The Sun's editor has been visiting, a sort of return home trip, and has had such an interesting day that he must needs tell about it. Rev. J. L. Foster, the popular and beloved pastor, had no trouble in inducing us to visit Mt. Auburn again, and be with him in his memorial service second Sunday in May. We left Elon College Saturday and an agreeable run via Raleigh and Norlina brought us, in the early afternoon, to Granite, N. C., on the Virginia border line, this particular place being distinguished chiefly and almost solely, because Granite Lodge, at which we were to stay the night, is located there. This Granite Lodge is interesting and means more than its name would seem to indicate. It is about the most majestic country estate that this scribe has come across. It is owned by a Richmond capitalist, but presided over, directed and controlled by, that prince of good fellows, our long time friend, John Tucker, his charming and hospitable wife, and interesting family. Massive stone columns, on either side the inviting avenue, leading from the station to the Lodge, stand as silent sentinels to signify the place of entrance to the majestic enclosure. A great lawn of downy turf studded with giant and far-reaching oak surrounds the residence of the Lodge, giving an aspect and an atmosphere of solidity, restfulness and quiet dignity. The residence is magnificent, a great granite structure, of recent build, but of noble architecture, its three ample stories containing four large rooms each, besides spacious halls, bath rooms, coves, alcoves, et cetera, the second story being skirted on all four sides by spacious and generous veranda. The granite was quarried from a near by quarry and the great building, long in construction, was erected by day labor and not by contract and so the expense, though enormous was not computed. Out in the barn lot, however twenty head of fat horses and mules and stabled in a granite building that has cost $7,000, through it is not yet complete. And in this same barn yard, while we are out here, you will find two great corn "cribs," one for the mixed, one for the better grade of corn, which, when the last housing season season closed, held 1600 barrels, 8,000 bus. of corn.

I became interested in the farm of the Lodge, for it is one of wide spreading dimensions and of 3,000 generous acres. Bro. Tucker supplied me a beautiful horse, and for hours we explored fields and forest and meadows of this splendid enclosure, without reaching it metes and bounds. There were 140 acres acres in crimson clover at that very moment in full blossom, a glorious sea of gorgeous red.

None of this would be dried and housed for hay, but must needs be kept for land improvement, for which purpose it had been planted, save that which would be cut and threshed for seed. There was a great flock of sheep with a hundred frolicking, gleeful, gladsome lambs; fat cattle with their sleek calves browsed in rich pastures, and swine, even weighty and plump enough now for the slaughter, fed in clover that well nigh hid from view their fat and rotund forms.

There were great corn fields, fresh in fallow from recent planting, two hundred and more acres of them, far spreading, fertile and fragrant. The fields of rich, green, grass and the growing grain, glistening and bending under the evening breezes and a glorious sunset formed a picture that would invite and challenge the skill of an artist. Encircling and guarding the entire length of this estate on its northwestern slope is the rueful, rushing, roaring Roanoke river which drags its great lengths seaward like some mighty, maddened serpent.

I have purposely dwelt upon Granite Lodge not only because it was good and glorious to spend a half day and a night there, but because, though on somewhat a larger scale than most, this represents a type in our time. We of this Southern country are an agricultural people, destined and doomed to that. Much of our very best, most substantial population will remain in the country and on the farm.

So, while we are talking of building and maintaining churches in the towns and cities the country places and peoples are not to be forgotten or passed by. Our country churches are now, and will continue to be the breeding places and the strongholds of what is noblest, best, truest and purest in our moral and religious life.

And this brings to that about which these lines were begun. A wholesome and happy carriage drive, of nine miles, say, with Brother and Sister Tucker, behind a splendid black span, brought Pastor Foster and the writer to Mt. Auburn in time for the annual memorial service Sunday morning. A grove full of people, besides those who packed all available space of the house, greeted us. In the morning Bro. Foster spoke in the grove, the writer in the house; the order being reversed in the afternoon. Flowers for the well-dressed cemetery, and food well-cooked and inviting, were as abundant as the congregations that gathered from this splendid community of gracious and generous souls. For miles and miles they had come, these church loving people had, on buggies, carriages and automobiles, to mingle their flowers and share their generosity and Christian fellowship the one with the other. Mt. Auburn is one of our oldest churches. Its congregations have ever been noted for numbers, for loving loyalty, for its reserved strength, its quiet dignity, its abiding cordiality and Christian fellowship.

The writer had the pleasure of serving this people as pastor for a series of years awhile ago, and it was a rare treat to him to greet again in the flesh some of the best people he has ever known and some of the best friends he has on earth. Brother Foster has been their faithful pastor many years and they deservedly love and honor him for the great and good work he is doing in their behalf.

Nowhere else on earth will you find a friendship as abiding as that which obtains among those who live and labor together in church service and in Christian activity. If you want to see a community at its best, a people at their highest and happiest, you will find them not in their schoolrooms, nor on their play grounds; nor at their political gatherings; but ever and always in their religious assemblies, at their churches, where they meet to mingle their hearts and voices in praising and in worshipping God.

Brother A. G. Hayes and his charming wife took us in charge after the services were over and a two hours' drive brought us to their happy and hospitable home for a happy Sunday evening together, and a night of well earned rest. There is a roof where preachers get the best, and where splendid fellowship makes the hours all too short.

Brother Foster and the writer on this Monday morning, brilliant with a glorious sun, and fragrant with all the glad odors of spring are hurrying back to our homes and loved ones, and these lines, now all too lengthy for reading, but all too short to tell one half the heart feels over the scenes and services of the last two days, must be pardoned and passed by unread by those who, wholly unlike the writer, have no love for fields and farms, and no deep interest in the worship of God by the multitudes at the house of the Lord on a hallowed spot and on the holy Sabbath day.

CURRENT COMMENT.

"Bad" Blockaders.—The Charlotte Evening Chronicle reprinted from The Statesville Landmark last week a most inenviable record of certain recent happenings among "blockaders" in the unfortunate County of Stanley, and put as headline to the narrative, "Bad Blockaders." The immediate interest of The Christian Sun in the incident is to enquire who is responsible for the manufacture of that headline, Bad Blockaders? Was that the Colonel, or was it the Judge? It is worth finding out, for be it the Colonel, or be it the Judge, he ought to be reported to the next Press Association. This headline strikes us, not as redundant merely, but as heartless, even cruel, in fact. We never did believe in striking a man who was down; but either the Colonel or the Judge

A bad blockader! That is unbearable.

A bad blockader! That is unbearable. Has not the limit been reached when it is said of a man that he is a blockader? Why heap further epithets and infamy upon him, by saying "bad." Was a good blockader ever heard of? Does not a whole train of unwholesome, destructive, and blighting influences follow in the wake of every blockade that ever was? Was there ever an institution in any community that produced more agencies and influences for degradation, vice and crime than a blockade whiskey still? Has the Colonel or the Judge ever heard of any other influence than that which was wholly bad, blighting, deadly, destructive, emanating from a blockade still!

Here is pity, gentlemen, genuine, heart-felt pity for any community, anywhere, cursed with one of these death-dealing, character ruining, moral destroying institutions. Besides being the worst they are the most costly nuisances and curses that ever afflicted an unhappy community.

A "bad blockade." Perish the thought. Blockade, that term needs no adjective, adverb, or preposition to give it infamy or stigma. It carries with it all the opprobrium that is necessary to add to it or heap upon it. An institution that turns neighbor against neighbor, sets father at variance with son, counteracts every influence that makes for righteousness, severs church relationships, destroys the peace of the community, makes a man hide, and sneak, and act like as if he had robbed a graveyard, does not need any other epithet. It is already and altogether and infinitely worse than bad.

The Largest Sunday School.—The New York Christian Advocate gave on its front page last week pictures of what is said to be the largest Sunday-school in America. Strange as it may seem, this school is neither in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia or St. Louis, those aggregations of population which usually develop the largest interests and enterprises. This is quite different. The town of this largest American Sunday-school is famous, so far as we know, from the fact only that it has this largest school. Brazil, Indiana, enjoys this honorable and unique distinction, and the First Methodist Episcopal Church (North) is the originator and promoter of it. Here are the figures at present: Cradle Roll, 818; Beginners, 169; Primary, 473; Junior, 334; Intermediate, Senior and Adult, 2,381; Home, 599; officers and teachers, 118. Total, 4,892. One half of the voters of the town are members of the Men's Bible Class taught by the pastor. Fourteen years ago this school had an enrollment of only 228, and the present Superintendent has held his position for twenty-five years. Here is a significant fact, and, in our opinion, gives the great secret of the wonderful success of this greatest of Sunday schools. "When he," the Superintendent, "accepted the position he made a full consecration of himself to God, and, for teachers, gathered around him men and women as devoted as himself."

Here are some regulations that distinguish this wonderful school:

1. No paid socials are allowed.
2. No prizes are offered.
3. No contests between classes or departments are allowed.
4. No person who attends the theatre, dances or plays cards is allowed to teach in the school.
5. No distinctions in class are made; rich and poor meet together.

The history of the making of this largest Sunday school in America reads like fiction, but it is highly interesting and significant.

The Gideons.—Gideon's band, in ancient times, was not so numerous, in the final, but they amounted to somewhat in the testing time. The Gideons of our day count, and are achieving. Their great work of placing a Bible in every room of every hotel in the land goes merrily and marvelously on. The Gideon's band is an organization of commercial travelers—"Drummers"—whose chief aim is to see to it that all the whole number of people who travel and who stop at hotels may have a Bible close by and convenient to read whenever desired. At the great International Sunday school Convention at San Francisco in June the Gideons have planned a unique program for themselves. They propose that twenty-five thousand members of adult Bible classes shall march through the streets, each carrying a Bible, and deposit, after the parade, these Bibles on the platform of the Convention auditorium. These 25,000 Bibles are to remain on the platform as an object lesson during the Convention; then be distributed among the various hotels in the city. One hundred thousand Bibles are to be distributed to the hotels throughout the State of California, immediately following the Convention, by the Gideons. The commercial travelers evidently mean business in this good work.

The above outline might well be the text for many a missionary address.

PONCE CHURCH BUILDING.

During April over $860.44 was added to the building fund. A promise of half the balance needed has been made, provided the rest can be raised by Nov. 1st. Our Ponce church building is badly needed. Give it a boost by sending a contribution to Rev. J. G. Bishop, Mission Treasurer, Dayton, Ohio.

THE MEXICAN DISTURBANCES.

The present Mexican disturbances are affecting the missionary operations in that country. Many of the missionaries are cut off from intercourse with friends at home, and some of the Protestant Christians have joined the insurgents in the fight for liberty. It is feared that the closing down of the wheels of industry, necessitated by war may lead to poverty, riots, robbery and lawlessness. It may render mission schools unable to care for their pupils, and should hostilities not cease soon the lives of missionaries and their families would be in jeopardy.

TO PASTORS.

My Dear Bro. Pastor:

As president of The Young People's General Convention, of The Christian Church South, I am writing to ask your hearty cooperation in helping to carry out the plans and purposes of this Convention, which are as follows: To reach, awaken and utilize church membership, especially our young people, for active, aggressive Christian service. Note our motto: "A Christian Endeavor Society in each church; Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday School." A splendid opportunity for every one to work. My dear brother, you can greatly assist the officers of your convention by laying this matter plainly before your Sunday-school and congregation and urging promptness of action. Also, will you not take one special offering each year for the support of this work, in compliance with the request of said Convention, and forward same to the Treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C.?

Yours to depend on,

L. E. Smith, Pres.

FROM BOSTON.

Yesterday was a day of special interest for the First Church of Boston, Mass. Six new members were received. Two of these were by letter, the others on confession. To Brother Halfaker, who receives by the hundred, the reception of six members would probably seem a commonplace experience, but to the old Boston church which has received perhaps an average of two or three members a year for twenty-five years, six members seem like quite an accession. Just how large the crops in Lima would be if they had a whole acre for a pastor, I do not know, but if a proportionate production could be expected, I suppose by next year they would have about twelve hundred members. But a sailor sees so little of the land, that when it produces anything of a harvest at all he is likely to feel very much gratified. Indeed there is one Sailor I know, who is exceedingly glad to know that Halfaker in Lima has brought forth so abundantly. Nor is his gratitude diminished because of that large yield in Ohio, when he considers the smaller harvest gathered in Boston. May God's choicest blessing rest on Brother Halfaker and the people of Lima. I would rejoice also and pray for pastor and people at Franklin, O., where such a bountiful harvest has been gathered. Will these and others also remember Boston.

THE SANCTITY OF LAW AND ITS MINISTERIAL SANCTION.

Rev. G. O. Lankford.

(At the regular monthly meeting of the ministers' union of Columbus, Ga., held Monday morning, May 8th, at the Y. M. C. A., Rev. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the Rose Hill Christian Church, was leader. The subject that had been assigned to Bro. Lankford was "The Sanctity of Law and Its Ministerial Sanction," on which he which he spoke in part as follows.)

"Torah, the Hebrew term for law, means strictly a directory, authoritative enactment being implied, and its moral authority being emphasized as teaching the truth and giving right direction for the course of life. The Greek, Nomos, indicates a constraining power as imposed and enforced by recognized authority. This term, however, as found in the writings of St. Paul, extends its scope and assumes a more abstract meaning. When used with the article it refers to the Law of Moses, but when used without the article, reference is usually made to some manifestation of law, implying an idea of the powers which act on the will of man, either by compulsion or by force of external motives. The term is occasionally used also to indicate or express some internal principle of action. In this no violence is committed against its general usage. So the word "law" to an American means practically the same as torah and nomos did to the Hebrews and Greeks respectively. Hence it may be said that law is a rule of action established by recognized authority for the purpose of enforcing justice and prescribing duty or obligation in secular, moral and religious affairs.

When men first began to live together in society, they began to make laws. They found that some form of government was needed—some rule of action by which the race might be held in check must be instituted and enforced. As a result, men of the early centuries set themselves to the task of establishing law and order for the primitive families of earth.

Now law, civilization, good government and Christianity are very closely related and all are the offspring of God, without whom neither of which is in any wise possible. Laws may be, as they often are, of human formation and enacted by human genius, but all true legislation is of Divine origin. Man may frame the structure, but the Divine Architect is back of the building as originator of the plan. Between the lines of every good law that has ever been enacted can be seen the fingerprints of God.

In Romans 13:1-2 we find the following: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained by God.

Whoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God." Thus we see that it is of God's own ordering that there should be human laws and governments. Without them, no such thing as order, security, or progress would be known among men. Imperfect, oppressive and unjust as laws often prove to be, they form a part of the order for the government of the world, the imperfections found being due to the imperfections of man's nature in his efforts to carry out the perfect will of God. Hence it may be said that law and government are from God and ordained of God.

For example, let us take the law that was delivered unto the children of Israel. If the narrative given by Moses be not authentic, the whole history of that people resolves itself into nothing more than a riddle. If authentic, as it surely is, Moses was certainly inspired to write the law, for he plainly asserts that it was given by the immediate commission of God. The inspiration of the Mosaic code is the only explanation that can be given for the acquiescence of the Israelites under a burdensome ritual, and that alone accounts for their earnest, persistent attachment to the Scriptures which branded them as a hard-hearted and stiff-necked people. And yet this people, with all their faults and failures and by no means distinguished in art or science, possessed the highest type of religion the world had ever known, and gave to succeeding generations a code of laws unsurpassed from many viewpoints until today, save by the higher law of love as instituted by Jesus Christ. This could not have been of themselves. God alone could lift up such an highway for the nations.

Such was the devout belief of the Israelites themselves. At no time did one of their writers so much as even intimate the possibility of fraud with regard to the origin of the law. As touching this matter, there was a consentient belief on the part of the rival kingdoms, northern Israel and Judah. And still another thing that accords with the Divine origination of the law, is the agreement in all their essential parts between the pentateuch of the Samaritans and that of the Jews. Again, let it be remembered that God was the lawgiver on the throne.

The legislation enacted beneath the cloud that enshrouded Sinai's rugged heights where God and Moses met and talked as if face to face, has retained an ever-widening influence upon the legislatures, congresses and parliaments of the world. Those laws which are characterized in the main by enjoining brotherly kindness, benevolence to strangers, the poor, the fatherless and widows, and restitution for injuries, have left their stamp upon the constitutions and governments of the entire Christian world. This fact is incontrovertible. Neither evolution nor revolution can gainsay or overthrow it. Wherefore it still remains and shall ever be that 'the law of the Lord is perfect,' 'the testimony of the Lord is sure,' 'the statutes of the Lord are right,' 'the commandment of the Lord is pure,' and 'the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'

The laws of our land are copied largely from 'the law of the Lord' and are, therefore, good in the main, and should be respected and held sacred by every American heart. But such is by no means the case. The law is being broken and trodden under the feet of men as a thing of no worth and to be despised and rejected. On the one hand it is openly and flagrantly violated and cunningly and secretly violated on the other. We live in a day when multitudes of men have a little or no regard for law. Many of our courts mean little more than a name. While the principle of disregard for law is largely the same—selfish gratification—everywhere, the attitude of that disregard is different. While one commits an act of violence and crime and doesn't seem to care, another will violate the law and continue his nefarious practices as long as he can pose as a gentleman and thinks there is no danger of being apprehended, seemingly unmindful of the fact that crime is crime, whether committed openly or secretly, whether perpetrated by the dirtiest and most worthless vagabond of the streets or by the well-dressed, highly-educated, society-loving gentleman (?) who lives in a palace and fares sumptuously every day. Recent investigation has revealed the fact that vicious criminals sometimes wear good clothes and appear to be manly fellows, when the opposite is the true situation.

There is urgent and immediate need for some very vigorous, persistent teaching along the line of a sacred regard for law and a rigid enforcement of the same. Marion Lawrence says: 'If we hope to have prohibition, we must train the boys to hate liquor.' He might have said also with equal validity, that if we hope to have a law-abiding citizenship, men must be taught and trained to honor and respect the law and to look upon all forms of law-breaking with disfavor and disdain. I am aware that teaching men the evils and injuries that accompany the violation of law is not the whole solution of the problem of lawlessness, but a most potent factor in the equation. Teaching of the proper kind will go a long way towards driving back the portentous clouds of crime that now threatens the country with fierce storms, if not with terrible destruction. In making the latter statement, I speak not as a pessimist or an alarmist. I am neither. I look forward to the time when our country shall be far better than it is today, when our people shall respect and keep the laws of the land as the ordinances of God. While hopeful of our country's future citizenship, I am not blind to the other side of this very serious question; for there are unmistakable tendencies in our social order today that forebode evil rather than good, darkness rather than light. Indeed the time has come when a voice must be raised and the word of truth unshelved against the oncoming enemy—lawlessness.

The responsibility of this stupendous undertaking falls upon the Christian ministry as upon no other class of men. The teaching that must of necessity be done in no uncertain way, must come mainly through the pulpit and its kindred agencies. The time has been, in certain sections and among certain classes at least, when it was thought that the preacher of righteousness ought to be religiously silent with reference to crime and lawlessness. And that idea is still prevalent to some extent. It is thought by some that the minister of the gospel must talk only of the precious promises of the Bible, the comforts of religion and the eternal joys of the finally faithful, and forever keep his lips closed in reference to a just and righteous enforcement of the law. As a result, many a good preacher has been restrained from giving utterance to the honest, burning convictions of his heart in matters pertaining to a righteous execution of law. This ought not to be. When God calls a man to preach, He calls him to uphold the right and to condemn the wrong. Lawlessness in all its forms, whether committed at noonday or mid-night, on the public highway or in the private office or behind the counter, by the high or low, is wrong and deserves judicious, straight-forward, righteous condemnation from every pulpit in the land. The age in which we live needs it, present-day conditions demand it, and God requires this at our hands. Then let the Christian ministry everywhere and at all times prosecute the task assigned, that of upholding the righteousness of law-enforcement and of vigorously and wisely condemning law-breaking in all its forms. This I conceive to be the ministerial sanction due the laws of our country which are sacred because of their relation to the laws of God."

GOOD FOR SOMETHING.

Little Willie always remained at the bottom of the class because he could go no lower. He was a dunce of the deepest dye. School teachers were in despair about him. Extra tasks availed little, canings less.

"O Willie, Willie!" cried his teacher after twenty minutes inefficient explanation, "what do you think your head is for?"

Willie thought it was another of those awful questions and pondered perseveringly.

"Please, mum," he explained at last, "I 'speek it's to keep me collar on."—Selected.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The revival at our Raleigh church closed last Sunday night after continuing two weeks. There were about forty conversions. Five united with the church last Sunday.

—Did you see the directory of all the ministers of the Southern Christian Convention in last week's Sun? If not, and it should be desired for reference, better clip and paste in your Annual.

—Last Sunday was Mother's Day, and was quite generally observed in word and in worship, and also by wearing the white flower as an emblem. We saw more white flowers on the lapels of coats last Sunday than we remember to have seen before.

—We are pleased to supply Bibles, on orders from Sun readers, and when so supplied are gratified to have a word like this: Wakefield, Va., May 9. Dear Bro: I have received the Bible ordered of you all right and am much pleased with it. Yours truly, J. H. Birdson.

—The war in Mexico seems to assume a more aggressive aspect on the part of the insurgents, the town of Juarez having been taken from the federals by storm, some lives being lost, but the federal troops surrendering to the rebels without obstinate resistance. "When President Diaz resigns the revolution will stop" is now the cry.

—Rev. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., is assisting Pastor M. L. Bryant in a most happy and successful meeting at the Main Street Christian Church, Berkley, Va. At the services last Sunday there were about thirty conversions and fifteen united with the church at the morning service. The meetings continue this week, and the interest increases.

—The Summer Bible Conference, Northfield, Mass., promises to be of great interest and influence this year. This conference has ever wrought mightily to keep alive, and active, the spirit of evangelism, ever since its founding by the late D. L. Moody, and the thousands who have attended its sessions attest its great worth and merit.

—Durham, Suffolk, Berkley, and possibly others of our city churches are in the midst of revivals this week. May the harvest be rich and abundant. The soul of our religion is evangelism and that church and community are fortunate indeed that enjoy a spiritual awakening. God bless the anxious pastors in their earnest endeavor for the salvation of the unsaved.

—The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has issued a new Tuberculosis Directory from which we glean that 600 cities and towns of the U. S. are engaged in the war against consumption, and that on April 1, there were nearly 1,500 different agencies at work in this crusade, an increase of nearly 700 per cent in seven years.

—We print elsewhere an excellent paper by Rev. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga., on "The Sanctity of Law and Its Ministerial Sanction." The address was delivered before the Minister's Union of Columbus Monday, May 8, and was copied in full by The Daily Ledger of that city. It is worthy, meritorious, fruitful, and should have wide reading.

—Dr. W. W. Staley began a series of meetings in the Suffolk Church last Sunday and will continue them as interest demands. Singing-evangelist Charles N. Butler and his splendid wife are engaged as singers and Mrs. Butler's sister, Miss Andrews, as accompanist. We count Suffolk church fortunate in securing the services of these efficient and consecrated workers. They are a trio of artists.

—We note that Mr. Geo. F. Whitely, Smithfield, Virginia, is a candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney of Isle of Wight County, and is making a vigorous campaign, in which every student of Elon College in the days while George was taking his college course here, will wish for him victory. George was successful, popular and efficient as a student and has deservedly won a position of usefulness and influence as Attorney-at-Law.

—Rev. H. E. Rountree, Waverly, Va., May 15, writes:

Sunday, May 14, was observed at Waverly and Spring Hill churches at "Mother's Day." Special program of the Sunday School at Waverly was very attractive and impressive. It was a sweet service to all.

At Spring Hill it was observed by every one wearing a white rose. Special references were made in the sermon. The presence of the Holy Spirit was distinctly felt.

—A busy pastor writes under date of Feb. 11, "Can you furnish me with the names and addresses of all ministers in the Southern Christian Convention? The Annual does not give them and I have need of them at once." Yes, sir, dear Brother, we just anticipated you by a day. Look in The Christian Sun of May 10 and you will find the directory desired, and a statement of why this was not in the Annual. Hereafter this shall not be omitted if we can possibly avoid it.

—The Virginian Pilot of Norfolk, carrying in its columns Monday A. M., May 15, a cut of Rev. J. W. Harrell, and an extended outline of his Sunday's sermon, remarks:

"Rev. J. W. Harrell, pastor of the Washington street Christian church, signaled Mother's Day yesterday morning by preaching a special sermon appropriate to the occasion, on the subject, "Mother's Influence," taking his text from Exodus, 2:3. His remarks, which were heard by a large congregation, were entirely in keeping with an occasion which the whole country observed universally yesterday."

—"The blackberry, scorned by our forefathers as plebein, is coming into appreciation as one of God's greatest blessings to the country. The blackberry and the apple form the healthiest food combination known." So the Charlotte Evening Chronicle says. Surely the Colonel has forgotten buttermilk in his short list of healthiest food. Once it was scorned as was the blackberry, but it has fought a glorious fight and won a noble victory. They are drinking buttermilk now in the cafe parlors, at the soda fountains, in the Pullman diners, and even at pink teas. Friends praise it, the fashionable applaud it, doctors advise it, and everybody is drinking it. Great is buttermilk.

—Miss Bertha Iseley, daughter of our brother, Rev. A. F. Iseley, and one of Elon's good graduates, has had a most happy and success year's teaching as First Assistant in the St. Andrews High School, St. Andrews, Fla. The school is just off St. Andrews Bay, one of the most beautiful places on all the Florida coast. The school closed on May 17 and Miss Iseley returns home for the summer vacation, bringing with her impressions of tasks well done, sceneries beautiful to think on, and a year well spent in efficient, appreciated services. Miss Bertha was a thorough and conscientious student, and we are not surprised that she is winning success and honor in the class room.

The General Conference of Christian Workers will begin this year on the 4th of August and continue through the 20th. Among the speakers already secured are Rev. John A. Hutton, M. A., Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross, M. A., Rev. Charles R. Erdman, D. D., Rev. John Henry Strong, D. D., Rev. James A. Francis, D. D., Rev. Henry C. Mabie, D. D., Bishop A. S. Lloyd, Rev. R. A. Torrey, Mr. F. B. Smith, Rev. Ozora S. Davis, D. D., Rev. J. Stuart Holden, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., Rev. W. S. Jacoby, Rev. Robert F. Y. Pierce, and Rev. George L. Cady. Programs of these various Conferences may be obtained from Mr. Ambert G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

—The United States Supreme Court has confirmed the decision of a lower court in maintaining that the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly in restraint of trade and this gigantic corporation must be dissolved within six months from date. This is a sweeping decision and its consequences will be awaited and watched with eagerness. Other large corporations are to have a hearing on their particular merits or demerits and are to be dealt with individually by the same tribunal.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The Annual Music Recital by those taking certificates from the Music Department was given in the college chapel last Thursday evening. The following participated: Mrs. J. L. Foster, Contralto, Miss Kathleen Long, Soprano, Miss Beulah Foster, Pianist, Miss Lois Davidson, Pianist. Mr. Edgar Hines, Tenor, Mr. Russel Campbell, Baritone. The program was: Prologue "Pagliacci" by Mr. Campbell. Pre-ambule to "Carnival" Op 9 by Miss Davidson. A rendimi "Mitrane" by Mrs. Foster. Sing me a song of a lad that is gone, Marguerita, and Were my songs with wings provided, by Mr. Hines. Le Cavalier Fantastique by Miss Foster. Miss Long followed with Heroliade, Mr. Campbell with Ideals, Creole Love song by Hines. Etude melodie, Perpetual motion by Miss Foster. Bel raggio "Semiramide" by Miss Long, Condoliera by Miss Davidson, and finally Mrs. Foster rendered The Autumnal Gale, by Greig.

The evening was a great success in every respect, every number on the program being rendered in a manner which reflected credit not only upon those participating, but upon the department as well. The large auditorium was well filled with friends of the village and from surrounding towns. These events are always looked forward to each year by the lovers of music in the college community and the success of this year should be a source of congratulation to Miss Wilson, the efficient director of the Music Department.

Saturday evening the young ladies of the Y. W. C. A., assisted by the young ladies of the faculty, gave an entertainment in the gymnasium at West Dormitory, with the hope of bringing about an increase of interest in the Y. W. C. A. Work.

Everything around the college is taking on a commencement air and we look forward to a great occasion. Saturday evening, June 3rd, will be given the Senior Class Exercises. Sunday at 11:30 Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, will preach the baccalaureate sermon. Monday evening, June 5th, will be the program of the Society representatives. Tuesday morning Mr. Chief Justice Clark will deliver the annual Literary address at 11:30 A. M. Tuesday afternoon will occur the annual recital of the Department of Expression. Tuesday evening, June 6, will occur the annual recital of the Music Department. Wednesday the regular graduating exercises. Wednesday afternoon the reunion of the literary societies and Art exhibit. Wednesday evening the Alumni address and reunion, the address to be delivered by Prof. W. A. Harper of the Department of Latin in this institution.

Miss Lora Johnson, of Cardenas, N. C., is spending a few days on the Hill with her sister, Miss Lillian Johnson.

The college community was delighted on last Sunday by having with us Dr. D. A. Long, Graham, N. C., who preached at the eleven o'clock hour. Dr. Long's theme was the Life and Character of Paul, and his discourse will long be remembered by all who had the pleasure of hearing him.

Dr. Moffitt and Prof. Lawrence went over to Union Ridge last Sunday to attend their annual Second Sunday All Day Meeting, and report a pleasant time.

Prof. W. A. Harper and Rev. A. T. Banks attended the memorial exercises at Amelia Christian Church, where Prof. Harper addressed the congregation.

Examination schedule has been posted and the students are preparing themselves for the finish of a good year's work. Commencement will soon be here. From the reports of the various professors, this has been one of the best years in the history of the college.

On last Saturday the band played at the Memorial service in Burlington. Quite a number of people were present and several able addresses were delivered.

NORFOLK LETTER

The past week has been a good one for the Third Church. Thursday night there was held a social and "get acquainted" meeting of the members and friends of the church. A committee met all as they entered the church and pinned on each one a neat little bow of ribbon, pink to designate members and blue the non-members. A program was rendered which included the burning of the $1,000 note which was recently paid off. And I might say just here in addition to what I said in a recent letter about the raising of the money for that purpose, that we not only got the $1,000 we were after, but $30. to pay the interest with and $5.65 more—besides a neat little beginning on the payment due one year hence which will be the last.

As the Sunday school and Ladies' Aid Society took an active part in the raising of the amount the note was cut in pieces and representatives of the Society and of each class were given a part which, with the lights turned off and only the glow of some candles, were passed to the pastor and Supt., and they burned them.

Sunday morning we broke all records in Sunday school. Had 119 present. This being mother's day, the Supt. and his wife, in memory of their mothers had supplied white carnations so that every one in the school was provided with one.

At the close of the morning service nine members were received. Mrs. J. A. Barrett and Pressley Barrett, J. C. Barrett and wife, Miss Annie Marshburn, Miss Mary Bowden, Mr. Fields and Mr. Davenport. They come some from the Christian Church—Methodist, Baptist and Disciples, again giving a very striking practical example of what the Christian Church stands for in the fellowship of all Christian people. Bro. Hanson has been here just 11 months. The church had 56 members when he came. It now has 89, showing an increase of 33 nearly all of whom are adults—not a bad showing I think. As I see it the prospects grow brighter day by day for us to hope for a good strong church here in the not far distant future.

At the night service Bro. Hanson preached on "Mother's of the Bible." A "Sailor boy" was with us and sang very effectively "My Mother's Prayer," and at the close the writer gave the story of and then sang "Tell Mother I'll be There."

A good meeting is reported in progress at both the South Norfolk church, and at the Main St. Church, Norfolk. The pastor, Dev. D. A. Keys, is doing the preaching at South Norfolk and Rev. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, at the Main St. church. At the latter place thirty conversions were reported as the result of the day Sunday with fifteen additions to the church.

Rev. J. W. Harrell preached a strong sermon on the subject, "Mother's Influence."

At the monthly meeting of the Missionary Society at the Temple, Mrs. J. A. Barrett and Miss Susie Turpin were the principal speakers, speaking on the subject of "Porto-Rican Mission," and the Children of Porto Rico.

Don't forget that if you don't hurry you may be too late to have a share in raising the money for that church house in Ponce. Better begin next Sunday. You'll regret it if you don't.

THE LOVE IN THE DEED.

It is not the deed we do,

Though the deed be ever so fair,

But the love that the dear Lord locketh for,

Hidden with lowly care

In the heart of the deed so fair.

The love is the priceless thing,

The treasure our treasures must hold,

Or even the Lord will take the gift,

Or tell the worth of the gold

By the love that cannot be told.

Behold us, the rich and the poor,

Dear Lord, in Thy service draw near;

One consecrateth a precious coin,

One droppeth only a tear;

Look, Master, the love is here!

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.
 Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

OUR CONVENTION'S MOTTO.

When the first session of the Young People's General Convention met two years ago this month, the need was felt for a definite standard toward which to work. Those present discussed the matter thoroughly and prayerfully and adopted a motto as follows: "A Christian Endeavor Society in every Church: Teacher Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday School." With this end in view, the Convention set to work. We have not achieved it—will not in the next biennium, but we are pushing, forging, toward it. Ultimately I hope we shall realize it or come so near to it that we shall need to adopt a new motto to give many of our churches and Sunday schools an ideal to work to and achieve.

I do not, of course, know all the reasons that induced the Convention to adopt this watch-word. For my own part I felt that these three things were the desiderata most needed to place us in the front-line of religious work for young people. I do not mean by this that I would limit the work of the convention to these three lines of endeavor only, but that I would give them the emphasis.

That the Young People's General Convention does stand for other things than these is evidenced by the standing committees created by it. These are as follows: On Home Department and Cradle Roll, on The Laymen's Missionary Movement, on Moral and Civic Reform, on The Sunday School. Those who remember the time when the head-line of the Young People's Department in the Sun went entirely across the page will recall that not only was the motto given, but there were also added these significant words: "Devoted to the interests of Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, Missions, Home Department, Cradle Roll, Primary Work, Laymen's Missionary Movement, Teacher Training, Ladies' Aid Societies, and Moral and Civic Righteousness." And it has been the policy of the department to stand for, advocate, and propagate all these ideas in every legitimate and helpful manner. Personally I think we need a special standing committee on Primary Work. I think I may also state that the failure to appoint such a committee was an oversight; for the convention put itself on record as favoring the things for which Primary Union stands.

Many find fault with the motto on the ground that it is not inclusive enough. Let these friends remember that a motto to be effective must be short, definite, to the point. "One thing at a time and that done well." Many friends, on the other hand, would induce us to drop two of the three items of the present motto. All of us cannot have our way, but we can all work definitely and enthusiastically for the present motto, which contains nothing objectionable and is about as lengthy as such a motto should be. This will not hinder us in our efforts to advance the interests of Cradle Rolls, Home Departments, Missions, Ladies' Aid, Primary, Junior, and Intermediate work, and Moral and Civic Righteousness.

Atlantic City, 1911, and The Christians.

Rev. E. A. Watkins, our Christian Endeavor Secretary for the A. C. C., is certainly leaving nothing undone to have the Christian Church well and properly represented in the great "Atlantic City, 1911" Convention of Christian Endeavor.

The denominational rallies will occur on Monday, July 10, 1911. Our church will give the following program at that time:

1. "The Outlook from the Secretary's point of view," by Rev. E. A. Watkins, Secretary.
2. "Training for Effective Service," by Rev. McD. Howsare, Norfolk, Va.
3. "Young People and the Church," by Prof. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.
4. "The Needed Institutional Work by our Young People," by Rev. A. W. Lightbourne, Ph. D., Dover, Delaware.

News from the Far South.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, Columbus, Ga., writes as follows:

We have recently organized our Bible class in the Rose Hill Sunday school. The work starts off well. We have been organized only three weeks. We find the interest as well as the attendance growing. The prospects are good for a much larger class.

In the Norfolk Third Church.

A flourishing Christian Endeavor Society for Young People has recently been organized in Norfolk, Park Place, or the Third Church. The city papers took cognizance of it and have since published the program of the sessions. We should like to see this Church also institute a Junior Christian Endeavor Society for ages from seven to fourteen. These are critical years in the religious life of childhood and experience has taught others, and we should profit by it, that nothing helps hold children of this age loyal to Christ so much as a properly managed Junior Christian Endeavor Society.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The Young People's Convention of the W. N. C. Christian Conference meets this year with the Christian Church at Liberty, on Friday before the last Sunday in July. We want to make this a great convention, and we can do so if we begin working it up in time. Those who are on the various committees should begin to think about their reports. It would be a good idea for the chairman of each committee to write his report (or rather do what he can without the other members of the committee) before he gets to the convention. The standing committees of the convention are as follows: Executive—Rev. J. F. Morgan, Prof. R. C. Cox, Rev. R. L. Williams, Prof. F. M. Wright, Mr. Joe Stout, and Mr. W. C. Floyd. Sunday School—Dr. P. H. Fleming, Rev. T. E. White, Mr. R. W. York. Christian Endeavor—Rev. L. I. Cox, Miss. Affie Griffin, and Miss Blanche Teagne. Organized Classes—Rev. J. W. Patton, Prof. R. C. Cox, and Mr. B. B. Martin. Teacher Training—Miss Affie Griffin, Mr. L. W. Fogleman and Mr. S. D. Scott. Home Missions—Mr. S. D. Scott, Mr. Hiram Freeman and Mr. L. E. Brady. Music—Rev. R. L. Williamson, Miss Emma Andrews and Miss Ada Humble. Tabulating—Mr. O. T. Hatch, Mr. B. B. Martin and Miss Affie Griffin.

We want to ask each pastor who has work in the bounds of the Western Conference to co-operate with us in making the 1911 convention a great one. Bro. Pastor, tell your people about the convention. Get your Sunday-school superintendent to have delegates elected to the convention, and see to it that they are present when the convention meets.

All together, brethren, for a good convention.

J. F. Morgan, Pres.

C. E. TOPIC FOR MAY 28—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Missions in Japan and Korea, Acts 7:1-14. Let the Missionary Committee lead.

The Scripture: Let one member of the committee read and another comment and show wherein Thessalonica and Berea are like Japan and Korea from the missionary's stand-point.

Written Work: Have essays on the lives of great missionaries who have spent their lives in Japan or Korea, as Joseph Hardy Neesima, Dr. Griffis, etc. It would also be well to have essays dealing with curious customs in the countries. Be sure to have an essay or address on our own work in Japan.

The Leader: What is the purpose of missions? To turn the world upside down, to get the right side up and the wrong side down. Is this being accomplished in Korea and Japan? Yes, if we can rely on reports that come to us, and they are reliable and worthy of all acceptance. We are told that Korea has already been evangelized, which means that there is no Korean who has not heard of Christ. To be sure there is much yet to be done and it will take time and money and men and consecration to do it, but all these will be forthcoming. The record of achievement in Japan is well known. There are about 100,000 Protestant Christians, 800 missionaries, 1,300 Japanese pastors and helpers, and nearly 200 Christian schools. While 30,000,000 Japanese have no definite knowledge of Christ, yet practically all have heard of Him and by the message of His gospel the Sunrise Kingdom is being marvellously blessed.

THE CLAIMS OF PRIMARY UNION.

(By Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Superintendent of Primary Union for the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference.)

Primary Union is rich in possibilities both for the child and for the Sunday school. It has not yet evolved into a perfect system, but it has been sufficiently tried for us to be able to say that it is safely passing out of the experimental stage. The child's needs Primary Union because of its AIM; the Sunday school needs it because of the work it undertakes. It has been said, "Modern pedagogy is now seeking a clear knowledge of the nature and needs of the child, that the truth may be selected and fitted to him." This is perhaps the best definition of the aim and work of Primary Union.

No other word known to the human tongue contains such vastness of meaning as the word God. Next to it is the word Life. The Bible is God's truth and it teaches life, eternal life, and how to obtain it. "This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." How can we know God and Jesus Christ if we know not the Bible which tells of God and His will, and Jesus and his work? To the Sadducees Jesus said, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God.

The best of which earthly Christians are capable and the most that can be required of them is to do God's will, which finds fulfillment in the work of the Church. Jesus came to earth and established the Church. He said, come down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of Him that sent me. Because it is the one divine institution founded by Christ according to the will of God in and through which we can live the life that the Bible teaches, the Church is destined to go forward. None of us believe that it is going to recede or even stand still; and further, the fact will ever remain that the Church must be perpetuated through the child. There can be no other source of supply for its future existence. This is why the new order prevails; why modern education accords to the child central position and the right to receive first consideration.

People are reading and studying the Bible more and more. This is an age of wider and deeper religious activity and broadening opportunity. We have observed the ever-increasing effort which is being made by religious leaders to place within the reach of Christian Endeavorers, members of Organized Classes, Sunday school teachers, etc., the very best means and helps to an intelligent and comprehensive study of the Scriptures. Why is this being done? Is it not because the church considers a knowledge of the Bible the most essential part of Christian education? and if it is the most essential part, ought not we to make it fundamental with reference to Sunday school teaching? Paul says that a knowledge of the Scriptures is able to make us wise unto Salvation. He also says that Timothy knew the Holy Scriptures from a child. The need of salvation is not a condition to be reached at maturity or at adolescence, and the means by which to supply that need should be as freely and fully provided for the young as for the old. The responsibility for placing this means within reach of the young child rests with the Sunday School teacher. Children whom we do not now save for God we must later try to rescue from Satan. The former were the easier task. "Cure" is not nearly so certain as "prevention" is wise and safe.

In the kind of instruction offered to the young we believe that the Sunday school, to great extent, has been mistaken in judgment and misguided in effort. Its attitude has been suggestive of the belief that spiritual need of the child is of little consequence until he has arrived at the age of twelve or thirteen years. This admission is a grave one, but the error it discloses is still more grave, accounting as it most probably does for the fact that so many of our young people, especially boys, leave the Sunday school at this age and are lost to the Church. The milk of the Word having been administered to them in adulterated form, they discover the cheat, decide that religious life as demonstrated in the Sunday school is a "humbug," and in the fairness and frankness of their manly natures openly rebel against such insincerity. Because such a course establishes unfair opinion as to what the Sunday school exists for, leads to irreverence of the institution and of God Himself, and saddest of all, to the loss of souls, it is not less than travesty upon the high purpose and mission of the Sunday school to deal with the child thus playfully as if he were but a toy to be handled in some senseless way merely for amusement. Think we because the child is not able to define a particular need that it does not exist, that he is not affected by it, or that we to whose care he has been committed for religious instruction have less of duty to perform? Why should we not suppose that at the age of five or six or seven, the soul-hunger is beginning to be aroused, and why refuse or withhold the kind of food that will satisfy the character of the hunger experienced? If a child physically hungry ask an egg would we give him a scorpion? If he be hungering for soul-food must we make the fatal mistake of offering that which will not only check religious impulse but counteract it by augmenting natural proneness to things that are worldly and which if indulged in will ultimately deaden spiritual sensibility? The child born today is no less an integral part of creation than was Adam or Eve, and no less an heir of salvation. The long continued operation of the laws and processes of the reproduction of human life does not in any sense impair those laws, weaken individuality, lessen power to discharge duties in relation to God. Every child has a soul to be saved and following his own salvation a mission to fulfill in the saving of other souls. Viewed in his natural and true relationship to God and to the holy scriptures, there can be no justifiable grounds for assuming, even negatively, that the child's spiritual nature and needs deserve no attention until the age of twelve or past.

At what time in a child's life he is first capable of physical training and mental susceptibility is not disputed. The babe scarce a month old may be taught to lie quietly and wait patiently; and religious inculcations or their opposite may be even parental. But at what time his training and education should begin on the part of the church may be determined only from the time the church acquires oversight of the child and opportunity to exercise its acknowledged supervision. This may be generally reckoned at from three to five years old. The mission of the Sunday school is to teach God. God is love, therefore the discipline of the Sunday school is love-persuading rather than law-compelling. Without taking into account parental influence and authority we assume that the child five years old comes to Sunday school because he loves to come. He loves to come because he is told it is the place to learn to be good. He comes with a soul need of which he is not entirely unconscious although he is not able to define it and does not understand it. As yet he has not imbibed much that is evil. His strongest impressions are that he is mother's little boy and God's little boy, that they both love him and desire him to be good. His instinct is to be happy. He has a vague sort of feeling that to be happy he must be good and that there are forces operating against his being good, with which, by the help of mother and God and the Sunday school all on his side, he has a fight to wage, and in his naturally innocent and unsuspecting state he imagines himself safely on the winning side. It is this delusion or dormant sense of danger that makes the teacher's duty so imperative. Satan is an insidious foe. He does not wait until the child is five years old, or even three, but is busy all the while and has gained much ground before the church has even put in a claim. There is just one single instrument of Christian warfare powerful enough to overcome the wicked designs of the Evil One, and it behooves us to see that every child is properly armed with this mighty weapon of defence—The Sword of the Spirit. It will never fail; with it we can put to rout the very hosts of Satan and his angels, but we must be skilled in its use, know how to strike with surest aim.

Quoting Paul again—All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, etc., that we may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Do we wish our children to have salvation and to be qualified for soul winning? If we do, according to references cited 2nd Tim. 3:15-17, we have but to teach the Scriptures; but we must teach them in a rational, comprehensive, definite way, a way that will lead the child to understand God in his matchless goodness, his love, and his care, and above all things we must begin this teaching at the right time and pursue it in the order compatible with the child's natural and spiritual development. We all agree that the most impressionable period of human life, that in which the mind is best fitted to memory work is between five and twelve years, the period which includes the primary and junior grades of the Sunday school. If learning the Scriptures is neglected at this formative time of life, the loss never can be fully made good. Sunday school teachers too often fail because they are trying to teach that which they themselves have not learned—the Bible. This should be avoided in the coming generation of teachers. The Sunday school scholar has achieved most and best if while learning to recite Scripture and acquiring knowledge of Bible text and fact he has gained the additional information of understanding how to use his knowledge effectively. Incompatible teaching, though it be ever so good, will not accomplish such ends. What we teach the child about the Bible is hardly more important than when and how we teach it. The beginning is the only natural and proper place to begin with the beginner. A child's first lesson should be concerning God as the Father of all, the Creator of all things, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, the greatest and best of which is the gift of his own Son. Such texts as "O Lord thou art our Father," "He loved us and sent his Son," "Suffer little children to come unto me," with appropriate stories, illustrated, suggest and exemplify the kind of first lessons that Primary Union would recommend; lessons that will catch the child's mind and thought at its earliest unfolding and lead him on not by ways mysterious and unfathomable where the overwhelming majesty and might and power of God may be felt only in chilling blasts, but through the pleasant paths of God's garden of nature where gentle breezes and soft twilight whisper and soothe; where the warm sunshine makes glad, and bright flowers lift their heads and seem to speak in cheeriest tone; where tall grasses and murmuring streams and waving trees and happy birds attract and invite, and by the sway and dominion of his unbounded love make sure to woo and win.

We have tried to show that the highest Christian attainment is to do God's will; that God's will has its expression in the work of the Church; that the church is extended and perpetuated only through the child: that the child is prepared for Christian service and responsibility only by a thorough knowledge of the Bible; that during their best and most susceptible years children have not had opportunity equal to other classes of individuals and which it is their privilege to possess along lines pertaining to a rational knowledge of the Scriptures; and that Primary Union is peculiarly fitted to fill this important place, or, to use a term more significant, space, in the child's life and in the Sunday school.

In presenting these reasons for more thorough Bible knowledge and for saner and safer methods in teaching the Scriptures to young children in order to secure to them benefits to which they are entitled and which never again will be ours to extend under equally as favorable conditions, we wish to be perfectly practicable in what we propose. While advocating rationality in Scripture teaching we would not be so irrational as to stir up the eagle's nest, disturb the easy going equilibrium of the average Sunday school, and offer no remedy for the imaginary hurt, present no way nor means by which to improve conditions and secure desired results. Primary Union affords a most excellent way and we are here to urge its acceptance by the body.

Some one may ask, do we mean to change that the system of uniform Sunday School lessons now in use is an irrational system? No. The Sunday school is from the cradle to the grave and the lessons may not be prepared with special adaptability to any class or age of individuals; they must of necessity be of medium scope and of general interest. We do mean to say that they are often inappropriate to primary scholars, and always inadequate. We would not plead for anything to supplant the uniform lessons; they are admirably adapted to the higher grades of the Sunday school and they occupy an honestly earned and well deserved place of long standing too universally recognized and endorsed for our feeble judgment to attack their merit or wisdom of their use. But if found to be a misfit and insufficient in the lower grades, the fact that they are well suited to the higher grades is no just reason why they should constitute a trust, hold the monopoly, or relegate to themselves papal power and position.

We re-affirm, the elementary grades of the Sunday School are inadequately supplied by the system of lessons now in use. For the best good of the children and of the Sunday school we need to supplement these lessons. The recitation period for adults occupies about thirty to thirty-five minutes. Ten to twenty minutes is all the time a primary or junior teacher can use on the regular lesson, so there is a period of ten to twenty-five minutes, according to grade, to be filed in some way. We are honestly proposing what we believe to be the best way. But supplemental lessons will fail not in the same way, but just as surely as present lessons fail, without a better classification of scholars. Lessons planned to meet the spiritual needs of the pupil at each stage of his development cannot be successfully presented by any teacher to a class of children whose intellectual powers are very widely different. This declaration needs only to be made to be accepted as true, and it gives rise to a demand which is well met in Primary Union, because Primary Union provides the kind of lessons which in themselves make possible a natural classification of scholars. Conditions relative to classification as they exist in the average Sunday school may not be generally understood. The prevailing situation is fifteen to twenty-five children from three to thirteen years of age jumbled together in one class and taught by one teacher; and if the school is large conditions are not different, just more classes of the same kind. We recall several schools visited in the interest of Primary Union where we found forty to fifty children in two classes divided simply according to preferences, each class representing every age of childhood from three years old through the seventh grade in public school.

We believe it is not necessary to supplement this plain statement of facts by any stronger plea for better classification. We believe that all will see the advisability of, and readily sanction and endorse the graded idea for primary and junior scholars; we need merely to use discretion in putting new methods into operation. If there are schools that see fit to assert an independence, as some will, and oppose the work of the Primary Union, give them time; but do not withhold the opportunity for increased interest and better service from schools that want Primary Union and must continue to suffer without it. Great reforms are neither of

My Dear Children and Friends:

We are glad to have so many nice letters from the children this week. Give us as many more next week. Also pleased to have such a nice Monthly Sunday-school offering, which is beginning to carry a nice part of our running expenses: and we especially ask the children—our brethren and sisters—and our brother pastors to read the letter of our new cousin, Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., and see the amount he sends in from Beulah church and Sunday-school, and that they propose feeding and clothing a child; and further that Bro. Hunt proposes to try to get all his churches to make a Monthly Offering! Thank you, Bro. Hunt, for your letter, and we feel sure that we shall hear from your field often. We have felt that you were deeply interested in the orphanage ever since you gave such opportunity when Uncle Jim was in Alabama and Georgia, 18 months ago. Tell the good people of Beulah that we thank them so much for their help and that they propose to feed and clothe a child. What school, or church, or friend will be the next to join this list? Bethel, Wake Co., N. C., and Oakland, Va. join our Monthly Offering force this week; thus from week to week we are increasing our regular income and if the schools continue as the past two months we will have 100 schools at the end of 1911 that will be making the Monthly Offering and our income placed on a more solid basis

We had quite an extensive trip first Sunday in May and Monday after. We visited the field of Rev. Killis Roach, Dyke, Va., just at the foot of the Blue Ridge and then up one half mile of the top.

On first Saturday and Sunday we preached at Mt. Olivet. Here we had nice audience Saturday night and large audience Sunday at 11 a. m., and fair audience at night. They heard about the orphanage and the work with deep interest and contributed about $27.00 for same; and we feel that more will be paid in a short time, as they more fully realize our immediate need. On Monday, 7 a. m., we started up the mountain on buggy to High Point Christian Church in company with Bro. Jolene Marshall, who so kindly met us at R. R. and carried us around. We rode, and walked, and walked and rode, and arrived at the church about 11 a. m., and it began to rain immediately. We had about 40 people present and they gave about $36.50. This was the most liberal offering we have yet received from so small a congregation. After Uncle Jim had told them about the Orphanage and the work they "spoke out in meeting" and said that's a good cause and we will help it. Nearly every man in the house gave from $3.00 down to 50 cents, and they said they were going to send more. (The cash reports from these churches will come later). The people were kind to us; and attentive and seemed to appreciate the sermons. We feel that this is a good territory for Dr. Atkinson, Editor of the Christian Sun to visit. Many asked about him, though only a few take the Sun. We had dinner Monday, May 8th at the home of sister Crawford, way up on the mountain. This was the highest dinner we have ever eaten and the highest we have ever been. We cannot describe the scenery, though the trees were not yet in their greatest beauty. One thing impressed us, the enormous waste of timber and wood on the mountains. How many shiver with cold and often freeze in town and city and yet millions of cords of wood die and waste on the mountains. This was our first visit to this section, and we shall be glad to go again. Tuesday 5 a. m. Bro. Z. Marshall and myself started for the R. R. where I arrived at 9:30 and thence for Greensboro, N. C., and home Wednesday, May 10, 8 a. m.

Donations.

Bro. T. E. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., 1 box splendid oranges; Mrs. Joe Person Remedy Co., Kittrell, N. C., 6 one dollar bottles Mrs. Joe Person's Blood Medicine; Foster Shoe Co., Burlington, N. C., 1 box neck ties, 9 prs. socks.

The children enjoyed the oranges and said "they just knew Mr. Brickhouse sent them." We thank you, brother, for the good things which children love so much.

The gift of Mrs. Joe Persons Medicine is result of inquiry about eczema and will be used for same as one of our girls has this trouble. We are very grateful to this company for their kind consideration and liberal gift.

The Foster Shoe Co. often give us articles of wear which our boys and girls can use to good advantage. The ties and socks will all be used and thank you too.

Three weeks from this writing and June will be here, and we have heard from only about one fiftieth of the churches in answer to the call made. Two pastors have been heard from. Why this inactivity? There is not $1.00 assessment on any church for the Orphanage; and our request that all pastors give an opportunity for individual subscriptions from $10.00 down was an honest and earnest desire to pay off all indebtedness on the Orphanage by June the first. The pastors could easily do this to help us, for it is simply impossible for the superintendent to visit more churches than he is visiting; besides the pastor can do just as well as a visiting brother. Will you help us now?

Yours for service, Uncle Jim.

Dear Cousins:

I guess you would like to hear about my work here in the home. I have to attend to Ned, the ox. He will be three years old this summer and he is getting so big I could hardly get a collar big enough for him. Mr. Watson made me a cart for him and I was hauling pine straw one day and I went to dump it and broke it and it is in the shop now. I will have to go after it so I can haul sand to build the silo which we will begin tomorrow, so I will have to hurry to get the sand ready.

Willie Knott.

Wadley, Ala., Route 3, May 8, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

In behalf of the Church and Sunday-school at Beulah, I will write to the corner. It is true I am a grown up Cousin, but when I tell you cousins what news I have for you, I think you will give me a place in your circle.

We have decided at Beulah to give something every month to the Orphanage. We have a list amounting to $5.58 per month from this church which is to be paid every first Sunday.

It is our purpose to raise in a systematic way enough to support one child in the home. I shall endeavor to get all my churches to contribute monthly to this fund. I am sending with this letter, money order to the amount of $19.69, less 10 cents for postage. Some of our people have paid all their pledges, so our next remittance will not be so large.

G. D. Hunt.

Boykins, Va., May 6, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Guess you think it's high time now to hear from little brother and me, as we have waited so long to write. Are the children going bare footed yet? Mother won't let us pull our shoes off yet as she says it's most too cool, but I don't think so as I see some other children with their shoes and sockings off, but that's all right, brother and I have us a good time playing just the same. He has the thrush now, and it bothers him mighty bad. I hope he will soon get well of that so he won't fret so bad. We enclose half dollar for our dues

Your little boys,

Carroll and Ralph Barnes.

Our little ones are at last all bare-footed, Carroll and Ralph, and they are happy.

Manry, Va., May 8, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am a little late this month but have been busy. My school has closed now. I drew the medal in my class. There was one given on each spelling class. I send my dues for May. With a lot of love to the little cousins,

Amy Morris.

Glad you were so fortunate, Amy, as to win your medal. Hope it will inspire you to gain greater victories.

Sanford, N. C., May 8, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my letter and send my dime for May. Uncle Jim, school is out now and I am glad. I am tired of going to school. It was raining Friday so we could not have our May festival, but we will have it later.

I close with much love to you and the cousins.

Your niece,

Annie Pearl Way

Well, rest up now, Annie, and you will want to tart to school again in September.

Asheboro, N. C., May 7, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Now that school is out I hope I'll find more time for writing you. I was not sick any this session and won a certificate of award for perfect attendance and punctuality. I was also one of two to draw for the prize on spelling though the other boy got it.

I hope the little cousins with you are getting on nicely and will enjoy their vacation. I'll ask father to put in some money for sister and me.

Love from

Your little nephew,

Baird Moffitt.

Glad to hear from you again, Baird. I have given sister credit for half the money. Hope this is right.

Macon, N. C., May 5, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed you will find one dollar and a quarter, our dues till April. We are a little behind this time. Guess we must have caught the spirit of the spring, which is weeks later than we longed for. But it has come at last, and we are off to the hills for wild flowers, and are busy planting our gardens. Our school has closed, too, and here's wishing a happy vacation to all the cousins and orphans.

Your little nieces and nephew,

Helen W. Scholz,

Herbert Scholz, Jr.,

Elizabeth Scholz,

Jessie Lee Scholz.

Did you write this nice letter yourself, Helen? It is beautifully written, and being the first you ever wrote, it deserves special mention. Many thanks for the money.

Brownsummit, N. C., Apr. 22, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I send you mine and brother's dues, 20c. for April. Papa and mama went to Apple's Chapel to quarterly meeting and took brother and me along. Rev. L. I. Cox was at his post, and preached a good sermon. I will close. Hope you and the little cousins are well.

Your nephew

Holt R. Gerringer,

Guilbert H. Gerringer.

Thanks, boys. Hope these beautiful, warm days are bringing a lot of sunshine into your lives.

EVERYDAY RELIGION.

That religion that isn't good for every day isn't must good for any day. If it doesn't stay with a man on Monday, it was only a cloak and a mockery and Sunday. If it doesn't show itself in the home, breathing upon every one therein a kindly and helpful and strengthening influence, then it will make a fine show in the house of God to very little purpose indeed. If religion doesn't grip a man's soul, if it isn't the one thing in his whole life, Sunday and Saturday, day and night, then it becomes so near to being nothing that it is scarcely worth reckoning at all. When we speak of every day religion, we speak of the only genuine kind of religion that there is. And it is its homely, everyday quality that will commend it to the world and will in the end win for it the allegiance of the world. Religion is for every day. Its blessings and benefits, its comforts and sweet consolations, its guidance and its inspiration are for the commonplace days in the commonplace lives of commonplace men and women. It is something to take with one, something that will add to life's joy its best touch of sweetness and will mix with all life's sorrows, hope and courage and power. A man who has every day religion in good wholesome quantity can easily afford to be without a good many other things.—Christian Guardian.

A SUPERNATURAL BIRTH.

We are living in a day when the enemies of Christ, under the guise of friendship for him, are busily engaged in trying to make it appear that his birth was only a natural one, and therefore like that of any other man's birth. Why is it so? Because, for one thing, they want to have it appear that he was a fallible man. They do not want to acknowledge that he was God in the flesh.

The noted Prof. James Orr, of Scotland, recognized as being one of the greatest Bible scholars in the world, says: "It is a very superficial way of speaking or thinking of the virgin birth to say that nothing depends on this belief for our estimate of Christ. Who that reflects on the subject carefully can fail to see that if Christ was virgin born—if he was truly 'conceived,' as the creed says, 'by the Holy Ghost, horn of the Virgin Mary'—there must of necessity enter a supernatural element into his person; while if Christ was sinless, much more, if he was the very Word of God incarnate, there must have been a miracle—the most stupendous miracle in the universe—in his origin. If Christ was as John and Paul affirm, and his church has ever believed, the Son of God made flesh, the second Adam, the new redeeming Head of the race, a miracle was to be expected in his earthly origin; with out a miracle, such a person could never have been." This is eminently logical, and it is also in complete harmony with the testimony of the Bible. A supernatural Being, if he would practically unite himself with humanity, must do so in a supernatural manner. Christ said that He came down from heaven; that being true, then it logically follows that he could not possibly enter into the human race, except in a miraculous way. To deny that he had such a birth, is to deny that he came down from heaven. One must deny a great deal, to deny such a birth. It involves a flat denial of Christ's words. It is a denial of the veracity of the Bible. Can one be a Christian and yet deny Christ's miraculous birth? I say that he cannot. One cannot be a believer and an unbeliever at the same time. It is the whole-hearted believer who most honors God and Christ; and it is he who receives blessing and honor and power from God.

Our judgment would not favor trying to force upon a school any measure with which the school is not in perfect sympathy and accord. That would most effectually defeat the ends sought. In Primary Union if we will wisely plan and work faithfully, under the blessings of God we will win eventually.

Since the demand for a more fundamental knowledge of the Word of God and for better classification of elementary scholars is no less pressing than it is general, we believe that this Convention will not fail to exercise its high privilege, and perform a reasonable service both to the child and to the Sunday school by granting favorable consideration to Primary Union which in its aim seeks to know the child's greatest need, and in its work endeavors to supply it.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Catawba Springs.

Our work is in a hopeful condition, progressing along many lines. This is Memorial month in many places. Last Sunday being Memorial at Catawba Springs, we enjoyed the day. It was lovely and pleasant. The exercises were enjoyed by all present. Prof. Harper from Elon College was with us and delivered an instructive address to the satisfaction of all who heard him. After his address, flowers were distributed by the children and friends who had prepared special designs for loved ones' graves. Afterwards a delightful dinner was served to the satisfaction of all. In the afternoon Prof. Harper presented to the church and congregation the appeal of Elon College for the Special Fund. The brethren responded very cheerfully and liberally. Sunday was an ideal day for service with large and attentive congregation. Brother Harper gave enthusiasm to the Sabbath school work by his efficient manner of teaching the lesson. Time would not admit of our using our brother as we would like to have used him. We hope to have him visit us again in the near future.

The remainder of this month will be spent in Memorial services at my other churches.

A. P. Barbee.

Lynn, Mass.

The People's Church of Lynn experienced a new impulse yesterday, when eleven members were received. To many churches the reception of this number of members at one service is a frequent occurrence. Here, however, it is entirely new. About twenty years ago this church was organized by Rev. A. A. Williams. Their meetings were held in an old factory for a number of years, and perhaps for this reason many who were interested in the movement refrained from uniting with the church because with the advancing years and declining health of the pastor and founder they feared it would never reach permanency. Their high regard for Brother Williams however, led them to encourage him in other ways, and by his indomitable will and courageous devotion to the purpose he believed God had in him, he struggled on through discouragements many, among them great physical suffering, until about a year or so before he was called home, he was permitted to call his people together in their new church home. At no time I think in the church's history has its membership exceeded twenty five until yesterday. When we came here we found a total enrollment of eighteen, only six of whom were residents. After more than fifteen months of as hard work as I have known how to do, our entire roll is only thirty three. But for even these we are grateful, for their devotion we believe will mean much toward winning others. Already others who have given themselves to Christ are talking of identifying themselves with the People's church by becoming members of it. Pray for us here in Lynn.

TERCENTENARY CELEBRATION.

On Sunday, May 7th, at Mt. Bethel Church, Rockingham County, the 300th anniversary of the King James Translation of the Bible was celebrated. A program had been previously arranged by the writer. Rev. P. T. Klapp, the pastor, was present and had charge of the exercises. A paper was read, which had been prepared by Miss Nora Collum, carefully tracing the history of the different translations of the Scriptures into the English tongue from the rude beginnings of Caedman to the bringing out of the "Authorized" version.

Bro. Klapp gave several additional statistics along the same line.

A paper was read by Mrs. J. G. Truitt giving much valuable information concerning the trials, struggles and hardships of the early English translators of the Bible. This instruction and valuable pa-

This writer read a paper on "The Bible as Good Literature."

Rev. A. T. Banks of Elon College and Bro. J. W. Knight were present and took active parts in the exercises.

Special music, which had been prepared for the occasion, was rendered by the Mt. Bethel choir. After the other exercises an opportunity was given for testimonies as to what the celebration had meant to us. A goodly number of the brethren expressed themselves as not only having thoroughly enjoyed the exercises, but also as knowing more about the Bible and loving it a great deal better than ever before.

A lady who kept a little curly poodle lost her pet and called on the police to find it. The next day one of the force came with the dog, very wet and dirty. The lady was overjoyed and asked a number of silly questions, among others, "Where did you find my dear darling?" "Why, ma'am," said the officer, "a fellow had him on a pole and was washing windows with him."—Tit-bits.

BALANCES OF DECEIT.

"Big business" has received large and needful criticism, and small business needs it no less. In the eighth century B. C. Hosea wrote, "He is a trafficker, the balances of deceit are in his hand." Recent research into the causes of the high cost of living has discovered this to be true now and here. The State superintendent of weights and measures in New York has estimated that short measure has cost New Yorkers ten million dollars a year. Under the present government of New York City tons of dishonest scales and thousands of short measures and baskets with false bottoms have been destroyed. An official report presented this year to the New Jersey legislature showed that of 574 stores visited in eight cities 96 per cent. had incorrect weights, measures, scales, or packages. The United States Bureau of Standards concludes that "many of the inhabitants and many of the honest merchants (in New Jersey) are undoubtedly suffering from the conditions of weights and measures." The evil is nation-wide. The United States Bureau shows sixty per cent. of the retailers throughout the country using incorrect scales and measures. There is a demand for them which manufacturers supply. While a few large cities have been active in protective measures—Chicago now in the lead with but five per cent. of faulty scales—little care is taken in most States to protect the small buyer from loss through the failure—intentional or unintentional—of the small trader to give just measure. The press does well to emphasize the fleeing thus perpetrated on the poor. To emphasize the moral damage to the social conscience in communities that neglect to check dishonesty is peculiarly the pulpit's concern. Twenty-seven centuries should have achieved better progress in this line. Either Hosea, Amos, and Micah must return from the dead to do the censor's work, or it must be taken vigorously in hand by their modern successors.—Homiletic Review.

UNIVERSAL PEACE.

Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Mic. 4:3. (Golden text for Sunday, May 28.

We use these forceful lines from the New York Christian Advocate:

The eighth century heard the voices of four great Hebrew prophets. Amos and Hosea spoke in Israel. Isaiah and Micah spoke in Judah. Amos, the sheep herder of Tekoa, was the prophet of the righteousness of God. His passionate utterances fairly blaze with a sense of moral demand. Hosea, the broken-hearted man, who spoke out of a devastated home, was the prophet of the love of God—a deep ethical love, longing to rescue his erring people. Isaiah, the statesman-prophet and companion of kings, was a man of the city, accustomed to its ways and moving easily in its life. Micah lived in a country village. He was a typical man of the people and his voice hardens into stern anger with a sense of their wrongs. He is a voice crying in an evil day against social injustice. There is no hesitation and no compromise in the words of Micah. He describes the evil of his time with a candor which leaves nothing to be said, and his condemnation breaks out in words of unforgettable power.

The most cursory reader of the Hebrew prophets cannot fail to be struck with the vigorous and unhesitating way in which they dealt with the problems of their own time. They faced its evils. They condemned its abuses. They declared that God was watching the evil ways of evil men and that punishment was sure to come. They were conscious of their time and they made religion a practical thing which related itself to the whole range of human activity.

Religion is sure to warm the heart. It is to be a hidden communion in which the soul draws near to God. It is to be a spiritual refreshing which fills the life with a sense of the presence and the might of the unseen. But it is also to be a practical power. It is to cleanse the individual life of evil deeds and evil habits. It is resolutely to set itself against abuses in countryside and city and state. It is to be the conscience of a nation, facing every dark fact and calling it by its right name. It is to be the eternal antagonist of all that soils and all that degrades. The religion which warms the heart is also to transform the activities of the life.

Micah was a stern critic. He was also a great optimist. He believed in a wonderful future. After dark days of desolation he expected days of great joy to come. His hope centered in the reign of Jehovah, and that reign was to be a reign of peace. The nations were to submit themselves to the law of Christ. Manufacture of implements of warfare was to cease. In the battle-torn Orient in the days of unceasing strife Micah saw the vision of the victory of peace.

The important thing about this prophecy of peace triumphant is the kind of peace it was to be. Micah did not believe in peace at any cost. He did not believe in peace, however it came. He believed in that particular peace which would come when men accepted the lordship of Jehovah and united to do His will. He believed in peace which came as a result of obedience to the law of God. The triumph of righteousness was to come first and it was to usher in the reign of peace.

The multitudes of men who today are dreaming the dream of universal peace are seers who look out upon a noble vision. The world is their debtor for a great enthusiasm in a noble cause. They will do the most lasting work and they will best serve the cause as they remember, like Micah, to exalt righteousness as well as to exalt peace.

There is peace which is moral stagnation. If men ceased to fight because they ceased care enough for noble things to fight for them, the quiet of the world would not be a beautiful serenity. It would be the cold calm of death. But when peace is ushered in through the triumph of righteousness, when the banner of peace is the banner of righteousness enthroned, then the world is moving nobly onward and all men may well rejoice. Both men and nations could accept no better platform than that of Micah, who saw so clearly that peace was to come through doing the will of God.

An important feature in Micah's vision of great days to come is his conception of the future of the weak. That which was weak is to be incorporated in the remnant which survives. That which was cast off is to become a strong nation. The ordinary reading of life teaches the survival of the weak. He believed that Jehovah would make the weak strong, and so they would be able to survive.

Here we come upon the evangel of Micah. He shared the people's lot. He cried out under their burdens. He declared that their oppressors would be punished. But the great assertion was that the weak would not be left to themselves. God would make them strong.

The power of religion is its evangel of the strength of the weak. Over and over again has it been proven true that religion can change a man from a weakling into a man of stalwart manhood. This actual transformation of human lives works the most far-reaching changes. Even the lives of nations are affected by the power which makes the weak men strong.

There is a singing joyousness about religion when it is conscious of its mission to promise strength to the weak. It goes forth a new, fresh force, molding life to the noble fashion of its desire. Ordinary calculations deal with the way in which the pressure of circumstances brings out what is in a man. Religion puts a new deposit within the man's life, so that his response to the pressure of circumstances is utterly different from what it would have been. When religion works out a philosophy of history it is built about certain great facts regarding personality. One of the most important of them is God's power to make a weak man strong.

With all his stern words Micah had a great word of hope; and the greatest promise came to those who needed it most. The man cast down beneath the weight of hard circumstances, the man who had lost hope in an evil day, was startled to behold a new vision of life. The world was changed for him when he learned that the cause of the weak is the cause of God.

LIFE IN KNOWLEDGE.

Out of knowledge there flows a stream of life. Increasing one's knowledge enlarges one's life. Enlarge the fountain and the stream therefrom is more abundant. When one learns a new lesson from nature one has added to the volume of his life—enlarged the current of his being. When one reads a great book and makes its contents a part of his store of knowledge one has by that exercise increased and deepened and enlarged the current and the channel of his existence. You cannot measure the worth of learning, therefore, in dollars and cents. The educated man may not earn as many dollars as the uneducated. But the stream of life of the man of letters and learning is larger, more abundant and abiding.

When one's knowledge is enlarged to reach out and lay hold of the Infinite, then has one transferred to one's use that boundless and beautiful source of Life that supplies a new and an abundant stream day by day.

When one appropriates this Source one has, one becomes, life eternal. To know God is life eternal. Eternal life, then, is not something to begin with the grave, or with separation of spirit and body. Life eternal is in knowledge, begins and continues in knowledge. The Presbyterian recently had a paragraph that illumines, to this end:

"One who sees nothing more in Jesus than pure humanity sees, in truth, only a reflected light. And yet, even so it is a light purer and more perfect than that reflected by the imperfect souls of His brethren whose darkness He came to lighten. "This is life eternal." He said, "that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." There can be no eternal life in looking solely upon the measure of divine light reflected in human souls. That is at best the reflection of the true light revealed in the person of Jesus Himself. It is only Jesus who can say: "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness. So Jesus said: "Ye are the light of the world. So much of Jesus as may be seen in the humanity of his disciples is indeed the glimpse that the world may have of the Deity, who has chosen to reveal Himself in humanity. But the world that would see God must look for Him revealed in His own Son, whose life and light the truest disciple can only reflect.

The thought of the world's need of the true light must stir the disciples of Jesus to such a dwelling in His light, such a receiving and absorption of His revelation of God as may make them living witnesses of the whole truth set forth in their Master. So the half-truth of those who find their only reflection of Deity in human souls may lead them to see the true light and rejoicing in it, to have life.

When one comes to have and to hold the highest of all knowledge, even knowledge of God and of His Son whom He sent, then truly one comes into life eternal—that life that shall never fade, nor falter nor perish.]

CURRENT COMMENT.

Soldiers and Sobriety.—In Germany every young man, unless physically or mentally disqualified, is trained to bear arms and be a soldier. A military education is compulsory. In short, Germany's endeavor is, and has been for years, to train and to keep a nation of soldiers strong and ready and trained for war. Meanwhile the belief has become current that this is a nation of beer drinkers and that beer makes brain and brawn.

We notice with gratification that Emperor William of Germany joins issue with his ancestors, and incurs the anger of many of his countrymen, in declaring for total abstinence as a war measure. In a public address recently the abstemious Emperor warned the men who were becoming addicted to drink that they could not hope to do as good work as soldiers, as officers, as the men were doing and would do who were total abstainers. The Emperor's contention is that total abstinence fits a man both for endurance and for the harder and sharper conflict.

And the same truth holds in any avenue or vocation of life. The man who drinks cannot endure, and cannot successfully and continuously compete with the man who abstains. There is nothing that wastes manhood like strong drink.

The Day and the Deed.—Of course the day had nothing to do with the deed, the rational ones will say, and will call it superstition if one claims otherwise; and yet one wishes that those 20,000 French spectators had been elsewhere than a parade ground, with their yells and cheers and gala attire last Sunday morning, on pleasure bent and observing the flying of air machines. The aeronaut lost control of his flyer and dashed into a company of cabinet officers and men of State, instantly killing and dreadfully mangling the Minister of War, and injuring the Prime Minister and his son, and others. No, it was not the vengeance of an angry God; not even a manifestation of His displeasure. Nay, verily. Yet one would wish that those throngs of spectators had not been thus engaged on the Sabbath day, but instead had been seeking somewhere a house of worship and of prayer. It was written long, long ago, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and though men will not obey it, the wisdom of the words becomes more and more apparent to us as the years go.

Oil.—Almost contemporaneous with the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court dissolving within the next six months the Standard Oil Company, this being held as a corporation doing business in restraint of trade, comes the announcement from Mexico of the tapping of the most abundant oil vein yet found in the world's history. From which one would decide that oil for lights and lubrications is to be abundant, and within the reach of every one. The story of this "gusher" at Tuxpan, Mexico, reads like fiction: "With the gate valve holding at least 300 pounds pressure, the great oil well in the Potrero del Llano field is still doing regularly more than 125,000 barrels of oil a day. That it is by far the biggest producing oil well ever drilled is asserted by all oil men who have witnessed its performances. The output of oil during the ninety-two days up to April 1 that had elapsed since the flow was struck was more than 12,000,000 barrels. This is a conservative estimate in view of the fact that several million barrels flowed into Buena Vista River and thence to the Tuxpan river and out to sea. Approximately 5,000,000 barrels of oil from this well have been saved and are now in storage. One reservoir covers more than forty-five acres and is more than thirty feet deep in the central portion. It now contains 5,000,000 barrels of oil. Other smaller reservoirs are full of the product and an army of men are kept constantly at work building additional storage places for the unremitting flow.

The market value of the crude oil at the well is $1 Mexican money or fifty cents gold a barrel. The value of the daily output is, therefore, more than $60,000 gold, or nearly $2,000,000 a month.

Even at the present rate of flow it is found impossible to save all of the oil, and many thousands of the oil, and many thousands of dollars' worth goes to waste each day. For more than a mile around the well the low places are filled with pools of oil.

Among the necessities of mankind oil, like salt, ranks with those in most common use, and so like salt, the good and gracious God has made it in lavish abundance. And nothing shows more clearly the infinite interest in mankind by the Creator than His bountiful provision for our common needs and comfort.

Drinks, Drugs, and Divorce.—At Newburgh, New York, there appeared in court a case last week that was not uncommon at all, but one that is typical of the times, and because not uncommon is the more to be deplored. Roy E. Pierce, (son of Henry Clay Pierce, millionaire oil magnate), through his father and attorneys entered a suit for divorce from his wife. Neither young Pierce nor his wife appeared in court, but the father of young Pierce did and claimed that his son was mentally incapable of contracting a marriage, for, at the time of the marriage, continued the father, "my son was suffering from the effects of about forty-five drinks and fifty cigarettes a day." This was almost a brutal confession, and how it must have wrung that father's heart to make it. But, right back of this great and growing question of the divorce evil in our day put drugs, dopes, cigarettes, drinks, and you will not go far astray. Cigarettes and whiskey are combined foes against domestic happiness and individual achievement,—the two worst foes in fact of all our progress and prosperity. Cigarettes and whiskey,—man's worst enemies, his deadliest foes.

LEARNING BY ADVERSITY.

He is a dull person who does not learn good and valuable lessons by the adversities which befall him. Too many people are always whining about the adversities which they have experienced. They call them nothing but bad luck. But oftentimes what is regarded as being bad luck has later been found to be good luck. A blessing may be wrapped up in adversity. One illustration of this fact appears in connection with the freezing of the oranges in Florida a few years ago. A writer speaks of it as follows: "In the train of the famous freeze came at least one far-reaching effect which has already been a great benefit to the citrus, as well as to the public, namely, that the new groves are largely of selected varieties, budded from the stocks that experience has shown to thrive best in given localities. Therefore, as a rule, our orange trees of today are more vigorous than in the past, and the fruit of superior quality. Again the growers hold themselves in readiness to protect their groves and so prevent a repetition of the unforgettable disaster."

That writer states that, for a number of years following the damaging freeze, the orange crops have far exceeded any in previous years. Thus it was learned that very valuable products came out of what was at first regarded as being a lamentable adversity. And what was true in that instance is true in thousands of other instances. The mourning over an adversity has frequently been followed by rejoicing over the outcome. Jacob, of old time, was in deep mourning at the apparently hopeless loss of his beloved son Joseph. It was a seeming adversity which drove Jacob to despair; but in due time he learned that it was a gracious lesson on the wise providence of God. His bitter tears of sorrow were followed by unspeakable joy. And we, too, have been learning lessons by our adversities. We have learned that some things which seemed to be totally against us, were really for us. We ought to be a great deal wiser by such experiences. We should not indulge in bitter complaints at the time of some loss, but hopefully wait for the issues. Adversity should set us to sober thinking.

BREAD.

The dinner hour has passed, and it brought a new thought to my mind. "Lord, I thank thee for these emblems of thy love and mercy." is the simple thanks I have today. "But I would gladly give them to those who hunger more than I," is my refrain. But God has cast my lot in a land where food is plentiful. I have no one hungering at my door. Should this thought be considered as one of selfish pride? No! no!! ten thousand times, no.

There is another bread, called the bread of life. This was the term Christ used in speaking to his disciples. Christ made his hearers understand him by the use of simple language. His followers knew how important bread was in the support and sustenance of the body, hence, Christ used the term "bread." "I am the bread of life," means I am the essential part of man for his success. The meal without some bread is a poor one. So when we sum the whole matter up, and give our minds for a few moments to these words, "I am the bread of life," "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," there comes to our vision of sight a greater scene than the bread table in our home. Some few have caught this blessed vision of His love and purpose and are carrying out the great command.

So that all may understand, let us imagine our selves around the fire side of the home, asking what Christ meant in telling his disciples to go into all the world. In the beginning God created all the world, yes, the utmost parts. When He said, "Let there be light," light came to every continent. God being no respecter of persons, He said "All the world." Do you suppose a mother of five sons, with each one residing in a different town, and being hungry, would send three of the sons bread and let the other two remain in want? Yes, some one says, "Yes, I know of such a case. No, you don't, if the mother or father had the love of God. God looks upon the dark parts of Africa, or China with the same love as he does this fair land of ours with its church steeples as monuments of Christianity and civilization.

Leaving this point, so we may again refer to the burden of this article, let us now consider to whom this commission was given. Was it for Wesley, Moody, or Sam Jones? No, not to these alone. But to you and to me.

The commission He gave to the disciples of old stands today with the same force and brightness as it did the day it was first spoken.

Now, who should go and how far? All should go. "But go how?" some one says. Some can go to their own neighbors and carry them a word of comfort and cheer that will give them encouragement to win the battle of life; some can give a part of their time in the study of work that will bring glad news and joy to many; some can devote all their time and talent to the Master's work. God looks at things as a business matter. He does not expect every one to preach or teach; but to every one He gives the commission of "doing." There is no idle place in the plan of salvation.

But working for Him who causes the seasons to come in order that we may be fed from His bountiful hand that never tires in the division of food for His children, is a work of continual pleasure, of continual joy that never dies. By his power the earth revolves from West to East, bringing to every nation smiles of sunshine from the heavens that spread over us. By the comforting presence of His love, nothing is impossible, on too great for us to bear or conquer. By his all-seeing eye the poor and forsaken soul of the slums is looked upon with the same love and pity as the king upon his throne. A Father caring for His own as a hen careth for her brood. "I will repay thee," saith the Lord. Does God expect you to lend your means, your influence, your talent and perhaps yourself and not give you something in return? "To him that overcometh I will give a crown." When we contract to do a piece of work for a man, we usually furnish our own tools, clothe and feed ourselves, while the work is being done. But not so when we go forward with the commission of our Lord. He furnishes health, food, time and all things necessary for the success of the work, and then, pays us for our labors with that price which no man can steal or rob from us.

Now, my dear reader, how far have you gone on your part of the work; how large will your part of the pay be when your last pay roll is made out, and will you receive and hear that "Well done?"

"Blessed are the feet of those who bring glad tidings." The old adage that life is uncertain and death is sure is a fact that no one can dispute. So when the last scenes of this world play upon our vision, and we bid farewell to those with whom we have worked, those we love, to go up where the jewels of this life are made up, how sweet it will be for us to have that assurance of entering into the joys of the Lord, where peace and love ever dwell, where our souls will be free from the temptations of this world; where we never say good-bye to friends, but where reality reigns supreme and songs of praise will be heard and sung by all.

PROTESTANT MISSIONS IN MEXICO.

Just now we are especially interested in Mexico because of internal strife. Religiously speaking Mexico is a Catholic country. Protestant Missions are being successfully conducted and the following from the World's Missionary Review is interesting matter as to the progress being made:

"Looking back upon something over a generation of Protestant effort in Mexico, we find fourteen different denominations engaged in the work. There is some Protestant work in every State of the Republic. Most of the large cities have been entered. There is a force of about 230 missionaries, including wives, which, together with 70 representatives of the woman's boards, gives a total of some 300 foreign missionaries. There are 600 native preachers, nearly half of whom are ordained. Besides these, many of the school-teachers are lay preachers. There are about 1,000 congregations, of which perhaps two-thirds are organized churches. These represent nearly 30,000 communicants and some 70,000 adherents, making a Protestant constituency of 100,000. There are 15,893 pupils in the day-schools, and 22,842 in the Sabbath-schools. The National Sunday-school Convention, which met in this city last September, was largely attended, and was an event of great significance. The graduates of our schools are eagerly sought after by the Government for teachers. One governor said, "Send me all the graduates you do not need yourselves." Another sent a request for six teachers at one time. Our young men and women are entering and succeeding in the various trades and professions. A leading mercantile house in the capital declared that a stenographer furnished from one of our mission schools was the best they ever had in their employ. He was from an obscure Indian village before he entered the mission, but now carries on an immense correspondence for a large business, in two languages.

The estimated value of mission property in Mexico is given at $3,822,563, silver. Some of the missions are meeting with most encouraging success in the matter of self-support. The Methodist Episcopal mission received last year nearly as much from indigenous resources as the parent society sent into the field. All of the older missions have some work which is self-supporting, and in some cases the older congregations are supporting new missionary work.

Medical work is being carried on in Guanajuato, Guadalajara, San Luis Potosi, Monterey and other cities, to the great blessing of their respective communities. In these hospitals and dispensaries people of all creeds are received on equal terms.

Eight church papers appear regularly, five Sunday School publications, thousands of books, tracts, etc. Last year 25,202,032 pages of religious literature were sent forth.

The above are some of the results achieved.

Does Mexico need the Protestant type of Christianity? Yes, a thousand times, no land on the face of the earth needs it more. Here are over 15,000,000 people, practically without the Bible, save as they receive it at our hands. Here are segregated multitudes turned away from the historic Church by that extreme Mariolatry which puts Christ in the background, its enmity to all forms of civil government which it can not control, an arrogant intolerance repugnant to the enlightened intelligence of the age, and a corrupt clergy so fervently keeping up an objectionable system of meddling with sacred home relations through the confessional. These multitudes will continue as "sheep without a shepherd" unless Protestant Christians bring them to a knowledge of Christ.

There is another, if possible sadder, fact. The Indians, on more than half the population, though counted as members of the Roman Communion, never have had an opportunity to know what Christianity is. They have been left without education, without Bibles, and have been permitted to mingle their ancient rites of the outward forms of Christianity. Indians in feather plumage dancing at the sacred shrine of Guadalupe; niches, side by side, in villages and roadways, to the Virgin of Guadalupe and to the Aztec war god, Huitzilopochtli, are some of the current evidences of the criminal negligence of the Roman priesthood, a negligence that has covered three centuries. How shall Protestant Christians do their part toward the salvation of these millions? Give them the Word of God. Pour into their famished souls the water of life. Preach to them a living Christ able and willing to give "all ment everywhere" a gracious knowledge of pardon, peace, and hope of heaven. We will thus raise a constituency to live honest, decent, happy lives in their homes, and in the world, and as "living epistles read and known of all men," letting their "light shine" to glorify not themselves, but "Our Father which art in heaven."

HOME MISSIONS IN EARNEST.

The religious future of America depends upon the success of Home Missions. The Church in America must grow or die. To have no purpose beyond maintaining existing organizations is to court death. We must constantly organize new churches, or we will soon have no churches.

The organized church must follow the people. Our population is constantly shifting. On the banks of the Mississippi were once some flourishing towns. The current of the river changed and cut new channels, leaving these towns miles inland. Even so many churches have been left without a population to which to minister, because the tides of our national life have taken new directions. They struggle for awhile, and die for lack of either a support or a mission. New churches must be formed to take their places.

A church is a vital thing. A growing church is a living one. A dwindling church is a dying church. A receding, contracting church has no power. Many churches find themselves surrounded by an unchurched multitude, or by people who have an insufficient type of religion. The church that has power and hope and courage, can impress these multitudes. A discouraged church can do nothing for them. An aggressive Home Missionary Society policy unites the churches in an onward movement, and gives assurance of help where help is needed. A temporary reverse in one place is offset by a victory in another. The churches united in such an effort aid each other by mutual encouragement. If surrounded by indifferent or hostile populations they must have this aid, or theirs will be a losing fight. Protestant Christianity is vastly in the minority in many cities at the present moment. Home Missions alone can save the day.

A church, to live, must give heed to the law of its life. The churches of today owe their existence to unselfish effort. They are the product of the missionary spirit. When they violate the principle of their existence, they cease to be churches. The church that is an end in itself, soon puts an end to itself. Home Missions gives an object beyond the church itself. Like the kindred enterprise of Foreign Missions, it tends to preserve the spirituality of the church. Without the missionary impulse, the church fails to embody the spirit of the Master, and loses its churchly character. The Divine Order demands of the church a ministry beyond itself, and aside from this it has no future.

The Foreign Missionary work of the church is dependent upon Home Missions Foreign Missions is the ministry to those who are far away. Home Missions is the ministry to those who are near. that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen," says John, "cannot love God whom he hath not seen." So also he that has no love for the Christless ones in his own land, "Whom he hath seen," can have no real or vital interest in the heathen afar. "Whom he hat not seen." But we are to love both, and upon this love depends our life with God. Home and foreign missions, and the church, the product of missions, must go together. A failure to maintain one involves all.

Finally, the great unchurched multitudes, sweeping beyond the reach of the existing churches, in city or country, on the new frontiers, or in the commercial and industrial centers, must be evangelized, or by sheer force of numbers they will control our national life. What place will there be for the Church in such a future?

"Christianize America; we must, we will."—O. W. Powers, Home Mission Secretary.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. I. W. Johnson has been in a good and gracious revival with Pastor M. L. Bryant of the Main St. Church, Berkley, Va., in which there were thirty-five or more professions and fifteen accessions to the church.

—Rev. C. C. Peel, pastor, reports a most excellent day at his Hebron, Va., service last Sunday, an unusually large congregation, an attentive audience, an agreeable service. Bro. Peel has served this growing congregation for several years.

—Our good brother, Rev. J. T. Kitchen, begins in this week's Sun a series of several articles on "The Beautiful Life." Bro. Kitchen is a devotee at the shrine of dame nature, and to him she speaks a varied language, full of fragrance, richness and tenderness of tone.

—Palm Street Church, Greensboro, is to be dedicated second Sunday in June, a large amount of indebtedness on the building having been paid off the past year. This is a prosperous and promising congregation, and the work goes well there, we learn of Dr. Wicker, the pastor.

—There had been some thirty confessions of faith in Christ at the close of the first week's revival in the Durham church and the meeting continues this week, Bro. Cox, the pastor, being assisted in the services by Rev. L. E. Smith of Greensboro. There is much and growing interest in the meetings.

—Our friend and brother, Dr. S. Dace McPherson, specialist in the treatment of Eye, Ear, and Throat, has moved to Durham, N. C., and opened an office in the Duke Building, Main St., and our best wishes follow him for the successful practice to which his energy and skill entitle him.

—Rev. S. B. Klapp, Greensboro, "My work seems to be in very satisfactory condition, better Sunday schools, increasing congregations, larger offerings, and an apparent deeper spiritual interest. I have a good people to serve and I feel a deep interest in their spiritual welfare. I congratulate you on recent improvement of The Sun."

—Reports are that interest is growing in the revival at Suffolk and that Mr. and Mrs. Butler, with Miss Anderson as accompanist, are rendering efficient and very acceptable services, as may be expected of them always. They are trained and skilled workers and draw congregations by the marvelous magic of their splendid music. Suffolk is fortunate to have secured their services.

—Prof. Thomas H. Franks, one of Elon's graduates, has completed a successful year as Principal of Rock Hill School, Waynesville, N. C., and has returned to his home for vacation in Wake Co., planning, as loyal sons should plan, to be at Elon Commencement June 4-7 to meet and greet again many of his school friends. Next to the reunion with loved ones at home is the reunion of friends at alma mater.

—From The Conshohocken Recorder May 16, we learn that Rev. S. L. Baugher, who has been pastor of the Gulf Christian Church the past seven years has tendered his resignation as pastor to become effective August 1. The Recorder states that Bro. Baugher's pastorate has been successful and that his going away is generally regretted. It is not stated where Bro. Baugher will accept work, though several calls are under consideration.

Virginian-Pilot, Monday, May 22, in its Berkley correspondence carries this interesting item:

"The revival meetings that have been in progress at Main Street Christian church weeks came to a close last evening with a most interesting and appealing sermon by the pastor, Rev. M. L. Bryant. He spoke on the subject, "Straight Way," and urged and impressed his hearers of the one way of salvation.

"During the series of meetings there have been 36 conversions and 21 persons to unite with the church."

—I have before me a note like this, "I know my Sun subscription is out.

Some good Christian soul sent it to me because I have been shut in for three years and cannot go to church. I have enjoyed our dear paper so much, but you will have to stop it as I am not able to work or earn anything. I would so much love to have a Bible as I haven't got one." If a reader who cares and wishes will send us $1.00 we will continue The Sun to this disabled and deserving widow; if $1.50 shall be added we will send her a good large print $2.25 Bible also. The Christian Sun and every church paper should have a fund to be used in such worthy and deserving cases. (If more than one responds to the above all save the first will be returned.)

—The Sun's editor ministered to the Wake Chapel congregation, on the occasion of their quarterly meeting and communion service, last Saturday and Sunday respectively, for the pastor, Rev. Lee Johnson, licentiate. Bro. Johnson is rendering most efficient and acceptable service at this his home church. The people are surprised and delighted with his rich and tender messages from a close study and a deep acquaintance with the Word, and the church is building up under his ministry. On Sunday a large congregation gathered, a congregaton of intelligent and interesting people who brought their hearts with them to the service in the sancturay and a profusion of flowers to be placed on the graves after the services in the house. The cemetery is a model of neatness and pride, and shows that the living of the community are keeping alive the noblest and best traditions of the lives that have gone before.

—A peace agreement between the government and the revolutionists in Mexico has been signed by official representatives and it is declared that the Mexican war is at an end. It is to be hoped; and yet we will know it only when they quit having pitched battles and killing each other so recklessly over there.

—No less than twenty-eight persons lost their lives in the Alps last year in the usually harmless sport of gathering wild flowers. Almost a hundred mountaineers are killed every year among the great peaks of the central Alps.

—It was rather a fatal day for base ball in Leland Stanford University when President Jordan went to see a game of his University with another college team. "It was systematic muckerism" declared President Jordan, and gave order that there should be no more ball between that University and other colleges.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Suffolk meeting opened Sunday morning, May 14th. Mr. Chas. U. Butler and wife lead the singing and Mrs. Butler's sister, Miss Mary Anderson, Rev. Dr. R. A. Torry's pianist, plays the piano. They caught the heart of the people by their first song and have sung with pleasing effect throughout the week. Besides their gifts and consecration in gospel song, they are charming in a social way and you soon feel as if you had always known them. Mr. Butler was born in Georgia and his wife and sister were born in Springfield, Ill. I do not know where Lillian Lucile, the ten month's old darling was born.

The meeting has been well-attended in spite of the extreme hot weather, the burning of Bain Peanut Ware House and 40,000 bags of peanuts filling the town with smoke, and the Base Ball fever and four big games in as many days. The promise now is for cooler weather and better conditions for the coming week.

The work so far, has been mainly with the church and will be again tomorrow—Sunday. We hold a meeting at ten, A. M.; a Home Meeting at 4:00 P. M., conducted by Mrs. Butler or Miss Anderson; and at 8:00 P. M. One of the Home Meetings was held in a home where the mother was not a Christian, and she gave her heart to God; and one girl professed in the church last night. Many church workers have decided to lead a life of closer walk with God, and we are looking for results next week. A revival in the church seems to be the permanent necessity and we are praying, preaching, and singing to that end. Preachers never feel their coldness so keenly as when they undertake a revival. Then we discover that ordinary spiritual conditions have no convicting or saving virtue. We have to break up the fallow ground that has been packed by the tramp of a multitude of thoughts and feelings contrary to the spirit of the gospel. Hence no class is benefited by revivals more than ministers. Routine work makes routine souls and some special services seem into be required duce new spiritual activities. What the church needs most in these times of intellectual progress and commercial activity is a higher grade of spirituality; not a profession of this or that sort of spiritual blessing, but a spiritual daily life led by the spirit of God; "for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Feeling must enter into the soul in its conscious relation to God, feeling that contains genuine sympathy for souls. Charity has wasted its force upon the bodily needs of man while the souls of giver and receiver starve. There is no more delusive form of doing religious service than giving to the poor, though it is a good work; but many give money to the needy and then indulge in many forms of dissipation and think they have done God's will.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The R. M. Morrow, Jr., Medal, which is given each year by Dr. R. M. Morrow, Burlington, N. C., in memory of his son, R. M. Morrow, Jr., and awarded to that member of the senior class who shall have written the best thesis for graduation has been won this year for the first time by a young lady, Miss Mary L. Foster, of Burlington, N. C., whose subject was An Enquiry into the Uses of the Cleft Infinitive.

The senior examinations began on Saturday, last, and will continue during the present week. The examinations for the college generally will begin on Saturday of next week. It is not necessary to say that this is a very busy time with the students.

Dr. J. U. Newman preached a sermon on The Human Body as God's Temple on Sunday which has been the subject of much comment and interest on the part of all who heard it.

The Book Club of the college community has just concluded a most successful year. A final meeting was held with Mrs. W. B. Hobby on Friday afternoon of last week. The ladies who are members of this club have entered enthusiastically and appreciatively into the study of Modern Italy and they are unanimously loud in their praises of Mrs. Hobby as hostess.

The C. E. Society on Sunday elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Mabel Farmer; Vice-president, J. C. Stuart; Secretary, Miss Viola Frazier; Treasurer, Miss Pearl Tuck; Organist, Miss Sallie McCauley; Corresponding Secretary, M. J. Lee Johnson; Chorister, Mr. A. T. Banks. The Society this year has had a most successful series of prayer-meetings and has done excellent work in all its departments.

The Sunday School elects officers for the ensuing year next Sunday. The nominating committee is as follows: Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mr. J. Lee Johnson, Mrs. J. M. Saunders, Miss Affie Griffin and Prof. W. A. Harper.

The college was glad to welcome the following visitors to the community during the past week: Mrs. M. A. Moffitt, Mrs. Solomon Moffitt, Mrs. J. A. Long, Mrs. J. R. Parks, Jr., Miss Clara Moffitt, Miss Jennie Lee Williams and Mr. J. M. Walker.

Mrs. R. J. Kernodle entertained in honor of a number of her friends on Tuesday of this week. The ladies who attended this function report a very pleasant occasion.

Two of the town's oldest residents past their natal mile stones during the past week. Mr. S. W. Tate was 88 years old on last Tuesday and Rev. C. A. Boone 72 years old last Sunday. These are active townsmen and are seemingly in their prime and their friends rejoice with them in their pleasurable celebration of these glad occasions. X.

—The term of Secretary of State in Massachusetts is only one year, and yet only three men have held that position since 1858, a period of 53 years. In the North and East there is a custom, which seems to obtain more than in the South, of keeping a good man in office when the right sort of good man for the office has been found. We of the South seem to believe more in "rotation," though we hardly explain why.

—Heretofore it has not been supposed that the wife of the President has any official function to perform. A North Dakota farmer, who knows that a deed is not valid unless signed by both husband and wife, has written to the President, asking him to have Mrs. Taft add her signature to his own at the bottom of a government patent to a homestead entry. —Ex.

—Hon. J. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina, has issued this, as it seems to us, sane and seasonable advice to the people of this good commonwealth:

Nearly every day the mail brings to the Insurance Department a report of some fire with the cause given as "Rats and Matches." Of course many of the fires are really started by rats and matches, but others are not, and the trouble is merely laid on this too frequent cause. In some cases the cause is due to carelessness and others to criminality.

The whole thing can be remedied in a very simple manner—"Use Only Safety Matches." This will put a stop to fires really caused by rats and matches, as well as those caused by the careless use of matches, and in other ways, and laid to the charge of "Rats and Matches." Some who are inclined to burn their property will be deterred by a knowledge that it cannot be laid to "Rats and Matches."

A safety match is one that will not strike except on a prepared surface, and is therefore harmless in causing fires. They cost no more than friction or parlor matches, and their use will do away with at least one-fourth of our fires. Why not use only safety matches?

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

SOME FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.

There are a few fundamental principles that apply to all kinds of religious work—whether teaching, preaching, leading a prayer-meeting, offering prayer, etc. Of these I shall briefly discuss three in this issue.

The first of these is variety. We cannot get persons to do as we wish them to do unless we get and keep them interested. We must have attention before we can interest. Monotony, of whatever kind, is uninteresting and cannot hold attention. This is the negative view of the case. Stated positively we come to an old adage—"Variety is the spice of life"—it is even more—it is life. There can be no life without variety. The difference between the dead and the living is the absence in the one and the presence in the other of variety. I would not go to extremes in this matter—such as installing telephones in church pews and adjoining Sunday school for a baseball game. But I would rely on the principle of a little variation, within reasonable bounds, from time to time, remembering that it is a fundamental condition leading to life.

The second principle may be thus correct and epigrammatically stated:

It is better to get ten people to work than to do the work of ten people. All of us will assent to this, but the application of it is where the rub comes. How can we get the ten to work? Is it not easier to do the work myself? For the preacher this means doing all the praying, leading of prayer-meetings, visiting all the sick; for the teacher it means lecturing; for the music, it means singing by a choir; for the church, the deacons to look after its temporal welfare. Surely the old way is easier; but is it better? Let the experience of pastors with large churches that are inactive say. Let the superintendents and teachers say. It is harder to get the ten to work, but it is far better to do so. Men love what they work for. The Church, the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor will never "reach the reached and save the saved" until this principle is bodied forth practically in our religious organizations and activities.

The third principle is this: "Set a good example." There is no need simply to try to tell ten people how to do religious work, such as how to pray in public, study the Sunday school lesson, talk in prayer-meeting, visit the sick. Set them a good example. An ounce of example is worth more than a pound of precept. Encourage them to work; plan how they may work; be tactful and skillful to point out ways and means and matters; offer every assistance; but above all set them a good example. Don't scold; don't whine; don't complain. These yield bitter fruit. But set them a good example; it will bring the desired result, if combined with one and two above. Apply these, please.

PERSONAL WORKER'S LEAGUE.

Drs. W. C. Wicker and J. O. Atkinson have hit upon a new plan to get the laymen of the Church to do personal work. The plan is to get groups of seven—one for each day of the week—to band themselves together to do a definite thing or things during the interim of their regular sessions (weekly in city churches, monthly in country churches) and to pray together for success to attend their efforts. In this way the sick will be visited, attendance on the services of the sanctuary will be increased, those out of Christ are to be personally approached, by the ones who can have the most influence with them, the laymen. The motto of the new organization is, "We do things for Christ." There may be many groups of seven in any particular church. The idea underlying the plan is the same as that of the so-called "Secret Service Department of the Adult Organized Bible Classes, which has yielded such grand results in saving souls in these organizations. There is an organized class twenty years of age, for instance, that has been in this way the medium of bringing salvation to nearly 1,000 souls. We shall watch with interest the working of these new organizations—Dr. Wicker calls his "Personal Worker's League;" Dr. Atkinson has not named his yet—and shall pray for great and good results to follow. This may or may not be the best method to get the great inactive masses of our churches to do personal, effective Christian work, but some method must be found. Let us keep trying till we find it. Success to these two resourceful and devoted pastors in their great work.

A NEW TRUSTEE.

The Representative of the American Christian Convention.

Under the above caption, which comes directly under the genial face of our A. C. C. Christian Endeavor Secretary, the Christian Endeavor World for May 18, has the following notice.

"One of the denominations that has always been most cordial toward Christian Endeavor is the American Christian Convention, a denomination whose members wish to be known simply as Christians, but they are to be distinguished from the other denomination, which is known also as Disciples of Christ.

"The newly chosen trustee to represent the American Christian Convention on the board of trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor is Rev. E. A. Watkins, pastor of the First Christian Church of Greenville, O., and secretary of the Department of Christian Endeavor in his denomination.

"Born and reared on an Ohio farm, he studied in Antioch College, Ohio, and graduated from Defiance College, afterwards receiving his degree of master of arts from the Cincinnati University.

"Mr. Watkins has been vice-president of Defiance College, department secretary of education, a member of the executive board of the Ohio State Christian Association, and a member of the executive board of the Miami, O., Conference.

"The new Christian Endeavor secretary and trustee is a successful pastor and evangelist, and wherever he has labored he has organized large and active Christian Endeavor societies. He has started with much enthusiasm upon the task of reorganizing disbanded societies and organizing new ones. He is aided by a newly appointed Christian Endeavor commission of five members. He conducts a page department in the weekly organ of the denomination, The Herald of Gospel Liberty, and is hard at work for Christian Endeavor also through his personal correspondence and through visits to the conferences of his denomination."

WHAT SAMUEL TEACHES US.

Samuel was the second great founder of the Hebrew race. He stands second only to Moses.

No one knows how much of the greatness of great men is the greatness of their fathers and mothers. Samuel is no exception to this rule.

Samuel was a child of prayer. What child is not so consecrated? If a child has no other motive, he should live nobly in order to answer his mother's prayers.

Samuel was reared in a church, as every boy and girl should be, associated as closely as possible with the Christian Endeavor societies and the Sunday school and the church services of all kinds.

Parents should take as great care as Samuel's parents did in choosing the second parents of their children, their Sunday-school teachers, their secular-school teachers, and their pastors.

Every child has a place in God's house and a work there as definite as those of Samuel.

God has a word for every child, if he will listen as attentively as Samuel listened.

Samuel was more the child of Eli than Hophni and Phinehas were. You cannot choose your physical father, but you may choose your spiritual father,—and many of them.

Samuel convened the Mizpah assembly because he saw that the chief need of his nation, as of all nations, was repentance and prayer. Samuel proved that he was a prophet and a judge by his victory over the Philistines. Thus every true leader is proved by his victory over oppression.

Samuel was wisest in establishing the schools of the prophets. Every true leader provides for the succession.

It is strange indeed that Samuel allowed his own two sons to go the bad way of Hophni and Phinehas. Nothing is harder than to apply to one's self the lessons clearly seen in other lives.

A worthy ruler will, like Samuel, care more for his nation than for himself, and be willing, if it is best for his people, to be supplanted by another ruler.

The wrong in the choice of Saul for king was not so much the change in the form of government as reliance on the form of government; not so much the having a king as the desire to be like heathen nations. "Trust in God alone"—that was the message of Samuel's life.—Amos R. Wells.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JUNE 4—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lessons from Samuel—I Sam. 12:1-6, 13-25. (Monthly Consecration Meeting).

Roll Call: Call the roll from the bottom up, but do not let it be known that it will be so called ahead of time. Have Scripture verses from the two books of Samuel only in response to this roll call.

Scripture: Let the leader read the narrative portions, the president of the Society Samuel's words, and the entire Society the words of all the people.

Leader's Remarks: This is an appropriate Consecration Scripture—it represents the call and consecration of one of the great religious leaders of the ages. Samuel would have been an ideal Christian Endeavorer. It is for us to pattern after his life, draw truths and lessons for our guidance therefrom, and so become better Christian Endeavorers. A life such as his, dedicated and consecrated to God is a constant source of inspiration and helpfulness to the Christian world. He was endowed with the qualities of leadership—his leadership was of the helpful kind—he pushed and pulled rather than pointed out the way. The world, particularly our own church, needs more of such leadership today. If we can but impart to our young people the spirit of Samuel, we shall have it.

Written Work: Have essays on "The Value of Consecration to Christ;" "How Best to Consecrate Ourselves;" "Points of Weakness in our Society;" "The strength of our Society."

Questions for Voluntary Answer:

What influence did Samuel's mother have over his life?

What good tendencies did he inherit?

What evil did he have to fight against in his advancement?

Ought children be allowed to go home after Sunday-school and before Church?

What lesson do you get from his life? (To several.)

What good thing did he do for his people? (To several.)

How does God call us today?

What influence did prayer have in his life?

How does he help us in disappointment?

How does his life teach unselfishness?

Definite work is assigned for each day in the week.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

The world is full of beauty. Go where you may, look where you will, and you may see beauty all about you. Over land and sea you may travel, and there is something pleasing to the eye. God has adorned and beautified the work of His hands. Even in the most desolate and unhealthful places He causes the herbs to grow to heal sickness, and the flowers to blossom to cheer the heart, so that he who looks with any degree of concern may find much to admire and love. As often as the heart has been thrilled and the mind filled with these beautiful object lessons, they receive them with the same vital interest as when they first began to be to notice dame nature, as its beauty continued to be presented to their delighted investigation and admiration.

God who breathed into man the breath of life desires that He shall make the most of it, and cause it to be beautiful and more beautiful with each returning day. Other great lives remind us that we can make our lives not only beautiful, but glorious. Each ought to shine as lights in the world; each must shine with the reflected light of God. Keep the shine, the polish on. If it gets dull you must brush up—you must shine. It takes some time to brush your clothes, it takes time to polish your shoes, it takes time to attend to your toilet. One has to do this each day to be attractive, clean and neat. This is right, it is your duty, and people like to see you with taste and tact. Well, now, if you so much desire the outward man to shine, you must also want the inward man, the soul, to shine with the light of God. You have noticed that good metal keeps its polish and shine longer than counterfeit and mixed material. Common stuff does not hold its brightness; it soon gets dull. Lead and tin do not hold their lustre; gold and silver do. A common stone does not hold its sparkle like the pure, precious stones. Neither does a life which is not hid with Christ in God shine with a lasting radiance.

I rode ten miles through a swamp the other day, admiring the lovely water lilies on either side of the road, floating upon the water and looking so fresh and beautiful in their white morning dress, that they refreshed the tired traveler as he wended his onward way. To look upon them was most delightful indeed, and brought the soul nearer to God. Amid green waving fern, rustling reeds, thick growing rushes in a dark, damp, dreary swamp inhabited by wild animals, and infested with serpents, vultures and birds of prey, God had placed even there the pure lily and other wild flowers as the crowning beauty and glory over all. Then with pleasant thoughts and a heart full of praise the soul was drawn to J sus as the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley. God has put the beautiful and attractive things where it would otherwise appear dangerous, lonely and dreary, so that we may think of His goodness and look up to Him as the source of all things and as the Fountain of life. He has so wonderfully beautified His vast dominions with the beautiful and sublime. On one side of this swamp there was a round pond of water covered all over with water lilies and all 'round its rim in tangled profusion the love vine wound its beautiful tendrils like little wires of gold until a scene of great and unhindered beauty was the object lesson impressing the thought that the love of Jesus is reflected in His word to our hearts and lives, causing us to be impressed by it; helping us to more fully understand and to feel His great abounding love for us. Yes, the world is so full of beauty, especially now when nature is clothing herself with such a beautiful and becoming dress. All up and down and around the world God has cheered the hearts of His children by placing before their delighted vision the splendid and attractive work of His power and goodness. "O, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

Try to think of and talk about the pleasant things of life as much as possible, and do not be dwelling all the time upon the dark side. It will take much effort and some practice to do this, but it may be done by turning to the beautiful, bright things which invite you to look at them with pleasing admiration. Many are troubled because they are old and getting older. Refrain from it as much as you can because the great anxiety will cause you even to look older. Try hard to be bright, sweet, and pleasant, and permit your long experience to be helpful to others in bringing cheerfulness, and your old age will appear more attractive to many younger ones who need to be cheered on the way of life. THE NATURALNESS OF JESUS.

Rev. A. W. Lightbourne, D. D., Dover, Del., in a recent sermon, said:

This woman of Samaria did not expect to find the Messiah in the form of a tired traveler sitting on Jacob's well and asking for a drink of water. If she was looking for Him at all, she doubtless expected Him to be announced with some heralding of wonder, in some array of visible glory, on Mount Gerizim. How is it with you, my friends? Do you expect to find God at Church, in some statement of formal religious truth, or in some gush of sympathetic devotion. Do you expect to find

Him in humble scene and commonplace events? There is just where you will find Him—in the duties, the cares, the trials and the toils of your daily experience and intercourse. The real strength or weakness of a man appears in every-day issues. It is one of the greatest mistakes in the world to be looking for great occasions to set off our acts of duty and fidelity. You meet Christ by the wayside in every duty that calls you from wrong to right. Oh, in common events and humble circumstances you often pass Him by.

Note how free, spontaneous and effective His teaching was on this occasion! Why was it so? Because with Jesus religion was a real thing, while with people generally it is the most unreal thing in the whole world. People when talking about it put on a face and assume a voice which they do not use when talking about anything else. Now this unreal way in which we hold religion makes religion unreal to others. With Christ it was the one great reality. It was in His heart—in His soul. It was the one vital power, the one great absorbing passion of His whole being. And wherever He was, that reality transfigured the scene into a proper occasion and condition. Religion isn't a form of words, or a set of doctrines, but it is—life. Life is reality. Nineteen hundred years ago they could not confine Him to the church. If Jesus had not met the Samaritan woman by the wayside, all the Samaritans would not have heard of Him. The wayside opportunity—the touch with nature.

How did Jesus act? He was natural. Oh! if we could only be natural in religion. Jesus was natural in His religion, and there is no real religion without it. Be natural. Go into your work for God just as you would go through your day's work for yourself.

This idea of feeling more religious because he's got his Sunday clothes on, or going to some religious function, is simply grotesquely absurd. You're not to say at the close of the service—"Ah, now, that's over. I've been religious." Here we have only the attitude of religion. Outside you are to act religion. Jesus dealt with religion as a real thing.

Nine-tenths of the religious observances of today constitute the outside or external appearance.

It was so natural for the Master to ask for water on this warm day. Ah, then He said, "If you had asked Me, I would have given you living water." Then He told her the wonder of His meaning in that simple but sublime saying.

He didn't say, "Thou terrible woman of Samaria, prepare to meet thy God." She would have run away. He did not take advantage of His superiority. He broke it gently to her—"If thou knew-est"—then He went on naturally, in unfolding His divine message. If we assumed that attitude every person in this town would be a Christian. If we go to them and put our arms about them and tell them they can only be saved by a heart union with God, the tears would come to their eyes and they would open their hearts to the Savior.

—What is the difference between Jew, Hebrew and Israelite? The question has been answered by a Jewish rabbi, as follows: The three words are used interchangeably to day, and designate the same person, a devotee of the Mosaic faith. Originally, Hebrew was applied to Abraham and his immediate descendents, because they came from "the region beyond," which the word Eber signifies. Israelite comes from the fact that the twelve tribes descended from the twelve sons of Israel. Later, when the ten tribes were lost, and what was left of them became assimilated with the tribe of Judah, the region where they dwelt became known as Judea, and the inhabitants as Judeans, of which Jew is a corruption.—Youth's Companion.

RELIGION AND THE INTELLECT.

A life of wickedness impairs the intellectual faculties. Sin is an element of decay and its forces are as manifest in the mental powers as in the physical forces. A corrupt heart darkens the understanding and weakens the thought energies. We are often referred to certain very brilliant men who were saturated with vice. But who shall say what wonderful things they might have achieved had they been sober and pure men. As a rule they did not live out half their days, and no one can know what great things they would have done had they lived an upright life. Many years would doubtless have been added to their term of labor here. One thing is certain, the notes of their song would have been higher and sweeter if they had lived a god life.

One cannot talk with a confirmed criminal ten minutes without discovering that his iniquities have disturbed or destroyed that delicate adjustment between his intellectual faculties and the order of the universe which nature intended. He has lost the art of finding truth. His conclusions are habitually wrong. The evil in his life and heart has distorted and perverted his logical faculty. His thinking is on such a low plane that his faculties are always working in deep shadows. God is light, and whoever walks with Him walks in the light. He is the fountain of truth, and whoever draws near to Him abides in an atmosphere of truth. Truth is the food upon which the intellectual faculties thrive. Fellowship with God is favorable to high thinking. If you would have a clear head you must have a clean heart.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN VERSUS HEATHEN SCHOOLS.

There is no question but what if the heathen nations are to be redeemed, if pagan civilization is to be transformed and replaced by a civilization Christian in principle and in practice, we must reach and influence and hold the children.

True, the Chinese Government is establishing schools all about us, but in these the pupils have to bow down to, and burn incense before, the tablet of Confucius and perform all the heathen rites and ceremonies required of heathen teachers. Our Christian pupils cannot conscientiously attend these schools, as you at once see. Farther, we have a more competent corps of teachers than the Government has, and often the people who are not Christians prefer to send their children to our schools. A Chinaman is observing and can see a thing or two. We must continue to give better instruction than the Government schools can so we shall not only hold our Christian boys and girls, but draw the children from the heathen homes, a thing we are constantly doing.—The Bulletin, of Fuhkien, China.

Remember, you are not a tree that can stand alone—you are only "a branch;" and it is only while you abide in Him as a branch that you will flourish.—Sel.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We come this week with a great report—$90.30 in cash and a long list of donations from the good women of the Burlington Christian Church. We are so glad to have so many monthly Sunday school offerings come this week. This source of our income is growing nicely. We are grateful to Bro. L. Carlton Laey, Dr. Smith, and W. D. Johnson, also Mt. Auburn Church.

We thank Bro. and Sister Talbert for the $25.00 as a memorial to their dear little child. As yet we have not decided how this amount shall be invested. We feel that such gifts to our Orphan's Home are very appropriate and we will soon let you know how it has been invested.

Our signs have come and the friends who have so kindly furnished rooms will see them plainly but permanently marked.

We print a memoriam this week from Bro. Talbert to his deceased child. We extend deep sympathy in their loss, and gratitude for this liberal gift.

 Dear Cousins:

It is my time to write now about my work. I mend shoes and over-see to the grazing of the cows. I tell you, it is a job to mend all of these little fellows' shoes. I get a good deal of shoe work to do for the town people. I could get along a little faster if I had a machine to do my sewing with.

I guess my story is long enough, so I will close for this time.

IN MEMORIAM.

Edmunds Boyd Talbert, born August 24, 1908, died May 10, 1910.

He is gone, but not forgotten;

And, Oh, how much we miss him still!
 Our home is all so lonely;

No one else his place can fill.

Just one year ago he left us;

And how long the time has been;

But we know he's safe in heaven,

Where no sin can enter in.

Good-bye, Boyd, on earth forever,

Till we meet beyond the sky

In that land of joy and gladness

Where we'll never say good-bye.

Good-bye, darling, till we meet you

In that glory land above,

There we'll understand your going

There we'll share the Savior's love.

"Oh, how sweet it will be,

In that beautiful land,

So free from all sorrow and pain!

With songs on our lips

And with harps in our hands,

To meet one another again."

Father.

Phillips.

Sister Candis Esther Phillips was born June 8th, 1847, died April 19th, 1911.

She was married to J. C. Phillips Jan. 18, 1866. To this union were born 12 children. Three preceded her to the home above, one son and two daughters. She leaves a husband, and nine children, three sons and six daughters. She professed faith in Christ very early in life and united with Center Union Methodist Church. After her marriage she joined the Presbyterian Church with her husband. They owned a home near where Rev. D. F. Jones organized a Christian Church and called Grace's Chapel. Brother and Sister Phillips joined this church, he being chosen a deacon. Sister Phillips leaves a large family of grand children, a host of friends to mourn their loss. The blessings of the Lord be upon and keep the dear motherless children.

The funeral was conducted by the writer. A loyal church member has gone to rest.

Norfleet.

Isaac Walter Norfleet was born in Nansmond Co., Va., Aug. 8, 1850, and died April 3, 1911. He came to Franklin in the year 1871, and was one of its oldest, truest, and most beloved citizens. He was twice married, first to Miss Cora Cobb. From this union one son survives him, Walter H. Norfleet. His present wife was Mrs. Clifford Leath. Three children of the second marriage survive, Linwood B., Virginia, and Albert. There are two brothers, and two sisters living, Wm. H. and R. C. Norfleet, Holland, and Mrs. J. W. Barrett, Norfolk, Va., and Mrs. Joel Cutchen, Roanoke, Va.

Bro. Norfleet had been engaged in business in Franklin for forty years, and was loved by all who knew him. I clip the following from one of the local papers: "It requires no effort to say of our departed friend that he was a good and true man; it is naught but the simple truth to praise him as one in whom all held the fullest confidence, whose life was a 'Living epistle, known and read of all men,' whose days were spent in conscientious effort to live the Christian life, to fulfil the greatest commandment, that he should love his neighbor as himself. He was loyal and unswerving to the cause of Christ, and always found in the forefront of those who wrought for their town the highest endeavors of Christian citizenship."

In early life he gave his heart to the Lord, and united with the Christian Church. He was a charter member of the Franklin Christian Church, and was the senior Deacon. He was the Superintendent of the Sunday school for twenty-four years, and taught the infant class for twenty years. He attended more religious services than any other person in Franklin. He attended all services at his own church, whether for the old or the young, and would join in other services when there was none at his own. He was present and taught his class the day before his death, and at the close of the Sunday-school made a short talk, saying as he closed, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

The end came suddenly. He had suffered from grippe, and acute indigestion, but was able to be at his store a part of the time. He was going to his place of business on Monday, April 3, and was walking with Mr. L. L. Hatfield when stricken with heart failure, and he exclaimed, "Brother Hatfield, I am gone," and expired almost instantly. The funeral was conducted from his church by the pastor, assisted by Rev. J. L. McCutcheon, of the Baptist Church, Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D., of the M. E. Church, and Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, and Rev. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va. The church would not accommodate the great company that gathered to pay their last tribute of respect. The Masons took part in the burial services.

The following Sunday almost the entire Sunday-school was moved to tears when the infant class went to their accustomed place, and began weeping when some one else went forward to teach them. He was a good man, and many hearts are sad because he is gone. He often said, "Enoch walked with God, and it is my privilege to walk with God," and we believe he did. And as God took Enoch, we feel sure He has taken him.

May heaven's blessings be upon the bereaved family, and may the Church which he loved so well be inspired by his noble life.

C. H. Rowland.

Clem.

Anne Elizabeth Clem was born April 22, 1845 and died May 6, 1911, aged 66 years and 14 days. She leaves three brothers and one sister to mourn their loss. Her husband, Franklin Clem, died about two years ago. She was held in high esteem by all who knew her. The greater part of her life was spent in the neighborhood of Joppa Christian Church in Powell's Fort. Funeral services were conducted by the writer Sunday, May 7, at Oak Level M. E. Church, of which the deceased was a member for a number of years prior to her death.

OUR FATHER'S HOUSE.

By H. A. Brown.

Surely Jesus would have never touched that tender chord about our Father's house if He had not intended to satisfy the immortal yearnings of our spiritual natures.

It may be all right that we should be immensely concerned about the progress of His Kingdom here and now. It is well that we should give ourselves to unremitting efforts to build up His cause on the earth. But one supreme inspiration in service and suffering here is the thought of fellowship and unending blessedness in the Father's house above. We are pilgrims, folding our tents each night a day's march nearer home.

When Bunyan saw his pilgrim pass through the shining gates and receive a greeting from those gone before he could but wish himself there. Judson said: "I am not tired of my work, neither am I tired of the world; yet when Christ calls me home, I shall go with the gladness of a boy bounding away from school."

We are coming, blessed Master, slowly coming, through the dust and toil and chastened suffering up to our Father's house—Biblical Recorder.

APPRECIATION.

Some times we have letters beginning like this: "Please excuse me for not writing sooner," "Look over my negligence," etc., when, in fact, it would have been better to have asked no pardon nor render any excuse so far as the good contained in the message sent was concerned.

The same may be said by some one of what follows in this article. But I'll tell you, Bro. Editor, I have read so many good things in The Christian Sun of late that I just can't keep from writing something, if it is only a few complimentary words to the Editor for the work he is doing for the church. I have referred several times to last week's Sun as being the richest copy I ever saw, and I have been a regular reader for 31 years. It seems that since the Sun put on its new face it doesn't only look neater, but shines more brightly. Oh, how I do wish more of our people would take, read and live the many good things offered them each week through the columns of The Sun.

I didn't start out to write about The Sun, nor its Editor, but I believe that when we have a good thing we ought to let the people know it, and when a man is doing a good thing we ought to let him know that we have found it out, and encourage him in every way possible. Preaching is hard work, but I imagine that editing and publishing a church paper is harder. I feel sure of one fact, that both the preacher and the Editor needs more encouragement than they get. Say, Bro. Editor, did you ever fill your paper with the very best products of a week's research and hard study and when your work had gone out to its final destination and you remember how sure you felt every body would enjoy it and that out of all your readers some one would say so, but you waited—the time passed and no "viva Atkinson," and then you felt that either you esteemed your efforts more than others or else others did not appreciate them as they ought. I have, before now, been delivering the result of a hard week's study to a congregation when it seemed to me that if I were in the pew and the other fellow in the pulpit I could not have held my place and not even an "Amen" would I hear except occasionally from an old time Methodist who had learned not to be ashamed, even in the church to endorse a thing when it suited them. The one thing that hurts more than almost any other thing is to wait until the editor is dead and gone and then come along with the bouquets which can not possibly do the poor fellow any good. Brother, if you have any bouquets or other tokens of love and respect to offer the earnest toilers in the matter of soul-saving, don't wait until the ear is deaf, the eye is dim, the heart is still and the body cold in death. I am sure that the editor would appreciate his readers more if they would only let him know how they appreciate the noble work that he is doing for the church of God. The easiest and most pleasant pastoral work I ever have is with the church that is most loyal to its church paper. Long live the editor and longer live the Sun.

Well, Brother Atkinson, you have often had the questions propounded: How shall we increase the membership of our Sunday school? and How shall we interest our old people in Sunday school work? etc. I thing I have seen the answer to those two questions demonstrated at New Harmony in the past few weeks. For the benefit of others I will give the plan. Under the leadership of that never asleep, but ever wide-awake and enthusiastic Superintendent, Bro. E. B. Lashley, his mother, and Sister W. D. Mitchell were appointed as leaders of an equal number of pupils who agreed to canvass the community the following week for new pupils. The result was the enrollment of 58 new pupils the next Sunday. The efforts were continued the 2nd week and 50 new names were added. That was the first Sunday inst., and I have not heard from them since. It seems that is the way to get them in, but there arises another question of equal importance, and that is: How can we keep them in? If any reader of The Sun has the answer to this question, please let us have it.

The Sunday school is the nursery or grazing ground for the church and the more care and attention is given to it the stronger and better will be the future church.

New Harmony, my only church for the year, is on a boom, and it is largely due to the untiring efforts of Supt. E. B. Lashley, his good mother, and Sister Mitchell. Thank God for such helpers and workers as they are.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Winchester Letter.

The services at Timber Ridge were largely attended last Sunday. They have a good Sunday School and an interesting Christian Endeavor. Our attendance at Winchester is as good as could be expected under the circumstances.

Our church building is ready for the plasterers. They expect to begin work this week. We have our money matters so arranged, that if our friends will send us a liberal contribution RIGHT NOW we will be able to complete our house without any financial embarrassment. The writer has been so busy at the building for the last few weeks that very little time has been left for soliciting. The following contributions have been received:

Raleigh.

Our church has enjoyed a good revival this month. We had with us Evangelist Robert V. Miller of Hendersondale, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Butler, of Springfield, Ill., singers, and Miss Mary Anderson, also of Springfield, Pianits. The party did excellent work. Scores of souls were saved and many added to the church. Rev. Robert Miller is one of the best Bible teachers in America. He had great liberty here. His work is abiding.

Charles Butler and his wife are the best Gospel singers on the road. Miss Anderson is with the noted Evangelist, Doctor R. A. Torry. She will play for him on his tour through England. They sail August 27th. The party except Rev. Mr. Miller are at this date assisting Doctor Staley in a meeting in his church at Suffolk, Va.

The meeting just closed means much in the development of our Raleigh Church. Nothing tells like a good revival, but other work must be done to make a church grow and prosper.

Steps will be taken in the very near future to improve our church property. We need a better building and more room. We plead for the prayers and co-operation of the people in our effort to build up our Raleigh Church. L. F. Johnson.

Valley Letter.

I have just closed my eleventh revival for this year, and am at home for a little rest and study. This has been a very strenuous year thus far, but have been blessed with the very best of health and strength, and although I have been in revivals almost constantly since last Oct., I am holding my own pretty well.

The meetings not yet reported to the Sun are those held at Linville, Beulah, and Dry Run. They resulted in three, four, and five conversions, respectively, all of whom were received into the church. we think that aside from the visible results much good was done. At Dry Run especially, there seemed to be an awakening on the part of some who had hitherto appeared to be proof against the sword of the spirit. All of those who united with the church there are the heads of families. We have now about thirty-six members there and they are becoming enthused over the idea of building a new church. The old free church that we have been using is often too small to accommodate the congregations. Our people there, though few in numbers, are a loyal band and will doubtless erect a TENDENCY.

The difference between people and things is that things stay where they are and people move. Anything that stays where it is, whether it be an idea, a government, or a system of divinity, stagnates and dwindles down into nothing but a thing.

The difference between people and things is that things stay what they are and people change. It is in the condition of change that is embedded the chance to grow. People grow because they move on. Anything that stays where it is must stop at what it is. It is a finished product.

The difference between people and other living creatures is in the direction they are going, because the direction they are going determines the way they are growing and what they are becoming.

It is a matter of tendency. It is not a matter of heredity or environment or any or everything else so much as it is the matter of tendency that determines the dignity of life. And this fact is true, whether the realm be human or divine

God is not so much a finished product as a being whose personality is packed with divine tendency. On one occasion, Jesus said to his disciples: "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." He was speaking of the tendency of His life. He was going somewhere. He lived with His face towards destiny. He was not wandering aimlessly down the aisles of time. He was not strolling purposeless across the field of human history. Somewhere on the far away, eternal horizon was a goal and He was moving towards that goal. Nothing could halt or retard or divert or intimidate or discourage or keep Him back from His destination. His life possessed the element of tendency and the tendency of His life determined His career."—Dr. James I. Vance.

EDITORIAL.

GOD, GRACIOUS AND MERCIFUL.

Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger. Neh. 9:17. (Golden Text for Sunday, June 4).

Any one who has followed, at all closely, the lessons of the year, has certainly been overwhelmed with the sense of man's weakness, waywardness, and wickedness, and of God's goodness, graciousness, and forgiveness. We have certainly had a series of vivid, rich and realistic pictures of man's passion for indulgence; and of God's willingness to show mercy and compassion. Unless human nature has greatly changed within the centuries the human heart is wonderfully perverse; and unless the divine nature has greatly altered the divine heart is marvellously merciful and tender and full of pity and compassion. One king after another in Israel did more than his predecessor to provoke the people to wickedness, sin, and idolatry. Israel, with all of God's favors and blessings showered upon them went after strange gods, set up idol worship, and went into all manner of wickedness. Yet God was merciful, gracious, generous, forgiving beyond measure.

In the lesson of today, with Israel steeped in sin, shame and idolatry, a preacher of righteousness, a prophet of God, comes from among the people, comes to the people, and begs them to turn unto God and receive pardon, pity and forgiveness.

"O, Israel, return unto Jehovah thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." Surely was it by Israel's iniquity that Israel had fallen; and yet if Israel would just return to the Lord, and ask forgiveness, He was willing and ready to pardon. It seemed as though God longed to take Israel back into His arms, into His tender loving care, and literally kiss away all their sin and shame and crime. We cannot, by any sort of human measurement reckon God's boundless mercy. Dr. Talmage once drew this picture: "I know of a father who, after his son came back to him the fourth time, said: 'No! I forgave you three times, you have broken me in health and in finance, and now I will never take you back or forgive you again.'" And the son went away with a broken heart, and died in sorrow and in sin. But God takes back those who come to Him the thousandth time as cheerfully as the first."

Hosea wept over the wickedness and waywardness of a perverse generation; but he knew if his people would only come back and ask God's forgiveness, God would freely and abundantly pardon.

The way of salvation is wide. It is as wide as God's mercy, as broad as God's blessings and benefits. Repentance and faith are the gates thereto. And though sin has carried one far away, and very deep, into the wilds and woods, the Father's voice sounds loud and clear, and the Father's house is wide open to receive and to welcome.

"In my Father's house are many mansions." Very many, and the way that leads thereto is spanned by two gates that are ready to spring wide open, the gates of Repentance and Faith. "Whosoever will may come."

SEEKING VISIONS.

The world's good and great have been visionary. The prophets in Judah and in Israel were, even in times of wickedness and oppression, optimistic. They dared tell of a better time to come; of larger and fuller events and measures that were to be.

World movements had their origin in visions. Moses and Elijah and David and Solomon and Ezekiel and Peter and Paul and Luther and Knox and Calvin and Beecher and Spurgeon and Moody and Brooks had visions. Not fancies and idle dreams; but visions that absorbed their soul and provoked all the strength and energy they possessed.

The most visionary of all men was Christ. In a corrupt age he saw a time when every knee should bow to Him, and every tongue His name confess. He had not where on earth to lay His head; and sought not to achieve or purchase one; but He talked of His Father's house in which were many mansions, that house not made with hands, eternal and beyond the skies. He sought to rear no temple here, but told of a temple that, though it should be raised in three days, would endure forever. In a day and time of tyranny and oppression, He told of a time when all men should be free, and when the meek should inherit the earth.

The greatest book ever written is the most visionary of all books. The Bible is a book of visions. It opens with a vision of creation, proceeds with a vision of redemption, and closes with a vision of triumph and victory.

The age is materialistic. The world rushes on. Men are money mad. Everybody is in a hurry. There is no time for meditation. Visions are flung to the winds as being idle and of no avail.

Solomon was a wise man, and long years ago, out of the depths of his wisdom and knowledge and experience he cried "Where there is no vision the people perish." This busy time needs to seek and to see visions; visions of goodness, of truth, of beauty, of glory and of God.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Woodrow Wilson.—Woodrow Wilson, former President of Princeton, now Governor of New Jersey, has sprung into national fame and significance as "the successful scholar in politics," and is attracting wide attention by his reforms in New Jersey, and his utterances in many places touching government. A Washington newspaper man has taken a poll of the members of Congress as to the popularity of Wilson and four out of every five Democrats in Congress favor Wilson as the next Democratic nominee for the presidency. Up to the time he was nominated for Governor of New Jersey Dr. Wilson had given his time and talent to teaching, and to educational interests, though a close student of government and state-craft, as his books on those topics indicate. His "The State," is used as a text book on Civil Government in many colleges and universities, and his "History of the United States" is in wide usage also. The incident of Dr. Wilson's popularity in politics is significant and unique, as it is not often the case that the politicians seek the "classic shades" to find a leader.

If the nominating conventions were this summer instead of a year off, in all probability the Republicans would name President Taft as their standard bearer and the Democrats Governor Wilson. But no one can tell what a twelve months will bring forth in politics.

Without Deity or The Bible.—When the new president of the Mexican Republic was sworn into office May 26, the oath of office was taken without the use of a Bible, and the name of Deity was not used. Both God and the Bible were altogether ignored. All of which sounded strange to an American. It had been rumored that if Madero, the revolutionist, gained the ascendancy bull fighting would be stopped. Madero bitterly denied this and to prove that he was a friend to the brutal custom cited the fact that during the brief period he was in charge of Juarez he allowed two bull fights. Mexico is in a bad way, and the gospel has untold work to do there. "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord."

A Modern Gomorrah.—Reno, Nevada, still keeps up its unenviable record as a place of attraction for wickedness of sundry types. Made famous in particular some months ago by attracting, and protecting, Jeffries and Johnson, the pugilists, and the numerous pillagers and gamblers that followed in their train, it is determined not to lose its distinction for unsavory incidents and immoral events. It advertises to the world, among other attractions equally as wicked, the ready possibility of securing divorcees, annulment of marriage vows, by as many as will come and pay the small money consideration. And the business flourishes. A few days ago, according to reports in the papers a Pullman car arrived filled with New York women who wanted divorcees—a car load of women seeking divorcees all from one town. All were no doubt successful in their quest, for Reno offers to make good in all manner of wickedness. This indeed is a shame, not upon Reno only, but upon a Christian country that allows and patronizes such a city of shame and iniquity.

Costly Revenue.—There is a revenue which costs far more to collect than it amounts to after it is collected. Baltimore has now a case of this sort. The Anti-Saloon League of Baltimore offered a prize of $500. to the one who would write the best essay on "What it Costs the City to Collect its million dollars a year in Taxes From its Liquor Traffic." Dr. John Roach Stratton was awarded the prize on a paper that gave in detail convincing facts that went to show an outlay of $50,000,000 by the people of the city on saloons, decreased efficiency of labor, etc., in order for the city to get one million. And the writer did not enumerate or calculate the blood and the tears and the suffering and the broken hearts and wrecked lives resulting from the liquor traffic in the city. He only calculated the money side, one of the least sides of the liquor situation.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The fiscal year of the college closed May 25th. The reports made to the Finance Committee at this time show the college in better condition financially as to income and earning capacity, than during any previous year of its history and of course President Moffitt is in a pleasant mood over this encouraging fact. The enrollment too, during this year is somewhat larger than during that of any former year. These facts encourage the President and his co-laborers in their arduous work.

The college community has begun to put on its commencement airs. The student body just at this time is deeply engrossed in examinations and perhaps for the different programs to be rendered at the close of the session. The largest class in Elon's history this year graduates, there being 16 who will receive the bachelors degrees, three who will receive the degree of Licentiate of Instruction in the Teachers Course and others who will receive the Masters degree. In addition to this there will be six teachers certificates awarded in the Music Department and perhaps two in the Fine Arts and two in the Department of Business Practice.

The commencement promises to be largely attendal. The request from visitors for accommodations during the coming year has never been so large before. The Baccalaureate sermon this year is to be delivered by Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Burlington, N. C., pastor of the first Christian Church there. The Literary address is to be delivered by Chief Justice Clark of Raleigh, N. C. The Bibles are to be awarded by Rev. T. E. White. DeRoy L. Fonville, Esq., Charlotte, N. C., will deliver the medals to the members of the Senior class.

Mr. Tom Trogdon of Burlington spent Sunday with President Moffitt. Mr. Trogdon is an old Elon student, and of course found a warm welcome here.

Mr. S. M. Atkinson and S. M. Patton of the class of '09 were on the Hill on last Sunday. Mr. Patton has been teaching at Greenback, Tenn., and Mr. Atkinson at Meridian, Miss.

Mr. Albert Riggsbee a former Elon student, spent Sunday with his aunt, Mrs. C. A. Boone.

Mrs. M. G. Rietzel who was at one time Matron at our West Dormitory, but who is now an instructor in the Appalachian Training School, Boone, N. C., spent several days on the Hill last week, returning to Greensboro Sunday.

Miss Mary Hobby of Raleigh, N. C., is spending some time with her sister, Mrs. M. A. Atkinson.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, of the Central Printing Co., Richmond, Va., spent a few days on the Hill and visiting his father north of town last week. Prof. is always a welcome guest here and we were all glad to see him.

Mrs. Sarah Kernodle Proctor of Lumberton, N. C., spent last Friday with Mrs. R. J. Kernodle.

Several of our students went to Chapel Hill this week to the commencement.

NORFOLK LETTER

The Memorial Christian Temple has sustained a distinct loss in the death of deacon C. L. Guynn. He was stricken with typhoid fever, developed pneumonia, and then peritonitis—and all that medical skill and loving hands could do failed to stay the ravages of the disease, and Monday about noon God took him home. He was buried from the church Wednesday afternoon at 4:00 o'clock. The funeral was conducted by the pastor, Bro. Howsare, assisted by Rev. P. S. Sailer of Lynn, Mass., a former pastor who came here to attend the funeral, and Rev. R. A. Robinson of Colly Memorial Presbyterian church of this city, who had been associated with him in Rescue work for boys in this city. I had known Bro. Guynn and been associated with him in church and Sunday school work for about ten years. He was not a man of wealth or of extraordinary talents, but he used his all for his Haster. It has never been my privilege to be associated with any one more faithful and liberal to the full extent of his ability than was our brother. It was the general expression from every one, "He was a good man." I think that one of the best things that can be said of one. The worth and esteem in which he was held was attested by one of the most beautiful and profuse floral displays it has been my privilege to see. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, three daughters, and two sons.

Again the death angel has visited the Third Church and Sunday school, this time taking home little Mildred Nichols, four and one-half year old daughter of Bro. and Sister J. E. Nichols. Monday she was in her usual health but was a sufferer from adanoids and enlarged tonsils and it was decided best to remove them, which was done by a surgical operation. She recovered nicely, but a few hours later hemorrhage set in, from which she died in a short time. It was a great shock and grief to the family and friends. The funeral was held from the church Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. Bro. Sailer, who arrived that morning, was present and assisted the pastor, Bro. Howsare, in the service.

The pall bearers were four boys from the Sunshine Society.

Bro. Sailer remained over Sunday, preached at the Temple in the morning and gave us a good sermon at night.

Miss Gertrude Allen of Chilacothie, O., added to the service by very sweetly singing Rock of Ages. She has a rich soprano voice and is director of a large choir in her home city.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Johnson will sympathize with them in the critical illness of their baby son, Lloyd.

J. W. Manning.

—A most important bill has been introduced in the House by Representative Mann, the Republican leader, providing that post-offices shall not be opened on Sunday for the delivery of mail to the public. This is in line with the recent policy of the Post-Office Department, and certainly it is in line with Christian sentiment everywhere.—Ex.

THE BOOK OF SUPREME INFLUENCE.

At Chicago, on May 4, at the celebration of the 300th anniversary of the King James translation of the Bible, Mr. W. J. Bryan delivered the following address:

For nineteen hundred years the battle between the spiritual and the material conceptions of life has raged around the Bible. "Search the Scriptures," was the command of Christ and to the Scriptures the Christian world has turned ever since for its authority.

Atheists and materialists have assailed the Bible at every point; they have disputed the facts which it sets forth and ridiculed the prophecies which it recites; they have rejected the account which it gives of the creation and scoffed at the miracles which it records. They have denied the existence of the God of the Bible and have sought to reduce the Savior to the stature of a man. They have been as bold as the prophets of Baal in defying the Living God and in heaping contempt upon the written Word. Why not challenge the atheists and the materialists to put their doctrines to the test? When Elijah was confronted by a group of scornful who mocked at the Lord whom he worshiped, he invited them to match the power of their God against the power of his and he was willing to concede superiority to the one who would answer with fire. When the challenge was accepted he built an altar, prepared a sacrifice, and then, to leave no room for doubt, he poured water upon the wood and the sacrifice—poured until the water filled the trenches round about. So firm was his trust that he even taunted his adversaries with their failure while his proofs were yet to be presented. The prophets of Baal, he it said to their credit, had enough confidence in their god to agree to the test, and their disappointment was real when he failed them—they gashed themselves with knives when their entreaties were unanswered.

Why not a Bible test? The Book of Books has lived and grown through the centuries; we are celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the King James translation. The Christian world has confidence in the Bible; it presents the book as the word of God but the attacks made upon it by its enemies continue in spite of the growth of the Bible's influence. The Christian world, by its attitude, presents a challenge to the opposition and this is an opportune moment to emphasize the challenge—the moment when Christianity over the world is celebrating the triumphs that the Bible has won during the past three centuries.

Is the Bible the work of man, or is it an inspired book? Is it the product of human wisdom, or did its authors speak as they were commanded by the Lord?

Atheists and materialists declare that it is merely the work of man—that it was written under the limitations that apply to human wisdom. Taking this position, they must necessarily contend that, unless man has degenerated in ability and declined in wisdom, he can now produce a book equal to the Bible. Let them produce it.

Judged by human standards, man is far better prepared to write a Bible now than he was when our Bible was written. The characters whose words and deeds are recorded in the Bible were members of a single race; they lived among the hills of Palestine in a territory scarcely larger than one of our counties. They did not have printing presses and they lacked the learning of the schools; they had no great libraries to consult, no steam boats to carry them around the world and make them acquainted with the various centers of ancient civilization; they had no telegraph wires to bring them the news from the ends of the earth and no newspapers to spread before them each morning the doings of the day before. Science had not unlocked Nature's door and revealed the secrets of rocks below and stars above. From what a scantily supplied storehouse of knowledge they had to draw, compared with the unlimited wealth of information at man's command today! And yet these Bible characters grapple with every problem that confronts mankind, from the creation of the world to eternal life beyond the tomb. They have given us a diagram of man's existence from the cradle to the grave and they have set up sign posts at every dangerous point along the path. We turn back to the Bible for the Ten Commandments which form the foundation for our statute law and for the Sermon on the Mount, which lays down the rules for our spiritual growth. The Bible gives us the story of the birth, the words, the works, the crucifixion, the resurrection and the ascension of him whose coming was foretold in prophecy, whose arrival was announced by the Angel voices, singing Peace and Good-will—the story of Him who gave to the world a code of morality superior to anything that the world had known before or has known since—the story of Him who is the growing figure of all time, whom the world is accepting as Savior and as the perfect example.

Let the atheists and the materialists produce a better Bible than ours, if they can. Let them collect the best of their school to be found among the graduates of universities—as many as they please and from every land. Let the members of this selected group travel where they will, consult such libraries as they please, and employ every modern means of swift communication. Let them glean in the fields of geology, botany, astronomy, biology and zoology, and then roam at will wherever science has opened a way; let them take advantage of all the progress in art and in literature, in oratory and in history—let them use to the full every instrumentality that is employed in modern civilization; and when they have exhausted every source let them embody the results of their best intelligence in a book and offer it to the world as a substitute for this Bible of ours. Have they the confidence that the prophets of Baal had in their God? Will they try? If not, what excuse will they give? Has man fallen from his high estate, so that we cannot rightfully expect as much of him now as nineteen centuries ago? Or does the Bible come to us from a source that is higher than man—which?

But our case is even stronger. The opponents of the Bible cannot take refuge in the plea that man is retrograding. They loudly proclaim that man has grown and that he is growing still. They boast of a world-wide advance and their claim is founded upon fact. In all matters except in the science of life, man has made wonderful progress. The mastery of the mind over the forces of nature seems almost complete, so far do we surpass the ancients in harnessing the water, the wind and the lightning.

For ages, the rivers plunged down the mountain sides and exhausted their energies without any appreciable contribution to man's service; now they are estimated as so many units of horse-power and we find that their fretting and their foaming was merely a language which they employed to tell us of their strength and of their willingness to work for us. And, while falling water is becoming each day a larger factor in burden bearing, water, rising in the form of steam, is revolutionizing the transportation methods of the world.

The wind that first whispered its secret of strength to the flapping sail is now turning the wheel at the well.

Lightning, the dread demon that, from the dawn of Creation, has been rushing down its zigzag path through the clouds as if intent only upon spreading death has been metamorphosed into an errand-boy and brings us illumination from the sun and carries our messages around the globe.

Inventive genius has multiplied the power of a human arm and supplied the masses with comforts of which the rich did not dare to dream a few centuries ago. Science is ferreting out the hidden causes of disease and teaching us how to prolong life. In every line, except in the line of character-building, the world seems to have been made over, but the marvelous changes by which old things have become new only emphasize the fact that man, too, must be born again, while they show how impotent are material things to touch the soul of man and transform him into a spiritual being. Wherever the moral standard is being lifted up—wherever life is becoming larger in the vision that directs it and richer in its fruitage, the improvement is traceable to the Bible and to the influence of the God and Christ of whom the Bible tells.

The atheist and the materialist must confess that man ought to be able to produce a better book today than man, unaided, could have produced in any previous age. The fact that they have tried, time and time again, only to fail each time more hopelessly, explains why they will not—why they cannot—accept the challenge thrown down by the Christian world to produce a book worthy to take the Bible's place.

They have prayed to their God to answer with fire—prayed to inanimate matter with an earnestness that is pathetic—they have employed in the worship of blind force a faith greater than religion requires, but their Almighty is asleep. How long will they allow the search for the strata of stone and fragments of fossil and decaying skeletons that are strewn around the house to absorb their thoughts to the exclusion of the architect who planned it all! How long will the agnostic, closing his eyes to the plainest truths, cry "night, splendor announces that noon is here."

The Bible has stamped its impress upon the map of the world; its boundaries are clearly marked and the light that emanates from the Christian nations is flowing outward toward those who sit in darkness. Back of the progress that marks the present day is the code of morals that Christ proclaimed and back of that code of morals is the divine character of Him who is both Son of God and Savior of Mankind. It is not necessary to rely upon his birth as a virgin's child or upon his mysterious resurrection to prove his claim to our worship. "He walks today along the shores of every sea" and performs that continuing miracle which we behold when a man begins "to hate the things he loved and to love the things he hated"—that mysterious exercise of mysterious power that converts the selfish, self-centered human being into a center from which good influences flow out in every direction.

The followers of Buddha may look upon life as a misfortune, if they will, and see escape only in the loss of individual identity—"the dew drop melting into the sea;" those who believe in the Bible will still regard life as a great opportunity to be crowned with a Heavenly reward.

The followers of the Arab prophet may put their faith in force and rely upon the sword for proselyting power; those who believe in the Bible will still trust in the persuasive influence of love and depend upon its manifestations to bring recruits to the army of the Prince of Peace.

The followers of Confucius may content themselves with the negative philosophy of their teacher; those who believe in the Bible renew their strength in proportion as they embody in their lives the precepts of Him who would make man a positive force for good—an overflowing spring.

The materialist may confine his thoughts to the things that the senses can weigh and measure; the Christian's faith reaches out toward the throne above and takes hold upon the verities that the mind cannot grasp.

The atheist may delude himself with the thought that he has driven God out of the universe; the Christian sees the Creator everywhere, hears His voice in the promptings of conscience and feels His presence in his heart.

To the doubts and "I do not know's" of the agnostic, the Christian, Bible in hand, answers: "I believe."

IMPRECATORY PSALMS.

There is one denominational paper, the "Christian Register," that usually contains some editorial statement, apparently adapted to undermining respect for the Bible. The following passage, unmodified, I find in its issue of March 16th, 1911:

"John Wesley omitted the imprecatory Psalms as not fit to be a part of Christian worship."

The so-called "advanced thinkers" of the critic class sometimes take delight in pointing out the harshness of some of the psalms.

And yet these pert "thinkers" would have no real sense that the imprecatory psalms were not in harmony with the highest human emotions, were not those psalms bound up in the same volume with the other teachings of the Bible, which revealed spiritual principles. They are fouling the very fountain, whose waters quench their professed thirst for loving doctrine.

It is the Bible, whose affectionate teachings have developed in these critics the intellectual theory that God is love.

I say intellectual theory, believing that their conception that God is love does not sufficiently reach their hearts to soften away the snarling instincts of the beasts of prey, from which ancestry they profess to have descended. If they have so descended, even physically and mentally, the laws of heredity may influence them to attack, criticise and roar around the tents of those who believe they are the children of their heavenly Father.

But what if Wesley was a fool about the imprecatory psalms! Wesley is not our leader, or instructor, in any important sense. He was the man who substantially professed to have been born again seven times; though he did not word it in that way. We do not follow Wesley, we follow Jesus; and Jesus did not preach against any of the psalms. He knew more about religion and human nature than either Wesley, or David, or the "Register," or any philosopher (?) claiming to have descended from lions or gorillas.

How the critics would snarl and sneer at the Bible, if the poems written in the age of David, or thereabouts, contained only the sweetness of the words of Jesus! How they would point out that the book was an anachronism, which set them forth (those sweet doctrines), as written centuries before Christ! And if those poems had been omitted from the Bible, and afterward discovered in some ruins of Palestine, how the critics would crow over the untrue picture as to the character of the authors of the psalms, drawn by the men responsible for the Scripture canon!

It is evident that truth itself required the inclusion of the criticised psalms.

Still more, O Critic! If you condemn David so harshly for wishing his enemies, the enemies of his country, and their little ones to suffer, may it not be possible that you cast reflections on the Creator Himself, who is now allowing "little ones" in China to die of the plague, or starvation? If David wished evil on the little ones, and candidly wrote it and the Jews honestly preserved the writings, is that any worse than to fix laws of matter in such a way that "little ones" in our time are miserable, even in the most civilized lands?

And yet, God himself, the God of love, has established the laws of matter, that bring so much suffering on the "little ones."

Besides, it is very doubtful if David was sinning when wishing tremendous overthrow to the forces of evil. The weed is killed most easily when it is "little," also. God wiped out the Canaanites not only because they deserved capital punishment, but because they were of degenerate breed (notwithstanding evolution). Human beings may become moral weemin.

We should remember the principles mentioned by Dr. E. M. Banks, in the "Independent" of Feb. 9, 1911, in the following language:

"Right and wrong are neither absolute nor static conceptions, but on the contrary they are decidedly relative and dynamic descriptions of conduct—conduct being right or wrong according to the degree in which it tends to promote or retard human welfare. Those who consciously and sincerely align themselves with the forces working for the interests of an advancing civilization are in the right in the highest and best sense of the term right, while those who align themselves with causes less beneficent in their fruitage are relatively in the wrong, tho their sincerity, devotion and otherwise elevated type of character may command a lasting measure of admiration."

And if there is any elasticity to the laws of right and wrong, and if they are in any case "relative" and depend in any measure on the "degree in which they tend to promote or retard human welfare," it is certain that authority is needed to determine the issues of relation and degree; and that authority can only be found with approximate clearness in the law given by God through the experts in religion and righteousness, who wrote, gathered and preserved the Holy Scriptures. It is as sensible to criticise nature itself, as to criticise the Bible.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—At the closing exercises of Union Christian College that eminent scholar and profound thinker, Dr. J. J. Summerbell, is delivering a series of eight lectures. "Mountains of the Bible"—two lectures. "Campbellism"—five lectures. "The United State and Inferior Races"—one lecture.

—Elon College Commencement next week. The graduating class is the largest in the history of the college, the speakers are men of parts and prominence, great crowds are promised, and an inspiring occasion is assured. The exercises begin on Sunday, June 4th, with the baccalaureate sermon and close Wednesday night, June 7th, with the alumni address.

—Pastor J. O. Cox and the Durham church rejoice in the flush of victory for the kingdom. The meetings closed last Thursday evening with thirty-six professions of faith. Fifteen joined the church at the close and others were to join the following Sunday. The meetings were largely attended and the church was much revived. Rev. L. E. Smith assisted in the services and did much of the preaching.

—Col. Wade Harris of The Charlotte Evening Chronicle, is a genius and a philosopher of the most genteel type. Listen, as he replies to critics about carrying so much matter anent the graduating and college commencement season:

"It comes only once a year, and that for a short period. It is not so much of a nuisance, nor does it make such a heavy demand upon the news papers as baseball or football." None but a philosopher of the boldest type deals it out like that in our day.

—Look what a note of joy from a happy and successful pastor, Rev. N. G. Newman, May 26, "A good day at Holy Neck Sunday. Large congregation, and liberal offering, $220.15. Conference voted me a month's vacation." (This, dear brethren, in addition to a big pounding this year, bear in mind). "Our Sunday school the best yet. The Darden-Oberry Organized Bible Class numbers 80, with 'One hundred by the S. S. Convention,' the motto." Holy Neck and N. G. Newman make a pair; and this pair would make us envious, if envy could be begotten in an editor, which it can't.

—The feature of this week's Sun is the eloquent and magnificent oration of Hon. William Jennings Bryan on "The Book of Supreme Influence," delivered by this peerless orator at Chicago, May 4. It is a bold, it seems to us, an unanswerable challenge to atheists, agnostics, and all doubters of the Bible. If The Sun carried nothing else this week it would then be worth while. It will deepen any fair-minded thinker's faith in the Book, in the inspiration of the Book to read Bryan's splendid tribute. Be sure to read it, if all else in The Sun must go over this week.

—Bro. Archibald Johnson of Charity and Children never wrote in sweeter vein, nor with as tender a touch, as when in the last issue of his brilliant paper he told of the death of his mother thus:

"There left the earth for the Happy Land on Tuesday night, May 16, a woman who was not known to many people in this world, but who was well acquainted in the other. She was a modest and retiring little body, but possessed of qualities of mind and heart that belong only to the favored few. Her death was beautiful. As her children sat about her bedside they noticed a strange silence. Without one sign of struggle she slipped away. Her going caused no commotion. Her end was perfect peace. She died as she had lived. It was fitting that a life so unobtrusive and so gentle should close serenely. Those of us who called her Mother are bereft indeed!"

—The first dollar to reach us for The Sun to be sent to the widow for whom a plea was made in last week's Sun, was sent by Miss Dora Ballentine, Cardenas, N. C., though on the same day by another mail another dollar came for the same purpose from Mrs. Frances Osborn, LaFayette, Ala., who was once a cripple for two years and learned then a love for The Sun that has never faltered, "a love indeed which grows with the passing years for the comfort that its pages carry from week to week." And Sister Osborn's letter closes "If my dollar does not reach you first, please keep it and I will send 50 cents more for the Bible." The wish will be gratified and the widow, bereft, feeble and lonely will have her church paper another year, and a good large print Bible to read and comfort her in this time of her need. In her behalf I thank these two generous souls.

—The American Tobacco Company received a knock out blow by the U. S. Supreme Court "as being a corporation in restraint of trade."

—China has issued its first complete census report and shows that its immense population is 439,214,000—about five times the population of the United States.

—Senator La Folette spoke four days in the Senate last week against Senator Lorimer's retaining his seat in the Senate, and the resolution to reopen the notorious case was still pending. La Folette may talk longer when the real issue comes up.

—The bribery investigation committee of the Illinois Senate has decided that Senator Lorimer was elected to the United States Senate as the result of bribery and corruption, and calls upon the United States Senate to reopen its investigation of the case.

—In the burning of the Bain Peanut Factory of Suffolk, Va., May 16, something like 200,000 bushels of peanuts were burned, this being one of the largest storage houses for peanuts in the world. The loss was heavy. The building was, before the burning, supposed to be fire proof.

—The most practical turn to last Sunday's "Universal Peace" lesson we have seen was a Peace Meet in Atlanta, Ga., last Sunday afternoon at which at least three thousand persons were present. Senator Benton of Ohio was the orator of the occasion, and by a rising vote President Taft's stand for international peace was unanimously endorsed. The deep desire for universal peace is abroad in the land, and grows with the passing of the years.

—Last Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock a long, lumbering, heavy coal train,—a coal extra—double-header, while crossing Watkins Creek, near Ellenboro, N. C., fell through the trestle, instantly killing both engineers and one fireman, the other fireman feeling the trestle give, having jumped in time to save his life. Two other train men were possibly fatally injured. A coal extra, double-header freight train running on Sunday. That was deplorable; and the tragedy is terrible, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

—New York's magnificent public library, nine years in construction, costing between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000, on ground worth $20,000,000, was formerly opened May 23rd.

—Joseph Wentz, of the city schools, Charlotte, was drowned in the Catawba river while on a pic nic last Tuesday. The boy was trying to swim too far out and lost control of himself.

—Ex-President Roosevelt made an address before 1,200 ministers of various and sundry creeds in New York City May 16. A Jewish rabbi led the assembly in the Lord's Prayer, and a Catholic priest introduced the speaker.

—President on May 25 appointed Henry A. Smith, Charleston, S. C., as district judge of South Carolina. Judge Smith is a Democrat, but the President was after the right man, regardless of politics, so he declares.

—Pierre Vedrine, a French aviator successfully flew from Paris to Madrid, a distance of 600 miles last week and won a purse of $30,000, which amount had been offered to the first successful contestant by French and Spanish enthusiasts. The journey was crossed in three sections and Vedrine was successful in all.

—At a Washington wedding the other day a dog received as a share of the benefits a thousand dollar necklace. Some people are indeed hard put to spend their money. This incident is well nigh as silly and senseless as that in which dogs dressed in gorgeous apparel acted as bride's attendants at a New York fashionable (?) marriage some time since.

—“Some preaches have not learned the difference between a railing accusation against sin and a strong clear condemnation of it. One uses big, hard words in the pulpit; the other is strong, clean, and tender in character, whose whole life condemns evil. The one likes the lime-light, the other likes the divine light, and there are far more of the latter than of the former.—Midland Methodist.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly in session at Atlantic City, N. J., last week found Rev. Dr. William S. Grant, D. D., guilty of heresy and ordered him suspended from the active duties of the ministry till he shall have convinced his presbytery that he has renounced the errors he has been teaching. There were other heresy trials also before the Assembly.

—May 4 Uncle Sam completed seven years' work on excavating Panama—and only one fourth of the big ditch remains undug. There have been removed 138,000,000 cubic yards of dirt, and 44,000,000 cubic yards remain to be removed. The great locks, with their 92 gates of steel plate, each leaf seven feet thick and sixty-five feet long, ranging from 47 feet to 82 feet high, are all complete.

—Senator Lorimer of Illinois, upon whose election to the Senate it is claimed $300,000 was spent, is again in the lime-light, both the Senate of Illinois and the U. S. Senate having taken up the matter afresh. If Lorimer was innocent he should have been cleared before now; if guilty of bribery as is the claim he should have been ejected from the Senate long ago. The wheels of justice certainly move slowly, but let us hope truly and steadily in this case.

—President Taft refuses to pardon Charles W. Morse and John R. Walsh, the former of New York, the latter of Chicago, the two most prominent and wealthy bankers ever sent to the penitentiary under our National Banking laws. The President not only declined to pardon, but took a firm stand, declaring that culprits who were rich had no more rights before the law than culprits who were poor, and that in dealing with either the law must be upheld.

—Interstate Commerce Commission figures show that the freight business of Southern railroads gained ten and one-tenth per cent during 1910 as compared with only seven and six-tenths per cent for the country at large. Also the Southern roads passenger business gained ten percent as compared with six and one-tenth per cent for the country at large. This is merely the latest evidence going to show that the South has more than caught step. It is now growing faster in nearly every important respect than the country as a whole.

HOME MISSIONS IN EARNEST.

The religious future of America depends upon the success of Home Missions. The Church in America must grow or die. To have no purpose beyond maintaining existing organizations is to court death. We must constantly organize new churches.

The organized church must follow the people. Our population is constantly shifting. On the banks of the Mississippi were once some flourishing towns. The current of the river changed and cut new channels, leaving these towns miles inland. Even so many churches have been left without a population to which to minister, because the tides of our national life have taken new directions. They struggle for awhile, and die for lack of either a support or a mission. New churches must be formed to take their places.

A church is a vital thing. A growing church is a living church. A receding, contracting church has no power. Many churches find themselves surrounded by an unchurched multitude, or by people who have an insufficient type of religion. The church that has power and hope and courage, can impress these multitudes. A discouraged church can do nothing for them. An aggressive Home Missionary policy unites the churches in an onward movement, and gives assurance of help where help is needed. A temporary reverse in one place is offset by a victory in another. The churches united in such an effort aid each other by mutual encouragement. If surrounded by different or hostile populations they must have this aid, or theirs will be a losing fight. Protestant Christianity is vastly in the minority in many of our cities at the present moment. Home Missions alone can save the day.

