OUR YEARS

Our years whether few or many have gone into the unchangeable past. What has been said and done is recorded in the annals of time. One by one they have passed from us and we look for close of the old year with as much interest as ever in the past. If, in looking over the calendar of the years, time has run to waste and many regrets look boldly at the searcher of records; let them not discourage you. Although many blots on its pages may be seen, and many deeds written there may blush the face with shame, let them not discourage you from trying again to do right and to make more and better use of the returning years.

The number of our years. There is a limit to them; a few pass over the limit, many, very many never reach it. To feel that they must be numbered either in a long or short term ought to impress every one with the great importance of rightly appreciating and improving them. Many act as though they had to stay here all the time, giving but little, if any, attention to preparing themselves for a future state. Count back and look forward, and see how rapidly they come and go. Many who journeyed with you last year are not with you at the close of this. Their vacant chair will be used by others, while you remember them tenderly and speak of them pleasantly. Gone to that mysterious, silent abode where nothing awakens or disturbs their quiet rest and peaceful slumber.

At the passing of the old year many joyous ones will be seen, and their glad hearts will make others happy. Friends and relatives visiting each other, strangers meeting and new acquaintances formed; visiting the old home after an absence, and making new homes and friends will be the glad privilege of many.

All over the world so many glad hearts to-night beating with young life. Glad, because they expect a good time at Christmas. Giving and receiving presents will be a part of their joy. And it will be a very considerate and a most commendable thing to do. To look over this great, busy world and watch them, by imagination, so actively engaged in this work will be an interesting thing to contemplate. Every one will be at his best, and everything will put on its best looks so as to be attractive. In selecting these presents do not forget the sick ones, the old ones, or the poor ones. While you are glad, help to make them happy.

We spend our years. How are they spent? Let everyone ask himself this question, and see how he is spending them. Great, inviting fields are before you which need to be cultivated. Will you enter them and work while you have the opportunity? You have made mistakes in the past, correct them by doing better service.

This year has been one of peace, pleasure plenty, and prosperity, with so many bright days, with so many blessings and great privileges, that our glad hearts swell with gratitude to God, and our delighted minds run up the shining way to love and praise Him. And now the work for 1910 will soon be done, and many precious, happy thoughts will fondly linger in the old year.

The pen which writes these lines, and which has written others in these columns during the past year, hesitates to say the parting word, but it must say a long and last good bye to it.

THE ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

I would like to add a word of praise for the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society in our churches, what it means to the Young Man, Woman, Boy or Girl who is trying to do service for the Master.

First: The Society, well organized, by a few of the most faithful and devoted workers, means that these workers are being trained for better service, and, that the attractiveness of the work itself, together with the pleasure and real joy derived therefrom, will win those of the young people who are in the indifferent class and help make of them, in many cases, very devout, zealous workers. Along with these two classes comes the third; those that are not members of any church, but, by association, are made to feel at home in the Endeavor meetings, and thus, in many cases, by wise committee work, are safely brought over to the glory side of life and often become most consecrated workers. Thus the Society organized with even a small membership, say twenty-five, may, by prayerful and zealous "Endeavorers," grow to be a Society with a large and enthusiastic membership.

Second: The Member. While one is becoming associated with the Society and is endeavoring to give to God and the church his best and reasonable service, one receives for oneself the greatest benefits of one's efforts. In the course of training, the Endeavorer grows from that weak, fearful, and trembling disposition that most people are possessed with, and becomes strong in speech and spirit, having the consciousness of knowing that he is giving his best talent and labor to the Lord, and having consecrated his life to Him, he receives by far the greatest benefits from his labors.

Then, the Society has a three fold influence. It helps to create first a person whose life is thrilled with great joy. Second a person whose ability, willingness and energy makes it possible for the church work to be most effectively executed, third a person fully consecrated to God, one doing those things which one knows God would have one do to extend his Kingdom here and win others to Him.

This three fold influence ought to be sufficient to inspire every pastor to put forth efforts to organize in his churches Endeavor Societies and give the young people an opportunity to develop themselves. We cannot estimate the value of a man or woman in the religious world who has made the best of their surroundings and consecrated their work to God, having, perhaps, made their first attempt in an experience meeting back in the little chapel or at a cottage meeting, and thus today are preachers and teachers of note and worth.

Co-workers, if you have no Society in your church start one today, if only a few members organize. Great good can come from a small beginning. If you do not know where to start, or what to do, write to Brother Harper at Elon College or to The Endeavor World, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass. You can get all the help you want and all the printed matter you need.

WALKING BY SIGHT.

Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image.—Ex. 20: 4.

The sin of idol worship is the limitation it puts upon the mind and heart of man. Nothing that you can see is large enough for you to worship. Now this is said despite the fact that sight is the most intelligent sense. Grasp all that you can get of knowledge, wisdom, intelligence, understanding; you have then grasped nothing large, great and good enough for you to worship. That which you worship must be beyond all limitations of sight, sense, and comprehension. Could you grasp God by power of sight or knowledge, He would no longer be God, but simply a god. He must be beyond me to ever beckon and invite and pull me upward and onward. There must be room for that which is beyond sight, namely, faith. Sight must be lost in faith and faith must reach to God.

Jereboam certainly reasoned right in saying that if the people still went up to worship in Rehoboam's country they would remain loyal to Rehoboam, and forsake Jeroboam. Where a people worship there will their heart be. If they worship at Jerusalem they will certainly love and be loyal to Jerusalem. But Jeroboam reasoned wrong in thinking that the people must see the thing they worship as well as the place in which they worship. People will not grow strong and mighty who see what they worship, who walk by sight and not by faith, who want ocular demonstrations of the object of their devotion. Worship carries further than works; devotion carries higher than things seen, tasted, felt, known.

People worship idols in this Christian land; give their highest and heartiest devotion to that which can be seen, touched, tasted, with natural sensibilities. The more is the pity. Your soul and mine, if we consult them deeply, long for that which is holy—an ideal which the eye cannot comprehend, the hand can't grasp.

To put limitations upon this ideal, to cramp and to crush it, means to destroy the manhood and the womanhood of us. Jeroboam made a nation of pygmies and weaklings where he should have had a nation of giants and heroes. He struck at the very heart of their greatness and glory, namely, their religion. All true religion consists in giving a person a high ideal, the right sort of an ideal, the ideal of holiness, wholesomeness, heavenliness. If our minds and hearts would feed daily on high and holy, good, true and beautiful things, we would ourselves live lives of more goodness, beauty and happiness.

I could wish that all Sun readers might choose the better part during this year of grace, 1911. That is, to think the higher and better thoughts, to see much of the beauty and goodness God has placed about us, and, because we are God's children, add much to the beauty and goodness of the world we live in. It may sometimes cost a dime, a dollar, some personal sacrifice or inconvenience to choose the better part, but all the same, it is ever worth the while.

To rise to any place of prestige, privilege or power costs. Now think wither God has exalted us. Ye are the temple of God, and the temple is holy. God did that. He dwells within us to develop there our strength, our faculties, our talents, all our powers to the very highest degree of efficiency—to enlarge us that we may see the beauty about us, grasp the goodness that surrounds us, rejoice in the gladness that beams and bursts from a thousand sources of nature.

This is choosing the better part: Thinking those higher thoughts, doing those better deeds, indulging those fond hopes and aspirations that qualify us for companionship with the Son of God. That is why God has so honored and exalted us, by making our inner lives His dwelling place, that we may share the joy, solace, comfort of companionship with His dear Son. Companionship with the Son of God! That is honor and exaltation. And that is our privilege. When we dare to do our most unselfish deed, and think our highest and holiest thoughts, then is the joy and exaltation of companionship with the Son of God.

I found this the other day of one of the sweetest singers that ever graced the stage or thrilled an audience:

"After Jenny Lind had left the stage for no apparent reason, a friend who went to see her found her sitting by the sea, with an open Bible upon her knees, looking out on the sunset glory. During the conversation the friend said, 'Madame Goldschmidt, how is it that you ever came to abandon the stage at the very height of your success, when money and affluence were pouring upon you?' Laying one hand upon the Bible, and pointing with the other to the sunset, she quietly said, 'When my success was making me every day think less of this dear Book, and nothing at all of the sunset's glories, what else could I do?'"

Jenny Lind had chosen the better part. That success, wealth, glory, achievement, comes dear at any price which makes us think little of the Book, and blinds us to the sunset's glories and the beauty of the God-filled universe. Neither labor, nor pursuits, nor poverty, nor wealth should blind us, nor obscure from our vision, the goodness that God has strown about us, nor the glories that He has showered upon us.

In this year of grace why not choose the better part? Why not look up instead of down, forward instead of backwards, to the good and not to the bad, to the pure and not to the impure, to the agreeable and not to the disagreeable, and then give hand and heart and mind to make those about happy instead of unhappy, cheerful instead of sad, hopeful instead of despondent, and seek to carry them and ourselves and all that we are and have heavenward and not hellward. Choose the better part. Fill the world with songs, not with sighs, with cheerfulness and not with clouds, with smiles and not with tears.

There is nothing that helps to this more than a good, helpful, wholesome book now and then. In good books we find the best and noblest thoughts and sentiments. Men and women only put their best, purest and highest thoughts in books. They do not dare trust to the printed page the untrue, the impure, the unholy. A good book is to the mind like a good bath and clean clothes are to the body; It sets new energies going, and gives a healthful, happy glow to all the currents and channels of thought. One is known by the company one keeps. Well, our books are our mind-company, our heart and soul-company. No wonder some minds growl and grovel all the year. They have no companionship, no association, no food in fact, save the daily gossip of the community, and the commonplace affairs of meat and bread and work and worry. God made every mind for a nobler purpose than to shrivel and shroud itself every day with and in the pinching, poor and paltry things of time and sense, of greed and gluttony and gossip. God made a man's head high and at the top of him that he might, at a glance and without effort look at the horizon and the rising sun and the solid firmament and the starry heavens; He did not hang man's head low and his face earthward and his eyes downward as He did the beasts of the field. "Consider the lilies of the field." That is it. We shall choose the better part in this year of 1911 and Consider. Like the lilies, we shall look up; like the lilies we shall keep pure; like the lilies we shall lean on the everlasting Arm day by day and drink draughts of refreshing glory from the showers of God's love and God's goodness.

CALLED HOME.

Thomas Rice Gaskins, of Nansemond County, Va., was called home quite suddenly Friday morning December 23, 1910. He was prepared to go. He had been feeling for some time that his invitation would not be delayed much longer, and so he had wrought diligently to have all things in readiness for his departure. As he wished it, there was little warning, and less anxious waiting. On Wednesday he was about his affairs. Wednesday night he was not well and his physician came. Thursday he was pronounced better. Friday morning he paid off his men, having already sent his Christmas gifts and greetings to his sons and daughter, and then the Messenger came. His body rested in the arms of his wife who alone was present in the home with him at the hour of his going. Before others could be called he had gone home.

I don't think I have known a better man in all my acquaintance, than Capt. Thomas Gaskins. And the notion possesses me that hundreds of Sun readers who may see that line will join me in that sentiment. Truly his kind and character are all too few in this world, and his going away is counted and considered a distinct, personal loss by every individual who shared his acquaintance. To be one of those rich, rare characters whose taking away falls as a personal loss to hundreds of individuals in community and church, not by virtue of possessions, but by sheer force of goodly and wholesome influence, that is worth while in this world, and in the next. Capt. Gaskins was such a character. He was not a man of the public. He shrank from all publicity and notoriety. But the public loved and trusted him and his fame went abroad. Why? Because of fidelity to church, to truth, to righteousness, to religion. He was preeminently a religious man. His religion was his indulgence, his pleasure, his pastime, his passion. The one supreme joy of his life was religious service. For I know not how many years he had attended regularly the annual session of the Eastern Virginia Conference, arriving at the opening, remaining till the close. Like wise the Sunday-school Convention. Also the biennial session of the Southern Convention. These gatherings of the church-clans for discussing and carrying on the Lord's work were seasons of especial enjoyment and delight to him. Our Conferences and Conventions will certainly miss the dear and familiar face of Capt. Gaskins.

For twenty-five years or more he had served as Superintendent of Berea (Nansemond) Sunday school, and Deacon in the church. During the revivals in his church it is doubtful if the minister in charge had more influence in bringing the unsaved to seek their Savior than did Bro. Gaskins by his quiet, personal work and individual solicitation. The saved and the unsaved had faith in him, and his influence was silent but irresistible. To enumerate the virtues, or to tell of the worth, of such a life were a task impossible. His life will speak for itself in terms more potent than any pen can portray. God bless the name and memory of my own good friend and brother in Christian service, Thomas R. Gaskins.

Two sons and a daughter survive him, Mr. Charles Gaskins of Philadelphia, Mr. Walter Gaskins of Norfolk, Virginia, and Mrs. W. S. Long of Chapel Hill, N. C.; also a widow, heart-broken and bereaved, dear, good and noble "Aunt Gaskins," whom a hundred hearts love fondly and sympathize with most deeply and sincerely.

The pastor, Rev. I. W. Johnson, assisted by the writer, conducted the funeral from the home on Christmas day of 1910, and a great company gathered to pay fond and loving tribute to one who had been their friend and who had led each to think higher thoughts and live holier lives. Banks of fresh and fragrant flowers covered his mound in the family burial ground, not far away, and silent hearts wove garlands of sweetest recollections to place about the name and life of this good man for the years and years that are yet to be. The earth is poorer, heaven richer, for his going. God rest his noble soul.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Last Tuesday night at a meeting of the Cosmopolitan Literary Club Dr. W. C. Wicker read an exhaustive paper on the Hebrew names of Deity which revealed a familiarity with the Hebrew Scriptures and presented an interesting study of Jewish customs and ideas.

The Christian Church at this place in regular business session last Wednesday evening elected two new deacons and transacted other important business for the ensuing year. Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., the pastor, and his family are spending the holidays visiting Capt. W. J. Lee and friends near Norfolk, Va.

Prof. John Mac Walker of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., returning to his home in this county, stopped off at the College to visit his sister, Mrs. W. A. Harper.

The new bank building of the Elon Banking Co.—a handsome brick structure—is nearly completed and will be ready for occupancy by January 1. This institution has been a great advantage to our town and has done a fine business during this the first year of its history.

The fall term of the college has been the best in point of attendance, conduct, and work of the students that we have ever had and the prospects for the spring term are bright for a largely increased patronage. The students are now at home, enjoying the holidays and a much needed rest, after a strenuous session of hard work. Frequent calls for catalogues and information would indicate that the spring term will be the largest in attendance during the history of the institution.

The members of the faculty are visiting relatives and friends at various places. Pres. E. L. Moffitt, LL. D., and family are at Asheboro, N. C., Prof. W. A. Harper, M. A., and wife are at Norfolk, Va., Prof. T. C. Amick, Ph. D., and wife are at Liberty, N. C., Prof. N. F. Brannock, M. A., is at Mebane, N. C., Prof. A. L. Lincoln, A. B., Lacey Springs, Va., Prof. W. C. Wicker, Litt. D., is at Greensboro, N. C., and the lady teachers are visiting friends and relatives at different places. We wish for them all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

An east-bound freight train was wrecked between here and Gibsonville yesterday about 1 p. m. Four cars were derailed but no one was hurt. The track was not cleared until last night about eight o'clock. There have been four wrecks near this place within two years. The cause is unknown. The track, to all appearance, was in fine condition, having recently been repaired on account of a previous wreck.

Rev. J. D. Wicker and wife, of Sanford, N. C., and Miss Vallie Dowdy of Durham, N. C., relatives of Prof. W. C. Wicker, are visiting him during the Christmas holidays.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence, M. A., of the Chair of English and Rev. J. U. Newman, D. D., of the Chair of Biblical Literature and Greek are spending their holidays, entertaining visiting friends of the College. The other members of the Faculty are having a good time with friends at home.

The fall term of the college was the best in the history of the institution and the heavy correspondence and the applications for rooms indicate a largely increased patronage after the holidays. The term opens Jan. 3rd for the matriculation of the new students.

Mr. Bunn Hearne, our athletic coach, has given the students excellent practice and developed fine talent and ability among the students for greater interest in athletics for the spring term. X.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Oak Level.

I have been to all the churches of my charge since Conference.

This is my first year as pastor at Oak Level. The appointments are on the first Sundays and Saturdays before. The first Sunday in December, the weather was so inclement, the congregation was not large. But warm hearts gave me a very kind welcome, I expect to be very much pleased with the people of this church and community.

Christian Light.

This is a small church numerically and financially. But the membership and community show high esteem for their pastor. An effort is being made to remodel the house of worship, which I think will be completed soon.

Chapel Hill.

This church will not be a year old until next May. We have no house in which to worship, but the prospects are bright for one in the near future.

If all the churches will rally to the building fund like Wake Chapel did last Sunday, the money with which to build will soon be in hand; $143.00 in good pledges in a few minutes, and $21.00 paid cash, and more to follow. This is only the earnest money.

New Hope.

I was at this church the fourth Sunday and Saturday in November. This is a new pastoral charge with me. I was received with all the kindness any one could desire. I am expecting good work at this church.

I ask the brethren and sisters to pray that the Lord may turn the hearts of the people to ways of rightness.

W. G. Clements.

Garner, N. C.

Dear Brother Editor:

I am pastor of the following churches this year: Berea (Alamance), Damascus (Orange), Catawba Spring (Wake), Hayes Chapel at Garner. My home is at the latter place and my correspondence should be directed to Garner, N. C.

From my experience of the first month's work I am filled with hope for a good year's work. All the churches have given indications that the incoming year shall receive the devoted attention to all the enterprises of the Lord's cause. I am receiving many congratulations from old friends to whom I ministered in former years. This brings joy to my life. I am refreshed in spirit when I am so hospitably received and encouraged. We enjoyed a very pleasant Christmas service at Hayes Chapel on Christmas day. We are having a mid-week prayer-meeting with a number of the good sisters of other churches co-operating with us in the good work.

The people about Catawba Spring are perfectly delighted with the thought of Conference coming next November. We will have our church in fine condition by that time. The brethren and sisters do nothing by halves at Catawba Spring. I have never served a more congenial people. I am receiving tokens of high esteem at Catawba that cheer my heart.

A. P. Barbee.

South Norfolk, Va.

I desire to write a few lines of the work at South Norfolk. Although I have been requested again and again to write concerning the work here I have refrained from doing so lest I might appear to be over enthusiastic or that I overestimated the work here.

I had the privilege of preaching my first anniversary sermon Sunday a. m., Dec. 18, 1910. Thus one year has passed since I came to South Norfolk, to become pastor.

When I came I found a people who had loved their former pastor, Rev. J. O. Cox, and all the people in the community spoke in the highest terms of our dear brother. The work was new, the people strange, and I a stranger to them. Wisdom seemed to command, "Say little, do much."

I came from a people with flames of enthusiasm in their bones, whose meetings were run at high pressure.

I found a people conservative and extremely quiet, with different customs and habits; yet a good and loyal people, for a people who will speak well of their former pastor, I feel I can trust. We went to work together, and bearing with each others' peculiarities we have learned to love each other.

The work was hard, but we toiled on, saying little of our success and nothing of our failures.

Prayer by pastor and people was heard in heaven, and answered on earth. God blessed each of us as we toiled. God blessed the preacher and his message and blessed the people as they received the message.

Some souls were born anew, and many believers were led into a deeper spiritual life.

Twenty have united with the church many of them being heads of families. heads of families.

God laid it on our hearts to repair and improve the church building. After extensive improvements we reopened the church on Sunday, Nov. 27, 1910, with appropriate exercises. We now have as neat a house of worship as there is in the town. The cost of said repairs and improvements was $500.00.

We began a series of meetings Sunday, Nov. 27, and continued two weeks. The following pastors preached during the services: Revs. McD. Howsare, A. M. Hanson, J. W. Harrell, M. L. Bryant, J. W. Barrett. These meetings were a benediction and a number professed conversion, and a number renewed their covenant.

In all my ministry I never met or served a more loyal class of people. They are thoroughly devoted to their church, pastor, and his family. Though many tokens of love and respect had been given during the year, on Thursday, Dec. 22, 1910, the members and friends came to the parsonage loaded with good and substantial things, and filled our pantry with abundance, among which were a fine large turkey and a great fruit cake. After many thanks and a pleasant evening together, we joined in prayer for God's blessing upon people and pastor.

The congregation then left for their homes, seemingly delighted that they had the privilege of making pastor and wife happy.

This church is destined to become one of the strong churches of our beloved denomination.

We had with us Sunday a. m., Dec. 25, Prof. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, who taught the Sunday-school lesson to the adult Bible class and also addressed the Sunday-school in an inspiring talk. (We would have been pleased to have him preach for us, but he declined.)

We organize this week a Jr. C. E. Society and next week a Sr. C. E. Society. During the year we have organized a Philathea Class, also an adult Bible class, and Brother Cox organized a Baraca class. So we are getting well organized. We have entered upon a new Conference year with the Lord's blessings upon us. We are looking for great things, spiritual and temporal, this year of grace, 1911.

Daniel A. Keys, Pastor.

Norfolk Letter.

Christmas has come and gone. The new year is here. I might philosophize some and make some little "preachments," draw some conclusions etc., etc., but I suspect that more that has been done than will be read and heeded, more resolutions made than will be kept, so I will not branch out on that line.

The Sunday-schools in this section have all had their Sunday-school entertainments, and so far as I have heard, they have all been quite successful.

Bro. A. H. Nichols and wife were received into the Third church membership Sunday. They come by letter from the Lamberth Point church—we are glad to have them come to us.

Bro. Howsare reports one of the best congregations at Rosemont he has had in a year. He took in one new member.

The Third church Sunday-school elected officers on Sunday, 25th, for the ensuing year—all of the old officers were re-elected. The Tidewater Sunday-school Association postponed its regular meeting a week—and met with the Memorial Temple school. New officers were elected for the year. Prof. S. M. Smith was made president, Mr. J. O. Wiggs, superintendent of the Main St. School, vice president; Mr. John J. Pitt, Superintendent of Memorial Temple school, secretary and treasurer. Deacon T. A. Twiddy who has been reported in these letters as being severely ill, and who has been in the hospital for some weeks, underwent an operation several days ago. He was found to be suffering from an abscess on one of his kidneys. It is the hope of his friends that he may soon be well again.

Rev. Thos. W. Stroud who was here for treatment has escaped for the present, an operation, and has returned home much improved.

I regret to report Mrs. Harrell, the faithful and efficient wife of Pastor Harrell, of Portsmouth, as being critically ill.

DUTY.

Some Christians do not like the word "duty," because it has a hard and cold sound. D. L. Moody used to object to the use of this term in reference to religious life. He did not like to hear people talk about the duty of prayer or reading in the Bible or worship. He insisted that we should do these and all other things that ought to be done from the noble impulse of love. Love is a warmer, sweeter word than duty.

But duty and love are inseparable. Duty is a debt, and doing duty is paying one's debts. Love is a debt, the one all comprehending duty. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself. On these two hang all the law and the prophets." "Love is the fulfilling of the law."

We are all indebted to God. He is the Author of all our mercies. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to ward me?" and Jesus answers, "Render unto God the things that are God's." Render unto Him thanksgiving and praise and honor and worship. All these are due and more. We owe Him ourselves. We are His. We shall never fulfill this precept until we have rendered and surrendered ourselves unto Him.

My gracious Lord, I own Thy right

To every service I can pay.

And call it my supreme delight

To hear Thy dictates and obey.

We are indebted to our country. For protection, for civil liberty, for educational advantages, for opportunity to make an honest living, where none dares to molest or make us afraid, and for all the tremendous sacrifices these inestimable treasures have cost, we are indebted to our country. No one can escape from the loyal and patriotic service of his country in war and peace without running away from plain duty.

We are indebted to the Church. What would become of our homes if the churches were removed? What sort of a country would this be without the churches? Whether church members or not, we are indebted to the Church, and the debt is so great we can never fully pay it. We owe the Church loyal support. By our presence in the house of God in time of worship, by our sympathy and by our money we must support the Church as a matter of duty. Few people consider the support of the Church a duty. When they give money into the treasury of the Church they do not regard it as the payment of a debt, but a sort of gratuity. They feel at perfect liberty to give or not give, to go or not go, to talk the Church up or down, according to their mood, without incurring any guilt. But they are wrong.

We are indebted to our parents. "Honor thy father and thy mother." We are indebted to our neighbors. Whether they have done anything for us or not, we are greatly indebted to them. There is a debt of love as well as justice. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." "We love him because he first loved us." This is said of God. But it is not said of our neighbor "We love him because he first loved us." We are not commanded to love him and help him because he has done so much for us. He may have done nothing for us. He may have done much against us. He may hate us and persecute us. He may be our enemy. Still we are indebted to him. "Love your enemies," said Jesus. Jesus loved those who did nothing for Him but persecute Him and put Him to death.

There is nothing in life which is not under the law of duty. We cannot set off a small section of life and say, "My duties are all here, and for the rest, there is no obligation." In business life, in social life, in political life, in all of life we must acknowledge our duty, find it and perform it.

We may be perplexed to know what is our duty at times. But God will not leave us to walk in darkness. Not that we may expect a distinct message from heaven for each particular step which will save us the trouble of searching the Scriptures and making use of our own judgment. But one who commits the keeping of his soul and life fully to God, and diligently searches the Scriptures to find the right way, will not be suffered to walk in darkness. "Thou shalt hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it." Let any man who earnestly desires to know his duty and do it, turn aside from men for a season and be alone with God, and his doubts will be scattered and the way made plain before his face.

Walk in the light and thou shalt own

Thy darkness passed away,

Because that light hath on Thee shone

In which is perfect day.

 * OUR YOUNG PEOPLE. *

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

 WHICH WAY IS IT IN YOUR SCHOOL?

We have written so much about variety in the opening and closing exercises of the Sunday-school and in the teaching of the Sunday-school lesson and in the conducting of prayer-meetings and other religious services that some of our brethren accuse us of being a crank on that subject. Some have even said that this is a hobby of the editor and his peculiar doctrine.

We subjoin below a quotation from a book by Brown on Boys' Eye Views of Sunday-school, published by the Sunday-school Times Co., which suggests that the editor has at least a little company. In the future we may see fit to quote from several other books along the same line.

"We had election of officers in our school the other Sunday for the new year. Of course they elected the same old Superintendent again, for they all think there isn't any body else will have it. I bet some of them would if they ever got a chance.

"I don't think much of our superintendent. He may be allright for a Sunday-school, but he sure never would do in a football game. Why, he would always do the very same thing with the ball that he did last time, and before he got started the whole of the other team would be on top of him. I tell you, you've got to have some life to play football. You can't have just any old walking corpse on your team.

"I heard our superintendent say once that he was born the same year that gold was discovered in California. If he was it looks like he would have caught the fever and would discover something new for the opening exercises of our school.

"But it's always the same old thing. There isn't a hoy in our class but could get up and run the school just the way he does, from "We will open our school this morning by the use of hymn number 69," to "The teachers will now take their classes." We don't have to listen, for we always know just what is coming next.

"He don't even have to tell us how to read the lesson, for he seems to think there isn't but one way it can be read. "Read the lesson," means for him to read one verse and we read the next, and so on; you know how.

"I've been to this school more than a year now, and he's never read it any other er way yet. Bunys Brown wanted to bet his watch against my bird-dog pup that he wouldn't read the lesson any other way before summer vacation. But I don't bet, at least not when it's a dead sure thing I lose.

"Our class knows who would make a good superintendent, and he would take it, too, because we asked him one day. But they never give us a chance to say nothing on election Sunday. If it wasn't for our teacher and Brother Parker, a lot of the boys in our class say they'd quit and go to the Baptist.

"I'm mighty glad Conference let him come back this year, for I'd hate to have our class run down like the Bible class was before Brother Parker came. There was only three members and two of them didn't come very regular.

"I expect I would be the one in our class that would have to come every Sunday anyhow, because my father's the class leader and mother teaches the young ladies' class, and I just know they wouldn't never let me stay at home or go to any other school.

"I het if our class broke up they'd even put me in that old class of girls, and I'd have to sit along-side of Mayme Whitney and hear the silly things talk about parties and dresses and such stuff.

"The Baptist school has got a fine superintendent. He looks like he was just a young fellow, but he's editor of the paper and secretary of the school board and sends the telegrams to the Wichita papers when anybody gets killed or there is a cyclone or anything else interesting.

"Jim Purdy goes to that Sunday-school and tells us all about it at recess. Jim don't care nothing for Sunday-school. He says he just goes for the fun of it, to see what in the thunder they will do next. (That isn't swearing.) He says their superintendent believes in running their Sunday-school the way he runs his paper, and that if he didn't get something new in his paper once in a while nobody would take it.

"Jim says you never know how they are going to start that school. Sometimes they sing three songs right along, or they may read the lesson first. Sometimes they begin with three or four prayers, and once in a while the superintendent will tell a story-first of all, that somehow show how things just like the lesson are happening now.

"And after they got started you never know what is coming next. Perhaps it's a song or a prayer, or maybe Bible verses or a review of the last lesson, or just anything. Jim says it's like a three-ring circus, you have to watch every minute or you miss something.

"My father says he thinks they carry it too far making the Sunday-school like a circus, but Jim didn't mean like a real circus, but just that it's interesting.

"Jim Purdy's father is engineer on the Flyer, and sometimes Jim goes with him on the engine. Jim says maybe he will take me with him some day. He says it will nearly take my breath away, but he says nothing slow for him, and I say so too.

"Over at the Baptist they read the lesson a different way nearly every Sunday. Sometimes one person will read it all, and all the rest of them will just sit and listen. Sometimes the whole school reads it together. But Jim says the best is when they divide it up like a dialogue, all the boys read what the men in the lesson say, all the girls read what the women in the lesson say, and the superintendent reads what comes in between. He says you can get some sense out of it then.

"I wish our old superintendent was a Baptist."

Sat., Jan. 14.—The martyr-heart, Gen. 22: 1-14.

Sun., Jan. 15.—Topic—Lessons from Great Lives: I. Abraham. Gen. 22: 1-18. (This series was selected by leading ministers and laymen on the way to the St. Paul Convention).

C.E. TOPIC FOR JANUARY 8—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Blessed—to Bless—Gen. 12: 1-2; Ps. 107: 1-3.

(An Evangelistic Meeting).

The Scripture.—Have two readers and two commentators, one each for each of the two passages.

Scripture Verses.—Let the leader in connection with the prayer-meeting committee select twenty-five fine passages, using Concordance, showing what the Bible teaches in regard to blessing, on what conditions received and how maintained. Ask that those who get verses memorize them and add a word of comment when they give voluntarily.

Questions for Voluntary Answer:

What is it "to be blessed?"

What is it "to bless?"

How are these interdependent?

Whom should we bless?

How can thoughtfulness of others be cultivated?

How may selfishness be overcome?

What blessing do I most desire? (To several).

What blessing do I wish most for others? (To several).

How are the meek blessed?

The pure in heart?

The merciful?

They that hunger after righteousness?

Those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake?

Why does Christ call his followers the salt of the earth?

Why does He call them light of the world?

C. E. TOPIC FOR JANUARY 15- A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lessons from Abraham's Life, Gen. 22: 1-18.

The Scripture.—Appoint five readers as follows: one to read the narrative portions, another the words of the Lord, another the words of the angel of the Lord, the fourth Abraham's words, the fifth Isaac's words. Let them practice reading those wonderful passages dramatically and render it with feeling. The effect must be electrifying.

The Leader.—The leader will show that Isaac was as much sacrificed to God as if Abraham had spilled his blood upon the altar. It is the spirit that makes the sacrifice acceptable. Show that we are called upon to offer ourselves a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. The leader may see fit in brief fashion to indicate how we may make this holy sacrifice also a whole one.

Questions for Voluntary Answer:

Show that Abraham had a right to be called "the man of faith."

What lesson do we get from Abraham leaving his home?

What from his falsehood?

What from his separation from Lot?

What from his covenant with God?

What from his sacrifice of Isaac?

What from his prosperity?

What from his adversity?

Why did Abraham have his name changed?

How do faith and works go together in Abraham's life?

What does James say about faith and works?

What are works in the Bible sense?

Review of Abraham's Life:

Have 14 endeavorers of the verse-reader's class to tell in a minute each what the chapter of Genesis dealing with that matter says about

1. Abraham leaving Haran.

2. His Falsehood.

3. Choice of Hebron.

4. Rescue of Lot.

5. God's promise to him.

6. Abraham's covenant with God.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. J. D. Gunter, Sanford, N. C. writes "I am highly pleased with the Life of Rev. James O. Kelly by McClemmy."

—Bro. S. M. Holt, Pittsboro, N. C. writes "I am much pleased with McClemmy's Life of Rev. James O'Kelly, and wish a copy could be placed in every family as far as the Christian church extends."

—Wake Chapel may always be counted upon to do its duty towards all church enterprises. When Rev. W. G. Clements made an appeal there recently for funds to help in building a church at Chapel Hill the response was $143.00. If other churches of the Eastern Conference follow that good lead our Chapel Hill congregation will soon have a house of worship such as the cause there deserves.

—It is inspiring to read in the Sun letters like that which Pastor Keys of our South Norfolk church gives this week. It carries with it the impress of service, sincerity, success, and The Sun's editor rejoices in reading and in publishing such letters from "Among the churches."

—Rev. Z. A. Poster, Lewisburg, Pa. writes "The Life of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly was received and has been read with interest and profit. The work contains much valuable information of the heroic movements which led to the organization of the Christian church. I would think that every one who is interested in the progress of freedom in religious denominations would take pleasure in reading this valuable work."

—We regret to learn of the death of J. J. Gray, which event occurred at the Lee home, Bennetts Creek, Va., on the night of January 2nd. Mr. Gray was chief of the weather bureau in Norfolk and had resided in the country for some time, being in declining health. He was the very soul of cordiality and good fellowship, a most intelligent and worthy man and was held in very high esteem not only as an employe of the government, but by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. We sympathize deeply with his heart broken wife who was, before marriage, Miss Dollner Lee, and who scarcely left his bedside during all the weeks of his confinement and illness, and who ministered most tenderly and lovingly to his every want and need.

A fond and devoted mother also survives him who in old age takes the shock most severely, this being her only son. We understand the funeral is to take place today from the home, conducted by Revs. I. W. Johnson and N. G. Newman, and the interment is to be in the family burial ground near by. Mr. Gray expressed himself as willing to go, and not afraid of death, but grieved most that he must leave her who had been so loyal and loving to him during these months of affliction. Thus the dearest and fondest earthly ties are severed, but hope gives promise and prospect that heaven is the happier and holier because of the reunions there and the privilege of rejoining our loved ones there to be separated and severed from them no more forever.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

THE NEED OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES AMONG THE WOMEN OF THE SOUTH.

At the last session of the Southern Christian Convention a committee consisting of one lady from each conference was appointed to formulate some plan for the organization of the women into a society for the study of the great missionary fields of the world. So far it seems that little has been done to carry this resolution into effect. It is not understood that the women are the only ones interested in this study but it is possible for them to organize and do things in addition to what is already being done by our churches.

The need in our churches is a larger acquaintance with missionary facts, and such acquaintance can only be had by seeking definite and specific information along these lines.

A group of women may organize and lay out a course of study for the year and at its close have a fair idea of existing conditions in any one or two of our missionary fields.

I desire to enumerate a few things in favor of such an organization. It gives our women an opportunity for literary culture. Every aggressive woman aspires to some improvement intellectually. Women's clubs for the study of great artists, musicians and writers seek to obtain help from such source, intellectually. No woman can write a paper and get up and read it before her society without its helping her along literary lines.

It gives great opportunity for social intercourse. By having the society meet at the homes of the various members, it gives our women an opportunity to "entertain" without resorting to card parties and pink teas. Many a lady has been invited to a missionary meeting as a guest and has been led to an abiding interest in missions and into church fellowship.

It deepens the spiritual life. No group of women can get together and study long the spread of the Master's kingdom in the world without a very vital effect upon each one spiritually. Time and again it has been said that the missionary meetings are the most spiritual meetings of the church.

Certainly whatever helps intellectually, socially, and spiritually, ought not to be overlooked.

Nor is the above all. It results in larger and more intelligent giving to missions. The informed person will involuntarily give to the spread of Christ's kingdom. Whoever catches the true vision of missions will labor and give until the last inhabitant of earth has heard the sweet story of the cross. Not until then can his soul rest satisfied.

LIFE OF REV. JAMES O'KELLY.

I have read with much pleasure the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly written by W. E. McClenny. It does credit to the author, and adds to the world's literature a valuable volume. As I read it I was forcibly reminded of what St. Paul says about Abel, "He being dead yet speaketh."

For long years the mortal part of O'Kelly has been sleeping in Chatham Co., in about a mile of the local church of his name. During these years his influence has been speaking on the side of right to a small part of the world. But McClenny has given him the printed page that will cause him to speak to thousands yet unborn, who will take up the watchword of religious freedom, sounding it out from nation to nation until the whole earth shall learn thereof.

No minister in the Christian Church should be ordained until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination on this book.

This book should be in the library of every family of the Christian Church. In fact, everybody who loves interesting biography will be delighted in reading it.

As might be expected there are some minor mistakes in the book, which will be eliminated in a second edition. On page 15 in third line from the bottom, James M. should be placed before Moring. James M. Moring was a brother of Alfred Moring, and was several years Alfred's senior, and therefore knew much more about O'Kelly than Alfred did. I have heard James M. Moring, my own father-in-law, say many times that O'Kelly had long white hair and beard when he used to hear him preach. Also in the same line "J. J. Jinks," should be J. J. Jenkins.

Let everybody read the book.

W. G. Clements.

FRIENDLY GREETINGS.

By the kindly consent of our generous editor, I take this means of speaking a few words to my friends of the Sun family.

As many already know, I am back in the "Old North State" again. This time I am teaching the public school at Morrisville, a village on the Southern Ry. about halfway between Durham and Raleigh. I have a pleasant work among a hospitable people. I am pleased to find it a lime water section and judging from my fine appetite you would think that it agrees with me. I have not lost a day from my work, so far, on account of illness and have gained two pounds each month, since I have been here, in weight, so altogether I feel that I have grounds for hope of receiving permanent benefit to my health by the change of climate.

I have seen several of my friends of college days since coming back to North Carolina. I hope to see many more before I leave it. I have not had the opportunity of visiting the college and my friends there as I hope to do. I am boarding within a few steps of the station and always appreciate seeing any of my friends, who are passing through, at the station; if you will just let me know by a postal card when you are on the train. Would be so glad to have any of you stop over with me anytime if it is convenient for you to do so.

To my Georgia and Alabama friends I will say that although separated by hundreds of miles, thought and memory know: not space, neither of time nor distance and not one of you have I forgotten. I have spent a very quiet, pleasant Christmas. Home-sick of course, at first, but having overcome that malady I have spent the time very happily in the society of friends here by association, and of distant ones by correspondence, but happiest of all in the contemplation of the great gift of the Christ Child and what His coming has meant to the world. Surely ours is a gracious, wonderful, loving God to allow His only Son, whom he loved as God alone can love, to come down to earth and suffer, as we know he did, during the three years of His ministry and then to endure the horrors of that awful passion week about which our Sunday-school lessons taught us last quarter. What if Jesus, the Son, had refused to come and thus complete the wonderful plan of salvation which he said was finished in his last utterance upon that cruel cross! As the cross and Christ's death upon it was the highest expression of divine wisdom, power and love; so is the most efficient service of which man is capable of rendering but the weakest expression of that gratitude and love which every human being should feel in his heart toward God.

My most earnest new year's wish for each of you, my friends, is that this blessed Christmas-tide may, with all its joys and blessings of peace and good will, have awakened in each of your hearts new courage and aspiration for the duties and responsibilities of another year and that you have received a new and deeper sense of appreciation of the mercies and love of your Heavenly Father as expressed in the numberless blessings of the year that is fast dying, and above all for the priceless gifts of the Christ Child.

With full assurance of my unshaken interest in every department of our Church work, and with kindest regards to each of my personal friends, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Bettie Stephenson.

Morrisville, N. C.

THE OUTSIDER.

Some are outside of the Church, outside of the Kingdom of God, out of Christ. The King of Glory is not only a good king, but perfect in His administration—wise, just, kind and merciful; nevertheless some of His people have rebelled against His authority, repudiated His claims, and set up a little government of their own and proclaimed themselves kings and lords.

We do not say that all those who are outsiders of the Church are out of Christ; nor can we say that everyone who is in the Church is in Christ. We must not judge. God is Judge, and everyone may judge himself. Let each one see to it that his judgment of himself shall not conflict with the judgment of God; for His judgment is just. Many declare that they are without. They know they do wrong, and do not try to do right. They are not ashamed of the evil they do. Others live on the border. They do not like the far country. Its atmosphere is not pleasing to them. Nor do they exactly like the kingdom. They try to keep out of both. Jesus said to a certain scribe, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of heaven."

Paul tells us to "walk in wisdom toward those that are without." This not the only reason why the Christians should walk in wisdom, but it is one powerful reason. He must never lose sight of them that are without. They are watching him, and they have claims on him. Much depends on the attitude of the Church and of the individual Christian toward the outsider.

For one thing, Christian men and women may silence the scoffs of the outsider by walking in wisdom. Some of them are scoffers. They say many foolish things against the Church. They say they have no use for religion, because it does not make men better, because it is not a reality, but a fancy, or a cloak. They say there are no good people, but Christians merely masquerade as saints.

Paul says again, "By well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." The best answer to the skeptic and the scoffer is a holy life. There is no answer to that argument. Bishop Simpson once put to silence a profane scoffer by asking him about his mother. He admitted that she was a Christian, a consistent, godly, unselfish woman. He had no more vile things to say after that. Many a scoffer may be silenced by a reference to the life of his mother. Everyone knows that there are good men and women. Their scoffs choke them when their attention is called to this fact.

Christian men and women may win the outsider by walking in wisdom. We are told of a skeptic who lived for a season in the same house with Fenelon; and when he went away he declared that he could stay no longer, for the daily life of that holy man would compel him to become a Christian in spite of himself. Remember there is a religious nature in every breast. The skeptic, the scoffer, the wickedest man in the city has something in his breast which responds to the touch of godliness. When he sees a real Christian something in him says, "I might have been such a man if I had taken advantage of my opportunities. I am ashamed of myself. I was horn for something better. I am capable of something higher." Wicked men may hide this experience, but they feel it. There is something within that throbs for expression when a ray of holy light falls on them.

It is a great thing to live such a life that outsiders will secretly admire it and long to imitate it. They are compelled to say inwardly: "That is a beautiful life. That is a life worth living. I wish I understood the secret of that brave, strong, useful, happy, noble life. I would like to live like that."

"Walk in wisdom." There is more in walking than in talking. An upright life is a more powerful force than an eloquent sermon or the finest music. Conduct is more convincing than logic. The Bible has much to say about the Christian's walk. He should "walk in the light," "walk in the truth," "walk in love," "walk uprightly," "walk as He walked," "walk with God."

He should never lose sight of the relation a Christian should sustain to the spiritual world. Some tell us that if we would win the outsider we must lay aside everything that would suggest the other world. The outsider does not want to hear about the other world. Let the Christian come down to the level of the outsider and meet him on his own ground, take an interest in him, in his business, in his pleasures, in everything that belongs to him. Walk as a man of the world and banish the atmosphere of the other world.

Here is delicate and infinitely important situation. We must be on our guard, for one may easily err by going to extremes either way. It is right, it is well, to take an interest in the outsider, to come in touch with him, to sympathize with him in all his affairs. But this is not the touch that will save him. This is not the spirit that will help him. He will never be touched in his inner life by worldly conversations or a worldly spirit. Only the man who walks as a Christian, the man who bears about with him the odors of Eden, the man whose face and spirit show plainly that he has been in the mount with God, will help the outsider. This is the light that he needs. Those who walk as pilgrims and strangers, going home, will awaken the right kind of interest in the heart of the ungodly. If we are to do good to our neighbors in this wicked world we must make it clear that we are acquainted with God and another world. The thing they are thirsting after is not of this world.

One who walks with God, whose hold on God cannot be broken by the allurements of the world, will be charged with a spiritual force which outsiders will feel when they come into His presence. "Walk in wisdom toward them that are without."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

LEARNING TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Many a reader of the Bible confesses with some discouragement that, to him, the Book has not the interest and the helpfulness that others say they find in it. What can be done for such a one? A New Jersey reader is deeply concerned about herself, in this difficulty. She writes:

"There is so much said these days about Bible study. I have been told 'The Spirit uses the Word as his special instrument as a means of grace.' The Bible is God's Word. He must have a message for me individually. Again and again have I sought for that message, only to find the Bible a sealed book, the key to which I am unable to find. —'s Outline Studies were advised and the course taken, but they did not answer the purpose.

Can you, in your Notes on Open Letters, help me to a way of study? I want especially to learn and hear and know God's voice speaking to me, and the message he brings, so that I may grow more like him whom to know is love, that my will shall be his will, and my service more gladly rendered."

To learn how to study the Bible is one of the most costly things that any one can attempt. But it is within the reach of every one who will attempt it in entire readiness to pay the whole cost: and every one can do this who will.

The first price we must pay is nothing less than ourselves: the complete surrender of self and all that we have unto God's will. Many a Christian, who has honestly repented of sin and accepted Christ as Savior, nevertheless has not surrendered the entire life, body, mind, soul and spirit, every interest, desire, purpose, and aspiration, unto God in Christ, making Christ the Master of the whole present life as well as Savior for the life to come. But until this is done we cannot even know God's will for us in its completeness, nor can the Holy Spirit give us the full and satisfying message of God's Word.

Obedience to every known detail of God's will for us is another essential. Not sinless perfection is meant by this; but the honest, complete, and habitual purpose to do God's will in every thing so far as we know at present. A single conscious and habitual departure from God's will, in omission or commission, can seal up the springs of our spiritual life, block the Holy Spirit, and make our Bible study almost meaningless.

Prayer as an invariable preliminary to and accompaniment of our Bible study cannot safely be disregarded. The Bible is God's Word, and its real message is wholly beyond the mere intellect of man. He who supposes that he can understand it without the direct and superhuman aid and action of the Holy Spirit is effectively insuring himself against receiving the full message that God would give him from its pages. Let us recognize this; and let us recognize that prayer for the Holy Spirit's interpretation to us of what we are about to read in the Bible, whenever we turn to it, is not merely a helpful accompaniment of Bible study, but an absolute essential to the fulness of its blessings.

The principle of complete obedience to God's will as a life-habit comes directly and vitally into play as part of our Bible study. We must obey what we find in the Bible. This practice alone has made an utterly new thing of Bible study to some: to read in the Bible until coming to some sentence or suggestion that has a practical application to one's life; then to close the Book, ask God to enable us to obey him in that thing, and go and do it. The new messages of the Bible to us multiply as we obey those that we find there.

Habit and system are also vital to the Bible study that blesses the life. No normal day is complete without its time specially set apart for Bible study for personal nourishment. This cannot be done in five minutes; and it cannot be done with much blessing at a fag end of the day, or when our strength has been pretty well used up by other things. In other words, the "Morning Watch" plan, giving at least half an hour at the beginning of the day, preferably before breakfast, to Bible study and prayer, has proved by experience to be one of the most richly blessed of practises in the lives of thousands. The best that God can offer us—himself indirect communion through prayer and his Word—is surely entitled to the best part of our day and the best of our strength and attention. With most of us, that best is in the early morning.

Bible study on this basis is costly, is it not? But is there anything here that is beyond the reach of any one, or that one can safely call unnecessary? If we disregard any of these principles, and our Bible study is barren, why should we be surprised? Oh, let us realize what an infinitely priceless Book this is, what infinite pain, and cost, and power have gone into its making, both from God and from man; and then let us cease to wonder that its study should be costly and difficult, rather rejoicing in every demand that it makes upon us, and learning for ourselves how slight, after all, is the highest price we may pay in contrast with the inexhaustible riches that the Father will pour into our lives from the life-giving pages of his Word.—S. S. Times.

—It was the editor's privilege to visit Col. A. Savage, 121, Warren Crescent, Norfolk, Va., on Jan. 2, and talk with him for quite an hour. Wasted much in flesh and strength since we last saw him, and at present confined almost continuously to his bed, we found him interested, as always, in matters that pertain to church and religion. He is indeed a fine specimen of a Christian gentleman, one who has run the race of life so far most faithfully, and fought its battles most bravely. He awaits his summons patiently and faces the future, and eternity, most hopefully. He desires now that his friends pray that he may be spared as much bodily suffering as is God's will. He feels prepared to go at any time and realizes that the Friend whom has served these long years, and who has helped so often will not forsake him now. A brave and noble soldier of the Cross is Col. A. Savage.

The following fine letter came just as we were going to press with our Christmas issue Dec. 21, and though now belated for print it voices a sentiment too fragrant to be kept from going to the many:

"Dear Bro. Atkinson:—Four weeks ago Mrs. Hanson and I were well pleased to have her mother and father (he was 81) come from far away Iowa to spend the winter with us. The first week her father was well but the last three weeks he was confined to his bed. Saturday morning at 3:40 o'clock he passed away. As I wrote these words, the mother, and a son and a daughter who came here a week ago that they, too, might be with father in his illness, are homeward bound with the body. We did not go. The distance is so great and all we could do had been done in love, so we remain alone.

The friends, and the members of our Third Christian Church, have made our time of affliction an opportunity for expressing their love. No people could have done more than they. Both Mrs. Hanson and I, as well as the ones homeward bound, have every reason to appreciate their many kindnesses. There were flowers sent to the sick room, there were also flowers for the brief service which Bro. Me. D. Howsare conducted.

In the kindness of their hearts the people had planned a "pounding" and a pleasant evening for Christmas. On account of the sickness of Mr. Lutes they, while Mrs. Hanson and I were unaware of it, placed a fine quantity of flour, meat, canned goods, etc., in our kitchen.

We have been here but six months, yet I cannot state our appreciation of my church and people better than Mrs. Hanson put it the other day when she said, "It seems as tho I have always known them." God bless the noble little band of warm and loyal hearts at the Third Church.

Sincerely,

A. M. Hanson.

MARRIED.Newman-Lyman.

A quiet and beautiful marriage was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob S. Lyman, Petersburg, Va., on the 28th, inst., when their oldest daughter, Lura May became the bride of William Thomas Newman of Chuckatuck, Nansemond Co., Va. The spacious parlor had been beautified by a bank of large palms and other plants and a few near relatives and friends gathered when the wedding march was sounded by Miss Helen Snider and the maid of honor, Miss Ella Lyman, sister of the bride entered bearing pink carnations. Then came the groom on the arm of the best man, Thomas Ryland, and the bride on the arm of her father, entering from opposite directions, and before the writer plighted their mutual vows and were pronounced by him husband and wife, the bride was given away by her father and the ring ceremony used. The bridal presents were handsome and useful. Mr. and Mrs. Newman left at once for Washington City for a short visit, after which they will be at home at Chuckatuck, Nansemond Co., Va. May their united life be long and happy and fraught with continual blessings.

Strowd.

I was called to Damascus on 16th inst. by telegram to conduct the funeral service of our beloved brother, Wilson Strowd, who passed from labor to reward while engaged in surveying a plot of land near Damascus. He was taken sick at Brother W. L. Loyd's home and never revived. His body was carried to his church, Damascus, the funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. S. Long, of Chapel Hill, and was laid away in the cemetery to rest until the resurrection morn. The church sustains a grievous loss which will be felt by the pastor as well as by the relatives and friends. A loyal church man has fallen.

Rountree.

After several weeks of suffering, caused by bronchial pneumonia, little Mamie Catharine Rountree, the only daughter and youngest child of brother and sister J. F. Rountree of No. 1316-25th St., Newport News, Va., sweetly breathed out her earthly life Dec. 23rd, 1910. She was born June 13th, 1910. Her life was short yet she made a large place in the hearts of her parents, grandparents, and others, for herself.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 25th, while other homes were rejoicing in the spirit and sentiment of Christmas, we went into this home of sorrow with a large number of other friends and conducted a little service to the memory of dear sweet babe. The casket, containing the shadow of what was once a living child, was carried by four little girls as pall-bearers to the Greenlawn Cemetery while loving parents wept with aching hearts, and then turned back to face life's duties and to realize more fully if possible for a time their sorrow. But Christ will comfort them, and our Father will pour out of His grace upon them. A pastor's sympathy extended, and with many prayers.

The East End Christian Church, this city, has recently lost a very useful member in the death of brother Henry R. Powell. He was an humble, faithful, loyal member of our church here, and carried the confidence of a large circle of friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from East End Church Sunday November 20th, attended by a large circle of friends and the lodge of Jr. O. U. A. M. of which he was a member. John D. Langston son of Z. T. and Mary Virginia Langston died at his home, Holland, Va., Dec. 9, 1910 aged 37 years and 14 days. The deceased had been in poor health for a long while and for the past few months had rapidly declined. The skill of physicians, health resorts, and loving care and attention could not avert the dread disease. He was devoted to his family and loved life, but when hope was gone he quietly and patiently submitted to the inevitable and putting his trust in God passed peacefully away. He leaves a wife (Miss Nellie Jones) one daughter Aleph and a father, Z. T. Langston.

The funeral services were conducted at Eoliand church by the writer and the remains buried in the family cemetery by the side of his mother and brother. May a loving heavenly Father comfort and keep his dear sorrowing loved ones.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We are glad to report that good "Old Santa" came and left a nice supply of good things for play, to eat, and to wear, so that not a child was left out. The children blew their horns, cut with their knives, and played with their dolls till all had a busy, happy week. All our children were here till Thursday when some went to Trinity. Miss Dora our faithful and efficient housekeeper had not been idle and our Christmas dinners (for we had several) were simply delightful and plentiful till, as one little fellow said "he could chew more, but could not swallow." Another boy said (he was a big fellow) "he would ask blessing and eat again."

Uncle Wellons and Aunt Helen Winborne took dinner with us Sunday, and to please Miss Dora Uncle Wellons tried to eat some of everything we had.

We were glad to have Dr. G. S. Watson our physician, also a trustee, and Bro. A. B. Barnes, treasurer, take dinner with us Monday. Other friends and relatives of the children have called during the week.

The following children were received Dec. 23, 1910:

Nora Rogers, Myrtle Rogers, John Rogers, Alice Rogers and Rose Rogers. These increase our Orphanage family to 43—23 girls and 20 boys. This is the first time our girls have gotten ahead of our boys.

Master Edward Brickhouse Jr. Norfolk Va, 36 Christmas postal cards for the children.

T. E. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., 50 lbs. nice fresh candy to sweeten the children with.

We are so grateful for cash and kind sent in from so many sections that we just feel that thousands of good people love our Orphanage: We shall try more and more to merit their love and good wishes. We would like to make a personal write up of each gift but cannot for space. We thank each one personally for adding to our support and our Christmas happiness.

We are now writing all Sunday-schools in the Convention that are not making "monthly offerings," and asking them to do so in 1911. We hope all superintendents and schools will consider this appeal as we shall need much more regular income in the future than we have had in the past. Will your school help for 1911?

Yours for another year's work.

CONCERNING THE COLLEGE COMMUNITY.

The new bank building. Whiskey and the Christmas holidays. The survey for Southern Power Company's Transmission Line.

The painters are finishing the work on the new banking house of the Elon Banking and Trust Co. The furniture and fixtures, with the exception of the new steel safe which the Company has bought, has been placed in the building. This Company has, besides furnishing banking convenience to the community since beginning business Jan. 1 1910, made a success in the business itself. They have more than made expenses, a showing hardly expected by any of the directors, for the first year.

The college is short in housing accommodations for the unusually large number of young men here this year. During the Christmas holidays additional dormitory room has been provided by converting the dining room at East dormitory into rooms for young men, one room being reserved in this part of the building for shower baths. There are several young men applying for entrance at the beginning of the Winter term, Jan. 3, and these additional rooms will aid the college in accommodating them. All rooms to be had in private families have been taken.

The holidays have passed very quietly here. Whereas there was a good deal of drunkenness in the vicinity a few years ago, there being eight government distilleries within three miles of Elon when it was built twenty-one years ago and a like proportion of whiskey consumption, during the Christmas season, there is now instead of barrels of whiskey being shipped away from the railway station none, of course, going away, and comparatively few packages coming in by express, and a corresponding absence of drunkenness. The only intoxicated person reported to the town authorities as having been on the streets, during the holiday season, was one negro man, who said he had been raised on licker and was bound to have a little for Christmas. Thus a great transformation has come in the onward march of the temperance idea, and the surrounding community is fast becoming more prosperous. Farms are being improved and are becoming more profitable. Macadam roads are being built, other roads improved, and public schools supplemented by local taxation.

The survey for the transmission line of the Southern Power Company running from Greensboro to Durham passes just north of Elon, so that this Company can furnish power for our town industries and for lighting purposes should they be able to do so at less expense than the College plant can do.—Elon College Weekly.

IN UNEXPECTED WAYS.

It is a pleasing thought that one who desires that his life shall be a blessing to others, has opportunities come to him in unexpected ways. One may go to a certain place for a specific purpose, and, while on his way there, he may meet some one to whom he can speak a word which will make a helpful and lasting impression upon him. It is said of the late Charles H. Spurgeon, of London, that one day, while driving along a road with his horse and wagon, he stopped at a watering trough to let his horse drink. Just then a man, whom Mr. Spurgeon did not know, came along and halted a few moments. The great preacher spoke a few words about one's need of salvation, which led the man to become a Christian. In that unexpected way Mr. Spurgeon rendered a service, the value of which can never be estimated. A writer says: "A careful study of the New Testament will reveal the fact that some of the greatest things, said and done by our Lord and his apostles, belong to what may be called the byways of their ministry. 'And it came to pass that, as he went, behold,' and then follows the story of an interruption which becomes the occasion of a new display of mercy. While Paul 'waited' for his friends at Athens, his spirit was stirred, as he saw the city full of idols, and then came the memorable discourse on Mars Hill. These things were done on the way to something else. There is a fruitful field of suggestion here."

One suggested thing is, we need to be prepared to do good in unexpected ways and opportunities. We should be in readiness to say something or do something which will help another when we meet him or her in a casual manner. Possibly that one is feeling sad, and is longing for a cheering and stimulating word. Some low-spirited ones do not give open signs of their real state of mind. They may not appear to need any special expression of sympathy from others. It may be just the time for us to say a kindly and happy word. But how forgetful we often are about the opportunities which we might use for helping others along! How seldom do we speak to unsaved ones about the eternal welfare of their souls!

MEMORIAL CHRISTIAN TEMPLE, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, AND ITS PASTOR, REV. Mc D. HOWSARE.

(We take great pleasure in presenting herewith cuts of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia, and its beloved pastor, Rev. Mc D. Howsare. This is a church that does things, has always been noted for its zeal in good work and its achievement of results. It had its origin in a spirit of union and Christian fellowship, being built to memorialize the union of the Northern and Southern branches of our church, which had been severed by the Civil War. Itself a missionary enterprise, it has taken the lead in its liberal contribution to missions, and is known throughout our Convention for its loyalty and liberality. The present pastor is no less zealous in mission work, and in all good enterprises, than its former pastors have been, and has now one of the most thoroughly organized congregations in all our connection. In addition to his pastoral work Bro. Howsare will edit a Department of Missions in The Christian Sun during 1911, and in this way will speak every week to a large audience on a theme about which all of us need to be better informed.)

DOES IT PAY?

Memorial Christian Temple recently gave a Christmas cantata which required a vast amount of work. It was pronounced a great success by the public, but several times the query recurred to some of those who had the matter in hand, "Does it pay?" Lack of co-operation, the worry, the offenses that arise together with the time and energy consumed are items to be considered on the negative side of this question.

On the other hand there are many, and we believe a preponderance of arguments, in favor of observing these so called "red letter" days in our churches.

The observance of such days attracts the attention of many non church goers and they are led to go occasionally, at least, to the Sanctuary. In a measure it advertises the church and keeps its work before the people.

At such times as these there is an excellent opportunity to come in close contact with children enabling us to study their natures and teach lessons otherwise impossible. Discipline can be enforced and many a child taught that which will be of great value in after years. The drill the child gets in appearing on the platform and learning to express himself is of value. Many an adult would quake and tremble if required to stand in the presence of such a sea of faces as often witness our programs on such occasions.

Then we believe that the Gospel is many times preached to multitudes when they are ready to receive it whereas if the same truth were spoken by a preacher it would not be half so effective.

On such occasions there is also an opportunity for those who do the training to learn the lessons of patience and forbearance. To keep "sweet" and to "stick to it" until the thing is through requires the limit of some people's grace and grit.

Then there is an opportunity to emphasize certain truths and freshen them in our minds. We never pass through a Christmas entertainment without having the birth of our Lord singularly impressed upon our minds. Easter exercises lead us to deeper appreciation of the resurrection of Christ. Rally Day, Home Coming Day and all the other "red letter" days each stand for some definite truth which at such times receives due emphasis.

In view of these facts we believe we are justified in the observance of these days and that they are worth more to the church than they cost us. Mc D. Howsare, Pastor Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.

TO UNVEIL TABLET IN MEMORY OF REV. C. J. JONES, D. D.

March 17 will be the twenty-first anniversary of the organization of Memorial Christian Temple. The day will be fittingly observed and on that occasion a marble or granite tablet will be unveiled in memory of Rev. C. J. Jones D.D. The tablet will be about two by three feet and will be inserted in the wall in a conspicuous place near the pulpit. All members and friends of the church at the time of its organization now living will be accorded seats of honor on that occasion. Dr. Jones was one of the great pulpiteers of our people and we will delight to do him honor.

Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded. 2 Chron. 15: 7. (Golden text for Sunday Jan. 15.)

There never was a strong bad man. There never was a weak good man. That is spoken of things permanent. A bad man may seem strong, well instrengthened, impregnably fortified. But he is not strong, permanently. The ways of wickedness are as sure to come to confusion and to naught as night to follow day. God is in His universe, and He founded all His creation on a moral as well as on a physical basis. His line is gone out through all the earth. At the heart of things, at the very center, around about which things gravitate and circulate there is a moral principle. It is eternally impossible and unthinkable to go against that principle both in the government of things, business, and peoples, and come to ultimate and permanent success. There is, and indeed can be, no success without the realms of right.

Conversely, a good man may seem weak, and he may be weak, and what he does may seem to waste. But he is not weak, and what he doeth shall never waste. What the righteous man does shall abide, through the heavens fall.

Jereboam, son of Nebat servant of Solomon, was a big, brawny, brave, competent, courageous, cunning man. He took counsel with his heart and laid his plans deep, made them far-reaching, said in the name of all strength and valor that his cunning devices and deep laid schemes should carry, whether or no, and should abide. But Jerehoam wrought without reckoning, and his cunning carried him no whither. (If you wish to see one of the most awful indictments ever pronounced against any man by the most high God read 1 Kings 14: 7-17.) and to such end comes even the man in the wrong who trusts his own strength.

The lesson of today speaks of another and quite a different, man. Asa is not spoken of as shrewd, cunning, and courageous; but this is said of him, which is far better than all earthly cunning. "And they (Asa being their leader) entered into the covenant to seek Jehovah, the God of their fathers, with all their heart and with all their soul." As long as Asa put his trust in God he was strong, mighty, invincible; for which reason this was spoken to him by the prophet II Chron 16: 9. "For the eyes of Jehovah run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him."

Do not understand that the good are always the wise, and are hence infallible. This very man Asa acted foolishly, and to that extent, failed. But wherein he acted right, did God's will, and executed his plans in righteousness, to that extent Asa's work and name abide among the permanent things—among the things that never waste nor perish.

It is easy to read the lives of men who lived in olden times and whose deeds are recorded in the Bible. This is so because the Bible does not color or mine matters. It is a true record. It is a condensed statement. It brings the facts together so that, without coloring or without mending, they may be seen as they are.

The lives of men and women have been just as foolish, silly, short-sighted as these of Bible note; but we do not see them in their entirety, and without fear or faency, as we do from the Bible.

There never was a strong bad man. There never was a weak good man.

WHEREIN THE DENOMINATION SUFFERS.

If we mistake not this Christian church of ours suffers today. A spirit of apathy and indifference possess us. We are not aggressive any more. There is no slogan in our hands; no distinctive colors on our banner. We seem not to care any more. It is a sufficient rule of faith and practice amongst us to know how other denominations do—and then imitate them. If we keep our old churches and old congregations and hold our own in established places we are satisfied.

Brethren and friends of the churches called Christian, what are we doing today of a distinctive, achieving, aggressive nature? Wherein is our weight, and worth, and work telling and towering and triumphant? We are certainly not making ourselves famous in the foreign field. I believe that, among the denominations who give at all for foreign missions, we take rank with the most meager and miserly givers. And the number of our preachers and converts in foreign lands is not sufficient to make us famous, as a missionary people, to say the best.

In the work of home missions we are about holding our own. Now and then a church is added; but now and then a church drops out also. The North Carolina and Virginia Conference at its last session received a church; it also reported one church building sold during the year. We believe the same, practically, was true of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. If the Western North Carolina Conference has received but one church in the last two or three years we are not aware of it; and about an equal number has dropped out or been sold during the time.

Now, unless a church increases, grows, develops, makes itself felt along missionary lines, along what lines will it grow, make its might known in the world?

We are not winning any great numbers to Christ, that is, sufficiently to distinguish us among evangelical bodies. We are satisfied if we have a revival in a church once a year and gather in those of the community who have been trained and prepared in the Sunday-school.

The Bible is our creed. We profess to hold this and only this as a rule of faith and practice. Are we making ourselves felt in the world, in any marked measure as a people, because of this fact, or on this score? Christian character is a test of fellowship with us, are we making our fellowship any more sacred, dear, enviable on this account?

What are we flinging to the world today to challenge its envy, provoke its wrath, arouse its conscience or awaken its admiration? What do we, brethren, to show that we are a distinct and peculiar people with a mission in the world, a work to do, a program to pursue, a plan to execute?

Have we lost the life out of us that we lag and linger; that we are apathetic and indifferent?

Have we no program? Have we no peculiar mission? Have we no task?

Rev. H. W. Elder of Richland, Georgia, introduced a resolution before the Southern Convention at Suffolk last May to the effect that we increase our membership 25 per cent. in the next two years. What is our program for achieving that end?

In addition to this we can supply almost any reliable treatise on the Sunday-school work carried, such as Thirty Years at the Superintendent's Desk, by J. R. Pepper,

In short, whatever working tools the Sunday-school teacher or pupils need to help to greater usefulness and efficiency, we will be glad to furnish at, or below, the publisher's price. Send orders to The Christian Sun and we guarantee satisfaction.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A Sentiment.

Here is a splendid sentiment from Francis de Sales that is worth passing along at the beginning of the year: Do not look forward to the changes and chances of this life in fear; rather look to them with full hope that as they arise, God whose you are, will deliver you out of them. He has kept you hitherto—do you but hold fast to his hand, and he will lead you safely through all things."

Tragedies.

The killing of Moissant at New Orleans and Hoxsey at Los Angeles on December 31 rounded out a year of shocking mishaps and awful tragedies in the field of aviation. Idols one day and applauded by tens of thousands, prepared for burial the next, was the experience, and the fate of no less than thirty of these brave fellows in the year 1909. It was a sad year indeed for aviators. The trouble is that aviators, while they have learned the air and something of how to navigate it, they have not learned their own limitations and the restrictions imposed upon them. They have allowed themselves to be swept off their feet, so to speak, by enthusiasm. The applause of a million will not keep one in the air when the machinery gives out. We are creatures of the earth yet, and so must give heed to the material basis on which we operate and with which we have to do. In our minds and hearts we sail and soar. Success and the ambition for it lure us upward and onward. But if the machinery snaps, we are done for. This is why a strong and healthy body is necessary.

Public Manners.

The Sun took occasion recently to call attention to the fact that we people of the South had not learned the art of "lining up," and taking our turn at public places, ticket windows, in stores and elsewhere when many wanted service at the same time. Our words were to this effect: "We push and shove and crowd about ticket windows in a conglomerate, greedy mass. In the North, even at small stations, would-be purchasers line up and, though in haste, awaiting in respectful silence and patience their turn. In stores we try to get the attention of the clerk and crowd the customers out ahead of us."

The Charlotte Observer saw fit to quote our observations along this line, and later prints from a North Carolina young lady now in Boston what purposes to be a reply. My! it is peppery. The sister says, quoting from The Observer:

"In heaven's name what do you people mean by publishing such a thing in such a nice paper as The Charlotte Observer? My! Whoever wrote that article is certainly daffy on this question and I should like to tell him so. If he could come up to the city of Boston and get run over on the streets, knocked over trying to get a subway car, and then, when once he gains the interior, see every lady standing and all the men sitting, he would certainly change his opinion."

And more to the same effect. Well she told us allright, and despite her pepper we are of the same opinion still. We happened to go to Boston once, in fact twice, but by some chance were not run over on the streets, and so forth. We were not talking about how fast, nor how slow people in the North go, nor how disrespectful they were of the ladies—making them stand up on the street cars and such. We were speaking, and this is written to speak again, of our utter disregard in public places here in the South, of manners altogether. We have not learned to line up and take our turn. Not half of our railroad stations, and other public places, have a rail enclosure to make us line up, and they are frequently disregarded where we do have them. During the Christmas season this writer went hurriedly into a station to purchase a ticket. Thirty others had done likewise. Thirty-one sheep would not have been more disorderly. More than once a fresh comer jumped in where a purchaser had moved out, and those in waiting had the grim satisfaction of seeing a person who had not waited two minutes make his purchase before one who had waited in the shove and bustle fifteen minutes. Now a policeman in Boston, would have said to that new comer "Take your place in line," or, what is more likely, the ticket agent would have absolutely ignored the new comer's demands until everyone else had been waited upon.

(That men will not give their seats to women on the cars in the North is deplorable, almost as deplorable as the conduct of our women in the South who will occupy a whole seat, made for two, on railway cars or street cars, and let other women stand in the aisle. On almost the last train we were on last week we saw three ladies do that very thing, while three or four other ladies stood. But that is wholly another matter, the attitude of man to woman or woman to woman, has nothing to do with this question of lining up and taking your turn.)

On one occasion, when this writer was a student in Harvard, the tickets for a Harvard-Yale football game were to go on sale Monday at 10 a. m. Sunday previous at 2 p. m., Harvard students, and others, began to line up, keeping their positions allnight that they might be served in turn. Our opinion is that in a Southern institution instead of lining up and being served in order and by turn, about fifteen minutes before 10 a. m. pandemonium would have broken loose and bedlam have reigned supreme in the conglomerate, whirling, seething mass about the ticket window. In our homes, personally, man to man, Southern courtesy and comeliness, politeness and manners are worthy to be praised and emulated. But, as a writer said of ex-President Roosevelt lately, before a crowd and in a crush we lose our heads.

Near Beer to Go.—If the present Legislation wipes out the near-beer joints in this good State, it will have done one good and magnanimous deed at any rate. Sentiment everywhere seems to be against this abomination and it is well. They are a disgrace and a nuisance, hurtful to many, helpful to none. Bro. Wade H. Harris of the Charlotte Chronicle has peeped in on the Legislature and writes this paragraph to his paper:

"The Macon county man projected his near-beer bill at the very opening of the Legislature merely to test the temper of the members on that question. There was no mistaking the result. The near-beer dealers in the State may as well begin putting their households in order, for a bill is going to be passed that will sweep the State clean. It will kill the near-beer business about as dead as a business can be killed."

—Here is another answer to the old cry from the license advocates that all of our money is leaving North Carolina. The comparative report given out a few days ago by the corporation commission of North Carolina shows that there are 423 banks in the state today as compared with 122 in 1900; that the capital stock is $16,851,334.55 as against $5,729,883.47 in 1900; that the deposits are $67,062,788.34 as against $18,065,759.79 of ten years ago; and that the resources are $113,794,889.34 as against $29,980,147.79 in 1900.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Wadley, Alabama.

Dear Editor:

We have had a very quiet Christmas, and every body seemed to enjoy the holidays.

Nearly all our churches held appropriate services. I am indeed glad to see our people celebrating this great occasion in a becoming way.

My churches are in splendid condition to begin the new year, I am expecting this to be a good year with my work. I am trusting the Lord to give me great success. However, I have not been "pounded," neither have I had any "shingles" applied to me but I have had a severe "boxing." The Christian Endeavor Society at New Hope, at our last appointment Christmas day, presented us with just such a box of good things as the preacher and his family needed, I do not know who took the lead in this "boxing scrape", but I pray God to richly bless every one who in any way took part in the good work. If those good people could have been present when the box was opened they would have been repaid for the gifts. It was a pleasant sight to see the children as the goods were taken out and given to each of them how they did enjoy it. I hope to be able to render better service for this people, I trust I may prove to them my appreciation of this special kindness. My wife and children desire to express to them their heartfelt thanks.

God bless them.

We had a very fine New Year's service yesterday at Beulah church, after which the communion service was administered, and while the congregation sang a very appropriate hymn, we gathered our collection for the Orphanage which amounted to $13.16. Some has already been sent from this church, and some yet to be sent. We all went home feeling good. I wish you and the many Christian Sun readers a happy new year. G. D. Hunt.

Richland, Ga.

I am serving four churches this year; viz: Enigma on the 1st Sunday, Oak Grove on the 3rd, Richland and Randall's Crossing on the 4th. The second is vacant at the present, though I hope to do some mission work on that Sunday. We are planning to have a District meeting at Enigma the 5th Sunday in this month. Program later. This church is in good condition. Reorganized our Sunday-school there last Sunday. This church pays about $6.00 per member a year for all purposes. Randall's Crossing has a fine Sunday-school, it is 10 years old and continues to do good work. Much credit is due W. W. Jester who has stood at the head of the school all these years. His efforts have been untiring. Many other old people have been loyal with him and a more faithful set of young people can't be found anywhere. This church pays about $5.00 a year per member.

Our church here has a good Sunday-school, also Christian Endeavor Society. Br. D. S. Hogg, stands at the head of the Sunday-school and with some faithful teachers is doing some good work. This church pays about $6.00 per member a year. We have a church Aid Society that is doing some faithful work.

The church at Oak Grove has a large membership and many of them are young people. They only raise about $2.00 per member a year. This church has a good Sunday-school under the leadership of Bro. J. H. Floyd. The community is now building them a splendid school house. They have a large literary school here. We are talking about building a new church here. It is very much needed, and the church is well able to build. The present building is too small and not in keeping with the progress of the community. This church has great possibilities before it. I went to this community about 15 years ago and we didn't have a member; now we have nearly 300. I have served them all these years, a pleasant service, indeed.

Rev. G. O. Lankford is holding the pastorate of the new church in Columbus. He is giving his full time to this work and is much encouraged over the prospects for a fruitful year's work. I am much concerned about the work of Bro. Harrell at Portsmouth, Va., and Bro. Walters at Winchester, Va. I know something of the financial strain which they are passing through in such great work. I know how to sympathize. I think I do. May the Lord help them in their great efforts. Bro. J. H. Milan is doing some splendid work at Red Hill. They have the best Sunday-school they have ever had, and the work moves along all lines splendidly. He is getting along fine at Brown Springs and is giving two Sundays at Beulah, Givard, Ala. He has a fine field for development, and he knows how to hustle things.

I haven't seen Bro. Young since Conference and don't know just how his work is moving off. I hope he may have a prosperous year. He has a good field for usefulness I learn that Bro. Carter is down hard at work and is moving things. Bro. Carter has a fine field for development, but it will require hard work. I think he is equal to the task. Bro. Holder holds the work at Riverview, and is loved by his people. I was with him a few days in a meeting before Christmas and enjoyed the stay with him and his people very much. We propose to increase our work 25 per cent. before the next Convention. We know the Lord is willing and we can by His help. A good long steady pull will bring us to success. Every man to his work.

Madrid Iowa Letter.

Evangelist "Billy Sunday, who was at one time a resident of Madrid, Ia., and is now holding a meeting at Waterloo, Iowa, is reported as having some very plain things to say about the spiritual conditions of this state. He says that he has never worked in a state where the people seem to be so dead spiritually as in Iowa. One cause for this he attributes to the prosperity of the residents of the state, and their strenuous efforts to gain supremacy in the commercial world. But the people of Iowa, while admiring the evangelist, will think that he is a "little off" in these statements. Of course they will. But if his statement, as to their spiritual condition, is true, the saddest thing about it is not that the folks are "deader" out here than elsewhere, but that in other places they are dead. The evangelist, as well as others, may find in every state, professed Christians who give no evidence that they know anything about spiritual life. They will not even attend church, not give anything to spread the gospel. And many who do attend religious services seem to know nothing of the deep things of God, which things are so essential to effectual service in the cause of Christ. But where ever we go we may find a little band of faithful ones. Even in very "spiritually dead" Iowa we can find them. And I am sure that "Billy" Sunday did not mean to discredit the faithful few, but is glad to find them. It seems pretty discouraging to them sometimes, as they look around them and see what a hold worldliness and sin has upon the people. Their hope for a revival is almost a "hope against hope" and yet their desire for a revival is such that they will not give up.

God will hear the cry of these faithful ones. They need to get together in prayer. While conscious of the difficulties in the way let them "lift up their eyes unto the hills from whence cometh their help." Our work here in Madrid is not what we would love to see, and hope to see, but I am glad to report that we have a faithful little band here. Our Sunday services are well attended, but when I mention the faithful little band, I have in mind those whom we meet in the mid-week prayer services. God bless those who want to come and cannot. Our meetings recently have been very sweet and spiritual.

It was my privilege recently to spend ten days in a meeting with Rev. J. A. Stover, of Barnes City, Iowa. It is a town of 400 inhabitants, about 100 miles South of here. Rev. A. M. Hanson, now at the Third Church, Norfolk, Va., was pastor of the church here for four years. The people spoke highly of his work there, in the church and in the school. There were not many professions in our meeting, but the meetings were good and the Christian people expressed themselves as being greatly helped. To the Lord be all the praise.

Norfolk Letter.

Bro. T. A. Twiddy, continues to improve and it is the hope of his many friends that he will soon be able to occupy his usual field of activity.

Mrs. Hanson had been for some years, a sufferer, and it was recently decided that she might get relief by a surgical operation. Last Wednesday she went to the Protestant Hospital where on Friday she had an operation performed. The trouble proved to be more extensive than was at first thought, hence a more complicated operation than was at first expected—While she has of course been quite uncomfortable she is doing nicely and we hope that she will soon be in her place in the home, and in the church and Sunday-school.

Bro. Hanson addressed the Men's Bible Study Class at the Naval Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon. At 6:45 he organized the Young people of the church and Sunday-school into a Bible Study Class and they took up for the present the study of the book of Ruth.

Toan unanimousanna Nn..nahiolodl

To an unusually large congregation Sunday night he preached a fine sermon being the second in a series of three on, Men who failed at the cross roads of life. His subject was Esau, the Hunter. The first in the series was, Lot the Cattle-man. The third will be Aaron the Priest. At the close of the evening Mrs. Louise Mitchell was received by letter, and two came out and took a public stand for Christ.

Prof. S. M. Smith in the afternoon organized the children of the Sunday-school into a Sunshine Society which gives promise of doing good work.

Mrs. Minnie Dixon and little son James of Warren Pa., are visiting the family of her father Mr. Jas. A. Eley on 30th St.

ANOTHER HOLD UP IN CHURCH.

On Sunday, Dec. 25th, 1910, as the congregation at Union (Alamance) was concluding the last stanza of the closing hymn, Bro. W. J. Graham approached the pulpit and said he wished to say a word. In behalf of the Ladies Aid Society, members and friends of the church, he addressed the pastor, stating it was the desire of those he represented that all might have a pleasant time during the Christmas days, and especially that their pastor share the joys of the season and to that end they wished to present to him some of the good things of life as an expression of their appreciation of his services as pastor. Brother Graham then handed me a purse containing $19.00 in cash, to which Sister E. A. Trolinger has since added one dollar. Fresh meats cakes eggs and sausage were also given by Bro. G. R. Maynard and wife. Buffin Hughes and wife and Miss Nannie Kernodle, bucket of lard by E. W. Wilkins and wife. Contributing to the purse besides the above were W. S. Perry, Ernest Rascoe, L. A. McCauley, J. M. Wallace, and wife and Miss Adline Wallace, L. A. Cantrell, J. S. Lee, Annie Lee, Alice Maynard, J. S. Coleman, John Madden, C. P. Aldridge, Will Lea, Wm. Cantrell, Lessie L. Aldridge, Newton Foster, H. G. Pace, Mrs. E. J. Pace, Mrs. S. J. Squires, Bessie Gilliam, W. F. Sawye, Jas. Gilliam, Mrs. C. M. Walters, W. J. Turner, G. R. Maynard, L. H. Aldridge, G. A. Garrison, A. Graham, Mrs. A. Graham, W. J. Graham and wife, Mrs. R. T. Kernodle, Miss Selma McCauley, Mrs. W. H. Kimbro, Mrs. R. W. Fitch, Miss Lydia Fitch, Ladies Aid Society.

To all of these kind friends I offer sincere thanks, and shall long cherish the remembrances of their kindness.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The various professors after spending the vacation season in many sections visiting friends and relatives are now at their posts of duty and report an excellent season of enjoyment and good fellowship.

Many old students have not yet arrived but will return within the next few days. Of course, there are some who will not return and this brings sadness to their friends and fellow students who were confidently expecting them to continue their college course. Many new students have matriculated, the total number registered to date is 155 with many more to come.

The Christian Sun office has been removed from the third floor of the Administration Building to the original home in the Christian Sun office in the business section of the town.

The Elon Banking and Trust Co. having during the first year of its existence occupied the old Christian Sun office has removed into the new banking building on the south side of the railroad, thus leaving the Christian Sun office vacant and enabling Dr. Atkinson to move back to his old stand.

Mr. W. C. Michael, Farm Demonstrator in Guilford County has moved into his home recently purchased from Mr. J. P. Huffman. Mr. Huffman is preparing to erect a home for himself and family on the Roller Mill property in the edge of town.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence has made arrangements to teach English in the Wooster University Summer School, of Wooster, Ohio. This is one of the largest summer schools in the middle west, last year during the summer term more than 1,000 students matriculated.

FORTH FROM YOUR PAST!

By Amos R. Wells.

Forth from your lowly Past! In humble-wise

Up to the highest heaven lift your eyes. No glories that the heroes ever knew But God has placed them waiting there for you.

Forth from your evil past! The shame and sin—

Have now to live as they had never been. In Jesus cleansed and in His sureness sure, Know that the years to come are sweet and pure.

Forth from your troubled past! How dark the days,

How dreary and perplexed your wandering ways!

Forget those fears and tears and scenes abhorred,

And enter all the joyance of your Lord.

Forth from your lonely Past! No comrade knew

Your inner warfare for the good and true; But in the time to come till time shall end You shall not lack a comrade and a friend.

Forth from your Past! 'Twas given you to build

A future from it, all with blessings filled. Enter its open gate, its liberal door, And live its happy lord forever more.

Auburndale, Mass.

—Rev. W. H. Thompson, West Liberty, Ohio, and formerly of Park Place Norfolk writes that all goes well in his present field and that "we are having a fine winter" in Ohio. It evidently requires cold weather in the West to make folks feel like it is a fine winter.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—W. C. Dowd, editor of The Evening News, Charlotte, was elected Speaker of the House of the N. C. legislature, Jan. 4.

—Mrs. N. T. Clements, of Zuni, Va., writes high praise of the Life of James O'Kelly by McClenny. "I read it and was delighted. Did not stop reading it until I had finished it. I hope every member of our church will buy and read it."

—Chas. F. Johnson was elected last week by the Maine Legislature to succeed United States Senator Eugene Hale, March 4th, next. This is the first democrat Maine has elected to the U. S. Senate since 1847.

—Rev. D. A. Long, D.D., goes to Rifle, Colorado, Jan. 13 to supply for Rev. Horace Mann who is to be at Denver three months as a member of the legislature of that state. Dr. Long will be accompanied to Colorado by Mrs. Long.

—Rev. A. P. Barbee, of Garner, N. C., was a pleasant visitor at The Sun office Monday a. m. Bro. Barbee is enjoying very much his work as pastor of several of our good country churches, and the work will go forward under his leadership.

—We have just supplied Rev. L. E. Smith, Greensboro N. C., with a full set of Pulpit Commentary, and saved him money on the purchase. When Sun readers desire religious books it will be well to let us quote prices. We can usually get the books for the purchaser cheaper than buying directly.

—We are pleased to receive from Rev. M. T. Morrill D. D. Secretary of Foreign Missions, Dayton, Ohio, such high words of commendation of McClenny's Life of Rev. James O'Kelly. The book is being well received and widely read, and richly deserves all the good things being said of it we think.

—The Youth's Companion tells of a whale captured recently, and now mounted, which was 78 feet long, and more than fifty persons can stand at once within its monstrous interior. Fourteen people sat at table together and had luncheon within the huge fish and came out as safely as did Jonah.

—Among the States, in which prohibition is now a live issue with their legislatures in session are Alabama, Texas Tennessee and Arkansas. The question of dealing with spirituous liquors in a safe and sound manner is certainly a great and grave one. There are many differing opinions, and possibly the wisest way and best method have not yet been found.

—We are almost tempted to envy Bro. J. W. Holt, and would do so if that vice were in reach of an editor. Just look how those people at Union did serve him

Christmas, and we are not surprised, for if there are better and more appreciative people on earth than those of Union, Alabama, (better known as Union Ridge) we have never found them. And their pastor is deservedly fond of them.

—A meeting in New York City in November 30 to honor the memory of Mark Twain brought together a distinguished company of nearly 5,000 people. William Dean Howells, who presided, fittingly referred to Mark Twain as "the Lincoln of American literature." Felicitous addresses were made by Speaker Cannon, Hon. Champ Clark, Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Editor Henry Watterson, Dr. Joseph H. Twitchell, Mark Twain's pastor, George W. Cable, and Professor Henry Van Dyke.

—The present governor of Tennessee, said to be a brilliant man, and a great public speaker, and one who won great distinction in the late political campaign, was once an inmate of an orphan's home, and has come to the present by the power of his own push and personality. In reading the sketch from Colliers Weekly, which we print elsewhere this week, one is reminded of the late Governor Johnson of Minnesota, who when informed by his political managers that his opponents were circulating a story to the effect that his mother had been a washer-woman and his father had died in the poor house, and that he should deny this at once, replied laconically, that he could not deny the story, for it was true. Brain, character and energy still count for somewhat in world.

—Under date Jan 3rd Rev. T. W. Strowd, Chapel Hill, N. C. wrote "I am glad to be home again. I am improving, but not well. I shall continue Dr. Payne's treatment. Dr. Payne is a wonderful man, an excellent physician, and I can never praise him enough for what he has done for me and the interest he took in me. My friends who brought me sunshine and gladness while I was in the hospital. I had every attention needed. I think I shall be able to resume my work in a few weeks. By the way I have read The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly by McClenny and am delighted with it. I consider it worth many times its price to every minister and member of the Christian church. My wife thinks it is fine. Some of my friends have borrowed it to read and they are delighted with it. It will do us good when and wherever read."

The news comes as a surprise that Bro. J. N. Hess has resigned as Publishing Agent of the C. P. A., Dayton, Ohio. Bro. Hess is a man who does things, and is certainly an agreeable brother to deal with. We wish him well in whatever field he may labor. Brother Netum Rath-bun, of Troy, Ohio, has been elected Agent, and is to take charge three months hence when Bro. Hess' resignation becomes effective. We wish him all success in carrying forward a work so aggressively prosecuted by Bro. Hess.

Near Beer.

The country districts throughout North Carolina are now cursed with the near beer shops. They tell us that there is not enough alcohol in all the near beer a man can drink to make drunk come; and yet men stagger away from these near beer joints, because often too intoxicated to walk away. Col. Wade Harris of the Charlotte Evening Chronicle has analyzed the situation thoroughly and covers the ground entirely in this wise:

"Says the Durham Herald: 'The Legislature will have to put the near beer joints out of business if the thing is done, as the towns have shown that they do not intend to do it.' And there is where the Herald is wrong. As a general thing the towns impose a tax of from $1,000 to five thousand dollars on near-beer saloons. In Charlotte it is $1,200, and the people here hardly know of the existence of a near-beer saloon. But dealers in near-beer generally go outside the corporate limits and set up business with but a very small license fee, if any. And therein is the evil of the near-beer business. In towns where it is under police regulation and high license, the near-beer shop is about as harmless as a soda water stand. But where a near-beer man opens a shop outside the town—there is where the trouble comes in. These country near-beer joints are as great an evil as ever was the cross roads grog shop. The swill known as near-beer is but a blind. Behind is to be had all sorts of stuff vulgarly called rot gut. The near-beer signs in the country districts are as common as coca-cola signs. It is in the country districts that near-beer is doing its worst.

Minister's Sons.—Because some preachers' sons have gone to the bad an old slander with more lives than a cat became current in some manner that preachers' children were the meanest and most worthless children to be found, as a rule. It does no good to give figures and facts to the contrary, but The New York Advocate had a paragraph so pertinent the other day that we give it:

"The list of ministers' sons includes Grover Cleveland, Governor Judson Harmon, of Ohio, and Charles E. Hughes. We believe that we could fill this page with the names of truly distinguished sons of ministers, without referring to the encyclopedias, and with them give each denomination its due; and, further, that less than five per cent of the sons of preachers could be found that have disgraced their ancestry."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The question recurs again and again. "Is Christianity gaining or losing among the people?" If it is not gaining, there must be some reason why it is not. Some say the people are drifting away from the church, and that this is especially true of the young people. It seems to me otherwise. Churches have multiplied with increasing population, and church agencies for doing good have increased more rapidly than the churches.

"Going to meeting" was the principal thing fifty years ago. "Paying the preacher" was the principal service beyond worship and that "paying" was not large. Few Missionary offerings were taken; little was done for charity; almost nothing for orphans; no regular gifts to education. Sunday-schools were scarce. There is an army of Y. M. C. A. men at work now where there were no Christian workers. There is an army of seventeen million in the Sunday-schools in this county, an army larger than the combined armies of the world, and it is an ever increasing host. Who can measure its might and its victories?

Christianity is working in so many different directions that it is hard to follow its meanderings and doings. It is cleansing the press, it is leavening the magazines; it is singing in the factories; it is teaching temperance in the railroads and insurance companies; it is building school-houses in every county in every state; it goes to the political meeting; it speaks in the board of trade; it presides over the nation. It is like electricity which furnishes energy as well as light, pictures as well as words. Who can follow electricity in its ramifications and tell us all its work among men. It talks and sings in the parlor; it lights the house and the church and the mill; it turns the spindle and the printing press; it lights the city and runs the cars; it gives us the moving pictures and the great signs; it discovers the disease and then performs the act of healing. Any one service of electricity is wonderful; its whole work is a mystery. It is even so with Christianity. It touches so many springs of action, sets so many standards of conduct, controls so many great institutions, softens so many hard hearts, and warms so many cold lives, that none but the All-Father can comprehend its vastness and its value.

New discoveries and inventions create new religious problems and we are in a field of transition and adjustment; but the gospel is adequate to the solution of every social and moral issue. The world is growing better, but the conflict with evil is growing fiercer. The lower the standards of righteousness, the less the conflicts between good and evil. As conscience is enlightened heart-battles increase within and without. The word of God is the all conquering weapon.

W. W. Staley.

WAKEFIELD, VA.

The Christmas holidays have passed and the real New Year duties are on. How many of us have considered the duties of the New Year, and have started out with a new vow on our lips and a deep desire in our hearts that things will be done this year in the name of our Lord? If things are done this year in the name of our Lord, we must not wait till tomorrow to begin. Look after the duties of each day, and tomorrow's duties will be easy. Resist temptations today, and tomorrow you can easily become victorious over sin and self.

The Christmas holidays passed quietly, but very pleasantly. We were kindly remembered by our dear brother W. L. Anderson, who gave us a nice Christmas turkey, and a dollar in cash to get the children some Christmas; brother L. B. Faison, a nice, big ham, Brother E. J. Judkins, a ham and potatoes, brother J. S. Drewery, a ham and sweet potatoes, brother J. H. Harris, an old bacon ham, brother R. H. Hargrove, a ham, Sister Mary Herring, Valley of Va., a ham and sausage, Sister J. J. Lincoln, 4 lbs. of butter, and Sister A. J. Cotton, 1 lb. butter. We feel very grateful to these friends, and wish to express our thanks to all who contributed to our Christmas treat. We had an entertainment at Spring Hill church. The house was lighted, during the entertainment, which was composed of recitations by the Sunday school children and music by the choir. The children did fine and the music was excellent. The Christmas tree was beautifully lighted with different colored candles, and loaded with presents for the children, while the floor beneath the tree was covered with oranges, apples and candy; Santa played his part well and the services closed with the benediction by the writer. We are sure that all who attended were pleased and the committee can feel complimented on such success. We were pleased to have in our town during the holidays, Prof. A. J. Lincoln, of Charlotte Court House, and Mr. Jennings Lincoln, of Elon College, both of whom were visiting their parents, Prof. and Mrs. J. J. Lincoln. Mrs. Eva Branch, and her husband, of Manchester, were visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Faison, of this place.

We love to see these friends here and hope that they may come again soon.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION.

The Trustees of the Christian Publishing Association met in annual session at 10 o'clock Wednesday, January 4, 1911, and adjourned at noon Friday the 6th. All members were in attendance except Rev. G. D. Lawrence.

The business of the Association was given vigorous attention, everything found in good shape and with bright prospects. The following summary of the Auditing Committee's report will give information as to the financial condition: (This report is to be furnished by Dr. W. W. Staley.)

Arrangements were completed for beginning publication of the Teachers and Officers Journal authorized at the Troy Convention with the third quarter, or July 1, 1911. Brother Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pennsylvania, was elected editor of this Journal, and also assistant editor of the Sunday-school Literature in line with the action at Troy directing that expert assistance be provided this department of our work. The Journal gives every promise of being a high-grade publication—the very best and most desirable printed helper for the Christian Sunday-school worker.

Brother J. N. Hess tendered his resignation as Publishing Agent and notified the Board that he desired it effective at the end of three months. The resignation was accepted, and a vote of thanks and appreciation, also of special commendation of his work in connection with the building of our Publishing House, was given.

Brother Netum Rathbun, of Troy, Ohio, the present secretary of the Board, was secured as Agent, and resigned his position as Secretary, effective on assuming the agency.

Rev. John S. Halfaker, of Lima, Ohio, was elected to succeed to the office of Secretary.

It seems that Governor Comer of Alabama is taking a hand. Some nights ago he visited a good many of the so-called near beer saloons in Montgomery and the next day, after consultation with Sheriff Hood, many raids were made and it is estimated that by sundown thirty-five thousand dollars worth of liquors had been captured by the officers.—The American Issue.

—The city of New York spends each year more than $25,000,000 in fighting the evils which would not exist if there were no saloons.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Rev. McD. Howsare, Editor,
Norfolk, Va.

NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HOME AND FOREIGN MISSION WORK.

It is difficult to differentiate between home and foreign missions. The terms confuse and lead to wrong conclusions on the part of many. In the sight of Him who commanded that we should go and teach all nations there is no such distinction. The work of the church at home and abroad is one work, inspired by the same Master, empowered by the same Holy Spirit and seeking the same triumphs. Equal obligations rest upon us for the work locally and abroad. In planning our individual work the outlying nations of the earth should have equal place in our prayers, effort and gifts.

Weekly Support of Missionaries.

There is no question but that the weekly system of giving is best in the support of the local church. The same principle applies in the support of missionaries on the foreign field. Our missionaries ought to have their salaries in advance or receive them, as the pastors do in up-to-date churches in our land, weekly. If every church member when he prepares his envelope for the support of his pastor at home would at the same time prepare one for his missionary abroad he would do well.

That Mission Board Deficit.

At the recent convention at Troy O. the report of the Mission Treasurer showed the Mission Board to be in debt about $8000. This was not due to any rash methods on the part of the Mission Board nor because new work had been opened up on the foreign field. Increased cost of maintaining the work already started and the increase in the cost of living caused a deficit of about two thousand dollars per year. The Board felt it would be humiliating and discouraging to retrench and therefore were willing to bear any criticism that might be heaped upon them for the deficit. Some unkind criticisms were made but even the Mission Board builded better than it knew. The writer of this article was present on that memorable evening when an appeal was made and when God's presence was manifest and many a man who had been withholding that which was rightfully our Father's money, laid it upon the altar. It was the greatest missionary manifestation ever witnessed among our people and all because the Mission Board had trusted God and had gone eight thousand dollars in debt. Nor is that demonstration in that convention on that evening the end. Many a man saw a new vision and went back home to talk missions with a new zeal and to give with larger liberality than ever before. Our people have been slow to catch the missionary spirit and the Lord used that $8000. Deficit to wake us up. I have thanked God a great many times since the Troy Convention for that Mission Board debt.

Bro. E. K. McCord.

Many of us have followed Brother E. K. McCord and family in their long journey across the Pacific to take up the missionary work again in Japan. They sailed from Seattle Dec. 19th. Brother McCord leaves many friends in his native land who wish him and his wife a safe voyage and a blessed work in the Rising Sun Kingdom.

THE INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. IN SEVEN CHAPTERS. BY W. E.

McCLENNY, PH. B.

III. Foreign Missions.

The instance mentioned under Home Missions where Isaac Scott, colored, was ordained in Raleigh, North Carolina, for mission work in Liberia, Africa is the only one we have found up to the year 1883. It is true that Rev. William Guirey preached on the island of Jamaica, but that was before he became a Christian minister.

Our foreign work proper dates back to Moore Union Christian Church near the banks of the Cape Fear river, Moore County, North Carolina. Then and there Rev. P. T. Klapp preached on the conditions among the heathen, and at the close of the service Rora Womack who could neither read nor write went to him and said: "Brother Klapp, if that is the true condition of the poor heathen, I feel like I want to do something for them;" and putting his hand into his pocket he took out thirty five cents—all the money he had at the time and gave it to Rev. P. T. Klapp with these instructions: "If our people will not use it for the benefit of the heathen, I want you to give it to some denomination that will use it for them." That 35 cents was the beginning of a Foreign Mission fund. Rev. P. T. Klapp then talked the matter over with some other ministers, and he found helpers in Revs. D. F. Jones, J. D. Wicker and S. B. Klapp. Just before the annual conference they each took up a collection in their churches for a beginning for foreign missions. That year the North Carolina and Virginia Conference met at Poplar Branch, Moore County, North Carolina and a special hour was set apart to consider the subject of Foreign Missions, which was advocated by Revs. P. T.

Klapp, J. D. Wicker, S. B. Klapp, D. F. Jones and J. T. Kendall of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he being present at this session of the conference as a visitor. It was finally agreed that the work should be taken up, and plans were formulated whereby funds might be raised to send preachers to preach to the heathen.

In response to a memorial from the North Carolina and Virginia conference on Foreign Missions a Board of Control was created by the Southern General Christian Convention in session at Mount Auburn, Warren County, North Carolina, with Rev. P. T. Klapp as chairman, under rules prescribed by the convention. This was in May 1886. This was the first Convention action on the great subject, and it marked an era of wider growth.

At the New Bedford session of the American Christian Convention the Mission Board was authorized to commence foreign missionary work, and Japan was selected as the field in which to begin. In January 1887 Rev. D. F. Jones and wife Amelia P. Jones of North Carolina, the first Christian missionaries, sailed from New York, going by the way of England where they remained a short time, finally reaching and beginning work at Ishinomaki, Japan, the following May. Since that time twelve Christian missionaries, including wives, have been sent by our Mission Board to Japan.

In the spring or early summer of 1900 the Christian Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Virginia decided that it would do some foreign mission work. Plans were laid, and funds were raised and in January 1901, Rev. D. P. Barrett and wife, Eva O. Barnett and Rev. H. J. Rhodes were dispatched to Porto Rico to begin work. Since that time three other missionaries have been added to our force of foreign workers in this field.

This work is the result of the efforts of the membership of the Christian Memorial Temple. The work seems to be doing well in Japan and also in Porto Rico.

Recently Rev. Smith A. Howell, colored, of Newport News, Virginia was sent on a missionary tour to the West Indies and to South America. He seems to have been successful in his work, and as a result the Christian Church has been planted in those far off countries, and in the American Christian Convention of this year (1910) they were represented by delegates.

Notwithstanding the fact that we are now doing more for foreign missions than we have ever done before, yet our home missions grow in proportion, and all the enterprises of the church are one hundred times better off than they were when we had neither.

ORPHAN TO GOVERNOR.

Ben W. Hooper, the next Governor of Tennessee, choice of the Republican party, and of a large section of the Democrats as well, Tennessee's first Republican Governor in 30 years, had never been heard of, outside of his own county, 24 hours before his nomination. In his early days, when he wanted to marry the daughter of an old family in the neighborhood, he was asked by his sweetheart's family who his parents were. He looked them straight in the eyes and said:

"I awoke to consciousness within the walls of a Baptist orphan asylum, and my first remembrance is of the long rows of children eating their simple meals in the dismal-looking dining hall. Back of that I know nothing."

Then he told them how a man had visited the orphanage and had become interested in him. This friend invested in him to the extent of giving him an education and sending him to a law-school. After graduating he had come to Newport and "hung out his shingle," and they knew the rest.

But they were not satisfied, and they told him their daughter could never marry a man whose very name had been given him by a charitable friend. So the young man left Newport with a few thousand dollars given him by his friend, who had faith in him. Hooper went to Texas and invested in the then rapidly developing oil lands of that State.

With that tinge of the spectacular that has characterized every turning point in his career, he made $150,000 in six months and, pocketing his small fortune, he turned his face toward Tennessee again.

Ten years ago he married Miss Jones, daughter of one of Tennessee's wealthiest citizens, and he now lives in a splendid home in the heart of the Tennessee hills.

Two years ago Captain Hooper gave $10,000 to one of the Baptist Orphanages of Tennessee, and he has always been extremely liberal toward all charitable institutions.—Collier's Weekly.

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

The religious paper measures our religious life. The Bible is the bound volume of the religious newspaper of the Hebrew people. To be sure, its contributors and editors were inspired. The Lord God was all and in all in the life of those who wrote it. Holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. The inspiration of the Almighty gave them understanding. All their newspapers were religious. Their history was His story; their government was His Kingdom; their law was His righteousness. The Bible is what it is today, because it is the record of the life of God in the soul of man. The religious newspaper is this or nothing: not in the sense of a revelation, but certainly an inspiration. It is an interpretation of God's dealing with us and a record of the progress of His Kingdom.

As the people think in their heart so are they, and from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, and the press, religious and secular, is the voice of the people: is the pulse that measures the heart-beats of modern Christendom.

The secular press, the industrial and political newspaper, is in demand because the people are red-hot from a material standpoint. It is no trouble to get people to take these papers and to get them to spend ten times as much as they do for their religious paper. The average church member has got ten times more politics than religion. This is why he is so hot about the one and so cold about the other. I do not say he has too much politics, but I do say he has got mighty little religion.

Thomas Jefferson said he would rather see a nation barbarous with newspapers than civilized without them. If the newspaper is so vital to political life, is it any less so to our religious life? Brother, if you want to save your politics you must put religion in it, and that means take and read your religious paper. Let all the people say, Amen. R. E. Peele—In Biblical Recorder.

A FORCEFUL EXAMPLE.

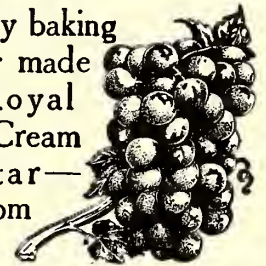

When a man has lived on a high plane of morality, and has made himself eminently useful to all with whom he has had any dealings, it is well to present him as an example for others to imitate. Mr. John S. Huyler, of New York City, recently died. He began life as a poor boy, and, by good judgment, great energy, and sterling integrity, he became a business man of large success. He manufactured candy, and always of the very best qualities. All who dealt with him had the utmost confidence in his word and his work. He became a millionaire, and during all of his career he was very liberal in his benefactions to a large number of good objects. He was a Christian of a high type. He showed that true religion and honorable business methods match each other capitally. Here is what one of his saleswomen wrote of him, soon after his death: "He was never too busy to have a cheerful 'Good Morning,' and a kind and encouraging word for the humblest of his people. He extended his thoughtfulness even to the sending of his saleswomen to the best chiropodists to ease and treat their aching feet, at his own expense.

It was his custom to give his girls, at the beginning of the summer, two or three shirt waists (which means a lot to a working girl), two weeks' vacation, with pay, every year, a turkey at Thanksgiving time, and at Christmas a week's salary, and a two-pound box of candy. He offered to all a membership in the Young Woman's Christian Association, and the privilege of taking up music, or any other course they desired, free of charge or expense to them. These are only a few of the deeds of this goodly man, and there are no more sincere mourners today than his old employees." Who can estimate the influence which that man had upon those who worked for him?

What a wide contrast there is between Mr. Huyler's treatment of those who were employed by him, and the treatment given to those who serve not a few business men! How delightful is one's memory of such men as Mr. Huyler!

C. H. Wetherbe.

One strange thing about the "cheerful giver" is that he always has something to give—his cheerfulness seems to increase his capital. As there are plants which bloom most freely when the blossoms are picked daily, so the free bestowal of gifts seems to increase the store of the giver.—The Myrtle.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. W. E. Swain, President of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Protestant church, preached an inspirational sermon Sunday on the appearance of Christ in manifold forms. Dr. Swain took as his text the two disciples on the road to Emmaus, to whom Christ appeared. The speaker declared that Christ is not limited in his manner of approach nor by creed or dogma or any force. He is the universal Christ and can save us in any position. The saviour merited large praise and commendation and was well received. His son of the Methodist Protestant Herald office accompanied him in his visit to the College.

The "C. B. C." organized class of the College Sunday-school decided to give three-fourths of its contributions to the Orphanage and one-fourth to the current expenses of the school.

President Moffit is at Asheboro this week. Mrs. Moffitt and children returned from there Friday.

Fifteen new students have matriculated for the winter term. Others are expected to come.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, President of Palmer Institute—Starkey Seminary, Tokemont, N. Y., will deliver a course of lectures here from Feb. 6 to 8. The subjects are not yet announced, but Dr. Summerbell's visit is anticipated with pleasure by all. He never fails to instruct and entertain. Dr. Child will also come this spring. Both these distinguished men come by the generous provision to Elon of the Asbury Palmer Board of New York City.

Mrs. W. A. Harper visited her parents, Union Ridge, N. C., last week.

Mrs. Sue Jones is now a permanent resident of the College community. We are delighted to have her. She is living with her daughter, Mrs. R. J. Kernodle.

The Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting Sunday evening was largely attended and it was a delightful service. So were the services of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

Miss Linda Barnes, of the music faculty, has been quite sick. She is now able to meet her classes.

The Cosmopolitan Club meets with Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Wicker this Tuesday. Prof. Amick will present a paper.

A PASTOR'S NEW YEAR WISH.

This wish, beautifully printed, was sent to each member of Saint Andrew's Church in New York, by the pastor, Dr. George C. Peck:

I wish for you health of body—That you may be able to eat well, sleep soundly and work hard without sense of strain.

I wish for you health of mind—That you may be able to enjoy good books, real friends and the laughter of children; that you may think frankly of yourself, generously of others and hopefully of the future.

I wish for you health of soul—That you may be able to hold both body and mind to their tasks; that, lacking physical soundness, you may still be well; that you may bear pain without wincing and defeat without bitterness; that you may believe unquestioningly in goodness, and be very sure of God.

I wish for you all this in the name of Him who is the "Saving health of our countenance our God."—Ex.

LIFE OF JAMES O'KELLY.

It is months since I received a copy of "The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly, and months passed before I had leisure to read it carefully. There were reasons why a careful reading was desirable. Let me now say Mr. McClenny seems to have the historical sense, to know facts when he sees them, and how to dig them up. It is much to his credit that he spent years of patient toil gathering material for his book, making considerable expenditure of money in his researches. His book is accurate, well written, and a fitting memorial for James O'Kelly. I hope that it will have a large sale.

Sheffield.

December 19th, 1910, the death angel visited the home of Brother Jno. A. Sheffield, of this place, and took away a devoted wife and mother, leaving him desolate, forsaken, and bowed to earth in grief. They had been married only eleven months and seven days and into that brief period had come no cloud; all was peace and happiness and hope till suddenly the wife was beset with bloodpoison and died after an illness of four days. The child has been taken by friends and is well. May God bless it and rear it up for him.

Sister Sheffield was the only daughter of Wm. G. Laine, of Southhampton Co. Her mother died about ten years ago, leaving Virginia May, (for such was her name) but ten years old. From that time till her marriage she was a homeless orphan, being cared for by friends and relatives.

At the age of ten she gave her heart to God and united with Applewhite's M. E. Church, Southhampton County, where her membership remained until the time of her death.

She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, a father, and two half brothers. She died at the age of twenty years and four months. Her body was interred in Waverly Cemetery to await the resurrection. Peace to her soul, and may the grief-stricken husband and father commit his way wholly unto the Lord.

Barrett.

John Calhoun Barrett was born April 1, 1857, died at his home near Barrett's Church, in Southhampton County, Va., Dec. 21, 1910. Aged 53 years. Smouths and 20 days. He was married to Miss Cora Hines Jan. 26, 1879. To this union eight children were born, seven sons and one daughter, all of whom survive him. All the children were present at his burial except two, Gy H. Barrett who is in the hospital in Baltimore, and Jasper Barrett who is practicing law in Klamouth Falls, Oregon.

Besides his eight children he leaves to mourn their loss a loving wife, one brother and four sisters. Before his death, he expressed himself as ready to die and go home to rest. Funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer.

May the comforting grace of God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

At the home of the bride, Virgilina, Va. Nov. 30th, ten o'clock a. m. I united in marriage Mr. Williams S. Daniel and Miss Wallie James Levister. The bride is the organist of Union church and a teacher in the Sunday-school. The groom is salesman for the Farmer's Hardware Co. of Virgilina and is an excellent business man.

Immediately after the marriage the happy couple boarded the Southern train for a bridal trip to Richmond. On their return they will reside in their lovely new home recently built in Virginia, Seventh Street.

May heaven's blessings attend this union.

"TAKE TIME."

Much time is wasted by sluggards, and perhaps much more by busy people. It is quite as bad and as extravagant to use valuable time for needless things as it is to spend good money for needless things. Martha's worry and fret were not called for, and much of her labor was useless. She is a type of multitudes of busy housewives and busy business men. Hurry and worry do not enrich life. They impoverish it. Our Lord had a large task on His hands, but He never fretted. He went quietly, confidently, steadily through life, knowing that no duty pressed so heavily on Him as to require Him to neglect any other duty.

Every needful thing requires time, and it is never wise to cut the time short. It takes time to supply the needs of the body. The God of nature is also the God of grace and He made us so that every part of our being should be developed in harmony. It takes time to develop the intellectual faculties. We may do this while attending to other things; but besides the development acquired in the regular routine of life, the mind requires special seasons of study.

Time is required for social life. One may be a good husband without neglecting his business to spend time with his family; but it is worth while to devote special time to this end. One apostle says, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." It is a high calling. It is also a duty to keep one's self in the love of home, of wife and children. To do this a little time must be spent. When the husband is absent from home he must take time to write to his family. No burdens of business can excuse him from this duty. For him to give all his time to business and none to his family is the sure way to weaken the tie that binds the husband and father to the home. It is well also to take time to keep up friendly and happy relations with neighbors. A reasonable amount of time given to such amenities is well spent. To neglect such friendly offices because of the pressure of business is to become narrow, selfish and sordid.

There are higher claims on our time. "Take time to be holy," says the song. If the physical nature cannot be supported without devoting time to it, if our social life requires time, if our business requires time, how can we expect our spiritual life to flourish without special seasons of worship and spiritual culture? Take time to read the Bible. "They searched the Scriptures daily." Shall we take time to eat three meals a day, and refuse to our hungry, empty souls an hour each day? We cannot feed on the bread of life in the midst of the rush of business. Take time to read the Word of God every day. Take time to pray. Prayer is the highest fellowship. If it is necessary to take time to cultivate our human fellowships, how much more to cultivate fellowship with God. Take time to go to church and prayer-meeting.

Take time to do good. Every Christian wishes to do good. Sometimes good men make a mistake by trying to do good by giving checks alone. A check is valuable, but personal ministry is better. The help which costs time and personal effort is a hundred fold more beneficial than that which is given at arm's length and by a sudden impulse. There are multitudes of lonely people. A few moments of personal ministry will do more to relieve their loneliness than the largest gift. There are many sad people in the city. Misfortune has fallen on them. The days are dark and the world is unfriendly. The people are passing by on the other side by thousands, and the more they see going by on the other side the sadder and lonelier they become. The good Samaritan took time to help a fallen brother rise.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THE WORK MOVES ON.

We are far from the realization of the Young People's Convention, "Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in every Sunday-school; a Christian Endeavor Society in each church," but we are headed in that direction. At the beginning of the new year many new organizations of this kind ought to be effected and many will be. For instance Mrs. R. H. Peel is to organize a Junior Society in our Windsor, Va., church and Rev. D. A. Keys has organized two Societies, one for young people and one for children in our South Norfolk, Va., church and Rev. W. L. Wells is planning to put the Socieay into effective operation in his field of labor in North Carolina. There are others also, but space forbids further detail.

We have made a respectable showing in the organized class work and in Teacher-Training there are about 40 classes of each in our Southern Convention and while this total is far less than it should be, it is still cause for congratulation and encouragement. The second volume of our Teacher-Training course is now in the binder's hands and will be ready for distribute soon. This volume completes the Teacher-Training Course (Standard Advanced) authorized at the Greensboro Convention and ought to give large encouragement and impulse to the growth of our Teacher-Training work.

The approaching biennial session of the General Young People's Convention will see many things to encourage it and many problems to solve. The work moves on gradually, but let us hope surely, it is not all shadow. It is not all sunshine. But still ahe work moves on.

A CHANGE MADE.

Christian Endeavor workers will please take notice that the Christian Endeavor Topic is a week earlier than heretofore. This is done at the request of many of our workers. We hope it will inconvenience none.

MISSION-STUDY WHY NOT?

It ought to be easy to establish a mission-study class in any Christian Endeavor Society. There are an abundance of books that tell you just how to go to work.

The leader need not know much about missions, but he must be a good executive, able to set others at work and keep them at it.

There are now available a large number of fascinating text-books, written especially for young people, and covering completely the home and foreign mission fields. They cost 35 cents in paper; 50 cents in cloth.

Each book can be completed in seven or eight sessions, and it would be better than nothing simply to r chapters aloud, with the side reading that is suggested.

But if your society will take up one of these books, and spend seven or eight week nights in studying it, you will have a nucleus around which all later missionary information will gather, and your mental and spiritual horizon will be wonderfully enlarged. You will begin to understand what Christ meant by "the kingdom of God."

HELP YOUR PASTOR.

Help him by your praise behind his back. Tell others how much he helps you.

Help him by praise to his face. He has enough of blame to keep him from be coming conceited!

Help him by suggestions for church work. Eevry thoughtful man likes to have others also thinking about his work.

Help him by carrying out immediately and heartily every plan he suggests.

Help him by getting others also to help him.

Help him by your earnest and sympathetic attention when he speaks. Take the woodenness out of your face.

Help him by singing with all your soul.

Help him by your prayers. And let him know that you pray for him every day.

PRAYING PRAYER-MEETINGS

By all means establish the pre-prayer meeting, if it is not already established in your society,—the little five-minute meeting of the leader and the prayer-meeting committee before the regular meeting for prayer about the meeting to come. Let all present pray.

Prayer trios will help beginners to take part. It will be the understanding that the beginner is to pray just after an experienced worker, and to be followed by another experienced worker at once.

You will get many more to pray if the whole society occasionally kneels for a season of prayer.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JAN. 22, 3.—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Prevailing Prayer, Mark 11:10-25. (Led by the Prayer-Meeting Committee.)

Favorite Prayer Verse:

If you last week requested all to select each his favorite prayer verse from the Scripture, give opportunity for these at the first of the meeting.

For the Committee:

Presuming there are five members on the Prayer-Meeting Committee, have one read the Scripture, another give the comment, a third announce the laymens, a fourth offer prayer, the fifth to make the leader's remarks.

For the Leader:

Prayer is not so much the saying of words as the out-pouring of the spirit, communion with God, getting ourself in position for God to come into our life and influence it. Prayer to prevail must be definite. He who prays God to. bless us, everyone will not get much of a blessing. It must be unselfishness. "The Lord bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife" will never get higher than the head of him who utters it. It must be resigned. We must be willing to trust our Father. We cannot truly pray, unless to every petition is added "Thy will be done." Prayer is more than begging God for mercies and favors. It is praise and adoration as well. Pray without ceasing.

QUESTIONS FOR VOLUNTARY ANSWER:

- What is prayer?
Why should we pray?
How should we pray?
How often should we pray?
What is meant by praying "in Christ name?"

In what sense is every prayer of the true Christian answered?

Why are some prayers not answered? Name some things that make prevailing prayer impossible.

Jacob as an instance of prevailing prayer.

- Soloman as a prayer maker.

THE GENERAL NEED FOR PRIMARY UNION.

Some may say there is no need for Primary Union: that since the publication by our own denomination of the graded Sunday school lessons we are sufficiently supplied with literature suited to every age of the Sunday-school scholar. Let us see about that. Our Junior quarterly is arranged to meet the needs of the child not less than nine years old; at least, those in authority on Sunday-school matters have defined first year Junior work as corresponding to fourth reader grade in public schools, and according to public school classification nine years is the lowest age at which a child can be promoted to that grade. And certainly upon our own observation and knowledge of child life, and the proper study and examination of the book, we all must agree that no child under nine years old could be wisely or even safely classed in the Junior quarterly. So from the time the child enters Sunday-school, which is usually at about three years old, sometimes younger, until he is nine years old, we have just two grades of lessons to meet his needs, viz: the picture lesson card and the primary quarterly. Now, are these sufficient? Yes, quite, of their kind, for taking the lessons of the present year as the average they can hardly be presented even by the most ingenious and tactful of teachers (and we have comparatively few of that class) so as to engage the child's attention to a degree worth the effort expended on the part of the teacher; and granting that the teacher's effort has not utterly failed and the thought of the lesson has not been wholly lost, of what possible benefit can it be to the little child to learn about the "Divided Kingdom," and about the reign of so many different Kings, the majority of them, perhaps, bad men,

What we need then is supplemental matter something that will catch the child's mind and thought at its earliest unfolding, beginning with God the Father of all and Creator of all things, and leading the child on in his natural development to understand God and his wonderful provision for all his children: and as the child becomes old enough to grasp it, of God's still more wonderful plan for the redemption of all man kind. And there being demand for such teaching would it not be best to make this supplemental study uniform? You say, then, "let us adopt the International Graded Supplemental Lessons!" But are they practical? Not for us. We have not, perhaps, half a dozen schools in the Southern Convention that could use these lessons to advantage. Now we recognize the fact that there is perhaps nothing published in juvenile S. S. literature so good as these International Graded Supplemental Lessons, and because of their value, Primary Union is aiming directly toward the standard which would warrant their adoption into our schools. But we must not get the cart before the horse. We must prepare to use these lessons efficiently before we can hope to make them effective, therefore we had best not try to multiply until we have learned to count.

As to classification of the children, our Sunday-schools are in a fearfully mixed and jumbled condition. Primary Union provides for a gradual and correct classification. It does not endeavor to enforce this measure, but suggests the plan and opens the way by which any school can naturally fall into the graded system, not fully and perfectly at first, but in the arrangement of the study, it is the purpose of Primary Union year by year, to approach nearer and nearer the ideal set by the excellent standard of the International Graded Supplemental Lessons, then when a school has grown in numbers and in point of efficiency to the extent that it can use these lessons or their equivalent to advantage, Primary Union will be in possession of the facts concerning the Sunday-school field and its capacity and will stand ready to adopt these lessons or to embrace in its course whatever seems best to meet existing needs.

Assuming that the best interest of our Sunday-schools requires some sort of supplemental teaching for the primary grades, for the present we urge upon our people the outline of Memory Work, arranged in grades, and prepared by the Primary Union Committee of the E. Va. Convention, as the best available supplemental work suited to the present demands and status of our Sunday-schools.

My Dear Children and Friends:

The new year has come with its busy days freighted with responsibilities and crowded with new fields of toil and each laden with opportunities for good service to God and man. No other field possibly affords such an opportunity for the exercise of service as the Orphanage; here a man feels to give his check for $5.00. A Ladies Aid Society gives a box of clothing; a Sunday-school gives a monthly cash offering; a good woman gives a quilt, which helps to keep an Orphan warm a child gives a toy which gladdens another child's life, a church and community give a load of wheat or a crate of chickens; a good farmer gives a keg of home made syrup; a friend a thousand dollars; different people will land and personal property! Thus the field of service in the Orphanage work is unlimited; while in other fields the call comes money, money, money! We would not lessen other calls but make more liberal all gifts and then the greater will God's grace abound.

We continue for a few weeks our 1910 report as has been our custom for many thanksgiving and Christmas offerings are delayed. Also the weather is such it looks like we cannot get all our corn and peas out, but will make the Annual Report just as soon as possible.

Ladies Aid Society, Pleasant Grove, Va. 1 box clothing, stockings, hats, 1 quilt, baking powder, nails, ginger etc.

Mrs. Ed Smith, Clayton, N. C. 2 pillow cases 1 bolster case.

Miss Ida Smith Clayton, N. C. 2 towels.

The woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, Springboro, Pa. 1 barrel containing suits for boys, rubber coat, hats, many cloaks and jackets for girls, dresses, shirt waists, clothing for little folks etc. A valuable and useful lot of clothes.

Burlington, N. C., Christian Sunday-school, 1 box apples, oranges, candy, nuts, stockings, and presents.

We greatly appreciate the many cash gifts coming in from all sources; also the gifts in kind, they are enjoyable for the children and serviceable in the home. We are grateful for the many helpful and sympathetic letters and good wishes from friends in all parts of the church. May God richly bless the many whose hearts have been touched by the Orphans need and who have so liberally responded to our necessities.

Let all report amounts on hand promptly.

Yours sincerely for service,
Uncle Jim.

My dear Uncle Jim:

I am in Waverly now with my mother and sister. We are visiting at my uncle's Mr. J. W. West. We are having a fine time. We have also had a nice little visit in Suffolk which was much enjoyed. I hope you all had a merry Christmas.

I enclose ten cents for the Orphanage.

With best wishes to you and yours for a happy and prosperous new year, I am

Yours truly,

Susie R. Watson.

Nice little letter, Susie—glad you enjoy visits to the good kinspeople. Uncle Jim would love to have a month to visit aunts, uncles, cousins and others, but cannot now.

Manson, N. C., Jan. 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my letter and send my dime for December and January. Hope you and all the coesins are well and having a good time. I suppose you have got 7 more children at the Orphanage, which makes you have 43. May God's richest blessings be with you all during this year. I will be so glad when school starts because I love to go to school and never miss a day unless somebody is sick. What did Santa bring the children?

I will have to stop for this time. With much love and best wishes to all.

Bettie Earles.

Franklin, Va., December 19, 1910.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I enclose you a check for $2.50 from the Little Worker's Society of Franklin, Va. We hope to send you some more another time. With best wishes for a Merry Christmas to all the orphans.

Pine Apple, Ala., Dec. 29, 1910.

Dear Uncle Jim:

The year is nearly passed. Santa was so good to us; brought us things that we enjoy: a drawing slate, drum, wagon, ball, autobus, A. B. C. game—cards, etc. The friend for whom little brother was named gave him a beautiful silver cup.

We wish for you a happy New Year. We send our love and dimes.

THE PORTSMOUTH CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

TWO MONUMENTS.

The above pictures give to the readers of The Sun a conception of the magnificent new Christian Church recently erected in Portsmouth, Va., which our people have been so faithful in supporting and in which the progressive flock now worships; also that of the faithful, loyal and ever zealous pastor, Rev. J. W. Harrell.

The church is a monument to the city, a credit to the denomination, and a handsome temple erected unto God. It is classed with the most beautiful and up-to-date structures in the community, and is pointed to with pride, by all of God's people, regardless of denominational affiliation.

Brother Harrell stands as a monument in the cause because of having labored so faithfully at the head of this great undertaking and engineered the work in a highly satisfactory way, without falter or murmur, and so successfully accomplished the great work. He has proven to be a strong man in the hand of God to be used of Him. While our people and friends at large have stood faithfully by the work in contributions and prayers to and for its success, only the little band in Portsmouth can tell in reality the many times that it apparently seemed they were against a stone wall, but with the faithful pastor to lead they waited upon God believingly and at the critical moment surmounted every difficulty. I say, no one can realize how many times every nerve and fiber in Brother Harrell's being was strained to the utmost, and at these times he was enabled to take the right step in the right direction. Therefore he has proved himself a man of great worth and stands forth as a living monument, not only to the denomination which he serves but to the religious life of the city of Portsmouth, and unto God.

THE REPROACH OF SIN.

Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. Prov. 14: 34.

Religion is better than riches and goodness is more to be desired than gold. The real riches of a nation, wrote Ruskin in sentiment, are not houses and lands and possessions, but the number of happy, contented, redeemed souls it can show.

That which made Palestine great, and forever memorable among nations, was not its rich soil, its great store houses and immense herds, but the lofty religious life the Hebrews carried and cultivated there. But for the rich religious life of the Jews you and I had never heard, in all probability, of the lands of the Hittites, Jebusites, and the other Ites. The Jewish religion made Palestine great and renowned and glorious among the other lands and nationalities of the world. For when these people forgot God and worshiped Baal their greatness and glory waned and their riches were of no avail. Even from the point of view of wealth, property, possessions, Jeroboam, Omri and Abab had far better never had a throne, nor a name, nor place among the Israelites.

The greatest reproach to a people, the greatest hindrance and hurt, is sin. There is nothing that breeds poverty and brings want and begets distress like sin. It staggers the mind to try to conceive of our own nation's wealth, majesty and riches, if the reproach of sin could be taken away, the waste of wickedness could be estopped. Sinful indulgence is that which dries up a nation's resources and makes a people poor. Sin not only robs a people of their liberty and oppresses them with bonds and fetters and chains, but it robs them of their rightful riches as well, and takes away their belongings.

We do not have to go to Palestine to learn how true are the words of Solomon, that "Righteousness exalteth a nation." We see that fact most gloriously illustrated in this land and present time. That which has exalted our own nation is righteousness. It was so from the beginning. The greed for gold could never even effect a permanent settlement here. But a love for righteousness, a desire for unhindered and untrammelled worship, service to God, liberty of conscience, did effect a settlement, and gave origin to those institutions which are our proudest possession today. Even our noblest institutions of learning, Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the rest, had their origin all in a desire for righteousness, in a deeply religious desire and sentiment. The real history of any people is its religious progress or regress. The rise, decline and fall of every nation may be, and in fact are, told in the rise, decline and fall of every nation's religious life and sentiment. When the wicked rule a nation suffers and the people grow poor. Where sin abounds poverty and want and wretchedness are sure to follow. That money which has paid the largest return upon its investment is the money invested in houses of prayer and places of worship. There is no other asset quite as great as this. The Captain of our salvation was cradled in a manger, but the life He lived and righteousness He wrought have been the source and salvation of more strong thrones, great empires, and rich and mighty nations than that of any other personage this world has ever known.

Righteousness exalteth a nation.

KEENNESS OF VISION.

It is of little worth to be surrounded by much that is good and great and gracious, unless we have an eye to see, cultivate a keenness of vision to perceive. It is not worth a blind man's while to plod wearily through the labyrinths of an art gallery or even to traverse the Grand Canyon. Since there is no vision those wonders of sight and beauty are lost upon him.

There is no blindness quite so deep and dark as assumed blindness, voluntary darkness. "None are so blind as they who will not see." Many of us go through life, day after day, in assumed blindness to the blessings, benefits, bounties and beauty that God has strewn so deep and thick and abundant about us. When God made this universe He did not make the worst one, He made the very best one that He could make; and the supreme glory of His handiwork is manifest everywhere. His line has gone out through all the earth. The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork. The goodness and true grandeur and the glory are here. The fault is with us if we do not see them.

We do rob God, and impoverish our own lives, by not cultivating a keenness of vision. Most of all our spiritual vision. There is a vision of things physical. And one of things mental. And another of things spiritual. Back of the physical, deeper than the mental, is ever and always, the spiritual. God's most glorious beauties, His most lavish luxuries and bounties, are in the realm of the spiritual. If we would see the deeper colorings, and richer shades, we must needs cultivate a keenness of spiritual vision. Mary tarried at the tomb till that place of sorrow and tears became peopled with angels, and with the Son of God. Her spiritual vision caught sight of the very source of strength and the very fountain of love and life.

WHEN NOT TO SPEAK.

When we are most anxious, and determined, to speak is often the very time when it is most important that we should not speak. Speech is given for edification, and for our help; not for the hurt of ourselves, or of others. Yet we wound others, and do violence to ourselves, more often by speech than by any other means or manner. Happy indeed is he, both for himself and for others, who has learned to bide his tongue.

There is a time when one is disqualified for speech. And that is when anger is hot, when irritation drives and disturbs. The Sunday-school Times recently gave an analysis that is worth while, which we quote in full, for it cannot be improved:

"No good is ever likely to come from our speaking to any one at a time when we feel irritated against that one. That is the one time when our impulses, our thoughts, our feelings, are utterly untrustworthy and, if expressed sure to do more harm than good. It matters not that we have, or think we have, abundant cause for irritation, or that the other person may be "all wrong." This is only additional reason why we should be "all right" before we attempt to deal with the case; and the very fact that we feel irritated is evidence that we are by no means "all right." The only safe thing to do when the strong feeling of irritation sweeps over us is to say little or nothing, go away by ourselves and confess to the Saviour our very feeling as evidence of our sin and unlove, ask Him to purge us of it and to replace it with his own invincible, irresistible love, and then think with concentration of the things that are lovely and admirable in the one against whom we were irritated. After this, and not before it may be safe for us to talk with that one again."

A TRUE WORD INDEED.

Evidently all moneyed men do not believe with Mr. Carnegie about church and denominational schools. We have not found a clearer utterance on this great theme than the following from James J. Hill to a church college.

"This is the finest sight I have seen for many days. A school of this kind should have a good endowment of at least $300,000. Then it would never die. It can't be killed. Give it money, sufficient to secure an income of $15,000 or $20,000 a year, and it will live. There is something about a denominational college that always appeals to me. It is a character-builder. I believe in keeping the boy in the religious path of his ancestors. I don't care whether he is a Methodist or whether he is a hard or soft-shelled Baptist. Too many young people are sent to the non-sectarian school. They begin to read books that they do not understand. No one is by to guide them and they gather a great many ideas which lead them astray. In the denominational college they stay by the old precepts; and the foundations which were laid in the home are builded upon to the great benefit of the student. It is a sad condition, but it is nevertheless true, that in the great University of Minnesota over five hundred students failed in their studies last year. Students don't do that so much in the denominational college. A great per centage of them make good."

And best of all Mr. Hill is backing up his belief with his means and is contributing his beneficent thousands to help the struggling but efficient denominational college.

HANDS FULL OF JEWELS.

The findings about ancient Pompeii still interest mankind. That wonderful and luxurious city was destroyed by an eruption without warning to its busy multitudes. Recently, we are told, a petrified woman has been unearthed just outside of what was the city wall. The woman had both hands full of jewels, and faced from the walls was evidently fleeing when buried beneath lava and ashes. The jewels consist of bracelets, gems, and a pair of ear rings. These last were rich, each having twenty-one perfect pearls set in gold in imitation of a bunch of grapes.

The story is pathetic, and carries a moral of life, though locked hard in the embrace of catastrophe and tragedy. How many are the mortals who have gone to their last end with hands and arms full of rich gems and jewels; but there was no evidence of the pearl of great price hidden away in the heart. All belongings cannot avail in that last and trying hour. Only the pearl of great price can withstand, and endure through deepest darkness and most trying tragedies.

—The city of New York spends each year more than $25,000,000 in fighting the evils which would not exist if there were no saloons.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Assimilation.—It would be difficult to tell what the American spirit is, how it comes about, with whom and where it resides. Yet there is nothing more real and certain than the American spirit. Its power of transformation and assimilation prove its vital existence. During the year 1910 there came to our country 1,198,037 immigrants, an average of 3,285 persons every day of the year. These came to us with experiences differing widely from us as touching matters of civic and religious life. Their habits of thought, speech and conduct differ from ours widely. And yet there is a spirit among us, called the American spirit, which must needs possess itself of all these divergent peoples, tongues and beliefs, and make of them one nation and one people. A tremendous unifying process goes on amongst us forever, and we are held together under a common flag. Surely no nation else ever undertook so gigantic a task as that which confronts the American people. And our only hope of security and safety is in civic righteousness and an unflinching faith in the God of our fathers.

Another Liquorless Paper.—This time it is The Detroit (Michigan) Times. This paper joins that growing class of great dailies whose policy is "no liquor advertisements carried." It will cost The Times $5,000 a year to carry out its 1911 new year resolution, but the die is cast. Here is what The Times editor says about it:

"To many, the young especially, beer-drinking is the beginning of evil. It seems to lead directly to that excess which jeopardizes health, position, happiness.

"Morally, industrially, economically, the age is against the intemperance of which beer-drinking is often the first stage.

"Many homes into which this paper goes alike as the chronicle of the day's history and the professed instrument of helpfulness believe strongly that beer is inimical to the best interests of the family.

"Many have voted to banish the sale of it from their communities.

"The Times believes it has no moral right to antagonize the conscientious convictions of these homes and communities through what it prints in its advertising columns.

"We do not care to be talking beer every day to people who do not want their children to be invited to drink it by their home paper, nor to those who ought not to drink it."

That sounds sober, sane and sensible to us, and covers the subject. Other far-seeing liberal minded, great hearted editors will come, one by one, to see the matter in some such light, and in not many years the liquor dealers are going to find it a difficult matter to advertise and exploit their dangerous and deadly stuff in any high-class and morally upright newspaper. The time is not yet, but it approaches.

How Heroes are Made.—Just after the war between the States a planter down in Louisiana died leaving a mortgage of forty thousand dollars on his lands. The son who took charge could have escaped paying the mortgage by the use of a legal technicality which would have let him out. But the son determined to follow the moral law, and not take advantage of the legal gap. Bad crop followed bad crop, and poor prices prevailed. But the young man toiled and tugged on till he had the satisfaction of paying off the last dollar of that mortgage. And the other day President Taft appointed that honest son of the planter Chief Justice of the United States. The President was of one political faith and this man of another, but character brought down the barriers and brain and industry bridged the chasm. By study, integrity and rugged honesty, heroes are made.

House or Home?—The other day a lawyer was arguing for a client before Mayor Gaynor, of New York: "A man's house is his castle," rhetorically proclaimed the lawyer. "Not when it is a gambling house," replied the practical mayor. Which speech and reply draw a distinction which is worth while, namely, that between a house and a home. Not every house is a home. A man's home is his castle, but, as the Mayor implied, not necessarily his house. Lyman Abbot draws a distinction by saying a man can build a house, but it takes a woman to make a home. That does not necessarily distinguish, for not even every woman makes, or can make, a home. A place where gambling is carried on is not home. Nor where bitterness, nor bickering, nor bitings, nor strife, nor envy, nor contentions dwell. No such poison enters the sacred word nor the holy precinct of home. Home is where peace and love and friendship and friendly fellowship abide beneath a protecting roof.

—The report of the Navy Department, shows that, measured by aggregate tonnage, by strength of officers and men, and by the number of battle-ships of 10,000 or more tons' displacement, exclusive of Dreadnoughts, the United States is now the second naval power of the world. Germany comes third and France fourth.

But this is not the end of our work here. We desire to see this magnificent temple dedicated wholly unto God. There is now about six hundred and sixty dollars indebtedness besides a bonded indebtedness of thirteen thousand dollars, and the first payment of one thousand will be due in April 1911. Shall we not rally to, and continue our aid to this important point and hastily pay off this indebtedness and then turn our attention and aid to another place? There are many places that are needing a good house of worship, just such as this. The fields truly are inviting.

The writer contributing these few lines, with cuts, without Bro. Harrell's knowledge of same, hopes to give the readers an interior view of this handsome edifice, showing the magnificent Molar Organ in the near future.

PORTSMOUTH LETTER.

The Christmas season with its joys and blessings has passed and we are back to our work again. These glad days fill us with new aspirations and send us to our tasks with gladder hearts. Our thoughts about the birth of the Christ child and the blessings attending his advent should make us better and stronger men. We should have no Christmas without Him. How poor human life would be without Christ and his blessings? Take him away and it would lose all of its charm. Jesus Christ was God's Christmas gift to the world! It is evident that God loved us with an infinite love.

Both of the churches of my charge held Christmas entertainments. The Berea Sunday-school held theirs on the evening of December 28th and the house was taxed to its utmost capacity. A well prepared program was rendered to the delight of the audience and the school was remembered with confectioneries and other gifts. The evening was a delightful one and enjoyed by all. The Sunday school is doing good work and has a bright future before it. The workers should feel much encouraged with the work and push it forward with earnestness. There are many in the community that ought to be in the school that have not yet thought it worth while. We trust they may soon get the consent of their minds to share the blessings that come from the work of the Sunday school.

The Christmas entertainment at Portsmouth was held on the evening of the 29th of December. The auditorium and lecture room were filled with the crowds that came to witness the exercises. An excellent program was rendered and the usual confectioneries and presents were given to the school. It was a delightful occasion. The program was pronounced the best we have ever given. The pastor and wife were remembered with handsome gifts from their classes. At Berea the pastor was also remembered with a useful gift. We are grateful for these remembrances and trust we may be able to express our gratitude in deeds of service.

Our services were largely attended last Sunday morning and evening. The attendance at the Sunday-school was very encouraging. We are now planning for another membership contest in the near future. We shall aim to run our membership up to the 500 mark. We are making a special effort to prepare our teaching force for more efficient work. We have introduced David C. Cook's help for the teachers and find them very helpful. We would commend them to any school that wishes to furnish their teachers with the best helps in their class work. The Primary Sunday-school teacher is full of suggestions for the primary teacher. It costs 50 cents per year.

Our training class is another encouraging feature of our work. It meets each Wednesday night after the prayer-meeting and deals with the most practical subjects that pertain to the activities of the church. It will take a lesson occasionally from the book. The class is conducted on the plan of the round table discussion. We have already studied the subject of Christian Endeavor and are now taking up the Twentieth Century Sunday-school which will be discussed generally and then in particular.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is doing splendid work. The wonder is how we did without one so long. It is a great factor. It is one of the easiest things to run in the church. It will just run itself if given a proper chance. Those who never had anything to say or do in public meetings are taking right hold of the work. A young man of the Navy is to lead the meeting next Sunday night. On last Sunday evening there were about fifty people that came to the meeting.

We are expecting to hold a revival meeting in the spring beginning on April 16th. Evangelist Swearingin who was at the Memorial Temple last fall has been engaged for the meeting. We trust that it may be the means of much good. Dear reader join us in prayer to that end.

Nansemond Notes.

The first quarterly conference of this year was held at Berea, Nansemond, last Saturday. The business was transacted in a business-like way. Three deacons were elected: Bros. Willis J. Lee, George T. Rawles and R. B. Odom. They were ordained Sunday. The service was solemn and impressive. These brethren will fill the office acceptably to the church. They are worthy of the confidence of the people.

We missed the dear face of Deacon Thomas R. Gaskins, an account of whose death has already been given in these columns. Brother Gaskins has rendered valuable service to the church. His name and influence will linger long in the hearts of the people. His was a deeply religious life. He lived a consistent life. With him religious duty was always supreme. He made everything else secondary. He could always find time to attend to the work of the church. He was willing to take the humblest position in the church, and fill that to the best of his ability. Truly a good, faithful servant has been called home. "Aunt Gaskins," as she is familiarly called, bows beneath a heavy burden of bereavement. The children feel their loss very keenly, but "Aunt Gaskins" will feel the loss more intensely than the others. He was her daily companion. They loved each other, and their home was happy for them, and a sweet place for guests and friends to gather. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved family, and the church.

Another death, near Driver, Va., which caused much sadness recently, was the loss of James J. Gray, who departed this life at the Lee home on Bennett's Creek, Monday night, January 2, 1911, at the age of 44 years, 2 months and 1 day. He was married to Miss Dollner Lee, on November 6, 1901. He leaves a wife and widowed mother. He was a great sufferer from inflammation of the muscles of the heart. He was confined to his home for several months, and for several weeks was too ill to receive his friends. During his affliction his wife cared for him with all the tenderness and devotion of her faithful heart. Their devotion to each other was beautiful. He fought bravely to overcome the terrible disease, often saying that he did not want to die and leave his dear wife. But he was resigned to the end. He had a faith in Jesus which was an anchor to his soul. The funeral service was conducted from the Lee home, by the writer, assisted by Rev. N. G. Newman. He was buried by the Masons. Brother Gray had been in the active service of the U. S. Weather Bureau for twenty-five years, where he had rendered efficient service. He was recognized in that Department, as a most valuable man. He had a large circle of loyal friends. He was a man of intelligence, and it was a delight to mingle with him, in the social circle. But he as left us, and we shall miss his genial face and gracious hospitality. Peace to his ashes. May the Father comfort and bless his bereaved companion, and his brokenhearted mother.

Valley, Va., Letter.

We are still pressing forward with the work in this field. We have held the meeting at Antioch since the last Valley Letter appeared in the Sun. Congregations were good, and much interest was manifested in the meeting. As a visible result of the meeting nine decisions were made for Christ, and six united with the church. We held a short meeting at Linville in the midst of snow, ice, and zero weather. Owing to this condition and the near approach of Christmas, it was thought best to close for the present, and hold another meeting when conditions are more favorable.

I am now in a meeting at Bethel assisted by Rev. R. L. Williamson.

Antioch and Linville each remembered their pastor with a Christmas gift of cash, Antioch, $8.50, and Linville, $5.30. In addition to these cash contributions several articles of beauty, and value were received. If I understand correctly Misses Lizzie and Edna Johnson took the lead at Antioch, and Miss Ora Scott at Linville in getting up these kind remembrances of an humble pastor's feeble service. Such kindness on the part of parishioners makes a pastor's heart glad. Such expressions of gratitude are appreciated because of the good will they show. May God bless these faithful people, and help me to be a better pastor to them.

We are very busy people in church work at this season of the year, revival meetings are the order of the day.

Winchester Letter.

Last month I went to Wood's Chapel and Whisler's Chapel and held services. These points have been without a pastor since conference. I was greeted by very good congregations at both places. I shall give them night services once per month until they can make more satisfactory arrangements.

We are very sorry to know that Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre's health has failed and that he has been compelled to give up a part of his work. Bro. Dofflemyre has spent several years in the ministry and has done a great deal for the Christian Church. The Lord has graciously blessed his labors and many have been led to Christ through his influence. We hope and pray that our dear brother's health will be restored and that he may be spared for many more years of usefulness.

The Sunday-school at Timber Ridge held their Christmas exercises Christmas afternoon. They were well attended and highly enjoyed. Our school now numbers over 65. The intermediate class has been organized into an Ever-Ready Society which will aid in raising money to furnish the new church.

The Ladies Aid Society has purchased some beautiful oak collection plates for use in our services.

The work on the building has been hindered by unfavorable weather but we have a part of the rafters on and hope to go forward soon.

A Word of Appreciation.

Out of a heart full of gratitude I pour this little tribute to my devoted parishioners. When the blow fell which I had been dreading for years, and I received the announcement that my dear mother had passed away, a sweeter spirit of loving sympathy could not well be expressed than that which came to myself and family from my people, to whom it is my privilege to minister. As the midnight train bore me away to New Jersey, the scene of my childhood, I felt assured that both in Lynn and Boston, I would be remembered at the throne of grace. When I stood by the side of the casket in which mother's precious body reposed, I was assured of the Master's grace, for my people were praying for me. Never before in my whole ministerial experience have I realized more clearly the blessedness of my calling, than during the past two weeks. Oh, what inestimable values attach to one's work when he can feel assured of his sorest needs being met by loyal and loving hearts which have been given their sympathetic helpfulness by Him who is the master sympathizer! As I read in The Sun of Capt Thomas Gaskins' departure on Dec. 23, could not help wondering if he would soon meet my mother over there. She went over Thursday night, and he followed the next day. Who, of all the large number whose privilege it was to know "Captain Tom," could ever think of him but to love him? Of the many precious friendships it was my privilege to form while a resident of the South, none exhale a sweeter fragrance than that with this man of God.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Brother Editor:

We were pleasantly surprised on the evening of December the 30th by a number of our members and friends bringing us a bountiful supply of provisions for our larder. We want in this way to express our gratitude for this act of kindness on the part of our congregation, and wish also to express our appreciation to the following persons who have supplied us with nice things for our table at different times: Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Catheter, Mrs. E. T. Arnold, Mrs. A. C. Oates, Mrs. Levi Lafollett, Mrs. Mary E. Spaid, Mrs. L. S. Johnson, Mr. A. L. Larrick, Mr. and Mrs. A. Morris, Mr. T. L. Larrick, and Mr. J. S. Hiels.

We are truly grateful for all these remembrances. May the Lord richly bless every donor.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Send 20 cts. and get the 1911 Annual. The Sun can supply you now.

—Bro. W. T. Walters, of Winchester, Va., has also been pounded. And then talk about preachers not having a good time and enjoying life. Bosh!

—Rev. T. W. Stroud, we regret to say, is under the necessity of going back to St. Vincent's Hospital, Norfolk, Va., for further treatment by Dr. Payne.

—Rev. L. E. Smith, Greensboro, was a pleasant visitor of the Sun office last week. He is well pleased with the prospects at Greensboro and reports the work going on well.

—All our pastors in particular should read, and give heed to, Dr. Staley's Suffolk Letter this week. This special call for our foreign mission work is exceedingly urgent and cannot be ignored without hurt to the cause.

—Mr. J. Russell Klapp, son of Rev. S. B. Klapp Greensboro, N. C. has a position of honor and trust with the A. B. Caldwell Publishing Co. Atlanta, Ga., in bringing out "Men of Mark," on which history Mr. Klapp has done literary work for some time.

—Rev. J. W. Patton, who is a State-lecturer of the Masonic order, left last week for three weeks of lecturing to Lodges in Charlotte, N. C., thence to Columbus, N. C., for lecturing there. Bro. Patton ranks high among the bright Mansons of the State.

—We regret to learn that our good brother, and faithful worker, Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre, Elkton, Va., has failed in health and must give up a portion of his work. Bro. Dofflemyre has been an untiring worker in the ministry for many years, and we sincerely trust and pray he may recover, soon, his accustomed health and strength. The work will miss him much.

—Do you wish an Annual? We can fill orders now; 20 cents the copy, post paid. Proceedings of all our Southern Conferences, 1910, also of Southern Convention at Suffolk last April, also apportionment tables for all the churches in 1911. It a valuable volume of history and information. Address The Christian Sun, Elon College, N. C.

—Bro. Clements tells in our obituary columns of the death of Deacon J. K. Gibson, of our Morrisville church. This writer had the benefit of a personal acquaintance of Bro. Gibson, and doubts if in all his acquaintance he ever knew a more loyal and faithful man to his church and his God. Truly a good man has gone to his reward. This world is made richer by the lives of such men as Bro. Gibson.

—Rev. McD. Howsare, of Norfolk, Va., is to conduct a series of meetings under the auspices of the Elon College Christian Church at Elon College beginning Monday P. M., Jan. 23. This will be Bro. Howsare's first visit to Elon and a cordial welcome and glad hearing will be given him. Prayers should be daily offered by patrons and friends of the college that these meetings, to continue ten evenings, may result in the conversion of many and in the deepening of the spiritual life of the college community.

—We extend a friend's sympathy to Deacon J. M. Burroughs of Mt. Auburn church in the loss of his beloved wife, the first word of whose going came to us in the lines printed this week in our obituary column. Sister Burroughs was the mother of a happy family, and her home was the soul of hospitality and congenial fellowship. We have whiled away happy hours there and her cordiality and Christian fellowship but made the moments pass all too swiftly. Her roof was a blessing and her home a benediction to many. God bless dear Bro. Burroughs in his affliction, and the children in their sad loss.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It seems that the missionary spirit is the most difficult to diffuse among the members of the Southern Christian Church; and yet it is evidently the most important in Christian effort as well as Christian life. The last great command of Jesus not only authorized but commanded His disciples in these words: "Go ye therefore, and make Christians of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

The church has made advancement whenever she has been evangelistic and missionary; in fact there is little difference between these two branches of Christian effort. The evangelistic spirit is missionary and the missionary spirit is evangelistic. Moreover it is the doing of large things that makes great men and great nations. The very scope of the gospel indicates its greatness; its mission is the evangelization of the world; that task alone would make the gospel great.

Some dread any enterprise until the money is in hand; but cash payments always mean small business; the element of faith enters into undertakings larger than cash and that develops men as well as enterprises. It is that larger thing embraced in faith that enlists the confidence and energy of man.

There must be, also, a spirit created larger than individual purposes to carry individuals on its current and its sweep. This spirit is the sum of individual thought, feeling, faith, and purpose. Until such a spirit prevails individuals do very little in any field. Very few persons can take a calendar and change their clothes and their diet to suit the seasons; but let the temperature rise or fall, let the atmosphere envelop them with its larger demands and individuals begin the change. Wraps and flannels are brought out or purchased under the pressure of a cold atmosphere. There is such a thing as moral atmosphere, social atmosphere, religious atmosphere, missionary atmosphere, and such atmospheres control men. What we need is the creation of a missionary atmosphere so widespread and so powerful that it will move our people toward the great task of saving the world. This is the essential element in the church of Christ and this atmosphere cannot be generated by silence. Men must speak. Men must write. Men must pray. Men must give themselves or their means. This agitation must not stop with the pulpit. The laymen must take up the theme and sound the message of salvation as the moon reflects the sun.

I wonder how many churches in the Southern Christian Convention have taken that special offering for Foreign Missions to help on the Board's work by February? I wonder how many ministers have given the matter serious attention!

NORFOLK LETTER.

Glad to report Bro. Twiddy has been carried to his home from the hospital and is showing some improvement.

Mrs. Hanson is still at the hospital but is getting on nicely; is doing in every way, just as well as could be reasonably expected.

Sorry to know that Bro. Stroud, of Chapel Hill, N. C., had to come back to the hospital. The report today is that he is doing nicely; walking around the building and grounds.

Sunday school at the Third Church was better Sunday, than for several months, had two new scholars.

Congregations were good. At the morning services, Bro. Hanson has preached for three Sundays from the text: "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

They have been deep, spiritual, helpful, on the subject of "Church Building."

We are sorry to lose from our midst, at least for the present, Deacon T. J. Lawrence and family—who have gone to McBee, S. C., where Bro. Lawrence will probably engage in business. He had a brother there who is a practicing physician.

The many friends of Miss Mary Lou Brickhouse will be sorry to know that she had a sudden and severe attack of appendicitis and was operated on at the Protestant hospital last week. She is getting on nicely. Also, Emily, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Walker, was operated on for the same trouble last week. She is at Sarah Leigh Hospital and is doing well.

Norfolk people were shocked Saturday at a terrible accident that shows us how important it is to at all times be ready, for we know not how soon and suddenly we may be called to leave this world.

The Southern Bell Telephone Co. is having built a six-story building. Myers, Turpin Co., are the contractors. It is of concrete construction. The portion built out on the top, to accommodate the elevators, was surrounded by workmen who had just removed the boxing from around the concrete, and the freight elevator started, and the whole of that top structure gave way and suddenly collapsed; some of the workmen saw the danger, gave the warning and leaped to safety, but two were not so fortunate. One man, a Mr. Morris was struck on the back of his head by a falling beam and his skull crushed, killing him instantly. Another, Mr. Johnson, was caught and buried beneath many tons of concrete, leaving just his head exposed to view. He gasped a few times and was dead.

The firemen were soon on the scene and scaled the ladders and frame work on the outside of the building and with ropes around the bodies they were placed over the sides and lowered to the sidewalk. As I stood at my office window and with my field-glasses watched the lowering of the limp, lifeless forms with its death palor. I was made to exclaim, "how frail is life." Both men were married. One leaves a wife and two children, the other, a wife and one child.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. W. E. Swain, Asheboro, N. C., President N. C. Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, visited the College on the 2nd Sunday and delivered a most instructive and inspiring sermon on the "Forms in which Christ appears to Man." Dr. Swain maintained that we cannot limit the manner of Christ's appearance by dogma or creed or personal experience, that he is a universal Saviour and as such may appear to man in universal forms, whatever ones occupation whatever sphere of his life's work, he can take Christ into it with him.

President Moffitt has been spending the present week in the neighborhood of Asheboro.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence, of the Department of English, has made arrangements to be an instructor in English at the Wooster University Summer School, of Wooster, Ohio. This is one of the largest summer schools of the middle west, and last year enrolled in its Summer School, more than 1,000 pupils.

Announcements have just been received that Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D.D., LL.D. Lakemont, N. Y. President Palmer Institute Starkey Seminary, is to visit the College early in February and on the 7th, 8th and 9th, will deliver a course of lectures. Dr. Frank S. Child, Fairfield, Conn., is also to visit the college early in March, but the date has not yet been arranged. These distinguished lecturers come at the generous provision of the Asbury Palmer Board, an educational foundation established by the late Frances Asbury Palmer of New York City.

A series of protracted services, it is decided, will begin in the college chapel with the 4th Sunday in this month, and continue until after the fifth Sunday and longer if the interest continues.

At a recent meeting of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Raleigh, Dr. W. C. Wicker and Rev. J. W. Patton were re-elected assistant state lecturers. These brethren are not only faithful in the service of their church, but are also ardent workers in Masonic circles.

Dr. Newman filled the College pulpit yesterday, and delivered a most instructive and inspiring sermon on the text "Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded."

Dr. E. U. Hoenshel, of Dayton, Va., who has traveled considerably in the Holy Land, will be at the College and deliver a course of lectures on the 15th, 16th and 17th of next month. These lectures together with Dr. Summerbell's will give a rare treat to the student body.

Columbus, Ga. Letter.

The Christmas season was one of joy and pleasure with this writer and wife. Friends remembered us very kindly with gifts of various kinds, all of which were valuable. For these tokens of friendship and good-will we are heartily appreciative.

On Monday night, during Christmas, the children and young people of our Sunday school rendered a program of songs and recitations appropriate for the occasion. A tree had been placed, decorated and filled with presents for the school. A good-sized congregation was present. The exercises were highly enjoyed.

Mr. W. W. Elder, who is teaching in Stewart Co., spent the holidays with his parents in this city. Good reports are heard from his school.

Rev. H. W. Elder was in the city last night, en route to Oak Grove, where he fills his regular appointment Sunday. Bro. Elder contemplates a trip to Kite, Ga., about the second week in February. There is a possible opening at that place for a Christian church. Kite is a town of several hundred inhabitants and has only one church. We have only one member of the Christian church there, but he is a prominent citizen of the place and is not only exceedingly anxious for a Christian church there, but seems to think that prospects are favorable.

With the coming of the new year, there is an increase of attendance at church and Sunday school with the Rose Hill work. While the membership is quite small and the congregations are not large, the outlook is encouraging. We are laboring daily, trying to acquaint the people about us with the principles of our church and, as a result, members of other denominations are visiting us frequently and taking part in our services. In this way, we hope to see the Christian church win its way into the hearts and homes of those near us and who have hitherto been "afraid" to come, thinking we were Campbellites."

