beloved by all. His work shows that every blow has been well aimed, church progress has been rapid, and still continues.

More than two third of the pastor's salary has been paid.

Other marks of improvement and growth are visible on every hand, Mt. Zion is far ahead of many churches that have the advantage of age and central location. If you can face the music of a mosquito and will visit "Barretts Neck" you will find these statements to be facts.

S. S. M.

Bro. Connelly, we know that Mt. Zion is a live church, and would be glad indeed to visit the dear people there again. (Ed.)

The Sunday School Convention.

DEAR BRO. FOSTER:—As some of the brethren in the ministry nearly always appoint protracted meetings for the same time the Sunday school Convention is in session, and therefore feel no obligation to attend the convention, I have been waiting to hear from them. If I were not going to attend, I would say so, and give my reason for my actions in the case. And if other brethren are not going to attend they ought to say so, giving their reasons why they are not going to attend.

I with others have been very much interested in the convention, and hope all the ministers in the N. C. and Va. Conference will speak out in the next two weeks; and if a majority say have the convention, let us have it.

J. W. WELLS.

Durham, N. C., April 20, 1893.

A Word in Behalf of the Sunday School Convention.

The article which appeared in the last issue of the Sun advocating the importance of another session of the Sunday school convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference is a step in the right direction. No one who has studied this subject can fail to see that to discontinue the convention would be a step toward retrogression and inactivity in the Sunday school work. It would be a dark spot in the history of our denomination, which perhaps could never be obliterated.

The Sunday school is the exponent of the church, and if its progress is retarded, the church must suffer in a like proportion.

New interest and enthusiasm needs to be awakened occasionally, in any line of work in order to make it successful. No where is this more true than in Sunday school work. Then friends and lovers of this grand cause, can we afford to sit idle and do nothing while our best interests are at stake? Who then will be the next to make an effort for another convention this summer.

Let the ministers of the various churches have this matter discussed in their schools, and see that a good delegation is elected, and all the assessment of the last convention paid up. Then we may hope to see one of the most promising sessions of the convention that has ever been held. Brethren what will you do?

MR. EDITOR—I wish to inform the brethren through your columns how the Lord has wonderfully blest us her. Our protracted meeting closed last night after one week services, with 34 precious souls converted to Christ; 32 connected themselves with our church. Bro. Roach conducted the services assisted by Bro. Parker, they both labored faithful and hard for the Master. The church was greatly revived and the congregations good. Tho we are few in numbers yet we feel the Lord is with us and has greatly blest us in this meeting. We want the prayers of our sister churches that we may build up and become a power that satan and his host can not withstand. My God be our guide and help, is the prayer of your humble brother

E. D. TURNER.

A Freight Train.

John B. Gough has gone to his reward, but I shall never forget my indebtedness to him for an illustration I heard him use the last time I listened to him. I don't even remember what he was illustrating; I do remember the use the Holy Spirit made of the illustration to my own soul. Mr. Gough said he sat once by the side of an engineer on a lightning express train, and, as the engine flew round a curve, he said to the engineer,

"Do you never fear while going at this speed?"

The engineer turned to him and said, "Mr. Gough, it doesn't do for an engineer to be afraid. Sometimes they do become timid, and when it is found out that they are, they give them a freight train."

In that moment I saw the danger of being afraid when God fires up the soul with a truth and means it to go with speed. Alas, for those who have not been true to the truth given them, and, as Emerson says, have "struck souls to a fear," and another soul has been given the truth they were afraid to utter, and that other has taken their crown, and they have been given a "freight train" in stead of a lightning express. If God made you for a freight train, take good care of your train ("here all the honor lies"); but if He fitted you up for an express, it is humbling to find yourself on a freight train.

Oh what victories are lost through fear; fear of what people will think of you, when the probability is that up to this time you have never done any thing to make them think of you in any way. We want souls these days who know no fear but the fear of God. Souls that are ready to take God's dispatches at quickest notice, and in quickest time. "Be ready for every good word and work." Anything short of this is not entire consecration. May many more souls be fired up by the Holy Ghost, to be like express trains for God to take truths. He wishes to send.—Work, Work, and World.

Golden Rule Meditation on Submission.

When I let the Lord have his way with me, I see how I have been impeding the work of his spirit. My most stammering words are fruitful when the Lord has his will with me. My failures are more prosperous than my ordinary successes, hesitancy becomes zeal and doubt become assurance, when the Lord has his will with me. The clouds break away into shining, life is all glorious with promise, and freighted with fruitage, and I have my will with the world, when the Lord has his will with me. Alas, for contrary events, that prove my contrary mind! It is not God's will that fails, but my willingness. Seal of my manhood, this power to oppose myself to the universe; seal, alas! often, of my degradation. Marvelous Creator, that can fashion a creature to oppose thyself! Presumptuous creature, that dare oppose thy Creator! Lord, by the many fulfillments of thy promises, promises half apprehended, fulfillments half acknowledged, teach me to yield to thee. By answers that shame my unbelieving prayers, by rewards that dwarf my efforts utterly, by promptings often spurned and pleadings combatted with folly, teach me to yield to thee. By the collapse of my unsupported strength, by the failure of my unaided attempts, by the folly of my own best wisdom, teach me to yield to thee. I will cease from my power that is weakness, and get me the power of the Almighty. I will cease from my own planning and my own upholding, and get me the wisdom and love of the Lord. I will lose my life in God altogether, that I may begin to live.—Golden Rule.

A Painful Silence.

DEAR BRO. CLEMENTS:—Permit me again to say a word to the brethren and sisters of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention. For some time I have requested through the SUN that the brethren speak out in regard to the convention. Shall we hold another session, or shall the convention disband for want of interest and cooperation among the ministers belonging to the same? This is the important question now before us. It must soon be decided or it will be impossible to make arrangements in time. Only two pastors have expressed an opinion. Can it be possible that the ministry has become so careless and lukewarm in the Sunday School cause as not to have an opinion? and if you have an opinion are you too indifferent or too lazy to express it? You may say these are harsh words. I cannot help it, the responsibility you placed upon me when you made me chairman of the convention is great, and your silence on this important subject is more painful to me than my plain words can be to you. I believe the trouble lies in the ministry. If you will use your influence for the convention and attend its sessions you will not be forced to the painful experience of seeing your Sunday Schools poorly attended.

We gather new ideas and fresh enthusiasm at our conventions and when we return to our fields of labors we diffuse it among our people. The efforts of the officers of the convention are ineffectual without your hearty cooperation. For the sake of our Sunday school cause, for the sake of the church and the salvation of the young, do not take a backward step! Our Sunday school churches are the live churches: the Sunday school is the training class for Christian workers. Don't neglect it I beseech you! If you are honestly opposed to it have the manliness to say so, if in favor shout it abroad!

The matter must be decided in a few weeks; speak out, and all at once, if you will; you must share part of the burden.

God help you to awaken from sleep and consider the importance of this work.

Yours fraternally,
JAS. L. FOSTER,
Chairman.

Faith.

I pray you make no great display, Bring out no somber grave array, Place nothing at my feet or head, When I am called to join the dead. I want no wreath of lilies pale, No lace-trimmed shroud or brodered veil; Pluck one red rose from out the rest, And place it here upon my breast. And when I kneel before the Throne, Helpless, hopeless, and alone, Unto that All protecting Power I'll give my faded, crimson flower; The Faith which surely teaches right, Tells me His touch will turn it white.

How to be Benefitted by the Study of the Bible.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul. Psalms 19:7.

It is through the facts and truths of the Bible that men are saved (Rom. 1:16). It is interesting to note what the Bible does for man. By it we are made wise unto salvation. 2 Tim. 3:15. By it we are saved. James 4:2. By it we are cleansed. John 15:2. By it we are sanctified. Job 17:17. By it we are washed. Eph. 5:25-26. By it we are defended against our spiritual enemies. Eph. 6:17. By it we grow. 1 Pet. 2:2. By it our path in life is lighted up. Psalms 119:105. By it we are enabled to rejoice. Jerem 15:16. By it we are warmed. Psalms 19:11. By it obstacles are removed out of our way. Jerem. 23:29.

Such being the saving power of God's word, why are not all men Christians? It is because they do not receive it in a right manner. We must feel it. A man may study the Bible, and understand its facts and truths; yet remain uninfluenced by it. Roman 1:18. Not only the understanding, reason and judgment must be enlightened; but the conscience must be quickened, and the heart moved. We must be governed by it. James 2:22-25.

To be saved by the word of God we must see and feel that our eternal well being is dependent upon belief in and obedience to it. Heb 11:11; Eccl 12:13-14.

The truths of the Bible are the most important of all truths for the reason that they involve our eternal destiny. Other facts and truths relate only to this life, and are of temporary interest.

The Bible teaches us that man is in a lost state. Rom. 3:24; Job 3:18-19; Rom 6:23; 2 Thess. 1:7-10. Men read these statements of God's word, and admit them to be true, but remain unmoved by them. Blinded by passion they put this awful fact out of their minds, and will not let it govern them. Their heart is unmoved by it. Luke 15:11-19.

The Bible teaches us that God is omnipresent. 1 Sam. 19:7; Psalms 199:1-12. Men admit that this is true, but they do not feel its force. It does not touch their hearts.

Before men we are like opaque bee hives. They can see the thoughts go in and out; but what they work inside of a man they cannot tell. Before God we are as glass bee hives, and all that our thoughts are doing within us, He perfectly sees and understands. Men know this as a matter of knowledge, but they do not feel it. A man took with him his little boy and went into a neighbor's field to steal corn. Before commencing to fill his sack he looked in every direction to see if there was any person in sight. Seeing no one he was about to fill up his bag, but his child said, "Father, there is one way you haven't looked yet." The father supposing that some one was coming; asked his son which way he meant. He answered "you forgot to look up," conscience stricken he took his son by the hand, and hurried home without the corn. He knew this truth before, but he did not feel it.

The Bible teaches us that God has appointed a day of judgment in which all men will be judged and rewarded according to their deeds Acts 17:30-31; 2 Cor. 9:10. Men know this to be true, but are uninfluenced by it. Their hearts are not touched. Eccl. 8:11. Men harden their hearts against this truth, and will not let it affect them. Rom. 2:5-6. Men will not allow themselves to think seriously and earnestly on this question, but put it out of their thoughts. A Christian king of Hungary being very sad, his brother enquired the cause of it. He said, "O brother, I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, or how to appear before God in judgment." His brother made a jest of it, and said: "These are melancholy thoughts." The king made no reply. It was the custom of the country that when the king decided to put a man to death for any cause the executioner was sent to sound a trumpet before his dwelling. In the dead of the night the king sent the executioner to sound the trumpet before his brother's door; who hearing it and seeing the messenger of death, sprung into the presence of the king, beseeching to know in what he had offended. "Alas brother!" said the king, "you have never offended me. And is the sight of my executioner so dreadful; and shall not I, who have greatly offended, fear to be brought before the judgment seat of Christ?" Here were knowledge and feeling both.

The law of God is perfect. It is a perfect revelation of Divine truth; is complete rule of conduct. When allowed to have its natural effect upon the mind and heart of a man it will convert him to God; turn him from his sins.

"The testimony of the Lord is sure." The word here used means that what God has testified to is true. He has set his seal on the Bible as his word, and this will endure. It cannot be destroyed. It enlightens the minds of men, and makes them wise unto salvation.

"The statutes of the Lord are right rejoicing the heart." Statutes means the mandates of the Lord. They make glad the heart, for they lead to a pure and happy life. It always makes the heart glad to know that we are being led in the path of obedience.

"The commandment of the Lord is pure enlightening the eyes." The law of God instructs, and directs.

Those Amusements Again.

Previous to my first note to the SUN on this subject I had occasionally heard the warning: "Oh! my dear friends, don't try to raise your church funds by means of entertainments; they are the devil's half-way house to the world, and hence to the devil himself"—or words to this effect. As I had lived in communities nearly all my life where these entertainments were given without any visible injury to the individual or to the church, I just gave the warning a momentary glance of surprise, and passed on to something else. But when the thirst came so near home to me as Elon College, I stopped and began to ask myself the question: Is it true that we belong to that class of people who are lodging in "the devil's half-way house to the world, preparatory to an early start to the devil himself in the morning? And I thought, if this be true we, at Elon College, who have felt wonderfully blessed of God in our religious life, must be laboring under some terrible delusion. It was with these thoughts, mingled with a curiosity to know what part the devil had been playing in these entertainments, that my inquiry was written.