A church, to live, must give heed to the law of its life. The churches of today owe their existence to unselfish effort. They are the product of the missionary spirit. When they violate the principle of their existence, they cease to be churches. The church that is an end in itself, soon puts an end to itself. Home Missions gives an object beyond the church itself. Like the kindred enterprise of Foreign Missions, it tends to preserve the spirituality of the church. Without the missionary impulse, the church fails to embody the spirit of the Master, and loses its churchly character. The Divine Order demands of the church a ministry beyond itself, and aside from this it has no future.

The Foreign Missionary work of the church is dependent upon Home Missions. Foreign Missions is the ministry to those who are far away. Home Missions is the ministry to those who are near. “He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen,” says John, “cannot love God whom he hath not seen.” So also he that has no love for Christless ones in his own land, “Whom he hath seen,” can have no real or vital interest in the heathen afar. “Whom he hath not seen.” But we are to love both, and upon this love depends our life with God. Home and foreign missions, and the church, the product of mission, must go together. A failure to maintain one involves all.

Finally, the great unchurched multitudes, sweeping beyond the reach of the existing churches, in city or country, on the new frontiers, or in the commercial and industrial centers, must be evangelized, or by sheer force of numbers they will control our national life. What place will there be for the Church in such a future?

“Christianize America; we must, we will.”

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

A SERIOUS BLUNDER.

All of us are agreed that the Sunday-school world really needed and desired a graded system of lessons. This task was intrusted to a special committee of the International Sunday-school Association two years ago. This committee got down to business and made a report. Several of the Publishing Houses immediately began to bring out editions of the same. In many respects the lessons are an advance over anything that has yet appeared in the Sunday-school world educationally. But they are open to one serious criticism.

The committee have introduced lessons not based on the Bible. There are lessons from the Apocryphal books of the Bible and also lessons in regard to men and women whose names do not appear in the Bible—such as John Robinson, John Elliot, Roger Williams, William Penn, John B. Gough, Neal Dow, Francis Willard. These are excellent characters and they are illustrated by appropriate Scripture verses and golden texts, but they are human nevertheless. This is a serious blunder.

The University of Chicago had already published a graded series of lessons for Sunday-school on such themes as Social Duties, Jewish History, Church History, Life of Christ, Life of Paul, Lives of Women of Bible, etc., and advertises that thousands of schools have introduced these books in their schools. I hope none of ours have. I deplore the tendency in modern life to substitute courses about the Bible for courses found in the Bible in our Sunday schools. These other courses are alright. We need to know them, but we need the Bible in the Sunday-school to the exclusion of everything else at the recitation period on Sunday.

This action of the committee of the International Association on Graded Lessons has met with loud and prolonged censure. I have read many criticisms against the action and a few defences of it. The weight of opinion seems to be almost unanimously against the lessons as a whole, but chiefly because of the serious blunder I have mentioned.

One of the most successful arraignments

One of the most effective arraignments of the course has been written by Dr. Clark, the great Ohio State Sunday-school Secretary, who writes satirically and so delightfully. He suggests some other persons who might appropriately be included in such a course and by a reductio ad absurdum argument shows the supreme folly of what has been done. Dr. Clark suggests the following:

"If the Lesson Kommittee's goin to go outside of the Bible fer their lesson karacters, and take up folks what's been doin bizness in modern times, I've a noshun to wurk out a few lessons fer the last quarter of the seckond yeer of the Intermejit Gradid Korse, and send them on to the Lesson Kommittee fer its konsiderashun. The International Committee has made a great mistake and has undoubtedly set the sentiment for graded lessons which was all but unanimous before its report running the other way. We regret this false step more than we can say.

A NEW C. E. SOCIETY.

O'Kelly's Chapel, Rev. W. L. Wells, pastor, has organized a flourishing Christian Endeavor Society There are more than twenty members and the prayer-meetings have frequently as many as 50 in attendance. Who can estimate the good of such an organization? Christian Endeavor will go in the country church, if the preacher gets in dead earnest about it. Ask Rev. C. E. (Christian Endeavor) Newman if that isn't so?

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1911.

Love to Christ—Why I love Christ. I Pet-61:3:25.

(Honorary Members' Meeting).

Supplied by Rev. E. A. Watkins.

Suggestive Hints on the Scripture Lesson.

Verse 3. That which makes the Christian's hope a very vital reality, is the fact of Christ's Resurrection. If some how or other it could be proved that this star-gem point in the Christian's faith is without foundation, and but a myth and a tradition, then our hope is dead and lifeless. Through Christ's Resurrection then our hope becomes living and strong. Destroy this, and you remove one of the most vital facts from the foundation of our faith. "And if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?—For other foundation hath no man laid."

Verse 4. "To an inheritance, incorruptible and undefiled." These were encouraging words to the early Christians. Our physical, material life has led us to believe there is nothing stable and permanent. All things earthly have in them the seeds of decay and death; or material inheritance is at best uncertain and shadowy. But we are assured here that amid all the uncertainties of life, there is an inheritance that is sure; amid all the perishing glitter and glamor of the earth life there is that that defies the laws of the physical and is incorruptible. "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Verse 5. "We are kept by the power of God." "Without me ye can do nothing." The facts of experience have taught us that we need something behind us stronger than we are, if we are to live up to the standards of the divine. Human effort is impotent and powerless, unless helped and strengthened by power from God. Our weak natures are garrisoned, as it were, by reinforcements of divine strength.

Not by providences acting upon our outward lives, and changing the environment to suit our needs, but rather by pouring power to resist and to overcome into our souls, does God keep us in the conflict with evil. "I can do all things, through Christ which strengthening me within." An indwelling Lord is our security.

Verse 8. "Whom having not seen, ye love." We have never seen the Christ with our physical eyes, but in a much more real way we have had a vision of him. If we love him we have seen him with the keenest vision, the eyes of the soul. "Thousands in every age have cherished a passionate attachment to Jesus, wholly unlike what is evoked by any one else. Time and distance seem to be powerless to diminish it. It is no tepid affection, no idle sentiment. It rules, guides and stimulates. It is the mother of heroism and patience. It sheds light upon all dark places. It hates and masters the fear of death. The stake and the gibbet, the dungeon and the rack are powerless to repel those whom it attracts. All this passionate ardour of love which transforms the hearts of men is called out by and lavished upon a man who died nineteen centuries ago. There is no other fact like it."

Verse 19. Among all that have cavilled at the doctrine of the atonement, none have provided a better way to get rid of sin. It is the cross or nothing.

Helpful Suggestions for the Meeting.

I love Christ because it is the dynamic force and power that will drive out all forms that are antagonistic to Christ, and harmful to ourselves. There is an expulsive power in all true affection. From the very nature of things we cannot serve God and Mammon. The problem of the questionable amusements will be solved when we truly love Christ. There will be no room for any sort of love that does not contribute to the building up of either the intellectual, moral or spiritual man.

We cannot love Christ and fail to do the things he has asked of us. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." "Why call me Lord! Lord! and do not the things that I say?" if our profession and claim to love of Christ is denied by our practices, the world will have little faith in us, and they have a right to doubt us.

We must remember that real love always renders service. It is deeper and more profound than any mere verbal statement of it. The faithful wife will always have more faith in the husband's expressions of love, if they are crystalized into active service of loving deeds. Real love always serves. Mother-love always reaches down and toils for her precious ones. Love to Christ, if it is worthy of the name, will sacrifice some present pleasure will deny self of some gratification, will go out of the way to render aid to one of his children and will never be satisfied until the whole world enjoys the same fellowship and faith in Him.

Our love for Christ is a growing thing, it is real; we do not give the same reason for it that we gave last year, but a larger and better reason. Our faith has been strengthened and our hope confirmed by the many rich experiences, in which he has strengthened us and helped us in our battle with evil, or it may be in some deep sorrow. If we have tested Him as we ought, we have many better reasons for loving him now than we had a year ago.

An English drunkard said to a Salvation Army lassie who spoke to him about his soul, "'Spose you expect so much as a half a crown for getting me to sign the pledge," She quickly replied, "I'm better paid than that. I expect to get a whole crown, and there'll be stars in it besides." I love Christ because His love decorates the most menial service.

A story is told of a certain Russian officer who could not make his accounts balance. He sat up night after night struggling over the problem, seeking to discover the mistake. He knew the penalty that awaited him if he failed to find the mistake. After searching over his books until he was almost a nervous wreck, he finally gave up in despair, and he seized his pen and scribbled across the page, "Who will make up the deficit?" and lapsed into unconsciousness. In a little while the czar passed that way and soon took in the situation and saw the real predicament into which the officer had found himself. He seized the pen and wrote immediately after the question, "I, the Czar of Russia," and affixed his seal. I love Christ because his seal of love is affixed to all my defects.

THE MESSAGE OF FLOWERS.

Memorial address, Spring Hill Christian Church, May 22, 1911, by Rev. H. E.
Rountree, Waverly, Va.

These memorial days are occasions for both sadness and joy. In many homes there are vacant chairs and absent loved ones, caused by cruel war, the unmerciful hand of disease and the ravages of time. Yet we thank God for the unspeakable joy for the sacrifices and love they exemplified in living and dying for their loved ones, their church and their God. These memorial days were specially instituted in commemoration of the honor and the love of our sleeping dead.

When Jesus Christ lay in the tomb, his loved ones went there and anointed his body as a memorial of His love and heroic life.

Each year we gather here to refresh our memories of our dead and to offer flowers of gratitude as a sweet-smelling savor.

At this season of the year there are two things akin: the sky bespangled with stars and the earth emblazoned with flowers. The stars seem to look down with "unsleeping sentinel eyes." The flowers appear to watch sympathetically and breathe forth a strengthening message.

One of the loveliest scenes I ever beheld is the lone spot of the dead where flowers blossom in clusters around each little mound; the whole a garden of roses which breathes forth purity of life and lends their inexhaustible fragrance to the balmy air. We are reminded that the lives of those that sleep beneath the sod still exist in spirit and the immortality of the soul shall bloom with sweetness in eternity.

How beautiful are flowers! What wonders are they and with what significance do they appear! Who can explain their wonderful colors? Is it a reality? Or is it merely structure? It may be true as some have tried to explain that it is merely structure, if so, the wonder is but intensified.

How beautiful are the saints of God!
As we gather roses and carefully place them where our memories linger, every petal bears a tear-drop of fondest recollections and affections of heart. As they lift their faces upward to the sky, their loveliness and beauty sing a song of praise that speaks more beautifully the sentiments of our hearts than our tongues could tell. Their fragrance is infinitely sweeter than the sweet-smelling savor of spices, frankincense and myrrh. Every bush has more bouquets of patriotic graces than any one is capable of. Every blossom preaches more sermons of purity and beauty of life, peace and brotherly kindness than all the goodness of man combined. Saints of God who have long since crossed the river are today beautiful and bright not because they were such in themselves, but because they had their structure in Jesus Christ, and 'tis that same loveliness which which He adorns the children who abide in Him. Today the memorial of flowers we offer as a sweet-smelling savor to our beloved dead, has not its inspiration in mere memory or sentiment but in that adornment which Christ gave them for us and does now give us for them and for our hope in eternity.

We cannot pass without speaking of the wonder of their fragrance also. Scientists say that fragrance is not a reality; that it is the "result of the impingement against the olfactory nerve of infinite particles of matter which in themselves have no property of odor." If that be true it is all the more wonderful. But be that as it may, we know this that the thing we call fragrance is one of our greatest blessings. Think if everything in the world smelled the same.
What a charm the world would lose!
How monotonous life would be! How utterly useless would be the sense of smell!

The message of fragrance is a love-token from our Father in heaven; and that sense of smell which He has given us is a token of His love and His image in us that we may partake of His bounties.

How great must be His reward and love for us who has made our dwelling place on earth so very fine and fragrant. How beautiful must be our heavenly home. How perfect eternity is of which these flowers are but the slightest token. Today as you decorate these graves, you not merely plant a flower, but you show the best in you. The flowers are God's thoughts, and you return them to Him in this offering. They are God's cheer, and they drive away many a pain and many a tear. Now in these you speak back to Him in His own language the comfort of a Christ-child's heart.

If God thus can use the flowers of the field; and if we can use them to speak back to him his thoughts; how much more can He use us, if we will let His thoughts be in us; if we will let Him shed influence in us as he does the flower, how much more we would love Him, and more spiritually directed would be our eyes and heart!

If we would let Him shine in our souls, as He does in the flower, how much nob-bler would be our minds, how much more freedom and religious liberty would we possess!

Depend upon it, heaven provides us space and sunshine wherein to ripen all that is best within us. Beyond, is no blank void without human interest. Eternity is no graveyard of intellectual, moral, nor spiritual ambitions. It is the resurrection of the world unto the grandest and most fruitful possibilities.

In Jesus who feared not death,
"Transported human worth

Would bloom to profit otherwise."

Let me beg you today to resign yourselves and all your unfilled hopes into His hands "who will perfect that which concerneth us."

And may the flowers we spread here be tokens of our fidelity not merely to the memory of those we love, but to Christ who loved us and died for us.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

The mind often wants to lead you in the bad way, but conscience, which is a silent monitor, whispers kindly and says, "You had better not." You had better not start down the way to ruin. Stop, think, look, listen, reason, and let the will predominate over wrong and help to guide you in the safe path. Stay in the path of duty—the way which leads to delight and right—be on the right, the safe side, and reap a harvest of pleasant recollections for having done right, and let time and eternity record for you a splendid history filled with a beautiful life. Many today are suffering some affliction, are in the midst of a storm of trouble, or behind prison doors, by not listening to and heed the words, "You had better not." Fond hopes forever crushed, good intentions banished, liberty taken away with guilt and remorse clinging close to the heart in their blackness and deformity. Hear, if you will, the many sad voices coming down the ages saying with burning shame and dismay, "O, if I had only thought right, lived right and walked in the beautiful way of life, how happy I would be, but, alas, these have departed from me and left me in eternal desolation."

The storm cloud of sin which has been gathering so long burst over the dark way and deluged it with anguish and awful regret. No bright gleam of hope looking for a cloudless morning cheers the depressed spirit. The wind contains many volumes of unwritten history, and there is much more too black and sinful to be written. Purify the mind by leading it away from sinful ways and thoughts. This can be done by a little effort and some patience. See that lovely white lily, look at it, admire its beauty, inhale its fragrance, and your mind at once feels better and purer by having seen, admired and loved the flower. So when the soul takes in the beautiful, lovely things of God, and you breathe the pure atmosphere of heavenly thoughts, you feel better, look better, think better and work better. These pleasing, healthy and helpful thoughts are not selfish, not sensual—but they are touched by the inspiration of God, and when you take into the mind and soul such elevating conceptions of him, how pleasing to feel you are being cleansed from sin and are becoming more and more like Jesus.

Environment has very much to do with the thinking, living and acting. It gives color and flavor to the whole being. You cannot help, to a greater or less extent, being influenced by your associations, and it would be far better for some to be more by themselves, commune more with God and Nature, and let the thoughts and suggestions of some good books help to cheer them. There are so many good men and women who can and will speak to you on the printed page. You have never seen most of them and some of them you never will see—but their beautiful lives shine forth in what they write, and you will get a part of their inspiration in studying them.

The life beautiful not only gives great satisfaction through the early stages of the young life, by practicing prudence and self-denial—but all the after years are made happy by fond and pleasing reviews of the past. Fortune and fame may have lavished their blessings upon many—but nothing will be as rich and lasting as having lived a beautiful life. It is a legacy far more valuable to leave to your relatives, friends, and the world, than hoarded millions which are often accumulated through toil, sometimes dishonest means, and legal strife. It is not only a great legacy to leave behind, but it is a shining and living example to future generations to hear of and read about such a life. A life which has been hid with Christ in God, which has been filled with his goodness, is a charming and supreme one. To have lived a beautiful, pure, true, and honorable life will give inexpressible joy to every one who has practiced it, and cause their departing years to be crowned with a halo of peace.

The simple life comes in and performs an important part in the mental and physical constitutions of the individual, but the beautiful life must not be neglected if you expect to play your part well in the great drama of life. All are actors on the stage of life, and it is the duty of each one to act his part well. A few days ago a man was heard to say, "If I could live my life over again I would live a better, a more beautiful life." He had been a dissipated man; he wasted precious time in the ways of death. With him it was getting late in the afternoon of life—his history had nearly been written, and the black night of despair and death were near him. What a beautiful and useful life he might have lived. Coming to the end with no fruit—nothing but leaves, and the frost of time had changed them for the winter of death. No hope of a bright, glorious, heavenly home entertained his mind, but thinking of the dismal state of everlasting punishment troubled him all the way.

Ballard.

Mrs. Virginia Catharine Ballard departed this life at home near Holland, Va., May 29, 1911, in the 51st year of her age. The deceased was the daughter of Beverly Holland, deceased, and relict of the late E. W. Ballard. She leaves a mother, Mrs. Mary E. Holland; three brothers, John H., and Joseph Beverly, Holland, Va. and Elliott, Norfolk, Va.; one sister, Miss Lilly Holland, Holland, Va., and two daughters, Mrs. Willard M. Daughtrey, and Mary Virginia; and two sons, Beverly Edwin, and Edwin Lawrence.

Mrs. Ballard was a member of Holland Christian Church and a good woman. She saw death in advance and met it with the calm resignation of Christian faith. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Holland Church and the body laid beside that of her husband in Holland Cemetery. May our heavenly Father bless, comfort and keep the dear ones she left.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Our report is not so large today; the weather has been so very warm our folks have not put forth so much effort. But we have one fine feature of the report which will help out greatly when it comes to getting up the crops next fall, viz., the Acme Mfg. Co., of Wilmington, N. C. very kindly and liberally donated us 2 tons of guano which was received Monday and will be used in helping to enlarge our production for this year. This is the largest donation of guano we have ever received at one time and we thus publicly acknowledge our gratitude to the Acme Mfg. Co. for the same.

We are so dry at this writing that we have had to stop planting our corn crop and are simply "patching in the fields." Hoping to hear from many cousins by next week, I am,

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Chapel Hill, N. C., May 19, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write for my first time. Our school was out last Friday. We had commencement Friday morning. I have some little chickens. I am glad spring has come gain. I am nearly sick. The grass has come up pretty and green. Little sister's birthday was the sixteenth of May; she got four presents. Our garden has come up pretty.

Enclosed find one dollar. I hope you and the cousins a happy spring.

From your true friends,
 Annie, Grace and Hub rt Andrew Neville.

Nice letter, little girl; and so glad to get this great big round dollar. My, but we wish we had a hundred! Don't you?

Phenix, Ala., May 9, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed please find my dime for May. Mamma and I went to Rose Hill Sunday and heard Bro. Lankford preach at 11 A. M. Went to our church at 7:30, and heard our faithful pastor after a month's absence on account of sickness in his family. If God wills he will be here Monday the 15th to begin a revival and we are looking for great things from God.

Your niece,

Lillian Pearl Willingham.

Glad to hear from you again, Lillian, and hope you will not be so long writing next time. We like to hear from our little Southern friends and want them to be prompt.

Dear Cousins:

It has come my time to write. I hardly know what to write but I guess I can tell you a few things that will interest you. I help Uncle Jim in his office. I do the office writing for him. I have been taking short hand at the college and I stood my examination today. I don't know what I made, but I guess I will make a right good grade. I take his letters in short hand and then copy on the typewriter. I enjoy doing it very much. I look after the sitting room and library and my room, and a number of other little things that have to be done. Aunt Myrtle went to Raleigh and I looked after Mary Lee and James. They said they would have to call me mother while she was gone.

Commencement will soon be here. I am expecting to go and enjoy it all. I hope to see some of you cousins at commencement.

You ought to see our family; we have 47 children in the Orphanage and Mary Lee and James make 49. We have lots of fun eating strawberries; but the weather has been so dry that they can't ripen very fast. I will close hoping that you will enjoy reading my little letter.

Your loving cousin,

Mary Morris.

Price.

Our dear brother, R. D. Price, who had been in declining health for over a year, was taken ill some two months ago and for several weeks it was thought he would go any day. But he rallied and was much better for several days, and it was hoped that he would recover. The good Lord knew better, so on May the 9th our brother passed out into the spirit world. He was sixty seven years, four months, and twenty-four days of age.

Had lived in Surry County all his life, and had been a member of New Lebanon Christian church for nineteen years. He was a loyal man to his church, a kind father at home and useful neighbor. He leaves to mourn their loss two much respected daughters, four noble sons, and a kind wife.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer, and the body was buried in the home cemetery. May the good Lord comfort the sad home.

McAdams.

Died at her home near Burlington, N. C., May 18, 1911, Mrs. Laura Jane McAdams, relict of Joseph McAdams, aged 81 years, 2 months and 7 days. Her husband passed to the spirit land 14 years ago. Six children survive.

For two years and a fourth prior to her death, she was confined to her bed. A good woman has fallen asleep. The funeral services were conducted by the writer from New Providence Christian church, of which she was a member and had been for a number of years. She was buried in the cemetery at New Providence by the side of her husband and on their graves were placed beautiful flowers. We commend the bereaved family to the God of consolation and love.

Mrs. Mattie Edwards, wife of John Edwards, at her home in Franklin Co., N. C., May 22, 1911, aged 54 years and 2 days. She leaves seven children, three boys and four girls, a boy and a girl having preceded her to the spirit land. She also leaves seven grandchildren. She was an excellent Christian woman. The large congregation that attended her funeral at New Hope Church, conducted by her pastor showed the high esteem in which she was held.

May God bless the husband and children left on the shores of time.

Savage.

Whereas it hath pleased our heavenly Father to remove from our midst Col. Alexander Savage, and whereas, he was for many years a faithful, consistent and worthy member of Berea; whereas he faithfully and efficiently discharged the duties of his office as deacon, treasurer, secretary and in many other ways in an official capacity in the church, be it resolved,

1. That in the death of Col. Savage this church has lost a faithful member, whose service of love we greatly appreciate and deep mourn.

2. That we record our profound gratitude for his life of loving service, and express our thanks for his intense love for the Church to which he made substantial and systematic contributions.

3. That we strive as a church to follow his worthy example and earnestly endeavor to discharge our duty in our day and generation.

4. That we express herewith our sympathy to his widow and all the members of his family, and pray that the Father's blessings may rest upon them.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Christian Sun and to the family, and that a copy be entered upon the records of Berea Church.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Wakefield.

It has been some time since Sun readers have heard from us, but we are still in the land of the living. We have had more sickness this spring than we have ever had. LaGrippe, measles, and pneumonia have been in our home, and did their work well, but with good care and skillful physicians we all came out safely.

Our work on this pastorate is moving on nicely, and we feel that we have the best people in the world to serve. Some time ago Brother Charlie Freeman, gave us a bushel of meal, Brother R. H. Hargrave, a big ham, and Brother J. J. Lincoln, a load of wood to cook the good things with.

We have cut our church note down to twelve hundred dollars and we are now grinding our financial ax to cut again soon.

Wakefield is quite a progressive little town. She has a weekly paper, town well lighted with gasolene lamps, and during the last three years the Christians and the M. E. people have expended some twenty thousand dollars in church extension. We have one of the most up-to-date churches that can be found in any place of its population. The M. E. people have just dedicated a new church which is real city like in all of its departments.

We have no mineral spring near us as our neighboring town, thus not so healthy, yet we did not spend twenty-five thousand dollars per year for medicine (whiskey) the owners of the drug store (dispensary) and those people who patronize the same may seem well physically, but just as sure as life they are sick unto death spiritually. It has been questioned as to whether a man of God should call, or has a right to ask, that church people keep out and prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquors. I shall answer that question by asking what business did Moses have in compelling Aaron and the children of Israel to grind up the golden calf they had made, burn it, and then drink the ashes? Ah, my whiskey brother, whether the preacher has any business to call your attention to your downward and damaging path or not you will have to sooner or later drink the ashes of your work. Last July, the town of Newark, O., got so corrupt through the influence of whiskey that a company was deputized from another town to go and adjust things in the said town. When the work was begun a young man among the deputies was over-powered by the whiskey mob and chased three miles in the country finally capturing him, but during the struggle the young man shot one of his antagonists, a whiskey seller, yet the helpless young officer was dragged to town and lodged in jail. In a few hours the man who had been shot died. The whiskey brutes rushed to the jail, battered down the door, dragged the poor helpless officers out and down to the center of the town and there to a telegraph post he was hanged until dead. The murderous crowd was so elated over their work, that the telegraph post was taken away in splinters as souvenirs. It is said that the chief of police was in town during the lynching taking a social game of cards. The mayor said he could not afford to speak against the liquor trouble nor bring the lynchers to justice; it would make him unpopular and too, it would cause his defeat at next election. Thus Uncle Sam took a hand in the game, and the result of the same was the chief of police and mayor were disrobed of their fifty of Newark's young men, many of whom are of the best families of the town, are looking through the iron bars of the jail and penitentiary on account of the lynching. I ask in the name of common judgment, would it not have been better if the policeman and mayor had spoken out and stood up for the right things in that town? They are now drinking the ashes of their work.

When we think of the crime of this country today in this Christian land, and too, when we know that four-fifths of all of the crime in the country is the result of strong drink, facing these things, don't we know there is a cause somewhere? Yes, the cause is we have today too many putty men in office, on the bench and in the pulpit. Have I as a minister any business to speak against the liquor fraudulent conspiracy? Business or no business, I am on this side of the earth to fight the liquor traffic. And God pity the preacher, deacon, or church member, who will not do his duty in eradicating whiskey out of his own town or any body elses' town.

Pleasant Grove has a very nice house of worship and at our last appointment the building committee reported the house out of debt, and was released. It was decided to dedicate the house at our next regular appointment and Rev. C. M. Dollar was elected by the church to preach the dedicatory sermon.

We are expecting a good day in the service of the Lord, and all the ministers who can do so are invited to be with us on that day.

Rev. B. F. Young was here at our last appointment, and preached three good sermons.

Rev. T. H. Elder was with us at our last appointment at Forrest Home, and preached two enjoyable sermons.

On Saturday night of our last appointment here we had the pleasure of again meeting with our old home church, at Bethany. We were pleased to find that these people have made some necessary improvements on their house of worship.

Yesterday was our day at Corinth. We are still moving along very nicely here. We are planning to begin our revival the fifth Sunday in July. Brethren, pray for us.

Next Saturday and Sunday are our days at Rockstand. We are hoping for a good day here.

Portsmouth Letter.

Since our last letter we have paid our interest on bonded debt and also taken up the first note of $1,000.00. The balance from sale of old church site was paid early in the month and enabled us to wipe out the amount of our organ debt which was left incomplete at the time of the erection of the building. In speaking of the indebtedness of the church the organ debt has never been included, because the note held by the church was designed to meet it. We rejoice in this good fortune that has lessened our responsibilities. Our total indebtedness now is $12,250.00. We wish to thank the following for their offerings to help us in raising our interest; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, $10.; Elkanah Harrell, $6.; and Mrs. M. J. Lee, $10.

Our revival was held in April as appointed, but we did not have Rev. M. J. Swearingen, as we expected. He cancelled the engagement at the last moment on account of unavoidable circumstances. We were fortunate in being able to secure Rev. McD. Howsare of Norfolk, who came to our aid and rendered faithful service. He did excellent preaching throughout the meeting. The meeting was well attended and much good was done. There were quite a number of confessions and ten joined the church.

The second Sunday night in this month we had with us the Woodmen of the World to whom we preached. They brought with them a large congregation and came near filling auditorium and lecture room. The choir prepared a special musical program for the occasion, which seemed to be enjoyed by all.

Next Sunday our Sunday school will finish up its contest trip to Palestine and return. During the contest much good work has been done. The enrollment has been increased, the collections more than doubled and the attendance helped.

This month has been a splendid month with our Ladies Aid Society. They have been busily working and their receipts to date have been $76.54. Their enrollment now is over 200. New members are frequently added.

J. W. Harrell.

It was my good fortune to be in the neighborhood of Liberty church in Vance County, N. C., last Sunday. The regular appointment had been called in on account of small pox in the community; but Bro. C. E. Newman, the pastor, in the goodness of his heart and his great love for the church at Chapel Hill, took me in his buggy and carried me from house to house in the interest of our Chapel Hill mission. The result was $43.00 in cash and good pledges. I feel sure it will be run up to at least $50.00. The name of this church is Liberty, and with them it means liberality in every good cause. I heard many kind words spoken about their pastor.

Sunday night was spent with the Henderson mission. I modestly asked the church and congregation for $25.00 for Chapel Hill, and they soon gave $46. I feel sure they will make it $50.00. They largely show their faith by their works. I know of no church more loyal than Henderson. The watch word of this church is pray and pay.

I dreaded taking hold of the work at Chapel Hill; but I find the brethren and sisters so willing to help in it both with their prayers and money, it is one of the great pleasures of my life to canvass for the mission. Brethren and sisters, continue to pray and give and it will not be long before we will have a house of worship at Chapel Hill that will show honor to our Savior.

The first Sunday in May and Saturday before was spent with the church at Oak Level. On Saturday the business of the church was transacted in a Christian spirit. On Sunday the communion of the Lord's Supper was a pleasant occasion. It is a pleasure to preach to this church. You can count on Oak Level to do her duty. The Sunday school is doing good work.

The second Sunday and Saturday before were spent with the church at Christian Light. The brethren and friends are working hard to finish remodeling their house of worship. They deserve great credit for the efforts they are putting forth in this enterprise. The Sunday school is good.

Guynn.

Claude L. Guynn, for many years a prominent member of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., was called from earth to heaven May 22d, 1911. He had been identified with the church for many years and was one of its most ardent supporters. His life was one of simplicity, loyalty and active Christian service. He was actively identified with every phase of the church work. He was a Deacon, a member of the Official Board, Treasurer of the Sunday school, a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Missionary Society and the church representatives in the city of Juvenile Protective Association. He never missed a church service without being absolutely necessary. Kind to all, with large sympathetic heart and with a disposition which offended none, he enshrined himself in the hearts of all who knew him. He was loved in life, honored in death and has been crowned in heaven. He leaves on earth a devoted wife, two sons and three daughters. In his going out from them, they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

"Yet we shall meet again in peace

To sing the song of festal joy;

Where none shall bid our gladness cease,

And none our fellowship destroy."

His last illness was full of suffering, yet borne with Christian fortitude. His funeral services were held in the church of which he had been so long a member. The pastor, Rev. McD. Howsare, spoke from II Cor. 5:1, offering words of comfort and hope. Rev. P. S. Sailer, a former pastor and bosom friend of the deceased, spoke of his personal traits and characteristics and Rev. R. A. Robinson, pastor of Colley Memorial Presbyterian Church, spoke as a representative of the city Juvenile Protective Association. A large sympathetic audience and a profusion of flowers were indicative of the universal esteem in which our departed brother and friend was held.

ONE THIRD OF FARMERS ENDORSE IT.

About 2,000,000 farmers in the United States, or practically one-third of the entire number, heartily endorse the Watkins Way of merchandizing, for they know they can get better goods and more of them for the same money from the Watkins salesman, than they can elsewhere, and they are delivered right at their door. Besides vastly benefitting their customers, Watkins salesmen make a good thing out of it for themselves. Right now we need an active, energetic young salesman in Alamance County. Address, The J. R. THE PATH I FEARED.

I said, "Let me walk in the field."
He said, "Nay, walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there."
He said, "No flowers but a crown."
I said, "But the skies are black,
There is nothing but noise and din,"
And He wept as He sent me back,
"There is more," He said, "There is sin."
I said, "But the air is thick,
And fogs are veiling the sun."
He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone."
I said, "I shall miss the light
And friends will miss me they say."
He answered, "Choose tonight,
If I am to miss you or they."
I pleaded for time to be given.
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your guide."
I cast one look at the field,
Then set my face to the town.
He said, "My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"
Then into His hand went mine
And into my heart came He,
And I walked in a light divine,
The path I had feared to see.

APPEARANCE AND REALITY.

(Man looketh on the outward appearance but the Lord looketh on the heart. I Sam. 16:7. Golden text for Sunday, June 11).

Hezekiah was one of Judah's great, and good, kings. And he was great because he was good. He called the people back from appearance to reality. He summonsed them to seek for that which, through sin, they had lost. They, the people of Judah, had gone off into idolatry. They had sought gain by giving themselves to that which was wrong, wicked, evil in the sight of God: and because of this, instead of getting gain, they had been reduced to subjects and servitude. They had to pay tribute to, and make unholy alliances with, the wicked, pagan nations around about them. They had forgotten God, torn down their altars, abolished their sacrifices and shut up their places of worship. They had sought, and they had found, the shadow, the sham, the husk.

Now good king Hezekiah calls his people back from this idolatry, and opens again the house of praise and prayer. Happy is that people whose ruler seeks and serves the Lord. Judah prospered and was happy under good king Hezekiah because he brought them back to true worship and divine service. Happy is that nation whose God is the Lord.

Now there was no "put on" about this temple worship and praise service held by the orders of Hezekiah. It was genuine, thorough, sincere.

We may be able to deceive people. We cannot deceive God. People are fooled and blinded frequently by appearances. God is not mocked in that manner. He looks upon the heart. God goes to the reality.

You may do things for the sake of policy and so get favor, applause and promotion from your fellowman. But policy will not carry in God's sight. He looks within. He measures motives. He marks real, not seeming, conditions.

God looks upon the heart and wants that. He does not care anything about forms, appearances, ceremonies, except as these help one to a vital and majestic reality.

We must all stand one day before Him who sees us and knows us as we are. Seemings and appearances will not count then. Who shall be able to stand in that day? God looketh not upon appearances, but upon the heart. Is the heart right? If not, God pity, God pardon, God help.

 THE SAME.

As one advances in years one becomes more curious, and concerned, about that which abides. Much in this world endures but for a day; and "the ships that pass in the night" lose their novelty and significance. That which abides, however, makes a more lasting impression and so begets the deeper interest.

We have every reason to believe that character abides. This is why it is of such interest and deep concern. It endures. Not even the shock of death and the sleep of the grave seem to disturb character, or change it. The Christ is an example. After He came from the tomb His personality was not even altered. Those who saw Him knew Him. He even convinced doubting Thomas.

His powers of recognition were not changed. He knew His friends and called them by name. He did not forget to remember unfortunate and impetuous Peter with a special message.

If there was any change in His character whatever, it was only a change to a deeper sympathy and tenderness for His foes and all who had sought to injure Him. Not one word of denunciation of them fell from the lips that had been silenced three days in the tomb.

His desire for the work He had undertaken remained after the tragedy of the Cross. Death had not changed in the least His deep solicitude for the great work He had begun. He was as anxious now as ever, even more so, that the gospel should be preached to the whole world.

Is not Christ the first fruits of them that slept? His character remained much the same. Will not ours? Shall we not also know and be known by traits and characteristics we have manifested on earth? Most assuredly.

Character abides. That which we are developing here day by day, year by year, is to stay with us, the best, the purest, the holiest of it is. No wonder we regard character as of greatest weight and worth and wealth. The character that we build here is that which, from all reasoning and all probability, will be the character we shall have when we have passed to the brighter and better land—the character here purified and glorified, but not altered and disintegrated, by the power and the presence of the Lord Jesus. We shall know yonder as we know here; and be known yonder for what we are and have done here. Character is worth while. It abides the eternal ages.

If you were to live a thousand years, and had to do nothing outside your lips, you would still have enough to do in your own heart, and would still be unable to reach perfection; so much would you have to do merely within your own heart.

 WHAT IS PRACTICAL?

There are some who think they haven't time for preaching, and prayer, and reading the Bible, and other acts of devotion. The reason assigned is that this is a "practical time," and there are so very many practical things to do.

What is practical? The Bishop of London says that "Prayer is the most practical thing in the world." And when the matter is considered the Bishop is not far wrong. Is he? God himself is pledged to hear, and to answer prayer. Is that which God is pledged to so very unreal, theoretical, impractical? Hardly. The mightiest, that is the most powerful, the most momentous movements on record, those upheavals and reforms that reshaped the lives and history of millions, had their origin in prayer. Think of Luther and the Reformation; Cromwell and the English reforms; Wesley and the Methodist church; O'Kelly and the Christian church; Moody and Sankey and Torrey and their great revivals. If these were not practical matters and movements there never were any.

Prayer is the avenue of approach to the throne, and the medium through which God's power is communicated to individuals.

No man engages in anything more real, more truly practical than acts of devotion. If that which lifts a soul up, changes a man's life, and builds character is not practical, then nothing is. The Bishop of London is correct: Prayer is the most practical thing in the world.

 "LIVE WIRES."

There are said to be 600,000 commercial travellers in the United States, of which number only 50,000 are active Christian workers. It is believed that this number is on the increase for there are certain "live wires" among the "Knights of the Grip." There are 8,000 of these "live wires" and they call themselves "Gideons." One of their number said recently, "If he isn't a live wire he isn't a Gideon."

These Gideonites are bringing things to pass among their fellows and for others. Their chief propaganda is the placing of a Bible in every hotel in America, but they have other religious work as well.

The Christian World of Boston has this story of the rise and progress of these "live wires" in Christian work:

"The morals of the 'Knight of the Road' in the past, taken as a class, have not been all that could be desired, but in the twelve years in which the Gideons have been working 'a remarkable change for better,' says Secretary W. E. Henderson, 'has taken place.'

"Two years ago Mr. N. W. Dennett, one of the trustees of the Gideons, learned when in England that the commercial travelers of Great Britain were placing Bibles in hotel rooms. The idea seemed a splendid one, so the Gideons decided to put a Bible in each guest room of every hotel in America.

"To-day they have placed over 65,000 Bibles in over 600 hotels and are rapidly increasing this number. The American Bible Society, which supplies the books at one-third less than cost, on account of the Gideons' demands and those of the others are six months behind their orders.

"It takes a considerable sum to pay for 65,000 Bibles. In many of the cities the churches have volunteered to supply the hotels. In some places prominent and wealthy men have paid for the Bibles in the hotels. In Kansas City a big manufacturer employing many salesmen, being convinced of the value of the work, supplied an entire hotel. Then too the lonely traveling man who has been cheered up by the Holy Book in the room has sent in his mite.

"The Gideons have been exploited in the papers principally as distributors of Bibles. But they do much other work. The members, active business men, carry the gospel to their fellow travelers as man to man. They hold meetings in hotels and have camps in most of the big cities. Every noon from 12 to 12:45 throughout the United States in hotel rooms and offices, wherever they may be, the Gideons hold a service of prayer.

"The Bibles placed in the hotels are very seldom carried off. But there are instances to the contrary. A hell hoy in Denver took one from a room and was caught with it. 'Honest, boss,' he said, 'it's the best book I ever read. Why, I am nearly through it by this time.'"

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

A Poor Investment. A few years ago John Alexander Dowie was drawing great throngs of people by his "divine healing" doctrine, and his professed power of miracles. In his religious fervor and enthusiasm some five thousand people all over the land sent, or carried, him their earthly possessions, in whole or in part, wherewith to found the "City of Zion." Dowie died under a cloud, and in much disfavor by his followers and others, a few years since, and now his Zion City collapses, as an investment.

Recently 676 stockholders in various parts of the earth, received 12 cents on the dollar of what they had put in. It was a poor investment, a sorry business.

Religious zeal and divine fervor are never to be despised and discredited; until this zeal and fervor discredit and seek to bring into disfavor other well established religious bodies and organizations of long standing. Dowie tried to make his followers believe that the churches of the day were as full of sin and shame as the world itself.

Beware of any religious movement that decries and seeks to discredit all other religious movements than itself. There is such a thing as self-righteousness, big I and little You, even in a religious movement; and God does not seem to look with favor for long upon such movements.

Uneducated Brains.—We were just about to write a line about the life and career and death of Thomas Lloyd, of Chapel Hill, whose acquaintance we chanced to share, when this paragraph in a New York paper caught our eye:

"Uneducated brains often find opportunities to master intricate subjects. Thomas Lloyd, the richest man of Orange County, N. C., is dead. He was seventy-eight years of age and was just completing a new cotton mill, having sold one recently. Until four years ago Lloyd could not write his name, and he was the only man in the cotton mill business in North Carolina who owned his mill and kept no books."

Mr. Lloyd was a modest man in manners and in dress, and in many particulars a rather extraordinary man. He managed to do without an education more than many do with an education. But that in no wise argues against the worth of education. Mr. Lloyd, with all his native ability and hard horse sense, was put to not a few inconveniences because he was not educated. Had his great natural endowments of mind been developed by a course of study and class room discipline his name might have ranked for usefulness, service, and influence in the state with that of Murphy, or Macon or Vance. Who knows? Hampered and cramped as he was, Mr. Lloyd accomplished much, and led a life of usefulness; but we doubt very seriously if he would have advised young men in whom he was interested to begin life as he had to do, without mental training and without education. Mr. Lloyd had the mind and heart to achieve in spite of illiteracy, not because of it.

Cheap Life.—A writer in the June number of World's Work reemphasizes a fact well known, but none the less regrettable on that account. For the number of homicides per million population the United States stands at the very head of the list. Germany has 13 homicides a year to each million of its population; France 19; Great Britain and Ireland 27; Italy 105; the United States 115. This is not because ours is a new country either, as the writer in World's Work convincingly shows; but it is due to the fact that we take matters of the law too much into our own hands in this country, and place too poor an estimate on human life. "Thou shalt not kill" is a commandment that Americans need very much to learn to obey.

Up to Servitude.—On April 30, Ambassador Bryce broke all precedents at Washington, the papers say, by addressing a negro audience. One paper says, "His audience realized that he was the first foreign representative of a great power to evince any outward signs of interest in their progress." We are glad, for our part, that the English statesman and ambassador had the nerve and the heart to break the precedent and talk to the colored people, for Br. Bryce is a man of ripe scholarship and broad learning and usually edifies any audience he addresses. This sentence of his address attracted us. "Our progenitors did your progenitors a great injustice in bringing them to this country in a state of servitude, and it is our duty to do all in our power to make up for this injustice." We shall not join issue with Ambassador Bryce, nor question the injustice of bringing the progenitors of his audience into this country in a state of servitude. And yet somehow one wonders. If that was an injustice the good God has overruled it to the greatest benefit and blessing that ever befell a people. In a recent number of The Outlook Dr. Booker Washington contrasted the condition of negroes in this country with that of the white laboring classes of Europe, and very clearly showed that the lowliest and poorest of our colored cabin dwellers were far and away in a better condition of cleanliness, comfort and civilization than the great masses of peasant whites even in Europe. Through servitude then the negro has been advanced to a condition of comfort and civilization far beyond millions of white people in other lands. What then would the comparison be between the negroes of this land of their forced adoption and those of his ancestors and progenitors in their native land? There they yet live in rough and rude savagery, and are as far from civilization as they were decades ago, many of them, at any rate. The most fortunate day that ever dawned for the

PREVAILING LAWLESSNESS.

Many optimistic people are saying that the world is all the while growing better, and they see nothing to make them at all alarmed or discouraged. It is true that a large number of improvements in general society and political government have been made during the last century. We would not consent to be placed back to the state of things which existed even fifty years ago; but it must be confessed that lawlessness of various kinds has been increasingly prevalent in recent years. Reports from all parts of our country show an alarming growth of lawlessness and crime of all kinds. There is but comparatively little respect for legal and official authority. For a long time there has been great laxity in the enforcement of law. The most of criminals escape from due punishment. The larger part of murderers, even after being apprehended, are allowed to go free. Many criminal trials are a mere farce. The conclusion must be that there is a universal lack of respect for law, both divine and human. The fear of God and divine judgment is greatly lacking among the masses. Irreverence, in respect to God and all holy institutions and things, is amazingly manifested in every direction.

Rev. James M. Campbell, in an address, says: "In the present day the floods of lawlessness are being let loose. Men are breaking asunder the bands of authority, and casting away its cords from them. They refuse to be bound by anything or to do anything. License they mean when they shout liberty. The chain by which they are moored to eternal law and order is lightly broken, and they keep drifting upon the rocks.

"The spread of the spirit of lawlessness is appalling. Here we see the root of it, and also the remedy. It is because the people have no vision, because they are sunk in materialism, if not in animalism, because their sense-bound souls never see the realities of the spiritual world, that they cast off restraint. Hence the paramount duty of the church is to bring men into vital contact with spiritual things, that they may hold in their place, and thus be saved from the ruin that follows on the heels of rebellion." Let the terrors of divine law, and of judgment be proclaimed.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE. NO. 3.

By Rev. J. T. Kitchen.

There are lives which sometimes become clouded, sad, discouraged, hopeless, and painful. Physical conditions and adverse surroundings intrude themselves and we are not at all times what we desire to be. We yearn for health and more pleasant situations. But keep on believing; praying, hoping, and trying to live a beautiful life and you will succeed. Many people do not pray right nor live right; for if they prayed right and lived right they would overcome the weakness and imperfections which cause them to blunder, stumble and fall by the wayside. A long beautifully worded petition to God may not be the best way to pray. A few short, simple, earnest words may give you comfort, grace, joy and happiness. That splendid language and beautiful rhetoric may sound well in your ears, and in the ears of others, but it may not be accepted of the Lord.

Consider this parable of our Lord, "And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves and despised others: Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself: God I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican: I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Our Father knows who we are and what we are, so then we must look up to him as knowing us as his children, and as we look, believe and pray, we can truly say, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." No effort at self-exaltation need be made, no self-praise, none of the feeling that we are better than others, but just as we are, trusting fully in him.

Said an old friend to an early associate of his, "What are you doing these days?" The ready response was "I am trying to live the beautiful life. Trying to extract as much of the beauty out of this life as possible, and by doing this get help to make my own life more beautiful and attractive." The world is so full of beauty it is at all seasons admirable and instructive to the faithful student. We have only to think, look and listen for it; charming beauty for the eye, much beauty for the ear in great profusion all about us inviting us to do more thinking, more seeing, more hearing, and to let action with proper discretion play a beautiful part on the stage of life. The lovely character which grows out of a beautiful life is so attractive that every one is influenced by it when he comes in contact with it. Such surroundings make everything delightfully pleasant, and show that all can come to it, and be influenced for permanent good if they will. No life was ever perfect, none but Jesus', the Savior of this world, and perhaps other worlds besides, was perfect, but you can follow Him who is the light of the world and become more and more like him. Thus step by step you can walk up the King's highway to enjoy that peaceful rest that remains for the people of God.

SAYING GRACE.

In the Pilgrim's Progress there's a little bit about a chicken's way of giving thanks.

Christiana, the Pilgrim's wife, who set out, after him, to go to the Celestial City, had come to the interpreter's house. The interpreter, a great, good, and wise man, was explaining to her and to her boys and to Mercy, a young neighbor who journeyed with them, the many wonderful and strange sights they saw there. He invited them, by and by, into a room where were a hen and her chickens, and bade Christiana and the others watch them. After a little one of the chicks went to a trough to drink, "and every time she drank she lifted up her head and her eyes toward heaven." "See" said the interpreter, "what this little chick doth, and learn of her to acknowledge whence your mercies come by receiving them with looking up."—Life and Work.

THE HAPPY HOME.

There is a story of a bridegroom who requested his bride to accompany him into the garden a day or two after their wedding. He then threw a line over the roof of the cottage. Giving his wife one end of it, he retreated to the other side and exclaimed: "Pull the line." She pulled at his request as hard as she could. He cried: "Pull it over!" "I can't," she replied. "Pull with all your might," shouted the whimsical husband. But in vain were all the efforts of the bride to pull the line over, so long as the husband held on to the opposite end. But when he came round and they both pulled at one end, it came over with great ease. "There," said he, as the line fell from the roof, "you see how hard and ineffectual was our labor when we pulled in opposition to each other, but how easy and pleasant it is when we both pull together. It will be so, my dear, through life. If we oppose each other, it will be hard work; if we act together, it will be pleasant to live. Let us daily endeavor to help one another to bear and forbear with each other."—Morning Star.

THE BIBLE.

To the Bible men will return. And why? Because they cannot do without it.—Mathew Arnold.

A noble book! All men's book, the Bible. It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending problem—man's destiny and God's ways with him here on the earth.—Thomas Carlyle.

If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper.—Daniel Webster.

June 7, 1911.

The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influence of the Bible.—William H. Seward.

It is impossible to rightly govern the world without God and the Bible.—George Washington.

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of your liberties! Write its precepts in your hearts and practice them in your lives.—Ulysses S. Grant.

It is the Bible, the Bible itself, which combats and triumphs most efficaciously in the war between incredulity and unbelief.—Guizot.

It is a belief in the Bible, the fruits of deep meditation, which has served me as a guide of my moral and literary life. I have found it a capital, safely invested and richly productive of interest.—Goethe.

I had never in all my life so great an inlet into the Word of God as now. Those Scriptures that I saw nothing in before are made in this place and state to shine upon me. Jesus Christ was never more real and apparent than now; here I have seen and felt Him indeed.—Bunyan (while in prison).

The Emperor of Germany, in a recent interview with a well-known pastor of Berlin, said:

"I often read the Bible. It is a pleasure to read it every night. A Bible lies on a table at my bedside. I cannot understand how so many people exist who do not attend to God's Word. It is the source from which I draw strength and light."

President Schurman, of Cornell, says:

"No man can be uneducated who knows the Bible."

MRS. EDDY.

Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy died in her rich mansion, carefully attended by the same junta of business men who for years had surrounded her with watchful guard. Were they afraid that her weakened intellect by some silly words would reveal to her followers that she herself needed the mental "spoon victuals" with which she had so maternally and so tenderly fed them? That is, had she passed into her second childhood, that she could not meet her disciples in the "Mother Church," or in her home, or elsewhere; and only be seen at her carriage window riding along, or at a distance otherwise?

How different from him she called her Master, on whose breast at his last supper the beloved John laid his head! How different from him whom a traitor dared kiss! How different from him who washed his disciples' feet! How different from him who "had not where to lay his head!"

And now in New York City one of her dupes has been talking about her rising from the dead, or making some manifestation from her spirit life, as the successor of Jesus Christ.

But how unlike Jesus Christ this would be! Jesus predicted the date of his resurrection: Mrs. Eddy did not foretell hers at all. Jesus' enemies tried to prevent his prophecy from being fulfilled: nobody thinks of hindering Mrs. Eddy from resuming her "mortal flesh." Jesus died on a cross in view of the multitudes: Mrs. Eddy in her home, served by those in sympathy with her.

It is almost impossible to think of any one of ordinary moral character more unlike Him who "had not where to lay His head," Jesus, than the millionairess, Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy.

Think of Jesus Christ's selling spoons to get rich! Think of Jesus, who said to the thousands around him, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away,"—think of his selling his book to every convert, in new editions leaving out silly statements, and getting rich of that business, and spoons!

But what fine business shrewdness it was for her to get shrewd business men to manage her business affairs!

THE GREATEST OF ALL STORIES.

A private detective had this to say of his conversion:

"I never attended church, and the Bible was a strange book to me, so far as reading it was concerned. About ten days ago I saw a crowd gather around a preacher when I came out of the hall. On the third day that I stopped to listen, wholly out of curiosity, the preacher told the story of the prodigal son and it gripped me with tremendous power. That story convinced me that God was willing to pardon the lowest and most miserable sinner if he repented in the right way. I went home and prayed. I did another thing which was a new one to me: I opened a Bible and began reading it, and suddenly discovered that it was the most interesting book I had ever read. The story of the prodigal son has changed my life."

The story of the prodigal son is the greatest story ever told. It is the grandest thing in the human language. It is the story that finds the heart. The story should be told oftener than it is. Let ministers of the gospel and Christian workers tell the Bible stories oftener than they do. The Master was a great teacher because He put the profoundest truth in the simplest form. There is mighty saving power in these stories. The most untutored can understand them. The most devilish can be touched by them. The most indifferent can be interested by them. The story that does us good is the story that reaches the heart.—

CHURCH AND MONEY.

The other day a man said to me: "I don't go to church. I'll tell you why. I used to go, but I have rarely ever been that they were not raising money for one thing or another. When I go to the church I go to hear the Gospel, and not to be hounded for money, therefore I don't go."

Look here, brother, will you listen to a story of mine a few minutes? "I have a home as comfortable and attractive as it need be. I have a sweet wife in that home who is loving and tender and kind and does everything she can in that home to make it a place of comfort and pleasure and constant joy. She sympathizes with me in all my cares; and she helps me to be a success. Without her life would be a bore and hardly worth while.

I have a child in that home who is the joy of my heart, the inspiration and ambition of my life. He loves and depends upon me, and I love and depend upon him. My associations with wife and child are my most hallowed experiences.

I go to my noon meals not merely to satisfy my hunger, but to spend a while in the joys of my home, sharing their blessed associations, and inspiring my soul with new energy and determinations for better things. When my day's work is done, I sit down to rest amidst the chatter of the child and the music of my companion. Home is the dearest place on earth to me.

But listen: There are but few days that pass in which there is not a special call upon me for money. The flour is out, or the meat, or the meal; or some new wares must be bought, or a new dress, or a new hat, or shoes, or a suit for self, and just a thousand and one more things that are common but essential in family calls.

Suppose I say this: "Since I cannot go home without being called upon for money, I prefer not to go at all. I will not go home any more," and I really do stay away. What would you think of me? What would become of me?

If man had the making of the laws of religion, he would insert a clause whereby one would be prosecuted for spiritual negligence and failure to support the church just as quickly as the laws of our land prosecute one for the neglect of home and the failure to support wife.

The church is the great family of God. It is our espousal. There we learn of Him; we learn His love; we receive His care and protection; the blessed associations of His Spirit, and of His children, and of our brothers. Shall we say we will never go; we will not learn of Him; we will not have any of these blessed associations; if in doing so we are asked for money.

negro race was that day that brought them bond or free, to these shores; this in the light of succeeding events. We suppose it was a heartless and a cruel injustice; they tell us so, and let it go at that. But this land of ours atoned for that sin in a sea of fratricidal blood long since; and God has overruled that injustice to the greatest blessing and benefit that ever befell a fortunate and happy people. ..

Dr. Booker Washington has written a great book, and one helpful to his race, entitled, "Up From Slavery." In it the author showed how far the negro race had come since slavery. We look some day for the same distinguished author, or some other, to write a book on "Up To Slavery," and in it show how far the negro race came from his native savagery to American servitude and all that he acquired in character and learned in mind and heart by and through that servitude. It is a curious and an interesting study. And He who guides and shapes the destiny of nations has shown His hand and power in a most marked and measured manner in directing and guiding and shaping the destiny of the negro race.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The Defiance Collegian, of Defiance, Ohio, for May carries the face of our genial and brilliant Prof. W. A. Harper, Chair of Latin in Elon College, and a clever article from the Professor's pen entitled "The Case of The Classics."

—This is a year noted for resignations on the part of presidents of our Christian college. Pres. Moffitt of Elon College, President O. B. Whitaker of Union Christian College and President Erey C. Kerr of Palmer College are three of our number who voluntarily relinquish their positions to others. Heavy work and failing health is the predominant note.

—Raleigh correspondence of Charlotte Observer: "The Howerton-Kernodle Undertaking Company of Durham is chartered with $25,000.00 capital by E. M. Howerton and others for a general undertaking business." The reference is to our friend and townsman, R. J. Kernodle, and while we regret to lose so good a citizen from our town, we wish "June" all success in his business venture.

—Sister Frances Osborne, LaFayette, Ala, and a daughter of our dear brother, Rev. T. H. Elder, because her dollar reached us just too late to send The Sun a year to a widow who wished and deserved it, but is feeble and unable to pay for it, sends $1.50 for a Bible to be sent to the good sister, and so in her lonely hours she will have the Word of God and the pages of the Christian Sun to keep her company and give her comfort.

—The finals of the scholastic year 1910-'11 are on at Elon College this week and many friends and visitors from a distance are present. The attendance is very large, and the exercises are of the usual high order. We were not privileged to be present Sunday, having an engagement elsewhere, when the baccalaureate was delivered by Dr. P. H. Fleming of Burlington, but we are told that the sermon was of a high order and much enjoyed by the large audience present. Incidents of commencement will be told in these columns next week.

—The editor was at the Pleasant Grove, Halifax Co., Va., memorial exercises last Sunday. It was a beautiful occasion and a most inspiring audience. The spacious auditorium of this splendid church was filled with intelligent and earnest worshippers. The A. F. organized class of the Sunday-school, Mrs. M. F. Cook, leader, was in charge of the services after the sermon and the brief exercises by the class were appropriate and beautiful. Pleasant Grove is one of our largest and most active congregations and whatever the church undertakes is done in good taste and with splendid success.

NEWS ITEMS.

—Acting President De La Barra of Mexico has ordered an election for the successor of ex-President Diaz, resigned, to take place on Sunday, Oct. 15, 1911. An election on the Sabbath does not look good to an American.

—The Standard Oil Company and the American Tobacco Company, both having been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be corporations doing business in restraint of trade, Congress has passed a resolution enquiring of Attorney-General Wickerham why the heads of these corporations should not be indicted in criminal proceedings for having violated the law of the land.

—Ex-Governor Gleen of N. C., has declined a flattering offer to become editor of a paper with large financial backing in Texas, the ex-Governor being allowed to name his own salary. He declines, giving as his first reason that he does not wish to leave this State permanently. Governor Glenn is doing great work, and effectual, lecturing for Home Missions in the Presbyterian Church.

—Senator Lorimer of Illinois, is again to face an investigation as to bribery in his election. The sub-committee of the Senate to try him is composed of four Republicans and four Democrats, four of whom voted for his conviction and four for his acquittal at the last session of Congress. If Lorimer is innocent he certainly is having a hard time proving it. If he is guilty it requires effort to establish the fact. In either case Lorimer is a much tried, and much talked of, man.

—Ex-President Diaz, of Mexico, has bidden farewell to his native land and is on his way to Spain where he proposes to live in the future. He says the new government of Mexico will finally have to adopt his policies, and if it becomes necessary he will return to Mexico and take up his sword in defense of the republic and peace. President for thirty years, and now past eighty years old, Diaz is as game as ever, though evidently conceited and erratic. He has truly been the father of the Republic of Mexico and has served well his countrymen, even if in his old age he has fled from them.

A newspaper dispatch from Germany gives the substance of a conversation between Emperor William of Germany and a certain professor of theology who was trying to persuade the Kaiser that Jesus Christ is not God:

"The emperor asked the professor if he ever said to his students, 'I am the vine, ye are the branches.' The answer was, 'No.' 'Do you believe,' continued the Emperor, 'that any professor before you ever said such a thing?' 'No,' said the professor. 'Or ever will say it?' went on the Kaiser. 'Certainly not,' replied the professor. 'Good, then,' the Kaiser declared. 'Since no human teacher can or will speak as Christ spoke, I believe that Christ was not only man, but the true God.' "

Commenting on this the Lutheran says: "Does it ever occur to people who do not seem to hesitate to rob Christ of His divinity that no mere man would dare to say: 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life'; 'Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest'; 'I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live?'"—*N. FOREIGN MISSION EXPOSITION.

The World in Boston, which closed on May 20, far outdid its London prototype. The estimated attendance was 375,000, and instead of facing a deficiency of $7,500, the Boston management made both ends lap over. Early next autumn the city of Providence will have a similar exhibit of Oriental missions. In March, 1912, Cincinnati expects to reproduce the entire show, as will Chicago in the following spring. Toronto, Buffalo, Cleveland, Kansas City and Saint Louis are considering the desirability of adopting "the World." The Missionary Exposition Company will have general charge in all cities. A. M. Gardener, the successful manager of the World in Boston, is general secretary, and his capable helpers—H. D. Cotton and F. W. Harold—retain their important functions on his staff.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Suffolk meeting continued from May 14th to May 31st inclusive. There was a morning meeting from 10 to 11 part of the time, conducted by the pastor or Mr. Butler. There was a home meeting each day from 4 to 5 P. M. conducted by Mrs. Butler or Miss Anderson. These afternoon meetings were held on different streets and in different homes and attended mostly by women. In these prayer meetings three married women professed faith in Christ and one young woman. The Sunday school hour was partly evangelistic on three Sundays with good results. The pastor preached all the time of the meeting. Mr. and Mrs. Butler sang and led the singing, and Miss Mary Anderson played the piano.

Hot weather, base ball, election, an unusual amount of sickness, and extra work in the public school, caused by a two weeks suspension of the school just before the meeting on account of small-pox and vaccination, were factors hindering the meeting; but, in spite of all these, the attendance was good, the interest increased, and fifty-eight persons made a profession of faith in Christ. Not the least in the results was the toning up of the spiritual life of the church, the elimination of evils from our hearts, and absence of an over-wrought sensationalism in the meetings. It was a straightforward presentation of the Gospel in sermon, song, and devotion. The singers bring into their meetings an intense concern for souls and add prayer to artistic gifts in song. They can make great songs simple and simple songs great. They put heart into the songs and get the heart out of the songs. Nobody feels that they are singing to be heard; everybody feels that they sing with the spirit and the understanding also. We feel that their coming has brought us closer to Jesus and that we shall have their sympathy and prayers wherever they go. June 1st Mr. and Mrs. Butler left for a meeting in Birmingham, Ala., and June 2nd Miss Anderson left for Springfield, Ill., to visit her parents before sailing the last of August for Dublin, Ireland, where Dr. Torrey begins a long engagement for meetings in Ireland, Scotland, and England.

We have not yet opened the door of the church, but will soon and hope to add some newborn members. I am more and more convinced that the great need of the church is a membership personally conscious of personal regeneration and a surrender of life in consecration. Education, social influence, wealth, all have their value; but none of them, nor all of them, can save souls or convince the world of sin. These become great factors in the kingdom when they are converted, but they have no power to convert men and women to the kingdom. A farmer who plants more than he can cultivate never impresses others favorably; but when he tills a few acres intensely he makes others feel like being farmers. A church full of half converted members never wins the sinner; but a church regenerate, a church consecrated, a church living the gospel, sets before the hungry something worth seeking. The world wants salvation, but a formal church offers no inspiration. We have set our faces toward a sane, steady, upward growth in grace and spiritual activity.

Brother K. B. Johnson, of Cardenas, N. C., through whose thoughtful kindness, I was introduced to the Butlers, came to Suffolk and spent one day and night with us in the meeting. Rev. C. H. Rowland of Franklin, Va., Revs. I. W. Johnson, H. H. Butler, B. F. Black, and local pastors attended. The pastor and congregation appreciated the presence and help of these ministerial representatives. Rev. N. A. McFarland, pastor of the Baptist Church, was confined to his bed with blood-poison during the meeting and many of his congregation graced our pews and added to the prayers and praises. He is now convalescing and his congregation is happy.

A coterie of Suffolk brethren will start for Elon College Board meeting next Monday.

UNITARIANS AND METHODISTS.

Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of The New York Christian Advocate, possibly the most versatile and experienced scholar and exponent of Methodist doctrine and tenets in this country, draws the following distinction between his church and the Unitarians:

The Methodist Episcopal Church worships Christ as God; modern Unitarians maintain Him to be but a man. The gulf is impassable. For Methodists to join with them would be blasphemy; for them to join with us would be idolatry. The Virgin Birth, the Deity of Christ, His Atonement, Spiritual Regeneration—the absolute necessity of mysterious spiritual change in man, the real meaning of Christ's suffering and death, are all denied by Unitarians of the present day.

Dr. Priestley, a very noted Unitarian, wrote to a representative Trinitarian as follows: "The truth is, there neither can nor ought to be any compromise between us. If you are right, we are not Christians at all; and if we are right, you are gross idolaters."

In an essay at the Unitarian Convention in Saratoga some years ago, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, of Leicester, England, quoted the apostle Peter, Acts 4: 12: "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Then the essayist said, with emphasis: "There are other names given by which men are saved."

The American Unitarian Association sends forth attacks upon the belief of Evangelical Christians in its various publications:

We believe Jesus to have been divine, but not Deity—as we believe that humanity in the degree of its perfection is everywhere divine. . . . But we do not worship Him. . . . "Coming to Jesus" is used among large classes of religious people in a sense which has in it no sense, but is mere sentimentalism and cant. . . . The whole idea in all its forms that God, before he can or will pardon men's sins, must have some third party to make Him willing, or some sort of plan or scheme whereby he becomes able to pardon, we utterly reject.

Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God.—He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

For he that bideth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds (2 John 9-11).

Yet some Methodist preachers will invite into their pulpits those who reject these truths and descent against them.

This cannot be fidelity to Christ.

Neither can it be fidelity to the churches with which such pastors are intrusted.

Love rests at the bottom of every pure soul, like a drop of dew in the calyx of a flower. Oh, if you knew what it is to love!"

To take up the cross of Christ is no great action done once for all; it consists in the continual practice of small duties which are distasteful to us.—J. H. Newman.

Aim at a steady mind to do right, go wherever duty calls you, and believe firmly that God will forgive the faults that take our weakness by surprise in spite of our sincere desire to please Him.—Jean Nicholas Grou.

Happy and brave and strong shall we be, able to endure all things and to do all things, if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment of our life is in His hands.—Van Dyke.

"We cannot understand one thing. Why is a man who believes little or nothing, and that very feebly, a 'broad' man, while one is 'narrow' who believes a great deal with all his heart?"

Let your spiritual life be formed by your duties and by the actions which are called forth by circumstances. Do not take over-much thought for the morrow. Be altogether at rest in loving, holy confidence.—Francis De Sales.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.
 Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THIRTY MINUTES FOR LESSON STUDY.

I have visited many a Sunday-school in our Southern Christian Convention and quite a few in other churches. Almost without exception the Secretary reads as a part of the day's proceedings "Thirty minutes were given to the study of the lesson." Is this a true record of what transpires in our various classes or is it a survival of the time when few could read or write or had Bibles and so all had to go to Sunday-school to study the lesson?

I am persuaded that this is not a correct record of a great many classes, perhaps of none in an accurate sense. We have some excellent teachers among us (and their number is growing), who would justly resent the charge implied in the minutes of the Secretary if applied to their class individually. They teach during those precious thirty minutes and their pupils recite—the recitation period with them is well used and abounds in good results. All points of fact in the lesson are brought out by the question and answer process. The pupils in one way or another, the method being varied from Sunday to Sunday, are given the connecting links between the present lesson and the previous one, are caused to see that certain great truths are taught in the lesson and shown how these truths can be applied to them—surely this is not studying the lesson, but reciting it. To such a lesson the Secretary's "Thirty minutes given to the study of the lesson" does not apply.

But there are other schools as wholes and individual classes in other schools of which this record is with more justice used, if not accurately and correctly. They really meet to study, (but make poor business at it) not to recite. The guide to their study, misnamed teacher, asks the printed questions of the quarterly and the students, misnamed pupils, read the answers from the quarterly. Nobody knows anything for sure, neither before nor after the performance. Such a class is a parody on teaching and reciting both; it does not know the alphabet of teaching or of reciting, which is a, all, b, books, c. closed. They are not ready to go on with d and the rest. Of such classes it is a misnomer even to say that their "thirty minutes was given to the study of the lesson." It would be exact to say that on them thirty minutes is spent in messing with a portion of Scripture and wasting an opportunity to do lasting service for Christ. I am glad we have a decreasing few of such classes.

So in either instance "the thirty minutes given to the study of the lesson" ought to be expunged from the Secretary's records. What Secretary will be first to act on this suggestion?

With Treasurer Cox.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JUNE 18—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Grace for Common Duties. Eph. 4:25-26; 5:1-2.

The Scripture.—Have one Endeavorer memorize the 1st two verses and another the second two, and repeat them, adding a brief comment after the recitation of them.

The Leader.—Most of us enjoy the great occasions of life—the holidays, and Conferences, and Conventions, and revival seasons, but how few of us really love our irksome, routine, daily tasks! Happy is the man that enjoys his work! Happiness is the best seasoning for labor. But how can we sing while washing clothes, plowing, selling goods, preparing lessons, teaching the young idea how to shoot? How can we be happy in the midst of these trivial and necessary duties? Not of our own strength nor of ourselves. We must have grace—grace from God—which will comfort and strengthen and uplift us in every phase of our endeavor. How can we get this grace? By subjecting our will to Christ's. If we will do this, our wash-tubs will become cathedrals, our daily tasks rungs in the ladder leading directly to heaven. Christian Endeavor ought to help us to this end.

LEARN TO FORGET.

If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding and give little thought to the cause which provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points which make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out as far as possible all the disagreeables of life; they will come, but they will grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thoughts of the acts of meanness, or worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday; start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it for sweet memory's sake, only those things which are lovely and lovable.—Oregon Churchman.

It is good for us to keep some account of our prayers, that we may not unsay them in our practice.—Henry.

A REMINISCENCE OF CHANCELORSVILLE.

By a Confederate Soldier.

(The writer of this reminiscence was a ranking captain in the Confederate Army, and as secretary of General Robert E. Lee's staff had opportunity to know much of the inside workings of this famous battle. Had General Hooker known the desperate straits to which General Lee was reduced, and that what he supposed was our picket line was in fact our main line, stretched out to ten feet between every two men and extending for miles, he could have eished the army under Lee in short order and have there ended the war and saved both armies from the later bloody battle of Gettysburg. It is believed that the inner facts of how General Stonewall Jackson was killed by his own men, in obedience to his own orders, are given here for the first time.—Author's Note.)

In the spring of 1863 we received information from our spies that General Hooker, in command of the Federal forces, had crossed the Rappahannock and was intending to attack us, and long before day General Lee made preparations to repel the attack by ordering General Stonewall Jackson to make a forced march around the Federal right wing and attack Hooker in the rear, while the rest of our forces would hold him in check in front.

We all felt much uneasiness from the fact that General Hood and General Pickett had left us with their divisions, to go on a foraging expedition to the black-water region of the State, and this diminution of our forces naturally disturbed us and filled us with much concern. Our grand old commander, however, preserved his characteristic calm and dignified manner, as the enemy doubtless were unaware of the serious depletion of our army.

Jackson was to announce his arrival in the rear of Hooker's army by signal guns, and according to our plans he should have reached his destination by noon.

General Sickles was marching in our front, to get around our left flank, and his pickets were feeling cautiously, trying to find out where our line began, and where it ended, so that he could get in our rear, and was unaware of the fact that General Jackson was successfully accomplishing the very same thing in reference to Hooker's army.

Meanwhile General Lee was manifestly worried at not having heard from General Jackson, and remarked in my hearing, "I am very anxious to hear from General Jackson." for it was long past the time at which it had been decided he should signal us with a piece of field artillery. The forced march of Jackson had been retarded by the fact that his men were poorly shod, many of them being barefoot, and the detour for this reason had taken longer than we had expected.

But the anxiety of General Lee was not to be of long duration, for soon we heard the boom of General Jackson's guns and knew that he had arrived and was attacking.

General Lee became at once more animated than was his custom and ordered a general charge all along our lines, while Jackson pushed and fought his way against the rear of Hooker's surprised and somewhat demoralized forces. The attack and resistance was well fought by both sides, while the troops under Sickles naturally doubled back to their fortifications on the river.

The great relief we experienced at not being compelled to retreat can scarcely be imagined. While we were congratulating ourselves there came a courier roweling his horse at every step, and the writer asked of him:

"What on earth is the matter?" and he told us he was ordered to inform General Lee that Sedgwick had crossed the river at Fredericksburg, captured the Washington Artillery, cut Barksdale's brigade of Mississippians to pieces and was coming up the road to attack us.

We, of course, hurried him to General Lee as quickly as possible.

Not many moments passed before our boys flushed with the victory in Hooker's attack on our main line, came down the road at double quick, and at Lee's command were deployed into line and immediately charged Sedgwick's division, and thus drove him back.

The reader can well imagine our relief at the success of these tactics against a foe of overwhelming numbers. Our enthusiasm, however, soon gave place to sorrow, for at night the sad news reached us that Stonewall Jackson was shot by his own men, in obedience to his own orders.

Jackson, with his staff, had passed through our lines with a reconnoitering expedition, and had left orders with his troops in case of the approach of cavalry to fire upon them without challenge.

His party was surprised by some cavalry of the enemy and compelled to retrace their steps to avoid capture. Thus the apparent approach of cavalry was himself and staff coming back from their night expedition, and a regiment of Virginia troops arose and fired without challenge, in obedience to his command, given earlier in the evening, and Jackson was shot from his horse.

He was taken up and while being carried back on a stretcher was toppled off by the stumbling of his bearers, receiving additional injury.

Later he was taken to a nearby house and his arm amputated.

Pneumonia set in, however, and after a few days our gallant leader succumbed with these words spoken to those about him: "Let us cross over the river and lie down in the shade."

Stonewall Jackson was one of the most remarkable characters developed by the war. Simple as a child, he knew no fear, and was never satisfied unless in action.

His fearlessness was the result of his faith in God, and he was almost a fatalist in his conception of Divine Providence, being what we then termed a "blue-light Presbyterian."

A man of prayer, he has been known prior to an engagement to pray the entire night, and many a time his old colored man-servant would come to us and say: "You'se gwine to get fits today and have to fight hard, for Marse Jackson he done pray all night."

While lying in bed, after the amputation of his arm, he turned to the surgeon, and pointing to the stump of his arm, said: "Doctor, do you know I would not restore that arm if I could?"

"Why not, General?" asked the astonished physician.

"Because," replied Jackson, "do you not remember that passage of Scripture which says, 'All things work together for good to those who love the Lord and are called according to his purpose?' and it is best for me to have one arm, and I would not have it different."

The writer would not say that with Jackson as commander our army would have been as successful as it was under our dear and honored General Lee, yet

I do say that as a soldier he was unequalled.

I shall never forget General Lee's remark made in my presence, when told of Jackson's death, "I have lost my right arm."—New York Christian Advocate.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION OF THE EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Attention is hereby called to the time and place of the annual meeting of the above named body. Tuesday after the third Sunday in July is the time; Damascus Christian Church, Orange County, N. C., is the place. Those within the bounds of the Convention are most earnestly requested to read this notice, and after having read it, to inscribe it on the tablet of their memories. Do you ask why? Let us tell you. We want all the ministers of our Conference present, both active and passive, those that have charge of churches, and those who have none. We want visiting ministers from other Conferences present; especially those who are making a specialty of work among our young people. We want every Sunday school represented by its full quota of delegates. We want every Christian Endeavor Society represented. We want every organized class represented. We want all our Sunday school superintendents present, and all the teachers that can make an opportunity to go. Let us have a big representation, a lively program, an interesting interchange of ideas, some big speeches, some good music, and a great, big collection for missions and other purposes.

Our thirteen ministers are earnestly requested to see that the Sunday schools and Young People's Societies in their charges elect their delegates to this convention, fill out their reports properly, and provide for their annual dues. Make this a personal matter, brethren, and put forth a strenuous effort to have your field of work show up in good shape.

Damascus Church, the place of meeting, is situated among the Oconeechee hills of Orange County, five miles from the State University, in a country where the air is pure, water good, people healthy, families large, and food plentiful. Those who fail to attend this Convention will miss a treat that they can't well afford to miss. Let us put forth a big effort to have a good Convention.

Herbert Scholz, Pres.

It is a noble and great thing to cover the blemishes and to excuse the failings of a friend; to draw a curtain before his stains, and to display his perfections; to bury his weaknesses in silence, but to proclaim his virtues upon the house-top.—Robert South.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Bethlehem.

The memorial meeting at Bethlehem was largely attended and greatly enjoyed. The flowers were many and very beautiful. Bro. W. E. MacClenny, one of Elon's graduates, and author of "The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly and the Early History of the Christian Church, South," (a book which should be in every home in the Christian Church), delivered the memorial address which was very fine indeed and greatly enjoyed by all who heard it.

Antioch and Mt. Carmel.

The memorial at Antioch and Mt. Carmel were largely attended and greatly enjoyed. Rev. J. T. Kitchin and Rev. R. H. Peel of Windsor, Va., did the speaking. These meetings are becoming more interesting and profitable to our people. The cemeteries are better kept and the impressions made upon the minds and hearts of the people as they gather annually are refining and lasting. I do not think it well to have what is called a family burying ground. I believe it much better to carry our dead to the church, city, or neighborhood cemetery. These are more apt to be kept up. Family cemeteries are generally neglected and often abandoned altogether. Bury your loved ones where you know, or believe, their graves can be looked after and kept up.

Cypress Chapel.

Fourth Sunday was our memorial at Cypress Chapel. All seemed to enjoy the meeting very much indeed. There was a religious service held by the pastor of the church. The flowers were in abundance and on Sunday morning the graves appeared beautiful, as they were covered with flowers.

May these meetings continue and ever be a great comfort and help to our people.

H. H. B.

Berkley Letter.

On May the 7th we began a series of meetings at our church, which continued until the 21st. Rev. I. W. Johnson was with us from Tuesday, May 9th, until Tuesday, May 16th, during which time he did excellent preaching.

The interest was good all the while and the attendance fair. There were about thirty six conversions and so far twenty-one have joined the church, others will join next Sunday.

The time Bro. Johnson was absent the pastor did the preaching. At the morning service, May 14th, Mother's Day was observed and if there ever was a more impressive service held during the present pastorate the writer knows not of it.

The attendance was above the average. Every one wore a white flower of some kind as a token of love for mother. The pastor's text was founded on John 19:25, a part of which reads, "Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother," and a part of the 27th verse, which reads, "Then saith he to his disciple, Behold thy mother." The simple outline of two main divisions was 1. True Mother-love. 2, True Child-love. How these beamed forth from the cross as another guiding star for Christian mothers and children was the theme. There was not a dry eye in the house of worship when the service closed. It seemed that the Holy Spirit was with us in overwhelming power. Seven members were received in this service. This was certainly a Red Letter Day for the Main St. Christian Church. Give God the praise.

It was the writer's privilege to be with Rev. I. W. Johnson in a meeting at Hobson and at the Crittenden church one week each. The meetings were well attended and at Hobson there were some of the most inspiring services I have ever witnessed. The people over there have built one of the neatest and most modern country churches I know of. There are leaded glass windows, elevated pews, carpeted floor and gas lights. This looks like a good model for the country churches to follow. Why not have one of such neatness and accommodations in your community? It's easy to have if you try. People love to make God's house the best of all.

Bro. Johnson has done what every country pastor with church loyalty and pride can do; make his "Roadside" church the equal in taste and comfort to the "Parkside" church in town.

All together, then, for a better country church and we shall find our people then ready for other things larger in proportion.

M. L. Bryant.

New Hope, Franklin Co., N. C.

Fourth Sunday and Saturday before were days long to be remembered at this church. On Saturday a good congregation was present. After preaching the business of the church was transacted in a good Christian spirit. Sunday was memorial day. The people came from North, South, east and West until the house was full, and many had to remain out of doors. All the graves were decorated with beautiful flowers furnished by kind hands and loving hearts, after which a sermon was preached to the old soldiers. Then came the dinner of a high order both in quantity and quality. Then another sermon was preached to an attentive congregation. The behavior of the people was good and the music both on Saturday and Sunday was excellent.

The Sunday school has over a hundred on the roll, and an average of about a hundred.

The membership of the church and the people of the community are as attentive and kind to the pastor as if he were not more than twenty-five years old, and he appreciates it as well as a ten year old boy would.

W. G. Clements.

Madrid, Iowa, Letter.

The second Sunday morning we observed "Mothers' Day" at the church hour, and "Parents' Day" at the Sunday school hour. We thought to get all the parents of the children of the Sunday school to attend at least one session of the school. We did not reach the mark set, but we made a good showing. The "Mothers' Day" services that we have held for the past two years seem to have touched a responsive cord in the hearts of the people. This is generally true, no doubt, where ever these services are held and this is as it should be. Last Sunday evening there was a union service of the four churches in town, held at the Christian church, this being the occasion of the baccalaureate sermon in connection with the commencement exercises of the Madrid High School. The sermon was preached by the pastor of the Christian church. Last year the sermon was preached by the pastor of the Swedish Mission Church at the Swedish Lutheran Church. There are six graduates again this year all of them young ladies—four Swedes and two Americans. The attendance at the service was large. The music was fine, being rendered by a choir made up from the different churches. A memorial sermon is preached each year on the Sunday before memorial day. These services alternate between the Methodist and Christian Churches. Next Sunday the Methodist pastor preaches the sermon at the Christian Church.

The other day a man called at the parsonage to inform me that I was one of a limited number of persons entitled to a work that he was selling. After showing me the character of the books, he insisted that I purchase, as it would be the last time I would ever have the opportunity of securing the books, and that I could not afford not to embrace the opportunity. I found afterwards that about everybody in town was on the list of the "favored few" and that all had just the one chance to buy. By talking up that which one represents, many have been led to purchase that which seemed to them that they needed, when afterwards it occurred to them that they had no special need for it.

How important it is for Christians to "talk up" that which they have, in the name of Christ, to offer to the unsaved, and not only to talk it but to live it, so that it may seem to the unsaved to be the one thing needful for them.

But day by day we have to face the situation, where so many of the members of the church live on the same basis with the men of the world, that it seems hard to convince them that it is worth while for them to amend their ways.

Fraternally,

W. D. Harward.

Bethel.

Saturday before the first Sunday in May was our second business meeting. The business was attended to in harmony. The grave-yard committee reported the grave-yard fenced and painted at a cost of $102.00 and a small amount in the treasury. The church elected three deacons, viz.: Bros. J. F. Ferrell, W. L. Miles and W. B. Walker. These brethren were ordained on Sunday following their election on Saturday. We had communion and two sermons on Sunday. The congregation was large and the collection good.

Center Grove.

Saturday before the second Sunday in May was our second business meeting. The committee appointed to purchase an organ reported that they had purchased an organ and had a small amount in cash on hand after paying for the organ.

The members are talking of painting the church in the near future. The Sunday-school is doing better than it has for some time. Two sermons on Sunday. The congregation large and the collection good.

Mt. Zion.

We held our second business meeting on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May. The church has the money promised and in hand to put a new roof on the church. We had two sermons on Sunday. The congregation large and the collection good. Mt. Zion has a prayer-meeting on the second Sunday.

A SHORT SERMON ON LOVE.

The following short sermon on love, selected and translated from the French by Van Hermit, is worthy of a most careful and prayerful study on the part of every Christian.

"You have only a day to spend here on earth; act in such a manner that you may spend it in peace.

"Peace is the fruit of love; for, in order to live in peace, we must bear with a great many things.

"None is perfect; each has his failings, each hangs upon the other, and love alone renders that weight light.

"If you cannot bear with your brother, how will your brother bear with you?"

"It is written of the Son of Mary, that 'having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them until the end.

"For that reason, love your brother, who is in the world, and love him until the end.

"Love is indefatigable; it never grows weary. Love is inexhaustible; it lives and is born anew in the living and the more it pours itself out the fuller its fountain.

"Whoever loves himself better than he loves his brother is not worthy of Christ, who died for his brothers. Have you given away everything you possess? Go and give up your life also! Love will restore all to you.

"Verily I say unto you, the heart of man that loves is a paradise on earth. He has God within him, for God is love!

"The wicked man loves not, he covets; he hungers and thirsts for everything; his eyes, like unto the eyes of a serpent fascinate and allure, but only to devour.

"Love rests at the bottom of every pure soul, like a drop of dew in the calyx of a flower. Oh, if you knew what it is to love!

"You say that you love, and yet many of your brothers are in want of bread to sustain their life, in want of clothes to cover their naked limbs, in want of a handful of straw to sleep on, whilst you have all things in abundance."—Pittsburg Advocate.

CLOSING THE DOORS.

I have closed the door on Doubt;
I will go by what light I can find,
And hold up my hands and reach them out
To the glimmer of God in the dark, and call:

"I am Thine, though I grope and stumble and fall.

I serve; and Thy service is kind."

I have closed the door on Fear.

He has lived with me far too long.

If he were to break forth and reappear,

I should lift my eyes and look at the sky,

And sing aloud, and run lightly by;

He will never follow a song.

I have closed the door on Gloom.

His house has too narrow a view.

I must seek for my soul a wider room,

With windows to open and let in the sun,

And radiant lamps when the day is done.

And the breeze of the world blowing through.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We had a nice shower this afternoon, but we are hungry for a day's gentle and refreshing rain. Our wheat crop is much dried up and still we have a large amount of land that is too dry for the heavy plows to break. We have about 10,000 potato slips set and another crop growing. Lula Canada has been looking after our potato bed and keeping it watered which has had much to do with the nice growth of our plants. We will soon be in our wheat harvest and then for a hard time. Our farmer boys are doing well. Next Sunday begins 1911 Commencement at Elon College and they are expecting quite a large attendance and a most interesting occasion.

We do wish our many pastors would heed our most earnest appeal and give their congregations an opportunity to give us from $1.00 up as the individual might feel and in three weeks all of our indebtedness would be paid. We cannot do this without your help.

Give us a full report next week.

Uncle Jim.

Brownsummit, N. C., May 27, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I send you mine and brother's dues, 20 cents for May. Papa and Mama went to Apples Chapel to meeting today and took brother and me with them. Rev. L. I. Cox was at his post and preached a fine sermon. His text was taken from Obadiah 1:18.

I want to come down to see you all. I will colse. Hope you and the little cousins are well.

Holt E., and Gilbert H. Geringer.

Come on, boys; we will be glad to see you. Can you play base ball? If you can, our boys will welcome you with a joyful shout; if not, come anyway.

Henderson, N. C., May 23, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Miss Bettie Stephenson has been visiting us and gave us our quarter to send. Miss Eunice Coghill visited us also last week. She gave us lots of confectioneries, so we fell in love with both young ladies.

Rev. W. G. Clements spent part of Saturday and Sunday night here. Charles greatly admired him because he had been a soldier. Said however, after thinking deeply on the subject, "Brother Clements ought to have fought on the side where there were the most men. Then, maybe he wouldn't have gotten shot."

Love to all,

Charles Hannah, Clare and Helen Newman.

Your company was nice to you, little folks, and so we get some of the good things too. Just see how many have been helped by one quarter! Cunt them up, Charles, and tell us.

Franklin, N. C., April 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am twenty months old, and weigh 29 pounds; just weighed me. I weighed 9 pounds at first and now show a gain of a pound a month for every month since. I send a dime for April—more of grandma's generosity. I am on a visit to grandma's and so are grandpa and Mrs. Lusie Holland of Suffolk. I'll tell about this trip later. I must return to the break in my narrative. The first of last October dada wrote mother to take me to Dr. Glassecock, an osteopath in Raleigh. He gave me three treatments and I took cold as his room was not quite warm enough.

On one trip to Raleigh, mama took me to the Murphy Graded School, where she once taught, and the teacher had me hold an informal reception at mother's former class.

October 10th we came to Roxboro to live with Dada, at the Liotel Jones, where we have rooms 20 and 24 and bath between. Uncle Jim and Dr. Atkinson were nice to me on the way, and a gentleman gave me the pretty back on his magazine. I pointed out the pictures on the back of the Woman's Home Companion—the baby, the boy and the bright girl with the bow of ribbon on her hair; and the baby putting the crown on the man's head.

On the 13th I was put in the big bath tub for the first time and have enjoyed it all the winter. They have to amuse me to keep me from crying when they take me out. Grandma's cook used to tell mother she liked a bath better than any baby she ever saw, so guess I'm like mother.

Well, in October mother and I started tri-weekly trips to Durham to doctor Tucker, the Osteopath, and then bi-weekly ones until Christmas, as the 12th dorsal of my skin had been wrenched a little out of place and the reflex muscles of my legs were partly deadened. I gained from 19 to 24½ pounds in two months, and ceased to suffer with such violent attacks of indigestion. I gained strength so I could run my baby walker in any direction and could crawl over the floor. I don't want any more falls, although that one never showed a bruise.

The first Sunday in November Dada took us to Houston, Va., where farmer Cook met us and took us to aunt Minnie's to spend the day. They have a nice country home near Pleasant Grove church, where we went to hear Dr. Atkinson preach a fine sermon. He had taken his text before we arrived and aunt Minnie, knowing my previous good record, led us to the front. I was good until communion, and then I wanted some, as I had known the taste of bread for a few weeks, and mother had left my zwiebach at aunt Minnie's. Mother gave me half of her communion bread, but that wasn't enough. After service, I shook hands with Dr. Atkinson and was welcomed into the church by the entire congregation, the greater percent of which seemed to be Farmers. Mr. and Mrs. Farmer and Archie Duncan went home with us to dinner. We had a lovely day in spite of the vacant chair and the cold drive back to Houston. We didn't get cold, but feared Farmer would on the way home that night. Wm. Samuel and I have the same initials. I hope I can go there and stay longer some time, because Melissa was so nice to me last summer when she and Farmer came to Grandma's.

December 13th mother took me to the nice new Watts Hotel in Durham, where I underwent an operation the next morning. Dr. Cheatham, Dada's cousin, administered the chloroform and I was under the influence 45 minutes. Mother stayed in the operating room and I tell you she was glad when I came to and cried. Dr. Booker, the surgeon, said I had the best disposition of any baby he ever saw, and I was quite a favorite among the nurses and other patients. I took cold after the anesthetic. We came home December 20th, and that night I was taken ill. Both lungs were badly affected and I had such high fever and my lungs pained so, I couldn't lie on either side. Prayers, old Dr. Nichols and good nursing pulled me through, though not in time to reach grandma's for Christmas dinner.

I have cut my eye teeth. My back is straight now and I can dance if any one holds me up, though I can't stand alone yet.

Uncle Jim, I appreciate your kind invitation to attend Elon College commencement this year, but guess we will have to wait until next commencement to accept.

Much love,

William Staley Cheatham.

Well, baby dear, you are having quite a time but we sincerely hope you will pull through safely and soon walk and run around as well as "dance."

They all have the deepest sympathy of their many friends. The body was found, late Saturday afternoon in the woods near where he was murdered. It is a great mystery, as no one knew or thought that he had an enemy in the world. The funeral services were conducted at his home on Monday afternoon by his pastor, and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery at Cypress Chapel. The Lord bless and comfort the dear parents. H. H. B.

READY.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, M. A.

"Be ye therefore ready also; for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not." Luke xii. 40.

Our Lord may pay us surprise visits, and it will be our blessedness to be ready at His appearing. He comes in many different ways, often changing His attire. Sometimes He puts on dark raiment and we see no radiance in His approach. He comes to us in the gloom of disappointment; He comes to us in the somberness of death; and when He comes to us in those sable robes we are apt to overlook His presence, and think it to be an alien and unfriendly power.

But not always does He come in clouds of darkness. He frequently comes in the brightness of a successful day. The gladness of triumph leaps into our souls. "It is the Lord Who riseth with healing in his wings." And sometimes He comes in a bright, cheery ray of revelation; some clear radiance falls upon my bewildered mind and I can see the way out of the wood. It may be only a flash of intuition, but the illumination is significant of the presence of the Lord. And so in many ways He comes to His children, and He seems to delight in changing His attire. He loves to pay these surprise visits, and we give Him great joy when we recognize Him and love the appearing.

Well, now, how can we make ready for the Master, so that when He appears we may open the door to Him immediately? Happily, we have guidance enough on the matter from the Sacred Word. And here is the first counsel offered by the Lord Himself: "Let your loins be girded about." The figure is that of an Oriental girdle gathering up the loose flowing garments so as to prevent them embarrassing the movements and trailing in the mire. These Eastern robes if allowed to hang loose about the body would be blown by every stray wind, not only entangling the feet, but gathering up the noisome dirt of the road. And, therefore, they were gathered together by a girdle and bound into compactness, so that the traveler could go along the way unhindered by his attire.

Our Lord suggests that there are some things in life which may become loose, and their looseness becomes our peril. There is looseness of thought. We are tempted to think anyhow and not to think firmly to fruitful decisions. The danger in many Christian lives is just this, of loose, trailing, unfinished thought. We have loose thoughts about sin; we have loose thoughts about holiness; we have loose thoughts about the realities of grace; we have loose thoughts about the call of the Eternal. These thinkings about these supreme things hang loose in the life and they fetter our action. And so the Lord counsels us "to gird up the loins of the mind." He urges us to pull our thinking together and give it definiteness, compactness, decision. It is a momentous experience in a man's life when all his loose thinking concerning sin is ended, and his thought becomes firm and sure.

It is equally momentous when a man binds together his loose views about God, and makes all his thought converge into one definite conception of His holiness and grace. It is not an easy thing to gather up our straggling thoughts. It is easier to be sluggish and indolent, but in the long run mental sluggishness has to pay a heavy price for its indulgence. When we begin to seek mental decisions our powers also begin to put on strength. In these realms to try to do a thing is to begin to do it.

But there is not only loose thinking; there is loose living. We sometimes speak of men as having "loose principles." The consequence is their life is vagrant and erratic, drifting hither and thither and not controlled by any strong, steady purpose. There are many Christian people who seem to live "from hand to mouth." They just move as their whims dictate and they are not under the dominion of any great and dominant goal. We have their contrast in the superb example of the Apostle Paul. There was nothing loose and trailing about his service. All the loose ends were gathered up into a supreme, consecrated ambition: "One thing I do." He put a strong girdle around his distracting desires and bound them into one constant aspiration after the will and mind of Christ.

These two examples of looseness, looseness of thought and living, may suffice to interpret the counsel of our Lord. It might have been profitable to have pursued the matter further and to have spoken of looseness of speech and that laxity in conversation which brings stain and shame to countless lives. Let it suffice to say that wherever there is anything loose in the life, any trailing garment of thought, word or deed, our Master's counsel comes to us with solemn urgency, "Let your loins be girded about." That is one of the first steps in the preparation for His appearing.

The Master then changes the figure and adds this further counsel, "And your lamps burning." And what are these lamps which are to be shining with clear light when the Lord appears? What kind of lamps should we choose to be burning if the Lord were to come along our road? There is the lamp of conscience. Sometimes it smoulders and flickers and dies down in a very dull and useless flame. There is the lamp of affection. How frequently it is permitted to smoulder for lack of oil! It is intended to burn as bright as the fire that mingles with the sea of glass, yet sometimes it is suffered to be almost choked, and to yield nothing but smoke and darkness. And there is the lamp of hope. Beautiful is the life when that lamp is burning brightly. Again and again the Sacred Word counsels us to attend to its flame and see that it never burns low, because when the light of hope burns low, other things are in peril with it. There are many graces that depend upon the presence of a cherry hope, and when this is withdrawn they wither away.

These then are typical of the lamps that ought to be burning when our Lord appears. If they are shining on the road along which He comes they will enable us to discern Him, even though He comes in unexpected dress. Such is our second step in our preparation for the Lord.

And the third part of the Master's counsel is this: "And be ye yourselves like unto men looking for their Lord." That is to say, He urges us to exercise our eyes in looking for His appearing. We are to watch for signs of His presence. We may sometimes have gone to a crowded railway station to meet someone whom we have never seen in the flesh but of whom we have had some suggestive description. We go into the crowd and we peer into every face, if perchance we may see the lineaments of the one we seek. We are to do the same with our Lord. We are to look at ordinary things in the hope that we may discern the extraordinary Presence. We are to look at the carpenter if perchance we may see the Messiah. We are to peer into ordinary duty as though in the duty we may find the face of the King. We are to search the newspapers for the sign of the Lord's coming. Always and everywhere we are to be on the alert, "like unto men looking for their Lord."

If our loins are thus girded, and our lamps are lit, and our eyes are open and vigilant, we shall know the King when He appeareth and we shall be ready to "open unto him immediately." When we know that the Lord is at the gate, in whatever guise of circumstance He may appear, we shall open promptly and offer Him our homage and our love. And He will come in to us and He will sup with us and we shall sup with Him. We do not know what kind of bread He will bring with Him, but we know that it will be the Bread of Life. Sometimes the Bread of Life has a very bitter taste, but if the King gives it with His own hands we shall feel secure. "I will feed thee with the bread of affliction." It may be that the gracious Lord will give this bitter bread in order that He may enrich the sweetness of our living joys. Or it may be that there will be no bitterness at all and He will just feed us with "the finest of the wheat." No matter, if we are the guests of the Lord the bread will be the Bread of Life and we shall be fed.

"Blessed are those servants," yes, thrice blessed will they be! They will have their loins girded and their lamps lit and their eyes alert, and they will know the King, and they will be the King's guests, and they will feast upon "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." "Blessed are those servants whom their Lord when he cometh shall find watching."—Record of Christian Work.

ORIGIN OF "BUNCOMBE."

In historic Buncombe County, North Carolina, was originated the phrase "talking buncombe," for in this mountainous country years ago, Colonel Edward Buncombe founded his famous hall, and placed the words "To Buncombe Hall, Welcome All" over his doorway. The expression, "I am talking for Buncombe," meaning Buncombe County, became current hereabouts by home folks, but unregenerate strangers have used it to signify political blarney or exaggerated praise.—"In the Land of the Sky," Joe. DEPENDABLE PEOPLE.

God wants dependable men and women, persons whom He can trust. In the course of Bible history we learn how He found them in the crisis of history. When He wanted a man to befriend His people in Egypt, He found Joseph. When He wanted a man to lead them out of bondage, He found Moses. When He needed a captain to lead His armies into possession of Canaan, He found Joshua. When He wanted a man to lay the foundation of a kingdom in Israel, He found David. When He desired a prophet to warn Judah of her sins, He found Jeremiah. When He wanted a man to represent Him at the Babylonian court, He found Daniel. When He needed a man to blaze the way for the coming of the Messiah, He found John the Baptist. When He needed an apostle to plant the gospel throughout the Roman empire, He found Paul. When He wanted a man by whom to paint the trials and the victories of the Church, He found John, the beloved disciple.

And so today God's work in the world can go forth triumphantly only as He finds dependable men and women to carry it forward—men like Augustine and Columba and Luther and Calvin and Wesley and Moody and Phillips Brooks and Spurgeon, and women like Frances E. Willard and Florence Nightingale. It was a favorite saying of Moody that "God has yet to show what He can do with a man who is wholly yielded to His will." He can work wonderfully through surrendered wills.

It is the joy of the pastor's heart when he finds in the work of the church men and women upon whom he can depend, whom he knows he can trust to do the best thing that can be done in any circumstance. With a company of such men and women he may dare the impossible and wring victory out of that which presaged only defeat.—Christian Observer.

WITHOUT REMEDY.

He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy. Prov. 29:1. (Golden text for Sunday, June 18).

God is not stern, nor stubborn, nor cruel. Some of His judgments may seem so, but they are not. God is love. He cannot do any stubborn or cruel thing. And the only reason some of God's decrees sometimes seem cruel is because they are not understood, not discerned or discovered far enough. God was certainly good and generous and gracious and kind to Israel. Israel's ruin was Israel's anarchy and suicide. Of its last six kings, four were murdered. Israel though warned and plead with and prophecied to went on and on and on in sin. Israel's wickedness, not Israel's God, destroyed it. As long as there was a gleam of hope for Israel's recall Jehovah was seeking to reclaim this stubborn and wayward people. Inspired prophets rebuked, warned, offered forgiveness, foretold doom, and with vigor and vehemence, begged the people to return to God. But all in vain. Israel went ever onward in the road to doom and destruction.

It is a dangerous day for any nation when the words of God's ministers are treated lightly.

It is a dangerous day in any life when the gospel message is scorned or ignored.

It is a perilous time with any soul when God's word is heard with levity and treated with indifference.

God's spirit will not always strive. One may hear warning one, two, three, a score, a hundred times even, but one will not hear it heedlessly forever, and escape with impunity.

There comes a time when there is no remedy. There are depths which even God's love cannot penetrate and redeem. There are conditions of heart and soul and life which God's mercy cannot alleviate nor obviate.

The Sunday school lesson today is one of darkness, of depths, and of doom. It is a lesson in sorrow and sadness. But Israel, her wicked kings and godless people, were responsible only for the pitiable plight that the lesson pictures. Israel only is to blame for Israel's desperate and deadly doom. God did His best for Israel's safety; but Israel defied God and went out to ruin and destruction.

ELON'S NEW PRESIDENT.

It was with deep regret, we were assured, that the Board of Trustees accepted the resignation of E. L. Moffitt, LL. D., as President of Elon College. For six eventful years Dr. Moffitt had guided the affairs of the institution with a safe and a steady hand. Under his administration the College has increased its plant by two new buildings and modern equipment, and has increased its usefulness and influence by a larger patronage and a growing constituency. He retires from the honored position, which he has filled so well, with the esteem and confidence of the people he has ever sought to serve.

But the physical strain on his already impaired health, and the financial sacrifice were more than President Moffitt felt he could hazard longer, and his wish was respected.

In choosing Dr. Moffitt's successor the Board wished to take no risks and so chose a man whose fitness for the work had already been tested, and whose qualifications had already been proven. As Dean of the Faculty, since Dr. Moffitt's critical illness more than a year ago, Prof. W. A. Harper of the Chair of Latin, had shown his great ability as financier, executive officer, and as manager of the intricacies of a college president's office. He had been Dr. Moffitt's right arm especially during the past year, and had wrought so efficiently and well that, as Dr. Moffitt declared on commencement day publicly, he was leaving the reigns of government in safe, loyal, tried and true hands, and with the one who was peculiarly fitted for the task. Prof. Harper is a scholar, and it is doubted if any college in the State had a stronger Latin department than that built up at Elon by him. If genius consists in the infinite capacity for detail and hard work than he easily ranks as a genius. For devoutness of purpose, sincerity of aim, and consecration of heart and soul to his work and to Christian service, President Harper has few equals. He is not only interested in Elon College, but in every enterprise that makes for progress and development in the church.

The position to which he has been called went to him unsought, and we understand that the Board, including former President Moffitt, were unanimous in their opinion and decision that Prof. Harper was the man best suited to the place and eminently qualified to carry on the great work which Elon has been doing now these twenty-one years. Our conviction is that the Board has chosen wisely and well, and that time, if permitted to him, will prove his eminent fitness for the high position to which he has been chosen. Our wish is that Elon may go forward, and here is a heart and a hand to that end.

SOME NEW DOCTRINE.

We haven't the first idea that there is a Christian Sun reader to whom the thought had ever occurred that the disciples were sinners till the day of Pentecost.

That they were sinners while and when following and obeying the Christ is a doctrine as unique as it is novel and one that this editor had never heard advanced till our good Brother Baugher tells of it in this week's Sun.

Another wholly new one on us is "a sinning religion," and "sinning religionists." These must be queer specimens. Whatever else they are they strike us as contradiction in terms; and we had never before heard the terms till Bro. Baughers uses them. However, our good brother seems to have run across some of that kind in his travels and certainly proceeds to demolish them in his very readable and vigorous article published elsewhere. Evidently Bro. Baugher has found some people with curious notions; but what he does for them is enough. His article is so full of wit and good humor we are sure it will be read with great pleasure and profit.

PALM ST. CHURCH, GREENSBORO.

It was the editor's high privilege to take a part, last Sunday at 11 o'clock, in the dedicatory service of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, N. C. It was an agreeable occasion. A full house, and more, greeted us, the congregation was good humored, patient and liberal, and the singing was inspiring and beautiful.

The church house is well constructed, substantially built of brick veneer, has heavy circular oak pews with a seating capacity of about three hundred, is modern in architecture and design and the $3,500 spent upon it has been economically and judiciously handled and invested. There is a live Sunday-school with some 125 present last Sunday, and there are 72 members of the church. Prof. W. C. Wicker is the hustling, and wide awake pastor and is doing a good work. All the money save $145.00 had been raised before the day of the dedication, and at the hour this amount and twenty dollars more were contributed. It is an intelligent and active congregation and the work here is one of great promise. Rev. H. W. Wolf was with us, and took part in the services and is this week assisting Pastor Wicker in a series of meetings.

—Mr. S. M. Atkinson who has had experience in previous years is again traveling in the interest of The Christian Sun. We sincerely trust that those who are interested in their church paper will respond to his calls and help him on his way. The Sun's expense account is as great in summer as in winter, and there are very many subscribers who have not renewed yet for the year. If Mr. Atkinson calls for your renewal encourage him and help him by paying up if within your reach. Thanks, dear friends.

ELON COMMENCEMENT.

There are not any old commencements. They are all new, and different. You cannot even compare one commencement with another. Each one stands apart, and is supremely interested in itself. The glory of all is the supreme importance of each. Every commencement is an epoch, both in the history of an institution and in the life of many individuals. I have attended about twenty annual closings at Elon, and every one was better than the other, it makes no difference where you count from. They are all the best. Graduates have been preparing, and now it is supposed they commence actual, practical life. Paraphrasing an ancient Roman greeting, the graduating class are supposed to say, "We who are about to live salute you." The business of every college is to prepare youths to say that, and then make good what they have said.

The exercises began Saturday night and closed Wednesday night, June 3-7. The Saturday night program consisted of class exercises, participated in by members of the graduating class, and were much enjoyed.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., of Burlington, N. C., preached the baccalaureate sermon Sunday at 11 A. M. We would be glad to give this excellent sermon in full, but Dr. Fleming declines us that privilege, and the barest outline must suffice here.

Dr. Fleming chose for his text Phil. 3:14: "I press on toward the goal unto the high calling of God," and as his theme, "The Inspiration of a Great Purpose." Dr. Fleming enlarged his text with masterful precision and developed his theme under three heads: first, the vision from above; second, the Divine ideal; third, the call from the life beyond. Dr. Fleming said in part that no education is complete that does not reckon with the vision from above. That no man is a great scholar nor great in any profession who has not sat at the feet of the Master Teacher, and no man is a true Christian who does not obey the voice of God.

A man's visions and ideas go into that which he is and does. He cannot be and do that of which he has no vision and no ideal. In almost any position and calling of life, that is lawful and right, you find men who have had visions, who become either heroes or martyrs according to the full understanding or misunderstanding of their visions. You find men of this kind in the office, on the farm, in the pulpit, in the school room, and everywhere in the busy world.

To every life there comes a vision from above and the high success is not gotten single handed in the physical, mental or spiritual world but only so far as the mind and spirit are brought into accord and harmony with the divine mind.

Concluding, Dr. Fleming spoke directly to the graduating class and said: "I wish not for you who go out from these classic walls today success and happiness as estimated and measured by the world, but I wish for you service and sacrifice. I would have you wear the brightest crown and receive the Christian's reward, and I would remind you that the brightest crowns and permanent rewards are not found in ideals of selfishness, but in the genuine fields of service and self-sacrifice.

The sermon was much enjoyed, and made lasting impressions for good upon members of the class and the large audience that heard it.

Monday evening at 8 o'clock two representatives from each of the three literary societies delivered orations or read essays as follows:

The first speaker was Mr. W. H. Fleming, representing the Philologist Society, his subject being "The Unsolved Problem."

He was followed by Miss Mabel Hale Farmer, representing the Psiphelian Society, entitled, "The Fountain of Youth."

Mr. J. A. Dickey, Jr., representing the Olio Society, spoke from the theme, "The Universal Brotherhood." Mr. C. J. Felton, representing the Olio Society, discussed "Personal Elongation." Miss Margaret Iseley, representing the Psiphelian Society, rendered an essay from the subject, "The Noblest of Professions."

The program of the evening was concluded by Mr. W. L. Anderson, representing the Philologist Society, in an oration entitled, "Greater and Better Things."

The college cornet band furnished music which was greatly enjoyed.

Tuesday at 11:30 A. M. Chief Justice Walter Clark of the Supreme Court of North Carolina delivered the annual literary address. Judge Clark is not an orator, but he is a clear thinker, has a copious and comprehensive grasp of events, and discusses what he attempts in a most illuminating manner. He does not leave you in doubt as to his views on the latest and most important issues. The Gospel of Progress was his theme, and he led his audience to believe that we are moving towards woman suffrage, the initiative, referendum and recall, and that government will come to have its authority from the governed. His address was of the progressive, not to say, radical, sort. It was of a political nature and was keenly listened to by a large and intelligent audience.

Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, possibly the greatest audience of the commencement greeted the members of the music department, who rendered a most interesting musical program. These exercises were of the usual high order and well proved the excellency of the work done in this department of Elon's work. The music department is one of the very strongest and most thorough of the college and adds to its worth and influence year by year.

The climax of all the days came on Wednesday, when an immense throng gathered from many quarters to hear and to witness the graduating exercises. In the class were eighteen graduates, as follows:

Four with the degree of Bachelor of Arts: Russel Arndt Campbell, John Jackson Ingle, Jennings Sipe Lincoln, Marvin Walter McPherson.

WERE THE DISCIPLES SINNERS BEFORE PENTECOST?

A few weeks ago I heard one of our prominent preachers say in a sermon that the disciples were sinners before the day of Pentecost. Then, too, I find all who believe in a sinning religion, and deny the second definite work of grace in the heart are endeavoring to try to mislead the people by teaching that the disciples were sinners before the day of Pentecost. To disprove this false teaching, I have been led to give some plain facts as to what the Bible says which no man dare to deny. The question for me to prove is, Were the disciples Christians before the day of Pentecost? All who oppose this great Bible truth that the baptism with the Holy Ghost, which sanctifies the heart from inbred sin, is a definite, second work of grace wrought in the heart of the believer, are forced to say and do say that the disciples were unsaved sinners until the day of Pentecost. Now if I can show that this is not true, but that the disciples were converted men before Pentecost, and were so recognized by the Savior, then I have established the great truth that the baptism with the Holy Ghost was and is a second work of grace, which comes after conversion when the heart is cleansed from all sin. The disciples were called by Christ and recognized and loved him as the Christ. They followed Christ in the great work of soul-saving. They healed the sick and cast out devils. Has God ever given this power to sinners? In other words, does God call sinners to do His work in the Church which he Himself came to establish in the world? They preached salvation to sinners and urged them to flee from the wrath to come, and when those who heard them repented and received remission of sins, the disciples baptized them. What a scene! A lot of sinners spending their lives under persecution in trying to get other sinners to repent and then baptizing them and refusing to repent themselves. Beloved, how can those who believe in a sinning religion get out of this dilemma, sinners calling other sinners to repent, and sinners baptizing sinners; how do you explain it or find a way out of it, for nowhere in God's holy Word is there any Scripture that will prove you doctrine? But it is asked, how about Judas? The Word says that Judas, by transgression, fell, just as thousands of other converted men have done. Look around you today and you will see a lot of men who were once converted, but who have fallen, like Judas. Jesus told his disciples to go and preach the gospel. Does God send those who sin and refuse to serve him to preach the gospel? Does God send those who sin and refuse to serve him to preach salvation to others? He said to them, "Freely ye have received, freely give." What were they to give? They could not give money, for he told them to take no money with them. They could give no clothing; he told them to take one coat. What had they received freely that they could give freely? Let those who say disciples had never been converted answer. They had received fully and freely the gospel and the forgiveness of their sins, and Jesus sent them to preach to others. This is all they had to give. Jesus sent them forth and pronounced a curse upon any city that would not receive them. Think of Jesus cursing one lot of sinners because they would not receive another lot of sinners. Can you understand why a loving Saviour would send a lot of sinners into a town to call all the sinners in that town to Christ? Jesus said to his disciples, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, (the Holy Ghost), that he may abide with you forever. Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world (sinners) cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye (the disciples), know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." John 14:16, 17. Here Jesus tells his disciples that he will give them the Holy Spirit, but that the world (sinners) cannot receive the Holy Spirit. He also tells them that the world did not know the Holy Spirit but that his disciples did know Him. Jesus told his disciples in John 15:19, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore, the world hateth you." In John 17 Jesus said of his disciples that his Father had given them to him and that they had kept his word. Do sinners keep the word of God? If the doctrine be true of those who teach a sinning religion, and who claim that Jesus Christ cannot save a man and keep him saved, so long as he keeps filled with the Holy Ghost, and under the blood, they are making God's word a liar, for Jesus called his disciples, and ordained them to preach before the day of Pentecost. And I challenge any man to prove that they were not converted men, healing the sick, and performing miracles; and they were living up to all the light they had prior to Pentecost. Like many people in the churches today, they are good people, and we know they are converted and living up to all the light they have, but have not received the baptism of the Holy Ghost, sanctifying and cleansing them from all inbred sin; and placing them where they can grow in grace. Jesus said, "I pray for them" (his disciples) "and not for the world" (sinners). "I am glorified in them." Is Christ glorified in sinners? Jesus said he had kept his disciples and none of them were lost" (backslidden) but Judas. There are many today who, like Judas, backslide before they seek the cleansing from all sin. They say we can grow into it, but religion does not begin on the outside. It is God working in you. Therefore to my mind one of the plainest truths taught in the Bible is the second work of grace which comes to the children of God after conversion, which we will prove as we go on. Jesus said, "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them." Does God give glory to sinners? Jesus said of his disciples, The world (sinners) hateth them because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Here Christ declares that his disciples could no more be classed as sinners than could he, and that is what every one is doing today who says that they were sinners till Pentecost. Those who teach a sinning religion, and deny the second definite work of grace, which comes after conversion, have no foundation whatever for their proof that the disciples were sinners before Pentecost. They say that those who claim heart purity, entire Sanctification, claim that there is nothing more for them to do, and rest on their oars; with the thought that there is nothing more for a Christian to do. Which I deny, and challenge the statement; for I have never heard a man say after he received the baptism of the Holy Ghost that he had nothing more to do, but sit down and sit there at ease, so perfect that there was nothing more to do. When we receive the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, and have all inbred sin removed, the child of God is then just prepared to grow in grace, and to make rapid progress in the Christian life. Turn to St. Luke 10:3. Jesus said of the seventy whom he sent out to preach: "I send you forth as lambs among wolves" (saints among sinners). "Heal the sick and say to the people, the kingdom of God" (not a lot sinners), "is come nigh unto you." Do you think these men were sinners? Jesus said, "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that despiseth you despiseth men." Was he talking to a lot of sinners as all sinning religionists teach? Hear Christ again, "For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me and have believed that I came out from God." Do sinners love Christ? "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me." The disciples were clean and were abiding in Christ. Could they have been sinners? Well they must have been nothing less than sinners if the teaching of sinning religionists be true. But I thank God their doctrine is not true. For the disciples were converted men before Pentecost, but were not baptized with the Holy Ghost, which sanctifies the heart from inbred sin, as a definite work of grace until the day of Pentecost. What a change in the disciples after Pentecost. They had received the blessing which the Church folks are just hungry for today. Every where you go the cry is, "Oh, if our preacher would only preach the Holy Ghost power, and show folks the way to heart cleansing." Jesus told the seventy whom he had sent out, "Notwithstanding in this, rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Here are a lot of sinners whose names are written in heaven! What are you going to do about it, if the disciples were nothing but sinners and false teachers before Pentecost? The Scriptures declare that the world (sinners) cannot receive the Holy Ghost. The disciples did receive Him on the day of Pentecost and therefore they could not have been sinners. It is true that there were ambitious among some of the disciples as to who should be greatest, and Peter, under fear that he also be put to death, denied his Lord. But how quickly and bitterly he repented. How few of the children of God today live such consecrated, devout, self-denying, godly lives as the beloved disciples lived. And yet we are made sad when we hear men get in the pulpit and claim these true men of God were sinners, and leave a false impression on the unsaved world. How do we expect to lead men to Christ, when we claim that even Christ called and ordained sinners, and sent them out to convert sinners? God does not run that kind of a risk sending out sinners to preach to sinners. Christ did not tell his disciples to tarry in Jerusalem till they should be converted, but until they should be baptized with the Holy Ghost and be endued with power, and this is God's eternal plan for every one of his children. His command, not to the world, but to his children, is, Be ye filled with the Holy Ghost. God help every one of his poor, struggling children to obey him, in order that believers may go down before God in consecration and faith until the old man dies and they put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

WILLINGNESS TO WORK.

Attorney General Bickett recently made a speech in which he said that before any girl is allowed to marry she should have a certificate from some competent authority setting forth that she had learned how to cook. A lady of Monroe on reading this, remarked that it was not nearly so important that a girl have a certificate in cookery, as it was that she have one setting forth that she was willing to work after she knows how, that the trouble is not so much that girls don't know how as it is that they are unwilling to learn how and then do it. Any girl coming through the schools with ordinary intelligence can quickly learn to cook or do anything else if she only has the desire and ambition to do it.

There is a great hue and cry now that our schools should teach this practical thing and that practical thing. There is no particular objection to this, but it will not take the place of the thing that must go before it, namely, the obligation that rests upon every human being to do some kind of useful labor in society. Whether that labor is cooking, keeping books, teaching school, keeping poultry or rocking a cradle, she must learn that there is a dignity and duty in doing some kind of work either for herself or for others, and doing it well—the best it can be done. The drone should have no more respect in human society than he has in a bee colony. No matter if one fancies that he or she is able to live without working, it must never be forgotten that the one who does it is living on the labor of some one else. Labor is the sole creator of value, and if you are not doing some useful work you are living on the work done by somebody else. So many persons are doing no work or useless work that the remainder of mankind is doing double or treble its share. If you are not working, you are riding on the back of somebody else, and surely that is an unworthy thing for anybody made in the image of a superior being to do.

Not only must the schools quit advocating short cuts to ease, and teach the value, dignity and necessity of labor—not necessarily with the hands, but something of use to mankind—but they must cease to hold out the idea that a little book knowledge is all that is required. They must go back to the fundamental idea that character is the first requisite. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth." Did you ever think what that injunction really means? It means character formation. Our God is truth and justice and honor and righteousness, and a love of those attributes is what makes character, hence the youth is admonished to remember them early, that his whole life may be a success and a blessing.

Human character is the most important of all things, and the care of the body, the temple in which the spirit dwells, is the next important thing. Yet many of our schools are forgetting these things in the mad rush to teach less essential things, to teach how to make money quickly, to teach how to shine in society, to teach how to farm and manufacture and hundreds of other things. Now these things are all right in themselves, but the point we are making is that if the school course is not broad enough to admit both sets of ideas, the latter and not the former should be curtailed.—Monroe Journal.

A DOZEN DONT'S.

Don't default in payment of your due bills to the Almighty.

Don't call it a right for yourself if it would be a usurpation in another.

Don't count your misfortunes until you have enumerated your blessings.

Don't cut the value of your life in two by employing usefully only one-half of your time.

Don't pray for a bejeweled crown in heaven unless you are willing to lead souls to Christ on earth, for which the brilliants stand.

Don't put dishonest profits in the grip you pack for heaven.

Don't borrow your neighbor's knife to pare an apple, and then eat all of it yourself.

Don't consider it your inalienable right to "butt in" under any and all circumstances.

Don't imagine that all others would rather hear you talk than do a part of it themselves.

Don't arouse suspicion by continued protestations of your uprightness.

Don't mortgage your heavenly mansion to buy a little patch in hell.

Don't forget that the day-star from on high is doing a twenty-four-hour business for the man who is traveling in that direction.—Religious Telescope.

PRAYER FOR THE KINGDOM.

If you do not wish for His kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it—you must work for it. And to work for it you must know what it is. We have all prayed for it many a day without thinking. Observe, it is a kingdom that is to come to us; we are not to go to it. Also, it is not to come outside of us; but in the hearts of us. "The kingdom of God is within you." And, being within us, it is not a thing to be seen, but to be felt, and though it brings all substance of good with it, it does not consist in that: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy," that is to say, in the holy, healthful, and helpful Spirit.

E. L. MOFFITT, LL. D., Retiring President of Elon College.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS.

President Moffitt's subject was: "Keep Faith with Your College Ideals," and he spoke as follows:

Young men and young women of the graduating class, personally I am happy to greet you today at your best. Officially, I am equally glad to know that you go forth from this institution "thoroughly furnished unto good works." Your Alma Mater has done for you the best of which she is capable. With raw materials with which your parents furnished us we feel that we have wrought well—and today your Alma Mater gives you back to the homes and communities whence you came with a feeling of pardonable pride, because not only of what you are, but of what we believe, yes, we know, that you are capable of becoming.

I do not say this to make you to think more highly of yourselves than you ought to think, but rather to remind you of the fact that you are no longer school boys and girls, but that you are now young men and young women, who have stood the test of a college career—a test that only the few can or do stand—and you have proven yourselves worthy. While scores have come and gone, even since you entered here, this small company of you have remained true to the ideals with which you started out, and, as a result, you have drawn all this goodly company of friends here today to witness your triumph, and to bid you God-speed as you go to take your place with them in the great school of practical experience.

And as you go to join them, your Alma Mater bids me bring you this message: "Son, Daughter, into whatever vocations or professions, inclination or duty may lead you, see to it that you 'keep faith with your college ideals.'" Do this, and we shall have no anxiety as to the future that awaits you; for my experience with college men and women during all these years has been that practically all of them who reach their day of graduation start out in life with high and noble purposes. I dare say there's not one of you here today who is not even now seeing visions of great things you hope to achieve in the not unreachable future. And in this, my young friends, you do well. Don't be afraid of visions. Dream dreams, if you want to. Build your air-castles. Indeed, as I have said in substance before, there would have been few real "castles" in America now, but for those shadowy ones our forefathers built in "Spain." Don't be content with the narrow horizon that limits your vision today. Hoist your sail and go forth upon the great unknown, just so you keep your hand on the wheel and your eyes on the "Star," you may not reach the East Indies by sailing West, but you may stumble on greater discoveries than even you yourself had dared dream of. Let them call you visionary: so they said of Fulton when, in his visions by day and his dreams by night, he saw his steamboat plowing through the waters of the Hudson, long before the self-styled practical men of his day ever realized that the lunatic asylum had all the inmates to which it was entitled. So they said of Morse long before he flashed the message along the wires from Washington to Baltimore, "What hath God wrought?" and his deriders stood dumb-founded and amazed in answer. And so they said of John the Baptist as he went "preaching in the wilderness of Judea, saying, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And so, too, they said even of the Christ Himself as He went about through Judea and Galilee teaching men the way, the truth, and the life, and entreating them not to be disobedient unto the heavenly vision.

Aspire to great things, expect great things, that's the only possible hope of doing great things. Yes, even "hitch your wagon to a star," if you want to, and who knows but that you may be able to move heaven as well as earth in the effort.

Do not misunderstand me. I do not mean for you to expect or aspire to foolish and impossible or even unreasonable things. If you have not already done so, study yourself, and learn your task, and, if after the inventory, you find you have only two talents, don't expect to perform the task of the fellow by your side, who has been endowed with ten; but on the other hand, don't be content until you have gained two more. The good Lord made you and endowed you with the possibilities of success in some sphere of life. If you study yourself carefully and honestly enough to find out what that sphere is, and then get into it and pursue its highest ideal with all the earnestness and faithfulness of which you are capable, you'll win that success. If the Lord intended for you to make a successful farmer, don't imagine that your college diploma can make you a great preacher. Or if he has called you into the gospel ministry, beware of the pill bottle or the councils of State. As some one has said: "The school is to help the boy unpack what intellectual tools he has; education does not change, but puts temper into these tools."

In conclusion, then, young men, young women, let me repeat: I know that as you stand here today in the presence of your parents and friends, under the shadow of your Alma Mater, on the threshold of a new life, great expectations fill your minds, noble aspirations stir in your hearts, high ideals loom up before you. Let me urge you to hold to those impulses, respond to these heart strings, keep faith with these ideals; for, as the wise men found the mager only by following the star, so you can hope to reach the goal of your ambition only by following closely and faithfully the high ideals with which they go forth today.

Keep faith with these ideals, for they are high and noble. Live up to them as nearly as possible, and you need not proclaim them to the world—they will express themselves in your useful life. "The musician does not argue for his art," says Mr. Peabody, "he utters it, and those who have ears may hear. The bird does not prove the possibility of a flying machine; he spreads his wings and flies, and his self-expression is the demonstration of his power." So it ever is with the man of high ideals; he has no need to tell the world that they are high. He simply lives them, and men know he has them because in pursuing them, they see him rise from height to height as the days and years of his life are told.

TO THE BROTHERHOOD.

"A public office is a public trust," said a distinguished statesman. That is the manner in which the work of the Church as well as that of the State should be viewed. Having been called to the presidency of Elon College, against my wish, I shall strive to keep constantly before me the high sentiment expressed above. The presidency of Elon College, founded in love, nourished in sacrifice and devotion, is a public trust and I shall hope so to administer it.

In entering upon this great work, I feel my own weakness and unfitness for the duties and obligations it involves. I cannot carry this college to success; no man can. It will require a united Board of Trustees, Faculty, student body, Alumni, old student community, ministry, and laity of the entire Church to make this institution what it can be and in the providence of God will become.

I know that I shall make mistakes; I beseech you to be generous towards them and inclined to overlook them and also to feel free at any time to make suggestions for the good of the institution. Such suggestions will be regarded as favors and taken as evidence of genuine and hearty interest on your part, and not as criticism. It is yours to make the institution go forward or backward. I am your servant, willing, anxious to do whatever lies in my power for the unbuilding of our beloved Elon and of every other interest of the Church.

With justified pride over Elon's past achievements, with pardonable satisfaction in regard to her present condition which has been brought about by my eminent predecessor, with bright-eyed hopefulness of her larger future, let us join hands and hearts and prayers in our united efforts to carry forward our common educational institution.

W. A. Harper,

appropriate and well-chosen terms, making this a very impressive service; and Mr. D. Roy Fonville of Charlotte, in an eloquent and forceful manner, presented the medals to those who had won them. Messrs. White and Fonville are both Elon College graduates who are making good in their respective fields, and are men of whom any college may well be proud.

President Moffitt announced that the Board of Trustees had conferred the degree of LL. D. on Revs. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va., and Frank S. Child, D. D., of Fairfield, Conn.

Secretary of the Board of Trustees, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., read the announcements, among them being the fact that Dr. Moffitt declined re-election and Prof. W. A. Harper had been chosen his successor as President of the College.

Wednesday afternoon many old students attended their Society Reunions in their respective literary halls, and many visited the Art Exhibit which was very creditable indeed and much enjoyed.

At 8 P. M., Prof. W. A. Harper, who had been elected to that duty twelve months ago by the Alumni Association, delivered the alumni address, taking for his subject the "By-Products of Life." A large audience heard President Harper with pleasure and profit, and his address takes rank with the very best ever delivered here on similar occasions. The large audience was inspired and edified by the great address, and will not soon forget the words of wisdom so eloquently spoken. The alumni address was followed by the alumni banquet. This closed what has been the most successful year in the history of Elon College in many ways, and the future looms large and hopeful. Year by year Elon's prestige and influence widens and each those who have sacrificed and labored to make the institution possible.

THE DEPARTMENT'S EDITOR
 RESIGNS.

(The following letter is self-explanatory, bearing date of June 7, 1911.)

Rev. L. E. Smith, President,
 Rev. A. W. Andes, Secretary,
 Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer,
 Rev. C. H. Rowland,
 Rev. H. E. Rountree,

Executive Board of the Young People's General Convention,

My dear Brethren:

Having been elected to the presidency of Elon College, a position demanding all my time, it becomes necessary for me to resign from the editorial and corresponding secretaryship of the Young People's General Convention, of which you are the official head, the resignation be effective according to the terms of our agreement at the expiration of thirty days from date at the latest, but with the hope on my part that you may be able to provide for my successor before the expiration of that length of time.

In presenting you my resignation, I wish to assure you of my faith in the future and knowledge of the necessity of the Young People's Movement in our Church. The Church that is able to reach the young people will reach the great majority of the world. 'Tis my earnest desire that you may find a successor who will, under God and with the unanimous support of the entire Church, carry this great work forward to the success it deserves and will surely have.

Allow me to thank you each personally and the church at large for the spirit of helpfulness and co-operation which you have displayed towards me in the work which I have tried to do for more than two years now. I have made mistakes, but you have borne with them. If there have been any successes, you share in them and to you the far larger part is due. To my successor, to yourselves, to the Young People's Movement I shall be glad to be considered a willing and ready helper. Anything that I can do for the work I love so well and of which I am so hopeful, believe me, will be regarded as a pleasure to perform.

With regrets that I must give up this work and with sincere appreciation of your counsel and helpfulness and cooperation, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

W. A. Harper.

A GLIMPSE OF THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

(Address delivered at Waverly, Spring Hill, and Centerville, E. Va. Conference).

Text: Where there is no vision the people perish. Prov. 29:18.

The occasion of this address has its inspiration directly in the fact of the State Convention at Richmond. I have been attending these Conventions for six years. I have attended one International Convention, and one World's Convention. Out of the wide opportunity, the growing need and the efficient service the International Sunday School Association gives the world, I have a growing and enlarging vision, so that I feel that I can lay aside the usual sermon to speak on this topic hoping that you may be wiser and profit thereby.

There are a great many people yet in our Sunday schools who do not understand what the International Sunday School Association is. As a Sunday School is an organization of classes and departments for the purpose of unifying effort and the building of character for God so the International Association is the great organization of all the Sunday schools of America to help them in the best way to their end. As a telephone "Central" sends out from one keyboard a great system of wires and reaches into every home of the city, so the great association of Sunday Schools is a great central power which holds every Sunday school in the country under its touch. However, just as there are homes and places of business which have not yet installed the phone, so there are a great many Sunday Schools that have not allowed the Association to touch them. Those that have been touched by it have been quickened to a new life and enlarged into service. Those that have refused or by some means have not touched this work are still in the old ruts and have made no more progress than the little toy dog or the little tin soldier. They stand perhaps sturdy and staunch, but they have gone no where. As far as progress is concerned they are dead. The great purpose of the organization is life. It has been said, that automobiles have divided the people of the country in two classes, "The quick and the dead." The great Association of Sunday Schools has done the same thing.

Some Things It Is Doing.

1. It employs ten secretaries for their whole time.

These are experts who repeatedly visit every state and province in North America, attend Conventions, Institutes, travel a quarter of a million of miles annually and make more than five thousand addresses. Mr. Marion Lawrence, General Secretary, himself a Convention, was with us at Richmond and gave us much inspiration.

2. It selects our Sunday school lessons.

Our present lessons are used by more than 2,000,000 people in all parts of the world. These are furnished free to denominational publishers.

3. It has raised and is still raising the standard of Sunday School Teaching.

It has organized and has under present operation 8,523 Teacher Training classes, with 125,933 students who are pursuing from one to five year's course in how to teach a Sunday School class efficiently. Over 20,000 First Standard diplomas were issued last year. They held over 17,000 conventions last year and prepared special educational literature for the work everywhere.

4. It visits more than 9,000,000 people in their homes each year.

There is a systematic house-to-house visitation department of the great work. More than 9,000,000 visits were made under the auspices of this department last year. People were invited to attend the Sunday Schools and churches and at the same time a complete religious census was secured. This phase alone resulted in the addition of many thousands to the churches and Sunday Schools.

5. Cultivates a Missionary Spirit.

This is done through a missionary department which resulted in the introduction of Missionary classes in the Sunday Missionary offerings, inspired many to the Mission field, issued over a million pieces of literature. It is the inspiration of the whole Sunday school world. It is the head line; not in any sense to divert from the denominations but it is in the field to help them. They have the keys to the situation. It is at the bottom of our present progress, and is able to be a blessing to any school who will open to it.

What Is The State Association?

It is the International Association in the state. There is no way by which the international Association can reach your school except through the state. Virginia is spending annually about $2,500 for the furtherance of the same causes as previously mentioned.

The motto of Virginia is, "Every county an organized county, every county a banner county, and every county organization composed of a live set of workers who mean business for God. It is a "Quick and dead" business. The dead must bury the dead and the living must follow Jesus.

To have a banner county means to have a full set of officers, at least two departments, and one that gives annually to the State work. I am very glad that Sussex County could be reported this year as a banner county. But I think this a very low standard. Thereby every county might be a banner county while some were doing no work and others were alive with work. What does it mean in terms of service? We have seven or eight department superintendents, and if a single one of them has done any work since the organization, I do not know it. I do not say this to disparage what has been done, nor to discourage those who have done some thing, but to incite a comparison with ideals and if possible stimulate you to keener sensibilities of the great needs.

Our Great Needs.

First: We Need a Vision.

"Where there is no vision the people perish."

Columbus had a vision of a great Western continent. The result is we are the great American people—the greatest upon the face of the globe.

Robt. Raikes had a vision, the result is the Bible and child united, which gave birth to the great Sunday school movement of today.

Our great International leaders have a vision and the result is Union of the Sunday school world to the great end of building and training character for God.

Today 10,000 new Sunday schools are being added to the list annually. Mr. Lawrence said, "There are 500,000 men being added to Organized classes. Today there are three times as many men in the Sunday school as there are in all the fraternities and Y. M. C. As. For all this there are 3,000,000 more women in the church and Sunday school than there are men."

The States have caught the vision and as a result they vie with each other in righteous jealousy. Who shall do the most and best for God?

Virginia's workers have the vision. Not all of Virginia has, I regret to say. Many, many counties yet untouched have never dreamed of the present progress of the Sunday school. But they are falling in line. At the present Convention she was able to pay her last debt and raise $1700 for the current year. They will give you this year a general secretary who will devote his whole time to the work. A Mr. Palmer, of Alabama, who is a man of much experience and promises to be at your call. His office will be in Richmond.

Virginia is heaving to the front in Adult organized work. The biggest organized class in the world in the country, is at an M. E. Church at a place called Haywood, in Matthew County of this state. It has 123 members with about 84 percent attendance. There are not but three homes in sight of the church. Mr. W. C. Pearce, the International Supt. of the Adult work, is the author of this statement. The second largest class is at another church near this place in charge of the same pastor.

This work is going on all over the State and thousands of our Virginia men are today attending the Sunday school who never did so before.

Do I believe in fraternities? I do. But I believe in Christ more. Do I believe in Y. M. C. As.? I certainly do. But I believe in Christ more. Do I believe in America? I do. But I believe in the kingdom of God more. Do I believe in education? I do. But I believe in Christ more. That power which lifted up draws all men to it. Christ!

Second: We Need Co-operation.

This is our supreme need also. Our vision as Sunday Schools and as Sunday School workers will not amount to anything till we as such can heartily co-operate with one another. Co-operation does it all. It is one of the fundamental principles of successful enterprise. Did you know it took 23 people to hand you that saucer of oatmeal this morning? It did. Did you know it takes 25 people to make a table cloth? Did you know it takes uniform action to make an army? Why not have a mob? Did you know it takes 18 persons to play a game of baseball? How do they play? Every man in his place and at the right time, and every man doing his part, and every man trained in his part. Do you find baseball men late on their job? Why they are there ahead of time for practice to get themselves in the right swing and accustomed to the distances. Do you find the manager in the box, the pitcher on first base, the first baseman in the right field, and the third baseman on short stop? Every man in his own place. He is there because he is trained for it and he can play a little better in that place than he can anywhere else.

Tell me what would happen if we were to cooperate like that in our Sunday schools? How about it, you teachers, who get in most any time. How about it officers of the School when any time will do at your post of duty? The Sunday School may be going on, but there are several bases vacant, the pitcher is even out of place, but the game is going on. Can we expect to win the game that way? I am not arguing for more base-ball, but I am speaking of the commendable features of the game, and asking that we carry some of our base-ball spirit into our work for God. It is far more important. I would like to see the members of the Sunday school and church dum up crowds like the boys do for their games. Why can't we? I would like to see the officers and teachers of the school on hand a little sooner each Sunday for a little practice and helpfulness to one another. Cooperation! Mr. Marion Lawrence gave in a few words the secret of the strength of the Sunday school:

"Bear your own burdens."

"Cast all your burdens upon Him."

Third: We Need Constancy.

Mr. Marion Lawrence said, "The best teacher is the regular one, and not the brilliant one. It is not brilliancy that counts.

"Lightningbugs are brilliant,

But they haven't any mind;

They go blundering through the world

With their headlights on behind."

There is not a passage in all the scriptures that promises us success. Whether you are able to succeed or not is none of your business and success is God's. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Fidelity to God's success.

"No one else in all the world can do the work for me for which I have come into the world to do. Some body may do a higher and a greater work, but he cannot do my work. My work is a thing I must do with these hands, with these lips which God has given me to do it with. I may do little, or I may do much, that matters not, it must be my own work."—Ruskin.

Finally: Let me say that co-operation, and constancy, and fidelity amount to little unless we have consecration. The coal in the furnace consumes itself, but is so doing it plies our steamers across the seas and drives our locomotives across the continent. A teacher can not be a true teacher unless he or she be hid with God and consume themselves in the one effort to serve God. It is only by self-sacrifice that the great institution, the Sunday School, will move forward and attain what God would have it.

We love many things here. We love our fraternities. We love our public interests. We love our public school, hospitals, orphanages, charities, our glorious America. But let us love Christ and the kingdom of God more.

We sacrifice for our earthly loves. Loving Christ supreme, can't we sacrifice for him supremely? That being done little question will arise about our fidelity.

It is a hard road. There are many duties, discouragements, hardships. "He that endures to the end shall wear a crown of life."

Eg. "What have you done today?" was once asked a rope-maker. "I have done ten hours hard work, just twisting tow, my fingers are sore, my lungs are choked with dust. I did not get to prayer meeting last night, I was too tired. I feel asleep while trying to say my prayers. I sometimes think if it were not for Mary I would end it all. Nothing but work, work, work. I am so tired, and I barely make enough to keep body and soul together."

Listen: See the other side.

A ship with eleven hundred souls aboard is adrift at sea. She is being driven upon a shore. The great wall of crage like giant's teeth, stretching up sheer and sharp await to grind them to pieces. One anchor after another is dropped, each checking the speed of the vessel's drift. The last anchor is down, and every one holds his breath in deathlike suspense to see if it will hold. Joy! it does! The ship is safe and every body aboard.

Think no more of the toil and the dust, the monotony and the small existence. Eleven hundred men and women have been saved by means of his rope.

The ring of every hammer, the click of every needle, the whirl of every loom, the care of every house-keeper, the struggle and heart ache of every Sunday school and Church worker shall some day hear a song of peace and joy. The many, many days of sacrifice and service for God have woven into character those strong cords which some day will save souls from wreck and ruin.

Take courage! The melodies of Beethoven haven't sprung into existence spontaneously. It is said that there is hardly a bar in his music which cannot justly be said was written out of patience and the rewriting many, many times.

Remember that to have seen a fallen brother regain his feet is to see cords of character hold; to have trained a little child, is to direct a future; to have watched a sick soul to the end; and above all to have given your life in the service of God, stood by during the many years and watched and prayed and spoken as souls pass from darkness into light; that is a consumation and an accomplishment over which too many praises can never be sung.

THANK YOU, BROTHER McCULLOCH.

Every member of the Young People's General Convention is under lasting obligation to Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald of North Carolina, for the generous thing he has just done the organization. Dr. McCulloch was asked to reprint the minutes of the Convention recently held at Elon College, in pamphlet form and present the bill to the Treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox. The good Doctor printed the minutes, in exquisite form for a pamphlet, but refuses to present any bill. He says he has been borrowing from time to time items from the Sun occurring in this department and that he hopes his printing the minutes will be taken as an expression of his appreciation for this privilege. Thank you, Brother McCulloch. If you desire to use anything else at any time from our department page, feel free to do so. Thank you very much.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JUNE 25—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

By Rev. R. P. Anderson.

Missions in China.

Scripture: 2 Cor. 11:21-28.

The Leader's Talk:—One of the most interesting figures at the Nanking Christian Endeavor convention in 1909 was Ding Lee May, a native pastor. When twenty-eight years old, he entered the ministry, in the year of the Boxer uprising, but before the storm burst. One day he was seized and tortured with fiendish cruelty. His flesh, says Rev. Chas. Ernest Scott, was beaten to jelly with bludgeons. Long, flat, saw-edged bamboo staves hissed like serpents and fell on his naked body. When death was imminent at the five-hundredth stroke, he was thrust into a hole so vile that words cannot convey an idea of its horrors. Even there he preached the love of Christ, like Paul, to his jailors.

Deliverance came, however, before his enemies got time to murder him. Then bearing in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, he went forth to do a wonderful work. Revivals sprang up everywhere he went. To give a single example, in Chou Fu 1,398 inquirers were enrolled as a result of his ministry. In other cities hundreds and thousands flocked to Christ.

College-bred Chinese students can get from $30 to $150 a month out of secular work, while the best churches pay only from $5 to $20 a month; hence there has been a dearth of educated Chinese pastors. Pastor Ding visited the colleges, and hundreds of students have definitely consecrated themselves to the ministry. Pastor Ding has been asked the secret of his success. His reply is characteristic: "I have no secret, except prayer." And this is the great secret of spiritual power. If the church had a baptism of prayer it would have a baptism of power that would bring all the earth to the feet of Jesus

Mission Notes from China.

Five years ago, September 20, 1906, China issued a decree to abolish opium-smoking in the empire within ten years. This is the most extensive warfare ever inaugurated by any nation against a private habit, and puts to shame our half-way measures against alcohol. There are—or were—twenty-five million opium-smokers in China, but the authorities do not say, "It is better to have no law against opium than to have a law that is broken." They punish the law-breakers. One official in Anhwei, disguised as a coolie, found eight dens filled with smokers. He had the inmates bamboosed on the spot, the smokers getting 200 strokes, and the proprietor getting 300.

Woman in China is "despised and rejected." When a lady missionary told her that her husband did not get drunk, smoke opium, or beat her, a poor Chinese woman said: "You have been talking to me about heaven and hell in a world to come. Your life now is heaven and mine is hell."

Infanticide is horribly common in China. M. E. Ritzman says that a missionary lady in South China once asked a group of women how many of them had destroyed their baby girls, and all confessed to having killed one at least, while one acknowledged that she had destroyed five. The reason is largely poverty. It is unprofitable to bring up daughters, since they get married before they reach the wage-earning stage, and are only a burden to parents.

Girls are often sold into slavery in China. In ordinary times girl slaves can be bought at prices varying from $5 to $100. In famine times one may get a bargain. During one of the great famines some years ago 3,000 female children were sold to dealers in a large city, and were carried like poultry in baskets. The price of some was fifteen cents. Some are used as domestics, while others are kept for immoral purposes.

A Chinese proverb says, "For each pair of bound feet there has been a whole kang, or big bath, full of tears." The mothers of lily-footed girls usually sleep with a stick near them, and rarely hesitate to use it if the child in her pain disturbs the household with her wails. That is, if the girl is not sent to sleep in an outhouse.

In China there are three hundred million people that cannot read and write their own language. Thought has moved in narrow grooves for centuries, which makes it hard for the people to understand even the simplest teachings of Christianity.

The Presbyterians have a mission at Lien Chou, in Southern China. In a near-by town called Sam Kong there was a riot, and a group of disturbers talked of marching to Lien Chou and sacking the mission. The men of a number of villages near Lien Chou, however, held a mass-meeting and said that they would go to the defence of the mission premises if necessary. This ended the danger. Thus some of the Chinese began to recognize their friends.

For the first time in human history the Christian Sabbaths are marked, along with Confucian feasts and holy days, in the Chinese calendar. This calendar is in a way an official book. It is a guide to correct conduct for the year, telling what days are best for visiting, for offering presents, and so on. It is said that three out of five Chinese houses possess these books.

In the best-manned province in China there is one missionary for every 40,000 of the population, while five other provinces have only one missionary for every 100,000. Four provinces have one missionary for every 250,000, which would be like having 12 missionaries for New York City. Suppose New York had only twelve ministers, poorly supplied with funds. Somebody might well write books and tell how Christianity had failed there!

The China Inland Mission reports that during the 35 years of its work preceding the Boxer rising in 1900, 12,964 persons had been baptized by the mission's workers. In the nine years immediately succeeding the Boxer crisis the mission has received 20,176 communicants into the church. That is one effect of persecution.

In Hankow, last December, great meetings were held by native leaders of the Chinese church. The conference discussed problems of religious work during the day, and in the evening held evangelistic meetings. It is estimated that 10,000 people heard the gospel each night, 2,000 of this number being students. Chapels were crowded and hundreds of inquirers were enrolled.

In 1895 nine hundred cities in China were closed to the missionaries. Today every city in the empire is open to teachers, and every province has representatives of the gospel.

China has its Pocket Testament League, the members of which pledge themselves to carry a Testament with them and to read it every day. The aim is to have a branch of the league in every Christian Church in the land.

Bishop J. W. Bashford says that China has made more progress during the past year than any other nation on the globe. She has done without a tremor big things that have taken many years to grow in the West. Thus a beginning has been made in representative government, and the old despotism is under the ban. The regent has abolished the custom of the people's prostrating themselves before the sovereign. A decree has abolished slavery. And then, there is substantial progress in opium reform. Besides, lotteries have been abolished.

Leprosy is common in China, chiefly in the southeastern maritime provinces. Dr. John Jackson, of London, says that he found 800 lepers crowded into dark hovels in narrow lanes, one mile outside the East Gate of Canton. A pathetic sight was blind Un Ho hobbling through the street on crutches, one leg having been amputated. She was converted before her leprosy was discovered. When the stroke fell she came to this leper heathen village and introduced Christianity to these "butt ends of human being," as Stevenson calls the sufferers. There are twelve stations where work is carried on for lepers, and the need for more is crying. $25 supports a leper in comparative comfort for a year.

From Shanghai comes an account of a little evangelistic band of native Christians. They visit the homes of the Christians where they sing hymns that soon attract the crowd. Then the gospel is preached. This gives the native Christian a chance to explain to his neighbors what Christianity is, and directs inquirers to some place where they can get more instruction.

A German missionary from the province of Shansi tells of a man who came to the mission station to buy a Testament. He lived a long way off, and never had seen a foreigner or heard a preacher of the gospel. A copy of Matthew's Gospel had come into his hands, and he wanted to know more of the doctrine. When he arrived at the station the missionary was not at home. The man waited, and in the meantime read the New Testament through nearly three times. When the missionary returned the visitor was ready for baptism.

Miss A. M. Jones of South China tells of the village of P'ik-t'iam whose entire population, 200 souls, asked to be received into the faith. They gave an ancestral hall for a chapel. Another village in the same district did the same things. As the missionary taught them the commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," they said that they had no gods, for they had burned the paper ones and drowned the stone ones that would not burn.

My Dear Children and Friends:

The commencement at Elon College has come and gone and we understand that there were many interested visitors. The annual commencements are occasions of considerable importance with the Orphanage children. They like to attend all the services and talk about the features of special interest just the same as if they were part of the programme. It is also of interest to them because children are always glad to have visitors and during commencements we have many visitors. We suppose that several hundred people took a look at "Our Orphanage" this week. We are glad to welcome all and though many spent but a few minutes yet they have seen the results of our children's work as shown in land, brick and mortar, which are now growing youths into strong womanhood and manhood.

Our Board of Trustees met Tuesday at 10:30 a. m. and again at 2:30 p. m. and held closing session at 8:00 p. m. Passed upon the routine work of the year, and heard reports of Bro. L. M. Clymer as Auditing Committee, and Jas L. Foster, as Supt.

We now have 47 children with a number of previous applications which the Trustees would like to accept but our finances are so limited. The Trustees did not have time to pass on all matters claiming attention, but referred some to the Executive Committee.

We have a number of donations, but owing to pressing duties we will put off till next week.

Bro. Pastor, your Supt. is much pained and perplexed to know just why you did not give your people an opportunity to give us that offering which would have paid off our indebtedness and left us so happy. Just the opportunity was what the many good people who love the Orphanage wanted and they would have given from $1.00 to $5.00 and been glad and happy in doing so. Why would you not give them the opportunity?

We are still very dry and harvest is about ready. Give us a great rally.

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Sanford, N. C., June 7, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my letter and send my dime for June.

I am glad one of the orphans writes every week; I enjoy reading the letters. Our meeting will be the second week in July. I hope we will have a good meeting.

Your niece,

Annie Pearl Way.

Well, Annie, you never fail to write promptly. Hope to have you visit us some time and see our Home.

Crews, Va., May 31, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come late again, as usual. We enjoy reading the letters from the orphans so much. We have our little tasks to do too. I wash the dishes for mother and sometimes I can sweep the floor, and brother brings in stovewood.

I close with my dues for April and May.

Lovingly.

Helen S., and T. Clifford Foster.

Every one is happier for something to do, Helen, and mother is fortunate to have you and little brother to help her.

Pine Apple, Ala., May 31, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

One "Sun" failed to reach us this month—our last letter must have been in it as we have not seen it. We hope it reached you all right.

We are having it hot and dry for our commencement which closes tomorrow.

We wish we could go with Alma and Aunt Ola to see you all Saturday.

Our dimes and love.

J. Newman, S. E., Jr., Jos. Rabb Denton.

Your letters appeared in the issue of May 10th, children. Am sorry you failed to see them.

Wadley, Ala., R. 3., June 5, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my monthly letter. We had a fine service at Beulah, and also at New Hope and Antioch since I wrote my last letter. Hope you are all keeping cool this hot weather.

I have presented the Orphans' Home matter at New Hope and have secured $1.15 monthly subscription, which will be increased at our next appointment. I herewith remit 70 cents from New Hope, $5.11 monthly (less the amount of postage) Sunday school offering and subscription from Beulah. What we do "let us do it unto the Lord."

Your cousin,

G. D. Hunt.

Glad to know your churches are to help us regularly, Bro. The systematic giving counts so much.

NOTELETS.

Medical Dispensary work is just starting in our missionary home at Santa Isabel. Miss Mishler has set apart three rooms for that purpose. Anybody who has ever been in Porto Rico will rejoice at the extension of medical service, because there are so many thousands in need of it.

The Girls' School in Japan has a faculty of seven, and an attendance of thirty-one pupils. This is the latest report. And the School makes itself responsible for eight Sunday schools in Utsunomiya.

The Rosemont Christian Church raised $30.00 recently for the education of a Japanese girl in our school at Utsunomiya.

A Missionary Library is a recent addition to the books in the Sunday school library of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.

The Missionary Test.—In The Missionary Review of the World the following pointed parable appears:

"An artist was once asked to paint a picture of a dying church. Instead of putting on canvass a small, feeble, poor congregation in an old building, he painted a stately, modern edifice, through the open portals of which could be seen the richly carved pulpit, the magnificent organ, and the beautiful stained-glass windows. Just within the entrance, guarded on either side by a 'pillar of the church,' in spotless apparel, was a contribution-plate of goodly workmanship, for the 'offerings' of fashionable worshippers. But, right above the plate, suspended from a nail in the wall, there hung a small box, bearing the legend, 'Collection for Foreign Missions,' and over the slot, through which certain contributions should have gone, was a huge cobweb!"

EVERYDAY RELIGION.

That religion which isn't good for every day isn't much good for any day. If it doesn't stay with a man on Monday, it was only a cloak and a mockery on Sunday. If it doesn't show itself in the home, breathing upon everyone therein a kindly and helpful and strengthening influence, then it will make a fine show in the house of God to very little purpose indeed. If religion doesn't grip a man's soul, if it isn't the one thing in his whole life, Sunday and Saturday, day and night, then it becomes so near to being nothing that it is scarcely worth reckoning at all. When we speak of everyday religion, we speak of the only genuine kind of religion there is. And it is its homely, everyday quality that will commend it to the world and will in the end win for it the allegiance of the world. Religion is for every day. Its blessings and benefits, its comforts and sweet consolations, its guidance and its inspiration are for the commonplace days in the commonplace lives of commonplace men and women. It is something to take with one, something that will never be out of place anywhere, something that will add to life's joy its best touch of sweetness and will mix with all life's sorrows, hope and courage and power. A man who has everyday religion in good wholesome quantity can easily afford to be without a good many other things.—Christian Guardian.

THE SMALL COLLEGE VS. THE UNIVERSITY.

The tendency of modern institutions, then—if we disregard their distractions—is to make breadwinners, to fit men to earn money. State universities are necessarily of this character, and the influence upon all institutions which compete with them is strong. Size itself almost irresistibly drives this away. The revolution, indeed, seems to have gone from one extreme to the other; and as the old system had little place for men who sought technical training, the new system has but scant place for those who desire learning for its own sake. In fact, the old system outlasted the period of its greatest usefulness, and when the change came offered but slight resistance to new methods.

It is becoming evident, however, that the change has gone too far, and that there were some features of former methods worth preserving. The country is too large and the demands of society are too complicated to be served by any single system. One of the greatest misfortunes in the education of a nation, John Stuart Mill said, would be the establishment of uniformity under the name of unity. There is room in this great country for institutions of every kind, and an increasing need that different colleges turn their attention in different directions. Moreover, the new system is beginning to disclose some defects. Classes are so large that there is and at the same time the compensation of teachers is so low that the profession no longer draws into its ranks its due proportion of talent. While such conditions prevail, it is inevitable that college and university work throughout the country should be marked as it is by lack of seriousness.

It is for these reasons that at Ann Arbor, for example, the movement has arisen which seeks in some respects to return to the old purposes of education. History can be taught better than ever before. We have far ampler means for instruction in democracy and the principles of government, while the need for myriads of moral standards in public opinion was never greater. It is proposed therefore to make the moral character of the student the first purpose of the college; to teach concentration and application, making the college work real as work in a business or profession is real; to give individual training of the best character; and to create an environment of vivid intellectual life, a current where yielding shall be easy and resistance hard.—Harper's Magazine.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—From the Conshohocken Record we learn that by a vote of about 40 to 13 the resignation which Rev. S. L. Baugher had sent in as pastor of the Gulf Christian Church, Conshohocken, Pa., was not accepted and that Bro. Baugher is further considering the matter.

—Dr. E. L. Moffitt having resigned the presidency of Elon College will at an early date move to Ahseboro, N. C., his former home, to engage in business there. Consequently he is offering for sale his handsome and well-appointed home at Elon College, his announcement of which will be found in another column.

—From The State Sentinel, Dover, Del., we learn of continued and gratifying progress in the People's Christian Church of the city. On Sunday, June 3, the first anniversary of the dedication was observed and the record of the past years work in all lines was reviewed. Great congregations from the city and from a distance attended the three services of the day, and a contribution of $1220 was taken. Besides being a great preacher Dr. Lightbourne is without doubt a great builder and an effectual organizer.

—There are evidently brains and character as well as brawn and business behind the Farmers Bank of Nansemond, Suffolk, Va. In the run of affairs we come across many statements from banks and other institutions bidding for public confidence, but nothing that equals this in the matter of balance sheets and continued improvements in business. From the Report made to the Virginia State Corporation Commission June 7, we gather that this bank has resources that total $2,730,985.32. The capital stock is only $20,000 while the surplus is a round half million dollars, with undivided profits of $223,185.94 and deposits of $1,890,808.10. The loans amount to $1,979,812.90. Congressman E. E. Holland is President, Geo. W. Truitt, Vice-President, Wm. H. Jones, Jr., Cashier, William Briggs, Assistant Cashier. It certainly means much in morals, as well as in money to any community to build up, and maintain unimpaired, through the increasing years an institution like this which depends, for its support and development, entirely upon the undisputed confidence of the people whom it seeks to serve. And the fine fellows who manage this institution and have made it what it is deserve all the success that has crowned their splendid efforts.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

For every act of kindness and word of sympathy which we have received during the recent illness and decease of our daughter Ellen, we wish to express our heart-felt and sincere appreciation and gratitude. Such evidences of friendship and affection touch the heart and sweeten life. Friends, we thank you, one and all.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Norfolk Letter.

The Memorial Temple again proved its loyalty to the cause of missions and its liberality by making its annual missionary offering. They raised in cash and subscriptions the sum of $605.00, which is a very liberal contribution from this church especially at this time. They have $1,000 balance due on the parsonage in July, and they are making a heroic effort with all prospects of success to pay it off when due.

The Third Church on the first Sunday made its third annual offering for the Ponce Building Fund, and the sum of $100 was pledged. That will make nearly $400 this little school has raised for that purpose, and I am sure no one feels any poorer for it. If each school had done even that much the house would have been built by this time.

Sunday the 11th, Bro. Hanson begins his second year as pastor. He has done a good year's work, very acceptable to the church. Thirty-three have been added to the membership, and the church has gone forward and been strengthened along many lines. Bro. Hanson will take his vacation during the month of August, and attend the summer school at Northfield, Mass. The church will have no regular preaching services during that month, but will keep up the Sunday school and prayer meeting.

The Sunday schools of the Temple and the Third Church will unite in their picnic and run a boat excursion to Yorktown on Thursday, June 29. Friends of the schools are invited to go with them. Tickets will be 50c. round trip.

Little Lloyd Johnson, who was reported as being critically ill, is very much improved.

Mr. J. E. Cartwright, the husband of the popular teacher of the Goodwill Circle, was operated on at the Protestant Hospital several days ago, following an acute and severe attack of appendicitis. He has so far recovered that he was taken home yesterday.

The East Virginia Ministerial Association is in session today in the study of the pastor of the Memorial Temple.

J. W. Manning.

Wadley, Alabama.

Dingler Chapel is the youngest church in the Alabama Conference. It is not yet two months old, and has fourteen members, all adults. It is situated in a thickly settled farming community. They have a splendid Sunday-school which is older than the church, presided over by that efficient Christian worker, Bro. J. C. Knight.

I think this church has a great future from the fact that it is so well situated, so badly needed, and meets with such a welcome from the entire community. One man who is not a church member told me he would give more than any other man toward the building of a house of worship. A good Baptist offers to give the land to build on with other help.

Sunday, June 3rd, was our day here and we had one of the best services it has been our pleasure to hold here. In the afternoon this writer filled an appointment to lecture to the Sunday school at New Harmony. This is one of the largest country schools in this county. The superintendent, Bro. E. B. Lashley, tells me they have an enrollment of one hundred and eighty. They have a large Teacher Training Class. So we wended our way homeward with a feeling that a brighter day was dawning on the little band of workers in the Alabama Conference.

J. H. Hughes.

Franklin, Va.

Yesterday was a good day for the Franklin Christian Church. At the morning service Bro. A. T. Lee was ordained as a deacon to fill the place made vacant by the death of Bro. I. W. Norfleet. We are constantly reminded that our places will soon be filled by others. At the same service one good member was received by letter.

In the evening we had Children's exercises, and the children did well. I would like to mention each one by name and tell how much I appreciated his effort. They showed that the committee had done their work well, and it further showed that the committee had good material with which to work. It is true that the children are ready and glad to enter into services of this kind, if they only have some one to direct them.

The children of our own time are not so very different from little Samuel, who heard the voice of God, but knew not from whence it came, and needed some one to tell him how to answer. I would that we were as true to the little ones entrusted to our care as Eli was to Samuel. When the Lord spoke to little Samuel, and he did not know how to answer, Eli told him what to say. The Lord is speaking to many a young heart, and some one ought to say, "It is the Lord." The Church was filled to overflowing, and every one present seemed to enjoy the exercises.

EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER has often heard class-members say: "I cannot understand the Bible." They could not understand any other book that was printed three hundred years ago. So many English words of that day were different. More than forty new dictionaries have been required since then, to keep up with the changes in the English language. The uses the words of our day, which make the meanings of the Bible writers clear to us.

"ABIDE IN ME."

That mystic word of Thine, O Sovereign Lord!
Is all too pure, too high, too deep for me;
Weary of striving, and with longing faint,
I breathe it back again in prayer to Thee.

Abide in me—o'ershadowed by Thy love,
Each half-formed purpose and dark thought of sin.
Quench, ere it rise, each selfish, low desire,
And keep my soul as Thine—calm and divine.

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own—
So, when Thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.

The soul alone, like a neglected harp,
Grows out of tune, and needs that Hand divine;
Dwell Thou within it, tune and touch the chords,
Till every note and string shall answer Thine.

Abide in me: there have been moments pure,
When I have seen Thy face and felt Thy power;
Then evil lost its grasp, and, passion hushed,
Owned the divine enchantment of the hour.

These were but seasons beautiful and rare;
Abide in me—and they shall ever be;
I pray Thee now fulfill my earnest prayer,
Come and abide in me, and I in Thee.

—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

THAT WHICH IS REQUIRED.

What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? Mic. 6:8. Golden Text for Sunday, June 25.

In the formation of religious character there is large liberty and much latitude. But if one would attain, there are certain necessary elements. Much is given in the Bible for understanding, for correction, for edification, but there are essentials to salvation. The golden text today conveys an essential. It goes directly to the mark. It drives at and hits the center. Other things help; but this much the Lord requires: Do justly, love mercy, walk humbly. Our Savior must have had these words in mind when in Mat. 23:23 He spoke of "justice, mercy, and faith" as the weightier matters of the law.

To hurt no one by word or deed—that is to act justly. To be guided in one's conduct towards others with loving kindness—that is to love mercy. And these two principles comprise the whole law of man's relationship to his fellowman. If we are always just and merciful to those around us we have fulfilled half the law.

And now the other half is comprised in "walk humbly with thy God." Man's obligation is always two-fold—that to his fellows, and that to his God. It is not enough for a man to be generous and charitable to those about him. He must also have regard for his attitude to God—walk humbly with thy God—obey, worship, serve God.

So the prophet Micah had gathered into one sentence the substance of the Law and the Prophets, as Christ did at a later time when he said: The first and great commandment is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. This is fundamental. This is rock bottom. On what Micah said here, and on what the Christ said later, rests the whole teaching of the Book.

It behooves every one, then, to be just. This is not only a fundamental virtue. It is a fundamental doctrine of the Bible. God enjoins it. He who is unjust violates the fundamental laws of virtue and of God.

Are you unjust in word, conduct, thought, treatment of others?

Do you show mercy in all your dealings—lean towards the side of mercy? Out of a compassionate heart, in loving kindness, do you thus act toward your fellows?

In your daily walk and work, are you humble, reverential, obedient to your God?

Had the Israelites only learned these simple laws and lived by them their nation had not been swept away in God's wrath. But they refused and persisted in that refusal, and to meet the ends of justice they had necessarily to lose their place, prestige and footing as a nation and a people.

Only by being just, showing mercy and walking humbly with our God can we or any of us hope to escape an awful and a final doom. The way is made very plain for us. Let us walk therein and live.

A CREATURE OF CHRISTIANITY.

Philanthropy and benevolence are not Christianity, but they are the off-spring of it. Giving to charity does not constitute the donor a Christian, but the spirit of Christianity constitutes liberal givers. Mr. Carnegie may be of the indifferent and agnostic type, but he is himself a product of Christianity. That is to say, the spirit of Christ abroad in the land made Mr. Carnegie and his charities possible.

Along this line our Christian religion is bringing great things to pass. The year 1910, philanthropic gifts amounted to $163,197,125—an inconceivable sum. And this only includes what may be termed the larger donations, for the ten thousand smaller ones are not counted or tabulated.

Of the total above given $76,006,478 went to education; $30,475,797 went to religion; and $56,714,849 to general charities.