This writer enters the new year with a desire to be fruitful in Christ's vineyard as the days come and go. He requests your prayers for the church on Rose Hill.

There are few immigrants of the following class, told of recently by an exchange:

"A Bavarian immigrant, suffering from what was apparently 'lumpy spine,' applied for admission to this country at the port of New York. The inspector told him he must submit to further examination, that it might be determined whether the lumps were caused by a contagious disease. 'Ah,' exclaimed the immigrant. 'It is not sickness. Those swellings is moneys.' And he exhibited about eleven thousand dollars. He was admitted without further question, and the inspector asked him how he also might contract so well developed a case of money lumps.

Among the attraction of The Youth's Companion during the coming year will be two hundred and fifty short stories by such writers as Grace S. Richmond, Ralph D. Paine, Arthur McFarlane, Ira R. Kent, Mebel Nelson Thurston, Arthur Stanwood Pier, Seumas MacManus, C. A. Stephens, F. W. Calkins, Winifred Kirkland and Fanny Kemble Johnson.

THE UNTRIED WAY.

For ye have not passed this way before.
Joshua 3-4.

After the death of Moses the Lord appointed Joshua to succeed him as the people were without a leader. As the minister of Moses he was a suitable one to take the command and lead them over Jordan. The work to be done was a great one, but the greatest and best thing was, the Lord promised to be with and give him the victory. With such assurance he went like a man of God right on to duty. The Jordan flowed before him like an impassable river. It must be crossed, and the promised land, in full view of it, was inviting them to enter it, and he commanded the officers to get ready for the march. He had every thing in his favor and they responded to him gladly as their leader and said to him, be strong and of a good courage. What great inspiration was given, and how delightfully pleasant it must have been to Joshua to receive such encouraging words as he entered upon his great and responsible mission. After all were ready to move, the officers commanded the people saying: When ye see the ark of the covenant of the Lord, your God, and the priests the Levites bearing it—then ye shall go after it—on that ark, the Shechinah, or symbol of the divine presence rested, and it was a reminder that God would be with them.

The people were instructed and commanded how to follow the ark. The way across the river of Jordan was not known to them, and the words of the text giving timely and important notice imparted caution and confidence to them for such an important undertaking. Then Joshua the commander in chief, under the King of kings, ordered the advancing hosts to march with quick and steady steps to the front, and he said to them with great tenderness and authority, Sanctify yourselves; for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you. He desired them to be set apart to a holy use—to get ready by prayerful preparation for the great coming event of that wonderful passage. This will help to learn a lesson in preparation, bringing to mind the importance of always being ready to meet the conditions which will come to every one. Especially should all be earnest and devout when any great and important work is to be done. And all the work pertaining to our salvation is very important. In any condition it is important to render obedient service to the Lord. Let everybody enter into the spirit and meaning of each service. If they would do so there would be better service and more spiritual life. Every service ought to give inspiration and loving devotion, so that the spirit and meaning of it may be better understood.

Then at the command of Joshua the priests took up the ark of the covenant and went before the people and as the people removed from their tents, following the ark of the covenant, and as soon as the priests dipped their feet in the brim of the water, it rose and stood upon a heap, while the priests stood holding the ark, until all the people passed over. Then the Lord directed Joshua to select twelve men, a man from each tribe, that they might take twelve stones, and carry them over and put them up for a memorial showing that the water of Jordan was parted before the ark of the covenant. Then Joshua himself set up twelve stones in the place where the feet of the priest stood. They mark the place where God showed His power to that people. Twelve stones representing the twelve tribes which passed safely over. He was very much interested in setting up the stones where the priests faithfully stood while forty thousand of his people crossed the river. That was a remarkable and wonderful manifestation of God's love and divine power. What emotions of joy must have filled their hearts as they marched triumphantly over into the land which had long been promised to them!

We are journeying through the wilderness of this life, and the promised land, the promised home in heaven is beyond the river of death. It is before us and must be crossed before we enter the heavenly country. When coming to different places in marching through the wilderness to the promised land, and when the Lord has parted the waters for us to pass over, have we gathered up any stones from the beds of the rivers of experience and set them up as a memorial to show to others that the Lord was with us, and that He opened the way for each one to pass over? The traveler through life's wilderness in after years may see a pile of stones which some one set up, and he may enquire in anxious tones, who set up this memorial and for what purpose? Then the answer will come down the years. A traveler passed here going to the promised land, and he came upon a place that was, at first, hard to cross but the Lord removed the obstruction, and made the way easy to pass through. The words still sound in clear accent and are helpful and inspiring to others to go forward. It may be that there are some who came to the river of need and want. Did the dark, turbulent, cold water whirl and roll by swiftly as you stood still and looked upon it? Did it discourage you as the river got higher and higher until it overflowed its banks, sweeping hope and gladness entirely away from you? you sought all the temporal help about you but met a stern refusal many times. At that important moment in your life you caught a view of something better—then, you looked away from earth and all temporal things and thought of the loving and wonderful promises of God, remembering and believing that He had been with others, in need; and you asked Him to be with you and to lead you out of your needy condition. He saw you, heard you pray and came to you with His delivering and helping hand and caused you to walk across while the water was cut off and made to stand as a heap. Did you take up any stones and set them right there in the bottom of that river, thus telling to others that the Lord had gloriously led you through?

And again in your journey you come to the river of trouble, and it was flowing and foaming at a terrible rate, and upon its shore were standing and sitting, lying and waiting not only forty thousand, but many millions of human beings anxious to cross over and rest in happiness and peace. Their troubles were of different kinds and they were counting them over and over, and they appeared to get larger every time they turned them over in the mind. Now let all these troubled ones look up to Him who parted the waters of the Red Sea and of the Jordan in ages past, for His people to go over. Because if they look to Him who has promised to be with them in the sixth trouble and in the seventh not to forsake them He will part the waters of the dashing river of trouble and help them over that they may be delivered, and enter upon a new and better life. And when you do pass over do not forget to take up some stones from that river—carry them over—and set them up to show that the Lord was with you.

The way already traveled has been long and tiresome to many, but when they look back over it as far as they can see, the memory lingers backward the rest of the way, reaching far back, even to the starting place. The journey through the wilderness has been often difficult and dangerous, but beyond your highest joys success has led you on up and down to the present time, and in the early morning of this glad or happy new year, you have or ought to be, praising God for bringing you on the way, and giving you so many blessings. The history of your lives is replete with varied experiences. Very many pleasant thoughts produce feelings of gladness, and those which are unpleasant you want to blot them out entirely, looking for nobler things and a better and more inspiring life. Fondly cherished hopes have elated you often, and then the heart has been almost crushed when they were not realized, but God was leading you on to more abiding and greater things.

This year can be made the best and happiest one to you. You have not passed this way before. If any have plodded, and halted and hesitated, get out of the wilderness, live with God in a new, bright life, then you will feel so much better and look better, because you will shine with His presence. Get out of the disagreeable unhappy conditions which have tied and bound you so long and spend this year 1911 with God, and if you do so, at the end of it you will feel like saying: "Still with thee, O, my God, I would desire to be."

Standing at the dawn of this year there are two classes looking out down the way, the Christians and the sinners. The Christian is happy as he gets nearer the end of his pilgrimage, but the sinner is troubled on every side as he thinks how far away he is from God, from home, from heaven. Many will be saved because they believe, but so many will be lost because they will not be saved. To many the journey is almost completed, and as they follow God they are glad that they are nearing home. The long way they have traveled stretches away behind them, and they can never pass that way again. Looking at the tattering, trembling forms of many, it appears that they are almost home. Yes, the weather beaten, storm-tossed passengers will soon be anchoring in the heavenly harbor.

The way which lies before is unseen, unknown, and how anxious is every one to look upon it and down its winding course. Be well assured that if you walk in the way Jesus leads no danger need be feared. But if you get out of His way there is danger and death. Sometime it may please you to turn out of the way and pluck a beautiful wild flower which is very attractive, but it may poison and ruin you. Many attractive flowers are poison; it is not safe to touch them, so many attractive sins may poison the soul and cause its eternal ruin. As the Israelites passed through the wilderness under the leadership of Moses, then by the command of Joshua to the promised land, so must we pass the way under the direction of Jesus to the promised home in heaven. The end of the way of life lies just beyond the river, and he who endures to the end will be saved. A godly man said when at the end of his journey, "I am sweeping through the gates." Then said another in failing accents, "How easy, how easy to glide from the work here to the ———." He could not utter the last words: so exhausted by the last part of the journey, but was revived and refreshed when he bathed in sweet, peaceful rest.

Not long ago you come to the river of sickness where the rapid waves were surging, dashing and splashing before you, and you came very near being washed on the shore of eternity. Many have been down close to this river and know something of the feelings it produced. Then above all other times you felt the need of divine help, and when the Lord came to you and parted the waters of that river so that you could get over into health and strength how exceedingly happy you were and how grateful that you were healed through the soul. It was the gladness not express the thrill of joy which flowed and could be active again. Words cannot describe your life and it was so delightful for you to talk of the wonderful deliverance. Did you take any stones from the chanel of that river and set them up so as to remind you and show to others that God was with you with healing and delivering power when refreshing sleep departed and feverish and frightful dreams followed you? The hands of affliction had bound you so firmly you became discouraged and despaired of ever getting well again, but the eternal one was with you giving comfort by His unbounded mercy and love. Did you learn anything by this experience? did you gain anything by it? Yes, many voices are sounding with the same answer to this question. Hear, listen to it before it floats away and is forgotten. "Before I was afflicted I went astray and it is this I learned by the sick experience. O, you sick, diseased, weekly ones when you pass over that unpleasant way take some stones and set them up to show that God was with you! You have crossed many rivers and the Lord has helped you over all of them."

There is a last river to cross, many, so many of your loved ones have already gone over it. It must be crossed by all at some time. It is the river of death. When you come to it, when the black waves of death come rolling near you what will you do? What will the unsaved do as they linger and shiver on the cold shore of that awful stream? No refuge, no help, no hope, no home, none to save. What will they do? They will have to plunge in and be lost in the angry waves. Lost, lost. But the Christian when he comes to this river will see Jesus coming in the life boat, will hear His precious, loving voice sounding out gladly over the roaring water saying—peace be still. The storm will cease raging and there will be a great calm as the heaven bound passengers get on board the life saving ship. What a glorious moment that will be as they are waving a glad farewell to earth, to the desert through which so many weary days have been seen, and when they can view with undimmed eyes the promised land inviting them to come over and possess it! As you enter it you may sing triumphant song for such a complete deliverance and the angels will join in the sublime strains until heaven will sound the praises of God with never ending splendor.

A FORCEFUL EXAMPLE.

When a man has lived on a high plane of morality, and has made himself eminently useful to all with whom he has had any dealings, it is well to present him as an example for others to imitate. Mr. John S. Huyler, of New York City, recently died. He began life as a poor boy, and, by good judgment, great energy, and sterling integrity, he became a business man of large success. He manufactured candy, and always of the very best qualities. All who dealt with him had the utmost confidence in his word and his work. He became a millionaire, and during all of his career he was very liberal in his benefactions to a large number of good objects. He was a Christian of a high type. He showed that true religion and honorable business methods match each other capitally. Here is what one of his saleswomen wrote of him, soon after his death: "He was never too busy to have a cheerful 'Good Morning,' and a kind and encouraging word for the humblest of his people. He extended his thoughtfulness even to the sending of his saleswomen to the best chiroporlists to ease and treat their aching feet, at his own expense.

It was his custom to give his girls, at the beginning of the summer, two or three shirt waists (which means a lot to a working girl), two weeks' vacation, with pay, every year, a turkey at Thanksgiving time, and at Christmas a week's salary, and a two-pound box of candy. He offered to all a membership in the Young Woman's Christian Association, and the privilege of taking up music, or any other course they desired, free of charge or expense to them. These are only a few of the deeds of this goodly man, and there are no more sincere mourners today than his old employees." Who can estimate the influence which that man had upon those who worked for him?

What a wide contrast there is between Mr. Huyler's treatment of those who were employed by him, and the treatment given to those who serve not a few business men! How delightful is one's memory of such men as Mr. Huyler!

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THE MODEL WAY. I.

Our Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor and other religious conventions formerly had on their programs such subjects as these: A Model Superintendent, A Model Prayer-meeting, A Model Sunday-school Teacher, and a dozen or more other kinds of models. The rapt listener heard the model speech or speeches and suggested. For the first two or three weeks there seemed newness of life and growth of interest. Then the old lethargy began to reappear. Unless the model method was changed, the enterprise was dead, be it a class or a prayer-meeting or a what-not.

Why? There is no model way in religious work. There is no model way to teach a Sunday-school class nor to conduct a prayer-meeting nor to hold a revival nor to open and close a Sunday-school nor to welcome a religious body nor perform any other religious function. The moment the methods used in any of these things becomes a model, it loses its effect. Models are lifeless things—religion is life or it is nothing. There are certain characteristics which must be found in every well-taught Sunday-school lesson, in every inspirational prayer-meeting, in every elevating church service, but these characteristics, these principles, are living things, which must not be made to work in grooves, else dire consequences will follow.

The worker, in whatever sphere, is an artist. He uses the same lives and paints and brushes and canvas, but does not paint the same picture. He is a sculptor. He uses the same tools, works the same motions, uses similar material, and yet does not always carve the same statue. He is a musician. He uses the same musical scale, but his song is not ever the same. He is a master of assemblies. He uses the same words, the same gestures, the same intonations of voice, but his oration is not always the same. From these analogies let the religious worker take courage and hope. His work is founded upon certain eternal principles, but he is to so combine those principles that interest will ensue, that success will eventually, that results will be achieved. But let him beware of the model way. There is no such way.

The Young People's Worker.

For several months now, since last July, in fact, the Young People's Worker, edited by Rev. M. W. Butler and published by Prof. P. J. Kernodle, has been making a semi-monthly visit to our editorial sanctum. The first issue contained words of approval from many of our foremost workers for such a project and wished it well. Yet somehow the paper is not receiving the support it deserves at the hands of our people. Why?

There will perhaps be many answers to that simple interrogation. We shall be glad to publish your idea, if you will send it to us. We herewith state our own. The paper needs to get itself more nearly in accord with the ideals and aims of the Young People's Convention. I think it would be a master-stroke of policy to call it the Young People's Convention Worker, or the Young People's Worker, Organ of the Young People's Convention, but of course permission to do this would have to be given by the said Convention. If this publication is to be permanent among us, the Convention must get behind it. Otherwise it must inevitably succumb. Is the paper in its editorial policy now pledged to the furtherance of the Convention's end? Does it advocate "Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday-school; Christian Endeavor in every church?" Is this its motto, its watch-word? If so, why not so print on its title page? In its advocacy of Teacher-Training, does it give more support to other publications than our own? The paper and the Young People's Convention ought to be allies, not enemies, not even suspicious of each other. One topic for discussion before the approaching session of the Young People's Convention should certainly be "The Relation of the Young People's Worker to this Body." We want to see the paper grow; we want to see the Convention's idea pushed. We have written not to criticize, but to suggest a basis of co-operation.

What are you doing for Teacher-Training in your field, brother pastor; in your Sunday-school, brother superintendent? Can we count on you?

Brother Sam. M. Burritt, Raleigh, N. C., Circulation Manager of the Raleigh Evening Times, is heading the Christian Endeavor work of our church in that city. We wish him well in all his labor and efforts.

We will send the C. E. World free for three months to anyone promising to use it for prayer-meeting purposes.

MISSION THOUGHTS.

We are to take a missionary journey around the world, with twelve stops. May the review be an inspiring one to us all!

The lumbermen of our northern woods are a sturdy and sincere set of men, though rough. They are greatly insulated from Christian influences, though the saloon and still worse agencies of Satan are swift to follow them even into the wilderness.

Among the Russians, Finns, and Poles that come to this country are many revolutionists,—men and women that have dared everything and lost everything for liberty. They are heroes and heroines, but so saddened by their experiences that they have largely become infidels.

The Bohemians that come here are especially active in their infidel propaganda, with infidel Sunday-schools, and infidel books and papers. Christians need to be very aggressive to meet such aggressive foes.

Puritan New England has become one of the strongholds of Romanism, which is here as intolerant as ever, and as superstitious and crafty. The best combative agency is the public school which they fight.

Christian Endeavor is found among the Germans, Italians, Greeks, French, Swedes, and many other nationalities of our immigrants, as well as among the Chinese and Japanese. Our Christian Endeavor fellowship is one of the best ways of reaching the aliens.

It is natural that the immigrants should herd in colonies in our cities, and thus perpetuate their languages and customs, but this is not best for their material welfare, and prevents their absorption in our country. They should be encouraged to move out into the great west and south where laborers are so much needed.

The hard times pulled the number of immigrants down from more than a million to one-third of that number; but the inrush has again started up, and soon it will be as great as ever, if not greater; and our home-mission gifts are woefully inadequate to the vast need and opportunity.

The sailors on our lakes, rivers, and the ocean are not cared for on ship as to their souls, and are tempted by human sharks on shore. They sadly need just the comradeship and constant stimulus that Christian Endeavor would give them. Can we not found societies among them more than we do?

The rescue missions in our cities greatly need the encouragement that the presence of a band of Christian Endeavor singers every night would give. And the Endeavorers would gain more than they bestowed.—Amos R. Wells.

Keep the missionary meetings at their best by especial study and definite preparations. These meetings should be begun a year in advance!

In all your endeavors for Christ seek to be at your best, remembering that He has freely given of His best for you.

The list of The Youth's Companion's contributors for 1911 is as long and as remarkable as in any previous year of its history. Especially noteworthy is the number of public men, educators, inventors and men of science whose message to The Companion public is rich educational value. They are supplemented by the most entertaining writers of the day, with articles full of refreshment and spiritual sunshine.

Every body will be interested in an article Mrs. Burton Harrison has written for The Youth's Companion, comparing girls as they are and girls as they were in the earlier days of the nation. President Jefferson favored the intellectual development of woman, but he declared that her efforts should be confined to "the society of her husband, the fond care of her children and the arrangements of her house." Changing fashions and changing ideas are discussed with Mrs. Harrison's customary vivacity.

THE GREAT RELIGION OF THE WORLD.

Christianity can best be appreciated by comparing it with the other religions of the world. Neither can we fully appreciate the difficulties to be overcome until we know something of the strength and weaknesses of the other religions of the world. Years ago we came across an abridged statement of some of the cardinal principles of a number of the great religions and herewith submit them, hoping to lead the reader to a deeper appreciation of our own great religion and a greater desire for the spread of the same until the kingdoms of earth shall come under the reign of the Christ.

The Jews.

What they believe is summarized by Mainonides, an illustrious rabbi who drew up a confession of faith for his coreligionists in the eleventh century as teaching "(1) the unity and personality of God, the Creator, Preserver and Providential Ruler; (2) who recompenses the good and punishes transgressors; (3) who prescribes the law given by Moses; (4) who speaks to man by the voice of the prophets and psalmist; (5) who raises the dead; (6) and who shall one day manifest himself more fully in the coming Messiah. The orthodox Jews still hold to this creed. The reformed Jews have modified it and especially discarded the long-cherished hope of the Messiah.

Christianity.

"Christianity is the religion of Jesus Christ whom Christians receive as the promised Messiah of the Mosaic economy. Taking the seed thought of Judaism the Galilean develops from this the Divine Fatherhood of God and its corollary of human brotherhood, twin truths even yet insufficiently appreciated and reduced to practice in Christendom itself. Christ sets himself forth as the Son of God coming to earth to atone for sin and to save all sinners on the simple terms of penitence and faith manifested in a righteous life, to give an ideal of righteousness, to bestow upon his disciples power to realize this ideal through the Holy Spirit; and to bring life and immortality to light. Christianity should be studied in connection with Judaism, to which it is related as result to cause."

Mohammedanism.

"Mohammedanism came out of the untamed mind of the epileptic Mohammed, an Arabian of good family who was born in the year 571 of the Christian era. This creed is a singular compound of paganism, Judaism and Christianity with an infusion of fatalism and fanaticism all its own. The Mohammedan Bible is called the Koran (Alcoran, in Arabic.) It teaches that "There is no God but God" and adds the stereotyped phrase "and Mohammed is his prophet." The Koran recognizes the authority of our Bible and acknowledges Christ as a prophet, but claims to be a later and final revelation. It divides religion into two parts, faith and practice. Faith is subdivided into six branches; belief in God in his angels, in his scriptures, in his prophets, in the resurrection and final judgment, and in God's absolute decrees.

The points relating to practice are: Prayer (with washings), almsgiving, fasting, pilgrimages to Mecca and circumcision. These five commandments are symbolized in Mohammedan art by the hand with its five fingers. Nowadays, however, only the first is in common use. The Moslem performs his prayers several times a day, kneeling after careful ablution, upon his prayer rug and facing toward Mecca. This is the only form of divine service now required and is scrupulously observed.

Mohammedanism recognizes and encourages polygamy. This religion stands for total abstinence, intoxicants being absolutely forbidden.

It has been the bloodiest of faiths. With the Koran in one hand and the cimeter in the other it has forced those whom it has conquered to accept the one or feel the other.

MARRIED.

Burton-Swann.

DIED.

Senter.

At his home near Christian Light Church in Harnett, Co N. C., on the 26 of Nov., Joseph R. Senter. He was born Dec. 15, 1870. He professed faith in Christ last Sept. He had been in poor health two or three years, and his death was not unexpected. He was up as usual that day and night until he went to his room to retire. In a few minutes after this he was taken suddenly ill, and did not live but a short time. "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as you think not, the Son of man cometh."

He has left to mourn their loss a devoted wife and six children, one having gone on before the father to the Spirit land. May God bless the wife and her children.

W. G. Clements.

Gibson.

Ever since I heard of the death of J. K. Gibson I have been watching the pages of the Christian Sun, expecting to see something in it about his death, written by the one who conducted his funeral services, but have failed to see anything.

I know nothing of the particulars of his death; therefore, I can not say anything about it.

Bro. Gibson was, at the time of his death, a deacon of Morrisville Christian Church. He was faithful to the church and always gave liberally to the support of pastor and the various enterprises of the denomination. I am of opinion that no one ever gave more to the Christian Church in proportion to his ability than he did. He never let an opportunity pass without giving. He was one of the best friends the Christian Sun ever had. He was always kind and obliging. "He was a friend indeed."

W. G. Clements.

Showalter.

Howard Franklin the infant son of Frank and Emma Showalter died Dec. 12, 1910, at the age of six weeks. Little Howard's life was short, but it was long enough for him to entwine himself about the hearts of father and mother so lovingly that it was hard, so hard, for them to give him up. Bro. Showalter is a member of the Christian church at Antioch, and Sister Showalter of the United Brethren church at Mt. Clinton.

The funeral services were conducted at the home and the little tabernacle of clay laid to rest in cemetery at Mt. Horeh U. B. Church.

A. W. Andes.

Burroughs.

The closing day of the year 1910 brought gloom and sadness to the home of Deacon J. M. Burroughs of Mt. Auburn church, the death angel claiming the wife and mother of that home.

Sister Burroughs in early life connected herself with the M. E. Church at Union Chapel, and while loyal to her church, her love and sympathy went out to all denominations. Her work in the church, though of a quiet nature, was such as to impress one with her sincerity. Her most effective work was in her home and the homes of the community whose sickness or want prevailed.

She was indeed the "Dorcas," of that neighborhood and will be sadly missed. Her pure and unselfishness in arlohrakdow Her pure and unselfish friendship will be cherished by all who knew her.

May the life of devotion she lived and the grace of God comfort and sustain the sorrowing ones.

One Who Loved Her.

Chaddock.

At her home, Winchester, Va., January the first, Mrs. Minnie C. Chaddock, wife of S. P. Chaddock, at the age of 48. She had been a consistent member of the Disciples church for a number of years.

She is survived by her husband, one son, and one daughter and also four brothers and four sisters.

The funeral services were held by the writer at Reliance, Virginia, where the remains were laid away to await the resurrection morn. May God in his mercy bless and comfort the bereaved.

W. T. Walters.

Gaskins.

Whereas, It hath pleased our Heavenly Father to take from labor to reward, Deacon Thomas Rice Gaskins, on Friday, December 23, 1910, after a brief illness; and, whereas, Deacon Gaskins had been, for more than forty-five years, a faithful and consistent member of Berea, Nansemond, church; and, whereas, he has filled the honored office of Deacon with high honor to himself and acceptable service to the church; and whereas, he was Superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years, always striving to discharge his duty in the spirit of Christ; and, whereas, he was always ready to respond to the call of duty, even in the humblest fields of service; Therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That while we deeply deplore his death, yet, we bow meekly to the Will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

2. That we record our heartfelt appreciation of his noble Cristian character, as exemplified in humanity, brotherly kindness, charity, faith, hope and love. He was preeminently religious, and his duty to God was the highest aspiration of his heart. We desire to emphasize this trait of his character, and feel that his life has left a bright and shining way, which is a safe guide for others to follow.

3. That we record our gratitude for his efficient service to this church, which was dear to his heart; and in doing so, we feel that eternity, alone, will reveal all that he did for the cause of Christ in this community, for he often rendered service which was not revealed to the eyes of his best friends; and, we furthermore wish to bear record to the faithful service rendered to the general enterprises of the church at large.

4. That we strive to emulate his worthy example, and ever cherish his precious memory in our hearts, pressing onward to carry forward the work to which he was so deeply devoted.

5. That we deeply sympathize with his family in this dark, sad hour, and point his dear, devoted widow and children to the Father who is able to keep them from falling, and who is willing to help them in their bereavement.

6. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of this church, a copy sent to the Christian Sun for publication and a copy sent to the family.

Adopted in regular quarterly conference at Berea, Nansemond, Christian Church, January 7, 1911.

C. E. TOPIC FOR JAN. 29—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.Home Missions North and East—Jonah.
3: 1-10.

Let the Missionary Committee lead.

Home Missions North and East—Jonah

The Leader's Remarks: Just as Jonah was sent to a great city to proclaim its destruction unless it repented, just so our home missionaries, our social settlement workers, our charity agents are sent to the great cities of this new world. The message is the same: Repent or be destroyed. There is a great drift of population to the cities. Unless the modern church can win the city, it will not save the world. And the cities can be saved. It is true the problems there differ from those in the country. But the people are easily accessible and ought to be reached. The city is also the back-bone of our civilization. Unless they are Christianized, our civilization is doomed to failure.

Questions for Meditation and Voluntary Answer:

How does immigration complicate the Home Mission work of the North and East?

How does Roman Catholicism?

What in Social Settlement work is commendable?

What reproachable?

How can we reach the slum population?

How can we aid those in prison?

In alms-houses?

The shut-ins?

What about Sunday work?

What about the Saloon?

What about the gambling den?

What difficulty does the theatre present?

Why is it harder to be a Christian in the city than in the country?

What if we do not reach the city?

How does the Y. M. C. A. help in city evangelization?

The Y. W. C. A.?

The Salvation Army?

A NEEDED REVIVAL.

Why is it that with all the present-day interest in everything calculated to make country life more attractive, there has been so little serious effort to revive the old-fashioned singing-school?

Fifty years ago is flourished everywhere throughout the northern part of the country. It may have reached its highest development in New England, but it was not by any means confined to that region.

Nothing except town meeting offered a social opportunity so democratic, and town meeting belonged exclusively to the men. The singing-school brought old and young together, in a common interest, as few other forms of social diversion have ever done. It afforded both occasion and place for the meeting of the sexes under conditions the most unobjectionable. No one will ever know how many happy marriages have resulted from acquaintances first made at a singing-school or friendships which ripened into love during the long walks back and forth.

Lastly, the singing-school promoted interest in the most broadly human of all the arts, and thus became an influence for the moral and spiritual health of the community.

There are old persons to whom those evenings of song are now a memory they would not willingly lose—a link to youth and home and early friendships. Does the bridge-whist party fill the same place?

No other single influence draws young people from the country to the city so steadily as the desire for larger social opportunity as nothing else can. The Scotch and the English know this. They support their rural singing-schools with enthusiasm. Competent judges have recently declared that in no other part of the world has the mass of the people attained to such a high degree of vocal culture and musical intelligence as in Scotland and Wales. This general interest in the art of singing has been found to be a powerful influence for the educational, social and religious improvement.

GOOD AND BAD NIGHTS.

In many households in many lands is heard every morning the pathetic question, "Did you have a good night?" Has sleeplessness increased with advancing civilization, or have we simply become intolerant of it?

In modern speech, "Have you had a good night?" means always, "Have you slept well?" Is the sleeping night the only "good night?" Most of those whom bad nights make sad are not the victims of overwork, but of disease. To such sufferers let the good news come that there are other ways of passing a "good night" than the gracious old one of sleeping.

Most of these ways have to be acquired by painful effort, but once gained they are precious possessions. "Last night," said a little woman who has scarce an hour free from pain, "I had such a good time! My memory was wideawake, and I went over days of a beautiful journey I made in the White Mountains thirty years ago. I must look up on the map the name of one place where we took dinner."

Then there are the "good nights" of converse with the poets. How much verse do you know "by heart?" More than you think, as you may prove by beginning with "My country, 'tis of thee," and "Rock of Ages," and going on through "Mother Goose" and Longfellow and Kipling. There are "good nights" for the fortunate folk who learned Bible verses as children. One may have "a good night" by recalling the beautiful pictures one has seen, the mountains one has climbed, and the good men and women and children one has loved.

In sort, one's "good nights" are limited only by one's command over imaginative memory. As one lies quiet and retraces, step by step, the joys of even the simplest life, one may learn to answer this modern question with a cheerful, confident, "I never have a bad night." —Youth's Companion.

Famine and the Plague are ravaging immense areas in China. In the Huai River valley, according to reports received by the state department at Washington, between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 people are in distress from famine. The American National Red Cross Society has cabled $5,000 to Minister Calhoun as a relief fund. In Mongolia and Manchuria thousands have died from the plague. The sick receive little care, and the dead remain unburied.—Ex.

BUILDING THE INDIVIDUAL.

God is building human personalities. That is our work also. We are co-laborers with him. Great preaching is preaching which sets free the latent energies of the soul and builds up rich and potent personalities. All great preachers are alike in this. They create by their preaching resourceful, masterful, and God-like men. The greatest gift which the Church can give the world is a full-grown man having in him the mind of Jesus. Measure your success as preachers, not by the size of the congregation which may after all be only a huge ecclesiastical jelly-fish drifting aimlessly and uselessly through the social sea, but by the stature and girth of the manhood which you develop in individual believers, by the brotherliness and serviceableness and Christlikeness of the separate disciples whom you build into the Christian brotherhood.—Charles E. Jefferson, in "The Building of the Church."

—Mr. Andrew Carnegie continues to give influence and money for the abolition of international war, and the establishment of perpetual peace. His recent gift was $10,000,000 in five per cent, first mortgage bonds. This will yield a half million dollars annually, and will be expended by a board of 27 trustees. When the primary purpose of abolishing war is achieved, the donor intends that the money shall be expended for "the next most degrading evil or evils, the suppression of which would most advance the progress, elevation and happiness of man."

THE MISSIONARY CRUISE 1910.

By Von Ogden Vogt.

A company of fifty-one persons sailed on the "Athena" from Brindisi July 6th last for the Missionary Cruise, most having come from the Edinburgh Conference. The program of mission visits was carried out as planned at the last meeting of the Committee in New York except the stop at Salonika. Extra visits not previously planned were made to the Greek monastery on the island of Patmos, to Rhodes and to the Venetian city of Famagusta on the east coast of Cyprus.

Professor Harlan P. Beach used the free sailing days on board for seven lectures on the races, religions and social movements of the Turkish Empire.

The conference at the Armenian village of Bardizag near the Gulf of Nicomedia with the members of the Western Turkey Mission was detailed and comprehensive. Several missionaries rode six wagon days and three sea days to reach the meeting. About thirty came on board the yacht with us thence to Constantinople. Conferences were held with teachers and workers in the city and with professors at Robert College up the Bosphorus. Three missionaries sailed with us on the long trip amongst the islands for Smyrna and Mersina.

At Adana came a chance to meet many members of the native church and a notable visit with Chamal Bey, vali of the province, to whose addresses General Beaver replied. Another conference was held at St. Paul's Institute, Tarsus, before leaving Alicia.

In Syria the chief meetings were held at the Syrian Protestant College in Beirut and at the boys' school at Suk el Gharb. The personal home visits during the days on the mountains added greatly to the comprehension of mission life, its fascinations and problems.

Four missionaries from Egypt and one from Macedonia travelled with us over the Lebanon ranges and through Palestine.

The trip up the Nile to Luxor was made in much greater comfort than was anticipated. The busy day at Assiut amongst the thronging boys and girls of the schools and the young men of the college was in some ways the most vividly impressive of the cruise. Cairo and Alexandria are both instructive and inspiring for the admirable and extensive mission establishments in active operations.

The whole program opened up such a wide range of appreciations as to influence profoundly every member of the party; and the influence will surely spread. Our group included several members each of the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches, with two or three each from the Episcopal, Lutheran and Methodist churches.

The visits were helpful to the missionaries by their general personal relationships and by the encouraging addresses of such of our members as Dr. Blackburn of Oregon, Dr. Day of Los Angeles, President Beach of Bangor, Dr. Kuhlman of Gettysburg, W. W. Mills, Esq. of Ohio, General Beaver, Professor Aspinwall of Albany and others.

I greatly hope that the plan may be continued in some form or other, though I shall not myself have the time for its arrangement. It is entirely feasible at almost any season of the year. The huge and complicated problems of the Near East call for sympathetic understanding and vigorous aid from the largest possible number of people. The pleasures of Mediterranean cruising, with the historical and artistic interests of the Levantine lands are so great that I believe a systematic plan could annually attract numbers of people, to the great benefit of the Christian institutions and labors there.

"Forget them not, O Christ, who stand Thy vanguard in the distant land!
Thine is the work they strive to do;
Their foes so many, they so few.
Yet thou art with them, and thy name Forever lives, is aye the same.
Be with thine own, thy loved, who stand Christ's vanguard in the storm-swept land!"

The guidance exercised by the Divine Spirit, by which we are completely surrounded, is not of the nature of compulsion; it is only a leading and helping influence, which we are yet able to resist if we choose.—Sir Oliver Lodge.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Salem Chapel.

I have made two appointments since Conference to this historic church, but the weather was very unfavorable. We are looking for increased interest here this year. We have good material in this congregation, and we only need to utilize it.

Ingram, Va.

I have made two appointments to this church since Conference. This church has sustained some very serious reverses in the death of Bro. T. A. S. Boyd, and the removal of Bro. J. W. Carlton and family to Richmond, Va. Bro. Carlton is our Sr. Deacon, Sister Carlton is one of our most faithful members, and Miss Nannie Carlton has been our efficient organist leader in church and Sunday-school work. Their places will be hard to fill, but I am sure we yet have some of the very best to go on with the work. I only have to mention Dr. Kent, Bro. Adams, Dunn, Cora Boyd and others. My congregations are larger than they have ever been as I enter into my fourth year as pastor.

Happy Home.

I have made my second visit to this church also, but the weather was very inclement. The interest was good and the Sunday school is in good condition. We note with pleasure the return of Bro. W. H. Davis is one of our best workers. Bro. W. S. Wall was re-elected Supt., of the Sunday-school for this year. Bro. Wall is our best Supt., as well as a noble Christian man. We lost by marriage our very efficient church Secretary, Sister Minnie Swann: Mrs. W. H. Burton, who now resides also in Richmond, Va.

Keyser.

I have not been able to preach in Keyser since Conference, but have had it supplied by Rev. J. T. Earp. This is a small church, but a most excellent people, and we are looking for good work there this year. This little church has an ever-green Sunday-school.

New Center.

Here I have been twice since Conference. I found everything in a good condition. The Christmas Tree, was a most gratifying success. The Sunday-school prospered last year with E. D. Lawrence Supt., one of our very best Supts., as well as one of our very best Christian men. The Christmas Tree was nice, rich and made glad many tender hearts. I wish to express my appreciation of this Sunday-school in the nice as well as valuable presents on this tree, among which was a nice purse of gold coin. This is the truest evidence of real appreciation. It is not always so much in what we say, but more in what we do.

Christian Union.

I have preached here twice since Conference. This too is a most excellent little church. It has gone through some losses in members. The few brethren here are trying to remodel this house of worship which is quite a financial burdon to them. We have some good people here. I am starting out with a very heavy year's work before me, and I wish the daily prayers and co-operation of all my people. I feel very much interested in my work and believe my people are also interested in the work. Well, to say the least I feel fortunate to have such a people to whom to preach and a people who love to take care of their pastor. The good Lord bless them.

THE INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, SOUTH.

By W. E. McClenny, Ph. B.

In Seven Chapters—Chapter IV.

Education.

The ministers who withdrew from the Baltimore Conference of 1792 and later organized the Christian Church in the South were educated men for their day, as their writings will show. However, many of these did not believe that the church had any part or lot in education. They believed that God sent out preachers to build up a pure and simple hearted people, and that it was the province of gentlemen to attend to educating the youth of the land.

At first the Christian ministers went hither and thither preaching, making converts, and urging all the followers of Christ to unite on their platform, the Bible, but they seemed to fear organized effort in any direction. They did not seem to look into the future or to anticipate the needs of the church of tomorrow. The idea of beginning a new organization did not seem to enter their minds.

In addition to this, they made the not uncommon mistake of considering things which they found co-existing as related to each other cause and effect. They saw a professional education and salaried settlement of the prevalent ministry, associated with a spirit of intolerance, sectarian bigotry, and religious apathy. They mistook the former to be the cause of the latter, and often denounced both reliance on professional education and stipulated salaries as cutting the nerve of spiritual power and success in winning souls to Christ. Thus, along with their consecrated zeal, their earnest application of Bible truth, their success in winning souls to Christ, who had not been touched by the old method, and their broad charity among those who were real believers, they did not spare the shafts of sarcasm against the educated "hirelings," who enjoyed the fat places and popular esteem, who stood in their way, and whose ministry was bare of results. In spite of the fervor of their zeal and the splendor of their immediate success, the disastrous results of this mistake lingered long after them, and this it has been difficult to overcome, or to outgrow. This has been the drawback in their successors throughout the history of the denomination.

In the records of the conferences which we have examined, there is no mention made of education, for the laity or the ministry. No private school conducted by a member of the Christian Church was recommended. Thus, up to the year 1830 at least, the Christians, as a denomination, had taken no cognizance of education, but during that year the North Carolina and Virginia Conference had a committee on education. Soon thereafter we are informed that interest began to be aroused.

The pioneer in religious education in the Christian Church, South, was Rev. Daniel W. Kerr, who was a scholar of rare attainments, and a successful and widely-known teacher. In 1826 the Wake Forest Academy, situated on the Oxford road about twelve miles from Raleigh, N. C., was incorporated with Rev. Daniel W. Kerr as principal. Twelve years later he was principal of Junto Academy, formerly called Mount Pleasant, which was incorporated in 1838. This school was located in Orange County, N. C., about three hundred yards from the present site of Mount Zion Christian Church, founded by Elder Kerr while teaching there.

The academy, which was located on Kerr's own farm, in his front yard in fact, consisted of three log cabins. The central one, a one room frame building, 24 x 32, was used for recitation purposes. The two on either side were dormitories for boarders, one for young men and the other for young women. In '42 there were about fifty students there. Soon after that date the place was visited by a fire, and then a new house was built, and the name was changed from Junto to Mount Zion Academy. The curriculum offered prepared for any college or university, and its advertisements boldly declared that it was a non-sectarian school, which gave strict attention to moral as well as intellectual training. In May 1841, Elder Kerr stated in a letter that there was "in this section (Mt. Zion neighborhood) a strong and tremendous combination of sectarian bigots to prostrate my academy, and they are using every means in their power, except those of openness and truth, for the accomplishment of their nefarious purpose."

In 1849, or before, Elder Kerr removed the Junto (Mt. Zion) Academy to Pittsboro, North Carolina, where he taught a male academy until his death the next year. With him his school died.

The next pioneer in the field of church education for the Christians, was Rev. John R. Holt, who about 1837 established a private school in the southern part of what is now Alamance County, North Carolina. He continued this for two or three years. Then about 1840 he moved to the vicinity of New Providence Christian church, a mile or so north of the present town of Graham, North Carolina, now the county seat of Alamance County. Here he taught school two years in a building that stood near the site of the present church. In 1845 he re-opened his school, which had been closed for three years, in the same place. In 1848 he moved his school to Graham. Here he taught with little intermission for nine years. In the year 1849 we find that the subject of education in the Christian Church had become a burning question.

It was during this period that Graham Institute was established, largely by him, as a school for the Christians. We may say that this was the first strictly church school of the Christians in the South. Elon College is the outgrowth of this school, and we might say that this marks the real beginning of church education among us as a denomination. We will look at this more carefully.

At the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Hank's Chapel, Chatham County, North Carolina, in October, 1849, a letter was received from the church at Union (Alamance) suggesting the propriety of establishing a seminary of learning at the town of Graham. This suggestion was referred to a committee of six, with Rev. John R. Holt as chairman. Upon a recommendation of this committee, the conference appointed a standing executive committee of ten, Rev. John R. Holt, chairman, to mature some plan by which might be erected within the bounds of the conference, an institution for the promo-

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Matt. 6:33. Golden text for Sunday, Jan. 29.

Jehoshaphat's good reign is like an oasis in a barren desert, a glorious sunshine out of cloud and rain and winter. It thrills the heart, delights the mind, edifies the soul to read it. There is joy and happiness and glory in it. And this is all because Jehoshaphat dared to put the first things first. He walked in the way of the Lord; He obeyed the commandments of Jehoah; He observed the statutes of his God to do them. No wonder, therefore, that "the Lord established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; and he had riches and honor in abundance." God was with him and his hands were strengthened and the kingdom was made mighty under his scepter.

Not only was Jehoshaphat happy and successful, but the people likewise were happy, contented and prosperous. For the people were taught the book and the law of the Lord.

So far as the ways of reckoning in this world go, Judah's kings may not have been as shrewd and skilled and wise as Israel's kings; and yet the two tribes of Judah were able all the while to hold their own both against alien foes about them, and against the ten tribes of Israel. In fact Judah's glory and achievements far outshine in lustre, beauty and glory, the achievements of Israel. This for the reason that the few of Judah's kings were ruled more often by men who feared God and kept his commandments than the many of Israel's tribes. Worldly wisdom, with God left out, is no match for the wages of righteousness, peace and truth wherein God is. No life, whether of sovereign or subject, is ultimately successful, or leaves permanent glory with God left out.

Most of our worry and troubles and anxieties and perplexities come because we will not take God at His word. We seek to do the adding. God has promised to do that. What we need is ever to seek God first in all things. Be sure God is with you, then you can afford to go ahead. The only true joy in this world comes from serving God.

—Editor Luk Lea, of the Nashville, Tennessee, and only 32 years old, was elected last Monday, to the United States Senate by the legislature of Tennessee.

ISSUING BONDS AND THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

Somehow we cannot bring ourselves to a state of dread and terror over a proposed bond issue for the support of our State University. If issuing bonds is the best, the most prudent and feasible way of taking proper care of the University, then we would favor issuing the bonds. But if it is not the best way of arriving at this desired end, then the best way should be found, and we believe our legislature will find it.

Issuing bonds or not issuing bonds is not the primary question, or consideration, in this matter, as it seems to us. The real question that should be considered without prejudice or passion in this: From what source, or through what channel, is the money going to come to relieve the present strain on our State University, and put that institution of learning on the high plain, financially, to which it is entitled? That the University is in sore straits and dire needs is a fact that all know, who are acquainted with the situation. The time has come when the good State of North Carolina must say to its youth, that there is no room at its University for any more students and none need apply, or else better accommodations must be supplied. Either the State must retrench, and the University go backwards or put up more cash. The buildings, both for living and for lectures and for laboratories, are crowded to their utmost capacity. All available equipment is being utilized to the limit. Increased numbers have made increased capacity and equipment necessary, and this necessity has not been met. The high cost of living has created a demand for higher salaries, and if teachers do not get this they simply leave us for institutions that do pay higher salaries. We lose our eminent scholars and noted teachers from the University almost as rapidly as they come to renown and greatest worth there, and low salaries are cause of it. In proportion to the number of pupils and the work undertaken and the demands made, the University today has not the capacity, nor the equipment, nor the accommodations of the first class church colleges of the State. This is said to our shame. Under stress and strain these church-schools appeal to their denominations and churches. To whom else than to the State can our University appeal?

There must be a larger outlay for teachers, for boarding and dormitory room, for lecture rooms and laboratories at the University, or present numbers must be curtailed.

Now the question arises, whence will come the money? There is none in the State treasury. Before any can be appropriated some must be put there. If none has been procured or provided under present tariff and revenue laws, none is likely to result without radical change. The question seems to us a simple and practical one: Our University must be provided for. Which is better, to issue bonds or to increase taxes sufficiently to meet the immediate demands?

The people seem not inclined to increase taxes. What else is there to be done in the emergency than to issue bonds?

Every writer on this topic very well knows that no student in a university, or any higher institution of learning pays for his keep and teaching. If tuition charges in colleges and universities were made high enough to pay the actual expense, the teaching and training given, only the very rich in this world could ever acquire collegiate training. It stands to reason, then, that somebody else than the student must pay the actual expense of his training. Either the State, the church, or individual donation and endowment, must pay the difference, make up the deficit. It is not the habit in our day for churches or individuals to endow State Universities for their keep and improvement. The State, therefore, is left to take care of its own. And in this instance it is simply up to our legislators to say which is the wisest and best way of coming to the relief of our University. For our part we cannot help feeling that our present Legislature is capable of taking care of this question and will do so in a way not to bankrupt our future nor overburden our present. The present hue and cry about bonds seems to us unjust, unfair and unequalled for.

A REAL TRIBUTE.

If the Berea Sunday-school, Driver, Va., shall carry out in act and deed, a resolution recently adopted, and printed in The Sun this week, it will have paid a real tribute, and not one of empty words, to the memory of its former and beloved Superintendent, Capt. Thomas R. Gaskins. The resolution to which we refer reads thus: "That as he was anxious above all else, to see our school prosper and increase, we pledge ourselves to renew our efforts to increase both the number and efficiency of our school. That we will make renewed effort to attend with more zeal and regularity the school and do our best to carry on the work he so loved."

The editor of The Sun believes that the highest possible tribute the living can pay the dead is to carry forward the good work they themselves had undertaken and loved most in life. There is under heaven no surer evidence that a man's life on earth has been successful than the efficiency with which his best work is carried on after he has gone. The Sunday-school record at Berea one year, two years, three years from now will show, better than words and preambles now recorded, can show, whether the Sunday-school has paid real tribute to its beloved superintendent, and how successful was the work of that superintendent when living. We in the flesh complete the lives of those who have gone before. And unless we do complete them, fill them out, finish them, then are they barren and empty and unfinished indeed. God so ordained that the living might so honor the dead by completing, finishing up, filling out their lives. After the writer of Hebrews had recounted graphically the deeds of many patriarchs and heroes he concludes thus: (Hebrews 11: 39-40.) "And these * * * * received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." We who live make perfect those who are dead—by carrying on to higher efficiency and success the work they had so well begun.

An illustrious example of this is given in the instance of the late D. L. Moody. He did much work, and was a power for good, while here on earth; but the work he began is being carried on now to greater success, and with far greater efficiency than that which he achieved while living. The real greatness of the man is now being demonstrated as it never was or could have been while he lived. Those who took up Moody's work are making Moody's life perfect. They are paying real tribute to the great and good man.

Pity it is that more of our Sunday school and church resolutions are not made effectual. We can only make them effective by more zealous activity and consecrated zeal on our part. God's workers die, but God's work goes forward. And in its going forward the lives of good men are made perfect.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Equalizing Taxation:—Tax dodging in North Carolina, and in other States as well, has come to be notorious, and is certainly disgraceful. Besides, it is grossly and highly immoral. A man offers his property for taxation at a price the double of which he knows then and there he would not take even if offered to him. He knows full well that his property would bring far more than the price were it offered at public auction any day. Still he asserts, solemnly, and under oath, that "he has given a fair and just valuation of all his belongings." We cannot think of a more lucrative proposition than that of being allowed to purchase the real estate in our township for twice its tax valuation, and then given the privilege of selling it for its market value, and for what it would really and readily fetch. If that privilege were accorded us we would not be found editing a paper much longer, except for the sheer amusement of it.

No wonder the tax rate is high, the treasury empty, and the issuing of bonds is repeatedly called for. Forsooth there is no equalization of taxation amongst us, and the habit of tax dodging, and falsifying about the worth of property, has become notorious and obnoxious.

With proper legislation this habit can be stopped. You may not legislate morality into a people, but you may make such laws as not to lead people into temptation, and not challenge the people to immoral practices. Our present mode of valuation and assessment of real estate for taxation is certainly an invitation and a challenge to gross misrepresentation and immorality; and every man who loves justice and seeks equity wants to see the present slipshod method changed.

The Greatest of All Trusts:—No sooner do we begin to enjoy the blessings and benefits of some noble discovery, or beneficent invention, than we learn that it has been monopolized, and all its products controlled by a trust. A process of refining petroleum was discovered and behold Standard Oil.

A method of refining sugar is hit upon, and behold Sugar Trust. A mode of turning rough iron into steel is made known and behold Carnegie and United States Steel. Then the attention is turned to developing electricity and electrical instruments, and now we are assured that the greatest, the most powerful, the most grinding trust of all is neither Standard Oil, Sugar nor Steel: but the Electric Trust. Our Department of Justice from Washington issues the statement that this is "the greatest trust in the world." It is made up of the General Electric Company, and seventeen smaller "associations," manufacturing and controlling practically every article employed in the use of electricity. It is said to represent an investment of a billion dollars, President Morgan being principal director. An exchange says.

The combine absolutely controls, in all the world, the price of electric lamps, insulated wire, switches, fans, electrical machinery, and so on. It is said that any one using electricity pays to this combine fifty cents out of every dollar of cost."

The Government has entered suit against this octopus charging that it, is operating in restraint of trade.

Conquering the Scourges.

One by one he dread diseases fall under the ban. Medical skill and hygienic science have gone forward at such rapid pace within the last few years that the world is hardly startled at any sort of miracle wrought in the realm of health and sanitation. The latest is the announcement that a typhoid fever serum has been formed, and is now in use, which will have the same effect on that dread disease that vaccination had on small-pox or antitoxin had on diphtheria. The Christian Endeavor World of Boston, Mass., tells the story of successful experiments in this wise:

"Under the care of Dr. Mark W. Richardson, secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Health, and others, a long and thorough series of experiments has been made, which seems to prove that inoculation with the serum of typhoid fever renders one proof against the disease, at least for several years.

Hospital nurses, scores of them, have gladly given themselves to the experiment, and so have thousands of soldiers. Past experience shows that hospital nurses are about eight times as likely to contract typhoid fever as the ordinary citizen, but, though 405 nurses have been inoculated in Massachusetts hospitals, not one case of typhoid fever has occurred among them, with one possible exception of a mild case. Practically no inconvenience whatever attended the process of immunization, and this was also the case with the 13,000 soldiers inoculated last year. It looks as if another of the scourges of humanity had been conquered.

tion of general education; and also to afford facilities to young men expecting to engage in the gospel ministry to prepare for that important work.

This committee, a year later, at the conference held at Union (Alamance) had begun the construction of a school building at the town of Graham, and had named the new institution, Graham Institute. This conference passed a resolution authorizing the committee to employ a traveling agent, to solicit donations for the completion of Graham Institute, and for the promotion of education generally among the Christian churches, South. The building erected was a two-story brick structure, in which was kept up a school, with intermissions now and then, till 1890 when the school, then known as Graham Normal College, was transferred to the plant six miles west and the name changed to Elon College.

Rev. John R. Holt remained at the head of Graham Institute until 1857. From July 1852, the date Graham Institute opened, till 1860 there matriculated a great many young men who became bright and shining lights in the Christian denomination, and were the guardians of her interests during the fearful war times that were soon to follow. Among these may be mentioned Revs. E. W. Beale, James W. Wellons and twelve others from Eastern Virginia who entered at one time in January 1853, while Rev. William S. Long, who became the builder of Elon College, was one of Holt's students. Rev. John R. Holt occupies the place as the real founder of the only school the Christian Church in the South has today.

In 1857 the school was chartered by the North Carolina Legislature as Graham College, and Rev. W. H. Doherty, of Antioch College, Ohio, was elected president. By this charter it was made co-educational. In 1858 at the General Convention at Cypress Chapel, Nansemond Co., Virginia, Graham Institute was placed under the care of a board chosen by the convention, and plans were matured to increase the stock to $4000.00. The school grew rapidly in public favor until the Civil War in 1861. While that terrible struggle was in progress, the trustees sold the college and all the property, belonging to it, in order to meet a small indebtedness, and converted the proceeds into Confederate bonds. At the end of the war these bonds were worthless. Thus the only institution of learning in the South belonging to the denomination at that time passed out of existence.

Owing to the prominent place occupied by Rev. John R. Holt in the educational life of the Christian Church, South, we must notice his work after leaving Graham Institute. He lived fourteen years after leaving Graham in 1857. He moved first to New Hope Academy, Chatham County, North Carolina, where he taught for two years. Then he moved to the neighborhood of Hank's Chapel near Pittsboro, North Carolina, where he remained until the close of the Civil War. About 1866, possibly 1867, he moved to the vicinity of Moffitt's Mill in Randolph County, North Carolina, and became principal of Shiloh Academy where he taught school until his death, five years later. The school was in the bounds of a new conference—the Deep River Valley, and at the session of 1870 at Oldham's in Moore County, Mr. Holt was chairman of the committee on education, and in accordance with the recommendation passed by the latest session of the General Convention of the Christian Church, South, that each conference establish a high school, he had in mind to make a conference school of Shiloh Academy. Thus we can easily see that the entire life of Rev. John R. Holt was devoted to the interests of education in the Christian Church.

Before the Civil War, Rev. W. B. Wellons, of the Eastern Virginia Conference, was conducting a female school in Suffolk, Virginia, and in 1852-3 he was instrumental in establishing Holy Neck Female Seminary, which was located near Holy Neck Church in Nansemond County, Virginia. This was kept up for some years.

When the Civil War was over Rev. William S. Long, who had taught school in Halifax County, Virginia, during the war, opened a high school in Graham, North Carolina. This school prospered, and in 1869 he purchased the entire property of what had once been Graham College. The buildings had been used, after the sale by the trustees as a tobacco factory. These were renovated and repainted, and the school took on new life. In 1872, Rev. Daniel A. Long, who had been conducting a high school at Antioch, in Rockingham County, Virginia, for some years previous, became associated with his brother, Rev. W. S. Long, and in 1875 purchased the property, and secured its incorporation as Graham Normal College. In 1882 the Southern General Convention in session at Morrisville, North Carolina, laid plans to found a denominational college. In 1883, Dr. Daniel A. Long was elected president of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, and Rev. W. S. Long succeeded to the presidency of Graham Normal College. The influence and prestige of this institution increased continually, and many prominent men in the church and state went out from its walls.

The Suffolk Collegiate Institute was established by the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and was first opened on January 8th, 1872, with Prof. Joseph King as principal, and Prof. John H. Wright and Mrs. Sarah B. Eley as assistants. It was incorporated March 4th, 1872. Both sexes were admitted. In 1886 a Theological Department was added to the institution with Prof. P. J. Kernodle as principal and Rev. W. W. Staley was chosen teacher. This school accomplished much good, and sent out many men and women who have become excellent laborers in the field of Christian activity. Like many other institutions it had its seasons of prosperity and adversity, and finally closed its doors about 1897.

About this time Rev. J. W. Holt was conducting a private school in North Carolina, and Rev. W. G. Clements was also conducting a private school at Morrisville, North Carolina. Both of these helped prepare the way for Elon College.

About the same time that the Suffolk Collegiate Institute was established, Rev. C. A. Apple was teaching a private English and Classical school at Level Green, in Nansemond County, Virginia, (1861 exact date). Other Christian ministers were teaching private schools in different sections.

It finally became apparent that there was need for some central institution of high grade for the young men and women of the denomination, and to have these it must be supported by the entire Christian brotherhood, South. This thought began to grow with our people, and finally on June 10th, 1887 the Committee on Schools and Colleges leased the Graham Normal College property and elected a faculty consisting of Rev. William S. Long, President, with Professors J. U. Newman, S. A. Holleman and J. H. Stockard. This institution was called Graham College, and began its work in September 1887.

The General Convention of the Christian Church, South, met in extraordinary session at New Providence near Graham, North Carolina, September 11th, 1888, and endorsed the action of the Committee on Schools and Colleges and appointed a Provisional Board to select a site, solicit funds, and erect buildings, etc. This Board consisted of Rev. William S. Long, President, Rev. J. P. Barrett, Secretary and General Agent, F. O. Moring, Treasurer, J. H. Harden and G. S. Watson.

The present site of Elon College, then known as Mill Point, was selected, buildings erected, and the institution moved to that place and opened September 2nd, 1890. It was chartered by the North Carolina Legislature March 11th, and named by the president, Elon College—from the Hebrew for oak grove—implying strength and beauty.

Before this time the Christians South had never united in supporting any de-nominal enterprise except The Christian Sun, and it was no easy task to enlist the co-operation of the brethren and secure the funds required to build and equip a college. But to the earnest appeals sent out by Dr. J. P. Barrett, editor of The Christian Sun at that time, and other writers, the personal solicitations of the President and Dr. W. T. Hennon, who succeeded Dr. Barrett as Financial Agent of the college, our people responded as they had never done before to any enterprise of the church. This has unified the church more than anything else, and the people have stood by it in its dark as well as in its bright days. No language can fully and adequately portray the prayerful solicitude, the sacrifices, and mental anxiety of some of those who had led in this movement, but compensation has come in the success of the college.

About 2,500 have matriculated, 156 have graduated, and about fifty have entered the ministry in the Christian Church since 1890. It now enjoys the confidence of the entire denomination.

Some of the Christian conferences in the far South are attempting to establish high schools in their section. These when established will become feeders for Elon College, and will do great good.

"JAMES O'KELLY."

"The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly," written by W. E. McClenny, Ph. B., is a valuable and important book. Its preparation indicates conscientious and affectionate searching into sources of information, whose existence would only be thought of by some one whose heart was interested in the subject matter.

It is evident that the author is a true admirer of the great O'Kelly, who acted so important a part in the movement that led to the freeing of the modern church from creeds and prelates. And his admiration for the hero lends weight to any statement he makes that possibly detracts from O'Kelly's glory. This point was very impressive to me at various places when reading the book. The author was repeatedly restrained by the truth; and we can trust him in any direct assertion.

He makes clear at different times that O'Kelly did not differ from the Methodists whatever in doctrine, but made his secession solely on grounds of government; seeking justice especially for the ministry, as against the arbitrary power of Asbury, who would allow no appeal from his decisions. O'Kelly, it is repeatedly made plain, left the Methodists reluctantly. Thus the author reveals to us that O'Kelly was hardly a prophet, and hardly had the vision with which some of us had supposed him endowed; although he became a champion of equality among the brethren, ministers and laymen, and demanded publicity as to ecclesiastical business, the denial of which leads gradually to tyranny and corruption.

We are all familiar with the fact that it was Rice Haggard who "moved that henceforth and forever the followers of Christ be known as Christians simply;" and it is gratifying that the motion was unanimously adopted. But I was surprised to read on page 116 the following words:

"Next a Rev. Mr. Hafferty, of North Carolina, moved to take the Bible itself as their only creed, and this too was carried, and has so remained to this day."

The conscientiousness of the author of the book makes me accept this statement as correct, although I had hitherto supposed that Rice Haggard was the hero who made the motion for the Bible the only creed, as well as Christian the only name. And I fear I have made the mistake of so stating in some public way. But, if so, I am in the company of the exact and scholarly P. J. Kernodle, A. M., who uses the following language in his new, valuable and highly reliable book, "Lives of Christian Ministers," on page 35:

"On the 4th of August, 1794, at Lebanon church, in Surry County, Virginia, Rev. Rice Haggard, after the committee had labored some time in vain, arose and moved that the Bible be the rule and guide for the Church, which motion was unanimously accepted, and at his suggestion the Conference decided to discard all names except the one which would fully express their relation to Christ, the Head of the Church, —Christians —although Christian Church is the name."

Bro. Kernodle's book does not contain a life of the "Rev. Mr. Hafferty" mentioned by Brother McClenny; and do not further search in it for light on this point. But I incline to the opinion that Brother Kernodle and I are in error; and that Brother McClenny is correct. Possibly he may hereafter give us his authority for his statement concerning Mr. Hafferty.

Possibly Rice Haggard may have had greater courage in some things than O'Kelly: for I find the following language in the memoir of Reuben Dooly (page 264):

"Elder Dooly took one preaching tour, that led him through Kentucky, Virginia, North and South Carolina. He met with some strong opposition from the different sects. But he never became discouraged—he trusted in the powerful arm of the Christian's God.

"In Norfolk, Virginia, he became acquainted with Rice Haggard, a very talented man of good character. He had once been a presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, but, becoming somewhat disaffected with some of the doctrines and the discipline of that church, he had withdrawn. Dooly and he formed an intimacy that lasted during life."

Somehow, in reading Brother McClenny's history, I wished that the glory of the making of the motions of Haggard and Hafferty could have been O'Kelly's: for those motions fixed destinies; those motions led to the fulfillment of prophecies; those motions showed a grasp of the true issue; those motions led straight to the Bible and Christ, the two great "witnesses," for nineteen hundred years, of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Without the help of those witnesses the movement of O'Kelly, however pure might have been its motives, might have gradually degenerated into the crumbling of a group of oppressed ministers, whose history too often has been one of complaint and failure. But, though O'Kelly has not the glory of the great motions, it is a comfort to us to know that he accepted them, and gloriously sustained them by speech and pen.

Possibly, however, the denial to O'Kelly of the credit of moving for the name Christian, and for the Bible creed, may have been intended by God, to prevent the making of that preacher a demi-god, or religious leader, like John Wesley, or Martin Luther, or Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, or John Calvin, or Alexander Campbell. And, in order that all the men engaged in the heavenly work of calling the church to the truth might appear through the ages as earthly (just as they were) and with human limitations, not one of them, either in the south, or in New England, or in the west, towered far above the brethren around him; for God intended Christ to be their only leader.

There is a fitness in the true history, as revealed by Brother McClenny, that makes the movement worthy of God, though he did use human instruments. The Bride of the Lamb does not lean upon the arm of any human being: for God knew that no human being could stand so high above his fellows as to be a safe leader in all the trials and perplexities of life. For every man, or any man, at some time in the complexities of life's temptations, sins and sorrows, must by his brothers be found lacking in some point of character, or training, or greatness, or experience, or spirituality, or foresight, for leading his fellows through the passage-way from sin to righteousness, or through the portal from death to life.

God guided the group around O'Kelly, and the others were with him on Mt. Sinai; and their faces shone with divine radiance as certainly as O'Kelly's.

The book is a very valuable one; and we hope that the next edition will have an index, which will much increase its usefulness. The Christian Sun, Elon College, North Carolina, sells the book at $1.50, postpaid.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Berkley Letter.

I have just finished reading the "Life of James O'Kelly" by McClenny. It is a fireside conversation on the "Grand old man" of the Christian church. It reads like historic romance. The great lover of "Religious Liberty" is sorely tried, betrayed, forsaken, but baffled not, until he wins and establishes the cause he espoused.

Every home in our church should have this book and know its contents. It will stamp our colors and foster love for our cause. I agree with Rev. W. G. Clements that every ministerial aspirant in our denomination should pass examination on this part of our history.

There is one suggestion in the book that put me to thinking. The more I thought, the better I felt. Was Thomas Jefferson who penned the "Declaration of Independence" at heart a member of the Christian church? If so, as a people we have ample reason to rejoice in the thought that the Champions of civil and religious liberty struck heart and hands in the beginning of this great nation. The one as immortal as the other. The Christian Church claims them both.

I believe at heart, Thomas Jefferson was a member of the Christian church. This, because he did not unite with any of the established churches of that time. Two reasons no doubt for this—(1) For the sake of political friendship. (2) and the most likely one—because none of the then established churches offered a satisfactory complement to his liberty loving spirit.

But on the other hand he was fond of James O'Kelly and was considered an Infidel because of this. He held private services and had O'Kelly preach two sermons before him and the select people of Washington at the conclusion of which "Mr. Jefferson arose with tears in his eyes, and said, that while he was no preacher, in his opinion James O'Kelly was one of the greatest preachers living." This was a great confession. It was made before the public. It gave O'Kelly to understand what he thought of him and his doctrine. He was with him, his actions, tears and words declare Thomas Jefferson a "Christian" at heart.

Conference brought with it a spirit of enthusiasm which our people still feel. Our congregations and Sunday-school have greatly increased in attendance. The first of Dec., our Young People's Auxiliary started a contest for membership and by the first of Jan. had increased from a membership of about twenty-five to seventy. Mrs. B. F. Speight is the valuable president of this society. She expects great things of each new member.

There is a plan on foot now to have our church building remodeled and a Sunday-school room added.

The Ladies Aid Society of which Mrs. S. A. Eley is president is contemplating buying a new carpet for the present auditorium.

M. L. Bryant.

Wadley, Ala., Letter.

Last 2nd, Saturday and Sunday we held a very good meeting at Antioch. The congregation was small both days on account of death in the community. Bro. H. P. Pearson Sr., died on Friday night preceding our meeting and was buried Sunday p. m. Bro. Pearson was one of the pioneer citizens of the community and was much loved by the people; was a devoted member of the Primitive Baptist church,

In a period of about 10 months seven people have died on the road leading by Antioch church in a distance of less than two miles.

On account of so much sickness in the community the Sunday-school has not been what we would desire. We hope however for better things this year. I trust the people may have unusual health both of body and soul, and that this may be the best year in the history of the church.

Last Sunday (the 3rd,) we met our La Grange, Ga., people. The congregation was small Saturday night but we had a nice service. Sunday was an ideal day. A large congregation greeted us at the Lord's house. Good order prevailed, and a most excellent service was rendered. At the close of the service we received five members into fellowship in the church, four by letter, one by profession of faith. At night we had a still larger congregation and a very fine meeting. The Lord was with us in great power. I have seldom seen such quietness in a meeting. One other member was received by letter at the close of service.

At the close of Sunday-school, Bro. J. F. Tidwell in a few well chosen words presented the pastor of the church with a very nice watch fob and charm, in behalf of the Sunday-school. Of course

I thanked them as best I could, but I desire to repeat here my heartfelt thanks for this special act of kindness on the part of the Sunday-school. May the kind Father richly reward those who in any way contributed to this gift, and may He richly bless the Sunday-school and prosper them in every good work.

Our District meeting will soon convene with McQuire's Chapel. I trust we may have a good meeting.

The brethren would do well to remember that the time will soon arrive for the Missionary Rally of 1911. Where shall we hold the meeting? No enterprise of the church equals in importance the Missionary interest of the church. Brethren let us be on hand at the District meeting ready to do our part in the work.

May this be a good year with us all.

Mt. Hermon.

I was with the people of Mt. Hermon church last Saturday and Sunday in the interest of the building fund for Chapel Hill church. I was received gladly to all appearance. This is not a strong church either numerically or financially, but showed a willingness to help the work at Chapel Hill, which encouraged me. At every place where I have asked for help for Chapel Hill, I have met with encouragement. The hearts of the people are set on the work there beyond my expectations. It looks now like we will be able to commence work on the building by June. Brethren and sisters, pray and give to the work.

It was a great pleasure to be with the people at Mt. Hermon again. I heard many pleasant words about their pastor, Bro. Banks.

NORFOLK LETTER.

It is Sunday evening. I am just back from a trip visiting our sick. It being a rainy gloomy afternoon, Mrs. Manning and I thought we might carry something of cheer and sunshine to someone. So we went first to the Protestant hospital. We found Mrs. Harrison sitting in a wheel chair. She seems to be getting on very well, and expects to go home some time this week. We also called on Miss Lou Brickhouse; found her cheerful and bright. She is doing splendidly and hopes to be at home soon. From there we went to St. Vincent's hospital to see Rev. T. W. Stroud, of Chapel Hill, N. C. Found him trying to be helpful to someone worse off than himself. He was sitting with a patient who had just a few days ago had a severe burn with an electric shock, while that patient's nurse was at her supper. Bro. Stroud is improving nicely and expects to go home next Tuesday. Bro. Twiddy continues to improve.

Prof. S. M. Smith went to Suffolk today to assist in a Y. M. C. A. Rally day.

The men of the Memorial Temple had a social meetings, lecture and oyster supper Friday night. Rev. J. W. Harrell of Portsmouth made the address.

Bro. J. E. West, of Suffolk, addresses the meeting at the Temple tonight under the auspices of the Missionary Society.

Bro. Howsare leaves tomorrow for Elon to conduct a series of meetings.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Ponce de Leon sought "the Fountain of Youth," but found no cure for old age; but the spirit of that vain search added a hemisphere to the map and Christian civilization to history. Christian civilization has not restored the long life of primitive man, but it has made the years so valuable as to equal the long life of the patriarchs. The Bible says, "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day;" and again, "a day in thy courts is better than a thousand." I cannot say what one day of Christian civilization is equal to in terms of Methuselah's time, but it may be that seventy years now are worth as much as hundreds of years then.

There are many factors at work in our modern civilization; but this letter calls attention to one class of workers who have done much and are doing more, year by year, to lengthen life and reduce old age than almost any other class and this class has been largely neglected in literature. The Dentist is in the best of modern professions. The last century really developed Dentistry. Archaeology reveals some work upon the teeth, but no filling. The Dentist was at first regarded as a mechanic, and had little standing in medical circles. He has gained favor steadily until he is self-respecting and respected and takes his place among the great professions. His field is small in area, only the mouth and contiguous territory; but it contains a world of intricacies and possibilities. A hundred years ago the toothache meant the extraction of the tooth or continued pain. The pain would twist a young face into age; the loss of teeth would convert the mouth into age. The Dentist has done more than any other to keep people from growing old or looking old. He removes pain, he repairs decay, he replants, implants, and transplants teeth, and even manufactures full sets. For those who remember, it is enough to say that people at forty years of age used to look as old as people look now at sixty. Many things may enter into this improvement in appearance, as food, dress, easier work, education; but no doubt the Dentist has done more than any other to keep the face young. His work is anything but pleasant, his life is short compared with other professions, and his confinement is severe and protracted.

People seem to dread the dentist, and go to him under sheer necessity; but he is a boon to society, a contributor to health and beauty, and the destroyer of pain and crossness. All the ills from decaying teeth to toothache do not remain within the mouth or the experience of the individual. They extend to others and none but the Dentist can stay the ills of toothdom. Perhaps the army of Dentists in the United States now equals twenty thousand, and the army they relieve is a big multiple of that number. They turn cross days into sweet days, restless nights into dreams, bad health into soundness, uncleanness into beauty, age into youth, and home into a paradise.

The click of steel instruments, the whirl of the machine, the sting of acids, the strain of the open mouth, the sharp pain of the nerve, the blast of the little hot furnace do not deter me from saying this word in honor of a profession that merits my sympathy and my praise.

Of all the "good old days" deliver us from returning to the age without Dentists; and keep in mind that the Dentist is a product of Christian civilization.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Our work in Porto Rico still goes forward and the outlook there is hopeful, despite the fact that we have not put into it one half the men and women that we should have put. We now have in Porto Rico seven mission stations, 38 out stations, 17 churches, 964 members, 44 Sunday-schools with 8,883 members enrolled. There were the past year 101 baptisms and the native contributions amounted to $1,444.19.—Christian Vanguard.

—Prof. S. G. Rollings, Principal Kenly High School, Kenly, N. C., writes: I have read McCleeny's Life of O'Kelly with pleasure and profit. This volume contains the most salient facts of the history of our church—facts that the majority of our people have not known till this publication appeared. After a careful reading of this biography I feel prouder of the fact that I am a member of that host formerly organized by James O'Kelly."

—The Daily Mail of Anderson, S. C., in speaking of the work done by Mr. F. T. Banks, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of that city, says:

"The general secretary, Mr. F. T. Banks, has performed the duties of his position in a manner entirely satisfactory to the board and to the association generally. His experience and training, his energy, ability, zeal and devotion to duty give every assurance that under his leadership the association in Anderson will rapidly grow in strength, power and usefulness for the uplift of men and boys."

Mr. Banks is a Wake County, N. C., man, a graduate of Elon College and has a host of friends among Sun readers who will hear gladly of his good work and success.

—This is a noble sentiment, and one worth holding, from the Christian Vanguard:

"Churches can only prosper and reach out when they are in harmony as to the purposes for which the church stands and when there is practically a unanimity of thought and interpretation as to Bible doctrine. Bible terms, Bible doctrines, Bible ordinances—these are all so plainly stated in God's Word that he who runs may read. Put aside the doctrines and commandments of men. Put aside traditional prejudices. Read and obey the teachings of God's word. They are not beclouded. They are like his promises—yea and amen—to them that believe! The Christian church must keep obedience to God's commandments in the forefront.

—In speaking of the candidacy of Col. J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., for the Senate from his district, The Norfolk Landmark, Jan. 21, had these high words of commendation:

"Col. West is much admired here for his fearlessness, his high ideals and his unflinching devotion to duty. He is largely responsible for the integrity of the Baylor survey, and his services will not soon be forgotten by the oyster men.

He was very active in Suffolk in the late local option election and is a member of the Citizen's League and one of those who signed the answer to the wets' petition.

As a private citizen his record is above reproach, and as a public servant his career has been marked by a standard of right far above the usual public man."

POSTS AND TREES.

By A. C. Dixon.

Every church is divided into two classes that may be called trees and posts. Plant a tree and it begins to grow. Stick out a post and it begins to rot. The difference between the tree and post is simply a matter of life. The tree is alive while the post is dead. The pastor enjoys the living trees of his church, watching them grow and bear fruit, while he is often perplexed to know what to do with posts that show no signs of life. It takes much of his time and strength to paint and prop up and finally have carried off the posts when they have fallen down.

CONTINUATION OF LAST ARTICLE ON RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD.

Confucianism.

"The teachings of Confucius are not so much religious as philosophical, not a creed, but a moral code. He makes no reference to God or the future, but insists upon the duty and obedience owed by children to parents, wives to husbands, and subjects to rulers. He commends music, art, literature and the having a good time, sun and fun.

Unlike the other great teachers of Asia, Confucius made no claim to inspiration, and frankly confessed his ignorance of matters beyond mortal ken. In reply to a question regarding death he said: "When I know not the nature of life, how shall I inform you what life is."

Confucianism is even now the basis of Chinese social life, although the religion of the masses is Buddhism, modified by Confucianism and including the worship of deceased ancestors."

Brahmanism.

"Brahmanism recognizes three superior deities; viz., Brahma, the Creator, Vishnu, the Preserver, and Siva, the Destroyer. Each of these has a female counterpart. The wife of Brahma is the goddess of Learning and the arts, the inventress of the Sanskrit language. The wife of Vishnu is the goddess of fortune, the good luck goddess. The wife of Siva is the goddess of abomination and horror and is the object of a fierce and fanatical worship.

Brahmanism is, therefore, the worship of a double trinity, each member having an infinite variety of forms and names; and the worship is adapted to the character of the god or goddess addressed, and is, by turns, mild and fierce, licentious and pure. But besides these chief divinities there are innumerable lesser ones (330,000,000, 'tis said), who are occasionally invoked and adored, and who stand related to every object in nature and every event in life, the dizziest kind of polytheism."

Buddhism.

It was as a kind of reformed faith that Buddhism came into being. It originated with Siddhartha, an East Indian prince, who was born in 623 B. C. and who by his wisdom won the sobriquet of Buddha, the enlightened one. Siddhartha being dissatisfied with the philosophy of Brahmanism laid off his royalty, and gave himself to the work of ascertaining the cause of sickness, pain, and death and their remedy.

Buddha inherited a belief in the transmigration of souls. But queried he why should men be born and re-born, now in one form and now in another? Meditating on this problem in ascetic solitude, Buddha reached the conclusion that re-birth is punishment inflicted by our Karma, because of our desire to live and aggrandize and enjoy selfhood. Having thus discovered the cause of human evil, the remedy was also revealed: it was the crucifixion of self. Thus says Buddha, we may abbreviate our re-births, and eventually reach Nirvana, which means extinguishment, practical annihilation. By right living we can hasten this consummation devoutly to be wished for and secure our future re-births under favorable conditions. By evil deeds we subject ourselves to re-births in lower forms, attended by keener sorrow. Thus the doctrine of metempsychosis is the key to Buddhism and the explanation of all the mysteries of life, why one is poor and another rich, why one is beautiful and another is ugly, why inequality is the common law. It is all the result of well-doing or ill-doing in some previous form of existence.

Buddhist are divided into two chief classes namely "followers" and "disciples." In order to become a follower one must make these five solemn declarations: Not to kill or injure any living thing. Not to steal. Not to pursue illicit pleasures. Not to lie. Not to drink intoxicating beverages.

But a disciple must go on to make five additional solemn declarations: To eat only at stated times. To abstain from all worldly amusements. To discard vanity and personal ostentation, the use of ornaments etc. To forego luxuries. To live in voluntary poverty.

He who will travel this road shall walk to enlightenment and liberty—the liberty of Nirvana, or absorption in the universal soul of things. Buddhism is, thus an ethical system, an immense advance upon Brahmanism."

In order that Christianity triumph in the earth it must show itself to be superior to these other religions of the world. Hence the strongest advocates possible of Christianity should go to our mission fields and like Paul at Athens and Corinth compel by comparison and argument the advocates of these heathen nations to admit the supremacy of Christ and what he taught.

It is sad indeed that Christianity should be divided into three great divisions, namely, Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and Protestants in the face of these powerful faiths and then sadder still that Protestantism should be divided into a multiplicity of smaller divisions.

If a united Christianity could mass its forces against these other religions they would soon yield to the merits of Him who came as the Saviour of the world and the revealer of life and immortality.

SOME WHO CANNOT GET TO HEAVEN.

There are a certain class of people who will surely win heaven as their eternal abode. There is also another class of people, according to God's word, who can never get to heaven.

Those who do not repent heartily of all their sins will be, and are, forever shut out of heaven.

Jesus says in Luke 13:3-5, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Peter says, Acts 3:19, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

Jesus says, again, in Jno. 3:3, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Now from the foregoing passages of scripture it is plain enough that those who fail to repent of their sins cannot get to heaven, nor even see the kingdom of God.

Again Jesus says, the unforgiving shall not be saved. Matt. 6:14-15. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

To fail to get forgiven means the same to me as to fail to get to heaven. For there can be no salvation through faith in Jesus Christ, without forgiveness. Now brother, sister how about it? Do you hold malice or any unpleasant feeling in your heart against any of God's creatures? If you do, remember, there is no such thing as being a vessel meet for the Master's use, or of being ready to meet the Lord when he comes for his own, in your present condition.

It makes no difference how much one has sinned against us, we are to forgive him, if we hope to be forgiven. Reader, do you want to be forgiven? Do you want to make heaven your eternal home? There is no hope for you, unless you forgive everybody for every thing they have done against you. No one will ever treat you worse than they treated Jesus, and yet on the cross, he prayed, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." "It is enough for the servant that he be as his master. If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you." I hear one saying I cannot forgive, they have treated me so mean. Reader, do you know what you need, what will solve the problem? Listen, "Let Jesus come into your heart, and the Holy Spirit be your guide, teacher and keeper and the difficulty will flee as the darkness before the rising sun. Try it, it will mean so much for you here in the midst of life's trials and difficulties, and finally it will mean a home at God's right hand in Heaven.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Mrs. Virginia Hobby, Wake Co., N. C. is visiting her sister, Mrs. Sadie Jones, and her brothers, Rev. J. O. and Mr. M. A. Atkinson, this week.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson filled the College pulpit Sunday to great acceptance. The sermon was short, but forceful and inspiring—short because of the ordination service preceding and the communion service following the same.

Mr. R. S. Tate, our oldest citizen, now in his 88th year, is very sick at his home of pneumonia. Despite his age, his physician is hopeful of his recovery. His family have the sympathy of the entire community.

The "C. B. C." Organized Class has elected the following officers for the ensuing six months: O. B. Barnes, President; M. A. Reitzel, Vice-President; Mrs. T. C. Amick, Secretary; W. T. Noah, Treasurer; Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Organist; Mrs. Sue Jones, Chairman of Membership Committee; J. C. McAdams, Chairman of Devotional Committee; Mrs. E. L. Moffitt, Chairman of Social Committee; W. A. Harper, Teacher. This class is designed for citizens and is filling a long-felt need in the Church and community life.

President Moffitt is in Wake County this week in the interest of the Special Fund. He and Mrs. Moffitt will assist Governor Kitchin in his public reception on the 25th, in stand.

Dr. J. J. Summerbell is to deliver a course of lectures this spring.

At the last session of the Cosmopolitan Club, Prof. T. C. Amick read a scholarly paper on the Higher Education of Women; tracing the inception of the idea from the earliest times to the present. Following the paper was an interesting discussion, in which the members of the Club indulged. There will be three more for the present year, and at these meetings President Moffitt, Mr. A. L. Lincoln, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson will present papers. In addition to this, there will be Music and readings by the lady members.

Rev. McDaniel Howsare, Pastor Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has been invited to conduct the revival services in the college, beginning with the fourth Sunday in this month. Mr. Howsare has accepted the invitation and will be domiciled in the West Dormitory, where he will be readily accessible to students and in intimate contact with student life.

The second volume of Preparing the Teacher, which is edited by Profs. Harper, Lawrence and Wicker, has just made its appearance from the press, and is now ready for distribution. The volume contains 256 pages and is divided into 10 chapters. These chapters deal with the Teacher, the pupil, the Sunday-school, the Bible as Literature, Biblical doctrine, Christian Giving, Private Biblical Antiquities, Missions, and the History of the Christian Church. The contributors to the volume besides the three editors are Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. J. U. Newman, Rev. A. W. Andes, Rev. G. O. Langford, Dr. M. T. Morrill, and Mr. W. McClenny. These gentlemen are specialists in their various fields and have given to the volume the result of ripe and mature study, and thorough investigation. This book completes the standard advanced Teacher-Training Course, authorized by the Southern Christian Convention. The first volume which appeared a year ago, met with a ready market, and is now being used in many of the Teacher-Training Courses of the Christian church, North South, East and West. The second volume comes up to the standard, if it does not exceed the first volume and merits, as it will no doubt receive, a hearty reception on the part of the church constituency, for which it has been especially and designedly written.

Jan. 16th was the last day of grace for the handing in of subjects for commencement essays and orations, both by seniors and society representatives. This was also the final day for the handing in of subjects for graduating classes in the various departments, by the members of the senior class. The class this year being large, there will be representatives to speak for them at commencement.

Miss Suson Hitch, of Norfolk, Va., grand niece of the venerable J. W. Welton, is visiting him this week and is the guest of the college in the West Dormitory.

Dr. J. I. Foust, President Normal College, Greensboro, N. C. is visiting his sister, Mrs. W. L. Smith, who is a citizen of our college community.

—Some of the brethren are now enquiring. Will Mrs. Mary Baker Grover Eddy, founder of Christian Science, rise from the dead? The answer to that is easy and certain: The certainly will rise from the dead on the morning of the resurrection, and not before.

TUBERCULOSIS SUNDAY.

April 30th has been set aside this year as "Tuberculosis Day," and will be observed in 200,000 churches in the country in a manner similar to that of "Tuberculosis Sunday" in 1910, when over 40,000 sermons were preached on the prevention of consumption. In this first official announcement of the occasion made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis today, the leaders of the movement state that they hope to enlist all of the 33,000,000 church members in the country.

In one respect Tuberculosis Day will differ from Tuberculosis Sunday in 1910. Instead of requesting the churches to give to the tuberculosis cause a special Sunday service, the National Association is going to ask this year that meetings, at which the subject of tuberculosis and its prevention can be discussed, be held on Sunday, April 30th, or on any other day near that date, either in the week preceding or the week following. "What we want," says Dr. Livingston Farrand, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, in a report on this movement, "is to have this whole subject of tuberculosis discussed in all of the 200,000 churches of the United States at as nearly the same time as possible. This does not mean that a stated service must be given over to this work, though that might be desirable, but that any minister, or other authority whom he may invite, can present the problem to his congregation before or after his regular service, or on any day within the week preceding or following April 30th."

The National Association is planning to gather statistics from thousands of ministers, showing how serious a problem tuberculosis is to every church. These figures will show among other things the number of deaths last year from tuberculosis in the church congregation, and the ways in which the pastors are called on to minister to sufferers from this disease. It is planned also to issue millions of circulars and pamphlets on the prevention of tuberculosis, both from the national office and from the headquarters of the 450 anti-tuberculosis associations who will co-operate in the movement.

—J. Pierpont Morgan had a special train carry him last Monday from Washington to New York, a distance of 224.7 miles, in 3 hours and 56 minutes. There was a stop of 15 minutes at Philadelphia, so the train made an average of over a mile a minute on that long journey, believed to be the fastest and quickest on record. The schedule time of the fast express is 5 hours.

C. E. TOPIC FOR FEB. 5—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Christian Endeavor Day: Prov. 22:6; 8:12-17, 32-36.

Let the President of the Society lead. The Scripture:..Have three who will memorize and repeat—one Prov. 22:6; another Prov. 8:12-17; the third 8:32-36. Have the comment by the pastor. Limit him to five minutes.

Remarks for the Leader; Many plans are open to the leader. He can recount the glorious history of Christian Endeavor, its humble origin, its ground principles, etc. Perhaps it might be well simply for him to state briefly one reason why he believes in Christian Endeavor, providing before hand that he asks others to rise immediately after him and tell in two minutes each why they also believe in it, each using different reasons. Some of these reasons may be: Its motto (Christ and the church); its fellowship Spirit; its loyalty to the Local church; its obligation to Christian service; its ideal of Life; its obligation on its members to pray; what it has done for the Society; what it has done for me. Many other reasons also will suggest themselves to the resourceful leader.

Questions for Voluntary Answer.

How does Christian Endeavor help the devotional life?

How does it help to make good citizens?

What is the quiet hour?

What is the Tenth Legion?

How can it assist the Sunday-school?

The church?

PREPARING THE TEACHER.
 BOOK II.

The entire Brotherhood has cause for congratulation over the completion of our Teacher-Training Course as provided by our Greensboro Convention (1908) which result is accomplished by the recent appearance in book form of the volume which is the subject of this notice. Explanations have already been made through these columns as to why the book was delayed. The committee, however, were determined that the work should appear and the Convention's orders carried out. They believe that the entire church will appreciate their action in bringing the books out at their own risks and that it will give the book a brisk sale. The price is 35 cents paper; 60 cents cloth net, postage 5 cents. The volume contains 256 pages.

A. C. C. CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The American Christian Convention in session at Troy, Ohio, November last, did a wise thing in making more generous provision for Christian Endeavor in our Churches through the adoption of the following report:

"Your Committee on Christian Endeavor desires to submit the following report:

"We have received and considered the report of the Commission together with other matter submitted by the department secretary.

"We deplore the general lack of definite information concerning the work of the Christian Endeavor Society within the borders of our denomination caused by the declining interest in many sections.

"We would emphasize the needs of the work as summarized by the Commission that,

First, Pastors and leaders need to be quickened to a sense of vital importance of conserving and developing for Christ the young life of the communities we serve.

Second, A clear and vitalizing objective for individual societies and conference and State Association.

Third, More efficient conference organization.

Fourth, Greater unity of action among societies comprised in the conference and in the State Association

Fifth, A thoroughly organized department of Christian Endeavor under the supervision of American Christian Convention.

Sixth, That the utmost care be exercised in the appointment of conference and State Christian Endeavor officials, and that only those individuals be selected who combine with consecration executive ability.

Seventh, That each Conference and State official be urged to visit when possible at least once a year and in the case of smaller conferences as much oftener as possible, each society under his supervision, to instruct, to aid, in an executive way, and to inspire.

"We also urge our Christian Endeavorers to attend all interdenominational conventions, and that we co-operate with the interdenominational officers in having them address our denominational meetings as often as possible.

"We furthermore recommend that a permanent commission on Christian Endeavor be appointed consisting of five members, including the Department Secretary. This Commission to be under the direction of the Department Secretary, and to co-operate in making the best possible use of the page allowed in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"Second, That the need of mission study as an objective for our Christian Endeavor work be emphasized in our periodicals, in our Conference and State gatherings, and that the A. C. C. Christian Endeavor Secretary outline a Mission Study course. Furthermore, that the Societies be requested to strongly press the mission study adhering to the course as prescribed, and that the Secretary be asked to prepare subjects for the study of our own denominational principles and missions in lieu of those prepared for mission study in the international series of subjects.

"Also, believing the Christian Endeavor work to be an invaluable training school for service, and realizing the opportunity of making lasting impressions on the mind of the child, your committee most heartily endorses Junior Christian Endeavor work, and recommends that the Christian Endeavor Secretary of the A. C. C. emphasize the importance of the work, by furnishing helpful plans and methods of Junior work for the Christian Endeavor page of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. We also recommend that the same provision be made for our intermediate workers."

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS FOR THE MEETING.

By Rev. E. A. Watkins.

We believe in Christian Endeavor because it develops leadership, because it is a training school for the young life of the church. Here the art of expression is gained, in testimony and in discussing the topics in hand. Here the young are taught to pray in a public assembly and become accustomed to hearing their own voices in a public meeting.

I believe in Christian Endeavor, because I know of no department of the church that can take its place. The Sunday School cannot in any way do the work that is done by the Christian Endeavor Society. The Adult Bible Class has undertaken some commendable enterprises and is doing a work peculiar to the movement, but it cannot and does not do the distinctive work that is done by Christian Endeavor

We believe in the movement, because it makes religion definite. It commits its membership to the doing of something definite. Its activities are not general, but particular. Its members pledge themselves to conform to a definite standard of living. We believe in it because it builds around the young life some restraints that keeps it within certain well-defined limits. The young life is spurred on to be as good as its pledge, given in one of its best moments.

I believe in it because it is no longer an experiment, it is not a debatable proposition. It has been tested and tried and has proved its merit and worth. It has made good. It is no longer in the realm of theory and speculation, but has merged into the world of concrete fact. We are always ready to listen to an organization that has such a record of achievement as the Christian Endeavor Society. When it speaks, we are glad to listen.

To know Christian Endeavor thoroughly in its spirit, purpose and history will furnish us reason enough to satisfy our own minds, and argument enough to satisfy the minds of all who will be convinced.

I believe in Christian Endeavor because it makes for good citizenship. Vice President Fairbanks said recently, "The Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor are engaged in a work of vast importance to the entire country; a work which makes for better people, better homes and a better Republic. They are a mighty force for good."

I believe in the movement because of its missionary spirit. It has caught the vision of the world-wide need, and a world-wide duty; and it is not disobedient to the heavenly vision.

July 7, 1909, more than 40 publications in 15 languages devoted exclusively to Christian Endeavor, weekly or monthly magazines, and abundant other literature in all the leading languages of the world.

Feb. 2, 1881, No national, state or local Christian Endeavor Unions.

July 7, 1909, More than 20 National Unions, more than 3,000. State and local Unions in all parts of the world.

Feb. 2, 1881, One denomination represented in the Society.

July 7, 1909, More than 100 denominations represented in the Society, whereas many denominations have borrowed the Christian Endeavor idea and organized societies with similar purposes, but different name, working in their own field, counting hundreds of thousands in their membership.

If not, how can it improve?

Facts About Christian Endeavor:—

Elsewhere in our Department this week we give some valuable facts relative to Christian Endeavor which the leader should have brought to the attention of the meeting in some way.

Special Object of Prayer:—That the campaign for "a million new members and ten thousand new Societies in the U. S. alone from St. Paul 1909 to Atlantic City 1911," may be realized and that our own church may more fully realize the possibilities of Christian Endeavor and utilize the Society as it never has before. The leader might before this prayer state that about two-thirds of the general campaign aim is now accomplished and that forty new Societies have been formed in our church, South, within the past 18 months, five new ones have been organized within the past three weeks.

The Roll-Call:—I would dispense with the roll call merely reminding all the members of their obligation to take part especially at the Consecration Service and waiting a moment at the close to give all delinquents an opportunity to respond. I suspect all will take part anyway.

The Consecration Prayer:—At the close let the leader read solemnly the pledge and have the pastor close the service with a Consecration Prayer for the next year of C. E.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Happy 1911 greetings to you all! May cheerfulness and successfulness be your happy experience all this great and good year. We solicited your earnest co-operation in raising $6,000 in this year for the living of our present family and those who wait to be received. Fine report first week. Love to all.

Yours for service,

Elon College, N. C.
 Jan. 18, 1911.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We herewith close the volume of 1910. Our opportunities are gone; we have not accomplished what we set out to do. Seemingly we have done our best. Our Grand Total shows $4429.63. We had hoped to make it $6000. We have failed, and now turn to the future hoping to do better service than in the past. We are 4 years old and have 43 children in the Orphanage. Our family expenses for food and clothing have increased very much. We are grateful to the thousands who have helped us so liberally; if all churches and the multitude of members had joined in with a thank offering our bank account would have been sufficiently large to have paid off our $1,000 mortgage. We will have to try other methods.

Donations.

W. I. Campe, New York, 1 box, 92 prs. stockings, 34 under vests, 2 pr. under pants, and 12 sweaters.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, Pittsboro, N. C., 2 bushels water ground meal.

Oak Grove Sunday-school, Chipley, Ga., by J. H. Floyd, 2 quilts.

S. A. Caviness, Greensboro, N. C. 4 dozen Bananas for children.

Wentworth, Sunday-school by Geo. M. McCullers, 1 barrel containing 2 sheets, popcorn, 3 lbs sausage, 1 lb butter 2 yds. lawn, 1/2 dozen oranges, and about 2 bushels apples.

Mrs. Reps. Williamson, Drivers, Va., clothing.

We thank all of the kind friends for above gifts. They are of such variety as old and young, large and small, appreciate very much.

We are deeply grateful to the children, Sunday-schools, churches, and friends for sympathy and money given which has enabled us to live and be reasonably happy in 1910 and we do earnestly request all to continue their helpful relations for 1911.

Yours faithfully,
 Uncle Jim.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write my letter for Jan. and Dec. both. The reason why I didn't write last month I didn't have any money. Mamma said she would give me a dime this week to help me pay my dues. I go to school every day. Miss Dupery is my teacher. I am in the fifth grade I guess all the cousins go to school. Hope they are all well. I will close with love.

Your niece,
 Nannie Benton.

You have started off well for the New Year Nannie and I hope you will be with us for another 12 months.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I send a little Christmas offering from the "A. F." class in the Pleasant Grove Sunday-school. The amount is $1.25. We hope you have all had a pleasant Christmas and we wish you a happy new year.

Your friend,
 Farmer Cook,
 Sec. of "A. F." class.

Thank you Farmer. We'd love to know what the "A. F." class means.

Henderson, N. C.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Sorry we failed to get a letter in Dec., but will send dues for December and January. To atone for our neglect we bring you a new member, our little sister Helen Shivers. She will be three months old the 23rd of this month. She is two days older than Joseph Rabb Denton. Mama says she is just as pretty as a baby can be to look like daddy and have a nose like hers.

Santa Claus and other friends were so good to us Christmas. We would like to give the names of all who remembered us but it would make our letter too long. We got lots of toys, clothing and money. Hannah Clare got five dolls. So far she has broken only three—one is put away and the other is not easily broken.

We enclose forty-five cents. We shall send twenty-five cents a month for 1911, a dollar a piece for the three. Lovingly.

Charles E. Newman Jr.,
Hannah Clare Newman,
Helen Shivers Newman.

So glad to welcome the dear baby sister, children, and to know she is to write with you every month.

Hurry to bring her to Elon visiting.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Since I wrote you last Santa Claus has been to see me and now I have a Tricycle to ride which I certainly lo enjoy. I hope the children at the Orphanage had a merry Christmas. I have just gotten well of the measles. I didn't enjoy it so well I had to stay in the house too long for me. I send twenty cents my dues for December and January. Much love to you and all the cousins.

Your little nephew,
Joel Edward Harrell, Jr.

So glad to have you start the new year with us Joel. Be faithful for the next.

At Auburn, Wake County, N. C., by Rev. W. G. Clements on Jan. 15, 1911, Miss Pearle Kelly to Mr. Henry Woodard, both of St. Mary's Township, Wake County, N. C. May they have a long and happy life.

Stagg—Whitley.

A beautiful marriage took place on November 30th, 1910, at the home of Bro. Robert Whitley, near Isle of Hight Court House when his daughter Miss Olie became the bride of Mr. Clyde Stagg. The wedding march was beautifully rendered by Miss Sadie White as the groom entered the parlor accompanied by Mr. Leon Stagg, his brother, as best man while the bride was accompanied by her sister Mrs. Hearn, matron of honor.

Little Miss Louise Jones acted as ring bearer.

Beneath an arch of evergreen they plighted their vows and were pronounced husband and wife.

After the ceremony they drove to Suffolk and took the train for a tour of several days. They will make their home near Isle of Wight Court House. They have the best wishes of many friends.

Order of J. N. Hess, Agent
Christian Pub. Ass'n DAYTON, O

DIED.Davis.

Mrs. Lessie Beulah Davis, died Jan. 1911, being a little over twenty-five years of age.

She was a member of Good Hope church. A truly good woman has been called away. Not often have I heard so many good things said of any one as I did of Mrs. Raymon Davis. She taught school in the community of Good Hope, before she was married and every student was very much attached to her. In a word, she was a model wife and devout Christian.

She leaves a broken hearted husband, little babe and many others to mourn their loss.

I conducted the funeral services and the beautiful white casket was tenderly placed in the family burial ground at the home of her husband.

J. W. Patton, Pastor.

Moye.

At Popes Chapel Christian church, Jan. 5th, 1911, I conducted the funeral services of Mrs. Elizabeth Catharine Moye. She was of Raleigh, and died in a hospital there. All was done that could be for her, but the Master called and she had to heed.

She was a daughter of Bro. A. J. Morton, Sr., deacon of Pope's Chapel. She was an obedient daughter, devoted wife and devout member of the church.

She was only about twenty-eight years of age, yet her work was done and her Father called her home.

And thus in two days, I saw two white caskets lowered into the grave and mother earth tenderly hides, forever, from human sight, the tabernacle of clay but the spirit returned to God who gave it.

J. W. Patton, Pastor.

Yow.

God in His mercy relieved from her suffering on December 7, 1910, Mrs. Mary S. Yow. She was born Feb. 11, 1829. Age 81 years, 9 months and 20 days. She joined Pleasant Hill church about 15 years ago. She leaves to mourn their loss one brother, two children and a host of friends.

She was a faithful Christian, and bore a long siege of suffering with patience.

Whereas it hath pleased God to take our friend and mother,

Resolved.: 1st. That we bow in submission to His will, knowing that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord.

2nd. That the family loses a loving mother, who did not murmur at her own helplessness, but tried to make life easier for others.

3rd. That we extend our sympathy and love to the bereaved family.

4th. That a good woman has gone to her reward and we commend her dear family to our Heavenly Father who never forsakes those who put their trust in him: and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also a copy to the Christian Sun for publication.

Scott.

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father in His wise providence to remove from our midst our beloved brother and senior deacon, of Pleasant Ridge Christian church, Benjamin S. Scott, we desire to express to friends and relatives our sympathy and our reverent respect for the sacred memory of our departed brother, and as we bow in humble submission to His will, we submit this tribute of respect.

Resolved: 1st. That the church has lost one of its most loyal members, the wife has lost a devoted husband; his children a loving and affectionate father; the country an esteemed and true citizen.

2nd. That we strive to emulate his good qualities, and labor zealously to bridge over the breach made in our ranks by his death.

3rd. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the church record, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, also to the Christian Sun for publication. By order of the church.

March.

John Edfin March departed this life at his home near South Quay, Nansemond Co., Va., Jan. 5th, 1911, aged 57 years. He was the son of Marvin and Marshie March. The funeral was conducted at the home by the writer and the remains buried in the family cemetery nearby. He leaves a widow, who was Miss Etta Sumner, eight children—Lee Everett, Mattie, Annie, Mary, Emma May, Blanche, Dempsey, Herbert and Robert—one brother, Jordan M. March, and three sisters, Mrs. Ella Edney, Mrs. Mary Fanny, and Mrs. Evie Taylor. To all of these we extend our sincerest sympathy. May a loving Father especially bless and keep the bereaved widow and children.

N. G. Newman.

Thomas Rice Gaskins.

Our heavenly Father has seen fit, in the dispensation of His gracious providence, to take from us our faithful and beloved superintendent, Thomas Rice Gaskins. We know that this is the part of wisdom because God so ordered, and while we bow in reverence to His holy will we feel our loss most keenly. Time alone can tell the worth of his devoted and unselfish service as our superintendent, and the benefits we have enjoyed from his unselfish life and zealous labors. With pleasure he performed his duties and never tired of making all happy. We, teachers and classes shall miss him so much, the Sabbath morning greeting with a smile and hand shake will not come to us again on earth, but we hope to meet him in yonder Sunday-school where there will be no parting. Having a desire to express the sorrow we feel and to pay real tribute to the memory of our departed friend and leader—Be it Resolved.

1st. That as he was anxious, above all else, to see our school prosper and increase, we pledge ourselves hereby to renew our efforts to increase both the number and efficiency of our school.

2nd. That we will make renewed effort to attend with more zeal and regularity the school and will do our best to carry on the work he so loved.

3rd. That we will unite our prayers to our heavenly Father in earnest petition that He will cause the mantle of our departed superintendent to fall on the shoulders of one of our present number and that He will raise up and choose from among us one who will take up and carry on the work which our superintendent has laid down.

4th. That these resolutions be placed upon our minutes and that the spirit of them be enshrined in our hearts and carried out in our conduct.

Woodell.

Sister Winnie Ann Woodell died at her home in Sanford, N. C., on Jan. 6, 1911, at the age of 42 years, two months and 16 days. She leaves a husband and six children with a host of friends to mourn her departure. She was a member of the Sanford Christian church at her death. She died with that assurance that she was saved. May the blessings of God, comfort them.

Funeral at Christian Chapel conducted by the writer.

Phiolds.

At the home of his daughter, Sister Benjamin Anderson, on Sienandoah Ave., Lambert's Point, Va., Jan. 14, 1911 Bro. Wm. Phiolds, in the fifty fourth year of his age. The deceased professed faith in Christ about three month ago, and united with the Lambert's Point Christian church. He was a great sufferer, but always, after his conversion, expressed himself as being happy in the Lord, and ready to go and be with Jesus. He leaves behind a young widow and two small children of Sanford, N. C., now, and one son and several daughters of Lambert's Point and Norfolk, Va. I ask the prayers of the brotherhood for all the children, and especially for the widow and two infant children. God bless all the bereaved ones. May we meet again around our Father's throne.

York.

Soloman York, son of Pleasant and May York, was born Jan. 22, 1839 and died Dec. 15, 1910. Age 71 years, 10 months and 23 days.

During his sickness he was conscious till the end and submissive to the will of God. He expressed a desire to die and go to Jesus. He delighted in having his neighbors visit him and to hear singing. His favorite song was "When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there." This song was sung by his friends during his sickness, and at his funeral.

He leaves one aged sister, a son, five grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn his departure. May the Lord comfort them in their sadness.

Rosenberger.

Sister Delilah Rosenberger was born March 25, 1827, and reached the end of her earthly pilgrimage Dec. 24, 1910. For years she had been in failing health, and death came as an angel of love and mercy to take her from her sufferings.

Her maiden name was Sipe. She was married to Gideon Rosenberger, who preceded her to the spirit land. Their union was blessed with eleven children, eight of whom are living. They are: A. J. Rosenberger, Lexington, Ill.; D. L. Rosenberger, Coopersville, Ill.; Mrs. Mary E. Grove, Luray, Va.; Miss Fannie C. Rosenberger, Mrs. C. V. Harrison, Mrs. Nettie G. Lassiter, Broadway, Va.; Mrs. Barbara Driver, Timberville, Va.; Mrs. Sarah F. Sellers, Golden City, Mo.; W. L. Rosenberger, Bridgewater, Va.

D. P. Rosenberger, John and William Rosenberger, the last two having died in infancy, were awaiting their mother's coming to the heavenly Jerusalem.

Sister Rosenberger had long been a member of Bethlehem church and was faithful in the discharge of all her duties. As a wife and mother she was true, faithful and loving, bringing up her children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord;" and while she is dead, she "yet speaketh" in the lives of her sons and daughters, who are among the faithful.

On Christmas day funeral services were conducted in the home, and her body was laid to rest by her husband, to await the resurrection morn.

R. L. Williamson.

Holt.

Joy Harris Holt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Holt of Burlington, N. C., aged 13 years, 11 months and 28 days. Joy was a bright girl and very devoted to her parents. She was a member of Mrs. J. S. Frost's Sunday-school class, and was deeply interested in the study of the lessons.

The funeral was conducted from the Christian church by the pastor. Her grade from the graded school attended the services, and her Sunday-school class attended in a body and carried the beautiful flowers that were laid upon her grave. She was buried in Pine Hill cemetery, Burlington, N. C. May the God of consolation comfort the bereaved family.

WALKING, AND WALKING WITH GOD.

Walking is one of the best exercises for all classes of people, and every one who can walk ought to take some time for this pleasant and very profitable duty. Yes, it may be called a duty; because it is the duty of each person to practice that which will enable him to live better and to get physical strength by keeping the human system in good order. It helps to repair and to replace that which has been lost; it oils up the stiff and inactive parts, and gives free and better play for the hinges and joints for the greatest of God's beautiful frame work. Many walk quite enough, but it is indoor walking, and that is not the best kind; certainly it is better than none, but get in the open air and the free sun-shine, then let the air breathe purely and freely and the sun flame his welcome rays upon you, and you will have such a flow of inspiration and vitality that you will not be able to tell how nicely you feel. By thoughtful arrangement you can take a short morning or evening walk and when the habit has been formed and the good results are felt and seen you will be encouraged to take longer ones and to keep it up with some degree of regularity. See the ruddy cheeks, the proper gait, the erect form, the graceful movement, the nimble and elastic step, the bounding action, the eye kindling with sparkling beauty the expression confident and sweet, and the whole form filled with life and go. All which is partly produced by walking. Of all the exercises in physical culture this is the best. The old way—the natural way—and the right and healthful way. Do more of it and watch with eager attention the splendid results. For it brings into exercise at once and the same time all of the muscles of the complicated, mysterious, greatest and grandest work ever completed—the making of man.

Some are naturally good walkers and can move with perfect ease, but no one can do his best without practice which is just as necessary in this as in any other business. The question was recently asked by a friend to another: How do you manage to keep so young and active, for really you look better than I ever saw you? The answer in the following wording seemed to be the right one: By taking plenty of exercise by walking, and by trying hard to keep sweet and pure. Some walk for money, they are paid for walking certain distances in a given time, but people of different and better forms of mind do not take interest in that kind of walking. They walk for personal privileges and for the vigor and health which it imparts to them, and not for the worldly fame, honor, and money which some receive. They have something more important to do, which employs their time, rather than roaming over the world. They have a purpose in view and that is to help somebody by setting examples of honesty, economy and industry. When tired of walking, what a delightful sensation it is to rest upon the exercise taken. How much better the muscles and nerves feel after being used in performing the work for which they were made. Tension and relaxation give them strength and an easy movement, and each one concerned is happy with such good results.

This is an age of railing, flying, running and rushing, passing so quickly and easy from place to place in the many different ways of travel and transportation, and some of these means are indispensable, helping one to do more good and in less time, but walking is the best, the old way, and must continue to take its place in the busy man of this time. Whatever else you do, wherever you go, do not neglect this duty, wherever it is possible to perform it.

It is also very desirable to have congenial company while walking as it imparts a greater rest to the occasion. The serenity and the passing time present something for consideration and conversation. After the resurrection two of the apostles walked the same day to Emmaus and talked about what had happened, and as they communed together, Jesus himself came and walked with them. His unexpected company was delightful to them, as it cheered their sad hearts. How happy they must have been with such a pleasant companion in that memorable and eventful walk.

Yonder goes down the avenue of time a lonely wayfarer. He moves on down the way until entirely out of sight, then the silent shades of night shut out the view from the outside world. The busy world lies down to rest and sleep that tired nature may be strengthened. But he is not alone because the silent melody of that still small voice rolls over the way and whispers very softly into his listening ears these cheering words, Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world. Then another charming message darts over the way and says to his soul: "I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you. And he begins now to be glad because he is in such good, delightful company. His heart rings with sweet music as he chants his morning song in praise and love to Him who leads the way.

These introductory thoughts may help us to see if we are walking with God. Walking with God has been the theme and thought of the ages, and while so many have walked away from Him in the wild, lost, waste regions of sin, yet they have thought of that highway, the straight and permanent way with much concern. They were not satisfied while walking away from God and even in the deep allotment of sin, conscience whispered to the soul: This is wrong, you better not go this way for it is the road which leads to ruin. The flesh desired to travel that way, but the spirit was willing to follow God.

The thoughts presented suggest these words in Isaiah 30:21; "This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." You have been delighted to read where some of the children of God walked with Him, and how they were so abundantly blessed. These very heroes of faith, bravery and goodness have greatly helped you by their example to walk with God. For if you cultivate the habit of walking with Him you will be so pleasantly and profitably entertained by the delightful exercise, it will become an inexpressible pleasure.

What is walking with God? It is to obey Him, to love Him, and to serve Him. These three principles are essential to have as you start to walk with God. When we are told, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me, it is our duty to obey. For if he, who contends for the

ANY GOOD THING.

(They that seek the Lord shall not want and good thing.—Psa. 23:10 Golden text for Sunday Feb. 5.)

That is an exceedingly broad statement. It includes very much. If we had found it elsewhere than in the Bible, and if we had not seen it put to the test, we would certainly be inclined to doubt it. But there it is. It has been on the printed page these many thousands of years. It has been put to the test, in actual experience, again and again; still that one is to be found who can gainsay or deny it. They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing—any good thing. I say that is going very far and includes a very great deal. The same inspired writer used these words further on "The eyes of Jehovah are toward the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." So if Jehovah sees the righteous in their need, and hears them when they cry unto Him, it is not likely that He will go heedless of their wants and desires. Even further than this had the same writer gone. Listen "No good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly" (Psa. 84:11). Now David had been in extremity, in trials, tempting and distress, and he knew. He spoke from the depths of a heart that had felt and experienced all that he wrote.

There is possibly no better example of the Lord's taking care of His own, in time of need and distress, than that illustrated in the lesson today and in the life of Elijah. Because of the brevity of the narrative which has come down to us we do not comprehend the want that must have prevailed, and the suffering and hunger and thirst that must have carried off thousands, during the drought and famine spoken of in scripture narrative. Yet those who feared and served the Lord were well fed and watered and sheltered. God always provides a means of support and a way of escape for as many as trust Him fully and completely, and believe in His power to succor and to save.

David was a man of varied experience and wide observation. When he had passed through many vicissitudes of fortune and misfortune, and was now an old man he penned these lines, which none have ever lived to contradict, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

Elijah lived in a most evil and corrupt time. Israel had forgotten God, and in the high places, as well as in the low, Baal was worshipped. The people were given up to revelry, and all manner of wickedness. The few who feared and served God feared for their very lives. A vile and wicked king was upon Israel's throne. The good and the righteous lived in secret places, in caves, valleys and in the deep woods. They feared for their lives, but the God whom they loved and served was mindful of them. Nor did He allow them to want for any good thing. More than once has an Elijah, hunted, hounded, really enjoyed more of the good things than a rich and haughty Ahab on his throne: more than once has a John Bunyan in prison been happier and richer in all the good things than a Croesus with his millions or a monarch with his empire. God cares for His own.

We are not willing enough in our day to serve and to trust God. We grasp for gain. We absorb our energies in money getting. We spend our days in pursuit of the things that perish. We live as if we thought God was letting us alone, or was afar off. This spirit of forgetting and ignoring God is that which is breaking up our homes, filling our daily papers with scandals, and crowding the divorce courts. Riches cannot buy happiness and possessions cannot bring the good things, the best things. All the want and suffering and need and hunger in the world today must be attributed, not to a lack of God's provision for us, but to our forgetfulness of God, our unwillingness to trust and serve Him. They that seek riches, honor, fame, renown, great possessions shall lack and shall ever want many good things; but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing. That is very broad and wide and inclusive, but it is true.

THE BEAUTIFUL IS USEFUL.

This statement found utterance somewhere "The beautiful is as useful as the useful if not more so." We cling to the utilities some times as if they were all of life and religion. And we some times act as if that which is given to the beautiful is waste. God gave in lavish abundance just for the sake of adornment. And religion is not only true and good, it is beautiful. There is nothing that adorns human character, and beautifies daily conduct, and crowns human efforts like trustful faith in Jesus Christ. The religion of the Lord Jesus has done more to create and multiply beautiful objects, beautiful conduct and beautiful lives than anything else in all the earth. It is not cold and ugly and repulsive and uncomely—the religion of Christianity is not.

The very Head and Foundation of our religion is thus sung about in holy writ:

"He is the fairest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely." And there are ten thousand times a thousand hearts today ready to say that Jesus the Christ is the One who is altogether lovely. Jesus alone of all characters is the faultless, flawless, perfect one. Jesus Christ is in this world to give beauty for ashes and turn the desolate and ugly homes into homes of beauty and loveliness. Again and again does the Word of truth speak of "the beauty" of the Lord—the beauty in His service, in His sanctuary, in His servants.

"The king's daughter is all beautiful within." The very deepest and truest form of beauty—the beauty within that works its way out and expresses itself in deeds and words and works. "O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." And then coming to the sublime heights an inspired one cried out "One thing have I desired and that will I seek after; that I might dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord." To behold the beauty of the Lord. There be some who seem to think He has no beauty. But, Oh my soul, the Lord's beauty is all around about us every where and on every hand. Pity indeed it is that our eyes are holden and we cannot and do not see the beauty of the Lord.

Wickedness is that which mars home and life and character. Unrighteousness is always ugly. The repulsive things, lives characters, the ugly ones, are the fruits of sin, evil, unrighteousness. Christianity creates the opposite of these always. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, meekness, kindness, patience, temperance and charity." Look at the comparison our Saviour draws to His religion "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man seeking goodly pearls." Now pearls are beautiful. Their use is to adorn, to beautify, to make attractive.

This is found in the New York Christian advocate and seems to us to illustrate and to express a sublime truth in a sublime manner:

"Dr. George Matheson tells of a young lady who came to him in great distress, because she felt that she was so delinquent in the discharge of religious duty; but he knew that she was a very dutiful Christian. He told her that he had observed her loyalty and fidelity to her aged and blind father, and asked if she did not consider this duty. She said she could not think so, for she found so much pleasure in it. She labored under the mistake of many, thinking that religious duty must necessarily be disagreeable. She did not know how closely related love and duty are.

Is not the life of a young woman who denies herself the pleasures of society and the freedom usually enjoyed by those of her age, that she may minister to an aged and blind father, beautiful? Is there anything more beautiful? Some men say they can see no beauty in this world; but the world is full of it. In every community there are some who deny themselves and make many sacrifices that they may minister to invalid parents or helpless brothers and sisters, or needy neighbors, and find perfect happiness in it. These are goodly pearls well suited to deck the brow of the Redeemer.

This religion is expressed by beautiful architecture, beautiful raiment, and beautiful music. Solomon's temple was not only a costly building, but a gem of architecture. It was intended to represent the beauty and magnificence of the religion of the Hebrews who worshipped Jehovah there. All Christians try to make their houses of worship beautiful and keep them scrupulously clean. The garments of the high priest were splendid, his breastplate being decked with precious stones and his robes spotless. The religion of the Bible requires beautiful attire. Why do Christian people lay aside the garments which have been soiled in the field, in the shop and in the kitchen, and put on clean linen and their best attire on Sabbath morning? Not only Christians, but nearly all the people in a Christian community do this without knowing exactly why? It is because the Sabbath is a clean day. It is separated from other days. It is the day of beauty, the day of holy worship. Multitudes have been converted from sin and wickedness, men and women who in their former days defiled their souls and bodies and garments, men and women dressed in rags and filthy garments. So soon as they feel the thrill of the new life they feel also the thrill of an impulse to take a bath in pure water and exchange their filthy garments for clean raiment. One would doubt the genuineness of the conversion of a drunkard who should be content to continue to wear the defiled garments of his old life of shame. Religion is beautiful and clean, and it is expressed in clean garments.

This religion makes beautiful homes, beautiful communities, beautiful cities and a beautiful world. Banish it from the world and darkness would prevail everywhere. Pagan art, pagan architecture and pagan literature could not make a beautiful world where the love of God and the righteousness of Christ have no place.

The psalmist offered this prayer: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." It was a great prayer, but not too great. We may offer it also with perfect confidence and assurance. The beauty of the Lord shall be upon thy hand and upon thy neck and upon thy soul."

PREPARING THE TEACHER.

If the Christian Churches composing the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention do not soon have prepared teachers to teach in the Sunday-schools it will certainly not be the fault of the Committee on Teacher Training created by the Convention in session at Greensboro in 1908. We very often appoint committees who do nothing till the holy appointing them meets again. Not so in this instance. A committee was appointed who did things. Thank God, dear brethren for that bare fact, and take courage. For once at least a Committee was appointed who considered that they had a work to do, and through thick and thin, heat and cold, financial lack and bitter disappointment, that Committee has gone forward with its task, and it has accomplished. I say, beloved, this is a cause of courage and rejoicing amongst us—a Committee has done its work. The Convention creating the Committee called for the writing, and the publication, of two books. Not a cent of money had the Convention to place at the Committee's disposal. Yet, the two books have been written, have both been published and are now offered for sale.

One of them, Preparing The Teacher, Book One, appeared in November, 1908, and is in use in many schools, and has been read and studied by many individuals. Preparing The Teacher, Book Two, is the one now referred to just from the press.

The Committee who have pursued their course so steadfastly, and done their work so determinedly consists of Profs. W. A. Harper, W. P. Lawrence and W. C. Wicker. To these brethren are certainly due the sincere thanks and gratitude of all our churches and the Convention. They have wrought with zeal and have wrought well. Those who have contributed to the present volume are, W. A. Harper, M. A., "Five Lessons on the Sunday-school Teacher;" Rev. W. C. Wicker, M. A., "Four Lessons on the Pupil;" W. P. Lawrence, M. A., "Four Lessons on the Sunday School;" J. O. Atkinson, "Five Lessons on the Bible as Literature;" Dr. J. U. Newman, "Eight Lessons on Biblical Doctrine;" Rev. A. W. Andes, "Three Lessons on Christian Giving;" Rev. C. O. Lankford, "Five Lessons on Biblical Antiquities;" Rev. H. E. Rountree, "Four Lessons on Soul-Winning in the Sunday-school;" Rev. M. T. Morrill, M.A., "Thirteen Lessons on Missions;" W. E. McClenny, A.B., "Five Lessons on the History of the Christian Church." Then there is appended a list of books for Mission Study, also helpful books for teachers.

At the end of each chapter there are suggested questions which will prove a great help to students. The book is neatly printed on good paper and is bound in paper and in cloth. It contains 256 pages. The price is 35 cents for the paper binding and 60 cents for the cloth, 5 cents extra when sent by mail.

This price puts the volume within reach of all and it should be extensively used in our Sunday-schools.

If one has a desire to study and to learn something of how to teach a class in the Sunday-school this volume will certainly be of service and we trust it will find a wide reading and close study. The book is on sale at The Christian Sun office, Elon College, N. C., or may be ordered of the Committee.

Purity in Politics.—The esteemed Norfolk Landmark, having become weary of the thrusts and gibes of several of its contemporaries, about foul politics in its part of the country, gets down to business and in a few brief sentences preaches a sermon on purity in politics such as one likes to read. Hear it:

"Probably what has helped to make Norfolk City and Norfolk County more conspicuous than some other sections of the State is the fact that we have exercised more zeal in behalf of honest politics than they. However, we believe that the people of the city and county are going to insist that elections hereafter shall be honest. Let Staunton, Lynchburg and all other cities and counties of the State do the same thing, and all will be well in the Old Dominion."

So mote it be. Amen. We do not know enough of the situation to say whether Norfolk, city and county, has cleaned up and is now a suitable model to pattern after in its political methods, but we haven't the first doubt but that the "late unpleasantness" has helped. Brethren, we sometimes think that the country is all going to the bad because we see so many evils exposed, talked of and written about. This conclusion is not always justified. Zeal in good works always turns on the light, and light always reveals the secret of hidden things. Publicity is often a sign of light, a declaration that light is turned on and not always a sign of growing and intense darkness and evil. Dishonesty hung out in the light becomes hideous and is often wiped out.

crowns, does not take up the cross and follow Him, he is not worthy of Jesus. If you obey Him by keeping the commandments you will not only do your duty, but you will do supremely well. No one can have permanent and perfect happiness without obeying God. And by doing this he walks with God with perfect peace and a full assurance of his acceptance. This exercise must be performed daily. If it is not performed all the time, you get behind and lose sight of God, because you follow him a long way off. There will be many very attractive allurements on either side the way and you will have to keep your eye on God and follow Him, or else be lost in the crowd that walks away from the perfect way. Walk worthy of the vocation. Your Christian life is a great vocation, the most worthy calling that claims the attention. Be an honor to it, and it will be a blessing to you.

Another, and the next principle thing is walking with God in love. Be ye followers of God, as dear children, and walk in love. Love has been the music of the ages, that wafts through the world, it breathes triumphant sway, over land and sea, of the sweetest melody that reaches the ears and touches the hearts of men, women and children. It is even an instinct in the animal creation and is destined to conquer the world with its silent eloquence and magic power. O, give back to us that mysterious emotion which blends fond hearts into one, and makes them feel happy with inexpressible delight! It is the greatest of danger and death, entering in, and taking complete possession of the heart, until it controls the affections and leads you to the goal of eternal life or everlasting death. You may love whatever you will whether it be right or wrong. What do you love? Listen to that ringing which awakens conscience and see if you are walking with God. Open the Book of light and life and hear what the Author says about love. It is a light higher and more brilliant than that which the goddess of liberty holds out to the seaman as he comes in across the dashing waves. It is the light of the world. It is the love of light and the light of love, and the grand harmony of this song of love rolls over the soul and thrills the heart with, God is love. "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him." If obedience and love are truly observed and practiced they will help to prepare the soul for profitable and acceptable service. For in His service there is a joy which none other can give. Every other legitimate service is right in its place, and ought to have proper attention so as to give strength and influence to it. This is necessary for the physical comfort and enjoyment of the children of men. The day of each one ought to be given to building up society and helping in every possible way to make better the world. Willing service must be given to God, and every one ought to serve Him with their whole heart, mind and strength, for it is just as much a duty to serve God as it is to render temporal service. And if the mind understands how to do temporal things, it certainly ought to know and feel its duty to serve the Lord. There is no complete or permanent happiness away from God and His service, and every one with an honest confession knows it to be the truth. Walking with God gives inexpressible pleasure and lends a charm to life which nothing else can supply. Walking away from God is the practice of so many unthoughtful ones. Away from Him means trouble, loss and ruin; with Him is comfort, joy and peace. Who is walking with Him today? Who is walking away from Him?

The result of walking with God will be most effectual in filling your life with brightness and power. By this Christian exercise you will become stronger and more efficient, capable of doing more and better work. Then the end of the journey will be perfect peace and sweet rest.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE PASTOR'S BUSINESS.

By Charles A. Hines.

Article I. The Church Organization.

If I were asked to name the dullest, duller and most lifeless gathering I have ever seen, I think I would reply without hesitation, "A Business Meeting of the Average Church in the Southern Christian Convention." Readers of the Sun will pardon this harsh judgment upon our quarterly meetings, I am sure, because most of them have attended such meetings and can say, "'Tis true, 'Tis pity; and pity 'tis, 'tis true."

There is a reason for these meetings being the dull performances they are, and a cause for the small attendance. The stockholders of a large, successful corporation are usually present when the time for the meetings come, and they take a lively interest in the proceedings. The concern that pays no dividends, does a small business, and yet manages to stay out of the hands of a receiver, brings together but few of its members and those few are listless and indifferent. The quarterly meetings of the church are poorly attended for the reason that members know there is nothing that demands their presence at the meeting; the business sessions are dull because the local church is really doing no "business."

Let me give you briefly a report of the usual business meeting of Blank Church: The pastor calls the meeting to order; a song is sung, a scripture lesson read, and a prayer offered in which it is asked that the "Lord bless the congregation in the deliberations upon the important matters that are about to be considered." The secretary calls the roll and reports one deacon and nine members present. The pastor makes no report; the one deacon present says the deacons having nothing to report; the treasurer when called upon begins by saying, "Well, I haven't got much to report"—an entirely superfluous remark, for his next sentence is, "Amount collected on pastor's salary since last quarter, $11.30." Following this those present spend half an hour discussing whether they will try to raise money this spring to paint the church or wait till next fall, and then the meeting adjourns.

Why were no more present? Simply because the absent ones had been there before and they knew exactly what would happen, and knew that it would happen in just as orderly way without them as if they were there. The church that has its building completed, paid for and in good repair really seems to be without any definite work to do. There is nothing to hold the members. They have a small amount annually to raise for pastor's salary and conference assessments, but they know this will be done, and no great effort, no sacrifice, no organization or special machinery need be put in motion to do it. The deacons help the pastor on communion days; the ushers pass the collection plates and the treasurer and secretary perform their respective functions; the other members of the church simply come to service but are given no work to do.

I have made these preliminary observations not in a mood of general fault finding but in order to emphasize the need of better church organization, and to make more apparent the advantage of distributing the work of the church so as to give as many of the members as possible something to do. I wish to indicate now what offices I think each church should create and fill, and in subsequent articles I will outline more fully the work expected of many of them.

In my opinion every church, large or small, should have the following officers:

A board of deacons of not less than four in the smaller churches, and as high as twelve in the larger ones.

A finance committee of not less than one committeeman for every 20 members.

A missionary committee of from five to fifteen members.

A chief usher and several ushers chosen from among the young men.

An organist, and a leader of the choir, and the choir to be composed of the same people every Sunday. (Take in all who can and are willing to sing.)

A treasurer of church funds, a treasurer of mission funds, and a church secretary.

In addition to this I suggest a Women's Foreign Missionary Society, a Laymen's Movement League, and a Christian Endeavor Society, in every church. Much might be written on what the Sunday-school could do in the way of better organization, but that is not in the scope of this series of articles.

(Greensboro, N. C.)

(Editor's Note—The above is the first of a series of articles by Mr. Hines on the business side of the church. The series are so arranged that in order to be properly appreciated they must be considered together. The second article will appear next week.)

OUR WESTERN LETTER.

The work that is going on in the South I watch with great interest. On this account it is not easy for the Sun's general readers to appreciate my interest in the weekly visits of the Sun. Its matters engage my attention somewhat as a letter would one who is long absent from home. Covering the territory of my early labors in the Master's service, almost every point mentioned in the weekly visits interests me in some special way.

I noticed in the last issue the report of the death of one of my dear old friends, a man who stood by me faithfully in the early days of my life in the Old North State. Bro. Clements will have no trouble in guessing to whom I refer—it is the late J. K. Gibson and his faithful and devoted wife, who preceded him several years to the "Better Life." True and substantial friends. In their home I found a home of my own when I was tired and hungry, and the welcome was always generous and liberality. It was a real pleasure to go there and mingle with them, talking of the things of the Father's kingdom. Now they are both gone, and I shall see them no more till I see them in the Father's house. God bless their memory and may its fragrance linger long in the circle of their earthly pilgrimage to stimulate others to a closer walk with God.

How the ranks thin and fill, and thin and fill! Now another of the men who was always a true friend has been called to the long home on high and this time it is Captain Thomas R. Gaskins of Nansemond County, Virginia, who has been called from labor to reward. I had known him for thirty-five years, and in all that time he was so early my friend, and so far as I can now recall, I never asked him for one favor that was not granted in the brotherly spirit for which he was so noted. For about thirty years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school at Berea. His interests centered and led the children on to better thoughts of life and its duties. How many will long remember him as they know him in their childhood—in the days when they were in the Sunday-school with him as their leader. It is a beautiful picture to be kept fresh in the heart and mind through the long years that may come to many of those who have been blessed by his love and sympathy. Capt. Gaskins was always interested in the work of the church, whether it was local matter, or some denominational enterprise, and he was not only interested, but he was ever ready to lend a helping hand to what ever he believed would help the cause of Christ. I remember how he used to help when we first began to raise money for the education of young men for the ministry. Then later came the efforts to raise mission money, and then later to build the college, (Elon) and he was ever ready to help, and yet later he came to see the effect to establish the Orphanage and that also received generous consideration. True his own local church, Berea, always received his generous support. Indeed, we feel that Berea will always seem to those who knew him well as if something is lacking there, now that he can be seen within its walls no longer. He was a noble man, and a warm hearted Christian. I was glad to have him as my friend, and I shall cherish his memory as one who I loved long and truly. To write these long things back to me many a year ago of the long ago, and I see visions of the things which were then familiar, but may come no more. So glad to see the children well, and to see the church prospering, and to see the home and church prospering. I wish that the Father's blessing should be so plentiful and that the Father who it could be so soon and so long ago, and his loved wife, as he had it once upon a time. God bless his memory and the story of his life is a noble one—a life which is full of grace and glory and which is the last of the grace of the Christian life. His wife and wife joined his work in the church, his family and to the church in which he so long and so well served God. I will ever remember him as a noble friend, and I hope they have unitedly sustained.

I am glad to see that Elon is doing so well in patronage. It ought to have yet a larger number of students, not so much because the college needs them, although it does, but because the people of the Christian Church need to have their children educated. That is what the College is for, and because of this, it ought to have many more students—the boys and girls of the South need to be educated, and Elon is the place to do it.

Bro. J. B. Weston, who was injured by an accident in falling down the stairway before Christmas, is recovering nicely and is again able to go about his work as usual.

President Hamner of Jireh College is actively pushing the canvass to raise funds for that institution, and he has had some success of which any of our colleges might be proud. He is a strong man, and is doing a great work.

THANKS.

Mr. Newman and I desire to record our grateful appreciation of a large and generous contribution. The good people of that church came Thursday, 19th, in numbers and I felt I could not stand, shoulders, arms, hands, feet, sugar, coffee, hard, and some of the best of the best for the money and some of the change for my pocket. In addition to this many of both the Holland and Holy Neck members and friends were with us at Christmas and made us feel with individual gifts of substantial value. We extend to each and all our heartfelt thanks. We appreciate the gifts both for their practical value and as free expressions of goodwill from a kind and generous people. Most kindly I therefore abundantly bless and thank them, and may I be of greater service to them in the future.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Norfolk Letter.

Mrs. Hanson has returned home. She is convalescing nicely, and hopes to soon be entirely well.

Miss Mary Lou Brickhouse has also gone home from the hospital and is doing well.

The Third Church had several visitors in its congregation Sunday morning. Amongst the number was Mr. W. S. Johnson of Gilmerton, and several members of his family. His wife, son and daughter hold their membership with us, but he is one of the leading members of the Methodist church at Gilmerton.

Many of our people were agreeably surprised to have with us Miss Susie Turpin, who for more than two years has been in Porto Rico connected with an orphanage. She reached Norfolk last Tuesday. Her coming at this time was quite unexpected. Her sisters, Mrs. E. L. Myers has been sick for some time and it was the seriousness of her condition that made her decide to come just when she did. Mrs. Myers leaves Saturday for Baltimore where she goes to have a surgical operation. Her family and friends are very anxious about her.

Mesdames Dixon and Jarvis added to the interest of the services both morning and evening by singing duets.

In the absence of Bro. Howsare who is at Elon Rev. J. D. McAlister of the Anti-Saloon League took the services at the Temple in the morning and Rosemont in the afternoon. At night the Y. P. S. C. E., had a special missionary service.

Mr. Ford, delegate from Norfolk to the late State Convention, was the speaker.

Bro. Atkinson:—I promised when I left the South to write a note for The Sun, but have neglected to fulfill my promise. Perhaps it is not too late yet. This is a beautiful country, mostly level, and it is a fine sight to stand and look out over the prairies. You can see for miles. This is a great grain country, especially corn. I do not think I would be far from the truth if I should say there were as many bushels of corn raised the past year in this county as there was in the entire State of North Carolina. We are having a fine winter. However the new year was ushered in with a blizzard such as the people of the South have no conception of. Jan. 1st the wind blew at the rate of 50 miles and with a blinding storm of snow you could not see but a few rods. So I stayed in the house all day. The 2nd day the wind was still blowing but not snowing. The third day was our coldest day: 22 degrees below zero. But the mercury began to climb and in a week the snow had all gone except the drifts and all the rest of the month has been very fine weather. The atmosphere is very dry and so you do not feel that chilly effect that you do at Elon.

Mrs. Bolton has been suffering with rheumatism in her right arm and shoulder ever since she came. She cannot use her arm very much. We hope to find relief soon. I am enjoying the best of health.

Closed a two week's meeting last Sunday night with 10 conversions and 12 additions to the church.

We both join in sending our best wishes to friends at Greensboro and Elon College.

J. W. Bolton.

Nansemond Notes.

Since my last letter we have been the recipients of special favors, for our table, from several of our friends and members. The following friends have kindly remembered us: Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Peel, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Copeland, Mr. and Mrs. Joel E. Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Rawles, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lee, Mrs. T. R. Gaskins, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Brinkley, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ramsay, Dr. and Mrs. L. L. Eley; Liberty Spring Sunday School remembered the writer with a very useful Christmas present. For these and all other kindnesses we wish to return our sincere thanks.

Bro. Joel Brinkley, one of the members of Liberty Spring church is very sick at his home in Suffolk. For several years brother Brinkley has been working with Dr. Corbin in Savannah, Ga. In earlier years he took a prominent part in the church work at Liberty Spring, until he moved from the community. He has rendered good service by his musical ability. His children are splendid workers in the choir of the Suffolk church. His many friends wish for him a speedy recovery. He is suffering intensely from a chronic disease of the heart.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the next session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention will be held at Liberty Spring church, in Nansemond County. This Convention will meet July 19-21. Much work can be accomplished in our schools between now and that date. The various departments can increase the efficiency of the work. It is time to begin planning for the Convention. This church is located in the country, and it is important for all persons who expect to attend the Convention to notify the pastor, or the chairman of the entertainment committee. Persons who go by rail will stop at Nurney, on the Atlantic Coast Line. This is not located in a village, and special arrangements will have to be made to convey the delegates and visitors to the church, which is located about two and one-half miles from the station. This may seem very early to give notice about this matter, but I am sure many inquiries will be made about this during the next two or three months. Other notices will appear later. Suffice it now to say, that if you expect to attend the Convention, it will be very important for you to notify some one in due time, before the Convention is in session. Ample provision will be made to care for all who attend the Convention, but it will be necessary for every person who goes to notify the entertainment committee. Otherwise you might not be able to secure conveyance to the church. Six passenger trains arrive at Nurney each day, and it will be impossible to have conveyances meet all these trains, each day of the Convention, unless we have notice beforehand. Our people have been somewhat slow to heed such notices as this, but I believe all who have entertained a Convention will see the wisdom of this request. Liberty Spring people desire a full attendance at the next Convention, and will be delighted to entertain all delegates and visitors who may attend.

I. W. Johnson.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

No doubt patriotism rests primarily upon birthplace, though other ties may bind the life to another country. Abraham gave up his own country under the overwhelming impulse of his faith in God and learned to love Canaan better than Ur of the Chaldees. Moses loved the people of God so intensely as to choose to suffer affliction with them rather than remain in the land of his birth and of his education. He loved the land he never entered better than he loved Egypt, because it was the "land of promise." I have no doubt, however, that both of these great men of Biblical history always carried in their hearts a tender regard for their native countries; and I believe there is something in the birthplace and the cradle that keeps baby tenderness in the heart for nativity and early associations.

The last few days have carried me over early scenes and among early friends; and memories almost crowd out present realities. Leaving Suffolk the 23rd, I spent that night with my family and the next night in Graham with Dr. Geo. W. Long's family, and they were our "next door" neighbors when we first kept house. His wife is a confirmed rheumatic, in a helpless condition; he has been greatly afflicted, but is now greatly improved; his daughter, Mrs. Adams, from Statesville, is with them. I spent a few hours in Graham the next morning and went from house to house and found many of the friends of twenty-five years ago feeble and shut in for the remainder of their natural lives. A quarter of a century changes faces, streets, houses, business, and you have to look beneath the present to see the scenes of childhood. But, in spite of any sad conditions memory colors with tints of the past and when the picture is complete it is very beautiful. Elmer, the son of my friend, Col. J. A. Long, is in the legislature; my youngest half-brother, R. N. Cook, is Sheriff of Alamance, a county containing nearly 30,000 inhabitants and paying taxes to the amount of $80,000.00.

I visited, also, Captain E. S. Parker, who founded the Alamance Gleaner, of which J. D. Kernodle is now editor and proprietor. Capt. Parker was one of N. Carolina's great lawyers and his son, Junius is second among the attorneys of the American Tobacco Company. Capt. Parker is confined by some form of paralysis and will never plead in the courts again. His wife was sick also.

At Burlington I visited relatives and Deacon V. S. Kilby of Suffolk. He is spending the winter with his only daughter, Mrs. Dr. Page. Brother Kilby was just turning the crisis in a bad case of pneumonia and is now convalescent.

I found my half-brother, John M. Cook, in bed with grip, but better.

At 5:30 P. M., Jan. 25th, I married my niece, Miss Netta B. Cook to Mr. James W. Robertson, of Lexington, N. C. This service was performed in the home of the bride's father, the room being filled with relatives and friends of the young couple. They left on the evening train for their new home with the best wishes of their friends.

I spent the night at Elon College where an enthusiastic faculty and a large body of young students are honestly co-operating for education in the best sense. Rev. McD. Howsare, of Norfolk Memorial Temple was in the first week of a revival in the College chapel. The students are well-pleased with his preaching and the outlook promises a fine meeting. Dr. Atkinson is pastor of the College church and Uncle Wellons is assistant, very enthusiastic and now in his 86th year.

President Moffitt and wife were at Governor's reception in Raleigh where the legislature is now in session. I looked in upon the House and Senate yesterday where they were trying to improve the laws and secure the welfare of more than two million people.

Before starting for Suffolk this morning I am furnishing ballast for another voyage of the Christian Sun.

But really, in these years, when I go over the hills of my boyhood, I must pass by graves, and sick beds to see new life, new improvements, new roads, and a new county.

W. W. Staley.

"How Old Art Thou?"

Dear Brother Atkinson:

The fifteenth of December I went to Harnett County and reached brother Samuel C. McCauley's late in the evening. In his yard I found a table about 30 yards long. The next day at eleven o'clock Uncle Sam's neighbors came with boxes and baskets and that table was filled with a bountiful dinner, but before this dinner was served the writer preached to a crowded house of interesting hearers. And after the sermon, followed a testimony service which I believe will be long remembered and at the close nearly every person in the house gave their hand to Uncle Sam in covenant to meet him in heaven. There was one man who said he had not shed tears before that day in 40 years. Then the contents of those boxes and baskets were spread on this long table and about 60 neighbors and friends gathered around and after thanks were offered they enjoyed a sumptuous meal. Besides these boxes and baskets brought by his neighbors, some brought presents. It was a glad day for Uncle Sam and his dear wife. They are spending their time together like two sweet little children. Uncle Sam is now eighty three years old, blind in one eye but cheerful and happy. When I left my purse was replenished and a valuable present put in my buggy taking up about all the room I had to spare. Before I left Uncle Sam asked me to tell the brethren at Moore Union to build a new house of worship and he would have it painted.

Moore Union.

Our service here last Sunday was one of interest. At the close of the sermon some 6 or 8 young men and 1 young lady entered into a covenant for a more consecrated life. They now have a splendid choir. Prof. Petty is now teaching the second session of singing school for them. They have an evergreen Sunday-school with Deacon W. C. Dickens Superintendent. I have known this church for the past 25 or 30 years, and I don't think I ever knew it to be in a better spiritual condition than now.

Yours saved to serve,

P. T. Klapp.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Shallow Well Sunday school now has on roll 102 scholars. Mr. J. P. Advent, Jonesboro, is our superintendent. We have as fine a superintendent and teachers as the county can afford and also as good a country Sunday school as you will find anywhere.—Lee County Times.

—Rev. T. W. Strowd, Chapel Hill, has returned from a Norfolk hospital much improved in health, though still under a physician's treatment. He hopes to meet his regular appointments beginning with first Sunday in February.

—Rev. Dr. Martyn Summerbell of Lakemont, N. Y., it is announced, will preach in the Suffolk, Va., church next Sunday and subsequently deliver two addresses there. Dr. Summerbell begins his course of lectures at Elon College on the Tuesday evening following, viz, Feb. 7.

—After waiting several days for favorable weather J. A. D. McCurdy began his flight in a Curtis biplane from Key West to Havana Jan. 30, but when within about 10 miles of Havana the oil gave out and man and machine fell to water, both being picked up, without injury, by a torpedo boat destroyer.

—Our good Brother J. H. Smiley of Macon, N. C., voices the sentiment of many Sun readers when, on renewing for the Sun the coming year, he says, "I think Brother Kitchen's letters are well worth the price of the paper." Brother Kitchen is certainly sending messages of comfort and good cheer into many homes through his Sun articles, and they are looked for and appreciated far and near.

—President M. L. Shipman of the North Carolina Press Association used the following salient words in his address before the Mid-Winter Session of the Association at Winston last week. "I am glad to see that an increasing number of influential North Carolina newspapers are excluding liquor advertisements from their columns. Personally, I am in absolute accord with this enlightened step and congratulate those earnest journalists, who would place the newspapers of their grand old State upon so high a plane.

—The Norfolk Landmark of Jan. 24 says: "Last night at the Christian Memorial Temple in Norfolk, Colonel J. E. West made an eloquent address before a large congregation, his subject being "A Home Mission Laymen's Movement." Colonel West is actively interested in mission work and is one of the most liberal contributors in his denomination, at one time practically supporting a mission church." We sincerely and devoutly trust that Col. West, Prof. Lawrence and others of our interested laymen will yet stir our brotherhood to deep concern and activity in the matter of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Here is an open field for the laymen of our churches and the opportunity is large and inviting. May God help them enter.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Rev. McD. Howsare, Editor,
Norfolk, Va.

IS YOURS A STANDARD MISSIONARY CHURCH?

To be such it must have:

1. A missionary pastor.
2. A men's missionary committee.
3. A missionary Sunday-school.
4. A program of prayer for missions.
5. A systematic missionary education.
6. An every member canvass for missions.
7. A weekly offering for missions.

Some Phases of the Laymen's Movement.

The secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions issued circulars calling for 10,000 "key men" to associate themselves together as a national bureau for distribution of intelligence concerning missionary needs in foreign lands. Information of an up-to-date character will be furnished by four or five friends who will travel next year visiting foreign countries when the Board has missions. Information will lead to increased benevolences.

At our Square League composed of men who join themselves together to give at least $10,000 a year to foreign missions, is finding much favor. They also, endeavor to persuade three other men to give $10,000 and to quadruple the gifts of their churches, and furthermore insist that at least one fourth of Christian giving go to foreign missions.

Missionary Exposition.

A great Missionary Exposition is being planned for Boston Apr. 24--May 20 next year at Mechanics Building. Extensive preparations are being made. It is planned to have 10,000 workers in the exposition. A pageant entitled Light and Darkness will be given every afternoon, representing the history and triumphs of Christianity in all parts of the world. Scenes will be portrayed showing conditions found in many mission lands. Thousands of people are planning to be present.

Unrest in Egypt.

The situations in Egypt is still critical. According to the London standard all the parties antagonistic to the British occupation, whose dissensions and diversity of object have diminished their power, are making a serious attempt to join forces. The nationalist party has been split into two bitter factions as the result of a law-suit for the possession of Al Lewa the official organ. The party of the people is more powerful than either of these factions for it is supported by more important men, politically, socially, and financially. Its official organ, Al Garcedah, shows a sympathy with reform and with the new Islam, but it has been noticeable for its bitterness against the Khedive for his friendly relations with the British agency. A call to prayer is sent out by the missionary, and we should ask wisdom for the authorities in the difficult task of governing, also for the missionaries and native Christians.—Missionary Review of the World.

SOME OTHER WAY.

Christ said: "He that entereth not by the door into the fold of the sheep, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." There were many in those days who attempted to get into the Christian fold by some other way than the true one. They did not like Christ's terms of admission into God's kingdom. They objected to Christ's way. There always were people who were opposed to God's way of salvation. It was so in Christ's day. God's way was made plain to him, but he objected to it. He planned a way for himself. It was his own way. He would not yield to God's way of presenting a sin offering, thereby confessing his need of an atonement. Abel, his brother, was glad to comply with God's way and therefore he obtained pardoning favor from God. It was the only way out of sin into salvation, out of bondage into liberty. Cain tried some other way, and he perished in his sins. He chose the way of death. And this is just what a great number of people are doing today. In their conduct, they imagine that the way of their own choice is better than God's way. They do not believe in "blood theology," and they will not submit to it. They do not believe in a vicarious sacrifice for sinners, because, they say, it is an immoral theory. The idea that an innocent person should suffer death for a guilty one is abhorrent to their fine sense of propriety. They insist upon having "some other way." They would substitute their own way for God's way. They can do this, but the experiment is fraught with death and destruction. Some are trying the way of religious education. They say that young children are already in a saved state, and that what is further necessary is the proper use of religious instruction, by which there is an upward growth into full Christian character. We have a good many samples of "Christians" produced in this way, and there are no signs of true life in them. The process is very natural, and the results are very human, if not worse. It is such ones that are barriers to the true progress of the churches to which they belong. The way of human works is full of spiritual death. It is a broad way to hell, and many religious people are going there in that way. Salvation in Christ is the true way.

C. H. Wetherbe.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

One morning I started out for a journey. Not a cloud obscured the sky, no indications of rain to be seen. I did not go very far before the clouds began to appear, and soon the blue canopy was hidden. Rain began to fall and the hope of a beautiful day was lost. About this same scene came to me last fall, but it was of a different nature and lasted much longer. I have been working my way in school for the last three years, getting out during the summer and hustling about to recruit financially. Last spring I accepted a position with the Bonlee & Western Railway as agent, with the expectation of entering Elon in the spring. About the first of October I was taken sick, and lingering for a few weeks, I failed to get any better. On October 21st, I had to go to the hospital for an operation for appendicitis. For a long time I was very sick, and as the doctors tell me now, I just did pass the ordeal. I left the hospital on December 6th, very feeble—all my earnings spent and considerably in debt.

This sickness was to me like the rainy day, it brought disappointment. The idea of entering school this year could not be entertained, the indebtedness incurred calling for almost a year's work.

I was strong enough a few weeks ago to take up my work again with the Company. While I fully realize that I am snowed under, yet I am hopeful in every way, and expect to get in school as soon as possible. My work is not very hard, hence I have some two or three hours every day that I can spend on books, which will keep me in sight of my studies. I was almost heart broken when I found that I must pass through an operation and be delayed in almost every way with my work, but

His wonders to perform,

He walks upon the sea

And rides upon the storm."

GETTING READY TO TEACH.

There are two kinds of teachers—those who prepare for it and those who don't. The latter class ought to be abolished. Of those teachers who prepare for it—there are also two kinds—those who prepare specifically and those who prepare not only specifically, but also generally.

Those who prepare specifically are to be commended. They usually know not only what the Quarterly says, but also what the Bible says in parallel passages and what at least one general commentary like Pelouset or Tarbell or Arnold has to say. This is done conscientiously and takes about all the time the average teacher can give to a specific lesson. It would be well to do more extensive work, but this minimum (and it is but a minimum) is about all the majority of teachers can be counted on to do. Would that all would do so much!

Those who not only make this specific preparation, but also prepare generally are a comparatively new class of teachers. It is true that as far back as 1852 Rev. Jno. E. Vincent was doing pioneer work in this line with the young people of the Juliet, Ill. congregation. But this was pioneer work on the religious frontier. About ten years ago the world seemed to take the wild enthusiasm for this sort of work and practically all denominations now have created and published their own Teacher-Training Courses. The ideal teacher is one who has taken a course in general preparation and when he has become a teacher makes the needed special preparation for each week's lesson. The army of such teachers is constantly increasing in numbers and influence. This department should be promoted by its motto for the time being—'Acquire knowledge concerning the preparation of such teachers and in any way possible combine the preparation of teachers always give a special lesson in various Sunday-schools of our Southern Christian Convention. We should also correspond with all who are interested.'

Which kind of teacher are you? Which kind do you wish to be, in case you are an interested Sunday-school worker, with the probability of being called upon to act in the capacity of a teacher later on in life? Which?

State C. E. Convention

The N. C. State C. E. Convention was to have been held in April 23-25, but a change of date has been necessitated by the fact that the N. C. State S. S. Association will be in annual Convention at that time in High Point. The Business Board met in Greensboro last Saturday and decided to hold the Convention the last of March, provided that date can be made to dovetail into the program of the International Society Campaign. It is hoped that Mr. Karl Lehman, Field Secretary of the United Society of C. E. for the United States, will be able to spend two weeks in the State immediately preceding the Convention and then take a prominent part in the Convention itself. Until he is heard from, the date cannot be definitely fixed. Dr. P. H. Fleming and the pastor of the congregation are to be the hosts of the Convention this time. The attendance at our Convention grows larger as the time of its holding draws nearer. Let every C. E. Society of our church in this State prepare to send at least one delegate to this great gathering. There is just now awakening to the need of C. E. in our midst as evidenced by the number of such societies recently organized in our congregations and cannot be over-estimated so rare an opportunity of gaining a larger and clearer vision such as this Convention will undoubtedly give.

A Good Idea.

Rev. G. C. Cox writes that our Liberty, N. C. congregation has decided to use the C. E. Theme as a character-building topic. This is a good idea and as such we commend it to our people generally. The prayer-meeting at the First Congregational Church in Greensboro has been using the Sunday-school theme on the following Sunday as a subject for the topic and with gratifying results. This is a good idea for the people to consider. What time what place what people should make preparation for the meeting. A prayer-meeting to be successful must be ordinarily prepared for by one or the other of these methods. We hope and cheer let us have the good will of the population in these religious exercises. It is well to bring the subject to another part always to be met by some method of letting the people stand on the prayer-meeting. It is a dead and alive sort of affair, and the coming of real spiritual power, in which it will be the exception for each people not to take part in the meeting.

An Explanation to Our Readers.

The present editor wishes to explain to our readers that he is not responsible for the manner in which the C. E. Theme for the past two weeks has been presented. Last week the treatment of Topic began in column one of our department and broke suddenly off. By carefully looking the reader found it appended as the conclusion of an entirely different article in the second column of the adjoining page. Week before last the topic ended on page six and began on page seven. Our readers will please charge these ludicrous matters up to the devil for even the religious newspaper offices have to deal with this pesty creature. We think we have things in decency and order, when lo! the devil upsets it all. This is so in life as well as in a printing office. We hope our readers will be patient with us. We hope this explanation explains.

What Joseph Teaches Us.

By Rev. E. A. Watkins.

Human experience is a valuable teacher. The same elements of character are found in the men of all ages. The life of Joseph is suggestive to us, because we have a large number of the same problems to solve that he had. If we can understand the secret foundations of his life, we will be more easily comprehend the real significance of his career.

Joseph was perfected by suffering. The capacity for large things was developed in the furnace of hard knocks. He never could have reached the heights, had it not been for his misfortunes in the valley. The capacity to fill a great place in life is made possible by the sufferings and misfortunes of the common place.

Joseph triumphed by the very steps that were taken to defeat him. Had he never been the boy of the desert, the captive lad in the hands of the merchantmen, the youth of the dungeon, he never would have become the adviser of loyalty. "There is a divinity that shapes our ends."

Misfortune and disaster have a brighter interpretation than we had thought, if we can only await God's time completing the logic of events. From a human point of view, Joseph's hopes are blasted, his prospects are blotted out, his day-star has been dimmed by the darkest night, stolen from home, is counted as dead, sold as a slave and now is plunged into a criminal's dungeon; but he never was so near real glory as when he touched that prison cell. He puts out his hand to help his fellows and touches a gold-mine—The Premier-ship of Egypt.

Joseph illustrates beautifully the thought, that he that is faithful in little things develops the capacity to take care of larger interests, when entrusted with them. When but a lad his father entrusted him with an important task. He did it faithfully and glorified the common glimmer of toil by his fidelity to the trust reposed in him.

His salvation and emancipation came when he put forth his hand in service of his fellows. Relieving the pain of others brought relief to Joseph. It opened the store house of Egypt and the Palace of the father's care. The brothers have given up their jealousy, for the prime Minister of Egypt is beyond their jealousy and he has given up his selfishness, and his dreams of superiority, and now finds a kingdom in the exercising of humanitarian instincts.

We have no record of a word of complaint. Whether in the pit, on the way to Egypt, in the prison cell or in Pharaoh's Court, he was always hopeful and optimistic. He was always cheerful and never lost his courage. Our enemies injure us most when we allow them to make us hate them, and nourish toward them a feeling of revenge.

Joseph successfully resisted his temper, because of the strength of his resolutions to obey God, his complete dedication to a life of purity and the fact that his would-be seducer found no response to her lust in him. Men are tempted and go down, because they want to do the wrong.

C. E. TOPICS FOR FEB. 12—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lessons form the Life of Joseph Gen. 41:14-41.

The Scripture:—Have three to read the Scripture dramatically—one the narrative portion, one what Pharaoh says, a third what Joseph says. Read in this way, the Scripture lesson will be most impressive. Dispense with comment thereon.

The Life of Joseph:—The life of Joseph is recorded in Genesis from chapters 37 to the end, chapter 38 of this record being omitted. It would be well to assign a chapter to each of thirteen Endeavors with the request that the account it gives be given in their own words in five minute talks. This exercise might very well precede the reading of the scripture as suggested above.

The Teacher's Remarks:—There are many lessons to be had from the life of Joseph—his innocence, his unselfishness, his faith, his love for his brethren, his manner of meeting hardships, his manner of enduring success, his respect for his father, his ascribing all his powers to God, etc. The leader will select one of these and present it forcibly. He will manage to have the other characteristics of this great man properly presented by other members of the Society in short talks.

Little Children Coming to the Father:

Samuel an Example.

Jesus, our advocate, through and by whom we all must come to God, said—Suffer (permit) little children to come unto me. That is, do not hinder, or put a stumbling-block in their way. It were better, says Luke and others of the gospel writers, that a millstone were hanged about your neck and that we be cast into the sea than that we should offend (obstruct the coming of) one of these little ones.

Samuel's experience in coming to God clearly demonstrates.

1. God calls even little children to serve him.—By obedience to parents, by rendering service to others, by faithful attendance upon God's house.

2. Little children may not understand God's call when first they hear it.—Samuel did not, but by reason of the obedience which had been taught him and the spiritual training he had received from his mother and Eli, Samuel not only developed a disposition eager to know the truth, but manifested a willingness promptly to obey as soon as the truth was discovered.