I enjoyed Bro. Charnock's article in the issue of the SUN of April 13th; but I hope he will pardon me if I say that many of his assertions were so general and sweeping that I must either swallow them whole or refuse to take them until I can see what they are made out of. He says that these amusements have become "an evil so prominent that the most shortsighted of men cannot fail to perceive it." Then, he goes on to say that we have only to refer to the announcements in the newspapers and form the pulpits to see that there is "scarcely any difference between church, chapel, and mission hall in this respect. And if you will be an honest judge you are compelled to conclude that 'amusements' are ousting "consecrated cheerful giving" to God's cause, and in some cases, the preaching of the gospel." Now this conclusion that he reaches is the very point at issue, and to my mind at least, doesn't follow from his premises. When he says that these announcements show that "there is scarcely any difference between church, chapel, and mission hall in this respect." I don't know which he means—whether he intends to say that amusement are wrong in all these; or that it is alright to have them in the mission hall, but not in the church. If the latter is what he means, then, I must confess that I can't see how that 'amusement money' that is good enough to build churches in destitute places at home and in heathen lands is not good enough for us; and if the system is wrong at all, it is as wrong in the mission hall as any-where. If he means that it is wrong in all of these places, and for all religious purposes, which I will assume to be his position let's see about that!

He says that when a pastor asks his congregation to raise the money for the various collections, they won't go down into their pockets and pay the money; but they must get up a supper or a concert and raise it in this way. This, I suppose, he calls 'the onsting of consecrated cheerful giving.' This, he says, creates a selfish spirit in man, a spirit that causes him to say, "I will give where I can see a chance of getting the value for my money." Now, I want to ask how many men ever went to a church entertainment "to get value received," for what they pay out. In the first place, those who get up these entertainments are the leading members of the churches. No one questions their sincerity of purpose—they certainly don't get "value received" for their expenditure of time, labor and money. They do it with just as honest, just as Christian a spirit as the man who preaches to them from Sunday to Sunday. I take it that the same is true of those who attend to listen, or to 'eat.' They know for what purpose their money is paid out—they expect it to go into the church treasury, to aid in the building up of Christ's cause here on earth. Simply because they get a little pleasure from an entertainment in giving their money, should that make it any less acceptable to God? If cheerfulness in our giving is to be the test of acceptance with God, (and I heartily accept that idea,) then, I venture to say that, two to one, the 'entertainment money' will receive the warmer reception. I do not say that this ought to be the case—for I think that one ought to be given in such a spirit as to be as acceptable as the other; but also! I imagine that if the minister could hear the 'sigh' that accompanies some of the dimes that drop into the hat to pay his salary, he would begin to think that the time was near at hand for him to undergo some of the 'deprivations' of Christ and his disciples, and how many would be willing to do it? It is right that the pastor should be paid, and again that all the collections should be made. If this can be done without an entertainment, why, by all means relieve your hard working wives and daughters of the trouble of arranging for the entertainment, unless they prefer to have it in order to enjoy the social feature of it, for this is as much an element of true religion as anything else. It brings all the members of the church together, and cultivates among them that community of thought, feeling and interest upon which alone can be built that great structure of the brotherhood of man, without which true religion does not exist. But Bro. Charnock says that through these entertainments many have become indifferent, cold, and at last have gone into the world. Many have testified that the beginning of their fall was the part that they had taken in the pleasures of the concert room which had for its object raising funds for God's cause." I have never seen either of these results. On the contrary, I think, that an examination into the real facts of the case, will show directly the opposite of this statement. Go to our churches that have these entertainments, and see who are the live, earnest, devoted workers and almost invariably you will find it to be those who take the lead in all church entertainments. I could mention our leading churches and the leading members in those churches as living examples of these, were it necessary. Take the Christian churches all over the south and see which are the strongest. Every one who knows anything about these will admit that they do have entertainments, they do have lectures, they do run excursions in the interest of the church, and yet in these we find as good religious people as are found in any church. Then, if we are not ready to admit that the church has been benefitted by this means, we certainly can't see any sign of injury.

Again, we are asked to "bring forth the converts made and won by amusement." This is almost as impossible as to bring those made and won by a long face. But if you ask me for those with whom amusement has been the first step to reform, I would ask you only to think of the thousands of boys and girls, young men and young women, in all our large cities who are first led out from their old associations by being asked to spend an evening at some church social gathering, or entertainment of some kind. Yes, especially ask the earnest Y. M. C. A. workers how they begin to draw young men from their vices, and to help them fix their trust in God, the great giver of all pleasures. A pleasant game and a pleasant chat with a Christian young man in the city Y. M. C. A.'s has been the turning point in many a young man's life. Nearly all church societies, church auxiliaries of every kind, have their 'social attachments,' and are they not doing good, are no souls brought to Christ through them? Yes, make the call for these, and what a response there will be!

We are told that there is "no command in the Bible to provide amusement for the people." There is certainly none against innocent amusement, such as we conceive those that we are discussing to be. On the other hand, it seems to me that the whole tenor of the Bible sanctions them. We are to do whatever we can to advance the cause of Christ, and it seems very clear to me that such amusements as we have been speaking about do aid materially in building up our churches in all their varied interests. It is true that Christ did demand unworldliness; but he didn't demand that we give up the innocent pleasures of life, whether they be in the church or out of it. It is again true that "since the days of the Puritans the church has been touring down its testimony against evil." For this advance toward civilization we ought to feel very grateful. The sinner is no longer to be looked upon as a common criminal and dealt with according to Puritanical ideas. Puritan intolerance no longer banishes men from the community simply because they didn't think exactly as 'Puritans' do. Puritan cruelties no longer kindle flames around the poor victim at the stake. And Puritan absurdity no longer dispenses the merry crowd around the may-pole or the Christmas watch-fire. Yes, and we have reason to feel thankful that the old Puritanical 'idea has died out' that a long face, never wreathed by a loving smile, is an unmistakable sign of the true Christian. True Christianity recognizes the common brotherhood of man as its surest foundation stone.

The common brotherhood of man recognizes the pleasant social intercourse of men and women as its greatest bond. And if the church can't encourage the pleasures of this social intercourse it is at war with Christianity. If by allowing these amusements the church can increase the pleasures of its members and at the same time bring in money to help increase the pleasure and happiness of others less fortunate, is it not aiding materially in the advancement of Christ's kingdom and in establishing a feeling of brotherly love, Christianity's greatest hopes for the future? Let us try to inculcate that liberal spirit of Christianity that looks upon its great source as a loving sympathizer, and not as a cruel task-master; and the individual will delight to own his Master, the church will be strengthened, and the world will be made better.

Answer to Dr. Barrett.

Bro. Barrett seems to be in a strait, and he finds it much easier to ask questions than to answer argument. His cause is much weaker than he thought it was when he sprang the question. The apostle Paul did not become responsible for his opinions, and he finds it very difficult to obtain even doubtful testimony enough to meet his pressing demands, and it has required a persistent effort to keep his head above the waves of argument in the opposite direction, and we are not surprised that he wishes to close the discussion. We greatly admired his zeal and tact in endeavoring to support his position, and it is fully in keeping with the old maxim "when you make a bad bargain stick the tighter to it." He sees his mistake now. But we all make mistakes. "To err is human, but to forgive is divine." But we hold the brother in high esteem and will deal with him tenderly. And although we intend to take all his props out, we do not intend to let him fall hard.

In my rejoinder, which I do not mean to be as sharp as Sister Draper, I propose to be plain enough to convince all but those who have preconceived opinions barred against evidence. Such will not yield to argument. "Convince a man against his will and he is of the opinion still."

Let us then come squarely up to the question before us.

1. Has women the right to preach? Bro. Barrett has confessed that women did preach in the apostolic age. It is a foregone conclusion then, a self evident fact, that they had the right to preach. Can we be so presuming as to suppose for a moment that those holy women with so much love for souls and zeal for the Master, could so mistake their calling. Those consecrated souls whom the Apostle Paul commends to such special case of the church for their work's sake, and whose names he said were written in heaven, would have been so officious, so excessively forward in the gospel work, as to preach without the consent and encouragement of the church? Let us not be so harsh in our judgment of the good sister. Paul saw and appreciated their work, he was satisfied of their divine call, and owned their mission and said

"help those women which labored with me in the gospel." He not only owned their valuable ministrations, but he also owned their equality in the work. "With me in the gospel." If the great apostle acknowledged and honored their call and place in the ministry, we should do it.

2. The ordination of women. Bro. B. argues that women had no official right to preach. Were not ordained. How did Bro. B. find this out? Does the Bible say so anywhere? I have not found it. And he simply concludes they were not because the Bible did not say they were, what shall we say of Peter, James, John and the other disciples? The Bible does not tell us they were ordained. The New Testament says but little of ordination. There are but two places, I think where it is mentioned. 1 Cor. 7:17 and Tit. 1:5. Bro. B. disclaiming the right of women to preach then on the plea of no ordination falls to the ground.

3. Divine Authority. Bro. B. calls ordination, in its ecclesiastical sense divine authority. The divine authority of those holy women came from a higher and mightier source than man. And if divine authority is ordination, which we agree is such, Aquilla and Priscilla who took Apollos to their homes and expounded the way of God more perfectly, were "endued with power from on high." Apollos was "mighty in the Scriptures." Had made them his life study. How could these timid women, without any theological training, teach one so far in advance of them in Biblical knowledge, so learned and profound, but as the Holy Ghost teacheth? The secret of their success then was, Holy Ghost power. Divine authority. And Bro. B. argues that ordination is divine authority in which we agree. Ordination means to appoint and prepare. And those holy women were appointed of God and prepared for the work of soul saving, and therefore ordained according to Dr. Barrett's own course of reasoning.

4. Prophesying does mean preaching. We in our previous articles mentioned some of the women in the apostolic age that did prophesy, which we claimed meant preaching. But Bro. B. says prophesying does not mean preaching. That prophesying is one thing and preaching is another. Now let us see. We will give you better authority than our simple assertion, without proof. Webster, who is the standard for definitions, in his unabridged dictionary says it means: "In Scripture, to preach; to instruct in religion. Is not this plain enough? Then the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge whose authority is not questioned and which is considered orthodox, says prophesying is explaining Scripture, speaking to the church." Can we have any better proof, or make it more explicit. Webster says "in Scripture," that is in the Scriptural sense, it is preaching and universal agreement of the wisest theologians is "it is explaining Scripture, speaking to the church. This then settles that question.

5. 1 Cor. 11:4,5 Does apply alike to men and women. Or it recognizes both as preachers. Turn to it reader and see for yourself. But we again say we will not have you to rely simply on our opinion. The man was to prophesy with head uncovered and the woman to prophesy with head covered. Both were preachers. Look in the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge 980 and you will see the above Scripture explained and the 4th and 5th verses re explained alike. It says it is "explaining Scripture, speaking to the church in public" and the man was to speak with head uncovered and the woman with head covered.

6. The Samaritan woman. Bro. B. wishes to know if I seriously believe the Samaritan woman was a preacher in the true Scriptural sense of the word. To answer him I would say I do not believe she was a preacher in the sense of those women who labored with Paul. Yet she preached, in that she invited sinners to Jesus, "Come see the man." To preach means to proclaim Christ as the Savior of sinners. She found Christ, to the joy of her soul and she invited others to come to him, and her simple sermon, like Jonah's had its effect: "Then they went out of the city, and came unto him." This is a most worthy example for all young converts. On finding Christ, go immediately and invite others to him.

7. The synonym of preach. Bro. Barrett wishes us to give the book, chapter and verse where it is said women did preach. We can give you the synonym Bro. B., which is just as good, Acts 21:9: "And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy." If I were uncertain about the truth of a thing I would either say I think, I reckon, I suppose, or I presume, and you would understand either of these words to mean the same thing. So prophesy is the synonym of preach, and means as I have previously shown, the same thing. This I suppose is satisfactory to the reader, if not to Bro. Barrett. Now I think I have answered all of Bro. Barrett's questions, and have taken away all his props, and will therefore close the discussion.

R. H. HOLNAND.

That Statement.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, Dear Sir—I have chosen this mode of calling your attention to a certain statement made by you on April 2nd, 1893 in Berea Christian church, Norfolk Co., Va. You said during your remarks, that, "if a man would tell you what he thought—most about, you could tell that man's principle, or come very near telling "it" I wish to say that I believe, firmly that statement to be true and it has had a deeper impression upon my mind than any thing I ever heard uttered by any minister in my life. I am a worldly man, do not profess to be a Christian, but will try to present to you the best I can some of my principal thoughts, "there are two channels through which my thoughts are constantly drifting, but one of these I am afraid has them most in its embrace. First, I find myself thinking most of the body desiring to supply its wants, loving the good of this world, but in a manly genteel way, though this way leads to sin, which throws me on the dark side, I detest low conduct. Here come along nobler thoughts, which because of my situated are a constant worry to my mind. I never prayed a public prayer in my life which I think help the bad thoughts on. I sometimes go off to myself and pray a little prayer that God would make these good or better thoughts pleasant and rule out the bad ones, but it all seems to be in vain, I sometimes think and think and think the good thoughts, saying to myself, right will rule by and by, but I find the case stands firm, mixed with the devil yet.