These gifts cover a wide range and go in many directions and were made by people of varied and sundry beliefs, but it may be truly said that they were all the creatures of Christianity.

PROGRESS AND RELIGION.

The religion of Christianity has always blazed the way of progress, and nowhere retarded it. Christianity founded the first and the best schools of this country and of Europe, and Christianity opened the doors of the Orient so that modern civilization and progress might enter there.

A few weeks ago we gave in these columns a remarkable discourse on the Bible by a great American statesman as a book of progress and development. Herewith we append two paragraphs from an address by that "scholar in politics," Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey.

"The man whose faith is rooted in the Bible knows that reform cannot be stayed, that the finger of God that moves upon the face of the nations is against every man that plots the nation's downfall or the people's deceit; that these men are simply groping and staggering in their ignorance and a fearful day of judgment and that whether our generation witnesses it or not, the glad day of revelation and of freedom will come in which the hosts of men will sing of the coming of the Lord in His glory, and all of those will be forgotten, those little, scheming, contemptible creatures that forgot the image of God and tried to frame men according to the image of the evil one."

"There will be no halt in the great movement of the armies of reform, unless men forget their God, and unless they forget this Book—the charter of their liberty. Let no man suppose that progress can be divorced from religion, or that there is any other platform for the ministers of reform than the platform written in the utterances of our Lord and Savior."

A NEW CREATION.

Many a man is trying to get better by reforming. And, forsooth, many do improve their moral condition, mental character, and social stamina, by "quitting off" their bad habits. Such people by the exercise of a strong will power stop off, face about, and finally arrive at fair results.

But what most of us need is not reformation and improving our old selves, but regeneration and the gift of a new self to improve and develop. We do not need a making over of the habits we have, but the creation of a new being within, that as new creatures we may have the power to form new habits.

Down on the coast there are men whose business it is to receive the wrecks of ships which have been raised from a sunken and well-nigh lost condition. These receivers of wrecked vessels take the salvage and if not too far gone, patch the old ship up again, or if too far gone, they sell it for junk. But in neither case is the wrecked, and restored vessel, worth by a very great deal what the new vessel was worth.

In the voyage of life there is frequently a shipwreck. And in Christ Jesus we have One who does not receive that He may patch up or pass off at lower price; but that He may make an entirely new creature so that the last man shall be worth a thousand-fold more than the former.

Christ receives not to reform, but to create anew.

We are made new creatures in Him, who purchased our salvation with a price.

Harrell having supplied for his Suffolk church last Sunday.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

A Knockout Blow.

John L. Sullivan, long time champion in the pugilistic ring, and possibly the best known of American boxers, was in Norfolk, Virginia, last week, and, if the papers report truly, he gave some straight talk on a subject or so. The big fighter declares that what knocked Jeffries out of the ring was a saloon and cigarettes. In the fatal fight with the colored Johnson, Jeffries, says Sullivan, could not "come back" and so was out and done for in short order "because after his last fight before this, Jeffries bought a saloon and besides patronizing it freely himself, took to smoking several packs of cigarettes a day."

Sullivan thinks that whiskey and cigarettes will certainly land the knock-out blow not only to the thousands of weak and immature youths who indulge in them, but to the strongest athlete that dares tackle them. John is right, one time at least, for there are no more deadly foes to physical strength and mental endurance than whiskey and tobacco.

The Coronation.

All is gaiety, extravagance, and luxury in London, the English metropolis, this week. The King and Queen are on Thursday receiving their crowns, the emblems of royalty and rulership. The whole United Kingdom is out on holiday, and in millions of homes there will be evidences of honor to the sovereign and loyalty to the crown. It is estimated that the coronation will not cost less than one hundred million dollars. This is guess work, but the items of expense are almost infinite, and are without value. From the four corners of the earth peoples have been gathering for weeks to witness or participate in the festivities. Millions of eyes will look upon a king, and will be satisfied for their trouble and expense.

If so much, and so great, to look for a moment upon an earthly king, what must it mean to spend an eternity in the presence of a Heavenly King? And if it is worth so much to crown for a few brief minutes or years mayhaps, an earthly king, what must it be worth to receive a crown at the hands of a heavenly King?

Now the crowning of England's king is mere show and make-believe so far as political power and prestige are concerned. The real power in England has long since been taken from the king and given to Premier and Parliament. The king is a mere figure-head.

But, man loves display. Man seeks the social. Man likes distinction and preferment among his fellows. George V is being crowned king of England not for political reasons any more, but to satisfy social demands. Society must have a head, and the king is that.

In order to social distinction, preferment and enthronement men are willing to spend their millions. This at least serves to show us how far we have come from savagery and barbarism. For among savages the social life is at its lowest. In civilization the social life is at its highest. And Christ came to teach us how to be social, how to live and love and be loyal in society, among ourselves and with one another.

President Taft to Sunday Schools.

Cicero, the Roman orator, said, in substance, that it was not so much what was said of a person or institution as it was as to who said it. Many citizens have spoken well and wisely of the Sunday-school, and for good reason. But when the President of the greatest republic on earth speaks of this institution, considered so commonplace, what he says is worth noting. Brooklyn was celebrating Sunday-school Anniversary Day recently. President Taft was present and delivered one of the chief addresses. What the President said was to the point:

"Now, with respect to Sunday-schools, there are a great many reasons why you should attend them. But I would speak to the young men and women who are old enough to understand the importance of literature and history, and I would urge upon them the necessity of close attention to the lessons taught and learned in the Sunday school. The study of the Bible, the study of the history of the Bible, and the study of its literature will form in after-life a wealth and position for you which you cannot now understand. The men who speak with most telling effect are those able to command illustrations from Holy Writ, who are familiar with the stories of Holy Writ, and who can tell them to their audiences. They are the ones who understand the force of that book. And, boys and girls, it is in the Sunday school where you get the opportunities which you never have again in all your busy lives to familiarize yourselves with its lessons and literature.

"I do not mean to say that that is the chief benefit from Sunday school attendance, and I should be lacking in appreciation if I did so, for that is only one of the chief benefits of the Sunday school. The greatest one, of course, is laying the foundations of a moral and religious character. To the older students, this is something I would impress on them; for they realize as they grow older the opportunities they have lost if they have not studied that Book of books."

Snuff.

Col. Wade Harris of the Charlotte Even- ing Chronicle can pick up more interesting topics to write about than anybody. Everything in the broad universe pictures itself in vivid form upon the sensitive mental plate of his precocious mind, and he transfers the impression to print. Here is the Colonel writing about snuff dipping, which he says, was a very common practice among negro women, and not a few white women, of a past generation; but a practice which the Colonel says is now a lost art. We are inclined to think, however, if the observant Chronicle will look more closely, he will find very, very many women who dip snuff yet. But, so glibly and rhythmically does the Colonel pen his ode to the old time snuff dipper that we are compelled to let our readers catch the melody of it, to the following extent at least:

"Time was when snuff was the grocer's staple article. He might be out of salt or sugar, flour or tobacco, but always he had a supply of snuff on hand. It was made in two varieties—salt and sweet—and was packed in bladders of various sizes. Snuff-dipping was a common evil in the days of and after the war. Every negro woman had her brush, and the habit was not uncommon among the whites of the past generation. The brush was a twig, one end of which was chewed into a mop. The sweet gum made the favorite brush. Usually the snuff would be carried in a round tin box. Into this the moistened brush would be dipped, collecting a wad of the pungent brown powder, which would be transferred to the mouth. Expert dippers could close their lips manipulating the brush from one side of the mouth to the other, making one dip last until forced to ejection by the necessity of speaking a word. Other dippers would put a wad between lower lip and teeth and carry it there until it was gradually lost by what might be called a process of erosion. It was common to see a woman going about with a brush in her mouth and the corners of her lips coated with a dry brown scum. The acme of sociability in a gathering of dippers was the passing around of the snuff box. Conversation was carried on with difficulty and naturally lagged, as the sister who talked most had to lose the most snuff. The habit once acquired had as strong a hold on the victim as tobacco on its victim. The snuff boxes would be carried even to the country churches and the dinner between sermons would be followed by many a surreptitious dip. So completely, however, has snuff dipping disappeared that but few young people know what it is. Few have heard about it and still fewer have seen it. Snuff dipping belongs to the lost arts. How the revolting habit was ever countenanced is one of the unsolved mysteries."

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

From the wayside of life thoughts may be gathered on every side which will wonderfully help you to the beautiful way. We know that in trying to learn more about God we are going into deep water, but if we begin to sing may our Father help us to float on the waves of faith that we may see more clearly into his word and hear with eternal hope the sweet voice saying, "Follow me," there will be no danger of getting lost. There are many in the evening twilight of life while the bright evening star of hope gleams over the way, with a lovely light inviting us up to higher heights—to greater thoughts and visions in the beautiful Christian life. But strange emotions run through our minds as we reach out the hand of faith for the immortal crown. A large host of white head pilgrims are ready to join the innumerable caravan which is crossing over the line which divides time from eternity. They are coming from the east, west, north and south to sit down in the coming kingdom with the fathers.

How beautiful and admirable is that morning which has no clouds. So the morning twilight of the young is lovely—before the storms of the world have marred its attractiveness—before sin has searred the graceful form—before indulgence has polluted the soul—before bad habits are formed which very often blight the whole of life. Bright, glad morning of life in which so much real worth can be accomplished. The great field of human activity is before you and you are invited freely to enter it with industry and work.

A life that has been full of useful deeds and kind acts—a life that has been adorned with honesty and marked with fidelity to the truth—a life that has been blessed and influenced by the Christian religion may be called a beautiful life. Tell us of the strenuous, the hard, the active, and the simple life if you will—but let us look and think with increasing pleasure upon the beautiful life with its abundant and crowning splendor. There are many sweet spirited, lovable, forbearing and forgiving characters, it is a real pleasure to meet them, hear them, associate with them and get encouragement and inspiration from them. You feel so much better by being with them. To look into their sweet, expressive and impressive faces, to hear their soft voices melting every heart into love, tenderness and forgiveness makes life really more worth living. I once knew a lovely Christian lady who had the most forgiving spirit I ever knew, and so often thought what a beautiful life was hers. It was a pleasure to be in her company and enjoy the charming influence which her life imparted. That splendid life was a blessing to all who met her, and the world was dark, gloomy and sad when she left it to live with the angels.

J. T. Kitchen.

PRESENTATION OF BIBLES. To Graduating Class, Elon College, June, 1911.

REV. T. E. WHITE, RAMSEUR, N. C.

I come to perform a task too deep for words. You are about to leave an institution whose love for you is similar to that of a mother's. Were it possible for you to fail, and should society cast you down, this institution will still cling to you and claim you as her sons and daughters. She has done her best for you. Wisely and patiently she has instructed you, tenderly and carefully she has watched over you, and now lovingly and prayerfully she will follow you. And just as a thoughtful mother does not forget to place the little Testament somewhere in the trunk of her boy and girl on their departure from the old home, so this institution places in your hands as her parting blessing the Holy Bible, that it may comfort and console, guide and inspire you all along the journey of life.

In presenting you this Book, the institution is giving you that which largely called her into existence. Had it not been for the influence of the Bible, these Christian schools and colleges that bless our nation would not be possible. It is impossible to estimate its influence in the lives of men and in the history of nations. Its own true history is an unanswerable argument for its divine inspiration. Ages have tested and tried it; her enemies by force and fire have tried to destroy it; her critics by skill and learning have endeavored to bring discredit upon it; but time and testing, persecution and learning have served to brighten its pages, and it comes to you as God's message to man, and the most popular book in all the world.

Being familiar with the history of our own country, you cannot fail to recognize the place of the Bible in shaping and guiding our Ship of State. A knowledge of these things reveals the happy fact that God has moved in our history just as surely as when He led Israel out of Egyptian bondage. The day of miracles has not passed. It is nothing less than a miracle that America should be hidden from Europe till the marvellous discovery of Columbus in 1492. The world was just arising from a long dark night of sleep. Twenty-five years after the discovery of the New World, Martin Luther, the great reformer, nailed his memorable theses to the door of the cathedral and soon all Europe was agitated, moved and stirred till persecutions were rife in the land. The Bible had come from its hiding place and become the joy and comfort of those persecuted for righteousness' sake. The arduous labors of Wycliffe, Tyndale, Coverdale and others in translating the Scriptures into the language of the people, gave rise to persecution, but with the persecution there arose a spirit for independence and liberty. The printing press came at an opportune time. Men longed to be free. It was during these years of persecution that America opened her arms and became the refuge of the persecuted ones. Our forefathers brought with them the Bible; they devoutly read it and studied it; and it was the reading of the Book of books that instilled into their minds and hearts those noble principles that afterward budded and blossomed and bore the fruit of our glorious citizenship. It is good today to belong to the English-speaking race. The King James version of the Bible, which has circulated for 300 years, has helped to make it great. But its marvellous effect is not confined to the English race alone. No other book has found a place in so many languages, nor blessed so many races. And we must not think its mission finished. It begins with the beginning and it shall never pass away. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven." It still inspires the brush of the painter and the chisel of the sculptor, poets still draw innumerable themes from its truths and give expression to them in song and psalm, and orators find it a never-failing fountain of wisdom, inspiration and argument. Happy is that nation or person whose God is Jehovah, and whose book is the Bible.

If Spain, that proud, and once rich and powerful nation, has largely ignored the reading of the Bible and has been compelled to take a lower rank in the roll of nations; or if the lesser republics, like Venezuela, Mexico, Guatemala, Santo Domingo and others have not encouraged the reading of the Scriptures and are filled with internal strife, constant revolutions, and the paralyzation of business, may we not conclude that the key to the success of a nation or an individual is the same today as in the time of Israel's kings? They failed when they forgot God; they forgot Him when they ignored and forgot His Word. May you ever say, my friends, with the inspired songster, "I will not forget thy law."

And you are not without an opportunity to be loyal to and to defend the Word of God. Although it is published in nearly every language and dialect and more copies of it are distributed than of any other publication, it still has its enemies. About two years ago a man was imprisoned in South America for no other crime than that of circulating the Scriptures; recently the Governor of the State of Kentucky was bitterly criticised because he dared say a word favorably in respect to the celebration of the 300th anniversary of the King James version in nearly all of our large cities, the Bible is a closed and forbidden book in our public schools; and many with a pretense of scholarship rise up to scoff and sneer at miracles and inspiration.

Coming as you do from Christian homes where every altar is adorned with the blessed Book, and being graduated from an institution, founded and maintained by those who have suffered and sacrificed because of its holy teachings, nothing could be more appropriate as a parting gift. Take it, then, read it, study it, love it, live it, defend it; and may you from the depths of your hearts say about it what the Psalmist said about the law and judgments of the Lord: "It is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb."

AFTER GRADUATION.

Stepping out from the halls and shaded paths, coveted diplomas in hand, with clear eyes that shine with the joy of living, and with hearts where the high purpose and confident courage feel only an occasional tremor of doubt and wavering—so comes the latest army of graduates from the many schools and colleges of the land.

The world needs them. It has a place and a welcome for them all—just as the ocean welcomes many rivers, and yet is never full. Nor is the world the cold and hostile place which many of them have pictured it. They will do well to get rid of the idea that life is a battle. Life is a problem to solve, a task to perform, a summit to scale, but it is not a warfare unless the individual prefers to make it so.

Moreover, the graduate makes a mistake if he thinks that life is something complex and complicated, a struggle in which much wisdom is essential to success—wisdom in which cunning and duplicity are leading elements. The best kind of a life is really a most simple thing, after all. A few plain rules, honestly followed, lead to the goal that is most worth reaching.

The graduate will find it desirable to forget some things he has learned, but there are many things he can not learn too well—that push is far better than "pull", that the established order has some commendable things about it, that honesty is the best policy, that most men are good fellows when you know them, that money is an unsatisfactory standard of values, that service is the highest expression of worship, that growth must not be allowed to cease, and that a clean and kindly life is the one fitting expression of gratitude to the Giver of life and all its numberless opportunities.—Youth's Companion.

HOW LIFE CAN BE TRANSFIGURED.

Life is strong and peaceful if whatsoever we do is done unto God. Life connected with God is sublimely beautiful and inspiring. Human applause or dissent should die away before one's feet. It is a splendid thing to detach oneself from all bondage to men, submitting himself constantly to God. The life of a Christian would be transfigured in proportion as the apostolic injunction is heeded, living not with eye-service as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart unto Christ; this brings life into living touch with the great fountain of all life. A man-pleasing life is servitude and brings corroding care and chafing anxiety. Living in constant fellowship with God and committing one's work unto him, brings an abounding and abiding peace, and a precious assurance that the life "flows on in endless song." Such a life is transfigured, and in its influence will be a benediction to all whom it touches. Paul declared: "For me to live is Christ." That was his purpose and goal. It transfigured his life.

Human life has a Godward and a manward relation. When its deep under-current flows Godward, it lends dignity to all other relations, and it becomes sublime; even in its lowliest phases, service will not be menial or commonplace or desecrating. All phases of life are under the transfiguring power of grace and the illuminating influences of the Holy Spirit. All is on God's altar and is sacred unto the Lord, so that the whole life is sacramental. This thought and experience give to the most ordinary life divine honor and permanent rest and delight, as well as permanent value. Every service becomes royal, and every deed noble, and every influence inspirational.—Selected.

Presenting the case against the cigarette. The Standard says the evil not only reacts upon the smoker himself but draws heavily upon the life blood of the nation. It cites two recent disasters as glaring results of cigarette smoking. One was the Washington Place fire in New York City, in which 143 persons lost their lives; it was caused by the careless dropping of cigarette stubs in a pile of rubbish. The other was a conflagration in Bangor, Me., on April 30th. A spark from a cigarette, thrown on a pile of hay during a high wind, was quickly fanned into a great fire which destroyed one-third of the city before it was checked. Two lives and the destruction of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 worth of property were the price paid for that "coffin-nail."—Biblical Recorder.

What is called "the most dangerous animal on earth" is—what do you suppose? Why, simply the common house-fly which has followed mankind since the dawn of history and lives only where man has made his home. It is said that the people of this country spend over $10,000,000 annually for screens to protect themselves against flies and mosquitoes. The fly causes thousands of deaths every year. The fly is a plague today as truly as it was in Egypt when "the land was corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies." Remember that, as our health officers are saying, the fly is born in, lives and thrives upon filth. Renew the war on "the most dangerous animal."—Biblical Recorder.

WHO CARES?

If Christ be a reality in your heart, if you really commune with him, if you have caught somewhat of the spirit that made your Master forsake the Father's house that he might come to earth to save men, then you will seek for men. You will not wait for the set seasons, when your pastor shall lead; but as you come to know men about you, you will be interested in their welfare, and will find a place for the simple, direct word for Christ. You are not hampered by the taint of professionalism, as sometimes your pastor is. Ofttimes when the preacher speaks out of the depth of his heart, men feel that this is his profession; "we expect him to say such things." Where the man is bigger than the preacher, he will not be seriously hampered by this; but it is a fact that many times the layman has a more direct approach to men than the pastor has.

Next to the fact that the Master cares, the fact that men care for your welfare is one of the most potent forces in constraining men to live as they should.

But the Master did not hide his great heart of love in heaven; he came to earth to make sacrifices for men, to win men and to tell them of the Father's love. It is not enough that you care for the welfare of the men of your community. You need to make your interest practical and real, and go after men. Then will men see the yearning face of the Christ through the kindly interest of the disciple.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

TO PREVENT MOULD.

To prevent mould on preserves or jellies, put a few drops of glycerine around the edge of the jar before putting on the cover.—Home Department, National Magazine for June.

MILK TO PUT OUT FIRE.

It has been proved that milk will effectually extinguish the flames from gasoline, or any form of petroleum, since it forms an emulsion with the oil, whereas water only spreads it.—Home Department, National Magazine for June.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

—Dr. Barrett in last week's Herald of Gospel Liberty drives his pen a telling thrust when he says

"Preachers are in demand—we mean preachers who know the Lord and are devoting time and strength to His work—no other kind can be useful in any marked degree."

—Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D. D., LL. D., Lakemont, N. Y., has been elected non-resident lecturer at Elon College, N. C., and that is a wise action, for there are few more accomplished men among us than Dr. Martyn Summerbell. We are glad to know the Elonites will have the benefit of his wisdom.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

—Prof. W. P. Lawrence, Chair of English in Elon College, left on last Friday for Wooster University where he goes to teach English Literature for about eight weeks in the summer school of that institution. Prof. Lawrence is a close student of our English tongue and will not fail to interest those to whom he has been called as lecturer and teacher.

—Ex-President E. L. Moffitt left Elon for Asheboro last Monday whither he goes to engage in business. We wish him all success, and part with him with regret. In an advertisement now running in The Sun his elegant home at Elon is offered for sale, affording to some one desiring a handsome residence here a good opportunity for a purchase.

—Dr. W. T. Herndon, Durham, N. C., is open to engagement to assist in revival work with pastors desiring his services. As Rev. C. E. Newman writes elsewhere in this issue of The Sun, Dr. Herndon is one of our most faithful ministers, and one of the most successful revivalists in all our Convention. The pastor does well who has the help of this faithful and devout man of God. He throws his whole heart and soul into winning men and women to Christ.

—Rev. B. F. Black has resigned the Secretaryship of the city Y. M. C. A. of Suffolk, Va., to become General Secretary of the C. & O. Ry. Y. M. C. A. at Clifton Forge, Va. The Association at Clifton Forge has 700 members and is the largest Ry. Y. M. C. A. work in the State, having a daily attendance of between 1200 and 1500. Mr. Black will have three assistant secretaries in the work.

Bro. Black will finish the year's work as pastor of Damascus Church, Gates Co.

—Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Graham, N. C., was called by wire to Merom, Indiana, last week, the trustees of Union Christian College, located at that place, having tendered to Dr. Long the presidency of that institution. President O. B. Whitaker resigned the presidency of the college at the recent commencement and the Trustees deemed Dr. Long a suitable successor. Dr. Long will be no novice at the helm as he was for sixteen years president of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. It is presumed he will accept the position of honor and trust now tendered him.

—This writer feels a personal loss in the going away to another locality of Ex-President E. L. Moffitt, who this week takes up his work in business affairs at Asheboro, N. C. We have been associates and neighbors a long time in public service for our church, in one capacity or another, and we shall miss sorely his good company, his wise counsels, and his generous commands. In all our knowledge there is no more thoughtful and thorough gentleman than he—a man high above an ungenerous act, and incapable of an unfair one.

—We sincerely trust many will read, and respond to, the earnest appeal of Rev. S. B. Klapp published in another column of this paper for the church at Ether, N. C. This is certainly a point of importance, merit and promise, and the brethren who have wrought and sacrificed so nobly there need now the encouragement of outside help. Turn now, reader, to "The Last Call," read it, and if within your reach, send a contribution, which will be wisely applied and very gratefully received. The contribution may be sent either to Bro. Klapp, or to deacon Hiram Freeman, Ether, N. C.

—We acknowledge with appreciation the following: "Mr. and Mrs. John Wilson Ballard invite you to be present at the marriage of their daughter Lilly to Mr. Fabius Monroe Clements on Wednesday afternoon, June 28th, 1911, at 2 o'clock, Mount Carmel Christian Church, Isle of Wight County, Virginia. At home after July 10th 209 Vine Street, Chattanooga, Tenn." Whereupon we send our congratulations and very best wishes to Fabius, who was a popular student in Elon College some time since and has made good, we are informed, as a hustling business man in Chattanooga.

—The lines fell to this writer in very pleasant places a few hours last Thursday. Our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. Beale Johnson were entertaining a house party at their elegant home, Suadelia, Cardenas, N. C., when fortune permitted us to stop off between trains and enjoy the goodly company, the splendid dinner and the lavish hospitality. The dinner of barbecued pig and kid and other savory edibles and delicacies was served to some score of guests under the big oaks beside the mill pond and the party were as happy and care free as regal hospitality could make it. The mother and five aunts of the hostess constituted the house party, and on Thursday in their honor the great dinner and the goodly company came. Even a self-invited guest sometimes is not regarded an intruder, and enjoys himself as well as he who sits in the seat of honor at the feast. We speak from experience, with thanks to generous souls.

—From Sunday, June 18 Raleigh News and Observers

"The Christian Endeavor Societies of the Hillsboro Street Christian Church will leave today at noon, in two large vans, for McCullers, to attend the organization of a Christian Endeavor Society which is expected to start out with a membership of 35. Each member of the local society is expected to attend the morning service at the Hillsboro Street Church and at the conclusion of the service they will take possession of the vans and go to McCullers. Each young lady member will take lunch enough for two."

We presume the church referred to at McCullers is Wentworth Christian Church, which has a large number of very promising young people and should have an active Christian Endeavor Society. There is no organization that helps a church more, and trains the young people better, than an active Christian Endeavor Society.

—Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., Editor of Herald of Gospel Liberty, and one of the Trustees of Elon College and one too who has known intimately for years Prof. W. A. Harper, writes thus of Elon's new president in last week's Herald:

"Mr. Harper combines in an unusual degree high educational qualifications and rare business gifts. He is progressive and yet conservative. Elon College is to be congratulated on its good fortune in securing such a man to be its President. Under the blessings of God President Harper will do a great work for the cause of Christ. Under his administration Elon College will continue to stand true to the Bible as the Word of God, for the new President has no sympathy with any disloyalty to the authority of the Word."

It seems but little tax on him to do many things at one time, or so nearly at one time as to make it seem so. Prof. Harper will begin his work with the Southern Christian Convention standing practically solid with him."

—In a very kindly and generous note our good Brother Baugher of Conshohocken, Pa., says, "Come this way and you will find preachers who preach that the disciples were not converted until the day of Pentecost. You will also meet here those who believe in a sinning religion, or sinning religionists. On May 20th, I heard an educated preacher, and a life long member of the Christian Church say in a sermon . . . that the disciples were sinners before Pentecost. And I could name others in the same boat." We are sending Bro. Baugher an extra number of last week's Sun in which his article appeared, and we are of opinion if his erring and wayward brethren will read what he says on the other side they will be convinced, if they are open to conviction.

By the way, Bro. Baugher's church by a very decided majority refuses to accept his resignation and he is undecided yet as to what he shall do. Other inviting calls await him if he declines to remain where he is. Put this down to Bro. Baugher's credit that he is a devout man, and full of zeal.

—Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Murray of Greensboro have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Pauline, to Mr. Dwight M. Davidson, Gibsonville, Wednesday A. M., July 12, Midway Presbyterian Church, Greensboro. We appreciate being remembered with an invitation and hasten our hearty congratulations to "Dwight," a splendid fellow with successful business position, experience, and ability.

NEWS ITEMS.

—Ex-President Díaz of Mexico is reputed to be worth $20,000,000. Still the old man says Mexicans are a very ungrateful people.

—Of the eleven hundred prisoners in the United States prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, forty are bankers—or were bankers before donning the stripes.

—Danville, Va., suffered a severe wind, rain and hail storm last Sunday, inflicting property loss to possibly $200,000, and working much inconvenience to traffic and travel in the city.

—The Crop Reporter of the U. S. Department of Agriculture estimates that the wheat crop now being harvested will yield 724,291,857 bushels, an increase of 68,848,857 bushels over last year, and the largest crop ever produced.

—It is reported that Johnson, the colored pugilist champion, is in London with his white wife, his two large automobiles and chauffeur, and "is the lion of the hour" in the coronation ceremonies. Then London is hard up indeed to lionize something.

—Fifty French aeroplanists started out on a great flight (to London) from Vincennes last Sunday, and two were killed and one fatally injured within a few hours of the start. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" is a commandment those Frenchmen will not heed.

—Dr. Jowett, the great English preacher, lately imported to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, goes back to England to the coronation and as the personal guest of King George. Whereupon it may be remarked that King George will have some good company, for Dr. Jowett is one of the most consecrated and deeply spiritual preachers in all the world.

—The Charlotte Chronicle thus deposeth: "The French aviation sports always begin on Sunday and they are generally accompanied by a tragedy or a series of tragedies. Is there any significance in that?"

When an almost invariable consequent followed a constant antecedent in the olden days, the Romans usually wrote Post hoc, ergo propter hoc. Pity that the Gauls will not learn even from their erstwhile foes a fact or so.

—President and Mrs. Taft celebrated their silver wedding—the 25th anniversary of their marriage—at the White House June 19. About 12,000 invitations were sent out and about 5,000 people were present. This is the second celebration of the kind ever held at the White House and is said to have been the most brilliant social function ever held in Washington. The presents were almost numberless and many were very costly.

—From a recently published report of Trinity Parish, New York, we gather that Trinity is not only a church, the richest church in the world in fact, but a great corporation, property appraised at $13,693,500, not including any of the church buildings, chapels, schools and burial grounds not taxed, whose property value would be immense. Trinity's receipts last year amounted to $863,000, the expenses, however, being greater than the receipts.

THE SUMMER CAMPAIGN.

The campaign for students has already begun and is well under way. Many friends have been asked to send in lists of prospective students in their several communities and they are readily responding. Catalogues are being mailed to them and letters will be written. They will also be visited by one of our representatives, if possible. But while all this is to be done by the College authorities, the ultimate reason for their coming here next fall will be the influence brought to bear upon them in our behalf by these earnest, consecrated friends in the various localities of our brotherhood. If we shall work together for a large enrollment next year, there is no visible reason why we should not have it.

The professors will begin their work about the first of July. Prof. Lawrence has been granted relief from canvassing in order to permit him to teach English in Wooster University Summer School. Dr. Newman will need to conserve his strength to be able to do his class-room work this next year, and so he is relieved of systematic field work. He will, however, go out from time to time on special depositions, attend two Young People's Conventions, and assist in the office work in the absence of the President during the month of July. Prof. A. Ligette Lincoln is the office stenographer.

The field workers are as follows:

Dr. W. C. Wicker, Eastern North Carolina Conference South of Raleigh and Eastern Carolina.

Prof. N. F. Brammox, Eastern North Carolina Conference not covered by Dr. Wicker and portions of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

Prof. T. C. Amick, Western North Carolina Conference and part of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and other points in the Methodist Protestant Church.

Mr. R. A. Campbell, Valley Virginia-Central Conference, if he can arrange his business engagements satisfactorily.

W. A. Harper, Eastern Virginia Conference and Alamance and Guilford Counties.

Will the friends please extend to these workers for Elon the accommodations and courtesies and genuine sympathetic helpfulness that have been afforded them these twenty-one years? We feel sure they will and we shall hope for large and satisfactory results from the united and co-operative efforts of the College representatives and the brethren in our local churches. In this common work, of interest to every individual member of the church, we shall hope to have, as we feel we shall, the loyal support and sympathetic co-operation of every one.

RESOLUTIONS.

"It is with profound regret that we have been called upon to consider and finally grant the resignation of Dr. E. L. Moffitt as President of the College; but it is a source of pleasure that his resignation came from no suggestion of the College authorities or constituency, but as a consequence of his own physical condition and voluntary choice in what seems to be personal interest.

His incumbency of the office of President for six years has had the loyal support of the Board, the Faculty, and the Church, and this is a source of satisfaction as he retires from this high and important position; and we wish to assure Dr. Moffitt of our sincere regard for him personally, for his work officially, and for his deep interest in the Institution during his Presidency, and his expressed and continued interest upon his retirement from office.

Our appreciation of his services, our regard for his family and our regret at separation fill us with feelings of mingled sorrow and satisfaction, and we hereby make record of our sincere and continued interest in their future well-being and welfare."

The above is a copy of the resolution adopted unanimously by the Board of Trustees of Elon College upon the retirement of Dr. E. L. Moffitt as president of said college, June 6, 1911.

 * OUR YOUNG PEOPLE. *

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

ADIEU, KIND FRIENDS, ADIEU.

Notice of my resignation as editorial and corresponding secretary of the Young People's General Convention appeared in The Sun last week and was mailed to all members of the Executive Board. My resignation could be accepted at once, and so I close my work in the capacities mentioned above. I am under lasting obligation to the Executive Committee for their prompt action in this matter and I feel that this promptness is wholesome for the work at this time.

In severing my relationship officially with the Young People's General Convention, I wish to state that I have enjoyed the work that I have been enabled to do and shall be glad to be of what service I can for the furtherance of the cause the Convention represents. If we can make this work go, and we can, then the future of our church and all her enterprises is luminous with hope and promise. We must reach the young people, if we would save the world. This we all realize and that is why I have such supreme confidence in the ultimate progress of the young people's work.

I wish to thank every one who during the past two years has prayed for the success of the department committed to my care and direction, every one who sent in any word of news, every one who has contributed towards its success financially, every one who has replied to the requests for information which were from time to time sent out, every one who has said a word of appreciation of the efforts that were being put forth. I appreciate these things far more than I can say.

With best wishes for the success of the work in my successor's hands, and confidence of its continued enlargement and assurances of fidelity and loyalty to the cause in whatever way I may serve it, I must say, adieu, kind friends, adieu.

W. A. Harper.

THE DEPARTMENT'S NEW EDITOR.

It gives me great pleasure to learn that Mr. Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C., has been elected as editorial and corresponding secretary of the Young People's General Convention to fill the vacancy made by my resignation. I feel that the Executive Board have been most fortunate in their choice, and that the new editor will be able to carry forward the work to great and permanent success.

Mr. Hines is eminently qualified to fill this position. He had a thorough literary training in Elon College and took his law course at the University of North Carolina. He has had wide experience in a journalistic way, having been city editor of the Greensboro Daily News, Editor of the Lumberton Robesonian, correspondent for his city of several great dailies, and contributor of many excellent articles to The Christian Sun. Mr. Hines has won distinction as a lawyer, and is now Associate Justice of the Municipal Court of his city. As a Sunday school and Christian Endeavor worker he needs no commendation from me. He is frequently in attendance on the sessions of our various Church organizations and prominent in their councils. Mr. Hines wields a facile pen and writes straight from the shoulder. We shall expect his department to be fragrant, fresh, luminant always and instructive.

I bespeak for him the same hearty cooperation which the brethren have so kindly shown me and congratulate the Church at large in being able to secure the services of a man so peculiarly fitted for the task of carrying forward this important work. I pledge you, Brother Hines, my heartiest and most heart-felt support in all the great achievement I am free to predict for your administration of the work you have so wisely been called to perform and inspire.

W. A. Harper.

NEW EDITOR'S STATEMENT.

I know not why the lot fell upon me when the executive committee was confronted with the duty of electing another editor of this department and corresponding secretary of the Young People's Convention. Were it a new position, I would then undertake the work with misgivings; but when we have had such a pace-maker as Professor Harper, who has just been elected president of Elon College, the task is all the more difficult. His unbounded interest, energy, and enthusiasm are a combination not seen in many. Indeed, Elon's gain is this department's loss.

I am not insensible to the compliment the executive committee has paid me, but I feel even more keenly the opportunity and responsibility that have come upon me. Better than promises now will be hard work and success in the place to which I have been called. I shall do my best, and that is the only promise I have for you. The work is not mine, but ours; the responsibility rests also upon you. If the cause prosper it will be because I have your interest, your assistance and your prayers; if it fail, you, too, must share the blame.

Charles A. Hines.

NEW SOCIETY AT McCULLER'S.

A letter from Brother Sam. M. Burritt, of Raleigh, tells of the organization of a new society of Christian Endeavor at McCuller's, with the following officers: T. H.

Banks, President; Leon Stephenson, vice-President; Miss Vivian Stephenson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Harriet McCuller, secretary and treasurer;—all of Raleigh, R. F. D. No. 3. Several enthusiastic young people have become members, and we predict a going society among these good people.

Brother Burritt is raising money to buy Bibles for those in the State prison at Raleigh, and is meeting with encouragement. He has already purchased 75, and others will be provided soon. He is doing a good work, and it is such loyal people as he that encourages others in the Master's work.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JULY 2—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

BY CHARLES A. HINES.

Scripture: Esther 4:1-17.

This is a Patriotic Consecration Meeting. It has been truly said, "Make a man a Christian and you make him a good citizen." The good and faithful church member or the Christian Endeavorer should be always ready to serve his country.

The majority of people in the United States are moral people. While the church does not have a majority in membership, it has a majority of sympathizers. If immorality openly exists or is carried on in the open, it is because church members are not doing their duty.

Many people still live with the idea deep-rooted in their minds that if they go to church on Sunday, and live reasonably clean lives in the week they have done all that God expects. I have no sympathy with this kind of religion. I believe that negative religion is just what it purports to be—nothing represented by .000.

Church members and Christian Endeavorers must do something positive. Some of the ways of serving one's country are at the ballot box, in civic organizations, in moral movements, in local option fights, for better sanitation, more schools, cleaner public shows, vaudeville and theatre attractions.

The Southern people are moving in this direction. Saloons are gone, and the result was brought about by the church members and the good women of our Southland. Other questions must be solved—our theatrical attractions must be improved, the "blind tiger" must go, the public dance hall must be closed, the pool room must be shut up, or the game lifted from its bad surroundings.

When you compare them closely you will find that work for the country is work for church, and vice versa. The week-day work of the church member is to be a good citizen, a charitable man, one who lifts up the fallen brother, who helps to make better his neighborhood, his town and his State.

Illuminating Illustrations.

When a foreign visitor to an ancient city remarked that the city was without walls he was answered: "But we are walled. The citizens are the walls; every man is a brick."

Are you a brick? If so, are you in your place; are you where you can be of service? If you are not where you can ward off the blow of the enemy, if you are of no service to your country, you are not a brick.

"Nobody has any right to find life uninteresting or unrewarding who sees a wrong that he can help to remedy or an evil within himself that he can hope to overcome."

In an address made at Greensboro a few years ago Mr. Bryan, the famous orator, said: "No man is great on account of any office he has held, by reason of any honor that has been conferred upon him; he is great because he has done something for humanity. A hundred years from now we shall not be remembered by what the world has done for us, but by what we have done for the world."

Do not think that being a soldier is the only way of serving your country, or war the only opportunity of service. As Carlyle says, "It is not the manner of death, but the cause for which a man dies, that makes him a martyr." There are hundreds of ways in which one can serve his country, or his neighbor (for both are the same) without going to war. This thought is very prettily expressed by Joaquin Miller in a famous poem:

"The bravest battle that ever was fought!
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not,

'Twas fought by the mothers of men."

And again:

"O ye with banners and battle-shot
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Are fought in these silent ways."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

The Young People's Convention of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference met here on Wednesday night, June 7th, in its twentieth annual session. President, J. C. Bradford, presiding.

The Convention organized as follows:

President, J. C. Bradford.

Vice-President, Rev. L. G. Lassiter.

Secretary, S. W. Lincoln.

Assistant Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes.

Treasurer, L. S. Rhodes.

J. C. Bradford delivered the Welcome Address, extending a hearty welcome to all who might attend the Convention. Rev. A. W. Andes responded in a very happy manner.

Next came the Annual Address which was delivered by Rev. W. T. Walters, of Winchester. Bro. Walter's subject was, "The Child and His Environment," and his address was an admirable one.

At the close of the Annual Address the Convention adjourned to meet on Thursday morning.

Reports were read from the following Sunday schools: Antioch, Linville, Bethlehem, Concord, Palmyra, Beulah, Mt. Olivet in Rockingham, Leaksville, Timber Ridge, City of Winchester, Wood's Chapel, New Hope. The reports were interesting, and the Convention had reason to feel encouraged.

Seven Sunday schools were not represented and no reports presented. This is to be regretted, of course. We sincerely hope that every Sunday school, Christian Endeavor Society, and missionary society within the bounds of the Convention will be represented at our next session.

The Standing Committees submitted well-written reports, which were discussed and adopted.

The sessions of the Convention were well attended, visiting brethren from the United Brethren Church and the Church of the Brethren were helpful to the Convention, and their presence and good words were very much appreciated.

The Standing Committees are as follows: Normal and Teacher Training, Miss H. C. O. Martz, Miss Nettie Johnston, Miss Lucy Snapp.

Organized Classes, S. W. Lincoln, Mrs. J. S. Davis, J. W. Tate.

Home Department, Mrs. W. T. Walters, L. S. Rhodes, E. L. Louderback.

Cradle Roll, Mrs. Alice A. Lincoln, Mrs. Ida E. Wampler, Mrs. Mary E. Grove.

Missions, Samuel Earman, Roy Rothgeb, C. D. Maphis.

Christian Endeavor, W. C. Wampler, Miss Ruby Martz, R. A. Larrick.

Program Committee, Rev. R. L. Williamson, J. C. Bradford, S. W. Lincoln, Rev. W. T. Walters, Rev. A. W. Andes.

The adjournment of the Convention on Friday afternoon ended one of the best sessions since the organization. The Convention meets next year at Palmyra Christian Church, Shenandoah County, Va., on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, 12-14th of June, 1912.

In the office where I daily (except Sunday) write freight bills, search and keep records of freight received and forwarded, hangs a calendar that bears a very beautiful picture: not the fancy picture of a young maiden, or the gorgeous view of the sun-set. Not a picture of the rainbow with its colors magnificently painted by Nature's hand from the sparkles of an evening sun. Not the flutter and dazzle of November's gauzy robes, or the awakening of the spring on a May morning. Not even the view of the "old mill," or the harvest with its ripest and most delicious fruits. But a simple, plain, and neat bed room where two little girls are kneeling in prayer at the retiring hour. The mother is seen bending her head with the little ones as they seem to say the simple, "I lay me down to sleep." In this same office I have another picture bearing the fancy face of a young girl. By these two pictures I have found out some things about strangers as they would chance to be about. I make it a rule to ask people which of the two they admire the more. Do not understand me to say that the picture of a beautiful young woman is not admirable, but so many people can not see the beauty in a picture like the one I have tried to mention.

But there is no better place to say a word concerning the influence of pictures. The slow and stagnant stream has a tendency to make us feel sick, dull and stupid. Just the opposite—a clear swiftly gliding stream gives us new life and makes one long to bathe in its crystal current. The picture of a valiant soldier hanging upon the wall causes the youth of that home to talk and long to ride away on a fleet-footed horse to be the captain of the army. The picture of an abundant harvest portraying all the choicest fruits and provisions of the farm, makes the farmer try to imitate the scene on his own farm.

Knowing that these are facts and figures, how important it is to select only that which will have a tendency to elevate to place before the ever watchful eye of the youth. It is easier to teach than to unteach; better to conform than have to reform.

Let us again consider the picture of the children saying their prayers. When we weigh its true worth, place upon it the price offered for such, glance for one time at its beauty and taste of its sweetness, the artist's brush has failed to paint its equal. The poet cannot sing a greater song, or frame words to tell of its glory. How tender and prayerful the child really is! No cares, trials, struggles or misfortunes. Always wearing a sunny face and knows nothing of the deep grudges of sin and Satan. The child is always open for instruction, ready, willing and glad to grasp something to lift it up or for its own downfall, hence the great importance of placing the right example before it.

The other day I was trying to think how gentle, meek and Christ-like the child is. I drew in my mind a picture of fifty children, both boys and girls, out for miles from any grown person. Then I tried to imagine one of the number very sick and the others bending over it in sympathy and toil to give it relief. But nothing that the little hands could do would stay the disease. So it died. Not a minister to comfort the broken-hearted; not a carpenter or workman to make a coffin; not a strong hand to sink a spade deep into mother earth to make the final resting place; no organ to sound the sweet notes of hope; no one to preach the funeral or guide the work in our usual form. But only weeping children with tender hearts broken and shattered to pieces, yet willing and ready to put forth the last effort to place their loved one where it would be protected, and where they could daily shed their tears over the simply made mound. Then I imagined these little ones as they wept together, comforting and giving each other consolation by their tender embrace, placing together with careful hands the boards to make the little casket to shield the little one from the cold earth, swift hands lifting the dirt that was being made wet by their tears to make room for their little casket, quietly getting ready to bury their dead with greater love and sympathy than ever was known. Every flower placed with a gentle hand while its foliage revived from the constant dropping of tears from the one who so carefully placed it. Then I imagined the night as it came, finding the stillest and quietest village under the blue canopy of heaven.

Show me that home where only pictures of worth and beauty hang, where the name of God is used only to teach of His goodness, mercy and love, but ever remembering Him as just, and I will show you in a few brief years the fruits of it. The children of such a home will be found standing at the head of the Sunday school, standing at the head of the church affairs, telling to the world the love of a dying Savior, lifting up the fallen and sin-cursed world to plains of safety. Yes, an honor to this nation of ours.

"Backward, turn backward, oh, time, in your flight,

Make me a child again, just for tonight.
Come back, mother, from that echoless shore,

Take me to thy heart as of yore."

C. B. Riddle.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Things on the Hill have become very quiet and dignified since the gay and joyous commencement throng took its departure. A few visitors are yet in the village and add to the social life of the community in various ways, but in a few days they too will have gone and the college will have settled down for the warm summer months.

The president's office is very busy just at this time, getting things in line for the summer's work. It is too early yet to predict on the results in the way of attendance next year, but it looks good even now to those on the inside. Requests for catalogues and other information looking to entrance here in the fall are daily coming in, and with all the prospects seem bright.

The new catalogue for 1911 and announcements for 1912 are now ready for distribution. It contains 112 pages and gives all necessary information respecting costs, equipment, advantages, etc. It shows enrollment in all departments last year of 240.

The Executive Board of the Board of Trustees of the college will hold a meeting here on Tuesday next, to dispose of certain routine matters which the Board of Trustees were unable to attend to at their recent session. The members of this Board are Dr. R. M. Morrow and Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, Mr. Kemp B. Johnson, Raleigh, Rev. J. W. Wellons and Dr. G. S. Watson of this place.

His many friends at Elon, where his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Boone, still live, were glad to note the honor and distinction recently conferred on Dr. W. H. Boone in his election as Health Officer of the city of Durham. Dr. Boone graduated from the college with the class of '94, and then pursued his medical course to completion and has since been practicing medicine with success.

Mr. S. C. Harrell, of the class of '09, who for the past two years has been teaching at Holland, Va., has been elected to a position as instructor in Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, which is the leading college in the north eastern section of that state.

Mr. W. H. Fleming, of Burlington, N. C., manager of the baseball team for next year.

Very stringent regulations for inter-collegiate athletics have been adopted by the Faculty, approved by the Trustees, and accepted in good faith by the Athletic Association. Mr. Fleming will do his very best to put them in operation and see to it that the college has nothing but clean athletics, and no hired men or professionals whatever.

W. A. Harper,

Correspondent.

Little Oscar Atkinson has been very sick, but is now improving.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln and Prof. Lincoln are still visiting at Dr. Moffitt's. Mrs. Lincoln has been indisposed the past few days.

Prof. Lawrence left Saturday for Wooster, Ohio, where on the 20th he begins his work as English teacher of that institution's summer school. It is needless to say the English will be well taught. This is one of the largest summer schools of the Middle West, last year's enrollment being nearly 2,000.

The officers of the summer Sunday school are J. C. McAdams, superintendent; Miss Myrtle Cox, secretary; W. L. Noah, treasurer; Mrs. J. L. Foster, organist; Mrs. J. W. Patton, assistant organist.

The officers of the "C. B. C." Organized Bible Class for the vacation are: president, J. P. Huffman; vice-president, J. C. McAdams; secretary, Mrs. W. A. Harper; treasurer, W. T. Noah; organist, Mrs. J. P. Huffman; Committee Chairmen, Mrs. O. B. Williams, Mrs. W. L. Smith, and Uncle Wellons; teacher, Mrs. J. U. Newman; assistant teacher, O. B. Williams.

Mrs. Sue Jones was called to Middleburg on Saturday by the serious illness of her brother-in-law, Mr. Crocker. Her daughter, Mrs. R. J. Kernodle left for Durham Monday, where Mr. Kernodle is engaged in the undertaking business. We regret very much to lose these friends from our citizenship.

Mr. W. L. Tate, our most aged citizen, had the misfortune to fall and hurt himself last week and is now confined to his bed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hobby and Dr. McCullers were pleasant visitors at Dr. Atkinson's Sunday.

Prof. A. Ligette Lincoln is acting as stenographer in the office this vacation as last. His qualifications for the position are well known.

The local graded school is enlarging and improving, we understand. It has been decided, subject of course to the approbation of county school board, to add a new room and a new teacher. Mrs. W. L. Smith has been re-elected principal, in which capacity she served so successfully last year.

The students, alumni, ministers, and friends generally are rallying finely to the College in its endeavor to get students here next fall. Nearly every mail brings several lists of prospects. Friends, keep this up and speak personally to those whose names you send in and we shall have a large enrollment next year.

Dr. Moffitt is getting his furniture ready for shipment soon. We understand that the Doctor and his family will go to Harrisonburg, Va., for a few days' much needed rest before moving to Asheboro. We certainly are sorry to lose these friends and leaders from our midst.

His Elon friends will be glad to learn that Rev. S. C. Harrell is elected as teacher in Defiance College, Ohio, for next year.

Miss Maggie Iseley represented Elon in the Y. W. C. A. meeting of ten days' duration at Asheville and returned home on Tuesday, having reported a very pleasant and profitable trip.

Mr. W. T. Noah has been elected Mayor for the time of Mayor Lawrence's absence in Ohio.

My Dear Children and Friends:—

We are in the midst of wheat harvest and can secure only fragments of time of men to help harvest. Our wheat is cut off greatly because of the dry weather—it's simply dead. We had hoped for 350 bushels, but the reduction is so great we cannot place anything like a correct estimate.

We are still so dry that we cannot break our land to plant nearly one-half our corn. We regret this delay, but cannot help it. We have set out 4,000 potato slips this week—making about 15,000 out to date. Our entire crop is greatly held back because of the awfully dry spell.

We are glad to acknowledge the following donations:

Bro. W. H. Young, Durham, N. C., $1.00 for treat to the children, and they greatly appreciate such kind acts.

Proximity Manufacturing Co., Greensboro, N. C., 300 yards of cloth for our "farmer-boys'" overalls; and the girls say "they are going to make them some skirts of it also." This is a liberal donation, and the goods give us the best satisfaction of any we have used. We tried to buy this goods, but the kind-hearted men who own and run the mill—the Messrs. Cone—will not accept any pay, and ship with the compliments of the company. In behalf of our orphans we thus publicly acknowledge so liberal a gift and express our deep gratitude for the same.

The Foster Shoe Company of Burlington, N. C., also recently gave us 32 pairs of white canvass and white kid slippers, all sizes; so that our smallest and largest girls have white slippers. Mrs. Foster will select some to keep so as to be ready in dress for entertainments from time to time in which she might desire to have some special costume for the girls; others will be put into regular service. Again we publicly acknowledge the liberality of the Foster Shoe Company to us, who so often have given us shoes, hats, caps, socks, shirts, etc. We are grateful, gentlemen, at all times for your kind consideration.

Miss Annie Bagwell, Durham, N. C., one pillow.

Mrs. Sue Jones, Elon College, N. C., one pair shoes, one pair slippers.

Fleming and Ella Hilliard, Goldleaf, Va., 25 stamped envelopes and 25 stamped post cards for the children.

To each of these kind donors we express our sincere thanks for the gifts and wish for them much pleasure in the giving.

Though our finance is a little short this week, our donations are liberal and we are profoundly grateful for each expression of sympathy for the orphans and our work.

We would be so grateful if our pastors would heed the earnest request which we have so often made and give their congregations an opportunity to help us just now. We earnestly plead for your co-operation to cancel our indebtedness.

Yours for work,

Uncle Jim.

Henderson, N. C., June 13, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Enclosed you will find our dues for May and June. Since our last writing we have had measles, and I tell you we were certainly sick. We don't want any more measles, and we are very glad we can't have it but once. After we got well we went to the country visiting relatives, and stayed a week. We had a nice time.

With love from

Archie Newman and Wallace Newman.

P. S. I forgot to tell you that today is my birthday. I am 9 years old.

I was born on Friday (called an unlucky day) and 13 is also called an unlucky number. But I hope I will not be an unlucky boy.

Wallace.

You must make it a lucky day and number, Wallace, by being a good energetic boy and man. I am sure you will.

Boykins, Va., June 5, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Mama isn't feeling so very well today.

but I ask her to write for little buddie and me and send our dues for this month. I hope I may some day write for myself, and then I won't have to bother mama to write for me. I am quite small yet a while, but I like to listen to mama read the little cousins' letters just the same, and we have a little cousin every week from the Orphanage to write and tell us the news. I think that is so nice. I enclose dime for each of us. Love to you and the cousins.

Your little boys,

Carroll and Ralph Barnes.

Thanks, dear boys. I am sure mama does not mind writing until you are able to write for yourselves.

Elon College, N. C., June 15, 1911.

Dear Cousins:—It falls to me to write to The Sun this week. I am a boy fifteen years old. I have a cow to milk and attend to; her name is Mam Tildy. She is a very good cow, and gives nearly two gallons of milk a day. We have been cutting wheat today, and I have been shocking it. We have three little new calves at the barn. We have eight cows giving milk, and we get a right good quantity of milk, so Mr. Foster got us a three-gallon ice-cream freezer so we have cream often now, as the ice is the only expense. My! but it's good! Well, I will close, hoping you all will enjoy my short letter.

From Herbert Womack.

Roxboro, N. C., May 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Here is another dime grandma gave me. I am back in Roxboro after a lovely four weeks' visit to Oxford, Franklinton, and Suffolk. I weighed 30 lbs. in Suffolk, and cut both stomach teeth there. The last one made me sick.

My last letter stopped at Christmas, so I will now begin there. Mother and the ladies in the hotel decorated my first Christmas tree. Grandma had already sent me a chair for a Christmas present, so after breakfast Christmas morning I was placed in my chair and the tree was brought in from the hall and placed in the center of the room. The ladies and the servants were present and all received presents. I was so happy when the candles were lighted and the presents were distributed. One lady said, "You have the manners of a baby," because I was so delighted with the red automobile and little blue man. Miss Elma Featherston gave me that. It was one hour before I would notice another gift. Then there were balls, mittens, picture hooks, hand embroidered pillow cases, etc., and even a pretty fire engine. I tell you "Ellie" was pleased because I was so proud of the "mo."

Dec. 26, the doctor said my lungs were healed sufficiently to start to grandma's the next morning, if the weather was fair. The morning dawned warm and bright, so we went to the station, where mother remembered I had had no breakfast. Dada sent the driver back to the hotel for my milk. The train arrived before the milk did, but the man outran the train and handed the little bucket up to Dada. Mama improvised a bottle with a nipple and the top to my thermos bottle. I had my last osteopathic treatment when we went through Durham.

In Raleigh mama went up to King Crowell's and bought me another bottle and had it sterilized. I enjoyed milk then. We reached Youngsville on the Shoo Fly. We went to Grandpa Cheatham's, and had a nice time with Claude, Susan and Winston. Winston tried to take away my bottle of milk. He seemed to think it was his. I wasn't used to children, and looked at him in amazement when he took anything away from me.

The next morning Grandpa and Grandma came up to Youngsville in the buggy, and sent the carriage for us. I arrived asleep, and Aunt came running out to get me. I believe it is always Aunt who runs out first for me. On awaking, I started to cry, but was soon pacified and had Christmas all over again—many pretty cards, tenpins, cap strings, ball attached to a cup, a cute doll in rompers, from Grandma, named Baby Bumps, music box from Boston, a red drum and a $5 gold piece from Grandpa, and a velvet kitty from Aunt Wil, who wrote that I could pull its tail all I wanted to and it would not scratch me. Also a white climbing bear and I thoroughly enjoyed seeing him climb the tall pole, but was afraid to touch him. I can't bear cotton, feathers, or anything soft. If I see a feather or piece of cotton on the floor I point to it and call some one and say, "bop bar," for them to throw it in the slop jar.

Last summer I used to sit in my coach and beat a pan with clothes pins or field peas, and grandpa said he would give me a drum Christmas, so you see he is a man of his word.

Uncle John Cook sent me some pretty red stockings and a dear pair of little red bedroom slippers. Aunt gave me a rattle and a nickel plate, and she and Bill each gave me 50c. Bill's card was original as usual. She also gave me a laundry bag with a little boy and two ducks stenciled on it. Her card said that the bag was to inspire me with cleanliness in life as well as neatness in person and the money was to inspire me always to add to and never diminish my present bank account. Bill is a bird anyway. She pretends she doesn't care much about me, and I begin to love her and beg her to hold me. Perhaps we are both pretending. She had me Christmas and kept trying to put me down, and Aunt and Grandpa wanted me, but I wouldn't leave Bill. Finally they showed me a picture in a magazine and won me.

Sam Winston lent me his rocking horses and I had a fine time in them.

I caught a little fresh cold before reaching Grandpa's and made my cough worse. Grandpa said I was the best sick boy he ever saw. I was better before returning to Roxboro January 9.

Mother let me crawl across Grandma's room once to great-grandma to show them I could crawl. I can say many words now, and can pull up by chairs, open bureau drawers, climb upon beds and people.

Love to all,

William Staley Cheatham.

You are a fortunate little fellow, Wm. Staley, to be a boy among so many girls. Be sure they do not spoil you.

DIED.

Watson.

One of the saddest deaths in this community in many years occurred on Wednesday morning of the gala commencement season, when Miss Ellen Watson, second daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. S. Watson, passed from her suffering tenement of clay to the life beyond. Miss Watson was in the prime of youth and joyous young womanhood. She had been sick for nearly two years and everything possible had been done by loving hearts and skilled hands to relieve her sufferings and restore her health. About three months ago it became evident that she could not recover and she has been desperately ill from that time until the day of her death. Her leave-taking was most beautiful and impressive, for having assured her fond relatives and friends who frequented her bedside that she was ready and anxious to go, she fell on sleep.

Miss Watson was a student in Elon College and completed the Junior year in the literary department and did exceptionally fine work also in the commercial department. Before her sickness she was the able private secretary to the editor of the Christian Sun, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D.

The funeral exercises were conducted from her late residence by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, her pastor, and Rev. J. W. Weltons, her co-pastor. The exercises connected with the funeral were grand in their simplicity and most impressive. Miss Watson leaves father and mother, two sisters, and a brother, besides a host of more distant relatives and friends to sorrow over her departure, but to rejoice at the same time over her gain.

The pall bearers were: Mr. Liggett Lincoln and Mr. R. H. Barnes of the city, Prof. Lucius Lincoln of Charlotte Court House, Va., Rev. A. T. Banks, McCullers, N. C., Mr. R. A. Campbell, Hagerstown, Md., Mr. E. T. Hines, McCleansville, N. C., Mr. C. C. Howell, Branford, Fla., and Prof. S. M. Atkinson, Meridian, Miss., all of whom were intimate friends and associates of the deceased. The remains were laid to rest in the Elon College Cemetery. W. A. Harper.

Walker.

Irma Grey Walker, nee Miss Dameron, wife of Chas. H. Walker, died June, 2nd, 1911, at her home in Burlington, N. C., aged 25 years, 2 months and 4 days. They were united in marriage Oct. 24th, 1906, and to them were born two children. One child, an infant, preceded mother to the grave. She leaves a devoted husband and one child who mourn very deeply for wife and mother.

In early life she confessed Christ, and in the language of her mother, "She has been a bright and shining light ever since." She was a consistent and devoted member of the Christian Church, Burlington, N. C. She was fond of the church services and true to her duties in all the walks of life.

The funeral services were conducted from the home, June 4, 1911, by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hornaday; and the interment was made in Pine Hill Cemetery. The attendance was very large, and the floral tributes were many and beautiful.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

P. H. Fleming.

Golladay.

Brother Perry Golladay was born June 4th, 1836, died June 7th, 1911. He leaves waiting on the shores of time eight children: Wm. Homer, Jacob Perry, Charles, Robert, John Edward, Derrick Casper, and Russell Golladay, and Mrs. Gertie Meyers. His wife and three daughters had crossed the river before. For more than twenty years he had been a consistent member of Concord Christian Church, from which church funeral services were conducted, and his body laid to rest, to await the call to immortal life. May the Comforter be with the bereaved ones in this time of sadness.

R. L. Williamson.

Wood.

Albrou Alfred Wood died at the Rex Hospital, Raleigh, May 20, 1911, aged 45. He was a member of the Christian Church and Odd Fellows' Order. Funeral services were conducted from the Hillsboro Street Christian Church, Sunday, May 20, by the pastor of the church, assisted by the Order of Odd Fellows. He leaves a wife and five children who have the sympathy of the church and a large circle of friends.

Pastor.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Henderson Letter.

Since the Annual Conference in November the indebtedness on our church property has been reduced something over $200. Recently our church roof has been painted by the Sunday-school and the town council has voted to lay a brick walk in front of the church. The bricks are already hauled. Last winter the congregation at preaching service ran some higher than ever before. The Sunday-school under the leadership of Bro. O. W. Mayo, is doing good work. A home department of 20 members and a cradle roll of 16 have been added. The C. E. Society had a larger attendance than usual at their last meeting. We have had no series of meetings this spring, but hope to hold some in fall. I rejoice with Bros. Bryaut, Johnson, Cox and Smith in their good meetings.

Mrs. Newman has recently been kindly remembered by the ladies of the church in the way of a handsome suit, for which she feels very grateful. The children have also been remembered in a similar way.

Liberty (Vance).

The Sunday-schools, under the management of Brother E. M. Newman, both at the church and school-house have been doing grand work; but greatly hindered of late by small-pox in the community. Last third Sunday we had no service at the church. Rev. W. G. Clements was in the community in the interest of Chapel Hill work. He preached at Henderson at night. His sermon was clear, logical, and full of spiritual food. It was indeed a spiritual uplift to have for two days in my home and field a man so deeply spiritually minded and so thoroughly consecrated to the cause. Recently the Liberty brethren have purchased nine-tenths of an acre of land at a cost of $125.00. This makes four acres now owned for church and cemetery purposes.

Fullers.

Here we have been somewhat disappointed in not beginning the work of rebuilding as the present church is wholly inadequate for average congregations. The annual protracted meeting will begin second Sunday in July. Dr. W. T. Herndon is expected to be with us. We are expecting a good meeting as Dr. Herndon is held in high regard by the people and is one of the best revivalists in the Southern Christian Convention.

Virgilina.

The past year has been the best of a six years' pastorate. At four different meetings since last revival season members have been received. The first Sunday in June was our annual memorial day. Rev. T. B. Hill of the Baptist Church delivered the address and it was a very able one. Through the kindness of Miss Anna Apt a nice program was rendered in the afternoon. These annual memorial services, I believe, are beneficial to the church and community. The occasion itself is fruitful of good impressions, especially on the minds of the young. Then, too, there is created a pride in the cemetery which results in neater kept grounds.

Liberty (Halifax).

This church was organized last Nov. with 16 members. One has been added since. I preach here on fifth Sundays and Saturdays before in a school-house. A Sunday-school has been organized with fifty members. Brother Johnnie Bray is Supt. Two acres of land have been deeded to the church as a gift from two ladies of the church. Preparations are going on for building a neat frame structure to seat about two hundred people. We hope to have the building ready for holding services by the annual Conference. This church is in a thickly settled community of prosperous people and three miles distant from the nearest church. There is need for a church and it seems more fitting that the church should be of the Christian denomination.

The Last Ball—Ether Christian Church.

On the 4th day of last August I organized a Christian Church in the town of Ether, N. C. Prof. W. P. Lawrence of Elon College assisted this church and wrote an interesting description of it for the Sun, its needs and hopeful future, and asked for donations, but not a penny was received. I have written four appeals for help for this worthy little church of some 36 or 38 members. I received answers from Sister George Dunn, Sister Nannie Hawkins, Bro. L. M. Clymer and Bro. K. B. Johnson, which were turned over to Bro. H. Freeman on the day of the organization. Our next session of the Western North Carolina Conference is to convene with this church next Nov. We have a debt of about $350.00 to meet, and the vaulted ceiling to put in, paint, bell, some chairs and some other work. We want to dedicate this house to the service of God, and we cannot do this with this debt on it and the house not finished up. Dear friends and lovers of the Christian Church, you, one and all who can, will you please be so kind and help us in this hour of need and embarrassment? I wish you really understood the situation and sacrifices made by this good people. I ask friends in all Christian conferences to respond to this. Our good people of N. C. have responded liberally to the worthy calls of Smithfield and Portsmouth, Va. and there are many good people in Va. who are able and would help liberally if they truly understood the situation. There are many in North Carolina who would and should help this deserving people. You want to come to next conference. I want you to feel glad when you get there because you helped to build this house. If you have $10, you are planning to give to help in church building, send a part to this church. There are many who could send $5, a few who could send $10, and a great many who could send $1 each. Please send donations to Bro. H. Freeman, Ether, N. C., treasurer of building committee. S. B. Klapp.

Greensboro, N. C., June 14, 1911.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

Rev. B. F. Young and his North Highland people recently held a three weeks' tent meeting in conjunction with the North Highland Congregational Church. The meetings were well attended throughout. Bro. Young did most of the preaching, delivering some very strong sermons. Several members were received.

Last Sunday was a red-letter day with the Girard Church. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Milam, preached a special sermon to the Red Men at eleven o'clock. The discourse was greatly enjoyed. The congregation was unusually large, too large for the house. Bro. Milam reports a very fine service Sunday night.

The work on Rose Hill moves on at a normal gait, with increased interest along some lines. We have recently inaugurated the Home Department and Cradle Roll movements in our school. We expect great good to come to us as a result.

Our Sunday school spent last Thursday afternoon and evening at Wildwood Park in the eastern part of the city. All seemed to enjoy themselves.

A thing of unusual interest to many of the people here was an address last Saturday night by Hon. R. P. Hobson, on "Alcohol the Great Destroyer." Hobson may be a little visionary when it comes to the question of war, but he has some things to say about alcohol and the temperance question that every American citizen ought to hear. If you have an opportunity to hear him discuss the above subject, don't miss it. G. O. Lankford.

Salem Chapel.

Our second quarterly meeting has been held. There seemed to be more general interest in this church than since I became pastor. The last first Sunday was our memorial services. There was an unusually large congregation here. The attention was good, the music was splendid, and the basket dinner abundant. In the afternoon, the roll of the buried, two hundred and forty-two, was called by Bro. J. M. Marshall, and friends of the deceased tenderly responded when the names of some of their loved ones were called. This was a very interesting feature of the day. The roll of the dead would number nearly three hundred if all names could be known.

We have the best Sunday school that has been here for many years, with F. M. Samuel, Supt., and Miss Pattie Haizlip, Asst. Supt., with good teachers. The condition in some respects seems to be more hopeful than it has been in years in this church, so say some of its leading members. The pulpit and aisles are all nicely carpeted, the pews changed, and a nice Bible-stand ready to be put in, and much work done in the cemetery. There are great possibilities in this church. It is full of hopeful young people, upon whom we must depend for the church of the future.

Ingram, Va.

We have held our second quarterly meeting with this splendid church. The work here is always pleasant and satisfactory. The pastor has the full co-operation of the church. It is like unto deep water, it runs smoothly, and carries an unconscious influence for good. This is a devoted people to the church and its enterprises. The church in quarterly session decided to meet the Sunday school finances and let the Sunday school give its weekly offerings to the Orphanage. This church does its work as all ought to do. It meets its financial responsibilities monthly, thereby helping their pastor to live also, and by the end of the year the work is done. Some churches do not pay monthly, nor quarterly, and some are not very particular about paying annually. But this faithful church always pays in full and more too. What a noble people—and others can do as well if they will work like these good people.

Happy Home.

At our second quarterly meeting in May we had the largest congregation on Saturday I have ever seen at his church. The business of the church was done in love and harmony. On Sunday morning an immensely large congregation assembled for the memorial services. The music was most excellent, led by W. H. Davis with Miss Julia Hopper at the organ. Our congregations are always large in good weather. We have here one of the most interesting Sunday schools, with W. D. Wall Supt. and Bro. M. E. Lillard Asst. Supt. This is a large church and capable of doing great things, but like many other churches, but few have the burdens to bear. Yet we have some of the very best here.

New Center.

This is a most interesting little church. This is the home church of Prof. W. P. Lawrence, and it has more of the same kind of high toned Christian character. Here we have a good Sunday school with Bros. O. D. and T. W. Lawrence as leaders. We have good church music with a good choir of young people interested in the church and Sunday school. This is another little church that does its work as the time goes by. It has that spirit to "put not off until tomorrow the duties of today." This is a worthy example to any strong church.

Christian Union.

This is the smallest church I serve, and yet it has some of the very best of Christian people. This church for three years has gone through great reverses and much discouragement, while the faithful few are still going on with the work. They have their new house about finished up, all but painting. They now have a very nice little house of worship. I wish some big-hearted able person would feel it his duty to give us an organ for this worthy church. The memorial services were held here the fourth Sunday in May. The congregation was very large and we had to go into the large Baptist Church to preach the sermon. Here we had a union Sunday school in a good condition. This little church deserves much credit for what it has gone through with, and the sympathy of those who know the surroundings.

Keyser.

This is another good little church. I mean in membership, but a big-hearted people. I have been serving this church for five years, traveling 105 miles by railway to it, which makes it too expensive. This church gradually grows in interest. So far we have the sympathy and help of the Presbyterians and Baptists, who have been paying a good portion of my salary. The Sunday school is good, the young people are fully interested in the work. But it is hard to get the older people to see and believe that the Sunday school is good for them.

Rev. Ben J. Earp is my pulpit supply this year. He supplies in Keyser, New Center, and Christian Union. In all these churches he is spoken very highly of as a young preacher. My brother, P. T. Klapp, also supplied for me in Keyser. He was pastor here many years ago.

Ether.

I went to Esther the fourth Sunday evening in May to preach, administer the sacrament, and ordain Bro. Willie Freeman to the office of Deacon in this church. Bro. Freeman is a most exemplary Christian gentleman, and has the confidence of the people of that church. The Sunday school here is in a fine condition, with Bro. Hiram Freeman Supt. This is a good church, a worthy people, and leaders in good work. I feel a personal interest in this church, as I preached here while it was a mission point for quite awhile, and then organized this church. Rev. J. F. Morgan, the young pastor, is very popular there.

Smithwood.

I was at this church the second Sunday in June to administer the sacrament and to conduct the memorial services. They said the congregation was larger than usual. The services were solemn. The evening before a new grave had been made there. The ferns were abundant, and the music was the best I hear in any country church, and but few town churches can equal this. Prof. Fentriss has been teaching here for several years, and his work has not been in vain, for you will be charmed with the music. I love to visit this church. This is a good people, with open doors, big hearts and a warm welcome into their hospitable homes.

Rev. H. E. Truitt, the young pastor, is very popular. He is a great lover of good music—and musicians. Bro. Truitt supplied for me in Ingram, Va., the last second Sunday. My good people up there speak very kindly of him and very highly of his sermons.

OUR REFUGE AND OUR STRENGTH.

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Ps. 46:6. Golden Text for Sunday, July 2.

The lessons of the past quarter have traced one nation to its ruin. For two hundred and fifty years the ten tribes called Israel went from bad to worse in their course and career of sin and idolatry. Time and again were they warned, threatened and persuaded. All to none affect. Israel's kings were wicked and finally led their people to utter ruin and annihilation as a nation.

We turn now to observe the checkered career of a people who now feared and served God, and now disobeyed and rebelled against Him. Some of Judah's kings were good kings, and did what they could to teach, practice, and establish the religion of Jehovah worship. Great prophets sprang up amongst them and mighty men of God rise like mountains from the hills and valleys of Judah's uneven career. This series of lessons will trace this nation, the two tribes of Judah, to ultimate captivity and their carrying off into Babylon. But today a prophet is speaking. It was indeed a dark and gloomy time for the household of Judah. Assyria's king was strong and mighty, and he had already boasted of destroying Judah's strongholds and entering Jerusalem the sacred city and the capital of the nation. Hezekiah the king was doing all he could to defend himself and his people; but the day seemed dark and doubtful indeed.

Then came the good prophet Isaiah, and with patriotic zeal and a godly faith inspired the people to prayer, to praise, and to confidence.

It is our privilege to call on God and rejoice in Him in the day of our prosperity, health and happiness; but how very often in life does it occur that misfortune, fear, sickness, dread, threatened calamity must needs come to drive us to seek God and call upon Him.

And no one ever goes to God, it matters not how severe the calamity, how great the trouble, how terrible the distress that God does not hear and help. He indeed is our refuge and our strength.

There may seem to be strength in other sources; but it is only seeming. Riches, honor, fame, culture, prestige, place, may seem to give strength and afford refuge; but they do not. Those who would have real strength, and would find a sure and safe refuge, must seek and find both in God. He is the only real strength, the only sure and safe refuge. Every troubled soul can always find comfort, security, safety in Him. What a source of strength, what a safe refuge indeed He is.

BAPTISTS AND THE BIBLE.

The Baptists had a great meeting in Philadelphia last week, the Baptist World Alliance, in which many men of that faith and order foregathered from many quarters. It must have been a great, a very inspiring gathering, and we should like to have been there to have shared the inspiration and the enthusiasm of it.

But of the great speeches as reported in the daily despatches, there were certainly some very wild and erratic utterances. We suppose these were produced by the fervid heat and fire of numbers. For instance, Dr. Robertson, we presume of the faculty of the Baptist theological seminary of Louisville, is reported to have declared that it was no accident that the 300th anniversary of the King James Version and the 300th anniversary of the modern Baptist movement came at the same time, "because as soon as you give the Bible to the people they become Baptists."

Now the greatest difficulty we see with that statement is that it is purely selfish; and the second difficulty is that it is grossly and absolutely false and misleading. It assumes, and in fact, asserts, that Baptists only have an open Bible, and the liberty of private and personal interpretation. That would say that Christians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and others have not the open Bible nor the right to read and interpret for themselves.

Listen further at our Dr. Robertson: "Get an open Bible, an open mind, and their consciences in order, and people must become Baptists. If they don't there is something wrong with their consciences." We have not lived yet very long, but we do solemnly vow and aver that we have seen people with the open Bible, and they seemed to all appearances to have an open mind, and all who knew them would testify that their consciences were in order, and yet they were not Baptists. I do know that I have seen in my day some as loyal, faithful, devout, saintly men and women in other churches as in the Baptist; yet Dr. Robertson would rule them all out and declare before a great gathering of his peers that because they were not Baptists there was something wrong with their consciences.

No, Doctor, the world has gone too far for that. No one denomination has a corner or a monopoly on the virtue, the piety, the faith that is abroad in the land. And to claim that one denomination has this monopoly sounds like a voice, not from modern liberty of interpretation, but from medieval tyranny and oppression.

And this one word farther. We happen to know a people, a religious denomination in fact, who for more than a century has had the open Bible as its only rule of faith and practice, and in all these years has held and taught that each one may interpret this Book for oneself, and that this right of private judgment is a privilege that belongs to each and to all. Now, the peoples of this denomination may have something wrong with their consciences, if Dr. Robertson is to be their judge; and yet with this open Bible as their only and their sufficient creed, strange as it may seem to Dr. Robertson, they do not call themselves Baptists, nor does the world so call them.

KICKERS AND PULLERS.

R. S. Satterfield relates in a recent Homiletic the fact that, being reared on a farm, he had had all sorts of experiences with horses, some laughable, some painful; but one thing he always found true, namely, that no horse kicks and pulls at the same time. The horse first balks, and then goes to kicking. And as a pastor, Mr. Satterfield finds men and women very much like horses. Church members, he says, never kick and pull at the same time. They stop, refuse to pull—and then they kick.

We presume a similar experience has been the part of every pastor and church worker. There are kickers in the church, grumblers, growlers, fault finders. Nine times out of ten they have become indifferent, are doing nothing themselves, have balked, in fact; and now they are kicking. Keep your eye on the kickers, and see how much of the load they carry, how much of the burden they bear, how much of the real pulling they do.

Strange indeed it is that those who will not help will pull back, will kick, will themselves add to the load that the pullers are trying to carry.

Reader, if you won't pull and can't pull, be gracious and generous enough not to sulk, pull back, kick. Don't be a kicker. We have never yet seen anybody who loved for long and esteemed of much worth a kicking horse. Ditto of the kicking church member.

A CHRISTIAN KING.

We are glad to note from a pastoral letter issued by the Bishop of Durham, who attended King George V. on the right during the recent coronation, that the newly-crowned monarch is not only a Christian in name and by right of position, but in fact and reality, to all appearance and belief. We trust that the Bishop of Durham, who speaks from personal knowledge and acquaintance is correct, and that the destinies of England are to be in the hands of a man who loves, fears and serves Jehovah. The Bishop concludes his letter thus: "We humbly thank the Giver of all good that in our gracious King we have at the head of the State a Christian man, who sincerely and with conviction desires to live out that consecration" which his solemn coronation symbolized and emphasized.

LIFE AND LIVING.

We may get so busy earning a living that we will forget that we are living a life. It is not making a living that should concern us most. Living a life is the essential thing.

It is very easy to fill the hands so full that we leave the heart to become empty. An over-flowing hand from a shrunken and shriveled heart is a pitiable plight. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh and the hand worketh—or should do so. We may become so absorbed in our work that we forget our Creator, and quit His worship.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

The Quest of Happiness.

That neither money nor position can bring happiness is again emphasized in the announcement that the Duchess of Marlborough, formerly Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, in mad fret is shortly to quit England and return to this country to make her permanent home. Miss Vanderbilt's marriage to the Duke of Marlborough a few years ago was a widely-heralded event and was declared to be a real love match to a sure enough "Juke," with means and standing. And, forsooth, English royalty did receive the Duchess in good grace, the papers said, to such an extent in fact, that when King Edward and Queen Alexandra were crowned, the Duchess of Marlborough occupied the enviable social position of canopy bearer.

Since then domestic troubles have sprung up in the home of the former American heiress. She and her husband are not happy together. As a result the Duchess received only an indifferent invitation to the coronation of King George, and one which she refuses to accept. Here then was a woman with millions of money, of highest social rank, of personal charm and attainments. Yet her life is a bitter disappointment. Happiness is not without, but within, and he who would find it must look within.

Two of a Kind?

The eagle-eyed Charlotte Chronicle deposeseth:

"Had you noticed it? In that official portrait framed in heavy gilt—it was printed in Tuesday's Chronicle—His Majesty, King George V., is holding a cigarette between his fingers. The only wonder is that he didn't have his hair parted in the middle."

Yes, we had noticed it, and with somewhat of chagrin. If the king of England wants to smoke cigarettes, let him puff away, so far as we are concerned. But what his, or his press agents' object could have been in sending out that picture, to be seen and read by millions, with a cigarette between his fingers is a mystery we cannot solve. If King George V. has any sense he well knows that the cigarette has been the death and the undoing of millions of otherwise strong and useful boys and men. And this is certain. In this world of weakness, sin, and temptation you do not need to advertise, nor place in conspicuous places, the evils and temptations that work for ruin. Sin is ever obtrusive and temptation will advertise itself. And for the sovereign of a great people to send out his picture with the symbol and instrument of sin and wrong and ruin in his hand is a nauseating and a humiliating spectacle.

A Campaign in Advance.

The Charlotte Chronicle has announced its platform with regard to the next Legislature in North Carolina, and its campaign, more than a year in advance, is mapped out. Hear it: "It (The Chronicle) is going to look for legislative candidates who will swear, affirm, or give bond for two things—to vote for the Torrens land title bill, and to vote for a State dog law." The Chronicle thinks that the average land-owner is entitled to a system of land transfers so plain and simple that he can tell about the validity of the title without having to employ a lawyer "to look up the title" every time an acre of land is sold, and a deed is made; and further that the farmers of the State who would like to increase their assets by profitable sheep-husbandry are entitled to as much protection to their sheep as the careless and indifferent are who own common curs and mixed breeds, sorry dogs, whose chief occupation is to prowl around the country and kill everything in sight. Col. Harris, somehow, has the idea that a good flock of sheep on a farm is worth as much as a pack of prowling, worthless curs and mixed breed hungry dogs. Come to think of it, The Chronicle does have some show of reason on its side, and The Sun is hoping the Colonel all success in his campaign.

A Deserved Monument.

After Scotland's immortal bard had passed from the scene of activity, had died and been buried, in fact, the Scotch began to learn, little by little, but surely and safely, that a truly great soul had been amongst them. So, they got together, repented of their short-sightedness, and, to make amends, gave money to build a monument to the memory of their neglected, but now departed and revered Bob Burns. The monument was built, as it should have been; but when Bob's mother beheld it she is reputed to have said, and very, very truly, "Ah, Bobbie! ye asked them for bread, they ha' g'iven ye a stone."

Poor Robert Burns, dying without bread and without honor, has a historical counterpart in other characters and other careers. It often takes the world a long time to read correctly, to estimate properly, the truly good and great characters that have come and played their noble part and passed on. Virtue, goodness, greatness finally win out, and ultimately receive their laurel wreath. But often it requires length of days, patience, endurance, heroism.

These words hardly apply; but still they come to mind as we read in the paper Monday that the money had been contributed, was now in hand, and that the people were building a suitable monument to the name and memory of ex-President Grover Cleveland. His is a deserved monument, too, but there was a time not many years ago when the people would not have believed it. Grover Cleveland was one of our very greatest statesmen and presidents.

HE FAILED IN BUSINESS.

It was not reported in the list of bankruptcies. If you had said so on the street, men would have called you stark mad. The firm was rated at the top-notch; their paper was the best; the head of the firm was one of the most prosperous men in the city.

He had failed in business just the same. The trouble was, he had not made anything else except money out of it. Inevitably there had been certain by-products that were socially helpful; but these were in spite of the head of the firm, not because of any policy or desire of his. He had not sought to do anything more than to make money. He had done that. His conception of the business was that it was an intake of individual profit, and not an output of social benefit. He had proceeded on that line with all the skill and patience of which he was a master. So he got what he went after, and failed in gaining the great result of all life in this round world. He made the least of all the good that a man can gain; he lost the greatest good that any man can gain.

Alas for him who makes nothing more than money out of his business! He is poorer than the man who asked him for the price of a cup of coffee on the way down to the office. Business yields great returns. The least of them is money. Social benefit is the great return from all business, whether it is done by the manufacturing corporation or by the Church of Christ.—Zion's Herald.

FROM ELON TO WOOSTER.

It was to join the corps of eighty professors at Wooster that I left Elon College on the 11:28 morning train June 17. The summer session, June 20 to August 10, was to open the following Tuesday morning. The 17th was a hot, dry day and the journey was long. At Greensboro no rate could be had over the Pennsylvania from Washington to Wooster; so a ticket and baggage checked to Washington. Our train, number 36, was an hour late and it was eleven o'clock at night when we rolled into the magnificent union station at the nation's capital. The trains over the Pennsylvania railway for Pittsburg and Chicago were all gone for the night. Finally a comfortable berth was secured on a Baltimore and Ohio train for Pittsburg. It was raining in Washington and the oppressive heat that almost suffocated passengers, especially when the train stopped at stations on the way to Washington, had now given place to a rapidly falling temperature. Heavy rains through the night as our train thundered through the mountains with its cargo of sleeping passengers presented a scene of flooded valleys and raging streams in the morning. By ten o'clock we had arrived in the great city of iron and steel manufacture, situated at the head of the Ohio River. The story of history comes fresh to one's memory as one comes into this smoky city with myriads of great iron and steel furnaces and factories stretching for miles and miles up the great Kanawa, and in like manner down the Ohio. Here the French built a fort and called it Fort Du Quesne. It was against them that the English general, Braddock, marched in great style with the brave young George Washington as a minor officer, and was disastrously repulsed and mortally wounded. Finally, the French being driven out from all these parts, the place fell into the hands of the English and the name was changed to Pittsburg in honor of the Prime Minister, Sir William Pitt. The story of its growth to its present distinction,—the greatest steel city in the world,—is full of hope, despair, tragedy, and change, but too long to be told here.

Again I change cars. A transfer of nine blocks brings me to the famous union station. Here I get a Detroit express train over the Pennsylvania lines which puts me into the town of Wooster, 135 miles west, in a little over three hours. Professor Waldo H. Dunn, of the University faculty, and a friend since our Yale days, took me in charge and I am in good hands.

Wooster is fifty-nine miles south of Cleveland by trolley, and is a beautiful town of eight thousand, situated among the hills eleven hundred feet above sea-level. The University of Wooster is owned by the Presbyterian Synod of Ohio. It is a large institution, beautiful grounds of green lawns, abundant oak and elm shade, costly buildings and equipment. The faculty is made up of men and women of various denominations. I am here to teach Rhetoric and the writing of the short story.

TOLSTOI.

Some Scattering Remarks.

REV. J. J. SUMMERBELL, D.D.

The Christian Register of November 24, 1910, with its frequent disposition to eulogize anything or anybody tending to annul the reign or dominance of New Testament Christianity, used the following words about Tolstoi:—

"There is but one thing to say of him: he was the greatest man of his time in genius, in courage, and sincerity."

Indeed!

Possibly the Register considers the following words of Tolstoi as indicating his sincerity:—

"I lost at cards; wasted my substance, wrung from the sweat of peasants; rioted with loose women and deceived men. Lying, robbery, adultery, drunkenness, violence and murder, all committed by me, and yet I was not less considered by my equals a comparatively moral man."

Observe, this was the society, out of which emerging to assume the role of teacher of morality and spirituality to the civil government, to the popular church, and to the followers of Jesus Christ, this leader in a debauched society became one of the best advertised men in Christendom. And that capacity to advertise himself, his sins and his virtues, may be considered the "genius" that the Register admires. For what else is there? Would Tolstoi have been so notorious, if he had been born a peasant?

The "courage" of Tolstoi has been lauded. But Tolstoi was ever a moral or spiritual fugitive; ever flying from some condition loathsome to himself. His sins became a nuisance to himself, and he abandoned them. His social position became odious to himself and he sought to make himself a peasant, flying from social prestige and glitter; but the reality of the peasant's life, with its obscurity, its grinding poverty, its wearing uncertainty and slavish servitude, he shrunk from and feared, and his "favorite exercise" was the horse-back ride. The handling of his estate was repulsive to him in its appearance, and he fled from his home, deserting his faithful wife as the last flight of his life. Courage? . . . Tolstoi was ever running from himself; and why should we follow him?

And the pusillanimity of this last flight (possibly to be condoned because of his falling intellect) becomes morally more odd us, when we read the following words of Kellogg Durand, a guest at Tolstoi's home, published in a late Independent:—

"Yasnaya Poliana is a big house without being grand or imposing, and its appointments are of comfort rather than luxury. The self-imposed asceticism of the Count and the elegant indulgence of the rest of the family have both been exaggerated. Tolstoi in his later life undoubtedly reduced his life to complete simplicity, but there could scarcely be real hardship when, ever by his side, was the one who, as has been so beautifully and truthfully expressed, 'always managed to slip a piece of velvet under his crown of thorns at just the place where he wanted it to press hardest.' His regimen was plain, but it could not smack of the pain of poverty. There were always loving ones near to tenderly forestall monastic flagellation", etc.

"There in his shadow lurked another, one who through near a half century had hovered by him, about him ever watchful, always discerning, never wanting, until his second had become so much a welded part of the first that few of us remembered until afterward that there were two, and that the first without the second would not and could not have been what he was. At the long table in the great dining hall Tolstoi's place was at one end and at the other sat the Countess. The line of her guidance has not been set down on any chart or written down in any book. Even Tolstoi himself forgot, so part and parcel of his life had she become. In the home this was clear to even the guest of an hour."

The closing drama of his life certainly did require "courage", whether it was to escape from a loving wife, or to express his displeasure with the management of the estate, or to reach some monastery where the religious trivialities of the cloister might fill the vacuum left by his nebulous philosophy, or to advertise himself still more startlingly before an idolatrous humanity.

But then his literary "genius"! Yes; he must have had it. But I remember well how, as a matter of duty to myself (as I imagined), I read his great novel, "War and Peace"; or rather, how I did not read it; for, though I read into the sixth volume (which was the last), I never finished it; I did not become sufficiently interested in the story. It was labor, all through. And I never finished the book. There it stands; and I have not been curious enough all these years, to take down the last volume and read the end. I do not think that this was wholly my fault; for I usually get interested in a story. When I read Hugo, I did not want to lay the books down. When I read Dickens I was delighted with the humor and the tenderness. When I read Charles Reade I enjoyed the epigrammatic wit, and was eager to know how it all turned out. I always wished to finish the books of ordinary novelists. But with Tolstoi, I only read to know what other people might talk about. But I admit that he had the genius to make the world talk.

In another Independent was an article by Tolstoi, entitled, "There is no Death"; which seems to be a potpourri of the ideas of Jesus, "He shall never see death", special providence, no providence, and inverted Buddhism, or pantheism. It is trash.

Dayton, Ohio.

THE GREAT CONVENTION OF LAYMEN AT BURLINGTON.

Burlington and Alamance County are to be congratulated upon the Laymen's Convention to be held in Burlington June 30th to July 2nd, 1911.

The purpose of this Convention is to stimulate and arouse within the membership of the several churches of the County, greater interest and enthusiasm in the general work of the Church, and particularly Home and Foreign Missions, and to emphasize particularly the necessity for greater activity on the part of the Laymen.

It is expected that each Church of the County will send to this Convention at least two representative laymen, who will be careful to conserve the results of the Convention to their several Churches and carry back with them the plans and enthusiasms of this movement and spirit of enthusiasm of this great work.

Speakers of national reputation, who are experts in the promotion of this movement, will be present and deliver inspirational addresses, and to hear them will be a rare opportunity. Among them will be C. H. Pratt of Richmond, Va., Inter-denominational Secretary of Laymen's Missionary Movement for United States and Canada; Dr. Lewis Lankford, head of the Protestant Hospital of Norfolk, Va.; G. H. Miles of Greensboro, of the Miles-Wyong Machine Company; Senator F. P. Hobgood of Greensboro. Rev. Dr. Willingham of Richmond, Va., Secretary of Foreign Missions for the Southern Baptist Church and Rev. Mr. Conk of Columbia, S. C., are expected to be present, and others.

The Convention will be conducted by a local Executive Committee, and the first session will be on Friday evening, June 30th, at 7:30 o'clock, and one feature of this session will be a supper provided by the ladies of the City, and it is earnestly hoped that all delegates will be present at this first session. A nominal fee of 35c will be charged for each plate. At this session short addresses will be made by these visiting speakers and others.

The Convention will be held in the new Presbyterian Church on the corner of Front and Church Streets, which is large enough to accommodate all who will come.

During this Convention there will be no collections nor soliciting of funds for the Convention expenses or other purposes. The Finance Committee has already provided the necessary funds to defray the expenses of the Convention.

It is sincerely hoped that every Church in the County will avail itself of this opportunity and send at least two delegates whose entertainment will be provided for without charge by the Executive Committee. Every delegate is urged to forward his name to Mr. Vitus Holt, Burlington, N. C., Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, so that this Committee may make the necessary arrangements for his entertainment in advance.

It would be impossible to estimate the importance of this occasion to our County. It represents a great advance movement in the modern Christian Church. It will bring a great awakening to our Churches and show them their opportunities, not only in the Missionary enterprise, Home and Foreign, but in every other phase of Church work. It is thought that this Convention will unite the Christian forces of our County as they should be united and inform them as to the great opportunities before them.

Reader, what do you know about your Church and its opportunities? Ask yourself the following questions:

How many Churches are there in Alamance County?

How many Churches of your own denomination in Alamance County?

How many Church members are there in Alamance County?

How many Church members of your own denomination in Alamance County?

How many ministers in this County?

How much does Alamance County give to Missions, Home and Foreign?

How much does your own denomination give?

What ought it to give?

What are others giving?

CRADLE ROLL.

One Dollar a Baby—Let the Babies Help.

The Woman's Board for Foreign Missions have asked for a love offering this year of $2,500 to erect a building for the Japanese Girl's School, in memory of our first President, Mrs. Achsah E. Weston, and, of course, we all want to do something to help this work.

There are about five hundred babies enrolled upon the Cradle-Roll, and by the payment of fifteen cents a year, up to six years of age, they are helping to carry on the general work, or the work which has been under way for a time.

But the Girls' School building is a special work for this year, and there are so many babies in all our churches whose names are not on our Missionary Cradle Roll list.

Now I have just wondered if all these babies who are not helping in the general work would not be delighted to help in this special work by paying the sum of $1.00 into the treasury of the Cradle Roll Department.

We would just like to know what the babies of our great church can do.

As a little child is the most precious object of love in any home, let the parents make manifest this love to the great Lover of children by sending in a dollar to help erect this building for the girls of Japan and to assist our dear Mrs. Fry in her great labor of love for which she is giving so much time, money and strength.

Send your $1.00 offering to

Mrs. Olive M. Clemm,

General Cradle Roll Supt.

NATURE'S ADJUSTMENT.

The law of the eternal fitness of things as a self-acting principle of natural and universal adjustment is perpetually operative. It eventually shuffles every man into his own sphere and gives him the environment which he deserves. This principle abhors the idea of an unworthy man being kept in a worthy position. Its natural tendency is to dethrone the non-competents and coronate the competents in every walk of life. It may be thwarted in appearance for a time by artificial appliances, but when they give way, as they do sooner or later, the gravitation to the true level is like the rush of a mountain-torrent to the plain, or the mighty ascension of an inflated balloon to its true level. Our business, then, is not to seek worthy or exalted positions, but rather to seek fitness for them. Here, as well as hereafter, the character and competence of the actor demands a field in which to act. This principle of self-judgment, which makes the soul shape its own destiny and environment, is seen on every hand.—Ram's Horn.

SIN AND SALVATION.

There are men whose faces grow old when they hear a story of sin, just as they grow young again when they hear a story of redemption. Have we this sensitiveness to the sin of the world? "And he called to the man clothed with linen, which had the writer's inkhorn by his side; and the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." Would the man with the inkhorn put his mark upon you and me? Up n all "that sigh"?

Does sin touch us only academically, as a dark and fascinating problem, or does it pierce us to the quick and make us "sigh and cry"? My brethren, if we are benumbed, if we are "past feeling," if we do not poignantly discern the sin of the world, how can we be the ministers of its salvation? Rest assured it is the church that is most keenly sensitive to the world's sins that will be the most gloriously influential in the world's salvation. It is the church that most deeply "sighs and cries" that will most exult in the triumphant "song of Moses and the Lamb."—J. H. Jowett.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

—Asheville, N. C., joins the rapidly increasing list of cities that will close their post offices on Sunday and give the carriers and others a day of rest.

—Rev. Daniel A. Keys was to preach a special sermon last Sunday to the South Norfolk Odd Fellows, at the South Norfolk Christian Church. A special program was arranged for the occasion.

—Rev. M. L. Bryant, pastor of Main St. Christian Church, Berkley, Va., used these themes last Sunday: morning, "The Covenant Renewed;" evening, "The Gospel of Loss and Gain."

—We are pleased to learn that members of Dr. W. W. Staley's family, whose illness we noted in last week's Sun, were sufficiently recovered to enable the Doctor to occupy his pulpit at Suffolk last Sunday. All the sick ones are reported much improved.

—Mrs. Carrie Nation, the noted saloon-smasher, died recently in a Kansas insane asylum and was reputed to be worth $150,000. We never took to Mrs. Nation's notions, but presume she served some good purpose in the world.

—Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., LL. D., of whose election to the presidency of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., we spoke last week, has, we are informed, accepted the position and will take up the duties of his office at once.

—Rev. Dr. W. T. Herndon, Durham, N. C., will be able to assist this summer in revivals, should any of the pastors desire his services. Dr. Herndon is a successful revivalist, a consecrated man, a good preacher, and those desiring assistance in revivals would do well to correspond with him.

—Rev. J. H. Barney, Clearville, Pa., our good loyal brother in Christian service, promises a sketch soon of the life of his brother, the late lamented Rev. Joseph Barney, of saintly name and memory, the latter having passed several days since to the happy land of rich rewards and glorious triumphs.

—A dear good sister in Norfolk, Va., renewing for The Sun says: "No danger of my asking you to discontinue The Sun. Have been reading it since I was seven years old and I enjoy and appreciate it more today than ever before." For which loyalty and generosity we are profoundly grateful.

—In the death of Rev. Dr. A.-T. Pierson in Brooklyn, N. Y., June 3, the religious world sustains a loss. A great student of the Bible, an eloquent preacher, a fluent and convincing writer, his sermons and the many books that have come from his pen will live to make larger yet the usefulness of his long and busy career. As editor of The Missionary Review of the World, we shall miss him most.

last week for a month's work and solicitation for students among the friends and churches of Eastern Virginia. President Harper is a tireless and effectual worker in field as well as in office and lecture room, and if the College does not grow in usefulness, numbers and influence it will not be due to lack of strenuous effort and faithful service on his part. Prof. Ligette Lincoln is in charge of the office in the President's absence, we understand.

—The season of Young People's Conventions is upon us and with the programs for these meetings now appearing in The Sun great growth and development in Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and Prayer meeting should be realized. We sincerely trust all the conventions will be well attended, and that speakers will go fully prepared to enlighten and edify the people on the topic assigned.

—Those Wooster University, Ohio, people are quite courteous and flattering to our Prof. Lawrence and want him to live amongst them; but we haven't any of him or his kind to spare. Elon needs Prof. Lawrence in its business, where he is wielding a mighty influence for character and culture. And we are trusting he will put aside Wooster's inviting offerings of position and salary with even a steadier and quicker hand than Julius Caesar put away Rome's proffered crown.

—"Miss Mary L. Foster, the accomplished daughter of Mr. John R. Foster of this city, who was a member of the graduating class of Elon College, won the R. M. Morrow Thesis Medal, given by Dr. R. M. Morrow of this city to the student writing the best thesis each year.

This is the first time this medal has been won by a young lady, and out of a class of nineteen, Miss Foster won the medal and this is a very great honor. She is a bright young woman."—Burlington News, May 31.

Miss Foster, a niece of our Orphanage Superintendent, has made an enviable record at Elon both as an apt pupil, a close student, and a bright young woman.

—The Charlotte Observer opined editorially: "We rejoice that it is not us who is to be crowned today (June 22) while sweltering in a heavy coronation robe." Don't be alarmed, beloved, there is hardly a chance while you get off such English as that. How came "us" in that sentence, and when did "us" come to be singular? Two grave grammatical errors in one breath are hard to swallow, especially when blown at us by the staid, stately and scholarly Observer.

—Rev. G. O. Lankford of the Rose Hill Church, Columbus, Ga., writes June 19th:

"Sunday was the best day in point of attendance at Sunday school and at church since I assumed this pastorate. The attendance at church service was 50 per cent. over any previous service."

—The Burlington News, May 31 thus speaks of one of Elon's honor graduates of last June:

"Mr. A. C. Hall, son of Mr. R. J. Hall, of this city, returned last week from Calhoun, Ga., where he has been teaching languages in the public school at that place. Mr. Hall was not only re-elected by this school but was offered considerably more money as an inducement to get him to remain with the school, in fact several private individuals offered to still further supplement the increase if he would consent to be with the school another year, but he had another and better offer in Viena, Ga., and has accepted a position in the school at that place for the next year.

Mr. Hall is a bright young man that you want to keep your eye on for there is a future for him.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The College is now under going that period of undisturbed rest that comes to it every summer, and the few remaining here are living in ease and comfort. On yesterday morning Dr. Atkinson preached an excellent sermon, taking as his text Proverbs 4: 23: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." Dr. Atkinson argued for a pure heart, and showed that above all other things this was the most necessary. After the sermon Uncle Wellons administered the Sacrament. The congregation was not large, but the service was very much enjoyed by all.

The Masonic Lodge of this place elected officers on the 21st inst. They chose as Worshipful Master, W. A. Harper, Senior Warden W. C. Wicker, Junior Warden, J. C. McAdams. Rev. J. W. Patton is Past Master and he and Dr. W. C. Wicker attended the Custodian's meeting of the Grand Lodge at Oxford.

Mr. W. T. Noah has been elected Mayor of Elon College for the ensuing three months, during which time, Prof. W. P. Lawrence, the Mayor, has leave of absence. Prof. Lawrence is teaching English in Wooster University, Ohio.

We are glad to note that Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, who has been ill at the home of Dr. E. L. Moffitt, is somewhat improved, tho as yet by no means well. Little Oscar Atkinson has also been ill, and is now improved somewhat. He has been sick for several weeks.

Mrs. Alma Wilson and Miss Wilson, director of music, leave today for Blowing Rock, N. C., where they will spend a month.

The outlook for the next year for the College was never brighter. Applications are coming in and an unusual number of requests. It looks as though the next year would certainly be the best in the history of the institution. To this end we invite and beseech all friends of the cause and the College to help us.

Mr. and Mrs. Coble and children of Greensboro came yesterday in their car to visit Mr. and Mrs. McNally. Also Mr. and Mrs. Loy of Greensboro spent Sunday with Mr. Sam. McCauley's family.

We notice that Miss Jennie Herndon, who has been teaching for two years at Greenville, N. C., has been elected to teach in the Durham city schools.

Mr. Sam Tate, our oldest resident, has been ill for a few days, and at this writing is not much improved. Mrs. Bob Tate and children of Norfolk are visiting at Mr. Tate's.

The College community is very unfortunate in losing as fellow townsmen Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Kernodle and Mrs. Sue Jones. Mrs. Jones has gone to Middleburg, N. C., to the bedside of a sick brother-in-law, while Mr. Kernodle has gone into business at Durham.

Norfolk Letter.

The Tidewater Christian Sunday School Association met yesterday afternoon with the church at South Norfolk. There was a very good attendance and good reports were made. The subjects discussed were "The Summer Vacation Period," "Special Days," and "Rewards." The next meeting will be with Rosemons Church.

At a recent meeting of the Main Street church, Berkley, it was decided as that is the oldest Christian church in the city, and as we already had the Third Church and the Fourth Church, to change the name of this to the First Church; so henceforth it will be known as the First Christian Church of Norfolk.

Bro. Kagey, from Harrisonburg, Va., has recently located in the Berkley ward to engage in the jewelry repair business. He is an active man in the Christian Church, and it is expected that he will be of help to the First Church.

One week ago, at the Third Church, we had a record breaking attendance at the evening service. We had present 93 of the "Sailor Boys." A great many people who came could not get in the house.

Mr. Hanson's mother and sister from Tama, Iowa, arrived last Tuesday to spend some weeks with his family. We are glad to have them in our midst and extend to them a cordial welcome.

A pretty home wedding occurred last Wednesday at the home of Deacon T. A. Twiddy, when his daughter Ida became the bride of Mr. James A. Moore of Texas. They left immediately for a trip to New York and points north. After they return they will spend some time at his old home in N. C. and then make their home in Texas, where he is the traveling representative of a typewriter Company. In losing Miss Ida the Temple sustains another distinct loss.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

Our revival with the Rose Hill church began last Sunday with the largest attendance we have had since the writer assumed this work eight months ago. A deep interest was manifest in the first service. On Tuesday, Rev. L. E. Smith, of Greensboro, N. C., arrived to assist in the meeting. His sermons are logical, forceful, convincing and telling. Mr. W. W. Elder is in charge of the music. This means good singing, which always adds greatly to the effectiveness of preaching. From night to night the attendance is increasing and the interest grows deeper with each service. The writer's heart rejoices because we are in the midst of a gracious meeting. More later.

Newport News Letter.

Breaking a long silence, we give you here with a news item from this field. Writing for a church paper, like other service, is very largely a matter of habit; yet not altogether, for opportunity, fondness for writing, and other conditions figure their part. Newspaper reports, more often than otherwise, express, unintentionally, human weakness and selfishness. I know that will be disputed by some, and yet much of the service in this life, when analyzed, contains a very large element of selfishness. Not many pastors rush into their church paper to tell about the disadvantages, and discouragements in their field, and wisely so. But I am trying in vain to think of the report from any pastorate that was not most flattering. The normal and usual are usually kept in the background, and the occasional, and exceptional are reported which mislead. Whether writing a book, an article for publication, or even a sermon, it is difficult to rule out self altogether. I am no better than my brethren, but in this letter I shall try "mighty hard" to rule out the principle mentioned.

To say that our work here is satisfactory would be wrong. To me it is not satisfactory, yet everything considered I suppose it is doing about as well as we could expect, for there are many things to be "considered."

Our Sunday school made an average during the past quarter of over 94 and we had 109 present yesterday. Children's Day Exercises were held Sunday evening of the 11th inst. The house was full, and the program excellent, so say the folks. Mrs. W. B. Baker and Mrs. Butler had charge of the training of the children, and they did it well. Brother J. S. Thompson, chairman of the committee, rendered excellent assistance to the ladies in many ways. The exercises were in charge of Supt. J. J. Baker. We go on our annual picnic to Buckroe Beach tomorrow.

With a church membership of about 120

we have a prayer meeting attendance which averaged last quarter twenty. There has been improvement in this line of work. For the next four weeks, these meetings will be conducted by the brethren, the pastor participating.

Attendance at church services is small, and has always been. We had present yesterday at morning service about 62 by count, and 84 last evening at regular services, but that indicates more than our average. There are, in our membership, some as loyal and true, as faithful, as you will find anywhere. But only a very few of our people, comparatively, settle here, none of our people pass this way in attending general meetings of our church, and on this side of Hampton Roads we have no other church until we reach the Valley of Va., 250 miles away. On the other hand the Baptist, Methodist, and others are so numerous in the state in surrounding country that about ninety-nine hundredths of the incoming population belong to some other church faith. There are three strong Methodist churches, two strong Presbyterian churches, three strong Baptist churches, two good Episcopal churches, besides Roman Catholics, Seventh Day Adventists, Holiness, etc. in the city. We shall have to work hard, be patient and faithful, and be satisfied with a steady growth which at times may not be very perceptible. But we have no cause for discouragement, if we are sure that we have put God before us in the work. We are working now on the problem of church attendance, and we think that yesterday's result was very encouraging.

TEMPTATION.

(A paper read by Miss Winnie Floyd before the recent session of the Alabama Sunday school convention and printed at the request of the convention).

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." James 1:13.

I have chosen the subject of temptation because of its great importance. Temptation and sin have been in the world since the beginning with Adam and Eve in Eden. Some writer has said that the tree that represents temptation stood in the center of the garden of Eden, where all roads converged, where Adam and Eve passed each day. So it is in man's life. Temptation stands in the center of our lives where we have to pass very day, and every man's weal or woe depends upon the attitude he takes toward it. There are many attitudes we can take. We are all tempted, and will be as long as time lasts. We find there is a difference in temptations. Some stand where others fall; some fall before drink, some are tempted to steal, others to lie and others to swear and profane the name of the Lord. The Bible says: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." James 4:7; and again, "For I will never suffer you to be tempted beyond that you are able to bear, but with each temptation will make a way for you to escape."

Temptation is not sin. We have the promise that we have a way to escape the sin; but temptation becomes sin when we willingly and wilfully yield to it. Temptations come often as surprises. We are sometimes met by the tempter when we leave our closets of prayer. God has a purpose in allowing us to be tempted. Just as a man becomes physically stronger by exercising the body; so we become spiritually stronger by each temptation we meet and overcome. We all belong to the class who have been tempted, for at some time in each life the tempter has come. Christ was tempted, but he did not sin; hear his words: "Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." To us comes this message of hope; no matter how far from God we have wandered, or how great our temptations, God can save us and give us grace to resist every evil suggestion. Sin is the thing in man that must be forgiven, and he, alone, cannot eradicate it from his nature. It is a state of poverty, a state of blindness, a state of universal disease, a state of total wretchedness, a state of imminent peril, and it is a state of insanity. It says to the carnal man, "Don't resist that temptation, but yield to it," and each time we yield, we harden our hearts to that grace that gives us strength to overcome.

If we do not resist temptation and if we fall into sin, then our influence is felt for the evil one and we become a tempter. This is especially true in regard to the young convert. He sees older church members indulge in things that are not just right; and there the devil gains a victory if he can just get the young Christian to yield to the same temptation. Men and brethren, arouse yourselves to the importance of the situation. Take away the saloon, the gambling dens, and places of like temptation from your sons and your neighbors sons. Use your influence in electing wise law makers and in preserving the morality of the country at large. We all have our tempter or temptress, for there are so many people who are tempters to other people.

"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." 1 Cor. 10:13. We can overcome temptation by the study of God's Word. The surest way—as our frail barks go floating down the stream of time; against the rocks of unbelief, through the storms of trial, and when dark waves of temptation roll over us—is to take Christ on board for our Companion and Pilot, and let him guide our craft clear of the breakers; out into the clear light of his strength and glory.

Now, instead of being tempters, we can help others to overcome temptation, by letting the man or woman who has fallen deep into sin know that we are interested in them and their souls by going into their homes and talking and praying with them, thus causing them to feel that there is something in the Christian religion that the world has not and knoweth not of, until Christ is found in them. It is the place of the church to help the men and women, and on the other hand the church is responsible for placing before men and women temptations.

Some good, moral people say the church has become worldly and has departed from the way of true holiness and right-living so that they feel satisfied to stay out of the church until the church reforms and gets back to God and the Bible. To counter-act this trend of feeling the church members must watch themselves closely, purge themselves with the fire of the Holy Ghost, and if we would be soul winners and remove temptation from our fallen brethren, we must keep filled with the Holy Spirit. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation."

So let us be valiant soldiers for the cross, stand firmly for the right, and by putting on the whole armor of Christ, go forth to do battle against the sins and temptations of the world, for: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

SUGGESTIONS FOR C. E. LESSON, JULY 9.

Topic: 'Lessons from Great Lives; VII.
David. I Sam. 17: 32-51.
Suggested Program.

1. President announces the topic and gives a few words of comment, followed by sentence prayers for the leader and the meeting.
2. Leader announces a song, and this is followed by reading of lesson, leader's talk and short prayer.
3. Have six members tell briefly in their own words the daily readings. Let this be followed by another song and talks by members.
4. Pastor's talk, closing exercises.

By all means read a great deal of Scripture on the life of David. The daily readings should be studied, but the member's reading should not stop with this. Read enough to become familiar with this man of God from the time he watched the flocks until he came to the closing scenes of his life. If a Christian Endeavorer does not look up the daily readings and the Scripture upon the life of the man studied in any lesson of these series, he should not be disappointed if he fails to get a great deal out of it.

Study the life of David and note its epochs:

1. The shepherd boy.
2. The giant killer.
3. The soldier.
4. The king.
5. The psalmist.
6. The man of God.

Hints on the Lesson.

The experience of one brave man teaches that all men can be brave, though perhaps not so great.

David was chosen as king, though he was the youngest. Other things being equal, youth always has the advantage.

Wherever one man is found who says "I can," another says "you cannot." By whose opinion will you be guided?

It is not upon your own strength you rely in a fight; you depend upon the belief you have in the cause for which you fight.

David was faithful over a few things, as a keeper of sheep; he was made the ruler over many cities.

David would not wear Saul's armor. The first essential of a manly man is that he is himself and not a copy of some one else.

David's greatest sorrow was in Absalom. Many a man can rule in the outer kingdom, but fails in the inner kingdom, the home.

ON THE FIRING LINE.

We are very anxious to have young people send us any news that will be of interest to readers of this page. When you organize a new C. E. Society, a teacher training class or organized class, let us know about it. Send names of officers, leaders, and teachers. This page should tell of progress every week. Bear this request in mind, especially if you are secretary of a class or society.

Treasurer Cox is writing letters to a good many of our people asking for contributions to the young people's work. Do not lay these letters aside until you have sent in your pledge or contribution. Your procrastination will impair the usefulness of the convention.

The 25th International Christian Endeavor Convention will be held at Atlantic City, New Jersey, July 6-12. This is the thirtieth anniversary of the organization. Some of the most conspicuous figures in the world will be present on that occasion. This will be an ideal vacation and a splendid summer trip. Any one contemplating going from North Carolina should write Prof. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., or, if from Virginia, write Mr. R. C. Woolfolk, Roanoke, Va., and either will give you any information desired.

Mr. G. V. Massey, Durham, R. F. D. 3, writes us that a Christian Endeavor Society with 40 members has been organized at O'Kelly's Chapel. This is a splendid membership for a beginning and we feel sure that much good will result from the organization.

ELON'S EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETS.

There are so many larger matters claiming the attention of the Board of Trustees in their annual meeting during the commencement that many items of detail have to be referred to the Executive Board. This Board for the ensuing year consists of Drs. R. M. Morrow and G. S. Watson, Rev. J. W. Wellous, Kemp B. Johnson, and the President of the College as presiding officer.

Persuant to call, these brethren met at 7:30 p. m. June 20 at the College and gave their business judgment and devoted energies of mind and heart to many items of a routine character, the majority of which do not interest the brotherhood as a whole, but one or two of which do.

The Trustees in electing the new President specified that he should teach the College Latin entirely, manage the College Boarding Department, perform the duties of College Bursar, have general oversight of the Field Agent who is to be provided to raise the Special Fund, balance not yet subscribed, making special trips from time to time also in the interest of this fund, and perform the other duties incumbent upon the office of College President. A stenographer was to be provided to assist in the clerical work growing out of these duties, who should at the same time be able to teach the Business Department branches and some classes in the College Department. Prof. A. Ligette Lincoln, M. A., had performed these duties to great acceptance during the previous year, but had resigned to enter the Medical School of the University of Virginia. It gives me pleasure, however, to announce that Prof. Lincoln has reconsidered the matter and accepted his last year's position with the College, postponing his medical study one year at least.

An assistant in Latin, to teach the preparatory classes, and some other classes, was needed, and also a Band Master. The Board was able to combine these two functions in the person of Mr. Russell A. Campbell, A. B., who last year taught with great success one of the preparatory Latin classes and who has so excellently conducted the College Band for the past four years. Mr. Campbell will study for the M. A. degree next year.

The third item of public concern was the provision for a Physical Director for the young men. In this regard the young ladies are well provided for through the efficient services of the teacher of expression, Miss Ethel Clements. But no provision of a satisfactory kind had as yet been made along this necessary line for young men. Upon the recommendation of two most loyal members of the Board of Trustees, one of them also a member of the Executive Board, a young man eminently suited for this position, a man of experience and studious habits and strictest moral integrity, was elected. His acceptance is not in hand at this writing and so his name cannot be given. It is expected, however, that he will accept, and, if he should not, the President is empowered to fill this position suitably. In taking this action the Executive Board has acted wisely and counselled well, as time and the appreciation of students and constituency will no doubt prove.

Speak a good word for our Elon, friends.
W. A. Harper, President.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION AND A REQUEST.

To the Friends of Elon College:

As stated in last week's Sun, according to previous notice given the Board of Trustees of Elon College, I retired from the presidency of the College at the recent Commencement. In doing so I have acted from a sense of duty to myself and family, and not because of any desire to lay aside the work of the college and the church to which I have given nearly all the years of my life, since leaving College. I shall continue to be deeply interested in all that concerns the welfare of the College and of every other enterprise of the church, and shall always be ready in any way possible to contribute to their success.

In retiring from the presidency, I feel that I can do so with the consciousness of having devoted all my energies unreservedly to its upbuilding; and while I have not accomplished all that I would like to have accomplished, I am glad to be able to turn it over to my successor in a condition of hopefulness that presages great things for the future, if its friends will continue their loyal support as they have done in the past. I wish to express to all my grateful appreciation of the cordial co-operation which they have given me during my administration, and to bespeak for my successor the same, and if possible, even greater helpfulness in the great work that he has been called upon to perform.

As a member of the faculty, Prof. Harper has always been loyal to the President and to every interest of the College. As Dean of the College he has had already a good deal of experience that will be very helpful to him in starting out upon his new work. He comes to his position with the confidence of the faculty, the student-body, and the real friends of the College, and with the loyal support of the church, he will be able to do a great work here. Without this, no man can hope to succeed. I bespeak for President Harper the good word, the helpful word always; for in helping him, we are not helping him alone, but the College, and every other enterprise of the church.

With only pleasant recollections of my work at Elon, and of my associations with kind friends here and throughout the Church, and with the hope that, under the blessings of God, even greater things may be accomplished as each year shall go by,

I am

Cordially yours,

E. L. Moffitt.

—In one of our dailies last week were the glaring head-lines: "Quantity of Liquor shipped into Prohibition Territory." Then the real news began:

"Twenty million gallons of liquors annually are shipped by express, principally from mail order houses, direct to consumers in prohibition States."

All of which is bad enough. No prohibitionist, so far as we know, ever claimed that prohibition was a panacea; but, and here is the main point, if this much is shipped into prohibition territory, how much would be shipped into the same territory if prohibition did not obtain? Or why not issue figures showing how much whiskey is shipped into territory where the open saloon exists?

My Dear Children:—

We are so thankful for the rains that have come since our last letter. The crops are looking better and our whole farm seems to breathe a sigh of relief.

Chopping and hoeing is the watchword for this week and we would love to have about 100 pairs of strong young arms to use a hoe for the next ten days. However, we are glad for the healthy hands we have who (with the exception of frolic and play) help the cause along wonderfully. We have had little sickness (caused, perhaps by eating green apples) but nothing serious. Stumped toes are the order of the day but a little peroxide and a tie-up for a day are sufficient.

Little Ersling and Theron Capps left the Orphanage last week to live with their mother again. They carry with them our best wishes and hopes for a useful life. Francis and Jack Kissell are visiting relatives in Moore Co. and other children will now soon be leaving to visit relatives, which privilege they are allowed every two years unless hindered by causes we cannot control.

This week we report lot of collars and other articles of wearing apparel from the Columbia Steam Laundry, Greensboro, which we very thankfully receive.

Cordially yours,

Uncle Jim.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I am behind in my dues so I will send fifty cents to pay up to July. Maybe when I get so I can write for myself I won't get so far behind.

I wonder if any of the little boys at the Orphanage have had the fun of helping a dog catch a little rabbit? One of papa's dogs and I caught one yesterday and I don't think ex-President Roosevelt was any prouder of all his animals he ever captured than I was of my little rabbit.

Much love to you and all the cousins.

I hope to see you in July at the Sunday School Convention at Liberty Spring.

Your little nephew,

Suffolk, Va., R. F. D. 1, June 22, 1911.

You ought to be here some time, Joel, to see our boys eat rabbit. They caught one the other day and all the boys were quite friendly with those who owned the rabbit so they could get a bite for dinner. But what is one poor little rabbit among 20 hungry boys? That's what I want to know. Dear Cousins:—

We have two new kittens Daddy brought us from Semora. All our old kitties were gray but these two are white and black and white and yellow. Daddy brought them home in a little box with holes in it and we were so proud of them we just lifted the lid a teenty bit to see good and then the kitties lifted a little and out they hopped. We caught one, and oh, we thought the other was gone for good and Mary Lee just cried and cried. After a while we found the kitty in the sitting room under the chair and then we were so glad. We put them with our old kitties in the granary to get acquainted and gave them some milk and now they are all right. Their names are Paul and Silas.

Lovingly,

Mary Lee and James Foster.

Dear Cousins:—

As the kitchen work has not been told about, I thought you all would like to hear what I have to do. I am in the kitchen now but I will go to the milk the first of July. I have lots of work to do since Miss Fionnie Simons went home. She has the kitchen work in charge. I hope she will soon come back.

I get up at 4:30 every morning and go down to cook breakfast. After breakfast I go to the garden and get up vegetables for dinner. Yesterday and the day before the little girls picked 102 qts. of dew-berries from our little patch. After we get up our dinner and get it on to cook I go to school an hour and a quarter. When I get out of school I go back to my dinner. Nona Rogers stays in the kitchen while I go to school and when she is at school I am in the kitchen. When dinner is done, I have all the cooking utensils to wash up, sweep the kitchen and sometimes scour the floor. You see by that time it is about two o'clock.

I then go upstairs to my room and sew until five o'clock. Then I start supper. I give the little folks their supper at 6:30, but the farmer boys eat when they come from the field. You see I have a lot to do in the kitchen. I cook for nearly fifty. I help iron and I have lots of sewing to do for myself. The cook doesn't have to help sew for the other children. You see by the time she does almost all the cooking, getting up the vegetables, helps can berries and keeps the kitchen clean and nice, she has her hands full.

I have told you the most important things that the cook has to do in the kitchen, so you may guess there is much work to be done in our kitchen, not mentioning the ironing, washing, sewing, farming, cleaning up and the office work and many other little jobs that are to be done at our home.

I guess I had better stop as my letter is getting a little long. Hoping all the cousins will enjoy reading my letter, Annie Knott.

MARRIED.

Hodges-Morris.

Wednesday evening, June 14 at 7:30 o'clock, Mr. John Murchison Hodges, Jr., of Cedar Falls, N. C., led to the altar Miss Roberta Anne Morris at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Williams who reside near Linden in Harnett Co., N. C. Dr. Fred M. Hodges, of Richmond, Va., brother to the groom, was best man, and Miss Helen Ricks of Mecklenburg Co., Va., was maid of honor. Mrs. George D. Elliott Jr. rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march and the Sun's editor read the ceremony which made the two one. The bride wore a rich gown of white batiste with princess lace and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. Miss Ricks wore embroidered batiste with princess lace and carried bride-maid's roses. The groom and best man were attired in full evening dress. The Williams home was beautifully decorated in ivy and ferns and was brilliantly illuminated with candelabra and wax candles. Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party and guests, possibly a hundred or more in number, were invited to the spacious dining room where ices and dainty refreshments were served. The bridal presents were seemingly without number and were costly and beautiful. Miss Morris was teacher of music in Littleton Female College and is a woman of many charms and graces. Mr. Hodges is general manager of the Cedar Falls Cotton Mills and is a young man of promise and prominence.

We have not in many a day attended a more beautiful, brilliant, and happy marriage than this. One of the very finest communities in all this State gave itself to the social delights of this auspicious occasion, and we have not seen together a more cultured, refined, dignified and courteous group than this which gathered in this fine old home among a prosperous and progressive people.

If the pair are not happy it will not be from lack of gentle breeding, splendid rearing, noble ancestry, and a brilliant and most festive marriage hour and altar. May God keep them in all their way.

J. O. Atkinson.

Nicholson-Gilmer.

Mr. Mike Nicholson and Miss Barbara Gilmer Mitchell were united in marriage at the bride's home, West Morgan Street, Raleigh, N. C., Wednesday, June 14th at 3 o'clock,—Rev. L. F. Johnson, pastor of the Hillsboro Street Christian Church, performing the ceremony. The only attendant was Miss Clair Mitchell, sister of the bride. Mr. W. M. Nicholson, a brother of the groom, acted as best man. The wedding march was rendered by Mrs. L. F. Johnson. The bride wore a beautiful tan coat suit with hat and gloves to match. The couple left immediately after the ceremony for Great Falls, S. C.

Drewry-Numford.

At Johnson's Grove Church May 7, 1911, Mr. John B. Drewry and Miss Lottie Numford were united in marriage. May their lives be long, happy, and useful.

Barrett-Barrett.

At Murphy's Hotel, Richmond, Va., June 14, 1911, Mr. Aurelius W. Barrett and Miss Carrie Lee Barrett. From Richmond they went to Washington and other cities on a bridal tour. They will reside at Surry Court House, Va.

We trust their lives may be long, useful and happy.

R. H. Peel.

Cox-Rollings.

At the home of the bride's parents near Dory, Southampton Co., Va., June 15, 1911, Miss Annie C. Rollings became the bride of Mr. Roger P. Cox, of Newport News, Va.

Just before the bridal party entered the parlor, Miss Grace Rollings, the bride's sister, sang "Because" in a very impressive manner. Miss Viola Rollings, a cousin of the bride, rendered the wedding march in a beautiful manner. Mr. Spratley Rollings, the bride's brother, and Mr. Amos Rollings, a Cousin, acted as ushers. After the ceremony they drove to Wakefield, Va., where they took the N. and W. train en route to Newport News where they will make their home.

Rawlings.

Brother W. R. Rawlings, of near Dory, Va., aged 54 years, a member of Barrett's Christian Church, a good man and a great sufferer. He was operated on for cancer some months ago, and never got relief till death took him home. He died on the night of the 16th and the funeral service was held from his home Sunday afternoon, June 18, 1911, by the writer. Two beautiful hymns were sung, "When the Pearly Gates Unfold" and "Sometime We Will Understand", by Misses Viola and Grace Rawlings, his nieces. He leaves to mourn their loss three brothers, one sister, a young wife, a fine baby boy, and a host of friends.

He will be missed in his community, in his church and in his home.

He was buried in his home cemetery. May the Lord of peace and love comfort the bereaved ones.

Wrenn.

The little twenty month old boy of Brother and Sister T. S. Wrenn, who had been sick about three weeks, passed away Sunday night and was buried June 19, 1911, in the home cemetery. Brother and Sister Wrenn are members of Union Christian Church, and they have the sympathy of the entire community. The services were conducted by the writer.

We sympathize and pray for the bereaved parents.

BY THE MEMORIAL CHRISTIAN TEMPLE
SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has deemed it best to call from our midst our beloved brother and co-worker, Mr. Claude L. Guyann; and,

Whereas, Brother Guyann had for many years served this Sunday school faithfully and earnestly as member and officer, showing a most exemplary Christian character; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while bowing in submission to the will of God, we deeply mourn the loss of one of our most faithful and loyal workers whose presence among us was like a benediction.

Resolved, That we hereby give expression to the high esteem in which Brother Guyann was held, for his constant and unselfish devotion to the work of the Sunday school, for the sincere cordiality with which it was his custom to extend a welcome to all each Sunday morning, for his conscientious, untiring manner of performing all duties devolving upon him, and for his gentle, Christ-like spirit, which won for him the love of all who knew him.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our minutes, a copy published in the Christian Sun, and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

Lassiter.

Reuben Lassiter, for many years a member of Damascus Christian Church, Sunbury, N. C. departed this life June 8, 1911, aged 61 years.

Brother Lassiter had the esteem and good will of all his neighbors and will be greatly missed. His life was one of sincerity, loyalty, and good will to his community.

His pastor, Rev. B. F. Black, being detained on account of important Y. M. C. A. business, the funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. McFaden of Suffolk, Va.

The deceased leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, four children, one sister, and three brothers. They all have the deepest sympathy of their many friends.

The remains were laid to rest in the home cemetery.

How uncertain is the future! Today is bright, the sea is calm, the tide swells high and strong. Tomorrow the tide turns; trouble, sickness, or death robs us of hope and pleasure. From the calm and beautiful harbor where we floated so confidently we are rudely tossed out upon the wide ocean. The horizon stretches far beyond our vision, and the heave of its restless waves comes from depths that are unfathomable. Vainly struggling, we either sink to the tranquil depths, where all is peace, or tempest-torn and faint, are cast upon the shore. O. W. Hinton.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Shallow Well, N. C.

I was at this church on the second Sunday in this month in the interest of our Chapel Hill mission. I was glad to meet many friends whom I had known in former days and make acquaintances with many I had not seen before. I was received kindly by the people, and found them both at Shallow Well and Sanford very much interested in the work at Chapel Hill. However, at Sanford we were rained under.

I heard many kind words of the pastors of both of these churches.

Durham.

I was with the church at this place third Sunday. The church and pastor are bringing things to pass in the right way. You may listen for a good report from Durham for the Chapel Hill mission.

N. G. Clements.

Morrisville, N. C.

Chapel Hill.

The present outlook of the Christian Church at Chapel Hill, N. C., is encouraging. As the work of this church was inaugurated in the Eastern N. C. Sunday School Convention, we feel sure every Sunday school in the bounds of said convention is fully interested in its work.

Some months ago, we sent letters to all the Sunday schools in the Eastern N. C. Christian Conference, and a few nearby schools in some other conferences, requesting them to send small contributions to the Eastern Sunday School Convention which meets at Damascus Church, Orange Co., N.

C., on Tuesday after third Sunday in July, for the Chapel mission. Will the Sunday schools please comply with the request? The small amount asked for in the letters will help very much.

If any Sunday school in any church which has not been requested by letter desires to help in a good work, has it in heart to send a contribution, it will be thankfully received. Or, if any church or individual wants to help in building a house of worship for the Christians at Chapel Hill—the University of the State,—let him or her send a sum of any amount to E. W. Neville, Chapel Hill, N. C., and I am sure he will not refuse it. He is secretary both of the church and building committee.

W. G. Clements.

Howard's Chapel.

We had a good day at Howard's Chapel the second Sunday in this month. Bro. L. I. Cox, our beloved pastor, preached an excellent sermon at 11 o'clock from the text, Ex. 33:12-19 on "Prevailing Prayer." After which, by request, the doors of the church were opened and two were added to the membership of the church, Bro. W. T. Carter and daughter, Miss Ava, with more to follow. We have a good Sunday school and some earnest workers.

New Lebanon.

In the afternoon I attended a very impressive memorial service at New Lebanon. Brother Cox preached a good sermon Mrs. Miner Humphrey and Mr. Charley Griffin read two excellent papers in memory of the dead buried at that place.

W. B. Madison.

Winchester Letter.

Since our last letter we had the privilege of meeting with Revs. J. F. Burnett, J. H. Barney, S. L. Baugher, J. A. Dillion, A. S. Garland at Cedar Grove Church, Fulton County, Pa. The church is located in a progressive farming community and has before it great possibilities for good. I trust that our visit there will prove helpful to the work. While there I had the pleasure of visiting in the hospitable homes of Brothers Louis Younkens and James Sharp.

June the 11th, we had a good day at Timber Ridge. On the afternoon of the 10th ten young people were baptized in the Capon River. It is so good to see our young people come into the church. The day following, the large church was filled to overflowing.

Mr. E. Bruce Capper has donated a beautiful silver communion service to the Winchester church for which we are very grateful. Mr. Capper is one of our leading jewelers. His father was a member of Timber Ridge Christian Church.

The Ladies' Aid Society served dinner on Confederate Memorial Day, June the sixth, and realized over $100.00 clear of all expenses. Our Sunday school and church attendance hold up very well.

The Sunday school room of the church is plastered and the workmen will finish putting the first coat on the main building today. We are badly in need of money now to tide us over till the dedication. If all our friends will help a little just now, it will mean much to us and will not inconvenience them but very little, if any. We still need several dollars to finish out that One Thousand One Dollar subscriptions. Dear friend, will you please mail us a dollar as soon as you read this?

The struggle has been hard but the end seems almost in sight. If our friends will come to our support now, we will soon have a church building of which the denomination will feel proud.

Randleman.

We began our revival at Randleman June 8, with Rev. J. F. Morgan to do the preaching. For almost a week we went on with our visible results.

At last on Thursday night following the second Sunday the power came down upon us, which did the work notwithstanding the battle Satan had fought against us. During Bro. Morgan's stay with us he did plain gospel preaching, the power being with him all the while. He will long be remembered by the people of Randleman. His work was highly appreciated by all who heard him, but having to leave us on Friday night, the work fell into the hands of the pastor and church.

We continued the service until Sunday night. As a result of our meeting there were 21 couverts and men testified that every church in town had been strengthened. But you can't imagine how much I hated to leave the meeting with boys and girls "begging for Christ." We are thinking of holding another service here about September. God has abundantly blessed my work here and I leave it in fine condition. I am now on my way to Lagrange, Ga., where I am to assist Rev. G. D. Hunt in a revival. I wish to thank my people for giving me two months off, to engage in work in Georgia and Alabama. J. V. Knight.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.

The first step is to give up sin, and trust Christ to save you from it. Then begin the Christian life in a humble and trusting way, as the child begins the alphabet at school. Don't look for marvels. Don't expect to see visions. Don't ask for raptures, but ask expectantly for power to live in a way to please God. Believe that the Spirit of Christ will come into your heart, and cause you to love God and delight in His will; not because you feel happy, but because you are definitely trusting Him to do what He has said He will do. He says that if you will forsake your sins He will blot them out, and give you His Holy Spirit. Believe it, and accept salvation as His free gift. He says He will enable you to live as a child of God should. Believe Him and undertake it. He says He will help you to bear your troubles. Trust Him and try Him. He says He will give you strength for labor; courage for conflict; power to resist temptation, and grace sufficient for your everyday need. Take Him at His word, and you will soon know for yourself how blessed it is to trust and obey. Commit yourself to the new life you have undertaken to live, by uniting with the church of your choice, and then take your duties as they come, and perform them in a way you believe will please God. Read your Bible daily, and bring your life into line with what it teaches, and your doubts will soon be gone.—Ram's Horn.

OUR INIQUITY.

(The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.—Isa. 53:6. Golden text for Sunday, July 9.)

The Sunday school lesson today is one of the most beautiful and striking passages of all Scripture. Seven hundred years beforehand it describes events and the Man with as much vigor, virility, and vividness as if these far off scenes had already passed in review before the writer's naked eye. Isaiah could not have written a clearer and more accurate description of the Christ if he had lived in or after His day, instead of seven centuries before it. Matthew, Mark, and Luke deal more vividly with the features and the personality of the Christ than Isaiah does, but neither gives as clear description of the spirit, the real character and the greatness of Christ as does Isaiah.

In majestic measures it deals with that night and mystery of the Bible, the atonement. Isaiah knew in his day that the Lamb that was slain from the foundation of the world was a sin-offering for humanity's salvation. Isaiah knew and understood that the stripes that should have fallen on him and on us were laid upon the back of One Who would endure and not murmur, suffer and not complain. Isaiah knew in his day that man's heart was wayward and his ways were wicked, and that salvation must come not through man's merit, but through God's mercy and Christ's suffering. He knew full well that if man were ever healed of sin and brought back in safety and security, it must be through the grace and the goodness and the sacrifice of Another.

Reader, this is a mystery. We cannot tell why a just and a righteous and a merciful God made the Just suffer for the unjust, the Sinless One suffer for the sinner and the sinning, laid on His shoulders the iniquity of which you and I and the rest are guilty and of which He Himself was not guilty.

It is sufficient for us to know that God in His mercy, wisdom and goodness, saw fit to do this very thing, bring this event to pass. Those stripes were due to fall on us. Those pangs of pain, those agonies of the cross, those sufferings of sin and shame and death, these were due to come to us, for we all had sinned and had come short of the glory whereunto God had created us. Sin had separated us from our rightful oneness and fellowship with God, and through Jesus Christ we are brought back to God. This is the meaning of the atonement, the at-one-ment. Through the death and suffering of the Son of God-man is brought back to God and becomes a joint heir with Christ, of all the riches and inheritance of God's freedom, favor, and fulness. The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all. Whosoever believeth on Him shall never perish, but shall have everlasting life.

TO REWARD OR TO SERVICE?

A Request.

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, one of the most active, eloquent, beloved and consecrated men in the American pulpit, whose going away we spoke of in last week's Sun, held it as a vital part of his faith that when this life was done he would be called not so much to reward as to high service. The venerable man of God at his last birthday, March 5, spoke to his son so hopefully of service, and of the life beyond. He said, speaking of Rev. 14:13:

"Blessed are the dead—this is the only time after Christ's resurrection that the term 'death' is applied to believers. But the further expression 'that die' in the Lord," gives a wonderful modification of the thought. They are said to 'rest from their labors' and that 'their works follow with them'—as the Greek indicates: to go as a companion. 'Labors' are here contracted with 'works.' Labors mean toil, 'works' mean blessed activity. Rest is given from all vexatious toils, but all joyous activities go with them. I believe that if I 'die in the Lord' that I shall leave behind all vexatious trials, but that all gracious activities will go with me. I expect to go to more active service. I have a desire to depart and be with Christ, but I also have a desire to abide in the flesh because of the needs I see for work in God's Kingdom.

"If I am taken, I wish to be laid away where I fall. I desire no encomiums, only the simple reading of God's Word. Should anything be said, let it be only this, that to the last I gave a faithful testimony to the love and power and faithfulness of God. Let there be no mourning, nothing but rejoicing that I have been called to higher service."

FAMILY WORSHIP.

If it is true that all the good women read their Ladies' Home Journal we sincerely trust that none of them overlooked a recent very sane article on Family Worship. Some people have a notion that it is out of place, or very commonplace at any rate, to ask guests to join in family worship. We agree with the sense and soberness, as well as with the wisdom and the dignity of the writer in The Journal who recently said:

"There is probably no mistress of a household who has not felt uncertain about asking guests to join in family worship. Every one has acquaintances she would not hesitate to ask to the table, but would hesitate to ask to the home altar. Perhaps the reluctance arises from a dissimilarity of creed, and a fear of offense in consequence. But the diversity of the creed is no bar. Prayer has nothing to do with creeds. Prayer is the universal religion, and men of every creed and men of no creed may meet together at the feet of our Heavenly Father. The reluctance arises more likely from that weak shamefacedness which too often prevents sympathy between friends on religious subjects. They are afraid to be misunderstood, smiled at, criticized. This latter idea is one which even good and great men have not always met bravely, for when Dr. Fuller once had some guests of great quality and fashion, God-fearing as he was, he omitted his family worship on their account. This act, which he bitterly repented, he designated as "a bold bashfulness, which durst offend God, while it did fear man." But we should remember with the grand old preacher that our guests, though they be ever so high or rich, are yet by all the laws of hospitality below us while they sojourn under our roof; therefore, whoever come within our door should also come within our household customs and discipline. If they sit at our table for meat, it is but kind and right that they should also bow at it in prayer."

It is a very vain and false modesty that puts us out of our way to avoid family worship, or any other sort of worship. People will not think less of you, but have a more exalted opinion of you for going on with your family worship. And your guests, if they are worthy ones, will really enjoy and appreciate your service, even your family worship.

—While the ceremony of the coronation was proceeding, services were held in Trinity Church in this city. They began at three o'clock. The Trinity chimes pealed out "God save the King!" and also "America." In the Revolutionary days a rector of this same Trinity Church was removed from his pulpit for praying for George III. The Consul General of Great Britain attended and many other distinguished men.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

On "The League."

There is evidently something in a name, for some natures and temperaments at any rate. Some names "stick" to folks and refuse to be shaken off. We suppose this is the case with Rev. William A. Sunday—"Billy" Sunday in other words. Now Billy used to belong to a base ball "league." He was in one of the big leagues, one of the foremost league-team players in all the land, when he was converted. He prayed his first prayer, just after his conversion, on a base-ball diamond, and asked God to help him in catching a base ball. Well, Billy has never gotten over the league business. He has formed him a league of his own. As a result of evangelistic services in Youngstown, Ohio, he organized a personal worker's league consisting of 1200 men, under the "Banner of Jesus Christ," and the object is personal work every day. In the past year this League has held over 500 meetings, with an attendance of 100,000, and with a record of 1,000 conversions. These meetings consist of singing, brief prayers and testimonies. The League is democratic in spirit and undenominational but Christian. The motto is "To bring men to a closer knowledge of the love and saving power of Jesus Christ."

So Billy Sunday is still on the "League."

Publicity and Suicides.

A committee appointed by the American Academy of Medicine to investigate the cause of suicide made its report at Los Angeles, Cal., June 25, and what that report does for the "yellow journal" is enough. In substance these experts, after due investigation and deliberation, declare that the members of the press who write up every detail of a suicide, and hang the tragical picture in thousands of mental art galleries, are accessories to the crime, and all too often literally cause other suicides to follow in rapid succession. The "suggestive effect" of newspaper publication of details of suicides is assigned as the real cause of the rapid increase in the death rate from suicides in this country.

The report further says:

"The average value of a human life has been reckoned at $3,000. On that basis, the loss from suicide in this country in 1908 was $24,996,000. Is it worth trying to save, even if one is not actuated by any higher motive of humanity?"

The publication of suicide news on the plea of news is declared to be a makeshift. The report says in part:

"Your committee finds that alienists are practically unanimous in the opinion that the suggestive effect of the reading of details of suicides is a powerful factor in the causation of suicides among susceptible individuals.

"After the publication of a spectacular suicide by jumping from a high place in Chicago, displayed upon the front page of Chicago papers, several similar attempts were made within a few days."

And what is said by this committee on suicide is largely true also of the increase of crime in the cities.

The Price of a Tragedy.

An interesting bit of history has recently been revived in England. When the second earl of Essex was about to be beheaded for treason in 1601, he sent to Queen Elizabeth a ring which she had previously given him in token of his prayer for pardon. This ring, which had it reached the Queen, would certainly have brought the desired pardon, never reached her majesty, as the man to whom it was entrusted by Essex betrayed his trust, and the earl suffered his fate.

The other day that identical ring was put on sale and was purchased for seventeen thousand dollars—the highest price ever paid, probably, for the memento of a tragedy.

We are thinking of the price paid for a signet of pardon and forgiveness, had that signet been delivered. And there was once a signet delivered and a sure and safe pardon granted to all who had sinned and who would believe. He paid the price Himself. Reader, you are not called upon to pay the price, but to look, believe, live. Unwashed Feet.

Remember that the one and a half million flies that swarm about your house, seek, and sometimes find entrance to your kitchen, and even your dining room, walk across your plate, light on your bread, wade across your vegetable dish and make tracks across the butter, do so with unwashed feet. And remember also that earlier in the same day they have sought, and tarried long at every place of filth and uncleanness about the premises. House flies, stable flies, and pig stile flies are one and the same individuals, and they glide from one locality to the other with a most easy and unconcerned air, all with unwashed feet, and with absolute indifference as to consequences. Men and women, if you care for the health and happiness of yourselves and families, join the State Board of Health in their slogan—"Swat the Fly." His unwashed feet are not worthy of your table and your food.

Our Mexican Neighbors.

The Mexicans are not far from us, but we know little of them, except when a revolution breaks out or there is a civic or political upheaval. In round numbers there are 16,000,000 Mexicans, but to tell what breed and blood they are is another question. About one-third of the population are Indian, and some 20 or 30 Indian tribes still preserve their ancient language. It will be recalled that when this country was settled there was an advanced Indian type of progress and development, not to say of civilization, in Mexico. These Indians gave bold resistance to the white man's invasion, and they still obtain in large numbers on their native heath. Only one-tenth of the Mexicans are white. The remainder are a mixed and mongrel type. There are millions of peons, untutored, illiterate, and know neither the gospel nor civilized methods of life. There is every sort of religious belief, non-belief and unbelief. Many are atheists, agnostics, free-thinkers and pagans. What Mexico needs most of all is a better educational and religious system, without which our sister Republic will ultimately lapse into absolute barbarism.

Present Day Capital.

When the twenty-five directors of a great national bank were in meeting the other day the president of the bank, himself now a man worth a million, arose and asked that each one present of the directors who had begun business with a capital of as much as $10,000, stand up. Not a man of the twenty-five, whose combined wealth aggregated $20,000,000, arose. The president kept putting his proposition, cutting off a few hundred each time, till he got down to $150. Then one man got up, saying that was the sum with which he started in life. The others all started with less sums than that, and many with nothing, the president himself not even having a dollar or a pair of shoes when he went out to work for himself.

It was an object lesson. Present day capital, that capital which is doing things, is not money, but brains and energy. The men of means today were the men without means a few years ago; but were men with brain, energy, grit, push. And when one possesses these, you need not fear as to his future, whether one has a dollar to begin with or not.

—On June 15th the Senate confirmed the appointment made some time ago by President Taft of William H. Lewis, the Boston negro lawyer to be Assistant Attorney General of the United States.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE. No. 6.

Untold places of sinful pleasure entice millions. Many of them have very attractive signs inviting the travelers to walk this way and enjoy themselves, and so they do, and find out too late, with painful regret, that the end of it all is the way of death. At the last, when time has counted their last hour, and they are whispering to themselves, "Tell me, my soul, can this be death?" and the world with all its helpless vanity is receding—that will in reality be a sad, hopeless time. Then the thought may come rushing through the mind, ringing with clear accents, "O that I had lived the beautiful life." So tenderly and lovingly does the beautiful life give promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come. May we think right and act our part well in the great play of life so that it may be one of real pleasure and perfect peace.

Yonder is the way of the bar-room which has forever barred so many precious souls from the kingdom of our Father. What a great pity it is that so many have been lost. Lost, lost, lost in time and eternity. There is much trouble, much danger and certain death for all who follow this way. If it seems right to you, it is possibly the wrong way. Don't be misled by the fine paintings and the brilliant and beautiful colored lights which gleam on either side. At the end of this way the lights all go out, giving place to blackness and total darkness. It is so lonely and cheerless and hopeless when the lights which lead you in the wrong way all go out. O, it is so delightful to have Jesus, the Light of the world with you all the way, and especially so when in the dark hour of death. His light will grow brighter all the time as it leads you to perfect day, and when other and all the lights down the wrong, broad ways shall be forever extinguished, the light of the world will shine on. But right in the center of all these misleading ways are the words of Jesus shining above the brightness of the noonday sun—"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." That is the way, the straight way, the highway, the heavenly way, and the further you travel in this way the more beautiful and attractive it becomes.

Thinking beautiful thoughts, and living beautiful lives certainly help us wonderfully to develop into greatness and goodness. Then with a willing heart and a splendid sense of duty hink on these things. David said, "Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice." Many—yes, many, if not all of us, have had broken bones. So many different ways they have been broken; been so often crushed by the heavy hand of affliction. Trouble in a hundred ways has intruded itself and rushed with mad, wild haste into many a life. Sin has marred our beauty and injured the foundation of our joy. But when we turned to God for the joy of his salvation we realized more fully the words, "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." J. T. Kitchen.

AN ELON SOLILOQUY.

When the projectors and founders of this institution, stout of heart and consecrated in purpose, were examining the claims of many localities for its location, they wisely selected the twenty-five acre site now so famous for its beauty, healthfulness, and sacred associations. The site selected, to men imbued with the spirit of the Scriptures, readily suggested the name, Elon, which is the Hebrew word for oak, the campus being covered with a rare wealth of stalwart, native oak trees, which are at once a source of comfort, inspiration, loyalty, and delight. Under their spreading branches, symbolic of strength, many a noble impulse to strong endeavor has been born and many a drooping soul revived and inspired to higher and better things.

It is a common remark heard from visitors here that nature has done more to make Elon College beautiful than for any other college campus in the South. It is a quiet, sequestered, holy place—a place for the knitting of character and the unfolding of soul. A spirit that cannot expand under such beauty and charm of natural scenery and inspiration must be indeed callous and indifferent and unresponsive. No wonder Elon's students love the place and cherish its sacred memories.

But man's part, too, has been well done in adding to nature's lavishness in beauty and charm. Magnificent Dormitories, equipped with steam heat, electric lights, baths, sewerage; an administration building, massive, monumental, unsurpassed; a central, heat, light, and water plant; beautiful winding walks and promenades, accommodated and suited to the rolling contour of the earth's surface in this delightful hill country of Western North Carolina; the whole surrounded by beautiful, well-appointed homes—these and many other features of man's handiwork combine to make Elon College not only one of the most beautiful, but also one of the most wholesome educational centers in the South. It combines all the advantages of city life in equipment, convenience, and accessibility (there being eight passenger trains daily and telephone and telegraph connections with the ends of the earth), while it lacks the distracting and alluring and enticing disadvantages usually found with such advantages in educational institutions in large centres of population. Time and the universal verdict of an increasing patronage have proved the wise foresight of Elon's founders in their choice of location for this goodly institution of learning, culture, training, and character building.

PRESENTATION OF MEDALS.

(Address at Elon College Commencement, June 6, 1911, delivering medals to members of graduating class, by DeRoy R. Fonville, Attorney-at Law, Charlotte, N. C.)

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—

You have doubtless heard of a wife who sought to get a divorce from her husband on the ground of refused cruelty. I have often thought a good case could be made out against many of those who deliver prizes or render decisions of judges on occasions like this.

O, with what refinement of cruelty they keep an audience waiting and make the heart of each contestant struggle with his Adam's apple in a vain effort to displace it! I know of no mor heartless individual than he who would deliberately trifle with your interest,—now arousing your hopes by a glance at this one, then dashing them by a complimentary reference to that one, only to render the decision in favor of another. I have thought that they who do so have never gone through the excruciating experiences of that moment which the contestant feels when the nerves are on the very edge of expectancy, when budding genius is putting on the tender leaves of hope.

Knowing with what eagerness you are awaiting the decisions of the judges and the termination of these exercises, which are of necessity rather long, and having no desire to incur the displeasure which I have indicated, I shall be very brief in rendering the decisions and awarding the medals which have been won by these successful contestants.

When asked to perform this pleasant duty I went into executive session with myself and fought out and conquered, as I thought, the desire to make a speech. But, as anyone knows who has ever felt it, that is one of the most persistent, and one of the hardest to control, of all the desires that human flesh is heir to. And so I feel it tugging at my coat-tail even now. But I am sure you will pardon me if I do not yield to the temptation to instruct a patient and long-suffering public in some matters about which they are informed, very likely as well as or better than myself.

My duty is simple. I am here the spokesman for those judges and committees who have had the decisions to make to place upon the brow of the victors the laurel wreath,—in this public way to reward them for the excellence they have shown in the various contests in which these honors have been won.

In the great world of human achievement, it is ever the man who, in the language of the street, "has arrived" that we honor most. His name is oftenest pronounced, his song is oftenest sung.

"O, the little more, and how much it is. And the little less, and what worlds away."

The rewards of success often come from being able to nose out a competitor in the last few yards of the race,—won in the ninth in baseball,—a touchdown in the last half-minute of play brings a victory in football. The ability to clip a quarter of a second off the world's record for a hundred yards' dash sends the runner's name flashing across the continent.

Achievements in intellectual contests are not so spectacular, not so easily observed, as are those of a physical nature. But in this day of momentous achievement they are far more important. In either, success comes to him only who is willing to pay the price. It is often the result "Of days devoid of comfort, And of nights devoid of rest."

It is only as a thing is difficult to do that men find any strong incentive to accomplish it. Its very difficulty is its attraction. Just now the world's interest is centered chiefly in aviation. To navigate the air is a difficult and dangerous business, yet for its prizes men in ever-increasing numbers are risking their lives today.

At Dartmouth College a story is told of a young Frenchman who, upon being assigned to a room in one of the dormitories, burned upon his door a large V. He was a diligent student. He worked hard and refused to join in many of the nocturnal pleasures of his companions. They called him a "kill-joy," but they respected him and admired him. They twitted him about the V, but he remained silent and they could not make out what it meant. The last commencement approached. Four years of hard work lay behind him. When honors were awarded he had led his class and was valedictorian. Then it was that they understood the meaning of the V. He had paid the price and had earned the reward.

He who will deny himself the fleeting pleasures of the moment, who is not content to drift with the tide, whose thoughts run out to the future and there grasping some worthy goal set it up in his heart and never for one moment lose sight of that dear object of his hope and his strivings, who has the courage to say "No" to the promptings of passion and of self-indulgence, who resolutely conquers his hatred of work and courts the goddess with unflagging industry and zeal,—it is he who conquers in the strife and has the rewards that are the deserts of the victor.

There is a sad side to the awarding of medals and prizes. There are always so many deserving ones who are "near-winners". Oftentimes a false step or an unfortunate stumble causes the victor and the vanquished to change places. Do the vanquished lose their reward? By no means. The consciousness of duty well-performed, of having done his best, of his growth in capacity and in knowledge of himself, of powers in himself heretofore undiscovered, and of the fibres of ambition awakened within him. Demosthenes hissed down by the mob because of his stammering speech and unpleasant appearance to Demosthenes the master of the same mob and the greatest orator of antiquity was but a step.

Whether the palm of victory shall rest upon his brow or be placed upon the brow of another, that boy or that girl struggling up through poverty and meagre opportunity, knowing little of the comforts or pleasures of life but much of its hardships and its sorrows, whose hands have grown callous with toil but whose heart is as sensitive as wax, clinging tenaciously to his ideals and his dreams, sublimely confident that for him the Future holds something of good in store—that boy or that girl has my profoundest sympathy and respect.

I take great pleasure in presenting to you who have won them these medals with the reminder that as you go forth into the world bearing your blushing honors full thick about you, that world will little ask what you know, who you are or what you have done. But two questions it will put, the answer to which will largely determine your success or your failure—"What are you? and what can you do?"

ELON AND HER SERVICE.

Institutions, like individuals, keep the spirit, the nature, with which they are born. This is the reason you cannot have a change of government in a nation without a revolution most likely, and at least, without change of officials. The spirit of freedom with which the American independent government was born is likely to be found here as long as we have a government. About the oldest universities lingers the same spirit which was there when they were young and struggling colleges. In every old man you meet is the same spirit that was his controlling power in youth. It is by this identity of spirit that we know in adult life and even in age that we are the same person that we were in childhood.

This fact of continuity of the same spirit through the life of institutions is of interest when thought of in connection with Elon College. This struggling small college was born with the spirit of faith as a ruling force in its life, and no administration, though, in years to come, millions may be added by a single president to equipment and endowment, will ever be able to put more into the vital character of Elon than the spirit of faith which was engendered of its first president.

Now, the wholesome effect of a college so constituted as to its spirit, is sure to be tremendous upon a church which will faithfully foster and support it. Not all will approve the administration of any one president, but no one of the Southern Christian Convention or in sympathy with it and its undertakings can wisely afford not to stand by Elon College.

It is rich in its teaching and character-building power. There are abundant evidences of this fact. Though there may be some who would claim that it has been known to injure if not ruin more than one youth. Such persons should consider that in spite of the wonderful and universal efficacy of the blood of the Christ, many persons in Christian lands are drawn down by sin as with a cart rope. And Elon College cannot make noble those who are bent on the ignoble and vicious. Such persons, besides bringing disappointment to relatives and friends, also bring reproach upon the College, and are not desired as students.

With a personal knowledge of a number of educational institutions, and with otherwise acquired knowledge of many others, I feel Elon, by comparison, to be one of the best institutions for pure, sane college training and moral culture to be found by parents seeking a College for their sons and daughters.

The College, in keeping with its own character, desires students of large faith, or capable of it. It wants young men and young women of diligent inclinations and loftiness of aim, loftiness in the sense of thorough scholarship and honesty. Let ministers, alumni, and all other friends aid in bringing such young people to the College as students.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

--Prof. W. P. Lawrence, now lecturing in Wooster University, Wooster, Ohio, sends a contribution of uncommon worth and merit on "Elon and Her Services" which we print elsewhere this week. It is worthy of careful reading and consideration.

—Under date June 7, Rev. W. W. Staley writes: "My sick ones are all improving. Mrs. Staley was critically ill, but is now convalescent. Annie is well. Mrs. Pearce may never be well again, as she is nearing 89; but is better."

—The officials of the Sunday-School and Young People's Convention of the Eastern N. C. Conference have issued a very neat folder containing the program of their next annual session which convenes with Damascus Church, Orange Co., July 18—20. The program is well arranged and inviting and the Convention should be largely attended.

—Rev. L. I. Cox., of Elon College, assisted Pastor Morgan in a series of meetings at the Graham Church last week. The Alamance Gleaner says: "The series of meetings at the Christian church grow in interest. Rev. L. I. Cox is preaching some able sermons."

—Bro. Holt Allen, Linville, La., makes a plea for a preacher that we truly trust will find a response among some of our ministerial brethren. Where is the minister who can say, "Here am I, Lord, send me"? If there is such an one we hope he will correspond with Bro. Allen. The matter he mentions is certainly worth interest and consideration.

—President Harper is a wide awake and a hustling man always, but at Bethany and Franklin, Va., with Pastor Rowland, he evidently found people as wide awake and as ready to good works as himself. And the combination brought results worth reading about.

The matter is related briefly by Bro. Harper elsewhere.

—In order to increase the circulation and usefulness of The Young People's Worker, the editor, Rev. M. W. Butler, is offering three gold watches to contestants to secure subscriptions to his publication. In the June 15 number of The Worker the conditions of the contest are given. We wish Bro. Butler all success in his journalistic endeavor and in his efforts in behalf of the young people.

—Rev. P. T. Klapp, having sold his home and farm near Pittsboro, N. C., was at Elon College with Mrs. Klapp last week looking for a suitable place to purchase and build near here. We trust Bro. Klapp was successful in finding a place to his liking, as he would receive a hearty welcome back to the community of which for several years he was a useful and influential part.

—The Young People's Missionary Movement has been changed to the Missionary Education Movement, and the Supreme Court of New York has ordered the new name to become effective July 10, 1911. The purpose of the organization has not changed, but the change of name is in keeping with extensive educational developments in the various mission Boards. There is a campaign on throughout the country now to educate people, especially young people, in matters that pertain to missions.

—The editors of North Carolina had their annual outing and convention at Lenoir and in the mountains last week, and from reports had a great and good meeting. They did the right thing in electing Bro. J. J. Farris of the High Point Enterprise as president—one of the very best fellows and most loyal and wide-awake members in all the craft. Mr. Josephus Daniels of the Raleigh News and Observer was elected as orator for next year, which means that the editors will hear something wide-awake, up-to-date and inspiring.

—In a personal letter Prof. Lawrence writes under date of Wooster, O., June 28. "A great fight is on in Ohio for State-wide prohibition. Sixty two counties of a total of 84 are already dry. The anti-saloon league is trying to elect a constitutional convention next fall that will make prohibition constitutional. If they succeed this will give the State prohibition 20 years, as another convention could not change the constitution within that period." Prof. Lawrence's address is 200 Beall Ave., Wooster, O., where he is happily domiciled. He is greatly enjoying his work, and the life about Wooster.

—The United Society of Christian Endeavor convenes at Atlantic City, N. J. July 6. Among the distinguished Speakers on the program are President Taft and Speaker Champ Clark. There are likely to be more than 10,000 delegates and visitors and this promises to be a meeting of national note and significance. President W. A. Harper of Elon College, who had been for two or three years past President of the North Carolina Union was placed on the program, but owing to duties for the College had to decline. President Harper is known as an enthusiastic Endeavorer.

—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, June 30:

There was a pretty wedding at Mt. Carmel Christian Church, in Isle of Wight county, yesterday afternoon, when Miss Lily Ballard was married to Fabius Clements, of Chattanooga, Tenn. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Ballard.

The church was a bower of floral beauty. The color plan was white and green.

Arches of green and white were used in altar decorations.

The ceremony was celebrated by Rev. H. H. Butler, pastor of the church, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley.

—Though he did not accept for such a length of years, the Board of Trustees of U. C. College, Merom, Ind., elected Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., President for a term of six years.

—Last Saturday the editor was present at the annual children's day exercises at Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax Co., Va. Everybody else within a radius of several miles seemed to have been there also. The exercises were of a high order, Misses Nannie B. and Macy Farmer, Miss D. Thompson and Mrs. Minnie F. Cook having given much time and effort to training the children. The Ladies' Aid Society served refreshments, after a magnificent dinner, and cleared about $55.00. In the afternoon there was a missionary exercise given by eight or ten young ladies that was not only entertaining but very impressive and instructive. The Ladies' Aid Society of this church is a great factor for good, and besides doing much local work supports a Bible woman in Japan.

—The Christian Endeavor World, felicitating over the fact that Speaker Champ Clark is to address the National Endeavorers at Atlantic City gives some interesting items about this man now much in the public eye:

"He is one of the many Americans that through grip and grit have climbed from the bottom to the top. He paid for his education by working as a farm hand and by clerking in a store. Then he edited a country newspaper, practised law, and attained the distinction of becoming the youngest college president in the United States. That was in 1873—74. How old was he? He was born in 1850.

He climbed the political ladder steadily and rapidly until he landed in Congress and in the Speaker's chair. What other chair awaits him we dare not prophesy. At the Atlantic City Convention his theme will be "Good Citizenship." He is an excellent example of his subject."

At first people laughed at the hookworm, but the truth will not, and now there is seriousness and business. The number of cases of the disease reported as treated by physicians in North Carolina has grown during the past twelve months from 3,250 to 21,000; the number of doctors treating the disease from 183 to 597; and the number of people microscopically examined for it in the State Laboratory of Hygiene from 500 to 23,312. Seven thousand two hundred and seventy-six of the latter number were found to have hookworm infection, and 2543 showed others of the eight intestinal parasites. Though some of these were found quite frequently the hookworm infections were found three times as frequently as all the others combined. Thirty-one per cent. of the 23,312 examined showed hookworm infection. Of the number examined, 1,000 were State troops, 1,000 were orphans, 1,000 children in the State schools for the blind, deaf and dumb, and the reformatory. Nearly 1,000 insanes have been examined. The other 19,000 are largely made up of public school children taken at random.

—The Norfolk Daily Landmark of June 12:

A missionary rally was held at the Memorial Christian Temple yesterday with a forceful sermon on the subject by the pastor, the Rev. McD. Howsare. A collection amounting to $605 was taken, exceeding the church's pledge for this cause. "The Extension of Christ's Kingdom" was the subject of the discourse. "As a church we are face to face with the blessed opportunity of making our annual pledge to the cause of missions," said Dr. Howsare. "Permit me to state briefly a few reasons why we should this day cheerfully pledge to the limit of our ability. We can show our appreciation of the missionary spirit of men in past. If some one had not been missionaries in heart the Gospel story would not have come down the ages to us and we might be at this hour in the darkness of heathenism. It is our blessed privilege to be a channel of blessing to those who come after us and to the men the wide world round who have no knowledge of the Christ. Freely we have received, freely let us give. If we truly love God and are seeking to please Him, that very love in our hearts will compel us to try to carry out His will among men and certainly God desires that His love, mercy and truth shall be made known to the last inhabitants of earth. He has commanded us to go and teach all nations. 'If ye love me keep my commandments.' The world needs just such a Savior as ours. Ignorance, darkness, superstition and heathenism have sunken the world down deep in the regions of despair and death. Their cry for light and life has come ringing across the waves and we hail with joy the opportunity to send the light. Other things we can do to hasten the coming of Christ's Kingdom—We can pray for our missionaries. We can become thoroughly conversant with the progress of missionary effort in our own time and thus be able to talk missions intelligently to others. We can give ourselves to the work. Every church should have a representative of its own on the foreign field. We can give of our money to support the work. When we sit down to count up that which belongs to our Lord we ought to divide it between the maintenance of the work here and abroad. The mightiest enterprise of the ages is the evangelization of the world. The church has before her this glorious task, and as she goes forth to the stupendous undertaking she has the promise of the Master, 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' Her victory is sure." At present the church has several of its own membership engaged in mission work. Rev. P. S. Sailor is doing work among the Chinese and Syrians in Boston and Rev. D. P. Barrett and wife are missionaries in Porto Rico.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The summer campaign for students is now well under way. Every mail brings requests for catalogues and information concerning the college, and for the past few days applications have been coming in in large numbers. All reports from the field are most encouraging and the prospect grows brighter from day to day. Ample preparations will be made for the large number expected at the opening of the fall term, and other improvements will soon be made looking to the opening Sept. 6th.