3. The expediency of answering God's call when once it is recognized.—God does not withdraw his call until we have understood it, but when once we knowingly reject the pleadings of his voice we jeopardize all future chance for salvation. Samuel did not do this, he did not even delay, but gave himself at once wholly, unreservedly, fully, to the Lord.

4. Our duty to instruct children in the knowledge and understanding of their relation to God.—We should speak the timely word and use all our influence to lead children into the kingdom. Eli could have with-held the interpretation and explanation of what was to Samuel a great mystery and which led Samuel to answer God's call, but such omission on the part of Eli would have amounted to a lost opportunity, and a lost opportunity sometimes means a lost soul. Should not we be careful that such a loss be not chargeable to us? Failure on our part to lead the little ones and show them the way to God may constitute an "offense" just as much as some sinful commission.

—Because of engagements this editor could not forego he was prevented with sincere regret, from joining the editors of the State in their mid-winter meeting at Winston-Salem last week. Of course the editors had a good time, as usual, and no wonder, for among the quill drivers of this commonwealth are some of the very best fellows we have ever known, courageous, wide-awake, congenial gentlemen always, and workers from the word go. It is always a pleasure and an inspiration to meet and mingle with them. It was a pity the Charleston trip had to be abandoned; and here we are with a beautiful program for our intertainment at Albemarle. We are grateful; but we could not help ourselves this time.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The Perfect Man.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, though bestowing his millions to make the world better and happier, has misgivings as to a future state. And so out of that vague faithlessness in a future is born this recent declaration with which he is credited: "The wonders that are going on around us make one wish that he could live forever. I should like to see that future day when man will be perfect." Would that it might occur to Mr. Carnegie that his wish might be obtained. Unless Mr. Carnegie had been born to immortality he had never made such a wish as that. The wish grew out of the possibility. Even the wish expressed the reality behind it. There was a perfect Man. He was the fairest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. And in Him there is perfection. We are complete in Him. It is possible for Carnegie, as it is for the rest of us, to so live that we shall come to perfection in Him. Mr. Carnegie may see, by God's gracious favor, that future when man will be perfect; but man will only come to perfection, not through reforms and evolution, as Carnegie implied, but by and through the grace and favor of Jesus Christ.

Advertising the Bad.—The editor of The Manufacturer's Record, R. H. Edmonds, made an address in Charlotte some days since that was uncommonly sane and suggestive. Mr. Edmonds says the South pays more attention to advertising the bad than it does the good things that it has. Industrial notes of great importance are handled in a paragraph, but lynchings, killings and crimes are heavily leaded and flaunted in bold lines to the four corners. Mr. Edmonds thinks that if Southern papers would cut out so much calamity, killing and crimes, and write and print more about our advantages in climate and resources we would be a great deal better off.

This is very good gospel. There is nothing that lowers values and detracts from prices like evil of any kind. People neither care to purchase nor to live where there is crime, calamity and murder. Orderliness and obedience to law have a commercial, as well as a moral worth.

Quick Work of a Bad Job.—Last Wednesday a bill was introduced into the North Carolina legislature to abolish all "Near-Beer" shops in the State. In about twelve hours the committee, to whom the matter was referred, had met, deliberated and decided, with a single voice dissenting, to report the bill favorably. The bill is a special order, but there is little doubt as to its fate. The slogan of the committee that considered the bill was "Kill the stuff, and kill it quick." And this seems to be the sentiment of the legislature as a whole. These near-beer joints have proven themselves an abomination and a nuisance. They have, in many instances been used as a cloak for base and gross violations of law and both those who favor prohibition and those who do not favor it are united in their desire to see the near-beer fakes eliminated. Near-beer dealers may as well begin to pack up and get out. Their joints have already encumbered the earth too long.

To Abolish War.

All lovers of true religion, of peace and righteousness must applaud with cordiality the generous gift of $10,000,000 which Mr. Andrew Carnegie made recently to a Peace Foundation, the income from which is to be used in the promotion of peace and the abolition of war. Surely Mr. Carnegie never gave to a more noble purpose. Students and experts are to be employed, lawyers of eminence and influence, to study international law, and to promote in all possible way the arts of peace and the laws and statutes that would induce thereto. A most beautiful incident accrued when the Methodist ministers meeting of New York drafted the following resolution and carried it, through a committee of three to Mr. Carnegie in person. "As ministers of the Prince of Peace, serving Christian flocks, we heartily welcome and approve the generous gift of Mr. Andrew Carnegie of $10,000,000 for the promotion of international peace. We agree with him in holding that war is barbarous, out of harmony with the civilization of the "twentieth century of the Christian era," and a cruel, costly and wasteful method of settling international disputes. Christianity gives first place to love of man for man and nation for nation, and to human reason, and of course these demand international arbitration of international differences which diplomacy fails to settle. We tender to Mr. Carnegie our sincere thanks for the noble fund he has set apart for the abolition of war and of the next greatest evils, by the propagation of sound sentiment and sound morals. In this campaign Christian ministers are heartily united." Mr. Carnegie detained the ministers nearly an hour speaking to them his desire for peace and of their work in this behalf. He is reported to have said to them, "I like the Methodists. They have got religion; they do things." Mr. Carnegie is capable of great thoughts, as well as of great deeds.

—Rev. McD. Howsare of our Norfolk Memorial Church has been preaching at Elon College in a series of evangelistic services the past week. Vast and untold good has been accomplished. The college and community have been greatly awakened to things spiritual and the meetings have been a blessing to all. Bro. Howsare is certainly an earnest, faithful, consecrated man, and preaches the Word with simplicity and with great power. His sermons have been a source of great spiritual uplift to all and many were converted to God and turned from the error of their way. All the people in and about Elon fell in love with Bro. Howsare and will ever after this hear him with joy and gladness.

—Andrew Carnegie has given an additional endowment of $10,000,000 to the Carnegie Institution of Washington, which makes a total of $25,000,000 Mr. Carnegie has given to this institution.

THE ORPHANAGE

We are now in our 2d week.
We will be looking for checks and friends all over the State and in 1911 we will have a very successful year...

We hope to take a few more of the applicants now before us; but it looks impossible unless we can increase our income. We trust that there may be many friends who will take in the individual feeding and clothing of one child, $5.00 per month is the basis of this cost. Our forefather of Durham, N. C., and Bro.
Johnson of Graham, N. C., have carried the offerings and last year Bro. Carlton added $1.50 making $6.50 so as to cover more fully. These brethren express themselves as receiving a pleasure—a satisfaction from such gifts. Would you like to try the truth of "its more blessed to give than to receive?" Here is a fine field for work and we trust that money will enter and enjoy the rich returns for 1911.

We earnestly request that our children write to gladly and send in just what they feel they can afford—and make that truly.

The smiles in our family is over just now and all are up and eating.

We are grateful to all for gifts, large and small, and with our many friends a successful year's work.

Yours for service.

Ministerial Education.

So far as we have been able to investigate there was very little attention paid to ministerial education before the Civil War. Each ministerial candidate prepared himself as best he might, and perhaps some were assisted by their local churches or conference. Very few of our ministers attended college or university before that time.

As early as 1857 there was a sentiment in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference favoring a regular course for young men preparing for the ministry. Even before this date we find that the same conference had a committee on education and it recommended consent to the formation of an educational society to be composed of those who may voluntarily aid in the promotion of this object, and that the conference limit its efforts to sustaining the itinerancy and The Christian Sun. In 1860 a ministerial course was prepared by the same conference, Revs. A. G. Anderson and J. N. Manning leading in the matter.

In 1852 the Virginia Christian Educational Society was organized in Eastern Virginia to aid young men, called of God to the work of the ministry, to obtain an education.

Soon after the war, from the old church records we have had the opportunity to peruse, we find that some, at least, were trying to keep young men, preparing for the ministry in school. In 1869 the N. C. and Va. Conference began organized work along this line, and at that date it was helping to keep ministerial students in school.

In 1870 the establishment of normal and Theological schools in the several conferences was recommended to the General Convention of the Christian Church, South, in session at Suffolk, Va. By 1879 many of the conferences were helping worthy young men to remain in school, and a general interest had arisen for a better educated ministry.

Since that date more and better provision has been made for us to have an educated ministry, and today it can be said that we believe the ministers of the Christian Church, South, will compare favorably with those of other denominations around us.

In 1869 Revs. W. B. Wellons and R. H. Holland were constituted a committee to counsel the colored Christians and to assist them in the establishment of churches and in the licensing applicants for the ministry, and in the ordination of elders.

NEWS ITEMS.

—The total of $125,421,538 is the size of the naval appropriation bill reported by the committee by the present Congress, an increase of the navy program calling for $34,270,816, which increase comprises two new battleships of 27,000 tons each, costing $11,835,408 each; two colliers at $1,000,000 each, eight torpedo boats destroyed at $825,000 each and four submarines at $500,000 each. The cost of our navy, and its maintenance, are something stupendous.

—When it is remembered that about a gallon and a half of spirituous liquors last year for every man, woman and child and twenty gallons of beer were consumed in the United States, it is readily seen that temperance advocates and prohibition movements have hardly begun the great task that is before them.

—Miss Vivien Gould, daughter of George J. Gould of New York, is to be married Feb. 7, to Lord Decies of England. It has not been reported as to how much cash the bride-to-be had to put up, save that her wedding trousseau is to cost $50,000. American girls have paid many millions, and will likely pay many millions more for empty foreign titles—and later for divorce.

—Rev. C. T. Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, Brooklyn, N. Y., speaking in Convention Hall, Washington, D. C., Sunday 29th declared it his belief that Christ would return to earth in 1915. W. A. Cuddy of Atlanta, Ga., an evangelist, openly challenged the statement and almost a panic ensued. Such sensational declarations are in bad taste and result in evil. We know not neither the time nor the season not even the angels in heaven know.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Last week the State Christian Endeavor Business Board which consists of Dr. R. A. Steele Spencer, Rev. A. G. Dixon, High Point, Miss Mamie Bays, Charlotte, Miss Florence Ledbetter, Greensboro, Mr. E. H. Stockton, Winston, and W. A. Harper, Elon College, met in the city of Greensboro, to consider the matter of the approaching State C. E. Convention, which will be held in the city of Burlington in the Christian Church, of which Dr. P. H. Fleming is pastor. It had been the original purpose of the Board to have the Convention in April, from the 23 to the 25, but in as much as the State Sunday School Convention is to be held in High Point at the same date, it was decided to hold the convention in March. The exact date has not yet been fixed, and this somewhat depends on the availability of Mr. Karl Lehman, of Boston, Mass., who is expected to be present at the Convention and who is an expert in C. E. work. Mr. Lehman also expects to make a two week's campaign prior to the Convention, of the State in the interest of C. E. The time for such a campaign seems ripe for the general interest in C. E. was never so great, and a large number of societies have been recently organized. A tentative program for the Convention was arranged, and quite a number of distinguished speakers are to be present.

President Moffitt spent last Saturday, Sunday, and Monday in Wake Co., in the interest of the Special Fund. He and Mrs. Moffitt attended the Reception of Governor Kitchen, on Wednesday as invited guests.

Dr. W. W. Staley, President Southern Christian Convention, and pastor of the First Christian Church at Suffolk, Va., paid the College a visit this week, which was very much appreciated. Dr. Staley was for 11 years the honored president of the institution and won for himself the admiration of all who have the institution at heart.

The meeting here is making rapid progress and the interest just now is very high. Mr. Howsare preached two powerful sermons yesterday, and was well rewarded by outward manifestations that the Spirit of God was present in the meetings, and moved several to change the course of their lives in the proper direction. The meeting will continue for several days to come, and it is hoped that everyone, who is not now a Christian, will be made to see the error of his way.

A petition was presented the voters of this precinct yesterday after the church service, in regard to the sale of near beer in North Carolina, and also asking the Legislature to memorialize Congress to so amend the laws regulating interstate commerce, as to prevent the shipping of whiskey into dry territory, from other states.

Rev. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Christian Church in Greensboro, N. C., was a pleasant visitor at the College during the past week.

Mr. C. C. Fonville, of last year's class, who is now doing graduate work at the University of N. C., spent the night on the Hill last Friday.

Mr. J. E. Lawrence, of Holland, Va., who was called to the bedside of his son, Henry, who is a member of the Freshman class, has returned home, and we are glad to announce that his son is much improved and he is expected to be out in a few days. Miss Blow, a trained nurse of Greensboro, is attending him.

W. A. H.

—One reason why North Carolina, through its present Legislature, is fixing to wipe out the near-beer joints throughout the State may be found in announcements like this.

(Special to The Landmark),

“Durham, N. C., Jan. 28.—Joseph Roycroft, a prominent farmer of Granville county, was found dead early this morning at the near-beer saloon of William Elverin, with his jugular vein cut. The body was stiff when found and the murder had evidently been committed some time in the night.

—Miss Dorothy Arnold, heiress and daughter of a New York millionaire has been missing, mysteriously, from her home several weeks. The police and detective agencies and enquiries sent all over the country have failed to locate her and her parents are distracted with grief. They believe their daughter kidnapped or murdered. Her father offers $1,000 for any information leading to her finding and recovery.

—Better beware of too great familiarity with cats. An Ohio physician, an exchange says, thinking that a patient had contracted tuberculous from a pet cat, examined a hundred cats in the town and found germs of tuberculous in every one of them.

—Sidney Barrier, a young white man, was shot and killed at H. A. Goodman's near beer stand two miles from Concord, N. C., last Saturday about mid-night. Thus there were at least two murders, out right and in cold blood, at near beer saloons that night, one in Durham, the other in Cabarrus County. No wonder the Legislature seems ready to wipe out this nuisance. There is need.

WAITING UPON THE LORD.

They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint. Isa. 40: 31.

In the verse preceding the text the prophet says: The youths shall faint and be weary and the young men shall utterly fall. Then He contrasts most truly and beautifully between the two classes, showing clearly that one shall fail—shall fall while the other shall rise to spiritual success and happiness. A moment's thought and a glance in the dim past will show that that condition is true, and that many youths and young men have failed in the out set and in the very prime of their lives. They reached an early and premature death, going down to it, by different ways and untold causes. Tired with home influences—they become weary with its restraint and drifted out into the wide ocean of sinful pleasure where the turbulent waves of vice stranded them forever. If they started right they soon got wrong and were dashed to death by the breakers of indulgence and excess. When we recall the names of many young men, and recount their short journey, we find that so many of them who started with us are absent. They have fallen out of the line of march long ago, and are with us no more. Judging from their walk, work, and conversation they were sadly hurt and ruined by their final fall. Failing to take Jesus with them resulted in their fatal end, and caused them to be in outer darkness and excluded from the light of life. What eternal remembrances must cluster around the words, light of life! To be in perpetual despair and think of such bright living words is dreadful to consider, and yet many are in that last condition. But all who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength—they shall be helpful, vigorous and heavenly minded, because they live and move in Him and have their lives in His life.

Waiting on the Lord. What a great privilege to have this grand opportunity! How delightfully pleasant it is to learn more of Him, and to know how to wait upon Him in an acceptable manner, so that more love may be produced, and better service rendered. It will be well to notice first how we can wait upon the Lord and get a clear conception of our duty; for if a known duty is performed, it always gives happiness, and imparts inexpressible pleasure. In the beginning of our devotion we may wait upon our Lord silently. When entering the place for worship it should be done reverently and quietly, looking up to Him, the object of our worship, believing that the Spirit will abide with and influence the service in the most helpful way. For if the mind is fixed upon earnest, devout worship, and if it will catch the comforting influence of the occasion, it will greatly help in all the service which may follow. Listen well to these words. Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy hearts; wait, I say, on the Lord.

The withered grass waits all through the long dry burning summer day for the silent dew to fall on it. Then it looks lively and beautiful with pure drops of water like diamonds sparkling in the rising sun light, until its bright face glitters with new growth and is tinged with a brighter and better color. So when coming before the Lord to receive the blessings which waiting gives, the refreshing can be so abundant as to give greater strength to the soul that is withering under the blighting influence of sin. It may be nearly exhausted—nearly overcome by the opposing and conflicting elements, but the windows of heaven can be opened until streams of blessing shall flow into every life. When such inexhaustible showers of grace and love shall bathe the feeble soul it will swell with gladness by waiting on the Lord. Then with unmeasured and untold joy you may say: Be still and know that I am God. By silently, earnestly and continually waiting a better glimpse and a more per-

THE POWER OF CHOICE.

(Chose you this day whom ye will serve Joshua 24:15. Golden text for Sunday, Feb. 12.)

There is power, and there is strength in choice. This is the very source, and the very secret, of the strength of our Christian religion. It compels one to a choice. It brings one to a decision. It faces one with a crisis and a climax. Brought face to face with the issue of life, and of death, it says, choose. No other religion draws the line as does the religion of Lord Christ. One may be a pagan all one's life, and not be forced to a single crisis of choice. One may offer sacrifices, fall down before idols and worship the creation of man's hand all his life, and still not make a definite decision, a single, final choice unto which one flings one's whole life.

It is not so with Christianity. Here we must make a choice. Here one cannot serve two masters. One must choose between God and mammon. Herein is redemption. Here is salvation. When one gathers up all of one's life, past, present and future, all of one's hope, help and happiness into the balance, then and there man and God ensphere—and man goes forth a new creature, with new-born strength and power.

A strong character may easily choose. A weak character chooses with difficulty. And in the act of choice, decisive, unflinching, undaunted choice there is somewhat that makes cowardly men brave, and weak men strong.

In a day Elijah brought a nation from apostasy back to the true faith. In a day the weak and wavering were made strong and steadfast—by a decision.

There was certainly a clear manifestation of God's power. Of this there could be no doubt. Baal could send down no fire because Baal was not God. He hadn't the power. But Jehovah sent down fire. And it was quick, powerful, and terrible in its work. It consumed flesh, wood, stone and water. Its power was unspeakable, wonderful, miraculous.

And yet the power of this heavenly flame was no more mighty than it is today in hearts and lives that are given to God in free and willing choice. You have known men with a heart of coldness, indifference, of stone, yield themselves to God, accept Jesus as their Saviour and became tender, submissive, pliable in the hands of the Master. You have seen giants become as babes, and you have seen weak and useless lives become brave and noble and good, by virtue of their choice for Christ and church.

The most useless citizen is he who cannot make up his mind, the man who refuses to choose. He wants to be both ways and is neither. He wants the friendship of the bad and the favors of the good. Secretly he would bow down to Baal: openly he avows his love for Jehovah. He is neither hot or cold. He is nauseating. He is such as God says "I will spew thee out of my mouth." Pity the poor, hesitating, faltering, fawning weakling who will not, cannot decide.

If we feel that we are weak of purpose, wavering of mind, heart, disposition, desire, nothing will help and strengthen us more than a definite, fixed and steady choice—to serve our God more and love Him better. There is power, there is might, there is life in such a choice.

WHEREIN THE CHURCH SUFFERS.

I wish that great company of church members who live near one Christian church and hold their membership in another distant miles away could realize the spiritual poverty they themselves suffer from, and the great loss our good cause suffers by their indifference and inactivity on this account. The local church is the unit, and the source of authority and of power in our communion. When the local church is weakened power goes out from us and is wasted. It would be appalling today to know the amount of leakage and waste of resources and of power our Christian churches suffer from year to year on account of a stolid and persistent refusal of those who move from the community of one Christian church to that of another, and do not transfer their church membership with them.

It is surprising indeed. Men and women that you had thought were loyal to their church, loved its position, tenets and principles, and attended faithfully at their home church and were pillars therein, when they move to other communities where there are Christian churches take no part nor stock therein, and remain as drones and dead branches.

If some wise one will come and tell us how to get people to move their church membership with their household effects, when there is a church of their name and faith in the community to which they move, that one will have solved one of the biggest problems of our churches, and will have advanced the Kingdom of our God very far in his day and generation. The pity of it, the pity of it indeed. It is almost, and very often is, a tragedy, so far as the spiritual life of the moving member is concerned and instead of helping his church and increasing its influence and power, he remains only a dead weight upon it, sometimes a millstone about the neck of it. If only the brethren would consider, would consider. The church needs them and they need the church. God help them.

A POSITIVE FAITH.

Strange indeed it is that men will talk about aesthetics and evolution and ethics saving the souls of men. Empty churches, preacherless pulpits, and a spiritless and profitless service in the sanctuary stand as monuments to negative the idea of the salvation of a soulless religion. The soul of man cries out for deeper and better things. What the world stands in need of today is a deeper, truer, a more real and heavenly spirituality. The most terrible arraignment we have seen any where of an aesthetic and ethical religion and a faithless form of worship is from a secular paper, The Chicago Inter-Ocean in speaking of the wonderful religious awakening in Chicago recently. Read and think a moment.

"As we have said before, there was nothing new or strange or wonderful, in any material sense, to draw these thousands of people together. There were just men telling over again the story that has been told daily and hourly for nearly nineteen hundred years—the story of Jesus Christ. It was told in the most timeworn of ways. And its effectiveness when told in this way seems to us really to prove something, to prove something beyond peradventure.

"This newspaper is often arraigned and even denounced, and most frequently by professed ministers of the gospel, for insisting that the preaching that leads men to become conscious of their sins and to desire to leave their sins is that which rests on a positive faith and a defined creed. Well, we call the attention of our clerical critics to the preaching that eight hundred thousand people came to hear during the last six weeks in Chicago. It was, beyond question and without exception, the preaching of a positive faith from the foundations of a defined creed. It was not the sort of so-called preaching which says: 'Believe as you will; only be good men, and you will be saved.'

"And when these critics, the advocates of preaching without positive faith and of religion without a creed, can go out into this great city and induce eight hundred thousand people to come and hear them, and scores of thousands of these to make public profession to a resolution to lead better lives, we shall begin to think that there may be something in their arguments. But not until then."

—Senator Simmons opposes the proposed treaty of reciprocity with Canada.

FINDING OUT GOD.

We cannot bring ourselves to the belief that the world grows worse. Our very idea of God would have to change first. Did the all wise One make a world that would grow worse and worse and worse?

There could be little glory, and less goodness, it seems to us, and we do not mean to be irreverent, in creating a world of such a kind. Sin is insidious and works its wiles in a most destructive manner; but righteousness is energetic and persistent and eternal and immortal. The world grows better. God will not be foiled in His great purpose of creation, nor the Christ in His work of salvation. To Him every knee will yet bow, and every tongue confess His name. For He has been lifted up and He will draw all men unto Himself.

Men are finding out God more and more, better and better. And surely to know Him is to love Him, for He is love. In the mind of the child, and in the childhood of the race, God dwelt in the awful, the terrible, the dreadful. God was seen in the thunder-storm, in the howling tempest, in the destructive plague. Now God not only dwells in the storm and tempest, but in the sunshine and in the shadow as well. The Psalmist said it long ago, but the modern world is just getting hold of it that, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech, night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard."

In invention, discovery, and conquest of mind and matter we are coming to know more of God, of God's thoughts, purposes, designs. We are finding God everywhere, coming face to face with Him in the laboratory, in the class room, in the field of thought, activity and every day life. We read in the perfect law around about us a perfect one who created all and is in all. Such knowledge, such thought, such fact, must inevitably beget in the mind and heart of the race not only a true conception of God, but a deeper reverence for God. A spirit of truer, holier, more devout worship must follow. In this is nothing carnal. The spiritual predominates. We shall grow in spiritual mindedness. The race is growing, as well as the individual, not less, but more truly spiritual in their knowledge, inclinations, purposes and plans. A deeper spirituality pervades the people of God than in former time. Not a deeper emotionalism, but a deeper spiritual devotion to God, reverence for God, attitude toward God and worship of God. All true worship must be spiritual for God is a spirit and those who worship Him must worship Him in spirit. It is nothing against spirituality that there is less of enthusiasm, but it is intelligent and sane.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Another Exposition.—Congress has voted that a Panama Exposition shall be held in San Francisco in the summer of 1915 incidental to the opening of the Panama Canal. New Orleans made a bold and persistent fight to have the exposition in that town, or harbor, but the Pacific Coast city won out. This exposition may or may not be great within itself, but it will celebrate a great and an epoch making event, the opening of the Panama Canal to commercial use of the world. This will mean that our Government shall have carried out a scheme the largeness and the audacity of which staggered and prevented other nations, and that as a Government there is no reasonable and laudable project too gigantic for our successful undertaking. The economy of the Panama Canal is marked indeed, and it will practically revolutionize the shipping interests of the world. It should and doubtless will save millions a year in time and in labor. Again it may be said that we are living in a wonderful age, a time in which the most stupendous tasks ever known are undertaken by men. If the church would keep pace with the world it must undertake great things for God.

Cuba.—Any one at all familiar with the situation will tell you that Cuba is not, up-to-date, giving very strong promise of maintaining an independent government. Cuba is unstable and its power of self-government is by no means proven. This is a well-known fact, and well understood by our government at Washington. "Within the last three weeks the reports from Cuba have been so discouraged that our War Department has felt it necessary to keep 5,000 men with a thirty-six hours' embarkation point." So goes an item from our national capital.

In 1906 the United States had to intervene to bring matters to peace and quiet in Cuba. Then President Roosevelt and Secretary of War William H. Taft, said: "If our country is again called in to settle disputes between the factories of the Cuban Government and maintain peace throughout the island the Stars and Stripes will remain there." It certainly seems from the present indications of instability and unrest in the island that the Stars and Stripes will have to go back there at any rate. Whether to stay is a matter of mere conjecture.

When the Christian religion is well-established in the island, and the people are better trained in the arts of peace and progress, then may there be strength and stability there—but not before.

Corruption in High Places.—The fathers who framed our constitution evidently did not discern, afar off, the desire for prestige and position that would arise, nor the frailty and desire for ill-got gain of legislators. It was thought to place the United States senatorship on the high grounds of the honored and trusted few and remove it from the taint and corruption of the many. So legislators, the chosen representatives and law makers of the people, and not the people themselves, were intrusted with the solemn and sacred rights and prerogatives of electing Senators. But, presto, the day has come, and is in the nooning, when legislators themselves are bought and sold at a price. All readers of the daily press are now familiar with the unspeakable Lorimer case now pending before the Senate. A committee of investigation finds and reports back to the Senate that in Lorimer's election corruption was practiced and bribes were given and taken. "But," reports the majority of the committee, "we do not find that enough men took bribes to turn the scale in Lorimer's favor. Lorimer's majority was more than seven, and yet we have only found seven men of the Illinois legislature who say they were sold and bought; so we recommend that Lorimer be seated, words to that effect. And Lorimer still sits and votes as a member of the most august and powerful legislative body on earth. Senator Elihu Root took the floor last week and declared that if the Senate retained Lorimer it could not endure, and if the United States retained a Senate that would retain Lorimer, it could not endure.

Meanwhile a special senatorial investigating committee of the Wisconsin Legislature has reported corruption and attempted bribery by Isaac Stephenson in his efforts to secure a seat in the United States Senate and the governor of Wisconsin has declared the election null and void. Stephenson admitted that he spent $107,000 in his campaign for the position. That of itself is a huge sum for six years of office and argues corruption. These are only two instances of a practise that has become appalling, and that is driving the masses to a decision, now seemingly sure and inevitable, to take the election from the legislatures and make it one of the people. David's prayer may well be repeated by men of our time "Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with men of blood; in whose hands is wickedness, and their right hand is full of bribes." Psa. 26:9-10.

fect view of the shining way can be had as the Spirit leads and the soul fills with rapture and praise. O, what a power there is in silence! When the day is gone and the silent shades of evening are rolled down, and the mind turns in and examines itself in these quiet hours how delightful and pleasant is this condition!

The great powers of nature work silently, and they are active in serving the purpose in moving and controlling the worlds that revolve in their circuits, which always come and go on time, without collision. Mighty power, unseen power, silent power, upholding and displaying such dazzling splendor and such incomparable glory as the heavens declare, while they pass each other in unbounded space. While thinking of this noiseless power in such constellated grandeur it thrills with silent awe, as the wind surveys such celestial greatness. These lofty views ought to inspire in silent devotion and draw us very close to God, when the power works silently and moves the heart into a better life. What is needed, what is wanted, what must be is more spiritual power, greater strength to endure. If there is physical strength toil seems easy. In order to be strong attention must be given to diet and a faithful, continued observation of natural laws, refraining from that which is injurious, and following that mode of living most conducive to health. Strength comes by rest, quietness, prudence, temperance, and from other ways of right living. Find the cause of weakness, then remove it if possible, and strength will take its place and perform good service if not crowded out by too much indulgence. So must sin be turned out of the soul, and let the Spirit come in and fill it with strength, and it can come, and only so, by waiting upon the Lord.

To renew their strength is surely a great and wonderful privilege and duty. Waiting gives time for consideration and preparation, and qualifies one to receive renewed strength. Take some simple illustrations. It is necessary to eat and properly digest food so as to get and retain physical strength and when this need receives proper attention the desired results will soon follow. The silent, unseen work is going on, performing good service all the time by showing great results. You have noticed the vegetable kingdom how it is renewed by the silent power called sap. It bursts the buds into living green and opens the flowers with such a beautiful variety of colors. This spring while looking out upon a large field of budding and blooming apple trees, thickly set, and adorned with white and pink blossoms tinged with surpassing beauty, the soul was caused to rejoice with inexpressible gladness. Words fail to express the enraptured scene and feelings. That noiseless, unseen, silent power lifting itself slowly, low and high, is worthy of our greatest admiration. Talk with delight about the hundreds and thousands of horse power, engines, but they are weak compared with this silent power. Go east, west, north, south, any where and every where on God's beautiful earth and you may see the fields and woodland renewing their strength, putting on new life, and it is being done at some time and in the same way. Well may philosophers love to write and talk about the great and wonderful works of God. No wonder we love to walk through nature's wonderful conservatory and take lessons from Him who clothes the grass of the field. For when such inviting fields are seen and explored it brings them nearer to God who made and owns them. They who wait upon the Lord do not see nor hear His power as it moves them into a better, a renewed, a stronger condition, but they feel it and love Him because He first loved them. Another very important way to wait upon the Lord is by singing praises; for this part of service is a most delightful exercise, and should always be conducted with consecrated devotion. Without the service of song the meetings would be a drag for lack of spiritual inspiration. To be able to sing well with telling effect is an acquirement, or gift, and he who is thus possessed must be greatly blessed of the Lord. Having been told in the Bible to sing with the spirit and with the understanding also, not an opportunity should be lost in doing so, for it will be a flow of joy to singers as well as the hearers. What is needed, then, is the spirit and understanding. These elements bound together with love will overtake the wanderer, touch his soul, reform his life, and bring him back to his Father.

While looking over the list of many of the most noted and gifted singers of the world it will be seen that the stage has claimed some of them. They have delighted and thrilled thousands of anxious ones. Some however have left the stage and given the remainder of their lives in singing for Christ. They have been converted and they entered upon a better life, and have been instrumental in the conversion of others by the sweet, tender persuasive songs that rolled from cultivated and consecrated voices. Some years ago in a fashionable and populous city a lady of extra attainments sang in a theatre. She was wonderfully gifted and received large pay, but for some time she had been concerned about leading a different and a better life. One night as she was going down the street to fill her engagement she passed a church and heard such good singing that it deeply impressed her. Listening for a while she hastened on to the theatre, and when she came out that same night to sing every eye was turned toward her, and every ear was listening with intense delight to catch the sweet music as it flowed over the large audience. When that soft, sweet voice began to sing, the song she heard ringing out of the church as she passed it, her heart and voice quivered with very tender emotion as she sounded out these words:

"Depth of mercy can there be Merely still reserved for me?

Can my God his wrath forbear?

Me the chief of sinners spare?

Then when she finished this hymn which was sung with powerful effect, many were weeping for joy. What a beautiful, converting sermon she preached in that song, in that theatre on that night!

Nothing is more devotional and helpful than good singing. It imparts a special zeal and attraction for the beginning and end of every religious service. And it is a blessed thought that so many beautiful and splendid characters have been used in the service of song. P. P. Bliss, taken suddenly away in the Ashtabula disaster, gave himself to singing the gospel, has long since gone to sing with the angels in a blissful eternity. And Ira D. Sankey is another beautiful example. Many still remember with pleasure, when his soft, manly voice swelled in lovely tones over large, delighted audiences. And how he caused the silent tears to flow from so many eyes. Thousands will remember with great pleasure the wonderful and elevating song service at the World's Sunday-school Convention held in Washington, D. C., May, 1910. To many it was the most important and happy occasion they ever realized, and they will never see as many people and hear as many voices again, at one time, until they enter heaven and join in the everlasting song.

It is pleasant to remember how a dear mother used to sing with a strong, gifted and mellow voice, until it was worn by the use and strain of time. Then, when the breath was too short to sing any more, how it cheered her heart as the children and others would sing to her some favorite songs. The tears freely flowed while thinking of the long, long ago, and a vision of heaven filled her soul with transport as she dwelt on the words: "O, think of the home over there."

Another good and important way to wait upon the Lord is by prayer. Many tired, fatigued, and discouraged ones have received rest and encouragement by waiting upon Him in prayer. Some time they are not blessed as expected and desired, there may be a reason for it. The Lord may be withholding the answer to the prayers until they are ready by waiting to receive them. Or the cause may be that they do not, at any time, pray with the spirit and with the understanding. There must be faith, spirit and understanding if expected to be heard at the Father's throne and receive the needed blessings. Prayers shall be definite and appropriate. What do you want—what do you most need? Pray—pray and wait. Persist, do not become discouraged so soon. For a good example look at the Canaanitish woman who cried: "Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." She had faith, she meant prayful business with the Lord. At first He did not answer her favorably, but she came and worshipped Him, saying, Lord help me." She wanted her daughter healed, and she pleaded with the Lord until He granted her request, and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith; be it done unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was healed from that hour." Learn what it is to pray, then do more of it. It is the way by which you make known your needs. It is all right to ask the prayers of others, but pray for yourselves.

Another essential way to wait upon the Lord is by patience. Let patience have her perfect work, and better results will be seen. People wait at their tables, patiently about three times a day, until the food is prepared and placed before them. It is necessary for them to do this so that they may eat, and renew their physical strength. Could not live long without eating. It must be done to live. And we must wait upon the Lord to get divine strength that we may grow in grace and the divine life. If many waited on their tables, attended their meals as seldom as they wait upon the Lord they would have perished long ago. Get more patience and faith in your experience and they will doubly help you.

The author of the text employs this attractive and suitable figure in alluding to the eagle when he says: "They shall mount up with wings as eagles." The eagle is the king of birds, and it is also an emblem of the United States. With plumed wings it is impressed on the American coin, and we look upon it with admiration and pride. In its natural state, seeing so far away and flying so high, wonderfully surpassing the flight and height of all other birds, it attracts wide and interested attention from many beholders. And it often soars with seeming forethought far above the clouds when a storm is rapidly approaching with threatening danger. While the storm is raging below, and the lightning with lurid flash darts in vivid curved lines, writing its name across the cloud until it rolls in tones of thunder near the earth, the eagle is still above it, where the sun is shining, looking down upon the black rain cloud below. Up there it was quiet and light, below was darkness and danger. After the storm passed over the eagle came down and all was well. The king of birds was looked upon soaring high, upward and upward until lost to vision in the deep blue space, then again descending lower and lower, is seen folding his tired wings to rest for a while on a high mountain peak. So the soul in its flight after God is happy to rest on His eternal promises, and to abide in His presence.

THE ABIDING WORDS.

The words which have proceeded from God to the people of this world are permanently abiding. Skeptics should keep this truth in mind. They are trying to destroy God's words. They are making the greatest of efforts to cause others to disbelieve those words. They themselves refuse to believe them. They say that the words of the Bible are those of men. They declare that no one will suffer harm if he rejects God's word, if there be any such words. These men are like king Jehoiakim of olden time. During his reign the Israelites had become very corrupt. They stoutly rebelled against God. They must be visited with judgment. Jeremiah was told by God to write words which he should speak to him. The obedient prophet did so. Then the command was that those words should be read to Jehoiakim and also to the people. It was done. When only a part of the written roll was read, the king cut the roll with a pen knife, and then threw the whole of it into the fire, which was in a brasier before him. He not only refused to hear all of the words, but he destroyed them; yet he did not permanently destroy them. Another roll was written, containing the same words, to which others were added. God then sent words to the king that judgment would be executed against him for his treatment of God's words, and also for other sins. In due time the penalty came. The king found that, though he might destroy the written words of the Lord, he could not destroy the reality of them. One might as well try to destroy God himself as to seek to destroy his words. They abide forever. Skeptics are now seeking to make void the words of God by giving them meanings which are untrue. They are putting false constructions upon many of the words of Christ. They are aiming to make his words of no effect. But a day of reckoning is coming, and every enemy of the truth will appear before "the judgment seat of Christ." Nothing is more dangerous than that of striving to kill God's words.

THE INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, SOUTH.

By W. E. McClenny, Ph. B.

In Seven Chapters—Chapter VI.

Sunday Schools.

As early as 1852 the Eastern Virginia Conference had a committee on Sunday schools, and by 1855 the subject of Sunday schools had been agitated a great deal in the South. It seems that a good many churches had organized Sunday Schools prior to 1868, and in that year the Eastern Virginia Conference at Bethlehem, Nansemond County, Virginia, organized the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday school Convention, the first regular session of which was held at Cypress Chapel in the same county the following year, and in the same year the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in session at Salem Chapel, Forsyth County, North Carolina, organized a Sunday School Convention in the bounds of that Conference. At the beginning Sunday School helps were few, and the Bible was the main text book, and upon a whole we would say that the schools were very crude, yet for their day they did good work. They were only held at the most favorable season of the year, some closing in the winter, and others closing in the summer. As in the North one of the chief things done in these early schools was to have the children commit portions of the Bible to memory, and in this way many of the children became very familiar with the Bible, a thing which is lacking at the present day.

Soon Sunday Schools were organized in many destitute places, and some of these meeting places have developed into strong and progressive churches. The Sunday school has in very truth been the nursery of the church and the denomination.

The interest in the work of the Sunday schools has grown from this until today every conference in the General Convention of the Christian Church, South, has a live Sunday School Convention, and the work is growing in interest from year to year. Some are now holding Young People's Conventions in which the Christian Endeavor societies, and the teacher training workers are very much interested.

The General Convention of the Christian Church, South, now has a special training course for Sunday School teachers, and with the great number of our young people who have been educated in our denominational college, and schools, the future seems to hold bright prospects for a better equipped corps of teachers and officers than it has ever had before.

SOME IMPRESSIONS CONCERNING ELON COLLEGE.

The Christian Church South surely has a right to be proud of its Elon College, N. C. It was my privilege to spend ten days at this institution recently in assisting the pastor, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., in a series of evangelistic meetings and I want to testify to my very high appreciation of the work being done there. The student body consists of a noble band of young men and women. I did not witness a single act of rowdyism. Every one seemed possessed by an earnest desire to prepare himself for the largest possible usefulness in life.

The faculty consists of large-hearted Christian men with that larger view of education which sends forth students qualified in every sense of the word for life's work. A visit to the class rooms proves each teacher an adept.

Being a minister, of course I would be inclined to be much interested in the spiritual atmosphere of the institution. No less stress is laid upon this part of life than others. Parents who send their girls and boys to this school can do so with the assurance that a more tense religious atmosphere surrounds them than we find in one out of a hundred churches at home. During our recent meetings, faculty and society meetings were suspended, the lessons shortened, and the President together with the faculty not only regularly attended the meetings but publicly advised every student to become a Christian. Under such favorable conditions it is not difficult to have a revival. At the close of these meetings every student in the school, with few exceptions, were professed followers of Christ. It was one of the most gracious and far-reaching revivals I have ever had the privilege of attending.

No man with money to invest in the Lord's work can do better than to help this institution. Parents can do no better than to send their children to Elon College.

McD. Howsare.

—There is a two weeks campaign on in Philadelphia to raise $1,000,000 for a Y. M. C. A. building, and it will succeed. One man started the subscription with $100,000. A business firm gave $5,000. Business men recognize the worth of such an enterprise. And this is a healthful and wholesome sign of the times.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

It was my privilege to attend the fifth Sunday meeting at Enigma, Ga. Rev. J. H. Milam and I left here last Friday morning and were joined by Rev. H. W. Elder and Bro. Troy Bishop at Richland. Others would have doubtless gone but for the distance, Enigma being more than a hundred miles from any other church in the Conference. We reached our destination about four o'clock in the afternoon. The meeting began Friday night with preaching by Rev. J. H. Milam. During Saturday and Sunday addresses on various subjects were made by Bro. Elder, Bro. Milam and this writer. Congregations were rather small Saturday, but the house was well filled Sunday with interested audiences. Doubtless much good was accomplished by the meeting. We were very cordially received and hospitably entertained in a number of homes in the community. We shall ever remember with pleasure our first visit to Enigma.

In my absence, the pulpit at Rose Hill was filled by visiting brethren from other churches in the city. Brother Charlie Beck, a member of the Rose Hill Baptist church, conducted the morning service and Bro. Spears, of the Rose Hill M. E. Church, was in charge at the evening hour. Our people enjoyed a good day.

We expect Rev. R. C. Granberry, pastor of the Second Baptist Church of this city, to conduct our prayer meeting tonight. The attendance at our mid-week services shows considerable increase since Christmas. In fact, our congregations at all services have greatly increased, or to be more specific, about 75 per cent in three months. For that reason we feel encouraged. Still our problems are many and very perplexing sometimes, but we hope to solve them one by one.

Rev. Dr. Young, of Louisville, Ky., Assistant General Supt. of the American Anti-Saloon League, was in the city last Sunday and addressed two large audiences on the Temperance question. Dr. Young profoundly impressed those who had the privilege of hearing him. He is making a tour of the state in the interest of Prohibition in Ga.

Mrs. W. J. Mann, of Roanoke, Ala., Mrs. Lankford's sister, is spending a few days in our home while undergoing treatment for her eyes. She will return home about the last of this week.

Mr. W. W. Elder is expected home tomorrow to spend Sunday with his parents.

Rev. B. F. Young failed to reach his last appointment at North Highlands on account of sickness. G. O. Lankford.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Rev. McD. Howsare, Editor,
Norfolk, Va.

THE USE OF MISSIONARY LITERATURE.

It is truthfully stated that an informed church in regard to missions will be a transformed one. Information is effectively and quickly communicated through the medium of missionary literature. The printed page preserves and bears its message from mind to mind. We live under the reign of printer's ink. Papers, magazines and books by the tens of thousands are scattered over the country. In this vast array of printed matter missions have not been overlooked. He who will may become thoroughly conversant with the conditions existing in our mission fields. Investigation reveals the fact that the church has not utilized missionary literature as she might. A state of lethargy and indifference exists which can only be attributed to a lack of knowledge concerning the world's great need. The church of Jesus Christ has not caught a vision of the world lying in ignorance, groping in darkness and dying without hope, as the All-loving Father saw it when prompted to give Jesus for its redemption.

The use of literature as a great educator and disseminator of knowledge is fully appreciated by the social, political and business world. A single book has wrought great changes in public sentiment. The politician freely uses literature and the result is apparent. In the commercial world the newspaper directory shows that twenty-nine publications are devoted to the iron and hardware trade, eighty to poultry raising, sixteen to lumber interests and six to the tonsorial art. We venture the assertion that the best informed are the most successful. If this printed matter brings such results in social, political and business life should be the attitude of the church toward it, in her prosecution of the mightiest enterprise of the ages—the redemption of lost humanity? Shall the children of this world be wiser in their generation than the children of light?

In the past in proportion to our knowledge has been our zeal and activity in the cause of missions. The problem confronting us is, How can we secure a wider reading of missionary literature? We venture a few suggestions.

1st. Let there be found in every home, missionary magazines, books of travel, biographies of missionaries, and leaflets. Illustrated leaflets and missionary games should be there for the children,

2nd. The regular missionary society, by the very nature of its requirements, necessitates a careful reading of missionary literature in the preparation of the papers read at its meetings.

3rd. A missionary library is an indispensable requisite in every church and Sunday school. The missionary committee of the Christian Endeavor Society may assist in the circulation of this library.

4th. The missionary leaflet is a modern product. Pointed and compact it will be read by many who would not take time to read a lengthy article. A desire is created for more knowledge and thus many a one has been lead to a wider reading of missionary literature through the agency of a small tract.

5th. A small outline map showing the location of our missionaries, and pictures of our missionaries in leaflet form, placed in the hands of our people, would be appreciated and lead to investigation concerning them. ?

6th. The modern or monthly or annual missionary report is becoming of great value in arousing interest. The conference or church which publishes its minutes and scatters them among its members arouses new enthusiasm. The report of the late Missionary Conferences in printed form and scattered among our people, will be a source of information and blessing second only to being present. Many a layman and minister will be a more enthusiastic missionary worker because of having read these reports.

7th. Large outline maps showing the relative strength and countries occupied by the great religions of the world, and frequent reference to these by the pastor, S. S. teacher and Endeavor leader will create thirst for more knowledge.

8th. In some cases Woman's clubs are combining a study of missions with their other studies. Many a so-called Club might thus be redeemed and become a real factor in the elevation of humanity.

9th. Every pastor, if he but does his duty, may become a great influence in creating interest in missionary literature. By sermon and by personal direction he may mold the minds of his people into hearty favor.

10. To create interest and a greater use of our own literature, let us renew our allegiance to our own publications. The Christian Missionary is our very own. It stands beside any other publication of its kind with no cause to blush. It is brimful of just such information as our people need. No home should be without it. Missionary literature of a varied nature may be had at our mission office. The Christian Missionary and the Missionary Review should be found in all our homes, the one for denominational use and information, the other for a knowledge of world wide missions.

We believe if these ten suggestions are carried out they will help to solve this question. We hope to see the day when our church will more fully realize her duty in regard to the cause of missions and thus more fully play her part in the evangelization of the world.

Send to Rev. M. T. Morrill, Dayton, O., and get a large supply of Missionary Literature for distribution. It will be furnished you free upon application. Ask him also to send you pictures of missionaries and their church buildings. Frame them and hang them up in your church. Every pastor will get enough information for several sermons from the above leaflets.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The series of protracted evangelistic services conducted in the college by Rev. McD. Howsare, of Norfolk, Virginia, closed on Tuesday evening of this week. The meeting from the first was characterized by deep interest and enthusiasm and spiritual power. The meeting continued about ten days and during that time about 50 made profession of the faith in Christ and many were reclaimed. Mr. Howsare is a preacher of power, a speaker of eloquence and a gentleman of engaging manner. He will always be welcomed cheerfully by Elon audiences.

The Spring term will be especially rich this year in lectures from distinguished men. On the 7-8-9 Dr. Martyn Summerbell, of Lakemont, N. Y., will deliver a course of lectures. On the 13-14 of this month, Dr. E. U. Hounshel, Dayton, Va., will deliver two lectures on his travels, and in March, the third or fourth week, the exact date having not yet been determined, the Rev. Franks S. Child, Fairfield, Conn., who is himself a distinguished author and minister of large reputation, will lecture one week. Later on in the spring, Dr. J. J. Summerrbell, Dayton, Ohio, will deliver a course of lectures. It is with pleasure that the college can announce such a roster of distinguished men.

On Friday evening of this week the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Kernodle was opened for the reception of guests. Mesdames J. O. Atkinson and W. A. Harper assisted the hostess in receiving the guests. During the evening delightful refreshments were served and games were participated in. Those who attended are unanimous in praises of Mr. and Mrs. Kernodle as host and hostess.

W. A. Harper, Correspondent.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Twenty-two united with the church at Elon College on the closing evening of the meetings Bro. Howsare had conducted for ten days. Many others will unite with the church here or elsewhere as a result of the services. No one ever more completely won the ear and heart of the student body and more thoroughly endeared himself to the people here in so short a time. His messages were plain, pointed, vital, sincere and very spiritual, such as a college community stands in need of, and appreciates.

—Letters like this are appreciated, and not a few of the kind come from those we seek to supply with Bibles and other religious books. "Dear Bro: The Bible you sent has been received, and I am highly pleased with same. It is a beautiful Bible. Enclosed find check to cover payment. Many thanks for your kindness." Many thanks to you, and to the increasing number who desire of us Bibles for the home, pulpit, Sunday-school room and family use. We try to supply the very best print and binding for the very best prices.

—Pleasant Grove church, Halifax Co., Va., has come to be one of our most active and zealous and liberal country churches. Besides its regular preaching services it has an ever-green SunDay-school and an enthusiastic Christian Endeavor Society. The C. E. works along the line mapped out by Prof. Harner, and uses the program outlines he given in The Sun from week to week. Besides these helpful organizations the church has a wide awake Ladies' Aid Society which meets from time to time not at the church, but in the home of some member thus adding a social feature that is helpful. The Sunday-school not satisfied to give one Sunday a month to the Orphanage has decided to undertake the support of an orphan this year and the birthday bank feature has been installed to aid in this. It is an intelligent, loyal, active, consecrated membership, and the Lord's blessings are abundant and manifest among them.

—Peary got within a mile and three-fifths of the pole, it is conceded.

HOW TO TEACH.

Last week we wrote on "Getting ready to teach." This week we briefly treat the how of teaching.

And first of all we have to observe that the preacher undertakes to tell his congregation what he knows about the text he has chosen. This is instruction—nothing only of teaching. Teaching consists of instructing, testing, and drilling—preaching is only one of these and is therefore not teaching. The Sunday school teacher is not a preacher nor are his pupils a congregation.

We further observe that there are two methods of teaching—the topic method and the question method. Each of these methods has its weakness—each is strong where the other is weak. This suggests that they should both be used. And that is exactly what the skillful teacher does. The most successful teachers I have known made the question method the basis of their teaching and supplemented it with the topic method. The question method is excellent in bringing out details, but weak in giving a complete grasp of the entire subject under discussion. The topic method is strong in giving completeness of grasp, but poor in attention to details—that is why both are necessary. After the lesson has been taught by the question method, it may well be reviewed by the topic method or vice versa.

But the question method may be so used as to multiply its value. The teacher can ask questions that suggest their own answer—leading questions—which are valueless as tests. Or he may ask questions that can be answered by yes or no—direct questions—and these too are almost valueless as tests, because the tone of the voice and the manner of the teacher will almost invariably suggest whether the answer is yes or no. A good question should be clear, concise, well-worded.

Even the questions may not come up to their full value as a test, because of the order in which they are asked. Some teachers ask proper questions in every way, but ask them of everybody, of all at once—called the simultaneous question. Only one or two answer, while the others lose interest and are not tested. Still other teachers begin at a certain pupil and then ask every one consecutively a question—called the consecutive question—and then even wonder that their pupils are listless and inattentive. The ideal question method is known as the promiscuous question—which means asking the questions now in one part of the class, now in another—always designating the one to recite after the question has been asked—this to cause all to give strict attention and so to test all equally.

The drill work in teaching is the review work. No faithful teacher can afford to neglect reviewing constantly, every Sunday. Their review Sunday will take care of itself. There will also be occasion to give incidental instruction on points where the pupils do not have the means to acquire preparation beforehand, but this should be indulged only seldom and is to be clearly distinguished from lecturing.

C. E. AND MISSIONS.

The American Christian Convention made wise provision for a Christian Endeavor Department in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and exercised wise discretion in the choice of the man to head that work, Rev. E. A. Watkins, Greenville, Ohio. The Convention also wisely provided for a growing interest in Missions on the part of our young people by the erection of reading and study mission courses to be prepared by the Secretary of Christian Endeavor. These courses, one for reading and five for study, have just been given out by Mr. Watkins and we gladly give below part of our space to them. Mr. Watkins also gives a list of leaflets on missions, which he will send gratis to all applying.

"The world seems aflame with the mission spirit, and some portion of it is committed to our care and cultivation. What is the matter with us Christians? What a pitiable showing we made at the great N. C. Laymen's Missionary Convention in Greensboro in 1910! We stood at the bottom. Why? Not that we are poorer than other people—not that. Not that we are stingier than other people—not that. But because we do not know the need of missions and are therefore not aroused. We sincerely hope that many of our C. E. Societies will do as that in our First Church in Greensboro is doing—provided for Mission study in connection with the Christian Endeavor Society. Let the young people of the S. C. C. rally to mission study and provide themselves with the books of one of the courses printed below. Dr. Atkinson, of The Christian Sun, Elon College, will furnish the books.

A SOUL-WINNING SOCIETY.

Urge upon the members their pledge to do whatever Christ would have them do—or at least try to do it. And do they not know that Christ would have them join His church?

Work with the pastor in his soul-winning endeavors, asking him what young people he thinks are nearest to the Kingdom, and would like to have your help in reaching.

Have a class in methods of personal work for souls, and in the use of the Bible for that purpose.

Make each committee a soul-winning committee, and to that end make sure that every committee contains at least one earnest evangelistic member.

Form a personal worker's band, meeting every other week for reports of the personal work done by each member, and for consultation and prayer.

Don't Give Up.

Societies fluctuate greatly in numbers and strength, as churches and Sunday schools do; and if your society is low down now, that is no reason why it may not be brought up on the heights to-morrow.

Even small numbers can do good work; indeed, for some kinds of work a small society is better than a large one.

A Christian Endeavor society is worth while if it contains only two members, and they are in earnest.

C. E. TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 19—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Serenity, John 14: 1, 27; 16: 33.

The Scripture: There are only three verses in our Scripture lesson—have memorized and recited either by one or three Endeavorers. Let the comment be by the President of Society and let it be confined to 3 minutes.

The Leader: The besetting sin of American life is hurry and worry. We lead the strenuous life, boost thereof, and feel proud. We concern ourselves with our several vocations not only during our regular working hours, but all the time. We even cheat ourselves of sleep in the intense anxiety with which we revolve in our minds the intricate details of our life work. Success is our goal—success at any cost—success at what a cost to us in temper, in real enjoyment, in spiritual power! We need to take time to recreate, to rest, to be holy, to meditate, to spend our youth and middle life in a mad rush after material gain and wealth only to find ourselves unable in life's sunset time to enjoy the fruits of our endeavor and sacrifice! We need to be less concerned about success, less troubled about material matters, more consecrated in heart, more serene in our outlook on life and the future. Some such message as this the leader will give in a five minute talk.

Questions for Meditation and Answer:

- What is the chief source of worry?
- What is the relation of worry to infidelity?
- What is its relation to disbelief?
- How does worry disqualify us physically? Mentally? Spiritually?
- What is the "peace of God?"
- To whom does it pass all understanding?
- How comes this peace?
- How does peace differ from inactivity?
- Show how this peace helped Christ. (To several).

- Paul?
- David?
- Peter?

How does it help me? (To several).

Verses for Memory and Sentence Comment:

- Peace through Christ, Rom. 5: 1.
- He is our Peace, Eph. 2: 14.
- Wounded for our transgressions, Acts 10: 36.
- Lord of all, Acts 10: 36.
- Peace through the blood, Col. 1: 20.
- The Lord will bless with peace, Ps. 29: 11.
- In perfect peace, Isa. 26:3.
- Passeth all understanding, Ps. 34:13.
- Seek peace, Ps. 34:14

THE WORKING MAN'S MONEY.

In one of our large cities a laboring man, leaving a large saloon, saw a costly carriage and pair standing in front, occupied by two ladies elegantly attired, conversing with the proprietor.

"Whose establishment is that?" he said to the saloon-keeper as the carriage rolled away.

"It is mine," replied the dealer, proudly. "It cost thirty-five hundred dollars. My wife and daughter can not do without it."

The mechanic bowed his head a moment in deep thought; then, looking up, said with the energy of a man suddenly aroused by some startling flash, "I see it! I see it!"

"See what?" queried the saloon-keeper.

"See where, for years, my wages have gone. I helped pay for that carriage, for those horses and gold-mounted harness, and for the silks and laces for your family. The money that I have earned, that I should have given my wife and children a home of our own, and good clothing, I have spent at your bar. My wages, and the wages of others like me, have gone to support you and your family in luxury. Hereafter my wife and children shall have the benefit of my wages; and, by the help of God, I will never spend another dime for drink."

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE PASTOR'S BUSINESS.

By Charles A. Hines.

Article, II. The Pastor and The Church.

The time is coming when none of our churches will call a man to be its pastor who is unwilling to live in the community of which he is, by virtue of his position, the spiritual leader. I cannot say just how soon this will be—but the sooner the better. I do not know just how the plan will be worked out—whether it will be by a gradual development of the financial strength of all of our churches until each can employ a pastor for all of his time, or by combining two or more churches near each other into one charge and the elimination of the weaker ones in communities that have other churches. It will probably be a combination of the two ideas. The church that has a pastor living from 10 to 100 miles away, who comes for a day or so once or twice a month into the community, and who does not see his people the other 26 or 28 days in the month, cannot accomplish the work it should do or be the efficient religious organization it has the opportunity of being.

I am also look forward to the time when our churches will have services every Sunday, and this, too, will come soon.

I do not hope or expect that any church will accomplish either of these things at one bound. It must be a gradual evolution, and will be brought about only by the laymen setting up this ideal and striving toward it. My suggestion will not mean that it will be immediately done, but I sincerely trust it may cause laymen of some church to begin thinking. It can be done, if we will.

I am anxious to see one of our good country churches provide a parsonage and call a pastor for all of his time. Who will be first? A comfortable house and a few acres of land could be provided and paid for in a few years. If this were done, the minister's salary would be partly paid by his use of the building and land until these could be paid for by the church. The average salary of ministers in the denomination is apparently not far from $400. Could not a church of two hundred members raise this amount? Four cents a week—the price of two postage stamps—from each members will do it. I believe it could be made five cents a week and this would pay the pastor's salary and interest on what the land and parsonage would cost. A trial would result, I think, in finding that the more services you have in a church the more interest the members will feel in it and they will pay more readily. If this cannot be done, combine with a neighboring church. I believe that two churches could work together in harmony and select one pastor without falling out. In an article on systematic giving, I shall try to point out a method of raising money, that I believe will result in greatly increased collections.

I have referred to this matter for the reason that I do not believe that any church can do as good work with services once a month and a pastor living far away as it can if the pastor is among his members thirty days in the month and meets with them in a service and Sunday school each Sabbath.

The church is an institution, not a charity; a business, and not a makeshift. It is not a place for entertainment once a month, but it is an organization the mission of which is to educate, to develop, to mold and to influence the lives of men and women. How can it attain these ends if the head of the organization spends one or two days in a month with it and is away the rest of the time? Our church cannot grow rapidly, and does not deserve to, under such a system.

I believe our people give less per capita to the church than those of almost any other denomination. I know of many country churches of the Presbyterian faith that give from three to ten times as much a member as Christians do, and the members are not more wealthy than ours. Shall it continue?

Both the pastors and the laymen are responsible for these conditions—the laymen largely, because there are more of them. The correction must be made by the laymen. At the same time the pastor should give his influence in an endeavor to educate our people by giving them a larger vision of the Master's work, and what can be accomplished by using system and energy.

The pastor must cultivate an acquaintance with his people; he must understand them—appreciate them. On the other hand they should hold up his hands and do the work he asks them to do. By all means the laymen should shoulder the financial burden and not expect the pastor to bear this. The pastor should not be expected to help raise money; this is not his part of the work.

DO ORGANIZED DEPARTMENTS PAY?

In answer to the above question I want to give a few figures taken from the superintendent, that of the Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk.

The report shows that during the first quarter of 1910 the Department was being organized, thus the report only covers 9 months, or the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th quarters as follows:

Number of members enrolled	65
Withdrawn to join main school	1
Withdrawn for removals, etc.	5
Present number of members	59
Offering for the year	$21.62
Department expenses for year	$8.00
Excess of offering over expenses	$13.62
Number serving as visitors	5
Number of members studying every lesson during year, after organized	5
Whole number of lessons studied	309
Number of visits paid by the visitors to members	225

Honor roll members: Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Etheredge, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Brickhouse, Mrs. L. W. Stagg.

Bro. Superintendent, if for a moment now, after reading these figures, you hesitate to answer the question in favor of the Department, let me suggest a help for you:

First. Go to your closet and there consult God. See if you can, after this has been done, see whether it pays to reach out into the homes and have those who cannot attend the school realize that they are a part of the school through this plan of organization.

Second. Quietly consult your pastor on the questions, tell him that as superintendent of the school you want to see God's word taught in the homes, and that you want the homes brought in closer relation to the Sunday-school. I am sure all will agree that all plan pays whenever they are made with an eye single to God, to extend His Kingdom in this world. We seem to know how to plan for the work. But what we need is a determination to "Work."

LIFE OF REV. JAMES OKELLY.

Dear Bro. Atkinson:

I have read the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly and The Early History of the Christian Church by W. E. McClenny with a great deal of pleasure and profit. It shows a great deal of hard work done by O'Kelly and his colony to establish a cause they had espoused and was very dear to them. They were mistreated and ill-spoken of and charged with holding obnoxious views which were untrue, as they were evangelical all the time. Every member and friend of the Christian Church ought to read the book and have a copy for future use and the rising generation to read. I am proud of the book. I noticed in the book a mention of Spring Hill Church in Sussex Co. and the Holloway family was not mentioned. I have known that church for over three quarters of a century and the Holloway family included some of the charter members. Thomas Holloway, Sr., I knew from my earliest recollection, as he wore knee pants and how graceful he looked. I recall some of the children. Lazarus and Zachariah were preachers and Lazarus died in early life with consumption, leaving a wife and two children. Zachariah moved to Miss. There fell in with the Disciples and connected himself with them. Thomas, Jr., lived with his father at the old homestead. Joseph Thomas (The White Pilgrim) preached at Spring Hill and spent much time with the Holloway family. One Sunday morning he and some of the young people mounted their steeds and started to an appointment of The White Pilgrim's and in crossing over the head of a mill pond one of the young ladies' horses became frightened and became unmanageable and backed off into the pond where the water was very deep. The horse came up, leaving the young lady buried in the bottom of the pond. Joseph Thomas threw off his coat and went in search of the young lady and brought her to the surface. After hours of work life was restored and she fully recovered. She was married twice and I knew her well while living with her second husband, a Mr. Clay.

BABY OR BOTTLE—WHICH?

A commercial traveler who had been accustomed to drink quite freely with his comrades, astonished them by saying, when the bottle was passed in the smoking car one day, "No; I won't drink with you today, boys. The fact is, boys, I have sworn off." He was greeted with shouts of laughter by the jolly crowd around him. They put the bottle under his nose, and indulged in many jokes at his expense; but he refused to drink, and was rather serious about it.

"What's the matter with you, old boy?" sang out one. "If you've quit drinking, something's up; tell us what it is."

"Well, boys, I will, though I know you will laugh at me; but I'll tell you all the same. I have been a drinking man all my life, and have kept it up since I was married, as you all know. I love whiskey; it's as sweet in my mouth as sugar, and God only knows how I'll quit it. For seven years not a day has passed over my head that I didn't have at least one drink. But I am done. Yesterday I was in Chicago. Down on South Clark street a customer of mine keeps a pawn-shop in connection with his other business. I called on him, and while I was there a young man of not more than twenty-five, wearing threadbare clothes, and looking as hard as if he had not seen a sober day for a month, came in with a little package in his hand. Tremblingly he unwrapped it, and handed the article to the pawnbroker, saying: "Give me ten cents." And, boys, what do you suppose it was? A pair of baby's shoes; little things, with the buttons only a trifle soiled, as if they had been worn once or twice.

"Where did you get these?" asked the pawnbroker.

"Got 'em at home," replied the man, who had an intelligent face and the manner of a gentleman, despite his sad condition. "My wife bought 'em for our baby. Give me ten cents for 'em; I want a drink."

"You had better take those back to your wife, the baby will need them," said the pawnbroker.

"No, she won't; because she's dead. She's lying at home, now; died last night." As he said this, the poor fellow broke down, bowed his head on the show-case, and cried like a child.

"Boys," said the drummer, "you can laugh if you please, but I—I have a baby of my own at home, and by the help of God I'll never dring another drop."

Then he got up and went into another car. His companions glanced at each other through dim eyes and silence. It did not seem to be funny to anybody. No one laughed; but somehow the bottle disappeared, and soon each was sitting in a seat by himself, pretending to read a newspaper.—Ex.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Report not so large this time but very good since we are just starting out for 1911. Andrew Corling and Walter Mitchell are on double duty now, they have nice fresh cows to milk and a playful calf each to attend to; but William Brown says calves are not in the class of Harriet's 8 nice berkshire pigs, nor Eva's family of four. (William helps Uncle John attend to hogs and horses.) Boys generally are interested in their stock. His is always ahead of the other fellow's. We have about 2 acres of new ground ready for the plow, and 4 acres old field; and have about 6 acres of stubble land turned (with 2 horse plow.) We shall try for a larger crop this year, if we can get our horse-power properly arranged. We are planning for better classified work, and more thorough cultivation; looking to the end of putting up food products. While we are at work here at the Orphanage will you not kindly help us by taking "Monthly Sunday-school offerings" at your school—it will help your school and bless us. Try it?

The following donations have been received:

Mrs. O. B. Barnes, Elon College, N. C.,
 1 package of collars. Winsdor, Va.,
 Christian church, nice package of clothing, shoes, stockings, candy etc.

We are grateful for all gifts and earnestly request the hearty co-operation of all friends.

Truly yours,

Uncle Jim.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Mother carried me visiting Christmas and I caught whooping cough, but it is not hurting me very much, but am having to stay at home for fear I might take cold and get worse.

Am sending forty cents along with my love for the little orphans.

Your little nephew,

Dwight Lankford.

Well, little man, hope you will pull through O. K. Hope our little ones will not get the "whoop" any time soon.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will send my dime for Dec. and Jan. I hope you and all had a merry Christmas. I had a nice time and had so many presents from my brothers and friends.

I would love to visit the Orphanage and see you and all the little orphans. I so often have your picture to look at and say I know Uncle Jim is such a good man to care for all those orphans so nicely. Wishing you all a happy and successful new year.

DIED.

Harrison.

On Thursday night Jan. 17, 1911, about nine o'clock the death angel visited our home and took from us our dear sister Clyde Harrison. Age eighteen years, ten months and twenty-five days. She was laid to rest on Thursday afternoon in Amelia Cemetery. She leaves a devoted mother and father, three sisters and one brother and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May our loss be her eternal gain. By the grace of God we may all meet her in the sweet by and by.

A Sister.

Bennett.

Clyde Leroy Bennett, the only child of Bery M. and Mamie E. Bennett, aged one month and twenty-two days, was found, by the mother, dead in bed on the morning of the 25th of Jan., 1911.

Little Clyde was a bright and interesting little fellow, and was the joy of the father and mother. He was too sweet and pure for this world, and God called him home to heaven.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." May the parents' hearts be drawn closer to God, and live to meet the dear little one in heaven. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, from Bethlehem Christian church, and the body of the dear babe laid to rest in the cemetery at that place.

May God comfort the heart-broken parents.

Morrow.

At the home of Mr. William Walters, near Burlington, N. C., Jan. 21, '11, Miss Margaret Jane Morrow, aged 76 years and 6 months. She was sister to Mrs. William Walters, and had made her home with her sister for a number of years. Miss Morrow confessed Christ in early life but did not unite with the church.

She was one of earth's quiet personalities and moved very silently along the journey of life, and when the end came she simply fell asleep. The writer conducted the funeral services at the home, and the interment was made at New Providence, Graham, N. C. A number of relatives and friends were present and the beautiful flowers placed upon her grave told of love and hope.

Underwood.

Mrs. Lama Catherine Underwood, the beloved wife of our former pastor, Rev. G. R. Underwood, died at her home in Sanford, N. C., October 27, 1910. She was born January 26, 1867.—At an early age she embraced religion and through life she continued to be a sincere and devout Christian. She was indeed a helpmate to her husband in his pastoral labors, and in her death he is sorely bereaved, as are Daisy and Earl, their living children.

She was a charter member of Sanford Christian church and a teacher in the Sunday-school. For several years she was a great sufferer, but she bore it all with Christian fortitude and gentle resignation. Therefore be it resolved, 1st. That our Sunday-school has lost a faithful and earnest member and teacher and we deeply sympathize with her class. The husband has lost a faithful companion, the children a loving mother, her neighbors an obliging friend.

2nd. That we commend her Christian character and faithfulness to every duty and follow Christ as she followed Him.

3rd. That these resolutions be spread on our minutes and a copy be sent to the family and to the Christian Sun and the Sanford Express for publication.

Culbertson.

Whereas in the wise providence of our heavenly Father death has entered our ranks and claimed Brother Alvin M. Culbertson, an honored deacon of the Durham Christian Church, therefore, be it resolved:

1st, That in his death the church loses a faithful and conscientious member, and while we regret the loss yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2nd, That the church extend its heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and pray that the sustaining grace of our Father in heaven may comfort and console their sorrowing hearts.

3rd, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and also to The Christian Sun for publication.

Powell.

Mrs. Margaret Ann Powell died Jan. 5, 1911. She is survived by her husband, Bro. E. T. Powell, one of the charter members of Oak Grove Church, and also the treasurer of the church. Sister Powell was at one time a member of the Baptist Church. She was a great sufferer, and was confined to her bed about two years; but she patiently bore it all, and waited for the angel to come and take her home. She was a good woman, and we have reason to believe she is at rest.

She was the mother of a large family of children.

May the Lord bless all of the relatives and friends and may they all so live that they may be prepared to meet mother in that better land.

Christian Pub. Ass'n DAYTON, O.

26, 1907 and, died Jan. 20, 1911. The funeral was conducted at the Ramseur Christian Church by the writer and the remains buried in the church cemetery.

She was the joy of her father and mother; always sweet, exceedingly bright, and had already learned to love to go to church. It was the saddest day in the lives of her parents when the gate swung open and their darling passed out for the last time. She finished her task in life, binding hearts to her own; in death, bringing heaven nearer by entering there and causing all to look upward and Godward. May the loving Father comfort the grief-stricken parents and keep them looking upward till they shall join the company of their child.

CHILDISH MEN.

Jesus charged the men of his generation with childishness. Great changes have taken place since that charge was made. The race has laid aside some of its childish ways. It has not, however, entirely outgrown its childishness. Perhaps all of us must plead guilty to the charge. At least there have been times in our lives when we have behaved in a childish manner. We have been childish in our thought, in our speech, in our character. Paul says, "When I became a man I put away childish things." Would that all we might say so with equal truth.

Some men are childish in their littleness. A child is a little creature both in body and mind. It is small in understanding. It has no intellectual grasp or strength. It cannot solve hard problems, nor wrestle successfully with difficult business conditions. The desires and aspirations of children are as small as their mental powers. They do not desire great things. They would not know what use to make of them if they had them. They are content with tin horns, tin horses, tin soldiers, marbles, tops and kites. These are more to them than arms or banks.

There are many little men. They are full-grown in body, but what about their thought life? It moves in a very narrow circle. There are big things to be done, but they cannot do them. There are great things to be won, but they cannot win them. They do not even desire to possess them. They seek after farms and money and other things that perish with the using, but they have no desire to possess the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. They would not know what use they could make of these divine treasures. They think they would be a hindrance and an embarrassment to them rather than a help. They are like children.

Many are childish in heedlessness. Children are heedless. They hear many warnings, but pay little attention. They hear valuable instructions, but they do not learn. They require line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little before they will take heed. Some men are like that. Danger signals are displayed on the road to drunkenness, on the road to the penitentiary, on the road to disgrace, but many pay no attention. They pass on and are punished.

Some men are childish in their whims. Children are whimsical. It was to this feature of child life that Jesus referred when He said concerning the men of His generation: "They are like children playing in the market." The men of that generation heard John, and rejected him. They said he was too austere. His raiment was camel's hair and his meat locusts and wild honey. They said, He is no prophet. Then came Jesus, eating and drinking and dressing as other people, and they said He was no prophet because he was too much like a winebibber.

It is so still. Let your religion be sober and solemn and many will despise it. Let it be cheerful and happy and they will reject it. One preacher is too solemn for them. He talks too much about the grave and the judgment and eternity. They cannot hear him. He makes them nervous. Another preacher wakes the people up with witty speeches and they say he indulges in levity. Nothing smits them. The only religion they can endure is no religion at all. They do not like the Methodists because they are too noisy, because they are too quiet. The Congregationalists do not suit them because they are too scholarly. The Episcopalians cannot please them because they require too much millinery. The Baptists will not do because they require too much water. They are fruitful in objections. They do not know that their objections are all whims and their way is childish.

Some men are childish in their fighting propensity. Account for it as we will, it is true that children are prone to fight. Children in one house will pick a quarrel with the children living next door. Boys in one end of the town will fight the boys from the other end. Boys in the city quarrel with country boys. Sometimes children in the same family will fight each other. They are children. It is the way of the child. They say, "You cannot put old heads on young shoulders." True, but may we not expect mature heads on old shoulders? This is what we do not always see. When a man is fourscore years old and begins to manifest a little weakness in his reasoning powers people say he is childish. It may be so, but there seem to be many men not half so old who are childish also, working men and employers. Is there any good reason for it? What comes from it? Is there not a better way to settle differences? Men used to think the manly way to settle a quarrel or to get satisfaction in case one's honor had been touched was to fight a duel. Now we all know that it was not manly at all, but childish.

Think of the age-long quarrels between different religious denominations. Those who waged those unseemly wars thought they were acting the manly part. We now know that they were childish. Are wars between nations any better? If we could stand on some distant star and look down on the feuds and wars and causes of wars; if we could hear from that distant region the discussions in Congress, in Parliament and in Cabinets which result in war, and then behold all the horrible result, would we not be impressed with the childishness of it all?

Let us pray for larger minds, larger lives. Let us seek diligently to grow up into Christ our Living Head in all things until we shall come to the fullness of the stature of men in Christ Jesus. Then shall we go forth showing to the world a character like unto the manliest of all men, the only perfect man, the Man of Nazareth, the Man of Galilee, the man of Calvary.—N. Y. Advocate.

It Doth Not Appear.—The electric stethoscope is a wonder. It magnifies human heart beats sixty times so that the sound thereof can be heard over the telephone hundreds of miles away. The world of electricity reveals its wonders more and more, and it doth not yet appear what that world will show itself to be. In the Police Headquarters of New York is a dictograph, a machine which records the conversation occurring in the room and faithfully reproduces it elsewhere.

The speech of man, and the heart of man, the utterance and the purpose, are those which the gospel has tried to keep clean and to magnify through the centuries. With speech utterance is made of all that the heart of man imagines and meditates upon.

Henry Watterson fought on the Confederate side in the Civil War. But he can now say, and does say, in a paper on "Twenty Presidents of the United States," which appears in The Youth's Companion of February 16th, that "no man can read the documentary history of Abraham Lincoln's administration, especially his letters and state papers, and doubt that he was among the really few great men who have lived in the world."

—During the next three months, the billboards of the United States will display 20,000 educational posters on tuberculosis, according to an announcement made today by the National Association for the Study and prevention of Tuberculosis.

This will conclude the campaign begun a year ago, when the National Billposters Association donated free space to the tuberculosis cause, the Poster Printers Association offered free printing, and nine paper manufacturers gave the paper for the posters. The combined value of these several donations for this three-month campaign is nearly $100,000.

The posters are in six different designs and are all printed in three colors. They are seven feet wide and 9 feet high. Already nearly 2,500 of these posters have been hung on the billboards of 46 different cities, and it is planned to distribute 20,000 more before April 1st in over 400 towns and cities. Any anti-tuberculosis society in the United States may receive free of charge, except for transportation, as many of these posters as can be hung on the boards in its territory. The National Association with the Tuberculosis Committee of the National Bill posters and Distributors are conducting the campaign.

The posters show in graphic form how fresh air, good food, and rest cure tuberculosis; how bad air, overwork, and closed windows lead to consumption; and how the careless consumptive menaces the health of his family by spitting on the floor.

HUNGERING AND THIRSTING AFTER RIGHTEOUSNESS.

It is a peculiar and anxious sensation to be very hungry, and only those who experience it can tell of its great desire for food and nourishment. When you have been very thirsty and breathing fast for cool water, you understand what it was to want water, and as you quench your thirst at the sparkling fountain you know what it was to be satisfied. Many to-day, all over the world, are really hungering and thirsting for righteousness; for a deeper and better development in the divine life. Sick and tired feeding on the husks of conventionality and formality, they need and want the helpful, healthy and healing power of religious experience. They deserve to get more and still more from the ever flowing fountain of Jesus, and to take the bread of life as broken to them in His word. Historical information is all right and must have its place when needed, but what the people need, most of all, is spiritual food to make spiritual growth, to grow in grace and knowledge of God. They greatly need the joy of His salvation to give the proper tone and tone to their worship. Without this kind of devotion preacher and people will leave their places of worship without the joyous blessings they need. They not only need them but must have them in order to enjoy the Christian religion, and be prepared to enter into the kingdom of God. Too many worldly condiments are often put in the food intended to be spiritual, and it is found that they will not mix, it will not digest in the poor starving soul. It is a great pity and an eternal loss for so many perishing ones. This self prepared food is indigestible and gives no nourishment whatever. Let the hungry eat that which is good, then their souls will delight themselves with fatness.

I have known some to eat largely of unhealthy, imperfectly prepared food and they were lean, lank and languishing while trying to subsist on it. That which was eaten did not assimilate, was not changed into brawn, blood, bone, brain, flesh and fat. Take others, for illustration, who do not eat near so much, but they assimilate what is eaten, and it shows for itself in the appearance, for they look so, and are healthy with plenty of push, pull and power, because they use to the very best advantage all they eat. This comparison may be applied to professing Christians. Some are strong, worshipping God with power and zeal, others are weak starving for the Spirit which would quicken them into a pure and happy life. This difference is clearly seen, felt, and fully realized by them who look in the light of nature and revelation. This is an awful state to exist in, but it does and the cause ought to be removed. It is time for all destitute, decaying, dying members to get right with their fellow men, to get right with themselves, and to get right with God. They will die unless spiritual life is given to them. Two questions are very important to ask, shall they live? or shall they die?

Every minister who has any spiritual life feels at once the chill of a cold church when he enters the pulpit and begins to feel the pulse of the members. You have been inside of a church building sometime, perhaps, when the stones were not in heating order, and you felt cold and unpleasant. Some such feelings as these come over a man of God as he takes the hand looks into the face of a formal, cold, dying church member. A few pulse may be normal and throb with regularity but many beat very slowly, showing a great lack of spiritual vitality.

Is there really a hungering and thirsting for a righteous life? To many there is such a desire, a long felt need for more spiritual power, an anxious longing to draw nigh to God; a yearning for a consecrated life; and for the abiding presence of Jesus. All of them may have their spiritual needs supplied and their requests granted. Yes, they can, and if they seek earnestly they will find Him who is willing to supply them with abundant blessings. A deep felt need is in many hearts for more divine power; for a life full of joy and for the abiding presence of Jesus. They can have their requests granted and their needs supplied if they ask earnestly and seek right things.

You must not only be valiant but you must be violent; for the Word says, The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. The kingdom must be entered by force and taken.—Force your way over every opposing influence. What is it you must force out of your way so as to enter the kingdom? See, here are some of the things. They are the works of the flesh in all their sinful forms, lust, pride, hatred, variance, and every evil inclination. Take them by force, by violence and put them out of the kingdom, put them out of the way. The kingdom of heaven is here for heaven begins here and leads to the city of God. And hell also begins here and leads to the lake which burns. Do not sing and talk and pray so much about the future heaven, but seek for and find heaven here. If you are in the kingdom of Christ you surely are enjoying a foretaste of the complete glory which shall be revealed. Many prospering ones never feel the glow and flame of heavenly love in their souls, because they are not taking the kingdom of heaven by force and pressing their way onward and upward. When I get home, to my Father's house in the beautiful mansion prepared for me then I shall be happy forever. But if you are not saved and made happy in the kingdom of heaven on earth you will not be prepared, nor be qualified to live with God and the holy angels in the final home.

No use to hunger and thirst after righteousness all the time and way, and never be filled. Use the means of grace and salvation and be full now. Why not now, yes even now, for "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

To love the right and do it

Is to my heart so sweet;

It makes the path of duty

A shining golden street.

Give me thy strength, O Father,

To choose this path each day!

Then heaven within, about me,

Shall compass all my way.

GAINING STRENGTH.

(They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. Isa. 40:31. Golden text for Sunday, Feb. 19.)

In youth one can do much out of the abundance of strength of which one is naturally possessed. It is easy then to say yes, or no. One is strong, strong of body, active of mind, alert of aim and of purpose. That is the time of youth. That is in the exercise of one's native and inherent strength. And, reader, did you know that very few young men, in the full bloom of their inherent strength and vigor, ruin themselves? If you wish to see the world at its darkest, sin at its foulest, you will find it not among youths and a young manhood. Not by any means. You will find the world at its worst with what may be called middle-age. Men as a rule have passed out of their teens, more often beyond their twenties, before they come to their worst and wickedest. Why? Because in middle age, native strength, of mind and body, with which one is equipped has largely waned and now the time of renewing has come. One's strength of plan, purpose, aim and desire must be renewed. Now those who wait upon the Lord have their strength renewed for righteousness, peace, triumph, conquest. Those who refuse to do so wait upon wine, indulgence, greed, gain, dishonest possessions, unholy pursuits. They seek to renew their strength at the wrong source. Responsibility, or the lack of it, success or the want of it, press them, and they seek renewal in wicked and worldly pursuits. And instead of strength they get weakness, instead of purity they take poison, instead of renewed life they get a new lease on death.

Most of your bank wrecks and robberies occur, not with young men, but with men in middle life—at that period when the first ebb of strength has set in and the first tide of life begins to be felt to run backwards. They want a renewal and need it; but they go to the wrong source for it. The cruel crimes are committed, not by young men, as a rule, but by men in middle life. Step by step in sin and shame has been taken. Now the native strength begins to wane. There must be a renewal. And a great crime caps the climax of petty ones. One's strength of resistance had been exhausted in the lesser crimes. The larger one tells the tragedy of one who needed strength, but waited not upon the Lord to get it.

The greatest responsibilities press upon one, not in the teens and twenties, when one is just beginning. Then everybody is hopeful of one and many are willing to help. But in middle life, when the first flush of hope has passed, and one is in the business world elbowing against others, pushing his way, seeking and demanding his rights, his positions, his part of things and events; then is when the leaden hand of responsibility falls. Then is when one is put to one's wit. And then is when one needs, and must have from some source, a renewal of strength, for the first and native strength has largely disappeared.

Elijah had spent his strength. He had done his best. He had reached his uttermost. Henceforth—What? He waits upon the Lord. And the Lord leads him to new strength and to yet newer and stronger and greater conquests. Wait more upon the Lord: in Him is all-sufficient strength and help.

OUR DESTINY.

I believe, at least, in this much of destiny, or even of predestination if you will, to wit; That God never made a man but that He appointed him to some particular sphere, some peculiar work. I shall never be able to fill your sphere, do your work; nor you mine. God ordained that you should do your task in a way and in a manner that no one else will, might or can. This is why He made no two of us alike.

Emerson, the sage of Concord, wrote once, and very truly, "Nature arms each man with some faculty which enables him to do easily some feat impossible to any other." That is it. Your easiest task is beyond any other, though that other try with never such effort. In all of God's good universe there are no two souls alike.

A writer commenting on this thought recently said "How this thought ought to put an end at once to all the envy of life—grieving at another's good (for that is envy.) His good is not my good. It was never meant to be. I could not gain it if I tried. On the other hand, What I can do my neighbor cannot. Why, then, should either of us be jealous or imagine that we conflict? Each human soul can say, I am unique. In all the worlds and worlds in all the ages and ages there has never been any one like me, and in all time there shall never be again. I have no double."

Herein appears the wisdom and goodness of God. He made you to do and to be somewhat on your own account, in your own name, and no mortal man can hinder. The people of Bedford thought to hinder when they locked poor John Bunyan in jail. They were not. They were only shutting out the world that this great soul might possess itself, and give its big-ness and fulness to the world in Pilgrim's Progress.

Nature itself seemed to hinder, misfortune and calamity did, when the eye-sight of John Milton was taken. But the blind bard's natural eyes were taken that his earth vision might be cut off and his heavenly vision gain the greater power and ascendancy.

To each is assigned his task. And to each is a task assigned. Happy indeed is he, and the happier and better the world, when one finds the task and gives himself to it, without envy or malice or jealousy in his heart, for which vices there is no place in the world. "To thine own self be true. And it must follow as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man."

BEWAILING A BAD HABIT.

What a bad habit many of us have, of wanting something for nothing. One would think that this habit only pertained to those who were worldly minded and in the pursuit of only worldly means and measures. But such is not the case. There are hundreds and hundreds of men in the Christian Church today who ought to be taking The Christian Sun but are not doing so because they say it is too high. And yet these dear deluded friends cannot find anybody from 1844 to the present who has made a fortune, nay verily, who has been paid even a fair and living profit for his labor and his output on the paper. Fact is these brethren would have the paper sent to them for less than it costs to produce it; and if they could realize that they were doing this they would feel glad and be happy. There are just thousands of us who have cultivated the unenviable disposition of desiring what we get at less than the actual cost—something for nothing.

But this is not the worst phase of this unenviable habit. Bro. Bivins who edits The Stanley Enterprise, one of the best weeklies in this State, wrote thus of another phase of the habit recently:

"There is no law which compels a man to take a paper for which he has not subscribed, nor one for a longer term than it has been paid. But the law is explicit as regards the person who continues to take a paper from the office or allows it to be taken out by some one else. The newspaper man cannot carry on his mind the accounts of the several hundred persons who take his paper, but each one of his subscribers owes him the duty of giving notice of any change of address or desire to discontinue. It is a sorry thing for a subscriber to knowingly let a paper run a year or more overtime and refuse to pay simply because of a condition entirely beyond the publisher's control. A subscriber is regarded such until notice is given to the contrary, and The Enterprise hopes it does not have many subscribers who will occasion it losses through their carelessness or negligence."

The North Carolina Christian Advocate has had experience along this line and adds to the above:

The Advocate has lost enough on an average to pay the editor's salary and all the clerical expenses of the office for the last ten years on negligent saints who insist that they are under no obligation to pay for a paper continued to them after the time paid for has expired. Right recently, in our effort to be a little more careful to accommodate this class of subscribers and not being able to discriminate in every case, we have given mortal offense to some who happened to fall under the scimitar and they have written us "huffy" letters, saying we are afraid to trust them for a little while. So what is a poor mortal to do? And these are all good church folks at that."

It is a proposition indeed, and wonderful too, that many good folks want their church paper, if they can get it for nothing, at less than cost, or at the labor and expense of some one else.

We not infrequently get a card saying "Please stop my paper." And turning to the account of such an one there is a charge against him for a whole year, maybe as much as two years. Something for nothing.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Next Tuesday, Feb. 22, hundreds of thousands of school children and grown folks too, will celebrate the birthday anniversary of the Father of his Country. So far as we know no statesman of any age or country has had his birthday so long and so elaborately celebrated.

Nor did the people wait till Washington was dead to begin to celebrate in his honor. His birthday was celebrated before he became president, and then after he came to the presidency it was celebrated in place of the king's birthday, an event which had been honored by the colonists before Washington.

And no other holiday in honor of a man's birth is so universally celebrated as Washington's. The American people have ever felt that with all of its great men, many who rank with the world's few great and good, none surpass, if any equal, our first President in well rounded, finished and stalwart statesmanship and manhood. Washington was recognized in his own day as a great man, and succeeding ages have not detracted from, but they rather added to his laurels and his luster. He was a good man, as well as great, and the country does well to teach, honor, inculcate his virtue by celebrating his birthday.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

—Are not all worthy inventions mines of mercy and majesty? Some are at any rate. This for instance; the other day a physician on one ship prescribed for and cured a patient on another ship eight hundred miles away, conveying prescription and directions for the patient by wireless telegraphy. Put it down that every useful achievement and conquest adds to the good of man and the benefits to the race in more directions than one, or even than was ever anticipated. All true service has rumors going into many and unexpected paths.

—The government expert appointed to examine Commander Peary's observations has given it out definitely that Peary got within a mile and three-fifths of the north pole. So if a miss is as good as a mile and a mile is as bad as many, the pole, like the fountain of youth, has not been found yet. But what difference does it make, for Peary himself could not again find or point out the spot to which he did go.

—Life itself does not wait on creeds and formulas and beliefs. It proceeds to live and to pocket whatever comes its way for its own pleasure and profit regardless. This is written of that strong current of life that ebbs and flows and fills in the mind and heart of youth. How many young people stopped last Tuesday—St. Valentine's day—to enquire whether they should or should not venerate saints or give reverence, or the lack of it, to St. Valentine, whoever he was? Not many we fancy. Cards, and happy and agreeable, maybe ludicrous, greetings were sent or received, and the day enjoyed, with never a thought, in the minds of many as to whether there ever had been a St. Valentine. Life leaps the limits of all our cherished creeds, and flings consistency to the bottom of the sea, or into the high skies. What was it Emerson said about consistency being the narrow confines that every little soul placed about itself?

—Among the items that Canada proposes to admit without advalorem, under reciprocity agreements now pending between that country and the United States are cotton seed-oil, fresh vegetables and fruits, oysters, peanuts and farm wagons. This may seem a small matter to the casual reader, but it amounts to several hundred thousand in revenue to the Canadian government and a consequent saving to the shippers in this country. For instance Canada collected last year in duties $195,000 on the cotton-seed oil which was exported thither from the United States; and $500,000 in duties on fresh vegetables and fruits shipped from this country; and $177,000 in duties on oysters imported from us. If the items named are now to be admitted to Canada free the producer here should receive the benefit of it in correspondingly increased price. On the other hand Canada demands, and will receive under the treaty, that products she ships into this country shall enter free, covering as much in revenue, supposedly, as will be lost to her in duties remitted to us on products named and others. The time will come, we have no doubt, when there will be amicable trade relations, and reciprocity agreements between all the nations so that God's bounty in any particular place shall not be cornered by the few, nor its enjoyments kept from the many.

—The Young People's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada will hold seven conferences this summer for education and training. The conferences will be held by the Movement in behalf of Home and Foreign Mission Boards of the two countries. The conferences aim to train missionary leaders, so that in every department of the church there may be those who are qualified to arouse the church to adequate efforts in the evangelization of the world. The conferences this summer will provide institutes and classes to prepare missionary leaders in the Sunday-school as well as in all other forms of church work. One of the conferences will be held at Asheville, N. C., June 30-July 9—the only one to be held in the South.

These conferences, on an enormous scale both as to inspiration and in practical benefits are another evidence of the awakening matter of world-wide evangelization.

—Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia, a noted man, and distinguished prelate in the Catholic Church died at his home in Philadelphia in his 80th year Feb. 11.

—Rev. T. W. Stroud, though returned to his home, Chapel Hill, N. C., and able to work some, is still under physician's treatment but hopeful of recovery. He was able to preach at Bethel 1st Sunday—the first time since November.

—"I have received the Child's Pictorial Bible which you advertise in The Sun and which I ordered of you for $1.00 and am well pleased with it." So writes a good brother who is one of many taking advantage of the excellent Bible we are now offering in the advertising columns of the paper, and at an exceedingly low price.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE MASTER'S BUSINESS.

By Charles A. Hines.

III. Systematic Giving.

Many of our churches have managed to get along and have done good work without a finance committee, but this does not prove that a finance committee is not a valuable adjunct to any church organization. On the other hand, I make the assertion that any church will be able to accomplish more if it has a good board of finance. This committee should be composed of not less than five and not more than twelve. The chairman should be the best business man and most energetic worker in the congregation. The other members ought to be people who will do what they are assigned; not people who will look wise and do nothing.

At the beginning of the conference year the entire membership should be divided among the committee, and each member personally waited upon. Do not "assess" any one; just let the member write on a card how much he will give each week or month. Do not let any one pledge a lump sum for the year; let it be so much a week if you have services weekly; if you have services monthly, let it be so much a month. The member of the finance committee ought to know the individual and his ability to give and see that he makes a pledge that it is not too small or too large. I have seen people of both kinds—those who will pledge more than they can pay and because it is too great pay nothing, and I have seen those who will pledge 5 cents a week when they ought to pay 20. If any member is approached in the right spirit he will pledge willingly and as a result by giving monthly or weekly his contribution will be doubled or trebled and he will not miss it. When every member has been seen, the finance committee should meet again and estimate their budget and compare it with the subscriptions. If enough has not been subscribed, the cards should be gone over and the committee pick out those that they feel can and should give more. These details can be worked out according to the conditions in the local church.

Then the finance committee should see that the subscriptions are paid promptly. It is necessary that this be done, and it is good business method. The church obligations should be paid on time. If a member is falling behind with his payments the committeemen who has that member's name on his list should see the individual and ascertain the reason. Let the member know that his failure to meet his payments promptly causes a falling behind on the part of the church in meeting its obligations.

The finance committee should collect a conference moneys, pastor's salary and incidentals. The missionary committee should have the duty of collecting only for foreign missions, and this committee should also adopt the weekly or monthly plan of giving. The duplex envelope is fast coming into use, and something will be said about this in a later article. If any man does not want to make weekly or monthly payments, but prefers paying less often, let him pay annually or quarterly, but tell him it must be paid in advance quarterly or annually.

The pastor's salary should be paid monthly. There is no excuse for its not being done. Very few of our churches follow this method, but the custom of waiting until the end of the year to pay his salary has outlived the necessity for it. There is no need for the pastor's fasting when his members are carrying his salary in their pockets. If the pastor's salary is $150, the finance committee should see that he gets $12.50 each month.

I believe if the plan of regular systematic giving should be adopted in our churches the contributions for all purposes would be doubled, and no giver would miss it. About one half of our members now give nothing; one half of the other half do not give "as the Lord has prospered" them. The time is ripe for a more adequate business system in our churches, and it is up to the laymen to begin the work.

GIVING.

There are few of God's children but what need to cultivate the grace of liberality. None of us give too much to the Lord's cause. Many pray for more faith and for more love while but few that they may be made more willing to give and that their liberality might be increased. Many a child of the King has not learned the lesson of giving in the right spirit and thus fails in obtaining one of life's choicest blessings. Our Father in heaven, the absolute owner of all things, has given to us possessions that we might have the opportunity of being God-like in giving back to Him something of our inheritance.

No where can we use our means to better advantage than in the cause of missions. The man of large means is learning that his offerings to the Lord count for most in the mission field. Steadily but slowly the eyes of men are being opened to the great opportunity of financing this the greatest enterprise of the ages—the evangelization of the world. We grow impatient at times but he who studies the onward march of Christ's kingdom in the world sees a vision of hope.

The thought of stewardship and the relation of money to the kingdom are subjects that have a larger place in our minds than ever before and fruitage must result.

When the idea of stewardship with all that it implies has fully taken possession of us we will give more largely and will be actuated by the principle. Not how much I give, but how little need I retain for working efficiency.

Money cannot of itself redeem men's souls but in the economy of salvation it costs money to bring the Gospel into vital touch with mankind. Other things being equal, the more money we have at our disposal the more quickly can we give to men every where an opportunity to be saved. Dr. Bishop says, "Your salvation and mine, as well as the converted heathen's, is in part some person's money transmuted into life, life here and now and the blessed hope of eternal life by and by."

He who hordes up miserly his possession fails to remember that the hope of increase lies not in what we keep but in what we give out. A farmer has ten bushels of wheat in his granary. He may have a little pleasure in the thought possessing it. But his hope of increase lies in giving it out to be scattered over the fertile fields. What an abundant harvest follows. In the same way we may have money and hide it away but our hope of blessing lies in using it to the glory of God. By so doing it is transmuted into the currency of heaven and we shall find it many days hence as treasures laid up in heaven.

That child of God is wisest who is living in the simplest manner here and now and is striving to put all the money possible into the extension of Christ's kingdom on earth.

"Good measure, pressed down, running over,
Give for God's cause, and so shall be given;
Good measure, pressed down running over,
Thus will you lay up your treasure in heaven."

PROTESTANT PAPACY.

Theological intolerance repeats itself.

The pope of the Disciple sect, in an article entitled, "Curiosities of Kentucky Baptists," attacking the Baptist denomination, published in the Christian Standard of Dec. 24th, 1910, uses the following language:

"I observe that Baptists preachers—at least those in Kentucky—have not yet learned better than to leave many of their converts unbaptized. In the report of their Board of Missions I find this statement: 'Our evangelists, missionaries and colporters report 3,685 conversions and 2,873 baptisms.'

"This shows that they left 812 of their converts, or more than one fourth of them, unbaptized. When will these 'evangelists, missionaries and colporters' learn what the commission is under which they claim to labor, and to comply with it as the apostles did? How many of their converts did Peter and Paul leave unbaptized?"

To answer the Disciple pope's last question first, we may let Paul speak for himself, by quoting his words recorded in 1 Corinthians 1: 14-17:

"I thank God that I baptized none of you, save Crispus and Gaius; lest any man should say that ye were baptized into my name. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel."

This language of Paul proves that he was not a Campbellite: for no one ever heard a Campbellite missionary talk so disrespectfully of baptism.

Peter spoke of baptism properly always; but he did not have the spirit of Alexander Campbell about it: for I find that he is only mentioned in the Bible as having spoken of baptism on four occasions, recorded in Acts 2nd chapter, Acts 10 chapter, Acts 11th chapter, and 1st Peter 3rd chapter. And one whole book of Peter does not even mention baptism. The Campbellite pope would not have written a whole book on the subjects that Peter treated, without mentioning baptism. That fact shows that the Disciples have not the spirit of the Bible writers, and of the Bible preachers.

Let not a word that I have said be construed as implying that I do not believe in water baptism. I do believe in it. I believe that Jesus intended it to be a continuing ordinance. But Jesus did not intend it to be a flood between Christians; so that a whole denomination should be condemned because some of its evangelists did not baptize all their converts. Protestant infallibility is as odious as Roman infallibility.

It is a blessed thing that there are only two protestant denominations that claim infallibility for themselves.

OUR WESTERN LETTER.

There is joy among many of our people because the missionary debt is so nearly paid off. True, there remains about $2-500 yet to be raised, but the sum is so small now, compared with what it was last October, that we are all feeling good and hoping for the very best—that it may all be paid before we are ready for the March offering for Foreign Missions. That would bring great rejoicing to the brotherhood generally. We can do it if we will. Let us get together and do it. It is not a hard task, if we may only get to work, all pulling together.

Another thing that brings us great joy and hope for our work in the comparatively new State of Wyoming—the cause is two-fold in this case, viz.: President Flammer has found much encouragement in his efforts to raise money for Jireh College, and while the pressing need has not been fully met, great hope has been given that it will be, and the work, so well begun, will go bravely on, if it may please the Lord. And the second part of the cause for joy is the fact that the Board of Education has decided to call upon the churches generally throughout the entire denomination to observe Feb. 19, as "Jireh College Day." The reason for the call on all of our churches to observe that day is the fact that Jireh College is a great Home Mission enterprise of the whole denomination. The people of the Wyoming Colony have done a great deal in planting the Christian Church in that great State, in building a town and locating a college at Jireh, and what is more, they have not only located it, but they have put up the first building and got the college work started, and this they have done without calling upon the church at large for gifts to the work, but now they have come to a point when the enterprise has grown too large for the colony to manage it by their own means altogether, and hence the call to help them. It would be a calamity to the whole church to have the Jireh College work fail, and to save the work from any such danger, the whole church is called on to help give them assistance just now when they so much need it. Already the Wyoming Colony and the Jireh College faculty have a number of our strongest men in the movement, and we must not leave them to themselves. We must give them help, and we are hoping that our churches in the South will join in this effort to help Jireh College by observing this Feb. 19, as Jireh College Day. Money thus collected for Jireh College may be sent to Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., Secretary of the American Christian Convention, Dayton, Ohio, but be sure to tell him the money sent is for Jireh College. This call is not sent out with any command that it must be answered by our churches in the South, but it is sent in the hope that they will generously answer out of a desire to see our work in Wyoming succeed. We hope every church will make an offering, but if this is done, the pastor must bring the matter before the church and explain the need for the help and what the outlook for our cause in Wyoming is, and how this will help to establish the Christian Church in that great and growing State. If you cannot observe Feb. 19, as Jireh College Day, then take the appointment which comes nearest to that day and use it for the same purpose. Thank you, brethren!

We are having some great revivals through the west. At Argos, Indiana, a meeting recently closed in which there were 79 additions to the church membership. At Huntington, Ind., they have just had 52 additions to the membership. At Fidelity, Ohio, they also had a good meeting with quite a number of additions. At Franklin, Ohio, the Protestant churches of the town united in a revival service, and there were more than 400 confessions. Rev. H. J. Rhodes, pastor of the Franklin Christian church, told me today that he had 119 names for membership in the Christian church. The Franklin revival was a sweeping power for good, as we trust. Over in Illinois they are having many great meetings and the good work is spreading, and so it is, more or less, in many directions in many states.

Rev. D. A. Long reports a good work out at Rifle, Colorado. He is enjoying the work as supply for Rev. Horace Mann, while he serves a term in the legislature. Bro. Long is as busy as a bee, preaching, doing pastoral work, holding prayer meetings and delivering addresses on education every school day.

Sisson Hall, Defiance College, is to be opened February 17—the whole Christian Church is invited, but of course all cannot go. President McReynolds is leading in a great work in building up that institution. It is now the strongest institution we have, financially, and I suspect it has the largest number of students in attendance. The growth of Defiance College has been remarkable. President McReynolds is a great financier, and he knows what to do with a college work.

There is yet great demand for more pastors. There are several churches which have been without a pastor for several months. They are most anxious, but they find it hard to find one to meet their needs. It may be that some of our churches are too choice in the matter of a pastor from some stand points, and not choice enough in other respects. Sam Jones once declared that many a church in asking for a pastor lays down its own limitations by saying, we want a pastor who is popular with the people, or with other denominations, or with the world, or with the young people, but the great Evangelist declared he had never known a church to apply for a pastor who is popular with Almighty God. We suspect if some of our needy churches would ask the Lord to send them a pastor who is popular with Him, it might work out better and show good results much sooner. God help our churches to seek pastors who are popular with the Lord, and may God help our preachers to look for fields which are chosen for them of the Lord, for when that is done, their labors will be much more abundant and much more successful.

The other day I received a letter from the South, saying it is reported there that I have given up my views on the great question of sanctification, and desiring to know if it is true. I wrote at once saying: I have not changed my views at all on that question. I believe in the great work of sanctification by the Spirit, according to the Scriptures. I cannot, and God helping me, I will not deny it while I live, and I am quite sure I shall have no cause to deny it after I go hence to live with Jesus. Of course, there are many extreme views on that question, which I not only do not approve, but never did approve but the genuine work of the Spirit in the heart of a believer for a larger service and a holy life—this I believe is the privilege of the people of God, and for the lack of it, in many cases, the Church is today suffering great losses.

God help us all not to be afraid of the truth because some extremists have distorted its proper portions. The conservative element in the Church needs to rescue and preserve these precious truths from the wreck of extremists.

I must stop as my letter is getting too long.

A WELL TAUGHT LESSON.

(1) A well taught Sunday-school lesson is one that exhibits the same general characteristics as the one taught by the same teacher the week before, but yet has a distinction all its own. The fundamental principles, the necessary characteristics, of a properly taught Sunday-school lesson are ever the same, but the application of them differs. If the lesson is always taught in the same way, even tho it is sound as to the pedagogical principles underlying it, it is not properly taught. There must be variety from week to week. The consecrated teacher knows this and wisely governs himself accordingly.

But what are these fundamental principles of a well taught lesson? They are eight as follows:

Review:—No teacher who hopes to succeed permanently will fail to review his pupils from time to time on what they have previously studied. In this way alone will our pupils retain what they have passed over. In this way also the quarterly review will become the most interesting lesson of the quarter, as every harvest ought to be.

Connecting Links:—In some way we should bring to our pupils' attention what transpires between last Sunday's lesson and to-day's. This will give them systematic knowledge and incite their enthusiasm for Bible study.

Incidental Instruction:—In almost every lesson there are matters—geographical, historical, ritualistic, antiquarian, textual—which the average pupil will not have the opportunity to unravel for himself. The teacher may wisely give this information by way of incidental instruction, but will invent other ways also of getting it before them through assignments for home study. This is not to be confounded with the inexcusable lecturing which some teachers regard as a substitute for teaching.

Deduction of Truths:—Every lesson will have its guiding principles for life—its fundamental principles teaching conduct and right-living. By various methods the skillful teacher will develop these and get them clearly fixed in his pupils' minds. Unless this is done, we might just as well study Shakespeare as the Bible in our Sunday-schools.

Application of Truths:—But the value of the lesson is only half attained, if the deduction of the truths is the end of the teaching process. In order to full and complete results, these truths should be applied to modern day Christian life. This too may be done in various ways. It is the real test of the teacher's power. The teacher who succeeds here becomes the shepherd leading his pupils to Christ.

Bringing out the Facts:—The facts of the lesson must be elicited by the question or topic method or both. Do not fall into the bad habit of telling these facts to your class. Have them tell them to you. Insist on having your questions answered and the lessons prepared.

Assignments for Home Study:—In order to insure the home-study of the lesson, an excellent plan is to cultivate the habit by assigning to those who are lax in this regard topics to be studied specially and reported on next Sunday in the class. This will work like a charm, but only a working teacher, one who keeps at least a week ahead of his class, can use it successfully. Try it.

A Method of Approach:—The aim here is to connect the lesson directly with some well-known fact in experience to-day—something to fix attention and engage interest. For relatively immature pupils, an excellent method of approach is through a story. For adults, an often used method is to suggest a comparison between the lesson and some incident, person, or character of the modern world, or a contrast.

It must not be supposed that these items are to be taken up in the order given above I have had no such intention in the order of their treatment. Vary the manner of attaining these and the order of their attainment. Thus will you secure variety and larger success.

A Commendable Variation.

Prof. Lawrence, superintendent of the Elon College Sunday-school, has introduced a variation in the Sunday-school here recently that bids fair to yield results. So we give it to our readers. Instead of the talk on the lesson which is the inherited right of the superintendent, the previous Sunday's lesson is to be reviewed by classes, each of the thirteen classes taking its turn. The classes vary the manner of the review to suit their individual taste. We congratulate Prof. Lawrence and commend the variation to our other superintendents, with the suggestion that they try it, but change to something else before it loses its charm of novelty and so its power to interest more than some other method would.

WE WISH MORE WOULD.

Not long since Rev. G. O. Lankford delivered an address by invitation before the Epworth League of the M. E. Church of Columbus, Ga., on Character Building. On going to his home, Brother Lankford reduced his remarks on that occasion to writing and has given them a larger audience by sending them to us for the Young People's Department. We wish more of our friends would do as Brother Lankford has done. We will gladly yield part of our space to contributions from the interested friends of our department in the local congregations. Be sure to read Brother Lankford's article.

SOUTHERN MISSIONS NOTES.

The great Southern problem of the negroes is a great Northern problem also, as the great Northern problem of the immigrants is a Southern problem also; each should help the other in the solution.

Education is the great solution of the negro problem,—an education suited to the negro's needs, which are chiefly at present moral and industrial. But the higher education is necessary to teach the negro teachers and preachers, as only through them can the leaven work faster than the advancing population.

A Southern editor wrote wisely: "The negro is here to stay, and we shall have to make the best of him. We believe the way to do this is to help make the best of himself, and obtain an education if he can."

Temperance means much for the South, and the splendid Southern stand for temperance means much for the entire country. The South is leading the way in the greatest modern reform.

The vast increase in Southern industries will turn immigration toward the South and increase the Southern problems enormously. The more need of settling as fast as possible the problems the South has already on its hands.

In forty-five years the negroes have increased from four to ten millions. They are a young, strong race, which we must train for good Americanism if only in self-defence.

At the end of the war the negroes were penniless; now 400,000 of them own their own houses, and many of them are far advanced beyond the primitive one-room cabin.

There are now 750,000 negro farmers, owning 23,383 square miles of land,—a space larger than Holland and Belgium combined.

There are in the South some towns inhabited solely by negroes, where the race has proved its capacity for government.

More than 45 banks in the country are owned and operated solely by negroes.

The assessed value of negro property in the United States is more than $500,000,000.

In the one city of Jacksonville, Fla., more than 300 business enterprises are carried on by negroes.

In 1860 the negroes were entirely illiterate. Now in the public schools of the South more than 30,000 negro teachers are instructing more than 2,000,000 children.

The negroes own more than 35,000 church buildings, and raise every year for the support of the church the goodly sum of $7,500,000.—Amos R. Wells.

BROTHER BUTLER OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORKER HAS A WORD.

The young people's column in the Christian Sun, edited by Prof. W. A. Harper, Elon College N. C., has somewhat to say, complimentary, suggestive, and timely about the Young People's Worker. We do not fail to appreciate all he says and we not only accept his suggestions relative to making it the organ of the Young People's convention of our Southern church, but we have several weeks ago asked the chairman of that convention's executive board to submit such a proposition to his board. Such a course would make it none the less the mouthpiece and organ of our Sunday school conventions and Endeavor Societies.

The writer asks the question: "Does it advocate Teacher Training and organized classes in every Sunday-school; Christian Endeavor in every church? Is this its motto, its watchword? If so why not so print on its title page?" etc.

Replying we wish to say that on our title page we "print" "Devoted to the interest of the Young People and Sunday-school work of the Christian Church." Then again on same page we "print" as our motto: "Better organization, more efficient service, greater loyalty to the work, deeper spiritual life." Now the Young People's convention stands for all of that, and all of that is in harmony with the announced and expressed views of the convention. Relative to organized class work, Christian Endeavor, Teacher Training, etc., we have been carrying such departments in the Worker and "Editorially" advocating each and all of these departments.

The editor of the modest little publication takes to and regards Prof. Harper's suggestions kindly, and favorably. With the editor and publisher both, the work has been a labor of love and we have naturally expected a better support and co-operation. As before stated elsewhere, the publication occupies a field not occupied by any other publication of our church and has received favorable endorsements. We have frequently called attention editorially to the Young People's Department in the Christian Sun and commended Prof. Harper's work there to our young people. We shall be delighted to see (if we see it) many of our people respond to Brother Harper's suggestion that they send their ideas touching the subject to him. We desire to see the enterprise reach a larger number of our people. We thank you, Bro. Harper, speak out again.

LIFE-BUILDING.

By Rev. G. O. Lankford.

We often hear it said that life is a "race," a "journey," a "warfare," all of which is true and there is value in those terms when applied to the Christian's life with serious thought and holy meditation. But there are other terms that might be helpful to some Christian, and I should like to mention a few thoughts in reference to life as a building—a spiritual structure.

The first thing to be done towards the erection of a building, is the selection of a plan. It would be the part of folly and foolishness for one to purchase material, employ laborers and give orders for work to begin, without having decided first on some definite plan. That would be putting the "cart before the horse." The wise builder first selects his plan, then buys material to suit the plan, before beginning the work. A railroad company proposing to build a road, first surveys the country through which the road is to pass. The gardener decides on the distance between his rows before the time for spring planting. The dress-maker selects her pattern before using the scissors on the goods purchased. In the building of a life, the moulding of a character, the shaping of a destiny, one needs first of all an ideal, a pattern, a plan.

The plan I suggest is a simple one and in reach of all. That plan is Christ.

Now, an individual's life consists of what that individual is and does. And man must ever be before he can do—must possess Christian character before he can do efficient religious work. The well must contain water before any can be drawn out, the fountain must be full before it can overflow. The bosom of the mountain must hold some hidden stream before the sparkling spring bursts forth from some foot-hill. If the life speak with praise there must be gratitude in the heart. Indeed one must be in order for one to do. For one's being and doing, the Immaculate Christ is an all-sufficient plan. He is the world's supreme example in character and work. He is the perfect standard, teaching men how to live and how to labor. Upon His character no stain was ever seen and with His life no fault could at any time be found.

Another important item to be considered in building a house is the kind of material. If the structure is to be of wood, the builder wants lumber that has been kept sound and dry and straight. If brick is to be used, they must be thoroughly burnt in order to stand. If a stone edifice is to be erected, the builder wants granite. But to the material for a life-building. How can one select material for such a structure? Is it possible? Let us see. True, life is largely the product of environment, but it is one's privilege to make, in a large degree, his own environment. He can certainly select some of the things that affect his life in no small way. In all probability the most potent factors in the young person's life, are the reading one does, the work one performs, the associates one has, and the pleasures one engages in. Such things each individual can select for himself. By all means this should be well done. For it is not everything published that is worth reading; not every kind of work is honorable; not every man a gentleman, not every amusement safe. Read the best literature; choose some honorable work; select companions who have in their natures "oak and iron as well as vine and flowers;" engage in no kind of questionable amusements, even if the crowd is against you.

Again, it is worthwhile to give the foundation due consideration. Nothing but careful, pains-taking effort and labor will do here. The soil must be removed

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rev. Martin Summerbell, D. D., LL. D., President of Starky Seminary—Palmer Institute, Lakemont, N. Y., came to Suffolk February 4th and left for Elon College, N. C., February 7th. He was the guest, while in Suffolk, of Col. E. E. Holland, a Virginia state Senator, who was elected to Congress from the 2nd district in November.

Dr. Summerbell preached for us on Sunday morning, February 5th, delivered an address in the afternoon at the celebration of "Christian Endeavor Day," and spoke at night on "Martin Luther, His Times and Training." He lectured again on Monday night on Luther's "Duel with the Papacy." The audience on Monday night was small on account of the rain-storm which struck Suffolk.

These addresses were all masterpieces and greatly enjoyed. His clearness, his simplicity, his profoundness, his wealth of learning and his earnestness, combine to put him in a class by himself as a speaker. He seems to enter the very heart of the Reformation and view the scenes of those stirring and epoch-making years with the eye of the historian, the philosopher, and the artist. His English is choice, his interpretation is lucid, and his conclusions sound. He puts the picture of the times and the characters on the stage of action before his audience with the skill of an actor and the spirit of a great preacher. His visit and his addresses will long be remembered with pleasure and profit in Suffolk.

On Monday we went to the preacher's meeting in Norfolk where ten Christian preachers were trying to master chapter 8 in "Preparing the Teacher" written by the learned and accurate author, Rev. J. J. Summerbell, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, who, by the way, is cousin to Dr. Martin Summerbell. The preachers of the Eastern Va., Christian Conference have studied many books and many subjects with profit within the last five or six years. We used to meet monthly but we now meet bi-monthly. We select a portion of a good book for a lesson, choose a teacher from our own number, and when we meet we form a class and go over that lesson under our teacher. It keeps us in touch with one another as men, as ministers, and as pastors. It tends toward uniformity in work in thought, and interest. It converts some of our faults, adds to our stock of knowledge, whets our intellectual blades, and heightens our respect for one another.

Dr. Summerbell by request made a charming little address to our meeting which the preachers all enjoyed.

Then Dr. Summerbell, Rev. N. G. Newman, Rev. I. W. Johnson and I went to see Col. A. Savage. The Colonel is now in a very feeble state, very tender, deeply pained at the death of dear Captain Gaskins, who made him weekly visits, but interested in the men and work of the church and especially in dear Berea where he holds his membership. That church for many years has been like one large family, not only working together in harmony but loving one another and helping one another in all the troubles and necessities of life. Our stay with Col. Savage was brief, his dear wife brightens his room and his heart by her cheerful countenance and heart. Dr. Summerbell led in a sweet prayer and we bade the old soldier good-bye.

W. W. Staley.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.Ramseur.

I am endeavoring to serve six churches this year: Ramseur, Shiloh, Antioch (R), Union Grove, Spoon's Chapel, and Pleasant Ridge. I have met nearly all of the members of the churches, and have had good congregations present at every service. I am fully persuaded that I have an appreciative people to serve and a great opportunity to keep busy in the Master's service; that I shall never suffer hunger, nor freeze for want of fuel so long as I remain with them and do my duty; and that they love God and their church and are loyal to all our enterprises. The change from Porto Rico to Randolph county is a great one, change in climate, water, food people—nearly everything is a change. But the greatest change is found in the people because for generations in Randolph county the gospel has been preached, whereas in Porto Rico only a beginning has been made. Christianity blesses a community and makes it a delightful place in which to dwell.

All of the churches in my field are country churches with the exception of Ramseur, and all are enjoying prosperity. The improved methods in farming, the rural free delivery of mail, and the advantage and convenience of the telephone make life in the country attractive and enjoyable. That part of the county where my work is found has made improvement, I can talk to possibly a majority of the members of the different churches by telephone. They need better roads, and the Pleasant Ridge community needs a larger and better church edifice to keep pace with other steps of progress. I believe one of the best ways for our millionaires to dispose of some of their wealth would be to help some of the country districts to build a road so the preacher and people could go to church without getting covered with mud, and the teacher and pupils could get to school with dry feet.

I know of no one in a community who would not be directly helped by a good road. As I see it it would help civilization, education, and evangelization. At each of the churches a good Sunday-school is kept up; the churches are held in high esteem by the people, are well located so that there is no overlapping and friction with other churches and denominations; and are surrounded by honest, industrious, and up-to-date farmers. I trust each church may have delegates at our next conference, and that they will be banner churches. This will mean a sacrifice to two of the churches, but if they will do it, they will be all the happier in the end and be fully repaid. I am expecting, therefore, every church to do its duty, which will mean that all our apportionments will be paid in full. But beyond and above all this, I trust we may have a growth in grace and many new-born souls added to the churches.

Raleigh.

Our work for the new year starts with promise and encouragement. All departments are alive and active. We have organized a Senior Christian Endeavor Society which is doing splendid work under the leadership of Mr. S. M. Burritt. The society gave a mid-winter seven social Tuesday night which was a pronounced success. The spiritual life of the Society is very good. We had our best meeting last Sunday night, with about twenty persons present.

Our Sunday-school has reached the highest average in the history of the school. We had a hundred even count last Sabbath. Brother Stephenson is a good Sunday-school man. He expects a larger school yet, and will have it. He is progressive, and believes in a progressive Sunday-school. Our school starts on time and closes on time. A new motto for our school, it works well.

Our Aid Society is ever faithful. They know how to succeed with anything they undertake. We cannot speak too highly of our faithful women. They are loyal aid to the church in many ways.

We are expecting a great revival in our church this spring. We have engaged Mr. Chas. Butler and his wife who are expert singers. Also Evangelist R. V. Miller who has met with great success in revivals in quite a number of the states. He has just closed a great meeting in Athens Ga. The meeting will begin the last Sunday in April and will continue as long as interest may demand.

Our building fund is growing gradually. We are hopeful of better things. Watch us, encourage us, help us.

Alabama Letter.

The District Meeting of the Alabama Conference was called to order at 11 a. m. 5th Saturday in Jan., at McGuire's Chapel Church. This writer conducted the services of the forenoon. After preaching we repaired to the grove where a sumptuous dinner was spread, and every body enjoyed the repast. At 1:30 p. m. the meeting was called to order, and Rev. J. D. Dollar was made temporary chairman and J. J. Carter temporary secretary. Revs. C. W. Carter, J. D. Dollar and G. D. Hunt, and Licentiate B. H. Veazey were the ministers present. Delegates were enrolled from Beulah, Christiana, New Hope, Pleasant Grove, Rock Springs and Rock Stand.

The temporary officers were made permanent. The attendance was not large but we held a good and I trust a profitable meeting. The program as printed in the Christian Sun, was adopted and nearly all the subjects were discussed. Some very helpful, speeches were made. The meeting on Sunday was in progress when I arrived. Rev. J. D. Dollar preached the sermon on Sunday. It was decided to hold the Missionary Rally the 5th Sunday in April, which takes the place of the District Meeting. This meeting will be held with Beulah Church. We look forward to this meeting as being one of great importance to the Christian church in Alabama.

Our Sunday-school Convention will meet with the church at Rock Stand 4th Sunday in March and Saturday before. We trust that we may have a good meeting of our Sunday-school Convention. Let every school prepare to be represented, and also to present correct statistics. Our denomination is suffering to day for lack of carefulness upon our part in giving out statistics. Brother do you have a Sunday-school? If so will you not see that it is represented? If not, will you not organize one and let us know at the convention how you are moving along on this line of Christian work. The program will appear in due time. Let us work and pray to that end.

Yours in earnest,

G. D. Hunt.

A Surprise.

Recently while on my way to Raleigh, N. C., I assisted two ladies at Cavy from the car in which we were riding, and, on my return, I observed a gentleman sitting in the rear end of the car whom I recognized and whom I had not seen in many years. I went to him and found him in conversation with another gentleman. We spoke and there was at once mutual recognition and a most cordial hand-shake.

This friend then told me that while he had not seen me for nearly thirty years yet he knew me when I arose to leave the car, and that he was, at the time I approached him, telling his friend about a whipping I gave him when he was nearly grown, and while he was in school forty years ago. He then said that he determined at the time of the flogging that he would give me a good whipping when he became a man, but said that it was not long before a change came over his mind and he felt ashamed of his conduct, and wanted to apologize for his bad behaviour on that occasion. He then asked me where I was going. He then gave me $5.00 and directed me to get the best hat in Raleigh and wear it in remembrance of him and the event mentioned above. I thanked him and forgave him and have the hat. His name is Daniel M. Andrews, his address Roxboro, N. C. There some others now in different parts of this great republic who have had similar experience from whom I would be pleased to hear in a similar manner.

WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Simultaneously with the announcement of its next annual meeting in Denver, June 20 and 21, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis presents statistics in a bulletin issued today, which shows the results of the crusade against consumption in the United States for the last ten years.

The seventh annual meeting of the National Association in Denver will be held just before the annual meeting of the American Medical Association in Los Angeles. The tuberculosis workers' convention will be divided into three sections under the direction of Dr. William H.

Welch of Baltimore, president. Dr. William Charles White of Pittsburg will be chairman of the Advisory Council of the association, which will meet at the same time. The three sections are, the Sociological, with Alexander M. Wilson of Philadelphia as chairman; the Clinical, with Dr. Charles L. Greene of St. Paul as chairman; and the Pathological, with Dr. William Ophuels of San Francisco as chairman. The report of the Executive Secretary, Dr. Livingston Farrand, will be incorporated in a statement of the results of the crusade against tuberculosis in the United States for the last 10 years, which will be transmitted to the International Congress on Tuberculosis in Rome, next September.

Dr. Farrand's report will show that 10 years ago there was only one organization in the United States for the education of the public about tuberculosis, the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis. By September, 1911, the National Association says there will be over 500 such bodies. Ten years ago there were but five special dispensaries or clinics for the examination and instruction of needy tuberculosis patients, three of these being in New York City, one in Boston, and one in Providence. By September, 1911, the United States report will be able to list nearly 400 such institutions. In 1900 there were less than 100 hospitals, wards, and pavilions where tuberculosis patients could be treated, with not more than 6,500 beds all told. The National Association hopes to report by September at least 450 hospitals and sanatoria with an aggregate capacity of at least 30,000 beds.

Commenting on these possibilities, Dr. Farrand says that the educational campaign is directly responsible not only for the great growth in institutional provision but that it will also result in the next ten years in a striking fall in the death rate from tuberculosis. He adds, "What we need most at the moment is more hospitals, more dispensaries, and more visiting nurses. We are working for these definite ends, and the next ten years will show results even more marked than those of the decade just passed."

SILVER ANNIVERSARY AND MEMORIAL FUND.

$2,500.00 for School Building in Japan.

October, 1911, will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Woman's Board for Foreign Missions of the Christian Church. To fitly commemorate this anniversary the women of the Christian Church are asked to give, as a Silver Anniversary Thank-Offering, the sum of $2,500, with which to erect a building for our Utsunomiya Christian Girls' School in Japan. This fund and the school building are to be a memorial for Mrs. Aehsah E. Weston the first president of the Woman's Board for Foreign Missions. A school building in Japan in memory of Mrs. Weston is doubly appropriate; for while she was one of the pioneers in our foreign mission work, she was also an educator of no small ability and note.

Our Girls' School is helping to supply Japan's greatest need—Christian womanhood. It has been running since April, 1907, under direction of Mrs. Susie V. Fry. The presence of Miss Alice True and Mrs. Mina Kitamura, and the generous offer of money by a layman at the quadrennial convention at Huntington, Ind., 1906, opened the way for the School, which was planned for the session of the Mission Board following the Convention. The Japan Mission took the matter up, decided to locate at Utsunomiya, and asked Mrs. Fry to direct the School, which opened its first session with five pupils. The year past Mrs. Fry had the assistance of six Japanese lady teachers, one of them trained in America, and thirty-one students have been enrolled. The first building was a thatched roof Japanese house, small and poor, but the best possible under the circumstances. Now the School occupies a building partly foreign and partly Japanese. Mrs. Fry already has the applications of nine girls who desire to enter next April, for whom there is no room. The curriculum provides for the training of Bible women as well as for the regular course. This is the only Christian school in a province of nearly a million people, the government schools being anything but Christian in their influence.

An offering from every woman in the Christian Church is our aim.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, President of the Palmer Institute, Lakemont, N. Y., and also Chairman of the Asbury Palmer Board of New York City, and sometime President of the Christian Biblical Institute, Stanfordville, N. Y., has captivated the college community this week by a course of three lectures, concerned with the period of Church History known as the Reformation. Last year, Dr. Summerbell, delivered three lectures dealing with Martin Luther and the Reformation in Germany. This year, he has undertaken to continue his study of the Reformation in Switzerland and France. The subject of Reformation in Switzerland, and the second and third lectures, the Rise of the Huguenots in France. These lectures are most scholarly, evidencing the almost complete familiarity with the history of this time, and show that Dr. Summerbell has a firm grasp on the fundamental principles of life and conduct influencing the men who were the chieftains in this great conflict for religious freedom and liberty of conscience. Dr. Summerbell attended chapel on Thursday morning and made an address to the student body which will not soon be forgotten. He said that he congratulated the students on two things: First, that they had had judgment enough to select a small college rather than a large one, as the place of their education. And secondly that they had been pious enough to select a religious college, rather than one that was non-religious or anti-religious. The scholarly manner in which he enlarged upon these two causes of congratulation made a lasting impression upon all who heard him. He left for his home in New York on Friday morning. It is the hope that he will be able to return next year as lecturer on Church History.

A most enjoyable social function, which has become a custom, is the reception given to the Senior Class by the Junior Class. The reception takes place in West Dormitory and is one of the most enjoyable occasions of the college year. This year the reception will be given on the evening of Feb. 11th. An elaborate program has been prepared, and refreshments will be served. Both Senior and Junior classes are anticipating this event with pleasure.

The exact date for the State Christian Endeavor Convention, to be held at Burlington, N. C., with the Christian Church of that place, of which Rev. P. H. Fleming is pastor, has been definitely set for March 31 to April 2nd. Dr. C. H. Hubble, Field Secretary of the M. P. Young Peoples' movement in the U. S., and also president of the Michigan State C. E. of Adrian, Mich, is to conduct a ten days pre-convention campaign on behalf of C. E., and will attend the sessions of the convention as an expert in Young People's work.

The program of the Clio Literary Society entertainment, which is annually held on the night of the 22nd of February, is being thoroughly prepared for. The debate is on the question of increase of the navy. The Affirmative is to be represented by Messrs. G. G. Holland, of Holland, Va., and C. W. Roundtree, of Cypress Chapel, Va. The Negative is represented by Messrs. W. R. Roherson, Washington, N. C., and F. F. Myrick, Boaz, N. C., and also music will be given at this time by Messrs. O. B. Barnes in a vocal solo, and R. A. Campbell in a cornet solo. An oration by Mr. G. C. Cogh, of Savannah, Ga., and Snapshots at students, by Mr. J. A. Dickey.

Dr. Newman occupied the College pulpit Sunday morning and preached a very appropriate sermon, making his message a follow-up one with reference to the series of meetings just closed. Twenty-two of the converts during this meeting have joined the local church.

Mr. Henry Lawrence, who was reported sick in these columns last week, continues to improve and will soon be able to go back to the East Dormitory. He was removed at the beginning of his sickness to Prof. Harpen's residence.

Mr. R. W. Tate, Norfolk, Va., is at the bedside of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Tate. Mr. Tate is doing very well at this writing. Mrs. Tate has a severe attack of the grippe. Many of our citizens are suffering of the same trouble—none of them are seriously sick, however. It would be hard to find a more healthful spot than Elon.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence occupied the pulpit of the Walker Avenue Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., Sunday, the occasion being a rally day for the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The Sunday school has decided on a new plan for appropriating its funds. All motions on resolutions carrying with them appropriations are to be referred to a standing finance committee, which is to report on the same a week later with suggestions as to what action the body should take. This committee consists of Prof. A. L. Lincoln, chairman, Mr. W. S. Noah, and Mrs. R. J. Kernodle.

President Moffitt accompanied pastor

Wicker to the Ifines Chapel Church Sunday and put in a strong plea for the Special Fund of $50,000. The kind words recently of Rev. M. W. Butler in the Young People's Worker and of Rev. W. G. Sargent in the Herald of Gospel Liberty relative to the President's effort on behalf of this fund are heartily appreciated here.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. M. L. Bryant of the Main St. church, Berkley, Va., used these topics last Sunday morning, "Every Man In His Place," evening, "Glad Disciples." Bro. Hanson of Park Place is to lecture for Bro. Bryan's people, this, Wednesday evening in the topic "Around the North-west Corner."

—Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., either too modest or too busy, on both to write to The Sun of the work in his field, was to begin a series of six sermons to young men at the Franklin Christian Church. The topic of the first sermon was "The Young Men's Vision." Now Bro. Rowland ought to be made to furnish those sermons for that large company of young people who read The Sun; but he will not do it.

—We were pleased to show our readers last week the fine features, the open and manly face of our good brother, Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va., whose pen, within these last months, has been busy and faithful in carrying, almost every week, a message of hope, comfort and good cheer to thousands of Sun readers. His message last week was sweet, fragrant, edifying, inspirational and was read with profit by that constantly increasing number who enjoy so much all he writes.

Chewing Gum.—No, beloved, this is not a lecture on chewing gum, the morality or the immorality, the manners or the ill-manners of chewing it. Chew if you wish, so far as we are concerned.

But chewing gum. I was meditating on the quantity of it, and the number of us. Chewing gum has come to be somewhat. Yes, just a penny—one little brownie—a stick. But there are so many sticks. Listen: A nine-million dollar chewing gum trust was found in Chicago recently, the papers say. Nine million dollars put up, at hand invested, to make that which is to be sold out in dribbles—a penny a stick. How will that trust ever get its money back—pay interest and profits and dividends?

If you will go by "Millionaire Row" up on Fifth Avenue, New York, and enquire who live there in those massive mansions your guide will tell you that in this house a chewing gum magnate lives, in that, a soap dealer—five cents a cake—in another a spool cotton master, in yet another "the great five and ten cents store man."

The great majority of people who have become rich by their own endeavor are those who have handled, and handled well, managed and managed well, an infinite number of little things. Think of the infinite number of sticks of chewing gum a nine-million dollar trust must make, manage, manipulate.

So is character made. So is one's life made and wrought out. Not the big things of a week or a month or moment make a good and sound and solid character. But ever and always the infinite number of little things—little deeds, little words, little acts make a man life and name and character. The infinite value and validity of small things.

My Dear Children and Friends:

It looks a little like old-times to see so many letters from the children this week. Uncle Jim wishes he might have 25 little letters each week. Who will join and thus increase the number? Rain, rain, rain, how wet the land, and the roads are in fearful condition. All our farm work is cut off for the present, except feeding and getting wood. We are glad to enroll the Baracea and Philathea classes from Pleasant Hill Church, N. C., in the monthly S. S. roll; we trust that there may be many new classes, schools and friends who will feed and clothe an orphan child for 1911.

We appreciate the many kind words and offerings coming from friends as they send in their thanksgiving or Christmas offering. Ne now put all under the head of Special.

We are grateful to Bro. S. C. Hobby of Raleigh, N. C., for his liberal check.

For quite a number of years he has been sending a check to help us along. We have 2 vacant Sundays per month, 4th and 1st. Now if any school or church should desire the Supt. to come and tell them about the Orphanage and children and work etc., and then give him a liberal subscription confer with him and make a date. Now let children and friends join in for a full year's work for 1911. Give us a full Corner each week.

Yours for the work,
Uncle Jim.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Christmas has passed and is almost here again. I had a fine time. Santa visited me, and brought me several things.

I guess the cousins had a fine time too. We had a W. C. T. U. entertainment, in which they have 3 silver medals. Miss Dollie Spivey, Mr. Thomas Norfleet, and I received them, they were very pretty.

I had such a fine time Christmas I hated to start back to school, but after I got settled down and the snow came, and we had such jovial times skating and snow balling I forgot my Christmas good times.

Well as my letter is getting long, I will enclose five cents for the orphans.

Sincerely,
Hettie Davis.

Glad you were one of the winners Hettie. Glad you are interested in the W. C. T. U. work for one cannot be too zealous along this line.

Windsor, Va., Feb. 1st, 1911.
Dear Uncle Jim:

It has been a long time since I wrote to the corner. I went to school one day in October but the teacher said I was too young to go yet.

Glad you and the cousins had a good time Christmas we had a nice time. Sister Ruby came home to spend the holidays, and we were glad, so we four sisters were together again.

I think it is time to hear from William Staley Cheatham again. I love to hear mama read all the letters in our corner. I can hear little birdies sing every day now, I guess they feel spring is most here. We have blue violets and smilax in bloom and they are so sweet.

Find five cents to help.
Your little girl,

MARRIED.

Vanpelt-Liskey.

At the home of the bride on Jan. 26, 1911 I united in the holy bonds of wedlock, Mr. William H. Vanpelt and Miss Effie May Liskey.

These are popular young people of the community of New Hope Church. Both are active and useful members of the church there. After a brief visit to friends and relatives elsewhere they will make their home in the neighborhood there where the groom is a prosperous young farmer. They have a host of friends who wish them much happiness in their married life. May this union be blessed to God's glory.

DIED.

Hinton.

Deacon William Anderson Hinton, departed this life, after a lingering illness of several weeks, on January 26, 1911 at the age of 59 years, 9 months and 3 days. Deacon Hinton was a faithful member of Lebanon Christian Church, an excellent member of the Masonic fraternity, a good father, a loving husband, a neighborly citizen, and faithful friend. He will be greatly missed in the church and community because he was ever faithful to his trust and ready to sympathize with the distressed and help those in need. While he is gone to his reward, his life, influence and example will live after him to bless the church and community in which he lived.

Funeral services were conducted at the church and his remains were laid away to await the resurrection morn. Peace be to his ashes and may the comforting influence of the Christian religion console the bereaved ones until they shall meet again in the sweet by-and-by.

W. C. Wicker.

Hughes.

Daisy Inez Hughes, daughter of Robert and Laura Hughes, was born July 27, 1899 and died Feb. 5, 1911, aged 11 years, 6 months, and 8 days. Daisy was a good girl, a faithful member of Berea Sunday-school. She always had a smile and a kind word for all, and bore her affliction patiently. Daisy will be missed not only in the home, but in the Sunday-school and community. She has just gone on before to her reward. Funeral by the writer, conducted from Bethlehem church, Feb. 6, 1911. May the Lord by his Spirit comfort the hereaved ones.

and solid earth, or a rock, must be found or which to lay the foundation stones. Much depends on this part of the structure. Upon the foundation the weight of the entire building rests. And if the foundation be insecurely laid, the whole building will be unsafe. Many structures have fallen because the foundation was not broad and strong enough to support the weight of the building. Many are the lives that have been wrecked because of an improper beginning. If a building stands, the foundation must be properly laid. If a life is to be one of honor and usefulness the beginning must be right. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

But the foundation is not the whole building and if left alone serves no purpose. The super-structure must go up. In this also great care is necessary. It is not enough for the builder to have the plan—he must study what the plan calls for. Each corner of the house must be according to the square and plumb-line and every arch must be part of a circle. Work carelessly done lessens the value of a building. Habits carelessly formed will certainly mar a life. Anything that is worth doing is worth doing well. Work wisely done will stand long after a thing done in a slipshod manner has been forgotten. The life that counts for most is the one copied after Christ, our perfect plan.

Just as the house is not built for itself, but for service, so man is not to live for himself alone. If a house serves no purpose, it were better that house had never been built, for time, labor and money have been spent in vain. If one is not a blessing unto some one else, one lives in vain. The selfish life is a serviceless life,—empty, vacant, barren, useless. It is one's privilege, however, to live in a way so that one's life shall be a blessing unto others, each day doing some good. Christ has left us an example that we should follow in His steps.

C. E. TOPIC FOR FEB. 26—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Missions in the South—Isa. 55:1-13.

The Missionary Committee should lead. Have one member of the Committee lead the opening prayer, another read the Scripture, a third give the comment, a fourth announce the hymns, and the chairman make the leader's remarks.

The Leader:—The peculiar problems of the South—such problems as the world never seen before—call for statesmanship of a rare type in arriving at their solution. No other land has ever had such a problem as our negro problem, to mention only one of our problems. These negroes, only one generation removed from slavery, are making commendable progress, but they have a long way to go yet, and in their upward journey their Anglo-Saxon brothers must point the way. How to lead this inferior race to attain its best will require much thought, meditation, prayer, and consecrated effort. This does not call for social equality or manhood suffrage, but for industrial efficiency and spiritual devotion. We should strive to do our part in this uplift of a race.

Written Work:—Have essays or talks of not more than five minutes on, "Franklin Christian College;" "The Christian church in the South among the negroes;" "The mountain whites of the South;" "Prohibition and the Southern churches;" "The church and the Battle against disease in the South;" "Home Mission churches of the Southern Christian Convention;" "The Financing of our Home Mission Work."

Questions for Answer in the Meeting:

What is the great commission?

What is the greatest need of the South?

Who are our Southern Home Mission Pastors?

Whence comes the money to support our Home Mission enterprises?

What did our recent Southern Christian Convention do in regard to the Laymen's Missionary Movement?

What are our Sunday-schools doing for Home Missions?

What should our C. E. Societies undertake to do?

What is Franklin Christian College doing for the negroes of our Southern Church?

What is the negro's greatest need?

What elements must a comprehensive solution of the negro problem include? (To several.)

Who is the Southern negro's best friend?

Tell of the negro's progress during the past generation.

What are the peculiar problems of the Mountain whites of the South?

What means are being used for their solution?

How is Home Mission work affected by the Saloon?

How does disease affect Home Mission work in the South?

What can our Society definitely undertake in the way of Home Mission work? (To the President or the Pastor.)

For Next Week:—Ask each member to read the life of Moses as it is recorded in Exodus and from it select a favorable verse or truth for the consecration service.

A PECULIAR MEMORIAL.

The Lord's Supper is a memorial of His death. Its observance is to always be in memory of the sacrifice which He made in behalf of the redemption of sinful people. He suffered death for the sake of saving people from their spiritual death. He gave His life, that many might receive eternal life. No one could have such life without Christ's death. And when believers properly partake of the Supper they remember that truth. At each supper they have a fresh remembrance of the fact that their present life is owing to Christ's sacrifice of his life for them. They are not only to remember his death, as a fact, but also its relation to themselves. The memorial feast is a reminder of what Christians owe to Christ. They are to remember anew that they would not be Christians if Christ had not died for them; nor would they be Christians if they had not accepted the salvation which comes through that death. It is not befitting that unsaved people should partake of the memorial Supper. It is for only those who have accepted the Lord who died for sinners. Unsaved ones cannot commemorate a thing which they have refused to accept. It is true that Christ died for them, but they have not acknowledged the relation of that death to themselves, and hence they have not united themselves to Christ. The Supper is to keep its observers in renewed memory of the death which made possible their own deliverance from death, and the reception of life in its place. This memorial is distinctly different from all other memorials. The late Dr. H. E. Weston, of Crozer Theological Seminary, said: "As Christianity is unique, so are its ordinances. What human society, in any age, ever instituted a feast to commemorate the death of its founder? Then celebrate with festivity and rejoicing the birth of their heroes their accession to power, the date of discoveries by which they enrich the world. Sometimes, indeed, the death is observed, but always as an occasion of sorrow, oftentimes with wrath, never with gladness." But Christians observe the memorial of Christ's death with gladness and holy praise.

C. H. Wetherbe.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

Life is a gift from the hand of God. That is an old-fashioned philosophy, but no reasoning or argument of man has been able to supersede it. Life can have no meaning unless that be true. Driven as we are to seek a rational purpose and motive to our human existence, we find it, if we find it at all, there. We may have difficulty, staggering difficulty, in reconciling some of the facts of our life with our doctrine of it, but unless we hold to our doctrine the whole fabric of our life falls into meaningless confusion.

And if it gives meaning, does not this fact also give dignity and worth to our human life? If we would live the days and weeks and months of this new year in even a dim consciousness of this fact, would we not thereby lift up the actions and purposes and ideals of our life into a new and holier atmosphere? It might be that to the outward seeming our life would not greatly change; for, after all, it is probable that most of us are in the place in life that God would have us fill, and that the commonplace things that we are doing are in his plan for us. But there would come into our common days a new light and glory, just because those days were put in close relation to him. It is that light from the hills of God that alone can lighten and flood every way of life; it is only because man is God's child that anything he does or is may be worth while.

If we could live our life in the consciousness of these facts, it might be that life would have just that added something that often we have dimly longed and sighed for. Honest work faithfully done; the conscientious fulfillment of the common duties and obligations of life; unselfish planning and toil for those whose lives are linked to ours—we are so constituted that all these things give us very real satisfaction and pleasure, but we may have all these and still want something of God and the divine in our life, and until we get that want filled life will be sadly unsatisfactory and incomplete.

A wise man soon learns that the effort to avoid suffering and obtain happiness in life by aloofness, by refusing to mingle with the throng, to take our place in the marching and the fighting, the fearing and the suffering that seem the common lot of our common humanity, is of all possible efforts in life the most foolish and the most hopeless. The weariness of toil and struggle and conflict is soon seen to be as nothing compared with the ache that comes to the heart and life that shuts itself up to the numbing, chilling influences of selfishness and fear. But even the wise man oftentimes learns slowly that the best, the only true, life is that one in which everything stands in definite, clear, positive relation to God; that life in which, in everything that is thought and said and done, man looks up through the earthly and the commonplace clear into the face of God.—Christian Guardian.

THE NORTH DURING THE CIVIL WAR.

The present generation has an idea that while the Civil War was raging all other activities of the country were either suspended or greatly reduced. It imagines that what happened in the South must have taken place in the North to a greater or less extent. That this view is wholly erroneous is shown by Professor Emerson David Fite, of Yale University, in his Social and Industrial Conditions During the Civil War. This is an important contribution to the history of that period, and is almost unique. We have had any amount of military histories and biographies, but little concerning the ordinary events while the young men were away fighting. The fact is that the North made extraordinary strides in every direction while the war was in progress. Although, first and last, nearly two millions of men went from the North to the armed camps, it was only near the close that a million were actually in the field at any one time. Most of these young men enlisted when they were twenty-two years old or less, and the number of those more than twenty-seven was very small, relatively speaking. Thus, although many boys and young men were withdrawn from activities, the older ones remained, and conducted business and the farms on an elaborate scale. The harvests throughout the war were unusually good, and the foreign demand was heavy. The invention of mowers and reapers made the loss of younger men on the farms less notable. Manufacturing was stimulated by the war itself and by the heavy foreign trade.

Education also flourished, for many colleges were founded in this period, and the gifts were unusually heavy to those of older standing. On the whole, the chief trouble in the North seems to have been anxiety over the issue of the conflict, and grief for the dead, rather than for a loss of commercial and industrial activities. It is true that many soldiers left dependent families behind, but to a large extent these were cared for by friends; so that at the close of the conflict the North, with its new potentialities in all directions, was really stronger than ever before, while the South lay industrially, prostrate. The book is primarily for the student of economics, but it will be interesting to any one who wants to get a good historical perspective.—Book News.

ditions confronting the church—whether he unconsciously excuses his own inactivity by calling them 'problems,' or whether he assumes the militant attitude and recognizes the difficulties of opportunities. Paul was not blind to the difficulties which confronted him. 'A great door and effectual is opened unto me,' he declared, 'and there are many adversaries.' The adversaries only stimulated him to win greater victories. The pastor who holds so vital a relation to the coming of the kingdom must see three great opportunities, and avail himself of them.—Bates.

GOD THE ULTIMATE AUTHORITY.

Rev. Carlyle Summerbell, A. M.

Mark 1: 21-22: "And straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue and taught. And they were astonished at his teachings: for he taught them as having authority, and not as the scribes."

Men consciously or unconsciously are seeking authority, and endeavoring to conform themselves thereto. The progress of the race depends upon what it takes for its authority, and how much it lives up to that which it acknowledges to be just and true.

In the development of our beloved country, the beginnings of its life as a separate nation, had to do with the authority of our British cousins, to tax us without our leave or license. "No taxation without representation," was the sign of the conflict of the authority of the state across the water, with the authority of the individuals in the colonies. The basal difference was not the amount of the tax, so much as the rightful authority of its imposition. The right of the people as weighed with the right of the crown, was the old question of who had the higher authority, which was finally settled by the arbitration of arms.

And in our Civil War, slavery was only the immediate irritant, the question pre-eminently concerned States rights, the authority of the state to withdraw from the United States, or the authority of the people of all the states, to dictate to the people of one or more states. The phrase, "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union," proved itself true by the compulsory and barbaric way of ending a conflict which we call war, the science of barbarous argument, the authority of the sword.

Those of you who have been studying the Sunday school lessons for this quarter may remember that the beginnings of the divided kingdom was because a young and foolish king listened not to the voice of the old men who advised him to be a servant to the people, but hearkened to the voice of the young men, making his own authority superior to the authority of the people. "If thou wilt be a servant unto this people, * * * they will be thy servants," said the old men. Increase the authority of the king by increasing the burdens, said the young men.

In the history of our own times one can see this conflict of authority, and the cause or authority of the common people growing. Our fathers chose electors to elect the President of the United States, but this has practically been taken out of their hands, so that they simply transmit the vote of the people, just as some states now practically elect senators, allowing the members of the legislature to record the popular vote. This power of government is that it may change its very life, not by appealing to arms, and bloodshed, and destruction, but by the peaceful revolution of the ballot, and an appeal to the conscience of the individual. That is, our republican form of government responds readily to the desires and wishes of the individual voter, for in him ultimately rests its authority.

And this did not come suddenly since our country declared its independence and became a nation among the nations of the world, but only at the end of a long and strenuous struggle mankind has made. Being the heirs of the ages, we inherit our wealth of sociological knowledge from the preceding generations, and our formulas of living are worked out for us, so that we need but to apply ourselves and enter into the kingdom prepared for us from the foundations of the world.

Not only in the government but in the world of art, one can see how much what men consider to be authoritative transforms and changes aesthetics: the authority of the beautiful had its own peaceful revolutions and its own established laws. The Greeks developed the beautiful for itself alone, and the stately columns, smooth and flowing lines, have an authority all of their own, probably the highest at least for the present of that style of architecture, with the pointed columns and arches, the suggestion of mystery and the aspiration of man to higher things than the present earth, and these all had an authority of their own, their own excuse for being. The authority of the Greek and the authority of the Goth both appeal to him who would seek the highest and best architecture.

Man is always seeking the authority of what may be called natural laws. Why the apple fell down to the earth instead of away from it, may have suggested to Newton the law of gravitation, but the law of gravitation was in existence long before Newton was heard of, and did not depend upon his discovery in order to work. Natural things are under the authority of natural laws. Gravitation has no control over your thoughts, but it does have an influence over the earthen vessel that contains the thoughts. It is fixed, immutable, beneficent, as are all the laws of God.

Now our understanding of natural laws changes, we explore more and more into the realm of the unknown, but the laws themselves do not change with our understanding of them, but we ourselves must change in order to understand them. Such is the march of humanity; by service we become kings, and by coming under authority, we ourselves become authority.

In the development of religion and theological truths, man ever keeps pace with the truth and the religion he acquires, his progress being ever from the lower to the higher. Paul in writing to the Corinthians says: "The first man is of the earth earthy: the second man is of heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

The great Teacher said, "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Bearing the image of the heavenly you are a part of the kingdom, and God reigns in you.

And Paul writes to the Corinthians, 2:4-7: "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves." And then he goes on in that psalm of victory describing the endless conflict between the lower and higher:

"We are pressed on every side, yet not straightened; perplexed, yet not unto despair; pursued, yet not forsaken; smitten down, yet not destroyed."

Surely this is an epitome of the history of mankind upon the earth. He is pressed on every side, he is pursued, he is smitten down, but some power, call it what you please, keeps him from despair, and does not forsake him, nor leave him. And with a hope that ennobles and faith that makes divine, he calls the power, "That which was, and is, and is to come," "The Lord of Hosts, the King of Glory," and last and most precious of all "Our Heavenly Father."

COVETOUSNESS.

(Take heed, and beware of covetousness.—Luke, 12:15 Golden text for Sunday Feb. 26.)

No wonder the Bible gives that injunction. It could not do otherwise and be complete. To have left this out would have meant a great lack so far as human virtues and vices are concerned.

It is doubtful is any single sin or vice has led to more desperate and deadly wickedness, tragedy and crime than this of covetousness—the great desire to possess that which belongs to another. The Sunday-school lesson today carries one of its horrible crimes. Here was a king, shrewd, rich, powerful. He had broad possessions, unlimited lands, magnificent estates, an ivory palace. Riches and luxury and splendor surrounded him. But here is a single field possessed, as a legacy, by a sturdy farmer, a good citizen. Strange that the king could not be contented with all his broad possessions. But all of these availed him nothing as long as there was adjoining him a piece of land that his covetous heart desired.

So much did this king want this piece of land that he would not even eat.

How strange we weak mortals are. We forget what we have in a mad desire to get what we have not. Naboth's vineyard seemed more attractive, more inviting, more desirable to Ahab than all the vast belongings that Ahab already possessed.

This is not infrequently the case. A poor man has that which rightfully belongs to him. A rich man begins to desire it. Now this poor man's meager possession looms up larger to the rich man than all the rich man's belongings beside. And the rich man is miserable, with all his belongings, till he has bought out, driven out, or crushed out that poor man.

There is no sort of dishonesty, duplicity or deceit a man will not resort to, that men in all time have resorted to, in order to carry out a covetous desire, once that desire has possessed one. A thousand criminals are in our prisons today, and a thousand others deserve to be there from crimes committed because of a covetous heart, desire, disposition. One would better live in poverty the rest of one's days than to develop in one's heart, or allow to grow there, the desire to covet.

The most of this world's misery and unhappiness come from a desire to possess that which does not rightfully belong to us, to get that which is another's and should be another's. If we will think over what we have, and reckon our blessings and benefits, we may remain fairly contented and happy. But when one begins to brood over what one hasn't pine over possessions that belong to another, enlarge upon another's and discredit one's own, there is unhappiness, and there is danger a head. It is right for one to desire, to toil and to purchase honestly and honorably. But to desire with lust and longing that which rightfully belongs to another and that which another has a right to and does not desire to part with, that is wrong, evil, wicked—and leads to ruin. Thou shalt not covet.

A SUBLIME SENTIMENT.

Pity indeed it is that our Christian churches cannot act as well as enact, accomplish as well as adopt, and solve as well as resolve. We are long on resolutions, beautiful plans, noble sentiments.

Some of the sublimest sentiments we have heard anywhere we caught at our Conferences and Conventions. One of them is before us now. It was born of a high and holy impulse, and the mind that conceived it was charged with heavenly energy at the time. It is a Missionary Manifesto. On October 25, 1910 the American Convention at Troy, Ohio, adopted it. Read it line for line, word for word and catch a vision of what our churches have before them: it is a noble, a sublime sentiment.

“Filled with a profound sense of the goodness of Almighty God to us severally and collectively, and possessed by a profound sense of our responsibility to God and man on account of His multiplied blessings and abounding grace in Jesus Christ our Lord, we, the members of the American Christian Convention, representatives of the Christian denomination gathered in quadrennial session at Troy, Ohio, humbly and reverently acknowledge His goodness and cheerfully shoulder our responsibilities. We unequivocally declare our undying loyalty to Jesus Christ our Lord and His teachings, believing Him and them a sufficient power in the hearts and minds of devoted Christian disciples to transform the world. We emphatically assert our belief in the world-wide mission of Christianity, and in the world-embracing missionary enterprise, declaring our determination to bear an honorable part in both, and in the burning zeal of four fathers for gospel proclamation, to continue which we dedicate ourselves.

And we severally and individually challenge every brother and sister in our whole denomination to emulate the zeal of the Apostles and early heralds of the Cross, and untiring missionaries of all Christian centuries, and our fathers of the nineteenth century, in proclaiming the Gospel and winning men and women to Christ; we challenge them to regard their possessions and their own lives as a stewardship from God to be sacredly used for Christian ends; to adopt in public worship and in private life systematic and proportionate giving for all legitimate church and benevolent work, including Home and Foreign Missions. We furthermore challenge our brethren to repeat again this manifesto and challenge until it shall be burned into every bearer's mind and shall reach the remotest member of the most sequestered church in the whole brotherhood.

All this we do with the full determination to make every declaration and summons foregoing effective in our own lives, and with all our brethren to fulfill the Lord's will, to the intent that the whole world may come under the loving sway of God and His Anointed One.”

We submit that the sentiment there is noble, sublime, and tastes of heaven.

What are we going to do with this manifesto, this challenge, brethren? It is before us, adopted, resolved, enacted. Shall we, or shall we not, make it effectual in our lives, in our churches, in our giving?

It is certainly a sentiment worth while, and worthy of acting upon, living up to. God help us of the Christian Church to wake up as touching this very vital question of giving for Missions. We are not awake. We are only dreaming. The day dawns, and the hour of arising has come. Oh! my brethren, shall these noble sentiments we love so much to hear die in the hearing, and pass with the echo? God forbid.

THE FAITHFUL SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

For our part we take very little stock in what many know-alls get off about the slow, dull, indifferent, Sunday-school superintendent. We do not know a class of people any where who work with more concern and diligence, the year around, for the advancement of Christ's kingdom, without any reward, than do these superintendents. In this issue of The Sun one is told of whose school has run nine years, with the exception of a very few Sundays, and he missed only two Sundays out of all that long period. Think what that means. For these nine years that Superintendent has made it his thought and deep care, Sunday after Sunday, cold weather and warm, when feeling good or indisposed, to leave his home at an appointed hour and go to the place of his school. He has never been paid a penny; he has never expected a penny for

CHARLES UNDERWOOD BUTLER.

Greensboro.

We are pleased to present to Sun readers the face of Charles Underwood Butler, a man who is winning hundreds to Christ and the better life with his marvelous power in song. One of the most noted evangelistic singers in the United States. The following from Pastor L. E. Smith of our Greensboro church explains:

We have been most fortunate in securing the services of the noted singers Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood Butler. Mr. Butler is all evangelical singer of national reputation, having sung for Dr. A. Torrey, Rev. Billie Sunday and others. Alexander dubbed him "The man with an orange blossom in his voice." Mrs. Butler is one of the star singers in the Christian Church choir, Springfield, Ill. The meetings begins Feb. 23 and lasts through March 5. We are hoping, praying for and expecting, a gracious revival and a wonderful ingathering of souls. This is one of the greatest undertakings, of this nature, ever assumed by any one church of Greensboro. And we trust that we may have the earnest prayers of every one whom the Sun reaches for the success of this undertaking. E —According to the Bureau of Agriculture, the average price of horses Jan. 1, 1911 was $111.67 and of mules $125.62; the average on Jan. 1, 1910 was, for horses, $108.19, for mules $119.84; on Jan. 1, 1909 the average price of horses was $95.64, of mules $107.84. And they still keep going higher.

his service. He simply did his work for Jesus' sake. He knew there was no glory in it; no worldly honor; no preferment. He did his work as best he could, and in all this world he expects no reward.