I sometimes think that there is a very few good religious people in the world for as we look ahead through the dark mist of sin and see the poison projecting out from the hearts of almost every man and seeing the wicked desires of man it looks to me like man was put here by the great power of God to sin. I think it would be hard for me to live a Christian. It looks to me like God has placed a rough way before man, and why did he do it! The mist must be before my eyes and I am afraid the devil is in my heart. Right here comes a worthy, noble thought, I believe God is just and if we will let go the cares of this world and fall on our knees and worship him, praise him—be humble, meek and lowly, spread abroad our praises for him and constantly keep it up, that pleasure will come by and by. I believe if I could get rid of the evil thoughts and embrace good ones and keep them constantly before my mind that I would fall heir to pleasures from above and dwell with angels when I die. I sincerely believe that God is just as he represents himself, that he is good, holy, noble and true, reward you if you keep his commandments and punish you if you do not. I have written this letter hoping that you (Dr. Barrett) will answer it through the Sun or, prepare a sermon on how to cultivate pure thoughts, or how to obtain and retain pure thoughts. If you will preach along this line and announce your subject one appointment ahead, at Berea church I will, nothing preventing, be there to hear you, for I feel that I need help along this way.

Very respectfully,

L. H.

"Be Slow to Speak."—James 1:19.

No man who has an intelligent conception of the unruliness of the tongue can fail to see the wisdom of this command. "For every kind of beasts, and birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." The psalmist, conscious of this cried out in prayer to God. "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips."

An old Greek writer has said that God gave man two eyes and two ears, but only one mouth, that he might see and hear twice before speaking once. Man should be slow to speak, because he is often speaking in the presence of fools, and Solomon says, "A fool will always be meddling," and it is the "sport of a fool to do mischief." He is often speaking in the presence of the ignorant, who may innocently misrepresent. He is often speaking in the presence of the wicked, whose delight is to stir up strife.

"Where there is no tale-bearer, strife ceaseth." Of all the agencies the devil has ever called into his service, none have been more faithful and effectual than the tale bearer and slanderer. He is one of the worst plagues that ever cursed a community,—a scourge in the hand of satan. His ears catch every passing sound, his eyes are open to things not lawful for him to see, his feet are swift to do mischief, his hands ready for the most inhuman crimes, while his tongue, more poisonous than that of the hissing adder, is ever dealing forth the venom of death. His favorite retreat is in the sanctity of home, and his most coveted object of prey is spotless virtue. But the common tale-bearer is not the only author of mischief. A single word untimely spoken even from the lips of the good, may set on foot mischief which no human effort can overtaken, and which a lifetime may not suffice to repair. It may blight the brightest prospects of youthful ambition. It may blast forever the reputation of one as pure and innocent as the sleeping babe at its mother's breast. It may destroy the happiness of the sweetest home and sever the most sacred ties of human life. "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak."

SELECTIONS

What is Preaching For?

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

A bright young minister in Iowa writes to me in regard to work, and says:

"Here in the West it is very difficult to keep on spiritual lines. Many people desire on Sunday a simple, pure oration; they want a man in the pulpit who can "draw," and they think that in order to draw, one must be flowery, dramatic, emotional, sensational—anything and everything but the one great thing. When this sort of pressure is brought to bear on me, I read Finney's Autobiography, Albert Barnes's 'Way of Salvation,' B. Fay Mills, and kindred."

A wise young man he is; for he understands the one great thing for which he entered the ministry; in fact, the one chief purpose for which the Lord Jesus Christ established a Gospel ministry.

The demand for preachers who can "draw" is not confined to Iowa, or to the West; it is quite universal. Within certain proper limitations it is a reasonable demand; for a minister can do very little good to people who do not like him and none at all to those who will not come to hear him. Every minister is bound to make his Sabbath services attractive; there is a legitimate and also an illegitimate way of doing this. To many a man the temptation is strong to entice people to God's house by flowery rhetoric, or dramatic delivery, or by divers sensational devices that I have no time or space to enumerate. When he once begins this style of "drawing" he must rack his brains and tax his ingenuity to keep it up, or else his auditors will vanish away. The vital question ought to present itself to his mind. For what purpose have I drawn all these immortal beings into God's house on God's holy day? Have they come here to be entertained, or to have their ears tickled, or their sensibilities played upon, or even to have a certain degree of intellectual profit? If they are attracted to the sanctuary for no other reasons than these, it is indeed better for them than to loiter at home, or to squander sacred time in some sort of Sabbath-breaking amusement. But to draw the possessors of immortal souls into a church edifice, and not to use every possible means to draw their souls to Jesus Christ, is but a pitiful travesty of the divine art of preaching the Gospel. The chief end of every true minister's labors is to awaken careless souls, to warn the endangered, to instruct the ignorant, to comfort the sorrowing, to help the weak, and to edify believers; in short, to make bad people good, and good people better. The man who does not aim at this was never called of God into the ministry. He may attract auditors for a time to his pulpit, but he does not attract them to a Christian life; he may win a salary, but he does not win souls. No man has a moral right to enter a pulpit unless he comes there as the ambassador of the Lord Jesus Christ, and comes also—as Moses descended from the Mount—from communion with God, and with a direct message from God. And when he enters his pulpit in that spirit and that purpose, God will come with him. His preaching will have a power from on high, even tho his scholarship be very moderate, and his rhetoric be very unadorned, and his delivery undramatic. Such preaching as this, if it flows out of a warm heart, and is delivered with an honest glow, will draw; and it will continue to draw, long after the fireworks of pulpit pyrotechnists have all exploded, and all the tar barrels of the sensationalists have ended in smoke.

My young Western brother is wise in recruiting and confirming his high and holy purpose by turning to such effective ministers of Christ as those whom he names. If there be one established fact in the history of the church it is the fact that those preachers of the Gospel who have aimed the most directly to save souls and to bring men to Jesus Christ have been the preachers who have achieved the most solid results. The ministry of the Apostles had this single aim, and Paul struck its keynote when he proclaimed, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and his crucified." The great Reformation under the lead of Luther and Calvin was far more than a protestation against Romish errors; it was a direct bringing of souls to Jesus Christ; and the reliance of these heroic reformers was on the supernatural power of the Holy Spirit. When a spiritual famine prevailed in Great Britain during the last century Whitefield and the Wesleys rose at once to the demand of the times. They clove at once to the root of the matter; they addressed their fellow-countrymen as sinners exposed to the "wrath to come," and their business was to lead sinners to the only One who could save them for this world or another. Converted hearts made converted lives. Out of these labors sprang the world-wide labors and philanthropies of Methodism. The real power of that great church to-day lies in its soul-saving power. And if the Methodist pulpit, or the Presbyterian, or Baptist, or Congregational, or any other pulpit should ignore the tremendous facts of man's utter depravity and need of regeneration by atoning blood and the Holy Spirit; if it busies itself mainly in answering the scoffs of the skeptics, or in philosophizing, or in pyrotechnics, or even in unfolding general principles of morality, it would soon become a shorn Samson. Let every young minister understand that the men who have never failed to "draw" have been the Finneys, the Guthries, the Lyman Beechers, the McCheynes and the Maclarens, who lifted up Jesus Christ as the only attraction of their pulpits. Spurgeon is admitted on all hands as the most effective preacher of modern times; and he once addressed to me the characteristic question, "How far do your chief American preachers aim at the conversion of souls?" The question showed his estimate of the true mission of the Christian ministry. I feel quite sure that if Phillips Brooks could revisit this scene of his noble, unselfish labors he would care infinitely less about the universal plaudits of his career, or the promised statues in Boston's public squares than he would for the sweet satisfaction that he brought many a soul nearer to God. He once said, "Work is everything or work is nothing, according to the Lord we work for"; and again he said, "Our religion is not a system of ideas about Christ; it is Christ." That one word describes his "drawing" power. This age of ours boasts loudly of its culture, but no culture is a substitute for converting grace; it prates glibly about its "advanced thought," but for its redemption God means that this world shall never advance one single inch beyond the cross of Calvary.

Let my young brother encourage himself that he is working on the "spiritual lines." Pulpits are not built for the delivery of "oration." Their drawing power—in God's sight—depends on their power to draw weak, sinful man up nearer to him. Nor let my friend underestimate his work because his pulpit is in a small Western town. For aggregate spiritual influence on the whole land the country ministry outweighs the city ministry. In New England's best days rural ministers molded its character and rural pulpits shaped the theology of America. In our times the names of a few conspicuous city pastors figure in the public journals; and some rural pastors long to fly, like moths, into the candle—a very vain and foolish ambition. Country boys have always become the rulers of this nation, and they are trained by the country ministers and homes and Sunday schools. Let every minister of Jesus Christ in the villages and the farm regions who has a strong foothold among his people, and whose only purpose is to win immortal souls to the only life worth living, let him "learn therewith to be content." If he is preaching Jesus and saving souls he is doing a work that an archangel might covet. —Independent.

What Kind Of Preaching?

There may be plenty of preaching in the world, but something besides mere preaching is needed in order to accomplish the greatest good. A certain kind of preaching may be carried on all over the world, without cessation, and yet it may not amount to any definite, vital, lasting good. And the preaching may be very earnest, too; but mere earnestness in preaching does not atone for the lack of the right substance of the preaching. Suppose that when William Carey went to the heathen world he had preached truths concerning the best kind and form of good, national government; would his preaching have resulted in changing the life of a single heathen? No. He might have preached politics, the very purest and best kind, year after year, till he became an old man, and all of his hearers would have remained heathen. The same may be said of Judson and all of the grand missionary pioneers and stalwart heroes. Had they preached the purest philosophy, the most accurate science, the best of human biography, the grandest of national history and the loftiest literature, with all the fervor which they could summon and throughout their entire lives, yet not a single heathen soul would have been converted. What kind of preaching then, was it, which they gave to their hearers? It was the very heart of the Gospel. It was the cross of Christ and all vitally related truth. They set forth Christ crucified for sinners, even such sinners as they were. They plainly told their hearers that they were sinners, away from God, and needed Christ to bring them back to God. To send any preacher to heathen lands without the express purpose of having him preach man's ruin by sin and his redemption by Christ—man's utter helplessness without Christ and His salvation—is to send him on a mission of failure. And the kind of preaching which is so necessary to produce the great changes which have been and are occurring in heathen lands, is just as necessary in our own land to-day. The one great reason why the ministry of some preachers is Christless. They preach the rim rather than the center of the Gospel.—The Baptist.

An Effective Prayer Meeting.

The prayer meeting is the place for the display of the great power of God in the church. It is a significant fact that Christ never allowed his disciples to preach a single sermon until they had a ten day's prayer meeting. It seems to me ministers have lost sight of this fact.

God does not promise to answer preaching. He promises to answer prayer. In the prayer meeting the poorest child of God can be worth as much as the pastor. If people come to the prayer meeting it is not necessary to tell them to be in their places on the Sabbath.

Then at the prayer meeting let us pray for what we want and say amen. That will cut short the prayers, and we can have a hundred prayers in a prayer meeting where now we often have but three. God will not do anything for the hypocrite—for a man who makes a long prayer, asking God for a dozen things, just because he wants to pray a respectable prayer, never ask God for what you don't want. Then let every child of God bring a contribution to the prayer meeting. There is not a man, woman or child born into the kingdom that cannot pray.

Then pray in the spirit. There is a good deal of praying that begins at the wrong place, we must begin in the spirit, continue in the spirit and end in the spirit. We must pray new prayers and get the old ones out of the way. The old ones have served their purpose. Let your old prayers, like your old sins, sleep in their graves.

Nothing will make the prayer meeting more effective than to have a definite purpose. The prayer meeting is the most solemn meeting we can have. We come there to meet the Lord Jesus. When God answers our prayers, let us tell the brethren at the next meeting how they have been answered and let us give God thanks.

Let us give up eloquent prayers. I saw in the paper the other day that Mr. Somebody made the most eloquent prayer ever delivered before a Boston audience. The Lord don't care for them, nor do the people care half as much for them as we are apt to fancy. I have seen a congregation melted under a simple, tender prayer, while many went to sleep under an eloquent prayer.—Baptist.

Better and Better.

"Let well enough alone" is not so good a motto as "Better and better." He who has done one thing well, ought to improve on it at once. Any present attainment should be an incentive to renewed endeavor and progress. Even commendation and praise are harmful to a man, unless they spur him to do more, and to do it better, than he has yet done. Mr. George W. Childs said, recently, that he owed much to the thought expressed to him by an old and valued friend who was in the habit of saying, when Mr. Childs consulted him with reference to any achievement or plan of his, "That—and better—will do." This idea has been acted on by Mr. Childs in all his business life; and, with all of his great business success, he is desirous of new and improved methods and attainments to-day as he was when he began business. His Public Ledger is not contented with even its present high position, but it starts out anew just now, in improved form and plan; and only this and better will meet its proprietor's ideal. It is a pity that this idea is not more prevalent in every sphere of life.—S. S. Times.

A Great Work For Women.

Christian women should recognize the duty to help all people, but especially those nearest home. It is very wise and Christlike to labor for the salvation of the women of China, Italy, Africa, India, and Mexico; but it would be strangely criminal to make no special effort to save foreigners from these and other lands who have come to live among us. It would then be sadly true, "A keeper of vineyards hast thou made me, but mine own have I not kept!"