The illustrated bulletin, or May number of the College Bulletin, is expected from the press this week. It will contain numerous cuts of scenes and buildings around the college and will be a very interesting number. Preparations are being made to send this number to every student who was here last year, and a great number of the bulletins will be mailed to others.

Dr. E. L. Moffitt, who has been in Ashboro for two weeks, arrived home on Sunday, whence he will leave with his family for Mrs. Moffitt's home at Harrisonburg next Tuesday. Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, who has been ill, is very much improved at this writing and was taken to Burlington Monday to her sister's, Mrs. P. H. Fleming.

We are very glad to report this week that our venerable townsman, Mr. Sam Tate, is considerably improved and it is hoped that he will be out in a week or so.

The quiet of the summer vacation is being broken now by the arrival of quite a number of visitors: Mrs. C. H. Rowland and children are visiting Mrs. Rowland's sister, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence; Mrs. S. E. Denton and children of Pine Apple, Ala., are visiting at Dr. and Mrs. Newman's, and Mrs. W. C. Wicker's sister, Mrs. Stagg, of Norfolk, is visiting here. Prof. S. E. Denton of the class of 1902, who has been principal of the High School at Pine Apple, Ala., for several years, has been elected Professor of Latin in Southern Georgia College.

We also understand that Mr. Wm. F. Warren, Class 1910, who took his master's degree at the University of N. C. this year, has been elected Principal of the Reidsville City Schools.

Uncle Wellons and Dr. Newman attended the Laymen's Convention in Burlington on last Sunday and report a very pleasant and profitable trip.

Mr. E. T. Hines, of McLeansville, N. C., a member of this year's class was a visitor here this week. Also Miss Lula Harris is visiting her sister, Mrs. W. E. Lowe, of Faculty row.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Junius Kernodle, who have been living here for the past several months, are here this week preparing to move their property to Durham, where Mr. Kernodle has gone into business.

A PREACHER NEEDED.

Dear Editor:—

I have had in mind for some time to write asking the assistance of your paper in procuring a preacher of the Christian Denomination to work in this State and particularly in this community. I think the Christian Church is needed as much in this country as any place I ever saw. A good preacher would be of unknown value and service here as the people seem to be looking and longing for something to do along this line. But it seems that there is a lack, to some extent, on the part of the preachers. I think it will take a strong man to do the first work as there will be some obstacles to overcome to get the work under headway. One difficulty in particular is the Campbellite Church. There are a few churches of that faith in this country and everybody thinks that and the Christian Church are the same, and as that church is not much appreciated a preacher would have to overcome that. Now, Bro. Editor, suppose you take up this matter through The Sun and plead for it as a home mission work and see if some one of the conferences cannot send a man out here another year. I think at or near Linville would be the finest location at all for a church as the community is thickly settled and there is but little church work being done. We have a fine school and a lot of good people. All they lack is a leader. Hoping to see favorable results from this writing.

Fraternally yours,

H. W. Allen.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

At the quarterly meeting of the Hillsboro Street Christian Church of Raleigh last Wednesday night, President Sam. M. Burritt, of the C. E. Society of the church, submitted his quarterly report and it showed progress and consecrated work in the organization. Many officers of the societies do not make reports to the church, but this should always be done, for the society is an auxiliary of the church and a part of it.

Following are some facts gleaned from Brother Burritt's report:

"Charter closed January 15, with 8 charter members. Roll call April 1st showed 22 members. Roll call next consecration meeting, July 2, will show 35 members. Average visitors in attendance, 5. Average collection since April 1, 80 cents. Collection first Sunday in each month (consecration meetings) goes to building fund of church. Collection June 25th, $1.40, given to home mission fund of church."

Some of the special work done by the society:

Furnished choir for evening service at church. Organization of a sister society at music for two hours every Sunday at services in penitentiary. Secured 75 Bibles for prisoners in penitentiary and proposes to organize two C. E. Societies in the prison—one for white and one for colored prisoners. Will organize a sister society at Macedonia Christian church on July 9. Will organize Junior Society in Raleigh church at an early date.

This is a society of Christian Endeavorers in name and in fact.

When this issue of The Sun reaches its readers, Christian Endeavorers from every quarter of the globe will be assembling in Atlantic City for the 25th International Christian Endeavor Convention which begins tomorrow. The program carries the names of many of the first men of the nation, both in the political and in the religious world, while leading men from other lands will grace the convention with their presence and thrill it with their words. We at home have just as important a duty in connection with the convention as those who go. Our place is to pray for the success of the great gathering, to ask for divine guidance for the leaders and for a blessing upon the delegates and the work.

Remember the convention in your prayers.

Have you elected delegates to the young people's convention of your conference? If not, do so at once. If you can attend, do so regardless of whether you are elected a delegate or not. If your church does not elect delegates see that it is represented and the convention blessed by delegates from every church in the conference. Following are the places of meeting and the times of the various conventions.

N. C. and Va. conference, at Shallow Ford church, near Elon College, July 11, 12 and 13.

Eastern Virginia conference, July 19, 20 and 21, Liberty Spring Christian church.

Eastern N. C. conference, at Damascus Christian church, July 18 and 19.

Western N. C. conference, at Liberty Christian church, July 28, 29 and 30.

Officers of Sunday schools, C. E. societies, and classes of the school should see that the report blanks for your church are filled out and forwarded to the convention in due time, together with the funds asked for the support of the convention. Much depends upon the accuracy of the reports and their prompt delivery to the secretary of the convention.

The new editor of this department, whose name and address appears in the heading of the department, is very anxious to make it of the most possible service to the convention. To this end he asks that all matter for publication in The Sun concerning the work of the department be sent to him. Also let him have letters and reports from your work often and everything that he can use will be printed.

We want to know of the work each individual society, Sunday school or class is doing. Have you started anything novel, are you doing any definite work, have you organized a new class or society? If so, let us have your experience for the benefit of others.

SUGGESTIONS FOR C. E. LESSON, JULY 16.

Topic: "Our Debts: What Are They?
How to Pay Them.—Rom. 13:7-10.

If the leader will memorize the Scripture and recite it, he will find it much more effective than reading it. The lesson this time is brief and many perhaps have already memorized it.

Obligation and debt are words almost synonymous, whether considered in courts, in business, or in church. A great many obligations can be enforced in courts; some debts can be collected by legal proceedings. They are obligations that represent some pecuniary worth; something that can be reduced to dollars and cents. Many of our greatest obligations are enforceable only at the bar of our own consciences; we are the judges of whether or not we will pay those debts.

Every man comes into the world burdened with debt. "If the world owes every man a living," man, on the other hand, owes the world and God his best service. The world does not, as a matter of fact, owe any man a living; it only owes him the opportunity of making a living, and that opportunity is extended to all who are willing to accept it.

Every parent owes certain duties—certain debts—to the children they bring into the world; and every child that has received the care and attention of fond parents during period of their rearing owes duties and has obligations toward those parents that years cannot repay.

Life creates corresponding obligations between man and man. As no man lives or dies unto himself, just so no man can escape the obligations of society. With modern means of transportation the world has become one great neighborhood. The enlightenment of our generation has forced us to see that not only do we owe certain duties to our neighbors, our state and our nation, but a world obligation has been brought home to us. Men are coming to see that his brethren dwell not only in his household, but in other parts of his own land, in Mexico, in China, by the placid Pacific, by the Ganges, and along the Nile.

We are debtors to all nations. Paul admitted this, the history of the world proves it, the inner consciousness of every man bears evidence to the fact.

What a great field is that of obligation; how great is the debt that hangs over us. It is not appalling, but it is such that it requires the best of every man's life, his devoutest thoughts, his most earnest endeavor.

From Other Pens.

Our debts are numbered by our opportunities of service.—E. A. Prentiss.

There is but one way to keep your credit good, and that is never abuse it.

What is your duty? Every day's demand upon you.—Goethe.

We all owe cheerfulness to those around us. We have no more right to slap them with a glum look than with the hand.

A lazy fellow lagged along saying he could not find bread for his family. "Nor I," replied an industrious mechanic, "I am obliged to work for it."

We are not only to tell people of their sins, but we are to tell them of Jesus Christ—not only to tell them what the Bible says about Him, but what we know of him from personal experience of His mercy and love.

When a merchant's customers do not pay him, he cannot pay the wholesale dealer from whom he obtained his goods, and then the wholesaler cannot pay the manufacturer, and the manufacturer cannot pay the workman, and the workman cannot pay the retailer from whom he buys his goods. Dishonesty runs on in an endless wave.

Let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and have even a greater convention than we had last year at Apple's Chapel. Let us all come together and take an inventory of our work, and lay plans for greater work next year. If you have done well, let us know, so we may be inspired and encouraged, and if you haven't done well, come let us help you. J. S. Truitt, Secy.

NOTICE.

To S. S. Superintendents and Pastors in the W. N. C. Conference.

Our Young People's Convention of the Western N. C. Christian meets with the church at Liberty, July 28-30, 1911.

The time is almost here. We want to make this a good convention, and in order to do so we must have a full delegation. Therefore I want to ask you to have delegates elected at once; and be sure to elect those who will go. We want every S. S., C. E. Society, Organized Class, Teacher Training Class, and any other religious organization of your church, represented in this convention.

Each organization is entitled to one delegate for every 25 members, but any such organization, however small, shall have one delegate.

Also each organization is expected to contribute two cents per member for the expense of the Convention. Please collect this amount if possible, and send by your delegates to the Convention.

Please look after this matter at once, and by so doing you will contribute greatly to the success of the convention. Remember the date, July 28-30, and the place—Liberty, N. C.

Trusting that we shall have your hearty co-operation, and hoping to see you at the Convention, I am

Yours for the best Convention yet,

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention meets at Liberty Spring Church, Nansemond Co., Va., July 19-21, 1911. This church is located about eight miles south of Suffolk, in the aforesaid County. The nearest railway station is Nurney, Va., two and a half miles from the church. It is desired that all delegates, who can do so, come by private conveyance. Those coming by rail will buy tickets to Nurney, on the A. C. L. Ry. This train leaves Norfolk at 8:15 A. M., and 3:45 P. M., and Suffolk at 9:30 A. M. and 5 P. M. This afternoon train will not reach Nurney in time for the afternoon session. By all means come on the forenoon train, if possible. Those who expect to come by rail should notify Mr. Eddie B. Rawles, R. F. D., Suffolk, Va., at once. He is chairman of the Transportation Committee. It is necessary for him to know, in advance, when you expect to come. Please attend to this matter at once. The Committee desires to furnish conveyance for all coming by rail, but this cannot be expected unless you notify the Committee in advance. Nurney is a flag stop, and there are no electric lines on hackmen to meet all trains, unless notified.

—Some of our Western States are exceedingly liberal, not to say lavish in their appropriations to their State universities. For example,

This tax will yield about $2,250,000 a year, which is equal to a five per cent. income from an endowment fund of $45,000,000."

And her educational system is helping to carry the West forward with leaps and bounds. Not only her State schools, but are liberally endowed and widely patronized.

—Press Bulletin No. 23 recently issued by the North Carolina Experiment Station contains some interesting information about house flies. The house fly eggs, deposited mostly in stables and in decaying vegetable matter, hatch in less than 24 hours.

"A generation of houseflies, from egg to adult stage, may develop in ten or eleven days. This shows that if the stable litter is hauled out once a week, flies will not have time to mature.

Fully fifteen generations of houseflies mature during the summer.

Each female fly will lay about one hundred and twenty eggs, and this fact serves to account for the great numbers of flies where the breeding places are not done away with in a community.

Flies do not usually travel over a few hundred yards from their breeding places, so that it is entirely practicable, by united effort on the part of those who are interested, to do away with most of the houseflies in any community.

CHILDREN OF GOD.

There was recently printed in a prominent religious paper in New York an article written by a Presbyterian minister of another State, in which he strongly insisted that God is the Father of all people. He went so far as to say that "the universal fatherhood of God was certainly one of the fundamental teachings of Jesus." This is positively untrue, for Christ never taught such a thing, but quite the reverse. In his controversy with the unbelieving Jews he most distinctly said that they were not God's children, but were the children of the devil. He never called unbelievers his brethren and sisters. Not an instance of it can be found. It is a rank denial of Christ's teachings to say that he taught that all people are the children of God. And none of the apostles ever declared such a thing. In Romans 8:16, 17, Paul says: "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God; and if children, then heirs—heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." There is significance in the phrase, "if children." If all people were God's children, and Christ taught such a thing, then the apostle would not have used the qualifying word, "if." Paul knew that only those are God's children who become such by a new birth, and hence a new relationship with God. In the next chapter, Paul says: "It is not the children of the flesh that are the children of God." Surely, this contradicts the assertion that all mankind are God's children. Paul's statement is in complete accord with Christ's affirmations. He did not say that the Holy Spirit witnesses to the spirit of unbelievers that they are the children of God, for the simple reason that they are not his children. Thenote the fact that John, in his first epistle, makes a distinction between the two classes of people, in these words: "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil," saying, "Who-soever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." If you are unsaved, do not claim to be a child of God. C. H. Wetherbe.

A DECLARATION NEEDED.

We need a new Declaration of Independence in this country.

A Declaration of Independence from the money power; and to this end we, the citizens, need to free our own souls from the spirit of greed.

A Declaration of Independence from the saloon power; and to this end we need the spirit of union and the courage of our convictions.

A Declaration of Independence from traditionalism; and to this end we need to examine all new ideas, all honest reforms, without prejudice and with sympathy.

A Declaration of Independence from militarism; and to this end we need to cultivate the closest friendly relations with all other peoples and races.

A Declaration of Independence from bosses; and to this end every citizen needs to study political conditions, become acquainted with the records of candidates, and take an active part in political affairs.

These five evils are worse for this country than George IV ever thought of being, and this new Declaration, if made by all of us with sincerity of purpose, would do more for our land than the Declaration promulgated on July 4, 1776.—C. E. World.

THE HERITAGE OF FAMILY PRAYER.

Family prayer omitted; children cheated. Perhaps fathers have not thought of that feature of the case. Merely for expression of one's own personal religion, men are apt to think that praying aloud is not necessary anywhere. They can be true and kind in the home and clean and upright in the world, and still say all their prayers secretly.

But this does not touch at all the vital point about family prayer. Family prayer is not simply the father's prayer prayed in the hearing of the family; it is really the family's prayer. The family is entitled to it.

The question of family prayer is at bottom a question of children's rights. The father who omits it must face an indictment, not of personal irreligion, but of injustice toward his sons and daughters.—Ex.

CONVERTED THROUGH A HYMN.

A rich Japanese silk merchant sent for the missionaries in his town and entertained them most hospitably. He told how, as a child, he had attended a Sabbath-school. "Very often," he said, "right in the midst of my business the words of the hymn, 'Jesus loves me, this I know,' came to me, and, try, as I may, I can't get them out of my mind." He then repeated the hymn from beginning to end, and added: "Though I've lived my life without religion, I feel that it is the most important thing there is, and I want my little girl to be a Christian; and it is for that purpose," he added emphatically, "that I have placed her in the mission-school, that she may become a Christian."—Exchange.

A Great Movement Started.

The Catch-My-Pal Movement originated in Armagh, Ireland. On July 13, 1909,

Rev. R. J. Patterson, a Presbyterian pastor in that city, saw six drunken men lounging in a street near his home. He promptly drafted a pledge, and these six men became charter members of what is called the great "Protestant Total Abstinence Union." At the first anniversary celebration last year Mr. Patterson reported that 120,000 men and women were enrolled, pledging themselves, with a vow "for God and home and native land, to see this thing through." From Ireland, the organization has spread into England, Scotland, America and South Africa.—Ex.

My Dear Children:—

Our wheat is all up, and considering the extremely warm weather, guess we did very well. Our crops have been dry and thirsty, and rain will certainly do good and increase the products of our farm.

Our children (20 of them) enjoyed a treat Friday night, June 23rd, in the way of a two-mile drive to Gibsonville, N. C., on wagons to hear a concert, given by fourteen children of the Odd Fellows' Orphanage at Goldsboro, N. C. The class is taking their first tour, and thru' the kindness of Mr. Barry, the gentleman who is traveling with them, our children were admitted free of charge. A good audience greeted them and we hope they made a nice sum, for with this money they are to buy farm land which they are beginning to realize is so much needed. They have been organized nineteen years, and have about 165 children.

One of our boys was heard to remark, "Well, I guess we have to work harder than they, but we have more pleasure." Guess he must have been thinking of his trip to Gibsonville. He was driving "Old Bock" to the single wagon and had to keep his eyes open pretty well, for Bock will shy at almost anything along the road; but Willie doesn't mind that for he is getting able to manage any animal on the farm.

Our children will be ready some time in the near future to sing for our friends who care to have them visit the near by churches. They love to sing and "go" especially.

Let every member of the Band of Cousins come promptly with their nickels and dimes this month. By the way, our little girls are learning to sew; even little Thelma and Rose have a work bag, but they have no thimbles and scissors. Do you have any you could give them?

Lovingly yours,

Uncle Jim.

Elon College, N. C., June 30, 1911.

Dear Cousins:—

I am the little fellow that got my feet cut. I will tell you how I got hurt. We boys were off in the woods raking pine straw, and we decided to fish awhile. So I came to the house to get the seine. I climbed up on the wall, and my foot slipped, and I fell on the blade of a wheat cradle, and cut one heel off and cut the other to the bone. I am getting on fine now. I went to Burlington Tuesday and got me some crutches. I can walk very well with them, but I am afraid I will fall. I have lots of fun teasing the little girls when they come around me. One of the boys stays with me at night, and he carries me to ride every Sunday afternoon. Aunt Myrtle carried me to ride last Sunday afternoon. I certainly did enjoy it.

Well, I guess I will close as I am sleepy.

Your loving little cousin,

John Rogers.

..Brown Summit, N. C., June 24, 1911...

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I send you mine and brothen's dues. 20 cents, for June. Papa and mama went to Apple's Chapel to meeting today and took brother and me with them. Rev. L. I. Cox couldn't be with us today, but is to be with us tomorrow. Papa finished getting up wheat today, and is pleased with his crop.

Papa doesn't think much of base ball—too much gambling and idolatry in it, for people in the community will go ten miles in two horse wagon loads to see a game played on Saturday, and spend the day in a sinful way and yell themselves hoarse in the game. Then let one of our able preachers give out an appointment the next Saturday at the same place, and there will not be over twenty-five people to hear him and praise the Lord.

Hope you and the little cousins are well.

Holt R. Geringer,

Guilbert H. Geringer.

You can play any game and make sin of it boys. God commands us to be temperate in all things.

Spies, N. C.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I will write you my letter and send my dime for April. I hope the little children will get along with the measles all right. Much love to you and the cousins.

Your nephew,

Lester Morgan.

Children all up and begging to go bare-foot, Lester. Guess shoes will go to the "winds" in a few more weeks. (Am sorry this letter has been delayed.)

DIED.

Hidden.

Mary Maggie Hidden was born April 16, 1869, and died June 15, 1911, aged 42 years, 1 month and 29 days. Sister Hidden had been a member of the church at Woods' Chapel about fourteen years. Her father, Reuben Hidden, who died about seven years ago, was a pillar in the church there. She leaves many friends and relatives to mourn her departure, but the burden falls especially heavy upon her good old mother, Mary Jane Hidden. Funeral services were conducted at Woods' Chapel, June 16, 1911, by the writer.

Hatch.

July 16, Henry Emmette Hatch, a prominent and prosperous farmer of Sussex County, living near Disputanta, departed this life. A week prior to that time he was found in his field in a helpless and semi-conscious state. He had gone to the field leaving word, "If I do not return by dinner, do not be uneasy. I want to finish my job before I get back." He did not return. At two o'clock, still away, the family became uneasy and went in search of him. When found, he was lying on his back in the scorching sun where he evidently had been for several hours, in a helpless and semi-conscious state, being totally paralyzed on one side. He was taken home and cared for as well as love and skill could do, but death had fixed its grip and his powers were gradually taken away from him, and he died on the 16th. During this time he spoke but a few words, and was hardly able to make known his wishes. He seemed to suffer agonizing pain till death brought relief and the soul took its departure.

Brother Hatch was fifty-four years old. He was one of twelve children. All have preceded him into eternity except three: Mrs. J. D. Grammar, of Sussex; Mr. B. F. Hatch, of Petersburg; and Mr. E. A. Hatch of Wakefield.

He leaves a family of four: a devoted and godly wife; two daughters, Mrs. L. W. Morris, of Disputanta; and Miss Maggie, who has just finished two years' work at Farmville Institute; and one son, Jesse, who has been at home with him this year.

Brother Hatch was not a member of the church at the time of his death. He was a member of Centerville once, but withdrew. However, he told me last summer that he believed and trusted in God, and had the assurance that he was a Christian.

His remains were interred in the family cemetery near Disputanta June 18th. A great concourse of friends were present. May God bless the bereaved ones.

Richardson.

On the fifteenth of June, I buried in Spring Hill Cemetery, Little Rochelle Richardson, son of Brother Eugene Richardson, of Suffolk.

Rochelle was four months old, making the third little flower this father and mother have given to God,—the third tie they have to bind them to heaven. God bless them all the way.

Savage.

age, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Savage of Suffolk, Va., died at Lake View Hospital. The little fellow had suffered for several weeks, and all that loving hearts and medical skill could do was powerless to avert the end. His stay on earth was short, he being only twenty-one weeks of age, but he had won a place in the hearts of the family that is now vacant and sad. The funeral services were conducted from the residence on Sunday by Rev. J. C. Robertson of the Methodist Church and the writer, and the interment was in Liberty Spring Cemetery. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones in the hour of sorrow.

Stanley C. Harrell.

Edwards.

Francis Knight Edwards, infant child of Mr. S. H. Edwards and wife, this city, was born at St. Francis' Hospital, Oct. 27, 1910, and was named for the institution and the family physician.

The first several weeks of its life were spent in the home and care of its aunt, Mrs. Ada Crumpler, who soon learned to love it as her own. But after a long and trying period of dangerous complications its mother sufficiently recovered to ask for the dear babe back to her own bosom, and then it shared the love of mother and aunt who seemed to vie with each other in motherly devotion to the beautiful little babe.

On June 16th at about half past three o'clock in the afternoon, little Francis stepped out from mother's arms, from aunt's keeping, and from father's watching, to the beautiful land that lies beyond, where no sin ever enters and no life is ever spoiled.

On Friday morning the body was taken to Center Hill Baptist Church, Isle of Wight Co., Va., where the writer conducted a little service in honor of her memory, in the presence of intimate friends and loved ones, and then gentle hands lowered the little form beneath earth's green sod to await the resurrection. Beautiful floral offerings and tributes were tenderly placed on the new mound, and then mother and father, and loved ones turned back toward home to realize more fully if possible their loss, and to think more of heaven and the new condition now binding them heavenward. Francis lived only a few months, but she made for herself a very large place in the hearts and lives of parents, aunt, and others. A friend's and pastor's love and sympathy extended. May God bless and comfort by His sustaining grace.

MARRIED.

Williamson-Park.

A beautiful church wedding was solemnized at Mt. Auburn Wednesday morning, June 28, 1911, when Miss Kate Park became the bride of Mr. Leo Williamson, of Washington, D.C. Miss Lucy Hayes was maid of honor, with Mr. Blackwell Scoggin as best man, and little Misses Bessie Tanner and Bertha Tucker in fairylike white, as ring bearers. Miss Park is the accomplished daughter of the late Mr. T. A. Park, of Tarry's Mill, Va., and has for the past year been a member of the faculty of Southern Female Institute, Chase City, Va., where she won many friends, who with the host of friends at home wish for them a long, happy, and prosperous life. The groom, a fine business man of Washington, D. C., has the congratulations of the entire community, in winning the heart of this charming young woman. The church was tastefully decorated in daisies and southern smilax, which, with ferns and evergreens, made a beautiful effect. The bride was beautifully attired in an exquisite gown of embroidered manquisite, with veil caught with a diamond brooch, lilies of the valley, carrying bride's roses. Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered by Mrs. Alice Finch of Mecklenburg Co., Va., also during the ceremony "O Perfect Love" was rendered with characteristic grace.

The happy couple left amid hearty good wishes for a trip to the northern cities. A large attendance of relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by the pastor, James L. Foster.

A SAMOAN'S SERMON.

I will tell you a story I have heard about a wreck that took place in Papanagi (White Man's Land). One night there was a large vessel wrecked, on a bluff, rocky coast. In the morning, when the people of the town assembled, the sea was covered with the wreckage; but there was no trace of the crew, and the rocks were so steep that no man could possibly get up them. The people met to look for the crew. Some of the foolish people began to run off, but one wise old man cried out: "Stop! hear what I have to say. It is good that we go and look for those poor men; but consider what good you can possibly do if you go without anything. Let every man fetch a rope, the strongest and best he has, and then it will be some use trying. Without ropes we can do no good, for the rocks are high and there is no path down."

This plan was approved, and soon every man had his rope hanging down over different parts of the cliff, as if they were fishing. At length one man thought he felt a tug at his rope just as if a fish had got hold of it. He waited to make sure; and the second time there was such a tug that he could not mistake. So he shouted for help, and men came and all pulled away until they landed a poor, half-dead man safely on the top of the cliffs. Then they all rejoiced greatly. Listen! That poor shipwrecked man at the bottom of the cliffs is like the heathen around us. There are plenty of islands where the people want the light but can not get it. They are crying for help, they want life; but they can not scale the rocks themselves. I liken those men who are running about without ropes to many of our people here in this land. They say they have great love for the heathen, but their love is all in their mouths, and talk won't draw the man up; we want ropes. I liken those who got the ropes and want fishing for the men to those who love in deed and in truth—who not only say they love the heathen, but give their money, and do all they can to help God's work and save souls from death. Listen again. We can not all go to foreign lands, but we can all find ropes (contribute to the mission work). Take care that your ropes are good and strong—ropes that won't break, and then God will bless us, and many, very many, will be saved.—Life of Dr. George Brown.

—On June 11 an aeroplanist, while flying over and round about Boston ate lunch, which he had taken with him, in mid air. Eating on the wing.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.Mt. Gilead.

The second Sunday in June was a good day at Mt. Gilead. Bro. W. C. Wilder, our faithful superintendent, had arranged for Children's Day on that occasion, and a large crowd gathered to see and to hear what was to be done. Prof. King, the vocal music teacher of New Hope Christian Church, had been invited to be present with his class and furnish music for the occasion. He came, bringing about eighteen others with him. It was inspiring to hear them sing. They sang with the spirit and the understanding—sang with their whole hearts and minds and strength, and every one present greatly enjoyed the music. The exercises by the children were good, very good, and reflected credit upon those who did the training.

When the morning exercises were over, the large audience was invited to the grounds to partake of a bounteous dinner which the good ladies of the community had prepared. It was such a dinner as only a prosperous country community can furnish, and from what I saw, I think everyone did ample justice to the good things that were offered.

In the afternoon, this writer preached to a large audience, made larger than it would have been, because a thunder-shower drove numbers into the house that would have remained out-of-doors, had it not rained. It seemed that the Lord favored us, for the rain stopped about the time we concluded our afternoon service. The meeting was rendered orthodox by our getting a very good collection for missions, and also a nice amount pledged for the purpose of digging a well.

Our protracted meeting begins here the second Sunday in August.

Herbert Scholz.

Waverly, Va.

The first Sunday in the month was Foreign Missionary day here. A special program was prepared and executed. A contribution taken in answer to the appeal of March. About forty dollars was realized.

The second Sunday was observed in the Sunday schools as "World's Peace Day," with special feature to the program. And last Sunday was observed as "International Day," using the programs furnished by the International Association. The program was very instructive and a delight to all present. Last Sunday was also anti-Saloon League Field day when the pulpits were open for their speakers. Rev. Mr. Arrendall, their man from Kentucky, was here. He spoke at the Baptist church in the morning and expected to speak in our church in the evening, but a severe storm at that time interfered. Only about ten people were present. He gave them a little talk, which was an encouraging message concerning the status of affairs in Virginia.

Next Sunday is to be observed as Children's Day here for the Beginners' and Primary Classes.

During the month of July, there will be no services at any of my churches. They have been kind and considerate enough to extend me a vacation for a month. I am very grateful for this and hope we may be mutually blessed thereby. My churches are in fairly good condition. The attendance at the Sunday schools is unaccountably poor and has been all the year. We hope the rallying season will improve us.

H. E. Rountree, Pastor.

New Hope.

The regular appointments were met Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday a number of the singing class were present and made music to the delight of those who heard it. The music is a strong arm of the church. On Sunday, the funeral sermon of Maggie Minga, daughter of J. R. and Pattie Minga, was preached by the pastor. At the time of her death she was five years, four months and sixteen days old. May God bless all the relatives. The congregation was large, the music excellent and the people attentive.

The community was made sad on June 7, 1911, by the almost sudden death of Bro. E. H. Haywood. He was a member of New Hope Christian Church. He will be greatly missed in the neighborhood. He was a loving husband and father. He leaves a wife and eight children, six boys and two girls, to mourn their loss. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

Franklin and Bethany.

It was my high privilege to be with Rev. C. H. Rowland and his people at Bethany and Franklin, Va., on the fourth Sunday and Monday of June and part of Tuesday following. These churches had already given $450 towards Elon's Special fund.

It was mission day and Bro. Rowland in six minutes raised $72.50 with such ease, having asked for only $60.00, that it occurred to me that the time was opportune to present the claims of the College's Special Fund further. Brother Rowland seconded the motion. No public appeal was made, but private solicitations were resorted to wholly. The brethren responded liberally, cheerfully, grandly, Franklin adding a round $1,000 to her former $250 and Bethany $150 to her former $200, and the brethren were all happy and smiling when it was over—especially that genial, popular servant of God, the Rev. C. H. Rowland. Thanks, kind friends, and rich blessings to you every one.

The schools of the Third Church and the Temple combined on their picnic this year and secured the "Annie L. Vanseiver" for a boat trip to Yorktown, which was made Thursday, 29th. The day was a perfect one for such a trip, and at 7:40 A. M. she pulled out with 380 on board. We reached Yorktown about 12:00 o'clock. Very soon the crowd had scattered, some under the shade trees of the historic old court house, others under the shade of the trees near the river bank, all doing justice to the good things that a picnic crowd usually carry. Then some had a ball game, a great many visited the beautiful monument which commemorates the surrender of Cornwallis, and to the national cemetery which is beautifully kept. There are many historic houses, one built in 1715, which was said to be the first Custom House in the United States, being the point of entry for New York, Philadelphia, and all points north and east. When one stops for a moment to contemplate the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and the many other great cities both north and east, as they are today, it almost staggers one to try and conceive of it as a fact that such a statement is true, and it also calls to mind that we are really a young nation. I could write much about the old forts there and the beautiful York river and other things of interest, but will not now. We left there at 5:15, reached home at 9:00, all well and happy except the sea sick ones, and most of them had recovered by that time. I think it is the most successful picnic outing we have had.

LET EVERY CHURCH TRY IT.

Six years ago Trinity church, Aurora, Ill., was giving nothing to missions, either diocesan or general, and only $700 for current expenses. Long experience had made the vestry familiar with annual deficits. There was strong opposition to letting any money go out of the parish. A clergyman of missionary vision became the rector and gradually led the vestry to realize the importance of a share in the missionary enterprise. A canvass has been made, the duplex envelop adopted. The subscriptions amount to $350 for diocesan missions, $460 for general missions. Subscriptions for current expenses have increased from $700 to $3,330. In addition there are available the Christmas and Easter offerings and the loose money in the alms-basins each Sunday. A $12,000 parish-house has been built; $3,000 have been given for a rectory. The salary of the rector has been increased by $1,300. All in less than six years.—Spirit of Missions.

HOW TO LIVE.

"How to die" is not half so religious a question as "How to live." The man who lives with a clear conscience will die happily and without fear. The problem of life is living, not dying. Life is the most natural gift of the Creator, for he gave man life by breathing into him the breath of life. He wants us to live long and live well. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Life is strengthened and prolonged by normal, natural means. Artificiality weakens and destroys life. A few months ago the earth was dead to all appearance, frozen to death by a long winter, numbed by the cold frosts. Every leaf was gone, the skeleton trees were ice-clad and brittle. The hills and fields were buried beneath the snow. But suddenly they lived again. Spring, with her glory and fragrance, was with us. The crocus and jonquil, the hepatica and arbutus, the violet and tulip were here. The trees budded and blossomed. The robins began to sing in the morning. All this is natural.

Why not learn "how to live" from God's good world around us? In other words, get out into the air, even if we have to be out before breakfast in order to do it. Fill your lungs with oxygen. Take vigorous exercise in the open air. Take time to walk home instead of lazily hanging on a strap all the way up the hill, or breathing the condensed second-hand air of sixty passengers, mixed with tobacco smoke from the rear platform. Swing your arms when you walk and get up motion. Don't move slowly along as if you had locomotor ataxia, and then try to tell yourself that you are tired and have spring fever. Raise up the shades and let the sun into your office. If it hurts your eyes turn your back on it and have the sunlight for a background. Buy a bunch of arbutus or violets for your wife on your way home. The man who spends more money for cigars than he does for confectionery for his wife and flowers for his home doesn't deserve either. Instead of thinking how other men ought to live, demonstrate your theories by personal experiment. Let sunshine, sleep, fresh air, exercise and a happy frame of mind transform your pal, sleepy, round-shouldered, tired, worried existence into a life worth living, and the summer and fall of 1911 will go down in your life's history as the best one on record.—John Timothy Stone, in New York Observer.

Dr. Richards tells of a community of Congo Christians that became aroused concerning the heathen Africans on the other side of the river. "We are saved, and they know nothing of Jesus," they cried. "What shall we do?" At last fifty of them took food and crossed the river, and stayed among the villages there for three days, preaching Christ.

"—God's love for poor sinners in very wonderful; but God's patience with ill-natured saints is a great mystery."

HE SEEKS US.

He seeks each of us by the inner voice and emotions in our hearts and minds, sometimes we hear by the sudden, upstarting convictions of duty and truth, which sometimes, without manifest occasion, flash across our hearts. These voices are Christ's voice, for in a far deeper sense than most men believe, "He is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

He is seeking us by our unrest, by our yearnings after we know not what, by our dim dissatisfaction, which insists upon making itself felt in the midst of joys and delights, and which the world fails to satisfy as much as it fails to interpret. There is a cry in every heart little as the bearer of the heart translates it into its true meaning—a cry after God. And by all your unrests, your disappointments, your hopes unfulfilled, your hopes fulfilled and blasted in the fulfillment, your desires that perish unfruitful—by all the mystic movements of the spirit that yearns for something beyond the material and the visible, Jesus Christ is seeking His sheep.

He seeks us by the discipline of life, for I believe that Christ is the providence of God, and that the hands that were pierced on the cross do move the wheels of the history of the world and mold the destinies of individual spirits.—Alexander McClaren.

THE HUMILIATION OF EVIL DOING.

(Cease to do evil; learn to do well.—Isa. 1:16, 17. Golden Text for Sunday, July 16.)

We think it strange indeed that so many of Judah's and of Israel's kings would persist in iniquity, and in idolatry, when invariably they were brought to shame and to humiliation by it. Good kings invariably came to great peace and prosperity; bad ones to distracting warfare and to incomparable loss. Good kings carried the nations forward; bad ones led the people backward. In the light of this invariable sequence, it seems strange indeed that these kings would not obey and serve the true and the only God. But they would not.

Strange? Yes, but the same thing goes on in this world about us to this day. The wicked shall perish. The bad shall be brought low. Sin sows its own evil consequences. The soul that sinneth, it shall die. He that soweth the wind shall reap the whirlwind. These Scriptures we know to be true. They have proven through all generations of men that they are true. Yet men are wicked, many are bad, sin abounds, and not a few of us sow not winds but whirlwinds.

Here it is: In spite of these general truths, which all know to be truths, the individual thinks that in some manner he himself will escape. He will not escape, but he leads himself to believe he will.

Poor, simple, sinful, foolish Manasseh. His father had been a good man, and under him, and solely because of his unshaken and steadfast faith in the true God Judah had prospered, and was peaceful and happy. Now this son, with the way to safety and security and prosperity blazed out before him so clear and so plain, turns his back upon all the good teaching and splendid examples given him and sets his face to the bad. And to what low depths, indeed, does he descend.

The 9th verse of the lesson shows how far into sin this man went: "And Manasseh seduced Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that they did evil more than did the nations whom Jehovah destroyed before the children of Israel." Manasseh went the limit and would give no heed to the voice and the plea of Jehovah.

Th evil consequences came. Of course they did. They always come. Evil consequences follow evil deeds as night follows the day. Surely Manasseh must have known, and yet his heart led him astray.

No pen can portray the evil consequences, the suffering, the shame, the humiliation that have ever followed and that do follow in the wake of sin and evil doing.

Now this great and mighty king, this monarch that dared to defy and to disdain God, this ruler of a great people who felt that he could with impunity set up altars to idols in the house of God, this man was brought to chains and fetters and to prison. The great king is brought low, indeed. Sin brought him there, just as it had brought many before, just as it has brought millions since.

Now in his shame, suffering, and humiliation, Manasseh prays. In the hour of his deep distress he calls upon the God whom, in his prosperity, he had ignored and defied.

How very, very often this same thing has occurred in this world. In the time of their prosperity and plenty men forget God. In the hour of their humiliation and suffering they call upon God.

And the cry of the penitent heart God ever hears. No man, however charitable and merciful, would have ever forgiven Manasseh. But God did, the very God whom he had defied and sinned against in untold ways.

Man in the hour of his humiliation and suffering may call upon God, and God will hear and will answer him. No wonder the pardoned Paul was constrained to cry out: "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."—(Rom. 11:33.)

THE BOOK OF LIBERTY.

When civil liberty had been won in this country, more than a hundred years ago, no wonder the people began to east about, and to clamor for religious liberty. Liberty was in the air. The spirit of liberty was in the people's hearts. There already prevailed the idea that men's conscience had a right to be free, that men had an inalienable right to their own private judgment in matters of church doctrine and dogma. This spirit of liberty, this feeling of freedom whereby and wherein men had shaken off political intolerance, had itself sprung from, been born out of reading and studying the open Bible.

The Bible is the book of liberty.

It is no wonder and no accident, then, that people of a great free country found themselves in the full possession of the power to vote according to their will, and worship according to the dictates of their conscience, that they acknowledged the source of their heaven-sent liberty, and in the formation of their church said:

The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice—the Bible shall be our only creed, and every one shall have the right of private judgment in its interpretation. Why should they not say so, for the open Bible had been the birthplace of their liberty? The open Book had made them free. And this open Book will keep men free. In its reading men are made equal. It is the source of all true democracy.

So when the spirit of liberty had found full sway in a free country, no wonder the seer and prophet, Rev. Rice Haggard, stood with the Bible in his hand before an epoch-making assembly and said: "I move that the Bible be adopted as our only rule of faith and practice—that the Bible be our only creed." It was a fitting tribute to the Instrument of the people's liberty. For out of reading that Book the people had found their way to freedom, civil and religious. It was indeed a fitting climax to a great and to a wonderful event. Reading a Book had made a people free.

In a recent Homiletic Review, the great Brooklyn preacher, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, paid this tribute to the Bible, and proved its power over the people's mind from the facts of history:

"The Bible has won a great place in men's hearts because it is the instrument of liberty. This book has been the spring of democracy. For a thousand years tyrants and oppressors hated this book and forbade its publication. The reason is self-evident. The Bible tells us that the world was fitted up by the Father as a home for his earthly children. This world has abundance and to spare for all his earthly children. The house was lighted and warmed by the good God; it was furnished and provisioned and stored with pages of wisdom for the scholar, and instruments of use for the inventor. Therefore the sons are to live in peace in the Eden house, and never turn its fruit-trees into clubs, nor feed its sweet flowers unto war horses. Being brothers, the strong son is to serve the weaker sons, and to find his happiness in service. And even the people that have different colors are to remember that God hath made of one blood all these to dwell in his beautiful world house.

Jesus stopped before the beggar's hut, and stayed before the prince's palace, and in the forehead of each wrote one word: "Made in the image of God." Now the essence of a thousand political revolutions was in Christ's conception of men as brothers and God as a father. "Our Father who art in heaven," that lowers Nero to the level of his slave, and that exalts the slave to the level of the emperor. "All ye are brethren"— that ended the divine right of kings, destroyed the baron and his law of feudalism, brought the French Revolution, wrote the Magna Charta, gave a charter to the Pilgrim Fathers, wrought out this republic, is the pledge and prophecy of the final victory of democracy in Turkey and Russia, in India and China. The great battle between Gog and Magog is on. Tyranny and aristocracy and class privilege are doomed. Knowledge must be democratic and serve all; liberty must be democratic and redeem all; morals must be democratic and diffused through all; property must be democratic until all have abundance; comforts and conveniences must be as universal and free as the sunshine, the summer, and the rain. Whatever serves the aristocratic few is doomed. Any art, tool, or law that serves all shall come to place and influence. All this political restlessness means that society is blindly feeling after the democracy of property, and when long time has passed society will find it, and the last form of equality shall be achieved. Therefore, as the Bible gains supremacy over men's minds, men and women of genius become voices for the slave, the prisoner, the orphan child, the poor seamstress, the victim of the sweatshop; for democracy must prevail in a world ruled by this book of brotherhood which has always been the instrument of liberty."

THE SERVICE OF SUFFERING.

It is sinful to willingly and wantonly inflict suffering upon any one, whether with word or deed, act of cruelty, unkindness or injustice. And yet God turns our suffering into wonderful and valuable service. The service of suffering is to adorn, to beautify, to perfect the soul. You have seen individuals who are the subjects of unkindness and injustice, and yet these souls are as tranquil as a summer day, their lives are as rich and as beautiful as the golden glory of the setting sun. They have been adorned through suffering. So it comes about that our bitterest foes are unconsciously contributing to the beauty and the benefits of our own inner lives.

Christ himself was made perfect through suffering. It sounds and it seems strangely wonderful. Christ was already good and great, without spot and without blemish. Yet because God wanted Him absolutely perfect, wanted Him put far beyond the touch of spot, sin or blemish, wanted Him elevated so He should draw all men unto Him, because God wanted the Christ to be all this and more, He permitted Him to suffer. The service of suffering did its complete and perfect work in Him. And the finest souls you have ever known have been refined, adorned, beautified, magnified through suffering.

The Christian Observer recently related an incident which beautifully illustrates this:

"At the great flower show at Mannheim, on the upper Rhine, there were displayed millions of flowers in endless profusion of color, fragrance, and beauty; but among them all, the gems of beauty, the most highly prized, were the Alpine flowers, the children of winter and the storm. These had been perfected in their beauty by the struggle with stern and savage nature. So the soul is beautified and strengthened by the struggle with the storms and tempests of life. Suffering may mean to the soul growth in beauty, grace, and power."

A NEW MAGAZINE.

For all too long a time has our Church gone without a magazine devoted entirely to the teachers and officers of the Sunday school. Many have felt the sad lack in this line, and we hail with delight, therefore, the first number of this magazine now issued from our own publishing house and devoted to the work of teaching our teachers and helping our officials in managing their schools.

The Board of Trustees of the Christian Publishing Association at its annual meeting in January elected Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., Editor of the new Sunday school Magazine to be known as the "Teachers and Officers' Journal."

At the Quadrennial session of the American Christian Convention at Troy, Ohio, the Convention adopted the report of the Joint Committee recommending to issue a new publication for Sunday school workers. And it was the mind of the Board that the time for an advance step in the line of Sunday school work had come.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge is a member of our church in Erie, Pa., and President of the Erie Christian Conference. He has had a long and varied experience in Sunday school work. Beginning in a little Sunday school in the woods of Michigan, he has been successively, scholar, teacher, superintendent, City Association officer, County Association officer, and now he occupies the position of Field Worker with the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association.

The new magazine will be devoted to the interests of Teachers and Sunday school leaders; i. e., pastors, superintendents and Sunday school officers in general. It will be published in the interest of the Greater Sunday school and will contain a summary of the Sunday school news of the world—Contributed articles and editorials on the Departments of Sunday School Organization.—Devotional Daily Bible Study.—Sunday School Question Box.—Lesson Helps for the Teacher (not for the pupil, particularly) and other good things too numerous to mention.

It will be issued Quarterly, (beginning July 1, 1911), at the same time as the quarterly supplies and may be ordered with them, or at any time. The new magazine is to sell for: single copy, 40 cents per year; school subscriptions (three or more copies to one address), 30 cents a year; 8 cents a quarter.

Marion Lawrance, the greatest Sunday school man of the country, General Secretary of the World's and International Sunday School Associations, has sent to the editor of our Teachers and Officers Journal a greeting for Vol. I. No. I, and in his letter and greeting says:

"I cannot withstand the temptation in the name of the old church where I was led into the service of Christ. My father and mother were members of the Christian Church in Yellow Springs, O., and in that church I began my service as a Sunday school worker, under the superintendency of President J. B. Weston, now of the Christian Biblical Institute, of Defiance, Ohio. I joined the church at the age of fourteen, under the preaching of N. Summerbell, and was baptized by him."

But you will want to read all of his greeting—and reread it, also the many other good things this first number contains, such as, What the Sunday School World is Doing, by the Editor; Question Box; A Lack of Knowing How, Howsare; Temperance Training for Children, Hamill; The Home Department, DeGoullon; The Organized Bible Class, Kendall; Methods in Teaching, Hornbaken; Sunday Schools as Evangelists, Morrill; The Sunday School Outlook, Goodwin; Lesson Helps prepared for the Teacher; etc.

You need such a journal—every officer and teacher in every Christian Sunday school needs it, and we believe it would be a very good investment, and one that can be well afforded, for the school with which you are associated to subscribe for it for its entire corps of officers and teachers.

We sincerely trust this new and much needed magazine will find a ready and a large circulation, and that the teachers and officers of all our Sunday schools will avail themselves of it at once.

Orders should be sent to the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE. NO. 5.

Such a healthy influence as a pure refined life exerts cannot fail to have a lasting effect, and it is worth more to have these choice blessings than to own thousands in gold and costly gems. Every one would do well to cultivate winsome manners—a cheerful happy spirit, and to make the most and best of life. The young and all classes of people ought to enter upon their work with affable ways and lovable dispositions, as it would greatly lessen the friction of life, and help them wonderfully to overcome the difficulties which so often hinder progress and prevent success. Correcting little faults, sweeping out animosity and prejudice—dispelling envy—driving out tattling, throwing away malice, by taking hold of the precious promises of Jesus which will brighten and sweeten you through time and eternity. Time is too precious and life too short to waste in idleness, selfishness and sin. Let honesty, truth, and beauty help to form character, for these will help to lay the foundation for a splendid structure on which to build for eternal life. Lay the foundation carefully, then build upon it a character which will last forever.

The bright side of life is always the best to look upon. It is more attractive and much more pleasant and inviting than the dark side. As flowers lean towards the sun from their winter room, and look through the glass for more light, more sun light, so does mankind lean to the beautiful bright life for comfort and happiness. Some time you may feel inclined to get on the wrong, the dark side, but the right side is always the safe one. Some ways look beautiful, very enticing and inviting, but there is danger and ruin in them. Purity, honesty, and truth twisted into a garland of triple beauty, will adorn any crown and gladden every heart influenced by them. If these can be blended together, they will impart present comfort and everlasting happiness. Oh, the wasted lives and the lost opportunities which exist in many places! That was an important event, a great decisive moment in their lives when they came to the parting of the ways. There they halted, hesitated and looked at the many beautiful and inviting ways; then they started with downcast eyes as if in deep meditation, some one way and some another—some in the right way and many going in the wrong ways.

The traveler over the road of time comes to the parting of the ways, and there are so many fascinating, beautiful, inviting ways he is perfectly delighted with them. The way of the theater attracts very many folks who throng the crowded streets of busy cities. There may not be any harm in many of the plays and songs which are rendered with attractive interest, but too much going allures the mind from other duties, and produces more and greater fondness to move in that way. The card table and gambling places are ways which often lead to ruin and death. This practice delights so many until it leads them far beyond the hope of salvation, and draws them into the whirlpool of immortal ruin.

CO-EDUCATIONAL.

Durham Sun.

Editor Josephus Daniels of The News and Observer, while on a visit to the Eastern Carolina Teacher's Training School, which has been made coeducational, took occasion to declare himself strongly in favor of the co-educational system. His observations are especially interesting at this time in that two large church bodies are having a disagreement on this much mooted question. The leaders of the North Carolina and Tennessee synods of the Lutheran church were convinced some time ago that it would be for the best interests of both bodies to combine their educational efforts. Just as the combination was about to be effected it was found that the synods disagreed on the question of coeducation. The North Carolina synod is fundamentally opposed to this system, while the Tennessee synod is just as fundamentally in favor of co-education. There is no middle ground, and it seems that the union of efforts will not be consummated.

It seems strange that the North Carolina churchmen should oppose co-education when there is such a wide movement at the present time toward making the colleges co-educational. The system is gaining advocates every year, and it is freely predicted by prominent educators that within a few decades there will be no large school in which both sexes are not admitted. In demanding that the Tennessee synod abandon its co-educational system the North Carolina synod is demanding that it take a step backward instead of forward, that it be retrogressive rather than progressive.

The old arguments against co-education have been proved by actual experience to be entirely unfounded. Just as it is not good for men and women to be alone during life, so it is not good for them to be separated during any period of life.

Co-education creates a better understanding between the sexes. On the part of the men it creates a better understanding of the feminine character; on the part of the women it creates a better knowledge and understanding of the masculine character. Boys and girls who study together the great fundamental facts of life and the universe are bound to have a greater respect and admiration for each other than where they study these facts apart. Where the sexes are separated during this important period in life they form a sort of idealized misconception of each other's character, which future association is never able to dispel.

The better understanding brought about by co-education results in happier marriage relations. It results in better morals and more refined character, not only in the men, but in the women as well. It makes the men more manly and the women more womanly. There are a hundred advantages that far outweigh any possible objection that can be brought against the system, and as time goes on the old system of education is bound to give place to this newer and better plan.

FAITHFUL SERVANTS.

The student of the Bible must have often observed that God, in choosing men to conspicuously serve him, selected strictly faithful ones. He chose men upon whom he could rely. He called those who would bravely do their duty in the face of strong opposition, and who would deliver their entrusted messages without trimming them down. Such were the true prophets of olden times. Not one of them had an easy lot. All of them had to meet with conditions which demanded courage and constancy. It was notably so in the case of Jeremiah. Israel was in a morally bad condition. Probably no prophet had greater trials to endure than Jeremiah had. It was a very rebellious people that he had to deal with, and they had a strong preference for the services of false prophets. Very gladly did the most of the people listen to him. Those prophets spoke flattering words to the people. They made pleasing promises to them, in the name of the Lord. They had no fear of being persecuted by the unbelieving ones. It was the firmly faithful Jeremiah who was persecuted, and it was because he told them truths which condemned them. He gave them warnings of coming judgments from God. He besought them to repent of their iniquities, and to turn back to the Lord. Not a word of any message did he withhold from the people, even though he might be sent to a black dungeon for doing so. Here is what God said to him one day: "Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; keep not back a word."

It required strong courage to do that duty, and the prophet was equal to it. They had already threatened to kill him. They had already put him into prison, but let him out in season; yet even in prison he was still faithful to God. And when he got out among them, he was as true as ever. He was also faithful to the best good of the people, for when God's servant does his full duty, he is faithful to those to whom he is sent.

And thousands of such kind of men are needed in Christ's pulpits today. They should be staunchly true to the whole Bible. They should fearlessly declare the very Word of God, and make no concessions to the liberalism of the hour. God defends such ones.

THE EDUCATIONAL CRISIS.

Under normal conditions a boy or girl ought to complete the high school course before going off to school. But at times there comes a crisis—an abnormal condition, which demands careful analysis or results in dire calamity educationally.

One of these crises is accustomed to grow out of the very nature of the local school. There is no denying the fact that the high school is set for the average boy, and that its pace is not quickened to keep step with the growing mental alacrity of the youth as he advances from primary to grammar school, and then to high school standing. The bright pupil gets impatient at his slow progress and quits school. What he needs is the opportunity of a quicker pace, and to get this he must seek other educational environment, where individual aptitude is studied and provided for and a quicker pace maintained.

A second crisis arises when the boy is prohibited by disease or accident from taking his examinations or fails on one or two studies. The high school curriculum is so arranged that he must review all the previous year's work—mark time for a year practically. To the sensitive soul of childhood this is real torture, because the youth's mind craves variety and his associates taunt him with dullness and laziness. I know no living torment more unendurable than this for the pulsing, expanding, buoyant, progressive spirit of childhood. He loses interest in his work and confidence in himself, and so continues his course under serious disadvantage, or, if he has his way, goes to work with a dwarfed mind. A change of educational environment, where he will be given full credit for what he has passed on and a chance to advance as rapidly as possible will usually restore his self-confidence and renew his drooping interest and enlarge his mental horizon, and so his chances of success in life.

To the exceptionally brilliant, to the plodding, to the victims of sickness or accident, as well as of the distractions and allurements of city life, in our great and commendable public school system, therefore, a change of educational atmosphere and opportunity often tides over a crisis, threatening their future and blasting their hopes.

To any or all of these classes, as well as to those not convenient to high schools or desiring for change of climate or other reasons to attend a good preparatory school away from home, the Preparatory Department of Elon College extends the welcome hand, and offers exceptional advantages under most competent instructors, representing the best in American scholastic training.

Those interested should address the President, Elon College, N. C.

W. A. Harper.

NEWPORT NEWS LETTER.

Excessively warm weather, and an electrical storm at evening, reduced church attendance some here yesterday, although for such conditions our attendance was very good. The Sunday school held their annual election of officers which resulted as follows: Supt., J. J. Baker; Asst. Supt., M. M. Vipond; Secretary, R. L. Stringfield; Treasurer, Mrs. W. B. Baker; Chorister, J. Scott Thompson; Organist, Miss Estelle Butler; Librarian, W. R. Cole. On Tuesday the school went on their annual outing and picnic to Buckroe Beach, and reported a delightful time.

We expect Pres. Harper with us Sunday in the interest of the College, and we shall hope to have him occupy our eleven o'clock period. The friends of the college are expecting a lively canvass for the institution this summer, and indeed it has already commenced. However one-sided, narrow minded and radical some of us may be, and disposed to rule everything out of a Sunday School Convention except Sunday school subjects, and everything from a Missionary meeting except missionary subjects, just let us be sure Elon College will be heard on all these occasions. But who can blame her? I do not. She has a great cause on her heart, a great mission loudly calling to her, and a great obligation and responsibility pressing on her life. Her representatives will ever find a welcome in our fields, homes, and gatherings of whatever sort, except at funerals.

Here comes a suggestion. It is from one who has visions and who dreams dreams; one who sees things to be done provided some one will do them. Here it is: Let's have established in all our churches special days: a "Church Literature Day," "Elon College Day," "Orphanage Day," "Mission Day," and the church a "Sunday School Day." For instance, on "Church Literature Day" our publisher would furnish a reasonable supply of samples of our literature to be a part of the decorations and exhibits of the occasion, the pastor would preach on the subject, and then the best possible effort made to get the church organ in every home of the church. On "Orphanage Day," pictures of the buildings, children, management, farm scenes, etc., would form a part of the decorations of the house for the occasion, and then the pastor would preach on the subject, and follow with an effort to do something practical for the orphanage. Elon College Day, and other special days would be treated in the same way. What do you think of it. Someone says "Visionary." Well, we have not only had visions but actually dreamed dreams. The latest was that we dreamed the devil, one devil, serpent-like, huge and hideous, was moving among the people, occasionally raising himself up looking for the writer, while the people among whom he moved were absolutely indifferent to his presence. But listen, brother, we got hold of a good rifle, ran him up a tree and fired straight at him, and actually killed him! Yes, we have dreamed dreams, and actually killed the devil in a Friday night dream. But he still lives, for it was only a dream. Let's have special days, make them mean much to our enterprises, and thereby finally defeat the wicked one,—a much better way than just dreaming him killed. The object of every Christian institution is to assist in a battle against the adversary of souls. Who will join us in special days for our enterprises and institutions? What do you think, Dr. Atkinson? President Harper, Brother Foster of the Orphanage, and others might speak out on this vision, but let the dream alone.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Dr. Abbott and the Gospels.

The Bible has nothing to fear from conscientious scholars and thorough investigation. Shallow eritics have wrought through the ages, and are yet busy, trying to show that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, Isaiah did not write the prophecy credited to him, and John did not write, and in the nature of things could not have written the fourth Gospel.

Dr. Lyman Abbott has written many things of late years to disturb the minds of many, for he is a vigorous writer, a deep thinker and a busy student. Under date of June 17 we find this from his pen:

"I regard the four Gospels as authentic biographies; and no attempt is made to discriminate between them as historical documents or to utilize the efforts which modern scholars have made to distinguish the sources from which they suppose these Gospels were composed. The object of these articles is practical, not scholastic. The fourth Gospel, after considerable study of the question, I believe to have been written by the Apostle John, or by one or more of his immediate disciples, acting as amanuensis or interpreter, and as probably dating from the close of the first century or, at the very latest, from the first decade of the second century."

Making for Peace.

It is good news indeed that comes from Washington to the effect that within a few days a treaty, already agreed upon, between Great Britain and the United States, will be officially signed and sealed, providing for the settlement by arbitration of all questions arising between these two countries. Even matters of vital importance and national honor are hereafter to be arbitrated. Which means, if it means anything, that England and America, the great English-speaking nations, have fought their last battle against each other, and that a court of arbitration, and not armies with banners and bullets, will bring peace when misunderstandings and difficulties occur in the future.

This ought to have, and likely will have, a salutary effect upon other great world powers. The powers of peace are abroad in the lands.

The Strenuous Life.

It seems that Mr. Roosevelt invented the term; if not, he made it popular, the "strenuous life." To our thinking we are leading a life all too strenuous. We are undertaking too much, and too many things. With our heart do we believe that where there is one man doing too little, there are ten men doing too much. The overworked far outnumber the underworked. The men we meet and know do not need to be prodded, to be told to be more energetic, to be more assiduous, to rise earlier and work longer, to be instant in season and out of season. They are too far gone on that line already. "There are many coming and going and there is no leisure so much as to eat. Humanity swarms in ceaseless activity."

We need a pause in the busy whirl. A stop now and then brings one to one's self and gives one a new view of things. This writer took a few days off last week. It was sweet. It was inspiring. It was life. This paragraph from a recent writer comes to us, and we felt its force: "The need is a respite in the desert; to get to a place where the telephone bell does not ring; out of the roar and rush and struggle; to some serene retreat where we can rest on our oars and listen to the lap of the waters as they rock the boat, and look up through the leaves of the arching branches into heaven's eternal blue, and hear the bird songs in the boughs and the frogs croaking in the flags, while the blessed quiet and peace of brooding nature falls around the soul."

In such calm and quiet and peace man comes to himself, sees somewhat above and beyond himself which lifts him up and pulls him higher.

The strenuous life; we have enough and too much of it for our good. The hardest task of our time is not to work. That is easy. Everybody is doing that. The hardest task is to stop, rest awhile and think. Very few are doing that. It is difficult.

From Cabinet to College.

Judge J. M. Dickinson, of Tennessee, lately resigned from President Taft's cabinet as Secretary of War, has recently been elected to, and has accepted, a professorship in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. Judge Dickinson is a man of national prominence, not because of his cabinet position only, but because of his great learning and ability as Judge and jurist, and because of these President Taft, though differing from him in politics, made him a member of his cabinet.

From the cabinet to the college is not a come down, in our estimation, but a going up. In a college professorship, rightly fulfilled, there is dignity, opportunity, privilege, power. No man occupies a place of more weight and worth than he who shapes the mind, controls the thought, and forms the habits of young men and young women. And this is what the college professor does, when he, by character and acquirement, honors and adorns the position he is called to. Robert E. Lee set a noble example and lost nothing in dignity and prestige when he went from Generalship to professorship.

A NOTEWORTHY BOOK.

Christian Sun readers should greet with gladness the announcement that The Life and Writings of the late lamented Rev. H. Y. Rush, D. D., is to issue from the press at an early date. Dr. Rush was a North Carolina, born and reared, we believe, in Randolph Co., and though going to the West in early manhood for most of his busy life's work, he remained a true and loyal Carolinian and loved to the end the State of his birth and rearing. More than this, toward the close of his life, in particular, Dr. Rush's pen was busy almost every week in making some column of The Christian Sun glow with the beauty and brilliance of his rich and ripe thought. There must be hundreds of Sun readers who are better and happier today, in heart and in hope, because of Rev. H. Y. Rush, the life he lived and the pen pictures of purpose, promise and purity which he drew.

So his Life and Writings is to issue in book form. Rev. B. F. Vaughan, Centerville, Ohio, has compiled and edited the book and announces that it will be ready by September 1st. Bro. Vaughan announces further that all who order the book, with cash, before September 1st can get it at $1.00 the copy, post paid. After September 1st, at $1.25 the copy, post paid. Orders may be sent either to Bro. Vaughan, or if desired to The Christian Sun, Elon College, N. C., and we will forward same. It is, we are assured, to be of excellent workmanship in every particular, and a book well worth the price and more.

WINNING THE WORLD.

In a recent Outlook Dr. Lyman Abbott concludes a very sane article in this fine fashion: The world is to be redeemed from sorrow by Christianity, not by civilization; by changing the nature of man, not by mere improvement in his condition. The world is to be won to virtue by the service of love, not by feats of daring; by affection, not by admiration. And the world is to be won to God by uncompromising allegiance to Him and to His law of truth, purity, and goodness. Whatever whispered suggestion hints to us that compromise with evil is the pathway to success is a hint from that old liar, the devil, to whom always the soul should give the same answer: "Get thee behind me, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."

NOTES AND PERSONALS

—Pastor J. O. Cox, of our Durham church, reports the work moving along encouragingly and the prospect hopeful.

—Dr. Staley received twenty members Sunday, July 2nd, as a result of his recent meeting, and several others are to join, we are informed.

—Rev. B. F. Black, General Secretary of the C. & O. Ry. Y. M. C. A., at Clifton Forge, Va., is greatly enjoying his work and likes his new surroundings admirably.

—The loss of more than 500 lives is attributed to the great heat wave of July 1 to 5, 1911, one of the most extreme, widely spread and deadly heat waves on record.

—President Harper is laboring with zeal and enthusiasm in the canvass for students for the coming scholastic year, and reports a favorable out-look for the College in sections where he has been.

—Rev. E. A. Watkins, Secretary of Christian Endeavor, Greenville, O., and one of the trustees of the United Christian Endeavor Society, has been elected President of Palmer Christian College, Le Grand, Iowa, and has accepted.

—Prof. W. P. Lawrance, who is lecturing at the summer school of Wooster University, Wooster, Ohio, was to go to Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, Tuesday the 11th inst., to deliver a lecture before the summer school there on "The Rise of the English Tongue."

—All Secretaries of Young People's Conventions of the various Conferences may order their report blanks of Rev. A. W. Andes, Secty., Harrisonburg, Va. Bro. Andes is Secretary of the General Convention and has on hand the uniform blanks to be used in the various conventions.

—We have received from Mr. Edgar T. Hines, who graduated from Elon College, in June, an announcement of Jefferson Academy, McLeansville, N. C., of which Mr. Hines is principal the coming year. We predict for Prof. Hines a successful career as principal and as teacher.

—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot:

J. A. McCloud, Sr., of Norfolk, continues very ill at his home in South Norfolk. He is the father of J. A. McCloud, Jr., and is more than 80 years old, and one of the best known men in South Norfolk.

Mr. McCloud is grandfather of Pres. Harper, who has been with him much the past several days.

—We certainly do wish the editors who went would quit writing about what a great time they had at Lenoir. It hurts us who didn't go, and enough is enough. Surely Lenoir and Blowing Rock and Boone are not the only pebbles on the beach, or even the only Edens among the mountains, but the editors who went are trying to make us believe they are. Much of what they are saying is a lot of meanness, we believe, to make us who didn't go feel bad. Human nature is a queer product. Have pity, brethren, and quit.

—Secretary J. E. Pogue of the N. C. State Fair declares that the public taste in regard to amusements has changed very much for the better and that hereafter none but clean and high class attractions need apply for space or place at our annual State Fair. This is wholesome and happy news, for we believe heartily that clean shows and attractions will prove of more worth, even as drawing cards, than unclean and vulgar ones. Public taste has improved and we are pleased that officials who control such things have found it out.

—Mr. Charles N. Butler is visiting and singing in New Orleans. We note from the Daily Picayune that Mr. Butler is, we think, rightly rated as one of the world's greatest singing evangelists and leaders of song, and that great audiences heard him with gladness in New Orleans. Mr. Butler has graciously consented to come this way again and join the editor of this paper in a week's evangelistic services at Pleasant Grove, Halifax Co., Va. This is a fine community of generous, intelligent and Christian people, and we anticipate a week of real joy with this church, and with Mr. and Mrs. Butler to lead the singing.

—We regret that our friend and brother, Geo. M. McCullers, McCullers, N. C., remains in a feeble state of health and makes slow progress, if any, in improvement. Bro. McCullers is known in many of our churches, as an efficient leader of song, and as a very earnest Sunday school worker. He is president of the Sixth District Sunday School Convention of Wake County (Interdenominational), and it was upon his invitation and urgent request that this writer had the pleasure of attending the annual session of this convention at Macedonia M. E. Church last Sunday, and of hearing some excellent addresses, and of talking to the Convention on the subject of The Teacher Training Class. But much as Bro. Mc-

Cullers had desired and tried to be present his health would not admit of it, his feeble condition and enforced absence being greatly deplored by his hosts of interested friends. F

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Extensive preparations are being made for the reception of the Farmers' Institute which is to be held here Wednesday, July 26. A number of prominent speakers are expected to be present, and it is earnestly hoped that all the farmers in the immediate vicinity and elsewhere, if possible, will be on hand. Topics of practical and general import will be discussed, and it is believed that much good will result from these meetings. Be here and bring a full dinner basket with you. A profitable and good time is assured.

As the vacation advances, work in the office increases. Numbers of requests and applications are coming in daily, and the reports from the various fields are most encouraging.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., and wife, and two children, Mary D. and Oscar, Jr., left last week to visit their friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. Beale Johnson, Cardenas, N. C., where they will spend a few days; Mrs. Atkinson and children going from there to Mrs. Atkinson's home in Eastern Virginia. They will be gone several weeks.

Rev. J. O. Cox and wife and little girl, of Durham, arrived here today to spend a few days with Mrs. Harper. Mr. Cox will attend the Sunday School Convention at Shallow Ford.

Miss Bessie Barnes left Monday for Halifax Co., Va., where she will spend several days visiting friends.

Mrs. Stagg of Norfolk, who has been with her sister Mrs. W. C. Wicker, for the past week or more, left today.

Dr. and Mrs. G. S. Watson were visiting in Virgilina last week at their daughter's, Mrs. Thos Chandler.

Ours is a quiet, peaceful, happy village, and we have a notion that it is as cool and pleasant here, especially at night, as it is this side the high mountains. There has not been yet a warm, disagreeable, or even uncomfortable night here this summer. There is no pleasanter place for summering than at Elon.

—A fire in a transfer company's stables in Chicago July 9 burned 263 horses to death and caused $500,000 damages.

Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training and Organized Classes.

GLEANED FROM THE FIELD.

The twenty-fifth annual International Christian Endeavor Convention met in Atlantic City last Thursday evening and will adjourn to-night. The attendance has exceeded that of any previous gathering, and the program and music of the convention were attractive. In addition to this the delegates and visitors had the opportunity of spending a week in the world's greatest playground. The list of speakers included men from every clime and every walk of life. Among those on the program were President Taft, Speaker Champ Clark, former Vice-President Fairbanks, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Booker T. Washington, Commander Eva Booth of the Salvation Army, President Horsefield of the British Christian Endeavor Convention, President Clark of the International Convention, with missionaries and workers from almost every civilized country. Twelve of the largest cities in the country sent choruses to assist in the music and these were combined for a few of the meetings into one grand chorus of more than two thousand voices. Plans for the extension of the work were considered, able speeches were heard, great choruses were sung, and in every way the delegates and members were inspired. Every Endeavorer should be proud of the fact that he is a member of an organization that has done so much for the spread of the Master's word and the building up of young people spiritually.

Every Christian Endeavorer should become familiar with the splendid history of our society. Its growth has been marvelous, far exceeding in rapidity and steadiness that of any similar religious movement. It has spread into all lauds, gained adherents among all races, translated its literature into all the great languages and most of the minor ones, held conventions that have uniformly been the greatest ever held in their respective countries, and already it has accomplished wonders in the religious training of the young people of the world. To know about its achievements is a constant stimulus for every one connected with it.—Daily Companion.

The greatest work of the Christian Endeavor is not done in its conventions. Without the hard, persistent and faithful service of the Endeavorers during the fifty-two weeks of the year the great convention at Atlantic City of one week would have been impossible. The humblest private in the ranks of the most modest society in the world has his part. Every time an individual fails in a duty something is subtracted from the sum-total of the possible success of the international organization.

The secretary of the Young People's Convention and the editor of this department wish to correspond with every young man or woman who has it in his or her heart to do something in the work of class organization, teacher training or Christian Endeavor. Don't you think you are the proper person to start the work in your church or give it new life? If you are willing to do a little work along this line, write to me at the address in the heading of this column. It will make you feel better, and when you see a teacher training class, a well-organized Sunday school class, or a Christian Endeavor Society in your church, it will make your heart glad to feel that you made it possible.

We trust you will make a sacrifice, if need be, to attend the Young People's convention of your conference. Again, we say to the officers, see that your reports and dues are sent to the secretary.

On August 13 the C. E. Lesson will be on "Beginnings of Intemperance." The editor of this department wants a number of short selections to be sent in by readers of this department to be published in connection with that lesson. Won't you send one? They need not be original.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSON, JULY 23. Topic—Lessons from the Animals. Psalms 104:10-31. (If convenient, an Outdoor Meeting).

This is a novel topic and deserves to be treated in a novel way. The international committee suggests an outdoor meeting. If the decorating committee can secure pictures of some of the more noble and attractive animals for the meeting it would be a good idea. Then study and talk of their characteristics. There is some trait in every animal deserving of being impressed upon the members.

Take the dog, with his lesson of faithfulness. What are his motives, what are his reasons for faithfulness? Does not man have even greater reason for faithfulness to those who have loved him, and above all to his master? Have some one read Senator Vest's tribute to the dog, or better still, have him recite it.

Birds are an enertaining subject—such a variety of them. There are many species, yet no two of a kind alike. To the casual observer all robins look the same, but the lover of birds will see as much difference between two robins as he might between two men.

One way of making birds sing is to cover their cages with a dark cloth. It is as if the birds, like Paul and Silas, sing to console themselves. Can this not be why the dark curtain of sorrow is sometimes thrown over our lives?

Many a horse has carried its rider safely home, when the reins are given to it, though the rider has completely lost his way. Thus when we lose our way in the forest of life the best way to do is simply let go the reins, cease trying to steer ourselves, but let God come in and lead us out into the open and into the main road of life.

"Think of the lessons that the Master Himself drew from the animal creation. The birds of the air served as one of His most beautiful texts when He wished to enforce a lesson of faith and trust in the heavenly Father."

A story is told of a man that soaked a lot of corn in whiskey and sowed it in a field for the crows that came to the place. The crows ate of it and became ludicrously drunk, but when they were sober they ate no more corn from that field. The crows were much wiser than some men.

The service that animals have rendered to man in history opens up a splendid field for stories and selections in the meeting. A little reading will give you a fund of illustrations. King Richard at Bosworth Field did not wish for more men, but his exclamation was, "My kingdom, my kingdom for a horse!"

How vast is the range, from the birds with a single monotonous note to the varied music of the mocking bird and of the nightingale. Yet we love to hear them all, for each sings the song God put in his mouth.

Did you ever see a bird that looked lazy or idle?

Have some one tell about each of the daily readings; do not allow them to read the selection, but have them tell about it.

Daily Readings.

July 17. The birds: provision. Matt. 6: 25—34.

July 18. The ants: industry. Prov. 6:6—11: 30:25.

July 19. The lion: strength. Prov. 30:30.

July 20. The eagle: training. Dent. 32: 9—13.

July 21. The sheep: trustfulness. Ps. 23.

July 22. Dove and serpent: purity and wisdom. Matt. 10:16.

Hints to the Leaders.

1. Study the daily readings. Pray to God for a message. You will get it.
2. Write what you have to say, then burn it up. Better have twenty words eye to eye than a thousand from a paper.
3. Never talk longer at the opening of the meeting than the average member is expected to speak during the service. Make just one point; others want to say something.
4. If you find an overabundance of material, such as suitable illustrations, poems, and quotations, give some of it to the less experienced members.
5. "Save some good thought with which to close the meeting."

Varied Meetings.

The prayer-meeting committee will seek to get into the meetings as much variety as possible. A single new feature each week will enliven the entire society.

Now it may be simply the plan of beginning with a prayer or the Bible reading instead of with a song. Now it may be the reading of a hymn in concert before it is sung. Now it may be the asking of the society to repeat in concert every Bible verse that is given by any member as soon as it is given. Now it may be a bright three-minute essay on some subject connected with the topic of the evening, introduced midway between the opening and the close. Now it may be a solo, the society all joining in the chorus. Now it may be simply placing the leader's remarks at the end instead of the beginning. Now it may be giving out a set of quotations for comment or a set of questions for answer.

A very little idea, if it is bright and new, will be the making of a meeting.

MAKING THE OLD PEOPLE HAPPY.

There should not be any unhappy old people. Age should bring its compensations of serenity and philosophy. As a matter of fact, however, the average old man or woman is far from content.

The problem which confronts sons and daughters in caring for their parents is a grave one. Old age is sensitive, and the feeling of uselessness fills many an active soul with restlessness and discontent.

Perhaps the greatest mistake that is made by young people is that in their eagerness to relieve father and mother or grandfather or grandmother of burdens, they take away everything that makes life interesting. Those who have for a lifetime been eager workers do not want to sit with their hands folded; and so it often happens that father "huts into" his son's business affairs, and mother "meddles" with her daughter's house-keeping. Then comes friction, and the son and the daughter, having shown plainly that they desire no interference, cannot understand that their rebuffs have seared the souls of the anxious, active old people.

It is always well, if possible, to provide something for the aged to do. If they can be made to feel that they are helping, their satisfaction will be supreme. If father has been a wise financier, it surely cannot hurt his son to talk over the affairs of the store or office. If mother has been a practical housekeeper, her daughter need not be too "snippy" to take advice.

I know one dear lady whose daughter insisted that she should sit with folded hands. Then when the old face took on unhappy, haggard lines and the frail little body drooped, the anxious daughter asked the doctor: "What's the matter with her?"

He was a bluff old person, and he thundered: "Give her something to do; she is pining for action."

"But the maids don't like to have any one around the kitchen," the daughter said.

"Then let her go there when the maids are out," suggested the doctor.

So on Thursday afternoon the dear old lady cooked the dinners. The whole family learned to look forward to them. And the satisfaction that mother got out of that one day in the week lasted her thru' the other six.

She made chicken pies; she baked beans; she concocted sauces and soups and gravies after old-fashioned recipes, and when they were served she beamed across the table as if to say: "Should I be put on the shelf when I can cook like this?"

The duty of children toward their grandparents often forms a great problem, but I believe that if there is any question of preference, it is the grandparents who should have first consideration. No child can be hurt by being made to have an attitude of deference toward the aged. Often, if my old people are eccentric, the children's sympathies will at once be aroused if we tell them that "grandfather has borne so many weary burdens," or that "grandmother has had sorrows." On the other hand, to say "Never mind; grandfather is peculiar" or "Grandmother is fussy," will foster a contempt which will be evidenced by the child's manner.

To those of us who grow up impatient with the faults of old age there will come a day of reckoning. Some day all of us will be old. Do we wish our children to treat us as we are treating our parents? Would you be happy under the circumstances with which we have surrounded our aged father and mother?—Dolly Madison, in Reformed Church Messenger.

NOTES FROM WOOSTER.

Notwithstanding the high elevation of the University and the tempering winds from Lake Erie the heat is excessive here, and has been so for several days. Many deaths, and even more prostrations from the effects of heat are reported from cities, Chicago taking the lead with as high as fifty deaths from heat in one day.

The Summer Session of Wooster University is intended primarily for public and high school teachers in the State of Ohio, yet it does a good deal of College and post-graduate work. A student is allowed to take College or post-graduate work enough in the eight weeks to equal six hours of College work for half year.

Thus, for instance, in chemistry a large class is reciting every day in the week besides spending four hours daily in the laboratory. Those earning credits in Latin or mathematics recite three times a day six days in the week, and are supposed to attend about four public lectures and two religious meetings during the week, and from two to three religious services on Sunday. The lecturers' course includes the presidents of the leading Ohio universities and colleges, Ralph Parlette and his famous lecture on "The University of Hard Knocks"; Billy Sunday, the noted evangelist, William Jennings Bryan, and a number of other distinguished men.

Some months ago a gentleman who has a wealthy sister-in-law in New York, was invited here to preach and lecture a week. He was impressed with the spirit of scholarship and moral tone of the institution, and suggested to that sister-in-law that, in his opinion, this was a worthy place to bestow some of her money to aid in the great work of Christian education. She came, and after half an hour's excursion among the buildings and on the grounds, asked what she could do that would be of most service. "Give $125,000 for a boy's dormitory." The dormitory is now under construction. A gymnasium to cost $75,000, the gift of another friend, is under way also. The endowment fund has been increased within the last ten years until it is almost two millions of dollars now, and the President is now raising a quarter of a million dollar fund as an endowment for the pensioning of teachers, the trustees of the University refusing some months ago, after a spirited debate, drawn out thru two days, to allow this as a Christian institution to be subsidized by the Carnegie Foundation, preferring to forego the advantages of that great fund rather than allow Wooster to lose its identity as a Christian University under the control of the Presbyterian Church. There is encouragement in such an act for us who are building in Elon College an institution of sound scholarship and Christian character. May men and women of means remember Elon College with their gifts and in their wills, and may that College for ever maintain its high Christian integrity.

W. P. Lawrence.

JESUS, THE SON OF MAN, THE SON OF GOD.

Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God. Matt. 16: 16.

Respecting truths fundamental to Christianity the questions of today are not different from the questions of the yesterday of centuries. The Greeks came to the disciples of Christ, saying: "Sirs, we would see Jesus." That is the quest of the civilized world today.

Nineteen centuries have fled since Jesus in the flesh walked in the companionship of men, the embodiment of all truth, the fulfilment of type, prophecy, and law. The world cannot forget him. His teachings are at the top of the wisdom of time. They shine with a moral radiance, and are weighted with a moral dignity greater than which has never been known or felt by man. His life can not be moved out of its plane. Age has not sapped his teachings of the snow-white purity, the magnanimous forgiveness, the holy love that so challenged and surprised men.

Wrapt in his words were thoughts so profound, ideals so new, so lofty, that they forced the confession—"We know that thou art a teacher come from God." A like confession and more is sobbed out in penitence from the world's great souls today. He has not slipped out of the world into some secret and nameless grave; the world cannot bury him. The earth is not deep enough for his tomb; the clouds are not wide enough for his winding-sheet; and it is written that the heavens cannot contain him.

We are persuaded that he is in our age as he never was in any preceding age. His life is becoming to us a new life. Round about us is an influence so strange, so penetrating, so subtle, and so mighty that we are made to feel that it is none other than the influence of the life and character of Christ.

Who is he? What did he really mean for the world, and what is the world's duty to do about it? Why do men seek to get in touch with his brain-beat, his heart-beat? Why do we feel the world will never need another Christ? We look and wonder, but we remember that wonder and amazement can only ask questions. We ponder the record—once, and only once has appeared a perfect life on earth. In the Holy Land, and there only, has been seen man at his climax, Jesus the Christ. He is the most unaccountable fact known to men. He does not represent the usual conditions of birth, yet he came into the world through the veil of nature partaking of flesh and blood. His humanity is incontrovertible, yet he revealed a life and character so pure, so select, so regal, so holy as to preclude his classification with men in the ordinary sense. He is the acknowledged human type of all ages and nations, but he was poised with such moral majesty, such grace and truth, that while we look upon him as man he rises to infinitely more. We reason from his faultless character and spirit to the validity of his own witness of himself to his humanity and his own proper Deity.

He named himself the Son of Man. Many great men have stormed across the sky of history, but in the volume of manhood there is between him and them no possible term of comparison; he is without a peer in the world's history. But he also claimed to be the Son of God, and from the beginning of his ministry to its close he gave convincing proof of this supremacy. Being man he was what man is, related to all that is made; being more than man, it is recorded that, "Without him was not any thing made that was made." He said he came from the Father, that he spake the word of the Father, and that he was going to the Father, and had he not been what he represented himself to be he could not have prayed: "Glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was," without ignorance or blasphemy. "He thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Surely he is the medium on which the voice of the Infinite is broken into human sounds as the interpreter of man, destiny, and God. It is written: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." That Word that was in the beginning; that Word that was with God; that Word that became flesh, was the infinite God in gracious communication with finite man. The Word made flesh is the pivotal truth, the appointed test of Christianity. In the Word made flesh dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily—the entempling of Deity in humanity. It is a profound statement, the turning-point of human eternity—God in self-disclosure. It is the mystery transcending all mystery. Human language can never adequately express divine realities; but while we are compelled to entrust some of the deep things of our religion to the hazard of human expression, yet we know there is a divine essence where we find divine attributes. There are things in nature and our common experience before which we stand dumb, however happy the facilities of language may be for explanation, yet we know them as facts. Truth is even greater than fact. Tho we no longer know Christ in the flesh, nothing can rob us of the knowledge that we walk with him in the sanctuary of the spirit. Tho the incarnate Christ was local, the spirit-revealed Christ is universal, and of every man the brother; and human society must fall into ruin, and human history be blotted out before Jesus and his teachings could be withdrawn from the world.

For more than fifty generations the tongue that taught on Judean hills and Galilean shores has been silent; but up to this hour Jesus Christ has the same marvellous power to compel and hold the thoughts of men as in the days when he subjected himself to the conditions of humanity. For our beliefs and our knowledge as centered in Christ we may not be provided with explanation, but they give us something better, for they minister, or rather the reality behind them ministers, to our deepest intellectual and moral needs. What does the mind need? Truth—clear, strong, restful truth. What does will need? Authority—original, ultimate, underived. What does the heart need? Love—tender, nurturing, ennobling. What does our poor sinful nature need? Forgiveness, restoration, healing. For ministry to these needs there is none other name given than Christ. He knows the value of man and what music there is yet in the untouched chords of the human soul.

Jesus Christ draws upon himself the light of the world's leaving because he dealt with questions which are the Alps of thought; primeval questions which underlie all authority, all truth, all hope, all civilization. The Christ of history is a tremendous fact. Voice and pen still proclaim that even after the test of nineteen centuries, and under the blaze of the severest, most searching and microscopic criticism of the present day, the question, "Who is this being called Jesus?" is still the most stirring of the civilized world. The monk in his cloister, the cleric in his pulpit, the evangelist in his zeal make foad answer: "He is the Son of God." We have seen the philosopher, wrapt in his speculative efforts to untangle mysteries, turn aside awhile to train his thought upon Jesus, and have seen him come forth uttering the conviction of the Roman centurion: "Surely this was the Son of God." We have seen the scientist put aside his pick and retort, his microscope and telescope, because the weight of a tremendous question has settled upon him: "Who is Jesus?" and bending his thought upon this marvellous character with sincere purpose to account for him, we have seen something of a new radiance on his face as he says: "Surely this was the Son of God." We have seen the jurist forgetting his search for "authorities," "precedents," and the exactions of his office in the administration of justice, lay aside his ermine and take his pen to record an opinion of the "Nazarene," and when read it was "Surely this was the Son of God." We have seen men of action, trained to politics or wedded to gold, or exulting in military glory, pause out of the swirl and ask: "Who is this Man of Sorrows? Why should we care to have an opinion concerning him? What is it that seems to make him essential to us?" Their verdict is not otherwise than "Surely this was the Son of God." O thou wondrous Christ! On this side of the twentieth century millions are saying with Peter: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Wherever human thought has been most imperial, and human hearts have throbbed deepest, there Jesus Christ is best known and most revered. Wherever the soldier bows in his tent or the sailor on his deck; wherever the saint seeks grace or the philanthropist help; wherever the orphan lifts his cry or the widow her despairing eyes; or the father weeps over his dying child, or the heart breaks under its weight of sins; wherever a soul returns from beating frail wings against the darkness that never whitens into dawn, there Christ, the great human brother, the divine Christ, is. In him human sorrow speaks to human sorrow, wounds speak to wounds. In him divine peace, his peace answers our trust. It is a peace that lies outside our analysis, we explain it not nor try; it lies around us like an atmosphere, it dwells within like a fragrance, it breathes out like a subtle elixir vitae, it is the very peace of God. Our faith refuses to do commerce in the small market of explanations. It has infinite venture on the seas and continents of mystery. Sin and atonement, law and forgiveness, holiness and destiny, are mysteries with which Jesus dealt with an ease and poise that stays our faith on him, and challenges the wonder of the ages. He is the total of doctrine reaching back into eternity uniting the whole evolution and tragedy of experience. In him is creation, providence and redemption. He has thrown the light of heaven on the questions over which the brightest and best of men have poured searching thought and have found satisfying solution only in Christ and his cross.

Calvary is the focal point of history, and Jesus is the central figure of the world's gaze today. He gives color to all literature, he lives in all history, he can still all mental panic or moral unrest. The greatest word we can spell out on the cross is love. God is love, Christ is love, wide as the sweep of an infinite sea, it glows in every star, it blossoms in every flower, and up through all sin, pain, and tears it is working its way and will work until in a regenerated and lifted humanity and a reconciled universe it interprets and crowns the purpose of Christ, the "Son of Man, the Son of God." "And the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the deep."—Homiletic Review.

My Dear Children:—

Still dry around our Home and community, but busy hands are at work, and we will make something, though not near what we had hoped and planned.

One of our boys, Paul Fowler, has gone to live with sis sister in Charlotte, N. C. We part with Paul reluctantly, as he is a good-natured boy and is liked by one and all; but feel that it is all right he should be with his sister. Our best wishes go with him for a useful and happy manhood.

Miss Beatrice Fowler sends some nice bed quilt pieces this week, and from Mr. J.A. Strader, Belews Creek, comes four pair nice shoes and four pair slippers. We do appreciate these donations and hope others will remember us with their gifts. Some times we have had gifts to come when we so much needed that special thing, we heartily believe God put it into the heart of the giver to send at that particular time.

We shall have to ask our S. S. friends to write very plainly when sending money from their schools. We do not want to make mistakes and it will help very much if you will always state from which S. S. you send. Sometimes we have to guess or write to ask.

Quite a number of Elon visitors have called at the Orphanage, and we are always glad to have them. Be sure to come to see us while in the village.

Very Cordially,

Uncle Jim.

Dear Cousins:—

As it is my time to write, I will tell you how we spent the fourth of July. We had a picnic dinner served over in the grove. Flags were put up, and we had the best dinner! We had fried chicken (when we went to dress the chickens one of them got away and we had a time catching it), beef, Irish potatoes, beets, cucumber pickles, light bread, biscuit, cheese, two kinds of cake and cream.

We hurried to get ready and Mr. Foster took us to Burlington on the wagons. We had a good time. The little children stayed at home and played dress up and grown lady and ate all the cream that was left in the freezer.

It was about supper time when we came back, and we had for supper the "scraps" from dinner, and added lemonade.

We all went to bed and took a good night's rest, and were ready for work on the 5th. Don't you think we had a nice 4th? Nova Rebecca Rogers.

Pine Apple, Ala., June 27, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

We are busy, so just send love and dimes.

Fondly,

J. Newman Denton,

S. E. Denton, Jr.

Joseph Rabb Denton.

So glad to get a real sure enough visit from these little boys. They came up to see the children and all were glad to have them.

Manry, Va., July 4, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I am sorry to say I did not write last month, but will make it good now. We are very busy laying by crops around here. I want to go to a picnic today if I can. I hope all of the little cousins will have a good time. The fifth is my birthday. You will find ten cents for my dues. Love to the cousins, and I hope they are well.

Amy Morris.

Picnics are lots of fun sometimes, Amy, and I hope yours proved a most delightful occasion.

—Rev. N. G. Newman has been granted a month's vacation by his generous churches, and is to attend the Northfield Bible Conference in August. That is good indeed. If there is any place on this earth where a preacher can get more rest, real recreation, more help and knowledge and spiritual inspiration than at Northfield, we have never heard tell of it. We do not envy Bro. Newman, but only wish with all our heart that we could be with him in the soul feasts he is to enjoy.

THE MASONS AND PROFANITY.

The Mississippi Baptist calls attention to the fact that at a recent meeting of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Tennessee a high officer in the body delivered a ringing protest against profane language. He said in the course of his address: "There is one other matter to which I desire to direct your attention. The strongest portion of the foundation upon which Masonry stands is reverence for the Divine Being, the Grand Master of the great universe in which he operates. No man can be a Mason unless he believes in God and looks to him in worship. This being true, the name of God should be sacred to every member of our beloved brotherhood. It should never be lightly considered, even in our thinking, and should never fall from our lips except in worship or adoration. Any man who takes God's holy name in vain is guilty of conduct unbecoming to a Mason. Such a thing as profanity should be as foreign to the members of our order as it would be for us to neglect a needy brother."

We scarcely need to say that, emanating from such a source, this utterance greatly pleases us. The Masonic fraternity is a tremendous force against any evil upon which it may elect to make war. It has long stood squarely out against intemperance and openly registered its disapproval of the sale of intoxicants; and we are happy to note this pointed and unequivocal condemnation by a prominent official of the order of the indulgence in profane speech.

The extent to which people soil their lips with profanity is positively appalling. It shocks the ear on the street, in the shop, at the public meeting, aboard the car—in fact, nearly everywhere. Boys scarcely out of their dresses are heard repeating offensive oaths, and even the tongue of woman has been known to catch the vile contagion. Laws against it seem unavailing to check it.

And what good is there in swearing? Absolutely none. It adds nothing to the force of one's utterance. It does not put a dollar in the pocket. It is not brave or manly or smart. It is coarse, vulgar, and ungentlemanly. Aye, more! it is a heinous sin, sufficient to wreck the soul. Surely the time has come when a united and aggressive movement shall be made against this indefensible habit. Let the Churches, the Masons, other organizations interested in the promotion of virtue, and all who fear and honor God join in a campaign for clean and decent speech throughout our own broad land and all around the world. Never did Crusader do battle in a higher or nobler cause.—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SIN EXPOSED.

"Take these beans," said father, handing me a bucket containing about a half-gallon, "and go drop them, one in a hill, where Charles is planting corn, above the mill. You may go fishing when you are through." Just the thing I wanted—to go fishing.

I started off one bean in a hill, but the amount in my bucket seemed to go down so slow. I did not want to be dishonest, but I began to drop two or three every few hills, thinking that would be considered accidental. Somehow I kept increasing the number, until I dropped small handfuls.

The beans soon gave out, and off to the river I went. The fish bit all right, and so did the gnats. The latter spoiled the pleasure of fishing, so to the house I went long before night.

I think father knew what I had done, but he said nothing.

I dreaded the time when the beans would come up. I hoped to be able secretly to destroy them. But to destroy them without detection was impossible.

At last the dreaded day came. Father asked me to walk with him over to the field above the mill and see how the corn and beans were looking. As we walked through the field father would say every few steps: "Your beans have come up well." At length he stopped and stood still where the beans were the thickest. Nothing was said for some moments. I could stand it no longer, and burst into tears. Father stepped up, put his arm around me and we knelt together. What a prayer father prayed.—R. S. Satterfield, in The Homiletic Review.

A MOTHER'S GUIDANCE.

A story is related of a boat out at sea carrying in it a father and his little daughter. As they were steering for the shore they were overtaken by a violent storm, which threatened to destroy them. The coast was dangerous. The mother lighted a lamp, and started up the worn stairway to the attic window. "It won't do any good, mother," the son called after her. But the mother went up, put the light in the window, knelt beside it, and prayed. Out in the storm the daughter saw a glimmer of gold on the water's edge. "Steer for that," the father said. Slowly but steadily they came toward the light, and at last were anchored in the little sheltered harbor by the cottage.

"Thank God!" cried the mother, as she heard their glad voices and came down the stairway with a lamp in her hand. "How did you get here?" she said.

"We steered by mother's light," answered the daughter, although we did not know what it was out there."

"Ah!" thought the boy, a wayward boy.

"it is time I was steering by my mother's light." And ere he slept he surrendered himself to God and asked him to guide him over life's rough sea. Months went by, and disease smote him. "He can't live long," was the verdict of the doctor; and one stormy night he lay dying. "Do not be afraid for me," he said, as they wept; "I shall make the harbor, for I am steering by my mother's light."—Homiletic Review.

MARRIED.Maness-Ritter.

At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Thomas Maness and Miss Maggie Ritter were united in matrimony July 1, 1911. They will make their future home in Ramseur, and have the best wishes of many friends.

Burgess-Trueheart.

Wednesday afternoon, June 28, 1911, Mr. Emmett J. Burgess, of Dendron, Va., led to the marriage altar Miss Mary E. Trueheart, of Savage, Va., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Burgess, brother of the groom, Richmond, Va. The ceremony was read by the writer. Those who attended the marriage from Surry county were, Mrs. Peyton Burgess, mother of the groom, Mr. J. G. and H. E. Trueheart, brothers of the bride, and Miss Virginia Trueheart, sister of the bride. A few friends of the bridal party of Richmond witnessed the marriage. After the nuptial knot was tied, and congratulations were received the happy couple took the train for Washington and other northern cities. Mr. Burgess is a fine young man and has shown himself to be one of the leading men in his community as a Christian and a business man. Miss Trueheart is an excellent woman, and one of the most popular young ladies of her community.

They will live on Mr. Burgess' farm near Dendron, Va. The future is bright for this popular pair, and we wish for them a long and happy life.

DIED.Welborn.

Cozy Madana Welborn, wife of J. L. Welborn, and daughter of Orlando and Elizabeth Bray, was born Sept. 14, 1881, and died July 2, 1911, aged 29 years, 9 months and 18 days. She leaves a husband, three children, a son, Colon, seven years old, two daughters, Fleta, 5 years old, and Moselle, two years old; one sister and three brothers, to mourn the loss. The remains were buried in Pleasant Ridge cemetery, the funeral being conducted by the writer. This was a sad funeral, sad for the husband and sister, but sadder still for the three little motherless children. A large congregation was present at the funeral, and the bereaved ones have the sympathy and prayers of God's children.

Phillips.

Herman L. Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lester Phillips, was born Nov. 13, 1909, and died June 24, 1911, aged 1 year, 7 months, and 11 days. Herman was a bright little boy, and his death caused deep sorrow to his father and mother and grandparents. The funeral was conducted by the writer, and the interment was in cemetery at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church. Heaven will mean more now to the broken-hearted parents since their first-born child has gone to be with Jesus.

Peele.

Andrew Jackson Peele departed this life at his home near Holland, Va., June 30, 1911, aged 63 years, 3 months and 23 days. He was the son of Nelson Peele and his wife Martha Butler, of Isle of Wight Co. He leaves a widow, who was Charlotte Ann Peele; two sisters, Mrs. Lamb L. Gardner and Miss Indiana Peele, Holland, Va., and two brothers, W. Q. Peele, Holland, Va., and Solomon N. Peele of Georgia. The deceased was noted for his honesty and integrity, as well as his untiring industry. For months he had been a great sufferer and realized the approaching end. He expressed himself from time to time as reconciled to the Lord's will, and passed away trusting in Christ as his Savior. The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neck Church by the writer, and the remains buried in Holy Neck cemetery. May our Heavenly Father comfort and keep his loved ones.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

The revival services which had been in progress at the Rose Hill church for two weeks, came to a close last Sunday night. From the beginning the meetings were well attended, and a deep interest on the part of the saved and the unsaved was manifested at each service. Rev. L. E. Smith, who assisted the pastor for ten days, did some very earnest preaching, which was greatly appreciated by those who were privileged to hear him. The singing under the efficient leadership of Mr. W. W. Elder was also a strong feature of the meeting. In addition to the several conversions and six members that were received, we feel that great good was accomplished, in that the church was given greater prestige by the services held. As a result of the efforts put forth, the church is stronger, and our chances for success here are better and our hope has been made brighter. For all this we ascribe honor and praise unto Him who "hath spoken good concerning Israel."

Protracted services were held at Randall's Crossing last week. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Elder, had no ministerial assistance. We have learned nothing as to the results of the meeting.

Rev. B. F. Young filled his regular appointment at North Highlands Sunday. Bro. Young is assisting in revival work at the Congregational church in Phoenix City, Ala., this week.

Next Sunday will mark the beginning of the protracted meeting at Red Hill. Rev. J. H. Milam, pastor. We have not learned whom he expects to assist him.

As the annual revival season comes on, the brotherhood at large ought to be much in prayer for a great awakening amongst us. This is the crying need of the hour, and God is anxious to "open the windows of heaven" and grant unto us "a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." The Father is yearning for a chance at our lives. He desires to work through us and to make us as Christians the avenues through which the lost may find their way to Calvary, whence flows the life-giving stream. For this purpose Christ calls men from the fields of sin to labor in His vineyard. Christ saves men not merely to glorify Him in the life to come, but to serve Him here. Has He saved you? If so, He expects service at your hands, and He is looking for present service. Next year's service will not do for this year. The Master Himself said: "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." If you desire your brother or your friend's salvation, better try to win him today—this revival season—for tomorrow or next year may be too late. Your brother or friend may be snatched away, or you yourself may have vacated this temple of clay, before another year has passed. Be it known unto you that the night indeed will come when no man can work. God pardon our neglect and the time we have squandered, and the opportunities we have blasted, and help us to use the day while it lasts.

G. O. Lankford.

July 5, 1911.

Greensboro.

On Monday, June 19, by permission of my congregation, I left for Columbus, Ga., to assist pastor Lankford in a series of meetings in the Rose Hill Church. The meeting was in progress when I arrived Tuesday afternoon, having been begun by successive prayer meetings the week previous and evangelistic meetings Sunday evening and Monday night. The church, though small in membership, was in good condition, and anxious for a gracious meeting. One of the best ways I know of to create interest for a revival is to begin to pray for it. Is it strange when a man prays long and earnestly, that he will then put forth efforts to help answer his own prayers? One of the best ways I know of to have a meeting telling in effect upon church and community is to be sure its source is in lives of consecration and hearts of prayer.

The meeting, which was in progress when I arrived, and still in progress when I left, was indeed a success, being well attended and resulting in valuable additions to the church, of which the pastor will write more later. I simply write to mention some of the things I deem necessary for the maintenance of this work. In the first place this is a mission point, which I presume is known by the church at large, having been established less than two years ago by the untiring and self-sacrificing efforts of our "church builder," Rev. H. W. Elder. The church is located in a very desirable part of the city, a modern building, conveniently arranged and commanding in appearance. And at present, I am glad to say we have a minister on the field who can cope with the other ministers of the city. Pastor Lankford has gotten into the good graces of not only his own sacrificing band, but those of other denominations who are associated with him in Christian work. Our church is being presented to the people of Columbus in a way that it has never been before, and the prospects, in every way, are indeed encouraging. But listen, Lankford, one of our strongest and best men, is preparing to turn his face, not only from this work which is by far one of the most important points in the Ga. and Ala. Conference, but from the active ministry, to the profession of teaching. It is indeed a cross for him to consider such a proposition, but seemingly he is driven to it (I know he will pardon me) from a financial standpoint. He tells me that he has received upon an average of $25.00 per month for his services so far this Conference year. Brethren, this is fulfilling the command, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice," and who can doubt but that it is acceptable? But have we done our best, and are our services in the matter acceptable? As I see it, the only salvation for our work here is for the home conference and the mission to give it a more liberal support until the church is stronger. The local church is willing to do every penny it can, you may count on that, for it is devoted to its pastor, but it isn't able to anything like support a pastor for his entire time.

Brethren, as a church—and I appeal to the church at large, can we afford to let our best prepared men turn aside into other professions than that to which our Father has called them? We already have enough "Preacher Teachers," unless we had more preachers. We need these prepared, consecrated men in the active ministry to cope with the other denominations that our church may assume and maintain its dignity as a denomination.

As president of the Conference in which Rose Hill Church is located, I shall be glad to hear from any official of either of the Mission Boards regarding this matter.

Our work at Greensboro is moving on nicely, as you will see from a letter later.

Oak Level.

I was at this church last Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday the congregation was small. On Sunday it was good and the Sunday school interesting.

This is one of the best neighborhoods I ever preached in; the moral tone is of a very high type, and tattling seems to be a thing unknown. The crops are fine, and this makes the people feel good. But three new graves in the cemetery tell of sad hearts. These contain the remains of Deacon Erastus Williams and two little children of Bro. Holden. Bro. Williams was regarded as one of the best members of Oak Level church. It will be remembered that he was the father of Rev. D. M. Williams, who died at Elon College at the first commencement. May God's grace support the widow and children who remain on the shores of time.

Bro. Holden's two children were not old enough to know much about the conflicts of life. They were just large enough to walk, talk, and run about home making the hearts of mother and father joyous. But they are safe in the Shepherd's fold, where sorrow is never known. May the Holy Spirit comfort father and mother, and keep them under the shadow of his wing and as the apple of his eye until they are called to live with their little ones gone before.

We were glad to find that Sister W. W. Staley's health had greatly improved. But her mother, Sister Pearce, is yet quite weak with no special signs of improvement.

There has been much sickness in Sister White's family this year, but we are thankful that the lookout is now for all to be well soon.

The friends of Bro. John Holden will regret to know his health is not very good.

Holland Christian Church has appointed the week following the third Sunday in Sept. for protracted meeting. It also kindly voted the pastor a month's vacation, which is highly appreciated. The special annual offering for Conference assessments was taken Sunday morning, June 25th, amounting to $152.29. An interesting program was rendered in the afternoon by the children of the Sunday school and missionary society.

UP-TO-DATE METHODS ON THE FARM.

The farmer is no longer deprived of the benefits of city life. He has his telephone, his rural free delivery of mail, and one of the best things is to have goods that he needs the most delivered right to his door by a reliable traveling salesman. This Company is the pioneer in this line with over 2000 salesmen on the road taking care of the trade of over 2,000,000 farmers. Right now we need an active energetic young man in Alamance County to handle this important work.—Address, The J. R. Watkins Company, 113 South Gay Street, Baltimore, Maryland. Established in 1868. Capital over $2,000,000. Plant contains 10 acres floor space.

DIVINE PRESENCE AND POWER.

“Lo, I am with you always.”—Jesus.

The tide comes surging up the shore
As if the sea's infinitude
Were with intense desire imbued
Its vast abundance on the land to pour—
O boundless tide of love divine,
O'erflow, o'erwhelm this thirsty soul of mine.

Some hints of light at dawn appear,
Then glowing sun creates anew
The world, bringing flowers and skies to view—
And all the glory of the day is here.
O Sun of Righteousness divine,
Within my brightening soul more brightly shine.

The winter's chill goes slowly by,
Arbutus flowers dare bloom at length.
The northing sun pours out its strength,
And fragrant June fills earth and air and sky—
O Summer of my soul most dear,
For me, and all the world, thou'rt here, thou'rt here.

EDITORIAL.

FROM EARLY YEARS.

(Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.—Ecc. 12:1. Golden text for Sunday, July 23).

The world's very best characters have not waited till late in life to give their hearts to God. You may, now and then, find a good man who, after the wild oats were sowed, turned from the evil way, and sought and found the way of righteousness. But if you wish to find the rich, rare, ripe characters you will find them in those who, from tender years sought and served the Lord. A whole life is better than a portion of it in which to serve God and build right character. If one thinks that one can waste the best years and then "catch up," one is much mistaken. It takes the whole life in which to build up the right sort of strong, stalwart character.

The Sunday school has certainly proven its worth in the world by laying emphasis on this fact. It has shown us that the child is worth looking after, caring for, saving. And by seeking and saving the child it has added infinitely to the value of character and conduct. It has redeemed untold years from Satan's service and given untold years to God's service. When a person of mature years is saved a soul is rescued; when a person of tender years is saved a life is saved, with all its wholesome and helpful influences. And a saved life counts for much more in the world than a saved soul. The lesson of today and of last Sunday draw this fine distinction.

Manassah was saved, his soul was, if we are to credit the records. But look at the long life of waste and wickedness. He went wrong many years himself, and though he in his latter days repented, he could not wipe out the wrong wrought among his people. And so terrible conditions obtain in his kingdom when and after he is done with it. Many whom he had led into wickedness did not repent.

Look, on the other hand, at Josiah. He began from tender years to seek and to serve the Lord. And so not only was his soul saved, as we should judge, and his life also, but a kingdom was saved as well. He purged a nation and led thousands into paths of peace, plenty, and righteousness. Josiah remembered his Creator in the days of his youth and so proved a benefit to his day and a blessing to his fellowman all along the way.

There is a greater blessedness than saving souls: that of saving lives and enriching them for sacrifice and for service. A soul saved is one saved; a life saved may mean a multitude redeemed. And this was true in the case of good Josiah.

SOCIETIES, CLASSES, ORGANIZATIONS.

We are hearing much, in church and Sunday school, about various and sundry "Societies" and "Organized Classes," and other "Movements" and "Organizations." We are told that ours is an age of movement, change, and progress; and further, that as business is organized, so must the church "organize" if it is to go forward in its heaven-appointed work. We are told that the Endeavor is the Church undertaking something for Christ; that the "organized class" is the school at work; that the motto of the "Movement" is, We do things. We are informed, and we presume correctly, that as such "methods" are employed to make business go, so must similar ones be employed to make our religion go, to make the church keep pace, and to stimulate the spiritual condition of the community.

Now, our conviction is that the ideal of these Societies and Classes is all right, is of a high and holy character. The church certainly needs to be alive, and active in good works. We should certainly strive to do things for Lord Christ's sake. The Sunday school needs somewhat to quicken its energies and activities. And so, that which the organized class holds out to us is wholesome and holy. That which the Endeavor has to offer is inviting and worth while. That which our aids and organizations stand for is pure and praise worthy.

But—and here is the pith and the point of it all,—our societies and classes and such cannot redeem souls, save men, and build character. If church work is to be done, not organizations, but individuals, must do it. No society, class, or organization will rise any higher, or achieve any greater, than the individual members of said body shall aspire to and be willing to make effort and sacrifice for.

Neither will the character nor the spirit of any organization be any higher, holier or more helpful than the character and the spirit of the individuals who compose it. We cannot put off, or back off, onto the shoulders of our class or society, our own responsibility. No sort of human ingenuity can relieve the individual of the burden he should bear, the service he should render, and the responsibility he should carry. The reason why business organizations and corporations "go" is because there is ever and always some man or men to make them go. Put it down forever that when a business goes there is an individual back of it to make it go.

And if any church or religious organization "goes," there must be some individual back of it to make it go.

We apprehend one danger, one serious difficulty, then, in the way of our multitudinous organizations. Is there not a remote danger that we shall substitute plans for piety, class for character, and society for spirituality? Is there not danger lest we count on our plans, so wisely laid and so cunningly wrought out, to pull us through, and not rely on the grace of God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit? There is no reason for this separation, for this substitution; and the guidance of the Spirit should not be divorced from our Societies and Organizations. Nothing under heaven or in heaven can take the place of personal piety, of profound spirituality, of simple and abiding faith, of a wholesome and healthful humility. No organization can or should be allowed to take the place of these; for these are they which mean life, salvation.

All organizations and all movements that exist for the church may be measured, as to their worth, by this one standard. Do they deepen and quicken and broaden the religious life, the piety, the spirituality of the community? If so, they are worth while. If not they will go, and the sooner the better. Nothing is a help to the church save that which gives to it more of the Spirit of the Master, more of the comfort and guidance of the blessed Holy Spirit. The gates of hell will not prevail against the church, and that only is worth while, in and for the church, which helps it prevail against the gates of Hell.

CARING FOR ORPHANAGES.

Those of us who are interested in the keep and care of orphans—and who of us are not?—will do well to make a mental note of what our Baptist brethren in this good State are doing, and how they do it, at Thomasville. This is, we believe, the oldest church orphanage in the State, and it sets all others a lively pace. Editor Johnson said recently:

"Our friends sent us $52,000 last year and sent it along through the year so that the treasurer has had no financial strain upon him. We are organized for business better than any other orphanage. Our Sunday schools do far more for the institution than those of any other denomination. Two of these Sunday schools give more to the orphanage than any other two Sunday schools of any denomination in the world; and they have been making these contributions with joy and gladness for many years."

The Baptists are trained in the Orphanage work, and their Sunday schools have been imbued with the idea that the work is theirs in a very large measure, and they are doing the great work of giving without taxing the churches with this extra burden. And this has greatly helped, we are told, both the Sunday schools and the churches.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

The 29th annual session of the Young People's Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was in session at Shallow Ford, Alamance Co., July 11-13. The Convention, though better attended than usual, did not have the numbers that it deserved. Our Sunday schools, Endeavor Societies, and Organized Classes certainly need to come together in common council, for exchange of ideas, and for improved plans and methods, once a year. The pity is that every organization of the body did not have delegates and representatives present. It would have done them good, and would certainly have helped the schools, classes, and societies at home. Nearly all speakers and essayists were present, and well prepared. It was a three-days program, and was packed to the limit.

The subjects receiving special attention were Teacher Training, Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor, Organized Classes, and Sunday school Missions.

These subjects were given one session of half a day each, and there were certainly some very able, interesting and helpful papers and addresses.

The Subject of Teacher Training was dealt with, in part, after this fashion: Report of Committee on Teacher Training. "The Present Need of Teacher Training," by E. T. Hines. "What Teacher Training Means for a Teacher," Miss Jewel Michael. "Is Teacher Training Successful in a Country School?" by Rev. R. P. Crumpler. Open Parliament on Teacher Training, conducted by Prof. J. B. Robertson.

The subject of Sunday schools was dealt with after this manner: Report of Committee on Sunday schools. Address by Chairman of the Committee. "How to Interest Children in Sunday School," Mrs. J. L. Foster. "How to Interest Young People in Sunday School," Miss Myrtie Cox. "How to Interest Older People in Sunday School," Rev. J. W. Wellons and Others. Round Table—"Sunday School Management," Chas. A. Hines.

A session being given to the general topic of 'Christian Endeavor, this plan was followed: Report of Committee on Christian Endeavor. "The Christian Endeavor as a Developer of Christian Leaders," Chas. A. Hines. "The Development of the Christian Endeavor," Rev. H. E. Truitt. "The Junior Christian Endeavor," essay, Miss Allene Patton. "What the Christian Endeavor Should Do for the Church," Rev. L. I. Cox. "The Older People's Place in the Christian Endeavor," Rev. J. W. Wellons.

A similar program was followed in other subjects named. Especially worthy was a paper by Mrs. W. A. Harper on "Organized Class Work." This paper, with some others read before the Convention, will be printed in The Sun and are worth reading and considering. Attorney-at-Law J. H. Vernon, of Burlington, was present on Thursday A. M. and discussed, helpfully, "Why It Pays to Organize Adult Classes."

Rev. W. L. Wells was president of the sessions and Mr. H. S. Truitt was Secretary, Rev. H. E. Truitt being the Treasurer.

The good people of Shallow Ford church and community cared for the Convention bountifully, and did much to make the Convention physically comfortable. Hospitality and good fellowship abounded.

The Convention is to meet next year with Monticello, in Guilford Co.

We feel that this Convention was a blessing and a benefit to all who attended. The step taken which means very much, or very little, to the work of this body, as the one selected may accomplish, was the choosing of a Field Secretary to promote the work the coming year. Mr. H. S. Truitt was chosen, and he has a wide field of usefulness, provided he will enter and cultivate. Here is hoping him all success in the undertaking.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Man's New Domain.

Many of us prosy, practical, and unimaginative folks would not, and could not, believe in the possibility, much less the reality, of the aeroplane until it was here. The thing seemed so unusual, so out of the ordinary, so unreasonable that we could not grasp it. And yet, with scarce three years of experiments, the science of aeronautics has advanced so far that its most daring feats attract little attention. Not two years ago, Bleriot, the French aviator, flew across the English Channel, a distance of a little over twenty miles, to the delight and the astonishment of the world. Everybody thought that was marvelous, and the papers were full of the daring feat.

And yet, a few days since, eleven aeroplanes, one of them carrying a passenger beside the driver, and all flying according to the directions of a leader, like a gang of geese, not only flew across the English Channel, which is now a matter of no moment, but all flew in a circuit race from Paris via Rheims, Brussels, Calais and Dover to London, nine of the number returning by a different route, all without fuss or feathers, without accident or incident. And the papers hardly gave two inches to an account of it.

The other day Mr. Atwood, carrying a passenger with him, starting from Boston, flew over to New London and witnessed the Yale-Harvard boat race from the air, his only difficulty being in checking his aeroplane to the speed of the rowers, then, the races over, faced about, and flew to New York, circling at will and at leisure about the city and landing at Governor's Island. He then, with his passenger still on board, headed for Washington, D. C., stopping for various and sundry stunts in the air about Atlantic City, New Jersey, and safely landed, without accident or delay, having circled about the Washington monument, in the grounds of the White House. The aviator dropped in to see President Taft, who made him a little speech and gave him a medal, and then he flapped his wings and flew away whither he wished.

Now and then, it is true, an aviator meets a tragic and sudden death, thirty of them did last year; but the same is true in the beginnings of all great inventions. It is very doubtful if the automobile did not kill more people in the first three years of its existence than has the aeroplane, and certainly men could not handle the automobile with any more ease and safety at the end of its first three years than they now can the aeroplane.

With advancing years there are new worlds discovered, and have to be explored. The world of the air has been added now to that of the far-reaching sea and the wide-spreading earth. And man goes on conquering and to conquer.

"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet."—Psa. 8:3-6.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE. NO VII.

Two lovely characters, in many respects, had been antagonistic to each other for a long time. A dangerous and impassable prejudice had been formed, forged with an iron chain of hatred which appeared too strong to ever be broken; but when love, forgiveness, and friendship were established between them, then they began to live the beautiful life. Oh, how beautiful it is to have the life filled with the fulness of God! The profound reality of such a life can be attained. Looking up to Him by faith, while the stars gleam through immeasurable distance, and wheel through space with incalculable velocity, we feel safe standing on the everlasting Rock.

Try not to think of so many of the unpleasant things of your life, when you can dwell in higher realms; live a sublime life, repent, be forgiven, and think of the beautiful and lovely things which invite you to move through the great field of Christian activity. Turn to your Bible and read the charming words of a great, grand, good and godly man, and they will help you up to God and heaven. These are the words: "Whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." When we rightly think on these things their beauty and purity greatly help to develop us into greatness and goodness. How much then is it to be desired that all minds and souls be influenced by these things. For, "if you know these things, happy are you if you do them." The greater life, the purer life, the beautiful life invite us to use them. If we were to do these things, it would be the beginning of heaven to us, and the bright star of hope would gleam on the way with new beauty, and our hearts would beat with gladness every day. We are social beings—we want to keep in touch with company and with the world, and by these associations we are influenced by good or evil. It will be one or the other—which shall it be? We can not—we will not do nothing. The loafer, the idler, the sinful, the dissipated, are doing something all the time. They are injuring themselves and setting a bad example to others. The one who is honest, true, religious, and good is living a life of usefulness. What a vast difference between the two classes, and yet they are all at work—each in his way.

Our conduct will influence some one—it matters not which way we turn nor in what direction we look or travel, some will follow us, or be inclined to do so. There will be a silent influence intruding itself in the way whether we desire it or not; and if we do not want it to lead us, we will have to put extra caution as a guard so as not to be deluded by its destructive sway. Traps have been set all the way down the line of life—plans have been devised to catch the unguarded and the innocent. Ignorance of their plans may have been deceived and ruined for time and eternity. Go where you will—stand upon the topmost round of success—walk the highways and byways of life—sit with wonder and admiration in pleasant places—lie in ease and luxury—run toward the goal for human greatness—but there is danger and death for all who travel the wrong way. Like a storm-tossed wave, which is dashed to pieces on a rocky shore, so sin has destroyed the beauty and brightness of many a life.

THE BENEFITS OF LOYALTY.

Prof. Royce of Harvard has written a most excellent book in the realm of Ethics to which he gave the title, "The Philosophy of Loyalty." In this illuminating volume the distinguished philosopher undertakes to show, and with much success, that loyalty is at the bottom of all moral action and right conduct—loyalty to a cause outside of self in which we really realize our full and true self-development and highest good. It will benefit anyone to read this thought-provoking volume and I hope many of our people will avail themselves of this privilege.

Loyalty is an unselfish, altruistic motive. The finest sentiments that stir our hearts and inspire our souls are grounded on loyalty. The mother's loyalty to her child, the child's loyalty to mother, one friend's loyalty to another—these are all of one type—they are cementing forces that make for righteousness in conduct, temperance in action, progress in all things. We cannot have too much loyalty—we can have far too little. The more of it we have, the richer and fuller are our lives and the happier our experiences.

But for loyalty on the part of the members of the Christian Church, Elon College would never have been conceived, much less founded, far more than much less brought to its present status as to attendance, equipment, scholarship, outlook for the future. Our brethren and sisters have sacrificed as those of no other church to make Elon what she is—and they are richer in purse and heart by reason of their sacrifices—because these gifts were from the right motives—and such motives are always owned and blessed. I firmly believe that the rapid increase in material wealth which has come to our brotherhood as individuals during the past twenty years is the direct resultant of the generous spirit they have shown Elon and the other enterprises of the church.

It is true that some of our brethren have not contributed to Elon in finances or attendance, but the great majority of them have in both ways, and to all of them we are grateful. Neither do we have any word of censure for those who have responded in only one or in neither way. We feel that they are at least interested in the College and anxious for its success.

Just at present the College is engaged in its annual summer campaign for students. The brotherhood was never more cordial to Elon's representatives nor more responsive to their pleas. The outlook is bright. Loyalty is doing its noble work and we are confidently expecting a splendid opening in the fall. If the loyalty of our people wavers, our College is doomed. The College is cognizant of this fact and endeavors to satisfy the high hopes of its founders and patrons in every way. The Church also realizes it and is doing all in its power to help the College to larger and better things. Such Christian loyalty has made Elon what it is. Such loyalty will make her even more the loyal servant of the Church and the humble object of the Church's generosity and affection. The Church has done too much for Elon for her to prove unfaithful to the Church. Elon has inspired the Church and been such a channel of blessing in so many wholesome ways that the Church cannot afford to let Elon suffer—and it will not. The twinship of their relation to each other is complete. A vigorous College means a vigorous church. A failing College precludes a disheartened Church—against which dire calamity may the mutual loyalty of both Church and College forever defend us! We are depending upon this loyal spirit, guided by the efforts of the College authorities, to give us a fine, promising student body on Sept. 6—and we are depending not in vain. Thanks for every kind word spoken for the College.

W. A. Harper.

—There were, so Governor Kitchen said, twenty-five men who wanted the position of corporation commissioner recently made vacant by the death of Commissioner Henry Clay Brown. There are certainly a plenty of patriots left yet who are ready and willing to serve their State in a public capacity. How men love office is a caution.

WAS IT PROPHECY?

Many years ago N. Summerbell, if I understand his abbreviations, wrote something like the following:—

I.

The devil was bound and his power limited. Religion revived. There was a spiritual resurrection, a conversion to the religion of the apostles and Christ, a resurrection of the soul from sin. Sinners were converted, Sunday schools abounded, the gospel was everywhere preached and prayer and praise filled the earth.

II.

Satan was loosed. He separated his own from the praising crowds. Sin revived. There was legislation against the church. Many fell away, supposing that sin must triumph. Christ was mocked. Sin rejoiced. And the forces of evil compassed the camp of the saints.

III.

There was darkness. The earth seemed to rock. There were strange, rushing sounds in the air. Mountains, rocks, islands started from their places. There were war, murder, slavery. All in the terrible material convulsion of the planet.

IV.

But the heavens were firm. Light pierced the darkness. The Son of man appeared in the sky, with the glory of God, and the angels all around him. The heavens were full of splendor. The dead seemed to be rising. The wicked began to fly, while fire was falling. The earth's axis tipped, and the wicked poured headlong into what seemed an ocean of fire. Saints ascended, and time passed that some said was a thousand years.

There appeared another class:—"hired servants," sheep "not of this fold," men who knew not Christ. They were judged by their works. Some of them were just and rose to glory, not as the church of God, but as servants. But others fled to the left hand.

V.

I saw heaven settling downward, and beheld a new and beautiful face of the earth. I saw no wicked, nor signs of wickedness; and I asked an angel where were the millions of the wicked, whom I had seen following Satan against the saints. He said they were gone, long, long ago.

"How long," said I, "since I looked upon them?"

"A thousand years."

"Where did they go?" said I.

"To the ocean of fire."

"At once?"

"No; a few were exhausted, and anxious to die, long before they reached the ocean of fire."

There was no more sin, no more sorrow, no more tears; all things had become new.

J. J. Summerbell.

AS OTHERS HEARD HIM.

"There goes a young man whom I saved from going to the dogs through drink," remarked a court stenographer. "He is a tip-top fellow, and has plenty of ability, but two or three years ago he began to let liquor get the better of him.

"I was sitting in an up-town restaurant one evening when he came in with some fellows and took a seat without seeing me. He was just drunk enough to be talkative about his private affairs, and on the impulse of the moment, I pulled out my notebook and took a full short-hand report of every word he said. It was the usual maudlin talk of a boozy man, and included numerous candid details of the speaker's daily life.

"Next morning I copied the whole thing neatly on the typewriter and sent it to his office. In less than an hour he came tearing to me with his eyes fairly bulging out of their sockets.

"'Oh, Jack,' he gasped, 'what is this, anyhow?'"

"'It is a stenographic report of your monologue at —'s last evening,' I replied, and gave him a brief explanation.

"'Did I really talk like that?' he asked faintly.

"'I assure you it is an absolute verbatim report,' said I.

"He turned pale and walked out, and from that day to this he has not taken a drink. His prospects at present are splendid. All he needed was to hear himself as others heard him."—Selected.

FOUNDATIONS OF CHARACTER.

A great deal has been said about the importance of one's laying the foundations of "a moral and religious character," and it is maintained by many eminent men that such foundations should be formed by accepting the Bible and often reading it. A discussion has been going on in a leading religious paper concerning the question as to whether a Unitarian is a real Christian or not. Some affirm that such a person can be a Christian, and yet deny Christ's deity, while others assert the contrary. It is well known that President Taft is a Unitarian. A reader of the paper to which I have referred, expresses the belief that Mr. Taft is a Christian, because he "accepts the Bible," and as such, "the teachings of Christ," as "the foundation of his religious character." That writer refers to an address by Mr. Taft, in which he spoke of the benefits of the Sunday school, one of them being that of "laying the foundations of a moral and religious character." I have no criticisms to make on that statement, for it is doubtless true that a study of the Bible, in the Sunday school or elsewhere, if properly done, is a good aid in forming the foundations of a moral and religious character. But it should not be supposed that such a character is, in itself, equivalent to sterling Christian character. One may be a very religious person, and yet not be a Christian. There are thousands of such ones in our land. There are millions of heathen who are very religious. So are the Mormons. But there is a large difference between mere moral and religious character, and true Christian character. One cannot obtain Christian character by merely studying the Bible and attending religious services. The foundation of such a character is obtained by a life in Christ. The Spirit of Christ, enthroned in one's heart, is the only true foundation of Christian character; and upon that foundation the believer is to build himself up by faith and works.

OPTIMISM AND PESSIMISM.

Jim Jones is an optimist, and Bill Brown, of the same town, is a pessimist. When it rains, Bill Brown complains that it is going to get muddy; but Jim Jones, wreathed in smiles, says that rain is a mighty good thing to lay the dust. When the sun shines again, Bill kicks about the heat; but Jim, still smiling, says that sunshine is a mighty good thing to dry up the mud.

Bill complains that business is not half as good as it was when it was twice as good as it is.

Theses two men, living in the same town and under the same natural conditions, see things differently, and one is always happy and the other is always miserable. The difference lies back of their eyes, not in front of them.

They are not any peculiar types of men. They are not confined to any particular town. They are everywhere throughout the world.

The pessimist goes about with a lantern, peering into the dark places, looking for meanness and things to find fault about. The optimist goes about in the bright sunlight, looking for the beautiful things, and finding lots of them.

The optimist rises in the morning with gladness in his heart, sunshine in his face, and smiles upon his lips. The mere privilege of living and enjoying nature is priceless satisfaction to him. He gets good out of life every moment of his existence. He is a man to be envied, if envy is ever allowable.

The pessimist not only warps his mind, but his physique as well, and his influence on others is decidedly bad.—News Scimitar.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

—Dr. Fleming reports a good day at the Burlington church last Sunday, large congregations and more than 200 in the Sunday school.

—Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, was a visitor at Elon for a few hours Monday last. Bro. Carden is one of our hard working, loyal and faithful pastors, and the work goes well in his field.

—Rev. J. W. Harrell, Portsmouth, Va., is to spend a month, we are informed, at the Northfield summer Bible Conference, and we congratulate him on his good fortune. Northfield is the place of the preacher's recreation and inspiration.

—If any of our churches desire the new edition of the Christian Hymnaries remember they can be had from The Christian Sun office, 50 cents the copy in quantities plus the freight or express, 75 cts. the single copy by mail.

—The revival season with many of our churches is upon us, and the faithful and anxious pastors should be assisted with the prayers, presence and devotions of the entire church membership. This is indeed the harvest time, and all can help.

—We are pleased to receive, from Chief Justice Walter Clark, a copy of his able address, now printed in pamphlet form, delivered at Elon College commencement June 6, 1911, entitled, "The Gospel of Progress." We presume any Sun reader can secure a copy by request sent to Chief Justice Walter Clark, Raleigh, N. C.

—We noted this quotation in a conspicuous place recently: "The hardest thing in the world to kill is a misstatement, whether it be made with intention or in ignorance." We doubt that. The hardest thing to kill is the truth, we are inclined to think. When error is mingled with truth, enough of error to give novelty, wildness, scandal, or sensation, then error is hard to kill; but unmixed error is easy to kill in comparison with truth. The truth is usually what hurts.

—In the death of Prof. J. B. Carlyle, Wake Forest College loses an able and eloquent teacher, the State an honored and useful son, the Baptist church a loyal and devoted member, the world a good man and a noble spirit. God rest him. His life was full of labor well wrought.

—We are glad indeed that Dr. Staley's condition is so improved that Suffolk Letter can again appear. The Sun without a Suffolk Letter is always in partial, if not total, eclipse.

—The church at Greenville, Ohio, of which till recently Rev. E. A. Watkins was pastor, has extended to Rev. P. H.

Fleming, D.D., Burlington, N. C., a unanimous call. Bro. Fleming has been pastor of our Burlington church about fifteen years and has done excellent work in building up the church there. He has the call under consideration, but has not signified whether he will accept. We should deeply regret to lose Bro. Fleming from the South.

—The venerable and much beloved Rev. J. B. Weston, D. D., LL. D., President of the Christian Biblical Institute, Defiance, Ohio, celebrated his ninetieth birthday anniversary recently, and he is still at his post and hard at work. The Herald of Gospel Liberty carried a cut of his frank, firm, fine face last week, from which we seem to read other years of influence and usefulness in his eventful and excellent career. Dr. Weston is a Christian, a scholar, and a great, good man.

—It will be a source of deep regret to his brethren and friends to learn that Rev. J. W. Barrett has vacated the pulpit of the Lambert's Point, Norfolk, Va., Christian Church, and has joined, so the Norfolk papers say, a sect known in those quarters as "Holy Jumpers." Our church at Lambert's Point, we understand, was doing well under the ministry of Bro. Barrett, and we trust that a pastor will soon be secured to carry forward the work so well begun there. Bro. Barrett was a conscientious man and a good preacher, and we regret his going from us.

—Rudyard Kipling somewhere says that there is some hope of an Englishman returning home from India and settling in England permanently, provided the young man does not marry in India. Then, good-bye home-land and England, and—a home in India forever. By the same principle the good folks of Randolph County and North Carolina have forever lost the service of Rev. R. L. Williamson. This explains: "Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Moore announce the marriage of their daughter, Virginia Pearl, to Rev. R. L. Williamson, Tuesday, July 18th, 1911, Harrisonburg, Va." We are publishing our congratulations, which are hearty and sincere, and our readers may send theirs on to the happy groom at Harrisonburg. There is no finer fellow than R. L., and the Valley has gained by North Carolina's great loss. He is a minister of promise, power and usefulness.

REMARKABLE LIFE WORK.

Dr. Weston's Ninetieth Birthday, Thursday, July 6, 1911.

The Defiance Express, Thursday, July 6. Ninety years ago John B. Weston came into this world. James Monroe was the President of the United States, and the American Republic was just struggling out of infancy. Today, on the platform of Weston Hall at Defiance College, before an audience composed of the faculty of Defiance College, summer students, members of the Defiance Ministers' Union, and a number of representative Defiance citizens, Dr. Weston gave a very interesting address, in which he related some of the wonderful things that have been achieved during his life time. This was followed by brief addresses of felicitation by members of the Ministers' Union and others present.

On behalf of the college faculty and students, Prof. Michael presented Dr. Weston with a sheaf of ninety roses, and a gold-headed cane. At noon, in the Trowbridge dining hall, dinner was served in Dr. Weston's honor at which members of the Defiance Ministerial Union and others were present.

Dr. Weston is a very remarkable man. He has been identified with the vanguard of the educational movement practically all his life since attaining manhood. For many years he was a professor in Antioch College, and for thirty years he has been the president of the Christian Biblical Institute. Notwithstanding the unremitting activity of his life, Dr. Weston is in full possession of his mental faculties, and he is as alert as a man thirty years his junior. He takes a keen interest in the affairs of today, and he has never ceased to be a student. Physically he is remarkably well preserved, and he gives every indication of living for many years.

Dr. Weston's reminiscences were listened to with close attention. His life, covering a period of two-thirds of the duration of the United States as a nation, has been one during which remarkable changes have occurred. When a young man, Ohio was considered the extreme west. The railroad had just come into existence, and it was considered an achievement to go twenty miles an hour. Dr. Weston also talked about his educational experiences, and his closing remarks contained words of wholesome advice to the students.

The story of the long life journey of Dr. Weston is one that cannot fail to be an inspiration to the generation just setting forth on the more serious stage of life's highway. He was born in Madison, Somerset County, Maine, July 6, 1821. He remained on the home farm until twenty-two years of age, during which time he was busy at work obtaining his education. When seventeen years of age he began teaching school, and at intervals he attended an academy.

Dr. Weston's conversion to Christianity occurred when he was little over thirteen years of age, and he commenced preaching when he was twenty-two. For three years he was connected with the first religious publication in this country, New England, antecedent of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, which is now published in Dayton.

Dr. Weston was instrumental in founding Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio. He raised considerable money for the institution, and after holding the position of pastor of a church in Portland, Maine, he left the ministry temporarily to enter Antioch in the first freshman class. While an undergraduate, he taught in the English department.

Upon his graduation, Dr. Weston was appointed to the faculty of Antioch by Horace Mann, the famous educator, who was president of the institution. During the civil war he served as acting president. After the war he served as professor of Greek, holding a position on the faculty until 1881 when he was appointed president of the Christian Biblical Institute at Stanfordville, N. Y. A few years ago the Biblical Institute was moved to Defiance, and consolidated with Defiance College, although the C. B. I. still retains its separate identity. Dr. Weston has done much to build up the institution, and in his old age he has the satisfaction of seeing his labors appreciated and the institute on a firm foundation that will endure for many years.

Dr. Weston was first married in 1848 to Miss Nancy Maedonald in Showhegan, Me. She died in 1858. Two years later he was married to Miss Aelsah Waite, of Chicago, who was a classmate in Antioch College. Her death occurred in 1899.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I have been feeling for weeks like a little mill looks when there has been no rain for a long time and the pond has fallen so low that the water no longer flows over the overshot, wooden, water-wheel. The pond looks like suspended or exhausted energy. The overshot looks like it would fall to pieces if it continued dry much longer. The weeds grow up about the door-steps and the road looks forsaken. There is a stillness, an air of neglect, the absence of energy that appeals to the sympathetic eye and heart. Nothing can start that wheel and invite customers to the mill again but rain—rain-drops can fill up that sunken pond, swell up those dry buckets, start the energy to grind the grain, and fill up that stagnant pool below the mill-wheel with rushing waters and crest the current with white foam. We depend on God for everything; and we sometimes forget this when the pond is full, and the bins are full of golden grain, and all the posts are covered with fresh white meal.

I feel a little better now; just like we had had a good rain and that the mill could run awhile; I do not feel yet as if the winter rains were filling the earth and we would have to lift the floodgates and let off the surplus of water because the mill was too small to use all the energy that was pressing against the dam.

A hard winter's work, a protracted meeting, striking the hot spell in July, a siege of sickness in my family, a little malaria in my system and the extreme heat in June and July, combined to reduce my strength below normal working power and hence I failed to meet my weekly "Suffolk Letter" obligation; but that is a small matter except to myself. To be able to write a letter every week is proof to myself that I am living and able to use my mind. You see it is not the possession of a mind, but the use of a mind that is the important thing. All gifts are worthless except as they are used for good purposes. Even religion as a possession is valuable only as it is put to good use. A good church member is not simply a pious person, but an active pious person. I suppose that is why Jesus said: "Go work today in my vineyard." He did not say, "Go sit today in my vineyard"; nor "Go cut today in my vineyard"; nor "Go rest today in my vineyard." This is an active world and it needs an active church membership.

I feel sorry for Dr. Atkinson these hot summer months. He has to fill up The Sun whether we rainy season writers send in letters. He must be a sort of deep-well fellow, a perennial spring, or an artesian stream when all these little branches run dry; but then he is young, chockful of knowledge, running over with energy, and nothing to do but to write. If fish could run in mental streams (and mental fish do) we small fry could angle along his mental river and have times with great game bass. That would be sport to hang some big soul-stirring thought and finally land it and carry it away and feast on it. In fact, I think that is the finest sport in the world. Mr. Editor, you need not think that the greatest delight I have with you is in pulling perch and chub and trout out of streams of water, but in pulling thoughts and inspiration and Christian fellowship out of you. I wonder if kind Providence will soon permit us to throw hooks together in Beale Johnson's pond or Nansmond River near Lee's wharf and give me a chance to launch out into the deep of your association and find some seed-corn.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Rev. McD. Howsare returned Saturday and filled his pulpit Sunday morning and night. He did not get to the Endeavor Convention, but spent some time with his parents at Cumberland, Md.

The Memorial Temple took up the mortgage on its parsonage property on July 1st. Thus the property is free for the first time. It speaks well for the faithful planning and work of the pastor and membership to accomplish that result.

Rev. D. A. Keys preached at the 4th church yesterday afternoon, and I hear that will be the arrangements for the present.

S. M. Atkinson, representing The Sun, was a pleasant caller last week.

The Endeavor Society has suspended meeting for the summer. On last Thursday, about five o'clock, the majority of the members of the Society went to Ocean View for an outing, had lunch there, and then down on the beach by the side of the waves as they came rolling in, we had our closing service in the open air. The services consisted of songs, prayers, scripture reading and a short address by the pastor.

Sunday school at the Third Church yesterday was the best for several weeks. It did not seem like a "summer school," for they are usually far below normal in attendance. Our congregations have been steadily growing despite the warm weather.

Bro. Hanson preached last night the third of a series of five sermons on "The Five Greatest Things in the World." His subject last night was Love.

Bro. Hanson will do the preaching in a series of meetings for Rev. J. W. Harrell at Berea, Norfolk Co., next week.

Bros. Harrell, Hanson and Newman are planning for a great time at Northfield. They will visit Washington and New York while away.

J. W. Manning.

P. S. I think we may expect something better than we have been having as a Norfolk Letter, as soon as Bro. Hanson returns from that trip, as I have his promise to let his pen speak from Norfolk.

J. W. M.

—Dr. Stuart McArthur, possibly the best known Baptist minister in America, and who was at its recent session in Philadelphia, elected President of the Baptist World Alliance, has had only one pastorate during the forty-one years of his ordained ministry, that of Calvary Baptist church, New York.

Young People's Department.

Devoted to the interests of the Young People's Convention,
Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training and Organized Classes.

Edited by Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.

N. C. AND VA. CONVENTION.

The twenty-ninth session of the Young People's Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was held last week at Shallow Ford Church, near Elon College. The attendance was good, but there was not the large number of young people from all churches of conferences that are desired at these meetings. The sessions were interesting and helpful. The hospitality of the people of the community was unbounded and the welcome to the delegates was hearty and sincere.

Tuesday morning was devoted to the welcome address by Pastor Peel, the response, the enrollment of delegates and ministers, and election of the following officers: President, Rev. W. L. Wells; vice-president, E. T. Hines; secretary, J. S. Truitt; treasurer, H. E. Truitt.

The afternoon was given over to the report of the committee on teacher training. This was followed by addresses by Mr. E. T. Hines, Rev. L. I. Cox, and talks by others, a paper by Miss Jewel Michael and an open parliament on the subject conducted by Prof. J. B. Robertson, of Burlington, all of which were enjoyed and very practical.

Wednesday was Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Day. After an interesting quiet hour conducted by Rev. L. I. Cox, the committee on Sunday schools offered its report. Dr. J. O. Atkinson made a very timely address on "The Sunday School and Progress," and helpful and encouraging papers were read by Mrs. J. L. Foster and Miss Myrtle Cox. A round table on Sunday school work was conducted by Mr. C. A. Hines. In the afternoon Rev. J. F. Morgan presented the report of the committee on Christian Endeavor. Addresses were made by Rev. L. I. Cox, Rev. H. E. Truitt, Rev. J. W. Wellons, and Mr. Chas. A. Hines, and a paper on Junior Endeavor was read by Miss Alene Patton, and the day's program was concluded with short talks by others.

Thursday morning Organized Class Work was the theme. The committee made its report, after which a very helpful paper was submitted by Mrs. W. A. Harp on the theme of the day, after which Prof. T. C. Amick and others made speeches. Dr. J. U. Newman presented the interests of Elon College and his remarks were heard with pleasure.

In the afternoon Rev. J. W. Holt presented the report of the committee on Home Missions, after which the report and the work was discussed by Mr. Holt, Rev. W. L. Wells and others. Reports of other committees were received during the afternoon and routine business transacted. Several spoke feelingly of the work of the convention and their interest in the causes for which it stands.

The writer has not attempted to tell all that the convention did and meant. More will be said of the causes in other issues of The Sun, and the printed reports of the convention will cover the sessions in detail. All told, it was a notable and inspiring gathering and the officers and members go out with renewed determination to accomplish more during the coming year along the lines of work represented.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSON FOR JULY 30.

Topic: A Missionary Journey Around the World. VII. Missions in Burma and India.—Acts
17: 16-31.

In her palmiest days Rome ruled over not more than 120,000,000 people, yet in the kingdom of India there are about 300,000,000 people. This is a population greater than three times the entire number of people living in the United States. The area of India is about half of that of the United States. Thus it will be seen that the people live about seven times as closely together throughout the country as here.

India and Burma are rich in history. Every Endeavorer should get a good history and look at the story of the country and its people; their ancestry, traditions and works on the subject. Stoddard's lectures contain an especially interesting story of the people. There are many good missionary works on the subject.

Most will be accomplished by mission effort if we direct our energies first toward the large centers of population. Next to China, India presents the most inviting field. Only about one per cent. of the present population—one in every one hundred people are professing Christians. Under English rule much has been accomplished, and while the rule of England has not been ideal, the advantages it offers far outweigh the abuses practiced.

Missionaries of India and Burma tell us that the World's Christian Endeavor Convention at Agra, India, was the greatest religions gathering ever held in that whole country. Some go so far as to say it was the greatest ever held on mission soil. More than four thousand were present, from all over India and Burma, chiefly natives, having representatives from all denominations. Many foreign lands were represented by delegates. These meetings were full of power, and were sources of great strength to all the missionaries, and native Christians.

Last year the Episcopal Christians of South India gave for missions practically a half dollar each for every man, woman, and child. This is more than the average gift by the Christians in the home land, at least among the Protestant churches. Many of these native Christians denied themselves the necessities of life. Mission work in many parts of India has become self-extending, the natives themselves taking up missionary work with much self-denial and devotion. They go or send their brethren to other parts where there are no missionaries. There is fulfillment of Christ's commandment pure and simple.

There were only three hundred miles of railroad in India fifty years ago. Now it has thirty-thousand miles, standing fifth among the nations. This country also has two hundred thousand miles of good highways. India has fifty millions of acres of land under irrigation, far more than any other land. The Christian influences in India are wonders in many ways.

Many of the India Christian Endeavorers that attended the Agra convention walked fifty miles or more for this great meeting, and preached Christ all the way. Hindu Endeavorers are not afraid to testify. It is not an uncommon thing to read of India Christians giving up meat and fish and living on rice in order to have something to give to missions; or even as some do, give up rice and eat bread.

"A Brahman interrupted a native Christian woman as she was pleading for Christ, and required her to prove her religion by a miracle. "See me," she answered, "I am a low caste woman speaking to you, a Brahman, these wonderful words of life. What greater miracle could you ask?"

The centennial year of Burma missions will be in 1913. The missionaries in Burma are almost all Baptists, and do a mighty work among the hill tribes, who worship spirits. They were without a literature till these missionaries came to them. Now there are thousands of strong, intelligent, aggressive Christians among them. The Gospel of Christ is still the power of God for saving the souls of the heathen.

A. McLean tells us that less than a century ago there was not a single Christian in Burma. The statistise he gives are now far out of date, but he speaks of vast numbers of self-supported churches. "They set aside as much of the harvest as may be needed to support the native pastors before they take anything for themselves. They also send out missionaries to Siam and support them fully. When the work began among these people it was said that they were as untamable as the wild cow on the mountains. Then they were a heathen power, now they are an evangelizing power."

THE DECIDING VOTE.

The deciding vote cast by Vice-President Sherman saved the Bristow amendment to the resolutoin to submit direct elections of United States Senators to the States. Many things have been decided by one vote. Speaker Clark says that he could give half a hundred of them and presents a few specimens: General Jackson was elected Major General of the Tennessee Militia by a majority of one. The victory at New Orleans resulted from that. Martin Van Buren was defeated for confirmation as Minister to England by one vote. John C. Calhoun, then Vice-President, cast the deciding vote, and that action made Van Buren President. Edward Everett was defeated as Governor of Massachusetts by one vote. That took him out of the list of eligibles for President. Thomas H. Benton was elected to the United States Senate by a single vote. This gave him an opportunity to show his great powers. Kentucky came into the Union as a slave State; Henry Clay cast the deciding vote in the Constitutional Convention. Had Kentucky come into the Union as a free State, then Missouri would have done the same and there would have been no Civil War. Hayes was put into the Presidency of the United States by a single vote, after the votes of Florida, Louisiana and South Carolina had been counted for him in the Electoral College, although cast for Samuel J. Tilden. The act of union of Scotland, Wales, and Ireland was passed by one vote. The Walker Tarriff Bill was passed in 1846 by the Senate by one vote. We have seen an important issue made by half a vote, the votes being 11 to 10; whole number present, 21. Divers delegates have gone to the General Conference on one vote majority, and several Bishops came within one or two votes of missing election.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Ponce, Porto Rico, Notes.

The work in Porto Rico moves on well, considering present conditions. There has ben more sickness the past year among the workers than at any previous time. Bro. Rafael Hernandez was sick with fever nearly four months. His wife too, was very ill wth fever for three months. But both are well now, and busy in the Master's service.

Bro. White's absence is felt in the Salinas field, although Bro. Hernandez is doing well and keeping up all points of preaching. The work of the dispensaries is proving a help to our mission.

Dr. E. E. Ruth, of the Methodist Church, who has been at work on the Island for three years, offered to do charity work for the Christians also, if funds could be raised to supply the necessary medicines, etc., for a beginning. Bro. McCloud and my husband canvassed Salinas district and received $105 for a beginning. The back room of our Salinas church was fitted up and the work begun Jan. 26, 1911, with forty-five patients the first day. The doctor and my husband go over every two weeks.

Miss Mishlen raised funds in Santa Isabel and similar work was begun there in a room of our chapel, June 1. Sixty-two patients have been treated in Santa Isabel in three visits. Both points are visited every other Thursday. Already four dispensaries have been opened in the Methodist, United Brethren and Christian churches, and others will be opened as soon as physicians can be found to help.

This work is proving a great blessing to the Porto Rican poor. Those who can not afford a physician's care have treatment free and medicine at such a moderate price that it is within reach of all. People come from miles around each of the dispensary points. Enemia and malaria are two of the greatest enemies to health in Porto Rico.

We have in Santa Isabel now a very good piece of property. The Board purchased and repaired an old house, which makes it possible for our missionary to have comfortable quarters for herself and the services. The work at this point is doing well.

In Arus a chapel is being erected at present, at the cost of $600. The Erie, Pa., Conference made this chapel possible by raising $350. The people of Arus barrio have given $50, and the remaining $200 is yet to be raised. It is a very neat building 21x35 feet, and will be ready for dedication in July. A letter from our Secretary today says he has sent the chairs. We will be glad indeed to have a church home in Arus.

Ponce is holding its own. Our Sunday school keeps up pretty well. But we are soon to lose as a worker our primary teacher, Sister Micaela Reyes. She is to be married to one of our young men of the Salinas church. She is a staunch Christian, and has been a great help to our Ponce work. We very much need and ought to have a lady missionary to take her place.

We have been much disappointed in the delayed visit of our Secretary, for he is to start the building of the Ponce church while here and we had hoped to have him attend our Conference also.

But now that the Ponce church is really to be built it will be easier to be patient a while longer.

You in the homeland who are helping to build the Ponce church cannot know how glad we will be to have a church home. After waiting so long we will know better how to appreciate it.

Little Winfred W. McCloud, infant son of Rev. and Mrs. W. C. McCloud, of Salinas, Porto Rico, went back to his Maker June 24, 1911. Just five weeks did he stay in the home where he was welcomed so gladly, but the time was not too short for him to get a firm hold on mother's and father's hearts, and it was hard to let him go.

We wonder sometimes why God permits such things, but we remember that He is not only God but Father too, and He is dealing with His children, and that sometime we will know just why He asks us to tread this dark way. It is hard to see a blessing in grief, it is hard to believe sometimes that a loving Father would afflict.

But we know His love is sure, and He never yet has asked one of His children to go through affliction alone. He can comfort and He will, but His hand alone is the only one that can heal the wound that He in His wisdom has seen fit to make. So we leave it all with God our loving Father.

Eva Olyn Barrett.

ROBBERS AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The following occurred recently on the Southern Pacific Railroad. A special was carrying a load of delegates from the International Bible Students' Convention at San Francisco. At a certain place some bandits boarded the train who later faced the brakeman with leveled revolver. "Put on brakes and stop this train," said the men with guns. "Who are you?" queried the brakeman. "Train robbers," was the reply. "Well, you will get nothing in this train. It is a Sunday school special." The robbers stopped the train and disappeared in the underbrush. Later that evening four men, near the same spot, robbed the mail car of the Oregon Express.

Did the robbers have respect for those on a religious errand? Or did they think they would have their pains for their trouble? Robbers have been known to abandon their pursuit out of respect for religion.

The Issues of Life.

No life is an end in itself. It is a crisis, a source, a beginning. Eternity alone can tell the outcome, the real issues of any life. The case of one Max Jukes is on record, and is notorious, but illustrates most terribly what one life may result in. Max was born in New York in 1720 and, being neglected, grew up to be a dissolute character and a drunkard. His off-spring through the generations has been traced. Of this dissolute character, 1,200 descendants, up to 1874, had been occupants of penal and charitable institutions. Not one was ever elected to public office, and not one even served in the army or navy, or in any way helped public welfare. On the contrary, they cost society more than $1,000 each, or a total of $1,200,000. Three hundred and ten were in poor houses, 2,300 years in all; 300, one in four of his descendants, died in childhood; 440 were viciously diseased; 400 were physically wrecked early by their own viciousness; fifty were notorious women; seven were murderers; sixty habitual thieves; 130 were convicted for miscellaneous crimes.

This indeed is a terrible record, and there are others, almost, if not absolutely as bad. No one knows what the boy, the single soul, left to grow up in sin and crime, will lead to.

Each life is a crisis, each life is a source. The issues of life are varied and many. The wise one well said, "Guard thine heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

Corn Clubs.

If the Charlotte Observer is to be believed, the corn clubs throughout the South have come none too soon. For some stimulus was needed to make us grow our own corn. We of the South are a bread eating folks, like corn bread, especially with our fish and our vegetables. Now, strange as it may appear, though we have a soil and a climate well adapted to corn culture, we had fallen into the habit of buying our corn meal from the West. How this corn was cut, cured, and kept we have neither cared nor enquired. We took it that corn meal was corn meal, and that was sufficient. We cared nothing, or knew, that the corn was steam dried from a heap that was housed before it was matured, or that foul and faulty grains, "nubbins," and the small ends of ears were all ground into the compound. We took the meal as it came, unwashed and without other cleansing, asked no question, and ate our corn bread.

It is not any wonder we find results like this, pointed out by the Observer July 14:

"It seems there are at least thirteen cases of pellagra in the small town of Canton, and The Canton Observer very appropriately urges that Haywood county farmers hereafter produce all the corn they require or more, instead of importing dangerously spoiled corn from the West. Between spoiled corn and pellagra there is certainly some connection."

We have no doubt but that there is some connection, for we cannot well conceive of how more uncleanness and impurity can be carried directly into the stomach than through immature and spoiled corn ground into meal for the table.

If people produced and picked and shelled their corn as they once did, selecting only the largest and nicest ears, throwing aside the small and immature ones, and shelling off for other purposes the faulty grains at the ends of the ears, like our fathers used to make us do when getting ready to go to mill, we should, in all probability, have no occasion to fear pellagra from this source; but who goes to this care and trouble for the sake of good, wholesome, corn meal any more?

So if the corn clubs will stimulate us to corn growing, and then a care for life and health will cause us to select our corn for the hopper and the meal barrel, we shall have accomplished somewhat for wholesomeness at the table and healthfulness of the body, for good, pure, fresh corn meal is no mean diet for any table, and is as healthful, we trow, as any other item of our daily food.

—There are more than 40,000 rural mail carriers in the U. S. now, and they are all to receive an increase in salaries shortly amounting in the aggregate increase the present fiscal year to $4,000,000.

—Has the aeroplanes come to stay? No indeed, it has come to go. It may not be generally known that up to Jan 31, 1911, 5,000 passengers had been carried on regularly scheduled "runs," which passengers paid a total of $122,600 in fares. The Zeppelin Company, in Germany, makes the boast that since its beginning of the regular passenger service through the air in 1908 it has never lost a passenger by mishap or accident.

—On July 22 Texas is to decide by ballot whether the saloon shall be outlawed in that great State. Only twenty-four counties in the State are wholly "wet," while one hundred and sixty-four counties are wholly "dry," and sixty counties are "dry" in part. That is to say, 1,066,549 Texans live in dry territory, 1,500,069 in territory partially dry, and 429,924 in territory wholly wet. The saloons are spending untold money to keep the State in the "wet" column, and the religious people are working and praying to put it in the "dry" list.

—According to the last governmental report estimates are that we are this year to have the largest cotton crop yet known. The present average of conditions is 88.2 per cent. compared with 80.7 on same date last year, and a ten year average of 80 per cent. The increase is said to be 35,000,000, and the estimate is for a crop of 14,425,000 bales, which is larger by 750,000 bales than the bumper crop of 1904, the largest so far on record. All of which must be taken with allowances yet, of course, as the critical period of the crop will not be passed for more than a month yet.

Let angels prostrate fall;

THE MONEY MEASURE.

A good base-ball player gets a larger salary than the average minister. That is to say, people put a higher value on good baseball than they do upon the service rendered (not merely the sermons preached) by the average pastor. For, somehow, this old world has got into the habit of estimating values in cash.

Two young men of equal mental ability enter college together. One becomes a lawyer; the other, a minister.

Ten or fifteen years after the day of their day of graduation the lawyer will be earning much more money than the minister. Yet the service that the pastor is rendering to the community is immeasurably greater than that which the lawyer renders. The large reward goes to the small service.

This does not mean, of course, that the lawyer's calling is not an honorable one, or that lawyers do no good in the community. It simply means that the minister's calling, the ideals which he preaches and for which he stands, the sweetness and uplift that he brings into life, are, after all, the best things.

It is well to remember this in estimating values and success. The king among men may wear a threadbare coat. Honor him!

The Man that did most for humanity received nothing in return. Jesus stood alone. No one could do His work, the value of which we can only begin to realize. Yet "He was despised."

The greatest service was accounted worthless. "The Son of man had not where to lay his head."

Men will pay for houses and lands; they will pay for passing pleasures and thrills; they will put down hard cash for silly amusements; they will write out big checks for business ideas; but fail to value the enormous service of the preacher of righteousness.

Men see things, sometimes, upside down!

Amt. 25th week 64.13

Total$1,469.99

My Dear Children:—

Such a nice report from Sunday schools this week cheers our hearts as did the showers which fell upon the earth yesterday. The small amounts you see bring us up a total of $64.13 and helps so much. Let all the Young People's Conventions that are meeting now throughout the various Conferences bring the matter before the Sunday schools and urge them to make one contribution each month to the Orphanage.

Our total this week teaches us a lesson. Look at the addition—6 plus 3 equals 9; 8 plus 1 equals 9; and 5 plus 4 equals 9. The same end, but different means. You can send a box of clothing and help; your Sunday school can send an offering and help; or your individual offering will help. Look around us and we may learn these lessons every day.

Some explanation seems to be necessary in regard to Annie Knott's letter of a few weeks ago. Some of our friends got the idea that in a way she was complaining of the work she had to do, when in reality she was proud of it. She is sorry her letter conveyed the wrong idea. Annie is 17 years old, and one of the most industrious and trusted girls in our Home. Our kitchen work is heavy, but shared by from eight to ten girls. Mary Morris and Annie Knott spent Saturday and Sunday on a pleasant visit to their old school teacher, Mrs. Mattie White, of Ramseur, N. C. They report a most delightful visit.

Very sincerely,

Uncle Jim.

Elon College, N. C., July 13, 1911.

Dear Cousins:—

I am the baby of the Orphanage, and I will write a letter and tell you what I do. I hold the cows and play with James. The big boys call me "Big Boy." I love to wear overalls, 'cause it makes me a big man. I go to bed at half past seven so I can get up in time for breakfast when the other big boys do. I ride Nelly (our horse) and I tell you I feel big. Well, I will close.

Lovingly,

Little Allie Blanchard.

Roxboro, N. C., June 25, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I am the only hotel baby, Jerry the only hotel dog, and Miss Elma Feathers-ton the only single lady. The other ladies are married or widows. Every one here pets me and says I am the best baby they ever saw.

Roxboro has the right name, for it is full of rocks and so hilly.

When I am out in my perambulator, you will find me on the granolithic walk around the hotel, or in the shade of the elms in the court house square across the street. Mama is afraid for Maude to take me around town, unless she goes, too.

With the exception of an attack of bronchial asthma in March, brought on by Maude's holding me at an open window a few minutes, and the mumps the first of April, I have been in fine health all the spring until this extremely warm weather. And that hasn't made me very sick; for mother believes an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure in the medical line. Mumps is the only contagious disease I have had. I was the seventh person in the hotel to have it. I was ill for twenty-four hours, and after that it didn't hurt much. Mama and Dada are thankful I've had it. You should have seen me with my jaws banded. I wouldn't try to take it off. I would touch it and say, "med," and "Dr." I had never been taught to pray for any one but "mother's little baby," and the night I was so sick with mumps I added "Dr." in my prayers.

"Mamie" made me a hat and sent me (I call my caps hats) and I was so proud of it. I sat in a warm room and wore it an hour. Easter we had a fine time at Grandma Cheatham's, but they had taught little Pearle to ride their backs and play "bear." Every time I got up on my "all fours" they had to pull her away from me; for she would run to get on my back and say "bear." I was very fond of her baby sister and tried to rock the cradle.

When we came on to Grandma Staley's "Boppa" (Grandpa Staley) met us and took us out over the "good new road." He kept me awake until we were on the good road. Mrs. Sue Holland, of Suffolk, was here with him, and I called her "Yush." I was learning words, so called Grandma "ma" and great grandma "Beek." Her name is Rebekah, and that was the best I could do.

I was by the lounge and Bill told a joke with the word "golly" in it and I repeated the word. The next morning I crawled back to the lounge and immediately began to say "golly" again. They laughed and I kept it up. The next time I started it they did not notice it and I have never said another bad word. I crawl rapidly by sitting erect and sliding over the floor.

"Boppa" gave me some "mon" to put in my romper "pock," and one piece I heard Bill say was a nickel, so I began to call it a "nick." I was on the floor one afternoon and heard Beek say something about Annie. I didn't know what that word meant, but kept saying "Annie," "Annie." I found out later that it meant "Aunt," and she told me to call her Annie. I have called her Annie ever since. Annie has two pet lambs, Mary and Martha, with brass bells round their necks. I call them Annie's babies, because she and Bill feed them out of one of my old nursing bottles.

That extremely warm Sunday afternoon this month, mama blew soap bubbles for me and let me hold my hands and feet in the water to keep cool.

When Bop's meeting started he wrote Mother to pray for it, and she read me what he said, and I put my little hands together and said, "God Boppa's me t. Amen." I still pray for it some days.

I know the pictures in my "Cock Robin" and "Little Karl" books; can count 1 and 2, and know the letter O, and the colors red, "blue," and white. I can tell you that God made me out of dust to do good (pronounced gude).

Here is another dime Grandma gave me when I was at home. I would like to see the animals at the orphanage. I can mimic several.

Love to all the consins.

Fondly,

William Staley Cheatham.

You should hear "Old Pete" holler, William Staley. He is one of our mules, and doesn't fail to let you know he is around. I can tell you.

Henderson, N. C., June 29, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Grandma, Aunt Lilly Stagg, and Leon, Aunt Lilly's little boy, came to see us last Wednesday. We have enjoyed their visit. Aunt Lilly and Leon left today. We shall miss them. Grandma is still with us. Aunt Lilly gave us our money to send.

Helen has a tooth cutting. It did not make her sick. Uncle Jim, we have a little cantaloupe patch. Prospects are fine now for a few nice cantaloupes.

Love to all.

Now be sure to let us know when the cantaloupes are ripe, and be sure to give us an invitation to come help eat.

Sanford, N. C., July 6, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I will write my letter and send my dime for July. Uncle Jim, mama and I went to Clío to visit my sisters, Mrs. Schobey and Mrs. Hunt. We went to Bennettsville, S. C., before we came home. Well, Uncle Jim, I wish you could be with us in our meeting. Rev. Mr. Rowland will help in the meeting.

I close with love to you and the consins.

Your niece,

Annie Pearl Way.

I see you are enjoying your vacation, Annie. With your pleasant visits and meetings your time must be well filled.

MARRIED.

Wells-Yarbrough.

The Greensboro Christian Church was the place of a very quiet and pleasant marriage, when, on July 12, 1911, Mr. Clifton H. Wells led to the altar Miss Mabel C. Yarbrough. The attending couples were Mr. Walter Taylor and Miss Mary Yarbrough, of Samora, N. C.; Rev. W. L. Wells, of Elon College, N. C.; and Miss Sadie Fonville of Burlington, N. C.; Mr. Fleming Wells, of Cunningham, N. C., and Miss Lila Newman of Elon College, N. C. The groom is a rising young man in the service of the Southern Railway, now stationed at Edgerton, Va.; the bride is a former student of Elon College, and later a successful and popular public school teacher of Person Co., and is deservedly popular wherever her excellent traits of character are known.

After a trip to Asheville and other points in western North Carolina, they will go to Edgerton, Va., to reside. Best wishes and prayers of relatives and friends follow them.

DIED.

Heath.

William Alexander Spery Heath departed this life at his home in Guilford Co., N. C., July 7, 1911, in his 56th year. He was united in marriage to Margaret Jemima Busiek April 4, 1878, and to them were born four children, one girl, who died at the age of six years, and three sons, John L., Gaton and Cecil, who with the wife, three brothers and two sisters, survive him; also there are three living and one departed grand child.

The deceased was prominent both in church and state, having served as justice of the peace in his county for a number of years, and as secretary of his church, Hines Chapel, for more than a decade. He had been a follower of the Savior and a consistent member of the church for thirty or more years, and often represented his church in the annual conference. He was afflicted sorely for about eight months before his death, and bore his affliction with patience, and resignedly awaited the end. As the end drew nigh, he gave directions as to his financial affairs, left the assurance that the future was bright, and gave counsel to his family with regard to right living. As his pastor was away and could not be reached, this writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Goods of the M. E. Church, conducted services to his memory, after which the remains were interred in the cemetery of Lee's Chapel M. E. Church to await the resurrection morn.

May Heaven smile upon the sorrowing.

C. C. Peel.

Sutton.

Ola May, infant and only daughter of Deacon J. U. and Mattie Sutton, departed this life on July 3rd, 1911, at the tender age of nine months and 23 days, after a severe illness.

This has been quite an afflicted family, as mother and brothers have been near death's door, while Ola's death occurred eight years to a day after the death of Bro. Sutton's mother.

It was indeed a sad fourth of July for Sister and Bro. Sutton, as they followed the mortal remains of their darling babe to the Berea Christian Church cemetery, where, after funeral service in the church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Ledbetter of the M. P. Church, we consigned them to mother earth to await the resurrection.