We submit that this kind of a man is worth somewhat, and is not to be discounted when it comes to a reckoning of real men and their influence whom you have known.

Often these men have had little to encourage them. They go to their schools whether the teachers come or not. Maybe at the opening of school half the teachers are absent, and teachers must be secured. Maybe the secretary is absent and a record must be made. Maybe the chorister is absent and songs must be led, the organist is away and some one must play. The superintendent has such problems to face almost every Sunday. No wonder discouragement overwhelms him some times; but he keeps on keeping on.

These superintendents may not know all there is in the books. Many of them may not have time to prepare the lessons well. They are not the most learned, nor the most cultured. Still they know the work is to be done. And they undertake it because they see it to be their duty, and because they want to do God's will and their work. I reckon them among the bravest, best, truest men I know. I wish a word in the Sun might encourage them; for they deserve it. God guides them and their faces is firmly fixed on their duty—and on Heaven. They are fighting a good fight. God bless all our faithful Sunday-school superintendents. This world will never compensate them for the great work they have done. Heaven alone will do that.

A CERTAINLY.

Thus muses the esteemed Virginian-Pilot of Norfolk: "The will of a New York man is apologetic in tone because the testator could not have more for the benefit of his heirs. Even at that, it is a safe bet that he did not take anything with him." Need not bet anything about it, contemporary. That is fixed. "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." And if it were not fixed in holy writ it would be determined in reason. For if prepared to go, all the wealth of this world would be poverty in comparison with what we shall possess beyond the grave. If not prepared, property and possessions could avail nothing where the fire is not quenched and the worm dieth not. No, we need have no betting about that. It is irrevocably and eternally fixed, fixed, neighbor, fixed.

Instinctively at his best man is even searching and seeking for the will of God, feeling that his will is the final authority, and his paths, the ways of peace. Where then can we find the word of God? When will he speak to our hearts? How can we know him when we see him? Are his representatives upon earth? It is the despair and hope of mankind; the plaintive cry of humanity is the quest for the Absolute.

Our Roman Catholic brethren tell us that the church is the representative authority of God upon the earth, that when Jesus Christ, who was God incarnate, went away, he gave the keys and authority to Peter who was the first head of the church, the first Pope, and it was passed on, so that there has been an unbroken line from that day to this. The church therefore should be heard, and when the Pope speaks from the chair of Peter, his message is infallible, for it is the truth of God and has his authority.

But when we apply our reason to this theory and study the New Testament history, we see that Peter was very human, in many ways. Paul withstood him to his face, and while he was a great force for the propagation of Christianity, he was also subject to the mistakes and errors and shortcomings of common humanity. And the character of Peter has been largely the character of the church. Its popes have always been men, its councils often governed by politicians, its development retarded by its ignorance and arrogance. In fact it is a human institution, because built by men and women who are fallible. Does it have the authority of God? The question cannot be answered by Yes or No. It must be answered by Yes and No. It possesses both truth and error. The truth is always authority, and so far as it conforms to that truth and lives in it, it is worthy of our honor and our homage. But it containing error, has this error crop out. One pope says one thing, another pope says the opposite, then which pope has the whole truth? The Roman church like every human institution makes its mistakes, the most glaring of which, is probably the inquisition. May God grant that the Latin church, for its own sake, and the sake of the world, may never have its authority supreme in the state, for its authority and the authority of God are not the same.

Where then shall we find the authority of God? Many of our Protestant ancestors believed it could be found in the Bible, and there alone. The Bible, they confidently affirm, is the word of God. He has there left his will and his message to the world. The word of God is the Bible and the Bible is the word of God. Now when we apply reason to this proposition, we cannot make a sweeping affirmative or a sweeping negative, but must also say "Yes and No." The Bible is full of glorious truths of the higher, the heavenly life. In no book will you find such great authority of God as the Bible. The highest aspirations of a people who developed in monotheism, until they produced Jesus, the Savior, are here recorded by many authors, and the gleanings of a thousand years, shine with all their beauty upon the seacher for truth who reads the Bible. But in this thousand years, the men changed, and their appreciation of truth changed, and the emphasis changed, and greater and more thorough truths were taught toward the end than at the beginnings. But the precious truths were enfolded in earthen vessels. And in modern times when men began to recognize that part of this wonderful structure, was of the earth, earthly, this too often caused them to deny or ignore the heavenly part. "All or None" has been the cry of the theologian as well as the scientist. It is the philosophy of a fool, when it is applied to the Bible. It sets credulity above faith, or develops iconoclasts, who when they destroy idols, have nothing to give in return. There are parts of the Bible that transport us to the holy of holies of the sincere souls, there are other parts which describe the latest styles of ecclesiastical clothes made and worn by the priest Aaron and his sons. Some of the Psalms are apples of gold in pictures of silver, others portray a vengeful spirit and plead for the horrible death of the children of enemies. As a great library it contains the smug pessimism of the cultured writer of the book of Ecclesiastes, but it also embraces sermons of Jesus, the greatest poems ever written.

And as we come to the greatest revelation of God, found in the Son of man, we find here the voice nearest the Absolute, the grace of whose life and the charm of whose thoughts yet entrance us as when he entered the synagogue in old Capernaum and astonished the people by his teachings, for he taught as having authority and not as the scribes. This ever the difference between the priestly and the prophetic function. The priest teaches with the authority of the church, as the scribes with the authority of the sacred writings, but Jesus taught with the authority of one who knows truth at first hand.

With the birth of Jesus came the beginnings of a new heaven and a new earth, the prince of peace had arrived, and henceforth a new light shone in the hearts of the children of men.

It is true he set aside, directly or indirectly, the needless accessories of the ancient law, but he gave great ideas in their places, and made the appeal, not to the pride of the race, but to the innate ideas of justice and kindness which God plants in the human hearts. He insisted that his fellow Jews should make his Father's house a house of prayer, and not a den of thieves, and it commended itself to the people. His was the voice of authority, because it was the voice of truth.

He suggested by his work and word that the Sabbath was for mankind, and not mankind for the Sabbath, and yet we think his thoughts and hear his words, because they were authoritative. It appeals to our reason as well as our feelings, this grander, braver view of life.

He preached the gospel, yes, and lived it, that it is more blessed to give than to receive. And men looked upon him and said, Truly a God has come down to us, and the Creator has become the creature.

It was because of his nearness to the divine mind, and his closeness to his Father, that the glory of God shone in the face of Jesus the Anointed. He was blessed by a humble mother, who pondered many things in her heart, he received the education of the greatest religious race in the history of the world, and his certificate of ministry came from the tears of a woman of the town, and his anointing from a transformed life. This was his authority, the fact of his success with men, this was his coat of arms, Service to others.

Do we have here the last and ultimate authority of all religion? Is this indeed the Great God of All?

Suppose we assume for the moment that that final authority is in Jesus, that the words of the New Testament are the actual words, and turning to John, which breathes so much of spirituality that it is especially dear to all who have the gentle spirit of his life, we read:

"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father * * * * Believeth thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not from myself: but the Father abiding in me doeth his works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake. Verily, verily I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also: greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father."

And again, "If ye loved me, ye would have rejoiced, because I go unto the Father: for the Father is greater than I."

Is there not back of these, to us, familiar words the underlying thought that the Father is greater than the Son, that the Creator is more than the creature, that the Absolute is not the Christ, but the Christ is the revelation of the Absolute?

The supreme authority then is found according to the philosophy of the teachings of the Master, in a Father, who in heaven, is yet upon earth here and now. Not in the past, but in the living, and in this near and living God, Jesus lived and died, and somehow this belief and work brought him nearer to us and nearer to God.

May I suggest that this personal relationship to the source of Authority, may not be so far away from the truth which Spencer felt, as expressed in his familiar words,

"But one truth must grow ever clearer --the truth that there is an Inscrutable Existence everywhere manifested, to which he can neither find or conceive either beginning or end. Amid the mysteries which become the more mysterious the more they are thought about, there will remain the one absolute certainty, that he is even in presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed."

It would not be a scientific heresy, which of course is quickly attacked by all orthodox scientists, I would like to say that in the foregoing statement, Mr. Spencer shows himself to be a High Priest of science, but only priest, not a prophet. That is, he is a student of the laws of the universe, he reverences these laws of the universe, he reverences these laws, he tabulates as a clerk, he studies as a pupil, he synthesizes, and then says, that he is in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy. But he can not appreciate anything further than the energy which he says is Infinite and Eternal. This energy produced a Spencer, a Shakespeare, a Christ, and it is urging mankind upward and onward, not by brute force, but in a way, that without destroying man's free will, accomplishes its own ends. What a wonderful energy!

Would it not seem reasonable to believe that this Infinite and Eternal Energy, which acts so that results are on the whole beneficent to mankind, is a personality, whose laws which the scientist study, reveal the will? of what we call the "Supreme Being?" Our human notions may be, as Mr. Spencer says, "irrelevant to the Supreme Reality." So may also our present hypothesis of the qualities of matter. But if these are the best working hypothesis, why not use them until we can have something better?

The need of our modern life is to get nearer the source of authority and have some authority of our own, when we preach our gospel. We need to discover more of God, quicken our minds, enlarge our hearts, consider God the cause, not a single group of phenomena but of all phenomena and the relations thereto. We are sadly in need of coming in direct touch with the Ultimate Reality. The men who did so, gave us our religion, and with this borrowed source of power, and second hand theology, we have been doing good, but in this transmission of power friction uses much of the energy, so that our last efforts are a polite optimism that smiles through our tears.

When the old prophet said, "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God," have we moderns gone beyond that today? When Peter said, "Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to him," has our study of comparative religion gone much beyond that? When Jesus gave the name of Father to Jehovah, have we gone an inch beyond that concept today?

Let us make use of the church, the Bible the great Christ spirit, but let us also go beyond these authorities, to the authority for them all, God.

First the natural, then the spiritual. Our age has developed the natural to a marvelous extent, is it not time to pay serious attention to the spiritual? We are in dead earnest in business, men sacrifice themselves constantly on this altar, but our religion seems a luxury and superfluity rather than our life.

The orthodox small efforts seem like jokes about heaven and hell, the liberal admires himself in the glass, and loses sight of his debt to all men. Whereas if either were thoroughly awake, greater things would be done for mankind.

The greatest privilege God gives us in this life, is to know Him. And somehow we are missing it. The books of an author may be delightful and interesting, charming our imagination, and lifting our spirits to the stars of hope and aspiration. Yet to know the author who produced the book is more, because the author's best is not in the book but in himself. So, to know this book of the Universe is wonderful, to scan the pages of the earth, where they lie at our feet, page upon page, and line over line, to take a peep at the heavens through the telescope, to consider the lilies of the field, and the life in the deep sea, to judge man, and his history, would be enough for us, if we were only astronomers or scientists, or historians, but we are more than that we are men, and we will never be satisfied, or happy, or content, until we shall know the author of this wonderful book, which for a better name we call "The Universe." And when we see this author we will find the authority, the unknowable becoming known, the Ultimate Reality becoming real to us.

As a little child develops in this life, by being a child and guided by the superior authority which it cannot understand but learns to appreciate, so we, becoming as little children in the kingdom of God, will become capable of exercising and being authority, by the same sweet humility and teachableness of the child. And gradually the veil shall be lifted from our eyes, and we shall no longer see through a glass darkly.

CHRISTIAN CONDUCT.

I believe a true Christian will greet another with a smile and pleasantness. It does not make any difference what church we belong to, if we are a true Christian we will love one another.

I thank God for His love towards us. He loves us with an everlasting love.

He said he would be with us forever.

We ought to come to gether as bands of brethren and sisters in Christ Jesus.

Let us think of the home that God has prepared for us, a place of rest for all who love and serve Him.

We read in Revelation 21:4. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain for the former things are passed away."

How sweet this scripture is to a pure Christian to think that God will wipe away the tears from their eyes.

When I hear the old song, "How firm a foundation," I feel that if we shall build on the sure foundation I am sure we will never fall. Jesus is our foundation and we can have no other and be safe. We should strive daily to build on Him, trust Him as our refuge and our stay.

TEACHER TRAINING BOOK. II.

I have read with interest the Manual of Training of the Sunday-school Teacher, Part II prepared under the editorship of Prof. Harper. Its scope is indicated by its title, and offers a well selected and well wrought out body of counsel in the practical work of teaching and training methods, as well as a compound of information on matters biblical, historical and archaeological, which are important to the teacher, and which he will find it difficult to secure elsewhere in as compact a form. The very moderate price of the book puts it within the reach of the average teacher in all our schools, and it will aid the progressive superintendent who sees to it that his teachers are supplied with the work and that they work in mastering its contents.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—In international marriages (so called) did you ever hear of one in which the bride was a rich foreigner? Or, in which the bride, though American, was aught else than rich, and an heiress? On the other hand the millions that go abroad each year for foreign titles (and later for divorce proceedings), if computed would be astounding.

—The following is from the Christian Endeavor World of Boston and is about our late lamented and venerable brother Coe. "One of the famous men of the American Christian Convention, Rev. Isaac H. Coe, died in New Bedford, Mass., on January 18, at the age of 92. He was an active politician, and had held many public offices, and was also president of the denominational convention for twelve years."

—Parenthood carries its anxieties all through life, and the older the parent the deeper becomes the solicitude. A New Jersey father celebrated his one hundred and first birthday recently, and when congratulated on his long life and good health, said that the only thing that troubled him was the poor health of his seventy-six year old son. But, without anxiety and solicitude comes little happiness in this life.

—Possibly the most observed and closely scrutinized women in the United States are those three who are members of Colorado legislature.

A distinguished physician who has been studying the situation for years, and collected sufficient data, says that in a family of "an only child" only one in eight is thoroughly healthy. Whereas in those of large families two out of three are healthy. He attributes the poor health of "the only child in the family" to overmuch petting and pampering and solicitude.

—Bro. C. A. Hines of Greensboro is certainly getting at the heart of the matter on church finances in the excellent papers now appearing in The Sun under "The Financial Side of the King's Business." One pastor says the pity of it all is that those who read these articles most are the ones who will not take The Sun, their church paper. This pastor thinks the articles ought to be put in pamphlet form and distributed broadcast. They are certainly readable articles on vital topics.

—Mrs. William Hodges Mann, wife of Governor Mann of Virginia has been speaking out in meeting to the delight of the temperance folks of the Old Dominion. A dispatch from Richmond thus quotes her who is to hold sway in the Executive Mansion for at least three years yet. "As long as I am in the Executive Mansion there shall be no intoxicants. My entertainments are fully as well enjoyed without them as when they were served during former administrations. People who visit my home will not touch the wine cup."

—Consumptives in Syria are treated much like lepers were 2,000 years ago. If a member of a family is known to have the disease he is cast out and compelled to die of exposure and want. It is a recent disease among Arabs and Syrians and the natives have great terror and dread of it. Christianity makes life more tolerable for the diseased and dying as well as for the whole and healthy.

—Rev. H. H. Butler, Suffolk, Va., writes "I have read with much pleasure and profit the book gotten up by W. E. McCleny on The Life and Labors of Rev. James O'Kelly. This is a true history of the Christian Church, South; and I take pleasure in commending it to our people. I hope that it may find its way into every home (in our church)." If any Sun reader wishes a copy of this book now being profitably read in so many Christian homes and so highly commended on all sides, send us $1.50 and the book will be mailed at once. We do not believe any lover of facts and fair play will ever regret his money.

—Rev. W. T. Walters, from Winchester, Va., Feb. 13, writes: "We placed the order for the furnishings and windows of our church building yesterday." Bro. Walters is very hopeful of the work at Winchester and the new building is nearing completion. Bro. Walters, following the example of Bro. Elder at Columbus, and of other successful builders is waiting to complete his house before he perfects an organization of his forces, and like Bro. Elder, Bro. Walters may be depended upon to do the wise and the successful thing.

—We learn with deep regret that Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre, Elkton, Va., whose declining health had compelled him to give up some of his work, suffered a stroke of paralysis Feb. 7th. Bro. Dofflemyre has been a faithful servant and a good soldier in a great cause.

—We have at hand a copy of "The Sendai (Japan) Christian Orphanage, a neat booklet with many illuminating views, sent out from Sendai Japan telling of the Christian Orphanage of that place. This orphanage, quite a large one, with a superintendent and seventeen assistants, cares for about 200 children. In this instance the name does not indicate a denomination, but a number of denominations working together for the support of this Christian Orphanage. The superintendent is of the Methodist Episcopal church, the treasurer is Rev. C. P.

Gauman of our American Christian Convention, the chairman of the board of trustees is of the Reformed Church of America, and on the board of trustees is a member from each of the evangelical denominations in this country, Baptist, Reformed, Presbyterian, Church of Christ, Episcopal, and so on. Which signifies that the denominations are working together to support that which is rightly called The Sendai Christian Orphanage.

—The following is of deep interest and significance to all who are following the Sunday-school lesson now; "there is reported from Berlin an archaeological discovery of prime importance for all Bible students and Christians. Professor Reissner, who has been making excavations on the site of the ancient city of Samaria, has discovered one hundred clay tablets covered with inscriptions. These tablets are believed to be a part of the archives of King Ahab, the contemporary of Elijah, about whom we are studying in the current Sunday-school lessons. The inscriptions are not cut into the clay tablets, but are written in old Hebrew characters with the intensely black ink found on the Egyptian papyri between one thousand and two thousand years before Christ. One of them is a letter to Ahab from the King of Assyria, probably either Assurbanipal or his son, Shalmaneser II. Another tablet contains a detailed inventory of the furniture in the royal palace. Undoubtedly this find is the most remarkable ever made in Palestinian excavation."

—Our friend D. R. Fonville who graduated from Elon College a few years since, and the University of Virginia Law School later is practicing law and making a name for himself in Charlotte. Our "De Roy" visited Wake Forest college recently to make an address before the Y. M. C. A. there and the papers next morning contained the following:

"The young men of the Y. M. C. A. were fortunate in having with them D. R. Fonville, a prominent lawyer of Charlotte, N. C., who delivered one of the most scholarly and most common sense addresses that has been presented before that organization. Mr. Fonville's subject was "The College Man and the Bible." He emphasized a systematic study of the Bible. He said that men do not go to college to learn how to make money or to lord it over their fellow men, if so they should not be there or anywhere else; but they go to college to fit themselves for better living. "The supreme purpose is to live a life."

"He enumerated some of the world's greatest men—notably among whom are Shakespeare, Milton, Dante, Wordsworth and Tennyson, whose achievements and literary attainments were attributed directly to the Bible. He said that 65,000 students in the Y. M. C. A. work are to-day studying the Bible, and asked if it looked as though it had spent all its force and was ready to be placed upon the shelf to accumulate the dust of time. "It is not unmanly to study the Bible, as some young fellows, just beginning to test their manhood, would have one believe, but on the other hand it is the most manly thing a young man can engage in."

—It would seem that Rev. J. D. McAlister, Sec. of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia has been talking straight from the shoulder to his friends across the line, and judging from the amount of liquor that is reported to be coming into this State from Virginia there is room for talk. One day last week The Virginian—Pilot in its Berkley correspondence had this: "Rev. J. D. McAlister, secretary of the Virginia Anti-Saloon League, last night at Main Street Christian church charged the church members of the State with being responsible for the sale of intoxicants in the State, and until they change their minds, he said, licensed saloons will continue. He said these people will stand around a pauperized home, brought so on account of strong drink, and spend their last cent to help them; they will rush to the home of the orphans whose mother and father have been slain as the result of a fevered and crazed brain on account of strong drink and weep their eyes out, and yet either vote a wet ticket or fail to qualify themselves with the right of citizenship and not vote at all.

"These are the conditions with which we as the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia have to deal," he said, "and not the white apron man behind the counter or the men who drink."

"You may wear your eyes out and spend the balance of your days in service, but unless you vote right and send men to your legislative halls as North Carolina and eight other States of the Union have done, you will not correct these conditions that exist."

He declared that he was quite sure that the Anti-Saloon League in its annual session at Newport News this year would declare for State-wide prohibition.

—Lacy Shepherd a bright and lovable lad of thirteen years, a boy much esteemed in our village, and in our public school, had his left leg crushed off by a shifting freight train Sunday night last, from the effects of which he died at St. Leo's hospital, Greensboro, about 5 o'clock Monday, A. M. Lacy professed faith in Christ and united with the Elon College Christian Church during the revival here some three weeks ago. He was a faithful attendant at Sunday school and Christian Endeavor services. He was the eldest son of Robert Shepherd and wife of Elon College who with two younger brothers grieve sorely that this great sorrow has befallen them. May God comfort them and all who mourn. The funeral was at Friedon's Lutheran Church in Guilford County, four miles distant from Elon Tuesday Feb. 21. Six school mates acted as pall-bearers and many from school and village attended the sad services. The floral offerings from his school mates and friends were beautiful

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

Rev. B. F. Young filled his appointment at North Highlands the first Sunday and, we learn, had a good day. The conditions at this point seem more favorable, from several view points, than for sometime. The Sunday-school is holding up well under the superintendency of Bro. W. T. Beggs. The prayer-meetings, while not largely attended, are very inspiring and helpful. Cottage prayer-meetings are being held in the community in which the church is located and good results are being accomplished in this way. The fact is, such meetings always are blessed and many lives are brought into closer touch with the church by an occasional service of prayer at the family fireside. An hour spent in this way is a wise, safe and profitable investment of time.

Rev. J. H. Milam reports a profitable day with his people in Girard last Sunday. While the weather was very inclement, the congregations were good and two helpful services were enjoyed. This church contemplates a series of meetings next month. The pastor will do the preaching.

We have recently added nine members to our church roll at Rose Hill the majority of whom were received by letter, the remainder by reclamation and on profession of faith. The coming of these is great encouragement to our hearts. Their presence and labors will aid us no little in the work.

Encouraging reports from various fields in our two conferences here in the "Far South," are heard from time to time. While the work is not what we would like and what we hope to make it, there is cause for good cheer and we feel gratified to know that progress is being made. We haven't gone forward by leaps and bounds, but a steady, gradual growth has attended the earnest endeavors put forth by the men of God who have stood by the cause of the Christian Church in Ga. and Ala in the face of hardship and bitter opposition. Some of the men who have suffered for the sake of our church here, are still in the fight, and the smoke of battle yet rolls above their heads. And, for one, this humble writer is glad to be numbered among the men who are laboring and sacrificing for a noble cause and for a God-given work. Indeed it is a sacrifice on the part of the ministry, but this sacrifice will truly be rewarded, nay, is already being rewarded.

Look at the following facts. They may be of interest to you. Twelve years ago we had only twenty-one churches, with a membership of 1605, and church property valued at $6,950. At that time we had only one conference. Now there are two, in which there are thirty-four churches, with a total membership of 2305, and church property worth $34,700. These figures indicate the fact that our growth has not been phenomenal. At the same time they evidence a growth of which we are proud. But the figures given do not tell the whole story. There is an increase of intelligence and a dignity of leadership that figures cannot show. A better day dawns upon us. The morning light appears. In His strength let us go forth to do a good day's work for God.

G. O. Lankford.

From Alabama.

Saturday before the third Sunday in January we met our people at Corinth. We held a good service on Saturday and received two good members by letter. Sunday was indeed a good day with us. We have an evergreen Sunday-school under the leadership of that faithful Superintendent, Brother J. C. Harris. They have held school every Sunday for nine years, with the exception of about six or seven Sundays, and he had failed to be there only two Sundays during that time. He says that he is always anxious for the time to come to meet his school every Sunday. Faithfulness means much for the church. Every church in my charge has a good Sunday-school but not all like this and in every respect. The fourth Sunday and Saturday before we met our people at Rock Stand. Here we held two good services. We have a good faithful membership here, with a good live Sunday-school, under the leadership of Brother H. O. Wallace who is faithful to his church and school. The S. day-school at this place is older than the church.

On last Saturday and Sunday we met with our people at Forest Home. Our congregations were small on both days on account of much sickness in the community; but we held two good services here. We have a good Sunday-school under the leadership of Brother T. J. Smith.

Next Saturday and Sunday are our meeting days at Pleasant Grove, and we are hoping for a good time here.

Brethren pray for us. J. D. Dallas.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE MASTER'S BUSINESS.

By Charles A. Hines.

Article IV. Our Financial Showing.

The Southern Christian Convention is composed of seven conferences, 176 churches and a total membership of 20,445. The total value of church property, as reported in 1910 to the several conferences, is $426,000. If our college and orphanage be included it will bring the total up to about $600,000. These churches gave last year for all purposes, $71,000, of which amount $69,000 was for home enterprises and less than $2,000 for foreign missions.

While our church membership is 20,445 in the South, it may be said that our church serves about 50,000 people. Statistics show that less than 40 per cent of our population are church members. Taking this as a basis, we might think of the congregations of our 176 churches as a body of people greater than the population of Nansemond County, Virginia, or Alamance County, North Carolina, and nearly equal to the population of the big county of Guilford, with its two cities of Greensboro and High Point. The wealth of the members of these 176 churches is probably not far from $25,000,000; the total wealth of all the people our churches serve $50,000,000. The income of the 20,000 communicants is more than $4,000,000 annually; the earnings of the 50,000 our church reaches in the South are probably $7,500,000.

Most of the contributions to the Church come from the members, and in this article we will consider only the income and ability to give of our 20,445 members. The suggestion that we have the opportunity of doubling our membership from among people already attending our churches is worth serious thought, and to the attainment of that end we should work earnestly.

Some of the money that was given for purposes was probably not reported to the conferences, so let's say that our 20,445 members gave in all a little more than $80,000 for church purposes—or $4.00 a member. A member's $4 was distributed about as follows:

For pastor's salary,	$2.00
New churches and repairs,	1.00
Sunday-school,20
Home Missions,17
Colleges, education, etc.,19
Miscellaneous,25
Foreign Missions,09

It will be seen from the foregoing that out of every $4.00 we raise in the churches we spend $3.91 in the United States—upon ourselves—and use .09 to send the gospel to the heathen.

There is no American coin small enough to represent either the weekly or monthly offering of our members to foreign missions. One-sixth of a cent a week; three-fourths of a cent a month—this is what we are giving for the evangelization of the world; this is our response to the Biblical injunction of "Go ye into all the world."

I have estimated the annual income of our membership at $4,000,000. This is to doubt very, very low; but suppose all of our members gave one-tenth of that (the tithe). The net sum for church purposes would be $400,000 annually, or just five times what it is now. What if we gave just half of this one-tenth, or $200,000? This would give $120,000 annually more than we raise now. I would say take $20,000 annually to train men and $100,000 to send them to the foreign field. Or, if we chose, we could continue to spend most of the money upon ourselves.

To raise $200,000 annually there must be average contributions of $10 annually for each member. This can be done if we will introduce a little system into our church finances, and have people give regularly each week. It will only take 20 cents a week, less than 3 cents a day, for each individual. The Greensboro Christian Church is now giving over $10 per capita annually for church purposes, and our members are all poor people, comparatively speaking.

My object, however, in writing these articles is not to get our Southern church to raise $200,000 annually, but my purpose is to get our people to give more foreign missions, and give it regularly and systematically.

Last year all of our conferences gave $1,619.63 for foreign missions. Add to this 20 per cent of the Convention mission fund and you have a total of $1,849.93, or the merest fraction more than 9 cents a member annually, for world evangelization.

If every member would give one cent a week for foreign missions we would have annually $10,731.40. If each one of us would give the price of a cigar or package of chewing gum each week it would amount to more than $53,000—or enough to support about 25 missionaries, their wives, and 50 native helpers.

—A bill has passed Congress, and now only awaits President Taft's signature to become effective, appropriating $30,000 for a monument to be erected on the Guilford battle-ground, near Greensboro, to the memory of General Nathaniel Greene and those who fought under him in this famous battle. Here Cornwallis received the sterning blow from which he never recovered and which made Yorktown possible a little later.

THE INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, SOUTH.

By W. E. McClenny, Ph. B.

VII. The Children's Department and The Christian Orphanage.

Prior to 1879 there was no children's department among the Christians South. That year Rev. J. Pressley Barrett became editor of The Christian Sun, and inaugurated a new department under the control of Rev. Edwin W. Beale, and called it "The Children's Corner" to which the children wrote letters and sent money for missionary purposes. All funds so collected up to the year 1886 were used in mission work, and the churches of Howard's Chapel, Mt. Bethel, Kallam's Grove and possibly others were largely established from the funds thus raised.

In 1886 the General Convention decided to use the revenues from this source for the education of young men, called to the Christian ministry who were unable to pay their way in school. From 1886 to 1894 there had been paid in by the children $425.00 to the educational fund of the Convention. From that no less than six young men had been helped.

The General Convention in session at Elon College, North Carolina in May, 1892, gave consideration to the Christian Orphanage. In 1894 at the session of the convention held in Norfolk, Virginia, a committee of five was appointed to consider and report plans concerning an orphanage. At the session at Burlington, North Carolina, in June, 1896, there was $66.96 in the hands of the treasurer of the children's fund for the education of young men for the ministry. This was ordered paid to the treasurer of the convention, and in the future it was recommended that the collections from the "Children's Corner" be applied to support and maintenance of the orphans when the orphanage was established, and if an orphanage should fail to be established that the money so raised may be used for furnishing a Biblical Library at Elon College.

At the session of the General Convention at Burlington, North Carolina in 1906 Rev. J. L. Foster, secretary of the orphanage reported collected since 1897 $8,034.01. Rev. William S. Long, D. D., Rev. J. L. Foster and Capt. W. J. Lee, the committee on orphanage reported a charter procured for the Christian Orphanage, location chosen at Elon College, North Carolina; 112.5 acres of land purchased at a cost of $2410.05, a good two story brick building erected, 116 X 39 feet 9 inches with a wing 30 X 24 feet at a total cost of $10,000.00. A board of seven trustees was elected and Rev. James L. Foster was elected superintendent by the board in September, 1906, and took charge October 1st, 1906. The orphanage was opened January, 1907, and Lila Mae Canada of Durham, North Carolina was the first to enter, since which time the number has been increased to thirty-six now (1910). All told the present plant is valued at $25,000.00, all as a result of the directed time, energy, faith, and work of the children of the Christian Church South. The building is fairly well furnished, a good part of which has been donated by individuals and the churches.

The present buildings will accommodate fifty children. The farm of 114 1-2 acres is fairly well equipped with out-houses, and farming utensils, and it is supplied with a nice young orchard, hogs, cattle, etc., and in 1910 there were harvested two hundred and thirty bushels of wheat from the same, besides other crops. It also has a small endowment, and one or two others which will be received later. The children attend the Elon College Sunday-school, and the district graded school in the village.

We thus see what small things can do, and this leads us to better understand the Bible saying "Despise not the day of small things." These little mites of the children have increased from time to time, they have helped to build churches in destitute places, then they helped to educate preachers to fill those pulpits, and when this had been done, they set out to build and equip a home for the unfortunate of the church, and by putting enthusiasm into this they have enlisted the aid of the older members of the church, and today (1910) a great many churches take up a thanksgiving offering for the orphanage, while a great many of the Sunday-schools take up a regular orphanage collection once each month, and forward it for the support of the orphans, while the allwise Providence has opened the hearts and purses of many individuals who at Christmas send boxes for the benefit of those to whom no Santa Claus comes.

Taking all things into consideration the outlook for the Christian Orphanage seems very encouraging.

WEAK-MINDED ONES.

It is but very seldom that one hears any word of defense in behalf of those who are mentally weak—so weak as to be called half-witted. As a general thing such ones are made the objects of ridicule. Oftentimes they are directly laughed at, even by people who are supposed to be well bred. I am very thankful that I have no child of this type, but I have a sympathetic regard for those who have such a child, or one who is a close relative. I would have people of sound mind exhibit pity toward the weak-minded ones. Let them act toward such persons as they would have people act toward a child of their own, if he were weak in mind. Many a person who makes sport of a foolish lad would detest the one who should thus treat his own boy, if he were foolish. Think of the fact that a weak-minded one is not at all responsible for his condition. Why, then, should he be ridiculed for a defect which he is not at fault for? The Sunday-school Times relates the following anecdote: "It is told of Edward Eggleston that in his boyhood he and his companions were forming a literary society. The membership, they determined, should include only the best boys and young men of the place. None who were undesirable should be admitted. There was one boy in the neighborhood who was mentally defective, who greatly desired to join the society, that he might learn to 'speak pieces,' he said. Most of the boys laughed at the suggestion that he should be admitted. But young Eggleston, with a manly earnestness, favored receiving him. 'We have no right,' he said, 'to keep all our good things to ourselves. This poor boy will do us no harm, and it will please him, and it may do him good.' He pleaded so earnestly for the boy that he was admitted. It made him very happy, and he became fairly bright." That is a good example for many in these days. Have a tender regard for the unfortunate ones. It is your power to make weak-minded ones happy. It is possible that you could improve their condition, if you should try to do so. You can at least refrain from making sport of them.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting of the Alabama Conference at McGuire's Chapel Jan. 28 and 29 was good, notwithstanding the threatening weather and the small attendance. The sermon Saturday by Rev. G. D. Hunt, and Sunday by Rev. J. D. Dollar, were of special interest. While the topic relating to Missions was being considered, a motion prevailed. That all our churches in the Alabama Conference take a special collection to help raise the $10,000.00 asked for at the last session of the American Christian Convention. I don't think we can be loyal to the American Christian Convention, if we do not respond to the call for help. If every church in the Southern Convention would take a special collection for foreign missions it would be encouraging to the Board, and we would all feel that we have a part in the work being done in Japan and Porto Rico.

CHILDREN DEDICATED TO GOD.

Why are candidates for the ministry not more numerous? Why do not more of the strongest young men offer themselves to the churches to go out and preach the gospel at home and abroad? In some religious denominations the decrease of the number of candidates for this high vocation is giving great anxiety and awakening much inquiry.

Do Christian parents dedicate their children to God from their birth, and hope and pray that He will call one or more of their sons into the ministry? In former days this was the custom among many Christian parents. Has this custom disappeared? Encouraged and inspired by a spirit of self-sacrifice in the home, many young men have been raised up to preach the gospel who otherwise might have fallen into some other pursuit.

If parents do not open the door for their children to become minister, how can it be expected that they will listen to the call of their Lord? It may be that parents instead of hoping and praying that their sons may be called of God to preach are earnestly hoping and praying that they may not be called. They have other plans, other ambitions for their children. They wish to see their sons become wealthy, or famous, and shine as stars of the first magnitude in the world.

Some parents hope that their sons will fall into their places when they become old. It is so convenient to transmit the farm or the office or the business from father to son. Some parents think they cannot consent to have their children go far from home. They hope they will marry and settle down in the town or city where they have always lived, where they can watch over them and see them every day.

This feeling is natural. Everyone can appreciate it. But our Lord has spoken plainly. Let no Christian father come between the Lord and His servants whom He is calling. It may be a great sacrifice, but sacrifice is the way of life. No father should try to make his son a minister unless the Lord has called him. No mother should insist that her son shall preach the gospel when he is not fitted for this work. If any young man thinks he is called of God to preach, not having gifts and equipment for this vocation, he is mistaken. God makes no mistakes. When He calls men He gives them equipment necessary or the opportunity to secure it. He fits the man to the task He gives him.

But when God calls let no man interfere. It may be that He will call that son to go to Africa, or India, or China, and you will not see him for twenty years. You may never see him more. But if God is calling, pray for grace to say, "Thy will be done," remembering Him who "spared not his own Son."

There are young men who have heard the voice of the Lord and felt the touch of His Spirit, and know they ought to go out and proclaim this gospel; but they dread to let their parents know their convictions. They fear they will be disappointed and displeased. It may not be so. An eminent minister was the son of a widow, and when he felt sure that God had called him to preach, he dreaded to tell his mother, as it seemed to him it would break her heart. When he could no longer delay he made bold to tell her what was in his heart. To his surprise she said, "My son, this is what I have been praying for ever since you were born. Go, and your mother's prayers will go with you."

If it should be otherwise, if parents should be unwilling to have their children whom God has chosen for His special work go into the ministry or the missionary field, what then? "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" David Livingstone's parents were averse to his going to Africa. The young man had heard a voice calling him to the Dark Continent. It was a prodigious undertaking at that time. Not much wonder his parents doubted and feared. He went from Glascow to the place where his father and mother lived to talk it over. They spent a night in counsel. Nothing was left unsaid. But the young man felt the hand of God upon him, and arose to go, giving his father and mother a last loving farewell. He spent his life for Africa, and the heart of the whole world throbs in appreciation of that sacrifice as one of the noblest ever made by man. When a thousand years shall have passed away the name of David Livingstone will be as ointment poured forth throughout the length and breadth of the Dark Continent. But what if he had listened to the voices that hindered?—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Thanks.

Mrs. White and I desire to do the very best we can to express our appreciation for a large and generous "pounding." The church at Ramseur together with many other friends come to our home on Feb. 10th and filled our table and covered the floor with sacks, bundles, packages, and cans all filled with something good to eat. This was all unexpected and an entirely new experience to us. We can find no words but are too weak to express our appreciation for such gifts and givers. We thank every one and invoke upon them the blessings of our Heavenly Father, and pray that we may be useful to them during our stay in their midst.

We also wish to thank Mrs. Ella Cox of Pleasant Ridge for the gift of a beautiful bed quilt.

For Every Member of The Christian Church.

Enclosed please find check for $1.50 for the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly. I wish to say that it is the best book I have ever read in reference to the origin of the Christian Church. Since reading the Life of James O'Kelly now understand something about the way these noble workers with James O'Kelley in the lead started their work. I want to say Bro. Editor, I love the Christian Church, much better than before reading the book. It was simply the church of my choice; now, since I have read this good book, I understand better, I know more about the church. Therefore I love the church better. I want to thank the author of the book sincerely for putting this good book within the reach of the people, and at such a small price. I regard it as worth its price to me, many times, and I do hope that many who have not yet secured a copy of The Life of James O'Kelley will do so soon. Dear reader you will like it. It will help you in many ways. Buy one. I take the Word of the Lord as my guide, but I want O'Kelly's Life to read also to tell me of how the Christian Church began and through what struggles it has come. Reader, I commend to you to send today and get a copy of the book and read it.

Yours in the Master's cause.

ALONE WITH GOD.

Wherever you are you may find something beautiful and attractive. If you have no means, nor prestige, nor friends you may look out upon the unlimited wealth of your Father, and upon the unbounded splendor of His works, and have great joy in the thought that you are a part of them. And to realize this ought to make you more courageous and manly, imparting comfort even in adverse conditions, and these very thoughts ought to produce a willingness to do something and be something.

Alone with God studying his works and ways is necessary for all who want silent communion, sweet fellowship and friendship with Him. Then there is a better opportunity to get near and keep close to Him. This was beautifully illustrated in John while on the isle of Patmos, and as he was in the Spirit he heard the voice of God speaking to him like a trumpet. Marvelous and joyous in the fullest degree must have been his happy experience. The incomparable and superlative manifestation of the divine presence was abundantly realized, and he felt that it was good to be there and alone with Him who was such pleasant company. The world was not lonely to him, but so full of beauty, because he saw through the Spirit and was truly in the Spirit on the day of the Lord.

And you have been studying in several Sunday-school lessons, about Elijah. You first saw him alone by the brook, having been directed there by the Lord. Then you see the black winged messengers, bringing him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening, and behold his extended willing hand taking the food from the raven's hills. There he is with his manly rugged personality, attired in a very plain way, with his face shining with the presence of God.

The prophets of Baal were many, they destroyed the altars and tried to worship their god. Elijah is the only man that stood up for the living God, he is alone, yet he hears the voice of his God telling him what and how to do. What a beautiful example of trust and obedience! There is so much to learn and gain by the study of his splendid character. His life and very eventful way have won the hearts of so many millions in so many ages, and in so many lands, and yet he is thought of today with a wonderful increasing love and great admiration. He was with the Lord and the Lord surely was with him, for in all the Bible we have never looked upon a purer, a greater nor a better man of God. You cannot help feeling better and nearer to your Lord after seeing his sublime actions and hearing his words which breathed from an honest heart and gleamed from a pure life. So if you keep in good company you will feel better, and if you stay in bad company you will feel bad, and you will look so. Let these words be continually in your mind. "Still with thee, O my God, I would desire to be." then with your retiring prayer, and waking thoughts you may trust in Him more abundantly.

It is pleasant to be in company, if it is the right kind but be careful and do not say all you think, but think well of all you say, so as not to give others and yourself any trouble. Take some part of every day and night to be alone with God. Commune with Him and tell Him all about yourself, and when His voice speaks softly to your heart you will feel like being with Him continually. Too many do not take enough time to live in the upper regions of the Christian life, and how much happiness they lose by neglecting this great privilege. You will find enough to do to employ all of your time if you are thoughtful and industrious, but it will be so much better to give some of it to the service of God, and receive the joy of His salvation. For what are you looking and waiting? To better your condition in life and to be happy. But so many say, we are not happy, and I believe it is so. Prestige, affluence, honor combined with other transient things do not give permanent happiness, they often pile up trouble and great anxiety and leave your soul poor and barren as a sandy desert. Joy, joy in your soul today is what you want, it is what we all need. Let us have victory over sin, and peace with God.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I have read much about "Fine Arts," but very little about "Coarse Arts;" though there is, no doubt, such a thing as "Coarse Arts;" that is, art applied to "coarse ends." Whenever any great subject is perverted to low use it degrades it and renders it not only useless but harmful.

I think modern business and amusement have made an improper use of female beauty and female form. Whatever may be the judgment of any age as to woman's gifts or sphere in human society, it will remain true that she embodies the modesty and refinement of mankind. The mind cannot think of woman in her true relation to the human family without thinking of purity, taste, and refinement. Any use made of her face or form that reduces her to a commercial value or reduces her influence over the fine senses of man seems to be in the line of her degradation and, therefore, the degradation of polite society.

The art of photography and the multiplication of pictures has either thoughtlessly, or designedly made a "Coarse Art" of placing female forms on almost every board and for almost every purpose. Calendars, cigaretts, tobacco, and almost every kind of package on the market introduces pictures of women in almost every conceivable light. Circus bill-boards, theatre advertisements, ball games, from offices to shops you see her face and her form. This use of woman in photographic art lowers all that is best in her virtue and her influence for good. Nothing but legislation can check this vile practice, and lawmakers should enter a crusade against this shameless abuse of our hope for pure society.

If show-windows cannot be decorated and common wares cannot be advertised without the vulgar use of woman in "Coarse Art," it seems to be time for a reconstruction of our social and commercial ideas and standards. The statue of a young woman in New York City who had posed as the model was recently ordered out of a yard as a vile reproduction and a shameless piece of art. This illustrates the tendency of the times and the depths it may reach, if not checked by authority. The very atmosphere is tainted by photo-suggestions that endanger character as well as taste. Fans, candy boxes, hardware, beer, medicines, and a thousand things are surmounted with pictures of women that reduce modesty, purity, chastity, and refinement; soft drinks, perfumes, magazines, daily papers; there is hardly a place where the eye looks and the mind thinks where this modern "Coarse Art" is not eating way the vitals of society. The Government spends millions to stay the ravages of the boll weevil in the southern cotton crop and we deplore the damage done by that enemy to the fleecy stable that clothes the world; and then overlook the ravages of a subtle art that is eating at the very heart of mankind. Norfolk Letter.

A union baptismal service was held at the Memorial Temple last Wednesday night. Bro. Howsare, of the Temple, baptized two girls. Bro. Keys, of South Norfolk, baptized one young man. Bro. Hanson, of the Third Church, baptized three: Mrs. Griffin and Misses Edna White and Mary Roles.

Thursday night, the officers and teachers of the Third Church had a meeting at the home of the Superintendent, Cor. Newport and Connecticut Ave's. to discuss plans and methods for the betterment of the Sunday school.

At the school session Sunday morning Wymer W. Manning was elected Assistant Librarian for the school.

Mrs. E. L. Meyers recently went to Baltimore with the intention of possibly having an operation performed, but came home without it, and is now considered in a very critical condition.

Bro. Twiddy continues to improve and went out for a carriage ride this week.

Mr. Hanson has announced that, beginning next Sunday morning, he will preach a series of sermons, one each month for ten months, covering in a general way, the Bible from beginning to end. The subject as announced for next Sunday is "The Creation."

Rev. Jas. Foster, Supt. of the Orphanage, is to be in this vicinity next Sunday and is scheduled to preach at the Temple in the morning, at Rosemont in the afternoon and at the Third Church at night.

March 17th is the 21st Anniversary of the organization of the Memorial Christian Temple. Rev. Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., was its first pastor. On March 19th will be held an anniversary and memorial service. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, will preach morning and night, and in the afternoon an eulogy of Dr. Jones will be delivered by Dr. Staley of Suffolk, at which time a marble tablet to the memory of Dr. Jones will be unveiled.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Nice little report this week from different sources, and we thank all. Now we do earnestly solicit 25 new schools that will make a monthly offering for the orphanage, and then about 15 friends and churches who will send us $5.00 each for the feeding and clothing of a child. We need a regular income to meet our monthly expenses so as to prevent accumulation of indebtedness during the year which takes so much of our Special Thanksgiving to pay off.

Donations to date:

Miss Rotie Hurdle, Greensboro, N. C., 1 pair shoes; Mrs. Florence T. Branch, Auburn, N. C., 1 splendid quilt, valued at $6.00; Miss Florence Dixon, Snow Camp, N. C., 1-2 dozen pairs mittens, 3 1-4 yards flannel, 1 cap; Ladies Aid Society, Franklin, Va., 1 nice box containing cloaks for girls, hats, handkerchiefs, hose, cloth for dresses, bleaching, overcoat, 1 quilt 1 blanket, top for quilt, and ready made garments. This is a very valuable and useful box.

We appreciate the many nice gifts like all the above. They are just ready for service. And did you know the good women of the church have not allowed a single child to sleep cold—as the trustees accept other children, the quilts come in to keep them warm. All are well. William, Tom and Uncle John are smiling again. Black has 9 of the blackest pigs you ever saw. This gives us 21 baby pigs, some for sale and others to keep for next fall. We are going to try and make bread and meat this year.

Pray for this department of our Church work?

Yours sincerely,

Uncle Jim.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed you will find sixty cents, my dues for six months. With best wishes for you and the cousins, I am.

Yours truly,

Dear Uncle Jim:

We go bare-headed nearly all the time here, except when the sun shines too hot in mid-summer, and we have been going bare-footed lately—it has been so warm and dry.

If all the Alabama prohibitionists are trying as hard to make more prohibition voters as papa and mama we will not always have such "legislation" in Alabama as now.

Our love and dimes.

You live in a dry climate and want a "dry" state. Well that's right little men. Hope mother and father will make three strong prohibitionists of you.

Dear Uncle Jim:

How are you getting along. Are the children in the Orphanage going to school today. I am in school and it keeps me busy all the time. I spent my Christmas holidays in Newport News, with my two cousins. Enclose you twenty cents.

With love to you and your cousins.

Your niece,

Nancy E. Barrett.

Yes, Nancy our boys and girls are in school now and most of them are learning nicely. Glad to get your letter and place your name for 1911.

Roxboro, N. C.,

Jan, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

As I have been sick so much and fallen behind with my letters, I'll write 2 in one until the connecting links are given.

I sent one dollar instead of one dime, when I was one year old. I now send 40 cents for Sept., Oct., Nov., and Dec. None of my little friends from Franklinton came to my birthday party as cousin Junnie Joyner White was taken ill. But I had a happy time with the few friends and relatives who came from elsewhere. We behaved nicely and played games on the parlor floor. We had ice-cream, cake and candy for the larger ones and orange juice for the babies. I sat at the head of the table in the same high chair that mother and Auntie used to sit in. Grandma sat at the foot of the table. In front of me was a white cake bearing one tall white candle, lighted. We had one candle stick on the table too, because I was just 1 year old, you see. Mother held my hand and helped me serve my cake. Before dinner, we took it in the yard and had our pictures taken. I received a tiny box of powder, the finest tooth brush you ever saw, a ring and half dozen pins and a baby walker. Mother gave me some pennies for my 2nd month and so on until I was 1 year old. Can some of you tell how many pennies I received? I received some pretty cards, too—one from James and Mary-Lee and a cradle roll card from my S. S. teacher.

Now back to my first long visit or trip. When grandpa left for Washington, D. C., May 19, to attend the World's S. S. Convention, I followed him to the train and he handed us a nickle from the platform, so I could weigh on the penny-in-the-slot scales. I wrote you about. I then went up to Mr. Junie West's, where I spent a very happy week with my little sweetheart, Margaret Beale West. She is a beautiful baby and I hope will grow into a most lovely woman in every way. We went riding together and jabbered, and I pat-a-caked. They told Margaret I wouldn't want a sweetheart unless she was smart and learned some stunts. So she learned to pat-a-cake very soon.

Friday afternoon Richardson Joyner's mama entertained the ministering circle of King's daughters and I attended and was elected an honorary member.

The Sunday of the Worlds' Sunday-school Convention Margaret attended Sunday-school for the first time. We went together in her papa's automobile and behaved nicely. She wants me to be a preacher like our grandpas. I hope I'll be good like them too.

Tuesday, May 22nd, I saw the moon in total eclipse at midnight.

I made several more calls in Suffolk and attended another Book Club meeting at the home of Mrs. Claude Dennis.

I hated to leave Margaret and her Aunts and my other Suffolk friends, but I kissed Margaret and her mama good-bye on Thursday morning and boarded the S. A. L. for Roxboro. Grandma arrived from Washington in time to kiss me good-bye. I spent a few pleasant days in Roxboro, with "daddy." I didn't meet many people here, but we called on Mrs. Noel and Miss Sue. They lived next to grandma in Graham, and Mrs. Noel made the first white apron mama ever had.

The last Friday night in May I fell off the bed in Roxboro. The bed was diagonally across the corner and the mattress was low at head. I fell through feet foremost. It waked mother when I struck and she said it made an awful noise. She jumped up screamed and cried and thought I was killed because I was so still. She lighted the lamp and daddy pulled me out. They found no injuries, but I have been sick much of the time since then.

Fondly,

William Staley Cheatham.

Have missed your letters little man.

Now make a strong pull and get right well again and come to see us at Commencement.

THE BRAVEST BATTLE.

The bravest battle that ever was fought—
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;

'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought.
From mouths of wonderful men.

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart,
A woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there is the battle field.

No marshal troops, no bionac song;
No banner to gleam and wave.
But, O, these battles they last so long—
From babyhood to the grave.

Yet, faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on and on in the endless wars,
Then, silent, unseen, goes down.

O ye with banners and battle shot
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Are fought in these silent ways:

—Zoaquin Miller.

Charlie Wellons, son of James and Mary Perry, died Feb. 9, 1911, aged 4 years.

Woodell.

Winnie Ann, wife of Everett E. Woodell, died Jan. 6, 1911. She leaves a devoted husband and six children, three having preceded her to the spirit world. She was for twenty years a member of the church, and at the time of her death her membership was with the Christian Church at Sanford, N. C.

For the space of 8 months she was sick and for the greater part of her time was confined to her bed. She bore her affliction with great patience and passed out from her beloved ones in much peace.

The family has the sympathy and prayers of her church and pastor.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

President Moffitt on Tuesday evening of this week read a most interesting paper, which was the outgrowth of wide research and investigation, before the Cosmopolitan Club. In this paper Dr. Moffitt undertook to give a brief resume of the history of every institution of the curricula, of the standard of work done, of the physical equipment, of the endowment, and also a suggestion of what these several institutions might be expected to accomplish in the future. Of these institutions, President Moffitt discussed in great detail as outlined above, nine, but omitted the colleges for colored people and also the high schools.

On last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock in the reception halls of the West Dormitory, occurred the reception and banquet of the Junior class in honor of the Senior Class. In the receiving line were Messrs. W. H. Anderson and J. S. Fleming, and Misses Ruby Michael and Ethel DuRant. At the banquet Mr. J. S. Fleming presided as toastmaster. There were many felicitous banquet Mr. J. S. Fleming presided as toastmaster. There were many felicitous toasts by members of the two classes, which now for the first time in college met as equals at the banquet board. The decorations consisted of college pennants and flowers of the season and bunting, the bunting being in the class colors, of the class of 1911 of black and gold.

On Tuesday evening of this week Mrs. R. J. Kernodle entertained her Sunday-school class in her home on Lebanon Ave. The evening was passed in social intercourse and conviviality, during which there was a Bible contest, in which the prize was won by Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson and a game of progressions, in which Mr. L. V. Coggins won out.

Dr. E. U. Hoenshel, the distinguished lecturer of Dayton, Va., has captivated the college community this week with two of his excellent lectures, the first of which dealt with his travels in the Holy Land, and the second with his travels in Iceland. Dr. Hoenshel also attended chapel services of Thursday morning and delighted the students with a recitation of a selection dealing with Pioneer Life by Will Carleton.

Elon College is represented in the Y. W. C. A. Convention for N. C. and Virginia which is in session at Guilford College, by Misses Mabel Farmer, Sadie Fonville, and Annie Bagwell.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THE BIENNIAL CONVENTION.

A notice appears below over the signature of Prof. S. M. Smith, President of the Young People's Convention for our Southern Church, concerning the biennial session of that body at Elon College from April 15-17, or Easter Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Two years ago this body met at Elon College just before the annual commencement and was largely attended. It was the universal verdict of the town people that its coming at that time again would put too heavy a burden on the citizens and so this year Easter was decided upon. It is true that many posters will not be able to attend on this account, but it is certainly the most available season for the Convention if it is to be held at Elon College and that seemed to be the opinion and desire of the Executive Board who had the decision of the matter in hand.

But it is settled now and make the most and best of it, we can, we must. Let every organization that is entitled to representation in the body begin at once to take steps to be represented. Every Sunday-school as a whole is entitled to representation, so is every Organized Class, every Teacher-Training Class, every Christian Endeavor Society, every Home Department and every Cradle Roll Department. All the officers of all the Young People's and Sunday-school Conventions in the various conferences are entitled to membership as are all the ordained ministers of the Southern Christian Convention actively engaged in pastoral work. With such a constituency to draw upon, the personnel of the body ought to be unsurpassed by that of any of our other representative gatherings. The secretaries of the various Young People's and Sunday-school Conventions in the several conferences will be called upon to render this department's editor assistance in many matters connected with the approaching convention and their ready co-operation is hoped for and expected.

Prof. Smith, as chairman of the program committee, is now busy with the details of that program, which he will furnish for publication as soon as it is ready. Prof. Smith knows how to plan a convention—it will be recalled that he was once general secretary of that N. C. S. S. Association and promises us his best in this instance. Every phase of Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work will be covered in this program.

All together for a great Convention!

HOW TO GET HOME STUDY DONE.

"I just can't get my pupils to study the lesson." How many discouraged teachers have I heard say this! Are you among that number? If so, would you not like to remedy this fundamental defect in your teaching? For you are to blame largely for the condition of which you complain.

Three things are vital in this matter. First you will need to make special assignments for home-study to be reported on the succeeding Sunday. This means that you will have to know next Sunday's lesson in broad outline before you teach today's. These assignments may take many forms, such as interesting events, geographical or biographical investigations, parallel passages, review of previous lesson, another golden text than the one given in the quarterly, etc., etc. These assignments may be written on little slips of paper, 3 by 5 inches, and you should always keep a copy of each assignment and a record of the person to whom you assigned it.

In the second place you should never fail to call for the assignment next Sunday nor to show appreciation of the fact that your request has been complied with. It will not be necessary to assign every pupil special work, but only the lax ones and not to them every Sunday. In this way you will develop the habit of home-study and so wonderfully help your class.

In the third place you will teach, not lecture. Perhaps lecturing is your fault now. If so, quit it at once. A lecturing teacher never has a home-studying class. They are mutually exclusive.

NOTICE.

By vote of the Executive Committee, the next biennial session of the Young People's Convention of the Christian Church, South, will be held at Elon College on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 14, 15, and 16.

Entertainment will be furnished free at the College and the people of the village to number of one hundred. This convention is held in the interest of the Young People's Work of the Christian Church, South.

Pastors, officers of Sunday Schools or People's Conventions, officers and teachers of Sunday schools, officers of Christian Endeavor or other Young People's Societies, representatives of organized adult classes and leading church workers in general are invited to attend. Pas-to: s and Sunday school superintendents are requested to make announcement of the meeting and see that the delegates are elected who can and will attend.

All who expect to attend should notify Prof. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.
Very respectfully,
S. M. Smith, Pres.

C. E. TOPIC FOR MARCH 5—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lessons from Moses—Ex. 3: 1-14.
(Consecration Meeting).

The Roll-Call: Last week it was suggested that each member read the life of Moses as recorded in Exodus and from the account select a verse teaching a truth for life's guidance without reference to or select a truth for life's guidance without reference to any particular verse, the same to be given without comment. If you did this, and it is hoped you did, have the roll called at the beginning of the meeting and let these verses and teachings from Moses' life be given in response. This will give variety to the Consecration service and leave ample time besides for the prayer service to follow.

The Music: Immediately after the roll-call, as above suggested, have a song service of 4 or 5 consecration songs. Follow this with a chain of sentence prayers and then let the leader read the Scripture and comment thereon or have some one else do these acts.

Leader's Remarks: There are so many great things about this great man Moses that the leader will have no difficulty in finding a theme suitable for his five minutes. Perhaps the truth suggested by God's calling of Moses to his life's work will most appeal to him. Note that Moses was a busy man—he was attending to his father-in-law's flocks. God never calls lazy people—he always calls us in the midst of our work. Note that He gave Moses a work to do and that Moses shrank from that work. God always has a work for those whom He calls and this work will make them great, or Moses' work made him great, if we but perform it. Note that God promised to be with Moses. Our Heavenly Father never sets us to work and then leaves us alone. He is always with us, ready and anxious to help us. Let us be ready and anxious to hear His call and to do His bidding, leaving results with Him.

Questions for Answer:

How did Moses' parentage enter into his life preparation?

What lesson do we get from his rescue by Pharaoh's daughter?

How did his education help him in later life?

What truth do we get from his murder of the Egyptian?

Of what value were the forty desert years to Moses?

What is the teaching of the plagues?

What great feast did Moses inaugurate?

How do we keep it today? Why?

What is the teaching of the Red Sea episode?

Why the forty years in the wilderness? The value of it?

The lesson of the manna?

Why could Moses not lead the people into Canaan?

The lesson of the yearning for Egypt?

What is the great lesson from his life? (To several.)

What was his chief characteristic?

What influence did his laws have over the Jews?

Special Work: Have an essay or two on "Moses as a Law-giver," "Moses as a Scholar," "Moses as a Race-builder."

Scripture Verses: If the leader desires to give out Scripture verses for recitation with brief comment, let him take his concordance and find what he may desire under the words—meek, meekness, humble, humility, faith, guide, lead, and kindred themes.

Some Opinions of Moses.

A more difficult or intricate responsibility was never laid upon any one in the history of man than was laid upon Moses.—W. J. Townsend.

No burden was too heavy, no work too laborious, no sacrifice too vast, no suffering too acute for Moses to bear for his people.—W. G. Blaikie.

Moses, the greatest man of the ages, is shown on the Mount of Transfiguration to be only the follower and a helper in the train of Jesus Christ.—Louis Albert Banks.

No figure in ancient history stands out so grandly as Moses, because no one else is so surrounded by the splendor of a constantly recognized divine presence.—Cunningham Geikie.

Trust The Young People.

Young people will respond to appeals for heroism. They may not hold out without spurring, but how many of their elders will, either?

Young people have many capabilities as speakers and as executives that their elders do not realize. Put them into hard places, and you will continually be surprised to see how well they will all them.

Young people like to be trusted, as their elders also do. And being trusted makes people—most people—trustworthy.

The following dispatch conveying some exceedingly interesting history, and carrying likewise a worthy purpose and promise, was sent out for the University of N. C., Feb. 8. At the 1911 commencement degrees will be conferred on those surviving students of the University of North Carolina who left Chapel Hill to enter the Confederate army before completing the course for the baccalaureate diploma. Of the 1,331 men who matriculated at the University from 1851 to 1880, 759 are known to have been in the Confederate army, and it is probably that there was not a single one of the 1,331, who was physically incapacitated, who did not see service. The freshman class of 1860 numbered eighty men, and every one went into the war, one man returning for his diploma after having been discharged because of physical inability. Thirty per cent of the University men who went into the army were killed in service.

WHOSE SERVANTS ARE YOU?

(Among manuscripts of N. Summerbell, unpublished, I find something like the following:)

Through all the world there are sorrow, suffering and ruin, as certainly as joy, development and success. On the one hand are churches, on the other saloons; on the one hand Sunday-schools, on the other prisons; on the one hand prayer-meetings, on the other gambling resorts; some are diligent in business, others are lazy; some are honest, others unreliable; some are sober, others are drunk; some are law-abiding, others are disorderly; some uphold religion, others cultivate unbelief and things that are carnal; some are constructive and build up the good, others are destructive and tear down the enterprises in their hands.

The effect of the works of these two classes does not always at first appear; just as the results of sowing wheat or weeds will not appear till the harvest. But the work of character is sure to bring results. Good character produces good people, church members, Sunday-school teachers, self-sustaining citizens, and a happy community. Bad character produces idleness, profanity, pauperism, sabbath-breaking, indebtedness, theft, imprisonment, sorrow and blasted lives.

The former class are laboring with God, the latter class with Satan.

True, some serve Satan grudgingly, and are not bold in sin; but their influence is on that side. And some rebels are in the camp of Jesus; but their work is for Satan, even there. They disgrace religion by their acts. And there are some who do some good things, but refuse to be servants of God, or to obey him. They disgrace religion by their acts. And there are some who do some good things, but refuse to be servants of God, or to obey Him. They are unwilling to be on God's side. Whose servants are they? Some are servants of the evil one. Jesus teaches that you are his servants to whom you yield yourselves servants to obey.

The servants of God obey him unto righteousness, whose end is life. The servants of Satan obey him by resistance to Christ; the way is sin, and the end is ruin and death. The followers of Christ walk in a narrow way, it is true, but it becomes easy to walk in: for the traveler becomes accustomed to the straight lines of correct conduct. The servants of Satan consider themselves liberal and free, and they walk in a broad way, it is true; but its sides and margins are so distant that the traveler loses his sense of direction, truth, and is certain to walk into a morass, or over a precipice.

Whose servants are you?

Consider the masters:

Jesus represents God, the right, salvation, heaven. Satan represents evil, falsehood, crime, penalty.

Christ deals in virtue, love, peace, righteousness, happiness and truth.

Satan deals in error, falsehood, violence, injustice, remorse and destruction.

Which side are you on? Can you succeed in the wrong? If so, what then? How can you make the wrong triumph in the end? Will not a temporary victory in it simply postpone the final defeat?

Do you know that if all served Christ the world would be wholly happy; but if all served Satan there would be universal carnage and death? That men would prey on each other, even kill each other, until there would be but one man left, and he would commit suicide? Yes; the devil is blacker than he is painted and it is not certain that he ever did any good. The end of his service is sorrow, weeping and destruction: youth gone, principles gone, character gone, and opportunity gone. He asks but little at first; but he never ceases asking. He will even promise you that you may hereafter repent, if you will sin a little now; and then he gets you to sin a little more. He will tell you that this little sin is not dangerous, or that you have already done as sinfully already; and soon he will persuade you that you have gone too far to repent. He is certain to cheat you. He deceived Eve. He fooled Judas. The end of Satan's service is seen sometimes even in this life; in the debauched body, the lost reputation, the visible degradation.

Do you say that there are some bad in the churches? Well, are there none bad on your side? Are the saloon-keepers in the churches? the gamblers? the professional criminals?

There is no sense in contending that there is no Satan. You waste your time and breath. He has tempted you. His work is seen daily in opposing the right. There is a heaven, and there is a hell. There is hell sometimes on earth. There is light, and there is darkness. There is truth, and there is error. There is sight, and there is blindness. There is health, and there is sickness. There is glory, and there is shame. There is life, and there is death.

What right have you to oppose God, whether there be a devil or not? What right have you to be a slave to sin, when Christ offers you the liberty of the gospel? If there be no devil, what right have you to make one of yourself? You may begin the service of evil, by entering among flowers; but the broad way has in it thorns, snakes, delirium tremens, disease, sorrow, shame, suffering, privation loneliness and death.

Serve God; and the end is joy and peace, life and heaven. If any man is to be happy hereafter, the servant of God is to be. And it is an eternal joy.

Whose servants are you? His servants ye are, to whom you yield yourselves servants to obey. You can easily test yourself. Do you obey God? Do you?

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

This town has had revival meetings every night and three times on Sunday since last December. Large congregations from this place, neighboring towns and from the country places have attended them. Several preachers, men and women from Waukesha, Wis. with C. L. Harvey, editor of the Burning Bush, as their leader. Messrs. Bray and Miller are the leaders at the present time. Many have professed under their preaching, and many seem to have been helped into a better and brighter spiritual life.

Instead of saying I am glad and happy, many meet you with complaining, and hasten to tell you how unwell they are and have been all the time since they last saw you. Those you meet have almost as many burdens, afflictions and troubles to take along with them as you have, and they do not want to be bothered and hindered with yours. So it would be so much better not to mention them when you meet, but just try hard to feel happy

GOD TOOK HIM.

(Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him. Gen. 5: 24. Golden text for Sunday, March 5).

Just say that God took him, Enoch, Moses, Elijah, that will do. These were God's. By grace and by adoption they belonged to Him. And thousands of other saints do. They walk, day by day, with God. They see His mercies; they are conscious of His benefits; they are aware of His bounty; they are grateful for His blessings; and they acknowledge Him in all their walk and way. I do not doubt in the least but that there are those who walk daily in the conscious presence of their God. You can see it in their countenance; realize it in the enjoyment of their companionship; hear it in the kindness and gentleness of their conduct and bearing. Enoch walked with God and God took him. Moses walked with God and God took him. Elijah walked with God and God took him. And there are thousands of saints living today who are walking with God; and one day when His work and purposes and plans with them on earth are finished He will take them to Himself. Heavenly companionship while here on earth—that is a privilege that has been put within our reach. Elijah having enjoyed this companionship for a season was taken home.

We often see people good enough to go. They have spent years of usefulness, and of faithful and efficient service. We have heard some say they would like to go now; that their work seemed finished, and their loved ones had for the most part gone on ahead. And now they would like to go.

What if Elijah had been allowed to go when he thought his work was done, and when he made his request to go! Much of the very best work of his life would have gone undone; many of his noblest deeds would have been unrecorded. And he would have died an inglorious death, away in the wilderness.

But God had better things in store for Elijah. He had mapped out in His own mind how He would take Elijah.

This man, Elijah, stands out as one of the great, towering, monumental characters of history. Moses created a race; Elijah reclaimed a race; Jesus redeemed a race. In Moses God's word reached its climax in law; in Elijah God's Word reached its climax in prophecy; in Jesus God's word reached its climax in living. Elijah carried the prophetic art to its highest attainment—in Old Testament times.

His was a wild, rugged, fierce, fiery nature. He was a man of violence in movement, and of a tempestuous disposition. No wonder he went to heaven on a chariot of fire. It was the most suitable and the most fitting manner he could have desired to go. God even fits our going to our own tempers and dispositions.

But however good and strong a man Elijah was, the work he had begun did not die with him. Others took up the work and went forward with it. The workers die; but the work goes on. What a privilege to have a part in the great and good work of hastening His coming and His kingdom. In this work we may walk with our hand in His everyday.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

The Presbyterian Standard not long since punctured the gas bag of the man who has been howling for the promotion of religious liberty by keeping the Bible out of the school about as neatly and effectually as one could desire. That paper says:

Religion cannot be taught in our public schools. If the Protestants are in charge, the Catholics and Jews would object. If the Catholics are in charge, the Protestants and Jews would object. So it goes. In order to offend nobody and to be loyal to our principles of religious liberty, our schools must be free from religious instruction. How about irreligion? May that be taught? May the Bible be scouted? O yes, there is no law against that, and no principle violated. A professor in a State College said to his class, "If you propose to study geology to any purpose, you must give up your Bible." Christians are taxed to pay salaries to such professors to teach their children that the Bible is against science, and therefore false. A great howl goes up when Christians suggest that public taxes should be used to teach children to revere the Bible and live by its precepts. This matter of religious liberty is construed to mean the liberty to make our schools not merely non-religious, but irreligious. The infidel, the atheist and scoffer have it all their own way.

Warnings to Youth.—Last Sunday night about nine o'clock this writer heard calls for help just out in front of his door. On going, it was found that a thirteen year old boy of the community, returning from the evening service at the College, had either attempted to cross the railway, just in front of a moving train, or, that which is more probable, had swung onto the train and in trying to jump, his foot slipped and the left limb was crushed and severed from the body. With the help of a colored man who had come we carried the boy to the station, quickly prepared him for the hospital and at 9:27 the bruised and bleeding lad was aboard a train for Greensboro. The writer went to the home to comfort the mother and assure her that her boy, while badly hurt, was being cared for in the best possible manner. "Oh! my poor, dear boy! If he had only listened to my pleadings and warnings not to jump on and off moving trains." Early, this Monday morning, a long distance from the boy's father. "Bad news indeed. My boy died at 5 o'clock this A. M. See the mother and comfort her as best you can." A few moments later a mother's heart was broken and bleeding despite all that we could do or say. "Gone without a mother's being there to give a word of counsel or comfort, or even to say good-bye." There is a tragedy for you, reader, and it is written out here as it occurred with the hope that some youth who will not stop to consider will bear this warning in mind. This was not a bad boy. He was not a wayward, wicked or reckless son; by no manner of means. He loved his mother fondly, honored his father, had but a few days ago professed faith in Christ and united with the church. But the boy was full of life, active, alert, agile, and never dreamed that a slip of the hand or foot would be his taking off.

Why will young boys persist in taking risks on moving trains? They are going to untimely graves from it almost every day; still they persist. Why will not young boys hear and heed the warnings of mother and father? Tragedies everywhere tell of their persistence and of their determination to do their own will and way. Boys of the Christian Sun family, beware. Mother and father know best, and their warnings and their pleadings are for your sakes and safety. "Children obey your parents" is an ancient, but a wise command.

A Word of Cheer.—In spite of all that we can do or say, our friends are going to have enough of cloud, gloom, disappointment and tears. God has given us an example and a lesson by bringing more days of sunshine than of clouds, more hours of calm and quiet than of tempest and storm. How easily we may carry, if we will, sunshine into other lives, good cheer into other hearts, joy into a friend's home and heart. You would certainly send or carry flowers to your friend's funeral; why not some to his health and happiness?

I found a noble sentiment that Sun readers would do well to ponder, we fancy, a moment. The Pacific Christian Advocate carried it to this effect:

"Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words while their ears can hear them and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them. The kind things you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them.

If my friends have alabaster boxes laid away, full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intended to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them in my weary and troubled hours and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy.

Let us learn to anoint our friends beforehand for their burial. Post-mortem kindness does not cheer the troubled spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over life's weary way.

The Far Goal.—We too often let our needs, or seeming needs, crowd out the beauty and the blessings of our belongings. What we have has a message for us, as well as that which we hope for. Not things, but the use and the beauty and the benefit of things, bring us to better aims and ends. The main point of achievement is not the multiplicity of things, but the right sort of character. Unless that which one has contributes to one's character it is of little worth. The far goal we strive for is the right sort of life, soul, conduct. David Grayson's Adventures in Contentment gives this bright word:

"Do you know, the more I look into life, the more things it seems to me I can successfully lack—and continue to grow happier. How many kinds of food I do not need, nor cooks to cook them; how much curious clothing, nor tailors to make it; how many books that I never read, and pictures that are not worth while! The farther I run, the more I feel like casting aside all such impedimenta—lest I fail to arrive at the far goal of my endeavor.

"I like to think of an old Japanese nobleman I once read about, who ornamented his house with a single vase at a time, living with it, absorbing its message of beauty, and when he tired of it, replacing it with another. I wonder if he had the right way, and we, with so many objects to hang on our walls, place on our shelves, drape on our chairs, and spread on our floors, have mistaken our course and placed our hearts upon the multiplicity rather than the quality of our possessions

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The chief engineer of the Panama Canal says that the Canal will be completed by September 1, 1913 at a total cost of $360,000,000.

—In 1900 the known insane of New York State numbered 16,006. In 1910, the population of the State having increased 47.6 per cent, the number of insane had increased 103.9 per cent and numbered 32,658. About one insane to every 207 sane persons is the ratio in New York. Prof. Starr of Columbia University declares that "a wave of temperance over the State would be of great avail in removing one immediate cause of mental aberration."

—Among the cities of wonderful growth the past decade, Birmingham, Alabama, is to be reckoned. Its population was 38,675 in 1900 and in 1910 it was 132,865—the most phenomenal growth of any American city in that decade. And, by the way, this city had local option twelve months and then State-wide prohibition about two years. Yet there are folks in the world who will tell you that saloons make a town grow, and the abolition of them retards growth.

—Every time a great crime is enacted, or tragedy committed and the culprit escapes we read in the papers "blood-hounds have been secured and put on the trail." And that is about the last we ever hear of the blood hound, except, possibly, a statement "rain set in and the hounds could not follow the trail." It takes a superstition and a nuisance a long time to die. Witness the horse shoe over the gate or barn door, and the lightning rod up beside the chimney, and the dread of number 13.

—Of the pictorial Bible for Children, the advertisement of which now appears elsewhere in The Sun, Mr. L. H. Brantley of Ivor, Va., very graciously writes: "I received the Bible all right and in splendid condition. I am highly pleased with it. I think every child that is large enough to read should have one of these Bibles. It makes Bible reading so plain and interesting. It is certainly nice for children in every way. Many, many thanks for your prompt attention." We deem it a great privilege to furnish Bibles when and where desired at the very lowest possible price to the purchaser.

—Charles G. Gates, son of John W. Gates, financier of New York, hired a relay of special trains and made a dash of nearly 3,000 miles across this continent to reach New York last Sunday for special treatment for a case of blood-poisoning. The whole distance including all stops was made in 78 hours—the fastest record yet made for so long a journey. From Toledo to Cleveland, a distance of 108 miles, was covered in 97 minutes. The trip over the New York Central lines was made including stops in exactly a mile a minute. The young millionaire offered $5,000 for the special service—and got it.

—The editor was called by long distance Sunday evening to go to Warren County, N. C., to attend, on Monday, the funeral of Mrs. Mollie E. Kimball, mother to two of our dear and esteemed friends, Will and Jake Kimball. Several important letters and much editorial work intended for this issue of The Sun must go over. For duty and privilege call when and where friends, in sorrow, summons. Splendid fellows these, noble sons indeed, and worthy of a queenly, saintly mother. What a mother indeed was sister Kimball. She presided over her home with a simple dignity and a royal manner that was delightful to look upon; and a great heart, as well as a most generous hand, was hers. One of our Southern gentlewomen, of unwon grace and manner, one of our most excellent Christian women, please God, who made home a haven of joy, hospitality a high art, and Christian living a daily pursuit. We have whiled away some glad hours under her generous roof, and it is a privilege, even if a sorrowful one, to go and be with the loved ones who will pay proper tribute and respect to the name and memory of this saint of God who has fallen on sleep.

—The editor of the Sun wants to take a day off some time, go over to Charlotte and see Col. Wade Harris work. We really think the Colonel ought to tell the rest of us how it is done. Every day—except Sunday—the editorial page of his paper The Chronicle, is full to running over, and that too of the liveliest kind of matter, covering the vital and vigorous topics of the times. And, furthermore, nothing seems to escape his eagle eye and voracious pen, that is written worth while, in any of the exchanges. This applies not only to the big papers, but even to the smaller and less pretentious ones as well, such for instance as The Christian Sun, The Anderson Daily Mail, The News and Courier and even The Norfolk Landmark. The wily Colonel gets on to the best that all of them are doing and tells his readers about it. And then every few days he sallies forth from his sanctum and gets in touch with practically every body in the State, even straying sometimes, though happily not often, into his neighboring State to the South and gets on to what's doing there—if anything happens to be doing. We move that President Shipman have the Chronicle editor read a paper before the next Press Convention on "How it is Done."

and good as you can. Be cheerful and see how contagious the influence. Do not think of the unpleasant things so much, nor tell your neighbors and friends of them and they will be glad to see you next time when you are looking well and feeling better. It is natural to desire sympathy but it is often hard to get, and yet it is fine to have help sometimes, but when one helps himself he appreciates it more. When meeting friends if they appear to be in bad health or seem depressed do not discourage them by telling them how badly they look. If they really look so try to help them, cheer them by earnest words of encouragement. Discretion is a good thing to take with you through life. Send a thrill of joy to their hearts instead of discouraging darts.

Am writing these notes on my way to the Valley of Virginia where I expect to assist Rev. J. W. Dofflemyer in revival services. This good brother has been feeble some time, but hope to find him better, and able to work with me. He has been a faithful servant of the Lord, and has done much good where he has been preaching the most of his ministerial life. On my way I ran over to Dendron for a little visit to friends. Stayed with Bro. Robert Spratley, who keeps the hotel. He has an interesting family, a splendid wife, two bright interesting girls and a very promising boy. I thank them very much for their kindness to me. It was special and abundant. Sunday morning I left them to meet my engagement in the Valley.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE MASTER'S BUSINESS.

By Charles A. Hines.

Article V. The Field is the World.

In order to get a proper understanding of the business of the church we must take into consideration God's purpose in establishing it and the mission He gave it. This has been summed by someone in these words: "To carry the whole gospel to the whole world." The early church as established by Christ was distinctly missionary, and our God is the God of all nations. We are chosen heralds of His to spread the knowledge of Him to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Many of the churches seem to work upon the idea that the mission of any church is solely to save its own members, their families and neighbors; that its work should be limited to the community in which the church is situated. What a narrow, small vision of God's church they must have, when two-thirds of the people of this sphere know not God and a large share of them have never heard His name.

I verily believe if we do not the little part we can towards reaching the unsaved of the entire world that we shall be called to account for this great sin of omission.

Read what Paul said along this line in the tenth chapter of his letter to the Romans:

"For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

"How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

By a series of questions Paul has placed the responsibility of world salvation upon the individual church member. He could not have placed it anywhere else. Missionaries can be obtained, if we only had the money. What will God say to us, in that great day, when we stand naked and alone in His presence, and confess to Him that we were one of those 20,000 Southern Christians who gave from six to ten cents a year for the salvation of the heathen world?

Brethren, the call is to the men of our land. Our dollars and our prayers are needed. We have insulted God long enough by giving him our pennies, and keeping the dollars for ourselves. The Laymen's Missionary Movement is the result of the outraged consciences of men who have seen how the matter of foreign missions has been handled, and they have banded themselves together as an auxiliary to the church to increase our gifts for the carrying out of "The Great Commission."

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference at its last session adopted a resolution recommending Laymen's Leagues in every church, and the giving of a cent a week for each member by our churches. Prof. W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College, was elected Laymen's secretary for the conference. We can hardly expect every church to do all the first year that was asked. I hope there will be at least ten churches that will live up to the resolution. Why cannot other conferences start the work? Soon instead of giving 9 cents a year we shall have a per capita of 52 cents; and eventually it will be measured in dollars. Many denominations are now giving more than $4.00 per capita annually to foreign missions. What are we going to do about it? Shall we continue to give less than ten cents a year for each member?

Three things are necessary to increase these contributions (a) Prayer; (b) Education in Missions; (c) Systematic Giving; and there are other things that come up incidentally that might be added. Our denomination has provided for the first by printing monthly prayer calendar. You can get it by writing to our Foreign Mission Board, Dayton, Ohio.

The missionary education must come in three ways: the pastor, the mission committee and the mission study classes.

The method of systematic giving must be provided by the missionary committee. Members should be invited to give a definite sum monthly for foreign missions just as they do to the local affairs of the church. Envelopes should be provided and the member can use these for the offerings.

As soon as the system is well under way the duplex envelope should be adopted. This is a single envelope with two compartments. One end is for contributions for pastor's salary, etc., and may be labeled "For ourselves." The other end is for missions and is labeled "For Others." If you will have these envelopes it will be one of the best educations to be found; one cannot long put money into the end "for ourselves," and nothing in the other end; the unfairness of it is too apparent.

STRENGTH AMID WEAKNESS.

In several important respects there is a large difference between physical and spiritual experiences. There are also very marked differences between natural and supernatural forces and conditions. And this accounts for the fact that people in their natural state cannot see nor appreciate supernatural things. They cannot see why it is that when a Christian feels very weak in spirit he is in a better condition to receive and appreciate spiritual power and refreshment than he is when he feels spiritually strong. And many a professor of religion does not understand this fact. It is not so in physical relations. One who feels weak in body cannot be physically strong at the same time. But this truth is experienced in personal spirituality. It is when the Christian feels unutterably weak in spirit, and lifts his soul pleadingly toward God, that the power of the Holy Spirit comes to him with relieving and exalting might. It is then that the believer appreciates the refreshing power of God as he never can appreciate it when he thinks that he is very strong in spirit, and congratulates himself on the supposed largeness of his spiritual resources. This has long been my own experience. When I felt distressingly weak, even to despair, then there soon followed the in coming of supernatural strength, accompanied by a precious joy. I never had such an experience when I felt pleasingly strong. I never had it when I was in a somewhat satisfied condition. It was only when I felt miserable, weak, and greatly dissatisfied with myself that the heavenly refreshment came, melting my heart into unwonted tenderness, and causing me to respond to the Lord with praise and thanksgiving. I also felt my unworthiness to receive such precious treasure from God. How near God appeared to be! How solemn the hour! At such times, one is led to think of the words of Paul: "When I am weak, then am I strong." Amid weakness produced by the thorn in his flesh, holding him down in the valley of humility, he was made happily strong in the Lord. He was weak in himself, but strong in Christ. Henceforth he never gloried in his own strength, but he gloried in Him who gave him abundant power.

C. H. Wetherbe.

OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT.

The expression so often used in prayer and preaching and testimony, which represents the Holy Spirit as being poured out, has been often ridiculed by unbelievers and discarded by Christians. But it is scriptural. The prophet uses it and Peter repeats it. Why should anyone be ashamed of it? How could anything be more expressive?

President Finney, of Oberlin, used to say that the devil often pours out his spirit and revives his work. When we consider the multitude of evil spirits that infest the earth, we may readily look on them as being poured out in floods. The spirit of pride and vanity, the spirit of greed and selfishness, the spirit of lust and uncleanness, the spirit of ambition and covetousness, the spirit of riot and revelry, often come in like a flood. The devil pours out his spirit in the saloon, in the city slum, in the country slum, in the most aristocratic street and on the most costly and splendid mansions, in the market place and in the streets where trade and traffic abound. It is enough to humble us when we see the evil which sweeps like a destructive flood through the city and over the land.

But, thanks be to God, He is always pouring out His Spirit. As the sun pours down his rays in floods upon the earth, so the Lord God is pouring out His Spirit continually. We do not have to wait for an outpouring of the Spirit of God. It will never fall on the earth in richer abundance than it is falling today. We do not have to plead with God to pour out His Spirit. Many persons pray for the outpouring of the Spirit of God, and then mourn and lament that their prayers have not been answered. They have been disappointed. The Spirit has not been poured out. How blind we are. Men do not all receive the sunlight when it is poured out. One may shut himself in a dark cellar and exclude the light. He may shut his eyes. He may put out his eyes, so that he cannot see. He may walk in darkness while the light is being poured out in floods all about him. So men may shut out the Spirit of the Lord. Multitudes do shut out this light.

Pray not for the outpouring of the Spirit, but pray for an open eye, an open mind, an open heart. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in." As the king of day comes in when the doors and windows are wide open, so the King of Glory, the King of love, the King of righteousness, the King of truth, the King of peace shall come in, and cast out the darkness of sin and death.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

ELON COLLEGE.

To the Christian Sun.

It is a pleasure to express to your readers my satisfaction in having spent a good part of the last week at Elon College, and to give witness to the continued progress of the College since it first came under my observation, and its present condition of efficiency.

A part of my duty was to lecture before the college, and also to lead in a chapel exercise, at which times it was possible to note the personnel of the student body, and their interest in religious and intellectual concern. I have no hesitation in saying that the students are alert and interested in their work, and the maintain a high grade of scholarship. In attending class exercises I found the professors earnest and imbued with the zeal and enthusiasm which creates enthusiasm in others.

Dr. Moffitt, the President, is laboring heart and soul for the upbuilding of the institution. Just now he is taking up the burden of raising $50,000 for additional endowment, in which task he should have the lively co-operation of every well-wisher of the institution in the South.

The college has wrought an inestimable good already in unifying and establishing the churches from Virginia to Georgia, and the securing of the endowment will add much to its future capacity for maintaining our cause.

May the Lord give certain and speedy fruition to Dr. Moffitt's plans in this direction.

CORRECTIONS.

I notice in the Annual, in the statistical table of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference that there is nothing reported on pastor's salary from Happy Home church, which has been paid $125.00 in full. Salem Chapel church was credited by $61.00 on pastor's salary, which should have been $101.50 paid in full.

Also in the Western North Carolina Conference, Keyser should have been credited $5.00 in full on Christian Missionary Association. I have been requested by my secretary to correct these mistakes.

Deserved Celebration.—What is known amongst us as the Authorized, or King James' Version of the Bible, appeared in 1611—three hundred years ago. Beginning March 26th the anniversary of this eventful occurrence will be celebrated in England, and on April 23rd the celebration will begin in this country. It will be a deserved and worthy matter for further emphasis and renown. Looked at from any viewpoint it was a marked and momentous event—this of giving to the English-speaking race the King James version. English scholarship at the time was rich, ripe and dignified. There was a concentrated and combined knowledge of the classics, and of English, at that time not achieved before, and not surpassed since. In 1604, when many versions were in use and there were petty differences and disputes, King James approved the plan for a committee of translators whose rendering should be the accepted version and whose translation should be regarded as authentic. The scholarship and learning of the committee measured up to the requirements of their obligations, and for three hundred years men have wondered at and admired the beauty and the stateliness of the work the King James Committee accomplished in the seven years of arduous toil.

It is safe to say no translation of a book has ever influenced so many lives, and held such undisputed sway for so long a time and covering such a wide diversity of peoples and of opinions.

The American Revision, the English Revision, and many other Revisions are now making their way and winning place and prestige; but people yet venerate, and for decades to come, will venerate the Version that has meant so much to them, and still means so much. The celebration is most opportune and timely, as we see it, even if our inclinations now lead us to prefer the American Revised, or some other.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Wakefield Notes.

It has been some time since the Sun readers heard from the Wakefield pastorate. The work is about as usual and the prospect is bright for a prosperous year. We renewed our church note not long since and cut it down $200.00, and we are trying to get all who subscribed interested so that when the note comes due, we shall be in shape to cut it down again. We have a loyal people here and they believe in doing a thing, and doing it right. Our Christian people elsewhere often think of us and send a few dollars to help cut the note. We wish to thank Prof. P. J. Kernodle for the $1.50 he sent us on our indebtedness. We have often heard it said that it will be Sunday every day by and by. We have been saying that every week is Christmas now, because the gifts keep coming in. Brother Ollie V. Coekes sent us lots of fresh meat, Brother O. J. Coekes, a nice ham and sweet potatoes, Brother J. H. Birdsong, fresh meat. The people in this country will feed and pay their preacher.

The writer visited his old home out near Holland, Va., some time ago, and spent a few days in Holland, with his parents. It is always a pleasure to visit the old home place and meet with old friends and loved ones. While in Holland the writer attended the Christian church; heard a good sermon from the Baptist minister, and at night of the same day the writer preached to a very small congregation. The day was a very rainy one, and the night was dark and stormy, so the people could not come out.

Brother Newman has a very loyal people, and they feel the need of a new church. So we are looking forward to the building of an up-to-date $15,000 church edifice within the next few years.

Brother Editor, the La-Grippe had me last week, so I can sympathize with you, and hope that both of us may not get in such bad hands again soon.

C. C. Jones.

Waverly, Va., Notes.

Somebody asks, "Why don't you write to The Sun sometimes?" My answer usually is, "I have nothing special to write." I have always been disposed to say nothing when I have nothing to say, (except in my Sophomore year at College). Believing it to be a good rule, I have tried to adopt it under all circumstances. However, there are times and circumstances in which I have to say something whether I possess something to say or not; and it is the hardest undertaking. I am humiliated to say that I know the depressing experience of being in the pulpit without a message, and when I look back through my old pile, it seems as though they all were void of message. And yet I know that many times when I have gone to the altar beneath this weight and stood forth upon my feet to speak, the weight has been lifted and the spirit of God has found the best utterances possible through me. Nevertheless, when I undertake to write to The Sun, or any publication, having nothing to say which I feel will help someone, it is a laborious task. The poverty of my own soul and brain holds me from the printed page, preferring to learn by the pen of others rather than to say something myself—merely something.

It is gratitude which prompts my pen today; gratitude which exists upon the noble sentiments of a God-loving and God-fearing people. It is futile to dwell upon Christmas now; the story has been told and we are to far on our way toward the next one. I need not speak of the many rainy Sundays we have had this year and how it has affected the work; every one knows all about that and it is God's business. I may perhaps state that we have not yet, over here, discovered any method whereby we may win people to the Sunday school and the church when it is raining or when it is threatening rain. Scared! I need not tell the number of Conferences held and where I was on the 14th for instance. But I am moved to speak of the gratitude in my heart for the many, many personal expressions of kindness by the people of my churches during the winter months; and for the loyal support of the members in standing by the work and sacrificing for the glory of Christ.

I have not been recipient of an old-fashioned pounding, such as Brother Jones, of Wakefield, recounts in which there were seven old hams, but many a package from time to time has been handed in at my door that has very materially aided me in both my temporal and spiritual welfare. A twenty-dollar note was handed me as a Christmas present for the purchase of an overcoat. For that amount, I secured a twenty-five dollar overcoat, a Stetson hat, three shirts and some other small articles. There have been other valuable gifts with the request "say nothing." One of these I am confident was sent by God, for it came in a moment of distress and very materially aided me. All have been of God out of the Christ spirit, I feel. Only God and my faithful and devoted companion know the trials through which we have to pass and can know the gratitude of my heart for all these things. She shares with me in this appreciation, hoping and praying that we may always and under all circumstances be real ministering servants of Christ to them, communicating unto them the same and to all those with whom we come in contact.

Relative to the loyal support of the church: I have just as great reason for my gratitude. Since last September, the ladies of the church have paid fifty dollars on the parsonage debt and will soon be ready to make a payment of three hundred dollars. Since Christmas a considerable sum has been raised to liquidate the indebtedness on the church. By the first of April we expect confidently to have in hand thirteen hundred and fifty dollars, and the church will be free. A little thought, selection, a timely question, an honest answer, and we have both material and spiritual utterances of a God-loving and a God-fearing people. Not every one enrolled, but many. None of this is due to any effort of my own. I have not taken the first part in it. It is due to the members themselves, all who have any part and are sacrificing to take that part. May God bless them hand in hand with religion and prosperity. There are many things they are not doing I wish they would do. I suppose, however, I had better speak to them about that.

Yours truly,

H. E. Rountree.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mrs. Diana O. Saunders was the daughter of Hamilton L. and Christian Eppes. She was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, April 14, 1831, and died at the residence of her youngest child, Mrs. George A. Tabb, Portsmouth, Virginia, July 14, 1910, at the age of 79 years and 3 months.

She was married to James Riddick Saunders of Nansemond County, April 1, 1847, before she was sixteen; and her husband was only eighteen. Her husband, Maj. Saunders, died July 10, 1893. They were the parents of eleven children and all had Eppes in their names: Ophelia, who married V. S. Kilby; Florence, who died at six; Winfield died in infancy; Ida died in infancy; Leroy; Augusta, who married H. Woodward; Snipe, who died in infancy; James R. Hamlin; Paul; and May, who married George A. Tabb, Treasurer of Portsmouth. Mrs. Kilby and James R. are deceased. Leroy lives in Pittsburg, Pa.; Mrs. Woodward resides in Suffolk; Hamlin lives in Savannah, Ga.; Paul in Archer, Florida; and Mrs. Tabb in Portsmouth, Va. Mrs. Saunders leaves five living children; 20 living grand children; and 10 living great grand children; 11 children, 25 grand children, and 11 great grand children in all, making 47 direct descendants.

Mrs. Saunders' great grand father Epps came to this country from England and took up land on the James River in Prince George County, and the old homestead was called "Aspen Grove." She and her husband were both descended from pure English stock, and their blood now descends into genuine Americans. We were all foreigners a few generations ago, though we often speak of "foreigners," as city people, who came from the country, soon begin to speak of "country people". It is well to keep in mind that some of the best people came from other lands and from the country.

Mrs. Saunders was a member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church, though in her last years she attended the Suffolk church from which she was buried July 16, 1910. The service was simple and tender and the flowers almost buried the casket in which the precious form lay in its last sleep.

She was a woman of remarkable vivacity of spirit, observing her troubles and throwing all that was bright in her life to the surface. Capable of deep emotion, she could laugh or cry, rejoice or grow calm, in the shortest period of time. She made others feel her good feelings and brightened the social circle or the house of the Lord. In her last days she alternated between the homes of her two daughters, Mrs. Woodward in Suffolk, and Mrs. Tabb in Portsmouth, and brightened the home in which she happened to be. She was patient under affliction and always resigned to the will of the Lord.

When I think of the mothers who passed through the Civil War in this part of Virginia, who saw their children around their knees when the roar of cannon was near, and the tramp of armies could be heard, I feel that there was something in those awful days to develop character and trust in the Almighty God.

We live in easy times, in quiet years, and we ought to be thankful and serve God.

In the well-kept family burying ground on the old Eppes homestead we laid her body to rest in the hope of reunion in a brighter home. W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

The friends of Bro. Twiddy will be interested in knowing that he was able to attend preaching services at the Third Church both morning and night yesterday. In restoring him to health the Lord has heard and answered many prayers.

We had several visitors in our congregation yesterday at both services. In the morning Bro. Howsare preached a fine sermon on The Creation. At night we had the pleasure of having "Uncle Jim" with us, and he delighted us with one of his characteristic addresses about the orphanage. He was gladly welcomed and made a fine impression at the Memorial Temple in the morning and at Rosemont in the afternoon.

The Sunshine Society under the leadership of Prof. S. M. Smith perfected their organization at their meeting in the afternoon by electing a full corps of officers.

At the Academy of Music in the afternoon a large and enthusiastic audience heard some good speeches from Mr. J. W. Hough, Pres. of the local Anti-Saloon League, who presided and introduced the other speakers, who were, Mr. John G. Woolley, the great national temperance leader and Dr. J. D. McAllister, State Secretary of the League. This meeting is generally recognized as launching the fight anew. It has for its object state-wide prohibition; and here is the wish that it may speedily come to pass.

THE GREAT GUEST COMES.

While the cobbler mused, there passed by his pane a beggar drenched by the driving rain; he called him in front of the stony street and gave him shoes for his bruised feet. The beggar went, and there came a crease her face with wrinkles of sorrow sown; a bundle of faggots bowed her back, and she was spent with the wrench and rack. He gave her his loaf and steadied her load as she took her way in the weary road. Then to his door came a little child, lost and afraid in the world so wild, in the big, dark world. Catching it up, gave it milk in the waiting cup, and led it home to its mother's arms, out of reach of the world's alarms. The day went down in the crimson west, and with it the hope of the blessed Guest; and Conrad sighed as the world turned gray; "Why is it, Lord, that your feet delay? Did you forget that this was the day?" Then, soft, in the silence a voice was heard: "Lift up your heart, for I kept my word. Three time I came to your friendly door, three times my shadow was on your floor; I was the beggar with bruised feet; I was the woman you gave to eat; I was the child on the homeless street."

Edwin Markham.

THE FIVE M'S.

The president of a big automobile company, in writing about business success, says: "The business man deals with five M's—Money, Materials, Machinery, Merchandise and Men. It is not so hard to get money, materials, machinery and merchandise. Each of these is a given quantity, and with each and all a given result can be obtained. The big thing is to get men."

For man is the varying quantity. A certain amount of money will buy a certain amount of goods. A machine will turn out just so much work in just so much time. But a man—why, he may do nothing, or he may set new limits to possibility. One man like Edison or Marconi in the electrical world, for instance, or Washington or Lincoln in national affairs, cannot be measured in terms of money or machinery. He is an M so big that the rest are nowhere.

But some young men do not in the least realize this possible power in themselves. They range themselves in line level with the other M's, and that is the end of it. They never try to develop their birth-right; and they become mere money bags after a while, or mere machines, or sometimes, even, mere material or merchandise that is bought and sold. They go into business, and have not the manhood to refuse to do a dishonest thing when it is "the policy of the house." Business needs men. American business, with its vast interests and its tremendous pressure needs the strongest men in the world, morally as well as mentally; and each youth who strives toward true largeness of manhood is an asset of national, as well as business life.—New Guide.

BETWEEN THE DAYS.

Between the days—the weary days—
He drops the darkness and the dews;
Over tired eyes his hands he lays,
And strength and hope, and life renews.
Thank God for rest between the days!
Else who could bear the battle stress
Oor who withstand the tempests' shock,
Who thread the weary wilderness
Among the pitfalls and the rocks,
Came not the night with folded flocks?
The white light scorches, and the plain
Stretches before us, parched with heat;
But, by and by, the fierce beams wane;
And lo! the nightfall, cool and sweet,
With dews to bathe the aching feet!
For he remembereth our frame!
Even for this I tender praise.
O tender Master, slow to blame
The falterer on life's stormy ways,
Abide with us—between the days!
—The British Weekly.

Too Much.

Mary—Father, are you a Christian?
Father—Well—yes.
Mary—What is a Christian, Father?
Father—I can't exactly explain it, daughter.
Mary—Father, won't you please show me what a Christian is, then?
Father—Daughter, your mother needs you, I think; run to her at once.

TEACHER-TRAINING—WHY? WHAT?
 HOW?

In 1852 Rev. John E. Vincent, now Bishop Vincent, was struggling in his Joliet, Ill., congregation with the problem of poor Sunday-school attendance. It was no trouble to get the pupils to connect themselves with the Sunday-school, but it was seemingly impossible to keep them connected with it. He thought long and anxiously over what to do, for he felt that something was radically wrong. He began to attend the various classes to see if he could discover the trouble. He found some of his teachers asking questions from the quarterly and allowing their pupils to look up the answers in their quarterlies, while often the teacher had to look in his quarterly to see if the answer was correct. He found another teacher lecturing to his pupils about the lesson, while his pupils were fumbling in their pockets or planning what they would do that afternoon. He found others unable to give adequate explanation of many puzzling questions which the tantalizing curiosity of youth will be forever asking. He found some of them unacquainted with the great doctrines of the Christian faith and entirely ignorant of how to impress the spiritual teaching of a lesson, or how to lead a soul to Christ. And in these observations he had found the reason for the failure of his Sunday-school to hold its pupils.

Why?

And that reason was a lack of trained teachers. It is commonplace in this enlightened age to say that we need training for whatever trade, vocation or profession. Men realize that without first being an apprentice a man cannot hope to be an expert mechanic. To be a good merchant, one must have had experience behind the counter. No doctor would be allowed to practice in your community or home, who had not taken his long course in preparation. The public school teacher must not only take a course fitting him for teaching, but he must take an examination before he can be allowed to experiment with the people's minds. Shall we not also demand an adequate preparation on the part of those who are to teach the truths that mean salvation to immortal souls, if they are properly presented? Bishop Vincent decided long ago that we should demand it and began pioneer service in that direction, and his name will ever be associated with the great ones in religious work and methods, as one to whom God gave a great idea. In his day there were no Teacher-Training Courses and few books available as source of material for such courses. He had to blaze out a path for himself, and this he did, teaching his teachers and prospective teachers how to teach, what to teach, how to prepare the lesson, how to master the Bible, how to win souls, and many other useful and helpful things.

What?

There have been many experiments since Bishop Vincent's pioneer effort in the matter of Teacher-Training. Many mistakes have been made and perhaps we are not even yet arrived at the goal of perfection in this great work. At first there was opposition to the movement, and this was natural, for men had felt that if the Lord wished a man to teach in the Sunday school, He would miraculously prepare him. Men had forgotten that God never does for us what we can and ought to do for ourselves. Be it said to their eternal honor that the teachers and prospective teachers were not the serious objectors to this new movement, but the high dignitaries of the churches, who by a sort of fatality have nearly always opposed a new movement or idea in the religious sphere. From the day of its incipency, however, until this day there has been a steady growth in general interest and a marked improvement in and enrichment of the courses of study provided for such classes. By 1900 most of denominations had prepared their own courses. Naturally there was considerable difference of opinion as to what should be included in a course for Sunday-school teachers and this difference manifested itself in the various courses that were open for selection. There were also some non-denominational courses to be had. By 1908 there was a feeling generally prevalent that uniformity as to subjects treated would be a desirable thing and there was general agreement as to what these subjects should be. Experience had been effectual in these two directions. Accordingly in 1908 the Educational Committee of the International Sunday-school Association met in Louisville, Ky., and proceeded to adopt standards for Teacher-Training work. It was decided to offer two courses: The First Standard Course and The Standard Advanced Course.

The First Standard Course, it was decided, should be a one-book course of a minimum of 50 lessons, to be apportioned as follows: on the Teacher, 10 lessons; on the Pupil, 10 lessons; on the Sunday-school, 10 lessons; on the Bible, 20 lessons. It is not required that this course should precede The Standard Advanced Course in point of time, for each course is complete in itself, but to offer to those who do not care to take a two-year course a minimum of general preparation for the noble profession of Sunday-school teaching. The ideal would, of course, be to begin with the First Standard Course and then take the Standard Advanced Course, but it will be hard to get a class to be willing to do that. Either Course will give a good preparation, and perhaps it will be well to start with whichever one your class seems to prefer.

As already intimated above, the Standard Advanced Course is a two-book course and consists of a minimum of 100 lessons, to be apportioned as follows; on the Teacher, 10 lessons; on the Pupil, 10 lessons; on the Sunday-school, 10 lessons; on the Bible, 40 lessons; on Missions, 10 lessons; on Church History (denominational), 10 lessons; and 10 lessons to be devoted to such subjects as the editors may elect. All courses desiring the International approval the to be submitted to the Educational Committee of the International Association are to be submitted to either course will entitle him who has passed a satisfactory examination thereon to a diploma both from his denomination and from the International Association provided he has complied with the conditions governing registration and examination. In addition to this the International Association provides for special Briefer Courses in the special grades of Sunday-school work, such as Primary Specialization, Adult Class Specialization, etc., for the completion of which certificates will be awarded, or seals added to diplomas already won.

How?

If you desire to organize a Teacher-Training Class in your school, you will first of all canvas the situation and decide whether you can have a class for present teachers or for prospective teachers or for both. If for prospective teachers, the class can meet in connection with the regular school and rank as a regular class. If it is to be for present teachers or for both, some time different from the regular Sunday-school hour must be sought. Do not suppose that you must have a dozen or more to have a good class. I have known two or three to constitute a good class. Do not suppose that the teacher must have taken such a course. The teacher ought to be a fairly good teacher, but the chief characteristic which he will need is the ability to lead and to quicken interest. Do not, if your class meets in connection with the regular Sunday-school, form the bad habit of using its pupils as a substitute teachers' class, for no teacher can bring a Teacher-Training class to its best under these conditions. After the class of prospective teachers have taken the course, the proper thing is to organize them into a substitute teachers' class and not before. If you cannot get a class in your school, you can certainly get an individual, who will agree to take the course by correspondence.

As soon as your class is organized, report it to your denominational Teacher-Training Secretary and to the Teacher-Training Secretary of the International Association in your State. These officials will be able to furnish you with suggestions from time to time that will electrify your work and make it much more successful. Such action on your part will also entitle your class to the diploma of your denominational Teacher-Training department and to the seal of the International Association thereon or vice versa, according as you elect.

When a class has completed its course, there should be graduating exercises and the diplomas and honors should be publicly conferred. This will add dignity and worth and prestige to the work and the workers and tend mightily to perpetuate the Teacher-Training idea in the congregation, and it certainly needs to be perpetuated. For Teacher-Training is not a fad that will soon have served its day, but an eternal necessity which must always be present in the well-ordered Sunday school. It is an imperishable part of an enlightened religious educational policy.

What Has Been Done in the Christian Church.

In May 1908 at its Greensboro session the Southern Christian Convention provided for a Two-Book Teacher-Training Course. The committee began work at once and in November of 1908 the first volume appeared. This book has been adopted very generally throughout our entire brotherhood, North and South, East and West. The second volume appeared in January of this year and is meeting with a ready sale. The two books have been approved by the Educational Committee of the International Association as a Standard Advanced Course. These volumes present the following subjects: on the Teacher, 12 lessons; on the Pupil and the Sunday-school, 10 lessons each; on the Bible, 47 lessons; on Church History, 15 lessons; on Missions, 13 lessons; and on Soul-saving, 4 lessons. The lessons under the Bible include a comprehensive view of the Bible, Biblical History, Biblical Doctrine, Geography of Bible Lands, Christian Giving, Public and Private Biblical Antiquities, and the Bible as Literature. The lessons on History include a brief resume of Church History since Bible times, the History of our own People, and a short account of the Principles of our Church. The books contain respectively 236 and 256 pages and are sold for 45 and 65 cents, according as the binding is paper or cloth. These books may be ordered of J. N. Hess, Dayton, O., or J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

At its Suffolk session in May 1910, the Southern Christian Convention charged its Teacher-Training Committee with the additional duties of bring out a revised edition of Preparing the Teacher, Book One, which is the first volume in the Teacher-Training Course mentioned above and with the power to prepare and publish a First Standard Course for the Christians, if in their judgment there should be need for it. In the preparation of this course the idea has been to prepare it not for the Southern Church alone, but for all of our people. The contributors represent our Northern as well as our Southern Church.

Questions on the Topic.

One of the very best ways of drawing out the younger and less experienced members of the society is to ask questions on the topics of the meetings.

These should not be questions that can be answered by yes or no, and they should not be leading questions. They should be queries that really test the mind.

The questions should be given out a week in advance, or at least several days ahead of the meeting. It is better to send them by mail than not to use them at all.

Never let it be known that you have been asked to answer a question. Answer it as if the answer just occurred to you.

A Word for the Society.

The Christian Endeavor Society progresses, like any other good cause, through the praise of those that have got good from it.

Speaking to others about the good points of the society will help you to see more of them.

Praising the society in the presence of those that believe in it is well, but it is even more helpful to praise it to those that do not understand its advantages or believe in it. Give them facts.

Invite the doubting ones and give them a good time. What we see, we believe.

At His Right Hand.

The true Christian Endeavor Society will stand at its pastor's right hand, a useful tool ready for any service.

Arrange instrumentalities for this purpose. For instance, appoint a pastor's aid committee, whose entire duty it is to place itself at the disposal of the pastor to do any work he may desire done.

Make it perfectly plain to the pastor that you want him to use the society in all its parts. Get him to be present at the meetings of the executive committee whenever it is convenient for him, and

Makes Home Baking Easy

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
 Absolutely Pure

 A Cream of Tartar Powder,

there let the chairman of every committee ask him what that committee can do to further his work. Make your society indispensable to the pastor.

Set Up a Standard.

A pledge is simply setting up a standard of purpose and accomplishment. No growth in mind or spirit is possible without ideals. Those that deery pledges in our societies are deerying standards and ideals.

No one wants to set up your standards for you. The four pledges suggested by the United Society of Christian Endeavor are the standards found commonly acceptable and useful, but if they are not acceptable to you or likely to be useful, there is every reason why you should set up your own standards, make your own pledge.

Only do not rest satisfied without the formation and expression of ideals. Do not try to get along without the equivalent of the Christian Endeavor pledge.

A pledge is not a creed, but a covenant. Your pledge is to Christ, not to the Society.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Our motto is: Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday-school, a Christian Endeavor Society in each Church. Can't you help us make this a reality in your church and Sunday-school?

The second biennial session of the Young People's Convention will be held at Elon College, N. C., April 15-17, 1911, or Saturday, Sunday, and Monday of the Easter Season.

This Convention will seat as delegates the officers of all the Young People's and Sunday-school Conventions in the Southern Conferences, all ordained ministers of the Southern Christian Convention actually engaged in pastoral work, representatives from each local Sunday-school, Teacher-Training Class, Organized Class, Home Department, and Christian Endeavor Society, one for each 25 of the enrollment, each organization to have at least one delegate. See to it that you come and that your congregation has the delegates it is entitled to.

This Convention will present in its program every phase of Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work by the best talent of our church. It will also determine its relation to the Young People's Worker.

Elon College is the best place in the world for such a gathering as this. Send all information in regard to delegates to W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

We will furnish you, free of charge, pamphlets dealing with Christian Endeavor, Teacher-Training, and Organized Classes. A postal will bring them to you.

Be sure to attend this Convention.

Remember the date: April 15-17, 1911.

All together for a great Convention.

C. E. TOPICS FOR MARCH 6.—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Aid for the Tempted. Heb. 2:14-18.

The Pastor:—Have the pastor read the Scripture and give a five minute comment thereon. If your pastor cannot do this, get the president of the Society to do it.

The Leader:—Temptation is not sin, but yielding to temptation is. We are daily tempted, but we do not necessarily have to sin. We shall not be able of ourselves to meet and overcome temptation. We must look to God to help us. We must pray. We must know the promises of the Bible. We must be able to trust ourselves in His hands. Otherwise we shall fail and miserably fail. We sometimes sin because we are not sure the devil is tempting us. This enemy of our souls has varied and sundry ways of approach. He sometimes tempts us in the person of our dearest friends, sometimes in our own desires. We must pray not only then for power to resist and overcome his evils, but also for power to see and discern him when he approaches. Some such message as this the leader will give in his five minutes.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Washington's Birthday was duly celebrated at the college this year. The college regulations with regard to young men and young ladies meeting in a social way were suspended from 10 A. M. until 5 P. M. A charming menu was served at the West Dormitory, not only for dinner, but also for breakfast and supper. The evening was taken up with the annual entertainment of the Clio Literary Society. Mr. C. J. Felton, Magnolia, Va., presided and in well chosen remarks discussed the power of the orator to influence public opinion and public sentiment. The first number on the program was a chorus "George Washington is a Friend of mine," which was especially composed for the occasion by Mr. R. A. Campbell and set to music by Miss Wilson of the Music Faculty. This number was well received. Mr. O. M. Barnes delivered a vocal solo in baritone, Danny Deever. He was followed by Mr. G. C. Cobb, Savannah, Ga., who undertook to discuss the pet doctrine of our distinguished ex-president, New Nationalism, in a forceful oration. Mr. J. A. Dickey, Jr., Burlington, N. C., gave a burlesque on the Elon College Weekly. During this burlesque Mr. Dickey impersonated an old farmer who had just received a copy of the Elon Weekly from his son, who was a student at the college, and the humorous thrusts at his fellow students met with much applause. Mr. R. A. Campbell then rendered a cornet solo, which was much enjoyed.

The chief interest, however, has always centered in the debate, which this year occurred upon the query: Resolved, That the World conditions demand an Increase in the Navy of fifty per cent. Over Last Year's Appropriation for the next ten years. For an hour and a half there were sword thrusts and masterful argument and rebuttal by Messrs. G. G. Holland, Holland, Va., and C. W. Roundtree, Cypress Chapel, Va., representing the Affirmative and Messrs. Fred. F. Myrick, Boaz, N. C., and W. R. Roberson, Washington, N. C., representing the Negative. The judges of the debate were J. Adolph Long, Esq. and Prof. E. T. Lindsey, of Graham, N. C., and W. D. Everett, Esq., associate justice of the Police Court, Durham, N. C., who after consultation rendered the decision in favor of the Affirmative, but awarded the medal for best orator to Mr. W. R. Roberson of the Negative. The last number of the program was a music selection by the Society Quartette, "Hearest Thou." This Quartette is composed of Messrs. R. L. Walker, J. S. Lincoln, O. M. Barnes, and R. A. Campbell. The secretary of the occasion was Mr. J. P. Farmer. Marshals were J. S. Lincoln, chief. W. M. Haskins, R. L. Walker, and C. E. Geringer.

Mr. Reps. Williamson is visiting the family of Dr. Atkinson this week. Mr. Williamson is a warm friend of Elon and is welcomed here with cordiality.

Pres. Moffitt is still in Eastern Va., in the interest of the Special Fund and will be gone for a few weeks yet. A letter from him today states that he is meeting with encouragement and anticipates further successes.

Dr. Frank S. Child, Fairfield, Conn. and Mrs. Child will arrive at the college on the 5th of March, and will remain for a few days. Dr. Child will deliver a course of lectures while here before the student body.

Under the auspices of the Athletic Association the Dramatic Club of the University of N. C. presented "She Stoops to Conquer," on Saturday evening of this week to a large audience. We were glad to see C. C. Fonville, our Elon graduate, playing a leading role.

Mr. Charles Butler, of the United States, that is to say, travelling singing-evangelist, who is helping Pastor Smith of our Greensboro church, came to Elon Saturday morning and sang three songs for the students and villagers, punctuating his vocal renditions with becoming remarks. Mr. Butler was cordially and enthusiastically received here.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Beale Johnson, Cardenas, N. C., visited at Dr. Atkinson's Saturday and Sunday and then went to Greensboro to attend the revival in progress there. Elon has no truer friends than Mr. and Mrs. Johnson.

Dr. Atkinson preached a great sermon at the 11 o'clock hour Sunday. Following the sermon was a baptismal service by Uncle Wellons.

Uncle Wellons is now (Monday) sick of Bronchitis. It is his intention if he recovers in time to attend the Greensboro revival.

Rev. L. D. Cox has recently made extensive improvements to his home. So has Mr. M. A. Reitzel, Mr. J. P. Huffman has just begun his new residence and Mr. J. J. Lambeth is soon to begin his. Elon has the building fever.

Miss Stella Cox, Columbia, S. C., is on a two weeks' visit to her parents. She has an excellent position in a large insurance office employing 60 agents. Her many friends are glad to see her at her old home.

The Inter-Scholastic contest which is to be pulled off this year on Easter Friday evening, April 14, bids fair to be a success. A preliminary contest will occur on Friday afternoon and the final contest that evening at 8 o'clock in the chapel. There is great interest here manifested in this contest. The faculty offers a medal for the successful contestant in this contest.

Dr. Newman occupied the College pulpit on the third Sunday and preached to great acceptance to a large and appreciative congregation. His sermon was all the more interesting as the Sunday-school lesson had dealt with the same theme.

Dr. Moffitt left for Eastern Virginia on Saturday to be gone for a few weeks in the interest of the Special Fund of Fifty-thousand Dollars. Prof. Lawrence represented the same in the Bethlehem community Sunday and did work that will result in future pledges. Prof. Wicker secured $150 in Haw River for this fund Sunday. The Walker Avenue Greensboro Church, where Prof. Harper went on Saturday and Sunday, did the handsome thing by the College, giving $1,000 with more to follow.

The Literary Address at the approaching commencement in June will be delivered by Chief Justice Walter Clark, of the N. C. Supreme Court. Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, N. C., will deliver the Baccalaureate Sermon at commencement. The speaker who will deliver the medals to the members of the graduating class, who may have won them, has not yet been announced. The representatives of the senior class for commencement are Messrs. R. A. Campbell, J. S. Lincoln, J. J. Ingle, and A. C. Hall, and Misses Beulah Foster and Affie Griffin. The society representatives at commencement are, for the Psihphelian Society, Misses Mabel Farmer and Maggie Isley; for Philologian Society, Messrs. Anderson and W. H. Fleming, and for the Clio Society, Messrs. J. A. Dickey, Jr. and C. F. Felton.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence, who is to teach English in the Wooster University Summer School during June and July of this vacation will also lecture before the Summer school of Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, which is one of the largest summer schools in the north western portion of Ohio. His subject on this occasion will be the Homes and Haunts of English Authors.

The Young People's Convention of the Christian Church, South, will convene here from April 15 to 17, being Saturday, Sunday and Monday of the Easter season.

—Dr. H. M. Hammill, Superintendent of Training Work of the M. E. Church, South, and a member of the International Committee on Teacher Training writes thus of Book II of our Teacher Training course edited by Prof. Harper and others now offered for sale by The Christian Sun "Book II Preparing The Teacher has come to hand. I heartily endorse it as a part of your Advanced Course."

As touching this same book Dr. J. J. Summerbell writes:

215 Fourth Ave., Dayton, Ohio,

Feb. 6, 1911.

Prof. W. A. Harper, A. M.,

Dear Brother:—I have not yet had time to read, word by word, the second volume for the instruction of Sunday school teachers (entitled "Preparing the Teacher, Book Two") of the teacher-training course authorized by the Southern Christian Convention; but I have faithfully spent three hours in its examination, and say that it is a highly valuable work because of certain qualities:

1. It is well arranged;
2. Its subjects are well chosen, as a book following your former one;
3. The writing is usually good in literary quality, some of it being high. As a rule, few words are wasted;
4. The religious tone and spirit are to be approved;
5. It does not attempt to be a cyclopedia; and yet it contains much matter that ought to be known by a S. S. teacher;
6. Its price (65 cts. in cloth, 40 cts. in paper) is low, considering the amount of type-setting in the volume.

The enterprise is an honor to those managing it."

—Prof. W. A. Harper, Dean of the Elon College Faculty, went to Greensboro 3rd Sunday of February, and secured in subscriptions for the Special Fund, now being raised for the college, $1,000. This is indeed a most liberal contribution, by our Greensboro membership, which if other churches equal will at no distant date total the amount desired, $50,000.

—Our Walker Avenue church, Greensboro, is enjoying a gracious revival. Pastor L. E. Smith is doing the preaching to great acceptance and Mr. and Mrs. Butler are conducting the song service, of which the Greensboro papers speak in highest terms of commendation. Tuesday four joined the church. Congregations are measured by the capacity of the building and on Sunday night scores were turned away for the want of standing room even. Much good is being accomplished and there are many professions.

—Canada turned back a number of negro immigrants to that country from the U. S. the other day and quietly said: "Not wanted." It is not certain what our country will do in the matter as negroes are citizens here and as such must have proper treatment at the doors of other countries.

They that know no evil will suspect none.—Ben Johnson.

My Dear Children and Friends:

This leaves us quite cold, and ice is on all sides. Such weather hurts and checks our farm work very much and delays that which we would like to do. We are hoping to plant a large crop this year and especially of grain and vegetables. We are very much in need of a riding cultivator for our corn crop and a reaper and binder to harvest our wheat with, and we need a large range with covers as large as possible—if any of our friends should find the way by which any one of these necessities could be secured we will greatly appreciate the information.

Our twenty-one little pigs are growing nicely and we hope they may yield 200 lb. hogs next Dec. We will sell some of them. We had our final hog killing last Friday and had 38 lbs more than we reported.

We are glad to enroll new cousins and new Sunday-schools; plenty of room for both cousins and schools. Our report is short this time. We hope you will report promptly. Give us a regular hearty co-operation and we will be grateful.

Fondly Yours,
Uncle Jim.

Chapel Hill, N. C.
Feb. 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here come our dimes for Feb. It was raining this morning so we couldn't go to school. We have some little biddies and a little calf too. We like to feed them and see them grow.

Very truly,
Annie Neville,
Grace Neville,
Hubert Neville.

How rich you are in babies children! Do you love them? Little flower babies have not quite lifted their pretty heads but won't you have a good time when they do?

Manry, Va.
Feb. 13, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am going to send a nickel for the little cousins. I hope it will help them a lot. I have read some of the letters the little girls have sent, I am going to help them. I will stop but will come again next month and send another nickel. Love to you and the cousins.

Amy Morris.

Ah, that's a fine promise, Amy and you are heartily welcome. Be sure to "come again."

Suffolk, Va., R. F. D. 2 b 28.
Feb. 19, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

We have been reading the Sun for a long time, and enjoy the children's letters very much, and have decided to write a letter for the first time. We are three little girls age 10, 8, and 5 years. We attend the Methodist Sunday-school. But our parents are members of Bethlehem Christian Church. Enclose find 15 cents for the Orphanage.

With love to the children.

Mary Ellen Hingerty,
Leone Virginia Hingerty,

So glad to welcome these little Va. cousins. May their nice letters brighten our pages "twelve times" this year.

Boykins, Va.
Feb. 15, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I guess you think little brother and I are not going to send our dues for January as we are waiting so late, but never too late to do good. We have both been sick with deep colds. We were so sick mama sent for Dr. Bland, for us, and Uncle Jim, he is a real good doctor too because he gave us some good medicine, so you see I liked him fine for that, Bro. Ralph has just begun to walk now, and I think that is just fine, because in the spring time he can go out in the yard and play with me, now won't that be fine? he almost has the croup tonight and mama has been doctoring him, but he is a buster just the same. We enclose you a dime each for us, will write again soon and send our dues for this month. Will now close with lots of love to you and the cousins.

Your little Nephews,
James Carroll Barnes,
Ralph King Barnes.

Guess you won't mind Drs. boys, if they give you good medicine. However, I believe their visits sometimes are so pleasant that little folks do not mind even if they do have to take "nasty stuff."

Crews, Va.,
Feb. 14, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am late this month, did I send my dues last month? I don't remember. I send dues for February with lots of love to you and the cousins.

Your fond little niece,
Helen S. Foster,
T. Clifford Foster.

No children you are not credited with Jan. dues. Hope you are learning fast at school.

Franklington, N. C.
Feb. 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed find two dollars, for the orphans. We failed to send any last year, and will work and try to send some more by this fall. We are also working for mission money and are kept pretty busy.

With love for all the little orphans, and best wishes for you all.

Your little friends,
Jamie Pearce,
Rebekah Pearce,
Eugene Pearce.

We are so glad to be again remembered by these little girls from Franklinton, N. C. They must indeed be busy bees.

Beaton

Bro. Robert Beaton died at his home in Southampton County Virginia, Feb. 7, 1911. Aged 61 years, 9 months, 20 days. He had been a member of Johnson's Grove Church 36 years. During this time the purpose of his life seemed to be to live a true and consecrated Christian life.

During his last sickness, his suffering was intense, but this was borne with Christian grace and meekness. A few days before his death he told his wife he was soon going home to heaven and asked her if she did not wish to go with him.

Jan. 10, 1871 he was married to Lucy Beale. His wife, one son and two daughters survive him. Two children have preceded him to the spirit land.

He also leaves one brother and three sisters.

He will be greatly missed in his church, in his community, but most of all in his home. May the Lord comfort and keep the bereaved and sorrowing ones in this time of bereavement.

Funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer.

R. H. Peel.

Wagoner.

At Altamahaw, N. C., Feb. 9th, 1911, Mamie Wagoner, daughter of Albert and Mary J. Wagoner. Mamie had been afflicted about five years, dying at the age of 8 years, 1 month and 11 days. May our heavenly Father comfort the sorely bereaved family. Funeral by the pastor

J. W. Holt.

He was a member of Long's Chapel church since its organization, served as secretary and deacon, and was devoted to his church. He was a justice of the peace for more than 20 years and served 4 years in the Civil War, eighteen months of the time he was a prisoner at Point Lookout. He was a kind husband and father. Burial and funeral at Union church in the presence of a large concourse of friends and relatives.

J. W. Holt.

Brown.

Henry Brown died after a brief illness January, 1911. He was for several years a member of the Christian Church at Pleasant Grove, Randolph County, N. C. He leaves a wife, and eleven children all under 21 years of age. Brother Brown had purchased a farm but a short time before his death and was arranging to build a residence thereon. How uncertain is life! While we are anxiously planning about earthly things how careful we should be about heavenly things.

W. S. Long.

Summers.

Willie Vance Summers, the little babe of Charley W. and Ader M. Summers was born Dec. 30, 1910, and died Jan. 25, 1911. The little babe was only 27 days old, but leaves a father, mother, three brothers and three sisters to mourn its early departure. Little Willie was a bright and interesting child and was the joy of father and mother. He was too sweet and pure for this world and God called him. Burial was at Bethlehem Christian Church cemetery. S.

Flint.

Miss Mollie Flint, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Flint, from near Salem Chapel, was called from her earthly labors on the 2nd day of Feb, 1911, at the age of 32 years. She was much devoted to her family and church, ever faithful in the performance of life's duties. While her health would permit she took an active part in the various enterprises of Salem Chapel church, of which she was a member, and of which she was organist.

At the age of 14 years she entered Elon College, and there she was characterized by her studious habits, modesty, refinement, and devotion to the various duties of College life. At that time she was suffering with rheumatism; notwithstanding all was done that medical aid and human hands could do the end came Feb. 2nd.

When she realized that the end was near she prayed that hers might be an easy death, closed her eyes and passed away without a struggle.

Hers was a beautiful life and a benediction to those who knew her.

EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

has often heard class-members say: "I cannot understand the Bible." They could not understand any other book that was printed three hundred years ago. So many English words of that day were different. More than forty new dictionaries have been required since then, to keep up with the changes in the English language. The

American Standard Bible

Edited by the American Revision Committee uses the words of our day, which make the meanings of the Bible writers clear to us.

No man has to knock at the entrance to temptation; the door is always open.

Forbidden things are not so apt to look good unless we have been looking at them too much.

If Jesus the Carpenter could take a piece of rough olive wood and make of it a door frame for a rude stone dwelling in Nazareth, I know that as the divine Carpenter he can take the poor material of my life and make it to serve some useful purpose in his kingdom, if I will let him.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT OUR NORTHERN AND WESTERN BRETHREN: IN THREE PARTS.

By W. E. MacClenny. Ph. B.

I. Organizations.

When Revs. Abner Jones and Elias Smith became the organizers of the Christian Church in New England there were only a few churches, and these do not appear to have been organized into any conference or association for some years. Each church was separate and distinct. Revs. Barton W. Stone and David Purviance who were the leaders in the movement in the West were opposed to any kind of church organization. As was the case in the South, they feared organized effort in their church work. General meetings were held in each section, but these were of a revivalistic nature, and little, if any confessional business was attended to.

It was not until 1808 that the United States General Conference held its first session at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and in 1815 the session of that body was held at Windham, Connecticut. In 1819 the third session was held at Portsmouth, New Hampshire. At this session it seems that every section of the Christian Church was represented unless it was the Old North Carolina Conference, which followed Rev. James O'Kelly after the division of 1910, in the South.

In the West the first organization was among a body of Christians that came from the Baptist under Rev. John Mulkey, and were sometimes called "Mulkeyites." These had a conference as early as 1809. The Eastern New York Conference in the West was in existence.

In the North four different kinds of conferences were held: 1st, The Elder's Conference, 2nd, The General Meeting, 3rd, The Annual Conferences, 4th, The General Convention. In the history of the denomination the latter has had several names; viz: The Convention; The United States Christian Conference; The General United States Christian Conference;—this was the popular name during the twenties,—this met each year except 1828 and 1830 until 1832 when it was dissolved forever at the session at Milan, New York.

In 1831 the Convention proceeded to organize a Book Concern and in 1834 it was organized, but this drifted into a business concern, and did not return to the Convention till 1866. In 1833 an informal convention was held in New York City, which arranged for a General Convention at Union Mills, New York in 1834, and from that date on it has met every four years. At first it was known as the General Convention, and in 1866 at the session at Marshall, Michigan, it was named the American Christian Convention, and a constitution was adopted.

As at present constituted (1910) the American Christian Convention exists to maintain and promote the Charitable, Religious, Missionary, Educational and Publishing Interests of the religious body known as Christians, and it includes the following departments: Missions, Education, Publishing, Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor and Finance. The mission department has two secretaries, Home and Foreign, and each of the others has one.

In 1829 the Ohio Central Conference was in existence and had thirteen churches as members, and in 1840, 114, and home and foreign missions were discussed. In 1843 a convention was held at Ebenezer Chapel, Blake County, Ohio, and seven conferences were represented, six in Ohio and one in Indiana, to look into the publishing of a newspaper.

August 31st, 1844 the Tippecanoe Conference of Indiana was organized with fifteen churches at Mt. Pleasant, Cass County, Indiana.

In 1854 at Cincinnati, Ohio, The General Convention divided on the vexed question of slavery, and did not reunite until 1894.

In 1845 The New England Convention was organized at Lynn, Massachusetts. This meets annually in the month of June. Some years ago this convention authorized: "A Statement of General Sentiments held by the Christians." While this was not a creed, yet it was generally accepted by the churches of New England.

About March 29, 1894, plans were laid for the establishment of a home for old and worn out ministers and their wives by some Christians in New York State. To Rev. P. R. Sellon and his wife Mrs. Lois L. Sellon belong the honor of first conceiving the idea of a home for aged people. A home was purchased in Castil, New York, and on May 15, 1895 Rev. B. S. Fanton and wife paid their entrance fee, thus becoming the first persons to enter the home. Later the home was removed to Lakemont, New York where a house and four acres of land have been purchased. Later the institution was endowed by Hon. Francis A. Palmer.

UNFAIR JUDGMENTS.

All of us need to be exceedingly careful in our judgments of other people. Oftentimes we are too hasty, and hence we misjudge people, and perhaps to their decided injury. Even when we feel disposed to be very charitable toward our fellows, we may wrongfully judge certain ones, because we are governed by appearances which deceive us. Circumstantial evidence is not always reliable, for some circumstances do not have such a connection with certain ones as we thought they had. I have sometimes found that I was decidedly mistaken in any judgment of certain ones, for I depended on some circumstances which, though appearing to be against those persons, were really not so. There was ground for suspicion, but it was not sufficient to make out a case of just condemnation. A great many wealthy men have been very unfairly judged by many critics and carpers. Mr. Rockefeller is one example. Even his motives for giving large sums of money for purely benevolent and philanthropic purposes, have been most unfairly judged. His good character, from youth to old age, has availed nothing with his censorious judges. Several years ago I read of a young man who worked very hard, at moderate wages, and under close limitations. He was exceedingly saving, and economized in every possible way. Many who knew him, in a general way, called him miserly and very selfish; but in the course of time, it was learned that he was saving his money to provide a home for his poor and aged parents. Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, says: "It is a sad and miserable condition of mind to have no eyes but for wounds and bruises and putrefying sores, and to find these beneath the surface, when they do not appear in the eyes of others. Our ignorance of

THE GREATEST GIFT.

(The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. 6:23. Golden text for Sunday March 12.)

The gift of eternal life is so great, so gracious, so incomparable, that Paul rightly calls it "the gift of God." It is certainly the one supreme gift. There are none others like this. To make this gift available did Moses and the prophets work and write, did David and Elias and Jesus live and labor and strive. Other than through this gift life is a blank, and living a curse. Far better were it that we had never been born than that this gift should never have been made, nay verily, and made available with us. The gift was of God.

The gift was made available through Jesus Christ.

Let us keep it in mind and heart that it was a pure gift. There was no purchasing or persuasion about it. God gave eternal life. It could not be purchased. It was too precious; too valuable; of too much worth. It could not be bought. It is without money and without price. It is a gift, is eternal life.

No man has ever received eternal life save as a gift, pure and simple.

The channel of communicating this life to man is through Jesus the Christ, the only begotten son of God. Through Him this wonderful, this supreme gift, with all its riches and abundance, becomes available to man by belief upon His name, and His power to save.

All life hinges upon belief. Eternal life is no exception.

You are bidden not to take poison. You believe it will not hurt you—and you partake to your undoing. You are told not to expose yourself to cold and rain and hunger. You believe these will not hurt you—and death ensues. You are told to eat, sleep, labor with moderation. You do not believe indulgence, intemperance will hurt you. You persist and life goes out. All life depends upon belief. In the lesson of today the son was dead and might not believe. His mother believed for him. The prophet Elisha believed for him. And they intervened. Resuscitation followed. Life hinged upon belief. In How many thousand sons have been saved, brought into life from the darkness and coldness of death, because a mother, because a friend intervened. We not only save ourselves, we save others by our belief.

And here is one of the most beautiful lessons of gratitude anywhere recorded.

ed. Elisha was grateful for the kindly and kingly treatment he had received in this hospitable home. In order to show that gratitude he gave his strength, his energy, his very life, his faith and his earnest prayers. Gratitude, a godly virtue.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

The pity of it, the great and grave pity of it, my dear brethren, that we of the Christian church are doing nothing of a practical nature to profit by, or to aid in, the great Laymen's Missionary Movement. Benefitting by the spirit of this movement, and the inspiration derived from it, the other churches around us are increasing their contributions to missions, and to other purposes, some fifty and some a hundred fold. What are the Christians doing?

We met a distinguished layman of another denomination last Monday morning, on his way back to his work from a Sunday appointment at two churches. He had been out in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and by taking individual pledges from members of the churches present he had more than doubled the pledges for home and foreign missions in both churches. "It is the easiest work I ever undertook," was his verdict. "All that is necessary is to tell the people of your mission and call on individuals to give or pledge, and the work is done." And yet, while the brethren wait and are willing, we do nothing to realize benefits from this wonderful opportunity. Where are those beautiful resolutions we passed in Convention and in Conference? Where are the men who were going to do the work; appointed or elected to mobilize our forces so that our Christian cause might benefit by this movement?

The pity of it, the very heart rending tragedy of it, that we meet and resolve and resolve and resolve, and then go home till the meeting of Conference or Convention again.

If this Laymen's Movement cannot reach and stir us, or if we will not move to meet it and reap the blessings and benefits from it, then dear brethren, for what do we exist, for what do we hope or what do we expect?

Do the laymen of the Christian church care not at all for our progress, or for any movement or measure that will help? God forbid. Yet if there be care wherein is it expressed?

A PREACHER AND HIS PAPER.

Our good and cheerful brother, Bro. J. H. Barney, Clearville, Pa., in the cause of a personal letter to the Sun's editor recently said, "No, I cannot let the Sun—shine go out of my home until the grave covers all that is mortal of J. H. Barney. If I become careless and forgetful just call my attention to the fact. You know preachers forget, as well as other people. Wonder if that is the reason some ministers never subscribe for either The Herald of Gospel Liberty or The Christian Sun. What do you think about it?"

We cannot understand how a minister who is in the active service, or who cares anything about his church and its work, could do without his church paper. We have an idea that such a minister would not amount to much in his life or in his influence, so far as these touch the local church or the church at large.

So far as we know, or have any way of knowing all the ministers, both active and other, of the Southern Christian Church subscribe for The Sun, and most of them read it very closely and all of them, so far as we have ever known, and its friends and its readers and willing advocates and supporters. And for this we are very grateful. For the paper needs, and must have, the support and co-operation of the preachers, as they need and must have the sympathy, support, and co-operation of the paper in their work. God forbid that this condition should ever change within the meets and bounds of our good Convention and its churches.

Many of our ministerial brethren in the North and East do not take The Sun (many do, however,) but we presume all of them take The Herald of Gospel Liberty. On no other ground can we conceive of their intelligent co-operation with what the paper, and the church, stand for and represent.

THOSE REMINDERS.

We sincerely trust that no Sun reader who received one will ignore our recent letter urging those now due to renew for The Sun another year. There were some mistakes, of course. But write and tell us so we may clear these up. There were very many that were not mistakes. We have to pay for printers, paper, postage, every week. We cannot wait. These bills must be met. Our only hope of meeting them is to bear from those who are now due us. We sent out 1275 of those letters. Yours may seem small, but sending that number cost us and we trust our subscribers will respect this cost and kindly answer the letter sent. Don't ignore the 'reminders.' If we have made a mistake write us; if we have not send us your renewal, friends. Thank you very much.

WHY LIMIT GOD?

Man is not more powerful than God. Nay, verily, man has no power save that given him of God. All power cometh from God.

And yet, when all has been said, a man limits the power of God in his own life. A man may exclude God, and the saving power of God from his heart and life.

"Blessed are the merciful," says the Word. Then the unmerciful, by implication, are not blessed. Therein man excludes from his heart the mercy of God. God is willing enough; God is merciful enough; but man cannot receive mercy unless he himself is merciful. Man makes the condition of mercy in his own heart. He excludes the power of God's mercy to reach and operate upon him.

"Blessed are the pure in heart." The impure in heart, then, are not blessed. Man prepares in his own heart the conditions of mercy, or the lack of it. Man may shut the door of his own heart against the power of God to make the heart pure, good, holy. But He knocks and knocks and if man will let Him in He comes in and sups with man—abides in the heart. We may give God full power and let Him have His own way in the heart every day and all the time. Do not limit or exclude God from the heart, life, soul.

THE GOSPEL WINS.

Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander, preacher and songster, respectively, have just closed a great revival in Brooklyn, N. Y. At one service—on Sunday afternoon—1,200 young people confessed to acceptance of Christ. "The great Clermont Rink has been filled again and again with thousands, intent upon the word and swept from time to time by tides of deep feeling," says a New York exchange. There is no sort of public speech or gathering that attracts and holds the multitudes as the gospel message. There is that in the gospel to which the human heart responds. "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts," sang the Psalmist. And the deep of man's heart ever responds to the deep of the gospel's call, when that call is uttered in clearness, truth, sincerity and simplicity.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

The Plague.

Such a plague and famine, as now prevail in China and in Manchuria, do not seem possible, in this enlightened and progressive era. The news that reaches this country tells of terrible conditions, and the prevailing opinion is that, for political reasons, China is guarding and suppressing, as far as possible, details of the conditions that really prevail. It was announced in the dispatches of March 2 that there had been 30,000 known deaths, and that the present death rate from the plague is 200 a day. It is estimated that 2,000,000 people are without food and are existing on roots or anything that affords the possibility of nourishment. The few who happen to have any grain guard it night and day. This is in the district where the famine prevails, and where the death rate is several thousand a day from want of food—many thousands more dying from the famine than from the plague. Physicians say that this is the worst epidemic that has visited the world since the middle ages.

So far America and Japan are the only nations that have contributed any considerable amount to the sufferers. When Christianity shall have introduced into all the earth the methods of obeying God's laws and doing His will, famine and pestilence and plagues will disappear from the earth, but not till then.

Gambling.

Dr. Wiley a Harvard graduate of 1873, and now occupying a high position in the Federal Government, told an audience recently before whom he was lecturing that he had just returned from an inter collegiate ball game where every collegian seemed to have a bet on the game, and where he himself was asked in a casual way, how much he 'had on it.'

We fear that Dr. Wiley was not far wrong. The spirit of betting, of gambling, is in the very air of this nervous time of ours. We are inclined to the opinion that the evil attaching to inter collegiate games is not in the games, played out now on a highly scientific and often in a most honorable manner; but in the gambling that attaches to the games among the "rooters and camp followers."

We note that a distinguished physician commenting on Dr. Wiley's statements declares, "As a medical man, I am convinced that gambling at cards has had much to do with the increase of nervous breakdown among a certain class of women."

At any rate the spirit of gambling is certainly rampant and aggressive in the land, and is a most dangerous and ividious one. Christianity has a task before it to break down and clear out this spirit that wrecks so many lives and ruins so many homes.

—Send me a copy of Wellons Family Prayers, and Principles and Government of the church. I try to purchase for our home almost all the books gotten out by our people that pertain to our church." That is a good rule to follow, and we forwarded the books ordered promptly.

We rejoice with our brethren of Greensboro. They have enjoyed a very great and a very gracious revival. Mr. Charles Butler and wife led in song and in much good work as well, and did their work in a most masterful manner. L. E. Smith did the preaching to acceptance and to the delight of the great audiences that gathered. On several evenings many were turned away, unable to gain admittance to the over-crowded church. There were upwards of forty professions of conversion, and nineteen joined the church before the meetings closed. The church was greatly edified, and blessed beyond measure. The services closed Sunday night last and many feel that Greensboro has not had such a revival in years. Pastor Smith and his flock feel greatly encouraged.

—"I gladly renew my subscription to the cherry and ever welcome Sun. Enclosed is draft for $1.50" Thank you brother. That sounds so much better than "Do not care to renew; stop my paper," where there is already due; maybe, 75 cents or $1.50. I wish that word "stop" would go entirely out of practice, and that "discontinued" could be abolished, so far as Sun's subscriptions are concerned. Brethren we do not love to see "stop," "discontinue" and such. What! Going to stop your church paper, stop this source of church help and religious information? Don't do that. It is too bad.

—"I shall never forget my visit to Elon and the South, and the kindness I received from one and all with whom I came in contact. God bless the Christian churches in the South. She is making wonderful strides in advancing the Master's kingdom and thereat my heart is rejoiced." Rev. J. H. Barney, Clearville, Pa., writes that generous line.

—The great fight against tuberculosis spreads over all the earth and becomes more aggressive and determined. Associations for the prevention of tuberculosis have been formed in Cuba, Porto Rico and Trinidad. In Cuba there are over 40,000 deaths from tuberculosis every year and the death rate from this disease is nearly three times as high as in the United States. In Porto Rico there are over 6,000 deaths every year out of 1,000,000 inhabitants. Trinidad, the death rate from tuberculosis in Port-of-Spain, the only place where figures are available, was 4.75 per 1000 in 1909, nearly three times the rate in New York City. Conditions in the other islands of the West Indies, where no active campaign against tuberculosis has been undertaken, are even worse. The chief reason for this high mortality is found in the unsanitary, dark, and poorly ventilated houses of the natives of the islands.

many of the facts should make us pause. A merchant, considered to be wealthy, was judged to be penurious, because he gave so little to missionary societies. After his death, it was discovered that he had educated a whole family of poor relatives, but had kept it an absolute secret." Be cautious and fair about your judgments of other people.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

Dear Brother Editor:

As one trying to serve my Maker all the way through life, and having been taught by a mother that was one of the purest women and sincerest Christians I ever knew, the right from the wrong, (she now is with Jesus awaiting her loved ones to come), this question: "What Would Jesus Do?" has appealed to me and is still appealing to me. Yet the more it revolves in my mind and the more I read God's Word and talk with Him, the more convinced am I that I have the right version of His teachings and that my dear mother was right in the way she taught me concerning the right and the wrong side of life. The sad side of this question with me is brought from the fact that most of the church members and many preachers, of the various denominations, are preaching and teaching an "up-to-date religion," which brings the "Christian down" to a level and places the church member on an even plane with the world. Then, should we consider that we are right and they wrong? Surely one of us must be mistaken, and it appears that there are a larger number lowering the standard than there are that continue to hold it up in the fullest sense. Then, shall I fall in line and work and labor to promote God's Kingdom, when we are pulling down the established standard of religion that our fathers taught and even going so far as to make of the houses "Dedicated to God" places of amusement (directly or indirectly) equal to the common every-day theater and other places of amusement? Brother, "What Would Jesus Do?" I do not care to be forced to be a part of these things, folly so common with churches of today, and yet, I do want to be affiliated with the church and do all I can to promote the true church of Christ. And it must be to Jesus to know that we of today are so weak as to help promote the devil's work in the church and in the homes, just because we make a little money by so doing. In answer to the bell at my door a few days ago I found a nicely dressed young lady who was out canvassing homes to sell tickets to one of the Moving Picture Theatres. She said they got half the proceeds for their church debt. So sad this was to me that I simply said "No we do not patronize the Theatres." Just a few days before I had been told by three different men who dabble with baseball bets and gambling pools that their games were no more gambling than going to church festivals, fairs, socials, etc., and raffling and auctioneering. One of them mentioned wheels of chance, which we have heard of at these fairs. Say, beloved, what could I say? Do you see the point? What did I have to offer in religion, when so many of the same profession as myself walk daily with them in their sins? I said this to them. "Gambling is gambling, wrong is wrong. I do not attend them or approve of them in the guise of the church or any other way, or place, and shall always vote against such works." We parted, but these men knew that a large number of church people do approve and participate in and help make the devil's works a success. A large, influential church in the city with a number of ladies canvassing from house to house "because we get half the proceeds for our church" to sell theatre tickets. May God help us.

A miniature theatre to train our children to love the stage, the ball room, the high life. Let's turn to our Bibles: Read with me St. Luke thirteenth chapter, eighteenth to thirtieth verses. Now, how can we expect to enter into rest with Jesus if we are the direct cause of leading and I might well say, dumping, our future men and women into these vices of sin and degradation, under the influence of the evil one and because we ourselves love these worldly amusements? It is time to wait upon the Lord on our knees until He has cleansed our lives, and He can never do this until we repent of our sins and live clean lives, "Wholly unto God." Then we will teach and preach and lead others to Jesus in such a way that the world has never known before. Dear friends, let's go to the Lord and wait until we get enough of the spirit of life to enable us to let go all worldly sins, and by all means do not force them on our neighbors because we want to indulge in them ourselves. May God help us to preach the gospel and above all after preaching it, live it daily, is my prayer.

The daily patronage of so many of our church people in Norfolk upon the theatres and the promotion of socials, lectures and stereopticon views in so many of the churches for the purpose of "Just Raising Money" has led me to contribute these few lines on this subject, with the prayer that God will awaken his children from being trapped by the evil spirit, and save our homes and the boys and girls from the hands of the wicked one.

HIGH TRIBUTE.

The following we regard as among the very highest tributes yet paid to the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly by W. E. McClenny. It is written by one who is himself a ready writer, a profound thinker, and the author of several books of great merit, the Rev. Thomas Holmes, D. D., LL. D., of Chelsea, Michigan:

"The following is my tribute to the Life of James O'Kelly:

I have read with great interest the Life of James O'Kelly, by W. E. McClenny. My testimonial to its merits and the importance of that work is expressed fully by Dr. J. J. Summerbell in his able presentation of its merits, that have appeared in the columns of the Sun. It furnishes the best account of the critical period in the history of the Church, when the spirit of human liberty passed over from the state to the Church, that has ever been written; and gives honor to whom honor is due in that most important step in human progress. It ought not only to be in the family of every member of the Christian Church, but in the family of every Christian, and especially of every minister of the gospel of Christ in this land where the true idea of both political and Christian liberty had its birth."

THE HOUSE OF GOD.

I will try to pen a few words on the above subject, as I have seen so many go there just for fun-making, seemingly. That is, to make fun of others and never think of what our blessed Master said to the money changers in Jerusalem, "It is written, My house shall be called a house of prayer, Matt 21: 13; and it remains a house of prayer, for God's words do not pass away. I do not lay all the blame on the young folks for the fun-making. Some grown people go to church to see and to be seen and even to talk about others who are not dressed as well as themselves. This is a sin and a shame. It is disturbing public worship. I have had some experience on that line, as I am a Sunday school teacher. I have some of the talking and laughing kind to visit me and my class sometimes and they bother me much less than they do a preacher where there is a large congregation of talkers. I do not lay all the blame on the children. From my viewpoint the parents are more to blame than any body. "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." Prov. 22: 6. If parents do not send their children to Sunday school and teach them to love God and to respect His house as the house of prayer we cannot expect them to do so when grown. Mothers and fathers, please train your children to respect the house of God, to love and serve our blessed Savior. If all our parents will do this, it will do away with our fun-makers at church. I do not mean to say go there pretending to fast and look sad as the Scribes and Pharisees. We should go to church in the right way, and for the purpose of worshipping our Savior. Those who do this have far greater joy than the fun-makers. God's house is a sacred place, and should be so regarded by all.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Dr. E. L. Moffitt has been in Eastern Virginia Conference for more than a week in the interest of Elon College. He has visited Suffolk, Berca, Wakefield, Dendron, Waverly and perhaps other churches and will be with Rev. I. W. Johnson at Liberty Spring tomorrow, March 5th. I think he has averaged about $300.00 a day for the special fund since coming to this conference. In addition to this he has some good subscriptions in prospect and these will swell results.

If people could appreciate the natural obligation of church membership to the church college, it would make raising money for the college more of a pleasure and less of a task. The public school can no more meet the requirements of education than public roads can meet all the requirements of travel and traffic. States need state institutions and churches need church institutions. These institutions represent the ideas, tenets, character, purposes of their constituencies, and create sentiments, centers, influences that maintain and advance the interests of such bodies. The great daily papers cannot meet the moral and spiritual needs of a denomination. There must be a church paper—an organ as the mouthpiece of the organization; so the church college is the expression of the educational aspiration and endeavor of the denomination. It challenges the confidence and support of the membership of the church.

In reading the history of the United States I find that most of the generals in her armies were graduates of West Point. That simply illustrates the fact that most of the ministers come from church colleges. What would the nation be without ministers? What would the church be without ministers? When the question is followed to its ultimate there is no standing ground for the objector or the indifferent.

It may be illustrated in another way. There is county tax or city tax and then there is state tax. The payment of local taxes does not exempt the citizen from the State tax though he has never been to the Capitol of his state, and receives no direct benefit from the State. His county or city could not exist without the state and all his local pride and support are linked with the state; so local church pride and support are only partial in their demands, and members who go no further are not feeling all the obligations of church membership. An adequate distribution of benevolences and support from church members always includes the denominational college. It is the center, the heart of the denomination, receiving its vital force from the churches and then sending this force back through the body, purified and ready to vitalize the whole system.

When Dr. Moffitt or his representative comes to your church help him to lift the debt from the institution and to lengthen its cords and strengthen its stakes.

PREPARING THE TEACHER.

This book admirably supplements the companion book which preceded it. Edited by those efficient and splendid workers, Prof. Harper, Prof. Lawrence and Prof. Wicker, we ought to feel assured as to the results of their labors, and we are not disappointed. They have brought together in compact form a large amount of valuable instruction and suggestion. It is not for me to give any outline of the work as that will be done by others; it is simply my privilege to write in words of high commendation concerning the task which has been achieved and the kindred tasks in which these faithful brethren are engaged. They are members of a strong band of devoted men who are seeking by every honorable kind of effort to deepen and enrich the Christian life of their people. The book has therefore the ring of enthusiasm. It goes over a broad field with thoroughness. It discusses the various matters involved with broad scholarship, marked sympathy and fine discrimination. It quickens in the mind a fresh interest to our path. It buttresses our faith in the things which cannot be shaken. It encourages the reader to fresh fidelity and earnestness in the study of the precious Book. We congratulate the brethren upon the achievement of this work and we look for a large and cordial use of the book by students of the Bible.

TWO VOICES. A CONTRAST.

Last night while walking silently among the trees, watching the stars, I heard a voice on another hill singing in sweet tones,

“Jesus Savior, pilot me

O'er life's tempestuous sea.”

Almost in the same instance I heard a voice along the highway taking the name of God in vain. “What a contrast,” I cried, to hear the sweet voice of a soul singing the praises of the Savior, while another filled the air with horrid words. The voice of the drunken, arousing merriment soon hushed, while the other rang on in a tone that filled the air with music. “The deeds of the wicked soon perish; while the righteous live forever” says the wise man. How true this is! We see it being fulfilled every day. Last Thursday as I sat on the car with a man, of long experience in the school room, he said, “Two boys, of good character and minds, come to my school once. Both boys of the same community, of the same chances in school, about the same age. One a wicked boy, the other a true Christian. They started in the same class. The boy who was a Christian soon left the wicked one behind, soon finished his course and went away to college. Ten years past and one day while in the town of ———, the court bell rang calling the court together. I went up into the court room. There strokes of the gavel were heard, and looking at the face of the judge, behold he was the boy that left his class mate ten years ago. The sheriff marched some prisoner's into the room; a familiar name was heard, and how strange it really was. For here was my boy that was left. But as I looked at him I said, to myself, “What a pity; you are left again unless your school mate (the judge) sets you free.”

“Don't understand me to say that a wicked man can not make a success in his studies and make a successful man, but the trap along the road of a sinful life oftentimes catches the hopes, aims and ambitions of a young man.”

The porter called out my station, and with much regret I had to leave my friend. But I am thinking yet of the voice that sings, and the voice that swears.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

O'Kelly's.

I was with Bro. Wells at O'Kelly's Chapel recently in the interest of the church at Chapel Hill. The weather was very inclement, but the congregation reasonably good. The brethren, sisters and friends, as they do every where I go, showed high appreciation for the Chapel Hill work, by their good wishes and pledges. God bless the Chapel Hill church.

Christian Light.

The church has commenced work on the remodeling of the house of worship at this place. May God be with them.

W. G. Clements.

Chipley, Ga., Letter.

I feel very glad, in deed, that the District Meeting of the Alabama conference was a success. This church has been trying to have the meeting for several years. But it seems that something would happen; either rain or cold, and sometimes both. This time the weather was good for winter, and all who attended report a good time. There is nothing so helpful, generally, as these meetings are to our conference work. One thing of special interest was done; and that was the passing of the motion asking the pastors to assist in raising the ten thousand dollars asked for by the secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. We may not raise much of this, but with this effort, there will be more sent in from this part of the work than was last year. I know that the Foreign Mission interest, in some sections, is suffering at this time. Some times the way seems dark. I have almost decided that we need this test. Every other movement has to undergo a test of some kind. But when the movement in itself is stronger than the test there dawns a brighter day. Even the trees in the forest as they are shaken by the winds that blow take deeper roots and more firmly plant themselves into the mother earth. Why may we not prove that way against the winds of the tempest?

I notice also some interesting accounts of the District Meeting in the Georgia and Alabama conference.

Rev. H. W. Elder filled his regular appointment at Oak Grove last third Sunday. The weather was good and a large congregation met him; and everybody seemed to be delighted with his excellent sermon.

I have been around to all of my work the past month except to Lanett. Was hindered from this point on account of sickness. My work is in very good condition. I have two other places this year than those I had last. The work at Shaw went on the fourth Sunday afternoons, while I am at Langdale, and Wadley has also been added which takes the second Sunday, this being the mission point to which I was elected last fall.

Some one may be wanting to know what we are doing at this point. I expect to let to contract and buy the material for the building by the 15th. We have a neat plan and when the house is completed it will be valued at about two thousand dollars. I am not going to say but very little about it, though it is generally understood that it takes money to do work like this. And, where there are only a few, as there are here, more of the money has to come from the outside. Yet, I am not begging. I am only too glad to give this opportunity to those who are anxious to help. The whole conference has been looking this way for a time. Therefore, every church is just waiting till the first step is taken when they will take hold. So the iron is hot, raise your hammers and listen at the anvil ring!

You may hear more of this work later.

I will receipt for all money sent for the Wadley work, either at the above address or at Wadley, Ala.

Greensboro.

A series of meetings began in our church Feb. 23, and Sunday night March 5th closed one of the most successful meetings it has been my privilege to assist in for quite a while. It was indeed an inspiration and a blessing to have Mr. and Mrs. Chas. U. Butler, conduct the music and preliminary services. Mr. Butler is undoubtedly one of the greatest evangelical singers in America. He is most tactful in congregational singing and when he sings his solos the audience is in tears. There is an effectiveness in his singing that you rarely find. His knowledge of the Bible and faith in God is peculiarly noticeable. Mrs. Butler is his equal when it comes to singing, and on the last afternoon of the meeting she conducted a woman's meeting, the house being packed to its utmost capacity, and a great meeting was reported. We were unable to seat all who attended, at times, there being between two and three hundred people turned away from the last service. As a result of the meeting, there were between 35 and 40 professions of conversion and 19 additions to the church. I have three more names for membership, and there will likely be several others. The Lord was with us in great power, and our church was wonderfully blessed.

Brethren pray for the band here that is still faithful. We are expecting great things of the Lord and have thrown ourselves upon Him for service. The loyal members of the church were most faithful in every service, always willing and anxious to work anywhere and in anyway the Spirit might lead.

Norfolk Letter.