Save America, and you save the world. But to do this, nothing is so much needed as the religion of Jesus applied to the individual heart. This the Woman's Home Missionary Society is trying to accomplish through the home. Theodore Cnyler said it would matter comparatively little which party is in power, if there was a family altar in every home.

The Catholic church is sparing neither effort nor money to take this country for the pope. It would then do for for it what it has done for Italy, South America, Mexico, and wherever it has ruled. It would destroy civil and religious liberty, free speech, free institutions, and public schools. Only recently a large shipment of priests and nuns was made to this country for missionary service. Rome is keen at discerning the strategic points, hence she is massing her forces in America. A loyal Catholic owes first allegiance to a foreign power, and can hardly be a loyal American citizen. The Catholic sisterhoods contribute largely to the success of the church; and shall not Protestant women be equally zealous for the spread of their purer faith, not by abandoning home and friends, but by reaching out a helping hand from wherever they are?

America may be the pillar of fire leading the world on to higher achievements, or it may prove to be the tomb in which is buried the hopes of the world. "That nation and people that will not serve me shall perish," saith the Lord, and all history emphasizes this truth. There is a mistaken opinion that the Lord is under some kind of obligation to bless the United States regardless of its conduct. But this nation will share the common fate of all the republics of history, and end in anarchy and despotism, unless the Lord is honored and obeyed.—Mrs. M. C. Hickman, in the New York Christian Advocate.

Among Our Exchanges.

Interior:

The old question, "What can a woman do?" should now give way to the question, "What can not a woman do?" In this country, more than 2,500 women are practicing medicine. Over 276 are preaching the gospel from pulpits. Over 6,000 are post-mistresses. Over 3,000,000 women in the United States work for money. In New York City 27,000 women support their husbands. The United States Patent Office has granted over 2,500 patents to women since 1800. Sixty-one foreign missionary societies are conducted by women. New York City has three women architects, and Buffalo the same number. The first newspaper in the Congo Free State is published by two negro women.

Presbyterian Observer:

On Sunday, March 27, the Pope celebrated Mass in the Vatican; so say the Roman Catholic journals, "and admitted to assist thereat the Committee of Roman Dames of the Patriciate, the Nobility and Bourgeoisie, in all some hundred women, many of whom had the consolation to receive Holy Communion from the hands of the Vicar of Christ." After Mass "all present were graciously permitted to kiss the Pope's foot." It was a high solemnity.

Boston Star:

One man who attempts to do something and fails is better than a whole regiment of wisecracks who simply sit still and look on and criticise.

True, as the writer intended it to be taken, but the man who tried to swim through the current above Niagara failed while the "wisecracks" "criticised," and was swept down to an awful death. Much depended on who attempts and what he attempts.

Nashville Christian Advocate:

The rage for honorary degrees in letters, theology, philosophy, and law, does not abate. Nothing is more disgusting than the shameless persistency with which men who cannot write ten consecutive sentences of good English seek to secure for themselves the supposed honor of these titular distinctions.

of learning should bestow their degrees only on those who pass a stipulated examination.

Baltimore Baptist:

Rev. Tom Dixon's robin episode has ended, costing him an average of $25 for each bird, and worst of all, he didn't even get the birds. But this piece of "spite work" on the part of the officers has brought him the sympathy and support of the better element.

Boston Star:

The free church of Scotland dares not arraign Professor Henry Drummond for heresy because popular sentiment was so strongly with Prof. Robertson Smith, that the church suffered greatly in consequence of his arraignment.

The Watchman:

It is by no means clear that revivals are not as frequent and pervasive as they ever were. There is less neglect of religion in very many communities than there used to be.

Concert of Prayer for Missions for May.

BY EMILY K. BISHOP.

Thirty years ago a native of Japan foreseeing what a great benefit and blessing western civilization would be to his country, dared publicly to denounce the policy of Japan in excluding all Christians from her shores, and to advocate the abandonment of that policy.

For advocacy of such principles he was waylaid and slain by a band of his countrymen on a great festival day, when the people came together from all parts of the empire to do honor to the gods of the kingdom.

About five years ago, a native pastor, a relative of that murdered man, was celebrating the Lord's Supper in one of the Christian churches in Japan. An old man rose in the congregation and said, "I want to confess my crime I am one of those who murdered that man twenty five years ago." The young pastor said, "By all the ancient customs of Japan, I am bound to avenge the blood shed by plunging my dagger into the throat of the murderer of my relative. But Christ's blood reconciles all blood-fueds, and in Christ's name I wish to extend to this brother the right hand of fellowship."

Behold what God hath wrought. In 1872 the name of Christ odious in Japan; in 1892 thirty-five thousand eight hundred and forty one who are loyal to Christ. "Go I who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in their hearts." And yet there are still in the Island empire about 40,000,000 in the darkness of heathenism. Idolatry is opposed to reason, opposed to religion, (Psalm 95:8) "They that make them (idols) are like unto them." Idols are helpless, dumb, stupid, powerless. The effect of idolatry is to bring idolaters to similar conditions. "This is illustrated by the history of Polytheism. Men began by worshiping grandest objects—sun, moon, fire; then representations of men, silver and gold; then wood and stone."

The missionaries are as a handful of men and women in the midst of forty millions of heathens, with no God, no Sabbath, prejudiced against Christians and the Gospel of Christ. What can they do but cling close to God and pray mightily unto him. Often from that home, No. 9 Tsukiji, Tokio, Japan—that home to which our thoughts so often turn because our dear ones are there, then comes these words, "Pray for us."

In his last letter Bro. Woodworth says, "Our work has never seemed more hopeful. But I shall never be satisfied until I see the outpouring of pentecostal power on our mission work. We are planning to hold protracted meetings April and May. We are trying to do educational work, but I do long to see an ingathering of souls. "Pray for our work."

Christians, I pray you do not let these heart-appeals pass unheeded by. Read and meditate upon Luke 11:5—13. James 5:16—18. Luke 18:1—7. Matt. 15:22—28.

Then in missionary meetings, prayer meetings and church services, in family and private devotions, pray earnestly, perseveringly and in faith for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on our Japan Mission.

ILLUSTRATION.

In the school at Doshisha, Japan a little band of ten missionaries and teachers were daily praying for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the school. They wrote forty letters to colleges and theological seminaries in the United States asking for special prayer for this object. For about two months all went on as usual, with no visible sign. On Sabbath afternoon March 16, 1893, and invisible influence struck the school. Very few of the students closed their eyes in sleep that night, in nearly every room there were men crying for mercy. The experience lasted nearly a week, there was no preaching; the whole movement seemed to human eye spontaneous. All but four or five of the one hundred and fifty were converted. There have been no doubts since then of the power and working of the Holy Spirit there.

About April fifteenth answer to the letters began to come in saying, March 12, 13, and so on, companies were praying—some with strong crying and tears for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon Doshisha.

Missionary Notes.

It is repeated as coming from a Bombay native paper that the Hindoo religion nowhere indicates that God has any desire that man should be saved from sin and become pure and holy. What further evidence is needed of the earthly origin of Hindooism?

The Bible has been translated into 187 of the leading languages, which are spoken by about 600,000,000 people. Adding to these figures those of the minor tongues, it is a fair estimate that the Bible is now accessible to fully 1,000,000,000 souls; i. e., to fully two-thirds of all mankind.

The Church in the United States grows in numbers and wealth. Its property has increased 921 per cent within forty years. In 1850 it amounted to $87,000,000. In 1890 it had reached $631,000,000. To this is to be added the immense properties of Christian institutions, such as hospitals, colleges, publishing houses, and the like.

A Zenana missionary, in describing a journey in northern districts of India, where no lady had been before with the gospel message, says: "Over and over again the women said how glad they were to have a Man to speak to them; that the Sahib came to talk to the men; but, of course, they could not go to listen to him, and now they had a Man all to themselves. As the news spread through the villages around, messages were sent to us, begging us to go to them. Riding through one village, the women came out and called to me as I passed: "Are you not going to stop? Are we not to hear? Here are heathen women ready to be taught, longing for more light, and there is no one to go to them. There are many villages, very many, all through this district, where no lady has ever been. "A thousand missionaries!" If only the Church were awake to her responsibility, ten thousand would be thought little to ask for.—Missionary Link.

The sad lot of women in India should awaken the sympathies and efforts of all generous souls. Mr. Wright, of Tirumangalam, in the Madura Mission, in a recent letter speaks of hearing, while in his house, a piteous cry outside. On asking his teacher what it could be, the munshi replied, "O, that is probably some man beating his wife!" On going to the gate, Mr. Wright saw lying in the street a woman with scanty clothing and disheveled hair; her husband stood by her with his cudgel, a stick about two feet long of hard wood with a metal ring on each end. Two brothers of the woman were there also, and she was crying out, "I don't want to go with this man; he beats me, and is cruel to me!" They had been married about three months, and the young woman was in her teens. Her brothers and relatives abused her, refusing her food and shelter, since, according to Hindoo customs, a woman must submit to any cruelty and indignity from her husband. And there is no remedy for such woes in Hindooism; only the gospel of Christ can bring deliverance from such barbarities.—Missionary Review.

The Central Baptist gave its readers not long since the pictures of three Baptist preachers who are in prison for denying the divinity of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The Western Watchman (Catholic) in commenting on it, says:

"The Central Baptist prints a picture of the three imprisoned Baptist preachers who are serving out their sentence in Cuba for blaspheming the Mother of God. They are looking through the bars. The only thing about the picture that pleases us is the size of the cell. It could accommodate a good many more." Strange rendering our Catholic brother gives of "Love your neighbor as your self."

Whiskey.

Any thing said or written on this subject is looked upon as stale and threadbare and even fanatical. Such is the view of politicians, secular papers and the irreligious people generally. As liquor is recognized and protected by the government by licensing it, great as its evil is, it must not be touched. Don't say a word about it or against it. Just let it alone. It is a lawful and established business. To call it in question, interferes with personal liberty. The friends and advocates of the liquor traffic are not satisfied to let it alone. They thrust it upon us in every possible way. They demand that it shall have full sweep anywhere and everywhere, in our legislative halls, in our elections, in our domestic circles, in our schools and even our Sabbaths. The liquor interest must not be checked or limited at all, is the assumption and demand of its friends and advocates. On the other hand the safety and protection of our homes, the welfare of society, the prosperity and salvation of our country, compels us to speak.

God, conscience and reason, must be obeyed, politicians and secular papers to the contrary. The inspired writers declare that we must obey God rather than man. Let us, then, present some startling facts and figures.

"The liquor drink clogs the brain. It overworks the heart, it checks the action of the heart, it inflames and hardens the liver, it causes fatty degeneration of the kidneys, it arrests digestion inflaming the mucus membrane of the throat and stomach. It creates an appetite which is only increased by being gratified, it destroys the nerve force and paralyzes the energy. It not only ruins the mental and physical faculties, but wrecks the moral powers. This is what it does for man as an individual. Now what effect has it on society, business, politics and religion? It blasts homes. It degrades father. It blights wife love and mother pride.

It chains womanhood in the hell of unchastity. It blocks factory wheels. It closes mines and mills. It delays sales of bread, cloth, shoes, lumber, furniture, groceries, and fuel. It causes strikes, fills jail, and piles cost on county, State and nation. It corrupts politics and politicians. It creeps into the ballot box and destroys free suffrage. It places men in office who dare not oppose the traffic. And first, last, and above all it damns men eternally giving them no hope in life or in death."

This is a fearful charge, every word of which is true. Let us notice some statistics. No less than a billion of dollars are expended annually for liquor. A ruinous waste attended with misery and widespread destruction. Sixty thousands persons die drunkards every year blighted in this world and damned in the world to come. Physicians and judges have declared again and again that three-fourths of all the crimes committed in our country is due to the use of liquor.

What careful precautionary measures are now being used by National and State hauls to ward off the introduction of cholera in our country. No one objects or thinks it interferes with personal liberty. Yet the liquor traffic is as bad as cholera if not a great deal worse, and yet not a word is uttered against it by our State and National Legislatures.

The two great political parties of our country not only quietly submit, but court the liquor traffic. We feel thankful that the Christian church is opposed to this greatest curse of our country. Let the church, its ministers, and its members in all branches, put forth every possible influence not only to curtail, but to crush out this curse of country, and of the world. Something must be done to save our homes, society and the government. The liquor traffic must be put down or civil, political and moral ruin will inevitably follow.

We are not alarmists, nor are we fanatics. We are not mad but only utter the words of truth and soberness. The liquor traffic is thoroughly united and progressive and aggressive. It is bold arrogant and defiant. It violates the laws of God and man and scruples at nothing. It defies and insults the Christian church.

The warfare has begun, the battle is to be fought. Protected and sustained by the influence and power of God, we enter the conflict. We depend not upon our own wisdom and strength, but upon God, who rules in heaven and on earth. The conflict may be a hard and long one, but victory will finally crown our efforts. Christianity will triumph and the millenium will be ushered in. Then will be heard the anthem, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to men."—Writer in Atlantic Methodist.

A New Impulse.