Father and mother weep, but with the sweet assurance that Jesus has taken Ola, and, if they are faithful, that they shall go to live forever where Ola is.

May the Lord bless and comfort the sorrowing.

C. C. Peel.

Smith.

On Wednesday afternoon, June 28, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jim W. Smith and carried away the dear little girl Lula Margaret, thirteen months old. It is in the arms of Jesus. It was laid to rest in the cemetery at Elizabeth church on June 29. The friends of the family sympathize with them in their sorrow. May they so live that when the battle of life is over they may meet the dear little one in Heaven.

Only a rose bud that has bloomed, to die so soon, plucked by the hands of the angels as they bore it away on their wings. But some day in the future it will bloom to die no more in a better land on high, where the roses bloom for aye.

A Friend.

Riddle.

Whereas, It has pleased our Father in Heaven to take from among us a dear member of Sanford Christian Sunday school, Beatrice Riddle; we desire to express our sympathy to the friends and relatives and our respect to the sacred memory of our departed little one.

Resolved, First, That we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well; Second, That the family has lost a bright and interesting child, the Sunday school has lost a loyal member; Third, That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved family, and point them to Jesus who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven"; Furth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy to the Sanford Express, and to The Christian Sun, for publication.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Christian Light.

Preaching was at Christian Light last Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday the congregation was small, but the music was first class. Sunday the congregation was tolerably large and very attentive. The music was inspiring.

The remodeling of the house of worship is moving on in a satisfactory manner. The brethren, sisters and friends deserve great credit for the sacrifices they are making. The final cost will not be less than five hundred dollars, and this will be paid largely by a few faithful ones.

The church is located in a fine farming community. The people are thickly settled. This, with a good Sunday school, is sure to tell sooner or later for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom in the neighborhood. W. G. Clements.

Newport News Letter.

Nearness to the "4th", and the shutting down of the Ship Yard from Saturday until Wednesday, for a holiday, reduced church attendance again in this city, and brought an ebb-tide to all church activities yesterday. Pres. Harper, of Elon College, was with us and delivered an excellent address. He did some good work here for the College and will probably secure two or three students. He left at evening for the bedside of his grandfather, Mr. J. A. McCloud, at South Norfolk, who, well advanced in life is critically ill at his home. Pres. Harper was always a great favorite with his grandfather, who took very great interest in his education and early training, and there is a very strong bond between them. Mr. McCloud has been an admirer of our church, and a contributor to her enterprises, and while his religious views were considered peculiar, he has been a man of liberal views and fine intelligence.

We hope he may not have to suffer too much.

This month is to record much in the work of our church in the South, for it is Sunday School Convention month. Many books will be read, many thoughts developed, many addresses prepared and delivered, all looking to the one object of bringing about better results in the Sunday school and Young People's work of the church. It is to be hoped that many will listen to these addresses, and carry from these Conventions back to their local schools new inspiration and high ideals. Would a lumber company select a man from the woods, or a clerk from their commissary, to represent them in a lumberman's annual meeting, where the interest of that industry was the one object for consideration? Would a College select from their students probably a junior, to represent the college in an important educational meeting where the one object of the meeting was the interest of colleges? Why should a Sunday school superintendent, or assistant, or teacher, be asked to be excused from the Convention, and some uninterested boy or girl be sent to represent the most important work of the church, in this most important meeting? If the very same men who are at the head of our Sunday schools and young people's societies would apply the same rule to this cause that they do to their secular pursuits, we should have, for instance, down here in Va. in July one of the finest Conventions ever held in the State by any church, and new life and power would be felt throughout the entire Convention. The same can be said of other Conventions meeting this month. It isn't true that men make religion first. If they do they act like crazy men. Just think of a Sunday School Convention in our Conference, July 19--21, with about forty superintendents, and twice as many teachers, perhaps four times as many, a number of Sunday school secretaries, all there to learn more of how to do things and bring things to pass; what a Convention! what an inspiration! what an influence would touch directly every school in the Convention, and raise their ideals and improve their methods. You don't like this, do you? Well, here closes.

Murdock W. Butler.

Mt. Auburn.

For years it has been my pleasure to preach for this good people. While the membership is not large, it numbers some of the best and most loyal people I have ever served; yet there are others who are inactive in their fellowship and uninterested in the work of their Church; or at least they render but little help. As a whole this is a splendid community, composed of people of different denominations. It is a very social and fraternal congregation. All worship together "as one body in Christ." While church congregations are large and attentive, the Sunday school is not as large nor as aggressive as it should be. I do not believe in so many societies, but I do heartily believe in the church and Sunday school. This is an intelligent and liberal congregation, composed of good Virginians and Carolinians.

We held our meeting second Sunday and until Thursday following. Rev. H. H. Butler, of Suffolk, Va., came Tuesday A. M. and preached for three days. Bro. Butler is a good man and an old fashioned gospel preacher and busy pastor. His sermons were plain, practical, and loving messages of divine truth, delivered in his own personal style. There were about eight conversions, quite a number of reconsecrations, and six joined, with four baptisms. The people enjoyed having Bro. Butler preach for them. We trust great good was done. Others will join the church later. God bless this faithful people.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP CONFERENCE.

The National Reform Association has completed all arrangements for its annual Christian Citizenship Conference or Institute at Winona Lake. The Institute opens with a sermon by the Rev. J. Knox Montgomery, D. D., President Muskingum College, the evening of August 6th, and continues with three addresses daily for two weeks. The first week Dr. Lyman E. Davis of Pittsburg, who was abroad last year studying social conditions in other countries, will discuss daily the general theme, "Social Perils in America," and the Rev. V. Loas, also of Pittsburg, editor of the Christian Journal and in charge of a Missionary Training School there, will discuss each day "Foreign Immigration and American Citizenship." Mr. Loas is himself a foreigner, and thoroughly versed in his subject.

The second week Dr. W. J. Wilson of Hillsdale, Mich., pastor of a large Methodist Episcopal congregation, will talk briefly on "Practical Questions," and Dr. J. S. Martin of Pittsburgh, General Superintendent of the National Reform Association, on "Fundamental Principles of Christian Civil Government." A special feature of this year's work will be addresses at 4 P. M. daily for two weeks by missionaries from different countries on the attitudes, respectively, of their countries and governments toward prevalent religions, especially Christianity, how far this is determined by law and what measure of religious liberty is granted individual subjects. There will be at this hour a different speaker each day. Special patriotic music will also be added this year. No tuition charge is made. The sessions are free to all who may be on the Assembly grounds.

This Winona Institute or Conference is preparatory in part to the great World's Christian Citizenship Conference being arranged for by the National Reform Association, which is to be held on the Pacific Coast the midsummer of 1913. The city of Portland, Oregon, has offered the National Reform Association $15,000 to locate this World's Christian Citizenship Conference there. This Conference it is estimated will be attended by at least 20,000 people from all the countries of the world. One hundred or more of the ablest speakers the world affords will discuss, during the week the Conference is in session, the great problems of the age in so far as related to or affected by government. The one-fourth of these speakers at last will be from other countries than America. Already the Bishop of London, Lady Balfour, and Dr. Clifford of England, Dr. Paterson of Edinburgh, Scotland, Dr. Luzzi of Wales, and Charles D'Aubigne, son of the historian D'Aubigne of France, have been engaged to speak at the Conference. The President of the National Reform Association, Henry Collin Minton, D. D., LL. D., sailed July 8th for a three months' tour of England and the Continent for representative speakers to attend and participate in the proceedings of the Conference. Another of the national officers of the Association, J. A. Cosby of Tarentum, Pa., has been abroad for more than two months on the same errand and in the interests of the Conference generally. He reports great interest among the citizens of the countries visited and predicts a large attendance from abroad. All the moral interests of every nation on the globe will be under consideration by representatives of the church and of Christian civic organizations the world over. Information in detail concerning this great gathering can be obtained by writing the General Superintendent of the National Reform Association, Dr. J. S. Martin, 603 Publication Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.

—Evangelist Gypsy Smith is still a busy man, a great preacher and is winning thousands to Christ by his consecrated and persuasive eloquence. He has been engaged for an evangelistic campaign on the Pacific Coast the coming fall and winter, Sept. 30 to February 12, from Spokane to Los Angeles.

—We are hoping that Senator Swanson, of Virginia, will get through Congress a bill which he has introduced calling for an appropriation of $20,000,000 a year for five years for the improvement of country roads. Any State, or locality, to share the benefits of the proposed appropriation, would have to put up an amount equalling that given by the national government, and the total is to be divided among the States according to population. It may seem a departure for the government to go into road building, but why unreasonable, or incompatible with the appropriation of millions annually to open up and improve "rivers" which are called so for financial reasons only. Road improvement, as well as river improvement, is the need of the hour.

THE NAMELESS FOLD.

O Shepherd of the nameless fold,
The blessed Church to be,
Our hearts with love and longing turn
To find their rest in Thee.
Thy kingdom come! Its heavenly walls
Unseen around us rise,
And deep in loving human hearts
Its broad foundation lies.

From out our low, unloving state,
Our centuries of strife,
Thy hand, O Shepherd of the flock,
Is lifting us to life;
From all our old divided ways
And fruitless fields we turn
To Thy dear feet, the simple law
Of Christian love to learn.

O holy kingdom! happy fold!
O blessed Church to be!
Our hearts in love and worship turn
To find ourselves in Thee;
Thy bounds are known to God alone,
For they are set above:
The length, the breadth, the height are one,
And measured in His love.

THE WAY FROM SIN.

(Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee.—Golden text for Sunday, July 30).

We hear so much of the ways that lead to sin, why may we not hear somewhat of those that lead from sin? It would seem worth while, for whether we believe in total, or in partial, depravity, we know well that it is exceedingly easy to find the broad, and the much traveled, way. Now there is a way from sin that is easy, interesting, plain and pleasant.

One of these ways is by reading, and by hiding in the heart, the Word of God. One may read the Word till the task becomes no longer a burden, but a pleasure. And one may neglect reading the Book till the reading of it becomes a bore and a burden. The one who does not really enjoy the Book is that one who reads it some about once a week, or once a month, as a matter of conscience and of duty. That one sees little beauty in the Book, gets little pleasure indeed from reading the Book. That one does not hide much of it in his or her heart. The way from sin, that of reading daily, and hiding in the heart, the word of God, is as delightful, may be made as pleasurable, as the way that leads to sin.

This lesson of finding the Book of the Law is certainly fraught with a significant message for our day. The lesson tells of a day and a people that had to pour out, carry off, cart away, the money under which the Book had been covered, forgotten, ignored. They had lost the Book beneath their accumulated dollars. Are there not men of our day who are losing from sight, putting away out of view, the Book beneath their accumulating wealth thousands and millions? I found this sentence in a book I was reading the other day and I think it applies: "We have fallen upon distracted and distracting days. The world is crying out for something, it scarce knows what. Wealth has come, but the heart is hungry; knowledge has come, but life for many has slipped into a riddle and delusion. The world is filled with the inventions of human skill and genius, but there is a vast emptiness which neither science nor art is able to fill. Loaded with many possessions we cry, 'What lack I yet?'" The people of Judah had to remove their money in order to find the Book. The people of our time need that same performance somewhat. Here indeed is a way from sin. Let us reach down beneath our dollars and lay hold of and read to pleasure and to profit this Word of the Law and the Gospel.

And a whole kingdom was awakened and aroused by reading a Book. They set about at once to do things for the common good and for the benefit of all. Their consciences were smitten and their moral sense was made acute. Reading the Bible always does that; it not only enlarges the consciousness, it sharpens the conscience and so makes sin seem hideous and fearful, and makes righteousness seem bright and beautiful. Read the Book. It leads you the path from sin.

IN PLEASANT PLACES.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Bennett's Creek, Nausmond Co., Va.

July 22, 1911.

From the Sunday School Convention which adjourned at Liberty Spring yesterday. The Sun's editor, instead of hiding him back to office and to Elon, has stolen off home with his wife a week, and today finds himself in pleasant places, and in a meditative mood. The editor always enjoys going home with his wife, to that other, that more bounteous and beautiful home from which he ruthlessly and cruelly carried her by her gracious permission fifteen brief and happy years ago. It was just twenty-one years ago today that he first laid eyes on the Lee homestead, with its far-reaching, wide-spreading river front to north and west, and its fine fertile acres stretching away to the south and east in their robes of mellow fallow and growing green. It was from this same Convention and from the same church, Liberty Spring, he had come, sent there as the first representative of Elon College to those quarters. What changes have come about in this brief interval!

The Convention which met with Liberty Spring twenty-one years ago assembled in a shell of house of the old church meeting place type. This Convention assembled in a beautiful modern building, with carpeted floors, splendid heavy oak pews, inclined floor, cathedral windows, and of magnificent build and proportion. I was just from college and from graduation, and carried to the convention a fearing, faltering youth, by the late lamented Rev. M. L. Hurley, and was given my second opportunity of making an address about Elon College, my first having been attempted at Holy Neck on the previous Sunday. I have not the first idea, nor the semblance of recollection, of what I said about Elon or about anything else. Stage fright and sweet forgetfulness have covered forever the public attempts of those years, and of later years, too. If any man has suffered more, as a public speaker, from fear and dread and stage fright than I have, and than I do, here is pity and deep sympathy for him forever more.

Elon College had not opened its doors then, but was to do so in September following. From the beginning the churches of Eastern Virginia have shown deep interest in Elon's welfare, have contributed largely to its support, and, until within recent years, have sent their full quota of students to the College. And, from all evidences, the College is coming to its own again as to patronage, and it looks now as if Elon is to have the largest number of pupils from these quarters that it has ever enjoyed.

The changes of twenty-one years! Some of the boys I tried to persuade for Elon then were the men of this Convention, and were directing its affairs to the delight and profit of all. Some of the girls that made ready to go then were at this Convention intelligent and interested on-lookers, with college diplomas at home, and with a great love and loyalty for their church and all its work in their hearts, and with splendid homes in which they are rearing children for church and learning and truth and God.

I came with Bro. Harley from Liberty Spring to Berea and then to the Garkins' home which I can see in the hazy distance now beyond the beautiful bay from which I write. I was received with true Christian cordiality in that good home by one who was for the rest of his life to be my sympathetic and devoted friend, Capt. T. R. Gaskins, now of sainted and sacred memory, and by his noble companion whose hospitality and gracious favors knew no metes nor bounds when shared by a minister, or a servant of the church. I was not a preacher then, but Bro. and Sister Gaskins could not have been more cordial in their entertainment if I had been a minister, for I was working for Elon and that institution was dear to their great hearts. Next day Bro. Harley brought me to the Lee home canvassing for students. I found one here. I found more than a student. I found one who a few years later made me a student. And for some reason I have been coming here ever since, when opportunity afforded. I canvassed here very much. It was difficult, but delightful.

Do gray mules ever die? That is a question I am not so sure about. Twenty-one years ago this very afternoon they brought out a mule called "Old Ned," hitched to a small blue cart. The present Mrs. Atkinson, then a girl of only a few brief summers, gathered the girl friends who were visiting her from Norfolk and went off in high glee, the whole cart full of them, behind "Old Ned" to the country store more than a mile away. Now our more than half-grown children go away, when they want, with the same "Old Ned" to the blue cart, and carry a load of their friends in the same jolly gleeful manner. The good and faithful gray, nobody here knows anything about how old he is, is still on the job, and is doing well. His generous owner thinks he deserves an old age pension, and so is not for sale at any price, and is to spend the rest of his days in peace, light work, soft feed, and then have decent sepulture when he dies. He deserves it. When a beast has spent a long life of faithful service for a master we cannot understand how that master can have the heart to trade the beast to someone who will certainly be cruel and unkind to him. The old age of a beast, as well as that of a person, deserves some respect, esteem and consideration. As age goes with mules, "Ned" is "Old Ned" sure enough now and has earned his ease and comfort. Everything else, hereabouts, has changed, save the faithful Ned, in these brief years.

These farm lands, valuable then, have gone beyond price now, well nigh, and the fields, already productive, have become more fertile with the passing years. From the window where I write, high up in the third story of this great and splendid house, some three hundred of these fine and generous acres spread in the distance, and twenty teams with their plows keep the fallow fresh and the soil mellow. This and the farms of the vicinity constitute the vegetable garden of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Providence, and other northern cities during mid-spring and early summer. It is not an uncommon occurrence, in some seasons, for a single steamer to clear from Norfolk for New York with a cargo of 20,000 barrels of Irish potatoes. It would be astounding to know how many barrels of potatoes this one farm, Town Point, has shipped away these past twenty-one years. As many as 10,000 barrels have gone from there in one season, though if a half of that number has gone this season it has done well, for, because of drought, the potato crop is exceedingly short. The price, however, has been good, and the growers are in good heart. And then the thousands of barrels of cucumbers, squash, baskets of beans, crates of cabbages! This soil yields her increase year by year, feeding hundreds and thousands of hungry mouths, and yet it is far more fertile than it was twenty-one years ago. Did you ever calculate the possibilities of the soil, of its renewed strength, of its incessant and increasing powers? It is wonderful.

The house that was here when I first came is gone now, and a very spacious and many roomed one has taken its place. It is a generous house indeed with three ample stories and inviting, well-appointed rooms on each. The lawn likewise is large, velvet-like in its rich green, and studded with stalwart trees of dense shade. Why such a large house and wide lawn for two people? Well, the two great hearts that live here live not by, nor for, themselves alone. There were more than twenty children here this very afternoon, in and over the house, on the lawn, in shade and hammocks and swings, joyous, gleeful, gay, happy. They are having ice-cream and cake even now out on the green, under the thick shade, the whole glad company of them, and their care-free laughter tells a tale of life and joy and gladness that has made this home and these two great souls loved and revered wherever their names are known. And their good names are far known because of the good deeds they have done and the generous lives they are living. I shall spend a happy week here, fishing, resting, writing, meditating, revelling in this beautiful and beautiful hospitality, and then go away to my place of labor happier for these favors, better for these blessings, stronger for the tasks and the toil that crowd my days and make my life seem worth living. Life indeed has many sides and the brief years bring many, many changes. Pity indeed it is that one cannot spend each year, each day well, for that one does not live who can tell what the next will bring forth. I wonder if the changes will go on in that endless eternity as they go on here in time? If so, I am sure all the changes then, as many of them here, will be for the better and we shall enjoy them all as they come and go. J. O. A.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday-school Convention, to employ an expressive term in slang, is on to its job. It is no longer a matter of social gathering, of impractical essays, and off-hand scintillations and superficialities. This Convention is somewhat, and signifies. If the schools represented last week at Liberty Spring were not enlightened, edified, inspired, then their delegates were out of doors or asleep. I attended this Convention some six years ago. It was like our other Sunday School Conventions then, it was asleep. It is no longer like our other Conventions. It has woken up, and in flaming words over the platform might have been suspended the motto, "We do things." Our other Conventions are still talking about doing things, between the dozes; this one has no dozes, and is doing things.

First of all the speakers were there. And let it be said to their everlasting credit that they were there, not to speak, but to deliver a message; not to cavort, but to convince; not to make a display, but to express a conviction; not to fire in the air, but to find and to fetch their game. My, but those speakers were in earnest, had a purpose, and drove hard to the goal. I am thinking of Newman in calling out, in eloquent array, the difficulties of the County Sunday-school; of Peel in making a powerful plea for a Home Department, that which was proving a blessing and a benefit to his schools; of Smith, in setting forth the big boy in all his needs and awkwardness, and the tender solicitude for this bundle of nerves that may be somewhat in the future; of Rountree, the aggressive and alert program builder, who fired the Convention with white heat from "The Real Dynamo of the Sunday School"; and of Harrell, the missionary spirit of the Convention, who called around him the teachers and officers of the Sunday-schools and taught them an object lesson of Missions and Peoples and Conditions in Japan; of Hanson, whose stories and incidents from real life interest everybody and through whose "Open Windows of the Primary Teacher," not only primary teachers, but all present, were made to see many real and very beautiful truths and things; of Blanchard, who is full of zeal for "Primary Union," and who is not merely speaking about primary union at Conventions, but is striving zealously to promote primary union in our schools everywhere. I say, after the Convention is over, and we have all gone home, and the thing is done, I am still thinking of these my fellow-laborers, and beloved brethren, who are leading the van in this great Sunday-school work, and are bringing to bear all the power within their reach and range, to make the Sunday-school go, and go hard, in its wide and wonderful field of pursuits and possibilities.

And, next of all, teachers, superintendents, officers, delegates, were there from the various schools. They were there from a busy life at home; they were there by personal sacrifice, financial and other; they were there through the sweltering wiltering heat, there, a great, anxious, earnest, attentive, determined host of them. They were there not to see and be seen, but to hear, to take note, to learn, to get information and inspiration. The Sunday-school hosts foregathered at this Convention to get plans and purposes for the coming year. And, please God, they were not disappointed. That very prince of Sunday-school teachers, President Harper, of Elon, told the method of his own teaching, a method that is neither an experiment nor a dream, but a reality and a success. Miss Margaret Brickhouse, one of the loyal workers, pardon me, Miss Margaret, one of the live wires, of the Temple school in Norfolk, gave to teachers, delegates, all who cared to know, "The Secret of Success in the Beginners' Class," and if schools do not organize classes as they should it will not be from lack of knowledge and information of what they lack and are missing. And if all that company of teachers do not now realize, and feel to the heart that they are them-

AN EXPLANATION.

Rev. L. E. Smith's letter in last week's issue of The Sun contains some very complimentary words in reference to my work as pastor of the Rose Hill Christian Church, which are most heartily appreciated. But Bro. Smith makes one assertion that might be misleading to some without a word of explanation from me. You will note his statement that I am not only preparing to turn my face from the work I now have in charge, but "from the active ministry, to the profession of teaching," which statement might be construed to mean that I purpose leaving the ministry to take up teaching as a permanent profession, a thing I have no idea of doing. It is true that I have been planning to teach next year, and possibly two or three years, but I have never dreamed of taking up that work as a permanent profession. I am sure Bro. Smith had no such thought in mind as he wrote, yet his statement might lead some to think I am about to change from preacher to teacher.

The fact is, I found several weeks ago that some change of situation would be necessary at the end of this conference year, in order that financial obligations and living expenses might be met. To that end I decided to teach in connection with such church work as I could do. About a month ago I accepted a school and have been preparing to give up this work, knowing that I could not serve a city charge and teach with any great degree of success. I was moved to take this step out of sheer necessity, as it seemed to me, and not from choice or desire. At present, however, it seems that there is a chance for me to remain as pastor here. This I hope to be able to do instead of turning aside temporarily to the mixed profession of preacher-teacher. Even if I should hold on to the school to which I have been elected, I purpose devoting a part of my time to preaching, and after a short while to come back to devote my entire time to the ministry.

To the brotherhood at large I wish to say with all the power at my command, that I shall never vacate the pulpit for the school room as a permanent profession. It would be indeed a cross for me to mix matters even for a while. No other work so appeals to me as that of the Christian ministry. Here I purpose to labor, and here I expect to die.

SELF-HELP AT ELON COLLEGE.

Self-help is the very best sort of help, and yields the largest returns. It is easy to see why this is so. The man who helps himself knows what the help costs and is in position to appreciate fully the opportunities the help affords. He is at least more likely to make wise use of every opportunity supplied by his own effort and at his own expense, than the man whose opportunities of advancement are due to the generous provision of others.

Elon has always encouraged its students to help themselves, not only in the preparation of lessons for the classroom, but also in paying their necessary expenses. And while the village is small and practically devoid of industrial establishments, yet the number of students who pay their own way by work at off hours has always been reasonably large and has steadily increased.

The first student to matriculate, now a merchant of large holdings and a financier of note, paid his expenses through the College by dint of his own efforts and the exercise of rigid economy. The lessons he learned as a student in making every penny do its ten mills of work has stood him in good stead in his remarkably successful business career.

Year before last a certain young man paid all his necessary expenses in the College and saved about $16 in money from his work. Last year this same man did equally as well. As I travel from community to community I meet with numbers of old students, some of them alumni, who recount with pleasure with how insignificant sums of money, varying from fifty cents to a few dollars, they entered the College, and how the way, though dark, opened up before them, and how they would not have had it otherwise. (All these men and women are achieving success in their various vocations, and they rightly attribute their advancement and progress to the excellent discipline and thoughtful economy necessitated by their working their way through College.)

Last year nine young ladies paid half their board by work in the College dining hall, and at least ten young men earned practically all their way, while many others earned considerable in that direction. The surprising part is that these pupils, almost without exception, take high rank in their scholarship. It is also gratifying to the College authorities that those who thus contribute to their own expenses and to making possible a College career for themselves, are received as equals in every way by their fellow-students. I hope the day will never come when Elon students will consider work degrading or regard those who necessarily have to do it as inferiors socially or in any other way. That day is certainly not yet.

We have never known a determined man or woman, however poor in this world's goods, to come to Elon for an education and fail to get it. We are always ready to give any assistance possible to young men and young women who are ambitious to help themselves to that priceless boon—a College education. And no young man of promise or young woman of vision need go through life intellectually lame or maimed or blind, while Elon College is able in any way to assist them with the opportunity to self-help.

I will be glad to correspond with any young person of grit, grace and gumption, who is anxious for an education and willing to help himself get it, but has not the money ready at hand to pay for it. Let all interested address me at Elon College, N. C.

OUR STUDENT POPULATION.

Just about this time the attention of Canadian people is called rather forcibly to our schools, colleges, and universities on account of their examinations and closing exercises, and we note with considerable pride the fact that the schools still call for the very best of our young men and women. A nation without high intellectual aspirations will soon become decadent, and we are unfeignedly glad that school and college life still appeals strongly to so many thousands of our Canadian youth.

And we are glad to note the efficiency and aggressiveness of our educational institutions. There is an undoubted tendency in purely academic education to become bookish and possibly more or less out of touch with the world about it. But in this century events are moving so rapidly in the development of the material resources of this and other continents that the swing of the pendulum seems to be now the other way; and education is apt to be narrowed all too much to special training, but leaves him with an outlook upon life that is too often most woefully narrow.

But whether it be a one-sided or an all-round education which our students are securing, the most important matter is what they are going to do with it. The scholar who loves his books (and what true scholar does not?), and who dreams of a life of pleasant companionship with them alone, has surely missed the path. And the student whose brilliant course has given him a taste of fame, and whose life goal now is the applause of his admiring associates, has failed to see the deeper meaning of life. And the one whose sole idea it to coin his skill and knowledge into yellow gold has failed still more lamentably to seize the real value of his education.

Education helps a man to enjoy the society of men and books, but this is not its end and aim. It sometimes opens avenues to fame, but this is not its mission. It often, like Midas, is possessed of "a golden touch," but its chief value lies elsewhere. It helps the man that he may help others. Education is largely wasted when it becomes selfish. The educated youth has many privileges, but to every privilege is attached a responsibility. The educated man should be always a center of refining and enlightening forces. The man who sulks in his tent because he is not properly appreciated is but a poor sample of manhood.

To the men and women who have had college advantages the country looks naturally for exceptional helpfulness and exceptional public spirit. Canada is deservedly proud of her student population, and at the same time she feels that she has a right to expect of them a broader outlook, a clearer vision, a wider usefulness, and more heroic self-sacrifice than from others whose advantages have been more limited. To whom much is given, of them we require the more.—Christian Guardian (Toronto).

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The uplift of righteousness has been the theme of many a sermon and many a song. But what is righteousness? The dictionary says it is purity of heart and rectitude of life, being and doing right. But what is right? The American people are very much mixed on this question. We have so many people from so many countries with so many different standards and ideals that there seems to be much confusion.

Some console themselves that since there are so many conflicting opinions it is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to determine what is right. Many are right glad that it is difficult, for they think it makes little difference what a man believes or what he does; for one man's opinions are as good as another's and no one is bound by the standard of his neighbor. They say that what is right for one may be wrong for another, and what is right at one time and in one place may be wrong at another time and in another place.

Amid all this fog and dust what is becoming of our convictions? One may hear scoundrels lauded as honest men and unscrupulous politicians praised as good citizens.

Yet it is not difficult for any one who really wishes to know and to do right to find the way. If men will abandon the search for what is popular and fashionable and expedient and profitable, and seek only to know the truth and obey it, they will not be troubled with many doubts. The fog will clear away and they will see plainly. Let us go on to do the right as God shall give us to see the right, and we shall know. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." If we are as eager to know what is right and to be right as we are to find some excuse for doing as we please, we should find the way.

There is one God and one way of righteousness. The law of righteousness is as simple as the law of gravitation. There is but one. Men may dispute and quibble and confuse their own minds and throw dust in the eyes of their neighbors, but the law of the Lord is right, and the way of the transgressor is hard.—N. Y. Advocate.

MY GIPSY MOTHER'S DEATH.

Mother knew she was dying. Our hands were stretched out to hold her, but they were not strong enough. Other hands, omnipotent and eternal, were taking her from us. Father seemed to realize, too, that she was going. He sat beside her one day and asked her if she thought of God. For the poor gipsies believe in God, and believe that He is good and merciful. And she said,

"Yes."

"Do you try to pray, my dear?"

"Yes, I am praying, and while I try to pray it seems as though a black hand comes before me and shows me all that I have done, and something whispers, 'There is no mercy for you!'"

But my father had great assurance that God would forgive her, and told her about Christ and asked her to look to Him. He died for sinners. He was her Savior. My father had some time before been in prison on a false charge and it was there that he had been told what now he tried to teach my mother. After my father had told her all he knew of the gospel she threw her arms around his neck and kissed him. Then he went outside, stood behind the wagon and wept bitterly. When he went back again to see her she looked calmly into his face and said with a smile:

"I want you to promise me one thing. Will you be a good father to my children?"

He promised her that he would; at that moment he would have promised her anything. Again he went outside and wept, and while he was weeping he heard her sing:

"I have a Father in the promised land,
My God calls me, I must go

To meet Him in the promised land."

My father went back to her and said: "Polly, my dear, where did you learn that song?"

She said: "Cornelius, I heard it when I was a little girl. One Sunday my father's tent was pitched on a village green, and seeing the young people and others going into a little school or church or chapel—I do not know which it was—I followed them in and they sang those words."

It must have been twenty years or so since my mother had heard those lines. Although she had forgotten them all these years they came back to her in her moments of intense seeking after God and His salvation. She could not read the Bible; she had never been taught about God and His Son; but these words came back to her in her dying moments and she sang them again and again. Turning to my father she said:

"I am not afraid to die now. I feel that it will be all right. I feel assured that God will take care of my children."
—Gipsy Smith.

MAKING FRIENDS.

We know a few people who move about the world in a doleful way and with an ever-present feeling that nobody likes them. They are unhappy and they would be glad to be liked, but they are waiting for people to take hold of them.

It is our duty to make friends. We must have a will to do this. They are to be made by an active and thoughtful effort on our part to be friendly. We must do things for people, be considerate and thoughtful of their wants and their comforts and convenience. It is well to remember that we all have in the long run all the friends we are entitled to have. The good Book has something to say to the effect that he who would have friends must show himself friendly.

The second rule to observe, after we have on our own part shown abundance of kindness to those about us, is that we must not be looking out to see whether people respond to our overtures for friendship. At least we must not look too narrowly and too closely to this. Let it take care of itself. Do not open up an account of credit and loss with people, and watch them to see whether they keep the account up on their sides. Deal generously with the world.

selves "The Most Important Asset" in the school it is certainly not the fault of good Bro. Howsare. In eloquent phrase he exalted their position, magnified their place, enlarged their outlook and opportunity.

I could write on and on of the real work this Conception did. It was great and it was good to be there.

Let it be written out in red, heralded wherever this print may go, that the brethren and sisters of Eastern Virginia are making progress, are going forward by leaps and bounds, as touching this matter of the Sunday-school.

Of course the Convention was taken care of. Never saw a religious body that was not. If there is one thing more than any other that a community delights in after it gets at it, it is this entertaining a religious body, a company or Conference of those engaged in the King's business. Here you see the best, the most princely, the real royal side of a community. Sometimes a church fears and dreads and doubts before the convention or conference comes; but after it comes all fear gives place to favor, dread disappears in deeds, and all doubts are dissolved in delight.

The Liberty Spring people were lavish in their abundance and their guests were happy.

Here is an opinion, for what it may be worth. This Convention will have to locate. It is too large to be on the run. It has too much strength to waste any in wandering. This body will have to build, or buy or lease a place of its own and go there from year to year to let the clans take counsel, and to give and gather the last and the best that is to be said or done in Sunday-school work. A great tent will have to be stretched, or a great hall found, by the river or the sea side, and these Sunday-school hosts will have to strike camp there and hold their councils of peace and progress. The Baptists of Virginia have already done this, we believe, and their annual Encampment at the Beach or View has become an epoch in their denominational career. The Christians will have to do likewise. The work widens, the multitudes multiply, and the opportunity for real service increases with the growing years. And it might have been with this in view that the Convention accepted the invitation of the Tidewater Sunday-school Association for its next annual meeting.

—Rev. C. H. Rowland's Pastorate has voted him a vacation in August, one week of which he will spend at Fuquay Springs recuperating, another week of which he will spend with Pastor Lee Johnson in a series of services at Wake Chapel, which was the home church of Bro Rowland in his early years.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

—His great pastorate, of Holy Neck and Holland, has taken counsel of its own cause, increased Pastor N. G. Newman's salary, and said that he must abide with them in his devoted labors another year.

—Miss Margaret Brickhouse whose splendid essay on "The Secret of Success in the Beginners' Class" is present elsewhere in this issue, is a wide-awake teacher herself and leader of our busy and active Baraca Class at the Memorial Temple in Norfolk.

—Mr. S. M. Atkinson, now traveling for The Sun in Eastern Virginia, has rendered invaluable aid to the work and the paper during June and July, and will go shortly as our representative to the Valley of Virginia, and in The Sun's behalf attend the Virginia Valley Central Conference.

—Rev. M. W. Butler, one of our most active ministers and beloved pastors, is to close his work with the Newport News Church at the end of the present Conference year. We trust that some of our fields of usefulness will be fortunate enough to secure Bro. Butler as pastor.

—We note with pleasure, from the Norfolk papers, that Rev. D. A. Keys of South Norfolk has assumed pastoral control of our Lambert's Point church, preaching there in the afternoon, Sundays, we presume, in addition to his other work. Bro. Keys is a strong man and the work will go well under his directions.

—We note from the Norfolk papers the death of Mr. J. A. McCloud, Sr., South Norfolk, Va., on Friday, July 21. Mr. McCloud, who educated and gave us President Harper, was a friend and benefactor in many ways of the Christian Church and was a well-known man and much esteemed in and about Norfolk, where he had spent the 77 years of his earthly life.

—Rev. Stanley C. Harrell who graduated from Elon two years ago and has taught successfully for the two years since as principal of Holland Va. High School, goes to Defiance College in September as Professor of Mathematics in that institution and will take a two years' course there in Theology. Bro. Harrell is one of our promising young ministers and is seeking to prepare himself well, by study and learning, for his life's work.

—President D. A. Long, D. D., leaves North Carolina this week to take up his work at the head of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind. Under date of July 22 Pres. Long writes: "Expect every room to be taken at U. C. College the day the fall term opens, Oct. 2, 1911." Dr. Long has our heartiest good wishes in his great work at Merom. Here is predicting that Union Christian College will have rapid growth and enlargement under his able leadership.

—Revs. N. G. Newman, J. W. Harrell, A. M. Hanson are the fortunate ones who are to spend their vacation at the Northfield Bible Conference. How we do view them with envy and wish we could share their journey and the abundant feast of good things that awaits them. Dear Northfield, the sweetest place of Christian fellowship, and of spiritual rest, indulgence and development we have ever found on this earth.

—Are you thinking of sending your son, your daughter, to college the coming year? If so it will be worth your while to investigate and consider well Elon before deciding to send elsewhere. We are persuaded that the Christians have a college the equal of the very best, and in very many particulars, the superior of most. Elon College is doing a great work, and no mistake can be made, and no risk taken, in patronizing it.

—President Harper has rendered herculean service in Eastern Virginia the past month in behalf of Elon College, and all indications point to a very largely increased patronage from that part of the moral vineyard. President Harper is interested not only in the College but in helping young people in every possible way. So while among the churches he did wholesome work for Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor. His addresses before the Sunday School Convention at Liberty Spring were marks of thoroughness and efficiency as scholar and teacher.

—The editor was with the Berea (Nansensmond) school last Sunday morning, and while we missed much the familiar face of our lamented friend, Capt. T. R. Gaskins, and that of dear "Aunt Gaskins" so long the teacher of the infant class and now on an extended visit to her daughter, Mrs. W. L. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., yet the Sunday school was awake, active and pushing forward under the guiding hand of Bro. F. Winner, Superintendent. This school is not large, some fifty members being present last Sunday, but it is one of the most loyal and lively and liberal in our acquaintance, the collection Sunday being over $5.00. Rev. I. W. Johnson is the devoted and beloved pastor and he was good enough to let us occupy for him at the 11 o'clock service. It was preaching to home people and we appreciated the privilege.

—The obsequies of the late J. A. McCloud, Sr., of South Norfolk, Va., were conducted from the residence last Sunday and the interment was in Magnolia Cemetery. While Mr. McCloud was not a member of any church, he was friendly to the Christian Church and in more ways than one was its benefactor. Besides assisting greatly in building our Berkley church, he educated his grand-son, now President Harper, at Elon College and more than once gave to those representing the College contributions in cash to help carry forward the work, Shortly before his taking off, he expressed to President Harper a belief in Almighty God, and a willingness to go and be at rest.

—In giving credit to those who were in charge of preparing the excellent Children's Day program at Pleasant Grove, Halifax County, recently we learn that we were misinformed, and that Miss Carrie Boyd, whose name was not mentioned in our report, was one of the most active and helpful in that efficient service. Our regrets are hereby expressed for an error which was wholly unintentional.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

We have attended recently three Sunday school conventions, and have heard many thoughts and theories advanced for the improvement of present conditions.

We gather from many sources that the weak point in conditions that now obtain is the absentee and indifferent teacher. Many teachers do not seem to realize the magnitude and importance of the work they are engaged in, and so, on the flimsiest pretext, go elsewhere than to their class on Sunday, or remain at home. Two, three, four absent teachers from a Sunday school disorganizes the work greatly, and causes confusion, and produces bad effects. Our conviction is that the biggest question the Sunday school of the present faces is this. How can teachers be induced to attend Sunday school regularly, and with some idea of the importance and magnitude of their work? This settled, the school will go forward.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Nausemond County, Virginia, has the best crops she has had for twenty-five years, at this stage in their development; and the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, which was held at Liberty Spring Church July 19—21, was the best Convention in its forty-two years of history.

Rev. I. W. Johnson and his good congregation entertained the delegates and visitors in good country style and the hundreds of people entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion.

The ministers and laymen who had a place on the program showed careful and successful preparation, while Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Editor of Christian Sun, and W. A. Harper, President of Elon College, added their presence and good addresses to the edification and delight of the people. Simeon Atkinson secured more renewals and new subscribers to the Christian Sun than ever before, and President Harper put in many good words for the College. There is no better advertisement of the College than the young men and women who take part in the public meetings of the church. There is not only a marked degree of improvement in the literary matter in essay and speech, but there is a genuine spiritual tone that is really inspiring. I think it may be safely asserted that Elon College turns out as complete a type of educated young people as any institution in the land. The scholarship is simple and classic, the manner is refined and modest, and the ideals seem to be optimistic and religious. Many schools do all their work in the domain of letters and professions and overlook the elementary and character requisites. The least observation in our Convention reveals the fact that Elon College is producing a great change in our Sunday school and church life.

The Convention appropriated $500 to missions: $100. to foreign missions, $300. to home missions, and $100. to Christian Missionary Association. These sums are not large, but they show growth in the interest in this most important enterprise of the church. Besides this the Sunday schools give a goodly sum per month to the Christian Orphanage. I am quite sure more is given to the Orphanage than to missions; though the schools give to missions outside of what is sent to the Convention. Many schools have membership in the Christian Missionary Association. Twenty-five years ago the Sunday School Convention was a mass meeting with speeches and dinners and adjournment; now it is a school of instruction, inspiration, and service; but the present would not be without those early beginnings. Perhaps the pioneer work of other years met the obligations then as well as our work does in the present. Both form a part of what is being done for God and the people.

The interest did not wane and the church was full to the close.

The Convention emphasized "Teacher Training," "Organization," "Missions," "Better Equipment," "The Bible," and the "Country School."

President Harper's grandfather, J. A. McCloud, Sr., died the last day of the Convention, and will be buried from his home in Berkley, Virginia, on Sunday afternoon. A multitude of admirers of President Harper will sympathize deeply with him and his in this bereavement.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

President W. A. Harper has just returned from an extended visit to Eastern Virginia in the interest of the College. He reports the outlook very bright for quite a large delegation from Eastern Virginia next year and is highly elated over his success. President Harper will leave the last of the week for the Western N. C. Conference and other points in the N. C. and Va. Conference.

We are very sorry to learn that Prof. N. F. Brannock, of the Chair of Physics and Chemistry, is very ill in the St. Leo's Hospital, Greensboro, with appendicitis. Prof. Brannock was operated on last Thursday, and had to undergo another operation the following day. At the last report he was resting quietly and getting along as well as could be expected, but his condition is still critical.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson has been spending a week with his family in Eastern Virginia. The doctor will return Friday.

The College community is pleased to welcome into its midst the family of Mr. C. H. Heater of Greensboro. Mr. Heater is erecting a handsome residence in the west end of town, and such improvements as these are welcome additions to the community.

Quite a number of visitors were at the College during the Shallow Ford Young People's Convention. We are always glad to have our friends call on us, and it is a pleasure to show them through the college plant.

Mrs. Alma Wilson and Miss Wilson have returned from their vacation, which was spent at Blowing Rock and Statesville.

Our townsman and genial merchant, Mr. Reitzel, is now spending his vacation at Hiddenite Springs.

Miss Ethel DuRant is visiting friends at Danville.

Rumor has it that Rev. R. P. Crumpler, of the Class of '09, has received a call from Dan Cupid, and to the surprise of Mr. Crumpler's friends, he is to accept the call. His friends here congratulate him most heartily on his decision.

Miss Lizzie Rich, who has been visiting friends at Holly Springs, N. C., has returned to the Hill.

Applications continue to come in, and everybody is pulling together for the best year in Elon's history.

Preparations are being made for the entertainment of the Farmer's Institute which is to be held here on next Wednesday. In connection with the Farmer's Institute, there will also be an institute for women and it is expected that a large number of ladies will be in attendance.

Topics of interest to the farmers, their wives, and also their children will be discussed, and it is hoped that the people in the community will help to make this institute a success.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSONS, AUG. 6.

Topic: Lessons From Great Lives. VIII.
Job... Job 6:1-11; 42:1-6... (Consecration Meeting).

God often allows the possessions and dear ones of a good man to come to harm, and the entire story of Job is a discussion of why He allows it. There are many possible reasons, and different cases are for different reasons. Sometimes it is to wean us from the world. Sometimes it is to test our faith. Sometimes it is to set the good man before the world as an example of faith in the midst of trial. Sometimes it is to drive us to God for help us and to make us less self-conceited. Sometimes it is to strengthen us by the conflict with difficulties. Sometimes it is to punish us for our sins and lead us to hate them and abandon them forever. Job's three friends insisted that the last reason was the only one; but Job knew that they were wrong, as they certainly were.

There is no finer lesson in Job than his beautiful resignation to God's will: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." If we can honestly say this, we can meet any sorrow with a smile.

There is nothing in all literature that is finer than the book of Job. It contains the most superb poetry and the highest philosophy. Study it with a good commentary, and it will become one of your favorite Bible books.

Remember that it is Satan who said, "All that a man hath will he give for his life." The saying illustrates how Satan is a liar and the father of lies.

The climax of Job comes with the appearance of God to the patriarch in the midst of the storm. Not all the arguments of his friends, including Elihu, could bend Job's confidence like a single word from God.

"The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends." They had been heaping abuse upon him; he would heap coals of fire upon them. Indeed, is there any act in which we come closer to Christ than this prayer for our enemies?

It is rather singular how the same or similar conditions will affect different people. The storm that uproots one tree strengthens the oak. Hard experience that drives some people from God, draws others closer to God, draws others closer to the Lord. Not every vine is like the ivy; while many cling to their supporters with tendrils, the ivy puts forth its thousands of roots.

Trouble came not in Job's life singly. Much lighter affliction has turned the hair white over night, has driven to drink, upset the mind and brought on such despair that suicide seemed a remedy. Less losses have cast a life-long shadow over sunny countenances, and ploughed furrows across youthful and beautiful cheeks.

We sometimes criticise Job's wife, but before we condemn her and withhold from her our sympathy, let us sum up her losses. Seven sons and three daughters—not through sickness, and one at a time, but all at once without a moment's notice, by a heartless cyclone that tore down upon them the house in which they were celebrating, doubtless, the birthday of the oldest son, suggests some one.

Job had wondrous wealth. His substance, including "a very great household," made him "the greatest of the children of the east." His wife could wear the latest hats and dresses, entertain box parties at the most fashionable operas, ride in the costliest automobile. But one day she found herself poorer than penniless. The flight of a meteor is not more swift. These were sore trials for human experiences.

We deplore the counsel of Job's wife, "Renounce God and die," but at the same time she commands sympathy. Too bad she represents a large class of modern times, who, as long as the sea is calm, ply their barks regularly; but as soon as the waves begin to stir, are seen no more. Like the man who built upon the sand, they plan for fair weather only.

We all need a reserve fund faith. Life is troubled with many afflictions, and when these come, if we are only equipped for normal conditions, there is danger of our failing in the storm. The trials of such men as Abraham, Daniel and others of the Bible should strengthen us.

There are other "vexatious experiences" than bereavement and loss that cause shipwreck of faith. "Dost thou still hold thy integrity?" is a question to many today in high places. If sorrow has slain its thousands, "greed for gold" and "thirst for power" have slain their ten thousands.

Job had much occasion for sorrow. His ten children, and all of his property were violently and suddenly swept away from him. Sometimes the loss of some piece of property, or of a friend will cause some unthoughtful person to curse God. Even though all were gone, he said, "Jehovah gave and Jehovah hath taken away; blessed be the name of Jehovah." "In all this Job sinned not nor charged God foolishly."

Job's friends misunderstood his trouble. They tried to convince him that he had some grievous sins for which God was punishing him, therefore confess and be forgiven. One says, "Whoever perished being innocent?" "Behold happy is the man whom God correcteth."

Paul tells us, "God is the Father of mercies and God of all comfort. He comforteth us in all of our affliction through the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." We should bring to the sorrowing a knowledge of God and His mercies. Let his consolation be a sufficient message to the afflicted.

THE ORGANIZED CLASS.

Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

Marshall A. Hudson, when he, twenty-one years ago, organized the first Baraca Class of the world, was dealing with a local problem in a local, original way. Little did he reckon on the tremendous consequences that would eventuate from this innovation. There were practically no young men in his Sunday school. He was trying to get them in, and applied Christian Endeavor principles to the S. S., and with marvellous success and far-reaching consequences. His own Sunday school has grown from a few hundred to over a thousand, and the church membership from less than 300 to more than 1200, and the idea, like wild-fire, has spread to the ends of the earth. Classes for men, classes for women, for men and women, are being organized in every land, under a multiplicity of names, but all with the fundamental ideas of the original class. We shall briefly discuss some of these ideas or principles.

Organization.

We cannot have an organized class without organization. We must have a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Teacher, and at least three committees, Devotional, Social and Membership, if we are to come up to the minimum standard of organization set by the International S. S. Association. We may have also organist, chorister, assistant teacher, and as many other committees as we desire, such as visiting, sick, flower, literature, etc. As much organization as we desire can be had, but it is best not to have too much. Don't think that organization will make the class a success. It is like the machinery in a mill. The mill cannot get along without it, but it takes power to make it go.

Service.

This power comes of service. The various officers and committees are to get to work harmoniously, joyously, with devotion and consecration. All must be willing to work, and all must work. The secret of the success of the class is its power to get every member to rendering service towards its success. To do this, skill must be employed in planning the work, and then the plan is to be worked. "Plan your work, work your plan," if rightfully and skillfully applied, will make the Class full of zeal, zest, and enthusiasm. Unless we can get service, our beautiful organization will be "vanity and vexation of spirit," to borrow Solomon's expression.

Division of Labor.

This service may best be secured by division of labor. The organization suggests certain lines of work and certain individuals to do these kinds of work. Select those best suited to do each special kind and put them to work there. Change officials at least twice a year, and do not re-elect, certainly not over two terms. In this way, after some space of time, every member will be trained for every position in the class and able to serve effectually in every capacity. This is what we need to make the class succeed and continue to grow. I sometimes think we make a mistake in always having the same person filling the same place in our religious organizations. It narrows the person and hurts the place, while a reasonably short tenure of office spurs every one to do his best. Rivalry is wrong; but healthful emulation is right and commendable. If we divide up our work well and do our very best, we will see our class grow in numbers, power, and influence.

Bible Study.

No class can long succeed that does not have Bible study. We may get members out once in a while to hear a lecture, but not continuously. Each pupil must study his lesson, or the interest will lag and the class finally die. How best to do this is a problem for the teacher. The best method I know is to give out special assignments of work for home-study. By judicious planning here, great interest in Bible study may be aroused and the permanency of the class assured.

Some Beneficial Results.

From such a class many good results may be expected to follow as the day the night.

1. It will develop fellowship.
2. It will keep the big boys and the big girls true to the Sunday school, for they will be guided by the example of their elders.
3. It will bring the adults into the Sunday school.
4. It will give every body something to do.
5. It will introduce to larger lines of Christian service.
6. It will create genuine interest in Bible study.
7. It will lead to salvation for many out of Christ.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Miss Allene Patton, Elon College, N. C.

The Junior C. E. Society is a natural and inevitable outgrowth of the Christian Endeavor movement. Many pastors and churches have felt that while the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was answering the needs of the young men and women and of the older boys and girls, yet the younger boys and girls, who could not attend the regular weekly prayer meeting held in the evening, were in some degree left out of the plan.

In the college town of Tabor in southwestern Iowa was the first Junior Society formed. There were no older Christian Endeavor Societies in town, because the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations of the College seemed to fill their place; but for the children there was no Christian organization, and the idea occurred to Rev. J. W. Cowan, who was then an earnest pastor in that town, to form them into a Junior Christian Endeavor Society. The date of this first Society is March 27, 1884. There were eleven charter members, all of whom have grown up into earnest Christian manhood and womanhood.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor had only been organized three years previous to this date; so this first Junior Society adopted their constitution, including the strong pledge. Within two years after its organization a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was formed from this Junior Society by the graduation of its members. Moved by the example of their successful methods, the College organizations of the town changed their forms, and became probably the first distinctively College Christian Endeavor Society.

The name of the first Junior Supt. was Miss Belle Smith. Mrs. E. H. Slocum was the first Secretary of the Iowa State C. E. Union, and to her is due much credit for the early spread of the movement.

From this small beginning in 1884, the society developed until at the Minnesota Convention of 1891 the General Secretary was able to report 855 Junior societies. At the Boston convention of 1895, there were about 8,000 societies with approximately half a million members.

One of the chief features in the rapid progress of the Junior cause has been the formation of Junior city unions. Another step in advance was the establishment of the office of State Supt. of Junior Work. Nearly all State unions now have such offices. Miss Jessie Williams, of Asheville, is the Junior Supt. for North Carolina, and she will gladly assist any one in the organization of Junior Societies or along any line of the work.

Junior work is claiming a more and more prominent place. The New York Convention of 1892 first honored it with a separate session which was crowded and enthusiastic. Junior banners have been awarded. The Juniors have their own papers, "The Junior Golden Rule," and the "Christian Endeavor World." They have also a Junior song book.

In the organization of Junior Societies, I would suggest that the one undertaking this task obtain a copy of "The Junior Manual," by Mr. Amos R. Wells. This book will give all the information needed along every line of Junior work, Constitution, pledge, officers required, committees and duties of each explained.

The Junior C. E. Society is a power for good. How often is it the case you call on Bro. A. of the church to lead in prayer, but he can't. He has never listened to his own voice in prayer. Take children of the Junior Society and they are trained to think and express their thought not only in prayer, but they will be ready to give their ideas on the lesson topic. A wise Supt. will never give her talk first, but get the Juniors to express themselves about the lesson, and you will be astonished at how fully they have treated the lesson, and much of her talk will be unnecessary. Of course to get these ideas she will have to resort to questions, and will often get queer answers, but these should be treated as did a Supt. once who noticed a boy brimful of some idea. He was very restless, and she knew that he must relieve his mind; so she said: "Johnny, you've got something to say; what is it?" He replied: "Baby's got a new tooth."

She took this piece of news, so wonderful to the boy, talked about it a little, wound her lesson about that tooth, and held the attention not only of little Johnny, but of the whole society. Pick up ideas that interest the children, and use the simplest language to express what you have to teach.

Mrs. Francis E. Clark, who during her Christian Endeavor journey around the world with her husband, devoted herself, especially in many addresses, to teaching pastors and their wives, and Christian Endeavor workers, the blessedness of labor for the children, and the best methods to use in establishing and carrying on Junior Societies.

"We need love's tender lessons taught
As only weakness can;
God hath his small interpreters;
The child must teach the man.
Alone to guilelessness and love,
That gate shall open fall;
The mind of pride is nothingness,
The childlike heart is all."

(Read before the Young People's Convention at Shallow Ford, June 13.)

A Difference.—There is this difference, at least, I have observed, between the church paper and the daily. When a church paper carries the picture of a man it is of one who has performed, or is performing, some helpful and beneficent service; is bringing to pass, or has brought to pass, some commendable and praiseworthy deed. The daily paper, on the other hand, may, and almost with every issue does, carry the picture of a man who is most prominent in the latest scandal; of a woman who is the principal in a divorce proceedings.

The church paper seeks to advertise the good, the daily is ready, shall it be said eager, to advertise the bad, in character and in conduct.

And yet there are even church people who will take and will read the daily, but will neither take nor read their religious weekly.

We sometimes wonder if such church members really prefer to read the bad deeds that men do rather than the good deeds men ought to do. And if so, do they not love, also, to hand around in the community the latest bad things they hear about their neighbors rather than to hear and to tell the good things they see and find? Withal there are some strange and far-off church members in this world.

YOUNG PEOPLE INTERESTED.

The Sunday school is the greatest educational institution of the church and this is why it is necessary to get the young people interested in it.

To do this we must first bring them into the Sunday school. Much personal work must be done. Go after them. Invite them continually and make them feel that you want them. After having invited them, make the Sunday school worth coming to, or, in other words, have a good meal ready when you ring the bell. Keep the Sunday school moving so that the young people will always have something to look forward to. Have a good Superintendent, trained teachers, and music of a high order. Not music of a worthless character, which sounds like the rhythm of the week-day street song, but music that will feed the soul and not the ear only.

It seems to me that the teacher has the greatest power to interest the young people in the Sunday school. The teacher must be interested in what the young people are interested in. This is a principle which applies alike in business, in politics, and in religion. If you desire to secure the interest of anybody, the quickest and best way is to manifest an interest in that in which he is interested. A teacher who was late to his class found the young people busily engaged talking about a fire that had just occurred. The teacher made a few remarks about it and before the class realized it they were listening intently to him tell of the eternal fire spoken of in the Bible.

This principle applies everywhere. The second great thing is to give the young people something to do. A healthy body must be busy. To the young, life is moving, adventurous, highly colored, and if their energies are not directed in the proper channels they will find other channels. This trait of youth is ample justification for class organization. Occasionally assign to each some definite work to be done. Assign to John the persons, to James the places, to Charles the doctrines, to William the duties, to Henry a Bible story representing the lesson as a whole. This encourages home study.

It is very important to know your class by name, and, too, a teacher who knows his boys on Sunday and fails to recognize them during the week will have no influence or power to interest them. When it is said of Christ "He calleth his sheep by name" it means that he individualizes them. Nor are you to look upon your scholars merely as a class, as a set of ears, each of which is like the other, or a cluster of living hearts, all of which throb together. John, William and Mary are as different in their character and their moral being as in their names. They are not machines; each has his peculiarities; no two can be reached by exactly the same process.

And don't be always telling your class "don't"; teach positively and not negatively. Instead of telling a pupil he should not read the book he is reading because it is bad, compliment him because he loves to read, then recommend a good book and see that he gets it. Too many of us are like the mother who said to her servant, "Mary, go see what the children are doing and tell them they mustn't." Johnny Don't must not belong to the Sunday school.

Be tactful with your class. Tact is that quality which makes one master of the situation.

Young people do not like to be criticised and bossed and a teacher who does this will not interest his pupils but drive them away. Be a friend to your class. Remember you are far more than an instructor. Do not make the lesson a whip to drive them with. One teacher when asked the secret of his success with a class of young people said, "I am interested in them, in their every-day affairs. I meet them during the week, I sympathize with them."

Love your class. Dr. Charles Sheldon once said, "There is nothing in this world but what will yield if you put love enough into it."

There is a warm side to every young heart and nature into which you can enter through the door of love as in no other way. A teacher who really loves his class will soon have their attention. So many teachers fail at this point. No truer words were ever spoken than those used by the great London preacher, "The world is dying for a little bit of love."

A school that furnishes many teachers, frank, honest instruction, wholesome social fellowship and loving service for others will hold and interest the young even through their years of restlessness and doubt.

COCA COLA.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, says that the sale of drug drinks should be prohibited.

The promoters of the best known of these drinks, Coca Cola, have always insisted that their beverage is harmless. Evidently the government chemists are not of that opinion, for on page 268 of the report referred to in the foregoing, this is said: "The prevalence of the 'Coca Cola' fiend is becoming a matter of great importance and concern."

Some Southern newspapers are now warning against Coca Cola. One Atlanta paper has recently dared to speak out in behalf of the children who are being sacrificed in health to the avarice of the manufacturers of this drink. The Atlanta Jeffersonian says:

"Any man, woman, boy, or girl who tampers with Coca Cola will form the Coca Cola habit. Any man, woman, boy or girl who has become a slave to the Coca Cola habit is on the road to ruin.

"The appetite, like the whiskey thirst, will establish a mastery over the victim. It will demand more and more. It will go from one glass per day to two, from two to four, loosen the moral structure."—Selected.

My Dear Children:—

As we sit at our work we hear the merry voices of children all around us. They do not bother so long as no discord creeps in, but uuy! when they strike a wrong note and begiu to "sqnabble" how it gets our nerves unstrung! Just now the conversation is quiet and one little girl says, "Yes, Jesus died for us." Another says, "What did he die with?" The question must have been too deep, for I hear no answer and they drift to other subjects.

Bettie Earles, Manson, N. C., sends two thimbles this week for which our little ones are thaukful.

Our gardeu is still suffering from dry weather. No corn as yet, few tomatoes, Irish potatoes, snaps and cabbage.

Cordially,

Ucle Jim.

Dear Ucle Jim:—

We have been enjoying a visit here at Dr. Newman's—right in sight of the Orphanage. We love to watch so many children together, and go with them to Sunday school. Aunt Myrtle is our teacher. In a few days we are going to Henderson to see Charles, Hannah Clare, and Helen Newman, then on to Virginia to see Grandpa. We will hand you our letter and dimes.

Fondly,

John Newmau Denton,
 S. E. Denton, Jr.,
 Joseph Rabb Denton,

Elon College, N. C., July 17, 1911.

And so, little folks, you have really seen where our childreu "sleep"! Newman said when he first visited the Orphanage and did not go to the bed-rooms, that he did not believe the children had any place to sleep. He knows now, all right, don't you Newman?

Dear Uncle Jim:—

My birthday comes in this month, so I will send the Orphanage a birthday gift of 50 cents, as I haven't written in quite a long time. We have a birthday bank in our Sunday school, in which we place a penny for each year we are old, but I don't want any one to think I am fifty years old. I want to give five penies for each year. W had our Children's Day exercises last Saturday. I miss going out to the church every day to practice and play with the children while we rested from our singing, but I guess Cousins Macie Farmer and Carrie Boyd, who trained us so patiently, are glad it is over. Everybody said we had nice exercises.

I enjoy my little cousin Wu. Staley Cheatham's letters to The Sun fine. I wish he would come to see me again.

My brother William will send his birthday offering in September. He will be six. I will be glad when he will be old enough to go to school with me. Love to all the cousins. Your niece, Mary Melissa Cook.

News Ferry, Va., July 8, 1911.

Thanks, Melissa, for such a nice amount of birthday money. Many happy returns.

Dear Cousins:—

We are the little girls that sweep the front porch and put stools to the dining-room tables. We are not but five and six years old, so you see we cannot do much but play. We can sweep yards, too, and help keep our home neat and clean. Two of our cats died and we went to the funeral.

THE FRUITS ARE BAD.

Those who have accepted the teachings of what is called "higher criticism", but which is really destructive criticism, are saying that they now have much better views of the Bible than they had in former years. Some preachers of this kind say that the Bible is a new book to them since they obtained the modern methods of studying it. They say that they are not now obliged to believe many things in the Bible which they once thought that it was necessary for them to believe and preach. Of course, such ones can see no harm in the theory which leads its subjects to disbelieve those things in the Bible that are contrary to their own big reason. They do not see that their faith in God is being lessened; nor do they seem to realize that their former reverence for God's word is being destroyed. The fact is, the general fruit of an acceptance of such views is bad everywhere. It must be so, for anything that leads one to indulge in doubts about God and the Bible is decidedly bad. I quote some words from Prof. F. Bettex, of Germany, who is a competent authority. He says: "Suppose that all the teachings of this criticism were true, what would it avail indeed. For then, sitting beside ruined temples and broken-down altars, with us? It would put us in a sad condition no joy as respects the hereafter, no hope of everlasting life, no God to help us, no forgiveness of sins, feeling miserable, all desolate in our hearts, and chaotic in our minds, we should be utterly unable either to know or believe anything more. Can such a view of the world, such a religion, which, as was said of Prof. Harnack's lectures in America, only destroys, removes and tears down, be true? No! If this modern criticism is true, then away with all so-called Christianity, which only deceives us with idle tales! Away with a religion which has nothing to offer us but the common-place teachings of morality! Away with faith! Away with hope! 'Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die!'" One would better have no religion at all than to have one which is beguiling the souls of people and teaching them to fall. I urge you to cling fast to the holy Bible, and defend it with all your might.

C. H. Wetherbe.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE. NO. VIII.

If I could prevent it I would never speak nor write another sad word, but it would be my chief delight to write and speak glad words, loving words, cheerful words, bright words, helpful words, and encouraging words. It makes one feel and look so much better to help some body in this way. By using them life passes away more pleasantly, and you feel happy when you make others happy. In these beautiful lovely months, while nature is putting on her spring and summer dress, it looks so bright, beautiful and cheerful, that it makes the heart inexpressibly happy to look over the way at the red, white and crimson clover fields, and to see the wind galloping over it in waves of beauty. The lovely budding and blooming flowers of so many names and colors, perfuming the air as it breathes softly through the rustling leaves while the glad zephyrs play around us. And if I could I would forever banish disease, sickness, sadness and death, and write across the sky in letters of gold, bright as the sun,—Health, Peace, Joy, Love, and Happiness,—and then bask in perpetual youth and bathe the tired heart in the refreshing waters of life. Has it been the joyful refrain and the great object of your life to help somebody along life's weary way? To do so will be a blessing to you as well as to them.

And when you get to the last river and hear the boatman dipping his oars in its still water, may you be taken safely on the eternal shore where the tree of life will bloom on continually, and where we hope to meet our dear loved ones as they look for our coming.

Let us look away from the sad, lonely, discouraging, desolating, affliction, destitution and want, and fix our minds upon the lovely, the beautiful, the helpful, the healing, the healthy and happy conditions of life. Then we could gaze upon them until our souls were filled with the spirit of a better and happier feeling, and we could roam in the superlative realms of joy, and live in the infinite heights of permanent bliss.

To help somebody, to gladden some heart, to inspire some life with greater effort and a stronger ambition ought to be the constant desire of every one in the field of progressive thought and work. You meet so many in life who only have sad discouraging words to tell, and you have tried to avoid meeting them, because they related the same old experience,—full of sadness, trouble, affliction, and poverty. There was nothing new, fresh, or comforting in their conversation, and it filled the time with sameness and unpleasantness.

As has been repeated in these short papers, a beautiful life contains all the elements of a pure life. Purity of thought, purity of speech, and purity of purpose and action make the real beautiful life. Then, too, to wipe away the falling tear, to brighten the looks, to kindle a new fresh sparkle in the eye, to cause the face to shine with hope and cheerfulness, to help make the step more elastic and steady is a privilege you can enjoy and a duty you can help to perform. Why not then try to do it instead of repining so much.

That these short series of articles might be read they have been purposely short. For, sometimes, failure to read is produced by having lengthy articles with not so very much in them except repetition. My conception of a beautiful life is great, but my manner of telling of it is very weak and imperfect.

DIED.

Gatling.

James Vivian Gatling departed this life at his home near Holland, Va., July 11, 1911, aged 38 years, 5 months and 12 days. He leaves a widow who was Miss Willie Rawls, and two daughters, Azzie Queda and Mary Emily; a father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Gatling of Gates Co., N. C., three brothers, Riddick W., Langley Taylor, and Grafton Gates; and one sister, Mrs. Mary Gatling Thaxler, Greenville, S. C. The deceased was a member of Holy Neck church and a good man. He was kind and loving in his home, faithful and generous toward his neighbors and friends, and a man of marked industry and integrity. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Holy Neck church, and the remains placed in the Holy Neck cemetery. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to his loved ones. May our Heavenly Father bless and keep them.

N. G. Newman.

Davis.

At Asheville, N. C., June 24, 1911, Harvey C. Davis, aged 33 years.

The deceased had been sick for some time. He had spent the last three winters in Florida seeking health. All was done for him that could be done, but death claimed him at Asheville, where he had stopped on his way home to his people at Sedley, Va.

He leaves a father, four sisters, three brothers and many friends who are made sad by his death. Funeral services were conducted at the grave by the writer.

R. H. Peel.

Johnson.

Mrs. Mollie B. Johnson was born July 17, 1865, died July 7, 1911. She was a great sufferer for several months. A loving husband and children and her physician did all in their power to restore her to health. About two weeks before her death she was taken to a hospital in Norfolk, where it was hoped she could be benefitted. She died while at the hospital. She was brought to her home near Windsor after her death, and funeral services were conducted at Antioch church by the writer. She leaves a husband, five children, five grandchildren, a mother, one sister, and one brother to mourn their loss. May the Lord bless and comfort them.

R. H. Peel.

The shadows of death have fallen upon our community and taken from the home of Dr. G. S. Watson and wife one of our loveliest young women. That death loves a shining mark was shown when the death angel took from our midst Miss Ellen Watson.

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to the will of the heavenly Father who has taken her, whom he gave, to be with him in glory.

Resolved, That in her death the community, church and Ladies' Aid Society have lost a faithful, devoted, and loved member, and her home a bright and cheerful spirit.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the records of the church, published in The Sun, and sent to the family of the deceased.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS IN THE BEGINNERS' CLASS.

In seeking the secret of success in the beginners' class, it might be well to ask first, What is the purpose of the beginners' department? Perhaps we have all heard of the little boy who, when asked what the Sunday school was, replied: "It's the place where the little kids give up their pennies, and don't get nothin' back." Surely there was no beginners' class in that Sunday school. All of us have been in Sunday schools where the little children from three to six years of age were so restless and noisy, the older people could not enjoy, nor satisfactorily profit by, the instruction given. What is the trouble in such cases? Just this: they do not understand what is being done and said. It is as if you were to try to teach a little child color by presenting to him fine works of art in which many different delicate hues were shaded from one to the other. If you want to teach a child color, you show him primary colors, red, blue green; these are such things as his mind can grasp. The purpose, then, of the beginners' class is to make spiritual truth and the work of the Sunday school intelligible to children between the ages of three to six.

Since that is the purpose of the beginners' class, it seems to me that the secret of success in this work is to adapt methods to the children's needs and development. Yet, when the secret is discovered, is the problem solved? The key to success in any relationship of life is not necessarily hard to find. The problem of greater importance is the fitting of this key into the various doors of opportunity, which swing open or remain closed for each one of us according to our diligence in inserting the key. For each Sunday school there is a door of opportunity in the beginners' department. Yet, each Sunday school presents a unique combination of conditions, and the key to success must be inserted carefully and persistently until it fits, and the door is unlocked.

One of the first things to remember in organizing a beginners' class is, that the work is to be planned in an entirely different way from that of the Intermediates, the Juniors, and even the Primaries. If different kinds of cultivation are necessary for growing different plants, how much more important it is that methods be adapted to the proper development of each child in the Sunday school, where plants are being grown for eternity in the souls of the pupils. The ages nine, ten, eleven, and twelve include what is known as the "golden memory" period; consequently, memory work is strongly advocated for such pupils. In the beginners' department, however, much memory work has the effect that a great deal of sunshine has on delicate flowers, causes vitality to wilt. During the years three, four, five and six the child's brain grows much more rapidly than in after years, and should not be taxed. Perhaps none of their work will be such that it can be exhibited to advantage. They may not sing their songs perfectly, nor give correct answers to questions. This is the time when the roots of character are busy taking a firm hold on life, and there is no time for showy accessories.

The work for beginners must be chiefly impressionistic. Definite results should not be looked for, as in the higher grades. The teacher of the beginners is the artist; the child's mind, the canvas upon which she works. In some cases, the result of her work is brought out most beautifully, so that almost any one could appreciate its value. In other cases, the result seems incomplete and faulty. Yet, there is often more beauty in these soul pictures than the casual observer sees. The great Master Artist may be preparing through these imperfect sketches some of the finest productions of His art.

No doubt, the most difficult part of beginners' work is the imparting of spiritual truth. This is no easy task to be learned by rote. Moral truths must not be pointed at the children. They should be allowed to imbibe them from the lesson stories, the circle talks, and from the teacher's actions. Far more is gained by what the teacher does than by what she says. The truths to be taught at this time of life are those fundamental in character, obedience, love to God and to one another, love of right and duty, prayer, and childlike faith. The child's relationship to God should be emphasized as that of the child to his father. This relationship is familiar to little children, and helps them to gain a true conception of God.

Another important requisite for success in the beginners' class is to have a teacher who is sympathetic with child nature and understands it. She should have a generous supply of imagination, and be able to look at things from a child's viewpoint. She should be so filled with the spirit of youth as to enter heartily into their games and childish pleasures. It is needless to emphasize the importance of faithfulness, patience and enthusiasm, as these are requisites of all good teachers. To be a good story teller is necessary to the success of this department. This art can be acquired to a great extent by studying stories written by Miss Harrison and other good storytellers, memorizing their stories and noting their methods. The last requisite to be mentioned for the teacher of beginners is one that should permeate all others and bind them together—love for the children, a true, sensible, wise love for them. Those teachers who have not yet had opportunity to prepare fully for this department need not be discouraged. A wise love for the pupils solves many problems that could not be solved by closest study of numerous books.

In seeking to adapt the work to the needs of the children, material aid is gained by proper equipment. It is strongly urged by international workers that a separate room be used for beginners. If that is impossible, space should be curtained or partitioned off in some way. Besides this, at the State Sunday school Convention in Richmond this year, it was emphasized as of great importance that the beginners have a separate session throughout the school period, in order to provide opening and closing exercises they can understand and enjoy. Small chairs the children can sit in comfortably are also necessary. Hooks to hang hats and wraps on are a helpful addition to the equipment. Appropriate pictures on the wall give a tone of inspiration to the room. Reproductions of famous paintings are especially good, such as Little Samuel and the Sistine Madonna, Hoffman's Head of Christ, and the Good Shepherd. A blackboard, a musical instrument, and a cabinet to hold books and papers are desirable.

The program for the beginners' class suggested by the International Association, with a few changes, is as follows:

1. Before the session opens, the teacher or assistant should be present to provide hand work to keep busy early comers. They might help in the arrangement of the room, look over pictures, or assist one another to remove wraps.

2. Circle Work.—Call to order by quiet music.

(a) The Children's Greeting Song—"Good Morning to You."

(b) Prayer Song, to encourage a reverent, prayerful attitude.

(c) Prayer, led by teacher, repeated by children:

"Dear Father, we thank thee for our church,
And for our Sunday school, so dear,
We thank thee for the Sabbath day,
And for thy ever loving care.
For Jesus' sake, Amen."

Instead of this, the following kindergarten prayer may be used:

"Dear Father, we thank thee for the night.

And for the pleasant morning light;
For rest, and food, and loving care,
And all that makes the world so fair.
Help us to do the things we should,
And be to others kind and good.

In all we do and all we say,
To grow more loving every day.

For Jesus' sake, Amen."

(d) New scholars and visitors welcomed—song.

Cradle Roll Service—song.

Birthday Service. A special exercise is provided, including an appropriate song and prayer.

(e) Offering received and attendance marked. To give variety, the children may march while making their offering. Letting the class count the pennies in concert awakens interest. To teach the true beauty of giving, Miss Frayser, at the State Convention, suggested having two offerings, good money and best money. The good money is that which some one has given the child for Sunday school; the best money is what he has earned or saved by denying himself. She arranged to use the best money to help some needy person the children know of, so that they could appreciate the joy of giving.

(f) Several songs chosen by the children.

(g) Circle Talk. This should prepare for the lesson, and should be directed with simplicity, about things with which the children are familiar.

3. Rest Exercise.—Marching or some other physical exercise.

4. Story Period.—This is the climax of the hour. A slight pause after the story often adds to its effectiveness.

5. Hats and Wraps put on.

6. Good-bye song.

7. Papers and cards distributed

It is strongly urged that throughout the program the children be kept occupied, though not taxed. They are bundles of energy; the need is to direct this energy in a way beneficial to their development. Simple kindergarten games are often very helpful, finger games especially.

Flowers in the room create a pleasant, uplifting atmosphere.

Repetition of the same thought from Sunday to Sunday is encouraged. Their minds ought not to be overcrowded with many new thoughts.

A few memory verses are prescribed by the International Committee as supplementary work. They are very short, however, such as "God is love."

The secret of success, then, in the beginners' class, is the adapting of methods, such as those already discussed, to meet the child's needs. When these are applied to suit conditions, and are united with earnest, believing prayer, success must be the result, even if not discernible at once to the human eye. Would we dare neglect this important part of our Sunday school work in this day of kindergartens, when so much helpful literature on child study can be secured? In this day, too, when people are realizing more and more the need of preventive rather than corrective measures for the improvement of social conditions, will the Sunday school be found wanting in so important a branch of its work as that for its youngest pupils? Too many young men and women, and older people, too, are out of God's fold because they did not in earliest childhood receive training in a way their minds could understand. Surely we are not willing for the children of our Sunday schools to grow up without the advantages which, with a little labor and perseverance, it is within our power to give them.

—Evangelist Gypsy Smith is still a busy man, a great preacher and is winning thousands to Christ by his consecrated and persuasive eloquence. He has been engaged for an evangelistic campaign on the Pacific Coast the coming fall and winter, Sept. 30 to February 12, from Spokane to Los Angeles.

—We are hoping that Senator Swanson, of Virginia, will get through Congress a bill which he has introduced calling for an appropriation of $20,000,000 a year for five years for the improvement of country roads. Any State, or locality, to share the benefits of the proposed appropriation, would have to put up an amount equalling that given by the national government, and the total is to be divided among the States according to population. It may seem a departure for the government to go into road building, but why unreasonable, or incompatible with the appropriation of millions annually to open up and improve "rivers" which are called so for financial reasons only. Road improvement, as well as river improvement, is the need of the hour.

“THINE.”

If we had one glimpse of the Kingdom,
Far-reaching o'er sea and o'er land,
A glimpse of the Kingdom, my neighbor,
Begun at humanity's strand;
Could we see its borders celestial,
Its depths as the depths of a heart,
Its citizens, all who are serving,
Would we fail in doing our part?

If we had one glimpse of the power,
The Kingship of Him so divine,
Whose love makes the world ever better,
Whose love—which is yours, which is mine—
Has room for our deed, our ambition,
Has care for long ages of right,
Would we fail in courage, my neighbor,
Co-working with Him Who is Might?

If we had one glimpse of the glory,
Of peoples once sinning and sad,
On yesterday, or long before then,
Now strong and triumphant and glad
Because we were true to those visions,
With Him did the work that was meet;
We would know what a crown meant, my neighbor,
When we laid it, star-gemmed, at His feet!

MY LIGHT.

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?—Ps. 27:1. Golden text for Sunday, August 6.

The truth is what stings and burns and bites, especially when that truth convicts and condemns us. The criminal seeks by all the wiles and devices he can command to cover up the truth, and so have justice averted. Men will hate you for telling the truth on them, provided that truth crosses their pathway or seems to thwart their designs.

In the lesson today priests and prophets and people do not stop to enquire whether the terrible indictments pronounced against them are just or true; not for a moment. They arise in wrath and say in madness, "The man that says these things against us shall surely die." The man Jeremiah was speaking eternal truth, but that made the matter worse. We dread one truth worse than we do forty falsehoods. That which is false soon perishes, but truth crushed to earth will rise again for the eternal years of God are hers. The people of Judah were smitten to the heart, and flew into a rage, because a man of God had dared to stand up in the sanctuary and proclaim the solemn truth with its dire consequences.

But the man of God, this man of God, was not alarmed. He had the true boldness, the undaunted courage, of a sincere and honest heart. He dared to trust in God, and to speak the truth in love. He was not afraid to tell the people, whom he served, of their misdoings and evil deeds. Some men are afraid; Jeremiah was not. And by sticking to the plain, simple, unvarnished truth, he brought the people, finally, to see the error of their way, and to repent of their folly and wickedness.

Jeremiah and his kind make religious history glorious. "Such men count their lives not dear unto themselves; they are the heroes of faith."

Such men do not live on the surface. They are not seekers nor time servers. They are not striving even for notoriety. They are not shallow nor superficial. They go to the heart and center of things. God is their light, and the abiding desire of their heart is to walk in that light.

Cheap and shallow denunciation is easy. It is sometimes mistaken for preaching. It is used by preachers, not infrequently, instead of the gospel. It is quite one thing to criticize, denounce, ridicule, abuse. It is wholly a different thing to go into the depths of things, and show in the light of eternal love and truth that things which appear wrong are wrong. Jeremiah went to the word of God, and wrought out his argument in refined dignity, in majestic but in everlasting truth and love. He got on sure and safe ground and stood there.

He who speaks the truth in wisdom and in love has nothing to fear. God is his light; and there is no darkness about him. These are they that make the time better and life more inviting.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION,
WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

It was the second session of this Convention, at Liberty, July 28-30, that we were permitted to attend last Saturday and Sunday. To be frank and fair, we should say that this is one of our Conventions that has not woken up. It may awake some time and begin to do things. But so far it seems to be having sweet, peaceful, quiet sleep. We heard some very good things said. There were some splendid papers, some fine addresses, some excellent suggestions. The president was all right; the secretary was all right, the singing was good, and the hospitality was cordial and unbounded. But the Convention was asleep. It did not do things. It did not adopt plans. It did not secure methods. It did not accomplish results. The Convention is alive, we presume, but it is sleeping.

This writer is optimistic as to all our religious assemblies and undertakings, and by nature enjoys them all. We had a delightful time at Liberty. It was good to be there and hear Rev. T. E. White preach an eloquent and illuminating sermon on "Giving," ("Freely ye have received; freely give"). It was delightful to hear President Harper discuss phases of "Teaching the Sunday School Lesson." It was inspiring to hear Attorney Chas. A. Hines, of Greensboro, deliver a logical and able address on "Christian Endeavor as a Developer of Christian Leaders." It was edifying to hear Rev. L. L. Cox tell enthusiastically of the "Real Worth of this Convention." And it was uplifting to hear Miss Blanche Teague read a beautiful and becoming essay on "Improving the Music in the Sunday School." It was agreeable indeed to meet and to greet again in the flesh many of our friends and brethren in the Lord whom we have learned to love. It was more than a pleasure to see again, and be entertained in the home of our long time friend, Prof. W. H. Albright, who graduated from Elon College in 1893, and who has made a success in the school room, married a charming wife, and the two together have built a comfortable and happy home. We revelled in their gracious hospitality, and esteemed it a privilege to share their generosity and their good company.

Now we could wish two things for this Convention. First of all, that the Corresponding Secretary shall let the Sunday schools and the Christian Endeavor Societies (that should compose the Convention) know that the Convention is, and that the Convention is about the biggest, best, and liveliest thing that they will likely hear of, or know about, during the year. The only way to have a live convention is to get representatives and delegates present from the schools and societies. Secondly, that the program builders for next year have a care for plans, methods, achievement, results; a desire to get things done in Convention that will tell in the history and conduct of Sunday schools and Endeavor Societies, etc.

We are not criticizing anybody. We are not laying strictures. We are wishing for definite practical, powerful results. We are thinking about the possibilities of this Convention in comparison with the actualities of it. We are thinking of what it might be, and may become. Fifteen dollars was appropriated for purposes of promoting the cause and interest of the body the coming year. We trust every penny of this will be used to good results, and that a year hence ten-fold more delegates will be on hand, and that definite plans for future good will be discovered, discussed and well laid out.

A live Convention is an inspiration to every component part thereof. And all the schools of a Conference should receive direct results and benefits from the sessions of the Convention.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement is beginning to tell in round numbers, and in results. It is a comparatively new "movement," but it has the might and the majesty about it which count. It has not touched at many points yet, but it has touched hard and heavy at places and things have happened. Within three brief years North America's churches have increased their contributions from $26,559,206 to $33,127,491, and this result of a more than six and a half millions increase in free gifts to one object is largely attributed to this laymen's movement.

Some churches have taken advantage of this movement, and have largely increased their activities and contributions. Strange to say, our Christian Church has been neglectful of its privileges, and has reaped little benefit from all its teachings and wise counsels.

GIVING GLADLY.

Rev. L. I. Cox, than whom we have no more successful and resourceful pastor, believes that people will give of their own free will for missions, and for other good causes, if the matter is presented right and made a subject of prayer and devotion. And Bro. Cox does not talk theory but relates facts. In one of his Sunday schools on missionary day the school had not been giving a penny per member. The pastor decided to ask for ten cents per member. The congregation was called to prayer over the matter. And then after appropriate and solemn devotional services a table was placed in front of the pulpit, and all who felt disposed were invited to come forward and place not less than a dime each if possible. The resulting collection was $13.66. The call that day was for only $7.60. Pastor Cox got nearly twice what he asked for. It was not a large undertaking, nor a large collection; but the principle is large. Many a pastor is afraid to ask for what he wants, and very many do not make giving any part of prayer and devotion. Bro. Cox has the right idea, and it will work.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

The Training School.

Reports are that the Stonewall Training School, Concord, N. C., is full to overflowing, and that more room is sorely needed for others who should be received. The object of this institution is to take the boy who is down, or has started on the downward way, and help him face about, and, if possible, start on the upward way. Youthful criminals, incorrigibles, the ready and reckless fellows are received there, and given the best training under the most favorable conditions.

The State was indeed a long time in coming to any help of this character, but now that it has come at last to see the need and the results, there is certainly no institution that should be cared for with greater concern and interest.

Is it not strange though that the most needy, as well as the most worthy and helpful, institutions must cry loud and long before their plea is given heed? It seems to be ever the case. This training school reaches the farthest down and so helps the lowest up. Its hand goes out for the fellow who is sinking and endeavors to rescue him.

With Charity and Children we do not now see how the State got along without it, but now that it has come and its beneficial results have been seen it behooves the State to enlarge and equip as growing needs demand.

We saw a great farm the other day. The crops were uniform and everywhere good and beautiful. We asked the owner how this uniformity came about. He took us out into his broad acres and showed how he had made all rich and useful and productive by working most on the poor and barren spots until they yielded as the best. A State may learn of this. For best results to citizenship, those lowest down need help most and first of all. The Stonewall Jackson Training School helps at the right place.

Orators and the Bible.

A British paper, recently speaking of the great oratorical achievements of the present Chancellor in the house of Parliament, makes this significant observation: "No one is happier than the Chancellor in letting the last sentences of his speeches gleam with some golden word of Scripture." Daniel Webster's power as an orator was due in no small measure to his knowledge of the Scripture, and his ability to quote appropriate passages when needed. It is safe to say that no orator of modern times was without a close intimacy with words, phrases, verses of Scripture, and was able to quote them on any and all suitable occasions. The rarest gems of all literature, the completest and most expressive sentences of all the writings, are found in the Book. Here pages are packed into a single utterance, and great mines of truth are hidden in a single sentence.

Judas Iscariot.

They are trying to abolish Judas Iscariot now. We read a book some time ago that sympathized with Judas so much, and commiserated him so thoroughly, that he was made more of a martyr and a hero than he was a traitor. We thought that bad enough. But here comes one Prof. W. B. Smith of Tulane University, who goes a full shot further and undertakes to prove that there was no such person as Judas Iscariot at all; that he was a fictitious being, not a man of flesh and blood at all, but a sort of shadowy substance, typifying the whole Jewish race. So they have decided to abolish Judas, and the scientists, so-called, go merrily along spinning their wild theories and weaving their wild vagaries into a web—of mery and silly nothings.

The chief difficulty about this latest Judas theory is that Judas himself persistently refuses to be abolished. Judas not only lived and wrought and acted the traitor in Christ's day, but he lives and works his deadly tasks and plays the traitor to this day. There are plenty of people, all too many, today who would betray the blessed Christ, who would betray their best friend if they had one, with a paltry and deceiving kiss, for even less than thirty pieces of silver. Our Professor Smith of Tulane is up against a hard proposition. There are too many sneaks and traitors, real Judases, in the world yet, to prove that one, the real one and the type of all, never did exist. Judas Iscariot refuses to become extinct, and too many of his kind encumber now this unhappy world.

The Love of Sensation.

Recently a representative of a daily paper in one of our large cities went to a religious convention ostensibly to write up the proceedings of the body. Many questions were asked of the Convention's officer by the newspaper man, and incidentally a few questions were put about a certain professor, member of the Convention. Next day when the paper appeared there was a sensational heading about the said professor, but not a reference to the important work of the Convention. There was seemingly no room for a write-up of the real work of the body, but in the same paper there were accounts of eleven murders, suicides and attempted murders, five burglaries, six tales of political and commercial frauds; descriptions of weddings of actresses, elopements, disappearances, divorces, will contests, scandals, wedding of rich girl, escape of a count from an American girl, and forty-two sporting and pugilistic events. And yet you will find church members not a few who will take and will read their daily paper, but will neither take nor read their church paper.

Vast Evils.

The vast evils that go on in our large cities are beyond comprehension. Take these frightful facts of Chicago. In this one city there are 326 vulgar nickel shows visited daily by between forty and fifty thousand children. There are 936 pool rooms which by law minors are not allowed to enter, and yet they are wide open to boys night and day seven days in the week and are visited by thousands of youths. That the girls may have similar "moral" training there are 366 dancing halls for girls. Is it any wonder that Chicago turned out, or rather locked up, last year 10,447 criminals under twenty years of age? What will the harvest of manhood and womanhood be from such a crop of youths as that? The church of our Lord Christ has not yet finished its stupendous undertaking in the world.

IRREGULAR THOUGHTS ABOUT HEAVEN.

(Among castaway manuscripts of N. Summerbell I find matter somewhat like the following:—)

Heaven, in physical science, signifies the whole expanse surrounding the earth, with its planets, comets, nebulae, and suns.

But men have ever held that in this beautiful expanse, somewhere, there dwelt God, or "the gods", in a celestial empire. All agreed (Plato, Aristotle, Epicurus) that the most elevated part of the heavens was the divine dwelling.

In the religions of the Greeks and Romans none were admitted to this celestial abode but heroes of virtue, and these became demi-gods. In this, was there a shadow of the doctrine intruded into the Garden of Eden, that if men would eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil they should "be as gods"?

The Bible teaches that previous to Christ the "third heaven," the Paradise of God, was not open. Jesus himself said, "No one hath ascended into heaven, but he that descended out of heaven, the Son of man, who is in heaven" (John 3:13). On the day of Pentecost, Peter said, "David ascended not into the heavens" (Acts 2:34). And Paul said, "The Holy Spirit this signifying, that the way into the holy place hath not yet been made manifest, while the first tabernacle is yet standing" (Heb. 9:8); and, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus, by the way which he dedicated for us, a new and living way, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh", etc. (Heb. 10:19—20).

And the first promise of immediate entrance to heaven agrees with such words: for it was by Jesus himself on the cross, who said to the penitent thief, "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise".

How Jesus cherished companionship!

He prayed to his Father, when near his death, saying, "Father, I desire that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me" (John 17:24). And he even promised his disciples the sweet words, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also" (John 14:3). And in the Garden of Gethsemane he seemed to desire that his disciples watch with him, even though he went a little way from them to pray. The communion service itself is a rite binding us to Jesus very closely.

And Jesus wants us with him in heaven.

And it was not long after Jesus died till the heavens were opened to Stephen the Martyr, and he saw Jesus standing on the right hand of God, ready to welcome him, and cried, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

DR. DIXON ON PLEASURE SEEKING.

(This sermon was preached in the Moody Church of Chicago on Sunday evening, May 21. It will be read with all the more interest because of the fact that Dr. Dixon has been called to the pastorate of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, which was the church of the late Charles H. Spurgeon, and left for England on May 30.)

"I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure; and, behold, this also is vanity."—Ecclesiastes 2:1.

"The things which amuse us do much toward molding our characters for good or evil," said Dr. Dixon. "It is, therefore, needful that the young Christian should be as careful about his amusements as his duties. There are certain principles by which he may be guided.

"Amusements that injure the body, weaken the mind, or corrupt the morals ought to be avoided. So with amusements that vitiate our joys. The German proverb says, 'The good is enemy of the better and the best.' Amusements, fun and pleasure may be good; but joy is better. Amusement is the dash of the spray, the sparkle on the surface; joy is the flow of the deep current in the soul. We should not sacrifice the current for the spray or the sparkle. Whenever, therefore, we find that amusement is entreaching upon our joy, we should sacrifice amusement, that joy may be saved.

"Amusements should always be avoided when they are associated with any great evil institution. The people of Israel played before the golden calf. Their play was associated with the evil institution of idolatry. Paul said that he could eat meat offered to idols, for he regarded an idol as nothing, and it would not, therefore, injure him. He had a right to eat, but he had a higher right, which was the right to give up his personal right for the good of the weaker brother. He therefore determined to surrender this right and exercise the higher right of self-denial for the benefit of others.

"Two men were in a boat above Niagara Falls. When they saw that the current was taking them down, by a bold stroke they reached the bank, and there on a tree was the placard, 'No trespassing on these grounds.' A farmer appeared with a fierce bulldog at his side, and one of the men was cruelly torn. The magistrate at Niagara used these words, which are worthy of a place on the fly leaf of your Bible: 'You had a right, sir, to placard your land, but in this case there was invoked the higher right to surrender your right for the good of humanity, and because you failed to do so, I send you to jail for thirty days.' We may contend for the Christian privilege of indulging in certain things, while we forget the higher privilege of self-denial that we may have a larger influence for good.

"A safe rule for the young convert is never to indulge in any amusement that links him with a great evil institution. Try the card table, the dance and the theater by this test. The card table is a world-wide evil institution which you find in all countries, Christian and pagan. It is the gambler's instrument. It has been blackened by dishonesty, stained by murder and disgraced by innumerable wrecks of character.

"A pack of cards is suggestive, not of an innocent game, but of a great foul institution which has been a curse to mankind. Shall I indulge, and thus link myself with this institution? Or shall I deny myself, that I may not be suggestive of evil?

"The square dance may be considered by some as an innocent pastime, if indulged in moderately, but in general it may be said that dancing has become a world-wide institution of evil. The dance house cannot be described in polite society. Dancing is not only worldly, but in many of its forms it is desperately wicked. Its associations are malodorous. There may be pleasure in the physical response to music; shall I yield to it and thus associate myself with a bad institution?

"The theater as an institution is also bad. There are some moral plays, as well as some moral actors and actresses, but, so far as I can find, there is not a moral theater in the world. Edwin Booth determined to establish a moral theater, before whose footlights there should not be a display of spectacular obscenity. The result was that Booth's theater failed and paid five cents on the dollar.

"Henry Irving determined that the Lyceum theater should be moral, but the management had to change its quality to keep from bankruptcy. Mary Anderson left the stage, and declared that on moral grounds she did not wish her children to attend the theater. McCready would not allow his children to go to the theater. Edwin Forrest, after hearing Dr. Brantley in Augusta, Ga., preach a sermon denouncing the theater for its immorality, lingered after the service long enough to take the preacher by the hand and say to him, 'Sir, what you have said tonight is true, only you have not painted the picture as dark as it is.'

"There is a difference between pleasure in the midst of business, and making a business of pleasure. The pleasure seeking spirit is a living death, for 'she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth.' If you will turn to Job 21:12, you will find some of the results of this pleasure-seeking spirit. They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ. They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Therefore, they say unto God, 'Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty that we should serve him? and what profit shall we have if we pray unto him?'

"When the pleasure seeking spirit fills a man's life he ceases to desire God. He says to him, 'Depart from us.' He sees no profit in prayer or in the service of the Almighty. Pleasure is his god, and he becomes vain and empty like the god he worships.

"The picture of a pleasure-seeking life which is given us in the second chapter of Ecclesiastes is enough to startle one who desires to be something or do something in the world. Solomon was rich enough to have everything that he desired, and he set himself to seeking pleasure. The result was that he hated life and declared that 'All is vanity and striving after wind.'

"Some one has described the palace of pleasure as a building 'which has a gorgeous street entrance adorned with statuary and brilliant with variegated lights, and the passer-by is lured in by strains of music. The exit is a dark, narrow, concealed rearway, which leads into the fields where swine are kept.'

"As a gentleman entered the theater several years ago the usher beckoned to him with the words, 'This is the way to the pit.' The word 'pit' was so suggestive that the man turned and left the theater in haste. However beautiful the entrance to the pleasure-seeking life, and however entrancing the music, the exit is into the swine field, and near the swine field is the precipice over which sooner or later we fall into the pit.

A DANGER SIGNAL.

"The danger is that the pleasure-seeking spirit may displace the serious work of life. In the parable of the sower, the seed was 'choked by the pleasure of this life,' and when one makes up his mind that the end of life is simply to have a good time, duty is neglected, sacred obligations are ignored, business lags, the prospects of life wither and the end is despair. Here is a good time to hold the red flag of danger.

"When the Duke of Orleans was in this country he happened to be in a small village when a circus was there. He could not obtain dinner or any sort of service. The people of the hotel informed him that no one would work that day, for everybody was going to the show. Such a holiday once in a while might produce little harm, but suppose that village should decide to quit work and attend the show every day; the result would be stagnation and death.

"Just so with the life of a man who allows pleasure to displace business, who lets fun and frolic swallow up the serious duties of life. The Romans became so greedy for amusement that they demanded great outlay in purchasing wild animals and gladiators for their enjoyment in the arena. This pleasure-seeking spirit so enervated the people of Rome that they became an easy prey to the serious northmen who came down upon them.

"As with the nation, so with the individual. Pleasure-seeking weakens character and makes it easy for us to be captured and destroyed by evil habits. I have read of some cavalymen who during five or six years of rest taught their horses to dance to the music of the band. It was great sport, but when they were riding into battle and the band began to play, hoping to inspire the soldiers, the horses stopped the charge and began to dance. The result was the enemy swept down upon them and conquered them.

"Many a man has lost the battle of life for the same reason. He is so possessed by the pleasure-seeking spirit that when he ought to be serious and dutiful he is dancing or gambling or in some other way frittering away his time.

"After Napoleon Bonaparte had killed the Duke D'Enghien the indignation of the French people was so intense that there was danger of a revolution. The wiley Emperor quieted their consciences by producing for them the most magnificent ballet that Paris had ever seen. They rushed to the theater and forgot their grievances. It is hard for conscience to assert itself when the pleasure-seeking spirit is master. Everything that any one ought to enjoy the Christian may enjoy. What is sinful or hurtful to body, mind or soul should not be indulged in by any one, and such indulgence displaces a purer enjoyment. If the young Christian will take Jesus Christ as the umpire of his life, submitting to him his pleasures as well as his duties, his life will be full of light, and shadows that come will only refresh.

"Jesus said, 'I am the light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.' And this light never becomes darkness. It grows brighter and brighter till the perfect day."—Inter Ocean, May 22.

MOMENT BY MOMENT.

Now is the only time for which we need to seek supplies, or strength, or deliverance, or any other blessing. If we accept from God in Christ all that he offers us now, for this present moment, and continue to do that moment by moment, the future will be well taken care of. This is an old, old truth; but we shall need to be reminded of it anew until the heavens and the earth are done away. We long and chafe to look ahead, and to have some assurance that we shall have an undiminished deliverance from sin—from our besetting sin—in such continued power that the rest of our life will be a path of glory. That assurance is, indeed, given to us, but it is in terms of now. Christ is able to guard that which is committed unto him, now and hereafter; but he asks us to trust him for both present and future, while we concern ourselves not at all with the future, but see to it that we are yielded utterly to him in faith and obedience today. It simplifies life so to let it become simply a matter of my present, immediate relationship to Jesus Christ! Am I yielded wholly to his will now? If I am, he will do all the rest.

"Moment by moment I'm kept in his love;

Moment by moment I've life from above;
Looking to Jesus till glory doth shine; Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine."

—S. S. Times.

THE ABSORBED LIFE.

One who has begun to show what life means when self has died and is replaced by Christ longs to become so completely lost in Christ that there is nothing more to be yielded up to Him. This will evidently not come to pass for any one until the bondage of the corruption of this body is finally done away with. But it is a good goal to have ever before us. The complete and satisfying merging of ourselves in Christ may be likened to a saturated solution in chemistry, when a liquid is impregnated with a dissolved solid until no more of the latter can be taken up. Some definitions of "saturate" are strikingly suggestive of our longings for the fulness of union with Christ: "To fill the substance of, as by absorption, so thoroughly that it will hold no more; to fill to the utmost extent of the capacity for absorbing or retaining." Again, in chemistry, "to satisfy the affinity of." What a blessing it is to hunger and thirst, when we know that we shall be filled! What a comfort that Christ's New Covenant has in it such a daring word as "filled unto all the fulness of God"! That is our goal, and our assurance. How eagerly should we abandon every thing that hinders or delays us in its final attainment!—S. S. Times.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., makes a suggestion in another column and invites comment. Dr. Long puts his finger on a weak spot. Has he suggested a remedy? Read carefully what he writes and give Sun readers the benefit of your conclusions. Our columns are open and opinions are invited.

—The Missionary Society of the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, has for 1911 a beautiful booklet with the names of officers and members of the society and the program for one service a month throughout the year. It is well prepared and speaks much for this live and active missionary society.

—Rev. L. E. Smith assisted Rev. Jas. L. Foster, pastor, in a series of successful meetings at Lebanon, Caswell Co., N. C., week following third Sunday in July. There were many conversions and five accessions to the church.

—Rev. J. F. Morgan assisted Rev. L. I. Cox, pastor, in a revival the past week at Apple's Chapel, Guilford Co., N. C. Congregations were exceedingly large and much good was accomplished. There were many conversions and the church was greatly refreshed and strengthened.

—Dr. E. L. Moffitt was at Elon the past week shipping his household effects to Asheboro.

—It is a real pleasure to lay before our readers this week a sermon by the eloquent and brilliant Dr. A. C. Dixon on "Pleasure Seeking." The Sun's editor had the privilege a few years ago of hearing Dr. Dixon deliver this sermon, or one much like it, and it was magnetic, mighty, masterful. This was one of the last sermons Dr. Dixon preached before leaving Chicago for London, and it is a message, not to his local congregation, but to this whole pleasure-seeking country of ours. Read it. You will learn something.

—Our Greensboro First church Sunday school has voted to have a day's outing and picnic on the Elon College campus August 17th. This is not the first time this school has chosen this good place for a picnic, and no company comes here that is more orderly and congenial than our Greensboro people. They will receive royal welcome here.

—Rev. P. T. Klapp, Jonesboro, N. C., has purchased a home near Elon College and is to take possession and move here about December 1st. Bro. Klapp will receive a warm welcome back into this community where he is held in high esteem as a good citizen and a generous neighbor.

—In one of our conventions recently one of our loyal and wide-awake laymen made this remark publicly: "We of the Christian Church are trying to do too much business with too little money. A church, to operate successfully, must have money, as much so as any individual amongst us who would bring things to pass."

—In this country about 10 to 15 people per 1,000 are afflicted with tuberculosis. The remedy urged is wholesome food, cleanliness of person and surrounding, and abundance of fresh air by day and by night.

—Our good friend Allie Hayes, Norlina, N. C., remembered last week that we were flesh and blood with appetite and hunger like other folks. And the copious crate of luscious canteloupes he sent us was enough to make life gladder and the heart happier for six months to come. If there is anything in summer more delicious for breakfast than a good canteloupe we have never found it—unless it be two canteloupes. As soon as we make a fortune editing a religious weekly we have it in mind to endow Allie Hayes' melon patch (so that it may be enlarged for the benefit of other sufferers).

—The Greensboro Daily News is to erect a building of its own and greatly enlarge and beautify its place of publication. Congratulations, neighbor. The News is worthy and we are delighted at these evidences of its permanency and progress.

—Rev. P. T. Klapp writes this cheering note: I have just closed our revival meeting at Moore Union continued for seven days. It was judged a glorious revival. Much faithful work was done. Several were reclaimed and a goodly number professed faith in Christ. Several united with the church and others will at the next appointment. This church is now in the best spiritual condition I have known it for a long time. They now speak of building a nice house of worship. God bless them."

—Rev. P. H. Fleming, D.D., has decided to accept the unanimous call recently extended him by the Greenville, Ohio, Christian Church, and is to go to Greenville about September 1. Dr. Fleming has been pastor of our Burlington Church for ten years or more and under his ministry the work there has prospered and considerably developed. Large congregations greeted him last Sunday and there were 221 in Sunday school. We regret exceedingly to see Bro. Fleming leave the South and sincerely trust that this land of warmth and welcome will win him back ere many years go by. Ohio's gain is North Carolina's loss.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Mr. Joe Clendenin of our town was brought home very sick on last Wednesday. He continued ill and Saturday was paralyzed, the whole of his right side being affected, and at this writing he is in a very precarious condition.

Prof. John T. Cobb, who was several years an instructor in Elon College, but who taught last year in the State High School at Cooleemee, N. C., passed through Elon last week en route to his old home, just north of here. He returned to Cooleemee Monday, where he is acting assistant cashier in the bank during the summer.

Mrs. J. W. Patton, Miss Alene, and little Kent and Gwendolyn have gone to Eastern North Carolina to visit for a few weeks at Mrs. Patton's former home.

President Harper and Dr. J. O. Atkinson attended the Sunday School Convention at Liberty yesterday, and report a pleasant time. Quite a crowd was in attendance.

Mrs. S. J. McCauley's brother and his wife, from Texas, are spending a few days with Mrs. McCauley.

Mr. Henry Barnes, traveling representative of the Halls Safe Co., is spending a few days at his home.

Mr. S. M. Patton of the class of '09, spent the night in town last week. Mr. Patton has been teaching in Tennessee during the past scholastic year, and will return there in the fall.

Rev. J. F. Morgan spent a few days here last week enroute to Liberty to attend the Sunday School Convention. Mr. Morgan is president of the Convention.

The Farmer's Institute which was held here last Wednesday was a decided success. A very large number of farmers and their wives were present, and the Institute people were highly gratified over the reception they were given here. Mrs. Sue V. Hollowell and Miss Katherine Parker spoke to the Women's Institute, on Health Hints, Bread Making, Care of the Child, and other topics of interest to the ladies, while Prof. C. L. Newman, of the A. & M., and Mr. Jeffreys, also of A. & M., and Mr. T. Frank Parker spoke to them on things relating to the farmers and the farm.

Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mrs. J. O. Atkinson and A. L. Lincoln spent a very pleasant Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Buck Hobby at their lovely and spacious home three miles west of the College.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Mr. S. M. Atkinson, representing The Sun has been working Norfolk and vicinity pretty thoroughly recently. It would seem from the thoroughness with which he canvasses certain sections of this territory, that the subscription list should grow considerably. At times it's a little hard to tell whether he is working for the interest of his uncle's Sun or his father's son.

Rev. A. M. Hanson of the Third Church spent the past week with Rev. J. W. Harrell at Berea, Norfolk Co., assisting in a meeting. Bro. Hanson did the preaching, twice daily. A good meeting is reported as the result with 15 conversions and 10 to unite with the church.

Mrs. A. B. Jarvis is visiting her sister in Warren, Pa.

Mrs. A. R. Greene, our Cradle Roll Supr., with her family, is spending a month in the mountains. Quite a goodly number of our people are away on vacations now.

Bro. Hanson closed his series of sermons on the "Five Greatest Things in the World." The subjects thus handled were "Humility," "Truth," "Love," "Faith," and "Peace." Congregations have held up well. There was one member received on profession of faith at the night service. Mr. Edwin Chas. Shapel. He is in the naval service and came in his uniform. Bro. Hanson spoke very fittingly of his coming in uniform and consecrating his life in it to the service of the Master as well as to his country.

On the Washington boat this afternoon will leave Revs. N. G. Newman, J. W. Harrell and A. M. Hanson, also Bro. Hanson's wife, mother, and sister. The party will spend some time together in Washington; there they will separate. Mrs. Hanson and daughter, who have been visiting here, will return to their home in Iowa, and Mrs. A. M. Hanson will accompany them, where she will visit some weeks at her old home.

The ministers of the party will proceed to New York where they will spend some time and then go on to Northfield where they will attend the Summer Bible Conference.

After the school is over, Bro. Hanson will spend a week in the slums of New York in "Social Settlement Work." He will then possibly spend some time in Boston and Fall River, Mass.

Rev. McD. Howsare of the Temple announced to his congregation yesterday morning that he would not be a candidate for re-election next year. He has been extended a call by the Mission Council of the Mission Board to go to Porto Rico for the coming year to do special missionary work in other interests. It is reasonably settled that he will accept the work. He is now studying Spanish very industriously, and proposes to spend most of his vacation in that way. Bro. Howsare is an enthusiastic and energetic worker and will no doubt be just the man for the work there; but his going will be a loss for the Temple.

Knowing the field as I do, and the situation as it was when he took the work, and what has been accomplished, I am quite sure that it would have been hard to find any one to do better than he has there.

His going will leave open one of our best fields. There has been a great and good work done at the Temple. There is yet a great work to do there, in a certain sense, a new work to accomplish. I hope that some one of our strong men may be secured for the place.

Rev. J. W. Harrell has been called to serve Berea for another year.

I failed to report in my last letter the latest addition to the Cradle Roll of our Sunday school—little Miss Annie Smith, new daughter of Prof. and Mrs. S. M. Smith.

Prof. Smith is spending three weeks at Silver Bay, the Summer Y. M. C. A. school.

Rev. C. C. Ryan, of Ansonia, Ohio, former pastor of the Temple, reached the city last night. He is on his way to Damascus, Gates Co., N. C., to hold a series of meetings.

Winchester Letter.

The interest in our work is increasing, notwithstanding the extreme heat July the second, we had the largest attendance at our services that we have had for three months. Everybody seems interested in our church and many have expressed themselves as being well pleased with the appearance of our building. The plastering is done and workmen will begin finishing the inside next week. We hope to be able to hold services in the Sunday school room before our annual conference, which meets the 17th of August and to be ready to dedicate some time in September.

Our Sunday school held a very enjoyable picnic July the 6th.

We are grateful for the support we have received from the Christian Church in all sections and to the many others who have helped us.

We need One Thousand Dollars to meet outstanding bills and building expenses between now and the day of dedication.

The importance of this point as a connecting link between our work in the South and our churches in the North and West, makes it well worthy the consideration and support of all our people.

May we count on you to help at this critical point in our work? With this $1,000 we will be in shape to dedicate and handle whatever obligations remain wisely.

Valley Letter.

Our work is moving along reasonably well. The summer months are largely occupied in getting ready for our Young People's Convention, and the Annual Conference. The convention was held several weeks ago and was, I believe, about the best we have ever had. We are now looking forward to the Annual Conference, which meets August 17-19 at Leaksville, near Luray, Va. We are hoping that we may be able to say this was our best yet. It depends upon every church and every delegate to make it the best.

Owing to the very severe drought throughout the bounds of the Conference this summer, I fear some of our churches will let some of the apportionments suffer. This ought not to happen, even though we may have to sacrifice a little more than usual in order to bring them up. Every cent of the amount asked of each church is needed, and, of course, a great deal more.

New Hope and Linville have each held beautiful Children's Day services this summer. In each case the program was excellent and well rendered. Others of my churches will hold Children's Day services in the near future.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSON, AUG. 13.

Topic: Small Beginnings of Intemperance.—Prov. 23:29-35. (Temperance Meeting.)

The Bible writers bring a terrible indictment against the glowing cup. And the evidence of the centuries sustains the charge. It would seem useless to talk upon a subject that has been so discussed, but "line upon line, and precept upon precept," is the law of moral progress. And then it is not alone that repetition is necessary, but there are those who need to learn the truth for the first time. Young people growing up in homes where there is no definite teaching, children who will profit by hearing the truth from the lips of them who lead and teach them, and older ones who need to be aroused from their indifference and be enlisted actively in this great work.

The text of the lesson is a vivid delineation of the suffering of an intemperate person. Six undesirable sensations and experiences are enumerated. Woe, sorrow, contentions, complainings, wounds, inflamed eyes—all these are catalogued together and cited as the results of tarrying long at the wine cup. A solemn warning is spoken. The time to avoid these penalties is when still sober and in possession of all the faculties. "Look not upon the wine" may sound puritanical, but is the safe course.

In our day the beginnings of intemperance are to be found in the open saloon. As long as saloons exist somebody's boys are sure to enter and be destroyed. Therefore the way to cut at the root of such beginnings is to hew down the saloon. It is a poison tree that ruins the community.

Look at the size of it. Jacob Riis says that he counted them, and found that while there were 111 Protestant churches, chapels, and places of worship below Fourteenth Street in New York, there were 4,065 saloons. They had a beginning. One saloon, like one drink, inevitably leads to another. It will do little good to lop off the odd sixty-five or the odd three thousand. The whole tree must go, root and branch.

In saloon-poisoned communities the individual must fight the beginnings of intemperance in young people. The saloon appears cozy, inviting. It seems manly to lounge behind the bar and smoke. What are we doing to provide still more cozy places, and far more manly tasks, for young men than lounging at evil-smelling counters?

* * *

Rev. C. N. Howard tells the following story: In a certain town the temperance people and the liquor people planned to have street-parades upon the same day, the parades to start from opposite ends of the town. At the head of the liquor procession a man carried a banner marked, "Men, Vote for Your Liberty." At the head of the temperance procession a little boy carried a banner, "Fathers, Vote to Save Your Sons." As the processions met, the man threw down his banner, ran to the boy, and, raising him upon his shoulder, faced about, and himself headed the temperance parade. The boy was his own son.

* * *

A little boy went with his mother to dine at a friend's house. On their return home he said to his mother: "The pudding sauce wasn't as good as ours. What made it taste so different?" His mother gazed at the boy, speechless, but in her heart she said, "If my boy has begun to like the taste of wine in the sauce, it is time I stopped using it."

* * *

The beauty of a clean body and a clean mind must be made attractive. "They are beautiful," sir," said a tipsy man to a clergyman, pointing to some flowers. "Yes, and do you know why they are beautiful?" said the clergyman. "No." "They drink nothing but water," was the reply.

Ten minutes spent in Christ's society every day, aye, two minutes, if it be face to face and heart to heart, will make the day different.—Drummond.

"All the good that temperance brings From pure self-denial springs."

"Sometimes intemperance begins with eating brandied food, like mince-pies or preserves. Alas, when the home is made an annex to the saloon."

"Satan never concocted a shrewder device than when he began to put liquor in candy for children. Every such confection is a devil's bait."

"There are more patent medicines that are used by drunkards in prohibition states as substitutes for whiskey, and there are physicians whose prescriptions of alcohol have set many upon the downward road."

"Drug stores are responsible for cocaine and opium habits, which are mainly fostered by apparently innocent 'medicines' sold freely without prescription."

A PERSONAL WORD TO OUR PEOPLE.

The Executive Committee of the Young People's Convention need money if the work of the convention is to be properly carried forward. To this end the treasurer has written a number of people in the Convention for contributions. Some have responded; others have not. Are you one of the latter number? If so, you are doing the work injury by not sending the small amount that has been asked of you by the treasurer.

Within the next ten days a goodly sum will be needed to meet obligations that have been contracted. This appeal is made to you to the end that you may be again reminded that the convention wants you to help. If Brother Cox has not written you, do not wait for him to do so, but send in your contribution. Send all amounts to Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer, Elon College, N. C. Do not lay this aside until you have done what you must necessarily feel is your moral duty.

IN THE FIELD OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

The Young People's Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference was in session at Liberty last Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Next week's issue of The Sun will carry something about the proceedings.

The second largest missionary gift made by any organization through the Women's Presbyterial society of the Spokane, Wash., district came from the First Presbyterian Endeavorers, Spokane, who contributed $190 for missions last year.

Does the Christian Endeavor pledge mean anything in your life? It depends upon you and not upon the pledge. The pledge should always be repeated in concert at the Consecration meetings. If the society is growing lax repeat it at every meeting for a time.

The editor of this department wishes to get in touch with the secretaries of the various conference Young People's Conventions. There is a great deal of work that needs to be done. The fall is the time to organize new societies, and put new life into the work.

If your Sunday school does not have a teacher-training class, is it not time for you to get in line? The books can be secured at any time from Dr. Atkinson, at Elon College. The fall and winter will be the best time to do the work, and the class should be started about Sept. 1.

Has your Sunday school raised its Home Mission fund yet? If not, now is the time to begin the work. The Sunday schools should take advantage of this opportunity to assist the church in its work of reaching others. We shall be disappointed if our Sunday schools should fall down in these contributions.

One of the greatest events of the Atlantic City Convention was the serenade given on Tuesday evening to Dr. Francis Clark, of the International Society. Hundreds of Endeavorers marched for three-quarters of a mile at 11 o'clock at night to Dr. Clark's hotel, singing religious songs as they went. Elks and other strollers along the board walk had to move aside for this great band of young people.

NOTES FROM WOOSTER.

It was a privilege I much enjoyed and one I had many times wished for,—a visit to Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio. My journey was over the Pennsylvania railroad to Lima, and thence north forty miles by electric train to Defiance. But stop a moment for some facts about the Pennsylvania railway. This is one of the great railway systems of America, if not the greatest. It has a great rival in the New York Central which now owns the Big Four. The chief rivalry in train service is between New York and Chicago. Some years ago the New York Central put on a fast train covering the distance of a thousand miles between these two cities in twenty hours. Everybody has heard of that famous train, the twentieth century limited. The Pennsylvania soon worked up a line of track to endure great strain, and put on what is known as the eighteen hour limited. This train passes through Wooster and attracts attention for ever. People who have seen it scores of times still gather about the station to see it flit by like some fabulous monster with lightning speed carrying a whirlwind for a quarter of a mile in its wake. The Pennsylvania Company, I read in an Ohio paper a day or two ago, is taxed with two hundred million dollars worth of property in this state alone. The Company pensions all employees after the age of seventy. It pays its president fifty thousand dollars a year, but no president has yet received a pension. The tense business strain seems certain death in a few years at most, and each drops away before the pension age is reached.

Now as to my visit. I found a beautiful, fertile, farming country dotted with thriving, clean, well-built towns along the distance of a hundred and sixty-five miles to Defiance, itself a pretty town of about ten thousand people with Defiance College situated on the north in a charming campus of twenty-five acres. As we approached farther to the west and northwest, the broken, hilly landscape about Wooster gradually subsided into one continuous stretch of level plain, marked off into rectangular farms of great fertility, and producing luxuriant crops of timothy, wheat, oats, and corn. So Defiance appears to be set in the midst of a system of large farm gardens covering the extensive valley of the Maumee River which flows north fifty miles into Lake Erie at Toledo.

I was met at the station by Professor Endors, a most amiable and cordial gentleman, head of the English department, and driven over to the College a mile through the town. At the College was President

P. W. McReynolds whose surpassing cleverness and cordiality intensified the feeling of welcome that Professor Endors had set going, and I was soon feeling as much at home as if I had been at home. In the evening at a church social, held at President McReynolds's handsome new home, an unsolicited gift of the lamented Judge Sutton's two children in memory of their father's faith and interest in Defiance College, I met a number of persons I had often heard of, among them Professor Edwin Morrell, head of the department of philosophy, and the venerable yet active and alert Dr. J. B. Weston, just past his ninetieth birthday, and still the active Chancellor of the Christian Biblical Institute.

The next morning I breakfasted in the dining-hall with something over a hundred of the Summer School and members of the faculty, a fine, intelligent looking body. I then had the pleasure of visiting several classes where I found evidences of such thoroughness of instruction and diligent application on the part of students as to make the Summer School as real and methodical in scholastic effect as any session of a well-ordered College. I was shown through the entire plant of four large brick and stone buildings, in which I found every equipment for students' comfort, and for the acquiring of knowledge a good college requires, gymnasiums for both young men and young women, swimming pool, library, society halls, well-equipped physical, chemical, and biological laboratories, and department of domestic science, with an equipment costing five thousand dollars. The city has recently spent ten thousand dollars in paving streets and putting in sewerage system in the College community. Water and lights are furnished from the city plants. With the exception of one building this material equipment has been added together with a handsome endowment fund within ten years, and during the administration of President McReynolds, whose frank joyous countenance bears no indication of the toil, the burden, and the anxiety—his three comforters during these years. God prosper Defiance College, and may her kind increase.

POWER IN WEAKNESS.

Spiritual things should be viewed very differently from the manner in which physical and material things are considered. Physical strength is not on the same plane that spiritual strength is. One may be proud of his physical power, and not be any less powerful; but one cannot be proud of his spiritual power, and yet retain any considerable measure of it. No Christian can glory in his spiritual strength and attainments, and at the same time be strong in the Lord and progressive in the best spiritual life. It is only when one feels indescribably and sufferingly weak in heart that he receives a fulness of the power of the Holy Spirit. It is when one keenly realizes that he has no light in himself, and yearns for strength from the God of all power, that a plenitude of such power comes to him, causing him to give glory and honor to God.

The saintly Isaiah tells us what God does: "He giveth power to the faint and to him that hath no might. He increaseth strength." Here is a brilliant encouragement to every Christian who is weighed down with the feeling that he is utter weakness, and is a dismal failure. Every true Christian has such experiences. He who never feels that he is too weak to accomplish anything of value to God and man, has reason to doubt that he is a Christian. Certainly, if he be a Christian, he is a very small and powerless one. Such a person needs some humbling experience, so that he will feel profoundly weak and worthless in himself. It is a fact that very many Christians never became prominently useful in spiritual directions until they had trials which laid them low and made them realize how weak and insufficient they were. Paul would never have become the spiritual giant that he was, had he not experienced the weakening piercings of a great thorn in his flesh. Even an enduement of the Holy Spirit could not take the place of that thorn. He needed both. His natural ambition must be kept in curb by that afflictive discipline. He gladly acknowledged that spiritual power came to him in the midst of his great weakness, and on account of it. And if we would be possessors of much spiritual power, we must be weak in our estimates of ourselves.

SANFORD.

The meeting at Sanford began the second Sunday in July and ended the third Sunday night. Rev. Neal Rowland, of Fort Worth, Texas, did the preaching. He is a most zealous and consecrated preacher. He preaches the gospel and aims at the conscience of the hearer. There were some conversions and renewals, but not as many as we had hoped to see. We believe, however, that the church was very greatly refreshed. The congregations were good and appeared to be deeply interested. There were a number of ministers, from time to time, in attendance, Revs. J. D. Wicker, J. W. Patton, W. L. Wells, H. F. Wolfe, of the Christian church, Rev. K. D. Holmes of the M. E. Church, and Rev. Dr. Beattie and Rev. M. Catlett of the Presbyterian church.

Appointments have been made for a series of meetings at Youngsville, N. C., beginning the third Sunday in August, and one at Pleasant Grove, Randolph Co., N. C., beginning the first Sunday in Sept. Brother Rowland has agreed to be with me at these places.

MARRIED.

Lippin-Hyatt.

Suffolk, Va., April 18th, 1911, John Lippin and Miss Eva Hyatt.

Pierce-Butler.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Butler, near Windsor, Va., May 21, 1911, Wilber Leroy Pierce and Miss Eula May Butler. The young and happy couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

Emory-Ballard.

Suffolk, Va., June 15, 1911, on Washington St., at Mr. Benj. Smith's, Mr. Eugene L. Emory and Miss Susie K. Ballard.

Edwards-Harrison.

At the bride's parents, near Windsor, Va., June 18, 1911, Mr. John Lindwood Edwards and Miss Myra D. Harrison. Both members of Antioch church. May their lives be long and happy together.

Clements-Ballard.

At Mt. Carmel Church, Isle of Wight Co., June 23, 1911, there was a very beautiful wedding. The church was decorated with potted plants and evergreens, which presented a beautiful and lovely scene, when Miss Lilly, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Ballard, was led to the altar by Mr. Fabius Monroe Clements, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Rev. H. H. Butler, their pastor, assisted by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va., performed the ceremony, which was very beautiful, being the ring service. The church was crowded with admiring friends. Miss Daisy Ballard, the bride's sister, dressed in blue messaline with crystal trimmings, was maid of honor, and Mrs. R. O. Harvey, of Suffolk, Va., in pink marquisette over messaline silk, carrying pink carnations, acted as matron of honor. The bride's maids were Misses Mary Reynolds of Smithfield, Va., Navira Ballard, cousin of the bride, Miss Nannie Brooks and Miss Nancy Dick of Suffolk, Va. Mr. Henry Barnes of Elon College, N. C., acted as best man, and Messrs. Hutson Council, Augustus Edwards, Lonnie Ballard, brother of the bride, and Thornton Dick, cousin of the bride, were the groomsmen. The bride, dressed in a white crepe meteor gown with pearl trimmings, the veil caught with orange blossoms, and carrying white carnations, was very beautiful indeed, and greatly admired by all present. Mrs. A. D. Bowen, of Suffolk, Va., played the wedding marches, and Mrs. Lizzie Carr Brinkley, of Suffolk, Va., sang A Crown of Love.

After the marriage ceremony the young and happy couple left for Norfolk, Richmond, Asheville, N. C., and other places, before going to Chattanooga, where they will make their future home. The happy couple have the congratulations of their many friends. H. H. B.

Turner-Raiford.

At R. W. Hayes', Gates Station, Gates Co., N. C., Mr. Euclid C. Turner and Miss Mattie Estelle Raiford, of Isle of Wight Co., Va. They did not run away, but owing to the bride's father and mother being dead, and not having reached her 21st year, had to go to N. C. to obtain license. Mr. Turner is a very prosperous farmer, and a member of Mt. Carmel Christian church. Miss Raiford is beautiful and well accomplished. Therefore the happy couple have the congratulations of their many friends. H. H. B.

Williamson-Moore.

At the home of the bride in Harrisonburg, Va., July 18, 1911, I united in matrimony Rev. Robert Lee Williamson and Miss Virginia Pearle Moore. It was a quiet, but beautiful home wedding, with only intimate friends and relatives of the contracting parties present. The couple entered the tastefully decorated parlor to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Jessie Wampler of Mt. Clinton, Va., and standing beneath an arch of white and yellow, made the solemn vows that unite them for life. Bro. Williamson is well known in N. C., from whence he came about eleven months ago, and has been laboring successfully within the bounds of the Va. Valley Central Conference since then. He is to be congratulated on having won for his life companion one so worthy and noble as Miss Pearle Moore. She is the daughter of Rev. H. C. Moore, who is favorably known among many of our people. After receiving congratulations from friends present, Rev. and Mrs. Williamson left for Natural Bridge, Va., to spend a few days sight seeing and resting. After their return they will make their home, for a while at least, in Harrisonburg. I am sure their many friends join me in extending heartiest congratulations and wishing them a happy and useful life together.

NEWS ITEMS.

The following from The Concord Times fairly sizes up the situation and sentiment in Texas:

The vote on prohibition in Texas a few days ago was the most encouraging boost the cause of prohibition has received in some time. The majority for anti-prohibition was only about one per cent. of the total vote. Several years ago a result like this would have been an impossibility. We predict that Texas will be a dry State within five years. The case of Texas is indicative of the manner in which the prohibition idea has spread through the country in the past few years. In 1887 that State voted on the question, and in a total of ballots smaller by far than that of Saturday the proposition was defeated by more than 90,000 majority.

—We note in the dispatches from Washington that Congressman Godwin has promise from the Government to assist in the drainage of Flea Hill, in Cumberland Co., N. C. If it is as dry in Cumberland County as it is just now in Alamance we hardly think it will bankrupt the National Government to drain Flea Hill.

—The "wets" won out by a very narrow margin in Texas, but the claim is made that so much money was used by the liquor interests to keep the open saloon that the fight must go on till the will of the people is properly registered at the ballot box.

—At Canton, Haywood County, N. C., Saturday evening two young friends, Paul Stamey and Seth Woods, began pranking at each other with their pocket-knives. Woods had been drinking and soon becoming angered and enraged literally carved to pieces his erstwhile friend Stamey. Woods is in jail awaiting trial for his life—incarcerated in a murderer's cell for killing his friend. Whiskey did it.

—A negro excursion from Durham to Charlotte over the Seaboard road carrying 900 passengers was wrecked at Hamlet and ten persons were killed outright and eighty were injured.

My Dear Cousins and Friends:—

Uncle Jim has been out several weeks in protracted meetings, and orphanage business, and Aunt Myrtle has been writing the letters. We are glad that many of the cousins continue loyal and faithful to the work they have so nobly wrought, and do trust that many others will be faithful also. We should have many more of the church-children in the Children's Department. It seems to Uncle Jim that parents would love to see their children taking part in such work as will help them grow into church workers.

We need to turn our children into every path and every work that will cause them to develop loyalty to our church. Disloyalty has for years been a great source of weakness to our church. Give us all our children and our church will grow. The Band of Cousins and Orphanage work will draw them in closer sympathy with each other and center them more in the Church.

We herewith submit the names of churches and Sunday schools that have complied with our numerous requests for "the monthly offering." Some of these schools have decided to feed and clothe an orphan at $5.00 per month, others give more, and many give smaller amounts.

When all our schools give them they will about support the present number of inmates. We are grateful to all the Sunday schools for their help. Some send monthly, some quarterly, and others at their convenience. We are trying to systematize our work by getting the offering monthly. Your school, if you have one, can greatly help us by sending the offering for one Sunday per month.

Give us many letters next week.

We are glad to receive the $60 annual interest on our cash endowment—what a blessing "that Friend" is to us! Oh for 99 more just like that one!

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Crews, Va., July 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I have had a nice trip to see my father's people in Tennessee; went up on Lookout Mountain. I thought it was the prettiest sight I ever saw to look in so many states and to look down on the cities. The buildings looked very small. Hope you and all the cousins are well and enjoying the summer. It is awful dry and warm here. We send our dues for June and July. I think that is right. I close with love to you and all the cousins. Your little niece and nephew,

Helen S. Foster,

T. Clifford Foster.

Mountain scenery is indeed grand, children, and I am so glad you had such a chance. You are indeed fortunate.

Elon College, N. C.

Dear Cousins:—

We are the two little boys that help feed the pigs and help graze the cows. We can ride the horses to water, but we are afraid to ride the mules, because they try to run with us. We love to help milk the cows, because it is such fun. We are only seven and eight years old.

TWO PICTURES.

A story is told of an artist who began to search for something that he could get an ideal of Heaven from. He wished to paint a picture of the Home or something to represent its beauty and splendor. For four or five years he gazed at the sunrise, the many and beautiful scenes of the day and the lovely sunset, but no picture seemed to present itself that would satisfy his desire.

At last as he was walking down the street one day, he met a small boy with a sunny face, wearing a bright smile and seeming to be as happy as anyone could be. The artist, after getting a good look at the boy, returned to his room and painted, from imagination, the boy's face. For days and days the artist was busily engaged placing every little finishing touch on his master-piece. But as he worked on this, his ideal of Heaven, the thought of what he could paint to represent Hell came to his mind. So, here another search was begun, but like the first, it proved to be a hard task. After ten or twenty years had past, the artist visited a jail where several prisoners were confined. In the strongest cell was found a man who was a murderer, a bad man indeed. The prisoner's face was marked with every line of crime and dissipation.

Here as the artist stood and looked at a man, who, in his estimation, and from the countenance of his face, was the vilest of the vile; a picture of hell.

The artist returned to his room, as before, and began to paint his ideal of hell. When the picture was finished, he placed it, together with his ideal of Heaven, in a conspicuous place, and as people thronged the streets, day after day, passing the pictures and making inquiries about them, it was discovered that both pictures were of the same person.

Now, why the reason? "Sin! sin!! sin!." I hear a hundred voices shout out.

Sin makes mother weep, children suffer, and the world mourn. Sin makes beautiful and promising young men become beggars and criminals, and causes their souls to go down to an awful hell. Sin fills our jails, our asylums, our orphanages, and crowds our homes with suffering and sorrow. But it is needless to enumerate the consequences of sin. Just stop and think how it crucified the Savior of the world, and you can not estimate the other desperate deeds it has done. C. B. R.

FACE TO FACE WITH ONE'S OWN LIFE.

A writer in one of the magazines said recently that if he were a preacher he would raise his voice in behalf of the individual life. He thinks the individual is lost sight of by too many preachers in considering the needs of society in general. The personal human soul is starving while men are discussing the problems of mankind. "If I were a preacher," he says, "I would talk usually just to one person."

Every one who has received any good thing ought straightway to begin giving it out that others may have it too. But one must receive before one can give. So the personal life must come first. You must feed your own soul or you cannot feed another's soul.

This is universally true. There is the duty of helping others,—the strong are bidden to help the weak,—but one must have in himself the ability and the resources of helpfulness before he can do for others what they need. If you are to teach others, you must be taught yourself. Before you can lead men, you must know the paths yourself. No one about to climb mountains would accept a guide who had never acquired skill in mountain-climbing in experiences of his own.

You must face life's problems yourself and master them. No one can do it for you. "Each man shall bear his own burden," says the scripture. Another scripture says, "Bear ye one another's burdens." There is no conflict in these teachings that seem contradictory. It is every one's duty, always, to put his shoulder under his brother's load, but always it is true that every one must bear his own burden, and that no one can bear it for him. God's purpose in all the work of the world is the making of men. Here, what is done must be done by the individual himself. Each man must build his own house. The process is going on continually. All experience contributes to it. Tennyson says:

"I am a part of all that I have met."

Every life we touch leaves something of itself in us. Every book we read puts some mark on our character. Every temptation makes us either stronger, if we resist it, or wounds and hurts us if we yield to it. Every sorrow that befalls us makes us better or spoils our beauty. The effect of these experiences upon us is not accidental, but depends upon the way we receive them.

God's purpose in all our life is our edification, to use one of Paul's suggestive words. This up-building is not all wrought in church services, in acts of worship. Christ is building men all the while—in love-filled homes, in places of labor, in daily companionships and associations, as well as at communion tables or prayer-meetings. We say that the business of a carpenter is to make the things that a carpenter usually makes. But God's purpose for the carpenter is the making of a man. The work of a farmer, we say, is to till the soil and reap harvests. But the thought of God in the farmer's work, what He looks for as the real outcome, is a beautiful life. If this result is not reached the farmer's life is not successful, however prosperous he may be as a farmer. We say that a man's circumstances make him; but at the center of all the circumstances the real, determining factor is the man himself. Whether the hard knocks you experience through the years make a man of you or wreck your life depends upon the way you meet them. It is you, not your circumstances, that will determine the outcome in your life.

There is need, therefore, for personal preaching at this point. It will not do to tell men merely that their lives are plans of God, that God thought about them before he made them, and then made them to fill a certain place and do a certain work. This is not the whole truth. The other part of the truth is that they have now to fulfil this divine purpose and live out this divine plan. We can spoil God's beautiful plan for our life if we will,—every man does who lives in sin, rejecting the will of God for him and taking his own way instead. We can fall far below God's perfect plan for us by living indolently, self-indulgently. Every man is required to do his best if he would measure up to the divine plan. An English writer says the three words, "That will do," have done more harm than any other three words in the language. Men get easily into the habit of looking at something they have made or done, and, though knowing it is not what it ought to be, or what they could make it, yet indolently let it pass, saying, "That will do." Thus they suffer their work to deteriorate in quality and fall far below God's plan, which requires the best.

It is said that the great violin maker, Stradivarius, would never allow any violin to leave his hands which was not as nearly perfect as he could make it. George Eliot makes Stradivarius say:

"If my hand slacked,
I should rob God,—since he is fullest good,—
Leaving a blank instead of violins.
He could not make Antonio Stradivarius' violins
Without Antonio."

It is true we rob God when we do any of our work less well than we could do it. God will help us to do our best, but we must work with him. He will not do our work without us. He will not do our best for us if we work indolently. "He could not make Antonio Stradivarius' violins without Antonio."

Thus at every point we need this lesson of individuality. We must meet life as individuals. We are responsible in a certain way for the good of all men. We owe a duty to "the other man" which we dare not fail to pay. But we must not forget that our first duty is to let God have his full way with ourselves. Keeping other people's vineyards will not be enough if meanwhile we have neglected our own. Doing a great work for others is not enough if we have not let God care for our own life.—S. S. Times.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a stated communication of Harmony Lodge, No. 149, A. F. & A. M., held July 15, 1911, the following tribute to the memory of Col. Alexander Savage was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased an All-wise God to remove from our midst our beloved and respected brother, Col. Alexander Savage, therefore, be it Resolved—That by the death of our brother, Harmony Lodge has lost a true, upright and enthusiastic Mason; Nansemond County has lost an enterprising and respected citizen, and Virginia has lost a staunch and fervent patriot, who held himself ever ready to answer her call. Born in the County of Nansemond, while yet a young man he was received into the membership of the Church and the order of Freemasonry. These two organizations held the warmest place in his heart to the day of his death. He loved his country and his home, and, though engaged in a prosperous business, when Virginia called for the help of her sons, he was among the first to offer his services.

He entered the Confederate States Army in April, 1861, and was made Orderly Sergeant of Nansemond Cavalry; from this rank he rose to that of Colonel of the Thirteenth Virginia Cavalry, which Regiment he commanded from the time of his appointment till March 31, 1865, when he was wounded at the Battle of Five Forks—losing his right leg—just nine days before the surrender of the Confederate forces at Appomattox. He was engaged, with his regiment, in most of the principal battles fought in Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

He reached his home in Nansemond on June 12, 1865, maimed in body, but unbroken in courage, ready to take up the burden of life and help rebuild the fortunes of a broken and desolated Southland.

By untiring energy, and largely by reason of his military training in habits of precision, he succeeded in accumulating sufficient for his needs. Not only this, but he helped other men. His life was a full one; and when the summons came, he was ready to "pass over the river and rest in the shade of the trees."

Rest, noble Colonel,—thou hast earned thy rest.

We loved thee well; thy Father loved thee best.

We fain had kept thee with us, but we know

That when the summons came for thee to go,

Our transient loss was thy eternal gain. Then good-bye, Colonel, till we meet again.

Joynes.

William Irvin Joyner, near Darden, Va., aged 57 years, 6 months and 15 days. Leaves a devoted wife and five children. He was married twice, and leaves one daughter by his first wife, Mrs. J. A. Stokley, of Suffolk, Va., and four children by his last wife. Also an aged father and mother, three brothers, J. E. T. Joyner, and R. H. Joyner, of Darden, Va., and M. W. Joyner of Suffolk, Va.,

COLONEL ALEXANDER SAVAGE.

two sisters, Mrs. T. Bradshaw, of Nuneysville, Va., Mrs. G. W. Munford, of Petersburg, Va., and many friends. He was a good, faithful, and true member of Mt. Carmel Church. He was taken sick and died very suddenly, before his wife could get any one to her aid, for by the time one of his neighbors reached his bed side he was gone to that land where sickness and death can never come. Funeral service was conducted by his pastor at Mt. Carmel church, and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. The Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones. H. H. B.

Franklin.

On Sunday evening, June 18, 1911, near Corapeake, Gates Co., N. C., Miss Minnie Coston Franklin, aged 24 years. She was fully resigned to her Savior's will and said the Lord's will be done. She was a true and sincere Christian, a faithful member of Parker's M. E. Church. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her on account of her many amiable traits of character. Her funeral service was conducted by the writer at her home, and her remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. She leaves a devoted mother, three loving sisters, one dear and faithful brother, and many friends. God bless and sustain them all in this their sad time of bereavement with the blessed hope of meeting again where death can come no more. H. H. B.

Piland.

Helen Virginia Piland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Piland, died at her home near Holland, Va., July 17, 1911, aged 5 years and 17 days. The death of this bright and interesting child came as a sad blow to the home, and more so on account of the absence of the father, who has been confined to a hospital for more than four months from an injury received last fall. Beside the parents and grandmother, there are three brothers, Sallie, Rowland and Bennie, and three sisters, Jessie, Bernice, and an infant sister. The funeral was conducted by the writer at Holy Neck church, and the body laid away in the church cemetery. We extend our sincerest sympathy to the fond parents and all the bereaved ones, praying a Father's richest blessing upon them all. N. G. Newman.

Richards.

Norfolk, Va., July 13, 1911, at her grand son's, Dr. Fletcher Archers, Mrs. Louisa Richards, relict of the late Elijah Richards, who was a power in the church for God. He was powerful in prayer for the salvation of souls. He used to be a great help to the writer in his revival meetings. Sister Richards had been afflicted for a year or more, but was cared for by her grandson, Dr. Archer, who was greatly attached to his grand mother. Therefore she had everything done possible for her comfort. The Lord bless her grand son, Dr. Fletcher Archer, for his love and care for dear old grand mother. There are rich promises for all those who love and honor their parents. Her funeral service was conducted at Oakland church by the writer, and her remains were laid to rest in the old family cemetery. She leaves to mourn their loss two grand sons, Dr. Fletcher Archer, of Norfolk, Va., Solomon Archer, of Nansemond Co., Va., many relatives and friends. God bless the dear ones.

Brittle.

Near Zuni, Va., June 7th, 1911, Hugh Jonathan Brittle, the dear, bright and interesting little one of brother and sister R. E. Brittle, aged 1 year and 6 months. Everything was done for little Hugh that could possibly be done by a skilled physician, a devoted father, and a loving mother. It was sad for the dear parents to give up little Hugh, but like one of old they could say, The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. Bro. and Sister Brittle have the deepest sympathy of their many friends. The funeral service was conducted by the writer at their home, and the remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery to await the coming of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of God." Little Hugh is now happy with Jesus, no more pain nor death. H. H. B.

Foster.

At his home in Burlington, N. C., July 25, 1911, Mr. J. J. Foster, in his seventy-third year. His wife and one brother survive him. Some years ago he confessed Christ, and during his sickness it was my privilege to visit him, read and pray with him; and he expressed himself as trusting Christ his Savior.

The funeral services were conducted from the home, by the writer, and Confederate veterans as pall-bearers laid the remains of their comrade to rest in the cemetery at Union Ridge. Capt. J. A. Turrentine made a very appropriate and touching talk at the grave regarding the faithfulness of Bro. Foster as a soldier. May the God of comfort and consolation bless and help the bereaved ones.

P. H. Fleming.

—Dispensaries for the treatment of hookworm disease were established in July in the counties of Sampson, Columbus, Robeson and Halifax, N. C., and at these dispensaries 1,479 cases were treated during the month. In Columbus County 412 people were treated for hookworm disease in one day. Rieckefeller's philanthropy came none too soon.

—We note with sincere regret that Rev. McD. Howsare is not to remain with Memorial Temple, Norfolk, another year. Our Norfolk correspondent tells of the announcement which will carry much regret. Bro. Howsare is much beloved by his brethren in the South, and we had hoped to hold him here these many years to come. We are sure the Memorial Temple will give him up with great reluctance. He is a good preacher and a valuable man wherever he goes.

—Because of the unprecedented drouth 152 cotton mills in the Carolinas shut down July 31. The water in Catawba River is so low that the Southern Power Company cannot supply the power, hence the wholesale shut-down. It is estimated that 70,000 operatives are thrown out of employment. It is believed that the mills will only be shut down a few days.

THE WORDS OF LIFE.

The disciples were once tempted to leave the Great Teacher. They had been disappointed. He had failed to do what they had expected. Yet they did not leave Him; for though they had lost all in following Him, they reflected that they had also gained much. If they had not found such a kingdom as they had expected, they had found a life that they had hardly dreamed of before—a life that they believed would be everlasting. They could not leave Him, for He, and He alone, had the words of everlasting life.

Jesus alone knew what was in man. He saw in men—in all men—the possibility of great things. His words awakened in the minds of those that received them powers that had never been suspected by their possessors. John, the son of Zebedee, would have always remained a common Galilean fisherman if he had not learned in the school of Christ. But Christ's word waked in him the powers that made him foremost in the great work of giving the world a new philosophy and a new life.

No teacher can produce in the mind of his pupils powers altogether new, but he brings to the full growth what was before only germinal. So it is in the school of Christ. He still has the words of eternal life—the words that may bring life to its fullness and so prepare it to be transplanted into the garden of God.

He Himself lived perfectly the life He taught. He was Himself the living word, God's revelation of the life He calls all God's sons to live. Coming from Him, His words had a meaning that they could not have had from any other source. Even yet His words demand constant translation. The ancient language may still have its ancient force, though it has lived for centuries only in books; but the life itself must speak, for the words of Jesus still convey the divine life, speaking from faith to faith. They bear the message of God, and they speak to all that is divine in every man. As they are preached the Christ still appeals to the Christ, for all the divine in man is one; it is the one divine life, the life of God and of His children.—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

THE WORD

(The word of our God shall stand forever. Isa. 40:8.)

The criminal at the bar, unless hardened beyond recall, hears his sentence pronounced with pangs of terror and deep regret. If hardened and indifferent, he listens to his doom heedless and unconcerned. Jehoiakim, king of Judah, was steeped in sin, sunken in shame and iniquity. He heard his own doom pronounced by the man of God and quietly, deliberately, diligently gathered together all the parts and parcels of the word pronounced against him, and burned them in the fire of his winter palace. And he never even so much as feared, faltered, or hesitated. Jehoiakim was a bad man. On this account he hated, and was anxious to destroy forever, the Word of God. Poor silly, sinful, foolish king. He thought to destroy God's word. God's Word destroyed him.

This same sort of folly has been going on in the world through these thousands of years. Sinful men have been trying to destroy the Word of God because it pronounces against them, and against their wicked ways. "We may reject God's word, but it will still condemn us."

There have been various foes of the Word, but they have all failed. Not only kings, but peasants, preachers, priests, scholars, thinkers, rich, poor, great, small, learned, unlearned, all sorts and conditions of men have sought, many fines over, to destroy and make to none effect the word of God, but all in vain. "The word of our God shall stand forever." When the heavens and the earth shall have passed away, even then will God's word abide.

Since the Word of God cannot be destroyed, it behooves men of reason and wisdom to accept and obey it. His words are words of beauty, truth, wisdom. It were far better to hear and heed these words than to fling ourselves against them, heedlessly, to our own undoing.

As the years lengthen, we are learning that there is more of truth and power in the Book. Pity that we do not imitate Jehoiakim in one particular. He went directly to the Book. So many of us hear much, and read much, about the Book, but we go so seldom to, and read so little in, the Book itself. We need to quit reading so much about the Book and read more of the Book.

In our Sunday schools we need to leave the quarterlies and helps at home, and read and study and learn the Bible. If we carry any book at all to Sunday school, it ought to be the Bible.

If you are to interest old people especially in the Sunday school, the best way is to have a real Bible class, a class where in the only book studied or in evidence is the Bible. This is the book that contains words of eternal life, and we need to study and to learn it more and more.

CRITICISING THE CHURCH.

Nine times out of ten it is the man who does not go to church that criticizes it most roundly and recklessly. We were talking recently to a poor fellow who was out with the churches; had not put his foot inside a house of worship in years. Did not think he would ever go again. Some man in the church had angered him; some preaching was puerile and powerless; churches had folks in them who were not fit. His arraignment of the church was heartless and severe.

Isn't it strange indeed that so many people so readily and so roundly criticize the church?

The Homiletic Review recounts that recently at a banquet in New York one of the principal speakers was manager of a great metropolitan daily. This newspaper man vigorously and vehemently assailed the church, though he admitted that he had not been to church in twenty years. His entire address was given to denunciation of what he called church conditions; the churches were ruled by petty cliques; their chief business was begging and money raising; they were out of touch with practical life; ministers are preaching antiquated and sentimental theories, afraid to say their souls were their own because of rich old sinners in the pews and so on ad nauseam. This newspaper man thought, we presume, he was getting off something novel and sensational, whereas his speech was old and hoary with antiquated and threadbare nonsense.

And here is the comment that goes to the heart of the matter:

The point of the matter is, that such criticism should come from men who never go to church, and who know nothing of the conditions; who have had not the slightest opportunity to note the progress and observe the activities of the church. Yet, if they chance, as in the case above mentioned, to occupy a position of influence they are able to do considerable harm. They do not mean to speak slanderously; they are echoing sentiments that are more or less current; they may have an isolated fact or two as a basis for their criticism; but what is the meaning of so much readiness on the part of many well-meaning men to attack the church? It is doubtful if there is any other institution within their knowledge that they would assail so indiscriminately. What would such a man say of another critic who had not read his particular newspaper for twenty years, but who should nevertheless undertake to characterize it before a mixed assembly?

Deserving of all help, needing all the sympathy of men, doing more for human welfare than all other human institutions, can any one easily explain why upon the church, first and most, so many thoughtless critics find it so easy to pour out their animadversions?

His Life a Failure.

A writer in a current magazine states that he recently met, in one of the New York clubs, a millionaire, known throughout the country, who declared "I consider my life a failure." The interviewer was astounded, for everybody thought this millionaire a great and shining success. But he declared himself a failure. "I have been giving myself to business so completely that I have lost interest and appreciation in the better things of life."

Some time ago a man in Washington was told he was dying. "Dying? Indeed, I have been dead these thirty years save for sepulture. I have been a piece of business machinery like any other mechanism for thirty years. Let the last come, for I am worn and done for as any other piece of machinery."

He too had made money. The world had said he was a success. Was he a success? Life is more than dollars. It is life. It looks to art and literature and love and appreciation. Without these and God it is failure.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.Not a Miracle.

The esteemed Times-Dispatch, Richmond, is much puzzled over watermelons and enquires, How Come? Even in a dry season this far spreading vine extracts water and sweetness from the thirsty earth, and our contemporary thinks it a miracle: "Where does the water come from? There is a miracle. How can that great juicy core come out of that parched ground? There was a miracle in which water was turned into wine, but here is a case where a dry clod is transmuted into sugar. How can it be explained?"

No, beloved, this is no miracle. The sheep extracts wool, the goose feathers, the swine flesh, the horse strength, and the cow milk, all from the self-same pasture. But it is no miracle. It is all as natural as the night which gathers into its tender embrace the weariness and fatigue of the day and renews their strength and vigor; or as the deep darkness that cleanses the impure and disease-reeking atmosphere and within a ten hours gives another day as beautiful, bright, and fresh as that which gladdened the hearts of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. The watermelon extracts sweetness, the tobacco plant nicotine, the cotton plant a fleecy whiteness, the wheat and the corn flour and meal, the staff of life for man and beast, but it is no miracle. It is all as natural as that process by which the water is gathered from the running stream or the restless sea, after it has done its work of purging and purifying a filthy earth and is given back in refreshing showers or from a cooling fountain.

A miracle is a marvel and a wonder which seldom happens. It seems to arrest or transgress the laws of nature and the ordinary. The world is wonderful, not because of its miracles, but because of the marvellous, mighty, majestic things going on around us every day and all the time. Open your eyes, neighbor, if you want to see wonders. The world is just full of them. They are not miracles. They are more than miracles. They are the voice, the presence, the power of our God speaking to us every hour we live in this beautiful, wonderful world.

Southern Hospitality.

Hospitality need not remain the same in order to be as genuine and as lavish. F. Hopkinson Smith, speaking of the "old Southern gentleman," is reported to have enquired: "What has become of the old-time chat over a long-necked bottle? Where has the spirit of our old-time Southern hospitality gone?" The esteemed Charlotte Observer briefly answereth, "One has gone autoing and the other is putting up at the sky-scraper."

The "old time Southern gentleman" is dead, but his son, the new-time Southern gentleman, is alive and about in the world. The long-necked bottle is not necessary any more. There is so much going on that he does not find resort to the bottle a necessity in order to keep up conversation. Public school houses, such as the old time Southern gentleman never dreamed of, are to be built and maintained in every rural community; public roads, graded and macadamized, are to be constructed and maintained, such as our ancestors did not even have a need for; farm lands are to be improved and enriched instead of being abandoned and left to grow up in "old field" as in "ye olden days." In short there is plenty to stimulate conversation now without recourse to the bottle.

"Where has the spirit of our old-time Southern hospitality gone?" It hasn't gone anywhere. It is still here. The war destroyed the means of indulgence and lavish abundance; but the spirit of our erst-while hospitality yet abides. Let the son of a Southerner, "bred in the bone," become able by industry and energy, to indulge his taste, follow his ideal, and he will build for you a home whose hospitality is as regal and lavish as any that blessed our good land in the days that are gone. The spirit of hospitality is here. Its appurtenances may sometimes be lacking. And we shall have a regal hospitality without the help of the long-necked bottle.

Reciprocity.

This word has been before our eyes every day, in the headlines, as our paper has reached us, for the last several months. Congress has discussed and debated and grown warm and weary. Now that Reciprocity with Canada has really passed, and the heat and discussion are over, we may summarize what the items are about which we are entering into agreement with our neighbor to the north west. We take the fundamentals of the agreement, as given by the New York Advocate, as follows:

Reciprocal lists shall be made of leading food products, such as wheat and other grains, dairy products, fresh fruits and vegetables, fish of all kinds, eggs and poultry, cattle, sheep and other live animals, so that they may be taken into either of the countries without paying any customs duties. There are various commodities that were free in one country and not in the other, and if Canada accepts these are to be made reciprocal. For example, cotton-seed oil is to be made free by Canada, rough lumber by the United States, and tin and tin-plate, now dutiable in both countries, are to be made mutually free. Barbed-wire fencing is now exempted from duty by both Canada and the United States. Some raw materials, such as mica and gypsum, are to be made free by the United States. Printing paper is to become free on the removal of all restrictions in the exportation of pulp wood. There are mutually reduced identical rates on secondary food products, such as fresh and canned meats, bacon and hams, canned vegetables, flour and cereal preparations, and also on a long list of manufactured commodities, including motor vehicles, cutlery, clocks and watches, sanitary fixtures, satchels and other leather goods, plate glass, printing ink and brass-band instruments. There has been a difference between rates in Canada and the United States on agricultural implements, such as plows, harvesters, threshing machines and drills; and these are now reduced by Canada to the United States rates. There is a small list of articles given special rates by each country. Canada reduces the duty on coal to 45 cents a ton, and on cement to 11 cents a hundred pounds. The United States reduces the iron ore rate to 10 cents a ton, and lowers the rate on aluminum products and dressed lumber.

The total amount of duties to be remitted by the United States is $4,850,000. The total number of duties to be remitted by Canada is $2,560,000. The value of articles now dutiable which the United States proposes to make free is $39,811,000. The value of articles now dutiable which Canada proposes to make free is $21,958,000, and the value of dutiable articles on which Canada proposes to reduce duties is $25,870,000. The value of articles imported into Canada which are affected by the reciprocal agreement is $47,828,000. The value of articles remaining dutiable is $85,198,000. These figures are taken from the State Department's announcement.

—Chief Health Officer of Richmond, Va., has figured it out that owing to the death rate among negroes of his city, the colored race in his country will be extinct in one hundred years. There are indeed absurd conclusions drawn from figures.

Former Governor James K. Vardaman has been chosen United States Senator from Mississippi.

REASONS FOR EDUCATION.

In this day of enlightenment and all but universal learning it seems perhaps out of place to set forth the reasons for education. The materialism of our day, however, makes this necessary. Everything now is judged by the commercial standard. How much will this course add to my earning capacity? Will this year in college make me more capable as a wealth producer? These and similar questions make it not only proper, but even necessary to set forth briefly the reasons for education, aside from the dollar-and-cents one, because education does pay handsomely in money returns and in earning capacity, about which generally accepted verity it is not necessary to speak further at this point. It is the poorest of the reasons for education.

Education trains the mind, expands the mental powers, unfolds them, develops them. Man's mental powers are his glory, the source of his control over nature and the animal creation. Anything which adds to these powers or makes them more efficient is worthy of our attention and deserving of our patronage and support.

Education broadens the horizon of life, gives vision, insight, grasp of things. The world is very different to two men, one of whom is educated, the other of whom is not. Education brings a man into relation with the past of the world,—its successes, its failures, its hopes, its aspirations, and gives him the power to foresee the consequences of many measures proposed for human amelioration and betterment. It also gives him insight into the present,—a consciousness that he is master of the circumstances and opportunities of life and living about him. By giving him understanding of the past and mastery of the present, it offers him also the very best chance to control the future and meet the demands and emergencies of life.

It furthermore gives an insight into nature and an understanding of the natural universe to be had in no other way. The contributions of education along this line to the peace of mind and satisfaction of soul of the world's inhabitants can never be fully appreciated. By explaining the causes of storms, earthquakes, eclipses, comets, and other phenomena of the heavens, natural science has sweetened the life of mankind and removed from them constant causes of alarm and dread. Through Biology, Chemistry, and the other physical sciences it has greatly enhanced the enjoyment of life and added to man's mastery over material things. And daily new truths are being brought to light, adding to our possibilities of life and introducing us to forces unrevealed before, but powerful in their import for human welfare and progress.

Education reveals the purpose of life.

Purpose serves the same end to living that the compass does to sailing. Our purpose in life is our compass. It keeps us from getting lost in life's voyage and from being wrecked on the jutting bars and treacherous rocks of the sea of life. Blessed is the man with a purpose in life! Keep your eye on that man. He will make his influence felt and leave his name honored among his fellows. There is no way to learn the purposes of life so well as to go to college, where the growing, expanding mind is brought into relation with the purposes that have controlled the action of other men and brought them to greatness and renown. Noble purposes pulse through the heart and stir the soul of youth in the rare days of college life as they do at no other time and under no other condition.

Education also has the high privilege of giving its devotees correct notions of God and things divine. I am pained that all education does not yield this priceless fruitage. I regret that many men who are educated at State and privately endowed institutions have no adequate or proper concepts of these vital issues of life. Education, under the constant influence of the church, where only devout Christians are allowed as instructors, where religion is never scoffed at nor desecrated nor ruled out by science and sociology, hardly ever fails, to have the wholesome effect of moulding the character and the ideals of the young for Christ and Christian service. The education which fails to do this, which retards this, had better be let alone. We have had and will have none of it at Elon.

W. A. Harper.

A SUGGESTION.

About this time every year the churches call pastors for the ensuing year, and in all instances the call is made for one year. This is, in my opinion, a great mistake, and has resulted in forcing the preachers to locate; for no man with a family can afford to take his family into a community with a prospect of remaining one year. Our cause has suffered more on this account than from any other one thing. On other occasions, and at different places, I have called attention to this cause of weakness, but no one can change a custom of long standing unaided by those involved. The churches can do this without any action by conference or convention, but these bodies should seek to have a change made. The convention which met in Asheboro, N. C., some years ago recommended a plan for establishing pastorates, and the churches in the Eastern Va. Conference have in part adopted the plan. But the churches in that conference adhere to the old custom of calling their pastors annually.

If a church cannot support a pastor for all his time, it should unite with one or more near by and call ^{it} ^{its} ^{pastor} ^{for} ^a term of years, or indefinitely, with ^{the} ^{understanding} that a change can be made by a notice given and time allowed for the same. This would place the preacher near his charge and enable him to do pastoral work, but as it is he is on the railroad when he should be visiting the sick, etc. Every church should have preaching at least twice a month, and there are few that are really unable to provide for this. Any church with 100 members can do this. Every member should do something; but if there is a member who is too poor to do anything, that one is an object of charity and should be aided by the church. The Word of God gives us the plainest and best rule for making offerings in the church. Read 2 Cor. 16:2—"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him." Read also 2 Cor., 9th chapter.

Now take a church with 100 members, and a very large majority have this many, and make a calculation:

10 persons paying 1c. per week for 52 weeks, or one year, makes	$ 5.20
10 paying 2 cents per week	10.40
10 paying 3 cents per week	15.60
10 paying 4 cents per week	20.80
10 paying 5 cents per week	26.00
10 paying 10 cents per week	52.00
10 paying 20 cents per week	104.00
10 paying 25 cents per week	130.00
10 paying 30 cents per week	156.00
10 paying 35 cents per week	182.00

$702.00

This gives $702.00 for a church of 100 members. Then it is reasonable to conclude that any two churches with a membership of 100 each, or when united, would have 200 members, should raise a salary of at least $1,000, and employ a man for all his time. Then by building a parsonage and having the preacher near, his salary could be paid largely by products from the farm.

I trust that others will consider this matter seriously, and express their opinions freely. Churches are, in many cases, declining, getting weaker yearly, and unless some change takes place, soon there will be a loss that will greatly hinder our cause. The churches in the country are suffering most, and some relief must be provided. Will laymen speak out on this subject? Do not, however, all speak at once.

WHAT IS EDUCATION?

The problem of the ages has been the problem of education. The reason for this is patent—there can be no progress in civilization or culture or science without education. It is the conserving force in human advancement—the force that enables the acquisitions of one generation to be transmitted to the succeeding one. The benefits of progress cannot be transmitted physically, but intellectually. As one's parents are one's fate in the physical realm, so one's fate in the mental sphere is contained in one's education. It is the duty of every one, then, to educate himself as far as possible.

But what is education? Some think it is an accomplishment, an adornment, and in this conception there is a germ of truth. Education is the result of strenuous effort—an accomplishment. It does adorn its possessor with the richest sort of adornment. But it is not such an adornment as arises from polish, from veneer. This adornment comes from within, not from without—it is therefore enduring and will not rub off, because it is not put on. No man can put on education or lay it aside, as he would his coat or his collar. The so-called culture or society schools are therefore not true educational institutions.

Others regard education as synonymous with training or with the idea contained in a trade. In this conception also there resides a germ of truth. All true education trains, but its prime end is not training for a special thing until a broad and enduring foundation has been laid. Specialization is all right in its place, adds to efficiency and enriches life, but begun too early and carried too far it narrows and prejudices men, disqualifies them for filling the largest sphere in life. The great fault of our modern education is that it begins to specialize before the foundation is laid—it is top-heavy and narrow. The technical school is not in the proper sense an educational, but a training school, and to enter such an institution before the foundational work has been done is to stand a pyramid on its apex, to invite intellectual mediocrity and court failure in life. The professional, the technical, the normal, the business school has its place, but it is after the College has done the foundational work of preparation for success and usefulness and large achievement.

Education in the true sense, therefore, is what its Latin origin suggests—a leading out, a development, of the powers within one. Education is growth. It offers the opportunity of expansion, of development, of unfolding to the mental powers. It is kinetic force generated from a potential power under the influence of competent instructors and in pursuit of the best that has been said, done, and thought in the world's history. It is foundational and strength-producing—without it life can never be at its best nor achievement attain its maximum. Education is not primarily an adornment, tho it does adorn; it is not primarily a training, tho it trains the mind for its largest fruitage of endeavor and achievement; it is the unfolding of the mental powers, the ripening of the intellectual life, without which no man is capable of his best, however great he may become.

PORTO RICO. A PERSONAL LETTER.

On the second Sunday in July at the Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, the pastor being absent, the morning service was conducted by the missionary society and the evening service by the young people's Christian Endeavor society. Both services were well attended and much enjoyed. The missionary society's work for that day "Cradle Roll Rally," was a special missionary service for Cradle Roll Rally Day in the missionary society, which has a good membership. Among other good numbers on the program was the reading of a letter from Rev. D. P. Barrett, of Ponce, Porto Rico, and so interesting was it to us that I am sending it to The Sun in hope that others will be glad to hear from this field. It is indeed a dear letter to us. There are many ties that bring us near this field of labor. It may be that we will be brought still closer to this field in time. This society donated $10 to the Porto Rico Building fund and aside from this friends of the society gave $6.00, making a total of $16.00 for this building through the efforts of the society. This is but a mite, we know, but we are proud of that mite, for it is the best we could do. We expect to see the building go up because of the mites contributed.

J. H. B.

Bro. Barrett's letter is as follows:

Dear Brethren, Sisters and Friends of the Memorial Christian Temple, Greetings:—

Today, (second Sunday in June) marks the eleventh anniversary of your Missionary Rally Day. Well do we remember the inauguration of this forward missionary movement. God has blessed you in your efforts to serve Him and we believe His blessings are continually showered upon the work which has been made possible through your gifts and prayers.

The relation between the Christian Memorial Temple and the work in Ponce, Porto Rico is surely that of mother and daughter, and I believe that the tie that binds the two so closely may be strengthened as the years go by.

You will remember that our missionary force has been increased this year by the arrival of little Mabel Barrett, so we now have Alice, Olyn, Palmer Jr., and Mabel.

Little Mabel is just three months old, but she makes herself useful in that she attracts the admiration of all who see her. She finds a welcome everywhere.

We have not been entirely free from sickness this year, but compared to what many of our friends have suffered even here in Ponce, we feel that God has taken peculiar care of us.

My work this year has been somewhat more irregular than formerly owing to Bro. T. E. White's absence. My native helper, Bro. Rafael Hernandez, had to leave Ponce to take charge of the Salinas field, hence the work in Salinas has been under the general direction of Miss Mishler and myself with Bro. Hernandez in charge.