This being communion Sunday, Bro. Hanson, Deacon Bowden, Bro. B. L. Nichols and myself went to the home of our Bro. Col. A. Savage this afternoon and served him with the emblems. It was a privilege that he seemed to enjoy. He is gradually growing weaker all the time, suffers a great deal of pain, says he is praying the Lord that as soon as it is His will that he be taken home and until then, that he be given strength to bear the pain. He has only one son now living, and he is afflicted in a way that the most eminent physicians say he can only live for a few weeks. It is a question now, as to which will be called to go first, father or son.

Mrs. E. L. Myers, once a member of the Memorial Temple, and known to many Sun readers, a sister of our Miss Susie Turpin, who had been a great sufferer for about 6 months, was called home on last Tuesday morning. Loving hands laid her to rest in "Forest Lawn" cemetery, and over the grave was spread the most beautiful and profuse offering of flowers that I even saw at a funeral, which in a measure was an indication of the love and esteem in which she was held.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—"The Sun grows better with every issue. I could scarcely do without it. In fact I do not see how any member of the Christian Church can."—Miss Media Ward, Hightowers, N. C. Thank you, good friend, and for the agreeable personal word. All work goes better when it is appreciated, even that of an editor.

—The second biennial session of the Young People's Convention will be held at Elon College, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, April 15, 16, and 17. Every Sunday school should see to it that one or more delegates attend. The Program Committee are at work on what promises to be an interesting program. Prof. S. M. Smith, Norfolk, Va., is President.

—"The Choir" for March devotes all its reading space to a full sketch of Fanny Crosby, the noted hymn writer. Mrs. Crosby contributes also a personal letter and original poem to the editor. The music of this number is mostly for Easter. A sample copy will be mailed free to choir leaders who write for it. Fillmore Music House, Cincinnati, O., or Bible House, New York.

—Our venerable and beloved brother, Dr. J. B. Weston, Defiance, Ohio, in renewing his subscription to The Sun very graciously adds: "I enjoy the Sun and the spirit it shows, and its record of the progressive and aggressive activity of our churches in your latitude. Still larger faith, larger zeal, larger consecration, larger baptism of the Spirit of Christ, would open to us larger opportunities and larger success in our work."

—We have at The Sun office, Elon College, another shipment of Christian Hymnaries. Churches wishing same can get their orders filled promptly. The price fixed by the C. P. A. is 50 cents the copy, plus freight or express charges, to churches; 75 cents single copies by mail. This is exceedingly cheap for a book of this size and quality. The book as now revised and improved is finding much favor and is being adopted in many of our churches.

—Our good brother, Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre, Elkton, Va., now impaired by ill health from pursuing the loved work of other days in which he was so faithful and efficient, writes, "I am not able now to get out to do any thing and find nothing I can do for the cause I love so much other than to pray for it. My meditations now are about God and his goodness and mercy to His people, and that sweet home prepared for His faithful servants. I know that my days are few and I want to be looking for Jesus when He comes to take His servant home. God bless the dear Christian church." And God bless dear Brother Dofflemyre who has labored so diligently these long years to lift the banners of his church high, until the last victory is won.

—That good brother, faithful friend, and distinguished scholar, Dr. Thomas Holmes, Chelsea, Mich., born by the way, Nov. 24, 1817 and so now enjoying a happy and wholesome life at the age of 93, plus a few months, in renewing for The Sun for another year takes occasion to say, and very graciously, "I am truly indebted to The Sun. I have read it, (and I have read it) with great interest; and never without wishing I had time and ability to write something apropos of what I found therein. I will say, however, that I will try in time to come to send you an occasional contribution." That is a happy promise indeed for a man in his 94th year, and we shall hold the good doctor to it. God bless him and lengthen his years yet, years that have been rich indeed in many good works and in much that pertains to making life better and happier.

NEWS ITEMS.

—Within an hour after the 61st Congress adjourned March 4, President Taft had issued a call for an extraordinary session to convene April 4. The object is to have the Congress deal with the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada.

—The State Sunday-school Convention for North Carolina is to be held at High Point Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, April 26-28. Mr. Charles Butler is to be in charge of the singing and Marian Lawrence, General Secretary of the International Association of Chicago is to be present and make several addresses. The railroads are to give special rates.

—Speaker Cannon delivered his valedictory as Speaker of the House March 4th after serving as Speaker for eight years. People would have put up with Cannon in better grace had he not been so profane in speech, and because he swears so readily many are glad that he is to occupy a position not so conspicuous as that heretofore occupied by him. We have outlived the day of the profane man in high places, be his brain ever so big and brilliant.

—A motion is shortly to be submitted to the Convocation of Canterbury, the high court of the Church of England, to abridge the second, fourth and tenth Commandments. Some are too long to suit the moderns and the tenth puts a man's wife and his ox in the same category. What modern critics of the Bible cannot think of to wrangle over seems not worth thinking of at all. Still the Commandments stand and the Bible goes on in its glorious work of converting fallen men to better lives.

—The Legislature of North Carolina in its recent session made appropriations of $1,607,000 to its various institutions and enterprises, for the next two years. The Jackson Training School, Lexington, our "Reformatory" gets $25,000.00; the University of the State gets $87,000.00 annually for two years and $50,000.00 annually for four years for permanent improvements. The State Normal at Greensboro gets $87,000.00 annually for two years for maintenance, and $25,000.00 for four years for permanent improvements; the A. and M. at Raleigh gets $80,000.00 for maintenance annually for two years and $15,000.00 for four years annually for permanent improvements.

—Rev. F. B. Upham recently wrote an interesting paper or "The Ten Best Hymns," one of which was "Rescue The Perishing." The Outlook of New York, by no means of the evangelical type of paper, said the reason why "Rescue The Perishing" was classed so high was, not from merits of its own, but because of personal interest aroused in it by a "captivating young singer" who had recently interpreted the song. It comes out that "the captivating young singer" who interpreted the song was none other than Fanny Crosby the venerable and beloved who will celebrate her ninety first birthday March 24th. This is a laugh indeed on The Outlook whose high theories have more than once fallen before stubborn facts.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THE ORGANIZED CLASS—ITS PRINCIPLES.

The Organized Class Movement will soon be 21 years old. In 1890 Marshall A. Hudson originated the idea in Syracuse, N. Y., calling his class the Baraca Class. Since then the Organized Class or Adult Bible Class Movement under various names has spread around the world. What does this movement stand for? What are its cardinal principles?

The fundamental principles underlying the movement are four-fold—organic connection with Sunday school, loyalty to the Church, devotion to Bible study, and Christian service. The Organized Class is an organic part of the Sunday school, reports to it, contributes to its expenses, is subject to it, and counsels for its welfare and development. This, however, does not preclude the right of such a class to carry on enterprises of its own distinct from the activities of the whole school. Many such classes make large contributions to Missions, home or foreign or both, to the Christian Orphanage, to any enterprise worthy as it appears to them. The class should have a separate room of its own for recitation purposes.

The Organized Class is also loyal to the Church. It must tolerate nothing which the local church with which it is connected does not endorse or approve. Further than this it is an organization tending to build up the Church in membership, in efficiency, in spiritual life and influence, in every way possible adding to its prestige and power.

The Organized Class is in the third place devoted to Bible study. The teacher of such a class should be skilled in getting his pupils to study the Bible. No study is so interesting as Bible study and none yields so large returns in life and character development. If your pupils do not study the Bible, something is fundamentally wrong. If you can't right it, you had better resign. I would not tolerate in a Sunday School of mine one of these so-called Organized Classes which study at the regular Sunday school hour courses in Social Science, Health Culture, Farm Life, etc. If the class desires to investigate such themes, let it be at another than the regular meeting hour of the Sunday school. At this hour there should be Bible study.

Then the Organized Bible Class stands for Christian Service. This it accomplishes by its Committee organization. There are membership committees, social committees, sick and visiting and flower committees, music and missionary and publicity committees—committees on any and every conceivable line of Church work, not in any one class however. Through these the members are enabled to get good training in Christian Service. And such service is necessary for the growth and fruition of the Christian life. The lack of the opportunity to do such work has led to the dwarfing of many promising young Christians and to the back-sliding of many times more. The successful Church not only converts the sinner and enrolls him in its record book, but supplies him work to do. Such work the Organized Class provides.

N. C. STATE C. E. CONVENTION.

The N. C. State C. E. Convention meets this year with the Burlington Christian Church, Dr. P. H. Fleming, pastor. We have a goodly number of Christian Endeavor Societies in N. C. and all our Societies should be represented. The program is a strong one and will cover every phase of Christian Endeavor work. Dr. C. H. Hubbell, Adrian, Mich., is to be present and give expert assistance in all the sessions. Of our own people who are to appear on the program are: Rev. C. E. Newman, Rev. T. E. White, Rev. L. E. Smith, Rev. L. I. Cox, Prof. W. P. Lawrence, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Brother Newman will tell how to make C. E. go in a country church. Brother White is to discuss C. E. on the mission field. Brother Smith is to show how young people are related to the church. Brother Cox and Prof. Lawrence are on for quiet hour services. Dr. Atkinson will tell how to reach the reached and save the saved. And this is only a small part of this really great Convention. Be sure to attend and to have your Society further represented. Try to organize a new Society in your Church or community before the Convention. Remember the date: March 31—April 2. Send your name and the time of your arrival to Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., at once.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION

Uncle Wellons is an active member of this Convention and so it is not a children's affair. It will bring together the best talent of our Church. Its programs will discuss all the vital problems of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. The speakers will be the best we can as a people provide. The audience will be composed of the cream of our interested workers—those who give promise of leadership and larger things in their several communities. The place will be Elon College. The time will be April 15-17. YOU cannot afford not to be present. YOU need the Convention: the Convention needs YOU: Notify W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., of your intention to come and of the time of your arrival.

Mr. J. Van Carter, Field Secretary of the N. C. Sunday school Association, is to attend the N. C. State C. E. Convention at Burlington and also the Young People's Convention at Elon College, and will make addresses before each body. Mr. Carter is making good in the difficult and responsible position to which he has been called. He has shown our people every consideration and for this we thank him.

The Committee of the Whole.

Every Christian Endeavor Society should act as "a committee of the whole." It should be a unit. Its members should be so loyal to the organization, take such pride in it, that what is decided by the society as worth being done will become the ambition and aim of every member.

Perhaps this ideal cannot be reached at once, but it can be approximated. Let those that believe ardently in the society get together and make up their minds to act in concert, to support one another, and to co-operate to make the society "go."

It is amazing to see what can be accomplished by only five or six persons that work together and are thoroughly determined. It has been said that ten men, all whose energies were bent upon it, could convert any city. This is not an exaggerated statement. Test it in your society.

An Interest in Missions.

You cannot form and maintain an interest in missions in your society without a live missionary committee. Place your best members upon it; keep them there till they have developed other workers to take their places, which they should do very soon.

There are twelve missionary topics in the year.—one-fourth of the meetings. Make them shine and you will contribute wonderfully to the success of the society. They will not be successful unless you get the members to studying missions. The secret is the assignment of individual work, to be reported in the meeting. A chapter of a book to tell about. A missionary's life to summarize. A map talk on some mission field. The account of the characteristics of some religion. Such definite work as this.

Going to the Root.

Whenever the affairs of the society lag, it is because there is a reason for it, and the reason can be discovered. Do not rest satisfied until you have discovered it.

If, for example, your prayer meetings are spoiled by the mischief or the careless indifference of a few, do not merely scold those persons. Look deeper. Perhaps the meetings are not really interesting; then make them so. Perhaps the society is not in sympathetic, vital touch with those young people; then get in touch with them.

There is a way out of every difficulty, there is a success back of every failure. Find it.

Work for the Children.

You have children enough in your community to form a Junior Society.

Your society needs a Junior society, to furnish a constant supply of fresh blood as the Juniors graduate into it.

The church needs a Junior Society, to care for the boys and the girls at precisely the age when they most need spiritual nurture.

What is in the way of all these blessings? Only the lack of superintendents!

And how is this lack to be met? By dividing the work among a number, so that it will not rest heavily upon anyone.

Keep Christian Endeavor Fresh.

We may keep our Christian Endeavor zeal fresh by taking up new plans of work, and not confining ourselves to the tasks that have become easy and commonplace.

We may freshen up the old tasks by doing them in new ways or with new applications.

We may get in new members and work their fresh enthusiasm.

We may attend Christian Endeavor conventions, sure that there we shall find new aspects of the work brought forward.

We may learn about the work in lands that have only recently taken up Christian Endeavor and are in the fervor of their first love.

We may make Christian Endeavor new and interesting to some one that has become lukewarm in the work.

Best of all, we may keep close to God, and draw ever-new zeal from His exhaustless being.

C. E. TOPIC FOR MARCH 19—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

The Right Use of Money: Prov. 14: 24; 1 Tim. 6: 17-19.

A Leaderless Meeting.—The Topic Committee of the United Society has provided for variety's sake that this should be a leaderless meeting. This does not mean that the meeting is not to be planned for. On the other hand it will mean more careful planning than a meeting with a leader. When the Society has met, let the one designated to look after the prayer-part of the service request some one to lead in prayer. Later on in the meeting he will call for further prayers and for the concluding prayer. There will be another to look after the music in a similar way. A third will voluntarily so far as the Society is concerned, but by pre-arrangement read the Scripture and comment. Another will make a talk that would admirably take the place of the leader's talk and there will be voluntarily answers given to questions that have been handed out and voluntary giving of Scripture verses that have been arranged for beforehand and brief comment thereon. Such a meeting ought to be most interesting.

A Suggestive Talk:—Ours is a money-making age and our land pre-eminently a money-making land. What shall be done with the money we make? There has been a tendency to condemn money-making. This is wrong. Wealthy men are necessary. It is as much the duty of some men to make money as of others to preach the gospel or edit newspapers. Money-making is a good gift and not to be despised. If money is honestly and honorably made and used and dedicated to the uses of God and our fellow-men, it is all right. We can serve God with mammon, but we cannot serve God and mammon. Do not stop with making money but regard its use as Christian stewardship.

Questions for Voluntary Answer:

- Why is money necessary to business?
- Why to the Church?
- Why for missions?

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The Winter Term Recital of the Department of Expression occurred on Thursday evening of this week at 8 o'clock in the presence of large and appreciative audience. This was the first pupils' recital since Miss Clements became director of this department, after her graduate study in the Leland Powers School of Oratory. Consequently there was considerable interest in the appearance which her pupils would make. Even her most sanguine friends here were delighted at what they saw and heard. Eight of her pupils appeared on the rostrum and each of them acquitted himself or herself with credit. The first number was given by Miss Mary Foster of Burlington, N. C., being a selection from Paine entitled An Early Call on Mr. Bear. Miss Blondie Kernodle of Altamahaw following with the selection from Eugene Field, entitled Seein Things. She was followed by Miss Viola Frazier of Elkton, Va., who read Howes "The Knight and the Page." Miss Sudie Lyrely of Crescent, N. C., then rendered Bitney's "AMorning Ride. Mr. B. J. Earp, Semora, N. C., was encoered after the successful rendition of a humorous selection entitled Finished Education. Miss Lillian Johnson, Cardenas, N. C., presented a burlesque on the women entitled "Before the Milliner's Mirror." She was followed by Miss Maggie Iseley, Burlington, N. C., who rendered Richard Burton's account of the courtship day of William Shakespeare, entitled Across the Fields to Anne. Miss Bessie McPherson, of Haw River, N. C., concluded the program with a humorous selection from Elworth entitled Pillow Fights. The ushers were Messrs. R. H. McCauley and E. L. Daughtery.

The promised visit of Dr. Frank S. Child, of Fairfield, Conn., is anticipated with great delight not only by the Faculty and student body, but by Dr. Child's many friends in the village who have been fortunate enough to hear his lecturing during his former visits to the institution. Dr. Child is a profound scholar in the matter of Colonial and Church History and has written nine volumes of wide circulation, treating of these matters, which give evidence of his wide erudition and learning. Dr. Child has traveled widely in the Old World, and possesses a rare power of combining thoroughness of scholarship with popularness of presentation. On this visit Mrs. Child is to accompany him.

and he is meeting with encouragement as he goes from city to city. He is being assisted in this direction in N. C. so far as their professional duties in connection with the college will permit, by Profs. Harper, Wicker, and Lawrence, who are also meeting with encouragement in this work.

Mr. Chas. Butler, of the U. S., traveling song evangelist who has been assisting Rev. L. E. Smith, of the Walker Ave. Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., in a most successful revival, paid the college a visit on last Saturday morning and sang three stirring songs to the profound delight of his audience, and punctuated his vocal renditions with accounts of the wonderful work of Evangelist Billy Sunday, who has had such marvelous success in the large cities of the north-west. It will be remembered that Mr. Butler assisted Dr. Torry in his great religious campaigns at Winston-Salem and also in his visit to Wilmington recently. The college was very glad to have this visit from this distinguished gospel worker and it is a pleasure to announce that he is to visit the institution again shortly. Quite a number of our people here were so impressed with his singing during the brief space of his visit, that they have attended from night to night the services in Greensboro.

Mr. C. D. Roberts, a student from Durham, N. C., had the misfortune to break his leg in two places Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hobby, Raleigh, N. C., visited their daughter, Mrs. M. A. Atkinson, Saturday and on Sunday their son Mr. W. B. Hobby, who has recently located two miles west of the College.

STAGGERING WITH THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

"No address that I have made in this country have I approached with so much hesitation as this. For what am I, my brethren, that I should speak to you? Most of my remarks today will take their color from this statement. We don't live near enough to God, and therefore we don't get close enough to men. Emerson says, 'It is sometimes a good thing to nerve ourselves with an affirmative.' My brethren, let me say that it is our privilege, as ministers of the Gospel, to live near to God. Then why don't we live near to God?"

"There are three things that draw us from God. First, the gravity of the world. We are drawn away to the world's manner and thought and feeling, and to the world's purposes and ends. We ministers are prone to become worldly men. Second, we are apt to be drawn by the fascination of the glittering. I have succumbed to that temptation, my brethren. For instance I have been tempted by the praise of men to forget the honor of God. I have been tempted to think more of full pews than of redeemed souls. I have been again and again tempted to prefer eloquence to real power. Third, we are drawn away from God by what I call the stupefactions of the priestly office. Truth itself can be so dealt with as to become a drug. We can so busy ourselves with truths as that they will become opiates. At the perfume distilleries in France, where vast quantities of rose leaves are accumulated, the mass of rose leaves causes a certain stupefying disease. No people see less of the Alps than those who live among them. I could wish that my memory might be erased till I might come to the World seeking truth instead of texts.

"When we are drawn away from God and communion with God, certain things take place. First, our characters lack spirituality. We cannot define spirituality. I have been trying for days and have failed. It resists definition. When we live away from God we lack the fragrance which lets people know that we have been much-in-the-King's garden. We don't carry about with us what I call the heavenly air. We lack the power to change atmospheres by our very presence. A Christian minister should be a maker and a changer of atmospheres. Jesus breathed upon His disciples. That was making an atmosphere. Just as sure as the Lord Jesus did this for those who represented Him, we may come into the presence of our fellow-worshippers to breathe upon them the Holy Ghost.

"One of the things we have got to do is to bring mountain air into the valleys, into the churches, into our pulpits, into our homes. I am perfectly sure that when we go into our pulpits, before we have opened our lips, our people will know that we have been with God. Second, when we are drawn away from God we lack the luminousness of the pure heart. 'Ye were once darkness,' as black as the carbon coil before the electric energy goes through it. 'But now are ye light in the Lord.' We have become the diamond—the luminousness of the cleansed spirit. Here we shall have the transfigured life. But others see it while we do not. 'Moses wist not that his face shone.' We are made incandescent by the energy of the Holy Ghost. 'Among whom ye shine as luminaries in the world,' holding forth the word of life. First, the shining, then the speaking. We don't possess the luminousness of the cleansed spirit. We are just as dull as men of the world.

"Then, third, when we are away from God our speech lacks the mysterious impressiveness. We cannot define it. It is quite independent of academic learning. We say much, but we accomplish little. We make a great show of power, but men do not move. The force of water is determined by the height from which it flows, and the force of our message is determined by the height at which we live. If we live with Paul 'in the heavenly places,' we will speak with the power of the Holy Ghost. But if we live just an inch above the world our words will have little power.

"Fourth, when we live away from God our very enterprise becomes a pastime instead of a crusade. We were never so busy in England as we are today, but I sometimes think we were never so futile. If any one would start a Christian Rest Meeting I would be the first member.

"We don't count, and therefore the people don't count us, and therefore we are not counted. Lastly, when we are drawn away from God, our leadings in worship are stumblings upon an unfamiliar road. In England we call them 'the preliminaries.' Anybody can take the preliminaries. The people are irritable until the sermon begins. We are trying to lead people nearer to God than those who lead them. Every day I feel that I need spirituality and the passion of devotion.

If we have lost our close relationship with God the problem is, how can we recover it—recover our intimacy with God? The first thing we have to do is this—I have got to hold fast, firmly and steadily, to the principle that of all things that need doing by me this thing is supreme—to keep near God.

"We cannot allow ourselves to drift. We cannot leave the matter to chance or accident. I have got to affirm to my soul, 'Now, my soul, thou hast this, that and the other to do today. Thou hast that work to do. But, my soul, thy supreme work is to live near God.'

"In the presence of the details of work you lose the sense of the value of things. Use ten minutes every morning to write down the program of the day, then take the size of those things. Use the quiet moments to make an estimate.

"I say, 'My soul, everything on that program will be futile and ineffective unless thou shalt live near God.' Second, when you have nerved yourself by that resolution and that affirmative, then seriously discipline your soul. Of all people whose soulculture becomes a matter of chance ours has the greatest peril. Have a fixed season of communion with God. The early morning is the time for me. 'My voice shalt thou hear in the morning.' Alexander Whyte says he has to wait until everybody has gone to bed. Have a time and stick to it. Put the newspaper aside, and go into thy closet and pray. Use every help to make your devotion real. Dr. Horton says that in his private devotions he never uses a book, not even a Bible, that smells of the workshop. Since Dr. Horton gave me the suggestion I have found it very useful.

"Practice the tremendous art of praying without ceasing. My organist one day played a very beautiful air which remained with me as a background for days afterward. I wonder if we could have God like that? I wonder if we could have God interpenetrating our lives? If we had that sense of God the world would call in vain, the bubbles and baubles would lure us in vain, and the stupefactions of the priestly office would not affect us. Our lives would be fragrant with God. We should be luminous with power and cleansing. Our speech would be impressive, and our prayers would be laden with grace.

"Let us stagger our people. The Lord help me that when my people see me in the pulpit again they may be staggered with the presence of God."—Rev. J. H. Jewett in Record of Christian Work.

My Dear Children and Friends:

This week brings us a nice report in cash, and useful donations, which we will get in next week. Uncle Jim was called away for a funeral and did not have time to arrange.

The 4th Sunday was spent at Norfolk as follows: Memorial Christian Temple 10:30 a. m. S. S., 11 Church. Here the superintendent and pastor gave opportunity for the claims of the orphanage to be presented. In the Sunday-school there was life and activity and we were glad to meet many of the workers. On the wall was an electric sign "Welcome—Uncle Jim." This with many kindly handshakes and sympathetic words "God bless you in your work" made us feel at home and that it was good to be there. The hour for Church services was given over to the orphanage work. We presented the claims of the cause as best we could. The congregation heard attentively and some said "Amen." Amen often helps the speaker and worker. Too few of us say amen to the general work of the church. From the church, in company, with Bro. Howsare, we were driven by Bro. and Sister E. J. Brickhouse to their home where we enjoyed dinner and a hurried visit, and thence to Rosemont church for 3 p. m. service. Here we met an intelligent little audience and again presented the claims of the Orphanage, the pastor kindly giving full time to the same. Both at the Temple and Rosemont we found friends who were well informed as to the work of the Orphanage and we feel that they were glad to hear of the work in detail. Saturday night was spent in the home of Bro. and Sister Howsare. We feel that more help in the future will be given the Orphanage by these two congregations. Each place makes regular offerings now; and its our experience as the people know better the work at the Orphanage the more liberal they give. At about 5:30 p. m. we bade Bro. Howsare and family good bye and went to 3rd Christian Church, here we took supper with our friend Prof. Smith and then to church. Here we found little folks and large folks looking out for "Uncle Jim." After kind greetings, and music in which the happy joy "Sunshines" took an active part, giving one themselves, the pastor, Bro. Rev. Hanson, gave the hour to the Superintendent of the Orphanage and we used the best we could. The audience gave very close attention and then asked questions which showed they were interested. After the talk Prof. Smith presented on behalf of the "Fellowship Class" an orphanage picture or group of pictures nicely framed which will be placed on the wall of the church. In the center was a picture of the Orphanage building. At top the picture of the Supt., and arrayed nicely pictures of Mrs. Foster and little Mary Lee James, Miss Edwards, and children's dining room, from scenes and with appropriate wording. This was a new idea and a complete surprise to the superintendent. The pictures were taken from the Report of Trustees and arrayed in this form. Here also we found both pastor and people in sympathy with and well posted as to our work. We spent Sunday night in the home of Bro. and Sister Jas. Ely, and came home Monday. It was a full day but we were glad to meet the people and tell them our claims and what we are trying to do. If other pastors would like such a visit in their field do as Bro. Howsare did. Invite Uncle Jim to come and arrange trip for 4th and 1st Sundays in the month.

Let us hear from you children, schools, and friends.

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

MARRIED.

Kearney-Green.

A very pretty marriage was solemnized by the writer at high noon on February 15, 1911, at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Green, Epsom, N. C., parents of the bride, when Mr. David Lee Kearney of Lawrenceville, Va., led to the altar Miss Ethel Gill Green.

Just prior to the marriage an excellent dinner to friends present. The parlor of the home was beautifully decorated. Mrs. Susie Green Fuller played the wedding march and little Misses Beth Fuller and Helen Wicker acted as ribbon girls.

Immediately after the marriage the bridal party drove to Henderson, where Mr. and Mrs. Kearney took the north bound train for their home at Lawrenceville, Va. The groom has till recently resided in Franklin Co., N. C. The bride is a most deservedly popular young lady. She has splendid musical talent which has made her of great service at Liberty Christian Church.

My prayers go with this couple that they may be as useful in the community where they have located as they were in their home section.

Darden sang just before the bridal party entered, "All That I Ask is Love." Mr. J. E. Weede played the wedding march from Lohengrin.

Mr. and Mrs. Daughtry left on the evening train for a few days in Washington, D. C. The writer officiated. The best wishes of their many friends follow them.

May happiness and prosperity crown their lives.

DIED.

Scott.

Deacon B. S. Scott, of Ramseur, N. C., departed this life Nov. 16, 1910 at the age of 77 years, 8 months, and 14 days. He professed faith in Christ when a boy of about fifteen, and united with the Christian Church. In 1855 he was united in marriage to Miss Cynthia Scott, and to this union there were born six children. For many years Bro. Scott was blessed of the Lord and had a happy family, but in 1878 the hand of affliction entered his home; followed by the angel of death: the wife and all the children fell victims, and died in a few months of each other, leaving on earth Bro. Scott, as the only surviving member of the once happy family.

A few years later he was married to his second wife, Miss Cora A. Melton, and to this union there have been born eight children; six of whom, with their mother, survive him.

For several years he was a member of Union Grove Church, where he served as deacon in that congregation, and aided much in the building of their present house of worship. For quite a while before his death he resided at Ramseur, N. C., and aided in establishing, and building the Ramseur Christian Church, but at the time of his death he held his membership with the church at Pleasant Ridge, which is not far from his home.

In the absence of his pastor, Prof. D. L. Ellis, principal of the Ramseur Graded School, conducted the burial services, and sympathizing friends laid Bro. Scott's body to rest in the cemetery at Ramseur Christian Church, to await the resurrection morn.

May those left behind cherish his memory and humbly bow in submission to the will of God.

L. I. Cox.

Boyette.

On Dec. 17, 1910, at his home near Franklin, there passed from labor to reward Bro. Timothy Boyette, aged 74 yrs. He was feeble from age, but had not been sick. His son came in the house and found him lying on the bed, and when he went to him, he found that he had passed away. He was a kind man, and good neighbor. He was a member of Bethany Church. Four sons and two daughters survive him. Funeral at the home by the writer, and the interment was in the family burying ground.

May God comfort the bereaved family.

C. H. R.

Drake.

Brother Junius W. Drake, aged 60 years, died Jan. 9, 1911. He was a member of Union Church for a number of years. His death was not unexpected, as he had been feeble for some time. His wife, two sons, and four daughters survive him. In the absence of his pastor, the writer conducted the funeral services, and his body was laid to rest in the Franklin cemetery. We extend our sympathy and prayers to the bereaved family.

C. H. R.

Bradshaw.

After a lingering sickness of many months, Bro. Solomon Bradshaw, aged 69, on Jan. 28, 1911, passed to his reward. He had been a consistent member of Union Church for a long time and he died strong in the faith. He said just before he passed away, "I am just waiting the Lord's time, for I am ready to depart and be with Him." A true Christian gone home. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, and two sons. May our loving heavenly Father comfort the family and his many friends. Burial services by the writer in the absence of the pastor.

C. H. R.

Henderson.

Mrs. Mary G. Henderson was born July 9, 1847, and died Feb. 14, 1911, aged 36 years, 7 months and 5 days. Deceased is survived by three brothers, two sisters and seven children. She made a profession of religion at old East Liberty about three or four years ago. Funeral and burial services were conducted near Mt. Lebanon, Feb. 16, by the writer.

A. W. Andes.

Moore.

On Monday, February 20th, 1911, death claimed at its victim, James A. Moore, of Warren Co., N. C. Bro. Moore was about 73 years of age. He held his membership at Union Chapel M. E. Church, and while loyal to his church, he was liberal and broadminded toward all denominations. He was a man of sterling worth and strict integrity, honored and respected by all who knew him. His record as a soldier in the late war was unsullied, and was attested by the loss of a leg in a terrible charge upon the enemy's works at Drewery's Buff, May 16, 1864.

For 46 years he went through life under that serious disadvantage and for ten years with sight greatly impaired, yet he was cheerful and uncomplaining.

He leaves two sons and three daughters. May they inherit the promise, for they were faithful and honored their father unto death. Farewell Comrade, I hope to meet you in the resurrection morn, with body made whole and sight restored.
Comrade.

Kimball.

Mrs. Mary E. Kimball, relict of James Edward Kimball, to whom she was married in 1852, was born Feb. 26, 1833 and died Feb. 25, 1911, lacking one day only of being 78 years old. Surviving her are four sons, J. E., W. W., J. A., and W. H. She had been a member of Mt. Auburn church, Warren Co., N. C., near which she resided, for many years. She reared her sons to a strong and stalwart manhood, and led them, in early years, to give their hearts to God and their names to the church, which they have loved and proven faithful to for several years. Sister Kimball had a certain queenly, yet motherly bearing and manner that compelled respect and won the highest esteem of all who knew her. There was no better, truer, type of the Southern gentle-woman, with all its strength, dignity and gentleness, than she. Left a widow, with four boys to rear and their lives to direct, so strong for right and truth was her own character that she not only led them into the church, but, what is better, to lives of usefulness and influence, in their several communities, for the God she loved and worshipped. She was one of the very best women we ever knew. All her influence was for God, the church, and the right. The whole community in which she lived is richer for her living and poorer for her going. The funeral was from Mt. Auburn church, Monday p. m. Feb. 21. The floral offering was beautiful and the attendance large. The service was by the writer. God rest her noble and royal soul.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.
Rev. McD. Howsare, Editor,
Norfolk, Va.

SEVERAL METHODS OF MISSIONARY WORK.

The direct object of all missionary effort is to win the heathen to Christ and to build the life up into that fulness and perfection of character which is revealed in Christ. How to best do this is still a question only partially answered. Early missionaries used the evangelistic method. The story of the life of Jesus was told and the facts and principles of the Gospel proclaimed. Preaching and teaching occupied the whole time of the missionary. It was found that in many instances the best result could be obtained by trying to improve the environments of the people and many times accessory agencies could be used in reaching the masses.

It has been found advisable to adopt the educational method among certain peoples. Our schools in Japan are very beneficial to our work there. Where gross ignorance obtains the natives must be taught to read so they may be able to read their Bibles. Many persons are led to Christ under the influence of the schools who otherwise might never have been reached. Every denomination doing much effective missionary work is giving more or less attention to the educational method.

Jesus Christ was a physician of the body as well as of the soul and thousands are being reached through medical missions. Hospitals are being maintained and the bodies and souls of thousands are being healed.

Industrial missions train the heathen in that industry which characterizes every progressive people. Mr. Frohmyer says "We cannot expect our people to sit with empty stomachs at the feet of Christ and hear His word, or at any rate as long as it is in our power to appease their hunger." To teach how to cook, make cloth, construct buildings and vehicles bestows upon many untold blessings.

Persons with much money, in these later years, are seeking to establish hospitals, homes, asylums and orphanages in heathen lands. Lepers, the blind, the insane and incapacitated in life, are thus being cared for. Work of this kind comes under the head of philanthropic missions. In heathendom our aim is to save the entire man, physically, intellectually and spiritually. Whatever within or without inspires him to this noble end must not be overlooked. The condition of the people and their environments must determine what method we use in dealing with them in our missionary effort.

THREE GREAT BARRIERS TO MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

The fact that there is such a multiplicity of languages and dialects make it difficult for a speedy evangelization of the world. These languages must be learned and the Bible translated into them before we can expect to accomplish very much. This is barrier number one.

The lack of trained men for the foreign field retards the progress of missions. The very strongest men among our people should represent us on the foreign field, and we believe that some of our best are there. Men of strong intellect are ever ready to defend heathenism, and Christianity needs strong representatives to present its claims.

The lack of strong well trained missionaries is barrier number two.

If we could but have the money spent in maintaining our navy for a single year and if we could add to the number of missionaries another number equal to the army of the U. S. what rapid strides would be made in giving the world a knowledge of Christ. We need money to finance this great enterprise. This is barrier number three.

The above barriers are great but thank God they are being gradually removed. Some sweet day a knowledge of our Christ shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

BRINGING OUT THE GOLD.

A speaker said in an address to a congregation on the subject of missions that the reason why there were so many pennies put in the collection plates for missions was because there were no smaller coins. It was reported afterwards that there were not many pennies in the plate that day.

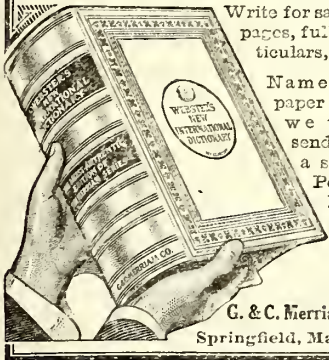

In the following item we learn how an Indian orator addressing some people in England on the subject of missions brought out the gold. He said:

"There is a gentleman now in this house, a very fine gentleman, but he does not like to show himself. I 'fraid he sleeps lots of time. Name Mr. Gold. Mr. Gold, you here tonight? Come out and help us do great work to preach the gospel. Mr. Gold, you ought to be ashamed to sleep so much in your iron chest. Look at Mr. Silver! Come out, fly around like him. He do much good while you sleep. Then, see your little brother, Mr. Copper. Why, he fly around all the time, do all the good he can, Mr. Gold! Come out and help us! Do come, Mr. Gold! And if you really can't come yourself, do the next best thing, send us your shirt, that is, a bank-note."

SAINT PATRICK.

It is a common practice to follow the Roman Catholic tradition, that the so-called St. Patrick was the first person who preached Christianity in Ireland. And as "St. Patrick's day" annually causes the tradition to be repeated, there is a constant increase of literature impressing it on young readers.

Possibly it is not a matter of great importance that the error should be corrected; but, when attempts are constantly being made to assign missionary glory to sectarian persecutors, there may be no wrong in correcting it. Also, it is possible that some student might suppose that my statement in my late history, "Six Centuries," detracting from the glory of Patrick, had been hastily made.

But I wish it clearly understood that my statement was not hastily made. There is no historical evidence that Patrick was the first preacher of the gospel in Ireland, except the tradition. While I admit that the tradition itself would be sufficient if it were ancient enough, and were not contradicted, it should be stated that tradition usually loses its proving force when there are elements in it indicating an artificial make-up, or when it is opposed by documents of its reputed period, or when there are other certain events of history contradicting it.

It is not proper here to go into a minute discussion; but it is sufficient to say that there is so much of the artificial about the tradition that some critics doubt strongly whether there ever was such a man as Patrick, as distinct from others having connection with the events of the age. The name is admittedly merely patricius, signifying patrician, and has hardly any more identifying force than the word doctor, or count, or duke, or aristocrat, of our time. It is even argued whether Patrick's true individual name was Palladius, or Sueat, or Cothidge.

The tradition makes Patrick first to have converted the chiefs. This element harmonizes with the practice of the Roman Catholic missionaries, who used government power to spread their influence. It is accompanied by the other element in the tradition, that Patrick opposed heresy in Ireland. But why, or how, if he was the first preacher? Who had been preaching heresy there?

The meager documentary evidence indicates that there were "Irish believers in Christ," before the date of the arrival in Ireland, of Sueat (now considered the traditional Patrick.)

But the subject is too complicated to go into details; and I merely repeat that there is no convincing proof that the reputed St. Patrick first preached the gospel in Ireland, and considerable evidence and argument against it.

IS PROHIBITION A SUCCESS IN NORTH CAROLINA?

We herewith submit the testimony of some of our state officers on this subject, and then allow you to draw your own conclusions.

Witness No. 1. Hon. W. W. Kitchen, governor of North Carolina, in his message to this legislature says "Prohibition has now been in force throughout the state for two years. This is a short period with which to measure the effects of a reform movement. We have done little more than planted the seed whose full fruitage will be gathered by coming generations. And yet, already the results fully justify its adoption. There has been, as appears from the attorney general's report based upon superior court statistics, a marked diminution in crime, even in the crime of violating the prohibition law. Business has experienced increased rather than diminished prosperity. Morality, industry and frugality have increased, and politics and government have been to a great extent relieved of one of their most corrupting influences."

Witness No. 2. Mr. T. W. Bickett, attorney general, in his biennial report submitted to the legislature, says: "The law requires every criminal case tried or in any way disposed of in the superior courts of the state to be reported to this office. The report for the year ending July 1, 1909, shows a grand total of 12,149 cases; for the year ending July 1, 1910, a grand total of 9,505 cases, a decrease of 2,644 cases. This must be gratifying to every citizen of the state."

Witness No. 3. Chief Justice Walter Clark, of the state supreme court, gives this information: "Since the law went into effect two years ago, crime has been reduced 50 per cent; murder in the first degree has declined 32 per cent; burglary, 20 per cent; attacks with deadly weapons, 30 per cent; larceny, 40 per cent; manslaughter, 35 per cent; murder in second degree, 21 per cent; minor crimes from 25 to 55 per cent; and a decrease of the violations of the anti-liquor laws of 15 per cent."

Witness No. 4. The state corporation commission, which was created a state tax commission by the legislature of 1901, just ten years ago, in its report for 1901 gives the valuation of all property in the state at $300,709,300, and in its report for 1910 for all property a valuation of $613,000,000. (These ten years have been years of temperance reform and prohibition in this state. The Watt's Act, which prohibited distilleries and saloons in the rural districts, was enacted in 1903—the state prohibition act in 1908.)

Witness No. 5. The internal revenue department of the United States shows that the number of retail liquor dealers in North Carolina in 1908 was 817; 1909, 656; and 1910, 411.

A QUERY.

O for the man, Gibraltar-like,
Who to the right adheres
Through all the years;
While frantic good men, worldly wise,
Chase the rainbow of compromise.
O when will men, truth-taught, twice born,
Scorn opportunists, fears,
Lend heaven their ears,
Preach righteousness from day to day
Though heedless throngs hold on their way?
How long go with the multitude
In spots of changeful hue
Some good to do
At price of half consent to wrong?
How long ill yoked with guilty throng?

Where sound the cries of race and clan,
Above the noise of selfish strife,
We hear thy voice, O Son of Man."

THE SMALL AND THE GREAT.

("It is not for Kings to drink wine; nor for princes to say, Where is strong drink?" Proverbs 31: 4. Golden text for Sunday, March 19th).

Benhadad, King of Syria, was a very great man—in his own estimation, and also because of the position which he occupied. He was a great king. Kings, in fact, were his subjects and his vassals, thirty two of them. Benhadad was a king of kings, a ruler of a great and very populous country. He was considered invincible, thought so by himself, by the thirty two under kings, by a horde of princes, by multitudes of men almost without number. The King of Syria was indeed and in truth a great monarch.

This King in his greatness goes out to besiege Samaria. Samaria is a town small enough, and a people weak enough, to be taken, seemingly, without effort by the great king. The strongholds were not very strong, the armies were not mighty, and the king who ruled in Samaria feared for his very existence. The great king made imperious and haughty demands of Ahab; he demanded silver and gold and his wives and children. Because of unaccountable dread and superior numbers and all odds against him, Ahab was willing to yield. But madness once begun goes on without limitations. Benhadad was mad; mad with pride, mad with power, mad with intoxication, and revelry, and drunkenness. One haughty demand led to another until Ahab, though fearing, was goaded even to desperation and to daring. In such a spirit Ahab with his handful of Israelites determined to offer resistance.

Here is a picture. A strong and mighty and invincible force, a king with all odds in his favor, victory in his very hands; a king on the other hand with small army, poor equipment, disadvantages of all possible human agencies against him. There was just one element that these kings, neither of them, had reckoned with. That element was the ever ruling power of the God of battles. The great Napoleon said once, or is reputed to have said, that God Almighty always fought on the side of the strongest army. Napoleon, the great, learned a different lesson from that at Waterloo. In that fatal conflict Napoleon had the advantage of larger forces, a more splendid army, possibly braver and better men, and that historian does not exist who can account for the fact that Wellington defeated Napoleon in the butchery of Waterloo, save on the ground that Naoleon's hour had struck, and that he had defied silently or avowedly Almighty God. This was Benhadad's Waterloo. We shall hear it again and again, we shall learn it from history the rest of our days, but we shall never know too well the truth that Man proposes, God disposes.

There is another parallel in human history to the event recorded in today's lesson. It is that of great Alexander. He it was, we are told, who conquered a world and wept because there were not other worlds to conquer, and yet, in the final, he himself was conquered by dissipation and indulgence. That which conquered Benhadad was excess, was indulgence, was utter disregard for, and defiance of, the day of small things. He was a king over thirty two other kings. What need was there that he should be sober if it pleased him to drink, what need of self denial if it was agreeable to indulge, what need to be cautious when all the odds were in his favor? Here is the crux of the situation, the heart of the matter, the grand finale of the whole episode: In this world no human being ever gets so great, ever becomes so powerful, ever attains such a position or prestige as to be able to substitute vices for virtues, defiance for obedience, indifference for caution, impudence for prudence, and wickedness for righteousness. Benhadad thought himself secure against all worldly force, but there was a heavenly force which Benhadad's drunken brain, maddened mind, and defiant heart had not reckoned with. The great Colosseum at Rome built centuries on centuries ago, the largest and the most majestic in the world, has defied hostile armies, withstood tempest and storm; resisted desperate and destructive hordes of vandals; and endured through the centuries, a monument to human endeavor and a mark of triumphant mechanical and engineering skill. And yet the historians of our day tell us that this mighty mass of stone and granite and cement, untorn by all human agencies, is being rent today, cracked and split in a thousand places, fretted and severed and seamed by vines and rootlets, tender and fragile, no longer than a sewing needle. The great succumbs to the small. So of all greatness when undermining, or when concealing and hiding deep in the inner self the vices that destroy and the wickedness that works ruin. The man who would gain ultimate victory needs a steady hand, a composed mind, and a virtuous heart, most of all in that moment when victory is in his grasp. It is sad today to contemplate the wastefulness in this world, not only of drink, but even of the lesser vices which undermine human character and sap the strength of all that is noblest and best in the human heart. One who reads the works of the great George Elliott will see how this master hand dropped into the heart of her subjects and characters a single virtue which grew to majestic, and saving proportions, or a single vice insignificant at the time of the sowing, but which grew and grew and developed to the ultimate ruin and undoing of the entire structure or life and heart and soul. None of us ever get so great that we can neglect the day and the hour of the small thing which is right and good and true. God is not only in his Heaven, but in his earth as well, and He it is who works forever that the true and the good and the beautiful may prevail and may triumph against all human odds that man and demons can contrive.

GRACE BEFORE MEALS.

Do you say Grace at your house always before eating? If not, possibly you do not because you have not one in mind suitable and worthy of your ideal in the matter. Now, there has fallen into our hand a beautiful book, very neatly bound in special cloth and making an attractive volume entitled "Grace Before Meals." The book has a "Grace" for every day in the year; short, pointed, simple, appropriate, beautiful. If any of our readers wish a copy send us 30 cents for ordinary cloth binding; 50 cents for special cloth, gilt top. The little book is worth the money and is a treasure. For if one will not learn the "Grace" one can have the book at the table and reverently read one from this well printed page.

THE USE OF WEALTH.

It is not what a man owns, but how he comes to own it, that brings him satisfaction and pleasure. Andrew Carnegie says one who is born poor has the advantage of one born rich on this very account: The poor born has the opportunity of earning the honest dollar in the pleasure and pursuit of toil. The millionaire who thinks it a disadvantage to be born rich and a disgrace to die rich, recently gave a sound and sensible talk to some girls employed in a New York newspaper office recently. He spoke of the real joy and happiness of toil and then added:

"Most millionaires' wives are not happy. They have too many luxuries and few mental resources to fall back upon. Don't refuse a man simply because he is a millionaire. I would rather be born poor than a millionaire. I have had some experience in both directions. I have made forty-two millionaires in my time, but I want to say the only right a man has to wealth lies in his acquiring it by some useful labor. The great trouble with the wealth of today is that the sons of millionaires do not realize the necessity of being of use to the community. I shall never forget how proud I was when I got my wages of $1.25 a week, and how I felt when I was raised to $1.50 as a telegraph operator. To take home that sum to my good mother gave me such a feeling of manly independence. I owe a great deal to my mother. She was a seamstress, cook, washlady and never until late in life had a servant in the house. And yet she was a cultivated woman. She read Channing and kept up with the literature of the day. When I was a little tot she used to read good books to me. You young women have every opportunity for literary culture, and you ought to avail yourselves of it. You ought to be very proud with money earned so honorably, for money that is not earned honorably will never do you any good."

GOSPEL POWER.

Always and everywhere the gospel has power. It reaches a man and finds him out. It reveals the heart, lays bare the life. Ethics and science and literature and philosophy break down here. These have to do with life; but the gospel is power and is life. This gospel can never lose its power because it is surcharged with life, is vital, virile, vigorous.

The reason why the great Moody had such power with men was because he knew, not his power, but the power of the gospel, and trusted fully and unreservedly to the power of the gospel to reach and to save men. The editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate relates this incident of Mr. Moody and his belief in the power of the gospel

"We knew a bright and gifted preacher who married a daughter of one of the best families of her state, a beautiful, cultured and charming woman. The preacher had some mechanical genius and invented what he believed would very soon yield him an immense fortune, but he did not have the money to put his patent into practical operation. By business and family associations he had daily access to the county vaults where bonds were deposited and kept. In his eagerness to secure the money necessary to put his patent into fortune-yielding operation, he took county bonds from the vault and placed them in a bank as collateral to secure the money he needed. His patent proved a failure and the fortune for which he so sanguinely hoped vanished like a mirage.

The county bonds were missed from the vault and found in the bank and the preacher fled from his lovely family and left the state in disguise. He fled from one place to another, almost afraid of his own shadow, lashed as he was by a guilty conscience. One night in the city of Chicago he heard a great multitude of people singing the songs and hymns of his home and childhood. Drawn by a sort of irresistible charm he stealthily entered the building and sat in a shadow in the rear. At the close of the singing a heavy set man with short neck and large head, dressed in a business suit and astonishingly free from conventionality or formality, opened a cheap little Bible and in a conversational tone read for his text: "Be sure your sin will find you out!"

Forked lightning seemed to gleam and flash around every word as they burned their way into the soul of the fugitive, fleeing, guilty preacher. At the close of the marvelously clear and common sense sermon, which held the audience as if spellbound, the preacher was so overwhelmed with conviction that he hesitated to speak to any one or to go out into the street, for fear that the police would detect his guilt. In this paralysis of horror he arose and leaned against a pillar of the building until the audience was all out and no one left but the janitor and the speaker of the evening.

While the janitor was picking up the books and adjusting matters about the platform at one end of the building, the speaker of the evening walked clear back to the stranger in the rear and in a very brotherly tone and manner grasped his hand, saying: "My name is Moody, what is yours?" For the first time since his flight from his home the fugitive spoke his real name and then made a full confession. After an earnest prayer and a long conversation Mr. Moody advised him to return to his home, surrender to justice and plead for mercy. The advice was at once complied with. He returned home, surrendered to justice and was sent to the state penitentiary for eighteen years.

The wife of the prisoner sought obscurity in a great city, with her two little boys. In contracted and economical quarters she taught music and worked night and day to feed and clothe herself and children, keeping them in blissful ignorance of the father's fate and shame. To the oft-repeated inquiries of her little boys as to where the father was and when he would return the answer was given that he would possibly be gone a long time, but would be back some day to see and love his sweet and noble little sons.

CHRISTIANITY'S OFFERING.

Ever think of the contrast between what the world of sin and indifference offers its devotees and the church offers those who come to it? Here is a group of hangers-on of Sundays, about street corners and public places. The world offers this group the saloon, the brothel, cheap talk, base incentives, impure ideals, bad company and the wages of sin—death. The church offers that same group a comfortable pew, beautiful music, the best and most elevating of human speech—a sermon—good company, companionship of the best high ideals, unselfish service, righteousness, peace, truth, a home beyond. The world makes its offerings for money only and selfish ends. The church makes its offerings for the betterment of man and the salvation of the soul. And what an offering. This business of the church is our biggest business. Take these significant statistics from an exchange.

"We look on Standard Oil and the Steel Trust, these two leviathans of the commercial world, almost as the synonyms of untold wealth, and yet a thoughtful writer has said: "Capitalize the American church at $12,000,000,000 and you would be within the facts. Moreover, these billions are in the class of 'gilt-edge securities'—real estate in the leading business centers of our greatest cities, buildings rated among the architectural triumphs of the day. To maintain the activities of the American churches demands a weekly expenditure of $10,000,000. In other words a yearly total of over $500,000,000 must be raised to balance the debit and credit columns. To approach the subject from still another viewpoint, the American people spend nearly $1,000,000 every day for the development of their religion."

—Rev. F. B. Meyer of London is to preach in Chicago a week beginning June 4th, under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute.

—The House of Representatives voted, and without a dissenting voice, that it should be called "Civil War" and not the "War of the Rebellion."

—The estate of the late Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, "Founder of Christian Science," has been appraised at $2,512,146. Evidently Mrs. Eddy was founding a fortune as well as a "Church."

—The revolution in Mexico continues, and conditions of event, not to say, upheaval prevail in that country. American troops are stationed along the Texas border to protect American interests. A revolution threatens in Mexico.

—The Hookworm Commission and State Board of Health, Raleigh, are doing much to eradicate the hookworm disease in this State, already about 15,000 cases having been treated. The people are more interested in this disease than at first and there is promise of wiping it out, if intelligent co-operation may be had on the part of the people. Rockefeller's gift was not a bad one by any means.

VIGOROUS TALK AND FACTS ON THE SALOON QUESTION.

After the saloon has been run out of town, what then? What shall take its place? Is some substitute for the saloon needed? The Sunday-school Times runs an interesting discussion of this question which is now a practical one for so many millions of American citizens. A prominent Colorado man declares that any community that has banished the saloon needs to put in vigorous substitutes for it, or the last state of that place will be worse than the first. Another writer comes back with the retort that "a city no more needs a substitute for the saloon than we shall need a substitute for Satan in the millennium." The Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America sums the question up in a virile article of unsparing convictions. He brings the reader squarely up to the unexpected conclusion that a substitute for a saloon really means a substitute for the church.

Liquor men may not appreciate the following story, with which The Sunday School Times introduces the debate:

The saloon is on the run. In those parts of the country where it has not yet struck its running gait it seems booked for an early start. The liquor men are in the position of that farmer who had driven a team of mules to town, and was persuaded to step into a penny arcade and, for the first time in his life, hear a phonograph play one of Sousa's marches. He put the hearing tubes to his ear, and listened. As the first notes of the full brass band came crashing on to his ear drums he dropped the tubes and started for the door, exclaiming, "Here comes the band, and I left them mules unhitched." The band is coming, and somebody has left the saloons unhitched.

In the same issue The Sunday School Times editorially dissects some figures that the New York Evening Sun published last summer to prove that saloon-closing in Indiana had meant more strong liquor drunk. The Sun's editorial reads plausibly—until one reads the Times.

OUR ANTI-NEAR BEER LAW.

We give below the full text of the near beer law, which has just been passed by the present legislature. In the house, there were only six votes recorded against it, and in the senate, only three. This bill was introduced by Dr. A. A. Kent, of Caldwell county, and we believe will accomplish the desired effect:

A Bill to Be Entitled, "An Act to Prohibit the Sale of Near-Beer, Beerine and Other Like Drinks.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do Enact:

Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation to sell or dispose of for gain, near-beer, beerine, or other spirituous, vinous or malt liquors or mixtures of any kind, and under whatsoever name called, that shall contain alcohol, or cocaine, or morphine or other opium derivative, except as herein provided.

Section 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation, who is engaged in the sale of any kind of drinks, to refuse to allow any person to carry away from the place where said drinks are being sold or offered for sale, any package or quantity of any size of said drink which has been bought and paid for; and if any person, firm or corporation shall refuse to allow said package or quantity of said drink to be carried away from the place of sale, it shall be prima facie evidence of the violation of this act.

Section 3. That any person or persons, firm or corporation, violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined or imprisoned, or both, for each and every offense, in the discretion of the court: Provided, that this act shall not be construed to forbid the sale of spirituous, vinous, fermented or malt liquors or intoxicating bitters by a legalized medical depository, or by any licensed and registered pharmacist, for sickness, upon the written prescription of a regularly licensed and actively practicing physician or surgeon having the person for whom said prescription is made under his charge, which said prescription shall specify the amount of spirits required; and that this act shall not be construed to prevent the sale of any alcoholic liquor to any legalized medical depository or to any licensed and registered pharmacist, or any cocaine or morphine or other opium derivative to any registered pharmacist; and that this act shall not be construed to forbid the sale of cocaine, morphine or other opium derivative by a licensed pharmacist upon a written prescription by a regular licensed physician or surgeon: Provided further, that this act shall not apply to the sale of domestic wines when sold in quantity of not less than two and one half gallons in sealed package or crated, on the premises where manufactured, or to the sale of cider in any quantity by the manufacturer from fruits grown on his land within the state of North Carolina, or to the sale of wine to any minister of religion or other officer of a church when said wine is bought for religions or sacramental purposes, or to the sale of flavoring extracts or essences when sold as such, or to the sale of medical preparations manufactured in accordance with formulas prescribed by the United States Pharmacopoeia and National Formulary which contain no more alcohol than is necessary to extract the medicinal properties of the drug contained in preparations, and no more alcohol than is necessary to hold the medical agents in solution, and which are manufactured and sold as medicines and not as beverages, or to the sale of any medical preparation which is manufactured, sold and used as a medicine and not as a beverage, or to the sale of carbonated drinks that contain no more than one-tenth of one per cent of alcohol, and in which drinks a flavoring agent is used, in the manufacture of which flavoring agent alcohol is used to dissolve and hold in solution or to extract from the crude material said flavoring agent.

Section 4. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the first day of July, one Thousand nine hundred and eleven.

SHENANDOAH CITY, VA.

Dear Bro. Atkinson:

I think of you and the Sun readers often, and wish for you and them much happiness. The last communication left me at Dendron, Va., where so many friends of former days were met. In Petersburg, Va. I met and spent a short time with Rev. George E. Booker, D.D. pastor of Washington St. M. E. Church. He had just served four years at Epworth Church in Norfolk, Va., and is now on his first year in Petersburg, Va. He is a fine preacher and stands among the first ministers in his conference. My first association with him and his father, Rev. G. E. Booker, was at Franklin, Va., in the early years of my ministerial work, and I formed an attachment for them there which has grown stronger with the years, and it is always exceedingly pleasant to meet him, and to know of his splendid success and great popularity wherever he goes. George was an active bright boy at Franklin and soon rose to prominence and great usefulness in his church.

Reached this city at night and stayed with my much esteemed friend Bro. Powell who is proprietor of a hotel in that place. A night and a day was passed with him in a very pleasant way. He is one of the most pleasant and entertaining men I ever met; one of that kind of winsome souls who always makes you feel easy and very much better by being in his company.

My next stop was at Ingham, Va., on the N. and W. where I was engaged to conduct revival services at East Liberty church. Was met at the station and conducted to the home of Bro. C. H. Kite where I make my home, and it seems very much like home to me, where they provide for my comfort and entertainment in a splendid way. He and his kind family have already won my admiration. This braicing climate, pure air, elevating and inviting scenery all conspire to give inspiration and gladness to me. So I may safely say now, my home on the mountain, my life is in the plain.

The meeting began Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in Feb. and has been progressing since with large congregations and a vital interest in all the services. It has been a great pleasure to preach to these anxious hearers who appear to receive the Word with gladness. Many are thinking of this great divine salvation seriously and some have already accepted it. It is time for all classes and conditions of people to take hold of the promises of God, and to trust in Him who is able to save to the uttermost. Salvation is a wonderful free and loving provision. May it be ours to enjoy forever.

J. T. Kitehen.

WORK OUT YOUR OWN SALVATION.

Religion is not merely something implanted in us by the Spirit of God, but also something which must be wrought out by us in daily life. It is not a mere feeling, or experience, or inner life, but also a business and work.

Nature works out its inner life. You hold in your hand a bulb. It seems like a dull dead thing; but in its heart there is a living germ. Surround it with the proper conditions, and it will work out that life into a comely stalk and fragrant, spotless lily. A grain of corn has a germ of life in it. Plant it in the ground, and the germ will bust its shell, pierce through the clod, and work itself out into a stalk, an ear, and the full corn in the ear.

The man who has a living thought in his mind must work it out or it will be of little value to himself or the world. Copernicus had a vision of the solar system different from anything the world had known. Men had studied astronomy for centuries and had their idea of the sun and stars; but Copernicus thought they were wrong. He must work out his vision before it can be of value. He made his calculations and took his observations, and discovered that his hypothesis was at fault. The planets did not come to time according to his theory. It would not work. He was not discouraged, but modified his hypothesis, and tried again, for he was sure he was on the right track. Again he made his calculations, and took his observations, and waited for the result; when lo, each planet came to time. The whole system of worlds was seen marching through the heavens in the very orbits his hypothesis required. Then he knew he was right. His thought worked out. He had wrought out his astronomy. It was no longer a vision, but a reality.

Columbus had to work out his geography. It was a hard task, but he did it. Morse had to work out his telegraphy. Had he been content to hold it as a beautiful vision, he would have been a mere visionary. But he wrought it out, and the world is full of it. The farmer may have fine visions of agriculture, but they will benefit no one until he shall realize them by working them out.

The architect has a fine structure in his mind. If it never gets out it will not profit. He must work it out on paper, and then in stone and steel, and glass, and other materials. Then men will see and admire and understand its beauty and utility. It will be a part of the civilization of the age.

A poet may hear a grand epic singing in his soul, but unless he shall sing it out to the world it will do no good. It was not intended to sing in one soul alone. Let him work it out, and the world will be thrilled with the music. It is said that Handel's father did not appreciate his son's musical genius, and forbade him to bring a musical instrument into the house or go where he could see one. Something struggled in the soul of the child, and would not let him rest. A relative furnished him with a cheap instrument which he had to keep hidden from his father. At last a benevolent gentleman discovered his genius, and helped him to work it out, and the whole world has been enraptured by his splendid oratorios. It is the thing that gets itself worked out that helps the world.

Plato had a splendid vision of the republic which he wrote with a pen, and published in a book; but it never got further than the book. It would not work out in practice. It was only a vision. But John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and other statesmen of their day had a vision of a republic which they wrought out on paper, and then proceeded to work out in practice. When the colonies adopted it, the vision became a reality, and under its protection millions of people have lived for generations. It works.

Salvation may be a vision, and it may be a life. It is good as a vision, but not good enough. It is glorious as an experience, but not all it was intended to be. Too many people are content to enjoy their salvation as a heavenly rapture and a glorious hope. But it will not be complete until each one shall work out his own salvation in his daily life. Jesus wrought out the life that was in him. It was a flame of love and righteousness which constrained him to come to earth, to suffer, to go about doing good, to pour out his life in crimson streams upon the cross. But it was not lost. He said, "A corn of wheat except it die abideth alone; but if it die it will bring forth much fruit." The life which Jesus gave on the cross has grown up and blossomed and brought forth fruit in the life of Peter and Paul and all the disciples and all the Christians in the world. It has filled the world with love and peace.

It is not enough that Jesus wrought out the life that was in him, and that Paul wrought out the life that was in him. Each one must work out his own inner life. Work out your faith. "Faith without works is dead." Abraham wrought out his faith and became the founder of a mighty nation. Moses wrought out his faith, and became a mighty deliverer. Work out your faith, your love, your righteousness. Work them out in the home, in business, in public life, in visiting the sick and doing good in a world that sorely needs your help.

Only by working out your salvation can you know certainly that it is genuine. Many a man has had a vision of which he was very sanguine, but it would not work. Many persons have religious visions and raptures which they take to be divine; but nothing comes of them. Failing to work them out, they never know and others never know whether they were real or imaginary. A good test of religion is its working. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

FORGIVENESS.

The true forgetting is in keeping with the genuine forgiving. As helps to the attainment of the forgiving spirit and its fruits in the life, let us remember our proneness to transgress the perfect commands of our heavenly Father and our need of forgiveness from Him. Have we asked for divine forgiveness, and have put forth greater effort to keep the commandments which Jesus emphasized, have we not felt that the petition has been granted? The strongest evidence of this forgiveness is our willingness to forgive others and our desire that they shall realize our friendliness toward them and our readiness to serve them. It is impossible for the unforgiving spirit to have the consciousness that its own sins are forgiven.—The Rev. I. J. Mead.

—A little girl living in an old mud hut, near a filthy cow yard, lay dying. She was seen by a Zambana worker, and, when spoken to, said: "I went to a Sunday-school one day and heard about Jesus. I never went back, but I talk to Him while I am lying here, and He talks back to my heart and I am His girl." A few days after, the worker returned to the house just as the little one was dying. She motioned the missionary to come near, and whispered: "He has promised to take me home." The Lord's work was being done in that filthy Indian home.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. T. W. Strowd, Chapel Hill, N. C., is still improving, but is not well we regret to say. He is meeting some of his engagements.

—Franklin Christian Church, Rev. C. H. Rowland, pastor, has ordered a supply of the new edition of The Christian Hymnary. The book is finding favor and is being widely used. The price is 75 cents the copy by mail, 50 cents the copy and freight or express in quantities to churches.

—Our good brother, C. W. Whitmore, Dendron, Va., writes a line of cheer and hope that is refreshing. "I hand you herewith renewal for The Sun another year. I think this is my thirtieth year to take The Sun. I like it now better than ever. I am nearing my 78th mile post and this may be last. I cannot tell. I cannot expect to stay on this side the river much longer, but I want Sunshine all the way."

—A good brother minister who is loyal to all his church enterprises and a very busy pastor writes, "I promised you at Conference that I would endeavor to secure 25 new subscribers during the year. I expect to keep my promise. There are some good members in my church who do not take The Sun. This will not do. All good church members should certainly take their church paper." And that is true.

—A good brother in another State writes "I have just finished reading the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly for the second time. If it were possible to get this book and The Christian Sun into the homes of every member of the Christian Church, I do not think there would be any trouble in getting the membership of the church to attend and take an interest in church work." And with that brother we do most heartily agree.

—We had the pleasure of serving for Pastor Banks at Amelia church in Johnston County last Sunday, preaching at 11 a. m. followed by communion service. The editor once inhabited that community and it was a pleasure once more to see faces familiar long ago, and to make new acquaintances. Bro. Banks is doing a good work. His church is growing. There are large congregations and the pastor is faithful and is beloved.

—Our good friend Clarence Poe of The Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, has had a great trip around the world and his brethren and hosts of friends are glad to welcome him back. We return thanks to him for remembering us with a copy of a Japanese paper (with 180,000 circulation) and two Hindoo papers (which we will read, of course, with delight and edification(?)) and a beautiful paper knife from Delhi, India. For these expressions of friendship we are grateful.

—Elon College has enjoyed another delightful visit from Dr. Frank S. Child, Fairfield, Conn. There has not been, as we recall, a disagreeable moment, event or recollection connected in anywise with any visit of Dr. Child to Elon. He ever and always delights the people here, and gives us something of the most chaste, scholarly and cultured kind. He was accompanied on this visit by Mrs. Child and both were entertained while here most cordially and graciously by Prof. and Mrs. Harpen. We hope that Dr. Child will make many more visits to Elon for we are sure he finds no where else more grateful and appreciative audiences than here.

—We wrote an editorial recently calling upon our laymen to know what they were going to do, what they were doing in fact, with the "Laymen's Missionary Movement" in our churches, and to enquire what had become of those beautiful resolutions we were passing at our Conferences and in our Convention with regard to the "Movement." And there hasn't been a laymen interested enough to even write us a line in reply. So we are much of the opinion about the laymen in the Christian Churches that Bro. Johnson is of the laymen in the Baptist Churches when he wrote in last week's Charity and Children: "You may say what you please about the preachers, but unless they put themselves behind the Laymen's Movement it is not going to move much."

—In writing of the Orphanages of this State last week Bro. Johnson of Charity and Children says: "The Christian Orphanage at Elon College is very small, but it is well managed, and the work is growing. While it will never be in the class with the larger institutions, it is serving a gracious purpose, and helping to uplift the State." Thanks for the kind word about the good management, neighbor, but we did not know our Orphanage was so very small and destined to remain that way forever. We are growing some. We may grow more some day. We are clearing out and improving a farm of a hundred acres, more or less, and almost before we are ready we are carrying about 50 children in our home, and have applications for others. This number is likely to be doubled in a year or so, as time goes and funds become available. We are coming along, Bro. Johnson. Don't make us so very small and condemn us to that forever. No telling what may happen, in the providence of God. Even small things sometimes become great.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Preachers and Pay:—Rev. J. A. Jowett, D.D., the greatest gospel preacher in England is to come shortly, to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. The salary offered him by that church is $12,000 a year and a house equal to $5,000 more. In accepting the call Dr. Jowett writes that he will not need so much, and will be satisfied with a salary equal to that he now receives. Evidently Dr. Jowett is not coming to America's richest church for the money there is in it.

Dr. Jowett is not only the greatest gospel preacher, in our estimation, of England, but is one of the most pious and spiritually minded men whose sermons and writings have fallen into our hands. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and Dr. Jowett is worthy of all the rich church of our metropolis offers him; but we are glad that he has impressed the people he is to serve with the thought that money is not his first, nor highest consideration. Preachers do not preach for money. Conscientious ministers labor with diligence for the upbuilding of God's kingdom and are worthy of the pay that is given them, and of more; but there is no class of men that labor harder with as little thought and consideration for the money given them. And this is as it should be.

An Egotistic Preacher.—It appears to us that Dr. Chas. F. Aked who awhile ago came to the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, has a rather exalted opinion of his powers and possibilities. He is a man of brain and of wonderful energy and learning; but his opinion of his power is overbearing. He admits that he is disappointed. He thought great things would be done at his coming; that a new church would be built; that new enterprises would be undertaken; that many thousands would be poured into the treasury. These things have not happened, and Dr. Aked has resigned. Before resigning he gave his congregation ten days to wake up. They refused to wake. And so from the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church he goes to become pastor of a Congregational church in San Francisco.

Dr. Aked's theology is of the new and twisted type. He is a vigorous thinker, but of doubtful position and disposition. He is certainly lacking in humility, in loyalty, in spirituality. It matters not how much brain power a preacher has, nor how much learning and eloquence he may acquire. If he lacks in spiritual power, in consecration, in loving loyalty to the best teachings of the gospel, that church does well which clears itself of him. Nothing can be substituted in the pulpit for spiritual power—a close walk and a close living with God.

Broad Thinking:—Why is it considered “narrow” to believe the Bible in its entirety, and “broad” to believe portions of it only? We notice that the “High Critics” call themselves liberal, broad, unprejudiced. Their liberality consists in the fact that they give up portions of Scripture, and generally accepted doctrine, and hold only to other portions. We never could understand why doubters, skeptics, critics could consider themselves so broad. Is a part of Scripture “broader” than the whole; some accepted doctrine more liberal than all? We cannot see why.

We are inclined to think that some of the most dogmatic and radical thinkers in the world are those who have swung loose from the good old ways, set up shop for themselves and deal out to those about them parts and parcels of wild thoughts and undigested theories they have gathered from they know not where. Some of the broadest thinkers we have ever known are those who accept the Bible in its entirety and accept it as a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The adjournment of Congress without passing the “Reciprocity” measure with Canada, the “Southern Commercial Congress” in Atlanta, the Mobilization of the army and navy toward the border of Mexico in her civil troubles, these matters have occupied the public mind through the Daily Press, recently, and they are great matters. Law, Commerce, and war are great matters in any age and among any people; but pure religion is of more importance to human society than any other matter, yea, than all other matters. The above named subjects involve temporal interests, but religion involves eternal interests.

The construction and maintenance of streets and public roads involves two matters: the present cost of construction and the permanence of such construction. It is comparatively easy to put streets or roads in good present condition; but most of such construction will not stand the strain of hard and long use. The all-important problem is how to make lasting construction so as to prevent waste of money and show ignorance of street and road building. The illustration loses its force unless the reader sees that wise street and road building involves time as the largest factor. Not only time but eternity is involved in religion.

Christianity deals with the only world question yet undertaken by man, though many of the enterprises of Christian civilization involve world ultimates. Rail-roading and bridge building, with tunnel construction, will one day bring the world within a thousand hour relationship, for it is possible for trains to make the circuit of the globe in that time at twenty five miles an hour. There is, however, no world—undertaking up to the present that has not grown out of the Christian religion. That religion that proposes the evangelization of the world and moves steadily toward that end, and generates other enterprises that may become world-wide in their benevolent service, deserves my confidence and my loyal support. Men who accept and profit by the commercial, social, educational and political opportunities treated by Christian doctrine and life and then fail to accept and follow Jesus Christ as the author of Christian civilization are parasites on the tree of humanity. If men would stop to think they would not abuse the very conditions that furnish their comforts and their prosperity. Herein lies the danger of this age: that we will consume upon ourselves and our lusts the very blessings which Christianity has furnished, and then let the moral forces necessary to the perpetuity of this civilization die for want of support. The whirlwind life of this present age, the storm-center of which is self-indulgence and Sabbath desecration, threatens not only religion and the social fabric, but the Republic. It is strange that men will boast of the civilization and progress which their own lives would destroy; but such is the folly and the tendency of sin, even the sin of neglect. All this is to say what seems true always and what Isaiah said seven hundred years before the Christian era: “to this poor man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my Word.” Unless the poor will accept their opportunity by accepting Christ and the open door to school and position, it does not take a prophet to forecast the end. The people who have largest chance in our day are the poor; the young rich will burn out all the fires upon the altar of pleasure and dissipation. Arise ye poor and save the world.

NORFOLK LETTER.

At the 3rd church Sunday-school, Sunday morning, there were four additions to the “Cadle Roll” announced. That makes 38 in this department of the school. At the night preaching service, there was one addition to the church; Miss Pearl Haughwant came by letter from the M. E. Church, South. Her father and mother were already members with us and she thought it would be more pleasant to have the family together, which I think was wise.

Bro. Howsare, pastor, and Bro. Pitt, Supt. of Sunday-school at the Temple, are working hard getting ready for a great day next Sunday, their anniversary and memorial service. They are preparing a neat and attractive souvenir program for the occasion.

Rev. D. A. Keys, of South Norfolk, is assisting Rev. J. W. Barrett at Lamberts Point church in a series of meetings. They have been in progress for a week. Bro. Keys is a good strong preacher and I hear they are having a good meeting. It is arranged for a “Church party” to go down from the Third church some night or nights this week.

Referring above to the meeting I said at “Lamberts Point church.” I might with propriety have said the Fourth Christian Church of Norfolk; for such, in reality, is the case. On the 10th inst. Lamberts Point by decree of the Supreme Court, passed into and became a part of the city of Norfolk. That is of importance in at least two respects: 1st. It is important to the city of Norfolk generally, as it makes it become a city of more than 81,000. When I came to this city to make my home nine years ago, the city had only 6 wards. Since that time Parke Place was admitted as the 7th ward, then Berkley was annexed and became the 8th ward. More recently Huntersville became a part of the city, as the 9th ward, and now comes Lamberts Point as the 10th. Already there is talk of the town of “Pimmers” and Port Norfolk waiting to come in as the 11th ward, and then when Norfolk and Portsmouth are consolidated, as I think they should be, and it is quite probable that it is just a question of time before they will be, we will then have one of the greatest cities, every thing considered, in all this fair Southland of ours.

2nd. It is of importance to us as a denomination in that it gives us four churches in the city of Norfolk. Since the organization of the Third church in Norfolk it has had the distinction of having more of our churches than any city in the South, and now it has twice as many as any other, and only equaled I believe by one or two cities in all our connection.

Simply this and nothing more would not mean so much, but with it comes added opportunity and responsibility which we should not be slow to recognize and seize upon. But after all the question comes up—with the principles of the Christian Church that we stand for, why is it that instead of having only four churches here in these years, we have not had twice as many. Who can answer the question?
J. W. Manning.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

WHEN C. E. WAS THIRTY YEARS OLD.

Christian Endeavor was organized on Feb. 2, 1881 in Portland, Me. On the evening of that day just thirty years later, that is to say, Feb. 2, 1911, in Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., an anniversary celebration was held, at which the leading address was by the world-famous, yet humble founder of the Society, the Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D. His address, admirable in every respect, we herewith subjoin.

Thirty years ago tonight, almost at this very hour, some forty-five young people at their pastor's house in Portland, Me., formed themselves into the first Christian Endeavor Society.

It is not inappropriate after these three decades to consider the work of young people in the churches then and now, for, of the changes that have taken place in the church life of the young people, the Society can say, to paraphrase the historic words of another, "All of this I have seen, and part of it I am."

To recite the names of the denominations and the nations in which Christian Endeavor is established is impressive and instructive. It is the young people's Society in ten denominations of Methodists, in nearly all of the divisions of Baptists, among all the Disciples of Christ and Congregationalists, and is found largely among the Lutherans, United Brethren, and Church of England in Great Britain.

Some Christian Endeavor Countries.

It is established in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Hungary, Scandinavia, Switzerland, Spain, Turkey, India, Egypt, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, the South Sea Islands, the West Indies, South Africa, Brazil, Chile, and, in fact, in every considerable nation of the world.

Yet I am sure that every Endeavorer would, as he recites these facts, also declare with humility and gratitude, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory." For of all movements in the religious world none has been more distinctly providential or less dependent on the skill and will of man than this. An organization that has maintained itself for thirty years while literally scores of experiments for the young in our churches have been tried and failed; an organization that has spread into every land beneath the sun, and that has had its literature translated into a hundred languages; an organization that has grown stronger every year, and whose last year showed the largest increase and the greatest prosperity of all, has a right to tell its simple story without being suspected of egotism or self-gratulation.

Societies Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there were no distinctly religious societies for young people outside of a few local churches and certain circles of young people interested in the cause of foreign missions.

Today there is scarcely a Protestant church in the five continents without a distinctly religious organization for its young people. Of these some 75,000 are Christian Endeavor societies, and there are at least 25,000 purely denominational societies based on the same principles.

From Point Barrow in northernmost Alaska, where today the Endeavorers endure a day of twenty-four hours without the sun, to Invercargill, at the southern tip of New Zealand, where they rejoice in twenty-four hours of daylight; from America due west to Asia, across Africa, across Europe, back to America, though we should lose and gain again twenty-four hours in our reckoning, of time, we should not lose sight of our Christian Endeavor comrades. At every ocean pier in our journey around the world, and at most railway stations, they would greet us and bid us Godspeed.

Meetings Then and Now.

Thirty years ago a church with a weekly meeting especially for young people was an exception; now a church without such a meeting is the exception, and every year there are held no less than four millions of young people's devotional meetings adopting the methods, the principles, and the topics of the Christian Endeavor Society.

Thirty years ago the young people were not banded together for any sort of evangelistic or ingathering work. Such a thing as a mission of young people to young people was unknown. Now 75,000 lookout committees are on the outlook constantly for new members for the society and the church, a distinctly evangelistic work that does not depend on the coming of an evangelist, and that does not cease with his departure.

This week in which Christian Endeavor Day occurs is an ingathering week, and next Sunday is a Decision Day in a multitude of churches. In Great Britain this very week in memory of the founding of Christian Endeavor a mission of young people for young people is being carried on in many parts of the United Kingdom.

Social Life Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there were few social functions arranged distinctly for the young people. Now the young people's social is a distinct and almost universal method of interesting them in the life and work of the church, and the ingenuity of some hundreds of thousands of Christian young people on the social committees is taxed to provide wholesome entertainment and recreation under the auspices of the church. As one boy was heard to say, "everything starts from the church in these days." Who will say that this is not the best of all places for the recreations, as well as for the distinctively Christian service, of the young people to start?

Thirty years ago we were in the age of impression so far as the young people were concerned. The Sunday-school was managed by the older people, as it is now, and from its very nature must always be, for it is the most valuable of all agencies of religious impression. Olden people managed the temperance society; they controlled the missionary society; they led the music; they furnished the flowers for the pulpit when any were seen; and it was hardly thought fitting for a boy or a young man to pass a contribution-box or show a stranger to a seat.

How Religious Life is Expressed.

Now we live in the age, not only of impression, but of expression, when young people are taught that the impression made by teachers and books is largely lost unless expressed by them in words and deeds. This is a fundamental principle of the new psychology, of which the Christian Endeavor Society is a practical exemplar.

Now most of the 75,000 societies have temperance or good-citizenship committees of the young people themselves, to promote the truest patriotism; missionary committees of the young people themselves, through which interest in the great world beyond us is aroused, and more than half a million dollars every year is raised for home and foreign missions; music committees of the young people themselves, who turn their own musical ability to account; and flower committees that make glad the sanctuary each Sunday with the handiwork of God.

Only the other day a letter reached me from distant Marsovan in the interior of Turkey, telling how the Endeavorers cultivated their own flower-gardens that their church might be decorated, and another from India, telling how the dusky Endeavorers there beautified the church lawn and rescued the adjoining graveyard from the weeds of neglect.

Thirty years ago there were no organized unions of young people embracing the youth of different churches and denominations. Now there is no nation of considerable size, and no state or province in any land, without its Christian Endeavor union. All the largest cities of the world and thousands of the smaller places have their local or district unions.

For Sailors and Prisoners.

Thirty years ago there were Seamen's Friend Societies, but no work for sailors by the young people of our churches. Now there are Floating Societies of Christian Endeavor among the boys on the sea on many iron-clads and merchant vessels, and in consequence an intense interest in them is aroused among the boys of the shore. The Floating Endeavor work carried on by the societies of Liverpool and London, New York and San Diego, of Nagasaki and Bombay, and many another seaport is beyond all praise. Vessels are visited; services are held; socials are enjoyed; good literature by the ton and comfort-bags by the thousand are distributed; and, better than all, the Christian sailor on the sea is given to understand that he is not forgotten by his brothers and sisters on the shore.

Thirty years ago few young people out of prison gave a thought to the tens of thousands of young men behind prison bars. Now the thousands of prisoners who have been converted to Christ and organized into societies through the efforts of their Endeavor friends outside, appeal most strongly to the warm hearts of our youth; and the fact that no prison Endeavorer is recorded as returning to prison when once discharged is a tribute to the sincerity of their conversion and to the sympathy of their friends outside, who have helped them to forget the past and to begin a new career.

The Use of the Press.

Thirty years ago there were no news papers or magazines devoted to the religious life of the young people save a few story-papers for children, which were given away in the Sunday-school. Now there are some forty national and state papers in half as many languages, devoted to the work of Christian Endeavor alone.

Fellowship of Young People Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there was comparatively little fellowship between the denominations, and of course the young people of different sects knew little and cared less for one another. Said a distinguished minister of a prominent church to me the other day: "When I was a young minister and I wanted to wake up my sleepy audience, I would pitch into the other denominations for their peculiarities. Then the men would sit up and take notice, and say, as they went out of church, 'Ain't our young minister smart? he knows how to give it to them hot and heavy.'"

Such a travesty on religion would scarcely be possible in any pulpit of the land today, and have not the young people had their full share in bringing about the hearty fellowship, which is so good and so pleasant a thing to behold?

As an answer to this question go with me to any of our great state conventions, where from five to fifty denominations assemble under the banner of Christian Endeavor. In Pennsylvania forty-six denominations are actually enrolled among the five thousand Endeavor Societies of the Keystone State. Or, still better, go with me to such a convention as the World's Endeavor meeting at Agra, India, where every Protestant mission was represented, as well as every great race of mankind, and where at the consecration meeting responses were made in forty-one different languages,—English and German and Swedish and Chinese and Tamil and Teluga and Hindi and Hindustani, in Tibetan and Burmese and Karen and Cingalese and a score more, all telling of devotion to Jesus Christ and His cause.

William Carey and Andrew Fuller.

A century ago William Carey in a letter to Andrew Fuller prayed for and predicted such a meeting as a possibility of the remote future, but Andrew Fuller thought that it was not within the bounds of possibility, or scarcely desirable. A year ago his great-grandson, William Carey the third, presided at a meeting of forty denominations and as many nationalities at this same Endeavor Convention held under the shadow of the Taj Mahal in the heart of the same continent to which William Carey, the first, gave his life.

Great Conventions.

Or if in our own land you would fully realize the sweep and the strength of this fellowship of the young people of today, call to mind the Convention of '95 in our own city of Boston, when 56,000 young people from all over the land made the pilgrimage to our good city, when the city was decorated with banners and mottoes of welcome as never before or since in its history.

Or, better still, go with me next July to Atlanta City, and see a similar throng of a younger generation, representing every denomination, and every state, and almost every considerable community, of our land. Join with them in their praise; lift up your hearts with them in their prayer; mingle with them in their consecration, and tell me whether the fellowship of the young Christians of America is not a vital and glorious feature of our modern church life.

No Monopoly.

It is only fair to add that of course this great awakening by and for young people has not been monopolized by the Christian Endeavor movement. While it has been growing strong, the Sunday school has largely multiplied its efficiency and increased its numbers. The Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association have become at least ten times as powerful and prosperous as they were thirty years ago. The distinctively missionary and temperance societies of young people have increased in vigor and usefulness, and with all of them Christian Endeavor has sought to be a loyal-co-laborer.

A Personal Testimony.

May I add, before I close, a personal word? During these thirty years I have given myself with what vigor or devotion I could command to work with and for the young people of our country and the world.

During these years I have journeyed more than 600,000 miles in their behalf, have been five times around the world, besides visits to South America and Mexico and many journeys to Europe and nearer Asia.

I have spoken to nearly two millions of these young people, who speak sixty languages, and who were willing to listen to my halting words through an interpreter. I have seen them in meetings great and small, and in their homes. I have seen them in shop and school and college, on the campus and the ball-field. I have heard their stumbling confession of Christ. I have watched them grow strong in the faith and zealous in many a great cause. I have heard them in after-years in the pulpits of our land or preaching to the untutored nations of other lands; and, the more I have seen of these young people, the more I have come to believe in them, trust them, love them.

Making allowance for all unhappy exceptions, I have come more and more, during all these thirty years, to admire their sanity, their courage, their devotion to the right. I have found them responsive to every worthy appeal from God or country, and I have unbounded hope for the future, as more and more the affairs of state and nation fall into their hands.

I thank God for every mile I have traveled in their behalf, for every meeting I have addressed, for every kindly hand I have taken; and I can say with all heartiness, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places," and so far as I may have the love and confidence of the young people of today I have a goodly heritage.

The Great Convention.

We wish to make the Young People's Convention to be held at Elon College April 15 to 17 a great gathering. This we can do, provided all the officers of all the

My Dear Children and Friends:

We are delighted to have so many letters from the children this week, it reminds us of old times when we would hold over from one week to another. Well children come as often as you will and as many as can do so; we have room for all. It would help Uncle Jim to have the corner well filled each week with interesting little letters filled with love and sympathy for the orphan child.

We are very grateful for the following donations and the variety adds value to the same. It's remarkable how the Lord helps the orphanage through his good people and in so many ways.

Miss Rattie Hurdle, Greensboro, N. C., 1 pr. shoes. Mrs. Florence T. Branch, Auburn, N. C., 1 quilt. Miss Florence

Dixon, Snow Camp, N. C., 1-2 doz. prs. mittens, 3 1-4 yds flannel, 1 cap. L. A. S., Franklin, Va., 1 box cloaks, hats, handkerchiefs, hose, dress goods, bleaching, overcoat, 1 quilt, 1 blanket, 1 top for quilt and lot of ready made garments. Mrs. G. W. Suits, Howards Chapel, N. C. 1 quilt. Mrs. John A. Brown Suffolk, Va., 1 quilt 2 pillow slips, 1 pillow. W. Duke and Sons, Durham, N. C., 5 tons tobacco stems. Rev. MeD. Howsare, Norfolk, Va., 1 doz. fine Buff Orpington eggs. Mrs. A. F. Iseley, Burlington, N. C., 1 dress. The gift of the W. Duke and Sons Co., Durham, N. C., of 5 tons tobacco stems (cut) is exceedingly helpful for our farm and garden crops; and we are very grateful for same.

Brethren and sisters we appreciate these gifts very much.

We have had such weather that no farm work has been done. Since Uncle John (our farmer) has left us "our big boys" are asking to let them farm which it now looks like they will have the opportunity, of doing, as we have failed to secure any help to date except day labor.

We are sending out kind letters to our Sunday-schools that are not making "Monthly offerings" earnestly soliciting their prompt help in supporting the orphanage. We do beg the Supts. and secretaries (or whoever gets the letter. In some conferences we have to send to the Supt. and in other conferences to the secretaries etc.) to read the letter to the school and explain the appeal and our needs and let the school decide what they will do.

Give us a liberal corner next week from all sources?

Fondly yours,
 Uncle Jim.

Raleigh, N. C.,
 Feb. 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Spring will soon be here, it is almost time to begin crops, isn't it?

Hope the orphans are going to school and enjoying it.

With much love to you and all, and also our quarter.

Your Nephews and Nieces.

Blannie Bettie, Dwight, Noma and Numa Franks.

You forgot your money little folks. Be sure to put it in next time.

Windsor, Va.,
 March 6, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am a little girl 9 years old. I live in Windsor, Va., and attend the High School here. I visited my relatives at Myrtle a few days ago, my Aunt gave me a dime which I sent to you for the orphan children. I love to remember the little children that have no mamas and papas to care for them. I have been giving to the Baptist Orphanage for some time.

With love for the little orphans, and best wishes for all.

Nellie Saunders.

Welcome Nellie. Thank you for sharing your money with us. We hope to hear from you again soon.

Manson, N. C.,
 March 5, 1911.

Dear Ueule Jim:

I will write my letter and send 20 cents for my dues, March and April. Hope you and all the little folks are well. I am so glad spring is coming. I love to see the green grass growing in the meadow and hear the cow bells ring. But I will be so sorry when school closes. I love to go to school so much. It will not stop until the 5th of May. Well my letter is getting long and I will have to stop. Hope you and all the cousins are well. With much love.

Bettie Earles.

Guess "Jack Frost" will hide the green grass for awhile Bettie but not long. Today the ground is full of snow; perhaps when this letter is published it will be gone.

Burlington, N. C.,
 March 5, 1911.

Dear Ueule Jim:

I want to join in the band of little cousins. I am a little eight year old girl and go to Sunday-school every Sunday at the Christian Church. Uncle John Foster is our Supt. and we all love him. We had present today 211, and our collection was $8.02. As this is my first letter fear you think it is too long.

Enclosed find ten cents for the orphans. With love to you and the children.

Your niece,
 Mary Alice Iseley.

We welcome you Mary Alice and hope you'll come to see us some day—you are so near.

Henderson, N. C.,
 March 2, 1911.

Dear Ueule Jim:

As March has come it is time for us to send in our dues. The weather is so cold your boys can't work much on the farm. We work hot or cold taking groceries around for papa, and sometimes we get tired, but when he lets us drive the horse we don't mind it. We have been quite well this winter.

With best wishes for you and the cousins, we are:

Archie Newman,
 Wallace Newman.

Well boys people must eat hot or cold and guess they are pleased when they see you little grocery men coming.

Sanford, N. C.

March 7, 1911.

Dear Uuele Jim:

I will write my letter and send my dime for March.

Uncle Jim the ground is white with snow today, the first day of March, but I went to school I haven't missed a day nor been tardy this session. I will send little Carlynn Schobey's letter and money this time as he is on a visit at Clio S. C. to see his Uncle and Aunt and Cousin Wilmer Hunt.

We send love and best wishes to the cousins.

Your niece and nephew,
Annie Pearl Way,
Carlynn Schobey.

Little Carlynn has taken a cold time for his visit but trust he will enjoy it. So Annie do not let the snow keep you from breaking your record.

Roxboro, N. C.,

Feb. 24, 1911.

Dear Uuele Jim:

I am a year and half old and weigh 27 lbs.—three times my usual weight. I am over 33 inches tall. I send 20 cents to the Band. Grandma gave it to me. 10 cts. is for Jan. and 10 for Feb. You can't guess how mother has been weighing me lately. In the laundry bag and draws up the string over my head, but instead of sending me out for soiled clothes, she hangs me on the scales to weigh. I think it is fun. I didn't want to get out the last time, so she had my nurse (and her name was Maude) take me, bag and all in her arms down to call on a lady on the lower floor. There I sat until Mrs. Gwynn laughed and then I wanted to get out of the bag. I don't like to be laughed at. Ever since I was 4 months old I would cry if any one laughed at me.

I forgot to tell you I saw Halley's Comet as an evening comet, Sunday night, May 29, while in Roxboro. My parents waked me about 10 o'clock and took me in the yard to see it. I would have forgotten that the tail reached to the zenith, if mother had not remembered it for me.

May 31, daddy went with mother and me to Durham, whence I sent my first telegram—one to grandpa at Elon College, telling him to meet mother and me at Elon that p. m. While we were in Durham I went to a baby show for the Episcopal church. Daddy said I would have won the prize if our train had not left before it was over.

The night before leaving Roxboro we received sad news—the first death in our family in my life time. But I was too small to have my trip to Elon saddened by the loss of our dear Uncle Duncan Cook.

Uncle Wellons and grandpa met us at the train and grandpa took me to see Aunt Lydia's family a few minutes and then I attended my first commencement exercise—Aunt Wilson's music pupil's concert. Grandpa took me in his arms and mother said to the marshal "we want one seat near the front for papa and one in the rear so William Staley will not disturb anyone." Grandpa said "We want two at the front, William Staley will behave nicely." And I did too, and listened to the music. Grandpa held me most of the time. I met Faculty friends and students after the concert. I met Mr. Sam Farmer and wife and several other Farmers and 2 Mesdames Jones. Wednesday I slept in my coach on the West Dormitory porch while mother and grandpa attended the graduating exercises. Grandpa went to Raleigh that afternoon to go fishing in Mr. Beale Johnson's pond. I called on Aunt "Wil" "Miss Wilson" and her mother sang me to sleep. I made no more calls on account of my nap and a shower of rain. That night I heard Miss Jennie Herndon deliver her splendid alumni address. Mrs. Sue Jones entertained me awhile and put me to bed.

Thurs. 7:30 a. m., Uncle John Cook arrived in a carriage and took us by the orphanage to see Aunt Myrtle and to Burlington to see Aunt Letitia Staley and Uncle George Cook's family thence to Graham to the Court House to see Uncle Bob Cook, the High Sheriff of Alamance and Aunt Kate Long. At Graham we boarded the 10:30 train for Raleigh. We called at Mrs. Mann's where grandpa joined us. He took us to the State House into Governor Kitchen's office and introduced us. I guess it was almost as much a variety for him to shake hands with 9 month old babies as it was for me to shake hands with governors. As he was only a governor and had a vase of red and white sweet peas on his desk, I held out my little hand towards the pretty flowers. He gave me a spray of white ones and then handed me a red one, saying "I guess you want a red one, most babies like red." When I am a big boy, I guess governors will be a greater attraction for me than sweet peas. I rolled around the streets of Raleigh in my perambulator. That was my first visit to the Capital of North Carolina. That p. m. we returned to grandma's and were given a glad welcome by all there. Aunt Annie and Aunt Willie were in Boston. Thursday ended my first long trip. Mother wonders if Mr.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come again with my dues for March. Since my last letter I have been sick with the measles and it is not so very pleasant but I won't have it any more.

We have three pigeons building nest. Their names are Spot, Dink, and Beauty.

Enclosed find 5 cents. Love and best wishes for the cousins.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I am again, but have been mighty sick with the measles for one week, but am able to go to the cook room today for the first time. After I got better I amused myself making designs with violets. Making hog pins with tooth picks. playing with paper dolls etc.

Enclosed find 5 cents for the orphans. With much love for the cousins.

Your little girl,

Violet Davis.

Am so glad you are O. K. again Violet and ready with a good appetite for the "cook room."

—N. C. S. S. Convention, April 26-28.

Begin on page 9.

Young People's and Sunday-school Conventions in the several Conferences and the officials of the local organizations of Sunday-schools, Teacher-Training Classes, Organized Classes, Home Departments, Christian Endeavor Societies, etc., will cooperate to that end. We print below a communication from Rev. J. F. Morgan, President of the Young People's Convention of the Western N. C. Conference. We wish the president and the secretary of every such organization in all the conferences would speak out as holdly. Why not? Let us hear from you, brethren.

Mr. Gates Promoted.

His N. C. friends who were so favorably impressed by his forceful addresses and masterful, open parliaments and round tables at the High Point C. E. Convention last April will be delighted to know that Mr. E. P. Gates has been promoted to the responsible position of Field Secretary of C. E. for the great state of Illinois. Mr. Gates is a capital speaker, is trained to be a lawyer, and has had large and wide experience in C. E.—all which preeminently qualify him for his new post and we guarantee that he will succeed in it. Best wishes, Mr. Gates, from your North Carolina friends.

TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION OF THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

Dear fellow workers: I wish to call attention to a motion that was passed in our convention at Parks Cross Roads last July, allowing the Sunday-schools, C. E. Societies, Teacher-Training and Organized Classes, to elect delegates to the biennial session of the Young People's Convention. This session of the convention will be held at Elon College, N. C., April 15-17, 1911. As president of the Convention of the Western N. C. Conference, I want to urge that every Sunday-school, C. E. Society, Teacher-Training and Organized Class, with in the bounds of the Western Conference, to elect delegates to this Convention at once, and see to it that those who are elected will go. Each organization is entitled to one delegate for each 25 of the enrollment, each organization to have at least one delegate.

Brethren and Sisters of our Convention, we can't afford not to have a good delegation in the 2nd session of this great convention. Then let us begin now to make our delegation as large as, if not larger than any of the other conventions.

Bro. pastor, and Bro. Supt., please bring this matter before your people at once, and let's do our part in making the convention at Elon a success.

J. F. Morgan, Pres. Y. P. C. of W. N. C.

WESTERN MISSION POINTS. FROM MANY PENS.

Miners are insulated from the rest of the world, and need the friendship of Christ. They are strong, and are needed to do the work of Christ.

Our northwest is a great agricultural region, one of the richest in the world. It is for the church to see that it also bears the fruit of the Spirit.

The West is the great field for experience in social and political life. God grant that it may also make "the Great Experiment" of Christianity.

"Dry farming" is a system of deep and persistent cultivating, breaking up the soil very fine and pulverizing it continually. It renders even the deserts fertile, and is a fine illustration of the breaking up of hard hearts which the gospel accomplishes.

Vast regions of the West are rendered fertile by the government's enormous irrigation works. By operations as gigantic let the church bring to these great empires the water of life.

The Mormons are the peril that hangs over most of the Western States; and in proportion as they gain influence there they will become a peril to the entire country.

The Indians constitute an important gospel field in the West; and we owe them the gospel, having taken so much from them.

Pioneer life has many perils, but none greater than the removal of the restraints of society and custom. Nowhere in the country are good habits so severely tested.

"The wild and woolly West" is a misnomer nowadays. When the American Board met in Portland, Oregon, that rich and cultivated city, a good lady in Boston wrote to the pastor of the splendid church that was to entertain the society offering to send out a melodeon for the use of the meetings, if there was any one there who would play it!

The Chinese and Japanese that are found in such numbers in the West afford a noble opportunity for the church, bringing foreign mission fields right to our doors.

Mammonism is a terrible peril in the West, with its many chances for money-making. The church is the only opponent that can conquer Mammon.

The West is a congeries of vast empires that may be won now with comparative ease, but the work will be immensely more difficult later.

The Christian Endeavor Society is especially useful in the West, where there are so many communities without churches. In all such places our society will hold the ground till a pastor comes, and often such a society has grown into a church.

There are over fifty heathen temples where heathen worship is conducted in this country, the greater number of these are found in the cities of the Pacific coast.

A missionary went into one of the neglected places of the West, and one of the old timers grasped his hand and looking wistfully into his face said "Sir, we have waited twenty years for you."

Christ's home land is today a foreign mission field. We must keep the light burning brightly at home.

Dr. Sallada tells of a town two years old, with three hundred people. No Sunday-school or church service of any sort has ever been held in the town.

Japanese Buddhist missions expend forty thousand dollars per year to plant that faith upon the Pacific coast. This is probably twice what any Protestant church appropriates for Japanese work there. Buddhism has a finer headquarters building in Fresno, California, than any mission building of the most numerous Protestant body operating on the coast.

C. E. TOPIC FOR MARCH 26—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Missions in the Western United States, Isa. 62:1-12.

The Scripture:—Appoint some to read who has a good voice and fine dramatic sense. The reading or better the reciting of these 12 verses by such on one will be wonderfully telling in the success of the meeting. Let the comment be by the chairman of the Missionary Committee.

The Teacher:—As a month ago we studied the peculiar problems of the South from the Missionary standpoint, so at this portion of our great Republic. Here we meet the problem of sin in many forms, which is the great foe to all progressive missionary work. But there are problems peculiar to the West—such as Mormonism, the Indian Question, entrenched heathenism. Concerning one of these the leader will no doubt feel inclined to speak, providing for the others through his assistants.

Special Work:—Have written work or short addresses on such themes as: Mormonism; The Indians; Heathen Worship in the West; Jireh College; Mr. Roosevelt's visit to our Rifle, Colorado, church; Our Mission Points in the West; Our Missionaries in the West.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

How timid we preachers are becoming about future punishment! Seldom do we hear allusion to judgment after death. And yet there is no better proved fact by the present experiences of mankind, than that suffering follows transgression of law—civil, sanitary, financial, social or domestic.

It is plainly contrary to the Bible and to ordinary philosophy to suppose a time when there will be no bad persons in the universe, unless they have been destroyed.

A prison is needed. The existence in hell is not to prepare for heaven. There must be an "end of sin," and an end of trial and probation, in order that sinners may not entice others to sin.

Eternal judgment is a phrase consistent with the infinity of God, appropriate to the evil of sin, and is an explanation of the anxiety of angels about sinners, and their "joy in heaven when one repenteth."

The sugar-coated namby-pamby of superficial thinkers, doing away with the punishment of sin because of the love of God, should not have influence with solid men; for criminals are not proper judges of law, or penalty, since crime blunts the moral sense. We must accept the sentence of the judge. The executive only can pardon. And he has plainly stated the terms.

Vice is only in part its own penalty; for the conscience may become seared by being disregarded and ignored; so that the sinner takes delight in his wickedness, and seems to prefer to "believe a lie and be damned."

Preachers, you cannot convert the world while ignoring the penalties for sin.—J. J. Summerbell, in Christian Vanguard.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

In last week's Sun we gave facts as we had gleaned them from here and there about the deadly famine that now prevails in China. The following is a letter sent from the scene of the famine to The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., by Rev. W. D. Bostick, a missionary now at Po Chow. This letter has been long in coming—since Jan. 19—and conditions now are far worse even than when this letter was written, with little hope of abatement for some months to come. It is indeed a pitiful story. Read it:

Dear Readers:—I have tried for several days to get a letter written for you but just now, I am overwhelmed with efforts to help the poor who are perishing around us. Now, as I begin to write there is simply a multitude of faces around my front gate pleading for something to eat, for the word has gotten out that we are going to help them, even though we have taken every precaution to keep them from thinking that it is to be had here, for we know that if the word should be substantiated with any giving, there would be an over-running of us which would mean no rest and maybe no life for us. How I do wish you could get a full conception of the real situation that is on all around us. It is estimated that 3,000,000 of people are in great need in this famine-stricken district, and that at least 1,000,000 will likely perish before the wheat is garnered if they do not receive help. Help is now coming in, but as yet, it is as a drop in the bucket to what is needed, and the needs will grow worse as the time drags along till wheat harvest.

I never bow my head to say grace now nor raise my heart in prayer that my mind's eye does not go out to the multitude of needy and my sympathy is so touched for them that I feel now that I will give to the very bottom of my pocket-book if there is not a great deal of giving from the outside. I often pray that the hearts of many people will be touched and that liberal giving will be the result.

I had known all the fall that the needs were great and that many were suffering, but the real state of affairs has during this last half month been revealed to me. With some money that was to pass through my hands, I decided to do some work on some badly destroyed roads, getting the needy to do it. I mentioned that I would give three cents a day for laborers, but was told by everyone to whom I mentioned it that that was not enough to feed them (and I saw that it was less than I could feed them with even the coarsest diet.) But when the work was begun I at once had to begin to refuse men, able-bodied men, who were accustomed to work and who were willing to use their strength.

Morning after morning when I would come down-stairs there was a multitude of faces at my door waiting to plead with me to use them in this work, I having decided to use only two hundred.

This is telling you of the general condition, but I could use a whole day telling you of individual cases of needs, which are pitiful beyond description. One woman told us that she had six sons and had given away three and was hunting for someone who wanted the others, not being able to feed them. Another man who has eighty acres of land, but the crop all being destroyed last summer, was trying to sell his only child baby of eight months. To stick a straw up on anything that is placed on the street is a sign that it is for sale. Children are thus to be seen advertised now. Think of a parent carrying a child in the arms with this sign attached to it and another child following with the same sign! Is it not enough to touch every heart? One baby was buried in the manure of a loaded wagon one night and was soon found and kept over the night, and was sold for one pound of bread the next day. One old person told of having given away four of his six children and said that the other two were so hungry that they could not walk.

One man who is carrying dirt for me for three cents a day says that his whole family of seven are now subsisting on that, having nothing else to depend on. I am told by one neighbor that another neighbor family of eight are making sixteen ounces of meal per day into soup, and that is all they have. One neighbor family of three pass the day eating only one-half cent's worth of wheat bran for the three.

A few days ago a man with nothing whatever on him was sitting out by the side of a house while the wind whistled against him and the snow peppered down on him. One morning when I arose I found a fifteen-year-old boy just outside of my gate, having crouched there all night when the temperature was ten degrees below freezing. I inquired about him and found that his father, mother and his whole family had perished and that he had been out haggling without anything to eat. He was in the poorest rags. I found him a boy of good manners and was willing to carry dirt. But when he got up it was shown that his feet had frozen and his toes already in a rotten condition. Again, when the temperature was below freezing I saw a half-grown boy on the street, stark barefooted, crying like a babe with cold hunger. I am not telling isolated cases; there are just such as I have told above to be found by the thousands.

There is now a committee in Shanghai who are doing what they can to solicit help from foreign countries, missionaries and business men. Any help that you want to send should be sent through them. They send to points where most all passes through the hands of missionaries, so you may feel assured that the greatest care will be taken to get it to the most needy. A gold dollar would save the life of a hungry person for the next few months, till wheat is gathered, when they will then be able to get along. What will you do? Is there one who reads this who is not willing to give that much? And if you give more, it can be well used. I am,

Sincerely,

Wade D. Bostick.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Prof. B. B. Dougherty, president of the Appalachian Training School, Boone, N. C., which is doing such excellent work among the so called mountain white of N. C., paid the college a visit on last Sunday and Monday, on his way home from the Capital City, where he had been importuning the Legislature for funds for his institution. Prof. Dougherty felt bound to Elon by tender ties, as he expressed it, and so was anxious to pay this visit. He has used several of former Elon pupils in his faculty and administrative corps. On Monday morning Prof. Dougherty attended chapel services, and made a very interesting and timely address to the students.

President Moffitt returned to the college on last Tuesday morning, from an extended tour of Eastern Va., in behalf of the Special Fund for the college, which he is endeavoring to raise, in which he is meeting with great encouragement. He averaged about $300.00 a day on this trip and there are more prospects in this same section, which will run the sum considerably above that amount.

Dr. and Mrs. F. S. Child, of Fairfield, Conn., are now honored visitors of the college. Dr. Child on Thursday evening, delivered the first series of lectures on Egypt, which is the theme of his lectures this year. His subject was the "Approach to Egypt" or "From Gibraltar to Alexandria." The steamer on which Dr. Child visited this ancient land made stops at various points of interest in the Northern Mediterranean, and these stops were most classically described by him, particularly the impregnable rock, Puteoli, Vesuvius, and Cyprus. As each of these places were visited in the lecture, matters of historical import were interwoven with matters purely descriptive, in a most fascinating fashion. The subject of the second lecture was "The Nile and an Old University Town;" the concluding lecture was on "The Marvelous Revolutions of Archaeological Research in Egypt." Each of these lectures was replete with learning and tinged with the indescribable deftness of personal incident and keen insight. Never has Dr. Child more delighted Elon audiences. Tho this is his rest period, Dr. Child preached at the 11 o'clock hour on Sunday a most eloquent sermon, which will appear in the Sun in full. No man holds a warmer place in the affections of Elon people than Dr. Child and now that his charming and cultured wife has also visited Elon, she also shares this benignant feeling of our people with him. For a busy man such as Dr. Child is to start for days of his all too short vocation for lectures to our students and townsmen is a compliment we most heartily appreciate.

Prof. S. G. Rollings, Kenly, N. C., visited the College Sunday. He came up to see his sister, Miss Grace. His school at Kenly is in a flourishing condition.

Mr. R. A. Campbell, Dayton, Va., was called home for inspection last Wednesday, he being a member of the Virginia Militia. He will return this week and take up his work looking to graduation in June.

Mr. Gus. A. Garrison, Burlington, N. C., was a pleasant visitor here Wednesday and Thursday.

Prof. Lawrence visited the Berea (Alabama) Church Sunday and secured $325 for the Special Fund.

President Moffitt is confined to his bed at this (Monday) writing, sick of grip.

—Under the guise of "peaceful maneuvers" and "to try the efficiency of the fighting resources of the nation" President Taft, as commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States, has ordered a hurried mobilization of soldiers, sailors and marines to the southwest, along the line between Texas and Mexico. It looks as if this movement meant a show down to Mexico which has been in a state of turmoil and strife for some time; but the official announcement has it that it is only for practice. At any rate Uncle Sam seems ready for business along the Mexican borders if occasion arises.

—A correspondent of the Associated Press gives out this from President Taft as to why troops are assembling along the Mexican border:

"All doubt as to the purpose of the government in sending 20,000 troops to the Mexican border has at last been swept away. The United States has determined that the revolution in the republic to the South must end. The American troops have been sent to form a solid military wall along the Rio Grande to stop filibustering and to see that there is no further smuggling of arms and men across the international boundary.

IS MY RELIGIOUS LIFE A HUMBUG? By Dr. Frank S. Child, Fairfield Ct., Preached at Elon College, March 12.

"Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy." Luke XII: 1.

Those who have met Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, or who, if they have not met him, have read of his Labrador work, will be interested in the following paragraphs, showing the circumstances under which he entered upon his life of splendid Christian service: "In 1883, while I was studying medicine at the London Hospital in White Chapel, I was attracted by a huge crowd going into a large tent in the slums of the Stepney. There was singing going on inside, and curiosity led me in.

"As I left with the crowd, I came to the conclusion that my religious life was a humbug. I vowed in future that I would either give up or make it real. It was obviously not a thing to be played with.

"Some time later I heard that one of England's famous cricketers, whose athletic distinctions I greatly admired, Mr. J. E. M. Studd, was going to speak in the neighborhood, and I went to hear him. Seated in front of me there were two or three rows of boys from a training ship, all dressed in the same uniform. At the end of his speech Mr. Studd invited any one who was not ashamed to confess that Christ was his Master for this life, rather than a kind of insurance ticket for the next world, to stand up. I did not know that I was afraid of anything. One boy out of all this large number rose to his feet. I knew pretty well what that meant for him, so I decided to back him up and do the same. With this theological outfit I started out on my career."

"I came to the conclusion," says Dr. Grenfell, "that my religious life was a humbug." A most serious and startling conclusion, wasn't it?

That was evidently the conclusion which Jesus had reached concerning more or less of the people whom he met in his missionary touring through Palestine. The religious life of the Pharisees had a good deal of humbug about it. This most strict sect had apparently gone to seed in the days of our Savior; little vitality remained among them. Religion had become largely a pretense. It was characteristic of these people to like the chief places in the synagogue, to do their alms conspicuously, to pray standing in the corners of the streets, that they might be seen of men, to disfigure their faces in fasting to tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and then "pass over judgment and the love of God." The whole weight of Christ's wrath was turned upon this sort of thing. He was kind, gentle, patient with average sinners. He treated what we might call the scum of society with the tenderest sympathy and the largest compassion. He was always seeking the good in men, discovering many attractions and getting many cordial responses in the lives of people which society called degraded, worthless or outcast. But when it came to the man who pretended to be what he was not, who traded upon his morality and legalism, who used piety for a cloak in which to cover his iniquity, then Jesus attacked the individual unsparingly, resistlessly. The thing he hated, and enathematized was fraud and deceit in the matter of religion. Charity will cover a multitude of sins, but charity is helpless and hopeless so long as a man is a hypocrite. The spirit of duplicity, imposture, humbug must be broken down and crushed before there is any fair chance for the spirit of the Christ, which is the spirit of truth, to enter and possess the individual. "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy," exclaims Jesus. There can be no evasion, no sleight-of-hand, no dextrous fencing on the part of the soul, when it comes to dealing with God. And whatever else religion may be, true religion is a face to face relation between God and a man. "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, neither hid, that shall not be known." Do you recall the apostle's advice? "For say through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you (Paul is writing to the Romans) not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith."

This pivotal incident in the life of young Grenfell links itself naturally with the warning of our Savior. If the people whom Jesus met, taught and loved in a personal way needed such a warning—if men so close to him stood in constant peril of self deception and self-trickery, how much larger the need through the later generations when Christianity has become widely diffused and taken to itself all the colors of the rainbow! "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy." That speech is not aimed at the most strict sect among the Jews. It is aimed at Christ's very disciples—the men who had forsaken all and followed him—the saints themselves. And the speech forced upon the individual the same question that forced itself upon young Grenfell—"Is my religion a humbug"? For we might just as well be frank with one another and say that there are neighbors, critics, observers, who answer that question for us in the affirmative. Yes, your religion is a humbug (I say nothing respecting the character of men who make these accusations against us. That must speak for itself.) There are people who think it and in a thoroughly honest, sincere way, and see what answer we get. And we must pray the prayer of the psalmist while we turn our minds to this task—"Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." (Ps. 139: 23-24.)

Men identify themselves with the church and at the same time resort to practices in business which are immoral and degrading. What do people say? "Your religion is a humbug." Men run a sweat shop in the city—grinding down the poor until their bitter cry pierces the heavens. What is the verdict? "Your religion is a humbug." Men take every advantage of neighbors in trade, playing in secret way many a sharp game and pulling the wool over their eyes. Sooner or later it is whispered that they are doing these things while ostensibly walking in accordance with the principles of a Christian life. Is there any doubt what judgment the world pronounces? "Your religion is a humbug." The Christian people of this nation possess the vast share of this nation's wealth. They engage in the varied enterprises which flourish from one end of the land to the other. Human nature is the same stuff in rich and poor, good and bad, high and low. It is ever a struggle between right and wrong with the best of us not less than with the worst of us. It is not a strange thing therefore that men standing well in public esteem and social relations fall into the sins of greed, trickery, deception, in-

MEMORIAL TEMPLE, NORFOLK, VA.,
Which Celebrated its Twenty-First Anniversary, Sunday, March 19, 1911.

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES.

Twenty-First Anniversary of Christian Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Virginia.

Sunday, March 19th, 1911, was a day long to be remembered by the members and friends of Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Virginia. It was truly a great, good, gala day. Pastor McD. Howsare has a mind for action, method and achievement, and a most wholesome and happy idea did he and his good people conceive in celebrating their twenty first anniversary as a church and the unveiling of a tablet to the memory of the first pastor of the church, the beloved and late lamented Rev. C. J. Jones. A beautiful program, special services, choice singing, invited speakers, splendid audiences, a united, active and happy congregation helped to make the occasion memorable and the day a delight. There were three services, morning, afternoon, evening. The morning and evening services were in the regular line of the Sunday services, with platform and pulpit beautifully and elaborately decorated with flowers and potted plants, and special selections suited to the occasion by the splendid male choir of the church. Three members were received at the 11 a. m. service, and one at the evening service.

The memorial service in honor of Dr. C. J. Jones and the unveiling of the beautiful marble tablet, gold inscribed, to his memory began at 3 p. m. The following program was followed:

3, p. m. Rev. McD. Howsare, Pastor, presiding. Organ Voluntary.

Invocation: Rev. J. W. Barrett.

Hymn.

Scripture Reading: Rev. D. A. Keys.

Duet: Miss Mary Lou Brickhouse and Mrs. McD. Howsare.

Prayer: Rev. A. M. Hanson.

Solo: "The Earth is the Lord's," Mr. Mordaunt Etheridge.

Eulogy on the Life of Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

Unveiling of Tablet: Evelyn Elizabeth Howsare.

Anthem: Still, Still With Thee, Male Choir.

Benediction: Rev. M. L. Bryant.

It is useless to speak of the really great eulogy that Dr. Staley delivered. He knew Dr. Jones and loved him well and so spoke from intimate acquaintance and from the highest personal regard and the closest Christian fellowship. It was a great utterance and fortunately it was committed to manuscript which is printed herewith. The entire audience was thrilled with the beautiful singing, and the musical part of the program was by no means the least inspiring and beautiful of the day.

Pastor Howsare read the following letter from Mrs. C. J. Jones which was greatly appreciated:

To the members of Memorial Christian Temple:

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—You are assembled this afternoon to honor the memory of one who loved you and one whom you loved.

On this, the twenty-first anniversary of the birth of Memorial Christian Temple, the thoughts of many turn back to those days of beginnings. How well do I remember our first meeting place, the Opera House. Then, a little later we worshipped in the Episcopal Guild until we were able to build our own Chapel. But even this was only temporary, and I remember with what eagerness we arose early one morning to lay the first bricks of your present splendid structure. Our cup of joy was indeed full as we entered our new Temple, and worshipping, gave God all the glory. How nobly you rallied to the support of your pastor. How unstintingly you gave of your time and substance for the forwarding of the work. And your efforts were crowned with success. Throughout this period of growth you worked beside your pastor with your shoulders to the wheel. There was perfect harmony. And when he heard God's call to another field of labor, it was with a deep sense of sorrow that he left you. I need hardly mention my own feelings at that time. You who were there can well remember.

And this afternoon you are gathered together to honor his memory. In thus honoring him you are honoring his family. In behalf of myself and family I desire to thank you for the affectionate memory of times past which still lingers with you, and pray that God may grant His richest blessings to you and to your pastor.

As you look upon this beautiful marble tablet, think of him whose name it bears, if you will, as your first pastor; think of him, if you will, as the one privileged by God to labor with you in the building of this temple; but think of him as one who loved you dearly.

I had hoped that the family might be represented at this service; but this seemed impossible, so I send this note to read.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Chas. J. Jones.

At the conclusion of Dr. Staley's eulogy a beautiful incident followed when a white carnation was presented to every one present who was a charter worker and member of the church twenty one years ago. The following young ladies presented the carnations and it required a goodly number: Miss Ida Twiddy, Miss Margaret Brickhouse, Miss Finch White, Miss Ethel Guynn.

Pastor Howsare is doing a great and good work which tells now and will tell in the years to come. It was indeed a pleasure to the Sun's editor to be present and share the joys and the services of the good day at Memorial Temple last Sunday:

the night of October 31st, sixteen persons, six of whom have since died, met at Captain P. H. Lee's residence to consider the question of a Christian church in Norfolk. The meeting adjourned to the residence of Mrs. A. L. Hill in Norfolk on November 11th. Fifteen were present at this second meeting. A Finance Committee was appointed and a subscription of $700.00 was taken for current expenses, and the A. C. C. offered $800.00. Rev. C. J. Jones was chosen to lead the work and W. W. Staley was instructed to wire the call and explain by letter. This was done November 12th and Dr. Jones wrote letter of acceptance Nov. 16th from Columbus, Ohio.

The third meeting was held at the residence of Col. A. Savage, December 1st, Dr. Jones being present. Committee of place for worship reported purchase of Chapel on Charlotte Street for $3250.00 and this was approved.

The 4th meeting was held in the Chapel, March, 1890, at which forty charter workers were enrolled; and the 5th meeting was held in same place April 5th when twelve names were added, making 52. Many of these held membership in other churches.

At a 6th meeting, held May 29, 1890, officers were chosen: Deacons: A. Savage, A. M. Eley, S. A. Etheridge; Treasurer, A. Savage; Secretary, T. A. Jones; Ushers, P. H. Savage and James A. Eley.

On January 14, 1891, a committee was appointed to sell chapel on Charlotte St. and purchase a new location. Eight lots were bought here for $3800.00 and a plank chapel erected at a cost of $1080.00. This was occupied from March 15, 1891 to March 11, 1894.

The reunion of the church north and south, Marion, Indiana, October, 1890, suggested the idea of "Memorial Christian Temple" to commemorate that historic event. In this work the city of Norfolk paid $16,120.00; the southern churches $7865.00; and the north $4600.00, making $28,585.00 up to the time of its dedication, May 6th, 1894.

Among the most conspicuous helpers in those early years were Col. A. Savage, whose personal check made big-steps possible by gift or loan; A. M. Eley, T. A. Jones, R. A. Hyslop, E. J. Brickhouse, John C. Haynes, P. H. Lee, T. R. Gaskins, W. J. Lee, and many others whose labors are enshrined in these walls. If time permitted I would call the roll of those 52 who moved with their faces to the light and made not only this Temple a reality, but really made 3rd Church, South Norfolk, Portsmouth, Lambert's Point, and Newport News. Those were seed-sowing years whose fruitage will be greatest in years to come.

It is in connection with this work that I have been requested to deliver an eulogy upon the life of Rev. D. C. J. Jones whose labors in this city for six years won many souls to Christ and established the cause of the Christian Church. I now enter upon that pleasing service which I wish had fallen into more gifted hands. The only thing I can bring is a heart full of love and a mind full of memories for the minister whose sermons and fellowship meant more to me than any other in spiritual things. He not only charmed me by his utterances, but he enriched my soul by his spiritual power. He was a preacher who lived in the conscious presence of God and in touch with the souls of men. He imparted to others some of the spiritual quality which he possessed in so marked a measure. He tuned preachers up to a spiritual key. He helped the pulpit as well as the pew. His visits left a church fuller of faith and aspiration and he created an atmosphere that was full of God. All that was trivial in religion vanished under his presence and his speech. His farewell to this church was preached August 27, 1895.

REV. CHARLES JACKSON JONES,
D. D.

I. Origin and Education.

Charles Jackson Jones was born in Birmingham, England, November 3, 1839. His father was a metal worker in that world-famed metal-working city, and he inherited a love for metals and mechanics which served him splendidly in sermonic illustrations.

His parents emigrated to the United States and settled in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, the iron and steel city of the western hemisphere, when their son was seven years of age. He attended the schools of Pittsburg till prepared for the High school when his parents moved again to Youngstown, Ohio, another iron-working city. Here he attended High school and, later, Western Reserve College. Ira D. Sankey, the world's greatest evangelistic singer and composer, was his classmate and chum in Reserve College; and they were ever afterward good personal friends. This showed that Dr. Jones was born and reared in that age which renewed and made powerful the revival spirit in the Christian world. The effect of that age appears in his ministry.

Born in England, trained in America, he combined two hemispheres in his life and ministry. Educated in the North, adopted in the South, he cemented both sections and obliterated the footprints of war. A chaplain and drillmaster in the Federal army, he gained strong friends among Confederate officers and bowed with them at the altar of a common Father and in sweetest fellowship. All differences of sects and sections dissolved in his clear head and warm heart.

Like Samuel he had prenatal consecration to God by his parents who were justice common to our perverted hearts. The prophet is right when he says that we are prone to do evil as the sparks fly upward. It is easy to slip and fall. A man's religion is in a sense a humbug if by that saying is meant that he comes far short of his ideal, the divine pattern, the standard given us by the church and Bible. And there is many a man who deceives himself—consciously deceives himself. He continues injustice and iniquity at the very time when he professes eagerly a desire to work for humanity's good and the reign of righteousness on earth. His religion is to that extent a humbug. "Verily they have their reward," said Jesus pointing to the pretentious sectarians on the street and in the synagogue.

But it is a milder type of hypocrisy which Dr. Greenfell had in mind—a kind however which falls not the less under the condemnation of the Savior. The young medical student was in a very hopeful, exemplary mood when he asked himself a severe question. A thorough self-examination led him to detect his own weakness and folly. As a follower of Christ he was pledged to live a certain kind of life. He had professed what the most of us profess—a willingness and determination to live out the principles of the Gospel. He was suddenly aroused to the fact that his religion was formal, not vital. It lacked heart, sincerity, manliness. It was a thing of the lips—something dissociated from the actual self—little reality in it. That was an awful conclusion which he reached on leaving the tent in the slums of Stepney—his religious life a humbug. But you are familiar with the issue of the struggle. It proved to be the crucial hour in the young man's career. For a few moments the white light of heaven—a very searchlight of eternity shone down upon his soul and revealed him to himself. The self-deception and shallow pretense which had made so large a part of religion for him were driven from his heart. He did away with the humbug of the thing. He set himself to making his religion real. What magnificent success has crowned his labors! What a noble, joyous man, what a beautiful and ministering servant, what a triumphant fruitful preacher by deeds and by words!

"Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy." Jesus addresses you and me. Are we deceiving ourselves? Are we thinking that we have the true religion—that we are deeply and sincerely Christian when as a fact our religion is in any sense a humbug—when God and the shrewd world world know the humbug of it?

Ask yourself what your religion is doing for you. Does it open your eyes so that you behold wondrous things in God's law? Does it make you brave and strong in the hour of trials? Is this Christian Faith training you into nobility of character? What has become of that hot temper, that rebellious disposition, that tendency to over-reach someone less sharp than you, that passionate and riotous spirit which involved you in difficulties? A man's religion ought to make him the best son or husband and father or brother in all the world—his love overflowing in perpetual happiness and helpfulness. A man's faith in Christ ought to shape him into the kindest neighbor, the honestest associate, the friendliest companion, the most generous servant that is known in the community. If religion will not sweeten, adorn and refine and exalt life, what will? If our religion does not transform us into clear-visioned, large hearted, grand spirited men and women what hope is there for the world lying in sin about us? If this Christianity which we say is to dominate the world, redeem all the world and perfect human society fails to work any noticeable and happy change in you what is the use of saying that it will do that greater work which is simply the multiplication of the smaller work to be done in your heart and mine? What is a Christian state? A government constituted by Christian people, the individuals which men and women living in accord with Christian law. The sum total of faith in the state, the sum total of morality, righteousness, high thinking, splendid service is the added sum of each individual's honor, goodness, well being and well doing. It is impossible for men to act the part of Dr. Jeekyll and Mr. Hyde, and long escape the just condemnation of God and their fellows. Eternal law and truth side with the man who is friendly with God. Catharine of Siena was the daughter of a dyer—humble in station and without anything to recommend her except genuine goodness and unconquerable faith. Gregory XI and his Court were corrupt and worldly—a disgrace to Christianity. This woman went to Avignon where the Pope and his associates had refuge and there she spake with such fearlessness and power concerning the reality of religion and judgment in God that these men shook and trembled in their terror, meekly following her to Rome that they might attempt a reformation.

Ask yourself likewise what you are doing for your religion. Do you remember the blessed experience which came to one of the old saints? He had a vision and his soul was filled with joy and love. The Lord appeared to him and said, "My son, what reward shall I give you for many services?" The old saint simply answered, "Lord, that I might suffer most." The little he had done counted for nothing in his own eyes. He wishes to win the chance to suffer hardship, pain, trial all difficulty and sorrow in order that he might show his Lord the greatness of his love and the loyalty of his spirit. You will doubtless think that such an example passes all ordinary living. But there you make a mistake. There are people whom we meet—people sharing with us the monotony of his workaday world who possess that spirit and live humbly along that line of service. Their quiet fidelity, their unnoted sacrifices, their magnificent personal contributions to virtue, honesty, kindness, cheerful labor, happy faith amount to more than millions of dollars put into monumental stone. Yes, it is time for us to stop and think upon these matters. There are occasions when a wise man pays some attention to what the world says about him. Ordinarily we ought to go straight ahead in our work and give little heed to current talk, criticism, interference on the part of our fellows. But when the world suspects our sincerity—when the direct accusation is made against us that our religious life is a humbug, when associates avoid us and when a father says to his son by way of advise—"My son keep a sharp eye on everybody in your business dealings, but an especially sharp eye upon a Christian"—when these conditions prevail to a large extent then we ought to turn our gaze inward—do some thorough work of self-investigation and settle in our own minds just where we stand.

"Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy." Are we fair and square in the matters of the Christian faith? Are we pretending to be all that the Lord asks and commands while we take our own gait and hurry down our own preferred path of selfishness, indifferent to obligation? Is our religious life a humbug in the sense that Grenfell meant it when he pronounced judgment upon himself.

Let us apply this test to ourselves? Have I any genuine faith? Do I truly believe that Christ came into the world to save men? Is this Jesus the hope and inspiration of my soul? I think into the very heart of these questions and I frankly say yes. But when I say yes, I say it conscious that I am weak that I have strayed and stumbled that I have failed to attain anything like the standard set before me.

Let us apply another test. Do I detect in myself honesty of purpose? Am I truly wishing and aiming to live the life that is outlined for me by good men of all ages—by Christ himself who spent his life in doing all that he could do for the help of men? Have I formed the resolution to imitate him and obey him? If I can say sincerely that such a purpose has come into my heart and stays with me—although I come short of the ideal, nevertheless my religious life is not a humbug.

Let us apply the third test. Are we making an earnest effort to do right and serve God even when confessing waywardness and disobedience? Amid the numerous discouragements which thicken about us, do we try and try again to follow the Master, looking unto Him for Help? Then whatever mistakes and disgraces becloud us our religious life is not a humbug. We are not hypocrites. Sooner or later we shall get into what a wise writer of this age calls "the happiness of the real thing."

MANNERS IN THE MINISTERS.

The pastor has much to do with social life. We do not live in a land of barbarians. We rejoice in the dissemination of culture and refinement. Churches want their pastors to be gentlemen. They want them to manifest at least ordinary politeness and a thoughtful attention to the usages of good society. Some church members may carry their taste for etiquette to an excess and become overfastidious. But sensible people recognise the value of certain rules in social intercourse, rules which are founded upon that regard for the comfort and pleasure of others which is one fruit of Christianity.

Men who have been obliged to struggle in life for "the main chance," as it is called, and who have a natural admiration for great independence of character, coupled with a god deal of boldness and conceit, sometimes delight to trample on social usages. They call it "defying the absurd dictates of fashion."

It seems to them unnecessary and fussy to be neat in their personal appearance, to cultivate good manners at the table, to be courteous to ladies and children. They have none of that delicate sense of fitness which is so desirable. In speech and in conduct they seem to glory in doing the startling rather than the appropriate thing. They annoy sensitive natures by the lack of respect, if not of reverence; and make their best friends ashamed of their boorishness. If favors are shown to them they take no pains to express appreciation or gratitude; and spoil by their clumsy bluntness in conversation and by their rude jokes and personal criticisms during the week all the spiritual appeals of their sermons.

Indeed, if refinement of manners is not cultivated by the minister in social life, the lack of it will soon appear in the way he conducts the services of God's house where a delicate appropriateness is the true expression of reverence.—Rev. H. F. Colby, D. D., in the Homiletic Review.

THREE COUNTRY CHURCHES VISITED.

At the request of the President of Elon College, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, in company with Rev. L. J. Cox, pastor, it has been my privilege recently to visit three of our country churches—Apple's Chapel, Monticello, and Pleasant Hill. It was a pleasure to me personally to be permitted to visit these branches of our brotherhood and to meet those who entertain the same sentiments in regard to the church and the fundamental doctrines of religious life as myself. There is always a warmth of fellowship, insistent and irrepresible between those who entertain kindred notions in regard to any great matter, and this is particularly so in regard to those who entertain identical ideas in regard to religious matters.

But I was also anxious to visit in these churches, because I wanted to see the working of Brother L. J. Cox in a personal way in the congregations where he has met with such large success as a pastor. The success of Brother Cox in developing his churches spiritually and increasing them numerically and in interesting them largely and successfully in the general enterprises of the church, had been well known to me before my visit, but they are better known to me now, since the secret of his success is in my possession.

Brother Cox is a spiritually-minded man and into whatever home he goes, there goes with him an air of spirituality that is perceptible to all. By the family fireside he discusses with his members matters of religion and the enterprises of the church. If there is sadness or sorrow in the home, there is a word of sympathy. If there is joy and happiness, there is also sympathy. There is wise counsel for the young and words of comfort for the old. No frivolity is entered into, nor suggested. He is as a preacher in the pulpit very earnest and straightforward, and uncompromising in his advocacy for the right and truth as he understands it.

It is not surprising to me that churches have done well under his pastoral charge, nor is it now surprising that these three churches gave liberally of the means towards the Special Fund for Elon, which the president is now endeavoring to raise to pay off its bonded indebtedness.

SECRETARY PETTY RESIGNS.

My work, as salesman on the road, requires so much time and confinement that I must resign as Secretary of the Christian Church Loan Fund of N. C. We have as I remember, something like $500.00 in the treasury, notes and cash. Mr. K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C., can receive any dues from members. I am mailing him my books to hold until my successor is appointed. I thank those who have been helpful in building up this fund, which is only a nucleus. I hope to see some one take up this work and push it forward. I am always interested in the welfare of our church.

A ROSE TO THE LIVING.

A delightful afternoon was enjoyed by the ladies of Memorial Christian Temple, Thursday afternoon, March 2nd, when a "Sunshine Shower" was tendered Mrs. J. L. McKinney of Yellow Springs, Ohio. It had been learned that Mr. and Mrs. McKinney, who have spent the winter months with their daughter and family, Mrs. M. D. Howsare, were to return to their home soon, so the ladies conceived this plan of expressing their love and respect for Mrs. McKinney. The church parlors were beautifully decorated in red and green, the fragrance of the pine boughs adding charm to the occasion. In the center of the room a red parasol was so suspended that it could be reversed at the proper moment. As this was the day for the regular meeting of the Ladies Aid Society, Mrs. McKinney's suspicions were not aroused when she and her husband were invited to attend the meeting, and although they were given the most comfortable rockers in the room, directly under the beautifully bedecked and innocent looking parasol, it was not until the letters and parcels began to shower down upon her during the singing of "Scatter Sunshine" that Mrs. McKinney realized that she was the "Guest of Honor." Mrs. H. H. Reed, the chairman of the Committee then spoke very appropriately of the esteem in which these two good people are held by their many Norfolk friends, and she explained that this "Sunshine Shower" is to follow them to their distant home and to continue for thirty days after their arrival there. None of the parcels are to be opened until they arrive home. They are all numbered something between one and thirty, and only those bearing the number "one" may be opened the first day, "two" the second, and so on throughout the month. So a happy surprise awaits them from day to day. A program of Sunshine songs including solos and duets preceded the "Shower," and dainty refreshments and a good social time followed. The people of Memorial Christian Temple try to make Christianity practical and this is just one way they have of "Giving a Rose to the Living."

One Present.

devout followers of Jesus Christ. In their daily devotions before his birth they carried him to the Lord in prayer. This may account, in part, for his deep spiritual nature and his power in prayer.

His education contained three essential elements of life-value for the ministry.

1. He was in touch with the intelligent working people and enjoyed the birthright of English blood and American association.

2. His education was thorough enough to equip him for profound study, clear insight into books and men, and his early years were environed by the enterprise and self-reliant spirit of the growing west.

3. His religious life was developed and trained in a deeply religious home, and in times when spiritual experience had not been restrained by culture or wealth. His development contained all the ingredients of sincerity, endurance, and hope. Worldly ambition at no time submerged his spiritual convictions and worldly honors at no time enticed him away from the path of the just. He grew up among the big things of the west and he translated those great surroundings into great services for God and men. His young manhood was a flame with a passion for souls and that made him surrender all to the call of God to preach the gospel to a lost world before he was twenty years of age.

II. Early Religious and Ministerial Life.

The child Jones became a Christian at nine and was always an advocate of child-conversions. In fact he believed so strongly in the conversion of children that he thought that children might be so trained for Jesus as to hardly know when they enter the new life. He not only gave his heart to Christ at nine, but entered upon religious service very young and preached his first sermon at eighteen.

His parents were members of the Methodist Church and he was ordained to the ministry in that church by Bishop Edward Raymond Ames at Boonsborough, Iowa, in 1860, when he was twenty-one. He was an active minister in that denomination for eight years. He preached with great power and success in Iowa, often enduring hunger and cold, but always moving men and women by his powerful spiritual appeals. His theological training was chiefly in the school of hard ministerial work. Here he learned men in all their different temperaments and pursuits, and became skilled in the psychology that makes wise men and useful ministers.

He grew up among the colossal undertakings of western pioneer enterprise and became a giant in ideal and soul-plans for human society. He saw the selfish adventurer, the wild speculator, the rude society, and the sturdy farmer, and the need for the gospel; and this stirred his consecrated soul to its depths for the salvation of men and the culture of society.

It was during these trying years that young Jones studied the creeds of many churches and finally reached the conviction that his place was in the Christian Church, which, in his thought, stood nearest to the primitive church. A sermon preached at Covington, Ohio, gives his reasons for this change from the Methodist to the Christian Church; and this sermon bears the marks of wide acquaintance with creeds, a sweet charity toward all denominations, a love for the church of his parents and his early ministry, and, at the same time, a well grounded conviction that the position of the Christian Church was nearest of all to the Bible ground. From his thirtieth year to the end of his life at sixty-six he was devoted to the principles of the Christian Church, and a great preacher in her pulpits.

His Meridian Labors.

His talents were so diverse and his interest in the Church so intense, that he was drawn into many lines of service, and he was successful in all. His evangelistic gifts, however, predominated and served him and the cause in every undertaking. He was a church builder, building congregations and membership while he erected houses of worship.

After his union with the Christian Church he built a new house at Marion, Iowa, in 1870. Later he entered the evangelistic field for two years holding meetings through Iowa, Illinois, and Ohio. In 1872 he accepted a call to Yellow Springs, Ohio, the seat of Antioch College and remained till 1875. In that year he accepted a call to Blockly Baptist Church 53rd Street Philadelphia and served till 1882. He served that church as pastor, but as a Christian minister, and was called by them because of his evangelistic and pulpit power. During his pastorate that church was greatly blessed.

From Philadelphia he returned to Springfield, Ohio, where he built a new Christian Church.

He was pastor at Mount Sterling and West Milton, Ohio, and then accepted the position as editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Sunday-school Literature for five years. The Christian Publishing Association was in debt and in jeopardy at that time, and Editor Jones travelled and raised the money that saved that Institution. It was a glad moment when the press said: "The Publishing House has been cleared of its thirteen thousand dollar debt." Those were trying years; but the House now has one hundred and thirty thousand dollars in assets and no debt.

He surrendered the editor's chair to become General Evangelist for he could not be contented nor could the church feel that his supreme work was any other than soul-saving. He labored successfully in this field till called to Norfolk in 1889, by a small band of believers. Great as he was, he entered upon this work with all the enthusiasm of a young minister called to the pastorate of a big city church. In this movement he found kindred spirits and responsive hearts. A chapel was purchased on Charlotte Street and occupied for a time. That was sold, this lot was purchased, a broad chapel was erected, and later this Temple. Those were years of struggle, of hesitation, of prayer, of hope.

The re-union of the church north and south at Marion, Indiana, in 1890, suggested the Memorial idea, and brought some sympathy and help from the north. The largest personal donation from the north was given by Hon. F. A. Palmer, a lover of the church and an admirer and friend of Dr. Jones. The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference stood by the undertaking with liberal and loyal help till the money was paid. During his pastorate of six years the small band increased to nearly four hundred members.

The year after the arrival of Dr. Jones in Norfolk the Sam Jones meeting was held in a great tabernacle on Queen St. This meeting was Norfolk's greatest religious sensation and evangelistic meetings were held in this tabernacle for months after Sam Jones left. In all these meetings Dr. Jones was a conspicuous figure and leader. This introduced him to Norfolk and the clergy favorably. They recognized his ability, his fraternity, and his spirituality, and respected him and his work. That gave impetus to this church and standing to this congregation. It gave his own people an opportunity to compare him with the best ministers in Norfolk, and the comparison filled his congregation with loyal pride and inspired them to noble endeavor. The dedication of this temple was the coronation of those years, and the coronation of Dr. Jones in this city.

The Southern Christian Convention was in session here. The Executive Board of the American Christian Convention was in session here at the same time. Big men of the church were present. The sainted and eloquent Dr. T. M. McWhinney preached the dedicatory sermon. Palmer was on the platform. The house was packed. The day was bright. The congregation was a sea of happy faces. Dr. Jones overflowed with joy. It was the climax of re-union. It marked the abolition of sectional asperities. The war was over. The church was one. Love filled every heart and gladness sparkled in every eye.

From this charge he went to Marion, Indiana; thence to Lakemont, N. Y., where he built the temple; thence to First Church, New Bedford, Mass., where he rounded out his preaching ministry in the meridian of his strength and his years.

IV. His Closing Years and Victory.

From New Bedford he was called to the presidency of Marion Christian College, Merom, Indiana, where he closed his earthly labors and great career on August 20, 1906, well in his sixty-seventh year and after two hard years in the interest of the college. He undertook the here-till-an task of raising seventeen thousand dollars for repairs on the buildings in addition to the conduct of the Institution. He had just about completed his task when God called him home to rest and reward; but he had started the college in a healthy movement upward and the momentum has not lost its force. The college still prospers under the leadership of President O. B. Whitaker, increases in students and endowment. In the brief period of his Presidency Dr. Jones stamped his impress upon Faculty and students before he went to receive his crown.

He died surrounded by his loved ones as quietly as he ever went to sleep on his mother's bosom. His splendid work closed while thousands were expecting great things at his hands. He left no material fortune to his family, but he left them the inheritance of a great life for God and humanity.

He seemed to breathe the atmosphere of heaven and to dwell among the pure in heart. When he led in public prayer God seemed to be near and all felt the uplift of his soul. When he preached the Holy Spirit seemed to be in his soul and his lips seemed touched with a live coal from the altar of God. His visits brought saintly thoughts and his conversation awakened spiritual aspirations in the heart. At the bedside of the sick he opened the future with inviting charm and the grave at his words seemed to open into glory for the sorrowing and the bereaved. In the pulpit he rose above himself and other ministers and made auditors feel that they could and would serve God. His sermons illumined Scripture and quickened the faith of men. Sinners listened to his entreaties with the word of God. He stood highest, looked noblest, and spake with authority when he was pleading with souls to accept Christ. Dignified, cultured, modest, spiritually minded, his sermons were chaste, lucid, Scriptural, artistic, pathetic and tender like the words of the Master whom he served.

His name honors this temple and our church; his ministry is lustrous with eloquent power; and his life grows more majestic as we follow him to the victory of that last moment when he laid down the cross for the crown.

It was the pastor's wish that the venerable Col. A. Savage might be present to draw the curtain that now veils the beautiful tablet which friends have placed in the sacred wall of this temple in loving memory of Dr. Jones; but he is now waiting for the removal of that thin veil that separates him from re-union with his departed friend. They lived and labored together here through cloud and sunshine in sweetest fellowship; they will dwell together in the upper temple forevermore.

Only a thin veil hides this splendid tablet from our view; soon the tender hands of the pastor's child will draw the curtain and the tablet will appear in its beauty and significant design. Soon angel hands will draw that thinner veil and we shall see him face to face in the presence of Jesus on the great white throne.

Draw the curtain, my dear child; look on that white marble, gold incised; think of Jones and heaven.

The Club Locker Law.

The Supreme Court of this State decided some months since that the present prohibition law did not prohibit clubs from keeping lockers and having whiskey for use and sale. There was a demand throughout the State at once that this gap in the law should be shut and the Legislature just adjourned did the work in that direction, passing the following law which prohibits the Club Locker.

"The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

Section 1. That any corporation, club, association, person or persons, that shall directly or indirectly keep or maintain by itself, himself or themselves, or by association with others or by any other means, or that shall in any manner aid, assist or abet another or others in keeping or maintaining a club room or other place where intoxicating liquors are received, kept or stored for barter, sale, exchange, distribution or division, among the members of any such club or association or aggregation of persons, or to or among any other person or persons by any means whatever, or that shall act as agents in ordering, procuring, buying, storing or keeping intoxicating liquors for any such purpose shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; Provided, this act shall not apply to drug stores or medical depositories authorized to sell liquor on prescription as now provided by law, or to churches using same for sacramental purposes, or to hospitals or asylums keeping intoxicating liquors for medical purposes.

Section 2. That this act shall be in force from and after its ratification.

Ratified 6th day of March, 1911.

—The Associated Press carried the following from Washington, D. C., March

9th, "More gruesome stories of the Chinese famine reached the State Department today from the Consul General at Shanghai, who sums up conditions at the beginning of February. One traveler reported passing 13 dead bodies in 13 miles on the road. The missionaries tell of the natives eating gakes made of leaves and stems mixed with millet chaff, which they buy with the allowance from the government of three cents apiece. The trees have been stripped of bark, which had been eaten. Dr. Cochrane, an American missionary, declared that in the whole afflicted region there were two million starving people. In one village of a hundred families one-third were dead of hunger and pestilence. Snow was falling and many were without proper shelter or clothing."

—The roads of the world will have to be rebuilt before they can withstand the wear and tear of automobile traffic, according to a recent statement by Nelson P. Lewis, chief engineer of the New York board of estimate. The old macadam road is adapted to horsedrawn vehicles, but the automobile tears it to pieces. Some kind of a bituminous binder must be used to hold the materials of the road together. New York is experimenting with eighteen different bituminous preparations on a piece of roadway, each kind laid by a contractor who believes in it. Mr. Lewis hopes that out of the eighteen, at least one may be found which will be satisfactory.—Ex.

—Atlanta has just carried through a movement to raise $450,000 for bringing its Y. M. C. A. up to a $600,000 standard and Charleston is nearing the hundred-thousand mark in a $150,000 movement for bettering its Y. M. C. A. facilities. We shall congratulate them the more heartily if they will turn in now and do something for the Y. W. C. A. also.—Charlotte Observer.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION IN MARCH.

If the short stories in the March numbers of The Youth's Companion are not "corking," they are something else which means the same thing.

Any one who should "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" all the good things in the March issues of The Youth's Companion, would be at no loss for topics of interesting conversation for a long stretch of years.

A capital air-ship story, by George Foxhall, is printed in The Youth's Companion of March 30th. If you were a passenger in an aeroplane and the operator who took you up swooned, what would you do, in order to skim to earth in safety? The passenger in this story managed to bring the machine intact to earth.

ORGANIZED CLASSES—WHAT THEY OUGHT TO ACCOMPLISH.

The Adult or Organized Class Department has for a long time been the forgotten or neglected department in the Sunday-school. Only within the past two decades can it be said to be a regular department at all. The International Association only recently recognized its worth and assigned it a Secretary. Yet the growth and influence of the department has been marvelous and it has accomplished many desirable results in Sunday-school work. What have these results been?

1. It has brought the adult into the Sunday-school.

2. It has been able to hold them there by giving them something individually to do. It is easy enough to drum up a crowd for a Sunday-school, but it is hard to hold them after they have come. The Organized Bible Class by introducing the principle of the division of labor gives its members specific work to do and so holds them.

3. It has built a wall of flesh and blood around the big boys and the big girls so high that they cannot break through it or climb over it. Thus it has contributed to the solution of one of the most difficult of all Sunday-school problems—the problem how to hold the big boys and the big girls when the period of adolescence has set in. Volumes have been written on this problem, but the Organized Class has solved it. For the big boys and the big girls are influenced by example more than by precept and will willingly do what they see their elders doing.

4. It satisfies the longing for organization which seems so prevalent now in world. It is much better for this longing to be satisfied in the church and its auxiliaries than for the church to condemn the longing and send its members to have it satisfied in the sororities, fraternities, paternities, maternities, clubs, secret societies, lodges, brotherhoods, leagues, circles, etc., which afflict modern social life.

5. It has developed fellowship and human brotherhood. The member of an Organized Class is first loyal to his own church, but secondly bound with strong ties to others. The red pin with white center is a badge of world-wide fellowship and its sublime sentiment melts every wearer into tenderness and compassion.

6. It trains in Christian service. This it accomplishes through its committees, which may be many or few as each local class elects, but which, if properly managed, never fail to give the opportunity to do Christian service and to develop Christian character.

7. It has made Bible study popular and when the adults begin to study the Bible, you see a new spirit abroad in the church. Every enterprise takes on new life and a more abiding enthusiasm for the things of the Spirit is manifest.

8. It saves souls—not that everyone who joins an Organized Class will become an active church member or be saved—but many of them will. The experience of all churches which have tried this kind of adult class has been that it is one of the strongest forces making for church membership. It is hard to think otherwise and believe the plain statement of the Scriptures. The study of the Word always yields such results.

TO THE PASTORS.

Why is that some churches never meet their conference obligations, have Sunday-schools only occasionally, Christian Endeavor not at all, do not pay the Sunday-school Home Mission money, rarely have delegates at Conference, less often have delegates at the Young People's or Sunday-school Convention, are regarded by themselves and others as back numbers? Why is it that one Sunday-school has Teacher-Training, Cradle Roll, Home, and Organized Class departments and another in just as progressive a community has no such things? Are you to blame, Bro. Pastor? I suspect so; though I hope not.

Be that as it may. One thing is sure: Unless your churches are represented in our general conventions, where new methods are discussed and hopeful measures adopted, they will soon be lacking in influence and so will their shepherd. You can have your Sunday-school and its departments and your Christian Endeavor Society represented in the general Young People's Convention which meets at Elon College April 15-17, if you will. I trust that every pastor who reads this, will take steps immediately to bring this end to pass, for it will mean new life in all the auxiliaries of the church. Each organization is to have representation on the basis of one for each 25 members, but to have one at least. Be sure to come yourself also, Brother Pastor. Send name to W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., as soon as convenient.

What Joshua Teaches.

Joshua began to fight for Jehovah as soon as he left Egypt, in the first battle with the Amelekites. God does not select an untried man to succeed His heroes like Moses.

In this first battle, won more by the hands of Moses lifted up in prayer than by his own weapons, Joshua got the most important lesson of his life,—that victory is not by might and power, but by God's Spirit.

Joshua was with Moses on the holy mount when the law was revealed. Well might he revere that law, and make it the man of his counsel.

Joshua was placed in charge of the first tent of meeting, where Moses met Jehovah and came forth with his face shining like an angel's. The experience must have taught Joshua to place prayer by the side of the Bible as his two guides in life.

Joshua was one of the twelve spies that investigated Canaan, and he alone, with Caleb, reported that the land could be conquered. "We can" was his motto all through his life, and that spirit was more than half of the power that won his victories.

Joshua came near being stoned to death for his courageous report concerning Canaan. It was well for him to get very early into the habit of standing alone—with God.

Joshua and Caleb were the only ones of their faithless generation that lived to see the promised land. Every year of the wilderness wanderings was an education in faith.

Notwithstanding all his preparation, Joshua was overwhelmed when bidden to take up the gigantic task of Moses, and needed the splendid exhortation that was given him. He would have been less fit for his task if he had felt himself to be fit for it.

Joshua's first great victory was just such a triumph of faith as his entire life of faith had been preparing him for. Jericho would not have fallen at the blast of the ram's horns if innumerable other Jerichos had not thus fallen before Joshua during the preceding years.

Joshua's farewell address to the people, after all his campaigns and faithful leading, gave them the secret of his successful life. "Serve the Lord," he pleaded, and enforced the plea by the resources of a powerful orator. It is the lesson for us, if we would enter into Joshua's successes.—Prof. Wells.

Said about Joshua.

The courage, the cheerfulness, the sense of victory and of success which runs through the Gospels, finds its best illustration from the older church in the character and career of Joshua.—Stanley.

Joshua may be compared to the man of two talents, whilst his great master was dowered with five.—F. B. Meyer.

Ever since that day on the mount and in the cleft rock, the Lord, and no heathen god of them all, had been Joshua's God.—Whyte.

Joshua could not dream undying prophetic dreams, he could not legislate in God's council-room for all the ages of time; but he learned, in the free school of fidelity, how to make a promised land a possessed land.—H. E. Lewis.

Inclusive Endeavor.

There is no need to establish in a church different sorts of young people's societies in order to do different kinds of work. Literary work, health culture, civic studies and activities, charities, social pleasures, all find a natural home in Christian Endeavor, Incorporate them in the Society. Give them in charge of special committees and departments. Set special officers over them.

The great advantage in this is that you do not split up the active young people of the church into a lot of sundered cliques. You place back of every enterprise the zeal and numbers of a large body of young people.

* * * * *

Show Your Colors.

The Christian Endeavor pin is the most generally known and commonly accepted and widely used badge of Christianity!

The wearing of it is a splendid advertisement for our society. It leads to many conversations about it, and it is easy to pass from that topic to genuine religious conversations.

Many pleasant acquaintances are made by means of the Christian Endeavor pin. This is constantly the experience of the writer.

* * * * *

Bits of Brightness.

In taking part in prayer-meeting, try to think of some happy and striking way of speaking; say something that will catch the attention and linger in the memory.

Write your committee reports carefully, trying to put them in some original way, with occasional flashes of wit.

In the socials, though you will not be boisterous, try to be lively and to liven up the whole affair.

Interperse in the business meeting jolly motions and funny remarks. Do not be a clown, but illustrate the sunny side of Christianity.

* * * * *

Why Christian Endeavor?

Because it has been proved by more than a quarter of a century to be a wise and effective method of training the young.

Because no better method has yet been found; and if a better method should be found, Christian Endeavor will incorporate it and fully adopt it.

Because it is comprehensive; a church that adopts Christian Endeavor has no need to form a multitude of other societies.

Because it is flexible, in the matter of the committees, the pledge, the officers, the meetings, and all other features.

Because, in its pledge, constitution, and practice, it honors the church and the pastor.

Because it seeks continually the glory of Christ and not its own glory.

* * * * *

Getting Tired?

The remedy for weariness in Christian Endeavor is not to give up the society; the remedy is to keep at the work until it becomes play. Facility comes from practice, and liking comes with facility. The only way to conquer a task is to get a joy out of it.

Do not let your work grow monotonous. Vary the sorts of it. Be ingenious in fashioning it into new shapes. Take fresh and interesting routes to the same goal.

Rest by a change of occupation is better than rest by the absence of occupation.

Best of all is rest by a restful mind, calmly abiding in the love and the power of Christ.

C. E. TOPIC FOR APRIL 2—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lessons from Joshua's Life, Josh. 1:1-9.

Consecration Meeting.

Roll-Call:—For variety's sake have the roll called at the very beginning of the meeting, allowing no one to speak more than two sentences which shall emphasize a truth from Joshua's life.

The Leader:—If the leader will have some one read the Scripture and another to comment thereon briefly, it will be well for him to speak about some one great event in Joshua's career—his favorable report of the promised land, his success as a warrior, his holding up of the hands of Moses, his conduct on becoming head of the people, the fall of Jericho, his farewell address to the people. On some one of these or some kindred theme he will speak his five minutes, driving home the moral truth of whatever incident he chooses and providing that his fellow endeavorers shall do likewise of the other leading incidents.

Questions to Meditate Over and Voluntarily Answer:

How was Joshua trained for his great responsibility?

Why is training necessary for us today?

How does Christian Endeavor contribute to this training?

How should we face dangers?

Why is it always best to speak the truth fearlessly?

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure
The only baking powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar
NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

How does Joshua compare with Moses in greatness?

Why should we be cheerful?

How did Joshua learn that success comes not from might, but from trusting God?

What do you like in Joshua's farewell address?

Compare it to Christ's final word with his disciples.

Compare it to Washington's farewell to American people.

Wherein does it fall below Christ's farewell words?

Wherein does it surpass Washington's farewell words?

What is the greatest teaching of Joshua's life for us?

Scripture Verses:—If desired, the leader can find a goodly number of appropriate Scripture verses for memory and recitation with brief comment by consulting the concordance under such words as: Courage, trust, faith, cheerfulness, service, save, consecration, truth.

Essay Work:—Have an essay of two or three minutes on such themes as: The Value of Studying the Lives of Great Men; The Chief Value of the Old Testament Historical Books; How the Bible Records a Man's Life; Joshua's Place in Israel's History; The Secret of Joshua's Success.

OUR WESTERN LETTER.

Good news continues to come from various parts of the field. Now it is from Oklahoma. The Rev. A. C. Burnham of Nebraska has been to Oklahoma on evangelizing tour. At—— he held a series of meetings which resulted most favorably in the profession of faith on the part of a good many and the opening of the way for a new Christian church, and not only so, but the way seems to open for a much larger work than the building of one church. It seems the work begun is in a large community with wealth. A big corporation has given eighty acres of land, which in itself is valuable, for a college enterprise. Three of the directors of the college enterprise are members of the new Christian church, and Bro. Burnham has it in his mind as a hope that the whole thing may come our way. We wish it might, for Oklahoma, though a new State, is one of great promise—rapidly developing, just the sort of a country for the Christian Church.