Sometimes the whole current of a human life is changed by a word, by a thought, by some circumstance the result of which could never have been foreseen. A new train of thought is awakened, a new path in life is opened, and in a single day a man's career is marked out for a life-time. Robert Collyer reports the following relation which J. G. Whittier gave him of his first impulse in the direction of poetry.

"When I was on the farm in New Hampshire, and quite young, an old Friend who was visiting the meeting came to stay one night. After supper he said to me, 'John, lad, I've something for thee,' and then brought out of his saddle-bags two little volumes, which turned out to be Burns' poems. 'I think thee'll like the book', he added.

"I had never read any poetry, except Friends' poetry, and thee'll know what that be! I began to read Burns and was lost in wonder. It seemed as if the sky had lifted and the world widened, and I saw mankind outside the narrow bounds of the Friends.

"I read on till mother came down and told me to get to bed. Next day, when the gray light was dawning, I crept down, got the volumes, and read as long I could.

"The old Friend came and said, 'Thee seems to like it. I'm going further on, and I'll leave it till I come back.' That was the first revelation to me of what poetry may be and do."

This old Friend little thought how wide reaching would be the results of that act. It was like the spark falling upon the tinder; it was a hand pointing in a new path. Little did he suppose that the poems of that slender, awkward country boy would sound around the world, and would awaken echoes in millions of hearts.

And there may be to-day hundreds of country boys and girls, the shaping of whose entire career in life may depend upon some kindly act or word which you or I may speak; some book which we may lend them, or something which we may do to turn them into new lines of thought and action.

In how many cases such persons are misdirected; wrong ambitions are stirred within them, and they are led astray by evil suggestions; but how blessed a thing it is to help bewildered souls to find their true vocation, and do the work which God has fitted them to perform, and which he will bless them in doing.—Common People.

On last Friday the Ladies Aid Society of the Raleigh church had a public exhibition and sale of the many beautiful and useful aprons, which their friends so kindly sent them. The net proceeds of the sale was about $55. We congratulate the ladies upon the success of their labors.

At the request of Bro. Rogers of Texas, and quite a number of others to have something in the SUN occasionally on the principles of the Christian Church, we commence with this issue a series of articles upon the five cardinal principles of the church. In this issue we give reasons why we take Christ as the only head of the church.

We must again call your attention to the Children's Day Programs by Rev. C. V. Strickland, which are for sale at this office at 5 cents each, or 50 cents a dozen. Order early. These Programs have fourteen large pages of appropriate recitations and music, are long enough to be entertaining and not so long as to be monotonous. Give us your order.

The Concord Standard has this very pertinent and applicable criticism upon the tendency of college athletics. "About the most we hear from some of the institutions these days, is on the line of foot culture. It is not known whether there is a professorship on Foot tology or not; but it is known that more notoriety is being won on victories or defeat in base ball and such, than arises from any accomplishments in the course usually expected to be found in well regulated institution."

This should be an age of brain, not brawn. Inventive brain has taken from brawn its former prestige. The machine has supplanted the muscle. What we want and need now is higher culture of brain, and only so much of brawn as will enable the brain to do its work well. As the young animal, the young brain needs training, and our colleges are expected to do that, but alas, this training is neglected and foot ball and base ball are pushed to the front. Our own State University and our State denominational College are in line with other institutions, under the influence of the athletic craze.

Christ the Head of the Church.

All bodies, whether in the form of organic matter, immaterial, mental forces or spiritual power, has some source of direction. It may be in grand machinery, active mind or God's love applied. In whatever capacity this source may stand, it is regarded as the head power of the forces directed.

All protestant churches regard Christ as the the head of the church either directly or indirectly. But the Christians are the only people. So far as we know that state positively, as the first cardinal principle, that Christ is the only head of the church. Among the many reasons that might be given as proof of this position, are the following:

1. Because of his divine wisdom.

He knows the acts, lives, hearts, and consciences of all people. The secret sins of life are all known to him, as in the case of the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well. John 4:6-26. The thoughts and words of men separated by space were as familiar to him as those uttered in his ear, as shown in the conversation between him and Nathanael. 1:43-51. Even heart reasonings were open to his mind. Mat. 16:8, Mark 2:8;8:17, Luke 5:21-22.

The best and wisest of men are liable to be imposed upon by others; therefore, if a man were the head of the church, the enemy of souls would continually have the church at a disadvantage by secret plans laid by wicked men. But with Christ as head to direct the work, men and devils may scheme and plan in the dark, but his divine eye sees and knows all the designs of their evil deeds in their very embryo. The enemy of souls may send lawyers skilled in debate, hypocrits black at heart and infidels bold in their belief, to entrap him in their questions, the right answers are all ready at hand. And so wise are they, that the questioners are immediately put to a silent shame. His divine wisdom will be sure to direct the church right, and bring her at last safe into the haven of eternal rest.

2. Because he owns the church by purchase.

His life was given as a ransom for the church. "The ransomed of the Lord shall return." Isa. 35:10 "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for man." Mat. 20:28. "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." 1 Tim. 2:5-6. "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20:28. No man or set of men have a right to take possession of that which has been legally purchased by another. Christ has purchased the church, and paid the full price according to the divine contract made with the Father. And no power will every abrogate this contract, for it has the heavenly seal on it.

3. Because he is the head of the church by divine authority.

"But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." Eph. 4:15. "For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church." Eph. 4:29. "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Eph 5:30. "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; That in all things he might have the preeminence." Col. 1:18. Holding, as he does, his position as head of the church by divine authority, no one has any right, whatever, to assume the leadership; and any one who may undertake it, should be looked on as that man of sin and son of perdition.

The following beautiful thought is from the pen of Dr. Maple:

"What an empire is this! Heaven and earth—the church militant—the church triumphant—all the mighty forces of the physical universe—angels, saints and seraphs. At his command the sweeping storm and rolling billows were hushed, demons crouched in terror, and the grave yielded its prey! 'Upon his head are many crowns.' He is made 'Head over all things to his church.' Yes, over all things from the smallest to the greatest. He hold the stars in his right hand, and preserves every star in its spiritual orbit. With such a Head the church is safe."

Now, having spoken out to the world so often, both from pulpit and press, that Christ is the only head of the church, shall we fail to acknowledge him as such by our daily walk and conversation?

Men many declare in words that Christ is the only head of the church, and, at the same time, show by their lives that they do not believe what they say. The old adage which says that "actions speak louder than words is as true in this case as in any other. It is the duty of the members of a body to carry out the commands of the head. If this is not done, the members show a spirit of disobedience. And disobedience to Christ the head of the church is a sin. 'Commands coming from men may some times be wrong; but those coming from Christ are always right.

The body is expected to follow the head so the church is expected to follow Christ. The body must remain in contact with the head; so the church must remain in contact with Christ. If members, therefore, fall out and become stragglers, they cannot be sustained by the body. As long as a member remains united to the body spiritually, it is near enough to hear the commands; but when it is separated from the body, it may pass out of hearing of them. Every member must remain near enough to the head, so that the nerves will unite with the brains, or the spiritual parts will die.

When ever the church shows to the world by walk, act and conversation, that it believes fully that Christ is the head of the church, there will be a mighty flocking from the world to Zion. The beauty of Christianity is seen more in the lives of men than in their theological statement. Therefore, if we would win men, let us live our principles.

About Mr. Moody.

It will be remembered that not long since the pastors (save two) of Raleigh refused to listen to inviting Mr. Moody to Raleigh and in his behalf we wish to reprint the following letter as it appears in the Southern Churchman

BALTIMORE, April 15, 1893

Severe sickness prevented my seeing, until this evening, an article in the Southern Churchman of March 9, entitled "Mr. Moody in Baltimore."

That article is calculated to mislead the readers of the Churchman to such an extent and to do such gross injustice to Messrs. Moody and Sankey that I hope you will permit me to say a few words in explanation of their work in Baltimore.

Your correspondent makes a quotation from the Baltimore Critic, which no one acquainted with Messrs. Moody and Sankey would deem worthy of a moment's consideration. But when such an article is dignified by being quoted in the Churchman it reaches a number of Christian people, whose judgment might be so warped as to do great injustice not only to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, but also injure the cause of the religion of Christ Jesus.

In 1878 and 1879 Mr. Moody labored in Baltimore for nine months, preaching twice, thrice and sometimes four times a day. During that time I was closely identified with his work, and was one of the Committee that co-operated with him in the conduct of his meetings. Therefore I am in position to know what was done, and I desire to state with the emphasis of official knowledge that the committee did not pay a single cent to Mr. Moody for his preaching for those nine months.

Not only so; but an effort was made by some of Mr. Moody's friends to collect money for his use. Mr. Moody was informed of this fact, and immediately he called his committee together and requested us in the most emphatic manner to stop the collection at once, and assured us that he could not and would not accept money for his services.

In reference to the recent visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Baltimore, permit me to say that then also I was a member of the committee to arrange for his services. I was also one of a committee of three, sent by the general committee, to go to Wilmington, Del., and invite them to visit Baltimore and to appoint the time for their visit. During that interview—when the arrangements for their visit were made—not a word was said either by them or by us on the subject of money; and those eminent men of God came the second time, as Mr. Moody did the first time, to preach the gospel "without money and without price"

In view of these facts, given not from hearsay, but from official knowledge, what becomes of the statement of the Critic that "those somebodies are no other than the evangelists themselves, who, it is said, are being paid at the rate of $1,500 a week."

And then the Critic adds, "Verily, this is a goodly sum for going into the professional holiness business."

"Does it not seem strange that people who acknowledge the poverty-stricken Christ . . . should be led by those who do take scrip and royalties and salaries so far above the ordinary run that Christ's ways seem almost to have been in vain?"

Truly they "have been in vain" to those who make untrue and extravagant statements and try to weaken, if not destroy, the influence of men who are preaching the gospel with a zeal and success that is the marvel of the present generation.

Feeling Religion.

Religion is not composed of matter; and, therefore, cannot be touched and felt as a substance which is material. It is a principle that lives in the soul and works upon the emotional being giving joy or remorse as it is in harmony or discord with the spiritual man. This joy or remorse is known in the mind as fast as it may change from one to the other, following in every foot step of obedience or disobedience to God's will. God has so made our emotional being that it must act in answer to the ways of life, unless it has been killed out by poisonous sins. It is true that the emotional being may be more sensitive in some people than in others; just as the physical part is more sensitive in one person than in another.

Religion being a principle living in the soul, and working upon the emotional being, may be felt and enjoyed in a higher sense than any physical touch of mortal man. Cold formal worship ground out by a mere machine process, with no burning love of Jesus in it, may bring no joyous feeling of love in it. But the religion born of the Holy Ghost, burnt into the heart by love, is always felt and enjoyed far above the pleasures of the world.

To, At and From the District Meeting.

Through the kindness of Bro. J. H. Murray we were carried last Friday evening to his home where we were cared for in a princely manner until Saturday morning. Bro. Murray has always shown himself to the church a true friend.

Saturday morning the dusty line of buggy march was taken up in company with Bro. Eddie Murray to Pleasant Union, Harnett county, N. C. Here we met Rev. J. A. Jones, J. W. Fuquay and several delegates who had come up to attend to the work of the church. The meeting was a success, though not as well attended as it ought to have been. We met many old friends whom we were glad to see in the flesh again. Saturday night was pleasantly spent in the family with an old friend, J. B. Long.

Sunday night, found us at Capt. W. R. Stephenson's. Here we had an interesting time talking to old friends and listening to some of the best music mortal ear ever heard. This may truly be called the song family. No minister ought ever receive more kindness than was shown us. Through the kindness of this family we were sent to Prof. Robt. Yates', and then conveyed by him to the "city of Oaks," We tip our hat and bow the head for every kind act received.

T. C. SEARS.

Three times during five months has our little village, Morrisville, N. C., been made sad by death's doings. This time the cloud of gloom gathers at the home of Mr. T. C. Sears. Last Tuesday morning at about 1:30 he passed to the future state. He had been in poor health for several months; but his death was unexpected at the time it occurred. He leaves two children, a son and daughter, and many friends to mourn their loss.

We have been intimately acquainted with but few men the equal of T. C. Sears in the higher qualities of noble manhood. He was a friend of all, and worked to wrong no one. Who shall take his place in acts of kindness to the poor? He was a friend kind and true ready, to aid in every good work he was called to do. His son, Willie Sears, is a student at Elon College. And a noble young man is he. Miss Mimmie, his daughter, is a young lady of excellent gifts and attainments. May the Lord bless them unto everlasting life. Their mother passed to the future world when they were small children; and now the father has gone to meet her.

Why the Difference?

We have just received a beautiful Hand Book of North Carolina sent out by the State Board of Agriculture, which we have examined with interest, finding it full of useful information. One thing however seems a little strange. Under the head, Denominational College, we find about one page given to Wake Forest, nearly that much to Davidson College, about one and one third pages to Trinity College and a little over five lines given to Elon College. It may be that the gentlemen gave space to colleges in proportion to their respective ages. But the Wake Forest would have gotten more space than Trinity. So that will not do. Well, it might have been a happen so, and we will not complain much, hoping the board will do so no more.