Miss Jennie Mishler still has her headquarters in Santa Isabel. The Board has bought a lot there with a dwelling house on it which has been repaired and a part of it turned into a chapel, while another part Miss Mishler uses for herself. She is quite comfortable there to what she was formerly. Her work is interesting and progressing.

Our Ponce field which includes six other preaching points besides Ponce, has made some progress this year. The work, however, is hard and there are many things to discourage. But when we compare the present with the past, our hearts rejoice to see many mile stones behind. There is progress along every line of work in Porto Rico.

Our Sunday school has added another phase of work this year, that of the Cradle Roll Department. We believe that it is going to be the means of carrying the gospel to some homes that otherwise would not have had it. We have 22 little ones enrolled and are trying to carry out plans suggested by the International Sunday School Department for keeping up interest in the homes we have once entered.

We have built a little ranch for our services in the Barrio of Manzanilla, which has added to the general interest of the public there.

We are building a very nice chapel in Arus at the cost of $600.00. Arus is a very important Barrio, and there are many small settlements nearby, so we feel that there is much promise for the work there. I should be able to send you a picture of the building had I not been caught in a swollen river, which entered my buggy, spoiled my camera, and all the pictures I had taken that day.

In our last quarterly conference in Arus the church recommended Bro. Rafael Bracero, a member of the church there, to the Annual Conference as being worthy to become a member of our Biblical class. Bro. Bracero aspires to the ministry, and we have hope that he may become a very useful brother. He is just twenty-one years of age, and while his education is limited, he makes the best of his opportunities. He is a teacher in the Sunday school, and often leads the service in case no one else is there to lead. He is the assistant pastor of the church, in practice, not in name. He needs help in various ways, which we hope to be able to render in the near future.

Our mission work in Porto Rico has taken up another phase of Christian work since Christmas. The idea of establishing dispensaries for the poor appealed to us as a great necessity. By the kindness of Dr. C. E. Ruth who offered his services free of charge, we have been able to open up and establish two of these dispensaries. One was opened in Salinas the 26th of January of this year and the other on the 1st day of June at Santa Isabel. We have not been compelled to spend a penny from the regular fund. We have had given us in Salinas by native friends and Americans $105 which put us on a good basis. We have work only twice a month, but great good is being accomplished in combating the hookworm and also the malaria, which are two diseases very prevalent in that district.

We recall the fact that the Ponce church is not yet realized, but seems to be a thing of the near future. It is greatly needed and our prayers are that it may soon be built. Trusting that we may continue to have an interest in your prayers for the advancement of God's plans in the salvation of souls, I am yours in His service.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Dr. P. H. Fleming, who goes to Greenville, Ohio, as pastor of the First Christian Church, Sept. 1, has served our Burlington church nearly sixteen years instead of "ten or more" as stated in last week's Sun.

—Suffolk church has voted Dr. W. W. Staley a vacation the month of August, the most of which time will be spent with his family at Franklinton, N. C. Sun readers are not as generous as members of the Suffolk church, so there is no vacation given, and we trust none will be taken, from "Suffolk Letter."

—Rev. J. W. Wellons was the past week at Pope's Chapel with Pastor J. W. Patton in a good meeting. Bro. Wellons writes: "We have had a fine meeting which resulted in about fourteen professions and ten accessions to the church. The meeting was largely attended and Bro. Patton was at his best and gave us fine sermons. I enjoyed the meeting so much, greeting again in the flesh many whom I knew in other days where I was pastor for 20 years. The church is doing well under the pastorate of Bro. Patton who has served it for nearly four years."

—Last Saturday and Sunday were great days for Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va. The occasion was the meeting of the Halifax Co. S. S. Convention, all denominations, and a great company gathered to enjoy the feast of good things. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler, the great evangelistic singers, were present and inspired the great audience with their marvelous music. President Harper made a magnificent address, to the delight of all, on Sunday. The editor, with Mr. and Mrs. Butler, is in a meeting at Pleasant Grove this week.

—Childhood lives in the present, youth in the future, old age in the past. This proverb holds good as to the events and issues of this world, but when the life to come is included, then old age looks to the future with hope and prospects. Rev. T. A. Pounds, Clayton, writing recently, said, "I am now on the verge of 75 years, and I thank God and praise Him for the preservation of my life, for I feel I am drawing nearer home every day. Won't it be a happy time when we get to that heavenly home?"

Rev. S. B. Klapp, pastor, is in a meeting this week at Salem Chapel, assisted by Rev. B. J. Earp. Bro. Klapp is to be assisted at Ingram, Va., by Rev. P. T. Klapp in a meeting next week—beginning the second Sunday in August.

A Church in a Day.

People some times get in earnest, and in a hurry, about the church and church work. When they do, somewhat takes place. Get people really interested in some physical exertion or material undertaking for the church, and they will do more work in less time with greater ease, joy and satisfaction than they will in any other sort of work whatever. Recently the people of Waco, Texas, got in a hurry for a church. If authentic reports are to be credited, they put up that church building in a day. Here is the way an exchange (New York Advocate) reports the proceedings:

"At eight o'clock the first load of materials came on the lot, at 9 the cement foundation was begun, by noon the entire frame was up, and the vestibule finished. The forty mechanics rested an hour while the women of the church served a luncheon. By 4:30 the masonry roof was finished, the painters were putting on the second coat, the decorators had the burlap and paper on the walls. At 6 the job was done and the furniture in place. A joyous religious service was held at once, the workmen occupying the front seats. There was a large attendance and a collection of $2,500 was taken. The next morning at 7 o'clock the new parsonage was begun."

Church Loyalty.

Why is it that many of our Christian name and faith are willing to live without a church home? Let two of the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians locate in a community or a town, and shortly you will see a church of their name, faith and order going up. We wish we could say as much of our Christian people. If our observation is correct we cannot, however.

It would be easy to count a dozen places now where not only three or four, but a dozen members of Christian churches live, and have lived for years; but they are willing to be members of the old church "at home," and to go as visitors to other churches rather than provide a church home for themselves and their children. We often wonder why this is. Are we Christians lacking in loyalty? If not, where is the cause?

A New Song Book.

At the Young People's General Convention in biennial session at Elon College last May a committee was appointed to recommend a song book for use in our Sunday schools, Organized Classes, Christian Endeavor Societies, etc. This committee consists of Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., Mesdames Jas. L. Foster and J. W. Patton, Elon College, North Carolina. This committee has spent much time in investigating and in making many examinations and have now made report that we use "Song Service and Revival No. 1," by E. T. Hilderbrand and W. E. Barnett, as being best adapted to our needs in all young people's services.

Song Service and Revival No. 1 is a book especially edited for "Revival and Gospel work, but admirably adapted to the needs of Sunday schools, Leagues and Praise Meetings of all kinds. It contains many of the old popular revival songs that everybody can sing, and a number of new inspiring ones for Song Service, etc. Both notations. Muslin 25c; the dozen, $2.50 prepaid. In boards, 30c; the dozen, $3.00 prepaid." The book is on sale at The Christian Sun office, Elon College, N. C., and can be had in any quantity at prices named.

—Congressman Underwood, from Alabama gave Mr. W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska, a rather severe drubbing from the floor of the House at Washington, Aug. 2, and the House looked on and cheered. Mr. Bryan can hardly be said to be as popular with his party as he has been.

—We hear of people leasing a county to hunt in, but here is a novelty. James J. Hill, the railroad magnate, rents a river in Labrador, and goes there occasionally for fishing. He has just returned, the papers say, after a month's fine fishing in his own rented river.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

His many friends will be very glad to know that Prof. Ned. F. Brannock, of the department of Physics and Chemistry, who recently underwent a most serious surgical operation in the St. Leo's Hospital in Greensboro, is improving and, while he is not able yet to sit up, his physicians feel confident that all danger is past and his complete and final recovery is assured.

Mr. Joseph Clendenin of the hill, who was stricken with paralysis of the alimentary canal and digestive system last Thursday, continues very sick at his residence. Relatives and friends have been called to his bedside, and the issue of his ailment is being watched with much concern.

The Rev. J. W. Wellons, who is the co-pastor of the church in this place, is spending the vacation granted him by his congregation, visiting friends and acquaintances of long standing in Franklin and Wake Counties.

Intelligence has reached here with regret that the Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., pastor of the first Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., and Secretary and Treasurer of the College Corporation, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Christian church at Greenville, Ohio. Dr. Fleming's services as secretary and treasurer of the College have been most valuable in the past.

The vacation number of the College Bulletin appeared on the first of this week and has been mailed to old and prospective students and such friends as desire it. This number contains articles of general interest on educational questions of the day and ought to appeal to young persons who are considering the matter of entering college this fall. A copy of this bulletin may be had by addressing the President.

The prospect for the fall term, despite the drouth and poor crops in many counties, is very bright. The expectation is that the enrollment will represent an increase over that of last year.

Miss Marjorie Lee of Richmond, Va., has been visiting Miss Annie Watson during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Hobby, of Raleigh, N. C., are visiting their daughter, Mrs. M. A. Atkinson, and also Mr. Buck Hobby, north of town. They will return to their home Tuesday.

Mr. Buck Hobby and family were pleasant visitors at M. A. Atkinson's yesterday.

Mr. D. A. Brown is having a deep well bored at his home. Mr. Heator, who dug the College well, is doing the work.

Miss Annie Watson left last week for an extended visit to Mars Hill, N. C., where she will be the guest of Miss Bryan, of the Art Department.

Mr. Mack Clendenin, a traveling salesman, has been called to the bed-side of his father.

Mr. W. E. Lowe, auditor for the Virginia Railway, is spending a few days at his home on Faculty Row.

Mr. J. W. Ingle, our efficient postmaster, has returned from a ten day's vacation, which was spent in the mountains of N. C. near Blowing Rock, where Mr. Ingle was the guest of his parents.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, who has been doing such excellent work in the field, returned to the hill last Friday.

THE GIFT OF SINCERITY.

Take from a man every gift but sincerity; let him be blind and deaf and lame—let him stammer in his speech, lack education and good manners. Handicap him as you please, so you leave him sincerity, and he will command respect and attention. His work will endure. The world, which is always looking for the real things, will gladly overlook all his infirmities.

In every relation of life, sincerity is the secret of power. The salesman who does not himself sincerely believe in the merits of his goods will generally be a failure. The man who sets about to fool other people must end—as he has, in fact, begun—by making a fool of himself. The clergyman who preaches anything that his own soul does not approve need look no further to explain empty pews.

There is no virtue that more men believe in and fewer men practice. Many of us, it may be fair to say, are busily engaged in the utterly futile attempt to run a bluff on the rest of the world. From pillow shams and false fronts to imitation marble buildings and watered stocks things are quite largely not what they seem.

The chief anxiety of too many people is to keep up appearances. If they are poor, they must at any rate appear to be rich. When Jones, the wealthy brewer across the street, sets up a motor car, the Brown family puts a mortgage on the house and lets the butcher go unpaid to the end that they, too, may boast an automobile.

If they are ignorant, they at least affect culture. "We are going to spend the winter in Washington on account of its wonderful educational advantages," says Mrs. Jenkins. "We expect to put dear Alyce in the Smithsonian Institute."

Be a real man—not a shoddy sport or a sham aristocrat. Be sincere with yourself, your friends and your work. With sincerity, a few talents and a little strength may go far. Without it, genius itself must fail!—Henry M. Hyde, in Chicago Tribune.

WHAT FORGIVENESS IS.

Forgiveness that depends upon the penitence of the one who has done wrong is not forgiveness at all. Yet how often we hear people say that they would gladly forgive an offender if only he would show some desire for forgiveness. If they cannot forgive him while he is still bitter against them or utterly indifferent to their forgiveness, they cannot do so after he repents and seeks their forgiveness. For true forgiveness is not a matter of feeling, nor of purchase, nor of bargaining, nor of return for something received. It never waits until it is asked for. It is not a temporary thing. It is strictly defined by Mr. Johnston Ross when he says, of God's attitude: "Forgiveness is not a sudden throb of mercy in the propitiated heart of God, it is the perpetual state of the divine heart, a divine hospitality open to all." Have we made our own that selfless, incessantly outgoing love which God shows toward us even while we are hostile or indifferent to him, and which he would have us always show toward all who need to see him in us? Let us secure the repentance of those who have wronged us by forgiving them before they want to be forgiven.—S. S. Times.

HOME HAPPINESS.

Probably nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over and the feeling that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace and with his family, is something real.

It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house. You can make that one room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with fancies that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and it will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you shall ever transgress.

You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to him. Courtesy is of more value and is a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will be but courteous to each other, you will soon learn to love more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than you ever did before.—Ram's Horn.

Young People's Department.

Devoted to the interests of the Young People's Convention,
Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training and Organized Classes.
Edited by Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.

AMONG OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

The First Philathea class of the Greensboro Christian Church is an example of what an organized Sunday school class can do and be if the members are earnest and enthusiastic. Mr. W. B. Truitt is the teacher of this class and is a young man who knows how to win the girls into his class and keep them. Last Wednesday evening he had the members at his home, on Vance Street, as his guests at a combined business and social meeting. As the members came each was handed a neat program, which was folded and tied with the class colors. All were cautioned not to open them until the proper time. The program provided: 1. Social; 2. A bachelor's idea of refreshments; 3. A business session; 4. Who's Who; 5. A minute for the minister; 6. Philathea hymn; 7. A few other things.

Mr. Truitt's idea of refreshments included buttermilk, ginger snaps and stick candy. Just before the social closed ice cream was served in cantaloupes. Mr. Truitt read an original poem, in which was mentioned the name of every member of the class. There were about 30 members of the class present and all said they had "the very best time ever."

There should be at least four organized classes in every Sunday school—one for young men, one for young women, one for older men and the fourth for older women. To these might be added one for youths, and another for girls from 14 to 17. With six classes organized for definite work, with officers and committees who will really work, what might not be accomplished!

If you haven't an organized class in your Sunday school, suppose you set aside one Sunday in September as "Organization Day." Get the older members together and see if you cannot get four or six classes organized and then put each class to work among the people eligible to membership in their class. I believe the Sunday school will grow.

There is nothing about organizing a class that requires unusual ability or effort. Simply have a meeting, decide to organize, elect your officers and committees, put the officers and committees at work and have them report frequently on what they have accomplished.

Organized classes should do definite work—that is what the class stands for. Single out some individual and try to get him in your class. If there is a member of the class unsaved work toward the definite end of saving that man. If you find a man who is not attending regularly, have the proper committee see why he is not attending.

Don't organize your class unless you mean to do things. What will a member of an organized class think of that class if he is sick and no one comes to see him; if he is out of town one Sunday and nobody says he was missed; if he drops out for awhile and nobody seems to care for him to come back.

The editor of this department is wondering why the secretaries of the conventions in Eastern Virginia and Eastern Carolina have not given some report of their splendid meetings to this department. Also he wonders why our organized classes and Christian Endeavor societies do not write occasionally and tell us what they are doing.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSON, AUG. 20.

Topic: Mountain Scenes in the Bible.

Deut. 34:1-16; Matt. 17:1-8.

Have you ever stood upon a lofty mountain top and "viewed the landscape o'er"? Those to whom this privilege has been given can enter into this lesson with an enthusiasm and interest that will hardly be experienced by others. It has been the privilege of the writer to stand upon the tallest peaks of the Old North State and look out over the undulating and hilly earth until vision is lost in the haze that covers the world. When viewing such a scene one understands why Christ led the apostles up into the mountain for the transfiguration and the season God called his prophets away from the world and nearer Himself when he desired the closest communion between them.

It is no idle fancy that gives charm and real worth to the mountains in the elevation of man. No man can stand in the presence of God's greatness without having some of his own smallness removed. People living in the hill and mountainous parts of the world have always been noted for their love of liberty, their generosity, and their largeness of mind and soul.

In the lesson are set out some of the more important mountain scenes of the Bible, but the daily readings must be studied for others, while a look at your concordance will open up other Bible scenes in both testaments. Find the poem "By Nebo's Lonely Mountain" and have some one recite it at the meeting.

Ararat, the patriarch of mountains, smoked with the first sacrifice in the restored world; Moriah reminds us of the victory of faith, and Nebo of the Christian's vision of the celestial Canaan. Sinai still towers as the symbol of divine law, and Olivet is redolent with Christ's loving interviews with his disciples. Carmel quickens our faith in the power of prayer; and Zion is the type of Christ's everlasting reign, and the saint's everlasting rest.—Mountain-tops Experiences.

"Yet we must not expect to reach heaven before our time. Jesus Christ did not spend all his time on Hermon, wearing a raiment as glittering as the sun-light. The impulsive suggested that they should build their tabernacles up there, and stay on that mountain summit. But the Master was needed down at the foot of Hermon, where a poor distressed youth possessed with evil spirits was awaiting to be healed."

"There is another kind of mountain-top experience to which every faithful Christian may aspire. John Bunyan, in his immortal allegory, brings his children to certain 'delectable mountains,' which are clad with orchards and fountains of water. From these sunny heights they caught some glimpses of the Celestial City, and we regale with pleasant fruits."

ON BIBLE SUMMITS.

Mount Sinai is the great mountain of the Old Testament. It is the Mount of the Law, the awful mount of flame and thunder. But it no longer has terrors for the world, for now we know that Jesus was there.

The hill called Calvary is the great mountain of the New Testament. To be sure, it is hardly to be called a mountain, or even much of a hill; and yet it overtops Sinai and the Alps and the Himalayas. Its summit reaches beyond the clouds and touches the very throne of God.

Mount Hermon, the Mount of the Transfiguration, is the mount of the Old Testament and the New Testament together, for upon it Christ talked with Moses and Elijah, and the subject was Christ's death, foretold in all the Old Testament and gloriously accomplished in the New.

The Horns of Hattin, the scene, perhaps, of the Sermon on the Mount, is the Sinai of the New Testament, where the laws of the new Kingdom were promulgated. They were not diverse from the old laws of the same Kingdom, but carried a long step further.

The Mount of Olives is the mount of the ascension. Its message to us is, "Live no longer in the material but in the spiritual.

Cease to think of Christ in a perishable body, and begin to live for His immortal body, the church.'

Mount Carmel is the mount of testing. All of the Bible mountains, in a sense, are mountains of evidence, but Carmel particularly so. God is always proving Himself, upon His foes by fire, upon His friends by rain.

Mounts Ebal and Gerizim are mountains of the covenant. It is well to speak our good resolutions in the presence of the mountains, that their stanch and abiding fidelity may serve as our examples. An Ebal and a Gerizim should be set up in every heart.

Mount Pisgah is the mount of hope. To be sure, to Moses it was the mount of defeat, for the lands he saw from the summit he was never to tread; but he was not living for himself, but for his people, and in their success he recognized his own.

Mount Hor is the mount of succession. There Aaron was stripped of his sacred vestments, and his son was made high priest in his stead; and there Aaron died. Every life must come to Mount Hor, and must provide, in some fashion, for its work to go on in other hands.—Daily Companion.

Are You Making Progress?

Not if you are doing the same thing in every prayer meeting.

Not if your committee is making no new plans.

Not if you are not studying the Bible for new light.

Not if you are not praying for new orders.

Not if you are not willing to make failures.

Not if you are not willing to do more than your share.

Not if you are not dissatisfied with your attainments and accomplishments.

Not if you are not sure that God has some great deed for you to do.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Delegates and visitors to the Virginia Valley Central Conference, which will convene with Leaksville Church Thursday, Aug. 17, will notify Mr. W. H. Keyser, Luray, Va., Route 3. Conveyance will be provided from Luray and Stanley. State to which place you will come and when you will arrive, as no trains will be met except those on which visitors to the conference are expected.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Winchester Letter.

We are pushing the work on our church building as fast as possible, and hope to be able to occupy it at an early date. We are badly in need of funds just now to push the work to completion and get in shape to dedicate.

We have received one hundred and eighty-five one dollar contributions. We lack eight hundred and fifteen of having the one thousand. Five hundred of our friends can send $1.00 each within the next ten days. It will mean much to us at this time.

Our Conference assumed an obligation of $2,200 during the session at Newport in 1909. While the response to the calls made to churches and individuals to help on this fund, as we had hoped, yet when we consider that this is the first time the Conference has undertaken anything of the kind, the interest is gratifying. $507.87 has been contributed, leaving a balance of $1,692.13. This is only about $1.00 each. How many members of the churches comprising the Conference will bring or send $1.00 to Conference? If you cannot send that much send 50 or 25 cents. 25 cents from each one would be over $400.

The $507.87 sent in was contributed by 137 persons; if the other 1477 members in the churches raising this fund will pay one dollar each, it will almost meet the Conference obligations. Those who have paid have averaged $3.70 each, and many of them have pledged more, ranging in sums from $1.00 to $17.00. How much we could do, and how easily we could accomplish things, if we would all join our efforts together and try.

The work is yours. The church is the property of the Conference. Your help is needed just now. If you cannot send large amounts, send small ones and let us finish paying for this one so that we can take up the work at other important points. Our local congregation has raised within Winchester and vicinity an average of $31.60 each this Conference year. We are trying to help ourselves. But the task is too large for our means. Will you help us now?

The following contributions have been received:

Bethel.

This church is doing fairly well considering the surroundings. We have a good Sunday school and a very good singing class. We expect to begin our protracted meeting here on the fifth Sunday in July. We hope to have a successful meeting, and my experience is for the church to do its part and a great revival will be the result.

Christian Chapel.

Here we have a good strong church, and the work goes on nicely. We have a good Sunday school, and a splendid singing class. Our music is good, led by our beloved brother S. A. Woodall. We expect to hold our protracted meeting beginning second Sunday in August.

New Hill.

Here we have a working little church. On the fourth Sunday in June we held our Children's Day. It was a good day for New Hill Church. It was a large gathering. We had some speeches and as sweet music as could be rendered. We expect to hold our meeting here fourth Sunday in August.

Pleasant Ridge.

Here we have a good Sunday school, and good singing. It seems that the members are in harmony with each other, and the work goes well. At my last appointment the spirit of harmony was manifested at a neighbor's home, where the people came to enjoy themselves socially, a meeting brought about by the Farmers' Union.

We expect to hold our meeting beginning on the third Sunday in August. Now I ask the prayers of all Christian people, that the Lord may save many souls in my field of labor this year.

A SURPRISE.

I was more than surprised when I read the editor's account of the Young People's Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference, wherein he said that said convention was asleep.

To those who have regularly attended these conventions it was the most wakeful and inspirational session ever held. I heard the editor once tell of his art of putting a whole convention to sleep under the soothing eloquence of his oratory, but if that is what the editor means when he says the Western North Carolina Young People's Convention was asleep, some of those who were present are of the opinion that this is one time when the Doctor's art failed him.

J. F. Morgan,

Chipley, Ga., Letter.

The District Meetings of the Alabama Conference have come to be very important. The one just held with the church at Rock Springs, I think, was the best we have had in several years. Every church in the conference was represented, except four; and the delegates came like they meant business. Really, those who have the interest of the church at heart look after that as they do their own business. All the ministers of the conference attended this meeting except Bro. Milam, and he was engaged in a revival with one of his churches in Georgia.

As the churches and delegates were being enrolled, a motion prevailed to enroll those of Dingler's Chapel. This is a new church which was organized by Rev. J. H. Hughes since Christmas.

By motion all the officers of last meeting were unanimously elected to their same position.

Under the discussion of the subject, "Should the Alabama Conference be districted?" by Rev. C. M. Dollar, a motion was carried and a committee appointed to district the conference and to report during the afternoon session. The Committee reported as follows: District No. 1. Churches, Macedonia, New Home, Dingler's Chapel, New Harmony, Flint Hill and Sardis. Ministers: Revs. J. W. Elder, J. H. Hughes, J. V. Knight and T. J. Edmonson.

District No. 2. Churches: Noon Day, Rock Stand, Rock Springs, Forest Home, Bethany, Mt. Zion and Corinth. Ministers: Revs. C. M. Dollar, T. H. Elder, J. D. Dollar and T. W. Gray.

District No. 3. Churches: New Hope, Pleasant Grove, Christiana, McGuire's Chapel, Beulah and Wadley. Ministers: Revs. C. W. Carter, G. D. Hunt, W. R. Knight, E. M. Carter, G. O. Lankford and J. H. Milam.

By motion each district was made a sovereign body to arrange and hold its own meetings. By so doing a district meeting will be held in reach of every church in the conference, from two to three times a year, and more good may be accomplished. It was decided that a meeting would be held in each district next fall as follows: Dis. No. 1. New Harmony; Dis. No. 2. Forest Home; Dis. No. 3. New Hope.

After the devotional exercises Sunday morning, as was provided by the program, a time was given for general discussion. The question was asked by the president: "What are the conditions of the several churches?" We learn from this discussion that the work is moving along reasonably well; and, in many of the churches the Sunday school work is on a "boom." New Harmony, under the pastoral charge of Rev. C. M. Dollar has greatly increased in membership. In two weeks' time there was an increase from sixty to one hundred and sixty-eight. That gives us an idea that by systematic efforts all our schools could be made better. E. M. Carter, Sec.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The Sixth District Interdenominational Sunday School Convention of Wake County was called to order by Mr. Murry of Catawba Springs, the president, Mr. George M. McCullers, being absent on account of illness.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Prof. Franklin of Merry Oaks.

The song service was splendid, led by Mr. L. B. Woodall, one of the best bass singers in that part of the country.

An address, "The Opportunity and Responsibility of the S. S. Superintendent of Today," was ably discussed by J. W. Bailey. Mr. Bailey made a few prefatory remarks on the significance of the Sunday school. He said the Sunday school is an old familiar thing. We have been brought up in it all our lives, and yet we have never taken time to consider it.

"We appreciate the new more than we do the familiar." In the criticism of the Sunday school it has been said that it was fit only for women and children. If it is fit for women and children it is fit for all the sons of men. The rise of woman shows the value of Sunday school; she was once the slave of the husband, now she reigns supreme. The Sunday school made the Bible to be known as the book of knowledge all over the civilized world. The author is pleased when he can bring a verse from that book into his manuscript; the statesman is glad when he can quote a verse to his audience; the lawyer is proud when he can quote the Bible to the judge and jurymen.

The work of the Sunday school is for the domain of knowledge, the truth that makes us free. The philosopher says, "Know thyself"; religion says, "Know thy God." The real practical object of the Sunday school is to make the world ready for the coming of the Messiah. The work of the Sunday school superintendent is to see that the teachers are fully competent, and if they are not to get them out in some tactful manner and put the proper ones in their places. It is his duty to see that the Sunday school goes out on the hedges and highways for the girls and boys that are waiting to be brought into the fold. The superintendent is to the Sunday school as the dynamo is to the electricity; as the general to the army.

The next thing on the program was the offering which was preceded by a few words from T. B. Elderege, county secretary. He asked that each Sunday School represented should pledge a certain amount a year for the convention or give them a special collection.

It was then announced that dinner would be served in the grove, of which there was an abundance, that was thoroughly enjoyed.

The first thing after dinner was the election of officers. Mr. George McCullers was re-elected president, with three vice presidents of different denominations. It was moved and carried that all the officers should constitute an executive committee.

After having some special music, there was an address, "The Teacher Training Class, Its Place and Power," by Rev. J. O. Atkinson.

Dr. Atkinson portrayed very strikingly the importance of the Sunday school. He said it is one of the greatest organizations, a divine institution, or it would have died long ago. The Sunday school has done so much for us, is it not our duty to give it better treatment? And the Teacher Training Course is to that end. If it is worth while to have a road overseer; if it is worth while to train soldiers for the army; if it is worth while to prepare teachers for the public schools; is it not worth while to prepare boys and girls to teach the truth eternal? To teachers,—Do not go to your class making excuse for not knowing the lesson, but resolve in your heart never to come to your class again without the lesson prepared. Apologies are not only out of order, but they are superfluous. Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "My life is not an apology, but a life."

The difference between people and things is that things stand still and people change, and in the change we have a chance to make progress. We are living in an age of progress and preparation, and unless we who love the Sunday school give our attention to a more thorough preparation it must stay at the same stand-still or dwindle away and die. God satisfies himself with making possibilities, but man must make the reality. God never made a railroad, but he filled the forest and mountains with wood and iron, so that it was possible for man to make one. So God has made the Sunday school teacher possible, but man must make him a reality.

The program was concluded with another address by Sam Britt on the opportunity of our young folks. But we failed to hear that as it was necessary that we should leave at that time.

On the whole the day was one of the most pleasant I ever spent and I am sure it was enjoyed by others also.

ON THE GO.

Holy Neck and Holland Churches gave me a month's vacation and each presented a check to aid in the expenses of a trip. One good brother gave me a nice new hat to wear, and another kindly cares for the faithful horse. To each and to every one I extend most grateful thanks. Truly my people are good to me and I greatly appreciate it and pray that they may be blessed and prospered in all good things.

Rev. A. M. Hanson and family, and Rev. J. W. Harrell and myself are in Washington seeing the sights. Bros. Hanson and Harrell are fine brethren, as every one knows, and most genial companions. In many good qualities the writer yields them the palm without question, but when it comes to tramping through unnumbered miles of aisles in museums and other public buildings, over a capitol building that covers four acres, and grounds of fifty-two acres, and through a zoological park of 150 acres, etc., they are simply not in his class. But I am expecting better things from them today, as they have slumbered (and are still at it) about three hours longer this morning than myself. This may be due not to yesterday's tramp, but force of habit. They are city gentlemen and noise has only a soporific effect. I am a countryman and can't stand the incessant clatter and roar on the stone pavement under my window.

We leave this p. m. for New York City, thence to Northfield, Mass., to the Christian Workers' Conference, where our good and wise editor and other brethren say there is more real help and inspiration for a minister than anywhere else in the country. We are expecting an intellectual and spiritual feast. If we hear of this being read we may write again.

Holy Neck.

The Darden-O'Berry Bible Class had special exercises Sunday, July 30. A history of the class was read by Mrs. E. S. Norfleet, secretary. Dr. J. E. Rawls, of Suffolk, Va., read a sketch of the life of Deacon William Darden, and Job G. Holland, of Holland, Va., read a sketch of the life of Deacon John O'Berry. Mr. C. W. Baines, of Newport News, Va., former general secretary of the State Sunday School Association, delivered a highly interesting and inspiring address on "The Mission of an Adult Bible Class." The house was crowded and all seemed pleased with the somewhat unusual program. Deacons Wm. Darden and John Oberry were two of Holy Neck's most devout and faithful pioneers in Sunday school and church work. The sketches of their lives were highly appreciated, especially by their many descendants present. This Bible class was organized September 21, 1710, with 29 charter members. It now has 103. E. T. Holland is president, Mrs. E. S. Norfleet, secretary, Mrs. J. W. Gatling, treasurer, and Mrs. B. J. Beale and N. G. Newman teachers. It has greatly increased the membership of the Sunday school and we believe has great possibilities before it.

MARRIED.

Carlton-Boyd.

Aug. 1st, 1911, at high noon, Mr. Luther E. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., led to the altar Miss Myrtle L. Boyd, of Ingram, Va., at the home of the bride's mother. She is a daughter of the late T. A. S. Boyd, and is one of the most attractive and popular young ladies of Halifax Co. The groom is one of the leading business young men of Richmond, Va. Mr. Edgar Carlton, of Richmond, Va., president of the Imperial Tobacco Co., brother of the groom, was best man, and Miss Sadie Boyd, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Miss Nannie Carlton, of Richmond, Va., sister of the groom, rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march, and the writer celebrated the rite of matrimony. The bride wore a beautiful gown of gray batiste with princess lace and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. Miss Sadie Boyd, maid of honor, wore embroidered batiste with princess lace and carried bride's maid roses. The groom and best man were attired in full evening suits. The parlor was tastily decorated with ferns and flowers. Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party and guests were served to nice refreshments and soon after left on the first train on their bridal tour. Mr. and Mrs. Carlton will be in Marion, S. C., for about two months.

May the good Lord bless them all through life. S. B. Klapp.

DIED.

Brother G. W. Ellington died at his home at 327 Gorrell St., Greensboro, N. C., May 27th, 1911, after an illness of a few months. He was about 57 years old. He is survived by his widow, two daughters, and one son. He had been a resident of Greensboro for twelve years. He was raised in Chatham Co., N. C., near Zion Christian Church, being one of its leading workers in his early life. He married Miss Maggie Klapp, sister of Revs. P. T. and S. B. Klapp. He has been all through life a true and faithful lover of the Christian Church and was an untiring worker in his church as long as he was able to work. He was a charter member of the first Greensboro Christian Church, and was one of its most consecrated and worthy members. He was fully resigned to the Lord's will, consecrating his life here, often expressing himself that he was ready to depart and be with the Lord; but was fully willing to await the Lord's time for the change. He said to this writer, he had no more fears of death than he would to make a visit to some pleasant house of a friend, for he knew that Jesus was his best friend, and he felt ready to go at his call. His life went out like unto the quiet burning out of a candle at the silent midnight hour. A good man has gone.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. L. E. Smith, his pastor, and the interment in Greene Hill Cemetery, Greensboro. May God bless the bereaved family, and ere long may they all meet again where sickness never comes, sorrow never intrudes, and death will never be again known.

Brady.

Flora Eveline Brady was born May 20, 1890 and died July 27, 1911. She was a daughter of A. K. and Mary A. Wilson. She married M. L. Brady Oct. 27, 1907, and to this union were born two children, both dying in infancy. She leaves a mother, four brothers, four sisters, a husband, a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her early departure. She professed faith in Christ about five years ago and united with the Baptist church at Ramseur. During her sickness she expressed her willingness to go and live with Jesus. Her devoted husband and large family are comforted in the glorious hope of meeting her in the happy home of the soul. The funeral was conducted by the writer in the Christian Church, and the body was buried in the near-by cemetery. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

My Dear Children:—

Our family has diminished considerably with six children away on visits, but yesterday was wheat threshing day and we had quite an increase for dinner. We, however, enjoyed the extra work, for where can you find a more deserving crowd of men and boys than those who work hard over a threshing machine? We made 195 bushels wheat and 132 bushels oats. This is not near what we should have made, but the dry weather has caused all crops to be less, and so we are thankful for this.

Miss Janie Pierce, Semora, N. C., has sent a very pretty dress for one of our girls, and we have news from Pennsylvania that a box of clothing is on the way. Thus we are remembered by our friends and are grateful.

Cordially yours,

Uncle Jim.

Franklinton, N. C., July 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Here I am back at Grandma's to stay until cold weather. Mama, Dada, and I came Thursday, June 29, but Dada had to return next day. I enjoyed the trip. The morning after my arrival I amused Grandma by lying down on the floor and saying, "Boke down, lie down rest, feet tired." I learned that the day before leaving Roxboro. On arriving they told me to call "ma" grandma, so I now call "Bill" Willie, grandma "ganma," and great grand ma "geatma." She is sick, and says she is glad she lived to see me again.

I have my old nurse Martha back again. I am glad ganma was well enough for me to come home.

While looking through Annie's waste basket, I picked up the paper lost off the end of a spool and said, "piece pool, mama."

I call myself "Wiyum Taey," and "Angel baby."

At the close of our ten days' visit here after Easter, we went to Suffolk on Saturday to see "Boppa." He met us at the train, so did Pon with a roly poly Indian woman for me. Easter she sent me by Boppa a big blue egg full of "ghieks," and "wabs" (rabbits).

My "feetheart, Mar West" and her mama and Aunties also met me at the train in their "mo" and gave me a ride. Then we went to the parsonage, where we saw Margaret Rawls and her little sister Annie May. I called Margaret "angel baby" like mama called me. She and Pon and I had a fine time after supper. The next A. M. I went to Sunday school, and church morning and night, and behaved nicely at all three services. We called at Mr. Rob Smith's after the night service. Monday night I attended the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union, entertained in the church basement by Mesdames Holland and Jones. I tasted the ice cream and called it break.

Tuesday I took dinner with my little "feetheart" and she piled all her play things around me and wanted to kiss me all day. I loved her, thought her lovely, and kissed her now and then, but was much interestd in our toy "mos," wheels, etc. When asked, "Do you love Wm. Staley?" "Mar" said very emphatically, "I do." That night I took supper with Ann Rawls, who is very cute and prettier than when I last saw her. The grown-ups were impolite enough to put Ann to bed before I left. She cried and cried and I called, "Baby back." They pacified me by telling me Susie Holland was "Sue's baby."

Wednesday was spent with Elizabeth Smith and Bop held us both at once. I enjoyed making "mu" (music) on her toy piano. That afternoon the "Book Club" met with Mrs. Will Jones, but I called it Emmie's because Emmie had taken me to ride in her mo and I thought everything there was Emmie's and that every mo was Emmie's.

I cut a stomach tooth tha t morning, and that night attended prayer meeting. I kept saying "Baby." It proved to be Susie Holland. We spent Thursday with "Yush," and Herbert took us to ride in his mo, but Emmie had the credit. Thursday night we took supper with Mr. and Mrs. Ballard and Pon, and Friday night with Mr. and Mrs. John King in their lovely new home. We went to Mrs. Kilby's. She had commented on the pretty dimples in my hand at prayer meeting, and I remembered it and touched them, saying "dimp."

Saturday we went to Norfolk to buy a pair of shoes, and I saw boats sailing on the big water. I rode on A. C. L. Ferry (my first boat ride). I described the trip to Bop by saying: "Nor" (folk). "boats," "wa" (ter), and waved my hands to represent sailing.

Sunday I went to Sunday school and morning service, but talked and fidgeted in church and had to be taken out and left in Boppa's study. We took dinner at Emmie's.

Every where I went I had to have a "bat," as I think so much of my "bat" (pallet) Ganma made me a year ago. I had mine at the parsonage.

Monday was too cold and rainy for me to go out, so Pon came to see me that night, and we had a frolic. Tuesday we took supper with my "feetheart."

Wednesday we made several calls and attended the Book Club at Mrs. Rob Smith's. I cut my other stomach tooth that day, and it was very warm, so I was taken sick in the night. The next day we returned to Roxboro, where Dada and friends were glad to see us.

I enclose a dime with much love.

Fondly,
 William Staley Cheatham.

We know this little fellow is enjoying the country, and we wish for him a happy time.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

You will find enclosed 40 cents, our dues for July and August. We have good rains at last, and everything is growing nicely. We hope you have good crops and we suppose you will be very busy in a few weeks pulling fodder.

With love from

Achie Newman,
Wallace Newman.

Not much rain with us children, yet, but a little has revived the crops, and we are hoping for more.

Dear Cousins:—

I will tell you about my chicken, "Dump." She is a large chicken now, and I think she has begun to lay. Miss Dora gave her to me last fall. She was real little then, and I had to keep her in the house, because she was so little. The hawk got her mother, so she is a little orphan chicken like us. She is real black. She is wild now, and will not eat out of my hand. I am thirteen years old. I am busy helping to make little folks' aprons and the boys' shirts for the winter. I like to sew, and we have to make a lot of clothes for our boys, for they are hard on them.

Very truly,
Mary Lou Mitchell.

THE MINISTRY OF THE SHINING LIFE.

BY REV. TIMOTHY P. FROST, D. D.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:16.

Let us approach this saying of Jesus by an Old Testament path. It is in the book of Daniel that we read: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." That the wise and those who turn many to righteousness are the only persons who shall thus shine is not affirmed. It is conceivable that some of the foolish, according to the accepted standards of this world, and some who fail to turn many to righteousness, will be partakers of this starry glory. The lminosity of the persons may not be a halo thrust upon them as a reward of soul-winning. It is not wholly, nor perhaps chiefly, because they turn many to righteousness that they shine. Rather do they turn many to righteousness because they shine. They shine as stars because they are stars; because they have light in themselves. Shining is by a law of their nature.

It is of the character. They are inevitably luminous. One of them might be some Robinson Crusoe, cast away on a lone island, without even a man Friday to whom he could talk religion, thus having no opportunity to turn anybody to righteousness. But he would shine forever for all that. Or, if not a castaway, shut out from human society, he might be like Noah, who was a preacher of righteousness among a people in sore need of righteousness, but who does not appear to have succeeded in turning many to righteousness.

TURNING PEOPLE TO RIGHTEOUSNESS is a thing which the shining life is likely to do. That is why I am preaching about it. It is an evangelistic force, and an unanswerable argument for Christianity. Precisely that truth shines forth from the text. According to these words of Jesus about Christians as the light of the world the shining life produces this result—that men, looking on it, glorify the Father in heaven. And the only thoroughgoing way of glorifying Him is by becoming like Him. No formal worship, no amount of gloria singing or gloryshouting will do it so long as men are persistently unlike Him. Jesus glorified the Father by being like Him, by doing the works of his Father among men. So it is by beholding somewhere the glory of the Lord, and becoming changed into the same image, from glory to glory, that we glorify Him.

There is no difficulty in understanding how the shining life is an evangelistic force. It helps other lives to shine, makes them want to shine, makes it easier for them to do it, shows them how they may. Of course there are persons who would not shine with heavenly light if they could. They choose darkness rather than light. But there are others, who, when they behold the shining life, are attracted to it, and desire to become connected with the power which makes it bright with the glory of the Lord.

Whatever shines, not only is different from things which do not shine, but also, is seen to be different. A simple and obvious fact, but worthy of attention. The arc light, for instance, which lights the street, is seen to be different from bricks, stones, and other objects which do not shine. Men who see its light know that it is connected with a plant which makes it shine. The laborer who "homeward plods his weary way" in the early evening of the short winter day may not know where the plant is, or understand how it works; the wonders of electrical learning may be a sealed book to him; but he knows that there is a light and power plant somewhere which makes this light shine. He knows that this thing, so bright that no man with eyes in his head can help seeing it, is dependent upon an unseen source for its glow.

So it is with the Christian who really is a light to the world. Men see that he has a life which differs from their life. They are convinced that its source is a power with which they are not connected as he is. They are also aware that it is the soul work in that life which tells. Not merely the works of the hands, or of the tongue, but the works of the soul. There is something throbbing at the power center of that life which makes it unlike other lives.

This brings us to a certain issue presented in the volume of testimony which we call the Bible. According to this testimony God is pledged to do certain things for persons who meet certain conditions. The testimony is gathered up from a variety of individuals whose lives are scattered along a period of more than a thousand years, and centers in God's Son, Jesus Christ. This Son of God pledges Himself to do a certain thing in those whose life is wholly given up to Him, namely, to transform them, to bring to pass a new creation in them, so that old things pass away and new things come, so that they are brought into the righteous and blessed life of sons and daughters of God. Furthermore, he declares that people with whom the transformed associate, and whose lives are not given up to Him, will know that the lives thus given up are thus transformed and do differ from lives not thus surrendered. They will know that there is a power and quality in those surrendered lives not found in other lives.

Now, does Jesus Christ so transform the lives given up to Him as to make it evident that they are not of the worldly sort, or does He not? That is the issue. We have no disposition to evade it. We could not if we would. The unbelieving world is too intelligent and too shrewd to be fooled at this point. If the Master cannot do this then Christianity is doomed. Something bearing the name, some noble system of ethics, some humane ministry, some religious philosophy or philosophy of religion, may persist for a time, but Christianity will perish and deserves to perish. It will have lasted its little day, and have done its work, partly beneficent, and then will go its way like other delusions. But, on the other hand, if the Master does make new every life wholly given up to Him, there is only one way in which Christianity can fail. Its failure can come only by the failure of men and women and children to yield themselves to Him for transformation. Especially disastrous would be the failure of any large number of those who bear His name to be given up to His transforming power. The time has come when the world will accept no other evidence of the truth and power of Christianity than the evidence of a transformed life. That evidence the world will accept, and must accept, if it be presented. If those who are not given up to Him see that others who are given up to Him are transformed according to the testimony of the book, they will believe the book, and some of them will seek that kind of life.

The people of the churches cannot save the world by proxy or by machinery. The experiment, wherever made, does not work out to a triumphant success. The world can be saved by no other means than by saved lives, and the people must furnish these lives in their own persons. They cannot accomplish their task by maintaining Sunday schools, hiring pastors, holding meetings, securing evangelists, and conducting evangelistic campaigns, supporting societies of several kinds for propagating the Gospel, engaging in various forms of social service, and promoting reform movements. That such activities are good and useful, and even necessary, there need be no question. But the one thing without which all of this is largely or wholly a failure too many of the people in the churches, it is to be feared, are not doing. If we would win men, we must give ourselves up to Christ without reservation. We must cease having our way in business, politics, pleasures, or any nook or corner of the life. Christ must have His way everywhere. The entire life must be handed over to God for that purpose. We must put into the world and keep in the world a life which is radically different from the worldly life. We must repudiate the worldly mood, temper, spirit, attitude, and methods. We must cease to go with the world and to be like it. We must become unlike the world and move

APART WITH GOD.

Because the Christian religion is not a philosophy, but a life. Of course there is a philosophy of the life. Men must have a philosophy of everything that interests them under the sun, or in the sun, or above the sun. But our religion does not depend upon our philosophy to any great extent. Rather does the philosophy depend upon the religion. As when you see an eagle in the air, if you are interested in eagles and in flying and you are a thinking person, you may get a philosophy of the eagle's flight. The flying is the source or at least the occasion of your philosophy, not the result of it. Your philosophy does not make the slightest difference with the flying, or exert the least influence upon it. It cannot change the flop of a wing or the movement of a feather. Neither is it probable that the eagle has any philosophy which affects his flight. So when a human soul mounts up with wings as an eagle, you may have a philosophy of that soul flight, but it flies without much aid from the philosophy, even though it be your own soul that flies. More than one philosophy of that soul's religion there may be. Probably there will be about as many philosophies as there are persons who do any real thinking about it. But the religion goes on its heavenly way in spite of all the philosophies. They change. As a vesture they may be folded up. The religion abides. They are of men. It is of God. Yes, the shining life, at heart, it is pretty nearly the same yesterday, today and forever.

The world is to be won by it, so far as the world is to be won to Christ, and without it the world cannot be won and held to the Christian faith. The saving of the world, so far as it is committed to us, is not chiefly a matter of movements and of methods, but of life. It is a matter of character made dynamic by the Spirit of God. I hope I shall not be misunderstood, and yet I must take some chances. "Necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is unto me," if I preach not this Gospel. The greatest need and the strongest hope of the kind of evangelization which promotes the kingdom of God with power is not foreign missionary effort, or home missionary effort, or city missionary effort, as usually understood and presented, or social service of the organized variety, or evangelistic campaigns, or the entire series of kindred movements. Of great use they are. Essential most of them, or all of them, may be. But with all these movements we shall go on at a poor, dying rate, without the power of a transformed life, wherever Christians perform their tasks or seek their pleasures. Something more is needed from us than to send missionaries abroad and promote elevating schemes at home. That something is to live a life aglow with the glory of God and His righteousness in every place and in every relation.

These shining lives vindicate the Bible, so far as it is to be vindicated by anything outside itself and its God. It cannot be vindicated alone, or chiefly, by books, arguments, and all the fruits of scholarship, useful as they are, and mighty as they are, in the life of any age. This is not to be understood as an utterance concerning the personal needs of the scholars themselves. How the Bible is to be vindicated in their thinking, I do not attempt to set forth. I refer to people outside the learned clan. Men to whom the Bible is a living book, which needs no vindication, may find the arguments of Christian scholars to be comforting to faith and useful in promoting many things for which the Bible stands; but people whose faith is shaken, and who wonder whether these Biblical writers wrote from God, or of themselves, are not likely to have their doubts settled by historical or philosophical arguments in behalf of the divine authority of the book, because on the other side are plentiful and scholarly arguments in support of its purely human character. Though they look into books which make it appear that the Bible is from God, they may forthwith look into other books and magazine articles which make it appear that the Bible is from men alone. But when they look into human lives, and behold the spiritual prophecies or the Hebrew seers, the words of Jesus and the words of the apostles fulfilled in those lives: when they behold the spiritual wonders of the Bible lived before their eyes, there they look upon an argument which cannot be refuted. Such fulfillment of prophecy will vindicate the book from the follies of its defenders and the attacks of all its foes.

These shining lives also

VINDICATE THE CHURCH.

Not that a church made up of them is necessarily a busy factory. It is more like a power plant to furnish energy for factories near and far. Many people think that a church should be organized and equipped for conducting a variety of educational, hygienic, recreative and philanthropic activities within its own boundaries. All proper and profitable, no doubt, if it can be managed without diverting attention from the chief work of the church. A live church is not first of all a hive of religious industry so much as an inspirer of religious industry in many lives. It is a source of energy for religious industry in the midst of all industries, an upper room where disciples sit with the Master, a place where the Holy Spirit comes upon them and moves them with pentecostal power. The chief work of the church is to light up lives with the glory of the Lord and make them potent with energy from Him. They gather in the church to receive light and power into the life, then go their ways, one to his farm and another to his merchandise, that, thus lighted and empowered, they may be lights in every dark or dusky place. The church should send them forth so aflame that they will go on setting others aflame until the whole world is ablaze with their kind of light. In this age of specialists the church of the living God will vindicate itself by specializing the promotion of the shining life.

This is the greatest manifestation of the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Through it the exalted Christ makes His appeal to men. There is no little lamentation over the scarcity of men in religious meetings. It is said that we must enlist personal workers to go out and accost men on the highways, and in the haunts where they work or play, and win them to Christ by direct appeal. Doubtless there is too little direct Christian appeal from a burning heart. Something may be accomplished by inviting men to Christ in one's own words and in quotations from a marked testament. But they will not be brought into the kingdom of God in large numbers by Christ in our talk of Christ in a book, even though that book be the Book of books. Forth from the churches should come people inspired for more effective work than evangelistic talking in missions and on the street corners. Such evangelism may yet be needed, but it is far from being the most fruitful mode of evangelism for our age. The churches should inspire their hosts to do evangelistic living, to practice the presence of God and the religion of Christ, in every detail of the daily life, and thus light up all the world's business and all its other affairs with the glory of Godlike righteousness.

If Christ were to come into the present world and live as he did in the ancient world, much the same things would come to pass which were witnessed when he used to walk in Judea and Galilee. He would win some and repel others, thus making a division among the people, as sheep from the goats. Some would be convinced of the divine power and quality in His life, and would seek the life offered by Him, willing to sacrifice their all to it. Others would be ready to crucify Him, and get Him out of their way.

Well, He went away that He might come again in the lives of His followers. If one Christ would win some people in one land, what would a few scores of Christ lives do in Congress and in State Legislatures? What would a few dozens do in the faculty, and a few hundreds in the student body, of a great university? What would a few hundred thousand of them do in the homes, the pleasure resorts, and the business affairs of our land? Evangelism in meetings is not working in these days so successfully as in some former days. We need more than we have of the ceaseless evangelism of the shining life out of meeting. And in this blessed ministry every Christian not only may be, but must be, his own evangelist.

Now, lest we be discouraged by reason of the dimness of our light, let us remember that not every Christian is born of God to sudden and overpowering luminosity. There can be no question of the power and desirability of the mighty passion of a burning heart. Those who have it are among the sons of the mighty. But, after all, it is, in considerable degree, a matter of temperament. To some of us the fervor of an Isaiah or a Paul is unattainable. Were it desirable, it would be impossible for the point. But the steady glow of honesty, kindness, generosity, and obedience to the heart always to be heated to the melting-will of God—that the world may see in every Christian. If one cannot be a volcano, one may be a glow-worm.

Moreover, though feeble at the beginning, this may be an increasing glow. It may begin as the dawn begins. As you watched for the morning there was a time when you knew that it had not come. Night was yet in full possession of the world. Then for a little while you were not quite certain whether the morning had begun or not. After that you knew that there was a light in the east streaming up from the sun far below the horizon. From that time the morning brightened into day. So the Christian life may begin and progress. At first people may not feel sure that they see in it anything divine. But after a little while, in the midst of much that is imperfect and far short of the moral and spiritual splendor of the full-orbed Christ, they behold a quality which can be accounted for only as coming in some way from the unseen Lord. Then, ever after that new creation begins to appear, the world should see, and by the grace of God may see, an increasing glow in that life. "The path of the righteous is as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Immediate perfection is not essential to spiritual power. People who are acquainted with God's ways in nature and in grace, will expect to wait many days for that which is in part to be done away and that which is perfect to come. But, as I have been reiterating at considerable length, the world does expect to see, and has a right to expect to see, something in the life given up to Christ not to be seen in the life not given up to Him. And if the feeble glow is continually growing brighter, and the life is constantly taking on the beauty of the Lord as the years go by, that increasing glow will be divinely winsome. Through that life the Christ will continue to draw some part of the human world to Himself.—Zion's Herald.

A NEW TESTAMENT PASTOR.

Take your last look at the preacher
Whose tears gave taste to his bread;
'Twas for others alone that he labored—
Himself uncomforted;
None knew how grand was the toiler
Until his brave spirit had fled.

The message he gave to his hearers
Was gained at the Cross and the Throne,
And it came to the hearts that received it
With a power entirely its own;
More helpful, more mighty and lasting
Than records of mortals have shown.

Other preachers, perhaps, were more throug-ed to,
Having charms which the worldly would please;
Received more honors and praises,
And lived in more comfort and ease;
But this man was more like the Master,
Nearer even the foremost of these.

EDITORIAL.

FOR HIS SAKE.

(Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my sake.—Matt. 5:11. Golden Text for Sunday, Aug. 20.)

It is not a blessing to be reviled, abused, persecuted. But it is a blessing to be reviled, abused, persecuted, falsely, for Christ's sake. There is a great difference between being persecuted, and being persecuted falsely. People sometimes indulge all sorts of freaks, follies and fancies, and possibly deserve persecution. There is no blessing pronounced in their behalf. They are not persecuted for Christ's sake: they are persecuted for their own folly's sake.

There are now, there have been in the past, there are likely to be in the future, many self-appointed martyrs. They are not martyrs to Christ, nor to truth; they are martyrs to their own silly, simple, sinful folly, nonsense, and idiosyncracies. There is no blessing pronounced in their behalf. They get their reward as the Pharisee got his: publicity and notoriety among their fellows.

Jeremiah the prophet was not a man of this type. He was a man who had delved into the deep mysteries of God, and was enamored of the truth. His great soul was bursting with the fullness and bigness of God's love. He was patriotic also. He loved his people, his nation, and wanted them saved from the terrible doom which he saw impending. His voice was raised against the wickedness in high places of his time. He was trying to save, not destroy; to make alive, not to kill; to build up, not to tear down. Jeremiah was persecuted, apprehended, thrown into a damp, dark, dreadful dungeon for no other crime than that of telling the simple truth.

This is the worst crime that can be committed in the sight of some—tell the simple, unvarnished truth about them.

But the king and the princes persecuted the wrong man. The false, flattering, fawning prophets should have been persecuted, thrown into prison, and the true prophet heeded. Then Judah might have been saved. It is a terrible day for a nation when its best men can be imprisoned for speaking the truth. When its best, most loyal, most patriotic citizen could be apprehended and thrown into prison to languish and suffer there for telling the truth, it was then indeed a bad day for Judah.

Every sufferer for truth's sake makes the world better.

Every deed in Christ's name hastens His coming again.

Every life lived out for Christ, whether in suffering, sorrow or cruelty, enriches the common life, and makes all right living brighter and more beautiful. The manner of Jeremiah's life makes our life richer, brighter, better even in this far-off day and time. A true, bold, brave life makes life seem more worth living, makes service and sacrifice and suffering seem more bearable.

THE DRAWING CHRIST.

It is the way of the world to drive. It is the way of the church to draw. The world may be cruel. The church must be kind. The world can be false. The church must be true. The world may push men down. The church must pull men up. The world may drive men out. The church must take men in. The world may destroy. The church must make alive. The world wants to see the church in turmoil, in strife, in upheaval. The church wants to see its own numbers at peace, in harmony, in brotherly love, and would have the world share its joy and blessedness.

If the church listens to the world there will be strife and variance forever more. If the world would listen to the church, there would soon prevail peace on earth and good will among men everywhere. Therefore the church must strive on in its work of preaching Christ and His power to save to the sons of men. He will yet draw, not drive, all men unto Him. He has been lifted up, and the power of the gospel is to make men look up, not down, forward, not backward, on high and not below.

A man who had been a drunkard and a tramp and an outcast for many years went to meeting one night in a mission on Water St., New York. He found Christ. When he left the house he lifted his eyes heavenward and for the first time in many years saw the stars. The drunkard does not look toward the skies. He looks toward the earth. The man in sin does not look up. He looks down. When a man's heart gets right he begins to gaze upwards.

This was why the Christ was lifted up. He desires to turn men's gaze from the earth heavenward. He will yet draw all men unto Him. It is the business of the church to pull all men whom it can reach upward; and to push none downwards. The church turns men's eyes toward the stars.

LOYAL CHRISTIANS.

No member of the Christian Church need love his own church less because he is friendly to, and willing to assist, other denominations when opportunity offers. What the Christian Church needs today is loyalty to its own. No one is called upon to neglect one's own in order to help another. I love all the people of God everywhere, and want to see them prosper in thier way and work. But I love those of my own church better because they are my own. I esteem, respect, admire, will encourage and help when I can, other families. But I love those of my own household first and foremost, and they shall have my first and best service. I shall prove my love and loyalty to others by being loyal and devoted to my own. The respect and care for others, are somehow, more thoroughly appreciated when respect and care for one's own come first. Nobody esteems highly the one who does not esteem one's own.

For a member of the Christian Church The Christian Sun should be the first and the best religious paper. Not that it must be the last and only one. If there is time and inclination, others may be taken and read with profit. But to neglect or make second one's own is to destroy the very source and foundation of what we are, or may become.

Other things being equal, fathers and mothers in the Christian Church who send their sons and daughters elsewhere than to Elon College didseredit their own church in the sight of others and necessarily alienate from their own the respect and loyalty of their children. For a young man, a young woman, to attend some other college than their own, provided their own measures up with the best and is convenient, and remain as loyal to their church as they would had they attended their own, is unthinkable. Parents in the Christian Church, numbers of them, are training their sons and daughters not to love and not to be loyal to their church in the future, by sending them to other colleges no whit better, nor more convenient, nor less expensive, than their own Elon. The real men and women of the Christian Church of the future are being trained at Elon, and it is worth somewhat indeed to have met and mingled in young manhood's days, and at school, with those who are to lead in church in the future. Not by alliteration only, but by experience, there is vital connection between life and loyalty. Our denominational life depends upon our denominational loyalty. Destroy loyalty and you destroy vigor, vitality, life.

Not of the paper, not of the college only. Your local church first, your Sunday school, your prayer meeting. Others afterwards. When one has been loving and loyal to one's own one can then carry a life and a love to others that will be worth something, and will be esteemed and appreciated by others. Nobody can respect properly a man who will not respect first of all his own. We shall give to others an interest and a care that will be more appreciated when we shall have given our own the deepest and truest love and loyalty of which we are capable.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Peace.

This year of grace, 1911, is likely to be memorable in the annals of time as that in which, more than any so far, most was done to abolish war and establish international peace. The United States and England, and the United States and France, have by and through their proper officials signed treaties of unlimited arbitration, and are in future to leave their differences, even differences of national honor, to the Hague, or to some Board or Boards of Arbitration. The New York American says: "On August 3, 1911, three of the world's strong nations, like three tall knights of the Holy Grail, joined their hands at Washington in pledges to aid and countenance one another in fighting down the dragons of war." The New York Mail thinks that the event marks "the dawn of a new era in the affairs of nations: it means that the two greatest republics together with the greatest empire of the world, have in these compacts dedicated themselves to the cause of international peace." The Times says that "the establishment of peace between all nations controlled by law is in sight."

The agitation by Christian people every where for peace is bearing fruit. The pleas and the prayers of those who hate the cruelty of war and long for universal peace are being heard at the highest Tribunal. All of which indicates that the prophecy of Isaiah is being rapidly fulfilled: "They shall beat their swords into plow shares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2:4.)

That Which is Better.

It does not make so much difference what a man engages in. The main question is, Will he do his work better? If he surpasses his fellows there is position open to him, and usefulness and occupation. Emerson, the sage of Concord, said: "If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door." Success means that one has done one's work better.

In our time of keen competition and close rivalry, no one can do one's work better unless there is thorough and persistent preparation. So many are in such a hurry, in our busy time, to get into some profession or occupation that they will not take time to prepare themselves to do their work better. One will live happier and accomplish far more by spending eight years in preparation and six years in service than to spend four years in preparation and forty years of service. If one would win out in our day one must prepare to do the better work. That for which there is demand, and that which brings the larger return, is the better work.

The world's most successful and eminent workers have been those who spent many years of patient and persistent preparation.

Progress.

Christopher Columbus, in 1492, the books tell us, did not sail out from the coasts of Spain to discover a new country or explore a new world. His mission was more modest. He wanted to show that he could go east by sailing west, and that he could reach India by a sunset course. In his attempts to prove that he could reach the east by sailing west, the great explorer incidentally ran up against this western hemisphere. In short America got in Columbus' path and he discovered it.

That man fired the world's brain with wild imaginations which have not yet been quenched. A man can start west from New York today and travel only by three steam ships and two railroad cars, belt the globe, and without further change land where he started from, coming from the east, or vice versa. One can now reach the east by sailing west, and do it quick and in comfort.

Taking Chances.

After all the canvassing, all the pleas, and all the pulls, not one in a hundred of our American youths go to College, or have done so. But this fraction that go and toil and prepare show the might and meaning of a college career. This scanty number, says Dean West, of Princeton, has provided fully 30 per cent. of our House of Representatives, 40 per cent. of our National Senate, nearly half our Cabinet officers, fully half of our Presidents, and practically all of our Supreme Court Judges. The young man with a college career increases his chances of success more than 250 per cent. So the young man who can go to college and doesn't flinch in the face of reason and accepts great odds against chances for usefulness and success.

—It is strange and wonderful in a country where land is abundant and labor is in demand and conditions are favorable that so many people crowd into New York. That city last year gained in population 233,524, and the Health Department of that city estimates the population now to be 5,000,407.

—Admiral Togo, the world distinguished warrior from Japan, deserves all the honors our countrymen are conferring upon him. Though called by a competent critic the "ablest strategist and tactician of our age," he is endowed with the "gracious gift of silence and of meditation." What he did for Russia's big fleet of warships was enough, but since that ever-memorable struggle the Admiral has plead, "Let us have peace."

—There is no more excuse for a frenzied mob burning a negro at the stake in Pennsylvania than there is in South Carolina or Georgia, and such an act of inhumanity is deplorable anywhere. It was at Coatesville, Pa., Aug. 14, and the victim was a wounded colored man who had killed a policeman. The mob dragged the poor fellow from the hospital out of town to a tree and there burned all that was mortal of the man. Great is the pity indeed that men will so forget themselves either in the North or in the South. Lynching is murder of the worst sort, and it is not to be condoned anywhere.

—"The hand that wrecks the cradle wrecks the nation."—Rentoul.

THE TRUE GREATNESS OF A COLLEGE.

What makes a College great? Is it its endowment mounting up into the millions? Is it its magnificent modern equipment in buildings, laboratories, libraries, representing the investment of other millions? Is it in the thousands of its students, in the power, prestige, and reputation of its Board of Trustees, in the scholarship and learning of its professors? No not primarily.

It is true beyond doubt or question that vast endowment, elegant equipment, influential trustees, scholarly professors, large enrollment of students are contributory causes to an institution's greatness; but it is equally true to all who think sanely that these are not its real greatness—that an institution may have all these and yet not be great. These are the fine clothes, so to speak, of a College—but fine clothes may cover a knave as well as a gentleman.

What, then, is the secret of the true greatness of a College? It is the character of its teachers—the moral and religious atmosphere they create and with which they surround their pupils and incarnate the buildings and other equipment of the institution in which they live, labor, and work. Character is the greatest force in the world in the individual man. A man of character is the noblest workmanship of God. Also is this true of nations and of the institutions by which men are equipped for the national life, among which institutions Colleges have taken and must ever take a high rank. The character of the professors in an institution of learning and culture, is, therefore, far more important than these other matters. Great teachers, great in character as well as in learning, lore, and scholarship—these are they which make a College great.

In this connection a great and distinguished College president has recently had this to say: "Let me say in this connection that men, who can teach undergraduates and inspire young men with aspirations and desire to overcome, are still worth more than modern equipments. Some of the best teaching in undergraduate Physics which I have ever seen was done on a less than fifty dollar appropriation by young men who succeeded in impressing their students with the fact that the man must be the master of his materials enough to make his own equipments up to a certain point. Do not let us, therefore, get the impression that the contemporary College is so much a matter of machinery as it is a place of teaching power, in which the individual instructor is, above all, the essential of the equipment."

Let no one understand that we are decrying modern equipment—for we are not. Colleges must have equipment and it must be modern and generous, but it is a hundred-fold more important that they have teachers, not only who are scholarly and learned, but also who are men of noble character and capable through their teaching of inspiring their pupils with a love for and an impulse to the same. This is the thing we have always striven for at Elon beyond all others. And while we are proud of our fine buildings and their modern equipment, we are prouder still of the reputation the College enjoys, of having a faculty strong and Christian in character and capable of inspiring the students in the same direction. It is this that gives Elon its subtle power, that makes its present secure, that renders its future hopeful and full of promise.

REVIVAL PRINCIPLES AND METHODS.

BY A PASTOR.

The following-up campaign after the revival is of great importance, but this is the point where the Church makes her worst failures. The new converts are in need of special aid. They must be led to form new social relationships. They should enter social circles that are predominantly religious, for religious growth is possible only in social contact. Hence the necessity for churches and other religious organizations. So it is needful that every Christian join some church; for if he fails to become a vital factor in some religious group, his spiritual death is assured. Not all of his old ties are to be broken, but only those that lead wholly toward evil. All his ties of kinship and many of his friendships should remain intact; but saloons, gambling dens, and all other evil places should see his face no more. The good results of many revivals are often terribly reduced through the failure of the church to provide for the new social needs of its converts.

Revival work among children is fundamentally the same as among adults in that it seeks to move the child's will to self-decision. But the method of procedure should perhaps be somewhat different, for two reasons: (1) The child's imperfectly developed will is more susceptible to hypnotic suggestion than the matured will of the adult. The child is far more easily influenced, hence we should be careful to see to it that every religious step the child takes is really a moral act. I mean by "moral" here "self-decisive." The act of some young children in joining the church is immoral in that they do it impulsively, without the deliberate action of the will in response to strong moral motives. (2) The child's mental powers are in a rudimentary stage of growth. It is therefore in need of education in ethical ideals and in the exercise of its will power. But this fact is one of tremendous significance; for a child is naturally teachable, its voluntary sins are few, and self-decision is far easier than when the adult is enchain- ed with the evil habits of years.

Statistics show that fully nine-tenths of all Christians are converted before they are twenty-one. Some conversions take place between four and twelve years of age, but by far the greater number occur between twelve and sixteen. Adolescence is a most critical time in the spiritual development of every human life. This does not mean that no religious training should be given until adolescence. In fact, the religious education of the child should begin in infancy, and its culmination in conversion should be the logical outcome at or before adolescence. Proper training will so culminate in nearly every instance, and that without any violence to the youthful will. The four principal factors affecting the religious growth of the child are the home, the Sabbath school, the public school, and the street. The school and the street include the play life of the child; and play has a far greater place in character development than most of us dream. If the home and the Sabbath school were always in perfect harmony, each working to its full efficiency with each child, then practically every one would be converted and take his proper place in Christian society. If such ideal conditions actually prevailed, perhaps the periodic revival would be unnecessary. But, as a matter of fact, most children are brought into the Christian life through these revivals. However, it is only so because of the defective home or Sunday school training or both. Only three out of every five Sunday school scholars ever join the Church. This loss is traceable not so much to the Sunday school as to the home.

The child who is rightly instructed and properly environed will need only to publicly confirm his decision by joining the Church. But our conditions are so far from being ideal that our modern revival is needed, even in reaching the children. Still our homes and Sunday schools ought to be winning children to Christ all the year round, as is illustrated in a story told by one of the leading Sunday school workers in England: It was in a little village in Northumberland. The teacher had talked most earnestly to his class of boys that Sabbath afternoon about becoming Christians. All of them listened respectfully and intently. One of the boys was Charlie. A fortnight later Charlie's little brother was being put to bed by his mother. He looked up at his mother and said: "Mama, what's come o'er our Charlie?" "I don't know, son. What makes you ask?" was the reply. "Why, mama, he doesn't fuss and fight me any more, and now he always gives me the biggest half of the apple and the largest piece of pie." That evening the mother asked her husband about it, telling him what Charlie's little brother had said. Both had noticed a change in Charlie. Willy could not account for it. So Charlie was summoned to answer for himself. When told of his little brother's question and their own observations, Charlie confessed Christ with his lips in the sacred environment of his own home to those who should be the first to know it. He said: "The other Sunday the teacher talked to us about being Christians. I didn't say anything, but I said to myself that I was going to be a Christian. I didn't tell anybody about it for fear I couldn't hold out. And I thought if I succeeded, others would find it out soon enough." Sure enough, they had found it out.

Surely God's call is to every Christian for intelligent and faithful effort in winning souls for Christ. Let the beautiful language of the hymn writer be our daily prayer:

Give me a faithful heart,
Likeness to thee,
That each departing day
Henceforth may see
Some work of love begun,
Some deed of kindness done,
Some wanderer sought and won,
Something for thee.

THE SNARE AND DELUSION OF THE DAY.

The doctrine of the Fatherhood of God, revealed by Jesus Christ at a cost which the finite mind cannot estimate, has received in these latter days an emphasis which perhaps has never before been paralleled since apostolic days. With what result? Sin has lost its blackness through the application of whitewash, and penalty has lost its meaning for the popular mind. It would seem that the revelation of God as a Father through a crucified Christ has emboldened men and women to revel more unreservedly in the sin from which Christ died to save them. The flippant assertions on the part of so many, especially the young, that sin is not so bad, after all, and that hell is a fiction, are invariably connected with a reference to the fact that God, if there really is one, is a Father, and is too good to punish. The universal law of cause and effect is recognized in every place save where a sinning soul stands in the presence of an offended God.

Wise and forcible are the following words taken from The Advance: "One difference between the old and the new views about hell is that the new view is more benevolent to the bad, and the old was more benevolent to the good. The new view makes it safer to sin; the old view made it safer to do right. The old doctrine threw its fuel into the flame before sin; the new complaisance adds fuel to the fires of passion."

Nearer the beginning of the editorial from which the foregoing extract was taken are these words, which are eternally true: "We may scoff at the doctrine of a hell, but at the same time we know that it will not do to put out the fire against sin. Yea, more. We know that we cannot put it out. We may call it old or we may call it new; it will still be here. If it is not on one side of us, it will be on the other. Persuade men that there is no hell in another world, and they will immediately proceed to make a hell of this world."

Yes, the "white lily" of God's love blooms as never before in the gardens of doctrine; while the rank, noxious flowers of passion nod on every highway and every byway of practical human experience. The thunders of Sinai are hushed into the lull which falls on hearts which defy God and then smother him, if possible, with praise of his meek, forgetful, impassive, loving spirit; and all this where the sword still hangs suspended, as ready and as sure to fall on all disobedience as is Divine Love to smile on all obedience. We can appropriately close these remarks by quoting again from the Advance: "The snare and delusion of our day is that the man who preaches down penalty is the merciful man [with many the progressive man]. The only merciful preacher is the man who preaches up salvation."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

HOW TO LIVE.

"How to die" is not half so religious a question as "How to live." The man who lives with a clear conscience will die happily and without fear. The problem of life is living, not dying. Life is the most natural gift of the Creator, for He gave man life by breathing into him the breath of life. He wants us to live long and live well. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Life is strengthened and prolonged by normal, natural means. Artificiality weakens and destroys life. A few months ago the earth was dead to all appearance, frozen to death by a long winter, numbed by the cold frosts. Every leaf was gone, the skeleton trees were ice-clad and brittle. The hills and fields were buried beneath the snow. But suddenly they lived again. Spring, with her glory and fragrance, was with us. The crocus and jonquil, the hepatica and arbutus, the violet and tulip were here. The trees budded and blossomed. The robins began to sing in the morning. All this is natural.

Why not learn "how to live" from God's good world around us? In other words, get out into the air, even if we have to be out before breakfast in order to do it. Fill your lungs with oxygen. Take vigorous exercise in the open air. Take time to walk home instead of lazily hanging on a strap all the way up the hill, or breathing the condensed second-hand air of sixty passengers, mixed with tobacco smoke from the rear platform. Swing your arms when you walk and get up motion. Don't move slowly along as if you had locomotor ataxia, and then try to tell yourself that you are tired and have spring fever. Raise up the shades and let the sun into your office. If it hurts your eyes turn your back on it and have the sunlight for a background. Buy a bunch of violets or arbutus for your wife on your way home. The man who spends more money for cigars than he does for confectionary for his wife and flowers for his home doesn't deserve either. Instead of thinking how other men ought to live, demonstrate your theories by personal experiment. Let sunshine, sleep, fresh air, exercise and a happy frame of mind transform your pale, sleepy, round-shouldered, tired, worried existence into a life worth living, and the summer and fall of 1911 will go down in your life's history as the best one on record.—John Timothy Stone, in New York Observer.

STRENGTH IN WEAKNESS.

To little strength there is always an open door. Opportunity is not reserved for the mighty. Those who realize that they are weak gain power by the consecration of the little strength which they have. "The lame take the prey." "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." If we keep Christ's word, our conscious weakness will result in great fruitfulness. In union with his will our weakness becomes unmeasurable power. The most fruitful financial endowment that philanthropy has ever received is the poor widow's two mites. All her living was an insignificant amount to the offerings of those who gave of their abundance; but never did the largest offering of those who gave only a part, though it were millions, bear so much fruit. The open door before little strength is that of unlimited influence. —Northwestern Christian Advocate.

—Dr. J. H. Jowett says that the most pleasing memory of the coronation which he carried away with him is that of the King and Queen taking off their crowns before their approach to the sacramental table. It was weak, uncrowned humanity paying homage to the King of kings.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. J. F. Morgan, under date of Aug. 10th, writes "We are having a great meeting at Big Oak church (Randolph Co.) N. C. There have already been about forty professions. The meeting continues with growing interest."

—May the good Lord graciously deliver us of the South from the iniquity about which Rev. W. D. Harward writes in another column, which iniquity is practiced in his town of Madrid, Iowa—Sunday base-ball. We never have been able to see the first excuse for this desecration.

—We were glad to see the fine face of our genial President W. A. Harper, looking out in courageous fashion from the pages of the Richmond Times-Dispatch last Sunday. That paper, we note with pardonable pride, gave a nice editorial sketch of Elon College, recording it in its directory "among the leading colleges of Virginia and North Carolina."

—If you wish a bird's-eye view of Elon College send to Prof. Harper for a copy of Bulletin, Vol. VII, No. I.—Illustrated Number. It is bound in the college colors, maroon and old gold, and stamped with the college seal. It contains beautiful views taken from in and about the College. It is highly creditable, and is a fine souvenir of the College. It is for free distribution, on request, while it lasts.

—Dr. P. H. Fleming's going from the South is generally deplored among our brotherhood. We heard one good man a hundred miles away say "He could cry right good over it if it would do any good." Another said it made him sick to hear of it and think about it. Bro. Fleming is much beloved, and his brethren of the South hope his Ohio stay will be agreeable, but exceedingly brief.

—By invitation the Sun's editor is to preach at the eleven o'clock service at our Durham Church next Sunday, Aug. 20. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Underwood Butler, the noted evangelistic singers, are to be present and sing several selections at the same service. Pastor Cox is expecting to receive quite a large number of members into church fellowship on that day.

—Rev. L. E. Smith was with the church at Virgilina, Va., last week in a happy and wholesome revival. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Newman, was taken ill in the early stages of the meeting and had to leave. The attendance at the meetings was enormous, and great good was done. There were thirty or more conversions. Seventeen joined the church. It was a week of refreshing, and of joy, with the people of Union. Bro. Smith enjoyed the work.

—Mr. S. M. Atkinson, who has done such faithful and efficient work for The Sun this summer, is this week attending the Virginia Valley Central Conference, and for a week or so will visit the churches and people of the Valley in behalf of The Sun. We trust that the Sun readers will aid him in greatly increasing our list in that good section. We need more Sun subscribers and Sun readers in the Valley. Such a consummation would greatly facilitate our work there and give it impetus and inspiration.

—"The Christian Sun classes Rev. L. I. Cox as one of the most resourceful and successful pastors in the Church. That is a tribute of which any of us might feel honored. To be a good pastor is a great gift, but if The Sun talks that way often and as loud as that, he may lose Bro. Cox from the work in the South, for there are many churches who are looking for just that sort of a pastor."

Steady there, and very slow, Dr. Barrett. We need every preacher in the South that we have got, and some more. If this migration goes any further we shall apply for an injunction.

—Thus Col. Wade Harris of the Charlotte Evening Chronicle:

"Brother J. Pressley Barrett, editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, published at Dayton, Ohio, is, we believe, a Wake Forest man. At any rate, he is a chum of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, editor of The Christian Sun, and is the head of one of the best church papers in the country."

That is the finest compliment we have had in a while. Dr. Barrett, our preceptor, our distinguished persona grata, our honored father in Israel, classed as our "chum." Thanks, beloved Colonel. We tip to you. But what will Dr. Barrett say?

—We have a welcome letter from our distinguished friend, Dr. D. A. Long, President of Union Christian College, written in his own hand and so far as we can make it out it is highly interesting, and reads somewhat as follows: "Merom, Ind., Aug. 11th. The work goes on nicely for U. C. College. The long spell of hot, dry weather cut the corn, hay and other crops short to such an extent that prices will be higher than usual for the year to come.

"I go to Olney, Ill., tomorrow, to assist Rev. E. D. Hammond in the dedication of a new church."

Dr. Long has a way of always saying something when he writes, and we wish he would write oftener. If he will do so we want to join other correspondents in helping him buy a typewriter. We call on Rev. Chas. E. Newman of Henderson to assist.

—The esteemed Charlotte Chronicle certainly did mislead us by one of its headlines last week. This: "Elimination of the Poles." We were sure this was a fine write-up of some wholesome and happy theory whereby the North and South Poles could be abolished, so as to have no more heart-crushing Cook and Peary controversies, when lo and behold, it turns out to be a discourse on taking down certain telegraph poles in the town of Charlotte, N. C. Why will even good and reliable newspapers like The Chronicle persist in misleading the people with erratic headlines? Newspaper articles should be headed like the Hebrews used to name their children; let the name mean and signify what the character is.

—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, of the M. E. Church, South, who died at Monteagle, Tenn., Aug. 5, at the age of 82, was one of the most beloved and esteemed ministers in the South. He was indeed in his later life "a serene and benignant apostle of the spiritual life."

—The editor enjoyed a great privilege last week. He preached twice a day all week, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler lead the song service, themselves doing much of the singing, at Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax Co., Va. This is one of our very best, strongest, and most largely attended country churches, and the people are loyal, generous, and wide awake. Great audiences greeted us every day. The people were more than pleased, they were delighted and greatly edified with the sweet and wholesome gospel song. The Butlers never made more and truer friends in a week, and surely never worked with greater acceptance. The spiritual life of the church was certainly deepened, and the church life was greatly strengthened, by their faithful and efficient and consecrated services. We have no idea how many professions of faith and reconsecrations there were. On the closing day twenty-six (we believe it was) united with the church, and many others should do so. The Butlers this week are singing for Ingram church, ten miles away from Pleasant Grove.

—Our Newport News, Va., church has extended to Rev. W. D. Harward a call to become its pastor the coming Conference year, and he has accepted. Of this Bro. Harward writes under date of Aug. 10th:

The church at Newport News has extended me a call and I have decided to accept the work. I trust that it is of the Lord that this decision has been reached. We have gotten along nicely with our church here, and the church extended me a unanimous call to serve them for another year, but the temptation was so strong in favor of the Southland that we somehow could not get the consent of our mind not to yield."

Since Bro. Butler, the present beloved pastor, had decided not to remain, we feel that Newport News has acted wisely and well, and is fortunate indeed in securing the able and efficient services of Bro. Harward. We have only one thing against Bro. Harward. He writes it "Southland." How come "Southland"? We do not hear of any Eastland, Westland, Northland. Do spare us, brethren. Just the dear, good, unvarnished old South is good enough. Additions or subtractions are sentimentally superfluous.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Dr. Atkinson reminds me, in last week's Sun, that the readers have not granted Suffolk Letter any vacation, but that Suffolk Church had granted me the month of August. That church has been noted for the fifty years of its history for kindness to its pastors. It has had only four: W. B. Wellons, D. D.; Jesse T. Whitley, D. D.; Wm. T. Walker; and the present incumbent now on vacation.

It may seem a small matter to preach twice each Sunday, conduct Wednesday night prayer meetings, do pastoral visiting, attend funerals, marriages, and Sunday school; but the congregation is on the pastor's heart somewhat as a family, and all their failures, afflictions, sorrows, and bereavements become his. This "care of the churches" is the most grinding, wearing, exhausting part of a pastor's duties. This continuous strain makes him enjoy vacation whether he deserves it or not. I am enjoying mine on the farm in the country; though I presume farms are all in the country.

I regretted very much my absence from Suffolk yesterday, when our Sunday school went by steamer on excursion to Ocean View. I hope they had a good crowd and a good day for all. The school goes free, that is the members of the school.

Well, to return to my vacation. I have been doing sundry things like mowing grass, grassing cabbage, getting corn, tomatoes, peas, etc., for dinner, and shelling peas and butter beans, drawing water with the "old oaken bucket," and enjoying canteloupes, water melons and grapes. Of course, where there are five women they will think of a few other things to do while you are resting; though my "female women," as Samantha would say, are very considerate of my feelings and my claim that I need rest. They think that I work very hard through the year, though I really have the easiest time of any member of the family. I think women have the hard end of life's duties, and I cannot blame them much for wanting to vote and dress different. I would hate very much to have to care for long hair, hat pins and little pins, straps and bands and ribbons, and cook and iron through August. Think of making up beds twelve months of the year. No vacation here.

Well, I had an old experience last Sunday. I had worn old clothes all week and physical service with temperature in the nineties had rendered both a necessity. I took an extra one Saturday night. It was a thorough country bath. When I put on my Sunday clothes I felt dressed up. The clothes were the same I usually wear, but the change gave me the feeling I had when a boy. It is good to go to the country, wear old clothes, work till wet with perspiration, then bathe and put on Sunday clothes. When one goes dressed up all the time he misses that glorious feeling of having on Sunday clothes. It is very much that way with religion, when religion runs down and experience gets soiled by the world and we come into a revival and get a spiritual bath and put on Sunday resolutions it is like putting on Sunday clothes. That is the reason some people enjoy religion so much at intervals. When one keeps keyed up religiously the year round, and receives daily spiritual ablutions, he does not feel so keenly the spiritual joy; but when, as people used to do in the country, meetings come at long intervals and there were no Sunday schools, they came together in protracted meeting it was like putting on Sunday clothes. That Sunday clothes feeling is a good feeling, and I am sorry for those who have never experienced it.

Rev. W. G. Clements has been conducting a good meeting at Oak Level this week. He has been assisted by Rev. L. L. Hudson, a Baptist minister, who has rendered acceptable service. I preached last Sunday morning and have remained at home since so the well members of our family could attend. The weather has been favorable, the attendance has been good, and there had been ten professions up to Thursday evening.

Brothers Wellons and Clements spent Sunday night with us, and we felt like preachers had been to see us. I know of nothing quite so good as a preacher's visit in a country home. It brings a new sense of religious obligation, importance, and hope.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Long touches a great subject in a sensible way this week, and it would surprise country churches themselves if they would put his suggestion into practice. Holy Neck and Holland in Eastern Va. have united, built a parsonage, and pay their pastor, Rev. N. G. Newman, $1000 and parsonage and feel proud of it.

TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

The Lord my shepherd is,
My wants He will supply;
For He is mine, and I am His,
My shepherd ever nigh.
In pastures green He leadeth me,
Beside those waters still;
In paths of peace He still will be My guide through every ill.

The Lord my shepherd is,
My soul He will restore;
And in the paths of righteousness
I'll walk forever more.
Yea, though I walk through valley drear,
No evil will I fear;
His rod and staff they comfort me,
My shepherd still is near.

The Lord my shepherd is,
A feast He will prepare
In midst of all my enemies
For me with tenderest care;
My cup o'erflows with happiness,
His goodness I can see;
His love and mercy will provide
All coming days for me.

The Lord my shepherd is,
Oh, sweet these words to me,
That thou, dear Lord, will be my guide,
E'en through eternity;
That in Thy courts I may abide,
With Thee, my Lord, I'll be,
Through endless ages I may dwell
With those I love, and Thee.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD.

For the evangelization of the world, the church must return to the apostolic faith and doctrine as revealed in the Bible; and ministers of the gospel must cease to quote doctors of divinity with more familiarity than the Scriptures. We must return to the simplicity of the early church, with its entire lack of facilities for carnally minded men to seize on its revenues; so that the money spent in steeples or communion sets can be spent in sending the gospel. We must teach Bible truth with so much emphasis that sinners recognize the message as from God, and not from a sonorous orator, depending for his effect on his wit, his white vest and his rhetoric. Christendom must be Christianized before China will be converted. The denominations at home must learn to depend less on organization, on machinery, on conventions, on "societies" for this and that, and more on the gospel.

IS YOUR CLASS ORGANIZED?

This article is intended for superintendents of Sunday schools, officers, teachers and pupils, who are interested in making their school or class more effective.

Experience has shown that the organized class is the most effective class, not only as it effects its members, but also with regard to its relation to the school, the church and the community. Organized classes are not recommended for the primary department and are probably not best for the intermediate. But with the boys and girls who have reached their "teens" and with men and women, the class that is organized is the more effective.

There are many reasons why this is true. When work is assigned to all of a class, it is not done, for the reason that "What is everybody's business is nobody's business." But when a certain person must look after the sick, another must invite a certain prospective member, and another is to plan for a social gathering of the class, each will do his work in order to have a good report.

The name is immaterial, provided the class is organized with the usual officers and committees, holds live business meetings, plans things and accomplishes definite work.

The organization of such a class is no great task; the method is simple,—the hard work comes after the class is organized. Simply call your class together, present the idea of organization to them. Elect officers, and then let the president select committees according to the talents and inclinations of the members. The information as to what officers and committees are needed can be obtained from Mr. J. Van Carter, secretary, Raleigh, N. C., or from any of the secretaries of our own conference young people's conventions.

Brethren and Sunday school workers, let's organize our classes and get in line with the progressive movements in Sunday school work. When your class is organized report it to your conference secretary and to the editor of this department.

An interesting gathering of young people was that at Shallow Ford Christian church Saturday night, August 5, when Brother J. S. Truitt, field secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, spoke on the topic, "Why You Should Belong to an Organized Class." Mr. Truitt went at the invitation of the live Baraca Class of the church, which has for its leader Mr. Carr Geringer, an interested and consecrated worker. There are fifteen members of the class. The meeting was a most pleasant one and was well attended. After the meeting refreshments were served. This church will no doubt have other organized classes soon.

NOTES ON C. E. LESSON.

Get down your geography or atlas and locate Turkey and Persia on the map. Note that the two countries are adjoining and that Persia connects Turkey and India. These countries lie in the center of the world's mission field. Take your history and find out something about these countries and their people.

In both countries Mohammedanism is the dominant religion. If you are not familiar with tenets of this faith you should learn something about it. See how much like and yet how wholly unlike the Christian religion it is.

The rulers of both countries have recently been forced to abdicate, and more liberal governments have been instituted without war or bloodshed. The younger men in the two countries are responsible for the political changes; they have demanded and have obtained constitutional governments, more liberal rule, and more progressive administrations. This has opened up for the missionaries fields that are ripe unto the harvest, and the work, already begun, can be carried forward without fear or restraint from the political authorities.

Both nations are rich in history and in legend. The charm of the Orient is shared by them. The social life is not as bad as it has been pictured. Under the new regime conditions will continue to improve. If the United States and England will send missionaries enough to preach the gospel great things will be accomplished in the two countries in the present generation. The younger generation is convinced of the faults in their social, political and religious thought and life and are open to conviction and salvation.

The area of Turkey is 1,579,982 square miles; its population is 40,440,957. The area of Persia is 628,000 square miles; its population, 7,653,000. Compared with the United States, the two countries are considerably more than half as large and have more than half as many people.

For centuries the governments have been despotic, the taxes have been burdensome, and public education almost unknown. The mission schools are doing a great work, and under the new governments more educational advantages will be offered.

Newspapers are springing up. The freedom of the press is a recent thing, but as said in our constitution, "it is one of the great bulwarks of freedom," and a free press will work wonders among the people.

Polygamy exists to some extent, but this has been exaggerated. There are some who have more than one wife, but the number is comparatively few. The poor cannot afford it and those in better circumstances will not undertake it, for the reason that what is purchased for one wife must be bought for all.

The Christian religion has played a large part in bringing about recent reforms and will continue to do so. What has been accomplished in a political way must be repeated in a social and religious way. Several more revolutions, without fight or loss of blood, must be brought to pass—and will be. Not all the political questions are solved. The matters of adjusting themselves to the new forms of government is not the work of a day, as the history of America so clearly shows.

The missionaries have paved the way for progress in both these lands of oppression. They were not in the political field, either, only educating these people by quietly bringing to them the new light, the Gospel of Christ. The transformation of governments into constitutional monarchies is working its way into the very being of benighted people. The spirit of justice is growing, and Christianity now has a golden opportunity in both Persia and Turkey.

"Before the revolution Christian Endeavor was under the ban." Societies were not allowed the pledge, nor could members wear the badge. C. E. Unions and conventions were not permitted; in Turkey, however, Christian Endeavor was more favorably received. The Endeavorers were a brave class of young people. We are told that the Armenian Endeavorers remained true to their faith during the terrible massacres. Indeed these young people teach us beautiful lessons in heroism.

When the shah of Persia proclaimed the constitution, forty newspapers sprang into life. When the constitution was refused, the newspapers were suppressed; then after the old shah was deposed newspapers began to appear again. Despotism and popular education will not thrive in the same land at the same time. Increased attendance in the mission schools comes with the new regime; even the Moslems are being reached, and some of high rank.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.

Whatever a grown man is he has to become. If he is a sinner, he has become a sinner; if a Christian, he has become a Christian. "Sin is a transgression of law." "Where there is no law there is no transgression." But law, to be a rule of action, must be known and recognized as such. It is, however, a universal fact that all men fall into sin as soon as they reach the point in life where they become responsible for their conduct. Responsibility for a moral choice is the first element of moral character; the commencement of moral life. At this point every child is sure to err. The reason for this is made known to us in Rom. 11:32, "God hath shut up all unto disobedience, that He might have mercy upon all." This is the point at which disobedience commences. Now our question is, How shall a sinner,—any sinner, every sinner,—become a Christian. The person to whom we should look for the true answer to this question is He to whom the saving of sinners is entrusted. "His answer, complete in every particular, is found in the gospel according to Luke, the fifteenth chapter. Read verses 12—24. This passage is called "The parable of the Prodigal Son." We notice the following points:

1. This prodigal son "took his journey into a far country." Note, he was at home, and voluntarily left his father's house, his native home, and went into a far country. "Far from God by wicked works." "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God; and your sins have hid His face from you."

2. He began to be in want." Every sinner who would be saved will first realize the insufficiency of the world to satisfy the deep longing of the soul for God and the blessings that are found only in the Father's house. They often resort to worldly pleasures and other worldly sources for the satisfaction for which they long, but fail to find it. The "husks that the swine" do eat cannot satisfy the soul that is conscious of the possibility of higher aims and a nobler destiny.

3. "He came to himself." Oh the deep meaning of these words! He had been beside himself. He had been deluded by the vain, glittering show of worldly pleasures and profits, and the promises of the devil; and had "called evil good and good evil; put darkness for light and light for darkness; put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter. What a delusion! This is the moment when the Holy Spirit impresses the soul with the fact of its sinfulness. It is known as "conviction of sin." The soul not only "begins to be in want," but realizes that its want means starvation unto death. It not only is "far from God by wicked works," but it realizes the fact and that absolute and eternal despair must be the inevitable consequence, unless some way of escape may be found. How natural that the thought of the hopeless soul should, in such a moment, turn instinctively to the Father's home, and that he should say, "How many hired servants of my Father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish here with hunger." And to this skeleton account of this experience we may add, right here, the helpful voice of the preacher of the gospel saying, "Turn ye, for why will ye die." "He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." "Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation." Moved and encouraged by these promises he says,

4. "I will arise and go to my Father"; and suiting the action to the purpose, he goes to the Father; or to the Savior, who also "has power on earth to forgive sin."

5. "And will say unto Him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight: I am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants." Here is both repentance, which is a change of mind; a change of purpose, and humble confession; also a pledge of service for the future. Just the attitude of the soul necessary to salvation.

6. Here we find the first actual exercise of "saving faith". The penitent soul believes that this act of confession and promise of devoted service will meet the conditions of pardon, according to the gospel as Jesus has commanded us to preach it. See quotations above.

7. Up to this point the executive acts (except the moving of the Holy Spirit, of which no mention is made here) have been on the part of the sinner. Now the Father does His part. He is the Head of the family—the King in the kingdom. The pardon of the sinner, and his restoration to the privileges, the benefits, the joys of a child, a citizen, are vested exclusively in Him. He pardons; He accepts; He welcomes; He embraces; He leads in the joyful festivities of the household that welcome the "Son that was lost and is found; that was dead and is alive." Thus it is that "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." At this time, and in this only way, the soul, that was human—purely, wholly, only human before, "becomes partaker of the divine nature" (2 Pet. 1:4). Though he was a legal child of God—a legal subject of his kingdom, before; he is now a spiritual, a filial, loving child,—a devoted, loyal subject of His kingdom; his "citizenship is in heaven" as never before. He now enjoys the glorious liberty of the children of God." Dear reader, are you experimentally acquainted with all these great truths? God bless and save you! Thomas Holmes.

HELPLESSNESS OF THE HELPLESS.

Everyone may be helpful. One does not need to be rich or learned in order that he may be helpful to his neighbors. A story is told of a young woman who had a trying experience in a hospital. During all the months of her affliction she was greatly comforted and encouraged by a friend who was herself an invalid. She could not visit her friend in the hospital; but she could send messages of comfort and assurances of sympathy and prayer. When at last the young woman was able to leave the hospital she called on her friend and said: "I do not know how I can ever pay you for all you have done for me." "The obligation was too great for her to discharge. The help she had received was greater than she could measure, and she had no means of compensating her benefactor. Yet that benefactor was a helpless invalid.

If the story of the helpfulness of invalids could be written and printed in a book it would be one of the most interesting and helpful books in the world. A few days ago a good woman died in one of our cities at an advanced age. For more than seventy years she had been an invalid. Forty years ago she could not walk or sit in a chair, but lying in bed with the blinds drawn to soften the light, she was busy working for her Master. She was one of the most helpful persons in the city. There were rich people in that city, and educated people, for it was a college town. There were fine preachers there, but no one of them was more useful than this invalid who had not known a well day since she was a young girl. By her faith, by her cheerfulness, by her courage, by her wise counsels, by her earnest prayers she encouraged and inspired hundreds of weary travelers through this vale of tears.

She was a Methodist, but men and women of different denominations were partakers of the benefits of her good deeds and helpful counsels. One day a Presbyterian minister with one of the elders of his church, called upon her, and was so inspired by her words of courage and hope that he prepared a sermon on the text, "When I am weak, then an I strong," and preached it to his congregation the next Sabbath, and used the beautiful character and life of this Christian woman as an illustration. Thus she preached the gospel of faith and hope and courage and peace to a large congregation of another denomination. Her faith was known afar. Her messages were scattered broadcast over the country. She could not go about doing good as her Master did, but lying in bed and enduring with patience and cheerfulness the affliction which had fallen upon her, and sending out her messages of comfort and peace to many, she did what she could. She was one of the most helpful Christians, and yet she was one of the most helpless creatures.

What a rebuke is such a life as this to others who are always well and strong, but never have time nor strength nor heart to help other people. Surely we think too much of ourselves and too little of others. Not only invalids, but obscure people whose names do not carry much weight in a political or ecclesiastical convention, have been greatly useful. We look to the millionaires and the statesmen as the men who are the makers of the world. But more helpfulness has arisen from the ranks of the lowly than from among the great. Men and women whose names were never printed in a daily paper and whose deeds have not been paraded and trumpeted have done more to help people than the mighty.

One writer tells of a village carpenter who was one of the most useful men in the community. He was not a scholar. He could not speak well in public. He was not worth two thousand dollars, and could not write down a large subscription to any good cause, but he was helpful. A new family never came into the village that he did not search out and extend to them a neighborly welcome. He was always ready to watch with the sick. He was always on the lookout to give a stranger a seat in his pew. He found time to speak a kind word to the children in the street. Boys and girls might be seen climbing into his one-horse wagon when he had no other load. "He had a genius for helping folks, and it was a joy to meet him in the street." We hear of a genius for making money, a genius for invention, a genius for music, a genius for poetry, a military genius, but above them all shines the genius for helping folks.

We may all have this talent. It is not like the talent for poetry, which must be born with one. This genius may be bestowed in a second birth. One who is truly born again, born from above, and lives close to the throbbing heart of the Master, who "went about doing good," will have this genius for helping folks. By a kind word, by a kind look, by extending a helping hand, by letting the light of a true Christian character shine, we may lift up a fallen brother and open a rift in the dark cloud of sorrow through which the sunshine of glory shall fall on many a broken and fainting heart.—

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was last week engaged in a very successful revival service at Pleasant Grove Christian Church. He is being assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Underwood Butler, the famous evangelistic singers, who for a number of years were with Dr. Torrey in his great revivals in various parts of the world.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence who has been teaching Rhetoric and the Writing of the Short Story in the Summer School of Wooster University, Wooster, Ohio, arrived home Sunday morning. Prof. Lawrence has been offered a professorship of English in the Wooster University, but he has declined to accept, a decision for which his many friends and admirers are very grateful.

Dr. W. C. Wicker during last week held evangelistic services in the Hines' Chapel Christian Church. Reports seem to indicate a very excellent series of meetings.

Rev. J. W. Wellons is still visiting in Franklin and Wake Counties. He is expected home today.

The Greensboro Christian Sunday school will picnic on the College campus on the 17th inst. They will be joined by the annual campus picnic of the villagers, and, perhaps, also by the Sunday school from Graham. These picnickers will enjoy the privileges of the campus and the College buildings.

Prof. N. F. Brannock, who has been ill at the St. Leo's Hospital in Greensboro, continues very sick. Prof. Brannock had a back-set several days ago from which he is slow to recover. It is hoped that his speedy and ultimate recovery will be soon here.

Mr. J. J. Ingle, Class of 1910, has been elected teacher of Languages at the Greenfield Academy, Greenfield, Tenn. Mr. Ingle leaves next Sunday.

The Executive Board of the Board of Trustees meet tonight in the President's office. A full attendance is expected and matters of great importance to the College will be settled.

Mrs. Ethel Clements spent last Friday night here. On Saturday morning she and Mrs. Linda Barnes left for North Wilkesboro, where they will spend some time in the mountains near that town. They are visiting Miss Clement's sister at her summer cottage.

Mr. Joseph Clendenin, who died at his home last Friday night, was buried Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Quite a number of friends and relatives were here during his illness and death. The funeral services were conducted at the house by Rev. J. D. Williams, of the Burlington M. P. Church. Interment was made in the cemetery here. The pall bearers were six of Mr. Clendenin's nephews of Greensboro: Messrs. T. A. Glascock, L. L. Glascock, W. F. Glascock, H. H. Clendenin, J. B. Clendenin, and Leon Clendenin.

Dr. W. W. Staley of Suffolk, Va., spent a day or two with his sister, Mrs. Clendenin.

Mr. R. H. McCauley, of student of last year, spent Sunday night on the Hill with friends.

Mr. W. S. Tate continues ill at his home and there seems to be no improvement in his condition. Mr. Tate is our oldest townsman, and one of the oldest men in the county.

Mr. J. Frank Apple and son were callers at the College on Monday.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, a student of this institution, has been conducting a very successful meeting at Big Oaks, N. C., Mr. Morgan's home church. This week he is assisting Rev. L. I. Cox at New Lebanon.

Rev. A. P. Barbee was in town this morning en route to Durham.

Rev. A. T. Banks this week is assisting Rev. C. C. Peel at Shallow Ford, N. C., in a revival meeting.

The Township Sunday School Convention met at St. Mark's Reformed Church on last Sunday. A large number of delegates and visitors were present and a pleasant and profitable occasion is reported. Dr. Wicker made a great speech, we hear.

Prospects for the opening continue bright. The students, alumni, and friends have never worked harder. The Faculty and office force are doing all their strength will permit. Such loyalty, labor, and consecration can but bring their destined fruit—a large student body this fall. These are critical days with many young people. Let our friends not relax, but redouble their efforts. Thanks to all.

ELON'S EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETS.

The Executive Board of the College held a called session on Monday night in the President's office. Many matters of a routine character were dispensed with, but some also of general interest to the brotherhood.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, A. M., D. D., a graduate of Wake Forest College and of Harvard University, where he specialized in Political and Social Science, and who was, previous to his becoming editor of the Christian Sun, Professor of these branches as well as of Latin in the College, has been elected Professor of Political and Social Science and will enter upon his duties with the opening of the fall term. This announcement will bring satisfaction and delight to all students and friends of Elon. This will in no wise interfere with Dr. Atkinosn's work as editor of The Sun, but should prove materially beneficial to the College and the church paper.

Mr. Robert N. Doak, A. B., was elected instructor in the Preparatory Department and also to act as Athletic Director for the ensuing year. Mr. Doak has had experience in the class-room and also in College athletics, and comes highly recommended for his work.

Mrs. Sallie E. Holland, Franklin, Va., was elected Matron of the West Dormitory and Mrs. Rose J. Machen, Mobjack, Va., Housekeeper of the same Dormitory, in both of which ladies the College has secured capable and efficient officials.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, A. M., D. D., who had accepted the pastorate of the Greenville, Ohio, Christian Church, felt that his new duties necessitated his resignation as Treasurer of the Board of Trustees. In accepting the resignation the Executive Board adopted the following resolution:

"Moved and carried that we express our sincere regret that Dr. P. H. Fleming feels it necessary to resign as Treasurer in view of the fact that he has accepted a charge in Greenville, Ohio, and that in accepting his resignation we record our appreciation of his excellent and competent services in the capacity of Treasurer."

The Board elected Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C., as Treasurer to succeed Dr. Fleming, and feels that it is most fortunate in securing the services of so earnest and loyal a man for this important post.

The President was instructed to use the seventy-five dollars promised for that purpose by Dr. J. E. Lincoln, Lacy Springs, Va., and Brother S. W. Lincoln, Broadway, Va., to arrange an infirmary on the third floor of the West Dormitory for the young ladies, and also to prepare an Art Room for the Art Department on the same floor.

Miss Lizzie Utley was elected librarian to succeed Miss Mamie Tate, resigned. Miss Utley will enter College and take special work in the Music Department.

All the members of the Board were present except Dr. G. S. Watson, who was called away by professional duties at the hour of meeting.

My Dear Children:—

Our visit to Salem Chapel, N. C., first Sunday was indeed pleasant and as the result you see in this week's Corner a nice amount for the Orphanage. We are grateful to these kind friends.

We were sorry indeed to learn of the death of one of our former members, and a faithful little writer to the Band while he lived in N. C.—little Carlynn Schobey. His little life was short, but we will ever remember him as one who has helped in his own "small way" to let his light shine for Jesus. We sympathize with the bereaved ones.

We are again indebted to Caraleigh Phosphate and Fertilizer Works, Raleigh, N. C., for one ton of H. and S. Special Bone and Potash, 11—5. This is not the first time these friends have been so kind to us and we are certainly very glad to receive their donation. We extend a hearty welcome to the "Whatsoever Band," Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Leader. They are almost too late to get in this week, but we are so glad to have them.

Uncle Jim.

Sanford, N. C.,

Aug. 7, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my letter and send my dime for August. Uncle Jim, you remember sister's little boy, Carlynn Schobey. He has joined the band of angels. His father brought him up here from South Carolina and buried him last Sunday. His mother was at home in bed with fever. He was a sweet little boy. He was buried in a most beautiful little white casket.

I close with much love to all.

Your niece,

Annie Pearl Way.

We are indeed grieved to hear of this little fellow's death. We sympathize with you, Annie, for we know you loved him.

Suffolk, Va.,

August 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I have been so busy since school closed I have neglected writing. I am at Grandma's now, visiting some. We are having it very hot now. Sisters will write soon. Hope little cousins are well.

Enclosed find 10 cents for Orphanage.

Mary Ellen Hingerty.

We have missed your letters, Mary. Tell Sisters to be sure to write soon.

Phenix, Ala.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed find my dues for June, July, and August 30 cents. How are the little cousins getting along this hot weather? I am not well from teething and heat. I have been visiting Grandpa Willingham in the country and enjoyed the trip much, riding in buggy, etc.

Your niece,

Lillian Willingham.

Never mind, little one, the teeth will soon be through, then the warm weather will not feel quite so bad.

Dear Cousins:

I am a little girl nine years old and I help Nana clean up the sewing room and little cousins' beds here in our Home. Then I clean up the girls' cloak closet and I tell you, they are bad to throw hats and bonnets down and when I cannot find the one that did it, I have to hang them up myself. I help with the dishes, too.

We are going to have a picnic the 17th of Aug., when the Greensboro S. S. will come to Elon. We are going to put some chickens up to fatten this week and we are expecting a good time. I expect some of the cousins will come, and if you'll come to see us at our Home in the afternoon, we will sing some little songs for you.

Very truly,

Lula Estelle Brown.

Wakefield, Va.,

Aug. 5, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here we come, twenty-four in number, and next month we hope to have others to write with us. Will you admit so large a number of little cousins and one big cousin into the Corner all at one time?

We have had a lovely time this afternoon. Our leader, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln invited us to her home and we have spent the hour playing and forming ourselves into a "Whatsoever Band." Of course, Uncle Jim, you know what kind of a band that would be. It would be to do in the name of Jesus whatsoever our hands find to do. That is our purpose, with this added:—to learn lessons of giving, by sending our own earned nickles to help our beloved Orphanage. We shall try to meet together once each month, write our letter and pay our dues, then Mrs. Lincoln will forward all to Uncle Jim to be published in the Corner. Enclosed find one dollar and twenty cents, five cents each for our August dues. Our dear little cousin whose name is marked has been in heaven more than a year, but she was one of our number and in thought we never leave her out of our play and pleasures. Uncle Jim, it is a pleasure to do something for each other, isn't it?

Faison, Jr., West Faison, Winnie Hines, Phil Hines, Mazie Lee Hines, Dorothy Hines, Dessie Jones, Bernard Jones, Louise Jones, Annie Thomas Jones, Raymond Kitchen, Jasper Laine, Sallie West, Fannie West, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln.

These little folks look as though they meant business, and I believe they do. Work away, little band, we need your help.

LEAVING THE NEST.

Two thrushes came to my garden,
In the bloom of the early spring,
And built their nest in the holly,
With many a flutter of wing;
And four little heads looked over
The rim of the will-lined nest,
And I thought of the songs of the future
From my birds of the spotted breast.

I went again to the garden,
And my little birds had flown;
The nest was there in the holly,
But all forsaken and lone;
For it needs the ampler spaces,
The higher and larger things,
And the nest is all too narrow
For the bird which has bound its wings.

We made our nest in a garden,
Where the flowers of God are grown—
In a street of the crowded city,
But the nest was all our own;
And the children's voices filled it
With a music passing sweet,
And the home was a bit of Eden,
Though it looked on the narrow street.

But the years passed by, and the children
Into fair maidens grew,
And with blossoms of the orange
Out of the nest they flew;
For Love had sent them soaring,
And given them golden wings,
And the home-nest was too narrow
For the bird that had found its wings.

And as we sit in the gloaming,
And think of the long age,
Though the house is strangely silent,
It is best it should be so;
For still we can hear the music,
As our little birdie sings
By its own sweet nest in the garden,
Now it has found its wings.

Advocate.

STUMPS AND FLOWERS.

I remember once moving to a new place, and I was hoping I should have a nice garden; but when I looked out to see what I had, I saw an ugly stump in the very center of it. What should we do with it? It could not be removed. At last a happy thought came: it could be covered. And so we made a mound, planted and trailed the lovely flowers over it, and no one suspected the ugly stump.
There are ugly stumps in families, in social life, and even in churches, and the best thing we can do is to have the "love that covereth"—trail the flowers of faith, hope and love so that no one shall know the ugly stumps.—Margaret Bottome.

THE BOY'S SACRIFICE.

He was a good little boy and very thoughtful. He had heard about the great scarcity of water throughout the country.
He came to his mother and slipped his hand into her's.

"Mamma," he said, "is it true that in some places the little boys and girls have scarcely enough water to drink?"

"That is what the papers say, my dear."

"Mamma," he presently said, "I'd like to give up something for those poor little boys and girls."

His mother gave him a fond look.
"Yes, dear. And what would you like to give up?"

"Mamma," he said in his earnest way,
"as long as the water is so very scarce,
I think I ought to give up bein' washed."

—Ladies' Home Journal.

GOD'S CAUSE NEVER FAILS.

You cannot find any place in Scripture where a man was ever sent by God to do a work in which he failed. God sent Moses to Egypt to bring three millions of bond-men out of the house of bondage into the promised land. Did he fail? It looked at first as if he were going to. If we had been in the court when Pharaoh said to Moses, "Who is God, that I should obey him?" and ordered him out of his presence, we might have thought it meant failure.
But did it? God sent Elijah to stand before Ahab, and it was a bold thing when he told him that there should be neither dew nor rain. But did he not lock up the heavens for three years and six months?
Now, here is God sending his beloved Son from his bosom, from the throne down into this world. Do you think he is going to fail? Thanks be to God, He can save to the uttermost, and there is not a man who may not find it so if he is willing to be saved.—Ran's Horn.

OUR LIFE WORK.

We would take care so to manage ourselves all day, especially when it draws toward night, that we may not be unfitted and put out of frame for our evening devotions; that our hearts may not be overcharged, either on the one hand with sarreifying and drunkenness, as theirs often are who are men of pleasure, or, on the other hand, with the cares of this life, as theirs often are who are men of business, but that we may have a command both of our thoughts and of our time, that we may finish our work, which will be an earnest of our finishing our life's work well.—Matt-ew Henry.

"Billy" Sunday's six weeks' revival campaign in Erie, Pa., resulted in 4,312 conversions.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

There is only one true Christian religion, and it is the one which Christ founded, and which he has vitalized by the sacrifice of his life. The Bible says of Christ that "in Him was life," and that life is the only true light in the world. There is no saving religion outside of the religion which Christ gave to the world. No sinner was ever saved by the acceptance of a religion which is vitally different from pure Christian religion. The late Prof. J. H. Seelye, of Amherst College, in a lecture to the educated Hindus of India, said: "If Christianity be true, two things are also true: you are saved by it, and you are lost without it; and these are also true of every human soul. If Christianity be true, Jesus Christ can save, and he is the only Savior. If this system has truly come from God, then God has so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; and then also there is salvation in no other, for there is none other name, given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved. . . . Remember that this question is not, whether Christianity is best of all religions, but whether it is the only religion which is truly good."

Many unconverted people are misled by certain systems of religion that are called Christian, but which are not such in fact.
They lack the vital essentials. Some of them have in them no place for Christ's deity, nor any room for his atonement.
There are reputed "Christian" churches of this kind; of course, they are not channels of true salvation. Do not be misled by them. Do not recognize them as being Christian. Accept only the religion of the crucified Lord, so plainly presented in the New Testament. Do not accept the parts which please your fancy, or agree with your ideas, but accept the whole gospel. Do you actually want salvation? Do you want a present deliverance from condemnation and uncertainty of soul? If so, give Christ the chance to deliver you. C. H. Wetherbe.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Norfolk Letter.

I have been reflecting on our recent Sunday School Convention at Liberty Springs church, and will jot down a few of my thoughts.

In many respects it was a splendid convention. It was not my privilege to be there the first day, but arrived on the morning of the second day. There was an immense crowd, and they were royally cared for. It was the good fortune of Mrs. Manning and myself to be entertained in the hospitable home of Bro. and sister Vernon Rawles.

There are some respects in which our conventions might be improved. First, there should be a new basis for representation, cutting down the present number. Then, if some way could be contrived, to have more of the teachers and leaders of the school work attend, it would be far better. My observation leads me to the conclusion that quite a good many who go as accredited delegates are rarely ever in the house, and still a good many others are only there occasionally.

And then I think our programs could be improved upon. Please do not mistake this statement to mean that our program committee did not give us a good one, for they did; but as I see it, that is just where the trouble came: it was too good. What I mean to say is that there was an attempt to put in so many good things in the way of papers and addresses that it crowded out some things which are essential to make the very best, most practically helpful convention. I believe that if not after each paper or address, certainly after each group on a specific subject, there should be given several minutes for discussion of that subject. That gives an opportunity for those not on the program to have something to say. Let the speakers be limited in time to, say, two or three minutes each. In that way some very helpful things may be brought out, and it will prevent the feeling that is sometimes present, that the Convention is only for a certain few.

As I have said, our Committee got up an excellent program, but it was too full; it was not possible to carry it out. Some six or eight of the main addresses were not made at all, and even then, the time was so filled up that of the three "Round Table" discussions provided for, and that was the only chance for the body of the Convention to have any opportunity to speak, two of those were cut out entirely, and the other one very limited in time.

Just one other thing and then I am done, and I am sure my brethren will appreciate the spirit which prompts me to mention it. That is the matter of Presidents of the Convention. The past session had our own Dr. Staley, and that is saying that this, nor any other convention, could have a better one. I have been in E. Va. for ten years, and in attendance at most of our Conferences and Conventions, and if my memory serves me correctly, I've seen only four presiding officers during that time. Each one has been all that a presiding officer should be—it is not that they haven't been, that I mention it, but I want to express the thought that at least in our Sunday School Conventions, where the president has practically no duty or responsibility except to preside over its sessions, we should make it more of a training school for Presidents, so to speak.

The E. Va. Conference is especially fortunate in having a large number of men educated and specially qualified to fill such places. Some Conventions are not so blessed, and must of necessity use the same men every year to fill the office.

There is quite a responsibility on the President, very exacting on his time. When there are others I think they should have their share of work and responsibility. Then there is some honor in filling such a place, and I think the honors should be distributed.

And lastly, as intimated above, in our Sunday school conventions where there is less of work and responsibility on the president than there is in the Conference.

My plea is distribution of the work and honors, to give the body of the Convention an opportunity; and to have a more interested and active representation.

Our meeting began at Rockstand Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July with growing interest.

Rev. G. O. Lankford reached us on Monday and did very good and earnest preaching. Our church was greatly revived. We had only one addition, but think we will have others soon. Bro. Lankford greatly endeared himself to the people of Rockstand, and we are anxious for him to come again.

Our meeting began at Corinth on Saturday night before the fifth Sunday. The church and community were ready for a meeting here, and it was no trouble to have it. They didn't wait for the preacher to do it all, and if they had they would have missed it, for we didn't have but seven present, and you know we couldn't have done much?

Rev. J. C. Knight did the most of the preaching. Rev. G. D. Hunt passed by and preached for us twice, and those who know Bro. Hunt would guess that we had two good sermons. Rev. J. H. Hughes preached two good sermons and did other good work for us. The meeting continued with growing interest until Saturday following, when it closed with seven additions to the church, all of whom were baptized. There were other conversions, some of whom will join later, and some will go to other churches. Our church is greatly revived and in good shape for a new year's work.

Our meeting is now in progress at Forest Home. We have made a good beginning for a revival here. Rev. J. C. Knight is with us, and will do the most of the preaching. We go from here to Pleasant Grove. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in His service,

J. D. Dollar.

Portsmouth Letter.

Monday following the fourth Sunday in July the revival at the Berea (Norfolk Co.) Christian church was begun. Rev. A. M. Hanson of the Third Church, Norfolk, assisted in the meeting. The church was ready for the meeting, for they had been praying for it. We observed this fact in the first service. The people's minds were full of expectancy. Bro. Hanson brought to us from day to day messages of sweetness and power from the Word of God, that were carried to our hearts by the spirit.

The meeting was a time of refreshing from the Lord. There were quite a number of professions of faith and reclamations, and twelve joined the church. On the fifth Sunday we baptized four by immersion and five by pouring. We sincerely trust much good may come from the meeting.

The church gave their pastor a vacation during the month of August, so the next appointment will be the first Sunday in September. The church at Portsmouth also did the same. We are very grateful to the churches for this kindness and favor.

Monday following fifth Sunday in July Revs. N. G. Newman, A. M. Hanson and myself left for the Summer Bible Conference at Northfield, Mass. We are now in the midst of a Conference, and it is needless to say we are enjoying it. It is a delightful place. God has evidently smiled upon it, and even the grounds, hills, mountains, round about, the buildings and everything about its natural and material make up, bespeak His glory.

The Conference attracts people here by the hundreds. They come from many of the States of the Union and from many denominations. There must be several hundred ministers here seeking help in their chosen work. The Conference for ministers began this morning. It will continue throughout the Conference, and we are expecting much help from it. If this morning's address is a sample of what shall follow we know we shall be greatly helped. There are many strong speakers on the program. We were much pleased to hear Dr. R. A. Torrey preach a powerful sermon on Sunday, and on yesterday and today give his famous Bible readings on the deity of Christ. It was great.

Madrid, Iowa, Letter.

Some one has said that "we are responsible for all the sins that we might prevent." If that be true it is certainly a fearful thing to live, and we should lose no opportunity for doing our best. Now if we see, from a human standpoint at least, that we are powerless to prevent certain things that are wrong, shall we use our influence against these wrong things, when we are sure that we will likely make to ourselves enemies of those who are engaged in these things? Let us bear in mind the words of Christ to his disciples, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves". I see how it is possible to be so prudent as to border on the sin of man-fear, and lose our opportunity for doing the most good. On the other hand I see how we might, in our zeal, act so imprudently as to lose our opportunity for accomplishing the most good. Paul said, "I make myself all things to all men that I may by all means save some." But he also said, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

There are many things that we might mention, calling upon us to maintain a Christian attitude. But as I write these lines I have in mind especially Sunday baseball. This is not worse perhaps than many other things that are desecrating the holy Sabbath. Yet we feel it to be in violation of the spirit of God's holy law, while there is no law in this State against Sunday baseball. Granted that there is no state law against Sunday baseball, shall we as Christian men and women sit mum while this desecrating practice is becoming more popular and more enthusiastically engaged in all about us?

Sunday baseball is allowed in this town, but there are a few who feel that it is a shame for such a thing to be, and they seem to be getting more and more aroused over the matter. A few Sundays ago, the ministers in town voted their congregations on the question and more than four hundred stood up when the question was asked. How many are opposed to Sunday baseball?

But the fact that some church members have stock in the baseball association, and are present at the Sunday baseball games makes against us in our fight against this evil. The president of the baseball association admitted to me that it was not right to play the games on Sunday, but he seems to be hiding behind the members of the church who have stock in the association and attend the games. For instance it comes to light that the Sunday school superintendent of one of the schools here himself visits the Sunday ball games and has stock in the association. I did not mean to say so much on this subject when I began, I had a few words to say along another line, but I guess that will keep until another time.

Lebanon, Caswell Co., N. C.

Our protracted meeting began on Saturday before the third Sunday in July. We had sought in different ways to have the people ready for what will always bring the revival—united fellowship and unmoved faith in God. And as with all people and at all times there were some who were not ready. "And ye would not come unto me that ye might have life." The "will nots" are a large part of the church today. This church and community is composed of thrifty farmers and merchants; many of whom study to be successful, and they have been; determination is a great element in the make up of any. If men and women would determine as strongly about their religion as they do for the success of their farms, stores, and shops our churches would be filled with religion.

Our congregations were all we could ask—except Monday—that's the day for "odds and ends." Rev. Leou E. Smith, of Greensboro, N. C., came Monday a. m. and did the preaching; and he did it in a way and manner that was instructive, and helpful to all. He certainly is a young man of more than ordinary pulpit power. He is well adapted to this kind of work; both in prayer and persuasion he is tactful. There were about 17 professions, 5 joined the church, with others to follow, and many reconsecrations. The sentiment of the community was that this was a good meeting. The meeting closed Friday about 4 P. M. We feel that not only this church but other churches should plan so that when a good meeting is begun, it may continue for two weeks if necessary. We appreciate the many words of kindness both for Bro. Smith and the pastor. We were pastor of this church about twenty-three years ago, when quite a boy. We feel that good has come to this church and country because of this meeting, and we are grateful for it.

CLOSING THE DOORS.

I have closed the door on Doubt;
I will go by what light I can find,
And hold up my hands and reach them out
To the glimmer of God in the dark and call:
"I am Thine, though I grope and stumble and fall.
I serve; and Thy service is kind."

I have closed the door on Fear.
He has lived with me far too long.
If he were to break forth and reappear,
I should lift my eyes and look at the sky,
And sing aloud, and run lightly by;
He will never follow a song.

I have closed the door on Gloom.
His house has too narrow a view.
I must seek for my soul a wider room,
With windows to open and let in the sun,
And radiant lamps when the day is done,
And the breeze of the world blowing through.

YOUR SIN.

Be sure your sin will find you out.—
 Num. 32:23. Golden Text for Sunday, August 27.

The very glory of our gospel is that it seeks and searches a man. It not only finds the person; it finds the person out. It reveals a man to himself; shows who and what he is. In our day the X-ray has been discovered, a method of illumination whereby the deep things of the flesh may be discovered, the secret, the hidden things. Long ages ago a discovery was made whereby the deep things of the soul might be seen; might be made to appear. This was the X-ray of God's penetrating love and life.

Because the soul of man was made to contain and to reflect the life and the love of God, sin cannot remain hidden and obscure there. It is a moral, an eternal impossibility. The only thinkable way whereby the contagion of sin could remain obscure in the soul would be for the soul to die and decay. Be sure your sin will find you out.

Judah's sin was a long time in finding Judah out. But Judah was untrue to God, false to itself, and a traitor to its best interests. Judah's judgment day, its time of reckoning, had to come. Curses, like chickens, says the Eastern proverb, always come home to roost.

Sin is not infrequently a long time in finding the sinner out. By skill, ingenuity, deft manipulation, sin may be covered for a time, hidden for even a long season, but as sure as God is, sin cannot be covered always, nor its evil consequences be evaded forever. Sin always seeks a shining mark, and because of its own inherent darkness, its hideous mien will one day stand out in its own black proportions.

Sin is the disturbing element in this universe. It is like poison in the blood. It penetrates to the center, permeates every vital part, and affects the entire system. The only safety man has is to avoid even the appearance of evil.

Does not true repentance wipe out sin? Yes, but very often it does not wipe out the consequences of sin. Jacob wronged Esau. He sought and obtained the blessing, but suffered greatly from the deeds of his deep deception. His cup, while sweet, had many a bitter draught; and even Jacob had to quaff the dregs more than once.

David sought and found forgiveness of the Lord for his awful sin; but poor David suffered many a bad moment, many an evil consequence, many an hour of fear and dread because of the consequences which even his forgiven sin had brought about. Sin puts in motion temporal results and consequences which are not eliminated even by the pardon of the sin itself. Thus God has given us many a caution to warn us and to woo us from Sin, that one foe that would, if it could, wreck the world and destroy the souls of men. Judah's sin was very great; and Judah's plight was pitiable in the extreme.

DIVINE INSTITUTIONS.

There are in the world three fundamental, and therefore three divine institutions, the Family, the State, the Church. All three are necessary to the formation, to the completion and maintenance of human character and conduct. He who sets himself against the family is abnormal, illegitimate and rebellious. He who sets himself against the State is a transgressor, an outlaw, an anarchist. He who sets himself against the church is faithless, unregenerate and without hope. All three institutions are necessary to the formation, to the completion and maintenance of human character and conduct. He who sets himself against the family is abnormal, illegitimate and rebellious. He who sets himself against the State is a transgressor, an outlaw, an anarchist. He who sets himself against the church is faithless, unregenerate and without hope. All three institutions are necessary to the formation, to the completion and maintenance of human character and conduct. He who sets himself against the family is abnormal, illegitimate and rebellious. He who sets himself against the State is a transgressor, an outlaw, an anarchist. He who sets himself against the church is faithless, unregenerate and without hope.

The Church was no accident, no happen-so. It was a necessity. When Jesus the Christ looked at His disciples and said, "When ye pray say 'Our Father,'" right then and there were implanted the seeds of a brotherhood, a firm fellowship, which must needs result in the formation of the Church. The family is limited by ties of blood and kinship. The State is limited by social, physical, or geographical conditions. There must of necessity be one institution as broad as the universe, as unlimited as the earth and skies. In that institution of unlimited fellowship, without metes and bounds, man could pray in truth, "Our Father," and take in the whole human family when he said it. A common Fatherhood necessitated a universal brotherhood. If a Jew said "Our Father" he could only mean the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and of his race. The Greek could not say it, for all others were barbarians. The Romans could not, for all others than Romans were paltry and poor and not to be pitied. If men could pray "Our Father," there must be a universal institution, an institution world-wide which recognized all who came into it as brethren. The only universal, divine institution is the Church.

How senseless indeed men are to go along through the world and not appropriate to themselves the blessings and the benefits of a church home. Not the church as a universal institution, but my church as a part of this universal whole, is that which gives comfort, strength, help to my character and conduct. A mere church member who has no church of his own to which he can be loyal, in which he can work and worship, lives indeed to little purpose and misses the very best that God has prepared for him. The Church is in the world for man's betterment, security, safety, completion. If he fails to appreciate its life and make it his own, he fails of the best, as he who lives without the family and without the State.

THE DIFFERENCE.

There is a whole world of difference between the historical Christ, and the Christ who died to redeem men from their sins. If you compare the life of Christ with the lives of other great and good men, you may find some difference, but you do not reach the depth of the matter. There never was any other life like that of the Christ. He stands alone, unique, incomparable, without fear or parallel. Not His ethics, not His prophecies, not even His miracles distinguish Him, and set Him apart from all others. It is not in these that He towers and surpasses. He was more than these or any of these. He went beyond all that He did. Christ draws men to Himself by a power more than that which He did while here on earth. Above and beyond all He sacrificed Himself, gave freely His life that He might reach and redeem the lowliest of men. The Son of God came to be the Son of Man, that the sons of men might become the sons of God.

One of the most striking recent utterances we have seen from Dr. J. H. Jowett, pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, N. Y., is this:

"You may proclaim the Lord as a great ethical Teacher, but the ethics may generate no more energy than the Ten Commandments painted upon the cold surface of the walls of a church. You may proclaim him as a young Reformer, but the program will no more lift men out of their deadly grooves than a party program will lift men out of their sins. Jesus, the young Prophet, may draw cheers; the uplifted Lord draws men. The young Reformer may gain men's signatures; the sacrificial Saviour wins their hearts."

Here is the difference after all. The uplifted Lord, the sacrificial Savior, this it is which forever sets Him on a pinnacle above all others, and draws men from all the walks and conditions of life to a better and truer and holier life in Him.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

A Sunday school teacher is like a preacher in at least one particular. Everybody is ready to give him advice, tell him what he should or should not do.

Now this writer's advice may not be worth while, and may not be heeded by any, but his candid conviction is that our schools suffer more today from two causes, both emanating from the teacher, than from all other causes combined.

The first of these is the teacher's absence. On small pretext or provocation, the teacher does not hesitate to go or be elsewhere on Sunday morning than with his class. If there is any thing that embarrasses a superintendent more, and throws the school into greater confusion, and hurts the whole school worse than for three teachers only to be present when eight are needed we do not know what it is. The teacher may not think that his presence amounts to much, but let him know forever that his absence means a weight about the neck of the school that the school cannot carry without suffering.

But that which we had in mind was another and a different matter. Why will teachers insist on making their classes listless, indifferent, unconcerned, by following the lecture method in teaching? No Sunday school class wants to be lectured at every Sunday. Our conviction is that the lecture method is doing more to dry up, and sap the vitality of the Sunday school class than all other causes combined. Teaching is not preaching. The wise teacher will leave the preaching to the pastor. He has another and quite a different work. His is the task of getting pupils to study and to learn with Him lessons of instruction and enlightenment from the Book.

The teacher may think his class does not wish to be queried. He is mistaken. The class will be queried, or it will quit. This will test it. Let the teacher assign a week in advance some work to a pupil and see if that pupil does not want to be queried about it. We have never yet known a pupil to quit Sunday school because he was called upon to do things, to study, to learn, to tell the class things. We have known them without number to quit because they were told things, lectured and preached at for thirty minutes each Sunday. If any teacher wishes a hard time and a dull and a listless class, let him undertake to lecture at that class from Sabbath to Sabbath.

About one Sunday school teacher in a thousand may have the eloquence, the learning, the power of oratory to catch and hold a class with a finished lecture each Sunday, but he is indeed a rare genius, and one runs a terrible risk who undertakes it.

The Sunday school teacher has a great calling, a splendid opening, a fine opportunity for influence and for service. His is an important, an exalted position. As such it is worth all and the very best he is capable of. Happy indeed is that teacher, and thrice blessed, who realizes this and enters upon his work with zeal, interest, consecration and a deep desire to succeed.

ENVIRONMENT.

All creatures find, or seek to find, an environment suited to their needs, and are at home in that environment. Man walks like a stranger on earth. His restless spirit, his nervous energy, tell him he is but a pilgrim here. His only resting place, his only place of security and of safety, of at-homeness, while on this earth, is in God. Man's environment is God. Out of Him, the soul beats its bars, stalks and frets like some mad, wild thing caged contrary to its inherent nature. Man never finds himself till he finds himself in God.

What the nest is to the swallow God is to man. God's altar is the real and true home of man's soul. The birds of the air have nests, the foxes have holes, but the sons of men have not where they may lay their heads in safety and rest their hearts in peace save in the God who created them and whose they are.

WHERE IS YOUR BOY?

The other night in this good town of Greensboro a fight took place between two boys, about 15 years old each, as a result of which one lies in the hospital with a cruel knife gash through his lung and liver, with hardly even chances for his recovery. The quarrel began in a pool room and ended in the street with deplorable results.

"These boys were accustomed to be out much at night, and frequently played pool till a late hour," the papers said.

There is a picture for you. Boys less than fifteen years of age, out much at night, and habitues of the pool room. Sorrow has gone to two homes at least, and great anxiety to parents, because of the escapade related above.

Fathers and mothers, where are your boys at night? It may seem a close and a cruel thing for you to try to keep them at home, or for you to know where they are; but is it as close and as cruel as a bad fight, a hospital ward and a murderer's cell? Where is your boy at night? Is that not worth knowing by every parent?

A QUESTION.

Bro. Editor: Will you and others tell through The Sun which is more blessed in the sight of the Lord, to visit the sick and carry them just a little something to nourish the body and help them to feel better, or to go to picnics and carry big dinners?—Enquirer.

Answer.—For our part we would not assume to answer for the Lord; but we cannot conceive of a condition that would bring about the above antithesis. If one is free-hearted and willing enough to prepare a dinner for a picnic we would certainly think such an one would be more than willing to share that dinner or any other dinner such an one might prepare, with one who was sick. Sometimes moral difficulties weigh upon our minds because we place one deed, which we assume to be an evil, over against another deed which we are sure is not an evil, which deeds are not opposed to each other at all, save in our reckoning. Some times the one readiest to prepare a dinner for a picnic would be the quickest also to prepare a meal for the sick, since the one has no logical connection with the other.—Editor.)

—Congress adjourned Aug. 22, after a rather strenuous extraordinary session.

—Governor Dix of New York made the remarkable record of vetoing 126 bills in ten days.

—A well-known University president is reported as declaring that no man can be considered truly educated who is ignorant of the Bible. Wherefore we much fear that many who go from college with a diploma in their trunks are not truly educated. Ignorance of the Bible on the part of college students is amazing.

—A gentleman went into the public library at Great Barrington, a few days ago, and asked the librarian if he might see a Bible. She responded "Certainly," and went to the shelves for it and laid it down before the gentleman, who was a stranger. He turned to the flyleaf and then said: "I only wanted to see if it was here yet." The flyleaf bears the following inscription:

"I have visited many libraries which lacked many books, but only one library which lacked The Book, and to that one I send this.

The inscription is dated Sept. 7, 1897. The caller was Mayor Gaynor.

"Let him that heareth say, Come,"

How can I guide these little eager feet,

When mine so oft have wandered from thy way?How can I dare thy wondrous trust repeat With lips so stained by sin, from day to day?Yet, Lord, I heard thy loving voice say,
"Come";And, having heard, how can I choose but tellOf him whose tender heart holds ample roomFor me, and for these little ones I love so well?I have no wisdom. Thine is all complete, And thou didst bid the needy come to thee,I come, and bring these children to thy feet, Receive and bless them, Lord. Teach

Samuel H. Hadley, late superintendent of Water Street Mission in New York City, used to tell the story of his conversion. Before he became a Christian he descended to the lowest degree of depravity and shame. One night, vibrating between despair and hope, he found his way into the mission while Jerry McAuley was still living, went forward and knelt down at the place of prayer. He cried to God for mercy in his wretchedness and surrendered himself to the Lord. Peace came into his soul, and he went out into the night, and looking up, "saw the stars for the first time in many years." Then Mr. Hadley added, "A drunkard never looks up." That may be a revelation to many. He declared he had not looked up for many years. In the sordid soul sin reigns, which is as relentless as the law of gravity. It draws his mind and heart and eye downward. Not until the light of heaven returns can he look up.

Children look up. They look up with wonder, expectation and confidence. They look up to their parents, to their older brothers and sisters, and to all grown people whom they consider their superiors. They look up to the sky and the stars, to the clouds and the birds flying through the air, to the treetops which seem to nod a friendly recognition. It is difficult to persuade a child to look down. In this world we must both look down and up, for while our eyes may be on the sky our feet are on the ground; while we draw our life from above, we draw our means of subsistence from the earth. But children are slow to look down. How often does the mother say to her child, "Look where you are going. Mind your steps."

He does not mind his steps. He stumbles over every stick and stone because his eye is on the moon, the stars, the sky.

They learn to look down, however, as they grow up. They look down in their effort to make a living, to make money, to make a name in the world. They look down when they become entangled in temptation. Vice and sin soon hold their eyes to the ground.

When one is converted he looks up. He becomes a little child again. The old sense of wonder, expectation, confidence and reverence returns. He realizes that there is somewhat higher than this world. He learns not to set his affections on things on the earth, but on things above where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. He lifts up his soul to things above. His soul feels that it has wings and he soars and sings:

"My soul mounted higherIn the chariot of fire,And the moon it was under my feet."—*N. Y. Advocate.VACATION.

I want to thank the people of my churches for the vacation granted me during the month of July. It was accorded willingly, received heartily, and enjoyed greatly. The time largely was spent at my father's in Naussemond County. The first week I was away I was sick. The second week I was better and had the privilege of attending the great Sunday School Convention of Eastern Virginia. Reports from it have already appeared in The Sun. The week following that I spent in a revival at Cypress Chapel, the old home church, with my good old pastor, H. H. Butler, and with fond old friends, whose children have grown out of my knowledge during my absence from that community for thirteen years. I preached only three sermons of the meetings. Bro. Butler and Rev. Mr. McFadden, of Suffolk, doing the rest.

Bro. Butler's prayer was that the church might be happy, and his prayers were answered. We all got happy. My spiritual life was toned up and I feel stronger. There were about 25 conversions and about as many united with the church. On fifth Sunday morning, 28 were baptized.

During these three weeks of my stay there, I painted my father's house outside. Dr. Staley says I "paint things" where I go. I did this time, and it appears fine (in the distance). It was an amateur job but you would not have known but what I was a professional. I finished, anyway, and offered it as a compensation for my board. It wasn't received that way, but anyway, it was a job done which had been planned for two years, and I enjoyed it more than idleness.

Well, how did I spend the fourth week?

I will simply make a statement and ask the editor to testify. It was with a party of 24 men from Driver and community aboard a schooner anchored off Wilmoughby Spit. This was at the invitation of Bro. Ed. Smith, of Driver. Mr. Editor, do you know what I am talking about? (Well I should say, and my eyes grow green with envy.—Ed.) Think of the sail down to the Roads, and into harbor! Think of a joyous, hilarious and sleepless night.

Night being gone, and breakfast over, in our launch and skiff we put out for the fishing grounds off Ocean View. Think of the joy of such sport as pulling in the spots, croakers, toads, trout! But some doubted. Again, think of the novelty of living aboard ship, feasting on canteloupes, fish, ham, etc.

We were close to Ocean View also. We spent our evenings there. I tell you it was nice and I never saw a crowd of men quite so orderly on such a trip.

I left Wednesday afternoon. They bade me join them again next year on their annual outing. I promised that I would, could I reach them.

I returned to my father's, we packed our trunk and came back to Waverly ready for another year's work, stronger, better, happier. I am busy too. I shall be in meetings for five weeks.

It is indeed taking a new lease on life to have a vacation like I had.

AT NORTHFIELD.

Dear Brother Atkinson:

We had a glorious rain yesterday, and Northfield needed it. Today the grass is greener, the breeze is cooler, and nature was so inviting that Bro. N. G. Newman and I walked (or shall I say climbed?) to the summit of that fine mountain foothill just east of the Seminary.

All three of us, that includes Bro. J. W. Harrell, have decided that we would like to return to Northfield again, for to come once means to have one's appetite whetted for more. It would be a means of grace and of great inspiration to our work if many of the brethren and sisters, too, could attend a Conference of Christian Workers here.

The lectures by Prof. Johnson Ross and by Dr. Griffith Thomas on such topics as "The Christianity of St. Paul," "Romans," etc., and the helpful addresses to ministers by Rev. John Hutton of Scotland, have amply repaid us for coming. The personality of Rev. Mr. Hutton is quite unique, and the Scotch brogue is clearly in evidence. But I cannot begin to mention all who have now and then given single addresses. Yet let me mention two: 1. The missionary address by Dr. Brown of the Presbyterian Board was a masterly, statesmanlike presentation of the world-wide mission problem in its economic, intellectual, and spiritual phases. His closing words linger: "Who knowest but thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." Several declared it to be the best missionary address they had ever heard. 2. I ought not to forget the sermon by a Baptist minister, Dr. Francis of Boston. Text, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Jno. 8:12. It exalted Jesus Christ in a clear minded, warm hearted, and soul-stirring way.

But after all, one has to come to Northfield himself if he would understand it.

We are a happy crowd. Bro. Harrell says that we seem (we three he means) able to ask and answer any manner of questions whether philosophical or what not. "How good it is for brethren to dwell together in peace." It has been suggested that we write a volume entitled "Practical Economy": for information address our company enclosing stamp for reply.

Supper bell is ringing, so with a cheerful adieu, I go.

Sincerely,

A. N. Hanson.

THREE RULES: AND YOU'RE HAPPY

It was at a Girls' Summer School, years ago, when one of the girls rose and said to Alice Freeman Palmer, who had been talking to them:

"Mrs. Palmer, you are always so cheerful and happy; will you tell us, please how we can be happy?"

"I will dear," said this saint of her sex. "I will give you three simple rules:

"The first is this: Commit something to memory every day, something good. It needn't be much; three or four words will do, just a pretty bit of a poem, or a Bible verse.

"The second rule is: Look for something pretty every day; and don't skip a day, or it won't work."

"My third rule is—now mind, don't skip a day: Do something for somebody every day! That is all there is to it, dear."

These three rules are just as good today as when they were spoken: they will work always and everywhere, in the country as well as in the city; for women as well as for girls. They will make a farmhouse warm in the chill winter and a tenement cold in the blazing summer. They will help to make us masters of our lives. They are so plain that everybody can keep them. No matter how gray the sky these rules will make the sun shine through.—Ladies' Home Journal.

WHAT IS NOW ILL BRED.

It is no longer well bred to talk about ill health. It is true that we are still hindered with relics of the days when one's health and ills were the most interesting topic of conversation. We still perfunctorily ask: "How do you do?" But we have only pity or disgust for the person who really answers that question if she is not well. The woman who habitually pours out upon the unwilling ears of her friends the disagreeable tale of her headaches, her backaches, her worries or other ills; the woman whose greatest satisfaction seems to be to tell, in gruesome detail, every step of an operation either upon herself or some one else—these women are slowly but surely being isolated by the bar of social exclusion, and either ignored or avoided. We know for a certainty now that the psychic contagion which one person can spread by suggestions with reference to disease is as real as the contagion from measles, or mumps, or scarlet fever. Modern society has recognized this psychic contagion, and is demanding that our conversation shall be clean and wholesome on subjects of health. To talk otherwise has become a sign of ill breeding. This is an epoch-making change in the character of human conversation, and it has occurred within the memory of many of us.—Ladies' Home Journal.

TWO WOMEN AT THIRTY.

There is a woman, Annie McQuillan by name, whose profession in life is to launder the garments of the rich. Her drunken husband left her when she was barely thirty years old with three children to feed. She rises with the dawn and meets what might be called a full day. She clothes her offspring neatly, feeds them three times a day with good substantial meals, sends them to school, and works eight hours a day at the most beautiful washing and ironing ever done by the hand of woman. Then she cleans and sews and cooks for her own family, and goes to her pillow weary and full of sleep. Does she repine in her quiet moments? Does she wonder if life is worth living? Does she rush into print with articles on "The Disillusionment of Marriage"? Not she. Being too busy to think circuitous and morbid thoughts she thanks God. For what? "I thank God," says she, "for me two hands, for me health, and for me kinds. They're the comfort of me life, sur!" Her laughter is Homeric; her appetite is hearty; her vitality is inexhaustive. Coarse, you say? Yes, as coarse as Nature. Common? Yes, as common as salt. But do we love Nature less, or feel the need of salt less? Annie McQuillan does this: she does her work and does it well, and she faces her destiny undaunted.

There is another woman—also thirty. Annie does her laundry-work. She is pretty winsome, and refined. Her husband earns three thousand dollars a year, but the pretty wife cannot make ends meet with it. No, she has no children; she has not the strength for children, she says, and, besides, "we cannot afford children." Cook? No. Sew? No. But she is a "lady": so refined, so pretty, and she plays bridge "wonderfully" and dresses divinely. Common? No, indeed. Coarse? Bless you, no!

But down in the bottom of your heart, tell me: which of these two women, think you, comes closest to the original design for a woman?—Ladies' Home Journal.

SAVING FOR A RAINY DAY.

A mother, whose young daughter is about for the first time to enter an active business life, has asked that something be said to young girls on the importance of saving for a rainy day. Others besides the young in this lavish age of ours and in this bountiful country need this reminder. The rainy day, by which is meant the day of illness, of loss of employment, of a sudden and passing emergency, or of help that must be given to dear ones, may come to the most prosperous. The temptation to a young girl who has been compelled to deny herself pretty things and nice clothing and the luxuries attractive to the young is to spend all she earns, put nothing aside, and especially to be reckless in buying thing to wear. A better way is for the young wage-earner from the very beginning of a business life to determine how much he or she will need for actual wants and then week by week lay aside a definite sum, however small, in the savings bank.

To spend all that one earns is foolish, while often to spend more than one earns is little short of criminal. If one would sleep well at night, meet the world fearlessly, and remain young in defiance of time, one must be prudent and discreet in the use of money. A good test of character is to be observed in the manner in which money is treated by the average boy or girl. Parents should early train children in thrift, not in hoarding. If money is wisely saved, wisely spent, and wisely given away, character will broaden and deepen and happiness will be unshadowed.—Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, in The Christian Herald.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Dr. P. H. Fleming holds his final service with Burlington church Sunday, 27th inst., and leaves for Greenville, Ohio, on 29th.

—Myrtle Reed, author of "Lavender and Old Lace" and several other compelling romances of sweet and noble sentiment, committed suicide in Chicago.

—W. B. Beatty, in a Wright biplane, remained in the air, with a passenger aboard, from 3:30 to 7:08 p. m. at Chicago Aug. 19, a total of 3 hours and 38 minutes, a world's record for duration with a passenger.

—President Taft, forgetting that most of the churches of Washington close up for the summer, in August especially, went to the third one last Sunday, after being turned away from two by closed doors.

—It comes out that a West Virginia congressman wrote "applause" fourteen times, and "great applause" one time into a speech which he never delivered, but which appeared only in the Congressional Record.

—President Taft on Aug. 21 signed the joint resolution for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as states into the union, only, however, after a resolution had been passed by the Congress eliminating the judiciary recall clause in the Arizona constitution.

—Rev. L. I. Cox, pastor, was assisted in a great and good revival, at New Lebanon, Rockingham Co., N. C., by Rev. J. F. Morgan last week. The church was wonderfully blessed and the spiritual life of the community was quickened. There were many confessions of faith in Christ and twenty-three accessions to the church, three going to other churches of the community. Bro. Cox is this week in a meeting at Parks' Cross Roads assisted by Rev. J. O. Cox, Durham.

—Just as we knew would be the case, our colony at Northfield, Mass., consisting of Brethren N. G. Newman, J. M. Harrell and A. M. Hanson, are having the time of their lives at the Summer Bible Conference of Christian Workers, as Bro. Hanson's letter in this issue of The Sun indicated. Why in the world all preachers who can rake and scrape the cash do not go to Northfield once or more in a life-time, we cannot see. It is the completest rest and spiritual refreshment, to say nothing of bodily and mental rejuvenation we have ever found yet.

—It is always a pleasure to the editor of The Sun to receive a letter from one who has attended Elon College stating that another member of the family will enter the College at an early date, as for example this from Prof. Thomas H. Franks, who graduated here three years ago: "My brother Carson will enter Elon this fall and I hear that several others from this community are to go to Elon also the coming term." As long as Elon College has the active sympathy and hearty co-operation of a successful and loyal alumni it need have no fears as to the future.

—South Carolina has a railroad which enjoys a unique distinction in two directions. It is the Due West, and from the day of its building until now it has never carried a shipment of liquor, its policy being, without a single exception, to refuse absolutely all shipments of whiskey, whenever and however offered. The second degree of distinction is that in the charter of the road it is stipulated that no train shall ever, on any account, run on that road on Sunday, and one never has, to the present time.

—We call attention of the esteemed Charlotte Chronicle to the fact that there is nothing short or shoddy now about Bro. Sherrill's editorials in The Concord Times. We wait to see whether the Colonel will now apologize for prodding the Secretary, or whether Bro. Sherrill will thank the Colonel for bestirring him to his good gifts and acceptable labors. At any rate, Bro. Sherrill has bestirred himself and The Times editorial page measures and shines with the very best. For our part we thank the Colonel, congratulate the Secretary, and felicitate all Times readers.

—We acknowledge with interest and pleasure the following: "Mrs. William Courtney Dimmock invites you to be present at the marriage of her daughter Cora to Mr. Cabb Dwight West, Thursday, Sept. 5th, 1911, 8 p. m., St. Paul's Church, Newport News, Va." We are delighted that "Cabbie" is to get married. We had often wished him this good fortune, our Orphanage Trustees, of whom he is a valued and beloved one, having once pledged their kindly and generous offices to this good end. He was just too good and fine a fellow to be trying to tread this weary and care worn way without another good heart to share his genial companionship.

—The editor was with the pastor, Rev. J. O. Cox, at the Durham church last Sunday a. m. It was a delightful service. A splendid congregation gathered. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler were present, and sang. The people were delighted, thrilled, edified. After preaching, sixteen members were received into the fellowship of the church; some of the very best and most active of Durham's citizens. It was a splendid spectacle. Already this year Bro. Cox had received twenty-seven members. He has promise yet of others. In short, our people of Durham have begun to realize their duty, privilege and obligations. We see no reason why, in a few brief years, Durham may not be one of our strong churches. If all of our denomination who live there will unite, as many have done now, and as seems probable most will do shortly, there is no reason why Durham should not have what it may desire in the way of a church home. There is talk now, and to good purpose, we think, of selling the old property and of building a modern house in a more suitable location. Keep your eyes on Durham. There is great promise there.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am enjoying my vacation although the temperature has continued in the nineties.

On Saturday, the 12th, I arose at 5 A. M. and drove seven miles to Moore's Pond. I carried a three-gallon bucket of water with about forty minnows in it for bait. I fished four hours in the August sun and did not get a bite: yet Moore's pond is considered one of the best ponds in the State for fish. But when fish will not bite you cannot induce them. This reminds the minister that a fisher of men may toil all night and catch nothing: this should not discourage him, however, for Jesus may direct, later, to cast into deeper water and bring in men where it seemed impossible.

While at Moore's pond I received a telegram that my brother-in-law, Joseph E. Clendenin, had died at Elon College. I left at once, went home and changed my apparel and rushed to Franklinton. All the local trains had passed; but through the kindness of E. J. Cheatham, Seaboard Agent, and a higher official, the fast train stopped for me and I made good connection at Raleigh. I spent Saturday night with my half-brother, John M. Cook, at the Ward Hotel in Burlington, and rode to Elon next morning with my youngest half-brother, Robert N. Cook, sheriff of Alamance County. The funeral services were conducted at the family residence by Rev. J. D. Williams, Pastor of Burlington Methodist Protestant Church, and the interment was in Elon cemetery. He was a good, quiet man, living with friends and dying without enemies.

By previous invitation and engagement I went to J. Beale Johnson's to spend two days with Rev. C. H. Rowland and enjoy a "little fishing." The palatial residence fronts the beautiful pond, which is a silver lake in the midst of pine encircled hills. Rowland is a hunter and not a fisherman, but the first afternoon he caught twelve before I caught one; but I had had a very hard chill on the train between Elon College and Raleigh that forenoon; but on the wind-up on Tuesday Rowland had to leave the boat and hot sun and I probably beat him for the whole time. Brother Johnso came in late in the evening and landed some nice perch. We caught about seventy-five in all and I brought a nice bunch home and left a lot for their fish fry with Dr. Atkinson on Thursday night.

Dr. Atkinson may be extravagant in the use of adjectives in his enthusiastic descriptions sometimes, but he never uses too many when describing the hospitality of J. Beale Johnson's home. He and his good wife and sister Lena not only have ample means and room, but they know how, and in unstinted fashion combine style and simplicity in an artistic way. It is hard to keep from abusing such royal and hearty kindness. I spent two nights and enjoyed every moment, parson Rowland adding greatly to my stay. We made two auto visits to Fuquay Springs, whose waters are famed for rheumatism, kidney trouble, and indigestion.

The crops south of Raleigh are the best in the history of farming, or at least in this generation.

Brother K. B. Johnson invited me to join him in an auto trip to Seven Springs, but I had to return home and forego the pleasure of accepting his kindness.

One thing amazes me: it is the kindness of people to ministers. It is almost good to be poor to share in the kindness and hospitality of others. It was not so in the early days of Christianity when even Je us was persecuted by the members of the Church. The world must be growing better in spite of pessimistic views by people who are far from perfect themselves.

Brother Rowland is to conduct a meeting at Wake Chapel next week, and I hope they may have a great revival.

I have the privilege to extend my vacation to the first Sunday in September, though I had told my congregation I would return for the fourth Sunday in August. If weather continues hot I may notify them that I will not return till first Sunday.

All my sick folks are now better, and I am feeling fairly well myself.

W. W. Staley.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The Greensboro and Elon College Sunday schools picnicked happily together here Thursday of last week. Our school was glad to meet our city friends.

Mr. W. E. Senn, Charlotte, N. C., tuned all the College pianos last week and many in town besides.

Rev. J. L. Foster attended the Valley Virginia Central Conference at Leaksville, Va., last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler, who have been assisting as singing evangelists at Pleasant Grove and Ingram recently, are happy visitors in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson, who are doing the entertaining act in most felicitous manner. Their thirteen-months-old daughter accompanies them and performs stunts as interesting with her body as her father and mother do with their voices.

Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Butler, went to Durham Sunday to assist Pastor Cox in receiving several good members into his church. Dr. Atkinson preached and the Butlers sang.

Uncle Wellons has returned from an extended vacation trip to Wake, Franklin, Johnston, Granville, and other counties of eastern Carolina.

Mrs. J. U. Newman is visiting the family of Rev. C. E. Newman, at Henderson, N. C.

Mrs. J. M. Saunders and little son Marion are visiting Mr. Saunders' people in Eastern Virginia.

Mr. Ernest Neville, St. Louis, Mo., visited Mrs. Sam McCauley recently, as did also her brother, Mr. S. G. Neville, Knoxville, Tenn.

Mr. Sam Tate is very sick and is not expected to recover. He is now nearly 90 years old. His son, Mr. Robert Tate, Norfolk, Va., is at his bedside.

Mrs. Levi McCauley is at the bedside of her brother-in-law, Mr. S. N. Tate.

Mr. A. Ligette Lincoln, who has been stenographer in the President's office this summer with such signal success, has gone to his home, Lacy Springs, Va., to spend his well-earned vacation, intending to return to the College on the fifth of September to resume his duties as teacher of French and Secretary to the President.

Mrs. J. W. Patton and children have returned from an extended visit to friends and relatives in Eastern Carolina. Mrs. Patton and Miss Alene will teach in Gibsonville this year.

Dr. Wicker returned on Friday from a trip in the interest of the College which embraced Sanford, Lakeview, Southern Pines, and neighboring towns and cities. He is now in Durham for an operation for cataract, under Dr. S. D. McPherson, who is a specialist in Ear, Eye, Nose and Throat diseases in that city.

Professor Brammoch continues to improve and will be on hand Sept. 6.

Miss Maggie Hall is visiting at Dr. Watson's.

The College buildings are well under way for the opening. They are being renovated and fumigated throughout and will be in the best shape possible when the students arrive.

A French trained chef has been employed as head cook in the West Dormitory. For eleven years in succession he has been chief cook in one of the leading hotels of Greensboro.

Our friends, the students, and the Alumni and ministry have never been more cordial in their support than this summer. We are doing our best at this end. Our mutual efforts, under God, ought to give us a good enrollment this fall and we have every reason confidently to predict it. Now is the time to redouble our energies and bring in the doubtful ones. Every mail brings us encouragement. Thanks for every word.

Miss Mildred Laue Atkinson, '08, is visiting in the home of her uncle, Rev. J. O. Atkinson. Miss Atkinson taught school last year in Springfield, Tenn. She has met with much success in the schoolroom and is deservedly popular in her profession.

W. A. Harper.

WHICH ARE YOU?

There are two kinds of people on earth today,
Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.
Not the sinner and saint, for 'tis well understood
The good are half bad and the bad are half good.
Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth,
You must first know the state of his conscience and health.
Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span
Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.
Not the happy and sad, for the swift-flying years
Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.
No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.
Wherever you go, you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.
And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.
In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
Or are you a leaner, who let others bear,
Your portion of labor and worry and care?

Young People's Department.

Devoted to the interests of the Young People's Convention,
Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training and Organized Classes.

Edited by Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.

WHAT OUR YOUNG PEOPLE ARE DOING.

Since the Young People's Convention at Liberty, Randolph County, the young people of that thriving town have organized a Christian Endeavor Society. The meetings are held in the graded school and it is the auxiliary of all the churches in town, yet belongs to no one church. In this way it is believed that more attractive meetings can be had and more effective work done than for the four churches to have one small society in each. Twenty-one members enrolled at the first meeting. Prof. R. C. Cox, an Elon man and a member of our church at Liberty, is president of the society. Other officers are: vice president, A. G. Hackney; recording secretary, E. M. Brower; corresponding secretary, Miss Rosa Bailey; treasurer, Miss Julia Smith. Miss Affie Griffin is chairman of the lookout committee and is doing very effective work. We hope to hear often from the society and trust that it may be a helpful organization.

The Greensboro Christian church now has three organized classes and will soon have a fourth one. One of these organized classes is doing especially fine work, because it seeks to do definite things. The great trouble with too many auxiliary organizations is that they do not go about matters in a definite way. Each Sunday, in addition to studying the lesson, the class ought to ask the question, are we doing anything? If not, it is time to do something—seek new members, visit the sick, help the pastor, the superintendent and others.

One thing organized classes must guard against—selfishness. If the school needs a member of the class for a teacher, let that member go where he or she can do the greater good. The teacher may still retain his membership in the class.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC—SEPT. 3. Lessons from the Life of Daniel.—Dan. 6:10-23. (Consecration Meeting.)

The life of Daniel was one of many trials, numerous difficulties, arduous duties and hard work, but it was also rich in experience, filled with wisdom, touched, softened and made beautiful by the love of the great Master. The Prophet was a man of splendid attainments, ranked as a scholar in his day, had keen perception, acuteness of mind and religious conviction. A close study of his life and character reveals all of the elements of greatness.

It is supposed that Daniel was born in Jerusalem and early in life was carried away with the other Hebrew children. He was still a young man when he was called to interpret the king's dream. In his youth he had found favor with God and had already become the serious and earnest Christian that he was through the remaining years.

After the Magi of Nebuchadnezzar's court had failed to reveal to him the meaning of his dream, the young Hebrew was called in and with marvellous readiness of mind he detailed the meaning of the dream. How terse and yet how full of meaning is every word that he spoke when before the king. In consequence of his success, like Joseph of old, he was elevated from a servant's place to that of governor of Babylon and president of the Babylonian wise men.

Later he interpreted another dream for Nebuchadnezzar to the effect that the king was to lose his throne for awhile, and then it was to be restored to him after being humbled. After the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel seems to have lost his princely position for a time.

Daniel occupied a subordinate place under the reign of Belshazzar. He had two remarkable visions which disclosed to him the fact of two of the most powerful empires of the world, and their relations to the kingdom of God. He afterward interpreted the hand-writing on the wall, which foretold the destruction of Belshazzar.

When Babylon was taken by the Medes and Persians, he was made the first of the three presidents of the empire. We now find him in deep humility and prostration of spirit, praying to God for forgiveness of the people's sins and asking for divine mercy.

Being so blessed by Jehovah and occupying such a high post of honor in the state, the enmity and jealousy of his colleagues were aroused, and they at last succeeded in prevailing upon the weak monarch to issue the decree that was so at variance with Daniel's creed, and the violation of which resulted in casting Daniel into the lions' den.

Daniel was miraculously delivered from the lions' den, raised to the highest post of honor. At the ascension of Cyrus he continued to hold his post of honor. He thus occupied a high official position during the reign of three kingdoms, the Chaldean, Median and Persian. Daniel did not accompany the Jews back to Jerusalem, but died in exile when past ninety years of age.

The foundation of Daniel's greatness was his temperance. He was able to conquer others because he was able to conquer himself. Because he chose to live, not on the defiling meat and wine but on pulse and water, he came to eat at the king's table. Such temperance is the foundation of every young man's success.

It was not necessary for Daniel to pray with his windows open toward Jerusalem, right where his enemies could see him. He might have prayed in some little back room, with the curtains all drawn tightly. Ah, but public prayer was necessary for Daniel then, if never before or after. Private prayer would have been a denial of his God.

On the wall of every evil life the dread Hand appears, writing its doom: "Weighed, and found wanting!" No one can grow to middle age, or even live beyond his teens, without seeing the awful portent many times. Our folly lies in always thinking that the Hand will always write above other lives, but never, whatever we do, above our own.

Suggested Program.

1. Open with only one song, a call to worship. You need all the time for the meeting proper, for this consecration.
2. An earnest prayer by the leader. Ask two others to follow you, naming them.
3. The Bible reading, accompanied by comments.
4. After a song, the leader's opening words. It will be helpful for the leader to give a personal word telling of some lesson he learns from Daniel.
5. The roll-call may be left out of this program, and let the secretary sit at the table and mark each one present as they take part in whatever manner. As a part of your consecration meeting, you could also speak of new work, or new ways of doing the old things.

Rev. L. E. Smith and Prof. T. C. Amick were invited to seats as deliberative members.

The following were enrolled:

Supts.: W. R. York; Teachers: Janius Moffitt; Sec.: Mattie Moffitt.

Delegates: Ramseur, Mrs. T. E. White; Pleasant Hill, Misses Lizzie Fox, Emma Andrews.

Janius Moffitt and Mattie Moffitt were enrolled as delegates representing Shiloh Church.

The Committee on Teacher Training reported as follows:

We are aware of the fact that there is not the deep abiding interest in the work of the Sunday school that should characterize those into whose hands is committed the task of teaching, and directing the minds of the Young People of our church. Not only is there a lack of interest on the part of many in the work of the Sunday school in general; but we realize that it is a sad fact, a condition to be deplored that our teachers in many instances are extremely indifferent and careless as to the manner that they prepare and present the Sunday school lessons.

Therefore we not only recommend and suggest, but we urge that all those who teach in our Sunday schools seek to improve their system of study, methods of teaching and manner of presenting the lessons by first giving more systematic, prayerful, thoughtful study to the Bible—for no teacher, whether in the Sunday school or elsewhere can teach successfully any subject which he has not studied and does not continue to study as he teaches it and endeavors to interest and attract the ever-restless minds of boys and girls.

We recommend as the most practical thing that every teacher can do, to procure, read and apply the principles of some good book on Teacher Training.

In the third place, wherever practicable, there should be organized Teacher Training classes. We advise that these classes use the "Preparing the Teacher," published by Dr. J. O. Atkinson. This book has met with the hearty approval, adoption and successful use by not only a large number of our own schools but by the Sunday schools of other denominations.

R. C. Cox,

D. E. Cole,

J. B. Copeland,

Committee.

Pending the adoption of the above report the Convention listened to a strong address, "How to Succeed with Teacher Training," by Prof. T. C. Amick.

The report was adopted.

Following this Rev. L. E. Smith delivered an address, "The Sunday School at Work."

The Committee on Sunday Schools reported as follows:

The S. S. is the great institution of the church in which the great truths of the Bible are taught which point out the way of life, and lead sinners to surrender themselves to Christ.