As helpful as the opening of such a field to us would be, and as desirable as the command of great wealth would be from some standpoints, yet I must say that money is not our greatest need as a people. Our first need is the "life which is hid with Christ in God." With that life abundantly bestowed and fully received, we may hope to do far more and greater things in the service of God than untold wealth without it could ever do. If I had the attentive and appreciative ear of the ministry of the Christians today, I would urge the necessity of waiting on the Lord for the gift and its power for service, as the first need for our future usefulness. This we need to do till our hearts overrun with the joy of the Lord, for in that we shall find our strength and fruitfulness. We may pile up church machinery, and gather what we sometimes call church spirit, and we may get all the money within our reach, but without the overmastering love of God filling our hearts and minds, we shall find ourselves at last as a big tree with "nothing but leaves, nothing but leaves, while the Spirit grieves" over our wasted opportunities. There is much greater need for this wholesale turning unto the Lord for help than many of us think. We are more or less at ease in Zion—we are something like the man who went floating down the river on his little boat with so much ease, not dreaming that the rapids were already adding to his speed on the way to ruin. As a people we are indulging our ease, we are thinking it cannot be long till something will happen to bring larger success, instead of laying to ourselves and doing our best to bring success to the Master's kingdom among men, and while we are drifting along in a cold and formal state spiritually, laying great stress on our money and our wisdom and our greatness, behold Hinduism, Buddhism and Brahminism are making their way to our country with a view to supplanting our churches and Christianity with heathenism and idol temples. Already, while I write, heathen worship is a reality in the United States. Almost all of the larger cities on the Pacific coast have now heathen temples. Only recently a heathen (Hindoo) temple costing one hundred thousand dollars was dedicated in the city of San Francisco, and it was built by the women of that city. There are now almost one hundred heathen temples in operation on the Pacific coast. If the church does not wake up and look to God for overcoming power, it will not be long till our country will have rank heathenism, and once entrenched, who can say that our grandchildren may not be worshipping idols in heathen temples right here in the places where our churches stand? May God awaken us before it is too late.

I was chagrined as an editor recently on opening one of our exchanges (it was a denominational paper) to read from the pen of a prominent minister of the Gospel these words as an explanation of his failure to write for his church paper: "I have nothing special to write." "I have always been disposed to say nothing when I have nothing to say." I am sure that is a very wise conclusion, for a man talking when he has nothing to say is pitiable indeed. I do not find fault with his conclusion, but with the fact. It stirs my heart to think of a man, called of God to take His message to a dying world, a man who has been trained in college, who has been ordained to the work of the Gospel ministry, and yet he has nothing to say. The church paper is open to him at least fifty times a year, through which he can get a large audience at any time, and there he stands, week after week, a messenger without a message! What is a man educated for, if he has no message! What is he ordained for, if he has no message! Think of it, ministers of the Gospel standing all the day with no message to send out to the people, not even when the people are calling for it. Think of it, commissioned to preach, but no message! Can it be any wonder that heathenism is making inroads into our country? Can there be anything strange that heathen temples are building in a country where the messengers of the gospel have no message for the people, not even when they call for it? What can be the use of a messenger, if he has no message? If we as ministers do not wake up and get a message, a message of sin and salvation from God, it will not be many years till we shall have heathen temples built, and idol gods worshipped in these parts of our common country. Perhaps some will say, "Oh, that is impossible—we will have none of it in this country!" But brother, it was only a few years ago when all the Christian people of California would no doubt have said the same thing, with reference to the introduction of a heathen religion into that State, and yet today heathen temples and idol gods are in evidence in California—our own American people are being converted to Hinduism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, and other heathen religions, and Americans are building heathen temples within our own country. A ministry without a message is helpless before such an oncoming tide of evil! If we are to resist this flood of sin and ruin, if we will save our land from this curse, then our ministers must get a message, a message from God, and live in the Spirit, so as to be ready to deliver it at any time—instant in season and out of season. To do this, however, we must tarry much in the "Upper Room."

Perhaps it may be charged that I am alarmed! In the name of my Lord, may I ask, is it not time to be alarmed, when in so large a degree we have failed to give the gospel to the world, and our inactivity and lack of power are followed by the incoming tide of heathenism into our own country, with Americans turning from the true and living God to serve idols? Is it not time for us to be alarmed when messengers of the Cross seem to count it a light thing to declare that they have no message for the people, and when called on to know why, simply reply: "I have nothing to say." God pity and help us to get the Gospel Message, and to be instant in season and out of season to proclaim it.

J. Pressley Barrett.

PORTSMOUTH LETTER.

We are now looking forward with much interest to the revival that will begin about the middle of April. Rev. M. J. Swearingen of Delaware, Ohio, who has spent sixteen years in the evangelistic work, will do the preaching. He has been eminently successful in his work and we are praying that God may mightily use him here in this city. He will go from here to the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, where he held a most successful meeting last fall for Brother Howsare. We beg you to join us in praying for the success of these meetings.

The work of the church has been steadily going forward during the winter months. Though the weather has been unfavorable, many Sundays, the congregations have been splendid. Frequently the auditorium has been well filled. With nine months in the new church building we can say that we have found it easier to run the church than we did the chapel. It has been easier to pay our bills and keep up all the running expenses, though they have been nearly doubled. The new situation and needs have called forth a larger response on the part of the people. Before building the new church, we feared the running proposition would be the difficult one. We rejoice that we have found it differently so far, and are praying that we may continue to find it so. This possibility lies with the membership and congregation. The church of Jesus Christ should not lack for anything that will make it effective and useful. The people that look well to the interests of the kingdom of God in the earth, God himself will look out for and they shall not lack for anything that will be for their good. The selfish life is the unprofitable life. It knows nothing but disappointment and dissatisfaction. The selfish man is wretched.

The Ladies Aid Society of the church has just closed a membership campaign that has added 120 new names to their roll. This gives them a total enrollment now of 194. The campaign resulted in more than doubling the roll. The receipts of the society during February were about $40.00 and this month the receipts have already gone well beyond the $100.00 mark and will probably reach $150.00 by end of month. The Aid Society is a working force in the church, that can be counted on to help in every needed place. The society will be ten years old this year and each of those years have been years of usefulness. The work of the society has grown gradually from year to year. It holds its meetings each Thursday afternoon. Weekly meetings, has been its policy from the beginning.

The middle of April the first note of $1000 will fall due with the interest of $390. The offering to meet this need will be taken the second Sunday in April. We are praying that God will move upon the hearts of his people to give the full amount necessary. We would be exceedingly glad if we could also pay off the outstanding indebtedness, so that nothing but the bonded debt would be to look after.

The Sunday-school is now waging a membership campaign that is expected to last until Easter Sunday or possibly go beyond. It has been running three Sundays, and the result has been 26 new scholars added to the roll and an increase of 30 per cent or more in attendance.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Graham.

Last second Sunday the writer filled his regular appointment at this place. The congregation was very good, and we had a very pleasant service.

I am enjoying my work at Graham very much. The people are kind, pleasant, and appreciative, to preach to such people is indeed a very pleasant task.

The work here seems to be moving on nicely in general. The Sunday-school with Bro. Chas. D. Johnson as superintendent and his splendid corps of teachers is progressing nicely, and with increasing interest.

Ether and Shady Grove.

My appointment at these two churches is on the third Sunday in each month, at Shady Grove in the morning and at Ether at night. The work at these places is moving on very nicely. We have a splendid Sunday-school at both places, with Bro. B. B. Martin, Supt. at Shady Grove. and Bro. Hiram Freeman at Ether. I have not found a more appreciative people than those of Ether and Shady Grove. I must say that I have a very pleasant field in which to labor this year, and I am praying that God may give us his spirit as our guide, and make us willing to be lead by the Spirit on to success.

J. F. Morgan, Pastor.

Valley Letter.

Through cold, snow, and mud we have been plodding along at our usual pace here. We have missed a few appointments on account of bad weather, but the work has survived the winter well, and with the return of spring is taking on new life. Yesterday's congregations at Antioch and Linville were unusually good.

Our meeting at Bethel this year was a good one. The interest was good and about eighteen accepted Christ as their Savior. Some were small children, some young people, some were heads of families, some were back-sliders reclaimed. Six united with the church. Rev. R. L. Williamson was with me in the meeting and did about half the preaching. He is well liked by the people of the community.

The meeting at Palmyra was also a good one. About thirty decisions for Christ were made including some back-sliders whose names were still on the church roll. Some of the decisions were by children who have not yet united with the church. Nine new names were added to the church roll, some of them heads of families.

The Sunday-school at Palmyra, which was temporarily closed just before Christmas, has been re-organized for the summer. The S. S. there last summer was pronounced by many to be the best they had ever had there. We are hoping for even better things there this year.

The meeting at Mt. Lebanon was not as good from a standpoint of visible results as we had hoped for. One young married man, whom we believe will make a useful member, accepted Christ and united with the church. Bro. Williams was with me in that meeting and did faithful work to good acceptance. Some of the discouraging features at Mt. Lebanon are hard to overcome.

We have recently closed a meeting at New Hope, or rather a good sized March snow helped to close it for us. Bro. Williamson and I were both in the meeting there, though usually but one of us at a time, as other appointments, funerals, sickness, etc., kept one or the other away most of the time, and several times both of us had to be away. On our absence first Sunday in this month Rev. H. C. Moore preached morning and night. Bro. Moore used to be pastor there and all were glad to hear him again. We trust that good was done during the meeting though there were no visible results.

I am now at Linville where I have just begun a meeting.

—The Southern Commercial Congress has been in session at Atlanta, Ga., the past week. This has come to be an important gathering drawing as it does some of the most distinguished men in the country to its meetings. President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt were among the speakers at last weeks session.

—A man who escaped the State prison at Raleigh, N. C., sixteen years ago, then receiving a sentence of 30 years for murder, was recaptured in Kentucky last week and brought back to prison. The man was living under an assumed name, had given good account of himself and had amassed a comfortable fortune. Two weeks ago a similar case occurred at Danville, Va., when the chief of police was arrested and carried back to Atlanta, Ga. from which prison the man had escaped fifteen years ago serving a life sentence for murder. "Be sure your sins will find you out" may sometimes seem a relentless sentence, but it is a proverb as true as it is old. God ordained that sin should not be covered forever, but provided a way of escape for every guilty one.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We had to "swap horses" last week in order to better equalize our team. The Orphanage now has 2 good horses and one colt (3 years old) which we hope to bring into work this season. We have just received our Royal Pea Holler and begun getting out our peas. We like it fine. The Mt. Auburn (Warren Co., N. C.) congregation gave us over $50.00 last Sunday when opportunity was given. Report will be made soon.

We are anxious to plan for our 4th and 1st Sundays to get help to meet our indebtedness. Write and ask us to come.

Just see what a helpful donation Pleasant Hill has made us! And this is the third time they have done so. We believe they love the orphans, for they surely help to feed them. We thank each kind friend for being so good to us. If you could have seen the boys eat biscuit tonight you would have thought that we needed two more loads.

We thank Sister Reitzel for nice cloth.

Some of our letters for "Monthly Offerings" may happen to reach schools that are already sending, if so just lay it aside. We trust that the schools will give earnest consideration to this call for we need now 100 "Monthly Offerings"

Give us a full corner next week.

Fondly yours,

Columbus, Ga.,
 March 5, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I have gotten along fine with whooping cough and am just about well. Mother is so glad I am through with it. Last Friday was my birthday and I was eight months old. Father tied me up in mother's big apron and weighed me. It did not scare me one bit. I just spread my mouth and showed my two little white teeth. It was great fun. I weighed twenty-one pounds.

Am sending twenty cents my dues for February and March.

Your nephew,
 Dwight Hillis Lankford.

Dear me boy, you'll be a year old before you know it if you do not mind. How time flies. We wish all the dear babies in our Convention would begin to write now and continue membership for life, sending more and more as they are able to earn it.

Holland, Va.,
 March 10, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Have all the little folks at the Orphanage had the measles? We have had it, but are getting well of it now. Will had it first and about the time he was getting over it Jack, Harvey and I took it. Will took cold and had a dreadful time with pneumonia, and before he was well of that mamma had measles and was very sick a long time. Don't you know papa had his hands full with everybody sick in the house but himself? We are so thankful that we are all getting well. Jack and I have started to school again and I hope Will can go next week.

I promised last fall to do better about writing to the corner, but I have not been keeping my promise very well, so I'm going to try again if you will excuse me for having been careless in the past.

I enclose ten dollars for Jack, Will, Harvey and myself.

Your little niece,
 Elizabeth Juanita Vincent.

Thanks very much children for your nice offering. You make up for your silence by such a nice letter with its splendid contents.

 Feb. 23, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Helen is four months old today. She is a healthy baby and grows rapidly. Charles and Hannab Clare think there is nothing quite so sweet as "Helen girl," and next to her is "dear Bessie," our new horse. Mama says daddy thinks more of the horse than he does of the baby, but he says he doesn't—he can just handle the horse better. We are having a cold snap this week. The Denton boys would not go bare-foot here.

Enclosed is our quarter.

Lovingly,
 Charles E. Newman, Jr.,
 Hannah Clare Newman,
 Helen Shivers Newman.

Never mind children, the cold snap will be over before long, and then hurrah for bare-foot time!

Windsor, Va.,
 March 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

My two sisters and I have had the measles and am entertaining ourselves since better dressing dolls, reading, drawing and having a big time. Want to get back to school soon. Enclosed find 5 cents. Much love to the orphans.

Sincerely,
 Junie Maie Davis.

Better be careful of eyes Junie. Reading I fear is not good for measles.

DIED.

Scott.

John Morgan Scott was born Nov. 30, 1871, and died March 1, 1911, aged 39 years, 3 months and one day. He was married to Miss Maude Arnold Taylor Dec. 29, 1909. He suffered for the past 6 months, but was confined to his bed only about 3 weeks. All that love and friends could do was done but could not overcome the dread disease. He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, a little babe, Ruth, too young to know the loss of father. Deep sympathy is felt for the young widow and the aged father who was much grieved at the loss of his son.

Bro. Scott was for years a popular traveling man in the West; he was a friendly man and clever citizen.

The burial was from Lebanon Christian Church. Beautiful flowers were placed on the grave showing the love and esteem of those left in sorrow.

INJURIOUS READING.

The remarks of the following article are, not intended to condemn novel reading, however unwise the surrender to that practice may be: for novels do not usually deceive their readers, and many a novel teaches truth. The points concerning novel reading are, to discriminate, not to waste time, and not to surrender to mental stimulant.

But I refer to matter set before the public by an author whose words reveal that he is not sincere in his writing.

It is unwise for a young minister, or any young person, to read the writings of an author who is either personally dishonest, or whose statements are found to be unreliable. It is even unsafe for such author, in his own career, has lost the power of instinctively discerning truth, and even for himself trusts to reasonings that are unsound; at some time, or times, in his own past life having labored to believe a lie, and having combined and interwoven arguments and evidence for such purposes. In his own experience having surrendered to the untrue, he has grown into the condition alluded to by the Apostle Paul in 2 Thes. 2: 10-12:

"They received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be judged who believed not the truth."

Such a writer will state reasonings in a way to mislead his reader by insidious and suggestive ideas, possibly being unconscious that he is teaching a lie. His life habit has become that of an actor, and not that of a doer. Reality has disappeared from his purposes, and his finger-board is not determined by the pole-star of liberty (notwithstanding his claims) but by preferences. In this state he may not intend to deceive, but his writing is unsafe. Young ministers should avoid it: for there is nothing more important than by the child that has never heard a lie, the natural instinct for truth possessed nor been deceived. Preserving that child-like quality, you will gradually form the truth habit, which will save you from many a weary hour of investigation, at whose conclusion you might otherwise still be groping in uncertainty.

Preserving your child-truth-habit, you will perceive and grasp truth apparently intuitively; sometimes almost as free from labor of testing facts, or balancing evidence, as a merchant's scales when sinking, or rising, under the argument of weights or measures. Shutting your mind against every thing un candid or insincere, you will also even have perception of character denied to those who make their minds and hearts a highway for the tramping demons of deceit. Sooner or later any error that is given even temporary hospitality in the human mind, fixes itself for permanent residence there, and hinders the entrance of the angels of truth, and obstructs their glory and helpfulness.

But if you preserve the truth habit, you will be like Sir Isaac Newton, who foresaw much truth that in his day was yet undiscovered (because of the state of science at that time), but has since been demonstrated, or been discovered. He had the truth-habit so fixed, that he sometimes instinctively perceived truth, or seemed to feel it. Such capacity is of far greater value than the much praised practice of listening to all pleas. That practice does not make a man broadminded, or liberal: it sometimes makes him shallow, or uncertain.

Jesus had such ideas in mind when he used the following words:

John 8: 47. "He that is of God heareth the words of God; for this cause ye hear not because ye are not of God."

John 18: 37. "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice."

And John, the beloved disciple, had such ideas in mind when he wrote the following:

1 John 4: 6. "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he who is not of God heareth us not. By this we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error."

Such instinct as that of Sir Isaac Newton, of John, of Jesus, is highly important. In order to get such instinct, be quick to drop an author who is insincere. As you would not bargain with a dishonest merchant; just so, read not an insincere author. For, if you do, at some time you will be misled, losing your keenness of vision for truth.

High Point, April 26, 27, 28, 1911.

The greatest Sunday-school meeting of the year for this State will take place in High Point, April 26-28.

The music will be in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Butler. Mr. Butler has been for several years past with Dr. R. A. Torrey in his evangelistic tours. He is well known as a leader of evangelistic singing and as a soloist of unusual ability. His wife has a very sweet soprano voice. Their solos and duets are inspiring and uplifting.

The railroads have granted reduced rates from all parts of the State. The tickets will be sold on the certificate plan and will be one and one-half fare, plus 50 cents for the round trip. Tickets will be on sale from April 22-26, with final limit May 2nd.

Each county is entitled to as many delegates as there are townships in the county. This does not mean that every township must be represented, but that the basis of delegation shall be the number of townships in the county.

All delegates will pay a registration fee of $1.00. This will be paid at High Point when assignment to home is made. All delegates will receive—Entertainment during the convention, a seat in the convention with county delegation, a souvenir badge, a convention program, a right to a voice and vote in all the deliberations of the body, helpful literature of various kinds.

Entertainment will be provided all delegates by the citizens of High Point, during the three days of the Convention.

Mr. Marion Lawrence, General Secretary, and Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, Chairman Executive Committee, will be the representatives of the International Sunday-school Association.

The Convention is interdenominational. Those desiring to attend should send their names to their County Association Secretary or to J. Van. Carter, General Secretary, Raleigh, and receive appointment as a delegate.

Language was given to us that we might say kind things to one another.

EDITORIAL.

LOOKING UNTO GOD.

("Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else. Isa. 45: 22. Golden text for Sunday, April 2).

There are times when a king is helpless and a prince powerless. Such a time as that had come in Israel when the lesson of today was penned. Royalty takes a back seat, pomp prevails not, and the great become insignificant. Maidens are more powerful than masters, servants are more efficient than sovereigns, and an humble prophet of God puts to shame, but saves from distress and great anguish, a mighty king.

In the extremity of life no king is powerful enough to bring relief. Naaman the Syrian had arrived at an extremity, but neither the king of Syria nor the king of Israel could render him the need service of relief. What two kings with all their resources could not do, a message borne in the mouth of a servant, could easily and effectually do. God always employs simple means to accomplish great and wonderful things. The Jordan was not a clear and beautiful stream, but a muddy and uninviting one. Its waters, however, availed to cure Naaman of his leprosy because God willed it.

It would seem that God's power has been so often manifest to those who trust Him and obey him that long before now all peoples every where would be ready and willing to look unto Him and be saved. Yet they are not. Why? There are several reasons.

1. Man is rebellious. He wants his own way about things. He thinks he knows. He is full of self. He thinks his way is the best way; and it is wonderfully hard, by any sort of teaching or example to prove to him that this way is not the best way, Naaman, afflicted and on the verge of a hideous death, came near to losing the blessing, and but for the importunity of his servants, in all probability would have lost it, even when it was within his reach. Naaman, diseased unto death, was full of haughty and obstinate pride. He therein typifies a great number of men and women. We want to do things on a grand scale, or not at all. We want a kid glove salvation. We want the blessings and benefits of life to come our way, or not at all. We are not willing to be humble of spirit, contrite of heart and mind and soul. We are obstinate and rebellious.

2. Men are not ready nor anxious to realize God. We are loath to believe the good, and ready to appropriate and give credence to the bad. If a good man tells us what God is and has been to him, we will not readily believe what he says, not sufficiently to follow him at any rate. We have to come to believe God ourselves, and appropriate Him in our own lives. We do not inherit salvation, righteousness, a close walk with God. We have to appropriate this, each one does for himself. God is not seen of the eye or touched of the hand; but He must be realized in the soul. We are not anxious to yield to Him the soul, the self, the full and complete self. God is good, but the wicked love their wickedness and are not ready to believe you when you tell them how good God is.

3. Men have their preconceived ideas and notions about being saved, and they do not easily yield these. It is very difficult to make men give up saying "I know," and instead get them to say "I do believe; help thou my unbelief." Man so much rather "know" his own way than to "believe" God's way. Rev. F. B. Meyer has well said:

"Naaman nearly missed the blessing he sought because he relied upon his preconceived ideas: "Behold, I thought." He had his own philosophy, his own idea of how salvation might come to him; and there is no greater obstacle to salvation than our expectations. We have to forsake our own ways, plans and expedients, and throw ourselves simply on God's mercy (1 Cor. iii. 18). Naaman's pride received one further rebuke when he stooped to wash seven times in the turbid waters of the Jordan instead of the clear mountain streams from Lebanon which flow through Damascus. We must not suppose, of course, that there was any virtue in the Jordan, but to bathe there was a searching ordeal for the proud Syrian captain. We must be saved in God's way or not at all. The Cross seems foolishness and a stumbling block, but there is no other way by which we can be reconciled to God. Men may refuse the Blood of the Atonement, but "there is none other name given under heaven whereby" they "can be saved."

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

When those great missionary rallies were held among the laymen in this, and in other States, the speeches were so eloquent, the audiences were so inspiring, the literature was so attractive, that we thought the laymen had indeed arisen, meant business, and were determined to do something.

But some how we are not hearing much about it now. The "movement" doesn't seem to move, certainly not in this Christian Church of ours. When and where preachers were present, namely, in Convention and Conference, there was much good talk about it all, and we believe secretaries were elected. So far as we know those secretaries have been silent in seven languages ever since. Brother Johnson of Charity and Children, and himself a layman, closed an editorial on the "Movement" the other day with this comment. "The preachers are the main stay of every moral movement of our time. They must move us laymen into line if we ever get into line at all." And it does seem that way—especially as to this "Laymen's Movement" that seems to have balked.

GIDEONS AND THE BIBLE.

Do people just buy Bibles, or do they read them? Do they possess themselves of the good Book because it seems the right thing to do, and because it makes one more comfortable to have one around, or do they read them when bought? This is a question. There is an organization of drummers who call themselves Gideons and believe that people generally need to read the Bible more, and believe much good would come of reading it more. So the Gideons are placing the Bible in almost all the large hotels throughout the country. The Evening Chronicle thinks well of this movement and comments in this manner upon it. "It has been in progress for months past and many instances of good results have been noted. The Philadelphia Press calls it "a pious and useful work." and one that cannot fail to bear good fruit. Educators, The Press says, bear testimony to the lack of Biblical knowledge among the students at leading colleges and universities. Evidently the Bible, though circulated by millions, is no longer generally read in the home. Young men who would be ashamed to admit ignorance of an allusion to the mythology of ancient Greece, do not understand an ordinary scriptural reference. The "drummer" who finds a Bible in his bedroom at the hotel may have childhood memories recalled to him and read through sentiment. Or, seeing the Bible, may awaken either a religious impulse or simple curiosity. From whatever initiative one takes to Bible reading, the result cannot fail to be an increase of spiritual culture, intellectual breadth and literary appreciation. There is no more interesting book in the world of literature than the Bible, in itself the wonderful literature of a wonderful people. And of all the monuments of English literature, the King James version of the Hebrew Scriptures is the greatest. The Gideons are doing a splendid work, not only for their fellow-traveling sales-men, but for the hotel guests, who will profit by the distribution of the Book of books.

THE FAITHFUL SUPERINTENDENT.

We took occasion to write in these columns recently of the great and good work many faithful Sunday-school superintendents were doing without reward and without any thought of reward. They labor through the years, attending their schools promptly and regularly winter and summer, and often in face of depressing circumstances and with disadvantages and discouragements facing them in their work.

When the lines were written we were wondering if there were not such superintendents amongst us, and we have now before us the testimony of one such superintendent. "I am writing this," runs the letter, "to assure you that at least one humble superintendent has been encouraged by your article in The Sun on 'The Faithful Superintendents.' I am one of them who does not know all there is in the books and does not always have time to prepare the lesson as I would like. I have to face all the problems mentioned and many more. I know I am not big enough for the position and I often feel like I want to get out for fear I may stand in the way of progress. But such words encourage me to press on, and do the best I can. I believe the preachers do not know how much good it does us poor unlearned, uncultured church workers to know that they appreciate our feeble efforts.

I have been Superintendent of a large country school for five years. I believe I see great possibilities in the work, if they only had a bigger leader. I ask you to pray God to send one to take the place and do the work that I know well enough needs to be done."

Out of such a spirit as that God develops wonders in our Sunday-school work, and blesses with His approval the faithful ones who toil and labor without reward or the hope of reward, for the advancement of His kingdom.

It is not the amount of learning, the amount of culture, the amount of scholarship we carry into a work that measures the success of it, but it is the amount of loving loyalty, devoted energy and consecrated effort we carry into it that God uses and will use to bless, increase and multiply.

Again we say, God bless the many faithful Sunday-school superintendents, who, hurried and burdened with their affairs all the week, take some of their time and thought for the great work laid upon them and who without reward or even thought of reward go to their schools every Sunday to do and to give the best they have and know and can.

CURRENT COMMENT.The Truth of Text-Books.

A good friend of this writer's used to say "Paper cannot help what is put on it." In the coca cola investigation now on before the federal court at Chattanooga some wonderful things are happening. Among them here is one. Certain medical experts, "teachers and professors of medicine" in some of the most noted medical schools in this country were put on the stand by the coca cola people to prove that certain elements used in making coca cola were not poisonous. The "professors" swore that said elements were not poisonous. When confronted by their own books, books of which they themselves were authors, in which they had written and were teaching that these elements were poisonous, two of these distinguished authors testified that they had copied the statements referred to and that they were not true, and a third testified that much he had written in his book was untrue.

This indeed is astounding. One now wonders whether the statements in the books were false, or the testimony of the authors on the witness stand was false. One must be false as the two exactly contradict. Surely paper cannot help what is put on it, and not even all we read in print is true. But truth is dear and sweet and precious and is worth seeking for at any price. There is a Book whose testimony is sure and whose truths have been tested and proven by unnumbered witnesses through the years. That is the Book of books.

—There was a fearful fire in New York last Saturday when 142 employees, mostly working girls in a shirt-waist factory, were burned to death or were killed in endeavoring to escape. The building was ten stories high and there was not a single fire escape on the outside. Most of the deaths were on the 9th and 10th floors. It does not seem possible that a city of modern times would allow a building of such height without fire escapes.

—The Young People's Convention of our Southern churches meets at Elon College, April 15, 16, 17. This is the second biennial session. All Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies should send delegates. Prof. S. M. Smith, Norfolk, Va., is president. An elaborate program has been arranged.

A Vigorous Fight:—If the United States does not succeed in its warfare against tuberculosis it will not be from a lack of means and effort. Besides the millions by private individuals in homes and hospitals in behalf of loved ones and friends, fifteen million dollars were spent in the organized fight against the "white plague." This was twice the sum spent the previous year, and the likelihood is that a much greater sum will be spent the present year. There were tuberculosis expositions throughout the country and agitation was active in all quarters against the encroachments of the dread disease. Such intelligent and organized effort must result, ultimately, in the decrease of the death rate from this cause. Sanitation prolongs life and salvation saves life. The two should go together.

Beyond Politics.—There is certainly one great and good effect of having some of our distinguished citizens beyond the reach of party politics. No longer subject to political bitings and bickerings, some of our federal court judges, holding office as they do for life, or during good behavior, make most useful and helpful citizens, even outside the sphere of their judicial occupations.

North Carolina now boasts such a citizen in the person of Hon. Jeter C. Pritchard, of the United States Circuit Court. There was a time when men of one political party would not listen very long to Judge Pritchard. He was then talking politics and as a party man was supposed to be biased and prejudiced. Not so now. Judge Pritchard's politics is never mentioned now; but where great moral issues are at stake he is sent for and is heard to great acceptance. It was so in our prohibition campaign two years ago. It has been so often. Where great movements for the betterment of the citizenship are on foot, Judge Pritchard is sent for—not to talk politics any more, but, in being beyond that, to talk moral and civic betterment.

Raleigh, our capital city, is moving to build a Y. M. C. A. Judge Pritchard was sent for. He came—and in truth he delivered a masterful address. It was beyond politics. It had to do with even better things. Hear this opening paragraph:

"I appreciate the honor of being your guest on this occasion. The work you have undertaken is of the utmost importance and I am glad to know that the good people of our capital city have at last determined to erect a suitable building for the Young Men's Christian Association. I have had a varied experience in public affairs and I do not hesitate to say that were it not for the Christian religion, the ministers of the Gospel and the civilizing influence of the Christian men and women of this country the judges would be powerless to declare, and the sheriffs to enforce the law. The best investment that any community can make is in the estab-

INCREASING THE NAVY.

The following are the salient points of a speech in a debate at Elon College by M. Roberson on the negative side of the query "Should our last year's appropriations to the Navy be increased by fifty per cent for the next ten years. It was a fine address and won the orator's medal for the speaker:

In 1910 our appropriations for the navy were one hundred and thirty six million dollars. This year it is one hundred and twenty-eight million, eight million dollars less than last year. This furnishes the means for two new battleships and other boats such as the navy department ask for. Should we increase our appropriations fifty per cent it would be one hundred and eighty one and one third million dollars, which is forty seven and two third million dollars more than the appropriations for this year. This enormous increase would build two thousand four hundred and eighty three churches, at a cost of twenty thousand dollars each.

The effect our navy has on other nations is the same as if our next door neighbor were to come to us and say; "Let's live in peace, let's have peace as our policy." And they were to go build up a great wall between you, and train their boys for soldiers and teach them to watch you in every thing you do. Surely you would lose confidence in them and start out making preparations to protect yourself. This has been the policy of the U. S. and is still its policy.

We have no right to invite other nations to put down their armaments and come with us in peace and unity, until we have put our armaments down.

In thirty years we have increased our population eighty five per cent, our wealth one hundred and eighty-five per cent, but we have increased our national expenses four hundred per cent. The navy officials of the U. S. do not remember that we become a great world power without the assistance of either army or navy.

What we need today is not an increase in battleships, but an increase in coast defenses. The amount that is spent to make two battleships each year would, if used in building defenses on the Pacific Coast, make it impossible for effectual war. All we need on the Pacific Coast is enough coast defenses to keep any nation from landing and getting coal from the U. S. It is impossible for any nation to make war with the U. S., for it takes all a battleship can carry to make the trip across the ocean and back, not leaving any to fight with.

Some may say that we should increase our navy because other nations increase theirs. Why so? We are looked on as no other nation, we are known as a Christian nation and a peace maker throughout the world. So why do we continue to deceive the world? We as a nation are better fitted to establish international peace than any other nation. Why not show to the world that we are a Christian nation, and a peace maker, by sending representatives to every nation of the world to organize Christian and Peace Conferences, making it possible to establish peace and Christianize the nations of the world. This could be done with less than one third of what it takes to keep a big navy like we have today, and surely it is the best, cheapest, and surest way to have peace.

The President's message to Congress each year is based on the peace that exists between the U. S. and every nation. Still we continue to increase our navy, which means war. "Knock and it shall be opened unto you, seek and ye shall find." This is the U. S. today as she is knocking for war by increasing her navy.

It has been said that the U. S. was more able financially to have a big navy than any other nation. We want to continue to be able, and if we continue to increase our navy we will soon be like Germany and Russia. Statistics show that Germany gave bonds and borrowed three hundred million dollars last year, and statistics show that she has more paupers than any other nation in the world, and that they are increasing every year. And that all British problems are increasing. The navy experts of Russia in 1908 planned for a new billion dollar navy, notwithstanding its present debt is four and a half billion dollars; and to pay her current expenses she is compelled to borrow seventy five million dollars every year. Now, if we increase our appropriation at the rate of fifty per cent annually we will soon be as Russia and Germany.

"Be not deceived, whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap. If he sows unto the spirit, of the spirit shall he also reap. If he sows unto the flesh, of the flesh, he shall reap corruption. If he sows the seed of righteousness, he shall reap manhood. If he sows the seed of war, ye shall reap bloodshed and slaughter."

The head officials of the U. S. not only owe it to their own country, but they owe it to the people of the world, to take the first step to establish a national legislature calling for Universal peace, and compelling the officers of the government to take the step which are necessary to promote peace among all nations.

There are so many ways that we can settle disputes that may arise between the U. S. and other nations without putting so many lives at stake, not saying any thing of the cost. The war between Japan and Russia was settled by the Monroe Doctrine, after two years of hard fighting.

Now, I shall show you a few of the really worthy and appealing objects to which a whole or a part of this appropriation for the navy can be more advantageously and beneficently devoted. One hundred and thirty six million dollars was the appropriation for 1910. It would buy thirty four thousand farms at a cost of four thousand dollars each. It would build sixty eight hundred churches through our country at a cost of twenty thousand dollars each. It would furnish the means of education through a four year course to sixty eight thousand men and women at a cost of five hundred dollars every year. Fifty manual training schools could be built and equipped for the cost of one battleship, furnishing the room for teaching the different trades to seventy-five thousand men and women each year. The cost of one battleship would build a macadam road from Chicago to New York. Forty Y. M. C. A. buildings could be built and equipped at three thousand dollars each, each building accommodating the young men in a city of two hundred thousand people. One fourth the cost of one battleship would furnish the means for five mail routes to London and different places abroad, every year. Three fourths the cost of one battleship used in the construction of irrigation works in Salt River Valley Arizona, would reclaim two hundred and forty thousand acres of land, and provide homes for eight thousand families and increase the value of taxable property twenty four million dollars every year. This increase is only one fifteenth what the whole appropriation would accomplish, making the whole appropriation three hundred and sixty million dollars in crease every year. The White Mountain forest two hundred and fifty thousand acres burned over and un-productive lands can be purchased and planted for the cost of one battleship. For the cost of one battleship we could have one third more R. F. D. Routes through the United States than we have now. And for the cost of one battleship, we could build four hundred post offices at a cost of thirty thousand dollars each. One twentieth of the cost of one battleship would furnish the means to build a library in Raleigh, our capital city at a cost of five hundred thousand dollars. Dr. S. A. Knapp said, "Turnips, pumpkins and beets are a better protection than bullets against foreign invasion. If congress would give but one half of a battleship, I could put an expert demonstrator in every country in the U. S. and do more than a dozen battleships for the promotion of our welfare and security, and the cost of living would be reduced fifty per cent.

Now, I have shown only a few of the many appealing objects to which we could use this appropriation to a better advantage. Just so long as we continue to increase our navy, we will continue to settle our disputes by the horrible thing called war.

The British with a navy equal to any other two have learned at the eleven hour that a big navy was no safe-guard unless backed by over a million citizens. The fever of militarism is like all other fever; unless checked it is sure to burn the patient up, and the sooner this fever is checked in the U. S. and with every nation the better it will be for the whole world at large.

No two nations ever fight whose influential citizens know one another. Why not get acquainted with our eastern neighbors? In the arts of peace we are their superior, in the arts of war, China can become our equal in a single generation. They run through a stage of evolution swiftly, and come to perfection early. The virtues of a Christ-like spirit are the beautiful growths of a thousand years, and we are insane if we are willing to jeopardize what we have gained by infinite sacrifice and effort, by entering a field upon which victory depends, upon neither beauty of spirit nor nobility of heart, but upon the shrewd manipulation of physical forces. The thing we ought to believe in is peace! We abhor war! It is contrary to our nature, opposed by our religion, hostile to our ideals and traditions. We do not believe in settling disputes by force. We believe in reason. See our hands, we carry no bludgeons. Search us, we own no concealed weapons. Trust us, for we are going to trust you. Let us work together for our mutual advantage and for the progress of humanity. "If we as a nation will do this it will not be long before the nations "shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their sheaths into pruning hooks; nation shall not life up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

NORFOLK LETTER.

Daniel J. Bowden Jr. the five year old son of Deacon and Mrs. D. J. Bowden has been critically ill for a week past with a form of trouble that seems to be baffling the physicians in charge. It was a trouble bordering on lockjaw which culminated in a number of severe convulsions the first of the week. His life was despaired of, but he is now much better, and it is thought he may soon be all right again.

I had the pleasure, with a party of others from the Third Church, of attending the services at Lamberts Point Thursday night. Bro. Keys preached a good sermon, which was followed by some eight or ten conversions, all of whom were adults. They are having a good meeting and have had quite a good many conversions.

Sunday had been looked forward to by the people of the Memorial Temple with great expectation and they were not disappointed. It was my privilege after meeting with my school for the opening hour, to go to the Temple and be with them in the closing of their school. It was a good school with 201 present. It was a pleasure to be with them even for a little while. I have spent many pleasant hours with them in their work. And under the efficient leadership of Bro. John J. Pitt, they are doing a good work. I would like to say much about the event which was being celebrated, but Dr. Atkinson was there, and that means that all will be said that needs saying, and much better than I could say it. But I suspect that the good Doctor will be too modest to tell his readers how delighted the people were to have him with them and to listen to the two fine sermons that he gave them.

In the evening just before time for services, Norfolk was visited with one of the worst rain and wind storms of the season, which practically broke up all services at the churches for the evening hour. At the Temple they received 4 new members during the day. J. W. Manning. (Crowded out last week).

FACTS ABOUT OUR MISSIONS.

Japan.

Our foreign missionary work began in Japan in 1887.

Rev. and Mrs. D. F. Jones, of North Carolina, were our first missionaries.

lishment of churches, schoolhouses, public libraries, Young Men's Christian Associations and other institutions of like character. These are the seed corn of good citizenship."

The Panama Canal.—Experts are now declaring that the Panama Canal will be open for use in 1913. This is two years earlier than was at one time anticipated and shows that Uncle Sam is busy on the great task.

All the sea faring nations of the earth are making preparation to enjoy some of the great advantages to be derived from the use of the canal. It means that the South and Central American countries will be brought near to the doors of the rest of the world and will soon be passing their boundless products, through the many channels of trade, into the markets of other nations. Japan of course represents the activity of the nations in this regard, and that brave and hustling little country is now to get busy at once in building twenty great merchant steamers to ply the Panama Canal and carry its trade from the South and Central American countries. Other nations are getting busy as prospects of opening the Canal grow brighter. We live in a day of big things in commerce, trade, manufacturing, mining, and in religion. "Undertake great things for God; expect great things of God" is the motto of many in our time, and shows the spirit of the age.

Coca Cola.—The case of "The United States against 40 barrels and 20 kegs of coca cola," in the federal court at Chattanooga, Tennessee, has attracted wide spread interest. The case comes up under the pure food act and many experts have been on the stand practically all of whom alleged that cocacola was impure, was a dangerous drug, and once the habit of drinking it was formed, was harder to break than the whiskey habit. One expert, Dr. Busby, had visited South America in order to study the kola leaves and to learn definitely of the effects of the plant. He said, kola contained caffeine and was injurious to the system. Dr. Morgan had experimented with cocacola propertions on rabbits, and the rabbits died.

Dr. John A. Witherspoon, professor of medicine in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, testified that from his observation he had known of from thirty to forty cases where people have become addicted to the coca cola habit, and that at least three of them had been taken to hospitals. He said they suffered with nervousness, sleeplessness and indigestion. He declared that the whiskey habit was easier to break than that of drinking coca cola.

Dr. James T. Searcy, general superintendent of insane asylums in Alabama, stated on the stand that insanity was on the increase in Alabama and that this increase was caused, he thought, principally by nervousness and depression as a result of false stimulation. He stated that coca cola is largely used in Alabama.

Dr. William F. Boos of Boston said that he had experimented with coca cola on animals and frogs, thereby learning, he declared, that caffeine, as used in coca cola, affected the spinal cord, brain and heart, and that its use by human beings had a deleterious effect on mankind.

So whether the United States wins its case or not the people have had the opportunity of learning what coca cola is, and what its effect; and those who really care will profit by what they have learned.

Public Schools.—We have received from Mr. C. H. Mebane of the Department of Public Schools, Raleigh, a bulletin showing the progress of local taxation in this State within the past few years. "In a period of ninety days" says the bulletin "we carried local taxation in one hundred and thirty-five districts during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910." The income to schools from this source in 1910 was $877,799.91, an increase of $60,550.09 over the previous year. Taking all together, loans, bonds, etc., there was raised in 1910 in local tax districts the splendid sum of $1,171,857.40.

This is very good, and the local tax idea is on the increase, with the promise this year of much more than last year.

This is indeed a movement to the zeal, patriotism and educational pride of the people of these several districts. And for this reason: North Carolina as a State certainly does very little for public schools. Our constitution declares that our schools shall continue at least four months in the year: and yet during this very year, if we have learned correctly, many, many schools in the rural districts where there is no local tax will not run four months, some not longer than three months. With all our talk, educational campaigns, increased and improved machinery, we have not increased to any great degree, the length or the efficiency of free schools, where no local taxes have been voted.

You may put it down that the State of North Carolina is doing exceedingly and shamefully little for its public schools. To us a bulletin showing what increase, or what improvement, our public schools are making out side the local tax districts would be far more interesting than the one before us. That State is doomed to perpetual poverty and ignorance that does not educate from the ground up, from the beginning; and educate those who do not care enough for education to vote a special tax. The local tax districts may be pointed to as the pride of the few; but the short and inefficient terms outside the local tax districts, throughout the State, are pointed to as the State's shame.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Mr. A. C. Hall, a last year's graduate of Elon College has made good as principal of Calhoun High School, Calhoun, Ga., and has already been asked by his Board to remain another year at a considerably advanced salary. Mr. Hall is a man of talent, character and ability and we are not surprised at his success in the school room.

—"Grace Before Meals" is a neat volume of 167 pages and contains a "grace" for every day of the year, short, reverential, appropriate. Our notice of the little book two weeks ago brought several orders. We can supply a few more 30cts. the copy, cloth; 50 cts. the copy gilt, special cloth. If you have not an appropriate "Grace" in mind, this volume will supply you for any occasion or demand.

—We saw a physical dwarf the other day, small, cramped, fragile, drawn, uncomely to look upon. We so often find spiritual dwarfs, meager of soul, drawn in spiritual make-up, narrow in soul measurement. There are spiritual dwarfs while a sufficiency is offered them to become giants, full grown, free, happy. Spiritual dwarfs, pitiable they are. And there is no excuse for their remaining so.

—The Christian Hymnary new, revised, and much improved, is on sale at The Christian Sun office. We have supplied several churches and are prepared to supply others as we have recently received a new consignment of the books. The price to churches is 50 cts. the copy and freight; single copies 75 cts by mail. For its size and quality this is the cheapest hymn book we know. When supplying your churches with new and much needed hymn books, do not forget your own, The Hymnary..

—The North Carolina Press Association meets in its next annual session at Lenoir, June 20-23. A trip to Blowing Rock, Boone, and other points in the mountains is scheduled, and the editors will have a good time all right. They always do.

—In the cases of the United States against "forty barrels and twenty kegs of coca cola" in the federal court at Chattanooga it was brought out that a very large percent of "Merchandise No. 5" was used in the manufacture of coca cola, but the manufacturers and those interested refused to divulge to the court what "Merchandise No. 5" was, or whence it came.

—We wrote an editorial recently calling upon our laymen to know what they were going to do, what they were doing in fact, with the "Laymen's Missionary Movement" in our churches, and to enquire what had become of those beautiful resolutions we were passing at our Conference and in our Convention with regard to the "Movement." And there hasn't been a laymen interested enough to even write us a line in reply. So we are much of the opinion about the laymen in the Christian Churches that Bro. Johnson is of the laymen in the Baptist Churches when he wrote in last week's Charity and Children: "You may say what you please about the preachers, but unless they put themselves behind the Laymen's Movement it is not going to move much."

—There can be no longer any doubt that Charlotte N. C., is getting tony and uppish sure enough. Here is evidence sufficient. Some where near that town is a stream called "Sugar Creek." Now The Evening Chronicle, reflecting of course the spirit of its high toned populace is of opinion that "Sugar Creek" ought not to be spelled in the ordinary way, but should be S-u-g-a-w or S-h-u-g-a-w. The Chronicle produces as proof of its elite position that there is a graveyard near by and in the graveyard is a tablet on which it is written S-u-g-a-w. Sugar in the plain old way is no longer good enough for Charlotte. A very little seems to turn some people's head ver much. We love to think of Charlotte as the good old Presbyterian town of the "first Declaration" and hate to see it putting on these new airs.

One of the busiest of men is our brother, Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C. His hands are ever turned to some good effectual and constructive work. Just now he is engaged in remodeling the house of worship. Christians Light, in Harnett Co., and in raising funds for our prospective Chapel Hill church. He has already secured many pledges, and much cash for this latter undertaking, and hopes to have enough on hand to begin building the coming summer. He is determined, as all are who are interested there, that we shall have a neat and handsome house of worship in this University town. Bro. Clements carries his age, as well as his work, well and seems quite as young now, and as active as when we first knew him many years ago.

—Anent the suit against coca cola in the federal court at Chattanooga, The Charlotte Evening Chronicle of March 17 carries this item as to the effect of the testimony on the sale of coca cola on the local market: "With the recent publications of evidence given in the case of the United States against a number of barrels and kegs of coca cola, from Chattanooga, Tenn., where the case is being tried, many injurious things have been said and the effect has been immediate so far as local sales have been concerned.

Thursday nearly every clerk in Charlotte realized that coca cola was not being called for with the same vim from the imbibers. To-day the sale has been still less. Since publication of the statement that worms and vermin were found in the vats at the main plant of the coca cola house in Atlanta, Ga., when the place was inspected by government experts, the drinkers of the fluid have been less thirsty and have spent less money on the "dope."

Dr. Dixon is not only an eloquent preacher, but a man of great spiritual power and devotion as well.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D. Editor of the Christian Sun went to Norfolk on last Sunday to attend the 21 Anniversary of the organization of the Memorial Christian Temple of that city. The program of this anniversary occasion consisted in three parts: Special services at 11 a. m. at which Dr. Atkinson preached from the theme, "Divine Methods of Renewing." An afternoon service in which a memorial tablet in memory of Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D., organizer and first pastor of Memorial Christian Temple, was unveiled, the eulogy on this occasion being pronounced by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va. In the evening at 7:30 there was a sermon delivered by Dr. Atkinson from the theme "Why I am a member of the Christian Church." The pastor of this church is the Rev. McDaniel Howsare who conducted such a great revival at Elon in January of this year.

The Young People's Convention of the Christian Church, South, will hold its second biennial session at Elon College, April 15th to 17th, or Saturday, Sunday and Monday of the Easter season. This convention has as its motto a Christian Endeavor Society in every church and a Teacher-Training and Organized Class in every Sunday-school, and while it has not been operative for more than two years, it has been productive of much good.

W. A. Harper.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prof. W. A. Harper, Editor.

THE SECOND BIENNIAL CONVENTION.

The Southern Christian Convention in its Greensboro session provided that there should be a Young People's Convention for our entire brotherhood in the South, occupying a position with reference to our Sunday-school and Young People's Conventions in the several Conferences analogous to that occupied by the Southern Christian Convention itself with reference to the local conferences. The first session of this new body met at Elon College in May, 1909. The second session will also be held at Elon College, in April of this year, from the 15th to the 17th.

This Convention has been at work among us barely two years yet, still it has justified its existence and made its continuance imperative, if we are to go forward in our auxiliary church work. The record of achievement of the past two years is not brilliant, but encouraging. Teacher-Training has been brought among us to stay. Christian Endeavor has been introduced into many of our churches and into many others it will soon be introduced. Organized Classes are flourishing us as the green bay tree, only there ought to be more such trees. The Convention's motto has not been realized, but is being realized and will some day be generally attained among us. This motto is: "A Christian Endeavor Society in all churches Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday-school." Our most progressive churches have made this motto a reality in their midst and our churches are more and more becoming progressive. With all the churches the Young People's Convention is anxious to co-operate—for the work is one.

But to be specific, what is to be done at this second biennial session? The program is not yet complete, because some prospective speakers have not yet signified their intention to be present, but it is near enough complete for it to be stated that the very best talent we have, with few exceptions, will be employed to make the Convention a success. There will be abundant discussion of Teacher-Training, Organized Class Work, Primary Work, Cradle Roll, Home Department, Missions, Sunday-school Management, Superintendence, Christian Endeavor, etc. The question of the continuance of this department in the Sun will be disposed of. What the Convention's relation to the Young People's Worker is to be will be also answered in this session. Plans will be laid to make our auxiliary church work in all its features more effective and efficient and no church with its face to the future can afford not to be represented in this Convention. Send us your delegates' names as soon as possible and homes will be arranged for them. Send us your own name. Even if there were no Convention, a trip to Elon College would pay for itself, especially at the Easter Season. The Elon people can be depended upon to do their best in every way and that is as good as any one can do.

Don't forget the time, April 15-17: Don't forget the place, Elon College. Don't forget to send your name and the names of the delegates from your church to W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., at once.

N. C. State C. E. Convention.

As previously announced the 13th annual session of the N. C. State C. E. Convention will meet in Burlington with the Christian Church, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., pastor, from March 31 to April 2, the program of which appears below. The Christians have about 30 C. E. Societies in this State and every one of these should be represented. The promise is that this will be a really great Convention. Do not fail to read the program and to plan to be present. Notify Dr. Fleming of your intention to be present.

- Who Can Come?

Who can be seated as delegates in the Young People's Convention which meets at Elon College, April 15-17, 1911?

1st. All ministers of the Southern Christian Convention actively engaged in postoral work.

2nd. All officials of all the Young People's and Sunday-school Conventions of the several Southern Conferences.

3rd. All members of the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Boards of the S. C. C. and all officials of the general Young People's Convention.

4th. Representatives from every Sunday-school, Organized Class, Teacher-Training Class, Mission Study Class, Home Department, Cradle Roll, Christian Endeavor Society, at the rate of one delegate for each 25 of enrollment, each organization to have at least one delegate.

From such a possibility of membership, ought not this Convention to be a most representative body for our church? Be sure to come and to have your church and its auxiliaries well and fully represented.

It would not be a bad idea to elect young people for your church who are students in Elon College as delegates, if you can get no others to come. They will then feel under obligation to introduce any forward steps in their home churches upon their return home. It will be better, however, to send new ones from the field. By all means, be sure to have representatives at this Convention.

C. E. TOPIC FOR APRIL 9—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Painting the States White. Ps. 14:1-7.

Temperance Meeting:—Let the Temperance Committee lead. The chairman should make the leader's talk. One of the members of the Committee should read or better recite the beautiful Psalm that is our lesson. Another should show in three minutes how this passage of Scripture relates to the Saloon evil, which is the topic of the evening. A fourth should announce the hymns. A fifth should look after the prayer side of the meeting.

Leader's Remarks:—There are several possibilities open to the leader. He can speak of the harm of the saloon; of the progress in temperance; of the work yet to be done; why the saloon is to be outlawed; etc. Some people say that the saloon is necessary for business. Our country was never more prosperous than at present and yet now 75 per cent of the actual territory of the United States is dry, and this territory includes 41,000,000 of our population. The money that comes from the licenses is more than expended in punishing the crime that the saloon traffic creates. North Carolina has had a 55 per cent decrease in crime during the past two years under prohibition, according to Chief Justice Walter Clark. But one thing is sure; the saloon will never go except at the cost of eternal vigilance.

Special Work:—Have short essays or addresses on such themes as: Temperance Progress; Near Beer; Social Clubs; Other Forms of Intemperance than the Saloon. recent temperance legislation in N. C. Questions for Provoking Thought, To Be Voluntarily Answered.

What is local option?

Its effect on the saloon?

What has been the result of the dispensary on the saloon?

What of the value of high license as a remedy for the evils of the saloon?

Who is responsible for the continuance of the saloon?

What can Christian Endeavor do for this evil?

Of what value is the temperance pledge?

Wherein does the manliness consist in taking such a pledge?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am writing this letter with a penholder that has a history and that history was revived by the death of my uncle, George Albright Clendenin in Burlington, N. C., March 9, 1911. He was born January 20, 1837. He volunteered at the opening of the Civil War and served during the whole period of four years. At first he was in the "Infantry" and, later in the "Calvary." He was a prisoner for a time at Point Lookout. He had a minnie ball to enter his breast and come out under his left shoulder blade. This wound was a running sore for thirteen years after the war closed; but he went to the plow in 1865 and spent many years on the farm. He married Miss Mollie Robertson and they reared a family of five. He was a magistrate for many years. He was a Methodist Protestant and his wife was a Baptist. The funeral services were conducted from the Baptist Church in Burlington by pastor Morgan, assisted by Rev. M. Williams of the M. P. Church, on March 10th at 2 o'clock p. m. The service was simple, appropriate, and tender. I have one uncle only now, J. N. H. Clendenin of Graham, N. C.

Now for the history of the penholder with which I am writing this letter and I give this history for the boys and girls who read the Sun.

When I was a little boy eight years old, Uncle George was a young man as a clerk in the store of John G. Albright, Graham, N. C. I was then going to school and Uncle George gave me a five cent penholder with a bright brass end and told me he wanted me to learn to write well. A few years after that a post office was established at our house and my step-father was made Post Master. The letters that came to the post office from the Post Office Department were addressed in beautiful handwriting. That was before the days of typewriting and typewriters. Penmanship has declined since the days of stenography and typewriters. Those envelopes were my copies. I tried to imitate them. There is where I learned to write. With this very penholder I tried to reproduce the handwriting on those government envelopes; hence, I may say, that I learned to write under teachers I never saw and they never knew that they were making copies for me to follow. You see how far-reaching the influence of life is. We are all imitators and we all are making copies that other boys and girls will follow. The very paper on which we write may shape the destiny of some life we shall never know till we meet in heaven or in hell.

In 1869 I loaned this penholder to a young lady in the Graham school where I was living in the home of the principal, Rev. W. S. Long, and she failed to return it. The next vacation in the summer I found the penholder on a roof under the window of the room occupied by the borrower. It was weather beaten and mangled somewhat in its beauty; but I took the lost one in and have kept it on my desk or table till today. I picked it up a few minutes ago, put a brass stub in it, and I find that the brass end is growing bright under my fingers while I am writing these few lines; and this shows me that use is better than disuse even for penholders; and I wonder if it is not better for minds and hearts. Idleness tarnishes all and use brightens all.

This penholder was a pleasure to me when it first came into my hand from my uncle when I was a little boy; it is more precious to me now for it is enriched by many years and many memories.

The lesson of this penholder is the lesson of appreciation and economy. It was my first penholder and I appreciated the gift and the giver. I have taken care of it and it serves me to this day. These two elements are valuable assets in life. Take care of what comes into your possession whether it is a small gift, a friend, or salvation. Appreciate what others give you whether it is substance, kindness, or affection.

I shall keep this penholder till my time comes and, mayhap, leave it to my oldest child. I have lost much by not keeping; and I am writing this as a hint to young people to keep what God gives you.

NORFOLK LETTER.

The meeting at the Fourth Christian Church, Lamberts Point, which has been in progress for three weeks, closed Friday night. They had a splendid meeting with about 30 conversions, and a dozen or more united with the church. The church is very much encouraged and prospects are bright for the future.

At the Third church there were three new scholars in the Sunday-school, congregations were good. At the morning service Mr. J. R. Daughtry was received by letter.

Mr. and Mrs. McKinney who have been spending the winter with their daughter, Mrs. Me. D. Howsare returned last week to their home at Yellow Springs, Ohio. They have made many friends in Norfolk who will miss them.

The quarterly meeting of the Tidewater Christian Sunday-school Convention was held Sunday afternoon with the Main St. Church. Prof. S. M. Smith, the president, who has been confined to his home for the past few days with an attack of bronchitis, was unable to be present and Vice President, J. O. Wiggs was out of the city, so the Ex-President was called on to preside. The reports were all very good, showing an increase for the quarter of about 175 new scholars. The subject for the meeting was Primary Work. Mr. J. O. Wiggs had prepared a paper on the subject of the "Cradle Roll" which was read by Mr. Lehman. Mr. J. H. Blanchard discussed the "Thorough Organization of the Primary Work."

Rev. A. M. Hanson spoke on "The Necessary Equipment."

The next meeting will be held with the church at South Norfolk.

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Ishinomaki, Feb. 22, 1911.

Dear Readers of the Christian Sun.—Yesterday as I went on my weekly 4 mile walk down to Nigishi instead of taking the Herald of Gospel Liberty for a companion to read by snatches as one walks through the villages and along the narrow winding paths across the rice fields, I took the "Sun" to illumine my mind and enjoy Bro. Atkinson's editorials and Rev. Kitchen's article on the New Year.

Surely the Sun speaks to our hearts and its admonishings accord with the Word.

You will be interested to know how we are progressing since the floods destroyed the crops and how intense the suffering is. Last week we were asked to help in the distribution of money (given out as rice tickets) and clothing gathered by the Sendai Christians.

Mr. Kobayashi and I went up on Thursday and visiting the county office reported that if 50 people could be gathered together, the representation of the Sendai churches would address them and then give rice tickets. Unfortunately the head of the County, Mr. Ueno, was away at Matsushinma and Hirobuchi, visiting the destitute there. But his substitute, Mr. I—, worked hard and faithfully for us. He called two other officials and the mayor, decided that the school house was the best place for the meeting, made out the rice tickets, chose and called the families, so that the next day when at 4 o'clock the Sendai pastor and we two workers from Ishinomaki went to the school, one room was filled with about as poverty-stricken a set of people as it has been my privilege to meet. Mostly grandfathers and grandmothers or widows were there. "The poor and the rich meet together and the Lord is the Maker of them all." Truly that was exemplified. The rich here would hardly be rich according to our ideas of riches but rich and poor are comparative terms. The mayor, principal of schools, the daughter of the head official of the district (a Christian), the second official of the county, representatives from the police of two towns, Iinogawa and Oyachi, and representatives from the County officers surely were the "elite" of the place. We sat in front of them, facing these poor people most of them, for no fault of theirs, on the ragged edge of beggary. Mr. I— spoke a few words boldly for Christianity in introducing us. With song and prayer and Bible reading we began. The Sendai pastor told them how for two weeks the Sendai Christians had gone from door to door and solicited money that these people whom they do not know and may never see may be relieved. He told them that this food would last but a short time but God's comfort and blessing if they would receive it would last forever. Mr. Kobayashi followed with the story of Elijah and the ravens. He told them that if they would trust and serve God, they would find a little just enough for their needs—every day.

It became dark, some of the people had far to go but the evangelist still pressed the gospel upon the people.

With a song and distribution of rice tickets, gospels and tracts, these people went away cheered both materially and spiritually.

In the evening we had a meeting at the hotel. A drunken man tried to disturb it and at first the children were restless and disturbed the older people's attention. Six inquirers and one Christian came in our room afterward for further teaching. At nine o'clock after all had gone, Mr. I— came, Nicodemus like. He has a Bible which he had bought at one of our meetings and is studying it. May the Spirit of God apply it to his soul!

Forty others were helped at Oyochi where the suffering is greatest for there is no work. It is just a famine village. A Christian living there was charged with the distribution of funds at Oyachi. He is a young man and it is quite a responsibility for him.

The school teacher made a little request which seems trivial enough but will help in gaining the respect of the community. He asked if some American school would not send drawings or any handicraft to his school and they would exchange Japanese drawings. Do not put any writing on the drawings as that will increase postage but send to "Principal of Iinogawa School, Iinogawa Miyagi Ken,

Japan, or if you prefer, to me, at Ishinomaki. Japanese drawings are interesting so here is a chance for you to get a Japanese curio and help us at the same time. If a dozen schools send, so much the better. There is much I want to write but "time flies" and I must wait for another day.

With heartfelt gratitude to all my Southern Hosts and Hostesses and Patient Listeners during furlough time.

Yours,

Alice M. True.

HOME AGAIN.

After spending the time profitably and delightfully pleasant in the Valley of Va., with East Liberty Church, at Ingham, Va., I returned home. The meeting was one of much interest. Several professed and accepted salvation and many promised to live better lives. Eight joined the church who promise a life of usefulness in the service of Christ. The people were very kind to enjoy the services in a glad way. Preached twenty times and felt glad that I was permitted to deliver those messages. May the results be great blessings to all who heard and may their lives be filled with joy.

My writing to the Sun has been somewhat interrupted the past few weeks on account of my absence from home, and if I have failed to answer any of the many beautiful and highly appreciated letters which have been received from friends far and near, I take this opportunity of expressing to them my sincere thanks for kind words of encouragement. If any thing which has been written has helped you on in the Christian life or in any other way it gladdens the heart to know of it. And if any word has been written which shall cheer those ascending the hill of time, the happiness belongs to them, but the pleasure becomes the bliss of him who guided the pen. True happiness is better realized when we have lived to help somebody, and when it is known it gives a better and richer reward than money can give. To do good, kind, tender, loving acts to others is the chief aim of life. Yonder go many over the way with discouraged looks, in company with tired, sad and lonely ones who need help in many ways. The world has been so cold to them; early and late friends have left them alone from some cause until they are pale, worn, and nervous. Help them to day; say something kind and sweet to them, or do something for them that will bring joy to their souls, and cause their faces to light up with a look bright with inexpressible pleasure. Many ways to help, looks of pleasantness, acts of kindness are all helpful. Watch for the opportunity. J. T. Kitchen.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Our Sunday-school "Monthly Offering" grows. The Sunday-schools of Liberty Spring, Va., and Liberty, (Vance Co.) N. C., join this plan and send in this week liberal amounts. What school next? "The Little Workers" of Dendron, Va., kindly remember us again; in fact they have for several years been liberal and regular helpers in the Orphanage work. O'Kelley's Chapel has recently begun the Offering and send it in monthly.

We prefer that you send monthly; but you send monthly, quarterly or semi-annually or as you find convenient.

We are asking the pastors to help us in the Sunday-school offering by explaining and persuading the schools to help us. This "Monthly Offering" plan is authorized by the General Convention, and merits the full sympathetic support of all church and Sunday-school workers. We must have more money. We now have 45 children present and unless our income keeps in some proportion to our children, why our wheat and meat will give out before the season comes for a new supply.

The trustees are saying "pay off mortgage" and debts and yet our living expenses necessarily increase and we have about the same income as we had 2 or 3 years ago. The farm helps us, and so does our garden. We are not grumbling, but rejoicing at our growth; and delighted with the kind prophetic words which Dr. Atkinson gave us last week. (March 15) in reply to Bro. Johnson of Charity and Children.

We received Luella Wentry Blanchard and Allie McPherson Blanchard, March 22, 1911, of Mehane, N. C. Oothers have been accepted but not received yet.

Donations:

Mrs. J. H. Myatt, Raleigh, N. C., 9 yds. dress goods, 6 boys waists, 2 pair pants, 2 neckties. Chas. W. Preddy & Co., Norfolk, Va. 1 ton agricultural lime. This will help make our peanuts for next winter. It was very kind in said firm to donate us a full ton and we herewith publicly tender our appreciation.

Bedford Brown says "ploughing is no easy work"—his first half day. William Brown and Everton Morris have been using the 64 Chatanooga 2 horse and they say "it takes a man to handle them all day"—meaning the plows! George Haithcock was out burning some "old field" the other day and it got rather hot for a rabbit and we had a fine chase across some ploughed land—the rabbit won by short space.

The large girls are complaining about examinations—the boys don't say much, but the reports tell.

Give us many letters next week.

Fondly yours,

Uncle Jim.

"Little Workers" indeed you must be "busy bees" children for this is a nice amount you send. Thank you very much.

A DIPLOMATIST.

As Mr. Compton looked down at his waistcoat he discovered that it lacked a button. "And I asked my wife to sew it on more firmly, last night," he said to his commuter neighbor in the train, "I don't see how she forgot it."

"Don't ever ask her to mend anything," said his friend. "I learned a better way before I'd been married a year. When I want anything mended, say a shirt, for instance, I take it under my arm, all mussed up, and open the closet door, and sing out to my wife, 'Where's the rag-bag Peggy?'"

"What do you want of the rag-bag?" she'll ask me.

"Oh, I thought I'd throw this away," I tell her, and squeeze it a little tighter under my arm.

"Let me see what you have there," she'll say, and I'll mutter something about "worn-out old thing!" while I hand it over to her.

"Why, James Holland!" she'll say, when she's spread it out and looked it over in a hurry. "I am surprised at you! This is perfectly good. It doesn't need a single thing except—" And then and there she sits down to mend it, looking as if I'd made her a present.—Ex.

—One of the strange omissions of the recent Legislature of this State was the failure to enact the Torrens land system. The papers are saying that the lawyers prevented the measure, as they get many fees that would not go their way if the Torrens system of land titles was enacted. We dislike to assign such a low and commercial notion to so high a profession, and yet, despite the demand throughout the State for the Torrens system, it failed of enactment by the Legislature. But reforms move forward and progress never goes backwards. So we may put it down that the present system of land titles will one day be abolished, and the Torrens, or some other good system adopted.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT OUR NORTHERN AND WESTERN BRETHREN.

By W. E. McClenny.

II. Missions.

As in the South the first missionaries in the North and West were the early ministers who traveled and preached for the joy of it, and in order that they might preach a free gospel to a dying world. Rev. Joseph Thomas traveled and preached in North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York. Rev. Rice Haggard traveled from Ohio to Alabama, from the Atlantic Ocean to the western part of Ohio. Rev. David Purviance traveled and preached in Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee and Ohio, while his family made a livelihood on the farm.

As early as 1817 these preaching places began to organize churches. In 1828 camp meetings were being held by the Christians in the West and Rev. Isaac N. Walter was following close on these and organizing churches. At first there were no settled pastors, but the churches were administered to by the traveling preachers. In 1843 Rev. Isaac N. Walter says in The Herald of Gospel Liberty: "The Christian Church has extended itself with great rapidity over all parts of the country and is multiplying by thousands every year, but there is room for improvement in our policy in many places."

In a few years after these isolated churches were organized they began to group themselves into something like circuits, and later these circuits became conferences. From these beginnings the organizations followed close on the trail of the settled parts of the West, and by so doing we now have some churches in almost all the Western States.

III. Education.

Prior to 1830 there had been some talk of a school for the Christians in Massachusetts, but it did not materialize. In 1839 the New York Central Conference decided to establish an academy on free and liberal principles. This was located at Starkey, New York. Buildings were erected and the school was opened in November 1842 with Rev. Charles Morgridge as principal. Under his and other leaderships it went on with varied success until 1847 when Professor Edmund Chadwick was secured as principal. He brought new life to the school and it continued to prosper till the Civil War. It rallied after the War, and prospered till 1885, when it began to languish under other leaderships. In 1896 it was rebuilt in a more suitable place being materially assisted by Hon. F. A. Palmer.

In 1840 or a little before a vigorous movement was made to establish an academy in New Hampshire. With the influence of all the leading men and ministers in New England at its back the movement resulted in the establishment of an academy in Durham, New Hampshire. Rev. O. B. Cheney afterwards the honored president of Bates College, Lewiston, Maine was at one time principal. This had its bright and dark times, and was moved to several places, and finally passed out of the hands of the Christians.

In 1850 the American Convention brought forth a college—Antioch, at Yellow Springs, Ohio, with Horace Mann as the first president. He was a man of international, if not of world-wide renown as an educator. This opened its doors with equal privileges to both sexes. It was well attended and enthusiastic, but as the plans did not materialize, it finally passed out of the hands of the Christians. In 1852 a Theological department was added to Antioch College.

In 1858 the Indiana Conference decided to build a college in Indiana. Professor E. W. Humphreys had been teaching a private school at Merom, Indiana, and it was decided to raise this to the rank of a college. New buildings were erected on the banks of Wabash, and an endowment was provided, and the college was named Merom. Rev. Nicholas Summerbell and Dr. Thomas Holmes were among the first presidents.

The American Christian Convention of 1866 at Marshall, Michigan decided on the establishment of a theological school for the whole denomination, and a board of trustees was appointed to raise the money, found and control it. It was to be located in New York state. The charter was obtained in April 1868. Rev. Austin Craig was elected president, and the school was opened in the fall of 1868 in rooms of Starkey Seminary, Eddytown, New York. At first instruction was given by the president by means of lectures. Soon another teacher was added to give instruction in New Testament Greek, and in English. In 1872 the institute was moved to Stanfordville, New York, and in 1907 it was again removed to Defiance, Ohio.

In Ohio and northern Indiana Defiance College was established. At first it was a female seminary. Later both sexes were admitted. In the nineties it prospered under Dr. Litchlaw's administration. It is located at Defiance, Ohio, new buildings have been erected, and Rev. P. W. McReynolds is its president. Mr. Throwbridge gave $10,000.00 for a hall which has been named for him and Mr. Andrew Carnegie has given $50,000.00. In 1907 the Christian Biblical Institute was removed from Stanfordville, New York, to this place.

In the far west we find Palmer College in the central part of Iowa. This began from an academy, chiefly by the endorsement and support of the Iowa Christian Conferences. Rev. D. M. McFenster did much to give character to this institution, he being president from 1890 to 1899. Hon. Francis A. Lerner bequeathed $30,000.00 and the people raised $20,000.00, to make an endowment of $50,000.00.

In the Southwest the Christians have Weaubleau Christian College, Weaubleau, Lickory County, Missouri. This is a local enterprise. At first it was an academy in a building erected by a local church with rooms for the school in the first church above. It was chartered in 1869, and opened in 1871. Rev. John Whitaker was both pastor and principal. It was rechartered as a college in 1891 and new buildings erected.

In 1882 Kansas Christian College, Lincoln, Kansas, was established by the Kansas Christian Conference with Rev. Thomas Bartlette as principal. It later arose to the rank of a college. President Bartlette was at its head for eight years and did much for the institution.

In 1909 Jireh College, Jireh, Wyoming, was chartered with Rev. Mr. Flommer as president.

—The New York Legislature may be daft on many things, but keeps its head in one particular. For the third consecutive time it has refused to legalize Sunday base-ball. The Evening Chronicle, Charlotte, thinks it "would be just as proper to open the race track on Sunday, as the ball grounds." And therein we agree with The Chronicle.

—The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis urges that the churches throughout the United States use Sunday April 30th as Tuberculosis Day, and that the subject of prevention of tuberculosis be discussed in all churches. The Association has prepared an outline for a tuberculosis lecture or sermon especially adapted for clergymen who will speak on Tuberculosis Day, and also other literature which will be sent to any clergyman applying for it at the office of the National Association, 105 East 22nd street, New York City, or at the headquarters of any state or local association in the United States.

Prof. L. H. Bailey of Cornell, in an article on "The Size of an Acre" in the Spring Number of The Youth's Companion, says that "the size of an acre varies directly with the size of the man who manages it"—the largest acre being that which little by little by little grows more and more productive.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Winchester Letter.

With the opening of spring we are looking for brighter things for our Winchester work. We have had very few Sundays of fair weather this year. March the 5th was our record breaking day for attendance, there being 48 at church and 61 at Sunday School. Our Sunday School enrollment is now 85 with a good average attendance. The work on the building which has been delayed by the rough weather will be resumed next week. The Ladies' Aid Society has finished paying for the organ and has some funds on hand toward furnishing the church.

We are thankful for all these contributions. As we begin work again we shall need money. Many have decided to help us during the construction of the building. If you can conveniently do so we should be glad to have that help now. We are anxious to secure the remainder of the One Thousand Dollar contributions; may we not count on you for one of them?

Columbus, Ga., Letter.

The series of protracted meeting at the Girard church came to a close last Sunday night. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Milam, did most of the preaching, the writer being in charge three nights during the week. The services were not very largely attended, but the interest was good and we can't feel that the efforts put forth are lost. Doubtless seed were sown that shall produce good fruit in a day to come.

Our North Highland people have recently experienced some very gracious meetings. The church seems more spiritually awake than for some time. The cottage prayer-meetings mentioned a few weeks ago are having a telling effect. At a cottage meeting held one night recently, several were converted and three of this number joined the church the following night.

Last Sunday was a day of blessing with us at the Rose Hill church. The attendance was a little above the average and two good services were held. The interest seems to grow gradually with the passing of the weeks.

It was the writer's privilege to spend three days of this week in the city of Atlanta, attending the Bible Conference that is being conducted under the auspices of the Baptist Tabernacle, Dr. Len G. Broughton, pastor. To say the least, this is a great meeting and is bound to be productive of great good. The conference is being largely attended not only by the people of Atlanta and of Georgia, but visitors from other states are there in large number. And well may people from a distance go to hear such men as Dr. Camden M. Coburn, of Alleghany College, Pa.; Dr. H. C. Mabie, of Boston, Mass; Dr. Joseph W. Kemp, of Edinburg, Scotland; Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, England. This writer was strongly impressed by the addresses of all these noted speakers, but more profoundly impressed with Dr. Morgan than any other. He is considered by the scholars of today as being possibly the greatest exegetical preacher living and, in the judgment of many, without a peer as an expositor of the Word. Characterized by simplicity of style, earnestness of manner, depth of thought and loftiness of conception, Dr. Morgan is possessed with a personal magnetism that is irresistible. To hear him once means the creation of a desire to hear him again.

But the addresses and sermons, powerful and convincing as they were, tell only a part of the story of that great conference. To see Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Disciples, and Christians all gathered in one body to listen to the simple story of the Bible and forgetting, at least for the time being, that there is such a thing as denominational differences, is an inspiration not to be forgotten. To hear an audience 3000 strong, with representatives from the different churches and from the walks of life, lift their voices to God in sacred song, leads one's feet nearer the narrow way and throws one's eyes towards the city of God. And to hear that gospel singer, Mr. Chas. U. Butler, when music rolls from his heart and falls upon the ears of his hearers as rain upon thirsty ground. Well, words fail to give expression to the experience of the heart. When Chas. Butler sings, people think on heavenly things.

Holy Neck.

Dear Sun:—Had a good day at Holy Neck yesterday. Raised $278.50, balance in full of Holy Neck's debt on the parsonage. Counting interest and incidentals this makes about $1400 this church has raised for the parsonage within little over four years. The mission collection in the afternoon was $10.74. Next mission day will be third Sunday in June and a program will be rendered by the children.

DIED.

Estep.

Mr. Raphael Estep died at his home, Faton, Indiana, after a long and painful illness. The remains were brought to New Market, Virginia, his old home, and laid to rest in the cemetery adjoining St. Matthew Lutheran church from which the funeral was held by the writer assisted by the pastor, Dr. E. A. Repass. Mr. Eestep, whose former home was in the Valley, was the son of Jackson Estep. He was married three times and is survived by his last wife, four sons and four daughters and also by three brothers and four sisters.

The deceased was a Confederate soldier, belonging to Rice's battery. He lost an eye in the battle of Manasses.

He had been a member of Wood's Chapel for about six years. He trusted in the Lord, who never fails in time of trouble, and looking forward to the end expressed his willingness to go. It was thus he fell asleep at the age of 68 years, 4 months, and 28 days.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

Huffman.

Sister Mariah Huffman was born May 5, 1837, and came to the end of her earthly pilgrimage March 4th, 1911. Two sons, J. C. and J. H. Huffman; three daughters, Mrs. Julia A. Dove, Mrs. Susie Salyards and Mrs. Margaret Higgs mourn their mother's departure. Her husband and three children had gone on before.

Sister Huffman had been a member of the Christian Church for 29 years, but had been an invalid for 35 years, and had not been able to attend the services of her church. She was a great sufferer, but her Master took her from sufferings. On March 6th, in the presence of a large number of friends, funeral services were conducted from Concord church.

May our loving Father comfort the sorrowing ones.

MUCH IN LITTLE.

In the Cathedral of Lubeck, Germany, is the following inscription:

“Thus speaketh Christ, our Lord to us:
Ye call me Master, and obey me not;
Ye call me Light, and seek me not;
Ye call me Way, and walk me not;
Ye call me Life, and desire me not;
Ye call me Wise, and follow me not;
Ye call me Fair, and love me not;
Ye call me Rich, and ask me not;
Ye call me Eternal, and seeks me not;
Ye call me Gracious, and trust me not;
Ye call me Noble, and servie me not;
Ye call me Mighty, and honor me not;
Ye call me Just, and fear me not;
If I condemn you, blame me not.

THE WAIL OF THE PESSIMIST.

A pessimist is one who looks on the dark side of things. He thinks everything tends to evil. This is the philosophy of despair. There were many such philosophers in the time of David. The psalmist says, “There be many that say, Who will shew us any good?”

Things which are good are often overlooked, discarded and despised by those whose understanding is always darkened, and the understanding is always darkened when God is excluded. Paul tells us that the power of the finest discernment is love. It is not intelligence, nor culture, nor education. These have their office and work, and a noble office it is. But it is not the brightest genius, nor the strongest intellect, nor the best disciplined mind that sees most clearly the deep things in life. Love is equipped with that delicate instinct which feels its way to the heart of things. Nothing like love can discern between the evil and the good. The finer our love the richer its revelations. If our love were perfect we should easily discern superior beauty and splendor in things which appear repulsive to those whose love is shallow and selfish.

God is Love. Open the door to Him, and the understanding shall be illuminated from above. Then shalt thou see and appreciate the best things. No one can see the good that is everywhere so long as he is out of tune with the good. So long as one has an eye and a heart for the bad he will see the bad. No Christian is a pessimist. No one who is consciously walking with God shall ever ask in despair, “Who will show us any good?”—

CHRISTIANITY IN BUSINESS LIFE.

Men are asking everywhere this question: “Is it possible for a man to be engaged in the activities of our modern life, and yet be a Christian? Is it possible for a man to be a broker, a shop-keeper, a mechanic—is it possible for a man to be in a business of today and love his God and his fellowman as himself?” I do not know what transformations these dear businesses of yours must undergo before they shall be true and ideal homes for the child of God, but I do know that upon Christian merchants and Christian brokers and Christian lawyers and Christian men in business today there rests an awful responsibility to prove—if you can prove it—that these things are capable of being made divine; to prove that a man can do the work which you have been doing this morning, and will do this afternoon, and yet shall love his God and his fellow-man as himself. If he cannot, what business have you to be doing them so poorly, carnally and unspiritually that men look on them and shake their heads with doubt? It belongs to Christ in men, first, to prove that man may be a Christian and do business; and, in the second place, to show how a man, as he becomes a greater Christian, shall purify and lift the business which he does and make it the worthy occupation of the son of God.—Bishop Phillips Brooks.

MISSING THE FLAWS.

A large part of our own failures in life comes from seeing flaws and failures in others that we do not need to see at all. The keen-sighted pessimist does a great deal more harm than even the easily fooled, often mistaken optimist. For the man who looks for flaws in other people's lives usually leaves those flaws worse than when he found them by the notice and attention that he gives to them; and this leaves him worse off himself. The man who lives so much in the sunshine that he won't see other people's flaws helps those flaws to die and gathers new sunshine and strength in so doing.

“Don't look for flaws as you go through life,

And even when you find them,

'Tis wise and kind to be somewhat blind, and

Look for the virtues behind them.”

Virtue-hunting means virtue-finding; and the right things that we hunt for most eagerly we add constantly to ourselves. But the best part of this getting is that it is all in the interest of others.—S. S. Times.

WRITE A LETTER TO MOTHER.

If every man and woman in America who is separated from an aged mother would sit down and write her a long, intimate letter tonight, what joy there would be when the postmen delivered those missives!

It is so easy for busy, tired men and women to forget the anxiety with which venerable parents await delayed messages from their children.

Wanderers over the face of the earth often fail to recognize the pain they cause a loving mother by failure to write her a cheerful letter.

No cruelty is greater than that of the boy who fails to write his mother a weekly letter.

Newspaper officers, police headquarters and city officials are showered with heart-breaking enquiries from mothers who seek information about their absent sons.

They invariably say: “He is a good boy.”

Pathetic excuses are offered for his failure to write.

The mother says he must be ill, or possibly may have been killed.

Sitting in her lonely home, the aged parent hopelessly turns to strangers for news of the son, who should have kept her fully advised of his movements.

The best Valentine any man can entrust to Uncle Sam is a long letter to his mother, telling of his successes and his failures, his hopes and fears, and, above all, reassuring her of his love and affection.

She doesn't care for a fancy card. Cupid and all his endearments have become a part of her life, and are embodied in the children she has loved, nurtured and sent prayerfully into life's battle.

Write mother a letter. Put your heart into it. Tell her your innermost secrets. Encourage all your friends to do likewise, and you will carry sunshine into lives which are moving swiftly toward the shadows cast by the setting sun.—Nashville Tennessean.

HEAVENLY HELP.

("For he shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways." Ps. 91: 11. Golden Text for Sunday, April 9).

Elisha, the prophet, was a busy man, interested and engaged in the concerns and affairs of his day. He was no recluse. He knew what was going on about him, and gave heed to what was happening. The king of Syria thought there were spies in his own ranks. Every scheme he laid, every plan he purposed, became known to the enemy, and he was foiled. But the king was mistaken. In stead of an enemy in camp, there was a very active, busy man with the enemy. Very often the ways of sin are foiled, not because an enemy within betrays, but because the people of God without get busy. One does not have to live within the folds of sin in order to find out and to foil the purposes and plans of sin. One need not associate with sinners in order to save sinners.

Elisha was not idling about waiting for the angels. He was active in good work and so the angels came. The Lord gives his angels charge not of the indolent and inactive, but the brave and energetic. Elisha was busy ever helping others; and so angels came to help him—in his time of need.

Here is the secret of every great life—the possibility and the power in it of things, forces, factors not seen. "He lived as one who saw the Invisible," may be read in the history of every life that counts. When we rise above the world of facts and lay hold on the world of faith, then possibility and power and possession come. Things seen are temporal, and soon pass. The invisible are the realities that do not pass. Elisha took into account things not seen; his servant and the Syrians did not. I find this sentiment in an exchange, and it is worth while: "It is extremely hard to realize that the things you can see are never all the important things to consider in any situation. The very essence of religion is that it teaches a man to take account of what he cannot see. The city is indeed surrounded by robust and capable soldiers in full military array, but behind them are the hosts of God. The world is indeed full of entrenched evils. They are conspicuously visible. They obtrude themselves on our gaze. They surround us. But there are other facts. God is stronger than all these evil forces, and the influence of God is silently and potently working everywhere. The mountains of life are always full of the hosts of God.

There are many senses in which the invisible facts are often important ones. You do not have to be able to see a fact in order that it may be influential. You do not have to be able to touch a fact in order that it be strong. Even among people we meet the invisible spirit of the life is more important than the size and the looks of the man. The invisible qualities of the mind are far more significant than the length of arms. Emotions are more significant than muscles. Ideas are more significant than things. Purposes are more significant than bodies. The things you cannot see are things of destiny. The hour of a genuine enfranchisement has come when our eyes are opened to the significance of the invisible.

SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

In this age of haste and hustle, work and worry, it is not an easy task to give sufficient time and attention to the "quiet hour", and the calmer, gentler, sweeter effects and influences. "Take time to be holy," is an injunction much easier offered than accepted. To steal awhile away, each day, each week, any day or any week, to meditate on the purer, holier, better things, that is more easily spoken of than done by most of us.

And yet that very thing is needful in our day and time. It was ever needful, but never more so than now. The hour for the spiritually-minded man has struck. For in all ages the spiritually-minded have ever been, are yet, the very stay, source and fountain of the life about us. The spiritually-minded, their work, walk, godly example, saving influence keep alive the interests, institutions and enterprises that are worth while. We shall never in all this wide world get away from, nor go beyond, nor do away with Paul's immortal affirmation, "To be carnally-minded is death; but to be spiritually-minded is life and peace." The carnal mind broadcasts death in all directions. The spiritual mind is a constant source and stream of life to all that is about and around. From the spiritually-minded emanates life.

Our time invites us to physical education and discernment. The present provokes to mental training, indulgence and development. But there is a spiritual mind as well that must be cared for, educated, trained, developed—a spiritual sensitiveness if you will which may be developed to a marked degree. Out of this spiritual growth and maturity flow the issues and events of real life. Moses meditated forty years before he moved out into the world of activity. Unless he had we had never known his great deeds, his marvelous and matchless achievements.

PAYING HIS DEBTS.

Dr. D. K. Pearson, the well known philanthropist of Chicago who, if we mistake not, has confined his beneficences mostly to the small colleges and struggling institutions, proposes to celebrate his ninety-first birth-day April 14 in a happy and wholesome manner. It appears that the good Doctor had gone into debt some time ago to the extent of $5,000,000. This he has been laboring manfully to pay off, as his obligations became due. He has succeeded, with the exception of $300,000, one third of which he owes to the American Board of Foreign Missions and the other $200,000 to several smaller colleges. On the 14th inst. he hopes to pay off these obligations. "A young man of my age" so says the octogenarian "has no business being in debt, I think, and so I shall lie down on the night of April 14 out of debt for the first time in many years. I have had these outstanding pledges for many years and have worked them off one after another."

Herewith our heartiest congratulations are sent forth to Dr. Pearson, ninety-one years young and busy giving.

Here is one object lesson, if one cares to learn it. Not infrequently good people refuse to give to a really worthy cause and call because they are in debt. Sometimes this debt is for property—lands, houses, stocks, bonds—on hand and of more real value than so many dollars. Yet the owner will cut down his gifts to church and charity, and deny himself the joy of giving "because he is in debt."

Such persons want the blessings of health, happiness, hope, as they work to pay their debts, but stint themselves and the cause of truth, hope and happiness, by refusing their gifts to the advancement of God's kingdom. —

CHURCHLESS PASTORS.

The Episcopal Recorder congratulates the Presbyterians, North, on their growth and great holdings and comments "A church that has ten thousand churches in the United States is a great factor in the life of the nation. We are, therefore, surprised to learn that there are two thousand one hundred churches without pastors. This state of affairs is really serious. What is the cause?" We learn from the Presbyterian Standard that another has been investigating the records and finds there are one thousand and seven hundred idle preachers who would like to have pastobates. This adds to the serious news. How explain this number of churchless pastors as well as pastorless churches." This indeed is a complication. We fear that the fault is mostly with the preachers. Where preachers have a message, God given and heaven sent they some how manage to find a church in which to deliver it.

A LIVE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

It is a joy to even witness, much less be a part of, a live, vigorous Sunday-school. The writer was at the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, on a recent Sunday, and there was activity in the air. In his Young People's Department of The Sun some time ago, Prof. Harper referred to an instance of two boys who wearying of a Sunday-school and church, went into theft and robbery. Asked why they had made such a radical change the recreants replied "In robbery there was something doing, in the Sunday-school there was not." There is something doing in the Norfolk Memorial Temple Sunday-school. There is life, movement, activity. Everything is wide awake—and moving. From the time the gong rings for order till the dismissal is pronounced there is something going on. The Sunday-school is a regular bee-hive of energy and activity. Bro. J. J. Pitt, a young, handsome, happy, busy man is the superintendent, and he is wide awake from the word go. The school is organized throughout, and the classification seems to be thorough and complete. The Sunday-school is growing all the time of course. Such a school always grows. People just naturally love to go to a school like that. The teachers were busy, and deeply interested in their work. They were interested in their pupils and in the lesson. Each teacher was trying to make the most of the opportunity for teaching the Word of truth, and for imparting knowledge of the right sort.

Such a school tells in the life of any community: tells wonderfully in the life and labors of the church. We shall be surprised indeed if Pastor Howsare does not feel forcibly the great work for his church that Superintendent Pitt and his efficient teachers and helpers are doing. Such a Sunday-school is a blessing and counts for time and for eternity.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Honoring The Gospel.—Dr. John Henry Jowett in leaving England to come to New York to begin a pastorate has been greatly honored. The magistrates (civil officials) of Birmingham, where Dr. Jowett ministered, united in petitioning him to remain—a most unprecedented thing. This failing the King and Queen invited him to their table at Windsor Castle, honoring him as they might some high official of the government. Dr. Jowett's only claim to greatness and distinction is that which a writer has so truly said of him that his preaching is not that of platform oratory, but as the "demonstration of the Spirit and of power." We are told by those who have heard him that one feels a spiritual power in his presence, and that his preaching is plain, practical, pointed, and intensely spiritual.

In honoring Dr. Jowett, the King and Queen and people of England are paying tribute to the weight and the worth of spiritual power in the pulpit.

One Hundred Years: One hundred years ago today, April 5, Robert Raikes, the father and founder of the modern Sunday school died. Thing of the great work this man set on foot. It is claimed that there are 28,000,000 officers, teachers and pupils in all Sunday schools in the world. What an army indeed! And this work has come to be so great a part of our present civilization and moral and spiritual progress. President Taft recently said, "No matter what views are taken of general education, we all agree—Protestant, Catholic, and Jew alike—that Sunday school education is absolutely necessary to secure moral uplift and religious spirit." No one can tell what any one life reaching out over a hundred years may bring forth, especially if that life is consecrated to the service of God and the betterment of mankind, as was that of Robert Raikes.

—The latest order of the Gideons, says an exchange, is for one hundred thousand Bibles, and they will not stop till a Bible is in every bed room in every hotel in the land. The Gideons is an organization of traveling men whose purpose is to see to it that hotels are supplied with Bibles.

Raleigh's Object Lesson.—The good old town of Raleigh taught us a lesson or two last week. The outcome is beautiful to look upon, and the lesson given is worth learning. Here was the outcome. In a campaign of a week has decided to raise $65,000 for a Y. M. C. A. building. When the week was done there had been raised $75,450. That is the consummation beautiful to look upon. Now the lesson.

When Raleigh gets awakened on any political movement whatever there is certain to be strife, division, the opening up of old wounds, and the making of new ones. In working for this religious enterprise, there was no hard-feeling, no division, no bickering. Politics divide people: religion unites them. And Raleigh never worked harder in a political campaign than it worked in this religious campaign.

And another. Very few thought so great a work could be done. Raleigh was too conservative, too close, too overworked already. Such reckoning was vain. Raleigh has surprised itself. It undertook great things for Right and so easily accomplished great things in the Right. The enthusiasm became so great that other peoples and places fell in line and sent contributions. Our capital city has certainly done itself proud. Three cheers for Raleigh!

Unenforced Law.—The esteemed Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, is such a friend of the saloon that it takes a fall out of all that points toward prohibiting drink any and every where. In a recent issue with nothing nearer home to point a moral (?) it calls attention to the fact that the Illinois Legislature has enacted a law forbidding the drinking of liquor on railway trains. Virginia's statute-books have contained a similar prohibition for something like three years now, but he must be an inobservant traveler indeed who has not observed that the law is much more honored in the breach than in the observance." The same old saloon argument in the same old way. Because a law is doomed to be broken, ergo, do not enact it. Because a law is not observed, do not blame the executives of the law; blame the law. Our contemporary's reasoning is Solomonian indeed. Followed, however, there would be no law. Law has been well defined as the organized virtue of the community. That the virtue of any community does not prohibit all the vice of the community in no wise argues against registering its will in law.

After Dreary Years.—A prisoner in the State penitentiary of Pennsylvania was released on March 18 after serving twenty years of a life sentence, being convicted of murder. It has been discovered that at the time of the murder the prisoner was half mile distant from where the crime was committed. Twenty years at hard labor, for a crime that was never committed. Twenty years under the shame and disgrace of prison stripes and guards and guns. Twenty years without social, educational, domestic privileges or advantages. Twenty years without liberty. Twenty years of a living, lingering death! What a comment upon man's weakness and frailty in making and in executing law. Surely there are many injustices, inequalities, injuries and in suits in this world that will not be straightened out or evened up.

But God's laws are perfect. And when one stands before the great Judgment each one of us shall receive justice, infinite justice tempered with boundless mercy. No injustice will escape His all-seeing eye.

ARE WE GROWING?

A careful examination of the last Annual of our Southern Conferences and Convention will reveal interesting figures and conditions. In some respects it is the most attractive Annual we have yet issued. In the Ga. and Ala. Conferences there was not only not any given mode numerically, but an actual loss. The Va. Central Valley Conference paid 1682.03 to pastors, raised for all purposes $3702.49, with church property worth $19,850.00 and with that equipment gained 31 members. The Eastern Va. Conference paid pastors $13,865.00, raised for all purposes $34,813.75, with property valued at $229,900, and a present membership of 6470, and with that investment and equipment gained 186 members.

The Eastern N. C. Conference paid their pastors $4533.37 and raised for all purposes $8,189.50, with property valued at $45,180, and with this equipment and outlay made a gain of 119 members. They have a present membership of 3690.

The Western N. C. Conference with a membership of 2624 paid their pastors $2,893.08, raised for all purposes $5,232.74, have church property valued at $30,830. With this equipment and investment they made a gain of 56 members.

The Ga. and Alabama Conference paid their pastors $———, raised for all purposes $2,453.36, with church property valued at $23,000.00 and a present membership of 1003 lost 13 in membership.

The N. C. and Va. Conference paid pastors $4,486.75, raised for all purposes $8,305.07, with church property valued at $67,200.00 and a present membership of 3511, made a gain in membership of 106.

The Alabama Conference does not show the amount paid pastors. They raised for all purposes $813.34, have a church membership of 1302 and property valued at $11,700.00. The Annual of 1909 gives them a membership of 1324 which indicates a loss for past two years of 22 in membership.

In seven Conferences of 205 churches there is a membership of 20,399 and church property valued at $427,660.00, with a ministry paid $29,184.24. These churches raised and expended for all purposes last year $63,510.25 with result to church membership an increase of about 544 members. We may be, and unquestionably are setting in motion influences and creating conditions, the fruit and blessings of which cannot now be seen nor estimated, but so far as making church members directly and at once is concerned we are doing but little, for the means and agencies used. Perhaps the trouble is, if there be such, and there evidently is, that we have failed to depend upon and emphasize enough, to one essential Agent, the Holy Spirit, in our work. At any rate here is in these official figures cause for reflection. I am writing from the optimistic view point as much as possible and taking facts as we find them. While we have not done our best in raising funds yet we have done well, but piled up millions and even an active ministry and membership cannot of themselves bring to pass the great object of the church. Life must precede service, and this church equipment of machinery, men and money, must be moved of the Holy Spirit before we shall see great numbers swept into the kingdom.

We have improved our equipment and machinery and have a more efficient and better ministry and have indeed made progress along many lines but our numerical growth as a people is not commensurate with our equipment and investment of men and money. Where is the answer to the problem? Organization backed by faithful executive ability may bring into line great numbers but cannot renew and save them as those "added to the church" and "such as shall be saved."

TWO PREACHERS.

In your very interesting "Current Comment" of March 15th, which by the way I hope you will make a permanent feature of the "Sun," you mention two English preachers, Dr. Jowett, and Dr. Aked. The former you describe as "one of the most pious and spiritually minded men." The latter as "lacking in humility, in loyalty and spirituality."

The question arises in my mind, why Dr. Jowett is such an angel of light, and why Dr. Aked so fine a representative of the Prince of Darkness. Is it because Dr. Jowett is a conservative and Dr. Aked a radical, and are all conservatives "pious," and are all radicals "men" of brain and of wonderful energy and learning?" Surely this is an easy classification of ecclesiastics.

But, Mr. Editor, there is one trouble with this comprehensive theory accepted by so many good folk, especially the theological preachers, and that is, that life contradicts it. Men can be liberals who are not brainy, and men can be conservatives, who are not "pious." Indeed I hazard the opinion that radicals can be "pious," and that conservatives can be "brainy." And all I ask you to do, is to take off your "specs" and look at things as they are. The dogs will be found eating the crumbs from the children's table and a widow in a heathen land giving the hospitality of her home to Elijah.

Divine Providence is continually confounding the wise, breaking conservative orthodoxy as well as liberalism into pieces, and bringing the Messiah not from holy Jerusalem, but from despised Nazareth.

Dr. Aked may look at the Kingdom of God from the socialistic standpoint and he can find precedent in the New Testament, Dr. Jowett from the individualistic standpoint, and he too can find precedent in the New Testament. Is the type of either not needed to day in the harvest field of the world? As a prominent writer has recently said, "Life overflows all formulae; breaks through all theory; goes beyond all knowledge."

Brethren, let us believe in a living God, whose Word is in our hearts, who reveals his will to day, whose message is not only old, but new.

Then we may hear the music of both schools of thought, see the good in all religions wherever religion is manifested, and join in the Hallelujah chorus of all peoples, and tribes and nations.

DECISION DAY DEPARTMENT.

Some effort was put forth last year to get the ministers, superintendents, and S. S. teachers interested in Decision Day, but very little was done. We are writing again to Christian Sun readers, and shall ask that all Sunday-school workers read with care what we have to say concerning Decision Day. This work among our people is new and many do not understand what it means to have a day set apart as a Decision Day. When a boy or girl decides to accept Christ, that is not regeneration, as some seem to suppose, because decision is one thing and regeneration another. But when a person has taken the first step, decision, it is, or should be, the business of all church workers, to see that that person gets into the experience of regeneration, or the new birth.

To illustrate what we mean by Decision Day: Here is a young man on the farm, or in some other business, and a college president learns of this young man, and goes out to see him about entering college. The young man may not have any idea of going to college, but after the president explains to him the advantages of an education the young man begins to think about going to College. In a short time he wants to go, then he decides to go, and some time afterwards he goes. But to want to go, and to decide to go are two things, and to go is the third. Now what we mean about Decision Day in our Sunday-school is, we want the ministers, Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to keep talking to the Sunday-school scholars about being a Christian till the boy or girl begins to think and pray; and when this particular Day comes they are ready to decide for Christ, and when that is done and has been made known the minister, superintendent and teacher should see that the persons who have decided for Christ should come into the church as a member in good standing. Money has been expended for booklets and leaflets on the subject of Decision Day, and they will be sent to the officers of the Sunday-school to assist them in this work. Many times such information as is found in these booklets is thrown into the waste basket. But say, brother, sister, don't destroy them. It costs money and time to get them to you. Read all you can get on the subject and pray that God may lead you to assist in this important work.

We shall ask that every Sunday-school in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference observe this part of the Sunday-school work and set apart a day best suited to the school for Decision Day, and see how many can be gotten to decide for Christ.—C. AID FOR THE TEMPTED.

(Hebrews 2:14-18.)

This a lesson of real comfort for Christians. It contains beautiful thoughts and beautiful promises for those who are seeking to live pure lives, and are pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The whole Christian life is a warfare with Satan. He is always seeking to deceive, and trying to induce every child of God to forsake his Father's kingdom and enlist in the bondage of sin.

Christ so loved us, that He left His home in heaven, took upon Himself the form of man, and came to earth; that through death He might destroy the works of Satan, and deliver us from the bondage of sin.

While Christ was in the world, He was in the flesh; and was subject to like passions and temptations as we are. If He had taken on Himself the nature of angels, and come to the world as an angel, He would not have been our great sympathizer; but He came in the flesh; that He might be our intercessor, and make reconciliation for our sins.

Christ taught us, by His example how to live above sin. His temptation in the wilderness was an example for us in temptation. Christ had fasted forty days and nights, and was physically weak when Satan presented three very great temptations to Him; yet He never yielded, but resisted Satan, and fought him with Scripture until he left Him. When Satan left Christ angels came and ministered unto Him. This was a test of Christ's power over Satan and sin.

When we are tempted let us go to Christ and ask Him for aid. He is our refuge and our deliverer. He is our ever present friend in time of trouble. He conquered both Satan and sin, and He is able to keep every one of His children in the darkest hour of trial and temptation. His grace is sufficient for us, and He is able to supply all our needs.

Let us endeavor to walk in the footsteps of our Savior. Let us put on the whole armor of the Lord, and commit ourselves unto Him. Then, we will not have to fight the temptation of life alone; but Christ will lead us and fight for us. He has promised never to forsake His people; but to go with them all the way, even unto the end of the world. What more do we need? All that we have to do is to follow Christ, and obey His commandments.

God's people are a tried people; and only those who are true unto the end, are going to be saved. Our temptations are only tests to try us and fit us for greater things. If we suffer with Christ, we shall also reign with Him in glory.

Let us watch and fight and pray, that we enter not into temptation. Let us be true unto the end, and by and by we shall receive our reward.

SENATOR LORIMER.

By a vote of 46 to 40 the Senate decided to let Mr. Lorimer of Illinois retain his seat in that august body. The matter occupied much time and occasioned many able addresses, pro and con. Many felt that Mr. Lorimer obtained his seat by direct or indirect bribery, and The Literary Digest in summing up the case finds that the great majority of the press of the country are against Mr. Lorimer. There were certainly very flagrant and very shameful proceedings in the Illinois Legislature in connection with the whether Mr. Lorimer was responsible or not. But, if no other good has come some noble sentiments have been expressed in connection with the case and these are worth all the cost. We take one of these expressions from Mr. Lorimer's home paper, so to speak, The Chicago Board Herald, as follows:

I'd like almighty well to have more money than my purse contains; I do my very best to save, but still they get my hard won gains; I walk to save a nickel when the winds of winter fiercely blow; I wear the hat and coat and vest that first I wore two years ago; I long for money: it is hard for me to keep my bark afloat, but no man has sufficient cash to buy my vote. I long to make my children glad, to give them much they are denied: if I had money all the things they want should quickly be supplied; it saddens me to hear them ask for what I can't afford to buy; they cannot understand and come to innocently ask me why; I see the patches they must wear and feel a lump come in my throat; but not a man is rich enough to buy my vote. The little home on which I've paid installments for a dozen years may never be my own; my breast is often filled with doubts and fears; I do not know how I shall raise the interest when it is due; there is a doctor's bill to pay; the dollars I have saved are few; my shoes are run down at the heels, I wear a threadbare overcoat but no man has sufficient cash to buy my vote.

A PLEA.

Dear Brother:—I am now arranging to burn the mortgage of Wesley Grove Christian Church (colored) which has cost us all told about twelve thousand dollars, lots, buildings, furnishings, and interest. We have struggled under this burden ten years, and have reduced the debt to fifteen hundred dollars, which we must raise the First Sunday in May, 1911, on which date our time for paying the debt expires, and to avoid trouble we have decided to pay the debt, burn the mortgage, and clear the property worth fifteen thousand dollar, including the old church property on Ivy Ave., of this city.

Not being able to do this alone, we have decided to write to a goodly number of pastors and friends over the Christian field, and ask for an after collection or a personal donation. Now dear friend, I hope this appeal may merit your most favorable consideration, and that you may take up an after collection and send me if you are a pastor, and if not a pastor please send me a personal donation. We are arranging a very large chart, and when the rally is over, we shall place on this chart the name of every church and its pastor who contributes to this very worthy cause, and any individual donation will also be placed on said chart. This chart will be preserved for generations unborn that they may see who helped in burning the mortgage of the Wesley Grove Christian Church, which name has come to be well known far and near for its labors. Any amount will be highly appreciated and used for the purpose given. Remember the Scripture which says, "Who stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard." Prov. 13: 21.

Yours very truly,

S. A. Howell.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The Young People's Convention, Prof. Smith, Pres., Norfolk, Va., meets at Elon College April 18-20. Has your C. E. Society, your Sunday School, your Organized Class elected a delegate?— If not, why not?

—Rev. S. B. Klapp, Greensboro, has been confined to his room for some time, but improves slowly. Prior to this Bro. Klapp had not missed an appointment on account of sickness for some years. Bro. Klapp is a busy man and enjoys his work.

—Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., deeply interested from the beginning in our Young People's Convention is planning to be present and lend a hand at the approaching meeting. All of our pastors are members and should be present.

—Rev. T. W. Strowd, Chapel Hill, was a welcome visitor at The Sun office Saturday of last week. Bro. Strowd has been in feeble health since Conference, but is improving now and Saturday was on his way to fill an engagement Sunday.

—Rev. P. H. Fleming and his Burlington people certainly know how to act the host to a great religious gathering. The State C. E. Convention in session with his church there last week was entertained in most hospitable and cordial style. Burlington's hospitality is unbounded.

—The Bethel congregation has remembered its beloved pastor, Rev. J. W. Holt, in right royal, and in most substantial fashion. Let the other preachers read Bro. Holt's letter of Thanks, and grow envious. As for us—but that is another story.

—Rev. J. L. Foster, Supt. was at Pleasant Grove, Halifax Co., Va., last Sunday in behalf of the Orphanage. He secured over sixty dollars in cash and pledges for his work. You may count on Pleasant Grove, one of our most active and aggressive country churches, to do its duty and prove its loyalty every time. It never considers doing otherwise.

—The funeral of Alexander Savage, son of Col. A. Savage, of Norfolk, was held at the grave in Elmwood Cemetery at 3:30 o'clock p. m. yesterday. The service was conducted by Rev. A. M. Hanson, of the Third Christian Church, Park Place. The floral designs were very handsome.

Following were the pall bearers: Frank Nash, J. S. Jenkins, Wm. W. Haigrove, Wm. M. Jones, N. A. Faltz, D.B. Ames, F. G. Parker and J. J. Drawerey.

—If our Durham people do not liquidate their church debt it will not be the fault of Pastor J. O. Cox. He has recently promised his congregation that if the church will raise $500.00 he will secure $500.00 without the Church, and he is laying his plans to do this. Bro. Cox is one of our most busy, self-sacrificing and successful pastors, and the people of Durham may well rally to the plans and purposes he undertakes.

—Prof. W. A. Harper has just rounded out a successful series of years as President of the North Carolina Christian Endeavor Union and because of multitudinous duties was compelled to decline reelection, at the recent State Convention, for another year. His administration has been eminently successful and he has served well and effectually the call of Endeavorers in the State. He has done a great work for Christian Endeavor in North Carolina.

—“One thing is stale in this country,” says Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, “and that is the making of money. One thing is not stale, and that is, the task of the lifter. All that is worth while in life is the spending of one's self for the good of others.” This is good doctrine, and sounds strangely like a twentieth century echo of the Sermon on the Mount.—Exchange.

—The Raleigh News and Observer recently did itself high credit and the people of the State a real service when it brought out a Legislative Edition, giving a summary of laws of any general nature or interest enacted by the recent legislature. The News and Observer is certainly a wide awake paper and knows how to do things. We value highly, and much appreciate, the Legislative Edition. It is worth putting away for future use and reference.

—In “Our Dumb Animals” (Boston) for April is a picture of the children of President O. B. Whitaker of Union Christian College, Merom, Indiana, with pony and wagon, “all of whom,” says the paper “have signed the Band of Mercy Pledge.” We wish that many children, and grown up people as well who read The Christian Sun would keep daily, even if they do not sign openly, that Band of Mercy Pledge. Here it is: “I will try to be kind to all living creatures and try to protect them from cruel usage.” The Band now reports 79,528 branches with probably 2,000,000 members.

—Rev. A. M. Hanson, Park Place, Norfolk, has a neat little card convenient to hand out, and easy to handle and to read. On one side are the words, “Glad to see you. You will always find a welcome at the Third Christian Church, Cor. 34th St. and Llewellyn Ave., Park Place.” On the other side are the announcements: “General Evening Theme. The Kind of a Church I Like to Attend, arranged as follows:

April 9th, The Kind of Choir I Like.

April 16th, Easter Services with special colored stereopticon views on the Life of Jesus.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

President Moffitt left on last Saturday for an extended trip to Eastern Virginia in the interest of the Special Fund. He is meeting with great encouragement and it is hoped that this trip will prove as successful as his former one.

Quite a number of the students and villagers attended the Christian Endeavor State Convention in Burlington, and report not only a good time but a very helpful and joyous experience in being allowed to listen to the masterly and powerful talks by those participating in the program.

Miss Mille Shaver Beard, a very accomplished pianist of the Peace Institute Faculty spent the week end with her cousin, Mrs. E. L. Moffitt.

The condition of our townsman, Mr. M. A. Reitzel, it is reported, does not improve very much. He has our deepest sympathy and our hopes for a speedy recovery.

Mr. W. W. Elder, who graduated last June, is spending a few days on the Hill. Mr. Elder is just beginning his work as Y. M. C. A. secretary and will very likely be located at Wilmington. He has our best wishes for his success in this his chosen line of work.

Miss Lovey Lee Jones, of Peace Institute Faculty is spending a few days at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. O. Atkinson.

Rev. C. E. Newman, of Henderson, N. C., came up to the college on last Saturday to see his brother Dr. J. U. Newman who is ill with grippe.

Quite an interest is being manifested here looking forward to the Inter-collegiate Oratorical contest between some fifteen or twenty high Schools of the State on Friday night before Easter. The preliminary contest will be held during the day, and the successful contestants in this preliminary will again contest during the evening. The judges for this contest have not yet been announced.

Dr. Newman was unable to fill his regular appointment in the college pulpit last Sunday on account of his continued sickness. The Sunday school was held an hour in advance of the regular time in order that those who cared could go to Burlington in time for the morning exercises at the Endeavor Convention.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I will write this letter in the interest of the special call by the Foreign Mission Board of the American Christian Convention for a special offering to complete the ten thousand dollars started at Troy, Ohio, last October.

I wrote two letters some time ago on this subject in which I requested all the Ministers in the Southern Christian Convention to take special offerings for Foreign Missions and send same from the local churches to the Treasurers of their respective Conferences; and that Conference Treasurers send the money to J. A. Mills, Treas., Raleigh, N. C., as provided for special collections by the Convention held in 1910 in Suffolk.

The Suffolk church took an offering of $100.00 and I know that some other ministers have taken offerings for this purpose. Rev. I. W. Johnson has taken special offerings in some of his churches.

If all of the ministers would take this offering it would bring in a goodly sum. Some have taken it and sent it direct to Dr. Bishop. This is good, but it would be better to send it through the authorized channel.

It is quite plain to all thinking Christians that we do not contribute as much as we should to Foreign Missions, and this is one good reason why we ought to take this special offering. It would help to educate our people for the pastor to explain the matter and thus put forth the subject before the congregation. I think the average pastor is conscious of ignorance on the subject of Foreign Missions and this must disclose to him the ignorance of the rank and file of the members. When one thinks of Japan, for example, he must have some adequate knowledge of the geography, race, civilization, and education of that nation. The bare mention of Foreign Mission fields opens up so many important questions that one can easily see self-improvement in the investigation necessary to a relaxation of obligation to this subject. The Christian, like a man in business, is no larger than the field of his efforts. The Christian that limits his efforts by the local church and its needs can never be more than a mediocre in the kingdom. By this same rule it appears that a local Church or a denomination that neglects Foreign Missions is doomed to narrowness and littleness. Unless the Christian Church takes hold of Foreign Missions with more unanimity and more liberality the growth of the denomination will be slow and limited. God never meant his church to be small and to stop at doing small things. "The field is the world." There is nothing small in the gospel or in the kingdom. The religion of the cross differs from other religions in this: they were national; it is worldwide. The Jew did not know that till Jesus came. The Jew excluded the Gentile from the temple of God; Jesus brought in all. The gospel would have every island and continent on its map, and embrace every race and nation in its membership. That enlarges the mind, the heart, the aspiration, the endeavor of the children of God. No church can follow Christ and be small; no church can neglect him and be large.

Dear pastors, Speak a word, give the congregations a chance to contribute to this fund; send it to your Conference Treasurer; then let it pass to Treasurer J. A. Mills, Raleigh, N. C., and then it will be sent to Dr. Bishop.

NORFOLK LETTER.

The Memorial Temple reports a good day yesterday. About 225 in Sunday School—the largest number for quite a long time. They report interesting services and good day.

Wednesday night at prayer meeting will be held another union baptismal service. The Temple, and Rev. J. W. Barrett of the 4th church participating.

Rev. A. M. Hanson gave two of the best sermons he has yet given the people of the 3rd Church yesterday. They were listened to by larger audiences than usual. Bro. Hanson and Rev. J. W. Harrell of Portsmouth will exchange prayermeeting next Wednesday night. This is in accordance with a plan recently adopted by the local ministers of the Christian churches.

The E. Va. Ministerial Association meets today in the study of the pastor of the Memorial Temple. I was glad to have as callers at my office Revs. Peel, Rountree and Rowland, a trio of preachers, who if they preach according to their size, their churches evidently enjoy some big preaching.

I enjoyed a pleasant call last Wednesday from Rev. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk. Bro. Johnson is one of our strong and active preachers. He was here in the capacity of the faithful pastor ministering and consoling our venerable good Bro. Savage, who while he is just on the verge of the grave had just lost his last son, who passed on just a few days at most ahead of his father. The funeral services of Mr. Savage were conducted by Rev. A. M. Hanson, of the Third Church.

—The hearing against coca cola in federal court at Chattanooga, Tenn., is still on. When confronted with the figures showing it would require the work of a doctor ten hours a day working 233 days to do that, he modified and said the examination required from 2 to 5 minutes to the child. After that one would like to know really how many children that doctor had examined.

Enough has been shown in the hearing, which ever way the verdict may be rendered, to prove the hurtful and dangerous effect of coca cola, and already the sales have greatly fallen off. People are entitled to know the nature of the stuff they drink, and the coca cola investigation is helping in that direction.

ONLY TEN DAYS OFF.

The second biennial session of the Young People's Convention is only ten days off. Letters and invitations have been sent to every pastor and every Sunday school and C. E. Society known to us calling for a list of delegates and appropriate representation.

We believe we are to have a great Convention.

Come and let's make it the turning point in the auxiliary organizations of our Church work.

YOU cannot afford to miss.

April 15-17, Elon College.

Come.

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT
 OF N. C. STATE C. E. UNION.

(Delivered at Burlington Christian Church, April 1).

Our Convention in High Point last April was termed by all who attended it as highly successful and the steps taken at that convention looking toward the future year were regarded as eminently hopeful and prophetic of great accomplishment for the year that is just closing. We found that we did not lack but twenty-five societies of having the 75 new societies organized to round out the standard set for us by "Atlantic City 1911." We thereupon resolved that we would put forth an extra effort to organize these 25 new societies during the year that is just closing, and also to induce at least 75 societies in the state doing work, but not affiliated with the Union, to affiliate with us. We also gave our approval to the project of a publication for the State Union, and entrusted the working out of this project to Rev. R. E. Steel of Spencer and Miss Bays of Charlotte.

What Has Been Done.

We did not regard the attainment of these ends as impossible for our Union and were hopeful that we might be able to report everything realized to the full extent, before this meeting, but we have learned in life that we should not call our hopes our facts, and it has turned out thus in this case. At the time of the High Point Convention the President of Elon College was very sick and soon after the convention was carried to the hospital and was unable, by reason of his continued illness, to enter upon his duties as President before September. During all of this time the work of his office devolved upon the President of the State C. E. Union, and he was unable to do the work that he had planned to do during the vacation season for the State work. Since September, the duties which he has had to perform in connection with Elon College have been much more onerous than usual, and the time has not been at his disposal to direct and prosecute the interest of the State C. E. work, as he had planned. Realizing that this would be so, and feeling that the good of the State Union demanded it, I, therefore, as President, called a meeting of the Business Board of the State Union in Greensboro, on the 7th day of June, and therewith tendered my resignation as President, assigning as the reason for this action the facts set forth above. The Business Board did not see fit to accept the resignation and insisted that the office be continued by me, even though I might not be able, with the time at my disposal, to accomplish the ideal set before us by the High Point Convention. With this understanding, though my judgment was against it, I agreed to continue as State President.

This explanation has not been made by way of an apology, but by way of explanation simply, and to encourage the Endeavorers of the state to believe that the failure to make progress as we had hoped is not due to any general dearth of interest in C. E. in the State, but to the simple fact that the necessary work to attain these ends has not been and could not be forthcoming. The opening for C. E. in North Carolina was never more hopeful nor has the society ever made more progress, nor met with such consideration as it now meets with at the hands of church-folk and the public generally, and all that is needed to make the work loom large and larger in the future, is the time and effort devoted to it by a capable official.

We have to report that nine new societies have been organized during the year. Four of these have been reported to the United Society in Boston, which leaves us twenty-one new societies yet to be reported before we shall have attained the full quota for "Atlantic City 1911." Of these twenty-one, five have already been organized but have not been reported. These five having been organized through the influence and instrumentality of our first Vice-President, Mr. William C. Rourke, of Wilmington. As State President I have been enabled to furnish C. E. items to the State papers from time to time, and weekly items to the Christian Sun, and the Methodist Protestant Herald. In addition to this, articles have been written for the Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Christian Endeavor World. The two pamphlets which were written and published last year on behalf of the union work, have been mailed to a number of addresses, and have it is hoped, been instrumental in helping forward the work in a small way. The names of these pamphlets are "How to Make C. E. Effective" and "Christian Endeavor—What it Stands For." A few of these pamphlets are yet on hand and can be had free of charge at the Literature Table. I have also been privileged to make several public addresses before Endeavor Societies, Unions, and Denominational Conferences, during the year, but have not been able to present the claims of the society in as many places nor on as many occasions as it would have been very profitable for them to have been presented.

Late in January the Business Board met in the city of Greensboro and outlined the program of this convention and decided to enlist the assistance of an expert in C. E. work from outside of our state, to make a ten day pre-convention campaign in the state in the general interest of the work, hoping that thereby the 16 societies still lacking to bring up our "Atlantic City 1911" quota would be forthcoming through a campaign of this kind. We were very fortunate in securing the services of the Rev. C. H. Hubble, D. D., Adrian, Mich., who is the General Secretary of the Young People's Movement of the Methodist Protestant Church in the United States, and also President of the Michigan State C. E. Union. Dr. J. F. McCulloch, of Greensboro, kindly consented to relieve me of the arrangement of Dr. Hubble's itinerary in the State, for which I thank him. We feel that this itinerary of Dr. Hubble through our state has accomplished a vast deal of good in creating interest and enthusiasm. It has also had practical effect in the organization of five societies with four others to follow shortly.

In addition to the above methods of administering to the interest and needs of the society this year in the state, a large number of personal letters have been written by the Secretary, by the Treasurer, and by the Press Superintendent, and also by the State President, and while we have not, as we said in the beginning accomplished what we had hoped to accomplish, still we feel that the year's work has not been wholly ineffective.

Next Steps.

The first thing for us to consider with reference to outlining our policy for the next year is to make sure that we shall meet to the full the recommendation of "Atlantic City 1911." As we heard last night from Dr. Hubble, this means not only the organization of these new societies, but also a large and perceptible increase in Missionary activity; special effort for evangelization in our societies, increased efforts for the betterment of our Christian citizenship, and more consecutive striving for general publicity. It is the specific business of the State Union to look after the first of them, that is the organization of the required minimum of new societies, but this cannot be accomplished unless it has the hearty co-operation of the local societies, and we bespeak for the State Union this hearty co-operation and believe that it shall have it. The last four items, Increased Missionary activity, Evangelization, Christian Citizenship, and Publicity are largely in the hands of local societies and the hope is entertained that they will enthusiastically and sincerely undertake the realization of these four ends in their local membership. This is a missionary age and to the general interest in missions the active enthusiasm of millions of Christian Endeavorers scattered throughout the world has contributed very largely. We also need evangelization and there is no more fruitful field for evangelization than among the associate members of a progressive society. If the type of American Citizenship is ever to be raised, it must be done in the formative period of the youth, and surely Christian Endeavor societies occupy a strategic position with reference to the young life. I think I need not insist that publicity in regard to religious matters is real service for the Master. The county and state papers are uniformly courteous to the C. E. society and will be only too glad to publish in their columns items of interest and progress as they may be furnished from time to time. The surest way to bring these ends to fulfillment is to have in every society committees that shall deal specifically and intelligently with these four lines of work. The Missionary Committee may be charged with the opportunity to increase Missionary activity. The Lookout Committee may take upon itself as a special object of work Evangelization, and committees on Christian Citizenship and Publicity should certainly be created if they do not already exist. These might well be called Temperance and Press Committees.

But there is another in which "Atlantic City 1911" should appeal with great force to every loyal Christian Endeavorer and that is the obligation to attend this great Convention this July. This promises to be the greatest convention yet held by the Christian Endeavor Society in our country. The city of Dallas, Texas, for instance, will run a special train through to Atlantic City and also other states will have special cars bound for this convention. North Carolina owes it to herself to have many present at this gathering where some of the greatest thinkers and public speakers, not only in the United States but also in the world, will appear on the program and no doubt many will avail themselves of such a rare opportunity. The railroads are anxious to give us special rates and I will be very glad, as Transportation manager for this state, to have all who expect to attend this convention report themselves to me at the earliest possible time.

Secondly: We should consider what our duty is with reference to the Christian Endeavor Headquarters Building, to be erected in Boston as soon as sufficient funds have been given for this purpose. Dr. Hubble at the request of Secretary William Shaw of the United Society, is to present this matter to this convention at such a time as he may deem wise and proper. It may be well to state that the $5.00 given by an Endeavorer or society for this purpose entitles to a life membership in the Building Union. This is a worthy enterprise representing a worthy cause, and deserving of our support, for an organization that has done the good in the world that the C. E. Society has, certainly deserves a building commensurate with its dignity and merit. The income from this building, just as the income from the C. E. World and Publication Department of the United Society, minus expenses, will be used in the furtherance of the cause of Christ throughout the world. Mr. E. H. Stockton of Winston-Salem, was requested at our last convention to take this matter in charge and he will no doubt make a report at this convention.

A third step which we need to make is in the direction of a surer and completer appreciation of the value of Local Unions, whether they be city, township or county unions. We have an excellent local union in the city of Greensboro, but so far as I know, this is the only local union in N. C. There are good openings for such organizations in Winston-Salem, High Point, Raleigh, Wilson, Wilmington, Asheville, our convention city, and many of the smaller towns, of the townships, and of the counties in the state, ought certainly to have these beneficial auxiliaries, which have done so much throughout the world to uproot selfishness and narrowness and bigotry, and to enthrone liberality and congeniality and liberal Christian fellowship. Two societies can make a good local union and if they come together in this co-operative effort, it will not be long before there will be three societies in such a union and then four and then more.

The fourth step which claims our attention in the way of progressive Christian Endeavor in N. C. is the bringing into affiliation with our state work of all denominational societies for Young People doing similar work. Such societies are found in large numbers in the Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Free Will Baptist Church, and all that many of these societies lack in the way of active co-operation with the State Union is a cordial invitation from State Union to officials of these societies, asking that they co-operate with us. The St. Paul Convention, which has gone down in history as the great fellowship convention of Christian Endeavor, requested that overtures be made by the officials of United Society to the officials of the denominational societies looking to this end. The Baptist Young People's Union accepted these overtures with readiness and general acquiescence and agreed to affiliate with C. E. under the title "Baptist's Young People's Union of Christian Endeavor." Many Westminster Leagues and Covenanters Bands have also added the phrase "of Christian Endeavor" to their names and so become members in good standing of the older society, which is the mother society of all the denominational societies for young people. It remains for us to make effective in our own state this movement on the part of the United Society in the way of Christian Fellowship. Such affiliation ought to be of mutual advantage; for the problems of the young people in religious matters are identical in all the churches, and the Baptist's Young People's Union and the Westminster League, the Covenanters Band, and the Epworth League can all learn from Christian Endeavor and Christian Endeavor can learn from them.

In the fifth place, we must have a medium of communication between the members of this body which shall bring the state work into direct relationship to the local societies, if we are to push the work to large success. The members of the Business Board are thoroughly persuaded that the State Union will never come unto its own until we have such a medium of communication. We constantly call upon the societies for money and give them nothing in return, but a personal letter or two and a few blanks, together with the invitation to send delegates to the State Convention. Such a policy does not warrant us in the hope of greater accomplishments, and so a North Carolina Christian Endeavor publication is an imperative necessity.

This is not the place to outline what such a publication should undertake, for that is properly a matter for its editors, but it would not perhaps seem presumptuous to suggest a few things relative thereto. It might include for example, a brief, pointed, suggestive thought provoking treatment of the topics of the quarter. It might also include contributions on live C. E. matters and methods, notes and personals relative to the work being undertaken in the State would be likely to occupy some space. The different state officers would well have space allotted to them. It would contain book reviews of helpful publications treating on Christian Endeavor themes and a few pages of advertising matter, to help defray the expenses.

The experience of other state unions points to a quarterly rather than to a monthly or weekly publication. I should suggest a 16 page folder, 6¾ inches by 10 inches, actual printed space 5½ inches by 8¼ inches. Such a publication I am told by printers can be had for $25.00 an issue, 500 copies per issue; total $100.00 per year. Where can we get this money? The societies should be asked to subscribe for it for their pastor, and officers and the chairmen of the committees. The subscription price would be fifty cents to the year, with club rates for five, ten and larger numbers of subscriptions in any local society. Any Society which contributes as much as $5.00 per year to the State Union work should be given 10 copies to be mailed to such individuals in the society as they see fit to select. The subscription price to all others should be fifty cents the year. I believe that in this way with the advertising which could be secured, such a publication can be made self-supporting. Miss Bays and Brother Steele, who attended the Virginia State Convention in Lynchburg this spring to see if some arrangements cannot be made by which the two states could conjointly publish such a Christian Endeavor paper will be heard in regard to this matter at this meeting.

In the sixth place, I wish to bring to the attention of the Convention a matter which has been suggested to me by the Honored President of the World Christian Endeavor Union, Dr. Francis E. Clark. Dr. Clark requests that we do something in a practical way to help the colored people of North Carolina to introduce and make effective in their church work the Christian Endeavor Society. There are a number of colored societies in N. C. now and we have written to them unwittingly from time to time and requested that they send delegates to this convention, only to be compelled when we found that such delegates would come, to tell them that we could not admit them. Real missionary work of an effective kind can be done in this way and I hope that the convention will see fit to adopt some measure looking to the development of Christian Endeavor among the colored people of North Carolina.

In the seventh place something ought to be done to develop C. E. in the North Carolina State Prison. We once had a strong and flourishing society in this prison, but for some reason it has died. I recommend that the Christian Endeavor Society recently organized in the Christian Church of Raleigh, N. C., be requested to look after the organization of such a society in the State Prison.

Finally, I would call the attention of the Convention to a much needed Next Step in the prosecution of our work, the creation of the office of Field Secretary. All the other State Unions that are making progress are doing so through and by the efforts of such an official. We must have such an official in North Carolina sooner or later and the sooner the better. If we had such an official, he would be the logical editor of the Christian Endeavor publication, which has been recommended above. It should be his duty to go from place to place as he might be invited and as his judgment might lead him, to give inspiration to societies already organized and to assist in the organization of new societies. The traveling expenses of this field secretary should be paid by the communities to which he may minister and the state union should undertake to raise $100.00 to pay on his salary. Of course, we could not accomplish much with so small a salary, but we could accomplish something and hopefully work to the time when we could have a Field Secretary in the field all of his time. I sincerely trust that at no distant date such an arrangement shall become effective in our State Union work.

C. E. TOPIC FOR APRIL 16—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

(The Resurrection, Rom. 6: 1-14).

(Easter Meeting).

The Scripture: Have one to read or recite and another to comment. This is a most beautiful passage and ought to yield a helpful commentary.

The Leader: The only death is sin. The only tomb of the soul is sin. A man may be alive and still in a sepulcher. He may be dead physically and yet live spiritually. It is possible for us to be dead to sin and alive to Christ in this present life. As he rose from the dead, so can we by His help rise from our dead (sinful) selves to higher things. The Easter Season is appropriate for the observance of the greatest event in history, our Lord's resurrection; because as He came forth at this happy season, so does nature typify His forth-coming by re-robing herself in a new coat of green and scarlet and white and purple.

Special Work: Essays of 2 or 3 minutes each on such themes as: "The Origin of Easter;" "How Best to Keep Easter;" "The Death That Is Life;" "Life That is Death;" "The Proofs of Christ's Resurrection."

Easter Poems: Have two or three short Easter poems recited.

Questions To Be Answered Voluntarily:

What is the real meaning of the Resurrection?

Of what does it assure us?

How does Easter remind us of it?

How does it remove the fear of death?

How can we have the Easter spirit ever with us?

What did Paul say of the Resurrection?

How is regeneration like the resurrection?

What did Christ say of the resurrection?

Why do sinners fear death?

Why should Christians not fear death?

Why should Easter be a joyful season?

What is it to be "dead in sins?"

What is it to be "hid with Christ in God?"

Account of Christ's Resurrection: A beautiful closing exercise would be the reading from one of the gospel narratives the account of the Resurrection of Jesus.

Scripture Verses: Under such words as "death, grave dead, sin, make alive, nature," an abundance of appropriate verses can be had by consulting the concordance.

Elliott.

Mary Jane Elliott died at her home in Halifax County, Va., March 28, 1911, aged about 79 years. She was married twice, first to Robert Mays who died during the early years of the Civil War. Two sons survive this union, Isaac T. and John A. In 1865 Mrs. Mays was married to John K. Elliott who preceded her to the grave several years. From this union there are surviving James R., Theodore C., George W., and two daughters, Mrs. Lucy J. Moosfield and Miss Maggie. Sister Elliott lived in the home with her son, John A. Mays, and her daughter, Miss Maggie Elliott, both of whom unmarried, have given unstinted care and devotion to all of mother's needs and wants. No son and no daughter were ever more loving and loyal to mother, and did more for mother's comfort in her declining years. In her early girlhood deceased gave her heart to God and her name and loving loyalty to Pleasant Grove Church and remained till death a faithful and devoted member. In the cemetery hard by this church her body was consigned, on March 31st, to mother earth while loved ones wept because of earthly separation and a great company was gathered to pay appropriate and beautiful tribute of respect to one who died as she had lived, an obedient servant of the most high God. Funeral services by the writer.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We are glad to submit such a nice report this week, and we hope for many more as large and larger. The second Sunday in March after the sermon at Mt. Auburn (which was largely directed to the building of a new house of worship and this would require money) the pastor (Uncle Jim) explained that the Trustees had asked him to go out after money, and said 'shall we begin at home?'—“Yes,” came the answer; and in ten minutes over fifty dollars had been paid and subscribed (part of subscription not received in time for this week). We have never known Mt. Auburn Christian Church of Warren County, N. C., to fail any worthy cause. They are faithful, loyal and liberal people.

The fourth Sunday in March we visited Pope's Chapel at 11 A. M. and secured in cash $47.48 with other subscriptions to follow. We had a nice large audience and the people seemed interested in the Orphanage work and gave a liberal response. Bro. Patton, the pastor, heartily endorsed the work and gave us encouragement. Here we met many kind friends with whom we were associated for years as pastor and people. May God bless all who helped in word and deed. At 3 P. M. we were at Good Hope Christian Church, N. C. We had small audience on account of rain, and secured $14.97, with other subscriptions and many good wishes. We wish for this little band of workers great success this year. Here also we met friends of old when we served as pastor. Through the rain we went to Youngsville, N. C., for 7:30 service. Here Dr. W. S. Long, the pastor, gave us the hour and we tried for the third time during the day to present the claim upon the Christian Church. The weather was very disagreeable and only a few members and friends out and we received only $9.50. But we hope for more later. We were very sorry to find our faithful Bro. W. T. Young very sick. We hope for his early recovery and ask the many Conference friends to pray that he may yet be spared for many happy years.

We are so glad to have 11 Sunday school reports in one week—one new one, near Antioch, Warren County, N. C., by Bro. Scholz.

We do hope from our last call that 25 or 50 new ones will take up the “Monthly Offering” and just send in a nice amount each month so that when we make up our voucher we will have the money to pay every bill. We are able to report nice sale of pigs this week and we keep $8 to try to make 2,000 lbs. of meat by next December (10th). The measles called to see us last Saturday and gave special attention to Mattie Medlin. We have not yet learned how long it will stay or how many of our children it will afflict. Little Pearl Goodwin of Raleigh, N. C., was received as our 46th member last Monday. Thus our Orphanage family grows. Now children, Sunday schools and every friend join in and help to keep our Corner fall.
 Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Maury, Va., March 25, 1910.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am very late this month and am sorry for it but I will write soon next month. How are the little cousins? All right and getting on fine I hope. I hope my five cents will help them a lot. I will close with love to the little cousins.

Your niece,

Amy Morris.

Every penny helps Amy, and so never be ashamed of small amounts when you cannot send more.

Pine Apple, Alabama, March 26, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Joseph Rabb is five months old today and weighs almost twenty pounds. He is a jolly little fellow with blue eyes and auburn hair. We love him so much. Newman says tell “Uncle” Charlie Newman that Papa loves our baby.

Newman and papa had measles last week and we are expecting it soon ourselves.

We have a lot of little chickens, we are lots of trouble; Junior is very fond of them and wants to feed them every little while.

The March wind is blowing today but it is warm.

Love and dimes from your three little boys,

J. Newman Denton,
S. E. Denton, Jr.,
Joseph Rabb Denton.

Measles here too, boys, but we are thankful to say, not many to have it.

MARRIED.

Scott-Pugh.

One of the most brilliant events of the season was solemnized at Morrisville in the Christian Church on Wednesday afternoon, March 15th, when Mr. R. T. Scott, of Tarrytown, N. Y. led to the altar Miss Nora Lillian Pugh, daughter of Mrs. M. E. Pugh.

The church was artistically decorated with palms, ferns, and cut flowers, the festooning being of Southern smilax and the aisles being covered in white. The color scheme was beautifully carried out in rainbow effect, both in the decorations and the costumes.

Miss Ethel Clements, of Mossirville, sang, "Because God Made Thee Mine." Prof. Brawley, of Raleigh, presided at the organ. At the first strain of Lohengrin's Wedding March the gate girls, little Ellen Stone, of Greensboro, niece of the bride, and little Jennie May Smith, of Norfolk, Va., came down opposite aisles, each carrying a basket of cut flowers and opened the floral gates for the bridal party to pass through.

Then came the groomsmen, Dr. S. G. Barbee, of O'Kelly's, Prof. W. M. Upchurch, of Durham, and Prof. H. C. Barbee, of Durham, in single file, down the right aisle with the bridesmaids coming down the opposite aisle. These were Miss May Ray, of Raleigh, Miss Mary Pritchard, of Chapel Hill and Miss Annie Bagwell, of Durham. They were followed by the Dame-of-Honor, Mrs. O. S. Ray, of Raleigh, who came down the left aisle, as the ring bearer, little Norman Stone, nephew of the bride, came down the right aisle bearing the ring in a lovely Calla Lily.

The bride, wearing a blue broadcloth suit, hat and gloves to match, and carrying a magnificent bouquet of bride's roses, entered with her sister, Miss Mabel Pugh, as maid of honor. They were met at the altar by the groom with his brother, Mr. F. Y. Scott, as best man.

The ring ceremony was very impressively used by Rev. J. W. Patton, of Elon College.

The bride is a most charming and cultured young woman, a former honor graduate of Peace Institute.

Mr. Scott is formerly from North Carolina, and he is now with the Armour Co., Tarrytown, N. Y.

There were many beautiful and useful gifts of silver, cut glass, hand-painted china, bric-a-brac, etc.

Mr. and M. s. Scott left for Northern points, and will be at home after April 1st, at the Irvine House, Tarrytown, New York.

Cross.

Charles T. Cross departed this life at his home near Somerton, Nansemond Co., Va., on March 4th, 1911, in the 67th year of his age. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Holy Neck Christian Church and the body laid away in Holy Neck cemetery. The deceased leaves a widow and one brother, John A. Cross of Newport News, Va. He had been a member of Holy Neck church perhaps from early life, and a deacon for more than 20 years. Bro. Cross was a good man, kind and loving in his home, generous and hospitable to his neighbors, and lived in peace and good will toward all. He had been greatly afflicted and suffered much, yet he bore it with Christian resignation till life's sorrows were ended in that "rest that remains for the people of God." May the Lord bless and keep his loved ones, and especially his faithful sorrowing companion.

N. G. Newman.

Johnson.

Jephtha W. Johnson was born July 19, 1849 and died at his home in Sedley, Southampton Co., Va., March 9, 1911.

At an early age he became a member of Johnsons Grove Church and was a faithful member until his death. Seldom was a service held there that he was not present. He served as secretary of the church for 25 years or more and held the office of deacon for many years.

He was a great sufferer during his last sickness of several months but bore his sufferings with that Christian patience that characterized his life. Several times during his last sickness he expressed himself as being ready when the last summons should come.

In 1875 he was married to Miss Mary Ann Turner. This wife died some years ago leaving 9 children, 6 boys and three girls, all of whom are now living.

In 1899 he married Miss Linnie L. Davis, who survives him. He will be greatly missed by his church, by his community and most of all by his family.

May the Lord comfort and bless the sorrowing ones, and his mantle fall upon another who shall fill his place in the church and community.

Funeral services were conducted at Johnson's Grove in the presence of a large gathering of friends.

Duke.

Mrs. Sallie Mariah Duke, relict of the late Henry Duke, departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Holland, near Holland, Va., March 20th, 1911, aged 76 years, 11 mos. and 4 days. She leaves two brothers, Matthew Gardner, Exit, Va., and George M. Gardner, Suffolk, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. Emma Jane Whitby and Mrs. Lydia Matilda Vaughn Franklin, Va.; four children, Joseph H. Duke, Franklin, Va., N. L. Duke, Suffolk, Va., Mrs. Mary E. Holland, Holland, Va., and M. s. Emiler Langfort, Franklin, Va.; thirty-four grandchildren and thirty-six great grandchildren. Mrs. Duke was greatly afflicted the last year of her life, awaited the end with calm resignation. Her sufferings were constantly alleviated by the constant and tender care of her faithful and loving daughter. She was a member of Beaver Dam Baptist Church. The funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer and the remains placed in the cemetery nearby. We extend our sympathy to her loved ones, and may the divine blessing ever rest upon them.

N. G. Newman.

Sanford.

Zebulon Vance Sanford, son of James R. and Frances Sophronia Sanford, was born in Granville Co., N. C., Dec. 8th, 1879, died March 21st, 1911, aged 31 years, 3 months and 13 days.

Mr. Sanford left his father's home a few years ago and began life for himself as an ordinary laborer. His sterling qualities were soon recognized and his upward career began. About seven years ago he went from Granville Co. to W. Va., and began work with a company doing constructive work. He was soon advanced to the position of foreman. Two years ago he came to his home county and since that time has been engaged in road building.

Tuesday morning about nine o'clock, March 21st, he was accidentally killed near Clarksville, Va., by an explosion of dynamite while with his road force.

A CONVERSATION WITH TOLSTOI ON PERSONAL RELIGION.

In a recent book on the evangelical movement in Russia a conversation with Tolstoi is reported which gives a sufficiently definite idea of Tolstoi's understanding of Christian truth. William Fetter, a young Russian evangelist of twenty-seven, who has been having great blessing in his meetings for the working people of Petersburg in the last two years, called upon the novelist some time before his death. Tolstoi, who had just given some kopecks to a pair of mendicant pilgrims, opened up the subject of religion by remarking:

"If I were younger I would live a pilgrim life myself. Jesus was a pilgrim. To that life He called His disciples."

"We may be His disciples without going on pilgrimages," replied the evangelist.

A warm discussion ensued. Tolstoi denounced the doctrine of the atonement by the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus as "crude and coarse." When Mr. Fetter appealed to the New Testament on the subject, the novelist cut him short with:

"My New Testament is much smaller than yours. I reject a great deal that you accept."

"By what authority?" demanded Mr. Fetter.

"Ah!" replied Tolstoi, "my own opinion, of course."

"That authority may satisfy you, but it cannot affect anyone else. But what parts of the New Testament do you reject?"

"All the miracle-stories, for example."

"You surely accept the resurrection of our Lord?"

"No, I do not. I see no necessity for it. He said, 'It is finished.' His life-work was done when He was put to death. Why should He rise again?"

"But we believe in a living Savior. 'He ever liveth.' We look for His appearing. It is the hope of all true Christians. 'This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go'."

"I have no such expectation. If some one were to come here to us now, and tell us that the risen Christ had arrived in Yasnaya Polyana, and was walking in the garden over there, I would not care to go to have a look at Him. It is mere superstition. He has been dead for nearly two millenniums."

"Paul bases the whole Christian religion on the fact of the resurrection of our Lord. 'If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain.'"

"Do not quote Paul to me. I do not believe in Paul."

"Do you reject his writings also, as inspired?"

"Inspired? Yes. How can they be inspired? Does he not command you to be obedient to governments? Paul has been the sure prop of every atrocious tyranny that has masqueraded under the guise of authority."

"There you grievously misrepresent not only Paul, but also the whole of the Scripture teaching respecting civil obligations."

"How so? It is plain enough: 'Let everybody be obedient to the authorities.' They are his words."

"If you will read the passage in full you will see that Paul was developing, to these early believers, the rules of peace, and unselfishness, and love, and humility. Such rules obviously forbid setting oneself up against governments; and particularly that ideal government that 'encourages good works and is the terror of evildoers,' to which Paul especially refers. You must also remember, Count, that the Scriptures and Paul do not command an indiscriminate obedience to whatever the rulers of this world may ordain. This is clearly seen from the example of the apostles themselves, who, when charged by those in authority with disobedience, replied, 'We ought to obey God rather than man.'"

The Count was silent, while Mr. Fetter continued:

"Count Tolstoi, forgive me for asking you a very personal question."

"What is it?" he inquired.

"You have held and circulated your views of religion and God and man for many years."

"Not 'circulated,'" he interrupted. "That is not my affair. Other people are responsible for that."

"Do your views content you? Do they prepare you for death and for eternity?"

"They satisfy me now. What may be afterward I do not know."

"Those parts of the Bible that you reject speak of a judgment to come."

"I know—I know."

"And of a Savior of sinners, Who through His death prepares us to face that judgment."

"I cannot listen to you," he cried impatiently. "Much better is it for us to walk in silence than to speak so unprofitably."

"I did not mean to offend you," said Mr. Fetter. "I felt compelled to speak thus."

"I do not see how you could be compelled. What compelled you?"

"Like yourself I have discovered certain truths that satisfy my own soul—give me peace and joy, and hope for the great hereafter. But, unlike you, who disclaim all responsibility for the opinions and lives of other people, I am under my Master's command to tell 'every creature' what I know, and to urge them to repent of sin and believe in the Lord Jesus. I should be disobedient if I were silent."

"Each man's duty is to discover truth for himself," he retorted. "My views are sufficient for myself."

"How, then, is that consistent with loving one's neighbor as oneself?"

To this there was no answer, and the conversation as far as it touched on religious matters ceased. "With Christian Russia."

DR. LEWIS' DEFINITION OF SANITATION AND HYGIENE.

"In the battle of life, just as in actual warfare, there are two great forces brought into action—offensive and defensive. Sanitation may be compared to the former and hygiene to the latter. In sanitation we wage an active crusade against the germs of disease—we burn them with fires, we poison them with antiseptics, we demolish their strongholds of filth, and in every way actively pursue them to their death. In hygiene we strengthen our fortifications and look after the well-being and equipment of the garrison, so that we can resist almost any attack. The human system is supplied with those defensive forces known as the power of resistance or immunity, and by obedience to the rules of hygiene—of right living—they insure us against many attacks of disease."

VICTORY.

The Lord is Risen Indeed. Luke 24:34.
(Golden text for Sunday, April 16).

We really celebrate Easter every Sunday morning. Sunday is the first day of the week, and is kept holy and sacred, instead of the seventh, because the resurrection of Jesus the Christ is considered of more importance than the "finishing of creation." The resurrection of our Lord changed the day of rest and sanctity from the seventh to the first day of the week. This is worth while. It was more important that Christ should rise from the dead than that a world should be created. It is more important that we be saved through Christ than that we be born into the flesh. The resurrection was the triumph of Christ's life. The creation of a world sinks into insignificance in comparison with that.

There is no fact more completely and thoroughly established about Christ than that He arose from the dead. His disciples all believed that He did. The book of Acts takes the resurrection as its theme and mentions this important event no less than nineteen times. Every great address, event and movement of Acts hinges about the resurrection as a center. Unless we believe that Christ arose from the dead we are of all men most miserable.

Paul believed with his whole heart that Jesus arose, and declares that he himself saw the Master after He had arisen. Paul's entire system of religion and theology goes to pieces unless Christ arose from the dead.

This is the triumphant note of the Bible. Death is unable to destroy life. Death had full sway with the Christ, did its worst with Him, murdered Him, crucified Him, buried Him, in a new tomb and put sentinels to guard His sepulchre. But death had no power over Him. Death itself became swallowed up in victory. And Christianity, instead of ending in a tragedy or a shadow, blossoms into victory, into a shout and a song of triumph. Henceforth ours is a religion of victory. A recent writer in the New York Advocate said of The Religion of a Victorious Life, the following: "One thought now filled the minds of the disciples. Jesus was alive. Death had not been able to conquer Him. The grave had not been able to enchain Him. He had burst forth from the tomb. The men who thought they had only memories suddenly found themselves possessed of immortal hopes. All the world was changed. Every teaching of Jesus was set glowing in the brightness of His resurrection. All for which He contended, all that He had endeavored to plant deep in the hearts of the disciples, was seen transfigured in the resurrection light. There was much difference between the potency of the teaching of a dead friend and the dynamic quality of the teaching of the living Christ.

The Christian religion moves out on its career of victory from the resurrection. Calvary made Christianity morally possible. The resurrection made Christianity practically feasible. And the religion which has moved out in triumph over the world is the religion of the victorious life. Jesus possessed such life that He could master death. He not only possessed life. He was able to give life. Pentecost was the gift of life from the living Christ. Every triumph of the early Church was the triumph of the life given by the Church's Lord. The impact of the early preaching was the impact of that which was alive. The new life mastered the social relations of men and expressed itself in brotherhood. It strengthened men so that they were able to endure persecution and imprisonment and death. The martyr was a witness to the power of a new life within which swept by death as an incident in a victorious progression of the soul, and not a tragedy which ended all hope. The new life inaugurated the missionary enterprise and created missionaries. The journeys of Paul are the practical workings of the new life given by the risen Christ. The new life masters the mind and comes forth in the noble interpretations of the Christian religion, such as Paul gave in his doctrinal epistles. Real theology is the crystallization of the life imparted by the risen Christ. The new life carves out for itself ecclesiastical forms in which it can best express itself. The best things in church government come in response to the demands of the life imparted by the risen Christ.

From the resurrection morning we get the note of the triumphant Church. The one thing which is unconquerable is life. And the living Lord has created the living Church."

LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT IN COUNTRY CHURCHES.

The trouble in our Christian churches so far has been that there are no laymen who seem willing or ready to make the Laymen's movement move. In other churches laymen are taking it upon themselves to go out and speak to the churches about missions, and the great need of missionary effort; but so far laymen in our Christian churches are mum, save indeed at Convention or Conference when the speaking and "resolving" are going on.

We met the other Monday morning, returning to his work, Mr. F. P. Hopgood of Oxford, North Carolina. He had been the day before to talk to two churches about missions. Mr. Hopgood said he never undertook a more agreeable task and one to which people responded with more willingness. In Men and Missions for April Mr. Hopgood writes out much of what he told us on our Monday morning's jaunt, and hoping that it may come to the eye of some of our Christian laymen who care we give it here:

"On our return from the Greensboro Convention last year, we, three laymen of the Oxford Baptist Church, offered our services to the country churches around Oxford for laymen's missionary addresses. The three laymen were W. B. Rogers, Secretary and Treasurer of the Oxford Orphan Asylum; W. A. Devin, a lawyer, and the writer, F. P. Hopgood.

The pastor of the Oxford church corresponded with the pastors of the country churches, and had meetings arranged. At first, the meetings were held with a group of churches; that is, churches from five to ten miles around were invited to send representatives to the church holding the meeting. This resulted well for the church with which we met; but the other churches asked us to go to them individually, and during the summer and fall of last year we visited sixteen country churches, the farthest from Oxford being about twenty miles, but all near enough to be reached by leaving home at about seven o'clock. Some of the churches asked for an all-day meeting; an address in the morning, with two in the afternoon, with dinner on the grounds. Some had the addresses to take the place of the regular preaching services. The former plan seemed more successful, because it drew larger audiences. There was a great deal of enthusiasm for missions in all of these meetings. At the conclusion of the addresses we had an active, progressive, influential member of the church to offer the following resolutions:

(1) Resolved, That this church heartily sympathizes with the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and we will try to increase our contributions by at least per cent.

(2) Resolved, That we appoint a Missionary Committee, whose duty it shall be to see every member of the church, and secure a contribution for missions.

No church increased less than 50 per cent. An encouraging feature was that the churches that made these advance pledges before the Association met, in their report to the Association over-paid their pledges, and no one fell behind the pledges made in these meetings. The aggregate increase over the amount paid last year was about twelve hundred ($1,200) dollars. We are to visit at least sixteen more churches before what is called our Associational year closes. These you know are Baptist churches that we visit, members of the district Association.

I have never seen Christian people take hold of any work with as much enthusiasm as they have taken hold of this, and I feel sure if groups of laymen will post themselves on this great Missionary Movement, and go out and address the country churches, that the treasuries of the Boards will soon be full to overflowing."

REFUSING TO GIVE UP.

There is neither room nor ground, in Christian economy, for becoming discouraged, and giving up. The good Book is full of the promises of God, and as long as we put ourselves in the line of these promises, there is no such thing as failure. God never fails, and He ever uses human beings to carry out His plans for the betterment of others and the salvation of the race.

Adoniram Judson had been a long time in the mission field and had faced difficulties, dangers and defeats such as are not known to men of our day. Asked one day if he thought the prospects bright for the speedy conversion of the heathen, he replied, "As bright as the promises of God." A man with a spirit like that knows no such thing as failure, and the glory of his work appears in the future.

We suffer in our religious work to-day in our undertakings for God, because we doubt His promises, ignore His omnipotence, and His everlasting pledge given through His Son. "And lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

—All of our friends (?) must have decided that we are very fond of liquor and want it coming from all directions. This morning's mail brought us three order blanks, self-addressed envelopes, quotations and other necessary paraphernalia for having immediate shipments, any quantity and on easy terms, from as many different towns across the line. We certainly do wish these whiskey dealers would save their postage and lighten the burden of our mails. One brother minister says he packed their circulars in a box and shipped back to them by express collect, and has not heard from them since. It looks as if some drastic measure will have to be resorted to to relieve us of this nuisance. I hate to have glaring whiskey advertisements flaunted in my face by the peek three times a day. But what is a fellow to do?

COL. ALEXANDER SAVAGE.

In the death of Col. Alexander Savage at Norfolk, Thursday, April 6, the Christian Church loses one of the most faithful, devoted and loyal members in all its communion. There was no man who took a keener interest in all the interests, enterprises and undertakings of the church than Col. Savage. He knew how to be loyal, true, and brave, and these virtues, developed to such splendid proportions in the Civil War, he manifested toward his Church and his God to the last moment of his earthly pilgrimage. Dying at eighty, his mind as clear and his mental powers as active as in former days, it was his joy and privilege, during the many months of his lingering last illness to hear and discuss matters of welfare that pertained to his church and to the kingdom of God.

He was one of the boldest, bravest, most fearless of cavalry officers in the Civil War and not only held the high esteem of the men whom he commanded, but was held in highest regard by his fellow officers and superiors in command. It is said that when the invincible and gallant General J. E. B. Stuart, (Stonewall Jackson's successor) was dying his last words were "Where is Col. Alex. Savage? Tell him to bring up his men." Col. Savage always brought up his men, went in the van of them, and flung himself into the thickest of the fight.

He was as undaunted a soldier of the Cross, as intrepid, as courageous, as ready and aggressive, as he was fearless and invincible on the field of carnage and death. In our last conversation with him, only three weeks ago, he said, "I have discussed the practices and principles of the Christian church with a great many people in my day but have never found one to withstand or gainsay them." No soldier could have been truer to his flag than Col. Savage was to his church. And those who may chance to read these lines will never live long enough to see the weight and worth of his life, light, and influence in the church, pass away or be forgotten. A brave soldier has fought his last battle, directed his last charge, and won a magnificent victory.

He was one of nature's noble sons; and he lived worthy of all that nature had done to make him good and great. God rest his gracious, generous and noble soul. His second wife, Mrs. Hattie Savage, and his two daughters, Mrs. J. C. Hargrove and Mrs. T. A. Jones, survive him, and to them we extend sympathy. They did what they could through the long months of illness to make the good soldier's quarters comfortable and his last battle as easy and happy as human hands could make it. The funeral was from Memorial Temple, No. 101, which Col. Savage had done so much to found and maintain, the services being conducted by Dr. W. W. Stale, Revs. I. W. Johnson, McD. Howsare and A. M. Hanson, and the interment was in Elmwood cemetery. Eight grandsons were pall-bearers and the floral designs were beautiful and elaborate.

TITHING.

Many think that it is too small to give one tenth of their income for church and charity. It is interesting to note, however, that the idea of tithing is growing in favor and spreading throughout the country. Rev. E. B. Stewart of Chicago, is president of the Twentieth Century Tithing Covenant Association, an organization that is working among churches of various denominations to get them to adopt the tithing system of giving. Mr. Stewart says at least six hundred congregations have already adopted the system of tithing, and that the evangelist who is traveling in this behalf starts, on an average, of four churches a week in this method.

Systematic giving was in ancient Jewish times a custom and a law, and it is doubtful if anything less than the tithing is Scriptural in giving to church and charity.

The churches will be richer, and church membership happier, when all are taught to give to the advancement of God's Kingdom, one tenth of their incomes.

—It seems that the Lorimer case is to be re-opened. Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Company, testified on April 5, before the Senate investigation committee that he had been approached and asked for $10,000 to help reimburse those who had put up a $100,000 to secure Lorimer's election.

THE THREE OLD LADIES.

There was an old lady all dressed in silk,
Who lived on lemons and buttermilk;
And thinking this world was a sour old place,
She carried its acid all over her face.

Another old lady, all dressed in patches,
Lived on nothing but lucifer matches;
So the world it made her strangle and cough,
And as sure as you rubbed her you set her off.

And another old lady, all sunny and neat,
Who lived upon sugar and everything
sweet,
Exclaimed, when she heard of their trouble; "I never!
For the world is so nice I could live on forever."

Now, children, take your choice
Of the food your hearts shall eat.
There are sour thoughts and brimstone thoughts,
And thoughts all good and sweet;

And whatever the heart feeds on,
Dear children, trust to me,
Is precisely what this queer old world
Will seem to you to be.

THE CITY PASTOR'S DREAM.

A city pastor recently had this dream. St. Peter stood at heaven's gate. A company of self-complacent men and women came smiling up to the beautiful gate. "And who are you?" said St. Peter. "Church members, every one of us," replied the spokesman of the party. "Indeed?"

Yes, here are our letters, Peter. "We kept them stored away in our trunks, and specially requested that they might be placed within our hands when we should lie in our caskets. We knew you would be asking for them."

"Let me see the dates" said Peter. Eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, h'm, nineteen years ago. Here is another—1884-1889, well, that is a trifle better. Eighteen hundred and ninety-two, can it be that all these years you have failed to identify yourselves with any church of Jesus?"

"Well, Peter, you see we were moving so often, when we were down below, and then the ties to the dear old home church were so sacred, we did not wish to hurt the feelings of our dear old pastors. So we have simply gone from church to church, but, oh, Peter, we have become wonderful 'sermon tasters.' But they lost their smiles when St. Peter closed the gate in their faces, saying, "I fear you would not be happy in the upper temple."

LOYAL TO ONE'S SELF.

A great deal is said in favor of personal loyalty to God. One but seldom, if ever, hears the statement that loyalty to one's self is really loyalty to God. Yet it is true that in proportion to one's loyalty to his own best interests, in that ratio is he loyal to himself without committing his heart to God, with no reservation. Absolute truthness to one's self consists in giving God free opportunity to deliver him from spiritual death, and at the same time place within him the gift of eternal life, so that out of that life the purest and loftiest character shall be formed. This is a prime duty in respect to self-loyalty. It inevitably leads, first of all, to an abandonment of one's self to God for pardon, cleansing, and life. In the next place, loyalty to one's self demands the best education of one's self. Such education must be both intellectual and spiritual. I am strong in the conviction that no young Christian can make the best possible progress in spiritual life and character without a well-trained, rightly educated mind. Ignorant spirituality is likely to run into fanaticism, especially if its subjects possess an ardent and zealous temperament. Paul urged young Christians to become "men in mind." A sane mental education is necessary, in order to attain such a condition. Of course, one needs to depend upon the Holy Spirit to aid him in the education of his character; yet this does not release one from the obligation to do his best in culturing and equipping his mind, so that his educated mental powers may minister to the growth and capability of his spirituality. A Christian, having a wisely directed spirituality, is a far more valuable factor in church work and welfare than is one whose spirituality is not thus girded and governed. I again say the loyalty to one's self demands such an education, not for his own qualification, but for the weal of the church and the world.