Elon College Notes.

Last week, Bro. Clements came up and took his daughter home with him to spend a few days. Miss Irene's many friends will be glad to see her again in our midst at an early date.

Miss Annie Eley of Norfolk, Va., attended the Naval Rendezvous and returned to us last week. Though we have a good number here, we feel the loss when one of our beloved students is absent from us a few days.

Mr. W. J. Graham is called away to accompany his sister to the springs for treatment. We regret to give Willie up, but he promises to be with us again at the close of school. We extend our wish to them both that they may not only have a pleasant trip but that it may also be a profitable one to them.

The brother of Dr. Holland from Va., accompanied by his wife and Mrs. Dr. Holland came to our town Saturday on a visit to friends and relatives. We all are glad to welcome them and we hope they may so fall in love with Elon that they will give us another visit soon.

Rev. M. L. Hurley came up Saturday. I suppose that is enough to say about him for you all know him and can judge of what a grand spiritual feast we are having through his instrumentality. He will be with us about a week and will preach for us each evening while he is present. You see we do not have Bro. Hurley with us often, so we want to get lots of good from his efforts while he is here.

There may be an intense desire and effort to increase church membership without a spark of love for souls. Church zeal and pious consecration may be two very different things.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—

Now here has two weeks gone by and only three of the cousins have written in all that time! Why, children, have you become so very much interested in the beautiful flowers that are blossoming so freely and the delightful work in the garden that you have forgotten your patient old uncle? Here he goes to the post office day after day and yet so few letters come that he gets disappointed. I just about know what's up—your school is out and you are so busy thinking about your play and helping mamma that you do not think of the Corner. Come now, that is not fair. Help mamma all she needs and more and then don't play quite so much some days and write to the Corner. That's the way to do. I will expect more letters next week. Love to all.

Cordially yours,
UNCLE TANGLE.

PROVIDENCE, VA., APRIL 19, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—As I have the time now, I will write to the Corner. I stayed home from school all of last week and a part of this, because I was sick, but I am feeling much better now. I hope to be able to go to school next week. The Corner looked very encouraging last week, but I was sorry that you didn't have any letters for this week, hope you have gotten some by now for I always feel disappointed when there isn't any Corner. I think the Corner looks more encouraging than it ever has since I have been old enough to read it. I know you must feel encouraged too, for I reckon you had begun to think the children didn't appreciate you much, but I hope you won't have any cause to get discouraged any more. I hope we may do more this year for the Band than we have ever done before. I will answer Ina Moffitt's question: Mule is mentioned once in the Bible and mules once. Am I correct? I send one dime for the Band.

Love to all.
ALLIE GIBSON.

Here is a nice letter that came in time for last week but we thought if the cousins saw no Corner last week some would write so this was kept to have mere company. Allie, your letter is real encouraging and we are like you—hope the Band will do more this year than ever before. Write again soon.

MILL TOWN, ALA., APRIL 21, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—Let us tell the cousins that school is out and we are all having a happy time helping mama. We love the Band and love to read the letters. All of us "little class" have gone home now to rest till July. We all love Mr. Fuquay because he loves us and learns us so much and is so good to us. We all go to Sunday school every Sunday, the little class all sing a song each Sunday that Mr. Fuquay learns us and he says we all can beat the large class singing. Love to you and Uncle Clements and the cousins. We both send money to the Band.

Lovingly,
MATTY ELDER.
JESSIE ELDER.

Here is another nice letter that came in time for the paper last week but we thought there would be more to keep it company if it waited till this week. We are glad to get your letter and hope you will write again real soon. I would like to visit your Sunday school very much.

PATMOS, N. C., APRIL 28, 1893.

DEAR UNCLE TANGLE:—I now with pleasure take another opportunity to write to you and the cousins, and I'm very thankful for such an opportunity. My school is out now and I'm very sorry for I was learning fast. I certainly like to go and I think we all should endeavor to go and learn all we can while we are young, for our school days will soon be past, and will come no more. Uncle Tangle, I like to read your letters in the Corner. The one you addressed to us last week about the little birds was very interesting. I shall always love the Christian Sun, if it continues as at present. Cousins I enjoy your letters very much. I wish I could see you all and have a long talk. Wouldn't that be nice?

Uncle Tangle, I thank you and Uncle Clement indeed for the privilege of writing to the SUN. I will answer some of the cousins' questions. John Sledge's, what was the length breadth and depth of Noah's ark? The length of the ark, three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. Jennie Samlin's question. What chapter is it that the last of every verse is the same? Psalms 136 chapter every verse ends alike. I will also ask a question. In what three lands did the childhood of Jesus pass? I hope the cousins will continue to improve. Sorry I haven't any money to send the Band next time, but will try to send some next time. Will close wishing you much success with your paper. Love to you and all the cousins.

Your loving niece,
MAUD V. GUNTER.

Maud, you have written us a nice letter and we hope you will soon follow it with another. It is as much of a pleasure for us to get letters from the boys and girls as it is for you to write. So you see it is a pleasure all around.

Windsor, Va.

It my my privilege for the first time to hear Dr. Talmage when he lectured in Suffolk. I was very much impressed with his earnestness and the beautiful language he used to convey his thoughts. These are two admirable qualifications he possesses, and he knows how to use them well.

Mrs. Nannie Hall from this county and Mrs. Emma J. Butler from Southampton were here last week to attend the marriage of Miss Fannie Corstaphney. They spent a short time at the Christian parsonage.

Last third Sunday morning and night I filled my appointments at Franklin. Good congregations at both services. At every appointment the congregation has been most attentive to the service, and we trust that good is being done. Eleven more members were received into the church at the last meeting. The church appears to take a fresh start, and to be greatly encouraged at the present prospect. My God give us a strong active faithful church at that place. At my next appointment there I will administer ordinance of baptism. My stay while in Franklin was with Bro. D. P. Rawls the secretary of the church. To him and his kind wife, I extend sincere thanks for the very pleasant way they entertained me. I hope to be able to do more service for the Lord this year than I had done in any former year.

On the evening of April 5, 1893, at the Christian church in Windsor, Va., Miss Fannie eldest daughter of Mrs. Fannie Corstaphney and Mr. Alton Barbee a very popular and worthy young man of Gala, Va., were united in marriage. The church had been beautifully decorated, and a large crowd met which was carefully seated by the polite ushers, Mr. J. M. Carr and Mr. E. M. Barker. At precisely nine o'clock the soft tones of the organ, under the skillful rendering by Miss Ella Mai Kitchen floated over the church and brought all to quietness to look upon the eventful scene. The flower girls Sallie Johnson and Bertha Chapman entered first each bearing charming flowers set in the midst of burning candles, beaming with a light exquisitely beautiful. Then the contracting parties met at the altar and stood under a beautiful arch with the letters "B" and "C" just above them, until the writer preformed the ceremony. The groom, a handsome young man was attired in black, and the bride one of the most beautiful young ladies of Windsor was in pure white trimmed in lace, ribbon and flowers, carrying in her hand a lovely callily, and white hyacinths in her hair. The bridal presents were about forty. Many of them beautiful and costly. A very fine supper was set at Mrs. Fannie Corstaphney's where the invited guests repaired and had a delightful time. The whole was indeed a most enjoyable occasion, and reflected much credit upon all the parties concerned. After the bountiful repast, after congratulations of friends, and after saying repeatedly the dear old word "good by" they left on the 11 p. m. train for their home in the beautiful Valley of Virginia followed by the best wishes of many devoted and loving friends.

J. T. KITCHEN.

Can we expect that our God will look with favor upon the Great Columbian Exposition? That great city is now virtually in the hands of the saloons. Carter Harrison who has been recently re-elected Mayor by a majority of 20,000 is the patron of the saloon; the ideal politician and worshipful grand master of the vile saloonists of the city. The exposition will have 87 licensed saloons to contend with. All these in open violation of the law. Where the Exposition grounds are was recently annexed to Chicago. Previous to annexation it was a prohibition town and it was annexed on the expressed condition that prohibition should remain. The Sodom of the West!

Good Family Medicines

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills.

"I regard Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills, the very best family medicines, and we are never without them. I have always been and began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla three years ago for that tired feeling. It built me up so quickly and so well that I feel like a different woman and have always had great faith in it. I give it to my children whenever there seems any trouble with their blood, and it does them good. My little boy likes it so well he cries for it. I cannot find words to tell how highly I prize it. We use Hood's Pills in the family and they

Washington Letter.

If evidence were needed to prove the great and growing interest of the people in this country in all movements for the restriction of the terrible liquor traffic it would be furnished by the frequency with which our highest legal tribunal is called on to pass upon the legality of some decision of the State courts relating to that traffic. There are few weeks when the U. S. Supreme Court is in session in which a decision is not handed down that affects either directly or indirectly the legal status of the rum-seller in some of the States or Territories. The great majority of recent decisions on this subject have been against the dispensers of liquid ruin, but this week one was handed down showing a case in which the law is held to be on the dram-sellers side. It is a very peculiar and interesting case, which grew out of an attempt of Northern Pacific Railroad Company to prevent the officers of a county in the State of Washington renewing the licenses of certain saloon keepers, on the ground that the saloons were nuisances, and that the employes of the railroad, who must necessarily use dynamite, steam and other dangerous substances in constructing the company's line through that country, were induced by the presence of these saloons along the line of the work to become unfitted for the safe use of these instrumentalities, thereby causing loss to the corporation by delay in the completion of the work. The State courts decided that the saloon keepers were entitled to licenses and that decision is now affirmed by the Supreme Court. Notwithstanding this decision, which would seem to call for an amendment to the law under which it was made, the complaint of the railroad company stands out in bold relief as an unanswerable argument for the prohibition of traffic which unfits men to perform the ordinary duties pertaining to their customary occupations. A case like this sets one almost unconsciously to thinking. Suppose for instance, that one of the employes of this railroad whose duty is connected with the handling of dynamite used in blasting should purchase the liquor with which to become intoxicated from one of these legalized saloons, and while in that condition should cause a premature explosion that would result in the death of a score of his fellow workmen, who would be guilty of murder?

It is very seldom, indeed, that a foreigner visits us as the guest of the United States, but that is the status of the Duke of Veragua and his family, consisting of his wife son and daughter, and brother, descendants of Chris-toper Columbus, who have been in Washington this week. They were invited by the United States government to visit America during the Columbian Exposition in honor of their great ancestor, as honored guests. All Washington, from the President down to the humblest private citizen, united to do honor to them, and it was particularly appropriate, too, as the District of Columbia was named for the family to which they belong. The Duke and his family left here this morning for New York to see the naval review, after which they will go to Chicago, to take part in the opening ceremonies of the Exposition.

Idols at Home.

There are those who have something in life to worship that tends to elevate the instincts of the soul; as, Christ, His precepts, and the blessed Word. But there are others who have gods to worship that tend to lower the instincts of the soul. These we shall call "Home Gods."

In the days of "Moses and the Prophets," we have gods of stone, brass and gold, which were all abomination, in the sight of God, and against which He distinctly pronounces woes, and visits such people with His curse from even the squirming reptile to war's withering flames. But in this our Christian's day, we have not the brass Baal nor the golden calf, but we have other idols of varied characters, multiplied almost to infinity which are actually doing God's kingdom much harm. Let us see what a few of these god's are.

Now, in the first place, God revealed to Moses "The Ten Commandments," in one of which He said: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." [Ex. 20:3]. But many, yea thousands have their flesh gods, money gods, novel gods, society pleasure, fashion, ball room gods and bar room devils to worship, and before each of whose shrines thousands of us are each day bowing—stop and look at the scene. The first of the above idols, the "god of the flesh," lust, needs no comment; but to say that it leads its thousand; to indolence, poverty, kleptomania, lunacy, death, is too sad to be true.

Second, money has its worshippers. There are those whose lives become a misery to them endeavoring to get rich. They strive from early morn till darkness closes the scene, acting honestly with the one when forced to do so, and upon the other he lays his defrauding hand, and covets his neighbors goods. The purse becomes the god of his heart, and on returning from his business to the fireside which has been kept bright and clean to give his coming a happy welcome, he never takes time to speak a consoling word, nor even time to pray one short prayer to the God who giveth or who taketh away; but humbly bows his heart, soul, and body to the thought of the gold made today, or that which he covets for tomorrow. Then he is miserably "hard up," when asked to contribute a dollar for missions or a quarter for a beggar.

Next we have another God, the "novel." The minds of men and women are moulded from their reading matter. Show me a man or woman, boy or girl, who takes first class periodicals and reads the Bible, and I can show up the same as a moral guide.

Observe the young lady who has no pleasure in life than that found, pouring over some shallow frivolous, dime novel, and you can judge the depth of her mind by the shallowness of her literature.