We therefore recommend 1st, that each member of this Convention endeavor to improve the S. S. in his local church. And that the Sunday schools take up the work of Class organization and Teacher Training and thus create a deeper interest in the work. Third, that each Sunday school superintendent see to it that his school is represented in the next Convention. Also that each pastor keep the work of the departments of the S. S. before his people.

L. W. Fogleman,

L. I. Cox,

O. T. Hatch,

Committee.

On motion the report was adopted.

The Committee on Organized Classes submitted the following:

The organized class is no longer an experiment, but recognized by the schools that have them as an important factor in Sunday school work. We therefore recommend: 1st, That each school make an effort to organize classes to suit its needs. 2nd, That each pastor be requested to present the matter to the schools of his charge.

T. E. White,

D. E. Cole,

The report was discussed by Rev. T. E. White, but the motion for adoption was waived until the afternoon session at which time Prof. W. A. Harper was expected to deliver an address on the Organized Class.

The Committee on Christian Endeavor reported as follows:

Report on Christian Endeavor.

We heartily recommend this phase of Christian service to the careful consideration and prayerful attention of all who desire to make their church an inspiration.

The movement is world-wide, and has been heartily endorsed by all the higher bodies of our own church, namely: the American Christian Convention, the Southern Christian Convention, and the Young People's General Convention of the Christian Church South. Yet we are slow to sound the Convention's watch-word, "A Christian Endeavor Society in every church"; notwithstanding the fact, the need is felt in all our churches of more and better trained leaders and Christian workers.

This need is met largely by the work of the Christian Endeavor Society, because it aims at deeper spirituality and greater loyalty to the church, of its members; thus promoting greater activity along all religious lines, and in this way making the church a more efficient agency for the evangelization of the world.

In view of these facts, and to the end that our church may measure up to her responsibilities and become a greater power for good in the world, we would urge all ministers and church leaders to make immediate and earnest effort to organize and maintain Christian Endeavor Societies in all the churches of this Conference. We would also advise a careful and prayerful study of the matter printed in the Young People's Department of The Christian Sun.

We would further recommend that all churches co-operate with this Young People's Convention, and comply with the requests, as fully as practicable, of the Young People's General Convention of the Christian Church South.

L. I. Cox,

Mary Parks,

L. W. Fogleman,

Committee.

At this juncture Rev. H. F. Wolfe read a paper—"The Development of Christian Endeavor," which had been prepared by Rev. H. E. Trueft. Following this C. A. Hines, Esq. delivered an address, "The Christian Endeavor as a Developer of Christian Leadership."

The report was adopted.

The Convention adjourned for preaching by Rev. T. E. White.

The Chairman announced the following standing committees: Sunday School; C. B. Riddle, Willie Freeman, L. E. Brady, Christian Endeavor; Rev. L. I. Cox, L. W. Fogleman, Hiram Freeman. Organized Classes; L. W. Fogleman, S. D. Scott, W. C. Marfin, Home Missions; S. D. Scott, T. A. Moffitt, B. B. Martin. Teacher Training; R. C. Cox, Miss Affie Griffin, Thomas Carter. Music; Miss Blanche Teague, Miss Ada Humble, Miss May Curtis. Tabulating; O. T. Hatch, B. B. Martin, Miss Bessie McPherson. A motion prevailed to pay to the general Young People's Convention one cent per member of the enrollment reported to this Convention.

It was decided to have proceedings printed in the Christian Sun and from the same type have the minutes made up in pamphlet form.

A motion prevailed to take up a subscription to the amount of $15 at the evening session for promoting the general work of the Convention throughout the Conference.

The Convention listened to a talk in behalf of The Christian Sun by the editor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

On motion the Convention adjourned.

SIXTH SESSION—SUNDAY MORNING.

Convention reassembled, devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. T. B. Dawson.

W. D. Curtis, delegate from Smithwood, Joe Stout, treasurer of the Convention were enrolled.

J. D. Gunter and C. B. Riddle were invited to seat as deliberative members. Each responded in well-chosen words. The Committee on Home Missions reported as follows:

Home Missions.

There is going on in our home land a mighty campaign for Christ. The gospel is preached, souls are reached, and churches are organized. This is the work of the great missionary spirit. A church is a vital thing. A living church is a growing church, and this is the kind of church that is interested in home missions.

For home missions are dependent upon home missions. Failure to support the one involves the other. We find there is in our land a great field for mission work. The population is steadily shifting and the ministry is not sufficient to supply the demands. Calls come from the West and South for the gospel.

Protestant Christianity is vastly in the minority in our larger cities.

The national government has sent out men to study the moral conditions of our mountain districts that are remote from churches and schools. Vast amounts of money are expended annually to lift man to a higher plane of living, but there is a tendency to leave the man Christ out, and yet he is the only one who has ever attained that high degree of perfection. We would recommend that more missionaries be sent to those places which are distant from churches and schools, as nothing will elevate and bring men up to a high standard better than the gospel of Christ.

We would suggest that the Sunday school use its influence in the great mission work, giving special attention to those lessons bearing on missions.

While there has been progress in mission work for the past year, still we find there lies before us a great field of work which we must do or souls will perish.

May our church at large do more for the Master in resending those who immediately surround us.

S. D. Scott,

L. I. Cox,

Committee.

After general discussion the report was adopted.

The Committee on Music made the following report:

Music.

Except the preached word there is no factor in Christian worship that is more powerful than music. In fact, music adds very much to the power and effectiveness of preaching. It prepares the mind and heart for the reception of the word, driving care away and soothing the troubled soul. It also inspires the preacher to his best effort, and binds together in loving sympathy and fellowship him who brings the message and those who receive. Music is also a great means of conveying gospel truth. Therefore, we would urge that every means be used to increase the effectiveness of the song service; among which means are: the best books obtainable, frequent choir practice and often giving the children a prominent place in the service; above all, the organist and chorister should love their work, and should be enthusiastically devoted to it.

Pending the adoption of the report Miss Blanche Teague read an essay on "How the Music of our S. S. May Be Improved." After general discussion the report was adopted.

The following resolution was adopted

Resolved,—That we, the members of and visitors to, the Young People's Convention, express, by a rising vote, our gratitude and high appreciation to the pastor, the members of this church, and the good people of Liberty, for their kindnesses shown us, and their very hospitable entertainment of us, while in their midst. We shall carry with us as we leave, a loving remembrance of you and your interest in us; we trust your prayers will follow us in our work.

L. I. Cox.

On motion the Executive Committee was requested to correct the minutes of the Convention.

The Convention adjourned to meet with the church at Pleasant Hill on Friday before the last Sunday in July, 1912.

CO-EDUCATION—THE OUTLOOK.

Let no one suppose that this article is offered as a defense of co-education. Co-education needs no defense, at no place in the world, and certainly not in the United States. In our public and high schools nineteen to one is the ratio for co-education as against unilateral education. If we omit the Colleges of New York and Massachusetts, we get practically the same ratio for College students. A system of education that is as nearly universal as these facts indicate co-education to be certainly does not call for defense or apology.

Nor let any one suppose that the purpose of this article is to show that all Colleges for men or women exclusively should be forthwith abolished or made co-educational, because the great majority of our people seem to prefer the co-educational kind of education. There are types of men and women perhaps who would not do well in co-educational institutions or who are firmly of the opinion that they would not. These persons are entitled to the kind of education their opinion and convictions lead them to prefer. Such institutions may be regarded in the light of experiment stations along the educational highway or as centres of wholesome criticism to keep the majority sort of educational institutions from going too far a-field in its actions and standards. I am persuaded that these unisexual Colleges now operating in the United States are serving a good end, but I am also fully persuaded that their kind will not increase in this country, that it is even now on the decrease.

The proposal to make the University of Virginia, in some way, co-educational is being very much discussed now. The time-honored old institution may not now admit women or establish a College for women to cooperate with itself, but it will very likely eventually. It was a long time before the traditions of the institution would allow it to lay aside its dread of the one-man power and install a president. After long debate and careful discussion, the president came. I do not expect co-education to come at the institution Jefferson founded and regarded as one of his greatest achievements this year or next, but I do expect that it will eventually come, in some form. For co-education is in the times and the University of Virginia has always kept itself responsive to the will of the people. The very men who as students at Charlottesville now are opposing so strenuously the co-educational idea for themselves will very likely to send their daughters here to be educated or will be allowed to do so if they desire.

The outlook for co-education is very bright and the reasons therefor are easy to find. First, it is the natural way to educate. Boys and girls are born in the home together and must live together all their lives. Why therefore should they be separated in their education? Ought we not to have churches for each sex as much so as colleges? And certainly they should not attend the same Sunday school or prayer-meeting if they are not fitted to be educated together. There would never have been a co-educational question, if men had not somehow got it into their heads as a relic of savagery and barbarism that women were inferior to themselves. If we read the discussions in respect to co-education in the days when Oberlin, which was the first College to admit men and women (1833), and Antioch, which was the first (1853) to admit men and women on equal terms, were launched, we find that the chief argument brought against it was that higher education would wreck the health and destroy the mind of the women. No self-respecting educator would advance that argument to-day. Now the argument is that the type of mind peculiar to women is different from that peculiar to men and so they cannot be educated together successfully. Prof. Dewey, of the Columbia faculty, one of the leading authorities on Pedagogy in this country, thinks there is absolutely no foundation to this theory, and the theory certainly ought to prove itself before it is entitled to respect, in view of the large success that co-education has attained in this and other lands. There seem to be no studies peculiarly adapted to feminine or masculine minds. If there were, the elective system of modern education would certainly bring out the facts, but we have yet to find an institution in which these facts have been brought to light. Until they are, we shall continue to believe that, as boys and girls come into the world together and must live in societal relations all their days, they should be educated together, that co-education is natural education spelled short.

In the second place the moral tone of a co-educational institution is much higher than that of a unisexual school. The scandals that were formerly predicted as the natural out-cropping of co-education have never bodied themselves forth in tangible form. Fewer scandals occur in co-educational institutions than occur in the homes of the same social standing as those from which the "Co-eds" come. Recurring to the agitation in regard to the introduction of co-education at the University of Virginia, we notice that one argument against it is, that the moral tone of the fellows would keep away the very class of young ladies most needed. What has actually taken place in other institutions seems to show that for this very reason, that the moral tone is low, the University of Virginia needs co-education. For it is universally true that the presence of women on a College campus where men also are found as students tends wonderfully to tone the fellows up. Co-education certainly helps to moral uplift and development.

Lastly, co-education has a most wholesome effect on manners. The men of co-educational institutions are not so coarse and boisterous and rowdy nor are the women in such institutions so giddy, silly, and effervescent. Co-education seems to knock off the rough edges of the manners of both men and women and not to accentuate them as do unisexual institutions. The girl who has been educated in a co-educational institution has the ability to distinguish between the real worth of manhood and the social veneer which the girl educated in the woman's College often accepts as the genuine evidence of depth of masculine character. The same is true of men educated in co-educational institutions. They are able to form a correct estimate of the women they meet and can distinguish real womanhood from superficial and forced sociability.

For these reasons the outlook for co-education is very bright. The co-educational institutions hold the key to the educational situation in this country and they are likely to hold it for a long time to come.

My Dear Children:

Today, Aug. 17, is quite a day with our children and as I write all is bustle and stir getting dressed and, I suspect, thinking of the big dinner stowed away in one large box and three baskets which with that of the rest of the S. S. will provide a feast of good things. The Greensboro Christian Sunday school will be down today, and with our Sunday school on the College Campus, the children will frolic and play, laying aside all care and work; the grown folks will prepare a good dinner and next week one of our children will tell you what kind of a time they had.

Mr. Newton Foster visited our Home last week and brought with him a bunch of bananas for a treat for the children.

We have received a box of clothing from Counaughtville, Pa., sent by C. E. Society, through Miss Lucy Lamb, Sec. It contained 10 yards bleaching, 12 yards gingham, 12 yards percale, 3 yards outing, 10 yards apron checks, 9 shirt waists, 2 skirts, 7 pr. pants, 3 dresses, 1 bed quilt, 2 boys' caps, 6 handkerchiefs, 5 doz. buttons, 1 doz. towels, 1 doz. pr. hose, 2 spools thread, 1 apron. A very useful box, for which we are thankful Miss Pattie Haislip, of Salem Chapel, N. C., sends a cake of paraffine.

We thank these kind friends for thoughtful remembrance and hope others will begin to think of the needs of the children for the coming winter.

Very Cordially Yours,
 Uncle Jim.

Waverly, Va.,
 Aug. 14, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I guess you think I have forgotten the Corner, but I have not. I have been having a nice time this vacation playing ball, eating watermelon, and riding my pony. Papa took her up to the mill, for the sawyer to drive, and you bet I cried when she left. I will be ten years old in November. Mama told me if I would be a good boy, papa would give me a saddle to ride my pony, so now I am going to try hard to be good and not be too noisy. I enclose a dime with much love.

Fondly,
 Garland Gray.

Glad you break the long silence, Garland, and be sure not to wait till November before you write again.

 Aug. 14, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

We have nice rains here. Papa's crops are looking fine. Our garden is good. We have plenty of snaps, cabbages, tomatoes, beets, peas, potatoes, onions and water-melons. I went up to see Mrs. Ball last Friday and we certainly did have a nice time. Mama and my two brothers went with me. I enjoy grazing cows and feeding pigs. I am looking for grandma and Aunt Cora Foster to-day. I hope they will come for I will be glad to see them. Well, I am 8 years old and I am the oldest. I send 10 cents to the Orphanage.

Malcolm L. Fuller.

Glad to welcome you, Malcolm, and hear of the good crops in your section.

Dear Cousin:

I will write you a few lines to let you know what my work is. My work is to help cook dinner and supper and some times I make up biscuit. I am eleven years old. As I have no more to write I bring my letter to a close with best wishes to all cousins.

DIED.

Schobey.

The death angel entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Schobey, Clio, S.C., and took from them their only child, Carllynn, on Aug. 5, 1911. Had he lived until August 11 he would have been two years old. Carllynn was a bright and attractive child, and was loved by all who knew him. He will be sadly missed in the home and also in grand father's home, where he liked so well to go. There is a vacancy in the home that no one else can fill. Father's and mother's hearts are sorely grieved, and home has no charms for them, now the jewel has been taken. Carllynn has gone to be with Jesus who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

H. L. W.

Ward.

Mr. William H. Ward died at his home in East Burlington, Aug. 4th, in his 71st year. He volunteered and entered the Confederate Army, May 8, 1861. He served on the Merrimac, and was in the battle between the Merrimac and the Monitor in Hampton Roads. So far as I know he is the last of that memorable crew, though I am not fully advised. At the close of the war in 1865, he returned home and engaged in farming for a few years. On July 3rd, 1870, he was paralyzed and has not walked a step since, not having the use of his limbs from his hips down. He was a member of the Christian Church and a man of great faith, hope and love. He leaves an invalid wife, and one daughter. The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home. He was buried in Pine Hill Cemetery, Confederate veterans acting as pall-bearers.

P. H. Fleming.

Allen.

Ida Jane Allen, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Allen, was born July 6, 1886, and died Aug. 10, 1911, aged 25 years, one month and four days. She had been a great sufferer for a long time, and during a greater part of that time entertained hopes of recovery. She was submissive to the will of God, and left the testimony that all was well with her soul. She leaves a mother, two brothers and a number of relatives and friends who mourn her early departure. The funeral was conducted by the writer, and the remains were buried in Holly Springs Cemetery. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

T. E. White.

Gwaltney.

Thomas J. Gwaltney, of Petersburg, Va., died Aug. 4th in Petersburg hospital. He was a victim of typhoid fever. He was 25 years old and had been married three years. He married the daughter of the late Mr. M. C. Gordon. To them was born one child, Chas. H. He was an earnest and loyal member of the Phoenix Bible Class of the High Street Methodist Church. Three of the members represented the class at his obsequies. He was converted last August in a meeting in Petersburg, and, although never uniting with the church is reputed to have lived a consistent Christian life. His last words were, "I am ready to go." One who can die like that certainly must feel like Paul did when he said, "I am ready to be offered."

His funeral was conducted by the writer at Centerville Christian Church, August 6, and his body was interred in the church cemetery there.

He leaves to mourn their loss, a devoted wife and one child, a father, Chas. H., of Isle of Wight Co., one brother, and three sisters.

May the Lord bless, comfort, and provide for the grief-stricken widow and child.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

From Centerville.

I have just closed the annual revival meetings at Centerville Church. We held two services each day except Monday. Dinner was served free and publicly. The meetings were very well attended, though the crowds were much smaller than previous years. Rev. M. L. Bryant, pastor of the Berkley church, was with me and did the preaching. He labored hard and delivered his messages magnificently. The people, as a whole, were interested and enjoyed the meeting. This is the third time that Bro. Bryant has preached in revivals here. He has much endeared himself to those good people and they want him to come again.

There were five converts during the meetings—two united with the church. It is expected that others will unite later. Many reconsecrated their lives to God; in fact, I think we all did; but there were some backsliders who came back home. It was a good meeting; we were made happy. We could have been made happier if we had seen the many for whom we so earnestly prayed, give up sin and surrender to Jesus, but they would not, but even they were not without their blessing. Whether it will harden them in the future or make them tenderer time will only reveal.

I will hold meetings at Spring Hill next week, two services each day. I expect to do the preaching there according to request.

The Methodist pastor and myself closed a 10 days meeting at Riverview the 10th inst. We established an altar service and church. If the meeting could have gone on another week we feel that there would have been even far greater results. Baptists, Methodists and Christians all gave us their co-operation. The people were not willing for the meeting to close, but the preachers were broken down and we had to come home to recuperate. The Methodists have solicited my help in their meeting, beginning the third Sunday in Aug. in La Grange, Ga. My meeting at Hogansville will begin the first Sunday in Sept. We are looking for great results at Hogansville. I have had requests from Mountain Hill to go there and establish a Christian church, but have not yet had the time to go. It is very probable that we will organize at Hogansville first Sunday. We have some good members at Hogansville who want to organize. Brethren, let us pray God to send more laborers into the vineyard.

I have had so far 85 conversions in my work and in work that I have been engaged in with other pastors, and I am expecting great things to be accomplished yet. And we are praying that God will give us souls for our hire. I am not going to be able to reach very many of the churches in behalf of the missionary work. May God reward his laborers fourfold.

Fraternally,

G. M. Holder.

Portsmouth Letter.

Dear Bro. Editor:—

Some ten years have elapsed since I've contributed anything to the columns of The Sun. On that occasion I wrote concerning the organization of a Christian church in our city. Under the management of our beloved pastor, Rev. J. W. Harrell, and with the hearty co-operation of the members, we have grown from a few to quite a number, and have built a church edifice that stands unequalled for architectural beauty, and a monument to honest endeavors. I wish to mention the indefatigable labors of our pastor in his efforts to further church work, through all kinds of weather, and laboring under the weight of obstacles. By perseverance, he has accomplished grand results in temporal, as well as in spiritual affairs. He is now enjoying a much needed rest, and we miss him beyond measure, but in his absence he has placed with us Bro. Frank McClain, whose sermons and genial manner are in keeping with his Christian piety.

Other items of church progress have taken place, which I will save for future mention. I trust that the next ten years will be just as satisfactory in our church work, and will witness as great achievements for our Master. W. S. H.

Big Oak.

We have had a great meeting at Big Oak—old people say the best they have had in about thirty years. The meeting began on Sunday, Aug. 6, and closed Friday, Aug. 11. There were 51 who professed faith in Christ—most of them grown young men and women. Thirty-two of them joined the church at Big Oak, and others will join later.

Those who were not baptized by affusion will be baptized by immersion the third Sunday in September at 10 o'clock a. m. God wonderfully uses human means and human instrumentality to uplift mankind and to glorify His name.

This good people had just treated themselves to a nice new organ on Friday before the meeting began, which resulted in drawing together for a choir and song service the best talent of that section of country. Especially do we mention Miss Maggie Monroe, a most excellent Christian young lady, who with organ and voice led the song service with great effect. Oh, the power of song when it comes from hearts in tune with God!

And then, in the second place, by request, surely some of us had long been praying for just such a meeting at Big Oak. Yes, one man prayed all night. One mother, kneeling with her son, said, "I will never give up, will never stop praying until my boy is saved." And the Lord blessed him there. The son works away from home, so the mother came to this writer for a nice Bible, which she placed in his hands as "the sword of the Spirit." I thought, what a picture! What a lesson!

Last but not least, one of our "boy preachers," Rev. J. F. Morgan, was with us. They call him Frank about Big Oak, among his own people—uncles, aunts, cousins, and friends,—but not without honor, for truly he is loved and esteemed by all—an exception to the rule. "A prophet hath no honor in his own country"—John 4:24.

So Brother Morgan was at his very best—he reached a climax he had not hitherto reached as a preacher. Three things contributed to his liberty—close application, consecration, and favorable environment. T. B. Dawson.

Cambus, Ga., Letter.

The writer was privileged to spend the week following the fourth Sunday in July with Rev. J. D. Dollar and his Rockstand congregation, engaged in revival work. The meetings were largely attended and a deep interest was manifested at every service. Only one member was received but this doesn't give an idea of the good accomplished in other ways. The church was greatly revived and strengthened in the faith of our Lord and the seeds of gospel truth were doubtless sown in the soil of other hearts that will bear fruit in the final harvest. A week's stay among this people convinces one that Rockstand is a most hopeful point. The membership is composed largely of young men who have settled permanently in this community and among them prevails a spirit of harmony and brotherly kindness. They are devoted to their pastor and church. May the Lord's blessing abide with them in their efforts to maintain and build up the cause of Christ in their midst.

From Rockstand, the writer, in company with Rev. J. D. Dollar, went to Rock Springs to attend the District Meeting which was in session the fifth Sunday and Saturday before. These two days were full of inspiration and spiritual uplift. One very seldom has the privilege of attending a more helpful meeting.

The next week was spent with relatives and friends, all of which time was greatly enjoyed. There is always a peculiar pleasure in going "back home" that is afforded in no other way. Home life isn't a mere happen-so, anyway; it is a divinely appointed institution. This is why it still abides, withstanding ever the many furious thrusts that are made against it. Heaven itself will doubtless be home, into which will come the infinite joys and comforts that God himself has provided for those who shall gather there.

The first Sunday instant marked the beginning of the revival at Benlah. For quite a number of years the protracted meeting has occurred at this time. The pastor, Rev. G. D. Hunt, was assisted by this writer. This was indeed a most fruitful meeting. Congregations were large, attentive, and interested. The church enjoyed a most gracious revival, and several conversions were reported.

Last Sunday found us at our regular post at Rose Hill. Due to the intense heat and inclemency of the weather, the attendance was rather small. The work here is about normal.

The North Highland church begins a series of meetings next Sunday and Girard will begin a week later. We haven't learned whom Bro. Young expects as an assistant at North Highland. Rev. G. D. Hunt will assist Bro. Milam at Girard. We trust that these churches may have good meetings and that souls may be born into the kingdom of God.

Wakefield, Va.

It has been some time since I have written to The Sun, but the work has been going on all the time and it seems now that we are to have a prosperous year in the Wakefield pastorate. The church is paying off its indebtedness in good spirits. Dendron church is building a thousand dollar addition for Sunday school and auditorium extension, and my other churches are in good condition. Our experience this summer has been varied. Mrs. Jones and the three girls attended Elon College commencement, and from there went to Sanford, N. C. where they visited her parents and sister. She was away about five weeks, and during the time Bernard, our son, and myself remained at home, attended to the chickens and the garden, preached, visited and kept up my work as usual. During our round visiting and boarding at home while Mrs. Jones was away, I gathered a full supply of malaria, and since then I have been in bed one week and out one. I got out of bed and went to Holland, Va., to meet with my brother W. L. Jones, who has been in the South some twenty years, and whom I had not seen in about fourteen years. He has a nice wife and two fine looking little girls. It was a happy meeting as we all gathered once more around the parental home with dear father and mother. Brother and his family, myself and family, and mother went to Holy Neck Church on third Sunday in July. I was not well, but Bro. Newman insisted that I preach, and as brother had never heard me I consented. We had a very good service and we all went home with another one of our brothers, J. Kemp Jones, for dinner and spent a good day with him and his excellent wife. During that week our Jones families were highly entertained at our old home on the farm, now rented by Brother R. H. Babb. Brother Babb and family are splendid people and know how to entertain sumptuously. All of us boys were present except Rev. J. H. Jones, who is now in Topeka, Kansas, and could not be with us. As we were seated around the table in the same room and about at the same place where we used to eat, and enjoy our youthful days, my mind ran back to by-gone days and there were many thoughts of the past and wonders of the future. Father and mother are growing old and we boys are much scattered. It is doubtful if we ever meet again in the flesh.

I attended the Sunday School Convention held at Liberty Spring, but being sick all the while, did not enjoy the Convention as I otherwise would. I feel, however, that it was the greatest convention the Eastern Virginia Conference has ever had. I came home before the Convention closed and have been sick every day since. I am improving some now and hope to be all right soon. The Wakefield pastorate gave me the month of August for vacation, but as previous arrangements had been made, two protracted meetings will be conducted during the month. Our New Lebanon meeting is to begin third Sunday. Rev. D. A. Keys, of S. Norfolk, Va., is to do the preaching. We are expecting a glorious meeting. Rev. C. H. Rowland is to be with us at Wakefield, beginning the fourth Sunday in this month. Brother Rowland is one of our big preachers and we are expecting a great meeting here. May God fill both of these brethren with the Holy Spirit that many may be saved during our meetings. The good people of the Wakefield pastorate have called me to serve them another year at an increased salary. The work has been moving on slowly but nicely during my three years here with the kindest and most thoughtful people of any country. Sister Nannie Stephenson gave us a nice big ham some time ago, Prof. J. J. Lincoln has been feeding us on mutton, Brother R. H. Hargrave, J. H. Harris, J. S. Drewery, Richard Burton and W. L. Anderson have kept us in the finest melons and fruit, so we could not leave such a good people if we wanted to.

We feel very grateful to all these people and ask that they accept our many thanks for their kindness toward us, and we pray, as we accept the call to serve them again that our hearts may be sealed with the love of God, that our work among them another year may be the most fruitful of all the years here. We must stand closer together and love one another better to make God's work count.

Hebron, Va.

The revival at the above named church began Saturday before the third Sunday in July and closed on the following Thursday. Rev. A. T. Banks arrived on Monday and did very acceptable work, both in preaching and song service. His sermons are clear and forceful presentations of gospel truth, and he very much enjoys song service, in which he delights his hearers. Visible results at this church show 8 confessions and 5 additions. The Hebron people became very much attached to Bro. Banks and desire that he come again.

While I was at the above named meeting, the Ladies' Aid Society of Berea Christian Church sent Bro. C. M. Pritchett over to present us with a very nice new quilt, for which we extend our heartiest thanks and appreciation. It is so delightful to be thus remembered by people whom we had formerly served as pastor. The Lord bless them abundantly. The week following fourth Sunday in July I was with Rev. A.

F. Iseley at Concord. Here I was presented with another nice quilt by Sister Lillie Underwood, for which our thanks are extended. I was formerly this good sister's pastor and performed the ceremony that united her to the best husband she ever had. On fifth Sunday in July and week following I was with Rev. A. T. Banks in a good meeting at Amelia.

Shallow Ford.

Here our meeting began on Saturday before second Sunday in August and closed on the following Thursday with four confessions of faith and three additions. Bro. Banks here did faithful and earnest preaching and greatly endeared himself to the congregations, whose expressed desire is that he come again. This church has been somewhat divided, but signs indicate that the people are becoming united, and we are laboring and praying that this may be accomplished.

To the Lord we give all the praise for what has been accomplished. C. C. Peel.

Damascus.

The meeting at Damascus began the first Sunday in August and ended Friday afternoon, Aug. 13.

Rev. C. C. Ryan, of Ansonia, Ohio, did the preaching. Our pastor, Rev. B. F. Black, could not be present, as he had just accepted a position as general secretary of the Clifton Forge Railroad Y. M. C. A.

The church was greatly revived, it being the best revival we have had at Damascus. Some good members united with our church, and we people of Damascus think Bro. Ryan a good preacher.

The congregations were good and appeared to be deeply interested. The Methodist people of Sunbury took an active part in the services. We were glad to have with us during the week Bro. Joe Cross, a good Methodist brother who was deeply interested in the meeting.

There were about thirty conversions, and twelve united with the church.

RAILROAD AND CHURCH.

The religiously inclined railroad men living at Inman Yards on the outskirts of Atlanta will soon worship in a church built especially for them as a result of the generosity of the Southern Railway Company, which, feeling an interest in the spiritual welfare of its employes, donated the lot on which they have erected a neat little edifice.

The church will be dedicated on the first Sunday in September with Rev. G. W. Lewis, a former engineer on the Southern, as pastor. The members are Baptists, and the church will be known as the Inman Yards Baptist Church. The dedication ceremonies will be attended by some of the most prominent Baptist ministers and laymen of Atlanta, and the deed for the property, formally signed by President W. W. Finley of the Southern Railway, will be presented at that time.

The pastor of the church was converted thirty years ago while actively engaged as an engineer on the Southern Railway and he studied the Bible and began to prepare himself for the ministry while still presiding over his throttle. It has always been his ambition to become pastor of a church for railroad men, and although his hair has grown white in the preparation, he is still as enthusiastic and is a vigorous worker and clear, forceful speaker.

"I want to devote the rest of my days to teaching the Word to my railroad comrades," said Rev. Mr. Lewis. "Railroad men are not bad, and they like to go to church just as much as other people whose time is not so inconvenient for worship as theirs. They have the biggest hearts of any people on earth, and I look forward to becoming their pastor out there at Inman with great pleasure.

It wouldn't have been possible for us to have secured our church but for the generosity of the Southern Railway in deeding us the lot and my people certainly appreciate what the road has done for them."

The church is of wood, very simple in architecture and was built at a cost of $1,500. The lot adjoins that donated some time ago by the Southern Railway to the Fulton County Board of Education for school purposes.

RICHES.

Riches are desirable, and poverty is sometimes terrible.

Jesus chose poverty, not because he desired it, but for our sakes; that we through his poverty might be made rich. The riches of heaven are to be sought; and while we cannot all be rich in this life, we certainly can secure wealth for the other life, by "laying up treasures in heaven."

The evil of wealth, even in this world, is not in the riches themselves, but in having the heart set on riches and in the bad use made; to seize more and more, giving the best of one's energies to getting; to devour widow's houses; to oppress the poor and to raise prices by conspiracy with other rich men.

As to combination, the difference between the rich and the poor is, that the poor combine to live while the rich combine to amass wealth.—J. J. Summerbell, in Christian Vanguard.

An Offended Mother.—The Catholic News prints the following letter to a teacher. It explains itself:

"Madin you kepe telling my son to breeth with his dierfrans I supose rich boys and girls al has dierfrans but how about when their father only makes 2 dollers a day and theres 4 younger I tell you its enoug to make everybody socialists first its one thing and then its another and now its dierfrans its too much."

WHITHER?

The Bible is a treatise on tendency. Which way have people gone? Which way are people inclined to go? Which way are you going? Yonder is the wrong way to go. This is the right way to go. It is the mightiest and most lucid treatise on tendency that was ever put into print, is the Bible.

And its words of warning, its examples of warning against evil tendencies are incomparable, are full of fire and flashing flame. The lessons of this quarter might be written out in immortal lines to this end: The way of the transgressor is hard. The soul that sinneth it shall die. And because the great hearts that formed the Book wanted to warn men, and not to wreck them, and because the good God that inspired the Book wanted to reach and redeem men and not leave any to their ruin, this golden text might be written out in words that plead and pray and persuade: Depart from evil and do good; seek peace and pursue it.

I caught these fine phrases from a page by Dr. J. I. Vance the other day: The issue with us all "is a matter of tendency. It is not a matter of heredity or environment or anything or any or everything else so much as it is a matter of tendency that determines the dignity of life. On one occasion, Jesus said to His disciples: 'Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.' He was speaking of the tendencies of his life. He was going somewhere. He lived with His face toward destiny. He was not wandering aimlessly down the aisles of time. He was not strolling purposelessly across the field of human history. Somewhere on the far-away eternal horizon was a goal, and He was moving toward that goal. His life possessed the element of tendency; and this tendency was the matter of chief concern and importance. It was not what He had, nor even what or where He then was, but where He was going."

And this is that of most concern and import in every life: not what one has, not what, not where one is, but where one is going. This makes the life—its trend, its tendency, its whither. This is why youth is interesting and middle age becomes insipid and indifferent. The world has not yet determined where the youth is going, and the world waits and watches to see.

And while the world waits and watches, the Word of God comes in pathetic plea, and in weighty warning, saying to young and old, great and small, Depart from evil and do good; seek peace and pursue it. If this world of warring men and women would heed that plea, and follow the lead of that tendency, we should soon have a paradise and God would reign everywhere.

IS OUR GOVERNMENT ALLIED WITH THE LIQUOR INTERESTS?

On June 16, 1911, there was issued from Washington an official letter from the Department of State to all our Diplomatic and Consular officers, which letter has been, and is, a source of deep regret on the part of many, and of much rejoicing and congratulations on the part of brewers and distillers of beer and whiskey. The letter reads as follows:

Department of State, Washington,
June 16, 1911.

TO THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES:

GENTLEMEN—The Department is advised that there will be held in the city of Chicago, October 12-22 next, the second International Brewers' Congress and an International Barley and Hop Prize Exhibition.

The resolution to hold the second International Brewers' Congress at that time in Chicago was taken by the first International Brewers' Congress, which was held in July, 1910, at Brussels, Belgium, in connection with the Universal Exposition in progress there at that time and under the patronage of the Belgian government.

This congress and exhibition will be international in its scope. Invitations have been extended to the Brewery trade and allied industries and professions of the world in the name of an international committee, embracing the leading men in the brewing and allied industries, as well as in many scientific and technical institutions which work in agriculture, chemistry, and biology.

It is the purpose of this congress to discuss agricultural, scientific, technical and sociological questions connected with the brewing and allied industries.

The Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, the Hon. James Wilson, has accepted an invitation to act as honorary president of this congress, and the United States Department of Agriculture will be represented at the International Barley and Hop Exposition by a suitable exhibit.

Chemists and plant physiologists of the United States Department of Agriculture and the agronomists of nearly all the barley and hop-growing States of the Union are members on awards for this exhibition.

In transmitting to the government the information herein contained you will also state that, while this congress and this exhibition are not under the official patronage of the government of the United States, this government would be glad if the government of the country to which you are accredited would give due publicity to the congress and exhibition mentioned, and would recommend the sending of delegates to the congress by the scientific institutions and trade organizations interested, and the sending of exhibits by such institutions and by growers of products that are suitable for this exhibition as well as the attendance of individuals from the ranks of those interested in these lines.

I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

P. C. Knox."

It is true that brewing is not distilling and beer is not whiskey, but that they are "allied industries" the distillers and saloon keepers well understand, as the following indicates. As soon as this paper was issued from the Department of State there appeared in "The Liberal Advocate"—an organ and promoter of saloons—the following comment:

"Perhaps no more striking incident has occurred in years as showing the blatant nonsense of the howling fanatics of Prohibition in inveighing against the liquor trade than the dignified manner in which the highest officials of the government recognize the stand, importance and usefulness of the trade in connection with the second International Brewers' Conference and Barley and Hop Exhibition, fixed to be held at Chicago, October 12-22 next."

So, not out of our mouth, but out of that of the whiskey dealers themselves, comes the verdict that our government at Washington is allied with the liquor trade and against "the blatant nonsense of the howling fanatics of Prohibition."

This is no condemnation of one political party more than another. It is and has been the policy of our government under both and under all political parties. The liquor interests have always sought to lodge themselves in high places, and to rule from exalted stations, and have so far largely succeeded.

This indicates something of the war that is yet to be waged against the power and the sway of the rum traffic before that accursed traffic is ever overthrown. The fight for law, order, temperance, sobriety, has hardly begun. The skirmish lines only have been engaged. Before this enemy, the mightiest single foe to the human race, is overthrown, the roar of cannon, the resounding of musketry, must be heard throughout the whole sweep, scope and domain of that army whose banner is the Cross, and whose ensign is Calvary.

—Mr. Rockefeller has just given another million to aid medical research. If this gift helps as did that for hookworm treatment, the gift is one of beneficence indeed.

A PASSIONLESS CHURCH.

That evangelist of the Word of God, G. Campbell Morgan of London, is reputed to have said, as the result of a recent visit to our country, "I find in America a passionless church and an indifferent world." We do not see how more meaning could be packed into fewer words. But is the indictment true? Has the church lost its passion, its brimming, burning, bursting desire for the salvation of souls, for the redemption of the lost? Has the world about us lost its interest in the church, in things religious, and become indifferent to its own condition, and conditions that obtain in general? What think Christian Sun readers?

The church is staying open. It is having regular preaching. It is supporting missions. It is maintaining the gospel. It is opening new charities. It is endowing colleges. It is caring for the poor and the needy. But, has the church lost its passion for souls? That is the question. Do ministers care any more as they used to? Are they anxious, eagerly and zealously and determinedly anxious for the salvation of souls as they were in other days?

Whatever else the church may do, be or have, if it has lost its passion for souls, its deep and flaming desire to reach men and save souls, then the church is getting, has already gotten, upon dangerous and deadly ground.

And no man is in such dangerous plight as is that man who has become indifferent, who doesn't care any more. If ours is an indifferent world, an unconcerned world, a world that does not care any more about what the church is doing, or is trying to do, then ours is indeed an evil and a corrupt time.

Again the inquiry, Is Dr. Morgan's indictment true? Is ours a passionless church and an indifferent world? God of our Fathers forbid!

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

An Education Too Late?

We see from the papers that an ex-congressman from Nevada has quit the political hustings and entered the freshman class of a university in that State. The exact age of the ex-statesman is not given, but he cannot be this side of the thirties, and so the papers are poking fun at the man who waxes knowledge and is willing to begin low down to get it. Here is prophesying that the ex-Congressman means business, and will live to tower, in strength and usefulness, above the heads of the fellows who now make the fun at his expense. It is never too late to learn and our sympathies are distinctly with the Congressman at college.

About this time of year look out for the boys and girls, young men and young women, who will stay away from college solely because they are too old and are eager to engage in their life's work. "Too old for school now," has ruined more otherwise brilliant and useful careers than any one slogan we know. We actually met a young man the other day just twenty-one, and previously a young woman just nineteen, both of whom said "they were too old to start to college now." They were not too old, were in fact at the very richest time of life for real work and study, but they used the term as an easy excuse for not doing that which, of all others in reason's name, they should have done. A young man is not too old to go to college until he has equipped himself for useful service; a young woman is not, until she has fitted herself, by study, to fill a position of usefulness to which her aspirations may lead her. Too old to learn, while yet the heart is anxious and the mind is virile and anxious?

Grover Cleveland.

The spirit of this man has long since gone beyond the sting of earthly calumny or the pleasures of worldly praise. From the record he made, the life he lived, and the events and issues that soared and surged about him we of the living may yet learn, and to profit, if we will.

As the heat, the passion and the prejudice incident to his day and career die out the world is coming to see, more and more, his rugged honesty, his unswerving integrity, and his deep religious susceptibility.

Cleveland's father was a Presbyterian preacher, and the son, destined to renown and prestige in the world, was born in the manse at Caldwell, N. J. The house is still occupied by the Presbyterian minister, and it was recently suggested to convert this house into a memorial to the illustrious memory of Grover Cleveland. No sooner was the movement under way than erstwhile foes appeared and objected on the ground that Grover Cleveland regarded ever and always the town of his nativity with ill-favor and aversion.

To eradicate this falsehood against a patriotic man, this letter has recently been made prominent:

Executive Mansion, Albany.

December 5, 1884.

REV. C. T. BERRY, PASTOR PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CALDWELL, N. J. DEAR SIR: I have your letter informing me that on the 7th of the present month the centennial of the church at Caldwell in which my father once preached will be celebrated.

Though I remember almost nothing of the village where I spent a few early days, I can sincerely say that the spot is dear to me, as the place of his birth should be dear to every man. The name brings to mind scenes in the family circle, when the incidents of Caldwell life were recalled and dwelt upon with pleasure and gratitude. And when I remember that there my sainted parents had their home, and there my godly father wrought and struggled in his heavenly Father's mission, the place seems to me hallowed and sacred.

The Caldwell church, built up and prospered by the labors of such pious and devoted men as have been its pastors, has much in its centennial year to chasten and consecrate its history. In the days to come may it always remain true and steadfast in the work committed to its charge, faithfully teaching the pure doctrine of the gospel and avoiding all malice and uncharitableness. Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Think you that wicked man, an unscrupulous and a depraved being, as many once made believe Grover Cleveland was, could have written a letter like that? Certainly not while in the flesh. We caught this fine sentence from The New York Christian Advocate and with it we heartily agree, with the added comment that the virtues of an honest and sincere man cannot be obscured forever, though vice and vituperation may do their worst:

"The rugged honesty of Grover Cleveland caused him to make a breach with a large section of his political supporters. It would be a peculiar personality which, knowing the facts, would deny the proposition that Grover Cleveland was as near as any other President to keeping his official actions in unison with his convictions.

In this particular he approximated Washington and Lincoln.

—And now Canada is having a bitter election fight over Reciprocity with the United States. It takes two to make a bargain, and it seems not quite certain yet as to whether our Reciprocity agreement with Canada will be accepted by Canada.

—Saturday night, Aug. 26, 1500 people were gathered in a moving picture show at Canonsburg, Pa., when, some nervous idiot seeing a film afire, cried, "Fire, fire." There was a stampede for the door, in which this awful and sickening record was made: Twenty-six persons were killed outright, twenty-five were seriously injured, and thirty are suffering from minor hurts. If all had kept their seats in quietness and calmly, not one would have been hurt. Undue excitement has carried its millions to an untimely grave.

—Professor Brannock returned from the hospital in Greensboro several days ago to his home in Mebane. He continues to improve and will move his family here as soon as he is able to do so.

OUR FATHER.

Jesus taught His disciples, and all others, to address God with these words. Did He mean anything by it or not? If He meant anything, He meant just what the words express. If God is our Father, we are His children, members of His family, dependents upon His providential care, subjects of His government. These relations are not dependent upon our accepting the Plan of Salvation taught us by our Savior Jesus the Christ. All men are children of God because they are created in His image and likeness. In all their natural endowments they are "just like their Father."

This is the true view-point—the only true view-point—from which to study human life—its nature, its dependences, its duties, its destiny. The relation of parent and child is three fold:

1. The fact itself; one is the parent, the other is a child. This is the nearest relationship known. All other relations may be severed, but this is inseverable. No disagreement, no alienation of feeling, can alter the fact. That fact remains; one is the parent, the other the child. The duties that grow out of this relation are mutual. They are love, confidence, interest in each other's welfare and happiness, and devotion to that end. On this relation, irrespective of anything else, is based the First Commandment, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.

2. The relation of provider and dependent. It is the duty of the parent to provide for all the needs of His children. The provisions God has made for His family are inconceivable; and what are inconceivable are inexpressible. Every fact and every law in the universe, whether in matter, mind or spirit, is of this nature. See the nineteenth Psalm. The duties this relation devolves upon the child are easily understood. Grateful recognition of the Father's providence and hearty expressions of thankfulness must be the first response of every filial soul. Here we find the first element of prayer; suggesting the great fact that should be known and understood by all, that worship is a spontaneous outgrowth of our nature, and not solely a mandatory ordinance. But another great duty lies in this connection. Knowing that "Our Father" has supplies for all our needs, those needs spontaneously prompt to the duty of petition,—the second element of worship. Thus we see that what we call religion has its imperative in our very nature.

3. The relation of parent and child includes also that of ruler and subject. The duty of parents to exercise authority over their children has divine sanction in the divine example. "Jehovah is King in all the earth," because He is the Father of all its inhabitants. This reveals to us another great fact, that the Kingdom of God is a Family Government: that God is a Father-King, and His subjects are His children. His sovereignty is based upon His parental love, not upon His Omnipotence. His laws are precepts of instruction, prompted by parental love; and exactly adapted to the needs of His children; instead of arbitrary edicts, based upon His Omnipotence. The imperative to obedience is filial love, not fear of punishment. This in fact is the only obedience recognized as obedience in God's Kingdom. Doing what God requires for fear of dreadful consequences if it is not done, is no obedience at all. It may be sufficient in a human government, where courts take cognizance of outward acts only, but it will never pass with God who knows the thoughts and intents of the heart.

Perhaps there is no field of inquiry, investigation and progress in the discovery of truth, in which the tendency of human nature to carry matters to extremes has made itself so conspicuous, and has led to such mischievous results, as in the field of spiritual truth and the spiritual life. The early converts from heathenism to Christianity, under the influences of the scandalous times in which they lived, and the false notions of the relations existing between men and the god they worshipped in which they had been educated, conceived that the Kingdom of God is based upon His Almightyness, and that His "decrees" were uttered "for His own glory," however repugnant they might be to human reason and human love; and declared that "whosoever will be saved must believe" the decisions of their bigoted Councils. The doctrines they taught, and the creeds they framed dominated the Church for fifteen hundred years, making the pages of Church History red with the blood of martyrs, and black with un-Christ-like deeds of cruel persecution.

The nineteenth century, especially in this land of "freedom," witnessed a revolt against such a theory of the disposition of God toward the human race, and of the nature of His Kingdom; and seemed to make the discovery, long hidden from the world, that God is "Our Father," as well as "King of all the earth." In the discussion that followed the discovery, many loose ideas were advanced respecting God's dealings with men as their Father; the most mischievous of which is that He is an "Indulgent Father." Out of this misleading phrase has grown all the nonsense published under the name of "New Religion," representing God as indifferent to offences against His laws and commands, than which nothing can be farther from the truth. Every law (precept) He has given to man must be obeyed perfectly, from the heart, with filial love, or evil consequences must follow to the offender. "He that sinneth against God wrongeth his own soul." No other father is so devoted to the welfare and happiness of His children, and no other so exacting of perfect obedience. Indulgent parents spoil and ruin their children. If God's children go to the bad, it is their own fault, not His. Let no one reject, or hesitate to receive the doctrine of the "Fatherhood of God" and the brotherhood of man as the logical inference from that fact, because short-sighted and designing men have misused it. There are truths to-day, as there were in the days of the apostle Peter, "which the ignorant and unsteadfast wrest unto their own destruction." Beware of such persons! "Hold fast the pattern of sound words." It would be a great calamity as well as a great blunder to lose the power of a great truth for good, because ignorant and unstable men have wrested it from its place in God's great system of truth, and made a bad use of it.

A RETROSPECT OF THE SUMMER'S WORK.

The campaign for students this summer has been waged persistently from the close of the College in June until now and will be continued until Sept. 5th, and after also.

We have never had the co-operation and assistance of the students, alumni, ministers, and friends of the College so fully and unstintingly as this year. Every mail almost has brought a name or a letter from some of our friends concerning a prospective student or students. We have taken the matter up immediately with the parties reported and, in many cases, by the help of the good friends reporting them, we have been able to get their applications in hand. In others we have failed, but only after a thorough effort.

The reception given our field representatives and the accommodations shown them were never more cordial and helpful. These evidences of interest and concern and sympathy place the College authorities under lasting obligations to our brotherhood and encourage us to go forward in our efforts to do our duty.

The Faculty have done their best. Dr. Newman has rendered efficient and most valuable service in the office. Dr. Wicker and Dr. Amick have done effective service in the field. Prof. Brannock was hindered by sickness from doing what he had planned to do in the field. Prof. Lawrence was in Ohio and was excused from the field work on that account. Prof.

Lincoln worked in the office. Mr. Campbell was to have canvassed in the Valley of Virginia for some time, but business engagements hindered. The President has done what he could, in field and in office.

To show our friends that we have not been idle in the office, we may state that we have mailed out nearly 12,000 separate pieces of second-class matter, catalogues, bulletins, and a vacation issue of the Elon College Weekly, and sent out 11,925 personal letters.

These combined efforts, so loyally consecrated to the good of the College and the cause it represents, warrant us in the expectation of a great, good opening on the sixth day of September. Let our friends not forget that the few days between now and the opening are critical days with doubtful students. A word now will perhaps mean a new student, and we believe that our friends will speak it and many more besides to all within their reach. We believe more than this, that they will go out of their way to speak to those doubtful ones.

We have done our best, all of us, faculty, students, friends, ministers, alumni, all of us, and we are expecting a good enrollment for the coming year.

Our sincerest thanks to the many devoted ones who have labored and sympathized and prayed for Elon this summer.

W. A. Harper.

AT LAST.

Perhaps every hour some new thought is had, some new enterprise is started, some undertaking finished and another begun. We are continually looking forward to something we have never seen, to something that will free us from bondage, release our burdens or bring us some pleasure that we have longed for. The prisoner looks anxiously through the bars and counts the days upon his fingers, or perhaps, the months and years upon a little calendar he has secured, to learn just how long he must remain in the cell. But looking forward, upward, onward is the only way to achieve success in this life, or the life to come.

The farmer goes to his farm duties early in the spring with a merry heart, a glad face, a cheerful countenance because just ahead of him he can see green fields of waving corn, meadows of restless clover, acres of blooming cotton, trees of ripened fruits, all waiting for his command. The small boy looks and longs for the time when he can leave home and go out into the world to push his own way. Mother counts the days as weeks, and weeks as months for son to pay her a visit. So, we are all looking forward to something that we have hoped for, to something better, higher, greater, nobler. But strange to say, many people are looking to and for better things, and never put forth a single effort to accomplish what they desire.

Just at this season of the year we can scarcely find ourselves in company with a dozen young people, and not find some who are making preparations to enter school or college. The mails are laden with applications from students all over the country, some planning to go hundreds of miles, while others seek their home institutions and place themselves in the care of the man or woman who loves to build up his own county, his own State, and see the sons and daughters of his own native community shine as beacon lights to the world. But this is not the burden of this article, for the writer is willing to give every one the right of his own opinion in school, church, state, or any other matter.

Just now many mothers, and fathers, too, are busily engaged getting son and daughter ready to leave for school. Oh! the many little conveniences mother will pack away in the trunk. How thoughtful, how patient, how good and kind is mother! So, in short, mother is going to do what daughter did in order that she (the daughter) may be a better trained woman than mother. Father is making sacrifices and doing work almost too hard for a man at his age in order that son may get training that will help him cope and measure with competitors in the world. But all the sacrifices that mother can make, all the willingness that father can offer, all the kind words of friends, and all the congratulations that the public can bestow will not make for the boy or girl success within itself. Only the aim so high that it can not be reached; so deep that it can not be rooted up; a purpose so strong that it can not be broken, and a determination beyond control by the evil forces, will lift the student from the valley of ignorance to the mountain tops of freedom and intelligence.

Among the vast number of students who will enter schools and colleges next week Elon will doubtless get her share. Many will enter that have longed to do so before, and among this number the writer hopes to be present. When he first started to school away from home, he started to Elon also, but did not get there as soon as he desired, as trials came to him at more times than one. The writer has had the good fortune of having to pay every penny of his expenses, so far; also a vacation of two months in a hospital with a big expense on his own person since trying to get to Elon. But at last the clouds have dispersed, the sun is now shining very brightly around where he is sitting, and this week he gives up his position that he may at last go to Elon.

In going to Elon I make it a pleasure because of my choice, for everyone has a reason for going to the school he selects. But we should be able to give a justifiable reason for entering the school we do. A reason can not be satisfactory, to me, unless it has embodied in it the fact that the school teaches pure, sound, and wholesome doctrine. That the school offers an influence that will have a tendency to mould characters such as one can be proud of, that will hold near and dear the doctrines of the Bible, will teach, and cause to be taught, Christ as the Savior of the world,—these are the causes that have led me to decide to go to Elon.

COURAGE AND THE DENTIST.

Every inhabitant of the United States above the age of six who has a natural tooth in his head ought to go to the dentist at least twice a year. Every intelligent inhabitant knows it, but only comparatively few go. It hurts; and a great many people will suffer hours of agony rather than be hurt for a few minutes.

The dentist finally is as inevitable as death and taxes, but he is one of the many things that you can lie to yourself about for a long while. You can say you'll go next month or the first of the year; you can pretend that the unpleasant sensation in the side of your head results merely from a cold and will soon pass away. Like the "moderate drinker" whose digestion is going wrong you can tell yourself that the laws of Nature will probably be miraculously suspended in your behalf and the cavity in your tooth will presently disappear without taking the tooth with it. As with a hundred other bad or foolish practices, you can dodge and pretend and procrastinate for quite a spell.

Meanwhile the dentist is waiting for you in serene assurance. From time to time he merely takes the auger out of his electric drill and replaces it with one a size larger. If you put off going long enough he meets you with an implement which comes out through the top of your head at the tenth revolution, incidentally pulling your heart up by the roots. His profession requires him to be an exceedingly just man and pay you off to the last penny; but if you go to him courageously two or three times a year he will scarcely hurt you at all. The experience will not be more disagreeable than eating a mouthful of soft soap.—Saturday Evening Post.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles U. Butler are this week singing in a revival at the First Baptist Church, Spartanburg, S. C., and are with great congregations in a good work there. They go next week to Kinston, N. C.

—The Christian religion increases its adherents year by year, but so do other religions. The Mohammedans claim an increase to their faith of a million adherents a year. It is time indeed Christianity was awake to "convert the world in this generation," if these mighty tendencies of paganism are to be overcome.

—Dr. W. T. Herndon and Rev. C. E. Newman recently closed a very successful revival with our new church organization at Nathalie, Va. There were 19 conversions and twenty names were given to join the church. Much of the lumber is on the ground and the house of worship is to be begun at once. This is a promising point, with a substantial membership and in a locality that greatly needs and deserves a church.

—The delightful letter from Sweet Chalybeate Springs, Va., by our beloved friend, Mrs. T. A. Jones, whose descriptive letters from Florida two winters ago many Sun readers yet remember, will be read with refreshing interest and delight. Mrs. Jones is one of those dear, delightful souls who always sees the bright and happy side of life, and her fertile pen emits rays of sunshine to cheer and gladden all who come within its reach.

—We regret to learn that Rev. C. E. Newman has been for several days quite ill with small-pox at Virgillina, Va. He was taken ill during his recent meeting at Virgillina, and up to this writing has not been able to be carried home. We pray for his speedy recovery. Bro. Newman is one of our busy, efficient and successful pastors. The only safety from small-pox in our time, for us who are on the train much, ministers in particular, is successful and repeated vaccination.

—We note with pardonable pride that President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, has an excellent article in last week's Christian Endeavor World, Boston and Chicago. We do not understand how, with all his multitudinous duties, Pres. Harper finds time for untold outside work, writing excellent articles for the press constantly, lecturing from many platforms in many places, save on the ground that the busy man is the one to call on when the extra task is to be done.

—Rev. S. L. Baugher changes his address from Conshohocken, Pa., to Portland, Ind. Bro. Baugher writes: "I have accepted a call to the First Christian Church in Portland, and will preach my last sermons here Aug. 27th, and leave on Aug. 30th for Portland, Ind. Portland is a city of 9,000 people, and the Christian Church is located on Main St., the best location in the city. They have there a $10,000 church. The call came to me last April, and is, I feel, a call of the Lord to a larger field of usefulness and service. I am to preach my first sermon in Portland Sept. 3rd."

—We fear our Northfield colony, Revs. N. G. Newman, A. N. Hanson, and J. W. Harrell, have disbanded, or gone broke without even a postage stamp, as we have no letter from either this week. If we knew they would use it in writing to The Sun, and not in sending a letter home for money, we would risk a stamp on them. But we have fears. We sincerely hope The Sun will have yet many letters from them while under the inspiration of the great and good and uplifting services at Northfield.

—Rev. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Walker Avenue Church in Greensboro, has been unanimously called to serve the church the next conference year. That Brother Smith is greatly loved and appreciated by his congregation is shown by the fact that he was unanimously called again, and also by the further action of the church in voluntarily voting him a substantial increase in salary. Brother Smith has not indicated his acceptance, but it is generally understood that he will accept. Under his leadership the church has prospered mightily during the year. He is also popular with the ministerial brethren of his city, and the church is often visited by members of other churches who are attracted by his personality and his sermons.

—Very many Christian Sun readers should have a copy of the Life and Writings of the late lamented Rev. H. Y. Rush. Dr. Rush was a great lover of The Sun and during several of the later years of his life contributed to its columns very often, and very acceptably. Do you wish a copy of his book? Here are the terms:

An order sent in with the cash before Sept. 1st, will bring the book to you post-paid for $1.00. After September 1st the price will be $1.25. The book has gone to press and will be ready for delivery by September 1. It promises to be a handsome book, with rich contents. A copy ought to find a place in every home in the Christian Church. Do not forget that up to September 1st $1.00 will pay for it, but after that date it will take $1.25 to pay for it. No time to lose if you are going to get it at $1.00.

Your order will be attended to if you send with the cash to The Christian Sun, Elon College, N. C. We feel sure it will be worth four times the price, for Dr. Rush was indeed a noble and magnanimous spirit, a ready and fluent writer. Send your order at once and get the book at the lower price. You will want a copy.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Mr. W. Samuel Tate died in the ninetieth year of his age at his home here on last Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock, his disease being old age. He was buried from the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church on Wednesday, where he was a life-long member. Mr. Tate is survived by a widow and two children, Miss Mamie, of the Hill, and Mr. Robert O. Tate, of Norfolk. It is rumored that Mrs. Tate and Miss Mamie will make their future home in Norfolk. Mr. Tate's death makes Uncle Wellons our oldest living citizen.

Capt. and Mrs. Willis J. Lee, Driver, Va., are happy in their annual visit to the home of Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson. Elon has no truer, more loyal, more liberal friends than these two devoted Christians. From the laying of the very first brick until this present day their loyalty and liberality have never wavered. Their presence on the campus and in the community is a blessing and a benediction.

The Art Studio and the Infirmary in the West Dormitory are nearing completion.

Prof. Amick this week moves into his new home north of the Macadam Road. The Whitesell property, which he has been occupying, will be the home of Prof. Brannock for the coming year.

Extensive repairs are being made on the Power House. New grates are being installed and other necessary work done on the engine and boiler.

Many of our citizens have by reason of the long-continued drought been compelled to bore deep wells on their premises. The College deep well, like Tennyson's brook, goes on forever. It has not lowered an inch during all the dry season.

Mrs. Harper visited her parents in the northern part of the county last week and attended the Sunday-school Convention of the county at Fairview Church Sunday. So also did Messrs. J. C. McAdams and J. P. Huffman attend this Convention. They were such nice looking delegates that the committee on getting a place to hold the March session of the County Convention besought them to invite it here and they did. The Convention will occur on the fifth Sunday and the Saturday before in March next.

Miss Louine Mackay, who is to teach in the graded school this year will occupy the property of Mr. Peter Cable above the stores on Lebanon Avenue and will put her sister and brother in the College. Mr. Williams, who has been living here, will conduct a club house in the property known as the Carr property, now owned by Prof. Lawrence, who is erecting a large dining room for the club boys.

Mrs. Sadie Jones and children have returned from an extended vacation trip to Wake County. Mrs. Jones is now busy getting her home in readiness for the opening and will conduct a high-class private boarding house for young men during the coming year.

The prospect is bright, as we see it. There is work yet to be done and our friends are doing it. We have never known so much interest and effort to be displayed as our friends are displaying just now, and if Elon does not open well, I am sure it will not be their fault. Let them keep up the good work and we feel sure that all will be well.

Campus and College buildings are now almost in readiness for the opening. In a few days all they will lack to make them ideal College homes will be the merry choruses of happy student voices and that will not be lacking after the fifth. Let every friend do his best to make the number participating in that chorus as large as possible.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler concluded their visit here on Wednesday last. They gave a song recital in the Chapel on Wednesday evening and were greeted by a large and appreciative audience.

Dr. Wicker is now "taking his vacation" in Gastonia. He deserves it.

Rev. Jas. L. Foster is suffering quite a great deal of his throat at present. It is sincerely hoped that his trouble of a few years back, which necessitated his retirement from the active pastoral work, will not return.

Prof. Brannock has returned from the hospital to Mebane where he is recuperating and getting ready for the opening.

Miss Mabel Cooke, Youngsville, N. C., has been appointed Librarian for the coming session and will arrive Sept. 2.

Rev. J. O. Cox, Durham, N. C., was in the town from a great revival with the Parks Cross Roads Church on Friday. Twenty-one joined the church.

The Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees examined the books of the outgoing Treasurer, Dr. Fleming, last Friday, and all papers and moneys of the Corporation were turned over to the new treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox, at that time.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Most of the churches have been having vacation. Next Sunday will find many of the pastors again in their pulpits. Bro. Hanson, who has been in New York the past week, studying "Social Settlement Work," is to reach home next Friday morning and occupy his pulpit Sunday morning and evening.

Bro. Howsare, who spent a few days with his family in Ohio, has returned and is at work again. Bro. Harrell got back from Northfield last week and told his people something of his Northfield trip Sunday.

Sunday school and prayer meeting at the Third Church have been unusually well attended this summer. Last Wednesday night there were more than 50 present.

J. W. Manning.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

To say that 1911 has given us a hot summer is to repeat what many thousand others have said; but repetition contains emphasis when the original contained a great truth. Centuries of rising have not lessened the glory of sun-rise, and the preaching of the Cross gains in power over men with all the multiplied agencies by which it is repeated in this twentieth century of the Christian era. Love's repeated action and expression loses nothing by its oft-told story and the door-sill of home does not lose interest because it has been passed over for three score years and ten. Songs and sermons, hammer strokes and plow furrows, wash-tubs and hot irons, dinner tables and prayer meetings, the Bible stories and the old church gather force by increased use. The worthless and the useless will not bear the test of repetition. The pleasures of sin "for a season" tell the story of unsatisfying wrong. The "pleasures forevermore" are at the right hand of God. The moral and spiritual acts of the soul never wear out and never lose interest to the pious soul. Like the song of some sweet bird on the barren limb of some dead tree in a forest where no green leaf graces a single bow, the soul rejoices in a body already tottering toward the tomb.

I have heard with sorrow of the affliction of Prof. Brannock in Greensboro Hospital and Rev. C. E. Newman at Virgilina, and sincerely pray that both may be restored to health very soon.

I congratulate the congregations of Rev. N. G. Newman, J. W. Harrell, and A. M. Hanson upon the attendance of their pastors at the Northfield Conference. Preachers need contact with preachers far and near, and at Northfield the finest preachers of the world pour out the best wine of mature years. It seems that England produces the best preachers of all lands, which would seem to prove that England is the most religious nation. One might say that England is to Christendom what Judaism was to the ancient religious world. I think our minister's conference of Eastern Va. Conference which used to meet monthly, but now bi-monthly, and which has studied together many good books, has inspired our preachers with a thirst for spiritual knowledge and efficiency. It also unifies our thought, our purpose, our work. It removes jealousies, envies, misunderstandings, and produces a genuine fraternal bond.

My vacation will soon be ended and then back to desk and pastoral duties.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., has been conducting a meeting at Youngsville this week and has been assisted by Rev. Neal Rowland, of Texas, though Carolina born. I had often heard of him and now I have heard him myself. He is clear, Biblical, forceful, heartfelt, and original in his presentation of the truth. He is full of deep feeling without being sensational; full of spirituality without fanaticism; and he cracks nuts that are neither immature nor rancid. He is a good preacher, and they had a good meeting.

W. W. Staley.

—This is the way in which The New York Christian Advocate deals with a very pointed and pertinent issue:

"The temptation which is held up before the Board of Directors of Lafayette University as a sweet morsel is the promise of a 'broader' sphere of usefulness if it will but surrender its charter as a Presbyterian college and become non-sectarian. 'All these things will I give thee'—money, influence, a name that thou art intellectually broad and liberal, a larger influx of rich men's sons who go to college for sport and not for study—if thou wilt fall down and worship me.' The God it is asked to worship is the creedless, Christless spirit prevailing in certain educational and philanthropic circles."

The very glory of our Elon College is this, that its charter is fixed to the Christians, and the Christless spirit that prevails in certain educational circles is of no avail to reach or touch it—thanks to the wisdom of those whose hearts were on the altar when it was founded and its charter obtained. May God protect it forever, in the name of His Christ, from any other cause or course. A Christless college is the camping ground of devils.

—The Ram's Horn, once so popular in many homes, is again sending forth scintillations from the anvil of its founder, E. P. Brown. Catch a few of its glowing sparks:

"Every sore eye hates the light."

"The devil gets many a boy by getting his father first."

"God alone knows how much is lost when a child is started wrong."

"The busybody and the scarlet sinner are classed together in the Bible."

"The world is in more of a famine for sympathy than it ever was for bread."

"Many a man who boasts of his honesty in business robs God without a blush."

—The weather bureau predicts a good, sound, soaking rain in these Southern States this week—and there is need.

Young People's Department.

Devoted to the interests of the Young People's Convention,
Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training and Organized Classes.

Edited by Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.

IN THE FIELD OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

Is your Sunday school class organized? If not, do you believe it is capable of greater work if the members were set to work in an orderly sort of way?

At the Oklahoma convention one of the young women remarked: "I am going to quit spending my Sunday afternoons in the park, and will organize a Junior society."

The young men of a class heretofore organized in the Greensboro Christian church have reorganized under the name of the Baraca class. Bro. John R. Foster is teacher and this is a wise selection. Mr. S. A. Caviness is president of the class. This organization has great opportunities and we shall expect great work of it.

Two Christian Endeavor societies have just been organized by Mr. Sam M. Burritt in the Raleigh, N. C., State Prison: a white society of seventeen members, President Baker in charge, and a colored society of nineteen members under President Moore.

It is hoped later to organize the women, as they are not permitted to meet in religious service with the men.

Endeavorers are asked to remember these societies in their prayers, that many of the men may find through them the liberty that Christ alone can give.—C. E. World.

A delegate to the Atlantic City Convention from far-away Arkansas, Miss Mattie E. Bliss, of Little Rock, who has spent the month of July at the famous beach, writes:

"I want to tell you what I saw yesterday when I went surf-bathing: a piece of bright red, fluttering from a pole, away out in the surf.

"On wading out toward it I discovered that it was one of our Christian Endeavor flags, which a life-guard had placed out there to mark the limit of safety for bathers."

How fitting that this little flag, bearing an emblem that represents a vast army of people banded together to warn, to help, and to save, should stand there like a loyal Endeavorer, with the waves dashing around it!—C. E. World.

Topics for Short Talks.

1. The Life of the Denomination's Founder.
2. Beginnings of the Denomination.
3. The History of our Denomination.
4. Missionary Work of Our Church.
5. Present Strength of the Denomination.
6. Discuss the Roots, Trunk, Branches, Fruit, Work and Hope—one of the daily readings to different members.

Denomination is a sectarian term applied to the different bodies that have come into existence since Bible days. The number is lamentably legion. Each year sees the number increase rather than diminish. The desire of good and leading men in the various denominations is to see them brought together, yet the method of doing so is not plain.

Christian Endeavor is doing much along this line of bringing the denominations into closer relationship. The Laymen's Missionary Movement is accomplishing a like purpose. The trend is toward a more harmonious feeling between the denominations, especially in missionary work. Perhaps if we work together, the fact that we labor under different mundane appellations will not matter so much. The thing we most need is churches that will allow freedom of conscience and liberty of thought and speech, as well as form of service, and to this added unison in missionary endeavor, civic efforts and all laudable methods of spreading the Master's gospel.

Every Christian Endeavorer should know the history of his own "denomination." This study will bring him in touch with great lives of force and heroism. It will bring him in touch with leading principles. He should know the plan of government, teaching and work of the church; its assemblies, hoards, membership, missionary activity, and evangelistic spirit. Study roots, trunk, branches, and fruit.

The world has witnessed the denominational strife, has heard quarrels, and has likewise doubted whether Christ ever came or not. And if He came, did his coming amount to much, if those who profess to be his followers are arrayed against each other? They sometimes seem to be more bent on opposing each other than they are on fighting sin. I sometimes wonder what defense the divided followers of Christ will give when lost souls lay their destruction at the door of sectarianism.

"That they all may be one." "And why?" asks the Father. "That the world may believe," responds the Son. "And in what sense would you have them one?" again asks the Father. Why, "even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee," answers the Savior. But more, "that they also may be in us." Paul says, "There is one body, and one spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all."

It is not the finished product about which we are to be concerned. Many a young person becomes discouraged because he thinks his life is unfruitful, even though deeply desirous of being fruitful. To such we would say "we are not concerned about the fruit. God giveth the increase. Only you abide in Christ. Make that your chief concern, and he will be responsible for the fruit. Moreover, we are incapable of judging the fruit. Only God can measure its quality and quantity."

A Recitation.

Forgive, O Lord, our erring ways,
The separate altars that we raise,
The varying tongues that speak thy praise!
Suffice it now. In time to be
Shall one great temple rise to thee,
Thy church our broad humanity,
White flowers of love its walls shall climb,
Sweet bells of peace shall ring its chime,
Its days shall be holy time,
Thy hymn, long sought, shall then be heard,
The music of the world's accord,
Confessing Christ, the inward word!
That song shall swell from shore to shore,
One faith, one love, one hope restore
The seamless garb that Jesus wore!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

A PREPARED PEOPLE.

For every calling some scientific preparation is required. One cannot be a skilled mechanic without a course of preparation. The hand, the eye, the mind must be trained for the work. No one can play skillfully on the organ or harp without specific preparaion. His fingers must be trained to manipulate the keys, his ear must be trained to distinguish tones, his mind must be taught to understand the laws of music.

Many fail in their work. Teachers fail. Lawyers fail. Merchants fail. Ministers fail. Why? Not always because they lack ability, not usually because they lack energy and industry, but chiefly because they lack preparation. They are not adequately prepared before they entered upon their work, and have not made proper preparation since.

Some young men do not appreciate the necessity of preparation. They waste the time and fritter away the opportunities afforded them for preparation, thinking that all they need is a position, and they will trust to their native ability to fill the place and do the work. This is a fatal mistake. Young men need not trouble themselves about a position. Plenty of places are waiting for men who are thoroughly prepared. Let every young man look well to his preparation. Be prepared for the place, and the place will find you.

Living is a business, the greatest business under the sun. Living right is greater than being a successful lawyer, a successful merchant, or a successful teacher. To live right requires careful and conscientious preparation. Men think and talk much about being prepared to die, but do you ever hear anyone say much about being preared to live? Who thinks about prearing to live? We are living already, are we not? Why then talk about preparing to live? Anyone can live. Surely any one can live, but very few know how to live well.

Men and women have reached middle life without knowing how to live right. Some have come down to old age without knowing how to live, and without even beginning to live right. To see multitudes existing, hungering, thirsting, eating, drinking, sleeping, breathing, running to and fro in the earth, struggling and toiling, without knowing how to live is one of the most pathetic sights under the sun. They are not trying to learn the secret of living well. Yet here is the greatest business in the world, and we are all in it, and most men are in this business without being preared. How loosely this business is transacted. If men transacted other kinds of business as they do this very few would succeed in anything. Are we prepared to live? Are we preparing to live?

There are many preparatory schools where young people may be fitted for life. The home is one, the common school is another, the college is another. All the banks, stores, and factories are little else but preparatory institutions engaged in fitting people for life. What mistakes we make. Most men think of the home as a place for comfort and happiness, instead of a preparatory school fitting young people for life. They think of the school as a place where the mind may be stored with knowledge of science, and the store and factory as places to make money. But if all these institutions are not engaged in preparing people for life, they are missing their chief mission in the earth.

What is the Church, together with the Sunday school, the Epworth League, and all the missionary societies, but a great preparatory school? If the Church is fulfilling its mission among men, it is training souls for right living, going out into the highways and hedges after those who are not living right, bringing them into the right way, and teaching them how to live. "To make ready a people prepared for the Lord." This is the business of the Church. One reason why it is not more successful is we too often lose sight of the most important part of the preparation for life. The most important part, and the most neglected part, of our preparation is heart preparation. There is a proverb that says, "The preparations of the heart are from the Lord." Without Him we can do nothing. Exclude Him from life and there can be no adequate preparation. God and the heart are intimately related. The heart is His temple, His home, the place where He does His greatest work among men. "It is God that worketh in you."

Is it not strange that men devote so much time and attention to the training of the hand, the eye, the ear, the voice, the intellectual faculties and so little to the training of the heart? Yet the heart is the chief thing. This is the throne of God, the center of life. If the heart is wrong, all is wrong. What shall a good memory, a bright intellect, a fine voice, and all other departments of our being well trained avail if the heart be bad? A cold heart, a weak heart, a hard heart, an impure heart, will vitiate the whole life.

It is to be noted also that preparation is an everlasting business. We shall never be through with it. Education is never finished. In many places there are what are called "finishing schools." Nothing can be more absurd and ridiculous than this title applied to a school. But many young people are misled by it. There is no finishing school. The best schools in the world are nothing more than preparatory schools; nothing is ever finished for the matter of that. No minister ever finished a sermon, no poet ever finished a song, no artist ever finished a painting, no author ever finished a book. After he has devoted to it all the time and labor he can afford, he is painfully conscious that defects are still in the work. Had he more time and strength he could improve his work. One should be ashamed to say that he has finished anything. Jesus only could say, "It is finished."

And what does this fact suggest? Does it not suggest a future state? If nothing is finished under the sun, if all life is a preparation, what then? If our ideal is so high that we can never quite reach it, is that the end? Nay, there is perfection somewhere. The full corn in the ear shall appear. We are preparing, and still preparing, and never getting beyond the work of preparation. Happy if we shall be prepared at best. In old age we feel that we are beginning to know how to live. Jesus said, "I go to prepare a place for you." While we are preparing for our little places here below the skies, He is preparing a place for us above the stars. The prepared people shall enter into the place prepared, and be forever with the Lord.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

HOLINESS IS POWER.

Holiness is power. It utilizes ability, fertilizes the soul, and energizes the whole man. It is the fire and water in the engine, bringing up to their fullest capacity the strength of all the parts of the machinery, so that the greatest amount of spiritual power may be expended in rolling back a revolted world to God. Holiness is God's power with man and man's power with God. Thus they become co-workers. Every man who dwelleth in God and God in him, in an accommodated sense is God's man, which makes him a positive power against all evil and for all good—to pluck careless souls from the incoming flood and storm of wrath, lifting them up into the sweet serenity and protection of the Rock of Ages. Without holiness we are weaker than a bruised reed; with it we are like an impregnable and well-garrisoned fort, which will stand unharmed the hottest siege, at the same time raining like a hail storm of red-hot balls from the magazine of the gospel on a world armed against Christ.—Rev. W. H. Wilson.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

In Meetings.

The meeting held last week at Spring Hill by myself was a success. There was one convert and three renewals, no accessions to the church.

I am with Bro. I. W. Johnson at Oakland this week. The meeting has begun with good interest.

I have accepted the ninth annual call of my present field, Waverley, Spring Hill, and Centerville.

Winchester Letter.

The session of Conference just closed at Leaksville was one of the best ever held by our people. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested in all branches of the work.

We were glad to have with us the following visiting brethren, who helped by their presence and kindly words of advice: Revs. J. L. Foster, Elon College, N. C.; J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va.; H. R. Clem, Springfield, O.; T. P. Garland, Needmore, Pa.; and Prof. S. M. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

The Secretary will probably give a detailed account of the Conference and so I forbear.

The painters have about finished the frescoing of the church here and the carpenters will begin finishing the inside in a few days. The following contributions have been received:

We are grateful for this good report, and to all who make it possible.

We must have money now.

We need $800. more to get ready for dedication. The work must not stop at this juncture; but it will take money to continue. We have 27 one dollar contributions to report this week and would like to have 100 more to report next week.

We started the work here feeling that the brotherhood would be interested in this link which binds the northern and southern conferences, and we are looking to our brethren to see to it that the cause does not fail.

Berkley Letter.

This is the month for recuperation and rest for the people of First Christian Church. The pastor has been voted a vacation for August and he in turn has voted the congregation a rest.

This being the season for revivals in Eastern Virginia Conference the call is lend for service in this important phase of work.

It has been my privilege to assist several of the brethren in their meetings. The week after the fifth Sunday in July I was with Rev. Stanley Harrell at Emporia. We had a good meeting. Sister Vaughan, the Sunday school superintendent, is a loyal member of the Christian Church and would be valuable to any congregation. Bro. Harrell is held in high esteem by all the people of this community.

The next week was spent with Bro. H. E. Ronntree at the Centerville Christian Church. Here we had all day services and dinner on the ground. This too was a good meeting. The people of this community regard Bro. Ronntree as a member of their own family. His work there is in good shape and progressing.

The week following the second Sunday in August I found myself in the neighborhood of Berea, Nansemond Co., helping Bro. I. W. Johnson in the good work there. Here the members served dinner on the ground and we had two services a day. I have served many churches in revival work and have found varying conditions, but this was the easiest revival I ever tried to conduct. The pastor, members and friends were ready and waiting for work when I arrived. The meeting moved off without a hitch and Friday evening found the church rejoicing together with 14 conversions and ten presenting themselves for membership. The way these good people estimate a "Laborer's hire" in proportion to that of the average church is inspiration itself. No wonder a certain editor I know likes to "stick around" in these parts and describe to us stay-at-homes the solid comfort and hospitality he enjoys at "Town Point." He will have to become more eagle-eyed and discover the pen of many colors before he can do full justice to the river and landscape surrounding the imposing home of Bro. W. J. Lee. Bro. Johnson is truly fortunate in serving such a cultured and Christian community.

My wife and I are now enjoying a two-weeks' rest on Eastern Shore. Our address is Shields, Va.

There are in our company Misses Lula, Fannie May, Edna and Ruth Pierce, all workers in the Sunday school at our place. Our pastime is spent in bathing in the Occohanock River, crabbing, fishing, boating, cutting watermelons, playing games and reading books.

Longfellow could have added to his Indian vocabulary had he visited Eastern Shore where Mr. Indian immortalized his memory by naming the little towns. Here is a sample: Pungoteague, Chincoteague, Wachapreague, Pocomoke, Assowaman, and Assateague. Just here where we are located the name "Shields" is as immortalized. The Post Office is Shields, the trucking section is Shields, the steamer leaves Shields Wharf for Baltimore every Tuesday and Friday and we feel securely "Shielded" from the care of routine work while enjoying the hospitality of the good home of Bro. W. B. Shield.

Yours for a good vacation,

M. L. Bryant.

Valley Letter.

The sixty-third annual session of the Va. Valley Central Conference met at Leaksville, Aug. 17-19.

The welcome address was delivered by the pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson, to which response was made by the president, Rev. W. T. Walters.

The following ministers of the Conference were present: W. T. Walters, A. W. Andes, L. L. Lassiter. Those absent were: Killis Roach, H. C. Moore, M. L. Bryant, J. W. Dofflemyre. All the churches except High Point were represented either by delegate or letter or both.

Visitors present from a distance were Rev. H. R. Clem, Springfield, Ohio, representing the Christian Publishing Association; Prof. S. M. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., representing The Christian Sun; Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va.; Rev. T. P. Garland, Needmore, Pa., fraternal messenger from the Ray's Hill and Southern Pa. Conference; and Rev. J. L. Foster, Supt. of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. A. W. Andes.

The committee appointed last year to secure legal advice in regard to the deeding of our church property reported that according to the best legal advice obtainable, the property held by the Va. Valley Conference and by the Va. Central Conference before the union of these two bodies is practically safe as the property of the united body without any legal transfer of title. The following item of this report was adopted: "However, in order still further to safeguard our property from trouble in the future we recommend what should have been recommended in the terms of the union of the two bodies: viz., that the property of each body shall become the property of the united body." This committee recommended the election of five Conference Trustees. The following were elected: A. W. Andes, J. W. Tate, R. C. Hook, M. V. Louderback, and J. E. Foster. The following recommendation embodied in the report was tabled until next year: "That all church property in the future be deeded to the Conference Trustees, and that property now held by local trustees be conveyed by them to the Conference Trustees."

The Committee on Christian Endeavor in their report highly commended the C. E. as an auxiliary to the church, and recommended that a C. E. Society be organized in every church where practicable, and that pastors participate in the meetings of the same.

Rev. R. L. Williamson was elected to deliver the next annual address, with M. L. Bryant as alternate.

The Committee on Sunday Schools recommended that more attention be given to Teacher Training, and to getting parents interested in the S. S. They recommended the use of our own literature, and endorsed as special departments the Cradle Roll, Teacher Training classes, Organized Classes, and the Home Department.

The Home Mission Committee recommended the appropriation from the Home Mission Fund during the coming year of $170 to Rev. A. W. Andes, $40 to Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre for aiding the work at Elkton, and $40 to Rev. R. L. Williamson. They also recommended that $50 be paid to Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre from the Superannuated Fund. The committee further recommended that we ask the Home Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention for an appropriation of $100 on pastor's salary at Winchester, that we ask the Mission Board of the American Christian Convention to renew their appropriation of $150 for another year, and that we ask the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Va. Conference for $200 on pastor's salary at Winchester. The Executive Committee was instructed to make an immediate effort to provide pastors for the pastorless churches in the Conference. The Duplex Envelope System was recommended.

The Committee on Moral Reform recommended that we encourage and support the movement for state-wide prohibition in Va. They placed their ban upon tobacco (especially cigarettes), card parties, lawn parties, social dances, and Sunday excursions. During the discussion of the report some excellent addresses were made, that of Rev. J. L. Foster deserving special mention.

During the meeting of the Conference Missionary Association officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: pres., Rev. W. T. Walters; sec., Rev. A. W. Andes; treas., T. H. Showalter. The treasurer's report showed that $127.50 in membership fees had been collected during the year. This amount was ordered turned over to the treasurer of the Conference. A motion prevailed that any one desiring to withdraw from the association shall present a written request to the association.

The report on foreign missions was stimulative in its tone, recommending the raising of all foreign mission apportionments in full, and the support of our foreign fields.

The Committee on Religious Literature recommended the reading of the Bible and our church papers.

The Committee on Apportionments reported that the apportionments would be the same this year as last.

The present officers of the Conference are as follows: pres., Rev. W. T. Walters; vice pres., S. W. Lincoln; sec., Rev. A. W. Andes; assistant sec., R. D. Dovel; treas., Samuel Earman.

The Conference will meet next year at Linville, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday before the third Sunday in August.

Sweet Chalybeate Springs.

It was my delight this morning to take up my church paper, The Christian Sun, which I always enjoy both at home and from home. Usually the editor keeps up with my whereabouts and sends me the paper. This time he lost sight of me, and my good family got ahead of him and sent my papers each week, to my delight. The first thing that interested me, it being Sunday morning, was the Sunday school lesson of Aug. 20th and the beautiful Golden Text, Matt. 5:11. So after perusing carefully the lesson, and enjoying it, I was next interested in Dr. Staley's letter at his country home. And right now I want to shake Dr. Staley's hand and congratulate him on being one of the few men who believe in the old saying that "man's work is from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done." Our good brother has always been a friend of the ladies. I also agree with him that it makes one feel good sometimes to put on Sunday clothes, but now I have been away so long from home, and feel that I would like to get back on the Chesapeake Bay and don everyday clothes. Dr. Staley also says in his letter that he knew of nothing quite so good as a preacher's visit in a country home. And I say the good fried chicken that always comes on the table with the preacher's visit is equally as good. When I was a little girl living in the country (and proud I am that I did live there) whenever our preacher, Rev. W. B. Wellons, came, (and always a delight to us children to have him come, first, because we loved him so well, and second, oh my!) the big dish of fried chicken would follow his visit. In those days it wasn't a chicken which you cut to make a dozen pieces of so as to go around; it was chickens, six and seven at the time, and all had enough to eat and not a sample to make you want more.

I also agree with Dr. Staley that the country is the place to spend a vacation, for there we get the fresh vegetables that he was helping the ladies to gather, also the most invigorating air, and a freedom from Sunday clothes, and everything that makes life seem worth while. If one wants to enjoy the sweetest symphonies in all the world -- the songs of Nature, devoid of all artificialities, go to the country. If we want our children to be healthy, strong, happy, both morally and physically, and develop into men and women who will be a credit to themselves and to their parents, rear them in the country, the very bed rock of all that is best and most wholesome in the world.

Perhaps the Sun readers who know me will say, "Why doesn't she practice what she preaches? Oh my! many a time have

My Dear Children:

Our trip to the Val. Va. Conference was very enjoyable indeed, and you see the friends over there did well in a nice special offering for the Orphanage. There is more pledged, but this is cash. This is a beautiful country and the mountains are grand indeed. I hope every little boy and girl who will read this letter will some day have a chance to visit the mountains and see for themselves. We were very near the famous Luray Cave and the Natural Bridge of which you will learn when you get older. We hope to hear from a number of our little Valley cousins in the near future. They are a long distance away, but letters and dimes can come over the mountains cheaper than girls and boys, and so we may expect those at least, I am sure.

Ruby tells this week something of the good times they had at the picnic. It was not my privilege to be with them, but our children were all smiles when they told of the big tables where so many nice things were spread to eat. And Tom helped to make the lemonade, so if you were to get a chance at him he might tell you how much he drank, that is, if he can count.

Little Wm. Staley Cheatham has had a birthday and generously remembered us by a great big dollar with which to treat ten of our youngest children. They are delighted, and, I guess, will feel as if they were having birthdays themselves.

Our amount is fine this week. The drought of summer has been hard on us, but we are trying to lift our heads bravely, and if every one will help a little none will feel the strain and we will come through, God willing, all right.

Lovingly yours,

Uncle Jim.

My Dear Cousins:

I will tell you something about the picnic. For our dinner picnic day we had some fried chicken, pickles, crackers, loaf bread, cake, and lemonade.

We had an exercise in the Chapel and sang some songs. We had a fine dinner and the Greensboro Sunday school came up here and we had the picnic together. I am ten years old. I help cook in the kitchen, wash dishes, and mend my own clothes.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write and pay my dues for June, July, and August, which I have failed to send. It has been so warm and I don't think it is much cooler. But I have had other things to do, so have put it off until now. But hope to do better hereafter. I will close, with much love to all.

Your niece,

Hettie Davis.

I have missed your letters, Hettie, and hope cooler weather will bring renewed energy all around.

Windsor, Va.,

Dear Uncle Jim:

It has been so warm, and we have been practicing for Children's Day, and I have just neglected the time that was passing by.

School will soon start and I am glad of it. I am going to have my same teacher for next year, and I am so glad. I made my grade last year and I am so glad. I hope I can keep up and not fall back. I close, with much love to all.

You will find 15 cents enclosed.

Your niece,

Junie M. Davis.

That is right, Junie, "Hitch your wagon to a star."

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come again. I guess you thought I had forgotten all about you and the cousins; but never mind, I am always thinking of you. If I could write so plain that you could read it I would write every month myself and never fail, but I can't. I am going to start to school next year. So in two years from now I hope to be able to write myself. I will close. Much love to all. I send 15 cents.

Your little girl,

Violet Davis.

Never mind, Violet, little girls get big, you know, so until then, you can manage all right with sister.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am late this month, but have not forgotten it. I wanted to go to Ocean View the 16th, but was very much disappointed.

I am going to singing school twice a week and am having a great time. I hope all of the little cousins are well.

From your niece,

Amy Morris.

So you are going to enjoy a "big time" and sing, in spite of disappointment. That is right, Amy. May you "keep the heart singing all the while."

Franklinton, N. C.,
Aug. 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am 2 years old today. I send $2 to the Orphanage—$1 to treat the 10 youngest children and the other dollar to add to our dimes. I am 3 feet tall, so you may expect a 6 foot man when I am grown. I weigh only 27 pounds, as I have just recovered from a two-weeks spell of fever, and have been trying to cut my last jaw teeth. The day I was 23 months old I stood alone in the front hall for the first time, though not erect. The 25th of July I got up in the middle of the floor, balanced myself and stood as straight as a soldier. The 26th I was on my "bat" in the kitchen, and arose and took my first steps alone. I was as proud as the rest of the household. I would stand alone, smile and say, "tand loue." As this is Sunday, I'll write more tomorrow.

Grandma had a nice white sand pile hauled into the back yard, spread an old piece of carpet beside it, put the little chair grandma used to sit in on the carpet, and gave me a pan and an old butter paddle, and I played in it July 29th for the first time. At first I'd brush off every particle of sand that stuck to my fingers, but finally put my hands in the sand and called all the folks to look at me "pay in thond." Dada came to see me that afternoon and brought me a glass engine full of candy balls. I can show you the "cow-atchet," "head yight," "moke tack," bell, whistle, "team dome," cab, and "feels." I was taken quite sick that night, Monday P. M. Boppa came and brought me a little "buck" (et) and "red pade." I can show you most of the circus animals on the "buck." I gave Boppa two "cacks" when he came home. Ganua had written him about my climbing up beside the dining table and pulling down a box of crackers and helping myself. So Boppa wrote me to save him some. I wrote him a letter which he appreciated, but said he wasn't scholar enough to read.

I also like to "pay twenty-eight dominoes," and "coquet balls." My cousin, Eugene Pearce came to see me about three weeks ago, and he had the blue ball to "pay wif." I remember it and now call for Eugene's ball when I want the "bue" oue. Aug. 4, Boppa caught some fish and an eel, which he showed me and told what they were. He had showed me the fish before. When he asked me what Boppa caught, I amused the crowd by saying "fish and tail."

I can tell you that "W. Eth" (S) is on my romp (romper) pock(et) and that it stands for "Wiyam Taey."

Dada has been to see me again and "Vi-yes (Willie's) friend, Mrs. Cummiglam, has also made us a visit.

When I was in Suffolk, Boppa took me to see Deacon Barns' wife, who has been sick a long time. He told me to pray with her. I put up my little hands and said, "Dod . Amen." The last night I was there James Butler's mama came to see me and brought a picture of James dressed as he was when he opened one of the little gates at mama's wedding. She was kind enough to stay with me while mama went to prayer meeting.

The year before when I was down there, Mrs. Daily Brothers brought me a beautiful handembroidered yoke. Mama made the dress and I wore it to Sunday school and church this year.

I am sorry to hear of little Carlynn Schobey's death. We had always thought of him as a fine healthy baby. We are sorry for Annie Pearle Way.

If my birthday does come on Sunday this time, I was born on Friday like Wallace Newman, and mama likes that, because the verse says, "Friday's child is loving and giving."

Friday, I received a beautiful silver spoon from Pontie up in Oberlin, Ohio. It has "Billy" engraved on the ring handle which prevents its turning over. I had gotten so weak from being sick that I couldn't stand, but my strength is returning and Boppa induced me to stand alone for my new "poon." Boppa and I have some nice times together in spite of my having been sick so much since he came home. You ought to see us climb the little magnolia tree in the front yard. Boppa stands on the ground and holds me up on one of the limbs and I say, "climb high up tee." My fever is "boke," so Boppa and I can have more nice times together.

The growu folks here eat "watermelons and cantayopes," but they would make "angel baby sick." "Gude bye." Love to all.

William Staley Cheatham.

Hope the old fever "boke" so it never will return, little boy, and that you may have many, many happy returns of the pleasant birthday when you so thoughtfully remember other and less fortunate little ones than yourself.

—No doubt all educators believe in the three old-fashioned R's of education, but Superintendent Davidson of the Washington schools adds three H's and three I's which he regards as indispensable. They are head, heart and hand, also information, illumination, and inspiration. The three I's apply particularly to teachers.

PORTO RICO.

First of eight brief articles on Island of Porto Rico.

Location and Climate.

This island is the fourth in size of the West Indies and is the farthest eastward of the larger islands. In shape it is almost rectangular, being about 100 miles long and 36 miles wide. It has an area—including dependencies, of 3,606 square miles. It is distant from New York about 1,500 miles, slightly southeast. It was discovered by Columbus in 1493 and named by him Porto Rico, which means "Rich Gate."

This island is considered to be the most healthful region of the western hemisphere in the torrid zone. The temperature rarely reaches 90 degrees and never falls below 50 degrees. The highest temperature recorded at San Juan since the establishment of the U. S. Weather Bureau is 94 degrees. Every day the trade winds blow from the east and moderate the temperature. This breeze springs up in the afternoon and lasts through the evening and into the night and is delightfully refreshing.

The rainfall is copious, especially in the northern part of the island, the mean annual rainfall being 64.5 inches. At no season are there many rainy days. In the afternoon or evening without much warning the rain begins to fall heavily, but the shower is soon over and at no time of the year does the rain materially incommode any one. There are occasional hurricanes, which are destructive to life and property.

The surface of the island is broken by mountain ranges extending from northeast to southwest. The number of rivers is said to be between 40 and 60. There are no indigenous quadrupeds on the island and scarcely any of the feathered tribe in the forests. A few waterfowl abound along the rivers and the green parrot is found in the forests. There are no poisonous snakes or other noxious reptiles.

The principal harbors are San Juan, Guanica, and Jobos, Arecibo, Aguadilla, Mayaguez and Ponce. None are available for vessels of deep draught. The New York and Porto Rico Steamship Co. maintain a weekly passenger service between New York City and Porto Rico.

Howzare.

—Miss Alsie Akryod of Boston swam from Charleston bridge to Boston light, a distance of 9 miles, on August 20, the time taken being seven hours and twelve minutes without stop or rest, the three men competitors having fallen out of the race.

(Begun on page eleven.)

my husband and myself regretted not having reared our children in the country. We who were reared there know what real happiness and pleasures are. Now I will let our dear brother Staley rest and enjoy his country home, as it was reading his letter that tempted me to write this apology for a letter.

Now if the Sun readers are not tired, I will give a brief description, or an attempt only, of this beautiful country, made so by God and not by man. August 1st, in company with my son, A. Lynton Jones and wife, we came to this beautiful place in the Alleghany mountains; and by the way, this is my fourth summer right here. We are in a lovely valley, in the heart of the Alleghany mountains, at an elevation of 2,300 feet, in the midst of Spring Region, of Virginia, celebrated for its beauty of scenery, salubrious climate, and health-giving mineral springs.

The three springs are simply wonderful, three different mineral waters seemingly flowing from one rock, eight hundred and fifty-one gallons of pure mineral water per minute. These waters form two immense pools, one for gentlemen and one for ladies, both having cement floors. Here 848 gallons of mineral water flow into these pools every minute. They have a delightful temperature of 79 degrees. Every one prefers the pools to the bath tub, as every one feels a delightful sensation of languor and contentment creep over one after the bath.

And right here Dr. Atkinson would have the time of his life, as we know his weakness for the surf baths, and besides we have right here another of his great pleasures, fishing, and almost as good as it was in Bro. Beale Johnson's mill pond and Bro. Lee's pond, the Nansmond river. Near here we have the mountain streams, I believe called rivers, that my son Lynton had the pleasure of going to in company with four guests fishing. They tell me they stand in water waist deep until they get a bite, then they go slowly to shore and pull out what they call mountain bass. He had the time of his life, and came home with a good bunch of fish, enough for our entire table of eight people, and others in pantry, equally as many. And this is no fish story.

I also had the pleasure of driving over to Beaver Dam Falls, with its cool grottoes, a spot of beauty where one can sit and dream away the hours, a great resort for picnics and big suppers. In my younger days it was my great pleasure to go on a hay-ride there, wagons drawn by six horses, and a water melon feast was given by a gentleman friend. As we were in the midst of cutting the melons and listening to the roaring of the falls, of a sudden we heard a more beautiful sound, all hushed, quiet, listen! Music was secreted behind the rocks, and the blending of the two was most beautiful to all present. Our good friend had sent ahead to the surprise of the party a band of musicians, which was simply a dream, it was so beautiful.

August 22 we had the most beautiful drive of sixteen miles through the valley, with its flowing streams, the entire distance on one side of this lovely mountain road. Here we reached the noted Green Briar White Sulphur Springs. It is said scenery to rival any in the world is in these Alleghany mountains round about the White Sulphur Springs.

We were informed over there that twenty thousand dollars was spent this season on the flowers on the lawn. They were beautiful to behold, as far as the naked eye could see, as the grounds were so large. We had a fine dinner, with music playing on the balcony near, which made the meal even more palatable. While this old historic place was beautiful in nature, yet man has done so much there to complete the work.

Sweet Chalybeate is beautiful from nature only, as everything around is "old-timey," as one would say, "before the war."

I have not told half the heart feels as my eyes sweep this majestic hill country, and my soul revels in the wonders our God has wrought here. How good is God and how marvellous are the works of his hands. But space forbids me further.

(Mrs.) T. A. Jones.

Shallow Well.

This is the second year that I have served the people at Shallow Well. The work here is moving on very nicely, but it is like my other work, there is room for improvement. We held our meeting here week following 2nd Sunday in August. Bro. J. O. Cox, of Durham, N. C., was with us and did most of the preaching, and it was well done. His sermons were strong and argumentative. He did faithful work and the Lord blessed his labors with us. There were eight who professed faith in Christ and three joined the church. We are expecting to receive others at our next appointment. Our revival was not what we would have liked to see, but we feel that great good was done. The church was revived, backsliders were reclaimed and sinners were converted. We give all the thanks and praise unto Him from whom all blessings come.

Since my graduation in June, I have devoted about five weeks of my time to revival work. The Lord has blessed me abundantly. My heart has been made to rejoice many times when I saw lost souls returning home to God. I have received work, for it is a time set apart to work for the salvation of lost souls. If a person wants joy unspeakable and full of glory, let him be a soul-winner for Christ, and the joy will flow like a river. When we do good, we feel good.

W. L. Wells.

Elon College, N. C.

O'Kelley's.

The week following the 3rd Sunday in July we held our revival at O'Kelley's Chapel. The pastor was assisted by Rev. J. Lee Johnson. Bro. Johnson did most of the preaching and his sermons were strong and impressive. The people were highly pleased with his earnest and faithful service. As a result of the meeting, there was a great revival among the church members, and about 25 who professed faith in Christ. There were only two additions to the church. We hope that there will be others to join at our next appointment.

This is my first year at O'Kelley's and I find them a very pleasant people to work with. I feel that our year's work so far has been a success and we give the Lord praise for it all. We have a good, live, wide-awake Sunday school and Christian Endeavor there, and both of these enterprises are doing great good, both among old and young. Every church that has not a Christian Endeavor should certainly organize one.

Mt. Carmel.

Our meeting at Mt. Carmel was protracted week following the first Sunday in August. Bro. Lee Johnson was with me here and did most of the preaching, and his sermons were very strong and convincing. Bro. Johnson is a deeply spiritual preacher, and the Lord is using him for great good. Wish we had more ministers like Brother Johnson.

As a result of the meeting there were 12 conversions, eleven additions to the church, and a great revival among the church members, which was so much needed. The Lord gave us a great meeting, and we give Him all the glory.

This is my second year to serve the people at Mt. Carmel and I am very much pleased with the progress that we have made. I find the people there a good people to work with. As a rule they are interested in every move that will promote the cause of Christ. The congregations here are always large and attentive, which is a great source of inspiration to the pastor. We ought to have one of our stroughest churches at Mt. Carmel, and I think with the proper attention we can have. We are speaking of building a new house of worship, for our building there now is in a very bad condition. When we build we want to build a larger house for the present one is not large enough to accommodate the people that go there for worship. My prayer is that the Lord may continue to bless the work at this place and help the interested to become more interested and the uninterested to become interested, and that His name may be glorified.

DIED.

Ward.

Died at her home in East Burlington, N. C., Aug. 19, Mary N. Ward, widow of W. H. Ward, in her 68th year. Her maiden name was Hurdle. She leaves one child, a daughter. She was a member of the Burlington Christian church, and had been for some years. For nearly five years she had been confined to her bed much of the time. The funeral services were conducted from the home Sunday afternoon by the writer, and her body laid beside her husband in Pine Hill Cemetery. Beautiful flowers were placed on both the new and old graves. May God bless the faithful daughter, who has been their support for so many years.

P. H. Fleming.

WHY MEN DON'T ARRIVE.

We can think off hand of not a few men whose lives have failed of the highest usefulness because they lacked the determination to stick to their jobs long enough. Troubles, difficulties, discouragements came; every other kind of work under the sun seemed more alluring and congenial than the drudgery of their mulling grind, and they quit.

Very soon the novelty of their new work wore off, and they went through the same process, changing three or four times, perhaps oftener, in the course of a few years, and arriving—nowhere.

The clever men that have the ear of the world may have been born clever, but, on their own confession, some of them at least owe their cleverness and success to steady, persistent, iron-willed application and drudgery.

Mr. Bernard Shaw, the famous British dramatist, spent nine years writing, writing, writing, and in that time earned the lordly sum of $30; $25 of this amount was the result of writing an advertisement.

With that experience, few people would have held on. Mr. Shaw's grasp on the pen, however, only tightened. Speaking of this cheerless apprenticeship he says:

"It has enabled me to produce an impression of being an extraordinarily clever, original and brilliant writer, deficient only in feeling, whereas the truth is that I am not in the least naturally brilliant, and not at all ready and clever. If literary men generally were put through the mill I went through, and kept out of their stuffy little coteries, I should have a thousand rivals more brilliant than myself. There is nothing more mischievous than the notion that my works are the mere play of a delightfully clever and whimsical hero of the salons; they are the result of perfectly straightforward drudgery, beginning in the inceptest novel-writing juvenility, and persevered in every day for twenty-five years."

If a young man throws himself into his daily tasks with determination, if not enthusiasm, if he resolves to study his business whatever it be, and master it, and if he puts this resolution unflinching through, there is little fear that he will write "failure" at the end of his course.—C. E. World.

We find this in The Charlotte Observer and it is so timely now we would like our young friends of The Sun family to read and consider it:

We have yet to meet the first man who thought he had too much education or who regretted that he had spent too much time at school. In a few days the vacation will end and from Maine to California it will be "Come to books." Millions of care-free children will be in the primary schools, thousands of more advanced pupils will be in the colleges and universities. Many will be at home on the farm, in the shops and the mills, wishing that they were afforded such golden opportunities—and our heart goes out to them. For those of you who take up the tasks of the school year we have high hopes—some of you go gladly, some with reluctance. You are fitting yourself for spheres of usefulness in the future, and the outcome depends mostly upon yourselves. Father and mother may be indulgent and willing to gratify every wish, but they cannot buy you a trained mind, you must pay the price for that, and there is no excellence without great labor. Teachers may be accomplished and the willingest that ever heard a recitation, but they can not develop brains that will not apply themselves. If you ever intend to be diligent and determined in your lives, try it for the scholastic year, and our word for it, the rich reward will be abundant compensation. Whatever the problem, take it by the throat and wrestle with it till it surrenders and you feel the keen delight that comes from a victory after a hard-fought struggle. Turn a conjugation into a calisthenic exercise that you can toss about as a juggler in the arena pitches his balls. Sit up with the languages until the lessons reveal their nuggets of pure gold. Stay with the logic and the metaphysics, the algebra and the chemistry until your head aches, then walk around and tackle them again for a triumphant fall.

—Henry N. Atwood, the Boston aviator, landed safely in New York Aug. 25, having made the distance from St. Louis, Mo., 1265 miles in air line, in eleven days, though the actual flying time was 28 hours and 31 minutes. This is a long distance world's record.

—A wreck on a Lehigh Valley train near Manchester, N. Y., Aug. 25, resulted in 35 deaths and 60 or more injuries, the wrecked train being a special carrying fourteen passenger cars.

The Zionist Movement.—The effort to induce the Jews to return to Palestine promises to do much in the way of introducing the latest methods of the western world into the industrial life of the people there, even if it does not succeed in inducing many Jews to return. And it may be the beginning of a general Jewish exodus. If it is the purpose of God, as some Bible readers believe, that the Jews shall be brought back to their promised land, then sometime and in some way it will be brought about.

THE NEAR AND THE FAR EFFECT.

A visitor to Amsterdam, wishing to hear the wonderful music of the chimes of St. Nicholas, went up into the tower of the church to hear them. There he found a man with wooden gloves on his hands pounding a keyboard. All he could hear was the clanging of the keys when struck by the wooden gloves, and the harsh, deafening sound of the bells over his head. He wondered why the people talked of the marvelous chimes of St. Nicholas. To his ear there was no music in them; nothing but terrible clatter and clanging. Yet all the while there floated out over beyond the city the most entrancing music. Men in the fields paused in their work to listen, and were made gald. People in their homes and travelers on the highways were thrilled by the marvelous bell tones which fell from the tower. There are many lives which to those who dwell close beside them seem to make no music; they pour out their strength in hard toil; they are shut up in narrow spheres; they dwell amid the noise and clatter of common task work; they think themselves that they are not of any use, that no blessing goes out from their lives; they never dream that sweet music is made anywhere in the world by their noisy hammering. But out over the world, where the influence goes from their work and character, human lives are blest and weary ones hear with gladness sweet, comforting music. Even away off in heaven, where angels are listening to earth's melodies, these entrancing strains are heard.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

THY BROTHER.

(It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth.—Rom. 14:21. Golden Text for Sunday, Sept. 10.)

From the ancient day on which Jehovah God said to the blood-stained Cain, "Where is Abel thy brother?" down to and including this good time guilty and indifferent men have been saying, "I know not: am I my brother's keeper?" And this marks the difference between a man without a conscience, and the man with one. The former does not regard his brother, the latter does. The first does not consider himself in the light of the fact that he has a brother, the latter does. A great part of all our Christian teaching is to make a man realize that he has a brother, that there are those about him for whom he is morally responsible.

The chief emphasis of sin and indifference is that, what I am and what I do is my own affair. The chief emphasis of Christ's teaching is that what I am and what I do is not my affair only, but the affair also of others. Or, to put it in Biblical phrase, "For none of us liveth to himself, and none dieth to himself." It is the way of the world, the way of guilt and indifference to say I am responsible only for the life I live. It is the way of the church, of Christ, of righteousness, to say I am responsible to God not only for myself, but for the influence I have over others.

Yes, there is one who can take an occasional strong drink, and never become a drunkard. But there are a hundred who, if they become moderate drinkers, also become drunkards. The one who can stop has an influence over those who cannot. The one who is a moderate drinker may, and not infrequently does, influence others to begin and to indulge, which others come to an untimely grave and a drunkard's hell. No man liveth to himself. Every one has his influence.

Do you think it any harm to have a nice, genteel, orderly, social game of cards? No indeed. No more than a nice genteel, orderly, social game of "Flinch." No difference. No harm in either. But, and here is the chasm that no sort of apology or excuse can bridge, cards are the instruments, the working tools, the familiar figures, of the gambler and the gambler's gaming table. The cards of "Seven up," "Whist," and "Euchre" are the wizards of the sharper, the tools of the enchanter whereby thousands have been lured to ruin by tricksters, gamblers, and jugglers. And the "genteel, social game" was the beginning, the subtle influence, the gentle charm whereby one who could go so far and stop lured to wreck and ruin the one who when he went so far could not stop.

If eating meat cause my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world stands.

This man Daniel lived more than two thousand years ahead of his time. Physiology now proves that it is innervating, strength destroying for a young man to drink wine and live on dainties. There is no food, no real energy, no abiding strength in wine, or in strong drink. Daniel proved that long ages ago. It seems a hard lesson to learn.

I heard a distinguished and cultured man, in advanced life, say from a platform, from which he was addressing hundreds, recently, that all the young men who were in school with him and drank strong drink were now, without exception, in their graves, some of them long since, after lives of wear and waste and worthlessness; the sober ones were, several of them, living yet, the others who had died left behind them names of worth and influences of weight.

If the intemperate man influenced no one else the case would then be bad enough. But no man liveth to himself, and the intemperate man carries others down with him, as does the tree of the forest that falls athwart and across the other trees of less mature years and growth about it. "I am my brother's keeper," is the declaration of righteousness and peace and safety.

IGNORANCE OF THE BIBLE.

People are buying the Bible, but they are not using it. They are reading about the Bible, but they are not reading it. They learn something of the Book. They learn little from it. They talk, and they print, and they preach much in behalf of the Book; but they really enjoy the Book itself very little, and get from it less and less of daily thought and learning.

So goes the verdict of many who profess to know, and there is good evidence. The ignorance of the Bible, of what the Bible really contains and teaches is something fearful and deplorable. Everybody you meet is willing to acknowledge that it is the Book of books; that it really is the greatest and best book ever formed; that it should have a place in every household and should be read daily by every member. But, after this, who is daily reading the Book, reading it with zeal, zest and deep desire? Very few indeed. We fear.

This ignorance of the Book is indeed appalling. Recently an examination on the Bible was given seventy-eight students at Ann Arbor, Michigan. Nearly an hour was given to write answers to a few questions propounded. Says an exchange:

"The results were startling. One volunteered the valuable information that the Old Testament was written B.C., the other was not; another affirmed that 'the Old Testament represented Hebrew fable,' while 'the New dealt with historical characters.' Another, that 'the Old was composed largely of stories and proverbs, which are not any longer believed to have actually happened.' 'By the Law,' said one wise youth, 'is meant the laws given by Christ to his disciples, while the gospel simply means the Scriptures as taught to the people.' We can only quote a few of the hundreds of other ridiculous replies. 'The gospels,' for instance, 'were the letters which St. Paul wrote to the Churches.' 'The temple of Solomon was in Babylon.' 'Sinai was the place of the landing of the Ark, or the mount from which Christ spoke.' 'Nazarene was the Mother of Christ; Nazareth was his Father.' 'Levi was a name applied to Jews who were small in stature compared with Leviathan, which meant large.' Levi was a Jewish male; Leviathan a woman.' 'The Isle of Patmos was the place where the children of Israel were fed in the wilderness.' 'Thou are the man' are words said by Judas to Christ, or by a prophet in his chariot teaching Christianity to a man at his side.' 'Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice' was said by Christ to one of the thieves hanging beside him in the crucifixion.' 'Abraham was called by God to preach the gospel.' 'Jacob's ladder was a vision that Jacob had one night when he slept outdoors near a mountain which looked like a pair of stairs.' 'The mess of pottage referred to the Lord's Supper.' 'Aaron's rod brought the manna and doves to the ground when the tribes of Israel were without food.' 'The thirty pieces of silver' were one of the parables,' etc., etc., etc."

Nor would you have to go to students in the University and cultured town of Ann Arbor, Michigan, to find this woeful, this deplorable ignorance of even the salient features and factors of the Book. There are pupils in the Sunday schools who will, if you sound them, display this same startling ignorance. There are men and women all about you who show the same ignorance. We will read a good and modern day book about the Bible; we will even study our Sunday school lesson from the "Quarterly"; but reading the Bible in order to get its great truths, that is a slow process with us.

FIRST THOUGHTS.

Of what are the first thoughts in the morning? Of business, of hurry, and worry? Why so? Each day is a new day. God has made it so. This pure atmosphere, this fresh and fragrant breeze, this quiet hour, this is the very best, the most wholesome of all the day. Is God crowded from the thoughts then? Do the day's duties, the day's pull and pressure, crowd out all thoughts of Him who made this new day, and gave it to us? Then there is pity. Shall God have the thoughts and the devotion and worship only when the day has worn away and the mind with the body is weary? Surely God should have the first, not the last.

Yesterday was a failure. Sharp words were spoken. Resolve in the early morning hour, when the heart is yet fresh and courage is unbroken, that such words shall not cross the lips today. By making a new day God has given you another chance. Because yesterday was a failure and went awry is not reason at all why today should be so. Let the first thoughts be of a better life, a more agreeable, useful, serviceable, happy day today. Yesterday's failures need not count against today.

Were there weaknesses, disappointments, indulgencies yesterday? The first thoughts should be of the source of strength, of Him who can give us help for all our needs. "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find." In the early morning hour we should ask Him who alone is able to save and to strengthen and to keep us through the whole day.

We should make the days more cheerful for those about us, bring gladness and sunshine into the lives around. This we can and will easily do if in the early morning hour we direct our thoughts heavenward and look up. If our first thoughts are of God and goodness and are baptized in the early morning hour in the stream of His love and strength we shall have no fears for the day.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Ills or Opportunities?

Which does a man look most to and think most about, his ill or his opportunities? This cuts deep into character ultimately, and makes a great difference in one's career. Booker Washington, in addressing 3,000 of his race at Atlanta the other day is reported to have said, "The leaders of our race are beginning to learn the fundamental lesson that we must turn our minds away from our ill in the direction of our opportunities. No race that contents itself by sitting down brooding over its troubles, its trials, its obstacles, can amount to much."

The rule goes further than to a race. It applies to the individual. The man who broods over his troubles, counts his trials, weighs his obstacles, meditates over his disadvantages, never arrives.

It helps a man, gives him nerve and strength and energy to look up, count his blessings, number his advantages and press forward, despite and notwithstanding.

Picturing the Bad.

In the notorious and sensational murder trial now, and for weary days past, dragging its slow lengths through the courts at Chesterfield Court House, Virginia, there is one feature that we fail to apprehend or appreciate. There is an altogether corrupt, base, prostitute "woman in the case" who is connected with the principals in a very shameful and scandalous manner. Why do the papers, almost every day, carry on their front page, in bold and brazen outline, the face and features of this woman? Who is she, from the under world, that her picture should be hung up every day in the mental art gallery of thousands of men and boys, good and virtuous women and girls, that she may be thought of and talked about as one of "the most prominent characters in the case"? Does it help a clean mind to have swept into it such foulness and filth as accompany this face? Does it help a foul mind to have more of such foulness and debris swept into it? What are our dailies wanting, seeking to obtain, by printing the picture so often of this notorious character?

Toiling in Sorrow.

Sometimes it behoves a man, a woman, to toil on for years under a cloud, beneath burdens hard to bear, under sorrows that sadden and crush the heart. We wrote recently of a sad case indeed come to light. Twenty years ago Andrew Toth was convicted of the murder of Watchman Quinn and sentenced to life imprisonment. Through all the years Toth has protested his innocence and has fervently prayed God daily in some way to make known his innocence to the world. Recently a man, dying, confessed that he himself was the murderer, and his confession has been proven true. Toth was liberated: but twenty years of prison service lay behind him. Andrew Carnegie has pensioned Toth, forty dollars a month for the remainder of his life. But who can measure the burden, the sadness, the sorrow of those twenty years of penitentiary life. God knows best, and doeth all things well; but even sorrow, sadness, suffering have their places in the making of man.

A Useful Citizen.

Dr. T. B. Kingsbury, the "grand old man" of North Carolina journalism, passed his 84th year Aug. 28th and improved the day by writing what he pleased to term his final letter for the press. Dr. Kingsbury has spent a long life of usefulness to the State, but has never sought or accepted public office of any kind, remaining contented ever to drive the quill and help shape the weighty matters of State and community. His life has indeed been a worthy and honorable one, preferring as he did to render the humble service of a newspaper man and private citizen to having riches and the honors of a public career. His greatest work as editor was on the Wilmington Star, and then on the Messenger, both of which had wide reading and a wonderful influence because of the fertile pen of Dr. Kingsbury. He has indeed wrought well during a long life and richly deserves the rest and the care of the years that yet remain to him.

—We have a copy of the Fifty-second Annual Catalog of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., carrying as its frontispiece the genial face of our distinguished friend Dr. Daniel Albright Long, President. The faculty and assistants number twenty, among whom we note, with (envy and) pleasure, the name of Dr. J. J. Summerbell, Lecturer on Theology. (We covet this profound scholar and thinker for Elon's lecture room). The fall term begins Oct. 2, the winter term Jan. 2. The college offers a four years' "Preparatory Course" and a four years' "College Course." Besides certificates in various departments, there are three degrees offered, that of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Divinity, and Master's Degree. The College has, besides departments in the classics, mathematics and sciences, Commercial Department, Normal Department, Biblical Department and Departments of Music, Art, Elocution, and Physical Culture. Dr. Long is no novice in the president's chair, and besides being a ripe scholar, is a ready teacher and an eminent platform and pulpit orator. We predict for U. C. College great progress under Dr. Long's administration.

—Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., has been confined to his bed now for several days, we regret to note. Dr. J. U. Newman occupied Bro. Holt's Union pulpit fourth Sunday in August, and this writer went for him to Long's Chapel last Sunday. Bro. Holt is much beloved by his people, who are praying that he may soon be restored to his full health and strength. Sister Holt also remains quite unwell.

THE BIBLE AND PROGRESS.

By Woodrow Wilson,

GOVERNOR OF NEW JERSEY.

(Delivered in the auditorium at Denver.)

The thought that entered my mind first as I came into this great room this evening framed itself in a question—Why should this great body of people have come together upon this solemn night? There is nothing here to be seen. There is nothing delectable here to be heard. Why should you run together in a great host when all that is to be spoken of is the history of a familiar book?

But as I have sat and looked upon this great body of people I have thought of the very suitable circumstance that here upon the platform sat a little group of ministers of the gospel lost in this great throng.

I say the "suitable circumstance," for I come here to-night to speak of the Bible as the book of the people, not the book of the minister of the gospel, not the special book of the priest from which to set forth some occult, unknown doctrine withheld from the common understanding of men, but a great book of revelation—the people's book of revelation. For it seems to me that the Bible has revealed the people to themselves. I wonder how many persons in this great audience realize the significance for English-speaking peoples of the translation into the English tongue. Up to the time of the translation of the Bible into English, it was a book for long ages withheld from the perusal of the peoples of other languages and of other tongues, and not a little of the history of liberty lies in the circumstance that the moving sentences of this book were made familiar to the ears and the understanding of those peoples who have led mankind in exhibiting the forms of government and the impulses of reform which have made for freedom and for self-government among mankind.

For this is a book which reveals men unto themselves, not as creatures in bondage, not as men under human authority, not as those bidden to take counsel and command of any human source. It reveals every man to himself as a distinct moral agent, responsible not to men, not even to those men whom he has put over him in authority, but responsible through his own conscience to his Lord and Maker. Whenever a man sees this vision he stands up a free man, whatever may be the government under which he lives. If he sees beyond the circumstances of his own life.

I heard a very eloquent sermon today from an honored gentleman who is with us to-night. He was speaking upon the effect of a knowledge of the future life upon our conduct in life. And it seemed to me that as I listened to him I saw the flames of those fires rekindled at which the martyrs died—died forgetful of their pain, with praise and thanksgiving upon their lips, that they had the opportunity to render their testimony that this was not the life for which they had lived, but that there was a house builded in the heavens, not built of men but built of God, to the vision of which they had lifted their eyes as they passed through the world, which gave them courage to fear no man but serve God. And I thought that all the records of heroism of the great things that had illustrated human life were summed up in the power of men to see that vision.

Our present life, ladies and gentlemen, is a very imperfect and disappointing thing. We do not judge our own conduct in the privacy of our own closets by the standard of expediency by which we are daily and hourly governed. We know that there is a standard set for us in the heavens, a standard revealed to us in this book which is the fixed and eternal standard by which we judge ourselves, and as we read this book it seems to us that the pages of our own hearts are laid open before us for our own perusal. This is the people's book of revelation, revelation of themselves not alone, but revelation of life and of peace. You know human life is a constant struggle. For a man who has lost the sense of struggle, life has ceased.

I believe that my confidence in the judgment of the people in matters political is based upon my knowledge that the men who are struggling are the men who know; that the men who are in the midst of the great effort to keep themselves steady in the pressure and rush of life are the men who know the significance of the pressure and the rush of life, and that they, the men on the make, are the men to whom to go for your judgments of what life is and what its problems are. And in this book there is peace simply because we read here the object of the struggle. No man is satisfied with himself as the object of the struggle.

There is a very interesting phrase that constantly comes to our lips which we perhaps do not often enough interpret in its true meaning. We see many a young man start out in life with apparently only this object in view—to make name and fame and power for himself, and there comes a time of maturity and reflection when we say of him, "He has come to himself." When may I say that I have come to myself? Only when I have come to recognize my true relations with the rest of the world. We speak of a man losing himself in a desert. If you reflect a moment you will see that is the only thing he has not lost. He himself is there. What he means when he says that he has lost himself is that he has lost all the rest of the world. He has nothing to steer by. He does not know where any human habitation lies. He does not know where any beaten path and highway is. If he could establish his relationship with anything else in the world he would have found himself. Let it serve as a picture.

A man has found himself when he has found his relation to the rest of the universe, and here is the book in which these relations are set forth. And so when you see a man going along the highways of life with his gaze lifted above the road, lifted to the sloping ways in front of him, then be careful of that man and get out of his way. He knows the kingdom for which he is bound. He has seen the revelation of himself and of his relations to mankind. He has seen the revelations of his relation to God and his Maker and therefore he has seen his responsibility in the world. This is the revelation of life and of peace. I do not know that peace lies in constant accommodation. I was once asked if I would take part in a great peace conference, and I said, "Yes, if I may speak in favor of war"—not the war which we seek to avoid, not the senseless and useless and passionate shedding of human blood, but the only war that brings peace, the war with human passions and the war with human wrong—the war which is that untiring and unending process of reform from which no man can refrain and get peace.

No man can sit down and withhold his hands from the warfare against wrong and get peace out of his acquiescence. The most solid and satisfying peace is that which comes from this constant spiritual warfare, and there are times in the history of nations when they must take up the crude instruments of bloodshed in order to vindicate spiritual conceptions. For liberty is a spiritual conception, and when men take up arms to set other men free, there is something sacred and holy in the warfare. I will not cry "Peace" so long as there is sin and wrong in the world. And this great book does not teach any doctrine of peace so long as there is sin to be combated and overcome in one's own heart and in the great moving force of human society.

And so it seems to me that we must look upon the Bible as the great charter of the human soul—as the "Magna Charta" of the human soul. You know the interesting circumstances which gave rise to the Magna Charta. You know the moving scene that was enacted upon the heath at Runnymede. You know how the barons of England, representing the people of England—for they consciously represented the people of England—met upon that historic spot and parleyed with John, the king. They said: "We will come to terms with you here." They said: "There are certain unli-enable rights of English-speaking men which you must observe. They are not given by you, they cannot be taken away by you. Sign your name here to this parchment upon which these rights are written and we are your subjects. Refuse to put your name to this document and we are your sworn enemies. Here are our swords to prove it."

The franchises of human liberty made the basis of a bargain with a king! There are kings upon the pages of scripture, but do you think of any king in Scripture as anything else than a mere man? There was the great king David, of a line blessed because the line from which should spring our Lord and savior, a man marked in the history of mankind as the chosen instrument of God to do justice and exalt righteousness in the people.

But what does this Bible do for David? Does it utter eulogies upon him? Does it conceal his faults and magnify his virtues? Does it set him up as a great statesman would be set up in a modern biography? No, the book in which his annals are written strips the mask from David, strips every shred of counterfeit and concealment from him and shows him as, indeed, an instrument of God, but a sinful and selfish man, and the verdict of the Bible is that David, like other men, was one day to stand naked before the judgment seat of God and be judged not as a king, but as a man. Isn't this the book of the people? Is there any man in this Holy Scripture who is exempted from the common standard and judgment? How these pages teem with the masses of mankind! Are these the annals of the great? These are the annals of the people—of the common run of men.

The New Testament is the history of the life and the testimony of common men who rallied to the fellowship of Jesus Christ and who by their faith and preaching remade a world that was under the thrall of the Roman army. This is the history of the triumph of the human spirit, in the persons of humble men. And how many sorts of men march across the pages, how infinite is the variety of human circumstance and of human dealings and of human heroism and love! Is this a picture of extraordinary things? This is a picture of the common life of mankind. It is a mirror held up for men's hearts, and it is in this mirror that we marvel to see ourselves portrayed.

I would be the last, ladies and gentlemen, to disparage any of the ordinary occupations of life, but I want to ask you this question: Did you ever see anybody who had lost a son hang up his yardstick over the mantel-piece? Have you not seen many families who had lost their sons hang up their muskets and their swords over the mantel-piece? What is the difference between the yard-stick and the musket? There is nothing but perfect honor in the use of the yard-stick, but the yard-stick was used for the man's own interest, for his own self-support. It was used merely to fulfil the necessary exigencies of life, whereas the musket was used to serve no possible purpose of his own. He took every risk without any possibility of profit. The musket is the symbol of self-sacrifice and the yard-stick is not. A man will instinctively elevate the one as the symbol of honor and never dream of using the other as a symbol of distinction.

Doesn't that cut pretty deep, and don't you know why the soldier has his monument as against the civilian's? The civilian may have served his State—he also—and here and there you may see a statesman's statue, but the civilian has generally served his country—has often served his country, at any rate—with some idea of promoting his own interests, whereas the soldier has everything to lose and nothing but the gratitude of his fellowmen to win.

Let every man pray that he may in some true sense be a soldier of fortune, that he may have the good fortune to spend his energies and his life in the service of his fellowmen in order that he may die to be recorded upon the rolls of those who have not thought of themselves, but have thought of those whom they served. Isn't this the lesson of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? Am I not reminding you of these common judgments of your life, simply expounding to you this book of revelation, this book which reveals the common man to himself, which strips life of its disguises and its pretences and elevates those standards by which alone true greatness and true strength and true valor are assessed?

Do you wonder, therefore, that when I was asked what my theme this evening would be I said it would be "The Bible and Progress"? We do not judge progress by material standards. America is not ahead of the other nations of the world because she is rich. Nothing makes America great except her thoughts, except her ideals, except her acceptance of those standards of judgment which are written large upon these pages of revelation. America has all along claimed the distinction of setting this example to the civilized world—that men were to think of one another, that governments were to be set up for the service of the people, that men are to be judged by these moral standards which pay no regard to rank or birth or conditions, but which assess every man according to his single and individual value. This is the meaning of this charter of the human soul. This is the standard by which men and nations have more and more come to be judged.

And so the form has consisted in nothing more nor less than this—in trying to conform actual conditions, in trying to square actual laws with the right judgments of human conduct and more than liberty.

That is the reason that the Bible has stood at the back of progress. That is the reason that reform has come, not from the top but from the bottom. If you were ever tempted to let a government reform itself, I ask you to look back in the pages of history and find me a government that reformed itself. If you were ever tempted to let a party attempt to reform itself I ask you to find a party that ever reformed itself.

A tree is not nourished by its blooms and by its fruit. It is nourished by its roots, which are down deep in the common and hidden soil, and every process of purification and rectification comes from the bottom—not from the top. It comes from the masses of struggling human beings. It comes from the instinctive efforts of millions of human hearts trying to beat their way up into the light and into the hope of the future.

Parties are reformed and governments are corrected by the impulses coming out of the hearts of those who never exercised authority and never organized parties. Those are the sources of strength, and I pray God that these sources may never cease to be spiritualized by the immortal subjections of these words of inspiration of the Bible.

If any statesman sunk in the practices which debase a nation will but read this single book he will go to his prayers abashed. Do you not realize, ladies and gentlemen, that there is a whole literature in the Bible? It is not one book, but a score of books. Do you realize what literature is? I am sometimes sorry to see the great classics of our English literature used in the schools as text-books, because I am afraid that little children may gain the impression that these are formal lessons to be learned. There is no great book in any language, ladies and gentlemen, that is not the spontaneous outpouring of some great mind or the cry of some great heart. And the reason that poetry moves us more than prose does is that it is the rhythmic and passionate voice of some great spirit that has seen more than his fellowmen can see.

I have found more true politics in the poets of the English-speaking race than I have ever found in all the formal treatises on political science. There is more of the spirit of our own institutions in a few lines of Tennyson than in all the text-books on governments put together: "A nation still, the rulers and the ruled, Some sense of duty, something of a faith,

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. T. P. Garland changes his address from Needmore, Pa., to Everett, Pa.

—Rev. C. E. Newman, we learn, is rapidly improving from his recent illness, and hopes to be up and out at no distant date.

—From The Record of Conshohocken, Pa., we gather that during the seven years and three months pastorate of Rev. L. L. Baugher he has received into the fellowship of the Gulf Christian church 130 members, married 57 couples, conducted 168 funerals, and baptized 61 persons. Bro. Baugher left last week for his new charge at Portland, Ind.

—We appreciate the faithful and efficient service of Dr. J. W. Manning in writing, almost every week for about three years, a Norfolk Letter for The Sun and regret that he lays down this work. We count ourselves fortunate indeed in securing as our regular Norfolk correspondent Rev. A. M. Howsare whose writings Sun readers will not fail to appreciate and enjoy.

—Our now distinguished and accurate historian, W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va., contributes to this week's Sun some interesting documents in the shape of records of the first Eastern Virginia Conferences. Our brethren in those days were shy of extended and printed records, and feared greatly that their proceedings in conference assembled would bind them to creeds and organized forms. The documents printed this week are noted for their brevity, and conspicuous indeed for what they do not contain.

—Comes a renewal for two years, it comes every two years about this time as regularly as the calendar counts it, from our long time acquaintance and ever esteemed friend, Mrs. Mamie Lee Tourtelot, Providence, R. I., who, though years and leagues separated from her church and its enterprises, remains as true and loyal to her own of other days as only a great and generous soul is capable of doing. Her church paper is the connecting link between her New England home and her Virginia and North Carolina acquaintances and loved ones in church work and affiliation, and so she clings to this as the Romans clung to the sacred fires from off their household altars.

—Dr. D. A. Long does not want a typewriter. Here is the reason: "When I was a boy I thought that it was the bold flourish of John Hancock's hand at the head of the list of signers of the Declaration of Independence that inspired the Revolutionary patriots more than the glitter of Washington's sword. I felt sure they crossed the Delaware and endured the untold privations of Valley Forge, rather than see that inimitable specimen of defiant quill driving go down in the night of inglorious defeat." We shall therefore expect Dr. Long among the first signers should there be occasion for a new Declaration.

—We note with keen regret that the esteemed Charlotte Observer carries more, and bigger, and plainer, and wider whiskey advertisements in its Sunday edition than on any other day of the week. We do wonder "how come?" We presume that The Observer knows its business far better than we do, and for that reason we forbear criticism, but we wonder if it really pays a paper, pays all the way along and finally, for a newspaper in a prohibition State to carry liquor advertisements in its columns? Many an Observer reader on Sunday morning, we fancy, lays before the family with regret and reluctance, a great paper containing on several pages and in flaming letters "special offers" and "many bargains" whereby liquors of all kinds may be easily and readily procured. We wonder if the great and generous mind of The Observer has thought well over these things?

—What a delightful company this scribe and his wife enjoyed a day last week, Mrs. T. R. Gaskins, Bennett's Creek, Va., her daughter, Mrs. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lee, Bennett's Creek, Va., the latter two gladdening our home with a visit of ten days now. It almost made us feel like we were in the vegetable, oyster and fishing districts of heaven-blessed Eastern Virginia; and Mrs. Atkinson's dinner wasn't to be blushed at either, considering what she had to prepare it out of. These family and friend's reunions make us feel that, after all, we are living in a world worth while and that life is not all dreariness and drudgery. By the way, do you ever stop to thank the good Father of all for the gracious and beloved friends He has given you. Fellowship at one's table is akin to fellowship in the church, and both are sacred and divine.

—Rev. W. G. Clements, pastor, enjoyed a very helpful and happy revival in his church, Christian Light, Harnett Co., week before last. Rev. J. Lee Johnson assisted Bro. Clements and rendered invaluable aid with able and convincing sermons. Christian Light people were delighted with Bro. Johnson and hope to have him again. There were six accessions to the church. The church building has been repaired at a cost of about $500. Bro. Clements' revival at Oak Level three weeks ago resulted in eight accessions to the church.

—President Taft is to make another extensive visit to the West and on to the Pacific Coast this fall. The trip will cover six weeks, during which the President will break ground for the Panama Exposition at San Francisco and make some 200 public addresses going and coming. Two years ago President Taft traveled on one journey 13,000 miles and visited thirty-three States. The itinerary is to begin about Sept. 17 and last till Nov. 1.

—Rev. C. C. Peel, Elon College, N. C., occupied the pulpit of Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va., and baptized 25 members last Sunday. Bro. Peel says he never knew before the full joys of baptism by immersion. This is one of our country churches that has a pool for baptismal purposes, and so has clean pure water, and a quiet orderly, reverential baptismal service in the church. Bro. Peel sees no reason why other country churches should not follow Pleasant Grove's good lead and have a place for baptism such as will make the service agreeable, becoming, and reverential. Pleasant Grove is a church to make a preacher's heart glad and prove a blessing indeed to its membership and the community. Bro. Peele thinks, and we agree with him heartily.

—Rev. N. G. Newman opineth: "I don't know what to write of Northfield. It is indescribable, incomparable, like itself only." We are delighted to learn that this is the cause of his silence, and not, as we feared, gone broke and hadn't the price of a postage stamp. And when Bro. Newman wrote, Aug. 28, he was in Middleton, N. Y., not stranded and homeless, but visiting his sister and niece. We trust Brethren Harrell and Hanson of our Northfield colony arrived home safely, but to this good hour they are both silent, so far at least as The Sun and its readers are concerned. To our thinking Northfield is worth more to write and tell others about than it is to keep silent about. We ourselves may have overestimated the place, but to our thinking it is a great, a very influential factor in the religious life of America, particularly of modern day methods of evangelization; a magnificent spiritual force that tells in the preaching and the teaching from thousands of pulpits.

—No wonder North Carolina mountain resorts have had the greatest season in all their experience, and that all the banks in the hill country are full to overflowing with good money from an unprecedented number of tourists. The N. C. Press Association met in the mountains early in June, since which good hour each member of the Association who shared the privilege of attending has vied with every other member in describing the beauty and the benefits of mountain scenery and high living. Why, Col. Wade Harris of The Evening Chronicle has written enough in his good paper, since the Press Association, to make half the people in this commonwealth lie away to the hills and the other half wish with all their hearts that they could go also. The mountain hotels, banks and business places which are now enjoying stuffed pockets may certainly say that it pays to advertise, and most of all that advertisement which is sure to follow a meeting of the North Carolina Press Association. By the way a business man of Greensboro told this writer that his city spent $3,000 entertaining the Association once, but the advertising the city got was worth $10,000.

—President Taft, it is unofficially announced, has decided upon Nov. 30th as Thanksgiving day this year, the foot-ball managers and others having urged him to a decision as there are five Thursdays in November this time.

—Rev. B. S. Crosby, Clinton Corners, N. Y., who furnishes us a very worthy and interesting sermon sketch for this week's Sun hopes some day, the Lord willing, to locate in the South. He will receive cordial welcome here, should his lot be cast in these quarters.

—We regret to learn that Dr. W. T. Herndon's wife, and daughter, Miss Jennie, are in a Durham hospital, Mrs. Herndon far from well, and Miss Jenie critically ill. Many friends of this good family will offer prayer that God's blessings may be upon the afflicted ones, even to the restoring of accustomed health and strength.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles U. Butler passed through Elon College Monday P. M., Sept. 4th on their way to Kinston, N. C., for a meeting of several days there. They enjoyed a great revival at Spartangurg, S. C.

—The indications all point to an auspicious opening at Elon College to-day, Wednesday Sept. 6, this being the beginning of the 22nd annual session of this growing institution. As the years come Elon's influence deepens and broadens, and the wisdom and consecration of its founders and supporters become more apparent every year. The splendid array of young men and young women that gathers here from year to year from so many good homes is an inspiration and should be a constant source of gratitude to all who have ever done anything to help the institution. It is doing a great and a good work and the coming years will manifest its worth and its weight more and more.

NOTICE.

Rev. J. D. Wicker, after having served Pleasant Union Church for eleven consecutive years as pastor, thinks it best not to allow his name considered for re-election; and will consider a call to some other church for the first Sunday in each month during the ensuing year. Any church desiring his services for the next year would do well to address him at Sanford, N. C. Bro. Wicker is a consecrated man, a faithful and efficient pastor and an earnest preacher of the Word.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Before this paper reaches its readers the 22nd annual session of the College will have opened. A strenuous campaign has been waged, and we are confident of a satisfactory opening. Many, however, will not come the first day who will nevertheless go off to school somewhere. Will our friends keep up their efforts to bring them in?

Mrs. Machen and Mrs. Holland, housekeeper and matron of West Dormitory, respectively, arrived on Sept. 1.

Mr. R. N. Doak, Athletic Director and instructor in the Preparatory Department, also arrived on the first and immediately set about getting the athletic grounds in good shape for the opening.

Several students who expect to earn part of their way by working are already here.

Miss Mabel Cooke, Youngsville, N. C., who is to be librarian, is here getting the library and text-books in order. Miss Ethel Du Rant has been summer librarian.

Rev. J. Mack Walker, Aberdeen, N. C., visited his sister, Mrs. Harper, this week.

Prof. Amick has moved into his new home, which is equipped with all modern conveniences.

Miss Bryan, art teacher, is on the Hill. Her new studio on the third floor, West Dormitory, is nearly ready for occupancy.

Mr. C. R. Heater will begin the erection of his new residence soon.

Mr. M. A. Reitzel has returned from Hiddenite Springs, where he went in search of health, much benefitted.

Mr. R. A. Truitt has gone to take charge of a State High School at Parkersburg, N. C.

Miss Cora Lawrence, High Point, N. C., is visiting at Prof. Lawrence's.

Capt. and Mrs. W. J. Lee are still pleasant visitors at Mrs. Atkinson's home.

Mrs. M. A. Atkinson has returned from a visit to friends and relatives in Raleigh and Wake County.

Dr. W. C. Wicker is at home from a vacation of a week in Gastonia, ready to teach Mathematics and Philosophy.

Prof. Brannock was on the Hill Friday, arranging for the opening. He looks very well considering his serious illness.

Uncle Wellons visited in Durham Wednesday and called on Miss Jennie Herndon who is seriously sick in the Hospital there. Her many friends are anxious for her recovery.

Miss Helen Brinkley and Master William Jones are visiting Misses Jennie Willis and Mary Dee and Master Oscar Atkinson.

NORFOLK LETTER.

A Farewell Message.

About three years ago our Editor, Dr. Atkinson, asked me to write a "Norfolk Letter." I knew I should by rights not accept his very kind invitation, but after much consideration, I agreed to undertake it for a time.

As time passed, and I got into the work, I learned to love it more and more. And while I realize that usually my letters have been uninteresting, and frequently not worthy to occupy the space they have, I have gotten to feel that, as I have been writing from time to time, more and more like I was writing to a large family.

I have many friends and acquaintances scattered through several states. A great many of them have been kind enough to say that they have enjoyed reading these Norfolk Letters. Now that I come to lay down my pen, I find it really hard to say the final farewell word. But for several reasons, only two of which I shall mention now, I feel I ought to do so.

First, I am so very busy, I really find it hard to command the time necessary, always to get a letter together and get it off on time. And Secondly, in the person of the one who will take up the work, Norfolk will have as a correspondent one with far more ability to fill the position than I have; one who, from my experience with him, I feel sure that he will do faithfully and well whatever he undertakes to do.

Rev. A. M. Hanson, pastor of the third Christian Church, Norfolk, has agreed to take up the work. Bro. Hanson is a clear thinker, a sharp, concise writer, a man of real ability. I know of no one to whom I would rather surrender this column than to him.

And now as my last words as writer of the Norfolk Letter, I would say, Don't forget the Porto Rico Building Fund, for the Ponce church. If you haven't taken a collection for that purpose yet, won't you do so?

THE ORGANIZED CLASS—ITS ADVANTAGES.

The Church, while now the oldest institution on Earth, has been the tardiest to recognize the benefits of organization and system and one of the slowest to evolve plans for effectively reaching men and women and drawing them into its work. In the world of business, and even in educational and voluntary societies, the value of organization and systematic work has been seen and adopted, but in the church these things come slowly. Within a very few years the attitude of the church has changed and the tendency now is toward too much and too cumbersome organization. Within the next few years we shall see he needs of the church worked out. There will be but few auxiliaries and these will be well organized and equipped. There will be officers enough, and each officer and committeeman will have a definite work to do.

The Sunday school is the chief auxiliary of the church and will no doubt be such for all time to come. Other religious organizations may spring up, flourish for a time, and cease to exist, but the Sunday school has become a living part of the church itself. Men interested in Sunday school work have been giving to its organization the most careful thought. The conclusion is that in the successful schools the class is the unit. Experience has taught that the class that is organized and assigns definite work to members is the effective class.

Points of Advantage.

Here are some of the reasons why the Organized Class is the most desirable class:

Division of Work.—Organization transforms the class from a teacher's enterprise to a stock company where the members share mutually in the management of the class and in the direction of its activities. Every member is caused to feel that the work of the class in its enlargement, in the work for the Master and His Church, and along lines of ministering to others, is in a measure the individual work of himself.

Permanency.—Organization increases class spirit. The organized class is no longer the class of Mr. Smith, the teacher, but "our class." The unorganized class suffers greatly if the teacher is removed, but the well organized class suffers no more than from the loss of some other officer. The organized class secures another teacher, and in the interim finds things to do that will hold the members together.

Strength.—The organized class gives every member a voice in the class management and class activities. It is democratic, rather than under autocratic rule of a teacher. Each member has something definite to do. The weakness of one is supplemented by the strength of another, and thus the strength of the class is the united strength of all its members. The class becomes a force at work, not merely a field for work. Active men and women grow tired of being told what the Bible tells them to do, how it directs them to live; they desire something to do.

Increased Membership.—When men organize and go after men, or women organize and go after women, they are sure to succeed. One Association reported that one hundred classes, representing many different denominations and conditions, showed an increase of almost 100 per cent. within a year after organization. Active men and women seeking new members will help to solve the "boy problem" and the "girl problem." The reason boys and girls drop out of the Sunday school age is that nothing is given them to do during the period when they long for activity and tire of goody-goody talk.

An Adequate Service.—Organization enables the class to do things. The appointment of special committees, the assignment of definite work to each committee, and the introduction of various class activities does much toward realizing the ideal, "an adequate Christian service for every member."

Essentials of Success.

In the organization and conduct of the class certain things need to be kept constantly in mind that the highest success may be achieved.

1. The class should recognize the church of which it is a part as the supreme authority in all matters. The Church is God's ordained institution, and a free and full recognition of its authority will bring success.

2. The class should recognize, at all times, that it is a definite part of the Sunday school. Wherever practicable it should meet with the school for the opening or closing exercises, or both, and in every possible way co-operate with the Sunday school in its work.

3. The class should recognize that it is organized for Bible study, carefully guard the lesson study period, and put forth every effort to interest all members in a systematic, evangelistic study of the Scriptures.

4. The Church and Sunday school should recognize the class, give to it systematic and intelligent support, permit it to choose its own officers and hold it responsible for the direction of its own activities.

(Editor's Note.—This is the first of a series of four articles on "The Organized Class" that will appear in this department during the month of September.)

Brief Quotations.

Deliver me, O Lord, from that evil man, myself.—T. Brooks.

As a man grows nearer Christ, he goes farther from self. He grows larger in sympathy.

Spurgeon says that we carry our worst enemies with us, that is selfishness.

Listen to Young: "Man, know thyself; all wisdom centers there." Some men seem to think they are all wisdom.

"An humble knowledge of thyself is a surer way to God than a deep searching after learning."

"Nothing will make us so charitable and tender to the faults of others, as, by self-examination, thoroughly to know our own."

Selfishness is that detestable vice which no one will forgive in others, and no one is without himself.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"A man is called selfish, not for pursuing his own good, but for neglecting his neighbor's."

Suggestive Thoughts.

If we are not Christians at home, we can hardly be Christians anywhere else.

Often think of Christ and speak of Christ as actually an inmate of your house, just as He was an inmate of Lazarus's home at Bethany.

It is a good plan to review each day, at night, with especial reference to the inmates of your home: have you been to each one as kind and loving and helpful as you might have been?

Your home is a little world, and as you live Christ there you will find no difficulty in living Christ in the larger world outside.

Faith must be the foundation of the home,—faith in one another, faith in God, faith in God's world. Many homes have no foundation, and the first hurricane of trouble carries them away.

Short Addresses.

1. Plain living and thinking as high as heaven, and a devotion so Christlike, that it knows no depths of human poverty and suffering to the bottom of which it will refuse to go; are true characteristics of wholesome living. Such a career will be conducive to moral and spiritual growth. It will infuse new life into the old, diseased life of selfishness, that will push off the old habits of sin that cling to us.

2. Jesus is the standard of love for the world, and especially for that part of it that has accepted Christ. So the Savior says, that if you do not love even your enemies, you do no better than those who have no standard. Even the savages love those who treat them kindly, and those that they consider their enemies. Even the brute nature can be won by kindness.

3. According to Scripture Jesus is the Son of God, and all depends upon our accepting Him as such. He has power on earth to forgive sins, which he has promised to do if we believe on him. "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed," are the words of Christ himself to Thomas. Similar are his words to Peter, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jonah," etc. Not a passage but reveals a blessing for all who accept his sonship."

4. "Then we are told that, if the Son makes us free, we shall be free indeed. True freedom depends upon some other greater than man or our laws. Many a time a free man is put behind bars and a prisoner is set loose. Our streets are working alive daily with prisoners, those upon whom sin has served its summons, drawn up its bill of indictment. No one less powerful than the Son of God can free from this monster."

5. Paul endeavored to show the Corinthians Christ as "the most excellent way." For did not Christ suffer long, and yet was kind in it all? He never envied another, did not vaunt himself, was not puffed up. If he seems ever to have behaved himself unseemly, it is because we can not appreciate what the right sort of behavior was under his circumstances. Neither did he selfishly seek his own interest. And on through the entire list, we may substitute his name for the word love and have the truth and the meaning."

JACOB'S LADDER.

A Sermon Sketch by Rev. B. S. Crosby.

Text—Gen. 28: 12.

This is a text from which many sermons have been preached. In the entire realm of literature there is perhaps no more exciting and dramatic picture than the one given in this chapter. About this verse and the account which follows learned men have written much and spoken much.

In the chapter preceding, from which the text is taken, is related how Jacob cheated his old father Isaac and obtained the blessing which should have gone to Esau; from whose wrath he was now fleeing to the home of his uncle Laban. With Jacob the time for action was over and the time for sleep and dreams had come. "God giveth His beloved sleep," and he also gives sleep to the unloved, as rain falls upon the just and unjust. A guilty conscience, or some discretion, may prevent it for a time, but over all the earth comes the flood of darkness, and if God can in any way get at a man, his cares will steal away at night.

Jacob was a crafty, treacherous man, and he feared the wrath of his brother. He was alone and in the dark when with a peculiar brightness a guilty conscience shines out. Conditions were threatening, for he did not know what the morrow had in store for him, yet he had not only a good but a glorious night, for the threatening rocks about him became in some way a ladder reaching up to Heaven with angels ascending and descending, and God Himself at the top. What mattered now his rough journey and his dangers? It would seem that a man of Jacob's character would be out of reach of the bounty of God, yet to this man, banished from home, and justly, God shows the true measure and possibilities of repentance.

The love of God for any man is to be stated in the broadest terms. If there are many Jacobs in the world, there are also many ladders, that is, many means of communicating with God. When you give bread to the hungry you open communication with God.

What may God be trying to say to you through the streams, and the trees that cover the hillsides as the cedars of Lebanon? The church militant and the church triumphant form a ladder to heaven. Prayer is the ladder of communication with God. Occasionally a book or a friend, some one whose friendship you must value, may form a ladder to heaven.

If Jacob's ladder is to be counted the first, there are many others for people who travel hard roads. However obtained, lay fast hold of the truth of your high vision. It is much easier to travel, if you remember the vision. Perhaps you have seen a vision, but have now almost lost it. Fix the ladder as Jacob did by setting up a monument to remember what God had done for an unworthy man.

Jesus said to Nathaniel, you shall see heaven open and angels descending, as though he meant, I am the great ladder. Lay hold of that ladder and climb. As you climb you are bound to see God.

THE ELON SPIRIT.

Visitors to the College are impressed forcibly by what they are pleased to call "the Elon Spirit." That there is such a spirit, descending year by year with subtle influence, strong and mastering and moulding, there can be no doubt on the part of even the casual observer. No one can fail to feel it, and no student capable of the larger vision of life a College ought to give can long live under its impelling influence without imbibing it. It is the spirit of fair play, of decency in all things, of moderation and temperance, of mutual helpfulness and human brotherliness, of equality and fraternity and manliness and womanly graciousness, of emulation in right doing, of respect for the rights and attention to the obligations of College mates, of deep and vital piety, of consecrated religious and Christian character. There is a lack of rowdiness, of boisterousness, of bullying, of hazing and all forms of fun-making at the expense of another. Elon students and faculty, obedient to the institution's spirit, are as one great family. Such an atmosphere, pulsing with such a spirit, would seem to be an ideal condition for the unfolding of young life and the budding into fruition of womanhood and manhood of the highest type.

NANSEMOND NOTES.

It has been several months since I have written for The Sun. This silence has not been due to any indifference on my part. I have been engaged in work which has taken me from my study for several weeks. And now that I am trying to write a line, I am overwhelmed with so many matters about which I would like to write.

The recent Sunday School Convention at Liberty Spring brought much inspiration to the church and community. It was a great Convention and the church delighted in having so many delegates and visitors to entertain. Others have written about the Convention work. There is one matter about which I wish to write. The last day of the Convention was the occasion of a very sad funeral at Whaleyville, only a few miles away. I refer to the funeral of Mrs. Lizzie Robertson, the beloved wife of Mr. George B. Robertson. Mrs. Robertson was a member of the M. E. Church, South, but had been for many years a strong friend of the Christian Church. She had attended several of our Conferences and Conventions, and although very sick for several months, she had expressed a desire to attend the Convention at Liberty Spring. Instead of this she was called to meet her blessed Savior. Her good husband had greatly helped Liberty Spring Church during the building of the new church, and she had helped us at the dedication, and for these and many other personal reasons there were many in the community who desired to attend her funeral, but could not do so, on account of duties at the Convention. Sister Robertson was a woman of such noble character that I feel her name and memory deserves a tribute from my pen. I feel better for having known her, and there are many friends of the Christian Church who appreciated her genial spirit and kind help, and who join me in laying this little flower upon her grave, and in expressing sympathy for the bereaved family. Many of her friends have found inspiration in her sweet voice in song. Her songs had blessed others and the music of her soul had prepared her for much suffering, so that in all her affliction she never murmured, but gave God the praise. She will not sing again on earth, but her gentle spirit has been tuned to that heavenly song. And she waits on that other shore for husband and children and other friends and loved ones.

I have recently had good meetings at Berea, Nansemond, and Oakland churches. Rev. M. L. Bryant assisted at Berea. There were 15 professions and eight additions to the church. The church was greatly revived. Brother Bryant did faithful work, and greatly endeared himself to the people. Rev. H. E. Rountree assisted in the meeting at Oakland. There were more than 20 professions and twelve united with the church. Bro. Rountree preached strong sermons, and the people heard him gladly. The church was greatly strengthened by the meeting.

My churches will raise all Conference Assessments in full.

SOME FIRST CONFERENCES.

(Dr. J. O. Atkinson,

Elon College, N. C.

Dear Sir:—

As it will soon be time for the Eastern Virginia Conference to meet in its annual session, I hand you herewith a copy of the first meetings of this body as recorded in the original minutes. It appears that our conference grew out of the "Big May Meeting" at Holy Neck Church. This settles for certain the date of the first meeting and the others.

The address of Nelson Miller and Nathaniel P. Tatem is left out as it is quite long.

The original record book has been located and contains the minutes of the Eastern Virginia Conference from 1817 to 1854; and is quite interesting to the student of the history of the Christian Church. It is expected that this book will be on exhibition at the coming conference.

Yours truly,

W. E. McClenny.)

First Virginia Christian Conference.

Sometime in the year 1817 the brethren at a quarterly meeting at Holy Neck Chapel in Nansemond County, Va., conferred together upon the best method of supporting the gospel among us. There was no organized conference and no record of the proceedings of the meeting kept, and the particulars of the meeting are not recollected; it is, however, recollected that the brethren agreed to meet again at the same place the next May, 1818.

(Signed) Mills Barrett.

Second Virginia Christian Conference.

At a quarterly meeting held at Holy Neck the 18th of May, 1818 there was no conference organized; however, the Brethren met and conferred together and came to the following conclusion:—

We, the members of the quarterly meeting, held at Holy Neck Chapel May 18th, 1818 feeling for the Christian cause, and believing in order to the prosperity of the same the gospel must be better supported among us, think it expedient to recommend the following plan to the churches in the Norfolk circuit:—

First, we think in order to keep up a general union among us, and to examine into our situation, etc., we should hold a union meeting at least once every year.

Second, we think the Deacon in each church should raise a fund of money by subscription from any person who may feel willing to contribute to the same, and make return of all such money to the union meeting, which meeting shall keep a perfect record of the same.

Third, whenever we have a travelling preacher among us, whether he be a young man, or a man of a family, or have any particular incumbrance, we think the Union meeting should appoint a stated salary sufficient to meet his necessities, and for each church to pay quarterly a proportionable part according to the amount of their subscription. And when a local preacher visits us we will pay him for the time he loses according to what money we have in hand after paying the traveling preacher, in which case let the Deacon be governed by the church of which he is a member.

We think a subscription of the following form would be sufficient:

We, whose names are undersigned, promise to pay unto _____, Deacon of church at _____ the sum subscribed by us to be appropriated to the support of the Gospel in the Christian Church.

They then appointed a Union Meeting and Conference to be held at the Cypress Chapel in Nansemond County, Va., to commence the 25th of September, 1819.

The above was recorded by Mills Barrett.

The names of the members of the above Conference were not recorded, therefore I could not record them here.

(Signed) Mills Barrett.

Third Christian Conference.

At a Union Meeting, held at the Cypress Chapel in the County of Nansemond, Va., the 25th, 26th and 27th days of September, 1819, the Annual Conference sat.

PRESENT.

Elders: Burwell Barrett, Joshua Livesay, Nathaniel P. Tatem unordained, Mills Barrett, James Warren, John Livesay unordained, Francis Williamson, Nelson Millar unordained.

Laymen: John Harrold, Thomas Holloway, Stephen Smith, Abraham Harrold, Harred Burt, John Copeland.

The Conference having met, and the names of the members present being recorded, on motion made and seconded, Mills Barrett was chosen Speaker, and Nelson Millar, Scribe. (Acts 15th Chap.) The Conference being organized, it was asked:— Shall pastors be nominated to the different churches? Where conveniently? It was agreed they should. The following Elders and Preachers were then recommended to the pastoral care of the churches opposite their respective names:

ELDERS.

CHURCHES.

Nathaniel P. Tatem, Providence and Craney Island.

Joshua Livesay, Bear Quarter and Deep Creek.

Mills Barrett, Wills, Lebanon, and Republican Chapel.

Burwell Barrett, Joyner's, Barrett's, and Holiway's.

John Livesay, Cypress.

Francis Williamson, Bethel and Holy Neck.

II. It was agreed that the Deacons appointed by each individual church shall make an annual return to the yearly Conference of the moneys in their hands, and of the number of members attached to the churches over which they preside.

III. It was agreed that it shall be the duty of the pastors to collect the preachers together assembled at the quarterly meeting of their respective churches, to consult on the best method of conducting the preaching.

IV. It was agreed that Friday before the last Sunday in October, in every year shall be an annual time for the commencement of the Union Meeting, and the sitting of Conference.

V. It was agreed that the next Union Meeting be held at Barrett's Meeting House in Southampton County, Va.

VI. It was agreed that the proceedings of this meeting be printed and circular address be written to the Elders and Brethren in the United States.

VII. It was proposed that a committee be appointed to write the circular Address and attend to the printing of the minutes, and Nahaniel P. Tatem and Nelson Millar were chosen.

VIII. It was then asked, Shall the Conference adjourn? It was agreed that it adjourn until the Friday before the last Sunday in October, 1820.

DIED.Holland.

At her aunt's, Mrs. M. L. Holland, Newport News, Va., July 30, 1911, Miss Alberta Holland, aged 23 years, 8 months and one day. She was the only child of the late Jesse E. Holland, of Suffolk, Va., who died on last February the 27th. She left her home in Suffolk on the second of July to visit in Newport News, Va., and was taken with typhoid fever and lived just twenty days. She was a member of Bethlehem Church and died in the triumphs of a living faith. She was a member of the Suffolk Christian S. S., having lived in Suffolk for several years. She was a good Christian woman and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a devoted mother. It was almost heart rending for mother to see her only child taken away. She also leaves many relatives and friends to mourn. Her remains were brought to Suffolk and the funeral services were conducted by her pastor in the Suffolk Christian Church and her remains were laid to rest with those of her dear father in Cedar Hill Cemetery. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. Butler.

Gomer.

At her home, near Corapeake, Gates Co., N. C., July 30, 1911, Mr. Dempsey Gomer, aged 57 years, one month and 16 days. He was taken sick and died very suddenly, living only a few hours. He was one of the leading members of Parker's M. E. Church, also a member of the Masonic Lodge at Sunbury, Gates Co., N. C. He had been married twice, first to Miss Liddia Benton, and second to Miss Lizzie Jones, of Gates Co., N. C. He will be greatly missed in his home community, church, and lodge, but their loss has no doubt been his eternal gain. By request of the deceased, the funeral service was conducted by his old friend, the writer, at his home, and his remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery by the side of those of his first wife. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. B.

Watkins.

At his home, near Windsor, Va., Aug. 4, 1911, Quency A. Watkins, aged 68 years, one month and 17 days. He was one of the charter members of Mt. Carmel Christian Church. He was sick for some time and his sufferings were great, though he bore them with much Christian fortitude, being fully resigned to the will of his Lord. He leaves a devoted wife and four children, two sons and two daughters. He was a man full of energy and industry, and had many friends. His funeral service was conducted at the Grove by his pastor in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va. The Lord be with and sustain the bereaved ones.

Holland.

At her home near Windsor, Va., Aug. 7, 1911, Mrs. Jennie Holland, beloved wife of Mr. Richard Holland, aged 31 years, 4 months, and 7 days. She was a member of Antioch Christian Church and died trusting in her dear Savior. She leaves a devoted mother, husband, one sister and 4 half sisters. Her funeral service was conducted by her pastor at the church, and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. The Lord bless the dear bereaved ones.

Holland.

Near Isle of Wight, C. H., Va., Aug. 19, 1911, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Holland, beloved wife of Bro. Edward Holland, aged 62 years, 6 months, and 22 days. She was sick for some time, though she was not heard to murmur or complain. She bore her sufferings with much Christian fortitude, trusting fully in her dear Savior. She made a profession of religion during the Civil War and united with Antioch Christian Church and was faithful to the end. She will be greatly missed in her home, community and church. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a devoted husband and 3 children, two sons, Mr. M. Richard and John Holland of Isle of Wight Co., and one daughter, Mrs. Otelia Atkins, of Isle of Wight Co., Va.; one brother, one sister, and many friends.

The funeral services were conducted at her home by her pastor, and her remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. The Lord bless them all.

H. H. B.

Cook.

John R. Cook, who was born Aug. 4, 1845, fell on sleep Aug. 4, 1911, at the age of 66 years. He leaves in mourning ten children, all grown to manhood and womanhood, two brothers and two sisters, his wife having died a little over a year ago. It was my privilege to visit Bro. Cook several times during the past year or two. He was not a member of any church, but several times expressed himself to me as feeling perfectly safe and having no fear as to the future. The funeral services were held at East Point United Brethren Church, Aug. 5, and the body was laid to rest by the side of his wife. The children who stood weeping by the grave were especially sad to think that father and mother were both taken in so short a time, and that the old home was broken up and they were orphans. But they cannot call father and mother back. However, they can meet them in a brighter, better world on high.

My Dear Children:—

The rains have come, and we all feel revived, and more hopeful. We will welcome the cooler days of the fall, for the summer has been so dry and oppressive that it has been hard on crops and people.

Uncle Jim has been quite sick for two weeks, and unable to attend to work for a week.

The girls and boys who have been off on vacation are with us at home again, and work has begun in good earnest for the winter. Much sewing and preparation for the cold weather has begun, and in spite of the poor crops we hope for the necessaries to carry us through the coming months when warm clothing and nourishing food will be needed for school and table comforts. We shall have to trust God more than ever and give him the best of ourselves.

We are so thankful to Stephenson and Ballentine of Cardenas, N. C., for a fine Durock Jersey pig. All gifts of this kind are a great help to us, and we thank these kind friends. Mrs. Curtis, of Greensboro sends some old magazines which will interest our children. If you have a book that you think will add to our library send it, for we are trying to add a touch here as well as to the rest of our Home.

The Trustees have found it necessary to have a deep well dug, for our water-supply was so insufficient that the matter could not be delayed. Also the College sewer is to be extended and the Orphanage will have to pay half of the expense. These two debts, which were so important they could not be put off, we will be pressed for means to meet. Any extra help any one may give us for this purpose will be thankfully received.

Cordially yours,

Uncle Jim.

McRae, Ga., Aug. 29, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

Our visit is over and we are with papa now. We like our new home. We left grandpa well. It is certainly great to go to grandpa's. Mama says boys are not much trouble there. We helped haul fodder, melons, straw, dirt, and wood, too, in the Virginia cart. We liked the cart so well that we decided when we bought our pony we just wanted a pony and cart like grandpa's. You see we could carry lots more of our little friends with us to ride. We have been looking for a letter in the Corner from our little Newman friends. We certainly hope "Uncle Charlie" is not much sick.

We went to Norfolk to see our Uncle Jos. He took us to Virginia Beach. We enjoyed it so much and expect to go back to roll in the surf some day.

Our entire visit was delightful. We have been well, happy boys and enjoyed everything, but we enjoyed nothing more than that first visit to the Orphanage when we went from Dr. Newman's alone—Aunt Myrtle remembers. And, too, we have not forgotten the disappointment of not seeing you. Here are our dimes. Love to all.

John Newman, S. E., Jr., and Jos.

Rabb Denton.

Well, boys, you have certainly had a good time, and I am glad for you. Now for the pony and cart and you'll be all right.

Franklinton, N. C., Aug. 27, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

May we join the Band of Cousins and help some? Mother was a cousin once, and we would like to take her place. We send our dimes, with love and good wishes.

William Allen Hunt,

Elizabeth Cook Hunt.

Ah, yes, little folks, we welcome you heartily to take mother's place, and you must prove as faithful.

—Trust in the Lord and do good.

Some reverence for the laws ourselves have made,

Some patient force to change them when we will,

Some civic manhood firm against the crowd."