REPORT OF C. M. A. MISSION POINTS
1st. Quarter—Dec. Jan. Feb.

Winchester.—W. T. Walters, pastor. Sermons preached, 18; pastoral visits made, 15; average attendance at preaching services, 34; raised for all purposes, $318.09. Work on new church delayed during winter months, but now resumed and will be carried to completion.

Newport News.—M. W. Butler, pastor. Sermons preached, 26; prayermeetings held, 12; pastoral visits made, 72; average attendance at preaching services, 63; prayer meetings, 20; Sunday school, 95; raised for all purposes, $225.52.

Portsmouth.—J. W. Harrell, pastor.

Sermons preached, 26; prayermeetings held, 12; pastoral visits made, 150; average attendance at preaching services, 105; prayer-meetings, 20; Sunday school, 129; received into church, 4; added to Sunday school roll, 22; to Aid Society roll, 120; raised for all purposes, $346.92.

Summary.—Sermons preached, 70; pastoral visits made, 237; average attendance at church, 202; Sunday school, 223; raised $890.53.

The Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference is an important factor in the above work. The work at all three of the points named above could not have reached its present status without the aid of the association. The association should be made one of the greatest missionary agencies in the denomination. Its possibilities are great, but they cannot be realized without the human agent.

The membership of the association should be brought to the 200 mark this year. This would call for about 80 new members. There are twice this number in the conference that ought to be in the association. Almost any member of the church could afford to invest $10.00 in the great cause of missions. The association offers you the opportunity of making a permanent investment in the greatest enterprise known to men. Dear reader you will enjoy this if you once form the habit of sending your dues to the association each December. Now, Will you think and pray over the matter of becoming member of this association.

It is possible that the association will, in the near future create a loan fund, that can be loaned to mission churches without interest. This would mean great things for the denomination. This fund could be made to do service over and over. It would be such a saving. For instance, Portsmouth church pays out for interest this year $800.00 that could be saved for the fund if such a one was in existence. This money would be raised just as it is now and paid into the treasury of the association on principal. In ten years the whole amount could be paid back by increasing the amount raised each year. When this fund becomes a reality among us it would be a good thing if our people would remember it in their wills and thus turn in the Lord's treasury at their death a definite amount of their earnings. This would work on after we are gone and bless generation after generation. There is something fascinating about this proposition. Let us think on it.

Don't forget the association needs to have you to become a member. Come and go with us and we will do you good

AFRICA, A STRAGETIC POINT IN WORLD EVANGELIZATION.

“Shall it Be Mohammedan or Christian?
Which?”

The demand for the immediate redemption of Africa is imperative. Centuries ago the church lost its golden opportunity to gain this great continent for Christ by failing to continue the well begun missionary work started by the primitive followers of the Master. Africa was one of the first to share in the knowledge of the Master. We are told that “dwellers in Egypt” carried back to their native home the wonderful story of the cross, soon after that tragic event. The Christian Church was quickly planted in Africa and its spread was rapid. It had numerical strength and intellectual leadership. At one time it had nine hundred churches established and had that early church appreciated its opportunity instead of Africa being known now as the “Dark Continent” “it might have become the most luminous part of our whole planet a thousand years ago.” That early church became engaged in theological and ecclesiastical disputations and her powers were thus expended, her golden opportunity lost, and who can estimate the loss to the cause of Christ and the inconceivable price that must be paid in these later times to win this continent for our Christ? The mistakes of men in the past in no way relieve us of responsibility and we ought to go to God in prayer lest we too fail and fall short of our possibilities in the spread of Christianity in the world.

Christianity’s competitor for the occupancy of Africa is the Mohammedan religion. “The Mohammedans, cramped in India and China, are making Egypt and upper Africa the vantage ground for the propaganda of their faith.” The Mohammedan religion is a formidable enemy because of its aggressiveness and the good that it contains.

Many of those persons closest in touch with what is transpiring believe that this is a decisive hour for Christianity to strike a telling blow in this land so needy and hungry for the light of truth and salvation. What is done in the next few years will save us life and money in the next generations.

Africa, like all other benighted lands, needs the Gospel. Her people find in many instances, their rating at the foot of the human race yet they are intensely religious and hunger for the Bread of Life.

Saintly natives can be found wherever missionaries have gone and many in time of trial have sealed their testimony with their blood.

Where neither the influences of Christianity nor Mohammedanism has gone, the African lacks a knowledge of the Creator. There is no name for Him. His attributes are unknown. If conceptions exist of a god he is feared and no more lovable than death nor to be desired than the worst of calamities. A missionary was once sent for that he might pray away the Great—Great, who the dying man felt, sitting on his breast so that he could breathe.

We are told that present conditions of the mind and heart of the natives renders them more susceptible to the influences of Mohammedanism and thus we find it doubly hard to establish Christianity. This predisposed state of mind the strength and aggressiveness of Mohammedanism and whatever of these difficulties that may be in the road shall not deter us in giving this people the truth of God.

According to S. Earl Taylor about a hundred Missionary Societies are now at work in Africa.

God has shown his approval and power. “He was with His own in Cape Colony more than a hundred years ago. He was with them in Natal all through the dark days of the fierce and bloody Zulu Chiefs and He has given the land and the entire people into their hands forever. He was with His missionaries in the Transvaal and in the Matabele land through the dark and trying times of Moffatt and Livingstone. He was with them through the early days of Nyasa and of Tanganyika, and especially so in Uganda, where the blood of His martyrs has become the seed of the church.

All of this vast territory has been placed under the protection of the British flag which guarantees peace to the natives and protection to the missionary.

Half a million worshipers are singing the songs of redeeming love now, and millions more are ready to receive the glad message of everlasting life through Christ.

Could the church of this century but see its great opportunity and enter upon the glorious and magnificent task of winning Africa for Christ that the pure white flag of victory might wave over the ramparts of ignorance, superstition and heathenism!

By laying our lives on the altar of service we may help bring about a speedy evangelization of this dark land. A Baptist missionary who laid down his life on the Congo gave utterance to these words. Said he, “In this enterprise of winning Africa for Christ there must be, I know * * * much of what the world calls loss and sacrifice, and it may be that many will fall in the blessed work of foundation building, only; but what of this? To have any share in this noblest of all toil, however humble or obscure, be it only hewing wood or drawing water, is, surely, honor and privilege any servant of Christ must court and long for. I desire to go to this work feeling yet more intensely day by day as the days pass on, that to live is Christ and to die is gain; and if He should ordain for me early death, after a few years of humble, obscure pioneering work only—well, it must be all right; for it means early and complete satisfaction. Then shall I be satisfied when I awake in this likeness.”

SNARES.

The other day I saw a frightened bird fly into a wire net that was placed in the yard. The bird’s bill was securely fastened in the net, which prevented it from making its escape. At the first sight of the bird’s entanglement, I went to rescue it. But before I could place my hand on it, the bird had torn its bill almost off. Taking the bird out of the trap, which proved fatal, I thought how much like this we find along the way. Open snares stand out on every side to catch us as we pass. Have you ever stopped to think of the nets along the way to catch the youth of this age. The saloon, the near beer joints, the card table, the social cup, popularity of profanity, and many other things stand out ready to swallow up the innocent boys as they leave the tender care of mother and father. “Watch,” should be the slogan of the young man of today. Lives that were caught in some of Satan’s nets are all around us. How pitiful they look! When a young man gives over to vice and sin, the pleasant smiles of his boyish face soon disappear. A few wrinkles soon play upon his brow and he meets his friends with an ugly face and countenance. The heart is first seen in the face of a man which is a true index to his soul. There is always an escape from the snares. But too late is often the result.

C. B. Riddle.

DO YOU WANT LIFE?

Some people are always expressing a desire to live and are afraid to die. They are doing all they can to make the body live and lose sight of the fact they have a soul already perishing for life. If you love life, and truly want to live forever and ever, you can have it by drinking at the Eternal fountain, but as long as you drink at the poisoned pools of this world you can never satisfy your thirst for life, but drink death in every drop.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. S. B. Klapp, Greensboro, N. C., is much improved from his recent attack of "the grip" and is able to meet his appointments again.

—Bro. J. N. Hess finished his work as Publishing Agent of our Dayton House April 6, and Brother N. Rathburn who had been elected his successor, took charge April 7. We wish the House the degree of efficiency and prosperity under Pro. Rathburn that it has enjoyed under the management of Bro. Hess.

—Pastor J. W. Harrell of our Portsmouth church writes: "We have our first note, and interest on same, to pay April 15. These things try us to the uttermost." But Brother Harrell knows how to be tried, and never denies, and is willing, for the work's sake, to be tried again. He is one of those leaders of his people who goes forward and shows the rest of us how to go.

—"Enclosed is my renewal for The Sun for 911. This is my thirtieth year to take The Sun and I like it now better than ever. I am nearing my 78th mile post, but I want The Sun to shine all along the way." So writes good brother C. W. Whitmore, Dendron, Va., whose good word we appreciate and whose loving loyalty we approve and admire most of all. God bless the faithful ones who make their church enterprises a matter of business and make their church work light and agreeable for those who undertake it.

—That we are living in a wide country, with yet many broad acres where the wild beasts roam is attested by the fact that in the news columns of a Colorado paper last week this item is found: "Harvey Sprague sent in a wolf pelt and two coyotes last Tuesday, from Piceance creek. Fremont Dixon also brought in some coyote scalps." This immediately followed the following announcement and was considered by the editor, we presume, of equal importance: "Sunday school at 10 a. m. at the Christian Church, Preaching at 11 a. m. Evening service at 7:30. Special music at both the morning and evening services."

—In all our acquaintance there was no better man, nor a more saintly soul, than Bro. I. W. Norfleet who suddenly fell to sleep at Franklin, Va., Monday a. m., April 3. Bro. Norfleet had been the stay of our Franklin church in other days and was one of its most honored and beloved members at the time of his going. His demise came without warning, being on the way from home to store when he fell in the arms of a friend walking with him and expired almost instantly. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, and Rev. N. G. Newman, of Holland, assisted Pastor C. H. Rowland in the funeral services. A good man has gone to his reward.

—From The Rifle Telegram, Rifle, Colorado, of March 31: "Dr. Daniel Albright Long, who came to Rifle the first of the year as substitute for Rev. Horace Mann at the Christian church while the latter was attending to his legislative duties in Denver, will preach his farewell sermon in Rifle on Sunday, April 9. Mrs. Long left one day this week for Denver, where she will be the guest of relatives and friends for a short time. Dr. Long is an able and eloquent speaker which is attested by the large audiences at the Christian church each Sunday to listen to his discourses. Both the doctor and his estimable wife have made many friends during their brief sojourn in Rifle and they will be greatly missed by all who have the pleasure of their acquaintance."

—"We are just entering a ten weeks' campaign" writes Pastor J. O. Cox, of our Durham church, "to raise $1,000.00 on our indebtedness. Conference has voted us $200.00 when we shall have raised $500.00. I have made the congregation here a promise that if they would raise $500.00 among themselves I would raise $500.00 among others outside this number. The church has accepted and to raise $500.00 has adopted this scheme: 15 persons to give $1.00 each per week for ten weeks, $150.00; 30 persons to give 50 cents each per week for ten weeks, $150.00; 60 persons to give 25 cents each per week for ten weeks, $150.00; 50 persons to give 10 cents each per week for ten weeks, $50.00. Total, 155 persons giving regularly for ten weeks, $500.00" You may count on Bro. Cox and his good people to win out. When the Lord's work is carefully and prayerfully planned and then those plans are vigorously and zealously executed, there is no such thing as failure. We expect good reports from Durham. On March 31, Pastor Cox issued a letter to each of his members laying his plans before them, and addressing them with this opening and encouraging paragraph: "I am pleased to report that the closing month's work has been very pleasant and successful, especially along financial lines. The Church and Sunday School, together with the Ladies' Aid Society, have raised for all purposes during the month a little more than $150. While this is far less than many of the larger and wealthier churches of the city have raised, yet, when we consider our numerical and financial strength, I think it is very encouraging. It shows what we can do when we unite our hearts and purses and all labor together for the upbuilding of our church. I trust this month's work may encourage us all and inspire our hearts for still greater achievements.

—Here is indeed a note of news and inspiration such as delights the heart of the Sun's editor to print. It is from Rev. T. P. Garland, Needmore, Pa., and records "I have just come from an evangelistic meeting in Black Valley, near Everett, Penna. There were 64 conversions, besides a number who were reclaimed. We organized a Christian church with 52 members, of which number the greater part are heads of families. It is a prosperous people and a promising church."

—A general call has been issued, and is being urged, to observe in the churches, in some appropriate manner, the Tercentenary of the King James Version of the English Bible. The American Bible Society offers to send leaflets, etc., giving directions and data to be used on this occasion, to any any minister requesting them.

—The Princess Irene, one of the largest and finest vessels of the North German-Lloyd steamship company went ashore off Long Island last Friday and her 1720 passengers had to be transferred to another vessel and carried to port. No lives were lost, but the situation was perilous.

—The war in Mexico still goes on, and the Insurrectos seem determined as ever. The claim is now put forth that there can be no peace while Diaz remains president; though it is doubtful if his resignation would prove beneficial to Mexico. He has shown himself a wise and safe ruler.

—The Government lost its suit, in federal court at Chattanooga, against "40 barrels and 20 kegs of coca cola." An appeal was taken to the United States Circuit Court at Cincinnati. But since the damaging evidence was brought out as to what sort of stuff, "merchandise No. 5" in particular, was put into coca cola many who care for their stomachs are leaving out the drug. Of course those who do not care will continue to drink the dope as heretofore.

—No visitors and no mail are received at the White House on Sunday; and now the Post office Department announces that all unnecessary work on the Sabbath be eliminated. This is indeed wholesome and hopeful information.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Inequality of Taxation.—The Daily News of Greensboro cites this: "A tract of land in Chatham County valued at $400. for taxation was sold the other day for $2,000. We do not doubt that many more cases just like it can be found in the state. A just equalization of tax value on actual property in this state would settle the whole question of necessary revenues and work a hardship on no one." Our opinion is that the case cited is fully up to the ratio, and we do know that in many instances it is beyond the ratio, of tax valuations and real valuations in this good State. You will find on your tax books real estate valued at $400.00 or $500.00, which would sell today readily for $4,000.00 or $5,000.00. So far as we can discern there is no discernment of ratios in the matter. It all depends upon the man and his way of looking at it. The State, as we see it, has set a premium on tax dodging, and the man who cares for his conscience gives a fair valuation: the man who does not care does not. If our officials want to know why the State has an empty treasury they have not far to go. The rate of taxation is high enough to raise all the funds the State needs, and have plenty in the treasury besides. It is not a question of rates; it is a question of ratios. It seems to us that the State has carried on long enough this child's game of hide and seek with property valuations. What a stupendous and gigantic fraud the State enacts with its honest citizens every time the tax assessors' lists are turned in is shocking to contemplate.

A Terrible Tragedy.—Alabama experienced its most destructive mine disaster when on the morning of April 8, there was a terrific explosion at the Banner Coal Mine near Littleton and 128 lives were lost almost in the twinkling of an eye. It is believed that safety powder magazines were ignited in some manner and the death shock was instantaneous. It matters not that the poor victims were colored save fourteen, and that nearly all were convicts serving sentence. Tragedy is a tie that binds hearts together and obliterates all civil and social differences. That this number of men, without word or warning, should be hurried to an awful death, be they princes or paupers, free men or convicts, is all one. The human heart is made to bleed when it reads or hears of such tragedies; and this teaches that the whole human race is akin, and that the human heart is not all hard. The whole country feels a pang of sorrow and sadness, as these numerous victims are brought to the surface by the rescuer, and no friend, relative or loved one stands over or comes near, to lay claim to a body or shed a tear over a husband, son, or brother departed. It was indeed a pathetic picture. In suffering, in sorrow, in sympathy, the world of human hearts is one.

—The Alabama legislature in both branches, voted on April 5 to adopt the Smith liquor law, thus giving the knock out blow to State-wide prohibition in that State. The Smith law allows an election in any county, on petition of 45 percent of the citizens thereof, to say whether there shall be saloons, dispensary or not.

—A committee of distinguished citizens of Memphis, Tenn., waited on William Jennings Bryan at a banquet in Washington the other evening and urged upon the Nebraskan to make his home in Memphis, offering among other inducements to raise a fund of $2,000,000 in his behalf, to help him locate there, if that would be any inducement. Mr. Bryan declined. One wonders how Mr. Bryan wields such power over the minds of men throughout the country.

NOTICE.

There will be services at Pleasant Ridge Church both in the morning and in the afternoon, April 30, 1911. This is the date fixed for memorial services and to decorate the graves. Members and friends of the church, residing at a distance are invited to attend and bring flowers.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., Editor of Methodist Protestant Herald, Greensboro, N. C., filled the college pulpit yesterday, and preached a masterly and eloquent sermon. Dr. McCulloch took for his text the first verse in the Bible, and this sermon on the Creation will never be forgotten by those who were so fortunate as to hear him.

The Special Teacher's Normal Course begins today. Quite a number of teachers are expected to attend this course. Prof. Amick who is the Director of the Normal Work deserves much credit for his managership and all things point to a crowning success for this work.

Dr. Moffitt is still in Eastern Virginia in the interest of the Special Fund. He reports that he is having success in his work and is receiving some good size donations. An announcement of his success in Chapel this morning brought forth a large applause on the part of the students who are thoroughly in sympathy with Dr. Moffitt's efforts and are lending their support in every way possible.

Already catalogues are being requested by those expecting to attend the college next year and some have even signified their intention of being here next September.

On Thursday of last week Miss Pitt's musical recital was given and much enjoyed by the large audience present.

The people of Elou anticipate a good attendance, and much enjoyment at the approaching Young People's Convention April 15-17. X.

NORFOLK LETTER

Rev. J. M. Swearingen, the evangelist who conducted the successful revival at the Memorial Christian Temple last year, and who had been engaged to hold a meeting in the near future for Bro. Harrel and his people at Portsmouth, has informed them that it will be impossible for him to come. Rev. McD. Howsare of the Temple has been engaged to assist, and the meetings will be held

Rev. M. L. Bryant of the Main St. Church goes to assist Pastor I. W. Johnson in a meeting at Mt. Zion Church. Bro. Bryant has proven himself very successful as an evangelist

The largest congregation was present last night that has been present in many months at the Third Church to hear Bro. Hanson on "The Choir I Like," or the songs of Zion. He did not disappoint.

The Sunday school of the Third Church shows a creditable honor roll for last quarter. Out of an average attendance of 96, 57 were on the honor roll most of that number not having missed a Sunday and the others only having missed one Sunday.

That stalwart Christian and good friend of the Christian Church, Col. A. Savage, after many long weary months of suffering, has been called to come up higher. The end came Thursday; and Friday afternoon, from the Memorial Temple, after a solemn and impressive funeral service led by Dr. W. W. Staley, he was laid to rest to await that Great Day. Other and more able pens than mine will write of his life and work.

 * OUR YOUNG PEOPLE *

APRIL 15-17, 1911.

These days cover the period of the second Binnial Session of the General Young People's Convention. Before another edition of the Sun is in the hands of its readers this convention will be history. What that history will be depends upon the co-operation and loyalty of the church and its auxiliaries generally. There is no doubt that the Southern Christian Convention did a wise thing in authorizing the organization of the Convention. Will the Church at large appreciate the opportunity of enlargement it offers? I have every faith that it will and consequently expect a large attendance and great good accomplished by reason of this its second session. The program appeared in full in the Sun of last week, and shows that a rare treat is awaiting those fortunate enough to come. All together for a great fore-gathering of the Christians at Elon College, April 15-17, 1911.

N. C. STATE C. E. CONVENTION

Burlington Christian Church, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., pastor, did the entertaining act for the 13th Annual Session of the N. C. State C. E. Convention with its usual and wonted grace and dignity and completeness. Every one of the 8 sessions was full of zeal and zest and spiritual power. Addresses were made by our own brethren as follows: Rev. C. E. Newman, "C. E. and the Country Church;" Dr. P. H. Fleming, "C. E. and the Great Commission;" Dr. J. O. Atkinson, "Reaching the Reached and Saving the Saved," and Rev. L. E. Smith, "Young People and the Church." Brother Newman's address appears in full below. Dr. R. E. Steele, Spencer, N. C., is the new president.

Christian Endeavor and the Country Church.

(By Rev. C. E. Newman.)

I know not why this topic was assigned to me unless it be that I have had something to do with Christian work in both the town and the country. There are problems to be met and solved in all religious movements in both the town and country church. There are some common to both and others known only to the one.

I believe, however, that the needs of both are quite similar. I doubt to-day if the importance of the country church is always recognized. True, the town church has many advantages for doing efficient work. Yet there is that specific work that the country church must do.

Our town churches have been built up largely by support from the country church, and I venture to say that the larger number of adult recruits to our town churches are added by transfer from the country.

While Christian Endeavor had its birth in the town church it has long since made its way into the country.

Has it proven the same helpful agency there as in the town? And what is there about the Christian Endeavor to commend it to the country?

Its purpose is to deepen the spiritual life and quicken religious activity. In the country we have the different denominations with different doctrines. Those not familiar with the fundamentals of C. E. may fear its inadaptability to work among these different religious bodies and its tendency to discourage doctrine, and believe the denominational society can better meet the needs.

Thirty years of marvelous growth of Christian Endeavour prove that it meets every fundamental need and has the advantage over the denominational society.

In the country church we need active Christians, those who have that life communicated by the Son of God; thus becoming partakers of the divine so that no longer it is he that lives but Christ that lives in him.

The Christian Endeavor encourages continuous expression of this inner life by repeated confession in the prayer-meeting from week to week. I believe many a Christian who otherwise would have made a useful man to his church has become sea-sickly more than a drone because with profession he has stopped. We hear people sometimes express regret that they cannot be active in religious meetings because they were not trained when young. Others complain because they have not the gift of speech in public or in prayer. In the Christian Endeavor prayermeeting, the gift of speech is not sought after or the logical prayer but a simple confession of one's love for the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Then the great need is that young Christians should become familiar with the word of God by frequent reading of the Scriptures. The covenant pledge of the Christian Endeavor insures this. But Christian Endeavor does not stop with acknowledging faith and declaring allegiance, with renewing one's love and strengthening one's allegiance and braising one's self against temptation. It encourages constant service.

Service.—It is not only a place for service training, but it affords opportunity for real Christian service. And when the young Christian learns that there is a work for him to do, a work that he can do, and enters into that work he is saved to the church. The denominational society can certainly meet both needs mentioned. Confession of faith and service for the Master. But these fundamentals in the C. E. have brought about a broader fellowship than any other organization has ever done. It rests on that which united believers rather than that which separates them. At the great annual feasts of the Jews it is said that each forgot his distinctive tribal badge in the greater honor of being an Israelite. The Christian Endeavor movement from being interdenominational has become interstate, international, intercontinental and some one has suggested intermundane. And when the Christian Endeavorers come together they come together in a meeting like this or at Atlantic City in July, or the greatest gathering to be later at Sydney. Denominational differences are forgotten for the time being in the realization of being children of a common Father, citizens of one kingdom.

But it is not to be feared for one moment that this broad, liberal fellowship is calculated to lessen our zeal for our own church. Fidelity to our own church and zeal for its works is a fundamental. The C. E. does not exist for itself but for Christ and the church.

Its confession of love is for Christ, the head of the church. Its service is for Christ, its bride. And its fellowship made possible through loyalty.

Christian Endeavor encourages the importance of sound doctrine but in fundamentals only. It leaves the details to be determined by the individual conscience, illuminated by the word of God. We can readily see why it is so very adaptable to the needs of all evangelical denominations. It draws the young people nearer to Christ and into fuller participation of that life which proceeds from Him. It is not undenominational, but interdenominational. Among Congregationalist, congregational, Baptist, baptistic; Methodist, methodistic. No outside authority legislates for any local authority. No contributions solicited. It seeks not yours but you.

In the country church as well as the town church we need trained workers. Men and women who are not ashamed to confess their love for Christ and who will show their faith in active service for Him. We also need a fellowship that will bind Christians of all denominations together in zeal and loyalty to the great cause of the Master, and when their fellowship is cultivated and fostered instead of luring people from their own church it rather creates a desire to know more of the church of their choice.

How make the C. E. a Success?—Somebody must push it and it takes a good deal of pushing. Opposition is now met because people do not understand the broad principles and real purpose in the movement. Christian Endeavor has gone and will continue to go in the country church if we will but make it

A few days ago I heard a man say that the Sunday-school is not only the auxiliary of the church, but also the church of the near future, that in it are our officers and officials boards of a few years hence. I thought how true but if we add to the church with the live active Sunday-school the Christian Endeavor society, with its helpful influence and activity we have the church of the future approaching more nearly the ideal church than that of any period during the modern era.

C. E. TOPIC FOR APRIL 23—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

(Sabbath Benefits: Isa. 58:1-14).

The Scripture: Have the Pastor read this beautiful chapter and give a five minute comment thereon. A sermon can be preached on any one of these verses, but please don't have them at this time. Brevity is a virtue all C. E. workers and especially talkers need to cultivate.

The Leader: The chief advantage or benefit to be derived from the Sabbath is in the training, the education, it gives us for the life to come. A professional man—a teacher, a doctor, a lawyer, a preacher, will give 25 years to life preparation, to live on the average 15 years more. But many chafe under the restriction of giving one day in seven—a total of ten years if we round out three score years and ten—to preparation for Heaven, where we are to live forever. It even becomes necessary in a Christian land for the strong arm of the civil law to enforce Sabbath observance. What a commentary on the materialism of our day! Surely we should not begrudge one-seventh of our time here to preparation for an endless existance in the paradise of God!

Special Work: Have two or three minute essays on such themes as: "The Origin of the Sabbath;" "Why We Keep Sunday Instead of Saturday as the Sabbath;" "The Experience of the French With a Ten-day Sabbath."

Scripture Verses: If the leader cares to hand out Scripture verses to be voluntarily given with a word of brief comment, let him consult the concordance under such words as: Sabbath, Reverence, Worship; Rest, Work, Peace, Joy and Thanksgiving.

Questions to Excite Thoughts, Which Shall Be Voluntarily Given: How can we get benefit from the Sabbath?

How does attending Sunday school give benefit?

How does the preaching service?
 How does the C. E. prayer-meeting?
 What about Sunday letter-writing?
 Sunday visiting?
 Study on Sunday?
 Sunday excursions?
 What is meant by saying, "the Sabbath is a day of rest?"

What did Christ say of the Sabbath?
 How can we make our Sabbaths a blessing to others?

What feature of the Sabbath helps you most? (To several.)

How may we have every day a Sabbath?

What is meant by the saying: "Every day will be Sunday bye and bye?"

OPEN AIR SCHOOLS.

Since January, 1907, sixty-five Open Air Schools for children afflicted with or predisposed to tuberculosis have been established in twenty-eight cities, according to an announcement made in a bulletin issued today by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis

The first Open Air School in the United States was established on January 1, 1907 by the Board of Education of Providence, R. I., at the instance of Dr. Ellen A. Stone. The next school was established in May of the same year in Pittsburg, a third one at Boston in July, 1908, and the fourth at Bellevue Hospital in New York in December, 1908. During the year 1909 ten schools in five different cities were opened; in 1910, sixteen schools in twelve cities were opened; and eight schools in five cities have been opened to April 1st, 1911, while definite provision has been made for twenty-seven more schools in six cities. Many cities are considering the question, and will act during the coming year.

New York City has now in operation twelve open air schools and classes, and definite provision has been made for four similar classes to be opened by next fall. Boston has five open air classes in its schools, and Chicago also has several.

According to reports received by the National Association, the result of the open air class-work has been to restore most of the children to normal health and efficiency. One of these open air schools or classes should be established for each twenty-five thousand population, especially in cities.

A CORRECTION.

Dear Bro.:—In the notice of the Dr. C. J. Jones Memorial in a recent issue of the Christian Sun it is stated that he was President of "Marion" Christian College. It should have said Union Christian College, Merom, Indiana, (Sullivan County).

Will you kindly make the correction.

NOTICE.

The Sunday School Convention of Ga. and Ala. Christian Conference will convene with the Rose Hill church the 28th, 29th, and 30th, of this month. The first session will begin Friday at 7:30 P. M. Watch these columns next week for the program.

Brother Pastor and Superintendent, is your school going to be represented? Why not begin now and talk and plan for a large delegation from your school? We need you and you need the Convention. Let us get busy now for the best convention we have ever had. All together for a good convention. And be sure you notify the undersigned on what train you will arrive. Do this and save unnecessary trouble.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

I am still improving, and have been able to make all my appointments to my churches one time since I returned from the hospital.

I have preached at Bethel and Mt. Zion twice and held business meetings at both churches. These churches are in good condition.

Rev. P. T. Klapp preached three times for me at Center Grove. Bro. Klapp delighted the people with good sermons. I was at Center Grove the 2nd Sunday in March and found the church in good condition.

The church and pastor are always glad to have Bro. Klapp with us.

Thos. W. Strowd.

Palmyra.

It always brings pleasure to me to write or talk about any good thing or person. I think now to write a few words about our young brother, Rev. A. W. Andes. He came here nearly five years ago and has been preaching for us ever since. He is a good man and has fine talent. He is loved by all who know him. All have confidence in him, both saint and sinner, and they come from afar to hear him preach. And he never disappoints and is always ready. He is a good revivalist. Protracted meeting began at Palmyra the fifth Sunday in January, and closed on Thursday after the first Sunday in February. It was well attended. Ten members were received, two that had gone back and eight that had never confessed Christ before.

May God bless all the brethren laboring in the ministry.

Levi McInturff.

Edinburg, Va.

Oak Level.

I was at this church Saturday and Sunday in this month. There was an epidemic of measles, but the congregations were fairly good. This church is in a good neighborhood. Its power for good has long been felt, and may it continue as an elevating influence. I never preached to a better people so far as I know.

The continued illness of Bro. Erastus Williams, one of its oldest and best members, has thrown a gloom over those who have worshipped with him so long. He is the father of Rev. D. M. Williams who sleeps in the cemetery of this church. May all the brethren, sisters and friends send their prayers to heaven in his behalf.

Deacon W. T. Young, of Youngsville, so favorably known throughout the bounds of his denomination, has been quite sick for two months or more. He requests the prayers of the brotherhood in his behalf. If it is God's will he would be glad to get well; but if not, he is patiently waiting the change. The church never had a more faithful member than Bro. Young. If it can be the will of the Master, we would be glad for Bro. Young to be restored to health.

Sister John Edwards, of New Hope Church, has been in declining health for more than 10 months. Let prayers go up in her behalf. She is a good woman, and has been a faithful church member.

The many friends of Bro. George Whitaker, of Youngsville, will be glad to know that he is entirely recovered from his illness, and his wife is much improved.

W. G. Clements.

Roanoke, Alabama.

The Sunday school Convention of the Alabama Conference met with Rockstand Church, Saturday before the fourth Sunday and in spite of the inclement weather there were six or seven schools represented.

Ministers present were, G. D. Hunt, G. O. Lankford, E. M. Carter, C. W. Carter, C. M. Dollar, and H. S. Matthews of the M. E. Church. We feel that some plans were introduced that will prove of great good to the Sunday school work of our conference.

The speeches of the day were all good and we feel that there was bread cast upon the waters that may be gathered many days hence.

We were entirely rained out on Sunday, but there would have been but one school represented on Sunday, if it had been a favorable day. The delegates all came in a hurry and went back home Saturday. Let us think of the importance of being represented both days at a meeting like this and request our delegates to stay both days next time. We are in too much of a rush when we go to transact business for the Lord. I fear that we are reaching too much after the things of this world, but remember that the Lord has said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." So let us act upon his Word and he will repay us for all of our so-called lost time.

J. D. Dollar.

Roanoke, Ala., R. 4.

Salem Chapel.

I have filled all my appointments at Salem Chapel since Conference. So far as I can see the present indications are more hopeful here than since I have been pastor. We have splendid material here, but the great problem has been for years how best to utilize it. There seems to be increased interest in the work at large. The singing is very much improved. The new organization of the Sunday school is with these officers: B. O. H. F. Samuel, Supt., Miss Pattie Haizlip, Asst. Supt., Mrs. H. F. Samuel, Secty. and Treas., and Bro. C. B. Middleton, Treas. With this strong Sunday school force we look for good results this year. Our congregation has increased as the interest grows. There has been quite a great deal of sickness in this congregation for three months.

Ingram, Va.

The work in this church is moving on nicely. Our congregations are good and always attentive and appreciative. The Sunday School has been newly organized, with Bro. James E. Henderson Supt., Bro. R. H. Adams, Asst. Supt., Wilson Dunn, Sec., Mrs. C. V. Dunn, Treas., and Miss Bessie Anderson organist. This means a good force for the S. S. this year. We feel the great loss to our church in the death of Bro. Scott Boyd, and the absence of Bro. J. W. Carlton and family, and now that Bro. Ira W. Boyd has been in St. Luke's Hospital, Richmond, Va., for a very critical operation while, he is doing well yet he may not be able to resume active business as before this attack in some time. Miss Sadie Boyd has just returned from the same hospital from an operation for appendicitis. Their other brother, J. Wellons Boyd was returned to South Africa. Bro. James T. Russell is in a hospital in Danville, Va. Miss Nannie Hunter Ross has been moved to Catawba Sanitorium, Va. While all these forces have been brought to bear upon this church of earnest, faithful workers, yet we have some of the most sincere and untiring workers left.

BIBLE IMAGERY.

Some books of the Bible abound in rich imagery; but any physical likeness of God is forbidden. One of the offensive things in some modern pictures, even in many church buildings, is the image of the being the worshippers adore as God.

The imagery of the Scriptures is sometimes exceedingly beautiful.

Christ is likened to a Lamb slain; or to the Lion of the tribe of Judah. He walks among the golden candlesticks arrayed in beauty.

The pastors, or ministers of the seven churches, are likened to stars.

The seven churches are seven candlesticks.

The general church is likened to a woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. It is also likened to Jerusalem, the city.

Paganism is likened to a dragon.

The boss of a false religion, or a perverted true religion, is likened to a beast, a leopard (in derision of religious regalia).

The false church is likened to a harlot, and Babylon.

Salvation is likened to a river of life, or to a tree of life.

Our election is signified by a "white stone."

In the book of Revelation the style is bold, the imagery celestial, and the theology heavenly. It treats of heaven and worlds eternal. Those who scorn the book because their own minds do not "run on" the things of heaven are of the earth, earthly. The book treats of God, the Savior, the redeemed who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, the great and triumphant battle with sin, and the tremendous privileges of the righteous. The subject is one that interests all great minds: for there is nothing that so lays hold on human attention as the attaining to moral or spiritual worthiness.

Ministers of the gospel cannot hold their congregations by philosophising on ethics, or discussing with formidable logic and expressing, questions of what is right and wrong. That is a small matter compared with putting a man, the man himself, into a condition of worthiness. Enable a man to get into a right relation to God, make him a right man, and he will determine for himself the right thing.

The Bible is the book that does this, if the reader submits to it. Oppose it, and you lose the instincts of right and wrong. Oppose it, and you turn to sin; temptation becoming too strong for you.

The book of Revelation is one that saturates the devout reader with a sense of divinity. Its imagery comes from familiarity with spiritual thoughts. The physical is instinctively translated into the spiritual; the material objects becoming figures of the immaterial. Thoughts become bold, without irreverence. The reader becomes a seer himself, and sees.

The book of Revelation was written by the hand of an expert in righteousness, and he is unwise who discards its study because of the difficulty. The greatest study of man is righteousness; not merely questions of right and wrong. For they have been discussed for thousands and thousands of years, even from the beginning. The question, the question of most tremendous significance and thrilling interest is, how to become righteous. The imagery of the book of Revelation helps solve that problem. The preacher that helps make men good men secures the congregations.

TWO VISITORS.

This morning an elderly gentleman, perhaps seventy, came to the office where I was at work. He told me his name, and I gave him a seat. His conversation was on wicked things and expressed with wicked words. His conversation soon told me that his life had been spent in sin. The hard expressions on his face told the sad story of his heart, while his feebleness pointed to his short time to spend here. The bloom and vigor of his life spent for satan and in the pleasures (?) of sin. Still the God of mercy and love is calling:

"Come home, come home;

Poor sinner, come home."

What a great Savior we have, when He is willing to take the fragments of our lives, fit and prepare them for the holy courts of His Father's house. We have been great sinners, but we have a great Saviro to carry our sins to.

But peculiar as it was, within an hour or so from the old man's departure, another elderly man came in. He was treated as the first. But his conversation was of a different tone and on a different subject. Although as old as the first he wore a sunny face and his smiles were like those of a child. My talk with him soon led me to the fact that his life had been given to the Master at an early age, and he had lived in sweet fellowship with Him who is able to save and keep. Both of these men living in the same community, always followed the same occupation. Some inquiry gave me the information that each man's children had led the same lives as their father.

Young men, as we start out on life's journey, let's stop to think how the end will be. Stop to give our lives to Him who saves from sin.

"My soul is happy in Jesus,

For He is precious to me;

His voice it is music to hear it,

His face it is heaven to see."

A PLEA FOR HELP.

I do not ask for money, but I desire something that money cannot buy. I have a dear relative who has given way to the awful thirst for strong drink, and with all the prayers that have been offered in his behalf, it seems that there is no change. I know The Christian Sun goes into many, many praying homes and I have much faith in prayer, for "the fervent effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much." So I have decided to ask every one who chances to read these lines to offer a faithful prayer that this one may change and accept Jesus as his Savior. His wife has been confined to her room for some time, and the doctors that have seen her have failed so far to cure her. She is very weak and troubling over her husband is one thing that keeps her so. This man has once been a S. S. Superintendent and a school teacher, but for the last few months he has given way to drink and his family, as well as himself, suffers the consequences. I have decided that perhaps my faith is too weak, and I earnestly beg you to join me in prayer that God may use some means to cause that father to repent and leave off drinking and be kinder to his afflicted wife. Pray that if it is God's will that she be restored to health and strength.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Nice time for work and workers in the home, on the farm, and in the Church and Sunday School for the Orphanage. In all these departments something has been done as you will see from our report this week.

The following new schools begin the "Monthly Offering:" Bethlehem, Warren Co., N. C., by Rev. H. Scholz, Oak Grove, N. C., by R. J. Parker, Sec. Other schools are opening up in their spring sessions and will re-enter from time to time. We are very grateful for this help; and from now on we are expecting liberal support from this source.

We had the pleasure and the profit of a visit to Pleasant Grove, Va., last Sunday, April 2. We had a nice congregation and after preaching $61.00 was given for the Orphanage work. We thank each kind friend who helped us. Our living expenses have increased so much with our large family (51 members now—46 children) that we find it hard to increase our bank account. As our regular gifts come in and these specials we will find gradually daylight coming through our thin financial cloud.

We wish all a happy Easter—with lives filled with new hope and broader views and deeper sympathy for all departments of work and especially greater liberality towards the Orphanage.

Are there not fifty friends who will read this letter who will send us at once ten dollars each? One hundred who will send us five dollars each at once? Two hundred who will send us two dollars and fifty cents each at once? And one thousand who will give one dollar each at once? and in this easy way put us out of debt and on our feet nicely? 'He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.' Do all you can for us and that NOW!

Donations:

Chas. W. Priddy and Co., 1 Ton Agricultural Lime, Norfolk, Va.
 Mrs. J. H. Myatt, Raleigh, N. C., 9 yds. dress goods, 6 boys waists, 2 pr. pants, 2 neckties.
 Mrs. C. J. Lassitre, Raleigh, N. C., 6 Horse Apple trees.
 Navassa Guano, Co., Wilmington, N. C., 1 ton Guano.
 Mrs. P. S. Dixon, Mt. Bethel, N. C., 1 quilt, 5 yds. Bleaching, 6 yds. dress goods.

Yours with gratitude,

Uncle Jim.

Windsor, Va., April 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come again with my dues for April.

I have been going to school this week every day, having tests. They are bad things to have, but when you have one and your teacher gives the paper back to you and you pass you are glad; but this does not occur always. You pass sometimes and sometimes you don't.

Will have to close. Enclosed find 5 cts. for the orphans.

Your niece,

Junie Maie Davis.

It always pays to do your best, Junie, and when you try hard you are apt to pass on your exams.

Windsor, Va., April 1, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come to visit you again. I went to school this week with my sister. I love school. I want to be a type writer, but don't know how soon my mind will change. I sang and recited for the principal of the school, and when I got through, she clapped her hands, then I wanted to sing some more, but the school bell rang and we had to drill.

Will close. Find 5 cts. for the orphans.

Your little girl,

Violet Davis.

Well, Violet, you'd better not change your mind, for it would be nice to be a type-writer.

Windsor, Va., March 30, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I am again. I have had sad news and good news about my pigeons since I last wrote. One evening one of them flew up the loft over the stable, and there was a hole in the floor and he fell through and our horse, "Jerry," bit off his wing and that night he died. He was the prettiest in the whole flock. He would eat out of your hand and his name was Spot. But since that one died, I went up the loft one cold morning, and what do you think I saw? I looked over in a little corner and there was a nest with two eggs in it that "Beauty" had laid. I was very glad and went down and told my other sisters of it; and in a week from then, I went up the loft again and then I saw the best of all, two little pigeons about like biddies, and when the old pigeon saw me she got right up and showed them to me. And the old pigeon looked up into my face as if to say, "Aren't they pretty?" I stayed up there and talked to them about fifteen minutes. I left them. What would you name them?

My letter is already too long so I will close. You will find 5 cts. for the orphans.

Your niece,

Hettie Davis.

Name them "Sunshine" and "Bright-eyes" for want of better names, Hettie. They'll do pretty well for baby pigeons.

Crews, Va., March 30, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Perhaps you may think we are getting careless, but when I got old enough to go to school and learn to write for my self, I will try to be more prompt. I am past 5 years old and brother is three. Can make my letters and write brother's and my names. I close with my dues for February and March, 30 ets. Love to you and the cousins.

Your fond little niece and nephew,

Helen Stortz Foster.

Thomas Clifford Foster.

Well, Helen, I had an idea you were some older than you are. Mother has been very faithful to write for you.

Brownsummit, N. C., March 25, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I send you my and brother's dues, 20 ets., for March. Papa and mama went to Apple's Chapel to Saturday meeting and took brother and me along.

Rev. Truitt of Elon College came up and preached for us in Rev. Cox's place. He preached a good sermon.

I will close; hope you and the little cousins are well.

Your nephew,

Holt R. Gerringer.

Gilber H. Gerringer.

I see you boys love to attend meeting; well, that is just the thing to do always.

Elon College, N. C., April 3, 1911.

My Dear Consins:

Mrs. Foster has asked me to tell you something about my work here in our Home. I attend to two horses and a colt. The horses names are Charlie and Nellie and the colt's name is John Morgan. I have been ploughing with the two horse plow today and it is no easy work. I have been breaking the colt some. I hauled a load of wood with him last week and he pulled all right. I hitched him to the buggy Sunday afternoon and went to ride. He trots right along. I love to ride him to water; he is not afraid of an automobile or a train much. He will be three years old Easter and I think he is a big colt to be no older than he is. I hope you will come to see me and my horses, so I will close.

Everton Morris.

Roxboro, N. C., March 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here is my dime for March. Grandma gave me this one, too.

My fall caused me to be backward in walking and talking, but in some respects I exceed the normal babies. At one and a half years my weight was that of a two and a half year old; my chest and head measurements both of a 3 year old. How's that? Chest 20 inches and head 19 $\frac{1}{4}$. 11 days after I had my fall last May, I was taken ill, as you know; and my long illness was attributed to cutting teeth so fast. Well, I didn't cut any teeth after July until since Christmas and I have cut four jaw teeth since then and fattened all the time. So I have 12 teeth, the usual number for one and a half years.

So far I haven't shown signs of oratory and don't bid fair to speak as well as Dr. Atkinson, but I think I'll be as good a mimic as Aunt Willie. Since I was a year old I could sit like Uncle Wellons, cross my little legs like a gentleman and point my first finger like Grandma Pearcee, when they said "says he." Now I can gesture like a preacher in the pulpit, clear my throat and spit and mimic a dog and a cow. The other night I heard a man in the hall cough and I began to cough too. I call Aunt Willie "Bill" and ever since Christmas have been calling Aunt Annie, "Aunt." I claim no other relatives yet, but "Dada" and "Mama." When asked "Who made you?" I reply "Dod." When told to count my fingers I go through the act of counting them and say, "ten."

Now I must go back to the connecting links of last summer. In July, Mrs. Sue Jones made Grandma a visit and we enjoyed it ever so much. I liked her and she said she had never seen a better baby. She put some money in my bank, which is a tiny combination safe. She said she gave Oscar Atkinson a little bank.

Uncle Wellons came to see us a few minutes in July, too and he read and prayed. Although he kindly prayed for "Little Willie," I was like Aunt Willie when she was little and raised up to see what was going on.

The first Sunday in August I went with the rest of the family to Oak Level Church to hear Grandpa preach. I behaved nicely through the entire service and it was the first time I ever stayed through a sermon or communion. Aug. 10th, mother took me to Raleigh to Dr. Merritt, the dentist. Sickness had checked growth of my last teeth and so much medicine had made them dark. I wasn't a year old and Dr. Merritt said I was the youngest person ever in his chair. He cleaned my teeth nicely with an orange stick and fine pumice. I then had my first ride on a street car to Mrs. Mann's.

I went to the protracted meeting at Oak Level one day and stayed all day and heard Bro. Clements preach. He and Bro. Patton spent one night with us and when they went to supper, mother put me in my cradle and I held to the sides and raised up by myself for the first time.

In August they told Dr. Harris I couldn't sit up straight and he attributed it to weakness on account of so much sickness. Grandpa said I was having my hard summer—"two summers in one."....

In September the night Aunt Willie went to Apex to teach, I was taken suddenly sick and pointed to my throat. Grandma gave me a bottle and I refused to drink. Mother got her book and read about children's diseases. They settled on diphtheria. Aunt Annie wrote Dr. Harris a note and sent Al on horseback at 10 o'clock. In a short time Dr. Harris was there—8 miles of rough road had been covered. I was O. K. in a few days and then Dr. Harris gave a thorough examination of my back and found some curvature and advised cast and consulting an orthopedic surgeon. He put me on cod fish oil and iron—not emulsion, either. I begged for the oil and it smelled so fishy they could hardly bare to give.

Love to all the cousins.

Fondly,

William Staley Cheatham.

Dear little fellow, we hope the bright spring days and warm sunshine will bring health and strength to your body so the tiny feet will soon be able to run everywhere like big boys.

MARRIED.

Poe-Hargrove.

At the home of the writer, March 30, 1911, Mr. W. E. Poe and Miss Sallie Hargrove were united in marriage. A few friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony. Both are very popular in Ramseur, and have the best wishes of their many friends.

DIED.

Waynick.

At Ossipee Mills, March 20th, 1911, Daniel W. Waynick, aged 52 years, 2 months and 7 days. Bro. Waynick leaves a widow, eleven children and 9 grandchildren, 5 sisters and 2 brothers to mourn his death. He had been a member of Bethlehem church nearly 40 years. He served as deacon about 15 years. A very large congregation attended the funeral and burial services which were conducted by his pastor assisted by Rev. C. O. Durant and the Junior Order. May God comfort the bereaved family.

J. W. Holt.

Williamson.

Cornelius Dowd Williamson, father of Rev. R. L. Williamson, was born Oct. 18, 1839, and died March 18, 1911. Bro. Williamson was a member of Shiloh Christian Church. He professed faith in Christ when about 15 years, and was a member of the Christian Church until about 13 years ago, when he went to Troy, N. C., and there united with the M. E. church, there being no church of his choice in Troy. He moved into the community of Shiloh church in August, 1910, united with the church there, and was loved and respected by all. For many years he was a deacon of Big Oak Christian Church, and during his connection with the M. E. church at Troy, he was, most of the time, a steward. Those who knew him speak of him tenderly and say, "He was a good man; he has gone home." He spent his whole life in the church, doing service for God.

On Oct. 12, 1871, he married Miss Laura Emily Monroe, who preceded him 10 years ago. To this union were born nine children six of whom are living.

He died at Raeford, N. C., after about a week's illness, and was buried at Troy, N. C. His pastor was not informed in time to attend his funeral, but he extends to all the sorrowing ones his sympathy. A kind father, a good neighbor, a noble Christian has passed away.

T. E. White.

Yancey.

Mrs. Mary Sue Yancey, (nee Bagley), relict of J. Horace Yancey, departed this life Dec. 12, 1910, at the age of 78 years and seven days. The deceased was born and reared in Halifax Co., Va., and united with the church, upon profession of faith in Christ, while yet a girl.

She was married to J. H. Yancey Nov. 23, 1853. To this union were born 11 children. The following 8 survive their mother: G. W. Yancey and Mrs. C. M. Gordan, Baskerville, Va.; R. B. Yancey and Mrs. S. Graham Chandler, Buffalo Jet., Va.; L. H. Yancey, Clarksville, Va.; Mrs. C. E. Morris, News Ferry, Va.; L. W. Yancey, Birmingham, Ala.; and Mrs. H. A. Wilson, Leake City, Fla. Also three brothers survive her: John Bagley, Richmond, Va.; S. R. Bagley, Saxe, Va.; J. S. Bagley, Virginia, Va. There are also 27 living grandchildren.

After the death of her husband, the home was destroyed by fire, and soon the children decided to break up house-keeping, and then Sister Yancey spent her time with her living children, and was with her daughter, Mrs. S. G. Chandler, when an attack from a severe carbuncle ended her long and useful life after about three weeks duration of severe suffering.

For quite a number of years she held her membership with Hebron Church, and always took an active interest and gave loyal support.

To the children present when the end drew near she said, "I am willing to die."

To those who were absent she sent this message: "Meet me in heaven."

Her remains were tenderly laid to rest by the side of those of her husband, who preceded her by more than six years, in the cemetery of the church where she held her membership.

A good woman has been called away and we mourn her departure and sadly miss her presence; but the Lord has the best right and has only claimed his own.

May the Lord bless the bereaved, and may the children cherish mother's last request and be benefited by the same.

C. C. Peel.

Gillie.

Sister Frances Ann Elizabeth Gillie, wife of Bro. W. H. Gillie departed this life March 27th, 1911. Sister Gillie was 68 years, 1 month and 14 days old. She leaves a husband, one daughter, seven sons, one brother and many friends to mourn their loss.

She made a profession of religion early in life and united with the Methodist Church, but after the organization of Happy Home Christian Church she moved her membership there and was a most faithful member till death. Her sweet-spirited Christian life was a great power for good wherever she was known. She was an affectionate wife, a faithful mother and a good neighbor. Sister Gillie was an exemplary Christian character. She has left to her children a most valuable legacy, worth more than silver, gold and earthly riches. She left to them an unblemished Christian character, and to the church and community an example worthy to be emulated.

What a beautiful epitaph might be put on her monument, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Funeral by her pastor.

Johnson.

Our heavenly Father has taken from our church Brother Jephtha W. Johnson, one of the oldest members of Johnson's Grove Church. He was a member for nearly thirty-seven years, and served as Secretary of his church for more than twenty years. He also filled the office of deacon for fourteen years, to the time of his death. He was always true and faithful and his influence will long live. We sincerely mourn our loss, but bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved: 1st, That, in the death of our dear brother our church has lost a faithful member.

2nd, That, we shall ever remember his loving kindness and sympathy with us in every enterprise for the good of the church.

3rd, That, we sympathize with the family and while mingling our tears with theirs we cherish the bright hope of meeting him again.

4th, That, a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family; a copy be spread on the church record, and a copy be published in the Christian Sun.

LIFE IS GOOD.

The Rev. G. H. Morrison, of Scotland, has a fine sermon on "Is Life a Tragedy?" in which he points out the folly of those who despair. A tragedy is a play which marches with stately movement to calamity. There may be sweet music, splendid eloquence and brilliant characters in the play, but they all sweep on downward to the yawning abyss. Some men believe, or profess to believe, that life moves on with dull and leaden tread to rayless night. No doubt some lives are tragedies, and there is one thing that will give a touch of tragedy to every life which cherishes it. Sin makes life tragic. In proportion as men fall under the dominion of sin they are compelled to give way to despair. Their outlook is a fearful foreboding.

We have known men to give sin full swing in their lives until it made life so bitter that in sheer despair they committed suicide, hoping by this way to escape. "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." But this is not the true interpretation of life, certainly it is not the meaning of the Christian life. To the Christian life is sweet. There may be rough passages in it. He may be required to drink many a bitter cup. But in the darkest hour his faith sees the sun still shining. Everything depends on what one is living for.

Percy Ashworth says, "If you are bent on what you call good fortune, then very likely life is a meager and contemptible chance, but if your heart is set on a good character, then opportunity assumes boundless proportions. Life is a pitifully small room to people who do not know why they are here at all, or who, knowing something of life's highest purposes and ends, deliberately seek something lower than the highest and less than the best. Life is small room for one who tries to please himself, but a very large room for the man who is willing to deny himself.

If life were not good Jesus never would have come to give "life more abundant;" and if He had His mission would not have been a blessing. If life is bad, then the less of it we have the better; but if it is good, then let us have oceans of it. The life of the Christian is not only abundant, but also everlasting. It does not end in the grave. It is not lost in the sand and clay, but, like a mighty river, it rolls on with majestic sweep to a shoreless sea of glory.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

AN APPRECIATION.

I appreciate my church paper, The Christian Sun, so much, I feel impressed to write a line in its praise. Once a week The Sun comes to our home, a welcome visitor. Next to the good Book, I deem it the best, cleanest, and purest of reading. The Sun seems to improve with every recurring issue. Its bright appearance and Christian message are an inspiration to all who have a love for the good and pure. Long may it live to carry on its mission of love for all mankind.

CHRISTIAN HELPFULNESS.

A few years ago there was a man who fell into the water through the ice, and a gentleman living on the shore (it was a cold and bitter night in winter) heard that man's cry for help. He said: "I don't want to be disturbed this cold night, but I feel pity for the fellow." But the man dropt into the water and died; and next day it was found out that that man had done a mean and contemptible thing, and they hounded him out of town. They ought to have done it, ought they not? But we hear the cry of the poor—lots of wounded fellows lost for time and eternity—and we "pass by on the other side." "He doesn't belong to my parish." "He isn't a Methodist, and I'm a Methodist. I look after the Methodists—and the Baptists, let them look after theirs. Or the Baptist says: "He's a Congregationalist;

THE BOYS AND GIRLS AT WORK.

The second largest Church membership in the United States is said to be in Seattle. How was that membership secured? It is a question at once eloquent and fundamental, because the increase has been from 400 to 3,500. The secret is here: The rule has been implanted that every convert ought to go out and help save one more. We understand that the society just dedicated a church building, free of debt, erected at a cost of $500,000. In the midst of all the sacrifice involved in building this church, the spiritual purpose of the organization was not overlooked, and the winning of men to Christ continued in growing power. Something was found for even the boys and girls to do, and wealthy women kept themselves in readiness to minister to the needs of the suffering or those in distress at a moment's notice.

A writer makes this comment: "As soon as pastors and Church leaders recognize the latent abilities of the members of their Churches, and train the new converts in practical service for winning men to Christ, we shall see such a tidal wave of revival that all our Churches will find it necessary to erect larger buildings to hold the people." The same writer adds: "We do not need more eloquence in the pulpit, but we need a baptism of fire from on high which will transform every pastor into a consecrated organizer and executive. The more people he can train and set to work in winning men for Christ, the greater will be the results in the development and growth of the kingdom of God." At any rate, we may well ponder the words.—Central Christian Advocate.

EDITORIAL.

A WILLING OFFERING.

Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly. I Chron. 29:9. (Golden Text for Sunday, April 23).

The temple needed repairing. There were breaches, signs of spoliation wrought by pagan hands, delapidation and wreckage. None doubted that. But the priests were willing that the temple should remain as it was. They doubtless feared to take the people's money and use it repairing the temple lest their own care and keep might be neglected. They cared more for themselves than for the house of worship. They thought more of their salary than of the Lord's cause. There have been such people in our own time, even ministers. They did not care as much for conference calls, missions, charity, as they cared for their salaries.

But a good king reigned and he would not allow one failure to frustrate his plans. His heart's desire was to see the place of worship restored to its former glory and grandeur.

There is no more hopeful sign among a people than the desire and determination to make the house of God worthy of that which it represents. An old, worn, dilapidated house of worship is a reflection upon the religion and upon the Christian pride of any community. When people want to live in fine houses themselves but are unwilling to help build a suitable house in which to worship their God, then you may enquire indeed into that people's spiritual condition. A people's church building always reflects the condition of their spiritual ideals and aspirations.

But the people were ready and willing to give to remodel the temple. All they needed was a leader, or leaders, who would handle their funds honestly. Given a chance, and with men in whom they have confidence, people will give more readily and willingly to nothing than to the building of places of worship. People take pride, a pardonable and praiseworthy pride, in building good houses of worship.

It was no idle theory nor fancied imagination that wrote, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And the further and more significant fact, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." The people were happy indeed as they looked upon their beautiful temple, again repaired and fully restored, to its former splendor and glory. We may see them now and hear their glad hosannas and their happy shouts of praise on the day of rededic-tion. There is nothing that gives the heart more real joy and satisfaction than to look upon a good work, willingly, freely, gladly done in the name of the Lord. Good King Joash, and the faithful high-priest, Jehoiada, had done their work well, and the people had responded willingly, and there was rejoicing throughout the land. Nothing brings happiness, and prosperity to a people like doing the will of the Lord; obeying and serving Him. Blessed is that people whose God is the Lord.

OUR NEW FACE.

The Sun has put on a new face. We trust you like it, and that its appearance will bring ready and rich suggestions. We deem it a work of pure art, and well done.

This comes to us as a gift, and we hardly know who the donor is; but we are profoundly grateful at any rate.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, was the prime mover and promoter of the matter. Mrs. D. B. Atkinson of Jireh, Wyoming was the artist who made the design. Our fellow-sufferer and good brother, Dr. J. P. Barrett had the design executed in metal and forwarded the results with his best wishes. We wish we had the name and face of the man who did the paying, but he is somewhere, Heaven bless him, and may his kind multiply among the children of men.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

Certain young men, in particular, of our Christian Church and faith are much interested in the religious life of all the young people of our churches. These young men see vast multitudes of other young people in all the churches who are doing nothing whatever to further the cause of Christ, or to improve their own spiritual condition. They have joined the church. Their names are written steadfastly on the church book. Maybe they attend Sunday-school. If there is a prayer meeting possibly they go periodically. That is all. There are vast multitudes of young people in the Christian Church today whose time, talent and strength are unusual, unreached, untouched by the Church, for any purpose of advancing Christ's kingdom whatever. These young people are not unwilling. They are not indolent. They are not averse to doing some good thing in the name of Christ and His Church. Ours is a busy, active, energetic time. Men want to do things. They are going to do things.

Now this Christian Church of ours suffers because in this vast multitude of not unwilling young people nothing is offered, in the name of Christ and the Church, to be done. Our church needs men. It needs young men. It needs women. It needs young women. Here are the men. Here are the women. They want to act, will act, must act. But the church gives them no field of Christian service, no sphere of Christian activity. The church suffers, for the very strength that is in and around about it. And yet it stretches out no hand to harness and to husband this strength.

People have no more leisure than they used to have. Young people do not have to stay occupied all the time as they once did. Leisure multiplies and energy increases as the means of production improve and multiply. What is to be done with this ever increasing leisure, this constantly cumulative energy? Is it all to be played off and out? Must all our increasing leisure and energy go to waste?

Now, certain young people of the Christian church have conceived the notion that some at least of this leisure and energy may be utilized for the advancement of Christ's kingdom, for work in the Master's name.

Why should it be thought a thing incredible that people must wait to become old before they come to be active church workers?

Why may young people put their mind and energy upon other things, and not some at least of their energy and activity in behalf of their church and its interests?

Why should young people who are members of churches sit supinely by and see work in the church that needs to be done, and yet not be given the opportunity of doing it?

These are questions that the consecrated talent of our time is asking.

The Young People's Convention is an attempt to organize such effort, and direct it, in such wise as to get the young people of our churches into some sort of activity for the good of their fellows and for the advancement of the kingdom.

With this in view the second biennial session of such a convention has been held. It was in session at Elon College last Saturday, Sunday, Monday.

The delegation was not large, but it was intensely interested and determined. The Convention was well officered and directed, and it is believed that actual and permanent good was accomplished.

A full report of the Convention's proceedings is published elsewhere, and those proceedings will show that at last some of the young people of the churches in the Southern Christian Convention mean business. It looks as if this Convention has come to stay, and that it will mean very much in the future for the church. To that end every loyal member of the church ought to give the Convention hearty approval and ready co-operation.

THE MEASURE OF SURRENDER.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the famous evangelist, says that the greatness of a man's power is the measure of his surrender to God. There are men, now living, of wonderful native ability, of mental vigor and moral force, who amount to very little because they do not surrender themselves wholly unto the Lord. The energy and strength of our time cannot, much of it, be counted for righteousness and truth because it is not given in unreserved manner to the service of humanity and of God.

To prove his position, Dr. Chapman cites a recent hurried meeting and conversation with General Booth, founder and head of the Salvation Army. General Booth had but five minutes and was off for a preaching tour of the Continent. Dr. Chapman met him and put this question: "General Booth, what has been the secret of your success all the way through?"

"He hesitated a moment, and I saw the tears come into his eyes and steal down his cheeks, and then he said: 'I will tell you the secret. God has had all there was of me. There have been men with greater brains than I, men with greater opportunities; but from the day I got the poor of London on my heart, and a vision of what Jesus Christ could do with the poor of London, I made up my mind that God would have all of William Booth there was. And if there is anything of power in the Salvation Army today, it is because God has all the adoration of my heart, all the power of my will, and all the influence of my life.'"

Many of us deplore our meagerness of service and contribute it to our lack of learning, tact, talent, opportunity. Dr. Chapman believes with General Booth that the amount of power one has is the measure of his surrender.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A Great Mission.—There is nothing that gives as much worth to a man as real salvation through Jesus the Christ. This fact needs no proof, but receives new emphasis in a most marked and marvelous manner in the life and lesson of Jerry McAuley. His name has become known and esteemed throughout all this country. Sin carried this man to low depths. It made a criminal, a thief, a thug and a terror of him. The major portion of his life was spent in serving time behind prison bars. In prison and under condemnation this river thief found a Savior. His heart was changed. His soul was truly redeemed. When his term was finished he began to tell the lowest of the low, the basest of the base, whom he could find in the ditches and dives, of what Jesus Christ could do for fallen men and forlorn women. The New York Sun gives his bit of history:

"It was in March, 1871, when Jerry McAuley, a river thief, received his pardon from the State prison and came back to Water Street. Having "got religion" he only mixed with his old associates to tell them what a fine thing religion was, and in 1872, with the backing of A. T. Hatch, a banker, he rented a notorious lance hall and established the Jerry McAuley Mission.

Three years later McAuley and his friends erected a three-story brick building at 316, and there it is estimated that 1,500,000 have attended the mission services. A fifth of this number—thieves, drunkards, gamblers and forlorn women—have come forward to the front benches, known as the mercy seats, after listening to the service, and knelt in prayer. And a great many have been converted."

Jerry McAuley has years since been gathered to his fathers; but the good work he did here lives after him. S. H. Hadley, another redeemed thief and drunkard, took his place. Hadley, after invaluable service in saving other wretches has gone to his reward. Still the work in the famous Water Street Mission goes forward. New York has indeed found a valuable asset in Jerry McAuley. And even this modern Babylon, as the metropolis is sometimes called, will not let the memory of McAuley perish, nor the work he began go to waste. The wooden building at 316 Water Street is now being torn down and a $100,000 building is to take its place. This signifies that the McAuley Mission is permanent in New York life and its work of rescuing the fallen and caring for the dying is to be perpetual. We repeat, nothing gives a man as much worth as salvation. Had McAuley served out his days in sin his name would have been a stain and a stigma, and could have been found only on a prison roll. Now good people and bad love to name it every where.

Honoring A Book.—New York will celebrate in memorable fashion the 300th Anniversary of the "Authorized" Bible. The place will be Carnegie Hall on the evening of April 25. President Taft has sent a letter, Ambassador Bryce of the Court of St. James will be present and read a letter from his sovereign, a descendant of the King James whose name and approval the Authorized Version bears. Among the array of distinguished speakers are President Patton of Princeton Seminary, Bishop Warren of Denver, and Prof. Phelps of Yale. The Scripture lesson will be read from a copy of the original edition of 1611.

Al ready San Francisco has celebrated in honor of the Book. Ex-President Roosevelt was the principal speaker and 12,000 persons gathered in an open-air theatre to hear him.

On May 4th, Chicago is to celebrate. The Bible orator there is to be Colonel William Jennings Bryan. And throughout the world the Book is being honored, as possibly no written document ever was honored, on this the 300th anniversary of its authorized translation into our English tongue. And why? Because the Book reveals God and vital belief in Him means redemption, salvation, eternal life. Men honor the Book because the Book has done so much to elevate mankind.

Corn Contests.—Besides adding to the quantity of corn in the land—a valuable addition when it is considered that bread is the staff of life—the various corn contests by boys on the farm are adding to the amount of pluck and energy also. The late Dr. Knapp of the Department of Agriculture says there were 46,225 of these contestants in nine Southern states last year, and many of these plucky boys have had other difficulties to overcome besides those of poor soil and difficult tillage. One boy says Dr. Knapp begged his father for one acre to try on. The father reluctantly granted it on condition that his son take an acre over on a hill-side, cut and clear it of stumps and logs. The boy accepted and worked manfully on his acre till it was ready. Then the father took it from him. Soon the farm demonstrator came along and the boy appealed to him and he in turn appealed to the father. The father consented if the boy would take another acre on the same hill-side, cut and clear it. The boy fell to work like a hero and soon saw his acre under the plow. On that acre the boy produced 85 bushels of corn, while the father who pursued the old method only produced eighteen bushels on the acre he had taken from his boy.

We repeat, the corn contests are helping to rear the right sort of boys as well as to raise the right sort of corn—both of which are valuable assets in any country.

—"Find endowed $1.50 to renew for The Christian Sun. Pardon my delay. I read The Sun each week and hope to be a life-time subscriber." That is from one of our intelligent young lady readers, and my! it sounds so much better than that which we sometimes get like this: "Stop The Christian Sun. I will not pay for it any longer." Why is it that all people will not be agreeable, and help to make others, even an editor, happy, like the bright, beloved young lady quoted above?

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Madrid, Iowa, Letter.

I can hardly realize that it has been more than three months since I have given any account of our work through the paper. The time has passed rapidly with us and also pleasantly. We have been kept busy all the while but this is the common lot of pastors who desire to do their duty. The Christmas exercises were good and largely attended. The pastor and his family were again remembered with valuable presents. Our work has been moving along nicely. All services have been well-attended. We have recently closed a splendid revival meeting. The church seems to be revived. There were more than thirty professions of faith in Christ during the meeting and twenty-five united with the church. We had two others to come in last Sunday morning on confession of faith, making twenty-seven since the meeting began. To the Lord be all the praise. Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, son of Rev. D. M. Helfenstein, of Des Moines, was with us during the meeting and did most of the preaching. He is a young man with evangelistic gifts and much of promise. His work in the ministry has been fruitful. Rev. W. Ernest Stockley, a former pastor of the Madrid Church, but now pastor at Muncie, Indiana, was also with us for a week. While here he led in the song service and preached twice. He is a good preacher and a splendid singer—a rare combination, but a good one. We were glad to have the privilege of laboring with these brethren in our united and special efforts to lead souls to Christ. Best regards to our friends in the Southland. May we have the joy of seeing the cause of the Lord built up in our hands where ever we may be called upon to labor.

Fraternally,

W. D. Harward.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The annual convention of Patterson township Sunday School Association was held at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, April 2, 1911. The day was beautiful, the congregation large, unusually attentive, and was favored with an excellent program.

A hearty welcome was extended by Thos. C. Carter, teacher of the Pleasant Hill Baraca Class; responded to by Prof. F. R. Yoder, teacher of the Cane Creek Baraca Class. Most of the schools brought up the best reports that had been given for years, a result largely of the organized class movement in the different schools. Rev. L. I. Cox gave the Convention some strong words of encouragement, which were heartily received. Rev. John V. Knight, one of Elon's ministerial students gave an excellent address on the "Benefits of the Sunday School to the Church and community." He showed very plainly the benefits to the church in that the greater part of the membership comes from Sunday school, and the benefits to the community in making it better. He was followed by an address of much interest and value, to the young people. "The Strong Young Man," Mr. J. R. Hoffman of Burlington, N. C. In this he discussed the "the strong young man," physically and morally, and gave much good advice along the line of character building. As the above date was the regular preaching day, Rev. L. I. Cox occupied the pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour, and preached an excellent sermon, on "Behold, he prayeth," Acts 9: 11. He emphasized the needs, and the results of prayer. This was delivered in the speaker's usual earnest way, and held the attention of the congregation throughout.

Patterson Township is trying the semi-annual plan in holding conventions, this being the second meeting of the year, which resulted in two of the best conventions since the organization of the work.—X.

ONE'S SPIRITUAL LIFE.

There are Christian people who concern themselves a great deal about the present condition of their spiritual life. They examine themselves to see if they can detect any growth in grace, any advancement in spiritual strength, any progress in holiness. I do not regard this as being commendable. It is time that one should have due care for his spiritual life. He should use the proper means to promote it, and he will do so, if he be a real Christian. But it is not advisable that one should be all the while inspecting himself. It induces a morbid state. It is too self-centered. Let one absorb himself in doing well his daily duties. Even in secular work, one can commune with God. He can meditate on the Bible truths which he has heard. While in a state of meditation, there often come to one's mind certain passages of Scripture in a new light and with fresh force. Grand surprises frequently come in this way. He wonders that he had not before seen the meaning and blessedness of certain words which he had read many times before. And he who pursues this course is sure to be a growing Christian. His life expands by the process. From an editorial in a religious paper I take the following words: "One writes to know how we can measure the inner life; how can it be gauged; how we may know whether the spiritual life is up to what it should be. There is no gauging the spiritual life, any more than it is possible to gauge physical life. There are various 'meters' by which the strength of different physical organs can be tested, but there is no way by which life itself can be measured. Our side of it is clear, however; he who lives the faithful life, ever seeking to do his best in the Kingdom, who lives in communion with God and in fellowship with his people; whose place of duty and service is ever filled—such an one need never try to measure the strength of the inner life, for his strength is of God."

I never think of my growth in spiritual life, except in an incidental way; but I daily absorb myself in doing the work which lies before me. Part of that work consists in reading the Bible, praying and meditating. I do not know how strong I am, nor how weak I may be.

POSSIBLE BECAUSE ENCOURAGED.

If any could have good cause for not always having joy, or seldom having it, it might be the greatest sufferers. None, in the Christian ages, has ever been made to endure so much for Christ as Paul the apostle.

None but an intrepid soul could, or would, care to face what he did, for the outlook would be too severe for one's faith.—"For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my sake." (Ac. 9:16.)

And how great they were. If one need to be reminded of them they might read 1 Cor. 4:11-13, and 11 Cor. 11:23-33.

Yet this very man said, and said it to a persecuted people (1 Th. 5:16), "Rejoice evermore."

"How, pray, can one rejoice when their is nothing to rejoice over; when circumstances are all against one?" If this were the case, we do not see how they could. But how about God being for one? This same Paul said, "If God be before us, who can be against us?" He enumerates things, and many things, that would triumph over one if circumstances can do it, and things he himself had had and had proved not to be able to defeat his faith,—

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?"

"Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

"For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come.

"Nor height, or depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Evidently, the secret is, "He giveth more grace." It matters not, at all, how much is placed on one side of the balance, if enough is placed on the other side. If He giveth more grace—more than the trial is—then, the secret is out—one can bear anything and rejoice if God is with him.—The Christian Witness.

"Your husband is not looking well to-night, M. s. Rhymer." "He isn't, and I'm not surprised at it." "No? Has he been overworking?" "It isn't that so much, it is his originality. Why, that man is struck with so many original ideas that his mind must be one mass of bruises."—Woman's Journal.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Count on Kansas. Hnnnewell, a town in that erratic State, elected a woman as mayor the other day.

—Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., was a welcome visitor at the Sun office Monday. Bro. Carden is a consecrated, busy pastor and his work goes well.

—Since an Illinois legislature was bought for a United States senator one need not wonder that the Senate of that state has voted to legalize dealing in futures.

—The Mexican troubles do not grow less, but greater, judging from reports. The insurgents are offering battle not infrequently and engagements with the federals are becoming frequent. The affair looks uncomfortable indeed.

—Papers report President Taft as very anxious and much worried over the situation along the Mexican border. The President thinks he has done all he can to prevent further threats and hostilities, and whatever else is done must be done by a vote of Congress.

—Rev. McNeely DuBose, rector of the Episcopal church at Morgantown, N. C., and formerly president of St. Mary's College, Raleigh, was drowned Saturday morning while wading in the Catawba river near by duck-hunting. Mr. DuBose was much esteemed in the State and was widely known.

—Rev. M. M. McFarland preached at the Methodist Church, Mebane, N. C., last Sunday from the text, "If a man die, shall he live again?" and following the sermon he knelt to lead the congregation in prayer, but could only stammer. It was found that the preacher was paralyzed, from which he died a little later.

—"Here are hundreds of young people about us. They are strong enough; they are intelligent enough; they are willing enough. But what is being done to husband any of their strength, harness any of their energy and activity for the Church, for the cause of Christ, for the uplift of humanity, for the salvation of men?"

—The feeling prevails among those who attended that the Young People's Convention was a success, and that the work was put upon a sure and permanent basis. It is devoutly to be hoped; for unless the young people of our Christian churches can be cared for and trained to Christian service an evil day indeed approaches, and hope is gone.

—Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., and Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., were welcome visitors at The Sun office the past week. These are of the number of young men who are deeply interested in seeing our young people given something to do in the churches, in the cause and in the work of winning the world to Christ. They are busy pastors and many young people belong to their congregations and they want to see them active in church work as in the world's work.

—Wake Forest and Davidson colleges had a debate in Greensboro last Monday night. The query was, Resolved that the Panama Canal should be fortified. Wake Forest championed the affirmative, Davidson the negative. The judges awarded the decision, and with it the handsome loving cup, to Wake Forest. The debate was largely attended and there was a special train from Raleigh. Is not this a more dignified and fitting contest between schools than so much ball, played as it is by hired players?

—The insurgents or rebels, and federals are still fighting in Mexico, there being now and then a skirmish, or a pitched battle. And the war seems no nearer an end now than it did a week ago.

—Rev. B. S. Crosby changes his address from Hilton, N. J., to Clinton Corners, N. Y. Bro. Crosby has accepted a call to the Milan Church and this being his third pastorate there, he can go with the words Paul used in a letter to the church at Corinth, "This is the third time I am coming to you."

—The Iowa legislature was in a deadlock from January 17, to April 12, in trying to elect a successor to the late United States Senator Dolliver, the result finally being the election of Judge William S. Kenyon. These dead locks in legislature are hastening the day, it is believed, when U. S. Senators will be chosen by direct vote of the people.

—Pennsylvania witnessed another terrible mine disaster, near Scranton, on April 7. Seventy three miners were killed. A canvass of the families has been made and it is found that as a result of the tragedy there are 45 widows and 137 orphans. This is a record that makes the heart sick to contemplate; and this was wrought in an instant, a fire, an explosion.

—The government spent over $100,000 in the coca-cola trial at Chattanooga, it is reported, and the coca-cola company several times as much in trying to defend itself, and the case is not settled yet, an appeal having been taken to the circuit court. This is spending some money over a "five cents drink," but if the truth is arrived at and lives are saved by the investigation, as seems likely, it is worth the cost and more.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Colonel Alexander Savage is dead! He passed away at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. C. Hargroves, 121 Warren Crescent, Norfolk, Virginia, on Thursday morning, April 6, 1911, in his 80th year. He had been a great sufferer for two years and ended his days in the hope of eternal rest.

He had been a conspicuous figure in the Christian Church for many years and deserves a place in the records and hence this brief and imperfect sketch is written for the Sun.

He was born in Nansemond, County, Virginia, though he had resided in Norfolk most of the time since the Civil War. He was orderly Sergeant of the Nansemond Cavalry at its organization in April, 1861, just fifty years ago. P. H. Lee was captain of the company. Cap. Lee resigned the same year because of injury received by a falling horse, J. B. Brewer was made Captain of the Company which became Company I. in the 13th Va. Cavalry. Col. J. R. Chambliss was the commander of the regiment. He served under Col. Chambliss until he was made Brigadier General, and Col. Phillips of Hampton was made commander of the Regiment. At the request of Maj. Wingfield and all his senior Captains of the regiment, Captain Savage was appointed Lieutenant Col. of the regiment and served in that capacity until the resignation of Col. Phillips when he was made Col. of the regiment. He commanded it until he was wounded on Chamberlain Creek near Five Forks, Mar. 31, 1865. He was taken to the field hospital, the home of Alexander Dance, where his right leg was amputated and where he remained under the care of the Dance family till he was able to return to his home. June 12th, 1865. A remarkable incident entered into his life the day he was wounded. He said he made it his rule before entering battle to offer a prayer to God for protection. On this day he had some misunderstanding with a senior officer and his anger had arisen. The battle came on before his temper had subsided and he entered the battle without prayer and lost his leg. He always believed that the omission of that prayer left him exposed to the bullets of the Federal army.

He was in all the principle battles of his regiment in Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, performing his duty conscientiously, with the confidence and esteem of his senior officers and comrades.

His war-life colored and determined his civil life in after years. He always had the military thought and method. He was positive in his conclusions, exacting in his demands, and fearless in his decisions and actions.

He entered the commission business as the senior member of the firm of Savage, Jones and Lee, Norfolk, soon after the war and remained with that Company till 1879 when he retired and formed the firm of Savage, Son, and Company. He retired from active business in 1885, and left the Company in charge of his son-in-law, T. A. Jones, and his son, P. H. Savage. He was successful, as a business man, and tried to carry his moral convictions into the counting room. Rev. W. B. Wellons, to whom Col. Savage was devoted, was in his store one day and said to the Colonel: "I see you shoot at long range," "What do you mean?" said the Colonel. The Dr. put his foot on a whiskey barrel and said: "You do not see the damage this whiskey does." That put the Colonel to thinking and he made up his mind that he would not handle whiskey even as a Commission merchant. Others said he would ruin his business; but he declined to handle it and did not suffer serious loss. When he had moral convictions, he carried them out with the courage of a military leader.

One of his customers, Col. Whitehead, of Halifax County, N. C., whose father had left him a great cotton plantation, had fallen behind in farming from year to year, till he owed Savage, Son and Company a large sum of money. Col. Savage visited Col. Whitehead and suggested a change from cotton to peanuts; offered to furnish him seed and instruct him in the culture of peanuts. His advice was followed, the great farm was planted in peanuts and the yield was the greatest in the history of peanut farming. The yield was three hundred bushels per acre and the price that year was one dollar and forty cents per bushel. Col. Whitehead paid his debts and had his pocket full of money.

His life in the church was active, conservative, honorable. He carried his exact ideas of business into church transactions. He believed in working within means in hand or in sight. He was opposed to big debts. He loved cash payments; but he believed in progress and would advance money on some church enterprises. He with Captain T. R. Gaskins, Elisha Lee, Elisha Everett and others founded Berea Christian Church, Driver, Va., now one of the best country churches in tidewater Virginia. He loved that church devotedly and was a member of it at his death.

He took a deep interest in the founding of the Memorial Christian Temple in Norfolk and his checks at different times created confidence and secured bargains for that undertaking. His funeral services were conducted from that church on Friday, April 7th, 1911, at 4:00 o'clock, the following ministers being in the pulpit: McD. Howsare, pastor; I. W. Johnson, his pastor; A. M. Hanson; J. W. Harrell; M. L. Bryant; and W. W. Staley. The church choir rendered hymns and Mr. Etheridge and Mrs. Jarvis sang "Asleep in Jesus." Mr. Etheridge sang "Face to Face."

The floral offerings were unusually large and beautiful. The congregation was large and sympathetic.

The Colonel was a man of great vitality and great tenacity of life; but as the months of suffering crept by and his strength gradually failed he reached the state of mind in which he was not only willing, but preferred to go. Before he died he spoke of father and mother as if he saw them, and said several times, "Our Father who art in heaven;" and then his strength would permit him to go no further with the prayer. It was pathetic to see the old soldier reduced to submission and weakness and the tenderness of a child. His dear wife brightened his declining years and she now has the sympathy of many friends. His last son, Alex, died the week before his father. Mrs. J. C. Hagroves, a widow, and Mrs. T. A. Jones, are his only surviving children, though he has many grand children.

He was carried to his grave by his grandsons; he was a member of Pickett Buchanan Camp of Confederate Veterans; and he was buried by Harmony Lodge of Masons of Driver in Norfolk.

Peace to his ashes and comfort to his family.

W. W. Staley.

 THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION

The second biennial session of the General Young People's Convention of the Christian Church, South, met at Elon College, Saturday, April 15, at 2:00 P. M. Prof. S. M. Smith, of Norfolk, Va., the president was detained six hours by a wreck and the Convention was called to order in the absence of Vice-president Walters and Secretary Sipe by Assistant Secretary L. E. Smith.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. A. W. Andes, of Harrisonburg, Va., who in spite of his excellencies yet keeps bachelor's hall. We had expected better of the loftiest mountain range in the New World. The devotional services were all right, however. Mr. E. T. Hines, of the Senior Class in Elon College, was appointed Secretary and the Convention got down to business.

The first paper was one prepared by Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Wakefield, Va., which, in her absence, her son, Prof. A. Lucius Lincoln, Charlotte Court House, Va., presented. This paper set forth the claims of Primary Union with precision and conviction. The Convention resolved to give its endorsement to Primary Union and requested that the paper be given a wider reading by publication in the Christian Sun.

Mrs. J. L. Foster, of Elon College, "Aunt Myrtle" of the Christian Orphanage, presented a paper on the field of Sunday-school teaching in which she is an adept—the Primary Department, her subject being "Primary Teaching in the city school." This department will carry her paper shortly.

Miss Margaret Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., unfortunately could not attend the Convention to speak from the theme, "The Cradle Roll." The chair called on Dr. Wicker to discuss this theme, but Dr. Atkinson "got the floor" before Dr. Wicker could respond. This was not due to Dr. Atkinson's anxiety to discuss the Cradle Roll, but to the frailty of the seat he tried to occupy, which gave him a floor roll. This arousing incident past, Dr. Atkinson having yielded the floor, Dr. Wicker discussed the Cradle Roll and was followed by many in open discussion.

The next session was to attend the Elon Sunday school and see a modern Sunday school in operation. The various classes and departments all enjoyed the visitors' presence and they seemed to enjoy their attendance. The little folks gave an Easter program immediately after the recitation had closed.

The third session was the occasion of the Convention sermon. Again Dr. Atkinson got the floor, but with his feet this time. His sermon was eloquent, sparkling, inspiring. With masterliness did he portray the theme of his choosing: "The Challenge and Cruelty of Opportunity." He urged the young people of the church to use their restless energy for God's glory and the up-building of the Church and pictured the vastness of the opportunity now open to us.

The fourth session was given over to Adult Work, that is to say, Home Department and Organized Class Work. Miss Cora Lawrence, High Point, N. C., discussed the Home Department Work in which she has been very successful. Many of the brethren after the relation of her experience and the description of her methods expressed the desire to have Miss Lawrence with them, among whom were Bros. A. W. Andes and J. W. Wellons. Of course the Convention enjoyed itself over these adverse claims.

Rev. M. L. Bryant, who was to have discussed Organized Class Principles, could not attend because of a protracted service which had passed beyond his expectations in time, but sent his address typewritten (a wise forethought—this!) and it was read by Rev. A. W. Andes. It will appear in the Sun.

President Moffitt discussed in convincing manner the good results that may be expected to follow on Organized Class. These results were, in short, the bringing out of the adults, deeper interest in Bible study, opportunity to do efficient Christian service, stronger fellowship and social spirit in the church, the salvation of souls, that it would also tend to keep the young people in the Sunday-school. We regret that Dr. Moffitt's address was not written and so cannot be given the Sun's readers.

Dr. Wicker then presented the theme "The Baraca Movement versus the Baraca Idea." This excellent address also was not written.

The fifth session was concerned with Christian Endeavor and consisted of addresses on "Christian Endeavor Ideals" by Prof. T. C. Amick, read by Miss Affie Griffin in his absence, "How to Secure Good Committee Work," by Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., "How to Have a Good Prayer Meeting," by Prof. N. F. Brannock,—all of which addresses were helpful, instructive and inspiring. Prof. Amick's paper suggested expression, service, loyalty, and fellowship as four great Christian Endeavor ideals. Mr. Rowland said good Committee work demanded head-heart, and hand work and consecration. Head work alone would produce a dreamer—a flying manchine. Heart work alone would become fanaticism. But when the heart inspires the head and the hand that can be devised. He then does the work of both, the result is all entered a strong plea for the presence of Christ in the meeting, else it can never succeed. Prof. Lawrence said, "short talks, to the point, with appropriate music" had done much to improve the prayer-meeting at Elon.

Rev. J. F. Morgan concluded the program by conducting a devotional service in the form of a regular Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting using the international topic, which, being on the theme of Easter, was very appropriate. Many took part in this service, which was spiritually up-lifting.

The Business Session began at ten o'clock on Monday morning. Here occurred the reports of the officers, discussion of the Convention's relation to the Young People's Worker, how to finance the Convention, plans for the future, report of the nominating, music, and finance committees. The Secretary's report showed 18 cradle Rolls, 15 Home Departments, 2 Mission Study classes, and 41 Christian Endeavor Societies launched during the past two years. The Treasurer's report showed a total of $206.68 received during the past biennium, with a balance of $43.- and reported an indebtedness of $115.31. Rev. M. W. Butler requested the Convention to either endorse the Young People's Worker or to take it over as its organ. A committee consisting of Dr. W. C. Wicker, Rev. A. T. Banks, and Rev. J. I. Cox were appointed a committee to take the matter under advisement to report later. Other items of business will have to be given later with the Monday afternoon and evening sessions.

The Convention is now history. It was not largely attended by the ministry on account of the Easter season being a special one in many of our churches. Many lay-delegates from the country churches did not attend, being detained on Saturday at home because of the inclement weather. Yet despite all these hindrances, above eighty accredited delegates were in attendance and a large impulse was given the work. We have not space now to write of the meaning of the Convention to the Church at large. That must be done later.

 HAWAII AND THE PHILIPPINES.

Hawaii was the first foreign field that received Christian Endeavor, and now there is a strong and very earnest Christian Endeavor union there.

Missionary work for Hawaii was started as the result of the finding of Henry Obookiah, weeping upon the steps of Yale College. He was longing for an education, and that the true religion might be carried to his native islands. On October 23, 1819, the first missionary party, seventeen persons, including Hiram Brigham and Asa Thurston, set sail from Boston for the Sandwich Islands. They were met on landing by the news that a revolution had overthrown the old gods and that the land was without a religion. The conquest of the islands for Christ was remarkably rapid.

Titus Coan became a great figure in this work. After a thrilling escape from the savages of Patagonia, where he went as a missionary in 1834, he was sent to Hawaii. His heroic labors brought an abundance of reward. A meeting-house seating two thousand was filled by relays of the people, over and over again. While one division was hearing the sermon the others would meet elsewhere and pray. Before 1870 Mr. Coan had himself baptized and received into the church 11,969 persons. On the first Sabbath of July, 1838, he received at one time 1,705 tested converts.

In 1863 Hawaii was formerly recognized as a Christian nation, and the missionary work handed over to the Hawaiian Evangelical Association. Since then, however, the coming to Hawaii of large numbers of Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese has made renewed missionary efforts necessary in those beautiful islands.

Christian Endeavor entered the Philippines with the American army, and at once the natives took up the work with enthusiasm. Societies are now found in connection with the missions of most of the denominations at work there, and also in Guam.

As soon as the American conquest made it possible, the denominations pressed into the Philippines and established missions there, wisely dividing the territory among them. The missions are carried on by the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, Episcopalians, United Brethren, Congregationalists, and other bodies of Christians.

It is the aim of our country to train the Filipinos for good citizenship and for the political independence for which they aspire. To this end public schools are established in large numbers, and many influences of civilization are thrown around them; but there is none so important as Christian missions.

Don't imagine you can thresh wheat out of a crop of wild oats.

C. E. TOPIC FOR APRIL 30—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Missions in Hawaii and the Philippines, Isa. 60: 1-12.

Special Work: Have essays of about five minutes each on "Hawaii as a Mission Field;" on "The Philippines as a Mission Field."

The Scripture: This beautiful account of the glory of the church due to the large accession of Gentiles is well-chosen as a missionary passage. A reader, who should also be commentator, should show in three minutes wherein its appropriateness for this purpose consists.

The Leader's Five Minutes: The story of how the brave queen Kapiolani led her people from idolatrous worship to true acceptance of Jehovah as God is one of the most heroic deeds recorded in the missionary annals. This good princess had herself accepted Christianity and idolatry had been officially abolished, while yet actually continuing. There was an active volcano on the island, called Pele, which for ages the natives had regarded as a powerful divinity, and which they feared more than any other power. Even foreigners from America and other lands had trembled as this burning mountain shot forth streams of fire. On the side of the mountain grew the berries sacred to Pele, eating which meant certain death. The brave queen, having accepted Jehovah as her God and anxious that her people should accept him and cease to fear Pele, led her people to the base of the volcano and bade them watch her ascend. They dissuaded, but she went, eating the sacred berries as she went. Up, up, she pushed until she was at the very crater, into which she hurled stones, saying as she did so, "Pele is no God; Jehovah only is God; He will protect and save me and my people." She returned in safety and, by this act of heroism, destroyed idolatry in the Islands. The leader will do well to clothe these bare facts with embellishment and to compare her act of heroism to Elijah's on Carmel.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

"The sword of Mohammed and the Koran are the most stubborn enemies of civilization, liberty, and truth which the world has yet known. "While other religions and systems of error have fallen before the advance of truth, as Dagon before the ark of Jehovah, Islam, like mighty Goliath, defies the armies of the living God and the progress of Christ's Kingdom? In three continents it presents an unbroken front and is armed with a proud and aggressive spirit. At a very conservative estimate there are 200,000,000 Mohammedans—one seventh of the human race! One seventh of the whole population of Asia is Moslem. Every third man, woman or child in Africa is a believer in Mohammed. It is a world problem. The great task to which Christ summons His Church at the beginning of the twentieth century is the evangelization of the Mohammedan world.—Dr. S. M. Zwemer, Missionary to Africa.

BIBLE TRICENTENARY.

With the approach of the tricentenary of the publication of the King James version of the English Bible, the papers are carrying a good deal of literature about the Book. The Gideons, a band of drummers, have done more to bring the Bible into prominence than any force in recent years, through their plan of placing a Bible in every hotel room. Recently in his speech at the University of California, Colonel Roosevelt spoke of the importance of Bible reading. In Chicago, former Commissioner McFarland delivered a notable address on the Bible before the Sunday Evening Club, and The Record-Herald takes it as the subject for a timely editorial. It extols the moral and literary beauties of the King James version, to which it thinks tens of thousands of young people should be attracted. As stated by our Chicago contemporary, it is a familiar fact that the Bible remains the "best seller" throughout the world. It is said that in 1909 over twenty million copies of it were sold and the total for last year will doubtless be even larger. Unfortunately, so far as the young generation is concerned, there is a distinction between the circulation of the Bible and its study and assimilation. As Mr. McFarland says and as Mr. Phelps, of Yale, has repeatedly said: "College students in the upper classes are usually unable to understand the simplest allusions in literature to biblical facts," incidents and names. The ignorance of freshmen is grotesque, and some of their examination papers on the Bible would be farcical if they were not so symptomatic of neglect of the foundation of right living, right thinking and right expression.

Colonel Roosevelt spoke of the place of the Bible in the life of the "common people" of Anglo-Saxondom, and that indeed is an inspiring topic. The humble home, the farmhouse, the miner's cabin today, as in the past, owe their virtue and worth largely to the inherited and acquired faith in biblical teaching. It has been said of Lincoln that he was essentially "a man of one book—the Bible"; and the dignity, reserve, noble simplicity and elevation of his style are directly traceable to the Bible. No English classic could have been written as it was without the Bible since King James' version, and no classic can be understood without a knowledge of that version.

Parents do not always know how to render the Bible attractive to school children. Ruskin was always thankful to his parents for the compulsory study of the Bible they imposed upon him, and he attributed the matchless eloquence and grandeur of his style to the Bible. In many cases compulsion is useless or worse, but there are better means than compulsion. Reading, frequent recurrence to favorite passages, quotations from admired men and women—exemplars of youth—showing what moral, spiritual and literary strength and wealth they derived from the Bible, constant allusions and subtle intonations implying that true culture or education is based on the Bible will do what stern compulsion fails to do.

This is a good time to resolve to make "the best seller" the most cherished treasure of the younger generation. Colleges, schools, churches and hotels should cooperate in this celebration of the tricentenary.—Charlotte Evening Chronicle.

Sunday Observance.—Those who care more for the sanctity of the Sabbath than for the piling up of dollars will vehemently applaud the recent decision of Postmaster General Hitchcock to discontinue as much Sunday work in the post-offices as possible, and to give postal clerks one day's rest each week. In keeping with this decision post offices in the larger cities day's rest each week. In keeping with this decision clerks have been having no Sabbath to mention, are taking steps to close up, take rest and observe the day. Raleigh is the first office of the kind in this State to take advantage of the new rule, and announce that the carrier's windows will not be open at all and the general delivery window open only from 2 to 3 o'clock p. m. It is to be hoped that other cities and towns of the State will follow Raleigh's wholesome example. The good God made this universe on an economic, as well as on a moral basis, and governs it as well by the principles of economy as by those of morality. And it is flying into His face in defiance to say or to act as if it were wiser and better to work seven days in the week.

SANITARY VALUES PLACED ON VARIOUS STYLES OF TOILETS.

Sanitarians representing North Carolina and other southern states engaged in crusades against typhoid fever and hookworm disease at a recent meeting in Atlanta, have agreed on a sanitary valuation for the various styles of privies ordinarily used. As typhoid fever, hookworm disease and the dysenteries are carried in, and scattered with, human excrement, a privy which prevents the spread of these diseases has a high value.

Valuations expressed in percentages:

Failure to have any kind of a privy on premises represents 0 per cent sanitary value. The ordinary privy open behind, unprotected from flies, dogs, washing rains, etc., has 10 per cent sanitary value.

The same style privy having a hinged flap in the rear coming down close to the ground is given a sanitary value of 25 per cent.

A privy having a covered seat, a closed hinged door in the rear, and tubs or pails in which the excrement is collected for subsequent disposal, if not rigidly fly proof, is valued at 50 per cent.

This same style of privy, having a rigidly fly proof vault under the seat, and water tight tubs or pails, kept in good condition, is valued at 75 per cent.

A sewer system, with water closets, and a septic tank arrangement in which oil barrels are used, known as the L. R. S. Privy, are valued 100 per cent.

By writing Dr. Jno. A. Ferrell, Assistant Secretary to State Board of Health, Raleigh, you may receive free an illustrated pamphlet giving the plans and specifications with a bill of the material for the best and cheapest kinds of sanitary privies.

INCREASE OF IRREVERENCE.

It seems rather hard for us to defend ourselves against the charge of irreverence. The conduct of Christian people in the house of God, their manner in dealing with religious things, the light, almost frivolous way men converse upon religious themes compel us to admit that however much we have grown in other directions towards matters religious we are slipping away from this part of it. Not only are children offenders at this but even their parents set them the example of light conversation in the house of God, of unkind criticism of the religious acts of good, though eccentric people. Even their pastor comes in for a fusillade from the battery so well fortified in the church and social circles. If religion is largely a matter of spirit, reverence in its attitude toward sacred things. For years there has been a cry to do away with the ideas of sacred and secular affairs. This is being done. But people are putting everyday clothes upon the Sabbath, they are secularizing the sacred. Thus are they beaking down the division. They would level down rather than up, they would make things common rather than to make all things sacred. I had rather be a pantheist, who sees God in the earth, in all things, and rightly treat these, than to be as some who have relegated their one God to the remotest part of his universe, and are giving Him the bottom doorstep of their soul as the only part of their life He can use. It is better to treat the snakes with respect than to disregard the holy impulses of our souls. It is better to worship the god in the flowers than to treat his temple as a barn. Those of us who know the Bible ought not to forget that "The Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him."

"What dirty hands you've got, Freddy! Suppose I were to come to the table with hands like that, what would you say?"

"Nothing. I'm too polite."—M. A. P. Shoemaker (who, throwing a shoe at his apprentice, hits a customer in stead): "A thousand pardons, madam. Fortunately it was your own shoe, the smallest I have in the place."—Fliegende Blätter.

My Dear Children and Friends:

A nice report this week but not as good as it might have been for this happy season of the year. Easter should bring gladness and much hope to all; and when the life is full of gladness and the heart rejoices in hope then the purse should be liberal.

We are looking for our $10.00, $5.00, $2.50, and $1.00 friends to begin to respond to this Easter call. Send direct or get up list of individual gifts from your church and send all together with names and we will publish from week to week. We are asking your pastor to give you an opportunity to make such an offering at next appointment. If he should forget will you kindly remind him of same and ask him to take individual gifts and thus help us pay off every dollar of our indebtedness by June 1, 1911?

In the Corner for March 13th, Rev. and Mrs. L. I. Cox should have been credited with $2.00 on their subscription; it appears on our book but not in the weekly report. We are sorry for the error.

Donations:

Woman's Missionary Society, Porterville Christian Church, Robinson, Ill.: 1 box clothing for boys and girls, 3 nice quilts, by Mrs. L. L. Wilson, Sec.

Robert Mason Cole, Ridgeway, N. C.—15 white Leghorn eggs.

We are grateful to Sister Wilson and her Society for such a valuable box. We believe this is the third box they have sent. Yet many societies and communities very near us have not sent a small box one time.

We will try to raise some white chickens from the eggs Robert Cole gives us—we are having poor luck—many little chicks dying.

Our farmer boys, William Brown, Everton Morris and Willie Knott are nearly through breaking land. They have done well with the big plows and Willie with "Ned" (ox) subsoiling.

Give us a great report following Easter.

Fondly yours,
 Uncle Jim.

Elon College, N. C.

Dear Cousins:

I guess you would like to know some of the duties that are assigned to me at the orphanage. Aunt Myrtle has appointed one of us to write a letter to The Sun every week and tell about our work. I have to clean up the boy's department, wash, iron and mend their clothes. I have lots of mending and darning to do. The boys are very rough with their clothes but I have some smaller girls to help me. We wash and iron in the basement, and I have to clean it up. I wait on the large boy's table. We have three little girls and two little boys in the bed with the measles. They have not been very sick. I guess it is because they have such a good nurse.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will write you my letter and send my dime for April.

Uncle Jim, I don't like to write all alone, but little Carlynn Sehobey has moved to Clio, S. C., but I hope he will continue writing.

I have twenty little chicks. It keeps me almost busy feeding and playing with them.

Much love to you and the cousins,

Your niece,
 Annie Pearl Way.

Phenix, Ala., April 3rd, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I want to join the band of cousins and with papa's remittance you will find my dime. I am nine months old and can say daddy and mama and I have a cart and every afternoon I make mama get me ready and take me to the shop to see papa.

With love to all the children, I close.

Your little niece,
 Lillian Pearl Willingham.

We are very glad to enroll this little Alabama cousin. She is young but will learn to love the work of doing for others and perhaps will write for herself when she grows up.

DON'T.

Don't read hooks and papers which suggest thoughts you would not utter. They stain the soul; they burn the heart. Can you thrust your hand into sott adn bring it out white and clean? Can you singe your clothes, and not have the smell of fire on your garments? Beware of books which are suggestive of evil, though they be clothed in the purple and gold of fine language.

Don't watch for dishonesty and evil intention in those around. Hold every man honest until proved otherwise. Thus believing in others, you will draw out of them their best, for men ordinarily are their best to those who believe in them. Also keep your heart young and green by faith in your fellow-men.

Don't forsake your church even though your privileges are poor. Sermons will be helpful influences in your life. You may only carry away a single sentence, a sermon, thus: "Make the best of yourself." The sound, too, of music will help to drive away the evil spirit of your soul, and raise you to a higher atmosphere, nearer to truth and to God.

Don't live your life alone, without forming friendships and love; your nature needs love, you were made for it, and other natures need you. You are robbing yourself, you are robbing others, if you live like a hermit. Therefore go into God's world, and live your life out for others.

WHAT IS AN ORGAN?

"I have been thinking of an organ. We call our paper the organ of our Convention, and it seems to me that the term is a most appropriate one. An organ is an instrument with many pipes. Each pipe sounds its own peculiar note, but all play together in the organ and make sweetest music. So each interest of our denomination sounds its own note, but they all come together in the Recorder in finest harmony."

Thus Dr. Brewer tells us what a denominational organ is and what it should be. In giving us the right idea he also indicates the right ideals. For organ must be kept in tune, the operator will certainly need to cultivate taste and touch, and we must never forget that we should attempt no other melodies than those set before us by the Great Composer.—Biblical Recorder.

SPIRITUALITY.

By Rev. Thomas Holmes, D. D., Chelsea, Mich.

I once heard of a little family incident that has been very helpful to me for many years. A little girl asked her mother if she might go to a birthday party of one of her little companions. "Yes, my daughter," said the mother, "if you will be discreet. I am afraid you are not always as discreet as you should be." The daughter replied, "Mamma, what is discreet? Tell me how to be discreet, and I will try." Would not more people be spiritual minded if they knew how?

The necessity of spirituality in the Christian life, and for efficiency in Christian work, is very evident to all who have any earnestness in the matter; and I fully believe that the desire is very strong, and prayer very earnest, for this secret of Christian power and efficiency in every earnest Christian soul. Hoping to be helpful to all such, and "being such a one as Paul (Thomas) the aged," I hope I may be excused for offering a few suggestions as to the means of becoming spiritual minded.

The root of the matter, as pertaining to us, is found in the human constitution, and in the laws that govern the growth and development of the human soul. Man is the only creature in the universe that is triplex in its constitution. Lower forms of life—vegetable and animal—are constituted of matter endowed with vitality. Vitality in the animal is called nephesh in the Hebrew language, which Bible translators have rendered life when found in the brute, and soul when found in man. This distinction should be dropped, and the word should be rendered soul in both cases. The brute, then, is constituted of matter and soul, and is duplex. On the other hand, forms of life that are above man—God, angels, saints in heaven—are constituted of soul and spirit, and are also duplex. Between these two orders of being we find man; so constituted as to be allied to both. He possesses the material body, the soul, and the spirit. Man is, therefore, triplex.

The next thing to be noticed is that, at birth, all the faculties and mighty possibilities of the noblest possible manhood are simply rudimentary. As the complete oak exists in a rudimental condition in the acorn, so a complete manhood exists in the helpless, unconscious babe at birth. Now, as the oak must grow from the acorn, so the mighty man must be grown from the infant; and, in the development of each constituent part, appropriate, God-appointed means must be employed. These means are always of two kinds—food for growth, and exercise for strength. Material food and suitable exercise will develop the strong man—the athlete; mental food and mental exercise will develop the man of mighty intellect; and, by analogy, we should understand that it will require spiritual food and spiritual exercise to develop the spiritual man.

Spirituality, like holiness, is not a direct gift of God. It is a moral condition, the conditions of which must be employed by those who would enjoy it. This means obedience to the laws of spiritual growth and spiritual strength. What, then, are those means? As food for the material body must be such as to awaken thought, so food for the spirit must be such truths as instruct the mind in the moral relations of one intelligent being to another; and the duties that grow out of those relations. It is the presence of the flesh on the one hand, and of the spirit on the other, that makes man a moral agent. "The flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh," and the soul, in the exercise of the will, chooses which to obey. Hence, the spirit needs to be well developed in all matters that may be classified as right or wrong. This is the field of the spiritual life. Every idea of right or wrong, in either conception or action, comes to the soul through the spirit. This is the medium through which the soul approaches and communes with God. This intercommunion of the spirit of man with the Spirit of God is spirituality; and the larger the proportion of the Spirit of God in the communion the greater the spiritual power. What, then, are the means of obtaining this communion?

1. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Nothing can come into close relationship with God "that defileth, or worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you." Depend upon it, my good reader, you can never be spiritual minded, and have spiritual power, until you are freed from sin, and the love of everything sinful. "Be ye holy, for I the Lord your God am holy."

2. You must know by experience what the Psalmist meant when he cried out,

"My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." When you have complied with this condition, you may "Ask, and it shall be given you."

3. Spiritual food, on which the spiritual life must feed, is found in great abundance in the inspired Word of God. Read your Bibles, not as casual items in your newspaper, but as speculators in wheat, corn, and live stock read the market reports. Read a portion every day, inquiring at each verse, What does that mean? How does it apply to me? You will also find spiritual food in attending regularly, faithfully, attentively, all the meetings of the church. That is what the assembling of yourselves together is for. If you are hungering for spiritual food, you will no more miss a sermon or prayer-meeting than you would miss your dinner. A properly-conducted prayer-meeting is a gymnasium for the exercise by prayer and testimony, and some of the talents that God gives to every one of His children to profit withal; thus doubling in spiritual power the gift at first bestowed. Oh, reader, do not neglect the prayer-meeting, nor fail to improve its opportunities to gain spiritual growth and strength.

4. Make religious themes, especially those that relate to personal experiences, the subjects of conversation with your Christian associates, and also with your unconverted associates, whenever you have opportunity.

Other suggestions might be given, but we feel confident that if the members of Christ's church followers in America will follow those already given, the time will soon come when there will be no lack of men and women who will feel, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." The prayer-meeting is the nursery where infant preachers get their start.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ORGANIZATION.

(Paper by Rev. M. L. Bryant, read before the Young People's Convention at Elon College last week).

Organization is the key note to success. Marshall A. Hudson originated the Organized Class Movement 21 years ago, and since that time, under the captions of "Baraca," "Philathea," "International," etc., the movement has become world-wide.

The principle of organization is deeply rooted in all progressive history. The prophet of old wrote, "When the living creatures went the wheels went, for the spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels."

The organization of material, either in the form of manhood or metal, is inevitable to progress and is therefore absolutely necessary.

The derivation of the word "Organization" means, "A tool fitted for a task." And so, throughout this busy world of advance, one beholds wheels everywhere. Man is learning the secret of organization. It opens a vista of design and control. It is strength sought and found. The marvelous machinery of this age is but the result of properly organizing the wedge, the lever and cog. The mighty trusts and combines that control our market place are, as yet, but a feeble voice as to the power of organized wealth. The terror of a mob is in its lack of this principle, while the strength of an army is in its completeness of organization.

While organization may not always mean unity, it does mean co-operation. Some time ago in the city of New York, an Episcopalian, a Jew and a Unitarian united in editing a "Book of Common Worship," yet the church organizations to which these brethren belong, are in no wise similar. To the old adage that "Religion unites where theology divides," we may add, the principle of organization conserves and directs individual effort to success; while individual or independent effort disconnects and frustrates latent opportunity. No better example of this could be suggested, than the local church of which you are now a member. Go far enough back in the history of your church, and you will find no building, no pastor, no organized membership, no Sunday-school, only a scattered few of your faith, going to services when and where they can, but feeling no responsibility to any. Finally a desire to organize a church of their own faith led to your present plant, which is now conserving the interests of your people, and developing their opportunity to contribute hundreds of dollars to missions, education and benevolences; and better still, to impress upon the community the strength of your religious ideals. The strength then of organization is to realize Community or effort in behalf of greater things.

The "Organized Bible Class Movement" is based upon the following principles:

1. For the purpose of increasing interest and efficiency in Bible study.
2. For securing the best methods of class management and Bible teaching.
3. For increasing attendance upon class and church service.
4. For gaining the conversion of men and women and developing them for the Master's service.

The effect of all this certainly will create loyalty to the local church, increase its membership and give it the prestige and power so many churches need. In this day and time, there is no study so important as the Blessed Book of God. No study so disciplines the mind, heart and character as this. No body of men or women can organize for a greater work or on a sounder principle, than for Bible Class study. That is, for the purpose of going down into the wells and mines of the word, and bringing forth the riches of its grace. Of course no organization has in it the power of regeneration; no organization can give life; Ezekiel realized that the "spirit" must be present and assert itself before the wheels would turn. They went because living purpose, and will-power were behind them. The most carefully planned organization will amount to nothing until the necessary human endeavor is asserted. The engine implies the engineer. Soul power is indispensable. In the result of any religious organization, such as we here have in mind the principle worked out will generate co-operative service and offer opportunity for our lives to be more abundant.

All reforms in Church, Sunday school and State have come to us under the guise of organization, while sickly and dead Sunday schools, Endeavor Societies, etc., show the need of this principle being applied. Divided we are half conquered, and men of the world knowing the "get-together secret, often out-wit the men of church. Oh that we might have the spirit of every man in this class movement, belted and geared to the life of God!

Organization as a substitute for the "living creatures," is at variance with inspiration. Jesus Christ brought with Him a Minimum of organization and a Maximum of inspiration; note result—a maximum of Christian efficiency in the early church. I hope therefore it is now clear that the Principle of this Organized Class Movement, is not to clank the wheels of machinery in the ears of worship, or to make the mechanical cogs grind out the things of the spirit, but that "Class Organization," is an ENVOLVING SPIRITUAL OR SUNDAY SCHOOL SCIENCE. We may never find the end of it. Distant scenes beckon us on. Anything that promises to increase the efficiency of Christian service, should be encouraged. What the young men of our day need to learn, is to harmonize the spirit of the age, with the spirit of the Church, and to do this, we must know more of the "hang-together" spirit in our church affairs.

America owes her proud place among the nations of the earth, to her energy and insight in the matter of organization. There are those who cry out against over organization. These remind one of John Ruskin's scorn of the first iron horse in England, which caused the mobs to tear up the first railroads for fear they were going to enslave the people. A few must suffer because of inability to adapt themselves to new conditions, but progress is for the many, not for the few.

If you have tried the organized Bible Class in your school and failed, try again, don't grow long faced and become a prophet of doom, the fault was not in the principle, but in the kind of energy behind it.

The properly applied spiritual power, adequate to turn this machinery, must come from above. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Human machinery will come into contact with this supernatural power of the Holy Spirit, or our best organized principles are but wasted.

Bishop Randolph has well said: "The golden age of the Bible Class is just coming; we are entering upon it with better methods, with deeper consecration and with more intimate knowledge of the psychological law, which govern men. This great army the thin red-line between the Church and heathenism is moving forward to the finest victories we have ever seen."

Gunter.

Sister A. J. Gunter, wife of Deacon A. J. Gunter, passed from labor to reward on the 12th day of January, after a long waiting upon her Savior for her summons. She laid down her armor of warfare and obeyed the summons with Christian fortitude and grace, being resigned to the will of her heavenly Father. Therefore, be it resolved,

First, That, in her death Center Grove has lost a faithful and consistent member, the husband a devoted companion, the children a loving and affectionate mother.

Second, That, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Third, That, a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our church record, a copy be sent to the bereaved family, also to the Christian Sun for publication.

Whereas, It hath pleased our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, to take from our midst, our beloved brother, I. W. Norfleet, who labored with us and for us so long in upbuilding our Sunday school, and who was ever present to lead or to follow in the good work; and,

Whereas, The community at large, religious work in general, and Franklin Christian Sunday-school in particular, have lost the services of a good man, Christian worker, and faithful friend; and,

Whereas, He remembered his Creator in the days of his youth, and when he became old not departing therefrom, but striving to teach the young, he set an example that could well be followed by all who are trying to lead a Christian life and serve their Maker, because in his own words, "We are all young in His cause." Therefore, be it

TEACHING THE NATIONS.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.
Matt. 28:19. (Golden text for Sunday, April 30).

I doubt if God ever laid a task or an obligation upon any one, but that the very one upon whom the task was laid did not need, worst of all, the teaching and the discipline that the task would give, and then would receive, after all, the best lesson and benefits. These Ninevites needed the gospel all right, but the prophet (or historian) Jonah needed somewhat himself. He needed to be taught about as much as they did; and we are constrained to believe that he received benefits and blessing as great as they received, if not greater. Jonah was evidently, even in the days of his preaching and prophesy, a very self-centered, whimsical, obdurate fellow, and one who very much deserved chastisement from the Lord. Jonah preached the need of repentance to the Ninevites; but when they did repent it made him mad. Now there is pie for you. Jonah told them of their wickedness; and when they ceased their wickedness Jonah was angry and disappointed. Jonah wanted to see them keep on in their wickedness and then have the satisfaction of seeing God wipe them off the face of the earth and of himself saying, "I told you so."

Jonah prophesied evil, and he wanted to see that evil doom come to pass. What Jonah needed was to have the conceit taken out of him and himself become merciful, just, forgiving.

That the heathen have received great benefits from having the gospel preached to them there can be no doubt. But that Christian nations who have helped and have preached this gospel have been very largely blessed and benefited all thinking people will know. This at any rate is true; from a financial point of view the nations that have sent the gospel have received the greater blessings and benefits. We people of America will get back through the channels of trade larger financial gains from pagan nations than they will receive from us in gifts to missions. And giving to foreign missions brought this about.

And the Christian nations needed, like Jonah, to have the conceit and the selfishness taken out of them. We have learned much, through their efforts at evangelization, from other nations. We have learned a larger sympathy, a broader fellowship, a more liberal toleration, a greater love and consideration for all classes and conditions of men.

It is doubtful if God ever calls a preacher to the pulpit, a Superintendent to the Sunday-school, a deacon to service, but that He has in store the larger blessing for him who undertakes the work than for those in whose behalf the work is undertaken.

We may advance, and do much in Christian service, but further service has deeper, further and richer blessings for us.

God was dealing with Jonah to reach and rescue him, as well as with these Ninevites, and Jonah seems to have needed the schooling and the discipline as much as these Ninevites.

AND NOW ABIDETH.

There are very many things which do not abide. They fall away. How we do work and worry, fret and flurry, about the things which are transient, the things which today are, but tomorrow are not.

In his immortal ode to Charity, Paul realizes this. He recounted a great many things that fail and fade. He enumerates eloquence, great gifts, noble endowments, abundant goods, great knowledge, wonderful attainments, powers of prophecy; he speaks of childhood, of youth, of manhood, he speaks of alertness of mind, skill of body, ability of intellect. Now when all had been heaped and lumped together, the inspired writer drives his shaft to the infinite depths and cries, "Now abideth." What, any or all of these things enumerated? Not by any manner of means. Now, when and after all is said and done, there abideth just three things: Faith, Hope, Charity.

And these after all are the things worth striving for. They remain. They endure. They abide.

Faith to endure, faith to toil, faith to labor and to believe in the passing and ever pressing present; Hope to invite, hope to challenge, hope to beckon, with brave and buoyant heart, to a large and unending Future; Charity in thought, in speech, in conduct, to all who are around about, these indeed are about all that abideth. These are worth seeking after, worth cultivating, worth developing in us to their highest and holiest degree. That our Faith may be increased, that our Hope may be enlarged, and that our Charity may grow large within us day by day is by no means the least, is in fact the holiest ambition that one may have for one's self.

And now (when all is said and done and finished) abideth these three; just these three; that is all and that is enough.

For there are the essentials of our longing, of our loving and of our living.

YOUNG PEOPLE IN THE CHURCHES.

The Christian Sun issues this week a number filled with items of interest to the young people of the churches. Last week our Young People's Convention was in biennial session and the minutes of that meeting, with several papers presented, are given in full. This ought to be of real worth and we trust it will be.

We do not believe in turning the church over to the young people, but we do believe in turning the young people over to the church. We do not believe that young people are about to capture the church; but we do believe that the church ought to try to capture the young people.

Time was when parents undertook to train the young in lessons of piety, reverential obedience, and deep love for holy and sacred things. Family altars and fire-side conversation on Scripture, salvation and the eternal verities prevailed. Now deplore it as we may, that day has passed. Parents have become too busy to lead their children to have visions and dreams of holy and heavenly things. Great indeed is the pity of it, but it seems to us as an indisputable fact.

Shall nothing come to take the place of this? Are young people to be left to plan all their spare time out in play and petty pleasures? Shall not these young minds be trained in some way to think, sometimes, the holy and the heavenly? Shall not these willing hands be turned now and then to deeds of unselfish devotion to that which pertains to eternal truth? Shall not these young hearts be tuned to sing and to tell their Master's praise and power? Must we wait indeed till young men have become old and young women sedate before their loving loyalty and willing service are plighted, pledged and prejudiced to the church and to its privileges and possibilities? God forbid.

Now as we understand it, the Christian Church is beginning only too late to seek to get hold of its young people and train them to service in the vineyard of the Lord.

Christian Endeavor is simply the young Christian endeavoring to do something, trying to find something to do, for the Master, for the advancement of our Savior's kingdom. The Organized Class, as we conceive it, is a number of young men, or young women, banded together that all may help each in undertaking something for self-improvement, and for the spread of charity, good works and loving kindness in the community.

Work and worship are words closely akin. Maybe they came from the same source, had identical origin. And they are not yet far apart. The person who does not work much will not worship much. These young people's organizations are attempts to get young people to work so that they will come to worship. If Endeavor and Class organization do not lead the young people to worthier and more sacred and solemn worship, then they have missed their mark, and should not be at all. If any should ask you what those Young People's Conventions and meetings and Organizations are tell them that they are attempts in Christ's name to get the young people of our day to work so that they may worship.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Modern Scholars of the Bible.—President Faunce of Brown University is himself a modern scholar of even more than national fame, and what he thinks and says of the modern scholar are worth considering, at any rate. Speaking at a great gathering at Trinity Church, Boston, last Sunday night President Faunce said that the men who translated the King James Bible 300 years ago knew how to use the English language better than any scholars that could be gotten together in our day.

"Men knew then how to use the language as we know how to use edged tools today. We can't equal them. We know too much to be simple. We have too many doubts to be sure; we are too conscious of the verdicts of the critics to aim straight at the hearts of the people.

"Since 1611 no man in England or America has written in such direct or simple style as these Bible translators, save John Bunyan and Abraham Lincoln—the latter in his second inauguration and Gettysburg address."

This may not be a reflection on the scholarship of the present, but it is a compliment to the thorough learning of 300 years ago. We are not learning language and the force and meaning of it now as people did then; but scholarship should always simplify and not make complex. We are learning too many things somewhat to be thorough in the few things that are and should be essential.

King and Queen.—On June 22 King George V and Queen Mary of England will be crowned, and their titles and sovereignty formally declared. Now it makes not a whit of difference that, politically, these titles are empty and that sovereignty has really departed from the throne in England. It is all the same. The English people, and forsooth, well nigh all other peoples, will pay homage to this King and Queen. From the four corners of this earth, men and women, great and and, will foregather in the English metropolis and the world's greatest city, and the world's foremost nation, will take on a holiday air and don gala attire. Today and for months past English royalty has been busy planning and preparing suitable clothes and costumes to wear, studying and learning the parts they are severally to play, and adorning their houses and places for festivities that are to follow. The millions in money that will be expended in preparation for the king's and queen's coronation simply cannot be computed. The events and issues of the coronation are social; but the rites and ceremonies of the coronation are religious. The Archbishop of Canterbury will have charge of the coronation ceremonies in Westminster Abbey, the churchman himself placing the crown and presenting the Bible with the words "the most valuable thing this world affords," and with this invocation, "God crown you with a crown of glory and righteousness that by the ministry of this, our benediction, having a right faith and manifold fruit of good works, you may obtain the crown of an everlasting kingdom by the gift of Him whose kingdom endureth forever."

REV. L. E. SMITH, GREENSBORO, N. C.,
President of Young People's Convention.

So it makes no difference. Kings and queens are powerful yet. The ladies in all Christendom and out of it too will this year wear coronation hats, and the gentlemen will somehow give a token that this is coronation year.

We are social creatures; were so long before we became political parties, sects or clans; and social bonds are not easily severed. He who influences and controls society, rules and reigns in the social realm, is more powerful than a king with his scepter. If our social world can be made religious there may be no fears as to the political. He who influences the social life strikes to the very bottom of things.

—The Baracas and Philatheas met in Annual Convention at Greensboro Saturday, Sunday and Monday last. These organized works of all denominations foregathered from the four corners of the State and had a convention of enthusiasm and inspiration. A paper was purchased which is to be used as official organ; and a secretary was employed to give all his time to this organized work, in church and Sunday school, at a salary or $75.00 per month.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Rev. M. W. Butler addressed the Convention on the subject, "The Convention's Relation to the Young People's Worker."

Prof. P. J. Kernodle also spoke on the same subject. On motion a committee of three was appointed to confer with Rev. M. W. Butler and Prof. P. J. Kernodle as to the advisability of accepting the propositions made by them to the Convention, viz: that the Convention assume the authority of the publication of the Young People's Worker, or endorse it as its organ and elect department editors. Dr. W. C. Wicker, Rev. L. I. Cox, and Rev. A. T. Banks were appointed on the committee.

The President of the Convention made his report as follows:

Report of the President.

There are probably those who feel that little has been accomplished by the Young People's Convention during the past two years. In many respects I believe it wise that we have proceeded slowly and cautiously. We are evidently laying plans for a great work. Should the Convention cease to exist from this session, the past two years' work has been well worth while. In fact, what has been accomplished leads us to believe that we could not afford, under any circumstances, to discontinue what we have begun. As your president, I have not been able to devote, by any means, as much of my time to the work as I would like to have done. The work in which I am at present engaged has so completely monopolized my time that I have been unable to do much else. The officers of the Convention have kept in touch with each other, and transacted the necessary business by correspondence, leaving the active work to be done by the Field Secretary, Prof. Harper. We have been handicapped by lack of means, which is probably natural with all similar organizations. This Convention should make provision for ample support along this line for the next biennium. A Field Secretary to devote his entire time to the work of the Convention is a matter which should claim our serious consideration at the earliest possible moment.

Too much cannot be said in commendation of the splendid work done by Prof. Harper, who by vote of the Executive Committee, has filled the position of Field Secretary and Department Editor in the Sun. Regularly each week he has occupied as much space in the Sun as the Editor could spare him. Through the interest which has thus been aroused, Christian Endeavor Societies, Teacher-Training and Adult Bible Classes have been organized until now the future of our Young People's work is more hopeful than ever before.

Respectfully submitted,
S. M. Smith, Pres.

The Treasurer reported total collected, $206.68; of which amount, $163.04 had been paid out, leaving a balance on hand of $43.64.

Report of Editorial and Field Secretary.

I have the honor to submit my Biennial Report as Editorial and Field Secretary.

My election was early in June, 1909, and I began work on June 21st of that year. My salary was to be $100.00 per year and expenses for postage and travel and stenographer. I was to edit the C. E. Topic for the Sun each week and do such field work as the time at my disposal would permit.

I sent a circular letter to all the pastors, calling for certain necessary information. Many did not respond, but the majority did. By advice of the Treasurer and Secretary I installed a card system of filing information, and began to push the organization of Teacher-Training and Organized Classes, and of Christian Endeavor Societies by correspondence and by public address. I saw that the work must suffer if in the editorial capacity the Sun carried only the C. E. Topic. So I began writing, in addition, enough matter to fill, in all, two pages of matter. This custom I have kept up, though it was no part of my contract. I trust it has done some good. I have to report from information gathered from the officers of the various Sunday school and Young People's Conventions and from the files in the office that we now have auxiliary church and Sunday school organizations as follows: Cradle Rolls, 18;

Home Departments, 15; Mission Study Classes, 2; Teacher-Training Classes, 30; Organized Class, 58; Christian Endeavor Societies, 41. This is not a flattering report, but it shows a substantial and healthy growth and should encourage us for the future.

I have visited many points in our brotherhood in view of the Young People's work, but have done so without cost to this body, in many cases bearing my own expenses. This has been a pleasure to me. For postage, express, phone messages respecting this program, and record books for this Convention I have spent in the nearly two years of my tenure of office, $26.98, of which $10.00 has been paid, leaving a balance of $16.98 still due.

Last April, during the sitting of the Southern Christian Convention in Suffolk, Va., I submitted a written report to the Executive Board of this body and also printed it in the Sun. On June 3, 1910, I wrote to Prof. S. M. Smith, your President, that my term would expire on June 21, and told him I was ready to resign, as my duties at the College would be especially onerous. He wrote to me to keep on until he could consult the Executive Committee and ascertain their wishes. On July 7, 1910, I called to see Prof. Smith in Norfolk, but he did not then have the opinion of the Committee. He requested that I continue until I heard from him further. On Dec. 27, 1910, I again called on Prof. Smith and told him I should have to know within two weeks what the Committee wished done, as I did not wish to continue as editor without election. Within that time I received notification of my election as editor and field secretary until this body should meet on the same terms as for the first year. I accepted, but have received no salary since June 21, 1910, and have borne out of my own pocket all expense of the field secretary's work, except printing programs, and stenographic service in connection with getting out the correspondence looking to the assembling of this convention. This I did at the request of President Smith.

In conclusion I wish to thank the members of the Executive Committee in particular and of the Church at large for their loyalty and helpfulness in the large and important work of pioneering the Young People's work in our Church. There have been mistakes, but you have dealt kindly with them. There have been successes, and for these we give thanks to the Giver of every good and gracious gift.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. A. Harper,
Ed. and Field Sec.

4-17-1911.

The Secretary, D. J. Sipe, being absent, no Secretary's report was offered.

The following bills were presented and ordered to be paid: A. L. Lincoln, for stenographic work, $8.00. Pate Printing Co., for printing, $7.00.

W. A. Harper, expenses as Editorial and Field Sec., $16.98. The Treasurer was also authorized to pay to the Eastern N. C. S. S. Convention the amount due them, $43.40, which amount had been borrowed to publish the S. S. Handbook in 1909.

It was moved and carried that the pledge of $5.00, made by Prof. S. M. Smith at the Convention two years ago be cancelled on account of more than that amount due him by the Convention.

It was moved and carried that a vote of thanks be tendered D. J. Sipe for the contribution of an expense account of $9.00 due him by the Convention.

The Song Book Committee offered the following report which was adopted:

Your committee appointed to recommend to this Convention a suitable song book for Young People's Societies, beg leave to ask that the Convention grant us sixty days to investigate the various books on the market and thus be able to make a more intelligent report.

Mrs. J. L. Foster,
Mrs. J. W. Patton,
A. W. Andes,

Committee.

The nominating Committee made the following report:

We, your committee to nominate officers, name the following:

For President, Rev. L. E. Smith, Greensboro, N. C.; for Vice President, W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; for Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.; for Assistant Secretary, E. T. Hines, MeLeansville, N. C.; for Treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C.; for Editor and Field Secretary, Prof. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

C. H. Rowland,
J. O. Atkinson,
A. W. Andes.

The report was adopted with the provision that the election of a Field Sec. and Editor be deferred until the report of the Executive Committee should be in hand.

On motion the following were constituted a committee to revise the Constitution: Prof. S. M. Smith, Rev. L. I. Cox, and Prof. W. A. Harper.

By motion the Convention adjourned for dinner until 2 p. m.

Upon reassembling at the hour appointed the Convention heard the report of the Executive Committee as follows:

Report of Executive Committee.

The necessary business of the Convention during the past two years has been transacted by correspondence. The Convention in its last session authorized the Executive Committee to elect a Field Secretary on such terms as they might deem advisable. On June 21, 1909, Prof. W. A. Harper was elected Field Secretary and Department Editor in the Sun at a salary of $100.00 per year and expenses. The contract provided that he was to serve one year, or longer if funds were available for the payment of his salary. After one year's service, the matter of his continuance was presented for consideration, the Committee voting to continue his services under the original contract, until the meeting of this body.

Respectfully submitted,
S. M. Smith, Ch'mn.
L. I. Cox,
C. H. Rowland.

Committee.

On motion C. H. Rowland, and the Field Secretary and the Treasurer were appointed a Committee to devise some method of financing the Convention.

On motion Dr. J. O. Atkinson took the floor and solicited subscriptions to pay off the deficit now existing, collecting $178.59.

It was voted that the next biennial session of the Convention meet within the bounds of the Eastern Va. Conference, time and place to be determined by the Executive Committee.

Young People's Worker.

The committee appointed to consider the proposition made by Rev. M. W. Butler and Prof. P. J. Kernodle in regard to the Young People's Worker reported as follows:

We, your special committee appointed to consider the proposition of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, publisher, and Rev. M. W. Butler, editor of The Young People's Worker, have given the matter our careful consideration and recommend:

First, That we endorse The Young People's Worker and encourage the people of this Convention and the several departments of church work that this Convention represents to subscribe for the paper, contribute to it matters of interest and give their influence to its circulation under its present management so long as it is loyal to the spirit and purpose of this organization.

Second, That the department in The Christian Sun be continued by the Convention Editor and Field Secretary and that this Convention give its endorse-

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The feeling prevails that the revolution in Mexico is practically at an end.

—"A Christian Endeavor in every church and an Organized Class in every Sunday School." That is not bad.

—The third annual session of the Baraca and Philathea classes in this State was held in Greensboro April 22-24. There were reported 600 delegates present.

—A good friend writing for herself and husband closes an appreciative letter with a sublime sentiment which we gratefully acknowledge. It is a Bible message which is simply cited—Ruth 2:12.

—Brother pastor, are your young people—the young men and young women of your congregation—drifting from the church, or are they becoming wedded to the church and influential and active agencies in the Church?

—What are pastors doing to give the young people the privilege and the benefits of growth in grace and works for the enlargement of the Master's kingdom? After a while the boy will become very active in sin. Does not the church furnish a field and a sphere for his surplus energies and activities?

—Governor Brown, of Georgia, denies the application for pardon to Thomas E. Stripling, who was arrested recently as chief-of-police in Danville, Va., and carried back to Ga., to serve a life-sentence in that State for murder. Many favored pardoning Stripling because for 14 years he had lived a peaceable life.

—How many young men, between the ages of 16 and 25, say, in your church are active in any line of Christian interest and influence? Many of them are quite influential, leaders in fact, in worldly interests, in play, in the social whirl. Can some at least of their activity not be directed to the channels of the church, in push and perseverance for Christ and His kingdom?

—Christian activity in youth is no new thing. It is as old as the Bible. Josiah, one of the best of Judah's good kings, went to the throne when he was eight years old, "And he did what was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left. For in the eighth year of his reign (at 16) while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father; and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem." (II Chron. 24:2, 3.

There is Christian activity in youth for you. We do not know what some who are opposed to youths getting busy for Christ and the church are going to do with that Scripture.

—We extend sympathy to Bro. Joseph L. Clements who mourns the loss by death last Thursday of his beloved wife at their home in North Wilkesboro. Two children survive her, one of whom is an infant. The wife's maiden name was Miss Nellie Blair of North Wilkesboro and was a most amiable and excellent character. She was held in high esteem by a large circle of friends and was much loved for her many Christian charms and graces. Rev. W. G. Clements and wife, of Morrisville, father and mother of the bereaved husband passed through Elon Thursday night, where they were joined by their daughter, Miss Ethel, to attend the funeral which was held from the Presbyterian church in Wilkesboro of which church Mrs. Clements was a consistent member. "Joe" made many friends when he was a student in Elon College who grieve with him his untimely loss.

—The Sun's editor had the high privilege last week of helping Principal R. P. Crumpler break up his Bethany High School in Rockingham County. It was a great and good humored gathering, patient indeed and long suffering. Brother Crumpler is schooling the young, and the old, of the community, in many Christian virtues and is certainly doing a great and good work for education. The County Superintendent was present and told us that this school was doing more than any school in his county for the educational and moral uplift of the community. Crumpler has made good as teacher and as disciplinarian, and there is no room for doubt of that. His constituents and patrons all speak in high praise of his work and he holds an enviable place for usefulness and influence among the people. We did not know whom to congratulate and felicitate more, Bro. Crumpler in his success, or the people in their fortune at having him labor amongst them.

—Pastor Rountree, Waverly, writes this note of cheer: "Easter was a banner day in Waverly, and with our church especially. It was not because of any methods we adopted, nor any work we did, nor the hats the ladies wore (I think); but because it was Easter and a grand and a beautiful day. All services were exceedingly well attended, the churches being filled to their capacity. The services were solemn and sweet and full of the spirit of the day and the occasion. In the morning services were held at the Methodist church, in the afternoon at the Episcopal, and in the evening at the Christian. There were about three hundred people present at our services. The choir rendered music most excellently under the leadership of Mr. J. F. Baird. The day was closed most happily and every one was in a joyful spirit I think. Personally, I never enjoyed a day more." We regret that this Special Edition for The Young People's Convention crowds out Bro. Rountree's excellent Easter sermon which we hoped to carry last week, but could not for the press. It is timely and will appear shortly.

—Thomas Carlyle, the great English essayist and historian, used to insist that you could count on the man who could sing while he worked—there was a soul in him that would win out. Smiling is not exactly the same as singing but it carries the same significance evidently, for a correspondent of the Greensboro Daily News, in a recent write up of "The Romantic Story of John A. Mills and The Raleigh and Southport" gives a story of human interest that appeals to one, the secret of the success in building and financing a railroad being attributed to the ability to smile. The News' story concludes with this final phrase:

"For nearly 20 years I have known John Mills. I knew him when I was only a boy. His head today is nearly white, but his step is as firm, and his carriage as erect as it was 20 years ago.

"And he is not an old man yet—not on your life! He is a young man—he will always be a young man. He has faced discouragement, sometimes apparent defeat—the cup of great sorrow has been forced to his lips, but Mills is young, young in spite of it all, for John Mills knows how to look the world in the face—and smile."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The attacks upon the Bible and the Christian religion, in these last years, have brought forth defenders of the faith. It is no doubt true that Christianity has gained by such discussions as have brought the Book and theology into the limelight. Truth cannot lose by any test that clears the field of error and strengthens the allegiance of its adherents. It may be admitted that some old forms of theological statements were untrue and such forms will yield to the light of modern criticism; but the Book itself will be all the stronger when false interpretations are removed from Christian literature.

Some reputed scholars throw doubt upon miracles, inspiration, the virgin birth and other cherished doctrines; but other scholars as great, and in a better position to pass judgment on Biblical questions, have come to the defense of the Scriptures and informed the public mind on the great doctrines of salvation. Paul's declaration in I Cor. 2:4, that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" is denied by many good men. Beecher said in his day, "that any man of intellectual ability could understand Scripture whether he was a believer or not." That is the fallacy of many writers since. Men enter the field of Biblical criticism as they would the field of historical criticism, upon the assumption that scholarship alone qualifies men for an examination of the Bible and Christianity. I think Paul's statement may be safely interpreted to mean that the non-believer cannot understand the spiritual Book and the spiritual life; and I do not think that such interpretation violates reason, much less the word of God.

It seems to be reasonable to say that a Mathematician would not be a competent critic of Music. One might be familiar with all the formulas of Algebra and all the intricacies of Calculus and know very little about the infinite possibilities of the gamut. Only a musician is a competent judge of music. A Mechanic might know all the essentials of the great machines and the laws that control them; but he would be a poor judge or critic of Law. Criticism in Law requires a Lawyer. The Bible is a spiritual Book, not a literary Book, and literary knowledge does not qualify for Biblical criticism: only the spiritual man can understand the spiritual Book. That the literary man can criticize the Bible is not only the fallacy of the Higher Critic, but the weakness of the modern pulpit. The schools have turned out literary experts who have entered the ministry ignorant of the essential qualification of a preacher. Every minister is conscious that his weakness is in the lack of spiritual power and not in the lack of education. The sooner we all learn that the church is a spiritual institution, and not a social organization; that a sermon is a spiritual message, and not a literary production; that the minister is a "man of God," and not an ordained priest; that soul-saving, and not entertainment is the function of Christianity; that the Bible is a heart-book and not a head-book only; that Christianity is larger than any university or school of thought; and that God rules the world and nations, the better it will be for mankind. We must keep in mind that God is greater than all opponents and that the Bible is greater than all philosophers. Some years ago builders were using stone from the great palisades on the Hudson river to construct great buildings in New York City. They were using dynamite to tear down those great walls of stone that God had placed by the great river. The State of New York said this must stop. Capital said: "we will go on;" but capital learned that the State of New York was greater than any strong corporation. The destruction of those great walls of grandeur had to cease. The unseen power said the natural glory of the Hudson must be preserved. So the destructive critics have done damage and may do more to the Bible; but God is greater and stronger than all and his Books will stand. "Heaven and Earth may pass away; but my words shall not pass away." W. W. Staley.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

Froude says the book of Job towers above the poetry of the world. Charles Dickens says the most touching story in literature is the parable of the prodigal son. Renan pronounces the Gospel of Luke the most beautiful book in the world. Charles Dudley Warner says that, wholly apart from its religious or ethical value, the Bible is the book that no intelligent person who wishes to come in contact with the world of thought and to show the ideas of the great minds of the Christian era can afford to be ignorant of.

Lord Bacon said: "There never was found in any age of the world either religion or law that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible."

"That the truths of the Bible," says Dr. Wayland, "have the power of awakening an intense moral feeling in man under every variety of character, learned or ignorant, civilized or savage; that they make bad men good and send a pulse of healthful feeling through all the domestic, civil, and social relations; that they teach men to love right, to hate wrong, and to seek each other's welfare as the children of the common parent; that they control and thus make men proficient in the science of government; and, finally, that they teach him to aspire after a conformity to a being of infinite holiness, and fill him with hopes infinitely more purifying, more exalted, more suited to his nature than any other which this world has ever known, are facts as incontrovertible as the laws of philosophy or the demonstrations of mathematics."

Then is it not passing strange that the people of Missouri, and of other States of this republic, in the twentieth century exclude such a book from the public schools? Daniel Webster once said: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on and prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity." The conduct of Missouri's Legislature last Sunday was a forerunner of just such a catastrophe.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. W. G. Clements and wife spent Thursday night on the Hill with their daughter, Miss Ethel Clements, who accompanied them on Friday morning to North Wilkesboro to attend the funeral of Mrs. Joe Clements.

Dr. Moffitt went to Asheboro on Wednesday of last week and spent several days in the interest of the Special Fund.

Dr. W. C. Wicker and Prof. T. C. Amick attended the Sunday School Convention in High Point this week.

The following might be of interest to some of our readers, because it comes from the school of an Elon man who is doing fine work:

"It might be interesting to you to know that Kenly was very victorious in the County Contest held in Smithfield Easter Monday. We won the championship of the County in tennis; the standing broad jump; tied in running broad jump; first place in declamation, recitation, piano, best speaker on debate, and second place in quartette. We won six of the ten prizes given and tied for the seventh."

Prof. W. P. Lawrence went to Durham on last Sunday morning where he assisted Rev. J. O. Cox in his effort to raise $500.00 for his church.

We are glad to be able to report that Dr. J. U. Newman, who has been ill for a month, is out again and able to meet his classes. He has had a pretty hard time, but it is hoped he will not be taken again soon.

On Tuesday of last week Dr. J. O. Atkinson went to Summerfield, N. C., to the commencement of the Summerfield High School, of which Rev. R. P. Crumpler is Principal. X., Correspondent.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

"The sword of Mohammed and the Koran are the most stubborn enemies of civilization, liberty, and truth which the world has yet known. "While other religions and systems of error have fallen before the advance of truth, as Dagon before the ark of Jehovah, Islam, like mighty Goliath, defies the armies of the living God and the progress of Christ's Kingdom? In three continents it presents an unbroken front and is armed with a proud and aggressive spirit. At a very conservative estimate there are 200,000,000 Mohammedans—one seventh of the human race! One seventh of the whole population of Asia is Moslem. Every third man, woman or child in Africa is a believer in Mohammed. It is a world problem. The great task to which Christ summons His Church at the beginning of the twentieth century is the evangelization of the Mahomedan world.—Dr. S. M. Zwemer, Missionary to Africa.

WHAT NEXT?

The Young People's General Convention adjourned at 10 P. M. on April 17, after holding eight sessions, extending over 3 days. Many excellent addresses were made, many dreams dreamed, many ideas advanced, and a few definite plans inaugurated. None of these things, however, are a test of the Convention's right to endure. If this were all, the Convention doomed and the sooner the gong sounded the better.

But this is not all. The more than 80 delegates who attended the Convention and deliberated for its welfare were determined, consecrated, with their eyes to the future. They resolved individually and collectively that the Convention should live and be worth while. The motto is a definite one—the organization of a Christian Endeavor Society in each church and of Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday-school. This is definite and to the point and the Convention hopes to do much in a practical way looking to this end during the next biennium.

The next step was to place the Convention on a firm basis financially by paying it out of debt and providing for its future support. These plans are entrusted to the Treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox to work, and that means they will be worked.

The first meeting of the new Executive Committee showed it to be thoroughly awake to the demands upon it and it went at things harmoniously and with a vim. President Smith and Secretary Andes are going to give time and energy and prudent forethought and large concern to their part of the work. This causes us to take courage and hope for larger things.

But these officials, be they ever so capable and devoted, be they ever so dauntless and determined, can not carry this great enterprise of a great Church forward to success, unless they have the cooperation of the entire Brotherhood. For them, as they assume the mantle of responsibility and the toga of the office, we bespeak the earnest sympathy, sacrificing interest, and devoted prayers of the church generally. With these essentials granted, there is no cause why great things should not result for our Church through the channel of this Convention during the next two years. Together, brethren; we can not afford to do otherwise. "United we stand; divided we fall," said Franklin. The Convention shall stand, not fall, because it has had and will have behind it a united Church.

THE BUSINESS SESSION OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

The Finance Committee's report showed an indebtedness of $141.73. An offering amounting to $175. in cash and pledges, was immediately made to cover this deficit and leave a nest-egg for the incoming year. The Convention adopted as its financial plans for the future—personal solicitation by its Treasurer, an annual special offering in the Sunday-Schools, C. E. Societies, Teacher-Training, and Organized Classes, Home Departments, and Mission Study Classes, and requesting each Young People's, Sunday-school, or Sunday-school and Young People's Convention, operating in our Southern Conferences, to contribute one cent per member annually. The Nominating Committee reported as follows: President, Rev. L. E. Smith, Greensboro, N. C., Vice President, Mr. W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.; Assistant Secretary, Mr. E. T. Hines, McCleansville, N. C.; and Treasurer, Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C. The election of Department Editor of the Christian Sun and Field Secretary was referred to the Executive Committee. The Convention according to report of its Committee, Dr. W. C. Wicker, Rev. A. T. Banks, and Rev. L. I. Cox decided to endorse the Young People's Worker and urge its circulation among our Young People so long as it should be loyal to the ideals of this Convention. The Committee on Constitution recommended some changes, which the previous two-years' experience had indicated as advisable. The Music Committee asked for 60 days to investigate before recommending song books for Sunday schools and C. E. Societies. It was decided to hold the next Convention in Eastern Virginia, time and place to be determined by the Executive Committee.

A CONTRIBUTED ARTICLE.

Below we print an article, read before the Young People's General Convention recently by Prof. A. Liggett Lincoln, which deals with a vital topic in Sunday-school work. This is in a department of the Sunday school in which Prof. Lincoln has had large and valuable experience, having acted for some time as Secretary of the Elon College Sunday school, in which he is now a teacher. We bespeak for it a large reading and careful consideration.

Sunday School Records and Reports.

There is no more important phase of Sunday school work than the keeping of records. And, of course, the keeping of the records is primarily for the purpose of making reports and giving proper credits and recognitions. We all work better under pressure, and especially is this true in the Sunday school, because there are so many amusements and other distracting influences brought to bear on the young people of today, tending to keep them out of the Sunday School. And these young active minds cannot be interested without special effort and by using all the means known to mankind, not only to keep them from dropping out, but also to keep up the interest necessary to make the school a success. No matter how much the Superintendent or teacher works, if he cannot enlist the pupil also in the work, and get each one to feel a personal responsibility, the student's Sunday School career will not be productive of much good.

Nothing spurs a class on more than the enthusiastic and well-meant competition between the different classes in a Sunday school. How the records of this competition can be best kept and the reports can be most successfully presented is a problem which every Superintendent faces, and on the handling of these two questions depends largely the success to be attained. Every Superintendent must have an energetic, wide-awake Secretary and an up-to-date business-like Treasurer, if he hopes to keep the attendance of his school up to the standard of the neighboring schools, and if he endeavors to make his school the best in the community.

The Secretary.—The Secretary should not only keep the records, but he should endeavor to bring them before the school in such a forceful and telling way as to compel the attention of every member of the school. He should have a good black-board large enough to make a report that can be read all over the room. He should have a chart or thermometer to show the fluctuations in attendance and contributions from Sunday to Sunday. He should have a good minute book, and a larger book in which to keep the permanent records of the school. He should see that the needed supplies are kept on hand. He should supervise all printed matter used from time to time by the school, and he should be personally acquainted with as many members of the school as possible. And above all, he should use as much variety as possible in the keeping and the reporting of the records of the school.

One of the best methods for secretaries to keep up with the reports of the various classes is the use of the class record book or card system, having each class secretary to fill out certain blanks, so that when the records come to the secretary for permanent record and report, he will have definite and uniform information in hand, and then he will be able to keep check on each individual member of the school.

In the keeping of records at least three points ought to be recorded: Attendance, both as to regularity and punctuality, Bible Study, or lesson preparation, and Contribution.

The Record of Visitors.—Every school is sure to have many visitors, and many of them will be distinguished men and women. A large book should be kept to record the names and addresses of such visitors, and some schools have a form letter which they send to every visitor expressing their pleasure at having him with them, and asking him to come again. In this way, a visitor may often become a permanent member of the school, or at any rate he is made to feel good if such a plan is followed. The attitude of a stranger towards a community is largely influenced by the way he is treated while in this community, hence the Secretary should not only record the name, but endeavor to especially interest every visitor.

The Treasurer.—The Treasurer is an exceedingly important officer. The offices of secretary and treasurer in some small schools are combined, but this is a mistake. There is plenty of work even in a small school for a treasurer if he does his full duty. The Treasurer should be chosen with utmost care. The finances of the school should be handled in a business-like way, and hence it requires someone to manage this who has an aptitude for the work. He should keep his books in such a way that he or anyone else can at a moment's notice discover receipts, expenditures, and balances. The receipts and expenditures should be balanced so that he can account for every cent passing through his hands.

He should not receive any money without issuing a duly signed receipt, and he should pay out no money except at the request of the chairman of the finance committee, and he should demand a receipt for every cent he expends.

The Treasurer should be constantly devising plans by which the contribution of the school should increase. At the beginning of the year he should prepare a budget of expenses for the year. It is well to have the Superintendent and Finance Committee assist in this work. The budget should call for liberal contributions for definite purposes, with a marginal allowance for unexpected calls. The budget should be brought before the school and adopted. If liberal contributions are expected, the pupils should be taught and trained to give regularly, systematically, and intelligently. Many schools do not let the pupils know at the beginning of the year why they should give, how much they should, or to what purposes they should give; nor do they let them know at the end of the year how much they have given or for what the contributions have been used. This is not business, and when such methods are followed it is no wonder that the schools get barely enough to meet their running expenses.

Each teacher, the secretary, the treasurer and every other officer of the school should make an annual report. This report should be full, and should cover all the ground of their work. And by permanent record of these reports the growth and development of a school can be accurately and quickly traced. It will form a statistical history of the school that will prove exceedingly interesting and valuable in after years.

These are only some of the most important duties of the Secretary and Treasurer of the School, and no code of laws can be gotten together to cover every duty of every Secretary and Treasurer, but enough has been said to show that these are important offices and if they are well filled the taking care of the records and reports will be brought to a sound business basis, and the school will prosper and enlarge in an unprecedented manner.

C. E. TOPIC FOR MAY 7—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Lesson from Ruth: Ruth 1: 14-22. (Consecration Meeting).

The Book of Ruth.—Have all the endeavorers open their Bibles and follow silently while the four chapters of this beautiful Bible romance are dramatically read by nine chosen for that purpose to read as follows: the narrative portions, the part of Naomi, the part of Orpah, the part of Ruth, the part of Boaz, the part of his servant, the part of his kinsman, the part of the people, and the part of the women. If all read, this will make it unnecessary to call the roll, as all will have taken some part in the meeting already besides singing.

The Leader.—There are many fine lessons from the life of this grand woman, her loyalty, her affection, her character as such. Perhaps the leader will desire to speak of the last of these and to draw from it the truth that character is not dependent upon circumstances or surroundings. Ruth was a heathen, a Moabite, yet she was a pious soul and became an ancestor of Jesus Christ. We can rise above our surroundings, just as the pond lily comes from mud and slime to spotless perfection of color and fragrant sweetness of odor.

Written Work.—A three-minute character study each of, "Ruth from the Moabite Standpoint" and of "Orpah from the Jewish Standpoint."

PERILS OF SABBATH DESECRATION.

Is it not true that sins like those of the people of Nehemiah's day are the sins cursing the people of to day? Moral delinquency is the charge everywhere among a people who have no Sabbath. The immoral and dissolute life, as it often happens on the Sabbath in such profligate cities as Paris, Rome, Berlin, and our own San Francisco, makes necessary an army of vigilance for the protection of life and property. This loose view of life, this disposition to disregard the holy day, together with the dissolving and disintegrating influence of the modern interurban excursions, the automobile craze, vaudeville shows, etc., have well-nigh depleted our churches of worshipers. These matters of grave importance, provoked most serious consideration. Why the lax views regarding the Sabbath? Why the loose views touching marriage and divorce? Why the dearth of worshipers at the house of God on the holy Sabbath day? Why the universal indifference to the all-important question, the Christian religion? Will the answer to these questions involve the question of the Sabbath?

Let the Church statesmen see. Listen to Isaiah: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

My Dear Children and Friends:

We trust that our many friends had a delightful Easter and that the many lessons on the resurrection which they both heard and saw greatly strengthened their hope. What Easter service did you render your risen Lord? Was it that of careless frivolity or of deep hopeful thoughts on the resurrection and noble acts of Christian service? Possibly it's too soon for us to begin hearing from the many friends whom we requested to make and send us an Easter gift.

We are still looking for more friends—50 friends who will give us $10. each at once; 100 friends who will give us $5.00 each at once; 200 friends who will give us $2.50 each at once; 1000 friends who will give us $1.00 each at once, and thus pay off every dollar on the Orphanage and put us on our feet—can you help? Will you do so now? What a splendid Easter offering the above would make!

Donations:

Mrs. E. J. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va.,
50 Easter Cards for the children.

Mrs. R. W. Fitch and daughters, Union Ridge, N. C., Girls' clothing and hats.

We are grateful for all kind donations for the children whether for service or for pleasure. And we thank kind friends who occasionally send cards, and papers suitable for the children and books.

Hoping to hear from the above 1350 members of our churches very soon (before June 1, 1911). I remain in behalf of the children.

Yours sincerely,
Uncle Jim.

Manry, Va., April 10, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I will come again, but with a sad heart. I have lost one of my dear brothers since I wrote last. He was sixteen years, ten months and 24 days old; only sick a month. He was the first of eight to go, I being his youngest sister, only 11 years old. One brother younger than I; all the rest are older than he was.

I send my nickle with love to all the little cousins. ^{light}
^{all over} Amy Morris.

We failed to get your letter in last week, Amy, and so here it is all right this time. Sorry to hear of your sorrow.

Raleigh, N. C., April 15, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Enclosed please find one dollar, our dues for four months, Jan., Feb., March, and April.

We hope the orphans and cousins a joyful Easter.

With much love to you and all.

Your loving nephews and nieces, Blannie, Bettie, Dwight, Noma, and Numa Franks.

Everyone had a fine time, I believe, children, and the pretty weather added to the good times for the rain before had cast a gloom.

Dear Cousins:

I guess you would like to hear something of my work in our Home. I attend to the mules. Their names are Beck and Pete. Beck is a kicker and you had better lookout. Pete is a little mule, but is good for ploughing and riding.

I help feed the pigs, too. The big pigs are named Joe, Harriet, Eva. We have sold a lot of little pigs.

I am 15 years old and I can plough two mules.

We are very busy now planting corn and gardening. Our school is out.

MARRIED.

Johnson-Rogers.

On Sunday morning, April 16th, 1911, Mr. Sidney Thomas Johnson and Miss Ruth E. Rogers were married at the bride's home in the presence of a few friends, who came unexpectedly to the contracted parties, and witnessed the ceremony. Mr. Johnson is a successful farmer near Dendron, and Miss Rogers, the last and youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Rogers, of near Dendron, Va. Shortly after the ceremony the happy couple drove to Waverly, Va., took the N. and W. train to Richmond, and other northern cities. They will return in a few days and live on the Johnson farm. May joy, peace and happiness follow them all the days of their lives.

The ten months old daughter of Brother and Sister R. H. Hargrave, passed from earth to heaven the 6th of April, and was buried the day following in the Wakefield cemetery. The little girl had been a great sufferer since birth, and a few days before she died measles and pneumonia, caused her suffering to be more intense and soon captured its victim.

May God comfort the dear parents.

Gay.

Near Carrsville, Va., March 30, 1911, Mr. Silas Gay was crushed to death by lumber. Only a short time before the accident occurred, he ate breakfast with his family. Little did any one think it was his last meal. But in a short while lumber fell upon him and his life went out.

The deceased was 59 years, 1 month, and 18 days of age. He leaves a wife and 7 children who are made sad by his death. May the Lord comfort them.

Windsor, Va.

On the second Sunday in April we began a meeting at the Windsor Christian Church which continued until the following Friday night. Rev. C. H. Rowland came on Monday and did the preaching through the week, in a plain, forcible manner. Congregations were good through the entire meeting, and those who attended seemed to enjoy the services and be benefited by them.

There were several professions and three additions to the church.

During the past several months several of the members of my churches have been very kind to the pastor and his family. We have received gifts of apples, potatoes, corn, pork, bacon, lard, one niece turkey and perhaps other things that I cannot now remember. We are grateful for these kindnesses and trust that the Lord may abundantly bless the givers.

My work is all moving on quietly, with nothing special to report.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Winchester Letter.

The past week has been one of progress in our work. The attendance at the Sunday School and preaching services was above the average. The brick work has been completed and the rafters are all up and sheathed, part of the roof is on the ground and the workmen will begin shingling in a few days. It is to be covered with metal shingles. At a meeting of the Building Committee on the 15th, contracts for plumbing and plastering were let and a change made in the tower which will make it more modern in appearance and also reduce the cost.

A little solicitation in Winchester has shown that the people are interested in our work and willing to assist in a financial way. We have secured in and near Winchester, from people outside of our own church, in cash and good pledges (nearly all of which has been paid) $388.00.

Our members here are striving to do what they can; but the burden is too heavy for us and if the work is to continue to go forward, you, my dear reader, must share the burden with us.