Behold the young man who looks for his reading only the "Base Ball Advertiser" and the sporting paper and who looks especially to the games of old John Sullivan, the pugilist. Mark well the good that young man is doing, first, for his mother, for Sunday school, for missions, and I am sure you will find that his good deeds could be recorded in a volume much smaller than the Koran. But as we are to judge a man by the "god," [literature], he adores, lets search his pockets, and as his dessert, you can find in one pocket a pack of cigarettes, loaded with their five narcotic poisons, and as his toast, you can in all probability, find in the other pocket the fictitious history of Rube Burrows or Jesse James, painting in all its fictitious, horrible blackness the most heinous crime cold blood can give—The Dime Novel, the Base Ball Advertiser, The Sporting Papers and "Rube Burrows" and Jesse James," lead hand-in-hand to utter destruction.

Such is another god from which thousands are feeding their brain and sinking their souls, and I have become convinced that our Government will be cursed for allowing such spurious matter distributed, and parents and teachers held highly accountable for setting the example in buying and reading such stuff.

Save and Keep Saving.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, in an address to the graduating class of the Pierce Business College at its commencement in Lancaster, Pa., made the following remarks:

Now, then, saving. Whenever I have talked to young men on the duty of saving, my newspaper friends have come out afterwards and said, "Mr. Depew, you are preaching the doctrine of sordidness." Well, I have no respect for a man who is not sordid enough to save for his family in his old age. You say it is hard to save. That depends on how many cigars and cigarettes you smoke. It depends upon how many beers you drink. It depends upon how often you are in the saloon playing pool and drinking at the bar. Any man whose habits are right, whose health is good, who can work, can save.

It is astonishing how money grows. It has been my habit for the twenty-seven years I have been with the New York Central Railroad, during all that period as its counsel, to have all departments of the road come in touch with me. Every once in a while during the whole of that period these men would state their conditions and want advice. I don't know why I should be able to give any better than anybody else. But if you practise doing anything you get handy at it. I recall now two men whom I have met—and I won't locate them in the New York Central, because anybody I should mention in the New York Central would be known—but two men came to me twenty years ago for advice. They were getting the same salary. They had very much the same kind of positions, and the same opportunities in life. I said to both of them, "The time has come when you should begin to save. You have families, you may die at any moment, and your families would be left without a dollar. That is a calamity whose horrors no tongue can describe, especially a young and helpless family. You will grow old, and when you grow old the service wants you no longer, and you are laid aside useless." They said, "How can we save?" I said, "By making a rule that you will, no matter at what sacrifice, cut down your expenses so that within a certain time you will bring me a thousand dollars." One of them followed it, and today the income from his investments is the same as his salary, and he can live on it. The other one, as his salary increased increased his methods of living, went into a more fashionable neighborhood, and had a craving for society, began to give pretty little dinners, with champagne and what not, sported a carriage; and to day one, as I have stated, looks serenely upon old age, which is upon him, because he has enough to carry him comfortably through without care and without anxiety, with enough to leave his loved ones in comfort, while the other one is in despair for fear the ax may fall on account of age and incompetency, and he will be at the mercy of a heartless world."—Selected.

The Professor's Chair.

There are some people who, before they go on very far in life, discover that they are more expensive than other folks. Their teeth are of the crumbling kind, whose caverns become regular gold mines, of the reverse order. Their eyes have so many twists that the fullest pocketbook gets the cramps trying to fit them with glasses. Their tender feet raise a corn on every toe as a red flag of rebellion against leather that is not of the finest and shoes that are not of the shrewdest make.

O, they are to be pitied, these expensive folk! Ordinary, cheap food is poison to their unreasonable stomachs. Ready-made, cheap clothing is offensive to their fastidious taste. Their sensitive, accurate ears shrink from anything but the finest pianos, and violins worth many times their weight in gold. A tawdry, paper-covered book, with inartistic type,—pah! they'd rather not read at all than read that. Ugly wall-paper drives them out of doors. Ingrain carpets are nettles under their feet. Better is a slice of bread at Delmonico's than a plate of turkey at Mrs. Smith's boarding-house. Worst of all, their constitutions are so delicately adjusted that their work must fit them as a glove the finger, must give precisely the right surroundings, the right hours, the right amount of freedom and leisure, or they are unable to work at all.

And so it happens that where others are large and liberal producers, these are chiefly consumers. If they are rich, they are idle and miserable; and if they are poor, they pose as martyrs at the very toil wherein others are singing. In neither case is the world the richer for them, either in goods or good cheer. They were born to be expensive.

No, that is not true. God did not create them to be expensive. God is not such a bungling workman as that would indicate. God makes no mistakes. To be sure, he may have sent the misshapen eyes and the chalky teeth and the dyspeptic stomach and the tender feet and the delicate sensibilities,—matters which are expensive enough; but he always sends far more possibilities of wealth than sources of poverty.

Listen, ye myopic, astigmatic, aesthetic, dyspeptic, rack-eared, plug-toothed, unfortunate! Hear a word of common sense from old Caleb Cobweb. More can come out of a man than ever need go into him. If you are expensive above the ordinary, be productive above the ordinary. Make up for the gold mine stowed away in your teeth by those words fitly spoken that are like apples of gold in silver sockets: Pay for your complex and costly eye-glasses by using your eyes in some unique and valuable fashion. Get as much out of your dyspeptic boy—in your way as Carlyle got out of his, in his way. Mast your feet be daintily shod? Speed them on the swifter errands. Are your tastes refined, accurate, sensitive? Fall to, with your trained love of beauty, and beautify this old world, instead of grumbling at it.

There's a noble work for every one. There's a wealth-producing work for every one,—wealth of spirit, and wealth of the United States mint as well. And let every child of God that appropriates largely of God's good things bestir himself, with God's help, to pay back even more than he takes. No such endeavor can end in failure.—Caleb Cobweb in G. Allen Rule.

Politeness.

My little ones, do not be afraid of politeness,—it will not hurt you. Have none of that abline which crushes the life from so many of your good and noble impulses, and causes you to shrink from performing little acts of tenderness and love toward one another. Let your hands, your voice be the willing servants of that great master of politeness, the heart. Politeness teaches how to obey, gladly, fearlessly and openly. The truly polite child is a good son, a good daughter, for politeness teaches him the duty and respect he owes to his parents; he is a kind and grateful brother; his very willingness to help his sister makes her feel better and stronger. He is a true friend, for he scorns the unkind words that wound those who love him. Politeness and charity are twins—they make the true gentleman, the true gentlewoman, helpful, loving, unpretentious. The world would be better if the young boys and young girls, who, soon to be our men and women, would obey the watchword of true politeness, which is charity.—Selected.

Light Turned On.

You ask for the light to be turned on with regard to whiskey dealers in Walnut Street Baptist church of Louisville, Ky. To investigate the matter I went to see for myself the truthfulness of the report, I ascertained the following facts:

Mr. W. L. Weller is a member of Walnut Street Baptist church. He is and has been for some time actively engaged in the Sunday school work. I visited his place of business which is 200 East Main Street and read the following sign: "W. L. Weller & Co., Wholesale Liquor Dealers."

Walking up Main Street I stopped at No. 141 West Main Street, and read the following: "John G. Roach, Distiller and Wholesale Liquor Dealer, office of Bel-Oir Distillery Company." Mr. Roach is President of this Company, and has figured conspicuously lately as president of the National Distiller's Association. A short time ago he presided at a banquet of that Association held in this city.

Mr. Roach is and has been for a number years a prominent member of the Walnut Street Baptist church.

Continuing in my walk up Main street I arrived at No. 716 West Main st. This is the large business establishment of Arthur Peter & Co. Over the door is the following sign: "Arthur Peter & Co., Wholesale Liquor Dealer."

Dr. Peter the head of the firm, is the senior deacon in the Walnut Street Baptist church. Last fall the Walnut Street Baptist church celebrated Dr. Peter's fiftieth year of service in the office of deacon. Dr. Peter and Mr. Weller are both members of the executive committee of the Board of Managers of the Baptist Orphan's Home of this city.

The above facts are not secrets, and I simply send them to you in order that the readers of the N. C. Baptist may know the facts regarding the largest and probably the most influential Baptist church in the Southern Baptist Convention.

These are facts ascertained simply by casual observation. I have made no minute inquiry as to minute details. If the Baptist desires any light on this subject, it may possibly be turned on.—B. W. Spilman, Louisville, Ky. in N. C. Baptist.

Suffolk Letter.

One-third of 1893 has already gone into the past. What have we done ou the year's work? Have we thought of conference collections and made some effort to raise them? It is time we had them at least partly in our treasuries. Are we pressing the regular work diligently and earnestly? How do pastors study? How do members attend? How are the Sunday schools maintained? How about family prayers? I see Rev. J. W. Wellons of Durham, N. C., advertises his book of "Family Prayers" for sale again. This is the best book of the kind on the market. The matter is good, the print is large, and in every way it is a most excellent and useful book for any home. It is especially suited to old people. It is a treasure anywhere. Books as well as companions are great moulders of characters. They fashion the thought of the mind, fix the purposes of the life, and give color and direction to the affections of the heart. A few good books well studied will do more to make culture and character of a worthy sort, than many books carelessly read. Great men often read few books, but always good ones. No mind was ever made great, useful or happy by reading sensational novels. They are unreal productions, fancy pictures, sensuous stories, touching the lower and baser strings of human nature, kindling the fires of lust and storing the mind with thoughts and suggestions of evil. Bad books manufacture all sort of evil and crime, and are satan's cordial invitations to an eternal dance of death. Woe unto manufacturer and disseminator of vile books! If I had one word of warning for the dear young people it would be to shun bad books as you would Asiatic cholera. They are even worse, because they vitiate and defile both mind and heart.

Dr. Herndon came into Suffolk from Oakland yesterday afternoon and preached for us last night. He is well and pressing the claims of Elon College upon the people and trying to raise money all the time.

W. W. STALEY.

May 1st, 1893.

Durham, N. C.

DEAR SUN:--Yesterday's work closed the month of April with us. During the month I have been interested in my series of meetings; the first part preparing for the meeting, and a little over two weeks in the meeting. Our meeting was interesting all the time and the evening congregation large, the day services were not so well attended but were the best services we had. We held special meetings for the children and the boys and girls Brethren Gatis and Beman of the M. E. church, and Bro. Tiry of the Baptist, and Bro. Darnell of the Presbyterian, and Bros. Herndon and Clements, each gave us excellent sermons to the gratification of everybody who heard them. There were some eight or ten professions and three additions to the church. Other meetings are following it with good interest at the Third Baptist and at a mission point.

Next Sunday is my quarterly and communion meeting. I trust we will have a pleasant and profitable meeting and some other additions to the church

Our town looks cheerful this morning, the trees all covered with their green foliage and the flowers so fragrant. The sound of the hammer and the ring of the saw are heard in every direction. New buildings are going up all around my church; an electric light post is to be planted on an opposite corner of the street from the church which will shed a brilliant light outside, and I pray the light of the gospel will glow more brightly inside the church. Brick is being hauled this morning for some work we are soon to do about the church; but we do pray for an improvement in our spiritual work for the church.

J. W. WELLONS.

May 1, 1893.

Starting Anew.

"Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" Once the Law of the Lord was your delight, the promises of God were your comfort, the people of God were your companions, and the house of God was a place of sweet resort. But all this has changed; just how, perhaps you could not tell yourself, but the change is deep and wide and radical. New pleasures, new occupations, new hopes, new thoughts have taken possession of your heart, but, you have lost the old peace and comfort; you may have a name to live, but the forces of death are in you, and you grow worse, more dull, stupid, worldly, careless, indifferent; less inclined to prayer, to service, to noble acts and generous giving, and what will the end be? Will it be shipwreck and ruin? Who can tell?

Is it not time to change all this? to take a new start? to lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset you? to gird up your loins like a man, and run with patience the race that is set before you? Is it not time to turn square about, to confess, to undo the wrongs, and take your stand again on the side of God, and truth and righteousness? Heaven is as near to-day as ever; the Lord is nigh to them that call upon him, and he is as ready to help you now as in days gone by.

Your boy was lost one day, you waited for him, watched for, hunted for him, grew anxious; what an uneasy heart you carried till the boy was found! Do you ever think how the heavenly Father feels when his children wander away? The Father's house is open, but they are wasting their substance in a far country. The Father's table is spread, but they are feeding on husks among the swine. Do you ever think how heaven itself is uneasy with longing for your return? Is it not time to say, "I will arise, and go to my Father, and will say unto him, Father I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son?"

My head is low, my heart is sad,
My feet with travel torn,
Yet, O my Savior, thou art glad
To see thy child return!
It was thy love that homeward led,
Thine arm that upward stayed:
It was thy hand which on my head
Is now in mercy laid.

I feel the pressure of that love
Which tells me I am dear:
Mine eyes, my heart, I lift above,
And know that thou art near:
Thy gentle voice hath never said
One word which could upbraid,
I only feel upon my head
Thy hand in mercy laid.

Thy wounded feet have sough me far,
And on thy wounded brow
I see that thorn-engraved scar
Made by my broken vow:
And that dear hand which for me bled,
Stretched out to seek the strayed:
It is that hand which on my head
Is now in mercy laid.

O Saviour, in this broken heart,
Confirm the trembling will,
Which longs to reach thee, where thou art,
Rest in thee, and be still.
Within that bosom which hath shed
Both tears and blood for me,
O let me hide this aching head.
Once pressed and blessed by thee.