Can you find summed up the manly, self-helping spirit of Saxon liberty anywhere better than in those few lines? Men afraid of nobody, afraid of nothing but their own passions, on guard against being caught unaware by their own sudden impulses and so getting their grapple upon life in firm-set institutions, some reverence for the laws themselves have made, some patience, not passionate force, to change them when they will, some civic manhood firm against the crowd. Literature, ladies and gentlemen, is revelation of the human spirit, and within the covers of this one book is a whole lot of literature, prose and poetry, history and rhapsody, the sober narration of the ecstasy of human excitement—things that ring in one's ears like songs never to be forgotten. And so I say, let us never forget that these deep sources, these wells of inspiration, must always be our sources of refreshment and of renewal. Then no man can put unjust power upon us. We shall live in that chartered liberty in which a man sees the things unseen, in which he knows that he is bound for a country in which there are no questions mooted any longer of right or wrong.

You may remember that allegorical narrative in the Old Testament of those who searched through one cavern after another cutting the holes in the walls and going into the secret places where all sorts of noisome things were worshipped. Men do not dare to let the sun shine in upon such things and upon such occupations and worship. And so I say there will be no halt to the great movement of the armies of reform until men forget their God, until they forget this charter of their liberty. Let no man suppose that progress can be divorced from religion, or that there is any other platform for the ministers of reform than the platform written in the utterances of our Lord and Savior.

America was born a Christian nation. America was born to exemplify that devotion to the elements of righteousness which are derived from the revelations of Holy Scripture.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have a very simple thing to ask of you. I ask of every man and woman in this audience that from this night on they will realize that part of the destiny of America lies in their perusal of this great book of revelations—that if they would see America free and pure they will make their own spirits free and pure by this baptism of the Holy Scripture.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Plymouth.

The church at this place has been struggling for existence, almost since Wentworth was built. There appears to be a new day dawning for old Plymouth.

This is the fourth year that I have been trying to serve the church as pastor. The congregations were very small and could not get enough present to have Saturday services. There has not been a time for Saturday service this year but what there was enough to have service. The attendance at the Sunday* services has more than doubled since I began as pastor. We have not been able to have Sunday school more than six weeks at a time in eight or ten years. We have a very interesting school now, with a membership of about sixty. The interest is still increasing. We began the meeting the 4th Sunday in July with Rev. W. L. Wells to assist. We conducted the meeting in connection with the Presbyterian church at Mt. Pleasant. Rev. Mr. Hemphill is pastor there and Dr. McWhite, D. D., of Raleigh, assists. We had services at Plymouth in morning and afternoon and service at Mt. Pleasant at night. We labored together at both churches with hearty co-operation on the part of all. I have never seen quite such a spirit of brotherly love manifested between two denominations as was manifested here.

The meeting resulted at Plymouth in eleven professions and twelve accessions to the church. Both church and community were much revived. Bro. Wells did good preaching and made many lasting friends while there. We give God all praise for the results of the work. At the last appointment we began a movement to repair and remodel the church. We hope to have the work complete before Conference. We beg the prayers of all the brethren for us here.

Amelia.

The church continues to grow in interest here. The regular congregations are good, both Saturday and Sunday. We have an almost ever-green Sunday school.

We have made improvements here every year since I began as pastor. The church was in debt for painting the first year about $30. We soon had that paid. Last year we bought a nice $75 organ, and paid for that. Last spring we covered one side of the house and want to cover the other side before Conference.

We began the meeting here the fifth Sunday in July with Rev. C. C. Peel of Elon College to assist. The meeting was good from the beginning, resulting in 25 professions and six accessions to the church. We are expecting several others to come in soon. Bro. Peel did good service both in pew and pulpit. He preached able gospel sermons, which were appreciated by all. He will be long and kindly remembered by this people. The interest is increasing in every way here. We are praying and looking for greater things to come from Amelia.

Mt. Hermon.

The work at this place is encouraging. The attendance is good at both Saturday and Sunday services. We are making some progress here. Last year we did some repairing on the foundation and put carpet in the aisles, altar and pulpit. This year we have put new pews in the middle aisle to correspond with those on the sides. We hope to paint the inside of the building and put blinds to the windows before Conference.

We began the meeting the third Sunday with Rev. C. C. Peel to assist. He did not get there until Monday afternoon.

Owing to the very busy season with the farmers saving their fodder the attendance was small after Sunday. Bro. Peel did good acceptable preaching. There are very few unconverted people in the community, and they do not go to church here. The meeting was without much interest. The church was revived.

The people here are like those of the other churches that I am serving, kind, hospitable and generous. May God's richest blessings rest and abide with all these good people is the prayer of their pastor.

A. T. Banks.

Newport News Letter.

The Sun has had much of late along the line of "Vacation" notes. My people here were considerate enough to tender to me three Sundays, so I suppose it is entirely in order now for me to make report, as others have done, to The Sun's readers. The first week I spent about home in what some would consider mighty hard work. At the end of the week I ran across to Norfolk and did a little work in the interest of the Young People's Worker. I worshipped first Sunday at 11 a. m. with Brother Bryant at my old charge in Berkley. Brother Bryant is holding his own well over there and more. His wife, too, is gifted in the field. They have a large place in the hearts of their people. At evening I went over to hear Brother Howsare of the Memorial Christian Temple. Although I hid behind a lady who had hat enough to answer the purpose, a member of the congregation reported me to the pastor who "laid violent hands" on me for the offense and made me preach. I spent two nights while in the community with Brother Howsare most delightfully. He left during the week for Dayton and Yellow Springs on his vacation. By request of the deacons through Brother Blanchard I consented to fill the pulpit for them on the second Sunday. Congregations were fairly good, and I enjoyed my stay with them. Brother Blanchard entertained me and showed me many kindnesses, going out with me to Rosemont in afternoon where I spoke to a small audience. Bro. Howsare has done a fine work at the Temple during his two years there and has made strong friends who will regret to see him leave, as he has announced to do. He placed the writer under obligations to him.

I spent two days at the camp meeting at Wakefield, Va., where I received some rich things in the preaching of Rev. Joseph Smith, Professor of Theology at a Methodist College at Meridian, Miss., and the Rev. Mr. Bridgers. Mr. Bridgers is not only an eloquent speaker but a very fine singer, while Mr. Smith ranks as one of the finest teachers and expositors of the Bible of our day. We wondered if the fortunate brethren of the "Northfield company" could have a richer opportunity for the same length of time. I did not see, nor hear, any of the wild fanaticism that had been reported to me of the Wakefield meetings, but on the contrary we observed a very sane conservatism and a spiritual atmosphere. It seemed to this writer more like a great union revival, deeply spiritual, for in the leadership were some of the most influential and active leaders from the various denominations who are also leaders in social and business lines of their communities.

Last week I spent in Surry and Southampton Counties. In Surry County I found the revival at New Lebanon on, in charge of the pastor, Rev. C. C. Jones, assisted by Rev. Daniel Keys of South Norfolk, who did the preaching. Brother Keys is an interesting preacher, and all the way through he preached Sanctification as a second work of grace, subsequent to conversion, or regeneration, as I have seldom if ever heard it preached. When we left, at the last service the altar was fairly well filled and several conversions professed, and the church was being greatly moved. Brother Jones is held in high esteem by that membership and community.

We reached home Saturday evening late, greatly refreshed and strengthened, as we were greatly reduced when we left home. We could not get to Northfield, nor fish on a favorite pond with some expert fisher, nor even paint a house, but we did "go a-fishing," and spent a little time in the woods with the squirrels profitably.

As has before been announced in the Sun, I shall retire from this pastorate Dec. 1st, and will be succeeded here by Rev. W. D. Harward, of Madrid, Iowa. Brother Harward's friends in the South will be glad to see him return, and he will find in the membership here some very loyal and devoted members. We shall wish for him all possible success. Vacation is over and I am settling down again to put in another three months' hard work before leaving this field.

Murdock W. Butler.

Aug. 30, 1911.

Lineville, Ala.

Since I left Randleman June 19th, I have been thinking every week I would write something for The Sun, but I have found no time until now.

Looking back to Commencement, it seems that just a few days have passed since we were all on the College campus enjoying the commencement exercises. I shall never forget the pleasant association that one enjoys there, both of faculty and student, but these pleasant hours are not given us all the while, for some times the clouds overshadow the sun, and all is gloomy.

My work during the summer has been in the Alabama Conference, except ten days, which were spent with Rev. G. D. Hunt at LaGrange.

Our work here is moving along nicely. Most of my work has been with Rev. J. D. Dollar, which I feel has been highly appreciated by both pastor and church. In fact we have no man in our conference who is more consecrated to service and has the best interest of the church more at heart than does Bro. Dollar. I find his work, with the exception of one church, in fine condition.

All the revivals I have heard from have been good. It seems that much good has been accomplished; but our preachers are slow to say anything about their work through The Sun. It does look like more of our ministers would report their work I know Dr. Atkinson would rather fill the paper with letters from our ministry than to put an advertisement in. Not only this, but if our preachers would report their work more, people in Georgia and Alabama would take and read The Christian Sun more. We also need your service, Dr. Atkinson, in these two conferences, and we need it next October.

I must tell something about our new church, Dingler's Chapel. This church was organized Apr. 16, 1911, by Rev. J. H. Hughes, who has been pastor since that time. The church was organized with thirteen charter members. It is not yet five months old, and has now an enrollment of 56. It was my privilege to assist Bro. Hughes in a revival here last week.

Truly no greater meeting has ever been held in our Conference. Every denomination in the community just closed out their work and came to the services. And all were of one accord and the Lord blessed us abundantly. Forty-three were added to this church at this meeting, and I know of eight more to come in later. Others have gone out to other churches since the meeting closed.

The fact that this church was needed here has already been proven by these people, in that a lot has already been purchased on which to build a church house and about $375 in cash and subscriptions collected to pay on this building.

I learn that Bro. Hughes will soon move to this community, and I guess will join the new church later on.

J. V. Knight.

Sept. 1, 1911.

Center Grove.

The meeting began the second Sunday in August and continued five days. Dr. W. S. Long was present and preached some fine sermons, which were enjoyed by pastor and people. The church would be glad to hear Dr. Long again.

Bethel.

Our meeting at Bethel began the first Sunday in August and closed on Wednesday. Rev. J. S. Carden was with us and assisted in the meeting. There were seven conversions and three accessions. The church would be glad to hear Bro. Carden again.

T. W. Strowd.

Chapel Hill, N. C.

Chipley, Ga.

During the week after the fourth Sunday in July, I was with my brother, Rev. C. W. Carter, in a meeting at Noonday. I was with this church in a meeting eight years ago, but there have been many changes since that time. Some of the changes I was glad to see; yet because of some of them I was made to feel sad. I reached the community Monday evening in time for services and found a good meeting in progress. The congregations were large and the attention was fine. I feel sure I never saw a people more attentive. The meeting continued till Friday night, with increased interest. While there was only one member received, the church was spiritually strengthened, and much good was done in the community. From Noonday I went in company with brother to the district meeting, of which notice has already been given.

The first Sunday in August I was with the church at Mt. Zion, this being my regular appointment. By this time I was almost broken down when my voice would hardly hold up for me to do the preaching. Yet I took my time and did what I could, by the help of the Lord, and we had a good meeting. We received six members and the church was more fully awakened to the responsibilities than before. At my next appointment I have an opportunity like one I have never had before. I shall baptize three applicants, ranging from 4 to 60 years of age. I am arranging to hold my other meetings during the month of September.

I have arranged with Rev. G. O. Lankford to assist me at Wadley, beginning Saturday before the second Sunday in September. At this time I expect to organize the church and hold a few days' meeting during the week following. From the statement I made when I began the work here, relative to help, and the rapidity of the work some may think the work has progressed rather slowly; and so it has. But I did not get but one dollar for the statements I made in the Sun; and not a subscription collected till I wrote personal letters; and some of them not then. So you see that accounts for the slow progress of the work. Yet it is not too late to do good on the subscription at this late date. We have used about eleven hundred dollars, and borrowed nearly two hundred. This is a work we are going to be proud of and will be a credit to the conference.

I have arranged with Rev. J. H. Milam to help me at Lanett, beginning the third Sunday. The work has not progressed here as I would liked to have seen it. But from the fact that all the other churches have services every Sunday we need not expect to do so well with only one. We are anxious for a good meeting at this place.

At Langdale, as it is the union place (and I say well, for so it is, because that is the spirit in all the work there) the pastor of the Methodist church and I will conduct our meeting together. The work at Langdale is in good condition. We have only a few members there, but most of them are interested. That accounts for good work. If our church-life is to mean anything to us we must be interested in the work of the church.

E. M. Carter.

New Harmony.

The annual meeting began at New Harmony Saturday before the first Sunday in August. Brethren J. W. Elder and T. W. Gray came to my assistance on Sunday and remained to the close on Friday. Br. Elder preached five, and Bro. Gray, three sermons; all of which were very much enjoyed. Twenty-one newmembers and one restoration were a part of the results of the meeting. New Harmony is a live wire. She has recently installed two 1600 candle power lights at a cost of $30.00.

This church has one of the best Sunday schools in the conference. The school is led by that enthusiastic and wide-awake superintendent, E. B. Lashley, and this accounts, in part, for the success of the meeting. No farmer need expect a good harvest who does not give good preparation to the soil, deposit good seed in it, and give careful cultivation to the plants. Neither can a church hope for much prosperity which does not maintain a Sunday school. The Sunday school is the church's nursery, and the better attention we give to that nursery, the more fruit we will gather, and the greater will be the church's prosperity.

I went with Bro. Elder from New Harmony to New Home, where we held meetings from Saturday, 11 A. M. till Tuesday 11 A. M. I did all the preaching except the last day. This, together with the fact that this church has no Sunday school, accounts for the cold meeting that we had. Two members received by letter was the result.

Rock Springs.

I reached home Wednesday and found my home church, Spring Hill, in the midst of a grand revival. This church met on Saturday before and held a protracted prayer service until Monday, when our pastor, Rev. C. W. Carter, came to their assistance and continued the meeting until Friday, with the church much revived and eleven members received.

Corinth.

From here I went to Corinth and held services for my son Sunday and Sunday night. We had a very delightful communion service Sunday night, in which some of our Methodist brethren broke rauks and took part with us in the good old-timed humble and loving service of "foot-washing."

Corinth is another one of our live wires. She has a fine Sunday school, (with Bro. J. H. Harris Supt.) and a devoted membership. It is a growing church in a growing community.

McGuire's Chapel.

From here I went to McGuire's Chapel to assist Bro. C. W. Carter in a meeting. This church is in Tallapoosa County, where there was being waged a bitter fight between the liquor and anti-liquor folks, on the Local Option question. The election was pulled off Monday and the liquor element was buried beneath a majority of more than 1,000 votes, which means a victory for old Tallapoosa County in favor of temperance, sobriety, morality, law and order; and, of course, this means a victory for Christianity and the church.

We closed the meeting Wednesday with one addition and came home with a feeling of satisfaction over results—willing for the good Lord to have all the praise.

C. M. Dollar.

Malone, Ala.

Wadley, Alabama.

Our meeting commenced at Bethany Church on second Saturday in August and closed the following Thursday. While we had no accessions to the church, we had a splendid meeting and the church was greatly revived. We are expecting some members here at our next meeting.

We commenced at Dinglar Chapel third Saturday in August. Here we found the people ready for meeting. The little church had carried the matter to God and was confidently expecting a great revival. Rev. J. V. Knight was with us here and did most of the preaching. He seemed to be at his best and did fine work. The meeting started off well and improved from day to day. We received the hearty co-operation and assistance of other denominations which added greatly to the success of the meeting. We had large audiences, both day and night. The meeting continued eight days. We received forty three members. This is a new church, having been organized in April of this year, and this gives us a membership of fifty-five.

We have no church building here, but when I left they had a subscription of over three hundred dollars on church building.

J. H. Hughes.

Note of Thanks.

We wish to express to friends our most sincere thanks and appreciation for every act of kindness and word of sympathy which we have received during the recent illness and death of our husband and father. May the Lord bless you all.

MY HELPER.

(The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me. Heb. 13:6.—Golden Text for Sunday, Sept. 17).

The golden text is indeed appropriate to the lesson of the day. A mighty king whose word was law had done all that he could to work injury, hurt, and death, upon three unprotected and helpless subjects. He had had strong men take them, bound, fastened, fettered, and cast them in a furnace heated seven times hotter than usual. The strong men themselves coming near the furnace to cast the Hebrews in had been burned to death, but the Hebrews who had been cast into the furnace and left there were unhurt, unscorched even. These Hebrews had prayed to God, and were trusting in God, and were innocent men in the sight of God, and the fires of a furnace, be that furnace of hell, had no powers over them. God was on their side and all that man could do to hurt or harm was of no avail. God ever and always takes care of His own.

The words of the text are a quotation from David, Psalms 118:6, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear! What can man do unto me?" David had himself been subjected to sore straits and dangerous difficulties because of man's wrath and wickedness. But David had trusted in the Lord, and the Lord had delivered him.

This deliverance may not always be a visible, bodily, temporal deliverance. Some times it is. Again it is not. This is as God elects and deems best. He knows when it is best for the body to perish, and when best for the body to be preserved unhurt.

Our golden text does not mean, therefore, that God will deliver the body in every time of difficulty and danger; though often it may mean this. It does mean always, however, that God will ultimately and finally take care of His own, and that man's evils and wickedness are of no avail when God is on our side.

There are many ways even now in which men are cast into, and tried by, the fiery furnace.

1st. Sometime the soul of man is bound up, in the flesh, with a temper, a passion, a tongue, that are more terrible to the soul's welfare than a fiery furnace heated seven times. If any Sun reader finds himself in the heated confines of such a temper, tongue, passion, let him remember that God is able to deliver him from all these things, and bring him out unscathed, unharmed, uninjured, spotless and pure indeed. The God who was able to temper the heat of the furnace to the needs of the three Hebrew captives is likewise able to temper it to the needs of one with a sharp tongue, a quick temper, a burning passion. The soul that trusts in God shall conquer all these things.

2nd. In the heat and fury and excitement of a political upheaval, or a neighborhood brawl, God is able to take care of the soul, and keep it calm, unscathed, undisturbed, that puts its trust in Him. If God is for us no man can harm us.

3rd. In the whirl of this busy time, when men rush on in madness to acquire wealth and heap up riches, God is able to save the soul and keep it pure, unharmed, uninjured. If we confide in riches, the world can and will harm us; but if we confide in God, and trust Him day by day, we shall come out victorious. The words of Hans Sachs come:

"The rich man in his wealth confides,
But in my God my trust abides,

Laugh as ye will, I hold
This one thing fast that he hath taught,
Who trusts in God shall want for naught.

"Yes, Lord; thou art as rich today
As thou hast been, and shall be aye;
I rest on thee alone.
Thy riches to my soul be given,
And 'tis enough for earth and heaven."

THE SPIRIT OF SECULARISM.

The world is growing better in many ways, we take it, but that the spirit of secularism grows with the increasing years we think none can doubt. Men's minds become engrossed, more and more, with business, with pursuits, with politics, even to the neglect of spiritual attainment and growth. In consequence, the Sabbath is crowded with thoughts and plans and conversation for the work of the week to follow. On Sunday morning the daily paper is sought and read with eager interest to the neglect of the Bible and religious books. The secular paper and periodicals receive first place in the home, in conversation, in thought, and the religious paper, if taken at all is left unread, or maybe glanced at a little for conscience sake, and "to keep up." Few are the homes today that give religious themes and thoughts first place.

Many a man thinks he finds the church news in his secular paper, that is sufficient, and there is no need to take, or to read, his church paper at all.

Here are words that apply with force, we know, to our own situation, taken from an editorial in The Nashville Christian Advocate:

"It would be well for our people to open their eyes to the fact that the work of substituting secular periodicals for the Christian newspaper and magazine is progressing with fearful strides. A smaller number of Church members in proportion to the total membership read the Christian periodicals than has been known before in the history of the Christian Church. This fact is due in general to a growing spirit of secularism. Specifically, it is largely due to the unwillingness of the Church to open its eyes to the systematic effort which is being made to substitute the secular paper for the Church paper. Secular papers, whose management cares little for the Church, are giving much space to what is called religious news and literature, and thousands of readers, without a single word of warning from Christian teachers, are being led to believe that these secular periodicals can safely take the place of the Church periodical. The discerning mind can plainly see not only that the religious news and literature furnished by many secular periodicals are inadequate, but positively hurtful to the Christian Church."

It can be said without fear of successful contradiction that in the minds of most of the young people a love for the secular is being inculcated with a hundred subtle influences, but a love for the religious is attended to in small degree indeed, or not at all.

As we see it the fight of the future is here: The spirit of secularism against the spirit of the religion of Christianity.

The Crops.

There are exceptions, here and there, but, generally speaking, the crops are good and the prospects for a bountiful harvest are bright indeed. Whereupon we rise to remark that ours is a non-appreciative and ungrateful generation. Since early spring men everywhere have grumbled and growled and complained that the weather was so dry, that the crops this year would certainly be ruined. The crops are not ruined, but we haven't heard any regrets yet at the doleful and dire predictions. We doubt if half of the complainers have expressed any sorrow whatever at their own folly or any grief at their own ingratitude.

In these latter days showers have multiplied and rains have refreshed an otherwise parched earth. The time for regret over unrighteous forebodings has certainly arrived.

Our Father is always better and more generous than we have any right to expect or anticipate.

ELON'S FINE OPENING.

It will be a source of gladness, and of gratitude, to all Sun readers to learn of the excellent opening Elon College is having at the beginning of this its 22nd annual session. Year by year the College increases its number of patrons, and so its influence and usefulness as a Christian institution. Though one of the younger, we believe the youngest church college in this State, its curriculum ranks evenly with that of the oldest institutions, its faculty measures in scholarship and in efficiency with the best and its number of students keeps pace with its increasing capacity to care for and maintain them. The increasing years show first, the wisdom of those who founded and have builded the institution, and secondly, the possibilities for usefulness and service loom large upon the horizon. It has hardly begun to appear what this institution may yet be, but the increase year by year makes its friends take fresh courage, and press forward with more hope and enthusiasm.

Last year was the most successful in point of numbers that the institution had ever enjoyed. On the opening day of the fall term last year 147 enrolled, and by Tuesday, A. M. following 174 had enrolled and the total enrollment for the year reached 238. This year on the opening day 180 enrolled, by Tuesday following (today while this is being written) 202 have enrolled. Should the same ratio of increase keep up this year as last, which now seems highly probable, and reasonable, the total enrollment for the year would then be 291. This, we say, is reasonable, and is in keeping with the proportionate increase of last year. Friends of the College can make this not only reasonable, but real, and with the continued co-operation, the combined sympathy, and united effort of the friends of the college, there is every hope and prospect that Elon shall enroll 300 students during the scholastic year now begun. To this end should the friends of the College and of our good cause everywhere labor and pray and strive.

This our Christian Church has builded, an institution in which all who care for learning, culture, and Christian education, may indulge a pardonable pride.

THEIR VACATION.

We are surprised if Christian Sun readers are not much impressed, by now, with the fact that the ministerial students in Elon College the past year have spent busy, useful, and timely vacations. They have certainly not been an idle set. They have wrought worthily and well. The Sun has carried reports, from time to time, of their work in revival meetings. The Lord has certainly seemed to use to acceptance, and to great good, their labors, the labors of Elon's ministerial students, during the summer now closing. You have seen, and doubtless noted their names, and the success of their labors—J. Lee Johnson, J. F. Morgan, W. L. Wells, J. V. Knight, H. E. Truitt, B. J. Earpe, A. T. Banks, and possibly others, whose names do not now occur.

This line is written, not to puff or advertise these young men, for they do not need that; but to point out the fact, and emphasize it, that men of zeal and energy and spiritual fervor are ready and willing to work, not only ten, but twelve months in the year, and to further emphasize the hope we have in these young men who are now studying and preparing for a life of usefulness and service in the church. In your devotions, reader, remember our ministerial students at the throne of grace.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Facing The Shadows.

Life gets to be real when one reaches, or realizes that one reaches, the border line. We give way to prejudice and pride and passion, in youth and strength, and manhood's vigor. But as might wears away, and strength of muscle wastes, and the body becomes frail and faltering, then things are different. The real issues of life loom large, and the meager, minor things fall away.

On July 21 of this year soldiers of the blue, and those of the gray, met at Manassas, Va., to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the first, and very desperate and bloody battle, of Bull Run. The soldiers who had faced and fought each other in deadly conflict fifty years ago were there now to grasp hands as brothers and talk over, in deep and tender affection, the dreadful scenes of those terrible days.

We copy these fine words from the address of Major Lowell, Chaplain of the U. S. Army retired, who presided:

"We are heartily in sympathy with this and all similar gatherings, indeed, all efforts to bring together in brotherly and fraternal relations all who were at one time unfortunately estranged. The world has never seen a finer object lesson than we witness today, veterans of two great hostile armies coming together after fifty years in unity and friendship where two great battles were fought on the same field. Comrades, it is high time for us to recognize our relation as brothers, and join hands in reconciliation. Fifty years have passed and we are near the land of shadows. Already a majority of our comrades have passed on, and we stand on the border land, and should forgive, forget our passions and prejudices and become brothers.

I am reminded of a scene on the battlefield before Richmond. The battle had been fierce. The tide of battle rolled back and forth over the same field, hence the dead, dying and wounded were intermingled over the same ground. After the battle parties were sent out to bury the dead, when two soldiers, one in blue and the other in gray, lay cold in death side by side, with hands clasped. What a story this scene presents! These men had fiercely fought each other, perhaps had come into personal contact and had taken each other's lives, yet as they faced the grim monster they forgot their passions, recognized each other as brothers and lovingly grasped hands as brothers.

So, comrades, as we face the grim monster, let us banish our passions, recognize each other as brothers, and clasp hands as brothers."

The Way of the Transgressor.

Let it be put down, for the ten thousandth time, as it is writ large in the good Book, The way of the transgressor is hard. Henry Beattie, of Richmond, tried before a jury of his peers, given every opportunity to prove his innocence, stands convicted of wife murder, and in a murderer's cell awaits the swift approaching day of his execution. This man transgressed, led a life of duplicity, indulgence, waywardness, wickedness, deep darkness and hideous sin. A loving father, with plenty, furnished him the means whereby he purchased his ruin, and an abnormal passion for late hours and evil company, led him to the fatal step that shocked a community, wrecked a home, and sent a life without warning into the presence of its God. And now the transgressor, after having his shameful and disgraceful life held up in most hideous mien to a shocked and horrified public, must spend the remainder of his earthly days shut up behind prison bars, watched and guarded like some threatening and ferocious beast, and then led, like a loathed and hated thing to the place of his doom and death. It is not an agreeable picture. It is horrifying, revolting, terrible, pitiable in the extreme to look upon.

The hand of justice has fallen, and since he would not believe it, since he refused it and flung it back into the face of the inspired writer, Henry Beattie must be shown, (shown by Him who said, Vengeance is mine, I will repay) that, The way of the transgressor is hard. He would learn in no other way. And so by the circuitous route of a life of riotous living and a murderer's cell this man comes face to face with the words and the warning of his God. Be sure your sin will find you out. The way of the transgressor is hard.

IS THE YOUNG MAN SAFE?

II Samuel 18:29.

(Opening Address to Elon College students by Presd. W. A. Harper, Sunday, Sept. 10.)

It is a rare thing in these days of all but universal enlightenment to find an enemy of education. It has been demonstrated so many times in the world's history that the educated man is superior to the ignorant in everything, that it is a useless waste of time, and worry of patience, to undertake to prove that education is necessary to the attainment of the individual's highest and best achievement in life. Education is necessary to leaders in all the realms of activity—physical, moral, intellectual, social, financial, literary, spiritual—in no department of human endeavor can a man do his best, attain his highest without education. And this is but right, because education is the development of a man, his unfolding, his leading out, to borrow the Latin meaning of the word, and whatever contributes to this end must needs add to man's capacity to do more and be more than he otherwise could do or be. It is your appreciation of this fact that has brought you to Elon College, that encouraged the founders of this College to contribute to its establishment, that induces the men and women of our Faculty here to teach—our appreciation of education's value brings us all here to-day.

But—while we all appreciate education, while we would not discount it in the least, while we all would strive to realize its fullest possible good in our own life, yet we cannot escape the fact that there are dangers connected with its getting, with the processes of it, that challenge our thought and compel our attention. Have we not known education to ruin men? Did not our parents or our guardians, did not many of us ourselves, ponder long what College we should enter? Did not we and they realize that choosing the College that is to be the scene of a young person's metamorphosis is one of the weightiest issues of life and carries with it great possibilities—possibilities of both good and evil—of danger and of safety to youth? Are not many of the loved ones at home at this very hour asking the same anxious question propounded the messengers by King David in regard to the brilliant, but dissolute Absalom—"Is the young man safe?" Is my son safe? Is my daughter safe?

Yes; they are asking these questions in their heart of hearts to-day—and they are asking them with all earnestness, even though they pondered long and well before arriving at a decision as to where to send the idol of their love to College. It is but natural that they should, because they know, whether we students do or not, that College life is beset with many dangers, many pitfalls, many snares and wily traps.

I wish this morning, in the very beginning of the College year and of the College career of many of you, to point out briefly some of the most insidious of these snares and then to suggest the way of escape from them, that your College year and your College career, by judicious ordering of life and conduct and strict adherence thereto may be safe—that, when your College days are over, you may be as pure as when you left your parental roof and stronger in every fiber of character and manhood and womanhood because of the preparation days rightly spent at Elon.

One of the most alarming dangers of modern education in some quarters is Higher Criticism. I do not wish to be understood as decrying scholarship, research, learning, thorough investigation. These are the things for which the College exists, which the Church demands, and of which she stands in need. The Middle Ages, with their low moral condition, so low as to merit for them the title of the Dark Ages, give ample proof that the Church has everything to lose and nothing to gain by setting itself against learning and education. But this is not to welcome Higher Criticism nor plead for its necessity. A higher critic is a scholar with the profession on his lips of a Christian, but with a skeptic's heart and attitude. It is an old saying that people usually find what they look for. Even astronomers have to make allowances for what they call the personal equation in recording observations. When we deal with a matter as ethereal and personal as religion the attitude of the investigator is all the more important. The man who regards the authority of the Bible as of the same type as the authority of a book on Ethics is not the proper person to investigate the authenticity of the Bible nor of any fact in it. He who undertakes to investigate the Scriptures must believe them beforehand, recognize them as superior to any other book, as in a class by themselves; equipped with such an attitude he is prepared to have his investigations respected. The attitude of the Natural Scientist toward the teachings of Natural Science, that all its teachings are provisional, temporary, and subject to change without notice, is not the proper attitude toward the religious life and its teachings. Religion is not a natural, but a revealed, science—more correctly speaking it is not a science at all, but an art, the art of getting on right terms with God and our fellowmen, and the principles of right and truth underlying that art are eternal and not subject to revision. No young man or young woman is safe who is in an institution of learning where the higher critical viewpoint is the pier from which he is compelled to begin his voyage over life's sea. But in this regard, you are safe. We have never had and hope never to have a Higher Critic in our Faculty. Those of us who teach here respect and honor the Word of God as the fundamental chart of life and accept it as the sufficient rule of faith and practice in religious conduct, and deplore the tendency in many places to belittle the worth and disparage the value of the Book of books.

The second danger which confronts College students is like unto the first, but is found in courses given under the Department of Social Science, and not under the Biblical Department. The men, in many institutions of higher learning, who head these departments, would be higher critics if they were Biblical teachers or expounders. They have read the Bible, however, and are loud in their praises of it as a veritable store-house of rich Sociological material. They bid their students read and re-read it, not for food for their heart-hunger nor drink for their soul-thirst, but for the Sociological matter it contains. Often Sociological material from other quarters is found which conflicts with that of the Bible—and the Bible is declared to be in error. These distinguished doctors reason in a circle. They will assure you that their science must not be condemned because it discovers things not in the Bible, because the Bible is not an authority on Sociology, but in the next breath will deny the authenticity of the Bible because it conflicts with their theories. Oh, consistency! They will bolster up their science, which is always subject to revision even in its fundamental principles without notice, when the Bible seems to lend color to their tenets and then they condemn the Bible and belittle it when it challenges any of their pet theories. You have heard the expression—to use a man; that seems to be what the higher critical doctrinaires in Social Science evidently do with the Bible. They use it—and then abuse it. If many of the things reported as being enunciated by these teachers are actually taught by them, the farther the young people of our land keep from them, the better it will be from our land and our young people. We have a department of Social Science in this institution, but it respects the Bible first and Social Science second. Here you will run no risk of having your spiritual eyes blinded by the exaltation of Sociology at the expense of theology, but you will see that Sociology rightly taught is a powerful handmaid to the correct understanding of the revealed Word of God as we have it in the Scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments.

The third danger toward which I would direct your attention is the free-thought with respect to all issues of life and conduct which is characteristic of a great many College men. They approach every matter with the skeptical air and are never sure of anything or any principle. To them nothing is too sacred or hallowed to be doubted and scoffed at. They scoff at religion as the proper thing for women and children—they doubt its value for men. They place a question point after every positive statement of every book they read, of every lecture they hear. They boast of their freedom of thought, forgetting that the truest freedom is that which subjects itself to law and order and tries to harmonize with surrounding conditions and circumstances. The real free man is not he who kicks against the laws of the land, but he who obeys them. Those College men who indulge in free thought and the teachers who encourage it, respecting the fundamental institutions of life and society, need to do some sober thinking as to the consequences of such intellectual license. Liberty ought never to become license. If any of you have come to Elon expecting to find such an atmosphere of so-called freedom of thought, you will be disappointed. We want you to think, but we do not want you to assume the skeptic's interrogatory attitude toward all the issues and conditions of life. We are sure that an institution which encourages or tolerates such a spirit is not a safe place for unfolding young manhood or womanhood.

From what has been said you perceive that Elon stands for Christian education. But what is Christian education? I once heard a College president say in answer to that question, that Christian education results where a Christian teaches. Yet that same man at that time was presiding over an institution in which half the teachers were either skeptics or higher critics. In the face of all that, he maintained that his was a Christian institution and of a nobler type than the denominational College, because it was a State institution and included all the people. Christian Education cannot be had unless all who teach are Christians, humble, child-like, trusting Christians, who never scoff at religion, who never deny the authority of the Bible, who never minimize or speak slightly or disparagingly of the Church. Even this is not enough: the atmosphere surrounding the College must be pregnant with spirituality. That is why it is best for a College to be situated as Elon is, away from the distractions and allurements of the gay, maddening, dissipating throng of the city. The College in a city has the city atmosphere around it and does not, cannot produce as fine a type of Christian education as the College in a College town, in a town which is the College, for such a College can make its own atmosphere. We are proud of Elon's reputation in this regard, and, please God, we always hope to have the atmosphere round about this sacred place as pulsing with spirituality and tense with Christian influences making for character development and the expansion of soul-power as it now is. Our earnest prayer is that it may improve in this respect this year, and to this end we invite the fullest, completest possible co-operation between students, citizens, and faculty. If Elon's atmosphere is to improve, it must be the co-operative achievement of all of us. If we work to that end, we may be sure we shall be safe, both as young and as older people.

Education trains the head. Christian education has a larger task—it cannot stop with head-training alone. It must aim at the production of an all-round man, an all-round woman. I do not believe an educational institution can rightfully lay claim to be a Christian institution unless it strives to produce a complete citizen—physically, mentally, socially, morally, spiritually. No man who is deficient in any of these regards is a complete man and no education which fails to equip its pupils in any of these directions can be properly styled Christian. We cannot leave the policeman to look after the conduct and the minister the souls of our pupils, while we teachers look after their intellectual development. We must do all three and more besides.

Christian education must give attention to the body. Did not the sacred writer say that our bodies are the temples of the living God? Can we as Christians afford not to give strict heed to our bodies? Can a Christian institution remain one and not give attention to the physical well-being of its pupils? We have learned that a sound body is an essential basis for well-proportioned, symmetrical development in every other department of our being. Our body is our fundamental part in this world. We must take care of it, if we are to prosper and do our full part as men and women in the world's arena of action. When a Christian College therefore forbids the use of cigarettes and discourages the use of tobacco in every form, it is acting within its own province, doing what if it were not to do, it would forfeit its right to be called Christian. When it encourages its pupils to take exercise and provides directors for athletics and physical culture, it is again doing its plain, simple, Christian duty, and it is also the duty of the pupils in such an institution to take advantage of these opportunities for physical self-development. When I commend athletics, I do not mean that it should be exalted above every other feature of College life, but that all should enter into the sports and all derive good from them. Not the spectators at, but the partakers in, athletic events derive good and gain benefit. We hope that every student this year will partake as well as spectate. Thus will every student be safe.

Of course a College ought to furnish mental development; all grant that. Yet I have known students at Elon who did not get it, because they did not study. Others have not got the development they were entitled to and deserved to have because they picked out the easiest course allowed by the elective system. Still others have studied too much. We hope to have everybody study during study hours this year and give himself to the other things of College life at other times. We hope no one will study on Sunday. It is not necessary—never is, if we do our duty at other times, nor do those who indulge in it in any way surpass or excel those who do not, according to my observation. Furthermore, it is contrary to God's word to do it. Let me suggest to you students that you systematize your work—have certain hours for certain things, and do those things then. When they are done, give attention to other things. Such self-discipline will count wonderfully in your success in after-life, and render it absolutely unnecessary for you to study on the Sabbath day.

A Christian College must also give attention to the social life. By this I do not simply mean that a College ought to provide social intercourse and give attention to the social graces of life, but far more. The social life as here used means whatever pertains to our associations with our fellows. You have the right to expect your College career to teach you to be a good citizen. When we finish our education, we will find it necessary to accommodate ourselves to the laws and customs of government and society. Why should we not learn that valuable lesson in College? There will be regulations, rules, principles and customs of conduct in College which we would wish changed or would rather have otherwise. But if we keep our eyes on fitting ourselves for real life by our College training, we will recognize in these seemingly unnecessary and troublesome rules and regulations the best sort of training for citizenship in the years to come. A College student's first duty is to submit gracefully and cheerfully to the regulations of the institution he attends, expecting therefrom to gain training, discipline, and habits of mind and conduct that will stand him in good stead in the work he is to do upon leaving College. The student who does this will enjoy going to College and will be safe. He who yields a reluctant or a compulsory obedience is sin-

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Robt. G. Fowler left San Francisco Cal., Sept 11, on a transcontinental flight to New York on a Wright biplane. He expects to reach N. Y. Oct. 10.

—Many former students of Elon will regret to learn of the death of Prof. J. M. Bandy at Greensboro, N. C., Aug. 23. Prof. Bandy was erstwhile professor of mathematics in Elon College and was held in high esteem as a ripe scholar and a Christian gentleman.

—Since so much is put down to the discredit of preachers' sons, put this down to their glory: In the recent aviation meet at Chicago the Wright brothers refused to fly their machines on Sunday. The Wrights are sons of a minister and had training when youngsters that makes them respect the Sabbath now.

—Our brotherhood everywhere will learn with deep regret of the continual illness of Rev. J. W. Holt. His physician holds out little hope of his recovery at this writing. Let prayers ascend that, if God wills, this consecrated and useful life may be spared for further service in the Lord's work.

—That the members of our Northfield colony, Brethren Newman, Harrell and Hanson, are not lost, but have really had the time of their life, and are safe and are happy at their work again The Sun this week testifies in eloquent sufficiency. That Northfield inspired them all readers of this Sun will testify.

—Col. Wade Harris of the Charlotte Evening Chronicle who studies everything and knows what's doing says, "Nothing has yet occurred to shake The Chronicle's belief in a cotton crop around fourteen million bales and a price around 15 cts. for the bulk of it." Whether the crop is 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 it is all certain to be needed, says the Col., for the demand in the dry goods trade is going to be great. We trust these prognostications will be true, for a big cotton crop, and good prices, mean everything to the South.

—Mrs. Dr. J. P. Barrett, Dayton, O., was a welcome visitor last Sunday in the home of The Sun's editor, and cheered his heart much by her happy and agreeable conversation, and her solicitous interest in matters that pertain to the church paper and the church enterprises. Dr. Barrett is due to succeed and to be exceedingly useful as editor of our general, and great, church organ, The Herald of Gospel Liberty, his consecrated and loyal and cultured companion having brought him under such obligations.

—A minister was finally found who, for money enough, stood at the otherwise sacred altar and united in wedlock the notorious and divorced Col. John Jacob Astor and Madeline Force last Saturday, but be it said to the credit of the ministers that the search was long and the marriage many days delayed because minister after minister refused to be a party to the shameful spectacle, Astor having, it is said, offered as much as $5,000 for a minister in good standing who would perform the rites.

—We trust every patron of Elon College will read President Harper's opening address to the students of this year, delivered in the college chapel at the 11 o'clock service last Sunday. It was an inspiring occasion. The music was of a high order, the congregation was large, the 200 students listened to the address with riveted and unabated attention, the speaker's voice was clear, and his manner one of candor, fervor and intense earnestness. As long as Elon College has as the fundamentals, and the ideals, of its teaching, scholarship and management, the principles enunciated in this address, its friends need have no fears as to its ultimate success and achievement. There is, thank God, no skepticism and latter day rank philosophy among those who teach at Elon College.

—Pastor L. I. Cox reports a most excellent meeting at Parks Cross Roads closing Thursday p. m., before the 4th Sunday. There were 25 conversions and 20 accessions to the church. Rev. J. O. Cox, of Durham, assisted with great acceptance.

The meeting at Monticello closed Thursday p. m. after the 4th Sunday in Aug. The church was greatly revived, though, on account of rain, the congregations were small. There were two accessions at the close of the meeting. Others are to unite later. Pastor Cox was assisted by Rev. H. F. Wolfe, who preached able and helpful sermons. Bro. Cox conducted a gracious meeting last week at Pleasant Hill, assisted by Rev. T. E. White from Tuesday a. m. till Thursday p. m. The meeting was greatly enjoyed and of untold worth and benefit to church and community. The entire vicinity was stirred with religious fervor and there were showers of blessings. There were thirteen accessions at the close of the meeting and two names were given to join elsewhere.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

I wish to take this public way of expressing the appreciation, which I ought to express personally to our friends, for the loyal, devoted, sympathetic, unstinted, helpful support they gave the College authorities this summer in their campaign for students.

The ministry has stood four-square on every occasion. They have sent us names, spoken to the young people of their charges and acquaintance, carried our representatives in their buggies to see the prospects, and in other ways shown their love and loyalty to the institution.

The Alumni, now numbering nearly two hundred, were never more affectionate in their support of their Alma Mater. Many a new student is here because of the good work done in the field by members of the Alumni.

The student body has been as zealous as a hive of honey bees, without a drone, in the endeavor to add at least one more from their immediate territory, and while many did not succeed in bringing that new one in, yet the spirit and zeal displayed in the work has wonderfully helped the College, for after all the strongest recommendation a College can have is the loyalty and affection of its student body for it. In this regard Elon has not suffered this summer.

Our friends, among the Trustees and the brotherhood generally, have been uniformly courteous and intelligibly interested and generally sacrificing for the College. The College is our brotherhood's and we are glad that they are increasingly feeling their proprietorship, to the extent that they are devoting their time and influence to its upbuilding in enrollment and in other necessary ways.

As a result of these loyal and co-operative efforts on the part of the brotherhood and of the constituency, coupled with the assistance of the College forces, we have been enabled to have the best opening yet in Elon's history. To very one who has spoken a word, written a line, offered a prayer on Elon's behalf this summer we give grateful and sincere thanks. Our appreciation at this end shall endeavor to take practical form in the best possible service, to the College and the Church, of which we are capable.

We would however remind our friends that there are, as they no doubt know, many doubtful ones yet, young people of promise who are detained at home for various reasons. We trust the same good endeavor will continue to get them here.

W. A. Harper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For the first time in my ministry I took a real vacation. I abandoned myself to physical exercise, sleep, and sunshine. I do not believe that any springs or seaside can equal the pure country air, water, and milk, if one can be content to enter into such life with hearty abandonment. It is good for insomnia, indigestion, and all indispositions. It is better to let newspapers go unread and about the only thing one should study is the Sunday school lesson. The way the average person studies the Sunday school lesson will not produce nervous prostration. I enjoyed myself beyond description and tried to be obedient, though I did go in the rain twice and return with my clothes drenched; but a hot bath and dry clothes and a nap prevented cold; but those who did wash and iron object to what they call unnecessary change of clothing and say I ought to come in before the shower. I say, "I got caught that time but I will do better next time." I would, if I knew when the rain was coming. That reminds me that my moral misdeeds seem to come in the same way; I got caught in the wrong place at the wrong time, and before I get under moral shelter I have said the wrong word or done the wrong thing and then I require cleansing and change; but it is a fine experience, after one has been caught in the wrong, to repent and put on dry garments and rest in His love.

I worked enough to satisfy myself that I was not like the rich man's steward who said: "I cannot dig;" and I found that hoe and fork and scythe are good tonics. My! how I could eat and no indigestion. I drink very little water as a rule, but two hours hard digging in a garden makes one want to go to the well. Well water tastes better without ice than city water with ice; and a bath in well water makes one feel like staying in the country.

I am in harness again and the first Sunday in September I attended Sunday school and Christian Endeavor, preached twice and conducted two funerals. I have several persons down with consumption and many others sick and I have been visiting some during the week. There must be some cause for increase of tubercular troubles. I think one cause is in houses where people rent and change so often. I know a case in which a man's wife died and then his daughter lingered and died of consumption. The man moved out and the house was closed for months. Then a widow with a large family moved into the house. A beautiful seventeen year old daughter was taken with consumption. They moved into another house in which a tubercular patient had lived. The daughter soon died. Then a son died. Then the mother. After that another daughter. The mother said she had not known of the disease in her family. I think the family contracted the disease from the house. After the family was broken up the beds and other household goods were sold to colored people at public auction on the street; and I have no doubt the disease was contracted from these beds. In towns and cities and around mills, where poor people continually change houses, which have not been fumigated, disease passes from family to family. There is nothing that ministers to good health more than to own a little home, a little bed, and keep both clean. It costs less than doctors and medicine. I think rummage sales spread disease unless the old clothes are thoroughly fumigated. Church societies often gather up cast away clothes from all sorts of closets, wardrobes, garrets, boxes and trunks and put them on sale to make money for the Lord. They often make more disease for the people. Among the Jews when leprosy got in a house it was cleansed by the priests, and if it could not be thoroughly cleansed of the disease, the house was destroyed. It should be so with old clothes.

NORFOLK LETTER.

A year ago last January I became a reader of The Christian Sun. Two things led me to subscribe—1: A desire to become better acquainted with the brotherhood South, for all my work had been in Iowa; 2: The Norfolk letter appealed to me, for in that city I was soon to become a pastor.

Now the writer of the Norfolk Letters has asked his pastor to write in his stead, and you have read his farewell message, but fear not, he will yet write, for he has promised to whenever I am away—therefore you may expect me to be away some of the time.

Before becoming too much engrossed in this work, I want a settlement with the editor. Really, Mr. Editor, don't you think you have been a little hard on me? Imagine my amazement to read in The Sun just before we moved here, that Rev. McD. Howsare would on the following Sunday preach his first sermon as pastor of the Third Church. Also, there appeared another note saying that this same brother, McD. Howsare was about to move into the house which we had rented. Now this brother and I are good friends and expect to remain so, yet it looks suspicious to accuse him of such deeds. But I think I shall have to forgive our beloved editor, for in the last issue of The Sun he seems to be repenting by making a compromise, saying, "Rev. A. M. Howsare" is to be the new writer. Since a half loaf is better than none, I accept the "A. M." and give by brother the "Howsare" part of it.

On this point, one word more. Some will persist in complimenting me by saying, "Bro. A. M. Hanson." This has also perplexed me, for so far I have failed to discover what they mean by Hanson. A "hanson" is, as you know, "a two-wheeled" covered carriage with the driver's seat elevated at the back." I know that definition will not hold for this preacher. Others call me "Handsome."

This name I appreciate, but I am afraid to use it as some would undoubtedly fail to appreciate its relation to the owner. So, brethren, just call me plain A. M. Hanson. I might in passing say that the "A. M." part should always be written before the name as I did not obtain the degree in a college or university. Perhaps that shows their wisdom.

Dear Editor, and readers of The Sun, if thus far the new writer of the Norfolk letters seems rather light, just remember that the first course of any meal ought not to be too heavy.

Seriously, though, I pray the Father in heaven that the new writer may always have a note of good cheer. If my letters shall prove as helpful as our brother, Dr. Manning's, the pleasure will be mine as well as yours. God has blessed the Third Church with a noble layman in him. I wish every pastor had many such as he.

Mr. and Mrs. Carr, of Marion, Indiana, are in Norfolk on a visit. Mrs. Carr is the daughter of the late Dr. C. J. Jones, former pastor of the Memorial Temple. Mrs. Carr's sister, Bessie Jones, accompanies them.

Bro. J. L. Rogers, of the Third Church, has been very sick from malaria, but is better.

Mrs. Crockett, mother of our missionary, W. C. McCloud, of Porto Rico, was received as a member of the Rosemont Church last Sunday by the pastor, Rev. McD. Howsare.

Dr. W. D. Samuels, of Warren, Ind., and President of the American Christian Convention, will preach at the Memorial Temple next Sunday. The church hopes to secure him as its pastor.

Bro. R. H. Peel was a visitor with us at today's Tidewater Ministerial Association. Rev. A. M. Hanson.

—We are glad to welcome Bro. A. M. Hanson as writer of our Norfolk Letter, and it is gratifying news indeed his letter brings, to the effect that Memorial Temple seems likely to secure Dr. W. D. Samuel as pastor. This man is of high repute amongst us and we sincerely trust Norfolk will woo and win him. Meanwhile we trust to be successful in keeping Bro. Hanson straight, and at the Norfolk Third Church where he is doing such a worthy, acceptable and capable work.

—Governor Kitchen appointed Mr. Howard Foushee, Durham, N. C., to be Superior Court Judge in the ninth District to succeed Judge Biggs resigned.

—President Taft's tour of the country, to begin shortly and continue till Nov. 1, covering a distance of 13,000 miles, is, the President says, purely an educational campaign.

THE ORGANIZED CLASS—HOW TO ORGANIZE.

As in everything else, much depends upon getting a Sunday school class well organized and started right. A half-hearted, apologetic way of starting and an inefficient and loose organization will result in an ineffective and unsuccessful class. Those who attempt the organization should go about it with an enthusiasm that indicates business and the officers should be chosen with a view to their intelligence and interest in the work.

An organization may be effected of a class already in existence, or it may be composed of people not already in the Sunday school. In either event, it should be the purpose to reach and bring into the class those not in the Sunday school. If there is a class of grown people in the school that is about to go to seed, try organizing it and bringing in new members—give it new life, new blood, new work, new purpose. If you can do so, obtain some speaker who knows something of organized class work and let him make a talk in the class or Sunday school on the benefits of organization. Have some literature on organized classes and distribute it. This may be secured from the editor of this department or from Mr. J. Van Carter, secretary, Raleigh, N. C.

It would be well to organize every adult class in the school. For adult classes the members should be 20 years of age. Other classes may be organized of boys and girls from 16 to 19 years. Among younger men and women it is best not to have the sexes in the same class, but with older people there is probably no reason why men and women should not be in the same class. Experience has taught that young men and young women will do better work in classes composed only of one sex. And the same is true of boys and girls.

The international association outlines the following as the plan to be followed in organizing:

(a). A preliminary conference of those willing to form the nucleus of an organized class. At this conference decide on the number of members desired before the charter is closed. Then put the members at work to secure other members by the date fixed for the organization. There will be a good-natured rivalry among those working to see who can obtain the most members.

The appeal to the young man or young woman to become a charter member is more effective than asking him to join a class already organized.

(b). A prospective membership list prepared after a careful canvass of the church list and the community. Make a list of those you want and then go after them. It will be well to work in pairs.

(c). A meeting for organization held at a time most convenient to all members. Invite those who are not willing to join but who might become interested if they attend the meeting. Emphasize the fact that all who join before the close of the meeting will be "Charter Members." Have a plan of organization ready for the meeting.

A constitution should be adopted, though this is not absolutely necessary. Model constitutions may be secured from the State Sunday school secretary or from the editor of this department.

In the selection of officers try to obtain the best qualified and most energetic workers. If possible to get others, do not elect those who already have a number of church offices. Distribute the work.

The class should have at least the following officers: President, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. A teacher and assistant teacher should also be selected unless teachers are appointed some other way in the school.

When the class has completed its organization, a letter should be written to the editor of this department and also to the secretary of the interdenominational work in the state (in N. C., Mr. J. Van Carter, Raleigh, N. C.) telling them of the class, its name, number of charter members, officers and teachers. The state secretary will give you a certificate of organization if the class is organized according to the standard set out in this article.

It is well to fix the age limit of members, as in adult classes 20 years. If composed of younger people a minimum and a maximum might be well. The place of meeting should be determined on. A separate class room is a good thing but not absolutely necessary.

There should be three committees—devotional, social and membership. Frequent business meetings are necessary to determine upon definite work to do, and see that the committees are doing the work assigned them.

The class should always feel that it is a part of the school; not above or beyond it. The members should attend the opening and closing exercises of the school.

A class name is a good thing. It gives distinctiveness. Some classes select numbers to indicate it is a part of the school; others names from the Bible; others the name of one who has long been a teacher or officer of the Sunday school.

What is more important than a name is a class motto. And this should be kept before the class constantly. The following well known mottoes are suggestive: We're in the King's business—We Do Things—The World for Christ—We Mean Business—The Other Fellow—Every Man Up—Quit You Like Men; Be Strong.

The small red pin with the white center has been adopted as the international emblem of the organized class. Its significance is, "There is no purity of life without sacrifice, and no cleansing from sin without the sueding of blood. These can be secured at any time from the state or international secretaries.

By all means, use the emblem, have a motto and get the certificate of organization.

(Note.—This is the second of a series of articles on The Organized Class that will appear in The Sun during September.)

The Cape-to-Cairo railroad stretching through Africa from north to south will be 6,400 miles long, the longest railroad in the world. It will cost about $1,000,000,000, and will be well worth that to the material and spiritual interests of Africa. It now extends up into the Congo Independent State and down to Khartum in British Egyptian Sudan, and therefore it is two-thirds completed.

At first the Zulus opposed the missionaries, and it was ten years before the first convert was won. Now, after seventy years of work, there are 5,374 native Christians, and 4,756 pupils in the mission schools.

Not all the dark people of Africa are negroes, but only about one-fifth along the west coast and the southern Sudan. The people in the south are Bantus. In the north they are Hamites and Semites, classed with white men. More than 10,000,000 in heathen, while more than 50,000,000 in the north are Mohammedans.

This is from a Zulu letter: "I am first writing to tell you that liquor is a great sin to natives. Now did you not notice in England that liquor was a sin when people got drunk? Why did you bring it here, then?"

In 1904—5 there were 18,181 children in the Protestant mission schools of Uganda, central Africa; in 1907—8 there were 35,116.

The French rule in Madagascar is doing all it can to destroy Protestant mission work, that was so gloriously successful under native rule. The Malagasy Y.M.C.A. has been suppressed. Three-fourths of the mission schools have been closed, though the government schools will accommodate only one-fourth of the children, and rank infidelity is taught in them.

The United Presbyterians have the field in Egypt almost to themselves. They have won 20,000 converts, and are powerfully affecting the Mohammedans also through their schools, hospitals, and the visitation of the harems.

Christian Endeavor flourishes in Africa wherever it has been introduced, especially in Egypt and in South Africa. In the south there are very strong unions holding enthusiastic conventions.

There are at work in Africa 104 Protestant missionary societies. There are 8 colleges, 59 theological training schools, and many other educational institutions.

What a dollar will do in Africa:

1. Pay native evangelist one week.
2. Buy gospels for two hundred.
3. Put boy in school for one month.
4. Support Bible school two weeks.
5. Keep an orphan for one month.
6. Furnish Testaments for twenty people.
7. Rent church for fourteen days.
8. Provide medicine for twenty people.
9. Furnish bed in hospital for two weeks.
10. Get literature for forty people.

Some Thoughts Worth While.

Jesus died for the whole world.

Jesus commanded that we give the gospel to the whole world.

God is giving wonderful success to missionary effort, and you should have a share in it.

Sympathy with your friends now on missionary ground should enlist your interest in what they are doing.

Your question should not be: Why should I go as a missionary? But why should I not go? Here is a command; why should you be excused from obeying it?

You are the descendants, not of Jews, but of heathen, and common gratitude should move you to pass on the Gospel; which is so great a blessing to you and yours.

You should give to missions; not merely to incite others to give, but you yourself should give. It is not enough to give for the narrower field round about you; the whole world has a claim upon your gifts.

ning against himself and does not realize it. I am thankful that the spirit of this College is such that its students yield a hearty and cheerful obedience to all College regulations and that they have advanced so far in this direction that the government of the institution in some instances has been safely committed to their own hands. We have never heard of but one Elon student who committed suicide and he was expelled from the College and committed suicide to escape the penitentiary. He could not obey here—he could not after leaving here. I have never heard of any other of the two thousand and more who have studied here who has been arrested for any disobedience to civil law. I know no higher compliment to pay Elon than merely to state these facts. They show that Elon students are obedient as students and are therefore good citizens after leaving the College.

Morality should certainly be inculcated in a College. And institutions of learning are proud of their moral tone. The principles of moral conduct are the outgrowth of the experience of our race in matters of conduct and life. Morality changes. It has changed in our Colleges. Hazing was once looked upon as pardonable sport. Today hazing is rightly regarded as a relic of barbarism and a revival of savagery. No self-respecting student will indulge in it and no decent College will tolerate it. Why? The moral standard has changed and today forbids any sport which all who engage in it do not equally enjoy. That is always the test of Christian fun-making—that all who are in any way concerned in the fun should equally enjoy it. It is immoral to swear and to drink liquor and to use dope, and so a Christian College condemns these practices. It is immoral to gamble and to cheat on examinations, and so Christian educational institutions forbid these practices. Playing cards, some regard as innocent amusement; others regard as sinful, because the practice has led so many to ruin and consider it especially disastrous for students because it robs them of precious hours that should be spent in other things, and equips them, without their knowing it, with the impulse and the skill of the gambler. This is our view-point, based on experience. You have nothing to fear morally in the practices and sports of our student body. In that regard Elon renders you safe.

A great many would be willing to stop here—with morality—but we are not. We are not satisfied that our pupils have sound bodies, strong minds, beautiful social graces, up-right moral character—no—great and glorious as these are, we are not satisfied with these. We would add to them—spirituality, the crowning glory of man, the high privilege of the College to inculcate and develop. I know that the Christian Bible has been expelled from the public schools in many of our States and thrown in the dust heap in many of our State institutions of higher learning, but I also know that the great majority of our people wish that their children be educated in a spiritual atmosphere. That is why we build, equip, and maintain denominational Colleges, that the things of the spirit may be taught, insisted upon, inculcated, imbibed, practised. A man may be moral and yet not be a Christian. He may be honest, truthful, sober, up-right, just and yet not be a Christian. A man may be all this and deny Christ and the Bible and disbelieve in God, his Creator and the Giver of every good gift. No man can be a Christian and deny Christ or the Bible or God. Christian education must therefore exalt Christ and strive that all who come under its influence should accept Him and live the life He would own, and bless. And in so doing it will make its pupils safe, safe not only for this life, but for eternity. Any education which attempts less than this may still be education, but is not and cannot be called Christian.

I congratulate you upon your selection of an institution which in its feeble way stands for the production of the all-round man, which insists on man's development physically, mentally, socially, morally, and spiritually. I congratulate our country upon having homes in which parents preside who appreciate Christian education. I congratulate Elon College on the student body which has selected it this year, in competition with the hundreds of other institutions bidding for their patronage, as the scene of their preparation for life and its activities. I trust that the influences of the College will be so helpful and uplifting that you shall be returned to your homes at the year's end safe—safe in every way. To this end let us all resolve at the year's very threshold to work, labor, and pray.

—Dare to do right.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.Graham.

We began our revival here June 21st, with Rev. L. I. Cox as our assistant. Bro. Cox did plain, gospel preaching, and his messages were appreciated. The church was helped very much. We were fortunate in having Bro. Cox with us, for we felt that God sent through him the kind of messages that we so much needed. There were two professions, and much good was accomplished by the meetings. The work here is hopeful, and we desire the prayers of the entire church that we may do more in the cause of the Master.

Ether.

We began our special meetings here on the third Sunday in July, and closed on the Sunday night following. We were assisted here by Rev. R. R. Gordon, a young minister of the Baptist church. Revs. J. R. Jordan and John Russel were with us also and did good preaching, and rendered other helpful services.

The Lord gave us a splendid revival, there being six professions and six additions to the church. This is a very hopeful church, and we feel that the work of the Lord is prospering here.

Shady Grove.

Our revival began here the third Sunday in August, and closed Thursday night following. Rev. W. L. Wells came to our assistance on Tuesday morning and remained until the close of the meeting.

The Lord gave us a gracious revival here, the best that the church has had in many years. There were twenty-six professions, and nineteen additions to the church.

Bro. Wells did plain gospel preaching, which was heard gladly by the people of Shady Grove.

Other Work.

In addition to the revivals in my own churches, of which I have written above, I have assisted (during vacation) in six other revivals. I was with Rev. L. I. Cox at Apple's Chapel week following the 4th Sunday in July, and at New Lebanon, the week following the second Sunday in August. The Lord gave us a great revival at both these churches, there being more than forty professions in the two meetings. Bro. Cox is doing a great work in these fields, and it was indeed a treat for me to have the opportunity of working with such a good and godly man.

The week following fifth Sunday in July I assisted Rev. J. Lee Johnson in a revival at Piney Plains. There were fourteen professions here, and the church was much revived.

Bro. Johnson is doing a great work at this church, and my prayer is that God may wonderfully bless him and his good people of Piney Plains.

On the first Sunday in August I reached Big Oak, my home church, where I assisted Rev. T. B. Dawson in one of the greatest revivals I have ever witnessed. I preached twice a day from Sunday until Friday, and the pastor and church did faithful work. As a result, there were fifty-one professions and thirty-two additions to the church.

On the eighth of June I went to assist Rev. J. V. Knight in his meeting at Randleman. Here, too, the Lord blessed our labors and gave us a great revival, there being about twenty professions during the meeting.

Bro. Knight is doing a good work at this church, and his people esteem him very highly.

On the fourth Sunday afternoon in August I reached Rev. H. E. Truitt, and the week following I assisted him in his meeting at Smithwood. Notwithstanding the fact that there was a great deal of rain that week, we had a splendid meeting, with twelve professions. I was glad to find Bro. Truitt doing a good work here.

The meeting closed at Smithwood on Thursday afternoon. This was the ninth meeting that I had been in since commencement at Elon. I went home on Friday, and after a short, but very pleasant stay at home, I left Monday following for Elon College, and I'm now ready to enter school again.

My vacation has been a very busy one, but by far the most pleasant one I have ever had. God has wonderfully blessed my labors in revival work. To Him be all the glory and honor.

J. J. Morgan.

Elon College, N. C.Ebenezer.

The revival began here on the fourth Sunday in July and closed on Friday following. There was a great revival among the members of the church. There were twenty or more professions with four accessions to the church. Bro. Neil Rowland did the preaching in a very forceful and inspiring manner, making many friends in this his first visit to Ebenezer.

We have a good people at this place and the work is moving along nicely. We hope to do something in the way of repairs to the church this fall. May God's blessings richly rest upon this people.

Piney Plains.

The meeting was protracted at this place week following fifth Sunday in July. The church was strengthened spiritually and there were fourteen or fifteen professions of faith in Christ. Six joined the church and we look for others.

Bro. J. F. Morgan did the preaching after Sunday, to the delight of all who heard him, greatly endearing himself to this people and also to people of other denominations.

Mr. James M. Rollins and wife were present one day during the meeting, and seeing the need of an organ, purchased one and donated it to the church. Mr. Rollins once taught school near the spot where the church now stands and informed me that he named the place "Piney Plains." He is now living in St. Louis, Mo., and is a very successful lawyer. We appreciated the gift very much indeed. May God reward him for the good deed and bless the church to further usefulness in His Kingdom.

Wake Chapel.

On the third Sunday in August the meeting began here and closed on Thursday following. Bro. Chas. H. Rowland, of Franklin, Va., did the preaching in a highly satisfactory manner. Those that heard him were pleased with his sweet, plain, and forceful gospel messages. The church was revived and there were five professions, three of whom united with the church. One member was received by letter. May God's richest blessings rest upon this people.

J. Lee Johnson.

Holy Neck.

The annual protracted meeting of Holy Neck Christian Church, Nansemond Co., Va., closed this afternoon, the 5th, inst., with fifteen professions and twelve accessions to the church. Rev. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., did the preaching. His sermons were clear, practical, forceful. Congregations were large and attentive, the singing good, and many of the Christian people active and faithful in service. It was a good meeting, for which we are grateful.

N. G. Newman.

Smithwood.

We have a very dear and hospitable people at Smithwood. The work is encouraging. During this year they have paid for a nice church organ, painted the outside of the church house, and have part of the money on hand to paper or paint the inside and put in new pews.

The attendance on Saturdays is somewhat small, but very large on Sundays.

The Sunday school is right good and continues the entire year.

Bro. J. F. Morgan conducted our special meeting the week following the fourth Sunday in August. The meeting was good, notwithstanding the excessive rain. The church was much revived and there were thirteen professions.

Bro. Morgan is greatly loved by this people. H. E. Truitt, Pastor.

Damascus.

Sunday, Sept. 3, 11 a. m. the church was packed and the people were attentive to the word as expounded by the preacher.

The church has been recovered at a cost of $150.00, all paid for. Conference assessment well in hand, and the preacher has no complaint on the subject of salary. New song books are scattered all over the church; every body seems to sing.

First Sunday in August our protracted services began. For a week the people were greatly edified by the preaching of Bro. Ryan, (formerly of Norfolk Memorial Temple). The church was packed day and night, and many could not get in. People soon came who had not been to church in months. There were over 30 professions, 14 joined the church, and four were immersed last Saturday.

The good people handed the man of God, at the close of the protracted service about $53.00. I mention this to show that when a man preaches (not merely holds a service) the money will come as from the Lord. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, all went to hear Bro. Ryan.

With a note of, I trust, deserving pride, for Damascus Church, I am glad to say about everybody goes there to worship the first Sunday. Now, Bro. Pastor, this church needs a preacher and a pastor. No better people ever lived than these. Write J. E. Corbitt, Sunbury, N. C., if you feel you would like to serve these good folks. Do it now.

HOME MISSIONS IN EASTERN N. C.

So far as I know the churches in this conference paid every cent asked for last year on Home Missions. Let us be sure to do as well this year in the Home Mission Department, and also pay up in full Southern Convention Missions. We did not quite pay all last year of the Convention apportionment. The conference Home Missions stand as twin sisters. One is as important as the other. Both are for home mission work. New places are continually opening doors for Christian churches. Godly men and consecrated dollars are very much needed.

Let us make our on-coming conference at Catawba Springs one long to be remembered on account of its spiritual life and financial liberality. What church will send up more home mission money than conference has asked for? And with all thy sending, send up a liberal sum for Chapel Hill church, and thus make your heart swell with joy and sing for gladness.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Capt. Willis J. Lee, accompanied by Miss Helen Brinkley and Master William Jones, returned to his home in Eastern Virginia on the opening morning, Wednesday. We regret that the Virginia primary kept him from being present at the opening exercise, but are glad that Mrs. Lee is to remain with us for some time yet.

Mr. W. W. Eley, Suffolk, Va., brought his son, Fickland, and entered him in the college last week. Mr. Eley spent two days here and was much impressed by the College.

Mrs. J. Pressley Barrett, Dayton, Ohio, accompanied her daughter, Miss Ethel, to the College and is now a pleasant visitor among us. Before returning to her Ohio home, Mrs. Barrett will visit friends and relatives in the Old Dominion.

Mr. and Mrs. Repts H. Williamson, Great Bridge, Va., and their little son, John Hall Williamson, are pleasant visitors at Dr. Atkinson's home. They were both Elon students and John Hall is destined to be.

Dr. J. U. Newman read the Scripture and Uncle Wellons offered the prayer at the opening exercises. Addresses were made by Rev. T. W. Stroud, Profs. G. C. Davidson and T. H. Franks, Misses Allene Patton and Jewel Michael, Revs. W. L. Wells and L. E. Smith. Dr. Atkinson at the request of the Faculty read an excellent word of greeting from Dr. W. W. Staley.

The reception Friday night was largely attended and massively enjoyed. In the receiving line were besides the writer and his good lady, Profs. Lawrence, Newman, Wicker, Amick, Doak and Lincoln, Messdames Lawrence, Machen, Holland, Atkinson, and Barrett, and Misses Wilson, Barnes, Pitt, Bryan, and Clements. Mrs. Wilson assisted the class of 1912 in receiving at the door. The College orchestra furnished music.

The Sunday-school, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and Christian Endeavor were largely attended at the initial services and bid fare to be very successful during the year.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. Holt will be pained to learn of his serious illness. Small hope is entertained of his recovery.

My Dear Children and Friends:—

As I write, the engine that is digging our deep well is making a big fuss and it is a welcome sound to us, for it means water, water, water! Our old pump has been a failure all these years and now to know that help is at hand is a relief indeed. They have bored about 30 feet and have not been at work a whole day yet so, you see, in a week's time we hope to have all the water we need. Of course this well is going to take money, (we do not know how much yet) but we will gratefully receive all amounts for this special purpose. It means more than we can express to our institution.

We are writing quite a number of friends whose addresses we know asking them to give us a special gift to help us have plenty of water. Also we will have to pay one half the extension of the College sewer so as to have the privilege of connecting with same when the Orphanage is able to put in sewerage. The College sewer had to be extended for sanitary reasons and we have asked seven friends to give us the amount estimated to do our part of the extension. Now give us a special gift so we can put water connections with our deep well and have a large range and tank so that, "when bathing time comes," as come it will Wednesday and Saturday, we can have plenty of hot water for our family of 52. Don't you think we need your help?

We are pleased that so many of our Sunday schools are doing such faithful work and making such liberal offerings.

The Trustees have authorized the superintendent to employ a single man to help on the farm. We need a good farm man—one who knows how to work and one who is willing to work and try to make the farm profitable with the work of our boys. Also we feel that we could help some young lady by giving her a room and board and have her render help to our boys and girls in their studies at night; have charge of their study hall and render help and keep order. We shall be glad to correspond with a young gentleman and a young lady to wards engaging for this work at once.

We are reprinting a very valuable paper this week from Bro. Jaimison, and we hope all the friends of our Orphanage will read same.

Yours with love,

Uncle Jim.

Holland, Va.,
 Aug. 30, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I send ten cents. I made it by helping put away fodder in the barn one day when it was raining.

Harvey Vincent.

Thank you for your money which you made, Harvey. I know you prize this dime more because you worked for it, and we shall think more of it too because of your unselfishness.

Holland, Va.,
 Sept. 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I send ten cents. Everytime I write I feel ashamed of waiting so long and feel sure that I am going to write more promptly in future. I wonder if the other little cousins have had as happy a time this summer as I have. Even if I have enjoyed the vacation I am glad it is nearly time to go to school again.

Last Sunday Mrs. Lester Daughtry entertained her music class at her nice home in Holland and we had such a good time. Then Wednesday afternoon Mr. Brock Jones invited his Sunday school class to his beautiful home near Holy Neck and he and Miss Selma did everything they could to make us have a good time, and we had the best time little folks could have had. Uncle Jim, if you could have been there you would have had a good time too, because Mr. Jones said that the little girls' papas must bring them and I believe that they had a good time too.

Our protracted meeting will be at Holy Neck next week and Rev. I. W. Johnson will help Mr. Newman. Wish you could be with us.

Your little niece,

Elizabeth Vincent.

What a good time this little girl has been having! I know you will be fresh for school now. Are brothers too "big" to write as they once did?

Mt. Clinton, Va.,
 Sept. 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I am sorry I have not written to you for so long, but I am glad to see so many new cousins joining the band. I will try to write oftener now. Mama was delighted to see you at conference and I am so glad that you promised to come to see us next time you come to the valley. Enclosed find ten cents for myself and five for my little brother, who wants to join the band.

Your niece,

Eula Wampler.

And where is sister, Eula? Surely we may hear from her too. And Ewell Argenbright, also. Tell him we'd dearly love to get his letters again.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I want to join the band of cousins and as Eula is writing you a letter, I will write one, too. I am a little boy seven years old. Mama told me about the little orphans and I want to help them all I can. I will send five cents this time.

Your nephew,

Carlton Wampler.

You can help us very much, Carlton, by your letters and dimes and we want you for a faithful member.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

We send you the words of our class song as follows:

We are the workers cheery,
 So faithful and so true,
 With courage undertaking
 What'er we find to do.

Chorus:—

Whatsoever, that's our watchword,
 Wheresoever, that's our place;
 Whosoever, for the Master,
 Souls to win by truth and grace.

We wear his yoke for service,
 'Tis easy to be borne,
 With Hiu to walk beside us,
 At night, or noon, or morn.

Chorus.

Then come and join us, comrades,
 The Whatsoever Band,
 And do the nearest duty,
 With willing heart and hand.

Chorus.

We wish you knew the tune, Uncle Jim, it's snappy and fine. Our money order for Sept. is enclosed—one dollar and fifteen cents.

The Whatsoever Band.

Wakefield, Va.

We like your song, children, and would certainly love to know the tune. Live up to your motto and you cannot fail to be helpful to those around you.

THE CHRISTIAN OBLIGATION IN ORPHANAGE WORK.

(A paper prepared by Rev. A. T. Jaimison, Sup. Connie Maxwell Orphanage, Greenwood, S. C., for the fifth annual session of the Tri-State Conference of Orphanage Workers, Charlotte, N. C., April 18—20, 1911.)

It may be wise to begin negatively by giving a definition or two, and to clear the field by removing any possible cause for misapprehension. This paper is submitted by one who sees clearly the Christian obligation in the topic, and who, appreciating the obligation, is prepared to champion the cause. At the same time it is perfectly patent that some good people who are not Christians or churchmen may feel certain obligations too, and their views should be regarded with utmost respect.

Let it be definitely understood that there is no quarrel with the city of Charleston because she saw fit to establish an orphanage house in the year 1790 for the care of indifferent fatherless ones. The city by vote of its representatives provided money for the foundation of such an institution and has since maintained it with appropriations from city funds. This is, by the way, the oldest municipal orphanage on this continent, having had a consecutive history of 121 years. In his recent volume on Preventive Treatment of Neglected Children Hastings H. Hart states that it was the first institution in America to be maintained at public expense for dependent children.

We find no fault with Masons, Knights or Fellows who see fit to establish orphan institutions. If they find in such a work an activity that satisfies them and that they believe realizes and makes practical the noble principles of their several orders, let no one say them nay. It is a great, free country and none of us should forbid the doing of good because it happens not to be done precisely according to our method.

We have no criticism for the Children's Home Society in placing children in family homes. There is call for such work. Many a homeless child is in need of a home and many a childless home wants, or thinks it wants, a child. Wherever this work is properly conducted it has found favor and in many of our states it is the most popular form of child-saving effort. The churches look with no sort of suspicion on any peculiar scheme that does good and lifts the old world along a bit. If any of our ills can be helped or cured the church is willing for any one to do it who will, if she is temporarily inadequate to or ill-fitted for the task. She will call down fire from heaven on none who may not see fit to "walk with us."

It is freely admitted that the State should pass laws for the good of society, because government is simply organized society. Certainly the State must be social, not in any present day technical sense, but literally. The State is not ethical, which is far from saying that it is anti-ethical. It is social, however, and must enact laws that look to the protection of the weak from cruelty and oppression as well as provide helps to a higher standard of living. The State, therefore, passes a law forbidding the abuse of the child physically by prolonged labor in manufacturing establishments. Has the State a right to do this? Certainly. On what grounds? On the ground of self-protection, if no other. It has a right to protect itself from a future generation of weakened degenerates. If prolonged labor is seriously injurious to an undeveloped child in that its symmetrical muscular development promotes nervous irregularities and puts too heavy burdens on soft young bones, then the State has a right to declare that it will not allow conditions to prevail that lead to the injury of society in the next generation or even in succeeding generations.

The State has a right to pass a law compelling the education of all the children living within its borders. On what grounds? Certainly on the one ground of self-protection. It has a right to protect itself against the blight of ignorance. Feeling that illiteracy is a curse and a shame, the State may declare its unwillingness to submit to such a reproach and may declare that, parents, willing or unwilling, must send their children to schools freely provided for them. The basis of such laws rests not on moral but on social grounds. They are for the good of society as a whole and an enlightened twentieth-century sentiment gives them deserved support.

Not only do we not deny the right of the State to educate her citizens, but we Christians are perfectly satisfied to bear our share of the burden of taxation in supporting schools for higher and lower education. Why then do we assume an extra and additional expense in providing denominational colleges and Christian Orphanages? Simply because the State cannot teach religion, and we do not wish our young people brought up in schools that are not avowedly religious. We find the support of one school a patriotic duty and of the other a Christian duty and we wish to discharge both. So the Christian orphanage is not necessarily a protest against a State or municipal institution, nor against a non-religious society. It is simply a declaration that we can ourselves accomplish this work more nearly according to our notions than others can possibly do.

Let me submit the proposition that if the lodge finds in helpless orphanhood a condition to challenge its activity, we, the Church, find a greater. If the non-religious (not anti-religious) society perceives that it has a duty to the homeless little one, the Church, more. If the State in its governmental capacity recognizes its right to interfere with certain maladjustments that lead to the destruction of childhood's joyousness and to future good citizenship, we Christians, more. The ethical teachings of Jesus overtop those of the lodge or club. The emotions of kindness that stir the heart of the average good citizen are sublimely over-reached by the splendor of the love of Jesus. The selfish idea of the State in seeking to protect itself from social decadence is different not merely in degree but in kind from the spirit that would give, hoping not for any return.

Prof. Simon Patten has recently asserted that there are two and only two, attitudes to assume toward the weak. We must either eliminate him or we must succor him. The doctrine of evolution would eliminate him on the principle that only the fittest shall survive. But the gospel of Jesus would give him succor because of its all-embracing sympathy. Christianity is willing to be told by the scientist that she is retarding the upward progress of the race by refusing to allow the "little ones" to perish from off the face of the earth. She will let the physicist bring that charge if he will. But her adherents are nevertheless prepared to defend the position that material and physical progress are not so important as that the bruised reed shall not be broken nor the burning flax be quenched.

But the Christian is not a fool in offering his sympathy to the helpless and degenerate. He is an unblushing optimist whose faith in God inspires him to believe that an outcast can be saved, that a degenerate can be regenerated, that a weak one may grow into strength. Hence, there is in the Christian program of helpfulness a world of sound reason and good sense. His enthusiasm springs from this belief that a man is not damned by either heredity or environment, but may be rescued and saved; yes, even every little one for whom Christ died. Edward T. Devine has recently said: "Regeneration and the saving of social outcasts is the answer of religion to the fact of degeneration, and to the demand that those who are not fitted to survive unaided in the social struggle must go to the wall in the interests of culture and civilization."

So that we who profess and call ourselves Christians find in the teaching of our Master enough to cause us to espouse as one of our important obligations that of caring for the destitute orphans. And it may be declared with emphasis that that great cause is worthy of the support of the great Church. Let it not for a single moment be admitted that the church, concerning itself with greater and weightier matters, may turn this over to the women in their societies or to the children in the Sunday school. Believing earnestly that every Sunday school should be enlisted in so worthy an enterprise, it should nevertheless be laid upon the great heart of the church itself that it should spend its substance for the orphan child.

The Christian obligation presses because it requires an outlay that is immediate and outright, and which, in theory, at least, is not expectant of return. And if the business of the church in this wicked world is not to give rather than to get, then I have entirely misconceived its mission and am a preacher of a perverted gospel. The Savior was accused of turning the world upside down. The world was engaged in a mad craze of seeking to get all it could lay its greedy hands upon, and Christ turned its theory of life upside down by telling men that the only true way to live was to give all one could. He taught that the Christian only realizes himself in his very utmost ability of sympathy, time, influence, and opportunity. And he set the example by grandly, matchlessly giving his life. The Apostle Paul had learned this lesson in the school of Jesus, else he never would have said to those suspicious heathen reprobates, "We seek not yours but you." If we have caught the spirit of the unselfish and giving Christ we shall not wish to deny that for this reason at least the cause of the orphan rests upon the church as a Christian obligation.

It was laid down by the great interpreter of our Lord that this law was fulfilled in bearing one another's burdens. I know of nothing in Christian literature more suggestive of fellowship and fraternity, or, as the prayer book has it, "the communion of the saints," than this fine phrase in the Epistle to the Galatians. It is the exemplification of such a spirit that is given in the life and character of each devoted saint of God whose life has made his sphere radiant with holy influences. It is this spirit that brings not sanctimoniousness but a sanctity to every unselfish need. The apostle in another letter states the truth only a little differently when he says that we who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak. Whether or not the Greek allows special emphasis on the word "ought," certainly this occasion and this topic will permit me to declare with emphasis, "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

More than one picture in the life of Jesus will give us the right to believe more strongly than merely inferentially that a true Christian obligation is to care for the helpless fatherless dependents. Do you recall the occasion when he took the little child in his arms and blessed him? Oh, sweet and rapturous record! The poor disciples, learning but not fully learned, did not fathom the tenderness of the great heart that beat sweetly and sympathetically and majestically for the little ones. Rebuking them, he gave utterance to the immortal words that have comforted the mother's broken heart and dried the tears of the father, who felt that the light of his life had clean gone out. On another occasion he set a little child in the midst of his disciples and reminded them that unless they became like that little child, simply docile, eager, pure, child-like, that it was a hopeless thing for them to expect ever to enter the kingdom.

For another reason I find that the work of the orphanage imposes a Christian obligation. It is not the custom to quote Matthew 28: 20 in this connection, but when Jesus gave command to the disciples to go and teach all nations he meant one's own nation as well as others. If others should be taught and not one's own, then one nation at least would be omitted and those taught would not be "all." The work of proclaiming the gospel was primary, but only primary. Our Lord planned that those won to the gospel by its flaming message of fire and invitation should also be instructed. Teaching was to follow conversion and baptism. Otherwise there would be no way to conserve what had been won.

Our present conception of orphanage work is that it is a school. Here the children are taught. That was not the idea of the orphan asylum of the old days, which, thank God, is rapidly giving way. The business way of handling orphan children is to get rid of them as soon as one can. The Christian way is to hold them as long as one can. The cheap way, the dollars and cents way, is to pass them out and on. The loving way is to receive them to the church's arm and to assure them that in the Savior's name they are welcome; to let them understand that they are not to be pushed off but held; to let them feel kindness and friendship, educational and vocational training, uplift of life, regularity of occupation and systematic instruction shall all be vouchsafed them. And furthermore, without the bother of any age limit they shall, when the day of their departure arrives, go out into the world wearing no badge of poverty, asking favor of charity of no living man.

Oh, brothers, I have only this remark to submit in closing. I believe the topic given me is unfortunately worded. The committee should have asked me to discuss, not an obligation, but a blessed, sweet, sanctifying, glorious Christian privilege.

IMPRESSIONS THAT REMAIN.

I wrote a few lines from Washington, D. C., and Bros. Harrell and Hanson have written from Northfield. Now that the delightful trip is over and I am again at that best of all places, home, I want to speak of some impressions that remain. The most casual observer cannot fail to note the marvelous rapidity of and its application to the needs of society. A few examples will illustrate. We saw in the National Museum at Washington the first automobile, made in 1893, just 18 years ago. Returning to Pennsylvania Ave. we took watch in hand for three minutes, and six automobiles passed. This rate is apparently kept up till late at night, making about 4500 pass a given point during the day. We noted about the same number on all the leading streets in New York.

At the Grand Central Station, New York, we board a long and well-laden train for Springfield, Mass. We hear no puffing of the engine and see no smoke nor cinders. We investigate and find we are on an electric train.

Arriving at South Vernon we note that the road to Northfield, the streets and the drive-ways through the Seminary campus have a peculiar appearance, and, though they are natural earth and the weather very dry, the dust does not arise. Another investigation is in order. We were told that they had been sprinkled once the first of the summer—just once and would not be sprinkled again because sprinkled with oil.

We pass out of New York Harbor on the O. D. Steamship, Hamilton, in the midst of a "Northeaster," and during the darkness and storm of the night, while we sleep or toss, the news of the great metropolis is sent us hundreds of miles through naked space, and before reaching Old Point we are handed a paper containing the wireless messages of the night.

In almost every town and city we note that when a limb is cut from a fruit or shade tree the wound is immediately coated with some water-proof substance. A barked place is smoothed around the edges and treated similarly, while a decayed place is carefully cleaned and covered with metal or filled in with cement. Massive elms and maples on the lawns and streets are sprayed with a chemical preparation. The medical and surgical science discovered for and applied to the human body is now used to preserve and beautify our lawns and make fruitful our orchards and vineyards.

The Greatness and Beneficence of our Government.

is an ever deepening impression as one wanders around and through the great public buildings of the National Capitol—Government Printing Office, Pension Bureau, Treasury Department, State, Navy and War Departments, Agricultural Department, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, National Museum, Capitol, Congressional Library, etc. Here are gathered the marvels of nature and of human ingenuity—the triumphs of architecture, the perfection of art, the history of science and invention, and in short of human progress. And all this open and free to the humblest citizen or the nation. We see 350 presses operated by 700 men turning out paper money as fast as hands and machinery can fly. Two thousand men, operating perhaps the greatest printing establishment in the world, are daily turning out tons of printed information for free distribution. Massive stone buildings, costing millions and containing hundreds of rooms, furnish private offices to senators and congressmen, from which they can pass unmolested by a subterranean way to the Capitol. The great National Library, costing more than $7,000,000, containing scores of miles of shelves embracing the literature of the world, is open and free to all. We were told that a congressman in his seat at the capitol, though perhaps half a mile away, can receive by a subway any desired book in three minutes. The Fish Commission not only gathers and disseminates free a knowledge of fish culture, but hatches and sends prepaid to the various ponds and streams young fish for the benefit of the bread-earning fisherman as well as the delectation of such gentlemen of leisure as Drs. W. W. Staley and J. O. Atkinson. The Agricultural Department with its great corps of experts, spends millions in learning how to redeem waste land, enrich soil, improve seed, destroy insects, preserve produce, etc., and sends this information free even to the humblest toiler in the land.

Surely our government is great and good.

It is still by the people and for the people, among the most beneficent of earth, and should command the homage, the loyalty and co-operation, the sympathy and the prayers of every Christian.

THE WITHERED HAND—WHOLE.

Praise God! Praise God! Give me my tools again!
Oh, let me grasp a hammer and a saw!
Bring me a nail and any piece of wood.
Come, see me shut my hand and open it,
And watch my fingers twirl a ring.
How good are solids!—oak, and stone and iron,
And rough and smooth, and straight and curved and round!
Here, Hannah: for these long and weary years
My hand has ached to smooth your shining hair
And touch your dimpled cheek. Come wife, and see:
I am a man again, a man for work,
A man for earning bread and clothes and home;
A man, and not a useless hold-the-hand;
A man, no more a bandaged cumberer.
Oh, blessed Sabbath of all Sabbath days!
And did you hear the muttering at Him?
And did you see them looking sour at me?
They'll cast me from the synagogue, perchance.
But let them: I've a hand, a hand, a hand!
But ah, dear wife, to think He goes about
So quietly, and does such things as this,
Making poor half-men whole, in hand and foot,
In eye and ear and wistless maniac mind,
To get such praise as that! Well, here's a hand,
A strong, true hand that now is wholly His,
To work or fight for Him, or what He will;
For He has been the Hand of God to me.

THE ENCAMPMENT OF ANGELS.

(The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them. Psa. 34:7. Golden text for Sunday, Sept. 24.)

The angels are Heaven's messengers. All through the Word we find the angels fulfilling this function, visiting and speaking to men, in obedience to God's will and commandments. The angels are wise, therefore, because they know and do the will of God (2Sam. 14:20). They come to earth to encourage and to strengthen man as in the case of Elijah under the juniper tree (1 Kings 19:5). The number of angels who worship God and do His bidding is without limitations, even thousands (Psa. 68:17). They are sufficient therefore, not only to console and comfort men, but to have charge of all men who make the Lord their refuge and habitation (Psa. 91:11). And they are able to this task because they excel in strength (Psa. 103:20). This strength, in which they excel, they use for the protection, against all hurt and danger, of those who serve and trust the Lord, as in the case of Daniel (Dan. 6: 22).

The angels accompany the Son of God, giving Him glory, praise and dominion (Matt. 16: 27).

When a saint of God dies angels bear his spirit to the place of rest and peace and security (Luke 16: 22). Even when saints and servants of God have occasion to fear, in the flesh, because of imminent danger, angels are sent to protect, strengthen and encourage them (Acts 27: 23).

Angels contend with the devil and overcome him in the name and strength of God (Jude 9).

No wonder Daniel was safe in the lion's den. God had sent His angel and had shut the lion's mouth so that there was no possibility of hurt or harm from that source. God had made the lion's mouth. God had made the lion, in all his terrific strength. Why should He not shut the lion's mouth when and as He saw fit and deemed proper.

Do angels visit the earth now? Yes, indeed. Maybe the naked eye does not behold their subtle form, discern their spiritual presence; but the angels visit men and women, in time of trouble, need, danger, despair, and not only visit, but take up their abode and encamp round about them that fear the Lord.

Every true child of God hath witness, at some time or other, of the encampment of angels nearby.

What a marked and marvelous man was this Daniel! He allowed nothing to come between him and his dutiful service and worship of his God. He looms large and mighty, this man Daniel does, upon the pages of the world's great men, for the reason that, in all the trials and conflicts that confronted him, he remained true to his God. Three times a day he knelt upon his knees (there is no better posture for prayer than that) and prayed and gave thanks to his God. No king's threat or decree could turn him from that course.

THE LARGER VISION.

The good God has made, and is daily making, a big, and a bright, and a beautiful world about and above us. If we rivet our eyes on the things next to us and the world seems small the fault is our own, not God's. If we look upon the clouds and the darkness and the world becomes dull and stupid to us, the fault is ours, not God's. If we look constantly at the ugly, the uncouth, the unbecoming, and the world appears out of joint and uninviting, the fault is our own, not God's.

God bids us look up and out and on and take the larger vision.

Herein is the power and the glory of our gospel. Through the week we give our hands and energies to business, to meat and bread and raiment. This world of meat and bread and business is a very small and close and meager world. Its confines are restricted, narrow, quite limited. In it men push each other, crowd, and shove and press, and squirm and squeeze.

On the Sabbath day the gospel we hear bids us lift the mind and look up, raise the eye and catch the larger vision. The gospel enlarges our world for us, shows us its bigness, its brightness, its beauty.

By giving all our time to business, and none to worship and divine service we contract our own world, make it small and sordid and sorry.

Here is a splendid and significant incident, and a powerful plea that Dr. Jowett points: "In England we sit a great deal by the fireside. At my own home in the still evening hour, my mother sat with me, and I loved to watch her at work and to watch the fine embers as they softly fell and slowly became lifeless. They had a significance and calmed our minds and kept us humble, thoughtful and reflective.

"And one evening as we sat by our fireside, my mother busy with her work, now and then she would look up and through the window to the stars as they came out, and strung themselves like golden beads on the rosary of heaven. And I said to her:

"'Mother, why do you look up?'"

"'I look, my son, to rest my eyes and get a larger vision.'"

"And this," he added, "is what I want my people in New York to do. To look up from their work, their toil, their labor and struggles, and rest their eyes and get a larger vision. To look up from the embers that are dropping into ashes of lost hope and failures, to look up from the fitful firelight of daily life, the feverish rush, the maddening turmoil, and rest their eyes and rest their mind, and get a larger vision, a grander view, higher objects, wider purposes: to see beyond the works of their hands, upon which their thoughts and minds are centered, to the works and purposes of God, that they may realize in the deepest centers of their own being that there are larger and wider visions to be attained, higher objects to be sought for, greater purposes to be realized, than all the earth with its fullness can bring to them."

The gospel of the Son of God is the evangel that invites us to look up, rest the eyes and get the larger vision. The world is bigger and brighter and better if we will look up, rest the eyes, and get the larger vision.

PASSED BEYOND.

When a beautiful soul goes back to God there is sorrow on earth. No, maybe it should not be so, because that soul is better off, and happier now forever. But earth is poorer, and we of the flesh weep and lament earth's poverty and bereavement. Our tears do not signify that we envy heaven, or lament the wise providences of God. They signify our weakness, the feeling of lack and loss we sustain, the pangs of pain that pierce our heart because of our loneliness now and the deep dark void that seems to enthrall us.

Such were the tears of her family, friends and loved ones when the sad news was told, with bated breath, from one to another, that Miss Jennie Herndon had died at the Watts Hospital, Durham, N. C., early Saturday a. m., after a wearing and lingering illness there. Every one that heard the news realized that one of God's most serene and sincere, beautiful and benevolent souls had gone back to enjoy forever the presence and the glory of the God whose she was and whom she had served from rich and tender years. Standing beside her bier, fragrant with deep banks of rich roses, in the Durham Christian Church, at the hour of the funeral Sunday afternoon, Prof. Ragsdale, Superintendent of schools for Pitt County, and known throughout the State as teacher and friend of teachers, said, with broken voice, that in all the thirty years of intimate acquaintance and association with the teachers in North Carolina, he could not recall one whose life had been more beautiful and circumspect, and whose influence had been more wholesome and heavenly than that of Miss Herndon who had taught the past three years in the Greenville Graded Schools. And that, indeed was the sentiment of all who knew her. Loyalty, Devotion, Sympathy, the three divine traits writ large in every true woman's heart, were hers in marked measure, and she lived to show the best that womankind could do.

Born March 30, 1878 in Wake County, Jennie Thomas Herndon gave her heart to God at the age of nine years and to the day of her going away, September 16, 1911, there is not one to say she was ever disloyal or untrue to the church of her choice and the God she loved and served. At the age of 18 she graduated from Elon College in which institution she later taught. For four years she taught in the Graded Schools of Greensboro, and the past three years at Greenville.

No one who heard her address before the alumni and the public at Elon College commencement, 1910, will ever forget how, for thirty minutes or more, she held her audience spell-bound, as if by magic, while she read in a clear, crystal, clarion voice of "The Spirit of Optimism," and of how hopefully she looked upon the future and bade all present to trust God, look up, be brave and press forward.

The funeral services were conducted from the Main Street Christian Church, Durham, those taking part being, Rev. J. O. Cox, pastor, Revs. J. W. Wellons, W. S. Long, D.D., J. O. Atkinson, and Prof. Ragsdale. Miss Pitt, of Elon College presided at the organ and an Elon College quartett, Misses Clements and Barnes, Messrs. Campbell and Barnes, furnished the music. A great company attended the funeral and the floral offering was bountiful, beautiful, abundant. Rev. Dr. Herndon, the father, Mrs. Herndon, the mother, Mrs. J. T. Moffitt and Mrs. W. K. Scott, the sisters, and Carl, the brother, have our deepest sympathy in the hour of their deep loss and bereavement.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

We agree most heartily with the editor of The Examiner in the opinion that most of the decay in spirituality in our churches has its source in the neglect of the family altar. We fear that few indeed are the families in which the head of the house gathers his family about him once a day and, having read a portion of God's word, kneels in prayer for divine guidance, and for Heaven's blessing and protection. When we think of what family prayer has meant to the world, of what it means to character, to the forming and shaping of the right sort of character, the wonder is that the custom of family prayers has not enlarged and increased with advancing years, instead of dwindling and decreasing. Family prayers make the home more sacred, increase confidence and respect for father and mother, lend dignity and worth to parenthood, and deepen the spiritual life of the whole family. Yes, it takes time, and is often inconvenient; but it is worth while. Agreeing with The Examiner further, from the family altar of old came the devotion and moral hardihood of the fathers who wrought righteousness amid great tribulation. They began the day with God, and ended it with God, and so they waxed valiant in fight and subdued the armies of the aliens. "We are nerveless and tired (spiritually) and let the enemy have his way because in our homes we fail to serve God in the presence of our children and dependants."

We wonder if there are not Christian Sun readers, parents, who are ashamed of this neglect and would like to begin the custom of family prayers? If there be such we would like to have them join The Family Altar League whose pledge card reads like this: "For Christ and the Home." Believing myself to be largely responsible for the eternal salvation and religious training of my children and realizing the need of God's grace for my own Christian life I covenant with God to make it the rule of my life to gather together each day, so far as possible the members of my family and together read some portion of His Word and pray for His blessing upon my home." If any Sun readers desire such a pledge we have a card for that purpose which is neat and attractive and will be sent on request.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Edison.

The pity for Edison, the inventor, is that he does not confine his talk, to the press in particular, to those lines with which his work and researches have made him familiar. Mr. Edison knows very much about electricity and has done more for discovery and invention in the field of electricity than any man living. Edison is the man of the cloister, the man who works in a laboratory, and with matter. Now what work, we pray, has he ever done to entitle him to authority, much less pre-eminence, along the line of Ethics, much less along the line of Theology?

And yet when Edison speaks of things theological and ethical he makes a fool of himself, but is quoted far and near as if what he said was worth a fig. Mr. Edison can teach a world for a decade to come about electricity; but any fifteen-year-old boy who has been in Sunday school three years can teach Edison lessons in ethics and theology that he hasn't dreamed about.

Here is Edison doubting, and discrediting belief in, the immortality of the soul. Well what boots it if he is? Edison has not had the time, and far less the disposition, to study about, and make any researches as touching that subtle and mysterious problem. Mr. Edison has been making his researches in electricity.

Mr. Edison is in France now. He thinks the French way is better, and says so. "The French are wiser in contenting themselves with fewer children and being able to provide them with the proper scope for earning their livelihood." The French people themselves do not, in their sanity and wisdom agree with Edison and watch with amazement their population stand still, or retrograde. A man may be smart, and an authority along some lines, but makes of himself a laughing stock along some others. Mr. Edison seems to be of that type. In the field of electricity he is a wonder. In the field of ethics and theology he is an ignoramus.

THOSE WHO WILL HELP.

The following pastors have kindly consented to speak publicly of The Sun to their several congregations and endeavor to increase its circulation between now and Conference: Revs. 1. W. Johnson, M. W. Butler, H. E. Roantree, D. A. Keys, J. L. Foster, J. F. Morgan, G. M. Holder, C. C. Jones, W. G. Clements, C. W. Carter, L. E. Smith.

The secular paper and magazine are making fearful inroads upon the time and attention that should be given to the reading of the church paper, and of religious enterprises, and unless pastors and those who care combine to beat back the ever-swelling tide of secularism, the church paper and all other church enterprises must suffer fearfully in time to come. Will other pastors to whom personal letters were recently addressed kindly reply as early as possible. Only about five or six Sundays now before Conference.

—The Home Mission Board of the S. C. C. is in annual session today at Greensboro. There are many points in our midst sorely needing help and the pity is that there are not fifteen thousand instead of fifteen hundred dollars to appropriate.

DR. STALEY'S GREETING.

Suffolk, Va., Sept 4, 1911.

To President, Faculty, and Students:
Opening day Elon College—

It has never been my good fortune to be present at the opening of any session though President for half its history; but my interest has been intense from the first motion in the 1888 Convention to establish the Institution. I have been in every Board meeting from the initiation of the work and wrote the first permanent records as Secretary. I knew its infancy, its childhood, and have seen it pass its 21st birthday. The growth of the College has paralleled the student body. Faculty and students grow as the College grows and it is difficult to say which is cause and which is effect; but this word, on this day that opens with the new young President, is sent in the spirit of congratulation and encouragement in the hope that the new administration may be successful and long-continued. If the new President "makes good" in his new and great opportunity, he will have a future of great labor and great usefulness. To magnify his office and obscure himself will secure and hold the confidence of the public and confidence always means support. No cause can perish while its constituency has faith in it. This essential for the successful future of the new President can be greatly strengthened, if not created, by the loyal confidence and support of Faculty and students. They are the jury whose verdict will be reported to the public. They surround his daily administration and know the inner workings of his mind and heart-life. I therefore, take the liberty to entreat you, Faculty and students, to add your great strength to Mr. Harper in his efforts to make Elon College the pride of the Southern Convention.

Your help is more than buildings and endowment. You can mould him into a model President or crush him: the higher work is to mould clay into a Portland Vase; the lower work is to break it. To students I will say that behavior in College and out of College counts more than scholarship with the public: Anybody can tell good conduct; only a few appreciate high grades. The College whose students deport themselves well in school and in all public places must finally win the respect of the public, even beyond its own constituency. It is sad to say that many of the rudest and most ill-mannered young people of the present generation are students from schools that claim distinction as first-class institutions. I can find backwoods youths and maidens who exhibit more modesty and refinement on trains, in hotels, and public places than some students. In the days of European culture one of the chief things was "manners," and this word runs through Gibbon, Hume, and MacCauley. The time has come for a new plea for "good manners" and I am ambitious for Elon College to lead the way in making the "educated" class also the "cultured" class. The age needs it and the colleges can give us this lost art. The time is past for boors and bullies.

Pardon me, Mr. President, for intruding upon the occasion where so much learning comes together to begin a session which I trust will be the best of all the years behind it; but permit me to extend to you my heartiest congratulations and to pray for harmony, progress, and unity.

My best wishes for Faculty and students.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. Staley.

(The subject matter of the above is so timely that we make no apologies for printing it as read at the opening exercises of Elon College, in College Chapel, Sept. 6.—Ed).

THE NORTHFIELD CHRISTIAN WORKERS' CONFERENCE.

Having returned from the Northfield Christian Workers' Conference, one feels impelled to say a few things about the Conference, so I am going to ask for a little space to give vent to my feelings about this great Conference. One cannot attend the Conference without being impressed; because it stands for the best and sanest things in Christian thought. It has a great conception of God and of the integrity of His Word. Jesus Christ and His cross are so magnified that one is made to see that it is the central fact of Christianity. The work of the Holy Spirit is given due prominence. The conference, in short, turns the light upon the foundations of the Kingdom of God in such a manner that one can but be reassured of their steadfastness, strength and beauty. It is hardly possible for one to attend the conference without having his conception of divine things greatly enlarged.

When one reaches Northfield he is impressed at once with the beauty of the place. Nature has performed the work of an artist in the fashioning of the grounds, with the Connecticut River passing along the western boundary and the foot hills of the Green and White mountains lying in the distance on either side. Beautiful hills dot the campus, and upon many of these hills magnificent dormitories have been built. These buildings are used during the Conference period for the entertaining of the guests, but for nine months of the year they are filled with students that have come from the poorer homes of this land and others.

The purpose of the school is to fit young ladies for the work of life. They are charged half of what it really costs to maintain them, the other half being supplied by donations and income from endowment. There is in connection with the Northfield Seminary what is known as the Mt. Hermon school for boys, which is run under the same management and offers to them the same privileges. These are great schools and do a great work. They have about twelve hundred students each year. The majority of them would have to go through life without even a high school education, if it had not been for the foresight of Mr. Moody. The aim of these schools is to make of each student a Christian, and to send him forth into the great battle of life thoroughly furnished. The schools have invested in grounds, buildings and equipments something over a million and a half dollars.

One has not been at Northfield long before one begins to take in the situation and draw conclusions. One's mind naturally goes back to the great life that has made possible the things that one beholds. One learns that this was the home of the late D. L. Moody, and then one sees why the Conference and schools were located at Northfield, and feels at the same time that God truly directed in the whole affair. It was a wise selection, from whatever standpoint viewed. Then, one begins to think of the possibilities of a life wholly surrendered to God. It was the purpose of the late D. L. Moody to prove to the world what God could do with a life fully consecrated to Him. It is said of him that he seemed to forget himself and family in view of the needs of the work he undertook in the interests of the Kingdom of God; but it is evident that they lacked for nothing. It helps to prove that God looks out for him who looks out for His cause in the earth. The unselfish life is the only truly great life.

The Northfield Conferences were begun in 1880. The first was attended by three hundred Christian workers. They have grown in popularity and interest from year to year, until now they are attended by thousands, and many have come to feel that they must attend each year. Some have attended the conferences continuously for the past twenty years. Having attended once you evidently feel that you would like to become a habitual attendant. All testify to the helpfulness of the conferences. They are the means of great help to Christian workers of all classes. They are full of inspiration and instruction. They are uplifting. God is in them and makes himself felt in a most real manner. His authority is recognized in all things. There is no tendency to rule Him out of the affairs of men. He is ever the great God of heaven and earth, the One to whom man owes allegiance. He is the everlasting Father, full of compassion, ever seeking to lavish upon His children His boundless love.

The conference, in short, greatly enlarges your conception of God and His Kingdom; increases your knowledge of the Scriptures and awakens in you a determination to be a better student of the Word; suggests a multitude of themes, plans and methods for future work, and in fact appeals to all that is noblest and divinest in you. It is my purpose to follow up this article with others on definite phases of the Conference.

THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

Rev. W. S. Jacoby, who accompanies Dr. R. A. Torrey in his evangelistic campaigns, was a most interesting character at the Northfield Conference. He spoke on Round-top one evening and also frequently spoke at the auditorium. He was interesting on account of the great change that came in his life after forty-five years of sin and shame, his religious fervor, his gratefulness to God and the disadvantages he had overcome in order to become a Christian worker. He was a living specimen of the marvelous saving and transforming power of divine grace. The love of God was shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost and his great voice was tempered to wonderful tenderness and as he spoke you could but feel that the Lord was exceedingly precious to him. He had come to appreciate the wonderful things his Lord had done for him. As he spoke you could but join him in thanking God for His marvelous grace that can lift a man from the lowest depths of sin to a life of such great victory and usefulness.

He started on his wild career when he was a boy of only ten years. At this age he was drunk for the first time. From ten to fifteen years of age he went from bad to worse. He joined the army after this and before he was of age he had returned home, having been schooled thoroughly in the school, iniquity. His father desirous of helping him, set him up in business, but kept his hand on the financial end of it. He soon became tired of the business and threw it up and left Philadelphia, his home city, and started out on his wild career again. This time he fell in with bad associates and lived a rough, tough life, tramping and sleeping out of doors. His delight seemed to be in that which was wicked and corrupt.

Now he joined the army again and it was not long before he was in trouble. He was thrust into the guard house and left. He managed to escape, but was overtaken and was recaptured with considerable difficulty. The additional charge of resisting an officer was now filed against him. He knew not what the outcome would be. When tried he was discharged from the army. He was in a strange city, friendless and penniless. The question was what to do. He decided he would start home, so he boarded an empty freight car and traveled on it for three days without food or drink. When the car reached St. Louis he got off hungry and weak and decided that he would look for work. He found work with a construction company and was put to rolling dirt, but being inexperienced he could not handle his wheel-barrow successfully. He was shifted from one thing to another until he found something he could do. He worked only three days. He now started out for Ohio on his homeward journey, and finally reached home, dirty, ragged, filthy, a poor tramp. He knocked at the door of his old home and the maid responded. He said "Is Mrs. Jacoby in? I would like to see her." The maid was told to invite him in and presently his mother came in to behold a sight that was to break her heart. She fainted on his shoulder as she realized it was her son that had come home in such a plight. The question was what to do with him. He was cleaned up and sent to a private room to await further orders; for it was feared that his father would not receive him very kindly. The family wished to conceal his presence from his father, but it was not long before his presence was made known and the dreaded meeting was inevitable. His father received him kindly, but did not have much to say to him, only to inquire what he was doing for a livelihood. Of course he had to say "nothing" and get the reply "that's awfully poor business."

After remaining at home for a short while he began to feel that things were too tame for him, so he joined the army for the third time and launched out on another stage of his wreckless career. He soon fell in with extremely wicked men and in a very short while was in the old way again, only going deeper into sin and shame. In Chicago he was discharged from the army for the second time and again returned home. This time he joined the Fire Company and succeeded in getting on the police force. He held this job for only a short while and was off to the army for the fourth time. This time he came near killing a man at Omaha and had to flee for his life. Now he went to Missouri and was working on a farm when he learned of the death of his father, and the legacy left him. The larger part of this he spent in sin and shame; for now he turned himself loose.

The downward course of this life was not to continue indefinitely. It was cut short by the marvelous grace of God. He came under the influence of evangelistic services when he was forty-five years of age and was converted. The grace of God having changed his heart, he was possessed with the desire to become a Christian worker. He well knew that he was far from being fitted for such work. He was ignorant, scarred by sin and his whole constitution weakened and depraved. He was little more than a piece of driftwood rescued from the angry sea. What could be made out of him?

He went to the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago and gave himself up to the task of learning how to do Christian work. He learned more rapidly than was thought possible and became efficient in his chosen field of Christian service. His excellent spirit and efficiency caused Dr. Torrey to see that he would be of great service in his evangelistic work and, therefore, he was chosen to accompany him, as a personal worker. He is now an excellent teacher on personal work. He knows how to approach men in the interest of their souls. The lessons given by him during the conference were very interesting and helpful.

In this brother we have another demonstration of the power of the Gospel to transform and uplift fallen man. God can do marvelous things with men when they wholly give themselves up to Him and are willing to work with all their might. Consecration alone does not necessarily insure great usefulness, but when there is coupled with it honest and persistent effort, the greatest usefulness may be expected. Many good people, with great advantages and opportunities, have never amounted to much in the Kingdom of God, because they have not tried. They have been spiritually lazy. They have been too easily discouraged. They have launched out for the work of Christ. Their ambition has been to be good themselves and get home to heaven at last, without much thought about their neighbors (in and out of the church, at home and abroad). Goodness alone will never turn this old world upside down. It will not go out into the byways and hedges and compel the lost to come into the Kingdom of God. Consecration must have its companion—untiring effort. Goodness must be active. It must go about doing good. It must enter the conflict. It must pluck its jewels as brands from the burnings.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Bro. N. G. Newman saw things worth while in New York and tells about them in most interesting detail in this week's Sun.

—That was a great meeting which Dr. W. S. Long, pastor, enjoyed at Pleasant Grove, Randolph County, there being some sixty or seventy professions and forty-five accessions to the church.

—Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, who in last week's Sun was reported to be dangerously ill, is considered better at this writing, having rested more for the past two or three days.

—Two hundred and fifteen students enrolled at the beginning of the second week of Elon's fall term is a record breaker for which all friends of the college are grateful.

—There are twenty-five ministerial students at Elon College this year, among whom are men of purpose, promise, and thorough consecration to their work and calling.

—President Harper, though exceedingly busy with office affairs and the presidency at Elon finds time, even in the rush, to secure some subscriptions to the Special Fund for Elon College. He secured $200. last Sunday and is constantly on the look out for those who are willing to aid in this good cause.

—Rev. I W Johnson assisted Rev. H. H. Butler in a revival at Bethlehem, Nansemond Co., Va., last week. There were 15 professions and 8 additions to the church. Bro. Johnson is this week assisting Rev. N. G. Newman at Holland, Va. Bro. Johnson is a busy pastor with a large and growing constituency who yet finds time to look after all the interests and enterprises of the Church and still have time to assist his brethren in evangelistic work.

—Editor Whichard wrote at the top of his editorial column, in the Greenville Reflector, last Saturday: "In his thirty years as an editor, this writer has been called upon to write many sad words, but the bitterest came to him today when he must make the announcement, 'Mother is dead.' " You are right, Whichard, and here is our sympathy, too, for though a fellow may be away from the parental roof many a long and weary year, mother is mother still, and when she goes somehow there is lack and loss that nothing can supply. "Mother is dead," is a sentence that strikes hard and cuts deep, for she is a man's, as well as a boy's, dearest friend.

—"A writer in the New York Observer tells of a fisherman who hired a boatman to row him on the lake. In landing a bass the fisherman fell overboard. The boatman in an effort to save him caught his hair and his wig came off. Then he grabbed his foot and his wooden leg came off. Getting hold of his net he fished him out of the water with the remark that if he could not save the whole man he would save as much of him as possible. The good point is made that when the church through the home and Sunday school conserves a girl or boy it saves a whole woman or man while it is left to save only as much of the sin-maimed adult as it can.—Exchange.

—This comes by way of The Christian Missionary, Dayton:

"We join with other friends in extending sympathy to Rev. and Mrs. W. C. McCloud, Salinas, Porto Rico, on account of the death of little Winfred Lyon, their five-weeks-old son. The parting has been exceedingly hard for them. But the heavenly Father, whom they have sought to make known to the Porto Ricans, is able to comfort them, and they are reconciled to the wisdom of His will."

Bro. McCloud is an Elon College graduate, class '01, and has been teaching the past summer in the schools of Porto Rico. Many Sun readers will learn with regret of his bereavement.

—We are wondering what the "Old Man"—God spare him—thought when he read in The Charlotte Observer, which his brilliant pen and noble soul made great, last Sunday that the writer of the leading editorial "found in looking over his exchanges that the Sunday-school lesson of the day was about Daniel in the lion's den," and then proceeded to write a discourse on that theme, though in fact that is not the theme of the lesson till next Sunday. We are wondering what sort of exchanges the esteemed Observer reads to get the date of the Sunday school lessons mixed, when, as he says, the land is fairly sowed down, because of the system of International Lessons, in Sunday-school literature every week?

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

In this issue Rev. L. I. Cox makes a plea worthy of attention and much consideration. The church of the present has no more important and weighty task than that of enlisting and holding the interest, sympathy and co-operation of young people.

Here is indeed a world of energy. The youthful hand is willing, the young arm is strong, the unburdened mind is active. What can the church do to engage these ready, willing active hands, minds and hearts? This is a problem. And yet, unless the youthful mind is turned to the church, and the tender heart is enlisted in its services and activities, we need not, we cannot expect loyalty, devotion and duty when the youth comes to be a man, a woman. Youthful service means life-time loyalty. If we are to have old men and women who are loyal, we must have young ones who are active in Christian service. Bro. Cox's plea is timely and along right lines.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

My Dear Fellow Laborers:—

The religious future of our church demands that we reach, interest, enlist, and hold our young people for active Christian work. In this way our church will grow, otherwise we will soon have no churches.

On July the fifth I wrote a personal letter to all who made pledges at the last session of our Young People's General Convention, to meet a deficit of $120.07, and only a very few have responded to the Treasurer's urgent letter.

Will you not please help the Treasurer out of the embarrassing position that he is now placed in, by paying your personal pledges, or by having your church, Sunday school, or young people's society (as the case may be) to pay the amount you pledged for them? Thank you.

Trusting that I may receive the amount of your pledge at earliest possible convenience, I remain,

Faithfully yours,

L. I. Cox, Treas.

ELON COLLEGE LETTER.

I am undertaking to write, with the editor's kind acquiescence, at whose suggestion I will not reveal, what if it were a bicycle would be called a rambler; what if it were a soldier would be called a scout; what if I were an Addisou would be called the Spectator's weekly contribution, but what since neither of these would be appropriate, shall be known as the Elon College Letter.

This letter will not be newsy, in the narrow acceptance of that term, but practical, its aim being to set forth briefly matters of import to education in general and to Elon in particular. The writer reserves the right to dilate from time to time on other things than those which would be classed as educational in the strict connotation of that word. When the editor consents to his range, he exhibits large confidence in somebody's judgment, a confidence which it is hoped will not be shaken nor weakened by subsequent events.

The College has opened well and things are moving on nicely. The Professors have never had larger classes nor more promising pupils. The Freshman class is the largest we have had, the English class having outgrown the room it has been using in previous years by seventeen. Students are taking fewer hours, due to the new rule that all extra hours must be paid for at the rate of one dollar per hour per term. This principle was adopted two years ago to be put into operation this fall. It will mean a little longer stay here for some who are behind, but it will mean a higher grade of work by all.

The Executive Board of Trustees in their meeting on Aug. 17 asked the president of the College to take the field for the Special Fund just as soon as in his judgment such action would be wise and expedient after the opening. I acquiesced in their request, with fear and trembling, but yet readily and cheerfully. I said to them then and I say to our brotherhood now, that I am willing always and everywhere to do what I may be called upon to do by the Church to the best of my ability. I will also state another thing, which I stated to them, that this Special Fund, $26,670 of which is yet to be raised, can be raised provided our people will rally to the one who leads in the matter, but that it can never be raised unless the brethren do support the leader and hold up his hands in every way. I shall take the field just as soon as matters here will permit and shall pray for the hearty, sympathetic support of every minister and layman of the Church, and I believe that I shall have it. Elon has done too much for the Christian Church for the Christian Church to allow it to suffer. The College is the child of the Church, and the Church has always honored and loved her child. Now is the time when the child must have assistance, and I have faith to believe that the mother's heart will not allow the child's needs to go unsatisfied.

"We can do it, if we will; we can do, and we will." This is one of the mottoes of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Let it also be our motto and all things will be well with us. W. A. Harper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The great opening at Elon College is a source of gratification to all who love the institution and the church. I cannot give personal attention to all church enterprises and interests, but my heart rejoices in every new subscriber to The Christian Sun, every new student in Elon College, every contribution to the Christian Orphanage, every offering to home or foreign missions, and every young man who hears and obeys God's call to the ministry; and I sincerely believe, that if every member of the Christian Church in the Southern Convention would make church membership include all the enterprises of the church and enlarge their prayers and offerings on this scale, that no enterprise would lack means and no soul would be unblest. I have found it impossible, up to this time, to enlist the interest of all members of my charge even in local church affairs. Some members of many years contribute nothing in real thought, prayer, or money. Such members do not grow and cannot enjoy religion. The range of thought of any human mind determines its size and life. The simple study of geography and history enlarges the range of the mind's operations and makes men larger and nobler. In his mind he crosses continents, oceans, hemispheres; looks into the lives of princes, kings, nobles, ministers, authors, and, through pictures looks upon their faces, their palaces, their works of art, their temples, their monuments and their homes.

Beyond all this the heart soars in its faith-views of the Cross, the open grave, the ascending Lord, the divine love, and the glory that fills the temple where our Father dwells, and where angels and white-robed and blood-washed saints forever praise His name. No science, no art, no travel, no ideals, so expand the soul and enlarge the life as the contemplation of the spiritual and the divine. If the Christian religion did no more than educate men and thought, it would still be the greatest of all teachers and the wisest of all schools; but it does more. It saves. It sings. It loves. It hopes. It prays. It gives. It binds up wounds. It heals broken hearts. It opens blind eyes. It unstops deaf ears. It cures the sick. It will open every grave. It will right every wrong. It will stop the mouth of hungry war. It will conquer every sin. It fills the heart with joy. It will cover every dark cloud with rainbows, and stud every black night with stars. At its almighty touch dry bones live and the prison-bound go free. That is why I love the church; because it stands for Christ and His gospel. The church is not a great organization, measured by numbers, money, and style; it is the life of God in the souls of men, making them pure, sweet, sympathetic, benevolent, and active in the kingdom of love.

The news of the extreme illness of Rev. J. W. Holt, of Burlington, and Miss Jennie Herndon, of Durham, N. C., awakens deep concern and prayers in many anxious hearts.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, of Richmond, was in Suffolk a few hours today and looks quite natural on these streets where he labored for many years as principal of the old Suffolk Collegiate Institute.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet in Suffolk Oct. 31.

NORFOLK LETTER.

My second Norfolk letter is written aboard a street car. That will account for its lack of symmetry. Bro. McD. Howsare is chaperoning Dr. Samuels over to Fort Monroe and Hampton Institute. The writer just happens to be going along. We have just come from the Navy Yard at Portsmouth. Dr. Samuels there had his first view of a modern battleship. Said one of our party, "What would you do with a battleship if you had one?" Replied the one addressed, "I would get some one to help me sink it, for I would not know what else to do with it," while another member of the party philosophically said, "I would sell it and get the money." But speaking seriously, a modern man-o'-war is a wonderful piece of machinery. Nothing is spared to make a perfect instrument of destruction. We build them because we fear our neighbors. How we ought to speed the day when all men shall know that "perfect love casteth out fear."

Well, well, here we are at "Willoughby Spit" and the boat is making the landing. Now we are aboard the "Ocean View"—which is only another way of saying that some names are humbugs. They do not mean what they say. It is probable that this steamer, the "Ocean View," never saw the ocean nor can one obtain an ocean view from it.

It was learned with great regret by many that Capt. C. M. Cruser of the Third Church congregation, though not a member, had to undergo an operation last week. He improved nicely until Saturday, when for a while his life was despaired of. He is now better again and it is believed will recover.

Bro. J. L. Rogers of the Third Church who was sick from malaria, is much improved and we were happy to have him with us again at church services.

Dr. W. D. Samuels preached two helpful sermons at the Memorial Temple yesterday. His morning theme was, "The Afterglow of Life;" the evening theme, "Our Heavenly Home." Miss Bessie Jones, daughter of the former pastor, Dr. Jones, sang. The attendance was good. The church meets Wednesday evening to consider the calling of Bro. Howsare's successor.

Dr. T. Edwin Baird of the Temple gave a fine address on "Medical Missions" at Rosemont church yesterday.

The Memorial Temple is preparing for a big "Rally Day" Oct. 1. They hope to have one thousand present.

Mrs. Parkley of Cumming, Georgia, who has been visiting at the home of J. L. Rodgers for the past three weeks, returned home yesterday. Mr. Parker, brother of Mrs. Rogers, was here a day or two and returned with his family. We were glad to have them with us at the Third Church and shall be glad to see them again.

I have finished writing this letter within the fortifications of Fortress Monroe. Now we go to Hampton.

THE ORGANIZED CLASS—ITS ACTIVITIES.

Activity is synonymous with life. The class without activities is without life and interest. "The doing well things well worth doing," appeals to all men and women who have red blood. In order that the class be healthy and appeal to all sides of human nature the activities should be general, though the location and circumstances of the church and the members of the class will in a large measure determine just what these things must be. Experience has taught that three things are essential to a steady growth of life, interest and power—those which increase and maintain the membership of the class, those which meet the social needs of its members, and those which cultivate their religious life and meet their spiritual needs. For this reason the international standard of organization requires the appointment of at least three committees: Membership, Social, and Devotional. As the class grows and its activities multiply others will be needed and may be added.

Membership Committee.—After the first membership campaign is over some classes feel its work is done and no adequate effort is made to work for still more pupils. Such should not be the case. The membership campaign should be one continuous thing. The membership committee should at all times have a list of prospective members. The other members and officers of the school should be consulted. Be on the lookout for people who attend no Sunday school, for new comers to the town or community. Inaugurate and maintain a system of continuous canvassing for more people. Have in mind the purpose of losing none of those already enrolled. To this end, it is suggested:

1. Assign every member of the class to some one on the membership committee and hold the committeeman responsible for the attendance of those assigned him.

2. Specially invite every member to any special meetings or social gatherings.

3. Invite those not members to attend the class for one Sunday. The "Smith plan" of sending seven men—one each day in the week—has won many a member.

4. Quarterly, or monthly, divide the class into companies of seven and appoint a captain over each company. Have it understood that ten will make a complete company, and three new members must be added to each.

5. Use any other plan or contests that are modest and becoming a class that has for its purpose winning men to Christ. Study the most approved books and literature on organized classes and reaching men.

It is important to hold those secured. Account for every member every Sunday. In large classes this may be done by a visitation committee. Where the class is divided into companies the captains may be responsible for this work. Keep a visitor's record and have them sign their names themselves.

Advertise.—Keep the work of the class constantly before the people. When the class is organized, when it has a special meeting, or a social gathering, have the newspapers print something about it. The papers are always glad to do this and it will help wonderfully. Every organized class should have a press reporter.

Note the following. Every member should use the international emblem. Stationary and cards with the name of the class. Regular reports to the Sunday school. Frequently publish and distribute the reports of work.

Magnify Membership.—Put forth every effort to make membership mean much to those who attend. Give to each a warm welcome. Introduce him to the other members. Let him know you are glad he joined and don't forget to give him the same kind of welcome the next Sunday. Keep in touch with those who move from the town or community. Have a map on the wall and place the international emblem at every place to which one of your members has gone. Also know what members of the class do, where they live, where they work. Be ready to help and sympathize. Hold an annual service in memory of those called to their reward. This might be in connection with another service. Be sure to keep track of the sick; send flowers and fruit. Visit them if their condition will permit it.

Social Side.—Every member has a social nature and need. If social entertainment of the right kind is not given, the young man or young woman will look for amusement elsewhere. The social committee should provide for at least four socials a year. For young men a camping trip is fine. Social meetings may be held by young men's and young women's classes jointly occasionally, or by all of the organized classes of the school. There should be an annual class banquet.

By all means let the atmosphere of the class room be helpful. Have the class room decorated and let it contain all necessary maps, helps and furniture. Many things along this line will suggest themselves.

Devotional.—The primary purpose of the class is to save its members and save others. It is a part of the church. All meetings should be spiritual. The study and discussion of the lesson must not be crowded out. Try to save men. Take an active part in the church revivals. Attend the opening and closing exercises of the school. Attend the church services. Try to save the men of your class and make them members of the church.

The next paper in the series will contain more on this side of the work. (This is the third of this series of articles on the Organized Class. The fourth and last will appear next week.—Editor.)

Sun., Oct. 1. Topic—Lessons from Great Lives: X. Peter. John 21: 1-19. (Consecration meeting.)

As in other lessons, after the opening exercises, the leader should read the lesson for the day and follow this with his talk on the topic, this to be followed by talks on the daily readings for the preceding days of the week. The following is suggestive of the line of talks, none of which, except the leader's, should be more than two or three minutes long.

Leader's Talk.—Peter was one of the three disciples that were admitted to the inner circle of Christ's life and richer experiences, the other members of the circle being James and John. These witnessed the raising of the daughter of Jairus, the transfiguration and the scene in the Garden of Gethsemane. This was a great honor, and his responsibility was all the greater.

Peter, though he was close to Christ, wrote no gospel. Probably he was not at home with the pen, but he was certainly a power in the pulpit or on the forum. He was a fisherman and remained such. He was well along in years and this may have accounted for his not writing. It is believed that Mark wrote very largely what Peter told him, and the second gospel has very much of the vividness and force that would go with the original.

In point of years, Peter was probably the oldest,—the dean of the disciples,—but his heart was youngest of them all.

Peter walked upon the waves, but he soon sank in them, his faith failing. Then he was the wave-man. Later Christ made him the rock-man. At times the faith of the beginner wavers, but with patience and worship faith is strengthened and the one that wavers may eventually be as firm as the rock.

The Great Call.—It would be well to have a map at hand on which could be pointed out the Sea of Galilee. Picture Christ as he walked beside the waters, halting and beckoning to the three fishermen that afterwards became the members of that inner circle of His. The humblest men were the ones Christ desired. No matter what one's work he may be a servant of the Master. Peter remained a fisherman, though John did not.

The Soul-Winner.—Christ paid Peter a high compliment when he likened him unto a stone or "Rock," and gave him a name with that significance. The name must have done much to render the disciple stable and firm. No monopoly was given Peter on the name but all who are steadfast and persevere may be called by that cognomen.

The Great Confession.—To Peter belongs the honor also of being the first to make the confession that Jesus was the Christ, the statement of the divinity of the Son of God, which is the foundation of our Church. That was the crowning moment of the apostle's life—it is the crowning moment of any life that fully and freely makes the confession.

The Denial.—The scene of the denial was the tragedy of Peter's life. He followed his great confession with as great a denial. In the garden he had cut off the ear of the servant of the high priest. In the upper room he had boasted that others might deny the Lord but never would he. Humility is a great asset of the true Christian and this Peter was a long while in obtaining.

Peter the Brave.—Though he had denied his Christ, he afterwards wept bitterly and repented. On the day of Pentecost Peter was with the others and was ready to stand up and declare Christ and preach the gospel. Some had said the men were affected by new wine; others were amazed. Out of the chaos Peter brought order and convinced them of the sincerity of the disciples' position.

Peter the Leader.—It was Peter who saw the vision of the world's salvation and who first preached Christ to others than the Jews. No longer were the disciples to confine their efforts solely to saving their own people, but the gospel was to be carried to "Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth."

SOME IMPRESSIONS THAT REMAIN.

Two days in New York barely suffice to make a circuit of the city and take a casual glance at her great institutions. We leave with feelings of mingled disgust and admiration. The weighs upon us. For miles in lower New York no man lives in a home. There are no homes. Just one solid mass of brick and stone from four to twelve stories high extending from street to street. Think of families being reared on the tenth story with children playing in an iron cage under the window suspended a hundred feet in the air—their only outer world! Their feet have perhaps never touched mother earth. To such a place—we can't call it a home—the weary laborer ascends after his day's toil to find an atmosphere as hot and impure as the shop from which he came. In such a place the mother spends both day and night in ceaseless grind of family life. Here is the furnace which ever consumes the fresh supply of life from the country.

We are impressed with the Strenuousness of Life.

It is a whirl and a whiz and a rattle and a roar from early morn till late at night. Ten thousand elevators carry a hundred thousand passengers daily. Automobiles shoot by at the rate of sixteen in three minutes (not six as the last Sun made me say). These with wagons, cabs and street-cars running both ways and crossing at tracks at right angles, make street crossing a dangerous art. A policeman stands at each of these crossings to protect human life while jeopardizing his own every minute of the day. Men rush on the side walks and run across the streets. The elevated and underground trains speed by every few minutes at the rate of 40 miles an hour. On the Wall Street Stock Exchange dignified attorneys and millionaires go wild with excitement at the latest news of the wires, crowd and jostle each other, yell and shout themselves hoarse, while millions are made and lost with the rapidity of electric machinery. Just in front in the middle of the street we see a crowd enclosed by a chain, while one or two policemen keep back the men. Beardless youths with dissipated countenance are the principals. They, too, seramble and yell, keeping their eyes fixed on the windows above from which boys continuously communicate something in dumb code on their fingers. "What are these fellows doing," we ask the policeman. "The same thing as those fellows inside," he answers, "buying and selling everything from one cent up." They are the "curbstone brokers."

New York impresses one with the Magnitude of Things.

Distance, size, figures take on new meaning. We are in the midst of a population greater than that of Va. and N. C. combined. At a hotel we are sent to the thirteenth story and to the 1365th room. We incidentally come across an Aquarium of which we had never heard, and find it five times as large as the National aquarium at Washington. We ask the cost of a tomb we are visiting and we are told $600,000. Private R. R. depots cover blocks and trains enter through tunnels under the Hudson River. We see miles of piers on which hundreds of ships unload produce from every clime. We count the stories of a building until the neck and the head grow dizzy and stop in the twenties, not caring how many are left. They tell us of apartment houses with 2,000 people in them, of municipal buildings with a thousand rooms, of 800 churches, 600 newspapers and magazines, 4,000 policemen, of a single church with 30 millionaires in it, of a church paying its pastor $12,000, and of a preacher paying $6,000 house rent.

Government.

The majesty of the law is evident. We never saw a drunken man, heard swearing or angry contention and brawling on the streets—not even in the foreign section of East Side through which we passed a hot night when a large per cent of the population was on the streets. The policemen are a fine looking body of men, seem well informed, and are courteous and accurate in their information. The beneficence of the government is manifested in its great municipal buildings and public works, sanitary measures, free lodging houses for the unfortunate, public work for unemployed, free hospitals and dispensaries, asylums, etc.

Religion and Philanthropy.

The city has about 800 churches. Some single denominations have approximately 100 churches with seating capacity of 100,000. There are hundreds or more asylums, benevolent homes, and institutions of charities and corrections, to say nothing of rescue and other missions, social settlement work, summer seashore and mountain resorts for poor children etc. Private philanthropy here is on the same grand scale with other things. We cite one illustration. A wealthy man has given his millions to build hotels at which the poor can find good accommodation at cost—30 cts. a night. These are of brick and stone, some of them thirteen stories high, with about 1000 rooms, fireproof, concrete floors throughout. They have free baths, reading and writing rooms, and library, all finished in polished marble. Perhaps nowhere on the continent can be found greater philanthropies and more fervent and strenuous Christian work than in colossal commercial New York City. N. G. Newman.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.
Antioch.

Our meeting began at Antioch on the fourth Sunday in August. We had no ministerial help, except one brother Siler living near the church. He does some local work, and was with us part of the time and did good work. I think he is a good man.

Miss Lacy Elkins, a most excellent Christian girl, led the song services. She acquitted herself well at the organ, with hand and voice.

We had a splendid meeting, a gracious revival, resulting in about ten or twelve professions, eight of whom joined the church and were baptized on Friday, the last day of the meeting.

We held our quarterly meeting on Friday afternoon, at which the church was reported as being in a much better spiritual condition than it had been for some time. Everybody seemed to be at peace with God and man. So may they ever remain. The good people of Antioch are looking forward to painting and repairing their house of worship some time in the near future. They have a good Sunday school now, with Bro. O. M. Dorsett as their superintendent.

My churches are on the upgrade, and are looking up for still better things to come to pass. "Committ thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass."

T. B. Dawson.

Greensboro, N. C.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

The writer was called the first of last week to Randall's Crossing to assist the pastor, Rev. H. W. Elder, in a few days' protracted meeting. This was our second visit to this church, having been there three years ago. Conditions have greatly changed in this community during that time. The church has sustained several great losses by removals, presumably half of its memehrship. Notwithstanding this fact, there is still a faithful few who stand loyally by the church and Sunday school. While there were no additions, we had a most helpful, fruitful meeting.

The revival which had been in progress at North Highlands for two weeks, came to a close the past Sabbath. The pastor, Rev. B. F. Young, did the preaching. His sermons were enjoyed by those who were privileged to attend. The meetings were characterized by a deep spiritual concern on the part of believers. Three members were baptized Sunday afternoon.

Protracted services began at the Girard church the fourth Sunday in August, and are still in progress. Pastor Milam has been assisted the past week by Rev. G. D. Hunt, of Wadley, Ala., whose sermons are always full of fervent truth. Bro. Hunt could not remain throughout this week and Rev. O. C. Dobbs, pastor first Baptist Church, Phoenix, Ala., will do the preaching until the close of the meeting. Congregations are good, a deep interest is in evidence, and a most wholesome revival is being held.

The people of this church contemplate the erection of a new building some time in the near future. The building now occupied is by no means adequate to the needs of the congregation. Of this the church is fully aware. Consequently, according to information received through their pastor, the proposition has already been launched and a nice sum pledged on the building. Now that has the right ring, and here is hoping that Girard may, at no distant day, be worshipping in a new and commodious edifice. This is doubtless the church's greatest need just at this time. Let the good work begin and let it begin now! Let the brotherhood at large be ready to respond with a liberal contribution when the call is made. This is a most worthy point. It needs a new church, and your contribution will greatly aid in the accomplishment of that which ought not longer to be delayed. As Bro. Milam and his good people assume this task, help them and in so doing you will aid the cause of Christ.

Raleigh.

We have had good congregations and excellent work all summer. The prospect for a larger congregation and greater interest was never better than at present. The outlook in all departments of our church work is good. We need greater loyalty and more religion in our church and membership. We have greater strength here than is realized by us and the public. The only difficulty I see in the way is that we do not get together as people of one denomination and name and all pull together for the kingdom. Our people here seem loyal to the name, Christian; I am frank to say that they are not loyal enough to the work of the church and our institutions. I suppose, too, that Raleigh is not an exception. For I hear this from all quarters and from men of many denominations. I suppose it will always be so more or less among all denominations every where. We will not stop to quarrel or complain. The field before us is great and we preachers will keep on trying whether we get loyal support or not. There are always in every congregation a faithful few who do the work and share the burdens of the church. A few of us will get to God and to heaven if we keep on toiling, enduring, praying.

A few members have been received since our last report. Others will join soon. The schools all open this week and next. We will have some good support from the colleges.

The Lord has greatly blessed me in my effort here. I am more hopeful than ever before of success.

The building fund is growing some. When we are assured of five thousand dollars the building operations will begin.

L. F. Johnson.

Winchester Letter.

The attendance at our church service and Sunday school was very good last Sunday.

The building is nearing completion. We shall hold our first service in the Sunday school rooms the 17th of September and we expect to be ready to dedicate next month.

We need the help and co-operation of our friends now. We have several bills to meet in the next few days. May we count on every reader of The Sun to help just a little?

Raleigh.

Last Sabbath was one of our best days since Easter. We had our annual roll call and Rally Day with good results. The outlook for our church was never more hopeful than it is at the present time. We look for a harvest of good things the coming fall and winter.

Auburn.

I serve the church at Auburn on second Sundays afternoon in each month. The church is in a prosperous condition. We have had splendid congregations all the year. Nine members have been added to the church since I took charge. Auburn has a bright outlook. I regret that I do not have time to do the necessary pastoral work in this field. A good preacher and pastor could work up a strong church at Auburn.

Six Forks.

I go to Six Forks every fourth Sunday afternoon. Here we have a substantial membership and large congregations. The church is conveniently located as its name signifies. Two of the country's high ways cross here and a public road, making the place entirely convenient for the public. The congregation has a beautiful and well-built church. The membership is growing. The church promises to be one of our largest country churches.

Oak Grove School House.

I have opened up a mission at Oak Grove School House just five miles north of Raleigh. This is an excellent farming and trucking section. We may have a Christian church at this point some time. I preach at this point every third Sunday afternoon with good results.

Chapel Hill.

Owing to the protracted meeting work, I have said nothing about the outlook at Chapel Hill lately, but will let the friends of the cause now know that it is moving smoothly on in a substantial way. We have not commenced the building yet. It was so late in the season before we were in a shape to commence, that we feared the winter might catch the house in an unsafe condition. So we thought it best to wait until next spring, and then commence and push the building to completion.

We want all those who made pledges to the work to send the amount to me, if convenient to do so, at Eastern N. C. Christian Conference which meets at Catawba Springs on Saturday, Nov. 4, and it will be placed at interest until it is needed. It will be much easier to pay in fall than in the spring.

The supreme need at Chapel Hill is a house of worship. If anyone who has not given has it in his heart to contribute something, he or she can do so by sending it to me at Morrisville, N. C. I am sure no one can give to build a church anywhere that will be worth more to the denomination than Chapel Hill. Let all help some in this grand work.

W. G. Clements.

Oak Level.

The revival meeting at Oak Level in Franklin County, N. C., was commenced the first Sunday in August, and continued six days. There were 10 converts and 8 accessions. There was good fellowship from start to finish. Bro. Wellons was with us from Saturday until Monday P. M. His talks and prayers were inspiring and much enjoyed. The great number of years of his life has left but few marks upon his well developed appearance. May God continue to bless him.

Rev. Mr. Hudson of the Baptist Church was with us from Monday noon until Friday P. M. He preached eight strong and convincing sermons. He is a good preacher, and has the courage of his convictions. May God continue to use him in doing good.

Dr. Staley was at home on vacation and preached on Sunday to the edification of all who heard. May God continue to bless him and his family.

I was at Oak Level again first Sunday in September, and baptized seven members who had been received at the revival. There has been in all nine accessions to the church this year.

Christian Light.

A meeting was commenced at this church the second Sunday in August. Bro. J. Lee Johnson was with us and did nearly all the preaching. He is an excellent preacher. The people enjoyed his preaching. His power is in his deep consecration and originality. He preaches because God wants him to do that work. There were six converts and six accessions to the church.

The remodeling of the house was not completed, but in condition so we held the meeting in it.

The brethren, sisters, and friends deserve great credit for the faithful work they have done.

W. G. Clements.

Johnson's Grove.

The meeting at Johnson's Grove was held the week following the first Sunday in September. The congregations were not so large at the beginning but kept increasing until the close of the meeting. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell aided me in the meeting and preached plain practical gospel sermons.

There were about 12 professions and six united with the church.

All that attended the services seemed to enjoy them and we feel that much good was done besides visible results. R. H. Peel.

Youngsville, N. C.

The protracted meeting at this place embraced the third Sunday in July and resulted in the conversion of several persons and reviving the church.

During this meeting a man who is about 50 years old and living near Youngsville came to Bro. Neil Rowland and others and stated that 17 years ago he passed the church in Youngsville on his way to a brandy still with a load of cider and as he passed by the church Bro. Rowland was preaching. He stopped and listened a few minutes, and then went on to the still a mile away, but could hear Bro. Rowland preaching. He says he could not suppress the thought that he was doing that which destroys men while the preacher was trying to save men. That conviction was so strong he gave up his still and was converted and united with the church. At that time Bro. Rowland was assisting Bro. Clements in a meeting. Few men can break up a brandy still a mile away, but Bro. Rowland has the voice and the power.

Pleasant Grove, N. C.

The meeting at this place began the first Sunday in Sept. and closed on Friday following. Between 60 and 70 converts and a gracious refreshing season. The congregations were large and attentive. I have not witnessed a more general awakening in many years. The people became deeply interested at the beginning and this continued until the close. Forty-five united with the church, and twenty-eight were baptized, the others will be at my next appointment, and several more will unite with the church. The ages of the converts ranged from 12 years to 70 years.

Rev. H. A. Albright, Rev. Mr. Melton of the M. E. Church, and Rev. Mr. Cade of the Baptist Church were in attendance a part of the time. Bro. Rowland was at his best. He is a consecrated and zealous preacher of the Gospel in its purity.

A PROPOSITION.

To the faithful sisterhood of our church; I give praise for much excellent service in all our fields of labor.

My suggestion is this: Let us as a denomination have a Woman's Christian Missionary Association. I feel that this would be strengthening to the mission cause of our church.

If any sister desires to take the work in hand, I will gladly assist her in every possible way; furnishing plans and suggesting ways and means for the organization.

My Dear Children:—

The well is dug! It is 61 feet in earth and 17½ in rock. We have a flow of water about 22 gallons to the minute. No one knows what this means to us but those who have seen and known the inconvenience of a dry well. If the work of boring wells continues in Elon, there will be no further cries of "no water" around our village for dry weather does not often affect these deep wells.

We report the first gift of $5.00 on this work from Bro. Stout. We hope others will feel it in their hearts to do likewise and this indebtedness will soon be cancelled. Also Brother Bridgers sends gift on extension of sewerage. We thank you, friends, and feel that these debts (which were so necessary to be made) will be met somehow.

Foster and Caviness, of Greensboro, sent the children a bunch of bananas this week which they heartily enjoyed. Fruit has been scarce this year (our little orchard yielding nothing) and so fruit of any description stands a poor chance of lying around spoiling if once our children get their hands on it.

Cotton and pea picking is the news of the day with us now. Yesterday eight little girls picked over 400 pounds. Can you beat that? I think they did well. Guess there were not many idle moments spent and I really believe from the way they did it that they thoroughly enjoyed the work.

We were delighted to have with us this week to spend the day, Mrs. J. P. Barrett, of Dayton, O. and Mrs. Willis Lee, of Driver, Va. These friends are interested in our work and it was a real pleasure to show them our Home.

Very cordially yours,

Uncle Jim.

Columbus, Ga.,

Sept. 7, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim,—

When Aunt Bettie Stephenson was on her way home from North Carolina last summer she stopped to see us, and mother and I went home with her and I had a big time. I learned to walk while there. One day I heard a calf bleat and I said "baa" and kept it up every time I heard or saw a cow.

Father came to grandma's a few days while we were there and just to keep busy he taught me to "crow."

I am back at home now and keep mother busy getting me out of mischief.

I send love and my dime.

Your nephew,

Dwight Hillis Lankford.

Well, Dwight, soon you will learn to take care of yourself and mother can rest a bit. Hurry to grow and get strong so you can wait on her.

Macon, N. C.,

Sept. 11, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim,—

Enclosed you will find one dollar and a quarter, our dues for the past five months.

Autumn will soon be upon us, and my! how little boys and girls will have to hustle.

Alas for the pleasant summer time! In every breath of wind and every beam of sunshine, we hear the whisperd farewell, and behold the parting of a dear friend.

Well, I hope we will all have a pleasant session.

Yours with much love,

Helen W. Scholz,

Herbert Scholz, Jr.,

Elizabeth Scholz,

Jessie Lee Scholz.

Glad to get your letter again, children. Our little folks are hustling with peas and cotton now.

Crete, Va.,

Sept. 11, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:—

I have just returned home again from a nice trip in the country, visiting my uncle and aunt. We went to a revival meeting at Johnson's Grove, mother's old home church. Mr. Stanley C. Harrell preached some fine sermons. We all liked him so much and oh, how we did enjoy riding behind the horses. I close with our dues for August and September.

Fondly, your little niece and nephew,

Thomas Clifford Foster.

Helen S. Foster,

I believe all boys and girls like to drive. Helen, did you learn to ride horseback while you were in the country?

Dear Cousins:—

I am a boy thirteen years old. I milk a cow named May Wingate, and she gives about a gallon of milk a day. I have been cutting corn and pulling fodder this week. We will soon be through and will start to school. Our well is done and I drank some of the water yesterday. 'Twas real good.

MARRIED.

Johnson-Williams.

Mr. John Pittanay Johnson and Miss Lizzie Maude Williams were united in marriage at the Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va., on Sept. 6, 1911.

After the ceremony they took the Washington steamer for Washington, where they will spend several days and then go to New York where they will make their home. Both these young people formerly lived in the Johnson's Grove community, but Mr. Johnson now has a good position in New York. May their lives be long, useful, and happy.

DIED.

Higgs.

Another little lamb was added to the good Shepherd's fold above when on August 20th death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Higgs and bore away little Reese Lynwood, who had cheered his parents' hearts two years, four months and fifteen days. Funeral services were conducted from Newport Church. May our gracious Father comfort the bereaved ones.

R. L. Williamson.

Craven.

Nancy E. Craven was buried August 11, 1911 at the old family cemetery near Pleasant Ridge Church in Randolph County. She was seventy-two years old, and had been a member of Pleasant Ridge Church for half a century. The life of a person is reviewed at the open grave, and the echo of the life from the hearts of the living is the best eulogy. There was a large number of people to look for the last time at Sister Craven—old men and women who had known her from childhood; others in the prime of life raised their children above the casket that they might retain her in memory, and a number of colored people were present who also mourned her departure. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Mahala Cox now in her ninety-second year, a number of relatives who rejoice that her life was of God. The funeral was by the writer.

T. E. White.

Fesmire.

John M. Fesmire was born May 4, 1843 and died August 18, 1911. He was buried at Shiloh, and the funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. H. P. Albright. A large congregation was present at his funeral and it was the opinion of all that he had passed into a better land. He lived a life of love and loyalty to his Master. His bed of affliction for several months was a benediction to all who visited him. When we buried him we were all impressed that it pays to give the whole life to God. He leaves a wife, four children, four sisters, two brothers, believing that their loved one is now in glory. He was a member of the Society of Friends, but was at home in any body of believers.

T. E. White.

Comer.

Sat., Aug. 26, 1911, our heavenly Father saw fit to call to her reward sister Mary Bell Comer. She had been a member of Christian Union, Randolph Co., and on her death bed said she was prepared to die. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Sister Comer was 22 years, 11 months, and two days old. She had one brother, Mr. T. Comer, who preceded her to the spirit world on Jan. 2, 1910; also an infant sister who welcomed her into the land of rest. She leaves to mourn their loss a father, Mr. W. C. Comer, a mother, Mrs. Pollie W. Comer, and four brothers: Rev. J. R. Comer, J. E. Comer, M. A. Comer, and P. L. Comer; also many friends. The burial was conducted by the writer and her remains were placed in the cemetery at Christian Union. May God bless the bereaved.

B. J. Earp.

Baker.

Mrs. Frances Caroline Baker, beloved wife of Mr. Henry M., at the age of 74 years and two months. She was the daughter of Wiley and Nancy Stallings. On May 18, 1859, she was married to Mr. Henry M. Baker. She leaves to mourn their loss, a devoted husband, one sister, Mrs. Burwell Duke, 4 children and 12 grandchildren. The names of the living children are as follows: Martha Frances Baker, Jesse Baker, Jack Baker and Mrs. Josephine Rountree. Sister Baker united with Bethlehem Church when a little child, and after Liberty Spring Church was organized she transferred her membership to that church, with her husband, where she was a faithful and consistent member until her death. She was afflicted for several months. A short while before her death she called her family around her, and told them she was willing to go, and she asked them to live so as to meet her in heaven. The funeral was conducted by the writer, and her body was laid to rest in the family cemetery to await the resurrection.

I. W. Johnson.

Heffington.

Annie Lucile Heffington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Heffington, departed this life at her home at Driver, Va., March 24, 1911, at the age of twelve years. Lucile was a bright child, and worked very hard in her school. She was ambitious and overworked her physical strength. She had a gentle disposition and was loved by her many friends. Her funeral was conducted by the writer at Berea church, and her body laid to rest in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va. Peace to her ashes.

I. W. Johnson.

Austin.

Inez Elizabeth Austin, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Austin, of Nansemond Co., was born Dec. 16, 1910, and died May 27, 1911. The funeral was conducted by the writer at Bethlehem church. May the Lord bless the bereaved family.

I. W. Johnson.

Underwood.

Harry Underwood, son of Josephus Underwood and Alice, his wife, died in Gates Co., N. C., June 11, 1911, at the age of 23 years. His death was due directly to a very malignant case of measles. He was ill only a few days, and his death was a very great shock to his family and friends. The funeral service was conducted at Oakland church, Nansemond Co., Va., by the writer, and his body was interred in the cemetery near the church. Peace to his ashes.

I. W. Johnson.

Byrd.

Mr. Elvy Byrd, son of Moses and Elizabeth Byrd, was born in Nansemond Co., Va., June 3, 1823 and died June 14th, 1911 at the age of 88 years and 11 days. He was first married in 1851, to Miss Mildred Byrd.

Unto them was born one child. His first wife only lived about two years after marriage. In 1854 he married Miss Mary Porter. Unto them were born seven children, six sons, and one daughter. Three sons and one daughter survive him. They are: Josephus, Yadley Cornelius, Iva Telemachus, and Mrs. Gulielma Austin. There are also 16 grandchildren: 7 boys and 9 girls.

Bro. Byrd was a man of high moral character. He made a profession of faith in Jesus Christ several years before his death and was inclined towards the Friends' Church. He was a man of high ideals in his relations with his fellow man. He was loved and respected for his honesty, integrity and strong manhood. He was a good neighbor, and had many friends. He left a good example for others to follow, and his children rise up to call him blessed; and they are living worthy of such a noble father. Funeral conducted by the writer.

I. W. Johnson.

Fenimore.

Friday afternoon, Sept. 1, a gloom was cast over the entire community by the sudden and distressing death of brother J. H. Fenimore, caused by a fall from the roof of a house which fractured his skull and broke his neck. The sad news was soon conveyed to his faithful wife and only son, and rapidly spread over the entire city. While a terrible shock to his numerous friends, in and outside of the church, it was distressingly so with his family and only son. The funeral took place from East End Christian Church the following Sunday afternoon, attended by the largest number we have ever seen here at a funeral service. The service was conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Groseclose of the Disciples Church, Rev. Mr. Riddick of the Baptist Church, and Rev. J. T. Taylor of the M. E. Church. The floral tributes were of beautiful design, such as The Gate Ajar, Harp, Pillow, Cross, Autumn Wreath, Sheaf of Wheat, and one each was contributed by the following orders: Fleetwood Tribe of Red Men; Odd Fellows; Daughters of Pocohontas, which he organized; Odd Fellows encampment; besides the East End Christian Church; Ladies' Aid Society; Men's Bible Class; the Disciples Church Choir; and R. L. Baker and wife. On Monday morning the remains were carried to the family burying place at Central Hill Baptist Church in Isle of Wight County for interment, accompanied by friends and the orders of Odd Fellows and Red Men who conducted the last sad rites. Bro. Fenimore was born at Westfield, Medina County, Ohio, Dec. 24, 1848. He was first married to Miss Sadie Clappes Dec. 4, 1872, to whom was born one son, Edward W. Fenimore, now living in Newport News, Va. His first wife died Oct. 27, 1877 at Franklin Forks, Susquehanna Co., Pa. He was married again Oct. 29, 1892 to Miss Addie Hart of Isle of Wight Co., Va., who with one little girl, Ethel, survive him.

He had lived at Newport News, Va., for the past eleven years. Prior to his coming to this city he gave himself, for about seven years, exclusively to the teaching of vocal music classes in various sections of country, and in work with pastors in revivals. No other line of work seemed to appeal to him so much as that. No part of a church service appealed to him so much as the music. He has left quite a large collection of music manuscript of his own composition, which he intended at some time to have printed and put into book form. This music may yet, if given to the world, call sinners to repentance, comfort the sorrowing, and discouraged, and bless the world in which he lived and wrought. Our brother was a man of many parts and was useful in that he could fill many places. He was frequently elevated to various offices in his lodges, and in his church. He was a charter member of the East End Christian Church, and several times represented his church in the Annual Conference. He held the offices of deacon, organist, chorister, Men's Bible Class teacher, president Bible class, and often led prayer meetings. He organized the Men's Bible Class of his church in which he took great interest. We have seldom if ever seen a more splendid tribute paid to a friend and brother than was paid at his funeral. Bro. Fenimore was also a very industrious man, and very determined in his purposes.

We extend to the entire family our sincere and profound sympathy in their deep sorrow. Death is but a crossing of the harbor, and to the saint a "Sweeping through the gates" and the beginning of life, where deathless tongues sing new songs and enter upon an eternal reward. The stammering tongue has new powers and liberties, and all the music of the soul finds expression. The Sunday previous to his death on Friday Brother Fenimore was at church in charge of the Men's Bible Class, as its president, and acted as organist for the church choir. For several weeks past he had seemed much brighter and happier at church, and in full accord with every department of work. There is no sea without a shore and no night without a morning.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Services at the eleven o'clock hour on Sunday were conducted by Dr. J. U. Newman, who, though suffering intensely of the tooth ache, yet delivered an excellent discourse.

Many of our people attended the obsequies of Miss Jennie Thomas Herndon in Durham Sunday. Rev. J O Atkinson pronounced the funeral eulogy. Uncle Wellons assisted in the funeral services. Prof W P Lawrence was a pall-bearer. Misses Pitt, Barnes and Clements, and Messrs. Campbell and Barnes, rendered some fitting and excellent music. The writer was floral bearer. She is the first Alumna of the College to decease. Her many friends will deeply mourn her taking off Christian Endeavor was conducted Sunday evening by Prof. Amiek. It was a good meeting.

Mrs. J Pressley Barrett left here on last Thursday to visit friends in Raleigh and then in Eastern Virginia. Her visit was very much enjoyed here. The prayer-meeting for the local church which she conducted on the evening before leaving was a great delight to all in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Reps Williamson, Great Bridge, Va., left for points in Eastern Carolina on Friday. They will reach home the last of this week. Their old friends here were glad to see them.

Prof. T. C. Amiek has been chosen teacher of the Citizen's Bible Class, the organized class of the Sunday-school, and will make the class an excellent teacher.

The Elon College Weekly on Saturday made its initial bow for this year. The stockholders of the Weekly Company meet tonight and will take definite steps looking to its further usefulness as a medium of communication between the College and the outside world.

A basket ball court for young ladies is to be fitted up at no distant date, so the rumor goes. The young men are planning for shower baths in the East Dormitory annex. Here is hoping that both these rumors will take practical form.

The Faculty decided on Friday night last to close the Power House down at eleven o'clock p. m., hereafter, in the interest both of economy and of the health of the student body.

The Christian Sun and the College conjointly have installed a writer-press for their office work.

The enrollment at this writing is 215. There are some others yet to come; will our friends not keep up their strenuous effort to bring in the doubtful ones? We are doing all we can from this end, but the friend on the ground, he is the deciding influence in nearly every doubtful case. Every word spoken for Elon will be appreciated and will bear fruit, if not in increased numbers, certainly in increased enthusiasm for the college on the part of the one who speaks it. W. A. H.

RESOLUTIONS OF ESTEEM.

Burlington Christian Church.

Whereas, at a meeting of the Burlington Christian Church held on the 7th day of August, 1911, for the purpose of considering the resignation of Dr. P. H. Fleming, our beloved pastor, and for the transaction of such other business as might claim our attention. To the great sorrow of our entire membership we heard the resignation paper of our faithful leader read, and listened with bowed heads to the remarks he made moving him to take this course.

Brother Fleming has been with us nearly sixteen years. Love and harmony has at all times prevailed between pastor and people. Not a word of bitterness has ever fallen from his lips in all these years. He is, and has ever been, preeminently a deeply spiritual and pious man, a faithful servant of God, administering to each one the bread of life and helping us all on our journey onward and upward. He and his entire family will leave Burlington with the prayers, the love and the best wishes, not only of the members of this church and of the Christian Church throughout the State, but of every good citizen of every denomination or creed who ever came in touch with him.

It was with great reluctance that the Church here would even enter upon the consideration of his resignation, and not until it was made known by Dr. Fleming himself, that this was his request and that no one would be regarded as voting against him, but for him, could any one be induced to frame and offer the necessary motion to accept his resignation.

The resignation was accepted amidst feelings of deep emotion and great solemnity. The undersigned committee was then appointed to draft resolutions, suitable for the occasion, one copy to be given to Brother Fleming to take with him to his new home among our brethren in the North, and one copy be spread upon the minutes of our Church Record.

Therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That the Burlington Christian Church especially, and the entire City of Burlington, as well as the best citizenship of Alamance County and the State at large regret the departure of Dr. P. H. Fleming from our midst.

2. That for nearly sixteen years in season and out of season Dr. P. H. Fleming has gone in and out before our people here, teaching and living the beautiful lessons of love, of peace and of good will to all men; and by his walk and conversation has proven himself not only a good faithful leader of his flock, but an humble and fearless follower of our Lord and Master.

3. That we believe that good seeds sown by him here have taken root, and we know our church has greatly prospered under his wise and faithful ministry. His deep spiritual life, his piety, his zeal, and withal his devotion to duty both as pastor and preacher in his Master's cause, has been seen, felt and experienced by all who have come in touch with him.

4. That while a greater and larger field has opened up to our good pastor, we with sorrow have consented for him to make the change, yet we realize it is our Master's call, and with one accord offer up the prayer, "Thy will be done."

5. That while Dr. Fleming will not be with us in person, he is not altogether gone. His teachings, his life and his inspiration will still linger behind him; so we will cherish his memory and his good works here and will accompany him with our prayers and most fervent benedictions to his new home wherever he may be. And we trust that for many years the good seeds sown by him, both here and there, may grow and bring forth abundant harvest.

6. That the prayers of this Church will accompany him and his family wherever Providence may call them, and we will look forward with pleasure to a happy meeting again, and in our meeting in the great hereafter, may it be such that no separation will ever again occur—in that beautiful land of the soul that our blessed Saviour has gone to prepare for us all.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Mr. Rufus Carson Cox, principal of Liberty, N. C., High School, an Elon graduate, class '03, was married to Miss Mary Eleanora Coble, Wednesday, Sept. 6th, 1911, at Greensboro. Wherefore, though belated, our heartiest congratulations and best wishes are conveyed.

—Rev. J. O. Cox is meeting with encouraging success in his faithful labor with our Durham church. He has received into church fellowship 44 members the present conference year, and is hopeful of the half hundred mark within the year. Of this number 25 are among the substantial citizens of Durham and are capable of rendering valuable aid in church work. Besides paying current expenses, about $700.00 has been raised and paid on the church debt during the year.

—We are in receipt of the following: Mrs. M. J. Seymore announces the marriage of her daughter, Florence Nightingale, to Rev. Richmond Perry Crumpler, Wednesday, Sept. 13th, 1911, Cascade, Va. At home after Sept. 13th, Summerfield, N. C.

Since his graduation from Elon College two years ago, Bro. Crumpler has been a successful teacher as principal of a High School in Rockingham County. We congratulate him on achieving new victories and successes.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler, who closed a meeting at Kinston, N. C. last week, sang for our congregation at Wake Chapel last Sunday, to the delight of a large audience, and are this week engaged in a meeting at Henderson, N. C.

—We are asking several of our busy pastors to redeem the pledge of their Conferences, as touching the circulation of The Christian Sun this year, and to speak publicly of the paper between now and conference to see if the number of families in the church not taking their church paper cannot, in a measure, at least, be reduced. And the ministers, of course, are responding in a most kindly and brotherly manner. The faithful pastor understands that his local church can prosper permanently only as the enterprises of his church prosper, and especially his church paper, which is ever the pastor's help and strong arm. We are grateful for the cheering responses and the ready assistance promised thus far. It is a work worth while.

NEWS ITEMS.

—The Evening Chronicle, Charlotte, estimates that there are 2,000 automobiles in North Carolina, of which Charlotte alone has 300.

—President Taft is making a six week's tour of the country, speaking to the people. He made his first political speech of the tour at Detroit, Mich., Sept. 18 on the "Trusts."

—Peter Stolypin, the Premier of Russia who was shot down by an assassin in the Russian Imperial theatre a few nights since, is said to be fatally injured and his death is expected daily.

—The Southern Railway is endeavoring to build up the live stock industry in the South and to this end is inaugurating a movement to organize live stock associations in every county along its lines in Ga., Ala., Miss., S. C., N. C., Va., Tenn., and Ky. Mr. F. L. Word, Atlanta, Ga., is the Live Stock Agent for the road.

—The September Crop Reporter gives the Government returns for a yield of 46,969,000 tons of hay this year as compared with 60,978,000 tons last year and an annual average the past five years of 63,507,000 tons. The condition of the cotton crop

Aug. 25 is 73.2 normal as compared with 89.1 on July 25, this year.

—Both Rogers and Ward, aviators who are trying to fly from New York to the Pacific for a $50,000 prize, have had their machines disabled before making much of the intended journey. Aviators have mishaps and many meet death, but they keep trying—and if pluck counts they will yet win.

—The plea in the papers and elsewhere for a "Same Fourth" amounted to much, the returns now being well in. There were only 38 deaths outright, and 1,217 injuries, from fire works and such this year, whereas on the 4th of July 1910 there were 44 deaths and 2,485 injuries. It is rather a gruesome fact that many more lives have been lost already in celebrating the Day of Independence than were lost in all the seven years struggle to gain independence.