The first bond on the lot is due May the 5th. The conference has assumed this obligation. I hope that every member of the churches comprising the conference will keep this date in mind and send a contribution to this fund before that time. A reasonable donation from every one would pay the whole debt off at once.

We are thankful for all the above contributions and may the Lord add His blessings to each.

W. T. Walters.

Since I have been in North Carolina, not having but one church to serve, it has been my privilege to visit a number of churches. This has been a very great benefit to me because I'm not only getting acquainted with the people of the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences, but I'm also learning their methods and plans of work. It was also my privilege to attend every session of the Y. P. Convention at Elon College. I had longed for an opportunity of this kind. It was quite a blessing to be present and hear the speeches on various topics, relating to the work of the Young People. It seems that this means new life to the 20th Century church, if the Young People continue to push this grand movement as they are doing at present. May the Lord hasten the day when more of the young people of the Christian Church will take an active part in the work.

But I had started to give some facts about my work. I have only the pastoral charge of one church, St. John's, at Randleman. This church had been without a pastor for some time. Since I accepted the work here last December it has been moving along nicely. The Sunday School is making fine progress under its faithful Superintendent, Bro. Ed. Mason. The average attendance of the school is something over 100. On our last meeting day our collections at the morning and evening services amounted to about $12.00. The Church is now having the building lighted from the electric plant. This will greatly help us, as every church in town but this one had electric lights.

We are planning to begin a series of meetings at this place the eighth of June. Rev. J. F. Morgan, who is a student of Elon College is to be present and do the preaching during the meeting. We are expecting great things of God, looking for great results in the meeting.

The greatest need I see in my work is a larger, better equipped building for the many who attend services.

OUR OWN EFFORTS IN BEHALF OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

By W. E. McClenny, Ph. B.

All great teachers, statesmen, philosophers and moralists as well as nations have recognized the value of the young people as an asset in the community. This has been particularly so of all great religious teachers. Moses, the great law-giver of the Jews, realized this value of the young people when he wrote in Deuteronomy 11:18-21, these words: "Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt write them upon the door posts of thine house and upon thy gates." Jesus Christ, the great teacher, added his approval and set a new standard of value in Matthew 19: 14 when he said: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven;" Mark says in 10: 16, "And he took them up in his arms, and he put his hands upon them and blessed them."

All nations realize the value of the children, and France, that great scientific nation, has even gone so far as to offer a liberal reward to every family of each boy born and reared to a certain age. The nations have even gone so far as to try to increase the value of this asset—the children—by providing different kinds of literary and technical schools for their education, that they may become better citizens. Every sect and denomination that has ever amounted to anything in this world has realized this value of the young people. Let us for a few moments cast about and see what this value is. The church of Rome has even gone so far as to say that if you will let them have the training of a child until he is ten years old he will live and die a Roman Catholic. The Episcopal Church has its Prayer-Book, and its catechism for the children. The Presbyterians have their Confession of Faith, Catechism and other books for the young, as well as the Sabbath School. The Methodists, the church from which the Christian Church came have taught your speaker some valuable lessons along this line—the value of the young people to their church. Some time ago I happened to be at the opening of a Sabbath School at a new Methodist church, and the old minister in charge, who by the way is one of the most successful ministers known to me in any denomination, used these words pointing to the infant class room: “Yonder is the most important place in this church—the infant class room. There is not, cannot be, any higher place in the church.” Again I was at one time an attendant of a weak Methodist church in an educational town and I was surprised to find how loyal those people were to their church in the hearts of the young. One example is given. Every Sabbath morning after the lesson was over, on the blackboard would be seen a short sketch of some great leader in English or American Methodism, and this sketch was learned by the entire school old and young. By this means the young people of that church became patriotic, and they felt that although they were few in numbers yet they were a part of a great and noble host, and it gave them inspiration for the future of their church. When did we as a church do such a thing?

What has been the course of the Christian Church in the South? What has been our attitude toward the young people? Have we used our opportunities as we should? Have we in the past realized that the hope of the church of tomorrow is in the children of today? Let us look at our history and see. Our forefathers before they became an independent church had been accustomed to the class-meeting and the few Sunday Schools of the Methodists. In these the children were trained, but when they decided that they would drop all man made creeds, and take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, they seem to have dropped the class-meeting and the Sunday school with the creed. In the midst of the great religious and political upheavels of their times, they were not content with a sure and steady growth, but their great success in the first few years of their history, seemed to so elate the early Christian preachers that they began to direct all their attention to the mature minds, and let the young people get on as best they might. By this means they gathered great numbers of the older ones who soon died off, but the children went elsewhere. This course had the same effect then as now, for today if you show me a preacher who preaches so as to get the attention of the young people of his parish, I will show you a live and hard-working church; but on the other hand if you show me a minister who preaches to catch the ears of the older people only, and shoots above the heads of the young people, or pays no attention to them, I will show you a cold dead church, and in many cases it will only be a matter of time, before the house that was consecrated to the worship of Almighty God will be closed to open for that purpose no more.

I believe that following the above course, neglecting the young people in the early Christian Church was the main cause of our retarded growth during the first seventy five years of our history as a denomination. We had not learned that the quickest way to get the attention of the older people is to get the children interested in a proposition.

In my little research no denominational school has been found for the young people of our church prior to 1826, and even then that one could hardly be called a denominational school. It was not until 1849 that education had become a burning question among our people, and it was not until 1852 that Graham Institute, the first real Christian school, was opened. Since that time there has been gradual increase in the attention paid to the education of the young people of the Christian Church until today we have this noble institution of which we are all so proud. Before this was established there was little denominational loyalty. Our preachers and people felt as though they were so many isolated bands of worshippers. But when we built a denominational college, and the young men and maidens from every section of our church began to gather around this place for instruction, it was only a few years until we had become acquainted with each other, and now so long as the blood courses warm through our veins there will be a brotherly feeling among those young people who have attempted to satiate their thirst for knowledge at this fountain. No effort of the Christian Church has done more for the young people than that of building this college. No other work has so solidified the church. By doing this work for the young people at this place, the Christian Church has installed as it were a great and powerful dynamo that is driving all the departments of the church work on with great rapidity. Brethren of the Convention, when you go to your homes, look out for the welfare of the young people, for in them is the hope of our church for tomorrow. We, the older ones will soon be dead, but the young have yet the mid-day of life before them.

In what year the Christians began to told Sunday-schools, I am unable at this time to say. Where the first Christian

Sunday school was held we do not know. But we do know that no especial attention was paid to the young people until the Sunday Schools came into general use, and Sunday schools were scarce before the days of the Civil War.

I have in my possession a letter written by one of our oldest ministers on his early recollection of the Sunday Schools in the South. Says he: “When I was a little boy some seventy-five years since we sometimes had a little Sunday School for a few Sundays in the year, but these never amounted to anything.” He joined the N. C. and Va. Conference in 1854 and preached at quite a number of churches, in this section and he cannot remember a single Sunday school at any of his appointments. He went to the Eastern Va. Conference in 1860 and there was no Sunday Schools to amount to anything. In Eastern Virginia, by asking the oldest citizens who are now church goers I find that there were very few, and very poorly equipped Sunday Schools before the War. The Blue Back Speller, the child’s Catechism, and the Bible class, composed of all who could read was about what you find in one of these Sunday schools; there were no helps, and the teachers were poorly prepared, and some of them did not attempt to teach the children anything about the Bible, until they could read and go into the Bible class. More some of the older ministers took very little interest in the Sunday Schools. Revs. W. B. Wellons, R. H. Holland, J. W. Wellons were the pioneers in the movement, while Revs. H. B. Hayes, J. W. Hatch and Solomon Apple joined in their later days, Revs. W. H. Boykin, the Apples, Fowler and J. R. Holt seemed to stand aloof from the movement.

When Rev. W. B. Wellons, the great Southern leader came on the scene of action there was very little interest manifested in the young people or the Sunday school. We may say that was the first man after the dark period to turn his face and direct his efforts toward the young people of his section. He was successful, and he will go down in history as the greatest man of the Christian Church in his day. He used both his tongue and pen to stimulate and enthuse the Christian church in the direction of the Sunday Schools, while in his Sunday addresses, and he usually made one every Sunday before preaching, he had a word for the children. It was mainly through and by his efforts that the churches began to pay especial attention to the Sunday Schools, and soon the Sunday School conventions were organized and the work began to grow in importance. From that time the Sunday School has been regarded as the nursery of the church. From here as a rule come the ministers, the Sunday School Superintendents, the deacons, and the active members of the church. Remember friends, the young can be trained and taught, the old will not, and cannot be taught.

Although we have made great progress along the line of the Sunday School, yet we have not given it the attention that it is deserving, and the work of the teacher training course is an effort to try to improve the efficiency of this department of our church work for the young.

In the childrens' department in the Christian Sun, the young people of our church have the lead so far as we know at this time. In 1879 Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, then editor of the Christian Sun, inaugurated a new department under the management of Rev. E. W. Beale, and called it the Children's Corner to which the children wrote letters and sent money for missionary purposes. Children like older people like to see their names in print, and by this means a great many children became interested in "The Christian Sun," and the church work in general, and many of the children then are now the substantial Christians of today. The interest of those children was enlisted, and it developed as they grew and eternity alone can tell the good that this little corner has done our cause.

Looking at tangible results we find three or four churches, and not less than six young men, who were too poor to attend college, have been helped to get an education so that they might become Christian ministers, and proclaim the unspeakable riches of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Some of these ministers are today prominent in the Christian pulpit, and in later years yonder orphanage has been built, and is now being partially maintained through and by the efforts of the Children's Corner. Brethren, where have we as a church ever made such an investment? Are we not repaid ten times for the space given up to the children in our church paper, and although their little letters may seem child-like and of no use, we today see their effect upon the whole Christian Church; and it helps us to better understand the Bible when it says: "Despise not the day of small things."

We now come to our work in the Christian Endeavor department. About thirty years ago Rev. Francis E. Clarke organized the young people of his church in New England into a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor with forty members. It was successful, and the movement began to spread to other denominations and sections. We in the South did not take hold of the work very rapidly, and hence we are in the rear of the march of progress. At the Southern Christian Convention of 1896 we find the first report of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. In 1890 the Eastern Virginia Conference had a report on the Christian Endeavor work; while the report of the Southern Christian Convention of 1904 on Christian Endeavor shows that there were only a few in the convention.

The Annual for 1906 gives the report of the Eastern North Carolina Conference on the Y. P. S. C. E. showing there were no societies in that conference at that time. We find from the last named date that one after another the conferences have taken up the work of the C. E. until now we believe there are societies in all the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences. Yet the work has not had the growth that it should have among us for the reason that we have not yet fully realized the value of the young people to our church. There are many churches that say they are not equipped for the Christian Endeavor work and therefore they do not try to have a society.

But ask some one why should we do so much for the thoughtless and careless youth, when many of them do not seem to appreciate their opportunities? Our reply is there is such a demand for church workers. Every denomination with which I am acquainted is deploring the dearth of ministers. There are fields that are white unto the harvest, but the laborers are few. From these young people's societies and the Sunday Schools of today will have to come the ministers and churchmen and women of tomorrow. Today we are deficient in Sunday School officers and teachers. Often I have heard it remarked, "we could have a good Sunday School if we only had the teachers." We need consecrated leaders in almost every department of the church work. If you do not believe this, go to your pastor, whoever he may be, in the bounds of this convention and ask him how many men or women he has in his churches that he feels free to call upon to lead in public prayer, lead a church prayer-meeting, teach a Sunday school class in an emergency or hold a prayer-meeting with an afflicted neighbor. I fear that you would find them very scarce. I know of no better place to train people for this work than the Y. P. S. C. E. It has been successful where it has been given a fair trial, and I believe it will be successful in the future.

In a few words our efforts may be summed up as follows: The Sunday Schools to acquaint the children with the teachings of the Bible, especially the laws given by God through Moses at Mount Sinai, and the principles as taught by Jesus Christ himself in the sermon on the mount, the Y. P. S. C. E. to train them to become workers and leaders in the Christian life, and work and to point men and women to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, the children's department in The Sun to train the children in denominational giving, and and to enlist their childish interest in the institutions of the church, the denominational college where the visions of the mind and the soul are broadened, and church patriotism is matured. These seem to be the things we should strive for. In doing these things we are sowing seed that will spring up and bring forth fruit for eternity. We may write with ink, and time will cause it to fade, we may write upon silver and time will cause it to tarnish, we may write upon brass and time will corrode it, we may write upon iron, and time will rust it out, we may write upon marble and time will crumble it to dust, but if we write upon the tablet of the young child's heart, it will brighten with time, and shine throughout eternity. Brethren, when we go to our respective homes let us see that we write for good upon these tablets, knowing that if we do it will endure and grow brighter as the years go by, and will shine eternally.

REV. W. W. STALEY, D. D.,
President of the Southern Christian Convention and Pastor of Suffolk (Va.) Christian Church.

I am pleased to read of the good meeting of the "Young People's Convention" at Elon College. Had it been convenient I would have enjoyed a place among the young folks myself. The conditions are not very favorable for such a Convention, but the zeal and persistence of the young people may overcome the obstacles. The march of new ideas and the aggressive spirit of the young will do great things in the kingdom. It really means life-service for Jesus Christ. When the workers pass from the Young People's Convention to the parent Convention there will be more activity. The results of this movement will be felt in the parent Convention. The work, therefore, is longer and more far-reaching than it appears to be at the present time. W. W. Staley.

FALSE PRIDE.

Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall. Prov. 16:18 (Golden Text for Sunday, May 7.)

There is a pardonable pride; and there is an unpardonable pride. The pride that makes us do our best, that causes us to maintain self-respect, that lifts us above the mean, the base, the sordid and the slovenly, that is praiseworthy and that is pardonable pride.

But there is another, and quite a different sort of pride. The Sunday school lesson of today gives us an illustrious, and an awful example, of this base and ignoble pride. It is a false pride, a vain-glorious pride, a haughty pride and is the kind of pride that makes one indifferent, "stuck-up," defiant, sacrilegious indeed. Uzziah had finally and harbored such a pride. Not always, but finally. "As long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper." His prosperity increased and multiplied until he had much goods, many store houses, wide fields, great herds of cattle, prosperous farms, generous vineyards.

Then, oh! the pity of it, then the very prosperity wherewith the Lord had blessed Uzziah turned Uzziah's head, made him haughty, proud, vain-glorious. And, among the very first places that pride manifested itself was in the house of the Lord. Uzziah defamed the place of prayer and praise, and by his conduct brought, or sought to bring, ill-repute and unholy practices into the sacred place. A false and vainglorious pride in the heart always brings loss of reverence and respect for sacred and holy things. It was so with King Uzziah, and it is so with all who have prospered in the Lord, and then have become vain over their prosperity.

You have seen people who in the days of their poverty and adversity thought the church and the service of God just the very best thing in all the world. And then, by some circumstance becoming prosperous or rich in worldly goods, they abandoned the church for the theatre, the dance, the card party, or for worldly indulgence.

A false and vain-glorious pride ever makes one have a lighter regard for sacred things; and a lower estimate upon reverence, prayer, worship.

And this, declares the wise man, is that which goes before destruction, and a fall. The road that leads to sure, certain and ultimate destruction is pride. And that which is sure to encompass a fearful and final fall is a haughty spirit.

We, all of us, need to heed the lesson of Uzziah's life and warning, in this prosperous time. In all our gettings we should seek to get wisdom, and in all our work and way we should seek to keep humble, submissive, contrite of heart and spirit. It is more difficult to keep humble in prosperity than in adversity. But in prosperity it becomes one to be more humble and strive ever to keep out vanity and false pride, because all our bounty, all our benefits, all our blessings come as a gift of Him who loves the broken and contrite heart.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

Last week this incident appeared in the Raleigh News and Observer:

"Charles E. LeGrand who says he was late musician of the 13th infantry and the First frontier cavalry of the Union forces, has written from his home in Salem, Mass., to the adjutant general of North Carolina, informing him that a friend of his has a Bible he would like to return to the proper person. The writer says that his friend picked it up during the Civil War at New Bern and now wishes to return it to its owner or to some relative of his.

On the fly leaf of the Bible was written the name of Lieut. C. A. Boon, of Company D, of the 35th North Carolina Regiment. Camp Morgan, December 16th. It was presented to him by Mrs. C. K. Caldwell.

The records show that Lieut. Charles A. Boon entered the Confederate service in 1861, as second lieutenant of Company D, 35th N. C., from Chatham County. He served under Capt. Hardy J. Lassiter, who was killed in the battle of Malvern Hill. The next captain was Capt. Robert E. Petty, who in 1864 was promoted to major. In 1863 Lieut. Boon became First Lieutenant of his company. Whether he is still alive is not known."

The esteemed News and Observer may be informed hereby that former Lieutenant Boone, now Rev. C. A. Boone, is still alive, quite happy and doing well, and resides at Elon College, N. C., and is ready to receive back his Bible. The reason why Bro. Boone lost that Bible was that he did not have the time, nor the disposition, to go back after it, and there were other and sundry items left in the same camp at the same time which the blue coats may return if they wish.

But that Bible lost on a field of battle, in a skirmish too hot for comfort or contemplation, nearly fifty years ago, and now being returned to its owner, leads one to moralize on the Book, or a message from the Book, or teachings from its sacred pages, placed, dropped, left somewhere years ago in the heat of toil and effort and conflict, but springing to life and fruition after the years have passed. We often suppose our precious treasures lost, when in fact they are in keeping for days and years yet to be.

Bro. Boone has received his Bible in good shape, and it brings back vividly recollections of the long ago.

WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT?

What profit is there in much, and in many things, we do and say? What profit, indeed? The money we make, we will spend, or someone else will spend it for us. The worries we have, or that have us, will wear and waste. The troubles that try us will tarry for a season, and then be forgotten. And all the wealth we ever get will finally go the way of all the earth. What shall it profit? What does it profit?

This only. That which redeems, enriches, elevates the soul; that profiteth somewhat. All else is lost, and falls away in the final.

"He that winneth souls is wise," wrote a man of wisdom and experience long ago. And he wrote it well; for this profiteth now and hereafter.

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? The inspired writer puts it in a marked manner. For no man can gain the whole world, and if one could, and in the gaining lost his soul, there was, and there would be no profit whatsoever.

We sometimes think the one who is working to save his soul, or the soul of another, is working to the only profit there is in this world.

Dr. J. J. Summerbell in The Christian News Letter recently writes, and truly, "You do not neglect your private business affairs; and yet your private business affairs are of little importance, if the element of your relation to eternity is taken out of them. The money you make today will be spent by you or your heirs, and will probably produce no important effect on mankind. But one soul saved, one heart redeemed from guilt and turned to righteousness, may lead to the salvation of thousands of others. And even if it does not, its salvation will make your heavenly life sweeter, and your honor among the angels higher. Your money perishes; but souls redeemed live forever."

Are you considering, day by day, the things that really profit? The things that will not perish, nor wear, nor waste; the things that really have value, worth, profit, for all time and for eternity?

CURRENT COMMENT.

Protecting Prohibition Territory.—Since the States have been voting for prohibition, and some of them adopting it by popular vote, there has been a feeling, quite wide spread, that Congress should protect such States in their expressed desire to abolish the whiskey traffic. In fact we know of nothing today that is doing as much to bring prohibition into disrepute as the "jug trade," the power to ship whiskey from a non-prohibition territory into prohibition territory.

In keeping with this desire and constantly growing sentiment Hon. E. Y. Webb, member from the Ninth North Carolina district has introduced a bill which, if enacted into law, would correct this evil and abolish this injustice. The bill was ordered printed and a copy is before us. It simply prevents the shipment of intoxicating liquors into prohibition territory other than as allowed and controlled by said prohibition State district, or territory.

Such a bill may not pass Congress now, but there is no doubt but that some day such an act will be adopted.

A Cool Head.—Over in Richmond, Va., they are making an effort to suppress the running of automobiles by drivers who are either partially or wholly drunk. New York State has made it a penal offense for one under the influence of liquor to drive a car and Richmond feels need of a similar statute. "An automobile," opines The News Leader, "is sufficiently dangerous to human safety and human life when driven with the utmost care and by a man with a cool head. But there is something monstrous about permitting one of these tremendous machines—several tons of steel and iron—to be hurled through the streets driven by an immense power directed by an individual whose faculties are more or less befuddled by liquor."

With all of which the Charlotte Evening Chronicle agrees, and further cites that there is a man in that town known from New York to Ormond Beach and has the reputation of a dangerous and daring driver; but who has never involved either himself or any one else in an accident and it is all "because he never takes a drink and always has a cool head." And the conclusion that The Chronicle derives holds good in all the interests and enterprises and affairs in this life. The man who befuddles his brain and excites his nerves with strong drink may seem to be the bravest and best man for awhile, and escape for a season without calamity—as many an intoxicated automobilist has—but the real brave and daring, and the ones who are sure to win out and prove safe in the final,—in any and in all the undertakings of this mortal life—are the "ones who never take a drink and always keep a cool head."

St. John the Divine.—On April 19 an event was celebrated in New York that has caused no little comment, one way and another. On the day named more than four hundred priests, visiting clergy, laity and bishops, of the Episcopal Church, met in sacred conclave, vested in rich robes of Church, and with solemn rites and ceremonies consecrated as much of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine as is ready for service. The papers report it a magnificent and inspiring scene, which, because of its richness, will not soon be forgotten. The church house has now been in building for about twenty years, and it will take a much longer period than that yet to complete it. So far there has been an expenditure of $3,000,000, and the plan calls for an expenditure of $10,000,000, and the actual cost may be more than that. "Only the choir, the ambulatory, and two of the seven chapels of the Tongues are complete."

Of course there is criticism of such expenditure on a house of worship of such a kind, especially in a city where there is reeking poverty and squalid misery and untold suffering for want of the actual necessities of life.

But there is another, and it seems to us a greater side of the matter.

It is possible, highly probably in fact, that not a dollar that went into this massive church edifice, or one that will go into it, would have gone for the relief of human misery in New York or elsewhere. Again it is possible that gifts to this church have made the givers more open-hearted and more ready of approach, and so have served to increase rather than diminish the gifts to needed charity.

But better than all these, and outweighing other considerations, is the fact that even in a city and in a civilization where the people seem feverishly bent on pleasure and money getting, this great edifice of polished marble and enduring granite show there is yet left an abiding, an eternal interest in the things of the spirit. Even the great moneyed classes of New York are not all mad at money hoarding, for if they were they would not be giving their millions to erect a house from which no one is to derive private gain or gilded treasure. St. John the Divine at least represents a tribute of men of business to spiritual affairs. And the beauty and solidity of St. John the Divine must remind those who see it and worship there of the beauties and glories of that house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens.

Hitting the Hand That Helps.—In ninety cases out of a hundred, not to be ever exact, when a big hearted man with money, unloosens his purse string, and donates in liberal fashion, a whole host of little souls pour out their criticism galore. You may put it down that when a man gives largely to any matter nine hundred others will be sure to bob up and say how it should have been given otherwise.

If ever there was a case in point we have it here now in this good South. When several months ago Deacon Rockefeller gave a few million to fight hook-worm disease in the South, the critics fairly howled. It was declared in many quarters the Deacon had done this simply to advertise a disease that the South did not have, and to advertise conditions here that do not obtain.

Mr. Rockefeller, however, said never a word. But the work for which he gave a million or so went steadily on. Take, will you, this work here in North Carolina. Dr. Jno. A. Ferrell, Director of the Hookworm Campaign for this State, reports that during the three months of this year ending March 31, physicians of the State report having treated 18,000 cases of hookworm disease. During the past twelve months 200,000 pieces of literature have been sent out over the State, and this was directed, as is the Campaign, not only against hookworm disease, but against uncleanness and unsanitary conditions generally, and against typhoid and many other kindred diseases.

The campaign in a broad sense, is one for better sanitary conditions in the South, an aggressive warfare not against one, but against many diseases. "The success of the campaign," says Wm. C. Glasson, in the April South Atlantic Quarterly, "must lessen the heavy burden of sickness, bring new vigor to great numbers of people, and accomplish the saving of thousands of lives."

Now, what we want to know is, what have become of these critics who so vigorously assailed and vehemently condemned Mr. Rockefeller for his unwise and unwelcome gift. We think they have become ashamed of themselves, and have dried up. If not, they ought to.

But the self-same thing will occur again. People are as roundly abused for their gifts, almost, as those are who do not give at all. Surely the way of the philanthropist as well as that of the transgressor, is hard.

—Denman Thompson who made famous "The Old Homestead" died at his home in N. H., April 14. This was a "clean show" if there are any, and Thompson had delighted thousands with a wholesome and happy object lesson.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Winchester Letter.

Everything is moving nicely with the Winchester work. Our congregations and Sunday-school are keeping up well and improving with the spring weather. The contractors are busy on the building. If the weather is fair, the brick work will be completed and all the rafters be up in two more days and the church will be ready for the roof before this reaches the reader. We want, if possible, to push the work until the house is complete.

To stop or retard the work now would be embarrassing and would hurt our cause, but if we go forward we must have money and we must have it now. Dear reader, will you be one to help us to complete the One Thousand List of One Dollar subscriptions within the next ten days by sending us $1.00? Wentworth.

On second Sunday, April 9, a District Interdenominational Sunday-school Convention was held with the Wentworth Christian Church, McCullers, N. C. Bro. Geo. M. McCullers was the prime mover and arranged the program for this all-day meeting. The forenoon services consisted of songs rendered by Bro. McCullers and his splendid choir, assisted by visiting vocal teachers and others. Bro. McCullers expected Bro. J. H. Moring, of Morrisville, to be present and assist in the singing. Mrs. Moring has been quite feeble for some while and he was not present. The singing was very fine and added inspiration to the day. Preaching at 11:00 a. m. by the pastor, followed with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

About 1:30 p. m., after a splendid dinner we reassembled for song service, addresses by Sunday-school superintendents, teachers, and workers. Bro. J. Milton Banks, who is one of the best Sunday-school teachers I ever saw, taught the day's lesson. And thus ended a Sabbath for which I am glad.

Morrisville.

April the 16th, Miss Lessie Pugh, my organist, at Morrisville, and Bro. J. H. Moring, choir leader, had in readiness a well arranged selection of music for Easter. The subject discussed by the pastor was, The Resurrection. Text, Acts 24:15, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust."

At the evening service Matt. 5:20 was used: "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Emphasizing the fact that scriptural righteousness must be based on repentance, faith and regeneration, otherwise no righteousness can save the soul. Luke (18:11 etc.) gives us a parable of Christ indicating the Pharisees' code of morals which was both negative and positive. It consisted in, (a) not like other men, i. e., (1) extortioners, (2) unjust, (3) adulterers, (b), (1) fasted twice per week, (2) gave tithes of all that he possessed. And yet Christ Himself declares this code would not give the Pharisee admission into the kingdom of heaven.

Matthew 23:23 gives us Christ's statement to the Pharisees as regards their righteousness. For ye pay tithe of mint, and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the others undone."

For the righteousness that will save the soul consists in first, internal righteousness, i. e., repentance, faith and regeneration and second, external good works.

Truly there is an intimate relationship between the fundamental doctrines of Repentance, Faith and Regeneration, and that of righteousness. However there is a break between the former three and the latter one, but the last cannot be without the former three.

New Elam.

I was at New Elam, Chatham Co., N. C., a recent Sunday in the interest of the Chapel Hill church. I was received in the spirit of Christian kindness and sympathy, both by the pastor, Rev. G. R. Underwood, and congregation. You may listen out for New Elam to do the wise thing for the Chapel Hill work.

I heard many complimentary things said about the pastor.

It was a great pleasure to me to worship with this church. It is the second church I ever took charge of as pastor. But most of those to whom I preached then have gone to the spirit land. The church seems to be in good shape. The congregation and Sunday school both good, being about one hundred present in the Sunday school.

CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MAY.

By Rev. Emily K. Bishop, Dayton, O.

Topic: The Jubilee of Missions.

THE JUBILEE HYMN.

"The women that publish the tidings are a great host." Ps. 68:11, R. V.

Written for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Jubilee, by E. M. H. ..

Tune—Battle Hymn of the Republic.

"Have your eyes beheld the vision of this grand and mighty host

Whom prophets long foretold should rise to save the lost?

Have caught the inspiration? Make it yours at any cost!

This glorious Jubilee;

Chorus:

Glory! Glory! spread the tidings!

Glory! Glory! spread the tidings!

Glory! Glory! spread the tidings!

And crown this Jubilee!

When first the Orient cry was heard some fifty years ago

Our loyal women good and true said, Who will send or go?

To this pitying cry of helpless ones, we never will say no,

And hence this Jubilee.

Chorus.

So the gifts at once were coming, 'twas the silver and the gold;

But the gift of mother's daughters, Oh! that never can be told,

'Twas love that prompted it, God would His love unfold,

It made this Jubilee.

Chorus.

Oh! women come and help us, there are millions yet to hear

The blessed Gospel messages of faith and hope and cheer.

Forget the little selfishness, let love enlarge your sphere,

Make this your Jubilee."

Chorus.

Motto—"A Jubilee shall that fifth year be unto you; it shall be holy unto you; ye shall not therefore oppress one another, but thou shalt fear thy God; for I am the Lord your God." Lev. 25:11, 17.

Topics for Prayers.

"All things what soever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." "Have faith in God," Mark 11:22, 24.

Thanksgiving for the progress made during these fifty years and for the marvelous manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit in the national and local Woman's Jubilee Conferences now being held, and for the accruing enthusiasm and prospective increase of money for missions.

Pray for the uninformed of, or indifferent to missions, that they through this Jubilee may get a vision of the great commission as God sees it, and give themselves freely to the work for missions abroad and at home.

Pray for the singleness of purpose, that the sole reliance may be on the Holy Spirit, the sole aim that God may receive all glory in all things and all ways.

Pray for our missionaries in every field.

Bible Reading.

(This Bible Reading, which is exceedingly appropriate for a Woman's Missionary Echo Jubilee, is selected from the plans for lessons in the Mission Study Book, "Western Women in Eastern Lands.")

Ezekiel's Vision of the Healing Waters (Ezekiel 47:1-12) shows:

The source—from the temple of God;

The small beginning—a tiny trickle;

The amazing growth—waters to swim in;

The life-giving power—everything liveth wherever the water cometh.

A wonderful picture of the Gospel in the heart of the world.

Sing, "There's a fullness in God's mercy." Christian Hymnary, 182.

Hymns.

"All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," "Woman's Foreign Mission Jubilee." (Sing the last one twice during the meeting.)

Suggestive Program.

For the missionary meeting this month every society can hold a Foreign Mission Echo Jubilee, in which should be emphasized our own "Silver Anniversary."

Not all our societies have had the good fortune to be represented in one of the national or district jubilees; still, every society has some women who have familiarized themselves with some of the leading features of those meetings.

The "Woman's Number," January, 1911, of the Christian Missionary contains valuable data for this program, especially the articles by Mrs. Alice V. Merrill and Mrs. Lula Helfenstein. Also for our own "Silver Anniversary."

A Unique Feature of such a Jubilee could be, an arch with fifty lighted candles. Each would represent one year of Woman's organized Foreign Mission work. A brilliant light in the keystone of the arch, which should represent Jesus illuminating the world through these organized agencies.

Sing—"The whole world was lost in the darkness of sin, The light of the world is Jesus." Gospel Hymns 41.

It will be well also to have a banquet (which need not be elaborate) to be followed by missionary toasts.

Secure as large an attendance as possible. Two or three contiguous societies could unite in the jubilee.

Solicit members to the society.

This being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Woman's Board for Foreign Missions, "The Silver Jubilee," the Board has announced a "Silver Anniversary Fund," for a building for our Girl's School in Utsumomia, Japan. Secure pledges for this fund. Also the Woman's Board for Home Missions ask for persons to become life members of the Home Board by the payment of ten dollars; this fund is for our Chinese and Syrian Mission, Boston, Mass.

(These should be personal pledges, as the Society funds are greatly needed for the general lines of the work.)

Early in the arrangements send to the Literature Superintendent, Emily K. Bishop, Dayton, O., for tracts, Our Vision, Aim and Plan," and pledge cards and life membership cards. (Accompany the order with at least ten cents.)

Watchword.—"The Close of the Jubilee, the Beginning of the Campaign."

"Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10:31.

A SHORT SERMON ON LOVE.

The following short sermon on love, selected and translated from the French by Van Hermit, is worthy of a most careful and prayerful study on the part of every Christian.

"You have only a day to spend here on earth; act in such a manner that you may spend it in peace.

"Peace is the fruit of love; for, in order to live in peace, we must bear with a great many things.

"None is perfect; each has his failings, each hangs upon the other, and love alone renders that weight light.

"If you cannot bear with your brother, how will your brother bear with you?

"It is written of the Son of Mary, that 'having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end.

"For that reason, love your brother, who is in the world, and love him unto the end.

"Love is indefatigable; it never grows weary. Love is inexhaustible; it lives and is born anew in the living and the more it pours itself out the fuller its fountain.

"Whosoever loves himself better than he loves his brother, is not worthy of Christ, who died for his brothers. Have you given away everything you possess? Go and give up your life also! Love will restore all to you.

"Verily I say unto you, the heart of a man that loves is a paradise on earth. He has God within him, for God is love!

"The wicked man loves not, he covets; he hungers and thirsts for everything; his eyes, like unto the eyes of a serpent fascinate and allure, but only to devour.

"Love rests at the bottom of every pure soul, like a drop of dew in the calyx of a flower. Oh, if you knew what it is to love!

"You say that you love, and yet many of your brothers are in want of bread to sustain their life, in want of clothes to cover their naked limbs, in want of a roof to shelter themselves, in want of a handful of straw to sleep on, whilst you have all things in abundance."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. A. C. Dixon, formerly of Shelby, N. C., and more recently of Chicago, has accepted a call to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, this being the pulpit made famous by the ministry of the great Chas. Haddon Spurgeon.

—The Christian News Letter, Flora, Ill., published in the interest of the Christian Church in Illinois, by Rev. R. J. Ellis, editor and publisher, is on our desk and contains good, sound reading. We wish for the News Letter all success and usefulness.

—If any church wishes the new and revised Christian Hymnary orders will be filled from the Christian Sun office. For its size and quality this is the cheapest hymn book we know; 50 cts. the copy plus freight or express, or 75 cts. the copy by mail.

—Sister N. P. Clements, Zuni, Va., wrote of the Life of Rev. James O'Kelly, by W. E. McClenny, as follows: "The book was duly received and I am delighted with it. I did not stop reading it till I had finished it. I hope every member of our Church will buy a copy and read it." And this is worth while, for it is a helpful history.

—Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, delivered a lecture at Elon College last Thursday evening on "The Influence of Books" that was much enjoyed. The language was chaste, the thought was elevating, and the authors and books referred to were wholesome and inspiring. Such a lecture before students has great value, and counts.

—Our Raleigh church is enjoying a season of good things this week. Rev. R. V. Miller, an evangelist of plainness and power, is assisting Pastor L. F. Johnson. Mr. Charles N. Butler and wife are leading the song and Mrs. Butler's sister, Miss Anderson, is accompanist. These are not only proficient in their work; they are artists of high attainment and it is glorious to sit under the inspiration of their gospel songs.

—Gladstone Dowie, son of the late John Alexander Dowie, founder of Zion City and "The Christian Catholic Church," says now that his father was "mentally incompetent for a period of nine years previous to his decease." Dowie was a certainly a very active man and had wonderful drawing power and a marvelous influence over men; but fanaticism and self-glorification swept him off his feet, and made him forget God.

—Mrs. Dr. J. G. Holland, Holland, Va., who represented her school at the recent session of the Young People's Convention and made a pledge for her Sunday school for the Convention call did as the wise ones ever do who make a pledge in behalf of a class, namely, presented the matter the next Sunday after getting home, and secured $5.00 which has been received and turned into the treasury. This is the kind of business in Church and Sunday school work that counts and is worth while.

—We are pleased to learn that our good Brother W. T. Young, Youngsville, N. C., who has been in quite feeble health for some time is improving. Bro. Young has a wide circle of friends who have been anxious and prayerful for his recovery. There is no more loyal member in all our communion, and no more faithful and zealous Christian man in all our acquaintance that Bro. Young, and our hearts are glad to learn of his improvement in health. We sincerely trust that he may soon be restored to his accustomed health and strength.

—"I like The Sun's new face; and I like the paper more and more as the years go by," sends dear Dr. D. E. Millard from Portland, Mich. Thank you, very, very much, Doctor, and may you add many more years to your life of service and good cheer to other. Barriers break as years pass, and good will appears where once there was envying and strife. The Jewish Rabbi's Association sent greeting and congratulations "to its Christian brethren on the dedication of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine," an Episcopal Church, April 19. Jews calling Episcopalians "Christian brethren" measures somewhat. And the rabbis said all that prevented their presence was the synchronism of the Passover service.

—Rev. W. F. Walters writes April 29th, of the Winchester, Va., Church building, "The work is being pushed rapidly. Over half of the roof is on, and in three or four more days it will be enclosed. The undertaking here is large, considering our strength, but through the help of the Lord we expect to pull through. I congratulate you on the new dress for The Sun. You are giving us a good paper and deserve the loyal patronage of all our people." For which good word we are grateful. Bro. Walters is doing a great and worthy work at Winchester and a few dollars cannot be given now to a worthier and more deserving cause, by any Sun reader having it to spare, than to the church building fund at Winchester, Va.

—The Sun's editor had the privilege of preaching at the eleven o'clock service for Pastor J. O. Cox at Durham last Sunday. The day was quite inclement, but there was a good congregation of the loyal and faithful present. Bro. Cox's people are hopeful and happy and are pressing forward in their great and good work. Pastor Cox is leading the way and the work prospers. Pastor and congregation have undertaken to raise $1,000. on their church debt in ten weeks. Four weeks of the ten have passed and even now all are hopeful, with good grounds of reason, that the great task will be completed within the time set. A pastor and people less courageous would not have undertaken so much within so short a period; but it takes brave hearts and faithful souls to show us how great results are brought about. The work at Durham prospers and it was indeed a pleasure to worship there.

—Prof. S. M. Smith, Director of Education in the Naval Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, writes of our recent book on Teacher-Training:

Vol. I, No. II of "Preparing the Teacher," it seems to me, completes a course of training for Sunday School teachers equal to the best, and better than a great many that are on the market.

In my experience in Sunday School work during the past ten years, I have had occasion to examine all the leading Teacher Training Courses put out by the different denominations, and I am convinced that ours is as good as any.

I appreciate what has been included in the way of a history of our own church. The next ten years will show a decided improvement in our Sunday School work generally, if our teachers can be induced to take this course of training."

—Here is a line so much to the point that its printing will, we trust, be pondered. It is from Dr. T. Edwin Baird, Norfolk,

"I am really ashamed that you had to notify me of the expiration of my subscription to the Sun. This should have had my attention promptly on April 1st, but on account of the busy rush of life—especially in my profession, I had overlooked it. Please find herein my check of $1.50 for a renewal of my subscription to The Sun for another year. I am glad to note some changes in The Sun of late which, in my judgment, add materially to its beauty and attractiveness.

"For about twenty-five years I have been an individual subscriber to The Sun; long before I had access to its pages through my parental home. I shall endeavor to stand faithfully by it, because it is my church paper; to be loyal to my denomination or church, I must take my church paper as long as I live. May 'The Sun' live long and continue to be a blessing to our Church, both individually and collectively, is my humble prayer."

—The rebels in the Mexican troubles, estimated at from 5,000 to 15,000, have destroyed a vast amount of property, but few lives have been lost. Peace is promised at an early date.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Easter services in the Suffolk Christian Church were as good this year as any year through the many years they have been observed. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity both morning and night. The church had been artistically decorated by the ladies with palms, ferns, geraniums, and Easter lilies. Ten canaries rendered birdsongs among the flowers. Little children sang, recited, and added their artless help to the exercises. The Junior choir of thirty voices increased the praises. The church choir and Miss Ethel Nicholson of Norfolk with her violin filled out the day at the evening service. The day was bright, the congregation seemed happy and worshipped, and the house of the Lord was full of the glory of the Lord.

The cash offering was $808.63 in response to a call for $800.00 for Conference call upon this church. We now have our Conference money in Bank and can turn to other work for the Master. I do not know how other pastors feel, but I never feel easy till I get the Conference money. It weighs on my mind till I get all the Conference asks of the church I have in charge. The current expenses I leave to the church. The Conference calls and special offerings I look after myself. For Conference money I use the following method: I have two classes of envelopes printed; one for the church members with the items and sums called for by the Conference from the church; i. e., Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Education, etc. The smaller envelopes for the Sunday School members, and a large clasp envelope for each class. I send the envelopes, one to each member, with name already written on it. If there are five members in a family members of the Church I send an envelope to each member, but mail the five in one so as to save expense. If the member lives out of town I enclose a stamped envelope addressed to myself. These are all mailed out in time to reach the members so that they can respond by Easter. On the back of the Easter envelope I print a circular letter explaining the matter to the members.

I distribute the envelopes for the Sunday school to the Teachers the Sunday before Easter and request the teachers to see that each scholar makes a contribution and that the name and donation are written plainly on the envelope. I offer a prayer as I write the names on the Church envelopes that our Father will see that the people do their duty. They do not all give, but many do. More than seven hundred envelopes came in and more than eight hundred dollars. In a small church I would deliver envelopes to the members in person to save postage and to explain in person the offering.

Our revival meeting will begin on the second Sunday in May. Charles Underwood Butler and wife will be with us to conduct the gospel singing. Their reputation is so good that we are looking forward to a great meeting. The meeting will last fifteen days if not longer. The Butlers are now assisting Rev. L. F. Johnson in a meeting in Raleigh. We have had some great revival meetings in this church: in 1866, 1888, 1905, and then two union meetings in 1908 and 1909. These great meetings have added members and spiritual life to the church. The 1866 meeting was conducted by Pastor W. B. Wellons, D. D.; 1888, by Rev. C. J. Jones, D. D.; in 1905, by the pastor; 1908 and 1909 by Browne and Curry.

We do not have annual protracted meetings in this church, though in many churches that is a very good plan. It is much more difficult to hold a meeting in the city than in the country, because in the country the neighborhood gives the week to the meeting; in the city business goes on in the regular way and the mind is taken away from the meeting between services. The physical conveniences are better in the city, but the hindrances are greater. But I suppose when all the conditions are taken into the equation the average is about the same.

W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

When the Third Christian Church was organized, it was thought by those directing the movement, to be desirable to get some lots well located and in a good section of the city. To do this, made it expensive. The small number of people interested, directly, seemed to make it impossible for us to pay all for the lots and build the house at that time. So we raised the money and paid for the building before we organized the church.

Borrowed some money to make a payment on our lots and had one payment of $1,000. deferred four years. This payment fell due May 1st. So about two months ago we began a campaign to raise the amount by that time. Some were fearful and thought we had undertaken too much, but I had great faith and confidence in the little band that I have found so faithful and tried in the years we've been together. Less than one month ago I asked our Sunday school to raise $100. and the Ladies' Aid Society was asked to raise $100. We thought we would figure up Sunday and see how much more we had to raise, supposing it would be about $100. But when the figures were gotten together it was found that the Sunday School had raised $140. and the Ladies' Aid Society, $120. So it developed on a final count that we had the $1,000 raised and about $15.00 over which will be applied on the interest. We feel very grateful for the ready response to our appeal. It has been the policy of the church to have no fairs, suppers, socials and festivals for raising money, and this is our first appeal outside of our own congregation for any assistance. We now have most of the money in hand and expect to have the remainder in by the 1st when we expect to take up the note for $1,000. and have a public service at which time we will have a note burning. The prediction has already been made that we will burn the last one a year hence.

Rev. A. M. Hanson and P. C. Barrett will represent the Sunday school at the State Sunday school Association at Richmond this week.

At 7:30 a Y. P. S. of C. E. was organized with the following officers: J. Cleveland Barrett, Pres; Pressley Barrett, Vice Pres.; Miss Essie Houchins, Rec. Sec.; Miss Fannie Holland, Cor. Sec. and Miss Ethel White, Treas. With the chairmen of the usual committees. We are hoping for good things from this society.

The Society at the Memorial Temple is doing a good work. They took in 5 new members yesterday evening at their meeting.

Bro. Howsare, of the Temple, assisted Bro. Harrell of Portsmouth in a meeting last week. Good audiences are reported with a good meeting in progress. Five have united with the Church so far. They will continue this week. Bro. Harrell filled Bro. Howsare's pulpit Sunday night.

J. W. Manning.

—The House of Representatives at Washington, April 13, voted 296 to 16 in favor of a Constitutional amendment for the direct election of United States senators by the people.

—James A. Patten, the Chicago "wheat king," is following Mr. Carnegie in the matter of giving away his millions while living. In the last six months Mr. Patten has given away $2,000,000 to various charities.

—Dr. Edward Thompson, of Fort Worth, Tex., general manager of the Sunday League of America, predicts that within six months from now there will not be an open post-office on Sunday anywhere in the United States. Dr. Thompson is the father of Sunday post office closing, and though the movement began one year ago he has had the satisfaction of seeing about one hundred cities adopt it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PLEDGE.

A great many people object to Christian Endeavor because they have to promise to do certain things. "I don't believe in making pledges," they say. How is it, then, that they can believe in marriage, or in joining the church, or in signing checks? Are not all these promises to do something, pledges? To be consistent, those objecting to the Christian Endeavor Pledge, ought to object to these kinds of pledge and to the other innumerable forms of pledge, without which modern life would be impossible.

But let us approach this matter from another standpoint. What does the word pledge signify in the Christian Endeavor Society? It is not a promise that we will do something, but a promise in which we trust to the Lord Jesus Christ for strength to do something. So it should more properly be called a covenant because it is an agreement between the maker and Christ by His help to do His will. Surely there can be no objection to a covenant with God! The whole Bible is full of covenants—all of us occupy covenant relation to God and to the plan of salvation. When we recall that the promise is made not to the Society, but to Christ, we see that no Christian can consistently oppose it.

Further, what does this pledge, this covenant, embrace? It stands for daily prayer, for daily Bible reading, for active attendance on and participation in every Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting, and for the loyal support of the Church, especially by attendance on all her regular Sunday and mid-week services. Does the Church not need these things? Do young Christians not need them? Would the religious life not be better developed where these things are in practice? "But we don't want to promise that we will do these things. We are afraid we will get in a condition or position at sometime, in which it will not be convenient or even possible to do them." objects some one. Let such an one remember that the covenant is not absolute, but conditional, first in that we trust to Christ for strength and secondly in that we only obligate ourselves to perform the duties specified unless hindered by some cause which we can conscientiously give to our Lord and Master. Experience has plainly taught that the Christian Endeavor Covenant is a great source of strength on the part of those who have made it.

Again, there is no final, hide-bound form for the pledge or covenant. Every Society can write its own pledge. The United Society has found four forms in general use. These are printed below, but a Society may adopt a pledge all its own. It ought not, however, to make it so easy that it will amount to nothing nor yet so strict that it cannot be kept by those of the members who honestly try. Christian Endeavor is flexible and even in its pledge is adaptable to local conditions. But it cannot thrive without its pledge, its covenant with Christ.

Suggested forms of pledge.

Form 1.—Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do; that I will pray to Him and read the Bible every day; and that, just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to lead a Christian life. As an Active Member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at, and take some part, aside from singing, in every meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting, I will, if possible, send an excuse for absence to the Society.

Form 2.—Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Savior; and that, just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to lead a Christian life.

As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting of the Society, I will, if possible, send at least a verse of Scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll-call.

Form 3.—Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would have me do. I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible, to support the work and worship of my church, and to take part in the meetings and other activities of this Society. I will seek to bring others to Christ, to give as I can for the spread of the Kingdom, to advance my country's welfare and promote the Christian brotherhood of man. These things I will do unless hindered by conscientious reasons, and in them all I will seek the Saviour's guidance.

Form 4.—Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would have me do. I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible, to support the work and worship of my church, and to take my part in the meetings and other activities of this Society. These things will I do unless hindered by conscientious reasons, and in them all I will seek the Saviour's guidance.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

Below will be found a statement of receipts from the Treasurer of the Young People's General Convention, Rev. L. I. Cox. This statement makes a new departure in the financial handling of the Convention. Brother Cox will publish in The Sun all moneys received, so that all who contribute may be known and the Church at large may know the financial condition at any time and the support which the Convention is receiving at the hands of our people.

REPORT ON THE INTERNATIONAL READING CIRCLE.

Relative to the I. R. C. work, I regret to report but little. This movement has been sidetracked and left there. It has been pushed about on the switches but we have never got it out on the main line to send it home. The International Committee has not yet developed it. They have given a long list of books from which to select the course (see Teacher Training leaflet No. 11, 1810) but they're not pushing it now, not because of the lack of merit, but because of other things of more vital interest completely taking their time. Dr. McElfresh has advised me several times that they would soon be getting out literature for distribution that would succinctly set forth the work. But as yet it has not appeared.

I believe this reading course is the best thing offered to those who are too busy to take the regular Teacher Training Course. And even for those it is a most exceedingly helpful course. It is also practicable for those who feel themselves incompetent to take a regular Teacher Training course with the view of passing upon it. The books are prescribed and all that is required is a careful reading and the answers to the following questions:

When did you begin the year's reading?

When did you complete it?

State approximately the number of hours spent in the year's reading.

What in the year's reading has helped you most?

None of these questions will embarrass anyone and yet the answers to them will signify the amount of reading done and the intelligence the applicant may have of what has been read. I heartily commend this course to the people and along with Teacher Training shall take every advantage to introduce and establish it.

Making Pledges.—The Universal Duty of Making Pledges, Ps. 61:5-8. (Led by the Lookout Committee.)

Some Thoughts on the Scripture Lesson.
(Supplied by Rev. E. A. Watkins.)

Verse 5. Our pledge is primarily a vow made to God. It certainly is no less sacred than other promises. We are quite exact in fulfilling our promises to our fellows, ought we not give much more emphasis to a vow made to our Maker. We need have a care lest we be found untrue and unfaithful to our sacred word, which should be as binding upon us as the most sacred duty and obligation of life.

Verse 6. At the very basis of pledge-making and pledge-keeping is the law of fidelity to one's best self. "Be true to thyself and as the night follows the day, thou canst not be false to any man," is another way of saying that if we are true to our promises, pledges and vows, we are assured of a much longer life and length of days than could possibly come to us, if we disobey this fundamental law of our being. Disobedience to God's law shortens our days. The true life, in all of its relations, has the promise of length of days and a long useful pilgrimage.

Verse 7. "He shall abide before God." The man who is true to himself, and thus true to his fellows and his Maker is so intimately in touch and "in tune with the Infinite," that he is able to "dwell in the secret place of the Most High." God walks in the very presence of the man who makes his pledge of service and then faithfully pays his vow and keeps his word. There is nothing in heaven too good for those who keep faith with God.

Verse 8. We need to remember that God has been faithful and true in performing his promises toward us. "He is not slack in his promises." Wherever and whenever He has had a chance to "Make Good" with us He has done it. Human experience bears testimony to this fact. Now this makes it the more binding upon our part, that we be just as faithful in living our pledges. Pledges unkept dishonor God and do us a moral injury. Furthermore, pledge-keeping should not be considered as a burden or difficult, or we lose its value. The spirit of our pledge is the spirit of praise and gladness. If we keep it merely as a sense of duty and not from a sense of privilege it is not really kept at all.

Helpful suggestions for the Meeting.

There is no magical power in the Christian Endeavor pledge, by which a person is made a better Christian in signing his name to it. It must be kept, if it is to be of any value to us. Only when it is faithfully kept, kept in the spirit of the pledge itself, will it be of any value to us.

The spirit in which we sign the pledge, determines largely our ability to perform it. There is a principle in life that always holds good, viz. that the strength of the resolution determines our ability to carry it out in action. If, when we sign the pledge we put a good strong resolution into the act, that we will move heaven and earth rather than break it, we will have no trouble in keeping it.

It is of considerable importance that we have certain standards by which to measure our lives. We do this in every other department of our life. We cannot get along without it. How much more necessary that we have definite standards of action and service in the realm of morals and religion. One of the elements of Christian Endeavor success has been in its rigid adherence to definite standards. The pledge has been called the heart of the Christian Endeavor Society.

The great philanthropist, John Oberlin, when nineteen years old made this vow: "In the name of the Lord of hosts, I resign all other masters, who have heretofore ruled over me; the world's joys, to which I gave myself; the desires of the flesh, which dwelt in me. I resign every transient thing that God may be my all in all. To Thee I devote all I am and have, the powers of my soul, the members of my body, my time, and my possessions. The Lord's name be to me an eternal witness that I have offered this vow." His life proved that he kept it.

"Mercy" from God, and "truth" within ourselves are the fundamentals of all vows: "mercy" to favor our striving to be true, and "truth" that merits His mercy. These two quite common essentials are within reach of us all, and it is "Better to vow and climb,

And never reach the goal,

Than to drift along with time,

An aimless, worthless soul.

Aye, better to vow and fall,

Or sow, though the yield be small,

Than to throw away day after day

And never vow at all."

PRIMARY WORK IN CITY SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By Mrs. J. L. Foster.

Prof. Harper said in one of his recent interesting editorials in the Christian Sun that "Uncle Wellons is an active member of this Convention, and so it is not a children's affair." I am sure he did not mean to lessen the value of the children's part of this program, but that we as Sunday school workers must not be content, as children are with their little tin horns and dolls, and little desires (all good in the past); but strive to be up-to-date—progressive; to desire great things for our work and be able by the help of God, to accomplish what we seek to do.

The motto of this Convention is a Christian Endeavor Society in every church, Teacher-Training and Organized Classes in each Sunday school. The whole world is waking from sleep along this line, beginning to realize the great importance of this systematic work. In a recent editorial in the London Times, the English critic says, "O for a more systematic organization and method in our Sunday Schools, some form of guidance or actual training for the teachers; engagement of paid professional teachers in place of volunteers who, for all their excellent intentions, are incompetent; some sort of inspection and examination; proper recognition of a pupil's proficiency or a teacher's efficiency."

I suppose Organized Classes refers more directly to the adult work, so I would love to add to our motto—A more thoroughly organized and equipped Primary Department, be it in country, town or city. A Sunday school without this well equipped work is like a home where no merry prattle nor patter of tiny feet are heard—simply incomplete. It is too bad that in such delightful work as leading little children to Christ, people have to be kept from doing their best because of incomplete organization, when they could be so very useful if matters were different, so, I say by all means, add this to the motto of this Young People's Convention.

While the country Sunday School struggles with her problems, the city school is doing like it, only in a manner peculiarly her own. Among these problems are, first, a shifting population, which makes much labor in keeping records straight, and requires that every thing be kept at white heat, that the stroke may be given at the proper time to mould the little lives ere the opportunity be lost; second, the constant effort necessary to supply teachers; third, competition of other Sunday Schools, which may have more physical attraction than our own. Sometimes a child's name may be on two or three rolls, especially at Christmas times. Then, the indifference of parents, especially those of foreign birth, who seek to shift to the Sunday school their responsibilities in the religious education of their children is a problem. In the country the church and Sunday school is the one social center of the week; in the city, there are many such centers to attract and divert the interest of the scholars. There is, however, a movement and glow in city work which the country does not give. The moving population of the cities is a problem but it is a glorious opportunity for, only as we grasp this opportunity with eagerness, only as we feel intensely that the child is the key to the future, the key to the home, can we hope to make this work successful. The opportunity is ours only for a minute; the child with us, then gone; with what results God only knows.

All kinds of children are gathered into our city Sunday-schools. The rich and the poor, the educated and the ignorant, from the home of the drunkard and the home that honors Christ. The dirty boy and the well-dressed child sit side by side. Our aim must be to capture the child and the home for Christ. One God ruleth over all and we are to sound the key note of this varied matter and bring it to the one Book, the one Master, even Christ.

The opportunities for doing good in the schools where money is not one of the great problems, are almost unlimited, but, as money is a problem in most schools of this Convention, we shall try to suggest some ideal plans for the average city school.

Primary work proper includes the babies and children until they are eight years old. The Cradle Roll Department is one of the sweetest of all the school. Its motto is "The Golden Now;" its object—to bring the spirit of our Sunday school into the lives of the babies of our Cradle Roll; to strengthen the bonds of sympathy and friendship; to make mother's work lighter, the baby's life happier, and its future larger and to give helpful direction to all efforts in the interest of baby.

As a rule the child under four is not satisfied to come into the regular Sunday school work, but should be come a member as early as possible and if he is brought on an occasional visit, he will soon get acquainted, enter a class and not be afraid when the time comes to join the beginner's class. This is really the most satisfactory work of all the school. In the city, visiting is easy and the faithful superintendent calls in time of sickness or death, at Christmas, sends little gifts to the babies, if only a card, and thus by the reaction of her efforts finds a feast to her soul. Happy indeed must be the superintendent of such primary work for she gets hold of the home as no other Department can, this being the most sensitive point in the mother's life. She who can influence the mother to bring back the neglected family worship, the daily Bible reading and prayer for baby's sake. In her efforts for baby she gets sometimes both father and mother.

Now comes the Beginners Department, taking in the children of four and five years. Separate rooms should be had if possible for the beginners and the main Primary Departments. If this is impossible, I am sure the one room which is absolutely necessary can be curtained so as to have the two separated in time of lesson.

Here comes the real work. Mistakes now will tell in after life and Oh! to find the right person who will undertake this work for Christ! A woman and mother is almost invariably selected, if the right kind can be found, for

"Tis written that God made the women to help where he couldn't trust man; That He needed their goodness and patience to finish His wonderful plan."

And "God sought to give the sweetest thing

In His almighty power
To earth; and deeply pondering
What should it be, one hour
In fondest joy and love of heart
Outweighing every other

He moved the gates of heaven apart
And gave to earth a Mother."

I do not say that a man, or a woman who is not a mother, cannot be successful as a teacher of little children. Often young girls make the best kind of teachers, but, as the artist Millet once said, "When I paint a Mother, I don't try to do anything but paint the love in her face;" so he or she, whoever it may be, must have the mother love in their heart that shines in the face for these dear little ones under her care. If one can be found that has these motherly instincts, combined with firmness, patience and tact, she it is who will know what to do with these four and five year old tots.

This Beginners work is in the reach of the average school in every town for by the co-operation of the Cradle Roll and Primary Supts. visiting the children is made easy work, and enough children gathered for a beginning which if properly managed, will soon grow to be the next most satisfactory work of the school. We want a room for the little folks with a flood of sunshine in it and chairs to keep their tiny feet from dangling. These city children can meet often with their teacher and help to make lots of pretty and in expensive decorations which delight their baby hearts and make them feel that this room is their very own.

Where money is not such a great item, this little room can be furnished beautifully at a cost as follows: carpet (which is necessary to relieve the noise of little feet) and curtains, $10.00; chairs, $5.00 a dozen; table, $5.00; blackboards (small ones) $3.00, large ones, $14.00; with an outfit of animals, scenery, letters, etc., good colored crayons, 10 cents a dozen; a birthday bank for $1.00; a box with lock and key that supplies may be kept in safely, about $3.00. A piano or organ is almost a necessity. By all means have some musical instrument, if nothing but a triangle or auto harp with which to keep time.

At an expense of $18.84, this Department can be furnished with all necessary lesson papers, sand cards, sand boards (that is such a delight to the tots for they can here build cities, plant trees, and take their first lessons in Bible geography); birthday cards; Cradle Roll certificates, etc., all that they need for a whole year. All these furnishings can be cut down to suit the average school, even the limited school for always the way is found where the will is strong enough.

You say, that is a lot of money and strength to use for these small children alone. What is the use to separate them from those who are a little older? Why because no teacher can give a lesson that would be equally adapted to such varying ages. In our own homes we notice that some things that will interest our four-year old boy does not in the least interest his seven-year old sister. The story that would appeal to her is a little more than he can comprehend. A story, that of the Resurrection of Christ, made interesting to her age alone carries to her mind the idea "Christ arose from the dead;" her small brother says, "God rose up from his deadness." He knows in a way but kindergarten methods and more simply told stories are due these children that they may get clearer ideas of God, Jesus, and His precious Word. This may not be a practical idea for country Schools but the average city school can certainly have some kind of Beginners Department. The three essentials are the room, the teacher and the children.

The Primary Department cares for the children from 6 to 8 years of age and here we find the "busy bees" the "perpetual motion kind," the little feet and hands that must always be doing something; so happy is the teacher who can find plenty of work for them to do. Froebel teaches that "lessons through and by work are far the most impressive and intelligible." One little boy, when told to sit down and be good was heard to remark, "Well, can't I run around and be good just as well?" Children who are kept busy doing do not have to be told what not to do.

The Class room for these children should be very much like that of the Beginners; sunny and airy—pictures and flowers and breathing the air of reverence. They should never be allowed to frolic and play here before the opening for such a room cannot be turned instantly into a place of worship. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the music of this Department for as every one knows it has very great power to influence little children so it must be carefully chosen. Not altogether would we choose the bright and catchy kind, but many of the sweet old hymns are simple and childlike enough for the dear voices to be trained to sing.

A good idea would be to have folding doors between the Beginners and Primary Department that they may have their opening exercises such as Cradle Roll Day when the babies are invited to bring their mothers to S. S. to celebrate their birthdays or, when we have a special visitor who wishes to speak to both classes. Chairs should always be provided for any mother who has time and is interested enough to come and see how her children are being taught.

Many parents, once faithful to S. S. but now have lost interest are thus awakened to a sense of their duty and induced to come back and take an active stand for Christ and the Church.

A piano, two small tables, one for Supt. and one for Sect., cupboard, or museum to hold specimens of children's work, in plasticine or cut out figures, blackboard, colored crayons and trays and kindergarten blocks can all be used to great advantage when lesson story is told and illustrated. Committees from this department can be chosen to take flowers and some of their little plasticine articles to children's hospitals. A loving Supt. can think of countless ways in which the busy hands and feet can work outside of the S. S. hour, thus teaching lessons by actual service that will never be forgotten. Scrap book and pressed flowers found in woods and parks while taking walks or picnic excursions with their parents or teacher would also help to while away many an hour tedious to the little convalescing child in a neighbor's home, be it cottage or mansion.

It would be impossible in this short time to give all the possibilities for good of the City Primary Classes. Two very valuable little books, "The Beginner's Department" by Angelina W. Wray and "The Primary Department" by Ethel J. Archibald, published by the 'Times,' Handbooks for S. S. Workers, priced 50 cents each will be of untold value to all primary workers; also a little paper called the "Golden Now" published monthly by David C. Cook in the interest of the Cradle Roll, price 50 cents a year.

In teaching and guiding little children all is not fair sailing by any means. Discouragements will come to the best of teachers; Sundays when the little ones are unusually restless and the lesson, so carefully planned will all have to be given up and something else tried, but if the organization is just right, the equipment all that is possible under the circumstances much can be done to keep the faithful Supt. from much wear and tear of spirit and help them to do their best for the little ones she is striving to bring to the Master.

Elon College, N. C., April 26, 1911.

My Dear Children and Friends:

Here we present quite an extensive report—and with as great variety as you have ever read. Nice amount received, with liberal donations of many useful ar-titles. Those that help furnish the necessities and they are pleasing to the children.

We are delighted to have so many Sunday School Monthly Offerings this week; several new ones join our force and thus swell our income and we don't care how large it is swollen.

We do most earnestly plead with our pastors to take up the matter of our recent letter to them and give their people an opportunity to help us by giving from $1.00 up to $10.00. We do not expect large gifts. But it's the many gifts we want.

The following friends have kindly donated wheat from Union Christian Church, Alamance Co., N. C.:

Geo. R. Maynard, 3 bushels; W. J. Graham, 3 bushels; Winfield Wilkins, 2 bushels; L. H. Aldridge, 2 bushels; R. T. Kernodle, 1½ bushels; John H. Wilkins, 1 bushel; W. A. Hughes, 1 bushel; R. W. Fitch, 1 bushel; R. C. Diekey, 1 bushel; Mrs. Lee Hurdle, 1 bushel; Selma McCauley, 1 bushel; Mrs. Fan Garrison, 1 bushel! J. D. Wilkins, 1 bushel; Mrs. William Cantrell, 1 bushel; Mrs. J. M. Hurdle, 1 bushel; G. R. F. Garrison, 1 bushel; W. A. Paschal, 1 bushel; G. A. Garrison, 1 bushel; Mrs. R. L. Hurdle, 1 bushel; Thomas Ross, 1 bushel.

The following friends have paid $1.00 each instead of 1 bushel of wheat: L. B. Fitch, Mrs. Levi McCauley, Miss Adelaide Wallace.

With liberal donations of wheat from Union, Bethlehem and Pleasant Hill Christian churches, Alamance County, North Carolina, we will be able to furnish bread up to harvest, though our orphanage family has largely increased this winter. We are personally thankful for every bushel given, and pray that the season shall be so good that many bushels shall be added unto those who have given.

The good sisters of Lebanon Christian Church, Caswell, Co., N. C., have rendered the Orphanage a very valuable and much appreciated service by sending us seven nice new spring hats for our large girls. The following contributed a hat each, all of Semora, N. C.: Mrs. A. E. Pierce, hat for Mary Morris, Miss Huldah Taylor, hat for Nora Rodgers, Miss Mabel Yarborough, hat for Annie Knott, Miss Lula Oliver, hat for Le la May Canada, Mrs. Semora Taylor, hat for Dolly Brooks, Miss Virgie Davis, one hat, Miss Cora Lee Foster, one hat for little boy, from "A Friend," one hat.

These are the nicest hats our girls have received since they have been at the Orphanage, and they are very grateful for them, and we thus publicly acknowledge the treat shown our girls by these good sisters.

The following general donations have been received: G. R. Pergerson, Youngsville, N. C., water-melon and canteloupe seed; Tommie Thomas Youngsville, N. C., Onion sets; Wiley Goodman Riddiek, Youngsville, N. C., 1 copy of his new book, "Thoughts Promotive of the Higher Life;" Mrs. J. M. Saunders, Elon College, N. C., clothing for boys The Columbia Steam Laundry, Greensboro, N. C., a large number of linen collars-sizes suitable for different ages of boys; Mrs. Martha Kernodle, Union Ridge, N. C., 10 yards of gingham.

All of the above gifts are useful and we greatly appreciate them all. This has been a good week for us—many gifts, fine weather—much work done, but some tired boys and horses. We have about ten acres of corn planted and about 12 bu. irish potatoes planted and 13¼ bushels sweet potatoes bedded, to say nothing of garden seed. We hope to get in 10 acres more of corn next week and about 8 or 10 acres of cotton.

Don't forget about the special gifts for cancellation of all our indebtedness—just four more Sundays—just time to visit each church and take up the individual offerings. Who will be the first to send in a nice collection?

We were at New Hope Christian Church Franklin County, 4th Sunday in April for Rev. W. G. Clements who was absent on account of the funeral of his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Joe Clements, of North Wilkesboro, N. C. We had services Saturday and Sunday and received as special offering, $6.51, for which we are very grateful.

Let the work go forward with liberal amounts from friends, schools, children and churches!

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Suffolk, Va., April 24, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

We are a little late for this month, but have been busy at school, and we have neglected our writing. I enjoyed Annie Knott's letter very much, and wish one of you would write very week. Enclosed find 25 cents.

Mary E., Leone V., and Clarabel Hingerty.

The children here will write for a while, girls. First a girl and then a boy, so you may know the names of the children and what they are doing.

Goldleaf, Va., April 24, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

You will please find enclosed a dollar for the cousins. It has been quite a number of years since you got a letter from me so I reckon it will surprise you to get one.

I will close with good wishes for all of the cousins.

Your nephew,
J. Fleming Hilliard.

Quite a pleasant surprise, Fleming, and we would like to hear again soon. Many thanks for the dollar.

News Ferry, Va., April 20, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I heard you speak of the Orphanage the first Sunday in April, so I will send 5 cents. I am seven years old and love to go to school. We have a pet lamb; his mother died when he was two days old, but he grows very fast, and loves to play with us. His name is Bengie.

I will close; with love to all the cousins.

Your niece,

Mary Annie Farmer.

Glad to have you join us, Mary. Look-out that Bengie doesn't outgrow you.

Columbus, Ga., April 25, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Am sending my dime along with the monthly offering from our Sunday school.

I want to tell you about my Alabama trip. As father went to the Sunday School Convention in the Alabama Conference mother and myself went along with him for a visit to Grandfather Stephenson's, and such a great time as we did have. We sat out in the sun and I watched the little bantam chickens. One afternoon we went fishing.

We are at home now and are busy getting ready for the Sunlay School Convention here at home. We are expecting a good meeting. Wish you could be with us.

Your little nephew,

Dwight Hillis Lankford.

Would like to be with you, Dwight. You be sure to make a speech for me in behalf of the Orphanage.

Elon College, N. C., April 26, 1911.

Dear Cousins:

It is my time to write. The boy that wrote last week was one of our best farmer boys. I am the milkmaid. My name is Lela May Cannada. I was the first child at the Orphanage. We have five milch-cows now. Each boy has one certain cow to attend to. The cows' names are Lucy, Rachel, May Wingate, Maria and Mam Tildy. Mary Lee gave Mam Tildy to the Orphanage. Herbert Womaek attends to Mam Tildy; he gets about a gallon and a half a day. Walter Mitchell milks Rachael. Tyler Bollong milks Lucy. George Heathcook milks Maria and Andrew Curling milks May Wingate. I generally churn twice a day and make from 4 to 6 pounds of butter, but we don't have near enough to have butter every supper. My time will soon be out; then

I will have to clean up the sewing room. I certainly will be sorry because I like to attend to the milk. I have a girl to help me; her name is Sybil Curling.

Well, I hope you will all enjoy reading my letter. I will try to make it more interesting next time. Well, I will close for this time. Goobye.

From an orphan,

Lela May Cannada.

Henderson, N. C., April 19, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

April has come with its bountiful showers, Bringing forth such beautiful flowers; We must come our dues to bring, So we can with a glad heart sing.

We went to an Easter egg hunt last Monday; had a nice time. We found more eggs than we could eat in several days.

Measles is scattered all over town, and a little girl next door to me has had it. We have not had it, but don't know how soon we may. We are going barefooted now, and you don't know how glad we are.

Enclosed find ten cents for each of us, our dues for this month.

With love from

Archie and Wallace Newman.

Measles here, too, boys, but all are about well now and we are very glad indeed. You are ahead of us in the bare foot line but not in measles.

DIED.

Corbitt.

George Thomas Corbitt departed this life at his home near Holland, Va., April 17, 1911, aged 67 years and 5 days. He leaves a widow who was Miss Mildred Beale, a sister, Mrs. Tempie Lewis, one son, Hudson Corbitt, Newport News, Va., and three daughters, Mrs. Jim Rawls and Mrs. Lee Hollan, both of Holland, Va., and Mrs. Bertha Carr, Carrsville, Va. The deceased was a member and deacon of Hollan's Corner Baptist Church and a sincere, humble Christian. The funeral was conducted at his church by the writer and Rev. Mr. Philips of the Baptist church. The burial was in Beaver Dam Cemetery in Isle-of-Wight, Co. We extend our sincerest sympathy to all the bereaved ones.

IN MEMORIAM.

Col. Savage and Capt. Gaskins.

I read with intense interest Dr. Staley's admirable sketch of the late Col. Alexander Savage, which appeared in the April 19th number of the Christian Sun. Following so soon a similar sketch of Capt. T. R. Gaskins, both of these noble Christian men were at once associated in my mind and memory. As I recall them now, I'm sure the poet's words will apply alike to each:

"He was a friend indeed.

With all a friend's best virtues shining bright;

It was no broken reed

You leaned on, when you trusted in his might."

I first met Col. Savage in Oct., 1890, at the American Christian Convention in Marion, Ind. We were both members of the committee appointed to formulate and report a plan to re-unite the Southern and Northern branches of the Christian denomination which had been separated for so many years. It was there I learned to know and love Col. Savage and my affection for him was never broken, but increased as time advanced. Our last meeting was during the Convention in Norfolk, Va., in 1902. We visited at intervals between sessions, and on Sunday, Oct. 12th, it was planned for me to preach in the Berea, Nansemond, Christian Church of which Col. Savage was a member. Accompanying genial Bro. Newman, who was then pastor of the Church, we arrived in time for morning service. Though the congregation was not as large as usual, the Convention being an attraction, I was most favorably impressed, especially during the communion service which followed the sermon, by the devotional spirit that was clearly visible.

It was at Berea that I first met Capt. Gaskins and his estimable family. By invitation I was to dine at their hospitable home, and as I had greatly enjoyed the acquaintance formed at church and Sunday school, felt confident that my visit would bring me more than ordinary pleasure. Nor was I disappointed. Never did I enjoy for the first time a visit in any home, as I enjoyed that visit and dinner at the home of our sainted brother and his lovely family. It did not take me long to learn the quality of the Captain's heart and personality, for no one could be in his home for as short a time as I was, even, without feeling impressed that he was in a cultured Christian home—over which presided a consecrated Christian husband and father.

By the death of two such men as Capt-Gaskins and Col. Savage the church below suffers loss—but the church above is made richer by their coming.

“Loved sleepers, fare ye well!

We will not wish you luck, but lift the prayer

In fervency, that we may meet you there
Where ye have gone to dwell;

The prayer, that with us, as with you the even

Of life may be the entrance home to Heaven.”

D. E. Millard.

WHAT WE ARE DOING IN THE SOUTH.

Since receiving my Annual, I have been investigating the growth and present condition of our southern churches. The following are some of the results. Taking the 1906 Annual as a base, the following statistics show five years of progress.

Membership, 1906, 18,332; 1907, 18,328; 1908, 18,637; 1909, 18,423; 1910, 19,842; 1911, 20,445, showing an increase of 12 percent. This increase is distributed through the conferences as follows: Va. V. C., 20 percent; E. N. C., 17 percent; Ga. and Ala., 16 percent; E. Va., 13 percent; N. C. and Va., 10 percent; Ala., 5 percent, while W. N. C. lost 3 percent.

Contributions for all purposes, 1906, $50,650.86; 1907, $46,375.89, 1908, $46,406.37; 1909, $54,511.57; 1910, $75,909.42; 1911, $65,603.48; an increase of 30 percent with the following distribution:

Virginia Valley Central, 193 percent; Alabama, 191 percent; Western North Carolina, 44 percent; Eastern Virginia, 25 percent, North Carolina and Virginia, 3 percent, while the Georgia and Alabama has decreased 7 percent.

A 12 percent increase in membership in five years is a healthy growth, but does not measure up to what our people are capable of doing if they were thoroughly active in the cause. A 30 percent increase in contributions is better, but we probably have more room for advancement in this part of our work. We believe this increase betokens an awakening among our people to their responsibility which will eventually mean for us a larger work. The amount contributed per member as reported in the 1911 annual is $3.21. This is distributed as follows: Eastern Va. Conference, $5.38, Ga. and Ala., $2.45, N. C. and Va. $2.37, E. N. C., $2.22, Ala., $2.14, W. N. C. $2.04, and Va. V. C., $2.01. However the above is not a true estimate of growth since the funds raised by a conference fluctuate largely with the building improvements. For instance the Annual of 1910 shows that the N. C. and Va. Conference raised more than double what it did in other year of the five, making the total for the Southern Convention over $7,000 more than in 1911. A better test of growth would be a comparison of salaries and conference apportionments, since these represent largely the regular yearly contributions of the churches. The pastors' salaries have increased 43 percent; the rate by conferences being as follows: Ga. and Ala., 88 percent, Va. V. C., 68 percent, E. Va., 16 percent.

When we look at the conference apportionments the increase is less, being only 26 percent, distributed as follows: Ga. and Ala. 110 percent, Va. V. C., 92 percent, Ala., 72 percent, E. N. C., 37 percent, W. N. C., 25 percent, N. C. and Va., 25 percent, and E. Va., 17 percent.

Perhaps the best test for the true growth of a church is measured by its unselfish giving or to what it sends away from home. From this standpoint our work does not present a very flattering aspect. Taking the salaries paid and the amounts credited to other purposes (the most of which is spent at home) as the basis of the home work, we have the following: of the $3.21 per member raised in the Southern Convention, $2.63 is used at the home church, 27 cents is used within the bounds of the home conference and 31 cents given to the general work. The conferences use their funds as follows: For home church; E. Va., $4.42, Ga. and Ala., $2.18, N. C. and Va., $1.94, Ala., $1.90, E. N. C., $1.89, W. N. C., $1.72, and Va. V. C., $1.26. For conference purposes; Va. V. C., 59 cents, E. Va. 39 cents, N. C. and Va., 21 cents, Ala. 19 cents, Ga. and Ala., 18 cents, E. N. C., 13 cents, and W. N. C., 10 cents. For general purposes; E. Va., 57 cents, N. C. and Va., 22 cents, W. N. C., 22 cents, E. N. C., 20 cents, Va. V. C., 17 cents, Ga. and Ala., 9 cents, and Ala., 5 cents. Taking the offerings throughout the convention only 18 percent or less than one fifth goes beyond the home church and only 9 percent or about one dollar out of every eleven is sent away from the Conference.

Since the deeper interest aroused in Foreign Missions by the organization of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the question is being continually asked, what is each denomination doing. Judged from this standpoint we are far behind many other denominations. The conference reports for 1911 show the following. The Southern Christian Convention contributed 12 cents per member to the Foreign Mission Fund. The E. Va. conference paying 22 cents per member, the W. N. C. 10 cents, N. C. and Va., 7 cents, Va. V. C. 6 cents, Ga. and Ala. 5 cents, and the E. N. C., 4 cents.

The above does not give all the money raised by the churches but only that which comes through its regular channels. Several of the conferences have missionary associations in which only a part of the funds raised are reported through the conference and some of them have Sunday school mission funds which are not reported in the conference collections but what we have written is close to what we are actually doing.

When we look at the gain we have reason for thankfulness, but when we see how little we are doing in comparison with our ability we cannot fail to see the great work of education and civilization before us. We ought easily to give four times as much to Foreign Missions as we are. Our work in the home field should be supported more loyally. Our college and orphanage need larger gifts.

May an All-Wise Father help us to compare our activities with our possibilities and lead us into the path of our whole duty.

(Note.—Owing to the way in which some of the conference secretaries prepare their table, the above record has been very difficult to obtain. In the 1911 annual there is no record of what the churches of the Alabama conference paid on salaries. I added the same ratio of percent they had gained the other years. It would be a very simple matter for every conference secretary to foot up all columns and add the totals. All contributions and per cent have been reckoned to the nearest half.—W. T. W.)

WAR.

There can be no question that war is natural to nations. In fact, the carnal world everywhere shows the signs that God has provided for it. He gave fangs to the wolf, horns to the wild ox, sting to the honey bee, and poison to the cobra de capello. To deny these things is hardly candid. For God is the Creator. Only an atheist can logically deny that God gave these weapons to the brute world. He gave them to fight with.

And yet God so ordered the world that although the sheep has little “chance” in a struggle against the panther, in the great battle or war between sheep and panthers there are more surviving sheep than panthers.

When our western plains were first explored by white men, there were more buffaloes than bears. All over the world the animals of a pacific disposition are more numerous than the warlike.

Whether this was true in the geologic ages is a matter of no effective contradiction to the logic of this article; for if the warlike animals in the geologic ages were more numerous than the peaceful, it only goes to show that war thins out the warriors, and that peaceful species survive in the age-long struggle.

That indicates that God has intended that peace shall annihilate war, even though he has given weapons to the beasts of prey. This was also revealed by his Son, who exclaimed, "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

This was sadly illustrated in our war with Spain. The "Boston Transcript" of Jan. 14, 1899, reported Gen. Miles, our well known soldier of different wars, as having used the following language:

"Let it be borne in mind by the country that out of the army of 325,000 men enlisted in the late war with Spain, only 52,000 saw actual service. The remainder never left their camps. There remained an army the physical superior of those men who went to the front, and no volunteer army superior to those who remained in camp. And yet, how they faded away with disease, like snow in June. In thirty days after the army landed in Cuba only a small percentage of the number could walk without being supported. Everyone knows what their condition was when they returned to their own country."

Thus swords, claws, spears, talons, bayonets, fangs, guns, horns, sting, do not conduce to long life, even of the conquerors. War may be natural to the carnal life; but the carnal life leads to death. And possibly God intended that very thing. It is the spiritual nature that tends to immortality and eternal life.

If all this is true, war may be only one of God's ways of cleansing the earth. And the beasts of prey may be scavengers, or members of God's natural street cleaning department. And war between nations may serve an analogous usefulness to that of the bubonic plague, in reducing population in regions where the people will not be clean.

I have sometimes wondered if President Roosevelt actually rendered good service to humanity, whatever his intention, in bringing to an end the war between Japan and Russia. Both of those nations were warlike, and of immense power. But among civilized races they have the undesirable distinction of having given nothing to mankind of special value. If they had been allowed to continue their eminently predatory war till both had been thoroughly exhausted, like lions fighting even unto death, neither one would now be so vigorous in encroaching on China, disturbing, distracting and injuring that peaceful and useful race, that has developed along lines of civilization, discovery and improvement, entirely unique and peculiar among heathen nations. To disturb and invade China, as they have done and are now doing, is as barbarous as for a pair of African lions to enter a herd of African gazelles.

For China has long been a nation that cultivated peace. Possibly it contains one fourth of the human family, notwithstanding its unwarlike character. In China learning was a qualification for civil office long before Europeans had developed to that point. The Chinese printed books long before white men, paper being used there as early as the year 95, and imported into Europe in the year 651. The Chinese first manufactured porcelain; first used the mariner's compass; first used gun-powder; and practiced the art of spinning silk 500 years before the white races.

In connection with these things, if it be objected that the Chinese are opposed to reforms and improvements, we should attribute little force to the objection, seeing that China objects more to the foreigner in China, on account of his evil character, his drunkenness, and his fighting propensities; claiming that the average morality in China is superior to that of the white races visiting there.

And the conservation of China as to many other things is based on the human nature of all of us; appreciating her own points of superiority just as the whites respect theirs. The Chinaman objects to the humbug scholar in China, but accepts the telescope; he objects to the opium trader, but uses the microscope; he objects to the railroad king's monopoly of transportation in China, but Chinese own the street system of the city of Torreon in Mexico.

But if China had not cultivated the arts of peace, it is doubtful if fixedness in her old civilization would have enabled the hundreds of millions of people to live within her borders. If she did build a Chinese wall around her country, she did not send a Cortes, and a Pizarro, to another, continent, to overturn a civilization, leaving barbarism behind them.

Notwithstanding God may allow war, or provide for war, for scavenger purposes, it is only in that sense that it promotes the happiness or welfare of humanity.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

On Thursday evening Dr. P. H. Fleming of Burlington, N. C., delivered an address before the Special Normal Term for Teachers, to which the general public was invited. Dr. Fleming's subject on this occasion was the Ministry of Books and he handled it with a master's hand. Dr. Fleming showed that the books have a vital part in the formation of character and the development of personality. His address was well received and produced a pleasant and lasting impression.

Dr. W. C. Wicker and Prof. T. C. Amick attended the State Sunday school Convention in High Point, this week. Prof. Amick also this week delivered the literary address at the closing of the State High School at Lenoir, N. C.

It would seem that our quiet college community has contracted the building fever recently. Rev. L. I. Cox and Mr. M. A. Reitzell have recently finished substantial additions to their homes. Mr. J. J. Lambeth has his new house on Lebanon Ave. well under way. Prof. Lawrence is laying the foundation for his new home on the north side of the campus. Mr. J. P. Huffman has just moved into his new home near his mill and three other houses, so rumor has it, are soon to be begun.

On next Saturday night Karl Jansen, the Scandinavian Impersonator, will give an entertainment in the College Chapel under the auspices of the Athletic Association. This promises to be one of the best entertainments of the season, and it is hoped that a large audience will be present to welcome him.

Rev. L. I. Cox filled the college pulpit on last Sunday and preached an excellent sermon. His discourse was based on the following exclamation, "Behold he prayeth."

On the night of May 13th, the Young Women's Christian Association will hold an entertainment and serve refreshments in the gymnasium. The nature of their program has not yet been announced.

—The House has passed the Canadian Reciprocity agreement by a vote of 265 to 89. Though it is a measure vigorously advocated by President Taft only ten Democrats voted against it. The Republican vote was almost evenly divided, 67 ayes, 78 naes. The Senate is now grappling with the measure, and there is talk that Congress will be in session well-nigh all summer.

—A sensation has been created in Tennessee by a Representative in the recent Legislature of that State giving it out that he was offered $1,500.—a signed statement being submitted—by a Judge if he, the Representative, would vote on all questions "with the regular democrats." Bribery is certainly rampant in the land, and men even in high places seen not to cavil at offering or receiving bribes.

THE END OF THE WAY.

My life is a wearisome journey;
I'm sick with dust and the heat;
The rays of the sun beat upon me,
And the briars are cutting my feet.
But the city to which I am journeying
Will more than my trials repay,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing,
When I get to the end of the way.

There are so many hills to climb upward,
I often am longing for rest,
But He who anointed my pathway
Knows just what is needful and best.
I know in His word He has promised
That my strength shall be as my day,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing,
When I get to the end of the way.

Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty,
There are cordials for those who faint,
And there are robes, whiter and purer
Than any fancy can paint.
So I mean to press hopefully onward,
Thinking often through each weary day,
"Why, the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way."

THE VOICE OF THE LORD.

And I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then I said, Here am I; send me. (Isa. 6:8. Golden Text for Sunday, May 14.)

The prophet Isaiah had lost his hero and found his Lord. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord." Isaiah expected to see ruin and wreckage and desolation and general disorder—when the king died. Instead of all this he saw the Lord, the very God of safety and order and life. Till now Isaiah had looked to an earthly king; after now he sees a Heavenly. He thought that the going of his hero would be the downfall of things. He had not learned that the workers die, but the work goes on.

And having seen the Lord, Isaiah was ready and willing to hear and to heed the voice and the summons of the Lord. Up to this time the prophet had lived in twilight; now he comes to live in the glorious light of the full orb'd day. Heretofore the prophet looked to the King to direct all and to manage all. Now the king is dead; and Isaiah gets a new vision of God and duty.

It is an epoch in any man's life when he catches a vision of God and gets a new and larger conception of duty. This was what Isaiah had done. And so when the voice was sounded, he did not say, "Look to King Uzziah." Nor, "I will see if I can find someone who is more worthy and better fitted." No, no. Isaiah said without any hesitation, or mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind, "Here am I; send me." He was ready to answer the call of duty.

One reason why churches are not built up in the needy places of our own country is that those who see the need, put the burden on some one else. One waits for another. Or one waits till another has done the pioneer work so that later the work will be lighter and the salary larger. In this Christian Church of ours we wait for the Committee on Home Missions to pick out the place, make an appropriation, put up the house of worship. We have indeed the very, very few, who like Isaiah are saying in our time, "Here am I; send me."

One great reason why our church work is not kept up better is just this: One waits for another, depends upon another, expects much of another. Isaiah had done this. He had waited upon and expected much of his King Uzziah. But now that the king is dead, Isaiah flies to the temple and sees the Lord.

It sometimes does us good to have those taken from us upon whom we have depended so much. We have learned to lean on men; we need to lean on God, and catch new visions of our own duties. If the prophet had heard the voice of the Lord while the King lived he would likely have given answer from that he did give. But Isaiah is willing now.

Here is Isaiah's call to service. No man is ever called to service for God until he has first had a vision of God. When that vision has come, however, duty looms large and calls multiply and responsibilities increase. And no man comes to a higher plain of Christian activity and service than this: "Here am I; send me."

YOUNG PEOPLE FOR SERVICE.

Our young people may not be as pious and passive and perfect as older people; but there is no reason why they should not be trained to church work, and given something to do in religious matters. One may be active, energetic, ambitious, even vivacious and violent, and still be a Christian. Why should one not be an active Christian as well as a passive Christian? Why should not one be an energetic Christian as well as an indolent Christian? Moses was meek, but he was a man of vigor, virility, violence. The beloved John was "a son of thunder." Paul was a man of nervous and restless energy and activity. Men of action may still be meek, pious, powerful in God's service.

Our churches today need the pent up energy of our young people, an energy that shows itself in power and vigor on the ball field. Why should not this energy be harnessed, trained, utilized for the glory of God and the advancement of His kingdom. The Church suffers today because her young people are idle.

—Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., after serving as supply for Rev. Horace Mann, Rifle, Col., while the latter was serving a term as a member of the Colorado Legislature, has returned to his home at Graham, N. C., having enjoyed his trip, as did also Mrs. Long, to the far west, immensely.

—There are more indications than one that our Third Church, Norfolk, is enjoying sure and steady growth, and will count in the future as a might, force and factor for good. Not the least of these indications is found in this paragraph from the Ledger-Dispatch in a recent account of a Christian Endeavor Society formed in the church:

"The organization of this society has been in contemplation for some time, and the indications are that it will be a complete success. There are not a great many young people in this church, but those that are affiliated are thoroughly loyal and among them are several competent leaders."

It is not the number of young people in a church that makes it strong and important and useful; but it is the number of loyal souls in it who are willing to work, anxious to do something for the church, and for the kingdom of Christ. A most valuable asset in any church is the number of loyal young people in it who are capable and willing to work.

DEATH-PROOF.

We are much obliged to the fire chief of New York City for the word. The building in New York in which one hundred and fifty girls were burned to death recently was "fire-proof." The fire chief says what New York needs is not only fire-proof, but death-proof buildings. Come to think of it that is a fact.

It is very easy to label a house fire-proof. It is not difficult to deceive ourselves into believing that the building so labelled is fire-proof. Is it, death-proof?

We can easily label these buildings we live in—our bodies—fire proof. Just have the name recorded on the church book. Go through the forms and ceremonies. Respectable people will say, "He is all right. He is fire-proof."

But the real test comes. Is your life, is your character, is your religion death-proof? That is the question of deep and real and abiding concern. Not only fire-proof, but death-proof religion is what we need in this world.

FOOT-PRINTS ON THE SAND.

Since our good friend, Col. Wade Harris, is ever on the look-out for the good things and the curious, we pass him on the following from an exchange:

A few million years ago, exact number immaterial, a great Dinosaur made some foot prints on the sands in Colorado. Now, said foot-prints chanced to be in a bed of sandstone, and so were left there in a fine state of preservation. The Dinosaur and all his tribe, kindred and descendants have gone from the earth, ages and ages ago. But his tracks are here, though rare. A Colorado lad found these four tracks not long since, scooped them from the sands and has sold them to museums for about enough money to send him through college.

The moral and beauty of all this is that the impressions we make in life are here long after we are gone; and further that, it is not the number we make that counts, but only those we make in the right place and at the right moment.

But the Col. will do the moralizing all right.

STUDYING MISSIONS.

As touching the topic of Missions in the Christian Church, South, the great trouble, the supreme difficulty, is pure, sheer, crass ignorance. We of our Southern Christian Convention churches know almost nothing about Missions, I mean Foreign Missions, and the worst feature of it is, we are agreeably and willingly ignorant. We don't know, and we don't care that we don't know. We know next to nothing of the mission fields, and seem not to want to know. We know less of our needs and opportunities in the mission fields and are happily contented that we do not know. Here is the cause of our lax and lethargic giving for missions, ignorance of the work to be done, the obligations bounden upon us to do the work, among those who know not our Christ in foreign lands. I believe with all my heart that if we knew more about Missions we would do more for missions.

If this is the case, what we need is a plain and practical study of Missions. In some way we must study, and we must learn, more of mission fields, of mission need, of mission opportunities and mission obligations.

Time and again at our Conferences we have recommended that the pastors preach at least one sermon a year on Missions. Now would that not suffice for you, to bring an indifferent and ignorant people into the light of a glorious knowledge on a great topic—one sermon a year?

And we seriously doubt if this altogether illuminating and instructive didactic has been delivered.

We shall have to come to somewhat more practical, and even more enlightening than that.

Would this not help our cause? To have mission study classes in connection with church, Sunday-school, or Endeavor? Form a class, elect a teacher, secure proper and adequate books and helps, and learn the missionary problem. Is this not worth while? Is such a movement not feasible, practicable, and profitable? We believe it is. If people knew more about missions they would do more for missions; and we do not see how we are to know more if we do not study and learn. Mission study classes. Will this not help? Why not try and see?

—Singing Evangelist Charles U. Butler and wife are to begin a meeting with Dr. Staley in Suffolk next Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Butler are not only great in song, but are untiring in the efforts to win men and women to Christ. They are devoted to their work and are eminently successful. Suffolk is fortunate in securing their services.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Justice in the Pulpit.—It doesn't make any difference that it was a Catholic priest. He violated the rules of equity and justice and the courts did well to make him understand.

In the Willingford, Conn., Catholic church the priest, recently, in a sermon said of the public school house that it "was so unsanitary that the self-respecting American hog would commit suicide before spending an hour in that pig sty, which was a microbe-infested shack and pest hole."

William Hassett, a member of the School Committee, brought suit against the eloquent priest for the sum of $10,000, and a jury in the Superior Court awarded Hassett $4,000.

It served the priest none too severely. No minister has the right to use the protection and sanctity of the pulpit to exaggerate or to treat any man or topic unjustly and injuriously.

Time Treasures: The accumulation of years means money. Antiquity is worth dollars. The other day a Bible sold for $50,000.00 It was no more readable than any other of millions; but it had the value of antiquity and was rare. It was the first one printed on a press with movable type.

On May 3, a letter written by Martin Luther to Charles V, was sold at Leipsie, Germany, for $25,500.00. The letter is in Latin and was written in 1521.

This is like buying time. It is as if the years since had entered into its making, and found an integral part thereof.

That which is good and endures grows more valuable as time goes on. What would one give for an evil piece of workmanship, a mean and base manuscript, a wicked book, five hundred or a thousand years old? Very little indeed. Men care not for evil when it is past; but the good, that is worth while now, and becomes of more value as the centuries go. St. Paul's work is more valuable, of infinitely more value today than it was when he laid his last MS. aside in a Roman cell.

Kansas.—The State of Kansas has had a lot of queer ways in its day, but it is beginning to shine. It is showing the other States a thing or two. For instance, it stands first of all the other States in the per capita valuation of assessed property.

There is a reason for this. Possibly it is found in the fact that half-million young men and young women in Kansas, over twenty-one years old, have never seen a saloon in that State. There is not a single news paper in that State that will carry a whiskey advertisement. From which there are results like these; One-third of the counties of Kansas have not a prisoner in their jails, nor a pauper in their poor houses; and one half the counties in Kansas did not send a single convict to the penitentiary all last year. Evidently Kansas is coming into its own, and its continuous policy of prohibition is beginning to yield very large returns—even in dollars and cents.

Getting Gay.—We do not know why "Uncle Sam" is always painted in such gay colors, loud and long and striped, unless it be that his government gets gay occasionally. No protest now, just an observation. It is announced that the present post cards are to go. That is good. They ought to have gone, the sickly, little blue thin things, before they ever came. During last year the Government issued 871,318,000 of them at a total cost of $275,000. That was much to add to the blueness of a world already too blue—often too blue, many of us.

But the new cards, it is announced, are to be cream colored, printed in red. Now we like the bloom and the brilliancy and the blaze of things. So let the new cards come. Uncle Sam is getting gay. Why should he not? One may be gay and still be good. One may dress in glorious colors and still be gracious and generous. One may live in a pretty house and still be polite and pious. Cream post cards in red colors should make us all feel happy and proud for good old Uncle Sam who is not too old to be gay, nor too rich to be generous and good natured.

SAVING THE WASTE.

It is a mark of civilization to save the waste and reclaim the lost. Last year, we are informed, five thousand tons of tin were recovered from the rubbish heaps and trash piles—old tin cans, used and thrown away. This was worth three million dollars; for tin is much used in our day and is not over-abundant. There was a civilization in which it was not thought worth while to save and rear the weaklings of the family. And so they were thrown away—to waste. We have learned that sympathy and sentiment and tenderness and care for the helpless are worth much in a family and in the world. And so we give the greater care to the needy, the imbecile, the pitiful ones of the household and the community.

But the waste yet! The wasted boys and girls, men and women? Lives that might be useful, proficient, beneficial! If the old tin cans are worth saving and amount to so much, how about the hundreds of human characters who are on the trash pile, or seem going there? They are worth saving also.

LIGHT AND TRUTH.

By Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va.

O, send out thy light and thy truth, let them lead me. Ps. 119:105.

The light of God and the truth of His word are given to lead the way, and all who will follow may expect to be guided in security. The Word is a lamp and a light. What is a light? It is the absence of darkness. And what is truth? It is the absence of falsehood, and stands for veracity and certainty. These two principles are necessary to lead us out into the broad field of Christian activity, for if they lead we cannot follow in vain nor miss the way. When God wanted light turned on the worlds He had made He said, Let there be light, and it, at once, flashed on the earth and other worlds, and has never been turned off or gone out since. They have been lighting up the deep vaulted space all the time. Enquiring thoughts have run through the vast empires of space trying to learn if these distant worlds were inhabited with immortal beings. Then as the imagination winged its rapid flight from star to star, a silent echo ran to listening ears whispering softly to enchanted souls, It is possible. If Jesus came to save this world He could have saved other worlds also. But our present duty is to consider the great work of His salvation in our midst and in our reach. His light and truth have been sent out into the dark regions of sin, and if we will follow we may scale the topmost heights of Christian experience and development. Great, abundant and effectual means of grace and deliverance are provided for each one who will use them. And the promised assurance of divine help ought to inspire all with greater hope and encouragement. So then if you cultivate well, and practice diligently faith, hope, and love you will have the three elements of success.

Through a dark, deep, underground region I was once conducted by a guide. After looking at and admiring that new world in its greatness and splendor and incomparable beauty and brightness, he turned off the light for a few moments that the darkness might be realized. It was in deed the blackest darkness—it was total darkness. But when he turned on the light again the scenery looked so lovely and the heart was so glad as it was nearer God. The matchless formations crystalized into translucent beauty gave inexpressible pleasure to the occasion. This leads us to feel that heaven will be full of beauty and of the glory of God, when we awake in His likeness.

Look at the Goddess of Liberty standing high in New York harbor holding out the light with an extended hand welcoming the seaman and permitting him to see at night how to steer his way. It is a glad safe thing for him to behold. So, Jesus, who says, I am the light of the world, is also the light of the American nation, and is holding out the light of life to all classes and conditions of its people. Let them look to His light, and come unto Him out of the darkness of sin, for there are many dark and dangerous places in which they are hiding. Come out of them into the light of God, and let it shine upon you so as to cleanse and purify you.

Take the telescope of faith and look up and down the heights of time and see what God has done, and be continually searching after Him. In thinking of Him, such knowledge is too wonderful for me. I cannot attain unto it. Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there. If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost part of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

There is much talking and singing about our country—they call it a sweet land of liberty, the land of the free and the home of the brave. But are we free from the bondage of sin? Are we brave in presenting and defending the truth? Failure to declare the whole truth is often noticed, and the result brings Christianity and causes it to shine so very dimly. This nation has two classes of people in greater danger of falling into sin and temptation than any other condition, and these are the extremely rich and the extremely poor. God save them.

Light is being sent out by the different means of communication with the world, and some of them offer great opportunities to do good by causing the light to shine brighter and better. When God wanted a man to be a leader, or a reformer in any department of science, art, or religious liberty, He put His hand upon him and sent him out to open the way. In discovery and invention you may notice Columbus, Fulton, Morse, Franklin, Edison and many others. In religion you can recall the names of so many bright ones who gave themselves fully and entirely to God. When He called them, and showed them the way, they were willing to say, "Here am I, Lord, send me to do this work, and I will follow gladly all the way."

Get out in the true light, walk in it, and live in it, that you may become a stronger and better Christian. The eagle comes out of its shell where it has been in the dark, then it grows, tries its wings, until it soars above the clouds and ascends into invisible and majestic heights. So when the children of God come out of their thick shell of ignorance and prejudice they will be better prepared to grow in grace and in the knowledge of God, for these two things have destroyed the happiness of many lives. You have noticed the fly coming out of its dark cocoon. It did not look very attractive while in its little dark lonely house, but when it opened the door and came out, how gracefully it moved, and how beautiful it was flying over fields, woods, rivers and among the flowers which invited it among them. It appears happy as it flits through the beautiful gardens which nature has decorated, and you watch with intense interest the worm which has put on such lovely wings and moves with so much liberty and ease in the beautiful sunlight. So we think that when we come out of the dark cocoon of death, and put on immortality, we shall shine with the splendor of heaven. O, how beautiful will that soul be that dressed in the garments of righteousness! And then to think they will shine forever ought to dispell sadness and discouragement.

After the great light has been sent out, the eternal truth is going forth to confirm the faith of the saints and to clear and open the way more effectually for the kingdom of God. The truth is a principle which stands forever unchanged, and will stand the test of every age and any condition. So then when you are standing on the truth of God's word, be well assured that you are resting upon a sure and firm foundation. It is so pleasant to have the privilege of standing on the truthful promises of His word. When falsehood and error are falling into oblivion and are sinking for the last time, truth will triumph and stand through time and eternity as a lasting monument of its never failing power and endurance. Well may the world plead, O, send out the light and thy truth, let them lead me. Yes, they will lead you over the way of time to God himself, and fill you with the fullness and blessedness of His power. O, let us touch the precious diamond button of truth and by this means turn on the light of God upon our own souls and all who hear us. Ascend the heights of prosperity, or linger in the valley of disappointment and sadness through the way of truth until streams of gladness from the upper realms pour into your souls and flood them with divine light.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Big Oak.

Big Oak, we think, is on the uplift on different lines. They have a good Sunday school. At my last appointment, third Sunday in April, we had an Easter exercise, well rendered by the young people. Miss Minerva Brittain, teacher of their public school has also taken an active part as teacher in their Sunday school. She is a fine teacher in both public and Sunday school. And hereby we wish to give expression to our appreciation for her splendid work as helper in the S. S.

Mr. Vander Cole, son of Mr. J. B. Cole, is the S. S. Supt., and a good one. He is a most excellent young man.

Antioch.

Antioch is, I think, on the up-grade too. We had a good service there last fourth Sunday in April. The S. S. is not, as yet, just what we would have it be, but we are looking forward to a better day for it and the church at large. They have treated themselves to a nice new organ. And I want to say just here, they have a charming and winsome young lady, whose name I do not remember, for their organist. No power like the gospel in song, coming from a heart in tune with God.

The Sunday School Convention of the Ga and Ala. Conference convened with the Rose Hill church last Friday night and was in session until Sunday night. Mr. W. W. Elder of this city was elected President; Mr. M. J. Halman of La-Grange, Vice President; Mr. J. W. Short, of Chipley, Sec.; and Mr. J. F. Hill, of Girard, Ala., Treas. The program as published in The Sun was executed, with the exception of about two or three addresses that had to be omitted on account of the absence of the speakers. A splendid delegation was in attendance and the convention was full of interest from the beginning to the close. President Elder handled the convention well and he also handled himself well on several topics, to the delight and uplift of those present. All in all the convention was a success and we look forward to the time when our S. S. work in this conference shall rise to greater heights in Christian service. Among the things done by the convention, a resolution was adopted asking each school in the convention to raise during this year, three cents per member, at least one cent per member of this fund to be remitted to the Treasurer of the Y. P. C., the remaining two cents per member to be known as a convention fund for the purpose of defraying expense and doing mission work. This, we think, is a forward step in the right direction. No institution succeeds without some definite aim. We must lay definite plans if we hope to do definite work and accomplish desired ends.

The Rose Hill work has lost no ground in the last few months. Progress is necessarily slow it seems, for it takes time, effort and enthusiasm to build up a new enterprise; the church is no exception to that rule. So, while progress here doesn't come by leaps and bounds, we are hopeful and have many things to encourage us. We have recently organized our Bible class, of which the writer is teacher. This organization is only three weeks old, but we can already see that it is doing good. Both attendance and interest are on the increase. We expect others to join us soon.

We have planned to begin our protracted meeting here, on the third Sunday in June. Rev. L. E. Smith, of Greensboro, N. C., has promised to be with us in the meeting. We hope also to have Bro. W. W. Elder to lead the singing. Our prayer is that God may grant unto us a gracious revival.

The writer goes next week to assist Rev. G. M. Holder in revival services at Riverview.

The last session of the Missionary Rally of the Alabama Conference is history. While it is not possible for me to write fully of all the proceedings of this meeting I shall give only, in brief, some of the things that happened for the benefit of those who did not attend. Truly it was a good meeting. A few good seed were added to those of former years from which we are all expecting an abundant harvest.

Saturday morning the clouds were dark and heavy, but a good delegation from the various churches assembled with those of Beulah; and, with the election of the following officers, the organization was effected. Pres., Rev. J. H. Hughes; Vice Pres., Rev. C. W. Carter; Sec., Rev. E. M. Carter.

The churches represented were: Antioch, Bulah, Christiana, Mt. Zion, McGuire's Chapel, Pleasant Grove, New Hope Rock Stand, and Rock Springs. Ministers: J. H. Hughes, G. D. Hunt, C. W. Carter, E. M. Carter, J. D. Dollar, and W. R. Knight

There being three vacancies on the program, these were filled and all the subjects were discussed. The speakers did credit to themselves by showing an investigation of the subjects assigned.

During the business period it was decided by motion for the District Meeting to be held with the church at Rock Springs the 5th Sunday and Saturday before, in May.

Rev. C. M. Dollar, R. F. Brown, and Rev. C. W. Carter were appointed to arrange a program.

By motion the program committee was instructed to give space for a topic and organization of a Laymen's Missionary Movement. At this meeting was the only time the members of our conference have ever had the "features" of the Laymen's Missionary Movement presented. It is the idea that this can be run in connection with our Missionary Association and give larger scope for each.

At the close of this discussion an opportunity was given to those who wanted to subscribe to the special Missionary Offering and a subscription to the sum of $41. was taken. Half of this goes into the treasury of the Missionary Association and half to foreign Missions. We want to increase our offering from year to year that we may be able to do things to count. Not merely to "count;" God forbid. But by knowing our possibilities we, as a conference, will not be satisfied till it is done; because our Father has given them.

Now, Bro. Editor; just a word concerning my work at Wadley. Some time ago I mentioned in these columns the fact that the work was begun. Before this appears in print we will have had the house covered and almost weatherboarded. At the present the framework is all done and stormsheathed. The opportunity for donations is open and any amount will be appreciated.

More than 20,000 people in the State have been examined, about one third of whom were found to be infected. The examination and treatment are free. Dr. Jno. A. Ferrell, Raleigh, N. —Rev. Thomas Holmes, D. D., Chelsea, Mich., now well past his ninety years of an active and useful life goes to our Aged Christian Ministers' Home, Lakemont, N. Y. Dr. Holmes has indeed earned all the tender and loving care and consideration that his brethren and a grateful church can accord him.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The Boston Transcript gets off this: Notice to locomotives: "Street Crossing. Look out for automobiles."

—"Here then is the deepest religious question after all, Is there in Christ Jesus a present Savior who can cover me with the robe of His righteousness?"

—Telephone connection between New York City and Denver, Colorado, a distance of 2,200 miles, was established recently. From New York to Omaha, 1,500 miles, was the longest distance heretofore.

—Rev. L. F. Johnson, pastor of our Raleigh Church, is enjoying an interesting and successful revival in his congregations. Large congregations are attending the services and there are many converts.

—Those who wish the Ministerial Directory may get it from this week's Sun and paste it in their Annuals where it would have been printed but for delays, and where it should be every year.

—Monday p. m. a battle was begun in Juarez, Mexico, between federals and insurgents and many lives are reported lost. It appears that the rebel leader General Madero is not pleased with the terms of peace offered by President Diaz and has decided to fight. The Mexican situation is a puzzle.

—Rev. W. L. Wells reports a good day at Mt. Carmel in Franklin County last Sunday. This is a large and growing congregation and the outlook is hopeful. Improvements are to be made, at an early date, on the church building, and the house is to be painted, much of the money for which was raised last Sunday.

—We work like mad to "make a living," and a statistician has given it out on calculation that the "nut trees of the world could provide food all the year round for the population of the globe." Thousands of tons of nuts go to waste, because growing in such profusion, in Brazil every year. Still we would rather work a little, and thereby earn and have some cooked food.

—The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society of Pleasant Grove Church has undertaken this year the support of a Bible woman in Japan. This is a most worthy and commendable example for other Societies to follow. An Aid Society will drag along and die unless it undertakes some definite, aggressive, and unselfish work. One of the strong adjuncts to Pleasant Grove Church is its wide-awake, energetic, and generous Aid and Missionary Society.

—President Diaz of Mexico has signified his willingness to resign the presidency as soon as peace is declared. It is believed that this will bring about temporary peace; but it is doubtful if it will mean permanent peace. Mexico is by no means in an enviable condition internally, and there are indications that her troubles will be long in settling. The insurgents are numerous and determined, and it is doubtful if they will be satisfied with any thing short of a revolution.

—"If some church, which wishes to settle a pastor should call Rev. W. T. Herndon, Durham, N. C., we should expect good results. He has been largely used in other days to build up our cause. He has had much experience in many departments of our work. He has served with marked success as pastor, evangelist, missionary and financial solicitor for Elon College." A true word well spoken by Dr. J. P. Barrett in The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

—President Moffitt was at Pleasant Grove, Halifax County, Va., in behalf of The Special Fund for Elon College and Prof. W. A. Harper was at Catawba Springs in Wake County, N. C., on a like mission last Sunday. These are two of our most loyal and most liberal churches and of course responded royally to this call as they always do to every worthy cause of their Conference, members at Pleasant Grove pledging $225.00 in addition to pledges of $1,000.00 already pledged and Catawba members responding with $315.00. This indeed is liberal and shows, in a measure, how our people regard the call and the need of this Special Fund. It is a necessity and our people so regard and realize it.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

President Moffitt has been in Wake Co. this week in the interest of the Special Fund which he is endeavoring to raise and he left on Saturday of this week for Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax Co., Va., to do special work in reference to this fund.

On Thursday night, May 11, will occur the certificate recital in the department of Music and on the 13th, which is Saturday night, the Y. W. C. A. will give a reception, the purpose of which is to procure funds with which to send representatives to the Summer Institute for Young women engaged in college Y. W. C. A. Miss Helen Crane, who is the Convention Secretary of the Y. W. C. A. in this state recently paid the college a visit.

The town election this year was quiet, there being only one ticket in the field, the citizens' ticket. Officers were elected as follows: Mayor, W. P. Lawrence, Aldermen: T. C. Amick, W. T. Noah, O. B. Barnes, J. C. McAdams and J. F. Somers.

Rev. W. R. Ware, Presiding Elder Greensboro District Methodist Episcopal Church, South, preached in the college chapel on last Sunday evening. Mr. Ware delivered a most scholarly and thought producing sermon, and his congregation was delighted with him. We hope he will pay us a visit again soon.

The Clio Society has recently remodeled its hall, and now makes a very pleasant effect. The society fell in line with the great number of other improvements in and around the college, and now Elon boasts of three among the best equipped literary society halls of any college in the State. X.

NORFOLK LETTER

The meeting at the Portsmouth Christian Church in which Bro. Howsare of the Temple has been doing the preaching, and which was in progress for three weeks, came to a close last night. Ten have united with the church and 5 or 6 more are expected to come in later. Six were baptized last night.

Rev. D. A. Keys is conducting a meeting at his church in South Norfolk. I've not been able to ascertain results.

At the Temple yesterday, they report a good day—fine Sunday school and Endeavor meeting. Ordained as Deacons, yesterday, Bros. J. H. Blanchard and E. M. Albright—two good men.

At the third Church we had a good day. Fine Sunday school—Endeavor meeting was well-attended. Led by the Pres., J. Cleveland Barrett. At night the congregation was unusually large.

Last Thursday evening the Ladies' Bible Class and some of the friends and members of the school, to the number of about 40, assembled at the home of Mrs. Greene. When all had gathered, a few of the ladies laden with cut flowers and a beautiful birthday cake, with the words: "From the Ladies' Bible Class" quietly marched to the home of our pastor a few steps away, and gave a delightful surprise to Mrs. Hanson, it being the occasion of her birthday. The evening was pleasantly spent; a program was rendered and refreshments served.

Mrs. W. B. Pitt, one of my Sunday school teachers, and the efficient Supt. of our Home Department, recently underwent a surgical operation at the Sarah Leigh Hospital. I am glad to be able to report that she is doing nicely and it is expected that she will soon be at home again. J. W. Manning.

—Six school children in this State were the recipients the past week of a $5.00 prize each for the best essay on three different subjects: General Sanitation, Hookworm Disease, and Tuberculosis, a child under 15 years of age and one over 15 years, a prize each offered by the N. C. Board of Health.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE AT WORK.

One would think from reading last week's Sun, that at least a part of our good people of the Christian Church, South, are beginning to consider the absolute necessity of arranging and utilizing the dormant talent stored in the lives of our young men and women. This awakening is no doubt due, largely, to the gathering which gave to us the Young People's Convention. Since its organization, upwards of two years ago, by the hearty co-operation of its officers, the work seems to be in a helpful and progressive state. Special commendation is due Prof. W. A. Harper, our office and field secretary, for writing so constantly and helpfully, laying stress upon the importance of systematically organizing our young people for definite, effectual Christian service.

Let us let what may be termed our mistakes during the pioneer work be with the past two years, for they need not figure in the present or the future, only to profit by, and our successes be great encouragement as we face the work of the next two years, looking forward to and hoping for a great Convention. Let us begin to labor now, to make the Convention of 1913 worth while, and brethren, in looking to this goal, I feel sure that we, the officers of the Convention, have already your hearty co-operation and most loyal support. Some may doubt the co-operation and loyalty of our brotherhood at large, "but you'll have to show me." The failures and losses that we have sustained as a church, have not been due to unwillingness upon the part of our constituency, but our failure as leaders, to plainly set forth the needs of the cause, and to properly inform the masses of the church as to their unbounded duty to their (for they are theirs) organization and institutions.

My dear brethren, in view of the work of the Young People's General Convention of the Christian Church, South, I feel that you only want to know its wishes and that you will begin now to comply with the same. First of all, we want you to know that we have for our aim, more work and better workers. Second, we want you to pray. I fear you've guessed the 3rd already, for it's a natural conclusion, we want you to pay. You will be informed by our Treasurer and Financial Secretary, Rev. L. I. Cox, as to the plans adopted by the Convention to secure its necessary funds, but may I just mention, in substance, the same here? We simply want you, dear Pastor and Supt., to take one collection during each year, in your Sunday-school, Society of Christian Endeavor, and organized classes, and to raise one cent per member from the enrollment of your school.

Well, you say that looks reasonable and we might easily comply with your wishes if it were not for so many other things, that we are called upon to support. We have to contribute so much to the Orphanage. You couldn't do a better thing and if your school isn't contributing to the Orphanage, begin next Sunday. You say we have to support the state work. This is also commendable, but not more so than the merits of your own Convention.

If you think your school or congregation is being called upon too often for contributions, just write this on a little card and place it before the same, "Giving is like combing your head; if you do it every day, it won't hurt."

Now, my fellow worker, will you not respond promptly and heartily to any request that may come to you from our financial secretary for the support of this important and most worthy work? All together for the awakening of the unutilized forces of our churches.

Yours very cordially,

L. E. Smith, Pres.

MEANING OF BIBLICAL TERMS.

An exchange gives the following table of biblical terms translated into present day meaning. It is convenient to paste in a Bible for reference. It also may be used at times to arrest the attention of boys whose alert minds will be glad, for instance, to figure out just how tall Goliath was, and to approximate what measurement in the class room the giant would reach were he present. This is the table:

A day's journey was about twentythree and one-fifth miles.

A Sabbath day's journey was about an English mile.

A cubit was nearly twenty-two inches.

A span was nine inches.

A hand's breadth is equal to three and five-eighths inches.

A finger's breadth is equal to one inch.

A shekel of silver is about 50 cents.

A shekel of gold was $8.

(The ratio of a shekel of silver to a shekel of gold was apparently sixteen to one.)

A talent of silver was $538.30.

A talent of gold was $13,809.

A piece of silver, or a penny, was thirteen cents.

A farthing was three cents.

A mite was less than a quarter of a cent.

A gerald was one cent.

An ephah, or bath, contained seven gallons and five pints.

A hin was one gallon and two pints.

A firkin was about eight and seven-eighths gallons.

An omer was six pints.

A eab was three pints.—Ex.

THE NEED OF SEVERITY.

It is a common thing for preachers in our land to maintain the proposition that the proclamation of God's love to unconverted ones is far more effective than a presentation of the severity of God. Those men never present to their hearers the stern aspects of God's character; they do not warn them of the wrath of God against transgressors; they do not tell them of the painful penalties which are to be meted out to impenitent sinners; the whole tenor of their preaching is an extreme imagination of God's love, as though that love could mildly endure all manner of sinfulness from the boldest of sinners, without any purpose of bringing them into judgment. Any fair-minded reader of the Bible may readily see that it does not represent God in such a way. See how he dealt with the Israelites. I am reading anew the book of Jeremiah, and in it I see the repeated statement that those people in that day most wantonly abused the love of God. He reminded them of his manifold mercies to them; he appealed to them to think again of his deliverances of them when they were in great peril and sore suffering; he had been not infinitely better to them than were all of their human friends and helpers; and yet those subjects of God's loving ministries, instead of being moved with gratitude and kindness toward him, despised his goodness and continued to spurn his commands and ordinances. It was necessary, therefore, that God should treat them with great severity. His "fierce anger" expressed itself in fiery judgments against them. Penalties and pains were visited upon them. They must be made to know that God would not mildly tolerate them in their bold iniquities. And this is just as true today. He who says that God is not at all angry with wicked ones is in error. He lies against God and his truth. The times have not so changed that sinful human nature is less opposed to God than it was in olden days. There are many rebels against God in these days. It is the duty of every preacher to give warning to such ones. He must tell them that God, though very merciful, will not let unrepentant ones go unpunished. Fear God!

A WORD WITH TEACHERS.

Sunday-school teaching is not a right, but a duty, not a prerogative, but a privilege. Do we realize this? Christ preferred to be known as a teacher and ordained his disciples to go into all the world and teach all nations. Teaching is the most effectual kind of evangelizing. We who teach take second rank to none in God's plan of saving souls. Ours is a great, a necessary, a responsible work, a work freighted with wonderful consequences of right and good, if we measure up to our opportunities; laden with dire results of sorrow and sadness and ruin, if we fall below our responsibilities.

How careful we should therefore be to do our very best! We should first of all prepare ourselves thoroughly. This may mean many things to many individuals. To me it means, thorough general preparation and thorough specific preparation. It means to master a Teacher Training course, to get all the help in a professional way from every source—this is general preparation. It also means to be thoroughly prepared on each special lesson, to know what the Bible has to say about it, what the quarterly has to say about it, what such commentaries as Peloubet's, Arnold's, or Tarbell's have to say about it. to draw all you can from your general preparation. We cannot afford as stewards of God's plan of salvation, in this day of enlightenment, to continue to teach and not to undertake these two essential kinds of preparation.

But preparation is not enough. We are examples, ensamples says Paul, to our pupils in every way. If we desire the best results, we must always in every relation so conduct ourselves as to be blameless before them. Life is too varied to go into detail in respect to the various applications of this principle. Yet there are a few matters of universal application, which we may appropriately specify without seeming to overstep the limits of propriety in our suggestions for the conduct and action of others. Two of these are punctuality and regularity of attendance. No teacher who aims at success, who appreciates his obligations and his responsibilities, can afford ever to be tardy or habitually irregular in attendance. Because if he does either of those things, he fails therein to serve as an example or ensample to his pupils. If they form the habit of tardiness and irregularity in attendance, his class will sooner or later go to pieces. In sheer self-defense, therefore, he must be punctual and regular in attendance.

But at times it is necessary for us to be absent. When this is the case, we should make due explanation the next time we can be present. We should also notify the superintendent in advance, if possible, that he may make arrangement for the class, or better still we should secure a teacher in our place long enough ahead to give him full opportunity to make thorough preparation. This seems a small matter, but attention to small things always leads to large success.

Finally, if things go wrong, don't whine about it. The earth is full enough of sadness and sorrow and long-facedness now; the Sunday-school class is no place to add to these dismal things. Cheer up. Smile. Encourage. Be sunshiny. Dispel the cloud. Be kind. Plan, pray, work for better things, and they will come. Good lessons, punctuality, regular attendance, good order—all these things will thus come to you, but other wise they will not.

ANOTHER WORD FROM BROTHER ROUNTREE.

Last week we printed a notice from Rev. H. E. Rountree, Chairman of the Sunday School Board of our Southern Convention and I. R. C. and Teacher Training Superintendent for Virginia, in regard to the I. R. C. or International Reading Circle work. This week we are glad to give some extracts from his able report to the Va. State Sunday School Convention in regard to Teacher Training. Brother Rountree is a live wire in the Va. Sunday School work. We would like to see him put more fire and enthusiasm into our own work, for surely none needs these more than we do. He is capable of doing so and he holds the position in our Church that offers him the opportunity. We hope to see him enter in. We are sure no man among us is more capable or loyal than he. We expect great things from him as the head of our Church Sunday School work.

Extracts From Supt. Rountree's Report.

Practically no canvassing or convention work was done during the past year. I had the privilege of attending but two Conventions—Amherst and Sussex. At Amherst I had ample time to present the claims of the Department. As a result eighteen individuals consisting of preachers and superintendents and teachers enrolled seemingly inspired to return to their homes, towns and schools to organize the work. I had advised them to organize and do the work if they couldn't get but one to join them, and if none could be induced to join them, organize themselves.

Sussex had only one day's convention and, with unfavorable conditions and circumstances, Teacher Training was crowded out. There have been two very active classes in Sussex, but I think they have been "crowded out" also. All else that has been done in Teacher Training has been by correspondence.

There is another reason possibly why the work has not assumed as permanent shape as it should. The Department has not been established in the schools. It is the first design of the Teacher Training movement that the first object to be sought be a class at the Sunday school hour chosen from the senior pupils of the school, itself. I feel that till the school has a vision of the future and makes a regular department, there will be but little stability to the work.

Our regular Sunday School classes exist for the purpose of learning the word and training in character. The same reason is a convincing argument for the existence of a Teacher Training class also. The blind must be led by one who sees. The unlearned must be taught by one who knows. For, "if the blind lead the blind" and the ignorant shall teach ignorant, shall they not all fall into the ditch together? We all acknowledge the importance of learning the Bible and the training of the character, but all have not yet seen that is more important to prepare teachers and trainers. It is a fact that the people who object to these methods of Teacher Training will not themselves send their children to untrained teachers in the secular school. Of course it is impossible to organize such a class in the school consisting of the present corps of teachers. The present teachers should have a meeting in the week-time best suited to their conveniences. It is usually unwise to have such meetings in connection with the mid-week prayer-meeting or any other meetings. It should have an hour all its own when there is no chance of infringements.

Sometimes this kind of class is not practicable under the auspices of the school. The next best thing recommended is a class composed of teachers from different schools. Do not call it a "Union" class. That is sometimes a "Red Flag." Call it a "league," or an "Institute," or an "International" class, etc. For the cities I suggest Teacher Training Institutes. There are a few cities in Virginia which may now be ready for this. Such a class should organize carefully and prepare for at least two year's work. A school of methods for at least five days is being found very successful in cities in the winter time, taking up the work according to the International Standard, covering at least twenty hours. This has been proven to be wonderfully helpful and inspiring.

We hope for the present year to get a hearing in the Conventions; also to conduct a campaign throughout the state during the early fall. In this denominational leaders and everybody we can lay hands upon will be asked to cooperate for the largest possible enrollment. We will have to work from centers through pastors and workers. We desire to cooperate fully in the field simply to do the work, and it is designed that there shall be no rivalry but that we simply promote a unity of effort that will produce the highest efficiency. We would like to hold some Teacher Training Institutes in suitably interested centers which we believe will result in much good.

Teacher Training is not without its hope. It is growing marvelously elsewhere and certainly we cannot think it will fail to do so in Virginia. A letter from Dr. McElfresh of March 16 states that our number for the present triennium is 7,675 classes, 112,079 students, and 702 individuals. In addition, there has been sent from the states a larger number than heretofore to denominational Boards. This shows the increase in 12 months to be 3,320 classes, 41,027 students, and 301 individuals. 10,598 diplomas were issued during the twelve months till last June of which 469 were the Advanced Standard. We have every reason to believe that 15,000 diplomas have been issued during the present year. The above figures show that there was an increase of 200 Advanced Standard diplomas during the year preceding. In addition to the above enrollment there are about 20,000 students reported by the denominational secretaries.

Dr. McElfresh reports a very hopeful outlook. Several states have employed men for their whole time; others half their time, and still others for one third of their time. Editors and publishers of Sunday School literature are gradually giving place to the department of Teacher Training in their periodicals. The importance of Teacher Training is being admitted everywhere. The outlook over the whole field was never richer in prospect than now. Pennsylvania still holds her usual progress. Iowa and New York are in the lead. Alabama and North Carolina and several of the western states are sending up fine reports.

The burden of religious teaching falls, under the swift changing conditions, ever heavier upon the Sunday School. The truth it teaches and how it is taught is to be the slogan and the faith of the coming generation. Dr. McElfresh said in his last report:

"The great call for sacrifice in service and more especially in preparation for higher efficiency in service, must be repeated until it reaches the ear of the great body of American Sunday School teachers. In this intense day, only men and women devoted, heart and brain to the great task can command attention; and only those trained to work on higher levels can win our brighter young people to the study of the Bible and hold them to loyalty to Christ."

C. E. TOPIC FOR MAY 21—A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

Growing into Larger Work, Mark 4:26-32.

Prefatory Remark: It is expected that the Juniors and Intermediates will attend this meeting of the Young People's Society. Be sure to invite them, if your church has such societies in connection it, and also be sure to give them some part in the program—a few songs to sing, a few recitations, etc., etc.—some part. A conference with the superintendents of those Societies by the leader would no doubt produce a varied and interesting program.

The Leader: "Growing into larger work" is the end and aim of all Christian Endeavor activity. We meet in our prayer-meetings, sing songs, offer prayer, make little talks, recite verses—surely this is not the end of our work, but only the means to an end. The Junior Endeavorers are looking forward to becoming intermediates; the Intermediates expect to be members of the Y. P. Society. We serve on the various committees not as ends of service, but as beginnings of larger service—as training for the greater work of the church and the larger Christian life. There are plenty of opportunities for us to grow, if we will only avail ourselves of them. There is something greater yet for us each to do, if we will but trust ourselves to God and be faithful in the performance of every act.

The Pastor: At some time during the meeting let the pastor read the Scripture lesson, preferably towards the close, and give him five minutes to present Christ to the Juniors and Intermediates. If this part of the service is well-planned for and prayerfully executed, converts ought to be forth coming.

COURAGE IN THE RISEN CHRIST.

Text: And the angel answered and said unto the woman, Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus who hath been crucified. He is not here; for he is risen even as he said. Matt. 28:5-6.

I am told of an ancient letter during the time of Polycarp which says: "Now the blessed Polycarp suffered martyrdom on the seventh day before the Kalends of May, Statius Quadratus being pro Consul, but Jesus Christ being King forever."

As we look into the empty tomb, "Jesus Christ King forever," is the triumphant note that comes to us from across the ages. It is told us by the angel guards. It is sung by the sainted Cherubim, and it is the gladdest note to which mortal ever listened.

The longings of the heart, the quests of philosophers and seers, the doubtings of sceptics, vain hopes and human fears of humanity all changed to glorious certainties in the fact of the Resurrection. Like the sudden flashing radiance of the diamond when brought suddenly into the sunlight, so the whole light of eternity bursts in on humanity through the empty tomb.

The martyrdom of Polycarp, and that of all religious champions who suffered a similar death, without the assurance of the Resurrected life, would have made him of all men most miserable; but with that assurance, His death was radiant in the song, "Jesus Christ is King Forever."

Human opinions may be rafts which will carry us, with some risk, when there is nothing better; but the fact of the Resurrection is a ship of Zion which offers eternal safety, and human opinions are nothing but sinking sand.

The fact of the Resurrection needs no argument. If there is one who does not believe, I would thank him to signify it. But there are none. Why then should I speak of fears in the resurrection and the courage of overcoming them? It is this: There are a great many doubts and fears that impede our progress in the kingdom; and there is a way of casting off all of it and hoping for the solution of all. It is the Resurrection of Christ.

1. "For not," For the Resurrected Christ is the Perfection of the Value of Human Life.

There was a time when human life was little more than a dog's. Men slew one another at the slightest provocation. Blood was taken for law and precedent; but now the whole world is realizing how real and precious a thing is human personality. And as the sense of the triumph of Jesus over the grave becomes general and more established, this feeling becomes more intense, till today there is a premium upon life. We are coming to see as never before that we are not bodies merely possessing a soul, but that we are souls ourselves, and this relation to God is violated only at the expense of the wrath of God and the vengeance of eternity.

The triumph of Jesus over the grave has made life essential and priceless and complete through "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Two thousand years ago, we saw the blood-thirsty Roman soldiery, the unprincipled High Priest, the barbarous mob of Jews, sight-seers and lookers-on, all witness a most awful deed, wholly indifferent to right, to law, to suffering and the value of life;—a pitiable sort and an unpardonable mockery was that of those who witnessed the crucifixion of the man whose dignity was as exalted as the stars, whose humility as gracious as the dew, whose purity was sweeter than the lillies and as perfect as the heart of God.

But He did not die. Behold the tomb is empty! It was an astonished world that Sabbath morn, when the earth quaked, when soldiers fell to the ground, when men of authority were powerless, when disciples wept with inexpressible joy; and Jesus stood in the garden and said, "Mary." And she, turning in a startled manner, replied, "Raboni."

Humanity today moves toward the Cross but 'tis not with mockery and violence. It is a new people with a new thought, a new light and a new life. They approach it now with reverence reaching forward for Calvary's brow, anticipating a day when they like Him shall be raised up, "that whoso believeth in Him shall never die." Christ sleeps in every soul but always awakes to the touch of faith to reveal to man the worthiness of life forever. So that not only he who takes the blood of another is a murderer, but "he that is angry with his brother is a murderer." This is the standard of the risen Lord.

2. "Fear not," The Risen Christ Gives Us a Conquering Nature.

It is most wonderful to contemplate the fact that God has expressed himself in most intelligible terms in the cross. God be thanked for that! But even yet it seems to me more wonderful that he has given us a heart, a nature and a brain to understand that which He speaks unto us. There is an instinct which impells us to look for and depend upon a God and an eternal home. Divine creation of humanity has expressed his own mind in the structure of His own hand. 'Tis the risen Lord,—the empty tomb,—that is a window, a door,—through which we see him, and heaven and home eternal.

Birds find new impulses, mate and sing gaily amid the flowers of springtime. They know not why, neither do they care. They act upon an instinct as old as the human heart. Destiny impels them there.

Man, under the power of the Resurrection has new words upon his tongue, sings a new song, breathes a new atmosphere, lives a new life, feels new impulses, enjoys nature which impels him to divine thought and action.

He knows not why, nor how, and certainly it ought to be the least of his considerations. It is the deathless song of the empty tomb,—"Jesus is King forever," and eternity is ours. Cold criticism, unholy agents, and a wicked world has tried to stifle this song and our heavenly aspirations for the centuries past; but God has stamped his image upon it, Christ has freely sanctified it, so that all that a wicked world may do is made futile and all the more so by the more powerful sanction of his risen life.

"In my father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

God has so made himself responsible for our eternity that if we will but yield to our nobler instincts our "hearts will lead us home."

The hard way, called death, hell itself, is nothing, for He himself has passed that way and conquered all, and beyond it all He stands amidst the flowers of eternity and beckons us there.

His promise:

"I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live."

David:

"Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil."

3. "Fear not," By the Risen Christ Moral Conscience is Confirmed.

We are told of a law of material and matter which while holding all things to itself is also held and influenced by other powers. We are told that the planet Neptune was discovered through certain perturbations in Uranus. The earth has its relation to the moon and stars and sun, and these cannot be accounted for by the knowledge of man.

There are certain faculties of our being unaccounted for in us which teach us that we struggle not for existence merely in a material world, but that we are "under the influence of another world," other powers. Obedience to this instinctive consciousness sometimes leads us to material loss.

We have seen the wicked "spread themselves like a green bay tree," and have been amazed at the strange reversals of what judgment says was best. We have likewise seen the wicked miserable and cut off, their place forgotten, and on the other hand the righteous found not begging bread.

Can these things be explained in material things? "If a man is merely the product of a material world, seeking only its pleasures and rewards," and death is end of it all, how these strange developments, whose results are not always the same, come to pass?

You have stood by the open grave of your darling baby, broken in grief, and sobbed that eternal question in words of tears and pain and blood, "If a man die shall he live again?"

You have perhaps witnessed the passing away of your noble and good and godly father and mother, and your inner consciousness impels you to know that there is something there that is not dead, and again that immortal question swells in your bosom, "If a man die shall he live again?"

You have seen the rich and the poor alike come together in the same pale of death and pass out and are not more, and yet their images follow you, their words follow them, and you cannot keep back the thought of an eternity that measures out justice, and love and God. "Shall he live again?" There is but one reply: "Yes."

Christ said, "If I live, yet shall live also."

"And if I be lifted up, I will draw all men to me."

Isa. 26:9: "The dead shall live, together with my dead body they shall rise."

Behold we stand speechless before the cross and bathe the feet of the lowly

Nazarene with our tears, but we have not to ask "Shall He live again?" "He is not here but is risen" and that fact removes the "paralyzing fear" and assures us of eternity and victory.

Can this be a delusion? Nay verily! 'Tis but a "fire-glow of divine judgment." If Christ had perished, all else would have perished with him. The universe would have lost His character and His life, and our faith would be in vain, our preaching vain, and we all would be false witnesses.

"The last enemy to be destroyed is death, "But Christ has risen and become the first fruits of them that slept," and thereby our dreadful fears are dispelled.

Finally:

Life is complete in the risen Lord.

"The musician in his noblest creation," the artist in his most masterful designs, "The poet in his most inspired utterances," man is his highest of morals and culture, all have failed to express the vision of the ideal and the possible and turned sadly from their work.

We think of man as a "bundle of possibilities." And we are amazed often at the disclosures of the heart and life, when momentous and immense possibilities and even realities manifest themselves there; and yet the great space between what we are and what Jesus may be, stands out before us in a most vivid and powerful manner.

There is no way or means by which these two facts may be united—a man and his ideal—and every faculty of the being drawn out to its completion, save through eternity. The risen Lord gives us an eternity and through this fact, "The poet shall complete his vision, the musician shall discover the lost chord, the artist shall put life everlasting in his designs, and broken and failing and fallen man shall come home a prodigal to find a Savior inexhaustible in wisdom and righteousness and redemption and perfection.

"I go to prepare a place for you." "Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many."

Sermon delivered by the pastor, Rev. H. E. Rountree, at the Christian Church, Waverly, Va., Sunday p. m., April 16.

AFTER EASTER.

The mind will still fondly linger on the past Easter with unusual pleasure. Many from schools and colleges visited the old home during the memorable holiday to be again with father and mother and other loved ones. Friends, relatives, acquaintances, new and old, met and had joyful times at these gatherings, recounting what had taken place, what was then occurring, and the things which might take place in coming events. Much of this was interesting to parties concerned. A simple little present, an act of kindness, or a pleasant encouraging word left an impression which bound heart to heart and made somebody happy with the precious thought that life was happiness as well as duty. To be remembered in some way by our friends is surely an honored privilege every one loves to enjoy. This spirit is being more and more cultivated, as people think more and better of each other and learn to appreciate their privileges.

Jesus and the resurrection are full of interest to every Christian and as he thinks of his own resurrection from the long sleep of death, it becomes more and more interesting to him. Believing that Jesus passed through the mysterious change of the resurrection, so will we, if faithful and worthy ascend the infinite heights of eternal joy to live in endless felicity with the great multitude of saints to enjoy the rest provided for them. The hope of dressing up in the full robe of righteousness to live in immortal youth ought to inspire each one to contend for that prize of such high price which is worth more than all others. "Know you not that they which run in a race run all but one receiveth the prize; so run that you may obtain."

Much has been said concerning the resurrection, but it is still the song of the ages and the wonder of the world, and will continue to be observed as long as time shall flow into the ocean of eternity. This Easter time brings out the life all through the empire of nature, for in swelling bud and blooming flowers coming out of the frozen grasp of a winter grave, you look upon the resurrection of nature with intense delight and see the great unfolding of this mysterious power. A new growth—a splendid development is seen all about you, and as you thus commune with God you come nearer to Him, and get more in touch with His all pervading and invading presence. And while you gaze upon the expanding beauty inviting you to study its impressive object lesson, how delighted is the view, and how pleasing the glad emotions produced by such study. None but a heart which is as hard as a stone can fail to realize the blessing which this Easter time imparts. Many an Easter song went up on the wings of hope to the throne itself, and echoed the glad strains back to earth again that Jesus still lives in His resurrected and glorified state. Passing through the long dark night of sleep we shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness. We will never be perfectly satisfied here in the changing scenes of time, but in heaven we shall be satisfied with its changeless splendor.

My Dear Children and Friends:

This week finds us quite busy—in the fields, ploughing and planting and laying the foundation of our new silo. The weather has been quite cool and we have left off planting our cotton till next week.

We are glad to welcome from week to week, new Sunday schools that have decided to give "the Monthly Offerings." These new ones and the schools that have decided to feed and clothe an orphan child greatly help us. We trust that many other schools will report at once. Try to do something if it's only $1.00 or .50 per month.

We have asked our pastors to give everybody an opportunity to make a personal offering before June so as to cancel all our indebtedness.

The 5th Sunday, 11 a. m., we had the pleasure of visiting Burlington Church and speaking with and for Dr. Fleming with whom we have had pleasant associations since we entered school in 1881 at Graham Normal College, as ministerial students. It was a rainy day and only a small congregation, that exercised patience for we preached and talked Orphanage and those present gave liberally—so that we got $58.50. We appreciate the kindness and help thus given us. The Burlington S. S. also feeds and clothes a child.

The first Sunday in May we will be in the eastern section of the Valley, Va., Conference beyond Charlottesville, Va.

Let every one give us a liberal "Special personal" offering and thus close out the entire indebtedness.

With love and greetings to all the cousins and thanks to friends, I am,

Yours for service,

Uncle Jim.

Pine Apple, Ala., April 29, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

We did not enjoy the misprint last month. Of course "we are a lot of trouble," but Mama says that that doesn't count for we are the dearest little boys and help as much as we can.

We send our love and dimes.

Fondly,

J. Newman Denton; S. E. Denton, Jr.;
 Jos. Rabb Denton.

We all know that dear little men, but we cannot help the misprint. Mistakes just will happen.

Windsor, Va., May 3rd, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Here I come to chat a while with you and the cousins this pretty A. M. We are still going to school and it seems as days grow longer the road gets longer too. We amuse ourselves by holding meetings. Sometimes we have a union meeting and our driver gets a little tickled at the different reports from S. S. but you see we enjoy it and time goes while we hardly realize it. One week in March we held a revival, read scripture, sang songs and about three of the girls would bring a real dinner for the occasion. Well, we did enjoy ourselves.

I must thank you for names for my pigeons, "Brighteyes and Sunshine." I think the names suit them so well and they shall be called by these names when they get old. If people were as industrious as pigeons and the birds that are building in our yard, oh! how much work would be done!

Tell Annie Knott she must be grown to do so much work.

Uncle Jim, please tell us a good way to spend our vacation.

With love and good wishes for you and all the cousins.

I close with five cents to help.

Your niece,

Hettie Davis.

Guess mother will be more able to tell you about vacation than I, Hettie, as I do not know any of your plans. However, I hope you will spend a most delightful one whatever you do.

Windsor, Va., May 3, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I am three days behind time this month. I am having a good time playing in the yard, looking at ma's little chicks. I love springtime. We have roses almost in bloom. Enclosed find five cents. Tell William Staley Cheatham to write again.

I love his long letters.

Your niece,

Violet Davis.

It will be nice to have the beautiful flowers again, Violet. Are you not glad you are named like one of the earliest ones?

Windsor, Va., May 3, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I hope you and all your large family are feeling good this fine weather.

Our school is going one yet, but will close the last of this month. Our teacher is getting up nice things and we will commence to practice today. I close with love and a nickle

Junie Mai Davis.

Well Junie, our little folks begged to go barefoot but, I think now they wish that had not been such early birds for Jack Frost has returned and is nipping toes just a little.

R. F. D. 7, Suffolk, Va.,
 April 18, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

I love to hear of the Orphanage doing so well. Hope it may ever prosper.

With much love to you and the cousins. Enclosed find .25 cents.

George Earl Rodgers.

A nice kind wish, George, and we feel that you will do your part towards helping with this great work.

Henderson, N. C., April 30, 1911.

Dear Uncle Jim:

We missed March and have nearly missed April. We send dues for both months.

This has been a rainy Sunday. Daddy is away on a ten days' trip. We miss him so much.

Newman Denton need not fear that daddy doesn't love our baby. He says she is the sweetest in the world. She laughs and crows and scratches enough to satisfy even daddy.

We shall be glad when May comes. Grandma is coming in May. Aunt Lilly and Leon will come too.

Will try to be more punctual, but we are all so little and make so many demands on mother's time it is hard to get our letters in every time.

Lovingly,

Chas. E., Hannah Clare, and Helen Shivers Newman.

Yes, we know how the dear little folks demand the attention of mothers, children, but you are being trained to give while you are young; and when you can write for yourselves you will want to do so and, oh! we do want more busy mothers to write for their little ones.

DIED.

Park.

Mrs. Bettie Williams Park was born Oct. 11, 1870, and died March 23, 1911; aged 40 years, 5 months and 12 days. She married Mr. C. T. Park May 23, 1894. Before marriage she lived in Durham, N. C., and after marriage she lived near Tarry's Mill, Va. To this union were born seven children; 4 boys and 3 girls, one boy having preceded her to the grave. From early in life she had been a member of the church—first joining the Presbyterian Church; then later moving here membership to Mt. Auburn Christian Church, where she remained a faithful and consistent member till death.

She was a pious, good woman. Her life was one of kind words and gentle deeds and helpful sympathy. She leaves a devoted husband, bright happy children, and many kindred and friends to mourn their loss. Buried at Mt. Auburn, and burial services read by Hon. S. P. Read. May God bless the dear family.

Jas. L. Foster.

Park.

Thomas Adams Park was born July 19, 1841, and died April 6, 1911, aged 69 years, 8 months and 17 days.

His health had been giving way for two years or more and he had suffered much. He was reared in Mecklenburg Co., Va., and spent his life there.

He married Elizabeth A. Owen in 1868 and to this union were born 5 boys and 5 girls. Seven children survive him.

He was post master at Tarry's Mill, Va., for 30 years and clerk of the township school Board for 25 years. And filled other positions of trust and honor.

He was buried under the auspices of the Masonic Lodge in Mount Auburn Church Cemetery. He served through the Civil War in Company E. 69th Reg. Pickett's division. The deceased was a member of St Luke's Episcopal Church, Va., and was liberal to all churches. He leaves two brothers: Chas. T. Park, Dallas, Texas, and Alex Park, Memphis, Tenn, and one sister, Mrs. R. T. Williams, Macon, N. C.

Wiley.

Near Graham Depot, April 29th, 1911, Mr. James C. Wiley. Funeral services took place from the Christian Church at New Providence on Sunday, April 30th. Brother Wiley was born Oct. 9th, 1833. Married Mary E. Trollinger Dec. 21, 1869. His wife and four children survive him. Four children preceded him to the heavenly home. He was not only a devoted husband, useful citizen, and a faithful Christian and member of the M. P. Church, but he was known and honored as one of the bravest and truest Confederate soldiers who served from 1861 until the star of the Confederacy paled to a cease at Appomattox in 1865. A large congregation filled the church. I called on the following brave Confederate veterans to say a few words about their departed friend: Hon. Jas. A. Turrentine, Ex-Mayor Hall, Ex-Sheriff Jas. Hamilton, Capt. Murphy W. Andrews, and Capt. J. N. H. Clendimmin. Braver and better men who spoke never marched through the white smoke of battle. Their words touched all hearts. Dr. Currie, pastor of the M. E. Church, closed the services at the Providence Cemetery.

Our Western Letter.

Mrs. Lettice Smith Holmes, beloved companion of the venerable Rev. Thomas Holmes, D. D., of Chelsea, Michigan, is dead. She was a highly educated woman and had served her day well. Many of our Southern people will recall her visit to the South in 1878, with her husband, when he attended a number of the Conferences in the Southern Christian Convention. I remember that the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met with the church at Barrett's and Dr. and Mrs. Holmes were there. She also attended the Old North Carolina and Virginia Conference which met that year at Damascus, if my memory serves me well. Dr. Holmes is now in his ninety-fourth year. He is life very lonely and at a time of life when company seems a necessity. Dr. Holmes goes to spend the remainder of his days at the Aged Ministers' Home at Lakemont, N. Y., where he will be well cared for in his aged and infirm condition. The sympathy of our brotherhood will go with him.

Rev. M. T. Morrill, D. D., our Foreign Mission Secretary, has been planning a visitation to Porto Rico in the interest of our work there, but the illness of his aged father has made it so he could not leave home for so long a time. He hopes soon to make the trip. He is planning to arrange for the building of the new house of worship in Ponce. Several gifts seem to make it possible to build at an early day. The situation stands about this way now: Since the gift from two friends of a thousand dollars each last fall, a party has given a thousand dollars, and now offers to give half of the remainder that is needed to complete the building, provided our people will give the other half by Nov. 1st of this year. As about $3,400 more are needed to complete the building, that means that this friend will give $1,700 dollars, and the Christian Church and its friends will have to raise about $1,700, and it must be done by Nov. 1. That means the best chance we have ever had to build the house in Porto Rico, and if our people do not accept this offer and make sure the building, it seems to me that we shall have a hard chance to raise the money later, when we could have the whole $3,400 to raise. I do hope we may seize this opportunity and raise the money on time. Let us get to work and do our best.

The Christian Publishing Association is now getting out the first issue of the Sunday School Teachers' and Officers' Journal. It will be ready to mail in a short time. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Erie, Pennsylvania, is the editor. He is well known in his own State as one of the foremost Sunday school workers in any denomination. He is a man of much ability and it is well adapted to Sunday school work. He is now Secretary for the Pennsylvania State Sunday School Association, a position which gives him great opportunity and a wide influence in Sunday School work. Bro. Eldredge is true to the Christian Church, having been reared in our ranks and has served for many years. Let us pray for him and encourage the work in any way we can. The Journal is quarterly and will be sent at 40 cents a year, or in clubs of five to one address for 30 cents per year. I hope our brethren in the South will give this Journal a hearty support. Subscriptions may be sent in at once to Mr. Netum Rathbun, Agent Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio. Do it before you forget it.

In my last letter I made some comment on the minister who has no message for the people, even though his church paper offers to send it out without cost to him, and to a much larger number of people than he can get in his own pulpit. But since then I have struck just the opposite kind, a minister who has a fine message, but is not willing to give it to the public. He had prepared himself well, and really had a most important and valuable message. He delivered to his own people but would not under any circumstances allow it to be published, though it would not cost him one cent to send it out to many thousands of people. Nothing could be said which would move him to do so. He was satisfied to have his own congregation hear it; all others, though much in need of the message he had might go without it. I confess I do not understand that sort of service for the Lord. I would not like to take the place of either of these brethren in this particular, but really I believe I would prefer to have no message, rather than to have one of so much importance and then keep it all to myself. Brethren, in the ministry, as I see it, our calling is not one in which we may gratify our own whims as to service. I feel it is incumbent upon us to do our best for the salvation of the lost, and therein for the honor and glory of the Lord. I believe it would do us all good as ministers to read the sixth chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah at least twice every week. Let us try it. It will do us good.

THE DEATH RECORD.

How interesting it is to watch the daily paper for the death record! The cold hand of Death is being placed upon someone every hour. Today it steals from our midst a loved one, a friend. Before the remains of the friend can be put away we hear of the Reaper in some other section. Around the fireside we read to-night of some home that has been saddened by a visit of the death angel. Before the break of day it may be our guest. Think!

While we meditate on this, let us stop to think how peculiar death is. One member of the body becomes diseased and all the other members are required to pay the penalty by yielding to death. The heart may be sound, the lungs in a healthy condition, the brain dispatching every thought correctly and almost every part of the body doing its usual work; but, perhaps, some small organ goes to wreck and then the heart, lungs, brain and all other parts cease to work because the diseased part is only a link of importance and stops all the machinery.

You may not curse, swear, steal, cheat; but some other sin will condemn you and the good qualities will go down to suffer the penalty caused by the one sin.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE.

There's a cheery little proverb

It is very well to heed

In a world where pain and sorrow

Are quite plentiful inleed,

If you would not have them double,

Then keep this well in view;

To never trouble trouble

Until trouble troubles you.

Don't think when storm clouds gather

You are certain to be drowned;

The very darkest tempest

May quickly blow around.

And up above the blackness

Shines evermore the blue;

So never trouble trouble

Until trouble troubles you.

Oft times a gloomy morning

Precedes a sunny day;

So, without a word of warning.

Our trials have slipped away.

What pangs we oft have suffered

From ills we never knew!

So never trouble trouble

Until trouble troubles you.

Quit counting all the bridges

You may never have to cross;

Quit climbing all the ridges

Of future pain and loss.

Trudge on and do your duty,

To God and conscience true;

And never trouble trouble

Until trouble troubles you.

—Anna R. Henderson.

WHAT CHRIST WANTS.

Is there nothing that Christ, as your friend, your Lord, your Savior, wants you to do that you are leaving undone today? Do you doubt that it is His will that you should honor and help and bless all the men about you who are His brethren? And are you doing anything like that? Do you doubt one instant that His will is that you should make life serious and lofty? Do you doubt one instant that He wants you to be pure in deed and word and thought? And are you pure? Do you doubt one instant that His command is for you openly to own Him and declare that you are His servant before all the world? And have you done it? These are questions which make the whole matter clear. No, not in quiet lanes nor in bright temple courts, as once He spake, and not from blazing heavens, as men sometimes seem to expect—not so does Christ speak to us.

And yet He speaks. I know what He—there in all His glory, He here in my heart—wants me to do today, and I know that I am not mistaken in my knowledge. It is no guess of mine. It is His voice that tells me.—Phillips Brooks.

EIGHTEEN THOUSAND HOOKWORM TREATED IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The rapidity with which a knowledge of the cause, harm, cure and prevention of hookworm disease has spread among our people stands without a parallel in the history of preventable diseases. Only a year or two ago there was found quite commonly skepticism concerning the existence of such a disease; but practically all the doubters have now had opportunities for seeing the worms, the sufferers, their recoveries after treatment, and are now actively lending their support to the eradication of the disease.

The quarterly report of Dr. Jno. A. Ferrell, the State Director of the Hookworm Campaign for the three months ending March 31, shows that up to date the physicians of the State are treating the disease, and that more than 500 of the active physicians of the State are treating the disease. Moreover, it shows that the Laboratory of Hygiene has examined since the work began 17,000 specimens of feces for the eggs of the hookworm which indicate the infection.

To prevent the further spread of hookworm disease, typhoid fever, and other diseases similarly spread a wave for better sanitary conditions is rapidly spreading. "Clean-up Week" and the compulsory use of sanitary toilets are measures being inaugurated in many towns and villages. Quite a number of county and city boards of education have ordered the installation of sanitary toilets at the schools.

During the past twelve months there have been distributed approximately 200,000 pieces of stock literature on the subject which include a leaflet on hookworm disease, an illustrated pamphlet on hookworm disease, and on illustrated pamphlet on plans and specifications for sanitary toilets. These are sent free on request to the Hookworm Commission, North Carolina Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C.

The campaign in a broad sense, is one for better sanitary conditions in the South, an aggressive warfare, not against one, but against many diseases. "The success of the campaign," says Wm. H. Glasson, in the April South Atlantic Quarterly, "must lessen the heavy burden of sickness, bring new vigor to great numbers of people, and accomplish the saving of thousands of lives."

DEAD CHRISTIANS.

In Philadelphia there lives a man who, according to the army records, died in the Civil War. But he stoutly denies it. The official register at Gettysburg declares he is dead; and not only so, but affirms that he is buried in that very cemetery. That makes no difference to him. Yet he makes the most of it. Every year on Memorial Day he goes into the cemetery and strews flowers on his alleged resting place. Then he returns to his home, inspired by the thought that he has done his duty by himself.

There are so-called Christians who, by every law of judgment, are spiritually dead. The records of the church say that they are. The world confirms the statement. Their own friends insist it is so. Yet they persist in claiming to be alive. They remain in the church, they are prominent in its public services, they occupy high seats in the synagogue, they strew their own graves with flowers and think it a huge joke.

Strictly speaking, of course, a dead Christian is a contradiction in terms. When a Christian becomes moribund he is on the way to extinction as a Christian. When he has passed out of the Christian life he ought no longer to bear the name. He ought to be buried. No dead man has any right to disturb the equanimity of the living. He ought to be out of sight.

If the churches could thrust their spiritually deceased into good strong sepulchers, what an improvement there would be in the religious climate, and what a quietus would be placed upon the scoffers of Christianity! But the dead Christian is not willing to be entombed. He is an ungovernable sort of a corpse. He is determined to remain above ground. How much more rapidly the Church of Christ would grow if such defunct individuals would only consent to be buried, or what is still better, if they would but pray God for the touch of His divine power to invigorate them into newness of life!—The Communicant.

AN ANCIENT SIN.

Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink. .Isa. 5:22. (Golden text for Sunday, May 21.)

The sin of strong drink, the excessive and deadly use of it, is no new one. It has been many long years since Isaiah's day, and indulgence was an old, and a destructive sin then. And this further fact may be stated here, to wit, that this sin has not yet been done away with, and the question of strong drink is a deep, a far-reaching, an unsettled one. Local option, prohibition nor any other of the enactments has settled the question or solved the problem of strong drink. We might as well not forget that this ancient of sins cannot be wiped out by any sort of enactment or legislation. It strikes deeper than these can reach. The question of intemperance, if settled anywhere, must be solved and settled in the individual life, in the particular person.

These laws may, in some poor measure, serve as stepping stones to some higher and better thing, but they are not the goal for which we strive. That every individual on his own account and in God's good strength may lean to be sober, upright, temperate, moderate in all things, this is that to which Isaiah and all his kind would plead and persuade us. The prophet pronounces a curse on individuals who drink wine, men who mingle strong drink.

Indulgence, ease and pleasure-seeking had brought Judah very low. Her places of worship were shut up; her white-robed priests were supplanted; her offerings of sacrifice for sin were no more; images and idol worship were established and her people had indeed gone after strange, and impotent gods. As a result Judah's enemies were in the ascendancy, her pristine foes were now victorious, and her plight as a nation and as a people of God's select was indeed pitiable. In such a condition Isaiah sung a song of pathos and of prophecy of warning and of woe. And the plight of that people who are given to excess and indulgence ever come to this. Isaiah's warning needs sounding again and again in our day which is not unlike Isaiah's.

—Pastor J. O. Cox began a series of meetings at the Durham church last Sunday, and the first day of the meeting witnessed some three or four conversions. Rev. L. E. Smith of Greensboro is to assist Bro. Cox beginning Tuesday.