From Alabama to South West Georgia.

Last Friday the 27th inst. your correspondent and wife, accompanied by about twenty others journeyed for the District Conference to commence at West Point Mills, a distance of nearly thirty miles. We arrived here at the Mills late Friday evening and found this to be one of the liveliest little towns along the line whose population numbers 600, and whose benevolence and hospitality to strangers has not its seeming equal. The special business at the Point is a splendid cotton mill, whose capacity works about 375 hands in all. There are 312 looms, near 15,000 spindles which spin and weave thirty bales of cotton per day, and makes fabric to the amount of 26,000 yards each day, all of which fabric, if extended end to end would measure about fifteen miles.

To say nothing of this people's hospitality, good eating, and good preaching we enjoyed, I feel that my pen had failed of its intention; for while luxury and pleasure offer itself at every call, we feel to have made many warm friends in whose hearts we hope forever to live. The Conference was especially honored by the presence of our dear, aged, and beloved brother, Jubilee Smith, Richland, South West Ga., giving forth at times his most splendid and appreciated advice.

The discussions of the program were spirited and many thoughts forcibly put to the point and I feel, yes, I am sure, much good was done and lasting impressions made for the Christian cause. Among the speeches of spirit during the session was that on Education by the aged Dr. Smith of Richland. It was timely and full of the strongest evidence of the need of Education. His speech was hailed with delight in the heart of every one. And I am proud to announce to the general public, and especially to those interested in the New Hope Institute that there are to be five bright young men and young ladies to enter next session from the Point, Next after bidding our many friends adieu, at the Point, your writer, accompanied by his wife, too cars to continue his South bound trip of pleasure and respite to the home of her parents in South West Ga. On board the "Cannon Ball" for Birmingham, we soon found ourselves at the thriving little city of Opelika, wherewen a half minute connection with the Montgomery line for Columbus at 12:15 M. Here we enjoyed respite and had the time of three hours to drive over this brilliant "Queen City" of the South and behold the beautiful scenery of the Chatahoochee, with its tremendous water wheels propelling 24,000 looms and 180,000 spindles which turns out 125,00 yards of cloth each day. Such is really, in truth, a city of splendor and magnitude and worth the time and money of any southern tourist to behold. Besides, there are its broad, well watered streets, its spacious mansions, its monuments its parks, its cemetery, all pleasant to visit and to behold.

We then took the cars at 3:45 p. m. for Albany, Ga., a continued distance of ninety miles, which ride was very pleasant both on account of its good rails and beautiful scenery along the line. We safely arrived at Albany, the "Artesian City," at 7:00 o'clock where the good hackman drove us to the Central to enjoy a good supper and a quiet rest.

Here we both have many acquaintances and fast friends and were given every inducement for pleasure while we sojourned with them, although this be the "city of Jews" yet I must say I have never met with more hospitality than when in their midst.

Now, only twenty miles more and our pleasant journey has ended. But before we arrive we must say something of latitude and the change of climate so apparent. Two days ago in Alabama the farmers crops of cotton were just cleverly up, the corn from three to six inches high, but here today on looking out, I find the cotton crops plowed out the second time and it will soon be blooming, while the corn stands from knee to half tingle--such is the change of latitude, and such is almost unbelievable to one who experienced frost last Sunday week at the distance of 175 miles north. We have now reached Doles, the childhood of the little wife and are sharing the joys of the happy hearts of her good parents who for seven long months have looked with delight at the return of a daughter. But I must say and I close, it is a very pleasant thing to be the husband of a dearly beloved daughter, for when the various goods of such banquets as was given on my wife's arrival are distributing the husband is sure to get his part.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., of Norfolk, preached for us yesterday, 30th, April. And notwithstanding there was a union meeting at Western Branch Baptist church, near by, we had a good congregation. His sermon was excellent and everybody was pleased with it. Come and see us again Bro Barrett, and you will certainly have a congregation to hear you.

Bro Connelly our Sunday school Missionary, was also with us, and gave the Sunday school a good talk. Bro. C. is gifted, and is no doubt doing well in his noble work.

Mr. Robt. W. Holland and wife, two children, and Mrs. Dr. Holland of this place is on a visit at Elon, to see friends and relatives, and take a look at the College buildings, etc.

Spring has opened beautifully, and refreshing showers and the balmy air has revived and invigorated all nature.

R. H. HOLLAND.

The American flag was taken down from the government buildings of Hawaii directly after the arrival of Envoy Blount, and presumably by his direction. It is understood that this was done at the suggestion of Mr. Cleveland, who is said to have a policy of his own with regard to the islands and desires that negotiations shall be carried on as though nothing had heretofore been done looking to annexation.

Nothing New.

BY REV. JAMES MAPLE, D. D.

That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past. Eccl. 5:15.

Solomon was distinguished for his wisdom and knowledge, and has ever been regarded as the wisest man of the ages. He was a keen observer of men, and had a profound knowledge of human nature; yet he was but a man, and fell into gross sins. He was awakened to a consciousness of his sinfulness, repented, and returned to God. Ecclesiastes was written after his reformation.

Our text reveals Solomon's prayer and knowledge of the philosophy of things, and it presents a beautiful subject for meditation and reflection. There are three points in it.

I. That which hath been is now.

Nothing is destroyed in the material universe. Things change in their forms and relations, but the constituent elements remain. Flowers, trees, and birds may be destroyed; but the matter that entered into their organization remains, and becomes parts of other organizations. All the matter ever created still exists. It may have passed through a thousand different forms, and organizations; but it remains.

This is true in the intellectual world. The wisdom and knowledge of the present is the fruit of the past. The political wisdom, the civil institutions, and the philosophy of the world is the outgrowth of the study and knowledge of all past ages. Each step in the progress of knowledge and practical science prepared the way for another and greater.

This is true in the moral world. Every thought, word and action lives not only in the memory, but also in their effect on others. A step in advance does not cut us off from the past. To-day we are what the past thoughts, feelings, desires, purposes, and actions have made us. Our past life lives in what we are now.

We cannot blot out the past, and be as though it had not been. The evil thoughts, the sinful desires, and wrong actions of the past are felt in our moral nature, and seen in our life. We have realized this in painful experience, and it often causes anguish of soul. Every man who has tried to break off from a sinful life, and live as he knows he ought has learned the power that the past has over him.

We must meet all the past again.

It has not only become a part of ourselves, and exists in our moral character; but we must meet it in the judgment. Rev. 20:11-12. A dying man expressed a great dissatisfaction with his past life, and fearful apprehensions of the future. He said that he would not be so mean as to drink the devil's wine all his life, and then offer the settlements to Jesus. He could not get over his wasted life, but lay moaning. "If I could get back again, back again! If I could be a boy again, a boy again." Vain wish! Death hurried him, amid his utterance, into the presence of his judge.

Here we see the infinite superiority of Christianity over all other systems of religion and philosophy. It did not grow up out of preceding religion, and philosophies; but is a direct revelation from heaven.

II. That which is to be hath already been.

That which is to be already exists in the germ out of which it is to grow.

The fruit of the next harvest is in the germ of the seed sown. The future oak tree exist in embryo in the acorn, and the future man in the boy. The future civilization and governments of the earth exist now in the truths, principles, and passions that are at work in the minds of men, and are working in our schools, colleges, and civil institutions.

Man and his future is now in the thoughts, impulses, desires, principles, and motives that now govern him. Gal. 6:6-8. Man is making his own heaven, or building his own hell. The happiness of heaven does not come mainly from the Christians surroundings, but from the state of his mind and heart; and the hottest fires of hell are in the sinners own soul.

The future of this church is now in the thoughts, desires, and purposes of its members. It will be just what these make it. As a church to-day we are just what the past has made us. The great reformation in Germany and Switzerland in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries existed first in the thoughts, convictions, desires, and purposes of Martin Luther. A prosperous, happy and useful church does not come by accident or chance; but is the outgrowth of the spiritual life of its members.

III. God requireth that which is past.

He holds us responsible for our past life. Eccl. 12:13-14; 2 Cor. 5:9-10; Acts 17:30-31. God will call us to account for what we have done. 1 John 3:4. He also holds us responsible for what we have neglected to do. James 4:17; Matt. 25:24-30.

The blessings that God bestows upon the soul he intends shall remain and produce fruit.

REMARKS.

1. God governs the world now as he has governed it in all the past, therefore we can trust him. The order of nature is the same now as in the beginning. Psalms 19:1-4, 90:1-2

2. There is encouragement in our text for the Christian worker. Nothing is lost. The seed sown may be slow coming up, but it will come.

3. There is a restraining power in the solemn truth stated in our text. If we are to meet all the past how careful we ought to be in our thoughts and actions. When Bishop Latimer was being tried for his life he at first answered readily, but he heard a pen going behind a curtain where there was a concealed scribe writing down all he said. Then he was careful, and weighed all his words, for he knew that he would have to meet it all again.

The much-talked about Geary Chinese exclusion law provides that all Chinese residents of the United States who shall not register, as therein provided for, on or before May 5, 1893, shall be returned to the country whence they came, but no orders have been issued by the officials of the Treasury department for the arrest of those Chinamen who have failed to comply—only a very small percentage of them have done so—with the law, and none are expected until the Supreme Court passes upon the constitutionality of the exclusion law, which it will shortly do, May 10, having been named by Chief Justice Fuller as the time for hearing arguments. Even if the Supreme Court upholds the constitutionality of the law there is an obstacle to the deportation of the Chinese, in the absence of an appropriation to pay the necessary expenses.

"From Greenland's icy mountains, From India's coral strand," come the servants of the Master, to tell what Christianity has done for them and to encourage the faint-hearted to aid in extending and continuing the good work. Last Sunday Rev. S. V. Kainarkai, of Bombay, preached to a local congregation on "India and the Gospel," and if his sermon lacked the well turned periods which have made many pulpit orators famous, it contained a fiery earnestness that is often lacking in our greatest preachers. He told of the hard experiences of his father, who had been converted to Christianity when he was a teacher in Bombay school. He was a high caste Hindoo and his conversion to Christianity was followed by the complete social ostracism of himself and his family. But he was not discouraged; he became a missionary among the poor of his race and spent his life explaining to them the truths of the gospel and pointing out to them the true way to live, a task which the son has taken up. Mr. Kainarkai and his wife are the guests of Rev. Dr. T. S. Hamlin, of this city.

The Good Templars, Rechabites and sons of Jonadab have entered into an agreement to publish a monthly temperance paper under the suggestive title of "No Compromise." Its editors are to be selected from those organizations, and as it is expected that they will contribute their work for the good of the cause the new publication will probably live longer than its temperance predecessors.

A mass-meeting of all the temperance organizations is to be held on the 12, inst., for the purpose of forming an anti-liquor league. Everybody opposed to the liquor traffic is eligible for membership in the league.

Rev. Mr. Miller, of Reading, Pa., founder of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, an undenominational organization of young men, formed for Christian work, addressed a large meeting last night, held under the auspices of three Washington chapters of the organization, for the purpose of explaining its objects and increasing its membership. It is expected that the result will be the formation of several new chapters.

CORRESPONDENT.

Temperance.

A composition by Callie Johnson read before the District Meeting at Pleasant Union, April 30, 1893.

My friends, we are here to confront the greatest enemy of our time, to handle the greatest living question, and that is temperance. We impeach this monster and arraign him before the bar of public judgment and demand his condemnation in the name of industry, robbed and beggered; of public peace, disturbed and broken; of private safety "Drink" is a bad habit, it is perhaps the greatest curse that ever scourged this earth. It is one of depravity's worst fruits.

Temperance is a great thing. You, my friends, who drinks intoxicating liquor will soon find out that it is doing you no good, but is doing you harm. Well, my friends, if that is your plea, I would adjure you to keep it locked up amongst your choicest jewels, guard it as the apple of thine eye, and when you die and are laid away in your coffin, be sure that this precious document is placed within your clammy fingers, so that when you are called upon to confront the souls of your victims before your God. If you die a wretched sinner and leave to the world a worthless reputation, a wicked example and memory of that only fit to perish. If you leave your parents sorrow and bitterness it will be a trouble unto them all of their lives. You may talk of earthquakes, storms and wars, but temperance in the use of intoxicating Drink. Drink has sent a volume of misery and woe into the stream of this world's history more fearful and terrible than any of them. A friend one day was asked the cause; I will tell you, said he, and opening his account book he said, here are forty-four names of men who to my certain knowledge now lie in a drunkards' graves.

Shall that father's darling boy?
His mother's hope and future joy,
Be led a captive, Die a slave?
Fill a drunkard's wretched grave?

My friends, if I am talking to any of you, take my advice and leave off drinking intoxicating liquor, for certainly it will do you harm.

Father, look down from thy throne, I pray! Hasten! Oh hasten a better day; Help us too as a temperance band, help us to wipe away every fear which King alcohol brings here. Well, my friends, I would advise you all to work as a temperance band, for many a soul has been destroyed by the strong drinks.
